8. I presume the Postmaster General's view is to ensure the mails catching the train? The bags remain all night in Campbelltown. If the mail were to leave Goulburn at six or seven in the morning, you would have the bags in Sydney equally in the same time as you have them now.
9. What is the ordinary time occupied in good weather, between Goulburn and Campbelltown? About nineteen hours.
10. And in the case of very wet weather, such as would stop the country mails? I could not make the calculation. The road between Berrima and Campbelltown is excellent; between Goulburn and Berrima at places it is good, and at places very bad; and we travelled quite as quickly during the darkest of the night over the bad road, on the worst part of the road between Goulburn and Berrima, as we did during the day, and with the better road, from Berrima to Campbelltown.
11. By the Chairman : You must put out of consideration the convenience of passengers, because this Board has nothing to do with that—we have only to do with postal matters. Do you not think that the up country people would have a decided objection to their letters remaining in the Goulburn Post Office the whole night, as they would do if the mail started in the morning as you desire? They do not get to Sydney any sooner by leaving at night.
12. By Mr. Watt : They would be kept in Goulburn all night, at the risk of losing the train to Sydney, in bad weather? They would have several hours to allow for the risk of that. However, supposing the hour were altered back from half-past ten to nine o'clock in the evening, the mail would then arrive in Sydney at seven the following evening, and I would beg to suggest that it would be an improvement in the postal arrangements that there should be a delivery at night, after seven o'clock, for the benefit of those interested in the southern districts.
13. By Mr. Smart : Why should the Post Office be kept open two hours later, for the sake of delivering one portion of the country mails? Those particularly interested might have the opportunity afforded them of calling to receive their letters. At present, however particular correspondence may be, it cannot be obtained till the morning. I have frequently important information to send to the Sydney Morning Herald, which it would be a great advantage to have delivered on the evening of arrival.
14. By the Chairman : Does it not seem to you that if this were to be granted, and the Post Office clerks kept there till eight o'clock, another portion of the Colony might like the Office

Office kept open till nine, so that the clerks would never get away? I understood some time ago, that there was actually a delivery at the Post Office when the mails came in late from other parts of the Colony—I refer to the Hunter River mails—and we thought naturally, that we might have the same privilege for the Southern District as they have for the Hunter River.

Mr. Robert
Craig.

8 May, 1862.

15. By Mr. Watt: The mail for the Hunter leaving late at night, a reply to a letter received in the evening can be despatched the same night, so that there is a motive, in that case, for a late delivery, which does not exist in the other? I was not aware of that. But still it would be an advantage, especially to the newspapers, to get their correspondence on the evening of arrival.

16. By Mr. Smart: Your recommendation is that the mail should leave Goulburn at nine o'clock, so as to arrive at Campbelltown in time to come on to Sydney by the five o'clock train? Yes.

17. Do you know whether, when that arrangement was in force, the mails were delivered punctually at Campbelltown in time for the five o'clock train? I have not heard any complaints; there may have been exceptional cases; but I believe generally they did arrive. I believe the up-country mails are generally in Goulburn before nine o'clock.

18. Are you aware whether the alteration was made in consequence of some of the country mails not being in before nine o'clock? I think not.

19. Are you aware what was the cause of the alteration to half-past ten? I do not know what was the the real cause.

20. Still you think it would be an advantage to revert to the old time? I think so.

21. By the Chairman: As agent of the Sydney Morning Herald at Goulburn, you receive a large quantity of newspapers for distribution there? Yes, there are a good number of subscribers in the district.

22. Are you aware whether the subscribers in the Goulburn district are principally among the wealthy classes, the well-to-do classes, or the laboring classes? All classes take it in.

23. Of which class are the largest number of subscribers? Generally speaking the better-off portion of the community—merchants, storekeepers, and gentlemen generally.

24. Are you personally acquainted with the postal arrangements at Goulburn, so as to be able to say whether the service is well performed or not? I believe the postal arrangements there are as well carried out as ever they were. There has been grumbling at times, but I must say I have always met with civility and attention. I think that generally speaking regularity is observed.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE, IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. KNOX,
MR. SMART.

William Hanson, Esq., called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: In proceeding to re-examine you, the Board are quite aware that the points on which they contemplate examining you to-day nearly affect your private interests, but they entertain every confidence that you will give your opinions free of all bias, and with the view alone of promoting the general welfare of the community. As has been intimated to you, the first question I will ask of you is this—Can you suggest any means for supplementing the deficiency of about £50,000 in the revenue of the Post Office—whether by increased postage on letters or charging a postage stamp on newspapers, or both? With regard to suggesting any plan for supplementing the deficiency you speak of, which I presume includes our proportion of the subsidy for the English Mail Contract, I think in my former evidence I alluded to what I conceived would be an advisable mode of increasing the Post Office revenue, viz., to increase the postage on town letters to 2d. and on country letters to 3d., but I then had not the data to lay before the Board to shew what would be the result. I have, however, obtained some statistics on the subject, all of which are official ones, for the year 1860. In 1860, 1,383,347 1d. postage stamps were issued to the Postmaster General, producing a revenue of £5,764; and 2,931,851 2d. stamps, producing £24,432. Now by putting an additional 1d. on town letters, I calculate the revenue would be increased by £5,000; and by charging 3d. on country letters instead of 2d., there would be an increase of £12,000—the two making £17,000. Then with regard to our proportion of the English Mail subsidy, I find that the actual amount paid last year was £18,442—which every one must admit is a most ridiculous subsidy for us to pay. I am quite satisfied £9,000 ought to be our proper proportion, and if it were reduced to that amount there would be a saving of £9,000. That makes, with the increase of postage I have named, a difference of £28,000. But supposing you put a 1d. stamp on newspapers, the gain would be very insignificant. The total number of newspapers that passed through the Post Office in 1860 was 2,758,305, on which a 1d. stamp would produce £11,441, supposing for the moment that this number would pass through the post after the imposition of such a charge. But I think I shall be able to shew you presently, that a tax on newspapers would not produce a revenue of more than £2,000 a year. I think I have data to shew that that would be the fact. However I will go on now with the other part of the subject. I consider that decreasing the number of branch offices and cross-country postal routes,

W. Hanson,
Esq.

W. Hanson,

routes, and a general retrenchment throughout the department, would effect an enormous saving. I may mention, for instance, the case of Mr. Garnett, who received salary at the rate of £300 a year, for many months, without being present or doing any duty at the Office; and that the Postal Inspector, who receives £500 a year, has not been out of Sydney this year until within the last fortnight. I think the Postmaster General ought to suggest the best means of bringing the expenses nearer to the income than at present. He receives a high salary for performing the duties attaching to his office, but he never seems to have turned his attention to the necessity of retrenchment in his department; neither has he abolished those postal routes across the country, where only a few letters pass annually at an enormous cost, and which afford accommodation for only two or three individuals. The conveyance of mails for 1860 cost £51,162 ls. 6d., or about £1,000 a week for internal communication, exclusive of the subsidy for the Steam Postal Contract. I think this ought to be largely reduced, which would be a very great saving. In 1851 the number of miles traversed by the inland mails was 751,154, and the receipts for the year were £18,252 ls. 11d., and the expenditure £16,324 13s. 4d. This was the last year that the receipts were more than the expenditure, and it was the last year of Mr. Raymond's administration of the Post Office. Major Christie commenced in 1852 —

2. By Mr. King: Was not Mr. Merewether after Mr. Raymond? Well, whoever it was, that was the last year that the Post Office revenue was more than its expenses; and Major Christie was appointed Postmaster General in May, 1852. In 1852 the number of miles traversed was 945,010—the receipts about the same as the previous year, £18,174 ls. 11d., and the expenses jumped up to £25,304 8s. And it must be recollected that in 1851 Port Phillip was separated. Then, if you take the official returns from 1852 to 1860, you will find a gradual and very large increase every year. In 1860 the miles traversed were 1,461,518—about double the number in 1851—the receipts £45,612 10s. 3d., and the expenditure £72,371 15s. 4d. Now I consider this increased expenditure has arisen entirely in consequence of the absurd postal routes that have been established, more for the accommodation of one or two individuals. I may state further, that in 1851 and 1852 the postage stamps were printed at the Post Office, and formed part of the expenses of the department, whereas in 1860 the production of stamps was a charge on the Government Printer. That has never been taken into consideration. I have stated before that I conceive that a stamp on newspapers would produce a very small revenue. Other channels would be found for sending newspapers besides the Post Office. The Post Office is an establishment almost exclusively for the use of the merchant and trader. The general revenue supports the Post Office from the taxes paid by those who have comparatively little advantage from the postal expenditure. For instance, take the case of the Times, in England:—Mr. Smith, of the Strand, has every morning about 25,000 copies of the Times, and out of these 25,000—I cannot speak positively, but I am pretty near the mark when I say that not 2,000 go through the post,—they are all sent by rail to the different parts of England; they avoid sending them through the post, in consequence of there being a postage charge upon them of 1d. The revenue from newspapers in England is, I believe, an insignificant item; and I am sure it would be excessively small if imposed here, besides having the effect of preventing the public from being informed on matters of a public character—not of a private character, as is the case with a letter. A newspaper is not a privileged communication like a letter, and the parties benefited are not those who usually avail themselves of the advantages of postal communication. I may state that I have here, and will hand in to the Board, a copy of a Bill which is now brought forward in the United States, in consequence of the civil war, to put a tax on newspapers. It is very short, and perhaps it would be as well it should be printed. (The witness read and handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.) Even in America newspapers are free of postage in the county in which they are printed; and one of those counties numbers more than the whole of New South Wales—some one or two of them do.

3. By Mr. Smart: In population—not in area? Not in area.

4. Nor in the number of miles travelled? No. Here is another extract I will read, which I should like printed. It is from an American paper, on the subject of the stamp duty on newspapers. (The witness read and handed in the same. Vide Appendix B.) Then I will read a short extract from the proceedings of our own Executive, on the 13th June, 1859, on the subject of an additional penny postage on newspapers. (The witness read and handed in the same. Vide Appendix C.) I may conclude my answer to the first question you put to me, by saying that I entertain a strong feeling as to the impolicy of putting any tax on newspapers.

5. By the Chairman: The second question of which you have had notice is this:—Can you inform the Board if you know of any other country or colony where newspapers are carried free by post? Yes, the Colony of Victoria, the Colony of Queensland —

6. Are you quite sure that in the Colony of Victoria, at the present moment, newspapers are carried free by post? Yes. Queensland, South Australia, Western Australia, New Zealand, Van Diemen's Land, the Cape of Good Hope, and, strictly speaking, America.

7. By Mr. King: Canada? I cannot ascertain about Canada.

8. By the Chairman: Are you quite sure you are quite correct? I, of course, would not be upon my oath, but I state it as a man believing it to be true.

9. I only put the question, because if it should be apparent that you are not quite correct in one instance it would suggest a doubt how far you might be correct in others? I have never been in Victoria, but I receive papers constantly from Victoria without a stamp upon them. There is no stamp for intercolonial postage upon them, unless they are more than seven days old, and then they pay 1d.

10. You have stated that we are paying £18,000 a year as our proportion of the English mail subsidy, and you consider we should pay about £9,000, in which case the whole service service should be performed for £70,000 or £75,000, instead of £135,000, as at present— have you any idea that it could be performed for the smaller amount? I have been informed that it could be performed as a branch mail to Ceylon for £70,000, which would be little more than half the present cost. I believe our proportion of the subsidy is £16,160, but we paid last year £18,000; and I think we ought to get the branch service to Ceylon done for a contribution on our part of about £9,000. That would be a reduction of one-half what we at present pay.

W. Hanson,
Esq.

12 May, 1862.

11. You reckon that, in the event of the postage on town letters being doubled, and on country letters increased to 3d., there would be no diminution in the circulation of letters, while at the same time you have stated that postage on newspapers would materially diminish the number sent by post. What reason have you for supposing that there would be no diminution in the number of letters if the postage were increased as you propose? We have had experience of the alteration of the postage to Melbourne from 3d. to 6d., which did not diminish the number, while it doubled the revenue. That was a matter Mr. Donaldson carried out, and the result was most beneficial.

12. You state that the Post Office is supported by those who derive but little advantage from the postal expenditure —? No, I say that many newspaper readers are not writers of letters, and that the postage of letters is more beneficial to the trading and commercial part of the community than to the reading part of the community in the interior.

13. Are you at all aware of the extent to which the conveyance of newspapers augments the cost of postal contracts? I see that in the year 1860, as I before stated, the number of newspapers that passed through the post was 2,758,000, but I do not think their conveyance makes much difference in the cost of the contracts, because they are distributed over the whole year. And supposing the whole number were posted, with 1d. postage—and I am satisfied not one-quarter of them would be posted—they would only produce £11,441.

14. Are you aware that a great many of the posts up the country convey more newspapers than they do letters? No, I was not aware of it; but I should not be surprised if that is the fact. The newspaper proprietors, however, are not the parties who ask the Post Office to establish absurd and unnecessary postal routes; they only wish to avail themselves of the most effective means of transit.

15. Can you give any idea whether the bulk of the newspapers published in the Colony are subscribed for by the wealthiest classes, the well-to-do or middling classes, or by the laborer who earns his daily wages? It is difficult to arrive at any correct idea on that subject. I can say this, that I do not think that among the poor there are a great many persons who subscribe to newspapers; the great majority are among the well-to-do classes.

16. When there is a deficiency in the revenue of the Post Office, and that deficiency is supplemented out of the General Revenue, is it not making those who do not enjoy the luxury of, or who do not derive the instruction—if you choose to put it in that way—from a newspaper, pay for the enjoyment of those who do, if newspapers are carried free by post? It is; but I may put it in my own way too, that it is the mercantile and trading classes who use the Post Office almost exclusively, while those who belong to the reading portion and not the writing portion of the public, get no advantage from the Post Office except the carriage of newspapers.

17. By Mr. Knox: You mean to say the mercantile classes have an undue advantage in a certain sense? I do.

18. By Mr. Smart: They pay for it? Their letters are carried for one-half the cost of carrying them.

19. And papers are carried for nothing at all? Yes; but I have endeavoured to shew that that is the true policy. I feel strongly—altogether irrespective of my being connected with a newspaper—that it would be a retrogressive step to put a tax on newspapers, and that it would never be submitted to by the community.

20. By the Chairman: You have made some remarks touching the Times—You are aware that the Times, being a stamped paper, does not pay postage? They only stamp those that go through the post.

21. All others have to pay 1d. postage when they travel by the mail—they have to pay 1d. either to the Stamp Office or the Post Office, if they go by post? Yes; but very few are sent by post. The early trains from London take down the papers in large numbers, without passing through the Post Office. Mr. Smith, as I have stated, sends 25,000, and they are not stamped—not one of them.

22. By Mr. Smart: That is because they obtain an earlier delivery than by the post? Yes.

23. Do not the newspaper agents pay the proprietors of railways for this convenience? I do not know what the arrangement may be, but I think the railways are exceedingly liberal in regard to the conveyance of newspapers.

24. Can you say whether the railways carry Mr. Smith's newspapers free? I can say most positively that my papers, coming from London to Reigate, where I was a bookseller, used to reach me without a farthing cost to me.

25. By the Chairman: You have stated that the ratio of ignorance has much decreased—do you think it fair to attribute that to the circulation of newspapers? I do.

26. And not at all to the circulation of books? Very little in the interior of the Colony, as books are almost unobtainable.

27. Then, in your opinion, books should be taxed when they go by post, however much instruction they may contain? I think books ought to pay the rate they do pay. A book, after all, is instructive only to one or two persons into whose hands it falls; and the information it conveys is of a very different class to that imparted by a newspaper. Say it is scientific information. If Mr. Tebbutt, of Windsor, receives a work on astronomy, he gladly pays 8d. for postage; but that book would convey no information probably to any other person in his district.

- W. Hanson, Esq.
12 May, 1862.
28. Take the case of a grammar, a history of England, or a Bible—should such books as those pay, while a sporting newspaper goes free? As to Bibles, I do not see that there is any necessity to send them by post. The difference between a newspaper and a book is very great indeed. A newspaper conveys public information, and each day informs the public mind as to what is passing; it is not a privileged communication, but a public one, and it is for the public weal it is published. It is a fiction of the Courts that every British subject is acquainted with the laws of his country. Now, I would ask, is it possible, with a scattered population spread over a very large area, as in this Colony, to make the laws known to the people, except through the medium of newspapers? Circumstances have come immediately under my notice with reference to the passing of the Gold Fields Act, shewing the great importance to the people in the interior of being acquainted with changes in the law. I will mention one such. An official at the Lachlan—and surely he ought not to plead ignorance of the law—continued to charge £4 for a business license after it had been reduced to £1, which sum was paid until the Empire newspaper was produced, containing the Act, and shewing the law had been altered.
29. Under the present system of taxation in this country, is not a large amount of revenue derived from the working classes? Yes.
30. Then if there is a deficiency these classes contribute largely to make up that deficiency? Yes.
31. Then does it not follow, as you say the subscribers to newspapers are chiefly among the well-to-do classes, that while newspapers go free by post, and there is a deficiency in the revenue of the Post Office, the working classes are contributing to the enjoyment of the classes wealthier than themselves, so far as newspaper reading is concerned? I think that is hardly a fair way of putting the question.
32. You are not aware that the circulation of newspapers in the Colony of Victoria is any less than it is here? I am not.
33. You believe it to be equally large? I should think it is much larger. They have a great many daily papers in Victoria, and we have only two in New South Wales.
34. By Mr. Knox: You spoke of the expenditure of the Post Office being so much smaller in 1851 than it is now—was not the number of letters and newspapers carried at that time, insignificant compared with the number now carried? Yes. But I may state that what is now the Colony of Queensland was then a part of New South Wales, and so also was Port Phillip.
35. Port Phillip was part of this Colony only during a portion of 1851? Yes.
36. You are aware that the gold discovery has immensely increased the cost of the interior service—for some years it did at all events? No doubt. I see that Mr. Hunt, in his examination before the Retrenchment Committee of 1858, among other things suggests, that “by importing covered mail carts for one or two horses, with duplicate sets of axles, wheels, springs, &c, and contracting with the innkeepers on the respective roads to horse—in fact, “carrying out what has been pursued in both England and Ireland for years—£5,000 per annum may be saved.”
37. Do you think it would be desirable for the Government to undertake the conveyance of the mails? No.
38. Mr. Hunt's proposal would involve that? I think, if you look at the enormous expense of conveying the mails—£51,000, or about £1,000 a week—in this infant Colony, you must see that there is very great room for economy.
39. By Mr. Smart: What do you think is the cause of this great expense—is it not the large amount of newspapers that are sent by post? Certainly not.
40. By the Chairman: Do you believe that the circulation of newspapers in England is at the present moment quite as large and widely spread as is necessary for the purposes of the instruction of the public? Yes, I do. If a stamp were put on newspapers it would have the effect of their being conveyed by other channels, and therefore you must not calculate on getting any large amount of postage from newspapers.
41. By Mr. Smart: If that is the result, will it not be the means of reducing the cost of the conveyance of the mails? No, I am quite certain you will find it would not reduce the expenses one farthing. I think the proper way to reduce the expenses is to diminish the number of postal routes, and get rid of those absurd lines where only two or three letters are carried in the course of the year.
42. I suppose you are aware that the cost of conveying the mails in America and England is much less than here, on account of the facilities afforded by railway travelling? Yes.
43. By Mr. Knox: You spoke of the year 1851, as having shewn a larger revenue than expenditure—were not the high rates of postage in use in those days? I cannot say; I took the amounts from the Statistical Returns, without that idea suggesting itself to me. It is very probable it was so. It is very singular, that notwithstanding the separation of Moreton Bay, which must have cut off a vast number of miles from the postal routes, the expenses and receipts increased in that year just in the same proportion as before; you can see no difference in the return. With reference to the conveyance of the mails, I may mention what is taking place since the opening of the railway to St. Mary's. Although the line is open to St. Mary's, South Creek, the mail still comes jogging on all the way from St. Mary's to Parramatta by the road, leaving at eight o'clock in the morning, and getting back to St. Mary's at two o'clock in the afternoon, while the train gets there about half-past eight in the morning, and the papers are delivered many hours in advance of the post.
44. How do your newspapers go forward? By train; but the post still comes by the road all the way to Parramatta; no step has been taken to alter it.

" POSTAGE ON PRINTED MATTER.

" Mr. Colfax introduced the following Bill this morning, which substitutes several simple rates of postage on printed matter for the 320 rates under existing laws :—

" " A Bill to render more uniform the postage on printed matter.

" " Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That from and after April 1, 1862, the postage on all printed matter sent through the United States mails, and on which postage is now payable by law, shall be as follows :—For newspapers not exceeding two ounces in weight, and issued not oftener than once a week, and carried not exceeding 2,000 miles, 5 cents per quarter; when issued twice a week, 10 cents per quarter; three times per week, 15 cents per quarter; six times per week, 30 cents per quarter, payable quarterly or yearly in advance, at the office where the said newspaper is mailed or delivered, at the option of the subscriber. And for newspapers exceeding two ounces in weight one additional rate of postage shall be collected for every additional two ounces or fraction thereof.

" " Section 2. Be it further enacted, That from and after the same date, the postage on magazines and periodicals sent through the mails shall be, for the same distance, half a cent per ounce or fraction thereof, to be paid quarterly in advance as above prescribed; provided that small newspapers and periodicals published monthly or oftener, and pamphlets containing not more than sixteen octavo pages each, when sent in single packages weighing at least eight ounces, shall be charged at the same rates, notwithstanding the postage calculated on each separate article of such package would exceed that amount.

" " Section 3. Be it further enacted, That from and after the same date books, bound and unbound, unsealed circulars, pamphlets, except as allowed in the preceding section, maps, engravings, lithographs, blanks, envelopes, and all other matter now mailable, and on which postage is chargeable by law, shall, when sent through the mails, pay postage at the rate of one cent per ounce for all distances under 2,000 miles, to be prepaid by stamps, and each circular shall be charged a single rate.

" " Section 4. Be it further enacted, That for all distances over 2,000 miles, one additional rate of postage shall be charged and collected for such excess on all printed matter sent through the mails.

" " Section 5. Repeals conflicting Acts.

" This Bill does not, nor does the Bill abolishing the franking privilege, as has been supposed, repeal the law enabling newspapers to exchange and to circulate within the county where they are published free of postage."

B.

" A STAMP DUTY ON NEWSPAPERS.

" Late correspondence from the East foreshadows great excitement in relation to the proposed stamp duty on newspapers. The Press, as the disseminator of knowledge, has always been regarded in this country as especially exempt from all the restrictions that apply to other pursuits; especially as it always claimed exemption from taxation, it being very correctly supposed that any legislation which places a restriction upon the newspapers must result in a loss to the community. The Bill introduced into the House by Mr. Colfax, imposing a tax upon the journals of from a quarter to half a cent would, in the present stage of the business, when newspapers are sold for a mere trifle, severely injure the business of a majority of them, and utterly ruin many which now constitute almost the sole reading of a large class of the community who cannot afford to pay a large price for intellectual pabulum. The proposed act of legislation would, in fact, bring the press of the Union to the condition from which that of England has just escaped. In England several years ago, the exaction of a high duty on newspapers excluded a large portion of the British public from the perusal of the journals. The necessity for an alteration in the laws was acknowledged, and the stamp duty was repealed. The consequence was that a number of cheap journals sprang up, and the proportion of illiterate and uneducated persons was immeasurably decreased. The ratio of intelligence is now much greater than ever before that the governing classes are beginning to recognize the laboring classes as a portion of the people, and to pay some regard to their opinions. Are we, then, who arrogate to ourselves the title of the most intelligent and liberal people on the face of the earth, to take up anew the abolished laws of England, to engraft upon our pure code the excrescences which foreign nations have disengaged from their own political systems, and to put a curb on the knowledge of our poorer citizens?"

C.

Proceedings of Executive Council, 13th June, 1859, on the subject of an additional Postage on Newspapers.

The Council having deliberated at some length, express an opinion that the question is one with which it will be unadvisable to deal until the decision of Parliament shall have been obtained with respect to it; the more especially as it has been the aim of legislation to diminish, to the utmost extent possible, the cost of transmission of newspapers by post.

John Fairfax, Esquire, called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: The Board feel every confidence that, in replying to the questions they may put to you to-day, you will lay aside all idea of private interest, and allow your opinions, however difficult may be the task, to be influenced alone by the general welfare of the Colony. The first question we will put to you, in accordance with the notice already given you, is this:—Can you suggest any means for supplementing the deficiency of about £50,000 in the revenue of the Post Office—whether by increased postage on letters, or charging a postage stamp on newspapers, or both? I was not aware that the expenditure of the Post Office beyond the income was so much as £50,000. In 1860 I observe the income was £45,612 10s. 3d., whilst the expenditure was £72,371 15s. 4d., shewing a deficiency of only £26,759 5s. 1d. I am not prepared to recommend any plan for meeting this deficiency; but I beg to state that Post Offices have been established in districts where the

the population is sparse, and out of all proportion to the expense incurred in the delivery; but there may be public reasons for going to the expense, although contrary to all principles of commercial policy. The equitable principle of making the Post Office pay would be one of various rates, according to distance; but this would be deemed a great hardship by persons living in the distant interior. In districts near to the metropolis, and to which there is railway and steam communication, the Post Office is not always used by newspaper proprietors. (I presume the 1d. postage in the City more than covers the cost of delivery.) And, as a rule in the interior, excepting where the mail is conveyed on horseback, the carrying of the newspapers does not increase the expense to the Government. I beg too, to be permitted to mention that, in a country so large as this, the newspaper is the only means of obtaining information by a considerable number of the inhabitants, and to impose any restriction upon a free circulation would be to interfere with the instruction of the people. Referring to the Post Office expenditure being larger than the income, I beg to hand in to the Board an extract from the Annual Report of the United States Postmaster General; it is dated in 1855, and is the latest document of the kind I have been able to procure. He says: "It will be perceived, by the Report of the Postmaster General, that the gross expenditure of the department for the last fiscal year was 9,968,342 dollars, and the gross receipts 7,342,136 dollars, making an excess of expenditure over receipts of 2,628,206 dollars; and that the cost of mail transportation during that year was 674,952 dollars greater than the previous year. Much of the heavy expenditure to which the Treasury is thus subjected is to be ascribed to the large quantity of printed matter conveyed by the mails either franked or liable to no postage by law, or to very low rates of postage compared with that charged on letters, and to the great cost of mail service on railroads and by ocean steamers."

2. The second question is:—Can you inform the Board if you know of any other country or colony where newspapers are carried free by post? Yes, in South Australia, New Zealand, Queensland, and, I think, Tasmania, newspapers are sent free. In the United States a newspaper can go a distance of 3,000 miles for one cent—one halfpenny. But in Canada I am informed there is no postage on newspapers. In Germany and France there is a very trifling charge according to the weight. I should have added that in Victoria there is a charge of 1d.; not, I think, when posted to this Colony, but there is an interior postage.

3. You say in Germany and France the postage is according to weight—are you aware also that before a newspaper can be posted it must be stamped, besides the postage stamp, in Germany and France? I was not aware of that.

4. Supposing that, with the increase of population and wealth, the postal deliveries were increased from three to six daily in Sydney, one commencing say at seven o'clock in the morning, and others taking place at intervals of two hours throughout the day,—is there any reason why newspaper proprietors should not send out their newspapers in that case by post? I should not certainly do it; it would be no advantage.

5. You have stated that any postage stamp on newspapers would interfere with the instruction of the people? It would.

6. Do you consider that the people are chiefly instructed by newspapers? I think in the distant interior they get all their information from newspapers.

7. Are they chiefly instructed by newspapers in that kind of information which is generally useful to the community? The newspapers are the only means they have of obtaining general information of what is going on around them, and even of the changes that may take place in the laws. For instance, the Acts of Parliament are published in the Gazette, but who sees them in that publication in the country beyond the Petty Sessions House.

8. I will instance the books from which it is generally understood that people derive most of their instruction, books of elementary education, or books such as the Bible—does it seem to you equitable and just, or right, that such books as the Bible, and books of elementary education, should, when they travel by post, pay a certain amount to the State, while a sporting newspaper, such as Bell's Life, goes free? I am not aware of such a thing having been done as Bibles being sent by post. But I am not speaking of that kind of information.

9. An English grammar then? An English grammar goes now.

10. It pays? Yes.

11. Is it right it should pay, while such a newspaper as I have mentioned goes free? I am not prepared to say. But an English grammar does not convey the information that a newspaper does. A newspaper disseminates information affecting the laws and privileges under which we live, and which a grammar does not convey, or a Bible either.

12. Do you consider the largest number of subscribers to newspapers to be among the wealthy classes, the well-to-do or middling classes, or the working classes? I have never gone into the matter.

13. Can you form no opinion? No correct opinion.

14. Do you think the working classes subscribe to newspapers in the same proportion as the other two classes? Certainly I think not.

15. Well, if there is a deficiency in the Post Office revenue, which deficiency is supplemented each year by contributions out of the general revenue—are we not, in withdrawing so much from the proceeds of taxation, making the lower classes pay for the amusement, luxury, and instruction, if you please to call it so, of their more wealthy brethren, so long as their newspapers are carried free by the post? No, I do not think so. The lower classes have their newspapers, too, of a cheaper kind. You asked me just now to classify the persons who take in newspapers, and I may tell you that there is a newspaper which circulates to the amount of nearly 7,000 a-week, chiefly among the lower classes.

16. Does it seem reasonable that those who in no way share in the instruction or amusement afforded by these newspapers should be called upon to pay for their transmission by post?

post? I do not think the question should be put in that shape, and I am not prepared to reply. Perhaps under the people's ministry the people should be exempt from taxation altogether. As a matter of personal interest I do not care 2d. whether a newspaper postage is imposed or not; it will not affect me.

J. Fairfax,
Esq.

12 May, 1862.

17. Do you think an increase on the postage of letters would diminish their number? No, I think an increase on letters would be very fair taxation. I remember the two-penny post in London, before the penny postage was established, and I never heard any complaint made of it; and that was only within the walls of the City; if a letter went to Islington, for instance, it paid more.

18. By Mr. Smart: That was a reduction from a higher rate to a lower one, was it not? Not that I am aware of. Fifty years ago it was 2d. within the City walls. On the pavement was the expression—that is, within the City. I remember visiting London when I was quite a boy, and my uncle, with whom I was staying, resided only two doors off the pavement, in Clerkenwell, and the postage was double.

19. By the Chairman: Are you aware that there are post offices in the interior where the mail conveys a larger number of newspapers than letters? I am not aware of that.

20. Do you think a stamp on newspapers would materially diminish their circulation by post? I have no doubt it would.

21. And if such a diminution took place, does it not seem likely that the cost of conveying the mails would be diminished likewise? I do not think it would, except where the mail goes on horseback. The conveyance of newspapers does not much increase the expense.

22. Does it not make a difference in respect to requiring larger vehicles? It would be more likely to make a difference in horseflesh than in vehicles.

23. Would not the contracts be taken at a lower price if there were only one-fifth the weight to carry? Possibly they might.

24. Would it not be an advantage to those who write letters by post that the mail should be able to travel quicker than it does—four and a half miles an hour seems to be about the average? No doubt, in a country like this, the mail service must be very peculiar and very slow. It is impossible for any Postmaster General, or any person, to keep a surveillance over the distant postal contracts.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

| MR. KING, | | MR. SMART, |
| MR. KNOX, | | MR. WATT. |

William Harvie Christie, Esq., again called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: The Board are going to examine you to-day as a final examination, and as I see you have brought a despatch box with you, I would ask whether you have any papers you wish to lay before the Board, or to say anything special, in order that the examination may afterwards proceed uninterruptedly? I should like to amplify my evidence on some points—to make some further remarks, and to hand in some further papers.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.

14 May, 1862.

2. You would wish to do that before you are further examined? Yes. I have here a return of balances due on the stamp account on the 31st December, 1861. In the evidence I gave on a previous day, I estimated the amount due at from £2,000 to £4,000. I find that the correct amount is £4,359 6s. 9d., which includes all the debts then outstanding. I also find that during the year 1861, the net value of stamps supplied to country postmasters was £26,246 4s. 5d., and the amount received was £26,389 17s. 11d., so that instead of the debt increasing, there was an excess of cash receipts during the year, over the value of stamps issued, of £143 13s. 6d. (The witness handed in the statement. Vide Appendix A.)

3. By Mr. Knox: That includes the stamps in hand in Mr. Reeve's possession? Yes. I may add that the maximum issue to Mr. Reeve at any one time is £300, except on the departure of the English mail, when it is raised to £400. I would also explain that when country postmasters have neglected to pay 75 per cent. on the previous issue of postage stamps, or when I discover from the letters sent down by them that they are short of postage stamps, and are receiving money in lieu of stamps, I at once stop their salaries, appropriating the proceeds to pay their debt. As I stated before, no country postmaster, even at the large offices, receives more than £100 worth of stamps at any one time; and postmaster's bonds vary from £200 to £100 each.

4. By the Chairman: Are the bonds of the country postmasters equal in every case? No; under revised regulations, that come in force on the 1st July next, all postmasters who have more than £50 a year salary must give bonds, themselves in £200 and two sureties in £100 each.

5. Does the postmaster who receives a salary of £12 a year give security for £100? Yes; himself for £100 and two sureties for £50 each.

6. The highest surety given by the country postmaster who has the highest salary and the largest amount of work, will be £200? Yes, in his own person; and £200 more by his sureties, according to the new regulations. I gave the Board an estimate, in my last evidence, of the number of letters received at and despatched from the Corresponding Branch every month. I have thought it more satisfactory to make out an actual return of the amount of correspondence during the first two months of this year, together with other particulars that have reference to the business of the department up stairs, which

W. H. Christie, Esq. which is that more immediately under my superintendence. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix B.) I do not think that any department of the Government, taking into account the correspondence and the number of officers employed, can shew the same amount of work. I would also beg to hand in the last discharge received by me from the Auditor General, in respect of advances from the Colonial Treasury for the public service, from the 1st January, 1859, to 31st December, 1860, amounting to £141,907 0s. 9d., which discharge shews that all such accounts up to that period have been fully adjusted. I believe the Auditor General has given no discharge to a later date than that referred to. (The witness handed in the same.) The whole staff of the central establishment are paid on the 1st of every month; the contractors' accounts go out on the 5th, quarterly; and the postmasters' salaries are paid at the same period. In regard to my recommendation that a new Post Office should be built, I consider that when it is completed at least four clerks can be dispensed with in the Letter Branch. I also recommended that a Cashier should be appointed, and I wish to add that I think the issue of postage stamps to the sale room of the General Post Office and to the country postmasters should form part of his duty. For the present, the sale of stamps in the Sydney Post Office might be conducted by the Letter Branch, but with a new Post Office such sale should be placed under the supervision of the Cashier.

14 May, 1862.

7. By Mr. Knox: Would there be sufficient work to employ a Cashier? Yes, if the issue of stamps to country postmasters and to the sale room of the General Post Office were combined with that office.

8. By the Chairman: You do not mean that the Cashier's duties should be combined with the Accountant's? No, I do not; for I think that to some extent the Accountant is a check upon the Cashier.

9. Do you mean that you would separate the duties of Secretary, Cashier, and Accountant, and have them performed by three different individuals? I would. I might place the Cashier under the Secretary, but I think there would be work enough for the three, particularly if the duties I suggest were thrown upon the Cashier. I may remark that, at present, a clerk in the Corresponding Branch is almost exclusively employed in connection with the cash. I recommended that Government officials should be appointed as postmasters to large towns, and I would especially call the attention of the Board to the circumstance that such an arrangement would facilitate the carrying out of the Money Order System. In Victoria, where this system is established, they will not allow any Money Orders to be given by postmasters who are not Government officials. My evidence was taken as to the present system of appointing subordinates in the Post Office department, and I stated that almost all the appointments vested in the Colonial Treasurer. I beg to explain that the inconveniences to which I alluded have no reference to my want of patronage, and but little to the fact that probably the head of the department—who is more immediately responsible—would be the best judge as to the class of men to be selected, but to the great disadvantages attendant on the system consequent on the authority of the head of the department—who can neither appoint nor dismiss—being necessarily weakened, and to the interminable delays that the system causes. For instance, if a railway guard is taken ill, as is the case at this moment, I have to ask for authority to appoint a temporary successor, and in the meantime must take some other party off his proper duties to do this guard's work, or must leave it unperformed. There is a vacancy at present in an important country Post Office that occurred a month ago, and is not yet filled up.

10. By Mr. Smart: Have you had the power, since you have been Postmaster General, to make these appointments? Yes.

11. Up to what period? Until after Mr. Weekes was appointed Colonial Treasurer—the papers shew the actual date.

12. Have you handed them in? Yes, they are before the Board. I had by law the appointment of country postmasters. I had it under the Postage Act, 15 Vic., No. 12.

13. Have you no power to appoint any of your officers at all? No, none, except messengers, mail boys, and a watchman.

14. Not even letter carriers? No.

15. Are they appointed without any reference to you? Yes, except that I have to report any vacancy, and if there is any officer in the department who wishes to fill it, or other applicant, I forward his application with such recommendation as I can give.

16. By the Chairman: Are you ever called upon to make recommendations for appointments in favour of those who are not in the office? I cannot recollect any instance.

17. Have you done so? With regard to the country postmasters, of course.

18. With regard to vacancies for clerks in the office? No, excepting for an extra clerk.

19. By Mr. Smart: When a vacancy has occurred, say of a second class clerk, have you recommended a junior to fill the office, or has a clerk been appointed without your being consulted? Without my being consulted, except as before explained.

20. Have you ever been called upon, since the present Minister succeeded to office, to appoint any officer? I have never, so far as my memory serves me, been so called on.

21. By the Chairman: That is hardly an answer to the question I put—I mean when a vacancy has occurred in the Post Office, either in the Secretary's, the Accountant's, or the Letter Branch, and it has been understood that the vacancy would be filled by some one not in the office, have you been called upon to make a recommendation for filling that situation, or without being called upon have you made such a recommendation? I can recollect no such case.

22. By Mr. Knox: Was there any reason assigned for taking away the power of appointment which you had exercised? Yes; as the papers on the subject will shew. The matter was brought before the Executive, and the Colonial Treasurer represented that all appointments ments over £100 a year were always filled by the Government, and he did not see why the Post Office should be an exception, and as the letter carriers, stampers, mail guards, &c., received more than that salary, he recommended that the Postmaster General should have only the appointment of messengers and watchmen. I referred to the Police as a precedent, as I understood that the Inspector General had the appointment of constables, troopers, &c., but I was overruled. I thought I should have had the appointment of the country postmasters, whose salaries were less than £100 per annum, but those appointments also have since that period been made by the Treasurer. I forget if in my former evidence I stated that if the commission on the sale of stamps were done away with in the case of country postmasters and licensed vendors of postage stamps, I would propose that all persons should be allowed to sell them. I would have free trade in stamps; at present it is restricted to those who are licensed.

23. Do you think people would keep a stock of stamps without deriving any advantage from their sale? Yes, I believe many shop and store keepers would be glad to do so.

24. By Mr. King: For the sake of the custom? Yes.

25. If there were no commission allowed would it not come to that? Yes, but at present we do not allow the sellers of stamps to be too close to each other, and there is otherwise some little restriction.

26. By Mr. Knox: You never allow discount to any person but one who has a license to sell? No. I was asked to ascertain the present practice with reference to the Melbourne mails arriving late at the General Post Office. At five o'clock the officers of the Delivery Branch leave. If the mails by the Melbourne steamers arrive before that hour, the letters are sorted; if not, the office is closed, except in the case of the Grafton and Hunter River mails. I have to submit to the Board two more recommendations. The first is, that the Postmaster General, provided the vote for country postmasters is not exceeded, should be empowered to augment or diminish at any time the salaries of country postmasters. It often happens that a minor Post Office becomes suddenly an important one, and vice versa, and I think the head of the department ought to be able to revise the salaries in order to meet such changes. My second recommendation is, that the hour of the despatch of the mail trains should be fixed by the Postmaster General. Formerly there was a clause in the Railway Act which gave to that officer the power of regulating the hours of arrival and despatch of the trains; and although this was not exercised to any extent, more reference on the subject was necessarily made to the Post Office Department at that time than now, when the power has been taken away, which was done in another Act of which I was for some time ignorant, as no reference was made to me on the subject. Since that period a good deal of correspondence has taken place between the two departments, and, as might be expected, the hours that pay best on the Railway are not always those that best suit the mails. I may mention one fact as illustrating the inconvenience that arises from the present arrangement. Since the Western Railway has been prolonged as far as St. Mary's, the two o'clock mail train, by which the Western mails are sent, does not go so far and we are obliged to send these mails by coach from Parramatta.

27. By the Chairman: Could not the mails go by some other train? The present time table to Bathurst was arranged, after much consideration, on the recommendation of Mr. Rotton, M.P., and others; and the branch lines are of course subservient to the main line.

28. By Mr. Watt: What would be the next train that could take the mail? The train that leaves at 5 p.m.

29. Is there any objection to that? It would make a great deal of difference in the time of the arrival of the mail at Bathurst; it would upset all the arrangements on the line of road, and it would be dark when the Nepean was crossed and the ascent of the Blue Mountains commenced.

30. By Mr. Knox: You have a clause in your contracts by which the contractors have to make an allowance for any shortening of the distance they have to travel? Yes; there is a special clause as to the Railway —

31. There is such a clause in the Bathurst mail contract? Yes.

32. By the Chairman: Have you ever made any application to the Railway authorities to have the two o'clock mail go as far as St. Mary's? When I received the notification, I reported to the Colonial Treasurer that it did not go to St. Mary's, and that the public would lose the benefit.

33. By Mr. Watt: What reply did you receive? I had to make another report in the same letter as to the shortness of the notice I had received. I stated that I had had only twenty-four hours notice, and that I thought at least a week's notice should be given. In reference to the last point, the matter was referred to the Minister of Works, who said it could not be done, that he had given the utmost notice in his power, viz., what he had received himself; that was the answer I received, the other point was left untouched.

34. The question of the delay of the mail was not discussed? It was not. With reference to the large expenditure of the department, I have frequently had occasion to remark that this is chiefly attributable to the heavy payments made on account of the conveyance of mails. So long as the public and the press were satisfied that on general grounds such an expenditure was called for, and that it was right, irrespective of postal receipts, that newspapers should be carried free, and that postal facilities should be given to country districts where land had been purchased or Government runs taken up, this excess of expenditure over revenue, supposing the expenditure to be judicious, was a matter of no moment. As, however, at this time, there is a contrary impression abroad, and it is maintained that the revenue and expenditure of the department should be equalized, I submit that this can only be done by reducing the postal accommodation, or by charging the extra expenses incurred against the particular parties or the department, or the general public benefiting thereby. If the postal lines that do not pay their own expenses by their postal receipts were struck off, or if the expense incurred thereby were charged to some other fund, the saving to the Post Office Department would probably not be less than £25,000 per annum. If newspapers were not conveyed by the post, the expenditure for conveyance of mails would be lessened by some £10,000 per annum; or if this amount were recovered from some other source, the postal revenue would benefit to that extent. This principle was formerly conceded in the case of the Gold Fields when first discovered, and the expenses connected therewith were made chargeable on the Gold Fund.

Post

35. By Mr. Knox: Do you consider the extension of these small lines makes a difference of £25,000? They are not small lines.

36. Some of them are very long ones? I think £25,000 a year would be required to meet the cost of the lines which do not pay their own expenses, without taking the newspapers into account.

37. By the Chairman: You mean such lines as those to Balranald and Wentworth? Yes; and those down the Bogan, the Darling, the Lachlan, and the Murrumbidgee Rivers—these are some of the long lines that make the expenditure so heavy. I think I have now gone over the various matters upon which I wished to add to my previous evidence, with the exception of the very disagreeable one connected with Mr. Hunt. I would wish to point out to the Board that with the third officer of the establishment acting in opposition to the other three senior officers it is impossible that the department can be conducted satisfactorily. Mr. Hunt was inimical to my predecessor, Mr. Raymond, and he has been so to me; he was hostile to the former Secretary, and he is to the present one; and he has been on the worst terms with the head of the Account Branch ever since that officer was appointed. Mr. Hunt's official correspondence with me has been 500 times more than that of all the officers of the central establishment put together. A reference to the papers I have given in will shew its nature, and will also shew which party has been to blame, and this, perhaps, is the only advantage that the correspondence possesses. I was asked during my former evidence how it was that the feeling of dissension was not confined to Mr. Hunt, and I wish to explain this, although I do not believe that the disaffection said to exist in the Letter Branch is nearly so wide spread as supposed. In all the articles in the newspapers that I identify with Mr. Hunt, in his evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, in all his minutes to me, his object seems to have been to ignore and screen the errors and omissions made in the Letter Branch, and to depreciate me and the officers of the other two branches, and thus to raise an antagonistic feeling. Whenever, therefore, I have found it my duty to complain of neglect and mistakes, or to reprimand parties in the Letter Branch, I have naturally appeared to unreflecting officers of that branch as harsh and unreasonable. I may also state, without any reference to particular individuals—in fact one, the late Mr. Stone, was one of the best officers I have had since I joined the department—that Mr. Hunt has always had two, sometimes three relations or connections in the Letter Branch, and however disposed they may have been to entertain a manly and fair feeling, there was a natural tendency to side with their relative and immediate head. I now lay on the table three sets of papers, respectively illustrating the intermeddling spirit, the unnecessary delays, and the inconsistency that characterize the Superintendent of the Letter Branch. These cases have occurred since the Board commenced their sittings. I presume that it is known to the Board that there was a Circular issued so far back as 20th November, 1855, which states that “the Governor General will dismiss any officer who may report to any person unconnected with the Government any instance of irregularity or neglect of duty on the part of the officers of any department of the Government before he shall have made the head of his own department cognizant of the same and received his instructions thereupon.” The general object of this Circular was to prevent communications being made to newspapers or to parties out of doors that would forestall, and consequently embarrass, the proceedings and decisions of the heads of departments. I proceed to give the history connected with the contemplated arrival of the mail steamer “Northam,” on the last occasion that she entered the harbour. On taking up The Empire of the 14th March I saw the following paragraph:—“The mail steamer ‘Northam’ reached Port Phillip Heads yesterday, at 7 a.m., when her mails for Melbourne were transhipped, and she sailed again at 2 p.m. She may therefore be expected here on Saturday evening. Application has been made to the Executive, on the part of the Post Office, for leave to open the boxes and deliver letters immediately after arrival, so as not to wait until Monday; and we understand this request has been complied with. The ‘Wonga Wonga’ left an hour before the ‘Northam,’ and will probably make a more rapid passage than the mail steamer.” As the head of the department I was much surprised at this announcement, and could not conceive the meaning of it. I went into the Ship Room and said to Mr. Hunt, “Do you understand that announcement?” He said, in the presence of one of the clerks, Mr. Johnson, “No, I do not.” I then went up stairs, and when the official papers for the day were laid before me I found this memorandum, dated on the preceding day, viz., the 13th, “In all probability the ‘Northam,’ with the English mails, will arrive on Sunday. I request the authority of the Minister for Finance may be obtained, in order to carry out a general delivery of letters on that day, should the vessel so arrive.”

38. From whom was that? From Mr. Hunt, addressed to me, and the memorandum in question at once gave me an insight into the meaning of the article in the Empire newspaper. I decided to write to the Colonial Treasurer, but felt it my duty to point out that there might be a difficulty in the matter, owing to former proceedings in the case of the Sunday delivery of an English mail in 1859. My minute is this—“Write to Colonial Treasurer that it has been officially suggested to me by the Superintendent of the Letter Branch, that in all probability the ‘Northam,’ with the English mails, will arrive on Sunday next, and requesting authority from the Honorable the Minister for “Finance

"Finance for a general delivery of letters on that day. I feel it my duty to point out that when a letter delivery on Sunday occurred last, viz., in the case of the 'Salsette,' in October 1859, such delivery elicited a strong remonstrance from the Secretary of the Lord's Day Observance Society, and was specially alluded to in the official report of the Society's proceedings." As this letter went in, a memo. marked "Urgent" from the Colonial Treasurer crossed it. "P. M. General—What arrangements are contemplated respecting the sorting and delivery of the mail per 'Northam?'" I at once thought it better to go to Mr. Weekes and explain to him how the matter stood, and what had occurred with reference to the "Salsette." After hearing this, he gave an order as follows:—"The officials of the P. O., or so many as may be required by P. M. General, must remain on duty at the P. O. until midnight of Saturday, 15th March, 1862;" but made no final decision as to the Sunday delivery. The following day, that is the 15th March, the Empire stated—"The P. and O. Company's mail steamer 'Northam' may be expected to arrive with the January mails early this evening. It may be desirable to repeat, as we stated yesterday, that the Executive have decided to avoid the delay and inconvenience of waiting until Monday, and that the letters will be sorted and delivered with all possible expedition after the mails are received at the Post Office." This notice in fact meant the Sunday delivery. There are some further minutes on these papers as to the sorting of the "Northam" mail and detention of papers, that may call for the attention of the Board, but what I chiefly want to point out is, that it is impossible that any head of a department can get on if interfered with in this way, and that the public and that the officers of the department were needlessly, for two days, in a state of uncertainty as to the final decision of the Government. I give no opinion as to the propriety of a Sunday delivery, which is beside the present question, but wish to illustrate the mischief arising from a subordinate communicating with newspapers or parties out of doors, prior to matters being brought officially before the authorities.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.

39. By Mr. Smart: It does not appear to me that you have shewn that any of your officers did communicate with the Empire? I cannot prove it; but this memorandum of Mr. Hunt was written to me on the 13th March; the notice in the paper came out on the 14th.

40. Did you apply to the Empire to ask whether the paragraph in question had been communicated by any one in your department? I did not, and I have certainly no positive proof, though, taken in connection with other matters, I have a strong opinion on the subject. I received another memo. from the Superintendent on the 15th. "In case the letters cannot be sorted this evening in time for a general delivery, I submit they should be sent out, and the windows opened for two hours either before or after Divine Service to-morrow." On which, not liking this, as I thought improper interference, I wrote—"This matter is in the hands of the Honorable the Minister for Finance, and the suggestion herein made has been already offered." That suggestion being, that if it were done at all it should be before Divine Service. Then Mr. Hunt says—"I am aware that I made a suggestion on Thursday last to have a general delivery on Sunday, but receiving no reply induced me to send this." I say, "I did not allude to the Superintendent's former suggestion." Mr. Hunt says, "I am happy to say there has been no necessity for a Sunday delivery of letters;" and then there is some remark about the detention of the paper.

41. According to your shewing, there was no necessity to detain the employes on Sunday—they were to be kept until 12 o'clock on Saturday night? That was the decision come to; but it could not be known till the steamer was sighted.

42. That decision came on the 14th? Yes; but the question of the Sunday delivery was left an open one, and the Empire of the 15th reiterated its statement.

43. Still the employes knew on Saturday they would not be required on Sunday? They knew on Friday the decision of the Government, so far as it went; but could not know the final decision till the "Northam" came in.

44. By Mr. Watt: I do not yet see how you identify these notices with any subordinate in your department? I can only say that Mr. Hunt made a certain suggestion on the 13th March, which I did not receive till the 14th, and that, on the latter date, the very thing appears in the Empire as having been recommended "to the Executive on the part of the Post Office."

45. Did you go to the Executive on the 13th? No, I did not receive this memorandum till the 14th, and I waited on Mr. Weekes on that day, and obtained his decision.

46. By Mr. Smart: The recommendation made to you by the Superintendent of the Letter Branch on the 13th was not in excess of his duties? Certainly not, if it were not communicated to any one else; but if it were, I consider that it was.

47. You have not been able to trace this notice in the newspaper to him? No; I infer it from the statement in the paragraph—"Application has been made to the Executive, on the part of the Post Office, for leave to open the boxes and deliver —"

48. That was on the morning of the 13th? The insertion was on the morning of the 14th.

49. Then, in fact, it was not then true, as application was not made until the 14th? It was not made by me.

50. Might it not have been an imaginary thing on the part of the editor of the paper? That is possible; but I do not think it is probable. I have nothing further to say with reference to that matter. The next subject to which I would refer has connection with the delays on the part of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch, in replying to references made to him as to applications for letters, &c. These are matters which require immediate decision, and I gave an order that all these references should be replied to within forty-eight hours. Mr. Abbott thought twenty-four hours sufficient. The following is a memorandum I received from Mr. Abbott, covering a number of such applications:—"I deem it necessary,

W. H. Christie, Esq. " in case of complaint being made as to delay in replying to the enclosed papers, to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the dates of reference to the Letter Branch, and the date on which they were returned to me." This is dated the 9th. The enclosed papers were referred, as I afterwards ascertained, as follows:—

On obtaining this report, I felt it to be my duty to make the following Minute:—
 " Supt Letter Branch.—My Minute of 18th February last seems altogether contravened in most of these cases, and your report, in some instances, seems to have been made seven and eight days instead of two days after reference." On which Mr. Hunt states—" And so it will be contravened in consequence of an inefficient staff; they were sent up by me before nine o'clock this morning, Sunday intervening, and Saturday being a half holiday. I consider under the circumstances they are only a few hours over the time allowed. None of the papers have been over three days, as they were received in the Letter Branch on Friday. I have likewise called the Board's attention to this circumlocution, in order that it may be avoided in future." On which Mr. Abbott says—" The majority of the papers are dated 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th inst. Being sent up before 9 a.m. was of little advantage. As a rule, I think that papers referred to the Letter Branch in the morning should be reported on and returned in the evening of the same day. As to the circumlocution referred to I cannot see the application, except with regard to sending the papers through two officers of the Letter Branch, merely for the purpose of being initialled by them. As to the delay, I think from the 1st to the 9th, exclusive of Sunday, amounts to eight days, or, excluding the 9th, to seven days." I then say—" I see no valid reason for the papers having been detained in the Letter Branch. I consider the staff of the branch not inefficient if properly looked after. The delay and circumlocution seem to have occurred after the papers were referred to the Superintendent, and I do not think his statement is borne out as to the delay having in no case exceeded three days. I beg that my orders may be attended to in future, and all letters returned within forty-eight hours, and agree with the Secretary that if proper diligence were used they might be reported on and returned the same day." Mr. Hunt says—" No delay took place in my room, and I should again like to see the papers in question, because in my opinion the majority are dated the 5th, one the 4th, and one the 1st. Surely the inefficiency must be known, as Messrs. Danne and Mahoney, having been recently appointed, have been of very little use." I say—" Secretary, let the Superintendent, Letter Branch, examine the dates of the letters being sent down to him. I certainly was not aware that Messrs. Danne and Mahoney were concerned in the detention." There is another case which has also occurred since the meeting of the Board, and I think it right to bring it forward as shewing the inconsistency of Mr. Hunt. This is an application from Mr. Post, master of the Dutch ship "Maassluis"—" I have the honor to request that a parcel addressed to Messrs. Beit and Macdonald, and erroneously delivered by me to an officer of the General Post Office, may be returned to me, and the postage thereon remitted. The said parcel was shipped in Batavia, and bill of lading for it signed by me, which document is now in the hands of the above-named gentlemen; the said parcel therefore belongs to the other merchandise of which my cargo consists." On receiving this letter, I called upon the clerk in charge of the Ship Room to report, which he did as follows:—
 " I see no objection to delivering this free, as it evidently has been delivered in error." Mr. Hunt says—" He should pay book rate." To which my reply is—" As the mistake has been made I am disposed to think it fairer to make no charge at all. It cannot be considered a book parcel, the ends being closed. Let it be delivered free to the parties addressed." Mr. Hunt remarks on that—" Very well, I shall act so in all future similar cases." " Parcel received and will be delivered upon application." I say—" With reference to the remark of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch, dated 11th instant, each case must be brought forward separately; as the Postmaster General, or country postmasters only can decide as to surcharges." Mr. Hunt says—" But there was no charge on this parcel, as it was delivered free of postage." I say—" There was a large postage charged, though not paid." Mr. Hunt replies—" With all due deference, the Postage Act does not authorize letters and packets to be delivered free of postage—the 21st section refers to overcharged letters and packets." I reply—" The parcel of merchandise brought to the Post Office was neither a letter nor a packet. However, the matter is decided." Now not only is there given in this case a great deal of needless trouble, but a reference to other cases will shew the inconsistency of the opinions given by the Superintendent of the Letter Branch. Here is a case in point:—No further back than November, 1861, a letter was addressed to me as follows—" We return herewith a parcel of samples which we received this morning, through the Post Office, on payment of 9s. postage. We beg you will direct that the above amount of postage be returned to us, and you can make what use you like of the parcel returned herewith. We think some directions should be given to your Shipping Officer, to the effect that parcels of samples and consignees' letters should be left with the masters of vessels to deliver." I say upon that—" Mr. Hunt, report, and get Mr. McMahon to report, but unless further grounds are given I do not see that I can return the 9s." Mr. Hunt says—" The amount should be returned; we have done so on former occasions." Mr. McMahon says—" This parcel must have been enclosed in the " loose

" loose letter bag detained on board the ' Star of Peace,' and consequently never came through my hands." I then say—" Inform Messrs. Gilchrist and Co that in this instance I will refund the money, but the fault entirely rests with the captain, who ought not to have posted the letter." Now it is quite clear that if the samples were to be given free in one case, they should be in the other, and yet in this case Mr. Hunt says nothing whatever as to the necessity of paying book rate postage.

William Harvie Christie, Esquire, Postmaster General, called in and further examined :—

1. By the Chairman : Will you go on where you left off yesterday? Before entering on the question of improvements in the office I would like to hand in my report for 1859, which will give further information as to my attempts to establish the Money Order System. (Handed in.) It will also shew that I reported as to the railway, that I had not the power that it seems to me I ought to have; and it gives in full my plan for sorting the inland mails on their voyage to Sydney.
2. By Mr. Smart : You say " the power that you ought to have "—do you think you ought to have the direction of the Railway Department? No, but I think I ought to have the power to fix the departure of mail trains; I had that power according to the old clause.
3. That was at the time the railway was in the hands of a private Company? Yes, though I do not know that that had anything to do with it.
4. Was it not one of the conditions on which the Company's privileges were granted, that they should run trains for the convenience of the postal department? I do not know how that may have been. However, on one occasion, thinking I had that power, I remonstrated, and stated I had the power, and was then, for the first time, informed that the clause had been repealed.
5. I do not think in England the Postmaster General has the power you say you ought to have here? Perhaps not; but the railways there do not belong to the Government. I propose now to go into the question of the various improvements that have taken place, and Mr. Hunt's suggestions; and, as I have not had access to the evidence, I have taken an article from the Empire, signed " Investigator," which I think bears internal evidence of having been furnished by Mr. Hunt. I will go through each of these matters seriatim, to shew how much truth there is in the assumptions it contains. The first allusion is made to the unpleasant dissensions, the existence of which I am sorry to say I cannot contradict.

It then says that Mr. Hunt, since his return from England, has "urgently recommended various important improvements," and that "these improvements were invariably opposed " by the Postmaster General, and those which have been carried into effect are the result of " forcible appeals to the Ministers who have been successively responsible for the supervision " and control of the Post Office Department." And it then states that Mr. Cowper is the Minister who chiefly has carried these out. As I go through these improvements I think it will be shewn that in no one instance has Mr. Hunt deserved the credit which has been claimed for him for their introduction, nor am I aware of the forcible appeals alluded to.

6. By the Chairman: Is it likely to shew anything that will bear specially upon the objects of the Board's inquiry? Very much so; I think it will shew that in some instances I have introduced and Mr. Hunt has opposed, and that for years past I have allowed him to get the credit of improvements with which he has had nothing whatever to do.

7. By Mr. Smart: Do you think it worth while to go into an elaborate contradiction of newspaper articles which the Board has not taken up? I have not seen the evidence that has been given before the Board, but I conclude that this contains the gist of what has been put forth on Mr. Hunt's side of the question, and therefore I am anxious to take the opportunity of shewing that the statements here made are diametrically opposed to the fact, a thing I have never yet been able to shew, because from my position, I have been unable to enter into a newspaper controversy.

8. Can you identify Mr. Hunt with the article you allude to? Of course I cannot prove that Mr. Hunt is directly concerned in it, but I think it bears internal evidence that the information has come from him. However, I will content myself with simply replying to the allegations it contains, without attributing the authorship to any one in particular.

9. I think, for my part, that it would be better that you should bring before the Board any suggestions that you have to make, apart from reference to the correspondence which you now allude to? Well, I will do that. With regard to the establishment of the Post Office at Moore's Wharf, which Mr. Hunt has hitherto had the credit of, and which I have been believed to oppose, I may state that Mr. Hunt brought forward, after his arrival from England, the idea of what he called floating post offices, but there was nothing very definite in his proposition, and I understood from him that it would entail some extra expense, which the Estimates having been passed, I could not undertake. He then gave his evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, in which he recommended that two floating offices, as he called them, should be established, and that late letters viâ Melbourne and Southampton should be there posted. No provision whatever was suggested by him for any extra postage to be paid on the letters, and as Mr. Hunt required extra assistance, I did not entertain the proposal. Subsequently the Chairman of this Board brought before me what I thought a tangible proposition, and that was that there should be an office at Moore's Wharf, for the reception of late letters viâ Marseilles, upon payment of 1s. as late fee being made. I immediately referred the matter to the Superintendent of the Letter Branch, who referred me to his evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, which I thought did not embrace the subject. I referred then to the Ship Branch, and Mr. Brooks, the head of the Foreign Branch, then recommended that it should be as Mr. Montefiore had suggested, for letters viâ Marseilles only to be received at Moore's Wharf, and that 1s. should be charged. I wrote to Mr. Montefiore that I was obliged for the suggestion, and I at once took it into consideration, and established the late office at Moore's Wharf, adopting, however, a charge of 6d., instead of 1s., and making it by Marseilles, which I need not say is not at all Mr. Hunt's proposition. I may at this period state that although I considered it would be sufficient for a junior clerk to attend at Moore's Wharf, I was very glad to get Mr. Hunt to do anything, and as it was a hobby of his, I let him go down there, though it is not a duty the Superintendent should properly perform. I hand in the papers that verify the above statements. I would now bring before the Board the papers connected with the establishment of iron receivers. I may state that in the year 1854 my attention was drawn to the fact that there were receivers in Belgium and France, and I got Mr. Levinge, who is a very good artist, to copy a print which I had of the Paris receivers, I think it was, which he copied for me in May, 1854; and he then went to P. N. Russell and Co., first of all—not to the parties who afterwards had the contract—and they stated they could be supplied for £12 or £15 each. I then waited on the then Colonial Secretary, and told him I thought it would be an admirable plan to introduce into Sydney, and he naturally enough said it would be time enough to introduce it when it was adopted in London. This I mentioned to Mr. Abbott. In June or July, 1855, Mr. Stone and Mr. Abbott saw a print of the plan which was adopted by the London Post Office—which it will be seen is not at all the plan adopted for the Sydney letter boxes—and brought it to me. I again sent for Mr. Levinge, who produced a design of his own, which is shewn here (alluding to papers before him), and I decided that I would bring the matter before the Government, with a recommendation that it should be carried out. On the 2nd of August, 1855, Mr. Hunt, having returned from England some few days before, sent me in his own suggestions, and amongst the rest he says:—"Increased facilities should be afforded to the public for posting their letters, by " causing the erection of iron receivers upon the wharves, market-places, and public " thoroughfares, and the Exchange. I would have brought one out, but could not procure " it from the contractor. Only two were erected in London, one in Fleet, the other in " Farringdon-street. I suggest, therefore, that the Postmaster General should import six " at his earliest convenience." Now I did not say at this time all I might have said, but I wrote this:—"I have long had this matter under consideration, and having been furnished " two years ago with plans of the iron receivers used in Paris, waited on the Colonial " Secretary on the subject, who thought their introduction in New South Wales would be " premature. But within the last ten days, and before the receipt of this, steps were taken

"in this matter." Mr. Levinge was again called upon, and he again went to the contractor, and in October, 1855, I was allowed to send in my advertisement calling for tenders, which were accepted, and the receivers were erected. But to shew that there can be no doubt upon the question, Mr. Levinge has handed to me the MS. of a letter he prepared for publication in the Empire, in answer to some remarks claiming for Mr. Hunt the credit of having caused the establishment of these receivers, which letter he brought to me at the time, and I advised him not to publish it. This is the letter:—

"POSTAL IMPROVEMENTS.

"To the Editor of the Empire."

"Sir,—My attention has been drawn to a paragraph in the Empire of the 20th instant, headed 'Local Improvements in Postal Matters,' in which the following passage occurs:—'It will be within recollection that early in the beginning of last year the first iron letter receiver was erected in London, and that, by its novelty and adaptation to the public requirement for increased postal facilities, it entirely enlisted public approbation. Since that time iron letter receivers have been erected in all the principal thoroughfares of London. Mr. Hunt, one of the gentlemen connected with the Sydney Post Office happened to be in London at that time, and witnessed the erection of the first iron letter receiver. Struck by the simplicity and ingenuity of the invention, he resolved to introduce the iron letter receiver into this Colony on his return. Measures were taken shortly after Mr. Hunt's return to give his ideas a practical form, and we notice as the result that the first of the iron letter receivers has been erected at the Circular Quay, within a short distance of the Custom House.'"

"There are some errors in this statement, which I trust you will excuse me for correcting, having personally superintended the construction of the iron receivers now in course of erection throughout the City, and being probably better acquainted with the circumstances which led to the introduction of these receivers by our Post Office authorities than the writer of the paragraph in question.

"I am not prepared to say at this moment when the first iron letter receiver was erected in London, but I can confidently state that letter receivers of this description have been in use in Belgium for some years, and that in the early part of the year 1850 they were introduced into France. A drawing of the one erected in the Rue-de-la-Paix, Paris, appears in the Illustrated London News, of 9th March, 1850. It is elegant in appearance, and somewhat different from those in London, the latter being square and entirely devoid of embellishment, the former circular and possessing considerable artistic merit. Those introduced into Sydney are upon the French model.

"With respect to their introduction, in justice to those concerned I feel bound to mention that the subject was brought under the notice of Major Christie, our Postmaster General, upwards of two years since, and at his request I made a drawing and specification of one. The plan was then submitted to Messrs. Russell, the iron founders, who offered to cast them at £15 each. The sum mentioned by them was considered rather too high, and there the matter rested for some time.

"Attention was again drawn to the necessity of introducing these letter receivers in August, 1855, in consequence of some of the citizens of Sydney having petitioned the Postmaster General for additional receiving houses, and the petitioners were then informed that the subject of erecting iron boxes was then under consideration, and that no definite answer could be given to the petition. The matter was again placed in my hands by the Postmaster General, and I lost no time, as soon as the sanction of the Government was obtained, in adopting measures to have the present ornamental, and I trust, useful letter receivers, erected.

"As Mr. Hunt did not return to the Colony until September last, after an absence of eighteen months, and long after the designs had been drawn and determined upon, you will, I trust, excuse the liberty I have taken in shewing that your reporter or informant is mistaken in some of the facts he has adduced.

"May 22, 1856."

"I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

"THOS. W. LEVINGE."

The recommendation I made before the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Government Departments, on the 17th September, 1855, the Board may not think of much consequence, because it is certainly given subsequent to the receipt of Mr. Hunt's letter; but what I said before Captain Ward's Board was this:—"There is another economical arrangement which I proposed some years ago, and which I am satisfied now would be a good one, as it has been recently adopted in London. It is the placing of iron receivers for letters. These would be placed like lamp-posts on the side of the streets, or in thoroughfares, and would render the receiving houses unnecessary. I am getting tenders for these receivers, and I think they will vary from £10 to £15. If this plan were adopted, the letter carriers would call at these iron receivers, instead of at the receiving offices, for letters, and the salaries of the postmasters of the receiving offices would be saved. Qn. Where do you propose to place these? Ans. I think if there were ten or twelve about the city of Sydney and the suburbs, that number would be sufficient at the present time. These receivers are iron boxes, secured by a lock, of which I hand in two plans, one of the Paris, and the other of the London receiver. Qn. You would attach them to some fixture in the street? Ans. I would place them in the streets, and get rid of the receiving offices. Qn. What economy would you effect in that way? Ans. I should save the salaries of the receiving officers." I beg to hand these papers in, as proving that Mr. Hunt, directly or indirectly, had nothing whatever to do with the establishment of iron pillar boxes in Sydney. (Papers handed in.) I then come to the newspaper pillar boxes,

W. H.
Christie, Esq.

boxes, for which the newspapers, in Mr. Hunt's behalf, have claimed, not only that he introduced them, but that I opposed them strenuously. I am afraid this will be rather a long affair. The first notice I can find of it is a proposition from the Gas Company, in 1859, who, having some lamp-posts with very large columns, thought they might be applicable for newspaper receivers, and I thought this would obviate the difficulty about using the pillar letter boxes for receiving newspapers, which Mr. Hunt strongly objected to, because the letters would "pig," as we call it, in the boxes. On getting this letter from the Gas Company I wrote to the Superintendent of the Letter Branch:—"Mr. Hunt, the column of No. 1 is applicable for a pillar box, and is so large that we might divide the opening into letter and newspaper receivers if thought expedient. Report. If adopted at all they will be placed in well-known central sites. There are six of them at the Gas Works—16/3/59." On which Mr. Hunt reports:—"Pattern No. 1 is a very great improvement on those in use, and I agree with the Postmaster General that they ought to be erected in the most public thoroughfares, but I would suggest that they may be kept exclusively for the receipt of newspapers—16 March, 1859." I say:—"The suggestion is worth consideration. How would you empty them? The lamps are a great protection to the receivers, and the letters are of more consequence than the papers. That appears to me the only reason why these should have letters—17." Mr. Hunt replies:—"They must be emptied every day—7 a.m. and 2 p.m. An additional horse, cart, and driver, will be required, as I can do no more with the present horses and carts—17." Upon this I make a further minute:—"I have seen the Secretary of the Gas Company, who is to let me know the terms. I have written to Mr. Bubb to go and look at the pillars and report to me the cost of fitting them up. Let Secretary, in conjunction with Mr. Levinge, give me their views of the matter. How they are to be emptied will be a matter of consideration also—21." However, finding they would not accommodate both letters and newspapers, that it was of more consequence for the letters to have the light than the newspapers, and that there would be a difficulty about whom the gas lamps would belong to, that plan was given up; but it will be seen that I was the mover in it, and that to some extent Mr. Hunt rather opposed it. After this the newspapers again advocated that newspapers should be posted in the letter pillar boxes, and it was said it was done in Melbourne. On hearing that, I determined to write to the authorities at Melbourne on the subject, and gave the following directions with that object:—"Write to Secretary, Melbourne Office, informing that we have hitherto restricted the receiving boxes to letters, for the following reasons:—1st. That it is said the same restriction takes place in London. 2nd. That it is said that letters will constantly pig if newspapers are put in the same box. 3rd. As the newspaper mail closes before the letter mail, the hour for emptying the receivers would be different. 4th. That from the increased weight and frequency of opening, great additional expense would be caused if newspapers could be posted in the iron receivers. I am informed, however, that newspapers are posted in the pillar boxes at Melbourne, and I should be glad to know under what restrictions, and whether practically much inconvenience has been caused—13/10/60." To the letter written in consequence of this I got an answer dated 27th October, 1860, in which it is stated that though the boxes in question were intended only for letters, newspapers have been posted in them, and have been allowed to pass, and the Secretary concludes by saying,—"Generally no inconvenience has been experienced from the practice alluded to, but on the despatch of English mails additional assistance for clearing the boxes has to be provided." Mr. Abbott, the Secretary, upon this gives his opinion that it ought to be done here as it is done in Melbourne, and I call on the Superintendent of the Letter Branch:—"Superintendent, I have always been unwilling to press this matter too much, as such difficulties appeared to you and others to exist in the carrying out of the measure; as, however, the thing is working fairly at Melbourne, I think I shall commence the same from the 1st January next. Have you any strong objections to urge?—13/11/60:"—which proves what I stated, that, as to "pigging," that was an objection made by Mr. Hunt. Mr. Hunt then says—"If it is intended to afford this additional accommodation to the public, I hope sufficient provision may be made for their conveyance to this Office by mail cart. A horse and extra mail boy will likewise be required, because it is with difficulty the boys arrive in time for the respective deliveries. I shall ascertain how many Summaries (Herald's) each receiver will hold, in case they should be the means of shutting out what the iron pillar boxes were originally intended for. The practice in Melbourne appears not to give notice, neither ought one to be issued here until proper receptacles are erected for their reception.—R. A. H.—14 Nov., 1860." On getting this, which is an objection to the plan, I see I note in pencil to Mr. Kebble, the Accountant—"Bring in the Estimates for 1861 at 10 a.m., to-morrow—15/11/60." In bringing forward the Estimates of every year I always call on each head of a branch to state what he wants, and, among others, I called on Mr. Hunt, and this is his estimate (referring to a paper) in which there is no provision made for newspaper receivers, but when this draft of his, accompanied by the original draft of the annual Estimates for the department, came before me, I added this—"Newspaper Receiving Boxes, £120." This is in my own handwriting, and when I sent off the Estimates of expenditure to the Colonial Treasurer, on the 27th June, 1860, I say—"In addition to any receiving houses that may be necessary, I propose that four newspaper pillar boxes should at once be erected in different parts of the City, and estimate the expense of each at £30." I think that makes it apparent that through all the steps Mr. Hunt rather opposed and I introduced, and that he certainly had little to do with the introduction of newspaper boxes. I will leave the papers. (Papers handed in.) Another matter claimed by Mr. Hunt as his recommendation, and which it is said has been opposed by me, is that carriages should be ordered from England, and that there should be spare axles, and that these vehicles should be horsed by innkeepers. Now

innkeepers who can horse carriages, I need not say, are not to be met on the roads here at every ten or twenty miles; but, to shew that this matter has not been overlooked by me, I bring forward a letter of mine of 14th January, 1854, about four years before anything was said about this by Mr. Hunt. I am satisfied this proposal of mine would meet the circumstances better than any other, but I never thought it would be a saving, but rather an increased expense, and I will shortly shew by letters from contractors, that the additional expense would be very great. I will just read the last paragraph of my letter:—"Should the Government, however, decide, as I sincerely trust may be the case, that without waiting for railroad communication, the time has arrived when it is absolutely necessary for the postal service of this Colony to be placed, regardless of expense, on a thoroughly efficient footing. The plan I would take leave to recommend for the consideration of His Excellency, as more practical and economical than that suggested by the memorialists, would be as follows:—1. That two-horse carriages of a suitable construction be ordered from Home, or built in the Colony for the service of the Government. 2ndly. That these carriages should have capacious boots, and seats for a driver and guard only, who should both be armed, and both be in the service of the Government. 3rdly. That these carriages should be horsed by contract." Now I certainly consider that that embodies Mr. Hunt's recommendations, and is more practicable. I may state here that, in obedience to the wish of the Chairman of the Board, a circular has been addressed to all the principal mail contractors, begging to know from them what would be the additional expense if the mail coaches were limited to two passengers and the driver, and to travel at the rate of six miles an hour, and answers have been received. Messrs. Crane and Roberts say:—"We have carefully gone over the expense that would be incurred, and have gone minutely into the details of the proposed arrangement, and beg to state in reply that the expense would be more than treble than at present. You will please bear in mind that the faster the mails are carried the more expensive it becomes; the increased rate of speed of course operating greatly against the horses."

W. H.
Christie, Esq.
15 May, 1862.

10. By the Chairman: Does that mean on each contract that Crane and Roberts perform? Only on the main roads.

11. Let me ask you to read the letter in which you ask for the information? This is a copy of the circular sent:—"Gentlemen,—I have to request that you will at once furnish me with a statement as to the extra expense, if any, in addition to your present contract, that will be incurred, should the Government decide upon the mails being conveyed on the main roads, at the rate of six miles an hour throughout, in carriages limited to carry two passengers and the driver." Sheahan and Garry say, "We will meet the arrangements required by you for the sum of £700 per annum additional."

12. What is the amount of their contract? £2,285 3s. 2d.

13. Do you not think that if such a contract were put up to tender again, it could be done for something considerably less than what Crane and Roberts say they would require? I do not know. At all events we are bound to them for the term of their contract, which expires on the 31st December, 1863. Messrs. E. and A. Duckett, contractors on the Western Road, say,—“We have the honor to state, in answer to your communication of the 22nd April, that the alteration of plan, &c., necessary for the conveyance of mails and passengers, in compliance with the terms expressed in such communication, cannot be effected for a less sum than £600 per annum.”

14. What is their present contract? On the main road, their contract is £1,000 per annum.

15. £600 additional for all their contracts? No, for that on the main road. Mr. John Gill, contractor, on the Northern Road, sends a telegram to this effect:—"To carry out the proposed change I would require twice the amount of present contract, and to carry it out effectually many delays would require remedy." I will hand in these papers. (Papers handed in.) I will also hand in a letter of mine of the 10th July, 1852, transmitting a draft of an advertisement for tenders, in which the number of passengers was limited to five near the town, and three away from the town; it also gave a three years contract. We did take some contracts on these conditions, and the system of giving a three years contract is still in existence; but generally speaking, the condition limiting the number of passengers has lapsed. (Letter handed in.) In a subsequent letter, dated 14th January, 1854 (which I have before referred to), I recommended that the mode of conveyance should be by two-horse carriages without passengers. The same letter throws light on the efforts made by me before to establish mail conveyance, with a limit of passengers. In this letter there is the following paragraph:—"During the past year, for the first time; tenders were called for for conveyances authorized by law to carry only a limited number of passengers, and although to a great extent the principle was carried out, it was found indispensable to modify it, from the vast difference, in point of expense, which may be conceived, when I state that the difference in price from and to Sydney and Parramatta, for conveyances licensed for sixteen passengers, and for conveyances licensed for five, was no less than £220, and that the difference between Sydney and Campbelltown was £350." (Letter handed in.) The next point I have to remark upon is as to St. Mark's Post Office. In the beginning of this year there was a change made, by which the arrival of the mail at St. Mark's and Watson's Bay, as per time table, was made later. This was in consequence of the departure of the railway train with the morning mails, to Windsor and Campbelltown, being altered from 10 a.m. to 10 15, upon which it was suggested in the Letter Branch that the suburban mails had formerly been late on account of the Western mails not coming in till 8 45, and that it would be convenient if the two sets of mails, viz., the morning and the suburban, were sorted together. This was done, and the mail to St. Mark's was consequently later. However, when Mr. Smart brought the matter before me, I found that there

W. H. Christie, Esq. was no imperative reason why it should be so, and I at once ordered a new time table to be made out, and set the matter right. (Time table handed in.) I only give that in because it has been stated elsewhere that the Board gave me an order to do it, and that it was on that order it was done. I have the papers here as to the Postal Inspector's appointment. I do not know whether the present is the time to go into it, but I may state that I had nothing whatever to do with it in any way.

16 May, 1862.

16. You mean the alteration in the appointment? Yes, the change from Mr. Levinge to Mr. Dillon. This (referring to a paper) is the journal of the late Postal Inspector, Mr. Levinge, and on this I had occasion, in the course of my duty, to make remarks, and to call for various explanations. On the 20th December, 1861, I was obliged to forward this journal to the Colonial Treasurer, with my remarks thereon, and to state that I was not satisfied at all about the matter. I thought he ought to have been not more than two months away, instead of some four or five, that he was. The Treasurer entered into this, and called for reports as to his sickness, and some medical certificates were sent in, and at last the final minute was made by Mr. Weekes, as follows:—"Mr. Levinge's explanation is "of a very unsatisfactory character, and I think the interests of the public service will be "promoted by the office of Postal Inspector being held by some gentleman better able to "carry out its duties. I shall be glad if the Postmaster General will recommend some "other officer of the department, properly qualified, with whom Mr. Levinge may be allowed "to exchange." Mr. Levinge, without any reference to me, proposed Mr. Dillon, who being perhaps better informed about these things than any other man in the Colony, not excepting Mr. Abbott, I was glad it so turned out, and accordingly I recommended the exchange. That is the history of Mr. Dillon's appointment as Postal Inspector. I beg to hand in the papers in the case. (Papers handed in.) I may state, in explanation of Mr. Dillon's not leaving town at once on a tour of duty, that at the beginning of the year we almost always take three months before we can get ready the new time tables and arrange for all the new Post Offices. We usually take that time; and I am sorry to say that Mr. Levinge, whether from indisposition or otherwise, did not assist very much towards these time tables, in consequence of which there was some little confusion this year, and I was obliged to keep Mr. Dillon for nearly two months constructing the time tables, and in fact I would rather have kept him another month, but that he was urgently required in the direction of Mullenderree and Moruya.

17. By Mr. Watt: Could no one else prepare the time tables? Mr. Abbott and I used to do it, but it was a great addition to the current work of the office. In fact the time tables are the mathematics of the Post Office. It is impossible to conceive the difficulty of dovetailing those time tables one into the other until you sit down to attempt it.

18. Do you not think it could be done by a clerk in the office on a report made by the Inspector from the spot? No, I do not think anything would be gained by that. We know exactly how all these branch lines join in, without the necessity of a report from the spot.

19. Then a Postal Inspector is unnecessary? No; if a postal contract goes wrong, that is when the department mostly wants a Postal Inspector, who may be despatched at once to make the necessary arrangements;—in a case, for instance, where a contractor is failing, or there has been any embezzlement of money at a Post Office. I have sent him now towards Moruya to inquire about a number of abstractions of money from letters, and also about the loss of a packet of registered letters, and on this occasion I sent a detective at the same time.

20. You do not view the Postal Inspector as an inspector of roads for the purposes of the Post Office? He is obliged to report on all contracts that may require it. Generally speaking, I keep him for the first quarter of the year to construct time tables; after that he reports on such matters as may require attention with respect to the carrying out of contracts, or such cases as the one I have just mentioned, and he also reports upon petitions for new lines, but I could never send him out all the way to the Darling; for instance, exclusively for such a purpose. I may say, with reference to the papers relating to the letter boxes at the General Post Office, which I now hand in, that Mr. Levinge is very anxious that I should put before the Board that he was almost entirely the author of these, which have proved of great service at the Central Post Office. To Mr. Levinge entirely the merit of these is due; he introduced them, and with some modifications from the Secretary and myself, they have been carried out on his design. I believe he thinks some one else has tried to get the credit, and he has expressed a wish that I should lay the papers on the table. There was an allusion made to alphabetical sorting which I should be extremely sorry to see done away with. When I first came to the Post Office nothing struck me so much as the fact that there were only a very few officers therein who could sort letters by the road system then in use; in fact, my impression is that only three could do it—Mr. Abbott, Mr. Stone, and another clerk; and in case of the absence or sickness of any of these, it was deplorable to see the work not going on. Therefore when Mr. Abbott was at the head of the Letter Branch, at my instance, he and Mr. Dillon, who had been in the London Post Office, and Mr. Stone, among them, got up the alphabetical system of sorting, which I am certain any one who considers the subject must see is the right system, though unluckily, from the confined space I have at my command, it cannot be carried out fully. There is only one advantage in the road system over the other, and that is, that if any mistake is made the letter is upon the right line of road. But to shew the great stretch of memory and of local knowledge required under it, I may mention that letters for the following Post Offices, the very names of which are perhaps unknown to the Board, are enclosed in the Cooma post-bag:—Adaminiby, Cathcart's, Russell's, Buckley's Crossing Place, Jindabine, Delegate, Nimitybelle, and Jejenzrick, which last is not a regular office.

21. By the Chairman : Are all these offices in thinly populated districts of positive advantage except to individuals? They are much sought for, and the Government decided that they were to be established.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.

15 May, 1862.

22. It is the Government who decide? Yes, invariably.

23. Is each new Post Office appointed by the Government? Yes.

24. To whom is the application made? The way a new Post Office is established is generally this:—A memorial comes to me, perhaps through a Member of Parliament, upon which I generally refer to one or two of the postmasters nearest to the place where the new line is sought to be established, for information as to the work there will be, and whether a new Post Office is required; sometimes I get a report from the Bench of Magistrates; and, having obtained all the information I can, I send in the papers to the Government, and when I really believe it is required I recommend it, or I leave it open. I think one Post Office only has been established without reference to me.

25. Does it not seem to you that a great many Post Offices could be dispensed with? They are all very useful to the parties interested.

26. That is not the question—do you not think there are some Post Offices that might be dispensed with without the public suffering inconvenience? Certainly not. The public in the neighbourhood must benefit. The expense of a Post Office is a mere nothing; it is the postal lines that run up the cost.

27. Do you think that every Post Office now in existence in the Colony ought to be there as a Post Office, incurring the expense of a postal line? I think that the Post Offices with full powers might be perhaps weeded; but in each case such a claim has been made out that the Government has yielded to it, and in each case the residents are very much interested, as, if it were not for the establishment of these Post Offices they would probably have to ride 30 miles to register a letter. I think the 350 Post Offices, or whatever may be the exact number, are a great public benefit.

28. You do not think any ought to be dispensed with? No, I am not aware of any, with one exception—that I have brought before the Treasurer.

29. Do you think any new ones should be established, or that we have got the exact number that there ought to be in the Colony? I gave in the return—351 I think is the number.

30. Is that the exact number required? I cannot say. I might get a requisition for another to-morrow.

31. You say the public derive advantage from all that there are? Decidedly.

32. Do you think there are any other points where it would be for the public advantage that there should be Post Offices? I am not aware at present. I may at once mention that at the terminus of every postal line there ought to be a Post Office; that is at once evident; and it is the postal lines that are the great elements of expense. I can only say that for every Post Office that has been established the papers can be seen—the petitions, the recommendations, and the acquiescence of the Government.

33. By Mr. Smart : I presume there can be no Post Office without a postal line leading to it? It is the new line that entails the Post Office, not the Post Office the new line.

34. The Post Office must be at the end of the line, for delivering the letters? Yes, but perhaps at the end of the line there may be only two or three letters to deliver; they are dropped all along the line; but still there must be a place as a terminal Post Office. Except that there must be a supervision over the lines, and some recognized party to report the hour of arrival of the mailman, a Post Office in some cases might not appear primâ facie necessary. I would state generally, with reference to improvements in the Post Office, that I owe a great deal to the suggestions of Mr. Abbott and the late Mr. Stone, and Mr. Dillon having been in the London Post Office, made out all the forms of time bills, letter bills, &c., now in use in the Letter Branch. The mechanical and artistic matters I owe to Mr. Levinge. The general arrangements of the Office in the Ship-room, Sorting-room, Delivery-room, and so on, were made by myself, after a tour to Melbourne and Van Diemen's Land. I desire to clear myself also now from any suspicion of favouritism in the appointments, which has been alleged against me. I may state that when I took charge I found Mr. Abbott in the most difficult position in the Letter Branch, and therefore I do not consider myself immediately responsible for his being made Acting Superintendent of the Letter Branch, and afterwards, Mr. Hunt not claiming it, Secretary. With that exception, the only appointment, to the best of my belief, that I have made, in which I have not observed the principle of seniority, was that of Mr. Dillon to the Corresponding Branch. At that time it happened that Mr. Abbott had only very young clerks in his room; and in a correspondence I need not read here, he expressed his desire that any clerk who succeeded Mr. Levinge should do duty in the room, and he gave his opinion that Mr. Dillon was by far the best qualified. Mr. Reeve applied for the appointment, but did not offer to go into the Corresponding Branch, and even if he had, Mr. Abbott did not think him at all equal to Mr. Dillon, being inert and slow, and I thought the same. But having recommended Mr. Dillon, I felt that something was due to Mr. Reeve, as the senior clerk passed over, and in sending in the Estimates in 1858 I tried to provide for any apparent injustice—I tried to get him an additional salary. I stated that "in doing so"—that is, in appointing Mr. Dillon—"I have passed over a deserving senior whom I do not consider capable of taking charge of the Corresponding Branch, but that in the Estimates of 1859 I have made a recommendation in favour of that officer, which will, I sincerely trust, be sanctioned." With regard to Mr. Buchanan, the other clerk passed over, he was unfit for the Corresponding Branch; he had great difficulty in passing his examination as a classed clerk, and it was only on my assurance that he would most likely be always in the Letter Branch that he got his certificate. As far as I can recollect, that is the only instance in which I have not had reference to seniority. With regard to any appointment of my own friends, I may say I never appointed any particular friend of mine, and the only officers I did appoint, who brought me letters, were such good clerks, that they were taken away to other departments, or went into business. I understand that Mr. Dillon has avowed himself the author of certain letters which appeared in the newspapers, and I certainly must say this, that although I never wrote or caused to be written a line in a newspaper myself, as to the Post Office Department, except in a case that was made almost a private matter as to the late Mr. Ussher, I can hardly wonder at any officer of the department taking the part of the Post Office, after the attacks that had been made upon it; and more especially in the case of Mr. Dillon, because his promotion was stopped entirely owing to the evidence given by Mr. Hunt before the Retrenchment Committee, so that he naturally felt rather sore on the subject.

35. Do you think it advisable to make changes on postal lines without the Postal Inspector visiting the locality where the change is made? I do not think it is necessary, nor could such visits always be made. The general way it is done is this,—that either the residents themselves or a contractor petition for a change, or that the line is prolonged, and it may thus be necessary to make some alteration in the time tables.

36. How can you know whether it is to the advantage of the district or not. Have you not had an example in the case of Tuena, where though a change was apparently to the advantage of one portion of the district, it proved the reverse to another portion? In that case I saw where the shoe would pinch, but I consented to the change, because I considered that Mr. Cowper who, as Member for the district, pressed the matter strongly, might be supposed to represent the majority of the inhabitants.

37. Would it not be very advisable that any proposed change should be in some local paper, if there happened to be one, for, say a month, before the change took effect? Yes, that might be done where there was a local newspaper.

38. And where there was not, could not a notice be affixed at the Post Offices interested? Yes. Generally speaking we have been very fortunate in our time tables, but I am bound to say that Mr. Levinge rather botched them this year.

39. Do you think it advisable to establish new lines without the Postal Inspector visiting the localities where they are proposed? I do not think it is necessary; and with the other duties he has to perform, it would not be possible for the Postal Inspector to visit all the places where new lines are wanted.

40. What do you consider the duties of the Postal Inspector? He has to frame and adjust the time tables properly, and all the time bills and late arrivals have to be handed over to him to report on. He ought to travel for about six months in the year, and send in reports on the state of the postal contracts and Country Post Offices, and on any new postal lines. I think an active man might almost visit the whole of the postal lines by travelling six months in the year. I used myself at one time to get £100 a year for inspecting Post Offices, and I always travelled 1,000 miles, and I thought I saved five times my £100, besides setting matters right.

41. Who prepared the time tables before there was a Postal Inspector? It was done by Mr. Abbott and myself chiefly, sometimes with Mr. Dillon's assistance; but it engrossed an enormous quantity of time.

42. Do you not think it might be better done in the office, without leaving it to the Postal Inspector, so as to allow him to visit more of the Post Offices than he can do now? No, I think not so well. You cannot keep a man on horseback travelling about for 365 days in the year. I think if he occupies his time half in travelling and half in the office, on the matters that engage his attention there, it is the best arrangement.

43. Could he visit every Post Office in the Colony in six months? I think he might. At all events, by travelling six months in each year, he could visit each of them at least once in two years.

44. Do you not think it advisable that every Post Office and postal contract should be examined into annually, if possible? Yes, no doubt it would be an advantage.

45. When the appointment of Postal Inspector was originally contemplated, do you not imagine it was for the purpose of examining into the Post Offices and postal contracts, and finding out the requirements of the different districts? When I recommended it, my idea was that it would relieve the Corresponding Branch of this business of preparing time tables, and that I should have some one to refer to in matters of fines, or to send to make inquiries if there were any abstractions of money or anything of that sort. There are constantly matters of the kind coming in which require immediate attention; but if the Postal Inspector were always away visiting Post Offices on the outskirts of the Colony, I should have no one to send to investigate them. There is now a case which has occurred in the south country, where two contractors have absconded, and have thrown all their contracts into confusion. When there is a sudden rush of people, too, to a new gold field, as was recently the case at Forbes, on the Lachlan, and a new Post Office is required, that is a matter that requires a great deal of consideration; but if the Postal Inspector was away to the north, for instance, we could not obtain his services to report upon the matter.

46. Did you not, by the English mail just arrived, receive some money orders? Two, I think.

47. I thought there were about twenty? I only saw two.

48. They were paid, were they not? No. It was at first thought it was a mistake; the name seemed to be like Sydney. I think it is likely they may have made a mistake at Home. The whole of these orders are made in favor of a letter carrier in the department, and I have requested the Melbourne Post Office to pay them.

49. How far back is it since you proposed the introduction of the Money Order System? Officially and in detail on the 29th February, 1860. The two Boards—Mr. Thacker's in 1851, and Captain Ward's in 1855—were both against its immediate introduction, and both gave their reasons. With regard to any appearance of inconsistency on my part in respect to it, I need not say that the increase of population makes a change, but the question was brought before me chiefly as a matter of economy. Now I never thought it would be a matter of economy, and therefore when it was put upon that ground I did not recommend it; but when I found there was a pressure for it, I brought the matter before the Government and recommended it. I have always understood that they lost at Home by it for the first ten years, and they might here.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.
15 May, 1862.

50. Did Mr. Hunt originally suggest the introduction of the Money Order System? Not that I can recollect; I do not think he had anything whatever to do with that. Indeed as it has been brought forward so often, and is a system so well known for years in England, I do not think any one here can be said to have the merit of suggesting it. I dare say before the Retrenchment Committee Mr. Hunt may have recommended it. At one time there was an offer made to all the banks to manage the Money Order System with reference to the United Kingdom and this Colony, and they all refused to do it.

51. I think when you were here last you spoke of appointing sorters between Melbourne and Sydney? That is also in the Report of 1859, which I have handed in.

52. Supposing there were sorters appointed between Melbourne and Sydney, would they be able to complete the sorting so effectually as to prevent your having any great amount of sorting in the General Post Office? I do not think they would.

53. How much time would they be likely to save? Not much more than two hours.

54. Do you think the saving of time would be worth the expense? No; I have always made that proviso, "if expense is no object." They would not save more than two hours I think.

55. After having perused the answers you have received from the different contractors on the subject which you have laid on the table, can you form any opinion what would be likely to be the additional cost of running the mails at the rate of from five to six miles an hour along the main roads, carrying only two passengers—the total additional cost? I think about £10,000 a year.

56. In your remarks yesterday you made some observations about the delivery of letters on Sunday—they are never delivered on Sunday now, are they? Never.

57. Neither to the public nor to the holders of private boxes? No.

58. Do any of the clerks attend in the Letter Branch on Sunday? Only when there is an English mail.

59. When the English mail does come in on Sunday? They always sort the letters on Sunday ready for Monday morning's delivery. When I first became Postmaster General one of the clerks and a certain number of letter carriers had to attend on Sunday to sort and deliver all letters that came in by the ship mails, but the merchants in Sydney petitioned that that might be done away with, and that there might be no delivery on Sunday; and since then, so far as I know, there never has been a Sunday delivery, except in the case of the "Salsette," when I happened to be on leave, and that gave rise to much discussion.

60. Whether the letters are delivered on Sunday or not, the clerks are not the less at work? No; if the English mail comes in on Sunday.

61. You have sent in a very full explanation with respect to the detention of the letters addressed to Miss Armstrong, at Appin—can you give any explanation with respect to a number of missing newspapers; it is stated that out of so many as 400 copies of the Empire posted, only 132 reached their destination? It was never reported to me, so far as I recollect.

62. You know nothing about it? I do not, except that I have incidentally heard that there was some mistake made about a number of newspapers, which was not brought under my notice. There may have been a bag left behind or mis-sent.

63. We have been informed that the matter was reported to Mr. Hunt? I do not recollect its being reported to me, which it was his duty to have done.

64. Are you aware of any complaint having been made to you that has not been duly attended to? Never. For years past I have made it a practice never to leave any paper on my table twenty-four hours unattended to. And with regard to the Empire, as they have attacked me very much, I should take much more trouble in their case, if necessary, than I ordinarily do.

65. Every complaint made to you has met with due attention? Invariably.

66. Have the parties received answers as rapidly as they could be forwarded? Yes. I do not think that it can be said of any department, that such matters are attended to with more expedition therein than they are in the Post Office.

67. Do you think the accounts of the Post Office could be in any way simplified? I dare say if there were no reference to the Auditor General they might be; but the Auditor General arranges these forms, and they must be complied with. The staff is only what it was when I took charge, and there are double the number of contracts and Post Offices now—in fact nearly treble.

68. By Mr. Knox: If it were an independent department it would still be necessary to shape the accounts according to the Auditor General's wish? It would as matters stand here, but I am not aware whether the accounts of the Post Office in England undergo audit elsewhere.

69. By the Chairman: Who assigns the occupation of the different clerks? It is chiefly done by the heads of the branches, but of course I am cognizant of the arrangements.

70. When a new clerk joins the department, who assigns his occupation? I do, generally. If a clerk is absent in the Letter Branch, of course the new clerk would naturally go into that branch; but if a clerk in the Corresponding Branch were absent, and an officer came

W. H.
Christie, Esq.

15 May, 1862.

came in who could not write a good hand, or was not otherwise fitted for that branch, I should send him where I might think he would be useful.

71. Is there any examination of clerks before they enter? No; there used to be at one time, but that has been done away with.

72. How then do you know what a clerk is competent for when he first comes in? He must be tried.

73. When their occupation has been assigned, do the clerks progress in promotion and salary according to seniority, or according to their capacity as exhibited in carrying on the work of the office? Without some clear reason to the contrary I attach great importance to seniority.

74. How has it generally been done? By seniority generally.

75. Which has been the primary consideration, capacity or seniority? Certainly seniority, except in remarkable cases of disqualification.

76. When a new Post Office is established, upon what data do you form an opinion whether it is necessary or not? There is generally a petition from the inhabitants for a Post Office, which is in most cases backed by the Bench of Magistrates, or by the Member who represents the district. I immediately refer to the nearest postmaster, perhaps to the two nearest, and get their reports, and any information I can get out of doors I obtain. I then send in the papers with my own opinion on the subject, and the Government decides.

77. Who regulates the hours of attendance of the postmasters up the country? It is done in every case by the rules and regulations. I think the only exception is Newcastle, where I made the exception on account of the steamers arriving early. The Post Office there opens at seven o'clock and closes at three.

78. Are there not a great many cases where the Post Office closes at six—is not that the rule? That is the rule.

79. Are not many of these places where the mail does not arrive till seven, eight, nine, or ten o'clock? When the mail arrives at a later hour than six p.m., the office must be kept open half an hour after such arrival, but not later than eight p.m.

80. As the postmaster in these cases is obliged to keep the office open to receive the mails, do you see any objection to his being allowed—for we understand it is now against rule to do it—to deliver letters to any one who may be there waiting for them? He really is allowed to do it now; no one forbids him. As there must be some limit of time beyond which the postmaster cannot be compelled to keep his office open, six o'clock has been fixed upon as the usual hour of closing, except in the case already specified, but in the case of mails arriving later than 8 p.m., I think in nineteen cases out of twenty the postmasters do deliver letters to those persons who may be there when the bags are opened.

81. Are they instructed to do so? No.

82. Might they not be so instructed, receiving something in compensation for the extra trouble? They might.

83. Do you not think that, in the absence of such instructions, there may be instances where that accommodation is not afforded, and the public might in consequence lose a post? That might be so; but one must draw the line somewhere, and it is difficult to do so to please all parties. Postmasters who perhaps only receive a salary of £12 a year can hardly be expected to put themselves to much inconvenience. However, I have no hesitation in saying that if a postmaster systematically refused to accommodate the public when he might fairly do so, the residents would soon write to complain of him, and if the complaint were well founded I should feel it my duty to make a change.

84. Has every postmaster in the Colony the discretion to deliver letters to persons who may be in waiting when a mail comes in, even though it be after hours? It may not be given formally, but it is understood all over the Colony that every additional accommodation may be given, but that a postmaster is not to be partial; if he does it to one he must do it to all.

85. Do I understand you to mean that in the event of a mail arriving, say, at ten o'clock at night, if there were parties in waiting who were anxious to have their letters, the postmaster would have it in his discretion to deliver the letters? Most decidedly, if he did it to all alike.

86. By Mr. Smart: To all who might be in attendance? Yes.

87. By the Chairman: Do you think it advisable to have postmasters up the country at a salary of £12 a year only? That is an advance on what it used to be, and it is all that can be spared out of the vote for country postmasters.

88. Do you think it would be advisable to appoint postmasters at higher salaries in those that are direct offices? There are many Post Offices where I should like to have an increase certainly.

89. Have you ever recommended that increase? Yes; I used every year to adjust the salaries as well as I could, but last year my recommendations were not attended to. The papers are before the Board.

90. In the office generally you exercise unlimited control—do you not? Yes.

91. Is it in your power at any time to suspend or remove any clerk? I could at one time suspend; in fact I thought I could even delegate to the Superintendent of the Letter Branch the power to suspend any letter carrier who misbehaved, but it was decided in a case that came before the Minister that I could not suspend—that the power of suspension rested with the Minister, and of dismissal with the Executive.

92. Do you think the Post Office on Moore's Wharf, when an English mail is leaving, is the best arrangement of the kind that could be made for the accommodation of the public? I dare say the Post Office at Moore's Wharf may have been of use, but if Mr. Hunt had not objected very strongly, I would have preferred keeping the whole matter in the office, and having a boy and horse ready to gallop off at the last moment with the late letters.

93. Mr. Hunt, I suppose, is not obliged to go himself to Moore's Wharf? No, he volunteered to do it.
94. Is there any other of the clerks who is competent and has time to do it? Mr. Hunt says not—not in the Letter Branch; he stated that he could not spare a clerk.
95. Might not a supplementary mail, viâ Southampton, be kept open in the same way, and on the same conditions, as is now the case with respect to that viâ Marseilles, at Moore's Wharf? No, I do not think so; every clerk in the office is kept as busy as he can be, as it is.
96. What time do the mails that close at eleven o'clock leave the office? About half-past one.
97. Would it not be possible to keep the mail viâ Southampton open, after closing the mails for all foreign and intermediate ports—say between twelve and one—that is to say, cutting off the intermediate time between eleven and twelve, and opening a supplementary mail for both Southampton and Marseilles between twelve and one? It would be possible if I had another clerk, but it is all I can do now to get the mails off in time.
98. You must bear in mind that you would then be keeping in the office the clerk who now goes to Moore's Wharf? Only Mr. Hunt.
99. And one clerk? I believe he takes a stamper with him.
100. Do you not think then you could do it? I am not sure that I could. I have had the mails late going on board as it is.
101. Have you ever endeavoured to carry on the work of the Post Office without all these lengthy minutes, such as have been laid before us? I have no lengthy minutes except with Mr. Hunt, and he has always indulged in those. There is one advantage from them, that there is a record of these matters of difference. But I have often said that I disliked the system; for instance, on this letter of the 2nd of August I say, "Let Mr. Hunt see my memorandum on his suggestions, which I should much prefer to have orally in future." I have often expressed my disgust at the time taken up by these minutes.
102. Some remark has been made to us about the protection of the clerks with respect to the forwarding of registered letters; it seems that though a registered letter may be duly entered and put in the mail bag, if, on its arrival at its destination, the postmaster there should declare that it was not in the bag, the clerk in Sydney is held liable—can you suggest any means for the protection both of the one party and the other? It is a very difficult thing to do; I cannot see how it is to be done. There was a very unfortunate case, in which a letter containing £100 was taken, in which I was really glad to make a compromise—the clerk paid half and the contractor paid half. My opinion now is that the bag was opened on the road and the letter taken out.
103. Can you suggest no means for the protection of the establishment? I do not see how it can be done.
104. By Mr. Smart: Could not two clerks act one with the other in putting up registered letters, so that there might be evidence of their having been sealed up in the bag? That would divide the liability but not reduce it; and even then it would only be the evidence of the two clerks against the evidence of the postmaster and his clerk, or some person whom he might call to see him take the registered letters out of the bag. He is obliged to call some person as evidence, and if there is a letter missing they both send down a certificate to that effect.
105. By the Chairman: It is quite clear that some means should be adopted—what means have the public of making your clerk liable, if it can be proved that that clerk put the letter in the bag, and that the bag was tied up and sealed with the letter in it? I only know of one case of the kind; but I am sorry to say that, at the present time, abstractions from registered letters between this Colony and England are taking place to an unusual extent.
106. A Money Order System, I apprehend, would do away with the difficulty? Certainly. But unless you can imagine a mail-bag made of chain armour, I do not see how it is possible to prevent the possibility of letters being abstracted.
107. Is the Accountant's time fully occupied? As far as I am aware, it is.
108. How do you make yourself aware? I see that every thing is conducted properly.
109. Do you go into his office in the course of the day? Yes, occasionally.
110. When you go does he seem to be occupied? Yes. He has not as much to do, perhaps, as the Secretary, but he seems to be at work.
111. Do you think he has work to do which occupies the time he ought to be in the office? I do, certainly. I have only three clerks there, and notwithstanding the increase of work, it has always been done; but I am aware now, for the first time, that there are arrears in one branch of the Accountant's office—in the country postmasters' accounts—which Mr. Nelson has not yet made up for last year.
112. Whose fault is that? It is primarily Mr. Nelson's fault.
113. Is it likely Mr. Kebble would assist him? Mr. Kebble should see the work done, and as there do exist these arrears, I am bound to believe Mr. Kebble has had his work to do; and I know he has three times as much to do as he had when I came into office. I had one clerk more in that branch in 1859, but in 1860 I thought he had not enough work to do, and I struck him off. I may state, with reference to these country postmasters' accounts, that some few months back, owing to an irregularity at Bowenfels Post Office, the Secretary gave his opinion that it was hardly worth while checking these postage accounts; and Mr. Kebble at this time recommended that the great mass of these accounts should be got rid of, with which view he put a scheme forward—first, of having major accounts and minor accounts; and he afterwards proposed that they should be altogether done away with. I did not like that, however; I thought it unbusinesslike not to continue some kind of check. It appeared to me also that the object was to get rid of Mr. Nelson somewhat what summarily, and as he was a very old public servant, I did not think it right. Afterwards, in the House, allusion was again made to the circumstance that a clerk at £375 a year was employed checking accounts which only amounted to £400. I then went to the Auditor General, and told him my difficulty. I said I saw there was an anomaly, but I did not like to do away with the check altogether; and he then suggested to me, that every month I should name ten Post Offices myself, that these only should be checked, and that, in this way, the postmasters would not know whose accounts were going to be checked. We agreed that as the amount was so small, it would be a sufficient check. I ordered this to be done, and upon that I reduced another clerk in the Accountant's Branch.

114. The clerks now in the Accountant's Branch are Mr. Kebble, Mr. Nightingale, and Mr. Nelson? Yes.

115. Is Mr. Nightingale always employed? He makes up the ledger; it is very well done, but I cannot say I know fully all the details of his work.

116. Is there work enough in the office to employ Mr. Kebble and Mr. Nightingale continuously? Yes, I think there is. Of course the amount of work varies in some degree, sometimes more, and sometimes less.

117. Do you think either the one or the other idle away their time in office hours? As I said before, I do not think there is the same amount of work in the Account Branch that there is in the Secretary's Branch; but I do not think I could reduce the number.

118. Do you think either of them idles away any portion of his time? I am not in a position to say.

119. By Mr. Smart: Then if you are not in a position to say, you cannot say whether one person would not be sufficient to do the whole of the work, or not? I do not think two could do the work; but whether these three are at all times so fully employed as not to have time, for instance, to read a newspaper, is what I am not in a position to say. I am obliged in these matters to trust to some extent to the honor and discretion of the Accountant, who holds an office of importance.

120. If you cannot tell whether they idle their time or not, surely you cannot say how many can or cannot do the work? I do not think the Account Branch could be managed with less than three clerks; and I have had no instance of this idling, though if I were asked the question I must say I do not consider them quite as active as some other parties.

121. By the Chairman: Could you say from positive knowledge that Mr. Kebble could not get through his work in three hours a day? I should certainly say not, though no doubt his work must vary, the same as any other person's.

122. You think he requires to be at work more than three hours a day? Yes, I think he does, most decidedly.

123. And Mr. Nightingale also? Yes. I can only say they have done their work satisfactorily.

124. Have you any means of ascertaining, from your own personal observation, whether the work in the Account Branch could not be done by one person instead of two, supposing he worked attentively and diligently from the time he went into the office till he left? I can only say I have had no complaints.

125. By Mr. Smart: Who is to complain to you of their neglect, if it occurs,—not themselves surely? No. I may state that with half the work or a third of the work, I found when I took charge, that number of clerks in the Account Branch.

126. You cannot say that if there were twice the work that there is now, these three clerks could not do it thoroughly themselves? I can only say there are some slight arrears now, and that they profess to be very busy. I cannot get more work out of them, for I know that there is great difficulty started for want of time whenever I want an extra return made up there; but the work is done well. Though it is an invidious thing for me to say, I do not know that these are the most active clerks in my establishment; but I do not think there is any neglect of duty on their parts.

127. By the Chairman: Do I understand you to say or to mean that you cannot inform me whether one clever and industrious clerk would or would not be sufficient to do the work now done by Mr. Kebble and Mr. Nightingale? I do not think he would. But I would not be at all sorry if a re-arrangement with respect to the duties of Cashier would add something to the work of the Account Branch. I think three good clerks might perhaps do more than they do now. I think Mr. Nightingale might be made Cashier, and issue stamps, and might still keep the ledger.

128. Mr. Nelson is the other clerk in the Account Branch? Yes.

129. You have said his work is in arrears? Yes, somewhat.

130. Do we understand from that, that you refer to a minute that you made on some application of his, reminding him that there were arrears in his particular branch, and that he had laid himself open to animadversion for non-attendance, and recommending him to pocket his salary and go home and enjoy himself with his wife and child? No; if any minute of that kind exists, I think this will account for it. After I decided on getting rid of a clerk in the Account Branch, it became necessary, of course, that the work he had been in the habit of doing should be done by some one else, and I directed that Mr. Nelson for the future should only have the checking of ten of these postage accounts, instead of what he had before, and that he should also do Mr. Miller's work, Mr. Miller being removed. Mr. Nelson is very excitable; he has often had epileptic fits, and been taken from the office, and on this occasion he got so very excited, and sent me so many memoranda, and so on, that in fact they thought in the office that he was becoming insane; and he used some expressions that really made me think he would become insane or commit suicide. On this occasion, in order to calm him, I do recollect writing a memorandum, in addition to my official communication, in which, so far as my memory serves me, I said in effect that I did not know what he had to complain about, that his salary was the same, his hours of attendance the same, and and that my opinion was that all he had to do was to receive his salary, do as he was ordered, and then go home to his wife and child and enjoy himself. If that memorandum, or a copy thereof, has been brought before the Board as a matter to prejudice me, it is an unworthy and an ungrateful act. It was only as to the particular kind of work that he was to do that there was any difficulty. If that is what is alluded to I perfectly recollect some such memorandum.

Christie, Esq.

131. By Mr. King: It was written to pacify him when in a state of excitement? Yes, entirely; and I now hand in all the papers in connection with Mr. Nelson's matters.
132. By the Chairman: Was it the arrears that now exist that you referred to then? Not precisely. It was intended, in fact, that the Account Branch should get up all arrears on country postage accounts up to 31st December, 1861, by the end of January, so as to commence the new system at the latter period, but the postage accounts of the country postmasters for last year are not yet fully made up, as I believe, and those are still the arrears from the beginning of this year under the new system.
133. Are you aware that Mr. Keble has been borrowing money from Mr. Nelson? I was not aware of it till just prior to the appointment of the Board. In fact I think at the period to which I have already alluded Mr. Nelson made use of some expression to me about it; and though it was not a matter I was immediately called upon to notice, I did ask Mr. Keble whether there had been any money transactions between them, and he told me there had been a disputed account which had been settled in due course of law in his favour.
134. It is stated that Mr. Keble had been borrowing money from his subordinate officer—do you think such conduct permissible in a public office? If two clerks in a public office are friendly, I can easily conceive their borrowing money from each other, just like two officers in a regiment might do. It is a thing that I never encouraged either by precept or example.
135. Do you not think it is likely to subvert discipline? Yes; it is undoubtedly wrong, especially in the case of a superior from an inferior.
136. Are all the clerks tolerably regular in their attendance at the Post Office? On the whole they are.
137. Have you ever had occasion to make complaints? I generally have the complaints made to me. The attendance books are in the charge of the heads of the branches, and it is their duty to send a memorandum to me if any of the clerks have been remiss, and I then take notice of it.
138. Are you aware whether any postmasters in the country have been prisoners of the Crown? I have ascertained very lately that one of those appointed by me had been so, but I did not know it when I appointed him. I only know of one other instance, in which the appointment was made before I joined the department. I have looked at the recommendations of the one appointed by me, and I find he was recommended very strongly by his predecessor, then a Clerk of Petty Sessions, and now, I believe, a Commissioner of Crown Lands in the district of Queensland, and by the Bench of Magistrates.
139. Some complaints have been made about the changing of the Brisbane Water Post Office from one side of the river to the other—do you know anything of that? I do not recollect the case; but I am sure the change would not be made unless it was recommended in some way. If a postmaster is changed, of course, as matters stand with these country Post Offices, the site of the Post Office must be changed too.
140. Have you had any complaint respecting the postmaster at Port Macquarie refusing to make up mails when there was an opportunity of forwarding them? A gentleman who corresponds a good deal with the department, and I believe with other Government departments, did make some complaint, but at the time I thought the postmaster was right; he gave an explanation which I thought was very clear.
141. Do you remember what that explanation was? His statement was that it was not usual to make a mail up for a passing steamer, as the steamers did not make a rule of calling for the mail at that time, and that in the case more immediately in point it would have been dangerous to have sent off the mail to the steamer.
142. Did you take any trouble to see whether the account you received from the postmaster was a correct one? I sent a copy of the explanation to the gentleman who made the complaint, and he sent a rejoinder, which was also reported on.
143. Are there not two Post Offices at Hartley within a mile or two of each other? Yes, at Hartley and Little Hartley. When the first reference was made to me on the subject, it was by Mr. Martin, who seemed annoyed at my not yielding the point at once; but I saw afterwards that there was a population around Little Hartley sufficient to justify the establishment of a Post Office, and the Government at last gave it.
144. Would it not save some expense and trouble if there were only one Post Office situated somewhere between the two places? I do not think a proper site could be obtained for an office so situated. At the town of Hartley, where they have a Bench of Magistrates, I think they would complain very much if they were to lose their Post Office. I think that a very fair case for two Post Offices.
145. Even so near one another as that? Yes.
146. Have you given any further consideration to the opinions you have expressed touching the postage on newspapers? It has struck me that a halfpenny tax would meet the case, if there is to be a tax at all; and if there is to be no charge on newspapers, so much ought to be set off from the Post Office expenditure, as being given for a particular purpose: perhaps it should be paid from some other fund. I do not think the Post Office should take gratuitously five-sixths of the mails without getting a farthing for it.
147. You mean to say that a halfpenny should be charged on every newspaper that goes through the post? I think so.

W. H. Christie, Esq. 148. Can you form any opinion whether the newspapers or the letters are the greater number along the distant lines—whether, in fact, the forwarding of newspapers is the accessory to the conveyance of the letters, or the letters the accessory to the newspapers? 15 May, 1862. That depends in a great measure upon the local newspapers.

149. Are there many local newspapers conveyed by post? A great many. With regard to the request made to me by the Chairman that I should suggest a system by which the postage accounts of country postmasters and the letter bills should be got rid of, I called on the Superintendent of the Letter Branch and on the Accountant to report. The former suggests a system of weekly accounts with the postmasters, which would of course increase the number of documents; the latter suggests that accounts should be kept in the General Post Office with direct offices only, which would, as it seems to me, merely shift the duty of making up the accounts for the forward offices to the direct offices. The Accountant further recommends that the postage accounts, being so trifling, might be made up monthly in place of quarterly, in which I concur. I would say generally that I think there must be a record of these matters, and that the present letter bills put it in the most effective shape. There must be an account against the postmasters, and there must be naturally his against such account; and I do not think the matter, involving as it does a payment from the party receiving the letter, can be put in a better shape than by the letter bills as now in force.

Henry Lane, Esq., Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, called in and examined:—

- H. Lane, Esq. 1. By the Chairman: It is part of your duty to check the stock of stamps held by the Government Printer? I was verbally instructed by Mr. Donaldson, then Treasurer, to do so. 29 May, 1862. 2. Have you done so? I have.
3. How often? Perhaps quarterly—three or four times a year.
4. Have you done so at least as often as three or four times a year? At least three times a year.
5. You could be confident that you have done so at least three times a year? Yes.
6. How do you take stock? The stamps are deposited in a safe. There is a separate pigeon hole for each denomination. The sheets of stamps of all denominations are arranged in parcels of 50 each. I examine all the denominations in succession; for instance, the twopenny denomination—it consists, say, of twelve or fifteen bundles of fifties, and a broken bundle; I take the broken bundle first, and carefully count the sheets; I then take indiscriminately from the pile of whole bundles, one, and count the sheets; then, from another part of the tier of bundles, I take another parcel and count it, and I consider this to be a satisfactory way of estimating the number of the whole.
7. Does that refer to the number of sheets of paper for printing, or to the number of stamps printed? The stamps printed; I refer to them only, at present.
8. Do you count the sheets regularly? In the way that I have just explained.
9. Do you count the number of sheets in each bundle? Not in each bundle. Say there are twelve or fifteen bundles of 50 each of one denomination, I select a bundle from the centre of the pile, and count the sheets of that; I then select another parcel, perhaps from the bottom, and I count that. I take on an average two bundles, count the sheets, and thus ascertain the correctness of the books kept by the printer, and the stock that he states he has on hand. I apply that test to the whole bundles of each denomination; but all broken parcels I count individually.
10. By Mr. Knox: When did you last audit them? I had been absent on leave for some time; but immediately on my return I checked the stock on hand. That was on the 20th of January last.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

POST OFFICE.

(SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT, BEING FOR 1861.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 9 December, 1862.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE, TREASURY, transmitting the Seventh Annual Report on the Post Office Department, being that for 1861.

General Post Office,
Sydney, 4 December, 1862.

SIR,

In accordance with former instructions, I have the honor to transmit, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, the Seventh Annual Report on the Post Office Department, being that for the year 1861; and may add, that it would have been transmitted earlier, had not the time of the clerical staff of the office been taken up in the early part of the year by the preparation of Returns required by the late Post Office Board of Inquiry.

