LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

WILLIAM HENRY BEDELL.

(PETITION OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 28 May, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of William Henry Bedell, of Forbes, on the Lachlan Gold Field,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner, accompanied by three reputable witnesses, attended the Court of Petty Sessions at Forbes, on the 30th January last, to prefer a charge against one Evert, for the offence of threatening to cut down your Petitioner, with uplifted axe, on the 23rd, same date.

That when the case was called on for adjudication, your Petitioner was, owing to his unbelief in revealed religion, denied a hearing by the Bench of Magistrates—although referring to his three witnesses, viz., Ford, Coleman, and Sheppard, as being present to prove the case.

That Peter Sheppard, on applying to the Clerk of Petty Sessions for a fresh summons against Evert, on public grounds of justice, three separate times, was put off by various excuses on the part of the above-named clerk, one Mitchell, and failed to obtain the summons.

That the aforesaid Mitchell, on the first application of Sheppard for a summons, did ask the said Sheppard, "Why did he bother himself about the case?" and on the reply of Sheppard "that he considered Bedell's life was in danger, and that Evert intended to have cut him down with the axe, had he not escaped from him, and therefore applied for the issue of another summons," Mitchell exclaimed, "Why, what if he had cut him down, he's only an infidel."

That your Petitioner subsequently put himself in communication with the Honorable the Attorney General, whose reply was to the effect "That I was an incompetent witness," thus indorsing the decision of 30th January.

That your Petitioner, being thus virtually outlawed, humbly prays for justice denied your Petitioner, owing to his conscientious opinions—whereby the family or property of your Petitioner are placed at the mercy of any knave or ruffian, without opportunity of redress.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

W. H. BEDELL.

I hereby certify that the above is a full and complete Return of the particulars required by the aforesaid Act.

F. BECKE,
Registrar, District Court.

DISTRICT COURTS ACT OF 1858.-(SECTION 103.)

NEW SOUTH WALES.

INSOLVENT ESTATES.

(STATISTICS RESPECTING.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command.

CHIEF JUSTICE to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Supreme Court,
12 December, 1861.

SIR,

It appearing to be an object of interest, and, as I thought, of importance, to ascertain the actual amounts paid in Insolvent Estates, for Commission, Costs, Working Expenses, and other Deductions, as compared with the Realized Assets, I laid before an experienced Accountant, Mr. Archibald Campbell (whom your sanction permitted me to employ) fifty "Plans of Distribution" taken promiscuously from the records in that Department; requesting him to abstract the various heads of Expenditure, as shewn in the Returns enclosed, and to state the result proportionately under each head. He was afterwards furnished with thirty-one more Plans of Distribution, of which I requested a similar abstract. The result or average, however, on the whole of the first set, is very slightly different from that afforded by the second.

2. It will be perceived, taking the result of the eighty-one Plans of Distribution, that the proportion of Dividends paid to Creditors, as compared with the Assets realized, has averaged above 76 per cent., not including balances still in the Treasury, available to Creditors or unclaimed by them.

3. One Estate, that of Lloyd and Company, forming an exceptional case in all respects, equally by reason of its enormous amount, and of the compromise which terminated the proceedings, is omitted from the estimate. The particulars, however, are separately given by the Assignee. If included, the proportion of Dividends to Assets would be raised to above 90 per cent.

4. Having compared these results with those which have been ascertained in England, by Returns from the Bankruptcy Court there, I find that in the year 1858 the proportion of Dividends paid to Creditors, as compared with the Assets realized, was 53 per cent. only. In 1859, according to the Return for that year, the proportion of Dividends to Assets was 65 per cent. I take this, however, at second hand, (see Companion to the Almanac for 1861, page 179,) not having the Parliamentary Paper, and there appears a discrepancy in the figures. The proportion as estimated by the stated Expenses, is only 58 per cent.

5. The exact proportion of outlay or charge, under each head, will be seen at a glance in Mr. Campbell's Reports; and it is material to observe that the information (without similarly analyzing the approved Plans of Distribution) cannot be obtained elsewhere.

I am, &c.,

ALFRED STEPHEN.

P.S.—Under the word "Dividends" in the letter, are included all Debts paid in full; and under the head "Miscellaneous Expenses" in the Reports, are included all Rents, &c., accrued since Sequestration, and in some instances moneys paid to redeem property, or by way of compromise.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

JOHN COCKERELL.
(PETITION OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 3 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of John Cockerell, late of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Pawnbroker, sometime a prisoner of the Crown in the said Colony, and now of Brisbane, in the Colony of Queensland, Soda-water Manufacturer,—

SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner arrived in the Colony of New South Wales, as a free immigrant, in the year 1841, and remained therein twenty years, during which period he bore an irreproachable character for industry and integrity, and amassed a fortune of about £12,000, which he possessed at the time of his arrest on charge of felony, as hereafter mentioned.

That, in July, 1856, your Petitioner was arrested, brought to trial, and declared guilty of receiving a silver inkstand and snuff-box, the property of Mrs. Forster, of Brush Farm, with knowledge that those articles had been stolen, and was thereupon sentenced to be worked upon the roads for five years, which period has now passed.

Your Petitioner solemnly asserts that he was innocent, and was found guilty upon evidence which was insufficient to justify a conviction against him.

1. Because the evidence of belief from general appearances touching the identity of the articles mentioned in the information, with those delivered by your Petitioner to the Inspector of Police, was open to very serious doubt, if not conclusively disproved by the direct and circumstantial evidence for the defence.

The prosecutrix, Mrs. Forster, who had better means of knowledge than the other witnesses, made the following statement on this point:—

“ I recollect my house being broken into on the 13th May last; on that occasion I lost a silver inkstand, two snuff-boxes, and a few small articles; I did not advertise them, or give a description to the police; I positively swear the articles now before the Court are my property; they have been greatly altered; they have been engine-turned and engraved since I saw them last; there was a name upon both articles; it was plainly, deeply, and legibly cut, where the name of Cockerell now is; the words were, ‘ Presented from W. Routledge to T. Forster ’; they were bought in George-street, Sydney; I cannot say there were not eleven more like them in the shop when they were purchased; I believe there were more at the time like them; I should not have known them had I seen them in a jeweller’s shop; I have no mark whatever on either article; they are about the same size—[here Mrs. Forster measures the inkstand with her two hands, to ascertain the size]; I judge from the general appearance; I have only occasionally used them; I saw the inkstand the Sunday previous to the robbery, and the snuff-box three weeks previous to that; Dr. Forster had them twelve months previous to his death; I positively swear that the chain attached to the extinguisher is not mine, the extinguisher or the top; I do not hesitate to swear neither of these are mine; they are not the same as when lost; the inside of the snuff-box looks more like silver than it did when in my possession; with this exception, and the name, there is no other difference whatever in the snuff-box; it is in every other respect the same as when I lost it; I have no mark upon either of the articles now before the Court.”

Miss Forster deposed:—“ I was not at home on the night of the robbery, but had been there three weeks previously; I know the inkstand and snuff-box now before the Court; they are my mother’s property; there was a name and inscription on them, but I do not know what that name was, but it was not Cockerell, when I saw them last; I have no mark upon either article to distinguish them from others like them; I judge from their

“ general appearance ; they were not engraved before ; they were plain ; the engraving and engine-turning have been done since I last saw them ; it has greatly altered their appearance ; the snuff-box looks more worn than it used to do ; it might have been rubbed off ; the inside looks like silver ; it used to be gold ; there is no other alteration, in either of the articles, with the exceptions I have named ; I do not believe there has been any thing added or taken away from either of them, with the exception of the name, engine-turning, and gilding inside the box ; I do not see any difference in the inkstand, and I believe there is none.”

Detective O’Keefe states:—“ He received information of the robbery at Brush Farm on the 16th of May, 1856 ; called at Mr. Cockerell’s in the beginning of May, and the latter end of May, or the beginning of June ; on the last occasion he asked Mr. Cockerell if he had taken in any plate lately, who told him he had not received any for the Lord knows when, excepting from parties he named ; went there in consequence of robberies being committed about that time ; is quite certain Mr. Cockerell told him he had not taken in any plate lately ; did not give any of the pawnbrokers a description of the plate in question ; Mr. Cockerell shewed myself and Detective Basket the snuff-box now produced, and said he meant to keep his game certificate in it when he went to England ; Mr. Cockerell knew well we were both Detectives at the time he shewed us the box.”

Mr. Edmund Hoetz, engine turner (witness for the Crown) said :—“ I was employed by Mr. Cockerell about the latter end of May, or the beginning of June, to engrave the inkstand now before the Court ; it was quite plain at this time ; he merely wished me to engrave his name upon it ; I suggested to him to let me engine-turn it as well ; he asked me if it would be an improvement, and if I had ever done any like it in England ; I said I had, and it would be a very great improvement ; I believed both articles to be quite new ; at this time there was neither name nor inscription upon either of them, or any appearance of such ; Mr. Cockerell took up my magnifying glass (a very powerful one) to examine some of my work ; he afterwards took up part of the inkstand and examined it also ; Mr. Cockerell said to me do you see anything like a P or an R on this article ; I could not distinguish any thing with my naked eye, but with the aid of my magnifying glass, I could discern what Mr. Cockerell pointed out to me ; it might have been part of a P or an R, or it might have been only a scratch, but whatever it was Mr. Cockerell pointed it out to me, and not me to him ; I should never have seen it at all if Mr. Cockerell had not shewn it to me ; had a name been as deeply cut as the present one I must have noticed it ; had it been lightly cut it is possible to erase it ; when the snuff-box came to me there was a scroll across the box ; Mr. Cockerell said it would be very inconvenient to carry in the waistcoat pocket ; I said if you wish it I will cut the whole of it off, and only leave a place for your nail to fit in ; I swear I did myself cut it all off, and that it has very materially altered the appearance of the box ; I have done some engine-turning for Mr. Cockerell ; I have had some dealing with him, and I have always formed a high opinion of his character and conduct ; I believe him to be an upright honest man.”

Thomas Fitzsimmonds, engraver (another witness for the Crown), said :—“ I know Mr. Cockerell by sight ; I never was employed by him ; I never spoke to him in my life ; I was employed by Mr. Hoetz to engrave the inkstand now before the Court ; I take the inkstand and snuff-box to be quite new ; I do not believe there ever was a name or inscription upon either of the articles before I engraved the name of Cockerell upon them ; taking out a name or inscription is done by tapping the inside with a hammer—this would leave a hollow in the inside—but this is not the case, there is no hollow here ; it is done to fill up the mark of the letters ; had a file been used for that purpose it must have left one side flatter than the other—that is not the case, both sides are alike ; had it been placed upon a lathe it must have destroyed the hall mark, which, in this instance, is right in the middle of the box, but the hall mark is as perfect as the day it was made ; it must also have destroyed the chasing on the snuff-box ; inscriptions are usually as deeply cut as the present one ; a person could not take out this inscription without my knowing that it had been done ; I now examine it, inside and out, with the eye of a workman, and I give it as my opinion, after thirty years’ experience, that there never was a name or inscription on either of these articles before I engraved the name of Cockerell upon them ; I use a very powerful magnifying glass when I engrave ; had there been any marks of letters I must have detected it on either of the articles, but I did not ; I have known Mr. Cockerell by sight for a number of years, but I never spoke to either party in my life.”

Called by Counsel.

Police Constable Goody said :—“ I have been in the Colony about two years ; I was formerly a clerk in a banking house in London ; I know Mr. Cockerell by calling at his house to purchase clothes ; I have often called during the two years ; I called at his house in the latter end of May last just to see him ; Mr. Cockerell then shewed me the inkstand before the Court, and told me that he had just given £9 for it ; he also told me the seller had told him the bottles were broken on the passage out from England ; I have seen the inkstand several times since, standing on Mr. Cockerell’s parlour table ; when I first saw it I examined it closely ; I consider myself a judge of such articles, having been clerk to Messrs. Rush and Rishworth, auctioneers ; I believed the articles to be quite new ; he said he intended to keep his game license in the snuff-box when he got to England ; I advised him to have his name engraved upon both articles, and get the lid of the box cut to fit the vest pockets ; the second time I saw them they had been engine-turned and chased, and the name put upon them.”

Cross-examined by Attorney General : “ I was not in the Police at the time referred to ; was out of a situation ; was living the best way I could ; I frequently called upon Mr. Cockerell

“Cockerell to buy clothes, and sometimes only to see him; I saw the inkstand in the latter end of May—it was plain then; I saw the snuff-box ten days after that; the second time I saw them they were chased; I am not to receive £10, a gold watch, or any thing else, to give my evidence; I would not have come at all, but was compelled by subpoena to attend.”

[Your Petitioner is informed this witness is now a clerk in Coutt's Banking House, London.]

Mr. George Caulker (also for the defence) said:—“I have known Mr. Cockerell about five years; I consider him to be a straightforward man; I was at Mr. Cockerell's shop in the latter end of May last, when two men came in; they had the carpet bag produced; one of them took the silver inkstand from it, and offered to pledge it with Mr. Cockerell for 6s. per ounce, or sell it outright for 7s. 6d; Mr. Cockerell then weighed it, and said 24 oz. at 7s. 6d. will be £9; he gave him £9; the inkstand now produced is the same; the short man said he had a silver snuff-box he would sell; Mr. Cockerell said he had too many already, but he afterwards purchased it for £1; the tall man had on a large cloak with two tassels; I saw one of the men I speak of leaning against one of the pillars of the Post Office this morning; I have seen the articles twice since in Mr. Cockerell's parlour; I was not sent for at Mr. Cockerell's examination; I was at Bathurst.”

Mr. Charles Pitt also deposed:—“I am a watchmaker and jeweller; I have known Mr. Cockerell about 18 months; I have frequently been in his shop during that time; I saw the snuff-box in the latter end of May last; there was no name upon it then; I suggested an alteration in the lid; I ran away with it in fun, and endeavoured to put it into my vest pocket, but could not do so on account of a large scroll all along the top of the box; I suggested to Mr. Cockerell to have it cut off, and only leave a place for the nail to fit in; when I saw it again the whole of the scroll was cut off, and it was engraved; Mr. Cockerell's name was upon it then; I have seen Mr. Cockerell shew the box to several people; I believe Mr. Cockerell to be a strictly honest man.”

Mr. Edwd. Bowen (furniture dealer) said:—“I am a tenant of Mr. Cockerell's; I have seen the inkstand now before the Court; I have seen it standing on the counter; I have also seen it standing on his parlour table; any one coming into his shop could see it; it used to be kept on the table; if the door was open all his customers could see it, and the door was very often open; I consider Mr. Cockerell to be an upright honest man.”

Miss Branson said:—“I am in the service of Mr. Cockerell, and have been so eleven months; I have frequently seen the articles before the Court; I used to dust them; they were kept upon the parlour table; they were both plain when they were brought to Mr. Cockerell, but were sent away to be engraved; they were kept upon the table, both before and after they were engraved.”

Mrs. Branson, wife to Mr. Branson, baker, Castlereagh-street, says:—“I have known Mr. Cockerell fourteen years; I saw the inkstand about two months since standing upon Mr. Cockerell's parlour table; it was not engraved the first time I saw it; I saw it afterwards when it was engraved; Mr. Cockerell has always borne a good character ever since I knew him.”

Your Petitioner was confined in the lock-up from the time of his arrest until the Friday preceding the Monday's Criminal Sitting, and on the day last-mentioned was arraigned and tried.

Your Petitioner humbly submits that there was upon the foregoing testimony a decided balance of proof in his favour on the ground of mistaken identity. The statement of an experienced engraver like Mr. Fitzsimmons was beyond question, supported as it was by the positive evidence of other witnesses, whose character for truth, equally with his own, could not be assailed. It will also be remembered that Mr. Fitzsimmons was not called on behalf of your Petitioner. The evidence at least shewed that if the inkstand and snuff-box produced were really those stolen from Mrs. Forster, they were not received by your Petitioner in the condition that they were in when taken from her.

2.—Assuming the jury to have been satisfied that the articles produced were the property so stolen from Mrs. Forster, what proof is there that your Petitioner purchased them with a guilty knowledge of the robbery?

The property was never concealed; the possession of it was never denied; it was readily yielded up for investigation.

The statement made by your Petitioner, when arrested, relative to the purchase, is confirmed by the other witnesses in the previous quotations.

There was no notice or publication of the robbery, so that in this respect your Petitioner could not know that such articles had been stolen.

Mr. Forster, M.L.A., said:—“I went to the house of Mr. Cockerell, the pawnbroker, in Park-street, on the 16th July, 1856; Inspector Singleton went in first, I followed him; Mr. Cockerell was standing at his counter; Mr. Singleton said, have you such a thing in your possession as a silver inkstand; he said he had; he then said have you a silver snuff-box with your name upon it? to which he replied in the affirmative; Inspector Singleton said, will you produce them? he said certainly, and accordingly produced them; he did not hesitate, but handed them over to Singleton the moment he was asked to do so.”

Mr. Singleton, Inspector, said:—“From information I received, I went to the house of Mr. Cockerell, the pawnbroker, in Park-street, Sydney, on the 16th July, 1856, with a warrant to apprehend him, and another to search his house; when I entered he was standing at his counter; I said I want that inkstand, and he produced it; I then said I want a snuff-box with your name upon it, and upon a further search I found the one produced; I then asked him how he came possessed of them; he said he had purchased them from two men for £9, who brought them from England; I then said, where are the bottles belonging “to

“ to the inkstand ? he said the men told him they were broken on the passage out ; I then “ took a bottle out of my pocket, and it exactly fitted the inkstand ; I told him I had a “ warrant to search his house ; he said he was sorry for it ; I took him to the watch-house,
 “ and searched his house ; I found nothing more claimed by anyone ; I never searched his “ house before ; I believe he does a very large business as a pawnbroker ; I believe the “ largest in Sydney ; no description was ever given to Mr. Cockerell of the property now “ before the Court ; it is usual when articles are stolen for the detective police to give “ written descriptions to the pawnbrokers ; but I did not know of these articles being stolen “ until after I received information ; I then saw it in the Hue and Cry ; I received my “ information from Grant ; Grant is a paid agent of the detective police ; I have paid him
 “ as much as £7 or £8 during the last three months ; Scarlett pays him sometimes, others
 “ have paid him ; he is at present in Sydney Gaol, charged with robbing a public-house ; I “ know he was transported to Van Diemen’s Land for robbery ; I do not know that he is a “ runaway ; I employ him on the principle of setting a thief to catch a thief ; I do not “ recollect Mr. Cockerell asking me to look at his books, and see the entry of the articles ; it “ is customary to employ men of Grant’s description in all these Colonies, and in France, to
 “ to give the detective police information.”

Your Petitioner has hitherto refrained from setting out the evidence upon which the Crown mainly relied for his conviction.

Detective Grant deposed :—“ I am a labourer ; I came out of gaol 9th July, 1856 ; on “ that day I saw Mr. Cockerell ; I saw him on the 9th July, 1856, in company with the woman
 “ I live with ; I had a conversation with him which turned upon the death of Swabby ; I “ have known Swabby four years, and also Thomas ; on that occasion Mr. Cockerell said he “ did not believe that Swabby was shot, and that Thomas had got six months for being a “ fool, and was frightened ; this conversation was terminated by Singleton coming to the “ door ; on the 9th July I saw Mr. Cockerell at his own house ; he then said that he “ believed it was Swabby that was shot ; he also stated that Swabby had made him a “ present of three things—a hat, snuff-box, and inkstand, and that he gave him another hat
 “ in place of his own ; Mr. Cockerell also stated when Swabby was last there that three “ detective constables were outside, when Mr. Cockerell gave him the office to remain inside,
 “ and told him Thomas was pinched ; it was an understood thing between Cockerell
 “ and myself that Swabby and Thomas worked together ; Mr. Cockerell told me he had taken
 “ out the name and inscription with a file himself.”

Now who, although unimpeached during all his life, and possibly, like your Petitioner, residing for 20 years among his fellow citizens without reproach, can feel his life or liberty safe when either can be placed in jeopardy by a witness like Grant, who gives the following character of himself :—

Cross-examined, says :—“ I am a labourer, but I do no work ; I am at present in “ gaol, charged with robbing a public-house ; I came out of gaol a fortnight back ; I was “ transported from Manchester to Van Diemen’s Land for 10 years for robbing a Jew ; I
 “ have been a thief ever since I was 10 years old ; I have been a thief ever since I knew “ what a shilling was ; Inspector Singleton knows my character well ; he knew it when he “ employed me ; I did not ask him to employ me as a detective ; he met me in George-street
 “ and offered me two guineas per week, and I refused ; he afterwards met me in Pitt-street,
 “ and again persuaded me, and I at last accepted it ; I cannot say if I am to receive my pay
 “ for the time I am in gaol or not ; I do not call myself a spy ; I consider myself an agent “ of the Sydney Detective Police Force ; I am paid to catch thieves ; I cannot say if I “ am on the police books or not ; I receive my pay privately, not at the office ; Inspector
 “ Singleton pays me, but others have paid me—sometimes Scarlett pays me ; I positively “ swear I never had any dealings with Mr. Cockerell ; I never spoke to him but on three “ occasions—once in December, I then asked him where a person lived that was at his “ house—the next was 20th June—the last was on the 3rd of July ; I positively swear all the “ conversation I ever had with Mr. Cockerell did not amount to five minutes ; I never saw “ him in the company of Swabby or Thomas ; I have not seen Swabby myself for four “ years ; I am not aware if Mr. Cockerell knew the articles were stolen ; he never told me
 “ he did ; I cannot say whether the articles before the Court are the same Swabby made a “ present to Mr. Cockerell ; I was employed in the Detective Police Force in Geelong in
 “ the year 1851, and was foolish enough to think I had made sufficient money to retire.”

By the Attorney General :—“ When Mr. Cockerell saw Singleton at my house on the “ 20th June, he said he would not have been seen there for £20—he was a ruined man.”

Would your Petitioner have kept the articles exposed after this statement, had he known them to have been stolen ?

Is it not singular that Grant, who was familiar with Swabby, the supposed thief, should be the first to give information of the robbery to Inspector Singleton ?

The Attorney General, Sir W. Manning, said :—“ He would not have asked the “ jury to place much reliance on the testimony of a person of Grant’s character, were it
 “ not that an important and remarkable part of it was corroborated by Mr. Singleton.”

The part here alluded to is thus given by Mr. Singleton :—“ I went to Grant’s house, “ near the Royal Oak, on the 20th June ; I heard Mr. Cockerell and Grant talking about “ Swabby and Detective Scarlett ; I opened the door and said ‘ good night, Mr. Cockerell,’ “ and went away ; in a short time afterwards I saw Cockerell drunk in Pitt-street ; he was “ locked up, and fined £1 the next morning by Mr. Dowling ; I knew Grant’s character well ;
 “ I knew it when I employed him ; I knew him to be a thief ; I knew he was transported to “ Van Diemen’s Land for robbery ; it is customary to employ men of Grant’s description in “ this Colony.”

It will be observed that Mr. Singleton gives no detail of the conversation about Swabby, except that he heard the names of "Swabby and Scarlett"; but Grant says it was "Swabby and Thomas." Your Petitioner never had any conversation with Grant about Swabby, and never, to his knowledge, made a purchase, and certainly never received or said he had received a present of any inkstand or snuff-box from him. Grant's statement is utterly false and improbable. Would any one, with so much to lose, being guilty of a crime, disclose it to a man with whom he had, as is stated by Grant, only five minutes conversation in his life? How long would it take to establish such confidence? There is nothing but Grant's most improbable and false story to trace any connection between your Petitioner and Swabby, the supposed thief.

3. Your Petitioner had terrible sacrifices before him if he deviated from an honest course in life. He had wealth to lose, the affection and comfort of a wife and family of six children, with all the anguish that follows the loss of home, of position in the world, of the esteem of friends—to be endured under the accumulated misery of many years' association with criminals, and the infamy and toil of a convicted felon.

4. The inkstand and snuff-box were the only articles in your Petitioner's large stock, valued at £12,000, that were even suspected to be stolen, except a pair of pistols, which were proved to have been frequently pledged with him by a customer named Martin, who had gotten them honestly, however they might have been originally lost.

5. An attempt was made to throw suspicion on your Petitioner by the evidence of Inspector Singleton, as follows:—"There was no label on the box of plate when I seized it, but there is a label upon it now; no other property has been claimed, with the exception of a pair of pistols; he told me he had bought the inkstand from the same person he purchased the box of plate from"—(Mr. Forster, on being asked, said he did not hear this, and I did not say it);—"all the other plate in the room was labelled; I never heard of his being charged with any offence before this."

The attempted imputation of crime was disproved by Alfred Morton, who deposed to the carpet bag produced having "been his property, and that the box and the plate produced were formerly the property of Mr. Thorburn, solicitor, with whom witness was employed in last January; and the plate was sold to Mr. Cockerell to meet a demand for rent."

Mr. Singleton gave his evidence in a way calculated to prejudice the jury. He speaks in his statement of a search for the articles, when in fact Mr. Forster shewed they were unhesitatingly produced by me, when asked to do so. As to your Petitioner being drunk, I overheard Singleton say to one of the police—Inspector Mortimer—behind me, "There is Cockerell, the pawnbroker; charge him with being drunk." Your Petitioner had just left his brother-in-law and a friend, and was not drunk. To my knowledge I never was in a house with Grant in my life. I did not know him by sight, and had never heard his name.

Your Petitioner produced several witnesses, who had known him for upwards of fourteen years, to prove his good character.

6. After the conviction the stock of your Petitioner was, as he is informed, in the possession of the detective police for months, and was ultimately sold at a ruinous loss.

7. A small allowance out of the proceeds has been paid to your Petitioner's wife and family, for their support, and the remnant of his property is now in the hands of the Crown, as a forfeiture.

Your Petitioner has been disgraced and ruined by the perjured evidence of Grant, who, whilst employed as a detective of thieves, was himself, by his own confession, engaged in committing robbery. But now that your Petitioner has suffered, and the law has had its victim, he ventures to hope, for the sake of his family, that your Honorable House will concede to him an inquiry into the circumstances of his case, so that his name may be cleared from the stain that has been put upon it, and that the wreck of his property may be restored to him.

Your Petitioner therefore prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to institute an inquiry into the truth of the allegations herein contained,—

And your Petitioner will ever pray.

JOHN COCKERELL.

No. 1.

MR. J. SHEPPARD to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Mount Pleasant, Berrima,
30 June, 1860.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor of calling your attention to the enclosed anonymous note, being a specimen of Mr. Liardet's, C.P.S., handy-work. My object, sir, in calling your attention to this matter is not merely for my own sake, but to shew you the manner in which Mr. Liardet not only annoys those persons who will not lend themselves to his ways, but those gentlemen, Mr. Badgery and Morrice, J.P., who he leaves no stone unturned, both public, private, and in writing, to annoy, particularly at this present moment, when he has a number of agents canvassing the District, for Jack Bill and Tom's signature, to retain him in his present situation, to the annoyance of the within-named gentlemen. I need not call your attention to the easy manner in which signatures are obtained when there is no money required. I firmly believe it would be a great boon conferred upon the inhabitants, if this quarrelsome, mischief-making gentleman was removed from Berrima.

If necessary I can procure an affidavit that the enclosed note was written and posted by Mr. Liardet, who previously read it to a person, making his comments upon its contents.

Hoping you will take this matter into consideration, not only on my behalf, as an old Government officer of thirty years standing, but also those gentlemen who he is continually annoying.

I have, &c.,
JAMES SHEPPARD,
late Chief Constable.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

Old Shepherd,

You old lether lip as big as three apath of bacon. Look at your legs and feet you knoc-need old beast. You old warmant—Tip-street trap—you have been pickled, and kicked in and out of every decent house in the District. Look at your whoredoms, and trials to make many homes miserabl. Tie yoursel up to a post like a bear as you are. Call your hut Trap's hole, not Mount Plesent. Writ over your door—Morgaged to Morris. Sell Smith, of Paddy's River, another pair of your dirty waxy trowsers. You deformed old beast, look at your legs—beat your wife out of her bed to get another woman in—send her away in only her chift.

Berrima, 19 June.

Your's,
I KNOWS YOU.

Take Badgery's beef for tip you dirty old beast—you ugly old bog-trotter—go back to Shannon Harbour.

Post Office, Berrima,
11 July, 1860.

Dear Sir,
In reply to your letter of the 10th instant, requesting me to give you a statement of what I know of the anonymous letter written by Mr. Liardet, on the 19th ultimo, addressed to you, I beg to say, as I have previously told you, that on the above-named date Mr. Liardet brought the letter in question, open in his hand, to my office. He read to me and commented upon its contents. I advised him not to post it after I heard what was in it. However he persisted in so doing, sealed it up, and paid the postage.

Yours truly,
JAMES POWELL,
Postmaster.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to MR. J. E. LIARDET.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 31 July, 1860.

SIR,

With reference to my letter of the 6th instant, apprising you of the intention of the Government to transfer you to some other district, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that a letter has been addressed to him by Mr. James Sheppard, late Chief Constable at Berrima, forwarding an anonymous communication, couched in the lowest and most scurrilous terms, which he has received, and charging you with having written and sent it.

2. In support of this charge, which he was required to prove, Mr. Sheppard has transmitted a letter from the Postmaster of Berrima, in which that person states, that on the 19th of June you called at his office, with the anonymous letter in question open in your hand, read it to him, and commented upon the contents, and then, although strongly advised not to do so, sealed and posted it.

3. The precision of this statement leaves little doubt on the minds of the Government, that the low discreditable production received by Mr. Sheppard was written and sent by you; and under such circumstances, they are clearly of opinion that you ought not to be retained in the public service. They are desirous, however, of affording you full opportunity of explaining your conduct; and with this view I am accordingly directed to call upon you to shew cause why you should not be dismissed, for having written and sent the letter in question.

I have, &c.,
W. ELYARD.

Berrima, 3 August, 1860.

SIR,

In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo, No. 415, I have the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, that I never wrote or saw the anonymous letter alluded to until I saw it in his office, and that the statements there shewn to me are a wilful and malicious fabrication of falsehoods.

I have, &c.,
J. E. LIARDET,
C. P. S.

The Postmaster General will be good enough to report on the within case, as affecting the character of Mr. Powell, the P.M. at Berrima.

SIR,

I respectfully beg leave to call your attention to my letter of the 11th of July, in reply to yours of the 9th, calling upon me for my proof in supporting the complaint made by me to the Government against J. E. Liardet, Clerk of Petty Sessions of this District, for writing an anonymous letter to me, on the 19th day of June last, and respectfully request you will favour me with the decision the Government have arrived at in reference to the complaint in question.

THIS deponent, James Powell, of Berrima, Postmaster, being duly sworn, on oath states:—On the 19th day of June last, Mr. Liardet, Clerk of Petty Sessions at Berrima, brought a letter to my place opened in his hand, addressed to Mr. James Sheppard; he read the contents of this letter to me, and made several remarks on the subject contained in the letter, which appeared to amuse him very much; in consequence of his (Mr. Liardet) being at variance with Mr. Sheppard, after his reading the letter referred to, I advised him not to post it, which he persisted in doing, and sealed and stamped it with the penny piece he held in his hand, to pay for a postage stamp, in my presence, and then handed me the letter for delivery, which I left in my office in the usual place; on the following day Mr. Sheppard received his post as usual, and amongst it was the letter posted by Mr. Liardet on the 19th of June; I afterwards saw Mr. Sheppard, who said he had received an anonymous letter through the Post Office, written by Mr. Liardet; he inquired of me when and by whom it was posted; I in reply told him it was posted by Mr. Liardet, on the previous day; on the 10th July I received the annexed letter, marked B, from Mr. James Sheppard, to which I replied, giving him all the information in my power, on the matter contained in it; I positively swear that the contents of the letter written by Mr. Liardet on the 3rd August, 1860, addressed to W. Elyard, Esq., Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, of which the annexed paper marked C purports being a copy, is a gross falsehood; and I further swear that the anonymous letter posted and read for me by Mr. Liardet, to Mr. James Sheppard, was written by Mr. Liardet.

THIS deponent, James Sheppard, of Berrima, being duly sworn, on oath states:—I received an anonymous letter through the Post Office, Berrima, on the 20th June last; I positively swear, to the best of my belief, it was written by Mr. Liardet; I am in the habit of seeing his writing, and was six years Chief Constable of the District of Berrima, during which time I was scarcely a day that I was not in the Police Office with him, and had an opportunity of seeing him write; the hand in which he wrote the anonymous letter to me is not his usual hand, but I have seen him write in a similar hand before, on three or four occasions; I accused him of writing the letter on the day I received it; he was watching me from the time I came into town until I left the Post Office with the anonymous letter; he was standing at the Court House, and I held up my hand with the letter, saying, "I got it, Jack"; I afterwards asked Mr. Powell, the Postmaster, if he knew where and by whom the letter was posted; he replied, it was posted by Mr. Liardet the day before; I afterwards wrote to Mr. Powell, with the view of getting his reply to my inquiry about the person who posted the anonymous letter to me in writing, so that I could forward the matter to the Colonial Secretary, for his consideration.

Soon as I got Mr. Powell's answer I sent it, with Mr. Liardet's anonymous letter, to the Colonial Secretary.

MR. J. E. LIARDET to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Berrima, 3 September, 1860.

SIR,

On further considering the subject of the charge against me, relative to the discreditable anonymous letter now under your notice, I have thought it as well to inform you, that at about the same date of the letter alluded to I received a very impertinent letter from Mr. James Sheppard, the late Chief Constable, charging me with calling him a variety of improper names, and threatening to get me dismissed from my office, in the most offensive manner, without any reason for so doing. This letter I received in the Post Office, and never took it therefrom; and on reading it there, I remarked to Mrs., not Mr. Powell, before I finished reading it, that it was a very impertinent one; to which Mrs. Powell replied, and said—"Yes, Sheppard posted it not long ago;" and as Mr. Sheppard alluded to his being called "Leather-lip," I turned over, or folded down, half the sheet of his own letter, and wrote the following words thereon, on Mr. Powell's counter, as nearly as I can remember:—"I do not know or care whether your lip is made of leather or skin, and I beg you will not take the liberty of troubling me with such rubbish again;" this I signed and wrote in my usual hand-writing, re-addressed the letter to Mr. Sheppard, and returned it through the post, and read it to Mrs. Powell before doing so; I made no secret of having received this letter from Mr. Sheppard, and that I returned it to him in the way I have stated; and I do recollect saying something to Mr. Powell about it. As I have not been supplied with a copy of Mr. Powell's statement on the subject, but an extract from it, in all probability I am accused of writing the anonymous letter, when it is intended to fix me with writing what I actually did.

I

I therefore beg to request that Mr. Sheppard be called on to produce his letter, with the note I wrote upon it, and then let that, with the anonymous letter, be produced to my accusers, and let them say which I wrote.

Should this not prove sufficient to exonerate me, I feel certain I could prove, from the mouths of my accusers, I never wrote or posted the anonymous letter I am accused of, if the Government would appoint a discreet person to investigate the matter on the spot.

I have, &c.,

THE UNDER SECRETARY to MR. J. E. LIARDET.

Colonial Secretary's Office,

Sydney, 4 September, 1860.

SIR,

With reference to my letter of the 31st of July last, respecting a charge made against you of having written and sent to Mr. James Sheppard, late Chief Constable at Berrima an anonymous letter of a low and scurrilous nature, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that your letter of the 3rd ultimo, in which you deny in positive but general terms that you were the writer of the letter in question, or that you even saw it until shewn to you in this office, has been laid before the Governor General and the Executive Council, together with affidavits since received from Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Powell, the Postmaster of Berrima, and Mrs. Powell, in confirmation of the charge, and some other documents having reference thereto.

2. Upon a perusal of these papers, which all tend to identify you as, at all events, the sender of the anonymous letter, and bearing in mind that you meet a charge supported by circumstances by a bare denial, the Government can only consider the charge as proven, and have directed that you should be dismissed the public service. I am, therefore, to intimate to you that you have been removed accordingly; and that a successor has been appointed to the several offices hitherto held by you.

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your further letter of the 3rd instant, respecting Mr. Sheppard's complaint against you, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to refer you to my letter of the 4th of this month, communicating to you the decision of the Government upon your case, and to inform you that nothing is stated in your communication now under reply, which disproves the assertion, verified on oath, that you published the anonymous letter forming the subject of the complaint referred to.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to BENCH OF MAGISTRATES, BERRIMA.

Colonial Secretary's Office,

Sydney, 7 September, 1860.

GENTLEMEN,

With reference to my letter of the 6th of July last, apprising you of the decision of the Government in the matter of the charges brought by Messrs. Morrice and Badgery, Justices of the Peace and Members of the Berrima Bench, against the Clerk of Petty Sessions, and the counter charges of Mr. Liardet, impeaching the conduct of those gentlemen, I am now directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that a further charge having been preferred against the Clerk of Petty Sessions, the Government have felt it necessary, after affording him an opportunity of offering such explanation as was in his power, and considering all the documents laid before them on the subject, to remove Mr. Liardet from the public service.

2. I am further directed to inform you, that Mr. G. Rowley has been appointed to succeed Mr. Liardet, and will proceed to Berrima to assume his duties without delay.

I have, &c.,

MR. J. E. LIARDET to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

Berrima, 7 September, 1860.

SIR,

In reply to your letter dated the 4th instant, I have to request that you will inform the Colonial Secretary that I shall always regard the determination of the Government as most unjust. It has dismissed upon illegal affidavits and statements I have not been permitted to see, and consequently without affording me any opportunity of defending myself from the charge beyond what you state.

I shall therefore feel it my duty to appeal to the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, to see justice done to me in the case.

Sydney, 24 September, 1860.

SIR,

We have the honor to request, on behalf of Mr. John E. Liardet, late C. P. S. at Berrima, that we may (as his Solicitors, and with a view to the adoption of such proceedings as he may be advised) be permitted to inspect and take copies of the correspondence, affidavits, and other proceedings relating to an inquiry into the circumstances connected with Mr. Liardet's dismissal.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

CRIMINAL CASES IN WHICH THE CROWN HAS REFUSED TO PROSECUTE.

(PARTIAL RETURN SHEWING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 10 July, 1862.

PARTIAL RETURN to an Address of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 10 May, 1861, praying that His Excellency the Governor would be pleased to cause to be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“ A Return of all Criminal Cases in which the Crown has “ refused to prosecute, commencing on the 1st day of “ August, 1859, and specifying,—

“ (1.) The name of the Accused.

“ (2.) The nature of Charge.

“ (3.) The names of Committing Justices; the date of “ Committal; and whether to Bail or Custody.

“ (4.) The date of receipt of Depositions in the Attorney “ General’s Office.

“ (5.) The date at which the determination not to pro“ secute had been arrived at, and by whom.

“ (6.) In Custody Cases, the date of the Order for the “ discharge of the Accused; the name of the Judge
“ by whom Order was made; and the place where “ made (i.e. in Sydney, on Circuit, or in Quarter “ Sessions).

“ (7.) In Bail Cases, the date of intimation of such “ determination to the Committing Justices and to “ the Accused.

“ (8.) The amount paid to Witnesses for expenses (if “ any) in each case.”

CRIMINAL CASES IN WHICH THE CROWN HAS REFUSED TO PROSECUTE.

SECRETARY TO CROWN LAW OFFICERS to AUDITOR GENERAL.

*Crown Law Offices,
Sydney, 13 May, 1862.*

SIR,

In transmitting the accompanying Return of Criminal Cases in which the Crown has refused to prosecute, as further particulars will be requisite in reference to the amount paid to witnesses for expenses in each case, I am directed to state that the information has been prepared, as far as possible, in this Office, but with regard to columns under the above head, especially in respect of the places marked Qy., doubts are entertained. I am therefore desired to request that you will have the goodness to cause the necessary additions to be supplied at your earliest convenience.

I have, &c.,
W. E. PLUNKETT.

AUDITOR GENERAL to SECRETARY TO CROWN LAW OFFICERS.

*Audit Office,
Sydney, 20 May, 1862.*

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, I have the honor to enclose the Return of Criminal Cases in which the Crown has refused to prosecute, and to inform you that no allowances are paid to witnesses in criminal cases, except upon actual attendance at trials; and that if such has at any time been allowed, of which nothing is known at this Office, it must have been under a special authority from the Honorable the Attorney General, and recorded in the Crown Law Offices.

I have, &c.,
W. C. MAYNE,
A. G.

I MAY observe, in reference to the Auditor General's letter, that exceptional cases frequently arise in which the witnesses would be entitled to be paid. The Crown having refused to prosecute shortly before the time appointed for trial, and in which the witnesses could not be apprised of the decision, or through the absence of necessary witnesses, cases may have been postponed, and the Attorney General may finally have seen reason not to proceed further. For these and other reasons the Audit Office, wherein the vouchers are deposited, is the only place from which authentic information on this head can be supplied. Every requisite particular is given in the Return for the purpose.

W. E. PLUNKETT.

WILL the Crown Solicitor, in respect of cases committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court and the Circuits, have the goodness to supply any information in his power under the column headed—"Amount paid to witnesses for expenses (if any) in each case"?

W. E. P.

ALL vouchers for payment of witnesses are in the Audit Office. It will be observed that the certificate given by the Crown Solicitor (a blank form of which is attached, marked A) certifies that certain persons were required to attend and did attend. When the interval of time between the committal and the date of the Attorney General's declining to prosecute is too short to admit of notice being given to the witnesses, or for some other such reason, a certificate is given to the witnesses in cases where no bill has been filed, but these cases (Supreme and Circuit Courts) are very infrequent, and are noted in the certificate given.

JOHN WILLIAMS.
23/5/62.

WILL Mr. Rogers, in respect of the Quarter Sessions attended by him, have the goodness to supply any information in his power?

THE

CRIMINAL CASES IN WHICH THE CROWN HAS REFUSED TO PROSECUTE. 3

THE only authentic source from which the information required can be obtained is from the vouchers at the Audit Office.

Clerk of the Peace.
B.C.—23/5/62.

THESE papers are now submitted for the Attorney General's decision, as to what further steps should be taken in the matter.

W. E. P.
23 May, 1862.

If the Audit Office cannot conveniently and quickly supply the blanks of this Return, it should be laid on the table as a "Partial Return." Most probably the Return, though incomplete, will with the memoranda sufficiently explain the matter.

Crown Solicitor.

AUDITOR GENERAL to SECRETARY TO CROWN LAW OFFICERS.

Audit Office, Sydney,
26 June, 1862.

SIR,

In returning the enclosed Statement of Criminal Cases in which the Crown has refused to prosecute, together with the copies of correspondence forwarded for my information, I do myself the honor to observe, with reference to the Honorable the Attorney General's Minute of the 16th instant, that the blanks in the Return can, if considered essentially necessary, be filled up from an examination of the numerous accounts of the Supreme Court, Circuit Courts, and Courts of Quarter Sessions, furnished to me for the last three years; but, as every voucher would have to be scrutinized, and considerable time and labour would be involved in the search, it could not be done just now without great inconvenience to this Office, in interference with its current duties.

I have, &c.,
W. C. MAYNE,
A. G.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

(PETITION OF WILLIAM RADLEY.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 27 August, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of William Radley,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That on the morning of Monday, July 1st, 1861, your Petitioner waited on the Police Magistrate, Captain Scott, and asked for a summons against one William Palmer Moffat, Solicitor, to compel him to show cause why he should not be dealt with according to law, for the commission of a misdemeanour.

That Captain Scott did then and there evade and avoid the proper discharge of his duty as a Magistrate, by refusing to grant a summons against Moffat, alleging as his motive, "I don't want to get into hot water with Mr. Moffat"; and adding, "I would rather you went to my Solicitors, Messrs. Spain and Roxburgh, who will get the money for you which Mr. Moffat has defrauded you of."

That your Petitioner was in consequence compelled to return to Melbourne, on the 6th of July, as he came, being unable to induce the Magistrates to do their duty, by reason of collusion with or fear of a delinquent of some apparent consequence in society.

That on or about the 28th day of March, 1862, your Petitioner applied to Mr. Lucas, J.P., sitting for Captain Scott, to issue a summons against Moffat, and received for answer—"I will see Captain Scott, and if there is no objection I will grant you a summons."

That when your Petitioner again saw Mr. Lucas he made reply that he had seen Captain Scott, who had given an order to the Clerk of Records to draw an information, which being drawn in usual form, a summons issued thereon, and was served about April 1st, returnable April 8th, when your Petitioner attended to conduct the case in person at the Police Court; and that your Petitioner was not allowed to offer any evidence in support of his complaint, to put in any paper, nor to make any statement whatever, and the Justices, Messrs. Ronald, Kettle and Day, collusively dismissed the information without any hearing.

That on the 13th of May, 1862, a man, by name Thomas Humfrey, of No. 160, Lower George-street, in the City of Sydney, did falsely and maliciously give your Petitioner into custody, on a charge of stabbing him with a bowie knife, and on being taken before Saml. North, at the Water Police Court, the hearing being postponed until the 14th, to give the officer time to search your Petitioner's luggage for the bowie knife, which being done on the 13th May, and no bowie knife found, nor dagger, nor case, pocket, or other knife, nor any instrument capable of inflicting serious wounds, the said Saml. North did maliciously, wrongfully, and unjustly, as without a tittle of evidence, and regardless of the desire of compt. that the case should go no further, compel your Petitioner to be bound for 12 months to keep the peace, or be imprisoned till the Sessions, thereby perpetuating an infamous stigma on your Petitioner's reputation.

That on the 2nd day of July, 1862, your Petitioner did issue a summons out of the District Court of Sydney aforesaid, against the said Thomas Humfrey, returnable on the 4th of August instant, for the recovery of a small amount of debt, which being heard by Mr. J. S. Dowling, was given in defendant's favour, without any evidence in support, and against the previously expressed opinion of said Judge in reply to Mr. Greer, that "there is sufficient evidence on behalf of plaintiff to go to a jury," and in direct contravention of right, and against the evidence.

That a respectable eye and ear witness of this shameful outrage upon judicial probity, did indite and send a letter of indignant remonstrance to the said Judge, in respect of his irregularity, and without your Petitioner's knowledge.

That your Petitioner has been greatly injured by these several acts, in mind, body, and estate, and being debarred from any ordinary course of inquiry and redress in the premises, seeks the aid of your Honorable House, to get that redress which he is justly entitled to, as well as correct the tendency to a repetition of such shameful perversions of functional power.

That your Petitioner did address a letter of complaint against the first act of Captain Scott, to His Excellency the Governor, which being referred by him to the Honble. the Chief Secretary, your Petitioner received for reply—"Your letter has been referred to Captain Scott, and an explanation (ex parte) has been received from him, which is considered "satisfactory."

That your Petitioner did also address a letter of explanation to His Honor Judge Dowling, praying for a re-opening and re-hearing of the case, without any reply, intimation, or notice whatever.

Your Petitioner would hence remind your Honorable House, that such a mode of inquiry into a glaring abuse of function by an official is a mockery of justice, and a violation of the principle of "the equality of all men before the law," an insult to any memorialist and complainant, however degraded, and especially to a gentleman of position and education; an act, on the part of the Executive, of bringing the Law and the Government into disrepute and contempt; and, what is worse, an absolute veto to all aggrieved persons to apply for redress, and a waiver of the principle of right of complaint and hearing in presence of accuser and accused, forming a direct cause of just resentment, to be stifled and smothered in the breasts of an injured population, until a fitting occasion of popular outbreak and fury reduces the whole.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will receive the Petition, and take the several premises into your serious consideration, if not for the benefit of your Petitioner, at least for others that may come into like dilemma, and either accord to your Petitioner a legal means of suit against the parties, or such an amount of damages as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MISS ISABELLA MARY KELLY.

(PETITION OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 17 July, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Isabella Mary Kelly,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner, in the early part of the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, prosecuted one Charles Skerrett, for cattle stealing; and the said Charles Skerrett having produced a Bill of Sale purporting to be by your Petitioner to him, and acknowledging the receipt of six hundred pounds, alleged to have been paid by the said Charles Skerrett to your Petitioner for the said cattle, your Petitioner on the trial of Skerrett stated truly, on oath, that that document was not signed, as it purported to be, by her.

That the said Charles Skerrett was at that time convicted of stealing your Petitioner's cattle, and sentenced to ten years imprisonment for that crime, but after serving four years only of that sentence was liberated.

That, upon his liberation from imprisonment, the said Charles Skerrett endeavoured to complete the felonious appropriation of your Petitioner's cattle, and also sought still further to injure your Petitioner, and to render it impossible for her to protect her property from his grasp, by instituting a prosecution against your Petitioner for alleged perjury.

That on the fifth October, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, your Petitioner was declared "Guilty of Perjury," on the ground that she had stated, as above mentioned, that the Bill of Sale produced by Skerrett was not signed by her, although that document was not produced in evidence at the trial of your Petitioner, and your Petitioner was accordingly sentenced, notwithstanding the real truth of her statement, to imprisonment for one year, and to a fine of one hundred pounds.

That while your Petitioner was in prison on this charge, the document in question was discovered among papers in the possession of His Honor the Chief Justice, and the case, with this additional evidence, having been laid before a Committee of the Legislative Assembly, and having been brought by them under the notice of His Honor Sir John Nodes Dickinson, then Acting Chief Justice, it was manifestly proved that the said document was a forgery, and at the instigation of the said Committee, and on the recommendation of His Honor, your Petitioner was accordingly released from imprisonment, on the fifteenth March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty, with health shattered and her feelings deeply wounded by more than five months suffering, to which she was subjected on a charge of which, as His Honor Sir John Nodes Dickinson expressly stated, she was perfectly innocent.

That during the time of your Petitioner's imprisonment the said Charles Skerrett, taking the sentence passed upon your Petitioner as a proof of the validity of the forged Bill of Sale, seized and took away a number of cattle which had belonged to your Petitioner, and had been sold by her to Messrs. Begbie and Cooper, on the Manning River, in consequence of which Messrs. Begbie and Cooper became insolvent, and your Petitioner lost eleven hundred pounds, due to her from them for the said cattle, and interest.

That the said Charles Skerrett was committed on the charge of stealing the cattle sold by your Petitioner to Messrs. Begbie and Cooper, in November, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, and afterwards, on the nineteenth October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty, was committed on a charge of forgery, for falsely signing your Petitioner's name to the above-mentioned Bill of Sale; but, in both instances, the Attorney General declined to prosecute him; and taking advantage of the impunity allowed him, the said Charles Skerrett has continued to appropriate to his own use your Petitioner's property, which, at the time of her imprisonment, was estimated to be worth fifteen thousand pounds, and by the said Skerrett's long-continued and successful attempts to injure your Petitioner, she has been reduced from comparative affluence to absolute penury.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays your Honorable House to take the premises into your consideration, and to grant your Petitioner such protection against further aggression, and such redress, as may seem just to your Honorable House.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

ISABELLA MARY KELLY.

MISS ISABELLA MARY KELLY.

(PETITION OF, TO BE HEARD BY COUNSEL.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 3 October, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Honorable House having granted a Special Committee to inquire into her case, she prays that she may be heard by Counsel before such Committee.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Miss Isabella Mary Kelly :—Mr. Allen, as Chairman, brought up the Report from, and laid upon the Table the Minutes of Proceedings of, and Evidence taken before, the Select Committee appointed on the 23rd September last, to inquire into and report upon the case of Miss Isabella Mary Kelly.
Ordered to be printed.

MISS ISABELLA MARY KELLY.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 23rd September last, "with power to send for persons and papers," "to inquire into and report upon the statements made in the Petition of Isabella Mary Kelly, presented on 6 December last,"—have agreed to the following Report :—

Your Committee have made such inquiry into the said case as the circumstances seemed to demand; have examined such witnesses as were to be found, and, where evidence was on record before Police Courts, taken on oath, and not otherwise to be procured, Evidence extracted from the Judge's notes at one of the trials, from the Crown Law Office, from the Executive Council, together with sundry letters bearing on this inquiry, will be found amongst the evidence hereto appended.

The case appears to assume the following features :—

Miss Kelly arrived here in 1834, by the "James," having the Rev. Dr. Lang as shipmate. At that time she brought money and goods to the amount of about £3,000, part of which she invested in land and cattle, and part she lent out. She then returned to England, and came back to the Colony in the "Columbian," in 1837, bringing £1,900 in money with her, in addition to her former investments. The whole of this money, between £4,000 and £5,000, she invested in business in the Colony, chiefly pastoral pursuits, on the Manning River, and partly in real estate in Maitland.

The circumstances out of which the present inquiry has arisen appear as follows :—

Towards the latter end of 1853, or early in 1854, Miss Kelly placed a portion of her cattle (280 head) in the hands of Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, of Sydney, licensed auctioneers, for sale (these cattle, at that time, were running at the Manning River)—taking an advance of £300, and giving, as security, a general lien on her whole stock for payment. From a statement of account appended, dated November 2nd, 1854, sworn to by Mr. Langley, one of the firm, before the Police Court at Sydney, 23rd November, 1860, it appears that the advance was made either on or previous to the 14th February, 1854, and by Mr. Langley's evidence before this Committee* it was paid off on the 10th November, 1854. In the month of April, 1854, Miss Kelly first became acquainted with Charles Skerrett, and on the 29th of April of that year she executed an agreement with him, leasing to him her station and cottage at Brimbin, reserving a portion of the cottage for her own use. At this time Skerrett told her he would soon be in a position to purchase her cattle, when she told him they were in the hands of her agents in Sydney, Rich, Langley, and Butchart, for sale. He went to Sydney, and purchased goods from Brierley, Dean, & Co., in the May following, and returned to Brimbin on the 22nd or 23rd of that month, when he told Miss Kelly that he had purchased all her cattle and brands for £800; she told him she had not authorized her agents to sell more than 250 head. She asked Skerrett if he had any document from her agents, to which he replied, "No," that they would write in a day or two. However, she acquiesced in the sale; and, acting under the impression that Rich, Langley, and Butchart had sold the cattle to Skerrett, told two persons who wanted to purchase from her, that Skerrett had bought them. She did not allow Skerrett to exercise any right of ownership over them, nor did Miss Kelly herself sell or authorize any person to sell, any of the cattle after Skerrett informed her he had made the purchase from her Sydney agents, with the exception of one fat bullock, which she sold to Skerrett on the 17th July following, he agreeing to pay her £4 for it; the money to be refunded when her agents should advise her of the sale to Skerrett.

On the 4th of June, 1854, Skerrett came and took possession of the Brimbin Station, in terms of the agreement of the 29th April previous.

By statement of account sales of Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, furnished November 2nd, 1854,† it will appear that on the 14th of February previous they sold to Wilson, as per specification, cattle amounting to £159 15s., from which deducting commission on the loan of £300, interest, and advertising, £38 3s. 3d., also charges on the sale of the cattle to Wilson, £10 10s., a considerable part of the lien would be left still due.

Towards the latter part of July, 1854, Miss Kelly received a letter from Rich, Langley, and Butchart, demanding settlement of the lien, and recommending her to remove the sale of the cattle out of their hands, as the limit was too high, and place it in the hands of Mr. Dodds, of Maitland. On receipt of which letter, Miss Kelly charged Skerrett with having told a falsehood in stating that he had purchased her cattle from Rich, Langley, and Butchart, when in fact he had not done so. This occurred on the 24th of July, 1854.‡

She

She then started for Sydney, and saw Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, who informed her that they did not know the man,* * Langley. had never seen him. She then arranged to remove the sale of the cattle to Mr. Dodds,† of Maitland, and he paid the balance of the lien † Vide q. 139c. due to Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart. She then returned to Brimbin, giving notice on the way that Skerrett had not purchased her cattle. At Raymond Terrace she learned that Skerrett had shipped some of her horses for Sydney in the steamer "Collaroy."‡ After † Vide q. 62. arriving at Brimbin, she had information that a Charles Turner had slaughtered some of her cattle, which he had bought from Skerrett; she proceeded to his (Turner's) place, and found it so; she had the brands cut out, and proceeding to Dungog, there procured a warrant to arrest Charles Skerrett for cattle-stealing. He was brought up on this instrument before the Dungog Bench, and remanded to the Bungay Bungay Bench, on the Manning, from which he was committed for trial at the Central Criminal Court, Sydney, for cattle-stealing. At this committal he produced two documents—one purporting to be a bill of sale of the whole of Miss Kelly's cattle, and the pick of twenty horses, and a receipt for £600 paid—£400 cash, and a bill for £200 at twelve months; the other, a receipt for £400 cash, as the full amount of the purchase money for all her cattle and twenty unbroken horses, without any mention of a promissory note or bill at all.§ This was the first intimation of the existence of such documents received by Miss Kelly. They are each dated Brimbin, 6th June, 1854. Miss Kelly says these documents are forgeries, and Skerrett relies on them, as giving him the only title he sets up to the ownership of the cattle and horses.

§ Vide Appendix to Mr. Plunkett's Evidence, Exhibits A & B, p. 27.

Charles Skerrett was tried before Sir Alfred Stephen, in pursuance of the forementioned committal, for cattle-stealing, on the 5th of April, 1855, convicted, and sentenced to ten years hard labour on the roads, &c., the jury finding both documents forgeries.||

|| Vide Herald's report of finding, q. 149.

Of this sentence Skerrett served more than four years on the Penal Establishment at Cockatoo Island. During the period of his servitude, his family and others made incessant applications to His Honor Sir Alfred Stephen, and to the Attorney General, J. H. Plunkett, Esq., to have the sentence reconsidered.¶

¶ Vide q. 1056, also, Sir A. Stephen's Evidence, Separate Appendix B.

At the trial of Skerrett in 1855, two of the witnesses signing the exhibits A and B, mentioned before, were not produced—William Turner having absconded, as was represented, through the instrumentality of Miss Kelly, and Jane Skerrett, who had broken her leg by falling from her horse, and could not be removed from Brimbin.

Sir Alfred Stephen consented to re-examine the sentence of the Court, and procured the said exhibits A and B from the Crown Law Office for this purpose. The result was, that he recommended a remission of the sentence passed on Skerrett, and he was discharged from Cockatoo.

After

After Skerrett's discharge from Cockatoo he instituted proceedings against Miss Kelly for perjury, in swearing at the Police Court in Dungog,—

- 1st. That Skerrett told her that he had purchased her cattle for £800 from her Sydney agents—Rich, Langley, and Butchart ;
- 2nd. That she did not sell her cattle to Skerrett ;
- 3rd. That the signatures to the two documents were not hers.

This case came on for trial before Sir John Nodes Dickinson Acting Chief Justice, on the 6th and 7th of October, 1859.

Previous to the trial Miss Kelly ascertained that the exhibits A and B could not be found. It was admitted that Sir Alfred Stephen had procured them from the Crown Law Office. Sir Alfred appeared before the Central Police Court, when, on oath, he stated that he had procured them from the Crown Law Office, and must have returned them, but could not remember how or when. However, every possible search was made for them at that time, without avail. The trial came on, and these documents, so essential to Miss Kelly's defence,* were still missing. His Honor Sir Alfred Stephen was again examined at the trial, with reference to the loss of these documents. His evidence was similar to that previously given at the Police Court; but in his evidence as to the contents of exhibit A, witnessed by William Turner, he falls into a very serious mistake. He says, "it was a receipt for £400, and also, I think, for the bill"†; whereas this document states that £400 were paid in full for the cattle and twenty head of unbroken horses, not a word being said of the bill for £200, mentioned in the exhibit B, witnessed the same day, at the same place, by Skerrett's daughters, Jane and Margaret Skerrett.

† Vide Sir J. N. Dickinson's communication to the Principal Secretary, Appendix to Mr. Elyard's Evidence, par. 31, p. 19.

Miss Kelly, however, was convicted of perjury on each of the three counts, and sentenced to one year in Darlinghurst Gaol and a fine of £100.

In paragraph twenty-eight of the Judge's letter above referred to, he says, "I expected a different verdict." In paragraph thirty-four of the same letter he says, "So little turned, at Miss Kelly's trial, " on that part of the charge relating to the alleged statements of purchase by Skerrett from Rich and Langley, that I do not consider it " necessary to say anything about that part of the case." The whole case, therefore, seems to have turned on the truth or falsehood of the missing documents.

The consequences of this verdict were, that Skerrett got legal possession of all Miss Kelly's cattle, and twenty of the pick of her horses, whilst she was confined in the Gaol at Darlinghurst, with no expectation of release before the expiration of twelve months.

Previous

Previous to Skerrett's release Miss Kelly had disposed of all her cattle, and forty-three acres of land, to Begbie and Cooper, for £1,200, receiving £200 in cash, and two promissory notes amounting to £1,000. The cattle were delivered, but she retained the deeds of the land until the notes should be retired.

Immediately on Miss Kelly's conviction, Skerrett claimed all the cattle that had belonged to her from the 4th of June, 1854, and wherever he could find cattle with her brand, drove off and sold. He also took her horses wherever he could find them; in consequence of which Begbie and Cooper could not retire their notes for £1,000, and became insolvent,* and Miss Kelly got a dividend of £190, which was paid to her agents, Messrs. Lennon and Cape.

* Vide Mr. Cooper's letter, Separate Appendix E.

Miss Kelly was liberated from gaol, and the fine remitted, on the 15th of March, 1860, on the recommendation of Judge Dickinson,† the missing documents having been previously found in Sir Alfred Stephen's Banco drawer. She had been confined there from the 7th of the previous October, a period of more than five months, during which time, from sleeping on the ground floor in a damp cell, she states that her health had been bad for the latter two months. At this time she was so weak that she could not be removed till the day after the order for her discharge arrived, and then had to be carried to a conveyance. That in consequence of her incarceration, the distress of mind she suffered, and the indignity to which she was subjected as a criminal, she became subject to fits, which she never had before, and to which she is occasionally subjected to the present day.

For several months after obtaining her liberty her health was bad, and her constitution so shattered that, although she had information of the manner in which Skerrett was dealing with her property; she could not take any steps to defend herself.‡

In the meantime, Mr. J. R. Brenan, Miss Kelly's attorney, had William Turner arrested at the Dawson River, in Queensland, brought down to Sydney, and lodged in Darlinghurst Gaol.

After many applications and great difficulty, a warrant was procured to bring Skerrett before the Police Office Bench at Sydney, for the forgery of the two documents (exhibits A and B). At this investigation William Turner, his father, Samuel Turner, Joseph Giles, Joseph Andrews and Ann his wife, C. E. Langley, and Miss Kelly were examined and cross-examined on oath by attorneys for Miss Kelly and Charles Skerrett. Skerrett was committed to stand his trial by the presiding Magistrate, James Murphy, Esq. This investigation commenced on the 17th October, 1860, and concluded on the 23rd November following. The Attorney General refused to prosecute, and Skerrett was again discharged.

Your Committee desire to call the special attention of your Honorable House to the facts disclosed at this inquiry, as well as to the conflicting and contradictory nature of the evidence given by Margaret Skerrett at Bungay Bungay, and at the trial of Skerrett, as taken from Sir Alfred Stephen's notes, and that of Mrs. Brandswait given before this Committee.

This brings the labours of your Committee to the end of the law proceedings of this complicated case, but they desire to put your Honorable House in possession of the facts of two cases that have been incidentally mentioned in the course of this inquiry.

The first is that of Kelly v. Burt. It appears that, in 1858, Mr. W. C. Burt chartered a ship to take horses to India, and he, by his attorney, Mr. S. C. Brown, alleges that Miss Kelly agreed to ship twenty horses, at a charge of freight, &c., of £25 for each horse; that he reserved room for twenty horses accordingly; that Miss Kelly only sent fifteen horses instead of twenty; that four out of the fifteen died on the passage, leaving eleven only to land in India. Mr. Burt charges freight and forage for the whole number of twenty.

Miss Kelly denies that any conclusive agreement was made to ship the whole twenty, and although she contemplated shipping twenty at first, she wrote to Mr. Burt that she could not ship so many, and in a conversation with Mr. Sydney Burt, admitted that she had contemplated shipping twenty. No written agreement is produced on either side; Miss Kelly considers that if four horses died on the passage Mr. Burt was bound, by the custom of the trade, to cut out the brands and show them as evidence, which he has not done. Miss Kelly brings an action against Mr. Burt for account and the net proceeds. Mr. Burt lodges £40 in Court as the net proceeds of the eleven horses sold, deducting £25 each for the horses short shipped, and the expenses of the four that died, and the jury find a verdict for Burt.

The other is an action for slander, brought by Reuben Richards against Joseph Andrews, for stating that a lease of some property at Mount George, from Miss Kelly to Richards, was a forgery.

The circumstances of this case appear to be:—When Miss Kelly was sent to Darlinghurst, Messrs. Lennon and Cape, from whom she had borrowed money, and to whom she had executed a lien for £320, sent up a Mr. Gerrard to look after their interest, and take charge of her property until he could realize as much as would pay them. Miss Kelly had a paddock close to Mr. Andrews, whilst her residence was at some distance. Mr. Gerrard gave Andrews permission to put his cattle into this paddock. Richards said he had a lease of this paddock from Miss Kelly, and commenced a series of actions for trespass against Andrews. In Court, at the trial of one of these actions, Richards produced a lease, purporting to be from Miss Kelly, of this paddock, and Andrews said it was a forgery; whereupon Richards entered an action against Andrews for slander. At the trial Miss Kelly, at that time fresh from Darlinghurst, where she had been imprisoned for perjury, and from thence just liberated, was called as a witness to prove the presumed lease a forgery. The lease was produced; duced; there was no witness to it, no evidence that she either wrote it or signed it, save that of Richards himself. Miss Kelly swore she never executed the lease, and that it was a forgery. The jury did not believe her, because the writing so intimately resembled a number of genuine documents of her writing then before them, and gave a verdict, carrying damages and costs of suit, against Andrews.

Mr. Mullen, of Maitland, Attorney, gave evidence before this Committee touching this case.

Three of the jurymen who sat on the trial have given evidence before this Committee—two of them, Mr. Alderman Smithers and E. Spyer, Esq., say that if Mr. Mullen's statement had been given in evidence at the trial, in all probability their verdict would have been the other way. Mr. Selby, the third one, cannot say what effect such evidence would have had on him; he decided by the evidence produced, and still thinks the lease was not a forgery, the writing was so like the genuine documents before him at the time.

Miss Kelly took steps against Richards at the Police Office, but he would not produce the lease, and she could not procure it; it was immediately taken out of Court after the trial.

When Miss Kelly went back to the Manning, she immediately took possession of the paddock, repudiated the lease altogether, and Richards did not object.

Richards has since been convicted of perjury at Maitland, but escaped punishment on a point of law.

Your Committee are of opinion, that neither of these cases invalidates Miss Kelly's claim for compensation on account of losses and injuries arising out of her own conviction for perjury, if any claim would otherwise exist.

As to the value of Miss Kelly's property when Skerrett was liberated from Cockatoo, or to her losses arising out of that and subsequent proceedings, your Committee have not sufficient reliable data to form anything like a satisfactory conclusion.

Still they have not any reason to doubt that Miss Kelly began in 1837 with a capital of £4,000 or £5,000; and in 1854, after a lapse of seventeen years, considering the nature of the pursuits in which she was engaged, the attention and economy with which she managed her business, they think it not at all improbable that, all told, she may have been worth the amount she states, of £15,000. At that time her Mount George Estate, of 895 acres, was her own, and unencumbered. Some of this property she afterwards sold, at the rate of from £12 per acre to £24 per acre; she valued it altogether at £4,000. She states she refused from a Mr. Peters about this period £4,000 for her stock of horses; she was satisfied to abide by the bargain her agents were supposed to have made with Skerrett, £800 for her stock of cattle. She had a dairy farm of forty-three acres at Waterview, she had considerable possessions in Maitland, besides some ready money, &c., and was not in debt. This is the estimate she formed of her property, at the time she fell in with Skerrett in 1854.

When Skerrett commenced proceedings against her in 1859, she borrowed £320 at interest, to bear the expenses of the lawsuit, which must have been very heavy.

Then the prosecution of Skerrett at the Police Office, lasted from the 17th of October to the 23rd November; all this time her witnesses had to be supported and lawyers feed; besides the travelling expenses of witnesses had to be borne—the outlay must, therefore, have been enormous.

At the time Skerrett was liberated she estimates the value of her property at £10,000. Two witnesses examined by the Committee, and Mrs. Cooper's letter, estimate the value of Miss Kelly's property at that time at about £1,500; this is manifestly incorrect. Mr. Cape states that his firm realised over £900 worth of stock, the whole of which, excepting £58, went to cover the £320 borrowed from them, and expenses of management. This amount included £300 as the price of sheep that cost two years previously £1,000, the wool from which, the previous year, sold at Mort's Produce Stores in Sydney for £277. The lambs from these sheep, about 700, were all killed; besides, Begbie and Cooper owed £1,000, and £150 interest, for cattle sold to them.

The stock of horses of 1854, and their increase, were all there, save fifteen head sent to India by Burt, and what Skerrett had appropriated. There was the Mount George property, worth a good deal more than the mortgage of only £500; some of the Maitland property was still unsold.

Your Committee think it very probable that the property of which Miss Kelly was possessed when Skerrett was liberated, might, under her own management, have realized somewhat near the following:—

| Sheep, lambs, and wool..... | 1,200 | 0 | 0 |
| Begbie and Cooper..... | 1,150 | 0 | 0 |
| Horses..... | 6,000 | 0 | 0 |
| Equity of Redemption of Mount George.. | 2,000 | 0 | 0 |
| Maitland property..... | | | |
| | £10,350 | 0 | 0 |

The Maitland property has not been taken into the above consideration, although it realized a large amount.

Your Committee consider that the statements in Miss Kelly's petition have been borne out by the annexed evidence. With the exception of "and that at the instigation of the said Committee in the" fifth paragraph, no evidence has been taken as to the committal of Skerrett at the instance of Begbie and Cooper.

Your

Your Committee consider that Miss Kelly has made out a strong claim for compensation.

Your Committee are of opinion—

- 1st.—That the documents referred to as exhibits A and B, under the head of “ Appendix to the foregoing Evidence,” are both forgeries.
- 2nd.—That the mislaying of these two documents by the Crown, at her trial on the 6th and 7th of October, 1859, seriously prejudiced her defence.
- 3rd.—That the evidence given by Sir Alfred Stephen at that trial, respecting exhibit A (at that time not to be found), was calculated to mislead the jury.

Your Committee recommend, should your Honorable House consider Miss Kelly’s claims to compensation valid, that your Honorable House take into consideration :—

- 1st.—The pecuniary losses she has sustained in consequence of her unjust conviction and imprisonment for perjury on the 6th and 7th October, 1859.
- 2nd.—The loss of liberty and health.
- 3rd.—The injury to reputation and standing in society.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Miss Kelly called in and examined :—

1. By the Chairman : Your name is Isabella Mary Kelly? Yes.
2. This is a Committee of the Legislative Assembly, appointed in accordance with your petition, which was laid before the House during the present Session, to inquire into the allegations contained in that petition ;—are you prepared to go into the case? No; I have not my papers; they are in the hands of Mr. Ryan Brenan. I telegraphed to him on Monday, in order that I might obtain them.
3. Would you be prepared to proceed with your case on this day week? Yes.

Miss I. M.
Kelly.

| Mr. CUNNEEN. | | |

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Miss Isabella Mary Kelly called in and further examined :—

4. By the Chairman : Your petition states that Charles Skerrett was convicted, in 1855, of cattle stealing from you, and that he was afterwards liberated in 1859; that you were convicted of perjury with respect to this trial in 1859; and that, on the 15th of March, 1860, you were pardoned and liberated, owing to the recommendation of the Acting Chief Justice, who tried the case ;—were you present when judgment was delivered against Charles Skerrett, Miss Kelly? I was.
5. Was he convicted of cattle stealing, or forgery, or both? He was convicted of cattle stealing, based upon forgery.
6. When did you become acquainted with him? In the year 1854.
7. In the year 1854? Yes.

Miss I. M.
Kelly.
22 Oct., 1862.

- Miss I. M. Kelly.
- 22 Oct., 1862.
8. Under what circumstances? He came to my house, accompanied by a Mr. Millar and a Mr. Anderson, shipwrights, on the Manning.
 9. For what purpose did he come? They were going on to Sydney. I wished to let Brimbin, as I did not want it. I wished to go back to my estate at Mount George. There was only the tenure of the lease unexpired. I rented it from Mr. Atkinson.
 10. Where had Skerrett been living at this time? He said he lived at Port Macquarie.
 11. Did you know him there? No; I never saw him before, to my knowledge. I might have seen him passing, but he never entered my house until that day, to my knowledge.
 12. And was the agreement made at that time? Yes, it was.
 13. To rent Brimbin? Yes, during my tenure of the lease. It was witnessed by Mr. Anderson and Mr. Millar, who were present.
 14. Did he come expressly for that purpose? I do not know. I did not advertise it for sale.
 15. Did you know anything of Skerrett before that? No.
 16. Did you let it to him under a written agreement? Yes, signed and witnessed. He wanted to write out the agreement, but I said, no, I would have it done by a disinterested person. I asked Mr. Anderson to write out the agreement, and he did so. It was dictated by myself.
 17. Do you remember the terms of that agreement? The terms were—my tenure of the lease, as far as I can remember; and until such time as my cattle were sold by Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, he was to have the use of a hundred cows. He said he had a large family of daughters, and wished to keep a dairy; he also said that he had cattle and horses at the Macleay River, and that he wanted some milking cows.
 18. Were they to be given to him? No, they were only to be for his use until they were sold, and they were liable to be sold at any hour, by Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart.
 19. Had he any power to sell them? No; I could not have given him that power, because they were in the hands of Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, for sale.
 20. Did you tell him that? Yes; and he said he would soon be in a position to purchase the cattle. He said he had £1,500 left him by his relatives—that he had a power of attorney drawn out by Messrs. Holden and M'Carthy, and passed through the firm of Brierly, Dean, & Co., for collection in England. I think the words he used were—"I will soon be in a position to purchase your cattle." I said, "If you want to purchase them, you must go to Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart."
 21. Did that refer to the milch cows or to the whole of the stock? To 250 head.
 22. Did this 100 head form part? Which 100 head?
 23. The 100 head he was to milk? Yes. These cows were included as a matter of course. I made no agreement whatever, only that until they were sold he could have the use of them.
 24. Do you recollect what he was to pay? Only £10 a year. He said that he had a large family, and was poor; and I said, "You may have the use of the cows till I sell them."
 25. He was to give you £10 a year for the station? Yes.
 26. That did not include stock, did it? No. The agreement is here.
 27. Have you it with you? No, it is in the Crown Law Office.
 28. Was there any other arrangement between you and him about mustering the cattle? Yes. He said he would muster my horses for me if I would permit him. He made the agreement, and in a day or two after that, he came in with the document in his hand (I wrote it out myself) and said, "As you will not allow me to break in your horses, you had better tear up your agreement, and I will tear mine." I saw him tear up a slip of paper, and I tore up mine too. I thought he tore up his agreement.
 29. You thought he had torn up the agreement on his part, as you had torn up yours, for the mustering? Yes. It was the third day after, I think.
 30. Did that agreement ever turn up again? Yes.
 31. Under what circumstances? I was surprised when I saw it in the Court.
 32. At the trial? Yes; because I thought he tore it up.
 33. Is there a cottage on the station at Brimbin? There is the cottage I lived in, and the huts belonging to the men—the stock-keepers' huts.
 34. Was he to have the whole of this cottage, or were you to have a room? I was to have a parlour and bed-room, and two scullion rooms, until my own cottage was finished at Mount George. The particulars are on the agreement.
 35. So Skerritt was to have had merely the station, without the cattle, at the rent you paid? Just so—£10 a year.
 36. You retaining two rooms? Two rooms and two scullion rooms.
 37. By Mr. Flett: Four rooms in all? You will see it on the agreement.
 38. Two rooms and two scullion rooms? You will see it on the agreement.
 39. By the Chairman: Did you ever sell or agree to sell Skerrett the whole of your cattle? Well, I never in my life sold him any cattle but one fat bullock, and that was on the 17th July, 1854. He had not even a bit to eat. I gave him a bag of the best flour (two hundredweight); I gave him at different times forty weight of tallow, seventy weight of salt, and some tea and sugar, for they had not a bit to eat when they came to Brimbin.
 40. They had not a bit to eat? Not a bit until I gave them the flour. I supplied them with flour, and tea and sugar, and various things, when they came there.
 41. You say he told you that in a short time he would be able to purchase your stock, he having had £1,500 left him in England? His family—he made use of the word "children's legacy," or something of that sort—I do not know the exact terms, but they were to the effect that he had had £1,500 left him. He was then going to Sydney. He said he had a power of attorney, drawn out by Messrs. Holden and M'Carthy, and passed through the firm of Brierly, Dean, and Co., and he got a great deal of goods on the strength of that.

42. Was this after you had told him that your cattle were in the hands of your agents for sale? Yes; he never asked me to sell my cattle to him.
43. He never asked you? Never. He said he would soon be in a position to purchase my cattle, and I said, "If you are, you may go to my agents and purchase them from them." Miss I. M. Kelly.
22 Oct., 1862.
44. And he went to Sydney? Yes, and returned on the 22nd or 23rd May, 1854. He told me that he had purchased all my cattle. I remarked to him that I had never authorized them to sell more than 250 head. What could I do for beef and milch cows for my station? He said, "How many fat cattle do you require? I will let you have them at the rate I paid for them." I said, "What was the rate?" He said, "£800." I thought it was well to let them go at that price. He then said, "Whatever you may want you may have. How many do you think you require?" I said, "Seventeen or eighteen bullocks, and about half a dozen milch cows." He said, "I will let you have these at what I gave for them." He did not say a word about the horses. On Monday he sent one or two persons to ask me if I would sell the cattle. I said, "I cannot sell them, for Mr. Skerrett has bought them." He having told me that he was nine years a Magistrate at Port Phillip, I did not suppose the man would come and try to take advantage of me, seeing I was alone.
45. Did he tell you he was a Magistrate at Port Phillip? He did; he said he was a Magistrate there for nine years. He told not only me, but several. It was given in evidence on the trial.
46. You say he did not mention having bought any of the horses? Not a word.
47. But he told you when he came back that he had purchased your cattle? Yes, he said he had bought all my cattle.
48. From Rich, Langley, and Butchart, for £800? Yes.
49. And you acquiesced in that purchase? I said, "Have you anything to show me for that?" He said, "No; I suppose you will receive a letter in a day or two." I think it was the 24th July, 1854. But previous to that, I must say, I went a little way from the house and met Major Innes, and he said, "My poor little Miss Kelly, you are done at last. How on earth did you get acquainted with Skerrett!—the biggest scoundrel unhung!" You will see that on my evidence he said to me, "Take care of yourself. Take care of your life."
50. Well, you say that some people came to purchase cattle from you, and you said that Skerrett had bought them? Yes.
51. Believing that what he had told you was the truth? I did believe it—certainly I did believe it.
52. Did he dispose of any of the stock as his own? No; but when Major Innes spoke to me he wanted to get a bullock for his family, and I said, "Mr. Skerrett, I have not received a letter from my agents, and I will not allow you to deal with the cattle till I hear from them; but if you want to purchase one, I will sell you one for cash, and return you the money when I find that you have purchased my cattle; but I would not give it you without the cash." He said, "Oh, yes." The bullock was brought into the yard to be slaughtered, and I asked him for the money. He said he was going to Cundle to cash a cheque, and would pay me on his return. I did not make anything to do about it, and let him kill the bullock. That was on the 17th of July, 1854.
53. You let him kill the bullock—did he pay you? I never saw a penny of his money in my lifetime. The man had none. On the 24th I received a letter from Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart.
54. On the 24th of the same month? Yes.
55. What month was that? The month of July. I received, on the 24th of that month, a letter from Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, requesting me to settle with them. It stated that they could not get the price for my cattle set upon them, and requested me to come to a settlement at once. Skerrett was in the garden, chipping. I took the letter and said, "Mr. Skerrett, I am surprised! You to call yourself a gentleman, and to have told me an untruth!—to have told me you purchased my cattle from Rich, Langley, and Butchart!" He said, very smoothly and quietly, "Well, Miss Kelly, I have been disappointed in money matters, but" he said, "if you now tell the people I have not purchased your cattle, I shall never be able to muster them." I said, "I am surprised." He said, "Be off from here, you d—b—!" I told the boy to go and get my horses, and started. When about 200 yards from the house, he came running without his hat, and said, "Come here and take away your murdering Chinaman." I said, "Allow him to remain here until I return—I will pay you for the hut he occupies—you can deduct it from the price of the bullock." He said, "Come back; I want you to sign an agreement here that the place is mine." "Oh, the place is yours by the agreement already written." My glasses were packed up, and everything on the horse. He brought me back. I got off my horse, and took the document in my hand, and without glasses tried to read it. I read as far as sixpence a week. Seeing neither cattle nor horses named in the document, but "sixpence a week," I signed it, without notice. I do not know the date even. I signed that document—"sixpence a week"—and came to Sydney. I went to Rich, Langley, and Butchart, and asked them if they saw Skerrett. They said, "We do not know the man—we never saw such a man."
56. Is that sixpence a week for — ? For the Chinaman's house.
57. Is that the document Ann Andrews signed? Yes. He wanted one of his daughters to be the witness, but I said, "I will have none of your daughters to witness for me."
58. You said you would have none of his daughters to witness for you? Yes, and he called Ann Andrews.
59. And you came to Rich, Langley, and Butchart? I did; and they recommended me to put my cattle into the hands of Messrs. Dodds, which I did, and they were advertised for sale in August by Messrs. Dodds.

- Miss I. M. Kelly.
 22 Oct., 1862.
60. Did you give any notice that Skerrett had not purchased them? Oh yes, to everybody.
 61. In the papers I mean? Yes, I think I did—I did.
 62. Did you go back straight from Sydney to Brimbin? On my way back I heard—(a man told me at Raymond Terrace)—that Skerrett had taken some of my horses—the MK horses. I made some inquiry, and found it true, for he shipped some on board the “Collaroy”—I think it was the “Collaroy”—from the Old Company’s Wharf at Morpeth. He shipped a chesnut horse at Morpeth, belonging to me, while I was in Sydney. I should not have known anything about it had not this man at Raymond Terrace told me. It was a chesnut horse with a star on the forehead.
 63. That was during the time referred to above—coming down to see Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart? Yes; he shipped a horse of mine then. I do not know how many he took.
 64. And when you went back to Brimbin? I said to Mrs. Skerrett, “How came your husband to sell my horses?” Then she up and told me that they were in great distress, and that really and truly it was a case of necessity. I told her that the horse was shipped, and that I was going to make inquiries about it. I forget the circumstances.
 65. Is there a person of the name of ——— what is the man’s name that married Ann Andrews? Reuben Richards.
 66. Had he a stockyard there? He had not at that time; he was living at Nelson’s Plains.
 67. He had not at that time? No.
 68. And there were no cattle slaughtered at his place at that time? No; he was not living there at that time.
 69. What did you do with Skerrett about the horse? Some days after that, I received a letter, stating that Skerrett had sold a number of my cattle to one Charles Turner and to others. On the receipt of this letter, I took my horse and went to the place I never was in before (that was, I think, in August); I went to the slaughter-yard.
 70. To Turner’s slaughter-yard? Yes, and I saw some of my cattle there. I saw them slaughtered in Turner’s yard.
 71. You saw them slaughtered in Turner’s yard? Yes. After examining the brands, I got the stockman to take the brands out of the hides. I then rode further, to Dungog, to get a warrant for the apprehension of Skerrett. I dare say I rode sixty or seventy miles, and Skerrett followed me.
 72. Had you any one with you? A little boy.
 73. What was his name? Richard Smith.
 74. What was his age? He was twelve or thirteen years old.
 75. Was the Dungog Bench the nearest Bench? No, it was not, I think. I do not know whether it is or not—no, I do not think it is the nearest Bench.
 76. Then why did you go to the Dungog Bench in preference to any other? Because I did not expect to get any justice on the Manning.
 77. Well, you got a warrant for him from Dungog? I got a warrant for him granted by the Bench.
 78. Was he apprehended? He was apprehended on the warrant and taken to Dungog.
 79. Sixty or seventy miles? Let me see; twenty—fifty—I think it is about. Well, I cannot say; it might be sixty miles from where I was, but I rode further than my own place; I rode from Chatham.
 80. You rode from Chatham? I rode from Chatham.
 81. That is some place on the Manning? Yes, near Redbank, on the other side of the river.
 82. What did the Dungog Bench do? They heard the case, and referred it back to the Manning Bench.
 83. What part of the Manning? Bungee Bungee.
 84. And it came before the Bench there? Yes, it came before the Bench there.
 85. Do you remember the names of the Magistrates who sat upon the case? Really I forget; it would take me a long time to look my journal over. I know Mr. Day was one, and that Mr. Croaker was another. I cannot remember who ———
 86. By Mr. Flett: Shall I refresh your memory? Yes.
 87. Mr. Hawthorn, and that was all? Yes.
 88. By the Chairman: The Magistrates were Mr. Day, Mr. Croaker, and Mr. Hawthorn? Yes.
 89. What did they do with the case? He was fully committed to take his trial for forgery.*
 90. Cattle stealing? Yes; he produced the documents.
 91. He produced the documents? Yes; that was the first time I knew anything about them.
 92. And he laid claim to the cattle in virtue of these documents, which were a sale note from you, purporting to be from you? Yes.
 93. Was there a receipt for payment accompanying the note? There were two receipts produced—a bill of sale and a receipt.
 94. A receipt for the payment of money? Yes; he produced those on the case at Bungee.
 95. And these, you say, were forged documents? They were forged documents.
 96. And was this the first time you became aware of their existence? That was the first time I was aware of the existence of the documents. It was for cattle stealing that I got the warrant, finding the cattle slaughtered in Charles Turner’s yard. It was for this I apprehended him.
 97. Did Turner give evidence against Skerrett as selling them to him? He did.
 98. At the Bench on the Manning? He did at the Criminal Court. I do not know what he did at the Manning; I forget it; but I think he did there also give evidence that he bought them of Skerrett.

99. And this was the first time you knew Skerrett set up any claim to your cattle, in pursuance of this document which you say is a forgery? Yes, that was the first time I knew of the document at all.

Miss I. M.
Kelly.

100. You have stated that Skerrett saw you write your name to those documents to which you have referred? Yes, to three different ones—one for 6d. per week. 22 Oct., 1862.

101. Sixpence per week for the cottage? Yes, and one for mustering.

102. For mustering the cattle? Yes.

103. And one for renting the place? The station—yes. Those were the three.

104. Do you remember who wrote out those documents—I think you said Anderson? Yes.

105. Did he write the whole of them? Yes.*

106. All three? Yes.

107. Did Anderson live there? He was a shipwright on the Manning River.

108. Did he live near Brimbin? He lived a few miles from it.

109. Did Anderson write the document that you were called off your horse to sign? Oh, no. He only wrote one document—that was renting him Brimbrin—it was Skerrett wrote that document.

110. He wrote that document? Yes; "sixpence a week," and I think I wrote out the document for mustering the horses.

111. But Skerrett had seen you write your name three different times? Yes.

112. Do you know a person of the name of Joseph Andrews there? Joseph Andrews?

113. Yes, on the Manning? Yes.

114. Have you had frequent correspondence with him in writing? Yes.

115. Has it been friendly or unfriendly? It was not very friendly; it was about trespass generally.

116. Do you know whether Andrews and Skerrett were on familiar terms? I believe he used to go there very often.

117. Have you been in the habit, since your early life on the Manning, of signing your name in the same particular way? No, I used to sign it with a straight "y"—a "y" with a straight stroke; but some years ago I gave a cheque to Mr. Hughes, the grocer, in Market-street, in payment for some grocery. I went about the shop, and when I returned he had a paper on the counter, and said "Is that your signature, Miss Kelly?" He said—"I could take every shilling you have in the bank, if I thought proper." I then tried to alter my signature. That is long before I knew Skerrett. The bank accounts will show that.

118. How did you alter your signature? I crossed the "y."

119. You looped the "y"? Yes, and tried to alter it as much as possible.

120. By Mr. Dickson: Show us the two different methods? (Witness wrote her signature in the two different ways on a sheet of note paper, and handed the paper to the Committee.)

121. By the Chairman: The top signature is written in the old style, and the second in the new? Yes.

122. These documents that Skerrett put in as evidence of a claim to the cattle—in which of these styles are the signatures? They were in both. Mr. Andrews told me that when he saw my signature he doubted it. Then Skerrett imitated my hand in both ways.

123. By Mr. Flett: In Andrews' presence? Andrews was not present at any agreement with Skerrett and me.

124. By the Chairman: Andrews told him so? Yes.

125. Did Mr. Andrews tell you so? He did.

126. But this claim set up at Bungee Bungee—the documents are signed in both these ways? Yes; both the forgeries are signed both ways—the old and the new way.

127. One one way and the other the other? Yes; one is signed in the old style and one in the new style. He was then told he had overdone the thing.

128. By Mr. Stewart: Do they both bear about the same date? The same date.

129. By the Chairman: One is a sale and the other acknowledging the receipt of money? They both acknowledge the receipt of the money on the same date.

130. Where are these documents to be found now? In the Crown Law Offices.

131. Did you ever sign your signature according to the old style after you had adopted the new—have you, since you adopted the new style, signed your name in the old style? Never, to my recollection, have I signed any document in the old style after that. I completely changed the "y" after I was told by Mr. Hughes, the grocer, that he could take all my money out of the bank, if he wished it.

132. By Mr. Stewart: And that was previous to this date? It was previous to this date. It might be in 1852 or 1853. I would not be quite certain, but I think it was in 1852.

133. But previous to the documents produced by Skerrett, and bearing your signature? Yes; it was altered long before I had anything to do with Skerrett; but he has both the documents in the old and new style with my signature.

134. Were these documents witnessed by any person? Yes; one of them is witnessed by Skerrett's two daughters, and the other one is signed "William Turner," who gave his evidence here, in the Police Office. They are both on the same date.

135. And are the documents that purport to be a sale and a receipt for money — ? Both acknowledge the receipt of money.

136. Both? Yes, both acknowledge the receipt of money.

137. And they both refer to the same transaction, do they? Yes.

138. And they are signed on the same date, and witnessed by the same parties? Yes.

139. One is witnessed by Turner, and the other by the two girls? Yes.

140. Do you remember the names of these two girls? Margaret Skerrett and Jane Skerrett.

141. You say Skerrett was committed from Bungee Bungee—was he convicted? He was, and sentenced to ten years. 142.

* Revised:—He wrote only one.

- Miss I. M. Kelly.
 22 Oct., 1862.
142. And sentenced to ten years on the roads? Yes.
143. Were you present when the judgment was delivered? I was.
144. Was he convicted of cattle stealing or forgery, or both? Cattle stealing; but the jury brought it in cattle stealing based upon forgery.
145. There was a report in the papers at the time of the trial. I want to draw your attention to the report published in the Sydney Morning Herald, and particularly to the verdict of the jury and the Judge's remarks? The Judge said he regretted he could not give him a longer sentence.
146. Do not say any more until I read this, and see whether it be true or not? No.
147. By Mr. Flett: Who was the Judge who tried the case? Judge Dickenson.
148. By the Chairman: Who tried Skerrett? Sir Alfred Stephen.
149. This is the sentence, as reported in the Sydney Morning Herald of the 5th April, 1855:—
 "At twenty-five minutes past four the jury returned with a verdict of 'Guilty' against the prisoner, accompanying their verdict with an expression of opinion that the two documents purporting to be an instrument of sale and a receipt for the payment of the purchase money were forgeries. The Chief Justice, in passing sentence, expressed his perfect concurrence in the verdict, and his horror at the conduct of the prisoner, who had endeavoured to shield himself from the punishment due to his fraudulent designs by inducing his own children to commit perjury." Do you recollect this? I perfectly recollect it.
150. Is it a fair statement? Yes, exactly so.
151. By Mr. Dickson: Of what took place in Court? Yes; but one expression is not there. He regretted that he could not give him a longer sentence.
152. By the Chairman: He was sent to Cockatoo Island? He was.
153. How long did he serve on Cockatoo Island? I think about four years, but I am not quite certain.
154. About four years? About four years.
155. And then he was pardoned? I do not know how it was.
156. But he was pardoned? He was liberated.
157. Do you remember when you saw him first, after his liberation, or what he did with respect to yourself—that is what I want to know? I came up to Sydney, and was taken on a warrant, without previously knowing anything about it.
158. You were taken on a warrant? Yes. I did not know what possibly could be the charge. They sent me to the lock-up.
159. And was that the first intimation you had of there being anything wrong? That was the first.
160. What was the charge against you? Perjury.
161. At the instance of Skerrett? Yes.
162. And were you tried at the Police Court? Yes. I had no witnesses down or anything.
163. And were you committed from that Court? Yes.
164. Do you remember who the Magistrates were that sat upon the Bench? I remember Mr. Scott Ross.
165. He was one? Yes. There was another on the Bench, but I do not remember his name; he took no part in the case.
166. Do you remember the date of that committal? Well, I do not. I was in the lock-up from Saturday until Monday.
167. Was that in Sydney? Yes.
168. Do you remember the nature of the evidence that was brought against you? Both these documents—that they were genuine.
169. Was it the evidence you gave at the Court of Dungog? Yes, and Bungee Bungee—both. His two* daughters and himself swore that they were genuine.
170. This was after he was liberated? Yes.
171. And these are the documents in reference to which His Honor said his children had been brought up to Court and perjured themselves, in declaring them to be genuine? Yes.
172. And these are the same documents that the jury found to be forgeries? Yes, Mr. Bloxsome was foreman of the jury—a very gentlemanly man.
173. You understand the nature of the question, do you? Yes, I perfectly understand.
174. That you were committed upon Skerrett's evidence that these documents were forgeries? Yes.
175. That the signatures were genuine, although a jury had found them to be forgeries only a short time before? Yes. Skerrett and his two† daughters were witnesses in the Police Office against me.
176. They were the only witnesses in the Police Office against you? Yes.
177. These witnesses whom the Judge had said had perjured themselves? Yes.
178. And Ann Andrews? No.
179. By Mr. Flett: At the time you were committed in Sydney, were the Skerretts in Sydney? Yes.
180. By the Chairman: We understand that you were committed on a charge of perjury because you said the signatures of these papers were not genuine? Yes, and they swore they were genuine at the Police Office.
181. And the jury who tried Skerrett had found that they were forgeries? Yes.
182. And the Judge said in open Court that Skerrett had brought up his children to perjure themselves, to make out the genuineness of these documents? Yes. And would you permit me to say what the Judge said to Margaret Skerrett? He addressed her for a long time after the

* Revised:—I think one daughter.

† Revised:—I think one daughter.

the sentence was passed upon Skerrett. He said—"and as to you, Margaret Skerrett, you are the most determined perjurer that ever came before this Court."

Miss I. M.
Kelly.

183. Have you any person who heard him say that, beside yourself? I think all the Court heard it.

22 Oct., 1862.

184. By Mr. Cunneen: Have you any one you could call to mind to give evidence that the Judge said this? I think so, sir.

185. You were sent to your trial and convicted? Yes.

186. For having sworn that these papers were forged papers? Yes.

187. Were the papers before the Court? They were.

188. Were they before the Court when you were tried? No, they were mislaid then. The papers could not be found.

189. By Mr. Dickson: Which papers? The forgeries. They were not produced on my trial; they were not produced at my conviction; they were mislaid by Sir Alfred Stephen.

190. Why were these papers not produced? The Chief Justice, in the witness-box, swore that they were taken back either by himself or his clerk.

191. The Chief Justice got these papers? Yes; he borrowed them from the Crown Law Office.

192. When he recommended that Skerrett should be pardoned? Yes.

193. And when your trial came on where were these papers? They could not be found.

194. By Mr. Stewart: But they were produced at the committal? No.

195. By the Chairman: They were not produced until after your conviction? I had been in gaol some time. I was afterwards liberated.

196. What was the sentence? One year, and a fine of £100. I was five months and a fortnight in gaol.

197. That was considered not a very heavy sentence for a felony of this sort? The Judge did not even concur with the jury. He merely sentenced me, and ran away out of the Court.

198. He did not lecture you at all? No; he said "You are found guilty by a jury of your countrymen;" and he then said "One year and £100 fine." He did not say he concurred with the jury, or anything of the kind.

199. That was Judge Dickenson? Yes.

200. Was the penalty enforced—the £100? No.

201. It was never demanded? It was never demanded.

202. But you were liberated? I was, after being in gaol five months and a fortnight.

203. Do you know why they did not enforce the penalty? No.

204. Do you know why you were liberated—had you made any application? I had made no application whatever.

205. With respect to the papers—was the Chief Justice examined at the Police Office about them? He was.

206. And the papers containing his examination are there, I suppose? I suppose so. He said they were taken back to the Crown Law Office, by himself or by his clerk.

207. Do you remember the date? I cannot remember it.

208. Were these papers afterwards found, do you know? They were.

209. Have you heard where they were found, and under what circumstances? I heard that they were found in a private drawer, either at Sir Alfred Stephen's private residence, or at his office.

210. Where were you, do you know, when they were found? In gaol.

211. In the Darlinghurst Gaol? In Darlinghurst Gaol.

212. And it was after they were found that you were liberated? Yes.

213. During the time you were in gaol, what became of your property—your cattle? Everything was gone to rack when I came out.

214. Did Skerrett sell anything? The very place was broken open, and robbed of everything, even to my bed-room. My side saddle made to order, and sent out from England—even that saddle was taken away, and given to a neighbour, who kept it, lent it, and wore it nearly out.

215. Did Skerrett take any management of the property when you were in gaol—did he drive away your horses? He did. He took a number of my horses, and sold them; I can prove how he sold some of them; I am prepared to show it.

216. Did he take any cattle? He did—several cattle, and sold them in Maitland.

217. Had you sold any cattle, after the time of Skerrett's conviction, to people? Yes, to Messrs. Begbie and Cooper.

218. Did you get any of the money? Only £200.

219. What was the amount of the sale? £1,200; they gave me £200 and a promissory note, bearing interest.*

220. They gave you £200, and a promissory note with interest for the remainder? Yes.

221. From the date of the sale? Yes.

222. Were these cattle delivered to them? They were to muster them. They took them as they stood.

223. Did Skerrett sell any of these cattle? He did.

224. Are you aware how many he sold? I cannot say; he took in one lot, they said, about twenty-four head.

225. Only twenty-four head? At a time; I cannot say how many he took altogether.

226. What was the value per head? I cannot say.

- Miss I. M. Kelly. 227. Did Messrs. Begbie and Cooper buy any horses? No, they bought cattle only.
228. How many head had you? 500 head, more or less; I cannot say exactly, 500 —
229. Young and old, fat and lean? There were very few fat ones left among them; my neighbours took care of that.
230. Did Begbie and Cooper retire their promissory note at maturity? No, they became insolvent.
231. What did they say? They said that Skerrett caused them so much annoyance, that they had to sell the cattle for half they could otherwise have got for them.
232. He claimed them, and would not let them get delivery? It was through Skerrett they could not meet their bills.
233. Did they make a composition? They made no compensation at all.
234. No, composition—did they pay anything in the pound? I do not know. Lennon and Cape were my agents. I do not know how they managed it, but I have got their accounts here.
235. You had borrowed money from them? I borrowed £320 from them, independent of what money I had, to try and defend myself, and bring witnesses down. There were so many witnesses, and the case was postponed each time, and they had to go away and come back again; so that the expense of witnesses was very great.
236. Do you know how long your case lasted, from the time it was first initiated at the Police Court until your final conviction? I do not remember.
237. Oh! was it two months or three months? It was two months or more; I am not quite sure; I do not like to say when I do not know it exactly.
238. How long have you been in the Colony? Twenty-eight years. I arrived here in November. I came out in November, 1834. I came out in the ship "James," with Dr. Lang.
239. You brought some money here, did you not? Yes, I brought a great quantity of property, of which I did not give any statement when I last gave evidence. I invested about £2,000 in property.
240. To fetch out here? Yes.
241. What sort of property? Cases of French plate. I was in Paris. French and English goods of different sorts.
242. Plated ware? Plated mirrors. I sold Mr. Charles Henry Chambers £200 worth of property; I sold him one of Broadwood's pianofortes.
243. These things you imported from Paris direct? And from England too.
244. Did you bring them out in the "James" with you? Yes.
245. What was the date of her arrival? November, 1834.
246. You say you brought £2,000 worth of goods with you, in which you had invested in England and Paris? Yes.
247. And did you bring any ready money? The first time I brought 900 sovereigns, for which I got a shilling in every sovereign when I arrived here. Mr. Chambers managed my affairs for me.
248. Was this shipment brought out the first time? Yes, in the "James."
249. And you brought out also 900 sovereigns with this £2,000 worth of goods? Yes.
250. And the next time? I had £1,900 in money; that was in the "Columbian," in 1837.
251. That will be about £1,900 altogether? No, it is different; I went out and came back again.
252. But did you not take the money back with you? I had bought land and cattle.
253. Oh! did you invest part of your money here? Yes.
254. Do you remember how much you invested? I could tell you everything if I had my journal to refer to.
255. About how much? I bought cattle and allotments of land.
256. By Mr. Dickson: How much did you take Home? I really cannot say how much I took Home. It was lent out here by Mr. Charles Henry Chambers.
257. Your money was lent out here? Yes, he lent it out.
258. By the Chairman: However, I suppose you remember a considerable amount between money and goods—£3,000? More than that; I brought at least £4,000 or £5,000. Colonel Wilson paid me £200 for odds and ends. Mr. Chambers paid me £210 for a piano alone. He bought my lamps, and carpet, and other things. I do not know the amount, but I sold a good many things to Chambers and two others.
259. And all that money, which you had collected during your whole lifetime, is gone? It is all gone.
260. Now, coming to another point—Mr. Burt—you know Mr. Burt? Yes.
261. You had some transactions with him, had you not? I had.
262. He brought some horses of yours to India? He did.
263. Did you ever get any payment for them? No, I did not.
264. Why did you not get payment, do you know? Mr. Burt said my horses would take—I forget—so many men to lead them. My little orphan boy used to take each horse to water; they were as quiet as possible. He said some died on the passage, and that he had taken so many stalls, but he could not produce a letter to show that I had made him a promise of any number of horses. I would not bind myself to him.
265. You sent some horses with Mr. Burt to India? Yes.
266. Did you get any money for them? No.
267. Did Mr. Burt? He said the returns would be £40. I said I would not think of such a thing.
268. Had you a lawsuit? I went to law with him for the price of the horses, and for him to deliver me up the brands of the horses that died, the same as Captain Gobble, of the "Royal Stuart," did.

269. In that lawsuit was there any letter of yours that you denied the signature of? No, Miss I. M. Kelly. not one.
270. Nor any document? There was not any document produced that I denied any signature—no no; in that case there was not a letter to show that I had promised him any number of horses. 22 Oct., 1862.
271. You sued him for the returns? Yes.
272. And you never got anything at all? No; the £40 I would not accept of.
273. He pleaded that you had contracted to send a certain number of horses on board his vessel? Yes.
274. And that you failed to send the quantity he alleged you contracted for? Yes.
275. And therefore he charged you with the passage money of the whole of the horses he alleged you had promised, and stopped it out of the proceeds of the sale of the horses you did send? Yes.
276. And you got nothing? Yes.*
277. And there was no document of which you denied the signature? I did not deny any document.
278. By Mr. Morrice: What was the result of the trial? He then wanted to compromise. He offered £100 to my attorney to have done with any further proceedings; but I told Mr. Dawson that I would not accept of any such thing.
279. By the Chairman: You consider that you should have had £400 or £500? Yes.
280. The suit went against you? Yes.
281. By Mr. Flett: Are you asking compensation from Mr. Burt, too? I am asking —
282. Compensation for the losses you have sustained through him—is that one of your grievances, Miss Kelly? Not at all; I am not grieving about that; I am stating the circumstances of the case.
283. By the Chairman: Were you ever committed for cattle stealing? I was, indeed.
284. About what time was this? I think it was in the month of July, 1854.
285. Was this before Skerrett's alleged renting of Brimbin from you? It was after.
286. You were committed? Yes, I was.
287. Were you sent to prison? Oh no; I was only summoned.
288. What Bench were you tried before? The Bungee Bungee.
289. Were you committed there? Yes, I was committed.
290. Were you held to bail? Yes.
291. Who bailed you? Mr. Bates and Skerrett.
292. Who was Bates—was he a storekeeper on the Manning? He was not a storekeeper; he is a gentleman who was a farmer there.
293. Had he a brother in Sydney? No, I do not think he is any relation of that Bates.
294. Did you stand your trial at the Court? No.
295. The Attorney General did not prosecute? No.
296. What was the nature of the crime alleged? I will just tell you. I lived twenty-two miles from my station, at Mount George. I lived at Brimbin. I was on my way to Sydney. My cattle were branded there repeatedly. They might brand 200 calves without my knowing whether they were mine or not. I did not live there. There was a little dispute between me and my neighbour. It was a concocted thing to do me an injury. I gave notice to each neighbour to be present, as I would not be answerable for anything my stockmen did. I gave notice, and that was the reason the Attorney General would not file a bill.
297. By Mr. Stewart: This was when the men were branding? Yes—twenty-two miles from my station.
298. At each time you gave notice? At this particular time. I had brought an action against a neighbour of mine, and I was very careful. All my beautiful residence—the best house on the Manning River—the best furnished house—was burned to ashes. My house was burnt down, and they left me nothing. My plate, linen, glass, wearing apparel, were all gone.
299. Never mind that now—tell us about the branding of the cattle? I was on my way to Sydney. The cattle were being branded in the yard, and they were let out into their usual run and not a beast removed. They were just before my neighbours' eyes. They might brand 20 or 100 calves without my knowing whether they belonged to me. I never go after the cattle.
300. How many were branded in this instance when you were committed? One or two, I believe; but I do not know.
301. By Mr. Morrice: Who branded them? My stockman.
302. In your absence? I was at Mount George at the time, but not at the yard.
303. You were on the same premises? I was on the estate. I was coming to Sydney, and the little boy that was with me stopped to help them brand; I stopped to wait for the boy, but there was no house for me to reside in.
304. Oh! that was the place where the house was burned? Yes.
305. By Mr. Stewart: Were any of the neighbours present? No.
306. By Mr. Flett: Will you tell the names of any two of the parties you gave notice to on that particular day? Yes; to Connelly and Mrs. Joseph Andrews, and to M'Pherson.
307. By Mr. Dickson: Were they verbal notices? Verbal to Mrs. Andrews, but written to the others; I sent my stockman over.
308. By the Chairman: There were two calves —? Two calves.
309. What age were they? One was I think, from what I understood, eighteen months old; it was off my own run, rented by me from the Australian Company.

- Miss I. M. Kelly. 310. Is it a very extraordinary thing in the Manning River District for things of that sort to occur in branding time? It is quite a common thing; why, Mr. Flett, there, branded four or five of mine.
- 22 Oct., 1862. 311. In mistake? In mistake—mistakes are every day occurring.
312. You have mentioned Mr. Flett's name? Yes.
313. How many cattle has he branded by mistake—young cattle of yours—do you suppose? I have been informed that he branded at one time, I know, two; and the second time he branded one; and the third time, Mr. Harkness and those who informed me of it said he branded two in the yard at Killawarra.
314. And he wrote to you about them? No.
[Certain evidence was here taken, and expunged on motion.]
315. You were saying that a person of the name of Denn had written to you? Yes; he said that some time ago he had seen a calf of mine branded by his stockman, and that he would either give me the animal itself, or one in lieu of it.
316. Is that the letter (produced)? Yes; Mr. Denn, of New England.
317. What is the date of it? This is the letter; it is dated 29th September, 1844.
318. By Mr. Stewart: You produce this to show that those mistakes have occurred for years? Yes; there is a person who branded two of mine, of the name of Serl.
319. Mr. Denn you said branded one? Yes.
320. And is there any other person who has branded in mistake? I do not know that it was a mistake. A person of the name of Serl branded some.
321. By the Chairman: After Skerrett was liberated, had you ever been brought up again? Never, sir, only when Skerrett was taken up.
322. But did you ever get Skerrett brought up again? Yes, he was committed at the Police Office here on the forgeries.
323. Was that after you got out of prison? Yes; I had him up, and I had witnesses brought from the Manning, and documents laid before the Court.
324. What inquiry was that? That was before Mr. Murphy, the Mayor, and I do not know who was the other gentleman.
325. By Mr. Morrice: Were these the same papers? The very same papers I had made up for the forgeries.
326. By the Chairman: Do you remember the date? I think the date is on my circular.
327. Was he before the Bench on the Manning? No, sir. He was, but not by me; he was there for cattle stealing, at the suit of Begbie and Cooper.
328. At the suit of Begbie and Cooper? Yes.
329. And he was committed? By the Manning Bench.
330. And what became of that prosecution? The Attorney General refused to file a bill.
331. And what became of the Sydney one—did the Attorney General refuse to prosecute? Yes.
332. Did he give any reason for declining to prosecute? Mr. Williams told me that a man could not be put on his trial twice for the same offence; the Attorney General did not say so to me.
333. Do you remember who was examined in that case at the Police Court? William Turner, Joseph Andrews, Ann Andrews, Samuel Turner. There were five I know, but I forget the other.
334. How long did the case last there? It was a long time I know.
335. More than a day? Yes, I think it was two or three days, but I do not know exactly. It was the 19th when he was committed, and they were sitting on the 18th.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Miss Isabella Mary Kelly called in and further examined:—

- Miss I. M. Kelly. 336. By the Chairman: You have already told the Committee of your committal and conviction for perjury? Yes.
- 24 Oct., 1862. 337. Arising out of these documents? Yes.
338. In what way were you brought before the Court—was it by warrant, or how? By warrant. I was in the lock-up from Saturday until Monday.
339. In what way were you arrested? If you will put those questions to me afterwards; I cannot —
340. Yes; well now, referring to these papers—were you aware that these papers were missing before you were put on your trial? No.
341. When did you become aware that they were missing? When I was put on my trial at the Police Office; my counsel demanded them then.
342. When you were put on your trial at the Police Office you mean? Yes.
343. From whom did he demand them? From the Crown Law Office.
344. And they were not produced? No.
345. Did you take any steps then? No.
346. Did you find out who had taken them out of the office? Not then—I did not.

347.

347. Was not there some examination of Sir Alfred Stephen? Yes, he was put into the witness-box; he said he had borrowed them from the Crown Law Office.

348. The Judge said so? Yes, and that either he himself or his clerk had taken them back again.

349. Do you know the date of Sir Alfred Stephen's examination, or about the date? I do not remember, but I think it is in my circular.

350. By Mr. Morris: Sir Alfred Stephen was examined in the Supreme Court, and not in the Police Office, was he not? He was examined in the Police Office.

351. By the Chairman: You have mentioned the name of Ann Andrews as knowing something of this matter—that is, Mrs. — what is her name? Ann Richards.

352. Have you got any papers from her that will throw any light on the part she took, or on the case generally? Here are all the letters. I believe Mr. Dodds could certify to the writing. I copied this one (exhibit initialled G.R.), because it is almost impossible to read it, but I have brought the original copy also. This is a letter from Reuben Richards and his wife. I never saw the man at the time this was written to me.

353. You wish to put that in as an explanatory paper? Yes.

354. Does it refer to your case? Yes, it does—to the infernal plot which was laid against me.

355. You hand this paper in? I hand it in. (Paper handed in marked F—Richards' (Andrews') exhibit—and initialled G.R. Vide Appendix.)

356. By Mr. Morris: Is this the same Richards who brought an action against Mr. Andrews? The very same.

357. By the Chairman: Have you any other papers you desire to lay before the Committee referring to the case? None but these letters to show that they are in the same handwriting. There are Mr. Richards' letters and Mr. Dodds' letters. (Letters produced.)

358. You produce these letters as corroborating their handwriting in some way? Yes. (Letters marked A 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.)

359. By Mr. Morris: Is Reuben Richards a man of education? No; that is his letter—you will see by it that he cannot spell.

360. But is he otherwise a clever man? I think he is.

361. Does he express himself readily and well in conversation? He does, but not grammatically, of course; he speaks in the usual way that a poor man would speak; but he is a clever fellow, there is no doubt.

362. Do you believe that Reuben Richards wrote that letter himself, or that it was dictated to him? I suppose he did it by his wife's conversation with him; he states what he knew of the case.

363. Is his wife a woman of education? She reads and writes a little. She lived twelve months in my service, but Skerrett induced her to go to him after she had served that time with me.

364. By the Chairman: All I have to ask you now is, did your health suffer while you were in Darlinghurst? I was bad the greater part of the time; I had bronchitis, and I have been subject to fits ever since.

365. Do you attribute that to the cell in which you were kept? Yes, it was very damp.

366. Did the officers of the gaol treat you what you considered fairly? When I first went in I was allowed to walk in the garden.

367. And was that afterwards refused? Yes.

368. By Mr. Morris: Where were you, Miss Kelly, when this (Reuben Richards') letter was written to you? At Brimbin, on the Manning River.

369. And where are Nelson's Plains? Raymond Terrace.

370. Have you got the envelope? The postmark is on it.

371. There is the postmark of Stroud and Raymond Terrace also? Yes.

372. By the Chairman: You were before examined before a Select Committee of this House, were you not? Yes.

373. In the case of Charles Skerrett? Yes.

374. By Mr. Morris: This letter purports to be written both by Mrs. Richards and by her husband? Yes.

375. The handwriting seems to be the same? So it appears.

376. And who wrote it—was it Mrs. Richards or Mr. Richards? I cannot say; but they both acknowledged to the very words, not only to me, but to others as well.

377. Were they examined upon your trial—either of them? They were.*

378. And did they admit having written this letter to you? No.

379. Did they deny it? They denied having written this letter.

380. That is a new thing to me? They denied it then.

381. By Mr. Flett: It was her that was examined, and not him;—she might not have known of that letter? It was her.†

382. By Mr. Morris: It purports to be written by both of them;—Mrs. Richards was examined? Yes.

383. And she denied any knowledge of this letter? Yes; she took then the part of Skerrett.

384. By Mr. Flett: I believe that is Richards' signature—I know it is not hers;—she might not have known anything about that letter? It may be so.

385. By Mr. Morris: You have received other letters from Reuben Richards in your time? Yes, they are there—from Nelson's Plains.

386. Do you believe this letter was written by him? Yes, I do; I believe it is written by either one or the other—I cannot say who. Here is Richards' own letter.

* NOTE (on revision):—Only Mrs. Richards.

† NOTE (on revision):—She (Mrs. Richards) admitted of having joined her husband in sending the letter to me.

Miss I. M.
Kelly.

24 Oct., 1862.

- Miss I. M. Kelly. 387. Did you ever see Richards write? Never in my life.
 388. Not even sign his name? Yes, I did, at Mr. Mullens' office, but I did not pay particular attention to it. He signed his name in my presence in Mr. Mullens' office, at 24 Oct., 1862. Maitland.
389. Was there not some action brought by this Reuben Richards against Mrs. Andrews? Yes.
390. And were you a witness in the case? I was a witness in that case.
391. Were you ever much mixed up in the matter? Not at all; only he forged a lease of a paddock, and I took possession of the house.
392. You accused this Richards of having forged a lease? I did. He would not produce the papers. They were not impounded. I then took forcible possession of the place, in order to bring him up to show his lease. I took possession of the whole place, and I have got it still. "Now," I said, "if you can show your lease, just show it—I take forcible possession." It is of no use me saying what the wife said; I will refer you to No. 3 documents, where Mrs. Richards swears (thinking the documents were lost in the Criminal Court)—where she swears distinctly that I sold my cattle, and twenty head, the pick of my horses, to Charles Skerrett, on the 6th June. There is nothing about horses nor cattle in that document, but only the renting of a hut, for the Chinaman, at 6d. a week. The document was supposed to be lost, and she swore that.
393. By Mr. W. Forster: What was the nature of your transactions with this man Skerrett, originally? He came to my place at Brimbin. I rented him a place called Brimbin—the tenure of my lease only. I was going back to my own residence at Mount George.
394. He was a lessee of yours? Yes, I rented him Brimbin.
395. Did you ever recognize him as a partner? Not at all.
396. In any way? Never.
397. Was he your agent in any way? Not in any one thing.
398. In no way at all? Not in any transaction.
399. Did you ever place any trust in his hands to execute for you, of any sort? Not in any way or of any sort whatever.
400. All you knew of him was as your lessee? Yes.
401. He was a lessee of land, was he? Yes.
402. And of cattle? No, not any cattle.
403. He never leased cattle from you? No; I allowed him to have the use of two cows until they were sold by Rich, Langley, and Butchart.
404. They were on the land he leased? Certainly.
405. And while there, you allowed him to make use of them for milking? Yes.
406. But you gave him no power over them in any other way? No.
407. Neither by writing nor by word of mouth? No. I allowed him to kill one bullock on the 17th July, 1854. He wanted to purchase my cattle.* He said he had a power of attorney from Messrs. Holden & Mc'Carthy, passed through Brierly, Dean, & Co., for collection, and that he would soon be in a position to purchase my cattle. I said, "If you want to purchase my cattle you must go to Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, and treat with them."
408. In that case you contemplated the sale of the cattle to him? I referred him to Rich, Langley, and Butchart; they were in their hands.
409. You had no intention of selling them yourself? No; they were in their hands, and they had a lien on my cattle.
410. Rich, Langley, and Butchart had a lien on your cattle? They had.
411. Skerrett never had any lien on your cattle? He hadn't anything to do with my cattle pro or con.
412. The only transaction between you and Skerrett was that he was your lessee? Yes.
413. When you referred him to these people, did he purchase? That very moment the agreement was drawn out; Mr. Anderson, Mr. Millar, and himself started for Sydney on the 29th April, 1854. On the 22nd or 23rd May he returned, and said he had bought my cattle.
414. If you will answer my question simply,—did you sell the cattle to him through Rich, Langley, and Butchart? Never.
415. I think you said he did not purchase your cattle that time through Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart? Oh no, he did not.
416. Had he any cattle of his own on your land? Not one, neither horse nor other four-footed animal.
417. Did he make any claim to any? No.†
418. At any time? Not any time until afterwards.
419. To no horses either? No, not one—cattle nor horses.
420. What was his occupation upon this land then—what was he doing on the land? Nothing at all.
421. Was he living on it? He was living in the house; I gave him a bag of flour —
422. I do not want to know what you gave him;—what was he doing—was he a farmer? He said he was.
423. Did he make use of the permission to milk the cows? No; that is already down, or else I would give you an explanation about that.
424. He did not keep a dairy at all? No.
425. Had you any money transactions with Skerrett of a different kind—either borrowing or lending? No; he owed me money.
426. He owed you money? Yes, for the price of the bullock.

* NOTE (on revision): If he wanted to purchase my cattle I referred him to my agents.

† NOTE (on revision): When I had him brought up for cattle-stealing.

‡ NOTE (on revision): When I had him brought up for cattle-stealing.

427. You sold him a bullock? Yes.
428. And he owed you the money? Yes.
429. Did he ever pay you for that? No, never; I never saw a shilling of his money in my life.
430. Have you had solicitors or legal advisers throughout all your transactions? Yes.
431. Who have they been, if I may ask? At that time I — until such time as included about his taking my cattle —
432. But at the time Rich, Langley, and Butchart held a lien over your cattle, who were your legal advisers then? Rodd and Dawson—I think so.
433. Do they remain so now? I have no law business now,—I have not employed them for some time; Mr. Ryan Brenan acted for me, and Mr. Ellis, in Elizabeth-street, latterly, in all those transactions.
434. By the Chairman: Mr. Forster refers to the time you put your cattle in their hands for sale? Mr. Langley sold cattle of mine, and transacted business for me, and I had no lawyer that I remember of.
435. By Mr. W. Forster: Then the first beginning of your trouble with this man, Skerrett, was in regard to these two calves that you were accused of branding? I do not know that he had anything to do with that.
436. Had he nothing to do with that? Not that I know of.
437. You speak, in your petition, of Skerrett producing a bill of sale in regard to £600;—did Skerrett ever pay this £600 to you? No.
438. Have you any notion of the origin or grounds which induced Skerrett to make such a statement that he paid you £600—what leads to it? I do not know.
439. Is it utterly without foundation? It is without the slightest foundation. I did not know that there was such a thing in existence when I took him up for cattle stealing.
440. With regard to this document which you said you did not sign—I suppose you still say so? Yes, I never signed it.
441. What put that document into his head? I do not know.
442. Did you ever see the document? In the Police Office—yes.
443. You saw it then? I did.
444. Did you examine it? Yes.
445. Was your name signed at the bottom of it? In two ways.
446. Was it like your handwriting? Yes.
447. Was it cleverly done? Yes, it was cleverly done, but it was not exactly like.
448. Was it possible for you to be deceived by it for a moment? No, not for a moment; I never signed such a document.
449. Did you ever contemplate signing such a document? I never heard anything about it, either of the two documents, till I had him up for cattle stealing.
450. You are clear that there was no transaction between you and Skerrett, which would form the basis or ground for such a document? Yes; he came there to live on the 5th June.
451. And he had no right over you of any kind? Not at all.
452. You say this document was not produced on your trial? No, it was not.
453. I suppose you have stated already how that happened? Yes.
454. Do you know if there was anything unfair in the keeping back of this document, or do you think it was a mere accident? I do not know. It was very strange. I know Skerrett was ably defended. He gave it out that I was out of my mind, and that he should not be at all surprised if I was found in a waterhole, or if I shot myself.
455. Did you fully examine the document after it was placed in your hands, to see the purport? Yes; I was quite struck.
456. What did it purport to be? The two documents were dated the same day; one was signed by William Turner, and the other was signed by Margaret and Jane Skerrett—his two daughters.
457. By Mr. Morris: Witnessed, you mean? Yes, witnessed; and they were both dated the same day.
458. By Mr. Forster: What were the two documents? There are two documents —
459. By the Chairman: One is a contract to sell and a receipt for the money, and the other is a receipt for money? Yes.
460. By Mr. Forster: And was your name to both? Yes.
461. And you did not sign either of them? I did not know that they were in existence until I saw them in the Police Court.*
462. Did it strike you that these documents were drawn up by a lawyer? I knew that they were drawn up by Skerrett. They are in his handwriting.
463. Are they in Skerrett's handwriting? They are in Skerrett's handwriting.
464. They did not purport to be in a lawyer-like style at all? No.
465. Did he admit that they were in his handwriting, because they might be in his handwriting and there be nothing wrong about it? I do not know what he admitted.
466. But did you notice whether the signature was like the other part of the document—was your name signed in the same sort of writing in the one as in the other? It was not.
467. And the signatures of the witnesses, do you think they were genuine? I do not know.
468. Were they different to the other part of the writing? Yes.
469. Are the witnesses alive yet? Yes, I believe they are.
470. Were they examined at the Court? They were examined at the Court.
471. Were they examined at the time you were convicted? No; only one daughter, and Skerrett.
472. They were examined at the Court? Yes, when Skerrett got two years.

473.

* NOTE (on revision):—When I had him taken up for cattle stealing.

Miss I. M.
Kelly.
24 Oct., 1862.

- Miss I. M. Kelly.
24 Oct., 1862.
473. At the time you were convicted, this document was not forthcoming? No.
474. You were convicted, then, without that document—upon what is called secondary evidence? Exactly.
475. Were the witnesses to the document examined before the Court? One of them was.
476. Did she appear in Court? She did.
477. In both? No, only in one.
478. You were committed first and tried at the Criminal Court afterwards? Yes.
479. At the committal was the document produced? No.
480. What was the nature of the secondary evidence—were the witnesses produced? One daughter of Skerrett's swore that they were genuine.
481. In the absence of the document? Yes.
482. Then the same witnesses that appeared on Skerrett's trial appeared also upon yours, did they? Only his daughters.
483. His daughters? Yes, and Ann Andrews, now Richards.
484. Was their evidence pretty much the same on both trials? Well, I think so; but I do not remember it. I cannot recollect as I used to do. I think so—the very same evidence.
485. Who were the persons, then, that swore to your signature being genuine? I do not know that any did, except Skerrett's daughters.
486. Except Skerrett's daughters? Except Skerrett's daughters.
487. The witnesses swore they saw you sign it? They did.
488. Had you any reason to believe the girls capable of committing perjury, at any time? I believe every one of his family are so, and I think I will be able to prove that they will do any mortal thing.
489. Did you think so before this occurred? I did not know anything about them until the 4th June.
490. Is this Ann Andrews of the same character? When she lived with me I had not a word to say about her. When she went to live with Skerrett he dressed her out and had a horse (the horses were borrowed from Mr. Sullivan) and saddle for her, and she used to ride out with them.
491. What was the age of these girls? They were grown up—three of them; but the eldest daughter would not perjure herself; she swore she never saw Turner there on the 6th June.
492. Did not she swear to the genuineness of the documents? No, she swore she never saw me sign them.
493. Was her name to them? No; it was Jane and Margaret Skerrett—the eldest daughter would not do it.
494. Then you attribute your conviction to this accident that happened about the document? Yes.
495. You feel certain that if that document had been produced matters would have taken a different turn? I am quite sure I should not have been in Darlinghurst.
496. On the production of the document you were liberated? I was, immediately after.
497. What was the form of your liberation—did Sir Alfred Stephen take any part in it? No; it was Judge Dickenson.
498. During the time of your imprisonment, you state that your property was squandered away by Skerrett—that he took possession of it? He did, and drove my horses and cattle away, and even stopped my servant boys on the road and took their horses from them.
499. Had you no friends in the district to endeavour to prevent this? I am sorry to say I had not.
500. Were there any other parties concerned with Skerrett in the matter? There was.
501. Who were they? A man named Davis—he was afterwards struck dead.
502. What do you mean by being struck dead? And the other dropped dead at his own door—Tipping.
503. You mean that they died suddenly? A sapling, or something, fell upon him and killed him.
504. Both of them? No, one of them, and the other dropped dead at his own door.
505. Who is the other? Davis and Tippin.
506. They were both engaged with Skerrett in plundering your property? Yes.*
507. Had you no agent to look after it? Not one at that time.
508. Then the Crown took no part at all in taking possession of your property? No.
509. You attribute your losses altogether to this conviction of yours, and the conviction to the loss of this document? Yes.
510. Have you made any application to the Government for remuneration at all, in any way? No, except as I apply to them now for compensation.
511. You did not apply otherwise than by petition to the Assembly? No.
512. Did you never ask Mr. Cowper or Mr. Robertson to entertain your claim for compensation? No, not before I petitioned the House.
513. Did you make any application to anyone else—did you state your case to Sir Alfred Stephen, or to the Judges in any way? No, I have been very ill.
514. What do you consider your losses to be altogether? I consider that at the lowest calculation I have lost about £10,000.
515. I suppose you will be able to produce evidence to substantiate these statements to some extent—to prove the value of your property, and so on? Yes, at that time.
516. Are there any legal gentlemen whose knowledge of your property would give us any information

* NOTE (on revision) :—Davis, but not Tippin—Tippin did not give the true statement on my trial.

- information upon this point? I have had property sold by Mr. Dodds. I have written to him for the accounts of the sales since Skerrett was transported.
517. I see you make a statement to the effect that Skerrett was liberated after four years, although he was sentenced to ten years;—can you state how he came to be liberated? No, ^{Miss I. M. Kelly.} 24 Oct., 1862. I do not know.
518. Had you ever any reason to believe that Skerrett was innocent? No, sir.
519. Do you think he is in his senses now? I do not know. I have not seen him for some time.
520. Do you think he was sane throughout the whole of this transaction? I cannot say.
521. Did you ever know him to be fond of telling extraordinary stories? Yes.
522. That was always his character? Yes. He told me he was nine years a Magistrate at Port Phillip, and many other things, but I do not know that he was insane.
523. Did you believe these stories of his? Yes, I did.
524. You believed them? I did.
525. It never struck you that he was romancing? No. The first intimation I had of his character was from Major Innes cautioning me.
526. You were completely taken in by him? I was cautious after what I heard from Major Innes. He told me that Skerrett was the greatest scoundrel unhung.
527. Major Innes told you so? Yes.
528. Was Skerrett a man of education at all? Yes.
529. Could he read and write pretty well? Yes; I saw signatures of his, and there were not two alike.
530. Was he a clever man with his pen then? I think so.
531. How did he bring his family up—were they fairly educated? No.
532. They were brought up in ignorance, were they? They were.
533. Could these girls write? There were two of them that could write pretty well, I think—middling—the eldest daughter and Jane Skerrett; I do not know that I ever saw their signatures, only I heard they did.
534. Mrs. Skerrett, was she an educated woman—could she read and write? I cannot say.
535. What sort of transactions had you with the Richardses? I rented a place at Mount George—a cottage there—to Richards.
536. Oh, they were tenants of yours with Skerrett? No, they were twenty-two miles distant.
537. Are they still tenants of yours? No.
538. Were they long your tenants? I think they were. I cannot exactly state, without referring back, but I think three or four years, perhaps.
539. They seem to have been on good terms with you? I never saw Richards at the time he wrote that letter. I knew his wife, because she lived with me for one year.
540. As your servant? Yes.
541. Have you anything to say against her? No.
542. You took this to be a genuine letter? Yes.
543. Do you think she was sincere? Yes, I think she was sorry at the time she wrote that letter.
544. What do you think she was sorry for? She—you will see in the letter.
545. I have read the letter? She writes about the plot laid against me.
546. Did she ever explain to you? She did; she told me the time they broke into my house and robbed me of everything in it.
547. That was a little more than a plot. Did she tell you that she was mixed up in the plot? She told me she got a sheet of paper written to learn off what she was to swear in the Court. It is in that letter, and she told me that verbally. Then they had a quarrel, and she said, "If I were to do as they told me, my soul would be for ever —"
548. I have read that;—at that time you had no reason to suppose that she had any ill-feeling against you? No.
549. Did she afterwards change her mind? I believe so, after she married Richards. She was married from Skerrett's house, and after she went home with her husband she told her husband, and one or the other wrote that letter, and told me about the plot, and how Davis and they were plotting together. Davis had some of my cattle and slaughtered them; he got them from Skerrett.
550. What was it changed this woman's mind? I do not know.
551. You had no quarrel with them? No.
552. Had you a quarrel with Richards? I quarrelled with them after they came to my place. They paid me no rent.
553. Was that before the plot or after it? It was after the plot.
554. That was after what is called the plot? She says she had no hand in the plot.
555. By Mr. Flett: One or two questions have suggested themselves in reading from this petition. Did you ever, at any time, ask Mr. Faucett to recommend Skerrett as a proper person to be placed in the Commission of the Peace? I did.
556. What reason had you for doing it? He told me that he had been nine years a Magistrate at Port Phillip, and I thought he was a fit person to be placed in the Commission of the Peace.
557. Was that your only reason? That was the only reason; I had no knowledge of it. I know that of the Manning River Magistrates there were none of them that understood much, and I thought a clever man like that was a fit and proper person to be placed on the Bench. I did not know his character, but he told me he had been nine years a Magistrate.
558. Was he living at your place at the time? He had just come to live there at the time.
- He

- Miss I. M. Kelly.
24 Oct., 1862.
- He had been there a week or so, I think. That was in June, 1854—No—I think that was in June, 1854; I do not know exactly the month, but it was before I knew anything about him at any rate.
559. It was about April you recommended him? It was in or about June.
560. That was just about the time he came to your place? I cannot exactly say, without referring —
561. I wish particularly to know that? Then I cannot tell you.
562. You also said to me, at my own house, that you thought he would make a great acquisition to the Bench? I think you make a mistake.
563. I only ask you the question? I never said that to you; I never told any person until it came out in evidence.
564. I am merely putting the question to you;—I shall not say whether you did it or not? It is not true.
565. What property had you at the time you were put in gaol, on the Manning River;—you say here, £15,000? I was worth that at the time Skerrett first commenced with me. I refused £4,000 for my horses; I wanted £4,500. I dare say you know that.
566. I know nothing whatever about it. And at what did you value your cattle at the time—I see that they were sold to Begbie and Cooper—you valued them at £1,000? I sold them for £1,200.
567. Was Mount George your property at that time? It was.
568. Not encumbered in any way? No.
569. Is it your property now? It is mortgaged.
570. Is it your property at all now? I suppose it is still; I am living on it.
571. I wish you to give me an answer? I cannot. It is so far my property until it is sold.
572. It is your property now? Yes.
573. By Mr. Morris: The mortgage is not foreclosed? No.
574. By Mr. W. Forster: You have a right to it in some way? The mortgage is not foreclosed.
575. But at any rate, it was your property at the time Skerrett put you in gaol? At the time I sent Skerrett to —
576. I am speaking of the time you were put in gaol? Before that.
577. The value of the property at that time could not be the value four years afterwards? I know what the value of my property is.
578. What did you value your landed property at, at that time? Will you permit me to get the accounts from Mr. Dodds?
579. Answer me the questions I am putting—I will only put one or two more to you;—I want to know at what you valued Mount George? I sold it at £12 an acre. There were 895 acres, and I sold some of it at £24 an acre at the township I cut up. I valued the property at £4,000, if sold in allotments.
580. How much of the property is sold now? Very little of it is sold. There are some thirty-five allotments sold.
581. Are there thirty-five allotments sold? Yes. Twenty-seven acre farm also, sold to Mr. Paten.
582. Then how is it that they can offer the whole property for sale? Which?
583. I asked you the value of this land at the time you received the lease? I valued my land to be worth about £4,000.
584. By Mr. Morris: At the time you were put in gaol, was there a mortgage on the property? Yes; because when Skerrett put me in gaol I had to mortgage.
585. By Mr. Flett: There was no mortgage at the time Skerrett first commenced? No.
586. At the time you sold Begbie the cattle did you sell him any land? Yes, forty-three acres, on the Dawson River, for £43.
587. You sold him forty-three acres? Yes.
588. Have you that land now? He became insolvent, and I know nothing about it. My agents took the whole case in their hands. I have their accounts.
589. Your agents took the property? They settled it. They had to do with everything of mine then. I really have not been in a position to look after anything.
590. They took cattle and land, and did the best they could with them, I suppose? Yes.
591. Who were your agents at that time? Messrs. Lennon and Cape.
592. Then they have got that property, and it is not yours;—I was under a mistake about that? I beg pardon—it is not their property now. They have paid themselves out of its proceeds, by sacrificing the property.
593. They have sold that, have they;—that was the very question I asked? They sold part of my property. They sold horses, but no landed property; they did not sell that.
594. What has become of the fifty acres? Forty-three acres—I cannot say at present.
595. The only answer I wished to elicit was this—at the time you sold them the cattle you sold them a piece of land? Forty-three acres. They sold forty-three acres for £43. I paid for it myself.
596. By Mr. Cunneen: You said, in answer to Mr. Forster, that you considered your property to be worth £10,000 at the time you were imprisoned? Yes, at the time of my imprisonment.
597. Do you mean to say that you have sustained a loss of £10,000, or that that was merely the value of your property then? I wanted to get Mr. Dodd's accounts of landed property sold by him in Maitland.
598. Have you any idea of what you consider your actual losses on account of having been imprisoned on this occasion? As far as my own calculation has gone, I believe firmly that I have lost about £10,000 through my being knocked about, and my property all sacrificed.
- 599.