No. 1.—PRESENT EXTENT AND INCREASE DURING PAST YEAR OF POST OFFICE SERVICE.

At the end of the year 1860 the extent of the postal lines was 8,231 miles. On the 31st December, 1861, it amounted to 9,569 miles, shewing an increase of 1,338 miles of postal route. The extent of new post route organized was 1,548 miles, a change of route adding four miles, and the postal lines discontinued amounting to 210 miles. A further increase in the communication on existing postal lines, to the extent of 1,143 miles, has also been arranged during the year.

The Returns of the new, the added, and the discontinued postal lines, will be found ^{Appendix A, B, C, and D.} in the Appendix.

The miles travelled in 1860 were 1,461,518. In 1861 they amounted to 1,982,498, shewing the extent of miles of additional mail travel to be 520,980.

At the end of 1860 there were 289 post offices. On the 31st December, 1861, there were 337, giving an increase of forty-eight post offices in the year. Fifty were established, four re-established, and six discontinued. The particulars are given in the Appendix. ^{Appendix E and F.}

Sixty-seven new postmasters have been appointed during the year. The vacancies were caused by fifty-three resignations, six deaths, and eight virtual dismissals.

An additional letter-carrier has been appointed for the town of Windsor, and there is an increase in the number of licensed vendors of postage stamps of fifteen. ^{Appendix G.}

In the corresponding branch, exclusive of printed time bills, returns, &c., 11,984 communications, referring to the business of the office, were received and registered during 1861; to which 3,571 letters and 3,781 blank covers were transmitted in reply.

During 1861 the Cashier has received 4,305 remittances, and has paid away 3,162 cheques, whilst 153 new accounts have been opened with contractors and others in the Accountant's ledger.

REPORT FROM THE POSTMASTER GENERAL—1861.

No. 4.—EXPENDITURE.

The following Return shows the Total Expenditure of the Department, for the years 1860 and 1861, under the heads of Salaries, Contingencies, and Conveyance of Mails:—

| YEAR. | Salaries. | | | Contingencies. | | | Conveyance of Mails. | | | Totals. | | |
| 1860 | 23,244 | 3 | 10 | 1,061 | 17 | 0 | 47,084 | 17 | 8 | 71,390 | 18 | 6 |
| 1861 | 23,821 | 11 | 4 | 1,456 | 15 | 10 | 55,906 | 16 | 10 | 81,185 | 4 | 0 |
| Increase | 577 | 7 | 6 | 394 | 18 | 10 | 8,821 | 19 | 2 | 9,794 | 5 | 6 |
| Decrease | | | | | | | | | | | | |

The increase in the whole expenditure is at the rate of $13\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

The augmentation under the head of "salaries" is $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and is caused by the increased number of postmasters, and the appointment of the Windsor letter-carrier.

Under the head of "contingencies," the increase is at the rate of 37 per cent., which is caused by the temporary appointment of two extra clerks, and a temporary railway guard on the Northern and on the Southern Railroad. The large increase under the head of "conveyance of mails" is at the rate of $18\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and is caused by the somewhat increased rate of the tenders, and by the extended postal facilities afforded by the Government during the year. The subsidy towards the English Mail Contract is not paid for through the department, and is not, therefore, included in this expenditure return.

The mail-coach guards were discontinued during the year 1861, and were struck off pay on the 31st March of that year.

It will be seen that in no instance was the Homeward Mail despatched prior to the arrival of the Outward Mail. The authorized day of departure was adhered to, except in September and November, when, with the sanction of the Admiralty Agent, and to enable replies to be sent Home, a detention of twenty-four hours in Sydney took place.

A supplementary mail was sent by the "Rangatira," in March, at a cost of £50.

* In consequence of an accident to the steamer between Malta and Marseilles, this mail was eight days late; and a supplementary mail, dated eight days after the regular one, was received from London via Marseilles.

6.—LETTERS, NEWSPAPERS, AND PARCELS.

The three following Tabular Statements shew the number of Letters, Newspapers, and Parcels posted throughout the Colony during 1861, compared with those for 1860.

LETTERS.

| YEAR. | Posted for Town Delivery. | Posted for Country Delivery. | Posted for Foreign Despatch. | Total Posted during the Year. |
|----------------|---------------------------|------------------------------|------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1860..... | 349,670 | 3,012,345 | 441,415 | 3,803,430 |
| 1861..... | 352,801 | 3,150,196 | 440,812 | 3,943,809 |
| Increase | 3,131 | 137,851 | | 140,379 |
| Decrease..... | | | 603 | |

According to the above return, the total number of letters posted in 1861 has increased at the rate of $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent., whilst the letters for Town delivery have increased at the rate of about 1 per cent.

The letters for Country delivery have increased at the rate of about $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., whilst the letters for Foreign despatch have slightly decreased.

NEWSPAPERS.

| YEAR. | Posted for Country Delivery. | Posted for Foreign Despatch. | Total Posted during the Year. |
|---------------|------------------------------|------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1860..... | 2,758,305 | 495,331 | 3,253,636 |

It will be seen that there is a general decrease in the newspapers posted in 1861, as compared with 1860.

Those posted for Country delivery have decreased at the rate of $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and those for Foreign despatch at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. being the decrease on the total number.

PARCELS.

| Decrease | | | 422 | |

The total increase in the parcels posted during 1861 is at the rate of $28\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. The parcels closed at the ends, posted for Country delivery have increased $1\frac{1}{3}$ per cent., whilst the parcels open at the ends have increased at the rate of 48 per cent.

The parcels posted for Foreign despatch show a decrease of 6 per cent.

The following Returns shew the letters, newspapers, and parcels despatched to, and received from, Foreign parts, divided into three classes. The aggregate number of those despatched have already appeared in the previous statements.

| Decrease | 114 | 356 | | 422 | 341 | 510 | 63 | 914 |

With reference to the letter return, it will be seen that the only letters which shew an increase, both in those despatched and received, are those passing to and from the Australian Colonies. The letters despatched have increased at the rate of 5 per cent., and those received, at the rate of $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.

The correspondence to and from the United Kingdom has decreased at the rate of 4 per cent. on the despatched letters, and $5\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. on those received.

The number of letters to and from Foreign Countries and British Possessions not already mentioned have decreased at the rate of 9 per cent. as regards the despatched, and increased 12 per cent. as regards the received.

It will be seen that in 1861 there was a slight general decrease both on the letters despatched and received.

There is a general decrease in the number of newspapers despatched at the rate of about $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and in those received at the rate of about $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. In 1860 the despatched showed an increase at the rate of 21 per cent., and the received at the rate of 5 per cent.

The falling off is chiefly to be found in the newspapers received from the United Kingdom and those despatched to the Australian Colonies; the former have decreased 13 per cent., and the latter decreased about $10\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

The number of newspapers received from the Australian Colonies has increased at the rate of $9\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and of those despatched to and through the United Kingdom 3 per cent.

There is also a slight increase in the newspapers passing between the Colony and Foreign Countries, &c.

With respect to the parcel return,—in 1860 there was an increase under every head; in 1861 there is, with one exception (parcels sent to or through the United Kingdom), a decrease under every head.

22,347 letters were returned as unclaimed in 1861, being 767 more than in 1860. Of these, 17,808 were originally addressed to the Colony, 3,086 to the Australian Colonies, 1,363 to the United Kingdom, and 90 to other places. The increase is confined to the two first items.

The

The number of unclaimed registered letters returned was 395, being two less than in 1860; and the number unregistered, but containing articles of value, 232, being twenty-four less than in the previous year.

The letters returned from abroad, unopened, as being unclaimed, were as follows:—

|------------------------------|-------|
| To Australian Colonies | 3,892 |
| To the United Kingdom | 4,700 |
| To other places..... | 229 |

In 1860 the numbers were, respectively, 3,093, 4,875, and 246.

The number of letters returned as unstamped, insufficiently stamped, and irregularly posted, was 7,704, being 1,384 less than in 1860.

84,437 registered letters passed through the General Post Office in 1861; 86,847 was the number in 1860.

There were 572 ounces of gold received through the Office in 1861, against 1,242 ounces in 1860.

Appendix I.
Appendix K.

In the Appendix will be found a Return shewing the Post Office Statistics from the year 1852 to the year 1861, both years inclusive; as also a comparative Return, shewing the average number of letters posted by each person resident in the Colony of New South Wales during the same period.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Appendix L.

During the past year no steps have been taken towards establishing the money order system. In the Appendix marked L will be found the recommendations made by me upon the subject in 1860 and 1861.

Appendix M.

On the 1st July, 1861, arrangements were made for enabling the public to obtain money for postage stamps at all the colonial post offices, and I append a return showing the number and value of stamps so exchanged from that date to the end of the year. It is probable that in process of time the system might be found as generally convenient as in the United Kingdom, where in London alone, during 1861, the money so paid for postage stamps amounted to £41,000; but the introduction of the money order system will practically make it unimportant whether the repurchase of stamps by the Government should continue or not. A fear has been expressed that the postmasters, to whom stamps are now issued at a discount of 10 per cent., might at once re-sell them to the Government at a discount of 5 per cent., and then obtain a fresh supply from the department. Practically, as may be seen by the return in question, there has been little to complain of on this head; and should an addition to the salaries of country postmasters be substituted for the commission now allowed to them on the sale of stamps, as has been already recommended by me, such objection will cease to have weight.

Appendix N.

Appendix O.

A list of the iron pillar-boxes for letters, and also of the newspaper receivers now in use in the Colony, will be found in the Appendix. Three letter pillars, and four newspaper receivers, have been erected in Sydney during the past year, and the latter (first used in 1861) have been found very useful by parties residing at a distance from the General Post Office.

The discovery of gold, first at Lambing Flat, and then at Forbes, necessitated the establishment of post offices at those places, and consequently a post office was established at Lambing Flat on the 1st March, and at Forbes on the 1st December of last year.

The partial desertion of the Kiandra gold fields so diminished the post office business at that place, that it was deemed expedient to transfer the official postmaster of Kiandra to Lambing Flat, and to place the Kiandra office in the hands of the telegraph station-master.

The amalgamation of the country post offices with the telegraph offices is a subject that has excited some discussion. It seems feasible that two offices having more or less a common object, effected, it is true, by different means, should be placed under one head, and such amalgamation of office is not without its advantages. But the fact must not be overlooked, that the officer in charge may, under certain circumstances, be unable to perform both duties efficiently. For instance, the mails must be despatched punctually at specified hours, hours, and it is also imperative that there should be no delay in the transmission of telegrams ; and yet it is manifest that one person cannot discharge both these duties at the same moment.

From the English Post Office Report for 1861, I gather, that in France the posting of an unregistered letter containing money or other valuable article, is treated as a penal offence ; whilst in the United Kingdom it has been determined that, commencing with London, all unregistered letters which unquestionably contain coin will be selected from the mass of ordinary letters, and treated as registered letters, and subjected to a double registration fee. The adoption of a similar plan in this Colony, aided by the introduction of the money order system, and greater care being taken by correspondents to transmit large sums in the shape of crossed cheques, bills of exchange, and half notes, would go far to give security to the mails in transit, and to diminish the temptation to dishonesty.

There is another change which, I think, would be productive of good to the service and to the postal revenue, and that is, to charge a single inland rate of postage (2d.) upon the delivery of every unclaimed letter. The compiling of the unclaimed letter list gives a great deal of trouble to the department, and the printing is an item of expense ; and as such list is the means by which the public obtain letters that would otherwise be returned to the writer, I think the charge would be only fair, and that it would be cheerfully paid.

A new law will be necessary before this and the preceding suggestion as to registered letters can be carried into effect.

No steps have been taken during the past year with respect to a new General Post Office, which is more urgently required than ever.

I attach to my Report, that from the Postal Inspector ; and as no definition of that Appendix P. officer's duties have yet been given, may state that these may be divided under two heads,—those he has to perform out of Sydney, and those he performs when in Sydney. The former are to inspect the country offices and instruct postmasters ; to inquire into the manner in which the mail contracts are being performed ; to take cognizance of and report any irregularities that he may become acquainted with—as also any impediments to the proper working of the postal service ; to inquire into the necessity for new postal lines or post offices, and ascertain whether any existing offices or postal lines can be dispensed with ; to investigate any complaints against postmasters and mail contractors and their agents ; and, finally, to take every means in his power to secure the proper working of the postal service. When travelling, the Postal Inspector is instructed to send in (in addition to other special reports) a diary shewing his proceedings. When in Sydney, the Inspector's duties consist in reporting upon and advising as to applications that are made for new offices, new lines, and other changes and complaints. He has also to compile the time tables which regulate the conveyance of mails throughout the Colony.

General Post Office,
Sydney, 29 February, 1860.

Sir,

Referring to the general wish expressed by the public, that a money order system in connection with the Post Office Department shall be established, I have the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, that I have had some communication on the subject with the Postmaster General of the Colonies of Victoria and South Australia, and have received printed copies of the forms necessary to carry out such a system.

2. I am satisfied it will not be possible, unless an expenditure be sanctioned much more than commensurate with the object to be attained, to establish a general money order system, as in Great Britain, in connection with every post office in the Colony, seeing that the usual salary of a country postmaster is only £12 per annum, and that I have the greatest difficulty in procuring eligible parties to conduct properly the ordinary postal business.

3. In the Colony of Victoria, the post offices where money orders can be obtained, are all placed under the charge of Government Officers, who have a fixed salary, and no other business to attend to; and there cannot be a doubt that such a system adopted here would impart greater efficiency, and ensure accuracy of accounts.

4. Believing, however, that it would defeat the establishment of a money order system were I at the present time to advocate a sweeping change of this nature, I shall content myself with remarking, in order to prevent future misconception, that it is absolutely necessary for the efficiency of the postal service of New South Wales, and for the complete carrying out of the money order system, that post office buildings should be erected in all the larger towns, and placed, not under storekeepers or residents of such towns, but under Government Officers altogether amenable to this department; and I may add, as a further inducement to the Government to make this change, that it will probably be found that telegraph stations may be economically united with such country post offices.

5. I beg to propose that the money order system should be introduced from the 1st July next; and that, in addition to the Central Office in Sydney, money orders should be procurable at the following post offices, viz. :—

Western Road—Parramatta, Windsor, Penrith, Hartley, Mudgee, and Bathurst.

Southern Road—Liverpool, Campbelltown, Camden, Wollongong, Berrima, Goulburn, and Yass.

Northern Road—Newcastle, East Maitland, West Maitland, and Singleton.

Making a total, inclusive of Sydney, of 18 money order offices. To the whole of the country post offices named there is a daily mail, which condition, in a matter of a money order account, is, I apprehend, a necessary desideratum.

6. I should, in the first instance, recommend that the maximum order be £5, as in Great Britain, and that the commission chargeable should be—3d. for sums not exceeding £2, and 6d. on sums ranking from £2 to £5. Until abuse of such privilege occurred, I would not be disposed to restrict the number of orders to be procured by any one person in the course of the day.

7. I enclose an estimate of the expenses connected with the establishment for the last six months of the year, amounting to £2,782, and beg to explain the various items therein.

8. The sum of £2,000 is estimated as the amount that would have to be advanced, in the first instance, to the General Post Office, and to the various country postmasters, which amount would of course be gradually returnable.

9. The only available space in the General Post Office for an apartment to be devoted to the purpose would be in the lobby; and I think the sum of £50 would be sufficient to enclose a small room there, which might answer the purpose; and I have included, under the head of "buildings and fixtures," an amount of £5 for each post office, to enable the postmasters to procure cash-boxes, and make any other necessary arrangements for the security of the sums of money in their hands.

10. Under the head of "salaries" I have estimated for a permanent addition to the General Post Office of two clerks, one of whom would be employed in the issue and payment of orders in Sydney, at £250 per annum; and another, attached to the Account Branch, at £200 per annum. I would propose propose an average addition to the salaries of the country postmasters, where money orders are negotiated, of £35 per annum each; the respective amounts to be paid to each to depend on the amount of business transacted at the various offices.

11. I propose that an intelligent clerk from this department should be detached for three months, to initiate and organize the system. His travelling expenses I estimate at £100, and the remuneration to a substitute during his absence, at £25.

12. The only other item of expense that I have to allude to is for stationery, forms, &c., which I have not included in my estimate, as they would be procured from the Colonial Storekeeper and the Government Printer.

13. It would be necessary that the postmasters employed in the money order department, as well as the clerk so employed in the General Post Office, should execute, in conjunction with their sureties, bonds for the due performance of their duties, in a larger amount than at present, and, with the approval of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, I would suggest that such bonds should be for the amount of £200 for themselves, and £100 for each bondsman.

I have, &c.,

W. H. CHRISTIE,
Postmaster General.

EXTRACT from Postmaster General's Report for 1860, dated 13 August, 1861, modifying former recommendation of 29 February, 1860.

Under present circumstances, therefore, I am disposed to recommend, in case the money order system should now be introduced, that its operations should commence in some detached building, and be under the control of a superior officer of the Letter Branch, under whom the two clerks should be placed.

As the accounts connected with money orders are quite distinct from the usual postal routine, I apprehend that some such plan would not interfere with the efficiency of the financial details, although it would to some extent increase the cost of the establishment.

The only other alteration I would propose making in the plan transmitted by me, would be, that the money order offices might be further extended to Scone, Murrurundi, Tamworth, and Armidale, on the Northern Road; and to Gundagai, Tarcutta, and Albury, on the Southern Road; to all which towns daily postal communication has been extended since the original recommendation was made.

My proposal, therefore, would now embrace twenty-five money order offices, including the central one in Sydney.

The Postmaster General to the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, relative to the Commission on the sale of Postage Stamps allowed to Postmasters and licensed Stamp Sellers.

General Post Office,
Sydney, 12 September, 1860.

Sir,

I have the honor to request that you will bring under the notice of the Honorable the Minister for Finance and Trade, the desirability of withdrawing, from the first of January, next the commission on the sale of postage stamps now allowed to postmasters and licensed vendors, and of substituting therefor a fixed addition to the salary of each postmaster equal to the amount of commission that will be received by him during the present year, and to each licensed vendor the minimum amount of salary allowed to postmasters on this revised scale.

2. The getting rid of the commission in question will considerably increase the revenue, simplify the accounts, and abolish the competition that has sprung up on the part of some country postmasters with the licensed vendors of stamps and with the General Post Office. The competition to which I allude is caused by some of the postmasters furnishing the public with wholesale supplies of postage stamps at a discount, thereby rendering comparatively useless at the General Post Office the discontinuance of the discount formerly allowed the public, and competing unfairly with the licensed stamp sellers, who only receive five per cent. commission, and are consequently not able to sell postage stamps to the public on the same advantageous terms.

3. The amount that will be received by the postmasters for the present year, as commission on the sale of postage stamps, I estimate at something short of £3,000, and the proposed salary to licensed vendors of stamps at £700 per annum, so that if the change proposed by me be approved, it will be necessary to supplement the vote for country postmasters and licensed vendors' salaries by a sum of £3,700, which will not only provide for the additions to the salaries of the postmasters already in existence, but will allow for the increase that will have to be made to the salary given to the postmasters of any new offices that may be established during 1861; whilst it is certain that the augmented revenue from the sale of stamps without commission will more than compensate for the increase in the estimate, and the proportionate saving will be greater every year.

The Under Secretary

General Post Office,
Sydney, 8 December, 1862.

Sir,

I have the honor to furnish you with a short summary of my proceedings during the past year, as usually appended to your annual Report.

As you are aware, the beginning of the year was occupied with Time Tables for conveyance of Mails—many of which, though carefully framed to meet the requirements of the public, and, as far as possible, the wishes of the contractors, had to be reconstructed—visiting suburban offices, and a special trip to the northward as far as Black Creek, to investigate respecting some missing letters, so that I did not leave Sydney for a tour of general inspection till July.

2. On the 9th of July I left Sydney for a tour of inspection to the Southern and Western Districts, and visited Campbelltown, Narellan, Camden, Picton, Berrima, Bong Bong, Murrumbah, Marulan, Bungonia, Goulburn, Collector, Gundaroo, Ginninderra, Queanbeyan, Janyon, Michelago, Bunyan, Cooma, Adaminiby, Russell's, Kiandra, Buckley's Crossing-place, Nimitybelle, Bombala, and Delegate; and returning via Boro and Goulburn, visited Mutt Billy, Gunning, Yass, Jugiong, Gundagai, Tumut, and Adelong; from thence via Yass to Binalong, Murrumburrah, and Lambing Flat. From the latter I proceeded to Burrowa, Marengo, Cowra, Carcoar, Blayney, and Bathurst, and returned to Sydney by the Main Western Road, visiting the offices at Bowenfels, Hartley, Emu, and Penrith, en route.

3. The number of post offices visited by me during the year 1861 was upwards of 60, and I examined as to the way in which 37 mail contracts were performed, travelled about 2,100 miles, and was occupied (exclusive of delays by accident or otherwise) fully 150 days from head quarters.

4. There has been, I am glad to notice, a continued progress in the postal service, both as regards the conduct of post offices and the equipments of the mail contractors. As regards the latter, I cannot but note with some degree of satisfaction that the American vehicles are becoming every day more appreciated, notwithstanding the low estimate they were held in by the very parties who are now availing themselves of the advantages they possess for travelling over such a country as New South Wales.

5. Having mentioned the general improvement in the arrangements of the mail contractors, it is only fair that I should mention (as stated in my Report at the conclusion of my last tour in 1861) that the vehicles, horses, harness, and equipments throughout, of the contractors, from Lambing Flat to Bathurst, and from Bathurst to Sydney, were all that could be desired, and were equal to the arrangements I have seen in Victoria, and which I am glad to see are now likely to become general here.

6. There are some other matters connected with the mail service to which I shall respectfully call your attention in another place, such as arming the mailmen, more suitable bags for carrying mails that are conveyed on horseback, &c., the exercising of a certain amount of surveillance by the chief postmasters over those in their immediate neighbourhood. But, as before stated, this is not the place to bring such details under notice.

No. 1.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG.

*Downing-street,
26 April, 1861.*

(Circular.)

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence on this subject, I have the honor to transmit to you the accompanying letter from the Treasury, enclosing a copy of a Minute from the Lords Commissioners respecting the conduct of the Mail Service between this country and Australia, and the manner in which the expense of that service is to be defrayed by the Home Government and the several Colonies concerned.

You will observe that their Lordships will be glad to be informed of the views entertained by your Government in connection with this question.

I have, &c.,
NEWCASTLE.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

*Treasury Chambers,
25 April, 1861.*

Sir,

With reference to the several Despatches from the Governors of the Australian Colonies recently forwarded by you to this Board on the subject of the Mail Service between England and Australia, I am desired by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to transmit, for the information of His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, the enclosed copy of a Minute of their Lordships upon the subject, dated the 25th instant, and I am to state that my Lords would be glad if steps could be taken for communicating their Minute to the several Colonial Governments interested, by the outgoing Mail.

I am to add, that copies of the contract when completed shall be also forwarded to the Colonial Office.

F. F. Elliot, Esq., &c. &c.

I am, &c.,
GEO. A. HAMILTON.

[Sub-enclosure in No. 1.]

Copy of Treasury Minute, dated 25 April, 1861.

My Lords have under their consideration a Report from the Postmaster General, dated 7th February, 1861, on Despatches from the Governors of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, and Tasmania, on the subject of the Mail Service between England and Australia.

By the present arrangement the Australian Mails are carried as far as Ceylon by the vessels of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, which are under contract for the conveyance of the Indian Mails. From Ceylon they are conveyed to Melbourne and Sydney by a packet calling at King George's Sound. The main service ceases at Sydney.

Although, as observed by the Postmaster General, considerable difference of opinion appears to exist amongst the different Colonies both as to the terminal point and as to the discontinuance of the stoppage at Kangaroo Island, yet the present arrangement with the Peninsular and Oriental Company seems to be generally approved, though an alteration is desired in the mode of distributing the contributions of the different Colonies towards the cost of the service.

Sir William Denison, in his Despatch of _____ puts forward a scheme which, in the opinion of their Lordships, is calculated to do justice to all parties.

Sir W. Denison's scheme comprises four propositions:—

1. A contract for a short term with the Peninsular and Oriental Company for a monthly mail between Point de Galle and Sydney.
2. That the subsidy should be divided in equal proportions between the Mother Country and the Colonies.
3. That the proportion to be paid by each Colony should be determined with reference to the precise amount of the benefit which such Colony derives from the main line so subsidized.
4. That the cost of the branch lines (with the exception of New Zealand, which is under a special arrangement in this respect) should be divided equally between the Mother Country and the Colony for whose service the branch is worked.

My Lords concur with the Postmaster General that the principle involved in these proposals, viz., that each Colony should contribute according to its share of the benefit received, is a sound one, and in accordance with the spirit of their Lordship's Minute of 27th November, 1855. It would appear, also, to have met with the approval, generally, of the Colonies to which it has been submitted.

Sir William Denison, in the Minute addressed by him on this subject to his Executive Council, lays great stress on the costliness of the service now performed for the Australian Colonies, and he draws comparisons between the mileage rates on this and other routes.

My Lords must observe in answer to this, that such questions in their opinion can be determined by no other means than by public competition. When the service was last thrown open to competition, the subsidy demanded and agreed to was even higher, and nevertheless the service was ill performed. But since it has been in the hands of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, it cannot be disputed, and indeed it is admitted by the Colonies, that it has been performed in a manner very far superior to its performance by any other contractors. And in considering the expense entailed on the Colonies, it is not to be overlooked that they are not charged with any portion of the cost of conveying the Australian Mails between England and Point de Galle.

My

STEAM POSTAL SERVICE.

My Lords are informed by the Postmaster General that the mails for Australia carried between this country and Ceylon by one out of the four services in each month, are far greater than those for India in the same packets.

It would certainly, therefore, seem but reasonable that the Australian Colonies should be debited with their share of this expense, and that the Indian Government should be relieved to a like extent. My Lords, however, do not propose to insist on the immediate addition of this expense to the sum to be divided between this country and the Australian Colonies on account of the entire service, but they reserve it as a matter for future consideration, whether there ought not to be applied, as between India and Australia, the same principle which is now in operation with regard to the separate Australian Colonies, viz., that each should pay in proportion to the size of its mails.

In accordance with these views, my Lords are now prepared to sanction the following propositions:—

1. The Australian Colonies and New Zealand, each paying a proportion to its number of letters, will together contribute a moiety of the cost of conveying the mails between Ceylon and King George's Sound.
2. A moiety of the cost of conveying the mails between King George's Sound and Melbourne will be divided among the Colonies of Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania, and New Zealand, or should the mails for South Australia be carried on to Melbourne, South Australia will be required to pay a share of the cost of the main line as far as to the latitude of Kangaroo Island.
3. A moiety of the cost of conveying the mails between Melbourne and Sydney will be divided among the Colonies of New South Wales, Queensland, and New Zealand.

As regards the branch services:—

1. The Imperial Post Office will undertake one-half the reasonable cost of conveying the mails between Melbourne and Launceston, the remainder being defrayed by Tasmania.
2. The like arrangement as regards the mails between Sydney and Brisbane.
3. The same as regards the cost of the branch packet between Melbourne and Adelaide, or should the Government of South Australia prefer it, this payment will be made as a contribution towards the cost of a packet between King George's Sound and Adelaide.

My Lords observe that the Governor of South Australia considers that that Colony has a claim to be reimbursed half the cost of maintaining a direct mail communication with King George's Sound, estimated at £24,000 per annum.

My Lords, however, concur in the opinion expressed to the Postmaster General, that it would be unreasonable to call upon the people of this country to pay an additional sum of £12,000 per annum, or any sum at all approaching that amount, for this purpose.

It appears that the whole postage received in one year by the Post Office Department, for the correspondence with South Australia, does not exceed £3,600, whilst the cost to this country of conveying that correspondence is estimated at upwards of £6,000.

Whilst, therefore, my Lords regret extremely the disappointment which the Colony of South Australia has experienced from the impracticability of making satisfactory arrangements for continuing the calling of the mail steamers at Kangaroo Island, they do not feel that they would be justified in sanctioning any further charge on the postal revenue of this country than that which is embraced in the foregoing propositions.

The existing arrangement with New Zealand will not be disturbed during the continuance of the present contract, but whenever the term of that contract shall have expired, that Colony will be placed in the same position as the other Colonies included in the present scheme.

My Lords propose to continue the arrangement made in February, 1860, by which the Australian Colonies were to be charged with the whole commuted payment of £3,250 per annum, the estimated cost of conveying through Egypt the Australian newspapers sent by the Southampton route, in consideration of the Post Office of this country forbearing from levying an additional penny on account of such transit.

Their Lordships at the same time reserve the right to revise and alter that estimate, and, if deemed advisable, to terminate the arrangement altogether; and, in the meantime, my Lords would be glad to learn the wishes of the various Colonies on the subject.

The Postmaster General observes in his Report, that experience has shown that it is impossible to carry on the Australian service in a satisfactory manner, and without danger of the service coming abruptly to an end, if each of the numerous and distant Colonies concerned is to be consulted before any final measure be adopted, and he strongly urges the expediency of the controlling authority being altogether assumed by the Government of this country, which contributes towards the subsidy as much as all the Colonies together.

My Lords entirely concur in this opinion, and feel convinced that the Colonial Governments themselves will see the necessity of the adoption of such a course. It would be easy for the Colonies to depute persons to act as their agents in the matter, with whom the Postmaster General and their Lordships could consult, and who would attend to the interests of their own Governments; but the final power of concluding terms, and the decision in all matters relating to the Packet Contracts, should be left in the hands of Her Majesty's Government, any Colony which refuses to abide by that decision being at liberty to withdraw itself from participation in the contract, in which case its mails would be forwarded by private ships only.

It would also be necessary, in such a case, that the proportioned payment of any seceding Colony should be divided pro ratâ amongst the remaining Colonies.

Their Lordships do not propose, at all events until they are in possession of the views of the different Colonies on the several arrangements contained in this Minute, to enter into any lengthened contract. The Draft Contract now before them provides for its termination on a six months' notice, in which event the former agreement for the Mauritius route would revive.

But, as the Postmaster General points out, the Peninsular and Oriental Company have declared that rather than continue that service they are prepared to submit to the stipulated penalty of £25,000, and there would be great danger in that case of the quick mail service being entirely abandoned.

No. 2.

POSTMASTER GENERAL to UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

General Post Office,
Sydney, 3 July, 1861.

SIR,

In obedience to the Minute of the Honorable the Secretary for Finance, dated 18th ultimo, I have the honor to report on the Circular Despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 26th April last, and on the enclosures contained therein.

2. As no copy of the Postal Contract alluded to in the enclosure dated Treasury Chambers, 25th April, 1861, accompanies the Despatch, no detailed report on its provisions can be furnished.

3. I conceive the four propositions given in the Treasury Minute, as embodying Sir William Denison's scheme, to be fair and practicable, and have no objections to urge to the propositions sanctioned by the Lords of the Treasury in the said Minute, and which are based thereon.

4. The provisions for the branch services do not appear to affect New South Wales, and need not, therefore, be alluded to by me.

5. As regards the suggestion made, "that at some future time the Australian Colonies should pay a share of the mail expenditure between England and Ceylon," I might concur in its justice, if it were shown that any additional expense were thrown on the Home Government, or the Indian Government, by the conveyance of such mails; as, however, it is notorious that such is not the case, that such mail service was paid for before the Australian Colonies benefited by it, that it would continue to be paid for if the Australian Mails were conveyed by some other route, and that the weight of the mails more or less is a very secondary consideration, I think the suggestion inexpedient and unreasonable.

6. It is stated in the Treasury Minute, that "my Lords propose to continue the arrangement made in February, 1860, by which the Australian Colonies were to be charged with the whole commuted payment of £3,250 per annum, the estimated cost of conveying through Egypt the Australian newspapers sent by the Southampton route, in consideration of the Post Office of this country forbearing from levying an additional penny on account of such transit." If by the above be meant that the Home Government pay no part of such expenditure, I cannot think the arrangement just, seeing that the reduced postage on newspapers benefits equally the inhabitants of the United Kingdom and of the Colonies, and that, therefore, the cost as well as the benefit should be equally shared.

7. I am of opinion that all matters relating to the Packet Contracts should be left in the hands of Her Majesty's Government, under the restrictions proposed in the Treasury Minute, and that the Agents at Home of the different Colonies should be instructed by the Governments they represent, on the questions that may from time to time arise.

I have, &c.,

W. H. CHRISTIE,
Postmaster General.

No. 3.

GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG to SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES.

(No. 57.)

*Government House,
Sydney, 29 July, 1861.*

MY LORD DUKE,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Grace's Circular Despatch of date 26th April, 1861, requesting me to forward, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, the views which the Government of this Colony entertain with regard to the conduct of the Mail Service between England and Australia.

2. I duly laid this Despatch, together with the Treasury Minute which accompanied it, before the Executive Council, and beg to enclose a copy of their Minute explaining their views on the subject.

3. From this Minute your Grace will perceive that this Government quite approve of the proposals contained in the Treasury Minute, and state their intention of taking an early opportunity of bringing the matter before the Colonial Parliament. They also, on the last page of their Minute, express a hope that the term of the contract should not in any case exceed three years, in accordance with Sir William Denison's expressed opinion already communicated.

I have, &c.,
JOHN YOUNG.

[Enclosure in No. 3.]

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 9th July, 1861, on the subject of Steam Postal Communication with England via Suez.

Minute 61/30: Confirmed 16 July, 1861.

REFERRING to the proceedings on the 7th September last, on the subject of Steam Postal Communication with England via Suez, His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council, for their consideration, a Despatch from His Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies, transmitting the copy of a Minute by the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury in reference to this question, dated 25th April last, and desiring to be informed of the views of the Government of this Colony with respect to certain propositions for the future conduct of the Mail Service, which it appears from this Minute their Lordships are prepared to sanction.

In so far as they affect this Colony the propositions now submitted are substantially those which were brought under the consideration of the Council on the above date by the late Governor General, and were then adopted by the Members.

It is only now, therefore, necessary that they should again record their full approval of, and assent to those proposals, subject of course to the concurrence of the Legislature, by whom the necessary funds will have to be provided.

The Minute, however, contains two other propositions, which require a special notice:—

1st. The Lords of the Treasury propose to continue the arrangement made in February, 1860, by which the Australian Colonies were to be charged with the whole commuted payment of £3,250 per annum, the estimated cost of conveying through Egypt the Australian newspapers sent by the Southampton route, in consideration of the English Post Office forbearing to levy an additional penny on account of this transit. To this proposal, also, as the continuance of an existing arrangement, the Council are prepared to accede, with a similar proviso as regards the assent of the Legislature.

2nd. Their Lordships announce their concurrence in an opinion expressed by the Postmaster General in London, that it is impossible to carry on the Australian Service in a satisfactory manner, if each of the Colonies concerned is to be consulted before any final measure is adopted; and, proceeding on this view, their Lordships affirm the principle that the final power of concluding terms, and the decision in all matters relating to the Packet Contracts, should be left in the hands of Her Majesty's Government; but they suggest that it would be easy for the Colonies to depute persons to act as their agents in the matter, with whom the Postmaster General and the Board of Treasury could consult, and who would attend to the interests of their own Governments.

Without at all disputing the propriety of these views, which do not differ materially from their own, the Council are unable to assent to them without the concurrence of the Legislature, inasmuch as the principle involved in them is in direct opposition to the terms of a Resolution which was adopted by the Legislative Assembly on the 6th of August, 1858, on the motion of a private Member, and distinctly affirmed, "that in any future contract for the Mail Service, it is not for the interest of New South Wales that the Imperial Government should make any arrangement binding upon this Colony without previous reference thereto."

The Council, however, are fully prepared to invite the Legislature, at an early period of the ensuing Session, to consider this and the other propositions set forth in the Treasury Minute.

The Council perceive that their Lordships do not intend to enter into any lengthened contract until they are in possession of the views of the different Colonies on the several arrangements now proposed, and they trust that when it becomes necessary for their Lordships to arrive at a decision upon this point, the opinion expressed by Sir William Denison, and concurred in by the Council, that the term of the contract should not in any case exceed three years, will not be lost sight of.

A final reply to the Duke of Newcastle's Despatch must await the decision of the local Legislature; but the Council think it desirable that in the meantime His Excellency should communicate the above expression of their views to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

EDWARD C. MEREWETHER,
Clerk of the Council.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG.

Downing-street,
26 February, 1862.

(Circular.)

SIR,

With reference to my Circular Despatch of the 26th of April last, I have the honor to transmit to you the copy of a letter from the Board of Treasury, from which you will perceive that the Lords Commissioners are of opinion that a further sum of fifteen thousand and fifty-eight pounds is properly chargeable on the several Australian Colonies and on New Zealand, on account of the carriage of the Australian Mails. 18th Feb., 1862.
£15,058.

Their Lordships propose that this additional charge shall take effect from the commencement of the current year.

[Enclosure in No. 4.]

Treasury Chambers,
18 February, 1862.

Sir,

I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you, for the information of His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, that my Lords have had under their consideration a letter from the Secretary of State for India in Council, setting forth the injustice of requiring India to pay a moiety of the charges incurred in the Mail Service to China and Australia, and calling upon this Board to make an arrangement for reducing the charge now made on the Indian Revenues for this Service.

In the Minute of 25 April last, stating the arrangements which their Lordships proposed for the Australian Mail Service, attention was called to the fact that the mails for Australia carried between this country and Point de Galle, were far greater than those for India in the same packet, and the reasonableness was pointed out of debiting the Australian Colonies with their fair share of this cost and relieving India to a like extent; and whilst my Lords abstained at that time from insisting on the immediate addition of this portion of the cost to the sum to be demanded for the entire service from the Australian Colonies, they stated that they reserved the question as a matter of future consideration.

The subject having now been brought under the special notice of my Lords, they can no longer delay dealing with it in the manner which justice demands, and applying to the case of India and Australia, generally, the same principle of payment, with reference to the size of their respective mails, which is already observed with regard to the separate Australian Colonies.

The Postmaster General, as appears by a letter of which a copy is enclosed, estimates the payment properly chargeable on account of the carriage of the Australian Mails over the portion of the line between England and Point de Galle at £30,116 per annum. This sum, therefore, should be reduced from the cost of the Indian Service and added to that of the Australian Service. The result of this re-distribution, as regards the Australian Colonies will be to increase their aggregate payment by the sum of £15,058 per annum, a similar payment remaining a charge on the Imperial Revenue.

My Lords propose that this additional charge shall take effect from the commencement of the current year.

I am, &c.,
F. PEEL.

General Post Office,
31 January, 1862.

My Lords,

Referring to my letter of the 4th ultimo, and to your Lordships' reply of the 14th instant, I beg leave to enclose, in accordance with your request, a Statement showing the manner in which the Receiver and Accountant General of this Department estimated the proportion of expense chargeable to the Australian Colonies on account of the conveyance of Australian Mails, by the Indian Contract Packets, between England and Point de Galle.

This Statement shows that the cost of the Packet, for the twelve voyages, when the Indian and Australian mails are conveyed together between England and Point de Galle, is £42,444, and that out of 156,183 ounces of correspondence conveyed by such packets, 45,363 represent the Indian, and 110,818 the Australian, portion of the mails. Therefore, charging India and Australia respectively for the Packet Service in proportion to the extent of their correspondence, £12,328 is the sum to be charged to the account of Indian correspondence, and £30,116, the sum to be charged to the account of Australian correspondence.

BRAIDWOOD POSTAL TIME TABLE.

(POSTAL INSPECTOR'S REPORT RELATIVE TO CHANGE MADE IN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 5 August, 1862.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 1 July, 1862, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“ A copy of the Report made by the Postal Inspector to
 “ the Postmaster General, relative to the change made in the “ Time Table from Braidwood to the various Post Offices in “ its vicinity, with the Braidwood Postmaster's Minute on “ that change.”

(Captain Moriarty.)

BRAIDWOOD POSTAL TIME TABLE.

POSTAL INSPECTOR'S REPORT.

I FIND on going through the papers that my Report upon the Braidwood District Time Tables are in the form of a series of minutes, written in reply to queries and objections.

My proposal to alter the tables originated in this manner:—Last December Mr. Wainwright, the proprietor of the Braidwood Observer, acting, as he stated, on behalf of many residents of Araluen and Moruya, wrote to the Postmaster at Braidwood, and induced him to recommend the Postmaster General to make Saturday instead of Sunday one of the days for despatching from Braidwood the Araluen and Moruya mail. In the following January, a document was received from Araluen, signed by 325 persons, protesting against the alteration which had been made, and stating that it had been done without their approval or even knowledge. The proprietors of the Herald and Empire also complained that the change caused the Sydney papers to be detained at Braidwood three days, and that it merely consulted the interests of the local papers.

The matter was placed in my hands last April, and in going over the Time Tables I found that the branch mails left Braidwood at the same time they did in 1860, though the Sydney mails arrived 4 hours earlier; and I also thought the complaints as to the substitution of Saturday for Sunday reasonable; I therefore recommended an acceleration of the branch mails, and the reversion to Sunday.

My recommendation was approved by the Postmaster General before I left Sydney for the Moruya District, but at my request the matter was left in abeyance until after I had visited the Braidwood District, when I reported in favour of the change, subject to some slight modifications.

I enclose the "Time Tables." The printed ones are the old Tables, and the M.S. ones the new.

In support of the changes I appeal to the advantages derived therefrom, which I have specified under each Table, and to the general principle always admitted in framing Time Tables that the correspondence passing between the Metropolis and Country Offices should be subjected to no unnecessary detention on the road; and I think a detention for the mere convenience of an intermediate town is unnecessary, and by retarding the progress of the mails does an injustice to the towns lying beyond.

This is the first instance in which I have had to spend my time in giving such an explanation as this, and I venture to hope it will be the last.

If after framing Time Tables, answering the criticisms of postmasters, contractors, and other interested parties, to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General, and obtaining his approval of the Tables, I am to enter into lengthy explanations in answer to vague and mostly verbal assertions, made by postmasters, contractors, and others equally if not more interested persons, half my time will be spent in defending my course of action against those who have neither the same sources of correct information that I have, nor are they from their position able to take the same broad and general view of the Time Tables which is necessary, and that I can as Postal Inspector take. The Braidwood Time Tables under discussion form an insignificant portion of the whole of the Time Tables, and if the same time is spent over the rest that has been occupied over these, the Tables will not be reconstructed in ten years.

I enclose for perusal certain original documents.

A. DILLON.

Araluen,
7 January, 1862.

To the Postmaster General.

SIR,

We, the undersigned inhabitants of Araluen and its vicinity, beg to submit to your consideration the following statement of facts:—

The delivery to this district and Moruya of a portion only of the mails from Braidwood, having been altered without our approval or even knowledge, we wish to draw your attention to the fact.

The usual delivery of the mail on Sundays has been forestalled by a delivery on Saturdays. The second, or Wednesday's mail, is delivered as usual.

We have been enabled up to the date of the alteration, to write to and receive from our Sydney correspondents an answer on the sixth day; whereas in our present position it is impossible to obtain the same ready communication, a period of nine days being now required, and by the alteration all weekly publications in Sydney and elsewhere are rendered almost valueless here, by their unnecessary detention in the Braidwood office for three days.

We

BRAIDWOOD POSTAL TIME TABLE.

We therefore respectfully and earnestly request that the delivery of the mails on the Braidwood and Moruya line of road may be as heretofore, previous to the late vexatious alteration.

POSTAL INSPECTOR to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

THE Postmaster has been told often, and in the most distinct manner, that he has the power to detain the branch mails if the Goulburn mail arrives late.

As for detaining the mails to enable persons who receive letters by the Goulburn coach to send on any enclosures, the thing is ridiculous. It would, if adopted, double and treble the course of post between Sydney and the country offices.

POSTMASTER GENERAL to POSTMASTER, BRAIDWOOD.

I HAVE again to remark, that the exertions made to secure postal accommodation of the fullest kind to the Braidwood District appear to be not only unappreciated but misrepresented.

I think the personal explanations of the Braidwood Postmaster might often have shielded this Office from unnecessary comment.

POSTMASTER, BRAIDWOOD, to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Braidwood, 27 June, 1862.

I BEG to state that the public are well-satisfied with the present arrangements. It appears to me that Mr. Dillon in some way gave offence to one of the proprietors of the papers, and he is very bitter against him; I have invariably, upon any alteration of time, given the papers notice, so that they might not be inconvenienced, by giving my opinion as to the advantage of the present arrangements.

Mr. Wainwright appears much annoyed with me also, but in small towns it appears to me it is impossible to please everybody.

Urgent. Transmitted to the Honorable The Minister for Finance in order to be presented, together with other papers asked for by Captain Moriarty, M.P.

This paper shows the value of the late change, and the reason for its being mis-understood.

Extract

Extract from the "Braidwood Observer," dated 18 June, 1862.

"POSTAL."—We trust that Captain Moriarty and Mr. Wilson will not fail to bring the postal system of this district under the notice of Parliament.

The Time Table as it now stands is worse than useless, and we are at a loss to know upon what crotchet—what basis—Major Christie has founded his data.

At half-past eight o'clock on the mornings of Sunday and Wednesday, mails are made up and despatched to the following places:—Jembaicumbene, Major's Creek, Bell's Paddock, Bell's Creek, Oraumeir, Ballalaba, Reidsdale, Upper Araluen, Crown Flat, Moruya, Bodalla, Nerrigundah, and Little River.

These bags are supposed, we say, to be made up at half-past eight o'clock, and the Sydney mail seldom arrives before that hour, and if it does, there is not sufficient time to enable the mails to be thoroughly sorted and forwarded on to the above-named places.

This is not all.

We contend that very serious inconvenience may arise from the hasty despatch of the mails, either after or before the arrival of the Sydney mail.

Cases have already occurred in which storekeepers of Braidwood have received letters by the Sydney mail which it was imperative should be forwarded to their branch establishments on the diggings, and they had to wait until the following Sunday.

Again, we cannot help noticing the arbitrary manner in which the postal authorities have interfered in demanding the Clyde mail contractor, in the middle of his contract, to increase his speed.

We can arrive at no other conclusion than that these frequent alterations arise from private pique, having its origin in our fearless exposure of the ignorance, the impudence, and the presumption of the Postal Inspector.

We therefore urge upon our indefatigable Member, Captain Moriarty, the propriety of putting on the notice paper for an early day, a motion for the production of the report and all other papers connected with the recent visit of the Postal Inspector to the southward. Personally, we sustain no inconvenience from the alteration, although we are not without the belief that that is a part of the object of these tergiversations in postal practice; but the public interests suffer materially by the repetition of these sudden freaks of autocratic power. During the visit of Mr. Egan, the member for Eden, to this district, we mentioned the matter to him, and are bound to add that he was perfectly easy with respect to our complaints. They seemed to be but the refrain of the old song, "The postal service again." We are of opinion that these alterations, if requisite, should be made by the local Postmaster, subject to approval at head quarters. He is the person best qualified to judge of the wants of the district. But the present postal system is a complete nuisance, and Major Christie, as head of the department, ought to be ashamed of himself for managing matters in such a hodge-podge manner.

MR. QUELCH to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Braidwood, 10 Dec., 1861.

SIR,

In reply to your communication respecting the alteration of time on Sunday for delivery, it is my opinion that it would be very desirable to alter the time to 9:30, a.m. I believe such alteration would meet with the general satisfaction of the public, as there would then be time to answer letters by the mail leaving for Goulburn at 11 a.m.

I beg also to call your attention to the enclosed letter respecting the Araluen and Mullenderree Mail, as to alteration of the day for despatching the same. I fully concur with the remarks made, and beg to recommend the same to your favourable consideration.

I have, &c.,
J. P. QUELCH.

MR. WAINWRIGHT to MR. QUELCH.

*"Observer" Office, Braidwood,
6 December, 1861.*

SIR,

It has been suggested to me by many parties resident in Araluen, and indeed at Moruya, that Saturday would be a much more convenient day for the mail to leave Braidwood for Reidsdale, Araluen, Bell's Creek and Mullenderree; and when I consider the matter, I think you will agree with me that it would be much more convenient and suitable to and for all parties.

The days (Wednesday and Saturday) would then take on the Clyde mail of the previous evening, and the Goulburn overland Sydney mail of a Wednesday and Saturday morning.

Will you be kind enough to give your attention to the matter; and in the event of your approving of the proposed change of day, viz., from Sunday to Saturday, I should esteem it a public benefit if you would apply to Major Christie to sanction the same.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD WAINWRIGHT.

*Time Table for the conveyance of Mails to and from*MAJOR'S CREEK, BALLALABA, AND ORANMORE, (Stony Creek.)

26. Leave Major's Creek Wednesday and Sunday at 2 p.m., arrive at Ballalaba at 3.30, at Oranmore at 5 p.m. Leave Oranmore at 10 a.m., same days, and arrive at Ballalaba at 11.30 a.m., and at Major's Creek at 1 p.m.

(New Table.)

Leave Major's Creek on Wednesday and Sunday at 11 a.m., arrive at Ballalaba at noon, and at Oranmore (Stony Creek) at 1.30 p.m. On return—leave Oranmore (Stony Creek) at 3.30 p.m., same days, arrive at Ballalaba at 5 p.m., and at Major's Creek at 6 p.m.

By this change the mails arrive at Ballalaba $3\frac{1}{2}$ hours earlier, and at Stony Creek the same time earlier. The mails from both places return to Major's Creek 5 hours later. This allows the inhabitants of Ballalaba 5 hours, and those of Stony Creek 2 hours, to write their replies; whereas, under the old table, they could not answer at all on the days the mails were received, but had to wait 4 and 3 days respectively.

(Old Table.)

*Time Table for the conveyance of Mails to and from*BRAIDWOOD, Bell's Creek, JEMBAICUMBENE, MAJOR'S CREEK, AND Bell's Paddock.

27. Leave Braidwood Friday, Sunday, and Wednesday at noon, and proceeding by Bell's Creek, arrive at Jembaicumbene at 1 p.m., and at Major's Creek at 1.30 p.m. Leave Major's Creek Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 8 a.m., and proceeding by Bell's Paddock, arrive at Jembaicumbene, at 8.30 a.m., and at Braidwood at 9.30 a.m.

(New Table.)

Leave Braidwood Wednesday and Sunday at 9 a.m., and Friday at 4 p.m., arrive at Jembaicumbene Wednesday and Sunday at 10 a.m., and Friday 5 p.m. and travelling via Bell's Paddock, arrive at Major's Creek Wednesday and Sunday at 11 a.m., and Friday 6 p.m. On return—leave Major's Creek Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 7 a.m., and travelling via Bell's Paddock, arrive at Jembaicumbene Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 8 a.m., and arrive at Braidwood, Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 9 a.m.

By this change the Jembaicumbene mails reach 3 hours earlier, and the residents have $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours more to write their replies: and the Major's Creek mails reach $2\frac{1}{2}$ hours earlier, and the residents have $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours more to write their replies.

The contractor is allowed 2 hours to do the journey in instead of $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours, and he is no longer required to call at Bell's Creek (which is on another line), but required to call at Bell's Paddock both going and coming. The mails leave Major's Creek 1 hour sooner, in order to give the contractor half an hour more, and to ease the Braidwood Postmaster by bringing in the mail half an hour earlier.

This change rendered practicable the one in the Major's Creek and Stony Creek table.

The despatch from Braidwood on Friday is so arranged that the mails from the Clyde can go on the same day they reach Braidwood.

(Old Table.)

BRAIDWOOD AND MONGA.

28. Leave Braidwood Wednesday and Saturday at 2.30 p.m., and arrive at Monga at 4.30 p.m. Leave Monga at 5 p.m., and arrive at Braidwood at 7 p.m., same day.

(New Table.)

Leave Braidwood Wednesday and Sunday at 9 a.m., and arrive at Monga at 10.15 a.m. On return—leave Monga on Wednesday and Sunday at 3.45 p.m., and arrive at Braidwood at 5 p.m.

By this change the Monga mails arrive 6 hours and 15 minutes earlier; they return to Braidwood 2 hours earlier, and the residents of Monga have $5\frac{1}{2}$ hours, instead of half an hour, to write their replies.

By making Sunday a day of despatch instead of Saturday, the newspapers despatched from Sydney on Friday go on without delay; whereas, under the old Time Table, they were detained from Sunday to Wednesday in the Braidwood office.

BRAIDWOOD, CROWN FLAT, ARALUEN, MULLENDERREE, AND MORUYA.

29. Leave Braidwood Saturday and Wednesday, at 2 p.m., arrive at Crown Flat at 4.30 p.m., Araluen at 5 p.m., at Mullenderree at 10 a.m., and Moruya at 11 a.m., on following days. Leave Moruya Tuesday and Friday at 9 a.m., arrive at Mullenderree at noon, at Araluen at 3.30 p.m., at Crown Flat at 4 p.m., and at Braidwood on following days at 7.30 a.m.

(New Table.)

Leave Braidwood Wednesday and Sunday at 9 a.m., and Friday, 4 p.m., and travelling via Reidsdale and Bell's Creek, and Upper Araluen, arrive at Crown Flat Wednesday and Sunday at noon, and Friday 7 p.m. Leave Crown Flat Wednesday and Sunday at 12.30, and travelling via Lower Araluen and Mullenderree, arrive at Moruya Wednesday and Sunday at 7 p.m. On return—leave Moruya Monday and Thursday at 9 a.m., and travelling via Mullenderree and Lower Araluen, arrive at Crown Flat, Monday and Thursday at 3.30 p.m. Leave Crown Flat Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 4 p.m., and travelling via Upper Araluen, Bell's Creek, and Reidsdale, arrive at Braidwood, Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 7 p.m.

By this change the mails reach Crown Flat 4 hours 30 minutes earlier, and Moruya 16 hours sooner; the time for replies from Moruya is shortened, but the course of post between Braidwood and Moruya, instead of being 4 and 5 days, is only 2 days. Moreover, the Moruya and Mullenderree residents receive on the Wednesday evening the correspondence and papers left behind by the Monday's Clyde steamer, and on Sunday whatever may be posted after departure of the Clyde steamer on Thursday up to 4 p.m. on Friday. The alteration of the despatch from Braidwood from Saturday to Sunday was made for the same reason as given for the Monga mails, and the despatch on Friday is made to suit the arrival of the Clyde mails at Braidwood, and to take the Araluen correspondence on the same night. The mails arrive in Braidwood from Moruya half an hour sooner—7 instead of 7.30.

(PETITION RELATIVE TO.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 23 September, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the inhabitants of Singleton and District of Patrick's Plains, in public meeting held this day,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

Your Petitioners beg to state that on the 26th of June, the Postmaster in Singleton received, from the head of his department, the offer of the official appointment of Postmaster in Singleton.

That the said Postmaster, by letter dated 30th June, intimated his acceptance of the said office upon the terms and conditions specified, viz. :—“ That he should relinquish all “ connection, direct or indirect, with any other business avocations.”

That in the view of said appointment, he, the Postmaster, addressed a letter to the Postmaster General, requesting to be informed as to the time which would be allowed him to dispose of his stock in trade.

That to this letter no reply has been received.

That on the 5th of September, instant, he received a letter of dismissal, and a notification of the appointment of his successor.

That your Petitioners are not aware of any just reason for the dismissal, no charge of any description having been made against him, and your Petitioners consider that such dismissal, without any apparent or alleged cause, is unjust in principle, injurious in practice, and detrimental to the public service.

Your Petitioners pray that your Honorable House will take the premises into your consideration, and grant such relief as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

SIR,

I enclose, for your information, a further minute from the Honorable the Minister for Finance and Trade, on the subject of the appointment of Official Postmasters, and I request that you will state frankly, and without any evasion, whether you are prepared to accept the appointment, on the distinct understanding that the requirements of the Treasurer's minute will be strictly enforced and must be strictly carried out.

TREASURER to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

It must not be a mere colourable compliance with the conditions, on the part of the Postmasters. One condition, which must be very strictly conformed to, is that relating to carrying on any business. No evasion of this will be allowed, or the object in view would be defeated.

This

MR. CHARLES PETIT.

This must be strictly inquired into by the Postmaster General in all cases where the Postmaster has previously carried on the office in connection with other business. An instance of this occurs in the case of the Postmaster at Armidale, which cannot be sanctioned. Connection with business, direct or indirect, will not be allowed. This should be pointed out at once to the Postmasters who have accepted, and before any appointments can take place.

I therefore state that it is my intention to give up my store business as soon as possible, and have advertised the stock for sale, and only wish to know what time will be allowed to dispose of the same. I cannot, in justice to my family or creditors, sacrifice my stock by auction, but am quite willing to give up as soon as possible.

I SHOULD be glad to have a report at an early date respecting those Postmasters who, although in business, have expressed their willingness to accept office as Official Postmasters, one of the conditions being that they must not be in or connected with business in any way. This condition must be strictly adhered to, and in any case of doubt the Postmaster General had better perhaps refer to the local Bench.

My minute of 1st August was to the effect that the Postmasters at Singleton, Mudgee, and Wollongong, wished to retain office on conditions which could not be acceded to, and that they were to be informed to that effect.

POSTMASTER GENERAL—MINUTE ON PRECEDING.

ON receiving the minute of the Honorable the Minister for Finance, date 1st ultimo, I conceived it indispensable that, in the various communications to be made to the old Postmasters re-appointed, to the Official Postmasters to be appointed, and to the Postmasters whose conditions could not be acceded to, that the date of the Official Postmasters commencing their duties should be given; and hence my minute of 4th ultimo, which does not appear to have been answered. On reviewing the correspondence connected with the Singleton Office, the case of Mr. Petit seems somewhat hard, and I have respectfully to recommend such case to the kind consideration of the Honorable the Treasurer.

TREASURER—MINUTE ON PRECEDING.

THE omission of the Postmaster General to carry out my minute of 1 August has caused much embarrassment. Independent of any further arrangement, it was obviously desirable and necessary that those Postmasters who wished to retain office on terms which could not be acceded to, should have been immediately acquainted with the decision of the Government on the subject; and I can see no grounds for this omission. Any hardship of which the Postmaster at Singleton may complain is attributable to this delay in communicating with him. Nearly a fortnight has elapsed since the proposed new appointments were notified to the Postmaster General, and I think it should then have occurred to that officer that the three Postmasters in my minute of 1st August were still uninformed of the intentions of the Government respecting them. The Postmasters at Mudgee and Wollongong to be informed forthwith, in the terms of the minute referred to.

POSTMASTER GENERAL—MINUTE ON PRECEDING.

I MUCH regret the apparent omission on my part. My minute of 5th instant explains how such apparent omission occurred; and the papers not being retained in this department, but in the Treasury, further accounts for the delay in notifying.

I may add, that I communicated with the Mudgee and Wollongong Postmasters prior to the receipt of this day's minute from the Honorable the Minister for Finance reaching me.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

MR. HENRY TEBBUTT.

(LATE POSTMASTER AT MUDGEES.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 26 November, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.
The humble Petition of the undersigned, late Postmaster at Mudgee,—

SHEWETH :—

That in the early part of the year 1859 your Petitioner was appointed Postmaster at Mudgee, and remained in that situation till the 30th September, 1862, during which period he performed the duties to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General and the public.

That your Petitioner received a communication from the Postmaster General, dated 26th June, 1862, stating that the Mudgee Post Office was to be made exclusively a Government office, and that I might have an opportunity of retaining my appointment, if satisfied with the conditions contained in a Minute of the Honorable the Minister for Finance and Trade, enclosed in the abovenamed letter.

That your Petitioner having carefully considered the Minute referred to, replied by letter of the 30th June, 1862, stating that he had read the Minute referred to, and was satisfied with the conditions.

That your Petitioner received a letter from the Postmaster General, dated 11th July, 1862, accompanied by a further Minute from the Honorable the Minister of Finance and Trade, to the effect that one condition must be very strictly conformed to, viz., that relating to carrying on any business, and that no evasion of this would be allowed, &c., &c.

That your Petitioner, in reply, stated that he held the situation of Treasurer to the Municipal Council of Mudgee, and requested permission to retain that situation, pledging himself to resign it immediately if detrimental to the public interest.

That your Petitioner received two letters from the Postmaster General, under date 5th and 6th September, 1862, in the former of which it was stated that the conditions upon which your Petitioner wished to hold office were not considered admissible, and that arrangements would have to be made for a successor to take office on the 1st October, 1862. The latter letter apprised your Petitioner that Mr. A. G. Panton was appointed to the office.

That your Petitioner handed over to Mr. Panton all the Post Office property, in the evening of the 30th September; but finding that gentleman so totally unfitted for the office, and in order to prevent injury to the public interest, he allowed his assistant to conduct the business until the appointment of Mr. A. Carton, who was appointed Postmaster in the room of Mr. Panton, who, I understand, was suspended.

Your Petitioner submits that his dismissal from the situation of Postmaster at Mudgee, without allowing him to comply with the requirements of the Minute of the Honorable the Minister of Finance and Trade, is a case of hardship.

Your Petitioner humbly prays that your Honorable House will take the premises into your favourable consideration, and take such measures as you may deem expedient to meet the merits of the case.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

LIGHT-HOUSE NEAR JERVIS BAY.

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 27 May, 1862.

REPORT of a Commission on the subject of the proper Situation for the Light-house, and the removal of the present one.

No. 1.

ACTING UNDER SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE to F. W. SIDNEY, ESQ.,
COMMANDER, R.N.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
4 January, 1862.*

SIR,

I am directed to forward herewith a copy of the Report of the Select Committee of the Assembly, on the erection of a Light-house at Jervis Bay, containing the following recommendation, which was subsequently adopted by the House:—

“That a Commission of competent persons be at once appointed to investigate and decide upon the proper situation, whether at Cape St. George, Crocodile Head, or any other spot in that vicinity.”

The Treasurer is desirous of placing the investigation of this question in your hands, assisted by Mr. Hixson, Master of the Royal Navy, an Officer attached to your surveying party, and who was for many years on this coast, in H.M.S. “Herald.”

In order that you may be supplied with every necessary local information, Mr. Sullivan, now in command of the steamer “Kembla,” and possessing great experience of this coast, will be associated with you in this inquiry.

Copies of evidence, reports, and other documents on the subject of Light-houses on the Australian Coast, have been forwarded for your information.

The principal points to which you will direct your attention, and on which the Treasurer requests the favour of your report, are,—

1st. Which is the proper situation for a Light-house in the vicinity of Jervis Bay?
2nd. Should the present Light-house be removed?

A steamer will be engaged for this service, and the Treasurer considers that it would perhaps be convenient to arrange details with Mr. Sullivan, communicating with this Office previously to final settlement.

I have, &c.,
JNO. WELLS,
Acting Under Secretary.

No. 2.

F. W. SIDNEY, ESQ., COMMANDER, R.N., to SECRETARY FOR FINANCE AND TRADE.

*Admiralty Survey Office,
6, Elizabeth-street,
22 January, 1862.*

SIR,

In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 4th instant, that I should report upon—1st. The proper situation for a Light-house in the vicinity of Jervis Bay?—and 2nd. Should the present Light-house be removed?—I have to inform you that I have visited the locality in company with Captain Sullivan, of the steam vessel "Kembla," and Mr. Hixson, Master, R.N., the gentlemen named in your letter to be associated with me in that inquiry.

If the principal object of the light be to warn vessels of the danger of Wreck Bay, and at the same time to be in a position best seen for rounding Cape St. George in thick weather, we should recommend the light being put on the point of the low Cape itself.

But, on the other hand, if the light be intended as a high Coast Beacon, we should suggest that it be placed on the headland near Crocodile Head, as marked by us on the 18th instant. This would serve equally well as the present light for Wreck Bay, but be nearly 6 miles further off. This light might be similar to that at the Start, having underneath, in the same building, a fixed light, thrown on Cape St. George and the intervening land round to Beecroft Point.

As, however, it is a generally received maxim, that the lower the light, and the nearer the danger the better, we consider that coasters would be greatly benefited by having the light on the low S.E. point of Cape St. George, as it would enable them to go further in shore, when beating to the northward to avoid the current, and would be seen 8 miles further to the northward in Wreck Bay than the present light, and to within 2 miles of Red Head; it would also make Ulladulla of easier access at night, as the light would be visible in its line of bearing.

And as most of our severe gales are from the southward and eastward, with thick weather, it would appear that on the low point of Cape St. George is the place where a light would be the most useful; and vessels running for shelter in Jervis Bay, after getting hold of the light, could easily shape a course for Bowen's Island at the entrance to the Bay.

We are therefore of opinion (Captain Sullivan and myself) that the present Light-house should be removed, and one erected on the low point of Cape St. George.

Mr. Hixson inclines to the light being placed on Crocodile Head, and thinks the present light should be removed—not that its present position would lead ships into danger, but because it would be in a more advantageous position in either of the others.

I have, &c.,

FREDERIC W. SIDNEY,
Commander, R.N.

We, the undersigned, subscribe to the foregoing remarks.

FRANCIS HIXSON,
Master, R.N.

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 12 June, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Mary Hennessy Hourigan, of Palmer-street, in the City of Sydney,— MOST HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner is the Widow of John Hourigan, late connected with the keeping of the Light-house at the South Head.

That for a period exceeding twenty-one years, twelve of which he was engaged at the Light-house, he was employed in the Civil Service of this Colony.

That in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, your Petitioner's deceased husband petitioned your Honorable House for a compensation or a pension for length of service, and that in the month of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, a pension of thirty pounds per annum was allowed to your Petitioner's deceased husband.

That your Petitioner's husband died in January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, leaving your Petitioner in a most destitute state.

Wherefore your Petitioner most humbly and fervently prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to take her case into your humane consideration, and grant to her such compensation as you may deem meet.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

PILOT BOARD.
(PETITION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 28 May, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Council assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned,—

SH EWETH :—

That your Petitioners have been for a long period “Members of the Pilot Board of New South Wales,” and have, during that time (to the best of their ability), faithfully, honestly, and carefully attended to all matters connected therewith that came before them.

That in the month of March last the Government of the Colony having purchased the schooner “Sea Witch” for a Pilot Vessel for Port Jackson, at a cost, as your Petitioners believe, of several hundred pounds above her value, and in opposition to the opinion and advice of the Pilot Board, who considered her unsuitable for the purpose, called upon the said Board to prepare the vessel for the service.

Your Petitioners, as Members of that Board, conscientiously believing that to carry out these instructions would entail a further wasteful expenditure of the public money declined to do so, and have, in consequence thereof, been deprived of their seats at the Board.

Your Petitioners, therefore, feeling that they would have been morally guilty of a breach of trust to the public if they had acted otherwise than they did, and as they have suffered this indignity by resisting a practice which they believe, if permitted to be continued, will prove highly detrimental to the best interests of the country, as has already occurred by the erection of the Light House near Jervis Bay, the appointment of Pilots and Lightkeepers, and other matters, on which the advice of your Petitioners has been ignored,—pray that your Honorable House will be pleased to make such inquiry into the circumstances herein set forth as you may see fit, in order that full justice may be done to your Petitioners, and the public interests protected.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

PILOT BOARD.

No. 1.

MEMO :—

The proposition to establish the system of Pilot Vessels "cruising outside the Heads" having been sanctioned by Parliament, the Board will now take the necessary steps to carry it into operation.

The sum of £3,000 has been voted to provide the vessels, and the Estimates will shew the number of Pilots required, and also of officers and crew allotted to each vessel, and their respective remuneration.

I am informed that suitable vessels can be procured in the Harbour, and, if so, it is desirable to save the delay of building.

Tenders for the vessels should be called for without delay.

Captain Towns, Chairman of the Select Committee of the Legislative Council on the working of the Pilot Establishment, whose report falls in, generally, with the views of the Pilot Board on this subject, has transmitted some memoranda on the working of this system, which are forwarded, herewith, for the consideration of the Board.

I shall be glad to be kept informed, from time to time, of the progress made towards carrying this arrangement into effect.

PILOT VESSELS, PORT JACKSON.

Pilot Board Office,
24 January, 1862.

In compliance with the Honorable the Treasurer's Minute, the Board beg to submit the accompanying draft advertisement for tenders for two vessels for the service, and which they recommend should be inserted in the daily papers here, and at Melbourne, Hobart Town; and Auckland.

The Board also report, as requested, that this is the first step taken in the matter.

(Draft Advertisement referred to.)

Treasury, New South Wales,
24 January, 1862.

TENDERS will be received at this Department, until noon of 1st March next, for sale to the Government of two vessels not exceeding 100 tons, nor less than 60 tons register, and suitable for the Sea Pilot Service, Port Jackson.

Parties tendering must furnish full particulars as to build, rig, age, capabilities, and price of vessel offered.

No. 3.

I think it would be better that the advertisements for tenders should apply, at first, only to New South Wales, and for this a week's notice would suffice. If this produces no suitable offers, the neighbouring Colonies may be tried.

The object of the Board was to save time, but if eligible tenders can be had here that object will be attained in the manner suggested by the Treasurer; if otherwise, a week's delay can matter but little.

To The Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

Sir,

We beg to offer you the schooner "Vixen" as a Pilot Vessel in accordance with the terms of tender advertised, to be suitable for the Sea Pilot Service of Port Jackson.

Enclosed, we beg to hand an inventory of the said vessel, from which you will perceive that she is well found in every respect, having good cabin accommodation, with separate ladies' cabin.

She was built in Dundee, about 1840, of oak and teak, copper and copper fastened; her length is 86 feet 6 inches; breadth, 17 feet 4 inches; depth of hold, 10 feet 3 inches; and is capable of carrying 200 tons with a light draught of water; her register tonnage being 121 tons, which is a little larger than that advertised for. She is brigantine rigged, and has been for some years in the Brisbane trade, always commanding full cargoes both ways, and in all cases delivering them without any damage. Average speed $10\frac{1}{2}$ knots per hour. The price we are willing to sell her at is eleven hundred pounds sterling (£1,100.)

TENDERS FOR VESSELS FOR PILOT SERVICE, PORT JACKSON.

Pilot Board Office,

7 February, 1862.

The Board beg to report, that they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible, and they think it desirable to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies, before making any final recommendation.

W. J. WILSHIRE.

The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

No. 8.

In calling for tenders in the neighbouring Colonies, I should like to know the views of the Board.

A vessel from description, may appear suitable—is it intended to entrust the examination into her condition to some party at the port where she may be, and who will also be authorized to make a final arrangement; or, if her description is approved of, will the Board require her to be brought to Sydney for inspection? If the latter, there seems little probability of a compliance, on the uncertainty of an approval on arrival, and it will be simply so much time lost.

The Board purpose to refer tenders received from the Colonies, to the Pilot Boards of the respective ports, who are no doubt competent to report satisfactorily. The Board will, however, examine the vessels tendered here during the week.

VESSELS FOR SEA PILOT SERVICE.

Pilot Board Office,
14 February, 1862.

With reference to the minute of this date, upon the abovenamed subject, the Pilot Board now recommend that the Tenders for the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" should be accepted, as they consider that these vessels are the most suitable for the purpose,—belonging to the port, being in fair condition, commodious, and weatherly.

Should it be found that they do not realize all that the Board anticipate, they will always sell for a price little less than the cost.

Although the Tenders amount to £3,200, the Board believe that in all probability the owner would accept £3,000 for the two vessels.

The Board beg to state that Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson were deputed to inspect the vessels, and that although no report was made in writing, the Board are satisfied from the verbal report of those gentlemen, that the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" are the most suitable vessels in port, and worth the price asked. Mr. Cuthbert informed a member of the Board that it would cost £3,000 to build one vessel here. If they are to be built, the Board would recommend that they should be built in England. Should this become necessary, they beg to report that the vessels named could afterwards be sold at a price little less than the cost.

I consider the price of these vessels to be high, but as they are very strongly recommended by the Board, and it is desirable that the new system should be brought into operation as soon as possible, I approve of the purchase if it can be effected for the amount voted by Parliament, say £3,000: Provided however that the vessels are first taken on the slip, and their condition certified to by the shipwright surveyor.

22 Feb., /62.

I am induced to this course, because I have heard that one of these vessels has taken the ground some time since, and as there is a shipwright surveyor attached to the Steam Navigation and Pilot Board, it is desirable that his certificate as to the condition of the vessels should be obtained. The earliest attention should be given to this.

SIR,

Understanding that the Government is in want of a small vessel as Pilot Boat, I beg to tender my schooner the "Sea Witch." She is 108 tons American register, built in New London in 1856, and newly coppered in 1861. She is a fast sailer, and a perfect sea boat. She is in every respect well found, and her sails are in good order, and would be well suited for the above purpose. I beg to offer her to the Government for the sum of one thousand five hundred pounds. As, in the event of not disposing of her, I am desirous of proceeding to sea at an early date, I shall feel greatly obliged if you would forward me a reply at your earliest convenience.

TENDERS FOR PILOT VESSELS.

Pilot Board Office, 8 March, 1862.

This subject having been often before the Board, and now fully considered and discussed, they decided to represent to the Honorable the Treasurer, that, as Messrs. Broomfield and Whittaker hold to their tender of £3,200, and as the "Sea Witch" is not only over-valued, but scarcely fit for the service, they see no better course than to recommend that the vessels for the service should be ordered to be built in England, under the superintendence of one of Lloyd's Surveyors, and in accordance with the drawings and specifications herein, which are admirably designed for the class of vessels required. If, however, the Honorable the Treasurer should think it desirable, tenders might be called for one vessel in the Colonies, and the other should be built as before stated.

After considering the whole of the most eligible tenders, the Board are of opinion that the prices asked are excessive, seeing that much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels could be made available, and as they have all been built for other purposes they would even then be far inferior to vessels built specially for the Pilot Service.

W. J. WILSHIRE, Secretary.

The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

No. 21.

I cannot adopt the suggestion of the Board that these vessels, or one of them, should be obtained in England. With the finest shipbuilding timber in the world produced in the Colony, and no scarcity of skilful artisans, it would, I conceive, be a just reproach against the Government, were they to sanction the building of these vessels in any other place.

I venture, at the risk of being thought troublesome, to call your attention to a vessel now in Port, as in every way suited for the purpose of a Sea Pilot Boat. SIR,

With reference to my preliminary report respecting the schooner "Sea Witch," forwarded to you this day, I have now the honor to inform you, that I have made a careful examination of the vessel (as far as practicable afloat), the vessel laying afloat (with ballast) off Campbell's Wharf, drawing 5 feet forward and $6\frac{1}{2}$ feet abaft, and find as follows, viz.:— She was built in New London, Connecticut, in the year 1855, and of the undermentioned material:—

Planking.—Outside planking American oak.

Framing.—American oak.

Ceiling.—American oak as high as the clamps.

Clamps.—Clamps of white pine.

Boats.—One boat bad.

Fastenings.—Butts copper-fastened. Floors and centre fastenings iron-fastenings.

Sheathing.—Sheathed at Tahiti in 1860, with yellow metal of 18 oz. to 22 oz., over paper.

Spars.—Spars appear to be in good order.

Sails.—She has 1 main-sail, in bad order; 2 fore-sails, middling; 1 square-sail, do.; 2 jibs, do.; 1 storm trysail, do.

Cable.—1 chain cable, containing 60 fathoms of 1-inch chain; 1 chain, 60 fathoms, $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch chain.

Anchors.—2 bower-anchors.

The topsides and deck will require to be caulked, and the bottom sighted; when that is done, and the sails and rigging completed and properly fitted, with boats, &c., I consider her to be a good substantial vessel for her age and build.

PILOT VESSELS, PORT JACKSON.

21 March, 1862.*

The Pilot Board beg to state, in reply to the Honorable the Treasurer's minute of the 20th instant, relative to the fitting up of the schooner "Sea Witch," lately purchased by the Government, that all the propositions that have been made to establish an outside Pilot Service contemplated that at least two vessels should be simultaneously employed, and they believe that the service cannot be efficiently carried into effect with one.

The Board would beg to refer to their minute of the 8th instant, in which they informed the Minister, that they had carefully examined the "Sea Witch," and that they were unanimous in opinion that she was not only overvalued, but scarcely fit for the service. Under these circumstances, and with this conviction, they most respectfully decline to fit out a vessel that they consider will prove a failure in a service with which they are so much identified. They did anticipate that their opinion would have had some weight in a matter so much within their province, and they cannot help remarking, that if they are qualified to hold seats at the Pilot Board, they must certainly be competent to give an opinion on the fitness of a Pilot Boat, but if the Government think otherwise, it were better that the services of the Board should be dispensed with.

W. J. WILSHIRE,
Secretary.

The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

No. 32.

It appears by this minute, that certain members of the Pilot Board decline to carry out the views and instructions of the Government, and I have therefore no alternative, but to express my entire concurrence in the opinion stated therein, that their services should be dispensed with. The resignation of the gentlemen referred to, whose names at present have not been communicated to me, will be accepted.

PILOT VESSELS, PORT JACKSON.

*Pilot Board Office,
27 March, 1862.*

In reply to the Honorable the Treasurer's minute of this date, the Pilot Board would beg to recapitulate as briefly as possible the circumstances under which they declined to fit out the "Sea Witch" as a Pilot Boat.

Each Member of the Board had visited the vessel and carefully examined her, as much so as if they had contemplated a purchase for their own purposes.

The opinion thus formed, which was conveyed to the Minister on the 8th instant, and in which the Board were unanimous, was to the effect that it was undesirable to purchase her for the service.

This opinion was grounded on the facts that the vessel is slightly built, chiefly iron fastened, has not sufficient hold of the water to be weatherly, and certainly is not worth £1,000.

The Board were informed by the Honorable the Treasurer, on the 20th instant, that the vessel had been purchased, thus setting aside their recommendation; and as they were unanimously of opinion that it would not be to the advantage of the public service that the sum necessary to send her to sea should be expended on such a vessel, they declined to identify themselves with the matter in any way.

In defence of this view, they beg to quote the words of a Minute of the Honorable the Treasurer, dated 27th September, 1860, where that Minister informs the Board that "to protect the public expenditure is the first duty of every department."

The Board feel, moreover, that on so many similar occasions their opinions had been ignored by the Minister, and those of other persons adopted, and that frequently the Harbour Master, as in this instance, had been permitted to commence operations without the knowledge of the Board, that if they were to be in any way responsible for the success or failure of the new system of pilotage about to be initiated, they ought not in justice to be asked to carry it out with materials which, in their opinion, are unfit.

The opinion of the Board, more particularly alluded to by the Honorable the Treasurer, was to the effect, that "if the Government thought them not competent to give "an opinion on the fitness of a Pilot Boat, it would be better that their services should be "dispensed with." The Government have not informed the Board that this is their opinion, and, therefore, the Board do not feel called upon to tender their resignation.

The members of the Pilot Board, who were present at the meeting at which the resolution not to fit out the "Sea Witch" was passed were, in addition to the Chairman, Captain Darley, Captain Smith, and Captain Fox. The Chairman objected to some words in the resolution, but was overruled. He then observed that he must leave the responsibility with the nautical members, and having put the resolution from the chair it was carried unanimously.

SIR,

With reference to the minute of the Pilot Board, of the 21st March, in which it was decided, unanimously, not to fit out the "Sea Witch" as a Pilot Boat, I am directed, by the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, to communicate to you and the other Members who were present at that meeting, the decision of the Government thereon, viz., that

"The refusal of these gentlemen, in their communication of 21st March, to carry out the views and instructions of the Government, renders it impossible that they should any longer retain their seats at the Board, and that their successors will be appointed forthwith."

Sydney, 7 April, 1862.

At the request of R. Towns, Esq., we, the undersigned, went on board the schooner "Sea Witch," this morning at 7 a.m., for the purpose of surveying that vessel. We there met Captain Crook, who showed us through the vessel and gave such information as required.

We beg to report as follows:—

1. We find the vessel to be built of oak and pitch pine. The frames of oak, 14 inches by 7 inches, space $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Keelson, 10 by 9 inches oak. Ceiling plank of oak and pitch pine, $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches thick. Beams of pitch pine, 7 inches by 5 inches, double kneed. Outside planking, above copper, also waterways, stanchions, and rails, are of good sound oak and well put together, decks of pine and in good condition. The vessel throughout is a good staunch vessel, timber and frame of the usual size for tonnage.

2. The centre fastenings are of iron, bilge and other fastenings of copper.

3. As far as draft of water is concerned, I may say it is not unusual to put four feet of hanging keel on yachts from 80 to 100 tons (measurement) in England, for the purpose of going to windward. This principle in shallow vessels gives windward qualities, with slight displacement for running.

QUESTIONS put by Capt. Towns.

No. 1.—Is she slightly built? We consider her in every respect extra strong. (Vide dimensions.)

No. 2.—Is she chiefly copper-fastened? Except the centre fastenings. We cannot say if the keel fastenings are copper, but in every part she is strictly and sufficiently copper-fastened, as high as necessary.

No. 3.—Has she sufficient hold of the water to be weatherly? We are of opinion from her present draft of water, she has ample hold to be weatherly. The fastest vessels of the day are of light draft, and, if our recommendation be carried out, we consider the "Sea Witch" in every respect well suited for the purpose of an outside Pilot Boat.

I have pleasure to certify to the above, and further add, I never sailed in a finer sea boat than the "Sea Witch," and I feel sure the vessel will give satisfaction as a Pilot Boat, as no vessel could be better suited for the purpose.

I have commanded vessels of all sizes and rigs, square rig to every description of fore and aft, and the rig of the "Sea Witch" is to my mind admirably suited for the Pilot Service.

GEORGE BOWLES,

Master, schooner "Tawera."

Sydney, 8 April, 1862.

DEAR SIR,

On Saturday last, April 5th, we, the undersigned, at your request, repaired on board the schooner "Sea Witch" to survey her, our attention having been invited by you to the following points, and to give our opinion thereon:—

1st. Build, slight or otherwise.

2nd. If chiefly iron fastened.

3rd. If sufficient hold of the water to beweatherly.

Build.—We consider her scantling and planking to be of fair dimensions, of good quality, and sound as far as we are able to see.

Dimensions of floors—8 in. by 7 in., with $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches between each pair.

Ceiling—2 to $2\frac{1}{4}$ inches.

Outside planking, we were informed, was $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 inches; decks (spruce), $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches; material chiefly white oak, with some streaks of pine inside. Judging from appearances the vessel shews no signs of weakness, nor of working in the way of the masts.

Fastening.—Apparently every butt in the bottom is copper through bolted, other fastenings of iron.

Hold of Water.—Her sailing draft, as we were informed by the Captain, is 8 feet aft, 7 feet 2 inches forwards. She draws somewhat more, we understand, amidships, having a depth of keel there of 24 inches, diminishing towards the forefoot and heel.

This we imagine would give a sufficient hold of the water for a vessel of 63 tons (N.M.), which is measurement of the "Sea Witch," and which, in conjunction with her very suitable rig, affords good reason for believing her to be (as the Captain assured us she is) a very weatherly craft.

Possessing this very essential quality, and properly fitted out, we believe she will render good service as a sea Pilot Boat.

I, WILLIAM OWEN, of Tahiti, Shipwright, certify that, in January, 1861, I had the schooner "Sea Witch" on the Government patent slip for nine days, during which time I removed her copper and dubbed her bottom to the bright wood; recaulked, graved, tarred, papered, and newly coppered her; examining her bottom thoroughly, and found her planking to be $2\frac{1}{2}$ inch white oak, copper butt bolted, treenailed and composition spike fastened. Saw no traces of iron rust, which would have been visible were there any iron fastening in her bottom. And having myself made three rough weather passages in her to California, can certify that she is a remarkably weatherly craft, and fast sailer, and do consider her well adapted for the pilot service.

DEAR SIR,

In reply to your note of yesterday, requesting my opinion of the general qualifications of the "Sea Witch," I have no hesitation in saying, that from appearance, size, and draught of water, I should have been very glad on the part of the Admiralty, to join with the Colonial Government in her purchase for a surveying vessel, in preference to the "Captain Cook," believing her in every way qualified as a sea-going vessel.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 16th April, 1862, with reference to the appointment of certain Gentlemen, as Members of the Pilot Board, &c.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a Minute paper by the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, intimating that the Government having purchased the schooner "Sea Witch" for the Pilot service, the Pilot Board was instructed to take the necessary steps for her equipment, in order that the new system might come into operation as early as possible.

It appears that three Members of the Board, Captains Darley, Smith, and Fox, in a communication addressed to the Colonial Treasurer, and dated 21st March, declined to carry out the instructions of the Government respecting the vessel, and suggested that, if their opinion were not to be acted upon, it would be better that their services should be dispensed with.

Under these circumstances, the Honorable the Treasurer recommends that the services of these gentlemen should be dispensed with accordingly, and that Captains Robert Towns, John Vine Hall, and W. F. Norie be appointed in their places.

2. The Council advise that the recommendation of the Honorable the Treasurer be approved, and that Captains Robert Towns, John Vine Hall, and W. F. Norie, be appointed members of the Pilot Board accordingly.

APPENDIX A.

No. 51.

MEMORANDA FOR THE PILOT SERVICE AT SYDNEY.

Boats.—Two sailing vessels of not less than 60 nor over 80 tons, fore and aft schooners preferred; and one whaleboat for inside duty.

The sailing vessels to be properly fitted and found with every comfort for the Pilots, as to sleeping apartments and mess-room.

Each vessel to carry one ordinary-sized whaleboat, on extra high davits, and one smaller boat or dingy—the latter to be carried on deck, for boarding ships in ordinary weather, the whaleboat to be used as occasion may require.

Crew, six in number.—The Master to be a Branch Pilot, and when necessary to board and take vessels in or out; one mate, a smart, active young man, and thorough sailor, train him for the service, and let him be entitled to a Branch, when a vacancy may occur, in preference to strangers, but he must be competent.

Three active young men, accustomed to boating, need not be what we term able seamen. One boy or lad, not under 15 years old, who may be an apprentice.

This gives a crew of six, all told, I put down the full complement, and I would prefer two stout lads of 18 or 20, to be brought up in the service in preference to old growlers.

Provisions.—The Master to have the privilege of victualling the pilots and crew, at a scale to be fixed on; the calculation of the expense is based on such a plan.

Number of Pilots and Masters.—Six Licensed Pilots, three for each vessel, together with the Master, will make eight Sea Pilots on the staff.

Whaleboat.—One ordinary-sized whaleboat, with four men, to be kept at Camp Cove, for attending the Pilots inside, and keeping communication with the Signal Staff and the Cutter in the Bay.

DISPOSITION OF THE VESSELS.

Stations.—The vessels to take the outside duty by turns, say weekly or monthly, as the matters of detail may hereafter be decided, and in rotation.

Three Pilots to be at all times on board each vessel, and to be placed and ply in the following order; and, for distinction, I will term one the outside boat, and the other the inside boat, and to begin with both boats outside in the morning, the outside boat having three Pilots, besides the Master of the vessel, making four Pilots on board.

The inside boat, having only her Master and crew on board, the three Pilots appointed to her having been called to Sydney to take three ships to sea, those Pilots having been sent up from the inside boat before she left her moorings, in the whaleboat from Camp Cove.

The outside boat will at once make an offing to windward, to the distance of eight or ten miles, or in such direction as the judgment and discretion of the Master and Pilots on board may consider best, keeping within sight of the Signal Station at South Head.

The vessel having on board a sufficient supply of water, stores, and provisions to last the time of her intended outside duties.

By keeping within signal distance, the Master and Pilots on board will know when, and in what direction, vessels may be seen from the Signal Station to approach the harbour, and shape their course accordingly.

The inside boat will cruise off the Heads, in readiness to take out the Pilots from the outward bound ships as they approach, sending the boat for them, and thus continue during the day.

Should no vessels requiring Pilots have arrived during the day, and all three Pilots have brought ships out, each vessel will have her full complement of Pilots on board.

As the night comes on the outside boat will close in towards the Heads, taking her station in such a position as the state of the weather will permit, and best calculated to see and intercept vessels making for the harbour, and will keep night signals out, as indicating her to be a Pilot Boat, and with a constant look out on the South Head, in case signals may be made.

The inside boat will at the same time make for her moorings at Watson's Bay or Camp Cove, as may be agreed on, and there remain for the night—that is, supposing no ships have arrived and three gone out.

I will now suppose three ships have arrived during the night, and all three Pilots from the outside vessel are in port. The inside vessel will proceed to her station as usual and put on board the outside the three pilots, and away as usual; the outward bound, if any, would be taken out by the Pilots which arrived the previous night.

The

The outside boat having made for her station in the offing, while the inside boat hold her station during the day and receive the Pilots from the outward-bound, or put them on board any vessel bound-in that may have arrived during the day from a different direction to where the outside boat may be cruising.

Should the outside boat have boarded all her Pilots, the inside boat will supply her before leaving the station for her moorings; and should a case occur when all the Pilots have been boarded, the inside boat will make signal for Pilots to come out to meet her, which must be done by the whaleboat taking them out, when she will make for the outer boat and supply her number, three Pilots, before she proceeds to her moorings, leaving the outside boat in charge of the inner station, and thus continue day by day.

It may be said the outside boat will be liable to be swept to the southward. This may happen in light airs, or, perhaps, during fiery north-easters (the latter not likely); but admitting such to be the case, she will be drifting nearer to ships coming from the southward, which cannot pass the Pilot Cutter under either circumstance, while the inner boat cannot lose her position between the Heads, and will at all times be ready to board vessels coming from the north or eastern direction, and on such occasions as when the outside boat cannot reach her station off the Heads, a look-out must be kept by the whaleboat's crew during the night, and in event of vessels appearing without Pilots then to hail the inside boat which must despatch her whaleboat with a Pilot (which is the present plan). As the worst that can happen, suppose the vessel is drawn from her station, the port is never in a worse position than with the present system at best.

Whaleboat.—The service of this boat is necessary for several purposes—in putting Pilots on board the outward-bound, and taking them out of ships as they arrive. It will also be the duty of the coxswain of the whaleboat to ascertain from the telegraph at night if any Pilots are wanted for outward-bound ships in the morning, which he must communicate to the Master of the cutter every night, having an order book for the purpose which he must have signed by the Master of the cutter, as proof of his duty having been done; and should the Pilots be required to supply the boats outside, the whaleboat will take them out to meet the sailing boat.

It may be asked, if a ship go out during the night, what is to become of the Pilot. The outside boat will take him out in the same way as he would put a Pilot on board a ship inward bound, being equally his duty; the outward bound Pilot making a preconcerted signal as he opens the Heads.

I think I have now met every point, and it may be a matter of detail if the outside vessel may not hang on her ground by a kedge and light warp in calms. Also signals between the boats and South Head station may be of great service.

DEAR SIR,

We duly received your letter respecting two pilot vessels for Sydney, for which we are much obliged, and beg to return you drawing shewing cabin-fittings of the vessels we built for Pilot Service at Liverpool. The drawing is of the second one we built for there—not the one you fitted out, as you will see from the specification—this one was 111 tons and the first was 96 tons. We also built two for Hamburg, to ply outside the Elbe—these were first, 96 and next 111 tons; same models as for Liverpool. They, in both cases, like the large vessels the best. I also send you a diagram of their spars and sails, thinking these drawings would be the best way I could make it plain to the Pilot Service gents at Sydney, so with these, and the explanation you can give them, we consider you may arrive at conclusions what to do. You will see by the specification that we found for this vessel a double suit of new heavy canvas. This was the last Hamburg vessel, and I, thinking you would most likely fit out your new boats here, have, with a double suit, fit it up as for them. You will see this vessel we did not copper sheath, as they preferred her to sail first to Hamburg before being done; this of course would make a vessel of this size cost, at this time, £152 to £154 more, but we are ready to build a vessel, and find all as described in the specification, and copper sheath her 6 above her load line of floatation, and of the same dimensions, for £22 10s. 0d. per ton, or £2,497 10s. 0d. if ordered within four or five months from this date. No doubt if your Committee wants them before your return to England, they can refer us to some house in London, so that if agreeable to this specification and price we might proceed with the vessels, and they could be partly done when you arrive. If you decide not to have so large a vessel we should charge 5s. per ton more for a 96 tons vessel than for one 111 tons. You ask us to say what we know of you, and we are pleased to answer, not anything wrong, but on the contrary to be that of a steady industrious and persevering man, and have heard you always spoken of in these terms by those who have known you longer than us, and our knowledge of you extend over some number of years. Now we must say we trust you will bring us, or be the means of sending us, an order for the two Pilot vessels, and afterwards favouring us with your company as overseer of them. With best respects.

HOND. SIR,

In February last I wrote Captain Elwood, of the brig "Tere," of Harwich, in answer to his enquiring of us full particulars of a pilot vessel, such as we have built for Liverpool and Hamburg. I did so, sending him drawings of the internal fittings, &c., and we have now a letter from him at Port Louis, Mauritius, requesting us to write you to say, if he is not home when the letter arrives from us to him, you are to open it, and therein you will see the particulars mentioned. We also wrote and addressed to the Pilot Committee of Sydney a letter therein stating that Captain Elwood had said his letters were to be opened by those gentlemen; so, no doubt, before receiving this, the letter and its contents have been seen by you.

We may say that, so far as experience in building the pilot boats, no one has had so much as ourselves; and, if I remember rightly, I mentioned that we had just received an order from Liverpool to build another one. That vessel we have now in frame, and she will be launched about the middle of July; and if you gentlemen please to give us an order for one or more boats, we will turn you them out so as not to be surpassed by any builder afloat.

Waiting your favor,

We, &c.,

HARVEY & SONS.

APPENDIX C.

No. 60.

21st February, /62.

SIR,

Hearing that the Government require a vessel as a Sea Pilot, and that the "Sea Witch," schooner, has been recommended as one well suited for the purpose, I cannot but say that, in my opinion, she is ill suited for such a purpose. In the first place she is, I believe American build, built of soft wood, and is nearly flat bottomed, and most likely on a lee shore would go a wreck; and moreover, in a very short time she would go to pieces, as she is not faithfully built. The vessels suited for such a purpose must be built of strong wood, hardwood, or some other durable stuff, or else it is money thrown away. They must be very weatherly, for they will have to brave all kinds of weather. I have heard, from good authority, that interested parties from nothing but interested motives, are pushing this vessel on the Government.

It will, therefore, be well for the Government to look alive to their interests. There are two vessels trading from Sydney, well suited for this purpose in every respect, being faithfully built of hardwood, and are splendid sea-boats, and well fitted to weather any sea—indeed have all the qualities required for such a purpose. They are called the "Atlantic" and the "Pacific," but I do not know whether the owner would part with them. If the Government really require a vessel, they would do well to see to these vessels.

Yours, &c.,

WM. JOHNSON.

The Pilot Board beg to forward this letter to the Treasury, but to state that the writer is unknown to them.

PILOT BOARD.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 17th June last, "to inquire into and report upon the Allegations contained in the Petition of Benjamin Darley, Charles Smith, and Henry T. Fox, lately members of the Pilot Board,"—"with power to send for persons and papers," have agreed to the following Report:—

The allegations contained in the Petition involving charges of a serious character against an administrative department of the Government, have induced your Committee to devote the most careful attention to the investigation of the subject referred for their consideration; and in order that they might arrive at a satisfactory conclusion on the various matters of which Petitioners complain, they have taken the evidence of thirty Witnesses—including the Petitioners—have examined Papers and Correspondence, and have also personally inspected the schooner "Sea Witch" in the Government Dry Dock at Cockatoo Island.

Your Committee are of opinion that the members of the late Pilot Board, from their position in the community, long experience in the Colony, and well-known professional skill, were well able to advise with the Government in all matters relating to the appointment of Pilots, the establishment of Light-houses, the management of the Ports of the Colony, the purchase and outfit of Vessels, and all other matters connected with the branch of the public service to which they belonged.

Whilst your Committee have inquired into the whole of the allegations contained in the Petition, greater prominence has been given to that relating to the purchase of the schooner "Sea Witch," for the outside Pilot Service, the circumstances connected with this purchase being of more recent occurrence, and having resulted in the removal of the Petitioners from their positions as members of the Pilot Board.

The purchase of the schooner "Sea Witch" was pressed upon the Minister by Captain Towns, who, though wholly unconnected with the Government, appears to have had sufficient influence to induce them to act upon his advice in preference to that of the Pilot Board.

Board. In a Minute to the Treasury, dated the 8th of March, from the Pilot Board, they state, "That the 'Sea Witch' is not only over-valued, but scarcely fit for the service;" and yet, within one week after receipt of this report, without any further reference to the Board, the vessel was purchased upon no other report or survey than that of Captain Towns and Mr. Cuthbert, the Government Shipwright Surveyor, the latter of whom gave a qualified opinion of her, and states in his evidence that he was never asked whether he considered her a suitable vessel for the Pilot Service, or whether she was over-valued, and did not, therefore, report on these points; but is of opinion that she is not only not a suitable model for a pilot vessel, but was purchased at a price considerably beyond her value.

The Petitioners state that, being determined to mark their sense of what they considered a wasteful expenditure of the public money, upon being requested to fit out the vessel for the service, they declined, and forwarded to the Minister a minute to this effect, with a strong remonstrance. The Minister treated their remonstrance as equivalent to a tender of their resignation, which he intimated his intention to accept. The Petitioners disclaimed the alleged intention to resign, whereupon they were summarily dismissed by the Government.

The weight of evidence taken before your Committee corroborates the opinion expressed by the Pilot Board previous to the purchase of the vessel, and has been fully borne out by her performances, which have proved her to be deficient in two most essential qualifications for a pilot vessel—she is not a weatherly craft, and will not stay in a rough sea under reduced canvas. To endeavour to remedy these defects during the time this inquiry was pending, she was placed in the Government Dry Dock, and has had from two to three feet added to her keel; her bowsprit has been shortened, her foremast shortened and moved further aft, and her ballast shifted. These alterations appear to have been made at the suggestion of Captain Rountree, who has very recently been appointed a member of the Pilot Board; and it may be here remarked, as a circumstance of a somewhat extraordinary character, that these alterations have been performed by Captain Rountree without any consultation having been first had with Mr. Cuthbert, the Government Shipwright Surveyor, as to whether they would have the contemplated effect of rendering the vessel fit for the service. Mr. Cuthbert believes they will not, and that the addition to the keel will strain her. She is an American vessel, eight years old, two years older than she was represented to the Government to be when they purchased her, and has cost with additions and alterations as much as a new vessel on the most approved model and construction could have been procured for from England, and more than if built in the Colony.

Your Committee cannot conclude this portion of their Report without referring to the conduct of Mr. Crook, the Harbour Master, who in giving his evidence stated that he had carefully examined the “Sea Witch,” in dock, and that she had a curved keel, being very much deeper in midships than fore and aft, which would make her weatherly and turn quickly. From an examination in dock, your Committee ascertained that this statement was directly at variance with fact, the vessel having a straight keel. This very material part of Mr. Crook’s evidence having been proved to be inaccurate, your Committee regret they cannot attach that degree of importance to his statements which they would wish to do to the evidence of an officer in his position.

“ Sea

As some of the reports furnished since the purchase of the vessel have been apparently made on the assumption that she had a deep keel in midships, these reports cannot be considered of any value.

The circumstances connected with the erection of the Light-house near Jervis Bay had previously been the subject of Parliamentary investigation by a Select Committee of your Honorable House, whose Report has been referred to this Committee.

After a careful examination of the Report and Proceedings of that Committee, together with the Correspondence on the subject, and after maturely considering the additional evidence taken before your Committee, they are of opinion that the advice of the Pilot Board was sought as to the most eligible site for the Light-house. The Light-house was erected not in accordance with such advice, and the position, which is not that fixed by any of the authorities consulted, has since been found so objectionable that it has been determined to remove the Tower, thereby incurring a considerable expenditure, which might have been avoided, had the advice of a majority of the Pilot Board been acted upon, as they urged that the present site was not the “most eligible,” and advised that it should be erected on or in the vicinity of Crocodile Head, or the easternmost headland on the north side of Jervis Bay.

The Pilot Board is a department of great importance to the commercial and shipping interest; and the practice which has prevailed of taking the advice of persons unconnected with the Government in preference to the members of the Board, if permitted to be continued, must result in serious injury to the public service.

Your Committee have, after much anxious consideration, come to the conclusion that the Petitioners have, in the various matters at issue, reasonable grounds of complaint.

SAUL SAMUEL,
Chairman.

The Light-house was erected not in accordance with such “advice,” and the position “has since been found so objectionable that it has been determined to remove it, thereby incurring a considerable expenditure, which might have been avoided, had the advice of a majority of the Pilot Board been acted upon, “as they urged that the present site was not the “most eligible,” and “advised that it should be erected on or in the vicinity of Crocodile Head, or “the easternmost headland on the north side of Jervis Bay.”

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

PILOT BOARD.

THURSDAY, 26 JUNE, 1862.

Present:—

MR. DICK,
CAPT. MORIARTY,
MR. PIDDINGTON,
MR. SADDLEIR,

MR. SAMUEL,
MR. SMART,
MR. WEEKES,
MR. WILSON.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Charles Smith, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are one of the petitioners, lately a member of the Pilot Board?
Yes.
2. You have been a commander in the Merchant Service? Yes.
3. And are, at present, a large shipowner? Yes, I own several vessels.
4. You have had great experience in all matters relating to shipping? Yes, I have had considerable experience.
5. Will you state how long you were a member of the Pilot Board? About three years.
6. Will you state what you considered your duties in connection with the office you held as a member of the Pilot Board? I consider that my duties there were to make the service as efficient as possible, at the least cost to the country.
7. Were your duties to advise with the Government in any particular matters? _____
8. By Mr. Dick: Were there any written instructions for the guidance of the Board? I am not aware of any.
9. You never saw any? I never saw any.
10. By the Chairman: Were matters in connection with the management of the Harbour generally referred to you for your advice or report? They were sometimes referred to us, and, I believe, sometimes to other parties.
11. Was it a part of your duty to examine pilots? Yes.
12. And to report upon their fitness? Yes, I considered it so.
13. Were you a member of the Pilot Board in January last? Yes.
14. Do you recollect the Government being desirous of purchasing a vessel for the Pilot Service? Yes.
15. Was your advice asked for on that occasion? Yes.
16. Have you seen the correspondence that has been laid upon the Table of the House, relating to the purchase of the schooner "Sea Witch"? Yes, I have seen that correspondence.
17. The Government being desirous of purchasing a vessel, was your advice asked for with regard to any particular vessel or vessels? In the first instance, regarding no particular vessel. We were asked to advertise for suitable vessels, so far as I recollect; and we applied

C. Smith,
Esq.

26 June, 1862.

C. Smith,
Esq.

to be allowed to advertise in the adjacent Colonies as well as in Sydney, which was refused by the Treasurer.

18. By Mr. Dick: All these matters are in writing, I believe, are they not? Yes, I believe so.

19. By the Chairman: Will you refer to No. 6 of the printed Correspondence on the Table. It appears that several vessels were offered to the Government, in consequence of the tenders that were invited? Yes.

20. The "Pacific," "Kate Kearney," a vessel unnamed, and the "Vixen," were offered to the Government? Yes.

21. None of those vessels were considered suitable for the service? None of them were considered quite suitable for the service.

22. And you did not recommend any tenders to be accepted? Not at that time.

23. No. 7 was your answer on that occasion—"The Board beg to report that they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible, and they think it desirable to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies before making any final recommendation"? Yes.

24. Your recommendation was not acted upon? It was not acted upon, so far as I know.

25. Subsequent to that some other vessels were offered. Look at No. 10 in the Correspondence: the following vessels were offered—"Jeanie Dove," "Beautiful Star," steamer, "Atlantic," and "Lola Montez"? Yes.

26. Will you look at No. 11, and say whether that was your recommendation? Yes, that was our recommendation to the Treasurer.

27. You say,— "With reference to the Minute of this date [14th February, 1862], the Pilot Board now recommend that the tenders for the 'Pacific' and 'Atlantic' should be accepted, as they consider that these vessels are the most suitable for the purpose belonging to the port, being in fair condition, commodious, and weatherly. Should it be found that they do not realize all that the Board anticipate, they will always sell for a price little less than the cost. Although the tenders amount to £3,200, the Board believe that in all probability the owner would accept £3,000 for the two vessels." You were a party to that recommendation? Yes.

28. Did you examine these vessels in any way? Yes; I went on board of them, and examined them as well as they could be examined then; they had their cargo on board at the time.

29. By Mr. Dick: Both of them? Yes; one had a part out, but you may say both were loaded at the time. Of course, before finally settling it, we should have had them overhauled more properly.

30. By the Chairman: Did you intend, in making that recommendation, that the vessels should be bought on that report, or was it contingent on any further survey? It is always usual, in purchasing vessels for the Government, to put them in dock to look at them, before the affair is finally settled.

31. Did you on that occasion see enough of these vessels to be able to form an opinion whether they were worth the money, or suited for the purpose? What the Board considered was this: the Treasurer wished the service to be immediately started, and we knew it would take some time before we could get vessels properly adapted for the service, but we considered these two would be the best we could get in the meantime, and that there would be very little loss on them when sold again. Instead of chartering vessels for a time, until proper ones could be built, we considered it more economical to buy these, as we believed they would realize, at the end of ten or twelve months, very nearly what the Government would have had to give for them.

32. Was any shipwright's opinion taken on that occasion? No shipwright's opinion was taken then.

33. The offer for these vessels was not accepted? No. I may state that within a month of this I bought nine hundred tons of shipping on my own account, and I required no carpenter nor any one else to satisfy me that the vessels I bought were worth the money I gave for them.

34. You have no doubt these vessels were worth the money? Yes, and would answer perhaps as well as any that could be got here.

35. By Mr. Wilson: Were you previously acquainted with the character of these two schooners? Yes.

36. By Mr. Dick: Are they traders on the coast? They are, and I see them every week passing my door.

37. By the Chairman: Was the fact of the cargo being on board an obstacle to your forming an opinion of their adaptability to the purpose required? Certainly not; I knew the build and qualities of the vessels long before I went to see them then.

38. They were not bought? They were not bought.

39. Who were the gentlemen who inspected the vessels? Captain Darley, Captain Watson, and myself.

40. Captain Watson is still a member of the Pilot Board? He is.

41. Do you recollect the "Sea Witch" being offered to the Government and your opinion being asked? Yes.

42. Will you look at No. 20 of the Correspondence; was that Minute written with your approval? Yes.

43. It appears by that Minute, that in the opinion of the Board the "Sea Witch" was "not only overvalued but scarcely fit for the service"? Yes.

44. You are aware that she has since been purchased? Yes. I may state that I have overhauled the Sea Witch myself, and also that Captain Watson and I had been to look at her, and then it was arranged that Captain Darley and Captain Fox should also go and inspect her, and that Captain Darley should take some of his carpenters, so as to fully overhaul her her, which he did; and when he reported to the Board, this is the letter that was then written. C. Smith, Esq.

45. Will you be kind enough to state to the Committee your reasons for considering the "Sea Witch" overvalued at the price asked for her, £1,500? The full value of that vessel in the market at the time was £800. That was the value put upon her by Captain Towns, had he been going to buy her for himself. Mr. Russell, the shipwright, of Pymont, valued her at £700 when he inspected her. 26 June, 1862.

46. From your own experience in such matters, what do you believe to be the value of the vessel? I believe certainly not over £800.

47. By Mr. Wilson: Would you have given £800 for her? That would depend on the purpose I wanted her for; I had no business fit for her then.

48. By the Chairman: Do you know of any sales of vessels of that class about the time of her purchase? Yes; I bought a vessel pretty near that time—the "Burnett," and sold a much better vessel—the "Jeanie Dove"—for £1,100. I got the "Burnett" for £1,400; she was 140 tons register —

49. A larger vessel than the "Sea Witch"? Yes, more than double the size, Colonial built, and a superior vessel in every way—build, quality, and everything else.

50. The Pilot Board on this occasion say that the "Sea Witch" is "scarcely fit for the service"—will you give your reasons for forming that opinion, as far as you were concerned? She is too shallow; she has got a bottom almost flat, with a deep keel amidships. A vessel to be any good in a sea-way must have more rise of floor.

51. She had not sufficient hold of the water? Not only not sufficient hold of the water—they may give her hold of the water, but they cannot give her that quality that rise of floor gives to a vessel as compared with one that has a flat floor. This vessel, too, is six or eight years old, and principally iron-fastened; all the centre fastenings fore and aft are iron, and that has been coppered over since she was built; and every one acquainted with these matters knows that when copper is put over iron in that way, a vessel will not last more than seven years, to be depended upon.

52. Do you know where she was built? I forget.

53. Do you know whether she was English or American built? American.

54. How long are American built vessels supposed to last? That depends a good deal on the qualities of them, the timber they are built with, and how they are fastened.

55. Mr. Cuthbert gives us the timbers of the "Sea Witch," in No. 25 of this Correspondence—how long would a vessel of the build there described be supposed to last? A vessel of that build would not be classed in England, at the outside, over seven years.

56. Seven years on the first letter? On the first letter.

57. By Captain Moriarty: Would she be so long? I do not think she would; but that is certainly the extreme she could be classed for. She has also got a quality which is against her being classed well in England; her deck is cut in two—the deck is cut right across, and there is a rise aft; that of course weakens the vessel, because her stringers do not overlap sufficiently to make her strong.

58. By the Chairman: As far as I understand you, you base your opinion that she is not fit for the Pilot Service on the fact that she is too shallow, and I presume not sufficiently weatherly? And not strong enough for what is required of her.

59. At the meeting of the 8th March, when the Minute of that date was made, stating that the "Sea Witch" was "not only overvalued but scarcely fit for the service," who were the members of the Board present? The full Board was present, with the exception of Captain Deloitte, who has been sick for some time.

60. Was the decision of the Board on that occasion unanimous? Quite so.

61. You were called upon afterwards, I think, to fit her out. When was the next intimation you had of her purchase. No. 26 is to this effect:—"Pilot Board,—This vessel has been purchased by the Government for the outside Pilot Service, for the sum of £1,425, on condition that her bottom be sighted and found sound. The Board will direct the Harbour Master to ascertain the earliest period at which she can be docked in the Fitz Roy Dock. E. C. W., 15 March, /62." Was that Minute sent to the Pilot Board? Not that I am aware of; I never saw this Minute. In fact, I am not aware of any of the Board seeing this Minute until after the vessel had been docked and bought.

62. You did not see that Minute? I did not.

63. I see the vessel was docked on the 19th March. Were any members of the Pilot Board present when she was docked? Not that I am aware of.

64. Can you state the reason? I believe the reason was that we had no intimation that the vessel was going into dock. This Minute, No. 26, said to have been sent to the Board, so far as I know, never came to the Board.

65. Did you know anything of the vessel going into dock, or did the other members of the Board know? Not so far as I am aware.

66. Was she put into dock without any member of the Pilot Board knowing anything about it? I believe so.

67. By Captain Moriarty: Was not Mr. Crook, the Harbour Master, present when she was docked? I was not present, and therefore I do not know. I believe the Harbour Master took Captain Towns over to her in his boat, to inspect her in the dock.

68. By Mr. Sadleir: Mr. Crook is not a member of the Pilot Board? No.

69. By the Chairman: Were you present at the meeting of the Pilot Board, at which the Minute dated 21 March and signed "W. J. Wilshire, Secretary"—No. 31 in the Correspondence—was adopted? Yes.

70. Will you be kind enough to say who were present on that occasion? Myself, Captain Fox, Captain Darley, and the Chairman, Mr. Duncan. Captain Watson was not present, I recollect that.

- C. Smith, Esq. 71. In that Minute the Board decline to have anything to do with fitting-out the vessel?
 Yes.
- 26 June, 1862. 72. In consequence of that Minute, did the Government call upon you to resign? Yes.
73. You declined to tender your resignations? Yes.
74. Will you be kind enough to state why you determined on that course? We considered that by resigning our seats others would be put in our places, who, perhaps, would be more pliable to the Minister, and we should not have the opportunity of showing the country how the public money was being wasted, and the department carried out in the way it has been in many respects lately; and we adopted that course in order that it might be brought before the country, to shew how we were treated at the Board, and how the appointments had been made in many departments, which we did not approve of.
75. Are you acquainted in any way with the ownership of the "Sea Witch"? Yes, I have heard.
76. Are you aware who were the owners previous to the Government purchasing her? I heard that the captain was the owner—Captain Chapman.
77. By Mr. Wilson: "B. F. Chapman," whose name appears in this Correspondence? Yes.
78. By the Chairman: Will you look at No. 22, a letter from Captain Towns to the Treasurer, in which he recommends that the "Sea Witch" should be purchased, as "in every way suited to the purpose of a sea pilot boat * * * the perfect model of what we require, and with a very trifling expense may be sent to sea in a few hours, every way fit for the service." Are you aware how long it was from the time this vessel was purchased until the time she got to sea? I should think it must have been six or seven weeks.
79. From what you have stated, I presume you do not consider her a perfect model? Certainly not.
80. By Mr. Sadleir: Could she have been sent to sea in a few hours, to answer the purpose of a pilot boat? Certainly not; she is not sent in a proper state to answer the purpose of a Pilot boat now, according to my opinion.
81. By Mr. Weekes: You have stated that the Government refused to follow the advice of the Pilot Board in calling for tenders in the neighbouring Colonies, after having failed to obtain a suitable vessel here? Yes.
82. Do you remember a Minute I sent to the Board, to know how they intended to deal with the tenders for any vessels that might be offered in the neighbouring Colonies? I recollect such a Minute coming.
83. Turn to No. 8. After the Board had reported that none of the vessels then offered were in all respects eligible, they advised that the neighbouring Colonies should be tried,—I then sent down to the Board this Minute:—"In calling for tenders in the neighbouring Colonies, I should like to know the views of the Board. A vessel from description may appear suitable—is it intended to intrust the examination into her condition to some party at the port where she may be, and who will also be authorized to make a final arrangement; or, if her description is approved of, will the Board require her to be brought to Sydney for inspection? If the latter, there seems little probability of a compliance, on the uncertainty of an approval on arrival, and it will be simply so much time lost." Do you remember that Minute being sent? I do.
84. Do you recollect also, that in reply to that the Board sent this Minute, marked No. 9 here, signed by Mr. Wilshire:—"The Board purpose to refer tenders received from the Colonies to the Pilot Boards of the respective ports, who are no doubt competent to report satisfactorily. The Board will, however, examine the vessels tendered here during the week." You remember that likewise? Yes.
85. Then it was not an absolute refusal on my part to follow your advice on the matter, but I simply called for your intentions as to tenders that might be sent in from the neighbouring Colonies? Just so; but we never had any orders to advertise them.
86. Immediately after that, fresh tenders were submitted to the Board, and then came your recommendation of the "Atlantic" and the "Pacific"—so that up to that time there was no necessity to appeal to the neighbouring Colonies, your recommendation of the "Atlantic" and the "Pacific" having intervened? No, but if we had been authorized to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies, we should not have recommended the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" until we had known what we could find there.
87. But as a matter of fact you did recommend the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"? Yes, if they could be got at a certain price.
88. Your Minute, stating that the Board intended to refer to the Pilot Boards of the respective Colonies, is dated 14th February? Yes.
89. Now, if you turn to No. 11, you will see that your recommendation that the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" should be purchased also bears date on the 14th February—is that the case? So it appears; but so far as I recollect they were not done at the same time.
90. That of course is a matter of documentary evidence which can be settled hereafter; but so far as these printed papers go they bear even date? Yes.
91. Therefore that explains why no further steps were taken with regard to the other Colonies—that on the same day that you submitted your intention of referring to the Pilot Boards of the respective Colonies, you recommended that the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" should be bought?
(Mr. Piddington objected to the question. Witness requested to withdraw. Committee deliberated. Witness re-introduced.)
92. Would not the date of your Minute, No. 9, stating that you would leave the Pilot Boards of the neighbouring Colonies to select for this Government—would not the fact of that Minute bearing the same date, namely, 14th February, with that in which you advised the Government to buy two particular vessels, explain the reason why the Government did not not advertise in the neighbouring Colonies? It would not explain it, for this reason, that I think you will find in one of the Treasurer's letters to the Board that he says he cannot see the use of advertising in the other Colonies, or something to that effect.

C. Smith,
Esq.

93. Do you allude to No. 3? No; there is something else, if my memory serves me. No. 26 June, 1862.
8, which you have just read, led us to presume you would not advertise in the neighbouring Colonies.

94. You reply to that, and say you propose to leave the selection to the Pilot Boards of the neighbouring Colonies; and then on the same day there is your communication recommending the "Atlantic" and the "Pacific"? Yes, it is the same date here, the 14th February; but your Minute of the 8th of February led us to believe you would not advertise in the other Colonies.

95. I believe the "Pacific" was first offered to you for your inspection and decision in the first batch of tenders? Yes.

96. In the list of vessels in No. 6? Yes.

97. Do you know what her tonnage is? Somewhere about 60 tons.

98. What was the price she was offered at? £1,200.

99. You rejected her at first? Yes.

100. As not being suitable? No doubt, as not being quite suitable.

101. Subsequently you recommended the "Pacific" and another vessel, the "Atlantic," to be purchased? We recommended them in this way: that they would do as substitutes for the present time, until proper vessels could be obtained.

102. Just so, but still you recommended their purchase? Yes, if they could be got for £3,000.

103. Although one of them had been previously rejected? Yes, no doubt.

104. What was the price at which the "Atlantic" was offered? £2,000 or £1,800. £3,200 the two, I think it was.

105. Will you refresh your memory by reference to the papers? The "Atlantic" was offered at £2,000.

106. Do you know her tonnage? 71 tons.

107. Do you know the tonnage of the "Sea Witch"? About 59 tons under her deck; she has a booby hatch that measures some three or four tons more.

108. I mean her registered tonnage? They have registered a little more in her than they generally do in other vessels; they state her at 63 tons.

109. You are very fortunate in your purchase of vessels, that is, you get good vessels at a moderate figure; for instance, the "Burnett," of 140 tons, new, I think you said? No, I said she was Colonial built.

110. And in good order? Yes.

111. You bought her for £1,400? Yes,

112. I suppose you must be considered a fortunate man in getting so good a vessel for so cheap a price? I make the best bargain I can, of course.

113. While you could buy for yourself a good vessel of 140 tons for £1,400, you recommended that the Government should buy a vessel of 71 tons for £2,000? Yes.

114. So that the Government were not driving so good a bargain as you made yourself? Perhaps not so good, but as good a bargain as could be made for the vessel required.

115. Is it not the fact that Governments are made to pay more than private individuals? So far as my experience goes they generally do.

116. Does not the market rise when the Government are buyers? Generally so.

117. And therefore that induced you to recommend a vessel of 71 tons for £2,000? No, the "Atlantic" is a peculiar vessel, perhaps the only vessel of her class in Sydney.