599. Do you think you have sustained that loss in consequence of transactions you have had with Mr. Skerrett as a private individual, or on account of any act of a Government officer in mislaying any documents? I believe I have lost it through those documents being mislaid. Miss I. M.
Kelly.
24 Oct., 1862.
600. You attribute the loss, do you, to the act of an officer of the public service having mislaid certain documents—or do you attribute it to transactions you had with Skerrett as you might have had with any other private individual? I consider that I chiefly lost my property through these documents not being brought forth on my trial. I have lost my health, which is worse than all.
601. You stated, in your evidence, that you signed three documents which Skerrett had drawn up? Yes; I signed one, “sixpence a week,” for a cottage.
602. For letting a cottage? The Chinaman’s hut.
603. And another? Another, which I thought was torn up, for mustering my horses. He said he would muster my horses; but I would not allow him to break them in, and then he said he would not muster them, and that I was to tear up my copy of the agreement and he would tear up his. I saw him tear up a paper, and I thought he tore up his agreement. I saw him throw the pieces into the fire-place.
604. Did you read the three documents before you signed them? I read as far as “sixpence a week,” and seeing neither cattle nor horses mentioned, I signed it. I did not look at the date even. I was cautious about Skerrett at that time. I read “sixpence a week,” and I saw neither cattle nor horses named in the document.
605. You are certain he did not place before you a document containing a bill of sale instead of a lease? No, no.
606. And you signed it? No.
607. You are certain that that was impossible? That was impossible.
608. By Mr. Morris: You brought an action, I believe, at one time, against Mr. Burt—did you not? Yes.
609. And the only evidence in the case was your own? That was all.
610. And the only evidence on the other side was Mr. Burt’s? Yes.
611. Was there any documentary evidence put in? No.
612. Who did the jury believe? They believed Mr. Burt. They gave it against me, and I wanted to get a fresh action against them.
613. The documents to which you have referred as having been forgeries were not all witnessed by the same persons? No.
614. One was witnessed only by the Messrs. Skerrett, and the receipts for money by Turner? They were both receipts for money—both of them, but one was signed by William Turner.
615. Witnessed you mean? Yes; one was witnessed by William Turner, and the other by Skerrett’s two daughters. The signatures were both different.*

[(F.)—Richards v. Andrews—G. R.]Nelson’s Plains, 23 July, 1855.

To Miss Kelly,

Yours of the 16th instant I received, and am very sorry to hear of your misfortune, after falling into the hands of so great a felon, and while in the midst of your trouble in encountering with the said fool, to be robbed to so great an extent. I thought it very strange you did not write to me before, so I wrote to you, but I suppose you did not receive it before you favoured me with yours, and now I must say your letter has kindled a feeling of remorse and anguish, and an excessive pain of mind. I am both provoked and displeased with the absurdity of Mrs. Skerrett; not that she will not deliver up my wife’s boxes, &c., but her statement concerning my wife’s character. Dear Miss, I spoke the words of affection and candour; you state in yours that Mrs. Skerrett tells you that my wife is equally as guilty as her husband; that she backed Skerrett in his plot, by perjury. And you further state, that Skerrett was going to the diggings, but was prevented by my present wife’s words, that they wanted to drive him from his wife and family, &c.; and that Davis declares that she was the best active friend Skerrett had, and that she urged him on in his plot, but that you don’t believe it is true, not all of it. Poor unfortunate female, to fall into the hands of such scope as Mrs. Skerrett and the family, which was only in their power to aim at pretensions of people of quality. I repeated to my wife Mrs. Skerrett’s statements of her, and the conclusion she came to was, words will be lost; eternity shall prove the truth. Had I obeyed Mr. and Mrs. Skerrett’s request then my soul would have been damned for ever, but as it is, I am not condemned, as God is my impartial witness that I am ignorant of how the plot was laid. She further states that a time after Skerrett tried to break open your door when you were in the house—I could not swear to the date—but that Mr. and Mrs. Skerrett were both in the parlour a long time, and after their consultation they gave me and Margaret one sheet of paper each. I asked what they were for, and Mrs. Skerrett told me that whatever was in them Margaret and I were to learn. What was in Margaret’s one I do not know; the one that was given to me I read it; the contents I need not repeat. After reading it I put it into my box; after some dispute arose, and I told Mrs. Skerrett and Margaret I would not learn it, but that when I was called to Court I will tell them I know nothing of it; some time after this I went to my box and found it was gone. I made a great to-do about them going to my box without my consent. Margaret kept hers, and read it repeatedly. I believe it was Mrs. Skerrett that burnt my paper, for I never knew anything more; but Mr. and Mrs. Skerrett were always together when they were plotting anything concerning your matter; and I wish that you repeated this to Mrs. Skerrett, and she cannot but admit that she knew every point of the plot as well as her husband. My wife, moreover, states for me to write, that Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Skerrett, when they were together consulting about anything, if she went into the room where they were talking, they would stop directly; and if I stayed they would go into the other room. So, Miss, you understand that the infernal party kept my wife in the dark concerning all their proceedings after this dispute occurred I have intimated of.

Dear

NOTE (on revision):—Two signatures were both alike.
662—C

Dear Miss, we have thought oftentimes of you, and fancied something had happened to you. I was glad to hear from you, and shall be glad to see you any time you come down the line. Be pleased to write as soon as convenience will allow.

I remain,
Yours affectionately,
FRANCES ANN RICHARDS.

As regards my living with Mr. Andrew Lang, Dunmore, I must admit had Mrs. Skerrett commenced working for an honest livelihood in the world, it had been that she maintained a good character, but we cannot think there is any virtue in walking the streets of a city, &c.

Dear Miss, your reply will materially oblige
Your sincere friend and well-wisher,
REUBEN RICHARDS.

Henry Connell, Esq., Clerk of Petty Sessions, Central Police Office, Sydney, called in and examined:—

Henry
Connell, Esq.
24 Oct., 1862.

616. By the Chairman: You came here in answer to a summons? Yes.
617. Can you produce the papers asked for? The papers in this particular case—the Queen on prosecution of Isabella Mary Kelly, v. Charles Skerrett, for forgery—were sent to the Attorney General, the defendant being committed by the Mayor of Sydney to take his trial at the next Central Criminal Court, on the 23rd November, 1860. In the first instance, the depositions (Nos. 5 to 82 inclusive); information of Miss Kelly; a receipt, dated Brimbin, Manning River, 6th June, 1854, for £400, and marked as “Exhibit, Central Police Office, A;” also, an agreement of 6th June, 1854, marked as “Exhibit B,” purporting to be signed Isabella Mary Kelly, and witnessed by Jane Skerrett and Margaret Skerrett; also, a document, signed by the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court, and marked “Exhibit C;” also, two account sales of Messrs. Rieb, Langley, and Butchart, on account of Miss Kelly, which were received by the Attorney General, 26th November, 1860. The recognizances to give evidence in this case were entered into by John Taylor, Isabella Mary Kelly, William Turner, Samuel Turner, Joseph Giles, Joseph Andrews, Joseph Andrews (for Ann Andrews, his wife), and a recognizance of bail of Charles Skerrett. Those instruments were received at the Attorney General’s Office, on the 26th November, 1860, in the same case. Those are the whole of the papers, with the exception of the warrant, which was prepared, in the first instance, for the apprehension of Margaret Skerrett, alias Kan; John Skerrett, alias Branthwaite; and William Turner. Turner was subsequently apprehended at Gayndah, Queensland, and was dismissed on account of Miss Kelly’s declining to prosecute, I think. William Turner was apprehended and brought before the Brisbane Police Office, and was remanded to be dealt with by the Sydney Bench. On the 23rd November he was discharged, at the request of prosecutrix. Those are the whole of the papers referred to.
618. They were sent to the Attorney General’s Office on the 23rd November? Yes.
619. And were received on the 26th November? On the 26th November.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

William Elyard, Esq., Under Secretary to Principal Secretary, called in and examined:—

W. Elyard,
Esq.
29 Oct., 1862.

620. By the Chairman: You are summoned here to produce certain papers in the case of Miss Kelly and Charles Skerrett;—do you produce those documents? I produce the recommendation of Sir John Nodes Dickinson, on which Miss Kelly was released from imprisonment. This is a copy of the report.

621. That is all you have to produce? That is all I was asked to produce.

APPENDIX.

Supreme Court, 6 March, 1860.

Sir,

I have the honor to beg that you will bring under the notice of His Excellency the Governor General the case of Isabella Mary Kelly, now a prisoner in Darlinghurst Gaol, under sentence for the misdemeanor of perjury.

2. The following paragraphs contain an outline of the circumstances of her case:—

3. In or about the year 1855 Miss Kelly caused one Charles Skerrett to be indicted for stealing her cattle.

4. His defence was that Miss Kelly sold the cattle to him. That allegation she denied.

5. In proof of his assertion Skerrett gave in evidence two documents. Each of them had written on it the words “Isabella Mary Kelly.”

6. Those documents were both dated on the same day, viz., “6 June, 1854.”

7. One of them purported to be a contract of sale of the goodwill of a station, the cattle belonging to it, and twenty unbroken horses, for £600. There was in it an acknowledgment that £400 was paid in cash, and that a bill at twelve months had been given for the balance, £200.

8. That paper was witnessed by Jane Skerrett and by Margaret Skerrett, daughters of the said Charles Skerrett.

9. The other document appeared to be an acknowledgment of the receipt by Miss Kelly from Charles Skerrett of £400, full amount due for her cattle and twenty unbroken horses, which she had sold to him that day.

10. The name, William Turner, was subscribed as an attesting witness to the last-mentioned paper.
11. At Skerrett's trial his daughter Margaret was called, and gave her testimony. The other daughter's attendance could not be procured. William Turner was not produced, but his father was called to explain his absence.
12. At that trial Miss Kelly swore that the signatures to the two papers were not hers.
13. The jury found Skerrett guilty, and he was sentenced by Sir Alfred Stephen, Chief Justice, to be kept to hard labour on the roads, &c., for ten years.
14. After Skerrett had been for some time under imprisonment—pursuant to the sentence—Sir Alfred Stephen reconsidered his case. In so doing he obtained the two documents before-mentioned and some other papers which had been given in evidence at Skerrett's trial. By some mischance those papers were mislaid, and were not found again till after the trial and conviction of Miss Kelly, and the sentence upon her as hereinafter mentioned.
15. The result of Sir Alfred's re-consideration was, that upon his Honor's advice Skerrett obtained a remission, and he was discharged from Cockatoo Island.
16. In the examination before the Police Magistrate, at Dungog, preliminary to Skerrett being committed for trial, Miss Kelly swore,—1st. That Skerrett told her that he had purchased her cattle for £800, from her Sydney agents, Messrs. Rich and Langley. 2nd. That she did not sell her cattle, &c., to Skerrett. 3rd. That the signatures to the two documents were not hers.
17. Her testimony then given was reduced to writing, and she signed the deposition.
18. After Skerrett's release, the Attorney General filed an information in the Supreme Court, charging Miss Kelly with perjury, in making the depositions just mentioned.
- The information contained assignments of perjury on each of the three matters above specified to have been set down in her deposition.
19. Miss Kelly was tried before me, upon that information, on the 6th and 7th October, 1859.
20. Upon that trial Skerrett swore that she made the sale, and signed the two papers; and that what she had sworn as to Rich and Langley, was false.
21. Sir Alfred Stephen was called as a witness, and proved the loss of the two papers. He then gave evidence of their contents.
22. Skerrett's daughters, Jane and Margaret, swore they witnessed a document of sale. Skerrett deposed that William Turner witnessed the receipt, at Miss Kelly's request.
23. At this trial Turner's father swore he had not seen his son for five years.
24. There was, at Miss Kelly's trial, a great deal of evidence on both sides. The evidence of one Joseph Andrews, a witness for Miss Kelly, I think I may here enlarge on, as that testimony, it will be perceived, bears considerably on the recommendation I propose hereinafter respectfully to submit to His Excellency the Governor General.
25. The effect of Andrews' evidence was substantially as follows,—
26. Skerrett came to Andrews' house in 1854, after the month of June, and asked Andrews to help him to muster cattle, which, he said, "he had bought from Miss Kelly."
- On Andrews expressing a doubt as to that purchase, Skerrett showed him the document of sale. Andrews said then to Skerrett, "I don't like your children signing a document of such importance." Skerrett then said, "Is it not right for them to do so?" Andrews replied, "I do not know." Andrews then said, "I don't like Miss Kelly's signature." Skerrett answered, "What! would she deny her signature?" Andrews replied—"I don't know that, but it does not appear to me her usual way of signing." Andrews then drew Skerrett's attention to the letter "y" in the words "Mary" and "Kelly," and produced to Skerrett some papers signed by Miss Kelly, and they compared the signatures on those papers with that on the document of sale. Skerrett then said, "I'll get a receipt for the money, to make all sure." Andrews then said, "That is unnecessary," and pointed out to Skerrett that the paper of sale contained a receipt. Skerrett afterwards paid Andrews a second visit, on which occasion he showed Andrews the receipt. The signature in the receipt was unlike that in the paper of sale, and the signature of the receipt was much more like Miss Kelly's than that of the paper of sale. Miss Kelly, in the course of her correspondence with Andrews, changed the formation of her "y's" in signing her name. At first she made her y with a straight tail, thus—"y." She afterwards looped the tails of that letter—which then had this appearance, "y." Andrews first noticed that alteration in the year 1854. In the papers shown by Andrews to Skerrett the tails of the y's were straight. In the document of sale shown by Skerrett to Andrews the tails were looped; but in the contemporaneous receipt afterwards shown to Andrews by Skerrett the tails of the "y's" were straight.
27. The jury found Miss Kelly guilty, and I sentenced her to pay a fine of £100, and to be imprisoned for 12 months.
28. I expected a different verdict. On perusal, however, of my notes, and on consideration of the case since the trial, and thinking that as the alteration in Miss Kelly's formation of the "y" was not perceived till 1854, that it might (consistently with the evidence before me) have been made so recently before the 6th June in that year, that Miss Kelly had not become used to it, I do not feel that I have reason to be dissatisfied with the verdict of the jury, as a question of probability on the balance of the evidence before them. I certainly should not be dissatisfied now had the verdict been the other way—for the evidence does not, to my mind, exclude all reasonable doubt of Miss Kelly's guilt.
29. Since Miss Kelly's conviction the document of sale, and also the receipt, have been found, and laid before me, and also some papers which I am told are some of those which Andrews swore he showed to Skerrett.
30. On inspecting all those papers they appear to me to confirm strongly the evidence of Andrews. I observe—1st. That the "y's" in the words "Mary" and "Kelly" are differently formed in the papers of sale and receipt of same date, 6th June, 1854. 2ndly. That one is signed by the daughters, and the other by William Turner. 3rdly. That the "y's" in the receipt have straight tails, as have also the "y's" in the papers said to be some of those shown by Andrews to Skerrett. 4thly. That the "y's" in the paper of sale have looped tails. 5thly. That the signature, "Isabella Mary Kelly," in the receipt, is more like the signature in Andrews' papers than the writing of Miss Kelly's name is in the paper of sale.
31. It is possible that the jury may have disbelieved the evidence of Andrews, and, moreover, that they might have believed him had they seen and compared the documents. It is equally possible, that had the jury believed Andrews they might have felt a reasonable doubt, and given Miss Kelly the benefit of it, and acquitted her. They might also, under such circumstances, have concluded she was innocent. The jury might, moreover, from the secondary evidence of the papers of sale and receipt, have formed an erroneous conception of the receipt; for Sir Alfred Stephen appears to have been mistaken in saying as he did, though cautiously, "it was a receipt for £400, and also, I think, for the bill."
32. As, therefore, I conceive that Miss Kelly may, from the loss of the papers, have been prejudiced at her trial, I beg leave most respectfully to recommend His Excellency the Governor General, in merciful caution, to remit to Miss Kelly the fine of £100, and to release her forthwith from her imprisonment.
33. In making the foregoing recommendation, I do so ex abundantî cantelâ; and in so acting, I do not offer any opinion as to the actual guilt or innocence either of Charles Skerrett or of Miss Kelly.
34. So little turned at Miss Kelly's trial on that part of the charge relating to the alleged statements of purchase by Skerrett from Rich and Langley, that I do not consider it necessary to say anything about that part of the case.

The Honorable the Principal Secretary.

I have, &c.,
J. N. DICKINSON.

William Edmund Plunkett, Esq., Secretary to the Crown Law Officers, called in and examined:—

William E. 622. By the Chairman: You produce certain papers in the case of Miss Kelly and Charles Plunkett, Esq. Skerrett? I produce copies of the original proceedings in the case of the Queen v. Charles Skerrett, for forgery, which I hand in. These are all the papers connected with the matter 29 Oct., 1862. that we have at present.

To wit.

ISABELLA MARY KELLY v. CHARLES SKERRETT.

BE it remembered, that on this eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty, at the City of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Isabella Mary Kelly, of the City of Sydney, appears before me, the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices duly assigned to keep the peace of our Lady the Queen in and for the City of Sydney and Territory of New South Wales, and on oath informs me that, on the sixth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, one Charles Skerrett, of the Manning River, in the Colony aforesaid, labourer, did feloniously forge a certain instrument in writing, in the words and figures following, that is to say,—“Brinbin, Manning River, June the 6th, 1854. Sold this day to Mr. Charles Skerrett, all my cattle and brand, with my interest of Brinbin Station, and twenty unbroken horses, for the sum of six hundred pounds, four hundred pounds paid cash, and two hundred pounds by a bill of twelve months; the horses to be selected by Mr. Charles Skerrett, either of the Manning Flats or Brinbin Station. The above four hundred pounds I now receive in cash, and possession of the above-named cattle I this day give to the said Charles Skerrett.—ISABELLA MARY KELLY. Witness—Jane Skerrett, Margaret Skerrett.” And the said Isabella Mary Kelly further saith, that he, the said Charles Skerrett, did feloniously forge one other instrument in writing, in the words and figures following, that is to say,—“Brinbin, Manning River, June 6th, 1854. Received from Mr. Charles Skerrett, the sum of four hundred pounds, full amount due to me for all my cattle and twenty unbroken horses, which I have sold to him this day.—ISABELLA MARY KELLY. Witness—William Turner.” And the said Isabella Mary Kelly further informed me, on oath, that he, the said Charles Skerrett, has been prosecuted by information, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, for cattle-stealing, before certain Justices of the Peace, at the Manning River Bench, in the Colony aforesaid; he, the said Charles Skerrett, was then and there duly committed for trial for said offence; and that, on the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, he was duly tried at the Criminal Court, at Sydney aforesaid, and was then and there convicted of said offence of cattle-stealing; and further informs me, on oath, that he, the said Charles Skerrett, caused the original of the said instrument, of which the above set forth agreement and receipt bearing date respectively the sixth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, being true copies of said original agreement and receipt, to be produced on his said trial; and he, the said Charles Skerrett, did offer and did cause to be given in evidence, on his said trial, at Sydney aforesaid, in the Colony aforesaid, as a part of his defence, the said forged documents, with intent to defraud this informant; that he, the said Charles Skerrett, at the time he so uttered, published, and put forth the said before-mentioned agreement and receipt, then and there well knowing the same to be forged; and the said Isabella Mary Kelly further informs me, on oath, that she has seen the originals of which the above set forth agreement and receipt purport to be copies, and that the same are now in the possession of the Criminal Crown Solicitor, John Williams, Esquire, at Sydney aforesaid, and the name, Isabella Mary Kelly, at the foot of both of the said original agreement and receipt, are forgeries. She, therefore, charges the said Charles Skerrett with forgery, and that the said original agreement and receipt, hereinbefore referred to, have been by the said Charles Skerrett put forth and uttered with intent to defraud the said Isabella Mary Kelly, then and there well knowing the same to be forged, the form of the statute in such case made and provided. Whereupon the said Isabella Mary Kelly prays that I, the said Justice, will proceed in the premises according to law.

John Dawson, solicitor, of Pitt-street, Sydney, on oath, states:—I was present at the trial of Mr. Charles Skerrett (5th April, 1855); I was his solicitor at that time; the exhibits A and B were produced in Court on that occasion; they were put into the hands of Miss Kelly; Miss Kelly was examined by Mr. Holroyd in reference to these documents; my impression is that he was the first to examine her with reference to these documents; other witnesses were examined with reference to these documents; two of Skerrett's daughters and his son were examined with reference to these documents; Skerrett's children were not called for the Crown.

By Mr. Roberts: I had these documents in my hand before to-day; there are some marks on the back and front of these documents as exhibits which were not on when I saw them at the trial; my impression is that there was one mark on the front.

Re-examined: My impression is that I had these documents in my possession anterior to and at the trial.

Archibald Fraser, Clerk in the Criminal Branch of the Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, on oath, states:—I produce from that office two documents, both bearing date 6th June, 1854; they form part of the records of the case against Charles Skerrett, committed for trial at Bungay Bungay, on 20th December, 1854, for cattle-stealing—tried on 5th April, 1855, at Sydney.

By Mr. Roberts: I have been Clerk in the Criminal Branch since May last; I have heard that certain documents were missing; I don't know what documents; before I came I knew nothing about them; I don't know of my own knowledge that these documents were used at the trial; I was in the Colony at the time of the trial, but not in the Crown Solicitor's Office; I know nothing more than that the Crown Solicitor has instructed me to produce the documents, which I found with the papers.

Isabella

Isabella Mary Kelly, re-sworn, states:—My information, now read, is true; I now look at a document (B.), purporting to be an agreement between Isabella Mary Kelly and Charles Skerrett; the name of Isabella Mary Kelly is not my handwriting; I never authorized anyone to write my name to this document; no part of this document is in my handwriting; I now look at the exhibit A; it purports to be witnessed by William James; the name Isabella Mary Kelly is not my handwriting; I never authorized any person to write my name to it; no part of this document is in my handwriting; I never authorized anyone to write this document or any part of it; both these documents are dated 6th June, 1854; I know the defendant, Charles Skerrett; I did not on that day receive from defendant the sum of £400; I did not on that day receive from defendant, Charles Skerrett, a bill or promissory note for £200; I did not before or since that day, or at any other time, receive from Charles Skerrett, the defendant, the sum of £400; I did not on 6th June, 1854, or at any other time before or since, receive from Charles Skerrett, the defendant, a bill or promissory note for £200, or any other document; I know defendant's daughters, and a man named William Turner; I did not at that or any other time sell to Mr. Charles Skerrett all my cattle and brand, and my interest in Brinbin Station with twenty horses; I never got any portion of the £400 mentioned in these documents, nor a bill or promissory note for any amount; I think I first saw these documents in the Police Office at Bungay Bungay, on the Manning River, in 1854; I am not sure; I remember seeing these at Darlinghurst, when defendant, Charles Skerrett, was tried for cattle-stealing; these documents were then put into my hand; I cannot remember by whom, but I saw them; I was afterwards charged with perjury in reference to these documents, for swearing that these were not my signatures; I was found guilty and convicted, and afterwards pardoned; William Turner was not called at Skerrett's trial; I never signed any document of which William Turner was witness; these documents were not produced on my trial for perjury; William Turner was not examined at that trial; I did not know where he was at that time; I had made efforts to find him; I never assented to the documents produced.

By Mr. Roberts: I know Mr. Joseph Andrews; he was examined on the trial of Skerrett for cattle-stealing; I cannot swear whether Andrews saw the documents produced at the time of the trial; he knew and was acquainted with my handwriting; Andrews never told me he believed the signature to be in my handwriting; in the Court, on the trial against Skerrett, I heard Andrews swear he believed that the signature was not my handwriting; it was not on Skerrett's trial; it is so long ago that I can't remember whether he swore that the signature, he believed, was not in my handwriting; I can't remember how many times I have appeared in Courts of Justice against Skerrett; I charge Skerrett with forgery; I know a person named Richards, of the Manning River; I think I see him in Court; I ought to know him; I charged him with forgery; he is Skerrett's friend; I was convicted of perjury at the Criminal Court, at the instance of Skerrett, for having sworn that these two documents were forgeries; I was imprisoned; I have no good feeling to Skerrett, nor do I wish to do him an injury; I came out of gaol on 15th of March last; I was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, and fined £100; the reason I did not prosecute him for forgery before I was prosecuted for perjury was, because I was under the doctor's hands; I was ill for two months before I left the gaol; I was apprehended for cattle-stealing by Skerrett's plotters; they said my men branded cattle belonging to Macpherson; Skerrett never gave me into custody for stealing cattle mentioned in this agreement; I charged Skerrett with horse-stealing and cattle-stealing, before the Dungog Bench, in 1854, and it was referred back to the Manning River Bench; I did not charge him with horse-stealing in last year; I heard that a charge of stealing cattle was preferred against Skerrett, and that the Attorney General declined to prosecute; the illness I speak of was before and after I left the gaol; before my own trial I came to Sydney, and heard that Skerrett had been liberated, and had passed up through the Manning; without reference to my journal I can't and won't swear when it was; I afterwards heard it was not Skerrett who had passed; when I came to Sydney I intended to have him up for horse-stealing and forgery—for stealing a stock horse in 1854; I was told of Skerrett's selling this horse by a man named Richards, whom I call Skerrett's friend; I have heard that Skerrett has been down near my place lately; I not only complain that he has been taking away horses which he alleges he bought, but a hundred; I believe he took 100; I would not like Skerrett to go down to my neighbourhood; I don't know that I looked for Turner for my trial; I endeavoured to find him, to punish him for perjury; I wrote to Mr. Denny Day, in 1854 or 1855, to find Turner; Turner swore in Court, at the Manning Bench, that he saw me sign the documents; I got a warrant against Skerrett, and I got a warrant against Turner; Turner was absent from the time Skerrett was committed; he gave his evidence in favour of Skerrett; he was not examined at the trial of Skerrett, at the Criminal Court; I do not know what became of Turner from 1855 to 1860; it is since March last that I obtained the warrant against Turner; I think I obtained warrants at the same time against Skerrett and Turner; I also obtained a warrant against Skerrett's daughter; I was not advised to do so; Turner, I believe, is in the lock-up, or at Darlinghurst; I had cattle branded on the Bin Bin Station, about 6th June, 1854; I had about 400 head of cattle at Bin Bin and the Flats, Manning River; I have since sold all the cattle to Messrs. Bigby and Cooper; I have also sold the brands; it was early in 1859; it was, I think, on 1st January, 1859, but I am not quite sure; I did not hear that Skerrett was about to be released at the time I sold the cattle to Bigby and Cooper; I know Paddy Connolly; he is a settler on the Manning River; he did not, before I sold the cattle to Bigby and Cooper, tell me Skerrett was to be released; I sold to Bigby and Cooper for £400 cash, and £1,000 in bills, and a farm of forty-three acres; it was a bonâ fide sale; I can't say that cattle rose in price about 6th June, 1854; it was not in consequence of the increase of price of cattle that I repudiated this contract; I never had a contract in selling to, or buying from, Charles Skerrett; on 24th July, 1854, I signed a document without knowing what it was; I saw that there was something about 6d. a week; I could not read it, as I had not my glasses; my signature to that document is genuine; I never became a tenant of his; I signed such a document as that now produced, marked D; I believe it bears my signature; this certainly is like my Isabella Mary Kelly—Isabella Mary Kelly—(the handwriting of the witness); I believe I signed such a document; this is the document I signed; I generally write with a steel pen; the first signature of mine on the paper produced is written with a steel pen, the second with a quill pen; my signatures vary at times; the signature to document D, I wrote carelessly, and without my glasses; Skerrett saw me write my name before 6th June, 1854; he agreed to muster my horses, for which I was to give him two horses for his trouble in mustering; there was a document which he asked me to write out; I afterwards tore my document up, and I believe he tore his up at the time; he tore up a paper, which I thought was his agreement, and I afterwards saw it produced; that was the first time he saw me write; he did not return me the memorandum with my signature; I believed he tore it up at the time; I might have signed more than one document with reference to the mustering of the horses; I signed a duplicate, and kept one, and tore it up; he did not return me the other; either the Judge or Mr. Holroyd put this second paper in my hand; I did examine the documents, and gave Skerrett one and kept the other; I did not deliver him a pony and a horse at the time I signed the document; I agreed to give him a pony and horse for mustering the cattle; the agreement was destroyed, I think, two days after it was signed; I now look to the signatures, Isabella Kelly, B and D; there is a difference in the two—there is a difference in the K; the document B I never signed in my life; I was in doubt a long time to-day that the signature to document D was mine; from circumstances, I think D is a forgery, for he broke into my room, and robbed me of everything; I certainly signed a document of 6d. a week, dated 24th July, 1854, and that I read it, and looked it over carelessly to see if there were horses and cattle named in it; seeing there was nothing about horses and cattle in it, and that there was nothing in it about Bin Bin Station, and when this document was put into my hand I could not believe I had signed such a document, in consequence of seeing the latter part of it; I do not think now that the signature to this document is mine; I did not not swear to-day that I signed this document without my spectacles; I have sworn to-day that I believe the writing was mine; it is in my evidence that I swear that the signature to the document D is mine; when I signed it I had no spectacles on; I have worn spectacles for eight years; I have said that my signature was genuine; the circumstances I refer to I have known a long time; my spectacles were in my bag when I signed a document respecting 6d. a-week; when I saw there was nothing about cattle and horses in it, I did not read any more; there was but little more in it; I read it carelessly; I never read and saw the underneath part of this document; I swear, to the best of my belief, I never saw this document before the trial of Skerrett for cattle-stealing; I do not remember seeing it before then; I did not say then that I believed it was a forgery; I then objected to the latter part of it; Judge Stephen said, no doubt he did that as well as the rest; this was when I was in the witness-box; to the best of my belief he said this; he said, to the best of my belief, that he concocted this as well as the rest; the words "rent commencing July 24th, 1854," were in the document I signed; those words appear in the agreement I signed; there were words following the 6d. a-week in the agreement I signed; I do not remember seeing 1854 in the body of this document; when I signed the document I observed there were only a few lines in it; there were not fourteen lines in it; I won't swear that the document did not contain from ten to twelve lines; I do not know what lines were in the document I signed; the document produced contains ten lines; I knew Rich and Langley; they were auctioneers in this City, and carrying on business about 1854; my cattle were in their hands for sale; they had a lien on them; I told two persons that Skerrett had bought my cattle; when the agreement of 29 April was drawn out, Skerrett said, "I will soon be in a position to purchase your cattle;" I said, "If you want to purchase my cattle you will have to go to my agents, Rich, Langley, and Butchart, in George-street, Sydney, as they have the sale of them;" he said he had £1,500 left him, and that he had had a power of attorney drawn out, and had passed it through the firm of Brierley, Dean, and Co., for collection; he left for Sydney, and on his return, on 22nd or 23rd May, accompanied by Mr. Miller, he said to me, "I have purchased all your cattle—all your brands;" I said, "I have not authorized Rich, Langley, and Butchart to sell more than 250 head;" I said, "What did you pay for them?" he said, "£800;" I then said, "What am I to do for cows or beef for my station;" he said, "Never mind, you can have as many bullocks as you like for the same as I paid for them," and asked me what number I wanted; I told him; there was nothing about horses; a few days after that Mr. Finley came to me for a fat bullock; I told him Skerrett had bought the cattle, believing at the time he was telling the truth; in July, 1854, I received a letter from Rich, Langley, and Butchart; I took the letter to Skerrett, who was then in my garden; I said to him, "How came you to say you had purchased my cattle?" he said, "Well, Miss Kelly, I have been disappointed in money matters, and if you say now that I have not purchased your cattle, I'll never be able to muster them for you;" I then said, "I am only astonished that any man calling himself a gentleman, and nine years a Magistrate of Port Phillip, would be guilty of telling an untruth;" he then said, "Be off from here, you damned bitch;" I ordered my horses directly, and started for Sydney; this is my explanation of my stating that he had bought my cattle; in the month of May, 1854, I told a person Skerrett had bought my cattle; I received the letter from Rich and Langley in July, towards the latter end; I observe that the document D. is dated 23rd July; I left Bin Bin for Sydney in July, 1854; early in July, before I got Mr. Langley's letter, I told two persons that I sold the cattle; I think I had got Rich and Langley's letter when I signed the document D., respecting the 6d. a-week; I came to Sydney and saw Langley, and instructed him about the cattle; I spoke to him about Skerrett; he said he did not know the man; he recommended me to get Mr. Dodds to sell them; I swear the cattle were in Langley's hands for sale; it was after the 24th July, 1854, I saw Langley.

For 18 October, at 11 o'clock.

Again until 19 October.

By Mr. Michael (for Mr. Roberts): I first became acquainted with Skerrett in April, 1854; the second time I saw him was on 29th April, when I signed a paper; it was an agreement letting him Bin Bin Station; I understood his object was to keep a dairy; I allowed him to milk 100 head until I made sale of the cattle; I let him my station for the remainder of the term; the agreement is now produced; it is marked No. 6, brought from the Council Chamber (in the hands of the Council Clerk); this document is not a forgery; on the 4th June, 1854, Skerrett came to Bin Bin in pursuance of this agreement; he left for Sydney after the agreement was signed, and returned in May, 1854; there was no agreement for the sale of cattle after he returned; there was no conversation about his buying from me; not a sentence about his purchasing from me; Rich and Langley had a lien of about £300 on the cattle; I never, in fact, did at any time sell Skerrett my cattle and station; I merely referred him to my agents about them; I wanted the Chinaman's hut, for which I was to pay 6d. a-week, for my stockman; to my knowledge I never signed any other document or paper in connection with Skerrett except those I have stated; I never received any money whatever from Skerrett on account of cattle; I swore at Dungog I sold a bullock to Skerrett for £4; I did sell him one, but he never paid me for it; I cannot say that I swore there that I had not been paid for it; to the best of my belief I said so; if I had been asked the question there I would have said it; William Turner entered my service in 1854; I think it was about the month of March; he was to put me up a cottage at Mount George, about twenty-two miles from my place; he continued there for some time; I can tell by reference to my journal; I saw him at work for me in July, 1854; I remember returning from Sydney; I don't know whether Turner was working for me at that time; I remember Turner giving evidence at Bungay Bungay; I think he was working for Mr. Hawthorne at the time; when working at Mount George, Turner got some of his supplies from Andrews, and some from Bin Bin; Andrews' place was near Mount George; sometimes Turner sent for supplies, and sometimes I sent them; I can't say that he ever fetched any supplies himself; the nails and locks, and such like articles, were chiefly supplied from Bin Bin; Skerrett lived at Bin Bin up to the time I preferred the charge against him; I paid Turner some money on account of the building while he was at work; Turner first came to Bin Bin on 22nd May; when Skerrett was passing, it was either 22nd or 23rd May; I don't remember seeing them together on that day; Turner was there that day, and I think Skerrett was there; the second time Turner came to Bin Bin was on the 25th June, when my man was drowned; I mean the second time of his coming was when Skerrett was there; Turner and Skerrett were together that day; I saw them together; I was not with them; I spoke to them; a few days afterwards, when the man was found, Turner was again at Bin Bin with Skerrett; I spoke to them about the loss of the man; after that I saw them often together; I never mentioned to them in any conversation anything about the sale of cattle; anything I might have said to them on such occasions was totally of a different character; I did swear at Bungay Bungay that I was never present at any time when Skerrett and Turner were together; the signature to the depositions of 20th December, 1854, taken at Bungay Bungay, is mine (Depositions in hands of Council Clerk); I don't know when Turner left the Manning District; I remember his going to see Mrs. Skerrett after Skerrett was committed; I heard him give his evidence in Court; after he gave evidence I called him a perjurer; I never saw him by appointment before his departure; I left my house after Skerrett was committed; I was at Andrews' because it was an inn; I did not see Turner there since the hearing at the Dungog Bench, except when I saw him at dinner with the Skerretts; after the hearing at Dungog, I made inquiries for Turner, and could not find him until a recent period; a few months ago I heard of his whereabouts, and immediately after hearing I got a warrant warrant against him, and I did not see him until yesterday, when he was brought to this Court; I never sent anyone to him in gaol, nor did I authorize anyone to go to him.

Re-examined: I did not know that the papers which the Judge handed me were in existence until they were shown to me; I first heard of the papers at Bungay Bungay; it was after Skerrett was arrested; I was in the Court when they were produced by Skerrett; the documents produced, marked A and B, are the same I speak of; they are the very same documents.

JAMES MURPHY, J.P.

The agreement, marked as exhibit D, was returned to the Legislative Assembly Clerk, at his request and by order of the Bench. (Agreement of 24th July, 1854, between Isabella Mary Kelly and Charles Skerrett.)

Remanded until 22nd November next; bail, £200 and two sureties in £100 each, or one in £200; notice to be given to Mr. J. R. Brennan.

JAMES MURPHY, J.P.

William Turner, on oath, states: I know the defendant, Charles Skerrett, and Miss Isabella Mary Kelly; I knew Skerrett in 1854, on the Manning River; I was a carpenter at that time in the service of Miss Kelly; Skerrett was living at Bin Bin; I was there before Mr. Skerrett went to live there; I had not been long in that part of the country; he was living in a house of Miss Kelly's; Miss Kelly was living in part of the same house; in or about that time I had a conversation with Skerrett, at Bin Bin; no one was present besides Skerrett and myself; the conversation was something about the sale of some cattle; to the best of my recollection he sent word to me that he wanted to see me very particular; I went over to Skerrett's—to the house; on my way there I called at a neighbour's, and had a glass or two to drink; when I got to Skerrett's house he told me that he had purchased some property, and he said he had got a receipt for the property, and that he had got a witness to it, and he asked me if I would witness it; I objected to it at the time; he said it was a matter of no consequence, if Miss Kelly denied her own signature there would be no further bother; and I, being a little the worse for liquor, he pressed me very much to witness it; after a long pressing I did it, being a little stupefied with liquor; I can't read writing, but I think the signature to the paper produced (A) is mine; I won't swear positive, but I think it is mine; I have just heard the receipt read; I now remember his telling me something to that effect; he read or told me of it; I think he read some portion over to me; he said something about paying the money, and having no witness to it; I remember nothing else about the money at that time; he said they were Melbourne notes; I don't recollect the amount he said the notes were—£100 each; I did not see Miss Kelly sign the paper A; I did not see Skerrett pay any money to Miss Kelly at that time, or any other time; I signed this paper between the middle and latter end of July; I think I have reason to know it was in July, because I remember working for Miss Kelly in June and not in July; I left Miss Kelly some time in June; I think it was in the beginning of June; it was a good while after I left, when I signed the paper; the next thing was, that his son came and said something to me; I went and got a horse, and met Skerrett on the road, in charge of a policeman; he told me Miss Kelly had got a warrant against him for cattle-stealing, and that the document which I had signed was a receipt, and that I would have to swear it—that I was as deep in it as himself; this was on the road; he said something to that effect; he was in the custody of the police; I was allowed to talk to him on the road, but not many words; I went on riding with them, and we stopped at Andrews' public-house that night; Skerrett and I slept in one room; I disremember whether the police were in the room or not; there was only one policeman taking charge of Skerrett; during the night, and while Skerrett and I were together, Skerrett said, "You will have to swear to that paper you signed your signature, or else I will get into trouble, and you deeper than me;" he said, "You know your signature when you see it;" I said, "This is a pretty mess you have brought me into, I did not expect it from you;" he said if he didn't do that Miss Kelly would have robbed him out of his money; I said, "Well, Mr. Skerrett, I thought you would not have brought me into such a matter as this;" he began to tell me about money, and he told me that he had purchased that place for that amount of money, and I would have to swear to it; he said he purchased the brand of the cattle and twenty head of horses—all but one chesnut horse, which she reserved, and I would have to swear to that, or else I would be brought into trouble as deep as him; he pressed on me very hard to do so, and I objected at first to do so, but through fear and the position I was placed in, and from his advising, I done so; I believe we slept in one bed on that occasion; he asked me to go to Maitland for an attorney to plead at Dungog for him; he mentioned the name of Mr. Chambers; I went for Mr. Chambers to Maitland, and I delivered the message as Skerrett had told me; I went back to Dungog to the Police Office there; Skerrett was brought up to the Police Office there, but had to be removed to the Manning Bench; I was not examined; Mr. Chambers was at Dungog; Mr. Skerrett, his daughter, my father, and myself left the neighbourhood of Dungog together; I had to attend the Manning Bench at Bungay Bungay, where Skerrett was brought up; I was examined as a witness; this paper (A) was put into my hand at that bench; I swore at the Manning Bench according to what Mr. Skerrett told me to say; after the proceedings were over I had no conversation with Skerrett; I remember his having a conversation with me in a bed of the Manning River; that was the day he was tried at Bungay Bungay, after the hearing there; it was some time in the afternoon; no one else was present; he said I should have to stick to that what he had told me to swear; I saw no more of him after that; I was afraid, and went home to where I was at work—Dingo Creek, about three or four miles from Bungay Bungay; I only stopped there a few days, and I was afraid of the position Skerrett had placed me in, and I ran away; I went to Dungog, and there went harvesting; from that I came to Maitland, and from thence to Sydney, where I remained two years and a half, and then went to the Rocky River Diggings; I left my father on the Manning; I was arrested on the 26th August last, on the Dawson River, near to Rockhampton, and I was marched down to Sydney; I have not been with my family since I left the Manning; I was not twenty years of age when I signed this document in 1854; I never signed more than one paper, as I know; I went down from the Court House to the bed of the Manning River, and we talked there.

By Mr. Michael: I was the person who was examined at Bungay Bungay when Skerrett was brought up, and I am the William Turner whose signature appears to the paper shown me to-day; I swear I am the person who gave evidence on that occasion; I was sworn on that occasion; Mr. Day was on the Bench, and, I think, two other Magistrates; I am sure of one; I think it was Mr. Croker's father-in-law; I can't swear positively that there was another Magistrate present; I was in Mr. Croker's employ then at Dingo Creek; I recollect something of what I swore on that day; I swore I witnessed the paper—I signed my name, and Miss Kelly asked me to witness it; I believe I swore I saw Skerrett draw it out, and Miss Kelly read it, and signed it; I swore that I saw him pay her the money, according as I was told; I did not swear, as I remember, that Miss Kelly called me from the kitchen to witness it; I might have sworn it, but I don't remember; I think I swore I saw him give her a bill for £200 at twelve months; I saw the bank notes were taken out of Mr. Skerrett's pocket-book; I saw they were £100 each; I don't recollect swearing that I saw Skerrett count them one by one, and hand them to Miss Kelly; I think I swore that I remember this was on the 6th June; I remember it, because I went to Bin Bin the day before for nails and flour, and stopped all night; I believe I swore that the first time Miss Kelly disputed the sale was when she came from Sydney; I don't remember swearing it was Andrews who told of me, at his own house; immediately after giving this and the other evidence I ran away, and from then, up to the time I was arrested, I saw none of the parties; I was arrested at the instance of Miss Kelly, and am now in custody; my object in coming here to-day is, that I was brought into error; I did not understand it at the time; I have been in Darlinghurst eight days, and I have not seen Miss Kelly during that time; I have seen Mr. Brennan, Miss Kelly's attorney; I have not seen anyone else from Miss Kelly; I have not seen any other visitors during the time I have been there; Mr. Brennan had me called into an office; he called in a detective officer to hear what I said; no one else was there; Mr. Brennan got me to make an affidavit, which I swore before the Mayor; I saw the Mayor in the prison, and he swore me to the paper; that affidavit was made in the gaol; Mr. Brennan told me that if I stated the truth on the matter that I should not be harmed; that was the only promise made to me; there was no offer of any benefit to me, on the Manning or otherwise, nor anything to happen me after Skerrett's conviction; I think I saw Mr. Brennan twice at Darlinghurst; I had not known Skerrett long before the transaction in 1854; I might have known him a month or two; I was residing with Miss Kelly up to just before the paper was signed; I was living about six miles from Skerrett at the time I witnessed the receipt; I never lived closer to him than that; I might have seen him a dozen times or more—I can't remember; I might have seen him half-a-dozen times; I can't recollect anything that took place between us on any one of these times; I now remember seeing him once respecting a man who was drowned; I can't say whether I was with — a short or long time on these visits; I was never long with him; I don't know how I came to do such things for a mere stranger; I had had no favour from him, nor was I under any obligation to him; I believe I was in the employment of Miss Kelly on 6th June, 1854; I was putting up a house for her; I think I recollect Miss Kelly leaving for Sydney about the end of July or beginning of August; the conversation with Skerrett took place after Miss Kelly left for Sydney—I mean the conversations about the property; I know that Miss Kelly had gone to Sydney at the time; I have said that the first conversation took place about the middle of July; I know that Miss Kelly had started for Sydney; the first conversation took place at Skerrett's, in one of his rooms—one of his sitting-rooms; the room was next to Miss Kelly's; Skerrett's family were living there; I can't remember positively the first thing he said to me; he said something to me about the property—that he had purchased it from Miss Kelly; he said the station, the brand of cattle, and twenty unbroken horses he had purchased; he didn't tell me all that I recollect; I can't say he read it all to me, that I recollect; I believe he asked me then to witness it for him; he said he had got a receipt, but had no witness to it; I don't know what answer I made to him at the time; several words passed, but I don't remember what they were; I know I objected to it at the first going off; he said Miss Kelly might turn round and rob him of the money if had not a witness to it; I might have been there an hour or two before I signed the paper; the next I heard of the matter was when Skerrett was apprehended; I never mentioned it to any one; I heard that Miss Kelly had not got home when Skerrett was apprehended; I first heard from Skerrett, when he was apprehended, about the dispute as to the state of the cattle; I don't remember Andrews telling me at all of it; I don't recollect whether I swore it was Andrews who told me so; my next conversation with Skerrett was when in custody; I don't remember having any conversation with him between the two occasions; I knew his family; the second conversation I had with him was between Bin Bin and Cedar Party Creek; he was not much hindered in having conversation with me; between the time of the signature and arrest I was residing about six miles from Skerrett; I am not aware that he was collecting and branding cattle; I heard that he was; I don't remember who told me; I did not mention that I was the attesting witness to the receipt between the parties; I did not tell Andrews I had witnessed the receipt according to what Skerrett told me; this was when we stopped there that night, when Skerrett was in custody; I can't now remember what I told Andrews; I suppose I told him the whole of it as Skerrett told me, and I gave evidence to the same effect before the Bench; I may have made the same statement to different persons; during the six years that have elapsed, I have not mentioned any of these conversations to any one until I was arrested; on the Manning River I did not mention to the Bench any of these conversations; I don't think a fortnight elapsed between the time of my giving evidence at Bungay Bungay and my leaving the Manning River; I can't say that I saw Skerrett during that fortnight I was at his place; I saw Skerrett's son during that fortnight; I don't think I saw Miss Kelly; she never came to my bed-room during that fortnight; if I did see her I did not speak to her; I did not receive a message from her; Miss Kelly did not threaten to have me lagged if I did not make myself scarce; it was not in consequence of her threats that I went away; the first night I left I stopped at Andrews'.

Re-examined: The name being mentioned to me I now remember that Mr. Hawthorne was one of the Magistrates; I don't remember Mr. Cooper being on the Bench; on 6th June, 1854, I was putting up a house for Miss Kelly at Mount George, about twenty miles from Bin Bin; I had not finished the house before I left Mount George; I believe I was at Mount George on 6th June; I remember Miss Kelly leaving Sydney some time before I signed the paper.

THE QUEEN AGAINST CHARLES SKERRETT.

I, Samuel Raymond, Esquire, Prothonotary of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, do hereby certify that at the Criminal Court holden at Darlinghurst, on Thursday, the 5th day of April, 1855, Charles Skerrett was duly tried upon an information presented by the Honorable John Hubert Plunkett, Her Majesty's Attorney General, then prosecuting in the said Colony for our Sovereign Lady the Queen, the said information charging him with feloniously stealing seven oxen and seven cows, the property of Isabella Mary Kelly; and I further certify that the said Charles Skerrett having pleaded not guilty to the said information, was, on the day and year aforesaid, at the Criminal Court aforesaid, given in charge to a jury therein, and was then and there by the said jury found guilty upon the said information.

And I further certify that the said Charles Skerrett was duly adjudged and sentenced for his said offence, to be kept to hard labour on the roads or public works of the Colony for the period of ten years.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Supreme Court Office, this 6th of June, A.D. 1860.

(L.S.) S. RAYMOND,

Prothonotary.

Charles Edward Langley, on oath, saith: I was in partnership with Rich, Langley, and Butchart, in 1854; Miss Kelly placed some cattle in their hands for sale that year—I can't exactly swear to the month; defendant never applied to me to purchase those cattle; I did not sell the cattle to Skerrett; the document produced is an account current of the amount advanced to Miss Kelly, together with the expenses.

Samuel Turner, on oath states:—William Turner, now in Court, is my son; in 1854 my son and myself were in the employ of Miss Kelly, at the Manning River; the first place I ever saw Skerrett was in Andrews', in June or July—I think it was in June; I remember when a man of Miss Kelly's was drowned; it was in June or July; I was at the finding of that man; my son was with me one afternoon when I first met Skerrett at Andrews'; when the man was found, Skerrett and I went to Brinbin; my son also went; that was the first time I saw Skerrett, and that was the first time I went to Brinbin, that I remember; I was at that time with my son doing work for Miss Kelly at Mount George; we were working together, day after day, for more than a month; my son went away many a time of a Saturday night, and returned sometimes on a Monday, and sometimes on a Tuesday; I remember when Skerrett was arrested, at the instance of Miss Kelly, for cattle-stealing; I recollect my son being called as a witness for Skerrett, at Bungay Bungay; I don't remember the time I was there that day; I heard no conversation between my son and Skerrett before he went in to be examined; it was in June or July, but I don't recollect; it was after July, because I was in Mr. Croker's employ; I had no conversation with my son after he was called as a witness in Skerrett's case; I may say that my son ran away, and I did not see him again until I saw him in Sydney; he told me he was going away, but I expected him back.

By Mr. Windeyer: I remember Miss Kelly telling me that Skerrett had bought her cattle; I swore that before, when Miss Kelly was tried for perjury; I went to Miss Kelly for money, after she told me this; I don't remember when it was; it was in 1854, about the time I was building the house, when I went to her for some money; she said her notes were too heavy, and she could not cash them; she did not pay me; she said when she cashed them she would pay me; she owed me £35; I only wanted £2 at the time; I was at Brinbin when she told me Skerrett had purchased the cattle; it was after she came from Sydney she told me she thought he had purchased the cattle, and that he did not buy the cattle; I was building the house at Mount George, and I went to Brinbin, where she lived, to get the money from her; she did not tell me at Brinbin that she had sold the cattle; it was at Mount George she told me she had sold the cattle to Skerrett; I was asking her for money at that time; after that I was asking her for money, and she said the notes were too heavy; this was at Brinbin, a fortnight after she told me she had sold the cattle to Skerrett; she didn't say where she got the notes from; when I went to Brinbin Miss Kelly told me her notes were too heavy; I was examined when Miss Kelly was tried for perjury; I did not swear that when she told me the notes were too heavy, she said she had sold the cattle to Skerrett; I don't recollect that she told me when she said the notes were too heavy that she had sold the cattle to Skerrett; I was present when she sold a mare, and received two notes, which I heard were £20 notes; it was about three weeks before I applied to her for money; when Miss Kelly told me Skerrett had purchased her cattle, she said he had purchased them from her agents in Sydney.

By Mr. Windeyer: It was at Mount George she told me; she afterwards said at Brinbin that he had not purchased them.

Joseph Giles, of the Manning River, on oath, states:—I know Miss Kelly, and Skerrett, the defendant; I remember well the time Skerrett was apprehended for cattle-stealing; I remember William Turner being examined as a witness at the Bench at Bungay Bungay; Skerrett made a proposition to me about Turner's evidence; I went across the Dingo Creek with him; he asked me what I thought of Miss Kelly's case; I said, "I don't know anything about law—I know nothing about it;" he said he was no man for law—he was a man for business; I said, "If you paid Miss Kelly for those cattle you bought, she must be a very bad woman to deny it;" I said, "You have William Turner and your own daughter as an evidence;" he said then that William Turner was good evidence—that he was afraid of his daughter's, and that he would give me or any other person £20 to back William Turner's evidence up; and we parted.

By

By Bench : Turner had given his evidence before this ; I was in Court at Bungay Bungay when Turner had given his evidence ; I knew nothing of the alleged purchase of the cattle by Skerrett from Miss Kelly ; I knew nothing personally of Miss Kelly receiving £400 from Skerrett ; I was not present at any bargain between Miss Kelly and Skerrett, respecting the purchase of the cattle ; I was in Court as a bystander when Skerrett was accused, and when Turner gave his evidence ; I heard no conversation between Turner and Skerrett ; I afterwards spoke to Turner ; Turner went away in November, 1854.

By Mr. Windeyer : I reside at the Manning River, at Mr. Andrews' ; I have now been living with him twenty-two months ; I was at work at Cundletown in 1854, for Mr. Charles Croker ; in 1855 I think I was in Maitland ; this is the first time I have been examined as a witness ; I was on the Manning when Miss Kelly was tried for perjury ; I don't think I was with Mr. Andrews at the time ; I was at work for Mr. Croker when I met Mr. Skerrett ; I had known him before then ; I think I first saw him in June, 1854 ; he used to pass where I was at work ; he might have passed once or twice a week, and we used to talk about this case ; my mate Thomas Watson used to see me talking to Skerrett ; pending the adjournment at Bungay Bungay, from November to December, I had the conversation with Skerrett ; I was not subpoenaed in Miss Kelly's case for perjury ; application was made to me to come, but I did not come.

Re-examined : I was subpoenaed to attend here in the case of Kelly v. Skerrett ; I attended, but was not examined ; the case was postponed.

Ann Andrews, wife of Joseph Andrews, of the Manning River, on oath, states:—I know Miss Kelly and the defendant Skerrett ; I remember seeing Skerrett at our house several times in 1854 ; we kept an hotel there ; I heard from Skerrett that he had purchased Miss Kelly's cattle for £800 ; this was in the month of May ; I understood him to say there were 500 head, or 300 head, I am not positive as to the number ; It was on or about the 20th May he told me this ; after that time I saw him at our hotel ; I heard Skerrett ask my husband if he had heard anyone say that he had not purchased Miss Kelly's cattle, and he then asked my husband to look at some document ; this was in the month of July, 1854, about the middle of the month ; I saw no papers, but I was asked to get some papers to compare Miss Kelly's writing ; I gave them to my husband ; I remember when a man of Miss Kelly's was drowned—it was on the 19th June, 1854 ; I heard that the body was found that day week ; when Skerrett was at our place in the middle of July, 1854, Sam Turner, William Turner, and my brother-in-law, William Andrews were there ; when Skerrett told me in May that he had purchased the cattle, I understood that he came from Sydney ; he did not say where he had purchased the cattle ; I remember when Skerrett was convicted, at the instance of Miss Kelly, for cattle-stealing ; on his return from Dungog Court House he told me Miss Kelly had got up some excuse that he had told her he had purchased the cattle from her agents ; I said "Do you remember telling me, Mr. Skerrett, that you had purchased Miss Kelly's cattle last May ?" he made a pause ; I repeated it again, and he put his hand on my shoulder and said, "Don't you tell Miss Kelly that, she has too much in her head for you" ; I don't remember his saying anything else.

By Mr. Carroll : I was examined for Miss Kelly on the case for cattle-stealing ; I was examined in the case against Miss Kelly for perjury ; I have said to-day what I remember ; I was not asked the same questions then as I have been asked to-day ; I was not on good terms with Miss Kelly at the time—May, 1854, nor in June, or July ; it was in October that I reminded Skerrett what he had said about the purchase of the cattle ; it was on his return from Dungog Bench.

Joseph Andrews, of the Manning River, on oath, states:—I know Miss Kelly and the defendant Skerrett ; I first became acquainted with Miss Kelly about 1845 ; some of her property joined mine ; I remember Skerrett coming to reside at the Manning River in 1854, in June, I think ; I remember Miss Kelly prosecuting Skerrett for cattle-stealing, in 1854 ; I was examined on that trial at the Criminal Court, Darlinghurst ; I was called on behalf of the Crown ; I was cross-examined on behalf of the now defendant, and the then prisoner, Skerrett ; the documents produced, marked A and B, were put into my hands on behalf of Skerrett, and I was cross-examined in reference thereto ; I did see before then, in Skerrett's hands, the document B now produced ; I saw it at my own house about the middle of July, 1854 ; I think it was the 12th, but I won't be positive ; I recollect Skerrett coming to my house with William and Sam Turner, I think in the evening of the 12th July, 1854 ; he asked me to tell him who had said that he had not purchased Miss Kelly's cattle ; I said I could not tell him—that it was the general opinion ; he said he would like very much to know ; he then said, "Will you look at my documents and be convinced ?" and he put his hand in his pocket and took out and showed me the document produced, of 6 June, 1854 (B) ; he wished me to look at the document ; he said he would like me to give my opinion on it ; I read it carefully ; I said he had made a better bargain than what he had said when he was going to Port Macquarie in the month of May ; he asked me if I liked it ; I said I did, but did not like to see his children as witnesses to such an important document ; he drew my attention to Miss Kelly's signature ; I said I did not like it—that it was not her usual signature ; I then said, "By-the-by, I have a number of Miss Kelly's receipts and signatures, and I'll go and get them, and compare them ;" I got them and compared them ; they did not correspond with the signature to that document ; after that time I had a great deal of correspondence with Miss Kelly, and had an opportunity of seeing her signature ; there is a loop in the letter "y" in the signature to this which I did not at any time notice before in her signature ; at the turn of the loop, and in the letter "y," the pen has been lifted and left a small space at the bottom of the loop ; I now believe that the signature to the document produced (B) is not Miss Kelly's ; when I read the document he said he had given £400 in cash, and a bill for £200 at twelve months ; after some conversation he said he would get a receipt for the £400 from Miss Kelly ; I said it was not necessary, that she had acknowledged the receipt of the £400 in the document ; this was about the 12th July, 1854 ; I understood that he had no receipt ; he said he would get a receipt and make sure ; I remember seeing the receipt produced, marked A, on Skerrett's return from Dungog, in October, 1854 ; that was the first time I ever saw this receipt ; it was afterwards produced at the Court, at Bungay Bungay ; it was put in at the Supreme Court, on Skerrett's defence, and when I was examined ; I have no doubt about the document produced (B) being the same as I saw before, and have spoken of ; there is a palpable difference in the letter "y" in the signature to the documents produced ; I was examined before the Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly, and was shown the signature only to the receipt produced ; I then said I would not take it to be Miss Kelly's signature ; also that of the bill of sale of 6th June ; the documents I left with Mr. Arnold, the Chairman of the Committee, I did not get back.

By

By Mr. Windeyer : I believe the documents produced, A and B, are the same I have seen before; I believe them to be identically the same; they were numbered at Bungay, 2 and 4; I had a doubt as to these signatures; on one occasion I said I thought they were Miss Kelly's, at Darlinghurst; I would not swear one way or the other; In 1854, I said I believed them to be Miss Kelly's; I said that on oath; subsequently I said they were not; I changed my opinion, from circumstances which came to my knowledge; my first impression is, that when I first saw the signature I challenged it; in comparison of the signatures I saw there was a resemblance of the signatures, and I gave the benefit of the doubt to Skerrett; I was not on friendly terms with Miss Kelly in June, July, or August, 1854; in October, 1854, I was a friend by turns with both parties; I remember first talking to Miss Kelly about the agreement, in September, 1854; I believe she, at that time, abandoned an action which she threatened me with, and I made friends with her; my estate is under sequestration; I bought a few head of cattle from Mr. Bigby; he purchased them from Miss Kelly; I gave evidence for the Crown, in the case against Skerrett; In 1854, I said I thought the signatures were Miss Kelly's; it was after September I was examined for Miss Kelly, in the perjury case.

Re-examined : I challenged the agreement signature when I saw it; the signature to the receipt produced (B) corresponds with those I looked at to compare with signature to document A.

STATEMENT OF THE ACCUSED.

CHARLES SKERRETT stands charged before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the City and Colony aforesaid, this 23rd day of November, in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and sixty, for that he, the said Charles Skerrett, on the 6th day of June, 1854, at the Manning River, in the said Colony, did feloniously forge a certain agreement and receipt of that date, with intent to defraud one Isabella Mary Kelly; and the said charge being read to the said Charles Skerrett, and the witnesses for the prosecution being severally examined in his presence, the said Charles Skerrett is now addressed by me as follows:—"Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? you are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so; but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial;" whereupon the said Charles Skerrett saith nothing.

JAMES MURPHY, J.P.