118. Do you know where she was built? In New Zealand.

119. Was the "Pacific" built there too? Yes.

120. Do you know the age of the "Pacific"? About six years.

121. By Mr. Wilson: The tender says she was built in 1857? Yes.

122. By Mr. Weekes: Considering the prices at which the Board recommended these two vessels—the "Pacific," of 60 tons, at £1,200, and the "Atlantic," of 71 tons, at £2,000—do you think it anything very much out of the way that the "Sea Witch," of 63 tons, should be bought at £1,425? Certainly, a good deal out of the way. The "Sea Witch" had most of her rigging gone; she had no sails; she was not found in any way in comparison with the "Atlantic" or the "Pacific;" and she is a vessel that would not be so well adapted for general purposes as either of these vessels are—therefore she is not of so much value in the market in comparison.

123. Did you see her inventory? The captain told me what she had.

124. Did you see the inventory of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"? The captain of her also told me what was to be had with her.

125. By Captain Moriarty: And you are under the conviction that the information derived from those sources was accurate? Yes.

126. By Mr. Weekes: When a matter is referred to the Pilot Board, and when their recommendation is sent back, and intended to be acted upon, does not the approval of the Minister complete the transaction and make it binding? I presume so.

127. Then, on these tenders being referred to you, when the Board, after inspecting the "Atlantic" and "Pacific," recommended that they should be bought for £3,200, although they believed £3,000 might be accepted, if the Government had approved of that suggestion, would not that have been conclusive and closed the purchase? No; we would have required to be satisfied that the vessels were all right when the cargoes were out.

128. Did you intimate that to the Government? No.

129. Was not yours an absolute recommendation for their purchase? We took it for granted

C. Smith,
Esq.

26 June, 1862.

granted that a survey would be held, because it is always done in such matters when the Government is buying.

130. By Mr. Smart: At what price did you recommend the purchase of the vessels spoken of? We said if they could be got at £3,000 there would be little loss to the Government on their re-sale, after they had been used, when others were got.

131. By Mr. Weekes: You were prepared to recommend that they should be bought for the sum at which they were offered, although you believed they might be sold for £3,000? When you have got the Minute that was written at the Board, I think you will find that the reasons given were more full than what is here in print.

132. Are you aware that the course, on this proposition being approved, would be, that the parties would be communicated with by the Treasury, and informed that the offer was accepted? On the vessels being sighted, I presume.

133. But the Board do not recommend that necessary ordeal to be gone through? They thought it quite superfluous to do so, because it is done in all cases where the Government buy vessels.

134. Would it not be the proper course, when a matter of this kind is submitted to the Board for their investigation, and when the Government are depending on their advice, that when that recommendation is given in the Government would have every confidence that the Board had taken all precautions, as prudent men, before they recommended a final settlement? No doubt the Government would be satisfied that the Board would take the necessary precautions, and the Board would have done so.

135. If the Government had communicated to the owners of these vessels that their tender was accepted, would not the bargain have been completed? No doubt; but we told the captain, when we were on board, that we should again overhaul them after the cargo was out; therefore they were recognizing that we should again call to see them.

136. The Board did not call the attention of the Government to that precaution? No, they did not think it necessary.

137. Then it might have been that by the acceptance of the Government, on their recommendation, the bargain would have been finally closed? It might have been.

138. By Mr. Piddington: The bargain would not have been concluded without the Pilot Board insisting on another inspection? Certainly not.

139. By Mr. Weekes: You left the Government in the dark with respect to that precaution? It is a precaution always taken, and we took it for granted the Government would know that we would take the necessary steps. Our Minute, I take it, merely intimates that we thought that the vessels might be bought for £3,000, and that the Government would lose little by them if they were afterwards sold when other properly qualified vessels were obtained. Of course we would take the necessary steps to see that they were all right before closing the bargain.

140. Will you be kind enough to read my Minute, No. 12—"What would be the cost of building in the Colony per ton? I should like to see the report of survey on these vessels. "E. C. W., 15 Feb., '62." So that, on receiving your recommendation, I communicated with you further on the subject? Yes.

141. Will you refer to No. 13, and state what was the reply of the Board? "The Board beg to state that Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson were deputed to inspect the vessels, and, although no report was made in writing, the Board are satisfied, from the verbal report of these gentlemen, that the 'Pacific' and 'Atlantic' are the most suitable vessels in port, and worth the price asked. Mr. Cuthbert informed a member of the Board, that it would cost £3,000 to build one vessel here. If they are to be built the Board would recommend that they should be built in England. Should this become necessary, they beg to report that the vessels named could afterwards be sold at a price little less than the cost. "W. J. WILSHIRE, 20 Feb."

142. You say nothing in that additional communication of the intention of the Board to submit these vessels to further examination? No, there is nothing of that kind mentioned in it.

143. Will you have the goodness to look at No. 14—does it not appear from that that I required a precaution to be observed which you had not recommended? No doubt we had not recommended that to you.

144. In No. 20, dated 8th March, on the subject of the "Sea Witch," does that Minute condemn her absolutely, or do you merely state that she is "scarcely fit for the service"? Scarcely fit for the service.

145. Is not that almost in the same terms as the opinion you gave when the "Pacific" was first offered? No doubt, and the "Atlantic" also.

146. That Minute, in using the phrase "scarcely fit for the service," conveyed no intimation to the Government that the "Sea Witch" was the exceedingly unfit vessel which you subsequently stated her to be? Well, it is very hard to hit upon the exact phrase that is applicable to a vessel in such circumstances. We did not consider any of the vessels eligible in all respects, and we only recommended the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" to be purchased till we could get others built.

147. Then the result of it is, that the "Atlantic," "Pacific," and "Sea Witch" are all ineligible, but the "Sea Witch," in your opinion, the most ineligible of the three? We have stated her to be the most ineligible.

148. Is that the case—you state that the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" are ineligible? But not so ineligible as the "Sea Witch."

149. You stated it, on the 8th March, as the unanimous opinion of the Board, that she is scarcely fit for the service? Yes.

150. Are you sure that the four gentlemen you have named, Captains Watson, Fox, Darley, and yourself, were present? Yes, quite certain.

151. You have stated that, as far as your knowledge went, the Board had no notification of the "Sea Witch" being directed to be placed in the Dry Dock? The Board had no notice of it till after it had been done and she was out again.

C. Smith,
Esq.

152. Do I understand you to say that my Minute, printed as No. 26, never reached the Pilot Board? Not so far as I am aware. If you will allow me, I will explain how I know it did not reach the Board until their meeting on the next Thursday.

26 June, 1862.

153. How often do they meet? Once a week. This had been after we had been at the Board, and the Chairman told us when we met again that he had acted upon it—that he had sent the Harbour Master to have her docked, but there were none of us called to see her in the dock, though other parties were taken to see her in place of us.

154. When a communication of that kind is sent to the Pilot Board, the necessary steps are taken on their own motion, are they not? On the motion of the Pilot Board—yes.

155. It is not customary for the Government to send down an additional notice, and ask the Board to go and look at the vessel? No; but it is the custom to call the Board together when anything is to be done in which they are interested.

156. Does not the omission to do that depend on some internal mismanagement in the Pilot Board Department itself—was it not by some faulty arrangements of the Board itself that the members were not invited to look at the vessel in dock after the notification to have her docked was sent down? No; the arrangement was that they should be called together when anything of consequence occurred, but in this instance they were not called together, for what reason I do not know.

157. As far as the Government were concerned they took the ordinary course? I do not know what steps the Government took.

158. They sent the Minute to the Board, which you say was acted on by the Chairman? Yes.

159. Then was it by neglect on the part of the Chairman that the Board were not apprised of what was being done? I do not know what instructions the Chairman may have had.

160. You have stated that there were only three members of the Pilot Board present besides the Chairman when the resolution was arrived at declining to fit out the "Sea Witch"? Yes.

161. Yourself, Captain Fox, and Captain Darley? Yes.

162. Would it not have been consistent with your position as members of the Pilot Board to have protested against the purchase of this vessel, leaving the responsibility in the proper quarter—with the Government? We had no opportunity of protesting—she was purchased before our knowledge.

163. I mean that you might have protested against her appropriation to the Pilot Service, instead of refusing to fit her out, throwing the responsibility from your own shoulders to those of the Government? That is what we intended to do by our letter to the Government.

164. If you intended to do it your intention was not carried into effect; instead of protesting did you not decline to fit her out? Certainly.

165. By Mr. Sadleir: You mean this as a protest? Yes.

166. By the Chairman: Did you consider that throwing the responsibility on the Government? Certainly.

167. By Mr. Weekes: Would it not have been throwing the responsibility on the Government if you had simply protested, without declining to fit out the vessel, leaving to the Government the responsibility of employing her in that service? We declined to identify ourselves with a vessel that we knew would prove a failure.

168. Supposing you had been acting as the head of the Pilot Establishment individually, would you have felt it your duty to have declined to carry out an instruction of the Government? Certainly I would, if I knew it would only prove a failure—I would decline to be identified with it.

169. You would not have communicated your views to the Government, and left the responsibility on their shoulders? We did communicate our views.

170. But you declined to carry out your instructions? We did, because we did not wish to be identified with a matter that we disapproved of.

171. Do you not think that in taking the course they did the Pilot Board were assuming the functions of the Government? No.

172. Who is to be master? The Government certainly. The Board had given the Government notice not to purchase the vessel, and I conceive they were quite right in declining to carry out a system that they knew must prove a failure.

173. The notice you allude to was contained in the words "scarcely fit for the service"? Yes.

174. That was the warning—you protested no further before the vessel was bought? We recommended the Government not to purchase.

175. Your protest is embraced in these two phrases—"not only overvalued, but scarcely fit for the service"? Yes, just so.

176. The "Pacific" having been previously rejected on somewhat similar grounds, that she was scarcely fit for the service? Not on similar grounds at all, because for the one the Government could get the same value, but for the other not half the money, if they were sold again.

177. I suppose the value of a vessel varies in the estimation of different people? Yes.

178. Did you happen to have heard that there was a party prepared to buy the "Sea Witch" at the price which the Government have given for her, with a reasonable addition for the alterations? No, I did not that I am aware of.

179. By Captain Moriarty: Have you ever seen any general instructions for the guidance of the Pilot Board, from the time you were first appointed a member of it up to the time you were superseded? No.

C. Smith,
Esq.
26 June, 1862.

180. Did you never hear that there were general instructions? No. I understood that the Pilot Board was constituted in this manner—that there was a letter from the Government requesting the members of the Steam Navigation Board to act as a Pilot Board also; but that was long before my time. I understood that was the only constitution that the Pilot Board had. I am only speaking of what I have been told.

181. You were left to your own surmises as to what your duties really were? In some measure.

182. By Mr Sadleir: You say that the questions referred to you were often referred to to other persons also? Yes.

183. Who are the other persons you allude to—persons connected with the Government? Yes, the Harbour Master very often undertakes to do things that are sent down to the Board; in fact he did it for a long time without consulting the Board at all. Latterly there has not been so much of that. Still in this instance the Harbour Master took other advice, but never came to any member of the Pilot Board; in fact we did not know the vessel had been in dock at all until the next Thursday, when this Minute came down to fit her out.

184. By Captain Moriarty: Is the Harbour Master under the Pilot Board? I believe very little under the Pilot Board; he reports to the Treasurer in all matters.

185. By Mr. Weekes: The Board only meets once a week? Yes.

186. Do you not consider it absolutely necessary that there should be some authority to act in any emergency? Certainly, such as a vessel getting ashore, or anything of that kind; but buying a pilot vessel is a different matter altogether; there was no such necessity for haste in that matter but that he could have communicated with us; twenty-four hours must have elapsed, at all events, before the docking could be done.

187. Do you mean to say that proper notification was not made to the Pilot Board of this vessel going into dock? I mean to say the three members now dismissed from the Board had no notice of it till the vessel was out of the dock and we met on the next Thursday.

188. Was the ordinary notice sent to the Board? I can only state what the Chairman said when we met.

189. By Mr. Wilson: Was there any necessity for the vessel being docked before the Board could have had cognizance of it? Certainly not.

190. By Captain Moriarty: Was the Harbour Master in any one way under the orders of the Pilot Board—subject to them in any way; are not his duties as Harbour Master clearly distinct from those which any Pilot Board can assume? They are distinct in some respects, not in others; for instance, he has got the looking after the pilots, and the people connected with the Light-houses; they are called before the Board for examination when anything occurs, and in that respect he may be said to be acting under the Board; but in other respects he acts independently of the Board: and in a case some time ago I recollect we had occasion to call the Minister's attention to the fact that Mr. Crook and the Board could not act together, and that he had better hand the matter over to one or the other, and we got a notice that that department was under Mr. Crook, and that we had no occasion to interfere.

191. By Mr. Weekes: Was that with respect to the boat-shed? Yes.

192. By Mr. Dick: You say you have been a number of years a shipmaster—how many years? Some fifteen years, I think.

193. You have also described this vessel, and stated that a vessel of that character would only be classed for seven years in England? Certainly not over that; I question if so much.

194. Are you a marine surveyor? No.

195. Have you ever had any experience of classing vessels in England? I have seen them classed there, I may say, and I know all the classes of vessels—what constitutes one class, and what constitutes another.

196. You know from having seen other vessels classed how this vessel would be classed? Yes; she would have been off the letter now at all events.

197. How long is it since you saw vessels classed in England? I have not been in England these thirty years, but I see vessels coming out every day and inspect them, and I know from Lloyd's rules how they must be constituted to obtain a certain class.

198. You state that you saw no written instructions when you became a member of the Pilot Board? Yes.

199. And you considered it your duty to make the service as efficient as possible, with as little expense to the public? Yes.

200. What further evidence can you give beyond what is contained in this Correspondence as to this vessel being unsuitable for a pilot boat? Captain Sustenance informed me that he was acting as pilot of her during her last voyage among the Islands, and that he nearly lost her on one of the Friendly Islands; she missed stays two or three times, and eventually he found that she refused stays so often in anything like a sea-way, that he gave up staying her at all, and took to wearing her round.

201. By Mr. Weekes: Is not that the customary way of treating fore-and-aft schooners—sailing them round? No, they stay them round.

202. By Mr. Dick: How long is it since Captain Sustenance told you so—since you left the Pilot Board? Yes.

203. Have you any other evidence? Only the reports I hear about town every day.

204. Will you look at the Minute No. 7, where you state that you do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible—will you state specifically what the Board did to arrive at that conclusion? They inspected the vessels offered.

205. Where were the vessels you inspected? This new vessel. I may state that our reason for not taking her was that she was too shallow; we considered she would not hold the wind.

206. What did you do before the 7th February, before you made that Minute. We have your opinion embodied here. I want to know what the Board did to justify that opinion? I presume you are all aware that the members of the Board were acquainted with all the vessels belonging to the harbour; you have only to name a vessel belonging to the harbour to me, and I can tell you her character pretty nearly, and everything about her, and so could the other members of the Board; therefore, when the Board were asked about a vessel they may perhaps not have required to go and look at her.

C. Smith,
Esq.

26 June, 1862.

207. Then you mean to say that when a vessel was named the Board immediately understood all about her without examination? Yes, if she was a vessel belonging to the port, a considerable time sailing out of it.

208. Did the Board know all these vessels that were offered? Certainly.

209. Do you speak for yourself? For myself, Captain Fox, and Captain Darley.

210. How do you know that Captain Fox knows all the vessels belonging to the port? For the simple reason that he is a surveyor, and knows all about them.

211. Is there only one surveyor? There are many; but he keeps a book, in which he enters all particulars respecting vessels, what has been done to them, and so on.

212. Do you know whether any of the Board had surveyed the "Pacific" at the time this report was made? I do not think they had specially surveyed her for this purpose, but I believe all knew the "Pacific."

213. Will you tell the Committee what you mean by being acquainted with her—what was the process of introduction? We knew she was a fast vessel, because we had opportunities of seeing how often she went up and down to Newcastle; we knew where she was built, the materials she was built of, and we had often seen her; therefore we could judge of her character.

214. Did you go on board her before you made the Minute of the 7th of February, 1862? Not at that time—not between these tenders coming in and making that Minute, but I had been often on board that vessel.

215. Am I right in understanding that, on the 7th February, when this Minute was made, the Board had not personally inspected these vessels, but came to this conclusion from their general knowledge of them? Just so.

216. When you purchase a vessel on your own account, do you buy her from repute or inspection? I buy her from both.

217. Do you ever conclude a bargain before you inspected her? No, I do not.

218. Do you not think it was your duty as a member of the Board to take the same precaution on behalf of the Government as for yourself? Certainly, I have always done so.

219. How was it that immediately the "Sea Witch" was reported upon, you altered your opinions, and recommended these tenders to be accepted? Immediately the "Sea Witch" was reported on?

220. Yes? I am not aware of that exactly. I believe it was after we found that £3,000 would not be taken for these vessels that we recommended that the "Sea Witch" should not be purchased.

221. In Minute No. 11, you recommend that the tender for the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" should be accepted, and you suggest that the vessels might be purchased for £3,000—that is on the 14th February? Yes.

222. On the 8th March, Minute No. 20, you recommend that vessels should be built? Yes.

223. And you there state that the "Sea Witch" is scarcely fit for the service? Yes.

224. How was it you did not make that recommendation for building before the "Sea Witch" was named? If you perceive, we wanted to advertise in the other Colonies; the system was required to be begun at once, and we wanted to advertise in the other Colonies, but the Treasurer would not allow us to do that; we were looking out for the best vessels we could get here, and we recommended the Government to purchase these two in the meantime, until others could be built, if they could be got for £3,000.

225. You state that the Treasurer would not allow you to advertise in the other Colonies? It appears he did not sanction it.

226. You say he would not allow it—how does that appear? It is in No. 8, and also in No. 3 he says there would be so much time lost.

227. When you state that he refused, you refer to that Minute? Yes.

228. Holding such a strong opinion about the "Sea Witch," and knowing as the Board did every vessel in the harbour, how was it you did not report before she was purchased that she would prove a failure? Because we never expected the Treasurer would purchase her after we recommended her not to be purchased.

229. I ask if you were so conversant with all the vessels, and knew she would prove a failure on the 21st March, how was it you did not represent it on the 8th? We recommended the Treasurer not to purchase her.

230. When you stated that she was overvalued and scarcely fit for the service, did you mean that she would prove a failure? We recommended the Treasurer not to purchase her, and never expected he would do it. It was the first time we were called upon to express that opinion.

231. Did the Board on the 8th March entertain the opinion that the "Sea Witch" would prove a failure? Yes.

232. Did they ever represent that to the Government, except as mentioned in the letter of the 8th March? We recommended the Government not to purchase her.

233. Did the Board ever state that opinion to the Government, except as stated in the letter of the 8th March? Yes, in No. 20; that is where we state it.

- C. Smith,
Esq.
26 June, 1862.
234. In the letter of the 21st March you state that the Board consider that the vessel will prove a failure, and you also state that that was the opinion of the Board on the 8th March—now I ask you whether you ever made any representation to the Government that the “Sea Witch” would prove a failure, except as mentioned in the letter of the 8th March? We gave no specific reasons, further than recommending the Government not to purchase her.
235. Did you make any other representation that she would prove a failure than is contained in your letter of 8th March, previous to her being bought? This is the only representation we made to the Government previous to her being bought.
236. At the date of that letter the Board were all of opinion that she would prove a failure? The Board were of opinion that she was not the proper vessel to be there.
237. Were you of opinion on the 8th March that she would prove a failure? We were quite satisfied she was not properly adapted to the service, neither were any of these other vessels; no vessel in the port was fully adapted to the service, and to get them adapted to it we were fully alive to the necessity of having them built.
238. I should esteem it a favour if you would answer me the question? ———
(Mr. Wilson objected to the mode of examination. Witness requested to withdraw. Committee deliberated. Witness recalled.)
239. On the 8th March, the date of the Minute No. 20, were the Board of opinion that the “Sea Witch” would prove a failure? Yes; that she would prove unfit for the service; it amounts to much the same thing.
240. I want an answer to my question whether she would prove a failure? Yes, the Board were quite of opinion that unless we had efficient vessels the service would not answer at all.
241. What was the first intimation the Board had of the “Sea Witch” being offered? I think when No. 18 was sent to the Board.
242. What drew from the Board their Minute of the 8th March, 1862? I think there must be something wanting here in the correspondence; there must have been some other letter that ought to go in here. I know we were two or three days overhauling the vessel. Captain Watson and I went down one day, and I went down myself another, and then Captains Darley and Fox were deputed to go and overhaul her, with carpenters, and then next morning this Minute was written; that was at an extra meeting of the Board.
243. At the time this letter of the 8th March was written, the Board had the letter of the 3rd March before them? Yes, I presume so; I have no doubt of it.
244. You then recommend that two vessels should be built, one in the Colony, and one elsewhere? Yes.
245. Supposing one had been built in the Colony, and one in England, one must have been finished a considerable time before the other? One would have been here before the other, I presume.
246. Supposing one vessel had been built in the Colony, and one had been ordered from home, would one vessel have been completed any time before the other? Not a great deal, I think. Probably they would do the work much quicker at home, and then the vessel would have the passage to make out here.
247. You have stated that the Colonial Treasurer was the first to suggest that the vessel should be surveyed? I did not state so—the “Sea Witch” do you mean?
248. All the vessels? I never said the Treasurer was the first to suggest it. The Treasurer did suggest to us that they should be surveyed.
249. You stated that the Board did not want any survey, but that they took it for granted —? We took it for granted that there would be a survey.
250. Do the Board usually take things of that kind for granted? Certainly; it is in the usual course of business.
251. If, at the date of the recommendation in No. 11, the Treasurer had accepted the tender, the matter would have been concluded without a survey, would it not? No, I do not know that it would; the Treasurer would only have concluded it on our being satisfied that the vessels were all right.
252. By that letter you recommended that the tenders for the “Pacific” and “Atlantic” should be accepted? For the £3,000.
253. It does not say for £3,000, but the same letter suggests that they might be got for £3,000? No doubt; and in the meantime we would look to them ourselves.
254. If a letter had been addressed from the Treasurer’s office, stating that £3,000 would be given, and the parties had accepted it, would not the contract have been concluded without a survey? No, it would not; for this reason, that we told the captain we would see them when their cargoes were out of them.
255. Is the captain the owner? We told him to tell the owner.
256. Who were the parties that tendered? Broomfield and Whittaker.
257. Were they the owners? They were representing the owner.
258. Can you tell us the name of the owner of the “Pacific”? Mr. Kelly.
259. And the “Atlantic”? The same.
260. Who was the owner of the “Sea Witch”? Captain Chapman.
261. Has Mr. Kelly been a long time in the Colony? Yes.
262. Was he personally known to the members of the Board? Yes.
263. You state that these vessels—the “Pacific” and “Atlantic”—have been a long time trading to Newcastle? Yes.
264. Have they been successful in their voyages? Yes, more so than most others.
265. I suppose the success of such vessels depends to a great extent upon the capabilities of the masters, as well as upon the qualities of the vessels? Yes.
266. Do you know the “H. M. Warfield”? Yes.
267. Is she not a most successful trader between here and Newcastle? No doubt.

268. Is not that owing to the perseverance of the captain? To his perseverance, and to the qualities of the vessel. That vessel is well suited to the trade.
269. A great deal does depend on the masters of the vessels? No doubt of it.
270. You know Captain Rountree? Yes.
271. Do you not think him competent to give an opinion? I believe he is competent to give an opinion.
272. Do you know Mr. Cuthbert? Yes.
273. He is a shipbuilder? Yes.
274. Is he a man whose opinions in such matters are entitled to weight? I think so, in some respects.
275. In judging of a pilot boat? I think he ought to have some idea of a vessel even for that, but I consider his opinion as regards the construction of a vessel ought to be very good.
276. I am speaking of his opinion as to the qualities of a pilot boat? I am not aware what practice he has had in that way.
277. Perhaps you will be good enough to state what practice you have had in that way? I have been master of vessels of various kinds—cutters and schooners, as well as others.
278. You think that the opinion of the Pilot Board is of greater weight than Mr. Cuthbert's? I consider the opinion of myself and the other two gentlemen who have been removed from the Pilot Board, as to the seagoing qualities of a vessel, is of more weight than that of Mr. Cuthbert.
279. Who is a practical shipbuilder? Who is a practical shipbuilder.
280. And of greater weight than that of Captain Rountree? Or Captain Rountree either. I consider that we have had more experience than either of them in sailing different classes of vessels.
281. Do you know anything of Captain Rountree's experience? I do not, further than what I know of him here.
282. He was commander of a vessel, was he not? I am not aware.
283. Did he not bring out the vessel that Captain M'Kinlay had to Launceston? I am not aware.
284. Does Captain Towns know anything about vessels? He ought to.
285. He is a large shipowner? Yes.
286. As large as yourself? Larger.
287. Has he had any experience of pilot boats? I am not aware.
288. Do you know Captain Livingstone? Yes.
289. Is his opinion of any weight? It depends a good deal on how he has to give his opinion; he is one of Captain Towns's captains.
290. Then the weight of Captain Towns is on his shoulders you think? No doubt of it.
291. Do you know Captain Vine Hall? Yes.
292. Did he command the "Great Eastern"? Yes.
293. Do you think his opinion is entitled to any weight? I do not know anything of his antecedents.
294. It does not follow because he commanded the "Great Eastern" that he knows anything of a pilot boat? Not necessarily.
295. Do you know Mr. Owen? I do not know him at all.
296. Do you know Captain Norie? Yes.
297. I think he is at present a member of the Board? Yes, so is Captain Hall.
298. Do you think Captain Norie's opinion entitled to any weight? I do not know his antecedents at all.
299. Was he not master of one of the P. and O. boats? Yes.
300. From your knowledge of the commanders in the P. and O. Service, are they not generally men of great experience? They are.
301. Are not the best men generally sought for as masters of the P. and O. steamers? Yes.
302. You state that you bought a vessel called the "Burnett" for £1,400? Yes.
303. What was her tonnage? 139 or 140.
304. And you recommended the purchase of the "Atlantic" of 71 tons for £2,000? Yes.
305. It does not follow that because a vessel is double the size she is double the value? No.
306. There are other things to be taken into consideration besides size? No doubt.
307. What was your object in telling the Committee that you bought such a large vessel for such a sum, if size is no guide to value? They were asking me as to my experience, and I stated that I had bought eight hundred or nine hundred tons of shipping during that month, and if I was competent to do that I ought to know something about vessels.
308. Then I was wrong in understanding that you gave that as an instance to show that this vessel was overvalued? I did not mention it for that purpose at all.
309. How did you arrive at the opinion that the "Sea Witch" was worth no more than £800, if you did not go on board? I did go on board.
310. When? At Campbell's Wharf.
311. Before the 8th March? Yes, decidedly. It was in consequence of what we got from the Treasurer that I went down to overhaul her.
312. Your opinion of her was, that you would not give more than £800 for her? Yes.
313. Do you know whether the vessel was offered for sale about that time? I am not aware.
314. Had she been in the market before? I am not aware.
315. Is it not the fact that vessels are much dearer now than they were two years ago? Yes, or twelve months ago.
316. When you stated you would not have given more than £800 for her, you also said you had no employment for her? Just so.

C. Smith,
Esq.

26 June, 1862

- C. Smith, Esq.
26 June, 1862.
317. Supposing you had had suitable employment for her? I would have considered then that £800 was a good, fair, full value for that vessel in the market.
318. What you stated was, that you would not give more than £800 for her; but that was when you had no employment for her. Is that all she would be worth to a person who had employment for her to which she was suited? Circumstances might arise when a man might give a little more than he otherwise would do, if he had a particular object to which she was well adapted.
319. In that case she would bring a higher price? Very little higher.
320. Do you believe a schooner is a proper vessel for a pilot boat? I believe a schooner is as proper as a cutter is.
321. There is no preference to be given to cutters? I think not.
322. Are pilot boats usually cutters or schooners in England? They are both; out of Liverpool, where they have got the best pilot boats in the world, some are cutters and some schooners.
323. What is about their tonnage? About 80 tons.
324. Can you tell the Committee what is their cost in building? About £22 a ton.
325. What would be the additional expense of bringing such a vessel out? £150 perhaps.
326. Wages and provisions included? Yes; not over £200.
327. Then a vessel of that class would cost about £2,000? They charge builders' measurement, which is about one-half more; a vessel of 80 tons register would measure 110 tons builders' measurement, and you would have to pay according to the long measurement.
328. Then a vessel like that would cost nearly £3,000, which was the whole sum voted for two vessels? No doubt.
329. Is it your opinion that the service can be carried out effectually with one vessel? No; I believe the service cannot be carried out at all unless there are two vessels.

SAUL SAMUEL, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Charles Smith, Esq., called in and further examined:—

- C. Smith, Esq.
7 June, 1862.
330. By Mr. Piddington: I believe you were recently one of the members of the Pilot Board? Yes.
331. How many members constitute that Board? There were six in all, but Captain Deloitte has been sick for some time and has not attended the Board.
332. Six, including the Chairman? Including the Chairman.
333. Are the members paid officers by salaries, or are they honorary officers? Only the Chairman is a Government officer; the others are paid by fees—one guinea each time.
334. Do you know what the average amount of fees per annum paid to each honorary Member of the Pilot Board amounts to? Somewhere about £50—£50 to £55—the Board meets usually once a week.
335. Are the members of the Pilot Board chiefly gentlemen connected with the mercantile marine of the port? Yes.
336. Have you any doubt whether the Board, of which you were a member, could give a sound opinion upon the fitness of vessels for the Pilot Service? I believe they are well qualified to give a sound opinion.
337. If the opinion of the Pilot Board upon a professional question is not authoritative, what utility is there in a Pilot Board for any purpose whatever? No utility whatever.
338. Turn to No. 20, if you please. When the Board sent their Minute to the Treasury, dated the 8th March, 1862, in which Minute they convey their opinion that the "Sea Witch" is not only overvalued but scarcely fit for the service, was the Board of opinion then that the vessel was unsuitable for a pilot boat? Yes.
339. Then the Board, I presume, at that time was of opinion that the "Sea Witch" would prove a failure in the Pilot Service? Certainly, we were of opinion that she would not act in bad weather.
340. I presume then that you did convey to the Treasurer, on the 8th March, your opinion that the "Sea Witch" would prove a failure, inasmuch as she was not fit for the service? Certainly.
341. Did the Board do everything in their power to protect the Government against purchasing the "Sea Witch"? Everything in their power.
342. Did the Board caution the Government against purchasing the "Sea Witch" upon the ground that she would be unfit? Yes.
343. Did the Board caution the Government against purchasing the "Sea Witch" on the ground that she was overvalued? Yes.
344. The Pilot Board, in their Minute of the 21st March, respectfully declined to fit out the "Sea Witch" for the Pilot Service—did they not? Yes.

345. When the Board declined to fit out the "Sea Witch," was it, in your opinion, an act of insubordination against the Government? Certainly not.
346. You were aware that no one member of the Board, except the Chairman, was a paid officer of the Government? Yes.
347. Was that one of your reasons for believing that the Board did not exhibit, in their Minute of 21st March, any symptoms of insubordination? That is one reason; there were other reasons. I consider that when I was appointed to the Board, I was appointed there to watch the interests of the port and the shipping, and of the public money also. I consider that we were called upon to see that anything we instituted was fit for the work, and established at the least cost possible to the country.
348. Do you believe that the tender of Mr. Chapman, to the Government, of the "Sea Witch," was referred to the Pilot Board for consideration—No. 18? I think it was.
349. In consequence of that reference did the Pilot Board do all you considered they could do, in order to convey to the Government their opinion as to the expediency of purchasing the "Sea Witch"? They did all they considered necessary to convey to the Government their opinion on it.
350. And you are of opinion that they conveyed to the Government, on the 8th March, their opinion that the vessel would prove a failure? Yes.
351. By Mr. Weekes: In what terms did you convey that? In the terms of this Minute, dated 8th March, signed "W. J. Wilshire, Secretary"—"as the 'Sea Witch' is not only "overvalued but scarcely fit for the service, they see no better course than to recommend "that the vessels for the service should be ordered to be built in England."
352. By Mr. Piddington: Was it your opinion that those terms—"not only overvalued but scarcely fit for the service"—were equivalent to a statement that the vessel would prove a failure? Yes.
353. By Mr. Wilson: By referring to No. 30, in these papers, you will see a Minute of Mr. Weekes, in which he requested that "the necessary steps should be taken for transferring this vessel to the Government, and fitting her out for the outside Pilot Service." You have already stated that you did not believe that she was fit for the Pilot Service, and it was in consequence of this opinion that the Minute of the 21st March, signed "W. J. Wilshire, Secretary," was written, in which the Pilot Board declined to fit this vessel out? Yes.
354. Were the Pilot Board at that time of opinion that no repairs that could be put on this vessel would fit her for the Pilot Service? Certainly.
355. By Mr. Weekes: Did they say so? It was said so at the Board, and as much was conveyed. That Minute of the 21st March states that we consider she will prove a failure in the service.
356. By Mr. Wilson: When you stated that she would prove a failure, that was taking into consideration any repairs it was possible to give her? Certainly.
357. By turning further over, to No. 39, to an opinion that appears to be given by "Thomas T. Rountree, Shipbuilder," and "William Livingstone, Practical Shipwright, and Commander 'Royal Saxon,'" you will see it stated that it is customary in England at times to put four feet of hanging keel on yachts of 80 to 100 tons measurement, for the purpose of going to windward. If such a plan had been adopted with regard to the "Sea Witch," would it have made her weatherly and fit for the service? It would not have made her fit for the service.
358. Would it have made her more weatherly? It would. I may know, and if the Committee wishes, I should have no objection to state to Mr. Sadleir, who understands these affairs, what would make that vessel a little better than she is.
359. Do you think that by putting four feet of hanging keel on the "Sea Witch" it would have made her fit for the Pilot Service? No, certainly not.
360. When you recommended to the Government to advertise in the other Colonies for vessels suitable for this Pilot Service, I believe you also recommended that the Pilot Boards of the various localities should be requested to inspect any vessels that might be offered, as to their capabilities for the service? Yes.
361. Did you think those Boards were capable of forming an opinion on the matter? Quite so.
362. Are you aware on whose recommendation, as it appears in the printed documents, the Government acted in purchasing this vessel? It would appear to have been done on Captain Towns's recommendation.
363. Did Captain Towns recommend the Government to have this vessel thoroughly inspected before she was bought? I am not aware.
364. Will you look at No. 22—the letter of Captain Towns recommending the "Sea Witch"—and say if you see there anything to that effect? Certainly not in this.
365. But you believe the members of the Pilot Boards in the various Colonies are equally as good judges as Captain Towns, individually, as to the capabilities of a vessel for the Pilot Service? Certainly.
366. When you recommended the Government to purchase the "Pacific" and "Atlantic," you did not expressly recommend that these vessels should be surveyed before acceptance of the tender? No.
367. Did you suppose the Government would do so as a matter of course? Yes, certainly.
368. As was done also in the case of the "Sea Witch," purchased on the recommendation of Captain Towns? Yes.
369. After the owner of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" had refused the offer of the Government, the Government even then might have advertised in the other Colonies? Certainly.
370. Are you aware that any vessels at all suitable have been offered to the Government for this this Pilot Service, from other Colonies, since that date? There has been a vessel offered from Adelaide; I am not aware whether she was suitable or not.

371. By Mr. Weekes: Offered to whom? To the Pilot Board.

372. The question was whether any had been offered to the Government? I am not aware whether the offer was transmitted to the Government.

373. By the Chairman: Do you know it of your own knowledge? Yes.

374. By Mr. Wilson: Consequently, if this plan had been adopted, even the offer of this vessel shows that there would have been a greater choice at the command of the Government? Yes.

375. Was there any very great necessity that this vessel should be bought on a particular day or a particular week? None.

376. Was there any absolute necessity for the Government immediately surveying the "Sea Witch," without the knowledge of the Pilot Board?

(Mr. Weekes objected to the Question.)

377. Were the members of the Pilot Board, or any of them, called to examine the "Sea Witch" in dock? None of them to my knowledge.

378. There was a certain intimation sent to the Chairman of the Pilot Board that she was to be docked and examined? Yes, it appears so.

379. Was there any necessity, on the part of the Government, to have the vessel docked before laying this document before the Pilot Board? I believe not.

380. The public service would not have been damaged if they had delayed that proceeding for a few days? I should think not.

381. When tenders were originally called for, I think by referring to No. 6 we will see that four vessels were offered to the Government? Yes.

382. And the Pilot Board in their communication to the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, dated 7th February, in speaking of these vessels, state that "they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible." Were they all equally ineligible? Certainly not.

383. Some of the vessels were less suitable than others? More ineligible than others.

384. Are you aware which of them the Pilot Board considered the most eligible? They considered the "Pacific" the most eligible.

385. Supposing there are two vessels of equal tonnage and both seaworthy, cannot one vessel be of much greater value in the market than the other? Yes, certainly.

386. Almost to double the value? Yes.

387. Turning to communication No. 25, signed "John Cuthbert," does he give any opinion as to the fitness of the "Sea Witch" for the pilot service? No.

388. What does he give an opinion about? He says—"I consider her to be a good substantial vessel for her age and build"—which may be said of any vessel in fact, taking her age and build into consideration.

389. Would you look upon that as being equivalent to saying a vessel was seaworthy? Yes, I should say, looking at the whole of this, that she is seaworthy, but not speaking as to her qualities for the service she is intended for.

390. Did the Pilot Board think she was seaworthy? Yes; I believe the vessel is seaworthy, that is, she is safe to go to sea.

391. Am I right in supposing that a pilot vessel is liable to be strained in heavy weather much more than an ordinary merchantman? Certainly. If you look at the specification from England, No. 58 of these papers, page 18, you will find that the pilot vessels built there are to be "thoroughly copper or Muntz metal fastened, and to use no treenails higher than the under part of wales"—that is, she was to be thoroughly bolted with copper all above the water. That is the same specification as for the Liverpool pilot boats at home.

392. Then by stating to any particular person the tonnage of a vessel and her seaworthiness, it is no indication of the value of that vessel? No; what she has got on board, and the condition she is in aloft, are all taken into consideration in the value of a vessel—sails, spars, rigging, everything belonging to the vessel.

393. I think you stated in a previous part of your evidence, that the "Sea Witch" was not worth more than £800 in your opinion? That is the outside value I should place upon her.

394. The Government stated to you that she was offered to them for £1,500? Yes.

395. If this vessel had been offered to the Government for £800, would it have been any inducement to the Pilot Board to have recommended her purchase for the pilot service? The Board would not have considered her fit for the service.

396. That would not have induced them to recommend her to the Government? Not for that service. In fact no vessel here was in all respects fit for the service, although we might have made a temporary shift with them.

397. You stated also, in a previous part of your evidence, that you had bought a vessel called the "Burnett," of 140 tons, for £1,400—was she seaworthy? Yes.

398. Was she comparatively in as good condition as the "Sea Witch"? Twice as good, both in build and materials.

399. And twice the size? Yes, more than twice the size.

400. And during the same month you purchased her for £1,400, while the Government gave £1,425 for the "Sea Witch"? Yes.

401. You also stated that in England a vessel of the build of the "Sea Witch" would not be classed on the first letter for more than seven years? The "Sea Witch" would not be classed on the first letter for so long as that, but certainly no American built vessel is classed over seven years—vessels much superior fastened to her in every respect.

402. Are you aware of her age now? She was built in 1854.

403. For how many years are the Liverpool pilot boats classed? These pilot boats are classed for fourteen years, and they may wear fourteen years more.
404. Consequently, even supposing the Government had given £2,400 for an English pilot boat, and £800 for the "Sea Witch," it would have been more profitable to the country to have bought the English vessel than the "Sea Witch"? No doubt of it whatever.
405. With regard to this Pilot Service, do you think that if properly built efficient boats were got, they could, not in the severest gales that blow here but in ordinary gales, do their duty outside the Heads? No doubt of it; but to do so you must have really good vessels.
406. Are there some gales that blow outside here so severe that they would have to run for shelter? I think there are; it would be advisable to run in in some gales.
407. By Mr. Weekes: Even the best vessels? Even the best vessels. If they staid out they could not put a pilot on board a ship.
408. By Mr. Wilson: In ordinary gales they could do their duty outside the Heads? Yes.
409. Such a gale as blew last week, for instance? Decidedly, they should be out in it.
410. By Mr. Saddleir: Can you inform us what is the breadth and length of this vessel, the "Sea Witch"? I cannot exactly say from memory; I think she is about sixty feet long, with a good beam, but what it is I could not state.
411. You do not know the proportions? No, I do not know the exact proportions. So near as I can recollect her beam is a little less than one-third her length.
412. Do you think such a proportion is suited for working a vessel to windward in a heavy sea? Certainly not.
413. Do you think she would be likely to stay in a heavy sea with such proportions? I do not think she can ever be made to stay in a heavy sea.
414. Do you think shifting her masts in any way would make her stay in a heavy sea? No.
415. What can be done to improve her in that respect? They might make her better, but they can never make her suitable for the Pilot Service.
416. Do you mean by cutting her in two, and so lengthening her? No, because she has got a shallow bottom already.
417. She will not stay in a heavy sea because she has got too flat a bottom? No.
418. What would be the effect of putting on four feet of hanging keel, which is said to be not unusual in England? That is put on flat-bottomed vessels to make them hold a better wind.
419. Would that make her stay better? It would help a little.
420. And make her more weatherly? It would make her more weatherly.
421. Would it make her more crank or more stable in the water? It would give her rather more stability in the water, but she has got too much stability now in fact, that is, she is too stiff in the water. The ballast is put into her so as to get her down in the water and to try to make her hold the wind, and it makes her too stiff, so that she is very uncomfortable, no doubt.
422. Turning to Captain Towns's letter, he says she is a "perfect model"—do you think she is a perfect model? For a bar harbour.
423. Do you consider she is a "perfect model of what we require" as a pilot boat? Certainly not; she is about the worst class of vessel that can be found.
424. She is spoken of in another document as a good vessel for her construction and age? Yes, she is in good condition for her class and age.
425. You consider her seaworthy? Yes.
426. Do you not consider that a vessel that might be a complete lubberly vessel might still be seaworthy? Yes, certainly.
427. Mere seaworthiness does not make her fit for a pilot boat? No.
428. Have you seen the pilot boats in the Channel and off Liverpool? Yes.
429. They can remain at sea in any weather? Yes; in fact the Liverpool pilot boats never come in through stress of weather.
430. Do you consider that a pilot boat should remain out in any weather off this coast? I do not think she should in all weathers; not that she would not be quite safe at sea, but she might not be able to lower her boat and put a man on board a vessel in a very heavy gale of wind.
431. Would she be able to keep off the coast? Certainly, if she was a proper vessel.
432. This vessel—the "Sea Witch" I mean? Certainly not; I consider her a dangerous vessel on a lee shore in a breeze of wind.
433. Do you consider that your letter to Mr. Weekes of the 21st March, No. 31, is a resignation? No, I do not consider it a resignation.
434. What do you consider it to be—a remonstrance, or what? I consider it a remonstrance with the Minister.
435. In No. 33, I think, you deny its being a resignation—in the latter part of it? Yes.
436. Therefore this letter was not a resignation? No.
437. You complain in No. 33 of other persons interfering with you, and particularly that, in this instance, the Harbour Master was employed to commence operations without the knowledge of the Board at all? Yes.
438. You suppose the Board ought to have been consulted before the Harbour Master, finally? Certainly.
439. He is not connected with the Board at all? He is not connected with it—he is no member of the Board.
440. Still he was called in without your knowledge? Without our knowledge certainly.
441. By the Chairman: No. 26, a Minute addressed to the Pilot Board, I think you state you never saw, and it was your impression that it was never sent to the Pilot Board? The Chairman communicated at our next meeting, a week after, that this Minute had been sent down,

C. Smith,
Esq.

27 June, 1862.

- C. Smith, Esq.
27 June, 1862.
- down, if I recollect right, with instructions to the Harbour Master to put the vessel in dock, but the three petitioners knew nothing of it.
442. Now, look at No. 23, a Minute signed "E. C. W., 13 March, 1862."—"The Shipwright Surveyor should be requested to inspect this vessel forthwith, and report on her condition. It is so desirable to commence this system, that should the report warrant it the vessel should be bought, and I am informed that an offer of £1,400 would be accepted." That Minute does not appear to be addressed to any one. Are you aware whether it came to the Pilot Board? I am not aware of it.
443. Did you ever see it? I never saw it.
444. Was it your desire, in taking the course you did with regard to this vessel, that the Government should not pay more for her than private individuals would have to pay? Yes; and not only that, but after one or two consultations we were of opinion that to attempt the service with such a vessel as this would be only to do away with it altogether; in fact we felt convinced it would not answer with such a vessel as this.
445. You were a member of the Steam Navigation Board as well as the Pilot Board? Yes, I am still a member of the Steam Navigation Board.
446. By Mr. Weekes: Has not Captain Watson, a member of the Pilot Board, always approved of the "Sea Witch"? No, he was at the Board when that Minute No. 20 was written, and he was a consenting party; in fact we were quite unanimous to recommend the Government not to purchase her.
447. He took the same view as the other members of the Board? Yes.
448. Are you quite sure of that? Quite certain.
449. Do you consider the Pilot Board a supreme authority, independent of both Government and Parliament, in matters relating to its own office? I do not.
450. To whom is it responsible? I think we were responsible to the country.
451. Is there no more direct responsibility than is implied in the vague term "responsible to the country,"—are they not in fact responsible to the Government of the country, which in fact represents the country? No doubt it represents the country; but I consider that if I initiate a thing and make a failure, I have got a character to lose independently of the Government.
452. You considered yourself responsible, as a member of the Pilot Board, to the Government? No doubt.
453. Is it not proper that where there is responsibility there should also be power? No doubt.
454. Does not the power reside with the Government of objecting to the recommendations of the Pilot Board? Yes; but I do not think it very properly rests with the Government to initiate that which the Pilot Board consider unfit for a service in its own department.
455. Supposing the Government happen to take a view differing, in whatever matter it might be, from the view of the Pilot Board, should not the Government have the power of carrying out their own views? They should have the power of carrying out their own views, but they ought not to request the Board to carry those views out with materials that the Board are satisfied are incompetent for the purpose.
456. Then would not the business of the country come to a dead lock, it being the particular province of the Board to fit out vessels for this service, if they refuse to carry out the instructions of the Government? Certainly not.
457. In No. 31 the Board state, that "if they are qualified to hold seats at the Pilot Board, they must certainly be competent to give an opinion on the fitness of a pilot boat; but if the Government think otherwise, it were better that the services of the Pilot Board should be dispensed with"—Do you not consider that a contingent resignation in the way you put it,—if the Government thought the Board not competent to select a pilot boat it would be better their services should be dispensed with? No doubt they ought to have dismissed us if that was their opinion.
458. Then it was a resignation contingent on the Government arriving at the opinion that the Board was not competent? Just so.
459. You state that you would not like to have given more than £800 for the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
460. Would you have been prepared to have given £1,200 for the "Pacific"? Somewhere about that.
461. Would you have been prepared to have given £2,000 for the "Atlantic"? Yes, she would have brought nearly that in the market, I should think.
462. Are you aware whether these vessels are treenailed not higher than the wales—one of the qualifications you have stated in the home-made boats? I know that they are, but we only looked on these vessels as temporary.
463. They are treenailed in the wales, as in the case of the "Sea Witch"? They are.
464. And in that respect the "Atlantic," "Pacific," and "Sea Witch" are of the same construction? Yes.
465. Do you know of your own knowledge whether either of those vessels has any iron fastenings? They have got iron fastenings in several places.
466. Can you state where? I could not state exactly all the places where they are iron-fastened.
467. Can you state some? Yes, they are iron-fastened in their topsides.
468. Are their centre fastenings iron? That I am not aware of.
469. Then you do not know whether they are not in the same condition, so far as iron fastenings are concerned, as the "Sea Witch"? No, I do not.
470. In answer to Dr. Wilson's question, you stated that the Government had bought the "Sea Witch" on the recommendation of Captain Towns? Yes, it appears so from the papers.
- 471.

471. I suppose you did not mean to convey that they took no other steps to ascertain her condition than the letter of Captain Towns? I am not aware what steps they took, as I have already stated. C. Smith,
Esq.
472. Will you look to No. 23, a Minute of mine, requiring the Shipwright Surveyor to report on her condition, and afterwards you will find that Nos. 24 and 25 are the reports of Mr. Cuthbert, the Shipwright Surveyor of the Government, as to her condition, which preceded her purchase? I have already stated that this No. 23 I was not cognizant of. 27 June, 1862.
473. It would appear, from the question Dr. Wilson asked you, and your reply, that the Government took no steps but the recommendation of Captain Towns; these documents I refer to show that the Government had other reports on her condition? Yes.
474. You state that even the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" were only proposed to be bought as a temporary shift? Yes.
475. Is £2,000 a price you could advise the Government to give as a temporary shift? Yes, because I considered that the Government would get nearly that for the vessel when others were obtained.
476. You gave £1,400 for the "Burnett"? Yes.
477. What did you say was her tonnage? 140 tons.
478. That is twice the tonnage of the "Atlantic," a 71-ton vessel, for which you advised the Government to give £2,000? Yes.
479. You are, I believe, a strong advocate, and have reported so several times, of this outside Pilot Service? Well, I have reported, when I was examined before the former Board some four or five years ago, when Captain Lamb was Chairman, in 1857, that the pilots as we formerly had them always worked best here, but that I thought outside pilot vessels would be far preferable to the way in which they are managed now.
480. Has the pilot system improved since that examination in 1857? Not a great deal; they have got a little better certainly.
481. Do you remember recommending at that period that the whole of the then pilots should be dismissed? Yes, I thought that was the best way.
482. You stated that the gale of Sunday night and Monday was of a very ordinary character? It was what I would term a strong double-reefed topsail breeze.
483. Are you aware that some of the most powerful steamers in the harbour made an attempt for a considerable time to go through the Heads against that gale of wind, and were driven back? I am not aware of it.
484. You were not aware that that appeared in the papers of the day as an event which took place; that after trying in vain to stem the wind and sea on those days, they were obliged to put back to the wharf in Sydney? I certainly never heard of it before.
485. By Mr. Wilson: Do the captains of steamers in general make many and strenuous attempts to get out, or do they make up their minds at once, from the appearance of things, whether it will be prudent to go out in a gale of wind? They generally make up their minds at once. If they are going to Wollongong, or other places on the coast, they make up their minds not to start if there is a good deal of wind and sea, because it would be difficult to get in there.
486. By the Chairman: Are marine surveyors usually old captains in the Merchant Service? Generally so.
487. By Mr. Piddington: Are you of opinion that every Government Board ought to be subordinate to the Government? Certainly.
488. If the Pilot Board reported to the Minister on a purely professional question, ought their opinion to be rejected by the Minister? I think not.
489. By Mr. Dickson: You have stated that the gale on Sunday night was an ordinary double-reefed topsail breeze? I should think so; I was not down at the Heads myself.
490. You know the Hunter River boats? Yes.
491. Would an ordinary double-reefed topsail breeze prevent their going out? Not unless there was a great deal of sea.
492. You know the steamer Telegraph? Yes.
493. Would such a breeze as you speak of prevent her going to the northward? Certainly not.
494. By Mr. Sadleir: In No. 33 the Board state, that in "a Minute of the Honorable the Treasurer, dated 27 September, 1860, that Minister informs the Board, that 'to protect the public expenditure is the first duty of every department'"—do you consider that in No. 31 you were carrying out that duty and protecting the public expenditure? Certainly.
495. Was it with that object you wrote that letter, No. 31? Yes.
496. You also allude to the interference of the Harbour Master without the knowledge of the Board—do you consider that that interference virtually superseded you as a Board? Yes, in many respects.
497. By Mr. Weekes: A Board that meets only once a week cannot give daily superintendence? No, but in any case of emergency we were generally to be found.
498. In ordinary matters? Not in ordinary matters.
499. By the Chairman: You have been called together more than once a week? Yes; when there is any urgent business it is the duty of the Secretary to call the Board together.
500. By Mr. Piddington: Is there anything to prevent the Board being called together oftener than once a week? Nothing.
501. By Mr. Sadleir: You specify this case of the "Sea Witch" particularly, as an instance in which the interference you complain of took place? Yes.
502. By the Chairman: Now I desire to call your attention to the other allegations in your petition. The last paragraph of the petition is this:—"Your petitioners, therefore, feeling that they would have been morally guilty of a breach of trust to the public if they had acted

- C. Smith,
Esq.
27 June, 1862.
- “acted otherwise than they did, and as they have suffered this indignity by resisting a practice which they believe, if permitted to be continued, will prove highly detrimental to the best interests of the country, as has already occurred by the erection of the Light-house near Jervis Bay, the appointment of pilots and lightkeepers, and other matters, on which the advice of your petitioners has been ignored—pray,” &c. Now, if I understand that allegation correctly, it is, that in other instances as well as this the public interest has suffered in consequence of the advice of the Pilot Board having been ignored—perhaps you will state, as shortly as you can, in what way your advice on other occasions has been ignored? The first case I shall take is the Jervis Bay Light-house. When I found that our late Chairman, Captain Browne, and another member of the Board, who were in the habit of obtaining the views of the Minister somewhere away from the Board, and bringing them there to be paraded before us, were so determined, in opposition to the majority of the Board, to place the Light-house on a certain point of the coast —
503. By Mr. Weekes: Are not all the facts you are now about to state already given in evidence and printed? Some of them; but I wish to bring forward some other facts that have not yet been printed. I got a party to call on the Treasurer, and represent the matter fully to him —
504. By the Chairman: You had better mention his name? Captain Williamson. This induced the Treasurer’s note to the Board, of the 26th July, 1859, wherein he quotes almost my own words—that the light ought to be placed where the greatest benefit can be derived from it. Captain Williamson pointed out to Mr. Weekes that certain parties were against the matter, and that he ought to take evidence on the subject, which would be so preponderating —
505. By Mr. Weekes: You say Captain Williamson told you that he told me something? Just so.
506. That is mere hearsay evidence? I have merely to say, that had these suggestions been carried out they would have saved the country some £5,000 or £6,000.
507. By Mr. Piddington: In what document are these suggestions contained—did you convey these suggestions in some document on the part of the Pilot Board? No; I alluded to the note from the Treasurer, dated 26th July, 1859, wherein he quotes almost my own words. Perhaps some member here recollects that there was an erasure in one of our Minutes, that a great deal was said about, and I wish to point out that this note from Mr. Weekes was after that erasure; so that he must have had the full facts before him.
508. By Mr. Weekes: What do you mean by the full facts? The fact that the majority of the Pilot Board were against the Light-house being erected there.
509. By the Chairman: Where is the letter to which you refer? It is in the “Correspondence, &c., connected with the erection of the Light-house near Jervis Bay,” ordered to be printed, 23 October, 1860.
510. Which is the letter to which you refer that the erasure was in? It is dated 4th July, 1859.
511. What was the erasure? “And they therefore approve of the tower being erected as recommended by you.” That our Chairman put in without the approval of the Board, and we made him erase it from the Minute book, and we understood that the alteration had been communicated to the Treasurer; but it never was.
512. By Mr. Weekes: Is it not proved by the evidence before the Committee on the subject of the Light-house at Jervis Bay, that the fact of the erasure was never communicated to the Government? Yes, I believe it is.
513. Therefore the Government received a Minute from the Pilot Board which was not in fact the opinion of the Board? No doubt.
514. And when the Pilot Board ascertained the error they never advised the Government of it? They ordered it to be advised.
515. They never did advise the Government of it? So it has been said. I wish to point out that the site of the light had not then been fixed according to your note.
516. By Mr. Piddington: Did the Board direct the Chairman to advise the Government of their opinion? Yes.
517. By Mr. Weekes: Will you refer to the evidence on the Jervis Bay Light-house, and point out where that statement appears? I do not know that it appears in the evidence.
518. By the Chairman: Look at the letter dated 30 July, 1859, signed “W. J. Wilshire, Secretary”? Yes, here is a letter from the Board, dated 30 July, four days after the Treasurer’s note to us—you will see that then we compelled the Chairman to report to the Treasurer the real facts as to our opinions.
519. That was subsequent to the Minute in which the erasure was made? Yes.
520. Is the Light-house on the spot indicated by the Board there? No, it is not on that spot.
521. By Mr. Weekes: The difference of opinion as to the position of the Light-house, referred to in this communication of the Board, was, whether it should be to the southward or the northward of Jervis Bay; not as between any one point on Cape St. George and another point of Cape St. George, but between Cape St. George and Point Perpendicular or Crocodile Head? Just so.
522. Are you aware that the site to the southward of Jervis Bay, to erect the Light-house upon, was the recommendation appointed from all the Colonies to investigate the question of Light-houses for all the Australian Coasts? It was the recommendation of that Commission, but the evidence, if it is analyzed, will not bear it out.
523. Are you aware, that out of eighteen witnesses examined before that Commission, fourteen are in favour of its being to the southward of Jervis Bay, and four only to its being to the northward? No, that is not the fact.

524. Does it not appear from the evidence of your late Chairman, Captain Browne, before the Committee on the Light-house at Jervis Bay, that the following witnesses, examined before the Light-house Commission at Melbourne, gave their evidence in favour of the Light-house being placed at Cape St. George, viz.:—R. G. Gilmore, of the "Wonga Wonga"; W. H. Saunders, of the "Royal Shepherd"; Arthur Devlin, late Master Mariner; R. T. Moodie, of the "City of Sydney"; Joseph Walsh, of the schooner "Eagle"; Charles Ferguson, Harbour Master, Melbourne; C. Pasco, R.N., late of H.M.S. "Beagle"; Thomas Wing, of the "Pioneer"; George Kelly, of the "Monarch"; Francis Rozea, of the "Wanderer"; William Watts, of the "London"; G. V. Bentley, of the "City of Hobart"; George Gilmore, of the "Telegraph"; Bloomfield Douglas, Master of Trinity House, Adelaide, and a Member of the Commission; and that only four witnesses were in favour of Point Perpendicular, viz.:—James Rusden, R.N., of H.M.S. "Electra"; Henry Tulloch, of the "Water Lily"; William Bell, of the "Yarra Yarra"; and Colin Brown, no vessel? I have perused the evidence that was given before the Commission, and I am aware that is not the fact that is stated there.

C. Smith,
Esq.
27 June, 1862.

525. By the Chairman: You mean that in his evidence before the Committee on the Light-house at Jervis Bay, Captain Browne has not stated correctly what the evidence before the Light-house Commission that sat at Melbourne discloses? Yes.

526. By Mr. Weekes: Was it not the recommendation of the Light-house Commission that it should be at Cape St. George? Yes.

527. And they examined on the occasion a large number of competent witnesses? No doubt; but their evidence does not point to Cape St. George, when it comes to be analyzed.

528. Your complaint is, that the advice of four members of the Pilot Board not being taken caused the Light-house to be erected in the wrong place? Yes.

529. Was not the question submitted to you then whether the Light-house should be on the Cape St. George side or on Crocodile Head? No, it was not, only by your note.

530. That is what I mean? I wish to refer to where the erasure is made, some few days before, when the Chairman brought it before us, whether the Light-house should be on one of two sites marked S and T; he would not allow us to go into any other question.

531. Whatever took place between the Board and their Chairman the Government could have nothing to do with? This is what I wished the Committee to take most notice of, that our Chairman, and a certain other member, who got their cue I presume from the Minister, would come down to us and try to warp our judgments.

532. On what question? On this question.

533. By the Chairman: If you will look at the letter of the 30th July, 1859, you will see a Minute at the bottom of it:—"I have consulted Commodore Loring upon this subject, and he is clearly of opinion that the best site for the Light-house is that originally proposed, namely, Cape St. George. W. D., 3 Aug., '59." Was that the late Governor General, Sir William Denison? Yes.

534. Whereabouts is the Light-house placed on the Cape? It is not placed on the Cape at all.

535. Where was it intended to be placed? It was presumed it was to be placed on Cape St. George.

536. Cape St. George is not the place you recommend? No.

537. By Mr. Weekes: You recommend no place to the southward? No.

538. My Minute requested your report whether it should be placed to the southward or the northward? Yes.

539. By the Chairman: Are you aware of anything that has occurred since the erection of the Light-house respecting its removal? Yes, the majority of this Board also recommended its not being lighted.

540. Are you aware that it is about to be removed, or that it has been recommended to be removed? I have heard so.

541. Is it proposed, are you aware, to remove it to the site you originally recommended? That I am not aware of.

542. By Mr. Weekes: Your recommendation being Crocodile Head or Point Perpendicular? Crocodile Head.

543. By Mr. Piddington: In the Minute signed "E. C. W., 26 July, 1859," the first paragraph is:—"Before the site for the Light-house about to be erected at Jervis Bay is finally determined upon, I should be glad to be favoured by the Pilot Board with their views as to the most suitable locality on which the light should be placed." I ask you whether, on the strength of that paragraph, you are of opinion that the Pilot Board was authorized to give an opinion to the Minister with regard to the most suitable locality for the Light-house? Yes.

544. There was a Light-house Commission sitting at Melbourne, was there not? Some two or three years before that.

545. Was the Pilot Board in Sydney in any way subordinate to the Light-house Commission at Melbourne? Not that I am aware of.

546. At the time this Minute was referred to the Pilot Board, was the Board fully authorized to give an opinion with regard to the position of the Light-house? Yes, I believe so.

547. Did the Pilot Board state, in any Minute addressed to the Government, that they were of opinion that a certain spot was the most eligible site for the erection of the Light-house? Yes, in their Minute of 30th July, 1859.

548. By Mr. Weekes: Do they not state in that Minute the four members of the Board are in favour of Crocodile Head, and two against it, preferring Cape St. George? Yes.

549. By Mr. Piddington: Is it not the practice in the Pilot Board, as in others, that the voice of the majority is the authoritative mode of arriving at the opinion of the Board? Yes.

C. Smith,
Esq.
27 June, 1862.

550. Is not that the invariable rule with regard to all Boards? Yes, wherever I have acted.
551. By Mr. Weekes: Still, it is the fact that this particular Minute does make that distinction, that four were for it and two against it? Yes.
552. By Mr. Piddington: Does that in any way invalidate the authority of that Minute? I should think not.
553. Who was Chairman of the Pilot Board on the 30th July, 1859? Captain Browne.
554. Refer, if you please, to page 8 of the Evidence before the Committee on the Light-house at Jervis Bay, and to question 136. That question was put to Captain Browne, who was then under examination, and you will see, by the answer to it, that Captain Browne then condemned the position of the Light-house? Yes.
555. You cannot explain how it was that the condemnation of the Pilot Board, the majority, which Captain Browne afterwards concurred in by the answer to that question, was not conveyed to the Government? No.
556. Was the Pilot Board in any way restricted by the Government to a consideration of only two points as suitable sites for a Light-house? Yes; through the Chairman they were.
557. Do you think that was justifiable on the part of the Government? I think not.
558. Then the Pilot Board in fact were restricted by the Government to the consideration whether one or other of two points was the most eligible for the Light-house? Yes; we were called upon to decide which of the two points was the most eligible, according to a plan before us.
559. Under that restricted form of inquiry did the Pilot Board arrive at a decision with respect to the suitability of either? Yes; that neither of them was eligible.
560. Did they arrive at any decision as to whether either of these two points was the more eligible? Yes; they arrived at a decision that one was more eligible than the other.
561. Was that decision arrived at under the restrictions imposed by the Government on the Board? Imposed by the Government through the Chairman.
562. By Mr. Weekes: Are you speaking of your own knowledge that the Government directed the Chairman to take a certain course?—(Mr. Piddington: With regard to the sites)—I do not know with regard to the sites, but he spoke it so authoritatively that we thought he was directed so by the Government.
563. By Mr. Piddington: Had you not authorized plans laid before you on which only these two sites, S and T, were shown? Yes.
564. And were not those plans authorized by the signature of Mr. Millington, an officer of the Government? Yes.
565. Seeing that they had these plans before them, had the Board any reason to doubt that restriction in question was imposed by the authority of the Government? None whatever.
566. Was the Pilot Board then in a position to give the Government the benefit of their views as to the proper position for the Light-house? We were not.
567. By the Chairman: The majority of the Pilot Board on that occasion consisted of Captains Deloitte, Smith, Darley, and Fox? Yes.
568. Are three of them the petitioners at present? Yes.
569. By Mr. Wilson: It is stated in the evidence of Captain Browne, before the Committee, that fourteen witnesses examined by the Light-house Commission at Melbourne, were in favour of Cape St. George, and only four in favour of Point Perpendicular? Yes; but, as I have stated, that is not borne out by the facts.
570. Who was the Commissioner sent to Melbourne on behalf of this Colony? Captain Browne.
571. Are you aware whether Captain Browne had very strong personal views on this matter himself? He had very strong personal views on it.
572. Arising from —? Arising from his getting his ship embayed to the southward of Jervis Bay and nearly lost there; and he wanted the light put on Cape St. George in order to guard against that danger.
573. By Mr. Weekes: Is not that a thing likely to make a strong impression on a man's mind? No doubt; but if he had been as often along the coast as I have been he would find there was one to the northward equally dangerous as that.
574. By Mr. Wilson: Are you under the impression that Captain Browne was in this false position on account of any strong current? Certainly not. The fact is, the coast was wrongly laid down, till Captain Stokes ran along it; and it was that misled him.
575. By Mr. Piddington: Was Captain Browne in this dangerous position previous to the Admiralty Chart being constructed? Yes, previous to Captain Stokes correcting it.
576. By Mr. Weekes: As a fact, have not vessels been wrecked there? Yes, and to the northward also.
577. By Mr. Piddington: Would not the most eastern point of Jervis Bay be the best point for the erection of a Light-house, with a view to the preservation of ships from the dangers of Wreck Bay? Yes, that is decidedly my opinion.
578. By Mr. Wilson: And also for the small harbours to the north? Yes.
579. By Mr. Piddington: If the Light-house were erected at Crocodile Head, is there not high land intervening between Crocodile Head and Wreck Bay that would intercept the light? Yes, when you are down in the bottom of the bay it would intercept it; but from a light on Crocodile Head you would see further into the bay than from where the light is now placed.
580. If there is high land intervening between Crocodile Head and Wreck Bay, would not the light be useless with regard to warning the mariner against the dangers of Wreck Bay? No, because he would catch the light before he ran into the bay.
581. By Mr. Weekes: Will you turn to a Minute of the Pilot Board of the 4th July, 1859—does it state there that the Board “approve of the tower being erected as recommended mended by you"? Yes, it states that there; that is the erasure that so much has been said about, and which was rectified by our Minute of the 30th July.

582. By Mr. Piddington: Then your Minute of 30th July contradicts, to some extent, the one of the 4th July? Yes.

583. By the Chairman: Was it intended to correct that Minute? Yes.

584. At that time the Light-house had not been erected? No, not for a long time after.

585. By Mr. Weekes: Had the Light-house been erected on Cape St George, which it is not, would it not have been in conformity with the evidence of the majority of witnesses examined by the Light-house Commission at Melbourne? I have already stated that the majority is not in favour of that site, when the evidence comes to be examined.

586. Are you prepared to say that the majority are against putting it there? I mean to say that, when you come to analyze the evidence, the preponderance would be against it, because those in favour of it give reasons that would not bear out their opinion, on looking at the land.

587. They may have been a set of ignorant witnesses—is that what you imply? Some of them were very good witnesses.

588. At all events the recommendation of the Report was in favour of having it to the southward in preference to the northward? Yes.

589. Your recommendation was to the effect that it should be to the northward? Yes.

590. Everybody, I believe, condemns its present position, whether they advocate its being placed to the southward or to the northward of Jervis Bay? No doubt of it.

591. By some error it was placed on a spot that nobody intended? No doubt of it.

592. By the Chairman: Did the Government act on the advice of the Commission, or did they refer the matter entirely to the Pilot Board? They referred the matter entirely to us, according to the Treasurer's Minute of the 26th July, 1859.

593. Did they on that occasion take the advice of any one totally unconnected with the Government? I see by one of the Minutes here, that the advice of Commodore Loring was taken.

594. That advice was in opposition to the advice of a majority of the Board? Yes.

595. Is the light now presumed to be on Cape St. George? No, it is not presumed to be there.

596. When the Light-house was ordered to be erected by the Government, was it intended to be on Cape St. George? Yes, I believe it was.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Henry Thomas Fox called in and examined:—

597. By the Chairman: You were, I believe, lately a member of the Pilot Board of Sydney? Yes.

598. And are one of the petitioners? Yes.

599. Will you be kind enough to state whether you were a member of the Pilot Board in January last? I was.

600. How long have you been a member of the Pilot Board? Rather more than three years—in March, 1859, I was appointed.

601. Will you state what you considered to be your particular duties as a member of the Pilot Board? To advise the Government on matters appertaining to the Pilot Service, to Light-houses, and matters of that sort generally, I imagine.

602. By Captain Moriarty: You "imagine" so? Yes; I had no written instructions.

603. By the Chairman: What were the duties you were generally called upon to exercise? The appointment of pilots, and the granting of certificates to shipmasters in the Colonial trade who wished to be exempted from the obligation to take pilots—I think the latter took up most of our time, and gave us the greatest amount of work; the establishment of Light-houses, and the business of the Pilot Service generally: these are the principal matters that occur to me now.

604. What has been your experience in relation to nautical matters? I was at sea twenty-one years; I was master of vessels sailing out of Sydney twelve years; I have been a great deal in small vessels.

605. By Mr. Wilson: Fore-and-aft vessels? In fore-and-aft vessels a good deal—schooners (not what are exactly understood as fore-and-aft vessels), but topsail schooners.

606. By the Chairman: Are you connected with marine surveying in any way? Yes; I have been a surveyor of shipping in Sydney eight years, five of which I have been in connection with the Australian General Assurance Company.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

607. Do you recollect the Colonial Treasurer first calling the attention of the Pilot Board—there is the Correspondence before you—to the necessity of taking measures for the securing of vessels for the outside Pilot Service? Yes; I think it is No. 1 of this Correspondence. I recollect the Minute very well.

608. In consequence of that Minute, addressed to the Pilot Board, what steps were taken for carrying out the wishes of the Colonial Treasurer? The next step is No. 2, in which the Secretary writes—"In compliance with the Honorable the Treasurer's Minute, the Board beg "to submit the accompanying draft advertisement for tenders for two vessels for the service, "and which they recommend should be inserted in the daily papers here, and at Melbourne, "Hobart Town, and Auckland. The Board also report, as requested, that this is the first "step taken in the matter."

609. What was done next? The draft advertisement which follows was sent to the Treasury, and upon that a Minute came back from the Treasury, saying, "I think it would "be better that the advertisements for tenders should apply, at first, only to New South "Wales, and for this a week's notice would suffice. If this produces no suitable offers, the "neighbouring Colonies may be tried." The Board were of opinion that if we had advertised in the neighbouring Colonies, there would have been much greater opportunities of selection than if we were confined to Sydney only. I may say that, from my own knowledge, there were many smart vessels in Adelaide, in Hobart Town, and Auckland, and also in the Pilot Service at Melbourne.

610. In consequence of that advertisement were any vessels offered? You will please to notice that in No. 4 we fall in with the Colonial Treasurer's suggestion, and the advertisement was issued referring only to Sydney, which will be found in No. 5.

611. That advertisement was inserted? That advertisement was inserted, and several tenders were sent in.

612. Look at No. 6? Here is a schedule of the vessels—the "Pacific," the "Kate Kearney," a vessel unnamed about 85 tons, and the "Vixen." These tenders were considered, and on the 7th February, this letter, No. 7, was written:—"The Board beg to "report that they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible, and "they think it desirable to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies before making any "final recommendation."

613. Will you, before you go any further, state what you mean by "they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible?" That, in fact, none of them were perfect pilot boats; some of them might have done as makeshifts, but some were not fit at all.

614. Were any vessels subsequently offered? Yes, sometime after, but on the 7th February we recommended the Colonial Treasurer to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies; that suggestion was not fallen in with at all. Following that, comes a note from the Colonial Treasurer, dated the 8th, in which he says:—"In calling for tenders in the "neighbouring Colonies, I should like to know the views of the Board. A vessel from "description may appear suitable—is it intended to intrust the examination into her "condition to some party at the port where she may be, and who will also be authorized to "make a final arrangement; or, if her description is approved of, will the Board require her "to be brought to Sydney for inspection? If the latter, there seems little probability of a "compliance, on the uncertainty of an approval on arrival, and it will be simply so much "time lost." The Treasurer there puts a question and answers it himself; and I would with deference almost say, it was absurd to say that the Board could suppose parties would bring a vessel here under such circumstances. We never contemplated such a thing. This is the question put by the Colonial Treasurer, and answered in the most rational way by himself.

615. What was the reply? "The Board purpose to refer tenders received from the Colonies "to the Pilot Boards of the respective ports, who are no doubt competent to report "satisfactorily. The Board will, however, examine the vessels tendered here during the "week." That is dated 14th February. I may state that I was not present at the meeting when that Minute was made. I therefore simply read the Minute.

616. Vessels were subsequently offered—look at No. 10? Yes, the "Jeanie Dove," "Beautiful Star," "Atlantic," and "Lola Montez."

617. Were any of those vessels recommended by the Board? I see a recommendation was made on the 14th February, at a meeting when I was not present, and of which I know only from the paper here, and from having heard it read at the subsequent meeting. This meeting on the 14th February was a special one, purposely to examine these vessels.

618. Do you approve of that recommendation? When it came before me—I was present when it was read at the subsequent meeting:—"With reference to the Minute of this date "upon the above-named subject, the Pilot Board now recommend that the tenders for the "'Pacific' and 'Atlantic' should be accepted, as they consider that these vessels are the "most suitable for the purpose belonging to the port, being in fair condition, commodious, "and weatherly. Should it be found that they do not realize all that the Board anticipate, "they will always sell for a price little less than the cost. Although the tenders amount to "£3,200, the Board believe that, in all probability, the owners would accept £3,000 for the "two vessels." All that I coincide with.

619. Was an offer made for these vessels? The next Minute I come to is from the Colonial Treasurer:—"I consider the price of these vessels to be high, but as they are very "strongly recommended by the Board, and it is desirable that the new system should be "brought into operation as soon as possible, I approve of the purchase if it can be effected "for the amount voted by Parliament, say £3,000; provided however that the vessels are "first taken on the slip, and their condition certified to by the Shipwright Surveyor." That seems to have come down on the 22nd, and there is a subsequent Minute, dated 24th:—"I " am

" am induced to this course, because I have heard that one of these vessels has taken the ground some time since, and as there is a Shipwright Surveyor attached to the Steam Navigation and Pilot Board, it is desirable that his certificate as to the condition of the vessels should be obtained. The earliest attention should be given to this."

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

620. What do you consider is meant by " I am induced to take this course " ? The course that the vessel should be first taken on the slip.

621. And in consequence of the Colonial Treasurer having heard — ? That the ship had been on the ground.

622. Are you aware whether the offer for these vessels was accepted or made ? I cannot recollect the wording of the Minute—this letter was written by Mr. Wilshire, but it seems to have been framed in accordance with the Minute.

623. By Captain Moriarty : Was Mr. Wilshire authorized to make this communication ? No doubt he was. I have no doubt the letter was framed upon the wording of the Minute.

624. By the Chairman : If these vessels had been purchased, would it as an inevitable consequence have been on condition that they should have gone on the slip ? Yes.

625. By Mr. Weekes : According to my Minute was that ? It was your suggestion clearly.

626. Not the recommendation of the Board ? Not the recommendation of the Board.

627. By Mr. Wilson : Was it the intention of the Board that they should go on ? I was not present when the recommendation was made that these vessels should be purchased—the subsequent Minute of Mr. Weekes, to which he now refers, I took to be in consequence of the Minute of the Pilot Board, No. 11, at which meeting I was not present, consequently I do not know what the intention was.

628. By Mr. Weekes : You adopted this at the ensuing meeting ? Yes.

629. Although you were not present at the first meeting, at the ensuing one you did adopt this ? Yes. There was no report made in writing, but we adopted it in so far as the wording of this letter, No. 15, can be called the adoption of it.

630. By the Chairman : You, as one of the Board, were satisfied with the report of Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson ? Yes.

631. By Captain Moriarty : It is impossible that No. 13, dated 20th, can be affected by what occurred on the 22nd and 24th ? No, these Minutes were made upon the document of the 20th.

632. By Mr. Piddington : Are you of opinion that the Board would have authorized the purchase of these vessels without directing that they should have been placed upon the slip ? No, I think they would have had them put upon the slip.

633. Of their own authority ? I think so ; I do not imagine they would have been purchased before they had been put on the slip.

634. Are you of opinion that the Board, in recommending the purchase of these vessels, considered that this was —

635. By Mr. Weekes : Did you inform me that this was a contingent recommendation ? Contingent upon what ?

636. Upon their being docked ? I think not.

637. The tenders having been referred to the Board for their investigation and report, did not the Minute, No. 11, convey to me their opinion that these tenders should be accepted, without saying that they should be first sighted in dock ? The wording conveys that, but I do not think it would convey more than that the vessels should be purchased, subject to such an examination.

638. Is it not the fact that they recommended to me that these vessels should be accepted, and would not my acceptance of them have been final without their having been taken into dock ? Yes, if you had done so, but it would have been most injudicious ; it is what no ship-owner would have done.

639. Were not the Board supposed to take all the preliminary steps before advising me to accept these vessels ? Yes, I presume that they were to take most of the preliminary steps.

640. By Mr. Piddington : With respect to the Minute dated 14th February, was the recommendation absolute, or conditional upon a proper inspection of the vessels ? I was not present at that meeting, and therefore I cannot tell what discussion may have arisen.

641. Is it the practice, according to your knowledge of the Board, to recommend an absolute purchase before an —

642. By Mr. Weekes : Has there ever been an instance of a similar kind before the Board ? There never has.

643. By Captain Moriarty : Have the Board any power to place a vessel upon the slip without reference to the Minister ? No.

644. They have no money to pay the expense ? Certainly not.

645. By the Chairman : In No. 15 there is an offer made of £3,000 for the two vessels ? Yes, on the condition that they are satisfactorily reported upon by the Shipwright Surveyor.

646. Were these vessels purchased ? No, the owners refused to take the price. In fact Mr. Broomfield said afterwards, Mr. Kelly was very glad the Government did not take them ; he said they should not have them for the money at which they were originally tendered, afterwards.

647. Do you recollect the " Sea Witch " being offered to the Government ? Yes, No. 18.

648. Will you state the circumstances under which your advice was sought, and the objections you made to her purchase ? The first intimation I know of, that the " Sea Witch " was offered, is that contained in No. 18, dated 3rd March. The letter states that " She is a fast sailer, and a perfect sea boat. She is in every respect well found, and her sails are in good order, and would be well suited for this purpose." I believe Captains Smith and Watson examined the vessel first, and afterwards Captain Darley and myself, and Captain Darley's foreman carpenter ; and upon our making our report to the Board we objected

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

objected to her so much that it was decided to refuse to have her. We found not only her model defective, according to our ideas of what was necessary for the qualities of a pilot boat, but also disapproved of her construction and condition, and considered the price asked far too much.

649. By Captain Moriarty: Where did you see her? I went with Captain Darley and one of his carpenters on board the ship at Campbell's Wharf; she had a great deal of ballast in her, and we could see only the two ends, and part of the midships. The model is defective for the purpose, too short in proportion to her beam, and she has too little draught of water. Those are the principal faults in her model. The principal fastenings are iron—

650. By Mr. Weekes: The principal ones? The principal ones—the centre ones. I could see a few copper bolts, but not many. All the topsides are fastened with iron. She has one great element of weakness; she is cut across in midships just before the mainmast; the maindeck planks come aft as far as just before the mainmast; there is a small rise; the poopdeck planks abut at the same place, at the same beam, instead of the planks being carried fore and aft, as they should be. That is one great element of weakness. I consider, I always find, breaks in decks, even where they are further aft, leak, and in midships is the weakest part.

651. Did you notice any sign of weakness? I noticed water had been running in there.

652. An ordinary leak? An ordinary leak; I never saw a break deck that did not leak. The letter says:—"She is in every respect well found, and her sails are in good order." Her forestay was gone, and the captain said she had only one mainsail. She was badly found in sails.

653. By Captain Moriarty: In point of fact the letter was untrue in many particulars? The letter was untrue in many particulars. He said she would be well suited for the purpose; that was his opinion, I suppose; but I was of opinion, from my knowledge of schooners and fore-and-aft vessels generally, that the vessel would not keep to windward in a sea-way.

654. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you think she would be safe to stay in a heavy sea? No; I think her dimensions are out of proportion; her length is a little more than three and a half times her beam.

655. By Mr. Weekes: Give us her size? Her length from the fore part of her stem to the after part of her stern-post is sixty-nine feet, her breadth outside the planking is nineteen feet two-tenths, her depth is seven feet seven-tenths. These proportions you will find on calculation make her length a little more than three and a half times her beam.

656. Could you remedy this defect in her model? By lengthening her.

657. By the Chairman: Do you think she is worth lengthening? No. I contend that a vessel of her model cannot be weatherly in bad weather; her depth of hold is very little; she is too shallow to hold to windward.

658. By Captain Moriarty: Is she sharp or flat floored? The principal part of the floor I could not see.

659. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know her present draught of water? If you turn to No. 25 you will see that Mr. Cuthbert states that she draws five feet forward and six and a half feet abaft in ballast.

660. Do you know her draught in sailing trim? No.

661. By Captain Moriarty: She would draw more than that? She could not a great deal.

662. By Mr. Weekes: Are you aware whether she draws nine feet in midships? I do not know; I did not see her; but I do not think it likely.

663. By the Chairman: What is your opinion of her suitability for a pilot boat? I do not think her suitable for a pilot boat.

664. By Mr. Weekes: Do you think her a good sea boat? No doubt; I should not be afraid to go round the world in her. I commanded a vessel of 65 tons from Sydney to Manila and back to Sydney.

665. By the Chairman: In your letter of the 8th of March you say the vessel was over-valued? Yes.

666. Why? Because I considered at that time, looking to the state of the market, if she were sold, she would not fetch more than £800 or £900. Captain Towns came to me before the vessel was bought, and asked me not to oppose the purchase of her. He said, "I am going to recommend the vessel to the Government, do not oppose it." I said, "She is not fit for the service." He replied, "She is the only thing we can get, and if we do not get this we shall not get the service started." I said, "Captain Towns, would you give £1,000 for her?" He said, "No, I would not."

667. By Mr. Weekes: I think it right to tell the witness that Captain Smith, a previous witness, gave some evidence affecting persons not immediately before the Committee, and that he afterwards asked to have it expunged? I should be sorry to say anything that would wound the feelings of Captain Towns, but having been asked a question about the value of the vessel, it occurred to me that Captain Towns had spoken to me about it at the time.

668. By Mr. Piddington: Did Captain Towns, at that time, say anything about the qualifications of the vessel—you state that he said it was the only thing you could get? I am not aware.

669. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether the vessel was offered in the market previously to having been offered to Government? I am not aware.

670. Will you be kind enough to look at No. 22—you will see there a letter from Captain Towns? Yes.

671. Will you read that letter, and state whether the representations there made are in accordance with what has come to your knowledge, both as to the suitability of this vessel, the time at which she could be sent to sea, and the expense of fitting her? (The witness read the letter.) "This vessel is the perfect model of what we require." I maintain that she she is not a perfect model of what we require, and that Captain Towns does not believe her now to be a perfect model. I can give you a reason for thinking so, and it is this—Tenders are now invited for a new vessel, and Captain Towns has chosen a model which is diametrically the opposite of this; it is as different as possible from the "Sea Witch," and if she were everything that could be required why was not her model adopted in choosing a new boat. Then he says, "with a very trifling expense." I expect when the accounts come in, the expense will be found to be something more than trifling. That this is not correct—"may be sent to sea in a few hours"—is proved by the fact that she was purchased on the 15th March, and did not go to sea until the 1st of June.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

672. By Mr. Weekes: Is not Captain Towns a sanguine man? Yes, I think that is possible; but if you turn to our Minute No. 20, you will see that we said "much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels could be made available," which seems to have been taken no notice of whatever.

673. Just go a little above that—what is it you there say about the "Sea Witch"? "Scarcely fit for the service. After considering the whole of the most eligible tenders the Board are of opinion that the prices asked are excessive, seeing that much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels —"

674. To what ships did that refer? To all the tenders.

675. To the "Pacific," the "Atlantic," the "Sea Witch"—all? Yes, but you must read it with the context, "seeing that much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels could be made available;" but in Captain Towns's letter, which has over-riden our recommendation, he says it can be done at a very trifling expense and in a few hours. I believe that the Board's opinion will be borne out by the facts rather than that of Captain Towns. The Minute concludes with, "as they have all been built for other purposes, they would even then be far inferior to vessels built specially for the Pilot Service,"—the Board clearly shewing that they did not consider any of them strictly fit, but only as makeshifts, or substitutes for proper pilot boats. Then there is this Minute of the Colonial Treasurer—"The Shipwright Surveyor should be requested to inspect this vessel forthwith, and report on her condition. It is so desirable to commence this system, that should the report warrant it the vessel should be bought, and I am informed that an offer of £1,400 would be accepted."

676. Who is that Minute addressed to? It does not appear to be addressed to any one.

677. Did that Minute ever reach you or the Pilot Board? I have some doubt about it. I think I heard that Minute read afterwards, but not until after the ship had been purchased. I think I have Minutes of the meetings we attended. (The witness referred to some papers.)

678. By Captain Moriarty: Do you say the Pilot Board did not see that Minute till after the vessel was bought? I will not be positive about that—I was present at the meeting on the 13th, but I am not sure but that that Minute must have been sent after the meeting had been held. I do not think that came to us; it might have come to the Chairman. My impression is that we did not see that till after the vessel had been purchased.

679. Would it be competent for the Chairman to order that to be done in the absence of the Board? Seeing the Chairman was not a nautical man I think it would have been very imprudent.

680. Is it competent for the Chairman to act without the concurrence of the Board? No, except in cases of emergency.

681. By Mr. Weekes: Does that Minute, No. 23, contain a prudent suggestion that, in contemplation of her being purchased, the Shipwright Surveyor should be required to inspect her? I think there is no objection to that, but —

682. Is it not an ordinary step to take? Government might be inclined to take it, but I do not think that Captains Smith, Darley, or myself, if we purchased a vessel, would care whether a Shipwright Surveyor had seen it or not.

683. By the Chairman: Will you look at No. 26—did that come to the Pilot Board—? It did not come till after the ship was purchased I am quite certain.

684. By Mr. Weekes: It bears upon the face of it that the ship was purchased? Yes; it says it was purchased conditionally; I say it was not until it was absolutely purchased that it came to us.

685. Do you know when it did come? Not till the next weekly meeting.

686. Will you say when it did come? I cannot. I only know that it did not come to the Board.

687. Are you prepared to say that it did not come to the Board on the day on which it bears date? I cannot say that it did not come to the Chairman.

688. If the Board were not sitting? I presume it would come to the Chairman.

689. That would be the ordinary course? Yes, I should not find fault with that, but that we were not made aware of it.

690. By the Chairman: Look at No. 28? "I have to inform you that I have this day examined the bottom of the schooner 'Sea Witch,' laying in the Fitz Roy Dock, and found a few pieces of the metal sheathing worn off the keel and part of her bottom. The defective parts having been repaired, I consider her to be in good order and condition."

691. Were you present when that examination was made, or were any members of the Pilot Board present? I am not aware that any of them were present; Captain Towns, I am told, was there.

692. By Mr. Weekes: Are you sure Captain Towns was present? I heard so from Mr. Cuthbert, I think.

693. By the Chairman: Can you state how it was that the members of the Pilot Board were not present? Simply because they had no notice.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

694. By Captain Moriarty: Whose fault was that? I presume it was the duty of the Chairman, if he thought it necessary, to issue notices. It seems an unaccountable thing that Mr. Crook should have gone in his boat, as I am informed by a credible person, to Towns's Wharf, and have taken Captain Towns to the dock, and yet never have made any member of the Pilot Board aware of the fact that there was to be an examination, though Captain Smith lives next door to Mr. Crook. It looks as if he did not use any endeavours to let us see the vessel; and if you read No. 29, you will see that Mr. Crook, instead of reporting to the Board by whom he was put in motion, reported direct to the Colonial Treasurer.
695. Is he set in motion by the Pilot Board? I apprehend so.
696. By Mr. Weekes: How would a Minute sent to the Pilot Board be sent to Mr. Crook to carry out? I presume by a letter from the Chairman, or from the Secretary, directing him to carry it out.
697. Representing the Pilot Board for the time being? Representing the Pilot Board for the time being.
698. By the Chairman: If the Pilot Board, through the Chairman, instructed Mr. Crook to report, to whom would he report? To the Pilot Board, but instead of that he reported direct to the Treasurer.
699. By Captain Moriarty: Do you know that he was ever set in motion by the Pilot Board? I presume that is the fact. I take, as a most remarkable fact, that Mr. Crook does report to the Colonial Treasurer instead of to the Pilot Board, and that he ignores the Board altogether.
700. Is Mr. Crook in any respect amenable to the orders of the Pilot Board? Certainly not.
701. Why, then, should he not report to the Minister? If he is set in motion by the Board—
702. That is your assumption? I believe it to be the fact.
703. By the Chairman: To whom are the Minutes from the Minister addressed? Sometimes to the Board—sometimes to Mr. Wilshire, the Secretary.
704. Look at the Minute in this particular case—to whom is this Minute addressed? To the Pilot Board, 15th March. I do not mean to say that that Minute did not come down at once, but I presume that it was received by the Chairman, and that he moved the Harbour Master to put the vessel in dock.
705. By Mr. Weekes: It would be the Harbour Master's natural duty to put the vessel in dock? He is the most fitting person.
706. By Mr. Piddington: In the Minute from the Treasurer, you see the Board are instructed "to direct the Harbour Master to ascertain the earliest period at which she can be docked"? Clearly, and we should have seen it to be our duty to move the Harbour Master to do it.
707. That Minute is signed E. C. W., and dated 15th March? Yes.
708. By the Chairman: In consequence of the Government having purchased this vessel in opposition to the advice of the Pilot Board, will you state what course the Board then took? The course they took is explained in Minute No. 31.
709. That Minute was written in consequence of the directions to the Board—? That Minute was written in consequence of the directions to the Board under No. 30.
710. Directing you to take the necessary steps "for transferring this vessel to the Government, and for fitting her for the outside Pilot Service"? Yes. There are two propositions in this Minute, the first as to the transference of the vessel, and the other as to the advisability of commencing the service with one vessel.
711. You declined to have anything to do with fitting her out? Yes, because we believed she would prove a failure for the service required.
712. Did the Government in consequence of this Minute dispense with your services? Yes; there was some little correspondence before that took place, but ultimately our services were dispensed with, I presume, in consequence of that.
713. Did you consider your Minute No. 31 as conveying your resignations? No.
714. By Mr. Weekes: Not contingently? No.
715. If the Government thought you unfit to select a pilot boat—? If the Government thought us unfit. The meaning of this Minute is not that if the individuals who formed the Pilot Board were thought to be unfit, but that if a Pilot Board were not "competent to give an opinion on the fitness of a pilot boat," it would be better that the services of such a Board should be dispensed with altogether.
716. Your services were then dispensed with by the Government? Yes, after some little correspondence between us—there was some little correspondence paving the way.
717. By the Chairman: Do you still continue a member of the Steam Navigation Board? Yes—that is formed under a separate Act.
718. By Mr. Weekes: What powers do you imagine a Pilot Board to have—a power superior to Government? No, certainly not.
719. Supposing the Pilot Board and the Government differ in their views on any particular subject, which do you think should give way? I presume the Pilot Board will give way.
720. Would it not have been quite consistent with their position as a Board to have protested against the purchase of the vessel, leaving the responsibility of buying an ineligible vessel on the Government, where it should properly rest? I imagine that they did almost the same thing. They protested against its being purchased, and they afterwards declined to fit it out.
721. But when the vessel had been purchased on such authority as the Government thought sufficient, you absolutely declined to fit her out? We believed it would be a wasting of the public money.

722. Was it not your peculiar province to fit her out when she was bought? I suppose so; but there were so many things we thought our province referred to Mr. Crook, that it is hardly possible to say. We should have expected to fit her out under ordinary circumstances, but we thought we should be made the scape-goats if there were any failure, and we therefore declined to have anything to do with her.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

723. How would the responsibility have rested with you if the vessel had been bought contrary to your advice—would not the responsibility have been taken off your shoulders and have rested upon the Government? Yes; but we felt that we were there not only as servants of the Government but as servants of the public, and we did not like to see the public money squandered away in the purchase of a vessel unsuited to the purpose for which it was required.

724. Is the Pilot Board any more than any other department of Government in that position? I am so little acquainted with Government departments that I can hardly say, but I imagine that this is a Board of advice more than of anything else.

725. You do not consider it at all part of their duty to dictate to the Government? No, but to advise as forcibly as they could, and to resist if they thought proper a wasteful expenditure of the public money.

726. Would not that have been properly done by protesting against this purchase? I question if the public would then have known anything of the matter.

727. If the Government insisted upon your fitting out outside pilot boats, you should after a protest have acted according to your instructions, and left the responsibility of the purchase upon the Government? I fancy we took the proper and most straightforward course—we refused to identify ourselves with a wasteful expenditure of the public money in the purchase of a vessel unsuited to the requirements of the service.

728. Would it be possible for any head of a department to be suffered to remain in his position if he absolutely refused to carry out the wishes and instructions of Government? Before I answer that question, may I ask if any other department of Government has a position analogous to that of the Pilot Board?

729. That is a question of opinion; if you want my opinion, it is, that the Pilot Board was appointed as the most convenient mode of carrying on that department? I know so little of Government matters that I can hardly answer the question. I know it would not be possible in private life; I do not know about Government. I think they do queer things.

730. The only report that was made to the Government on the "Sea Witch," previous to her being bought, was, that she was "not only overvalued but was scarcely fit for the service"? Yes, but we followed that up by this—"The Board are of opinion that the prices asked are excessive, seeing that much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels could be made available." Therefore, we considered it was not advisable to have either of them.

731. But still, holding the view that the prices asked were excessive in every case, you had previously recommended the Government to purchase the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" at these excessive prices? Yes, but with the knowledge that these vessels could be sold directly afterwards at prices little less than those asked for them.

732. By the Chairman: Is that mentioned anywhere? Yes.

733. By Mr. Weekes: That was afterwards —

734. By the Chairman: It is mentioned in No. 18? Exactly; and, as a proof of that, the owners afterwards refused to accept the price that was first offered.

735. By Mr. Weekes: If you had been a buyer of vessels, would you have objected to have given £2,000 for the "Atlantic"? It would depend upon what I wanted her for. I would not have objected if I had wanted her.

736. Would you object to pay £1,200 for the "Pacific"? No, if I wanted her. These vessels are so extremely fast that they would make more than other vessels in consequence.

737. As you recommended these vessels—one at £2,000—? You will remember that I was not present at that meeting.

738. Still you adopted the Minute at the subsequent meeting, and that is tantamount to having been present—you do not wish to say that you did not agree with it? No, I do not.

739. Do you think there is anything unreasonable on the part of the Government in giving £1,400 for a vessel of 62 tons when you recommended that they should give £2,000 for the "Atlantic" of 71 tons, and £1,200 for the "Pacific" of 60 tons? Ships are not bought by the ton, as railway iron; you can buy new ships in England at from £7 to £22 or £23 a ton.

740. When you recommended the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" as what you call make-shifts for this service, at the respective prices of £2,000 and £1,200, what examination had you made? I had made none.

741. What examination had the Board made? A verbal report was made by Captain Watson, who is still a member of the Board, by Captains Smith and Darley. I knew the vessels myself, therefore I had no need to make an examination.

742. Are you aware that, when these three gentlemen—Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson—went on board to report upon these vessels, they were full of coals? You are the first person from whom I heard so.

743. I am asking the fact? I am not. I believe they had coals on board, but there were places fore and aft where they could see the vessels.

744. Do you know the state of the vessels as to their fastenings? I have been on board the "Pacific" but not the "Atlantic."

745. You are unaware then to what extent they are iron-fastened? I am.

746. They may, then, be more iron-fastened than the "Sea Witch"? They may be. I do not know whether they are or not.

747. Did these gentlemen report that they had examined, or that they had not examined, the

Captain
H. T. Fox.

the fastenings? You must bear in mind that I was only present when the Minute was made with reference to a previous Minute of your own—No. 12. I was not present when they made the recommendation No. 11. There is a Minute of your own, No. 12, and in consequence of that the Board made the Minute you now speak of. I, as a member of the Board, took it for granted, so good an opinion had I of the judgment of Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson, that I was satisfied to take their report that the vessels were worth the price asked.

748. You did not inquire of them what they had done? No, I did not. I was satisfied with their recommendation—I had so good an opinion of their judgment.

749. As far as your own knowledge went, you were not aware of their condition? No, but I was aware of their qualities; I knew that the "Atlantic" had made five voyages to Newcastle in a month, which I suppose very few other vessels have done, and I am told that she made one voyage to Newcastle and back in twenty-five hours.

750. But a vessel may swim to the last, she may be a fast vessel until she goes down? I may say that I know the man who built these, and I am sure he would not put bad work out.

751. But you did not know to what extent she was copper or iron fastened? No, as far as her build and fastenings were concerned, I went on the opinion of Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson.

752. Did you know how long their copper had been on? No.

753. Or whether it had ever been renewed since they were built? No.

754. Do you know how old the copper was on board the "Sea Witch"? No. I see the report upon it, but I do not know whether it is to be believed, for Captain Chapman, who recommended her to the Government, says she was newly coppered in 1861; he also says that she was built in 1856; but as he is incorrect in his statement that she was built in 1856, he may be also in his statement that she was newly coppered in 1861.

755. Are you aware, of your own knowledge, that she was not built in 1856? I have been informed that she was built in 1854.

756. You do not know that of your own knowledge? No. I went to the Custom House and looked at the registry book there, and I found that in the column "Where Built" it is stated that she was built at Connecticut; but that the date had been expunged or left out for some unaccountable reason.

757. By Captain Moriarty: Is not that a very extraordinary fact? Yes.

758. Have you ever known any similar instance? No, I have known instances where both the place of building and the date have been unknown; but have never known a case where the place has been entered and the date omitted. The information as to the place must have been obtained from the register, or from some other document, and in the register both the place and the date would have been stated. I have been informed she was built in 1854.

759. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know when the "Pacific" was built? The "Pacific" was built in 1856.

760. The "Pacific" and "Atlantic" were offered to the Government in pursuance of an advertisement calling for tenders? Yes.

761. These were referred to the Board in the ordinary way for their report on them? Yes.

762. In No. 11 the Board advises the Government that the tenders for the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" should be accepted? Yes.

763. They do not state, provided that an inspection of them be made on the slip or in the dock? No, but I was not present at that meeting.

764. Had the Government acted upon that recommendation of the Board, and communicated to the tenderers that their offers had been accepted, that would have been binding and conclusive? You asked me that question before, and I stated that I thought if the Government had so communicated to them it would have been very injudicious.

765. Would not that be the ordinary course—the vessels having been submitted to the Board for their examination and report, and the Board having recommended their purchase, would it not have been the ordinary course for the Government to have accepted the offers? I do not know the ordinary course, but I know it would have been injudicious. The Board simply recommend that the tenders be accepted, as they consider the vessels the most suitable that have been offered.

766. They do not say, provided further examination of them be made? No.

767. Then, if the Government had been so far misled by this report of the Board as to have purchased the vessels there and then, absolutely, they would not have been carrying out the views of the Board, which were that they should have further examination? I cannot tell what the views of the Board were, as I was not present on that day.

768. It is a recommendation absolutely to accept them? Yes; and the worst that could have happened, if their bottoms were found to be wrong, would have been, that whatever cost their repair might have required would have been borne by the Government; but we knew that the owner of these vessels took care to keep them in good order.

769. The Government adopted the views of the Board in respect to these two vessels, until the Minute No. 20, of the 8th March, when the Board recommended that vessels should be built in England—up to that time had not the Government gone with the views of the Board? With the exception of advertising in the other Colonies, which had been refused from the first.

770. What was the reason of that refusal? That there would be a loss of time.

771. And that the final decision would be left to an irresponsible party in the other Colonies? I do not think we were favoured with the opinion of the Colonial Treasurer upon that at all.

772. I made the inquiry? I think there is no reply to that.

773. The Board mention that it should be left "to the Pilot Boards of the respective ports"? There is no reply to that.

774. By the Chairman: "Who are no doubt competent to report satisfactorily"? Yes.

775. By Mr. Weekes: You said, in a previous part of your examination, that of course the Board did not intend to have the vessels sent to Sydney, and therefore you would have been bound to depend upon the reports of the Pilot Boards of the respective ports? But we should not have been bound to purchase.

776. There would have been no other means? No; unless some person had been sent down specially for the purpose.

777. By the Chairman: It would have been possible to have made a conditional offer of a price, subject to approval? Yes.

778. By Mr. Weekes: Up to this period, that is, until you recommended that two vessels should be built in England, had not the Government gone with your suggestion as to the purchase of these vessels? Yes, with the exception of advertising in the neighbouring Colonies. The Board refer to that in No. 11. They say they "recommend that the tenders "for the 'Pacific' and 'Atlantic' should be accepted, as they consider that these vessels are "the most suitable for the purpose—." There is a dash there which ought not to have been put in, the sentence ought to have run on "belonging to the port."

779. In fact all the vessels that were offered to you you consider ineligible? I consider ineligible as thorough and definite pilot boats.

780. Although you recommended that vessels should be purchased at that price you still considered the price excessive? Excessive for pilot boats, seeing that additional expense must have been incurred before they could have been made available.

781. Even at the high prices you have named, you state in No. 20 Minute, that much additional expense would be necessary before they could be made available for the service? Yes.

782. Therefore, in excess of the £2,000 for the "Atlantic," a very considerable expense would have had to be incurred before she could have been fit for service? If they were to be made for definite pilot boats, but it was never our intention that they should be so. You were anxious that the service should be entered upon at once, and we wanted to obtain make-shifts, as we were prevented from advertising in the neighbouring Colonies, where I had heard there were suitable vessels, so that we were narrowed down to the half-dozen vessels in Sydney.

783. Did you urge upon the Government the propriety of advertising for them in the neighbouring Colonies after I had doubted the propriety of doing so, or did you simply recommend us in No. 20 that the vessels should be built in England? In No. 4 it is stated—"The object of the Board was to save time, but if eligible tenders can be had here, that object will be attained in the manner suggested by the Treasurer; if otherwise, a week's delay can matter but little."

784. By the Chairman: Is that a Minute of the Board? It is a Minute of the Chairman, and I have no doubt it is a Minute of the Board. Mr. Weekes says, in No. 3, "I think it would be better that the advertisements for tenders should apply at first only to New South Wales, and for this a week's notice would suffice. If this produces no effect the neighbouring Colonies may be tried." In No. 7, the Board, evidently referring to this Minute, say, "they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible, and they think it desirable to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies—"

785. By Mr. Weekes: Then, in my Minute No. 8, do I not express a doubt of the propriety of so advertising? You suggest a very improbable thing, that the Board should for a moment suppose that vessels would be sent up here for inspection.

786. Do I not inquire in that Minute whether it would be left to some party at the port where the vessel might be to decide? "Is it intended to intrust the examination into her condition to some party at the port where she may be, and who will be authorized to make a final arrangement;" and the answer to that is—"The Board propose to refer tenders received from the Colonies to the Pilot Boards of the respective ports, who are no doubt competent to report satisfactorily."

787. Then, up to that period when you advise that these two vessels should be built in England, the Government had gone with the recommendation of the Board as to the purchase of the "Atlantic" and the "Pacific"? Yes; but not with their views as to advertising in other Colonies; we considered that we were narrowed down to the few tenders we received, and we therefore took them to provide for the service at once, but as mere makeshifts; and we were of opinion that the Government would lose nothing, or a mere trifle, by selling them afterwards. If you refer to No. 20 you will find that we discussed the subject in all its bearings. At one time some of the members of the Board thought it desirable to charter vessels; but upon going into detail we found that the cost of chartering would be more than would be sustained by the purchase and re-sale of these vessels.

788. Before the Government decided upon purchasing the "Sea Witch," had the Pilot Board done more than to state that she was overvalued and "scarcely fit for the service"? You must take that with the context, that "much additional expense would be necessary—"

789. Which applied generally to all the vessels? Yes; but there is this difference—that the "Sea Witch" would not sell for the same amount—

790. That is a matter of opinion? It is a matter of fact, because the owner of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" would not take £3,000 for them afterwards, and withdrew their offer altogether.

791. The system of outside pilot boats I believe is a recommendation of yours? With others I was examined before the Pilot Board when Captain Lamb was Chairman, several years ago, when I entered into some calculations—

Captain
H. T. Fox.

1 July, 1862.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

792. It is a recommendation of your Board as a Board? Yes, of the majority.
793. You are still of opinion that the outside service would be an advantage? If proper vessels are employed. I base that opinion upon my knowledge of what small vessels will do if properly handled.
794. Do you believe that, in some states of the weather, any pilot boats could hold their position outside the Heads? I believe we sometimes have weather when no vessel could do so; but I believe there are fewer days here than in England where a boat could not keep the sea, and the vessels employed upon the coast of England keep the sea in almost all weather.
795. By the Chairman: What is the object of outside pilot boats? In order that pilots may be put on board ships before they get into difficulty. The captains of ships used to complain that they did not receive the pilots until the ship was just inside the Heads, the courses were hauled up, main yard backed, and she was out of command; whereas if the pilot boarded outside, the ship would come in under command, with her tacks down and sails properly set, and would often be able to come up instead of being obliged to anchor as is now frequently the case.
796. Is that object more necessary in boisterous than in fine weather? Generally; in excessively boisterous weather the pilot boat could run a-head and lead the way in.
797. In pilot boats is it usual to lower boats from davits? In some it is; but many English pilot vessels put a pilot on board in a dingy launched off the deck.
798. By Mr. Piddington: Do you view members of the Pilot Board as paid officers of the Government, or as honorary officers? We receive fees from Government. I do not look upon us as fixed officers of the Government, in the same position as a clerk would be, or a person who gives up the whole of his time to the Government.
799. You view members of the Pilot Board more as honorary than as paid officers? Yes.
800. Are the members of the Pilot Board paid fixed salaries? No, they get a guinea a sitting.
801. They are not paid officers of Government with fixed salaries? No, our salaries may be more or they —
802. Is it a salary or a fee they receive? I beg pardon, I should have said fee. The amount received by a member in a year is dependent upon the number of meetings he has attended.
803. Is not that a similar principle to that applied to directors of banks or insurance companies? Yes.
804. The directors of banks are not viewed as the executive officers of banks? Certainly not.
805. For what object is the Pilot Board appointed—from what class of men are the members of the Board usually taken—what is their professional character? I should imagine that they should be men of great local knowledge, of considerable experience in shipping, and those matters which generally would come before them. One of the principal duties of the Board, as at present constituted, is to examine pilots and to examine masters of vessels, and in order to do that properly these men should have great experience in such matters. For myself I do not know why I was selected, but I presume it was because I had had great experience in bringing vessels in and out of this port for twelve years, and during that time I had scarcely ever a pilot on board, and never cost the insurance offices a shilling. Captains Smith and Darley have also had a great deal of experience, though not so much of this harbour as myself.
806. With reference to an opinion as to the suitability of a vessel for the Pilot Service on this coast, do you think a Board composed of such men competent to give an opinion? I think, without danger of being charged with egotism, I may safely say yes. I have had great experience for twelve years, Captain Darley I think for as long, and Captain Smith for a great many years was sailing ships on the coast.
807. You have sufficient confidence in your own knowledge to be satisfied with reference to any ship you wished to purchase for yourself, by an examination of it, without going to a surveyor? Certainly.
808. If the opinion of a Board, constituted as you have described, were rejected by the Government on a professional question, can you tell me of what use the Board would be to the country or to the Government? I cannot tell. If you refer to No. 31 you will see that the Board say, "if they are qualified to hold seats at the Pilot Board they must certainly be competent to give an opinion on the fitness of a pilot boat; but if the Government think otherwise, it were better that the services of the Pilot Board were dispensed with"—meaning that it would be better that there should be no Board at all. We did not understand being made the scape-goats when things went wrong, if our opinions were not acted upon.
809. The Board were of opinion that it was desirable to advertise for the two proposed boats in the neighbouring Colonies? Yes.
810. Do you think you would have had a far larger number of vessels to have selected from if that had been carried out? No doubt; I have heard since that vessels would have been tendered.
811. Are you of opinion that the decision of the Government not to take the opinion of the Board in this matter was injudicious? Yes; because it narrowed their choice to the few vessels in Sydney.
812. The Board after first recommending, on the 24th January, that advertisements should be published in the neighbouring Colonies, repeated that recommendation on the 7th February? Yes, none of the vessels offered being in all respects eligible.
813. Was the Board warranted in your opinion in relying upon the preliminary report of the Pilot

Pilot Boards of the neighbouring Colonies, with reference to the suitability of vessels offered in those ports? I think the course would have been to have advertised for tenders, and that upon these being sent in the Pilot Board should have reported to us as to the age, build, and suitability of the vessels, and that we should have then sent back instructions to purchase, subject to their being sound.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
1 July, 1862.

814. You have no reason to doubt the competency of the Pilot Boards in the neighbouring Colonies to carry out such a matter? Certainly not; I know the Chairman of the Pilot Board at Adelaide, Captain Douglas, who commanded the "Bosphorus," a man of undoubted ability; Captain Ferguson is the Chairman of the Board at Victoria, and Captain Gilmore, a man well known here, was Chairman of the Board at Launceston; all men of standing—men in whom their respective Governments place the fullest confidence.

815. In the Minute of the Pilot Board, dated 14th February, No. 11, the Pilot Board advise that the tenders for the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" should be accepted? You will bear in mind that I was not present at that meeting.

816. Do you view that as an absolute recommendation, without reference to examination? I should think it was conditional; I should expect from the caution Mr. Weekes always exercises that he would refer the matter back to the Board before it was finally decided.

817. Without expecting Mr. Weekes to do anything—do you think the Board considered this as absolute? I can only say what they told me afterwards, as I was not present at that meeting—I was present when the Minute, No. 13, was adopted.

818. When you agreed to the Minute, No. 13, dated 20th February, you were fully satisfied of the seaworthiness and general condition of the "Pacific" and "Atlantic"? Yes, and that they were worth the price asked.

819. At the present time you have no reason to alter the opinion you then expressed? No, and I still think it would be better to have vessels built in England.

820. In the Minute of the Board, No. 20, the Pilot Board appear to express their opinion in regard to the "Sea Witch," not only that she is overvalued, but that she is scarcely fit for the service—do you regard that as a declaration, in other words, that the vessel would be a failure if she were purchased? They say she is not fit for the service.

821. By Mr. Weekes: Scarcely? Yes, but I say the context must be regarded—"seeing that much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels could be made available."

822. By Mr. Piddington: Is that declaration respecting the "Sea Witch" equivalent to saying that she would prove a failure if purchased? If purchased for a definite pilot boat she would be a failure, and it was not advisable to purchase her as a makeshift because she would cost so much.

823. She was purchased for the purpose of a pilot vessel? Yes.

824. By Mr. Weekes: A makeshift that would cost £2,000 would not be too high priced? No, because you would get the money back again—there is the difference. In the other case you could not get half.

825. Generally speaking, if you want to get rid of a vessel you cannot expect to get so much for her as you have given? You cannot generally, but these vessels are so well known, that they would always sell.

826. By Mr. Piddington: The Pilot Board were aware, when they recommended the purchase of these vessels, of their character in the market? Yes; they are vessels that I see every day that they are in Sydney. There is never a week that they do not pass up or down the harbour; even my children know them, they are such remarkable vessels.

827. I imagine, then, you are of opinion that this letter signed R. Towns, and dated the 11th March, is, with respect to the "Sea Witch," entirely incorrect? I think I referred to that very fully before.

828. You consider that on the 8th March the Board advised the Government that the "Sea Witch," if purchased, would prove a failure? Yes.

829. By Mr. Weekes: Did you say so? The words were that she was "scarcely fit for the service."

830. By Mr. Piddington: At what period after the 8th March do you find that the Government actually had purchased? On the 15th we were informed that she had been purchased conditionally upon the copper being found right on her bottom.

831. One week after the Pilot Board recommended the Government not to purchase the "Sea Witch" the Government did purchase her? Yes, but in the interim this letter had been written by Captain Towns.

832. By Mr. Weekes: In the interim had not a survey been made by Mr. Cuthbert as to her condition? Yes, but not as to her capability.

833. As to her condition? Yes.

834. And in the interim he had made his report? Yes, and there is a very remarkable passage in the report, which upsets the whole.

835. "I consider her to be a good substantial vessel"? "For her age and build," which may mean anything.

836. By Captain Moriarty: You, as a sailor and marine surveyor, would interpret that in a different way from a shore-going person? Yes; I understand it in this way, that Mr. Cuthbert considered her age and build were objectionable.

837. By Mr. Piddington: Have you reason to suppose that this letter of Captain Towns had a considerable influence upon the Government? I find no other recommendation as to her fitness, except that from Captain Towns.

838. By Mr. Weekes: Previously to her purchase? Previously to her purchase.

839. By Mr. Piddington: Do you find in No. 27 that the Government refer prominently to Captain Towns? Yes.

840. By Mr. Weekes: He is a man of large experience is he not? Very.

- Captain
H. T. Fox.
- 1 July, 1862.
841. And a thorough sailor? Yes.
842. By Mr. Wilson: Is he a sailor now? He has been on shore a good while.
843. By Mr. Weekes: Are you a sailor now? I believe I am; I do not go to sea now.
844. By Mr. Wilson: What occupation does Captain Towns follow now? He is a merchant and shipowner.
845. By Mr. Piddington: In the Minute of the Pilot Board dated 21st March, do you conceive that the Pilot Board resigned their situations or offices? No, certainly not.
846. Does that contain the resignation of your offices? No, I have explained that before; we did not say that as individual members of the Board that we should be dismissed, but that if the Board were thought incompetent to decide upon such a matter as the choice of a pilot boat, it would be better that there should be no Pilot Board at all.
847. That view is also contained in a Minute dated 27th March? Yes. "The Board feel, moreover, that on so many similar occasions their opinions had been ignored by the Minister, and those of other persons adopted, and that frequently the Harbour Master, as in this instance, had been permitted to commence operations without the knowledge of the Board, that if they were to be in any way responsible for the success or failure of the new system of pilotage about to be initiated, they ought not, in justice, be asked to carry it out with materials which, in their opinion, were unfit."
848. In your opinion, therefore, I take it the Board had been treated with some degree of neglect by the Minister? I think our opinions have been ignored constantly.
849. Supposing the "Sea Witch" were exposed to a gale on a lee shore, do you think she would be safe? I should not like to be in her.
850. By Mr. Weekes: It is rather an awkward place to be in at any time in any vessel I presume? Yes.
851. By Mr. Piddington: From your opinion of the "Sea Witch," do you think she would be particularly unsafe? She belongs to a class of vessels that would be more unsafe than such vessels as the "Atlantic," or the "Pacific," or than a Liverpool pilot boat would be.
852. By Mr. Weekes: You would go round the world in her nevertheless? I should have no hesitation, for a consideration. I believe she is a safe sea boat, but I should give the land a wide berth.
853. Every sailor does that I presume? Yes, but a pilot boat ought to be able to go near the land.
854. By Mr. Wilson: I would refer you to your Minute of the 20th February, No. 13, in which you state that the "Pacific" and the "Atlantic" are the most suitable vessels in the port, and again I would refer you to the answer of Messrs. Broomfield and Whittaker, where they refuse to accept the offer of the Board? Yes.
855. That is dated the 3rd of March? Yes.
856. Will you tell me, referring to No. 20, which is dated the 8th March, when you state that the prices are excessive do you allude to the "Pacific" and "Atlantic," or to the vessels then under tender? We mean that the prices are excessive for pilot boats generally.
857. Did you allude to the "Pacific" and the "Atlantic"? Yes, I think they meant that the prices for the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" were excessive as well, but we must not be held responsible for the precise words of this, as it was drawn up by the Secretary; we meant that the prices were excessive for pilot boats.
858. By Captain Moriarty: Are not the words of the report drawn up in the presence of the Board by the Secretary? The Minutes are drawn up in the presence of the Board, and I dare say this was so, and this letter is based upon the Minute. If you read the last paragraph you will find that we say, "seeing that much additional expense would be necessary before the vessels could be made available"—but we had before said that these vessels could be sold again for the same money.
859. By Mr. Wilson: You say the "Sea Witch" was built in 1854? Yes.
860. How long would such a vessel as the "Sea Witch" be in the first letter? Certainly not more than seven years.
861. Are these North American vessels, built of pine, on the first letter so long as seven years —?
862. By Mr. Weekes: Was her frame or were her timbers of pine? No, of American oak; but I have seen American oak rot faster than pine.
863. By Mr. Wilson: The American oak of which she is built is not equal to English oak? Certainly not.
864. Can you state the age of the "Pacific"? I see from a note of Mr. Weekes that she was built in 1856.
865. How long would such a vessel as the "Pacific" be classed in the first letter? I should say eight or nine years. I do not know of a vessel of that class having gone home.
866. She is a superior vessel? Yes, and is built of New Zealand timber.
867. Do you think her a more substantial and better class of vessel than the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
868. With regard to the "Atlantic," are you at all acquainted with the construction and build of the "Atlantic"? Just as I know the "Pacific." I know the man who built her, and I am sure from the character he bears he would not turn out bad work.
869. From what you personally know of both vessels, you believe them to be better and more substantial than the "Sea Witch"? Yes, the man who built them would not turn out bad work; he also built the "Moa" and "Maukin," vessels well known in the New Zealand trade.
870. There is also a vessel unnamed, about 85 tons—do you know her? That vessel was not in Sydney, she was on the stocks at Brisbane Water. Her draught of water was too little.
871. Did you know anything of the build of that vessel? No; the objection on the part of the Board was not to her build but to her model; her build may be the best in the world, but her model was not.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Charles Smith, Esq., called in and further examined:—

872. By the Chairman: You have mentioned the case of the Jervis Bay Light-house as one instance in which the opinion of the Pilot Board was ignored by the Government—is there any other instance of which you complain? I will now take the pilots, where our opinion was ignored with regard to them also. When Captain Shanks was appointed, the Pilot Board recommended that Mr. Thompson should be appointed also, as he was a very competent person, out of a great many applicants. The Treasurer declined to appoint Mr. Thompson, on the ground that he was not required. Some time after this the Board had notice to appoint another pilot, and the Board then informed the Treasurer that, since their former communication, the trade of the port had decreased so much that an extra pilot was not required. However, we were directed to appoint one, and, after advertising for applicants, we again sent in Mr. Thompson's name as the most fitted for the situation. The Treasurer then sent to know how we arrived at our decision.