John Ryan Brenan called in and examined:—

- J. R. Brenan. 623. By the Chairman: You are a Solicitor of the Supreme Court? I am.
- 29 Oct., 1862. 624. You conducted the case against Charles Skerrett? I originally conducted the prosecution of Skerrett in 1855, when he was convicted for cattle-stealing. That was the first prosecution in which I was engaged for Miss Kelly.
625. Do you remember who was the solicitor for Skerrett? No, I do not recollect who defended him. By-the-by, I do recollect—it was Mr. Dawson, and it was he who defended Skerrett at the Supreme Court. It was out of Mr. Dawson's hands that these forgeries came for which the prosecutions of 1860 were instituted, which also I conducted.
626. Did you say you conducted Miss Kelly's defence at the Police Office? No, not when she was prosecuted for perjury; I had nothing to do with that. My first engagement for Miss Kelly against Skerrett was in the prosecution for cattle-stealing in 1855. He was then committed,* tried, convicted, and sent to Cockatoo Island under sentence. I was present during the whole of the trial, which lasted, if I remember rightly, until two or three o'clock in the morning.
627. Were you present when the Judge delivered sentence? I was, and during the whole time that the witnesses for the prosecution and defence were being examined. Mr. Plunkett conducted the case for the Crown.
628. Was there anything so remarkable in the evidence as to strike you, especially as to the evidence of Skerrett's daughter who witnessed the forgery? Yes. One daughter was examined, and gave her evidence very unsatisfactorily.
629. And I think Skerrett's son was examined? That I cannot recollect—it is so many years ago; but the daughter's evidence struck me forcibly—it was so wavering, and she prevaricated, cried, and sobbed a good deal. The Judge animadverted very sharply upon the mode in which she gave her evidence.
630. Do you remember any of the particulars of the Judge's address as to the manner in which the evidence was got up? Addressing Miss Skerrett, he said he was disposed to look with great leniency upon her evidence and the way in which she gave it, on account of the relationship that existed between the prisoner and herself; but he expressed his opinion that he did not attach much credence to her evidence, or words to that effect.
631. Did he say anything purporting to convey the idea that the family were brought up to perjure themselves at the instance of their father? No. He said the influence that was exercised, or which he supposed was exercised, by the parent over the child, was a palliation of the mode in which she gave her evidence—something to that effect; but were it not under such circumstances, I think he said, he would feel himself bound either to commit her or take serious notice of her mode of giving evidence.
632. Did he address Skerrett himself in a condemnatory way? I do not think he did; he might have said something when he was passing sentence upon him.
633. I allude to that? He did say something to the effect that he had great apprehensions upon his mind that this young girl, who was little more than a child, was influenced (I cannot recollect his words exactly), or appeared to be influenced, by the natural affection a child would have for her father, and the father's influence upon her youthful mind.
634. Were there any other of the witnesses in whose examination or mode of reply there appeared to be anything peculiarly remarkable? The whole of the evidence produced for the defence appeared to be very questionable and unsatisfactory. As far as I could judge, the jury did not appear to attach any importance at all to it.
635. Did it strike you that Skerrett got a fair trial, or that he was properly defended? I think he had a very fair trial, and that he was very well defended. Mr. Dawson is an excellent young man, a very good lawyer, and his case was as well got up as it could be. I dare say Mr. Dawson was deceived by Skerrett as to the production of these documents. Mr. Dawson at the time believed the documents were genuine. I never did believe so, and the whole of the case came under my view.
636. Have you ever been examined before a Committee of the Assembly, touching this case, at a former period? I think I was examined in Skerrett's case, or on some inquiry or application from Skerrett for compensation, so far as my recollection serves me. I do not recollect the subject I was examined upon. As far as having a fair trial is concerned, I thought a great deal of pains was taken in his defence. It was a very patient inquiry, and lasted until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, if I recollect rightly.
637. Miss Kelly was brought up at the Police Office for perjury? She was brought up, committed to take her trial, and was convicted of perjury.
638. Were you engaged in that case? No, but I know it as a fact, that these documents were not produced then, as they were not found at that time, as far as I was informed. I was in Court during a portion of the trial.
639. The perjury alleged on that trial was the swearing that these very documents were not genuine? The same documents which were the subject of the prosecution of Skerrett in 1860, when he was committed to take his trial for the forgery of these documents †
640. The forgery for which he was committed, and of which he was convicted, was, in fact, based upon those documents? Upon the genuineness or forgery of the signature. She swore that she did not sign these documents, or sell her cattle and horses to this man Skerrett, and it was upon that she was prosecuted for perjury.
641. To your knowledge, is it customary to convict a person in that way for perjury without producing the documents said to be forged? It is in very rare instances indeed, because the accused labours under great disadvantage, in not having the benefit of the production of the documents

* NOTE (on revision):—Not committed on my prosecution by me as advocate.

† NOTE (on revision):—I did not say this. Skerrett was not put on his trial.

documents to exhibit them to the jury trying the case. It is necessary that they should look at what is alleged to be her signature, and with its semblance of truth or falsehood weigh her testimony. The non-production of these documents was a serious disadvantage to Miss Kelly; and I believe that if the documents had been produced she would not have been convicted. Indeed, I might say with great confidence, as much as we can do in anticipation of the discretion of a jury. J. R. Brennan.
29 Oct., 1862.

642. During your practice in the Colony, have you ever known a case of a similar character? No, never—not a case of perjury based upon the forgery of a document, or upon the genuineness or non-genuineness of a signature to a document, during the whole course of my practice of thirty years.

643. Have you ever seen any of Skerrett's handwriting? I had these forgeries in my hands, and examined them. I think the only way in which the signature could have been copied is, by placing a genuine signature against a window, or some transparent body, and tracing it off. The forgeries were very well done, but some of the characteristics of Miss Kelly's handwriting were not discernible in them.

644. Here is a letter referred to the Committee, signed by Charles Skerrett? I have seen writing by Skerrett much worse than this, and some in a different style. He was a client of mine at one time.

645. Does that writing strike you as being written by a man possessing a considerable amount of facility in penmanship and great freedom in writing? Yes; but I have seen writing of a very different style from him. I do not think I ever saw so many flourishes in his writing. His writing was smaller, and somewhat more regular, with fewer flourishes about it; and his signature to this letter is also somewhat different from some that I have seen of his.

646. There is a sharpness about the letters? This, I should say, is a very naturally written hand—not at all studied; written, I should think, dashingly. There are some peculiar turns of the 'f's, 't's, and 'i's, rather sharp, and something peculiar in the loops.

647. You think the man who could write that style, would be so free with his pen as to alter the style? I do not know that; because we generally find a man who writes in that kind of style, writing it naturally; but I have seen writing of his that was different. There is something very peculiar in the loops of the 'f's and 'i's of the capital letters.

648. Do you not think this would be an excellent lady's style, a little smaller? I do not think it is written by a person who, judging from this handwriting, would have great control over his writing. It does not appear to be a studied, but a natural style of handwriting. Still, I have seen writing of Skerrett's differing very considerably from that of the signature. I believe it is really his writing. I saw his signature in 1851 or 1852. He took a place from Mrs. Terry Hughes, and was carrying on some business in colonial wine and other things.

649. At what time was that? I think in 1852. I have reason to know that it was before 1853.

650. Are you aware at what time he gave that up? He went from there to Major Innes'.

651. Did he go to Melbourne, to the diggings, after he left that, or did he go to Major Innes' first? Well, upon my word, I cannot recollect. I know it was prior to 1853, because I took a partner in 1853, and when I was concerned for him I had no partner. I have seen documents in reference to his tenancy under Mrs. Hughes, when he was engaged in colonial wine operations, distilling, and work of that kind. I know he neither paid Mrs. Terry Hughes nor myself, except £5 or £6 out of £25 or £30; but his wife was in such an apparently destitute situation that, after he went away, I never looked for the money. He went somewhere, but where I cannot recollect, and he left prior to 1853. His wife had a miserable little place near Mrs. Hughes', and when I went, pleaded poverty. After that I never looked for my bill of costs.

652. They were so utterly destitute? They were then.

653. That was some time in 1852? I think so. It might have been in 1851; I cannot recollect the date. It must be before he went to the diggings, I think. I think it was in 1854 that he went to the diggings.

654. In 1854 he bought Miss Kelly's property? Yes, I know that. When I was concerned for him, it was before he went to the diggings, and indeed before the discovery of gold. I know that at the time they were very poor indeed. I have not my papers here, they are up at Maitland, but I came across his papers some time ago. However, I am quite sure it was before he went to the diggings, on reflection. I know he went away, and I found Mrs. Skerrett in such a state of destitution that I told her it was no use my looking for the payment of my bill of costs.

655. You think it was prior to his going to the diggings? I have no doubt about it.

656. That he had the brewery? Yes, and when I was concerned for him professionally.

657. How did he next appear under your notice? The next that I heard of him was that he had gone to Major Innes', and I heard a good deal about colonial wine and distilling there. After that Miss Kelly came to me with her case about these alleged forgeries (and so far as the committal goes, they are proved to be such).

658. Were you concerned in any other but the one case, between Miss Kelly and Skerrett? Two cases; the first prosecution in 1855, for cattle-stealing, when he was convicted and sent to Cockatoo; and I next prosecuted him for these forgeries. I also had private information with reference to the man William Turner (whose evidence you see), and with some difficulty traced him out. When Miss Kelly first consulted me, I told her it would be a difficult case against Skerrett (the forgeries being so inimitably well done), unless we could get that man Turner. I had information of what he knew and swore in evidence; and having set inquiries on foot, I found that he was somewhere on the Dawson River. I obtained a warrant for his apprehension, and he was brought down.

- J. R. Brennan. 659. Was he examined? He was.
660. Where? At the Police Office; but he had made a deposition whilst he was in gaol.
- 29 Oct., 1862. 661. Was he confined upon the warrant you obtained? Yes; he was brought down upon that warrant, charged with aiding and abetting in these forgeries. I was going upon the evidence I had obtained from Mr. and Mrs. Andrews.
662. Joseph Andrews? Joseph, I believe that was his name. He became insolvent.
663. Then Turner was brought from the gaol to the Police Office? After he had made a deposition, he was brought to the Police Office and placed at the bar. I stated to the Magistrate that he had made a deposition, and having put in the deposition, requested that the Bench would examine him, as he had made a full disclosure of how he was induced to give evidence originally in Bungay Bungay. Turner stated that he had done so, and that it was a voluntary information he had given; that he was willing to prove it. He spoke of having been met at Andrews' public-house, and referred to some evidence of Andrews and his wife in corroboration of his statements. He swore that the evidence he gave against Miss Kelly he was induced to give on Skerrett's promise to give him one-half of the cattle and get him a wife—some girl, I forget her name.
664. This was a voluntary information he gave at the Police Office? Quite voluntary, and I was thus led to inform the Magistrates about it, and prepare his affidavit upon the subject.
665. Was Skerrett present at the time? Yes, when he was brought before the Police Court, but not present at the gaol when he made his first deposition.
666. Was any lawyer employed for Skerrett? Two or three different lawyers, at the Police Office.
667. He had an opportunity of cross-questioning Turner? Yes; he did cross-examine him, I believe.
668. By Mr. Morris: Did Turner maintain the same evidence as that he gave in his deposition when in gaol? He was a youth of about eighteen or nineteen years of age, he said, when he made this false deposition, that he made it under a promise from Skerrett that he should get half the cattle, and get this girl as his wife.
669. By the Chairman: Did he use any peculiar expression? He said, what would not a young man do to get a wife.
670. By Mr. Flett: Did you conduct the proceedings at the Police Office in Sydney? I did, against Skerrett for forgery.
671. I mean the proceedings at the Police Office? Yes, I did. The first deposition taken at the Manning River was upon the committal of Skerrett. Then there was the prosecution before the Supreme Court in 1855, which I conducted; and upon these depositions in 1855 Turner gave evidence of his knowledge of the money being passed by Skerrett to Miss Kelly, and that he was a witness to one of the documents. You will find also, that afterwards he never appeared at the Criminal Court on the prosecution of Skerrett, when he was convicted, and remained away until I had him apprehended at the Dawson River, in 1860, and brought down here, when Skerrett was prosecuted for the forgery of these documents—partly upon the evidence of Turner, partly upon that of Andrews and his wife, with other evidence, which you will see.
672. These depositions that we have produced are depositions in the case of Kelly against Skerrett, for forgery? Yes. You will find in the depositions upon which Skerrett was prosecuted and convicted, in 1855, this evidence by Turner, for Skerrett, against Miss Kelly; and you will be able better to understand the nature of the evidence given by Turner in 1860, when I prosecuted him for aiding and abetting in the forgery. That case occupied an immense time in hearing.
673. By Mr. Morris: What was the result of the charge against Skerrett at the Police Office? He was committed for trial.
674. And the Attorney General declined to prosecute? He did.
675. By Mr. Cunneen: Was Turner one of the principal witnesses against Miss Kelly at Bungay Bungay? Yes, he was one of the principal witnesses against her.
676. Are you aware of what was the purport of his evidence against her? From recollection, I think it was that he was present when the £100 notes were passed over for the purchase of the cattle, and when she signed the agreement selling her cattle with a pick of twenty horses.
677. Did he swear he saw Miss Kelly sign the bill of sale? Yes, on the first occasion. It was a document on a sheet of paper, and the purport of it was, that Miss Kelly had agreed to sell him her cattle, I think, for £600—£400 of which was to be paid in cash, and £200 by a promissory note; he was also to have the pick of twenty of her horses. Turner stated that he was present when she signed that agreement, and when the notes were handed over. That was in 1854.
678. By the Chairman: There were two documents, the agreement of sale and receipt, and one a receipt—you might confound the two? Turner was a witness to one or other, if not both.
679. By Mr. Cunneen: He swore at Bungay Bungay that he was a witness to one? To one.
680. When he was apprehended under warrant, at your instance, what did he swear as to his evidence at Bungay Bungay? That it was false.
681. Did he swear he did not see her sign this document? To the best of my recollection he did. I have not seen the documents since Skerrett was committed for trial. Turner's father did not know where he was for a considerable time (so the father said), nor did he know of his running away. I brought down the father also upon the prosecution.
682. By the Chairman: Did Skerrett, at the Police Court, deny that young Turner was the proper person? He said he never saw the man in his life.
683. And you sent up for his father? Yes.

684. And he identified him as the person? Yes.

685. By Mr. Cunneen: Then, when he was in custody under the warrant you obtained, he swore that all he had sworn at Bungay Bungay was untrue—indeed, that he had perjured himself? Yes; he said he was young (eighteen or nineteen), was promised half the cattle if Skerrett succeeded in getting them, and a wife, a girl whose name I do not recollect—I think it was Ann Andrews; she was promised to him as a wife, as he stated.

J. R. Brennan.

29 Oct., 1862.

686. By Mr. Flett: I thought it was one of Skerrett's daughters? I never heard that. He said he was influenced by this offer; he was a lad of eighteen or nineteen, and stated in his depositions where Skerrett met him crossing a river, and first proposed the arrangement, then made an appointment to meet him at Andrews' house; and he states what took place there. That is all in evidence.

687. By the Chairman: Have you got any further statement to make that would throw any light on this obscure subject? From the first day I prosecuted Skerrett until now I have been of the opinion that Miss Kelly was victimised, beyond all doubt. Although Miss Kelly has a rather short and disagreeable temper, yet I always considered her to be a woman of truth, and straightforward and honourable in every respect. I say this, notwithstanding that we fell out about my bill of costs.

688. Have you heard anything that you can satisfactorily state with regard to the character of Skerrett? I consider him one of the worst characters I ever met with; he introduced himself as one of the Skerretts of Scarriff, in the County of Galway, close upon the borders of the County of Clare.

689. Were they respectable? Yes, and he resembled them. I know them to be a highly respectable family, and he was very like them; but I found his character and conduct throughout to be very bad.

690. Did you find out that he was not of that family? No. If he is one of that family it is a very respectable family, and I have no reason to think he is not, because a circumstance he told me led me to believe it; but his conduct all through was very disreputable to himself and his family too.

691. By Mr. Flett: You say this man Turner was taken down at your instance, and lodged in gaol? Yes.

692. When he was in gaol in Sydney, did you see him there? I did.

693. Were any persons present with you at the time of your interview with him? I believe the Magistrate was present when his statement about the matter was made. He intimated his intention of stating the facts, and I think a Magistrate was present when he made the statement in full, and he then said he would consent to have it taken down in writing.

694. That was on the first occasion you had an interview with him? No. The first time was in gaol, in the presence of Mr. Beverley, I think, and Mr. Harrison, the principal turnkey. I never saw Turner by himself, because of his relative position in the matter. I knew from other circumstances, that what he had sworn was not likely to be true, and it made me very cautious.

695. Have you heard since that he made a statement of his reasons for making the statement at the Police Office? No, I never heard of his making any statement; in fact, when he got out of gaol he was closely pursued and watched—so many attempts were made to get him to back out of it again, I am told. He was, I have heard, brought to a certain public-house, and whilst there Reuben Richards attempted to get him round to his former evidence. He said he was afraid to go into Sydney, he was so dogged and watched, and Richards coaxed him to resume his original evidence, and wanted to go for some lawyer for Skerrett. That is the only thing I heard about it.

696. Are you aware where he can be found? His father lives at Dungog.

697. You do not know where the young man lives? No, I have not the slightest idea. He told me, when I wanted him to do fencing, to send to Dungog to his father, who would always find him.

698. By Mr. Morrice: I think you said that Skerrett, in the Police Office, denied the identity of Turner? Yes, and Turner's father was examined as to his identity. He denied it positively, and said, "I never saw that man," Turner being then in the witness-box.

699. I imagine that his father's examination will appear among these papers? Yes; his father was examined as to his identity. I was driven to examine the father, although I could have had other evidence; that, however, was most conclusive, as he could swear to his son better than anyone else. Skerrett positively denied it. I experienced great difficulty in that prosecution, as there appeared to be a prejudice against Miss Kelly, and the Magistrate seemed to be favourably impressed with Skerrett's side of the case. Mr. Scott refused me a warrant upon the most positive swearing. When I went to get the warrant I saw Skerrett in close conversation with Mr. Scott in the room. I said, "I have just come in time; that is the man I want the warrant for."

Mrs. Brandswait called in and examined:—

700. By the Chairman: Your name is Jane Brandswait? Yes.

701. Formerly Miss Jane Skerrett? Yes.

Mrs.
Brandswait.

702. This is a Committee appointed by the Legislative Assembly to inquire into the case of Miss Kelly and your father, Charles Skerrett, and the Committee have thought it well to ask you to attend, to give such evidence as you find to be true as to the questions put to you touching this matter;—your father, I believe, formerly lived in Sydney? Yes.

29 Oct., 1862.

703. At the brewery down at Mrs. Terry Hughes' place, in connection with a person of the name of Vaughan? Yes.

704.

- Mrs. Brandswait. 704. Do you remember what year that was in? No, I do not.
705. Did he afterwards go to the diggings, or was that after he came from the diggings—do you remember? No, he went to Port Macquarie after he left the brewery.
- 29 Oct., 1862. 706. Then he had the brewery after he came from the diggings? No, before he went to the diggings.
707. He had the brewery before he went to the diggings? Yes.
708. How long was he at the diggings on the Melbourne side? I think a couple of years, but I am not sure how long—it is so long since.
709. Do you know in what year he came back? No; but I think it was the latter end of 1853, though I am not sure.
710. You were living at Port Macquarie at that time with Mrs. Skerrett? Yes.
711. What business did Mr. Skerrett enter into then? He went into no business.
712. Did he take some property from a Mr. Atkinson there? Not that I am aware of.
713. Had he anything to do with a vineyard? He took some property from Major Innes—a vineyard.
714. Did he live upon the vineyard? No, he did not.
715. How long did he occupy the vineyard? He never occupied it at all after taking it; he never had possession of it.
716. Do you remember the month during which he arrived at Port Macquarie? No, I do not.
717. Do you remember whether he came up in a sailing vessel or in a steamer from Melbourne, or do you know the name of the vessel? That I could not tell you, but I think it was a sailing vessel.
718. Do you know the month in which he left Melbourne? No.
719. Your father is said to have purchased some cattle from Miss Kelly, in 1854—I have a copy of the agreement before me here, and it is witnessed by you and your sister Margaret;—which of these signatures is yours? The upper one.
720. Did you see Miss Kelly sign this document? Yes.
721. Where was she when she signed it? In her front room.
722. How many rooms are there in the house? I cannot tell exactly. Miss Kelly had two rooms in the house.
723. Was the front room her room? One of them.
724. The one in which she signed this document? Yes.
725. It was Miss Kelly's own room? Yes.
726. And how did you happen to be in her room when it was signed? I was not in the room until I was called in to sign. I was in the garden, in front, and was called in to sign it.
727. And who else was present? My father, Miss Kelly, my sister, and myself were present; there were four people present.
728. You are sure you were present when your sister signed? I believe I was; I am not quite sure about it, but I think I was.
729. And how did your sister happen to be in there? Neither of us was there until we were called in. There was a flower garden in front of Miss Kelly's place, and we were in the garden at the time we were called in to sign.
730. Was your sister called in? I believe she was.
731. Did you both go into the house together? No, I went in first.
732. Did you sign it then? Yes, I did.
733. And did you come out again? Yes, just after signing it.
734. And where was your sister, then, when you came out? I believe she was in the room when I came out.
735. You did not see her sign? No, I do not recollect—it is so long since.
736. Is your sister older or younger than you? Older.
737. By Mr. Morris: How old were you at the time you signed the document? Turned fourteen.
738. By the Chairman: What sort of a place was it upon which you signed this document—what sort of table? It was on a table.
739. What sort of table—a mahogany table? I do not recollect; I did not take that much notice.
740. It was Miss Kelly's furniture? Yes.
741. Was there a table-cover on? I do not recollect now.
742. Do you remember whether your sister remained long in the room after you came out? I do not recollect.
743. At what time do you recollect hearing of your father having purchased these cattle from Miss Kelly? After this.
744. When did you first hear of his having purchased the cattle from her? The first I heard of it was when a man of the name of Findlay, of Brimbin, came to purchase cattle?
745. What was he? He was a farmer.
746. In what position in the room was the table—in the centre of the floor of the room, or near the window? In the centre of the room.
747. And there was a passage all round it? Yes.
748. And where was Miss Kelly at the time you signed? I do not remember where she was; I did not take much notice.
749. Do you remember where your father stood when you signed? I do not.
750. Did Findlay come to purchase cattle from Miss Kelly? Yes, from Miss Kelly.
751. When Findlay came to purchase cattle from Miss Kelly you first heard that your father had purchased the cattle? That was the first public statement I had heard of the cattle cattle being purchased. Miss Kelly sent Findlay to my father, and said she had sold her cattle to him. Findlay came to my father.

752. Was this before or after you signed the document? After.

753. When did you first hear of the purchase? When I signed this document.

754. Did you hear before? I heard that he was going to purchase.

755. Had you ever been present at any treaty or bargain between Miss Kelly and your father previous to the day on which you signed this paper? No, never.

756. You see how necessary it is to show how many rooms there were in the house—try to recollect how many rooms there were? I think there were eight rooms, but I am not sure.

757. And Miss Kelly had two? Yes.

758. It was a large house? The rooms were small, like little kitchens. Some of them were very small. It was like two houses.

759. Was the front room you speak of used as a parlour or sitting-room;—what did you use that front room for? A sitting-room.

760. And did you dine in it? No.

761. And the family came in and out just as they liked? Yes.

762. Mrs. Skerrett was often in that sitting-room? Of course.

763. This was considered an important matter in your family at this time—this purchase of the cattle—a subject that would be much talked of by your sister, yourself, and your father and mother—was it not? I never took much notice of it; I was not allowed to talk about business then; I was not very old at that time.

764. Did you never hear your father and mother talk of this arrangement for the purchase of these cattle previous to your signing this document—talking as man and wife would? I never was much with them. We were not allowed to sit with them much. We had a regular time to go to bed, and did not stop up long. Father and mother used to talk by themselves.

765. What quantity of cattle had your father when he came to Brimbin—had he any? Not that I know of.

766. Had he any stock anywhere else that you know of? No, I do not know that he had any. I do not recollect.

767. You came up from Port Macquarie to Brimbin? Yes.

768. That is about seventy miles—how did you travel? We travelled on horseback.

769. You brought up some furniture? Yes, bedding.

770. How did that come up? It was drawn on a sledge.

771. By bullocks? Yes.

772. What business had your father carried on at Port Macquarie? He had a vineyard.

773. You said he never had possession of it? He had this previous to going to the diggings. He and Major Innes carried on business before going to the diggings.

774. Whose vineyard was it? I believe it belonged to Mr. Stokes.

775. Did he rent it? No, because he and Major Innes were partners.

776. He carried on this vineyard—did he cultivate it? No, he had people to cultivate it.

777. He attended to it? Yes, he made wine.

778. Was that the only business he had at the time he came from the diggings, and previous to going to Brimbin? He had no business. He came from the diggings and went up to the Manning. He bought many horses on the Macleay, and fetched them backwards and forwards between there and Sydney.

779. Your brother went with him? Yes.

780. Your father was then dealing in horses—he was not in any business? No.

781. How long was he engaged in horse dealing? I do not know; I have no idea.

782. But when he came to Brimbin he had no stock or cattle? I do not know.

783. Did he retain the vineyard after he came to Brimbin? No, he entered an action against Major Innes.

784. That was for the leasing of it? Well, he never had possession of it.

785. But we are speaking of the vineyard you said he cultivated? That is the same. When he went to the diggings he gave it up, and when he returned, the vineyard being to let, he took it and paid so much money down.

786. He never had any business with the vineyard after he came from the diggings—he had no business but this horse dealing when he went to Brimbin? No.

787. Where were the windows of this room where you signed the document—how were they placed—did one look into the garden? Yes.

788. Was there any other window than that? Only that one, I think.

789. On which side of the table did you stand when you signed—the side near the window or the opposite side? I cannot recollect.

790. You said you did not know where Miss Kelly stood, where your sister was, nor where your father stood when you signed this paper? I do not recollect it; it is now eight years ago.

791. But you were examined upon this subject many times before? Not on this subject.

792. On the signing of the papers? Yes, but not as to where I and the others stood.

793. What conversation had they about these cattle at the time you signed this paper;—how long were you in the room? Not long.

794. Who called you in? Miss Kelly.

795. By Mr. Morrice: Were you there when the agreement was written out? No.

796. Do you know who wrote it? I believe it is my father's writing.

797. By Mr. W. Forster: Do you say that from what you know of your father's writing? I think it is my father's writing.

798. By Mr. Morris: I think you said, in answer to a question by the Chairman, that your sister is older than you? Yes.

- Mrs. Brandswait. 799. How much older? A couple of years, I think.
- 29 Oct., 1862. 800. Which of you signed the document first, you or your sister? Myself.
801. Is it likely that both of you were in the room when you signed? I believe she was in the room when I came out; I do not think she was in when I signed.
802. Was a lad named Turner present when this paper was signed? No, he was not.
803. Was he at the house at the time? Yes, I believe he was.
804. What was his occupation or work? He was a kind of builder.
805. Was he in the employment of your father? No, in the employ of Miss Kelly.
806. When you witnessed the signature of that bill of sale? Yes, I believe so.
807. Do you remember any other document having been witnessed on the same day that you witnessed Miss Kelly's signature to the bill of sale? No; I had nothing to do with any other document.
808. Do you remember Turner coming into the house to witness any document? No, I do not recollect. But I know he was there.
809. Would you have known that he had witnessed any document with regard to the receipt of money, or the sale of stock, you having but recently witnessed similar documents yourself? I left the room when I had witnessed the document.
810. Would you be kind enough to write the name "Jane Skerrett"? Yes.
811. Were you ever examined as to these matters between your father and Miss Kelly in any Court? Never.
812. Was your sister? I do not recollect. She was examined at the Police Office.
813. By the Chairman: At what school were you taught to write? I have been at several schools.
814. Will you mention them? Mr. M'Guinness', in Port Macquarie; Mr. Simpson's; Mr. Waugh's, in Port Macquarie. I have been to about fifty different schools.
815. Were you ever at a ladies' school? Mrs. Benjamin taught me to write. I have been at several ladies' schools.
816. At what school was your sister brought up? At the same school.
817. All at the same school? No; I have had more schooling than any of them.
818. Was Margaret ever at a ladies' school? Yes; she went to Waugh's, and a lady instructed us in writing.
819. By Mr. Morris: Can your sister write well? No.
820. Can she write as well as you? No, she cannot.
821. By the Chairman: At the time your father was at Cockatoo you had opportunities of visiting him? Yes.
822. How did you obtain these opportunities—you went over with Mr. Forbes, in the police-boat, I suppose? No, I never did, to my recollection; I do not recollect going with Mr. Forbes.
823. But you were several times there? Yes.
824. And how did you go over? In different ways; sometimes by taking a waterman's boat, at other times we have gone by the Police Magistrate's boat. Mr. North was the Visiting Magistrate then.
825. Did you frequently go in Mr. North's boat? Not very frequently; sometimes we used to go in it, to save expense.
826. But had you not to get an order to go? Captain North was Visiting Magistrate, and we had to get an order from him.
827. Did he interest himself in getting your father liberated from the island? No, in no way that I know of.
828. By Mr. W. Forster: Do you recollect fully the circumstances under which you signed these documents—the sort of place you were in? Yes.
829. You say you were called in out of the garden? Yes.
830. You saw Miss Kelly sign? Yes.
831. And was your sister present when she signed it? No, I do not recollect her being in the room.
832. Who was in the room—how many people? My father, Miss Kelly, myself. My sister may have been in the room, but I do not recollect whether she was or not. I recollect Miss Kelly, father, and myself being there.
833. Anyone else? My sister may have been in the room, but I do not recollect.
834. Was it a large room? A good size.
835. As big as this? Not so big as this.
836. Did you sit down to write? I do not recollect whether I was standing or sitting.
837. Were you placed in such a position that your sister could be in the room without your seeing her? She may have been in the room, but I do not recollect now whether she was in the room or not.
838. Did anyone enter the room when you were writing? I am not aware.
839. How long did you remain? About five minutes.
840. And when had you seen your sister before? As I came in she was in the garden, I think; and I did not notice whether she came in too or not.
841. Did you go in on a summons—did some one call you? Yes, Miss Kelly.
842. Did she come into the garden and call you? No, she stood in the verandah.
843. Did she call your sister? The verandah was close to the garden.
844. Were you both standing close together? Yes.
845. What were you doing in the garden? We took a pride in the flower garden, and were attending to it.
846. Miss Kelly came into the verandah and called you in? Yes.
847. Did she call you by your name, and say, "Jane Skerrett, come in"? She called me Jane, and told me I was wanted.

848. Did she tell you for what reason you were wanted? Not till I came inside.
849. Did she call your sister at the same time? She may have called my sister, but I went in before Miss Kelly; she followed me in.
850. You did not hear Miss Kelly call your sister? I do not recollect that now.
851. When you were called you went into the room? Yes.
852. How did you know which room to go into? She had only the one sitting-room.
853. It was Miss Kelly's house, then? It was her sitting-room.
854. If, as you say, she did not tell you what you were wanted for, how did you know what room to go into? I know that when she came out she called me, and I went into her room. We were very intimate with each other.
855. When she called you, and told you you were wanted, although she did not tell you what you were wanted for, you understood you were to go into her room—you had no idea of what you were wanted for? No.
856. You found your father there by himself? Yes.
857. Who told you what you were to do? Miss Kelly and I came in together; she was close behind me when I came in.
858. Did you see her come in? Yes.
859. Did she shut the door? I believe she did.
860. Did you notice whether your sister fetched her or not? I cannot recollect.
861. When Miss Kelly came in, who told you to sign your name? The paper was read.
862. Who read it? Well, I cannot recollect; I think it was Miss Kelly.
863. Are you sure it was Miss Kelly who read it? I will not be sure.
864. When it was read, who told you to sign your name to it, or what was the next proceeding? I was asked to sign it.
865. Was that the very next thing after it was read? After Miss Kelly signed it.
866. She signed it after it was read? Yes.
867. Did she sign it immediately after? I do not recollect.
868. Were you standing in such a position that you could not tell whether your sister was in the room or not? I do not recollect now. It is eight years ago, and I have not thought of the case or anything about it.
869. When Miss Kelly signed, who told you to sign your name as a witness? Well, I do not recollect who asked me to sign it.
870. Did you sign your name very soon after Miss Kelly signed? Just after.
871. You say it took you only about five minutes? Only about five minutes.
872. Did you leave the room immediately? Just after.
873. Where did you go to? I signed it. I do not recollect whether I went into the garden or not.
874. When did you see your sister next, after this? Well, I do not recollect.
875. Did you see her at dinner that day? Of course I did.
876. You did not go into the garden to your sister again then? No, I think I went down the paddock.
877. Did you meet your sister in going out of the room? I did not notice.
878. Do you think you did not see your sister again that day until dinner time? I was in the habit of riding with my brother about the paddocks. He and I were always together.
879. He was not with you in the garden? We used to go riding together.
880. Did you go to look after your brother after you had signed this paper? I do not recollect.
881. When you signed the document did you see your sister's name on the paper? No.
882. Did anyone tell you your sister was to sign it? I do not recollect.
883. When you saw your sister did you talk to her about it? I heard that she had signed it also.
884. Who told you? I heard of it when we were taken to the Police Office.
885. Did you not hear of it before that—that she had signed it? I do not recollect.
886. Did not you and your sister, at any time, talk about both having signed the same document? No.
887. You are positive of that? Not as I remember.
888. Did it go out of your head altogether—did not your father sometimes talk about it? No.
889. Did you never tell your brother that you had signed this document? No, I never thought of it.
890. You never talked to anyone about it? No, I never thought of it.
891. You say you heard that your sister had signed it? When I went to the Police Office.
892. Who told you? I do not recollect.
893. You say your sister does not write as well as you? Not as well as I do now. I think she had the advantage of me in writing at that time.
894. You have improved since? Yes, I have kept a school since.
895. Were you both taught by the same person to write? Yes.
896. Was her writing always considered like yours? Yes, very much. I have letters of hers at home now, written lately, and they are exactly like my writing.
897. You are quite positive you did not sign for your sister? Quite positive.
898. When you went out of the room did you leave a blank under your name? Well, I believe there was. I am not sure about that.
899. Are you sure Miss Kelly did not go out afterwards and call in your sister? I do not recollect whether she was in the room or not.
900. Were any questions of that sort asked you at the Police Office? No, not that I know of.

Mrs.
Brandswait.

- Mrs. Brandswait.
29 Oct., 1862.
901. Was your father in the habit of getting you to sign documents of this sort? No.
902. Was that the only one you ever signed for him? Yes, I believe it is.
903. Did you not think it an odd thing to be called in in that way, and to witness a legal document? To tell you the truth, I did not know much about legal documents or anything else.
904. Did it not frighten you rather? No, I was not frightened.
905. Could not your brother write? No, he was not a good writer.
906. Could he not write as good as your writing? No.
907. Was he younger than you? Yes, much younger.
908. Your father did not teach you to write? No.
909. When signing this document, were you aware of the importance of the act you were doing—that is, signing a legal document you might be called upon afterwards to attest,—was anything told you about it? Not that I recollect.
910. Did you not know you were doing a very important act at the time? I might have been told it, but I took no notice of it.
911. On what sort of terms were your father and Miss Kelly at that time? On very intimate terms.
912. You called each other by Christian names? Yes, she always called me Jane, and I always addressed her as Miss Kelly.
913. You never had any disagreement with her up to that time? No, not that I am aware of.
914. Nor your father? Not that I am aware of.
915. Were you aware that she was selling the cattle to your father? I heard something of it.
916. You say you rode about with your brother;—whose horses did you ride? My brother's.
917. Not your father's? No, my brother's.
918. Had you not two horses—you say your brother rode? We were not particular, both rode on one if we had not two.
919. Had not your father many horses? Not that I am aware of.
920. Were they not Miss Kelly's horses that you rode? I never rode a horse of Miss Kelly's in my life.
921. But after this sale of cattle and horses, did you not ride some of those that had been hers? No.
922. Had she not some riding horses? I think she had two, I am not sure.
923. After this transaction, did your father treat the cattle and horses as his own property? I believe he did.
924. Did you consider them as his property after this document was signed—did he do as he liked with them, as if they were his property? Yes.
925. How long did Miss Kelly live in the house with you after this? A good bit. She came up here at the time she was committed.
926. At that time was Miss Kelly on good terms with your father? Yes.
927. Did they fall out after the committal? No, after she came back from Sydney.
928. And during that time he treated the cattle and horses as his property? Yes.
929. And you were led to believe they were his property? I always thought they were.
930. Have you ever seen Miss Kelly write? No, I have not seen her write much.
931. Is this like her usual signature? Well, I do not know; if I saw it I do not think I should know it.
932. Did she never write to you? She never had occasion.
933. Did she never write to your father at all? I think there were some letters came after she got out of the trouble.
934. Do you know a man named Andrews, who lived near you at that time? Yes.
935. How far was his place from yours at that time? Well, I could not say—about twenty miles.
936. Was it possible for your father to procure witnesses to this document in the neighbourhood, without employing you? It was possible.
937. There was William Turner on the place? Yes.
938. Were there not boys who could sign instead of you? I do not recollect anyone in the place.
939. Not in the neighbourhood? Not nearer than six or seven miles.
940. There were plenty of people within six or seven miles? I believe so.
941. Could not they have been called in as witnesses? We knew very few on the Manning.
942. Did she afterwards acknowledge that she had sold the horses and cattle to your father, by word of mouth? I heard her tell a servant man and woman that she did not want them any more.
943. Were they living in the house at the time? Yes, with Miss Kelly.
944. You heard her tell the man? That she would not want them any more.
945. And did she give a reason? She said something about the cattle.
946. Did she say she had sold her cattle? I believe she did.
947. You understood her to mean that she did not want their services any more, as she had disposed of the cattle and horses? I believe so.
948. Did she dismiss them? She turned them over to us.
949. Could they read and write? Yes.
950. And could not they have been called in as witnesses? They were not on the premises at the time the woman was there.
951. Where was the man? I do not know where he was.
952. Did you know your father, after this transaction, to sell any of these cattle to anyone? Several.

953. Are you aware whether Miss Kelly knew of them being sold? I am not aware; these are matters in which I was entirely unconcerned. Mrs. Brandswait.
954. By Mr. Morris: Do you remember whether, on the day that you witnessed this document, William Turner was at the house? I believe he was. 29 Oct., 1862.
955. Was he employed about the house previous to, or subsequent to, that time? No, I believe not.
956. He was there only casually? That is all.
957. Where was he employed by Miss Kelly? At Mount George.
958. How far was that away? I do not know.
959. Were many persons in the habit of visiting the place where you resided? Not many.
960. Can you remember whether Turner was there that day or not? I believe he was there that day, but I do not state it positively.
961. Do you remember whether he came that day or some days previous? I do not remember whether he came the night before or that day.
962. Did he leave that day? I cannot recollect.
963. Do you know his father? Yes.
964. Was he there? Well, I do not remember whether he was or not.
965. Do you remember anything particular with regard to the day on which you signed, other than witnessing this signature of Miss Kelly;—can you remember whether it was on a Saturday, a Friday, or a Monday? No, I do not recollect that.
966. Had you domestic servants in the house, or did you do the domestic duties yourselves? We did them ourselves until we had the servant from Miss Kelly.
967. Which was subsequent to this document being signed and witnessed? Yes, afterwards.
968. Did you see any money pass from your father to Miss Kelly? No, I did not. I was not in the room long after signing the document.
969. You saw no money lying on the table, or in your father's hands, or in Miss Kelly's hands? No, I did not notice any money at all.
970. By the Chairman: It seems strange that you cannot call to mind a most important matter, as to who read the paper; you remember Miss Kelly calling you in, and your father being in the room, but you cannot remember who read the paper? No, I do not recollect: if I said I could I should tell an untruth.
971. Where is Mr. Skerrett now? At home.
972. Is he able to stand an examination? No.
973. By Mr. Morris: Where is your sister? Mrs. Cairn is on the Manning River.
974. By Mr. Cunneen: Did you see Miss Kelly sign the document—did she sign it in your presence? Yes.
975. Can you say whether your sister had seen the document before you? My signature was the first.
976. And you saw Miss Kelly sign? Yes.
977. You did not see your sister sign? I do not recollect her signing.
978. Do you know whether your sister saw Miss Kelly sign it? I do not remember whether she was in the room or not.
979. Are you aware whether your sister saw Miss Kelly sign the document? I do not remember.
980. Do you think she did? I do not know whether she did or not.
981. If she was not in the room she could not have seen her sign it? Of course not.
982. By Mr. Morris: At what time of the day did you witness the signature—before or after dinner? I believe it was before dinner, but I am not sure.
983. Can you carry your memory back so as to recollect the time? No, it is eight years ago.
984. When Turner came from Mount George to your place, did he ride or walk? He came on horseback.
985. By Mr. Cunneen: You do not recollect whether it was before or after dinner that you signed the document? No, I do not.
986. I understood you to state that you met your sister at dinner? Then I suppose it was before dinner; but I do not recollect whether it was or not.
987. By Mr. W. Forster: Used your sister and you to be together at night? I never slept with my sister.
988. You never remember talking to your sister about it? No, I do not remember.
989. By Mr. Morrice: I think I understood you to say, that both you and your sister were called in to sign the document? No, I said she may have been called, but I did not notice it; and I do not recollect whether she was or not.
990. You did not hear whether she was called in? I do not recollect whether she was called in or not. Miss Kelly might have called her, but I do not recollect now.
991. By Mr. W. Forster: You did not see your sister sign the document? No.
992. By Mr. Cunneen: If your sister had signed it after you left the room, it would be impossible for your sister to see Miss Kelly sign it? My sister might have been in the room; I do not recollect whether she was or not.
993. By Mr. Morrice: Did you and your sister have any conversation that day after the documents were signed? No.
994. She never mentioned it to you? She may have done so, but I do not remember whether she did or not.

The Hon. J. F. Hargrave, M.L.C.
5 Nov., 1862.

to have from you was, whether the absence of these documents, upon which the case was based, prejudiced Miss Kelly's defence? I know nothing about Miss Kelly's trial at all. It is impossible to recollect the circumstances of one out of the many criminal cases I have had to peruse and conduct.

1003. But I apprehend you would consider that, at any trial of this sort, the production of the documents upon which the charge was based was essentially necessary; she swears she did not sign these papers, and the charge is, that in so swearing she committed perjury;—the information the Committee desire is, whether, in your capacity as Attorney General, you would consider it necessary to have papers of this sort produced upon the trial? It depends entirely upon the particular allegation or assignment of perjury. If the perjury related to such a document not being in her handwriting, of course, as a general rule, that document must be produced. Without reference to this particular case, I would say, that if the perjury relates to a written document—if that is part of the information—you must produce that written document.

1004. By Mr. Harpur: With reference to the celebrated pamphlet, written by Lord Somers, that you allude to, was not that an elaborate argument in favour of the preliminary investigation and decision of criminal cases being conducted by the Grand Jury, in preference to an officer nominated by the Crown exercising those functions? It was a long pamphlet relating to the rights of Grand Juries to refuse to put a man on his trial without being accountable to anyone for their reasons. It is many years since I read it, but that point has been always fully impressed on my mind.

1005. In opposition to having those duties performed by an officer of the Crown? That was one part of it.

1006. His arguments on that point having, at that day, peculiar force? I believe it has always been considered in England, by the best authorities, to be better to have Grand Juries to deal with such matters, though I am aware Lord Campbell and other lawyers prefer the practice of Crown Prosecutors.

1007. By Mr. Cunneen: I understood you to say that you never assign any reasons why you decline to prosecute? Never. I think I should be doing wrong if I did. I thought the matter over very much, when it first became my duty to deal with such matters, and I came to the conclusion that I was bound to follow the precedent of the Grand Jury in England, who never assign reasons, and are not obliged to do so.

1008. In informing Benches of Magistrates that you do not intend to prosecute, do you not assign any reasons? Not where I decline to prosecute. When I see that some of the evidence is not fully set forth I direct a prosecution; and sometimes correspondence takes place with the Magistrates to confirm such and such evidence, and if it is confirmed then the prosecution will go on; but if it turns out that the depositions are wrong in that respect, then I decline to prosecute; but the invariable practice, and one which I found existing when I came into office, is simply to decline to prosecute on the depositions themselves, which have been taken in the presence of the accused person.

1009. I perceive by the documents which I hold in my hand that that was not the practice of your predecessor, Mr. Wise; he appears to have assigned reasons why he did not prosecute? I was not aware of it. (Minute by Mr. Wise, in the case of Regina v. Skerrett, for horse-stealing, handed to witness.) This is hardly assigning a reason why he declines to prosecute, but stating that the parties have a civil remedy. That I have done myself in some cases. I do not think any Attorney General would give reasons for declining to prosecute.

1010. By the Chairman: Did I correctly understand you to state that it was necessary, in a prosecution such as Miss Kelly underwent for perjury based on forgery, that the documents alleged to be forged should be produced? If the indictment alleges perjury with reference to a written instrument, that written instrument, in all probability, must be produced.

1011. By Mr. Forster: Is it not the practice, that where you are obliged to have recourse to secondary evidence, you give it less weight in proportion to the importance of the issue—if a man's life, for instance, was concerned, would you not be more delicate in depending on secondary evidence than where it was a mere question of property? Yes, certainly. The great rule is, that in all criminal cases the Crown is bound to prove everything, and the prisoner has the benefit of the doubt; but in civil proceedings the doubt is decided by the weight of evidence. If we were obliged to give secondary evidence of a written document alleged to be forged, though possibly it might be admissible, still I never heard of such secondary evidence being admissible in such a trial; and I should think that the secondary evidence would materially weaken the chance of a verdict.

1012. By Mr. Morris: In the particular case, however, referred to, Miss Kelly was indicted for perjury, alleged to have been committed on the trial of Skerrett for cattle-stealing, and no doubt the case principally turned on the forged documents, but these documents were not specially put forward in the indictment? The essence of the indictment for perjury would be the false swearing in open Court as to matters of fact, and probably there were other assignments of perjury than those which depended on the forged documents. A witness who perjures himself as to one point will probably perjure himself as to more points, both before and after.

1013. By Mr. Cunneen: When a person is indicted for perjury, and there are different allegations in the indictment, is it competent for a jury to find a verdict on any particular allegation, or must they do so upon the whole? They may find him guilty upon any one of the facts of perjury assigned in the indictment. They would state on which allegation they found him guilty, and would acquit on the others, and the entry in the Court book, or the Judge's notes, would show on which of them the verdict was returned.

1014. On the allegation that Miss Kelly swore these signatures were forgeries when they were not so, do you not think that, in order to enable the jury to come to a conclusion upon that, it was very important that these documents should be before the Court? I should think it was indispensable. I cannot conceive of a Judge admitting secondary evidence in an indictment for perjury, in reference to a forged document which was missing. When a case turns upon a document of this kind it ought to be produced.

The Hon. J. F.
Hargrave,
M.L.C.
5 Nov., 1862.

Peter Faucett, Esq., M.P., examined:—

1015. By the Chairman: We have asked you to come to this Committee, believing that you were present in Court when Charles Skerrett was tried for cattle-stealing, in 1855? I was present, I remember, at a portion of the proceedings—rather a considerable portion of the proceedings. I had been subpoenaed on the part of Miss Kelly, to produce one or two letters I had received from her some time before, as I understood, for the purpose of comparing the signatures with her alleged signature as it appeared to some documents, either produced, or intended to be produced, at the trial. I was, however, not called, and the letters I had with me, consequently, were not produced. But I think I was in the Court during a considerable portion of the case for the Crown against Skerrett, and I am almost sure I was in Court during the entire, certainly during the greater part, of the defence—that is, while the evidence was being given for the defendant on that occasion.

P. Faucett,
Esq., M.P.
5 Nov., 1862.

1016. Was there anything peculiar in the nature of that evidence, or the manner in which it was given, that struck you at the time—the evidence for the defendant, I mean? Yes, it struck me most forcibly, that several of the witnesses brought forward by Skerrett so glaringly contradicted themselves and one another, that I myself had not the slightest doubt they were committing perjury. There were two or three children—I think two young girls, daughters of Skerrett, that were examined as witnesses on his behalf, and I was at the time clearly under the impression, from the manner in which they gave their evidence, and the efforts they made to evade the questions put to them on cross-examination, that there was not the slightest doubt they were telling a story that had been prepared beforehand. I scarcely ever knew a case in which I formed so strong an opinion as to witnesses giving false evidence as on that occasion. I am unwilling, as a general rule, to form an opinion on matters of that kind; but in that instance the manner of the witnesses, and their statements altogether, were of such a kind, that I was forced into the opinion I have stated.

1017. Then the impression on your mind would be, that Skerrett was properly convicted? That is a question I cannot form an opinion upon, because I did not weigh all the evidence.

1018. The conviction turned, I think, upon the validity of Miss Kelly's signature to documents purporting to be a sale of the cattle from her to Skerrett? I rather think so; I think the case was rather a complicated one.

1019. Skerrett, if you remember, put in papers purporting to be a purchase and sale of these cattle for stealing which he was tried? He put in some papers, and I think his daughters were called for the purpose of proving that these papers were signed by Miss Kelly, and witnessed, if I do not mistake, by one or two of these girls. That is my recollection, but I have not seen the documents, and have not turned my attention to the matter since.

1020. After Skerrett had served four years of his sentence he was pardoned, and he then brought Miss Kelly up before the Court for perjury;—one of the charges was, that she had denied her signature to the documents that were before the Court on Skerrett's trial; the documents, however, were not produced, the Judge having got them out of the Record Office, and mislaid them somewhere;—is it customary to try people for perjury, based on forgery, without the production of the forged papers? I understand the question you put to be this: Whether it is customary to indict a person for perjury, the document on which the perjury is charged not being forthcoming. As to its being customary, I should say that, in my opinion, it is not; and to explain why I say so, I would merely say that I am not aware of any instance of the kind, except this instance of Miss Kelly's. And I would further say, if I were asked my opinion, that I think it would be a most dangerous proceeding, for a variety of reasons. One, which would strike anyone, would be, that any person would be liable to be charged, on the evidence of any two persons, with perjury, on the statement that the document was lost or destroyed, and there would be no means of comparing the handwriting on the supposed document with the handwriting of the accused; or it might be that the document was forged for the purpose of founding the charge, and then there would be no means of comparing the handwriting of the document with the handwriting, possibly, of the witnesses themselves, who might have forged it. I was not personally cognizant of the circumstances of that trial of Miss Kelly's; but having read of the matter, and having been to some extent obliged to consider it in reference to proceedings before Parliament at different times, I thought the proceeding was unusual, if not unprecedented, and, in my opinion, a most dangerous proceeding. Perhaps I might be allowed to add, that I, of course, admit that circumstances might arise, where a charge of perjury might properly be brought and sustained, in the absence or loss of the document on which the perjury was assigned, to use the legal term. I can easily imagine that circumstances might arise, in which it would be desirable, for the ends of justice, to bring forward such a charge, and circumstances under which it might be sustained.

1021. You state that you have had letters from Miss Kelly, and I presume you are acquainted with her signature? I could not say I am acquainted with her signature. It is very long ago since I had those letters. They referred, I think, to public matters. In fact, I recollect that one was in reference to appointing this very man (Skerrett) as a Magistrate of the territory. It was some short time after I arrived here that I had the pleasure of meeting Miss Kelly, and she, supposing I had much greater influence than I possessed, requested me to use whatever influence I had, to get Skerrett appointed a Magistrate. Knowing nothing about Skerrett, being but very slightly acquainted with Miss Kelly, and having no influence, that I was aware of, I adopted the only course I thought the proper one at the time. I called upon the then Attorney General—Mr. Plunkett—and placed the letter before him as a letter from Miss Kelly, whom he must have known better than I did, stating, at the same time, that I knew nothing about Mr. Skerrett, and of course could not interfere in any way, but that I merely placed the letter in his hands, to act on as he chose. Mr. Plunkett, I believe, suggested to me to make inquiries, and I really forget what the result was; but as the event proved, Skerrett turned out to be a person of such a character that no one would think of suggesting his name to be placed in the Commission of the Peace. I afterwards received a letter from Miss Kelly, in reference to some other matter—I think some proceeding before the Bench—but I have no clear recollection of her handwriting. These letters, I may say, I tore up since the trial of Skerrett. They were utterly unimportant. I may also mention, that I think Miss Kelly stated in one of these letters, or about that time, that Skerrett had just gone to her part of the country.

having

1022. By Mr. Forster: Were you in any way acquainted with the business relations existing between Miss Kelly and this Mr. Skerrett? No, not in any way, except from these proceedings. I had heard some conversation, I believe, from others on the subject, but nothing that could give me any direct information.

1023. You never heard anything from Miss Kelly which led you to think that any partnership was existing between them? I have some recollection of Miss Kelly having said to me, in conversation, or in one of the letters I refer to, that Skerrett had bought, or was about to buy, her cattle and station—something of that kind. I rather think it was in one of the letters that something of that sort was said.

1024. You do not possess those letters now? No, I tore them up.

1025. You know nothing more than this? No. I have very little doubt that in one of the letters, or in conversation with Miss Kelly, it was mentioned that Skerrett was dealing with her about the purchase, if they had not finally concluded a sale, of her cattle, and that she broke it off, or endeavoured to break it off, finding out his character, or finding that he was unable to pay. I have some impression of that kind, and that impression is rather strong. I think she was endeavouring to get out of that part of the country at the time, and on the foundation of his having bought her cattle and stations, or being about to buy them, she wrote the letter to me about the appointment of Skerrett as a Magistrate, there being but a very small number of Magistrates in that district at the time. Another circumstance struck me as rather curious. I now recollect that in the letter, one of the grounds of her wishing this man to be appointed a Magistrate was, that he was a Roman Catholic. I have a recollection now of that being mentioned in the letter, and it struck me at the time as being rather a strange reason in this country. The Chief Justice, I may also say, made some very strong remarks upon the evidence produced in Skerrett's defence, either during his charge to the jury, or when he was sentencing Skerrett—most probably at the latter period. There was also something peculiar about this man Turner. I see the name here (referring to a paper on the table.) If I do not mistake, I was engaged at the Police Office afterwards in the prosecution of Skerrett for forgery, and some person was produced who said he was the William Turner mentioned in the proceedings. He was apparently a young man, and certainly swore very positively that he was the person, and I think the evidence will show that he mentioned that he was induced by Skerrett, for some reason or other, to go away. But I have a strong impression that the cross-examination was directed expressly to prove that he was not the same person at all that he represented himself to be. That was the defence, as to that part of the evidence, that Skerrett set up—that this man was not the Turner that he represented himself to be.

The Rev.
T. O'Reilly.

7 Nov., 1862.

1026. By the Chairman: You are a Church of England Minister? Yes.

1027. This is a Committee of inquiry into the case of Miss Kelly, arising out of the trial of a man named Charles Skerrett;—did you know Skerrett at Port Macquarie? I did.

1028. How long did you know him there? I think he was at Port Macquarie about eighteen months or two years—I am not quite sure as to the time.

1029. Did you know him all the time he was there? I knew very little of him; he was a person I very seldom came in contact with.

1030. Do you remember what business he carried on? I do not know that he carried on any business, except that he was employed by Major Innes, and living in one of his houses, where he had the selling of wine. I do not know what processes he was required to allow the wine to go through, but he was employed in that way by Major Innes, at a place called Clifton, a mile and a half from Port Macquarie.

1031. What circumstances was he in? I cannot pretend to say. I believe he was in very low circumstances indeed when he came down. I am under the impression that he was quite destitute.

1032. What character did he bear? Nearly as bad as it is possible for any man to bear. I never heard of a redeeming trait in his character.

1033. You would be surprised, I imagine, to hear that he had at that time £600? Of course I cannot pretend to know what the man's circumstances were, but I had no idea he was possessed of any money.

John

John Williams, Esq., called in and further examined:—

1034. By the Chairman: You have some papers which you have been requested to produce? I have here the depositions taken at Bungay Bungay, apparently in October, 1854, in the case of the Queen against Charles Skerrett, for horse-stealing, on the information of Miss Kelly. (Produced.)
1035. We only desire, I think, a copy of the evidence of Margaret Skerrett in that case? (Deposition produced, and copy handed in. Vide Appendix.)

APPENDIX.

Margaret Skerrett, being duly sworn, states:—I am a daughter of the defendant, Charles Skerrett, and am going on for seventeen years of age.

By Prisoner: I see my name to the paper I now hold in my hand; it is dated 6th of June, 1854, and numbered 2. I witnessed this agreement between Miss Kelly and my father. I saw Miss Kelly sign it; I saw Miss Kelly take it back again after signing it. You said to Miss Kelly you would rather that somebody else had witnessed to the payment of the money. I saw no money paid.

By Mr. Mullen: The document was written in Miss Kelly's front room. The signatures of the parties signing were all done at the same time, and with the same ink. Miss Kelly, my father, my sister and myself, were the only parties in the room. My father and another man, named Turner, were about the place; also, Ann Andrews, now present. My father has not spoken to me about this case before coming to Court, only about my having signed the paper; he told me I had only to speak about signing the paper. I have only once seen Miss Kelly branding cattle at Brimbin after the agreement was signed; no other cattle could have been branded there without my knowledge. Miss Kelly took back the paper because father said he would rather have some one else to witness the payment of the money. My father made use of some of the stock shortly before Miss Kelly left; I don't know anything about one particular bullock that was killed—four bullocks have been killed since we have been at Brimbin. I cannot say whether there was any specific agreement between Miss Kelly and my father about those bullocks; I was not in the room when the agreement was drawn up—Miss Kelly called me in to witness it. I was not present when Miss Kelly cautioned my father not to remove any of the cattle. I was present in the room when Miss Kelly signed the paper; she was sitting down when she signed it. When she got up I sat down, and used the same pen and ink—it was immediately after she signed it. I saw my sister sign it also; she signed it before I did.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

The Honorable John Hubert Plunkett, Esq., M.L.C., examined:—

1036. By the Chairman: Do you remember the trial of Charles Skerrett for cattle-stealing, in 1855, from Miss Kelly? Yes, I have a distinct recollection of the trial.

1037. The trial, I believe, was based upon the alleged forgery of a document of this description (handing certain papers to the witness.) These documents purport to be memoranda of the sale of these cattle by Miss Kelly to Skerrett, which Miss Kelly denied having signed? I believe the case turned a good deal upon whether certain documents were forged documents or not; but the case came before me, as Attorney General, in the ordinary way from the Police Office—I forget now what Police Office, it is so long ago—and the indictment was for cattle-stealing. Then the further question came before the jury, whether it was a stealing of cattle or not. If these documents put forward were not forgeries, but an agreement between Miss Kelly and Skerrett, of course there was no stealing, and the case would fall to the ground. According to my recollection of the case that was what it hinged upon.

1038. It hinged upon the validity of the documents that were put forward at the time? I think very much. I recollect it was a very long trial; it commenced early in the day, continued through the night, and did not terminate until a very late hour, or rather an early hour on the following morning—three or four in the morning.

1039. Do you remember if Skerrett was found guilty? He was found guilty.

1040. Do you remember the Judge's sentence—his sentence was ten years? I have no distinct recollection of that; when the case was out of my hand I thought no more of it. Skerrett's defence was based upon these documents, and some of his family—his daughters—

1041. Were brought up as witnesses to prove the validity of them? Yes; I think one or two of his daughters, and a very young boy, were examined as witnesses. I recollect that I had a very painful feeling at seeing the exhibition these children made in Court.

1042. I suppose you were under the impression that they were not telling the truth? The jury found that they did not tell the truth.

1043. Was there anything remarkable in the manner in which they gave their evidence? I cannot bear all the details in my recollection, but I recollect that I had to reply upon the whole evidence, and I made the usual observations that the evidence called for in the case, as I was in the habit of doing in all cases that required a reply, but it was out of my mind after that. I considered, and I consider up to the present time, that no prisoner ever arraigned at the bar of justice had a fairer trial. I further remember, that five or six months after the trial took place I received a note from the Chief Justice, putting a question (he was the Judge who tried the case) whether I had any reason to alter my mind respecting the the fairness and propriety of the verdict in Skerrett's case, as his family were urging him upon the point. That made me revert to the whole of the case, and I wrote back to the Chief Justice to say that I had again considered the case, and thought a fairer trial had never taken place. That confirmed the circumstances in my mind.

1044. I understood you to say that was about five months after the conviction? Some time after—within the year. I considered the jury that sat upon that case a highly intelligent jury, and it was entirely a jury question.

1045. Some four or five years after, Skerrett was liberated and pardoned, and, I believe, as soon as he was pardoned, he took advantage of these papers and had Miss Kelly brought up for perjury? So I heard, and I was very much surprised to hear it.

1046. I believe it was assumed at the trial that it was fully proved that she had given a bill of sale —? I recollect, at the trial, that there was one point that was not entirely satisfactory.

1047. At the trial of Skerrett? At the trial of Skerrett. I think it appeared, according to Miss Kelly's case, that Skerrett came from Sydney, and told her at the Manning River that her agents, some auctioneers in Sydney —

1048. Rich, Langley, and Butchart? Yes, that they had sold all her cattle. She expressed her astonishment, I think, that they should have sold all to Skerrett; and said that she did not give them authority to sell some part. I forget what passed now; but, however, from the price he stated he had given, she expressed herself satisfied with his representation, but objected, until she got advices from her agents of the sale and the payment of the money, to give him possession of the cattle, which he pressed her very much to do. Upon this point one of the firm—I forget which, perhaps two of them, or perhaps all—were summoned on, I think, the part of the Crown, to give evidence, and they were called.

1049. I think it was on the part of the defence? I think they were also called for the Crown; however, that I cannot be certain of at this distance of time, but I was very desirous that one of them should appear, and was very much disappointed that they did not appear, because it could then have been ascertained how far Skerrett had told the truth to Miss Kelly, or otherwise; but they did not answer to the summons, and the case went to the jury without the evidence of any one from that firm; and I thought that the only unsatisfactory part in the whole case.

1050. The point that I was desirous of having your evidence upon was, when Miss Kelly was put upon her trial for this perjury, would her case be damaged by the non-production of these alleged forgeries? I know nothing about the trial for forgery; I was not in office at the time. I am a stranger to all that, and could hardly give an opinion; but if the question were one of forgery or no forgery, it could hardly be satisfactorily determined without the production of the document said to have been forged.

1051. By Mr. Stewart: You were not Attorney General at the time Miss Kelly was put upon her trial? No; I was Attorney General when Skerrett was prosecuted in 1855, but I ceased to hold office after the inauguration of Responsible Government.

1052. Then nothing came to your knowledge to lead you to suppose the conviction of Skerrett was improper, during the period you were in office? No, it passed through my hands, like a hundred, or perhaps a thousand, other trials that I had no interest in more than in assisting in the proper administration of justice; and, so far as my judgment led me to believe, it was as fair a trial and as proper a conviction as ever took place.

1053. There was nothing unsatisfactory in it, excepting the non-appearance of one of the firm? That was the only point that was not quite satisfactory to my mind. I have this recollection, that I thought Skerrett was very ably defended by Mr. Holroyd. I think, according to my recollection, that there was something said about Mr. Rich or Mr. Langley, whichever it was, being absent—it was afterwards I heard of it—and that he said the Crown Solicitor gave him leave to go away. The Crown Solicitor summoned him, but said he did not want him as a Crown witness, as the case for the Crown was then closed, and that, so far as he was concerned, he could go away. Whether there was an application to have the case postponed on that ground I do not recollect, but I think it was considered desirable on all hands that the case should be gone through—that there should be no adjournment till the case was ended, as the jury could not separate. I think it was the wish of the jury. It was a very long trial, and I had to speak to the evidence at some length at two or three in the morning, after a very tiresome day.

1054. The conviction of Miss Kelly afterwards for perjury, would, in effect, be a reversal of the judgment then come to—her trial and conviction upon the documents that were produced was tantamount to an acknowledgment that he was improperly convicted? I think it would not follow conclusively in a trial for perjury; if the prisoner could give evidence for himself, his family, who were not believed by the former jury, came in aid of him, Miss Kelly's mouth would be closed.

1055. By the Chairman: The Chief Justice, in his evidence before a former Committee, says this trial was virtually a trial for forgery, although under the form of a trial for cattle-stealing? So I said, that it hinged very much upon that; in fact it was so much so, that if the jury had not convicted him of stealing, he would have been open to an indictment for forgery.

1056. By Mr. Stewart: The jury, at the time of the conviction of Skerrett, must have been satisfied that these documents were forged? I think, when they delivered in their verdict, they stated expressly upon that point, that they were satisfied the documents produced were forgeries, and that the witnesses—that is, the children—did not tell the truth. Whether the question was put to them by the Chief Justice, who tried the case, I do not recollect, but I have a distinct recollection of their finding that expressly. After the trial I knew nothing of Skerrett at all, but I had great sympathy with his family, under such circumstances, and his family—his wife and daughters—used to come to my wife to try to get her to interfere on Skerrett's behalf. I always made it a point that my wife should never speak speak to me upon any matters of that kind, and I requested that she would not do so, and that she would not allow these people to see her at all; but they absolutely persecuted my wife, and called at my house to urge my wife, for a considerable time, to induce me to do something for the father. I had a great deal of sympathy for the family, who suffered so much from the fault of the father; but I was so well satisfied that the verdict was a just and proper one, that I never moved in the matter in any way. When I got the note from the Chief Justice, that I before alluded to, I attributed it to the same sort of pressure upon him.

The Hon.
J.H. Plunkett,
Esq., M.L.C.

12 Nov., 1862.

1057. If you had felt any doubt of the case, your sympathy would have led you to make further inquiry? Yes. In any case where I felt any doubt I made it a conscientious point to confer with the Judge, to be satisfied upon the matter one way or other; but I never had any doubt in this case at all.

1058. By the Chairman: Do you remember a person named William Turner being absent from the trial, who was said to be the witness to this paper? Yes; I recollect there was a witness of that name, respecting whom inquiry was made, in order to have him as a witness for the Crown, but he had absconded from the country, and there was no account of him.

Mr. Thomas Findley called in and examined:—

1059. By the Chairman: This is a Committee of the Assembly to inquire into the allegations of a petition from Isabella Mary Kelly—one of the Committee thought you knew something of the matters referred to, and at his suggestion you have been summoned to attend;— have you anything you desire to say in the case? Yes. I went over to Brinbin in 1854, in June, with a friend of mine who wanted to purchase some cattle, Mr. Angus Cameron. I saw Miss Kelly at her residence at Brinbin, and made my business known to her. She said she was sorry she could not sell any of her cattle, as she had already disposed of them to Mr. Skerrett, but that she would recommend me as a customer to be supplied with beef by him. I went over to her place a short time after that, and met Skerrett on the road. I did not know him at that time, but when I was told it was Skerrett, I asked him if Miss Kelly had recommended me as a customer to be supplied with beef from, and he said no, she had not mentioned my name, only Mr. Moylan; that is all I have to state.

Mr. T. Findley.

12 Nov., 1862.

1060. By Mr. Flett: You say you went to purchase cattle from Miss Kelly, as usual? No, I had not bought any before.

1061. Did Miss Kelly tell you distinctly she had sold all her cattle to Skerrett? Yes.

1062. You believed what she stated at the time? I had no hesitation in believing it; I had not the least doubt of it.

1063. Is it your own belief that the sale was a bonâ fide one? It always struck me so.

1064. Have you heard the opinion of the people of the Manning? They are all of the same opinion, mostly.

1065. That it was a bonâ fide sale? I had no hesitation at the time in believing that it was a bonâ fide sale.

1066. By Mr. Stewart: You said just now that you had not bought cattle from Miss Kelly? No; I went over with a friend to buy them for the first time.

1067. Have you had any dealings? Never so much as sixpence passed between us. She said she could not dispose of these cattle to me, for she had already disposed of them to Skerrett, but that she would recommend me as a customer to be supplied with beef.

1068. By Mr. Forster: Are you a resident on the Manning? Yes.

1069. Do you know anything of Skerrett and his family? No, I do not, except from seeing him pass by.

1070. You have never had any conversation with him? No, except in giving him a drink of water, or a light for his pipe, when he has passed by.

1071. Do you know Miss Kelly? I knew Miss Kelly when she was at Mount George; I was once in her house, but I never had any dealings with either of the parties.

1072. Do you know anything of the character Skerrett bore in the district? Latterly he did not bear a very good one, but whether it was true or not I could not say. I had no acquaintance with him further than I have said.

1073. Were you aware of any other sales being effected to anyone else? No.

1074. I mean either by Skerrett or by Miss Kelly? Skerrett sold some cattle to Charley Turner.

1075. At that time? No, afterwards.

1076. Are you aware of the circumstances? No.

1077. You merely heard it? I merely heard it.

1078. Do you know anything of a man named William Turner? Yes, I have seen him once or twice, but I have no acquaintance with him.

1079. There were two Turners, I believe? Yes, father and son.

1080. Were they long in the district? That I cannot say; not very long.

1081. Do you know when they left it? No, I do not.

1082. By Mr. Morris: Are you sure as to the date when you went to Miss Kelly's? It was in 1854, in June.

1083. Are you sure it was in June? Yes.

1084. How are you sure it was June—what fixes it upon your memory—did you make any note of it? From memory; I do all my things by memory, for I am not a very good scholar.

1085. Do you think the month of June has not suggested itself to you from having heard this sale so much talked about? That question I can answer very simply; I was ploughing for wheat at the time.

1086. Do you live close to Miss Kelly's? No; four or five miles from Brinbin, on the bank of the river, midway between Tarree and Wingham.

1087.

- Mr. T. Findley. 1087. Where did you see Miss Kelly? At her residence at Brimbin; I went there.
1088. Could you carry your memory back sufficiently to say whether it was at the end or the beginning of June? No, I cannot; but I think it was at the beginning of June; it was on a Saturday, I remember that perfectly, but the day of the month I do not know.
1089. By Mr. Flett: One of the questions put by Mr. Forster has suggested another to me;—he asked you what sort of character Skerrett bore on the river;—I will ask you now what sort of character Miss Kelly bore on the river? I cannot say anything about the lady, for or against. I have always received hospitality from her when I have called; if I went her way and called in I was entertained. I have been several times to her residence while at Brimbin and Mount George—only once at Mount George.
1090. By Mr. Stewart: Did anything occur to prevent your making the purchase of cattle from Skerrett? He was to come on a certain day, and he disappointed me. I went over to Brimbin, and he said all the cattle were sold, and I then went to Saville, on the Lansdowne.
1091. The failure was on his part? Yes, I never got a beast from him.
1092. By the Chairman: He said he had sold the cattle to Turner? To Charles Turner.
1093. That is no relation of William Turner? No, he is not of the same family.

Mr. Phillip Dew called in and examined:—

- Mr. P. Dew. 1094. By the Chairman: This is a Committee appointed by the Legislative Assembly, upon the petition of Isabella Mary Kelly, with reference to some matters connected with cattle selling, cattle stealing, forgery, perjury, and I do not know what;—do you know anything of these matters? Yes; I recollect the affair very well, at the time Miss Kelly sold the cattle to Skerrett in this affair.
1095. Were you present at the sale? I was not present at the sale.
1096. You know only that she sold them by report, by common repute? All I know of the affair as regards the sale of the cattle is, that I met Miss Kelly in 1854, about June, and she told me she had sold her cattle to Mr. Skerrett; I replied, "If I had known you had wanted to have sold your cattle, I should have liked to have bought them;" she said, "No doubt, if you go to Mr. Skerrett, and wish to purchase, he will sell them;" accordingly I did so.
1097. Did he sell you any? I purchased a number of cattle from Skerrett a short time after, and because she disputed his right to sell, although I paid for them I never had the cattle; rather than take them to get into trouble I had to be satisfied with the loss of my money.
1098. What price did you pay for them? I paid, I think, £3 10s. a head for bullocks, and £30 for one horse.
1099. Were they fat bullocks? No, they were bullocks for breaking-in. I was breaking-in two or three of them, and Miss Kelly saw them in the yokes.
1100. How many did you buy? I bought five bullocks at £3 10s., and one horse for £30, and as I was keeping a store at the time, I advanced £26 worth of goods on account of some more cattle. I think it was £26 worth, but it is so long ago that I cannot be quite certain; I have the receipt at home.
1101. You say you did not get either the horse or the bullocks? Neither of them—Miss Kelly had them.
1102. What breed of horse was it—a cart horse or a race horse? I considered him one of the pick of the horses of Miss Kelly. I bought him for Dr. Bowker, of Newcastle, who ordered me to get him a good unbroken colt, and I thought this the pick of Miss Kelly's.
1103. What age was he? I think five or six years old when I bought him.
1104. I suppose it was a coach horse? No, it was a very nice cob, fit for any gentleman to ride up and down Sydney on.
1105. You considered him the pick of Miss Kelly's horses? Yes, I did.
1106. It was a good price for an unbroken colt? Yes; but horses were selling well at that time. I was not particular, if I got one that pleased Dr. Bowker, to £5, and he was not particular.
1107. You never got this? No.
1108. Was it in consequence of hearing of this disturbance between Miss Kelly and Skerrett that you did not take possession? I did take possession, but hearing of the disturbance between Skerrett and Miss Kelly, I thought the first loss was the best, and I did not keep them.
1109. Of the purchase of the cattle from Miss Kelly by Skerrett you know no more than you heard from Miss Kelly? Nothing more than what I got from Miss Kelly; what I got from her own lips led me to lose what money I did lose.
1110. By Mr. Flett: Had you known Skerrett for some time before this? I met with Skerrett, and had some dealings with him, before I knew Miss Kelly.
1111. Are you aware of anything against Skerrett's character during the time you have known him? No; the first time I saw Skerrett was at Raymond Terrace. He had brought down seven horses, and I purchased three of them for Mr. Brown, of the coal works, at Newcastle. The next morning I made him another offer of £230 for the lot. They were a very good stamp of horses.
1112. That was before Skerrett had purchased Miss Kelly's? Yes, before I heard of the sale of these cattle.
1113. Are you aware that Skerrett was in the habit of bringing down valuable horses for sale? Yes; that was the first time I saw him. I afterwards saw him with two or three batches of horses, but I was not in want of them.

1114. Were you under the impression that he was a poor man, and had not the command of money? I am certain he was not, for when I paid him the cheque he pulled out his pocket-book, and I saw it contained notes; they might have been £5 notes, £10 notes, or £20 notes. Mr. P. Dew.
12 Nov., 1862.
1115. That was besides the money you paid him? Yes; he had £200 worth of horses the first time I saw him. At that time horses would fetch a good price, and if I saw a man with several good horses I knew he must have money to buy them with.
1116. You have seen him with several other batches, you say? Yes, before this dealing with Miss Kelly and Skerrett.
1117. Was it always your belief that Miss Kelly had made a bonâ fide—a real sale of cattle to Skerrett? Yes, certainly; if I had not believed so I should not have been so foolish as to buy them of him.
1118. Was that the opinion of the people on the river, so far as you know? Yes, they had no reason to doubt Miss Kelly's word at the time, or Skerrett's, when she said she had sold them and he said he had bought them.
1119. Many years having elapsed since then, what is your belief now? I have always believed that there was a bargain made between the two; in what way I know not.
1120. What is the general opinion of the people at the Manning respecting this sale? The general opinion is that Skerrett really bought this property. When I have said that, I believe that is all I could say respecting that affair. I am still under the impression that he never paid for them.
1121. You think he purchased them? I do.
1122. Do you know what object Miss Kelly and Skerrett might have in making a sale of this description? One reason, perhaps, that Miss Kelly might have for making this sort of bargain was, that Miss Kelly knew she could not get the cattle mustered as long as it was known they belonged to her; at least, that is the opinion of a number of respectable people on the Manning—more than 100 that I can name. They believe that Skerrett said they were his, and Miss Kelly told the same tale, in order that she might get them mustered. Another opinion is, that Miss Kelly was in some trouble at this time, about some cattle branding, and Skerrett was bondsman for her; and when he came out of Court, I remember he said he had been purchasing Miss Kelly's cattle. I had no reason to disbelieve it; and in a few days Miss Kelly told me herself that he had bought her cattle.
1123. By Mr. Morris: That was a few days after Miss Kelly was brought before the Bench at Bungay Bungay? Yes, it was after she was committed at Bungay Bungay she told me this. My family were at Raymond Terrace at the time.
1124. I want you to fix the time? It was after she was committed.
1125. How long after? I am not able to say how long; it may have been some weeks, but I am not certain as to that. I know it was after she was committed at Bungay Bungay.
1126. By Mr. Flett: Are you aware of any losses Miss Kelly has sustained through the sale of her cattle to Skerrett? Skerrett had taken one horse of Miss Kelly's, an unbroken colt, and I was at the steamer at Raymond Terrace when I saw him; I was going on to Sydney; and there were some cattle sold for Mr. Begby; he sent twenty from ——— to Maitland.
1127. Do you know of any more? Yes, there were some mustered and sold on the Manning River, some eight or nine, which realized only £8 or £9. Mr. Poole told me so only last Saturday, when he was at my house.
1128. You are not aware of any other losses? No, I do not think so; the cattle I bought myself Miss Kelly got the benefit of, and the same with Murray. Murray was like myself—he thought it was better to lose the cattle than to get into any trouble; so that Skerrett got the benefit of the money, and Miss Kelly got the benefit of the cattle.
1129. She could not have lost money on the Manning without your knowledge, as she is your next neighbour? No.
1130. After her imprisonment in Sydney, are you aware whether she sustained any loss? I think her property has never been so well looked after since I have been on the Manning as it was at that time—for Mr. Gerard looking after them, and Mr. Begby purchasing the cattle, there was a strict watch to see that Skerrett took none of them away.
1131. Are you aware of any loss she sustained in consequence of the sale of her cattle to Mr. Begby? I do not know what Mr. Begby paid for these cattle; I know something like what he collected; as, from knowing the herd, I assisted him in gathering them for the sake of getting my own, as some of them were with mine. What he paid Miss Kelly I know nothing about.
1132. Did you ever hear the number Miss Kelly sold to him? I believe from 500 to 700, but I believe he never found half that number.
1133. Did you ever hear that Mr. Begby never mustered more than 250? Yes.
1134. That Miss Kelly sold her cattle under false representations? No doubt. The poor fellow was picked up—he knew nothing about cattle, and was taken in. For cattle such as he bought, £400 would have been the outside value, according to what he mustered.
1135. You have been many years upon the Manning River, and are well acquainted with stock and the value of stock? Yes.
1136. At what do you value Miss Kelly's property at present, or some years hence, say five years hence? Do you mean her cattle, horses, and land?
1137. Everything she has got—Mount George, the fifty acres at the creek, her cattle, and horses? I know nothing about the fifty acres at the creek.
1138. Will you put a value upon her horses, cattle, Mount George, and other property? I think Miss Kelly would have made a good sale if she had sold all she has on the Manning River for £1,500.
1139. Have you ever told that to Miss Kelly herself? Yes, I told her so a few days before she left, when she was at my house. I saw a paper there where she had put down £15,000.
1140. Miss Kelly, you say, was at your house? Yes, she called on Sunday and left on Tuesday.
- 1141.

Mr. P. Dew. 1141. How long is that ago? About three weeks ago; I paid very little attention to what she said.

12 Nov., 1862. 1142. You say you saw a paper of hers? I saw a paper printed—some of the Members of Council, I believe, had a copy of it—and she had put down £15,000 as the value of her property, and I thought Miss Kelly must have made a great mistake, and have added a figure too many, as no man's stock on the Manning River is worth anything like the money; there are only one or two estates anything near it.

1143. By the Chairman: I suppose Mr. Flett's is? I dare say it is; but we little people put down our property by hundreds, not by thousands.

1144. By Mr. Flett: What conversation took place between yourself and Miss Kelly that day? There was not much conversation. Miss Kelly was stopping at the house, and said something about if I could do her a favour respecting anything—as this case was coming before the Committee in Sydney—if I could do anything for her she would be very glad. I did not wish to have anything to do with it, either for or against, for I had been loser enough.

1145. What did she want you to do? To take a letter from me that might be of some service, for it is generally known on the Manning River that I am as well acquainted with the value of live stock as anyone in that part of the country. I have been brought up to it from a child, and if I had represented to you that the cattle were worth some £5,000 or £10,000, you might have placed some reliance upon it.

1146. Did she positively ask you to value her property at £15,000? Yes. I told her I would scorn the very idea of seeing such a thing in print.

1147. You still value her property at £1,500? Yes; I say I would be sorry to give it. I have bought and sold a great deal for other parties, as well as on my own account, and if I had the money I should be sorry to invest it in that way.

1148. By Mr. Stewart: You say that Miss Kelly, about June, told you that she had sold her stock to Skerrett? Yes, she did.

1149. Then after that you purchased from Skerrett? Yes, I did.

1150. How long subsequent to this purchase was it that Miss Kelly again claimed the stock? I think I had it in my possession a month or six weeks. I had broken in some of the bullocks, and Miss Kelly saw them in the yokes. I was in Sydney at the time, and she told Mrs. Dew that she would bring an action against me, which frightened my wife, and she told the man to let the bullocks out of the yokes.

1151. You at once gave them up? I gave them up; I never touched a beast of them after that.

1152. By Mr. Morrice: You said that Miss Kelly told you that she had sold the cattle to Skerrett—did she say that she had sold them herself, or that her agent had sold them? She never named any agent; she said, "I have sold my cattle to Mr. Skerrett."

1153. Do you know how many cattle Miss Kelly had altogether? I would not think that Miss Kelly, while I have been on the Manning, has ever had over 400 head, if she has ever had that number.

1154. Do you know certainly that she had not? No; though Mr. Begby said it was hard work to collect the number he did, although he got bulls into the yard which were useless when he got them.

1155. By Mr. Forster: Under what circumstances was it you asked Miss Kelly to sell them to you—did you meet her, or did you go to her house? I met her on the road, when I was backwards and forwards at the Manning, and my family were at Raymond Terrace. I had been taken ill when I was at the Manning, and remained at Andrews' house; he kept an inn at the time, and I remained there some time before I could be removed to get advice. After I got strong enough I started for Maitland, and met Miss Kelly on my way. She complained of Mr. Andrews being an unkind neighbour, and said, "but it makes no difference to me, as I have sold my cattle to Mr. Skerrett."

1156. Did you first offer to buy her cattle of her? No.

1157. Under what circumstances, then, did she make this remark? I met Miss Kelly on the road, and she said she was very sorry to hear I had been ill, and had been placed where I was, where I could not get any good medical advice. She said she had always been sorry she had come into the neighbourhood where there were such bad neighbours; however, she should have nothing to do with them now—"I have sold my cattle to Skerrett."

1158. This was before you made any offer to buy? I never made any offer.

1159. She volunteered that information to you? She volunteered that information; she told me she had sold her cattle to Skerrett.

1160. Did she refer to the bad neighbourhood;—what did she mean by saying that she had such bad neighbours? I was a new man, and had been buying sheep and cattle, with a view of settling on the Manning River, and she said I had got among bad neighbours, and that she was sorry, having such a large family, that I should get among such people, but that it made no difference to her now, as she had sold her cattle to Skerrett.

1161. What led you to make this purchase afterwards of Skerrett? I was buying cattle about this time; I had taken a station, and I had bought, at Maitland, seventy cows of the Australian Agricultural Company, and as I had these bullocks of Miss Kelly's on my own place, I went to Skerrett to buy them.

1162. After hearing this you went to Skerrett to buy them? I did. I saw Skerrett —

1163. You went to his place? The first I saw of him was on board the steamer. I was coming to the steamer with some horses. I said, "Good day, Mr. Skerrett; I wanted to see you." "Very good," he said. "I believe you have been buying Miss Kelly's cattle." He replied, "Yes, I have, and I am coming up to muster them—have you a good saddle horse?" I said, "Yes, I have two," and I added, "I would like to buy some of the cattle of you, some that are on the Woolshed Run," that was the name of my place. I said, "I will buy five bullocks." We agreed there and then for the price, and I paid for them.

1164. That was not at his own place? No, on board the steamer.
1165. You went afterwards to get them? No, they were on my own run. As soon as I arrived home from Sydney we went out and yoked up four of the bullocks.
1166. In consequence of the arrangement previously made with Skerrett? Yes, when I went home.
1167. Was that transaction in writing? Yes, I produced the receipt in Court.
1168. Did this writing take place on board the steamer? No, the writing took place in my own house.
1169. I think you are, to some extent, confusing the circumstances—you say first of all with regard to Skerrett, that you met him on board the steamer, and made this bargain there? Yes.
1170. Where did the writing take place? I never saw Skerrett after he left the wharf that night when we came into Sydney. When I parted with him I said, "When will you be up?" and asked him to call at my place. I was then living at the crossing-place at the Manning River, and he called when he came up, and gave me a receipt for the money.
1171. You were without any money up to that time? Yes, till he returned from Sydney.
1172. Can you mention the date when this arrangement took place between you and Skerrett, on board the steamer? I have the receipt for the cattle at home, and produced it in Court in Sydney three or four different times; I will not be certain whether it was not somewhere at the commencement of July.
1173. July, 1854? I think it was.
1174. That is to the best of your belief? Yes; it is nine years ago, and I cannot speak positively.
1175. Did you take possession of these bullocks without any further writing? I did not take possession of them till Skerrett came up and gave me the receipt.
1176. You waited till Skerrett came from Sydney? Yes, before I touched the bullocks.
1177. When he came back from Sydney you completed the bargain by writing? Yes.
1178. In your own house? Yes.
1179. You got a receipt from him? Yes.
1180. And paid the money? Yes.
1181. What was the amount for the bullocks? I think £15.
1182. After this how soon did you get possession? I suppose in a day or two.
1183. Did you take possession without any further reference to Skerrett—did he deliver them? They were on my run.
1184. You took possession of them on your run? Yes.
1185. Without any personal delivery by Skerrett? There was no delivery by Skerrett.
1186. Did you buy any other cattle from Skerrett? I bought only these cattle, and the one horse I mentioned.
1187. Was the horse delivered by Skerrett? No, I never had the horse in my possession, for I did not want to take this horse to Mr. Bowker for some time. I never tried to get possession of the horse. Miss Kelly, when she came from Sydney, stated that she had never sold the cattle at all. I was not at home at the time —
1188. I do not wish you to enter into these particulars;—you say you never got possession of the horse? I do.
1189. Was that transaction in writing also—was there a receipt? I had a receipt.
1190. You say Miss Kelly assented in this way: that she stated she had sold her cattle to Skerrett—and you considered that sufficient? Yes.
1191. Did you ever see Miss Kelly and Skerrett after this, at any time? I do not think I did.
1192. Then you cannot say whether Miss Kelly admitted this sale to have been a correct one afterwards? When she came up from Sydney she said the cattle were not sold at all.
1193. How long after was that? About a month. Mrs. Dew said to her, when she spoke about the bullocks, "You told my husband that you had sold your cattle to Mr. Skerrett." She said, "It is not so; they are not sold."
1194. She said it was a mistake? I do not know about a mistake.
1195. You were aware before this that the cattle were Miss Kelly's property? I knew they were Miss Kelly's property when I went on to the Manning River.
1196. When the transaction was afterwards broken off, did you get your money back? Never, not a penny.
1197. Are you aware whether Miss Kelly ever got the money from Skerrett, or any part of it? I have not the least doubt that Miss Kelly sold the property; as to whether she got the money I could not state.
1198. Did you hear the particulars of what she was to get? Something like £400 or £500, and I saw a receipt, which I considered genuine, for £400.
1199. Would you know the receipt again if you saw it? I do not know; it is a long time since I purchased the cattle.
1200. Is that the receipt? (Handing a paper to the witness.) I think that is the same.
1201. Look at that beneath it (referring to the documents before the Committee)—is that the same? Yes, I saw the bill.
1202. To the best of your belief you saw these two documents at that time? Yes.
1203. Who showed them to you? Mr. Skerrett.
1204. Was Miss Kelly present? No.
1205. Do you know anything of her writing? No; that (referring to the signature to the bill of sale) very much resembles her writing.
1206. Have you seen her writing? Yes.
1207. That is like her writing, is it? I am not a sufficient judge to give my opinion.

Mr. P. Dew.

12 Nov., 1862.

- Mr. P. Dew. 1208. Do you know anything of Skerrett's handwriting? I have had his writing.
1209. Is any writing there like Skerrett's? Yes, I would fancy this is his writing—the body of the paper.
- 12 Nov., 1862. 1210. Would you say that the body of the other was Skerrett's writing? Yes, I would think it was.
1211. Are you sufficiently acquainted with Skerrett's writing to say you think it is like it? All I know of Skerrett's handwriting is from the receipts I have of his for £105 for horses, and for what I bought of him at Miss Kelly's.
1212. Are these in your possession? Yes, I believe Mrs. Dew is in possession of them; she takes care of all my papers.
1213. Would you be able to show these to the Committee? I have not brought them with me.
1214. You say you never got your money from Skerrett? No, I wish I could.
1215. Did you ever ask him for it? No.
1216. How was that? I thought I should be just as forward if I asked him for it as I should if I did not.
1217. Skerrett never offered it? No fear. I consider that I lost more by the transaction between Skerrett and Miss Kelly than Miss Kelly lost by the cattle that Skerrett took away.
1218. You consider yourself an injured person? Yes, more than Miss Kelly.
1219. Do you consider Miss Kelly to blame for that? Yes, because she told me she had sold her cattle to Skerrett. With my large family I could not afford to lose £60 or £70, and not get a penny back for it.
1220. When you stated the total value of Miss Kelly's property, did you include all the property on the Manning? Mount George and all the cattle and horses. I think the landed property may be worth £500.
1221. In addition? No; I know the estate as well as my own house.
1222. Do you know much of Skerrett? What I have stated. I saw him the first time at Raymond Terrace, as I have said, and the man was honorable enough for me; he acted in a straightforward way at that time, and when I purchased these cattle, I considered that he was acting in the same straightforward way, and should have trusted him if it had been for 500.
1223. Did he bear a pretty good character down there among other people? I do not think he does.
1224. Do you think he is wrong in his wits at all? I observed that more after I had lost my money than I did before.
1225. By Mr. Flett: Did you find him straightforward in making a bargain—that there was no quibbling about him? Yes.
1226. By Mr. Cunneen: You did not consider him a fool? No, I would not consider him a fool, either; I think Skerrett far from being a fool.
1227. By Mr. Forster: Do you know anything of Miss Kelly's character? I never had any transactions with Miss Kelly in my life, and I never wish to have. I did not wish to have any interference in this matter at all, for I know I am an injured man by both.
1228. Did you ever hear anything on the Manning against Miss Kelly's character from other people? I do not think anyone could hardly do Miss Kelly a kindness but she would think they had some motive in view, and would turn round directly afterwards and do them an injury. That is my opinion of her.
1229. Are you aware of any other sales having been made to other people by Skerrett or Miss Kelly? A number of her horses have been sold at different times; they were generally put into the hands of an auctioneer.
1230. Did you know her or Skerrett to sell cattle or horses about this time? Skerrett sold a number.
1231. Were you present at the transaction? No, I merely heard about it.
1232. Did you ever hear of Skerrett riding her horses about? I never saw Skerrett riding more than one.
1233. Did he ride it about commonly? Yes, he was riding it before his conviction and after his conviction.
1234. Where was Miss Kelly at this time? The last part of the time she was in Sydney. I met him at Gloucester with the same horse, and it got away at Stroud and got back to the Manning River. After Skerrett left Cockatoo, he was at the Manning on the same horse.
1235. By Mr. Flett: You mean that Miss Kelly lost only one horse by Skerrett? Yes, he could not get them away—Gerrard and the other watched him too closely.
1236. By Mr. Forster: Do you know anything of Skerrett's family? Of the elder branches, three or four of his children.
1237. Do you know his daughters? Yes, three of his daughters.
1238. Did you ever see their handwriting? No.
1239. Were they pretty well educated? I would not think they were.
1240. By Mr. Cunneen: After you had purchased these bullocks of Skerrett, did Miss Kelly claim them? She did.
1241. How long after you had taken them? I think I had them somewhere about a month.
1242. Did she claim them directly? As soon as she came up from Sydney, when she saw them at my place in the yokes; and as soon as she claimed them Mrs. Dew ordered the man to let them out of the yokes.
1243. Did you think you could not establish your claim—had you a doubt of Skerrett? I might have established my claim, but it would have cost me more to have done it than the bullocks were worth.

1244. Then you abandoned your claim to £73 10s. without making any demur? Yes. Mr. P. Dew. When I found Skerrett was taken and convicted, what good was it for me to take the case into Court, where it was proved to the satisfaction of a jury that he had stolen the cattle? 12 Nov., 1862. I thought it was of no use to spend another £50 in endeavouring to establish a right in such a case.
1245. Was Skerrett apprehended at the time you gave up this property? No.
1246. Why did you doubt your right to hold these cattle under the sale of Skerrett? These bullocks were let go by Mrs. Dew, not by me; I was staying in Sydney at that time. Had I been there I should not have unyoked them; but when I found Skerrett was apprehended and convicted, I let the matter go; if he had been liberated I should have got them back again.
1247. Did you ever know of any other instance in which Skerrett sold property belonging to Miss Kelly, where she, being aware of it, recognized his right to sell? No, I do not.
1248. She repudiated your claim directly she was aware that you had purchased? She told plenty more besides me that she had sold her cattle to Skerrett.
1249. After she was aware that Skerrett actually sold her property, did she not deny his right to do so? Yes. Turner, the butcher, and the other _____, after they had taken away the bullocks and killed them, I believe she went and claimed them as her property.
1250. In the case of Turner—when she found that Turner had purchased cattle from Skerrett, she immediately asserted that he had no right to sell the property? Yes, I heard so.
1251. Then, in no case where she became aware of Skerrett having sold her property, did she fail to repudiate his right to do so? I think not; I am not aware of one case.
1252. By Mr. Morris: Were you examined in the Court, either with reference to Miss Kelly's case or the other? I was examined in Miss Kelly's case.
1253. In the Supreme Court? I was.
1254. Were you examined in both cases, Miss Kelly's and Skerrett's? Skerrett subpoenaed me at the time of his trial when he was convicted, but I did not attend.
1255. Why? I did not.
1256. What was running in your mind that induced you not to attend? I thought by his selling the cattle to me I had lost enough, without running about after his business any more. I think that was a very good reason.
1257. Had you any suspicion that he was not quite correct? I had a suspicion—when I heard how he said he had paid the money, in hundred pound notes—that he had never paid the money at all. I did not like the look of that.
1258. Was it subsequent to the time that Miss Kelly was brought up under the charge of branding calves that she told you she had sold her cattle to Skerrett, or was it previously? Miss Kelly then stood committed to take her trial at the time she met me, or else I am labouring under a great mistake.
1259. Then that could not have been in the month of June, as you at first said? I believe it was the month of June when I met Miss Kelly.
1260. Can you remember whether Miss Kelly said that she had sold the cattle to Skerrett, or that Skerrett had bought them? She said, "I have sold my cattle to Mr. Skerrett."
1261. How was it that the cattle were being branded by Miss Kelly after the sale of the cattle to Skerrett? I never knew that they were.
1262. Under what circumstances were these calves branded by Miss Kelly? There were some cattle which Miss Kelly branded in her yard, and two of George Macpherson's were with them, and branded, I believe, by mistake.
1263. That was subsequent to the supposed sale to Skerrett? That was before.
1264. By Mr. Stewart: It was after this inquiry as to the mistake in branding that you met her? Yes.
1265. By Mr. Forster: She was committed to take her trial at the time she was telling you all this? Yes.
1266. By the Chairman: The date at which you met Miss Kelly at Mr. Andrews' you cannot very well remember? I was coming from Andrews' to my own place when I met her; it was some time in June; what was the day of the month I do not know now.
1267. Did you fix a stirrup-iron on the road? No, I fixed no stirrup-iron. I had two window-sashes on my shoulder, for a house I was building at the time.
1268. You met Miss Kelly? Yes.
1269. Was anyone with her? A little boy, at some distance behind.
1270. Did you fix his stirrup-iron? I never touched his stirrup-iron or saddle.
1271. You then first became acquainted with Miss Kelly? Yes, it was the first time I saw Miss Kelly; but she had heard of me, from being backwards and forwards on the river, and from having property on the river. I had bought 3,000 or 4,000 sheep, and was about to remove my family from Raymond Terrace.
1272. Did you ever offer to buy 100 head of fat cattle of her? Never in my life; she never had a 100 head of fat cattle during the time I have known her.
1273. Or from her overseer? Never; I never knew she had an overseer.
1274. Did you ever get a letter from any Member of this Committee, with respect to the evidence you would be required to give? I never did; all I received was a formal summons to attend here, and I left with great difficulty, for Mrs. Dew has been ill the last fortnight.
1275. Do I understand you clearly to say that you got no letter? I swear that I never did.
1276. You did not mention to anyone that you got such a letter? No; all I had I have in my pocket; it is a summons to attend the Committee, from the Chairman.
1277. You say that you valued the whole of Miss Kelly's property at £1,500? Yes.
1278. At what date are you referring to? At any time that I have been on the Manning River—that is, during the last eight or nine years.

- Mr. P. Dew. 1279. How many head of horses had she? She might have had, perhaps, if all had been collected, 300 head—if they could have been collected.
- 12 Nov., 1862. 1280. What description of horses were they? The old stock, a few years back, were good, and there are a few old mares very good; but the whole of the stock, ever since I have been on the Manning River, have been neglected, and have gone back ever since.
1281. Do you know any of her entire horses and their characters? I know one entire—he is just opposite my place.
1282. Do you know a horse of the name of Toss? No.
1283. Do you know a horse of the name of Calendar? I know Calendar very well.
1284. What sort of horse is Calendar? I set him down as not worth anything.
1285. Is he broken down? He is not the stamp of horse—he is hip-down; in short, he is a horse that no one except Miss Kelly would allow to run with mares.
1286. Do you know a horse of the name of Fashion? No, I do not. I only know this Calendar by name, but there are plenty of wild ones in the bush.
1287. And some good old mares? Some very good bred old mares. No doubt when Miss Kelly commenced on the Manning she had some good stock.
1288. You do not appear to be well acquainted with Miss Kelly's stock? Not with these fine entires; they were before my day, I think.
1289. This must have been not a bad colt that you gave £30 for—this unbroken colt? It was a very good one; there are not many like it on the run.
1290. There was a sale of Miss Kelly's horses lately? There were some thirty-eight sold, I think.
1291. How many head of cattle has Miss Kelly? I suppose about 300.
1292. Would that include young and old? That includes all.
1293. Are you aware that she had 100 head of milch cows that she let to Skerrett along with Brimbin? I am not.

Mr. Joseph Andrews called in and examined:—

- Mr. J. Andrews. 1294. By the Chairman: This is a Committee of the Legislative Assembly, appointed to inquire into certain allegations contained in a petition from Miss Isabella Mary Kelly, with respect to some matters upon which you previously gave evidence before a Select Committee of this House appointed to inquire into the case of Joseph Skerrett, and also before the Police Bench at Bungy Hungy, and in the Supreme Court;—I have only to ask you this,—whether there is anything in the evidence you have previously given that you wish to explain? When I was examined I believe my evidence related chiefly to the forgery, or alleged forgery, by Skerrett of certain documents; if the Committee wish to examine me upon any other matter, I shall be happy to give such information as I possess.
- 12 Nov., 1862. 1295. By Mr. Flett: What are you? I am at present a farmer and grazier upon the Upper Manning.
1296. You knew Skerrett and Miss Kelly? Yes.
1297. You are aware that Skerrett purchased some cattle from Miss Kelly? Yes, I was informed by Skerrett himself that he had.
1298. Will you state what Skerrett said to you about the sale of the cattle to him at the time it took place? I was not in communication with Miss Kelly at the time the alleged sale took place, but I recollect, during the examination before the Police Bench at Bungy Hungy or thereabout, when I asked her why did she tell the people at the Manning that she had sold her cattle to Skerrett, that she said Skerrett could not muster her cattle unless she said she had sold them to him, for none of the neighbours would assist him so long as they knew the cattle belonged to her, and that she had allowed him to do so, and had said so herself.
1299. Did she after that again give you any reason for selling the cattle to Skerrett? I repeatedly heard her say, in addition to that, that Skerrett had told her that he had bought the cattle of her agents, Rich, Langley, and Butchart, in Sydney.
1300. Did Skerrett himself tell you that he had bought Miss Kelly's cattle? Yes, and I was very sceptical on the subject. I had no connection with Miss Kelly till October, and this alleged sale took place in June, I think, 1854.
1301. Miss Kelly has stated in her petition, that through the sale of her cattle to Mr. Begbie, and through Mr. Begbie's insolvency, she had lost a large sum of money, probably about £1,000;—do you know anything about this transaction with Begbie and Cooper? Yes; I know Mr. Begbie, and I heard him state upon oath that he and Mr. Cooper did purchase Miss Kelly's cattle for £1,200, that he spent fourteen months in mustering them, and he told me that he could not muster more than half the number represented to be on the run; that he had paid £200 cash to Miss Kelly, and that the balance was to be paid by bills; that he subsequently wished to make an arrangement with Miss Kelly and to be released from his engagement, as he wanted to go to India to some situation that his friends had for him there, and offered to give up all the cattle he had mustered, to forfeit the money he had paid, and to give her another £100 to be free of the transaction, and I know that when he went into the Insolvent Court, he paid through Mr. Morris, the Official Assignee, all the money he had got for the cattle, and some £300, to get away to his friends.
1302. Then you do not suppose that Miss Kelly lost anything by this transaction with Mr. Begbie? I know that Mr. Begbie lost, but Miss Kelly could only have lost the difference between what she received from Mr. Begbie, and what she would have had, if he had not failed to fulfil his engagement by going into Court.

1303. I have understood that Miss Kelly represented to Mr. Begbie the number of her cattle as between 600 and 700? As far as I can learn, she stated that there were about 600, but that she would guarantee 500; and the agreement read to me by Mr. Begbie was, that if there were not 500 she would forfeit the price of all under 500. There were also fifty acres at Waterview, which, with dairy utensils, he was to receive, and he alleged that he never got either the dairy or the utensils.

1304. How many head of cattle did they ever muster? Under 300—about 250.

1305. Then it is your opinion that Miss Kelly made a false representation to Mr. Begbie, and in consequence ruined him? I believe Miss Kelly was ignorant of the state of her cattle. It is known that in that part of the country cattle do not increase but decrease. I will not, therefore, say that Miss Kelly misled Mr. Begbie intentionally, but he was misled.

1306. Then at the time Mr. Begbie offered this money, if she had received it she would have been no loser at all? I know at the time Mr. Begbie bought these cattle, I purchased some at 30s. which was the value of mixed cattle at that time, so that what Mr. Begbie got would not have been worth above £450. What I bought were nearly as good as Miss Kelly's—they were purchased of Mr. Dee, of Stroud.

1307. If Miss Kelly lost by her transaction with Mr. Begbie, she brought it upon herself? If she had taken back her cattle she would have been £300 in pocket, and the cattle would have been mustered for her. They were fourteen months being mustered, there were three or four young men constantly after them, and a horse was killed in getting them in.

1308. What do you think was the value of Miss Kelly's stock when Skerrett was liberated from Cockatoo? It is a difficult thing to fix the value; but during the time of Miss Kelly's confinement, Mr. Gerrard was taking charge of them, and I believe her stock have never been better managed since I have been on the Manning, and he told me that he spent a good deal of time in collecting all the horses that were saleable, and sold them on Miss Kelly's behalf, and that the rest were hardly worth taking to market; so that I could not say what was the value of the horses, but I would not like to give £1,500 for all her stock, horses and cattle, because they had been very much neglected, and there was great difficulty in getting them in. Several other parties have been employed in collecting cattle for Miss Kelly, and horses, since that, and they have corroborated that statement.

1309. Did Miss Kelly lose any stock—or how much—through any sales made by Skerrett? Do you include the stock that was taken from Begbie as Miss Kelly's stock?

1310. No, but I will include that if you like? There were seven taken away of Begbie's.

1311. That is the stock I allude to? There were seven taken to Tinoona of Begbie's stock, and I think Mr. Wooller, of Sydney, took away about twenty that were sold at Maitland. These were Begbie's stock; horses he had none at all. Mr. Gerrard took care that Skerrett did not take any of the horses while he was in charge. He had one that he rode, but that was retaken.

1312. What was the loss sustained by Miss Kelly in consequence of Skerrett's liberation? Nothing more than the trouble she was put to at Darlinghurst. There was no stock taken away excepting Begbie's. The horses were well looked after. Skerrett got none away.

1313. How much did she lose through Mr. Begbie? I know that twenty head were sold in Maitland, and they realized about 15s. Mr. Wooller was so dissatisfied that he would take no more. I believe they sold for 25s. a head, but there was considerable expense in getting them to Maitland, as there were four or five horsemen to drive them in.

1314. Do you think the Committee would be able to find out what the stock sold for, by applying to the Official Assignee? Yes, what they got at Tinoona, by applying to Mr. Sempill, who was Skerrett's Official Assignee. They were sold by his order.

1315. By Mr. Flett: Miss Kelly has stated in her petition that it was in consequence of Skerrett's liberation that Begbie became insolvent;—did Begbie become insolvent in consequence of cattle having been taken away by Skerrett? No; when Mr. Begbie purchased these cattle he borrowed the money to pay the deposit, and he depended upon the sale of the cattle to pay all off. In this he was disappointed. That might have been one of the reasons he assigned for his insolvency, but it was not the whole cause of his insolvency. I think Mrs. Cooper has stated that in her letter.

1316. By the Chairman: Do you produce a letter from Mrs. Cooper? I do. (The witness handed in the same.)

1317. By Mr. Flett: You have presented a letter from Mrs. Cooper to this Committee? Yes.

1318. Does that contain evidence with reference to this matter? It is a statement of Begbie and Cooper's transaction with Miss Kelly, as far as Mrs. Cooper knew it.

1319. Could not Mrs. Cooper come down to attend this Committee? She is an elderly lady, and is unable to do so.

1320. She is Mr. Cooper's mother? Yes.

1321. And Mr. Begbie's mother-in-law? Yes.

1322. Did she tell you that she had written this letter? Yes.

1323. How were Miss Kelly's stock managed by Mr. Gerrard during her confinement? They were admirably managed—never better since I have been on the Manning.

1324. By Mr. Forster: At the time that Skerrett told you that Miss Kelly had sold the cattle to him, did you ever hear Miss Kelly admit that the cattle had been sold? No; at this time Miss Kelly was living twenty miles from my place, and Skerrett was going to and from Port Macquarie; I had no communication with Miss Kelly till the September following.

1325. Did she then admit that she had sold the cattle to Skerrett? No, she told me it was a forgery.

1326. What did she say was a forgery? A document he produced at my house. Mr. Easton

Mr.
J. Andrews.
12 Nov., 1862.

- Mr. J. Andrews. Easton and Mr. Cosgrove were present. Miss Kelly said she was going home, and that she intended to sell her cattle and all her property? I said, "Miss Kelly, sell your cattle! Mr. Skerrett has shown me a document wherein is contained a bill of sale of all your cattle, with twenty head of your horses, for £600, £400 of which is paid down in cash, and the remainder by bill." "My God!" she replied, "I never sold a beast to him!"
- 12 Nov., 1862. 1327. She denied it? Yes; she said, "He will never claim a beast." I said, "I believe he is making preparation to sell some of the cattle."
1328. Do you remember Miss Kelly being committed at Bungy Hungy for branding two calves? Yes, it was a short time previous to that.
1329. Was it a short time previous to Skerrett telling you that she had sold her cattle to him? I cannot recollect, but I know he told us as early as May that he had bought the cattle from Miss Kelly.
1330. Was that before this time I speak of? I would not say, but it was about the time, because I recollect well being at Bungy Hungy, at the office, and Skerrett becoming bondsman for Miss Kelly's appearance at Sydney.
1331. Did it ever strike you that there was any connection between the two transactions—the committal at the police office and the sale of the cattle? I do not think so; my impression was, that Miss Kelly's committal had nothing to do with the affair.
1332. You say that Skerrett showed you this document? Yes.
1333. Will you look at these (handing to the witness the documents before the Committee)? This document, purporting to be a bill of sale witnessed by his two daughters, is the one I saw, a long time before any action commenced.
1334. Was it Skerrett who showed this to you? Yes.
1335. Did you ever hear Miss Kelly say anything about these documents except when she said they were forgeries? No.
1336. Do you know anything of the witnesses? Yes; these are the two daughters.
1337. Do you know their handwriting well? No, I never saw it except as witnessing this document.
1338. Do you know William Turner's writing? No; I believe that is his.
1339. Was he at your house? Yes, he was at my house when this document was produced; he could write a little, but very poorly.
1340. Would that be the sort of signature you would expect from him? Yes; perhaps a little better.
1341. Is the body of this document in Skerrett's handwriting? I do not know any farther than what I heard from himself.
1342. Do you know Miss Kelly's signature? Yes; and I am of the same opinion.
1343. What is that? That it is a forgery.
1344. Did you swear that? At my first examination I was not so clear, but since then I have thought it over, and I would have no hesitation in swearing the signatures to be forgeries.
1345. Do you know anything of these girls? They were mere girls at the time.
1346. Do you mean by that, that they were so young that they would have been likely to do what their father told them? They would no doubt be influenced by him; still they were not so very young—they were very near women grown.
1347. They were old enough to know that they were doing wrong if they signed what they did not see? Yes.
1348. Did you ever hear them talking about it? The fact is, that the whole party going to Dungog upon this matter stopped at my house—Skerrett, his two daughters, and Miss Kelly.
1349. Did you hear the subject discussed? Of course Miss Kelly kept to herself. She declared these documents were forgeries; and I recollect Skerrett showing this document on his return from Dungog —
1350. Did you hear the girls talking of it? Yes.
1351. What did they say? They were finding fault with Miss Kelly for denying the fact, and stating that she had been paid £400, which they represented as having been paid in £100 notes. They spoke of the assurance of Miss Kelly in daring to say that the documents were forgeries.
1352. They spoke in corroboration of their statement that they had seen the transaction? Yes.
1353. You did not hear them make any statement that would contradict the circumstance of her having signed it? No, I do not recollect hearing anything to that effect.
1354. Were they pretty well educated? They could write very well; they were at school at Port Macquarie.
1355. Did you ever see their signature before? No.
1356. You do not know anything about the circumstances of the signature except from hearsay? I heard them examined at Darlinghurst by Mr. Plunkett, who was Attorney General at the time.
1357. By Mr. Stewart: Did you give evidence at that trial? Yes.
1358. At the conviction of Miss Kelly? At the conviction both of Miss Kelly and of Skerrett.
1359. By Mr. Cunneen: In the conversation between the Skerretts, when they stayed at your house, did you hear the daughters say they saw their father pay Miss Kelly? Yes, but I paid little attention to that—I did not believe it.
1360. You did not believe it, but they stated it? Yes.
1361. By Mr. Morris: Had you any conversation with Turner upon the subject of this sale receipt? Yes; it is singular, but he was present when Mr. Skerrett took the opportunity of of presenting this receipt to me—he said, “ This is the receipt I got from Miss Kelly ; it was signed in the presence of Turner.”

Mr.
J. Andrews.
12 Nov., 1862,

1362. Did Skerrett or Turner tell you whether it was done at the same time as the bill of sale? Yes, I understood so, for I think you will find it bears the same date.

1363. Have you not yourself had some transactions with which Miss Kelly was connected which have not turned out much to your advantage? I cannot say that Miss Kelly was connected with it, excepting indirectly; but another person, who was in connection with Skerrett, of the name of Richards, and I believe the whole of it arose out of this case. I believe it was my evidence chiefly that led to the conviction of Skerrett, and that he did all he could with Richards to bring about my ruin. Richards said he held a lease of a portion of Miss Kelly's land, and Miss Kelly swore in the Court that she never gave a lease, that she never wrote the document; yet in the face of that, as she had just come out of Darlinghurst, where she had been imprisoned on a charge of perjury, the jury did not believe her.

1364. By the Chairman: Richards, you believe, wrote that? —

1365. By Mr. Morris: Do you know where that document is? No; I moved for a new trial, and they got the document out of Court and would never produce it. That, I conceive, was a forged lease.

1366. By the Chairman: Is that document out of Court? Yes, and cannot be got.

1367. By Mr. Forster: Is there any suspicion as to who forged this lease? It is only my own opinion; but Richards was competent to write it, as Miss Kelly's hand is very easily imitated, and Skerrett was living at the time at Richards' place. I believe it was a conspiracy to punish me for the the evidence I gave at Darlinghurst, when Skerrett was convicted. Miss Kelly swore that the document was a forgery, and subsequent circumstances convinced me that she could not have signed it. Mr. Mullen, the solicitor, of Maitland, told me that he had seen the lease, and he seemed to entertain great suspicion respecting, and asked me about Miss Kelly's signature.

1368. In what way did this forged lease, to which you have referred, interfere with your property? Miss Kelly had a paddock adjoining mine—she was living at a place five miles distant, and the paddock was lying idle—when she got into Darlinghurst, I had permission from Mr. Gerrard to put cattle there; Richards said he had a lease of the paddock, and commenced a series of actions of trespass against me.

1369. By Mr. Cunneen: Richards, when he found Miss Kelly was in gaol, and had allowed you to use this paddock, asserted that he had a lease? Yes, and was in exclusive possession. He produced a lease, and Miss Kelly alleged that she could not have given a lease.

1370. By Mr. Forster: To whom did you apply for the document? It was produced in evidence against me, and then was taken out of Court for fear it would ever be seen again. Miss Kelly pulled him up at the Police Office, but he would not produce it, as he could not be compelled to produce anything supposed to be detrimental to himself.

1371. By the Chairman: Was it not impounded in Court? Not in the first instance.

1372. By Mr. Morris: Has Richards retained the paddock in question? No, he has left the place altogether. He had a lease of Miss Kelly's premises, not of the paddock, and when she got into gaol he claimed the paddock as his right.

1373. By the Chairman: What style of horses did Miss Kelly generally rear? While she was in my neighbourhood she had some very good colts, but she removed in about 1851 to Brimbin, consequently I could not say much about them after that; and stock will degenerate if not looked after.

1374. By Mr. Flett: Mr. Morris asked you a question which you did not understand;—has ever Miss Kelly had a difference with you before this transaction between Miss Kelly and Skerrett took place? Yes, at one time there was an action for oral slander—a considerable time previous to this.

1375. You and her have always lived in hot water? Yes.

1376. Did she not generally live in hot water? Yes, she left my neighbourhood and went to Brimbin, about twenty miles away, in 1851 or 1852.

1377. You took in another subject which I think might have been left out;—you were speaking of a lease which you say was the ruin of you, and you believe that Miss Kelly was correct when she denied having signed it? I do.

1378. Did you ever in your life say at Maitland that you would not believe Miss Kelly on her oath? Yes, on my own trial, and against myself. I think that was as early as 1847.

1379. What was the reason you made that statement? Is it necessary that I should state? It is a long time back. My reason was that I thought she was not truthful.

1380. At the time Miss Kelly told you she had sold her cattle, when you put the question why she had circulated on the river that she had sold the cattle to Skerrett, she said that she could never muster her cattle if they were known to belong to her? Skerrett said he could not muster the cattle as long as they were known to be Miss Kelly's, and that unless she would say she had sold them to him he could not muster them.

1381. This was the reason she alleged at the time why she had made this statement? Yes, and I attribute all the mischief that befell Skerrett and others to that fact.

1382. I believe you are aware that when Miss Kelly returned from Sydney she denied that Skerrett had bought the cattle of Rich, Langley, and Butchart? Yes, that was her second statement, but she never gainsaid what she had said at first.

1383. As a sensible man and a man of business, would you not, if you had placed your cattle in the hands of an agent in Sydney to sell, and a person were to come to you and to say that he had purchased your cattle, ask him where was his authority for so saying? I should most naturally ask him for some voucher.

1384. You would not allow three or four months to elapse before you would take action in the

- Mr. J. Andrews. the matter, or allow the person professing to have purchased them to sell your cattle before your face without a letter from your agent? I must have some authority.
- 12 Nov., 1862. 1385. Are you aware of the time that elapsed from the purchase of the cattle till Miss Kelly took some action in the matter? Yes, but living at a distance from Miss Kelly at this time, I did not see her. Skerrett said all along that he had purchased her stock and was coming to be a neighbour, and I heard no contradiction of that till September from Miss Kelly, when she said she had not sold her cattle, and that Skerrett would not claim a single beast. In fact, she said he was not very right in his head.
1386. Are you aware whether at that time Rich, Langley, and Butchart had the cattle in their hands for sale? I do not know, but I understood she was going to put them into the hands of Mr. Dodds, of Maitland, for sale.
1387. When was that? In September she said so, in the presence of Mr. Robert Easton and Mr. Cosgrove.

| MR. FLETT. | MR. MORRIS, |
| MR. MORRICE, | MR. W. FORSTER. |

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Charles Edmond Langley, Esq., called in and examined :—

- C. E. Langley, Esq. 1388. By the Chairman : You are a surveyor? Yes.
1389. You were a partner, I understand, in the firm of Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart? Yes.
- 19 Nov., 1862. 1390. In the year 1854? Yes.
1391. This Committee has been appointed by the Legislative Assembly to inquire into the allegations contained in a petition presented by Miss Kelly, in reference to some transactions between Charles Skerrett and her with respect to stealing or selling cattle, or something of that sort; and it is in evidence that the firm of which you were a partner—Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart—had a lien on Miss Kelly's cattle in 1854? We had.
1392. Do you remember the amount of that lien? It was somewhere about £400—I cannot say the exact amount. Miss Kelly, if she has the documents, can show that.
1393. Was that lien upon all her cattle? It was a general lien; there was nothing enumerated. It was merely a lien on what she had at the time. We sold some of her cattle.
1394. Do you remember how much they realized? I do not.
1395. Where did they go to? They went to New Zealand, with a Mr. Wilson.
1396. Do you remember the date of the lien? I do not.
1397. Do you remember when it was paid off, or whether it was paid off? It was paid off; if I could obtain the book (I have looked for it, but I cannot find it) I could tell you. If I do not greatly mistake, the lien was paid off by Mr. A'Beckett.
1398. Or Mr. Dodds, of Maitland—which? Oh yes—Mr. Dodds, of Maitland—so it was. Miss Kelly put such a price upon her cattle that we could not dispose of them, and I recommended her to place them in the hands of Mr. Dodds, as being more convenient, and perhaps he could dispose of them when we could not. Mr. Dodds took up the liability of Miss Kelly to us, and took the cattle for sale. I do not exactly recollect the date. (Documents handed to witness by Miss Kelly.)
1399. After looking at that document, can you give the Committee any information as to the time when the lien was paid off? I find that it was November 10th, 1854.
1400. It was paid off on November 10th, 1854? Yes.
1401. Can you tell us when it was contracted, by that account—can you tell us when you advanced the loan? I cannot tell from this; it was some time in 1853.
1402. The 9th August, 1853, Miss Kelly put them into your hands for sale? I could not tell the date exactly.
1403. In June, 1854, they were in your hands, at any rate? Yes.
1404. And previous to that, for some time, they were in your hands? They were.
1405. In consequence of the existence of this lien, Miss Kelly was prevented from selling the cattle to anyone else—she could not legally dispose of them? Not without paying us back our money.
1406. She could not sell them so long as the lien remained? No.
1407. She might have sold the equity of redemption? Certainly, but she could not sell the cattle without our consent—until we relinquished our claim on them.
1408. Here is a paper purporting to be a sale of these cattle to a man of the name of Charles Skerrett;—it is dated the 6th June, 1854, and this is what it states :—“Sold this day, to Mr. Charles Skerrett, my cattle and brand, with my interest in Brimbin Station, and twenty unbroken horses, for the sum of £600—£400 paid in cash, and £200 by a bill at twelve months—the horses to be selected by Mr. Charles Skerrett, either at Manning Flats or Brimbin Station. The above £400 I now receive cash; and possession of the above-named cattle I this day give the said Mr. Charles Skerrett. ISABELLA MARY KELLY.” Had she power to dispose of those cattle legally according to the terms of this alleged agreement? Certainly not.

1409. Or the equity of redemption? She could have sold the equity of redemption, but she had no power to sell the cattle at all until she had taken them out of our hands. C. E. Langley, Esq.
1410. She could not have delivered the cattle? She could not have delivered the cattle unless we had given an order, and we should not have given an order unless we had obtained our money, as a matter of course. 19 Nov., 1862.
1411. Can you remember the number of cattle supposed to belong to Miss Kelly at the time? I could not tell you, without reference, what was the number, but there must have been a good many cattle to have lent £400 or £500 on them. She gave us a return, but I cannot find it. I cannot call to memory what number there were.
1412. Do you remember writing a letter to Miss Kelly, demanding payment of this loan? Yes.
1413. Do you know anything of a letter being written by your firm demanding payment of this claim, about 1854? I do.
1414. Can you give the Committee any idea as to the date? I cannot.
1415. It was in 1854, at any rate? Yes, in the latter end of 1854.
1416. Did Miss Kelly come down to Sydney? I think she did.
1417. You think it was when she came down that you advised her to remove the cattle out of your hands and place them in the hands of Mr. Dodds? It was.
1418. That would have been towards the end of August or September? It was at the latter end of the year, at all events. I cannot exactly recollect the date. I advised her to take her cattle out of our hands and put them into the hands of Mr. Dodds. We could not sell them at the price she put upon them, and we told her that if she put them into the hands of Mr. Dodds he might be able to find a purchaser when we could not. We sold some for her to Mr. Wilson, who took them to New Zealand, and for which we were paid, and we gave Miss Kelly credit for them as a matter of course.
1419. You have been examined on some trials of Miss Kelly's with respect to these cattle, I think at the Police Court on summons, have you not? I do not recollect.
1420. You were examined before a former Committee of this House, at any rate? I believe I was; I should like to see the evidence if I was—I do not recollect it. I am only speaking from memory; I have no record of it. I believe Skerrett reported that he bought the cattle from us.
1421. Skerrett reported that he bought the cattle from you? Yes.
1422. Had he ever any communication with you about the cattle at all? Never; we never saw him.
1423. You never saw him? We never saw him at all; we never knew him; he never bought any cattle from us. I told Miss Kelly, when she came down and said we had sold them to Skerrett, that we had never seen the man; I had never seen the man in my life.
1424. She told you that you had sold them to Skerrett? Yes, and we told her that we never knew him. I had never seen the man in my life; I never saw him until I saw him in Court.
1425. By Mr. Stewart: The liability was taken out of your hands about the latter part of the year 1854? Yes.
1426. And previous to that no one would have a right to sell those cattle without your concurrence? Certainly not.
1427. There could have been no delivery of the cattle? No one could have got delivery of the cattle unless we had been paid off by somebody.
1428. And no person did purchase any portion of the cattle, except those that you allowed to go to New Zealand? Those were the only cattle we sold; Mr. Dodds sent us a cheque. When we sent an account of Miss Kelly's, he sent us an account of the balance due to us.
1429. Then any statement that the cattle were purchased from you was not a truthful statement? No, it is a mis-statement.
1430. By Mr. W. Forster: Was it from Miss Kelly that you first heard anything about Skerrett? I think it was. She wanted to know if we had sold him the cattle. I do not exactly recollect the circumstances but I think that was it.
1431. Can you state about the time? It was about the latter end of the year 1854, but I cannot exactly state the date. I could do so if I had the day-book, but I cannot get it.
1432. By Mr. Flett: Where is it? It is in the Court.
1433. In the Supreme Court? In the Insolvent Court.
1434. By Mr. W. Forster: Miss Kelly was disposed to find fault with you, under the supposition that you had sold to Skerrett? She wanted to know the reason. She wanted to know the price. We told her that we had not sold them to anybody. Before that I had recommended her to send them to Mr. Dodds.
1435. Her affairs then were in Mr. Dodds hands at that time? Yes, I believe they were. This man went up in the meantime and made a statement to the effect that he had bought the cattle.
1436. This Skerrett? Yes.
1437. To whom did he make the statement? I do not know. I heard it.
1438. Oh! it is mere hearsay? I know nothing at all about it. Miss Kelly wrote to us letters about it, but I cannot get hold of them; I cannot find them.
1439. Were these transactions between you and Miss Kelly, settled afterwards? They were settled by Mr. Dodds, of Maitland, on the part of Miss Kelly.
1440. Did you know to whom Mr. Dodds sold? No.
1441. Do you know if Mr. Dodds sold to Skerrett? No.
1442. Do you know Skerrett at all? I did not know him at that time. I have seen him since. I never saw him until I saw him in Sydney a long time afterwards.
1443. Have you any idea of what the value of Miss Kelly's property was on the Manning, altogether? Which do you mean—Brimbin or Mount George?

- C.E. Langley, Esq.
19 Nov., 1862.
1444. I should like to know the value of all—if you know anything of the value of both—or of each, separately? One was a leasehold and the other was a freehold estate.
1445. What was the value of each? I could not say exactly, but we considered at the time we lent the money that it was a general kind of lien.
1446. You could not state, in round numbers, what you thought the value of her property would be? All that I can state is this, that a man of the name of Turnbull, who managed the horses on the Agricultural Company's land, told me that Miss Kelly had better horses than they had, and that they had shipped a lot of them to India, through their vessels, and that they had fetched more than their own horses. He also said that her cattle was superior.
1447. By Mr. Flett: This person's name was Turnbull? Yes.
1448. By Mr. W. Forster: You considered Miss Kelly a person of property at that time—a wealthy person? Yes, I thought she was a wealthy woman.
1449. Would you have lent her a much larger sum of money? We would have lent her £1,000 if she had asked it.
1450. Without any hesitation? Without any hesitation.
1451. I suppose you would have exacted a security? We did not think it necessary that she should give anything but a lien upon her stock.
1452. You do not know what Skerrett's circumstances were at that time? I do not know him at all.
1453. Have you had transactions with Miss Kelly which would enable you to judge of her signature? I have; I have some letters signed by her.
1454. Do you think you could swear to her writing, positively? I could if I had some of the letters with me.
1455. I suppose you consider yourself a good judge of signatures? I think so.
1456. Will you state whose writing you consider the body of these documents (No. 4 and No. 2) to be in, and whose are the signatures? The body is not her handwriting, as a matter of course.
1457. Is the signature? That is not her writing.
1458. Would you state that it is a forged signature? I cannot say; it is not her writing; she signs her name in a kind of angular hand. If you will look here you will see that the termination of "Isabella" is the same writing as this.
1459. You think it is the same writing as the body, do you? Yes; look at that "a." That is my opinion.
1460. To the best of your belief, would you say that that signature is written by the same person who wrote the body? Yes.
1461. What would you say with regard to the other document (No. 2)? It is just similar.
1462. Do you think the signature of the second document is Miss Kelly's? No.
1463. Do you think it is the same as the body? I do.
1464. Do you think the two papers were written by the same party? I do; that is my impression. Miss Kelly writes in an angular kind of a hand—a kind of scratchy hand. That was never written by Miss Kelly.
1465. By Mr. Flett: What is the number of those documents? They are numbered "4" and "2."
1466. By Mr. Forster: No. 4 is the first document I referred to, and No. 2 is the second? Miss Kelly writes an angular hand—they are not her writing.
1467. Has your evidence ever been taken in a Court of Justice in proof of signatures? Yes.
1468. The business you have been engaged in would lead you to be a tolerable judge? Yes, to prove letters.
1469. You consider yourself, from the business you have conducted, to be a tolerable judge of signatures? Certainly; I can almost copy any signature myself that I can see.
1470. Were you acquainted with any other transactions of Miss Kelly's in the disposition of her property, either with regard to leases or sales? No.
1471. You had nothing to do with them? No.
1472. By Mr. Flett: The first question I have got here, Mr. Langley, is—do you recollect when you sold the cattle to Mr. Wilson? Well, I cannot tell you the exact date; I cannot tell you the date.
1473. You spoke just now of June, 1854—can you tell us how long before June, 1854, that transaction took place? June, 1854—it was about that time. I think it was in the month previous to that.
1474. That you sold them to Mr. Wilson? Yes.
1475. In the month previous to June? It was either May or June—I cannot tell you which, without referring to the books. He took them away to New Zealand.
1476. I know all about that;—you say that in May or June you sold them to Mr. Wilson? Yes, I think it was; I cannot tell the date exactly.
1477. You say that you advised Miss Kelly to take the cattle out of your hands about the latter end of 1854? In August or November—I forget the exact date.
1478. It was about November, 1854? It was somewhere about that date—August or November; Miss Kelly can tell you.
1479. I am not asking Miss Kelly any questions at all? It was about that date.
1480. Did anyone ever tell you that Skerrett said he had purchased the cattle from you, or did ever you hear Skerrett say so himself—I think you said you never saw Skerrett before? No.
1481. You said in your evidence just now (which rather astonished me) that Skerrett reported that he had purchased the cattle from you;—did you ever hear any person say that Skerrett said so, or—? I heard that he said so.

1482. You do not say that Skerrett said so? No, not of my own knowledge.
1483. It is in your evidence that Skerrett had led you to believe that Skerrett said so? No.
1484. It would appear from your evidence that Skerrett had told other parties that he had purchased from you? So he did, I believe, but I could not tell you exactly who told me. Miss Kelly, when she came down, said, "You have sold my cattle to Skerrett?"
1485. We have all that? I recollect hearing it from other parties, but who they were I do not know now; I never knew Skerrett, and never sold him anything.
1486. Where is Mr. Rich or Mr. Butchart now? Mr. Rich is at Castlemaine, Victoria.
1487. And Mr. Butchart? Mr. Butchart is at Lambing Flat or the Lachlan, I not know which. The man who could give you information all about this is Mr. Munse; he is one of the partners of Christopher Newton, Brothers. He is in Brisbane, Queensland.
1488. We shall not follow him there;—were you ever subpoenaed to appear at the Supreme Court, when Skerrett was tried, in the first instance, for cattle-stealing? I do not think I was.
1489. You were not? No.
1490. Were you subpoenaed at the Supreme Court when Miss Kelly was tried? I do not think so.
1491. Were you subpoenaed ever before the Police Court when Skerrett was before it at the instance of Miss Kelly? No, I do not recollect it; I do not think I was; I do not recollect being at any of those places.
1492. You say that Miss Kelly took those cattle out of your hands in November, as near as you can recollect? In August or November—I cannot recollect the exact date; it is impossible to recollect matters distinctly for eight or nine years.
1493. Do you recollect writing a letter to Skerrett, dated 22nd November, stating that, to the best of your belief, Miss Kelly had taken the cattle out of your hands for sale about April or May in the same year? I never did.
1494. You never wrote such a letter? I never wrote such a letter.
1495. You had better say you do not recollect? It may have been written by some one else in the office—I never wrote it.
1496. Did ever you make an affidavit before Mr. Mort, as a Magistrate, that you never had all her cattle in your hands with the right of brand, but that all the cattle in your hands were 200 head, and that she took them out of your hands; that they were in your hands about February, 1854, but that they were taken again out of your hands previous to the sale she made to Skerrett;—you never made such an affidavit before Mr. Mort? I could not swear whether I did or did not. I recollect making an affidavit before Mr. Mort.
1497. What I have read to you now is the substance of it? Read it again.
1498. You swore in that affidavit that you never had Miss Kelly's whole cattle or brand for sale, or her station? I have stated that in evidence now—it was a general lien.
1499. From your statement you led us to believe—at least you led me to believe—that the lien was given upon the property as a whole, upon the cattle and upon the land? It was a general lien upon what she possessed.
1500. You swear in that affidavit that she never put anything in your hands but 200 head of cattle, which were in your hands in February, 1854, but which were withdrawn out of your hands months previous to the sale made to Skerrett? The date of Mr. Dodd's account will show.
1501. I am speaking of the affidavit? Here is the account where Dodds paid us. We might have had that 200 head of cattle at that time, and she might have placed other cattle in our hands afterwards, but I do not recollect it. It is hard to recollect for eight or nine years what occurs in business, where a man is up to his ears in different affairs. I think it was the 200 head of cattle that we sold to Mr. Wilson.
1502. It was the 200 head of cattle you sold to Wilson? I expect so. These account sales will tell you when Mr. Dodds paid us off.
1503. I am not referring to the account sales, but to your affidavit? It might lead to confusion—I cannot recollect it.
1504. I am putting the question now, knowing that the affidavit is in existence, and you say positively that you were paid off in the month of November, 1854;—this affidavit, then, is at variance with the circumstances as they occurred? She might have put some cattle into our hands at one time and some at another; I cannot exactly recollect how the matter was.
1505. Miss Kelly has never stated that she put cattle twice into your hands, in the course of her examinations? I think she did put them twice into our hands, but if I had the day book I could tell you in a second. She came down one time and withdrew them, and put them in again. If Mr. Munse were here he could tell you exactly how the matter was, because he kept a minute of everything of this kind as well as myself.
1506. It appears that Skerrett purchased those cattle from Miss Kelly, according to his own statement;—now, under all these circumstances, supposing you were Miss Kelly, and you had authorized your agents to sell your cattle, and that some person were to present himself and say that he had bought your cattle from your agents, without saying the sum he had given for them, or bringing you a letter from your agents, would you be likely to allow him to remain five months in possession of your cattle without interfering with him? If I were Miss Kelly under such circumstances, if he did not bring any documents, I would not take any notice of him.
1507. Nor allow him to sell your cattle? No.
1508. From your knowledge of Miss Kelly, do you think, judging by her antecedents, that she is a woman likely to allow any man to do such a thing with her stock? Suppose you were Miss Kelly (excuse my impertinence for making the remark), and a man came and represented to you that he had made arrangements with your agents, and came up as an accredited purchaser, would you not take notice of him?