C. Smith,
Esq.
2 July, 1862.

873. By Mr. Weekes: What decision was that? How we arrived at the decision that Mr. Thompson was the most eligible party.

874. That was the second time? Yes. He then sent to the Board to know if there were no other applicants for the situation, when we gave the names of two other parties whom we thought came next to Mr. Thompson, and placed them upon the list according to our opinion of their qualifications, but still we recommended Mr. Thompson as far superior to the others. The Treasurer appointed the lowest on this list, and the consequence was that almost the first vessel he took charge of he ran on shore, and handled her so badly in other respects that the Board was obliged to recommend his removal. During the time this selection of a pilot was going on, Captain Watson informed the Board that the Government wished us to recommend Captain Applewhaite, as they were anxious to give him the appointment. Captain Watson and Captain Browne were the only members of the Board that gave Captain Applewhaite a vote. There was also a pilot appointed for Twofold Bay without our knowledge, and without undergoing any examination before the Board. You will see that in their Report dated 9th April, 1861, ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 27 September, 1861. The Pilot Board refer to this appointment as follows:—"Eden.—The Harbour Master and Pilot at Eden was not examined before the Board as to his capabilities or knowledge of that port, and they can only state, from report, that he does not appear to be well qualified for the situation; but this may not be of much consequence now, through the failure of the Kiandra Gold Fields, which will allow of this establishment being reduced." Now, I wish to point out to the Committee how difficult it has been for the non-official members of the Board—(Captain Moriarty here drawing attention to the circumstance that the witness appeared to be reading from a written paper, the witness explained that he was only referring to notes)—What I was going to say was, that I wished to place before the Committee the position the non-official members of the Board were in when one or two of their members, finding at the Club, or elsewhere, what the Government required to be done, paraded it before the Board, and tried to warp our judgments, as it were—that is, they were bringing an influence to bear upon us that I consider they had no right to do. I do not mean in this respect to reflect on the Chairman who is now there; but it seems to me that no Government officer ought to be Chairman of that Board, because, as his situation depends on the will of the Government, he naturally is anxious to do as the Government wish him.

875. By the Chairman: He is stationed there as a Government officer, is he not? He is. What I wish to point out to the Committee is, that no Board of non-official members, while such things as I have alluded to are going on, can get the service into an efficient state. Influences are brought to bear in that way that prevent them from doing what really they see to be for the good of the country.

876. The Chairman of the Pilot Board has always been a Government officer, has he not? Yes.

877. By Mr. Weekes: Do you object to that arrangement? I think it in a great measure prevents the department from being carried out efficiently.

878. Do you think the non-official members of the Board are the only ones that have the interests of the service in view? I mean to say that the present Chairman knows nothing at all of the matters under consideration, and that he is not a proper person for the position, being without knowledge of the requirements of the service which is placed in charge of the Board.

879. That observation will not apply to the previous Chairman? Not to the previous one.

880. By Captain Moriarty: Do not your other remarks apply to Captain Browne? Yes, so far as relates to trying to warp our judgments they do.

881. By the Chairman: You referred, I think, to the recommendation of Captain Applewhaite by Captain Watson? Yes.

882. With regard to that matter, did you say all that you desired to state? Yes.

883. By Captain Moriarty: Captain Watson told you that the Government wished Captain Applewhaite

C. Smith,
Esq.
2 July, 1862.

- Applewhaite to be appointed at the time you recommended Mr. Thompson as being the most efficient pilot, in your estimation? Yes.
884. By the Chairman: In most British ports there is a Marine Board of some kind, is there not? Yes.
885. Do you know how such Boards are generally constituted? If I recollect right, two-thirds of them are elected by the shipowners of the port—
886. Where are you referring to? To England.
887. By Captain Moriarty: What part of England? It applies to all ports in England.
888. By the Chairman: Will you state how these Marine Boards in England are constituted, to the best of your knowledge and belief? Two-thirds of each Board are elected by the shipowners of the respective ports, and the other third are official members, that is, the Chief Magistrate of the county, the Mayor of the town, and one or two other persons are understood to be appointed by the Government as honorary members.
889. By Mr. Weekes: Would it not be better to say generally, that these Boards are appointed as set forth in the Merchant Shipping Act? Yes, just so.
890. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether the duties of these Boards are in any way analogous to the duties of the Pilot Board in this Colony? I should think so.
891. Do you know what are the particular duties of these Boards? Yes; their duties are fully set forth in the Shipping Act.
892. By Mr. Weekes: Are these two instances which you have mentioned of the appointment of a pilot unnamed—who is the party you refer to? Mr. Levien.
893. Are these two instances, the one in Sydney of Mr. Levien, and the other at Twofold Bay, the only ones of which you complain? So far as appointing pilots goes these are the only ones.
894. By Captain Moriarty: Was Mr. Levien appointed at the time you recommended Mr. Thompson? Yes.
895. By Mr. Weekes: In the case of Mr. Levien, was he not reported to the Government as duly qualified for the office? He was put down at the bottom of the list, and it was stated on that occasion to the Government that we considered Mr. Thompson far superior to any of the others on the list.
896. You will see that that is not an answer to my question—was Mr. Levien returned to the Government as duly qualified for the office of pilot? That return was made after a good deal of communication between the Treasurer and the Board, to know how we arrived at our decision with regard to Mr. Thompson.
897. Was Mr. Levien reported to the Government as duly qualified for the office of pilot for Port Jackson? Yes; he was reported as the worst qualified of the three.
898. Was he reported as duly qualified? As the worst qualified of the three.
899. Did I not require you to return to the Government the names of those parties, being applicants for the office, who, in the opinion of the Board, were duly qualified for the appointment? Yes, something to that effect.
900. In reply to that requisition, did you return the name of Mr. Levien as one of those duly qualified? Yes; at the bottom of the list.
901. Are you certain that it was at the bottom of the list? Yes.
902. How many did you return? We first returned Mr. Thompson solely.
903. Did you return Mr. Thompson singly at that particular time, or at the previous time to which you refer? Both times.
904. Did you return Mr. Thompson singly the second time? We returned him first to be appointed when we appointed Captain Shanks, and then when we were instructed to recommend an additional pilot, we returned him again alone, but after one or two communications from the Treasurer two other names were put down, of which Mr. Levien's was the lowest on the list, and we pointed out that we had put them in the order in which we considered their qualifications.
905. Did you report him as one duly qualified for the office of pilot? Yes, as having the the lowest qualifications of the three.
906. Did you report Mr. Levien as duly qualified for the office of pilot for Port Jackson? Certainly, but not so well qualified as the other two.
907. Are you quite satisfied you returned him lowest on the list—how many did you return to the Government as qualified? We returned three altogether.
908. Are you sure you returned Mr. Levien at the bottom of the list? I am pretty certain of it.
909. Are you sure? I would not like to swear it exactly, but if my memory serves me, I am not deceived on the matter that his name was at the bottom of the list. However we can find out by the Minutes of the Board.
910. Then your ground of complaint against the Government is, that on this occasion they selected for themselves one out of three that you reported as competent for the office? My objection is, that they did this although we recommended one man as so much superior to the others that we considered he ought to have been appointed.
911. Still the Government selected one of three, all of whom you reported as competent for the office? Yes.
912. You stated that this gentleman ran a ship ashore shortly after his appointment? Yes.
913. Is it an unusual thing for pilots in this harbour to run vessels aground at various places in the harbour? It is not a very common thing, I am happy to say.
914. Are you aware of a Return that was made to an Order of the House, in 1860, of the various cases of this nature that had been brought before the Pilot Board? I recollect something of such a Return, but not exactly what it was.
915. It was "A Return shewing the number of cases tried before the Steam Navigation and "Pilot

"Pilot Board, from 1st May, 1858, to 30th April, 1860, having reference to Pilots and "Light-keepers"—Are you aware of that Return having been made by the Board? Yes, I remember something of it.

C. Smith,
Esq.

2 July, 1862.

916. Are you aware also that that Return shews numerous instances where pilots appointed by the Board had run vessels aground at various parts of the harbour, and in some cases sinking them? I do not recollect. (The Return alluded to was handed to witness.)

917. You now hold the Return in your hand, I think; will you look at the second case; is not that a charge against Pilot Jenkins for "the wreck of the barque 'Aunie' when in his charge"? Yes; that was before I was a member of the Board.

918. Did not the Board on that occasion find that it was owing to a fault on his part that the wreck occurred? I am not aware what took place.

919. Is it not the remark of this Board that "the loss of the vessel was attributable to a grave error of judgment on the part of Pilot Jenkins"? So it appears here.

920. The Return contains various instances where pilots have done damage to vessels by getting them on shore, and by collisions, and so on, so that it is not an exceptional case that a pilot should incur some damage to a ship? No, it is not an exceptional case.

921. Is it not likely that even the best sailor, who has not had time to acquire local knowledge of the harbour, should be placed at considerable disadvantage in navigating a ship into port, although thoroughly qualified in every other particular? Yes, it may happen.

922. Do you remember that on this occasion of the mishap to the vessel in charge of Pilot Levien, I sent a minute to the Board suggesting that in future no pilot should be placed in charge until he had for a certain time accompanied some other pilot, in order that he might acquire the necessary local knowledge? Yes, I recollect that.

923. Then in the case of Pilot Levien, under the circumstances that arose, handling as he had to do a very large and heavy ship, it was nothing very unusual that she should take the ground? Only this, that if Mr. Thompson had been appointed we knew him to have the local knowledge that was sufficient.

924. You say that Captain Applewhaite was reported to the Board by Captain Watson as, what shall I call it, the Government candidate? Captain Watson reported it so to the Board.

925. Is Captain Watson the recognized agent of the Government at the Board? Well, he brings a great deal from them, whether of his own authority or theirs I do not know.

926. In a gossiping way, I suppose, not officially? I am not aware how it is to be construed.

927. Do you pay strict regard to these representations of Captain Watson? I pay no regard to any representations from any one unless I consider them to be just.

928. Then they had no effect with you? Not so far as I was concerned.

929. Then in fact at that election the Government candidate was not successful? No.

930. And the Government did not appoint him in spite of his non-election by the Board? No, they found another appointment for him.

931. They accepted the verdict of the Board—they did not appoint him? Not as a pilot.

932. I suppose there is no reason why a good sailor should not receive some Government appointment? I am aware of none.

933. By the Chairman: Did he pass his examination before the Board? He was in along with the others, but he was not returned as one qualified for the situation.

934. By Mr. Weekes: Is not the situation you refer to at Twofold Bay simply that of Harbour Master? And Pilot.

935. Was not the appointment as Pilot more a nominal matter for the collection of the pilotage rates? He used to board vessels and pilot them in.

936. Was he not placed there merely for the arrangement and regulation of the large increase of vessels that were expected to come there in consequence of the Kiandra Gold Fields—was not that the recommendation of the Pilot Board at the time, that a Harbour Master should be appointed there, for the proper settlement of ships in their berths in the harbour? I do not recollect whether the Board made any recommendation.

937. When you stated that the non-official members of the Board were at a great disadvantage, as they were influenced by what took place at certain Clubs, or that the Chairman, as I understood you, was influenced by what took place at certain Clubs—? What I pointed out was this, that I considered the Board could not work satisfactorily while the Government gave their cue to any of their members to know what their views were. Captain Watson has stated where he heard things from the Government.

938. You have stated that you did not attach much weight to what Captain Watson represented? No.

939. Do you consider that the Chairman represents the views of the Government, and is there to protect the interests of the Government? Yes, I presume so.

940. Do you think the non-official members are the only ones that have the interests of the service in view? They are the best qualified to put the service in an efficient state.

941. You are now alluding only to the present Chairman—were not previous Chairmen perfect sailors, and perfectly competent to deal with the questions that came before the Board? When I first joined the Board there were persons on it who were not sailors at all—Captain North and Captain Mann for instance—who were all Government officers.

942. Was that when the Steam Navigation and Pilot Boards were combined, do you remember? No, they were separate when I joined.

943. Was Captain Mann on the Pilot Board? I think so.

944. By Mr. Dick: With reference to the evidence you gave before the Committee the other day, as to the ability of certain parties whom I mentioned to you to give opinions on the

C. Smith, Esq.
 2 July, 1862.

the matters then referred to about the "Sea Witch"—Captain Vine Hall, Captain Towns, Mr. Rountree, and others—you stated to the Committee last week that you wished to modify that evidence, did you not? I wished to strike out some parts of it, as being irrelevant to the case.

945. Do you entertain the same opinions now that you did then, with reference to their capabilities, or have you had reason to change them? (Mr. Wilson objected to the question. Witness requested to withdraw. Committee deliberated, and decided, on division, that the question should not be put. Witness recalled.)

946. Do you believe that Captain Norie is a gentleman of such experience that any weight ought to be attached to his opinion, as to what is or what is not a fit vessel for the Pilot Service? (Mr. Wilson objected to the question. Witness requested to withdraw. Committee decided, on division, that the question should not be put. Witness recalled.)

947. By Captain Moriarty: Will you permit me to return to the recommendation of Pilots Shanks and Thompson—I think I understood you to say distinctly, that upon a vacancy occurring in the Pilot Service, a gentleman of the name of Thompson was recommended by the Pilot Board to the Treasurer? Yes.

948. Was there more than one vacancy at the time? We considered that Captain Shanks was first recommended.

949. Before Mr. Thompson? Before Mr. Thompson. He was appointed, but when he was appointed we recommended Mr. Thompson also to be made a pilot.

950. At the time Captain Shanks was appointed was there a second vacancy? I do not think there was, but we thought they required another pilot at that time.

951. In point of fact, according to the system then existing, there was no vacancy for a pilot? I think not.

952. Then upon a second occasion a vacancy occurred, and you recommended Mr. Thompson again? No, we recommended the Treasurer not to appoint one, as the trade of the port had so much decreased since we last recommended one.

953. On the second occasion it was in consequence of a suggestion from the Treasurer that you appointed Mr. Thompson? Yes.

954. And on that occasion was your recommendation confined to him? Our recommendation was confined to him in the first instance.

955. Then subsequently somebody put you in motion to send other names to the Treasurer? The Treasurer put us in motion.

956. But your first recommendation was distinct and clear—that Mr. Thompson and Mr. Thompson alone was recommended? Yes.

957. Captain Watson gave you to understand that he was authorized to suggest that Captain Applewhaite's appointment would be satisfactory? Yes.

958. Was Mr. Levien better qualified than Captain Applewhaite? Yes, I think he was.

959. By Mr. Weekes: Was he not fully qualified according to your report? Yes, he was qualified, but not so well qualified as Mr. Thompson was.

960. By Captain Moriarty: Mr. Levien was appointed to the vacancy suggested by the Treasurer, when you had for that office recommended the appointment of Mr. Thompson? Yes. In the first instance we recommended that no one should be appointed; in the second place we recommended Mr. Thompson alone.

961. It was quite within the province of the Government to decide whether there should be another pilot or not? No doubt.

962. You did absolutely suggest Mr. Thompson for the appointment, without reference to any other name? We did.

963. And Mr. Thompson was not appointed, but a gentleman named Levien was? Yes.

964. By Mr. Weekes: When the Government had decided to appoint a sixth pilot, were not the Board required to advertise for applicants for the situation? Yes, and we did so.

965. Did I not send down a minute on that occasion to the Board, that they should send me the names of such of the applicants as they considered duly qualified? No, not in the first instance; that was after two or three communications had passed between the Treasurer and the Board.

966. Was it not immediately following the instructions to advertise that I instructed the Board to send me the names of all the applicants they had ascertained to be qualified? I believe not till some time after.

967. That can be proved, I suppose, by documents? I have no doubt it can.

968. By Mr. Dickson: Did the Board ever recommend any individual to the Colonial Treasurer, who they thought was not fully qualified? No.

969. By Mr. Dick: Who was this Mr. Thompson? He was a long time master of the brig "Moa."

970. Where was he trading? Between here and New Zealand, and about the Colonies; he has been here a long time.

971. Was he ever mate of one of the A.S.N.* Company's steam-boats? Yes.

972. What was he at the time you recommended him? He was master of one of Mr. Wright's vessels then, if I recollect right; he joined the steam service—the Inter-colonial service—after we had recommended him, so as to be handy in case he was required.

973. By Captain Moriarty: You made an allusion to two gentlemen, Captain Mann and Mr. North, as being on the Board—did these gentlemen ever interfere in the examination of a pilot or the recommendation of one? I am not aware; they left the Board shortly after I joined.

974. Did you ever know them to act in any purely nautical matter? I am not aware whether they did or not.

975.

* NOTE (on revision):—Should be I.C.S. Compy.

975. By Mr. Dick: Had not all the other candidates for the office of pilot been masters of vessels? I think most of them had. C. Smith, Esq.
976. Mr. Levien had been master of a vessel? Yes.
977. And Captain Applewhaite also? Yes. 2 July, 1862.
978. Do you recollect now what were the peculiar qualifications of Mr. Thompson, in preference to all the others? He was a person well known to the Board as being well acquainted with the harbour, and as being a sober, steady, intelligent man.
979. Did you know whether he ever commanded any vessel larger than the "Moa"? I am not aware.
980. By the Chairman: Did the Board submit the applicants for employment as pilots to any examination? Yes.
981. The whole of those you recommended, were they examined? Yes.
982. Do you judge from the manner in which applicants undergo that examination, whether they are qualified or not? Certainly, by that, and where we can, by our former knowledge of the party.
983. By Captain Moriarty: Suppose a dozen captains of vessels apply for the situation of pilot, surely there may be a difference among these twelve men that would enable you to select one as the best qualified in your estimation for that appointment? No doubt.
984. By Mr. Dick: I think you said Mr. Kelly, the owner of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific," was also known to the Pilot Board? Yes, I know Mr. Kelly very well.
985. By Mr. Piddington: With respect to the comparative qualifications of the gentlemen proposed to be appointed to the office of sixth pilot, was Captain Thompson, in your opinion, the individual who had oftenest brought a vessel into this port, as compared with the other candidates? He was the party we considered far superior to any other applicant for the situation.
986. And in spite of the preference of the Board in favour of Mr. Thompson, some one else was appointed? Yes.
987. Do you consider that the Government treated the professional ability of the Board with anything like respect in that particular? I should think not.
988. That refusal of the Government to take the advice of the Pilot Board with reference to the appointment of a sixth pilot is one of the many instances where the Government have disregarded the professional opinion of the Board? Yes.
989. By Mr. Weekes: You say "many" instances—you stated just now that there were only these two? That is with regard to the pilots.
990. By Mr. Piddington: There are instances with regard to other subjects? Yes.
991. By Mr. Dick: Is it not a fact that Mr. Thompson has not a certificate of competency as master—a Board of Trade certificate? He may be a very first-rate man, and yet have never been at Home to get a Board of Trade certificate. I have not got one myself, and I consider that I know something about nautical matters.
992. Is it not the fact that he has not a certificate? I am not aware.
993. By Mr. Wilson: Are you aware whether Mr. Levien had a certificate from the Board of Trade? I am not aware.
994. By Mr. Dick: Had Captain Applewhaite? I am not aware.
995. Did he not produce it? I do not know.
996. By Captain Moriarty: Does not a man require to go Home to get that certificate? Yes.
997. Therefore any one, though commanding vessels here for twenty years, if he has not been at Home to go through the examination, cannot have the certificate? Certainly not.
998. By the Chairman: You complain, in addition to the matters to which you have referred, that your opinions and advice have been ignored in the appointment of light-keepers, and other matters—will you be kind enough to state in what way? The light-keepers I shall take next.
999. By Mr. Weekes: One question before you go into that. Have you any reason to suppose, or do you believe, that there are any grounds for the Government having reason to be dissatisfied with the appointments of pilots made by the Board, on account of the accidents of various kinds which have occurred to vessels while under their charge? I do not rightly understand the question; perhaps you will be kind enough to put it again.
1000. Do you consider that the Government have any reason to be dissatisfied with the appointments of the Board, of pilots, from the numerous accidents to vessels that have happened while they had them in charge? No; I do not recollect any thing of that sort.
1001. Do you remember the case of Pilot Jenkins causing the wreck of the barque "Annie"? I was not on the Pilot Board then.
1002. Will you refer to the Return from the Pilot Board, which you had just now in your hand—the second case, 1st July, 1858—a charge against Pilot Jenkins, for "the wreck of the barque 'Annie' when in his charge." Does it state there that "the Board found that the loss of the vessel was attributable to a grave error of judgment on the part of Pilot "Jenkins"? Yes.
1003. No. 5. Is there a case there against Mr. McVeigh, Assistant Harbour Master, for not having properly secured his vessel? Yes.
1004. What was the result of that, as stated in the farther column—was he dismissed? It would appear so from this. I may mention that I was not a member of the Board at any of these times.
1005. By the Chairman: Do you know whether any of these gentlemen were appointed on the recommendation of the Pilot Board? I do not know; but I take it—though I may be wrong in stating so—that it is only since I have been at the Board that I have anything to do with it; perhaps, rather, since the Minister and the Board have been in collision.
1006. By Mr. Dick: How long have you been a member of the Board? About three years.
- 1007.

- C. Smith,
Esq.
2 July, 1862.
1007. By Mr. Piddington: Were Pilot Jenkins and Assistant Harbour Master M'Veigh appointed to their respective situations before you became a member of the Board? Yes, a long time before.
1008. By Mr. Weekes: However, generally speaking, since you have been at the Board several pilots have been suspended, fined, or dismissed, for misconduct? Yes.
1009. All of whom were appointed on the recommendation of the Board? That I am not aware of.
1010. By Mr. Piddington: Since the dismissal and suspension of these pilots, Jenkins and others, the Pilot Board have been applied to by the Government, in order that they might recommend to the Government a sixth additional pilot—have they not? I am not aware of these dismissals.
1011. But since these dismissals or suspensions of Pilot Jenkins and Assistant Harbour Master M'Veigh, alluded to by the Treasurer, the Government have applied to the Pilot Board for their opinion with regard to the qualifications of candidates for the office of sixth pilot? Yes.
1012. If they applied to the Board for their opinion with regard to the qualification of a sixth pilot, are you not of opinion that the Government viewed the Pilot Board as the proper authority from whom a recommendation should emanate? I presume so.
1013. By Mr. Weekes: Did not the Government at the same time require that you should return to the Government all those parties whom you considered qualified, in order that the Government might make the selection from parties tested by the Pilot Board and reported qualified? Not in the first instance, but after frequent communications from the Treasurer.
1014. What do you mean by the first instance? I mean with regard to Mr. Thompson, that we sent in his name alone the first time, and the second time we sent his name only again; the third time we had a notice to know if no other persons were qualified; then Mr. Thompson's name was given as far superior to the others, and we placed them on the list in the order that we considered their qualifications stood in—Mr. Thompson at the top, some one else second, and Mr. Levien third; and our note said that we considered Mr. Thompson far more eligible than any of the others.
1015. By Mr. Piddington: Did the Government intimate their desire to the Pilot Board that they should send up more than one name, as the name of a qualified person to be appointed sixth pilot, in the first instance? Not in the first instance.
1016. By Mr. Dickson: Did the Government ever appoint a pilot without the recommendation of the Board—do you know of any instance where any pilot was appointed without being recommended by the Board? No.
1017. You think there is no such instance? I think not.
1018. By Mr. Dick: How long after you recommended an additional pilot did the Board state that there was no necessity for one? Some eight or ten months.
1019. What was the reason given for the change of opinion? Our reason was that the trade of the port had so much decreased—it had decreased nearly one half.
1020. Is the trade of the port much less now than when you made that recommendation? Yes, much less, nearly one-half less.
1021. By Mr. Weekes: Was not the reason why the Government did not take the Board's recommendation of Mr. Thompson, that they were desirous the office should be thrown open to public competition again, it being an interval of some eight or ten months since Mr. Thompson was previously recommended? I am not aware what the Government's reasons were.
1022. Was not the minute I sent down to the Board to that effect? Certainly. But we recommended Mr. Thompson again as the most proper person, after we had advertised and examined all the parties; we placed him at the top of the list, as far superior to the others, and we put down the other names in the order in which we considered them qualified.
1023. That will appear by documents? Yes.
1024. By Mr. Wilson: There was no reason why the Government should take the least efficient of those whose names you sent in? I am not aware of any.
1025. By Mr. Weekes: Was he the least efficient? Yes.
1026. Was he the last on the list? Yes, I am pretty certain he was.
1027. By Mr. Wilson: You sent a minute also with that list? Yes, I believe so.
1028. By Captain Moriarty: Was there, in point of fact, an interval of ten months between the two occasions on which you recommended Mr. Thompson? Yes, so near as I can recollect.
1029. By the Chairman: In your petition, independently of the cases you have already referred to, you complain of your advice having been ignored in the case of light-keepers and other matters? Yes.
1030. Will you now state the matters you refer to? With regard to the light-keepers I beg to refer the Committee to the following passage of the Report of the Pilot Board, made last year, in pursuance of an order of the Assembly, and ordered to be printed on the 27th September, 1861:—"The Board much regret that their repeated recommendation, that increased and graduated salaries should be given to light-keepers, is disregarded, and they beg to assure the Minister that unless some inducement is offered to the subordinates, to secure promotion to higher salaries, by good conduct and zealous discharge of duty, the economy of the light establishments will never be brought to that degree of efficiency which it is most desirable should be attained. The Board cannot deprecate too strongly the manner in which appointments are made to, and vacancies in these establishments are now filled up. When it is considered how many lives, and what great value in property, depends upon carefulness and accuracy in the exhibition and management of a light, the absolute necessity for the employment of respectable, temperate, and experienced men, must be " apparent

“ apparent to every one; but the Board greatly regret to have to report, that due regard
 “ has not hitherto been paid to these qualifications; men wholly inexperienced (and in one “ instance of intemperate habits), have been sent to enter upon the duty of managing (at “ times during a four hours watch in the dead of night) an apparatus which requires
 “ to be worked by a skilled and steady hand; and to be entrusted with the care “ of costly reflectors and glasses, which, if damaged or broken, it might not only be “ difficult to replace, but would involve considerable pecuniary outlay. Not the least evil “ in the present mode of appointment is, that the men who have served many years in the “ light-houses, and whose experience and past conduct are guarantees of their competency,
 “ and who therefore have a claim for consideration from the Government, are entirely over“ looked, and even slighted, when new appointments or vacancies occur; consequently they “ become sensible that merit, experience, and assiduity, in the performance of their duty, are “ valueless; therefore they take no interest in their situations, beyond doing as a matter of “ form that only which is absolutely required of them. The Board would therefore beg to “ recommend that all appointments to new light-houses be filled by promoting keepers from “ other lights, so that, if possible, there shall only be one person unacquainted with the duties
 “ in any light-house at one time. (Appendix I.) In support of the foregoing observations,
 “ the Board beg to refer to the various papers and extracts from their correspondence hereto
 “ attached. (Appendix A to I.)” You will find Appendix I at page 9, and this is one of the “ passages referred to by the Board:—
 “ Complaint having been made by the principal keeper, Hornby Light, against an assistant “ keeper named Hunter, the Board reported:—

C. Smith,
 Esq.

2 July, 1862.

“ ‘8 October, 1858.

“ ‘From the ill-feeling which appears to exist between the keepers, they fear that if “ ‘Hunter be allowed to remain, his conduct will prove detrimental to the service, and they “ ‘recommend that he should be provided with a situation in the Steam Dredge, or with “ ‘some other employment for which he is more suitable than that in which he is at present “ ‘engaged.’

“ And again—

“ ‘13 October, 1858.

“ ‘With reference to the charge of intoxication, it was distinctly stated by Mr. Brown
 “ ‘that Hunter was intoxicated, and as firmly denied by the latter; and as members of his “ ‘own family only were present at the time of his arrival from Sydney (with the exception
 “ ‘of Mr. Brown), the Board did not think it advisable to call them. They are, however, “ ‘satisfied that it would be beneficial to the Government service to remove Hunter from the “ ‘light-house. In consideration of his large family and extreme want, the Board recom“ ‘mend that he should be placed in the Steam Dredge, or in some other service more “ ‘suitable to his capabilities.’

“ This man was not removed until the end of December, 1858. During the 7 “ months that he was one of the keepers, 344 glass cylinders were broken; during the “ corresponding 7 months of 1860, 22 were broken.”

1031. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know at whose recommendation Hunter was appointed? I believe at the Treasurer's; I am not aware myself.

1032. Are you not aware that Hunter was appointed at the recommendation of the Board?
 I am not; I have heard it stated differently at the Board.

1033. By Mr. Dick: Were these things broken by Hunter? I suppose so.

1034. By the Chairman: Is there any other passage? There is the case of McGrath also in the next paragraph:—

“ Pilot Board Office,

“ 24 March, 1859.

“ The Pilot Board have the honor to report, with reference to the matter of complaint by
 “ the principal keeper of the Hornby Light against the second keeper, McGrath (inquired “ into 17th inst., and postponed until 21st inst., in order that the Board might visit the “ establishment in the meantime), that they proceeded to the light-house, in company with
 “ the Harbour Master, and examined the first keeper, Robinson, in the presence of McGrath, “ and although there does not appear to be sufficient evidence to prove McGrath guilty of “ having recently scratched and destroyed the reflectors, it is nevertheless conclusive in the “ minds of the Board that he is a person of slovenly and indolent habits, and that on the “ occasion referred to by Mr. Brown he was disobedient, and neglected to perform the “ duty to which he was ordered; and they therefore consider that it would be advisable “ to appoint a more suitable person.

“ The Board beg also to report that it was painfully evident to the members, on the visit “ in question, that through the employment of incompetent persons, not only unaccustomed to “ the management of the delicate apparatus of a light-house, but also from their previous “ habits physically unfit to perform such a duty, the reflectors have already become so much “ scratched and destroyed as to render them less effectual than they ought to be; and they “ have, in fact, during a period of not more than ten months, received irreparable injuries,
 “ which, if allowed to be continued, will render it necessary for the Government to expend, “ within a short time, a large sum of money to replace the reflectors, which ought, with “ proper care and attention, to have lasted for twenty years; the Board beg therefore to urge “ upon the Government the necessity for leaving the nomination of light-keepers in the “ power of the Board, who must, from their knowledge and attention to the matters in “ question, be best able to select proper persons to fill such situations.

“ I have, &c.,

“ H. H. BROWNE,

“ Chairman.

“ During

C. Smith,
Esq.

2 July, 1862.

"During the time McGrath was at the light (3 months), 93 glass cylinders were "broken."

1035. By Mr. Weekes: Was not McGrath appointed on the recommendation of the Board? I am not aware.

1036. By the Chairman: Were these men removed on the recommendation of the Board? I forget.

1037. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know of any instance where light-keepers have been maintained in their position against the recommendation of the Board? I am not aware of that, but I will show you directly where they have been reappointed.

1038. By the Chairman: Is there any other case? Yes, here is the next:—

"On the appointment of Mr. Griffin to the Jervis Bay Light, the Board reported that:—

"In accordance with the verbal request of the Honorable the Treasurer to the Chairman, "the Board will recommend two persons suitable for the appointment of assistant keepers, "Cape George Light.

"With respect to the appointment of Mr. Griffin, they consider it their duty "respectfully to refer to their communication of the 24th March, 1859, respecting "the damage to the Hornby Light reflectors by the employment of inexperienced persons, "and to add that, considering the delicate and somewhat complicated construction of the "Cape George apparatus, it being fitted with coloured lenses, and also the distance at which "the station is situated, in case immediate assistance should be required, they regard with "considerable alarm and apprehension the injury to the commercial interest, by Mr. "Griffin's appointment, as he is only now undergoing instruction at the Macquarie Light; "and the Board are of opinion that if efficiency is to be considered, and proper care and "attention is to be taken in the management of the very costly lanterns of the light- "houses of this Colony, the English practice should be followed, viz., that no person should "be eligible for the situation of principal keeper until he had served a reasonable time in "one of the under grades.

"The Board have directed Mr. Siddons to receive and instruct Mr. Griffin in the "duties; and in placing a senior keeper in such a position, the Board consider that it "cannot but be felt as a hardship and disappointment by the junior keepers, who receive "very small salaries, to find that they are shut out from that promotion which is usually "made in other branches of the public service."

"W. J. WILSHIRE,
"Secretary.

"Pilot Board Office,
"10 May, 1860."

Then follows what the Board recommended as to graduated salaries.

1039. By Mr. Dick: Which is the light called the Macquarie Light? The Upper South Head Light.

1040. The old light-house? Yes.

1041. By Mr. Weekes: In reference to the cases you have mentioned—those of Hunter and McGrath—do you make any complaint against the present Government? No, I do not.

1042. In fact these two instances you have referred to could not apply to myself, not being then in office? Certainly not. In speaking of the graduated salary system, which they proposed to adopt, the Board wrote as follows:—"The result of the inconvenience of the present "system was fully demonstrated on the appointment of the keepers to the Cape George "Light, as no volunteers could be obtained to take the minor situations, and the costly and "delicate apparatus of that light is consequently under the charge of three persons wholly "without experience in the management of a light-house." We wanted to establish a graduated system, and not to appoint any new light-keepers to a new light, but to raise them by promotion from the old ones; but our recommendations were disregarded.

1043. By the Chairman: You have referred to these minutes as showing what the recommendations of the Board were? Yes.

1044. Were they acted upon? They were not.

1045. In what way were they not acted upon? In the appointment of keepers to the Port Stephens Light since.

1046. By Mr. Wilson: When were they appointed? Some six or eight months ago. At that light one party that had been dismissed from another light-house by the Pilot Board, for being asleep on his watch, was appointed.

1047. By Mr. Weekes: What was his name? Priest. Two were sent to the Macquarie Light-house to be instructed in their duties; one, Mr. Siddons reported, would never be capable of making a light-keeper; and it was only after that we were allowed to take one of the keepers from South Head to go down and take charge of that light; so that had he been a man of any common understanding at all, that light would have been also under the charge of men who had never been in a light-house before.

1048. It was not so? No, it was only through Mr. Siddons' report that it was not so. It is well known to parties acquainted with light-keepers, that unless people are appointed who are accustomed to live in that isolated position they will always be quarrelling, as has been the case in the Jervis Bay Light-house.

1049. Can you train up any set of men or their wives not to quarrel? People that have been accustomed to live in isolated positions—sailors, men-of-wars-men, and so on, are not so apt to quarrel as landsmen.

1050. Does it form part of the training you require, as a Board, from applicants for the situation of light-keepers, that they should live together in unity—do you require them to be trained in living happily together? No doubt of it. We ought only to appoint people that are likely to live happily together; and in order that they might know something of the men that were sent away to distant stations, the Board wished that all the appointments to such situations situations should be made from among those who had served for some time at the South Head Light. What we proposed to do was to put all the new men into the South Head Light, so that before being left in charge of distant light-houses, the Board might have some opportunity of knowing what kind of men they were, and also to be able to promote those who were deserving, to be superintendents of other lights when opportunities should offer.

C. Smith,
Esq.

2 July, 1862.

1051. Do you test the tempers of the men or their wives—are not the quarrels of the women a source of much disagreement at light-houses? No doubt the women also quarrel, but if the plan recommended by the Board were pursued, we would have an opportunity of seeing whether the men were fit persons for the situation before they were trusted at distant stations almost beyond control.

1052. As a part of this proposition, would you test the tempers of the men and their wives? No doubt we should see whether they could live quietly along with those who were placed with them at South Head, before they were sent away anywhere else.

1053. By the Chairman: You referred to the dismissal of Priest just now; will you state the circumstances under which he was dismissed? He was dismissed for being asleep on his watch and letting the light go out.

1054. By Mr. Dick: What light? Newcastle Light.

1055. How long ago is it since he was dismissed? I cannot recollect the exact time.

1056. Was he reappointed shortly after, or some time after? Some considerable time after, I think.

1057. By the Chairman: He was reappointed—? He was reappointed to Port Stephens Light-house.

1058. Was that on the recommendation of the Pilot Board? No.

1059. Are you acquainted with the circumstances under which he was reappointed? I am not.

1060. Did the Pilot Board make any inquiry before they recommended his dismissal? Yes, we made inquiry.

1061. By Mr. Weekes: Who brought the charge against Priest first? I think it was the master of a ship, if I recollect right.

1062. Through whom? Through the Harbour Master at Newcastle, I presume.

1063. Did the Board instruct the Harbour Master to make an inquiry? Yes.

1064. Did he make an inquiry? Yes, I believe so.

1065. Did he report to the Board the result of it, with the evidence? I believe so.

1066. On that did the Board recommend to the Government that Priest should be dismissed? Yes.

1067. Was he dismissed? I think so.

1068. Did Priest afterwards make application that he might be allowed a copy of the report and the evidence against him, in order that he might vindicate his innocence of the charge? I believe so.

1069. Did the Board decline to furnish that report and evidence to the man? Not that I am aware of.

1070. Will you look at this document, in the handwriting of the Secretary to the Board, and read that minute in the corner? That is the purport of what occurred at the Board, I recollect very well.

1071. Did not the Board, on my referring Priest's application to them, for a copy of the report and evidence, make this reply:—"The case having been fully inquired into before Priest, and the evidence against him being, in the opinion of the Board, so conclusive, they see no reason for opening the matter again. W. J. WILSHIRE, Secretary. 24 August, 1861"? Yes, that was the reply of the Board.

1072. Then the Board declined to give this man a copy of the report and evidence, which he claimed in order to enable him to establish his innocence—is that so? He wanted to open up the question again, and we thought it was not proper to do so.

1073. Did not the man Priest apply for a copy of the report and evidence in his case, in order that he might have an opportunity, in the words of his letter, of proving that an injustice had been done him—was not his application on those grounds? I am not aware that his application was on those grounds.

1074. Did I not refer to the Pilot Board a letter from Priest to me, and suggest that he might have a copy of the report and evidence, in order that, in his words, he might have an opportunity of proving that an injustice had been done him? If you will show me the letter I will tell you. (Letter handed to witness by Mr. Weekes.) Yes.

1075. Upon that the Board addressed to me the minute I have previously read? Yes.

1076. Upon that did I send a further minute to the Board, directing that copies of the report and evidence, and every letter on the subject, should be furnished to Mr. Priest? Yes.

1077. And they were furnished accordingly? Yes.

1078. Are you aware whether I sent to the Pilot Board after that the following minute, endorsed on a letter of Priest's asserting his innocence and adducing certain proofs of it:—"From this explanation of Priest a further report is necessary. Is there any peculiarity in the Newcastle Light which diminishes the light very considerably during the process of snuffing, as mentioned by Priest. If it is not composed of several lamps partial obscuration would seem inevitable when being snuffed. It seems only just to this party, who appears to have maintained a very good character, that further investigation should take place. Evidence should be obtained from parties who are acquainted with the working of the Newcastle Light, to test the statement put forward by Priest in his defence—that the light at snuffing must be more or less obscured. For this purpose, among others, the principal light-keeper and assistant should be examined."—Are you aware whether, upon

- C. Smith,
Esq.
2 July, 1862.
- that minute, the Board directed Captain Allen to hold a further investigation? I think so.
1079. Did you read the result of that further investigation? I do not recollect; I think I must have read it.
1080. Did the Board arrive at any determination concerning it? I do not recollect. Will you allow me to see the papers?
1081. That (handing a written document) is Captain Allen's report addressed to the Secretary? I do not recollect whether I have seen this or not.
1082. At all events, a communication from Captain Allen was made to the Board with the accompanying evidence? No doubt of it.
1083. Do you remember that I made a minute to this effect:—"This further evidence proves that Priest was dismissed on insufficient grounds, and he will be reinstated when an opportunity offers"? Yes, I see that is so.
1084. By Captain Moriarty: Were you aware of it at the time? I do not recollect the circumstances exactly. There is no doubt it will be mentioned in the Pilot Board Minutes, if it has been before the Board. I recollect that the impression at the Board was that the snuffing could not take half an hour, such as we had evidence the light was out.
1085. By Mr. Weekes: In pursuance of the minute I made here, that Priest was unjustly dismissed, he has since been appointed as assistant light-keeper at the Port Stephens Light? I am not aware what the motives were.
1086. Are you aware of the fact that he has been appointed to the Port Stephens Light? Yes.
1087. By Captain Moriarty: Has there been any complaint of him in that position up to the present? It has been started only since I left the Board.
1088. By Mr. Weekes: When the Board are purposing to make an appointment, say of assistant light-keeper, what probation do they require of the applicant—is he not generally sent to Mr. Siddons, at the Macquarie Light, to learn his duties? Yes, for a third keeper, but not for a first keeper—not for the person in charge; we wanted to appoint those who had been there for years, when qualified, to the better positions in other light-houses, in preference to new men who have to be taught their duties.
1089. By Captain Moriarty: Has it not always been the practice, on the appointment of of a person as superintendent of a light-house—that is what you mean by a first class light-keeper, I presume—that that person should go to the light-house at South Head, in order to acquire a knowledge of the duties of the position? Certainly not. In appointing light-keepers at Home I am aware they go in by grades; they must go in at the lower grades, and rise step by step, as we wished they should here.
1090. By Mr. Weekes: In the appointment of assistant light-keepers do not the Board send them down to the Macquarie Light, and on receiving a certificate from Mr. Siddons that they are duly qualified, are they not appointed? That is done when ordered by the Treasurer.
1091. Is that a course the Board approve of? No.
1092. Would the Board appoint without probation at all? The Board would not appoint principal or second keepers at all from among persons who had not been used to the duties before; they would take men they knew from South Head and give them promotion by making them first or second class in another light; and they would only put new men into the lower grade here, so that they might know their qualifications.
1093. Do they appoint any person to a light-house who has not first undergone a certain probation to qualify him? No.
1094. Are you aware whether the Government have ever appointed a light-keeper without his having undergone probation, and receiving testimony of his competency from Mr. Siddons? I am not aware.
1095. Are you aware of any instance where a man has been appointed without that testimonial from Mr. Siddons? No; but I wish to point out that the Board did not consider that sufficient; they wished to promote the men from the lower to the higher grades.
1096. You are aware that a man may be a very good subordinate but quite incompetent to take charge, not only of a light-house, but of a ship? No doubt of it.
1097. Do not the records of the light-houses prove that it is very questionable whether the assistant light-keepers would make efficient principal light-keepers? They would not be appointed till after a trial.
1098. Do not the records show that it was very probable a competent man might not be found among the assistant light-keepers? That is because they were not proper appointments in the first instance—people not qualified to go into a light-house in any grade.
1099. Will you turn to the document about the light-houses, in the first page, No. 6; is there not a second assistant keeper there dismissed? Yes.
1100. Was not that keeper appointed by the Board? I am not aware that he was.
1101. Will you look at No. 8; is there an assistant keeper there dismissed? Yes.
1102. Was he appointed by the Board? I am not aware.
1103. Turn to No. 11; assistant keeper M'Grath—is he removed or dismissed? He is removed.
1104. Do you know whether that was an appointment of the Board? I believe that the Board has been allowed to appoint none of these people.
1105. Was this an appointment on the recommendation of the Board? I believe not.
1106. That can be proved by documents? Yes, no doubt all of them can be proved by documents.
1107. These instances show that the Government might well hesitate at appointing, as a matter of course, assistant light-keepers to be principal light-keepers? No, they would not, quite the contrary; they only prove that when we have them in the light-houses near Sydney

Sydney we can turn away those who are unfit, and by and by promote those whose conduct is satisfactory, and who have proved that they can be trusted, to vacancies as they occur elsewhere. The cases you refer to only prove the necessity of the system we wished to be adopted.

C. Smith,
Esq.

2 July, 1862.

1108. You say when it was intended to appoint a keeper to Port Stephens Light the Government afterwards altered their intention? Yes, the Government ordered two parties to be sent to learn the trade of keeping a light for a week or two, and then go down and take charge of it, but one of them was found not fit for the situation at all.

1109. On Mr. Siddons declining to report this party as qualified, did not the Government abandon their intention of appointing him? Yes.

1110. And you are not aware of any instance where the Government appointed to a light-house any parties not previously reported on by Mr. Siddons, after probation, as duly qualified? A probation of a fortnight does not, in our opinion, qualify them at all.

1111. Are you aware that in some instances there has been a probation of a week only, at the recommendation of the Board? I am not aware of it.

1112. By Captain Moriarty: Is the light at Newcastle a catoptric or dioptric light? Dioptric, I believe; it has only got one burner.

1113. By Mr. Dick: Do you not think it would be a good practice to change these light-keepers periodically—remove them from one place to another? It might be desirable.

1114. Do you know whether it is the practice in England that they are two months on duty and one month off duty? Yes, but that is on sea lights, such as the Bell Rock and other stations where they are away from land altogether; they do not remove them in that way from light-houses on shore.

1115. Might not light-houses so distant from Sydney, and so isolated as the Jervis Bay Light-house, for instance, be treated on the same footing as if they were sea lights? Yes, it might be desirable in some instances to let the men come to town occasionally.

1116. Can you say whether it has been found that the quarrels which sometimes take place at light-houses originate more with the men or with their wives? No doubt they originate with both.

1117. By the Chairman: During the time you have been a member of the Pilot Board, have you been a party to making any claim on the Government for the fees provided for under the Harbour and Pilotage Act? Certainly not.

1118. Have any such claims been made by the Pilot Board during the time you have been a member of it? Yes, about the time I was appointed.

1119. Will you state what took place on the occasions when these fees were the subject of discussion at meetings of the Pilot Board? When they became the subject of discussion at the Board, shortly after my appointment, I inquired of the Honorable Member who I knew was instrumental in passing that Bill, whether it was intended the fees should go to the Board, and he told me it was not, but that it was intended they should be paid into the Treasury; upon that I told one or two of the other members of the Board, and we told the Chairman then that we laid no claim to them. In fact, here is a copy of a letter that Capt. Fox and I wrote to the Chairman of the Board when he was about resigning, and when the Board came almost to a dead lock in consequence of the matter. I think there were three of us who would not take the fees, and three who wanted to take them.

1120. Have you any objection to hand this letter in? Certainly not. (Letter read and handed in. Vide Appendix.) While this discussion concerning the fees was going on I happened to walk towards Miller's Point with the Colonial Secretary, and I then told him exactly how the matter stood, and shortly after this conversation a note came from Mr. Weekes demanding these fees from our Chairman, and that leads me to presume that Mr. Weekes was well aware how the matter stood at the Board when that intimation came to us. How he came to make the mendacious statements he has done I am quite at a loss to understand.

1121. By Mr. Weekes: Did the Board make an application for these fees? That occurred before I was a member of the Board. No doubt some members of the Board did make such an application.

1122. As a Board? Prior to my appointment—not as a Board after my appointment.

1123. By the Chairman: What took place upon the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer's application for these fees, during the time you were a member of the Board? We voted the fees away, and wrote that letter to the Chairman asking him to hand them over to the Government, as we laid no claim to them. You will see by that letter that the Chairman was about resigning his position, and we told him he had no occasion to do that.

1124. Were the Board equally divided? Yes.

1125. By Mr. Weekes: Who were the parties that laid claim to these fees during your time? I think Captain Darley, who will explain the matter when he comes here, Captain Deloitte, and another.

Addendum.—I have only to add my conviction that the Pilot Service and Light-house Establishments will never be conducted in a satisfactory manner whilst they are continued, as now, immediately under the Government, whose patronage is sought and obtained from political influences quite apart from the capabilities of the applicants to fill the situations.

APPENDIX.

Dear Sir,

Finding at the meeting to-day that you had resigned your seat at the Pilot Board, we beg to inform you that, with reference to a sum of money in your hands—received for certificates—which the Government have requested you to pay into the Treasury, we have no objection to your complying with this request, as we lay no claim to any portion of the said funds.

H. H. Browne, Esq.

We remain, &c.,

CHARLES SMITH.
H. T. FOX.

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 4 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

CAPT. MORIARTY,
MR. SADLEIR,MR. WEEKES,
MR. WILSON.

WILLIAM RICHMAN PIDDINGTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain H. T. Fox again called in, and further examined:—

- Captain
H. T. Fox.
4 July, 1862.
1126. By Captain Moriarty: I think you have expressed, generally, your opinion that the "Sea Witch" was not adapted for the Pilot Service? Yes.
1127. And the grounds of your objection to her were—that she did not draw water enough, that she was too short in proportion to her breadth, that she had a flat floor, and that, in your opinion, she did not stay well? That she would not hold to windward, and would not stay in bad weather.
1128. Your opinion was formed upon this state of circumstances? Yes, upon my examination of the ship, and the appearance of her build and model.
1129. You have stated that you examined, and that from her build and model she would not hold the wind as a pilot boat, and was unfit for the service? Yes, and from her great beam it would be difficult to lower boats in bad weather.
1130. Do you not think there would be great difficulty in heavy weather, outside the Heads, in lowering any boat off a small pilot boat, and in sending pilots on board ships? I do not see why, on ordinary occasions, there should be more difficulty there than there is on the coast of England. Whalers lower their boats on this coast in very bad weather.
1131. Are not whale-ships much larger, and do they not form a lee? But I need only remind you that the pilot boat goes under the lee of the big ship, so that the boat lowered has two lees—the lee of the big ship and the lee of the pilot vessel.
1132. Then you do think they can do that? They do so on the coast of England, and have done so from time immemorial, and I do not see any reason why they cannot do so here, if they have the same description of boats as they have on the coast of England.
1133. I do not think you concurred in the recommendation that the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" should be bought as pilot boats? I was not present at the meeting when the recommendation was made, but I concurred in it.
1134. With what view? For temporary pilot boats.
1135. Although you thought they were not suited for the purpose? They were the best we could provide under present circumstances; we thought they would answer for the temporary purpose, and if we found out ultimately that they would not answer they could be sold.
1136. Was not your opinion clear and distinct, that they would not answer permanently? We did not intend they should. They would not have been fitted out at first for definite pilot boats; they would have been at first slightly fitted out. We always contemplated that we should have to build pilot boats, but if these vessels had exceeded our expectations we might ultimately have fitted them out definitely as pilot boats. We considered that they were far superior to anything else that was offered.
1137. Then, at the time you recommended these vessels for the purpose of pilot boats, you had in contemplation to build vessels specially for the purpose? Yes.
1138. That being the case, I presume that as soon as these vessels were employed as pilot boats, you contemplated suggesting to the Colonial Treasurer that proper pilot boats should be built? I cannot say that we contemplated suggesting to the Minister that it should instantly be done, but we contemplated, unless they turned out better than we expected, the recommendation of such a course, and we guarded ourselves against any loss to the country by advising the purchase of such vessels as might be resold. If you turn to minute No. 11 —
1139. I take it for granted that, without reference to any documents, you will remember the circumstances? I was not present at that meeting.
1140. Then I will not ask you any further questions respecting it. I think I understood you to say that you had no clear idea of what your duties were as a member of the Pilot Board? If I recollect rightly, I stated that we considered our duties were to advise with the Government upon any point connected with pilots, lights, and matters of that kind.
1141. But that you had no instructions to guide you? Just so.
1142. Then it was a mere imagination of your own that these were your duties? It was not a mere imagination of our own, because these duties were imposed upon us.
1143. Upon any question being presented to you by the Colonial Treasurer, you could deal with it as you pleased? Yes.
1144. You never knew that there were any definite instructions to you as members of the Pilot Board? There are no defined instructions.
1145. There are? I have never seen them, and this is the first time I have heard that there are any in existence.
1146. They ought to have been read when you took your seats as members of the Pilot Board? They ought, if there were any.
1147. Having informed the Government of your wishes with respect to these boats, and with your opinion generally on that subject, do you not think you had done all that was necessary, and that all responsibility on your part ceased? Yes.
1148. Having given that information to the Treasurer, it was for him to decide what course to adopt? It was out of our hands.

1149. And if he gave you any orders, was it not your duty, as a member of a department under the supervision of that Minister, to obey him? Do you ask whether it was my duty blindly to obey him?

Captain
H. T. Fox.

1150. Having thrown upon the Minister all the responsibility, by detailing all your reasons with reference to the subject under consideration, did it not become your duty, as a member of a department under the Government, to obey strictly the orders you received? I never considered it to be my duty to obey blindly instructions upon any point of that sort; I thought it was my duty to remonstrate by every means in my power.

4 July, 1862.

1151. By Mr. Weekes: In any collision of opinion between the Government and the Pilot Board, which should give way? The Pilot Board I presume would have to give way, but I think there was no reason why we should not express our opinion.

1152. By Captain Moriarty: I say that having protected yourselves by stating what your views were upon the orders received from the Treasurer, was it not your duty, when further orders came, to obey them, as servants of the Government? If we were strictly and entirely servants.

1153. If you were in the public service? If the whole of my time was employed in the public service; but as I stated before, I am not aware that there is any other department exactly analogous to the Pilot Board.

1154. That is not the question. I wish to ask you whether, under those circumstances, it was your duty to obey orders? It was my duty first to remonstrate.

1155. And then to disobey? We did not disobey.

1156. To decline to carry out the orders you received? I do not consider that my relation to the Government, or that of the Pilot Board, was the same as the relation of any other department under Government. It is not the same as yours was when you were Port Master, or as Mr. Crook's is. My position was an honorary one to a certain extent, for the fee we received could scarcely be considered payment.

1157. No one questions that; I assume that you fill that office from a sheer wish to serve the country; but having placed yourself in that position—I do not wish to press the question—but I ask you, is it your opinion that you were at liberty to set all Government orders at defiance? Set them at defiance!

1158. If you do not comply with them that is setting them at defiance? I consider that we did our duty in acting as we did; that is, holding the situation we did. I know of no position analogous to that. If we had received salaries, and devoted the whole of our time to the Government, we should have been bound to carry out implicitly any instructions, but I consider that we had a divided responsibility to the Government and to the country.

1159. By Mr. Sadleir: Had you protected yourself in any way till you wrote that document, No. 31, where you say you do not see the use of a Pilot Board unless they can be trusted to choose a pilot boat;—was not that the first time you attempted to protect yourself by a protest? Yes, that was the first formal protest, and it was in answer to a minute from the Government, ordering us to do that which we had immediately before stated to the Government was inadvisable.

1160. Do you think in that protest you were guilty of disobedience? Not in the ordinary acceptance of the word disobedience, because I do not consider that we were in such a position as to oblige us to carry out orders without remonstrance.

1161. By Mr. Weekes: Having remonstrated as you did, do you not consider it was your duty, on the repetition of the order, to carry out the instructions of the Government? I think you asked me that question on my previous examination.

1162. By Mr. Sadleir: Is this an act of disobedience or only a protest? I hold it to be a protest, and we state why we decline—because we consider it will be a failure for the service, and because it appears not to be desirable that the public money should be so expended.

1163. The next minute is No. 32; there you are considered as having resigned? It says our resignation will be accepted.

1164. Without giving you an opportunity of disobedience at all? We had no power to disobey.

1165. I want to show that you were not guilty of disobedience—that you were dismissed without being guilty of disobedience? I think we were not guilty of disobedience.

1166. A question was put to you as to boats being lowered in gales of wind—did you ever see pilots taken out without boats at all? I have not seen it, but I have heard it from undoubted authority. It is a well-known fact that it is done by a whip from the lower yard-arm; but the Irish and Liverpool pilot boats, and those in the English Channel, are pilot boats, and not butcher's trays.

1167. You said that the "Sea Witch" is a good sea boat? Yes, I mean that she is seaworthy. I should not call her a particularly good sea boat. I said I should not be afraid to go round the World with her, but I should not care to do so, as she would be uneasy, and lurch to windward a good deal.

1168. Do you think that is the only quality necessary for a pilot boat? Certainly not.

1169. A vessel may be a good sea boat and yet not weatherly; in fact she may be a miserable tub? Yes, certainly. Dutch galliots are among the finest sea boats, but they would hardly suit for pilot boats.

1170. I see Mr. Cuthbert states that she is in good order and condition; do you think that qualifies her? Mr. Cuthbert gives no opinion as to her fitness for the service.

1171. He also says that he considers her to be "a good substantial vessel for her age and build"—does that qualify her? No, that is so uncertain a phrase that it is impossible to say what it means. She may be fifty or seventy years old, and yet be substantial for her age and build. There is now a vessel in the harbour which was built in 1789—the "Prince of Denmark,"—and the same thing might be said of her; she is a good vessel for her age and build.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
4 July, 1862.

1172. If you were going to buy a vessel for a special service, would you not be surprised or doubtful of her fitness, if a surveyor were to report that he thought her sound for her age and build? I have no hesitation in saying, had it been sent to the Pilot Board for their opinion, before the vessel was purchased (as I submit it ought to have been), they would have called for an explanation from Mr. Cuthbert. It was noticed by the Board immediately the report came before us, but the vessel had been bought before this. No prudent person, who knew anything about a vessel, would have purchased one on such a report, without first inquiring the extent to which the vessel was deteriorated by the causes mentioned, but it does not appear that he was even asked for an explanation.

1173. By Mr. Weekes: You say, "the causes mentioned"; what causes? Her age and build.

1174. Does not Mr. Cuthbert state her age? Mr. Cuthbert states that she was built in 1855, but she was not built in 1855.

1175. Do you know that of your own knowledge? I was told so by a person on whom I can rely.

1176. Do you know when she was built? In 1854.

1177. By Mr. Sadleir: I see in No. 31 you say, "the services of the Board should be dispensed with"; did you mean the entire Board? I have answered that question before. We meant, if the Government applied to any Board for their opinion, and then threw their opinion aside, it would be better to have no Board at all, but to give orders to the Executive Officer direct.

1178. Do you think No. 32 was an answer to that; it says, "certain members of the Pilot Board declined"? There is nothing in No. 31, or in any record I can find, to show that this was not the act of the Board. The previous minute says, "the Board," and there is nothing to show that it was the act of certain members.

1179. You did not decline individually, but collectively? The Board collectively. The meaning of the minute was, that if the Government did not take the opinion of the people they asked, and who were expressly appointed to advise in such matters, it would be better that there should be no Board.

1180. Look at No. 33; you there state that on many similar occasions the opinion of the Board "had been ignored by the Minister, and those of other persons adopted, and that "frequently the Harbour Master, as in this instance, had been permitted to commence "operations without the knowledge of the Board," so that that was another reason why you thought the Board might be dispensed with? The Board go on to say, "that if they were "to be in any way responsible for the success or failure of the new system of pilotage about "to be initiated, they ought not in justice to be asked to carry it out with materials which, "in their opinion, are unfit."

1181. In fact, that you considered you were not properly treated by such interference? Clearly so—that we were harassed and hampered in every way.

1182. By Mr. Weekes: Is not the best model of a ship matter of opinion, and do not scientific men of the greatest eminence differ very materially as to the best model of a ship? They differ in some respects, but there are certain points respecting which none who understand anything of naval constructions differ.

1183. Do not some advocate a greater breadth of beam, and some a greater draught? Yes, for different purposes.

1184. Some fuller in the bows, and some sharper? It depends upon what they are for.

1185. Are not these material differences? There is a material difference, inasmuch as ships built according to those different plans act better or worse. For instance, Sir William Symonds, late Surveyor to the Navy, built all his ships with immense beam, and the consequence was, that although they were fast vessels, they rolled their guns under water in bad weather, and were therefore almost useless in the Navy.

1186. Has a perfect model been arrived at—one upon which scientific men, by common consent, agree? I think not, but there has been a greater approximation to perfection, and models of vessels suited to different purposes have from time to time been improved upon in England for many years past. The suggestions that have resulted from experience have been embodied in the construction of pilot boats, and I believe the pilot boats on the coast of England are as near perfection for that service as any that can be obtained anywhere. As a proof of that, I may mention that Hamburgh, which has for centuries been engaged in ship-building, sends to England for pilot boats —

1187. It was your object personally, and your idea was afterwards adopted by the Board, that these vessels should be built in England? My object personally?

1188. You appear, from these documents, to have taken a leading part in the matter, the correspondence being addressed to you? There is certainly one letter here addressed to me, authorizing me to open the letters of Captain Elwood. I have some notes here upon that subject, which, if the Board will allow me to read —

1189. You stated that you recommended the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" merely as make-shifts? As make-shifts.

1190. Would it not have been more prudent of the Board that Government should not purchase vessels at all till they could get proper ones, than to purchase vessels at such high prices for mere make-shifts? We would have done so, but from your minutes we saw that you were anxious the service should be proceeded with at once.

1191. What was to prevent the Board from suggesting to the Minister that no rash step like that should be taken, but that they should wait till proper boats could be obtained? We did not think it necessary, as all our previous suggestions had been thwarted; as, for instance, that we should advertise in the neighbouring Colonies.

1192. Did I decline absolutely to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies? You say in your minute that it would be better to advertise only in New South Wales.

1193. Read it? "I think it would be better that the advertisements for tenders should apply at first only to New South Wales."

1194. "At first"? Yes.

1195. What farther? None of the vessels offered, in consequence of this advertisement, were in all respects eligible. We therefore again advised (No. 7) that the alternative mentioned in the Treasurer's own minute (No. 3) should be adopted.

1196. Are you reading from a printed document? No, I am reading from notes. We felt that as none of the vessels were in all respects eligible, but as the Treasurer was anxious that the service should be commenced without delay (Nos. 1 and 3), it would be better to obtain, and fit out temporarily, two of the most suitable.

1197. That is going from the question—I asked, did I decline to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies? No, you did not positively decline, but you did not assent to it.

1198. What is the date of the letter of the Board where you say that none of the vessels offered are in all respects eligible, and that you think it would be desirable to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies? The 7th February.

1199. Is there a minute below that? Yes, dated 8th February.

1200. Is not that merely asking the Board as to the course they intended to pursue in advertising in the neighbouring Colonies—does it contain anything more than an inquiry? Yes; you asked me that question before, and I said it was a question which you answered yourself—a question which was hardly necessary, because it was so improbable.

1201. That minute simply asked the intention of the Board with respect to advertising? Yes, and the Board replied at once.

1202. When? I presume as soon as the matter came before us.

1203. As soon after as the Board met? Yes.

1204. As the Board recommended in this minute of the 7th February, from which I have not dissented, that tenders should be called for in the neighbouring Colonies, did they, at any subsequent time, recommend that tenders in the neighbouring Colonies should still be invited? I think not, because other vessels offered at that time.

1205. Then it did not arise from any obstacle that I threw in the way that they were not advertised for in the neighbouring Colonies, but simply because the Board reported that they had found two vessels? It was clearly in consequence of your having directed that tenders should be called for only in this Colony.

1206. That was merely a preliminary step—did I not say tenders should apply at first? You say so; but it was in consequence of your opposition to our advertising in the neighbouring Colonies that these vessels were recommended; if you had not objected we might, long before these vessels were recommended, have had tenders from the neighbouring Colonies.

1207. The only thing in which I differed from you was, that first of all I was desirous that New South Wales should be tried, and then the neighbouring Colonies? But when we recommended that the neighbouring Colonies should be tried you thwarted us.

1208. Mention the mode in which I thwarted you? By sending to ask what was the Board's intention when we got the tenders.

1209. Do you not think that was a proper step for me to take, in order that I might know how you intended to be guided? I do not think there was any necessity for such an inquiry, for the whole thing carries an appearance of absurdity upon the face of it.

1210. Still, making allowance for a Minister at the head of a department not being so clear upon these matters as a Pilot Board might be, was it an unreasonable or improper question for me to ask in what way you intended to be guided in the selection of boats in the neighbouring Colonies? Still, there was so much time lost —

1211. Time was of no great consequence. Then it turns out that I did not prevent your advertising in the other Colonies, but suggested that it should be done first in New South Wales? You prevented it, by not acceding to our suggestion.

1212. That is, I did not adopt it at first, but confined the advertisement, in the first instance, to New South Wales? Yes.

1213. Did I prevent or object to your adopting it afterwards? You do not say in your minute it is desirable now to advertise.

1214. After I had asked the Board what course they intended to pursue, did not the Board then recommend to me that two vessels should be bought in Sydney, without following up their suggestion that advertisements should be published in the neighbouring Colonies? I was not present when the Board recommended them, and I do not know what was then said, but we had lost the chance of advertising.

1215. What chance? We had lost the time.

1216. There was always the opportunity? You did not instruct us to advertise.

1217. Did I object? No; but it was competent for you to say "It will be better to advertise."

1218. Would not that—after I had received the suggestion of the Board to purchase the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"—have placed the Government in their present position, and have exposed them to the charge of over-riding the recommendation of the Board? No, because it was what they had recommended before. We had come to the conclusion that there was some objection to advertising in the neighbouring Colonies, and our intention had been thwarted.

1219. Thwarted by asking a reasonable question? By the delay.

1220. You say, in your letter of the 7th February, that the Board "do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible, and they think it desirable to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies before making any final recommendation"—did I do anything after that but inquire how you intended to be guided in purchasing a vessel in the neighbouring Colonies? Nothing else.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
4 July, 1862.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
4 July, 1862.

1221. In reply to that, did you not immediately recommend that I should purchase the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"? No; in reply to that, the Board exactly answered your question. The reply in No. 9 refers to No. 8 from the Treasurer; but the recommendation of 7th February remains to this moment unanswered.

1222. Do you mean to say that you did not, after that letter on the 14th, recommend that the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" should be bought? The "Atlantic" and "Pacific" were recommended to be bought, but you had never adopted our suggestion to advertise in the neighbouring Colonies.

1223. What is the date of the minute in which you propose to examine the vessels during the week? The 14th February.

1224. What is the date of the minute in which you recommend that the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" should be bought? The 14th February; at that meeting I was not present.

1225. You were absent from several of these meetings? On the 13th and 14th only.

1226. Have you dissented from anything done at these meetings from which you were absent? No.

1227. Then, in fact, you adopted the proceedings? Yes.

1228. Then you have no reason to object to any inquiry with reference to those meetings? Only that I was not present, and do not, therefore, know everything that took place.

1229. In my minute No. 8, I inquire how you intend to deal with tenders from the neighbouring Colonies, and you reply that the Pilot Boards of the respective ports are competent to report upon the qualifications of any ships offered to them; and on the same day you recommend the Government to buy the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"? It was recommended to the Government, but I was not present.

1230. I think you call the "Sea Witch," in a sort of fancy phrase, a "butcher's tray"? I say her model is a sort of butcher's tray model.

1231. Do you know what a butcher's tray is? I know it is very shallow in comparison with its beam.

1232. Do you know what is her draught? No.

1233. Do you think she draws nine feet water in midships? I do not think a vessel of seven feet and a half depth of hold would be likely to draw so much.

1234. Would you like to go round the World in a butcher's tray? When I say that, I mean that she is broad, flat, and shallow.

1235. It is a sort of fancy phrase? Some call it a skimming dish; it is a phrase among sailors for a thing flat and shallow. I do not mean that she is a butcher's tray, but that that is the sort of model.

1236. By Mr. Wilson: With regard to advertising in the neighbouring Colonies, did the Board consider that the non-adoption of their recommendation was equivalent to a refusal? Yes; after we had recommended that tenders should be advertised for, Mr. Weekes asked what would be done in the event of our advertising.

1237. By Mr. Weekes: Did you give time for an answer, or did you send up a recommendation on the same day that these two vessels should be purchased? I was not present at the meeting.

1238. By Mr. Wilson: You stated, in answer to my question, that the non-adoption by the Minister of your report you considered as equivalent to a refusal? As equivalent to his declining to adopt it.

1239. You have stated that the "Sea Witch" is a very shallow vessel? —

1240. What do you state is the depth of her hold? Seven feet seven-tenths.

1241. Supposing a keel two feet deep had been put in midships, or in any other way upon the "Sea Witch," would it have improved her weatherly qualities? In smooth water a good deal, and slightly in a seaway.

1242. It would give her nominally greater draft? Yes, and it would to a certain extent improve her weatherly qualities.

1243. So that, supposing her draft to be nine feet, that may be attributable to the depth of her keel? Yes; a vessel of seven feet and a half in hold could not draw nine feet without a great deal of keel.

1244. That keel would not materially improve her qualities as a pilot boat? Not very materially.

1245. If you turn to page seventeen, you will see there is a communication from a Company calling themselves Harvey and Sons? Yes.

1246. Who are those gentlemen? Ship-builders, of Ipswich.

1247. Do you know them by reputation? I know them by reputation, from their names having been mentioned to me by the Captain of the brig "Test," of Ipswich, when he was here some two or three years ago.

1248. Do you know whether they are famous for building pilot boats? My information is derived from Captain Elwood, and he stated that the firm had been employed in building pilot boats for Hamburg and other places. All that I absolutely know with respect to this matter is contained in these papers, excepting what I learned from a conversation I had with Captain Elwood. It has been thrown out in another place, as an inuendo, that there was something underhand in connection with this matter, and my name was mentioned. I feel it to be, therefore, due to myself to say that I did no more than any private individual might have done. About the end of 1859, nearly two years before the money for these boats was voted, I fell in with a Captain Elwood, of the brig "Test," of Ipswich, and in conversation he mentioned that he had been fitting out vessels in Ipswich for pilot boats. I then, feeling a deep interest in the subject, asked him if he could tell me about the cost, and other matters. He said, "I will write to the builders, and get you all the information I can." He wrote to the builders, at least I presume he must have written, for I have not had any communication

- munication with them, although an inuendo has been thrown out, as I have said, that some underhand and improper correspondence was carried on without the knowledge of Government. At length a letter came out, No. 59, from Messrs. Harvey and Son, authorizing me to open Captain Elwood's letter, if he should be absent from Sydney. In that letter was inclosed a specification of a pilot boat, similar to the boats built by them for Liverpool and Hamburg. (The witness read the letter, No. 59.) That is all I or any member of the Pilot Board have had to do with this correspondence; though we are charged with doing something of which the Government were not aware. I submit that the information thus obtained is most valuable, as showing what sort of vessels are used for the service at Home, how built, how fitted out, and the price, and I have no hesitation in saying that no vessels have ever been built in the Colony in any way equal to this specification; nor could they be at a price that will approximate to it. I submit, that instead of having been subjected to censure or blame, we were entitled to praise for obtaining these particulars; we have done only what a prudent man under such circumstances would have done in his own case; in the steps I took in the early part of this matter I was prompted only by a desire to aid the public service, and I thought this was an opportunity by which I could get information that could not be obtained in any other way. Having obtained the information, the letters were put among the Board papers, and any one reading the specification must be struck with its clearness, and the adaptability of the vessel to the purposes required; any one who looks at it, and who understands anything of such matters, must see that a vessel of equal character could not be built in the Colony, fastened as this is, at less than an advance of from 25 to 50 per cent. upon the price named. (The witness read the specification, No. 58.)
1249. Your only object in making these inquiries was the benefit of the Colony? Entirely for the benefit of the public; I utterly disclaim any other feeling whatever, and I court the fullest inquiry. I should not have felt so strongly if I had not heard Mr. Weekes state that this had been going on without the knowledge of Government, and it was said in a way to convey to those who heard him the idea that we were doing what ought not to be done. I therefore say that we court the fullest inquiry, for I am sure that since I have been on the Board no act has been done which an honest man need be ashamed of.
1250. What is the date of this communication from Messrs. Harvey and Sons? 20th February, 1860.
1251. And this correspondence between the Pilot Board and the Government, on the subject of the "Sea Witch," took place in 1862? Yes, this letter from Harvey and Sons was received long before the money was voted; it was when the matter was in embryo.
1252. Do you recollect the time when you had this conversation with Captain Elwood? About the end of 1859.
1253. And it was in consequence of this conversation with Captain Elwood that these communications from Messrs. Harvey and Sons came out to this Colony? Yes, they came out to Captain Elwood, and I received authority from Messrs. Harvey and Sons to open them if he was away from the Colony.
1254. By Mr. Weekes: As a matter of fact, this negotiation was not communicated to Government? I do not look upon it as a negotiation. No letter has gone from the Pilot Board, that I am aware of, to Messrs. Harvey and Sons; Messrs. Harvey and Sons had written to Captain Elwood.
1255. And the letter was received by you? That was simply because Captain Elwood was away.
1256. As a matter of fact, the Government was not aware of this communication with Messrs. Harvey and Sons in relation to building a pilot boat? I do not know that it was, at the time it was received; it was communicated as soon as the question came up.
1257. It is of no importance? It is very important to me that I should be relieved of the imputation of having done what I should be ashamed to do.
1258. Who charged you? You said you found something was going on of which the Government was not aware.
1259. Is it not the fact that something had been going on in relation to these pilot boats that the Government were not aware of? The Government were not aware at the time the letter was received, but they were made aware at the time the question of pilot boats came to be considered.
1260. By Mr. Wilson: It was a conversation between yourself and Captain Elwood that drew out this communication from Messrs. Harvey and Sons? Yes.
1261. It was not the Pilot Board? No.
1262. Do you think the Government has a right to know all the communications made to you, because you are a member of the Board? Certainly not. If you turn to No. 56, you will see what my opinion is with respect to these documents, and the view I took of them, when I was requested by Mr. Lane to deliver up the plans.
1263. Mr. Lane is the Under Secretary to the Treasury? Yes. The Government asked me to return the tracing and specification. You are aware of the mode by which they came into my hand—they were addressed to Captain Elwood, and I was authorized to open his letter —
1264. By Captain Moriarty: In point of fact they were his property? They were his property undoubtedly, and I wrote this letter, No. 56, to show that I did not consider they were the property of Government.
1265. By Mr. Weekes: Do you consider them to be the property of the Pilot Board? No.
1266. Were they placed with the public documents at the Pilot Board? Yes, in order that the Government might be in possession of all the information we had.
1267. Then they were not of a private nature? They came out as of a private nature. I was not aware at the time, that when once a paper was put up with papers of the Government, the Government laid claim to it.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
4 July, 1862.

1268. Were not these papers marked by the Chairman of the Board, and put aside among the records of the Pilot Board? I cannot say how they were marked; I merely say that I got the information in a bonâ fide manner, and that I put that information before the Pilot Board.

1269. By Mr. Wilson: You might have done that with any other private communication that you thought would throw any light or give information upon any public matter? Yes.

1270. By Captain Moriarty: You might have shown any private letter without intending that it should be claimed as public property? Certainly. At page 19 there is a letter addressed to myself from Messrs. Harvey and Sons, which was in the hands of the Board, and is claimed by the Government.

1271. By Mr. Weekes: Did all these papers come to me as public papers from the Pilot Board? I do not know how they came to you.

1272. Did they not come to me with a recommendation that vessels should be built in England? Yes.

1273. From the Pilot Board? I do not claim these as private papers now. I am only endeavouring to defend myself from what appears to be the charge against me, that I had been doing something underhand and wrong—that was the construction I put upon what you said.

1274. That was your construction? Yes, from the manner in which you spoke.

1275. I shall be glad to take this opportunity of stating that such was the furthest from my intention, and if you understood it conveyed any imputation upon yourself as an individual, or upon the Pilot Board as a body, I beg to disclaim it entirely? I am glad to hear you say so.

1276. By Mr. Wilson: Do you see a letter, No. 60, from a person signing himself Wm. Johnson? Yes.

1277. Do you know who he is? No, I have no knowledge at all.

1278. By Mr. Weekes: Can you guess? I cannot even guess. I am utterly at a loss to know. It is a letter to which we attach no value whatever, but as it was sent to the Board, they thought it ought to be sent to the Treasurer.

1279. By Captain Moriarty: You know nothing about him? No.

1280. And attach no importance to his opinion? No.

1281. By Mr. Weekes: Do you not think that mechanics in this Colony are as able to build a good vessel as any mechanics in England? Yes, I do.

1282. Are they not as able to build up to any specification given to them as any mechanics in England? I dare say if the specification and model are given exact they can build as well as the mechanics in England, but they have not the models.

1283. Do you consider the wood of this Colony as suitable for ship-building, looking to its durability and other qualities, as the timber in England? The hard woods are, but I do not think it would be desirable to build a pilot boat of all hard wood; I think it would be too heavy and laboursome.

1284. Then your reason for recommending that these vessels should be built in England was that they could be built there cheaper than in this Colony? Yes, and that the model would be certain.

1286. Is it not reasonable to suppose that scientific men, sailors, or shipwrights, with a knowledge of the seas on this coast, are quite as competent to design a suitable model of a pilot boat for this coast as a shipwright acquainted only with the narrow seas of England? I think not, for the shipwright here has to experiment, and carries out only his own ideas; but pilot boats require a peculiar model, and their building is in the hands of a few persons in England. Every shipwright cannot build them. In support of that, I may refer to what is disclosed in this correspondence, that Liverpool, perhaps the largest seaport in the World, does not build her own pilot boats, but sends to the east coast of England, to Ipswich or Harwich. Liverpool possesses large ship-building yards, and has no scarcity of mechanical skill, and yet it is thought no reflection upon her shipbuilders to send to an insignificant place like Ipswich for her pilot boats. The port of Hamburg also, in a foreign country, where the people have been building ships for themselves for ages, find the superiority of the models of the English pilot boats to be so great that they send also to this comparatively obscure and insignificant place for their pilot boats.*

1287. Are there not competing building yards for building pilot boats? There may be.

1288. Would there not be some dissimilarity of model between the pilot boats of White, of Cowes, and of Harvey and Sons, of Ipswich? There may be; but the fact of Liverpool having sent to Messrs. Harvey and Sons for three pilot boats shows, I think, that there must be some superiority in their designs. Our reason for wishing to send to England for vessels was, not because we doubted the mechanical skill of builders here, or that there were not

* NOTE (on revision).—I said, when the great ports of Liverpool and Hamburg sent to other ports to have pilot boats built, it could be no reflection on the skill of our shipbuilders to do the same.

not sufficient good shipwrights, but because we felt there might not be experience in building pilot boats, and if the model were a failure, however excellent the work, the whole would be a failure. Even if the "Sea Witch" were built as this specification states, and had similar fastenings, she would still be a failure for the purpose, because her model is defective.

1289. That is a matter of opinion? I think it is pretty well proved that she is a failure.

1290. It has not yet been proved? It will not be long first. We have been censured and held up to contumely for sending to England, when it is said the money ought to be spent here; but it does strike me as something inconsistent, that at the time you charged us with doing what you do not consider desirable, you were in treaty for the purchase of an American vessel with an American, who, as soon as he received the money, would take it away altogether.

1291. That is a very different thing from building a vessel in England? I maintain that we were exercising a reasonable and proper caution in acting as we did, and did only what any prudent shipowner would have done under the circumstances. Within the last week, one of the finest vessels belonging to the port has arrived in Sydney, built to order in Scotland for one of the most experienced and well-known shipowners of the port, Mr. Sayers, and two others may be shortly expected from Britain, built for another of our shipowners, Mr. Andrews—

1292. Is that a matter of congratulation? I do not think it is a matter of congratulation, so far as the Colony generally is concerned, but I mention it in defence of the view we have taken, and to show that we desired to do with the Government money what we would have done with the money of a private individual.

1293. Will you not give the Government the same credit? Not if the Government will not adopt our advice.

1294. You claim purity of motive for yourselves, but will you not concede the same to other parties. I am willing to take you at your own estimate; will you not be a little charitable, and allow that Government may have been equally desirous to protect the public interests? I say these papers do not disclose it. You urge that these vessels should be built here, when we show that they can be built better and cheaper in England.

1295. That you have not shown, for you do not yet know what they can be built for here? I am sure they cannot be built according to this specification for anything like the amount mentioned.

1296. I believe they can? That will be seen.

1297. By Captain Moriarty: Have you been much employed on the coast of England? Yes; I went to sea as a cabin boy, in a collier, before I was thirteen years of age.

1298. And remained there how long? Even before that I was accustomed to be afloat; I was born near Torbay, and almost from infancy I was knocking about in boats; in fact, I may say, I was almost born at sea, and have been accustomed to fore and aft craft from a very early age. I was nearly three years in the collier, and after that, was an ordinary seaman in a coasting schooner; I was then before the mast, in the Mediterranean trade, in one of the fastest clippers of the day, a schooner. I came from England to Van Diemen's Land, in a vessel of 150 tons.

1299. Are you aware that there is a great dissimilarity in the different vessels attached to the ports of England as pilot boats? Do you mean in rig?

1300. I mean generally, that what are adapted to one port are not adapted to another? Their general adaptability would be the same.

1301. Take Falmouth and Portsmouth—were the pilot boats of those two places the same? They were very generally the same; they were cutters in my time.

1302. The Scilly Isles? They were cutters in my time.

1303. Off the port of Cork and Kinsale? They were cutters.

1304. Are they similar in their build and rig and fitting out? No, some were more expensive in their fitting out than others.

1305. Is there not a difference in every port? Some have peculiar local causes to contend with.

1306. Were you ever in the North Sea? Yes.

1307. Is there not a distinct difference between the boats employed at Plymouth and Falmouth, and again those off Kinsale and the Irish coast? Yes, and at Yarmouth. They are nearly all open boats there, but open boats would not answer for us; the Deal boats are also open boats.

1308. Have you ever seen any Dutch pilot boats? Yes, I think I have seen them down the Channel, but I never examined them very closely. They are cutters, I think; in fact, they were nearly all cutters formerly; they are now building nearly all schooners.

1309. Have you ever seen the pilot boats come back to harbour? I have not.

1310. Then I have, constantly; a hundred times? I do not remember that I have ever seen them do so.

1311. By Mr. Weekes: Are you not aware that pilot boats are often compelled to put back on the coast of England through stress of weather? I am not aware that they are.

1312. Sometimes? Very seldom.

1313. Do you speak from your own knowledge? I sailed out of the port of Liverpool a good many years, and I do not remember their putting back.

1314. Were you there in all the storms that occurred during that time? No; I could not very well sail out of the place and be in all the storms that took place there.

1315. You are not aware generally—? I am aware, generally, that they did not put back. I have seen in the papers, that on the night of the loss of the "Royal Charter," when there was a terrific gale of wind, the Liverpool pilot boats kept out all the night.

1316. I think you have already stated that it would be prudent even for pilots to run run into port at times? Yes; but I followed it up by saying that there were fewer days in the year on this coast when it would be necessary for a pilot boat to put into harbour than on the coast of England.

1317. By Captain Moriarty: Do you know where the "Royal Charter" was lost? Yes.

1318. In ordinary gales, does not from Point Lynas to that point afford a good shelter? Yes, with the wind off the land; but the wind was dead on the land when she was lost.

1319. Do you find them cruising outside off the Skerries —? You find them cruising from outside off the Skerries all the way to the north-west Buoy, at a short distance off the land; they dodge under the land if there are no vessels in sight, but if there are vessels in sight they come out always.

1320. Are there different stations for the pilot boats sailing out of Liverpool? Yes, at Great Arme's Head, Point Lynas, and the Skerries.

1321. There is another station for pilot boats? From Liverpool?

1322. Yes; do you forget the northern passage? That channel was not in existence when I first went to sea.

1323. Was it when you left Liverpool? Yes; I omitted that.

1324. Is it not the practice for these vessels to change their stations as they get rid of their pilots? That is a matter of detail I am not aware of. I know there was one out on the night the "Royal Charter" was lost, and the wind was right into the bay; he was at sea all that night, and I believe there was then the heaviest gale there has been for many years.

1325. By Mr. Sadleir: You have stated that you would be as careful of Government as of private money; do you not in minute No. 33 refer to the public expenditure? We refer to a minute of the Minister, in which we are told that "to protect the public expenditure is the first duty of every department."

1326. Did you not in pursuance of this first duty enter this protest? Clearly.

1327. By Mr. Weekes: Is it true that the Pilot Board or certain members of the Pilot Board did, some two or three years back, lay claim to large sums of money which they had received as fees for certificates? I am aware that it is the fact.

1328. Was that a joint action of the Board? No, it was spoken of just after Captain Smith, Captain Watson, and myself came to the Board; it was a matter which had evidently been discussed before.

1329. Who were the parties who urged that claim? The previous members of the Board, Captains Deloitte, Darley, and Mann, I believe; I speak now from memory—it did not affect us.

1330. So far as yourself and Captain Smith are concerned you never made a claim to that money? Neither Captains Smith, Watson, nor myself ever laid a claim to any of that money.

1331. Was it your opinion that it was an unfounded claim on the part of the members who did raise it? I do not know that I should give my opinion upon that. The view I took of the case, I have no hesitation in saying, was this:—I ascertained from some one who was present at the passing of the Act, that it was not the intention of the framers of the Act that the Board should have the fees, and therefore I would not take advantage of any quibble as to the wording of the Act.

1332. You thought the claim was unfounded? I do not say I thought the claim was unfounded, as I believe, looking strictly at the wording of the Act, that it gave the fees to the Board. I am told it is a copy of the English Act, under which the examiners do get the fees; but when I understood from a person who was present in Parliament when it was passed, that it was not the intention to give the fees to the Board, I would not take advantage of it.

1333. By Captain Moriarty: These fees were derived from what source? From certificates given to shipmasters of their competency to take their vessels in and out of ports of New South Wales without a pilot.

1334. These certificates were given for Sydney and Newcastle? For any port where there was a pilot.

1335. Were there not gentlemen on that Board who were not themselves competent to pilot a vessel into these harbours? I do not wish to give an opinion upon what other gentlemen are competent to do. I know that I have constantly piloted my own vessel in.

1336. Do you think it a sound course to adopt, to subject men who are beyond all question competent to take their vessels into these harbours to the necessity of receiving a certificate from men who are utterly incompetent? I think it is folly to have men examined by people who are utterly ignorant.

TUESDAY, 8 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

MR. DICKSON,
CAPT. MORIARTY,

MR. SADLEIR,
MR. WEEKES,

MR. WILSON.

SAUL SAMUEL, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain H. T. Fox again called in and still further examined:—

Captain
H. T. Fox.

8 July, 1862.

1337. By Mr. Weekes: All the petitioners now before the Committee are sailors, I believe? They were bred to the sea, I believe.

1339. Do you think from that circumstance they, and men of similar experience, are best able to judge of the qualifications of a ship? Yes, I think so, of the sort of ships to which they have been accustomed.

1340. Is Captain Towns a sailor? I have no doubt that he is, but it was before my time in this Colony. Captain
H. T. Fox.
8 July, 1862.

1341. He has been in command of ships? Of my own knowledge I do not know it, it was before my time; but no doubt it is a matter of record.

1342. You know by repute that he has been? By repute. I do not think Captain Towns has been the commander of a ship for twenty years or more.

1343. Will you turn to No. 22, a letter signed R. Towns? Yes. (The witness referred.)

1344. Does Captain Towns there state that he considers the "Sea Witch" a perfect model of what is required for a pilot boat? Yes; "this vessel is the perfect model of what we require"; and he says before that that she is "in every way suited for the purpose of a sea pilot boat."

1345. Do you know Captain John Vine Hall? I know him—I have seen him to talk to him.

1346. Is he a sailor? I have seen him in command of a ship; he was in command of the "Cresus," of the "Great Eastern," and I have heard of other large ships; I do not know whether he has had any experience of small vessels.

1347. Do you think his being selected for the command of such a vessel as the "Great Eastern" showed an appreciation of his qualities as a sailor? I do not think it necessarily follows that it does. Captain Vine Hall is a man that a great fuss was made about, in consequence of his having done something to the "Cresus" in Sydney; he brought himself into notice in that way; but I believe another man, Mr. Dawson, the ironfounder, ought to have had most of the credit of that. But I do not say that Captain Vine Hall is not a sailor; I should be sorry to say that, for I do not know what his qualifications are.

1348. Do you see a letter, No. 42, signed John Vine Hall and William Owen? Yes.

1349. Does Captain Hall say there, in reference to the build of the "Sea Witch," "we consider her scantling and planking to be of fair dimensions, of good quality, and sound, as far as we are able to see"? Yes.

1350. Does he say in a subsequent part, in reference to her hold of the water, "this we imagine would give a suitable hold of the water for a vessel of 63 tons, which is the measurement of the 'Sea Witch,' and which, in conjunction with her very suitable rig, affords good reason for believing her to be (as the captain assured us she is) a very weatherly craft. Possessing this very essential quality, and properly fitted out, we believe she will render good service as a sea pilot boat"? Yes, Captain Hall says that.

1351. That is Captain Hall's opinion? Yes; but if you notice the paragraph before the one you have read, "Hold of water," he says—"Her sailing draft, as we were informed by the captain," not from anything else; and this captain, as I shewed before, has stated what is not correct; and with reference to her draft amidships, that is also hearsay—"She draws somewhat more we understand amidships, having a depth of keel there of 24 inches"—which also I have reason to believe is not correct.

1352. Have you had an opportunity of seeing this vessel in dock? No; but I have heard from persons who know the vessel well.

1353. Then simply on hearsay you dispute the evidence of Captain Vine Hall? I say what is hearsay, and Captain Vine Hall simply says what is hearsay; he says—"Her sailing draft, as we were informed by the captain"—"She draws somewhat more, as we understand"—clearly shewing that he does not speak from his own observation.

1354. Do you know whether the draft of water given there is correct? No, I do not.

1355. You do not know that it is incorrect? No.

1356. Do you know Captain Rountree? Yes.

1357. Do you know Captain Livingstone? Yes.

1358. Turn to No. 39—Are both of these gentlemen sailors? I do not know whether Captain Rountree is a sailor—I know he brought a vessel out to this Colony; but I heard Captain Rountree say in Court that he had served his time as a carpenter.

1359. Are not many sailors practical shipwrights also? There are some, no doubt. There is a mystery about that report, which I do not understand; it commences in the plural—"We, the undersigned," and then towards the close it says—"I may say it is not unusual to put four feet of hanging keel on yachts." Now I should like to know who is this mighty I—I do not know whether it is Rountree or Livingstone.

1360. Does it state that "the vessel throughout is a good staunch vessel, timber and frame of the usual size for tonnage"? It does.

1362. In answer to another question, "Is she chiefly copper-fastened?" do they say—"Except the centre fastenings; we cannot say if the keel fastenings are copper, but in every part she is strictly and sufficiently copper-fastened as high as necessary"? They say so, but they clearly contradict themselves.

1363. That is matter of opinion? They say she is "strictly copper-fastened," and yet they say the centre fastenings are not copper, so that she cannot be strictly copper-fastened.

1364. Are you acquainted with Captain Bowles, of the schooner "Tawera"? I know there was a schooner of that name commanded by Captain Bowles; I do not know the man—I have seen him.

1365. Does he state in No. 41—"I never sailed in a finer sea boat than the "Sea Witch," and I feel sure the vessel will give satisfaction as a pilot boat, as no vessel could be better suited for the purpose"? He does.

1366.

Captain
H. T. Fox.

1366. Do you see a letter, No. 44, signed by Fred. W. Sidney, dated from the Admiralty and Colonial Survey Office? Yes.

1367. Is he a commander in the Navy? I have every reason to believe he is; I do not know him.

8 July, 1862.

1368. Does he state in that letter—"I should have been very glad, on the part of the Admiralty, to join with the Colonial Government in her purchase for a surveying vessel, "in preference to the 'Captain Cook,' believing her in every way qualified as a sea-going vessel"? Yes, but he says that evidently without ever having been on board; and I would explain that a surveying vessel for this coast would require to possess very different qualities from those which would be necessary in a pilot boat; a surveying vessel to go into the harbours of this coast must be of light draft.

1369. Are you aware how much the vessel now employed draws? No.

1370. Are you aware that she draws as much as the "Sea Witch"? No.

1371. Do you know whether Captain Sidney contemplates going into bar harbours? I presume he must do so.

1372. By the Chairman: Could he make a proper survey of the coast without doing so? No, he could not. I know the "Captain Cook" is intended to go into bar harbours. I know that the "Sea Witch" is larger, and is more commodious; but I do not know their relative draft of water. Captain Sidney does not say that he had been on board the "Sea Witch;" he says—"From her appearance, size, and draft of water"; but I do not say that the "Sea Witch" would not have suited Captain Sidney; indeed, I pointed her out to Mr. Hixson, who is the second in command, as a vessel suited to the service they were about to commence.

1373. By Mr. Weekes: You stated that you would have intrusted the selection of pilot boats to the Pilot Boards of the respective Colonies, many of whose members you knew by repute? I think I did not state that I would leave it to them to determine definitely. I think our plan would most likely have been to have had their report referred to us. The wording of the minute may be that it should be left to them, but I do not think we understood that it should be left with them definitely. I think I stated that I knew the chairman of three several Boards personally, Captain Douglas, South Australia, who is also known to yourself; Captain Ferguson, Victoria, whom I have known twenty years; and Captain Gilmore, of Launceston.

1374. From what you know of the other members of the Boards you would have been satisfied to have left the matter in their hands? I would sooner take their opinion than that of chance men, as Captain Vine Hall and Mr. Owen.

1375. Had the present Pilot Board been the Pilot Board of a neighbouring Colony, would you have been satisfied to take their report as to the suitability of a pilot boat in that Colony? I should rather not give my opinion as to the qualifications of the present Board. I have my own opinion, and if the question is pushed I will give it.

1376. I do not wish to press it? I have not a very high opinion of some of the present Pilot Board, as far as their local knowledge goes; but I do not wish to have my opinion dragged out of me.

1377. By Mr. Wilson: Will you be kind enough to look at No. 39, the opinion signed by Thomas Rountree and Willm. Livingstone? Yes. (The witness referred.)

1378. What is the date of that communication? 7th April, 1862.

1379. There is another communication, No. 41, signed George Bowles, master of the schooner "Tawera"? Yes; it bears no date; it appears to refer to the previous minute. I should imagine that it had been attached to Captains Rountree and Livingstone's certificate. I have never seen the documents themselves; they have been furnished since I ceased to be a member of the Pilot Board.

1380. Look at the communication signed John Vine Hall and William Owen—what is the date of that? 8th April, 1862.

1381. Was that before or after the purchase of the "Sea Witch" by Government? Long after.

1382. Government could not have been influenced by these opinions in the purchase of this vessel? Certainly not; unless they have been wrongly dated.

1383. Does it appear from these communications that these gentlemen were requested by Government to inspect this vessel? No, but by Captain Towns; they state so positively, some of them.

1384. Do you know a ship called the "Royal Saxon"? Yes.

1385. To whom does it belong? To Captain Towns.

1386. Captain Livingstone has the command of it, so that this certificate is signed by one of Captain Towns's own servants? Yes.

1387. By Mr. Weekes: Do you consider him unfit to give an opinion upon the suitability of a ship from this circumstance? I think he might modify his opinion in consequence.

1388. Is Captain Livingstone a gentleman who is likely to give an opinion contrary to his conviction in a matter of that sort? I do not know Captain Livingstone very well. I do not think he is a man who would ordinarily be influenced, but I believe any man who has his bread to earn, modifies or colours his opinion to a certain extent according to the wishes of his employer. I do not mean to say that Captain Livingstone is different from other men.

1389. We have all our bread to earn, but would you, for that reason, give an opinion that you were not satisfied in your conscience was a correct one? No; but I should most likely modify it. I should not give it so prominently if I knew it was contrary to the wishes of my employer.

1390. You would trim? I do not understand these political phrases.

1391. I think it is rather a nautical than a political phrase—you say you would modify your your opinion to suit that of your employer? I do not say that I should modify it to suit the opinion of my employer, but I think I should not say so much as I should if I were totally unfettered.

Captain
H. T. Fox.

8 July, 1862.

1392. You would suppress part of your opinion? I do not say that. It is difficult to say exactly what I mean; but I think any man who is entirely dependent upon another does, to a certain extent, modify what he has to say. I do not mean to say that Captain Livingstone would say what was opposite to the fact to please any one.

1393. By Mr. Wilson: Do you think all men are influenced in their opinions, to a certain extent, by the circumstances in which they are placed? I do.

1394. By Mr. Weekes: Is it not possible to get an honest opinion from an independent minded man, although he may be an employé of Government, or of a private individual? I do not say that he would give a dishonest opinion, but he might modify it.

1395. By the Chairman: Is it possible to ask a question in such a manner as to elicit a particular reply? Certainly; and it is clear these questions are asked with a view to certain answers. There are four different reasons given for objecting to the "Sea Witch;" but three questions only are asked by Captain Towns; the fourth is left out.

1396. By Mr. Sadleir: The answer depends upon the way in which the question is put? Clearly. Captain Towns did not want the opinion of these gentlemen as to the value of the vessel.

1397. A question may be put just as a case may be placed before a lawyer, in order to have a favourable opinion? Yes. I do not wish the impression to go abroad that I have said anything unfavourable to Captain Livingstone; I simply mean that he has done what any other man would have done.

1398. By Captain Moriarty: How long has Captain Livingstone commanded the "Royal Saxon"? About two years.

1399. Had you any acquaintance with him before that time? He commanded the ship "Tory." I wish to say nothing against Captain Livingstone.

1400. You have known him in command of the "Royal Saxon" about two years? Yes.

1401. He has been employed trading to China in the "Royal Saxon"? Yes.

1402. Principally in trading to China? He went to Calcutta, and to Puget Sound, and he is still in command of her.

1403. What do you suppose were the reasons that would induce Captain Towns to appoint any man to the command of the "Royal Saxon"? Because it suits his purpose, whatever that may be.

1404. Would he put any man in the command of such a ship as the "Royal Saxon" who, in his opinion, was not a sound practical seaman and skilful navigator? I do not think he would.

1405. When the vessel is away from home, is there not a great deal of responsibility attached to the captain? Yes.

1406. Would Captain Towns be likely to appoint a man in whose honesty he had not confidence? I have no reason to doubt Captain Livingstone's honesty.

1407. By Mr. Sadleir: Looking to No. 22, do you consider Captain Towns's opinion to be correct as to the "Sea Witch," where he speaks of her model and of the time within which she may be sent to sea? I went into that point fully before. I maintain that the whole of that has been disproved by the facts which have occurred since.

1408. Then turning to No. 42, upon what does Captain Vine Hall found his opinion—does the letter afford evidence that he forms his opinion upon facts, or that it is a mere opinion? That it is a mere opinion. He says—"She draws somewhat more, we understand, amidships." "Her sailing draft, as we were informed by the captain—" First he says—"Her sailing draft, as we were informed by the captain, is 8 feet aft, 7 feet 2 inches forward. She draws somewhat more, we understand, amidships, having a depth of keel "there of 24 inches." Then he goes on to say—"This we imagine." So that if certain facts which are told him by the captain are absolutely true, then follows this sequence.

1409. By Captain Moriarty: It is a hypothetical opinion? It is a hypothetical opinion obtained from other persons.

1410. By Mr. Sadleir: Turning to No. 44, we find Captain Sidney says—"From appearance, size, and draught of water—" I should glean from that that he had never been on board.

1411. Does he found his opinion upon facts? He does not say so.

1412. By the Chairman: Do you consider Captain Towns's opinion of greater value than the opinion of any individual member of the Pilot Board? Certainly not in this particular case.

1413. Do you know where the owner of the "Sea Witch" resides? The captain was the ostensible owner. I do not know where the owner is. I see she was offered to the Government through Captain Towns.

1414. By Mr. Weekes: Was she offered to the Government through Captain Towns? If you turn to 27, you will see that that is stated by Mr. Lane.

1415. Is there not a letter from some agent offering the vessel? Yes, from B. F. Chapman for Montefiore and Montefiore; but I believe Mr. Lane is Under Secretary to the Treasury, and he says it was offered to the Government by Captain Towns.

1416. When a vessel has her cargo out, and is therefore light, is not the captain of the vessel the best authority to refer to as to her draft when she is laden? Yes.

1417. Then in asking the captain of the "Sea Witch" as to her draft, Captain Vine Hall did not pursue an unusual or improper course? No; but he could have looked to her marks, and from the depth of the hold he could judge whether it was likely that she would have such a large draft.

Captain
H. T. Fox.

8 July, 1862.

1418. By the Chairman: Has not every vessel marks on her stem and stern, shewing the water she draws? Yes, she ought to have. Mr. Cuthbert states what she was drawing when he surveyed her.

1419. By Mr. Weekes: Flying light? She had some ballast in her. It might easily be determined whether she was likely to have nine feet draft. The depth of her hold is seven feet seven-tenths, say seven feet and a half; there is about a foot thickness from the hold to the bottom, and therefore if the ship had no keel at all she could not draw more than eight feet six amidships without having her deck under water. Then comes the question of the keel; suppose the depth of that to be two feet (as Captain Hall was informed), in order to draw nine feet amidships, she could only have about eighteen inches free board. I wish to make one statement before I have done with the "Sea Witch"; it refers to the evidence I gave at the last meeting of the Committee. I then stated that Liverpool pilot boats were out in very heavy gales, and that one at least was out during the night that the "Royal Charter" was lost. I have since had a paper, dated November, 1859, lent to me, which contains the evidence of two masters of pilot boats, who state that they were out during the hurricane, and that their vessels drifted only eight miles during the night, which shows they must be remarkably weatherly vessels in bad weather.

1420. Are you aware whether the pilot boats off Port Phillip heads are ever driven in through stress of weather? I do not know; I have not been in Port Phillip since the present system of pilot boats was established there.

1421. By the Chairman: Were the pilot boats employed there built in the Colony? No, I think not; they have, I believe, some American pilot boats, and they sent to British North America and had one built.

1422. Do you know anything of the lines of the "Mary Taylor"? I have seen the models of some New York pilot boats. I think Mr. Cuthbert has the lines of the "Mary Taylor."

1423. By Mr. Weekes: Are not the Americans very celebrated for their pilot boats? Yes, the pilot boats of New York are some of the fastest in the world; but I do not think the "Sea Witch" is like an American pilot boat.

1424. By the Chairman: In your petition you state that there are similar "other matters on which the advice of your petitioners has been ignored"—can you state any other instance than that of the "Sea Witch" in which the public interest has suffered? In the case of the light-house at Jervis Bay I think the public interest has suffered.

1425. Please to state, as shortly as possible, in what way the Pilot Board's advice was ignored, and how the interests of the public suffered? If you turn to page 4 of the Return moved for by Mr. Gray, you will find a letter from Mr. Weekes, dated the 26th July, 1859, in which the Honorable the Treasurer says—"Before the site for the light-house about to be erected at Jervis Bay is finally determined upon, I should be glad if they would give the subject early consideration, as tenders have been called for the erection of the building." In consequence of that we considered the matter very closely, especially those points which Mr. Weekes brought so forcibly before us, and the opinion of the three petitioners and of Captain Deloitte, who is now away ill, was, "that the site recommended in the Commissioners' report is not the most eligible, as they conceive that by the light-house being erected on the north side of Jervis Bay advantages such as those mentioned in the report alluded to will be attained by vessels coming from the southward, and greater benefit by vessels coming from the northward." That opinion of ours, which we believed and still believe would have been the best to have carried out, seems from the minute that follows to have been ignored—"I have consulted Commodore Loring upon this subject, and he is clearly of opinion that the best site for the light-house is that originally proposed, namely, "Cape St. George. W. D." We were not informed of that minute until long after the light-house was fixed upon.

1426. Whose initials are "W.D."? I presume the late Governor General's. From that time we heard nothing from the Government about the matter. There was no official communication made to us. The Government might have been adopting our suggestions and building the light-house on Crocodile Head; but an additional and grave error occurred beyond that of not putting it on Crocodile Head, which was, that it was neither placed on where we recommended nor where the Commissioners recommended.

1427. Commodore Loring recommended that it should be on Cape St. George? Yes.

1428. Did the Commissioners recommend that it should be put on Cape St. George? Neither on Cape St. George nor on Crocodile Head. We discussed that question a long time, and went fully into it in all its bearings. Some of us had had very great experience on that part of the coast; we went into all the advantages, and which are very fairly and properly put in Mr. Weekes' letter of the 26th July.

1429. After it was determined by the Government to place the light upon Cape St. George, are you aware whether any competent person was sent down to fix the site? No, I am not aware. The site, I believe, had been fixed prior to my being a member of the Pilot Board—the site of Cape St. George. Officially, we knew nothing of the matter until we were told the light had been put upon the wrong place. No communication was made to us from the 26th July, 1859, until long after the 6th June, 1860.* We were entirely ignored.

* ADDED (on revision):—On this latter date we addressed the Treasurer, informing him that we had heard that the light was being wrongly placed, and that no reply had been received to our letter of 30th July.

1430. By Captain Moriarty: By whom were you ignored? By the Government. We were left altogether in the dark. We had answered Mr. Weckes' letter to the best of our ability—we had pointed out the most eligible site, and from the time of the sending of that letter until after we heard that the light-house was built on the wrong spot we had no official communication respecting it. Captain
H. T. Fox.
8 July, 1862.
1431. We have had all that brought before a Committee of the Assembly before? We allege in our petition that our opinions have been ignored and that the interests of the country have suffered, and I mention this as an instance. I do not wish to say much about it.
1432. By Mr. Weckes: There was, I believe, in 1856 or 7, a Commission appointed jointly by all the Colonies, to inquire into and determine upon proper sites for light-houses on the coast? I believe so.
1433. Did that Commission examine a tolerable number of competent witnesses? A large number of witnesses—a few competent and a great many incompetent, as can be proved from their evidence. They knew very little of what they were talking about.
1434. Your opinion seems to be that a great many nautical men, both in reference to light-houses and to ships, are incompetent to give an opinion? I think very often witnesses are chosen who are incompetent, who have little knowledge of the subjects on which they are examined.
1435. Still the Commissioners availed themselves of the best evidence they could procure? I could not tell whether it was the best or not; I was not present.
1436. You suppose it would be the best? I suppose it was the best they could get in Melbourne.
1437. They could have no motive but to select the best sites? Clearly; but if they went away from the locality they could not get such good witnesses as they could if they had taken evidence nearer to where the light was required.
1438. The result was that they recommended certain sites? They recommended certain sites.
1439. Was not one the site on Cape St. George? It was.
1440. Was not that site adopted by the Government of the day? It was, I believe. This paper seems to say so.
1441. Was not that site submitted to the Pilot Board which was in existence before you were a member of the Board, and did not that Board approve of it? I believe so.
1442. Will you look at the letter in page 3 (referring to the Return printed by order of the House, on motion of Mr. Gray, on Light-house near Jervis Bay), dated 14th September, 1857, from the Secretary to the Pilot Board to the Under Secretary to the Treasury, and signed W. L. G. Drew? Yes.
1443. Does it state there—"I am instructed to request that you will bring under the notice of the Minister for Finance and Trade the subject of light-houses on Cape George and Gabo Island. Surveys having been made by the Colonial Architect and Assistant Surveyor Millington, the Board are of opinion that plans should be drawn and tenders invited for the erection of a tower, 50 feet high, on the point marked S on Mr. Millington's plan, which site appears to have been judiciously selected;"—that was the opinion of the Pilot Board to whom the matter was referred? Yes.
1444. Then the matter was referred to a body competent to decide upon it at that time, and approved of by them? Yes; it appears so by the papers.
1445. Then there was no further necessity for referring it a second time to another Pilot Board, was there? I presume not, unless we are to assume that you would have done anything for which there was no necessity.
1446. You refer to a minute of mine, dated 26 July, 1859? Yes.
1447. Are you aware at whose instigation I sent that to the Board? I am not, personally.
1448. Are you aware that at the request of Captain Smith, Captain Williamson waited upon me to ask me to invite the opinion of the then Pilot Board upon the subject? I never heard so until this Committee sat, when I was so informed by Captain Smith.
1449. You believe that to be true? I believe Captain Smith to state what is correct.
1450. Therefore, is it not a fair presumption that, although one Pilot Board had specially approved of the site, being anxious to obtain all the information I could on the matter, it was natural that I should obtain a second opinion from another Pilot Board? I think it is very likely.
1451. Was the opinion of the Pilot Board on the second reference the same as that on the first, or was there a difference of opinion among the Board as to the site, and did the report state that there was such a difference of opinion? It was the opinion of the majority that was contained in the report; but Captain Browne objected to it going forward as the opinion of the Board, because he would have appeared to stultify himself if his name did not appear as opposed to it, having expressed an opposite opinion as a member of the Commission.
1452. As the site was approved of by one Pilot Board and disapproved of by the majority of the members of another, did it not raise a question of great doubt as to whose opinion should have the greater weight? I dare say that question might have been raised.
1453. Was it not a matter upon which two bodies equally competent had given different opinions? Yes; only there are special reasons given in favour of Crocodile Head.
1454. Should I have referred the subject to the Pilot Board the second time—for which there was no necessity—pointing out those very matters to them, unless I had been anxious to obtain further evidence before the matter was finally settled? I should judge from the tenor of your letter that that was your object.
1455. When the Pilot Board furnished their report upon the second reference, it established this fact: that two separate Pilot Boards had taken opposite views as to the proper situation for the light-house? Yes.

Captain
H. T. Fox.

8 July, 1862.

1456. By the Chairman: Was it not the same Pilot Board, but composed of different members? I was not a member of the Pilot Board on the first reference.

1457. Some of the members were members then? Yes; Captains Deloitte, Browne, and Darley.

1458. By Mr. Weekes: They were members of the Pilot Board on the 14th September, 1857? I think they were.

1459. It appears then that the first report of the Board, of which these three gentlemen were then members, approved of the site of Cape St. George? It appears so; but Captain Darley and Captain Deloitte told us that they were opposed to it, but were in the minority.

1460. The question I had to decide was, as one Board in 1857 had approved of the site, and another in 1859 had disapproved of it, what course was it proper for me to pursue under the circumstances—do you not think, as the first report of the Pilot Board was supported by the report of the Commissioners appointed to select sites for light-houses, and backed by the weight of evidence they brought forward, I was justified in adopting the report of the first Pilot Board rather than that of the second? I do not think, if you take the whole circumstances of the case, that you were, for I can prove that the evidence here is not in favour of Cape St. George.

1461. Still the report of the Commissioners, founded upon the evidence they had taken, was that the light-house should be erected upon Cape St. George? Yes.

1462. The Government and the Pilot Board of the day adopted that site? Yes.

1463. Will you turn to the fourth page of this correspondence; there is a letter dated 4th July, 1859, and signed W. J. Wilshire. That is from the Pilot Board, of which you were a member? Yes.

1464. On the matter being referred to the Pilot Board as to the position of the light, did Mr. Wilshire, the Secretary, return this answer—"I have the honor, by direction of the Pilot Board, to return to you the chart and plans respecting the proposed light-house on Cape St. George, and to inform you that the Board approves of the design for the tower and keeper's quarters. With reference to the sites marked S and T on the coast chart, the Board coincide with you in opinion, also expressed by Mr. Surveyor Millington, that that marked S possesses considerable advantage over the latter, and they therefore approve of the tower being erected as recommended by you." Was that minute sent to the Government? I presume it was sent to the Government.

1465. Was that the opinion of the Board? No.

1466. That minute then did not embody the opinion of the Board? No; as far as the word "latter" it was the opinion of the Board, but not farther.

1467. Then the Board did not state that "they therefore approve of the tower being erected as recommended by you"? No, that was an error.

1468. When did you first ascertain that opinions professing to be, but which were not, your opinions, had been forwarded to the Government? At the reading of the minutes on the next meeting, before they were confirmed; we were astonished, and insisted upon the words being erased:

1469. When you discovered this error, and found that a minute had been sent to the Government recommending what you did not approve, did you take any steps to set the matter right? I do not know whether the Chairman reported it to the Government.

1470. Did you direct him to do so? I do not recollect.

1471. In so important a matter as this, referring to the site of a light-house, did you take no steps to caution the Government that the report which had been sent in was in fact a false one? I do not recollect. If the Chairman wrote a letter upon minutes that were incorrect, it was his duty to inform the Government of his mistake.

1472. Then the Government were to go on under the impression that the Board approved of this minute? No, our letter of 30th July entirely overrides that. Even supposing we did not direct the Chairman, or that we were guilty of a dereliction of duty in that respect, there was no harm arose from it. So far as the petitioners are concerned we are free from blame, because before the site was decided upon we informed the Government, by our letter of the 30th July, that we disapproved of it.

1473. Did not the matter come before me in this way: the first Pilot Board approved a site, the second Pilot Board adopted that site, and then afterwards, on a subsequent reference, the majority decided that it was not the proper site? It may appear so, but it is evident that we, as individuals, are exonerated from any blame in the matter. I believe that on the first Pilot Board to which you refer there were two soldiers, who, I imagine, would not be very competent to give an opinion upon the best site for a light-house.

1474. By the Chairman: Have not some of the members of the Pilot Board continued to be so from the 9th April, 1857, when this correspondence commenced? Yes, I believe Captains Deloitte and Darley have been members of the Board from the commencement.

1475. By Mr. Weekes: They were members of the Pilot Board on the 14th September, 1857, when the site at Cape St. George was approved? Yes.

1476. And they were also members of the Board in July, 1859, which disapproved of the site? Yes, and they joined Captain Smith and myself in the disapproval.

1477. Does it state in that minute of 30th July, 1859, that Captains Darley and Deloitte joined with those who took the view that the northern side of the bay was the most eligible site? Yes.

1478. Were those two gentlemen members of the Board on the 14th September, 1857, when the Board decided that the southern side was the proper one? I believe they were.

1479. So that, when I had finally to decide upon the site of the light-house, it had been approved by the Pilot Board on two separate times—it had been approved by some members of the Board who subsequently disapproved of it; and I was therefore to decide upon this conflicting conflicting evidence as to which I should give the weight to? I do not hold that it had been approved by two Pilot Boards, it had never been approved by us.

1480. You allude to that portion of your minute which you say was afterwards erased? Yes.

1481. And which you never communicated to the Government? We never approved of it.

1482. The only question of the site being whether it should be upon Cape St. George or Crocodile Head, and not as to whether it should be on a particular point to the southward or northward? That was the main question, and I complain that after we had made our report we were wholly ignored—we never received any intimation of the intention of Government. If we had received the slightest notice, one of us might have gone down to see that it was put in the proper place; most likely we should have done so. We never received any intimation from the Government respecting it, till long after the light-house was built. The light was placed entirely, solely by the Government, independently of the Pilot Board, therefore we are relieved from all responsibility in the matter.

1483. It was on the site previously approved by the Board? The petitioners never approved of it.

1484. At all events you never informed the Government of the error in the minute transmitted to them? The Chairman may have informed the Government.

1485. Is that an example of the manner in which the Board carried on their business, that they allowed the Government to be kept in the dark or to be misinformed as to their opinions? I have never allowed the Government to be kept in the dark as to my opinion; I think I have spoken it pretty plainly.

1486. Did you in that case? That seems to be the effect, but I am not responsible for what the Chairman writes in a letter. If at the next meeting the minutes are not confirmed, but an erasure is made, it is the duty of the Chairman to communicate that to the Government.

1487. Did you pass a resolution to the effect that the alteration should be communicated to the Government by the Chairman, the Chairman being the mere organ of the Board? I say, supposing we failed to do our duty in that respect, it is overridden by the letter that follows, where we tell you that we do not approve of the site.

1488. That only shows that you had altered your opinion again? We had never altered our opinion.

1489. By the Chairman: In what way were these minutes usually made known to the Minister? The usual course, in Captain Browne's time, was, that he partly wrote the minutes while we were present; the minute book was then sent to his office, where the minutes were completed, and at the next meeting he read them over to us.

1490. In what way were the minutes made known to the Minister? By a letter framed upon the minutes, written by the Chairman.

1491. By Mr. Weekes: Will you turn to page 20 of the evidence given before the Port Jervis Light-house Committee by Captain Smith; in 2447 he is asked, as to the erasure of that portion of the minute to which you have referred, "Then, as a matter of fact, the Chairman made a report to the Government, which, though purporting to give the opinion of the Pilot Board, was actually untrue?" He replies, "No doubt." "And that report has never been contradicted?" he is asked; and he answers, "Not in so far as I know, and certainly it was not at the time." Does not that show that the Board took no steps to make known to the Government that a false report had been sent to them? It seems that the Board did no more than order the minute to be erased.

1492. By the Chairman: Whose duty was it, after making these minutes, when it was necessary to communicate them to the Minister, so to communicate them? The Chairman's.

1493. By Mr. Weekes: Through whom—the Secretary? I believe they were generally written by the Secretary, the Chairman generally drafted the letters.

1494. By Captain Moriarty: In reading Mr. Weekes' minute to the Board, did it appear clear to you that his opinion was decidedly in favour of the erection of a light-house on Crocodile Head? No, I do not think Mr. Weekes expresses any opinion himself, but he points out advantages that would be desirable to be obtained in a light-house, and requests the Board to direct their attention to those points.

1495. Would it not convey the idea that he was expressing his own opinion when he says that, by selecting Crocodile Head, it would "insure this light answering as valuable a purpose as the Outer South Head light does to vessels coming south, by warning them to keep it open from the North Head to avoid the Long Reef," and "that by selecting Crocodile Head this could be accomplished, as in working along the coast, either to the northward or southward, this light on Crocodile Head kept open from the high land on either side of it would lead clear of all danger"? I do not think Mr. Weekes gives his own opinion, he merely puts the question which he says has been suggested.

1496. At all events it was an intimation that it was worthy your consideration and report? Yes.

1497. In accordance with that, you did make a report? Yes, and thought over the subject in all its bearings carefully first.

1498. You still retain the opinion that Crocodile Head is the proper place upon which a light-house should be built? Yes, and that opinion is quite borne out by Captain Becher, R.N., F.R.A.S., Naval Assistant in the Hydrographic and Harbour Department at the Admiralty, at Home. We have the gratification to see that in the Nautical Magazine for November, 1860, of which he is the editor, so high an authority states that we are perfectly right.

1499. Has the present position of the light-house been referred to a Board consisting of Captain Sidney, Mr. Hixson, and Captain Sullivan, the commander of a coasting steamer? Yes, and a report has been drawn up.

1500. And these two naval authorities differ in their opinion? Yes.

1501.

Captain
H. T. Fox.

8 July, 1862.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
8 July, 1862.

1501. The gentleman who surveyed the coast before Mr. Hixson thinks Crocodile Head the proper site? Yes, Captain Sidney is of a different opinion, and Captain Sullivan coincides with him.

1502. Coincides with Captain Sidney? Yes.

1503. Then the opinion of Captain Sullivan is to override all the opinions of nautical men? If his opinion is to be taken it will override the opinion of the majority of nautical men.

1504. Do you not think in a matter of such great importance, it would be monstrous to decide upon his unsupported opinion? I do.