C. E. Langley,
Esq.

19 Nov., 1862.

C. E. Langley, Esq. 1509. Not unless he brought a document from my agents, I would not allow him to sell a beast? He might sell them on her account, until she saw her agents and arranged the matter.

19 Nov., 1862. 1510. Five months is a long time? Yes.

1511. By the Chairman: You said you had 200 head of cattle—do you remember anything of having additional eighty head put into your hands? There were some put into our hands afterwards. I cannot exactly recollect it. It is eight or nine years ago.

1512. Your evidence formerly is—"we had 200 head of cattle at first, and then she wrote again that she would have eighty more"? What is the date of that?

1513. "Then she came down herself, and said we were not to advertise them any more if they would not sell"? If you go a little further, you will find that I advised her to put them in Mr. Dodd's hands for sale.

John Dawson, Esq., called in and examined:—

J. Dawson, Esq. 1514. By the Chairman: You are an attorney at law? Yes.

1515. This Committee has been appointed to inquire into the allegations of a petition of Miss Isabella Mary Kelly, with respect to certain trials in which you were engaged some years ago, between her and a man of the name of Skerrett. I think you were attorney for Skerrett? I was some years ago, when he was tried for cattle-stealing.

1517. Were you satisfied that the trial was a fair one, and that the conviction was just;—I may state that we have your evidence before a former Committee, when a similar question was put? I think I am entitled to reply to that question. I am not quite certain what transpired before, and I am not aware that in answering the question I shall be divulging anything communicated to me by Skerrett. Of course I could not give any evidence by which his confidence would be at all betrayed. I have no hesitation in saying that I think the conviction was just. Up to a certain point I believed the contrary, but at the close of the trial I regret to say that I conceived that the conviction was just. I speak of Skerrett's conviction.

1518. Have you any statement to make which would throw any light upon this matter? No. I came in obedience to the summons of the Committee. I have nothing to volunteer, but I am ready, so far as I can, consistently with my position to Skerrett, to give any information. I have nothing to volunteer. I am not supposed to have any thoughts one way or the other, unless they are elicited by the Committee. There is, however, one thought I have—if the original receipts are in the custody of the Committee I should be glad to see them. I have not seen them, I think, since the trial.

1519. The documents that are alleged to be forgeries? Yes.

1520. By Mr. W. Forster: Have you seen them before? I had them in my custody up to the time of the trial.

1521. Are those documents the two principal ones, marked respectively "4" and "2"? My belief is that these are the two. I think I have not seen them since they were put in evidence on the trial.

1522. You would not like to speak more positively than that? I think I may safely say that these are the two. It is a long time ago.

1523. Were those the documents which were the main evidence against Skerrett, do you know? No, these are the documents which were put in afterwards by Skerrett as evidence of the purchase.

1524. But they were the main evidence on which he relied in his defence? Yes.

1525. By Mr. Flett: There were other documents also; probably they were in your possession, acknowledged to be Miss Kelly's signature—Nos. 1, 3, and 5, and letters A and B—I regret they are not with these, because we could compare the signature also;—have you seen them? At this distance of time I cannot recollect.

1526. There was a lease of some milch cows and a lease of a house which she acknowledged to be in her handwriting;—letters A and B were signed by her? I remember something about a lease, but I do not recollect distinctly.

1527. By Mr. W. Forster: Have you any impression with regard to the authenticity of these documents which you could fairly mention to the Committee? I think I am entitled to say what my impressions are, first prefacing my remarks by stating that, up to a certain period, I believed these to be the signatures of Miss Kelly, but I do not believe them to be so now.

1528. Do you come to your conclusion from an inspection of them? Not so much from that (to be very honest with you), as from what transpired on the trial itself. I am prepared to state, with respect to the signatures, that they are not hers—that they are not like her usual signature.

1529. Are you well acquainted with her signature? Yes, for twenty years I have had experience of her signature.

1530. Do you consider yourself a tolerable good judge of writing? Yes, I think I ought to be, after an experience of about thirty years.

1531. Would you say that the signatures are not Miss Kelly's. My firm conviction is that these signatures are not those of Miss Kelly.

1532. Can you form any opinion as to the similarity between the signatures and the body of the writing—do you think they were written by the same person? My leaning would be, that the body of the documents and the signatures were not written by the same hand; but I am not prepared to give an opinion on that.

1533. Do you know anything of Skerrett's handwriting? Yes, I think so. My impression is, that the first one, at all events, is his.
1534. And the other—would you say that that was his? It is of the same character; I should say it was his too.
1535. Do you think the signatures are Skerrett's writing too? I am not prepared to say that; I cannot say that. If I had any leaning at all, I should say that they were not written in the same hand. I could not state that I fancied that the signatures were written by anyone in particular.
1536. Has Miss Kelly done a good deal of business with you? Yes, on divers occasions.
1537. Do you know anything of any other transactions in which Miss Kelly was engaged, in relation to the sale or leasing of her property, about which you could give any information to the Committee? Well, I have only a shadowy recollection of some instructions, I think to Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, to sell; but I do not know sufficient to state anything about it.
1538. It was at that time her business was in your hands, was it, generally? Yes, at that time she was transacting business with us.
1539. You have nothing that you could state to the Committee as to the circumstances under which they were signed or drawn up? I know nothing about them, other than the statements of Skerrett and his instructions to me, which, of course, I could give no evidence on.
1540. Did you ever see the writing of Skerrett's daughters, so as to know anything about it? No.
1541. You could not tell whether those two documents were written by them? No.

J. Dawson,
Esq.
19 Nov., 1862.

William Henry Mullens, Esq., called in and examined:—

1542. By the Chairman: You are an attorney? Yes.
1543. You reside in Maitland, I believe? Yes.
1544. Are you aware of the object of this Committee? Yes, I believe it is appointed to inquire into certain matters relative to Miss Kelly and Skerrett.
1545. Were you engaged professionally for Miss Kelly in any of these trials? Yes, I was, at the commencement, and prosecuted Skerrett at Bungee Bungee, Manning River; I forget the date, but it was some time in 1854.
1546. He was committed from Bungee Bungee? Yes, he was committed for trial in Sydney, by Mr. Day.
1547. And he was tried here;—were you engaged on the trial? I was not.
1548. There were some documents alluded to in that trial? There were two or three documents produced at the trial at the time.
1549. Two were said to be forgeries, and two genuine? I cannot be certain as to the documents, but I know that there were two documents.
1550. Similar to those (documents 4 and 2)? Similar to those.
1551. It was upon the fact that the jury believed that these documents were forged that Skerrett was convicted? I believe so, but I know only from reports; I was not at the trial. When I prosecuted these documents were produced, and Miss Kelly swore that they were forgeries, and Mr. Day committed Skerrett to take his trial at Sydney.
1552. Miss Kelly was afterwards tried for swearing that they were forgeries, and the documents were not presented, and Miss Kelly was convicted? So I believe.
1553. The documents were held by some of the Government officials—they were not produced and Miss Kelly could not get them;—would it strike you that she could make a fair defence on a trial of that sort without the production of these documents? Certainly not, because anyone who knows Miss Kelly's handwriting, as I have done for years, would know at once that they do not bear the impression of her signature. I saw the documents about two years before, and I picked them out from among other documents which bore her signature. I have seen her sign her name to deeds and correspondence for seven or eight years, and anyone knowing her handwriting at the time could easily detect which was hers and which was not.
1554. Do I understand you to consider that Miss Kelly would be greatly damaged in her trial by not having the documents produced? Undoubtedly. No reasonable man can have a doubt about it.
1555. Have you known Skerrett for many years? I have known him for seven or eight years.
1556. Did you ever do business for him professionally? I never did.
1557. There was a lease between a man named Richards and Miss Kelly—an alleged lease? Yes, I saw it.
1558. Was that after Miss Kelly was said to have signed it or before? There seemed to be something very extraordinary connected with that.
1559. That is the lease to Reuben Richards? I was asked by Richards, on one occasion, to look at a lease for him. I looked at this lease and there was something in it particularly wanting; I forget now what it was. I pointed this out to him, and he immediately brought me in another lease, purporting to be in Miss Kelly's handwriting, and I found that the particular point I had mentioned as being required, was in it. After that I saw another lease, the same evening.
1560. That was three leases? Yes, all bearing the same date. I said, "Is it not extraordinary that Miss Kelly would sign three leases on the same day for the same property?" He said, "Which do you think is the best?" I said, "I can offer no opinion about it; I

W. H.
Mullens, Esq.
19 Nov., 1862.

W. H. Mullens, Esq. see the matter clearly." When I made the suggestion as to what was required in the first lease, I saw another one not long afterwards purporting to bear Miss Kelly's signature.

1561. Did he ask you a question of this sort—"If that was not like Miss Kelly's signature?" He asked me if it was not Miss Kelly's signature. I told him it appeared to me to be not hers.

1562. Had Miss Kelly employed you to draw a lease of the same property at any time, do you remember? I am not certain.

1563. A lease of a paddock? My clerk told me something about it. It was done in the office, but it is not in my own hand. There were instructions given, I believe, for a lease to Richards. It struck me as most remarkable, seeing these three documents. I saw these as I was coming from Port Macquarie. I was at the District Court. Richards' is an accommodation-house on that line of road. I got there about 5 in the evening, and I stopped there that night, and it was then that this affair took place.

1564. By Mr. Morris: Were you examined in a case, Richards against Abbott, in which this matter of the forged lease came up, and in which Miss Kelly swore she had not signed the document? I wrote to Richards, telling him what evidence I could give, but before it could be furnished the case fell through.

1565. The case was what? The case was over and finished.

1566. And you did not give your evidence? No. I thought I would mention the matter to Andrews, and so I wrote and told him of it.

1567. By the Chairman: That was the time Andrews was convicted for declaring that if Reuben Richards had a lease from Miss Kelly, the lease must be a forgery? No, that was a civil action brought for calling him a perjurer.

1568. Have you seen Reuben Richards' writing? I defy any man in the world to know his writing. I have seen him write twelve different signatures.

1569. Do you know his wife, Ann Andrews? I do.

1570. Have you seen her write? I have not.

1571. You would not, then, be able to give an opinion about it? I have not seen her writing.

1572. By Mr. Morris: Do I understand you to say that you could not swear to his signature or to his general handwriting? I have seen twelve different signatures written by him.

1573. But would you be able to distinguish his handwriting if you saw it in a letter? I might. This evening when I saw these signatures, Richards said to me, "It is an extraordinary thing—I have such trouble to get money for the mails from the Postmaster General. I send so many signatures to Major Christie, that he had to send them to a Magistrate before he gets the money to the vouchers."

1574. By Mr. Flett: He said the Postmaster General returned them? No, he said he had great difficulty in getting the money, on account of the different signatures; that he often had to get them vouched by a Magistrate, or some one else, before he could get the money.

1575. He was telling you a falsehood? He told me that. I assert what I say, and I say it is true, no matter what your opinion may be on the matter. If I had thought of it I could have brought down three or four letters.

1576. By Mr. Stewart: You stated that you found something defective in one of the leases you saw at Richards';—was that defect in the signature or in the body of the lease? In the body, as to some power of underletting.

1577. There was something defective in the lease? Yes, but it was remedied in the second; and I saw a third.

1578. By Mr. Morris: Did you look at the contents? I glanced at them.

1579. Did the lease include the paddock about which the action between Richards and Andrews arose—can you remember that? To the best of my recollection the second lease did.

1580. The second lease did? The second lease did—the paddock contiguous to Andrews'.

1581. Did you remark upon Miss Kelly's signature as appended to that lease? I did.

1582. What was your impression? My impression is that it was not her signature.

1583. You told Richards so? I did.

1584. By Mr. Morrice: Can you say in whose handwriting those leases were written, and whose signature was attached? I believe they were all in Richards' handwriting—the leases.

1585. Can you say anything as to the signatures? The signatures had to me all the appearance of having been written with the same pen and ink. The writing had the same gloss and colour. I did not think much of the particulars at first, until I saw three leases of the same property bearing the same date, and also the signatures of the same parties.

1586. Can you say whose writing it was? I believe the body of the documents was in Richards' handwriting.

1587. By Mr. Flett: The bodies of the whole three? The bodies of all three.

1588. By the Chairman: Where was Miss Kelly at the time these leases were shown to you—was she in Darlinghurst or at liberty? She was in Darlinghurst Gaol at the time, to the best of my recollection. She was not on the Manning.

1589. By Mr. Morrice: Did you say that these signatures resembled the body of the leases? No; the signatures were more pointed, but they had the appearance of being written with the same coloured ink, and they appeared to have been written at the same time.

1590. You could not say that they were written by the same person? I would not like to say that.

1591. By Mr. Morris: Will you look at some letters here, which purport to be written by Reuben Richards? (Letters handed to witness.) Do you think they were so written, judging by the handwriting? Whoever wrote these wrote the leases. The leases were just the

the same sort of writing as that. They were written upon foolscap paper. It was the same style of writing as that—the lines as wide apart.

1592. Do you know anything of this man Richards of late—do you know anything affecting his character which you could tell the Committee? I was present when he was tried at Maitland, and was called as a witness.

1593. When, and on what charge? It was some time this year.

1594. What was the charge? Perjury.

1595. What was the result? He was found guilty. Then a special case was prepared by his attorney, and he was acquitted upon a point of law. He was in gaol two months.

1596. On the substantial merits of the case he was found guilty? By the jury he was found guilty, and got twelve months.

1597. By the Chairman: Do you know anything of the character of Skerrett? From the reputation of the man I believe him to be the greatest blackguard in the country—from what I know of him from people on the Manning, and up and down.

1598. By common repute? By common reputation.

1599. By Mr. Flett: Where did you hear that, sir—was it on the Manning? Yes, and at Port Macquarie. The fact of the matter is, there was hardly anything else talked about for twelve months.

1600. You never knew anything of him of your own knowledge? No.

1601. You never heard that he was before the Court at the Manning or at Port Macquarie? No.

1602. Who were the inhabitants on the Manning that mentioned this to you? I cannot say; I stopped at many places on the road, and heard it.

1603. By Mr. Morris: What was the special matter that was reserved in Richards' case? It was relative to some point of law, which the Judge did not leave to the jury.

1604. Was it a point of law which, if left to the jury, the jury would have been in a position to have declared that he had not committed perjury? My opinion is, that it was not; it was a point they were bound to have before them.

1605. The jury had the facts before them? Yes.

1606. By Mr. Flett: Did it not come to your knowledge afterwards that the evidence then given against Richards was not believed by Andrews' family? Certainly not.

1607. And that it was on that ground he was liberated? Certainly not. I could not have heard that which was not the fact; I heard the evidence in Court.

1608. I knew the whole case before it went to Maitland? You knew more than I did; I only know what I heard in Court. I was unexpectedly called as a witness.

Present:—

MR. CUNNEEN,
MR. FLETT,

MR. MORRICE,
MR. STEWART.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Laurence Joseph Spyer, Esq., called in and examined:—

1609. By the Chairman: You are a merchant in Sydney? Yes.

1610. This is a Committee appointed to inquire into the allegations of a certain petition of Isabella Mary Kelly, in which she states that she considers she has been unjustly treated in certain matters connected with a man named Skerrett, who was tried for cattle-stealing;—do you know anything of the case? I know nothing of the case as respects Skerrett, but I was on a jury when we tried a case in which the name was brought up, and in which Miss Kelly was a witness to prove the defendant's case. It was an action for slander and malicious defamation, in which Miss Kelly was a witness.

1611. Do you know anything of the purchase of cattle by Skerrett of Miss Kelly? That did not come before us at all; we did not inquire into anything connected with Skerrett and Miss Kelly; it merely came casually before us that Richards' wife, who was the plaintiff, had been subpoenaed to go to the trial of Miss Kelly.

1612. Do you know anything of your own knowledge of the transaction between Skerrett and Miss Kelly? Not about that transaction decidedly; all I know is, that we were called upon to try a case of slander and malicious defamation, in which Miss Kelly was the witness, and we were about five days in trying it.

1613. By Mr. Cunneen: Where was this tried? In Sydney, about two years ago, before Judge Dickinson.

1614. By the Chairman: Were you on the jury that convicted Miss Kelly? No, but I was on the jury that found against Miss Kelly's evidence. You will find that Mr. Smithers will give you the same sort of evidence as myself.

1615. Any farther statement you may have to make touching this case the Committee will be glad to hear. Mr. Flett, who requested that you might be summoned, is not present, and I do not know what questions he desired to ask you? I know nothing more; Mr. Flett who got me summoned should have been here to ask me what questions he required. The case

- case was Richards v. Andrews, in which a lease was in dispute. Miss Kelly gave evidence in that case, and we believed Richards in preference to Miss Kelly.
1616. By Mr. Cunneen: Miss Kelly was neither plaintiff nor defendant in that case? No, she was the witness upon whom the whole gist of the case fell.
1617. By the Chairman: This was with respect to a lease that Reuben Richards said had been given to him by Miss Kelly? Yes.
1618. Which Miss Kelly denied having given? Yes.

FRIDAY, 28 NOVEMBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. CUNNEEN,

MR. MORRIS.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

John Baker Smithers, Esq., called in and examined:—

- J. B. Smithers, Esq.
28 Nov., 1862.
1619. By the Chairman: You are a merchant tailor here? No, I have retired from business.
1620. You are aware of the object of this Committee? I am not quite aware of it. I presume, from the purport of your summons, your object is to examine with reference to a trial in the Banco Court, when I was on the jury in 1860, when Miss Kelly was examined as a witness.
1621. What was the case? It was a case of slander before Mr. Justice Dickinson—Richards versus Andrews. The trial lasted some six days.
1622. Was it about a lease? Yes.
1623. Which Miss Kelly was said to have given to Richards of some property on the Manning River? Yes.
1624. And Miss Kelly was examined on that occasion? She was examined on that occasion.
1625. And she declared that the lease was a forgery—that she never signed such a lease? Yes, she did.
1626. And you did not believe her? After a very long trial, and a very careful consideration of the matter, we believed the lease was a genuine one;—after the examination of very voluminous documents, letters, and various papers bearing her signature, all of which she admitted to be hers, and comparing the lease with them, especially the capital letters and orthography of the lease, and after four hours consideration, the jury believed the lease to be a genuine one, and gave a verdict to Richards.
1627. Did they believe that the body of the lease was in Miss Kelly's handwriting? Yes. It is singular that although the trial is so long back as 1860, I have saved the paper which was written by the Judge's clerk, containing the several counts, and the decision of the jury upon each. There were seven issues, and upon all of these we found for Richards. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix.) I find in my notes that I wrote eighty pages on this very case.
1628. Had you any evidence that Miss Kelly signed this, farther than your own judgment by comparing the handwriting? Several witnesses were examined, and they one and all swore that it was her handwriting. Among the witnesses was Mr. Flett, a Police Magistrate of the name of Rowley, and I think there were others; and upon their evidence, together with our own opinion, after a strict investigation into correspondence—some of it dating six years back—we came to the conclusion, one and all, not only that it was her signature, but that the whole of the lease was in her handwriting.
1629. Supposing a similar thing were to occur to yourself—that some person chose to forge your handwriting to a letter or lease—that you knew it to be a forgery, but that the forgery were so well done that everybody believed it to be your handwriting? I never saw in my experience of handwriting so strict an imitation but I could distinguish between a genuine signature and a forged one. I do not believe any man could forge my name so that I would not know it not to be my own signature.
1630. Suppose you were not believed on your oath, that the whole of the writing was so similar, and that circumstances gave an appearance in favour of your having written it, how would you justify yourself—how prove that you had not written it? I could only clear myself by asserting that it was not my handwriting.
1631. Supposing you were not believed? I could not help it, my evidence would go for what it was worth. Miss Kelly swore that she had not written it, but we could not believe her. I did not know Miss Kelly—I did not even know before that such a person existed, therefore I could not have been prejudiced.
1632. I do not allude to prejudice but to error, for you are aware that the value of a forgery consists in its apparent genuineness? I acknowledge, without fear of contradiction, that if that was a forgery it was the best I ever saw.
1633. Did you ever see any other forgery? Yes; I have been for some years engaged as a schoolmaster, and I have been six times subpoenaed, in six cases of forgery, as a judge of handwriting, and in five out of six of those cases I was proved to be correct.
1634. Was Mr. Mullens, the attorney of Maitland, examined before you? No, he was not.
1635. Do you know Mr. Mullens? I do; I have known him from his boyhood.
1636. Would you consider his declaration on oath of value? I should.
1637. If Mr. Mullens said that he was instructed by Miss Kelly to prepare a lease of this kind kind would you give him credit? Yes, I would. Mr. Richards swore that too in his evidence. J. B. Smithers, Esq.

1638. If Mr. Mullens had been examined in Court, and had declared that Richards showed him a lease purporting to be a lease of this paddock, and asked him if it was like Miss Kelly's writing, or if it was all right, and that he had pointed out something that was wrong in the lease, that afterwards Richards had shown him another lease of the same property, and also a third lease, all purporting to be drawn by Miss Kelly, all dated on the same day, and relating to the same property, would you have believed the evidence he gave you? Certainly; I should have given all possible weight to his evidence. 28 Nov., 1862.

1639. Believing that, do you think that would have altered your opinion? Why was not Mr. Mullens produced in Court?

1640. That is not my question;—would that probably have altered the view the jury would have taken of Miss Kelly's action in the matter? Very probably it would.

1641. By Mr. Morris: Supposing further that Mr. Mullens had told Richards that he did not believe it was Miss Kelly's handwriting, and had sworn that before the Court, would you have believed that? It would have had a serious effect upon the trial, no doubt; it would have had very great weight with the jury.

1642. Remembering too that Mr. Mullens was Miss Kelly's solicitor and knew her handwriting, her signature, and everything with regard to the matter? It would no doubt have had a great effect.

1643. How many leases were produced to you? Only one; I cannot tell you the date of that lease now.

1644. By the Chairman: Have you anything else to say with regard to this case? Nothing; I am quite a disinterested witness.

APPENDIX.

RICHARDS v. ANDREWS.

(On the Count in Trespass.)

Issue 1st.—Did the defendant break into, or cause other people to break into, the Mount George paddock? Yes.

Issue 2nd.—Had the plaintiff exclusive possession of the Mount George paddock at the time it is said to have been trespassed on? Yes.

Issue 3rd.—Had the plaintiff a lease of the paddock from Miss Kelly? Yes.

If you find all these three issues for the plaintiff he will be entitled to damages for the trespass,—how much? £30.

(As to the Count in Slander.)

Issue 4th.—Did the defendant maliciously speak such words as those in the Count for Slander? Yes.

Issue 5th.—If so, were the words true, and was it for the public benefit that they should be spoken? No.

If you find both the 4th and 5th issues for the plaintiff, he is entitled to damages for the slander,—how much? £50.

(As to the Count for Malicious Prosecution.)

Issue 6th.—Did the defendant prefer the accusation—1st, maliciously; and, 2nd, also without reasonable cause? Yes.

Issue 7th.—Was the prosecution determined?

If you find both the 6th and 7th issues for the plaintiff, he will be entitled to damages on the 3rd count,—how much? £20.

Laurence Joseph Spyer, Esq., called in and examined:—

1645. By the Chairman: Do you know Mr. Mullens, the attorney, of Maitland? I do not.

1646. Supposing a gentleman of high standing and reputation, against whom there never was any suspicion as to his veracity or integrity, were to give evidence of this description—that he was lawyer for Miss Kelly—that she had instructed him to prepare a lease of this purport to Reuben Richards—that that lease was never perfected—that Reuben Richards came to him with a lease purporting to be a lease of this property signed by Miss Kelly, and asked him if this was all right, if it was not like Miss Kelly's writing—that he said it was not all right, pointing out something wrong in the body of the lease, stating that he did not think the writing was Miss Kelly's, and inquiring why it was he asked if it was Miss Kelly's handwriting, if he knew it was genuine, and telling him to take care what he was doing—showing him, as clearly as language could show, his suspicion of the forgery he was about committing or had committed—that Richards took this lease away with him and afterwards produced another lease in which the deficiency was corrected that had been pointed out—that he afterwards came with another lease, and that all these leases bore the same date, purported to have been drawn up on the same date, to have been signed by Miss Kelly, and to relate to the same property;—taking all these circumstances together, had this evidence been placed before the jury of which you were one, would that have affected their decision with regard to this forgery? I think it would, but we examined the lease and other papers and letters written by Miss Kelly, and even with these we were three

L. J. Spyer,
Esq.

L. J. Spyer, Esq. or four hours in the jury room before we came to the decision, not in deciding as to whether it was *a forgery or not, for I believe we came to that in a few minutes, but in discussing the amount of damages.

28 Nov., 1862.

1647. Are you not aware that in order to make a forged document of any value it is necessary to have it as nearly like a genuine one as possible? That is a truism—of course.

1648. Did you know Kinnear? I remember something of the circumstances of his case.

1649. It was a very large note he forged upon the Bank of England, and the difficulty of detecting the forged note was so great that it was discovered only by some circumstance connected with the paper or ink? There is a case now in which the Bank of England are concerned, where they can only tell whether a note is a forgery by examining it with a lens, or by some private mark.

1650. It is possible that if the evidence I have now referred to had been brought before the jury they would have come to a different decision? Very possible.

1651. By Mr. Morris: Would you not have looked upon it as a very suspicious case, that when Richards showed a lease to Mr. Mullens, the solicitor, and when the solicitor had pointed out to him that there was not stated in the lease what he imagined there was, that Richards should have said, "Oh! I have got another lease at home which makes this all right," and should afterwards have produced a lease having that omission filled up? Decidedly, unless it could be accounted for why the second lease had been filled up properly.

1652. Would you not think it a suspicious circumstance that two or three leases should be made on the same day relating to the same property, and signed by the same party? One would suppose so, but there is great laxity in carrying on business in this Colony.

1653. If Mr. Mullen, who was well acquainted with Miss Kelly's handwriting in every way, had positively sworn that he did not believe this was Miss Kelly's handwriting, would that, with the other circumstances which have been mentioned, have weighed with you, and have induced you to give a verdict quite different to that you returned? In all probability it would.

WEDNESDAY, 10 DECEMBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. CUNNEEN,
MR. FLETT,

MR. W. FORSTER,
MR. STEWART.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Robert Hamilton Sempill, Esq., called in and examined:—

R. H. Sempill, Esq. 1654. By the Chairman: You are one of the Official Assignees of the Insolvent Court? I am.

10 Dec., 1862. 1655. This is a Committee of the Assembly, appointed to inquire into the allegations of a petition from Miss Isabella Mary Kelly, presented to the House on the 17th July, 1862, relative to certain transactions that have occurred between her and one Charles Skerrett, respecting the sale of some cattle and horses, and certain convictions of either of them arising out of these transactions;—have you any information to give the Committee on the subject? I have heard a good deal of these matters for some years past, particularly during the time that I was clerk to one of the Judges; but I am not aware that there is any information I can lay before the Committee, nor do I know why I have been summoned before the Committee—that is to say, I do not know the particular point on which I am required to give evidence.

1656. Do you know anything of the purchase or sale of these cattle? No; I only became acquainted with Skerrett and Miss Kelly officially. I first became acquainted with Skerrett in the way of business, and I know Miss Kelly from her having called upon me on various subjects connected with that business. I was the Official Assignee to Skerrett's estate when he became insolvent. He asserted that he was the owner of certain cattle which Miss Kelly claimed as her property, and that, I imagine, is the reason why she called upon me. I became conversant with the matter through the conversations I have had respecting it with Skerrett and Miss Kelly, and from having seen something of the different trials in the Supreme Court.

1657. Were you associated with Judge Dickinson at the time of Skerrett's conviction? Yes, I was his clerk at that time.

1658. Do you remember anything of some papers connected with this case being found in one of the drawers at the Supreme Court used by Sir Alfred Stephen, and supposed to have been left there by him? No, I know nothing of it personally, but I recollect hearing something about these papers being found.

1659. It is asserted that certain documents of great importance to this petitioner were not forthcoming at the time of her trial, when they were required, and that they were found afterwards in this drawer of the Chief Justice? Yes, I have heard so, but I know nothing of my own knowledge. 1660.

* NOTE (on revision):—This is incorrect; our time was occupied in examining signatures, letters, &c., before coming to the decision that the lease was Miss Kelly's signature; when we arrived at the conclusion that it was, we were not long in assessing damages.

1660. By Mr. Flett: You have answered some questions about these papers? I have said that I know nothing of them; I only heard that they had been found in a particular drawer. R. H. Sempill,
Esq.
1661. Do you think it possible that these papers could have lain in this drawer for the time they were said to have been there without the knowledge of some of the parties connected with the Court? I forget the period during which they were supposed to have been lost. 10 Dec., 1862.
1662. A period of several months? The thing is impossible.
1663. In what room of the Court was this drawer? It is a drawer in the Banco Court, and well known to me, because I had occasion to make use of one of them. There is a drawer for each of the Judges, and I had occasion to go to the one set apart for Judge Dickinson two or three times a day during the time the Court was sitting, and I suppose it would be the same with the other Judges' associates.
1664. Then you think it would have been impossible for them to have lain there undiscovered during so long a time? Quite impossible, without the knowledge of some person. If they were put there and ordered to be left there, they would have remained as a matter of course; but it was quite impossible that they should remain there in the ordinary course, for it was usual to clear out the drawers every week.
1665. Do you recollect who was Crown Solicitor at the time of Miss Kelly's trial? Mr. Moore Dillon, I think.
1666. Do you know if he was Crown Solicitor at the time these papers were found? No; I do not know when they were found, and if I did, I do not know the date when Mr. Dillon ceased to hold office.
1667. It has been supposed that he knew something of these papers, and that he was the most likely man to have been the custodier of them? I do not know what the course of business was in his office at that time, but if a registry of papers were kept, the absence of any particular document would be at once known and accounted for, and it would be seen to whom it had been delivered.
1668. You have known Skerrett for some time? Yes.
1669. I believe you have employed him? Yes. I have known him personally since the trial and since 1860.
1670. During that time have you ever known anything disreputable of him—anything affecting his character? No.
1671. Have you, in your capacity of Official Assignee, employed him during that time? I have.
1672. In cases of trust? Yes.
1673. And have entrusted him with large sums of money? No, not with large sums of money, but in situations of trust.
1674. You have entrusted important matters to him? Yes, in this way—I employed him twice. I engaged him upon one occasion and sent him down to Wollongong in an estate to which I was Official Assignee. He had to take stock of a storekeeper's goods, and to receive the debts and assets of the estate, and to account to me for the money as soon as he received it. He did take the stock and manage the winding up of the estate in such a way as to give every satisfaction, and the creditors commended him highly. In a previous case he was engaged by an agent of mine, who reported to me that his services had been very valuable, and that he had been exceedingly active and faithful in what he had to do.
1675. And is that your own opinion? It is.
1676. As well as the opinion of others who had an opportunity of judging of him? Yes. I should have continued to employ him, but that he became unfit and it was impossible to employ him. I found him very active and trustworthy in the business for which I required him, which demands all the quickness, intelligence, and fidelity of a good detective officer, and I found that he was very active, energetic, and trustworthy. I only knew from these matters, as I had no previous knowledge of him.
1677. Do you know Reuben Richards? I do.
1678. Do you recollect that he had an action against Andrews? I recollect something about it, but I only know Richards as the principal creditor in an estate of which I was Official Assignee.
1679. You employed Richards, I believe? Yes, because he was principal creditor in the estate on which I employed him.
1680. Were there not other causes for his employment? There were several reasons. The first was that he was the principal creditor in the estate, and had therefore, as I conceive, a great interest in its successful realization. The next was that he was a resident within a quarter of a mile of the insolvent's property, being the nearest neighbour of insolvent; and next, because he was conversant with most of the property of the estate, and more especially with the cattle and horses that formed a large item of it.
1681. You found him very active? Yes, he appeared to me to be very zealous; but he had a great interest in the successful management of the estate, and, as far as I know, he acquitted himself honestly of the trust reposed in him.
1682. You are aware that in carrying out that trust he gained the ill-will of Andrews and his whole family? So I heard.
1683. Were you aware that he and Andrews had been on bad terms for some years past? I did not know it when I appointed him, but I heard so afterwards. I was told that they were great enemies, and was reproached for having employed as agent of the estate a personal enemy of insolvent's. I need not say that I knew nothing of that when I employed him, as I only knew him then as principal creditor in the estate. When I found that he and Andrews were on such bad terms, I ceased to employ him.
1684. Do you know William Andrews, the brother of insolvent Joseph? Yes.
1685. He ranked as a creditor on his brother's estate? He did.

R. H. Sempill, Esq. 1686. For wages, as his brother's servant, at the rate of £40 a year? I do not recollect the particulars.

10 Dec., 1862. 1687. However, he ranked as a creditor? Not only that, but he proved also; his claim was for wages, and for a large amount. I have Andrews' schedule with me here, and on referring to it I find him entered on the schedule as a creditor for wages, £120. Andrews himself told me that his brother was a creditor, that he had been in his service, but that being his brother he did not demand his wages when due, but left them in his hands. When he proved before the Commissioner, he proved for a much larger amount than was entered on the schedule—for £300 or something of that sort.

1688. Have you any recollection of the circumstance of his having been sent to Maitland with cattle by his brother, and of his getting drunk there and being picked up by the police, when a letter was found upon him? Yes.

1689. A letter from Joseph Andrews to his brother, giving him instructions to do some improper thing with the cattle entrusted to him? Yes.

1690. He was arrested afterwards in consequence of a horse being found in his possession, the property of his brother's estate, and that he was about to make away with? No, he was arrested not because of a horse being found in his possession, but because he rescued a horse that was under attachment, having been seized by the messenger of the Court.

1691. Reuben Richards then arrested a horse which William Andrews claimed as his property? No. The messenger I employed in the first instance was Mr. Kingsmill, of Maitland. He attached this horse with others belonging to Andrews' estate; but having done this he did not keep to his instructions, for having arrested them and taken possession he let them run again out into the bush, whereas my directions were that he should keep possession of everything which he had once attached. Mr. Kingsmill finding that he had to go to another part of the country on other business, wrote me to appoint another messenger. I consequently represented the case to Mr. Puffoy, who was then Commissioner, and he issued his warrant, directed to Richards, by which he was ordered to attach all the property of Andrews not previously attached by Kingsmill, and to take possession of whatever Kingsmill had previously attached. William Andrews seized and took possession of one of the horses that had been previously attached by Kingsmill and afterwards turned out. It was for that that he was taken to the Police Court and committed for trial.

1692. He afterwards got clear? A bill was not found against him.

1693. And then William Andrews turned round and took Richards up for perjury? Yes.

1694. He took his trial for the offence at Maitland? Yes.

1695. And was found guilty, but was almost immediately liberated? The case was brought before the Supreme Court on appeal, and Richards was discharged.

1696. By the Chairman: On some technical point, I presume? I forget now the point taken, but I believe it was one reserved at the trial.

1697. By Mr. Flett: Have you ever heard that Richards was twice before then summoned by Andrews before the Bench, at Wingham? I have heard of several transactions between him and Andrews before the Police Court at the Manning and at Sydney.

1698. In consequence of his having acted as your agent? Yes.

1700. I mean before they were produced—from whose hands would they come to the Court? From the Crown Solicitor.

1701. Then how could they get from his hands into the Chief Justice's drawer? I cannot say, without they were put there in order to be found.

1702. They could not get there in the course of business? Not in the ordinary course, certainly.

1703. Nor could they have got there accidentally? No; unless they may have chanced to have fallen into the hands of some ignorant person, who, not knowing where to put them thrust them into the drawer. In the course of the business of the Court, where a matter is in the hands of a Judge, if he requires a document connected with the case from the Crown Solicitor, he always sends for it, and it is forwarded to him. At the same time I do not know if they keep in the Crown Solicitor's Office any registry of the loan and return of papers sent out of their office. But the Judges having the favour of using these documents are exceedingly careful with them, and are accustomed to return them very regularly.

1704. And supposing the Judge to have had them, in whose custody would they be during the time he required to make use of them—where would they be? In the Judge's chambers.

1705. Who would have custody of them? The Judge's clerk.

1706. Who was clerk to the Chief Justice at that time? Mr. Lee.

1707. At the time these papers would have been used in Court? Yes, I think so; I am almost sure he was.

1708. Who was clerk to the Chief Justice in the next year, 1860—did Mr. Lee remain clerk? No, he went Home in February, in the same vessel with the Chief Justice, Sir Alfred Stephen.

1709. And who was Judge's clerk in his absence? Sir John Dickinson was appointed Chief Justice during Sir Alfred Stephen's absence, and Mr. Rowley was his clerk.

1710. Mr. Rowley the attorney? No, a gentleman who is now Registrar under the District Courts Act, at Berrima.

1711. Would not one of these gentlemen be able to give us some information as to these documents, and the way in which documents were ordinarily kept? I do not think so, because the papers must have passed out of the Judge's chambers before the Chief Justice went to England.

1712. But at the time the documents were discovered in 1860, would not the gentlemen who were Judges' clerks at that time be able to give us some information in regard to how they had been mislaid, or how they had been found? I do not think so, because the Judges, and the then Chief Justice especially, was very particular in matters of this sort. Having acted as his clerk for some time, I am aware how very particular he was in taking care of papers entrusted to him.

R. H. Sempill,
Esq.
10 Dec., 1862.

1713. Then is it your impression that the document not being forthcoming in 1859, and being found the next year amongst the papers of the Chief Justice—that circumstance could not have been accidental, but that they must have been conveyed there in a fraudulent or improper manner? I think so.

1714. What person could have access to the papers or chambers of the Judges who, by any possibility, could place the papers where they were found? The drawer in which they were said to be found is one of three situated in the Banco Court. Each of the Judges have one drawer. They are in the public Court, and anyone could put the papers there.

1715. Are they not kept locked? No, they are not locked; they are used for the temporary deposit of papers only.

1716. In that case, if the papers were put there, it must have been by some person well acquainted with these circumstances? Yes, by some one who knew this to be the Judge's drawer; and it must have been put there to be found, if placed there by a person not connected with the Court.

1717. At what period was it that you employed Skerrett under yourself as Official Assignee? I have said that my first acquaintance with him was when he became insolvent, in April, 1860. He then proceeded to the Manning under my direction in this way—his schedule shows that he is the owner of 500 head of cattle at the Manning River, and he informed me that these cattle could be easily collected if the Commissioner would send down his warrant authorizing their seizure. I represented this to the Commissioner, and he issued his warrant for their attachment.

1718. He represented himself to be the owner of these cattle? Yes.

1719. Did he declare himself to be the owner of any landed property? No freehold land, but only some leasehold land at the Manning, which he had taken from Mr. Croasdaile at a yearly rent of £30. I found this statement to be correct, that there was a lease of this land on the terms stated, but as it was of no value to me I surrendered it to the lessor—Mr. Croasdaile.

1720. Miss Kelly's name was not connected with this lease? No. It was granted to Skerrett by Mr. Croasdaile, of Newcastle.

1721. And besides this he stated himself to be the possessor of 500 head of cattle? Yes. He described them in his schedule as a mixed herd of horned cattle, amounting to 500 head, running at the Manning River.

1722. Does it not specify more particularly the locality where they are running? No. It further states also twenty head of horses running at the Manning. There is a note to the entry of these cattle, stating that these are not in the possession of insolvent, but are running at the Manning Flats.

1723. Was there any mention of Miss Kelly's name in connection with these cattle? No; but in questioning him he informed me that they were cattle he had bought from Miss Kelly.

1724. Did you take possession of them afterwards? I did not act at all in the matter until I had made inquiries respecting it, because I had heard a great deal against Skerrett; but I made inquiries from people who knew him, and upon whose word I could rely. The question, as it seemed to me, was this—"Had Skerrett money at the date when he represented that he had bought the cattle?" It was upon this point that I wished to satisfy myself, because if he had no money then he could not have bought the cattle, and they did not belong to him. However, I was informed by several persons that he had money at that time; amongst these was Mr. Blake, and some other persons on whose word I could rely. Having this reliable information, and thinking I was entitled to the cattle, I applied to the Commissioner, who issued his warrant for their attachment. This warrant Skerrett conveyed to the Manning, to the person to whom it was directed, and then assisted that person in getting the cattle in, pointing them out and helping to collect them. In this, however, he was resisted by the persons in whose charge the cattle were, and the result was that they were not got.

1725. Then you, as representing the estate, did not get them? No.

1726. Although you believed that you were entitled to them? I believed so then, though I did not renew the attempt to get possession of them. A few were got on that occasion, and a great many of them came to me afterwards in another estate to which I was Official Assignee.

1727. Not as assets in Skerrett's estate? No; though a few head were got by the person to whom the warrant was issued.

1728. Then a few were got, but in consequence of the resistance your agents met with, you did not get the remainder? No. As I was informed, they in fact collected a large number of them, and were about to drive them off, when these other persons came up and whipped them away. They said that my agent was taking some of their cattle, and then whipped them off.

1729. In a case of this kind is it the custom for the Official Assignee to submit to any claim that may be made? We are very often obliged to submit when we have no other course open to us.

1730. And did you think that you had right on your side? I did.

1731. Do you think so now? I am doubtful about it now.

1732. Was not the surrender of the cattle caused by this feeling of doubt? No. I had no doubt

R. H. Sempill, Esq. doubt then as to my right; but it was caused entirely by my not being strong enough to contest the point—law is very expensive.

1733. Would not the law have supported you? Yes, if I had had a great deal of money it would, but not otherwise.

1734. Then it was because the expense of maintaining your right would be so great that you relinquished it? Yes.

1735. And that is a case which frequently happens? Yes, very frequently.

1736. Were there any assets at all in this estate of Skerrett's? No, nothing.

1737. What became of the few head of cattle which you say your agent secured? They were sold by him, and the proceeds were retained by him to pay him his expenses. Besides this he sent me in a bill for his services and expenses, and afterwards threatened me with an action.

1738. Did not this result generate any doubt in your mind as to the bonâ fides of Skerrett's claim? No; I had no doubt until afterwards, when I heard the further particulars of the case.

1739. Have you had any reason since then to doubt the correctness of your first impression? I cannot say precisely that I have. I knew that Skerrett had been convicted of cattle-stealing in connection with this very herd of cattle, and then that he had received a complete pardon on account of that conviction. Then again, Miss Kelly was convicted of perjury in connection with this matter, and after a time she was pardoned and liberated. Thus I did not really know what to think.

1740. Did anything occur during your intercourse with Skerrett that led you to doubt his sanity? No.

1741. How long have you been acquainted with him? It was in April, 1860, that he first came to me.

1742. Until what time afterwards, speaking generally, did your intercourse continue? About a year.

1743. And during that period of twelve months, you had frequent business intercourse with him? Not frequent, but occasional. As I say, he was employed twice by me—once when he was engaged by an agent of mine, and once in another case. In both cases his services were very valuable.

1744. When Skerrett gave you an account of his cattle, and you thought it your duty to take possession of them, did you act upon any documentary evidence placed in your hands? No.

1745. Was Skerrett's claim then made out to your satisfaction, entirely on his own word of mouth testimony? No, I acted upon his oath.

1746. He made an affidavit on the matter? Yes, he made an affidavit to the correctness of his schedule.

1747. Was that the only evidence upon which you acted? The only documentary evidence.

1748. He did not produce any bill of sale or receipt for the purchase? He did not; but one strong point was, that in connection with the cattle I found his lease of land, and I regarded the one as being quite consistent with the other.

1749. I do not understand how you connect the one with the other? In this way, that the holding a lease of land was quite consistent with the possession of stock.

1750. That it was likely that as he had land that he would also have stock to put on it? Yes.

1751. Did he mention to you at this time that he held any document or receipt that would be available as evidence of his ownership? I think he did; I think he referred to some document of a somewhat similar nature to that which has been since found.

1752. Did you ask to see these documents? No. He did not have them, but only referred to them, if I remember right.

1753. What did he tell you about them, if you can tax your memory to recollect the conversation? I really do not recollect. There are so many different things that have come under my notice, and claimed my attention since then, that it is impossible I should recollect.

1754. Is it not a common rule of law that where documentary evidence is referred to, every endeavour should be made to have that evidence produced? I am almost afraid to speak positively, but I think he referred to these documents as not being accessible. At all events, had he referred to them, and they had been accessible, I should have endeavoured to get them.

1755. You speak of it, then, only as an impression on your mind? Yes; rather as a precaution that I should have taken had they been procurable.

1756. Then you scarcely think it likely that he could have referred to these documents as being accessible, as in that case you would have insisted upon their production? I should certainly have wanted to see them, if they were in any custody in which they could be seen.

1757. So that your not having seen them shows that they were not accessible? Yes.

1758. Are these documents mentioned in the affidavit you have referred to? I think so, but I am not certain.

1759. In the affidavit made by Skerrett at the time of his insolvency, is there any mention made of the documents which might be produced as evidence of his property in the different items mentioned in his schedule? There is not.

1760. Is there any mention of it in the affidavit? No. By the affidavit I mean the oath the insolvent takes to the correctness of his schedule. I may also explain, that when an insolvent files his schedule, and the surrender of his estate is accepted, he is supposed to go directly to his Official Assignee to give him such information as he may require. When they come to me it is a regular demand that I make for all papers and documents connected with the estate, 1761.

1761. That being your regular custom, you assume that you made it in this case? Yes, I R.H. Sempill, Esq.
1762. And he did not produce any? He did not.
1763. Had you any knowledge at all of Miss Kelly's property, in your capacity as Official Assignee? No, none. 10 Dec., 1862.
1764. Do you know anything of Miss Kelly in any other way? In what respect?
1765. With respect to the value of her property? No.
1766. But I think you stated that the 500 head of cattle which Skerrett gave in to you, as part of his assets, were at one time the property of Miss Kelly, or were obtained from her in some way by Skerrett? Yes; according to his statement, they were the same cattle that he declared he had purchased from Miss Kelly.
1767. By Mr. Stewart: The cattle that Skerrett represented as his, as having been bought from Miss Kelly, were those cattle of which the ownership was contested? Yes.
1768. And they were not at the time of his insolvency in his possession? Not in his actual possession, because they were represented as running in the bush.
1769. And when you wished to attach them you found they were the property of some one else, and that the ownership of them was disputed? Yes. It was this—other parties, not the owners, but persons having a right to take the cattle, came in and drove them off.
1770. And to prevent trouble and expense you would not interfere further in the matter? I found, upon receiving a report from my agent, that I could not proceed further without applying to the Supreme Court for an attachment against those parties who had rescued the cattle. This would have cost at least £100, and as I had no funds in hand on account of the estate, I could not move in the matter.
1771. By Mr. Cunneen: Are you aware who the persons were who took these cattle from the possession of those who had collected them? Yes, I was aware that some of them had been taken by Mr. Begbie, and some of them by Mr. Andrews.
1772. Did they represent or allege by what right they prevented your agent from taking the cattle—did they themselves set up any right to them? Yes; some weeks after the rescue Joseph Andrews called on me, in Sydney, and said that he had understood that I had authorized the seizure in Skerrett's estate of some of his cattle, and that he would not permit such a thing to be done.
1773. Did he say they were his? He said some of them were. The expression he used was, that we were attempting to take some of his cattle. He did not speak of the lot as his, but complained that my agent had taken some of his.
1774. Was there any other party who claimed the ownership of the cattle besides Joseph Andrews? Yes, Begbie also claimed them. I think he claimed the herd as his—there was a further claim made on them in right of rent.
1775. Was there any particular brand on the cattle of which Skerrett gave you the list—how did he represent them to be branded? With a circle K, I think. I could have given the Committee much better information if I had known the subjects upon which I should be questioned. For instance, on the present point it is possible that I may have by me some notes of the statement that Skerrett made to me in the first instance, immediately after his insolvency, and by referring to that I could have answered without hesitation. However, I am certain that he represented some of them to be branded K in a circle, if not the whole of them.
1776. In your instructions to your agent you would, I presume, be very particular in giving him the brands and description of the cattle he was to collect? Yes.
1777. In order to identify, without mistake, the cattle which Skerrett said were his? Yes. But Skerrett professed to know them well, without reference to the brands, and he went up with the warrant to place in the hands of my agent, and with instructions from me to accompany the agent, so as to point out the cattle, that they might be attached. I afterwards got a large number of cattle in Joseph Andrews' estate, branded circle K, and I was informed that they were some of the cattle claimed by Skerrett, and that they were branded with Miss Kelly's brand. These cattle I afterwards sold as an asset of Andrews' estate, so that not only were they claimed by Andrews, but they were given up by himself, on his insolvency, as his own.
1778. By the Chairman: Were you Official Assignee to Begbie and Cooper's estate? No; but I was connected with some of their affairs, though not as Official Assignee. They were large creditors in Andrews' estate, for which I was Assignee, and Mr. Begbie was the leader of a party who endeavoured to stop me in the plan I was pursuing for the realization of the estate. Being a person of some influence in the district, he represented to the creditors there that the estate was a very poor one, and that if it remained in my hands the assets would all be swallowed up in expenses through the steps I was taking. In this way he got them to agree to accept from the insolvent a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound.
1779. Did Andrews agree to that? No; Begbie endeavoured to make the creditors accept it, but I resisted, and going on with the course that I had marked out for myself from the beginning, I ultimately succeeded in realizing 20s. in the pound for the creditors.
1780. Then you were not Official Assignee to Begbie and Cooper's estate? No.
1781. Who was? Mr. Morris, I think.
1782. You stated, I think, that the proper custodier of these papers was Mr. Moore Dillon? Yes, the Crown Solicitor whoever he may have been.
1783. He was the person who should have had them in charge? Yes.
1784. And in the Judge's department, suppose the Judge to have borrowed them, who would have charge of them—not the Crown Solicitor? No; he would only have charge on their being returned from the Judge to his office.
1785. So that after he had parted with them to the Judge, he would have nothing more to do with them until they were returned to his office? No.
- 1786.

- R. H. Sempill, 1786. Do you remember who was clerk to the Chief Justice before Mr. Lee? Yes, Mr. Elliott.
1787. Are you aware what time he left? I should say fully a year before.
- 10 Dec., 1862. 1788. I will read you a question put to Sir Alfred Stephen by Mr. Hart, and His Honor's answer, on the occasion of his being examined before a former Committee of the Assembly, which was appointed to inquire into certain complaints of Charles Skerrett:—"Do you think that great blame is attachable to some one for losing these documents, and that Miss Kelly might not have been convicted of perjury if these documents had been produced at her trial? The latter portion of this question I cannot answer; as to the first portion, my answer is as follows: My clerk, in July, 1857, was a Mr. Elliott, and I am perfectly confident that I directed him, as I always do after similar investigations, which are very numerous, to return the documents to the person from whom I got them. It is perfectly certain that he did not do so; but as these investigations are usually in the evening (the day-time being generally occupied in Court), and sometimes continued to a late hour in the night, he might not have taken the documents with him, or he may have taken them with other documents, and by mistake have mixed them with the Banco papers. I have no knowledge whatever how they became mislaid. A few weeks ago, my present clerk and I searched every drawer in which it was at all probable that they might have been placed. But it appears that the Banco drawer was not searched, nor should I have thought of searching it. Finding, however, some weeks ago, that the drawer was extremely full, upwards of forty or fifty papers being there, some of old date, I directed it to be emptied and re-arranged; and, in arranging the drawer, these papers were found at the bottom. So at the least I was informed by Mr. Lee, for personally I have no knowledge of the subject. He brought the papers to me." I would now ask you if, in your opinion, it is at all likely that such a mistake should be made—that the papers should have got into the wrong drawer without any of the clerks knowing anything of it? I think it more likely that they would remain for a long period undiscovered in the drawer of the Chief Justice than in that of either of the Puisne Judges, because he, being Chief Justice, has all the correspondence of the Court devolving on him, and his drawer is, consequently, more full of papers than that of either of the other Judges. At the time I was clerk to Judge Dickinson, he was one of the Puisne Judges, and his drawer was not so full of papers as that of the Chief Justice, and I used to clear it out regularly once a week. The drawer of the Chief Justice, besides the ordinary papers of the Court, contained the current correspondence of the Court.
1789. Then it is possible that they may have been there without its being known? Yes, I think it is possible. They may have been left behind on his leaving the Colony, and then may not have been interfered with.
1790. And being in that drawer, Miss Kelly would, of course, have been precluded from using them on the trial? Of course she would.
1791. And then as to the latter part of the question—as to the influence these documents would have had on her defence;—from your knowledge of proceedings in Courts of law, and from your long experience of trials in the Supreme Court, are you of opinion that in a case where a prisoner is charged with perjury of this description, and when a jury have convicted another person of cattle-stealing, based upon forgery of a document which the prisoner is reported to have signed and has denied the signature, and has been brought before the Court for such denial on a charge of perjury,—do you think that the want of the documents on the trial would be likely to influence the decision of the jury? I should think that the jury would go by the evidence that was before them.
1792. I think I understood you to say that these papers being in the drawer of the Banco Court, it would be out of the power of Miss Kelly to avail herself of them as evidence on her trial? Of course. It was unknown in whose custody these papers were at the time of the trial—they could not be produced.
1793. By Mr. Flett: Amongst the cattle that came into your hands in Andrews' estate there were a number having Miss Kelly's brand? Yes.
1794. Have you any knowledge of what they realized? No, I cannot say from memory.
1795. Are you aware of what amount of money was paid by Andrews' estate to Begbie and Cooper's estate? Yes, I can tell by referring to the schedule.
1796. Will you state, as near as you can, what amount was paid? Do you mean the amount of proof?
1797. Yes? The amount proved is £390, promissory notes given for cattle purchased, to Cooper and Begbie.
1798. By the Chairman: You said that a person was sent down by the Court to take charge of the property in Skerrett's estate? Yes.
1799. Who was it? A man named Dennis.
1800. Do you remember who recommended him to the Court? The course is not to recommend to the Court but to the Assignee.
1801. Who recommended him to the Assignee? I made inquiries as to who he was, and whether he was a respectable man. I was told that he was, and that he was a responsible man with property of his own. I mentioned his name to Mr. Purefoy, the Commissioner, who recommended him for appointment to the Court.
1802. Who recommended him to you? Not anybody in particular.
1803. How then did you come to know of him? I asked Skerrett who there was up there that I could get to act, and he mentioned two or three persons to me. I made inquiries respecting the persons he had mentioned, and finding Dennis to be a responsible man I sent him the warrant.
1804. Who were the other parties mentioned to you? I forget now, but I think one was Mr. Chapman.

1805. Then your first knowledge of this man Dennis came from Skerrett? No, not my knowledge of him; Skerrett merely mentioned his name to me amongst others, as a party who would act if a warrant were sent to him, and then I made inquiries from other persons whom I knew, in order to satisfy myself as to his respectability and responsibility. The usual course is to send the warrant to the constable of the district, but on my asking if there was a constable in the neighbourhood I was told that there was not. I asked Skerrett then who there was there that I could find to act in the matter, and he then mentioned the names of two or three persons, amongst whom was Dennis.
1806. And from whom did you make inquiries respecting him? From several persons—from Mr. Flett for one.
1807. Did he recommend him to you? No. On my asking him about Dennis, he told me that he was a man who had some property of his own, and was therefore a responsible party to employ.
1808. How did it happen that you went to Mr. Flett? I knew that Mr. Rowley, the solicitor, was well acquainted with that district, and I, being a complete stranger to it, went to him to see if he knew Dennis. He said he believed him to be a respectable man, and I then asked if he could tell me any person to whom I could go to make further inquiry, and his reply was, "Why not go to Mr. Flett, he knows the district?" I then met Mr. Flett and asked him about Dennis, and he said that he was an honest, respectable man, who had some property of his own, and that I could therefore rely on him.
1809. Did Mr. Chapman act? No warrant was sent to him.
1810. Was he not a creditor of Andrews' estate? No, you are alluding to Mr. Cooper. Mr. Cooper was the chairman of the meeting of Andrews' creditors at which it was proposed and agreed to take 2s. 6d. in the pound. But as I knew from Miss Kelly that she was a creditor of Begbie and Cooper for these very cattle for which they claimed against Andrews, I would not consent to the arrangement; and I ultimately, by carrying out my own ideas, got 20s. in the pound for the creditors.
1811. Did Miss Kelly make good her claim? Her claim was against Begbie and Cooper and not against Andrews, and this was one of the things that operated on me not to assent to the arrangement, for there seemed to me something so manifestly corrupt in their selling cattle that they had not paid for, and then agreeing to take 2s. 6d. in the pound for their claim, that I opposed it.

R. H. Sempill,
Esq.
10 Dec., 1862.

John Morris, Esq., called in and examined:—

1812. By the Chairman: You are an official assignee? I am.
1813. Do you know anything of the matters between Miss Kelly and Skerrett? No, I know nothing at all about either of the parties, any more than that I was official assignee to Begbie and Cooper's estate.
1814. And Miss Kelly was a creditor in that estate? Yes. A couple of bills of exchange to her were proved from the hands of Lennon and Cape; they proved in the Insolvent Court for these bills as their property, and received the dividend upon them.
1815. What was the amount? The amount of the two bills was £1,090.
1816. And what dividend did they receive? They received £190 17s. 10d.
1817. When Begbie and Cooper were insolvent, their estate was placed in your hands? Yes.
1818. How did they account for their insolvency? I cannot recollect that.
1819. Did they say anything of a man named Skerrett interfering to prevent them from collecting their cattle, purchased from Miss Kelly? I have heard the name of Skerrett in connection with this matter, but I cannot speak as to the particulars.
1820. Can you recollect what it was stated these bills to Miss Kelly were given for? I cannot tell now; the bills were proved by Lennon and Cape as their property, and as they are very respectable people, and as there was no allegation of anything being wrong about the bills, their proof was accepted without question.
1821. It struck me, however, that you must have become acquainted with the reasons they gave for their insolvency? No doubt, but I do not recollect now. Had I been aware that such a question would be asked, I would have taken a minute of the examination before the Commissioner.
1822. Will you append to your evidence the reasons given by these insolvents for their insolvency? I will do so.
1823. By Mr. Flett: How much do you say that Lennon and Cape received? The amount was £190 17s. 10d. I have here a statement of the estate in which everything is explained.
1824. Was there not some landed property in this estate? I cannot recollect, but everything that belonged to the estate was realized.
1825. By Mr. Stewart: There were no assets beyond those mentioned in this statement? No.
1826. And if there is no land mentioned there, none came into your hands as assignee? No.
1827. And of course none was sold? No.

John Morris,
Esq.
10 Dec., 1862.

Mr. Henry Selby called in and examined:—

- Mr. H. Selby. 1828. By the Chairman: What are you? A draper.
 1829. Residing in Sydney? Yes, in George-street.
 10 Dec., 1862. 1830. Are you aware of the nature of the inquiry in which this Committee is engaged? I am aware that it is something in connection with the case of Miss Kelly.
 1831. Can you give the Committee any information on the subject of this petition, that being the matter to which our inquiry is confined? (Petition handed to witness.) I do not know anything about this business of Skerrett's.
 1832. Or of the proceedings about these cattle? No; I have not the slightest knowledge of anything about Mr. Charles Skerrett.
 1833. By Mr. Flett: You have been called at my request, and I have a few questions to put to you. You were on the jury in a case that was tried in 1860, and pending between Richards and Andrews, two well-known characters on the Manning, in which a decision was given on all points in Richards' favour against Andrews? Yes, I was. We gave our verdict on all points in his favour.
 1834. You are aware, I suppose, that the particular point on which the action turned was as to the validity of a lease? I am.
 1835. A lease granted by Miss Kelly to Richards? Yes.
 1836. Mr. Andrews had impeached Richards with having forged that lease? Yes, he made a charge against him before the Magistrates to that effect.
 1837. Richards then entered an action against Andrews for slander and defamation of character? That was the action we tried. It was an action of trespass, for slander and malicious prosecution.
 1838. And the lease in question was put in as evidence? Yes, amongst other documents.
 1839. And it proved to be a genuine lease? Decidedly so.
 1840. Drawn by Miss Kelly? It was proved to our satisfaction to be drawn from beginning to ending by her, and in her handwriting, and to be signed by her also.
 1841. That was your opinion at the trial? Yes, that was the opinion I formed at that time, and nothing has occurred since then to shake that opinion.
 1842. The trial lasted a considerable time, I believe? Yes, six or seven days.
 1843. Miss Kelly was examined as a witness? She was.
 1844. And you heard her say that she never gave such a lease to Richards? Yes; and in opposition to this, it was proved to our satisfaction that she had promised him the lease and that she had given it to him.
 1845. In your opinion did she perjure herself on that occasion? I think so, certainly.
 1846. And that was the opinion of your brother jurors? Yes, of all. We were unanimous in our conclusion. We compared the lease with every other lease brought before the Court, and with various documents produced, and we could come to no other conclusion than that she wrote it from beginning to ending with her own hand, and that she signed it afterwards.
 1847. I do not know if you recollect the charge of the Judge, and the remark he made about its not being a very difficult thing to forge a signature, but that it was a very difficult thing indeed to forge a whole document? I cannot recollect the whole of what the Judge said; but I know that we formed our opinion on the documentary evidence before us.
 1848. And is that still your opinion,—is it the same now as it was then? Most decidedly it is.
 1849. By Mr. Stewart: Do you recollect what evidence was given in addition to the documentary evidence? The main evidence consisted of an immense mass of letters, all in Miss Kelly's handwriting, which were sworn to, and all marked and numbered.
 1850. Were there any witnesses called besides those necessary to prove the handwriting of the documents? I cannot call to mind now, at this distance of time, but to the best of my belief there was no witness.
 1851. And the jury came to their conclusion on the documents before them? Yes, on them principally.
 1852. If you had had before you in evidence the fact that three leases, all purporting to be drawn and signed by Miss Kelly on one day, would that have shaken you? No, it would not in the least have shaken my opinion in regard to this particular lease.
 1853. But suppose two other documents of a similar character, purporting to be drawn on the same day, and leasing the property to other persons? Well, I am not now prepared to give an opinion upon what did not take place; I can only say what my opinion was of what I actually saw in proof before me, and that opinion I hold still.
 1854. Comparing that lease with other writing proved to be Miss Kelly's, you had no reason to doubt its genuineness? No; we believed that it was written, from one end to the other, by Miss Kelly. We compared every letter that was produced with the writing of the lease, and not only that, but we compared every letter of the alphabet taken separately. Then the spelling and the formation of the words were precisely the same; and also, where we could get words or parts of words with two or three consecutive letters the same in both, we examined them closely, and found that the mode of joining the letters was the same in both.
 1855. The other documents were proved to be in her handwriting? Yes; many of them were admitted to be so.
 1856. By the Chairman: You have stated that, from the mass of documentary evidence produced, you were satisfied that the lease had been written by Miss Kelly from beginning to ending, and that when she denied having done so, you were induced not to believe her,—what was this evidence? Letters upon different subjects, proved or admitted to be in her handwriting.
 1857. You have told the Committee that you examined every letter in the lease, taking the letters

- letters of the alphabet, and also such letters as were connected with each other, and that you found that the lease exactly corresponded with the documents submitted to it? Yes. Mr. H. Selby.
1858. In these letters that were admitted to be hers, was there any difference in the formation of the letters at different times—does Miss Kelly always form the same letter in the same way? No, I believe she does not. To the best of my belief it was adduced in evidence that she did at times change her handwriting. 10 Dec., 1862.
1859. In looping the y, for instance? I forget the letters in which she made a change.
1860. Did not that very fact leave some doubt in your mind as to the correctness of the lease? Not at all.
1861. The letters in the lease being the same as those in the documents, and she forming the letters differently at times, ought to have led to some suspicion? I do not say that I observed that she formed her letters differently, but only that I had heard it stated that she did so.
1862. Were the letters in this document uniformly written in the same way? I could not answer that question at this distance of time.
1863. Had you the lease in your hand when you were comparing the other documents? I had.
1864. Was there any endorsement on it? That I cannot say.
1865. What did it purport to lease? It was a lease of a certain portion of land with a big paddock, from Miss Kelly to Richards.
1866. For what rent? I cannot call to mind.
1867. Had you a magnifying glass to examine the documents? Yes.
1868. And they were so examined? Yes.
1869. What for? To compare the paper on which the lease was written with the other paper on which her letters were written.
1870. And was it the same description of paper as that on which the letters were written? I cannot call to mind now what the magnifying glass was brought in for, but I know that we used it to examine the quality of the different papers, and to make comparisons.
1871. I would wish you to understand that I do not desire to impeach the verdict of the jury—no doubt they formed a conscientious opinion upon the evidence before them,—still their verdict may have been incorrect? It may have been, but I do not think so.
1872. What, in your opinion, constitutes a perfect forgery—what state of perfection in imitation is required? I think a perfect forgery consists in writing somebody else's name precisely the same as they do themselves.
1873. A name, or a letter, or a document, in such a way as not to be known from the writing of the person forged upon? Yes.
1874. You have heard of forgeries being committed on banks? I have read of such things.
1875. Where the bankers themselves have been deceived, and have taken forged drafts upon other banks? There may have been such cases, but they have never come under my own notice.
1876. You have heard of cases in which the forgeries have been such perfect imitations that it has been difficult for the banks themselves to discern the difference? I have read of such things in the newspapers, but have never known of them personally.
1877. Do you not think that this forgery has been of a similar character to those? I do not know what you mean by this forgery.
1878. This lease that you took for a genuine document? I do not admit that it was a forgery; we accepted it for a genuine document; I was satisfied that it was so on the trial, and I am so now.
1879. So am I satisfied that you gave a conscientious verdict, and really believed the document to be genuine—but is it not a fact, that documents which have been considered to be forgeries, have afterwards turned out to be genuine? I cannot speak as to other documents having turned out forgeries or otherwise, I only speak of the document that was before me on the trial, and I say that we all agreed that it was a genuine document. It is impossible for me to give an opinion from what I have not seen or had no evidence on.
1880. By Mr. Cunneen: Was there any verbal evidence taken in this case? You mean any witnesses?
1881. Yes? Yes, numbers of them.
1882. Both for one side and the other? Yes, the greater portion of them were for the defence; but we had a number of them on both sides.
1883. Did any of these witnesses swear that this lease was a forgery? The witness Andrews swore that it was—though, now I come to think, I cannot call to mind whether he said positively that it was a forgery, or whether he said he believed it to be one.
1884. Are you aware, or can you state, whether any of the witnesses on the trial swore positively that it was a forgery? No, I could not say at this distance of time.
1885. By Mr. Flett: Did anyone swear that it was not a forgery, but that it was a genuine document? Yes, Miss Kelly swore that it was not a genuine document.
1886. But that it was a genuine document—did anyone swear that it was not a forgery, but that it was from beginning to ending in Miss Kelly's handwriting? Yes, I believe they did.
1887. By the Chairman: Were the jury aware at the time that Miss Kelly was then undergoing sentence on a conviction for perjury? They were.
1888. They knew she had been convicted of perjury? Yes.
1889. Were they also aware that Skerrett had been pardoned, after having served four or five years, at the instance of the Chief Justice? I do not know that I was ever acquainted with the man, but I knew from official reports that he had been convicted of cattle-stealing, and had been afterwards pardoned.
- 1890.