1505. By Mr. Wilson: With regard to the joint Commission that sat at Melbourne on the subject of light-houses, do you know who was the Commissioner for New South Wales? Captain Browne.

1506. The same gentleman was Chairman of the Pilot Board? Yes.

1507. Do you know whether he had a strong opinion in favour of a light on Cape St. George? Yes, for he nearly got his ship ashore in that bay.

1508. In Wreck Bay? Yes.

1509. Do you think it probable that a gentleman holding a strong opinion would try to procure evidence that would bear out that opinion? Yes, and I think these other gentlemen were guided a great deal by Captain Browne's opinion.

1510. It appears that Captain Browne gave it as his opinion that Cape St. George was the most suitable place for a light-house? Yes.

1511. And in all the investigations that took place upon the subject he invariably stuck to that opinion? Yes.

1512. Are you aware that a light-house has been erected at Jervis Bay? Yes.

1513. Where? Between Jervis Bay and Cape St. George.

1514. Are you aware as to the present Government having appointed a Commission to inquire whether that light-house is properly situated? Yes.

1515. Does the report recommend that the light-house should be pulled down? Yes, the gentlemen who were appointed are unanimously of opinion that it should be pulled down, though they differ in opinion as to where it should be placed.

1516. Should you argue from that that the light-house had been erected without sufficient consideration? Yes; these unfortunate petitioners recommended that it should not be lighted, because it was in a bad place, but their opinions were as usual overridden in that, by men who knew very little about it.

1517. By Mr. Weekes: Your opinion was not that it should be erected to the southward but to the northward? Yes.

1518. All parties, whether favourable to its being on Crocodile Head or at Cape St. George, admit that it is now in the wrong position? Yes.

1519. It is not where it was intended to be? I believe that Mr. Millington made a correct survey, but that he has placed it on a wrong spot in the chart.

1520. Is it not thought to be more a fancy sketch than an outline of the coast? My impression is that the surveys of Mr. Millington, in so far as the points S and T are concerned, are correct, but that in transferring them to the chart of the coast the error was made.

1521. By the Chairman: With all their faults they were adopted by the Pilot Board of 1857? Yes; but I think no Pilot Board by merely looking at the maps could see that an error had been made.

1522. By Captain Moriarty: That was only as to the question which of the two points was the more eligible? Yes, believing that the maps furnished by the Government were correct; no person could tell that they were not without visiting the place.

1523. By Mr. Weekes: Still the Pilot Board of 1857 had, without reservation, approved of the position? Yes, they had, because no one could tell from the maps that there was an error.

1524. By Mr. Dickson: Was this point, marked S on Mr. Millington's plan, the position the Government intended the light-house should be built upon? Yes, I believe so. I believe the Government were as much misled in the matter as any one; but what I complain of is that we were wholly ignored.

1525. By Captain Moriarty: In fact Commodore Loring, Captain Denham, and W. D. settled the question without knowing anything about the matter? I believe Captain Denham settled the question of lighting it, and Commodore Loring and W. D. settled the matter of the building.

1526. By Mr. Dickson: Is this site marked S upon Cape St. George? No; about a mile and a half or two miles from Cape St. George.

1527. By the Chairman: That is where the light is placed now? Yes.

1528. By Mr. Sadleir: Was your letter of the 30th July written to correct all misapprehensions? Yes; it was to place on record what our opinions were.

1529. To remove all doubts as to where the light should be placed? Yes.

1530. All doubts which might have arisen from the Chairman's failure to communicate to the Government the erasure of the minute? It clearly had that effect.

1531. Looking to the minute which follows your letter, with reference to consulting Commodore Loring, you think Commodore Loring decided the site of the light-house? Yes.

1532. Do you consider that Commodore Loring decided the question altogether? Yes.

1533. By the Chairman: Did it never occur to the Board to ask the Government to allow them to visit Jervis Bay, in order to decide upon the most eligible site? We did not expect that the correspondence would cease when it did. The Government having asked the opinion of the Board as to the most eligible site, and we having replied, we naturally expected expected to hear more about it, and if the Government had informed us what they were going to do, it is very likely we should have suggested that we should visit the spot.

1534. By Mr. Dickson: Are you aware whether practical seamen say that the light is on the proper site now? I have never heard one say that it is on the proper site.

1535. By Captain Moriarty: Supposing the Commission, consisting of Captain Sidney, Mr. Hixson, and Captain Sullivan, to whom this question was referred by the Government, had adopted the course of examining in Sydney masters of vessels and those who were conversant with the subject, and had been influenced by the evidence so taken, what would have been their decision? I have no doubt that the balance of evidence would have been strongly in favour of Crocodile Head.

1536. By the Chairman: You allege in your petition that there are other matters besides those of the "Sea Witch" and the light-house near Jervis Bay in which the advice of the Board has been ignored—will you state shortly what those matters are? The appointment of pilots and light-keepers. In May, 1860, there was a vacancy for a pilot at South Head in the room of Mr. Robson dismissed or resigned, I forget which, and we advertised in the usual way, and had many applications. Among those who applied were Captain Shanks and Captain Thompson, both of whom passed their examinations excellently, and it was a matter of doubt between the members of the Board which was the better of the two; ultimately it was decided in favour of Shanks, and he was recommended to the Government to fill the vacancy. There were then five pilots only in Port Jackson, but as there were a large number of vessels coming in—

1537. By Mr. Weekes: Did the Government appoint Captain Shanks on your recommendation? Yes. As a large number of vessels were coming in, and as the pilots for some time, when anything had gone wrong, or there had been any appearance of neglect or want of attention, had said they were too hardly worked, had too much to do, we thought it a good opportunity, as Mr. Thompson was very well adapted to the office, to recommend the appointment of a sixth pilot. This was not acceded to. Six months after this, about December, 1860, we received a direction from the Treasurer, without any previous correspondence from the Board, to advertise for a sixth pilot, which, when we had recommended seven months before, was not acceded to. The Board thought that the necessity did not then exist, but they advertised as they were directed. Remonstrances came up from the pilots to the effect that such an appointment would operate injuriously to them, and the Board, believing that the necessity did not exist, as the shipping of the port had fallen off very much, did not recommend it. However, the matter was pushed by the Treasurer, and in February, 1861, we recommended Captain Thompson as the best of a large number of candidates. A question then came from the Minister to know whether, out of so large a number of candidates, Captain Thompson was the only eligible one. We sent back something to this effect, that we could not say that out of so many candidates there were no others at all eligible, but that we considered Captain Thompson possessed superior advantages. The Treasurer then requested us to state the names of some others who in our opinion were eligible. We stated the names of two others—Levien and Gerard—but we added a rider that, notwithstanding we put those names down, we considered Captain Thompson very superior to the others, and gave our reasons—that he was well known; that he had been a long time in the Colonial service; that he was still in active service, and was known to the members as a strictly temperate and industrious man. I do not remember the exact words, but that was the substance. One of the others, who was not so strongly recommended, was appointed, and shortly after his appointment he got a ship ashore, and was permitted to resign. Captain Thompson has never had a berth in the Pilot Service since, though he has been twice recommended. The pilot at Twofold Bay was appointed without our knowledge at all, without our being referred to in any way as to his qualifications. I may say that he had been examined before the Pilot Board before for the situation of Assistant Harbour Master in Sydney, and the Board could not recommend him for that position; he was not fit for it.

1538. What was his name? Bourne Russell; a son, I believe, of Mr. Bourne Russell of the Legislative Council. I may be wrong about his name being Bourne Russell, he is a son of Mr. Bourne Russell.

1539. He is not any worse on that account I presume? I do not suppose he is any worse or any better; it is fortunate for him perhaps that his father has some influence.

1540. You seem to throw some stress upon his being the son of his father? I merely mention his name, but I do not wish to give a man a name that does not belong to him. It is a fortunate name for the family perhaps. With regard to the light-keepers, we have recommended, frequently, that new appointments should be filled by the promotion of those who have been in the service. In a report from the Board, dated 9th April, 1861, printed in the return moved for by Mr. Dalgleish, they say—"The Board much regret that their repeated recommendation that increased and graduated salaries should be given to light-keepers is disregarded, and they beg to assure the Minister that unless some inducement is offered to the subordinates to secure promotion to higher salaries, by good conduct and zealous discharge of duty, the economy of the light establishments will never be brought to that degree of efficiency which it is most desirable should be attained." That recommendation has been taken no notice of, for appointments have since been made, without the Board having been consulted, of three men to the light-house at Port Stephens, two of whom had never been in a light-house before, and the third had been dismissed for misconduct or neglect. This was done notwithstanding that we had recommended before that promotion should take place, and that there was a man in the service at South Head, who had been there six years and had never been complained of.

- Captain
H. T. Fox.
8 July, 1862.
1541. Who was the one who had been dismissed for misconduct? Mr. Priest.
1542. Was he at the Newcastle light? Yes.
1543. By the Chairman: He is not the son of a Member of Parliament? No, but he is very closely connected with one—I have heard a brother-in-law. I do not know that of my own knowledge.
1544. By Mr. Weekes: Was this man Priest appointed on the recommendation of the Pilot Board? I do not recollect; I do not know that he was not. I do not think he was appointed in my time.
1545. Are you aware whether this man Priest was dismissed, on the recommendation of the Board, for some alleged neglect of duty? Yes, I think from the evidence that came before us, for having allowed the light to be out for some twenty minutes.
1546. Did that man afterwards apply to you for a copy of the report and evidence upon which he had been dismissed, alleging his innocence? There was some application made to us. I do not know whether it was that the Board should go into the matter again, or simply that he should have a copy of the report and evidence.
1547. Did the Board, on being applied to to give a copy of the report and evidence, decline to open up the case again? Yes, they declined to open up the case again; but I do not remember whether the request came in that shape.
1548. Will you look at that letter (handing a paper to the witness) to refresh your memory. Is that an application from the man Priest for a copy of the evidence upon which he was dismissed? Yes, that is a letter from him.
1549. Is that in the corner a minute of the Board, when the letter was referred to them to furnish such evidence and report—"The case having been fully inquired into before Priest, and the evidence against him being, in the opinion of the Board, so conclusive, they see no reason for opening the matter again"? I know that the matter was inquired into, and the Board feeling how important was the maintenance of the light, in order to the safety of life and property, we felt that it was necessary to make a severe example in the case of neglect.
1550. In carrying out that object the Board was not desirous of making a victim as well as an example? Certainly not.
1551. If the man had a strong impression of his innocence, was it not reasonable that he should, after he was dismissed, desire to have a copy of the evidence given to him? Yes, but I think Priest was present when the matter was gone into. The inquiry was gone into in Newcastle, by the Harbour Master, and he was present, and had an opportunity of hearing the evidence and of calling witnesses.
1552. Still you did refuse to give him copies of these papers? Yes.
1553. Subsequently did I not direct that a copy should be given to him? Yes.
1554. And also that the Harbour Master, assisted by some competent persons on the spot, should make a further investigation of the subject? Yes.
1555. Are you aware whether that further investigation was made? Yes; as to the length of time the light took to be snuffed, I think that was the only inquiry that was made. I think the Harbour Master's attention was directed to the question of the probability of the light requiring twenty minutes for the process of snuffing.
1556. Are you aware that the Harbour Master reported that the light necessarily became obscured for some fifteen or twenty minutes when undergoing the process of snuffing? Not so long as that, I think.
1557. Some considerable time? Some time; my impression is that it was not so long as that; I know the impression of the Board was that it could not be so long as that.
1558. Will you read that (handing a paper to the witness)? "This further evidence proves that Priest was dismissed on insufficient grounds, and he will be reinstated when an opportunity offers."
1559. By the Chairman: Did the Board remonstrate against his being reinstated? I do not think so; I know the Board were of opinion he ought not to be reinstated.
1560. Will you read the report? It is signed by David T. Allen, Harbour Master, and Wm. Hescott, Senr. Pilot:—"With reference to the snuffing of the lamp in Nobby's Light-house, I do myself the honor to report that I, accompanied by Mr. Hescott, Pilot, did superintend that process, at 1:30 a.m., yesterday, Mr. Hoadley, 2nd keeper, on watch. The time occupied was seven minutes; and again this morning, at 1:30, Mr. Johnston, 1st keeper, on watch, who occupied eight minutes. That was from the time of lowering the light to remove the glass chimney, until it was replaced and the light raised to the proper height. During these intervals the light was occasionally so low as would appear to a distant observer extinct. I may herein mention that these observations were made under favourable circumstances, and the keepers state the fact that frequently large swarms of flies infest the light-room so as nearly to extinguish the light, and on such occasions it has to be frequently trimmed, and occupies a much longer time in snuffing; also that the light, after being snuffed, does not regain its former brilliancy for fifteen or twenty minutes." I do not recollect whether, in the first evidence, it was stated whether the light was extinct twenty minutes or more.
1561. By Mr. Weekes: Do you not think it an act of simple justice to a man who had been dismissed, and who claimed to have his case re-investigated, to afford such an opportunity? Yes, if he had had no opportunity of being present before, but having been present and heard all the evidence, I am doubtful whether copies of the proceedings should be furnished to him.
1562. Is it not natural to suppose that a man in his class of life would be unable to follow and remember evidence given at considerable length against him? Yes, I think it is very likely.

1563. And if further investigation created grounds to suppose that the Board had mistakenly dismissed this man, from the impression that the light was extinct when it was only obscured during the process of snuffing, would it not have been an act of justice to reinstate him? If the second evidence disclosed that he had been unjustly dismissed, but we thought the second evidence did not disclose that; and this being a matter of such serious moment, we thought he should not be reinstated.

Captain
H. T. Fox.
8 July, 1862.

1564. Was he not, up to that time, a man of good character? I do not recollect anything against him; but it is a matter of such serious moment that the light at Newcastle should not be out, that we were of opinion it was a matter of duty that we should not treat such an act of neglect lightly.

1565. But if it appears that the light is always more or less obscured for a longer or shorter period, according to circumstances, during the process of snuffing, is it not unjust to dismiss a man for an offence of which subsequent evidence proves him not to be guilty? If subsequent evidence does prove it, but we thought it did not. If it were a constant thing for the light at Newcastle to be out for such a length of time, we should have had not one report but twenty reports about it. This man was dismissed upon Captain Allen's first investigation and report; the investigation was not held before us, but on the spot, where the man had every opportunity of bringing witnesses. The result was that he was dismissed, and you confirmed his dismissal, and I see nothing in the second evidence to alter that decision.

1566. Does not the evidence clearly show that the light was not extinct, but only obscured, and that that was owing to the peculiar character of the light during snuffing? I think the evidence was that the captain who complained did not see the light for upwards of twenty minutes, and a passenger who was on board confirmed this statement. The evidence was gone into fully at Newcastle, and Priest had an opportunity of bringing any evidence to bear him out. There was, therefore, sufficient to warrant our recommendation that he should be dismissed, and the Treasurer confirmed our recommendation. The evidence of Mr. Allen is only as to how long the light would be obscured during snuffing, but there is nothing in it to override the evidence that was brought before us, and we did not consider it sufficient to warrant us in recommending his reinstatement.

1567. At all events, you refused to give him an opportunity of a re-hearing? It appears that we refused to give him the papers on the ground, I believe, that he had had every opportunity before. It would be extremely inconvenient if we had to supply copies of proceedings in every case where a man was dismissed after careful investigation.

1568. In the appointment of light-keepers, is any one appointed unless he has been at the light-house at South Head, and received a certificate of competency from Mr. Siddins? A certificate that he is fit for a lamplighter, just as a man might get a certificate that he was fit to light up the lamps in the street; but a man may be fit for that and yet be very unfit to take charge of the machinery of a light-house, and to keep the burnished reflectors in proper order.

1569. So that the Board have been in the habit of taking Mr. Siddins's certificate as to the competency—? The Board never recommended without having certificates of the competency of candidates, but they looked to other matters than whether they were fit to light lamps.

1570. No man has ever been appointed by the Board or by Government, without the person having been returned by Mr. Siddins as qualified for the duty? As qualified to light the lamps, which we do not consider to be all the duty of a lighthouse-keeper.

1571. Do you mean to say that the certificate of Mr. Siddins is simply that the party is competent to light the lamps? And fit to manage the apparatus.

1572. Is it not, "and competent to take the office"? No; the wording is, as near as I remember, "fit to manage the apparatus of a revolving light;" it does not express an opinion as to his character, habits, or anything else.

1573. Has it ever been necessary for the Government to cancel appointments made by the Board? I think so.

1574. From their having been given to improper parties? I do not recollect any that have been recommended by the Board only.

1575. Did you recommend a man named Paget as a fit man to be placed in a light-house? He came down to us with strong recommendations from the Governor General, but he proved not at all fit—

1576. Surely you would not recommend a man because he was recommended by the Governor General? No, I had a poor opinion of some of our Governors General.

1577. By the Chairman: The Governor General's certificate as to character would, I presume, be considered a very good one? Yes.

1578. By Mr. Weekes: But still the Board paid no attention to that? Not simply to the recommendation of the Governor General.

1579. In fact, it was a thoroughly independent Board? We tried to make it so.

1580. Setting aside the recommendation of the Governor General, did you recommend this man Paget? Yes, I think so.

1581. Did the Government cancel that man's appointment after they had approved of the recommendation of the Board, because previous to his taking office they found that he was a drunkard? Yes; but, as I said, the man came to us with a recommendation from the Governor General.

1582. By the Chairman: Did he recommend him as a sober man? I cannot say; he was recommended by the Governor General, and some other people.

1583. By Mr. Weekes: So that in point of fact, it is necessary that the Government should have the power of even vetoing the appointments of the Board? Yes.

1584. The actual responsibility would then rest where it should properly be placed—on the responsible Minister? Yes; but we say that where men serve the Government long and faithfully,

Captain
H. T. Fox.
8 July, 1862.

faithfully, they should have priority of position over people, Tom, Dick, or Harry, of whom no one knows anything. We urged this upon the Government in our report, as necessary for the efficiency of the service; in that we said:—"Unless some inducement is offered to the subordinates to secure promotion to higher salaries by good conduct and zealous discharge of duty, the economy of the light establishments will never be brought to that degree of efficiency which it is most desirable should be attained."

1585. Has not the last appointment of Government to light-houses been on your recommendation, and carrying out your view? Yes, in that case, but only when it was forced upon you.

1586. Who forced it? I do not mean forced exactly—you will excuse my phraseology; what I mean is, that you had appointed a man to be Superintendent at Port Stephens Light-house, who after being for some time under Mr. Siddins, for the purpose of obtaining his certificate, was found to be totally unfit for the situation, and then the Board urged their previous recommendation, that a subordinate at the Macquarie Light-house should be appointed in his room. This man was found to be unfit for a lamplighter while there.

1587. At all events, that was a good appointment? Yes, but it should have been made long before.

1588. That was a Government appointment? Yes, but what we say is, that in justice to that man, you should have promoted him long before.

1589. In matters of promotion people are apt take different views, and it is not therefore singular that it should be so in regard to light-houses? No.

1590. Nor is it always the case that a good assistant makes a good chief? Not always, but if an assistant has served faithfully and long, I think he should have promotion if he is fit for it.

1591. I suppose it is not an unusual thing for the best pilot to have some casualty, by which he might get his vessel on shore? The best pilots do sometimes, but it is the exception, and not the rule.

1592. As a general rule, pilots do not run their vessels ashore? As a general rule, they do not.

1593. Do not exceptions occur even in the case of the most skilful men? Yes, sometimes.

1594. Has it not repeatedly occurred to pilots appointed by the Pilot Board in Port Jackson? I do not know that it has repeatedly.

1595. Has not the Pilot Board disgraced and dismissed pilots for casualties having happened to vessels under their charge? I do not remember any instance in my time.

1596. Do you remember the case of a vessel being lost in the harbour through the fault of the pilot? That was before I was on the Board—the "Annie." The pilot was lost with the "Catherine Adamson," so that we do not know anything about that.

1597. Was the vessel that was lost at the Heads lost through the neglect of the pilot? That was before my time, and I do not know that I ever saw the evidence in that case.

1598. It is a casualty that may happen to the most skilful? It occasionally happens to some of the skilful, but the most skilful do not meet with it so often as others.

1599. After the Board found that the loss of the "Annie" was attributable to the pilot, did they recommend him for promotion, and is he now at the head of the pilots? Yes.

1600. Have the Board had occasion to recommend the dismissal of various light-keepers whom they had appointed to different light-houses? I do not recollect that we ever appointed any.

1601. Do you recollect a light-keeper of the name of Hunter? That was before my time, or about the time that I joined the Board.

1602. Do you remember a light-keeper named Murphy being dismissed? I think he was dismissed from Hornby Light-house, for insolence.

1603. Do you remember the name of Magrath? I do not remember; it was one of those Irish names, either Murphy or Magrath, who was dismissed for disobedience.

1604. And damaging the reflector? Yes.

1605. All these people were appointed by the Board? I believe they were appointed by the Government.

1606. On the recommendation of the Board? I do not recollect; I suppose they came down in the same way as the others did, and that they were appointed by the Government, on the Board's approval of them.

1607. In the usual way? That seems to be the usual way.

1608. Both parties, the Government and the Board, were alike anxious to get competent persons? I do not know that.

1609. The Board was the most anxious? I think the Board went the most straightforward way to do it. It seems to me to be in accordance with common sense, that men who were accustomed to the business would be more competent to perform it than those who knew nothing about it.

1610. It is not a question of competency, but rather a question of intention—do you believe that the Government did not intend to have as efficient servants as the Board? I do not say that; I say they did not take the most efficient way of carrying it out.

1611. They differed from the Board as to the mode of carrying it out? Yes; I should be sorry to say that the Government did not desire to have efficient servants.

1612. For instance, they have efficient men in the Pilot Board? I believe they had some.

1613. You are candid at last? I hope you will not say that I have not been candid before.

1614. By Mr. Sadleir: In an extract from a report of the Pilot Board on the boatshed establishment at Sydney Cove, you say, "The boats attached to it are unnecessarily heavy and cumbersome"—has there been an alteration made in those boats? I think wherever old boats have required to be replaced they have been of lighter construction.

1615. By the Chairman: Have you anything farther you wish to state to the Committee? I should like to say one word with reference to the establishment of the Light-house at Port Stephens. The fixing of that site and the erection was left entirely to the Board, and I believe there has never been a voice raised against it. I merely mention that, to show that the Board were competent to give an opinion upon subjects of that nature.

WEDNESDAY, 9 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

- | | |
|-----------------|-------------|
| MR. DICKSON, | MR. SMART, |
| MR. PIDDINGTON, | MR. WEEKES, |
| MR. SADLEIR, | MR. WILSON. |

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William James Wilshire, Secretary to the Pilot and Steam Navigation Boards, called in and examined:—

1616. By the Chairman: You are Secretary to the Pilot Board? Yes.
1617. You have been summoned here to-day to give some information to the Committee relating to the Pilot Board, and also to furnish some plans relating to the Jervis Bay Light-house;—do you produce these plans? These are the plans. (Plans produced.)
1618. Were you Secretary to the Pilot Board during the time Captain Browne was Chairman? Yes, since 1858.
1619. Who wrote the minutes? Captain Browne.
1620. When did he write them, generally? A day or two after the meeting of the Board, at his own office. I used usually to have them returned a day or two after.
1621. Were they not written at the time?—No, nothing was ever written at the time, except the date of the meeting and the names of the members present.
1622. Were all the communications from the Pilot Board to the Treasurer entered in the minute book during the time Captain Browne was Chairman? There may have been private notes written by Captain Browne to the Treasurer that were not entered, but as a rule all the minutes were entered. I do not recollect any having been left out, until the other day, in looking over the letter book, I found a minute had been sent of which I could find no trace in the minute book.
1623. By Mr. Weekes: What is the date of that? I could not tell unless I had the papers.
1624. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether any minutes were ever written by the Chairman on papers sent from the Treasury without being entered in the minute book? Not as a rule. If the Chairman did write anything in that way, it would be merely as to matters of fact on which no question of opinion could arise—some simple question asked by the Treasurer which could be answered without reference to the Board. What are called blank cover minutes are very often sent from one department to another without reference to the heads.
1625. Such minutes do not appear in your minute book? No, they would not. It would very rarely occur that a minute of any importance would be sent to the Treasurer without having been submitted to the Board. I do not know of any except the one I allude to, and I do not think that was very important.
1626. Are you aware whether Mr. Crook, the Harbour Master, has ever acted in any instance upon a minute from the Treasurer addressed to the Pilot Board without instructions from the Board? I could not say from memory.
1627. Will you refer to the correspondence with reference to the "Sea Witch," printed by order of the House, and refer to No. 23, a minute signed "E. C. W., 13 March, 1862"—did that minute reach the Pilot Board? Unless I had the papers or minute book to look at I could not tell.
1628. By Mr. Weekes: Look at the letter on the opposite page;—will not that throw a light upon it;—I am alluding to page 9, No. 24,—is not that a letter from Mr. Cuthbert to you, relative to my minute of the previous day? Yes.
1629. Showing that it had regularly gone to the Pilot Board? I could not say for certain that this minute went to the Board before the letter to Mr. Cuthbert was written; if I had the minute book I could tell.
1630. By the Chairman: Perhaps the same answer would apply to any other of these minutes;—without reference to the minute book you could not tell whether No. 26 ever reached the Pilot Board? I could not say. I was not aware that I would be asked these questions, or I should have brought the minute book with me. I would rather see the original papers, because it is very likely there will be a minute made upon them; a corner probably has been turned up, and a minute written by Mr. Duncan,—“Mr. Wilshire, please attend to this”—or something of that sort.
1631. By Mr. Piddington: Are not the original papers in the office of the Pilot Board? They may not be; they are constantly referred from one office to the other.
1632. By the Chairman: Do you recollect whether, in the case of the recommendation of the Pilot Board to appoint Mr. Thompson a pilot, there was any correspondence with the Treasury on that subject? There was.
1633. Will the minutes relating to that recommendation appear in your minute book? I could not tell without referring to the papers; it is necessary that I should see the papers before I could answer any questions with reference to the subject.
1634. By Mr. Weekes: At the meeting of the Pilot Board you act as Secretary? Yes.

Mr. W. J.
Wilshire.
9 July, 1862.

Mr. W. J. Wilshire: 1635. During the progress of the business do you take any notes of what is going on? Yes, the minutes are taken down now regularly.

1636. By the Chairman: Now? Yes, since Captain Browne left.

9 July, 1862. 1637. By Mr. Weekes: In point of fact, what were your duties in attending on the Board before;—when the Board were transacting their ordinary business, what were your duties if you did not take the minutes? My time was a good deal occupied then in issuing certificates of competency, for which there were a great many applicants at that time; and of course affording the Board all information, having the papers ready for them, and so on. Captain Browne always wrote the minutes then; he used to write them before my appointment, and he continued the practice afterwards.

1638. How were the minutes so made by Captain Browne reduced to writing—did you enter them in the minute book from his rough draft? No, there was no rough draft taken. Whatever conclusion the Board came to Captain Browne would record it at his own office at his leisure.

1639. Were minutes so made read at the next meeting of the Board for confirmation? Yes, but that was always after they had been acted upon; they were always acted upon before they were read to the Board.

1640. By Mr. Piddington: During the period that Captain Browne was Chairman of the Pilot Board the minute book was entirely under his control? Entirely, in that way.

1641. And you were never permitted or asked, as part of your duty as Secretary, to make the minutes in the minute book? No.

1642. Was the minute book in the private possession of Captain Browne? No, when he wrote up the minutes at the Immigration Office he sent them down to me to act upon.

1643. Captain Browne wrote them at the Immigration Office? Yes.

1644. A separate office altogether from that of the Pilot Board? Yes, in a different building, some distance from it.

1645. Was the minute book kept in the Immigration Office? No, it was sent up the day after the Board met, and returned when the minutes had been entered.

1646. It is a part of your duty now to write the minutes in the minute book? Yes, they are always written at the meeting of the Board now.

1647. Then you conceive that the minute book is in your official charge now, subject to the authority of the Pilot Board? Yes, I can at any time put my hand on it.

1648. By the Chairman: Are there any instructions as to the duties of the Board, or the particular duties they were called upon to perform when the Board was first established? I have no recollection of any, except a very old letter, dated August, 1849, which I found in the office twelve months ago.

1649. Who is that addressed to? The Collector of Customs and Chairman of the Pilot Board, Port Jackson; that was Colonel Gibbes.

1650. By Mr. Smart: Were you Secretary when the Board was first established? No, I have only been there three or four years.

1651. By the Chairman: What is the nature of the instructions in that letter? (The witness read the letter alluded to. Vide Appendix.)

1652. By Mr. Piddington: Are you aware of any other instructions? No.

1653. Are you aware whether at the time these instructions were issued the Board was constituted in a similar manner to the Pilot Board at the present time? Yes, exactly in the same way, I believe.

1654. Do you know whether there was a paid Secretary to the Board then? I could not tell without referring back.

1655. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you know whether those instructions were made known to the members of the Pilot Board within the last two or three years? I am aware they were not. No member of the Board, of late years, has ever seen this letter or was aware of its existence, except Captain Browne; and when I showed it to him, and told him I had found it, he just looked at it and said it did not matter.

1656. By the Chairman: The Board now perform the duties connected with the examination of pilots, conveyed in those instructions, do they not? They do.

1657. Do the Board examine pilots as to their qualifications? Yes.

1658. Do you know whether there have been any other instructions addressed to the Board at any time? No, there has been nothing of the nature of instructions, excepting that letter.

1659. Were the duties of the Board not generally to advise with the Minister in matters relating to the Harbour and Pilot Service? Just as they are put in motion; as I understand, if the Minister consults the Board then they act, but not without.

APPENDIX.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 29 August, 1849.*

Sir,

The Executive Council having advised the appointment of a Board, to be called the Pilot Board for Port Jackson, I am directed by His Excellency the Governor to inform you that the Board is to be composed of the following members, viz.:—John George Nathaniel Gibbes, Esq., Collector of Customs, Chairman; Merion Marshall Moriarty, Esq., R.N., Port Master; Hutchison H. Browne, Esq., Water Police Magistrate; William Salmon Deloitte, Esq.; and Robert Towns, Esq.

2. His Excellency directs me to inform you, as the Chairman of the Board, that its duties will in the first instance be as follows, viz.:—

1st.—To make rules and regulations for the examination of candidates for the situation of pilot.

2nd.—To report to the Governor whether candidates for the situation of pilots have or have not proved to be qualified, and which is the best qualified, in the event of there being more than one competent candidate at the same time.

3rd.—

- 3rd.—To make rules and regulations for all matters connected with the discipline and government of pilots, subject to the approval of His Excellency the Governor.
- 4th.—To inquire into all matters of complaint against pilots, or breaches of regulations, and to report their decision for the Governor's approval.
3. It has been decided that the pilots shall continue to board vessels according to the system of rotation which is now in use; and His Excellency desires me to request that it may be an early duty of the Board to submit regulations by which the working of that system may be rendered as efficient as possible.
4. Pilots in charge of inward bound vessels (not being immigrant ships, or having gunpowder on board as cargo) are to be allowed to take their vessels as near to the wharf or place at which they intend to discharge their cargo as circumstances will permit. In the regulation which will be required to give effect to this decision, a proviso should be inserted requiring pilots to bring up all immigrant ships to the mouth of Sydney Cove, and to anchor them there in the stream, between Dawes' Point and Fort Macquarie.
5. It is to be adopted as a rule, that a pilot, after having taken charge of a vessel, and got her under weigh for the purpose of taking her to sea, at the request of the master, shall not be allowed to leave the vessel without the master's written permission, provided that the master consents to pay him at the rate of ten shillings a day for any detention of longer duration than twenty-four hours.

Mr. W. J.
Wilshire.

9 July, 1862.

I have, &c.,

E. DEAS THOMSON.

The Collector of Customs, appointed Chairman of the Pilot Board,
Port Jackson.

Mr. John Cuthbert called in and examined:—

1660. By the Chairman: You are Shipwright Surveyor for the Government? Yes, for the Steam Navigation Board.
1661. You have had great experience, I believe, as a shipbuilder? Yes, I have had some experience.
1662. You were called upon by the Government to examine and report upon the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
1663. Will you be kind enough to state from whom you received the instructions to examine her? These were my instructions. (Letter handed in and read. Vide Appendix.)
1664. What is the date of that letter? 14th March, 1862.
1665. Do you recollect how that letter reached you? I think by the messenger from the Pilot Office.
1666. What steps did you take upon receipt of that letter? I went on board immediately and made a preliminary survey.
1667. Were you alone? At that time I was.
1668. What was the next step taken in the examination of this vessel? In the afternoon I went down with one of my workmen and looked closely into the vessel.
1669. While she was afloat? Yes.
1670. She was afterwards docked, I believe? She was placed in the Fitz Roy Dock.
1671. Who was present when she was in the Fitz Roy Dock, when you made the survey? The Harbour Master, Mr. Crook, Captain Towns, and myself.
1672. You have some printed correspondence before you—will you be kind enough to look at No. 25, page 9; is that your report? It is.
1673. Will you be kind enough to explain to the Committee what you mean by saying in the last paragraph of your report, that you "consider her to be a good substantial vessel for her age and build"? For an American built vessel of that age, I consider her to be a good vessel.
1674. Were you ever asked your opinion as to whether she was a suitable vessel for a pilot boat? Officially?
1675. Officially, yes? Never.
1676. Do you consider her a suitable model for a pilot boat? No, I do not.
1677. Were you ever asked her value? Never.
1678. Will you be kind enough to state what you consider her value to have been at the time that she was purchased by the Government? It would be an impossibility to place an absolute value on a vessel; I never have done it in Sydney. The value of a vessel I take to be determined by the use for which she is required. A vessel worth only £1,000 at one time may be worth £2,000 some time after.
1679. Taking into consideration the state of the demand for vessels at the present time, what do you consider her value? I should think a vessel of her class, and in the state she was in, would be worth somewhere about £1,000.
1680. You made a very careful examination of her when she was in the dock, I believe? Yes.
1681. What depth of keel has she? I have a note here, I took at the time; eighteen inches deep.
1682. Has she a straight keel? A straight keel.
1683. It does not diminish towards the forefoot or keel? In breadth or in depth?
1684. In depth? No, I do not think it does. If it had been so the blocks would have been laid to suit it.
1685. Will you be kind enough to look at No. 42 in this correspondence—a report from Captain Vine Hall and Mr. William Owen—and read the paragraph referring to her hold of the water:—"Her sailing draught, as we were informed by the captain, is eight feet aft, seven feet two inches forwards. She draws somewhat more, we understand, amidships, having a depth of keel there of twenty-four inches, diminishing towards the forefoot and keel." I think that is a mistake as to its being twenty-four inches deep; I measured it.
1686. Is this statement correct? I do not believe it is.
1687. From your examination of the vessel, are you aware whether it is correct or not; just

Mr. J.
Cuthbert.

9 July, 1862.

Mr. J.
Cuthbert.

just read the paragraph carefully and see what it says. (Witness read.) I want to know whether that is the case? It is not the case with reference to the depth of keel; as to the draught of water, I have got it given correctly by the chief officer of the vessel.

1688. Will you give us the draught of water? She drew five feet forward and six and a half abaft.

1689. By Mr. Weekes: Were you told that was her sailing trim? Yes, they told me so.

1690. Are you aware what she draws now? No, I have never been on board since she was in the dock.

1691. Do you mean to say that that was her sailing trim—the condition she was in when off Campbell's Wharf? I was told that was her sailing trim.

1692. By the Chairman: Look at the next paragraph:—"This, we imagine, would give a sufficient hold of the water for a vessel of sixty-three tons (n. m.) which is measurement of the 'Sea Witch,' and which, in conjunction with her very suitable rig, affords good reason for believing her to be (as the captain assured us she is) a very weatherly craft." Are you of the same opinion? She may be a very weatherly craft for a vessel of her description, but not what we call very weatherly for a vessel with a deeper hold of the water.

1693. Be kind enough to look at the next paragraph:—"Possessing this very essential quality, and properly fitted out, we believe she will render good service as a sea pilot boat." Now, are you of opinion that she would be sufficiently weatherly, as stated in that paragraph, to render good service as a sea pilot boat? No, I do not think so.

1694. Did you ever see a model of the "Mary Taylor"? I think I have got a drawing of her at my office.

1695. The celebrated New York pilot boat? Yes.

1696. Do you think the "Sea Witch" is on the same lines as the "Mary Taylor"? No, to the best of my recollection she is not.

1697. Then if the Honorable the Treasurer has been informed that she is, do you think he has been wrongly informed? I think so.

1698. Have you any idea of the draught of water of the "Mary Taylor"? No; it is some time since I took notice of her.

1699. By Mr. Weekes: Are you aware that it is only five feet? No.

1700. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether it is twelve feet? I cannot say.

1701. During the time you were surveying the vessel, did you hear the Harbour Master express any opinion about her suitability for a pilot vessel? During the time we were examining the vessel in the dock he appeared to think so; he said she was a suitable vessel.

1702. Have you sent any models to the Pilot Board of vessels for the pilot service? Yes, I have sent two.

1703. Do they resemble the "Sea Witch"? No.

1704. Have you sent any tender to the Pilot Board, or to the Government, to build a vessel? Yes.

1705. Has that been accepted? No, I have heard nothing of it.

1706. By Mr. Weekes: None have been accepted yet? No, I believe not.

1707. By the Chairman: Were they to be like or anything like the model of the "Sea Witch"? No; the offer I sent in was to build vessels similar to the model.

1708. What did you propose as the draught of water? I think 11 feet, or 11 feet 6 inches.

1709. What price per ton did you offer to build one for? I sent in two models—two sizes; one of 80 tons builder's measurement, at £30 a ton, ready for sea; and one of 120 tons, builder's measurement, at £27 10s.

1710. Will you be kind enough to turn to No. 58 in the correspondence; you will there see a copy of an agreement from Harvey and Sons, containing a specification of the manner in which they offer to build pilot vessels—will you look at that and say whether your vessels were to be fastened and fitted in the same way? My vessels would be equal if not superior; our timber is, I believe, superior.

1711. Would there be no difference;—would yours be fastened precisely in the same way as is there proposed? They would be fastened precisely in the same way; but they would not have two complete suits of sails; they would have two extra sails.

1712. Just be kind enough to look at the rate at which they offer to build these vessels per ton? £22 5s. per ton.

1713. Your vessels, at the price you offer, were to be equipped and fitted in all respects the same as in this specification? In all respects, with the exception that this specification provides for two complete suits of sails, and my tender was for two spare sails in addition to one complete set.

1714. What additional price would you charge to equip a vessel in every respect the same as they offered here at? My price is £27 10s. per ton, and this is £22 5s.

1715. There are some additions here, extra sails I think you say? That is not much—not £100 difference.

1716. By Mr. Weekes: I suppose there is a great difference of opinion as to the proper model of any vessel, between scientific and competent men? There always is.

1717. A model has not been arrived at yet on which all sailors and shipwrights agree? And never will.

1718. Some have depth of water, some breadth of beam, some sharp, and some full bows? Yes.

1719. Each one maintaining his particular hobby as the correct one? Yes.

1720. Are you acquainted with two vessels belonging to this port, called the "Pacific" and "Atlantic"? Only so far as seeing them; I have never been on board.

1721. Seeing that the "Pacific" is sixty tons register, and the price at which the Board recommended to the Government that she should be bought was £1,200, and that the "Atlantic," of seventy-one tons, was recommended to be bought at £2,000, is it an unreasonable price for the "Sea Witch," which is sixty-three tons, being more than the "Pacific" and less than the "Atlantic"—is it an unreasonable price compared with the other prices, that she should be bought at £1,425. It is unreasonable. She is not so valuable in comparison.
1722. What is the difference between them? As far as I can understand they were built under inspection, the last one specially for the owner; and the timber is a better description than the American timber.
1723. Do you know what the timber is? I do not know the native name, but it is a most superior timber, and the planking is of Kaurie pine.
1724. You know nothing about their fastenings? Only what I have heard.
1725. Are you quite sure there is an even depth of keel to the "Sea Witch"? To the best of my belief there is.
1726. Was it not necessary while she was in the dock to chock her up amidships, where the greater depth was said to be? She would have to be chocked up at the ends in that case.
1727. Was she not chocked up in such a way as to meet the greater depth amidships? Not to the best of my recollection.
1728. Did you remain there the whole time? No, a short time only.
1729. You are quite clear she has an even keel? To the best of my recollection she has; I am almost confident of it. Mr. Crook, I believe, made the remark that they might have to put a false keel to her, so I took the breadth and depth of it.
1730. She had some ballast in when you examined her? Yes.
1731. Was not that ballast in her when she had her cargo in also—she brought that ballast with her? I do not think she had much cargo on board; it was the ballast she brought with her.
1732. You are not aware what cargo she brought? No.
1733. And you were told that in her sailing trim her draft of water was five feet forward, and six and a half feet aft? That is what the chief officer told me. I asked him if there was sufficient ballast in her, and he said yes.
1734. You have not noticed what she draws now? No.
1735. Was she a good sound vessel? She was a good vessel, a good substantial vessel.
1736. The timber was not rotten? No, not that I could see.
1737. She was a sound vessel? Yes, as I mentioned in my report.
1738. From keel to truck? I did not go aloft.
1739. You reported her spars as sound? Yes, I inquired, and they appeared to be sound.
1740. By Mr. Piddington: Have you a good opinion of American timber, as compared with the flooded gum of this country? I would not make any comparison.
1741. It is American timber that is used in building the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
1742. Is not the opinion universal among shipbuilders, that the American timber is inferior for shipbuilding? Yes, it is the universal opinion.
1743. Both at Home and elsewhere? Yes.
1744. By Mr. Weekes: Does that apply to all classes of American timber? To most of them.
1745. By Mr. Piddington: Are not all the ships built in New Brunswick built of American timber? Yes, generally soft wood.
1746. That has given American timber a bad name? I would not call it a bad name; it is good timber, but not equal to our timber.
1747. Would a ship built of American timber rank at Lloyd's in the same letter as ships built of ordinary timber in the Mother Country? No.
1748. Is there any comparison between the timber used in the construction of the "Sea Witch" and the timber used in the construction of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"? If the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" are framed with timber such as I saw myself in New Zealand, there can be no comparison.
1749. It is very much superior to the timber used in building the "Sea Witch"? Very much superior.
1750. By Mr. Wilson: If you will look at No. 25—your report—you will see that in the first paragraph you have stated that the "Sea Witch" was built in New London, Connecticut, in the year 1855;—how did you obtain that information? From the chief officer.
1751. You did not see her register? No.
1752. Do you know the depth of her hold? No, I have not measured her.
1753. You have stated that seamen and shipbuilders in general have not agreed as to the perfect model of a vessel; but have they not agreed as to certain models or forms of build giving certain properties to a ship? Some parties prefer a deep vessel, built sharp and deep. The Americans generally go on the shallow principle.
1754. By Mr. Weekes: The "Sea Witch" principle? Yes, the same as the "Sea Witch."
1755. By Mr. Wilson: Is there any dispute among shipbuilders as to a deep and narrow vessel being more weatherly than a shallow and broad vessel? As a shipbuilder I prefer a deep vessel to have her weatherly; others have a different opinion.
1756. Are you aware whether vessels built for weatherly qualities are commonly built broad and shallow? No, never; a vessel built broad and shallow cannot be weatherly.
1757. Then shipbuilders are pretty well agreed as to that point? Yes.
1758. It has been stated here that the "Sea Witch" draws about 9 feet of water—do you think that likely? She must be very deep then.
1759. By Mr. Weekes: Are not the New York pilot boats some of the most celebrated sea boats in the world? I cannot say; we have got as good sea boats at Home.

Mr. J.
Cuthbert.

9 July, 1862.

- Mr. J. Cuthbert.
9 July, 1862.
1760. Have they not the reputation of being good sea boats? Yes, they are good sea boats.
1761. By Mr. Sadleir: What property will width give a vessel—will it make her weatherly? No.
1762. What other property will it give her? It would make her stiff and stand to her canvas—too stiff sometimes; a ship must be allowed to heel in a certain proportion.
1763. Did you ever know a vessel to have a deeper keel in the centre than abaft? Yes, it is very often the case.
1764. What is the effect on her sailing properties—would it have any peculiar effect upon her staying and wearing and working? Not except the vessel was formed to suit that.
1765. Respecting the model of her—is there much difference of opinion as to the model of a pilot boat, seeing that they all require certain qualities? Yes, there is a great deal of difference.
1766. Would that depend upon the place where they were employed—the coast? Yes; if a vessel has to stand heavy weather she must be able to hold her ground.
1767. Looking at No. 22 in the correspondence, where Captain Towns represents the “Sea Witch” as the perfect model of what we require, do you think she is a perfect model, considering the coast she is going upon? I do not think so.
1768. Do you think she could have been fitted out at a very trifling expense, as he states? I would not consider it so.
1769. And sent to sea in a few hours from her first purchase? She could not as a pilot boat; he must have made a mistake there.
1770. You say she is sound for an American vessel? Yes.
1771. Do American vessels last long? Yes, they do.
1772. As long as English vessels? Not so long as English vessels, generally speaking, though I have known some very old American vessels.
1773. What were they built with? Live oak I think.
1774. Does live oak always last if it is not seasoned? I should think not; I never saw any that was not seasoned, for it is a very rare timber, and very scarce. They do not often use it, except for men-of-war and valuable vessels.
1775. You consider the “Sea Witch” sound for her age? For her age and build.
1776. Might not a vessel of fifty years of age be sound for her age? She might be.
1777. Would that qualify or fit her for a pilot vessel, being sound for her age? No.
1778. Would you recommend her to be bought on that principle for a pilot boat? I would not.
1779. By Mr. Dickson: You stated that you have known American vessels very old—were they American vessels built of American wood, such as is described by you as the build of the “Sea Witch”? I scarcely think a vessel built of the same materials as the “Sea Witch” would last very long.
1780. Might the “Sea Witch” be a good vessel for her age for the next five years? She might, going on for that.
1781. Not for much beyond that? Not for much beyond that.
1782. But she might be a good vessel for her age for that time? She might be.

APPENDIX.

(Urgent.)

Pilot Board Office,
14 March, 1862.

Sir,

I am directed to inform you, that the Honorable the Treasurer has requested the Pilot Board to instruct you to report on the condition of the “Sea Witch,” now lying off Campbell’s Wharf. Will you have the goodness to attend to this matter as early as possible?

Your obedient servant,

W. J. WILSHIRE,

Secretary.

The Shipwright Surveyor to the Steam Navigation Board.

Mr. John William Russell called in and examined:—

- Mr. J. W. Russell.
9 July, 1862.
1783. By the Chairman: You are a shipbuilder? Yes.
1784. How long have you been a shipbuilder? I was an apprentice in 1811; but as to the drafting and moulding, I think about 1818.
1785. You have had great experience? Yes.
1786. Have you ever been employed by the Government? I built the dredge “Hercules,” and inspected the building of the dredge “Hunter.”
1787. Is that the only occasion on which you have been employed by the Government? I do not think for the moment of any other.
1788. Were you called upon to survey the “Sea Witch”? I was asked to go down; I had a note to that effect.
1789. Did you go down? Yes.
1790. Where to? The Circular Wharf; the Government boat shed, I believe.
1791. Who requested you to make that survey? Captain Towns.
1792. Did you make that survey? I looked to see to the suitability of the vessel in the first instance, and I concluded, from my experience, that the vessel was not adapted for the purpose; and therefore I did not go into the matter so minutely as I would have done if I had thought she was a suitable vessel.

1793. Who was present? Captain Vine Hall and Mr. Chowne.
1794. Were you asked to give any report? We agreed among ourselves on the Saturday afternoon to meet at Captain Vine Hall's on the Monday morning, which we did. There were the questions asked in the note, and I said I thought the first consideration was, was the vessel suitable for the purpose; but they did not seem to understand that. I said, I thought I was asked the question, or that I had seen it in writing; but we decided to meet on the following day to see if it was one of the questions, and we found it was.
1795. Will you look at No. 40 in the correspondence, and see whether those are the questions you refer to? I think I have got the memorandum here. (Letter handed in and read. Vide Appendix.)
1796. Did you send any reply to that? No, I gave my attendance, and we met as being the surveyors, but we did not decide between ourselves. I do not know hardly why it was not, but it ended without our coming to any report.
1797. Can you state to the Committee why you did not give any report when called upon by Captain Towns? I have not been asked for a report; if asked, of course I should give one, but I was never asked for it.
1798. Did you express any opinion at the meeting to which you refer? I said I was most decidedly of opinion that the vessel was not a suitable vessel for the purpose; she is a kind of vessel that I would not have built on any account for the purpose.
1799. For the purpose of an outside pilot boat? Yes, or for the coast in general, in fact.
1800. Will you please explain why you did not consider her fit? They say she has, a two feet hanging keel. Well, I consider that the form of the vessel ought to have been built so as to have taken that two feet in the bottom of the vessel. She would not have required that plank as a keel now, if she had all that space in her hold to put ballast in; and it would have given her nicer lines and made her more suitable. I think that keel and her flat floor must make her a very uneasy and very uncomfortable vessel.
1801. Do you consider her a model of a weatherly craft? No, I think she is anything but that. I am looking at the vessel in bad weather.
1802. Did you examine her fastenings? I did not examine her so particularly as I would have done if I could have made a report of her being a suitable vessel; I should then have gone into it more minutely.
1803. What do you consider would have been her value in the market, at the time you examined her? I should think it is an average of £600.
1804. By Mr. Weekes: You have been told she has got two feet of hanging keel? I have been told so.
1805. Who told you? Captain Towns was mentioning her that Saturday afternoon—at least from twenty inches to two feet; I took it to be two feet. In fact I know nothing about that; but as I said at the time, if I thought the vessel was suitable, and I had to give a report upon her, I should like to have seen her bottom, because I should not have been quite satisfied about the keel on her under those circumstances.
1806. By Mr. Piddington: You were requested, in a note sent to you signed by Captain Towns, to inspect the "Sea Witch," were you not? Yes.
1807. Did you go to inspect the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
1808. Who accompanied you? I went down myself in the forenoon to have a look at the vessel, and I had to meet Captain Vine Hall and Mr. Chowne at three o'clock, according to that note. I took it into consideration then and went down. She was inspected pretty minutely by Captain Vine Hall and Mr. Chowne. They referred this and that to me, and I said the vessel was not suitable, but they did not seem to think that was one of the questions.
1809. The only persons present when you examined the "Sea Witch" were Captain Vine Hall and Mr. Chowne? Captain Towns also was present, and Mr. Crook.
1810. At the same time? Yes, and a Mr. Chapman, an American, interested, I understood, in the vessel.
1811. When you went to inspect the "Sea Witch" in the afternoon, Captain Vine Hall, Mr. Chowne, Captain Towns, and the Harbour Master, were present? Yes.
1812. Did you give an answer to Captain Towns' letter? I have not replied to it by letter.
1813. But you practically gave an answer in the negative; you said the vessel was not suitable? When we met on Monday in the forenoon, as we had agreed—Captain Vine Hall, Mr. Chowne, and myself—we were considering what report we should draw up; I said one question is, Is she suitable? they thought that question was not put. We did not agree to anything then, but we agreed to meet next day to get further information; and when we met again we had some conversation, more or less, but it passed off without our doing anything.
1814. Then, as I understand you, Captain Vine Hall and Mr. Chowne did not consider the suitability of the vessel to be worthy of consideration;—they said nothing in favour of considering the suitability of the vessel? They did not say anything against her.
1815. Are you quite satisfied she is not suitable for a pilot boat? It is one I would not undertake to build.
1816. You believe her to be unsuitable, from her build, for an outside pilot vessel? I do not think she is at all suitable.
1817. By Mr. Wilson: Was there a Mr. Owen with you when you surveyed this vessel along with Captain Vine Hall? I dare say he might have been there. There were two persons—one a little man, an American, I believe, and I understood him that he did the repairs of the vessel at Tahiti.
1818. By Mr. Sadleir: By what authority did Captain Towns request you to examine this vessel? I am not aware. I have been called upon so often to survey and inspect vessels, that it was nothing unusual to be called on to examine this one, and therefore I did not inquire about it.

Mr. J. W.
Russell.
9 July, 1862.

- M. J. W. Russell. 1819. You do not know whether he was authorized by the Government in any way? I am not aware.
- 9 July, 1862. 1820. Do you recollect about the date when you surveyed that vessel? It was immediately after I got this note from Captain Towns.
1821. What is the date of that? 4th April.
1822. Did you know that the Government had actually bought the vessel previously? I did not know anything about the vessel before I went down on the Saturday morning.
1823. You do not agree with Captain Towns as to her being a perfect model for the service? No.

APPENDIX.

Sydney, 4 April, 1862.

Mr. Russell,

Dear Sir,

Will you kindly oblige me by attending a survey to be held on board the Government schooner "Sea Witch," to-morrow, Saturday, at 3 p.m., to inspect the vessel as to her condition, and also, if suitable for an outside pilot boat.

An answer will oblige.

Yours very truly,

R. TOWNS.

Mr. William James Wilshire called in and further examined:—

- Mr. W. J. Wilshire. 1824. By the Chairman: The question I put before was, whether you are aware that the minute No. 23, signed "E. C. W., 13 March, 1862," reached the Pilot Board? Yes, I find that minute reached the Board on the 13th March, the day they met, and their minute upon it is to this effect:—"Pilot vessels. The Board directed that, on Mr. Weekes' "minute of the 13th instant, the Shipwright Surveyor should be called upon to report on "the condition of the 'Sea Witch.'"
- 9 July, 1862. 1825. Who were the members of the Board present on that occasion? The Chairman (Mr. Duncan), Captain Darley, Captain Watson, and Captain Fox.
1826. Now will you refer to No. 26, a minute signed "E. C. W.," dated 15th March, 1862—did that minute reach the Pilot Board? No, the Board did not see that minute at the time.
1827. By Mr. Weekes: Are you aware if it went to the Pilot Board Office? Yes, no doubt about that.
1828. And was dealt with by whom? By me, I think.
1829. In the ordinary course of duty? Yes, on verbal instructions from Mr. Duncan. I have some recollection of taking the papers up to him; they were marked "very urgent," and I asked him what I had better do, and to the best of my recollection he instructed me to see Mr. Crook, and have the vessel put in the Government dock. The Board could not have seen this minute at that time, because the next meeting was seven days after the 13th.
1830. Is it usual for the Secretary, with the instructions of the Chairman, to take action on matters between the periods of the Board's sitting? Yes, if the papers are marked "urgent," and come from the Minister direct, as in this case.
1831. By Mr. Smart: In terms of the minute of the Board, which you have already read, you called upon Mr. Cuthbert to report upon the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
1832. On what date? On the 14th March.
1833. By Mr. Wilson: You wrote to Mr. Cuthbert on the 14th, in accordance with instructions from the Board? Yes.
1834. If you look at No. 22, you will see a letter from Captain Towns, addressed to the Honorable E. C. Weekes, Esq., Colonial Treasurer;—was that letter laid before the Board, at their meeting on the 13th, when they made the minute you have read, calling upon Mr. Cuthbert to examine the vessel? I have seen the papers since I was here before the Committee, and I find the Treasurer's minute of the 13th is on the corner of that letter of Captain Towns. I saw the letter just now, and I am almost sure Nos. 22 and 23 are on the same sheet of paper.
1835. By Mr. Sadleir: Captain Browne appears to have acted as Secretary as well as Chairman? He did, as far as writing the minutes.
1836. You say the Chairman takes action on urgent occasions—do you think that a mere report upon the condition of the "Sea Witch" was an urgent occasion? If it was so marked, as it was, it must be treated as such.
1837. Would you suppose it to be an urgent occasion? It is hardly for me to judge of that; if a minute comes down from the Minister marked "urgent," I at once consult the Chairman. I may say, however, that I do not think the Chairman would act upon it if a matter of opinion was involved.
1838. If a vessel was on shore, in danger of being wrecked, or on fire, I presume you would consider that an urgent occasion? Yes, no doubt; but in a case of that kind any communication would most likely be addressed to the Harbour Master.
1839. Would that be an urgent occasion? No doubt it would; but I am not supposed to have any discretion in matters of this kind. If a letter is marked "urgent" by the Minister, some action should be immediately taken upon it.
1840. I am only asking if a vessel were on shore, or on fire, would that be an urgent occasion? I should suppose so.

1841.

1841. Do you think there is any comparison between a vessel in that condition, and merely examining the condition of a vessel—any comparison of urgency? It is not for me to judge what the Minister sees fit to consider urgent.

Mr. W. J.
Wilshire.

1842. By Mr. Wilson: Did the Harbour Master report the docking of the "Sea Witch" to the Pilot Board, that they might inspect her in dock? Not to my knowledge.

9 July, 1862.

1843. If he had done so, you would be likely to know, from your position as Secretary? Yes, I should know it, unless he went round to the members at their residences or places of business.

1844. By the Chairman: Have you got with you the correspondence that took place between the Pilot Board and the Treasurer, with respect to the recommendation of the Board for the appointment of Mr. Thomson as pilot? I have the minutes of the Board, but not the whole of the papers. On the 31st May, 1860, the Board recommended that Mr. Shanks should be appointed, and it was then they suggested that a sixth pilot should be appointed; Mr. Shanks made but five.

1845. Will you turn to the next minute after that with reference to the same matter? That was on the 11th February, 1861.

1846. What was the minute then? "The Pilot Board forward, for the information and consideration of the Minister for Finance and Trade, the several applications received by them in pursuance of the Minister's instructions of 27 December last, and of the advertisement in the Government Gazette and daily papers. Eleven applications were made, and by the individuals undermentioned, viz., Messrs. Appleweight, Hayward, Neilds, Walsh, Garrard, Lee, Coomy, Thomson, Paget, and Levien, and Mr. Robson, late pilot; of whom, after being carefully examined (except Messrs. Lee and Walsh, who did not attend), the Board resolved to report the following as qualified, viz., Thomson, Levien, and Garrard; and their names are placed in the order in which they were respectively elected by the greatest number of votes. The Board also beg to transmit Mr. Robson's application, which is accompanied by certificates, showing that since his removal from office his conduct has been respectable and temperate; and as the Board never had any doubt as to Mr. Robson's qualifications as a thorough seaman, and as to his practical knowledge as a pilot, they will offer no objection (should the Honorable the Treasurer think fit to overlook his previous offence), to his reinstatement. In placing Mr. Thomson's name at the head of the list, the Board beg to report that they consider that he possesses qualifications of a high order for the position of pilot, being not only of a strictly temperate habit, but he has been for some time, and still is, in active employment."

1847. Is there any minute before the one you have just read? Merely a letter calling attention to the necessity of having a sixth pilot appointed.

1848. Where does that letter come from? From the Pilot Board. It is dated 11th June.

1849. Subsequent to that was there no other minute than those you have read? Unless I had the papers I cannot well tell, because I cannot follow the contest. There is a further minute in reference to Mr. Levien's appointment, in these terms:—"Referring to previous minutes and correspondence on the subject of the appointment of a sixth pilot, the Board would respectfully remind the Honorable the Treasurer, that in the election of a pilot for Port Jackson, on the 11th February, they were unanimous in recommending Mr. Thomson, and that it was at the particular request of the Minister that others were balloted for. It was thus only that Mr. Levien appeared at all. Had it been left to the Board, Mr. Levien's name would never have been forwarded. The Honorable the Treasurer's suggestion, that an experienced pilot should accompany one newly appointed, for some time, shall in future be carried out. 6 June, 1861."

1850. Was there any minute subsequent to that? I do not see that there was. I could tell much better if I knew what particular minute was required, or if I could get the papers.

1851. Where are the papers? In the Treasury, where almost all the papers are.

1852. Where they can be obtained? Yes, they are always accessible.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William Clark called in and examined:—

1853. By the Chairman: You are Master of the "Sea Witch," pilot schooner? Yes.

Mr. W. Clark.

1854. Have had command of her from the first, since she has been a pilot vessel? Yes.

1855. Had you had any experience in pilot vessels before your appointment to the "Sea Witch"? Yes, I had been in pilot vessels before.

15 July, 1862.

1856. In what position? As a seaman.

1857. Have you had much experience in that way? Not to say a great deal in pilot vessels, but I have had good experience in that class of vessels.

1858. Does the "Sea Witch" resemble the class of vessels you have been accustomed to before? She is the same rig as the pilot vessels—fore-and-aft.

1859. Is her hull the same? Not exactly; she is rather larger than some, and smaller than others.

- Mr. W. Clark. 1860. In what way does she differ from pilot vessels you have seen before? Pilot vessels draw a little more water than what she does.
- 15 July, 1862. 1861. Will you state how the "Sea Witch" acts in a sea-way? She acts, I should say, very well in a sea-way, but not to be in a very heavy sea—what you might call safe to put a boat out.
1862. Does she stay well? Well, she does not stay well in a heavy sea; she has missed.
1863. Will she stay under double-reefed sails? Yes.
1864. What is your opinion of the vessel as to her suitability for a pilot vessel? As a pilot vessel she answers very well in moderate weather, where you can carry double-reefed sails, but when you come to be anything below that, she is a vessel that will not stay in a heavy sea.
1865. It has been reported that she misses stays frequently—is that the case? She has missed stays several times—I could not say the exact number.
1866. Have any members of the present Pilot Board been on a cruise with you since the "Sea Witch" has been employed as a pilot vessel? Yes.
1867. What members? Only a member.
1868. What member? Captain Thomas Watson.
1869. How did she act when he was on board? She acted very well during the time he was on board, but we had no heavy weather while he was with us.
1870. Did she miss stays while he was on board? Yes, once or twice.
1871. Did you hear him express any opinion about her? No, I did not, not addressing me in any way; I do not remember that he passed any remarks in particular.
1872. You sprung your mainboom, I believe, on one occasion? Yes.
1873. Under what circumstances was that? It was blowing fresh, under double reefed sails, with a very heavy sea from the southward, and the pitching of the vessel carried the boom away.
1874. To what do you attribute the springing of the mainboom? To the heavy sea—to the plunge.
1875. Not to any want of management? No. The boom was an old boom, and had been cracked before.
1876. Were the crew in any way to blame? No.
1877. Is the "Sea Witch" a vessel well found? Yes, she is well found.
1878. Well found in gear? Yes.
1879. And stores? Yes, for vessel's stores.
1880. What sort of boat have you? We have two, a four-oared boat and a dingy.
1881. How does the boat answer? The boat is not adapted for the vessel; she is rather short.
1882. Do you know where that boat came from? I do not, for certain.
1883. Have you ever complained of the vessel not being equal to the purpose for which she is required? No, not to my knowledge.
1884. The crew were all discharged on one occasion? They were.
1885. Under what circumstances? For refusing to take in the main boom when it was finished on a Saturday evening; they refused to do any work until the Sunday morning at daylight.
1886. They were guilty of an act of insubordination, in fact? Disobedience of orders.
1887. Were they a good crew in other respects? Yes.
1888. You have a chief officer? Yes.
1889. Is he a person that has had experience in pilot vessels? I believe he has in the English Channel, or in fishing vessels, I am not sure which, but I believe he has been in both.
1890. Have you ever been called upon by the Pilot Board to report regarding the qualities of the "Sea Witch"? I have.
1891. Did you send in any report? Not in writing; I gave it verbally to the Board.
1892. What was the report that you gave? That the vessel had answered very well, and would stay, with moderate weather; I do not know that I said she would stay in a gale of wind, because I could not say it against my conscience.
1893. Is it not in rough weather that a pilot vessel is likely to be more required than in fine weather? Yes, that is the time when the pilot's services are most required. The further off at sea a vessel gets a pilot it would be more beneficial to her than when close in, I should suppose.
1894. Does the "Sea Witch" make any water in rough weather? No.
1895. Have you had much rough weather since you have had her? I had one blow at the time the boom was carried away.
1896. Where were you then? Off to the southward of Bondi, I should suppose, between that and Coogee.
1897. Have you ever been compelled to run into port through stress of weather? I came into port in the last southerly gale. I did not stay out because I saw it looked very bad, and I came in at dark after putting pilots on board ships.
1898. Was that the day the ship "Colonial Empire" came in? Yes.
1899. Are you aware whether that vessel on that occasion came in under topgallant-sails? I think she had her maintopgallant-sails when she came in under the land.
1900. Do I understand you to say that the "Colonial Empire" ran in under topgallant-sails while you ran in from stress of weather? A vessel of that size might carry topgallant-sails a long time before the wind, when I could not make much way where I had to work.
1901. You recollect a vessel called the "City of Aberdeen" coming in here? Yes.
1902. You put a pilot on board of her? Yes.
1903. Had you any difficulty in putting a pilot on board her? No.

1904. What kind of weather was it? If I remember right, the "Colonial Empire" and the Mr. W. Clark. "City of Aberdeen" came in the same day.
1905. Do you think a pilot boat ought to be compelled to run in from stress of weather when ^{15 July, 1862.} a vessel could carry her topgallant-sails? That would be according to the circumstances under which a vessel is carrying her topgallant-sails.
1906. Will you state the circumstances under which you ran into port from stress of weather? I came in on account of the appearance of the weather.
1907. By Mr. Weekes: Did you come in for pilots? I came in to the reef to get pilots.
1908. By the Chairman: Did you remain in? I did not think it prudent to go out.
1909. By Mr. Piddington: Was it because the weather threatened? Yes, it appeared to me to be what they call a southerly burster.
1910. You came in under the apprehension of bad weather? Yes.
1911. By the Chairman: Would you have done it in any vessel? Most undoubtedly I would.
1912. No matter what might be her qualities as a pilot boat? I think I should.
1913. By Mr. Wilson: Would a Liverpool pilot boat come in under similar circumstances? I think she would.
1914. By the Chairman: What pilot boats have you been in? American pilot boats.
1915. On the night you sprang your mainboom, are you aware of any vessel having shown lights for a pilot, and running in without one? No.
1916. Is there a log kept on board the vessel? Yes.
1917. Who keeps that log? I do.
1918. Do you insert in that log all the transactions on board? Yes.
1919. Do you insert the number of times the vessel misses stays? I did not the first two days; but I have ever since.
1920. Where is the log book now? On board the vessel.
1921. By Captain Moriarty: How did it happen that you did not insert in the log for the first two days the times when the ship missed stays? It was an oversight of mine.
1922. By the Chairman: Have you been master of a vessel before? Yes, of several; principally fore-and-aft vessels.
1923. What was the last vessel? The "Bertha."
1924. The survey vessel? Yes.
1925. Is she a good sea boat? Yes, a very good sea boat.
1926. Do you think the "Sea Witch" a good vessel on a lee shore with a stiff breeze? Yes, while she can carry canvas to it.
1927. By Mr. Weekes: Do you consider her a good sea boat? I do.
1928. Can she carry a great press of sail? Yes.
1929. It was on the Sunday evening you ran into port, I think? Yes.
1930. And on that afternoon, or evening, you had placed pilots on board the "Colonial Empire" and "City of Aberdeen"? Yes, I think the "City of Aberdeen" was one.
1931. Under ordinary circumstances, and following out your instructions, would it not then have been your duty to have run in for fresh pilots before night closed? Yes, it was dark when I got the pilots.
1932. Then you ran in for the purpose of obtaining other pilots to go out with? Yes.
1933. When did the gale begin to rise to any strength? It commenced to rise on Sunday about noon, and at dark it was blowing more than I could carry double-reefed sails to. Had it been daytime I should probably have gone further out and staid longer, but at night I thought it prudent to come in.
1934. Was that a very heavy gale? It was.
1935. Did it continue on the Monday? Yes, but not to blow so hard as on Sunday night.
1936. Was there a very heavy sea between the Heads? Yes.
1937. Did you see any steamers endeavouring to make their way out of port? I saw one.
1938. Was it a large steamer? A Newcastle boat.
1939. Do you know her name? No; but I have it in the log book.
1940. Did she try for some time? She tried to go out between the Heads, and saw the impossibility, and she came back.
1941. The sea was running so heavy that she was unable to go out? Yes.
1942. Did she return to port? She returned to town.
1943. To her wharf? Yes, as far as I could see her, past Bradley's Head.
1944. Do you know when the steamer made another attempt to go out—was it the next day? On the Tuesday morning, I think.
1945. Do you think you could have gone out? I could not have gone on Monday morning.
1946. Do you think any vessel could have gone out, with the sea and gale then raging? I do not.
1947. By Captain Moriarty: How was the wind? To the southward—south by east or south by west.
1948. Was there any easting in it? I think there was.
1949. Was it south-east? No.
1950. How did it happen that a steamer going to Newcastle—to the northward—could not go out of port? She could not go through the Heads.
1951. By Mr. Weekes: Will you look at the Sydney Morning Herald of Tuesday, 24th June, and read what it says where I have marked it? "The 'Kembla' (s.) bound to the Clyde River, and the 'Illalong' (s.) for Newcastle, returned from the Heads yesterday, 'unable to proceed to sea, owing to the boisterous state of the weather.'"
1952. That was the day to which you refer? Yes.
1953. Is there not sometimes, in certain states of the weather and sea, considerably more difficulty

- Mr. W. Clark. difficulty in getting a vessel to stay than at other times? Yes, especially anywhere near these Heads; there is much more difficulty to stay there than some miles further out.
- 15 July, 1862. 1954. Is not missing stays a thing to which all ships are liable at times? Yes, they are all liable, at times, to miss stays.
1955. Not from want of skill alone in handling the vessel, but from other causes? There are many circumstances under which a vessel will not stay, besides want of skill.
1956. Do you think the "Sea Witch" is in proper sailing trim? Yes, she is in good sailing trim.
1957. What is her draught of water? Not quite 8 feet aft, and I should suppose nearly 9 feet amidships.
1958. Are you speaking from your own knowledge now? Yes. The water and stores make a good deal of difference.
1959. By Captain Moriarty: When the water is on board what does she draw? Not quite 8 feet aft.
1960. By Mr. Weekes: And what forward? I could not say the exact depth.
1961. Is she what you call a dry vessel in a gale of wind? As dry as any vessel of that size would be carrying a press of canvas.
1962. Is it not impossible, at times, to lower a boat from any vessel? It is.
1963. It would be risking the lives of the crew sometimes to lower a boat from a ship in certain states of wind and weather? It would.
1964. Then it would be quite possible, at certain times, that a pilot could not be put on board a vessel outside? It would.
1965. What would you do in that case? I should make the best of my endeavours to get a-head of the vessel and fetch her in through the Heads.
1966. Lead her in? Lead her in.
1967. Was the "Sea Witch" under reefed sails when she missed stays? The first time she missed stays she was not under reefed sails. There are many ways in which a vessel may miss stays. Sometimes the wind may haul a little and fetch her further in to the sea or further off from the sea, which would make a difference in her staying.
1968. When the crew refused to take the boom on board where was she lying? In Farm Cove.
1969. Then it was sheer idleness on their part? I do not know what you may term it. They refused to take it in because it was night, and they had been at work all the night before and all that day.
1970. Does the "Sea Witch" make any water? No, she does not make sufficient water to keep her sweet.
1971. Then if it has been stated that during the heavy weather you were obliged to keep the pumps constantly going it is untrue? It is.
1972. There is no foundation for it? There is no foundation for it. When we had the first blow there was a little water in the vessel, which with the motion of the vessel would make a noise, and I had the pumps at work two or three times in the night to try and get some of it out for the comfort of the pilots.
1973. By the Chairman: Did the bilge water annoy them? Yes.
1974. By Mr. Weekes: Bilge water is not very pleasant, is it? No.
1975. Not fragrant? No.
1976. It is desirable, where you can, to get rid of it? Yes.
1977. The vessel does not leak enough, in fact? She does not leak enough to keep her sweet.
1978. Is it not the duty of the pilots who remain on shore to carry out what was the previous system, and board any vessels between the Heads that may have escaped the pilot boat outside? Yes, that is the regulation.
1979. That is the regulation during the time there is only one pilot boat? Yes.
1980. Then if a vessel escaped your pilot boat and came in without seeing a pilot at all, were not the inside pilots to blame? They cannot tell, in many instances, whether there is a pilot on board or not.
1981. They ought to be on the look-out? Yes.
1982. Do you know what the New York pilot boats' draught of water is—are you acquainted with any of the more modern boats? No, I am not.
1983. Do you know the "Mary Taylor" pilot boat? Yes, I have seen her.
1984. Do you know her draught of water? No, I do not.
1985. Have you represented to the Pilot Board your opinion of the small boat—that she is too short? I have not; I have not had an opportunity to do so lately, unless I wrote to them; the weather has been so fine lately.
1986. Is she a life boat? She has cork under the thwarts; you may term her a life boat.
1987. By the Chairman: Did you not come into collision lately with a French vessel? I did. It could scarcely be called a collision with the vessel; it was with the end of the yard.
1988. Under what circumstances did that collision take place? I was running into the Quarantine Ground to put a pilot on board the French vessel which had gone in there without one, and in working between the land and the ship I got too close to the vessel, and ranged alongside, and took the end of his studding-sail-boom away.
1989. Has the master of the vessel claimed compensation for the damage? I have not heard.
1990. By Mr. Wilson: I gather from your evidence that it was in American pilot boats you were? I have been in American pilot boats.
1991. New York boats? Yes.
1992. Would any of the New York pilot boats you have been in have run in on such a night

- night as that when the "Colonial Empire" came in? Yes; they generally have a lee that Mr. W. Clark. they can run under for shelter—the lee of the land.
1993. They do not go into harbour? They do not go into harbour. They have a lee that 15 July, 1862. they can lay under; or probably they may run into harbour. They do not stay out in bad weather.
1994. By Captain Moriarty: If they can get under the lee of the land they do? Yes.
1995. By Mr. Wilson: On the Sunday night to which I refer, did you attempt to go out? I did; I stood out.
1996. Did the "Sea Witch" miss stays then? No, not in attempting to go out.
1997. Did she miss stays that night at all? In the afternoon she missed stays once, but that was owing to my own fault, not the fault of the vessel.
1998. Do you consider the "Sea Witch" a weatherly vessel? Yes, she has proved herself a weatherly vessel.
1999. Is she a weatherly vessel in heavy weather? Yes.
2000. Do you consider the build of the "Sea Witch" to be that you would choose for a weatherly vessel? If I were going to build a vessel for a pilot boat I would not build her exactly like the "Sea Witch"; she has a little more beam than they generally have.
2001. Do you think she is as weatherly as it is possible for any vessel to be? No.
2002. Is it not a great consideration in pilot boats that they should be as weatherly as possible? Yes.
2003. So that they should be enabled to hold their ground in heavy weather? Yes.
2004. And you think a more weatherly vessel might have been got than the "Sea Witch"? I dare say there might be more weatherly vessels.
2005. You have stated that her draught of water is nearly 8 feet aft, and 9 feet amidships? Yes.
2006. How do you know it is nearly 9 feet amidships? I go by what the captain of her told me when I took charge.
2007. You do not know it of your own knowledge? No, because I have not seen her out of the water for a year.
2008. How do you suppose she can be 8 feet aft, and 9 feet amidships—she must be nearly 10 feet forward? No, because her false keel is put on deeper amidships.
2009. Are you sure that the false keel is deeper amidships? I would not go on my oath to it.
2010. Have you seen it? No.
2011. If it is true, as has been stated in evidence, that the keel is straight, she will not draw more water amidships? No.
2012. By Captain Moriarty: You imagine her bottom to be an arc of a circle? Not her bottom, her keel only.
2013. By Mr. Wilson: Have you seen any weather on this coast, since you have been in command of this vessel, in which it would be dangerous to launch a boat out of a proper vessel? Yes, I have.
2014. Are not some vessels much more dangerous than others, from their build, to launch a boat out of? I do not know.
2015. Do vessels of great breadth of beam and light draught of water roll more or less than vessels of less breadth of beam and greater depth of water—which rolls the most in a sea-way? I should suppose a flat-bottomed vessel did, but I have never experienced it in a narrow vessel; I have always been in one with great breadth of beam.
2016. Is not the great danger from rolling? The "Sea Witch" does not roll very heavy.
2017. I am not alluding to the "Sea Witch" particularly now—is it not dangerous to launch a boat when the vessel rolls much? A vessel would not roll much in heading into the sea.
2018. Do you not lower a boat generally on the lee of a vessel if possible? Yes, if possible; sometimes to windward though.
2019. Do they not sometimes take pilots out of the vessel with a whip from the yard-arm? It has been done, I believe.
2020. Comparing the seas that you have seen running on this coast with those you have seen in the Atlantic, are they much worse here? They are worse here.
2021. In what respect? There is a heavier swell and heavier rollers.
2022. Are they not more regular here? I think not.
2023. By Captain Moriarty: Do you think the sea heavier here than in the Atlantic? Yes, I do; for the wind I have seen I think the sea heavier.
2024. By Mr. Wilson: Under any circumstances do the seas get higher than in the Atlantic? I have not been out in a perfect gale of wind here to see it.
2025. You have seen as heavy seas in the Atlantic as any you have seen while in command of the "Sea Witch"? I have.
2026. By Mr. Saddleir: Do you think this vessel failed in staying for want of skill on your part? I know she did once.
2027. It seems she has frequently failed in staying—has it been from any want of skill? No.
2028. What was the reason she failed in staying? She failed in staying once with me, after putting a pilot out; I was watching the boat, and kept the vessel too close to the wind, without sufficient headway to put her round.
2029. To what do you attribute her not staying? I attribute it to the sea.
2030. Was there a heavy sea on? Yes.
2031. Did it break over the forecastle? Not exactly over the forecastle; it came in over her rail.
2032. The spray or the sea? The sea.

- Mr. W. Clark. 2033. Would that be from want of skill? No, putting the helm down will not always stop a sea from coming on board.
- 15 July, 1862. 2034. What sails had you then? Double-reefed sails.
2035. Do you think her want of staying is owing to her construction? No, I do not think so.
2036. Have you been in a heavy head sea with her? Yes.
2037. Has she pitched her bows under? She has pitched her nightheads under—her bowsprit.
2038. Do you think her pitching is owing to her want of length? No.
2039. Would a vessel longer than her, or of a different build, pitch in the same way? Yes.
2040. To injure her mainboom? There are many instances of vessels carrying away their mainbooms.
2041. Do you not think her construction is one cause of her pitching—if she is too short she will not cover two or three seas at a time? No, that is evident, that she cannot cover two or three seas at a time.
2042. And consequently —? And consequently she has to pitch; but I do not see that she pitches any worse than any other vessel would of her size.
2043. By Captain Moriarty: Were you ever on board a first-rate man-of-war? No, never at sea.
2044. Did you ever hear of a first-rate man-of-war pitching her bowsprit under water? Yes, I have heard of one pitching her masts out—the “Dido.”
2045. By Mr. Sadleir: You have never been out in very heavy weather with the “Sea Witch”? It was pretty heavy weather the night we carried away the boom.
2046. You thought it prudent to come in because the weather was threatening, and because you wanted fresh pilots? I came in at first for pilots, and I had them on board before I came to an anchor.
2047. By Captain Moriarty: Had you any when you bore up? I came in as far as the Hornby Light, and took three in there.
2048. When you bore up to come there had you any on board? No.
2049. You had three when you started originally, and you put them on board ships that were coming in? I put one each on board the “Colonial Empire” and “City of Aberdeen,” whether I had one left I cannot say. I came in then for pilots, and when I had my complement on board I was standing out again, but, looking at the threatening appearance of the weather, I thought it best to bear up and come to an anchor.
2050. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you think you were justified in running into harbour with your complement of pilots on board? I do not know, but I imagine a great deal is left to my judgment, whether I am to come in or not.
2051. What is the object of a pilot vessel? I believe to put pilots on board ships.
2052. In bad weather or good weather? In all kinds of weather.
2053. Is it not an object that in bad weather they should be able to assist vessels? It should be so.
2054. And you ran in when you suspected bad weather, when you had pilots on board? Yes.
2055. You think you were justified in doing so? Yes, or I should not have come in. Had any vessel been near the land in such weather I should think she would most undoubtedly have stood to sea.
2056. Would you venture to get the “Sea Witch” under weigh in a dark night, with a pretty heavy sea, and beat her out to sea? Yes. If it was a very heavy sea of course I would not attempt it.
2057. By Captain Moriarty: You said she was well found? Yes.
2058. I think you said also the boom was defective? The boom was defective that was carried away.
2059. It was defective before it was carried away? Yes, there were nailholes where it was carried away.
2060. Were you aware that that boom was defective? No.
2061. Do you imagine the vessel was well found when the boom was defective? It is impossible to discover all defects of that kind; if that had been known, most probably it would have been provided for before she went out. The main boom I have now is a good one; you cannot see any deficiency in it, but there may be such a thing which no eye can see, and I would defy any eye to have seen it in the one that was carried away; you could see there was a plug in it, that was all.
2062. Would not that lead you to suspect something? No; many a spar has a nailhole or a plug in it, and is not condemned on account of that.
2063. You do not know what the vessel draws forward? No.
2064. With a straight keel she must draw less amidships than aft? Yes.
2065. Do the pilots assume any authority when they get to sea in this vessel, or have you the entire control without reference to them at all? I have the control.
2066. And you go in and come out, although you have pilots on board, without reference to them? In such a case as that I would ask the opinion of a pilot.
2067. I did not exactly gather from you what description of vessels you have been in? Fore-and-aft vessels principally; I have been master of fore-and-aft vessels, with the exception of twice, for the last eight years. I had two brigs.
2068. You have commanded several fore-and-aft vessels? Yes.
2069. Of what tonnage? From 120 tons to 25.
2070. Schooners and cutters? All schooners.
2071. This is a schooner? Yes.
2072. By Mr. Sadleir: You say the “Sea Witch” is a good sea boat; are not many of the coasters in the coasting trade good sea boats? I should suppose so.

2073. Does her being a good sea boat constitute her a good pilot boat without any other Mr. W. Clark. qualification? I consider that one qualification for a pilot boat.
2074. That is not the only qualification required? I should think that would be the 15 July, 1862. principal one.
2075. Would it not be the principal one if she is weatherly? She is weatherly.
2076. A good sea boat might have a bluff bow; a Dutch galliot might be a good sea boat? Yes.
2077. Would she be fit for a pilot boat? No.
2078. You say the "Sea Witch" carries a heavy press of sail? Yes, when required.
2079. Do you not think a vessel may carry a heavy press of sail and yet not sail well? Yes; when I say she carries a press of sail, I mean without making leeway, or any quantity of it.
2080. By the Chairman: You say the vessel draws nearly 8 feet aft? Yes.
2081. Does she trim much by the stern? I think she trims nearly a foot by the stern.
2082. Do you know the depth of the hold of the vessel? No, I do not.
2083. Do you know the depth of her keel? I have been told it is 23 inches. I do not know.
2084. You have stated before, in reply to a question, that she has proved herself a weatherly vessel? Yes.
2085. Will you tell us how she has proved herself a weatherly vessel? On her passage from the States out.
2086. Were you on board her then? No.
2087. Has she proved herself a weatherly vessel since you have been in charge of her? Yes.
2088. Under what circumstances? In standing out from the Heads to the southward the night I carried away the boom; I found myself in the morning further to the southward than I expected to, under a mainsail and jib part of the night.
2089. Do you recollect at what time you boarded the "City of Aberdeen"? It must have been four o'clock.
2090. Not after dark? No.
2091. Are you sure of that? Yes, if that was the ship that came in the same day as the "Colonial Empire."
2092. Then if it has been stated that you boarded her after dark, it is an error? Yes.
2093. You stated just now, that if the weather was rough, vessels would have stood off? Yes.
2094. That is the reason why you felt justified in coming inside? Not altogether, but from the appearance of the weather I felt justified.
2095. I understood you to say, that you felt justified in coming in because the weather was threatening, and if any vessels had been near at hand they would have stood off? Yes, I suppose they would.
2096. Is it not the object of the outside pilot service to put pilots on board when the weather is threatening, and ships are near at hand? Yes.
2097. Do you think it ought to enter into consideration of a person in your position that vessels will stand off when the weather threatens? Yes, I consider that if I had been out I could have rendered little or no assistance to them with my boat; and even had they been there that night they would have passed me in the squalls and rain.
2098. You stood in before the storm actually came on? Before the worst of it broke I stood in.
2099. Had the storm broken before you stood in? Before I came to an anchor it had.
2100. Before you stood in, I ask? No, it had not come to its height then.
2101. You have stated, in reply to a question, that there are occasions when it is impossible to lower a boat? Yes.
2102. Is it within your knowledge that pilot boats do lower boats in very rough weather—the Liverpool pilot boats for instance? I could not say for the Liverpool pilot boats.
2103. Is it not the case with the American pilot boats that they lower boats in very rough weather? I have not seen them in such weather as that. They have always a lee they can make for and board vessels.
2104. By Mr. Weekes: That Sunday evening you came in, did you not come into Watson's Bay about one o'clock in the day? Yes.
2105. What did you come in for? For pilots.
2106. How many pilots did you take on board on that occasion? I did not take any, because the pilot had not returned from town that I came for. I had previously taken two pilots on board.
2107. What did you do then? I stood out with them.
2108. In the course of the afternoon did you place these two pilots on board two vessels? Yes.
2109. The "Colonial Empire" and the "City of Aberdeen"? Yes. I forget whether I had the third pilot off.
2110. After having placed the pilots on board these two vessels it would be your duty to return for a fresh supply of pilots? Yes.
2111. Did you so return? Yes.
2112. Where? To the South Reef, and took in two or three pilots—I am not certain which—out of the whaleboat.
2113. What did you do then? I stood out to sea.
2114. Did you go out to sea? Yes.
2115. How far? About four miles.
2116. Was it blowing heavy then? Yes, blowing hard.
2117. From what point? The southward.
2118. What decided you to run in? After I stood out and saw the appearance of the weather, I thought it more prudent to come in.

- Mr. W. Clark. 2119. Did you consult the pilots? I asked one of them what he thought of the appearance of the weather, and he told me it was looking very bad; I asked another, and he said it had a bad appearance, and that was all I asked of them.
- 15 July, 1862. 2120. Did you ever know a ship that was perfect in all points? No.
2121. From your own experience you are able to state that the "Sea Witch" has weatherly qualities? Yes.
2122. Have you ever forced her against a foul wind and heavy sea without making much leeway? Yes.
2123. She possesses the property that sailors call weatherly? Yes.
2124. By Captain Moriarty: Can she hold her own in bad weather? I have not experienced what they call bad weather here.
2125. Do you not call that bad weather the day you came in? I was not out in the worst of it.
2126. By Mr. Weekes: On that Sunday night did she beat well to windward? Yes, under double-reefed sails, as long as I could carry them, and made good way.
2127. When you beat four miles to windward it was blowing hard? Yes.
2128. By Mr. Wilson: Are you aware whether there is any current on the coast? Yes.
2129. Which way does it run? To the southward.
2130. Where were you going that time when beating to windward? Going south.
2131. The current was with you? Yes.
2132. Consequently you have not had such a good opportunity of testing her weatherly qualities as you would have had in a place where there was no current? Not exactly, because the current was in her favour.
2133. By Captain Moriarty: Are you sure you had the current in your favour? I should suppose there was a current.
2134. By Mr. Sadleir: Can you carry double-reefed sails in a gale of wind? No.
2135. What kind of weather was it when you carried double-reefed sails, was it blowing fresh? Yes.
2136. When it is blowing fresh she works pretty well? Yes.
2137. But you have not been out in her in a gale of wind? No.
2138. By the Chairman: You have sent in no written report to the Pilot Board? No.
2139. Did the Pilot Board, in writing, call on you to report? They did.
2140. How long since? It must be a month.
2141. By Mr. Wilson: From whom do you receive your instructions? From the Pilot Board.
2142. Through the Secretary? No, from the Chairman.
2143. Who is the Chairman? Mr. Duncan.
2144. By the Chairman: Are you in constant communication with members of the Pilot Board? No.

Mr. Thomas Chowne called in and examined:—

- Mr. T. Chowne. 2145. By the Chairman: You are a shipwright, I believe? I am.
- 15 July, 1862. 2146. Have you had much experience in shipbuilding? All my life; not as a journeyman alone, but I have been foreman and master the whole of my life—before I was out of my time.
2147. Were you called upon by any one to make a survey of the "Sea Witch"? Yes, I was asked to go on board and look at her.
2148. By whom? Captain Towns.
2149. Were you asked in writing? I had a note asking whether I would be kind enough to go on board and look at her.
2150. Have you got that letter with you? No.
2151. Did you go on board? I did.
2152. Did you make a survey? I made no report; I was requested to look at her and I did so, and left her at that; I took no more notice of it—I made no report.
2153. How was it you did not make a report? I can hardly tell you why,—I hardly knew what they wanted of me, but I understood there was some objection about her not being copper-fastened, and several other little matters.
2154. Is it not usual when shipwrights are requested to go and look at a vessel for them to make a report? Yes, and people generally pay us for so doing; but in this case I was not asked for a report.
2155. After having looked at the vessel did you express any opinion about her? No.
2156. Did you not do so to Captain Towns? No, I did not see Captain Towns again for months afterwards.
2157. Then although you were called upon to make a survey, there the matter ended? I do not know that I was called upon to make a survey; I was asked to look at her. It was said she was copper-fastened, and I saw she was not; I found that I could not speak favourably of her, and so I left it.
2158. What is your opinion of the suitability of the "Sea Witch" for the purpose for which she is required? I think she is too short; she will do very well in fine weather, but in bad weather she will be glad to come inside.
2159. Are pilot vessels required in fine weather altogether? No, they must work in bad weather as well.
2160. Do you think the "Sea Witch" a suitable model for a pilot vessel? The model of her I cannot speak much of; she is Yankee built; and, if I may so express myself, the two ends do not belong to the same ship; that we do not like in a ship.

2162. Supposing her to be well found? Supposing her to be well found, I should say £700.
2163. Just look at No. 25 in the printed correspondence, with respect to the purchase of the "Sea Witch," and you will see there Mr. Cuthbert's report, which states how she was found (witness read the report)? Yes, that is a very fair description of her.
2164. After seeing that description, what do you think her value? I should say £700. She was not worth much more in the market; but at times, when an article suits us, we may give a little more than it would fetch in the market, so as to secure it—perhaps £100 or £200 more.
2165. Are you about building a pilot vessel for the Government? I made an offer some months ago.
2166. You have not made any contract? No.
2167. Did you send in any specification, or state on what model you proposed to build? Yes, both.
2168. Was it on the model of the "Sea Witch"? I should think not.
2169. Have you ever seen the lines of the "Mary Taylor," a celebrated American pilot boat? Yes, last night, and I have them in my house now.
2170. Is the "Sea Witch" built on the lines of the "Mary Taylor"? I should think not.
2171. Then if the Treasurer has been informed that she is, he has been incorrectly informed? As I have heard it, she was built after the lines of the "Mary Taylor," with an improvement, as they thought, in the fore part.
2172. Then the "Sea Witch" is an improvement on the "Mary Taylor"? Yes, so they intended.
2173. Do you consider the alteration an improvement? No.
2174. Who considered it an improvement? The owner or captain of her, who was on board; he seemed to be great on it.
2175. It was from him you heard this opinion, that she was an improvement on the "Mary Taylor"? Yes.
2176. Have you any objection to state what price you offered to build a vessel for, for the Government? Not the least.
2177. What price was it—so much per ton? I asked £20 a ton.
2178. By Mr. Weekes: Builder's measurement? Yes; it came to somewhere about that; it is brought up to even money.
2180. Is she to be fitted as is stated in that specification? No; in the first place, she is not to have mahogany lockers, because mahogany cannot be got here; in the next place, I am not going to sheath my deck—it will be copper-fastened, but not sheathed; then I will use treenails in the topsides, unless the Government approve of spikes.
2181. By Mr. Weekes: Is your specification as good as this on the whole? I consider it was when I first handed it in.
2182. By the Chairman: Are you to find two suits of sail? Two suits of sails and two boats. I do not find knives nor forks, nor sundry little items of that kind.
2184. Are you willing to pit her against any vessel that ever was built? That is putting rather a hard face on it; but I think that, without mentioning the iron boat, which I have not seen, I might pit her against anything we have got inside the harbour.
2185. By the Chairman: Would she be equal in every respect to a vessel such as is offered by these parties? I consider she would as to copper-fastening; I do not know that I ever saw a vessel thoroughly copper-fastened but once, that is, all her bolts copper.
2186. Were you never asked by any one to make a report, after you were called upon to look at the "Sea Witch"? No.
2187. Were you expressing your opinion at all freely to any one? No.
2188. By Mr. Wilson: If your opinion had been favourable, would you have considered yourself called upon to have reported? Perhaps I might have, under the circumstances.
2189. By the Chairman: Did not the note from Captain Towns intimate to you for what purpose your attendance was required? No. I was asked to see whether she was copper-fastened, and whether she was sound, and I considered she was sound; she is a sound vessel, as sound as any of her class and age. It was reported she was rotten, but I saw nothing rotten about her; she is as good a vessel of her class as you could pick out of a hundred, perhaps.
2190. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know the schooner "Atlantic"? I know her by seeing her.
2191. What do you think she would fetch in the market? I do not know the state she is in; I never examined her, and never took particular notice of her, to put a value on her.

- Mr. T. Chowne.
15 July, 1862.
2192. Do you thing her worth £2,000 in the market? I should hardly think she was. I think £2,000 rather more than the value of her; she is old, I believe, and whether copper-fastened or not I do not know; I should say not; I should say she is only fastened like the "Sea Witch." It is customary to have the centre fastenings of iron.
2193. Is it essential for a vessel to be copper-fastened at the butts? Yes; and so it is in a good vessel for the centre fastenings. Below the copper they must be, or they will be off in a very little time.
2194. By the Chairman: You do not know when the "Atlantic" was built? No.
2195. And you never examined her, and do not know whether she is copper-fastened? No.
2196. By Mr. Weekes: Are you able to speak of the draught of water of the "Mary Taylor"? No. I did notice it, too.
2197. Can you say whether, from the load line to the rabbit of the keel, it is only five feet? She has not a great deal of draught of water.
2198. Is she not a very shallow vessel? She is. She is one of the old school of Yankees, with a shelving bow that stands almost out of the water.
2199. Is she not a comparatively new vessel? I do not know what year she was built in.
2200. Have you ever seen a model of the "America," the celebrated yacht? Yes.
2201. Are you aware what her draught of water is? I think nine feet.
2202. By the Chairman: Do you know her tonnage? I could not speak positively; I think about 120 tons.
2203. By Mr. Weekes: For £20 a ton you are prepared to turn out a vessel equal to one built according to the specification set forth here by Harvey and Sons, of Ipswich? I am willing to try to do so.
2204. You think there is plenty of mechanical skill in the shipwrighting line to build a vessel in New South Wales, without having recourse to England? I think there is; there ought to be, out of the number of men that have come here lately. I have seen the time when it was very difficult to get a good piece of work done.
2205. There are plenty of skilful men in the Colony now? Plenty, as good men as any in the world.
2206. I suppose it is a disputed point, even now, amongst scientific men, as to the proper model of a ship—do they not differ in their views? Widely. They all acknowledge that length is a benefit to them, but there are all other shapes and forms. We are as far from having any settled model as ever we were.
2207. By the Chairman: Do you consider hold of the water necessary to make a vessel weatherly? It depends on the build of the vessel. One vessel will be very weatherly with a small draught of water, while another with a great draught of water will drive where she likes.
2208. Did you notice the draught of water of the "Sea Witch"? Eight or nine feet, I think. Eight and a half I think it was, the last time I was on board. I did not look, but they told me they had put more ballast in.
2209. Do you notice that in Mr. Outhbert's report, No. 25, he says it is five feet forward, and six and a half feet abaft? They rose the copper, and very likely put more ballast in her. I think she is drawing nine feet now.
2210. If she has a greater depth of keel amidships than forward or aft, would she draw more water amidships than aft? No, I think not, drawing less forward than aft.
2211. By Mr. Wilson: Are you acquainted with the Liverpool pilot boats? No, not much; I never was much in that part of the world.
2212. Are you acquainted with the lines on which they are built, or have you seen any models of them? I have seen the lines of some of them.
2213. Have you seen the lines of the "Mary Taylor"? Yes.
2214. By the Chairman: You have plans of them in books? Yes.
2215. By Mr. Wilson: Are you aware as to their particular build—whether they have great draught of water for their size, or not? Some of them have, and some have not. There are various crafts all along the coast of England. One man will build a vessel standing nearly up on end. One of the Rothschild's cutters drew eleven and a-half feet aft and three feet forward—she sat right up on end. So are some of the Scotch boats and some of the Irish boats built in the same way. In fact, I have built a vessel with a stem three feet long and a stern-post nineteen.
2216. By Mr. Sadleir: What was the object in building a vessel of that kind? Whim. The paper was put into my hand and I followed it out.
2217. Was it to obtain any particular quality? Yes, I suppose it was to get great speed. The shape of her on deck was as near the shape of a boy's kite as anything you can name.
2218. Do the models of vessels generally depend on the purpose for which they are built? Yes; but we are not all of the same opinion in building. I myself would build three vessels of equal tonnage—one should draw more water forward than aft, one should be on an even keel, and one should draw more aft than forward; let me mast them and rig them, and I would not lay an old hat on any one of them.
2219. The rigging of a vessel and the model ought to go together? Yes.
2220. A vessel built for a cutter should be of a different construction to one built for a schooner? Yes.

Mr. Daniel James called in and examined:—

- Mr. D. James. 2221. By the Chairman: You are mate of the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
2222. Have you been mate of her since she became a pilot vessel? Yes.
15 July, 1862. 2223. Have you had much experience in small vessels? I have, all my lifetime.

2224. Have you been much on board pilot vessels? I have been in the habit of taking pilots out of vessels in the English Channel for eleven years—that is, on the north of the English Channel. Mr. D. James.
15 July, 1862.
2225. Have you seen a good deal of pilot vessels on the English coast? Yes.
2226. How does the "Sea Witch" act as a pilot vessel? The "Sea Witch" acts in fine weather very well, but in bad weather she does not answer.
2227. Will you state in what way you consider her deficient? Her missing stays so much.
2228. Is she a weatherly craft? No, not in bad weather.
2229. Do you consider her suitable for a pilot vessel? Not at all times.
2230. If you were purchasing a pilot vessel yourself, is she the sort of vessel you would purchase? No.
2231. Have you seen her tried to be stayed in a heavy sea? Yes.
2232. How did she act then? She acted very badly; she came up head to the sea, and then ran astern, would not come round, and paid right off again.
2233. Have you seen her trying to work to windward? Yes.
2234. How did she act? She goes to windward very well as long as you keep out in the southerly current clear of the land, but you must not come near the land with her.
2235. Have you been out in rough weather with her? Yes.
2236. How often? We have been out three times in rough weather now, if I recollect right.
2237. On these occasions had you to put pilots on board vessels? Yes.
2238. Was there any difficulty in doing so? No, it was not such bad weather; there was a heavy sea, but not such a great deal of wind.
2239. Do you recollect on one occasion running into port in consequence of the weather being threatening? Yes.
2240. What sort of weather was it then? There was all the appearance of dirty weather—a gale of wind coming.
2241. She did run in on that occasion? Yes.
2242. During the height of that gale did any vessels come in from seaward? Not that I recollect.*
2243. By Mr. Wilson: Do you remember the date? No.
2244. By the Chairman: Was it on that occasion the "Colonial Empire" came in? No, she came in before we came in with the schooner.
2245. By Mr. Weekes: The same day? The same day.
2246. By the Chairman: During the time the "Colonial Empire" was running in, how did the "Sea Witch" act then? Very well, except once I saw her miss stays while I was hanging on to the ship after putting a pilot on board.
2247. Did the "Colonial Empire" come in under topgallant-sails? No, not when the pilot was put on board; she was running in clewing up her sails as she came, ready to come to an anchor.
2248. Do you remember putting a pilot on board the "City of Aberdeen"? Yes.
2249. What period of the day was that? About three o'clock in the afternoon, or thereabouts.
2250. Was Captain Watson out with you during the first few days, or on any occasion? Yes.
2251. How did she behave during the time he was on board? She missed stays several times.
2252. What did he think of it? He did not think much of her.
2253. Did he express any opinion? Not in my hearing, only once, and then I could not say exactly what it was.
2254. By Mr. Weekes: How do you know he did not think much of her? By his appearance and the way he acted.
2255. How did he act? As if he would rather see her stay than fall off again.
2256. By the Chairman: Where was the vessel at the time the mainboom was sprung? I was five miles from Botany Heads, west-north-west; as near as I could judge, it was twenty minutes past three in the morning.
2257. What was the cause of the mainboom being sprung? A sudden heavy sea striking her—a sudden plunge.
2258. Does she pitch much in heavy weather? A great deal.
2259. Is the vessel well found? She is not over and above well found.
2260. Does she make any water? No.
2261. Does the boat belonging to her answer well? No, it does not.
2262. In what way is it not suitable? It is too short.
2263. Do you know where it came from? No.
2264. Do English pilot vessels use similar boats? No.
2265. Can you lower the boat with ease when there is any sea on? We can lower the boat if there is a sea on, but it is not safe to get into her.
2266. By Mr. Weekes: That is from the character of the small boat? Any boat at times you could not lower from that schooner.
2267. By the Chairman: Are her davits so placed as to render it difficult? No, they are placed very well.
2268. Why is it difficult to lower a boat from her? Because she rolls so sudden.
2269. During your watch has she missed stays often? I do not think she has more than in the captain's watch.
2270. Is it usual for pilot vessels to come into port in rough weather? I cannot say, for I have never been aboard of them.

2271.

- Mr. D. James. 2271. Did I not understand you to say you had had some experience? Ycs, in taking pilots out of ships outward bound.
- 15 July, 1862. 2272. By Mr. Weekes: You never were in a pilot boat? No.
2273. By the Chairman: Do you know of your own knowledge whether they come in in rough weather? Sometimes they do.
2274. In the sort of weather when the "Sea Witch" came in—was the weather then unusually boisterous? It was threatening for that.
2275. Did it turn out to be such a gale that you could not have stayed out? We could have stayed out, but we could have been of no service.
2276. If the model of the vessel had been different, would she have been of any service? I do not think she would.
2277. By Mr. Weekes: You mean to say no pilot boat would have been of service on that particular night? I do not think she would—not as regards lowering a boat.
2278. By Mr. Sadleir: Could you not have led a vessel in that night? Yes, ahead of her.
2279. Without lowering a boat? Without lowering a boat.
2280. By the Chairman: After you came in, and were lying inside, were any pilots put on board vessels with the boats? Ycs.
2281. Do you recollect where the vessels were boarded? Some out far and some near. I went out with the pilot to almost every one.
2282. The water was not so rough but you could go out in a whaleboat and board these vessels? Yes, in a whaleboat, one of the shore boats. I would not go out in the schooner's boat.
2283. In such a breeze do you think an English pilot boat would have come in? I think the English pilot boats that I have seen would have stayed out as long as they could carry sufficient canvas to keep them to windward.
2284. How long did you remain in port when you came in? Till Wednesday.
2285. What day did you come in? Sunday.
2286. Why did you remain in so long? On account of the sea being so high; we could not get out.
2287. Did you make the attempt? Not with the schooner.
2288. Is she considered safe on a lee shore? No, I do not consider her safe.
2289. I think you said she makes no water? No, she made no water with us; but in that breeze we did keep the pumps jogging now and then, to see whether she did.
2290. Do the decks leak? Not that I have observed.
2291. Does the vessel labour much? She labours very heavy.
2292. What water does she draw aft? About 7 feet 4 inches, to the best of my knowledge.
2293. Is she in good sailing trim with 7 feet 4 inches draught of water—is that her proper trim? I cannot say if it is her proper trim.
2294. Have you seen her in dock? No.
2295. Do you consider her a weatherly craft? I do not, not in bad weather.
2296. By Mr. Weekes: What do you go upon—what do you found that opinion upon? Because she is too short for the breadth that she has, and too shallow.
2297. Are you aware that there are pilot boats as shallow as she? Not the same model, I should think.
2298. From your own experience of this vessel, do you form the opinion that she is not weatherly? From my experience since I have been in her.
2299. Does she beat to windward? She beats to windward as long as she has got the southerly current with her.
2300. Did she beat that evening against the southerly wind some four or five miles? Ycs, she did.
2301. How long have you been in the Colony? Eight years.
2302. Have you ever been in Captain Smith's employ? Yes.
2303. How long? Four years.
2304. Have you had any conversation with Captain Smith about this ship? No, I never saw him since until to-day.
2305. Nor communicated with him? No.
2306. You have been some time coxswain at Watson's Bay? Yes, three years and a quarter.
2307. From your experience there, do you prefer the inside pilot service or the outside service—say with suitable vessels? I prefer the outside as long as I have a vessel I can trust to.
2308. Do you think the outside service as useful in all weathers? I would sooner be outside the Heads in a cutter in any weather than go outside the Heads in bad weather in a whaleboat, as long as I had one under my feet I could trust to.
2309. Then you think it desirable to maintain, with suitable vessels, the outside pilot service? Well, I think it is an improvement on the boats, as long as there are sufficient craft, and they are adapted for it.
2310. You think it an improvement on the old system? I think at times it is; not at all times.
2311. At what times is it inferior to the old system? I think in bad weather you cannot lower boats to board ships at a distance off the land. I think a steamer would be the best; a steamer would be far superior to the schooners at all times.
2312. Do you think a boat could be lowered from a steamer to enable a pilot to be put on board a ship when it could not be lowered from a sailing vessel? No.
2313. How would you deal with a vessel then? Steam in ahead, and let her follow me until I could put a pilot on board.
2314. Then you prefer the pilot schooner system outside to the old system of whaleboats, but you prefer a pilot steamer before all? Yes.

2315. By Mr. Wilson : Was it through Captain Smith's influence that you got your present situation? Not that I am aware of. Mr. D. James.
2316. Were there advertisements issued for parties to hold the situation? Yes. 15 July, 1862.
2317. And you were selected as being a suitable person? I was selected.
2318. By Mr. Sadleir : Do you think the "Sea Witch" a safe vessel off the coast in bad weather? At a distance off she is, but not close to it.
2319. Could you work her out between the Heads in a dark night and heavy weather—I do not mean in a bad gale? No, I would not, not after taking a reef in the sails.
2320. Why? Because I should be afraid of her missing stays.
2321. What do you suppose is the reason of her missing stays, is she masted badly? I cannot say what it is; but as soon as ever she comes near the wind her way is done, and she begins going astern before the jib can act, and if a sea strikes her she pays off again.
2322. Is it her construction,—is she too short? I think she is.
2323. Is that the reason she pitches? Yes, I think it is.
2324. What kind of tackle have you for lowering boats? Ordinary tackle.
2325. Not patent tackle? No, the old ordinary two-double blocks.
2326. By Mr. Weekes : You never have been in the pilot service at all at Home? No, only what the fishermen call the pilot service, taking pilots out of ships coming from London outward bound.
2327. By Mr. Wilson : Were you in the habit of being out in very severe seas? Yes.
2328. You had plenty of work such as is required of the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
2329. There is as much danger and difficulty in taking a pilot out of a ship as in putting one in? Yes; the only difference was that we had sand banks that we could get under the lee of.
2330. By Mr. Weekes : You state that the "Sea Witch" has not the proper proportions for a vessel? I do not think she has.
2331. Do you know the proper proportions? No, I do not.
2332. Then what is your opinion founded on? According to the smacks I have been accustomed to be in.
2333. What are their proportions? I could not tell exactly; they run various sizes, lengths, breadths, and depths.
2334. By Mr. Wilson : Are they longer in proportion than the Sea Witch? Yes; the one I served my time in was lengthened three times.
2335. By the Chairman : Is the "Sea Witch" very wet? She is wet forward.
2336. By Mr. Weekes : Is not that a common failing? No; in the one I served my time in, that was the driest part of the ship; any wave that burst at all she put it over amidships.
2337. By Mr. Wilson : You state you have been for a considerable time in connection with the pilot service at the Heads? Yes.
2338. What is your opinion of the seas that run here compared with those on the coast of England, are they as bad? I think they are.
2339. Are there as many bad days here as in England? No.
2340. But when a bad day comes you think the sea is worse? Yes.
2341. By Mr. Sadleir : Were you ever in the Bay of Biscay? Yes.
2342. Do you think the seas here worse than in the Bay of Biscay? I think not.
2343. You say this vessel is very wet forward? Yes.
2344. Do you attribute that to her want of length? Yes, want of length to keep her steady.
2345. Were you ever in a vessel of something like the proportions of this one before? No.
2346. By Mr. Weekes : Do you know what the proportion of the "Sea Witch" is? No, I do not.
2347. How then do you know you were never before on board such a ship? By the appearance of her.
2348. By Mr. Wilson : Looking at her with the eye of a seaman? Yes.

Mr. John Jenkins called in and examined:—

2349. By the Chairman : You are Senior Pilot at South Head? Yes. Mr. J. Jenkins.
2350. You have been many years a pilot? Eight years. 15 July, 1862.
2351. Have you been out at all in the "Sea Witch"? Yes, four weeks altogether; I was on duty in her the first fortnight, and now our turn is just over again.
2352. Is it every fortnight you take? Yes, we relieve every fortnight.
2353. What sort of weather had you during the time you have been out in her? Generally fine weather.
2354. Any unfavourable weather at all? Yes, the first fortnight there was a little unfavourable weather.
2355. How did she behave? She missed stays four or five times, and made anything but good weather.
2356. Were you compelled to run in? No, only when the main-boom was sprung.
2357. Do you consider she answers as a pilot vessel? In fine moderate weather she does.
2358. Have you been called upon to report upon her to the Pilot Board? I have.
2359. Did you report in writing? I did.
2360. Will you state what the substance of that report was? That she was very well in moderate weather, but in bad weather not what ought to be expected of a pilot vessel.
2361. Is it not principally in bad weather that you require a pilot vessel outside? In bad weather we cannot board ships from her.
2362. Do you consider her a suitable vessel for the service? Not altogether, I do not.
- 2363.

- Mr. J. Jenkins.
15 July, 1862.
2363. Were any other pilots called upon to report upon her? The whole of us were.
2364. Were any members of the Pilot Board on board during the time you were out in her? Captain Watson was.
2365. Did she miss stays during the time he was on board? She did, under all sail.
2366. Did he appear to think her suitable? I cannot say.
2367. Did you hear him express any opinion? I did not. It only seemed to me that he did not at all like her conduct at that time.
2368. By Mr. Weekes: Did he say anything? No.
2369. How could you tell, then, what was his opinion? By the look of him.
2370. By the Chairman: Did he appear angry? A little angry.
2371. What sort of weather was it then? A fine whole-sail breeze.
2372. Did you find any difficulty in lowering a boat from her in rough weather to board vessels? We have not had a trial in rough weather. The night I have been alluding to we could not have lowered a boat. She was rolling the boat in the water.
2373. Do you think it would have been safe to lower a boat from her? It would not have been prudent.
2374. By Mr. Weekes: Is it safe to lower a boat from any ship sometimes? No.
2375. By the Chairman: On this particular occasion? It would not have been safe to lower a boat.
2376. Not from any vessel? Not from any vessel.
2377. Do you think you can carry on the outside pilot service efficiently if you cannot lower boats in rough weather from the vessel? I do not think we can.
2378. Is it not most important to be able to lower a boat from a pilot vessel in ordinarily rough weather? Yes, but then you lower the boat at the risk of every one's lives.
2379. Then it cannot be done? It cannot be done.
2380. Was this extraordinary rough weather? No; we were under double-reefed canvas.
2381. Do you not think it a necessary part of the service that you should be able to board vessels in that kind of weather? Yes, but it can be done with a whaleboat.
2382. Then in fact it is the boat that is not suitable? We could not have lowered a boat from the vessel.
2383. Could you have lowered it from any vessel? I believe not.
2384. Have you seen the Liverpool pilot boats? I have.
2385. Would they have remained out in such a gale? Yes.
2386. Would they have lowered a boat? I do not doubt but they would; they would have got under shelter.
2387. Could you not have done that here? No.
2388. Do you think there has been any weather since the "Sea Witch" has been out that a Liverpool pilot boat would not have stopped out in? I can hardly express an opinion with regard to that. They have a different class of pilot boats at Liverpool to what they were when I was there.
2389. Do you consider the "Sea Witch" a weatherly vessel? In fine weather she is, but in heavy weather I do not consider her weatherly.
2390. Do you consider her safe on a lee shore? No, not in a gale of wind.
2391. Then on all occasions in bad weather you think it would be prudent for the "Sea Witch" to run into port? In heavy weather, with an easterly or south-easterly gale, it would.
2392. Is there not a heavy sea on with a north-easter? Nothing like the same.
2393. Could you lower a boat in a north-easter? I think we could, because we could manage to get under a lee.
2394. Do you consider the "Sea Witch" now suitable for the work in which she is employed? In moderate weather she is.
2395. Generally, I mean—because you have all kinds of weather to contend with? Generally in heavy weather she is not.
2396. Could a more suitable vessel be built? I should think there may be.
2397. Will the "Sea Witch" stay under close-reefed sails? She has been tried under double-reefed sails, and missed stays four or five times. I have never seen her under close-reefed sails.
2398. Is she a dry vessel? No, she is not, but not extraordinarily wet.
2399. Were you on board the day she ran in, when the "Colonial Empire" and "City of Aberdeen" came in? I got on board between the Heads as she was coming in.
2400. By Mr. Weekes: And she then stood out? No, I went on board after the pilots had been put on board; I was on shore duty; it was my relief.
2401. After you came on board did not the vessel stand out to sea? She stood in and came to an anchor.
2402. By the Chairman: Have any members of the present Pilot Board, besides Captain Watson, been on board the vessel during the time you were there? No.
2403. Have you had any conversation with any of the present members of the Pilot Board about the vessel? None whatever.
2404. By Mr. Weekes: You have had considerable experience of the pilot system as recently carried on, by whaleboats? Yes.
2405. From your experience, is that as good a way of conducting the pilot service as by outside-schooners? I do believe it is.
2406. You think the system of whaleboats lately in operation, and partially so now, is preferable to the outside system? I believe it is.
2407. What is that opinion grounded upon? If we are outside with a schooner when we cannot be put on board, the schooner is obliged to run in and lead the ship in—

2408. I mean supposing that the outside system were carried on with suitable vessels, setting the "Sea Witch" altogether aside, will you state your objections to that system as compared with the old system? We can pull out with a six-oared whaleboat when no schooner could beat out, and go alongside a vessel, or lead a vessel in, when we cannot get out with the schooner.

Mr. J.
Jenkins.

15 July, 1862.

2409. Are there times when, with the wind and sea between the Heads, it is impossible for any schooner whatever to beat out between the Heads? Yes, there are times when it would be impossible for any vessel to go between the Heads.

2410. And also when it would be quite impossible to lower a boat from any pilot schooner in certain conditions of the sea outside—when it is blowing a heavy gale of wind from the south-east? Yes. Even that night after we boarded the "Colonial Empire" it would have been impossible to have put a pilot on board from any vessel outside.

2411. And therefore you consider the outside schooner service would fail when most required? I do think so, because we could not render that assistance to a ship that we ought to do.

2412. Do you think that a ship is likely to get into danger between the Heads before she could be boarded by a pilot on the old system? No, I do not think so, because a person of any thought at all would never run in with a gale of wind without he was prepared to come in under easy sail, and prepared to come to an anchor; and then the pilot should be on the look-out for him with the boat to take him into safety. If there was a schooner she would be obliged to do the same—run in ahead of him.

2413. By the Chairman: That is if she could stop out? If she could stop out or get out.

2414. By Mr. Weekes: Would you think it right to run into port with a pilot schooner in a heavy gale of wind from the south-east? I should keep out as long as I thought it prudent.

2415. Still would there come a period of the gale when you would think it prudent to run in, from your knowledge of the seas on this coast? Yes, I think it would not be safe to keep a vessel out in a very heavy gale, and she could be of no service.

2416. No pilot schooner whatever? No pilot schooner whatever.

2417. Then from your experience, your deliberate opinion is that the system by whaleboats is preferable to that of outside pilot schooners? Yes.

2418. What is your opinion of the reason of the "Sea Witch" missing stays—is it not the case that in certain conditions of the wind and sea there is more difficulty than at other times in a vessel staying? Yes, but in my opinion the "Sea Witch" has not hold enough of the water.

2419. Do you know her draught? Under eight feet; and I think a pilot vessel on this coast ought not to be less than eleven or twelve feet.

2420. Have you any acquaintance with American pilot boats? Not at all. I have seen pilot vessels in the English Channel, Calcutta, and Bombay.

2421. Have any accidents happened to vessels entering this harbour from the whaleboat system being in operation? Not that I am aware of; I cannot call to mind any.

2422. You cannot recollect if any accident has happened through that system? The only accident on the old system was the wreck of the "Catherine Adamson."

2423. Do you attribute that to the old system? I do not; the pilot was on board; the vessel was boarded well out.

2424. Then, in point of fact, when most required—that is, in the terrible south-east gales that prevail on this coast—the outside pilot schooner service would be a failure? Yes, I believe it would.

2425. From the impossibility of lowering a boat from any pilot vessel? Yes.

2426. By Mr. Wilson: Are the pilots paid by salary? We are now.

2427. When was that system commenced? Last month; the month of June.

2428. How were you paid before? We had £100 a year, and a gratuity from each ship we boarded beyond a certain distance; that system was in force upwards of three years.

2429. How did that system work? I believe it worked very well; I do not think there were many complaints; if we did not board in time we did not get paid.

2430. Do you think that system would work better than the present one? Yes, I think it would.

2431. That is to say, the pilots would be stimulated to exertion if their incomes depended on it? No doubt; but at the same time I do not mean to say the duty is or will be neglected because we have salaries now.

2432. You stated that you reported to the Pilot Board as to the "Sea Witch"—have all the pilots reported? I believe they did; there was a letter to each.

2433. You gave in separate reports? Yes.

2434. And of course you do not know anything about what your brethren in the service reported? No.

2435. By Mr. Sadleir: What kind of tackle has the "Sea Witch" for lowering boats? Iron davits, with double blocks, on the old style.

2436. If she could not lower a boat she could only lead a ship in? Yes, and then she could not get out again.

2437. Do you think a suitable vessel ought to stay under double-reefed sails? That is a very nice point; hardly any ship under close-reefed canvas will stay in a heavy sea.