- Mr. H. Selby. 1890. The jury had these facts before them in evidence? They had.
 1891. Was there any person on the trial who swore that this lease was a genuine document, except the man Richards? I cannot speak with certainty at this distance of time, but to the best of my belief I think there were two other witnesses to that fact.
 1892. Do you remember their names? I do not, but I believe that Mr. Flett was one.
 1893. By Mr. Stewart: Did he swear to it as being a genuine document, or as a witness to its execution? Solely to its general character.
 1894. By the Chairman: He was the only witness, besides Richards, who, as far as you recollect, swore to the genuineness of the lease? There may have been others, but it is not to be expected that I should remember. It is not likely that I should keep these things in my head for five or six years, especially as I had no interest in them whatever.

THURSDAY, 11 DECEMBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. CUNNEEN, | MR. FLETT,
 MR. MORRICE.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Miss Isabella Mary Kelly called in and examined:—

- Miss I. M. Kelly. 1895. By the Chairman: Where were you when you were first arrested on this warrant? I was living in Hunter-street, at Mrs. Price's boarding-house.
 1896. And you were brought at once to the Police Court? No, I was taken to the lock-up in Erskine-street.
 1897. How long did you remain there? From Saturday afternoon until the following Monday. It was half-past four o'clock in the day when I was arrested, and it was too late then to have bail taken.
 1898. On Monday you were brought before the Court? Yes.
 1899. Were you then committed for trial? No; the case was dismissed the first day, in the absence of papers.
 1900. You mean that it was adjourned? No, it was dismissed. I was subsequently brought up on summons, and the case was gone into.
 1901. And you were committed for trial? Yes.
 1902. Bail was allowed? Yes.
 1903. And you were afterwards tried at the Central Criminal Court, convicted, and sentenced to be imprisoned in Darlinghurst Gaol? Yes.
 1904. In what way were you treated in Darlinghurst Gaol? The first three weeks or so I was allowed to walk in the garden—in the private garden of the gaoler; but afterwards some evil disposed persons spoke against me to Mr. Beverley, and I was prevented from enjoying this little relaxation. That being the case, I could not bring myself to walk in the footsteps of prisoners, and so I confined myself to my cell, until at last I lost my health.
 1905. In what way did you lose your health? I had a severe attack of bronchitis, and was so unwell that I have been subject to fits ever since.
 1906. What sort of a sleeping place had you? It was a cell.
 1907. Of stone? Yes, a stone cell, exceedingly cold and damp—so much so, that the very clothes under me on the bed were mouldy and damp.
 1908. And you had very bad health during the time you were there? After the first month I never had my health, and when I left I had to be carried out and lifted into the carriage that took me away. In fact, when my discharge came I was too ill to leave, and it was not till the following day that I could be got into a fit state to be moved. I then had to be carried out to the carriage, and one of the women went with me to assist me, for I was not able to sit upright of myself.
 1909. Did you subsequently feel the effects of this illness? Yes; I have never been properly well since, for I have been subject to fits ever since.
 1910. Was any distinction made between you and the other prisoners when you were in gaol? I did not mix with the other prisoners at all. I kept to my own place—to my own cell. It was written on the door of the place where I was confined, "solitary cell," and I had it to myself; no one was with me.
 1911. What did you do when you got clear of the gaol? I was a long time ill, confined to my bed, whilst I lodged with Mrs. Hoare.
 1912. You were living in Sydney? Yes, for a long time.
 1913. And what became of your property? I found myself everything whilst I was in gaol—I paid for my washing and everything.
 1914. But after you got liberated, did you do anything with regard to your property? I was not able, through illness, to attend to it for a long time afterwards.
 1915. Did you hear anything about it? Yes, I heard that Skerrett and Richards were doing away with a great quantity of my property at that time when Andrews became insolvent. Skerrett and Richards were placed in possession of my house at Mount George, and they thus had every facility for robbing me in everything.
 1916. Had you this information from anyone residing on the Manning? Yes. I have here the letters I received on the subject. I produce a letter of 7th January, 1860, signed Joseph Andrews; one of 14th April, 1860, signed Joseph Andrews; one of 20th April, signed

- signed Joseph Andrews; and one of 2nd June, 1860, signed Ann Andrews. (Vide Appendix.)
1917. By Mr. Flett: For what purpose do you produce those letters? To show how I have been robbed.
1918. By the Chairman: What did you do when you got better? I went up to the Manning.
1919. What did you find going on when you arrived there? I found that all my property was destroyed. I found that everyone who had had a chance to do so had robbed me. My house of beautiful furniture, that had cost me a large sum, was either destroyed or taken away. All my own wearing apparel was gone. They had broken into my place on every side, and had taken away everything.
1920. You had some account books there? I had my stock and stud books, and some papers. They were carried off by some person, and I afterwards saw one of them produced by Reuben Richards at the trial of Andrews.
1921. What was the nature of the paper you there saw produced? It was the copy of a lease to a man named Purl, which had been copied by me from the original. That I had left in my house amongst my papers, and I saw it afterwards in his possession.
1922. Where? In the Supreme Court.
1923. Or the Police Court? No, I wanted to go to the Police Court in order to get it back.
1924. Which Court was it that you saw this partially drawn lease in—be sure of your answer? It was in the Supreme Court.
1925. At the trial of Andrews? Yes. I saw it in the Prothonotary's office. I saw it there with some other papers, and I immediately pointed it out to Mr. Brennan as the copy of a lease that I had left locked up in my desk when I last left the Manning.
1926. Is that the only paper of those you left in your house that you have since seen? The only one.
1927. Had Skerrett sold any of your cattle when you got back? Both cattle and horses. You will see by one of these letters that he took away fourteen head of horses.
1928. Did you bring him up in any way for his illegal conduct? I wished to do so, but I could not get a summons granted either for Skerrett or Richards. I could not get a Magistrate to issue one.
1929. Why not? Because they said it would be no use to bring them up, as, if they were committed, the Attorney General would not file a bill against either of them. I had an information and a summons prepared against Richards, and I applied to Mr. Hill, to Mr. Flett, and to Mr. Croker to swear me to the information and to issue the summons; but one of them declined to do so.
1930. By Mr. Flett: What did the summons relate to? To the lease which Richards represented I had given him.
1931. That lease was impounded by the Court, and could not be given up to you? It was produced in Andrews' case, and I summoned Richards for perjury for the evidence he gave on it.
1932. By the Chairman: Was not Skerrett committed from the Dungog Bench? The case was heard at Dungog, and Skerrett was very ably defended on the occasion. The Magistrates referred to the Manning Bench on the subject, and asked me why I had not taken the case there. I told them that it was because I did not think that I could get justice done me there.
1933. When Skerrett was committed by the Dungog Bench, who were the committing Magistrates? Mr. Day, Mr. Hawthorne, and Mr. ———.
1934. Anyone else? I think Mr. Flett, but I am not sure.
1935. Did Mr. Day make any remark respecting your case from the Bench? He cautioned the public against buying any cattle with my brand from Skerrett; yet, even after this caution, Skerrett sold them.
1936. Do you know a man named Avery? Only by name.
1937. Did he kill any of your cattle? He did; and after the caution had been given in open Court, and he present at the time.
1938. Where were these cattle killed? In Mr. Flett's yard—at least so I was informed. I know they were in his yard, and I believe they were killed there.
1939. After Skerrett's trial, and during the time he was serving his sentence did you sell your cattle to Begbie and Cooper? I did, previous to his being liberated from Cockatoo.
1940. What were you to get for the whole of the cattle? £1,200; and they were to muster them all for themselves. Besides this, they were to have for the £1,200 forty-three acres of land, but I told them that I should not give up the deeds of the land until I had received the whole of the money. I never gave up those deeds because I never got payment.
1941. Did you get any money in hand on concluding the bargain? Yes, I received £200 cash down, and two bills, one for £600 and the other for £400.
1942. Had Begbie and Cooper opportunities for becoming acquainted with your stock? Yes, they were employed for three months in collecting my cattle that were running on the Manning Flats. They were employed by me for three months in riding amongst my cattle, and helping me to brand them.
1943. So that they were well acquainted with them? Thoroughly.
1944. And how many head do you believe they got? My calculation of the number of cattle I had was, that there were between 600 and 700 head; but I never guaranteed any number to Begbie and Cooper when I sold, but I mentioned 500 head, more or less. I said you see the cattle, you know them as well as I do, so judge for yourselves whether the price will will suit you. It was they who were anxious to purchase the cattle from me, and it was a long while before I would consent to sell them, and it was not until Mr. Cooper endorsed the bills that I would do so.

1945. How many did they get in the first muster? They took from Brinbin 380 head, and on the Manning Flats they themselves thought that there were about 200 head more.

1946. And was that all? They did not muster them all at the one time; they were in several lots. They were afterwards sold to different parties, and one lot of 100 head was sold for a few shillings a head.

1947. What I wish to get at is the actual number of cattle you then possessed—you say that there were 380 head from Brinbin and 200 head from the Manning Flats, actually collected? No, they supposed there was that number there; they only took two or three days' muster from Waterview.

1948. Is that the same place as the Manning Flats? No, they are twenty-five miles apart.

1949. But to get to the particular number of cattle—you say that 380 were collected at Brinbin—how many were there besides? I believe I had between 600 and 700 head at the two places, and as such I sold them to Begbie and Cooper as 500 head, more or less, and they to muster for themselves. All I know of as having been actually collected were the 380 head from Brinbin.

1950. And what do I understand about those at Waterview? I should say that there were 100 or 150 head there—between there and Brinbin, at the Dawson.

1951. And you thought that altogether you had how many cattle? I am quite certain that, without any mistake, I had at least 600 head; and in saying this I say less rather than more than the actual number.

1952. And Begbie and Cooper were to give you £1,200 for these 600 head of cattle and the 43 acres of land? Yes, but as regards the land I was not to hand over the deeds until the money was paid.

1953. Had you a treaty with any person for the purchase of your horse stock? Yes; a Mr. Peter came to me, accompanied by Ben Sullivan and Jack Davis. They had bought some horses of me, and they brought Peter up with them to look at my stock. He asked me if I was inclined to sell, and I said, "Yes, if I could get my price." He then asked me what figure I wanted for the whole lot. I said I would take £4,500 for them, and after some talk he offered me £4,000 for them as they stood. I told him that I would not let them go for less than what I had said, for that I was under a contract to deliver a certain number to Captain Corbell, to go to Madras.

1954. He did not take them? No.

1955. He offered you £4,000, but would not give £4,500? Exactly.

1956. Did you send any of the horses to Madras that you had agreed to ship? No, I spoke about a vessel going to Madras, in order to secure freight for them, and made arrangements with Mr. Macamara about their shipment, but I was taken into custody at the time I was getting the stabling up in order to handle them for the voyage.

1957. And what did you afterwards do with these horses you were about to send? They are all gone.

1958. Did you sell any of them? Never one since I left Darlinghurst. I have here an account of some that were sold whilst I was in gaol, or I should rather say sacrificed.

1959. Then during the time you were in prison these horses were taken possession of by some one else? Yes, by Lennon and Cape.

1960. How did you become acquainted with them in so far as this transaction is concerned? I borrowed some money from them.

1961. For what purpose? For the law expenses, and to employ counsel for my defence.

1962. How much? I borrowed £320.

1963. And when you were convicted they took charge of your property as a lien for the amount lent? Yes.

1964. And they sent up a superintendent—Mr. Gerrard—on a salary, to take charge of your property? Yes.

1965. How much was his salary? He had £250 a year, and 2½ per cent. on all that he sold.

1966. Had you any stock besides cattle and horses? Yes, there were sheep.

1967. How many? They cost me £1,000. I sent to New England for them, so as to have fresh sheep to stock the run; and I have here an account of the proceeds of the wool for the first year.

1968. As far as these sheep were concerned, you had only a share in them? Yes.

1969. You were in partnership with Mr. Cosgrove? Yes. We bought, in the first instance, 3,000 ewes at 11s. each, and we sent to New England for others, for which I myself paid £1,000.

1970. Then, if Mr. Cosgrove gave the same for his half as you gave for yours, the sheep cost you altogether £2,000? Yes, and more than that.

1971. And the proceeds of the wool for the first year were £455 3s. 7d.? Yes; I had the half of that.

1972. And Mr. Cosgrove the other? Yes. After that we dissolved partnership.

1973. When Mr. Gerrard went up as superintendent for Lennon and Cape, did he do anything with these sheep? When I was taken up, the sheep were very much neglected, and the shepherds allowed the native dogs to rush them, so that many were killed and scattered; there was no one to look after the men, and they let the sheep go where they liked, or fed them over the old folding grounds, and in this way a good many died, so that there were not more than 1,200 of them left when I went back.

1974. What did he do with them? He ordered all the lambs of that year's lambing to be killed, and there was a very fine lambing that season.

1975. What was that for? In order that the mothers might get fat, for sale to the butchers. Miss
I. M. Kelly.
1976. Did he sell any of your horses? He did, some of them.
1977. Did he sell for Lennon and Cape more than sufficient to cover their expenses of management and sale, and to pay the money you had borrowed? I borrowed £320 from them, and here is their account, by which they shew that they have received £968 16s. 10d. 11 Dec., 1862.
1978. I see by this account that there is a balance coming to you of £58 16s. 2d.—did you get that? No, I did not.
1979. So that these £320 you borrowed cost you £968 16s. 10d., less the £58 16s. 2d. which they hold for you? Yes.
1980. Do you know how long Mr. Gerrard had charge of your place? Twelve months.
1981. What did he do with the sheep? They were taken to Maitland and sold.
1982. The lambs having been previously killed? Yes, the whole of them.
1983. And these sheep you say cost you £1,000? Yes.
1984. And that was all lost? Yes, all.
1985. And the horses, for which you were offered £4,000, have all disappeared? Yes, all.
1986. Had you any property—any land in Maitland? Yes; I have an account here of the land sold for me by Mr. Dodds and Mr. Yeomans, and the amount it realized.
1987. You sold that land? Yes.
1988. And what became of the money? It was all spent in law and expenses.
1989. It appears from this that since 1853 the following amounts have been realized:—For wool and sheep sold in 1859 and 1860, £2,351 7s. 6d.; for allotments of land sold in 1860, £2,622 7s. 4d., and for horse stock and colts sold by auction, £227 9s. 11d.? Yes.
1990. What became of this money? My house and premises at Mount George were set on fire, and the house and all that it contained—furniture and wearing apparel—were consumed. It was a large eight-roomed house, and had been newly furnished throughout, and this entailed a very great expense upon me.
1991. In what year was this? In 1853.
1992. That could have nothing to do with this case? No, but I had to procure new furniture and wearing apparel, and to reconstruct the house and premises.
1993. A great deal of this money was also expended in your stock and stations, and in carrying on your necessary business that you had to the fore at the time Skerrett commenced his last action against you? Yes, when Skerrett first commenced to give me trouble it cost me a great deal of money to get him convicted.
1994. I wish to know from you the full value of your property of every kind at the time Skerrett was convicted? At that time I considered myself that I was worth £15,000; my estate in land still remains, but in my stock, &c., I have lost about £10,000 since then, as these papers will show.
1995. In what way can you explain this loss? Because when my house was burnt down I had to buy everything—furniture and wearing apparel—and to replace the building that was destroyed.
1996. This Committee have nothing to do with that matter, but I wish to know what amount of property you considered you were worth at the time when Skerrett had you convicted? I am certain of this that I was worth fully £15,000. I am quite sure that I could have realized that amount if I had shipped the horses to Madras in the terms of the contract I had entered into.
1997. How did you lay out the money you received? I had wages to pay, and the ordinary expenses of my establishment. Then I paid large sums for the sheep and for land purchased.
1998. Had you to pay the expenses of the witnesses brought down on your trial? Yes, and not only once, but three several times, and there were very many of them.
1999. You had to pay their whole expenses? Yes.
2000. And to give them remuneration for their services? No, only to pay their expenses.
2001. Then you had to engage lawyers? Yes, and to pay large fees.
2002. How many days were you engaged in your trial at the Police Court? Several days.
2003. And were these witnesses there at that time? No, there were none of them at the Police Office; they were brought down afterwards.
2004. You had to bring all your evidence from the Manning? Yes, a distance of over 200 miles.
2005. Then a vast portion of your losses have been incurred through witnesses and law expenses? Yes; and not only that, but by the mismanagement of my property as well. It is that which has cost me the most.
2006. If you had been in charge of the property instead of Mr. Gerrard, you would, in your opinion, have realized a better price for what was sold than he did? I am sure that I could have made £15,000 by my property as it stood then, if it had been in my own hands.
2007. Did Begbie and Cooper pay their bills when they became due? No, they did not.
2008. Did they give any reason for not doing so? They said that in consequence of Skerrett having taken the cattle they were unable to pay me, but they had no doubt that if I would give them time they would be able to do so in the end; and that if Skerrett had not attacked them, they would have met their bills.
2009. They were afterwards insolvent? Yes.
2010. In whose possession were these bills at that time? In the possession of Lennon and Cape.
2011. How did they get there? I handed the bills to them as collateral security for the money they advanced to me.
2012. Was there not a seizure of your horses under legal process? Yes, there were two seizures.

I. M. Kelly.
11 Dec., 1862.

The first was by Managan, who seized for £50,—the expense of mustering; the second was by the Australian Agricultural Company for the Gang Gat station at the Manning Flat. There was another seizure by a man, a shepherd up there, who seized for the sum of £4, which he said was due to him for wages, although I did not owe him a penny. He got a verdict in my absence, and took my furniture and sold it. I was not there, and it only realized £13—all my beautiful furniture that had cost me so much. There was no one there to buy it.

2013. How much had it cost you? A great deal of money, several hundred pounds. It fetched nothing, because there was nobody there to buy.

2014. Can you state the particulars of the articles sold? I have not got the particulars of the last seizure. I have sent up to get a copy of it, for they would not give me the original.

2015. About the 7th June some of your horses were seized and sold for rent at Andrews' Yes; there were forty seized, and thirty-eight were sold.

2016. And how much did they realize? About £46 for the thirty-eight head.

2017. Some of them I believe were superior animals, of great value? Yes, of very superior value. There was one splendid foal that I would not have sold for £20; but they managed to smuggle the horses about from one place to another, not giving notice of the sale, and in this way no price was obtained for them.

2018. Did you get any account of the parties who had purchased them? Yes.

2019. Who were they? Andrews purchased some, and Mr. Richardson, and a servant of Andrews', and by the neighbours just round about. The sale was not published as it ought to have been.

2020. It was, in fact, just a kind of division of your property amongst the neighbours? Just so. They were sold, and the Sheriff never served me with any notice of the sale.

2021. And the people round about bought the horses amongst them at their own price? Yes.

2022. What could you have made of these forty head of horses if you had had them at your own disposal, and had been put to no inconvenience by Skerrett? I have not made any calculation of that, because I did not expect to be asked about it.

2023. Confining yourself to these cattle, can you not give an idea of what they would have realized? I have not made a calculation, but you may guess how they were sacrificed when a colt that I was offered £20 for was sold for 12s. 6d.

2024. Do you know who bought that colt? He was kindly bought in for me by a man named Pass; he bought two for me, and gave them to me afterwards. One he bought for 12s. 6d. and the other for £1.

2025. Some neighbour of yours who did not like to see you robbed in this wholesale manner? Yes.

2026. I would now tell you that this is your final examination, and the Committee are desirous of obtaining from you the true statement of your case. I now ask you whether, if you had had the management of your own business at the time your property was sold, and had not been placed in a position in which you could give it no attention, you could not have made a great deal more money of it than was made? Yes, I could. I was always considered to be a rich woman, and I am satisfied that at that time I could have made £15,000 at the least of my property. I ought to have that now if my property had not been taken from me, and I had not been robbed in the way I have been.

2027. Your Mount George property was mortgaged? Yes.

2028. About what year? The money was raised for a particular purpose for which I required it.

2029. Was it to go into your business? Yes.

2030. And you expended it in the extension of your business? Yes.

2031. Were you in the habit of keeping money by you to pay current expenses of your station? Yes, because of the difficulty there was of getting cheques cashed in the country. I did not pretend that I kept any cash in the house, but I always did so. I would say that I would go down to the store and get cash. People, however, were not willing to cash cheques, so I always kept ready money by me; at the same time I had accounts open in the bank at Maitland, and also in the bank at Sydney.

2032. Did you make any bad debts? Not one, except that of Begbie and Cooper's; that is the only one.

2033. So that whatever money you had invested in your business must have remained in it since you made no loss? I had no loss except in the one case I have mentioned.

2034. Did you ever find yourself distressed for ready money? No, I always had plenty of money; I was never distressed for cash; and you will see this by a reference to my bank accounts, both in Sydney and Maitland. I always had an account at Maitland as well as at Sydney, as it was handy for me as I had to send there often for supplies.

2035. So that the expenses arising out of these proceedings between Skerrett and you, which terminated in your conviction and imprisonment, caused your freehold property in Maitland to be sold, your cattle, your horses, and your other stock to be sold, and your estate to be mortgaged, the whole of the money raised from this sacrifice being spent in law in defending yourself, together with the loss you suffered from the destruction of your property? Yes; and permit me to say also, that in closing up my affairs I had had a farm of rich land cut up into allotments, in order that they might be sold before free selection came into operation. I should have made a large sum by that land at that time. Besides this, I had the contract for shipping the horses to India, and had all my preparations made for doing so. It had been my intention to have sold off my whole stock and to have gone Home, which I could have done with £15,000, if I had not been prevented by this affair of Skerrett's.

2036. Is there any way in which the Committee could get a verified copy of the value of your property at the time when you were first troubled with these proceedings of Skerrett? Miss
I. M. Kelly.
The only thing I have is this account, which I would wish to hand in.
2037. But these bills could not give us any idea of what you were worth at any particular time, because you sold off some portion of your stock at different times;—but have you any account book from which you could authenticate your statement as to the amount of property you possessed? I had an account book and a journal, but they were taken away from my house with my other papers. My stud book and my account books and everything were carried off, and I am not now in a position to show you what you require. 11 Dec., 1862.
2038. You must leave that part of your case then to the consideration of the Assembly? Yes; but I have papers and bills here to show all that I have saved, and what it has realized.
2039. Have you got any further statement to make to this Committee? I would say this, that I have been living at very great expense for the last four years, travelling up and down the country from the Manning River to Sydney. I have been obliged in this way to spend a great deal of money, whilst I have never been able to look after my business, and everything has gone to ruin; and all the time I have had to live at a very heavy expense in Sydney.
2040. Do you know a person named Turner on the Manning? Yes, which one?
2041. There was one of them who was building a house for you? Yes; there are two Turners, William and Samuel.
2042. William is a young man? Yes.
2043. He witnessed one of these documents that are in dispute? Yes, but he is not the same man who absconded, and who was building my cottage.
2044. You owed him some money about this time? I owed him nothing, because he drew everything that was due to him in rations. There was a little balance due to him when he left off work, and he took it out in rations.
2045. He asked you for some money upon one occasion? He did, and I gave it to him.
2046. Did you tell him that you had nothing but large notes, and that you could not give him any money on that day? No, but it may have happened in this way:—He was present when a man named Alexander Clarke paid me £35 for a chesnut foal; Clarke gave me £40 in four £10 notes, and I gave him a £5 note back; he was standing there and saw, and very probably he may have thought, that all the notes I had were too large, and that it would be difficult to cash them there. I never spoke to him, however, about anything of the kind.
2047. By Mr. Cunneen: You say that Mr. Peter made you an offer for your horse stock? He did.
2048. What did he offer you? £4,000.
2049. In what year was that? In 1855.
2050. How long was this before you were imprisoned? Four years—I was imprisoned in 1859.
2051. Then was that their value in 1859? They were more valuable then, for there was their increase during four years.
2052. What was their value in 1859, when you were imprisoned? The value I set upon them then was £6,000, that is allowing an increased value for the increase of the stock.
2053. Did not horse stock fall off in value between the time Mr. Peter made you the offer and the time when you were imprisoned? They were not so high in value, certainly; but I have here an account sale of a number of unbroken colts sold in Maitland for me, and this will show you the price that my stock fetched in the market.
2054. Between the time he offered you £4,000 and the 5th of October, when you were convicted, had you disposed of many of your horses? No, I had not.
2055. Had you at that last date as many horses as when Mr. Peter offered you £4,000 for the lot? Yes; I reckoned that I had 600 head of horses. When Skerrett was sent to Cockatoo, it was proved that I had 400 head.
2056. Was horse stock of as much value when you were convicted as when Peter offered you the £4,000 for your lot? That I cannot say.
2057. You were imprisoned for five months? Yes, five months and a fortnight.
2058. During how long a time after you were released from prison were you incapacitated by sickness from attending to your business? During four or five months.
2059. Can you prove that during the five months you were imprisoned you suffered any special loss? My losses all occurred during that time.
2060. What was your loss during that time—losses occasioned by your not being able to attend to your business? About £3,000, and since then I have been living upon what means I had by me; I had money in the bank, both at Maitland and in Sydney, and since then I have spent it all. Altogether my losses have amounted to quite £10,000.
2061. I wish you perfectly to understand my question;—what I require is, that you will take into consideration no losses that you have sustained before or after your imprisonment, but that you will confine yourself strictly to an estimate of the losses experienced during the time you were in gaol—during the five months and a fortnight;—you surely could not have lost £10,000 in that time? I am sure that, at the very least, I have lost £7,000.
2062. During the time you were imprisoned? I could not say that, but I know that all my losses either occurred during the time I was incarcerated, or were caused by that incarceration.
2063. Can you give the Committee any calculation to show how you make out that these losses were sustained during that time? I have nothing on which to make them. All my books were taken away.
2064. Have you made no such calculation? I have not done so.

Miss
I. M. Kelly.
11 Dec., 1862.

2065. How long does this account that you have laid before the Committee extend over? During 1860. I was for twelve months unable to attend to my business, what with the trial and the imprisonment, and my subsequent illness; and then when I recovered my health, I became subject to fits. I am sometimes for weeks after one of these fits unable to attend to business.
2066. At what date did you borrow the £320 from Lennon and Cape? In 1859.
2067. Before your conviction? Yes.
2068. What security did you give for the money? A lien on my property.
2069. On the whole of it? Yes.
2070. That must have been very heavy security for so small a sum? I thought that by giving them a lien on the whole of it, that they would take care of it for me.
2071. So for a loan of £320 you gave as security property that you estimated to be worth £15,000? Yes; but it was in order that it should be protected.
2072. You gave them a lien upon everything—horses, cattle, land? No, not on the cattle—they had been sold previously.
2073. How long after you gave the mortgage on your property was it that they foreclosed? They did not foreclose; they sold the property and paid themselves.
2074. But how long after lending you the money? They had charge of the place for twelve months.
2075. How long after you had mortgaged your property to them was it before they had satisfied their claim? I borrowed the money in 1860, and their account of the sale is dated in October, 1861.
2076. Let me call your attention to the sixth paragraph of your petition, in which you state "That during the time of your petitioner's imprisonment, the said Charles Skerrett, taking the sentence passed upon your petitioner as a proof of the validity of the forged bill of sale, seized and took away a number of cattle which had belonged to your petitioner, and had been sold by her to Messrs. Begbie and Cooper on the Manning River, in consequence of which Messrs. Begbie and Cooper became insolvent, and your petitioner lost £1,100, due to her from them for the said cattle, and interest." Now this is a loss which you distinctly state that you suffered whilst you were imprisoned? Yes.
2077. Is there any other special loss, occurring through the same cause, that you can point out to the Committee? Only these sales, which I would wish the Committee to look over.
2078. But without referring to papers, can you point out in the same way as you have done with respect to the cattle, any other special loss sustained in consequence of your imprisonment? I am not competent to make such a statement. I have brought up with me my accounts of everything that has been sold, and hoped that the Committee would look over them.
2079. It must be evident to you that the Committee cannot connect these accounts with any losses you have sustained, and it is for that reason that I would wish you to particularize any such loss beyond the cattle mentioned in your petition? I cannot do so in any other way than by putting these accounts before you.
2080. By Mr. Flett: Do you know where Skerrett is now? In Melbourne, I think.
2081. You spoke, in a former portion of your evidence, of a lease that you saw in the Supreme Court, that you had given to Purcell? No, only a copy of a lease to Purcell that I had made.
2082. What was it the lease of? A paddock at Mount George.
2083. Was that before Richards came into it? Yes, whilst I occupied it.
2084. You said that Newman seized your horses and sold them? Yes.
2085. Now did you not drive them into Maitland yourself, and have them sold on your own account? No, they were seized and sold by Thurlow, through his agent.
2086. I say that they were not seized? You are mistaken; they were ordered to be seized and sold by Mr. Thurlow.
2087. He could not do it? He did. He sued me in the Supreme Court and got judgment against me, and ordered them to be sold in execution. He wrote to Mr. Dodds in Maitland, and directed their sale.
2088. By Mr. Cunneen: Had you any sheep when you were imprisoned? Yes.
2089. Had you any loss on these by reason of your imprisonment? During that time they were all lost to me. They sold for £300 and I gave £1,000 for them.
2090. And this was caused through your prosecution by Skerrett? Yes, all through Skerrett.
2091. And with regard to your horse stock—can you state any special loss you suffered in regard to them through your confinement in gaol? They have all disappeared. I had about 600 head, and I suppose you will not see now twenty head of horses on the run. They have been neglected and got wild, and no one can get them in now, even what few there are.

APPENDIX.

Miss Kelly:

Dear Madam,

No doubt you will think it very strange of me in not writing you before this on the many subjects that you feel an interest in. The truth is I could write very unsatisfactorily, and even now I am afraid they will not be so pleasing as I could wish. No doubt you are informed of Skerrett's doings on the Manning. He has been successfully resisted by Mr. Gerard from taking any horses, but he has succeeded in taking some of Mr. Begbie's cattle, and for the last eight or ten days we have heard nothing of him. You will next wish to know something of Richards. My opinion of him is, that he is not a whit behind Skerrett, and I have no hesitation in saying, from my knowledge of the fellow fellow lately, he is the cause of your incarceration. Immediately after he heard you were convicted, he asserted he had a lease of the Mount George paddock, and summoned me for trespass; he produced a lease which I challenged to be a forgery, and requested the Bench to impound the document for a time until I would produce evidence to prove it a forgery. It was retained in the office, and when my information was complete I took out a summons for Richards

Woodside, Manning River,
7 January, 1860.

Miss
I. M. Kelly.
11 Dec., 1862.

I have not been idle in making inquiries about your witnesses, and I am convinced from what I heard from Lewis and Giles that not a shadow of doubt would remain with the public that you are a victim to as base a conspiracy as was ever perpetrated in New South Wales. Lewis' statement confirms our opinion that the receipt was written at Mount George; this Turner confessed. I will get the whole statement of Lewis written and signed by himself, and send it to you. I have learned from the Rev. Mr. O'Quinlivan that the Sullivans are making all the inquiry they can, but I fear that the dates are what puzzles them. I should tell you that Tom Watson saw Wm. Turner, after he absconded from the Manning, at the Maitland races. I have not heard of the man Smith you speak about; he went to New England, and never returned to the Manning. I have just been given to understand that Skerrett did not buy those horses he and his witnesses alluded to at the trial—they were a Mr. Blair's. Mr. Blair is a nephew of Sir D. H. Blair, of Edinburgh, and is a squatter somewhere.

Can you not get a new trial? The missing documents having turned up, there is no doubt as to the result. Lewis', Giles', and Watson's evidence would clear up Turner's receipt, and, of course, the whole affair. If no new trial be granted you, and that the whole twelve months be served by you in Darlinghurst, I fear that both Skerrett and Richards will escape justice. Before I close this scribble I should give you an outline of Richards' lease:—It is dated the 19th September, 1859, and is for nine years from that date; four years rent free, on condition that he will put up a good fence round the paddock, stated to be fifteen acres, more or less; the remaining five years at £6 per annum. On the other side of the agreement is an authority given him to split what timber he requires, &c., &c. I was certain, before Mr. Girard told me, that this document was a forgery. Certainly some of the writing resembles yours, but your two signatures to the document differ, and I could point out the difference by comparing your real signature

I fear you will not be able to read this. I thought that when the missing documents were found there would be no occasion to write you at all; notwithstanding, I am sure all will come right yet. We are all well; hoping you are so, and under the consciousness of your innocency in this matter you will bear up against it,—

I am, &c.,
JOSEPH ANDREWS.

Miss I. M. Kelly

Manning River, 14 April, 1860.

Dear Madam,

We were glad to understand, by your last letter, that you were recovered from your late illness, and is now convalescent.

We hope you will not spare any one of the conspirators. Your friends expect this, and justice demands it. You say that you have heard that Richards has absconded—he has done nothing of the sort, but is far more impudent and daring, and has circulated all over the district that you have bolted, and that you cannot be found in all Sydney.

It was thought by all here that as soon as you were liberated you would pounce at once on this villain, and thereby have saved me from all this expense and trouble. It is sickening to think how I have been treated in defending your property. Such scheming is disgusting. It will prevent anyone for the future in interfering in your behalf. You will have heard no doubt by this time that the case is set down for trial on the 14th May next. I am glad to know that I will be able to justify my cause by one that Richards took into his confidence, even if you were dead, which event your enemies devoutly wish for. I think, somehow, that Richards will not appear; but evidently he is taking all the caution possible to put me to all the same expense as though he should appear—and at the last moment he will be off. The course he is pursuing convinces me of this. I fear therefore he will escape after all.

Why not take out a warrant for him at once, for perjury and forgery, and secure the villain before he makes his escape. Richards knows well, for he told Dew that his lawyer told him, unless he could prove the lease genuine, he might not expect to go back to the Manning, and that he would not take the case unless he would refer him to some respectable person

We are all well.

I remain, &c.,
JOSEPH ANDREWS.

Dear Madam,

Manning River, 20 April, 1860.

Since I wrote you last I hear that Skerrett has posted up notices everywhere, cautioning everyone against interfering with his cattle, horses, &c.

I have no doubt but that he will drive off what he can, when he finds that there is no one to protect your property.

What do you mean to do?

There is somebody at fault.

I would say to you: Act on your own judgment—common sense is the best lawyer. If you wait until the lawyer thinks it time to act, you may find that the whole of your horses are gone; and what redress will you have for that loss?

A warrant should have been issued at once to take him up for forgery and perjury.

If you think of coming up before Richards' case comes on, be quick; there are only two Magistrates now acting on river—Cross and myself. If Mr. Cross refuses you a warrant, I will grant you one, and try the case myself; you have plenty of evidence in the first instance without me. This course, I think, is the only one that will effectually stop Skerrett from plundering you while the lawyers are looking on. Skerrett I hear is determined to have a draft of your horses at all risks, and you know he has got plenty to assist him. He is making many believe that you can do nothing against him, and that the cattle are still his. At any rate, he will take what he can in the meantime, if not arrested at once.

Mr. Girard has left the Manning about a week ago with your sheep, and Skerrett is aware of that. T. Lane must be in Sydney by the 14th May, on this case of Richards', and if Skerrett is not secured before that, there will be nobody to see to your property at all. Decide therefore at once what you should do. I have given you all the information I can.

I am, &c.,
J. ANDREWS.

Miss I. M. Kelly.

Manning

Manning River, June 2, 1860.

Miss
I. M. Kelly.

My Dear Miss Kelly,

11 Dec., 1862.

We were much pleased last evening to hear that you had got Skerrett committed; I trust it is true, as there seems to be no end to his going on. A day or two before he and Dennis went to Sydney they took eight or ten horses off the Dingo Creek; no one would give them a yard. I am told they took them to Searl's paddock, but what they did with them after I have not heard. Mr. Begbie has summoned the parties that purchased the cattle. I fear they must have sold some of the horses, as I am told Skerrett had plenty of money going the line. I hear that young Searl was one of the party driving the horses. I hear the Campbells and blacksmith seen them driving them, but when you come up I dare say you will get all the information. Carn, your late shepherd, is still at the station; he would only take your order as part payment; I would not give it to him as such; he has the receipt for his sister's passage. It is a pity you could not have settled with him—it gives your enemies so much to say.

Dicky has left the station; he said his time was up; he said Mr. Girard had promised to send his discharge and he did not; he told Mr. Patent that he would come back if you wanted him. Patent, poor man, was quite delighted when he heard that Skerrett was taken, and wishing Richards would share the same fate. It will cause a great damp on your friends if it is not true. There is no word of Mr. Andrews yet; he is nearly a month from home now. Mrs. Connelly is very anxious about her husband, fearing the position he is in. I fear you will scarce be able to read this, I have such a bad pen.

Yours sincerely,
ANN ANDREWS.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Stephen Campbell Brown, Esq., called in and examined:—

S. C. Brown,
Esq.

12 Dec., 1862.

2092. By the Chairman: You are a solicitor in Sydney? Yes.

2096. In that case Mr. Burt made certain statements, and swore to them, and so did his brother? Perhaps I had better shortly tell the Committee what the case was. It was an action brought by Miss Kelly against Mr. Burt to recover the value or proceeds of some horses sent by her through him to India for sale. The substantial question in dispute was whether or not Mr. Burt had a set-off for damages sustained by reason of Miss Kelly not having sent the number of horses she had agreed to send. On the trial Mr. Burt swore that the agreement was for twenty, and that in consequence he had twenty stalls engaged for those horses on board the ship that was to convey them to India. Miss Kelly swore that she did not agree to send any specified number, but only as many as she could. In support of Mr. Burt's case, his brother, Mr. Sydney Burt, was called, and so far as my recollection serves me, he swore to a conversation in Sydney with Miss Kelly, in which she told him that she had agreed to send that number by his brother. Miss Kelly denied both these statements, and the jury found a verdict against her.

2097. I think there was a letter of Miss Kelly's brought in proof also, where she admitted —? There was a letter of Miss Kelly's produced, in which some such expression as this was used, "I had intended to send twenty, but found I could not get them, through the carelessness of my servants,"—or something of that kind.

2098. Which she denied afterwards? I cannot charge my memory further.

2099. My object in bringing you here is really this, that in consequence of what took place at that trial the Chief Justice liberated Skerrett? The Chief Justice stated that he perfectly coincided with the verdict the jury had given, and my impression is—my belief is—that he did state also that, in consequence of what took place on this trial, he would look back again into Skerrett's. He did not state that to me personally. There were other slight matters in the trial, but that was the substantial point. I have the Judge's notes of the evidence given at the trial, if the Committee wish to see them. The ship was to load at Port Stephens, and Mr. Burt kept these stalls disengaged for Miss Kelly's horses, and they not coming he was obliged to go away without them, paying freight the same as if he had sent them.

2100. By the Chairman: Miss Kelly sent some horses? Yes, fifteen. I think four died on the passage, the ship having suffered very bad weather, and the gross proceeds of those landed came to about £599. From that had to be deducted freight, commission, and charges.

2101. Are you aware how much that was per head? Mr. Burt's set-off was £126, and we paid into Court £44 and some odd shillings, but whether he had made any previous payments I cannot charge my memory.

2102. The fact was, it was Mr. Burt's oath against Miss Kelly? No, Mr. William Burt was the defendant, with whom the arrangement was made, and Mr. Sydney Burt deposed to the conversation with Miss Kelly. They swore to two distinct conversations.

S. C. Brown,
Esq.

2103. At neither of which the two were present? No.

12 Dec., 1862.

2104. Then it was oath against oath? No, two oaths against one.

2105. There was no denying a signature or anything of that sort? I cannot charge my memory with anything of that sort. Miss Kelly swore that she never had made the arrangement for twenty horses with Mr. William Burt, and that she had never told Mr. Sydney Burt that she had made such an arrangement.

2106. By Mr. Morrice: Do you know what were the gross charges on these horses? I cannot tell you exactly, but the freight was £25 a head, commission five per cent., and there were some incidental charges for head-stalls, natives landing them, and living until they were sold. The meaning of the verdict was, that Mr. Burt had sustained loss to the amount of £126, that his other charges were correct, and that the £44 we paid into Court was enough to satisfy Miss Kelly's claim for the horses Mr. Burt had received.

William Frederick Cape, Esq., called in and examined:—

2107. By Mr. Flett: Miss Kelly stated here yesterday, that during the time that her stock was under the management of your superintendent they were completely destroyed and lost by mismanagement—that her sheep were sold at half their price—that the lambs were killed so that the ewes might be fattened, driven to market, and sold—that her horses were sold—and that, in fact, the whole estate was wracked and ruined during the time she was in gaol;—have you any knowledge of these things? None whatever, except from the fact of certain parties in the neighbourhood throwing every impediment in the way of our overseer, to prevent him from collecting her property and selling it. There is no doubt it did not realize so good a price as if she had been there to look after it herself. I never heard before of the lambs being killed.

W. F. Cape,
Esq.

12 Dec., 1862.

2108. By the Chairman: Miss Kelly borrowed £320 from your firm—Lennon and Cape? About that amount.

2109. And for that she gave you as security a lien upon her property? Upon the whole of her property of every description.

2110. After she was committed to take her trial you sent a superintendent named Girard to protect your interest, and to do the best he could with the property? Yes, about that time. The amount of stock that he realized was about £760.

2111. Did that cover your lien with the expenses of collection and all? No.

2112. How much was it deficient? About £140. There was also £190 realized in the insolvent estate of Begbie and Cooper, with which we had nothing to do, and some £20 from other sources.

2113. That left a balance in your hands and for other purposes of —? £58 16s. 2d.

2114. So that, in realizing this sum of £320, upwards of £900 worth of property had to be sold? Yes.

2115. If Miss Kelly had had the management of her business would that property have had to be sold in that way? No, I think not. I fancy it would not have been necessary to send up an overseer; she would have been able to realize it herself, and that expense would have been saved.

2116. By Mr. Flett: The expense of the overseer? The expense of the overseer, and probably some of the other expenses. I do not say positively it would have been.

2118. Did you consider she was a person in depressed circumstances—in insolvent circumstances—I mean having more debts than she had property to realize? Certainly not.

2119. Was she a person in affluent circumstances, though at the time short of money? She was short of money at the time, but we thought, of course, that she was in good circumstances or we should not have lent the money.

2120. By Mr. Flett: You realized some money from Begbie's insolvency? Yes.

2121. Do you know whether there was any land sold of Begbie's? I think there was, but I will not speak positively. I think there was some land.

2122. Where situated? On the Manning River.

2123. Was it a large quantity, do you know? I think not. We never had anything to do with the matter but proving in Begbie's estate.

2124. Have you any land of Miss Kelly's in your hands now? We have all her property that is not realized yet; we have not yet handed the deeds over to Miss Kelly.

2125. Have you got fifty acres called Waterview? No, not that I know of.

2126. Do you know who that belongs to—it was sold to Mr. Begbie with Miss Kelly's cattle? I suspect it is still in the estate of Begbie. We have only had one dividend, and I know that was not from the proceeds of any land, so that it must be still in the estate.

PETITION OF MISS ISABELLA MARY KELLY.

SEPARATE APPENDIX.

A.

Evidence of Margaret Skerrett, from the Chief Justice's Notes, taken at the trial of Charles Skerrett, for cattle-stealing, 5th April, 1855.

Margaret Skerrett: Between sixteen and seventeen; have sister Jane, aged fifteen, who is at Brinden, having broken her leg; I saw the accident; after Christmas she was coming on horseback from the paddock, bare-backed, when Kelly stood at the gate, fourteen yards off, and fired a pistol, which caused the horse to throw my sister, and she broke her thigh; Kelly saw her fall; she can now only just crawl about; Kelly came into the bed-room where she was taken to * * * and remained only a short time; on 6th June last was called in to witness this document, in Kelly's front room; she called me and my sister in; the document was in her hand, and she read it aloud; had her spectacles on; I and my sister witnessed this immediately after Kelly signed it, and this is her signature; on the same day William Turner was there; he came for nails, and was in the kitchen; she told me that she had sold the station and cattle to my father for £600—£400 in cash; I saw a few notes in his hand, and he said that he had rather the payment of the money should be witnessed by some one else than by his own family.

Cross-examined: I was three years in Port Macquarie; been fifteen years in the Colony; my father was a partner with Major Innes in a farm there; believe that they parted on good terms; father went to the diggings; don't know that Major Innes was fined for father's distilling; have seen him distilling there; we lived in Port Phillip before Port Macquarie; can't say how long; don't remember being in Van Diemen's Land; can't say how long had been at Brinden when the paper was signed; it might have been weeks or days; can't say what month we left Port Macquarie; before we came up we heard that father was to rent the station; swear that it was 6th June, from recollection; I know it was the 6th; don't remember the day of the week; am sure that it was not 5th, or 7th, or 8th; don't know any day else that William Turner was there; he was two or three times before, once about the overseer being drowned; not sure whether that was before or after the 6th June; don't know how long Kelly remained after this—a month, or six weeks, or how long; did not take particular notice; was not always looking after Miss Kelly; did not speak much to her; did not like her; don't know if she took her key; you may depend she did not leave it behind her; she rented two rooms from my father; that was the agreement which Anne Andrews witnessed. [By me: Impossible; it is in the agreement of 26th July.] My tather parted good friends with her; won't swear that he did; Anne told me that she witnessed an agreement; did not see her witness it; father told me that Kelly rented two rooms of him; don't know when he told me; don't remember seeing the agreement witnessed by Anne Andrews; I was about somewhere when it was signed; a Chinaman was there; believe that he went with her, but returned in a day or two; he looked after a few mares of Kelly's; lived in a hut which father "lent him"; Kelly's things are not taken away yet; nothing of hers interfered with—no desk broken or drawers; don't know if the bill for the other money, £200, was paid; saw the notes, a few carelessly held in his hand; "if you would give me notes I can show you"; those which he had he brought from Port Phillip; he was at the Bendigo and M'Ivor diggings; he came from Sydney to Port Macquarie; I saw the notes; I can't say what was the amount, nor of what bank; I just signed the agreement, and father spoke a few words, and I went out again; did not notice if there was any other paper; my sister was only fourteen then; she signed first; can't say which of us writes best; a Mr. Pearce set her leg; can't say the exact day on which my sister broke her leg, nor whether it was this present year; never saw Kelly with a pistol before; she took it into the house with her again; did not much notice the kind of pistol; all I noticed was that she broke my sister's leg; "I suppose" my mother was in the room with my sister; don't know if any one spoke to Kelly about her conduct in firing the pistol; "I was not listening"; it was early in the morning; I bathed my sister's leg; I think that it was after Kelly's return from Sydney that they quarrelled; it was because she disputed the sale of the cattle; never saw father strike her; don't remember I ever heard the sale spoken of by anybody, except on 6th June; we have killed two or three bullocks at Brinden; I suppose that my father bought them with the rest of the cattle; remember the killing of the first bullock; it was after the 6th June, but can't say if it was a fortnight or a month. [Signs her sister's name and her own.] I knew at the time the pistol was fired that my father was under some charge at the Police Office; my elder sister (eleven months older) was about the farm, but can't say where; after the 6th June a box of papers of my father's was burned; my mother kept these papers of 6th June; the box which was burned was my father's; it had no lid; a spark fell among the papers; don't know when it was; it was before Kelly went to Sydney; a fortnight, or a month before.

B.

THURSDAY, 9 FEBRUARY, 1860.

Present:—

MR. JONES, MR. LODER,
MR. PARKES, MR. WISDOM,
MR. CLEMENTS, MR. HART,
MR. OXLEY.

WILLIAM MUNNINGS ARNOLD, Esq., in the Chair.

Sir Alfred Stephen, Chief Justice, called in and examined:—

- 1. By the Chairman: I think you were the Judge who tried Charles Skerrett on a charge of cattle-stealing, upon which he was convicted? I was.
2. That was in 1855, I think? On the 5th of April, 1855.
3. Was it the case on the trial that the conviction depended upon the truth of the allegation made by Miss Kelly, that certain documents produced by Skerrett, and bearing her name, were forgeries? The charge was for stealing seven head of horned cattle, the property of Isabella Mary Kelly, and on that charge he was convicted. The conviction mainly proceeded upon Miss Kelly's denial of the authenticity of of these documents, some of which she swore were forgeries. On the faith of these last mentioned documents Skerrett had taken possession of and sold the cattle in question; and, as she alleged that the whole of the alleged purchase transaction was a fraud and pretence, he was of course guilty of cattle-stealing or not, according as the allegation on that head on the one or the other side was true or false. That was substantially the question before the jury.

4. Supposing the conviction to have rested upon that basis, did it not necessarily involve the crime of fraud against Skerrett, and of conspiracy against other parties? If the verdict of the jury was right, Skerrett was guilty of an abominable fraud and a conspiracy, in which his daughters must have participated; and he must have been guilty of forgery as well as of the crime of cattle-stealing; and, moreover, of the dreadful crime of inducing his own children to perjure themselves in his support; because one of his daughters was called as a witness to prove that she witnessed Miss Kelly's signature.

5. And that is a crime in law? It is so—of course.

6. Were any of these parties (Skerrett and his daughters) tried for any of these other offences? They were not. The principal offender—assuming Skerrett to have been such—having been convicted and severely sentenced, I presume that no further proceedings were thought necessary. At all events I know of no further proceedings.

7. Did it occur to you at that trial that there was any doubt as to the authenticity of these documents? I can scarcely now recollect whether at the time of the trial I had formed an opinion on that point or not; but I believe that I did. If not, I did form one, a very strong one, immediately afterwards, and before the sentence; and I thought the verdict right.

8. That the documents were forgeries? That he had been guilty of the crimes I have mentioned. The investigation was most carefully conducted; the prisoner was defended by counsel; the case lasted from ten o'clock in the morning until three o'clock the next morning; there were several intelligent men on the jury, and the jury were not long in deliberation. I perceive by my notes that my opinion was at the time entirely in accordance with the verdict the jury expressly found—namely, that the documents were forgeries.

9. But I presume it may be possible that Skerrett, relying upon these documents as evidence in his favour, when placed upon his trial for cattle-stealing, might not have come prepared to prove the genuineness of the documents? It is impossible; because the whole case from first to last depended solely upon the question of forgery or no forgery; and because that question was distinctly entered into before the Magistrates; and indeed the whole evidence taken before the Bench went to that point.

10. By Mr. Jones: The sale of the cattle by Skerrett was never disputed? No, not at all.

11. By the Chairman: I think I understand you to say, that so far as the cattle-stealing is concerned, the cattle were openly claimed and sold; and thus it would apparently be, independently of the question of forgery, a question of disputed ownership between these two parties; and, according to the evidence at the trial, he sold upon his claim? The cattle in question were, I believe, openly taken possession of by Skerrett, and upon that claim of right to them (real or pretended) he sold them.

12. The sale was never denied? These facts were never denied. But if Miss Kelly's story was true, the scheme of fraud was so clever, and she was so involved in the meshes of a net spread for her, that he had her completely in his power. The fact of the open sale was essential to his carrying out the fraud.

13. But, in point of fact, was not Skerrett charged with cattle-stealing, when the real charge was for forgery and conspiracy; as, unless forgery and conspiracy had previously existed, it would be impossible to sustain the charge of cattle-stealing? I can only answer that question by saying, that it was on Miss Kelly's testimony a clear case of cattle-stealing, neither more nor less, with fraud and forgery superadded. If a man steals my cattle, as most thieves do, secretly, it is no more and no less a case of cattle-stealing than the same abstraction of cattle from me would be if the result of a previous pretended sale, supported by forgery or other crimes. This was an aggravated case of cattle-stealing, on the assumption that Kelly was not perjured. And if she was perjured, her crime is quite as shocking as the crime imputed to Skerrett; because she deliberately took away the liberty of an innocent man, with the wicked motive of gain to herself, and that after pocketing his money.

14. By Mr. Hart: And under the former state of the law he might have been sentenced to death? He might have been so, under the old law; but of course that does not alter the quality of his crime.

15. By the Chairman: Would it not have been more proper, as putting Skerrett upon his guard as to the nature of the charge, if he had been put upon his trial for perjury and conspiracy? I do not think so. The act of taking the cattle and selling them was an assumption or act of ownership which was necessary to the carrying out of his fraud, if fraud it was.

16. Of which he was not accused? He was accused of it, and must have been cognizant of that charge, from the course the case took before the Magistrates; and that he did know it there could be no doubt. Nor was the case complicated in the least degree by the form which it assumed. Had he been charged with forgery or fraud, the evidence would have been exactly the same.

17. By Mr. Hart: Was it not trying a double issue—of cattle-stealing and forgery? It was in effect a double issue; but I do not see how that fact, in the slightest degree, complicated the case, since both parties knew what the real issue was. In form, two questions presented themselves; but, in reality, there was but one—forgery or no forgery. If the bill of sale was a forgery, the taking of the cattle under pretence of it was clearly a stealing of them.

18. Is it not a principle in law, that a man cannot be put upon his trial for more than one charge at a time? It is a principle in law that a man shall be called upon to answer only one case at a time; but it would be easy to give a great number of instances in which one issue unavoidably involves perhaps half-a-dozen others.

19. Facts or issues? Substantially, distinct issues; one or more being subordinate to the other.

20. Would you give some illustration? In form, there was but one issue here, but that issue depended upon others. A man, indicted for murder, may have accomplished the murder by accompanying with it house-burning and robbery; and it may be clear that he who robbed the house or burned it down committed the murder. The main issue for the jury in this case will be, whether the prisoner committed the murder; but the evidence will raise the issue whether he robbed the house and then set it on fire.

21. Does not the lesser crime merge into the greater—for instance, where a man guilty of robbery is charged with murder, the latter appearing collaterally in the evidence of the former? Well, these are abstract questions, and perhaps matters merely of opinion, but as a matter of law I deny the assumption, because one felony never does merge into another; it would rest entirely with the prosecutor which charge he would select.

22. In the case of arson that you alluded to, then, although it might be accompanied by murder, the prosecutor might charge the arson, and throw aside the other offence, which the statutes make a capital one? Just so. But the case is exactly an illustration. You try a man for murder, and offer no proof of the murder except by proof of robbery and arson. Therefore the case is precisely an illustration of the course pursued here. I beg to add, however, that if the course chosen in the prosecution was a mistaken one, I am not responsible for it; that was no fault of mine.

23. By the Chairman: Would you be good enough, Sir Alfred, being the first witness, to give us a general outline of the case as presented to yourself from the first to last? Skerrett's case was this:—That he came up from Melbourne, and saw an advertisement by Miss Kelly, offering her cattle for sale; that he went up to her station to buy them, or negotiate for them; that he entered into an arrangement with her for the renting of a portion of the property, including the land; that finally he made a bargain for the purchase of the whole, and that she was paid a certain sum by him for the purchase, leaving a certain sum payable at a future day; that she gave him a written receipt for the money, and a bill of sale acknowledging the purchase; and that she also acknowledged the fact of the sale to other persons verbally;

- bally; and that accordingly he took possession of the cattle, and sold some of them. Miss Kelly's story on the contrary, was: That Skerrett came up there, introducing himself as a Magistrate from Melbourne, and desirous of negotiating with her for her cattle; that she declined to negotiate with him for the sale until she had heard from her agents in Sydney (Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart), from whom she never heard until some considerable time after. Or, rather, as I think, he told her that he had already negotiated with those persons for the purchase. She admitted having entered into some arrangements, however, with Skerrett, as to the purchase of part of her stock and as to a cottage, and executed (that is, signed) a paper on that occasion; that Skerrett thus became acquainted with her signature, and also obtained a footing on her property; that shortly afterwards a charge of cattle-stealing by some neighbour was preferred against herself, and that Skerrett attended at the Police Office with her and became bail for her on that occasion—the case terminating in her being held to bail. At or about that time Skerrett persuaded her to talk of his being the owner of the cattle, for certain reasons which she stated.
24. Were these reasons connected with her own position as being committed? Yes, certainly, in part.
25. Will you be kind enough to proceed with your statement? She acceded to his advice, and he one day brought a man (a butcher, I believe) to buy cattle, and before that person she made such admissions; that the Attorney General refused to prosecute her, and that she shortly afterwards received a letter from Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, stating that Skerrett's story was false; that then she became extremely alarmed, and determined to go to Sydney: Soon afterwards she found that Skerrett had taken and sold the cattle now in question, upon which she prosecuted him for cattle-stealing. She swore that the document acknowledging the sale of the cattle, and the receipt purporting to be signed by her (the former witnessed by Skerrett's two daughters, and the latter by one Turner) were forgeries; that she never got one farthing from him; and that the whole was a deliberately concerted scheme by Skerrett, from first to last, to get hold of her property. That, therefore, was the issue for the jury. She alleged, in proof of the forgery, that she had, by the advice of her banker at Maitland, altered a particular character in her signature; which alteration took place between the time of Skerrett getting her genuine signature and the date of the receipts; and she swore that the forgery contained her old signature; being a fac simile of the signature she had previously made in the agreement concerning the cottage; whilst if it had been genuine it would have been in the new and altered shape.
26. By Mr. Clements: At that date the alleged forged documents would not have been signed by her in the old style, but in the new? Yes. She says—my banker advised me to alter the turn of the letter y. This forgery had the old turn of the y; whereas, if it were a genuine document, the loop of the y would have been turned the other way. In corroboration of Miss Kelly's statement the evidence of a Mr. Andrews was taken, and was very strong against Skerrett.
27. By the Chairman: Do you remember the name of the banker who advised this? I believe that it was Mr. Boswell; I am not sure.
28. Was there any professional evidence given as to the character of her signature? No.
29. Were there any witnesses examined concerning the signature? Yes.
30. Will you please to proceed with the statement? The fact that the only witness to the signature called on the trial was one of his two daughters (who were attesting witnesses), instead of both; and the fact that he did not call the man Turner, who had disappeared, and concerning whose absence, together with that of his daughter, stories were told on his behalf that were almost incredible—occasioned great doubts of his story.
31. By Mr. Wisdom: But since then the absence of the daughter has been accounted for? Yes. (Certain original documents were presented by witness.)
32. By the Chairman: Will you be kind enough to state the nature of these documents? No. 2 is the document alleged to be a forgery; No. 3 is the document admitted to be genuine.
33. By Mr. Hart: Is that the document that Miss Kelly signed for Skerrett, with regard to the cottage and portion of the cattle? I cannot say; I believe so.
34. The document I allude to was signed before the forgery? But the forgery bears a date prior to that document.
35. By the Chairman: What is the next document? No. 4 is the receipt which Skerrett said that Miss Kelly signed in the presence of Turner; but which, according to Mr. Andrews, must have been the result of his conversation with Skerrett; which was perhaps the most suspicious circumstance in the case. The Committee will observe that the asserted forgery bears date prior to these other instruments which are admitted to be genuine.
36. By the Chairman: I observe that there are two of the same date—the one said to be a forgery, and the one said to be genuine—Nos. 2 and 4? Yes. No. 2 is the alleged forged agreement; No. 4, the alleged forged receipt; and both bear the same date; one being witnessed by Skerrett's two daughters, the other witnessed by William Turner; both are sworn to be forgeries. The evidence of Andrews went to show that Skerrett never got the receipt until a considerable time after the agreement, and only in consequence of a conversation between him and Skerrett; whereas the two bear date the same day; and one is witnessed by Skerrett's two daughters, the other by Turner.
37. By Mr. Parkes: Andrews' evidence went to show that Skerrett did get a receipt? It went to show that he meant to get one.
38. By the Chairman: He said that he would get a receipt? It shows (I do not say that he did not get a receipt) that, at the time of his conversation with Andrews, he had not got what he thought a proper one. He showed Andrews the agreement, when Andrews said that he did not think Miss Kelly would own the signature, and asked why Skerrett should get it signed by his daughters, as strangers would have been better. Skerrett said, "I will go and get a receipt." He afterwards produces this receipt, which also was said to be a forgery, witnessed by Turner; whereas the bill of sale (acknowledging also the payment of the money) was witnessed by Skerrett's daughters, and both bear the same date.
39. One appears to be a bill of sale, the other a receipt by Miss Kelly for the money? No doubt of it.
40. What are the others? No. 5 is signed by Miss Kelly, and admitted to be genuine.
41. By Mr. Hart: What connection had Andrews with the case? He was merely a witness.
42. To the signature? No; he swore to a conversation which took place between him and Skerrett, during which conversation Skerrett showed to him the alleged forgery (that is, No. 2); Andrews made some observations to him, impugning the genuineness of the document, and remarked upon the suspiciousness of two of Skerrett's daughters being witnesses to it.
43. When did that conversation take place—and secondly, did it appear that Skerrett had before set up that forged instrument? You will find this more correctly in the depositions; but I may state from my notes that Andrews asserted that in May, 1854, Skerrett told him of the purchase from Kelly, but did not show him any document; but on the 12th of July he came again and showed him the document No. 2, declaring that that was his proof of his former assertion. Then Andrews had a conversation with him, upon which Skerrett said he would get some other witness; and No. 4 is supposed to be the result of that conversation.
44. By the Chairman: That is the one witnessed by Turner? Yes.
45. What followed? Andrews added, that in October the prisoner Skerrett told him, in Turner's presence, that two of the £100 bank notes paid to Miss Kelly were notes of the Commercial Bank, whereas it was proved that the Commercial Bank never issued £100 notes. The agreement or bill of sale No. 2, said to be a forgery, acknowledges the receipt of £400 in cash, and of £200 by a bill.
46. By Mr. Jones: What is the date? It is dated the 6th of June, 1854, whereas the receipt No. 4, witnessed by Turner, and also said to be a forgery, and bearing the same date, does no more. Of course these circumstances, added to the testimony of Andrews, made the case against Skerrett highly suspicious.