2438. Do you attribute this vessel's not staying when under all sail, to her trim, or the position of her masts, or her construction? It is owing to her construction, I think. As soon as she comes head to the wind she loses all way; she is too short, and has not hold enough of the water, and has too much beam for her length.

| MR. WEEKES, | | MR. PIDDINGTON, |
| CAPTAIN MORIARTY, | | MR. WILSON. |

SAUL SAMUEL, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

W. A. Duncan, Esq., Collector of Customs, called in and examined:—

- W. A. Duncan, Esq. 2439. By the Chairman: You are Chairman of the Pilot Board? Yes.
2440. How long have you been Chairman of that Board? Well, I did not think of looking up the date, and I do not remember exactly.
- 17 July, 1862. 2441. You succeeded Captain Browne? I succeeded Captain Browne.
2442. Do you produce the register of the "Sea Witch"? Yes. (Register produced.)
2443. Will you be kind enough to look at that register and say whether the age of the vessel is given there? It is not.
2444. Will you be kind enough to state how that is? It is necessary that I should state, in the first instance, that the bill of sale of this vessel was not made out in the usual way. It was made out by the Crown Solicitor. Properly speaking, a vessel should not be registered without giving the age and build; but in this case, as the matter was put into the hands of the Crown Solicitor, I left it entirely in his hands.
2445. Have you a copy of the bill of sale? I think I have got the original. I should state that we do not make copies of bills of sale; we merely give the substance of them in our register.
2446. I understand you to say that the bill of sale of this vessel was not made out in the usual way? It was not prepared in the Custom House, but by the Crown Solicitor.
2447. There is a form in the Custom House bills of sale for the transfer of vessels? Yes; I produce a copy of the record of the registry at the Custom House.
2448. This is a copy of the record of the bill of sale of the "Sea Witch"? Yes. (Document handed in. Vide Appendix A.) 2449. That is the bill of sale you are looking at now? Yes.
2450. Does that bill of sale contain a copy of the original register? No. One-half of the original register has to be sent to the American Government.
2451. Does the bill of sale contain a copy of the original register? No, bills of sale do not contain now, strictly speaking, copies of the register. This is the portion of the register in our possession (portion of document produced). The other half has to go to the American Government.
2452. Is the half containing her age here? Not very distinctly. There is a portion of it there, but I could not with certainty say from that when she was built.
2453. I understood you to say that it is not usual now to set forth the register in the bills of sale? It gives the dimensions. That is the bill of sale (produced). It gives the dimensions, but it does not recite the register, as the old bill of sale used to do.
2454. This does not cite her age either? It does not.
2455. It does not say when she was built; but I see that there is a column here for the age of the vessel? Yes, there is.
2456. And it does not give the date? No.
2457. Can you state how that omission has occurred? I am not aware. We have the means of giving the exact date, generally, but as I said before, I had less to with the registering of this vessel than usual. It was placed in the hands of the Crown Solicitor, and I took it for granted that he would do what was requisite; therefore I did not think it necessary that I should interfere.
2458. There is another bill of sale besides this Customs bill of sale? There is the original bill of sale prepared by the Crown Solicitor. The other is an abstract for record.
2459. Have you the bill of sale prepared by the Crown Solicitor? That is the real bill of sale (produced). There are several other papers here, but I do not think they bear on the question.
2460. Is this the only bill of sale that was prepared, are you aware? I believe that is the only bill of sale. There were several interviews between Mr. Jackson of the Crown Solicitor's Office and myself, and I cannot state distinctly whether there was another bill of sale prepared or not. That is the real bill of sale which was made out in the Crown Solicitor's Office. The other (Appendix A) is the record of sale at the Custom House.
2461. Will you be kind enough to look at the correspondence which has been printed and laid on the Table of the House relating to the "Sea Witch"—look at No. 20? Yes.
2462. Do you recollect the meeting of the Pilot Board that took place on the 8th March? Yes, very well.
2463. Was Captain Watson present on that occasion? He was present.
2464. Were the Board unanimous in determining upon this minute which was sent to the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer? The Board were unanimous.
2465. That is on the 8th of March? Yes.
2466. There is a minute of the 21st of March? Captain Watson was not present on the 21st.
2467. Since the removal of Captain Darley, Captain Smith, and Captain Fox, has any examination of persons desirous of becoming pilots taken place by the Pilot Board? Oh, yes; a great many.
2468. By whom are those examinations now conducted? At first, during Captain Watson's absence, they were conducted by myself; since his return I have generally asked him to put the questions, as he is better acquainted with the harbour than I am.
2469. Do any of the new members take part in these examinations? Certainly.

2470. Are they active in examining candidates for certificates? Yes, now they are; at first they naturally were a little slow at putting questions, but now they take an active part.

2471. To what do you attribute that slowness? I suppose that a person newly entering upon any office would be a little cautious at first.

2472. Do you attribute it to any want of local knowledge on their part? No, I do not.

2473. Have you ever known any other instance where the age of a vessel has not been inserted in the bill of sale and register? There have been instances where the age of a vessel has not been known; always when it is known it is our duty to put it in.

2474. Is it not contrary to law not to insert it;—is it not expressly provided for by law that the age should be inserted? I am not quite sure whether it is in the Act or in the instructions under which we act. In addition to the Act of Parliament we have special instructions; I know that it is either in the one or in the other, and we are requested to be very strict in reference to the matter. There are instances, however, when it would be impossible to register the age of a vessel; there are instances—and particularly in the case of foreign vessels—where the age is not known. There are not many such instances (though some do occur occasionally) of a similar kind in reference to our own vessels. Again, a piratical vessel might be seized and condemned, and in that case we could not register her at all if we were obliged to give her age.

2475. I see the poop is included here in her measurement, making her sixty-two and eight hundredths;—is it usual to include the poop and round-house? The poop always; there is a special rule for measuring the poop of a vessel.

2476. By Mr. Weekes: Do you hold in your hand a copy of the certificate of registry of the "Sea Witch"? Yes.

2477. Will you have the goodness to state the dimensions of the vessel as set forth there;—what is her length? Her length is sixty-nine feet.

2478. What is her breadth? Her breadth is nineteen feet and two-tenths.

2479. What is her depth of hold? Seven feet and seven-tenths.

2480. What is her tonnage? Fifty-seven tons and thirty-eight one-hundredth parts.

2481. What is her total tonnage? Her registered tonnage is sixty-two tons and eight hundredth parts.

2482. Is that (document indicated) a certified copy of the register of the "Pacific" which you hold in your hand? Yes.

2483. Will you have the goodness to give her dimensions;—what is her length? Seventy-two feet.

2484. What is her breadth? Nineteen feet.

2485. What is her depth of hold? Seven feet and eight-tenths.

2486. What is her tonnage? Sixty tons and two hundredth parts.

2487. Is that a certified copy of the register of the "Atlantic" which you now hold in your hand? Yes.

2488. What is her length? Her length is seventy-six feet and two-tenths.

2489. What is her breadth? Her breadth is nineteen feet and eight-tenths.

2490. What is her depth of hold? Eight feet and six-tenths.

2491. What is her tonnage? Seventy-one tons and sixty-seven hundredth parts.

2492. Then, according to those dimensions, the "Pacific" appears to be three feet longer than the "Sea Witch"? Yes.

2493. She is two-tenths less in breadth? Yes.

2494. And she has one-tenth more in depth of hold than the "Sea Witch"? Yes.

2495. Is the "Sea Witch" the first vessel belonging to the Government that has been registered in the Custom House since you have been at the head of it? I think so.

2496. Belonging to the Queen? To the best of my recollection, it is.

2497. Do you think it anything but a proper caution on the part of the Government, that in the transfer of this vessel, and to ascertain the correctness of her title, they should employ their own officer—the Crown Solicitor? No, I do not think there is anything extraordinary in the Government's taking such precaution as to the title.

2498. You were asked just now, whether the new members of the Board abstained from asking certain questions for want of local knowledge;—do you consider that Captain Towns possesses any local knowledge of the port? Oh! I have no doubt he does; but there is a certain routine of questions we ask, that any person, however good a seaman he might be, and however well he might know the port, would feel a diffidence in asking at first. In fact, no new man on that Board could properly ask the questions without some little experience, however well he might know the port. I can ask the questions, but I could not, perhaps, bring in a ship. Captain Towns might feel awkward at asking the questions, in the first instance, and yet be able to bring in a ship.

2499. You now have in your hand that portion of the register of the "Sea Witch" which she brought here? Yes.

2500. Do you see a date in the left hand corner? Yes, I see "1854," which I suppose to be the date, but, of course, the document being imperfect, I would not like to say positively.

2501. And you believe that date —? Refers to the date of her build.

2502. By Mr. Wilson: What is that document now before you cut in two? I have not examined it closely, but I believe it to be half the register of the "Sea Witch."

2503. Who has cut it in two? I do not know of my own knowledge, but I believe it was done in the Consul's office.

2504. Was that document entire when the "Sea Witch" came to the Colony? I have no doubt that it was, but I do not know positively.

2505. Then it was entirely in the hands of the captain previously to its being cut in two? I should not like to give a positive answer to that question. I merely conjecture, that being an American he would not like to sail without his register, because he would be liable to have his vessel seized.

2506. You say you gather that that ship must have been built as early as 1854? I concluded that from the figures, but there is nothing sufficient to give a positive answer to the question.

2507. Have you any reason to suppose that that "1854" was put down for any other purpose, or that it is a date previous to the building of the ship? I have no reason to suppose that such has been the case.

2508. But the captain having that register must have known when the ship was built? I have no doubt that an American register, like a British register, always shows, when it can show it, the date when the ship was built.

2509. If that register showed that the ship was built in 1854, and the captain stated that it was built in 1856, he would state what was untrue? I would not like to go so far as that. No doubt he ought to have looked at his register before making any statement as to her age.

2510. Had the Civil Crown Solicitor a sight of that register before he prepared the bill of sale? That I do not know; I believe he had.

2511. The age of a ship is always in her original register? Always in the register when it can be ascertained.

2512. Always in the original register? Always in the original register.

2513. Does that appear to have been the original register of this vessel? It may be a register de novo, but I cannot say as to that, because it is not complete.

2514. But you would say it is a fair copy of the original register? I have not the least doubt it is a fair copy; that it is either the original register or a register de novo.

2515. And it is always customary, in documents connected with the transfer of ships at the Custom House, to insert the age of the vessel, when it is known? Always.

2516. And if the age was known in the case of this "Sea Witch," and it has been placed in the register as unknown, of course that is contrary to the regulations of the Board? Yes, if they had the means of stating it.

2517. You state there are certain routine questions asked at the Board on examination for certificates of competency—are the same questions asked of all seamen? Not always. Very often a defect in any answer leads to other questions, to ascertain the competency of the candidate.

2518. But generally the same questions are asked? As a general rule they are much the same.

2519. Do you not think that system might lead to persons priming themselves for examination, when it becomes known what are the questions asked by the Board to test the qualification of candidates? The Board are very careful to ascertain the length of service of the parties applying, and their knowledge of seamanship, as well as asking the routine questions I spoke of.

2520. But do you not think it would be more advantageous to the service if the questions put were not routine—if they differed, so as to prevent various parties who had been examined comparing notes and informing the public, or those who were about to become candidates, what questions were to be asked? A great part of the questions must always be routine questions. We have certain buoys, beacons, or marks, in the harbours, and the questions in reference to them must be the same to all parties. It is merely an examination for piloting in a vessel, and as the same marks and bearings apply to all, the same questions must, to a great extent, be asked; but the Board, so far as I have been connected with it, have been very exact and strict in their examination.

2521. Have the Government bought another schooner lately for the Government service? There has been another vessel bought for the public service; but not having had any particular duty in connection with her, beyond merely registering her, I —

2522. By Mr. Weekes: What vessel is that, pray?—what is the other vessel you spoke of as having been registered? I imagine the Honorable Member refers to the vessel engaged in the coast surveying service; that is what I understood.

2523. By Mr. Wilson: That is what I am alluding to. Was her age known or unknown at the time of her registry? I have not any documents here with respect to her, and I should not like to give an answer in reference to that matter without having the documents.

2524. Perhaps you will be kind enough to inform the Committee as to whether the age is known or unknown? Her age is known; she appears on the register to have been built in 1848.

2525. By Mr. Piddington: When the "Sea Witch" was placed on British registry at the Custom House, did you not demand to see the original American register? That is always the first step in registering a vessel when she is registered at the Customs, as vessels usually are; but this was done in a somewhat different manner, as I have mentioned.

2526. If you had insisted on seeing the original American register, would you not have been enabled to ascertain the date when the "Sea Witch" was built? No doubt; if it had been done in the usual way the date would have been given.

2527. You have looked at the original register, so far as it is perfect;—have you any reason to doubt that the 1854 refers to the period when the "Sea Witch" was built? I see no particular reason to doubt it.

2528. By Captain Moriarty: Is it not usual to have any change in the master of a vessel registered or recorded on the back of the register of the ship? It is the usual practice.

2529. It is invariably done, is it not? I am sorry to say it is not invariably done, because the masters do not always come, on being appointed, for the purpose.

2530. But is it possible for them to clear at the Custom House without doing so? They have done so occasionally.

2531.

2531. Is not that an infraction of the law? It is.
2532. I presume you have seen other American registers? Oh! yes; a number of them.
2533. A number of them; and they are all made out in the same way, are they not? Yes, they are all made out in the same way, as nearly as possible.
2534. And according to the general plan of these registers, would not this 1854 indicate something distinct to your mind? There is no doubt whatever that it has a meaning there.
2535. And, in general, what would it mean in other cases? I think the date of the build.
2536. There is no doubt, in your mind, that that '54 relates to the date of the build? I would say, in a general way, that that was the date of the build; but as the document is imperfect, I would not like to give a positive answer.
2537. However, that is the conviction on your mind, from your general knowledge of such documents? I think, judging from other registers, that that would be the date of the build.
2538. Is it not the custom of this port for American vessels, when they come in, to deposit their registers in the hands of the United States Consul? Yes.
2539. Therefore the Consul is the person who is responsible for them? Yes. In the case of British vessels they are deposited in the Custom House. We have no power to compel foreign vessels to deposit their registers, or to require the names of the masters to be written upon the registers; that is a matter for the Consul.
2540. But in all British vessels it is done? In all British vessels we require the masters to have their names indorsed upon the registers.
2541. By the Chairman: Do you know whether the other half of this register is filed in the Consul's office here? I was told that it was to be sent to America; but whether it has been sent or not I am not aware.
2542. By Captain Moriarty: If it has not been sent, then it is in the Consulate? I should imagine so.
2543. By Mr. Weekes: The Consul's office is the proper place of deposit, if it is not sent to America? Yes.
2544. By the Chairman: If it has been stated to the Government that this vessel was built in 1856, has it been wrongly stated? That depends upon whether my conjecture is right, that that date means the date of the build.
2545. By the Chairman: Will you be kind enough to look at No. 26 of the correspondence;—you will see a minute there from the Honorable Colonial Treasurer, initialled E.C.W., 15th March? Yes.
2546. Are you aware whether that minute ever reached the Pilot Board? I do not think it did—I believe it reached me as Chairman of the Board. If I am not mistaken, it reached me on a Saturday afternoon.
2547. Will you be kind enough to say what course you pursued on receipt of that minute? I first sent to the Secretary of the Board, but he was gone. This came on Saturday afternoon, when Mr. Wilshire and the Harbour Master were both gone, and not being able to find either of them, I could not act upon it at once.
2548. Do you recollect what was done with it afterwards, or what course you pursued after its receipt? I think that, on the Monday following, the Harbour Master directed the vessel to be put into the dock.
2549. Then do I understand you to say, that it went from you to the Harbour Master? It would go from me to Mr. Wilshire, and I dare say it would be shown by him to the Harbour Master, and the Harbour Master seeing his name mentioned in it, would take action immediately.
2550. Are special meetings of the Pilot Board occasionally called? Yes.
2551. Was any meeting called on this occasion to submit this minute to the Pilot Board? Unless I had the minutes of the Board to refer to, I should not like to give a positive answer in reference to that matter. On referring to the Board's minutes, I find that no special meeting was called on occasion of this minute. It was laid before the Board at the ordinary meeting on the following Thursday.
2552. By Mr. Weekes: Are you aware whether this vessel has ever been represented to the Government as having been built in 1856? I have a recollection that something of that kind was said, but I can hardly say by whom.
2553. By the Chairman: Look at No. 18 of the correspondence—a letter from Mr. Chapman? It is stated there that she was built at New London, in 1856.
2554. By Mr. Weekes: Look at No. 25—a letter signed by Mr. Cuthbert—does it state there that she was built in 1855? Yes, in the year 1855.

Copy of Record of Bill of Sale of the "Sea Witch."

Custom House,
Sydney, 27th March, 1862. 12:26 P.M.

Benjamin Franklin Chapman, late of New London, Connecticut, in the United States of America, but at present of Sydney, New South Wales; and John Joshua Platt, of the Island of Raitea, Society Islands, have transferred, by Bill of Sale, dated 27th March, 1862, the whole of the shares to Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria.

£1,425.

W. A. DUNCAN,
Registrar.

James

James Ross, Esq., called in and examined:—

- J. Ross, Esq. 2555. By the Chairman: You are captain of the ship "Colonial Empire" Yes.
 2556. What is the size of your vessel? 1,305 tons.
 2557. Is that your registered tonnage? Yes.
 17 July, 1862. 2558. Have you been often in this port? Yes, sir; I have been coming here for about nine years regularly.
 2559. You are well acquainted with the port, then? Yes, very well.
 2560. Have you generally taken a pilot on board? Yes.
 2561. Where have they generally boarded you—I am talking of occasions previous to your last trip? Generally, just outside the reef.
 2562. Where did the pilot board you this time? Just before we came to the south reef; I was close in under the land.
 2563. This time? Yes. I cannot tell the bearings; I think it is in my log book, and I could have told you if I had brought it with me.
 2564. Can you give us somewhere about the distance? From the south reef?
 2565. Yes, from the south reef? Oh! it was no distance; I suppose about a mile.
 2566. Was a pilot put on board of you from the "Sea Witch"? Yes, from the pilot vessel.
 2567. What kind of weather was it at the time? The weather was rather stormy. I was carrying a maintopgallant-sail and royals before I came in; but it was threatening weather, blowing from south or south-east.
 2568. You were carrying the maintopgallant-sail? Yes, until the pilot came on board.
 2569. Did you take particular notice of the pilot vessel? No, I did not take particular notice; I was rather astonished to see a pilot vessel at all, having been here so frequently before. I did not take much notice of her, because I was close under the land, expecting to work up the harbour, and was therefore looking after my own ship.
 2570. From what you did see of her, do you consider that she is a vessel adapted for the purpose? I was quite astonished to see such a thing as a pilot vessel.
 2571. Would you be kind enough to tell the Committee in what way you think her unsuited to the purpose? I think she is too shallow a kind of vessel. The day after, when I towed over from the Quarantine Ground, I saw her; the wind was blowing hard, but she could have kept to windward if she had been a suitable vessel for the purpose; but she is too shallow a kind of vessel; she has not hold enough in the water to enable her to keep to windward.
 2572. Was there any difficulty experienced in putting a pilot on board of you? No.
 2573. Did the vessel act as pilot vessels usually do? She came up under my lee, and I had to wear right round before the wind.
 2574. I understood you to say that you lay in the Quarantine Ground some days afterwards? I came in here on Sabbath night, and the pilot did not think it prudent to work up the harbour with such a heavy ship as mine, and we ran into the Quarantine Ground; the next day I took steam, and had to pay very high for it too.
 2575. During that time was the weather such that a pilot vessel ought not to have been out in? Certainly not.
 2576. Would the weather that we had after your arrival for a few days be such that, in your opinion, a pilot vessel ought to be out in? Yes, very comfortably.
 2577. From what you have seen of the weather on this coast, would there be more difficulty in putting pilots on board ships from a pilot vessel than would be experienced on the English coast? I do not think it. This last time coming out, the pilot was put on board when my big ship was under close-reefed canvas. This was when I had to bear up for the Isle of Wight in a gale of wind, and took a pilot for the purpose.
 2578. Are pilot vessels usually out off the English coast in all weathers? Oh! yes, in all sorts of weather—in the heaviest gale that blows.
 2579. Have you sailed at all out of Liverpool? Yes; I sailed as chief mate out of Liverpool for a good few years.
 2580. Are the pilot vessels there driven in from stress of weather? I never knew an instance.
 2581. Will you be kind enough to give us your opinion whether ship-masters visiting this port would prefer receiving a pilot from a pilot vessel outside, to receiving them by the old method, from boats? I think they would much rather prefer the pilot vessel, especially strangers. I think it would be a very great help to a man to have a vessel outside, and to get a pilot in good time; I think it would be a very great help.
 2582. Then you think the service, properly conducted, would really be of advantage to the shipping coming out to this port? I think it would, to the shipping in general.
 2583. From your experience of pilot vessels on the English coast, can you tell us whether they are capable of working to windward in heavy weather? Oh! yes; they will work to windward under balance reef mainsail and what they call a spitfire jib; they will keep to windward in any weather.
 2584. In working to windward do they "stay" or "wear"? They can do it either way, but they always stay—it is much the handiest.
 2585. I am alluding to boisterous weather? In boisterous weather they always stay. It is a dangerous thing to wear a fore-and-aft vessel in heavy weather.
 2586. Would they consider a vessel a good pilot vessel, or suitable for the purpose, that would not stay in the seaway? She would be of no use at all.
 2587. By Mr. Weckes: You say, Captain Ross, that you came in on Sunday afternoon? About five o'clock.
 2588. Was it not blowing a gale nearly all the next day? It was blowing very hard.
 2589. And there was a heavy sea running between the Heads? There was a good deal of sea running betwixt the Heads.

2590. Did you see on that day any steamers attempt to go out between the Heads? There was a steamer towed me across the Heads, and there was nothing to prevent a ship from going outside.
2591. Did you see one or two steamers attempt to get out? I think there was one of the Newcastle boats, but I am not sure.
2592. You did not notice her return either? No.
2593. That was a day when you say a pilot vessel might comfortably remain outside? I did not see anything to stop them.
2594. Then if a pilot has stated that on that particular day a vessel could not have remained outside with any advantage, he takes a different view from yourself? I do not understand your question.
2595. If a pilot asserts that on that occasion he could not have remained outside to have been of any use as a pilot, he takes a different view of the state of the weather to yourself? Well, he must. I have told you frankly that I think there was nothing to stop a good pilot boat from being outside.
2596. And if nautical men have stated also, that during certain gales on this coast it would be prudent for any vessel to run into port, they likewise differ from your view of the matter? To run into port?
2597. That it would be prudent or desirable on some occasions, when gales of wind occur on this coast, to run into port? Oh! you mean pilot vessels; I thought you meant ships in general. There may be times, such as that of the great gale when the "Dunbar" was lost, when a vessel might come in; but in my experience I have never seen weather but such as any vessel could stop outside in.
2598. There is no possibility of getting any shelter on this coast, is there—you cannot lay under the lee of the land? You have not any lee, but there is plenty of shelter. In the English Channel we have no lee with the stormy wind from W.S.W., which is generally the direction of the gales bearing up the English Channel; but we can always get a pilot on board.
2599. You have stated that you think this vessel too shallow? I had only a cursory look at her, and have not examined her, but from what I have seen of her I think her too shallow.
2600. Do you know her draught of water? No, I am not aware what it is; but looking at the size and make of the vessel, I do not suppose it is above eight or nine feet.
2601. Is that a draught of water which you consider to be insufficient? I should say that a pilot vessel of 90 tons on this coast would require to have a great long keel.
2602. But in a vessel of 60 tons, is a draught of water of eight or nine feet insufficient? I rather think so.
2603. For that amount of tonnage? I am not so much of a ship-builder as that I would like to give an opinion upon that point.
2604. Your conclusion is, having frequently visited this port, that for the outside pilot service pilot schooners are preferable to the former system of whaleboats? I certainly think so.
2605. You think the system conduces to the safety of the shipping visiting this port? I think it conduces very much to the safety of the shipping and the comfort of ship-masters, especially strangers. It would not matter much to me, but I know that a stranger must feel diffident in coming along by this iron-bound coast.
2606. Have you ever yourself been placed in any position of danger on coming into this port by the old system of pilotage? Well, I came into this port one voyage when I was dismasted, and tacked, I think, off the Middle Head, and got a pilot on board then; but I would not have stopped outside; I could not, because I had no sails to keep me outside if it had come on to blow.
2607. Then you were not boarded until your vessel —? Was inside.
2608. Had you made signals for a pilot on that occasion? Yes, we shewed a light, I think.
2609. Then you consider that your ship, on that occasion, was placed in some degree of jeopardy by the then pilot system? Well, if I had been a stranger she would have been; but I had been often here before, and knew the harbour well, and was in a position to work my own ship up the harbour. I would now have no diffidence in coming in here at night; but I know that on the first voyage I made to this port I would have been very glad to have got a pilot outside.
2610. By Mr. Wilson: When you were talking about the possibility of a vessel remaining outside the Heads, on the Monday after you came in, I suppose you were alluding to such vessels as the Liverpool pilot boats? To the ordinary boats in the Channel.
2611. If a vessel will not stay in rough weather, would it be safe for her to remain outside in a gale of wind? Certainly not.
2612. I suppose it is absolutely necessary, for a vessel to be a good pilot boat, that there should be some confidence in her staying in all weathers? Yes, under any canvas, if it is blowing a hurricane.
2613. And in all weathers? In all weathers.
2614. Then if it has been given in evidence that they have no confidence in the "Sea Witch" staying in bad weather, I gather from you that, in your opinion, she is not suitable for a pilot boat? If she will not stay she is very unsuitable for it.
2615. By Mr. Fiddington: On the Monday after the day on which you arrived in this port, was the weather so stormy at the Heads as to prevent any suitable pilot vessel remaining outside? Certainly not, nor any other good vessel.
2616. Does the "Sea Witch" resemble in her model the English pilot vessels? I cannot say. I only saw her when I was in the excitement of looking after my own ship, and I did not pay that attention to her which I might have done, had I known you were going to ask me these questions.
2617. From the cursory notice you have taken, do you consider her such a vessel as would be used in England as a pilot vessel? No.

J. Ross,
Esq.

17 July, 1862.

Alexander Hector Taylor, Esq., called in and examined:—

- A. H. Taylor, Esq. 2618. By the Chairman: You command the "City of Aberdeen"? Yes.
2619. When did you arrive here? On the 22nd.
2620. The 22nd of June? The 22nd of June.
- 17 July, 1862. 2621. Where did you get a pilot on coming into port? The inner South Head was bearing south-west; the head was bearing to the south-west of the light.
2622. What was the distance? Perhaps about a mile and a half.
2623. How was the pilot put on board? He was put aboard by a boat from the schooner.
2624. The "Sea Witch"? Yes.
2625. What sort of weather was it? It was blowing a strong breeze, and there was rather a cross sea.
2626. Was there any difficulty in putting a pilot on board? No, not much.
2627. Did this schooner appear to you to answer as a pilot vessel? No, I do not think so at all.
2628. You do not think so? No.
2629. Will you be kind enough to tell the Committee why? I was running down with foresail up, and I think the schooner was going to stay, but when they luffed her round she did not stay. There was a sharp head sea at the time. I sang out to them what were they going to do, and I had to wear my ship right round. They neither stayed nor went off. When the pilot came in the boat I had to fill the ship and get clear of the schooner. I thought she was going to stay and go round, but she was coming stem on to me. I had to wear round and stand out to sea again; and I took the boat in tow that the pilot was aboard.
2630. Is that the way a pilot vessel ought to act? Of course if she had kept ahead of me it would have been all right, but she should not have come across a vessel's hawse in that way. She should have either weared or stayed. It is always the pilot boat's duty to keep out of the way when she is laying-to. I was laying-to, with my main yard to mast.
2631. Did you notice the model of the vessel at all? No, not particularly; I could not say anything much about it.
2632. From the opportunity you had of seeing the vessel—looking at her shape and build—do you think she is suitable for the purpose of a pilot vessel? No, I do not.
2633. Was there much sea on at the time? There was rather a strong cross sea—a short sea.
2634. Did you see her keel at all? Yes.
2635. You saw her keel? Yes, three or four feet sometimes, when she was luffed up to stay.
2636. Have you been often in and out of this port? No, I have never been here before.
2637. Do you think it an advantage to have a pilot put on board from a vessel outside, instead of being boarded from the boats between the Heads? Oh! yes, I think it a great advantage to be able to get a pilot from a vessel outside.
2638. You do not know the sort of weather we get on this coast? No.
2639. Have you seen much of pilot vessels on the coast of England? I have always been trading to London.
2640. Have you approached the English coast in very bad weather? Yes, in very bad weather at times.
2641. And have you on those occasions been boarded by a pilot? Yes, always.
2642. Do pilot vessels in England usually run in in bad weather? No, I do not think so now. It is, I think, eighteen months since the new regulations were issued in reference to the Dungeness pilots. They must have now, I think, always one vessel under way. I have passed Dungeness without a pilot at night, but now I think there is always one vessel out in any weather.
2643. Did you ever know of their being driven in from stress of weather? Never.
2644. After you came into port where did you anchor? In Quarantine Bay.
2645. How long were you in Quarantine Bay? Two days.
2646. What sort of weather was it during the time you were there? It was rough weather.
2647. Do you know where the pilot vessel was during that time? She was laying—brought up—on the opposite side.
2648. From the state of the weather which prevailed then, where do you think she ought to have been? If there was anything to do she ought to have been out.
2649. Was the weather such that a pilot vessel of proper construction could not have been out, in your opinion? Any good ship might have been out.
2650. Then you think it would be an advantage to vessels coming to this port, if vessels were cruising outside, to put pilots on board? By all means.
2651. Does the "Sea Witch" resemble any vessel you have ever seen? It resembles the American schooners, but they are very much larger rigged. I have seen Quebec pilot schooners rigged like the "Sea Witch."
2652. Have you seen much of the American pilot vessels? I was four years in that trade.
2653. By Mr. Piddington: The St. Lawrence? No.
2654. Not in the United States? No, I refer to the Gulf schooners.
2655. By the Chairman: Are they vessels of a similar class? They are just like that vessel, but larger—150 or 100 tons.
2656. By Mr. Weekes: May it not have arisen from want of skill that the pilot vessel was placed in a wrong position when endeavouring to put a pilot on board? I really do not know, but it was not seamanship at all, either in the people on board or the vessel. A pilot vessel at all times gives way to a sailing ship and manœuvres round her.
2657. But it must be a matter of seamanship? I do not know.
2658. However good the qualities of a vessel may be, if improperly handled, she will of course fail? Yes.

2659. And did it strike you as being what is usually called a lubberly trick to be in that position? I thought she was a bumboat-looking thing when I saw her; she did not appear to be a vessel like a sea pilot cutter. A. H. Taylor,
Esq.
17 July, 1862.
2660. You did not consider her suitable? She did not seem deep enough in the keel, or deep enough in her draught of water.
2661. Do you know her draught of water? No. I saw about four feet of her keel out of the water. She seemed to be a vessel of about eight or nine feet draught.
2662. And do you think that, for her tonnage, eight or nine feet is an inadequate draught? Yes, I think so, for a cutter, or for a sailing vessel to keep on a station, or for any vessel of that class.
2663. Are not the American pilot boats required to keep on their station? Yes.
2664. Do you know their draught of water, generally speaking? No, I do not.
2665. You are not aware whether they are of light draught? They are larger ships.
2666. You are not aware whether, compared with English pilot boats, they are of smaller draught? No, I am not.
2667. Do you say that on the Monday after you came in (on the Sunday), a vessel could have easily beaten out to sea through the heads? A smack—yes.
2668. Could easily have beaten out? Yes. I was coming out in my own ship, but the steamer would not tow me. There was a strong sea, but nothing to prevent a smart ship from getting out.
2669. Then if it has been stated that on that day a vessel could not have beaten out between the Heads, you differ in opinion? Yes.
2670. You have no hesitation, have you, in giving the preference to the outside pilot system, as compared with that of whaleboats rowing out between the Heads? I would give the preference to the outside sailing vessel, for many reasons. This is the first time I have been here, and I do not think I should have come in if I had not seen the schooner; if I had come in alone I should probably have lost the ship; I had a good chart and thought of coming in, but if I had done so without a pilot I should have been in an awkward position. The schooner ought to be out or to have a signal for ships to stand off when it is too rough. If I had come in at night I would have been in an awkward position. I think a pilot vessel ought to have a signal for vessels to stand out to sea or speak to them. This system of boats is I think very bad.
2671. That is, you think a vessel would be in danger before she was boarded? Yes.
2672. Do you think it an unsafe position for a vessel to lay to in a heavy gale from the southward, waiting to receive a pilot? I do think so, in a gale.
2673. Do you know any ports where mere whaleboats are employed for the pilot service? No.
2674. Is it the universal system, is it not, to have pilot schooners to board vessels before they come into danger? Yes.
2675. By Mr. Wilson: Is it a necessary quality in a good pilot boat that it should be able to stay in all weathers? I think so.
2676. Then if it has been given to us in evidence that this pilot boat at Sydney does not stay in bad weather, do you think she is unfit for the pilot service? Yes.
2677. By Mr. Piddington: If you had been called upon to recommend a vessel as suitable for a pilot vessel, would you have recommended the "Sea Witch"? No.
2678. Was there anything in the weather the day after you arrived in port which would have prevented any English pilot vessel from remaining out at sea? Nothing at all; I have seen them go out in much worse weather, and when there has been a much heavier sea running; I have seen an English cutter out under a two-reefed mainsail and a storm jib; but that cutter might have had all her sails set the day after I came in.
2679. Does not suitability depend much on the ability to remain out at sea in all weathers? It all depends on that. American schooners come down to the banks of Newfoundland that have been three months out; and in the Downs a pilot boat will stay, round a ship and put a man on board or take him out in any weather.
2680. If it has been stated that the "Sea Witch" could not go out of this port on the Monday after you arrived, with safety, that statement is a proof, as far as it goes, that she is not suitable for a pilot vessel? Yes.

Mr. Thomas Robinson called in and examined:—

2681. By the Chairman: You are one of the pilots? Yes.
2682. Have you been out in the schooner "Sea Witch"? Yes.
2683. During the time you were out in her did you have any bad weather? Yes, during the first fortnight; about the eleventh or twelfth day out.
2684. Was that the occasion when Mr. Jenkins was on board? Yes.
2685. Were you compelled to run into harbour? No, we did not run in until the next day. We lost the main boom.
2686. How does the "Sea Witch" answer as a pilot vessel? Not very well.
2687. Will you state in what respects you consider her unsuitable? She does not stay properly by a long way, and she is not a good sea-boat.
2688. Does she work to windward well in rough weather? She is moderately so, sir; moderately.
2689. Have you been called upon to send in a report to the Pilot Board upon the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
2690. Have you so reported? Yes.
2691. Did you report in writing? Yes.
2692. What was the substance of your report? That she was in the habit of missing stays.

Mr. T.
Robinson.
17 July, 1862.

- Mr. T. Robinson. 2693. During the time you were out in the vessel were any members of the Pilot Board out with her? Yes.
- 17 July, 1862. 2694. Which of the members? Mr. Watson.
2695. Did she miss stays during the time he was on board? Yes.
2696. Have you had any experience of pilot vessels on the English coast? I have been master on the English coast, not of a pilot vessel, but of a ship; and I sailed thirteen years out of the port of Liverpool.
2697. And you have of course seen the Liverpool pilot vessels? Yes.
2698. How long is it since you were the master of a vessel? It was in 1854.
2699. How long have you been in the pilot service of this Colony? Three years and two or three months down at the Heads, and three years at Moreton Bay.
2700. Do you consider the "Sea Witch" a vessel that could stay out in boisterous weather? Not with the wind from the eastward; in a heavy gale of wind I am sure she could not.
2701. Have other pilot vessels you have seen been so constructed that they could stay out? I have seen them out in all weathers, both in the English Channel and St. George's Channel.
2702. Is the weather more boisterous on this coast at times than you have seen it on the English coast? The wind is not more boisterous, but the sea is, certainly, than in the Channels.
2703. Do you mean that the sea is worse? The sea is heavier than it is in the Channels, because there is a drift of 1,100 miles here, whereas you have only in the Channel a couple of hundred miles.
2704. During your experience in this Colony, has the weather on many occasions been such that a pilot vessel of proper construction could not stay out? I believe a vessel could be constructed so that nothing could stop her from keeping out—nothing in the world.
2705. Do you believe that the outside pilot service is more beneficial than the old method of putting pilots on board by boats? No, I do not think this new principle is as good as the old.
2706. Why? Well, sir, from the fact of us never having any complaints found during the old. We have always been able to get out at a good distance.
2707. You form your opinion from the fact that no complaints have been made? Yes.
2708. It is more comfortable to be inside the harbour, is it not, in rough weather? I am not one to study comfort where duty is to be performed.
2709. Yes, but it is more comfortable, is it not, as a matter of fact? Yes, it is.
2710. But you form your opinion that the outside pilot service is not more advantageous because no complaints have been made? Yes.
2711. And from no other reason? I think it has always been done quite as well.
2712. From what you have seen of the "Sea Witch," do you think that in rough weather she can remain out? She may remain out, but I do not think there will be any possibility of lowering a boat from her.
2713. Do you think she is a safe vessel on a lee shore? No.
2714. Do you think it possible to make her stay under close-reefed sails? Not if there is any sea; she would not do it.
2715. Is she a dry vessel? She is moderately so; she throws not a deal of water on deck, but reasonably so.
2716. Has she a proper boat? That might be much better; it is very heavy and short.
2717. Were you on board of her when a pilot was put on board the "City of Aberdeen"? No.
2718. By Mr. Weekes: Was the old system more profitable to you than the new one with a fixed salary? Yes, it was.
2719. It was more profitable? Yes.
2720. Then, in introducing the system of outside pilots with a fixed salary, you are at some pecuniary loss? Yes.
2721. And you think likewise that it is more comfortable to be in Watson's Bay during a heavy gale of wind than knocking about outside? Most decidedly; still for all that I would look to duty, sir.
2722. Have you ever given any evidence on the system of pilotage? No.
2723. In the several inquiries that have been held? No.
2724. And setting aside any personal motives in the matter, are you of opinion that the old system of whaleboats is preferable, and as safe for vessels frequenting this harbour, as the system of outside pilot schooners? Yes, I do believe the old system is better, unless the service were performed by a steamer.
2725. In a heavy south-easterly gale how far do you go out to board a vessel entering the Heads? Well, if it is thick weather we might get out half a mile or three-quarters of a mile outside the south reef—or a mile.
2726. Are there any occasions when you would be unable to get out at all? I have never seen an occasion when I have been unable to get out; but I have known instances when I have not been able to board. Then I have been able to steer my ship in by going ahead until I got her into smooth water so that I could get on board.
2727. And do not you consider a ship in danger in a heavy gale from the south-east, running in within half a mile before finding a pilot? No.
2728. Could a vessel lay to? Yes, with a south-east wind, comfortably.
2729. Between the Heads? Yes.
2730. And safely? Yes; he would throw his ship's head right into the Gap, and his main-topsail and mizen-topsail back, and there he would lay until the time you got on board; he would not drift a couple of hundred yards.
2731. Are you aware whether the captains of vessels coincide with your opinion in reference to to the two systems? I have not spoken to any one of them; I have kept myself as much as I possibly could.

Mr. T. Robinson.

2732. By Mr. Wilson: Do you think the "Sea Witch" misses stays because she is not properly handled? No; I think you could not find a better man, or a man more capable of managing her, than Captain Clark. 17 July, 1862.

2733. Might not the "Dunbar" have been saved if there had been a pilot vessel outside the Heads? I do not know any more than by what I have heard of the state of the weather at the time of the loss of the "Dunbar;" but from the state of the weather, I should say nothing could have saved her. Down at the Heads now, we often see it so thick that we cannot see the lighthouse from the lightship; neither the one nor the other; neither the Hornby Light nor the Macquarie Light, in thick weather.

2734. By Captain Moriarty: In foggy weather? In thick south-east weather.

2735. By Mr. Weekes: But would not a pilot schooner on that occasion, lying in the track of vessels up the coast, have been of service to the "Dunbar?" The chances are two to one she might have missed the pilot schooner.

2736. By the Chairman: But she might not? She might not. But then, with the state of the sea, without she had been a very good vessel, she could not have launched a boat.

2738. What kind of boat is that—a dingy? Yes, about two feet longer than the dingy of the schooner. They launch pilot and crew in her and all.

2739. A pilot and crew in a dingy? Yes, a pilot and two men.

2740. Is that the only kind of boat the Liverpool pilot schooners have? They have a larger boat on deck, but she is so constructed that I have been into Liverpool when it has been blowing a perfect gale of wind, so that she could not be launched.

2741. By Captain Moriarty: From what point? It has been generally from the south-west, and again from the north-east.

2742. But those are not the winds that cause the great sea at Liverpool? No, the north-west winds.

2743. There is shelter from the south-west winds? Yes.

2744. By Mr. Wilson: Is there anything in the construction of the "Sea Witch" that makes it more difficult to lower a boat from her than there would be in lowering a boat from a well-constructed pilot boat? She has too much beam and too little hold in the water.

2745. She rolls too much? Yes, she is too quick in her movements. She would roll on top of the boat.

2746. By Captain Moriarty: You stated that there was a heavier sea here than was to be found in the St. George's Channel or the British Channel? Yes.

2747. And I think you ascribed that to the fact that there was a greater drift—some fifteen hundred or sixteen hundred miles? Yes.

2748. Do you think gales begin fifteen or sixteen hundred miles off? No.

2749. Then how can the sea be affected by all that distance? The land will affect it in a considerable degree.

2750. Have you ever been off the Skerries in a gale of wind? Yes.

2751. Have you ever been off the Skerries when there was an ebb tide running, and when there was also a gale from the north-west? I can hardly call to my recollection. Yes, I have—not off the Skerries but off Holyhead, with an ebb tide, when we could make no ground whatever.

2752. That is a different position; the ebb tide runs there eight knots; but have you been off the Skerries with the ebb tide running, and when it has been blowing a gale from the north-west? I believe I have.

2753. Have you any recollection of the sea at that spot? I should say the sea on the banks, up the Victoria Channel, was far worse than it was there.

2754. What, off the Skerries? Yes.

2755. I have had some experience in that place, and I think not. Wherever the tide runs violently—seven or eight knots—against a gale of wind, in such circumstances the sea is always dreadful? Yes, there is always a cross sea.

2756. Is it not a more dangerous sea for boats or vessels of that description than any other you can think of? Yes.

2757. It is a broken sea? It is a broken sea.

2758. You said that the old system was preferable to the present system, according to your estimation? Yes.

2759. And that you were enabled to board vessels better than now? Yes.

2760. Did you board them further out to sea? Under the present system we have not boarded them more than three miles out.

2761. And what was the general distance you were ordered to board them formerly? At about one and a half miles from the reef we saved our distance.

2762. You saved your pilotage if you did that? Yes.

2763. Was the order that you were to board vessels outside a line from the South Head to the North Head? Yes, we did so; our orders were to board them as far out as we could.

2765. The North Head bearing north-west and the South Head bearing south-west, the point would be two and a half miles from the South Reef? Very near.

- Mr. T. Robinson.
17 July, 1862.
2766. I think not. I would recommend you to look at your chart again, and you will find yourself further off? I think not.
2767. At any rate, you state that formerly you boarded ships as far out to sea as you are in the habit of doing now? Yes.
2768. And you consider the present plan no improvement upon the old system? I do not consider the present plan any improvement.
2769. Do you think it was compatible with your duty to board a vessel, in a pilot boat, within half a mile of the south reef;—was that your duty, do you think, at night time? If it was thick weather and we could not get out any further. Under those circumstances we boarded them where we could. If we saw the ship coming in we made towards her as fast as we could. We have boarded vessels as much as three, and four, and five miles off.
2770. Your opinion is that the "Sea Witch" is not suitable for the purposes for which she is employed? I think she is not.
2771. Have you had much practice in fore-and-aft vessels? No.
2772. You are not a fore-and-aft sailor? No; but I can manage a schooner very well, although I was not brought up to it.
2773. You have not served much time to it? No.
2774. There is a different management of vessels which a man acquires by experience? Yes.
2775. One man handles a ship better than a schooner, and another a schooner better than a ship? No doubt. The first schooner I went in I was almost lost in her; I had always been accustomed to good sized vessels.
2776. By Mr. Weekes: With any kind of pilot schooners, however suitable, you still think the old system of whaleboats preferable? No, not with any kind of schooner, because there are boats built about the English coast that would stay under a jib.
2777. I asked you generally, just now, as to the two systems, and I understood you to say all through that you gave the preference to the old system of whaleboats;—do you or do you not? I give my opinion that the old system is the best.
2778. Whatever pilot schooners might be employed? No, I could not say that.
2779. Very well, we will modify it;—With a suitable pilot schooner outside, do you think the outside system would be preferable to the old one of whaleboats? I think it would answer just about as well; I do not think it would be preferable. I think it is almost a matter of impossibility to keep a boat in a position here, the land is so constructed. It is not like as if it were a deep bay, or a bay at all, where you could lay a boat off this point or that; but here it is a small place to come into; you may be only a short distance away, and yet miss vessels even with two vessels.
2780. With two of the best vessels? With two of the best vessels.
2781. You consider that they would be driven from their station? No, I do not think they would be driven from their station; if they were really good vessels, and properly constructed, they would keep their positions, I believe.
2783. Does not that opinion go to condemn the outside pilot schooner service? Yes.
2784. By Captain Moriarty: You speak of the superiority;—I understand you to convey an idea that it requires two pilot boats outside always for the proper fulfilment of the duties? Yes, I should say so.
2785. One stationed to the northward and the other to the southward? Yes.
2786. It has been insisted upon that the schooner system would be of great advantage at times when ships would be unable to get a pilot from a boat: but now, supposing it is calm for three or four days, and the pilot schooners are four miles outside the Heads, where will they be at the termination of that calm? Oh! four miles outside the Heads they would get bottom. If we found the vessel drifting in consequence of the southerly current we should let go the anchor.
2787. In what depth of water? From thirty-five to forty fathoms.
2788. But supposing you were off the bank? We must take our chance.
2789. Do you not know much deeper water within the distance? Yes, sixty fathoms.
2790. Why could you not let go the anchor at a hundred fathoms? We should run a risk.
2791. And where would she be found at the end of the calm if she continued drifting for four days to the southward or to the south-east;—on what spot would you be below Jervis Bay? I cannot say; I have not been down that way for a long time.
2792. By Mr. Weekes: Is the current always running to the south-east? There is a northerly set, I have heard, outside.
2793. Does that accord with your own experience? Yes; I have been up along the coast to Moreton Bay.
2794. Yes, but off these Heads is the current always setting to the south-east throughout the year? It appears to me to be so; I have always found it so since I have been here—that is, close at hand.
2795. It is always setting to the southward? I think so.
2796. Throughout the year? Yes.
2797. By Captain Moriarty: Then if the pilot boats drifted down below Jervis Bay, vessels coming in from the northward would be unable to get a pilot? Yes.

2798. Particularly if a gale were to set in from the northward? I do not think a vessel would be able to hold up against a northerly gale and the current.
2799. But supposing she had drifted down off Jervis Bay, and a breeze were to spring up from the northward? It would take her ten days to get back again, if it kept blowing.
2800. And during that time ships coming from the northward would have no pilots? No.
2801. By the Chairman: In the case of the Dunbar—if there had been pilot vessels outside, might they not have put a pilot on board before dark? They might have done so.
2802. But supposing the vessel had been ten or fifteen miles to the southward? I think if the pilot had got on board she would never have run in.
2803. That is not the question; but he would have prevented the loss of the vessel? Yes.
2804. But if there had been pilot vessels out on that occasion, might they not have sighted the vessel before dark, and put a pilot on board? They might have done so.
2805. By Mr. Wilson: Or have told her to stand off? Yes, or have told her to keep off.
2806. By the Chairman: They would have tried to communicate with her? Most likely, if they had seen her.
2807. All that night where were you? At Moreton Bay, lying at anchor.
2808. And you consequently do not know what the weather was here? I have a pretty good idea of it. I was lying there at anchor, and the vessel had the lower yards and topmast down.
2809. Was that weather in which a pilot vessel of good construction might have stayed out? I do not think she could; we were lying with the better end of two cables out.
2810. But you do not know whether we had precisely the same sort of weather here? No; that was the sort of weather we had at Moreton Bay.
2811. On the night of the loss of the "Dunbar" it rained very heavily;—Is the sea usually so high when there is a heavy rain? Not usually; it settles the sea down for a time until it "dries up" again, and then the sea will rise again.
2812. Then during a time of heavy rain a vessel would have a better chance of remaining out than in fine weather? The "Dunbar" was a ship which ought to have been able to remain out in any weather, or work off any coast.

Mr. T.
Robinson.

17 July, 1862.

Mr. John Fullerton called in and examined:—

2813. By the Chairman: You are one of the pilots, I believe? Yes.
2814. Have you been out in the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
2815. During the time you were out in her had you any rough weather? Yes, we had one gale.
2816. On what occasion was that? I think it was on the 13th of last month.
2817. Was that the time when Mr. Robertson was out in her? Yes.
2818. Was that the time when she sprang her main boom? Yes.
2819. How does she act as a pilot vessel? She does very well in moderate weather.
2820. How does she do in moderately rough weather? Well, very indifferently.
2821. Have you had any experience in pilot vessels on the English coast? No.
2822. Have you ever seen anything of the pilot service on the English coast? Yes; I have taken pilots out and landed them several times.
2823. You have taken pilots out of them? Yes.
2824. When in command of a vessel? Yes.
2825. And you have put them into them? Yes; they have taken the pilot out.
2826. When you were leaving they have put a pilot on board, and when you were going to sea they have taken the pilot from you? Yes.
2827. Does the "Sea Witch" stay well? No.
2828. Is it a necessary qualification for a pilot vessel that she should stay well? Yes.
2829. Is she a weatherly craft? If there is any sea she is not.
2830. Is it necessary that a pilot boat should be a weatherly craft when there is any sea? Yes.
2831. Do you think the "Sea Witch" is suited for the purpose of a pilot vessel? She is well enough for moderate weather.
2832. But pilot vessels are required to be out in all weathers? Yes.
2833. Generally, do you consider her suited to the purpose? I would be very sorry to be on board of her in a rough easterly gale.
2834. Do you consider her safe on a lee shore? No.
2835. Do you consider the pilot vessels on the English coast safe on a lee shore? That I could not say much about.
2836. Have you ever seen pilots put on board vessels during rough weather in the English Channel? Yes.
2837. How were they put on board? They waited till the schooner got under a headland, so as to smoothen the water, and then put them on board.
2838. Did they do that with ships going to sea? Yes.
2839. Have you never had a pilot taken out of you in the seaway, or in any other way than when under the lee of the land? Yes, I have seen them taken out where the sea has been pretty rough.
2840. Are you aware whether the English pilot boats stay out in boisterous weather? Yes.
2841. Would the "Sea Witch" be able to stay out in boisterous weather? That I do not know.
2842. Would you like to stay out in her during boisterous weather? No.
2843. Have we rougher seas on this coast than those which prevail in the English Channel, as far as your experience goes? Yes.

Mr. J.
Fullerton.

17 July, 1862.

- Mr. J. Fullerton. 2844. You think we have rougher seas? Yes.
2845. Have you been called upon to send in a report to the Pilot Board? Yes.
2846. What has been the nature of that report? Just what you are asking.
- 17 July, 1862. 2847. Repeat it again? That I had been on board the "Sea Witch" for a certain time; that she answered extremely well in moderate weather; but that in a rough sea she plunged at a fearful rate, and had to be wore at all times, and that under double-reefed sails it was dangerous to approach the land.
2848. Were you on board when a pilot was put aboard the "City of Aberdeen," or the "Colonial Empire?" No; I came aboard her at the time the pilot was going up the side of the "Colonial Empire."
2849. Did you see her put a pilot on board the "City of Aberdeen"? No.
2850. During the time you were out in her, was Captain Watson on board? Yes.
2851. Did she miss stays during the time he was on board? Yes.
2852. Did she miss stays often? I saw her miss stays three times one night in the middle watch; but there was a heavy sea on at the time.
2853. Is she a dry vessel; Yes, she is pretty dry.
2854. Do you believe that the outside pilot service is more beneficial than the old method of putting pilots on board by boats? No, I do not see it.
2855. Why do you think the old method superior to the present one? Well, we were of great use in helping ships to come round in light weather in beating through the Heads; the pilot boat was then of great use.
2856. Have you any other reason? We could get out with the whaleboat when we could not get out with the schooner.
2857. With this schooner? Yes.
2858. But could you not get out with a schooner properly constructed? Not at all times; there are times when the sea is such between those Heads that no vessel could get out.
2859. Is that frequently the case? I should say not above four or five times in the course of the year.
2860. Do you recollect the time when the "Colonial Empire," and the "City of Aberdeen" came in? Yes.
2861. Did the "Sea Witch" lay in port then for two or three days? Yes, for two or three days.
2862. What sort of weather had you then? It was very bad.
2863. Was the weather such that a pilot boat could not remain out? The "Sea Witch," ought not. If she had been close to the land she would not have been able to get off, having to wear every time.
2864. Was the weather so boisterous that a pilot boat of proper construction could not have remained out at that time? No; the weather was not anything like so bad as what I have seen pilot boats out in.
2865. Have you no other reason than that which you have stated for thinking that the outside pilot service is not so good as the old method;—have you no other reasons for giving the preference to the old method? My reason for preferring the old method is that we could get out with a boat when we could not get out with the schooner.
2866. You are now speaking of the "Sea Witch"? Yes, or with even any other.
2867. Were you in this Colony when the "Dunbar" was lost? I arrived the night before, as pilot of the "Emu" mail steamer from Melbourne.
2868. Do you not think it possible that if we had had pilot schooners then outside, they might have put a pilot on board before dark? Yes, if they had been far enough to the southward.
2869. That is, if they had seen her? Yes.
2870. Do you not think that in all probability they would have saved that vessel? That is a question I could not answer.
2871. By Captain Moriarty: That is a mere matter of opinion? Yes; it was a fearful night.
2872. By Mr. Weekes: Do you not consider it probable that in a gale of wind from the south-east a vessel would be in danger before she could be boarded by a whaleboat under the old system? No, sir.
2873. How far out are you accustomed to go with your whaleboats in a gale, to board vessels? Sometimes eight or nine miles.
2874. Do you go eight or nine miles against a gale of wind from the south-east? Sometimes more than that when a vessel heaves to; I have been as much as five hours pulling out.
2875. Is that in a gale of wind? In a heavy gale of wind. When the sea is running high between the Heads we only go to the end of the reef and hoist a flag, and when the ship is running in we drop on board.
2876. How far? Just off the south reef.
2877. Can a vessel lay to under those circumstances safely, in a gale of wind? She would not lay to; she would only back the yards to the wind.
2878. Does your experience lead you to give the preference to the whaleboat system? No; if we had a suitable vessel; but I think a steamer would be better than either.
2879. Do I understand you to say that the best system would be to have a steamboat outside? Yes, and it should be self-supporting.
2880. That is the best system? I think so.
2881. And suitable outside pilot schooners the next best? Yes.
2882. And the whaleboat system the last? Yes—either of them. The whaleboat, in bad weather, is better than the schooner.
2883. Do you think an outside pilot schooner would be able to hold her position;—I am speaking

- speaking of a suitable vessel? Yes; but she would not always be able to put a pilot on board.
- 2884. It would not always be safe to lower a boat? No.
- 2885. Not from any vessel? No.
- 2886. By Mr. Wilson: But she might lead ships in? Yes, she might lead them in.
- 2887. By Mr. Weekes: Is there a current along this coast? Yes.
- 2888. Setting which way? Principally to the southward; but it is uncertain, running to the southward one day and to the northward the next.
- 2889. Do you think a pilot vessel could hold her own against a strong north-east wind, and a current running to the southward? That is a question I could not answer; I have known ships five days in sight working up; I have been nine days in a vessel beating up from Jervis Bay.
- 2890. Is the present system of outside pilot schooners any pecuniary loss to you? Yes.
- 2891. You got more under the old system? Yes, we made more under the old system.
- 2892. On an average? Yes.
- 2893. Is Watson's Bay an agreeable place? Yes, it is very good.
- 2894. Is it more agreeable to be there in a bitter night than to be boxing about outside in a schooner? Yes, I should say so.
- 2895. At all events, I gather from your evidence that if suitable pilot schooners are provided, they are preferable to the whaleboat system? Yes.
- 2896. By Mr. Wilson: Is the "Sea Witch" well handled? Yes; I think she is.
- 2897. Her missing stays was not on account of mismanagement? No.
- 2898. Is the accommodation for the pilots pretty good on board her? Very good indeed.

Mr. J.
Fullerton.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Thomas C. Kerr called in and examined:—

- 2899. By the Chairman: You command the ship "White Star"? I do.
- 2900. What is the tonnage of your ship? 2340.
- 2901. She is, I believe, one of the largest sailing merchant vessels that has ever been built? She is.
- 2902. She is the largest that has ever come into this port? Yes.
- 2903. Have you been often to Sydney? No; I came here about twelve months ago; I have since been repeatedly in and out of the harbour.
- 2904. You have been to Newcastle several times? Five voyages.
- 2905. Are you aware of the old system of pilotage that prevailed here, of putting pilots on board ships inside the harbour by boats? I was boarded in that way twelve months ago.
- 2906. Which system do you consider the best for the requirements of this port,—the putting of pilots on board by boats by the old system, or by sailing vessels outside? I prefer the system of sailing vessels.
- 2907. You think that is preferable? For large ships, decidedly so.
- 2908. Have you seen the schooner "Sea Witch"? I have seen her only once under way, when I received a pilot from her; I have seen her lying at anchor.
- 2909. How did she act when she put the pilot on board your ship? The weather was rather unfavourable to judge of a vessel, for there had been a heavy sea rolling in, and there was but very little wind, so that I could not form a very correct opinion of her capability.
- 2910. Did you take any notice of her at all? No, only when she was nearly under our bows, and we nearly came into collision with her.
- 2911. From what you saw of her, do you think she is suited for the purpose of a pilot vessel? From what I saw of her I should hardly think she was, but I have seen so little of her that perhaps I ought not to form an opinion hastily.
- 2912. Do you know anything of the Liverpool pilot boats? I have sailed out of Liverpool for eighteen years, ever since I first went to sea.
- 2913. In what manner are pilots put on board ships from the port of Liverpool? Nearly always by small boats built for the purpose, that are either towed by the pilot vessels or lowered from davits.
- 2914. Do the Liverpool pilot boats generally remain on their stations in bad weather? I have never known but one exception. I was in the gale when the "Royal Charter" was lost, and I lost my mizen-mast and ——— sail. There were three out then.
- 2915. Do they stay well in a seaway? Very well, and under very low canvas.
- 2916. Would you consider a vessel that did not stay well in a seaway, suitable for a pilot vessel? No, a pilot vessel ought to be able to stay under almost any circumstances.
- 2917. Do I understand you to say that instances of their running into port from stress of weather are very rare? Very rare indeed. I have known but one case during 20 years, and then she did not run back to Liverpool; she simply ran in round Point Lynas, for shelter from the lee of the land.
- 2918. Did you ever fail to get a pilot from one in Liverpool? Never but once, and that

Captain
T. C. Kerr.
22 July, 1862.

- Captain
T. C. Kerr.
- 22 July, 1862.
- was more in consequence of a thick haze, approaching to a fog, than of anything else. You cannot well miss them, for there are five boats on the station.
2919. Do they put pilots on board in bad weather? In very heavy weather.
2920. From what you have seen of the weather off this coast, do you think such vessels as you have seen in the Liverpool pilot service would be able to keep out at sea here in bad weather? I do.
2921. And put pilots on board? And put pilots on board in very bad weather. I have sometimes seen such weather at Liverpool that they could not accomplish it, and when that has been the case they have run before and the ship has followed. The same thing could be done here.
2922. Do you think from your experience here, that the seas are heavier here than they are in the English Channel? It is a different quality of sea. In the English and St. George's Channel the sea is short and chopping; here a heavier swell seems to rise.
2923. Do you think a vessel would have more difficulty in holding her position off this coast in heavy weather than she would on the English coast or Channel? It depends upon what sort of vessel is employed. A very small vessel, under low canvas, in very heavy weather, would become becalmed when in the trough of the sea here, but in the English Channel the sea is not so heavy, and though as bad to contend with, the sails are not screened from the wind.
2924. Do you know the New York pilot boats? Very well indeed; I have been into New York frequently.
2925. Of course you have received a pilot from New York pilot vessels? Yes, quite as far to the eastward as George's Shoals, 200 miles from New York.
2926. Do they resemble our pilot vessel, the "Sea Witch"? No.
2927. Did you ever see the celebrated "Mary Taylor"? I cannot recollect the names of pilot boats, but though there may be a little difference in size and fittings there is a great similarity in them.
2928. Are they generally of light draught of water? They are very deep, with a very long keel; they nearly all draw 13 feet aft and 8 forward. I have seen them in dock repeatedly.
2929. By Mr. Weekes: You say a vessel that will not stay well, lacks a very good quality? I think so.
2930. And a vessel that will not steer well, lacks a good quality also? Yes, but they generally combine those two qualities.
2931. Still a vessel that will not steer well is not a suitable boat for a pilot boat? I think not at all.
2932. In fact it is almost a truism, that a vessel that will not steer well is not a good sea boat? I think not; it requires the handiest description of boat to get alongside a vessel.
2933. Is it not more difficult in certain conditions of the sea and wind for a vessel to stay than at other times? Yes, very much more. There are times when I do not think any vessel could possibly stay, from the small amount of canvas she could carry.
2934. Does not the trim of a ship also affect her staying qualities? Very much indeed.
2935. A ship in ballast not to her proper depth, would she so readily stay as if she were in proper sailing trim? Are you speaking of larger or smaller vessels?
2936. Generally? Larger vessels will not stay so well when light as when deeper in the water, because she has not so much momentum, and will not go ahead in stays.
2937. I suppose there is no particular model of a ship in which all sailors and shipwrights agree as the best? There are a great many conflicting opinions upon that matter.
2938. As to the particular shape and the proportionate breadth, depth, and length? It is generally recognized that a vessel of a particular build will work better either staying or wearing than others. For instance, a short ship is a much handier vessel than a long one, for either wearing or staying.
2939. A short vessel is more handy? I think so. Of course, in speaking of a short vessel I mean that due consideration must be had of other things; I would not build her so short that she would not have fine ends.
2940. Have you had much experience of heavy weather on this coast since you have been on it? I have had pretty heavy gales between here and New Zealand; in fact, I might say that I have had two very heavy gales from the southward, also from the eastward.
2941. Is there any part of this coast where a vessel would obtain what we call a lee? Yes.
2942. What part of the coast? From looking at the chart between here and Newcastle, I should say there are plenty of places where a vessel would be dead on a lee shore, with the wind to the east-south-east.
2943. I do not perhaps express myself correctly;—I am not speaking of getting on a lee shore, but of obtaining a lee? I do not think there is. There are harbours of shelter, but I do not think there are any places where you could get under the lee of the land.
2944. Are you aware whether there is any current on this coast? Generally speaking, there is a current to the southward.
2945. Do you think any vessel would be able to retain her ground when the current was setting the same way as the wind? Not with a strong wind and a strong current; it would be a most difficult matter. The morning I came in here there was a current of two knots an hour between Newcastle and this place—I knew that by the distance the ship was running, and the speed with which she was going through the water—and had it been blowing hard I do not think the vessel could have maintained her position and course.
2946. She would naturally have gone to leeward? With the united effects of the wind and sea, for if it had been blowing very hard the ship would have been unable to carry much canvas.
2947. By Mr. Sadleir: Have you met with vessels that you cannot stay except in fine weather? Yes, if you speak of large vessels, I have. 2948.

2948. Any class of vessels say of 100 or 150 tons? I think I have met with such vessels.
2949. What do you attribute their not staying to? It may be owing to light winds and a high sea running that a vessel will not stay, or it may be owing to her bad model, or the bad manner in which she is worked.
2950. You said a short vessel would stay well;—had you reference to the beam of the vessel;—do you think a short vessel with a broad beam would stay well? I mean, of course, with a proper amount of beam; it would require consideration; one point must not be looked at to the exclusion of others.
2951. You mean that there must be a due proportion to her breadth? Precisely.
2952. A broad vessel will not stay if she is shallow? Shallow vessels will not stay; it is necessary to have a good hold of the water; a shallow vessel can never maintain her position—she will drive too much to leeward.
2953. By Mr. Wilson: Are you aware whether boats are not sometimes launched from pilot vessels with their crew on board? No, I have never known that to be the case; I have known boats to be launched from the pilot vessels and the crew then to step in.
2954. You have known cases where boats have not been lowered from davits? Yes; that would apply rather to the English than to St. George's Channel.
2955. Would you consider the draft of 7 or 8 feet sufficient for a pilot boat of over 60 tons? I should think 8 feet almost sufficient for a vessel of 60 tons.
2956. Do you know the tonnage of the New York boats? I think they average about 100 tons; some are as small as 90, and some as large as 120.
2957. Is there any difference of opinion among nautical men, as to the necessity for a good draught of water for pilot vessels? I think all I have spoken to are united in opinion that there ought to be a good draught—that it is one of the necessary things to enable a vessel to maintain its position.
2958. Is it not of great importance to pilot boats which may be very near a lee shore, to be able to stay readily? I think it is indispensable, as if a vessel is compelled to move in short boards she cannot maintain her position.
2959. It would not be safe for the crew of a pilot boat to be on a lee shore if she were constantly obliged to wear? If very close to a lee shore, as a pilot boat must necessarily be sometimes. I think it is almost an indispensable requisite that a pilot boat should be able to stay almost under any circumstances. I have seen a Liverpool pilot boat stay under balance reefed sails when you would think it almost impossible that she could come round.
2960. By the Chairman: You said the "Sea Witch" nearly came into collision with your vessel? Yes.
2961. Will you state under what circumstances this happened? It was early in the morning that I arrived off the North Head, and hove-to to receive a pilot. They were very prompt, and came off. Of course I had to back the main yard till I received the pilot on board; the pilot kept the main yard aback for a little time, and I asked where the schooner was going; he said she was going into the harbour. About twenty minutes had elapsed, and I thought she must have been a long way a-head, and have got into the harbour, when I heard the pilot say, "Put the helm hard up," and I saw the "Sea Witch" just under our bows. That might, however, have been attributable to the light wind, and the nasty heavy sea that was rolling in.
2962. By Mr. Weekes: I suppose if a ship is not skilfully handled, that must affect her staying qualities? I think it is one of the main points; the best vessel, under mismanagement, will never do anything at all.

Captain
T. C. Kerr.
22 July, 1862.

Edward Leavenworth, Esq., called in and examined:—

2963. By the Chairman: You are, I believe, the United States Consul? I am.
2964. Have you the register of the vessel now called the "Sea Witch" in your possession? No, I have not; half was given to the Government here, and the other half was sent home to my Government.
2965. It is not in the Colony? No, it went home by the April mail.
2966. Do you know anything of the vessel? I have seen her lying in the harbour, that is all I know of her.
2967. Do you know anything of her history? I know where she was built, and when.
2968. When was she built? In 1854, according to the record in the books of my office, taken from her register.
2969. Where was she built? In New London.
2970. Beyond that you know nothing of her? Beyond that I know nothing of her; that is merely a transcript taken from her register at the time she arrived.
2971. By Mr. Weekes: After the "Sea Witch" was purchased by the Government, are you aware that any party requested your predecessor, Mr. Merrill, to offer to re-purchase her from the Government, at the price at which she was bought? Mr. Merrill told me that Captain Pearce had authorized him to re-purchase her, and had stated that he would pay any additional charges.
2972. In addition to what the Government had paid, he would give a reasonable amount? He would pay any reasonable expense that might be incurred. Captain Pearce was captain of an American whaler, and had sold his ship about the time that the "Sea Witch" was sold.
2973. And he authorized Mr. Merrill to repurchase her, and to pay back to Government all that had been expended upon her for alterations? So Mr. Merrill told me repeatedly.

E. Leavenworth, Esq.
22 July, 1862.

2974.

- E. Leavenworth, Esq. 2974. Are you acquainted at all with any of the American pilot boats, as to their build? Yes.
- 22 July, 1862. 2975. Have you ever seen the "Mary Taylor"? Yes, I have sailed in her.
2976. Is she not a vessel that has obtained a good character as a sea boat? She is considered to be one of the fastest out of the harbour of New York.
2977. Are you aware of her dimensions and draught of water? I cannot say I am; I could not recall them now.
2978. Do you know whether she is considered to be a vessel of light draught? All our pilot boats are of rather light draught.
2979. She was built by Steers, the builder of the "America"? Yes.
2980. Do you know the draught of water of any of these boats? No, I cannot remember just now.
2981. By Mr. Sadleir: Are you aware for what purpose Captain Pearce wanted to purchase this vessel again? To trade among the islands.
2982. Or for whaling? I imagine not for whaling.
2983. By Mr. Wilson: Are you aware whether or not the register of the "Sea Witch" was ever in the hands of the Government of this Colony? Before the vessel was sold?
2984. Before the vessel was sold? I believe a gentleman came from the Treasury and looked at the register, but it was never out of my office.
2985. The age of that vessel was stated on the register? It was 1854.
2986. As far as you would suppose, the parties drawing up the bill of sale would have no reason for saying her age was unknown, when they had the opportunity of examining the register? No.
2987. Are you aware of the value per ton in America of such a vessel as the "Sea Witch"? No, I am not.
2988. The value of a vessel depends very much upon the purposes for which she is required; for instance, if a person wanted to get a vessel of a light draught of water to go into bar harbours, and there were only one vessel of that description for sale, he would be willing to give a higher price than he would under other circumstances? That follows as a matter of course.
2989. It has been stated that American pilot boats draw thirteen feet aft and eight forward? There is a considerable difference in the draught.
2990. I suppose, when you state generally that they are of light draught, you consider that a light draught? I should not have thought they were of such great draught, but I never had much to do with seafaring matters. I think, if I remember rightly, the famous "America" had a draught of only ten feet.
2991. She was a yacht? Yes.
2992. Might she not be built more for sailing than for staying—there may be certain qualities required for a yacht that are not for a pilot boat? Very possibly; but her great excellence was, that she stayed so well.
2993. You cannot state positively what her draught was? I cannot; that is merely my impression.
2994. By the Chairman: You have stated that Mr. Merrill informed you that Captain Pearce authorized him to purchase the "Sea Witch" from the Government? Yes.
2995. Are you aware whether any offer of that kind was made to the Government? I am not.
2996. Do you know of the sale of any American-built vessel since you have been in the Colony? There have been several; there have been two condemned and sold, and there are these two schooners that were sold to the Government.
2997. Do you know the price the "Bertha" sold for? I do not remember; I have heard it.
2998. Do you know the value of vessels of the class of the "Sea Witch" in this market? No.
2999. This is mere hearsay about the desire of Captain Pearce to purchase the "Sea Witch"? It might be hearsay.
3000. It might be a joke? Mr. Merrill did not tell me as a joke.
3001. Do you know the draught of water of the "Sea Witch"? No, I was never on board of her; I have only seen her at a distance.

Mr. Henry Gibson called in and examined:—

- Mr. Henry Gibson. 3002. By the Chairman: You are one of the pilots? Yes, I am.
3003. Have you been long in the pilot service? Nearly twenty-two years.
- 22 July, 1862. 3004. Have you been out in the schooner "Sea Witch" since the Government purchased her? I have.
3005. During the time you were out in her what sort of weather had you? Principally fine.
3006. Had you any rough weather at all? Not what I may call rough weather; we had two pretty good breezes.
3007. How did she act while you were on board her? Very well while it was moderate.
3008. When it was not moderate how did she act? She missed stays once or twice.
3009. Do you consider that an objectionable proceeding on her part? Rather so.
3010. How do you think she answers as a pilot boat altogether? I have not had sufficient experience to say—I have not been out in her in a heavy breeze of wind; but from what I have seen of her, I should say she does not come up to the anticipations that were formed of her.
3011. Have you seen anything of the pilot vessels on the English coast? Not much.

3012. It is many years since you were in England? Twenty-three years; I have been twenty-two years in the pilot service here. Mr. Henry Gibson.
3013. Do you think the plan of boarding vessels outside from pilot vessels is preferable to the old plan of boarding them from boats? In moderate weather, as to distance, it is very possible it might be carried out better. 22 July, 1862.
3014. Do you not think it a great advantage in bad weather for a vessel outside to have a pilot put on board, or to have a pilot vessel to lead her in? It would be better, no doubt, for the pilot boat to lead her in, but I consider it impossible to board in bad weather—it is impossible to lower a boat.
3015. Do you mean that it is impossible to lower a boat from the "Sea Witch," or does your remark apply to all vessels? A vessel of larger size than the "Sea Witch" might do it better than she could, but I do not think it possible in the weather we have occasionally, to lower a boat at all from any vessel.
3016. Do you not board vessels in very bad weather by the old method? We do as far as we prudently can, but that is in a whaleboat with six men. We pull as far as we can with safety; we then put our pilot flag up, and conduct them under the lee of the reef, where we board.
3017. Have you been called upon by the Pilot Board to report as to the capabilities of the "Sea Witch"? I had a letter from the Secretary.
3018. Did you give an opinion? I gave an opinion something similar to what I am giving you now; I have not a copy of it.
3019. It is in substance what you have stated here? As near as I can remember.
3020. During the time you were out in her, were any members of the Pilot Board on board? Captain Watson was there part of one day.
3021. How did she act while he was on board? She missed stays once.
3022. Do you consider her a safe vessel on a lee shore? I do not.
3023. Do you think it possible to make her stay under close-reefed sails? I doubt it very much; if there was any sea I am almost confident she would not.
3024. Is she skilfully handled? I think the captain handles her as well as he possibly can, and as well as any other person could.
3025. Has she a good boat? She has a good boat, as far as her constitution is concerned, but she is not long enough; you can put only two men in her to pull; she is sufficiently large for the size of the vessel.
3026. Can the boat be lowered from her when there is any sea? Not in safety; they might lower her, but the chance would be that she would be either capsized or in upon the decks.
3027. Do you think the "Sea Witch" would be able to go out in bad weather? She might stay out as far as regarded safety to ourselves, but she could not render any assistance to a vessel. It would depend upon the wind; if the wind was off shore you might go out, but if the wind inclined to the eastward you must make an offing, for the safety of the vessel and those on board.
3028. Do you consider her a weatherly craft? I should think not; I have not had much opportunity of trying her, but when we have a southerly wind and a southerly current against her, I think she would be very leewardly; she is too short.
3029. By Mr. Weekes: You say she is not long enough—what is the proper proportion of length as to breadth? About a fourth, I think, as near as I can guess; I go by the appearance of a vessel when I get on board, without measuring the dimensions.
3030. Do you know her dimensions? I think about sixty odd feet to twenty-one feet beam.
3031. Twenty-one feet beam? Near upon twenty-one.
3032. Are you aware that it is nineteen feet? No, I am not.
3033. It has been stated here that her beam is nineteen feet? I just took the measure roughly; it is about twenty feet six.
3034. You prefer the old system, I think you say? I prefer it; I consider that it renders better assistance to the shipping than the present.
3035. That is, you prefer the system of whaleboats to that of schooners? I think it serves the ships better, taking it generally the year round.
3036. You are well acquainted with the weather on this coast? Pretty well.
3037. Do I understand you to say that it would be impossible to lower a boat with safety from any pilot vessel at times? I think so, or from any other vessel, pilot or any other.
3038. What would a pilot boat do in a case when she could not put a pilot on board? Run in before her.
3039. If she ran in during a violent south-east gale, would she be able to beat out again till the gale was abated? She never could.
3040. I am speaking now of any vessel;—is not the sea in such a state at the South Head, at times, that no pilot vessel could go out in a south-east gale? It would be impossible for her to work out; the distance is too short and the sea too heavy.
3041. By Mr. Sadleir: You say that in very bad weather it would be necessary for a pilot vessel to lead a ship in? Yes, when the pilot could not get on board.
3042. How many vessels would you require for this service? Three.
3043. Two would not be sufficient, then? No.
3044. You say she is very short;—does she chop much in a heavy sea? She pitches very much.
3045. And therefore cannot stay? When she comes head to sea she loses way and pays off.
3046. By Mr. Wilson: In speaking of the proportional length and breadth of the vessel, you, as a seaman, judge more from the eye than from actual measurement? I depend a good deal upon my eye; upon going on the deck of a vessel I can tell in a moment.
3047. Perhaps even better than by putting a measuring line to it? Yes. If it is not im-

Mr. Henry
Gibson.
22 July, 1862.

pertinent, I would like to remark, that when ships come in here sometimes it is impossible for us to work them up, and there is no place of safety to take them to when we get them in, Quarantine Ground only being large enough to accommodate two large vessels. I would suggest that there should be a steamer attached to the pilot service, and the same number of men would be able to work her as could work one of the cutters, and she would be available for the purpose of towing up a vessel into the harbour when entering. The "Catherine Adamson" would never have been lost if there had been a steamer attached to the pilot service. I have often seen vessels in a very precarious situation, requiring immediate assistance, and could not get a steamer; if they go into the Quarantine Ground there is scarcely room for two ships to swing clear of each other, and a ship is far better at sea. If we had a steamer, in most weather, as soon as a vessel passed the reef she could be taken hold of and towed into a place of safety. In light winds, if a vessel misses stays, there is almost as much danger as there is in heavy weather, and the signal for a steamer may be up for hours without being taken notice of.*

3048. By Captain Moriarty: You are the senior pilot? I am, as regards the number of years' servitude.

3049. Your experience is therefore of course equal to that of any other man, at least? I should hope so.

3050. You believe that the present system is not so good as one by which you would have a steamboat at command? Decidedly not.

3051. You think that the best mode of conducting the pilot service would be to have a steamboat attached to the department? I do.

3052. For the various reasons you have just stated;—next to that system, which do you consider the better one? I think the boats are better, for the reason I have mentioned, that they can give more assistance to vessels both going out and coming in.

3053. You have frequently been able to render assistance to vessels by your boat that otherwise would not have been able to get out? Yes.

3054. You have towed vessels round when, without the assistance of your boat, they would have been in great peril? I have, scores of times.

3055. So that the present system is, in your estimation, rather a doubtful advantage? It is. There are no hidden dangers outside the Heads; it is when you enter the Heads that there is danger.

3056. Suppose you were on board the pilot cutter, a vessel came up and you got on board five or six miles from the Heads, and that it fell calm, where would the pilot cutter be in four and twenty hours? There is generally a light wind some part of that time, but if there were not she would fall away to the southward.

3057. Suppose there were a vessel cruising off Bondi, and another off the North Head, both those vessels would be to the southward if the wind fell very low and the current was to the southward? Yes. I have seen a sloop of war, the "Favorite," off the Heads, with a north-east wind; a pilot was put on board, and I think she was three days to the southward. She was sighted with a heavy press of canvas, and I think it was the third day before she fetched up to the Heads.

3058. A change has taken place in the system of late years;—I believe, formerly, the system was that the pilots received all the pilotage, and employed and paid their own men? Yes.

3059. Now, I believe, a different system obtains? Yes.

3060. The pilots are paid certain salaries, and the men are employed by Government and paid wages? That is the present system.

3061. How long has that been in force? I think three to four years.

3062. Do your men live with you? No, they have quarters of their own, erected by Government.

3063. Did they never live with you? They did when we paid them and provided for them.

3064. Since the change has taken place have the men never lived with you at all? They did, for a length of time. When the new system came into operation the Government were not prepared with quarters for the men, and Mr. Crook, the Harbour Master, came down to the Heads—I then held the position of senior pilot—and he said, "We are not prepared with quarters for the men, will you keep them in your house?" He said, "So long as you do so you shall be remunerated." He told me so, and the rest of the pilots.

3065. How long was that system continued? I had the men in my quarters for five or six months.

3066. Were you, during this time, remunerated for the accommodation of these people? No.

3067. You were not paid your expenses? No.

3068. Have you never been paid? There is some objection; Mr. Crook will not sign the accounts, for what reason I do not know.

3069. Do you mean to say that Mr. Crook told you to board these men, and that you should be paid by Government, and that he afterwards objected—is that the case? Yes, I am prepared to prove it.

3070. By Mr. Weekes: When you say board, do you mean only that you lodged them? I mean that I gave them accommodation.

3071. You lodged, not boarded them? I lodged them.

3072. They found themselves? Yes.

3073. By Captain Moriarty: In point of fact, you did not board them? I merely found them house-room; there were no quarters for them.

3074. By Mr. Weekes: What provision was there for the crews of the rest of the pilots? A tent was provided for them.

3075.

* NOTE (on revision):—I mean no steamer will come, without one of Mr. Manning's boats should be in port, and an agreement made for her to do so.

3075. Did none of the pilots but you provide lodgings for the men? The men stayed with them a short time, and then they were turned out. Mr. Henry Gibson.
3076. Are you aware whether they sent in a claim or not? I do not know; I believe they did not; but I do not know positively. 22 July, 1862.
3077. You have sent several letters to me on the subject? I have.
3078. Are you aware whether they have been referred to the Pilot Board several times? I believe so.
3079. And they have reported upon them? I believe so.
3080. Do you know that their report has been unfavourable? I have been told by members that it was favourable.
3081. Do you mean that they recommended payment? They told me so. I called upon the Chairman after the last letter I received from you, wherein, as nearly as I can recollect, you said the matter had been referred to the Pilot Board, and they had objected to the payment, and Mr. Duncan told me he did not recollect that it was so.
3082. It has been referred to them over and over again, upon your repeated application? I believe so. I did not communicate with the Board, but with you. When these men went out of the other pilots' houses it was not in consequence of an official order, but they turned them out; but I considered that I was doing my duty, as my superior officer, Mr. Crook, had said it was the wish of the Government, and that I should be remunerated. A tent, when I required their quarters, was bought for the accommodation of these men. He said it was a just debt, and Mr. Wilshire also said it was a just debt.
3083. By Captain Moriarty: What was the amount of your claim? £15 or £16, as near as I can recollect. I had no written agreement with Mr. Crook, but the men were in a most wretched condition when in the tent, and I took them in.
3084. The present pilot boat you say is not a satisfactory one—she does not stay well? In fine weather she does very well, and smooth water. She would make a good passage by giving her a point of the compass and a foot or two of the sheet, and she will sail well; but as to answering in heavy weather I am satisfied she never will. She will never meet the anticipations of Government, I am satisfied.
3085. She is not quite so bad a vessel as she has been described to be? I do not see anything wrong in the vessel constitutionally.
3086. By the Chairman: You have heard her described as a bad weatherly boat? I have; certainly she is very laboursome, in consequence that you cannot bring the ballast up in her midships; she is too short, and has not sufficient hold of the water to contend against heavy weather.
3087. You say she is not so bad as she has been described to be? No.
3088. When you heard her described as a bad vessel, what were the qualities that were said to be bad? They said she was rotten.
3089. I am speaking of her qualities as a sailing vessel;—have you heard people say that she was not a safe vessel upon a lee shore? I have heard that.
3090. Do you say that she is not? I do.
3091. Have you heard people say that she is not a weatherly craft? Yes.
3092. Do you say so? I never had an opportunity of trying her against a current.
3093. Is she a weatherly craft? She gains to windward, because she has never had smaller sail than double-reefed canvas, and current with her; but if she came to have a close-reefed mainsail, I think she would fall to leeward.
3094. Is she a dry vessel? She does not ship a great quantity of water. I have not been in her in very bad weather.
3095. I think you said you had seen her miss stays several times? I have, when I have been in her.
3096. By Mr. Weekes: Do you think her sailing qualities would be improved by her trim being altered? She is too short, trim her as you like.
3097. You said that part of her indifferent staying quality was owing to the indifferent stowage of the ballast? That is as to her being laboursome; by bringing her ballast up into midships she would be more easy; she rolls fearfully; she will be a good friend to the sailmaker.
3098. Is she too much out of the water? She is not a bit too high; if you were to put her down she would be under water, and could carry no boat at the davits.
3099. What is the deck from the sea? Three feet; when you have to carry a boat on the davits that is not too high.
3100. By Captain Moriarty: Has she the apparatus for lowering the boats? No, only the ordinary tackles.

Captain John Shanks called in and examined:—

3101. By the Chairman: You are one of the pilots? I am.
3102. Have you been long in the pilot service? Rather more than two years. Captain John Shanks.
3103. Have you been out in the "Sea Witch"? I have. 22 July, 1862.
3104. During the time you were out, what kind of weather had you? Principally fine weather; we had one breeze.
3105. How did she act as a pilot vessel? In fine weather, very well.
3106. And in the other sort of weather you have had? Very badly.
3107. In what way did she act badly? By missing stays very frequently.
3108. Have you had any experience on the English coast at all? Not a great deal. I have taken pilots from vessels on coming off from long voyages.
3109. You had had command of vessels before you became pilot? Yes.

- Captain
John Shanks.
22 July, 1862.
3110. Did you ever take a pilot from a vessel in very bad weather? Not in very bad weather; we ran into the Downs in very bad weather, past Dungeness.
3111. Are you aware whether the Liverpool pilot boats stay out in very bad weather? I have never been there. The London pilot boats go under Dungeness.
3112. Have you seen much rough weather in the English Channel? Not a very great deal; I have been accustomed to long voyages principally.
3113. Have you been called upon by the Pilot Board to report upon the "Sea Witch"? I have.
3114. Did you report? I did.
3115. What was the nature of your report? That I thought she was too short for the service. I did not think she was fit for bad weather, but would be obliged to run in. She would never be able to lower her boat in bad weather, but would have to run ahead of the ship, and then I think it would be difficult to get her out again.
3116. Do you consider her a weatherly craft? I do not think so, in bad weather; in moderate weather she is very well.
3117. Do you consider her a safe vessel on a lee shore? I should say not.
3118. From your experience, which do you think the most preferable plan of carrying out the pilot service,—that of boarding in the old way by boats from the inside, or by pilot vessel outside? I think in fine weather it may be done very well by the cutter, but in bad weather it would be done better by boats.
3119. Do you think if vessels could be got suitable for the service, that outside pilot boats would be the best? I do not think so.
3120. What is your opinion altogether as to the "Sea Witch," as to her adaptability to the service? I think she is too short, and has not hold enough of the water.
3121. By Mr. Weekes: Have you had much experience of this coast? Not a great deal; I have been in two or three gales on the coast. I had the schooner the "Coral Queen"; she belonged to me.
3122. What experience had you had when you were appointed pilot? I had been here two years, and had made several voyages here as master and chief officer of one of Dunbar's ships.
3123. You have been here long enough to have had experience of bad weather? Yes.
3124. Do you think in some weather we have had, a boat could be lowered from any vessel? I know it would have been impossible in one gale. I think it was in June or July, two years ago. It would then have been impossible to have lowered a boat from any vessel.
3125. You are paid by a salary under the new system? Yes.
3126. Is it any pecuniary loss to you? It is; perhaps £50 a year—may be more.
3127. There is always an amount of danger, I suppose, on a lee shore? Yes, whatever vessel you may be in.
3128. It is not a pleasant place to be near? Decidedly not; there is no beach to run for if you are on a lee shore here.
3129. Is the "Sea Witch" a good sound boat? As far as I have seen; I have never seen her bottom in the dock.
3130. I am speaking of her general character? She is tight enough; she does not make any water, as far I have seen.
3131. Then the statement that she was obliged to be pumped during all one gale is a mere fiction? I was not there. She has been pumped three or four times when I have been on board, but then it has been moderate weather.
3132. By Mr. Wilson: Were you on board when the "White Star" came into the harbour? No.
3133. Were you when the "City of Aberdeen" came in? I was.
3134. Are you aware that some difficulty occurred between her and the "Sea Witch"? I know that she tried to beat up, and had to run to the Quarantine Station; and in towing up she parted her hawsers coming across the Heads.
3135. Did not the "City of Aberdeen" nearly run foul of the pilot boat—the captain of the "City of Aberdeen" stated that he had to wear his ship to keep out of the way of the pilot boat? I think not; I do not think that is true; he might have had to wear her to keep her head off shore, he was too close to the land to round her head in.
3136. You do not remember the "Sea Witch" missing stays immediately before his bows? No; but I remember her missing stays immediately after the pilot was put on board. I was preparing at that time to go to the "Colonial Empire." I do not remember whether she missed stays before or after.
3137. Is she worked well—pretty well managed? Yes, I think very well; the man seems to understand his business.
3138. The missing stays was not owing to negligence on his part? No, I think she has not sufficient weight; when she comes round she loses her way so very quickly.
3139. By Captain Moriarty: You brought in the "Crest of the Wave"? Yes, last night.
3140. Where did you board her? The North Head, N.N.W., about two miles from the light-house.
3141. At what time did you get in? It was about eight or nine when we anchored.
3142. You anchored a long way down? She is a long ship, and we could not come up.
3143. Is it not an accommodation to passengers to bring them higher up, and save them money? We generally do bring them further up.
3144. You were speaking about the pilot system in the English Channel—you say the pilots do not board you till you get about Dungeness—is there not very good shelter there? Yes, in westerly gales.
3145. Those are the gales you generally contemplate danger from? Yes; but then we should run into the Downs.
3146. But a pilot boat would not run into the Downs? No.

Captain Joseph Walsh called in and examined:—

3147. By the Chairman: You are one of the pilots? Yes.
 3148. Have you been long in the pilot service? About three months.
 3149. What were you before you joined the pilot service? Master of a vessel.
 3150. Have you been out in the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
 3151. Previously to joining the pilot service in this Colony, had you had any experience of pilot vessels in St. George's or the English Channel? No personal experience.
 3152. What sort of weather have you had during the time you have been pilot, when you have been in the "Sea Witch"? At the time I was out in her we had no bad weather to speak of; we have been under double-reefed canvas.
 3153. How did the "Sea Witch" act as a pilot vessel? She did very well during that weather.
 3154. Had you any weather at all that was tolerably rough or boisterous? It was boisterous when we were under double-reefed canvas, but there was no heavy sea running.
 3155. How did she act when she was under double-reefed canvas? She missed stays twice while I was looking on; I was called upon deck to look at her.
 3156. Do you think she is well adapted to the service in which she is engaged? As far as such weather goes she is very well adapted.
 3157. When she was under double-reefed sails did she act as a pilot boat ought to act? She is not quick enough in staying; she is very slow in coming through a head sea.
 3158. Is that the way a vessel ought to act? No.
 3159. Have you been called upon to report upon this vessel? I was written to, but I had nothing to say—I had not been out in her.
 3160. Do you consider her a safe vessel on a lee shore? I am afraid she is too light.
 3161. Have you seen anything of the pilot vessels on the English coast? Yes, I have seen them in the Irish Channel, in the Dublin Channel.
 3162. What sort of vessels have they there? Cutters drawing about thirteen feet of water. They will stay under a foresail in a moderate wind.
 3163. What tonnage are they? They range from about 80 to 100 tons.
 3164. Do they stay readily in boisterous weather? Yes; I have seen them stay with a reefed trysail and foresail, without a jib.
 3165. Is the weather there as severe as it is on this coast? There is not in general so heavy a sea.
 3166. Do you think a class of vessels such as you speak of could hold their position in an ordinary gale? I am sure they could.
 3167. Do you think it preferable to put pilots on board ships from sailing vessels or from boats? I would rather be boarded from the pilot vessel; it would give me time to get my vessel in order.
 3168. Is there any danger in lowering a boat? I have seen them lowering the crew and pilot over the stern, and if they cannot use the boat they use a line and jump into the water.
 3169. Have you been into New York? No, I have been to Philadelphia.
 3170. Have you seen anything of the American pilot boats? Yes, I saw one in England that came across after a debtor who had run away with some money.
 3171. Was she the same model as the "Sea Witch"? She seemed to be sharper.
 3172. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know her name? No, I forget her name.
 3173. By the Chairman: During the time you were out in the "Sea Witch," were there any members of the Pilot Board present? No.
 3174. Do you think it would be possible to make her stay under close-reefed canvas? I do not think she would stay in a heavy sea; she is too light, she stops as soon as her head is put to wind.
 3175. By Mr. Weekes: Do you think she might be improved by altering her trim? She might be improved by altering her trim, by putting more ballast in her she would hang more to windward; as soon as she comes head to the sea she stops.
 3176. Do you think one cause of her not staying is that she is too light? Yes.
 3177. What draught has she? 7 ft. 6 in. or 7 ft. 8 in. aft.
 3178. Is she a good sound boat? She appears to be, and sails remarkably well when the weather is fine.
 3179. By the Chairman: Do you think in bad weather it is always necessary for the "Sea Witch" to run into port, as a matter of prudence? In very heavy gales.
 3180. But in ordinary gales? No.

Captain
Joseph Walsh.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Robert Kelly called in and examined:—

3181. By the Chairman: You command the schooner "Atlantic"? Yes.
 3182. And you formerly commanded the schooner "Pacific"? Yes.
 3183. Are you the owner of both those vessels? I am owner of both.

Captain
Robert Kelly.
24 July, 1862

Captain
Robert Kelly.
24 July, 1862.

3184. Would you be kind enough to tell the Committee the character of your vessels as to speed, compared with other vessels on the coast? I believe they are the fastest vessels on the coast that I have seen; they have never been beaten by any other vessels since I have been in either of them.
3185. Are your vessels particularly weatherly? Yes, they are, very; there are no vessels that I have ever been in company with with them, that could go to windward the same as either of them.
3186. Do you know the schooner "Sea Witch," lately purchased as a pilot vessel? I have seen her two or three times.
3187. Will your vessels work well to windward in a seaway? Yes, that is where I find them best.
3188. Will they stay when there is any sea? Yes, stay under any canvas; I never knew them to miss stays, loaded or light.
3189. Could your vessels, do you believe, keep the sea in the ordinary gales off this coast? I believe they could; I think I have been out in some as bad gales as there have ever been here. The time the "Dunbar" was lost, I had a night of it then, and that was not very good weather.
3190. Have you ever been caught in a gale, with the wind dead on the land, with either of your vessels? Yes, I have been caught with the "Atlantic," coming from Newcastle loaded; a fearful sea got up too before we got in. I do not recollect the date, but it was the time the "Iris" got her steam up and towed the "Sancho Panza" off George's Head, when she was going on shore.
3191. How did the "Atlantic" behave in the gale? She behaved first rate, according to the way the vessel was loaded; she was very deep, but she shipped but very little water, considering the sea that was on.
3192. Where were you? I was about twenty miles from Newcastle when I was caught in that.
3193. Did any of the steamers go out on that occasion? The "Collaroy" lay in the night before, and went out the next morning—I met her going out when I was entering the Heads; the "Paterson" steamer lay in too, went out next morning a little way outside the Heads, and then returned again. The wind was dead on the land.
3194. Do you make frequent voyages between this and Newcastle? Yes, I make from four to six trips a month; I have made five trips this month now.
3195. And you are out in all weathers? Yes; in fact I never lay in for anything; we never lay in Newcastle waiting for a wind; when we get loaded we come out.
3196. Do you think your vessels could hold their position in any weather you have experienced off this coast? Yes, I believe they would. I would not be frightened to be out in any weather, with the vessel in proper trim; coming from Newcastle we are too deep, and going the other way too light in ballast—still if we fall in with any heavy weather we have to go through with it.
3197. I am now speaking of the vessels in good ballast trim? Yes, in good ballast trim I believe they could hold their own in any weather.
3198. And your experience has been very great outside the Heads? Yes, I have had a good deal of experience outside; I have been sailing backward and forward for the last nine years.
3199. You consider yourself well able to judge of what a pilot vessel could do outside these Heads, or what she ought to do? Yes. For vessels of the size and class of vessel that we are, I have never seen anything yet to equal them.
3200. Where were your vessels built? They were built in New Zealand.
3201. Are they strongly built? Yes, well built and well fastened. I had the "Atlantic" built to my order; the "Pacific" I bought after she was built.
3202. Are they copper-fastened? The "Pacific" is copper-fastened up to light water mark; the "Atlantic" is copper-fastened higher up—up to the bends. Here is a certificate from the man that built her. (Letter produced and read.)
3203. What did he know of her? He was foreman for Mr. Nicol, in New Zealand, at the time the "Pacific" was built; he planked one side of the vessel himself; he is now foreman for Mr. Scott, at Stockton, Newcastle.
3204. Your vessels are deeply laden with coals coming from Newcastle? Yes.
3205. Do they leak, or are they watertight? They are quite tight; there are not tighter vessels out of Sydney.
3206. You have told us how the "Pacific" is fastened—how is the "Atlantic" fastened? The "Atlantic" is fastened much in the same way; there is not a better fastened vessel in the country; all copper-fastened the same.
3207. Have either of your vessels been in company with the "Sea Witch"? Two or three trips ago the "Sea Witch" came in with me from about three miles outside the Heads; the master of her said—"Captain, I am going to have a race with you," and he put about under our stern, and came in right after me, but he never could pull me up; the wind was about W.S.W.
3208. You led in? Yes. I was coal loaded, deep, but he never pulled me up till I came inside.
3209. Was there a stiff breeze? No, a nice whole-sail breeze.
3210. What do you consider the value of your vessels in the market now? I know the value I put on them myself.
3211. I do not press you to answer the question unless you like? Well, certainly, if I was offered the same money that I tendered the vessels to the Government at, I should not take it; I can do better with the vessels; I can clear £200 a month out of these two vessels; and I could not get other vessels in the country to suit me unless I went and got them built, which

which would most likely take eight or nine months. I consider there are not better vessels in Sydney; I can do more work with them than any others I know.

Captain
Robert Kelly.

3212. Do you frequently go into Newcastle at night? Yes, at all hours—all times—oftener at night than at any other time.

24 July, 1862.

3213. Have you ever seen the light out at Nobby's? Never but once, some time ago.

3214. Have you ever heard that it cannot be seen distinctly for twenty minutes or half an hour at any time? I have seen it when at a distance off, eight or ten miles, that it could not be seen at all for a time.

3215. How long have you seen it in that way at a time? It might be a few minutes—three, four, or five minutes.

3216. Have you ever seen it obscured in that way for as long as twenty minutes? No. I have seen it out altogether at one time, when I was close to it, some time ago.

3217. Have you ever been on board the "Sea Witch"? I have been on board of her when she was lying at the wharf, but never after she was purchased by the Government.

3218. From your experience of the weather on this coast, do you think she is a vessel that could stay out at sea in an ordinary gale? She might, but she would never be a very weatherly vessel I should say.

3219. By Mr. Weekes: When was the "Pacific" built? I can hardly tell you that exactly. She is five years old now, and two or three months.

3220. Rising six? Not quite six.

3221. How long has her present copper been on her? This is the first copper that ever was on her.

3222. She has not been coppered since she was built? No. She is only five years old and a month, or something like that.

3223. What was her cost? She cost me £950. I bought her in Sydney from a man who was hard up; I consider I got a bargain with the vessel; the vessel would fetch more if she was put up to auction to-morrow. I would not like to let her go for what I offered her to the Government at. I tendered her too cheap.

3224. What price did you give for the "Atlantic"? The "Atlantic" cost me £1,500.

3225. Are there any iron fastenings in these vessels at all? The topsides are iron-fastened. There are no iron fastenings in the bottom to my knowledge.

3226. Do you know of your own knowledge that the other fastenings are copper or iron? Yes, copper. The centre fastenings through the keelson and keel are copper bolts.

3227. Where does the iron fastening begin? I think it begins at light water mark in the "Pacific;" it begins in the bends in the "Atlantic," higher up; she is copper-fastened up to the bends.

3228. You offered these vessels to the Government, in the case of the "Pacific" for £1,200, and in the case of the "Atlantic" for £2,000? Yes.

3229. Do you consider that the market price—not your own value, but the market price—if they were in the market for sale? Yes, I do not think it is out of the way for those vessels; I believe they would fetch it too at auction to-morrow; a great number of people would be after these vessels if they were in the market.

3230. Is it customary for vessels to increase in price as they grow in age? It is according to the character they may get. These vessels have got a good name since I have had them, for the work they do. I could not get a vessel built by the same man, of the same dimensions as the "Atlantic," under £1,800 at the present time, and then I should have to wait about nine months for her.

3231. Do you think the members of the Pilot Board, at the time you tendered these vessels, were men likely to know the value of vessels of this class? Yes, I should say they ought.

3232. Are you aware that the Board were of opinion that the prices asked for these vessels were excessive? No, I was not aware of that.

3233. Are you aware that, in a report made by the Pilot Board, on the 8th March, 1862, they state, that after considering the whole of the most eligible tenders, they are of opinion that the prices asked are excessive? I have heard that before.

3234. What sail does the "Atlantic" carry; how is she rigged? Schooner rigged.

3235. A topsail schooner? Yes, topsail, topgallantsail, mainsail, foresail, fore-trysail, two jibs, and a staysail.

3236. Is that not more sail than the "Sea Witch" carries? No.

3237. How much sail does the "Sea Witch" carry? She has only got three sails for common working sails, but I dare say she has as much canvas in them as we have. Our square canvas is very small.

3238. Has a square-rigged vessel, a vessel carrying squaresails of any kind, any advantage in tacking or staying, over a simple fore-and-aft one? Yes, in a seaway the topsail would bring a vessel round when a fore-and-aft might miss stays.

3239. Is it not more difficult, in certain conditions of wind and sea—say a high rolling sea and little wind—for a vessel to stay without a topsail? Yes, certainly it is. But in bad weather, when it blows hard, I take the square canvas off altogether off the "Atlantic," and she will stay then under fore-and-aft canvas, when it blows hard, when she would not carry a squaresail.

3240. If you found that a vessel failed in some qualities when under sail, would you alter her trim at all? I would try if I could alter the trim.

3241. Does not the trim of a vessel affect her qualities in many respects? It has a great deal to do with it.

3242. And before you condemned a vessel for bad qualities, you would like to alter her trim, and see how she would work under other circumstances? Yes, I should like to try her under

Captain under a good many trims before I condemned her altogether. There is a great deal in the Robert Kelly. trim of a vessel, I know.

3243. Have you been able to form any opinion, from your experience of this coast, as to 24 July, 1862. which system of pilotage is preferable—the old system, which was boarding vessels by means of whaleboats, or the system by suitable pilot schooners outside the Heads, as now proposed?
As far as my opinion goes, I think the old way is before the new.

3244. Why do you prefer the old way? I think by these pilot schooners outside, vessels may come in many and many a time and never be seen. Of a night, myself, I have passed in and out several times, and I know I have never been seen by the pilot schooner. The pilots on the look-out before, inside, could always board a vessel far enough out, even in bad weather.

3245. Are you aware that under the old system vessels have run in without seeing a pilot?
Yes, I have heard of some cases of that sort.

3246. Are you acquainted with the system in England? No.

3247. Do you think that any pilot vessel would be able to hold her position with the current and a strong wind setting in the same direction—say a strong north-easter, and a current setting to the southward? Yes, I should say a suitable vessel would go to windward almost hove to. I have myself worked to Newcastle against the southerly current and a strong north-easterly wind—a black north-easter you may call it—and a nasty sea.

3248. What would be the result in a calm or very light wind? That is the only thing,—of a night when the north-easter dies away the schooner may stand a chance to drift to the southward then; but then it is never for very long. The north-easters do not take off, generally, till twelve or one o'clock at night, and she cannot go very far in the short time after that.

3249. I think you say the light at Newcastle becomes more or less obscured while it is being trimmed? Yes, sometimes.

3250. It is a peculiar light, is it not, not similar to other light-houses—it has one large wick, has it not? Yes.

3251. By Mr. Piddington: From your observation of the "Sea Witch," do you consider her to be such a vessel as would be a good model for a pilot vessel to be out in all weathers?
I should say not. I think, in the first place, she has not got draught of water enough, and she is rather short, I should say.

3252. In proportion to her length you consider her beam too great? She has got quite enough beam, I should say.

3253. More than enough? Yes, more than enough, but not draught of water enough. I should say a vessel for a pilot vessel ought to draw eleven or twelve feet of water.

3254. Then if she does not in practice stay in a heavy sea, to what cause do you attribute the want of that quality? To her not having draught of water enough, I should say. The false keel on the vessel is no use to make her stay.

3255. If you had been called upon to select a vessel for the pilot service outside the Heads, would you have selected the "Sea Witch"? I would not; nor would I have selected my own vessels if there had been any more suitable vessels. I consider a pilot vessel ought to be a different vessel from any of them. But my vessels are as good and weatherly vessels as any on the coast, and would have answered very well until proper vessels could have been got.

3256. You have no doubt your vessels are far more weatherly than the "Sea Witch"? No.

3257. And that is of essential importance in such a vessel? Yes.

3258. In reference to the opinion of the Pilot Board, stated in their minute of the 8th
March, with regard to the excessive value of the various vessels they allude to, are you aware that that opinion is founded on the consideration that all these vessels were not built for the pilot service? I do not know.

3259. Look at the last paragraph of that minute, and see whether it is so or not—the opinion of the Pilot Board there appears to be that the vessels are overvalued, inasmuch as they would require considerable expense to make them fit for the purpose? Yes.

3260. Have you any idea of the expense the Government have been compelled to defray for alterations to the "Sea Witch"? No, I have not.

3261. If the costs of the alterations to the "Sea Witch" have amounted to £600 or £800, that is a considerable addition to the original price? I should say so.

3262. Do you believe that if the Government had purchased your vessels, they would have been compelled to expend £600 or £800 on each of them? No; I should say £500 would have done the two of them. If they had made fore-and-afters of them they would have required new masts, and then they would have cost more.

3263. You are of opinion that neither of your vessels required anything like the expenditure on the "Sea Witch" to make them available? No.

3264. Are you aware whether the "Sea Witch" is available now? I have scarcely seen her since.

3265. Have you not heard? I have heard several reports that she is not.

3266. By Captain Moriarty: You do not attach much importance to such reports? No.

3267. By the Chairman: Can you tell us what you consider the value of the "Sea Witch" at the time she was purchased by the Government—her value in the market? Well, I should say that at that time I would have given as much for a vessel of that class as any other person in Sydney, but I really think I would not have given above £800 or £900 for her—£900 at the outside—considering where the vessel was built, and the like of that.

3268. That is what you conceive to have been her value? Yes; not above £900.

3269. Will you be kind enough to state where you conceive the difference in value to have been between your vessels and the "Sea Witch," at the time they were offered to the Government? They are better built vessels in every way—Colonial built; she is only American built, and iron-fastened.

3270. B Mr. Weekes: Has she no copper fastenings? I believe there are some copper spikes about her butts. Captain
Robert Kelly.
3271. You do not know whether the butts are fastened through and through? I do not know; I have heard there was some copper about the butts, but that is all; I never looked at any of her fastenings. 24 July, 1862.
3272. By the Chairman: The value of a vessel in the market fluctuates according to the demand for tonnage, does it not? Vessels of the size and tonnage of the "Sea Witch"—60 to 80 tons register—are always saleable here; they are handy for the coasting trade.
3273. By Mr. Weekes: What is the draught of water of the "Pacific"? Light or loaded?
3274. Either one or the other, or both? She draws 5 ft. 6 in. light, when clean, nothing in her, and nearly 8 ft. 6 in. when loaded; the "Atlantic" draws 6 ft. light, within an inch or so, and 9 ft. 6 in. when loaded.
3275. How far is the level of the deck above water when loaded with coal? Not above 18 inches amidships.
3276. Do you know what the depth of hold is? 7 ft. 6 in. or 7 ft. 9 in. I believe.
3277. Do you know whether the "Sea Witch" and the "Pacific" have the same depth of hold? I am not aware.
3278. Are you aware that the depth of hold of the "Sea Witch" is 7 7-10ths feet, and the depth of hold of the "Pacific" is 7 8-10ths feet, being 1-10th of a foot difference only? I am not aware.
3279. Do you know the breadth of beam of the "Sea Witch"? No.
3280. What is the breadth of beam of the "Pacific"? Something over 18 feet.
3281. The register states 19 feet—is that correct? It may be, but I think not; it may be 19 feet if you measured from out to out.
3282. The ordinary system of measurement, as stated in the register, gives 19 feet? It must be right.
3283. Are you aware that the breadth of the "Sea Witch" is 19 2-10ths feet? I am not aware.
3284. Do you know the length of the "Sea Witch"? I think she is somewhere about the same length as the "Pacific"—a foot or two shorter.
3285. Then there is no great dissimilarity in their length, breadth, or depth of hold? No; but still the "Sea Witch" has a much flatter floor.
3286. Are you aware what has been done to the "Sea Witch" to fit her for the use of the pilots? I am not; I have never been on board her since.
3287. Are you aware that a new deck has been laid below, and cabins erected for the pilots, with the necessary accommodation? I have heard so.
3288. Would not that have been necessary in your vessels? Yes, you would have had to make a cabin, of course; there is nothing of that sort there now.
3289. Is there any reason why the expense of carrying out these particular things should be more in the "Sea Witch" than in the "Pacific" and "Atlantic," each requiring decks to be laid and cabins to be built? I should say not, as far as laying decks and making alterations in the cabin; that would cost quite as much in the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" as in the "Sea Witch." I do not see why it should not.
3290. By Mr. Piddington: Would there not be a difference in the event of the deck that may be necessary, and the cabins that may be necessary, to fit the "Atlantic" and the "Pacific," costing the same as those for the "Sea Witch"—would there not be this difference, that in the case of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" they would be able to stay in bad weather, and the "Sea Witch" would not? Yes, I believe they would stay in any weather.
3291. Then the difference consists in the money being expended on an unsuitable vessel, as in the case of the "Sea Witch," and the money being expended on vessels that would have been suitable? Yes, of course.
3292. By Captain Moriarty: I gather that, in your opinion, the two vessels you tendered to the Government are not the kind of vessels suited to the pilot service of this port? Not altogether; but under the circumstances there were no others more suitable.
3293. In point of fact, you would not select vessels of that description as pilot vessels? I do not know that I would not select the "Atlantic," but not the "Pacific."
3294. The draught of the "Atlantic" is 9 feet 6 inches when deep laden, and 6 feet when she is empty;—now, fitted for a pilot boat, of course she would not be deep laden—she would not be laden like a collier or a sand barge—what would her draught of water be then—her proper draught of water under such circumstances as would suit her for a pilot boat? In the first place, to suit her to be a pilot boat, I would put eighteen inches or a foot of keel on her, and she would draw nearly nine feet then, to put her in proper trim for sailing.
3295. They do now hold their own in any weather? Yes, they do, even light.
3296. If they can do that with the draught of water you have named, why should not the "Sea Witch" with the same draught of water? The "Sea Witch" is a different built vessel—a flatter vessel, and a flat vessel will never hold her own or go to windward either; there is a very great difference in the build of the two vessels.
3297. I suppose you have seen or heard of the performances of the class of ships built by Sir William Symons in the Navy; they were remarkable for flat floor and great beam, were they not?—were there any ships in the world that could go to windward with them? I cannot say for that.

Benjamin Darley, Esq., called in and examined:—

- B. Darley, Esq.
24 July, 1862.
3298. By the Chairman: You were one of the late members of the Pilot Board, and one of the petitioners to the Assembly? I was.
3299. We have had a great deal of evidence about the allegations contained in your petition, and I only propose, myself, to ask you a few questions relating to the fees which were claimed by some members of the Pilot Board;—will you be kind enough to state the circumstances under which those fees were claimed, and whether you were one of the members who made that claim? I was one of them, and the reason we applied for them was that the Act states that we are entitled to them, which Act I have brought here in my pocket, in order that the Committee might read the clause and judge for themselves. Previous to making the claim we asked Mr. Robert Campbell, who was then Treasurer, whether we might get the opinion of the Judges as to our right to the fees, and he told us we might—that he had no objection to our doing so, and if we had a right to them he would have no objection to our getting them. Captain Browne was Chairman at that time, and I believe he maintained that we had a right to them. On that we applied, as I have said, to Mr. Robert Campbell, who told us we might get an opinion. We did so, and it was to the effect that the Board were entitled to them, being professionally employed, and the Act being framed from the English Act, under which the examiners are paid by fees. I will read the clause, which I have brought with me, as the charge has been brought against us of claiming money to which we were not entitled. (The witness read the fifth clause of the Pilotage Rates Amendment Act of 1858.)
3300. Will you be kind enough to state who were the members of the Pilot Board at the time to which you are now referring? Captain Browne, Captain Deloitte, myself, Captain North, and Captain Mann; I think these were the members.
3301. Neither Captain Smith nor Captain Fox were members of the Board at that time? No, not at that time.
3302. When the Act was passed did you conceive that the intention was that the fees should go to the Board? I never thought anything about it until we did receive the fees, and this Act was produced, and the clause read at the Board. We all conceived that the fees belonged to us, and they did for a length of time remain in the hands of the Chairman, being paid into the bank in the name of the Chairman, Captain Browne, and not made use of by anybody; but after Mr. Campbell's death the present Treasurer insisted on the fees being paid over, and they were given up—not that we conceived we had any right to give them up, but they were given up. I still maintain that we had a right to them. We got very good opinions—Mr. Broadhurst's and one or two others, who said we were legally entitled to them.
3303. By Captain Moriarty: Not morally? Yes, morally.
3304. By the Chairman: You conceived you were entitled to them, from the wording of the Act? Quite so.
3305. Had you any intimation from the Government in any way that you were to receive these fees? No. We applied to the Treasurer at the time, Mr. Robert Campbell, and asked if we were entitled to them, and he said,—“It appears to me you are, from reading the Act, but,” he said, “I will not give you an opinion—I will give you permission to get the opinion of the Judges.”
3306. You stated that there is a similar clause in the English Act? I believe this Act was framed from the English Act.
3307. Were the duties of the examiners in England the same as those of the examiners here? Yes, quite the same.
3308. Had you to put the candidates for certificates through any lengthened examination? At first we had a great deal of work. We sat from two o'clock in the afternoon till six or seven (the whole afternoon) frequently, for three days in the week.
3309. How long did these lengthened examinations continue? I cannot exactly recollect the time, but a considerable time.
3310. Did you conceive that the fee you were getting—one guinea for every attendance—was not sufficient remuneration for your services? For loss of time at the Pilot Board I do not think one guinea ever remunerated me, nor did I ever sit there with the feeling that it remunerated me for my loss of time.
3311. Then you did not consider this £5 fee in each case an excessive one? I did not think anything about it; it was on principle we demanded it; I never thought about the money; it was no question of money with me; nor did I ever sit at the Board with the feeling of the amount of fee I received for sitting there; I thought I was of use to the public, and for that reason I kept my seat much longer than I felt inclined to do.
3312. How long were you a member of the Pilot Board? Six or seven years.
3313. By Mr. Weekes: Did not Mr. Campbell, when Treasurer, first apply to the Pilot Board to hand over to the Consolidated Revenue such sums as they had received for these fees? I do not exactly recollect whether he did or not, or whether that was the reason of our calling upon him; it might have been the reason; it is so far back that I cannot exactly call it to mind.
3314. Does not this same Act say that other dues receivable under it shall be paid to the Collector of Customs—pilotage and harbour dues? None of those moneys are received by the Board.
3315. Are not certain dues—pilotage and harbour dues, for instance—payable by this Act to the Collector of Customs? I believe they are.
3316. Are you aware whether the Collector of Customs has ever put forward a claim that he should have these for his own personal benefit? He is a Government officer. We acted in our professional capacity; we were not Government officers.
3317. When you say “we” —? I mean to say I for one, and some other members.

3318. Was the claim put forward simply by the non-official members, or as a Board;—do you think all were willing to have gone shares? Quite so; so much so, that it was the Government officers who urged the non-officials to try and get it.
3319. And your opinion is, that the official members as well as the non-official would have gone shares in this fund? They were quite as anxious as the non-officials; it was merely a question of right; but I believe, if the fees had not amounted to the sum they did, there would not have been a question about them.
3320. By Captain Moriarty: If they had been a few pounds only they would have been paid as a matter of course? Yes.
3321. By Mr. Weekes: When it became a considerable amount it was worth looking after? At the time we asked the question I do not think it had reached any considerable amount.
3322. Do you remember the sum total? At that time?
3323. Not altogether? No.
3324. By the Chairman: Do you recollect what was the amount at the time you made application to the Treasurer? Some two or three hundred pounds. It went so far that on getting permission from the Treasurer, we put the matter in the hands of Messrs. Spain and Young, and according to the customary way of getting permission from the Government, they got Mr. Billyard's permission to sue the Government, and they commenced proceedings.
3325. By Captain Moriarty: They commenced to sue the Government? Yes.
3326. Would not the proper course have been to let the Government sue them? You must bear in mind that the money was in the hands of a Government officer; if it had been in the hands of a non-official we should have been in a different position.
3327. By Mr. Weekes: Who was Treasurer of this particular fund? Captain Browne.
3328. He held it on behalf of the other members? It was paid into the bank in his name.
3329. By Captain Moriarty: He suggested to the other members not to give it up? I dare say the non-official members suggested to him not to give it up.
3330. These fees were retained by you in consequence of your opinion that a certain clause in this Act gave you a right to them? They were never retained after — 3331. They were retained pro. tem.? Yes.
3332. That was, according to your idea, in consequence of its being a sort of quid pro quo;—in consequence of the increased duties imposed upon you as members of the Pilot Board, to examine masters of vessels trading to Newcastle, you had a right to the fees, to remunerate you for your increased trouble? Yes, I believe that was our view.
3333. You did examine all these masters, with the view of their obtaining a certificate, and decided upon their competency to conduct vessels into Newcastle? Yes.
3334. The Board was not all composed of sailors? No.
3335. Some of the Board—fully half of the members—were absolutely incompetent to ask any question, or to give a clear opinion of the real value of any man's services going into or out of Newcastle? Some of them were not nautical men.
3336. There were some who were absolutely incapable of giving a sound opinion on this subject, for which they claimed to receive a sum of money? There were.
3337. If the Board were entitled to it, would it not have been equally divisible among them? Yes.
3338. And therefore one portion of the Board would have received money when they could not, under any imaginable circumstances show the slightest pretext for being paid it—would it not have been so? They might have done so, but there are many persons sitting on Boards who are perfectly unqualified to sit there; you have a Chairman of the Pilot Board at present who is not a sailor.
3339. I want to ascertain, as a matter of fact, whether what I have stated is not beyond all question true? Quite true.
3340. As a matter of fact, were those men who called themselves the sailors of the Board—I do not pretend to question the ability of some of them, and especially your own, for I have a very high respect for your nautical skill, and in the same way I estimate the opinions of Captain Deloitte—but does it not require some knowledge of Newcastle Harbour to certify to the competency of a man to conduct a vessel in or out of that port? Yes.
3341. Was it not certain that the great majority of those people who came to ask for this certificate were men who had been trading in and out for years, and beyond all doubt were qualified? Yes.
3342. A great deal better than members of the Pilot Board? Yes.
3343. By Mr. Piddington: Do you know when the tender of the "Sea Witch" was first submitted to the Pilot Board;—perhaps if you look at the printed correspondence it will refresh your memory—Nos. 18 to 20—No. 18 contains the tender of the master of the "Sea Witch," addressed to the Government;—my question is, when was the tender of the "Sea Witch" first submitted to the Pilot Board? I believe the day after—the next meeting, whenever that was—the following meeting of the Pilot Board after she was tendered.
3344. It was referred to the Pilot Board, I presume, between the date of the tender, the 3rd of March, and the date of the minute of the Pilot Board, the 8th of March? Yes.
3345. Did the Pilot Board on the 8th March report that the "Sea Witch" was "not only over-valued, but scarcely fit for the service"? Yes, they did.
3346. How soon after the Pilot Board reported unfavourably of the "Sea Witch," was the vessel bought by the Government? Two or three days, I believe, afterwards.
3347. Less than a week after the 8th March? On the 15th, it appears—just a week.
3348. When the Government resolved to buy the "Sea Witch," did you consider that the professional opinion of the Pilot Board was treated with marked contempt? I did, most decidedly, for I took an immensity of pains myself in examining her.
3349. If the Pilot Board could not be trusted to give a professional opinion on the suitability

B. Darley,
Esq.

24 July, 1862.

B. Darley, Esq. ability of a pilot vessel, of what use, in your opinion, is the Pilot Board to the country?
None whatever.

24 July, 1862. 3350. Have you any doubt of the qualifications of those gentlemen who composed the Pilot Board when you were a member, to give a reliable opinion on the suitability of a vessel for the pilot service? None whatever.

3351. You have no lurking doubt as to your being yourself competent to give such an opinion? I consider myself second to very few men in New South Wales in such a matter; I have from my long experience had a great deal to do with such vessels.

3352. During your experience, have you ever noticed pilot vessels either in England or elsewhere? Yes, as commander of a ship for nineteen or twenty voyages to the West Indies, I saw a great deal of pilot vessels; and every voyage I had charge of a fore-and-aft schooner to load my vessel with; I had full charge of a vessel of sixty or seventy tons, which my own crew worked and sailed among the islands, gathering cargo; and I consider I am as good a judge as anybody in New South Wales of fore-and-aft vessels.

3353. With reference to pilot vessels in the United Kingdom, have they ever come under your observation? During that time I sailed from Liverpool and London, and I always met pilots from both ports.

3354. You have met pilot vessels at sea? Yes, I never knew the station without one.

3355. Do you consider that the "Sea Witch" in any way resembles in point of model the pilot vessels connected with the port of Liverpool? In no way whatever; she is not to be compared with them at all.

3356. From your knowledge of pilot vessels, would you consider that the "Sea Witch" presents a suitable model for a similar service outside the Heads of Port Jackson? No, she is perfectly unfit.

3357. You would have pronounced her unsuitable, from your long experience of similar vessels connected with the port of Liverpool? Yes, I did so from the very first.

3358. Is the Pilot Board composed of gentlemen who may be called honorary members—the Board are not paid by salary? They are paid by fees.

3359. Their payment is similar in principle to the payment of directors of a bank? Quite so.

3360. You do not view the sum of money paid to a member of a board, which is contingent on his attendance, as a salary? Certainly not.

3361. There is no resemblance whatever between the mode of payment to the members of the Pilot Board, and the system of payment adopted with regard to the paid officers of the Government—for instance, the Colonial Treasurer is not paid by fees, and all the officers in his department are paid by salaries, as well as in other departments of the Government? Yes.

3362. Will you look to the minute of the 21st March, No. 31;—did the Pilot Board, in the minute of the 21st March, decline to fit out the "Sea Witch" because they considered she would prove a failure? Yes.

3363. Are you aware whether that prediction has been verified by facts? So far as I can understand, it has been. I am told she is perfectly unfit, and will prove perfectly useless.

3364. Are you aware that the "Sea Witch" has been brought into port by the Government master of the vessel, in consequence of the threatening appearance of the weather outside? I only know by report.

3365. If she has been brought into port out of fear of threatening weather, do you consider she can possibly be a suitable vessel for the pilot service? I do not believe they could keep her out; I do not think she is a vessel that could remain out in bad weather.

3366. Then you think that, from the inherent defects of the "Sea Witch," she is altogether unfit to remain out in bad weather? Not from her defects. I do not think she is the model of a vessel to keep the sea.

3367. Referring to the minute of the 21st March, especially the latter portion, are you of opinion that the Pilot Board, or any portion of them, in that minute sent in a resignation of their seats to the Government? Certainly not; we never intended to do so. We merely told the Government that if they considered we were unfit to give an opinion of the fitness of a pilot boat, the sooner they dispensed with our services the better. That was our opinion.

3368. When you stated that if the Pilot Board were unfit to give an opinion as to the fitness of a pilot boat their services had better be dispensed with, you referred to the Board as a Government Board, not to individuals? We referred to ourselves.

3369. You did not refer to one or two members of the Board, as apart from the rest? We referred to those gentlemen who examined the "Sea Witch," and they were three nautical men who gave their opinion. The only other member present was the Chairman, who was not a nautical man.

3370. I will read to you the clause I am alluding to. The Board state that "they did anticipate that their opinion would have had some weight in a matter so much within their province, and they cannot help remarking that, if they are qualified to hold seats at the Pilot Board, they must certainly be competent to give an opinion on the fitness of a pilot boat; but if the Government think otherwise, it were better that the services of the Board should be dispensed with." Does that minute refer to the Board as a whole, or to any individual members of it? I think it refers to the nautical men; I believe it was only the nautical men who signed that minute.

3371. How many members does the Board consist of? Six; but Captain Deloitte did not attend at that time.

3372. Six including the Chairman? Yes.

3373. Are the whole of the members excepting the Chairman nautical men? They were at that time.

3374. The minute of 21st March, to which I allude, do I understand you to say that that contains an absolute resignation, or merely a declaration of opinion? Merely a declaration of opinion, as you will see by the following minute No. 33, of the 27th March. B. Darley,
Esq.
24 July, 1862.
3375. With regard to the minute of the 27th March, No. 33, is there not a similar declaration of opinion in one of the paragraphs? Yes.
3376. Then in neither of the minutes of the 21st March or the 27th March do you conceive that the Board absolutely resigned their seats? Neither.
3377. Did you yourself examine the "Sea Witch" when the question of her suitability was reported upon by you to the Government? I did.
3378. Did you examine her as thoroughly as time would permit? I brought a thoroughly competent man with me, took my own coat off, and went all through her, and examined her as though I had been going to buy her myself.
3379. What was the result of your examination? That she was perfectly unsuitable for the service, and quit overvalued—not worth half the money.
3380. By Mr. Weekes: Did you convey that opinion to the Government, that she was perfectly unfit, or did you say she was "scarcely fit"? I did give my opinion at the Board that she was perfectly unfit, and they altered it to "scarcely fit"—I believe the word was altered.
3381. Do nautical men all agree as to the proper model of a ship? No.
3382. Is there not the widest difference in their views respecting the most suitable model? Yes; the "Sea Witch," for example.
3383. Some nautical men holding her to be a very suitable vessel, and some the reverse? Very few hold her to be suitable, I think.
3384. Does not that hold good in regard to models of ships generally, that the widest difference of opinion exists as to the proper model, among scientific men, shipwrights, and sailors? There is not very much difference with respect to pilot vessels, for the model is very different from any other class of vessel.
3385. Do you know the model of the "Mary Taylor," the celebrated New York pilot boat? I have seen drawings of her, but not the model.
3386. Is there much similarity between the "Mary Taylor" and the "Sea Witch"? I do not know the "Mary Taylor" sufficiently.
3387. Are you aware of the draught of water of the "Mary Taylor"? No, but I am of English pilot boats.
3388. Have you ever seen the "Sea Witch" out of the water—have you ever seen her in dock? No.
3389. You are unable then to tell what keel she has? Well, I am unable to tell; but I do not consider a deep keel of any service to a seagoing vessel; it may be useful to yachts. I do not consider a flat-bottomed punt with a deep keel on it is fit to go to sea.
3390. Do you know what the draught of water of the "Sea Witch" is now? More than it ought to be.
3391. Can you state what it is? I believe she is drawing about eight feet.
3392. Do you know whether that is her proper trim or not? I was informed by her captain, that her proper trim, when loaded, was from seven feet to seven feet and a half.
3393. Do you know whether that is more draught of water than the "Mary Taylor," the American pilot boat? I do not. I do not know the "Mary Taylor"; but I can only tell you a Liverpool pilot boat will draw fourteen feet.
3394. By Captain Moriarty: The present ones? The present ones.
3395. That was not the case when you left England? Well, they drew a great deal of water; they were very long-keeled vessels, and they have got in America pilot boats built in Bermuda, which have very long keels.
3396. By Mr. Weekes: The "Atlantic" and "Pacific" were offered to the Government, one at £2,000, and the other at £1,200, and recommended by the Board to be purchased at those prices—was that the case? Yes, until we got more suitable vessels.
3397. Did you afterwards report that you considered these prices excessive? We said we thought we might get them both for £3,000.
3398. Did you report to the Government that you considered these prices excessive? We thought it was a little too much for them.
3399. After you had previously recommended them to be purchased at those prices? I think we did, but we were ordered to get two vessels. We did say—"After considering the whole of the most eligible tenders, the Board are of opinion that the prices asked are excessive."
3400. It is your opinion that they were excessive? Yes.
3401. What is your opinion of the two systems of pilot service—which do you think the best, the old one of the whaleboats, or the outside pilot service with suitable vessels? The outside pilot service with suitable vessels.
3402. Do you think a pilot vessel could hold her ground outside during some of the gales which your experience must tell you we have on this coast? Heavy gales are the exception here; I think it would be very seldom indeed that they could not stop outside.
3403. If pilots have said that any pilot boat would do best to run into port during some of the severe gales on this coast, are they competent judges? Yes, I should think so. Some of the gales—yes.
3404. Do you think a pilot vessel could maintain her position with the current setting to the southward, and against a strong wind, or in a calm? Not in a calm; in a strong wind, certainly.
3405. You do not hesitate to say that the outside pilot system, with suitable vessels, is preferable to the old one of whaleboats? I do, for the very reason that vessels of the present build

- B. Darley,
Esq.
24 July, 1862.
- build are so large that in between the Heads is a most improper place to board them. When they bring a large vessel in between the Heads there is so little room that they may lose the ship if they heave to for a pilot. Under the former system of whaleboats we never could get them to pull out; they would board in between the Heads, to the very great danger of the ships.
3406. Could they lower a boat and put a pilot on board outside in all weathers? In nearly all weathers; they can in England, and there is as much sea there—a much worse sea for a boat.
3407. When the Government requested the Pilot Board to take the necessary steps to fit out the "Sea Witch," you formally declined to carry out their instructions; is that the case? We did decline to fit out the "Sea Witch."
3408. You declined to carry out the instructions of the Government? We declined to fit out the "Sea Witch."
3409. Did the Government request you to fit out the "Sea Witch"? They did; but I do not know that the Board are the proper persons to fit out a vessel under any circumstances.
3410. Would it not fall naturally within the province of the Pilot Board to fit out pilot vessels? They were never allowed to superintend anything; the Harbour Master appeared to attend to all these matters.
3411. Did you consent to hold your positions under those circumstances? Though we often thought of resigning, we did not wish to do so until we had very good reason; we frequently wished to do so, and frequently had a conversation at the Board expressing a feeling that we ought to resign our seats.
3412. If a difference of opinion takes place between the Government and the Pilot Board, who should give way? I do not consider that this was a difference of opinion: it depends on the question.
3413. Was it not a difference of opinion as to the qualities of this boat? No; this boat was purchased in direct opposition to the opinions of the Board, after their opinions were asked, and then the Government desired them to fit her out, which we considered was not exactly fair. If the Government had purchased her in the first instance, and then sent her down to the Board to fit out, we would have looked at it in a very different light.
3414. Had the Board then done anything more than state to the Government that they thought her "not only overvalued, but scarcely fit for the service";—was not that the only communication then made to the Government respecting the "Sea Witch," prior to her being purchased? Well, we go on then—"They see no better course than to recommend that the vessels for the service should be ordered to be built in England, under the superintendence of one of Lloyd's surveyors, and in accordance with the drawings and specifications herein, which are admirably designed for the class of vessels required. If, however, the Honorable the Treasurer should think it desirable, tenders might be called for one vessel in the Colonies, and the other should be built as before stated." That was our opinion.
3415. Then all that you conveyed to the Government respecting the "Sea Witch," previous to her purchase, was that she was "not only overvalued, but scarcely fit for the service," and that vessels should be built in England? Yes.
3416. Will you turn to page 5, and look at minute No. 7;—is that the report of the Board to the Government as to the vessels which had then been offered to them, being the vessels named on page 4, viz., the "Pacific," "Kate Kearney," a vessel unnamed, and the "Vixen";—is not that the report of the Board on those vessels? Yes.
3417. Does it not say—"they do not consider any of the vessels offered in all respects eligible"? Yes.
3418. Is not one of those vessels the "Pacific"? Yes.
3419. Is there much difference in the phrase "not in all respects eligible," and that which was applied to the "Sea Witch,"—"scarcely fit"? Not much difference. We did not consider any of them suitable.
3420. Then, in point of fact, the Government selected a vessel only less suitable than others, all being unsuitable in the opinion of the Board? One was a good sea boat; the other we did not consider so.
3421. Which was the one you did not consider a good sea boat? The "Sea Witch."
3422. You considered the "Pacific" scarcely eligible? We considered her a good sea boat.
3423. You did not state so? No, that was an opinion of our own; we did not say so in either case.
3424. In the first report you state that none of the vessels, including the "Pacific," are "in all respects eligible;" and when the "Sea Witch" is offered, you say she is "scarcely fit for the service"? Yes.
3425. You did not communicate to the Government any more of your views respecting the "Sea Witch" than is contained in the minute of the 8th March, until the Government had purchased the vessel? No.
3426. By Mr. Wilson: Do you think the Government is competent to form an opinion on nautical matters? I should think not.
3427. Consequently, there could in reality have been no difference of opinion between the Government and their nautical advisers, as to the capabilities of these vessels? I should say not.
3428. By Captain Moriarty: But they may be heaven-born sailors, may they not? It is possible.
3429. If they are competent to decide upon the precise spot where a light-house is to be erected, they are equally competent to fit out a dung boat and send her to sea as a pilot boat? I suppose so.

FRIDAY, 25 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

CAPTAIN MORIARTY,
MR. PIDDINGTON,MR. SADLEIR,
MR. WEEKES,

MR. WILSON.

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Thomas Watson called in and examined:—

3430. By the Chairman: You are, I believe, a member of the Pilot Board? Yes.
3431. How long have you been a member of that Board? Upwards of two years.
3432. If you look at No. 20, in the printed papers, you will find a minute of the Pilot Board of the 8th March—were you present at that meeting on the 8th March? I was.
3433. And you approved of that minute? I approved of that minute, so far as— There was a dispute, in the first place, with Captain Darley, relative to the quality and the efficiency of the "Sea Witch," but after all, it appears that there were some documents and plans and specifications of a vessel produced, respecting a vessel to be built by parties in England, and of course I gave way to them on that point. They wished to have a model vessel built in England, otherwise I did not accede to their request.
3434. You did not object to the adoption of this minute, did you? No, I did not.
3435. Then, do I understand you to say, that although you consented to this minute, you did not think the "Sea Witch" scarcely fit for the service? I did think her fit for the service; I always had that opinion of her, and I have still.
3436. You were absent, I believe, when the Board declined to fit her out? I was; I was absent from the 13th to the 25th.
3437. You have been out in the "Sea Witch," I believe? I have.
3438. What sort of weather had you during the time you were out in her? What you may term a whole-sail breeze.
3439. Do you mean by that, that it was blowing hard? It was not blowing hard, but it had been blowing hard to the eastward, and there was a heavy sea on.
3440. Was your object in going out in her to try her, and to judge of her capabilities? Yes.
3441. How long were you out in her? I think three or four days.
3442. During the whole of that time, was the weather moderately fine? We had a stiff breeze—a whole-sail breeze—not a gale of wind.
3443. During the time you were out in her, did she miss stays? I believe she did once, or she might perhaps more, but that was principally owing to neglect; she was not properly equipped. In staying a fore-and-aft vessel they require a bowline to the foresail, and I had to use rather strong language to the officers, in consequence of not having her properly equipped; I believe the principal cause was that she had not a bowline to her foresail.
3444. If, as has been stated, she missed stays frequently, is that attributable to some want of management, or to want of bowlines, do you think? A bowline to the foresail was required, but I do not think she missed stays above once or twice with me.
3445. If it is stated that she missed stays more frequently than once or twice, is that incorrect? I was not present. If she missed stays when I was below I could not account for that.
3446. What sail was she carrying when she missed stays? All her canvas fore-and-aft—foresail, jib, and mainsail.
3447. Do you think a vessel, to be fit for a pilot vessel, ought to stay in such weather as you have described? There is some weather that no vessel will stay in.
3448. I am speaking of such weather as you have described? It was a very heavy sea. It is easy to account for her not staying then; she was pitching bowsprit under.
3449. Have you had any experience in pilot vessels? Yes, in a schooner of a similar class.
3450. In pilot vessels? Yes, for many years.
3451. In what part? The coast of New Holland.
3452. On what part of the coast of New Holland are outside pilot vessels employed? Port Jackson; we had a cutter here at one time.
3453. When was that? I think it must be somewhere about twenty years ago. The pilots had shares in her; she was an experimental vessel.
3454. Do you know anything of the character of pilot vessels employed either in St. George's or in the English Channel? Not at all; I know nothing about them.
3455. Do you think English pilot vessels, from what you have heard of them, or revenue cutters —
- Captain Moriarty objected to the question. The witness withdrew. Objection overruled. The witness was again called in.*
3456. From what you have heard of the character of English pilot vessels, and of their build, or of revenue cutters, would they stay in such weather as you have described? I think they would.
3457. Do you think it a necessary qualification for a pilot vessel that she should stay in all weathers? It is impossible to do so in such weather as we have on the coast occasionally.
3458. Did you agree in the recommendation of the Pilot Board that vessels should be built in England? I did that one should be built in England as a model for a boat here, and that she should be properly equipped, the same as pilot boats are in England; merely as a model boat.
3459. The Pilot Board have recently advertised for models for a pilot boat to be built in the Colony? I believe they did.

Captain
T. Watson.

25 July, 1862.

- Captain
T. Watson.
25 July, 1862.
3460. Did they select a model as suitable for the purpose? They have selected one now.
3461. Do you know who sent that model to the Pilot Board? There were several parties who sent them, Mr. Chowne, Mr. Cuthbert, and one or two other parties, whose names I forget.
3462. There was one selected? Yes.
3463. Whose model was that? Mr. Chowne's.
3464. Does that resemble the model of the "Sea Witch"? I do not think it does much; it is longer.
3465. During the time you were out in the "Sea Witch," did you consider that she acted as a pilot vessel ought to have done? She did everything I expected she would do as a pilot vessel.
3466. By Mr. Weekes: Have you had great experience on this coast? I have.
3467. Were you a pilot yourself for some years? I was a pilot, I think nearly twenty years.
3468. In this port? Yes.
3469. Were you bred to the sea? I was.
3470. Are you acquainted with the navigation of the English and Irish Channels? I am not very well acquainted with the British Channel, but I am pretty well versed in the coast of India, China, and New Holland.
3471. Is the sea on this coast at times of a heavier character than that of the seas at Home? I think there is no part of the world where the sea runs higher than it does here.
3472. Do you think that during a heavy gale of wind on this coast, say from the south-east, that it would be possible to lower a boat from any pilot vessel? I have seen the time when a boat would not live at all.
3473. It could not be lowered from any vessel? It could not be lowered from any vessel.
3474. Which system do you prefer—the old system of whaleboats, or that of outside pilot schooners? I prefer the whaleboats and competition; I always did.
3476. You mean that you would employ a pilot steamboat? I would have a pilot steam tug, which should be used only in bad weather. Formerly, under the competition system, I have boarded vessels at Botany, and Port Hacking.
3477. Then in this minute of the 8th March, you do not coincide with the Board in the opinion that the "Sea Witch" was scarcely fit for the service, but only in the opinion that she was overvalued? She was overvalued.
3478. Have you always considered her a suitable vessel? I always considered her so, and do up to the present moment; and at the last meeting of the Board I recommended that she should be put on the Slip, to be publicly examined. One said that she had a straight keel, another that she had a crooked keel, one that she was flat, another that she was sharp; my opinion is that she was the most suitable vessel in the Colony, and always has been.
3479. When you say "crooked," you mean that it was deeper in one part than in another? Deeper in the centre, which would act as a sort of centre-board. A vessel is supposed to stay quicker in smooth water when the keel is so formed, and this vessel stays remarkably quick, and wears round in little more than her own length, in smooth water.
3480. Would not a ship that was out of trim be more likely to miss stays than one in proper trim? Certainly, and that was a great deal the cause of this; for she had a tank full of water chock forward in the bows, and the water washing about in the tank was enough to stop her way in stays. I recommended that the tanks should be taken out of her; but I was the only one, I believe, who disapproved of the tanks being there.
3481. Has the trim been altered, to see whether her staying properties would be improved? I recommended that the tanks should be emptied; whether that alteration was made I cannot say.
3482. Her trim generally has not been touched since she went out? I am not aware that it has.
3483. Would not the altering her trim make a great difference in her qualities? A very great difference indeed.
3484. Do you consider her a good sea boat? I do, a very good sea boat; and I think her equal to any vessel we have here in Sydney for putting pilots on board. There is a great deal of tact necessary in putting a pilot on board a ship; you may put a pilot on board a ship in a gale of wind without getting his shoes wet, if the boat is properly handled and the ship is properly arranged.
3485. Have you examined her at all as to her build—can you say whether she is strong? I never saw her in dock or on the Slip, but I judge merely from what I saw on deck and inside.
3486. What is your opinion of her? My opinion is that she is a very suitable vessel; she is rather short for her beam, I thought, and not a bit too deep.
3487. Do you know her draught of water? Somewhere about eight feet, the captain told me.
3488. Is that a very light draught for a vessel of 60 odd tons? No.
3489. How were her weatherly qualities when you were on board—had you an opportunity of testing her? I thought very fair; she might have held a better wind. Every vessel we fell in with she appeared to beat and weather upon them.
3490. How near to the wind could she go? I should say about five points.
3491. Do you think it would be prudent for any pilot schooner to keep at sea in such gales of wind as you have sometimes experienced upon this coast? I do not think it is possible they could. There are times when it would be impossible, but they are of rare occurrence.
- 3492.

3492. By Captain Moriarty: How long have you been a member of the Pilot Board? I think about two years.
3493. By whom were you appointed? By the Government.
3494. Of course, but by what Minister—was it by either of these gentlemen? (The Chair- ^{Captain T. Watson.} man and Mr. Weekes.) I think it was by Mr. Weekes. ^{25 July, 1862.}
3495. You went out to take a short cruise in this pilot boat, the "Sea Witch"? I did.
3496. Immediately after she was fitted out? She had been to sea, I think, about a week.
3497. By whom was she fitted out? By the Harbour Master, I believe,—Mr. Crook.
3498. Had you any beating going out in her when you went to sea in her the first time? We beat up and down the harbour a little way to try her quality, and then sailed out before the wind.
3499. Did you notice the manner in which she was fitted out;—did you notice that she had no bowline to her foresail? Yes, and I spoke about it.
3500. You were in authority on board? No.
3501. Were you not a member of the Pilot Board? Yes, but the master of the ship had the control of her.
3502. Was not the master of the ship subject to your orders? He might be; I did not like to take entirely command out of his hands.
3503. If you saw that there was any decided defect in her, would it not be your duty to order that it should be rectified? They said they had not the material on board.
3504. Not a bit of rope sufficient to make a bowline? The captain told me he had not sufficient rope.
3505. Was she thoroughly fitted at that time? Yes.
3506. And yet they had not sufficient rope on board to make a bowline? There were coils of new rope on board, and no doubt he might have done it.
3507. Have you any doubt he could have done it? He said he had been accustomed to small vessels, and he had never used it.
3508. Have you any doubt that he could have made it in ten minutes? He could, or in half the time, and I did do it.
3509. He had all the materials there, and yet he would not fit a bowline? He said it was not necessary.
3510. He said? Yes; I told him to put a bowline on the foresail —
3511. Then, in point of fact, you did order a bowline to be put on the foresail? Yes.
3512. And it was done? It was not done by him, but temporarily by me.
3513. And that had the effect? Yes; and by taking the bonnet off the jib as well.
3514. Since she has been fitted out with this additional advantage has she stayed better than she did before? She never missed stays with me, I believe, not above once or twice—I would not be certain.
3515. Once for certain, and you think it possible she might have done so twice during the four days you were on board? I think so.
3516. It was moderate weather? Yes; she might have missed stays when I was below.
3517. Do you think if you had been below, unless you had been asleep, she would have missed stays without your knowing it? I do not recollect if she did.
3518. You say you were a party to this letter, No. 20? I was a party to it, so far as recommending that a boat should be built in England.
3519. You said that the "Sea Witch" was not only overvalued, but was scarcely fit for the service? I said she was overvalued; I did not say she was scarcely fit for the service.
3520. That is there;—if you were a member of the Board at the time those words were inserted, and did not object to the insertion of the words, you were a party to them? I might so far, but I was only one of the Board. My idea was that the "Sea Witch" was overvalued, not that she was unfit for the service.
3521. Did you refuse to identify yourself with these expressions, by making a protest? I did not take notice of them.
3522. Are you in the habit of signing documents without taking notice of them? I did not take notice in that instance.
3523. Do you think that a judicious mode of conducting the public service, in communicating with a Minister? Perhaps not.
3524. You said you had had no experience of the pilot service at Home? No, except from hearsay.
3525. Do you attach any importance to hearsay? Very little.
3526. Do you attach any importance to what you have heard about these vessels? I might have seen them in going up and down the Channel,—nothing farther than seeing the pilot come on board.
3527. I suppose you did not take much notice of them then? No.
3528. In what service were you? Her Majesty's.
3529. Are Her Majesty's ships in the habit of taking pilots on board in coming up the Channel? Yes.
3530. Are not the masters of Her Majesty's vessels examined as to their qualification to act as Channel pilots? They may be.
3531. Are they not prohibited from taking a pilot on board in the Channel? I have had a pilot board off the Isle of Wight; he came off in a Cowes vessel.
3532. In what vessel were you? The "Caesar."
3533. Did you go in through the Needles? I do not remember whether we went through the Needles or round the Wight.
3534. You did not think much of what you were doing at that time? Perhaps not; I was a youngster at that time.

- Captain T. Watson.
25 July, 1862.
3535. You were of opinion that the "Sea Witch" was overvalued? I did think at the time that she was overvalued.
3536. Who was Chairman of the Pilot Board at that time, Mr. Duncan? Mr. Duncan was Chairman.
3537. Mr. Browne was not a member of the Pilot Board then? No.
3538. Did you adopt any steps to make the Minister acquainted with your views about that pilot vessel, independently of what is inserted in this communication signed by Mr. Wilshire? I do not think I did.
3539. You had no conversation with him on the subject;—did you ever call upon the Minister at all, or make any private communication to him about this vessel? No; I think I spoke to the Minister on one occasion—I think it was at the Club. I said I thought she was a suitable vessel.
3540. It is said here that she is unsuitable? Yes.
3541. By the Chairman: Was that before or after she was purchased? After I had been outside in her.
3542. By Captain Moriarty: After you had been trying her? Yes.
3543. Did you ever tell the Minister, previous to her purchase, that you thought she was suited for a pilot vessel? I do not think I had an opportunity, because I went to Port Stephen.
3544. That is not the question—you might have gone to Port Stephen, and yet have done it? I might, or might not. I cannot say; but I think I did on one occasion.
3545. At all events you never called upon him at his office, to give him your opinion of the qualities of this vessel? I do not recollect that I ever did.
3546. Did you ever have any conversation with anyone else, in an official or a semi-official capacity, about her? When I came back from Port Stephen, I met Mr. Cowper, and he told me there was some dispute about her. I said—"Well, I do not think anyone can complain of the description of vessel, for I think her a very suitable vessel, what little I have seen of her." She was full of cocoanuts before I went to Port Stephen, and I went on board her with Mr. Wilshire, the Secretary to the Pilot Board, and thought her the most suitable vessel of all the vessels I had been on board previously.
3547. Still she does not meet your idea of a pilot boat? Yes, she does.
3548. Have you assented to plans for building a pilot boat? There is very little difference in her.
3549. I ask you whether you have assented to a plan for building a pilot boat? To a similar plan?
3550. Have you assented to any other plan—I do not care whether it is similar or dissimilar? To one by Mr. Chowne.
3551. You maintain that there is some similarity between Mr. Chowne's plan and that? Yes, there is; I think Mr. Chowne's model is longer, not exactly the same beam, but greater length.
3552. It has less beam, draws more water, is not so flat floored? Yes.
3553. Those are the differences between the two? Yes.
3554. Are not those most decided dissimilarities in the plan of the two vessels? It is very trifling I think.
3555. Can you say there is anything at all in the two plans which might be termed by naval architects a similarity of plan? They are pretty nearly of the same beam and length; it is rather an improvement than otherwise.
3556. By the Chairman: Mr. Chowne's model is rather an improvement? Yes.
3557. By Captain Moriarty: You have only seen Mr. Cowper with respect to the value of this vessel? I had merely a casual conversation with Mr. Cowper.
3558. Did that occur at the Club too? No.
3559. Have you seen any other gentlemen who have taken an interest in this matter? I cannot say; I have met no official gentlemen, with the exception of the Colonial Treasurer and Mr. Cowper.
3560. Have you with any nautical gentlemen in the port? There are many I have had conversations with.
3561. Any merchant in the port connected largely with the shipping interest? I do not recollect.
3562. Have you, in fact, with Captain Towns? With Captain Towns I have many times.
3563. What have been the conversations you have had with Captain Towns upon the subject? I think he concurs with me as to her sailing qualities, and her fitness for the service.
3564. Had he been out to try her? Never.
3565. How then could he give an opinion about her? Only from her model.
3566. Was there a coincidence of opinion between Captain Towns and you, or between you and Captain Towns? I believe he agreed with me, as far as that went.
3567. Not you with him? Not I with him; he asked me my opinion of her, from having been in her outside the Heads, and I told him my opinion. I never had but one opinion about her, which was that she was a suitable vessel.
3568. You were not one of the members of the Pilot Board who refused to obey the orders of the Colonial Treasurer? I was not.
3569. You were not present when those orders were received? I was not.
3570. If you had been present would you have obeyed them? I do not know whether I would or not; I do not know what they were, in fact.
3571. Have you ever read the correspondence? No further than I have to-day.
3572. Did you never see the minutes of the Pilot Board? No; I never read the minutes, of

of what took place during the time I was absent. The minutes of a meeting were always read at the following sitting, before going to business.

3573. Did you not feel it to be necessary to make yourself acquainted with what had happened during your absence? No, I did not.

3574. You think it possible you might have disobeyed the orders if you had received them? I do not know; I do not think I should.

3575. You think you would have obeyed the orders of the Colonial Treasurer? I do not know whether it was an order or not, but I should have acted according to my judgment or opinion —

3576. No matter for that, if you got an order from your superior officer, would you not obey him? We were not there to obey orders, but to recommend and suggest.

3577. Have you ever seen the instructions under which you have been acting? I have.

3578. What do you think of those instructions? I read them no longer ago than yesterday; I never saw them before.

3579. Do not they indicate the strict line of your duty? They do.

3580. Have you ever gone beyond your duty according to your instructions, they being the basis upon which you are to act? I do not think we have.

3581. You said that you preferred the pilot boats to the cutter system? I prefer competition with whaleboats.

3582. I think I heard you say that, under the competitive system, you were in the habit of boarding ships off Botany Bay, or so far off as Port Hacking? I have frequently been away for a week; I have brought a vessel into Port Jackson, anchored her, and gone out again without letting any one know; I have gone to Botany, got another ship, and come up again.

3583. In those days there were various duties for a pilot to perform; they had to take ships out as well as to bring them in? Yes.

3584. Then if all the pilots were competing to catch vessels off Botany and bring them into Port Jackson, there would be none left to take them out? You would very seldom get all the pilots out; it was only a matter of scheming with me to catch the ships.

3585. Then if the pilots were all schemers the result would be that all the pilots would be out of Port Jackson, and there might be half a dozen ships waiting to go to sea? As Botany is only a short distance from Sydney, I used to send one of the men from my boat to Sydney, to inquire when a ship would be ready for sea, and I have frequently gone from Botany to take a ship out.

3586. The results of that system were that you were scheming against each other? To see who could make the most money, and I could make from five to six or seven hundred a year.

3587. In your opinion, the amount should be paid to the pilots for the service they perform? I think it should, under the competition system.

3588. Under any circumstances, are they not entitled to be paid for the work performed? They are paid according to the work performed, according to the Act.

3589. They are paid by salary now? They are.

3590. By Mr. Piddington: Are the members of the Pilot Board salaried servants of the Government? No.

3591. They are paid by fees? They are paid by fees.

3592. In a similar manner to the directors of a bank? A guinea a sitting they are supposed to get.

3593. Was the Pilot Board required to give an opinion upon the suitability of the "Sea Witch" for the pilot service? I believe they were.

3594. Did not the Pilot Board, on the 8th March, report that the "Sea Witch" was overvalued, and scarcely fit for the service? I was always of the same opinion that I am now, that she was overvalued.

3595. I ask you did not the Pilot Board report that the "Sea Witch" was overvalued, and scarcely fit for the service? They reported that, I believe, she was overvalued.

3596. And scarcely fit for the service? I never thought so.

3597. Did the Government, within a week of the date of that report, buy the vessel thus spoken of by the Pilot Board? I do not know; I was away.

3598. Will you refer to the correspondence under No. 26, dated 15th March—I will repeat the question—Did the Government, within a week of the date of that report from the Pilot Board, buy that vessel? I was not —

3599. Assuming that that minute is correct, do you not think the Government treated the report of the Pilot Board, dated 8th March, with marked contempt? They did not in any way accept the recommendation of the Pilot Board.

3600. Do you think the Pilot Board at that time was composed of gentlemen competent to give an opinion upon the suitability of a vessel for the pilot service? Yes.

3601. Notwithstanding the competency of the Pilot Board to give such an opinion, their opinion was treated with contempt by the Government? They may think so if they think proper. I should think myself the Government ought to take the recommendation of the Pilot Board.

3602. Was it not a question of a professional character that was submitted to the Pilot Board for their consideration and advice? Yes.

3603. Do you think the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer is a gentleman whose opinion upon a question of a nautical character is one that should be followed in preference to the opinion of the Pilot Board? I should think not.

3604. Can you tell us of what use the Pilot Board is to the country, if their opinions upon a professional question are thus disregarded by the Government? It can be of no service at all if its advice is not taken.

3605. Have you been on board the "Sea Witch" since she was purchased by the Government? I have.

3606.

Captain
T. Watson.
25 July, 1862.

Captain
T. Watson.
25 July, 1862.

3606. Do you consider, from your knowledge of such matters, that she is built upon a model suitable for a pilot vessel? I do.
3607. Do you consider her to be suitable to stay out in all weathers? It is impossible for any vessel to stay out in some of the weather we have here.
3608. Do you believe that no vessel could be built on any model that might be expected to be outside this port in all weathers? There is not a pilot boat could stay outside when the wind comes dead on the coast and the sea is running high; I do not think it is possible that any craft of her size and dimensions could remain out.
3609. You are not acquainted with the nature of the seas on the shores of the United Kingdom? Not much; most of my time has been spent out in these seas.
3610. Is the model of the "Sea Witch" of a peculiar character known by any professional term among seamen? It is a schooner build, something after the California boats I have seen.
3611. You would not call her a flat-bottomed boat? I would not.
3612. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you think the Pilot Board, or any members of it, were guilty of disobedience of orders? I am not aware.
3613. You say you know nothing of the pilot vessels in the Channel? Very little.
3614. Do you know the class of vessels, generally speaking? Yes, they are cutters and schooners.
3615. Do you think you could decide upon their capability, generally speaking? Yes.
3616. Did you make any trial of this vessel before she was purchased? No.
3617. Was she tried before she was purchased? I am not aware whether she was or not; I do not think she was.
3618. You went to sea in her after she was purchased? After she was purchased we went out, upon the recommendation of the Board.
3619. Was there any vessel or were there any vessels in company with you? No, except what we fell in with by chance.
3620. Did those vessels beat you in sailing? No, we beat them.
3621. You said you had an experimental cutter, did she answer? No, she did not answer.
3622. Was that owing to her build? No, she was a first-rate craft; she was built like a Gravesend boat.
3623. What was the reason she did not answer? The sea was too heavy; she did very well in fine weather.
3624. Do you think this plan of having pilot boats will answer at all? I was never an advocate for sailing boats. When I was before a Committee of the Assembly, twelve months ago, I recommended a steamer; I never advocated sailing vessels.
3625. Do you know the "Pacific" and "Atlantic"? I do.
3626. Do you think these vessels are better sea boats than the "Sea Witch"? No.
3627. Do you know that they have kept the sea in heavy gales? Yes, I dare say they have, and so would the "Sea Witch."
3628. You say she is very short? She is rather short for her beam.
3629. Do you think a short vessel in a heavy sea will stay? In a very heavy sea a short vessel will stay as well as a long one.
3630. Do you think she could cover three seas and not dip into them? She puts her nose into it, but that is owing to the tanks; if the ballast had been placed in the centre of the vessel she would have had a double advantage, and the opportunity of working better.
3631. If you turn to No. 22, you will see that Captain Towns says, that "with a very trifling expense" she "may be sent to sea in a few hours";—do you think it was possible that she could have been sent to sea at a trifling expense, and in a few hours? I think she might have been sent to sea at much less expense. If Captain Towns had had her in his own hands I think she would not have cost so much.
3632. Are you aware that in fitting her out a great many alterations were made? There were, for the accommodation of the pilots, a great deal more than was necessary.
3633. You say she did not stay in consequence of not having a bowline to her foresail? Fore-and-aft vessels require a bowline.
3634. Has she not a square topsail? No she is entirely fore-and-aft. One man and a boy may handle her in moderate weather.
3635. By the Chairman: You say you are of opinion she was overvalued;—how much do you think she was overvalued? If I had wanted her for my own service—if I had had to purchase her on my own account, for any particular service—I would not have given more than £1,000 for her.
3636. You have also stated that you advised she should be put on the slip, in order that she might be seen by every one, to judge of her keel whether it was straight or crooked? Yes.
3637. Are you aware that she has been in dock? Yes.
3638. If Mr. Cuthbert has stated that she has a straight keel, would not you take that as conclusive evidence? No; I have heard from a person, equally competent to give an opinion, that her keel is crooked.
3639. Has the person whom you refer to as equally competent seen her? Yes; it is the person who put her in dock, Mr. Crook.
3640. You say a great deal of tact is required in managing a vessel in order to make her stay? Yes.
3641. Is not the "Sea Witch" skilfully handled? She may be now, but she was not when I first went out in her; she requires to swing round in the hollow of the sea, to watch the opportunity of staying her. Many fore-and-aft vessels I have been in have refused stays without they have been very carefully handled in bad weather.
3642. If a number of nautical men of great experience, as well as ship-builders, have said

- said that this is not a suitable model for a pilot vessel, do you think you have given a correct opinion? I do, for I think I am as good a judge of a ship as any man in the Colony.
3643. You say the model was selected that was sent in by Mr. Chowne? Yes.
3644. If Mr. Chowne has given it as his opinion that the "Sea Witch" is not a suitable model for a pilot vessel, do you think he has given an incorrect opinion? He never had a trial of her.
3645. If it has been stated that a vessel can be built to keep to sea in very rough weather on this coast, and if it has been stated that vessels have kept the sea in very rough weather when the wind has been on the land, do you think that statement is incorrect? I think it is incorrect.
3646. You say that if Captain Towns had had the fitting out of this vessel it might have been done for much less cost? I do not say Captain Towns in particular, but any private person.
3647. Had you nothing to do with the fitting out of this vessel, as a member of the Pilot Board? Nothing.
3648. You were not present at the meeting of the Board on the 21st March? No.
3649. I wish you to look at No. 31 of the correspondence—"The Board would beg to refer to their minute of the 8th instant, in which they informed the Minister, that they had carefully examined the 'Sea Witch,' and that they were unanimous in opinion that she was not only overvalued but scarcely fit for service"—now on the 8th March you were present at the meeting of the Board, and they, in their report of the 21st, state that "they were unanimous in opinion that she was not only overvalued but scarcely fit for the service,"—have the Board stated correctly that they were unanimous? They must have stated incorrectly, so far as to her being unfit for the service, for I was always of opinion that she was fit for the service.
3650. Do you not think, if you did not put your opinion upon record they had a right to consider that the Board were unanimous? Mr. Wilshire will tell you that I was always in favour —
3651. I ask you, if you did not put your opinion on record, whether the Board had not a right to consider that they were unanimous? It ought to be so.
3652. I will read another paragraph from this minute:—"They did anticipate that their opinion would have had some weight in a matter so much within their province, and they cannot help remarking, that if they are qualified to hold seats at the Pilot Board, they must certainly be competent to give an opinion on the fitness of a pilot boat, but if the Government think otherwise, it were better that the services of the Board should be dispensed with." As a member of the Pilot Board, does that embody your opinions? It does, for if the opinion of the Pilot Board is not to be taken in such cases they have no business there.
3653. By Mr. Weekes: You did not see the minute of the 8th March—at the time it was drawn up you were absent? I went away to Port Stephen.
3654. Therefore, the minute of the Board in which you are made to say she was not fit for the service was never submitted to you? I particularly told Mr. Wilshire,—“Mind, I approve of a vessel being built in England, but I do not approve of saying the 'Sea Witch' is unfit for the service, for I am of opinion that she is, but she is overvalued.”
3655. You have always been of that opinion? I have, since the first day I saw her, that she was the most suitable vessel in the Colony.
3656. Do not nautical men and shipwrights differ very much about the best model for a ship? Many of them do.
3657. There is no model, I suppose, in which all agree as perfect? No; in general, shipwrights are very jealous of each other, as far as that goes; they have all their own models.
3658. Do you consider the prices asked for the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" to be in excess of their value? I do; I thought so at the time, and I said so, but I had not an opportunity of overhauling them, for they had their cargoes in when Captain Darley and I went on board.
3659. When the Board made a survey of these vessels, they were chock full of coal? Yes.
3660. By Captain Moriarty: You stated that Mr. Cuthbert ought to be a good judge of work? Yes, he ought.
3661. You give a very qualified assent to the fact? No doubt he ought to be as good a judge, as a surveyor, as any in the port of Sydney.
3662. He ought to be, in your opinion,—is he? I think he is.
3663. You stated that the vessel had been seen in dock by others than by Mr. Cuthbert? Yes.
3664. And the statement they made did not agree with Mr. Cuthbert's? No.
3665. And you do not believe his statement? No.
3666. Did you see her in the dock? No.
3667. Then, in point of fact, you do not know whether the statement made by Mr. Cuthbert or by Mr. Crook was correct? No.
3668. Do you think Mr. Crook is a better judge than Mr. Cuthbert? I do not say, but he ought to know whether it has a straight keel or a crooked one; he says it is crooked, and Mr. Cuthbert says it is straight.
3669. To which opinion do you attach the most importance? I have a doubt of both of them; I would wish to have the vessel on the slip, to settle the question.
3670. Then, in point of fact, you do not believe Mr. Crook any farther than you do Mr. Cuthbert? No.
3671. Do you ever believe anything you do not see? Yes, from hearsay.
3672. By Mr. Wilson: If Mr. Cuthbert has given an opinion upon the keel of the "Sea Witch" in opposition to other competent judges, would you rely upon the opinion of Mr. Cuthbert

Captain
T. Watson.

25 July, 1862.

- Captain
T. Watson.
25 July, 1862.
- Cuthbert on other points? I do not think I would. If a man gives me an opinion contrary to fact on one point I would not depend upon him in another case.
3673. By the Chairman: In the minute of the Pilot Board of the 20th February, it is said, "The Board beg to state that Captains Smith, Darley, and Watson, were deputed to inspect the vessels, and that although no report was made in writing, the Board are satisfied, from the verbal report of those gentlemen, that the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" are the most suitable vessels in port, and worth the price asked"—is that true? That is true, from what I could see; they had their cargoes in, and I could not inspect them to see whether they were copper or iron fastened.
3674. "Mr. Cuthbert informed a member of the Board that it would cost £3,000 to build one vessel here. If they are to be built, the Board would recommend that they should be built in England. Should this become necessary, they beg to report that the vessels named could afterwards be sold at a price little less than the cost." Were you an assenting party to that minute? Yes, I was.

Captain Robert Towns called in and examined:—

- Captain
R. Towns.
25 July, 1862.
3675. By the Chairman: You are now a member of the Pilot Board? I am.
3676. You recommended the Government to purchase the "Sea Witch"? I did.
3677. You have had, I believe, great experience in nautical matters? I ought to have; I certainly ought to know something about them; if there is anything I know, it ought to be that.
3678. Have you had any experience in vessels, particularly of the class required for pilot vessels? You mean vessels suited for the pilot service?—not particularly, save and except as my own nautical practical knowledge leads me to judge from appearance of what ought to be suited for the purpose; I never built one, and never sailed one.
3679. The "Sea Witch" was purchased on your recommendation? She was; I most strongly recommended her.
3680. Was any survey, are you aware, called for on the "Sea Witch" before her purchase, except that made by Mr. Cuthbert? I surveyed her myself, and I had other friends with me; I searched for all the information I could get from the parties who knew anything of the vessel—those who had made voyages in her, and others who knew her history—the man who had coppered her in Tahiti; in fact, not a stone did I leave unturned by which I could gain information that I did not apply to, and I ultimately came to the conclusion that Providence had put her in our way a gift.
3681. After she was purchased some surveys were made, were they not, by Captain Livingstone, Captain Vine Hall, Mr. Owen, and Captain Bowles? These were for my own satisfaction, and to justify me, because reports were beginning to leak out that she was not exactly the craft required; at all events, there was a feeling abroad against her, and I wanted to fortify myself in my own opinion.
3682. Were not Messrs. Russell and Chowne asked to join with these gentlemen in the survey? With Captain Hall, but not the others.
3683. Will you tell the Committee how it was that neither Mr. Russell nor Mr. Chowne reported? They never gave me any information about it, but I learned from Captain Hall, who signed the survey, that there was some little technicality that they would not subscribe to in the report. There was some little difference of opinion as to her suitability, on the part of Mr. Russell; but in regard to the vessel's stability, her present state—that is, as to seaworthiness, and soundness of her build in every way—I believe they were perfectly satisfied. I recollect, during the time they were surveying her, Mr. Russell intimated to me that the very kind of vessel we wanted was such an one as he built twenty years ago, called the "City of Sydney"; I thought very differently from Mr. Russell, but we did not come to an argument.
3684. Mr. Cuthbert made a survey, I believe, under instructions from the Colonial Treasurer? From Government.
3685. Did he receive any instructions at all from you? Not from me, that I recollect.* I afterwards joined a party to survey the vessel while she was in the Dry Dock; but when we got to Cockatoo, we found she was not entirely dry, and I did not attend the next day when she was dry, which I much regret now. During our passage in the boat we had considerable conversation upon the subject, and Mr. Cuthbert, to my astonishment, prevaricated to an extraordinary degree. He said he wished to have nothing better to do than to build a number of such vessels at £1,500 each. "Come," said I, "if you will undertake to build such a vessel, I will undertake to get Government to give you £1,500 or even £2,000 for it; or else I will take it myself." However, Mr. Cuthbert jibbed upon that and would not do it at any price.
3686. I would refer you to letter No. 22, signed by yourself; you there call the attention of the Government to this vessel, and recommend her purchase as "the perfect model of what we require, and with a very trifling expense, may be sent to sea in a few hours every way fit for the service"? Yes.
3687. Do you still consider her a perfect model of what we require? Most decidedly; I believe her model cannot be improved upon.
3688. Was she sent to sea in a few hours fit for the service? No.
- 3689.

* NOTE (on revision):—I since remember Mr. Cuthbert surveyed the "Sea Witch," at my personal request, before he was called on by the Government. The report, I think, I gave the Treasurer.

3689. How do you account for that? To some extent I believe it was because the men's period of service at Watson's Bay had not expired, and the work was not therefore pushed forward. I think the accommodations were to be completed on the 12th May, but we could not discharge the men until the 1st June. That, as far as I was concerned, prevented me from pushing the work more rapidly forward.

Captain
R. Towns.
25 July, 1862.

3690. How long was it after the vessel was purchased before she went on the station? A considerable time, but there was no expense incurred except for the boatmen belonging to the establishment.

3691. She was not sent to sea in a few hours? No, but she might have been if it had come to that. We wished to make security doubly sure, by rendering these gentlemen, the pilots—who no doubt felt it difficult to break through the old barrier, to leave off the old system and adopt the new one—so comfortable that they could not complain.

3692. You say she might be sent to sea at a trifling expense? She might.

3693. Are you aware what she has cost the Government since she was purchased? No, I am not, but I believe she has cost a great deal unnecessarily.

3694. What do you consider a trifling expense? I should say, looking to her fittings, which were undertaken to be completed for £100, some new sails, and other things, something under £300.

3696. The Pilot Board, of which you are now a member, I believe, recently advertised for a model pilot vessel to be built in the Colony? Yes, and have recommended the tender of a particular builder to be accepted.

3697. Is the model so selected one similar to the "Sea Witch"? No, we had nothing so perfect in my estimation, but we selected the one we considered the best, though she was nothing like the "Sea Witch."

3698. Then you consider the "Sea Witch" as a perfect model for a pilot boat? She is as near perfection to my eye as possible, and I think I am borne out in my judgment by this, that her lines, as far as I am able to judge, resemble those of the celebrated clipper yacht "Mary Taylor." I am not aware whether the Colonial Treasurer has received the minute passed at the Pilot Board yesterday, but as the most effective way to prevent all this backing and filling, we passed a resolution that she should be put upon Captain Darley's patent slip for the examination of anybody or everybody, and to let her speak for herself.

3699. Do you think it an essential qualification of a pilot boat that she shall be able to stay well in a seaway? Yes; but sometimes the sea is so high that no vessel can attempt to stay with safety.

3700. If it has been stated in evidence that the "Sea Witch" will not stay in moderately boisterous weather, would you consider that a disqualification? I believe there is a conspiracy against the "Sea Witch," but I state without hesitation that the day will arrive when the "Sea Witch" will be the pet craft of the Colony. But do these gentlemen that tried her say she would not stay?—When they went out there was a nasty sea on, and the fellows had not so much stuff on board as would rig a forebowline, they had neither thimbles nor bulls-eye blocks, but they could have taken it round the foreshroud, and when the bonnet was off, could they not have taken it round the shank of the anchor? It is evident that there has been every attempt to oppose the system. If I had been on board I would not have had a marline spike on board, or anything else that I would not have shifted, but what I would have altered her trim. No trouble should have been spared to alter her trim, and there should not have been so much as a marline spike on board that I would not have moved to have altered her trim. I would have put her bowsprit out of her cabin windows but I would have made her stay. But, no, I do not think a single thing has been done, or attempted to be done, to improve her trim, and the object parties are aiming at has been answered, that is, as they think, to prove, which I am sure they will not, that she is not fit for the purpose.†

3701. Do you think a vessel could be so constructed as to hold her position off this coast in boisterous weather? I do not think a vessel could be constructed more calculated for the object now aimed at than the "Sea Witch." That vessel, I have it from the report of the mate, was one of three out of about two hundred sail that went out of a bay on the coast of America, when all the rest went ashore.

3702. That is hardly a reply to my question. I want to know whether a vessel can be so constructed for the pilot service that it could hold its position off this coast in boisterous weather? Most certainly, and in my opinion no vessel could be better calculated than the "Sea Witch" herself.

3703. The Liverpool pilot boats remain out in very boisterous weather? All pilot boats do; they are useless unless they do.

3704. Then I infer from your reply that the "Sea Witch" ought to remain out? Certainly, she ought never to have come in; it is a disgrace to those who brought her in.

3705.

* ADDED (on revision) :—The vessel was fit for a pilot boat the day she was bought.

† Revised :—If I had been on board that craft when she returned to port with her mainboom sprung I should feel ashamed and disgraced as a sailor. When I went on board I found everything sixes and sevens,—all wrong and nothing right,—everything at fault; the craft would not stay, they had no forebowline, nor anything to make them, neither rope, bulls-eyes, nor thimbles. I pointed out how easy to take a turn round the shroud forerigging, and if the bonnet off the jib, the shank of the anchor would answer the purpose; but, no, nothing had been done—neither to alter the trim. If I had been there, to the weight of a marline spike, I would have endeavoured to find her out. I would have stepped the bowsprit out of the cabin windows, but I would have made her stay before this. I speak metaphorically, of course.

Captain
R. Towns.
25 July, 1862.

3705. Will you be kind enough to state to the Committee what you consider to be your duty as a member of the Pilot Board;—what do you conceive to be the duty of the Board, in fact? If I may use the term, to legislate on all matters brought before us; to examine masters as to their competency for their duties and exemption; to examine pilots. I think, however, there ought to be a more precise definition of the duties of the members of the Board. We were looking up our instructions so lately as yesterday, and they are not so clearly defined as they ought to be. I was a member of the Pilot Board when it was first established, and you were a member yourself, Captain Moriarty, at that time, and I think our instructions were simply in a letter from the Colonial Secretary, signed by Mr. Deas Thompson. We have no others.

3706. In accepting the appointment of a member of the Pilot Board, did you conceive it to be part of your duty to advise with the Government in all matters relating to the management of harbours, the appointment of pilots, and in fact upon all nautical matters connected with the ports with which the Government might have to deal? That appeared to be the system upon which they had previously acted, and I did not take upon myself to suggest any fresh mode of proceeding.

3707. Do you not consider it a very proper duty to cast upon a number of men possessing the peculiar qualification a Pilot Board ought to possess? No doubt, but then it is a great pity that the duties of the Board are not more specific—in fact they ought to be defined by law.

3708. That is not the question we are dealing with just now;—I have no objection you should give your opinion on that subject, but I ask you whether it is within your knowledge that the Government had sought the advice of the Pilot Board in matters relating to the purchase of a vessel and the management of pilots? They had sought our advice as to the calling for estimates for the building of another boat.

3709. Would you consider it fraught with danger or injury to the public service if your advice was not taken in nautical matters? It depends upon circumstances; certainly it is of no use for the Government to ask our advice if they do not intend to act upon it.

3710. I will come direct to the point—do you think it a correct course for the Government to take after having sought the advice of the Pilot Board to have taken your advice in opposition to theirs? If they had reason to believe mine was the best; and as I told these same gentlemen—I went to them individually, first to Captain Darley, and then to Captain Fox, and then to Captain Smith—I told them, “Providence has provided us with the identical thing, and unless you do accept that vessel I will raise a mutiny in the camp—if you do not fit her out I will.” I went to them individually and told them precisely in those words. At the same time I said to them, “You talk to me about what you know, I have forgotten more of the subject upon which you are now treating than ever you had an opportunity of learning.”

3711. May I ask you if you ever recommended any member of the Pilot Board not to oppose the purchase of the vessel in direct terms? Certainly I did, for she was the very thing I wanted, and I said if they did oppose it I should certainly press it on the Government.

3712. When you made that recommendation had you any doubt upon your mind that they would oppose it? I never dreamt that they would oppose it, but they had a crotchet in their head that nothing would suit but a boat built in England.

3713. It has been stated that the vessel is overvalued—is that your opinion? No, with regard to the value of a vessel, it depends upon what you want her for. The money given for the “Sea Witch” is more than I should have given for her for myself, for this reason, that she is so perfectly calculated for the purpose for which apparently she is a failure, but which I will prove she is not a failure. There is a wide difference between what I should call her intrinsic value to me, and her value for the service for which she was required. Her price, I think, was high, but I may say it was a neck and neck matter that we got her for the money, and after events proved it. When we went a little trial trip to sea, the captain of the “Magnolia,” who was with me on board, and who had sold his vessel a short time before, told me he would give me the money the Government had given for her if he could get her.

3714. By Mr. Weekes: Do you consider that the price which the members of the Pilot Board recommended the Government to give for the “Atlantic” and “Pacific,” namely, £2,000 for the “Atlantic,” and £1,200 for the “Pacific,” were over their value? Most decidedly, and I told them so; I twitted them. In comparison with a thing that was suitable, here were two vessels no more calculated for the purposes of pilot boats than I am for a bishop. I told them what my estimate of the two vessels was; I said £1,200 for one, and £800 for the other, and if I mistake not, I told you the same afterwards—that was the outside value. I told Broomfield, the owner of the “Pacific,” the same thing. The old craft is on her first copper.

3715. It has been stated by some of the then members of the late Board, that they intended these vessels, the “Atlantic” and “Pacific,” merely as makeshifts, until more suitable vessels could have been obtained;—if they shortly after had obtained more suitable vessels, or had had them built, what loss do you think would have ensued to the Government if these two vessels had been sold in the market? They would not have obtained more than half the money; moreover, the expense of re-rigging and of altering these dirty old colliers would have been tantamount to half the value of these vessels in the first instance.

3716. If the same alterations had been made in these two vessels, the “Atlantic” and “Pacific,” as have been in the “Sea Witch,” would not the expense have been the same? It must have been double, for all their spars would have had to be altered; their mainmasts might have been allowed to stand, or made a foremast, but they would have required one new mast. Their sails and rig would have been entirely altered.

3717. Then you think to have fitted the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" for the pilot service, as the "Sea Witch" is fitted, would have cost considerably more than the "Sea Witch" has done? Certainly.
3718. When you stated in your letter that is printed here, that the "Sea Witch" might be got ready to go to sea at a few hours' notice, did you mean as far as her sea-going qualities were concerned? Certainly, and equipped at that time.
3719. Had you any reference to fitting her for the reception of pilots? No; though that might have been done in a quarter of the time if the service had been urgent, but finding that the men who were engaged would not receive their pay till the end of May, we did not push the party who had taken the job.
3720. By Captain Moriarty: The new system could not have come into operation until the 1st June? That was the reason. I believe a good deal more time was spent than was necessary.
3721. By Mr. Weekes: Do you consider the "Sea Witch" a strong built vessel of her class? Very.
3722. You have referred to the celebrated pilot schooner "Mary Taylor"? I have.
3723. Do you hold in your hand a sketch of the model of that vessel? I do. (The witness produced a book containing a sketch.)
3724. Is that anything like the model of the "Sea Witch"? I think, as far as I am able to judge, it is as near as possible.
3725. Would you call that vessel a shallow vessel? She is.
3726. Will you look at the table of dimensions in the first part of that book and state what her length is? Sixty-one feet length at load water line, breadth at load water line eighteen feet one inch.
3727. What is her draught of water? Mean draught of water to line of the keel five feet three.
3728. By Mr. Wilson: Is that her sailing trim? Yes, that is the mean draught of water to the rabbit of the keel.
3729. That does not give what the vessel actually draws? No.
3730. By Mr. Weekes: Then the keel has to be added, to give her real draught of water? Yes.
3731. Will you turn to the sketch of her model? Yes.
3732. Can you tell by the scale there the depth of her keel? As nearly as possible two feet and a half.
3733. That would make her mean draught of water about seven feet and a half? About seven feet and a half.
3734. By the Chairman: What does she draw aft? It does not say farther.
3735. She draws more aft than forward? Very likely a foot more, that would be eight feet and a half. I should say the draught aft would be greater than the mean draught from nine to twelve inches.
3736. By Mr. Wilson: It has been stated here by a nautical person, the captain of the "White Star," that American pilot boats generally draw thirteen feet aft and eight forward: is that likely to be applicable to the "Mary Taylor"? No; this is the plan, you may rely upon it. This is a skeleton frame of the "Mary Taylor," a working scale for a mechanic, and for such a purpose a work would not be published that is not correct.
3737. By Mr. Weekes: Then, in point of fact, the "Mary Taylor," as set forth in that plan, does not draw more water than the "Sea Witch"—about eight feet—as given in evidence? Certainly not more, and I question if she does as much.
3738. And she is very similar in her model? As far as I have seen I think she is a fac simile, with the exception that the "Mary Taylor" has more keel. However, I hope it will meet with your approval to let us put her on the slip, and then he who runs may read.
3739. You have always taken a great interest in the pilot service? I have. When I had the honor, until you gentlemen kicked me out, of being a member of the other House—for which I owe you a turn—I had a Committee on the Pilot Board —
3740. When you speak of "kicking" you out, what do you mean? Kicking me out of the Legislative Council.
3741. And for which you say you owe the Government a turn? And I will give them a turn some day.
3742. You published your views as to which system was most preferable, I think? Yes, I brought up a report.
3743. You always recommended the system of outside pilot schooners? Yes; I look upon it as the greatest boon ever given to this port, if properly carried out.
3744. Does not the trim of a vessel affect her staying qualities very materially? Most decidedly, it is everything, everything. I will put the fastest vessel afloat in such a trim she will neither sail, steer, nor stay; and such, I believe, is the position the unfortunate "Sea Witch" is placed in; and they have done nothing to remedy it.
3745. Nothing has been done to alter her trim since she went to sea? Not that I am aware of.
3746. Do you consider her a safe sea boat? Perfectly so. She has come round Cape Horn to the westward; she has gone a voyage to the Arctic Ocean, and I have seen a number of persons who have made voyages in her from California to the Islands, and from island to island in the Pacific. I obtained every information I could respecting her. There was a Captain Sustenance who gave me a great deal of information about her, and who strongly recommended her as the very vessel for the purpose; and the man who coppered her in Tahiti, Mr. Owen, and had made two voyages in her, spoke of her as an admirable sea boat.
3747. One of the late members of the Pilot Board, who has been examined here, stated that

Captain
R. Towns.
25 July, 1862.

he had had considerable experience in fore-and-aft schooners which he had commanded in the West Indies —? I guess that is my friend Darley. Yes, he has been on a balahoo. The schooners my friend Darley speaks of are sugar droghers. If you want to pass a joke, or take a rise out of a man, upon a ship, you say, "She is a mere balahoo." That is the kind my friend has been in the habit of commanding. He served his time in the Demarara trade; and I believe when he was second mate he had charge of one of these balahoos. These balahoos are fore-and-aft schooners drawing about fifteen inches of water, that go up and down the rivers to droghe sugar for loading vessels in the harbour, and are no more to be compared with this vessel, "Sea Witch," than Tom of Lincoln is with the winner of the Derby. 3748. Do you think his having had the command of such vessels fits him to judge of the quality of a pilot boat? No more than the fellow would be who had ridden Tom of Lincoln to ride the winner of the Derby.

3749. By the Chairman: Did you ever command a fore-and-aft schooner? I once commanded a drogher, but she was a cutter.

3750. By Mr. Weekes: Supposing it to be the case, as has been alleged by several witnesses, that the "Sea Witch" is liable to miss stays, do you think anything could be done to improve that? Certainly; I will stake my nautical reputation that I will render that vessel such that she shall be the pride of the Colony.

3751. By Captain Moriarty: You stated that a trifling expense would fit this vessel for sea? Such was my impression.

3752. You fancied about £300 would be sufficient? That was what I thought at the time.

3753. You thought £300 a trifling addition to £1,400 to be given to a vessel of that description? Yes.

3754. I understand that she was a pet yacht of yours—you used the phrase that she was your pet yacht? I never saw the vessel till I was invited to view her.

3755. Is that the case, that you did describe her as your pet yacht? Never.*

3756. You never did describe her as your pet yacht? Perhaps I may since she has been bought.

3757. But before? I never saw the vessel before she was bought; I never saw her till I was invited by the Harbour Master† to go on board and look at her; Mr. Crook took me off in his boat.

3758. You never did call her your pet yacht? I may have done since.

3759. Supposing I were to say I had seen a statement in your handwriting to that effect, would you then believe you had said it? It must have been spoken in a jocular way.

3760. It was not spoken in at all a jocular way? I tell you I never saw the vessel; I never heard her name till I was invited by Mr. Crook‡ to go on board; I might have seen her, but I had never gone on board. Whatever you may have seen —

3761. I am merely fishing for information? Whatever information you may require I shall be happy to enlighten you on any subject I can.

3762. I do not think you have yet given a decided answer to my question;—did you ever so describe her? Very likely I have, but never before she was bought.

3763. I do not mean to connect anything with it, I merely want the statement of the fact? All serene!

3764. You have stated that, in your opinion, the Government ought to defer to the opinion of the Pilot Board? I think they ought.

3765. Suppose the Pilot Board, as at present constituted, had any nautical matter referred to them, would the Government be bound to defer to their opinion? They ought, if they were satisfied that the information of the Board was correct.

3766. Whether they were or not—that opens the door to an extensive investigation as to the merits of A, B, and C;—here are men appointed who are assumed to be competent to form a judgment upon nautical matters—do you imagine that when these gentlemen are referred to for information upon a particular subject, that the Government should be guided by that, or that they should take the opinion of some person unconnected with the Government? There is a qualification there; in a general way they ought to defer to the opinion of the Board, but if they find out that the information they get is not such as they can place reliance upon the responsibility hangs upon them.

3767. How are Government to ascertain the fact that they are not to be relied upon, as a Pilot Board;—do you not think Government should take their advice rather than that of a private individual? If they did not I would cut them; if they would not take my advice I would have nothing to do with them.

3768. You would not let A, B, C, D, or any other name through the alphabet, have a private communication with the Colonial Treasurer, to induce him to set at naught your recommendation, and act upon the information conveyed to him in this circuitous manner —? It was not in a circuitous manner—what are you aiming at?

* ADDED (on revision) :—Before she was bought.

† Revised :—Treasurer.

‡ Revised :—The Government.

3770. You would not like the same course to be pursued towards you? I would not stop with them; I would never condescend to give them the trouble.

3771. You would not like the same line of conduct to be pursued towards yourself? I tell you I would kick the Government to fury.

3772. By Mr. Piddington: Is Mr. Russell a person of experience as a shipbuilder? He is, but one of those cautious men whose opinion I should hardly like to rely upon. He is a man who was recommended to me twenty years ago, but his day is gone by.

3773. If Mr. Russell has expressed an opinion against the "Sea Witch" as a suitable pilot vessel, do you think his opinion can be relied upon? No, as far as my judgment goes.

3774. Are you acquainted with the port of Liverpool? Yes, I have been there, but it is many years ago.

3775. You have seen the pilot boats of Liverpool? Yes, but many years ago.

3776. Are the Liverpool pilot boats similar in their model to the "Sea Witch"? Not at all, but the American are.

3777. Did I understand you to say that the Pilot Board selected a model nothing like the "Sea Witch"? Nothing like the "Sea Witch."

3778. Do you think they have done right in adopting a model entirely unlike her? We had adopted the model most suited for the purpose from those offered, but they may be both suited.

3779. The model now adopted is nothing like the model of the "Sea Witch"? No.

3780. Then the model of the "Sea Witch" and the model of the future pilot vessel are dissimilar in character but equally suitable for pilot vessels? Quite so; they may be equally good of their kind.

3781. Do not the Liverpool pilot boats keep out at sea in all weathers? Certainly, and so ought ours, and must.

3782. Is there anything connected with the winds or seas on this coast that should prevent our pilot boats keeping at sea? Not the least.

3783. If the Government were to buy a vessel for the pilot service in direct opposition to the opinion of the present Pilot Board, would you consider that the opinion of the Pilot Board was treated with contempt? I would leave them directly—cut them immediately.

3784. Of what service to the country is the Pilot Board, if their opinion is disregarded by the Government? Precious little; they are not responsible.

3785. Are not the members of the Pilot Board appointed with reference to their professional knowledge? Yes, I presume so.

3786. Do you think the Colonial Treasurer is a better judge of what vessel is suited for the pilot service than the Pilot Board? Not near so good.

3787. Is not the "Sea Witch" built of American timber? Yes.

3788. Are American vessels as durable and as strong as those built in Great Britain? It depends upon the material used; if they are built of live oak or pitch pine the American timber is equal to any timber in the world.

3789. Would a vessel built in America rank as long at Lloyds as an English-built ship? Not generally.

3790. Would there not be a considerable difference in their character at Lloyds? Lloyds is an arbitrary class of men who have clubbed together under certain rules, and unless vessels are built according to their specifications and rules, and under the inspection of their surveyor, they never allow them to rank so high.

3791. Do you doubt the qualification of Lloyds to decide upon the character of a vessel? No.

3792. If it be the practice at Lloyds to classify an American ship in a lower class than an English ship, do you doubt the authority of Lloyds? I say I do not doubt their authority, but there is a strong prejudice existing. They are a body of men clubbed together for a special purpose, their rules are arbitrary, and the Americans do not abide by their rules, and for the least deviation from them they will knock a couple of years off her classification, though she may be equally strong with another vessel.

3793. Is not the body known as Lloyds a combination of gentlemen united for the purpose of insuring ships? Yes, but it is arbitrary in its dictum.

3794. If self-interest is the condition upon which they combine, is anything but that motive likely to influence them in the classification of a ship? They lay down certain rules, and beyond those rules they will not go. "It may be admitted that a ship that has not conformed to them is quite as good as one that has, or it may be better, but such are our rules, and beyond them we cannot go."

3795. Would you, as a man of considerable experience in shipping, give the same price for a ship built on the St. Lawrence as for a ship built on the Clyde? That depends a good deal upon the class. There is some very great rubbish built on the Clyde, and there are some very fine vessels built in North America—on St. John's, for instance.

3796. As a general rule, are you of opinion that St. Lawrence built vessels are equal in durability to English built ships? Certainly not.

3797. Do you think the "Sea Witch" is built of materials equal in character to those specified in the specification of Messrs. Harvey and Sons, as printed in No. 58? No, I do not think she quite comes up to that; neither do I think it absolutely necessary that she should. That is a very excellent specification.

3798. Is the "Sea Witch" built of live oak? She is, I believe.

3799. By Mr. Wilson: Who called for tenders for building the pilot vessel in this port? The Colonial Treasurer.

3800. On whose advice did he act? The advice of the Pilot Board.

3801. Why did not the Pilot Board advise him to call for tenders for a pilot boat upon the model

Captain
R. Towns.

- Captain

- model of the "Sea Witch"? We particularly guarded ourselves against laying down any rule for the builder, who, as a practical man, would design his own model; I would never attempt it if I wanted a vessel for a particular purpose; we stated the purpose for which the vessel was required and invited tenders, leaving the parties to adopt their own course.
3802. Could not the builders build a vessel upon lines given to them as well as upon their own lines? Yes.
3803. Then the "Sea Witch" being a perfect model, it would have been easy to build an exact imitation of the "Sea Witch"? We did not like the responsibility, because if it had failed, after so much had been said against the "Sea Witch," we should have been charged with acting foolishly in adopting that model.
3804. If the Pilot Board were satisfied that the "Sea Witch" was the most perfect model —? That is my opinion only; the Board did not wish to take the responsibility.
3805. When you were invited by Mr. Crook* to inspect the "Sea Witch," was that before you recommended the Government to purchase her? †Before I knew anything of it; I never knew the name of the vessel; I never saw her until Mr. Crook called on me one morning and said he wanted me to go and see the "Sea Witch." I had been pressing the Colonial Treasurer to carry out the report of my Committee, which was closed before we departed in peace next door. The last thing before we got our kick out, this report was laid upon the Table, and I had been spurring and pushing the Government to carry it out, for I had had my Panama route shelved, and I was afraid that if my friends were kicked out I should also lose the result of my Pilot Committee. I corresponded with the Government even from Moreton Bay, pressing upon them the subject, and calling to their notice the facts contained in the evidence appended to the report. Have you seen that report?
3806. I have; I looked at it some time ago.—Perhaps you will be kind enough to tell us the difference there has been in the nautical experience of yourself and Captain Darley? Impossible! I have commanded a ship ever since 1817; and I suppose I was never an hour out of employment; at one time I owned in this port 47 sail; I have built ships; I have repaired them without number; I suppose there is not a practical point connected with ships that I am not conversant with.
3807. Has not Captain Darley —? He has had a great deal of experience of ships,—that I do not deny,—but as I told my friend facetiously, and I might have told him in earnest, "I have forgotten more upon this subject than he has ever learned"; for I believe I have devoted my attention for the last ten years —
3808. By Captain Moriarty: Ten years? Yes, ten years to this subject of the pilot service.
3809. By Mr. Wilson: In giving evidence about the "Pacific" and "Atlantic," you described them as "old craft" and "dirty old colliers";—are you aware of their age? I believe one is between eight and nine years of age.
3810. Which do you allude to? I really do not know the distinction between their names. I know the oldest has her original copper on.
3811. Messrs. Broomfield and Whittaker have stated to the Government that the "Pacific" was built in 1856;—do you know anything to the contrary of that? Nothing to the contrary.
3812. You would not call that an old vessel for a Colonial-built vessel? No; but mind she was built in New Zealand.
3813. The "Atlantic" has been stated to us to have been built about 1860;—you would not call her an old vessel? No.
3814. What did you mean by calling her an old craft? Metaphorically.
3815. Did you mean by calling these two vessels old craft that they were rotten? No.
3816. Do you know the age of the "Sea Witch"? I believe she is about six years old.
3817. We have been told in evidence that she is eight years old;—would you not consider that an American vessel eight years old was older, comparatively speaking, than a New Zealand vessel of six years old? I do not think she is. I would form my own opinion from the vessel itself. That vessel has done no work; a great deal depends upon that.
3818. Are you aware what she has done or what she has not done? I know she went round Cape Horn, and made a voyage to the Arctic Ocean, but she was laid up a long time in California, and that is no work to speak of. My judgment is of course open to other persons to test.
3819. I wish to know from you whether a North American built vessel of eight years old would, as compared with a New Zealand vessel of six years, be a new vessel? I do not draw a comparison; a good deal depends upon the class. Our Colonial vessels are better than the New Zealand vessels; the material is better—more durable.
3820. When you were out in the "Sea Witch" did it blow strongly? Yes, we had a whole-sail breeze.
3821. Had you any opportunity of testing her staying properties under short canvas? No, under full sail. I think one cause of her missing stays is from the vessel being under slack sail. It is evident she does miss stays, no doubt much to the satisfaction of the parties concerned. I had a pair of stays sent to me.
3822. All the six pilots have been examined before the Committee, and they give it as their opinion that she is handled in a seaman-like manner;—do you think it is owing to her being wrongly handled that she does not stay? Yes, I do, to a certain extent; but I may mention to you, though it is not necessary unless the question is put to me, that yesterday a gentleman said to me, "Captain Towns, do you want to make the 'Sea Witch' stay?" I said, "I care very little about it; I know she will stay." He replied, "Let the Government

* Revised:—The Government.

† NOTE (on revision):—If my memory serves me, I had the first intimation from the Government, and then invited Mr. Crook to call for me; I never heard of the vessel before.

"hand her over to the pilots, give them distance money, and let them go upon their own lay, and if they go down as far as Jervis Bay she will overhaul every vessel before she comes into the Sydney Harbour, and if you hear of her missing stays then I will eat her. The fact is, it is because the system is unpopular among these men, and no power on earth will make the vessel fit for the purpose till they get her into their hands."

Captain
R. Towns.

25 July, 1862.

3823. There can be no force in that statement unless it comes from some very good authority—any old woman might say so? Quite so; but it is quite in accordance with my belief that these men are doing everything in their power to upset the system.

3824. I may state that some of the pilots, at the same time that they have given evidence in favour of the new system, have stated that the "Sea Witch" was utterly unfit, and that they would be afraid to remain on a lee shore in her, in consequence of her inability to stay—to these pilots your remarks do not apply? I beg your pardon, it all has a bearing upon the subject. I will convince these gentlemen, before I have done, that she will not only stay, but keep off a lee shore.

3825. Under whose superintendence was the "Sea Witch" fitted out? Crook had a good deal to do with it, but Captain Hall and myself were appointed by the Pilot Board to superintend the fitting out, but unfortunately I have too much to do, and I left it too much to others—I plead guilty.

3826. By Mr. Sadleir: Was any trial made of the sailing qualities of the "Sea Witch" before she was bought? No; I made every inquiry from parties totally disinterested; for instance, from Captain Bowles, a man well known in Sydney. Bowles had made a voyage in her, and knew more about her than any other man I have come across, except the man who coppered her. I thought the man who coppered her might have a leaning towards her, and I wished to have evidence from other quarters, and he gave me clearly to understand that she was the very thing for us. So that I did not go hastily into the matter; I knew the responsibility, and when I had got the right vessel, I told my friends that I would raise a mutiny in the camp if they did not have her and fit her out.

3827. You say the captain of the "Magnolia" wanted to buy her? Yes.

3828. For what purpose? He had sold his own ship, and he wanted to take down stores to the island.

3829. But because she might be suited for that particular purpose it does not follow that she was suited for a pilot boat? No, but it tested her value for a special purpose.

3830. Do you not think that for a special purpose a purchaser might be disposed to give a higher price for a vessel than he would under other circumstances? Those were the very circumstances under which we recommended her to the Government.

3831. You have spoken of the "Mary Taylor"—there are no lines of the "Sea Witch"? She is there to prove when she is put in the dock.

3832. Did you see her in the dock? I have seen her; I do not buy a pig in a poke.

3833. By the Chairman: You have referred to Captain Bowles as having given an opinion on this vessel? Yes, and I have his evidence in print.

3834. Are you acquainted with the owner of the "Tawera"? Yes.

3835. Mr. Brandon? Yes.

3836. Are you aware whether Mr. Brandon had any interest in the "Sea Witch"? Never; nor do I believe it, unless you know to the contrary.

3837. Will you be kind enough to look at the sketch of the "Mary Taylor,"—is her keel straight? Very nearly; you may call that keel straight—for she takes a rise at the fore foot, a long way aft, but from the quarter she runs quite straight.

3838. Does the "Sea Witch's" keel curve from stem to stern in the centre of the vessel? I did not see it; she was not dry upon the blocks when I saw her; but from the model shown to me yesterday by Mr. Crook, I should say she is lowest in midships.

3839. Mr. Cuthbert states that the keel is straight? Either Mr. Crook or Mr. Cuthbert has stated what is not true, and one or other of them deserves a lesson at the hands of the Government; and with the permission of the Government, I would even put that vessel on the dock at my own expense, to settle the question; it is too bad that the statements of two officers of Government should clash, and shows a malicious intent one way or another. Mr. Crook declares that if Mr. Cuthbert says the keel runs straight, his motive is bad.

3840. By Mr. Wilson: We have heard a good deal before this Committee about the "Mary Taylor" which has been very irrelevant; perhaps you will tell me what you know of her of your own knowledge? What I have heard is quite at your service; she is reputed to be one of the fastest vessels, and one of the best models that can be built.

3841. Do you know Captain Ross of the "Colonial Empire"? I do not.

3842. Do you know Captain Taylor of the "City of Aberdeen"? No.

3843. Captain Kerr of the "White Star"? Slightly.

3844. These gentlemen all command large vessels? They do.

3845. These gentlemen have been examined before this Committee, and are favourable to the outside pilot service, and they state that pilots were put on board their vessels from the "Sea Witch," and that they consider her to be quite unsuited for the service;—do you think their evidence is correct? I do not.

3846. They have given evidence that the vessel will not stay, and one of them stated that instead of the pilot vessel sailing round him, as she ought to have been able to do, he had with his large ship to work round her to get out of her way;—do you think that a disqualification? That was bad management on the part of the pilot boat.

3847. By Mr. Weekes: I suppose bad seamanship will ruin the qualities of any vessel? Yes.

3848. By the Chairman: Do you think in moderately rough weather the keel of a pilot vessel ought to be seen out of water? Certainly not.

3849.

Captain
R. Towns.
25 July, 1862.

3849. It has been stated by the captain of one of these vessels that he has seen the keel of the "Sea Witch" frequently out of water? I should be sceptical of belief. If it were the fact there was something wrong, and the keel was out of its element.

3850. By Mr. Weekes: The captain of the vessel the Chairman has alluded to did not lead us to understand that the "Sea Witch" was making jumps out of the water so as to show all her keel, but that there being a heavy sea on she showed part of her keel;—is it unusual in a heavy sea for a vessel to show part of her keel at the bows? She might show a considerable part of her fore foot.

3851. By the Chairman: If a sailor described a vessel as showing her keel out of water, what would you infer from that? That it was where it ought not to be—out of its element.

3852. By Mr. Weekes: It ought to be in the water, and not in the air? That it was out of its element.

3853. Do you think the Pilot Board should be superior to or above the Government? Certainly not, not on its present standing—we have no responsibility.

3854. Do you think the Government are bound to carry out the recommendations of the Pilot Board, whether they approve them or not? Certainly not.

3855. Suppose the Pilot Board recommended that these vessels should be built in England, would the Government be justified in refusing to carry out that recommendation? I should think that, while we were here boasting of our splendid timber for every purpose, including naval architecture, and sending Home specimens of our woods to the Exhibition, it would be a disgrace to us if we could not build a small craft like that for Colonial purposes.

3856. Do you not think the proper function of the Pilot Board is to assist the Government with its advice, without insisting that its advice should in all cases be carried out? Certainly.

3857. As the head of any other department might advise the Government upon various matters which they would be qualified to do from their experience, and which the Government would have the liberty of considering whether they would adopt? Who are to be the responsible parties?—If you give us rules by which we can act as a sort of Trinity Board we shall be responsible to the country, but if the Government have to find all the means it would be absurd to take the dictum of the Board. I repeat, that if my advice were not taken in a matter where I considered I was in the right, I would leave the Board.

3858. With reference to Captain Pearce's offer, did he offer to buy the "Sea Witch" at the price the Government paid for her? He did; he said "I will give you the money to-morrow."

3859. By the Chairman: Where was he then? It was on the trial trip—the alterations had not been gone into then.

3860. Do you not think if the Government appoint persons peculiarly fitted to perform certain duties—as in the case of the members of the Pilot Board—that serious injury may occur to the public service if they listen to persons out of doors, in opposition to the opinion of properly appointed advisers upon matters peculiarly within their province;—I wish you to cast aside your own position in this matter, and to give your opinion simply as a member of the Pilot Board? That depends upon circumstances—certain things might be recommended by the Pilot Board that the Government could not entertain; but, as I told you before, if, after a matter had been deliberately considered and recommended by the Pilot Board, the Government did not adopt my recommendation, I would leave the Board. I do not see that any great mischief could occur to the country from the Board, as it is totally irresponsible, for we cannot spend a shilling, cannot vote a farthing; if we were responsible, and acted upon our own responsibility, it would be a different thing, we should then insist upon our measures being carried out.

3861. You have told us the course you would take—that you would resign;—I ask you whether it might not affect the public interests if the advice of private persons were taken in preference to the opinions of those who were specially appointed for the purpose? Such cases might occur, but it might happen that the opinion of the private person was the better of the two.

3862. Then the Government ought to dismiss the officers? The officers ought to dismiss them.

3863. Do you not consider that if the Government believed them to be incompetent they ought to dismiss them? Yes, and that was what they did.

3864. By Mr. Weekes: Might there not be a difference of opinion without incompetency? No doubt.

3865. By Mr. Wilson: Ought not the Government to get the best men they could to advise them? Yes.

3866. By Mr. Weekes: If the Government decline to follow out the views of their officers, or of Boards, are not those parties thereby absolved from their responsibility? Certainly; in fact, we have no responsibility. The Board is a farce, as at present constituted.

H. Lane,
Esq.

1 Aug., 1862.

Sir,

In reply to your's of 5th April, wherein you state that some of the Members of the Pilot Board have reported as their opinion, that the schooner "Sea Witch" is unfit for the service for which she has been purchased by the Government (viz., an outside pilot boat), for these reasons:—

- 1st. That she is slightly built;
- 2nd. Chiefly iron-fastened;
- 3rd. Has not sufficient hold of the water to be sea-worthy; and asking our opinion on these matters.

- 1st. I beg to state that it is my opinion that the "Sea Witch" is not slightly built, but has a good frame of timber, and is well and faithfully built in every respect.
- 2nd. I believe her to be iron-fastened only where the generality of vessels are iron-fastened, and copper or Muntz metal fastenings under water.
- 3rd. When sufficiently ballasted will have quite enough hold of the water to keep to windward, and retain her position if placed on a station outside; those who have sailed in her and vessels like her, declare that she will go to windward in any wind or sea as long as her canvas will stand—and I think so too.

R. Towns, Esq.

JNO. R. MYHILL.
CHAS. HARROLD.
ALEX. BELL.

Sydney, 23 April, 1862.

Dear Sir,

In reply to your inquiry, viz.,—If I know any particulars regarding the schooner "Sea Witch," I can only state that I have known her for the last three years in the Sandwich Islands and elsewhere, during which time she bore the character of being one of the fastest vessels in the Pacific, and second to none for durability and sea-worthiness. I may also state, that for eighteen months I commanded the sister vessel to her (the "Matilda"), and can vouch pretty well for either of their performances on being well handled.

Mr. Crook.

I am, &c.,
GEORGE S. REYTE.

Sydney, 3 April, 1862.

Dear Sir,

At your request I went on board the schooner "Sea Witch," to give my opinion of her. I have examined her very minutely, and I can candidly say that she is perfectly sound and strong, and faithfully built, and well suited for the Pilot Service.

Captain Crook.

I remain, &c.,
A. ENRIGHT,
Master of the ship "Highflyer," of London.

I hereby certify that I have, at the request of Captain Crook, inspected the schooner "Sea Witch," and find her timbers, keelson, beamends, knees, and inside planking, in all places to which I had access, to be sound good workmanship, and in all respects a good vessel of the kind. I may further state, that I consider her well adapted for a pilot vessel for this port.

Captain

Captain John Crook called in and examined:—

3888. By the Chairman: You are Harbour Master, I believe? I am.
3889. You know the schooner "Sea Witch"? Yes.
3890. When did you first become acquainted with the "Sea Witch"? With reference to her coming to the port, do you mean?
3891. With reference to her coming to the port? The day she first arrived I saw the vessel come in—I think some time in March.
3892. Do you recollect under what circumstances she was first offered to the Government for sale as a pilot boat? That I could not tell.
3893. Did you first fix upon her as a suitable vessel for a pilot vessel? I saw the vessel in the harbour and she was spoken of—Captain Towns came to me about seeing the vessel and he asked me to look at her, and I went to look at the vessel and saw she was a smart little vessel. I saw Captain Sustenance who came up a passenger in the vessel, and I spoke to him in reference to her. He told me she was a beautiful little vessel; in fact he said, "You are going to have pilot cutters for this port, and there is the vessel to suit you at once."
3894. Then Captain Towns first called upon you? Yes, Captain Towns first called upon me when the Government were going to have her; he asked if I would go to look at her.
3895. You did not go first to Captain Towns? No.
3896. You are quite certain of that? I am quite certain of it.
3897. Did you have the vessel put into dock? Yes, I had a letter from the Colonial Treasurer to get the vessel put into dock and to examine her with Mr. Cuthbert.
3898. You had a letter from the Colonial Treasurer? Yes.
3899. Have you got that letter with you? No; to get her fitted out for the Government as a pilot boat.
3900. Are you sure you had a letter from the Colonial Treasurer telling you —? Yes, on the 22nd March, I think. (The witness referred to a memorandum.) On the 21st March I received a letter to fit her out.
3901. I am now talking of the vessel going into dock? Yes, I received an order from the Treasurer to put her into dock, and for Mr. Cuthbert to examine her bottom.
3902. Will you be kind enough to look at the correspondence No. 26;—you will see there, "The Board will direct the Harbour Master to ascertain the earliest period at which she [the 'Sea Witch'] can be docked at Fitz Roy Dock"? That was done.
3903. What was the next step taken? When the bottom was examined it was found that there were two sheets of copper on the keel that had been old sheets when they were put on, and they were removed and new ones put on at the expense of the captain.
3904. Did you not receive instructions from the Pilot Board, instead of from the Colonial Treasurer? No, I received no instructions from the Pilot Board.
3905. From this correspondence, there does not appear to be any letter to you from the Treasurer instructing you to put the cutter in the dock? I have the letter in my office.
3906. Are you sure it is not from the Secretary to the Pilot Board? No; I had one afterwards from the Secretary to the Pilot Board—that I could make no alteration in the vessel without a letter of instructions from them.
3907. Do you not think you are mistaken? No.
3908. You put the vessel into dock? Yes.
3909. And you were ordered to do so from the Treasury? From the Treasurer.
3910. Did you, after the vessel was put into dock, call upon any member of the Pilot Board to see the vessel in dock? No.
3911. Whom did you invite to see the vessel in dock? Mr. Cuthbert was the person appointed—he was the Surveyor for the Government; I took with me two of the harbour pilots; but on the day we went up she was not dry; there was some mistake about pumping out the dock.
3912. Mr. Cuthbert was the only person you called upon? He was the only person I had to call upon; he was the Surveyor for the Government.
3913. Was not Captain Towns? Yes, Captain Towns, he was called upon—he went too.
3914. How came he there? That I do not know.
3915. Did you ask him to go? He said he was going.
3916. You did not ask him to go there? I did not ask him.
3917. Had you any conversation with Captain Towns at all upon the subject of the vessel previous to her being in the dock? No.
3918. After she was docked and during the time she was in dock, had you any conversation with Captain Towns upon the subject? We had a conversation with reference to a vessel being built here, in going up with Mr. Cuthbert.
3919. I am now talking of the "Sea Witch"? Captain Towns went with Mr. Cuthbert and myself to the dock to see the vessel, but she was not dry, and we went the next day, but Captain Towns did not go with us, only Mr. Cuthbert and the carpenter of the dock.
3920. In what state was she found to be when she went into dock? Her bottom was excellent, all but these two sheets of copper on the keel, and I wrote to the Treasury showing that if there were any deficiency in the vessel's bottom the work was to be done by the captain.
3921. Look at No. 29—that is your report, I presume? Yes, that is my report to the Colonial Treasurer.
3922. How came you to report to the Treasurer and not to the Pilot Board? I had nothing to do with the Pilot Board.
3923. But the Pilot Board were instructed by the Colonial Treasurer, according to this correspondence, to communicate with you? Yes.
3924. It is stated here that they did so communicate with you, through their Chairman? I had

Captain
John Crook.

1 Aug., 1862.

- Captain John Crook. had a letter from them afterwards with reference to that; I did not require a letter from the Pilot Board for me to do it—it all came through the Treasurer to me.
- 1 Aug., 1862. 3925. Are you aware that the late Pilot Board objected to this vessel, as an unsuitable vessel for the pilot service? I was aware that they objected to it, but for what reason I did not know.
3926. After you became acquainted with their objection to her, were you in communication with Captain Towns upon the subject? I never spoke to Captain Towns at all upon the matter unless I was instructed to do so.
3927. If Captain Towns has stated to the Committee that you first went to him on the subject, has he stated correctly? I never went to him on the subject at all; Captain Towns sent to me to know if I would go on board—I have his note to me in my office—if I would go on board to see the "Sea Witch," and that he would come for me before breakfast, and he did so.
3928. Was that before or after she was purchased? I could not say whether she was purchased at the time or not.
3929. If Captain Towns has stated that you in the first instance called his attention to this vessel as suitable for the service, has he made a mistake? He has made a mistake. He sent me a note to say he would go round and see the vessel, if I would accompany him, in the morning. I have his note in the office.
3930. Do you now consider the "Sea Witch" a suitable vessel for the pilot service? I do.
3931. Have you ever expressed a contrary opinion? Never.
3932. If a number of nautical persons have said she is not suited for the service, do you think they are wrong? Perhaps some of these men may not be very good judges. They may have been in large vessels, but may never have had anything to do with small craft, and there is a great deal of difference between the two.
3933. Have you had much experience in vessels connected with the pilot service in the Mother Country? I have been on board them; in fact I was once cast away and picked up by one of them.
3934. How long ago was that? That was in 1829, I think.
3935. Thirty-three years ago? Yes.
3936. Do you know the description of pilot vessels now employed in the English and St. George's Channels; is the "Sea Witch" of that class? The "Sea Witch's" bottom is similar; they might draw a little more water aft, but apparently the "Sea Witch" is built on the description of some of the yachts. She has a deep keel in midships, to make her go round quickly either in wearing or staying.
3937. How do you know her keel is deep in midships? Because I examined her in dock.
3938. Mr. Cuthbert has stated that she had not a deep keel, but a straight keel? I will show that she had. She was wedged up either four or five inches aft, and Mr. Cuthbert took the depth of the midship part of the keel, and put it down in his book. I think it was either 2 feet 6 or 3 feet 6 in midships. She draws at present, I think, nearly 9 feet in midships, with only 8 feet forward.*
3939. You are quite satisfied she has a deep keel in midships? I am quite satisfied.
3940. Did you see the chocks as they were laid for her before she was laid in dock? No; but I saw them wedge her up when she was there.
3941. Would not a vessel that was docked, the chocks having been laid for a vessel with a straight keel, if she were deep in midships, be apt to capsize or strain herself? No, because they shore the vessel up as the water falls.
3942. Would she not be resting upon the centre of her keel? She would be upon the centre of her keel, but she is chocked up with shores from each side of the dock before she is dry.
3943. Would not the whole weight be on the keel and not on the shores? No; because she is chocked up well, and as the water goes away they put these wedges under the fore and after part of the keel.
3944. You have no doubt that the keel is deep amidships—that it is not a straight keel? I have not a doubt. I went the other day to see Mr. Milson's yacht in dock, and she has a similar keel.
3945. Has it been reported to you that the vessel will not stay in a seaway? It has been reported, but I did not believe it at the time.
3946. Do you believe it now? I believe at times any vessel will miss stays; it is according how you handle the vessel; if it is a fore-and-aft vessel, and she does not sail round, and you keep her ramping full, in these seas when the sea is very heavy, she may miss stays in the trough of the sea and not be able to come round.
3947. If she will not stay in a moderate sea, do you consider her a suitable vessel for a pilot vessel? No, if she will not stay, decidedly not.
3948. Is it your opinion that a pilot vessel should be able to stay in a seaway? She may stay, or at times you may have to wear her, according to the locality you are in.
3949. Is it your opinion that a vessel used as a pilot vessel should be able to stay in a seaway? Yes, every vessel will stay, but it is a different mode of making her stay.
3950. Of course I am presuming the vessel is skilfully handled. Do you know the draft of water of the "Sea Witch?" Eight feet aft and six feet forward when she went to sea this last time, and she is near nine feet in midships by this difference of keel.
3951. Under whose superintendence was she fitted out? She was first fitted out, her lower deck was laid, and everything was done by me, and then afterwards I got a letter from the Pilot Board stating that they had the management of it, and that I was to do it under their instructions, and I then did nothing without a memorandum from them of what I was to do.
- 3952.

Captain John Crook.
1 Aug., 1862.

3952. She was partly fitted out under your superintendence, and partly under the superintendence of the Pilot Board? It was all altered after the present Pilot Board took charge. They altered the placing of the ballast and everything, and took the lower deck up.
3953. Were the men belonging to the boat service employed in fitting her out? Oh yes.
3954. How many of them? It is impossible to tell, for the men on that service would sometimes be not more than half an hour or an hour at the work, and then they have been taken away.
3955. Was no account kept of their labour? There was an account kept when they were away in the boats, but not when they were on shore; perhaps they would not be above five minutes there, and if they were not at work they would be sitting down and doing nothing.
3956. Have you any idea of the amount of labour employed upon her by the men belonging to the boat-shed? I suppose if you had had to hire six* men they would have done it in three† days, all but the carpenters' work—the seamanship work—fitting her out and scraping her. Six good working men would have done it, if they had been kept at it.
3957. From the time of her purchase until she was ready for sea was some weeks, I believe? Yes, because they altered her. Since we went out with her first she has been altered. Before this Pilot Board took charge of her they went to sea, and then they wished the 'tween decks to be lowered, to give her greater height.
3958. How do you account for the very long period that elapsed from the time she was purchased until she went to sea? A great deal of the time was taken up in fitting up the cabins.
3959. Will you be kind enough to look at No. 22 of the correspondence; you will see there a letter from Captain Towns, where he says "this vessel is the perfect model of what we require, and with a very trifling expense may be sent to sea in a few hours every way fit for the service?" Yes, that may be. She might have gone to sea in a few hours if we had not had to fit up her cabins and had only put iron ballast in her.
3960. Do you think from that letter that that is what was meant to be conveyed, that she might go to sea in a few hours as an ordinary vessel? Yes, that she might go to sea as an ordinary vessel, but not as a pilot vessel. She could not go to sea as a pilot vessel unless they fitted her up properly.
3961. Now look at No. 18, Mr. Chapman's letter:—"She is a fast sailer, and a perfect sea-boat. She is in every respect well found, and her sails are in good order and would be well-suited for the above purpose?" Her sails to look at are in very good order.
3962. Only to look at? When you see the canvas spread out on a vessel it looks very well, but when you come to overhaul the sails it is a different thing, and to touch them. It would not do to send a pilot cutter out with old sails, for perhaps in the first breeze of wind they would go.
3963. Would you call such sails in good order? For a coasting vessel—not for a pilot vessel.
3964. I should like you to read once again the letter of Chapman I have just read, and to say whether that is a true statement? No, I do not consider her sails to be good—at least we had not overhauled them thoroughly.
3965. Was she in every respect well found? Well found for a coasting vessel, but not as a pilot vessel, because she would require many things as a pilot vessel that she would not for a coasting vessel. I think she was quite amply found for a coasting vessel, and perhaps it would do for a voyage, but it would not do for a pilot vessel.
3966. Do you believe that the outside pilot service is preferable to the old method of putting pilots on board from boats? If the pilots did their duty properly and went outside with the boats they had, they were quite able to put a pilot on board at any time, and I think they could do it. I have had a great deal of trouble to carry it out.
3967. That is hardly an answer to my question. I want to know whether, in your opinion, the method of putting pilots on board from boats as heretofore, or the new method of putting them on board from vessels outside the Heads is the more preferable plan? I think in bad weather it is impossible for a vessel of that class to lower a boat to put a pilot on board in heavy weather, while the boats might pull out and put a pilot on board.
3968. Taking the weather as we have it on this coast all the year round, from your experience, extending over many years, which do you think the more preferable plan—this new plan of having vessels for the outside pilot service, or the old method? I think the pilot vessel would be preferable for getting men on board in moderate weather, but not in heavy gales.
3969. Do you think a vessel could be so constructed as to hold her position outside these Heads in boisterous weather? No, it is impossible for a vessel to hold on her position. There are two different qualities of vessels—the sharp deep sort of vessel that will go through the water, and which in heavy seas on this coast would perhaps drown the men, and such a vessel as the "Sea Witch," a buoyant vessel, that would go over the tops of the seas, and not wet so much as a rope-yarn.
3970. By Mr. Weekes: What do you mean by saying that the vessel would drown the men? The sea would break over the vessel, while the "Sea Witch" would be that buoyant and nimble, like a whaleboat or a lifeboat, that she would skim over the top of the sea.
3971. By the Chairman: Do I understand you to say that vessels outside would be useful only in moderate weather? In heavy weather she could not lower a boat; she might con a vessel into the harbour.
3972. Did not the boats answer every purpose in moderate weather? Yes.
3973. Then these vessels would do no more than the boats? Only that they would go farther

* Revised:—Six to eight.

- farther away. If there were two pilot vessels, one could go farther to the southward and put a pilot on board a ship before she came to the Heads, in the event of bad weather coming on at night. The wind springs up very suddenly here in a short space of time, and in two hours from the commencement of a storm the sea is sometimes in such a state between the Heads that a boat could not get out.
3974. John R. Myhill, Charles Harrold, and Alexander Bell, are they Assistant Harbour Masters? Harbour Pilots they are now styled. Myhill is the Assistant Harbour Master.
3975. A report upon this vessel from these gentlemen has been handed in to the Committee? They were there every day and saw the vessel.
3976. Do you know who wrote that report? No, I do not.
3977. Did you ever see it? No.
3978. Did you take it to them for signature? I never saw it.
3979. Were you aware that they had made this report? Not till after they reported.
3980. Are you aware who asked them for this report? No.
3981. You know nothing about it? I heard they were going to give a report; I understood some person asked for it; I could not say who it was, because these men used to visit the vessel every day.
3982. Are you not in constant communication with them? Yes.
3983. They used to visit the vessel every day? They used to go with their boats; I have seen them there repeatedly looking over her; they are all three practical men, capable of giving a report, I should say.
3984. I see here is a letter addressed to you by G. S. Reyte, dated 23 April, 1862? Yes.
3985. How came this gentleman to send this letter to you? When there was a great deal of talk about the "Sea Witch" with the Pilot Board, I thought I had better see persons who had known the vessel before, and get a memorandum from them; in fact, I did it for the Treasurer, when I found a great deal was said about it by the late Pilot Board; I thought I should get what information I could with reference to the vessel—that is all I did it for.
3986. Here is another letter, from a person named Enright, master of the ship "Highflyer"? Yes, that is one of Green's ships.
3987. Is she here now? No, she went to China with coals.
3988. By Mr. Weekes: Is that the original (handing a letter to the witness)? Yes; that man came on board, and brought a prickler with him, and tried every part of the ship from one end to the other.
3989. By the Chairman: Under what circumstances did he give this report? I asked him the same as I asked this man, when so much was said about the quality of the vessel; some said she was rotten, and I then thought it the best way.
3990. Then there is Captain Martin? Yes, that is the same.
3991. By Mr. Weekes (handing a letter to witness): Do you hold the original in your hand? Yes; he was a shipowner and shipbuilder; he built the ship he commanded; I think the Honorable Mr. Atkinson was on board when he went over the vessel.
3992. By Mr. Piddington: Who is the Honorable Mr. Atkinson? The Member.
3993. By the Chairman: You did not ask the opinion of these gentlemen because you had any doubts yourself? Not the slightest.
3994. Has the performance of the "Sea Witch" borne out the opinion of these gentlemen? I have heard of some reports in the papers, but I do not believe all I see there.
3995. Do you know Captain Ross, of the "Colonial Empire"? Yes.
3996. Captain Taylor, of the "City of Aberdeen"? Yes.
3997. Captain Kerr, of the "White Star"? Yes.
3998. Are they competent to form an opinion? I should think what Captain Kerr said would be straightforward; as to the other men, I do not know much about them; I do not think they are capable of forming an opinion of the qualities of small vessels, as they have never been in them.
3999. By Mr. Piddington: How do you know that they have not been in small vessels if you know very little of them? I have asked them whether they have been in small vessels, and they have stated that they have not.
4000. By Captain Moriarty: Suppose they have stated here that they have been in small vessels? They must have stated what was not true.
4001. Do you mean to say that Captain Ross, who is a man of education and of high position, has stated what is not true? He may be so, but some people say one thing at one time and another at another.
4002. By the Chairman: You are quite satisfied that this vessel has a deep keel in midships? Yes; here (producing a drawing) is the model of the vessel, and there (pointing to the paper) is the mark of her keel; there is the vessel as she stood in dock.
4003. When was that drawing made? It was made by a little boy, a son of Mr. Myhill's, as she lay at our jetty, and the keel was marked from my description.
4004. She was then afloat? Yes.
4005. Who marked her keel? Myhill, I told him the size.
4006. He marked it from your description? Yes.
4007. Are you aware that it has been stated this schooner, the "Sea Witch," was built on the lines of the "Mary Taylor"? I never heard that.
4008. By Mr. Weekes: Do you think, from your experience as a sailor, that any one, whether the captain of a vessel or not, that saw this vessel once and once only, is able to give a correct opinion of her qualities? I do not.
4009. Does not the trim of a vessel often materially affect her qualities? Yes.
4010. If a vessel is found not to answer in some respect, is it not judicious to alter her trim, to try her in another state of trim? I think this vessel will go better a little more by the head than by the stern.
- 4011.

4011. Do you know whether any alteration has been made in the trim of this vessel, either by the head or by the stern, or by giving her more or less ballast? No, I am not aware. When she went away I put two casks on board, so that if they wanted to alter their trim they might put them either fore or aft, and I told the master that when in chase of a vessel, by putting these casks forward he would be able to go faster; whether he has used them or not I do not know. Captain
John Crook.
1 Aug., 1862.
4012. Has there not been a good deal done on board the "Sea Witch" for the comfort of the pilots? A great deal has been done for the comfort of the pilots—too much, I think.
4013. That is—the deck has been laid, cabins have been built, a cuddy, table, and pantry have been made, and everything to make the pilots comfortable? Yes, that was Captain Towns' aim to make the vessel comfortable, so that the pilots might feel as if they were in their own homes.
4014. Would it not have been as much expense to have done what has been done to the "Sea Witch" if it had been done on board any coaster? A shipowner, when he buys a vessel, generally has to lay out £400 or £500 on her.
4015. I ask whether, if the particular alterations made in the accommodation for the pilots on board the "Sea Witch" had been made on board any coaster bought for the same purpose, it would not have cost as much? I think it would have cost more, for we have done a good deal by these men, who would have been otherwise sitting doing nothing.
4016. You think the outlay, although large, was not caused simply by its being done on board the "Sea Witch"? No.
4017. If the same alterations for the comfort of the pilots had been carried out on board the "Atlantic" or "Pacific" they would have cost as much? They would have cost more, for we should have had to put new masts in them, to make them the same rig as the "Sea Witch."
4018. You said you had a conversation with Captain Sustenance? Yes.
4019. Had he sailed in the "Sea Witch"? Yes; he was cast away with his wife and family upon an island, and was picked up by the "Sea Witch."
4020. Was his opinion favourable? Very favourable. He was going to apply for the command of her in the pilot service, but he was afraid he would not agree with the pilots with reference to the victualling of her; he thought there might be some misunderstanding. He came to me twice about it, but when I said the vessel would require a provedore, and that the master must be the provedore, he would have nothing to do with it.
4021. You have been out with her? Yes.
4022. Was it blowing fresh at the time? Yes, there was a good strong breeze, and a good sea running.
4023. How did she behave? Admirably; in the hollow of the sea she went round as well as any vessel I was ever on board, and I have sailed in a good many small vessels.
4024. Will not some little inattention on board a craft predispose her to miss stays? Yes, that is the thing that will do it.
4025. Has it not been a complaint with captains arriving here, that under the old system of whaleboats they were often in danger between the Heads before they were boarded by a pilot? Yes.
4026. Is it a suitable place for a pilot to be first put on board a large vessel of which he has had no experience, and in a gale of wind? No.
4027. Has he time to test the properties of a vessel, or to see whether the anchors and cables are ready? No.
4028. It is an unsafe system? Yes, so far as boarding them inside.
4029. When you say the boatmen were employed in cleaning or assisting in fitting out the "Sea Witch," when she was lying at the boat-shed, it was when they were idle and were not wanted for the boat service? Yes; perhaps they might be called away in half an hour, or they might have been employed half a day, or perhaps a day, fiddling about. We only got them to do that because they were not employed about any other thing.
4030. Have you seen the inventory of the "Sea Witch"? Her stores?
4031. Yes. Is she tolerably well found? Yes.
4032. Is she better found than a coaster would be running from here to Newcastle? Yes, she had need be better found than a coaster.
4033. Have you had an opportunity of inspecting her thoroughly yourself? Yes, I had her scraped from top to bottom, from stem to stern, inside and out; and I had the lining taken off in places where I thought there might be some defect.
4034. From your close examination of her, what is your opinion of her? I think her a staunch well-built vessel, a vessel that would pass any muster anywhere.
4035. Did Captains Enright and Martin, who have given certificates of her condition, inspect her thoroughly? They inspected her thoroughly. Captain Martin took his coat off and went in under the cabin floor to try her transoms, he was so exact in the matter; in fact, I thought he was going a little too far.
4036. After these thorough examinations they gave you the certificates you have handed in? Yes; and I sent them to you. I only did it because there had been so much talk about the vessel; in fact, what I did it for chiefly was because I heard that one of the pilots at South Head had said she was rotten. I asked them to come up and inspect her before she was sent out, and said that the Government did not want to send them out in anything rotten. Mr. Jenkins and Shanks did come up, and they were so satisfied with the build and nature of the vessel that they said they were quite deceived altogether; in fact, some of the pilots' wives were so frightened that they did not like their husbands to go in her, and that was the reason I got Captain Martin to inspect her.
4037. Then, so far as being a sound vessel and a safe sea boat, did the pilots express themselves

- Captain
John Crook.
- 1 Aug., 1862.
- selves quite satisfied? Yes; but, in fact, they were dissatisfied with the system—they did not like going out away from their homes.
4038. You think they prefer the boat system? Yes; the new system takes them away from home two or three days at a time. They could be at home every day and every night under the old system.
4039. By Captain Moriarty: Did I understand you to say that you asked Captain Towns to go and look at this vessel? No; Captain Towns asked me. He sent me a note, and I have that note in my office, saying would I go round before breakfast, as he wanted to go and see the "Sea Witch," and I did so.
4040. Your going with him was the result of his application to you, and not of an application from you to him? Yes.
4041. If he had stated that it was the result of an application from you to him, would that be an accurate statement? If he stated that I sent for him to go, it was wrong.
4042. Captain Towns took a great deal of trouble to get this vessel out? Yes, he did; he seemed heart and soul in it.
4043. He went so far here as to say that he would put the bowsprit through the cabin window but he would make her stay—do you think that would facilitate her staying? That was merely a joke.
4044. I would have you to know that this is no place for joking. You think that such an arrangement as that suggested by Captain Towns would not be likely to facilitate the vessel's staying? I should not think it was made seriously at all.
4045. Then, in point of fact, that suggestion would lead you to doubt the soundness of his intellect? I should think no sensible man would put a bowsprit out of a cabin window to make a vessel stay.
4046. You say you received your instructions from the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer? Yes, all my instructions came through the Colonial Treasurer.
4047. You received letters direct from the Treasury? Yes.
4048. Not from the Collector of Customs? I have received one letter from Mr. Duncan as Chairman of the Pilot Board.
4049. Have you received instructions from the Colonial Treasurer with reference to the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
4050. If there is no appearance of this letter in the correspondence published respecting the "Sea Witch," is not that, in point of fact, a proof that some letter has been suppressed? I should not think this letter would be suppressed, because it is a mere letter for my instruction.
4051. If it does not appear in the published statement of the communications relating to the "Sea Witch," there is one letter at all events that has not been published? I do not know anything about that.
4052. If that letter is not here in the published correspondence, then have all the letters been published? That I could not say.
4053. Have you seen the list of letters? No.
4054. Have you seen "Copies of all papers connected with the purchase of the 'Sea Witch' for the pilot service, and with the summary dismissal of certain members of the 'Pilot Board'?" Yes.
4055. Did you see all these letters? I have read some of them.
4056. You have not read them all? No.
4057. If any letter addressed to you does not appear here, is this a complete compliance with the order of the House? I should say there had been some mistake. There is one letter I have that does not appear here, with regard to getting the vessel fitted out.
4058. By the Chairman: What is the date of that? The 21st March.
4059. By Captain Moriarty: Did you ever receive any orders from the Pilot Board? With reference to what?
4060. Anything? Yes, I received an order to survey some damage done with reference to the "Sea Witch." When they require anything to be done, I go and do it, but my communication is directly with the Treasurer.
4061. Do you receive an order from them? Sometimes if they apply to me to go and do a thing, I do it.
4062. You consider yourself as in some respects subordinate to the Pilot Board? No; I consider that I am under the Treasurer.
4063. Why then do you obey their orders? So that everything connected with the Government may go on in harmony.
4064. You do it rather as a matter of favour than of duty? I do it partly as a duty too. I think if we work together, all goes on in harmony, and that has always been my mode of doing my duty. I have never crossed the Pilot Board at any time.
4065. I understood you to say, in answer to a question from Mr. Samuel, that it would have cost a great deal more to have fitted out this vessel, if it had not been for the assistance of these men who would otherwise have been idle? Yes.
4066. The fact of their being so employed did diminish the expense that would otherwise have been incurred? Yes; for instance, the caulking of the vessel, if it had been tendered for, would perhaps have cost £50 or £60, whereas it did not cost a third of that.
4067. That being done by your own men? By the two carpenters. I hired two carpenters, who did the caulking with the men.
4068. Are the wages of the caulkers included? Yes, every expenditure is in the list sent to the Treasurer.
4069. With the exception of the application of these men's labour? Yes, and that it is impossible to count.

4070. You say these men were employed upon this vessel in various ways? Yes.
4071. You simply thought the employment of these men, when they would otherwise have been idle, a beneficial occupation for which they were already paid? Yes, and it kept them out of mischief; for they are always up to some mischief in the boat-shed. The more you keep sailors employed the better it is in every way. Captain
John Crook.
1 Aug., 1862.
4072. Then after all, did that amount to a considerable saving to the Government? Yes, so it is in any case when we use the men for any other thing; for instance, we use the men to convey powder from the magazine, when we would have to hire men and boats, and it is a great saving to the Government to have the men attached to one department.
4073. We will talk about the powder by-and-by, but do you mean to tell me that these men are employed to move powder to the magazine —
4074. By Mr. Weekes: Only on the public service? Yes.
4075. By Captain Moriarty: I understood you to say, just now, that the service rendered by these men to the Government was unimportant? By the boatmen?
4076. Yes? I could not have done that.
4077. You gave such an answer to Mr. Samuel;—you said that six men in three days would do the whole of it? Yes, six men employed by a private individual could have done all the work they did.
4078. Six men for three days, that is equal to eighteen men for one day? Yes.
4079. How much would that be—10s. a man? Labourers are getting 8s. a day. But what I mean to say is, that we were fitting the ship out, and sometimes there were two or three about her scarcely doing anything, sometimes they would be there for half an hour or an hour, so that it is impossible to give any account of it.
4080. But you have stated two essentially different things —? What I come here to state is the truth.
4081. Exactly, and I do not wish to insinuate anything; but I say, as a matter of fact, that you have stated two things diametrically opposite to each other. You did not intend to do so, perhaps, but that is the case when men talk a great deal without reflection. You have said, just now, that the facilities afforded by the men who were employed in this way was of essential importance, and saved a great deal of money? And I say so now.
4082. Yet you state that six men, in three days, would do all they did? Yes; for if a merchant, for instance, were fitting her out, he would put on a number of men with a man over them, and get the work done at once; but in this case you could not do it—it is a different thing altogether.
4083. Still the two statements are not altogether compatible? You misunderstand me; sometimes the men would be sitting about and not doing anything—one would scrape just a foot, and another two feet, and then go away. Then, again, in putting the ballast aboard, perhaps the ballast could have been put on board in one day, but these men could not do it in one day because they had other things to attend to; they would do a little to-day and a little to-morrow.
4084. The amount of saving caused by the labour of six men for three days does not turn out to be much after all? But it is a saving in different ways; it is impossible to bring it all in.
4085. When you stated that six men, in three days, would have done all that these men did—did you mean to convey that fact? I mean to say that if it had been done by a merchant, he would have got so many men on board, ten men, or six men, or fifty men, and have got the vessel done in a week.
4086. Nevertheless the two statements do not seem to amount to the same thing—there is a vast difference? There may be a vast difference, but then it is different the way the thing is done—the way the men are employed.
4087. There was some change effected in the management of pilots some two or three years ago? About three years and a half ago.
4088. We have it in evidence that you entered into some arrangement with the pilots at the South Head to lodge their crews until the Government were enabled to make some arrangement? Yes, Captain Brown and I went down about it.
4089. Did you make such an arrangement, and tell them to lodge their crews, and promise them they should be remunerated by the Government? Perhaps I could not explain it—it would take too long a time. It was with reference to a house at South Head, belonging to the Government, that should have been given up.
4090. And which was not given up, and the pilots were asked to lodge their crews in the meantime? Yes, for a few days, till they could get the house for them. There has been a great deal to do about one of the pilots not being paid.
4091. Ought not the man to be paid if the Government engaged to pay him;—if a pilot has stated that you made an agreement with him to pay him for lodging these men, and that the Pilot Board said he ought to be paid, do you know any reason why he should not be paid? I stated that he ought not to be paid. What I objected to in the matter was, that he ought to have sent in his claim at the time; but there was nothing said about it till after this man was dismissed from being head pilot. There was no claim made before.
4092. Had that anything to do with the fact of Government having entered into an engagement that this pilot should be paid for lodging these men? Yes, but the men did not live there all the time.
4093. During the time they did live with him? Yes, but there was a great deal about the matter that perhaps you do not know.
4094. I do not know anything about the matter, except that it has been stated that a certain arrangement was made by you, on the part of the Government —? By Captain Browne, as Chairman of the Pilot Board. He went down with me to see what arrangement could

- Captain
John Crook.
- could be made, as some of these men were living under the rocks—some in one place and some in another.
- 1 Aug., 1862. 4095. Captain Browne, you say, went down? Yes, he went down with me.
4096. Did you or did Captain Browne make this agreement with the pilot? Captain Browne called Gibson to him—he was the senior pilot at the time—and stated to him that if he would get the crews lodged in each of the men's houses for a few days, till the iron house was vacant, the Government would pay them. That was all that passed.
4097. And the Government did not get the iron house? No.
4098. Did the men continue to be lodged by these pilots? No, they were put out of the pilots' houses, most of them.
4099. Were they all? Gibson kept them longer than the rest.
4100. Is not Gibson, by the arrangement that was entered into with him at the time he took these men in, entitled to be paid for the time during which he lodged these men? Yes; but in fact I went down there, and found many of these men living under the rocks—a portion of them.
4101. I presume if Gibson made a charge of that kind he would be able to prove it? I should disprove it thus far, that a portion of the men were living under the rock.
4102. What men—Gibson's? Some of Gibson's men too.
4103. Did you not tell Mr. Gibson you would see it was paid if Captain Browne would assent? I said I would pay a portion of it if Captain Browne would put his signature to it, to say he was entitled to it; but I could not do so without, as Captain Browne had been down with me.
4104. Then, in point of fact, I do not know what you had to do with it at all if it was a Pilot Board's arrangement and not a Harbour Master's? I went with him.
4105. Had you anything to do with payment? Yes; I paid the whole of the moneys.
4106. You think in very heavy weather the system of whaleboats in use when you were a pilot is better than the system of cutters? In bad weather I do not believe it is, because you cannot get on board a ship till she is just within the Heads, and if she is a large ship you have no room to handle her. It answered very well when small ships came to this port, and it may do so now in fine weather, when you can pull out in the whaleboats to any place you like.
4107. You say that in bad weather you cannot launch a boat from the schooner? No boat would be able to go off in bad weather.
4108. If it has been stated that the great utility of a pilot vessel is to be able to put a pilot on board a ship in bad weather—that that is its great advantage—then under existing circumstances that great advantage will not be obtained? The superiority is in this, that a sailing vessel can go farther to sea in moderate weather.
4109. I am speaking of bad weather—confine yourself to that? In bad weather there is a difference. The sea in the English Channel is a short jumping sea, that a sharp vessel will go through, but here the sea goes up perhaps a hundred feet and then breaks. Now we do not want a vessel to go through such a sea as that, but to go over the top of it.
4110. Then do you mean to say that you cannot put a pilot on board a ship in bad weather? You cannot.
4111. Then a pilot schooner is absolutely valueless for the purpose of putting a pilot on board a ship in a gale of wind? In these seas; it may do in the English Channel, where there is a short chopping sea, but it will not do here where you may see a vessel rolling lower yards under; no boat could go near a vessel under such circumstances. It has often happened that a ship has received more damage off the Heads than they have done the whole of the rest of the voyage.
4112. By Mr. Piddington: I understand you to say, with reference to your experience of the sea in boisterous weather off this port, that the outside pilot service is inefficient for the purpose of putting pilots on board ships? In heavy weather.
4113. The use of the outside pilot service is for heavy weather;—of what use is the pilot cutter in heavy weather if a pilot cannot be put on board a ship from her? She can dodge about the ship and tell her to stand off.
4114. I am speaking of putting a pilot on board? She cannot do it.
4115. Then she is of no use for putting a pilot on board in bad weather? She is of no use; but in a few hours the weather may moderate, and then she may put the pilot on board.
4116. I am speaking of a continuance of bad weather? No, she could not.
4117. You say you received a letter from the Colonial Treasurer, directing your attention to the examination of the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
4118. You have not that letter with you? No.
4119. Will you furnish the Committee with a correct copy of that letter, including the date? Yes. (Vide Appendix A.)
4120. Also a copy of the letter from Captain Towns? I had a memorandum from him.
4121. Will you furnish the Committee with a copy of that note? Yes. (Vide Appendix B.)
4122. Have you been on board the "Sea Witch" in a gale off this coast? No, not in a gale; but when I went out it was blowing strongly from the southward.
4123. You know nothing, from your own observations, of her qualities in a gale? No, I know nothing of her, from my own observation, in a gale of wind.
4124. Do you know, either from your own observation, or from the communications of others, whether the "Sea Witch" will stay in a heavy sea? I have heard —
4125. Have you heard from reliable persons that she will stay? No.
4126. Are you well acquainted with the pilot cutters of Liverpool? It is a long time since I was there.

4127. Do you consider that you are well acquainted with them? I believe I am as well acquainted with them as most mariners.
4128. I am speaking of the Liverpool pilot cutters—the pilot vessels out of the port of Liverpool—do you know them? I knew them in 1829.
4129. Is it thirty-three years since you saw the pilot cutters off Liverpool? Yes.
4130. Have you often met these vessels at sea? Yes; I have met them off Scilly.
4131. Have you often seen them? Yes; I have seen them when I have been coming home from voyages.
4132. Are you aware whether these pilot vessels can stay out in all weathers? Yes, they can stay out in all weathers, and so can any vessel.
4133. But can they discharge the duties of a pilot vessel in all weathers? They may do it in the English Channel, where there is not so heavy a sea as there is here. I have heard of the pilots being swung on board, but they could not swing a man on board here; it is quite a different thing.
4134. Do you think it desirable that a pilot vessel should be of such a character and possess such qualities as to enable her to keep to sea always? Yes, I think a pilot vessel should be a vessel that can keep out at sea, but there are times when no vessel can go out of these Heads.
4135. If a pilot vessel cannot keep out at sea in all weathers, would you deem such a vessel fit for the pilot service? It is impossible; if you have a good vessel, well handled, she can keep at sea at any time, but she might not be able to get out of the harbour.
4136. If a vessel that is called a pilot vessel is brought into port merely on account of threatening weather, would you consider that such vessel is properly commanded? She ought not to be brought into the port.
4137. Does not the chief value of a pilot vessel consist in her capacity for being kept at sea, and of putting a pilot on board a ship in any weather? Yes, but it is impossible to do it here.
4138. Is there something in the character of the seas on this coast that renders it impossible for a pilot cutter to put pilots on board vessels in bad weather? Yes, the sea is heavier, and it breaks more irregularly than in the English Channel. Here you have the whole of the South Pacific Ocean to contend with, and when its whole force comes against you it must be very great.
4139. In reference to all circumstances of moderate and rough weather during the year, which system of conducting the pilot service do you think is the best, the old or the new system? I think cutters, when you can go out to a distance and put the pilots on board, in moderate weather—
4140. You are not giving me a direct answer to my question;—I ask you whether in all weathers, from January to December, taking the average, you are of opinion that the new system of outside pilot cutters is preferable to the old, under all circumstances? Under all circumstances I think the pilot cutters would be the best.
4141. Is that opinion grounded upon the inability of the pilot boats to go outside the Heads? It is this way,—you can go out a long way in the sailing vessels without any stress upon any person.
4142. Then notwithstanding that in your opinion it is impossible for a pilot cutter to put a pilot on board a vessel in extremely bad weather, you still consider the outside pilot service superior to the old system? I consider it is.
4143. If you had to choose a system yourself, for general purposes, you would choose the outside service rather than the old one? Yes, for there is not so much risk;—there is a great risk in going out in boats sometimes.
4144. The pilot cutter system would be the best, on the whole? Yes.
4145. With reference to the "Sea Witch," do you not think she is rather short in proportion to her beam? She is rather short in proportion to her beam—20 feet beam, I think.
4146. Is that a quality in her model that you think peculiarly fits her for the pilot service? She is a vessel that stands up to her canvas well; she is a wholesome vessel on board—a vessel that gives every comfort.
4147. I am not speaking of comfort, but of her suitability to the service? She would stand up to her canvas when another vessel would lie over; she would never carcen over if she were well handled, and would carry heavy sail.
4148. Is she not rather broad in the beam for a pilot vessel? I do not know;—no, I think not.
4149. Comparing her model with that of a sharper built vessel, would you be surprised if she were to be said by a nautical person to resemble a butcher's tray? I do not think any one who was a good judge, or who knew the quality of the vessel, would say that of the "Sea Witch;" he might say she was the shape of a butcher's tray, looking at her on the top of the deck; but such vessels are generally 18 or 19 feet beam, and this vessel is only 20.
4150. Do you concur in the opinion of Captain Towns that she is the exact model of a pilot boat for this coast? I am not exactly of the same opinion, for you might perhaps get other vessels which would answer the purpose just as well. This "Sea Witch" answers the purpose just as well as any you can get, perhaps better, for her buoyant qualities.
4151. Do you think that extreme buoyancy renders her superior to other vessels? I think she is as good; I see nothing the matter with the vessel; she can wear in twice her own length.
4152. Are you aware that the Pilot Board has recommended another pilot boat should be built? Yes.
4153. Are you aware whether they recommend that a vessel should be built on a similar model to the "Sea Witch"? I have seen the model, and it seems to me about the same model as the "Sea Witch," because the "Sea Witch" has a beautiful bottom.

4154. You say you think, from what you have seen of the drawing, it is almost the same model? Yes.
4155. Are you sure it is quite the same model? No, not altogether; it is not quite the same beam, but about the same length.
4156. Are you sure that there is not a material difference in the model of the proposed vessel as compared with that of the "Sea Witch"? I think they are pretty near the same.
4157. If Captain Towns has stated that the model of this vessel is entirely different from that of the "Sea Witch," he has made a mistake? Perhaps I have not seen it. I have seen a model on the table at the Pilot Board, and have looked at it; it seemed to have the same draught of water, was almost the same length, and nearly the same depth.
4158. If Captain Towns, who is a member of the Pilot Board, has stated that the model of the new boat is entirely different from the "Sea Witch," he has made a mistake? I think he has; there may be a little difference, but not much.
4159. What material is the "Sea Witch" built of? Pine and oak. There is a great difference in the qualities of American oak.
4160. Do you know the kind of timber employed in building first class English vessels? English oak, and American pine is used as well.
4161. What is used in American vessels? American pine and oak.
4162. Can you say what proportion of different qualities of timber were used in the "Sea Witch"? I know by Captain Martin's —
4163. I am not speaking to Captain Martin, but to Captain Crook, and I want to know if Captain Crook thinks that the timber used in American ships is equal to the timber used in first class English ships? No, it is not so durable as that used in building first class English ships.
4164. American ships are built of inferior timber to that used for first class English ships? It is different timber.
4165. Is it inferior or superior? It must be inferior to hard wood.
4166. If you turn to pages 17 and 18 of the correspondence, you will see a specification for a pilot vessel sent here by Messrs. Harvey and Sons, of Ipswich;—do you consider that the "Sea Witch" is equal to that in material, build, and fittings? No; she will be a different vessel altogether.
4167. Does that specification describe a vessel far superior in quality to the "Sea Witch"? The vessel might last longer.
4168. Is it superior in character or not? Of that I could not give an opinion.
4169. You have not examined it? I have not examined it.
4170. By the Chairman: You say you approve of the model of the "Sea Witch" because it is calculated to make her buoyant? Yes; she is a vessel that will go over the sea.
4171. Is it not possible for a vessel to be too buoyant? No, I think a vessel cannot be too buoyant.
4172. Is it not equally necessary that she should be weatherly, that she should have a good hold of the water? Yes, and this vessel has as good a hold of the water as a vessel of this class should have.
4173. If, in putting a pilot on board a vessel, the keel of the "Sea Witch" was frequently seen from this vessel, would you then think she had a good hold of the water? I think the keel of any vessel in heavy weather would be seen.
4174. What sort of boat has this vessel got? A boat that was attached to the "Washington" steam-tug, a very nice boat.
4175. How did she get that boat? The "Washington" had this boat, and was going away to China; she had been built expressly to go out in bad weather, to take warps on board ship; she is like a small life-boat, and we asked Captain Towns, when the "Washington" was going away, if he would let us have that boat. We were going to have one that was not so good a boat.
4176. Then you got this boat from Captain Towns? Yes.
4177. That is the boat now in use? Yes.
4178. What was given for that boat? I think she cost £22; she is copper-fastened; a thorough good boat.
4179. What became of the boat that belonged to the "Sea Witch"? This is now at the shed; we made an exchange of the Botany boat for the "Washington's" boat.
4180. Then Captain Towns had not money given to him for it;—I understood you to say that she cost £22? When the boat was bought for the "Washington."
4181. And you exchanged? Yes.
4182. Did you get a better boat in exchange? Yes, for the purpose; ours was a narrow boat, not fit for going alongside a vessel in a heavy sea.
4183. Was the boat you gave to Captain Towns of more money value than the one you got in exchange? No, I think not; they were about equal value, I think.
4184. Are you aware, or have you heard, that it is contemplated to make any alteration in the "Sea Witch"? I have heard, but I think it wrong to do so.
4185. What have you heard? That they wanted to shift the mast, for one thing.
4186. Any other alterations? Yes, I think so, but I have not heard officially.
4187. What have you heard? Something—that they wanted to shift the mast.
4188. Nothing else? No.
4189. Have you not heard that it is contemplated to add five feet to her keel? Yes, perhaps I have heard that.
4190. Have you any objection to tell us from whom you have heard it? No.
4191. Did you hear it from Captain Rountree? No, I have not seen him since he came in.

4192. Did you hear it from Captain Towns? It is impossible to say—I cannot call to mind. Captain
John Crook.
4193. Might you have heard it from Captain Towns? I might have. 1 Aug., 1862.
4194. If the vessel is a perfect vessel do you think she requires five feet to be added to her keel? No, I do not think she wants five feet added to her keel.
4195. That is not my question;—I ask you whether, if she is a perfect vessel, she ought to require five feet added to her keel? No.
4196. By Mr. Weekes: Have you ever found perfection in a vessel yet? Never; a vessel always has some bad qualities. I have had a good many bad vessels myself.
4197. It has been stated here, by the owner of the “Atlantic” and “Pacific” vessels that were tendered to the Government for this service, that had they been accepted, he should have recommended that, previous to their going on the station, their depth of keel should be increased;—may it not also be a judicious alteration to make in the “Sea Witch,” for the particular service for which this boat is required? They may alter her, and she may do better—she may hang more to windward; but it appears to me, from the description of the vessel, she is meant to go round either way—to wear round or to stay. I think if she were six or seven inches more down in the water it would make a difference in her.
4198. You think she is not enough down in the water? No, I think not.
4199. She wants a little more ballast? Yes; I think if she were down six inches, she has plenty of side, and it would make a great alteration in her sailing qualities; but the vessel is very nimble at present.
4200. I wish you to explain what you have said with reference to the men in the boat-shed;—do you mean that if you had had the services of six men at ordinary working hours for three days, you would have been able to have accomplished all that the boatmen of the shed did to the “Sea Witch”? Yes, if it had been done right off at once.
4201. Then the wages of six men for three days would represent the value of the services of the boatmen at the shed to the “Sea Witch”? I consider that the value of the boatmen’s services was a mere trifle.
4202. If you had had to hire men to do this work which was performed by the boatmen, who were sometimes on and sometimes off, it would have amounted to six men for about three days? It might have been four days, not more.
4203. By Mr. Piddington: What would be the money value of that labour—the wages of those men for three* days? They would have had 8s. or 9s. a day.
4204. That would have been at the rate of £2 8s. a day for these six men? Yes, from six o’clock in the morning till night.
4205. £2 8s., if multiplied by three, would yield a total of £7 4s.? Yes.
4206. Do you think that the total money value of the services these men have rendered to the “Sea Witch”? I suppose the money value at different times —
4207. Is that the money value? It is impossible to do it that way. If I had had to fit out the vessel, and the men had to do it right off, but then they could not do it right off.
4208. But whatever has been done to the “Sea Witch” does not exceed what six men could have done in three days? No, not if they had done it right off. It might be a little more, I cannot say to a day or two. If the boatmen had done it off at once it would not have been much more.
4209. Did you not state that the services of these men on board the “Sea Witch” had been of great importance in point of saving? Yes.
4210. Have you not also stated that the entire saving would not have amounted to more than £7 4s.? Yes, but you cannot explain it in that way.
4211. You have explained, correctly or not, that their services to the Government, in the fitting of this vessel, were equivalent to £7 4s. and no more? It is impossible to state it in that way. What I mean to say is, if a merchant were doing the vessel he would put on six or eight men, and do it right off at once.
4212. Then, taking the various jobs these men have done, at different times, on board the “Sea Witch,” has the money value of these jobs, taking them altogether, exceeded £7 4s.? They exceed that.
4213. What, in your opinion, have their services been worth in helping to fit out the “Sea Witch”? I could not tell you that.
4214. Then you leave the question of the value of their services entirely open? I could not tell you the value.
4215. By the Chairman: I understood you to say that the caulking performed by your men would have come to £50 or £60? That is if it had been done by contract.
4216. It was performed by your men? Only by one of our men—the boatswain.
4217. Do you say that the caulking performed by your men would have cost £50 or £60? I suppose it would by contract.

APPENDIX.

A.

(Urgent.)

The Treasury, New South Wales,
21 March, 1862.

Sir,

I am directed to request that you will take immediate steps for effecting the transfer to this Government of the schooner "Sea Witch," lately purchased; and that you will cause her to be fitted up for the Sea Pilot Service of Port Jackson without unnecessary delay.

I have, &c.,
HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

The Harbour Master.

I do myself the honor to recommend, that, she being a foreign vessel, the Crown Solicitor be instructed to make out a Bill of Sale.—JOHN CROOK, Harbour Master.—21 March, 1862.

The Crown Solicitor will have the goodness to prepare the Bill of Sale.—H. L.—21/3/62.

B. C. Urgent.

B.

10 March, 1862.

My dear Sir,

Will you accompany me on board a schooner, her name I forget; she has, I believe, been tendered for the Pilot Service, and now at Campbell's Wharf; you know the craft I mean. I promised to see and give my opinion.

Yours, &c.,
R. TOWNS.

Jno. Crook, Esq.

P.S.—Say, per bearer, if 7 to-morrow morning will be convenient.—R. T.

ADDITIONAL APPENDIX.

(The following Letters, in addition to those required, were forwarded by witness, and ordered by the Committee to be appended.)

C.

10 April, 1862.

My dear Sir,

I should like a word with you this morning, before you go over to the schooner. We have decided on giving her a trial on Saturday, and I intend sending out the "Melinia" to try her speed in her new rig. I am anxious to see you about the plank on the kelson.

Yours truly,
R. TOWNS.

Jno. Crook, Esq.,
Harbour Master.

D.

Sydney, 17 April, 1862.

Sir,

In compliance with your request, that you should have written instructions for all we require to be done on board the schooner "Sea Witch," we have now to request that all the stone ballast be removed and iron ballast provided for the purpose. As it appears that the vessel requires more ballast the space will not contain the material. We will also thank you to have moulds made and fitted for four iron knees on each side, abreast the masts, made of sufficient accuracy to fit the knees; and that proper moulds be made to fit six iron stanchions, to fit between the beams and kelson, in the manner described; viz.—athwart the kelson and across the beam, and after the ballast has been placed, the lower deck to be laid, as you say the plank is already provided. Several other items are required, which we will point out on our next interview.

We are, &c.,
R. TOWNS.
JOHN VINE HALL.

John Crook, Esq.,
Harbour Master.

E.

Sydney, 18 April, 1862.

Dear Sir,

We have duly considered the matter of the deck, and as height is so very important, we cannot recommend less than six feet from deck to deck, in the lowest post; this will give a little more at the ends, which will be all the better. You will therefore please make the alteration.

Yours faithfully,
R. TOWNS.
JOHN VINE HALL.

John Crook, Esq.,
Harbour Master.

P.S.—Run the deck close aft the same level.

Mr.

Mr. John Barnett called in and examined:—

4218. By the Chairman: You are superintendent of the Government boat-shed? Yes.
4219. Do you remember the "Sea Witch" being bought by the Government? I do.
4220. By whom was she fitted out—by whom were the repairs performed? By myself, and one or two hands taken on at different times.
4221. Were any of the men belonging to the boat-shed employed in repairing or in fitting her out? There was one of the boatmen that worked with me doing a little; he is a boat-builder by trade; he assisted me as well as he possibly could, although he did not understand the repairing of a vessel.
4222. Only one man? One man as a carpenter.
4223. Were any of the men employed in any other way? The boatmen were employed on different occasions.
4224. Have you kept any account of the time they were so employed? Yes, I have, but only stating "so many men were employed on board at work on the 'Sea Witch.'"
4225. At what do you estimate the value of their work on that vessel? The way they were employed it was always impossible to give an estimate; on some days they were at work nearly the whole day, and on others only an hour or two.
4226. Can you form no idea of the value of their work? I was not prepared for this.
4227. Did you not know that you were going to be examined before the Committee? Yes, but I was not aware of the subject. I do not think I could give any idea of what it was worth; I could scarcely tell you the time, from the way the men were employed, on one day for an hour or two, and on others more or less.
4228. You say you kept an account of the number of hours they were at work? No, I did not; I kept an account of the men at work on board the vessel little or much; I merely said, "so many men on board the 'Sea Witch' to-day."
4229. Do you keep a journal or diary of the men who are employed, and the way in which they are employed? Not of the way in which they are employed; merely "so many men at work on the 'Sea Witch.'"
4230. Can you from your diary or journal furnish the Committee with an estimate or a probable estimate of what the work cost? Possibly I could.
4231. Perhaps you will so furnish it? (Vide Appendix.)
4232. Were any materials for the vessel supplied from your department? Yes.
4233. What materials were supplied from your department for the vessel? Some stores.
4234. Describe the stores? Paints, and colours, and blocks—I think there were blocks, and there was a little timber used belonging to the establishment.
4235. Have you any idea of the value of those materials? Not just now.
4236. Perhaps you will include that in the statement you will furnish to the Committee? Yes.
4237. Were any of your carpenters employed in caulking this vessel? Not belonging to the establishment; there were one or two carpenters taken on at different times, discharged, and taken on again.
4238. Was their labour charged to the "Sea Witch," or to your establishment? To the "Sea Witch."
4239. And is included in the accounts of the "Sea Witch"? I should suppose so.
4240. Mr. Crook has stated that the caulking was performed by men connected with the boat-shed? Yes.
4241. Do you know what boat the "Sea Witch" has got? She had one whaleboat—one small boat rather.
4242. What boat has she now? The boat she has now is one she received from Captain Towns, in exchange for one of the boats we had on the establishment.
4243. By Mr. Weekes: Did that boat come from the Custom House at Botany? Yes.
4244. By the Chairman: The boat that was returned from Botany was given to Captain Towns in exchange? Yes.
4245. Was the exchange, do you consider, an equal exchange? Yes, I do.
4246. By Mr. Weekes: You said, I think, that you did all the work? No.
(The Short-hand Writer read his notes.)
4247. Do you mean to say that all the work done to the "Sea Witch" was by yourself and two or three hands taken on;—was not the work of laying the deck, the pilots' cabins, and the fittings inside, done by contract? No; the fitting of the vessel is another thing. I say the ship carpenter's work was done by me and two or three other men.
4248. Did you fit the pilots' cabins? No, but I laid the floor, the beams, and the deck, as it is called.
4249. Was there not a contractor employed —? Yes.
4250. Who undertook all these fittings? All the cabin fittings?
4251. When you employed the men at the boat-shed at all, it was when they would otherwise have been idle? It was, at times.
4252. That is, when they were required for the boat service they were taken off the "Sea Witch"? Generally.
4253. By Mr. Piddington: What work did you and the men belonging to the boat establishment do on board the "Sea Witch"? The carpentering work I was at; the caulking her on the decks, replacing her copper, laying beams, putting down a new deck, putting eight iron knees in her, and several other small jobs.
4254. Does that include all the work that you and the men belonging to the establishment did? No; the boatmen did the scraping, cleaning, and rigging her afresh.
4255. Can you furnish the Committee with the number of hours the men belonging to the boat

Mr. John
Barnett.

1 Aug., 1862.

- Mr. John Barnett.
I cannot.
- 1 Aug., 1862. 4256. Then how can you give the Committee any accurate information with reference to the money value of the work performed on board the "Sea Witch" by the men connected with the establishment? I can tell, by overhauling the log book, the time the men were at work. There are some days when two or three men were employed the whole day, and I would then put down two or three men, as the case might be, but I do not know that at any one time they were employed there half a day, because if the boat's crew were required I would then send them away.
4257. Can you furnish the Committee with an account of the number of men employed, and the entire period they have been employed on board the "Sea Witch"? I think I can, pretty nearly.
4258. Will you specify the wages of every man so employed? Yes.
4259. By Mr. Weekes: Do they all get the same rate of pay at the boat-shed? No.
4260. What is the difference? The coxswain gets one pound a month more than the others.
4261. Otherwise the men get the same rate? Yes.
4262. By Mr. Piddington: Do you get the same rate as the men? No, I get one-tenth more than the coxswain.
4263. Whatever difference there may be, let it be taken into account in the statement you furnish to the Committee? Yes.
4264. By the Chairman: Have you already been called upon to give any account of the cost of the repairs of the "Sea Witch" incurred by you to any one? No.
4265. Then in the accounts that have been made up and laid before this Committee, the cost of the work performed by you in the repair of the "Sea Witch" has not been included? No.
4266. You refer to the labour and materials supplied by you? Yes.
4267. By Mr. Weekes: Have you sent in a return of the stuff that has been used? Yes, to Mr. Wilshire. The return was made to Mr. Hinton of a few of the stores.

APPENDIX.

Sir,

3/8/62.

I have the honor to forward the returns asked for, showing the amount of wages received by the boatmen of Government Boat Establishment, on the dates named in the returns. I am unable to furnish the Committee with a correct account of intermediate dates not mentioned in the returns, although men were employed each day, at intervals. The accounts kept were done of an evening, at home, as I was employed from 6 A.M. until 6 P.M., on board the "Sea Witch," whilst at Boat Establishment. Some of the stores expended from Boat-shed, on "Sea Witch," were returned, namely, V. white lead, paint, oil, and turpentine.

I also send a return of the hired carpenters' time and wages.

I have, &c.,
JOHN BARNETT,
Superintendent of Government Boats.

The Chairman of

| MR. HAY, | MR. PIDDINGTON, |
| CAPTAIN MORIARTY, | MR. SADLEIR, |
| MR. WEEKES. | |

SAUL SAMUEL, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Thomas Stephenson Rountree called in and examined:—

4268. By Mr. Weekes: You are, I believe, a sailor, and a practical shipwright? I have been brought up all my life to both. Captain T. S. Rountree.4269. Are you acquainted with the pilot schooner called the "Sea Witch"? I am; I have been on board her. 8 Aug., 1862.

4270. Were you requested by Captain Towns to survey that vessel and make a report upon her? I was.

4271. Will you look at No. 39 of the correspondence before you, and say whether that is the report you made on that occasion? It is.

4272. It likewise bears the signature of William Livingstone, practical shipwright, and commander of the "Royal Saxon"? Yes.

4273. Did he accompany you on that survey? Yes.

4274. Did you make a complete survey on that occasion? The ship was lying alongside the Government jetty at the time, in ballast, and we did not see her bottom. It was principally the hull of the vessel we surveyed; all above water.

4275. Do you still adhere to the report you made that she is throughout "a good staunch vessel, timber and frame of the usual size for tonnage"? I do.

4276. In No. 40, below, in answer to a question by Captain Towns, "Is she slightly built?" your reply is, "We consider her, in every respect, extra strong"? Yes.

4277.

- Captain T. S. Rountree. 4277. That is your opinion, from your examination? Yes; for her dimensions the frames and planking are extra strong.
- 8 Aug., 1862. 4278. She is copper-fastened except her centre fastenings? Yes.
4279. Is that an unusual thing, or is it often the case for the centre fastenings to be of iron? I have found out in a ship I have at present in hand, the "Sovereign of the Seas," that she has copper fastenings and every other one is iron; those that are driven from the outside are copper, but those that are driven from the inside, and do not go through the floor to the outside, are iron.
4280. By the Chairman: Where was the "Sovereign of the Seas" built? At St. John's, New Brunswick.
4281. By Mr. Weekes: There has been considerable expense incurred in fitting out the "Sea Witch" for the service in which she is now engaged? Yes.
4282. In your opinion, and from the observation you have made of all the alterations that have been effected, do you think the same expense would have been incurred in fitting out one of these colliers that go to Newcastle, and which were submitted to the Government, if one of them had been purchased for the service—would what has been done to the "Sea Witch," such as laying down the deck, fitting the pilots' cabins, &c., have cost as much on board one of the other vessels? I think it would have cost quite as much to fit the cabins, and that the outfit of the ship, as far as her masts and sails were concerned, would have cost a great deal more. It would have cost more to fit the "Pacific," or the other vessel, for a pilot schooner than the "Sea Witch" has cost, so far as the masts and sails are concerned.
4283. And an equal amount for her inward fittings? Yes, provided they had been carried out in the same way.
4284. There is nothing peculiar to the "Sea Witch" that made the fitting her out more expensive than another vessel would have been? Nothing.
4285. Have you been able to form any opinion as to the suitability of this vessel for the service she is intended for—have you been out in her? Yes, I went out in her on Saturday afternoon, and remained in her till Sunday evening. I was at sea in her all day on Sunday, and then, as it was likely to be fine weather, I came in; but I was in her a sufficient time to see what her qualities were. I was in her the whole of Sunday between the South Head and Botany Bay.
4286. You have not been in her in heavy weather? No, it was fine weather when I was out in her.
4287. Did you form any opinion as to the suitability of her present trim, or observe any other point in which you think she requires alteration? As far as her trim is concerned her draft fore and aft is very well, and she sits very well on the water for the sail she carries; but the mast is badly placed, and she is not properly ballasted. The ship is out of trim, as far as the internal arrangement is concerned.
4288. How did the vessel stay while you were on board? She stayed very well, but there was nothing to hinder her staying; there was no sea to speak of, and she was full sail.
4289. It has been stated here that in a heavy sea she is difficult to stay, or rather refuses to stay? No doubt about it.
4290. Would not the trim of any vessel affect very much her staying qualities? If Mr. Walker's yacht was trimmed in the same way she would not stay at all.
4291. Is that a famous vessel? It is the famous iron vessel that came out from England.
4292. You attribute her failure in staying to her bad trim? To the way she is trimmed.
4293. And you believe that an alteration in her trim would remove that objection? An alteration in the weight of the ship about the bows, and in her masts and sails—this alteration in her trim would make a different ship of her.
4294. The owner of the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" stated here, that had those vessels which were tendered by him to the Government been accepted for the pilot service, he should have recommended that some additional keel should have been placed on them;—do you think that that would be an advantage in the case of the "Sea Witch"? I do; and I recommended it in the first instance when first I saw the vessel's inside, before the ballast was taken in.
4295. Then an additional keel, as recommended in the case of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific," would, you think, very much improve the sea-going qualities, and indeed seaworthiness of the "Sea Witch"? Very much. I think if her keel were carried out as I suggested, and the alteration of her mast and ballast, she would be quite a different vessel.
4296. What is your opinion of the model of the "Sea Witch"? She is a very powerful vessel—a very powerful model, much more so than any of the other ships you have mentioned; all she wants is trim to enable her to keep her position, and keel to make her more weatherly.
4297. Is her breadth out of proportion to her length? I fancy that a pilot boat ought to be wide, for if you want to press them, narrow vessels of that size carry so much lee-water that you can do nothing with them. The "Sea Witch" only wants a little keel, to give her a little weatherly quality in bad weather.
4298. Do you think she would prove a good sea boat in a heavy gale? That she would, if she were properly put to rights.
4299. Are you aware whether she has been in a gale lately? I only know it from newspaper reports. I was on board the vessel yesterday, and I know what they told me there.
4300. Are you acquainted with the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" at all? Only from seeing them go backwards and forwards to Newcastle.
4301. It is said that the "Sea Witch" is very shallow, and draws very little water;—do you know what she is drawing at present? 8 feet 4, I think, from that to 8 feet 6 aft, and 6 feet forward.

4302. The "Pacific," one of the vessels recommended to the Government, shows by her register that she is 19 feet beam, and the "Sea Witch's" beam is 19 2-10ths feet; the "Pacific's" depth of hold is 7 8-10ths, and the depth of the hold of the "Sea Witch" is 7 7-10ths;—are they not, therefore, nearly the same in draft of water and depth of hold? I think the "Pacific" can hardly draw more water; she might draw a few more inches forward when fitted for that service.

Captain T. S.
Rountree.
8 Aug., 1862.

4303. Is there not the greatest difference of opinion among scientific men as to the best model of a ship? No doubt about it.

4304. Do they not differ extremely wide about the model of a vessel, whether there should be length, width, or depth? Very much; and I doubt if you take the model you have got from England, and build from it, whether you would build a better vessel than the "Sea Witch"? You would not build so powerful a vessel, I know, and I question whether you will build one more suitable for the service.

4305. Have you been able to form any opinion, from your experience here, as to the two systems of pilotage which have been in operation—the old whaleboat system, by which pilots were pulled out to board a ship, and the one now partly put in operation of outside pilot schooners? Yes; from my first arrival in the Colony in 1853, I have been dissatisfied with the management of pilots in this port, and I always had it in view that pilots should be stationed at sea, as I fancied that ships were much neglected. The first time I came into this port was in the beginning of 1853, when I came from Port Phillip with passengers. I was a perfect stranger here, as I had never before been in any of the Colonies; but I had about a hundred diggers on board, several of whom belonged to Sydney, and knew the harbour as well as the pilots. About twelve o'clock at night, the wind about south, I ran down, expecting to get a pilot off the port, as in all parts of the world: I ran past the light, and saw the open sky, and thought that was the way in, and should have run in but for a gentleman who was sitting down close to me, who told me that was the Gap.

4306. Where did you first meet with a pilot? We got past the South Reef and off Middle Head, and anchored there all night.

4307. And you were not boarded all night by a pilot? No; we got a pilot next morning, but not till we had got into harbour. I thought it was a great pity that with such a fine harbour the place was so much neglected, and I have since taken a deep interest in the question, and was in favour, when it was first spoken of, of having sea pilots. It is impossible in the North Sea to approach any port without being able to get a pilot, and it is almost impossible to get into a port and miss a pilot. Almost all the large ports in England and France are the same.

4308. Then all your further inspection of the "Sea Witch," since the time you gave this report, has confirmed you in the opinion you then gave, that she is a thoroughly staunch and sound vessel? Yes, and had that ship been properly managed the other day she would have come in without straining a rope-yarn.

4309. What was the damage done in the late gale? I saw the report in the Empire, and I went down, expecting to see something that was very frightful: I found that the boat was gone, about seven panes of glass were broken in the skylight, a little booby hatch stanchions were broken and the hatch gone. There was not a chafe in the main sheet; I overhauled the ropes, and they were not strained. The anchor on the starboard bow was hanging by the shank painter, and had been through all the gale the same as when she was lying in Watson's Bay. She went through the gale with two anchors at her bows, and had this boat been turned bottom up, but being turned up the other way the sea fell into her and staved her.

4310. Did you hear a report from the captain as to how she behaved during the gale? The captain spoke well of her. He said she behaved very well, excepting for this knot of a sea, but she had no mainsail set when the sea came on board of her, which would account for that, as there was nothing to keep her quiet. I heard one of the pilots, Mr. Jenkins, say, she behaved very well when they came round in close-reefed sail—when they stayed her.

4311. By the Chairman: Have you had much experience in fore-and-aft vessels? I have commanded two schooners during my lifetime.

4312. I think you said you recommended, when you first made the survey, that she should have an addition to her keel? Yes.

4313. Was that in order to make her more weatherly? Yes; her beam is rather out of proportion to her depth, and I know that in pressing upon the ship she would draw considerably less water than when she was lying quiet, on account of her extensive beam.

4314. Look at No. 40—there are some questions there, put by Captain Towns. The third question is, "Has she sufficient hold of the water to be weatherly?" The reply is, "We are of opinion, from her present draught of water, she has ample hold to be weatherly. The fastest vessels of the day are of light draught, and if our recommendation be carried out, we consider the 'Sea Witch' in every respect well suited for the purpose of an outside pilot boat." Is not that somewhat contradictory? I understood at the time that they were going to put this keel on, and it was for that reason I put the rider on, that it might be seen what was meant by that draught of water. We recommended to Captain Towns that the keel should be put on, but he wished her to be well tried first. If a very wide ship is pressing her bilge into the water she must naturally draw less water in midships than when she is lying quiet.

4315. Will you look at No. 39—it commences, "At the request of R. Towns, Esq., we the undersigned," and it ends in the singular number, "As far as draught of water is concerned I may say it is not unusual to put four feet of hanging keel on yachts from 80 to 100 tons."—How do you account for that? There may be a slight discrepancy there;

Captain T. S. Rountree. there was another gentleman with us—the captain of a very large schooner lying at Towns's Wharf, which belongs to Tahiti—but he did not sign the paper, though we all concurred that she wanted a little keel.

8 Aug., 1862.

4316. Do you mean that the statement being made in the singular number is an error? Yes, as I drew the report out I might have made the mistake. I drew the letter out in my own yard.

4317. Are you aware, in the last gale, what sail the "Sea Witch" had on, or did you hear under what sail she was hove-to? A close-reefed foresail and storm trysail.

4318. Is not her foresail a very large sail? Yes.

4319. If the weather had been very severe indeed, would she have been able to carry that sail as it was? Yes; but it is too large for a close reef—too square at the head.

4320. You consider that although it was boisterous when the "Sea Witch" was out, it was not more than a moderate gale, and that what occurred was owing to her not being ably worked? It certainly was a very strong gale, as she had only that sail set and she had no mainsail to keep her quiet.

4321. Have you ever seen the Liverpool pilot boats? Yes, I have.

4322. Are they of the same model as the "Sea Witch"? No, I think not.

4323. Are you aware whether they stay out in all weathers? Yes, but they have a good deal of shelter there in many points. I have often seen them lying under Point Lynas; in fact, when I was there, I went under Point Lynas and got my pilot there.

4324. Are you aware whether they hold their position in very boisterous weather? No doubt they do.

4325. Do you consider that the "Sea Witch" held her position in the late gale? She would have done if she had been properly managed.

4326. You think she is not skilfully managed? I think she was not on that occasion. The wind was at S.S.W., and they kept the ship's head from shore with this small sail for thirty-four hours, and the captain says he was keeping her off a lee shore when he was going from a weather shore. Had he put the ship's head in under proper sail she would never have been out of sight from the light-house.

4327. I accompanied you on board the "Sea Witch" at your invitation? Yes.

4328. I think you said that the captain spoke well of her qualities, and said she behaved well during the gale? Yes.

4329. Is it not the fact that Pilots Jenkins and Robson complained bitterly of her general conduct during the gale? They complained about several things,—about their beds being wet, but not generally about the ship.

4330. Did not they say they expected she would have gone down with them at one time? Figuratively; they were speaking then of the time when she shipped a quantity of loose water.

4331. Did they not appear excited? They explained how the water came in through seven broken panes in the skylight, and rushed into their bed-cabins.

4332. Did they not say that they would then not have given much for their lives? Yes, because they were in their bed-cabins, and were alarmed when they saw the water coming through the skylight, and rushing in to them, they being on the lee side. No doubt two or three tons might have come in in a very short time.

4333. Have you been appointed a member of the Pilot Board? I have.

4334. When were you appointed? The letter is dated the 2nd, I think.

4335. The 2nd of August? Yes.

4336. You did not consider the vessel, at the time the Government purchased her, a perfect vessel for a pilot boat? I recommended to Captain Towns, although I did not put it in the report, that they had better cut the foremast; and with the exception of that and the keel, I consider her as nice a little vessel for a pilot boat as you can have. I did not put that in the report, for I was not asked to survey the mast, but I knew the weight and position of the mast would be an impediment to the vessel—would make her plunge in the sea, and stop her staying.

4337. In your report, signed Thomas Rountree and William Livingstone, you refer to your recommendations;—are those recommendations contained in any paper now before the Committee, in any of the printed correspondence? Yes, here it is (referring to No. 39.)

4338. The only document I see here signed by yourself is No. 39? That is the recommendation itself.

4339. Where is the recommendation you speak of;—you say in No. 40 "if our recommendation be carried out"? It is in No. 39. I made the report No. 40 in answer to some inquiries of Captain Towns, and the other was written on the same sheet of paper.

4340. You say in No. 39 "as far as draft of water is concerned, I may say it is not unusual "to put four feet of hanging keel on yachts from 80 to 100 tons (measurement) in England, for "the purpose of going to windward";—is that what you mean by your recommendation? That is what I mean by our recommendation.

4341. When you made that recommendation you did not consider this vessel sufficiently weatherly for a pilot vessel? I considered that if she had her keel lengthened it would make her sufficiently weatherly.

4342. Should not a pilot vessel possess the most weatherly qualities it is possible to give a vessel? No doubt it would save a great deal of trouble, and she would keep her position with much more ease.

4343. You spoke of the "Sovereign of the Seas," and stated that she was built in New Brunswick? Yes.

4344. Are you aware where the "Sea Witch" was built? I believe she was built in the State of Maine; I asked the captain and he so informed me, and I know from the timber that it was States timber.

4345. They are both American—the “Sovereign of the Seas” and the “Sea Witch”? Yes, Captain T. S. Rountree. they are both American, but they are quite different; they have no such timber in New Brunswick as they have in the State of Maine;—they do not build of the same quality of timber in New Brunswick—the St. John’s vessels are built of soft wood—pine, such as we use here for shelving; one is cabbage-tree, the other is hard oak, white oak. 8 Aug., 1862.
4346. By Captain Moriarty: American white oak? Yes.
4347. By Mr. Weekes: The “Sea Witch” is built of American oak? Yes, of good sound American oak, and squared to the edge; it is all built in frame; there is not a loose timber in her.
4348. By the Chairman: Will you state to the Committee what alterations it is intended by the Pilot Board to make in the “Sea Witch”? (The witness referred to a drawing.) The foremast to be shortened 8 feet, and shifted 3 feet 6 farther aft; the bowsprit to be reduced 11 feet in length; the mainmast is not to be reduced, but the mainboom is to be shortened 5 feet; the keel will receive 3 feet in depth at the after end, and 1 foot 3 under the foremast, which will make her rudder certainly 3 feet longer; the ballast is to be taken from the ends of the ship and built up in the centre; the iron tanks to be taken out of the fore-castle, and the anchor shifted 10 feet* farther aft on the rail; the head of the foresail to be narrowed, and the gaff cut. I think those are the principal alterations.
4349. Has any estimate been made of the cost of these alterations? I believe not.
4350. What do you imagine will be the cost? I think Captain Towns said he would alter the sails himself, with his own sailmaker, and I do not think the alterations of the mast will cost more than £15.
4351. And the keel? There will be the dock dues; that will be the heaviest item; she will require to be there about two days; I suppose, altogether, the altering of the mast and putting on the keel will cost from £35 to £40.
4352. By Captain Moriarty: And the dock dues? She will go into the Government Dock.
4353. By the Chairman: Are you quite clear that the addition of that amount of keel to the vessel will not strain her so much as to render her unsafe when she goes to sea? Not at all.
4354. You are quite clear upon that? I am quite clear upon it.
4355. From your knowledge of the weather we have here, and of the seas upon the coast, do you think it possible for a vessel to hold her position—I am referring to a pilot vessel—in weather such as we have here sometimes? There might be times when it would be impossible to show a stitch of canvas on anything that might be afloat, but take ten months out of the twelve a ship will hold her position.
4356. In such a gale as the “Sea Witch” was out in, ought not a pilot boat properly constructed to be able to hold her position? Yes, and she ought to have done so if she had been properly managed.
4357. Even as she is now? Yes, even as she is now, if she had been properly worked.
4358. By Mr. Weekes: Will you look at the Sydney Morning Herald of the 7th August, 1862; read the paragraph relating to the voyage of the steamer “Eagle” from Moreton Bay, during the period when the “Sea Witch” was out in the last gale, and say whether that conveys to your mind that the gale was a very severe one when the “Sea Witch” was out? “The ‘Eagle’ left Keppel Bay on the 1st inst., and Port Curtis the same day, and arrived at the Company’s wharf at 1 o’clock this morning. She experienced light winds and fine weather to Indian Heads, from thence strong winds to Richmond Heads. On Monday, at 1 a.m., the wind veered to S.W., and blew strong; at 2, wind S.S.W., blowing a hurricane; hove the vessel to; at 6 a.m., furious gales, with a high sea; at 9, gale increasing, and fore-staysail was blown away, and the mainsail parted by the close-reef; at evening the gale began to take off, with heavy squalls of rain, but still a heavy sea running” —
4359. Was that the period when the “Sea Witch” was out? Yes, it was about that period, but not exactly at the same time; the gale was later down there.
4360. It was on the Monday when the “Eagle” met with this gale,—was that the time when the “Sea Witch” was out? Yes.
4361. By Mr. Hay: On what part of the coast was the “Eagle”? Off Indian Head.
4362. By Mr. Piddington: How far is that off from Sydney Head? I do not know the exact distance.
4363. By Mr. Weekes: Was it not about one o’clock on Monday morning that this hurricane commenced? Yes.
4364. By Mr. Hay: The gale the “Eagle” encountered seems to have been a long way to the northward? Yes.
4365. May not a gale be very severe to the northward of Richmond Heads and be very slight here? But as the wind was they got it from us.
4366. Might it not be a very heavy gale there and be moderate here? It might.
4367. By Mr. Piddington: You have no means of knowing that the gale which was so severe when encountered by the “Eagle” was equally intense where the “Sea Witch” was situated? I cannot say that.
4368. By Mr. Hay: Smoky Cape appears to be about thirty miles to the north of the Macquarie, and this vessel appears to have been sailing the greater part of Tuesday after the wind abated before she got to Smoky Cape, so that the gale, the severity of which she experienced, must have been encountered by her a long way to the north? Yes; and she would make much weather than the pilot boat.
4369. By Captain Moriarty: Why? She never was a fine vessel in a seaway.

4370.

- Captain T. S. Rountree.
 8 Aug., 1862.
4370. By Mr. Hay: There would be no difficulty in getting reliable information from other sources, as to the strength of the gale outside Port Jackson? No. I saw in the report of the steamer coming from Newcastle on Monday that she passed a ship lying under close-reefed main-top-sail.
4371. By the Chairman: If the gale had been one of more than ordinary severity, would it have been possible for this vessel to have carried such a foresail, close-reefed, and storm trysail? Yes; she would carry that foresail till it was blown out of the bolt ropes.
4372. By Mr. Hay: Do you know if any vessel arrived in Port Jackson during that time? Yes; there was one on Monday came from Adelaide, the ship "Planter." She had a pilot on board when she came up to Garden Island; but he got on board at the Heads, by the boat, in the usual way.
4373. By Captain Moriarty: I think you gave us some description of the fastenings of the "Sovereign of the Seas"? Yes.
4374. I gathered from you that the "Sea Witch" was fastened much in the same way? I said it is usual to do so in an American ship.
4375. If you will do me the favour to pay attention to what I say, and give me a direct answer, I will not say anything that will have a tendency to confuse you; and if you do not understand my question I shall be happy to repeat it. I understood you to say that the fastenings of the "Sea Witch" were similar to those of the "Sovereign of the Seas," that there was an iron bolt in the centre, with copper fastenings on either side? The "Sovereign of the Seas" has knees that run up and down the frames from nearly the keelson up to the whole beam, and every other bolt is iron; now that iron bolt does not go through the floor, but the copper one does, and is clenched inside. Now I find in the keelson of the "Sea Witch" that every other floor presents an iron bolt, and if the copper ones are not there from the outside, which I suppose they are, she is deficient of a bolt, and is not properly fastened. But I apprehend the bolt is driven from the outside nearly through.
4376. Is the "Sea Witch" fastened in that sort of way? Every other floor has an iron bolt presented on the keelson, and if the alternate floor is not copper-fastened on the outside she is deficient in fastenings; but I anticipate, as the "Sovereign of the Seas" is fastened in that way, that the "Sea Witch" must have a copper bolt driven from the outside.
4377. Does that meet the iron bolt? No, it is in every other floor.
4378. Do you think that a proper mode of fastening a ship? No, it is not an English mode.
4379. Is it not, in your opinion, intended to impose upon the public by adopting that course? It depends upon the timbers. If the bolt has to go through six feet of timber it need not go through the whole to secure it; but if it has to go through only a foot, it is then necessary that it should go through the whole and be clenched.
4380. How many feet does it go through in the case of the "Sea Witch"? I should fancy three feet six.
4381. How much of that is iron? I say an iron bolt presents itself on every other floor inside; that would probably go within three inches of the outside, to save its being presented to the action of the copper.
4382. You do not know how far these bolts have gone in? No.
4383. They may have only gone in three inches? If they were copper there might be reason to suspect, but I do not think it would be worth their while to save the iron.
4384. Was the "Sea Witch," in your opinion, too much by the head when she went to sea the last time? No; I think she was in very good trim for sailing, so far as being on her keel was concerned. Her draft of water forward and aft, I think, is what it ought to be.
4385. I gathered that you wished to make a very important change in her? Yes.
4386. The change you suggest would bring her more by the stern? She would have more hanging keel aft than forward. I would not alter her trim, but would allow her to remain as she is.
4387. If you put more keel on her she will be more by the stern? Yes; we propose to put three feet additional on her stern and fifteen inches forward.
4388. You wish her to draw ten feet aft? It will be more than ten feet; it will be eleven feet if you put three feet additional on the stern.
4389. She will then be three feet additional by the stern? Yes.
4390. When you came into this port on the first occasion, you say you did not get a pilot until after you got in? I did not.
4391. And you were indebted to the intelligence of a gentleman whom you had on board as a passenger, for information which prevented you from running upon the Gap? Yes.
4392. You got a pilot the next morning? Yes.
4393. Did you give that pilot a certificate? I believe so.
4394. You did? Yes.
4395. Did you report at the pilot office that your ship had been neglected? No, I never made any complaint whatever.
4396. How are the authorities to know that the pilots neglect their duties if, in such cases, complaints are not made to them? I was at that time a perfect stranger. I did not know the rules of the port, or anything about them; besides everybody was very busy just then.
4397. Although you did not get the assistance of a pilot, you gave a certificate that you did, and never pointed out to the authorities that the pilot had neglected his duty? I did not know the rules of the port at the time. I did get a pilot at the "Sow and Pigs."
4398. Did you not get a copy of the port regulations from him? Yes; but I was very busy at the time, having a ship full of passengers, and I do not suppose I had time to read them.
4399. You have given a very decided opinion upon the management of a vessel you were not

not on board;—do you give it as your decided opinion that the person in charge of that vessel was incompetent to manage her? I say she was badly managed—the man is a perfect stranger to me. Captain T. S. Rountree.

4400. You being fifty miles away from her, and not seeing the circumstances in which she was placed, or what was done on board, assert positively that she was badly managed? I only judge from the log and their own representation. 8 Aug. 1862.

4401. You say she would not have strained a rope-yarn if she had been properly managed? She would not; indeed she did not. What I said was, that if the boat had been turned upside down, as she ought to have been, when the sea came on board she would not have been broken to pieces; or the boat might have been hauled aft on to the poop deck. I only know if I had been lying to with my head off the shore, and the wind at S.S.W., I should have considered it bad management.

4402. Are you aware that the winds on this coast change their course very suddenly? The wind was at S.S.W.

4403. It began at S.W.? When he was hove to it was S.S.W.

4404. Supposing the wind had veered to S.S.E., in what position would he have been then? It does not do for a pilot vessel to lie twenty miles from land waiting for a south-east wind.

4405. If he had been close in what would have been the result? I should not be afraid to be caught in that ship by the wind at east, if she were only six miles off the coast, only let me put her in trim—which she would have been if I had been on board.

4406. Is she not in trim? No, neither to stay nor sail. With nothing but six empty cabins in midships, and both ends filled with all sorts of things, the ship is not in trim and has not fair play.

4407. I cannot find out what your recommendations were that you allude to, and I have not been able to get any explanation of them;—you say, “if our recommendation be carried out”? I meant that the ship wanted more keel to enable her to go to windward. I spoke to Captain Towns on the subject. I did not know that the report was going to be published, and wrote the two reports on one sheet of paper.

4408. You speak of your own recommendations; I do not see those recommendations at all; I cannot find them out;—do you mean that they were verbal recommendations? No; just as the letter was written I gave it to Captain Towns, and in the first part of the letter (No. 39) we recommend that four feet of hanging keel should be put on. If the thing had been left to me I should have done that with her. One of the fastest boats in England, the “Julworth,” has four feet keel.

4409. By the Chairman: Is she a shallow vessel, flat floored? Not flat floored.

4410. By Captain Moriarty: You wish to connect the third paragraph in No. 39 with the questions put to you by Captain Towns in No. 40? Yes.

4411. By Mr. Piddington: I think you say every other floor of this “Sea Witch” is fastened with iron? It presents itself.

4412. Every other floor? Every other timber; she is built in frames. I think the frames are seventeen inches.

4413. Are you aware whether there is a single copper fastening in her keel? I never saw her keel at all.

4414. Are you aware whether there is a single copper fastening in her keel? I am not aware.

4415. If you are not aware whether she has a single copper fastening in her keel, do you think, not being aware of that, you can say she is sufficiently copper-fastened? If these bolts driven from the outside, as in most ships of her class, are of copper, the keel must be sufficiently fastened.

4416. That is an assumption;—you say you are not aware whether the keel is copper-fastened? I am not aware that it is in the “Sea Witch,” but I know that that is the practice in vessels of her class.

4417. If you are not aware, how can you assert that she is sufficiently copper-fastened? With all, excepting the centre fastenings—in all other respects ———

4418. I am not speaking of other respects, but of the keel fastenings, and I again ask you, if you are not aware that the keel of the “Sea Witch” is copper-fastened, how you can assert that she is sufficiently copper-fastened? I cannot say that she is properly copper-fastened in the keel.

4419. If you cannot say that, can you say she is sufficiently copper-fastened? Perhaps not.

4420. Do you not state in your report, No. 40, “in every part she is strictly and sufficiently copper-fastened”? I assume that these copper bolts are put from the outside, according to the rule of shipbuilding of that class.

4421. Then in your report you assumed what you had no knowledge of? I assumed what I had no knowledge of, as far as that bolt was concerned.

4422. Then if you acknowledge that you reported to the Government upon an assumption, for which there was no foundation, what reliance can be placed on your report? I am pretty certain, in my own mind, that they are all there.

4423. Why do you suppose they are all there? The keel would not remain on if they were not there.

4424. Do not the iron fastenings go through the keel? If the iron went through to the outside, it would have been eaten off long ago.

4425. Could a vessel, fastened in this way, be said to be sufficiently well fastened? If the copper bolts were driven from the outside.

4426. But you do not know whether she has copper bolts driven from the outside? I do not know.

4427. By Mr. Weekes: You do not say that her keel fastenings are of copper? I do not.

4428. By Mr. Piddington: You say, “except the centre fastenings,” and also that “she is strictly Captain T. S. Rountree. strictly and sufficiently copper-fastened"? I never saw the other keel fastenings, but I go by the build of the vessel.

8 Aug., 1862. 4429. Not being aware that there is a single copper fastening in her keel, how can you say that she is sufficiently copper-fastened? Put in that light, I certainly cannot swear to it.

4430. Then you say that she is sufficiently copper-fastened, not being aware whether she had a single copper fastening in her keel? I scarcely think a man would put a keel on without fastenings, and if copper bolts are not there the keel would drop off.

4431. Do you not acknowledge that you are not aware whether there is or is not a single copper fastening in the keel? I never saw her bottom.

4432. Not being aware whether she has a single copper fastening in her keel, can you say—knowing only what you do know—that she is sufficiently copper-fastened? She proves, by her stability, to be sufficiently fastened.

4433. Can you, or can you not? I may be wrong in that respect; I only go by the ordinary rule, in a ship-builder.

4434. I ask you to go from your actual knowledge of the "Sea Witch";—have you not reported upon her? I have not reported upon her bottom; I never saw it.

4435. Have you not stated in the report, No. 40 in the printed correspondence, that the "Sea Witch" is in every part "strictly and sufficiently copper-fastened"? I assume that these bolts were there.

4436. Have you any right to assume anything? Perhaps not, strictly.

4437. As a surveyor of a ship, have you right to make an assumption —

4438. By Mr. Weekes: Look at what you did say —

4439. By Mr. Piddington: I refer to No. 2,—“Is she chiefly copper-fastened?”—

4440. By Mr. Weekes: Did you say, “We cannot say if the keel fastenings are copper”? Yes. “Is she chiefly copper-fastened? Except the centre fastenings.” There I reported them as iron, and if there are copper bolts there, they are to my credit. If they are iron fastenings, so much the worse for the ship. “We cannot say if the keel fastenings are copper.”

4441. By Mr. Piddington: Go on with the remainder? “But in every part.” I might have said, “in every other part.”

4442. Just adhere to what you have actually said? “In every part she is strictly and sufficiently copper-fastened;” with the exception of her keel fastenings.

4443. You make that exception now? Yes.

4444. I believe you were appointed a member of the Pilot Board some time during the present month of August? Yes; I think on the 2nd.

4445. Should the Government require another pilot vessel, and a vessel now in port happen to be offered to the Government, and they referred to the Pilot Board, of which you are a member, with a view to ascertain whether the vessel were suitable, what would you do? I could only speak as one of the Board.

4446. If the Pilot Board, of which you were a member, reported that the vessel referred to them by the Government was unsuitable for the purpose, and the Government within a week of the delivery of your report purchased the vessel, what would you think of the transaction? I do not think the Government ought to have their hands tied to do everything the Board required; but if I were giving a personal report to the Government, or were one of a majority of a Board giving a report, and that report were referred to any one else, and the opinion of the person so referred to was acted upon I should not think my seat was worth anything.

4447. If the Pilot Board were referred to upon a professional question, as to whether a vessel was suitable for the pilot service or not, and the Board reported that it was not fitted, and yet in defiance of that opinion, within a week the Government were to purchase that vessel, would you not think that the Board was treated with contempt? I am willing to give my services where they are useful to the public.

4448. I am not asking you as to your willingness to give your services to the public, but I ask you whether, under such circumstances as I have described, you would not think the Government had treated the Board with contempt? The Government are the parties responsible to the public, and if the Board objected the responsibility would lie with the Government.

4449. Of what use is the Pilot Board to the public if, on a professional question, the Government disregard their opinion? They are not responsible —

4450. I am not asking you as to their responsibility—I am asking you of what use is the Pilot Board to the public if, when they have expressed an opinion upon a professional question, their opinion is disregarded by the Government? Perhaps they would not be of great use if their opinion were generally treated in that way, but in one particular case the Pilot Board is quite as liable to be wrong as the Government.

4451. You think the Pilot Board on a professional question is quite as liable to be wrong as the head of the Treasury, who is not a professional man? Many clever men are not professional men.

4452. I do not ask you whether or not many men who may not be professional may be clever, but I ask you whether the Pilot Board, in the event of a question being referred to them, the Board being composed of professional men, is not a better authority than the head of a department who may not be a professional man? Not always.

4453. From what class of men are the members of the Pilot Board usually drawn? I am not aware. I have only seen two or three since I have been in the country. I have not taken much interest in it.

4454. Your acquaintance with the Pilot Board is so limited that you do not know the class of men of whom it is composed? I have seen on the Board some clever men, and I have seen some who did not know much about shipping.

4455. I again put the question;—I ask what is the class of men of whom the Pilot Board is usually composed? They have generally been seafaring men, to the best of my knowledge. Captain T. S. Rountree.

4456. Have you any reason to doubt the professional capability of the members forming the present Pilot Board? As seafaring men? 8 Aug., 1862.

4457. As men qualified to give the Government an opinion in a case, if referred to them, similar to that of the "Sea Witch"? Well, I think they would differ very widely in many points, the present Board even.

4458. Do you think the present Pilot Board so incapable as not to be able to concur in a report to the Government upon a professional question? I do not say so, but I say they would differ very widely upon many points, even connected with shipping.

4459. Are the members of the Pilot Board paid by a salary every year? I really do not know, but I should stop the being paid if I could.

4460. You do not know whether the members of the Pilot Board are paid by salary or by fee? I do not know that they are paid a farthing.

4461. You are not aware that they are paid by fees? I never saw the by-laws, so far as the working of the Board is concerned.

4462. In what way do you think you are qualified to be a member of that Board? I think I know a good deal about shipping; I have been brought up to it all my life. My conduct in this matter is not based upon anything personal. I merely take a seat at the Board, thinking I may be of service to the country.

4463. As regards yourself, you think you are qualified to give a professional opinion to the Government, if they were to refer a similar question to you to that which was referred to the former Board in reference to the "Sea Witch"? I do.

4464. Have you any doubt that other members of the Board are equally well qualified with yourself?

Mr. Weekes objected to the question. The witness withdrew. The witness was again called in.

4465. By Mr. Piddington: If the Board of which you are a member—I speak of the Pilot Board—were to report that any vessel referred to you for your professional opinion was not fit for the service for which she was intended, and the Government within one week from the date of the report bought that vessel in spite of the condemnation of the Pilot Board, do you not think the Board would be treated with contempt by the Government? I certainly think the Government have the right to do as they like in such a matter; and I would consider myself, as long as I held a seat at that Board, as subservient to the Government in a matter of that sort.

4466. By the Chairman: I think that is hardly a reply —

4467. Mr. Piddington repeated the question: There is no doubt that there would be a species of contempt, but still, had I been on the Pilot Board, I should have carried out the Government's directions, inasmuch as they are responsible to the country.

4468. What are the duties of the Pilot Board, in your opinion? I take it to be the management of the harbour, navigation, lights, and the general management of these matters; whatever may happen on the water, and is of consequence to the public.

4469. Then in all these cases you have enumerated, if the Pilot Board offer to the Government their united opinion in one direction and the Government take the contrary, do you think that is a desirable state of affairs? I still think the Government are responsible, and ought to take the lead in these matters.

4470. What value to the country then is this Pilot Board? It might be valuable in nineteen cases out of twenty, and if the Board were valuable in only one case out of twenty it would be of use.

4471. You maintain the right of the Government to disregard the opinion of the Pilot Board whenever it thinks it necessary? Not exactly. I say there may be cases which come before the Pilot Board where the opinion of the Board should be taken, but generally the Government are wholly responsible, and should have the right of deciding.

4472. How can you distinguish between the cases in which the decision of the Board should be authoritative, and those in which it should not? In the case of the "Sea Witch" the Government are entirely responsible for that, as life and property are at stake to a great extent. I will take another case—the collision of two ships in the harbour. This is a matter about which sailors would know more than the Government, and the Board should decide in such a case.

4473. Then there are cases wherein, if the Pilot Board gave one opinion and the Government the contrary, you would think the Pilot Board was treated with contempt? I should think them badly used.

4474. Is not the decision of a question as to the suitability of a vessel for a pilot, equally with the decision of a question relating to the collision of two vessels in the harbour, a nautical matter? There is a wonderful difference between the two cases, for in the one case the lives of two or three hundred people in a vessel outside the Heads may depend upon having a proper vessel for a pilot boat, but it would not be the same in deciding the question of a collision in the harbour.

4475. You were brought up to the sea, I think you stated? I served two apprenticeships—one to the sea, and one to a shipwright's. A great portion of my family were shipwrights.

4476. How long were you at sea altogether? I think I have been captain of a ship about seventeen years.

4478. Then you ought to know very well the quality of the materials used in building a ship? Yes. 4479.

- Captain T. S. Rountree. 4479. You report that the "Sea Witch" is built of oak? Yes.
4480. Do you mean English oak? No, American white oak.
- 8 Aug., 1862. 4481. Is the "Sea Witch," being built of American oak, equal to any English vessel built of English oak? Good American white oak is not quite equal, but it will stand next to English oak.
4482. Do you think a vessel built of American oak would rank at Lloyds as equal with a vessel built of English oak? I think if it were built under the same survey.
4483. You think there is no difference in the quality of the material between English and American oak? There are two different sorts of oak.
4484. I am speaking of the oak of which the "Sea Witch" is built? I am speaking of the United States white oak, and I say that a vessel built of that material is equal to an English built ship, if built under the same survey.
4485. Would a ship built of American white oak rank as high at Lloyds as a ship built of English oak? If built under the same survey.
4486. I think you say the "Sea Witch" is not built on a similar model to the Liverpool pilot boats? She is not.
4487. Do you doubt the perfection of the model upon which the Liverpool pilot boats are built? No; they are built about Ipswich and inside the Isle of Wight, where they build very nice boats.
4488. If the "Sea Witch" is built on a different model from the Liverpool pilot boats, do you not think that constitutes a reason to doubt her quality as a pilot vessel? It is not always that the best model is the best ship for any purpose, either for carrying or for sailing.
4489. Do you think the "Sea Witch" is built on a perfect model for the pilot service? She is not perfect; perhaps you might build a vessel that would go faster to windward than she does, but you might build a vessel that would answer the purpose worse.
4490. Have you not stated that certain alterations are necessary, and that if these alterations are made they will make the "Sea Witch" an entirely different vessel? Yes.
4491. If you consider such alterations are necessary as will make her an entirely different vessel, how can you think she is now suitable for a pilot vessel? That vessel might work upon this coast for many years —
4492. You are not answering my question? She could not be more seaworthy or safer.
4493. I am not speaking of her seaworthiness, but of her suitability for a pilot boat? This alteration will make her keep her position better than she will under her present rig. By cutting her mast and shifting it she will not have so much weight forward, and will stay more readily; and by adding to her keel she will be more weatherly.
4494. All these alterations will make her more suitable for a pilot boat? Yes.
4495. When the Government bought her, was she so suitable as she ought to have been for a pilot boat? Perhaps not.
4496. What is your idea of the total cost necessary in order to render the "Sea Witch" suitable for a pilot vessel? The cost of these alterations?
4497. Of any alterations that may be necessary? That depends upon what is done to her. If you put her in the hands of strange workmen out of doors, she would perhaps cost £100, about £100.
4498. Taking the "Sea Witch" as she is now, without these necessary alterations, if she were on a lee shore, exposed to a gale, do you think she would be safe? Yes; I have been on a lee shore many a time in a worse ship.
4499. You consider her weatherly qualities sufficiently good to enable her to keep off a lee shore in a gale? I would not be frightened if I were in her five or six miles from land with the wind due east.
4500. Have you ever heard that she refuses to stay in heavy weather? I have heard so.
4501. Do you disbelieve it? I do not disbelieve it; I wonder how she stays at all.
4502. Under these circumstances you would not object to be in her on a lee shore in a gale? I would not. Perhaps you will allow me to add one word to that;—I think I said I would not be long on board the ship before I would alter her trim. By merely shifting the ballast in the hold—a different arrangement in that point would make a great alteration.
4503. By Mr. Sadleir: If you were going to buy the "Sea Witch" for yourself, what should you say was her value? That would depend upon what a man had for her to do; she would not be of any particular value to me.
4504. What would be her general value in the market? I could tell you much better what it would cost to build such a vessel as that. She is only one man's money out of a hundred; no one has a use for such a ship; she would not be a profitable vessel for a coaster, though she might suit a shallow water river.
4505. Her market value is what I want to know—do you think she is worth £1,000? You might put a ship in the market to-day worth £3,000, and not get £1,000 for it.
4506. I presume you have been buying sailing ships, and know something of their value? I bought the ship the "Sovereign of the Seas," the other day, for £1,125, and I know very well she could not be built for three times the amount.
4507. Is she a superior vessel to this? She is much larger; she can carry 1,000 tons.
4508. Then you consider her a superior vessel to the "Sea Witch"? I am not speaking of her class.
4509. She is more valuable? You could not put the two together to value them.
4510. Which is the most valuable? The "Sovereign of the Seas" would be of no use for a pilot boat.
4511. I am not speaking of their fitness for a pilot boat, but of their comparative value? I should fancy if the "Sea Witch" had been put into the market, and there had been any demand for a vessel of that kind for the Island trade, she would have been worth from £1,000 to £1,200.
- 4512.

4512. By the Chairman: When there is not a demand I suppose vessels are cheaper? Captain T. S. Rountree. There was one of the most beautiful vessels that could have been built for a pilot boat that was offered to me for £700, and she was afterwards sold for that sum—the “Coral Queen.” Captain Shanks, who brought that ship all the way from China, on purpose to sell her to the Government for a pilot cutter, declared that she missed stays over and over again. She was built by C—— of Portsmouth Harbour. 8 Aug., 1862.
4513. By Mr. Sadleir: You think she would sell for from £1,000 to £1,200? If there were any demand for that class of vessels in the market, but they might be a drug.
4514. What has been the total expense of fitting her out—her cabins and all other fittings? I do not know what it has cost.
4515. Do you think it has cost £100? I have no idea.
4516. Do you think it could be done for £100? I have no idea.
4517. You have been on board? Yes, and I saw that she had a large cabin, a cabin table, and a large skylight, but I did not go into a valuation. I do not know who laid the floor.
4518. You have no idea of the cost of making the alterations you saw? I know what it would cost to strip that ship's rigging and put it to rights.
4519. You have no idea of the expense of fitting up the cabins? No.
4520. For what could you build a vessel of that description? You could not get such a vessel built, to have justice done, under £30 a ton.
4521. By Mr. Weekes: Do I understand you to say £30 a ton for register tonnage or for builder's measurement? Builder's measurement.
4522. If her registered tonnage is about 63 tons what would be the builder's measurement? About one third more.
4523. By Mr. Sadleir: What do you suppose would be the expense of building such a vessel? You will not get a vessel of that sort under £3,500. You will not get a first-class vessel of that sort, for a pilot cutter, if justice is done her, for less, even if you send Home for her; and anyone who undertakes to build and fit out a pilot vessel in this harbour for £20 must lose by her.
4524. Have you seen this estimate (referring to No. 58 in the printed correspondence) to build a pilot boat at £22 a ton? Yes; but you would find that outfit very bare.
4525. By the Chairman: Could you build such a vessel in this Colony for the same money? No; this outfit would only cost about £4 a ton upon the ship's measurement; it is what is called a Baltic outfit.
4526. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you know the age of the “Sea Witch”? No, I do not.
4527. If she is seven years old, how much longer will she last, being an American built vessel? That ship will be a good ship ten or twelve years after this.
4528. By the Chairman: Are American built vessels generally good ships when they are twenty years old? Many of them; but I said ten or twelve years from the present time. I do not know anything about her present ———
4529. By Mr. Sadleir: You say you consider that the Pilot Board should be subservient to the Government? Perhaps I was using too strong a term in saying subservient. I did not mean by that to volunteer as a servant, but that the Government should take the lead, as it has all the responsibility. The Pilot Board is to the Government what the Government is to the Legislative.
4530. Do you consider yourselves honorary officers or paid? I never made the inquiry. I should be glad to give my services without receiving payment.
4531. Would you consider it your duty to remonstrate with the Government, if they neglected to do something that was recommended by you? Not if the responsibility were taken off my shoulders, and a minute were made of it.
4532. Would you not feel bound to remonstrate? I would speak my mind.
4533. Have you been in vessels where boats have been swept away in a gale of wind? Yes, I have been in vessels where the decks have been swept.
4534. In what sized vessel? In a little vessel that had 1,500 quarters in her, from Archangel, between the North Cape and the Orkneys.
4535. Have you ever been on board large vessels where large green seas have come on board in a gale of wind and rushed down into the cabin? Yes.
4536. What precautions have been taken on such occasions—to batten down the hatches? Yes.
4537. Was any precaution of that kind taken on board the “Sea Witch”? I believe not; I believe the window boards were not even put in, to preserve the windows.
4538. Had they any tarpaulins on board? I question whether they had.
4539. Do you not think it is essentially necessary to take these precautions, in a gale of wind? Yes, a vessel should be made as snug as possible, and her skylights and hatches should be secured.
4540. Do you not think a vessel is liable to danger without these precautions? Yes, the people on board would have nobody to blame but themselves if anything happened to them.
4541. Do you know how far the “Sea Witch” drifted during the gale? I believe from twenty-five to thirty miles.
4542. She did not hold her position off the harbour? No.
4543. Do you think that was from bad management? Yes; her head was put off the coast, she was lying-to, and no attempt whatever was made to keep her position.
4544. By the Chairman: Do you not think if the Government are of opinion that the members of the Pilot Board are not competent to advise with them, they ought to be dismissed? I think there are many matters in which the Pilot Board can work for years without being interfered with by the Government.
4545. Of course I allude to professional matters;—do you not think if the Government consider

Captain T. S. Rountree. sider the Board incompetent to assist them with their advice they ought not to retain their services? I think they ought, if it is work that comes immediately under the Board's supervision.

8 Aug., 1862.

4546. Are you not of opinion that when Government seeks the advice of the Pilot Board they admit their competency to advise them? Yes, otherwise they would not ask them.

4547. By Mr. Weekes: Suppose a difference of opinion should arise between the Government and the Pilot Board, which do you think ought to defer to the other? I think the Board ought to give way; that is my opinion.

4548. By the Chairman: Whether satisfied that they are right or wrong? I think the Government would hardly interfere where they found the knowledge of the Board was superior to their own.

4549. By Mr. Weekes: Do you think the Government should be bound to follow the advice, at all times and upon all subjects, of the Pilot Board? I think not.

4550. Suppose the Pilot Board advise the adoption of a policy in connection with the pilot service that the Government disapprove, should the Government carry out that policy although they disapprove of it? Certainly not.

4551. Might there not be that difference of opinion, consistently with retaining the Pilot Board in their position? Yes.

4552. They might advise, and at the same time not dictate? They might advise, and, if their advice was not accepted, I should say there leave it.

4553. As in the case of the late Pilot Board;—the members of the late Pilot Board advised that these vessels should be built in England—do you think the Government would be justified in declining to carry out that proposition of the Board if they considered that equally good vessels could be built in the Colony? I should decline building a vessel in England, for I am satisfied we should not get such vessels as we should wish to have.

4554. I suppose you never met, in all your voyages, with a vessel that was perfect? I have seen attempts made by some of the most clever men in England which have proved failures.

4555. I suppose there are no vessels built but may be improved, after trial, by some alterations? Yes; and that is more particularly the case when you come down to yachts and pilot boats.

4556. Is it not very absurd to condemn a vessel before any attempt to alter her trim is made? Yes.

4557. Do you know anything of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific"? I do not, except from seeing them go up and down.

4558. From your knowledge of the "Sea Witch," do you consider her as well adapted for the pilot service as these vessels? More so than either of them.

4559. Comparing their value, should you think the "Sea Witch" of as much value as the "Pacific," they being about the same tonnage? I think I would rather have the "Sea Witch" at the present moment than the "Pacific."

4560. By the Chairman: I think you said you never examined either of them? I know her age.

4561. By Mr. Weekes: It is said that the "Pacific" is about six years old, and the "Sea Witch" is seven or eight? I was in the Colony when the "Pacific" came up from New Zealand—I saw her when she came up, and from her construction, as she is very heavily hung at the quarter, I should say she is not at all adapted for a pilot boat. She will soon become leaky.

4562. By the Chairman: Is not running in the coal trade likely to try her strength? That is very different from being constantly engaged in the pilot service.

4563. Suppose it has been stated that the "Atlantic" has been at sea, heavily laden with coal, when a steamer could not go out of the harbour? She might have done that in her youth, once in a way, but she will not do it now.

4564. Are you speaking of the "Atlantic"? No, I was referring to the "Pacific."

4565. By Mr. Piddington: When the Government referred to the Pilot Board the question whether they approved of the "Sea Witch" as a pilot boat, do you think that was a question of public policy? Yes; I think the public interest has been much affected by the pilot service of late years.

4566. I am asking you whether, when the Government referred the question of the purchase of the "Sea Witch" to the Pilot Board, you considered that a question of public policy? I do not know.

4567. How long is it since you purchased the "Sovereign of the Seas"? A fortnight, three weeks, or perhaps a month ago.

4568. What is her tonnage? I have no record of her tonnage. I think, previous to her being burned, she was from twelve to thirteen hundred tons. She is a vessel that will carry a thousand tons.

4569. By Mr. Weekes: Do you know by repute the character of a New York pilot boat called the "Mary Taylor"? Yes.

4570. Is she considered by sailors to be a vessel of very superior qualities? Yes; I have conversed with many respecting her.

4571. Will you look at that sketch contained in Marett's work on shipbuilding (handing a book to witness), and say whether that is described as the model of the "Mary Taylor"? Yes.

4572. Does that model answer, or nearly so, to the model of the "Sea Witch"? Yes, it does in a great measure, but the "Sea Witch" is hollow-bottomed, and this vessel's bottom is straight. I only know that from walking on the "Sea Witch's" inside.

4573. By the Chairman: Is not the "Sea Witch" much flatter floored than the lines of the "Mary Taylor"? No; I think much the same, taking beam in proportion.

4574. Would you call this vessel straight-keeled? Yes.
4575. Then if the "Sea Witch's" keel is deeper in midships than at the bow and stern, she would differ from this? Yes.
4576. By Mr. Weekes: So far as the keel is concerned? Yes.
4577. Still, the "Sea Witch" is very near the model of the "Mary Taylor"? Yes, with the exception that she might be a few inches deeper in the keel, in the centre.
4578. By the Chairman: Is not the "Mary Taylor," as shown in that tracing, deeper at the stern than forward—is she not longer in the keel? Yes.
4579. Is that a model of the "Sea Witch"? The "Sea Witch" has about two feet more keel, and about the same draft fore and aft.
4580. Are you aware whether this vessel (the "Mary Taylor") has any false keel? I suppose her hanging keel is a false keel.
4581. Does not this drawing show only her keel, and not her false keel? It only shows her keel.
4582. You have never seen the lines of the "Mary Taylor," except in this book? Except in that book.
4583. In these drawings is it usual to show the false keel? They generally show the full depth, without the intermediate lines.
4584. Would not the curving in at the bottom make a very material difference in the weatherly qualities of a vessel? The only difference is, that when pressing her hard with sail, if she were not kept upright, she would present a flatter surface to the sea; but if I were going to build a vessel of this class I would have those hollow lines filled in.
4585. If in a moderate seaway, when the "Sea Witch" was putting a pilot on board a ship, her keel was frequently seen out of the water, was it where it ought to have been—was she in her element or out of it? Certainly it is not advisable to have a vessel jumping out of the water; but any vessel of the same length* and the same draft of water would have done the same thing.
4586. Is it not advisable to have a ship that will not jump out of water? No doubt.
4587. By Mr. Weekes: I suppose in a very heavy sea all vessels must show more or less of their keels? Yes. I know you may see the keels of 170 feet steamboats.
4588. By the Chairman: When a sailor says he has seen the keel of a vessel out of water, what do you understand by it? I have heard them say that the rudder has jumped out of the water.
4589. Ought that to be the case? No; but notwithstanding all you could do to guard against it, in the same length of vessel you might see the rudder jump out of the water sometimes.

Captain T. S.
Rountree.

| MR. WEEKES, | | CAPTAIN MORIARTY, |
| MR. PIDDINGTON, | | MR. SMART. |

SAUL SAMUEL, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Robert Dodge Merrill, Esq., called in and examined:—

4590. By Mr. Weekes: You were formerly Consul of the United States in this Colony? I R. D. Merrill, Esq.
4591. Mr. Levenworth, the present Consul, stated in evidence before this Committee, that a Captain Pearce, of the "Magnolia," had wished to purchase the "Sea Witch" from the Government after the Government had bought her, and that he was willing to give the price paid by the Government, and such sum in addition as might be agreed upon for any alterations made in her by the Government? For such repairs as he thought necessary.
4592. He said likewise, that this had been made known to you—that you had been informed of it? Captain Pearce's ship was condemned. I sold the ship and cargo here. Captain Pearce had upwards of eight thousand pounds in my hands. He had been talking to Captain Chapman about buying this "Sea Witch" before the Government purchased her. The Government were talking about purchasing her; but he said, "I do not know—they may not buy her after all;" but while he was thinking the matter over in his own mind the Government bought her, and it was too late. Afterwards he said—"I am very sorry I did not buy this vessel." He wanted her for the Island trade, and would have given the same price for her that the Government gave. I said to him—"You cannot buy her now; the Government have been at some expense in making alterations;" but he said he would pay for all those alterations which he thought necessary for the improvement of the vessel. He was very anxious to purchase her. At the same time he did not make the offer to the Government, because I supposed that as the Government had just purchased the vessel, they did not want to sell her again at the same price.

12 Aug., 1862.

4593.

* NOTE (on revision):—"Sea Witch" 72 feet only.

- R. D. Merrill, Esq.
12 Aug., 1862.
4593. But did he wish to purchase her at the price paid by the Government? He was willing to pay the same price —
4594. And also for the alterations which had been made? He was willing to pay for the alterations, so far as they agreed with his ideas of what was right. He thought there might be some expenses which he might not have incurred had he purchased her; but as far as the alterations met his views he would pay for them in addition to the £1,450.
4595. Are you acquainted with the character of American shipping? I have seen many American ships.
4596. But as to the durability of the timber? I have known vessels built in America forty odd years old, good vessels, trading here and going back again, during the four years I was Consul of the United States; what they were built of I do not know, but I know that they were built in America.
4597. Is white oak considered a durable, sound timber? Oh yes.
4598. Are you acquainted at all with the New York pilot boats? I am not. I have seen them, but I do not know anything about them except from seeing them. I have often gone into New York Harbour, and taken pilot boats from Sandy Hook as far as 80 or 90 miles out. They are small schooners.
4599. You are not able to speak as to their particular build or model? I am not.
4600. By the Chairman: Did you see the register of the "Magnolia"? I did.
4601. Was Captain Pearce's name upon it as owner of the vessel? I do not recollect now; I can tell by referring to the Consular books.
4602. Was he the owner? I do not recollect without referring to the books.
4603. Do you think he was? I do not think he was sole owner; I think he was part owner; I am sure he was not sole owner; the owners' names are all in the register; we copy the ship's husband.
4604. You do not know whether the ship and cargo were his property or not? It was not all his property; a portion of it was.
4605. Consequently the proceeds of the cargo would not all be his? That is between him and the owners.
4606. I wish to arrive at that? I presume so; he put the ship and cargo in my hands.
4607. Did he instruct you to make an offer to the Government for this vessel? Certainly not. He was not so foolish as to suppose that the Government would sell her again at the same price. He would have given the price they paid for her.
4608. You know that from what he said? Yes; he wanted her for the Island trade. He said it was just the vessel which would suit him, and I should not be surprised if he buys a similar boat in the States, and comes out here again with her, for he was very anxious to get one.
4609. I understood you to say that he had some conversation with Captain Chapman relative to the purchase of this vessel, before she was sold to the Government? Yes.
4610. Are you aware whether Captain Chapman asked any price? Yes, I think he asked £1,500.
4611. To Captain Pearce? Yes; I was on board when he was speaking of it, and they often met at my office, but Captain Pearce did not offer that sum, thinking, I suppose, that he might be able to buy her for less.
4612. Have you any idea of the market value of vessels of this class here? I do not think you can put a market value upon them. It depends upon whether they are desired for any particular object. Mr. Pearce would have given that much for her, but if he had not been here, and the Government had not wanted her, she might have sold for a much less sum; or if there had been more purchasers she might have fetched a higher price. I do not consider that we can put a value upon any vessel here so as to establish a regular price.
4613. By Mr. Piddington: I think you stated that Captain Pearce was aware that the "Sea Witch" was in the market for sale previously to the Government purchasing her? Yes.
4614. And Captain Pearce might have bought her? Yes, but they were asking £1,500 for her.
4615. As I understand you, there were negotiations between Captain Pearce and the owner of the "Sea Witch" before she was purchased by the Government? They had been talking about the price.
4616. There having been this previous negotiation between Captain Pearce and the owner of the "Sea Witch," if Captain Pearce had chosen to purchase her, the "Sea Witch" was then in the market, and he was at liberty to make the offer? Yes.
4617. To what circumstance do you attribute the fact that Captain Pearce did not purchase the "Sea Witch" when he might have done so? Because they asked £1,500 for her, and he thought that by holding on and waiting for a few days he would be able to buy her for less.
4618. And after the Government had purchased the "Sea Witch," Captain Pearce expressed his regret that he had lost her? That he had not purchased her.
4619. But he did not take advantage of the opportunity when he might have done? No, he did not know that he could have got her for the price, probably. Captain Chapman was then asking £1,500 for her.

| MR. SMART, | | MR. WILSON. |

RICHARD SADLEIR, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain David Plumer called in and examined :—

4620. By the Chairman: You command an American ship now in this port? Yes, the "Revely," of New York.

Captain
D. Plumer.

4621. By Mr. Weekes: Have you had an opportunity of seeing the pilot schooner called the "Sea Witch"? Yes, I have been on board of her when she was lying at the wharf; I have seen her also outside the Heads from the South Head. 14 Aug., 1862.

4622. What is your opinion of her suitability as a pilot boat? She is just like a class of vessels that we have in the fishing business, which we consider very good sea vessels and safe; they are out in the worst of weather off the Great and George's Banks, off the coast of America. As to her suitability as a pilot boat off the Heads, as a stranger here, I do not know; but I consider her a safe, good sea boat.

4623. Have you had much experience in vessels of that class? Not much; as a youngster I have been in four or five; and I lived in a large fishing town, the largest in America—Gloucester, in Massachusetts—during my early life.

4624. Are vessels of this class much in use on that coast? Yes, there were three hundred and fifty in the town of which I am a native.

4625. Three hundred and fifty fore-and-aft schooners? Yes.

4626. Is the coast of America generally considered to be one where heavy gales of wind often prevail, and heavy seas? Yes; we are subject to them all the year round, particularly in winter, spring, and autumn, when they are very frequent.

4627. This class of vessels, I understand you to say, go on the Great Bank;—is that the Bank of Newfoundland? Yes, and also George's Bank, and Western Bank; in fact, all the fishing banks on the New England coast.

4628. Are there not generally very heavy seas on those banks? Yes, they are exposed to the whole Atlantic Ocean, there is no shelter whatever, and they are exposed to very heavy gales.

4629. A similar class of vessels to the "Sea Witch"? Yes.

4630. Is it the general reputation of that class of vessels that they are safe sea boats, and possess all the good qualities of sea-going craft? We consider them the best in the world; there may be a little vanity in that; however, that is the prevalent opinion.

4631. Had you an opportunity of examining the "Sea Witch" at all? I was on board her, and went all through her accommodations.

4632. How did you find her built? I could see very little of the way she was built.

4633. You had not an opportunity of examining her timber and fastenings? No.

4634. You did not examine her with that object? No; I went on board merely from curiosity, having heard a good deal of her.

4635. Are you acquainted with the style of boats used as New York pilot boats? Yes.

4636. Are you acquainted with the celebrated New York pilot boat called the "Mary Taylor"? No, I do not know that I am, I think I have seen her; but all these pilot boats are so alike, that I have no distinct recollection of her in particular. I have been sailing from New York five and twenty years, going in and out occasionally; and I now command a New York ship.

4637. Your experience on this coast is limited, I think you said? Yes; this is only my second visit to Sydney.

4638. But judging from your knowledge of schooners of this class, you think the "Sea Witch" is a safe sea boat, and able to contend with any kind of weather? I do, most decidedly, quite as safe as a New York pilot boat; in my own opinion more so. I suppose you are aware that the New York pilot boats are private property, each boat is in opposition to all the others, every man is on his own hook, and the consequence is that comfort and even safety is sacrificed to great speed. The pilots change the model of each boat, in order to get one to go faster than the others.

4639. It is said that the "Sea Witch" draws about eight feet water aft—do you think that a fair draft for her tonnage and size? I think she would do better if she drew more; I think her rather light, nine feet would be a better draught.

4640. It has been said that there is some difficulty in making her stay in a heavy sea—may not the trim of a vessel very much affect her staying? I think it may.

4641. If a vessel is out of trim, will not that have a great effect upon her staying quality? Yes, we consider so, more particularly with this class of vessels, they are very sharp at the end, and easily get out of trim. These fishing boats are trimmed with all their ballast as nearly as possible in the centre of the vessel, and they are considered to work much better in consequence. I think the trouble of the "Sea Witch" is having too much weight at the ends; the chain locker and the water tanks are badly placed, the ballast is too level fore and aft, as I understand it to be placed. I did not see it myself, as it was covered; the water tanks I did see, and the chain lockers.

4642. If you owned a vessel of that class, and found her not to stay so readily as you wished, you would try an altered trim before you would condemn or abandon her? Yes, I think I should.

4643.

- Captain
D. Plumer.
14 Aug., 1862.
4643. Even the best vessels badly trimmed are likely to stay badly? That is my opinion; the trim of that class of vessels particularly is likely to affect their working.
4644. Do you know that this class of vessels have to contend with exceedingly heavy seas in the North Atlantic? Yes, I know it.
4645. In high latitudes, where ice prevails? Yes.
4646. And from your experience, is the general result that they are excellent sea boats as a class? Yes.
4647. Vessels similar to the "Sea Witch"? Yes, of a similar build; I have known many built in the same place that have proved themselves excellent sea boats.
4648. By the Chairman: You consider her as a safe and suitable sea boat—is that from any experience you have had of her, or merely from your visit and examination? Merely from my visit, and the opinion I have formed of that class of vessels.
4649. Do you think she is too heavily masted—did you observe her masts? No; I do not think her masts too heavy for ordinary purposes, possibly for a pilot vessel at the Heads she might be, as the object there is more to keep her position than great speed.
4650. Do you think her masts are badly placed forward? It struck me that her foremast was rather far forward.
4651. Do you consider the rigging sufficiently spread to secure the masts? I should think they must be safe, considering that she has carried them six or seven years.
4652. Have you any idea of her value here? Not here.
4653. What would her value be in America; could you form an opinion? These vessels for fishing purposes, without copper, one suit of sails, a light anchor, and hemp cable, cost from 60 to 70 dollars a ton.
4654. By Mr. Weekes: Is that per ton builder's measurement? Builder's measurement.
4655. By the Chairman: Have you any idea of the expense of coppering? I never coppered a vessel of that size, but I have an idea of what it would cost. I should suppose the cost to copper her would be £125, possibly £150.
4656. Do you think her proportions are good as to width and length;—do you think she is too wide for her length, or too long for her width? It did not strike me so by the eye, and I am pretty well accustomed to that class of vessels, though I have not seen any of them for a year or two.
4657. Have you any idea of the character of the seas on this coast? Yes, I have had some slight experience; I have had two voyages here, and the last time I came in in a heavy easterly gale.
4658. Do you think the seas are heavier here than on the coast of America, or that they are much the same? I think you have very bad seas here, more particularly with the easterly gales, owing to the southerly current setting across; you have perhaps a shorter and, I should consider it, a more dangerous sea than the regular seas we have; the current here causes a very short, confused, irregular sea.
4659. Do you think the same description of vessel that would be safe on the American coast would, considering the character of the sea, be suitable here? I do not see how a vessel that would be safe there could be unsafe here; I should consider that the vessel which would be a good sea boat there would be a good sea boat here.
4660. What is the tonnage of fishing vessels in America? They range from 75 to 110 tons.
4661. Have you any idea of the tonnage of the "Sea Witch"? I should think she was 100 tons, perhaps 110 or 115.
4662. By Mr. Weekes: That is American measurement? Yes; I do not know what her American register was, but I should judge her tonnage was from 110 to 115.
4663. Do you think she is a vessel likely to last many years? Yes; in the construction of these vessels they use very good materials—the best that can be obtained, and they are very well fastened, that class of vessels generally.

Captain William Francis Norie called in and examined:—

- Captain
W. F. Norie.
14 Aug., 1862.
4664. By the Chairman: Do you command a vessel here? I do not at present.
4665. Have you commanded a vessel out of this port? No; I have commanded a Peninsular and Oriental Mail Company's steamer.
4666. Have you been long acquainted with this coast? No, I have only made two voyages here with the mail.
4667. By Mr. Weekes: Have you had considerable experience as a shipwright as well as a sailor? I have designed and superintended the building of several vessels, but I never worked as a shipwright.
4668. You have turned your attention to the building as well as to the sailing of vessels? I have.
4669. Have you had an opportunity of examining the pilot schooner called the "Sea Witch"? I have, afloat.
4670. How is she built—strongly? She is very well built, as far as I have been able to observe; I have not seen the timbers.
4671. Is she strongly fastened, as far as you have been able to observe? She is.
4672. She has, I believe, a raised deck, has she not? She has, over the cabin.
4673. Is that usual or common? It is, among English ships, very usual.
4674. Have you observed any signs of working or weakness about the "Sea Witch"? I have not, and I looked carefully round her.

4675. You examined her with that object? Yes, and I could observe no indications of straining in any part. Captain
W. F. Norie.
4676. Do you consider her to be a sound substantial vessel? I do.
4677. You are, I believe, a marine surveyor to some of the offices? I am marine surveyor 14 Aug., 1862. for five of the insurance offices.
4678. Therefore you have had considerable experience in examining and testing the build of vessels? I have had considerable experience.
4679. And the result of your investigation is that the "Sea Witch" is a sound, staunch built vessel? She is, as far as I can see. I should recommend her as a first-class risk for insurance.
4680. Do you think she is a good sea boat—should you judge that from her build? I should think she was a very fair sea boat and a fast vessel, as far as I could judge of her build, but I have not seen her bottom.
4681. Do you think her suitable to be a pilot vessel off this coast? As far as I have seen her, I think she is.
4682. It is said there is some difficulty in staying her in a heavy sea; do you think that may arise or be aggravated by being in bad trim? It would have a great effect on her, but I think any vessel of her size would have great difficulty in staying in heavy seas if her sails were reduced to reefs, or indeed any ship whatever except a very long, powerful ship.
4683. Is it an unusual thing for a vessel to refuse to stay in a heavy sea? Not at all. Indeed in the smaller merchant vessels they never attempt to stay in a heavy sea when the sails are very much reduced.
4684. If you found that a vessel were slow to stay, would you not recommend that her trim should be altered? I would not say her trim, but the disposition of her ballast. A vessel that will not stay when down by the stern may be improved by trimming a little more by the head.
4685. Are you acquainted with the "Pacific," a coaster that trades between this and Newcastle? I have examined her twice, but once more particularly.
4686. Comparing the two vessels, the "Sea Witch" and the "Pacific," which do you think the stronger vessel? The "Sea Witch" undoubtedly, in her fastenings.
4687. Where is the difference in their fastenings? I had heard a report of the "Pacific" being fastened with spikes, and upon examining her I could not find an indication of a through bolt on her topsides, with the one exception of the channel bolts for the rigging.
4688. Is she copper-fastened in the butts—bolted through? I believe her bottom is—I saw one or two copper clenched bolts below the water, but I could not see much because she has a platform which covers the ballast. Her centre fastenings, I believe, are of iron.
4689. As regards her fastenings generally, is she inferior to the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
4690. Looking to her size, build, and strength generally — ? I should say her fastenings are very inferior to those of the "Sea Witch."
4691. Did you examine the timber of the "Sea Witch"? I did, as far as I could see.
4692. What is it? American oak.
4693. What is the timber of the "Pacific"? I could not see particularly well, being painted I did not like to go too far in scraping.
4694. Are you able to form an opinion of their relative or comparative value? I should not like to do that without a farther examination of both vessels.
4695. Would the "Pacific" or "Atlantic," both of which vessels were offered to the Government, have required as much fitting out as the "Sea Witch" has done? They would probably have required more.
4696. From what you know of the craft that trade from here to Newcastle as colliers, would their fitting out have cost as much as the "Sea Witch"? I should think probably more, because they are larger.
4697. The laying down of the deck, the fitting of the pilots' cabins, and all those things that have been done on board the "Sea Witch," would they also have been necessary on board the "Pacific" or "Atlantic"? Quite so—certainly as much.
4698. Is there not the greatest difference of opinion between scientific men, as to the proper model of a vessel? A very wide difference; you seldom find two agree.
4699. No model has ever yet been devised upon which all scientific men agree? Certainly not, as far as my knowledge goes.
4700. Is it an objection to a vessel that she is full in the bottom—flat-floored? It depends a great deal upon what she is intended for. As a designer of vessels I have my own opinion upon that subject, and I may mention that about two years ago I built a yacht for a friend and went upon the very principle that is disapproved of in this case. I tried the experiment of making the vessel flat, with a deep keel to compensate for want of depth, and as far as I could judge from her sailing with other boats, she went very well.
4701. Are you acquainted with the celebrated pilot boat called the "Mary Taylor"? I have seen drawings of her.
4702. Is she nearly similar to the lines of the "Sea Witch"? I can hardly say, not having seen the bottom of the "Sea Witch," as the ballast covered the bottom. I cannot say the rise of floor she has or the shape, but I believe she is built on the principle of a great depth of keel and a small rise of floor, and that she has a small draught of water as compared with our English yachts.
4703. The owner of the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" has stated here, that had his vessels been purchased by the Government, to be placed on the station, he should have recommended that they should have additional keel placed on them;—do you think it would be an advantage to have that carried out in the "Sea Witch"? I think it would, under the circumstances, be an advantage to the "Sea Witch." Not too much, because there are no sufficient means of securing it.
- 4704.

- Captain
W. F. Norie.
- 14 Aug., 1862.
4704. Do you know how the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" are rigged? They are rigged with topsails.
4705. Would some considerable alterations have been necessary to adapt them to the rig of the "Sea Witch"? Yes, great alterations; because the fore-and-aft sails without topsails would not have been sufficient—they would have had to be enlarged.
4706. Then, as far as the masts and sails were concerned, the alteration of the "Atlantic" and "Pacific" would have cost more than the "Sea Witch," which required no alteration? I think the present sails both of the "Pacific" and "Atlantic" would not have answered without being enlarged or altered in some way.
4707. Do you think generally that the "Sea Witch" is a suitable vessel for a pilot schooner outside the Heads? I think perfectly suitable in all respects; she may be a little improved by some slight alterations, but I think she is as suitable a vessel as I have ever seen in this port.
4708. By the Chairman: Do you know the cost of fitting out the "Sea Witch" since she was purchased? There was a contract made for the internal fittings for £100; some extras have been claimed by the contractor, and it is now under consideration whether it shall be allowed him.
4709. Only £100? £100 the contract was made for.
4710. Do you know what will be the expense of making the contemplated alterations of masts and sails? I do not exactly; if they are altered as we recommended they would not cost more than £10.
4711. You have then the false keel to put on her? I suppose that would be £25.
4712. In fact £100 would cover the alterations? Yes.
4713. And also £100 in the alteration of the fittings? That was for the building of the cabins.
4714. Do you think it would have been better to have built an altogether new vessel that would have been better adapted for a pilot vessel? All other things being equal, it might have been as good a course to have built two vessels exactly alike, but under the circumstances, she being so suitable for the service, the difference between her and a vessel that might have been designed or built is very little.
4715. Do you think in point of expense there would have been anything gained? A vessel of her tonnage could not be built under £2,700, or thereabout.
4716. What do you think was her real value in the market when she was purchased? I should think about £1,200 or £1,400, having heard from those who valued her.
4717. You have spoken of a flat-bottomed vessel and of the advantage of having a vessel of that description with additional keel? I do not mean precisely flat; but I think it saves a great deal of resistance and enables the vessel to go over the water instead of through it, having only the keel instead of the body of the ship in water of great density.
4718. Does it give her stability? It does not interfere with it.
4719. Have you heard that this vessel will not stay under certain circumstances? Yes; and on inquiring into them I found that they were circumstances under which no vessel would stay, that is with reduced sails in a heavy sea.
4720. Do you think the seas on this coast are heavier than on the Atlantic? It is shorter and nastier; on the Atlantic there is a longer swell.
4721. You think the sea here is more dangerous? I think it is certainly more dangerous, especially to a small vessel.
4722. Would you not require a better vessel here than on the Atlantic, seeing that the sea is more dangerous? I do not know.
4723. Would you consider yourself as safe in a vessel here as you would in the same vessel in the Atlantic? Decidedly.
4724. Do you think this is a very dangerous coast for vessels? Not at all; I do not see the least danger on any part of it.
4725. Is there any protection in the way of harbours or of land to give a lee? Some parts of the coast are undoubtedly dangerous towards Cape Howe—the other side of it.
4726. Are we not subject to more sudden changes of wind here than they are on the European coast? I think the changes are more sudden.
4727. Therefore would you not require a more weatherly vessel on this coast, considering that the changes of wind are so sudden? Where vessels are employed as pilot boats is not on the Atlantic.
4728. I am speaking of the coast of America? They have very heavy winds there.
4729. Do you think the winds shift so suddenly there as here? I am not well acquainted with that coast.
4730. Did you hear that one of the boats on board the "Sea Witch" had been washed away? I heard that one had been washed off the deck.
4731. Do you think that was owing to any neglect in securing the boat? I think they might have turned the boat bottom upwards, she might then have been stove in, but I think would not have been carried away.
4732. Have you ever been on board a vessel when a boat has been washed away? Yes.
4733. It is not an uncommon thing? Not an uncommon thing at all.
4734. Even in larger vessels? No.
4735. Have you ever been on board vessels where you have shipped green seas? Yes.
4736. And the water has rushed down into the cabins up to the men's knees? Yes.
4737. Did you not generally take precautions in gales of wind to batten down the hatches, and to cover the skylights with tarpaulins or sails? Yes.
4738. Do you think those precautions were taken on board the "Sea Witch" in the last gale of wind? As far as I can learn from inquiry, there was some neglect in not protecting the skylight with some boards which they had for the purpose.

4739. The damage was not very great? Only a few panes of glass were broken in the sky-light.
4740. Have you any idea how the keel of the "Sea Witch" is fastened—with iron or copper? I have heard with iron bolts, but I am not aware. I should approve of it if it were fastened with iron instead of copper.
4741. Do you know how they are generally fastened? They are generally copper-fastened.
4742. Do you think that vessel would last many years? I think it would last a considerable time, being perfectly sound.
4743. Are you satisfied as to the timber being sound? I have not seen her timbers yet.
4744. Do you know whether there has been any boring of her timber, to ascertain whether it is sound? I am not aware.
4745. Do you know whether, before she was purchased, any experiments were made, by going to sea in her—before completing the bargain? I am not aware.
4746. By Mr. Weekes: When the "Sea Witch" lost her boat in a gale of wind, was it a heavy gale she was out in? A very heavy gale indeed.
4747. Will you take in your hand the Empire of the 14th August, and read the paragraph which relates to vessels that put into Port Stephens during the same gale? (The witness read the same as follows):—"From information received, the following vessels were in port when the 'Margaret Elizabeth' left, many of whom suffered, more or less, in this same gale to which we have alluded:—'Eveline Rudder,' American schooner; 'Martha,' schooner; the 'Lightning,' ketch, from Sydney, bound for the Manning; schooner 'Douglas,' bound for Melbourne; 'Rose,' for the Manning River; 'James Paxton,' for Newcastle; and the 'Zone.' The 'Martha' was at sea on the Sunday, and lost her stanchions and bulwarks; and the American schooner lost sails, bulwarks, and had one of her boats stove." Does that show that the gale was a very severe one, and that other vessels shipped seas and sustained damage, besides the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
4748. It is not a very unusual thing for a vessel to ship a sea? Not at all. I may mention that the other day a vessel of 500 or 600 tons—the "City of Quebec"—came in with her long boat smashed by a sea she had shipped.
4749. Would you consider a vessel unseaworthy because a sea broke on board of her? Not at all.
4750. By the Chairman: Is it not sometimes owing to want of management in steering a ship that a sea breaks over her? Very possibly.
4751. However it is very common for seas to break on large ships? Yes.

Captain
W. F. Norie.
14 Aug., 1862.

Captain William Clark again called in and further examined:—

4752. By Mr. Weekes: You are captain of the "Sea Witch"? I am.
4753. You were out in her on Saturday, the 2nd August? Yes.
4754. Did a gale of wind spring up that night? It did.
4755. Was it a very severe one? It blew very hard.
4756. How long did the gale last? Thirty hours—from twenty-five to thirty hours.
4757. Were you blown to leeward of the port? To the northward; we were hove-to.
4758. Where was the wind? From S.S.W. to S.
4759. How long did you lie-to during that time? We lay-to thirty hours.
4760. Under what sail did she lie-to? She was hove-to for twenty-four hours under close-reefed foresail and storm trysail.
4761. Did you attempt to stay her during that gale? No, not during the gale; she held her position, heading off the shore all the time.
4762. Did she stay at all in a heavy sea on that occasion? She did under close-reefed sails, standing back to port.
4763. Did she stay pretty readily? As well as any vessel could do—as well as she ever did in smooth water, and that she does exceedingly well.
4764. Under what sail did she stay? Close-reefed staysail, foresail, and jib.
4765. How did she behave generally through that gale? She behaved very well.
4766. Did she give you the impression of her being a good sea boat? She did. I saw nothing else but a good sea boat in her.
4767. Did she not ship a sea? Yes, she did.
4768. Was that from any fault of yours—from any mismanagement of the ship? I believe not, but I think that is a question that would be better answered by another than by myself.
4769. Was that while you were lying-to? While we were hove-to.
4770. How often did she ship a sea during that gale? She shipped one.
4771. Only one? Only that one sea. There might have been a little water over her, but nothing to be called a sea.
4772. Was the sea running high? It was running a very heavy sea.
4773. Did she ride easily through it? She rode easily through it.
4774. Is she what you would call a dry vessel in a heavy gale? Yes, she is, in a different position, but the tideway caused more water on deck than the heavy gale of wind.
4775. Do you attribute the shipping of that sea to any cause? It was merely a chance sea, such as might come on board any vessel at any time. It might be years before the like would happen again.
4776. One of those casualties to which all vessels are liable at times? Yes.
4777. Did it carry anything away? It broke some glass in the skylight, and carried away the boat and the fore-castle companion when the sea struck her.

Captain
W. Clark.
14 Aug., 1862.

- Captain
W. Clark.
- 14 Aug., 1862.
4778. Then all the damage the "Sea Witch" sustained was from that sea breaking on board? Yes, it was all done by the sea.
4779. Were any boards put up on the skylights? They were not put up till after the sea came on board.
4780. You are provided with boards to place against the skylight windows, are you not? Yes.
4781. They were not put up on that occasion? They were not.
4782. Had they been placed as they ought to have been, would the skylight windows have been broken? No, the glass would not have been broken.
- Mr. Samuel having entered the Committee Room, Mr. Sadleir vacated the Chair, and it was taken by Mr. Samuel.*
4783. By the Chairman: Is your foresail a particularly large sail? Not larger than vessels of her class generally have.
4784. When a vessel is hove-to in a very severe gale, would it not be considered a large quantity of canvas for a vessel to carry, a close-reefed foresail and a storm trysail? I think not; she required sufficient canvas to steady her.
4785. We have heard of gales where the canvas has been blown out of the bolt ropes—it was not such a gale as that? No, because it did not blow the canvas out of the bolt ropes.
4786. You would call it only a moderate gale where you could carry a close-reefed foresail and storm trysail? The sail was none too large for the breeze.
4787. The weather was not so severe but you could carry that canvas comfortably? —
4788. Are you aware that it is contemplated to make certain alterations in the "Sea Witch"? Yes.
4789. Do you know what the whole of those alterations are? I do not know the whole of them; such as have been done are all I am aware of.
4790. Is it not within your knowledge that it is intended to shorten her masts? Yes.
4791. And to shorten her bowsprit? Yes.
4792. And to add three feet to her keel? Yes, I think it is.
4793. Do you think these will be improvements? It will most undoubtedly lighten her forward, and by giving her more keel it will make her more weatherly; she will hang more to the wind.
4794. By Mr. Wilson: Will it improve her staying qualities? The ballast will be shifted, and that will improve her staying.
4795. You think it is more on account of her trim than of her peculiar build that she does not stay? Yes, I think it is.
4796. Have you tried her? I find the ballast is too far forward; it should have been in midships.
4797. Till you have tried her, you do not know what her proper trim is for staying? No.
4798. By the Chairman: How was the wind at the time you have referred to? S.S.W.
4799. Is that off the land? Nearly along the land.
4800. The land would not be a lee shore with that wind? Not a lee shore, the wind would be blowing direct along.
4801. Would the water be smooth with the wind in the way you say? No, there is a heavy sea with the wind at S.W., which is off the land.
4802. By Mr. Weekes: Was the "Sea Witch" provisioned when she was out on that cruise? Yes.
4803. Was there sufficient for all on board? There was.
4804. What kind of provisions had you on board? Fresh meat, potatoes, bread, and every other necessary that we could require.
4805. Did you bring any of those supplies into port with you? Yes, we brought fresh meat.
4806. Did the pilots partake of the provisions? Yes.
4807. If it has been stated that the pilots had only a few biscuits to subsist on, and that they suffered considerable inconvenience from want of food, it is incorrect? It is incorrect; there was ample food for all on board.
4808. By Mr. Sadleir: Had you fuel enough on board the vessel? Yes.
4809. And water? Yes.
4810. Did you take out any quantity of salt meat? I had a cask.
4811. So that if you had been blown off the coast you would not have starved? No.
4812. You say the wind was S.S.W.? Yes, from S.S.W. to S.
4813. How did you put her head? To the eastward.
4814. Off shore? Yes.
4815. The whole time? The whole time.
4816. Did you not stand in again? No.
4817. Would you not have been better sheltered if you had stood in when the wind was S.S.W.? Perhaps we might.
4818. Would you have had so heavy a sea? Yes.
4819. Could you reach Broken Bay? Yes.
4820. Had you a knowledge of Broken Bay, so that you could have run in if you had had very heavy weather? By the chart.
4821. Have you ever been in there? I have never been in there.
4822. Did the "Sea Witch" ever refuse to stay? Yes, she has refused to stay.
4823. How often? I do not know how many times—several times.
4824. What is the reason she refused to stay? On account of the sea taking her sometimes. I attribute it to my own carelessness two or three times. I have been watching the boat, and probably not paying sufficient attention to the vessel.
4825. Do you think it was owing to your not having a forebowl line that she did not stay? No.
- 4826.

4826. How was it you had not a forebowline? I had a forebowline.
4827. Had you when Captain Watson was on board? No.
4828. Your boat was washed away? Yes.
4829. Did you take any means to secure her? I knew the boat was well secured, for I lashed her myself on deck. Captain
W. Clark.
14 Aug., 1862.
4830. Would she not have been safer if she had been turned upside down? I do not know; she might have been staved and carried away if she had been bottom upwards.
4831. Had you much water in the "Sea Witch" during the gale? I did not see—I was on deck.
4832. Did anybody report it to you? Yes.
4833. What quantity of water did they report? They said it was washing over the floor; it had gone through the skylight, and the deck was so tight that the water could not escape.
4834. Had you any tarpaulins on board? Yes.
4835. Did you batten down the hatches? Yes.
4836. And secure the skylights? We did not put up the boards till afterwards.
4837. How many knots an hour will the "Sea Witch" sail in a tolerably good breeze, with all sail set, and not too heavy a sea? Seven.
4838. Is that the most you can get out of her? Not the most if you push her; but I never push the vessel—I never had occasion.
4839. The most you have got out of her is seven knots? Yes.
4840. Do you consider her a fast sailing vessel? Yes.
4841. And she sails seven knots on a wind? More than that she may have done.
4842. Do you know what some new clippers now sail with the wind? Sixteen miles I have heard for a ship.
4843. Is that by the wind or off the wind? I do not know; I have never been in one.
4844. Have you been in any other vessel than this? Yes.
4845. What have you sailed by the wind? Seven and eight miles an hour.
4846. That is the usual rate, is it? I think so.
4847. What does she sail off the wind? I do not know; I have not pushed her off the wind; but I suppose she has been going nine off the wind.
4848. How close will she lie to the wind? Four points and a half.
4849. Do you call her a weatherly vessel? Yes.
4850. Did she drift much in this last gale? A mile an hour.
4851. Had she the current under her lee? She had the current against her; the current running to the northward I should say.
4852. And you drifted only a mile an hour, having the current against her? That was all I found her.
4853. That was all the leeway you made? There may be two currents, one going to the northward and one to the southward, but the current appeared to me to be going to the northward.
4854. Do you think the "Sea Witch" is too heavily masted? For holding her position in very heavy weather I think she is.
4855. Do you think her foremast is well placed? I think it is, where it is now placed; as it was before it might have been very well for making a passage.
4856. Do you think the bowsprit too heavy? She has a very heavy bowsprit.
4857. Do you think these alterations will improve her staying and working? Yes.
4858. Has she much sternway? No.
4859. Has she not a very sharp run aft? Yes, she is flat above water.
4860. By the Chairman: Where is she now? In Waterview Bay.
4861. What are they doing to her? They have shortened her mast and bowsprit, and shifted her mast.

| MR. DICK, MR. DICKSON, CAPTAIN MORIARTY,MR. WILSON. | | MR. SADLEIR, MR. SAMUEL, MR. PIDDINGTON, |
|---|--|--|

The Committee having assembled in No. 1 Committee Room, proceeded to the Circular Quay, and thence to the Fitz Roy Dock, where they were met by Mr. Duncan, Captain Towns, Captain Rountree, Captain Watson, Captain Crook, and Mr. Cuthbert.

After a careful survey of the keel and bottom of the "Sea Witch," the Committee went on board and examined her internal fittings.

4862. The Chairman (to Captain Towns): Are you now of opinion that she has a straight keel in midships? Certainly she has, with a slight curve at each end.
4863. (To Captain Rountree): Do you consider, now that you have seen her, that she has a straight keel? Yes.
4864. She has not a deep keel in midships? Not at all.

4865.

- 28 Aug., 1862. 4865. (To Mr. Cuthbert): I suppose, now that you have again seen the vessel, your opinion is unchanged that she has a straight keel? No doubt.
4866. (To Captain Rountree): Have you charge of the vessel to overlook the work done to her? After the Committee have seen her I shall proceed with the work.
4867. You mean to make some alteration in her? To put a hanging keel on aft, and lengthen her rudder, according to the plan produced before the Committee.
4868. Have you made some of the alterations you stated you would make before the Committee? Yes, we have shifted the foremast about four feet, have shortened the bowsprit, removed the catheads, and shifted the ballast, as I stated before the Committee it was proposed to do. I may state that the rise of the floor is $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches to a foot.
4869. Captain Moriarty (to Mr. Cuthbert): Have the timbers been bored, to ascertain her soundness? That is a question I could not answer; I think very likely—I tried some of them.
4870. Were they sound? What I tried.
4871. Mr. Piddington (to Captain Rountree): On whose account are you about to make the projected alterations? The present Pilot Board.
4872. On account of the Government? I have not had anything to do with the Government.
4873. The Pilot Board are acting as officials? Yes.
4874. The Chairman (to Mr. Duncan): Are you aware whether there is a minute of the Pilot Board authorizing these alterations? I believe the alterations were proposed to the Pilot Board, and authorized by them.
4875. Was any particular person empowered to carry out the work? Yes; I think Captain Rountree.
4876. Mr. Dick: On whose recommendation have the alterations been made? I think Captain Towns suggested them to the Board.
4877. The Chairman: Have they been submitted to the Minister for his approval? No, I do not think they have been formally submitted to him; I know as a matter of fact that he has approved of them.
4878. Captain Moriarty: He has given a mere verbal approbation? That is my impression; I do not think there is any correspondence to show that he has done so.
4879. What will the alterations cost? I think Captain Rountree will be better able to inform the Committee upon that point.
- Captain Rountree stated that he was of the opinion he had expressed when he was examined by the Committee upon this point.*
4880. Mr. Dick (to Captain Rountree): How long will it take to make these alterations? From two to three days; she will be out in about three days.
4881. Mr. Piddington: Have you been able to ascertain whether the vessel is fastened with copper bolts in midships? I see no indications of iron outside; I examined her inside.
4882. You cannot be certain whether it is copper-fastened? I could not, unless the copper were stripped off.
4883. The Chairman: You have measured her draught of water? I have; her draught in midships is 7 feet 3.
4884. (To Mr. Cuthbert): Has your advice been asked relative to the alterations about to be made? No. I beg pardon; it was mentioned one day that they were going to make some alterations about her keel which cannot be carried into effect now.
4885. You have heard of the alterations they now propose to make? Yes.
4886. Have you been asked, in your position as Government Shipwright Surveyor, your opinion as to the proposed alterations? Never.
4887. Do you think the alterations proposed will have the effect they calculate upon? If she were my vessel I would not do it.
4888. Do you think the addition to her keel proposed is likely to strain the vessel? I think so.
4889. You think it is very doubtful whether, when these alterations are made, the vessel will be then adapted to the purpose for which she is intended? It is my opinion.
4890. Mr. Dick: Did I understand you to say that the alterations proposed to the keel could not now be made? They could not be made, because the vessel has a straight keel. Captain Towns was under the impression that it was a curved keel, and I took some trouble to explain that it was not.
4891. You knew she had a straight keel, as you had seen her before? Yes; it was an utter impossibility I could make a mistake.
4892. The Chairman: Do you think reducing the mast will be an improvement? Yes.
4893. Her bowsprit also has been altered—do you think that an improvement? Yes; it will make her less laboursome.

1862.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SYDNEY HARBOUR AND PILOTAGE REGULATIONS.

(MERCHANTS, SHIPOWNERS, &c.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 4 June, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of that day.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Merchants, Shipowners, Masters, and others, interested in the trade and shipping of the Port of Sydney,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

That they are at present suffering from serious grievances, from the working of the existing Harbour Regulations, as set forth in the following Resolutions adopted by them at a public meeting of their body:—

- 1st. That the privileges at present granted to coasters and vessels engaged in the intercolonial trade, as per clause 50 of the Harbour Regulations, be extended to vessels registered or owned in the Port of Sydney trading to New Caledonia, and the Islands and Ports of the Pacific.
- 2nd. That the present fee of five pounds now levied upon Masters, on obtaining an exemption certificate, be reduced to three pounds.
- 3rd. That no dues whatever be levied on vessels entering the Harbour through stress of weather, or for the purpose of procuring provisions, except in cases where the services of a Pilot have been obtained, when pilotage shall be levied as usual: provided in all such cases vessels shall not break bulk.
- 4th. That Masters of vessels registered in the Port of Sydney, holding a certificate of exemption, be empowered to remove their vessels from one wharf to another without giving notice to the Port Office.
- 5th. That permission be granted to vessels registered in the Port of Sydney, and employed in the coasting and intercolonial trade, to ship their crews on board—such crews to be discharged at the Government Shipping Office. Each vessel's articles to be produced before the Shipping Master of the port once every six months, and attested, and that for each set of articles every such vessel shall pay to the Shipping Office (half-yearly), under one hundred tons, ten shillings and sixpence, over one hundred tons, twenty-one shillings, free of all shipping charges whatever. Every man so shipped to produce a discharge from the Shipping Master of the port.
- 6th. That inasmuch as the Pilot Board, as at present constituted, has no control over the management of the port, the Government be respectfully solicited to introduce a Bill into the House of Assembly early next Session of Parliament, to incorporate the Port of Sydney on similar principles to those contained in the Act now regulating the ports of the United Kingdom.
- 7th. That the Government be respectfully solicited to institute a Trinity or Marine Board, in lieu of the present Pilot Board, to consist of members (twelve in number) appointed in the following manner:—Six members to be nominated by the Government, two of whom shall be Government officers, and four heads of mercantile firms, who are, or may be, members of the Chamber of Commerce. Six members to be elected by the shipowners of the port, whose qualification for voting shall be, for every one hundred tons of shipping registered in the Port of Sydney one vote, and one vote for every additional one hundred tons, but the number of votes of each shipowner not to exceed ten.
- 8th. That the Collector of Customs for the time being be empowered to decide upon the qualifications of voters, place of voting, &c.

Your Petitioners are of opinion that the management of the Harbour Pilots, Light-houses, and other departments connected with the shipping interests of the port, will never be properly conducted until placed under the control of an elective body of practical men who largely contribute to the revenue, and whose interest it is to see it properly disbursed.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray your Honorable House will take the foregoing premises into your favourable consideration, and that your Honorable House will adopt such measures for their relief as may seem meet to your Honorable House.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.