47. By Mr. Parkes: Will you state whether it appeared on the trial what the position of Mr. Andrews was? He is now a Magistrate, as I understand; he was then a publican, or had recently been a publican.
48. Was Skerrett defended? Yes, by Mr. Holroyd.
49. Was Mr. Holroyd ever employed for the prosecution? No, I think not. The prisoner was most carefully and energetically defended by Mr. Holroyd.
50. By the Chairman: Will you continue the narrative of events subsequent to the trial? The conviction being in April, 1855, a petition was forwarded to me in June or July, 1857, recommended (among others) by the Rev. J. T. Carter and Mr. Hawthorne, J.P.
51. You had received no application in the interim? I believe not. On the receipt of this petition I wrote letters to Mr. Hawthorne and Mr. Carter, asking information. I wrote also to the Bench of Magistrates at Cundletown, also seeking information on various points, including the characters of several parties and witnesses. I believe that I never had a reply to any of these communications. I waited for replies; and on the 26th of November I reported fully to the Government on that petition. By that report I find that I had procured information from several other quarters, and that I had obtained all the documents and again examined them, in a view to a full reconsideration of the case. (Witness handed in the petition and report referred to.) In that report I expressed an opinion strongly adverse to the prisoner. The alleged forgeries and the genuine documents, I had supposed, were then returned by me to the Attorney General or Crown Solicitor, from whom I got them; and as recently they could not be found, I supposed that they had been lost in the Crown Law Officers' department; but a few weeks ago, on clearing out one of the drawers of the Banco Court, my tipstaff or my associate (I forget which) informed me that they had been found there. Mr. Lee produced them to me, and I then forwarded them to the Crown Solicitor, from whom I have this moment again received them for the purposes of this inquiry.
52. By Mr. Hart: Can you account for this place not having been before searched for the documents? It was a very unlikely place to find them. The drawer in question is, by my orders, appropriated exclusively to papers required for arguments in Banco.
53. By the Chairman: To whom do these receipts belong? Why, if they are forgeries, they belong to the Crown or to Miss Kelly; but if they are genuine they belong to Skerrett.
54. As the case stands at present, to whom do they belong? I cannot tell.
55. Has Skerrett been convicted of forgery? In effect, as already explained, he has. In fact, however, he has only been convicted of cattle-stealing.
56. Would that deprive him of the ownership of these papers? Yes; all the personal property of a felon belongs to the Crown; it is vested in the Crown on conviction.
57. His conviction, then, deprives him of his civil right to demand the cattle? Having now received a pardon there is a restitution to his rights.
58. By Mr. Hart: Where there is a doubt as to the authenticity of documents is it in the power of the Judge to retain them, or are they kept by you for safety? The Court usually impounds suspected documents, but I never retain any myself. Such documents as these usually remain with the Crown Solicitor; and, having obtained them for official purposes from him, I directed my then clerk to return them to the proper office—the Crown Solicitor's—and I concluded that that had been done.
59. Is not this drawer within ten feet of where you sit? Yes, when in the Banco Court.
60. By the Chairman: Everything belonging to a felon is forfeited? Yes. I suppose that these papers were kept as part of the documents in the criminal case; but with that I have nothing to do. The documents were sent back to me in 1857, and certainly I did not mislay them; my clerk did.
61. By Mr. Hart: Do you not think that great blame is attachable to some one for losing these documents, and that Miss Kelly might not have been convicted of perjury if these documents had been produced at her trial? The latter portion of this question I cannot answer. As to the first portion, my answer is as follows:—My clerk in July, 1857, was a Mr. Elliott, and I am perfectly confident that I directed him, as I always do after similar investigations, which are very numerous, to return the documents to the person from whom I got them. It is perfectly certain that he did not do so; but as these investigations are usually in the evening (the day time being generally occupied in Court), and sometimes continued to a late hour in the night, he might not have taken the documents with him, or he may have taken them with other documents, and by mistake mixed them with the Banco papers. I have no knowledge whatever how they became mislaid. A few weeks ago my present clerk and I searched every drawer in which it was at all probable that they might have been placed. But, it appears that the Banco drawer was not searched, nor should I have thought of searching it. Finding, however, some weeks ago, that the drawer was extremely full, upwards of forty or fifty papers being there, some of old date, I directed it to be emptied and re-arranged; and, in arranging the drawer, these papers were found at the bottom. So at least I was informed by Mr. Lee, for personally I have no knowledge of the subject; he brought the papers to me.
62. Did he state by whom the papers were found—were they discovered by Mr. Lee or another officer of the Court? Mr. Lee said, either that he found them or that the tipstaff found them in emptying the Banco drawer.
63. By the Chairman: Will you proceed with your statement as to the further applications made to you? The next application was in or about July, 1858, and it is now in my hand; recommended by Mr. Parkes, Mr. Thomas Whistler Smith, Mr. Tooth, Mr. Williamson, Mr. John Campbell, Mr. G. Thornton, and many other persons of station and character. The application is from the prisoner's wife for a remission. I reported on that petition on the 5th of August, 1858. I hold that report in my hand. It is much more favourably and doubtfully on the case,—principally on the ground that I had recently tried a civil cause, in which I strongly suspected that Miss Kelly had perjured herself. It is certain that the jury returned a verdict directly against her testimony.
64. By Mr. Wisdom: What case was that? The case of Kelly against Burt, for not accounting for the proceeds of horses taken by him to India. She alleged a particular contract with, and representations to him, which he solemnly denied. The jury found a verdict on his statement and against the truth of hers.
65. By Mr. Hart: Was her evidence material to the issue in that case? I think so. If not it would hardly have been received.
66. By the Chairman: You were referring to your reasons for thinking more favourably of Skerrett's case? My second ground for doubting was, that there seemed a general impression that Skerrett was innocent. On the other hand, it will be seen by my report that I did not feel justified on either ground in recommending a mitigation. I must state here that, additionally to these written applications to the Government, on which I at different times reported, I received many personal and written applications from Mrs. Skerrett, most of which in detail I have forgotten. I present one note, among the other papers, which shows that I must have received a written application from her in October, 1857; and I wish to add that, before writing the report of the 5th of August, 1858, I communicated at some length with Mr. Thornton, Mr. Williamson, and some other gentlemen, as to the grounds of their impression of the prisoner's innocence, so that I might be better informed on that point. I had also representations in favour of the prisoner from Mr. T. Barker, who brought one or both, I think, of the daughters for examination as to certain of the facts. But still I had not facts sufficient to set aside a carefully considered verdict; and it will be seen by the papers that I suggested further investigation. I perceive by one document now produced, that I addressed a further communication, demi-officially, to the Colonial Secretary, on the 6th of August, 1858, and that letter I hand in. After that letter the prisoner, it appears, obtained a ticket-of-leave, but whether in consequence of that letter and the previous one of the 5th of August I cannot tell. As will be perceived from the documents, I did not recommend any mitigation.

mitigation, although I expressed great doubt of the case generally. My next application was a personal one, from Skerrett himself, in May or June, 1859, when he told me that he had obtained a ticket-of-leave, and entreated me to allow him a hearing, as he was anxious to obtain a free pardon. As I had always reported against his case up to that date, but now entertained great doubts as to his guilt, and as he was liberated by the Crown on a ticket-of-leave, I thought it due to humanity and to truth to allow him the opportunity. He accordingly waited upon me several mornings before the sitting of the Court; and I investigated, in minute detail, all the facts as represented by him, and saw different witnesses to whom he referred; and the result was, that I thought the new testimony, added to the previous grounds of doubt, made the case a fit one for the extension of a full pardon. I recommended one accordingly, on the 25th of June, by the letter now produced. I recommended it, not because I had formed a distinct opinion that Skerrett was innocent, but simply because I hold it to be a great principle in our law that no man shall suffer punishment, or continue to endure it, when once doubts as to his guilt prevail and preponderate in his favour; and, in this case, in my mind, they finally did. I desire to express my opinion thus:—That the case still remains a doubtful one; but that I am more inclined to think Skerrett innocent than I am to think him guilty. Therefore, I think the pardon right. If I were a juror on Miss Kelly's trial for perjury, I should, on the self-same grounds of doubt, acquit her. I believe that the true solution of this great mystery rests alone with Omniscience. It is, from this hopelessness of knowing certainly the truth, the most painful case that I ever tried or had anything judicially to do with.

67. By Mr. Oxley: Is it your opinion, then, that this inquiry will not result in any good effect? I cannot tell that; because more and wiser heads than mine may arrive at a more distinct conclusion in the case than I have been able to do.

68. You say you believe the true solution of this great mystery rests only with Omniscience? I do think so. I have conscientiously done all I can to assist in the discovery of the truth. I have examined many witnesses—have listened to many statements; and having heard the whole of the case, I would say rather that the man is innocent than that he is guilty; but I decline to say, decidedly, that he is innocent.

69. By Mr. Wisdom: If you thought Skerrett innocent you would think Miss Kelly guilty? I could not find Skerrett innocent without finding Kelly guilty of most aggravated perjury, and Andrews guilty of perjury also.

70. By Mr. Hart: You say that if you were on Miss Kelly's trial for perjury you would acquit her? I should return a verdict of not guilty; that in the evidence the charge is not proved, and therefore that she is not guilty.

71. Do you think that she ought to receive a pardon now? It follows that I do think so, simply on the ground stated by me, that the case is too doubtful to justify punishment by any human tribunal.

72. By the Chairman: Did you not express an opinion that this document, upon which Skerrett's trial mainly turned, was signed by her, although not for the purpose to which Skerrett applied it, namely, to give him a title to the cattle? I think that it is more probable that she did sign it; but that, if so, she signed it for the purpose of giving him a fictitious title.

73. I understand you to say that your opinion is, that she signed it to protect herself from the consequences of her trial? To represent him as the owner, in order to preserve her property from the Crown, in case of her own conviction.

74. Have you arrived at any conclusion whether these two documents were forgeries? Not decidedly; I have no opinion as to whether they are forgeries or genuine; I am in a state of doubt, but more disposed to think them genuine than forgeries. I decline to pronounce either way.

75. I understand you to say that, taking all the circumstances into consideration, you arrive rather at the conclusion that the documents are genuine than that they are forgeries; and also, that from the circumstances you have observed on any trial where Miss Kelly gave evidence, it would not be received as entirely reliable? My impressions are derived from distrust of Miss Kelly's veracity generally, and from the whole of the evidence, as it now stands, favouring Skerrett's statements.

76. These two circumstances taken together lead to a strong conclusion as to the propriety of Miss Kelly's punishment? If I were on a jury in a civil cause, and obliged to return a verdict one way or the other, according to the balance of evidence, I should give it in favour of Skerrett. But I think that the evidence does not justify a verdict of guilty in a criminal prosecution against either.

77. You believe they ought to be left to their civil remedy? Yes; and the punishment of the guilty party to God.

78. By Mr. Hart: Did Skerrett bring any new facts under your notice? Yes; he proved to my satisfaction, chiefly by a Mr. Kirk, that he left Melbourne with a large (or a considerable) sum of money in his possession; and also by a settler on the Manning River, that a very little before the alleged purchase from Miss Kelly, he bought horses to a considerable amount, and paid cash for them. Then comes the doubt as to where are the notes given to her, if they were really ever given. He says, with respect to the notes, that he never said he paid notes of £100 of the Commercial Bank. He said that he gave her £400 in notes; but that she found out that the Commercial Bank did not issue £100 notes, and then that she got Andrews to swear that he (Skerrett) said he gave notes of the Commercial Bank.

79. By the Chairman: He may have had £100 notes, and have mistaken the bank; he said two of them were Victorian notes? Yes, I think so.

80. But that the other two were upon the Commercial Bank? Yes, so Mr. Andrews swore. Then if we reason about it, the woman must have had an object in making the money; otherwise why pursue a course leading to investigation, when she had destroyed them. If she is a perjured person, she must be assumed to have become so by the love of gold.

81. Have the notes never been found? There are no traces of them.

82. By Mr. Hart: Have you heard that she is prepared to go Home, and leave this Colony? That is Skerrett's story.

83. By the Chairman: I understand there was a good deal of prejudice created at the trial against Skerrett, on account of one of his daughters not having been seen for some time, and not being present to give evidence in defence of her signature to the alleged forged document? I do not admit the word "prejudice"; but there was great suspicion and distrust of Skerrett's story on that ground, and no doubt it affected his case very injuriously. But I never yet saw a case more honestly and truly tried than that case was.

84. Was not Skerrett's case also injured by the circumstance that Turner was not called as a witness? Yes; I think that the prisoner owed his conviction not more to the direct testimony of Miss Kelly than he did to the testimony of Andrews, which it is very difficult to reconcile with the supposition of Skerrett's innocence, and to Turner's absence, and to the fact that he only adduced one daughter instead of two, and that a story was told accounting for the absence of the second that really seemed incredible.

85. By Mr. Clements: But was it in evidence ascertained to be true? Yes, it has been so, at the late trial.

86. By the Chairman: And also with regard to the absence of Turner? Yes. Skerrett says, however, that Kelly has caused the murder of Turner, or that he has been spirited away by her. Kelly, on the other hand, says that Turner signed the forged receipt, and then got out of the way for fear of being called on to swear to it in the Supreme Court.

87. By Mr. Wisdom: And that he went away more at the instance of Skerrett than of Kelly? Just so. There is no doubt that the jury believed Turner had been induced in some way not to appear. The strange circumstance about this is, that the bill of sale has on the face of it a receipt for £400 in cash and £200 by bill, witnessed by Skerrett's daughters. Skerrett shows this to Andrews. Andrews observes to him that "it does not look like her signature," and that Skerrett ought to have had some one else, not his daughters, to witness it. Skerrett then says, "I will get a receipt." He gets a receipt.

- receipt then, dated the same day. His account, however, of the matter was, that the receipt and the bill of sale were signed on the same day.
88. By the Chairman: Does he say that they were signed on the same day? I think so.
89. I think he said that he had dated it back to the same day? I cannot say exactly, but I think that his story was as I have just stated.
90. I believe Andrews said at the trial that he arrived at the conclusion that that document, said by Miss Kelly to be spurious, was genuine? I do not know that; if so, it must have been in his deposition.
91. Was that evidence you have alluded to given on oath? You mean the evidence or matter laid before me, on the investigation made by myself since Skerrett's liberation. None of it was on oath, but some was by solemn declaration.
92. And it may be true or false? True or false.
93. By Mr. Loder: From the manner in which that evidence was given to you, do you think you can place reliance upon it? I think I can.
94. By the Chairman: I believe that part of Skerrett's complaint is, that these depositions were prevented from being put in, in order to contradict part of the evidence against him; that the Attorney General refused to allow them to be put in? He must be mistaken. It is utterly impossible that any Judge would tolerate such a proceeding. The depositions would be put in as a matter of course for such a purpose, if desired. No Judge would refuse such an application. No such thing was ever done by a Judge as to refuse the putting in of depositions from the Police Office in order to contradict the witness's evidence. The only question arose on the evidence of Andrews, who was not allowed to state, in answer to questions by the prisoner, what Turner had said. A deposition by a witness is only received, of course, to contradict his own testimony.
95. By Mr. Hart: At all events, if Andrews gave the evidence just read, before the Bench of Magistrates, it was not brought under your notice at the trial? That evidence was not brought under my notice. I would add this—that counsel defending prisoners very frequently omit to put in a witness's deposition in order to show contradictions, because by so doing they may thereby let in other evidence more damaging to the prisoner than the advantage to be gained by the contradiction.
96. Was there no evidence given at the trial as to the genuineness of William Turner's signature? I believe that there was not. Nobody doubted that this was his genuine signature; the imputation being that he had signed as witness to a falsehood, and did not venture to stand a cross-examination upon the matter.
97. By the Chairman: I do not quite understand that part of the evidence at the Police Court by Samuel Turner, accounting for Kelly having got rid of the notes by some means—it is thought to Andrews? She said that she had got some heavy notes, and that she could not pay him, as she could not get them changed or broken on the Manning; and that she sold them, being determined to spend the whole of the proceeds in a lawsuit against Andrews.
98. That would be rather in corroboration of the statement of Skerrett, that they were Victorian notes? Yes; but it would also go to account for his son's absence. For, who would believe a story of this kind,—that Kelly said she had sold the notes, because she was determined to sacrifice them in a lawsuit against Andrews. The jury, probably, did not believe that she ever said so.
99. Do you think that if they were to be asked what was said, and give some of the main facts connected with the case, they would be able to do so? They may.
100. By Mr. Clements: She first says the notes were too large to change, and then says that she sold them? Just so.
101. By the Chairman: You spoke of information received from a Mr. Kirk, of Victoria, who knew Skerrett? Yes. He is a builder in Victoria, or was so; I knew him in Tasmania.
102. Did he say anything of his own knowledge that Skerrett had £100 notes in his possession? He stated that Skerrett was worth many hundred pounds when he knew him in Melbourne; that Skerrett went to Melbourne in 1842, left there for Geelong a few years afterwards, and in 1850 left Geelong and came to Sydney, bringing property with him, and that he never heard anything against Skerrett's character. My impression is, that Kirk told me that he knew Skerrett had plenty of money, but that he did not mention his having any specific sums in notes.
103. By Mr. Wisdom: You say that on the trial there was no evidence taken from persons as to the genuineness of the signatures said to be forgeries? There was none, nor were any witnesses called on behalf of the prisoner to express belief as to their genuineness.
104. Have you formed any opinion as to the genuineness of the signatures? I have great difficulty in distinguishing between the two, except as to the letter y; judging by comparison, I should believe the signatures to be genuine.
105. By the Chairman: You are not able to recollect all the information that Kirk gave you? Not as to details.
106. Is it true that Kirk said he had seen three £100 notes with Skerrett? I have no recollection that he did, and may have confounded his statements to me with the evidence he gave at the recent trial of Miss Skerrett.
107. Was Kirk examined at the trial? At the trial of Skerrett, and there I believe that he said what has just been referred to.
108. Miss Kelly's story of the way in which she was imposed upon by Skerrett was in a considerable degree rendered complete by her representation that she had placed these cattle in the hands of Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart, for sale, and that, therefore, she was likely to believe Skerrett's statement that he had bought the cattle from them, and allowed him to deal with the cattle, to some extent, as if he were, as he stated himself to be, the owner; that was the case at the trial, was it not? I cannot state now particularly how her employment of these agents was connected with the case.
109. If Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart had been examined at the trial of Skerrett, and had shown, as they afterwards did, that these cattle were not in their hands for sale at all, nor any portion of them, would not that have affected the credibility of Miss Kelly's evidence, and, possibly, the result of the trial? It would have affected it in some degree, but I cannot say materially, because I cannot exactly understand now how the employment of Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Butchart bore upon the question, more than that she trusted to Skerrett's representation that he had bought her cattle from her agents.
110. And she spoke to other persons of Skerrett as the owner of the cattle, being deceived herself in that way? She stated that she was misled by his statements and representations, but that she never acted nor meant to act on them until she could hear from her agents.
111. But there being evidence at the trial that she said to other persons that Skerrett had purchased the cattle, which, she says, were for sale by her agents—Rich, Langley, and Butchart—if it can be shown that they never were in the hands of Rich, Langley, and Butchart, would not that throw discredit upon her evidence in a material degree? I do not think it would in a material degree, because my impression is, that she said she was astonished at the representation, as those persons had no such authority; but still, believing him to be a Magistrate of Victoria and a gentleman, and that what he said was true, she waited to hear from them before she finally took steps.
112. Thus she acted upon his representation that he had bought from persons not authorized to sell? My impression is that she said that she employed them to sell some of her cattle, but not the whole of them.
113. I presume you know nothing about the reason why none of these partners were called at the trial? I know that they were called, but were absent. Two were called for the prosecution but did not appear.
114. You do not know why they absented themselves? They were called, but did not appear—why, I cannot say.

115. By Mr. Hart: I think there is a letter from Mr. Langley, dated November 4th, addressed to Skerrett, informing him that Miss Kelly's cattle were not in his hands for sale—that they had been withdrawn some time back? I think that is a letter of a recent date.
116. I understand that these gentlemen were in attendance to give evidence, and secondly, that Miss Kelly's explanation would have been injuriously affected, but that they were told by the prosecution not to attend, as was stated by Skerrett? Of those matters I know nothing. I find by Kelly's evidence that Skerrett said he had purchased her cattle from Messrs. Rich, Langley, and Company, when she said, "I am glad of it, but I only authorized them to sell 250 head, and I am surprised that they sold more."
117. By the Chairman: How is that evidence to be made consistent with the letter now produced, and which Skerrett produces, showing that the cattle, when he came to Sydney, were not in their hands for sale? I cannot tell you.
118. By Mr. Wisdom: According to her own statement she said that she was satisfied, even though the sale had been made without her authority? The whole story is wrapped up in mystery. She says that the conversation was on the 23rd of May.
119. By the Chairman: You have said, in answer to a question by me, that you have never altered your opinion upon this case from what it was in the first instance? Not so. I said that I had never expressed an opinion in favour of Skerrett's innocence, after having expressed one of his guilt. I said that I had never reversed my opinion. You asked if I recommended his pardon on account of his innocence, to which I replied, no; and I say so still.
120. You refused to recommend a mitigation, because you thought the verdict justified? Just so.
121. But, afterwards, you say that, on again taking the details into consideration, you came to a conclusion in his favour. I cannot understand how you reconcile that with the statement that you did not recommend a mitigation because you thought him guilty? That is a matter on which any man may form his own opinion. In the first instance, I thought him guilty. I retained that opinion until after Kelly's evidence against Burt. After this, and on fresh facts coming out, I doubted entirely about his guilt; and so far I altered my opinion; but I never expressed an opinion of his innocence. My reports and recommendations are before you.
122. By Mr. Clements: You lost faith in her evidence? Yes; and I no longer hold the opinion that he is guilty. Some may think that inconsistent with my declining to say that he is innocent; but I am content to state the facts.
123. By the Chairman: Kelly was never put upon her trial for perjury, although she committed perjury in the case of Burt? In that case, two persons detailing a transaction swore different ways. I believed the evidence of the defendant, and not that of the plaintiff. But you cannot prosecute for perjury without two concurring witnesses. The jury believed him and not her; and their verdict, therefore, implied perjury in the plaintiff. But it never could be proved by either against the other, for the reason stated. In fact, I have committed persons for perjury, and have in that way made them enemies for life; but a conviction has rarely if ever ensued.
124. By Mr. Hart: Has not the present Attorney General refused to prosecute in cases where you have committed persons for perjury? I think not. In some cases the jury have said that they disbelieved the evidence; but there has been no opposing testimony strong enough to convict, whilst, in one or two other cases, the parties prosecuted have not been convicted.
125. When the Attorney General, as Grand Juror of the Colony, has refused to prosecute, is it not to be supposed that he was right and you were wrong? That is a matter on which I give no opinion. In England a Judge would order the witness to be prosecuted, a statute giving him authority to do so; and the Crown Prosecutor, when so directed, would present a bill of indictment.
126. Still the Attorney General here exercises the same functions as the Grand Jury in England? Yes. But you ask whether the opinion of the Attorney General is not better than my own. To which I answer, that you may think so; but, that I can scarcely be expected to concur with you.
127. But as a matter of justice? If the Attorney General thinks that the case will break down, or that there are strong doubts as to the guilt, he will properly refuse to put the parties upon their trial; and he may be right and I wrong. It does not follow, however, when he refuses to prosecute, after my having as a Magistrate committed the parties, that he is right in the opinion.
128. By Mr. Hart: But in each case the decision rests upon the evidence given? Of course; but, by being a party to the charge, a Judge becomes involved in personal enmities.
129. By the Chairman: You do not remember whether Miss Kelly was ever previously tried before your Honor? Not that I recollect.
130. By Mr. Hart: Referring to the original charge upon which this man was convicted, I believe it was for stealing seven head of horned cattle,—would your Honor oblige the Committee with the definition of what you regard as stealing? Stealing is the taking and carrying away of the goods of another person against his will, for the purpose of converting them to the taker's use, without any shadow of bonâ fide claim or legal title thereto.
131. Where a thing is done by a person under a claim of right, and openly—would it not be held that he cannot be convicted of a criminal offence? Most certainly no. If the law were so it would come to this, that a man may commit any extent of larceny by superadding forgery and fraud. If a man takes property under a bonâ fide claim of right (that is, a claim believed by him to be well-founded) then you cannot convict him, of course.
132. By the Chairman: Then the question is, whether it is a bonâ fide claim? Yes, certainly.
133. By Mr. Hart: Then when he asserted his claim to do what he did, could a conviction have been sustained without reference as to whether the documents produced were forgeries or not? Yes, most certainly. The documents were matters of defence. They formed no part of the case for the Crown. The charge was simply one of larceny. Kelly up to a certain day owned certain cattle; the prisoner lays hold of seven of them, and appropriates them to his use. If not done under a bonâ fide claim of right, that was larceny. But he says, I did it under a bonâ fide claim of right, for I took them by virtue of these documents; then she meets him by saying these documents are forgeries.
134. You have stated that it depended upon the question of forgery or no forgery? Certainly, so it did.
135. Then you qualify this by saying that the conviction could be sustained without documents at all? No, I don't qualify anything. The case, as stated, shows a larceny; the documents were produced in justification of the act of taking; then came the question, whether these documents were forgeries or not; if genuine, his defence was complete; and as the prisoner chose to raise this second issue for decision, it was unavoidably a matter to be determined in that prosecution. She charges him with stealing cattle; he says they are his; she follows up her charge by saying that the documents offered in proof of his ownership are forgeries; there is thus raised an issue on them, which is imposed on the Crown by the prisoner, because it was for him to prove their authenticity.
136. Was the charge against Skerrett for stealing cattle which were included in the agreement which Kelly acknowledges she made with Skerrett, or not? When I answered the question in the first instance I was under the impression that there had been a previous sale by Miss Kelly of some portion of her property. On looking at the documents I think that I must have been mistaken on that point; and that, instead of selling, she must have rented to him a portion. I am now also not quite sure whether No. 3 was acknowledged by Miss Kelly or not.
137. If it had appeared at the trial that the seven head of cattle he was charged with having stolen were included in the agreement, would the conviction have ensued? If the prisoner could have made out that the seven cattle were those rented or sold by her, of course his defence would have been established.

138. If the land and cattle were leased to him, and after that he sold the cattle, could a conviction of stealing have been sustained? If the cattle in question had been included in any genuine agreement, either of sale or rental, the conviction could not have been sustained; but Skerrett never pretended anything of the kind.

139. You cannot say whether the cattle were included in that agreement or not? I presume that they were not included, because the prisoner did not say or suggest that they were. He said only that they were included in the disputed document.

140. Was it shown what number of cattle she had at the time, and what were their brands? I believe not; I am not quite sure. The prisoner set up no other defence than that these cattle had been sold to him by specific agreement, namely, the one said to be a forgery.

141. By Mr. Clements: An agreement subsequent to the rental? Yes.

142. And including those said to have been previously leased, as well as the rest of the cattle, with the station? Including (as I believe) the whole of the cattle and station.

143. By Mr. Hart: Can your Honor say when Skerrett first set up the alleged forged agreement marked No. 2? I can only refer you to the evidence of Andrews for that.

144. Was not one of your Honor's reasons for recommending a free pardon, the general impression that he was innocent? No; I have not said so.

145. You may remember that you said you had two grounds: first, that your faith in Miss Kelly's evidence had been shaken; and, secondly, that there was a general impression that he was innocent? Those were my two grounds for entertaining doubts; and I so stated, as you will perceive, not in my letter recommending the pardon, but on a previous occasion, when I declined even to recommend a mitigation. The second ground, that there was a general impression in the neighbourhood that Skerrett was innocent, is no ground for recommending a pardon or mitigation, though it may form a very good ground for entertaining doubts. I entertained, therefore, a doubt; but did not see my way clear to recommend a pardon.

146. What does your Honor mean by "general impression"? The certificates attached to the petition of the inhabitants in the neighbourhood state substantially that they believed the man to be innocent. That being the state of feeling or opinion entertained by a great number of people in the locality of the alleged offence, presented grave occasion for doubt; although not sufficient for the recommendation of a pardon, in the face of the decision of the jury.

147. Can your Honor state whether the persons whose names are appended to the petition knew anything of the facts of the case? I cannot. On receiving the first petition, I wrote to those who seemed to me to be the most respectable parties, and never got an answer.

148. By the Chairman: The subsequent recommendation of pardon was in consequence of fresh information being obtained? Yes. The doubts became exceedingly strengthened; and in short I was satisfied that, with those additional facts, the jury would have acquitted the prisoner.

149. By Mr. Hart: After listening to Skerrett's statement in May, 1859, did you examine Kelly or other persons in reference to the truth of the matters alleged by Skerrett? It was of no use to examine her. She, living on the Manning, could not know whether he had money in (or on his departure from) Melbourne or not.

150. By Mr. Parkes: Did it ever transpire that Skerrett was a Magistrate in Victoria? There is no doubt that he never was. He was a convict in Van Diemen's Land, transported, he says, for bigamy or abduction. In Van Diemen's Land his wife came out to him, and when he got his pardon he was allowed to go over to Victoria. So, at least, I have reason to believe. He there set up as a brewer, which business he carried on extensively; he made money at the diggings, and then came up here. I know that he was a convict in Van Diemen's Land, from the circumstance of his wife having two years ago or more sought pecuniary aid from me; and when calling one day a lady saw her who remembered something of her in Hobarton.

151. By Mr. Clements: She never acknowledged to you that he had been a convict? No; but on that occasion I said to her that I believed her husband was transported to Van Diemen's Land, and she could not deny that he was. He himself has told me, however, that he was sent out, when a very young man, for abduction or for bigamy,—I forget which.

152. By the Chairman: That is all you know with regard to Skerrett's case? Yes.

C.

Hyde Park,
25 June, 1859.

Sir,

Charles Skerrett, having been released from confinement on a ticket-of-leave, has entreated my attention to some points in his case, noted in the enclosed papers; and I have thought it due to humanity, and the cause of truth, to permit him to go through the whole of the evidence with me (morning after morning, before sitting of the Court), and I have interrogated him on various matters connected with his past life, and the transactions with Miss Kelly which ended in his conviction.

I confess myself to be greatly staggered by the explanations and account which he gives; supported as they are (in part) by the papers already mentioned. It was on the evidence mainly of Mr. Joseph Andrews, and on the absence of the witness whom he called before the Justices, and the improbabilities of Skerrett's having so much money in notes, and of the documents being signed in the daughters' presence, that that conviction rested. And, since it appears that Skerrett really had a good deal of money, with which he was buying horses, and that Miss Kelly not improbably did ascertain, or certainly had time to ascertain, what Bank did not issue £100 notes, I think it a duty to say that very serious doubts have been excited in my mind as to the prosecution generally; which doubts, added to the verdict against Miss Kelly last year, in a civil case tried before me, in which her oath was utterly discredited, lead me to report my opinion, that the royal prerogative of mercy may, in this case, be not unfitly extended further to Skerrett.

If he be really an innocent man (as, on his own statements, could all of them be substantiated, he would turn out to be), the woman Kelly is the most abandoned perjurer on record. But, looking at the whole case, in connection with the papers submitted, I cannot now say that my persuasion of his guilt is by any means what I formerly reported it as being.

I am, &c.,

ALFRED STEPHEN.

The Honorable
The Colonial Secretary.

Woodside, Manning,
3 October, 1862.

Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge your communication in desiring my attendance at the Committee Room, on Wednesday, the 12th November. I regret extremely that circumstances will unavoidably prevent my being present, but beg to forward a declaration and statement of all I know, and as far as I can remember, and which you may rely on being perfectly correct.

About the middle of 1854, Miss Kelly was very desirous for Mr. Begbie to come to some terms with her, in taking charge of her horses; but not succeeding in doing so, Mr. B. finally declined having anything to do with them. However, soon after the above, Miss K. often expressed a wish or intimation that Mr. B. together with one of my younger sons, would purchase her cattle, which they likewise put off, not being desirous of entering into any speculation, saying that their means precluded them from so doing. However, very late in December, 1858, she paid us a visit, and by false representations and strong and fair promises, urged Mr. B. to enter into an arrangement for the purchase of her cattle, which she positively assured us exceeded 600 head.

Though late at night, an agreement was accordingly drawn up. Miss K. was to give Mr. B. 500 head, her property at Waterview, and all her milking utensils (which were, I believe, in good condition).

On this they drew up two promissory notes, which, as she said, was only for form sake, as she would be satisfied with the liquidation of the first; as to the second, she would in all probability never think of, or consign it to the fire; however, should she not do so, and when it fell due, the payment could always be put off from year to year, knowing how very badly we were off in a pecuniary point of view; as well as surrounded by painful difficulties.

But she required £200 down, which Mr. B. had not to give; this Miss K. knew full well from the very first, and so she addressed me on the subject. I replied that I had unfortunately none of my own, having sustained severe losses, but that I might perhaps succeed in borrowing the requisite sum, deducting the interest, from two of my youngest sons, which she earnestly entreated me to do. A day or two previous, it afterwards appeared, Mr. Burt, of Sydney, had sent an execution on her cattle and horses (of this we were in ignorance at the moment), and unless her debt was at once discharged, they were to be sold.

So the next morning after Miss K.'s visit to us, she, accompanied by Mr. B., went to Taree, to arrange matters with Mr. Gofton on her behalf, and the residue of £200 advanced by Mr. B. was drawn by Miss K. herself.

I also must not omit to mention, that during Miss K.'s visits to Sydney she begged of us to supply her station with rations, in flour, meat, sugar, and tea, which we did, much to our inconvenience, promising to refund us on her return to the Manning, which she never did. Our supplies continued till Mr. Cochrane, her overseer, remained on her station. (This could be proved by witnesses.)

The mustering and branding of the cattle commenced and lasted about fourteen months, as they were greatly dispersed and scattered all over this part of the country, the weather also being rather unfavourable.

It cost Mr. Begbie not a little in money and hand, to collect them closer to his own place.

About this time Mr. C. Skerrett made his appearance on the Manning, and insisted on claiming the whole of Miss K.'s cattle, some of which he sold both in Maitland and Tinonee; others again he and his party dispersed from our neighbourhood; and, being under arms, threatened us if we resisted his securing them, which we of course did to the best of our ability, at an immense loss of time, money, annoyance, and labour.

However, to cut the matter short, Miss K. was placed in gaol, and by her false and wicked representations she completely ruined Mr. Begbie and family (notwithstanding all her previous commiserations and often repeated sincere desire, as she averred, to assist and promote their prospects).

Mr. B. and family were, as it could be well imagined, owing to all this, more in distress and greater difficulty than at any previous time; and so his own friends begged of him to return to India at once, they paying for his passage and secure him an appointment, if he could only rid himself completely of Miss Kelly; for which purpose Mr. B. went down to Sydney, to endeavour to intercede with Miss K., as far as I recollect about the middle of October, 1860, mentioning how he was situated, and if she would return the two promissory notes she would get, besides all she had agreed on giving him according to settlement, all the cash he had collected for the cattle he had sold, all promissory notes for the same, his own land of 326 acres, and would strive to get his own friends to give her between £50 and £100 besides; all of which she positively refused to listen to, behaving in a most scandalous manner. He endeavoured again to bring her to some reason, showing her the hopelessness of his position, his anxiety at once to depart for India, and explaining to her that in reality she would have more than ever she had before her settlement with himself, undergoing as he had done much vexation, labour, and expense, in mustering the cattle, &c., &c., but to no avail, as she positively again refused to hear from him any further on the subject. And then, and only then, much to his sorrow and disappointment, he was, from adverse circumstances, compelled to enter the Insolvent Court, very much against his wish, as by so doing it protracted his stay in this Colony.

Mr. Begbie, during the whole time he was the possessor of Miss K.'s cattle, purchased and killed his own beef, with the exception of seven or eight of the K brand.

On entering the Insolvent Court, he honourably gave up to the last shilling he was possessed of, and had to borrow money for his and family's outfit when he finally left the country for India.

Mr. B., with all the hands he employed and all the labour, never succeeded in mustering more than between 240 or 250 head, and so Miss K. must have most falsely represented the number; besides she never handed over the title deeds of Waterview, and caused by her own private debts all the milking utensils to be seized and sold, to defray her shepherds' wages. Witnesses from the Manning could prove the correctness of all these statements.

Dear Sir,

I regret to state that I shall be unable to attend at No. 3 Committee Room of the Legislative Assembly, on Wednesday, the 10th instant, as arrangements are completed for taking about a week's journey into the interior this evening, by the steamer up the Hunter. I have, however, left my notes in the case of Richards v. Andrews, and they contain the unanimous verdict of the jury, which I, as one of the jurors, fully concurred in. During Miss Kelly's examination she denied making a certain lease of the Mount George's Paddock, which lease the plaintiff Richards swore she had written and given to him; and the jury unanimously gave Richards' evidence the preference, as it was apparently based on the clearest testimony; whilst her evidence was contradicted even by specimens of her own handwriting, and her character was in one or two instances doubted by the defendant's own witnesses. I have left instructions with my assistant to lend you my notes taken at the trial, and to give you this letter, thinking that you might ask him for them, as I shall be unavoidably absent from Sydney, and as you might possibly require them on Wednesday, the 10th instant, at the Committee Room. You will of course return the notes as soon as you have done with them for that purpose, as I intend to keep them on account of that being such an interesting trial. When I return, if you should require my personal attendance, I shall, of course, be glad to comply with your very reasonable and proper request.

Mr. Flett,

I have, &c.,
MARK SPENCE.

MURRAY v. WEAVER.

No. 1.

MR. MURRAY to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*National School,
Merriwa, 6 March, 1862.*

SIR,

Mr. Henry Weaver, lately appointed a Magistrate here, left his seat on the Bench to-day, and galloped most furiously down, up, and down again, the main street of this town, practising with his long whip as if he were driving a bullock. He galloped up to my door, called me out, and in presence of my son 13, and daughter 16 years old, and my scholars just ready to march into school, commenced beating me in the most violent manner with his whip. I retreated into my house, which he forcibly entered to seek for and beat me again; I went out the back way to seek protection; he then told my wife that when he found me "he would beat me within an inch of my life." While asking Mr. Bettington, J.P., and Dr. Morris, Clerk of the Court, for a summons, he galloped upon me and beat me in the most violent manner; I called upon the two gentlemen present as witnesses, knowing I should receive no protection where I was; I retreated through the yard and the house (Mr. Tuite's inn), across the street into the blacksmith's, my assailant beating me all the time; I was obliged to remain there till a messenger went for my son to fetch a constable to protect me from this Magistrate's violence while on my way home.

All the above will be verified upon oath, and I beg you will cause inquiry to be made into the facts above narrated, as, if such a man is permitted to sit on the Bench, his opponents in any way need not expect justice.

I do trust the Government will consider it their duty to make inquiry into such an outrage, committed by a Magistrate, upon a public servant in so public a place.

I have, &c.,
J. H. MURRAY.

P.S.—I write to my solicitor by this post, as I do not think the ends of justice would be met by a fine of a pound (£1) at this Court.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to BENCH OF MAGISTRATES, MERRIWA.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 14 March, 1862.*

GENTLEMEN,

6 March, 1862.

In transmitting to you the accompanying copy of a letter from Mr. J. H. Murray, making a complaint relative to an assault committed upon him by Mr. Henry Weaver, J.P., I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to request that you will furnish a report upon the statements therein contained.

I have, &c.,

BENCH OF MAGISTRATES, MERRIWA, to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Police Office, Merriwa,
20 March, 1862.*

SIR,

I have the honor, on behalf of the Bench of Magistrates, Merriwa, to acknowledge receipt of your communication of 14th instant, enclosing copy of a letter from Mr. J. H. Murray, schoolmaster of Merriwa, in which he complains of Mr. H. Weaver's conduct towards him.

On the day in question (6th instant) Mr. Weaver attended Court, sitting on two cases, and only left when a case in which he was interested was called on.

It was upwards of half an hour before I saw him again, and consequently know nothing of the assault (if such was committed.)

On Mr. Weaver's return home I will lay your letter before him, when doubtless he will afford you such explanation as may be satisfactory.

I have, &c.,

No. 4.

BENCH OF MAGISTRATES, MERRIWA, to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Police Office, Merriwa,
3 April, 1862.

SIR,

Having made due inquiry relative to the subject matter of your letter of the 14th March, No. 62/1201, we have the honor to enclose herewith the statements of Mr. William Blaxland and Mr. John Morris, and from further inquiries that we have made, are of opinion that Mr. Weaver did not assault Mr. Murray in the way he complains; and we trust, from the enclosed statement, that you will perceive that the amount of personal feeling exhibited by Mr. Murray towards Mr. Weaver arises out of private disputes.

2. Mr. Weaver has been throughout most impartial in his magisterial decisions, and has given universal satisfaction.

We have, &c.,

JNO. B. BETTINGTON, J.P.
J. B. S. HUTCHINGS, J.P.

[Enclosure in No. 4.]

Police Office, Merriwa,
3 April, 1862.

Present:—

J. B. Bettington, Esq., J.P.
J. B. S. Hutchings, Esq., J.P.

An inquiry taken this day concerning an assault said to have been committed by H. Weaver, Esq., J.P., upon one John Henry Murray.

William Blaxland states:—Mr. Weaver left the bench after he had finished his magisterial duty, and I then saw him riding up and down the street, but he was not in an excited way, and was riding as if he was engaged in business. He spoke to me, and said, "Now I am going to speak to Mr. Murray, and to see what he means by calling me a cattle-stealer." I never saw Mr. Weaver beat Mr. Murray. Mr. Murray had no occasion to call a constable for protection, as Mr. Weaver had gone home, and was absent when Mr. Murray sent for a constable. I saw Mr. Murray go out of Mr. Tuite's inn over to the blacksmith's, but he was not followed by any person.

WILLIAM BLAXLAND.

Taken before us, this 3rd April, 1862.

J. B. S. HUTCHINGS, J.P.
JNO. B. BETTINGTON, J.P.

Dr. Morris states:—He never saw Mr. Weaver riding furiously up and down the town. Mr. Weaver left the Bench on account of a case in which he was interested coming on. I saw Mr. Weaver ride into Mr. Tuite's yard, but did not witness any assault, as I was leaving at the time on my own business. I can state positively that Mr. Weaver did not follow Mr. Murray over to the blacksmith's shop. Mr. Weaver had left the town for home half an hour before Mr. Murray requested a constable to accompany him to his house.

JOHN MORRIS.

Taken before us, this 3rd April, 1862.

J. B. S. HUTCHINGS, J.P.
JNO. B. BETTINGTON, J.P.

This explanation does not appear to me satisfactory by any means. There has been no opportunity afforded to Mr. Murray to support his allegations. Refer the correspondence to the Attorney General.

MR. WEAVER to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Cullingrall, Merriwa,
* 4 April, 1862.

SIR,

I have the honor to state that I have been placed in possession of a copy of a letter addressed to you, dated 6th March, by Mr. John Henry Murray, of Merriwa, wherein he charges me with having committed a violent assault upon him in the public street of that place, and calls upon you to supersede me from the Commission of the Peace. In reply thereto I have the honor to state, for your information, that Mr. Murray's statements grossly misrepresent the occurrence, which I can prove by respectable witnesses.

The following are the facts of the case:—On the 3rd March a difference occurred between us at my residence, in reference to the ownership of a bullock then in my yards, which Mr. Murray had sold to my predecessor; and upon my refusing to give up the bullock to him, I was informed that he publicly reported in Merriwa that I was a cattle-stealer, and that he intended to take out a warrant for me. He also addressed to me a very insulting letter in reference to the bullock, which he concluded by giving up all claim to the bullock, showing that he had no right to it.

On

* Delivered to me personally this day, by Mr. Russell, defendant's attorney, who explains that he kept it back until now.—C. C.—2 August.

On the 6th March I took my seat on the Bench, and only left it when a case was called in which I was indirectly interested. It was then I was informed by some individuals that Mr. Murray had calumniated me; I therefore deemed it necessary, in vindication of my character, to call upon him for an explanation, but could obtain none from him. I was so exasperated at my character being so unjustly and grossly assailed, that I gave him some three or four strokes with my whip in Mr. Tuite's private yard; but it is not true that I struck Mr. Murray in a public place, or followed him across the street; nor did I ever, at any time enter his private residence, or even the verandah of his private residence; nor was it before his wife or children. I confess that I acted too hastily and indiscreetly, but the gross indignity cast upon me by Mr. Murray exasperated me.

I leave the matter with confidence in your hands, feeling assured that you will consider that as a gentleman and a Magistrate such an insult was a great provocation, though in strictness not a complete justification of the act; and I trust that you will not be influenced by the ill feeling and mis-statements of Mr. Murray to adopt any extreme measure his vindictive feeling suggests to my injury. It is the first time in my life that any man has ever ventured to charge me with conduct unbecoming in a man of honor and a gentleman, and you may therefore judge how hurt I felt that Mr. Murray should have so calumniated me without the slightest foundation.

If requisite I shall do myself the honor to forward to you Mr. Murray's letter, addressed to me, with statement of witnesses who can disprove the truth of Murray's allegations. I may state that my character will bear the closest investigation, and I believe that you will not readily comply with a calumniator's vindictive suggestions which would be injurious to me.

I have, &c.,
HENRY WEAVER.

COPY Opinion respecting Complaint of Mr. J. H. Murray against Mr. Henry Weaver, J.P.

THE reporting Magistrates seem to have entirely neglected their obvious duty in investigating such serious charges against a brother Magistrate.

The charge is so distinct and specific as to parties concerned and the persons present, that the inclination of my own mind is that the reporting Magistrates, one of whom (Mr. Bettington) is, I presume, the Magistrate mentioned in Mr. Murray's letter of complaint, themselves tacitly admit the substantial correctness of the charges made. I think that the Magistrates should be informed that such interpretation will be put upon their report, unless they show some ground against such interpretation within a specified period; and that the Government should then consider whether Mr. Weaver should continue in the Commission of the Peace, unless he can justify such conduct towards Mr. Murray or disprove the charges made.

JOHN F. HARGRAVE,
Attorney General.

No. 7.

MR. MURRAY to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Merriwa,
2 June, 1862.

SIR,

I observe, in last Saturday's Parliamentary report, that you, in reply to the Hon. Member for this Electorate, stated that my complaint against Mr. Henry Weaver, a Magistrate lately appointed here, had been referred to the Bench for explanation. Presuming that this Bench is the one meant, I beg to state that the Bench here consists of only two members, Mr. Weaver, the party complained against, a young man, and Mr. James Bettington, a still younger man.

There is reason for believing that Mr. Bettington knew, before Mr. Weaver committed the assault upon me, of his intention to assault me.

After Mr. Weaver committed the first assault upon me, I went to the Court House to get a summons for him from Mr. Bettington, the only other Magistrate here. I met Mr. Bettington and the Clerk of the Court coming from the Court House. I made my request; before I received an answer, Mr. Weaver came galloping into the yard, and made a second furious assault upon me. I called upon both the C.P.S. and Mr. Bettington to witness the assault. The Clerk turned his back, and walked away. Mr. Bettington stood tacitly approving of the outrageous conduct of his brother Magistrate. Mr. Weaver knocked off my hat; William Scaife, a youthful companion of his, kicked it about. Mr. Bettington took it up, and jeeringly said, "The damned wretch will get sun-struck." I requested Mrs. Glasscock, wife of the party in whose house I sought refuge, to send some one for the constable, who lived about one hundred yards off. She replied that she dare not, for if she did, Bettington and Weaver would take their work (blacksmith's) away from her. After some time an old man was obtained, who went for my son, and he went for the constable, who conducted me home, bareheaded, under a burning sun. Just before the constable came, Weaver left the public-house and went home. Shortly after, Master Scaife, Mr. Bettington, and Mr. W. Blaxland, followed him, and, I am told, spent the evening rejoicing with him in their usual manner.

I felt persuaded that if I summoned Mr. Weaver to this Court Mr. Bettington would not give me justice; I therefore entered an action at the District Court, sixty-five miles off by vehicle road, thirty-nine miles by surveyed bridled track. I yesterday paid the Clerk of Court £3, to secure his attendance to give evidence. I paid Constable Potts £1. Mr. Bettington returned me the summons served upon him by the constable, and demands from me £10. I am besides obliged to hire means of conveyance for myself, son, daughter, and another witness. All this expense I am put to, because I feel confident this Bench would not give me justice against Mr. Weaver.

Last Saturday I went to the Court House, and by permission from the constable in charge, and under his eye, was looking over the District Courts Act for information. Mr. William Blaxland, who lives with Mr. Weaver, asked if I was in the Court House with Potts. Next morning (Sunday) Mr. Bettington sent for the District Courts Act and Plunkett's A. Magistrate, and kept them at his private residence till yesterday evening, and then sent a written order to the constable in charge, directing him "to not permit any one in future to see any of the Acts of Council in the Court House." The constable, acting upon Mr. Bettington's instructions, refused to let me see the District Courts Act or get any information from it. I understood that all the Acts in the Court here were public property, and that any citizen might, under certain restrictions and at convenient times, seek in them for necessary information. If I am right, Mr. Bettington has acted wrongly in taking them to his private residence, and afterwards prohibiting their use to me in the Court House.

I respectfully submit, from the above facts, that Mr. Bettington has so identified himself with Mr. Weaver's case as to render him incompetent to make a fair report on my charge against Mr. Weaver.

In reading over my letter of the 6th of March last, I find there is one sentence which requires correction. I stated that I retreated through the yard and the house (Mr. Tuite's inn), across the street into the blacksmith's, my assailant beating me all the time. I ought to have said, I retreated through the yard, my assailant beating me all the time, then through the house (Mr. Tuite's inn), across the street into the blacksmith's.

I am sorry that, in my haste to catch the post, I did not observe the error before sending off my letter.

I have, &c.,
J. H. MURRAY.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 6 June, 1862.*

GENTLEMEN,

With reference to your letter of the 3rd April last, reporting on a complaint made by Mr. Murray against Mr. Henry Weaver, a Magistrate, for assaulting him, I am directed to inform you that, in a case when the charge is as distinct and specific as to the parties concerned and the persons present, the investigation appears to be very imperfect, and that in the absence of grounds for a contrary opinion, the inference to be drawn from your present report must be that you tacitly admit the substantial correctness of the charge made by Mr. Murray.

2. The Colonial Secretary requests that you will make further and due inquiry into the case (which cannot be allowed to rest as it is) without delay, and that you will afford Mr. Murray an opportunity of supporting his allegations.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 7th instant, forwarded to Maitland and this morning received here, stating that the Colonial Secretary will be glad to be favoured with my notes of the trial Murray v. Weaver, tried at the District Court at Scone, on 12th June last, or with my views of the conduct of Mr. Weaver, and whether I consider that gentleman ought to be removed from the Commission of the Peace.

In reply, I have the honor respectfully to submit that, as the case referred to is still pending, a new trial having been granted by me to the next District Court at Newcastle, on the 30th inst., against which new trial the defendant has appealed to the Supreme Court, I, as the Judge who tried the case, ought not to be called on either for a copy of my notes of the evidence at the trial, or to express any opinion whatever on the conduct of the defendant, Mr. Weaver, until the case has been finally determined.

No. 12.

MR. RUSSELL to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Mort's Buildings, Pitt-street,
Sydney, 4 August, 1862.*

SIR,

I have the honor to state, for your information, relative to the proceedings in the matter of Murray v. Weaver, and the complaint of Mr. J. H. Murray, requesting that Mr. Weaver might be suspended in the Commission of the Peace, as follows:—

Mr. Weaver since April, 1861, has had the management of Mr. Charles Blaxland's station near Merriwa, having then entered into an agreement with Mr. Blaxland for a partnership. Previous to Mr. Weaver's going there, Mr. Murray, it appears, bartered a bullock with Mr. Cooper (Mr. Weaver's predecessor), which was branded with the station brand, and handed over to Mr. Weaver.

On 3rd March last Mr. Murray claimed the bullock. Mr. Weaver refused to give it to him. Mr. Murray thereupon, as proved by two witnesses, reported in Merriwa that Mr. Weaver was no better than a cattle-stealer.

Mr. Murray also wrote to Mr. Weaver as follows:—

“Merriwa, 4 March, 1862.

“ Sir,

“ Mr. Cooper never gave me anything for the bullock you claim for your master, therefore the beast is mine; but the conduct of the late lessee of Cullingrall contrasts so favourably with that of Mr. Blaxland's present Superintendent, that sooner than give Mr. Cooper any trouble, I hereby give the bullock to Mr. Blaxland, as Mr. Cooper directed.

“ I am, &c.,
“ J. H. MURRAY.

“ Mr. Weaver,
“ Superintendent,
“ Cullingrall.”

This note was delivered to Mr. Weaver while he was on the Bench, on 6th March, and on the same day he was informed of the unjust charge against him as a cattle-stealer. It seems evident that by Mr. Murray forwarding this note, two days after it was dated, to Mr. Weaver on the Bench instead of putting it in the Post Office of the town, that Mr. Murray was then actuated by animosity. Mr. Weaver lived only about a mile from Merriwa.

The

The case was tried at Scone, in June last, before a jury granted at plaintiff's instance, when a verdict was returned for him, with £10 for damages, being the sum which defendant had paid into Court, with full costs, on being served with a summons, the jury stating that that sum was ample compensation for the plaintiff. No evidence was then called for the defence, but his counsel relied on the contradictory nature of the evidence for plaintiff.

Judge Purefoy, after having reserved judgment, granted a new trial, to take place at Newcastle (without assigning any reason, or any imputation being made against the jury at Scone), the further extremity of the district for defendant, though not for plaintiff, as the National Board discharged him in May from the Merriwa School through matters unconnected with this.

I was informed by many people at Newcastle, before and during the trial, that a Magistrate had no fair chance with a Newcastle jury, and I have no reason to doubt its truth. Other rumours were afloat, which I forbear from stating. On the trial at Newcastle, the Judge rejected evidence as to the verdict at Scone; he rejected, without precedent, evidence of the correspondence between the solicitors on negotiations for settlement by compensation and apology, and his charge to the jury is excepted to for misdirection, in not leaving the evidence in mitigation of damages fully to them, and as to the law thereon, and his direction that the damages might be penal.

His rejection of evidence and misdirection have been appealed against. I would confidently submit the next trial to any impartial tribunal, to decide whether or not the £10 paid into Court, and the offer of apology, were not adequate.

From the commencement Mr. Weaver has endeavoured to conciliate by apology and compensation, and at the same time to free himself from the imputation of a cattle-stealer.

Before the trial at Scone, Mr. Murray's attorney (Mr. Mullen) wrote to me (not without prejudice or anything to prevent the letter from being given in evidence), offering to take £10 and an apology. I immediately wrote, assenting conditionally on a mutual apology: this was declined without comment.

If Mr. Murray had not imputed cattle-stealing to Mr. Weaver, although it was sworn to distinctly by two witnesses at the trial, he could then easily have denied it. Mrs. Murray, in her evidence, stated that Mr. Weaver, previous to the assault, said he was informed of that imputation.

Mr. Murray's statements, in his letter to you dated 6th March, are grossly exaggerated, and some not attempted to be proved.

There was no evidence whatever, by any person who saw him, of Mr. Weaver riding fast or furiously; the statement in Mr. Murray's letter is imaginative; the whip was a short riding whip, not a "long whip"; there was no evidence of more than one scholar being in view; Mr. Weaver positively stated on oath that his whip did not strike Mr. Murray in the street, or at or in his house, but that he made a strike at him on Mr. Murray retreating, but without effect; that he did not follow Mr. Murray into any part of his house; Mr. Murray admitted pointing a loaded gun at Mr. Weaver; Mr. Murray continues, "I retreated across the street, my assailant beating me all the time." On 2nd June, Mr. Murray, in another virulent letter, with drawsthis part, but that was after the Magistrates' report, yet this, amongst other charges, is what he alleges on 6th March can be proved on oath.

Mr. Weaver admits having given Mr. Murray three or four slight hits in Mr. Tuite's yard, but no other assault, and Mr. Weaver immediately went home.

The constable who examined Mr. Murray's back, at his own request, on 6th March, said it was nothing. It is alleged that Mr. Murray has been charged twice with assaulting his scholars, and that he had only seven scholars on the 6th March, although he had about forty at one time.

Mr. Weaver is about 28 years old; he is a young man of high principle and integrity and moral feeling; he has never been known on any other occasion to commit such an act of indiscretion; he has been subjected to heavy losses through it—provoked by a person evidently envious of his position, and whose great aim seems to be to get him suspended.

Mr. Weaver is a member of a large family in the Colony. He did not seek the appointment of Magistrate.

I trust that it will not be considered necessary to supersede him, and so blight his career.

Mr. Dangar, M.P., informs me that this is the first of a series of complaints against the Magistrates.

If, however, it should be considered that Mr. Weaver should be suspended, I have the honor to request that time may be given to him to tender his resignation.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 20 October, 1862.*

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor has laid before the Executive Council, the correspondence that has taken place with respect to an assault committed by you upon Mr. J. H. Murray, Master of the National School at Merriwa, which has not been satisfactorily explained, although opportunities for doing so have been afforded; and, under the advice of the Council, His Excellency has now directed that you should be called upon to show cause why you should not be removed from the Commission of the Peace. The Colonial Secretary, therefore, requests that you will furnish any statements which you may desire to submit without delay.

—————
 CITY CORONER.

(INQUEST ON ANDREW BROMLEY.)

—————
Received by the Legislative Assembly, 31 October, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.
 —————

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Landholders and Residents of Lane Cove,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners complain, that on Monday, the twenty-second day of September last, between eight and nine o'clock in the morning, the dead body of a man, named Andrew Bromley, was found in a well at Lane Cove, with a severe cut in the throat, and another on the left arm. At the distance of about 250 yards was found the hat of the deceased, and within a short distance of the hat were two large patches of what appeared to be human blood. At an early hour on the same day, information of the finding of the body was sent to the City Coroner.

That your Petitioners feel very dissatisfied with the manner in which the inquest has been conducted by the City Coroner, for the undermentioned reasons, namely :—

That after the body was taken from the well, on Monday morning, the twenty-second day of September, and conveyed to a shed near the "Green Gate" Inn, Lane Cove, where it was permitted to remain until Tuesday evening, it was then removed to North Shore, a distance of seven miles, where the inquest was held, to the great inconvenience of all parties concerned.

That the wife and other members of the family of the deceased, who had no conveyances at their disposal, had to travel eighteen miles (nine miles each way) to attend the said inquest.

That in consequence of the distance, and also not receiving notice of when or where the inquest was intended to be held, the principal and most material witnesses were not examined.

That owing to the inquest having been held on North Shore, a most serious injury has been inflicted on the eldest son of the deceased, who has been charged with the murder of his father, and imprisoned on such charge.

That neither the Coroner, medical men, nor jurymen, connected with the inquest, inspected the place where the body was found, which your Petitioners believe was highly essential.

That the well in which the body of deceased was discovered was not emptied, or its contents examined, until four days after the inquest on the body of the said Andrew Bromley.

Your Petitioners, therefore, pray that your Honorable House will investigate the circumstances attending the death of the above-named Andrew Bromley, and inquire as to the complaint of your Petitioners of the arbitrary conduct of the City Coroner in the matter.

MR. JUSTICE WISE to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Supreme Court, Sydney, 22 February, 1862.

SIR,

Yesterday, during a temporary adjournment of the Court, application was made to me to allow Mr. Moss to be sworn in as a Magistrate before me, which was done. Until after he had taken the oaths, I was not aware that he was being sworn in as a Magistrate only in consequence of being Chairman of the Municipality of Shoalhaven. Had I clearly understood this, I should have thought it my duty to abstain from administering the oaths, inasmuch as the Supreme Court decided, on the 7th of February last, in the case of Berry v. Graham and another, that the Proclamation by which that Municipality was established was void, and I should not have thought myself justified in doing an act judicially which would impliedly be at variance with the law as established by that judgment.

I think it right, therefore, to inform you how this occurred, that no wrong inference may be drawn from the circumstance.

I did mention to Mr. Moss the effect of our decision, to prevent him being misled by what I had just done.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD WISE.

[Price, 1d.]

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

THE REVEREND JOHN STEELE.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 9 December, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of John Steele,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner is a Minister of the Church of England, having charge of the Parish of Bombala, in the District of Manaro, in the Colony of New South Wales.

That your Petitioner has been suffering for more than two years very great indignity and annoyance, which has resulted recently in his being deprived of his personal liberty, his character as a Christian Minister impeached and damaged, and being continually subjected to persecution, as hereafter detailed, through the acts and doings of a Magistrate of this Colony, residing at Bombala, named Charles Henry Baddeley.

That your Petitioner begs to inform your Honorable House, that on the 31st day of July last your Petitioner was summoned to appear at the Police Court, Bombala, on the 5th day of August following, to answer the charge of August Zollner, a sergeant of police, whose information charged your Petitioner “ for being suspected to have unlawfully broken “ and entered an unconsecrated Burial Ground ; to wit, the Public Cemetery at Bombala, “ aforesaid, and unlawfully, wilfully, and indecently, did dig, open, and take and carry away “ from a certain grave therein situate, the body of one John Louis Steele, then and therein “ interred, &c.”

Your Petitioner begs permission to inform your Honorable House, that the aforesaid John Louis Steele was the youngest child of your Petitioner, who died nearly a year previously, at the age nearly of twenty months.

Your Petitioner begs to inform your Honorable House, that the above charge came on for hearing on the day before named, before C. H. Baddeley, Emanuel Jonas, and William Graham, Justices of the Peace, several other Magistrates being on the Bench, but not acting.

Your Petitioner begs further to inform your Honorable House, that the two last-named Justices, E. Jonas and Wm. Graham, on the case being called on, refused to entertain the charge against your Petitioner, giving as their opinion, that “ that Court “ had no jurisdiction in the matter, and that if any offence had been committed, it was an “ ecclesiastical offence, to be dealt with by your Petitioner’s Churchwardens and the “ Bishop.”

Your Petitioner further informs your Honorable House, that C. H. Baddeley, J.P., refused, peremptorily, to concur in the opinion of his brother Magistrates, and declared his determination to hear the charge alone and to deal with it upon his single responsibility. Whereupon your Petitioner further begs to add, that Justices E. Jonas and Wm. Graham left the Bench, but not the Court.

Your Petitioner further begs permission to inform your Honorable House, that the said C. H. Baddeley did authorize a public meeting to be held in the above Police Office, and by public notice did convene the same on the day next preceding that upon which the above recited charge was to be heard, the terms of such notice being “ to inquire into the impropriety and illegality of your Petitioner’s conduct in the matter.” And your Petitioner humbly submits that such public meeting, pending a legal investigation, was calculated to injure your Petitioner’s reputation, and to prejudice public feeling against him. And your Petitioner

Petitioner begs respectfully to add, that many of the signatures to the requisition requesting the said C. H. Baddeley to authorize and convene such meeting are forged, and obtained under false representation.

Your Petitioner further begs to inform your Honorable House, that the said C. H. Baddeley, immediately upon assuming the Bench alone, read a letter alleged to have been written by a lawyer in Sydney, in which the charge against your Petitioner was declared to be illegal before it had been investigated; and your Petitioner submits that that letter must have been either a forgery or a preconcerted act to injure your Petitioner, as it would be a postal impossibility to communicate with Sydney and receive an answer at Bombala between the date of the day upon which the act charged as an offence was done, and the date of the day of investigation in Court, when the letter was produced. And your Petitioner further humbly submits, that such a course followed in a Court of Justice is unconstitutional, and highly dangerous to the liberty of your Petitioner. Your Petitioner begs leave further to add, for the information of your Honorable House, that such letter was procured for the said C. H. Baddeley by one Roderick M'Donald, who himself recently, in a very exaggerated form, has been guilty of a similar act to that charged as an offence against your Petitioner, with the knowledge of the said C. H. Baddeley and the police, but against whom no legal proceedings were instituted. Your Petitioner begs further to inform your Honorable House, that at the hearing of the charge against your Petitioner, he was treated with great indignity and harshness by the said C. H. Baddeley, and was not permitted to examine any witnesses, or to cross-examine those produced against him, so as to vindicate himself in open Court, and your Petitioner was therefore committed by the said C. H. Baddeley to Cooma Gaol, to take his trial at the approaching Assizes.

Your Petitioner begs to inform your Honorable House, that the Honorable the Attorney General refused to prosecute the case, and informed your Petitioner that he had not committed any illegal act; and your Petitioner is bound to inform your Honorable House, that although he did on the day upon which the charge was heard, admit the act of disinterring the remains of your Petitioner's infant child, alleging competent authority for so doing, that the said C. H. Baddeley refused to record the admission, and insisted upon hearing the evidence, to your Petitioner's very great annoyance, and the public outrage of his feelings. Your Petitioner further begs to inform your Honorable House, that previous to disinterring the remains of his infant child, he had obtained the consent of two Magistrates resident in the District, the approval of his Churchwardens, and the sanction and protection of the sergeant of police; and your Petitioner having been presented, by the owner thereof, with a piece of ground adjoining your Petitioner's church, as a burying place, your Petitioner exercised his right as a Clergyman of the Church of England, and as a subject of this realm; and, as he believed, without infringing any law, consulted propriety, by removing his infant son from an unfenced open pasture ground to a decent burial place.

Your Petitioner begs to inform your Honorable House, that acts similar to that for which your Petitioner has been prosecuted, have been committed by different persons, with the cognizance of the said C. H. Baddeley and the police sergeant, and although done without any authority or legal right, they have not been prosecuted, which your Petitioner humbly submits, is evidence that some other feeling besides vindication of the law actuated the said C. H. Baddeley in your Petitioner's case.

Your Petitioner, in conclusion, begs to inform your Honorable House, that since the termination of the above case, your Petitioner has been again prosecuted by the police, under the Vagrant Act, and under the advice and direction of the said C. H. Baddeley, who volunteered evidence in the matter. This case was dismissed by the presiding Justices, who considered it to be their duty to reprimand those who promoted it.

Your Petitioner has only to add, that in conjunction with the Magistrates of the District of Bombala, and other gentlemen, an application has already been made to the Executive Government, for inquiry into these persecutions; but as of that application no notice has been taken nor any answer vouchsafed, your Petitioner therefore humbly prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to take into consideration your Petitioner's grievances of which he complains, and extend to him such protection as to your Honorable House shall seem fit.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JOHN STEELE,
Minister of the English Church.

22nd October, 1862, Bombala.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MAGISTRATES SUPERSEDED.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 17 December, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned, late Magistrates of the Territory of New South Wales, acting at Gosford in the said Colony,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

1. That on the 31st day of July last they received, in common with the other members of the same Bench, a circular from the Chief Secretary, stating that certain charges had been preferred against them affecting their position as Magistrates, and enclosing copies of said charges, requiring them to show cause why they should not be removed from the Commission of the Peace.

2. That on or about the 5th day of August following, your Petitioners replied to the said circular, in which reply they not only answered the said charges, but requested the Government to institute a local inquiry into the conduct of all the Magistrates of the Gosford Bench, to take the evidence of disinterested persons, and if such inquiry should prove your Petitioners unworthy of the position they occupied, at once to supersede them.

3. That a few days afterwards a large public meeting was held at Gosford, at which resolutions were passed expressing the greatest confidence in the impartiality and uprightness of your Petitioners, and at the same meeting a Petition, signed by between two and three hundred inhabitants, was prepared, and forwarded by deputation to the Chief Secretary, which Petition contained a respectful request that he would cause local inquiry to be made into the conduct and proceedings of the various members of the Gosford Bench.

4. That an answer was given by the Chief Secretary to the said deputation, leading them to suppose the prayer of the Petition would be acceded to; but that nothing further has been heard of the matter until the 9th December instant, upon which day your Petitioners each received a letter from the Chief Secretary, informing them that, for various reasons therein mentioned, the Government had arrived at the conclusion they were unfit to be any longer entrusted with the Commission held by them, and that they had been superseded accordingly.

5. That your Petitioners have held the Commission of the Peace for a long period, two of them for fourteen years; that they are conscious of having during all that time done their duty honestly, impartially, and fearlessly; and that by this act of the Government a slur has been thrown on their characters which only the most rigid and searching investigation will be able to remove.

6. Your Petitioners, therefore, pray that your Honorable House will take their case into consideration, and afford them such redress as to your Honorable House may seem meet.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

MARTIAL LAW.

No. 1.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council, on the 17th July, 1861, with reference to the steps to be adopted to quell the disturbances on the Burrangong Gold Fields.

Minute 61/32. Confirmed, 23 July, 1861.

The Council met at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to summons.

His Excellency the Governor informs the Members that he has found it necessary to desire their attendance somewhat summarily, in consequence of the receipt, late yesterday evening, of telegrams announcing that a serious collision had taken place on Sunday evening, at the Burrangong Gold Field, between the police and a large body of miners, under the following circumstances :—

It appears that the police had succeeded in arresting three men who were charged with being concerned in the recent brutal and unprovoked attack upon the Chinese located at Burrangong, and that on the evening in question a body of miners, estimated variously at 800 or 2,000 men, approached the Police Station, and through a deputation, consisting of four men, demanded the release of these prisoners; and upon this being refused by the officer in command of the police and the Gold Commissioner in charge, an attempt was at once made to rescue them by force, which was frustrated, but has resulted in loss of life.

Apprehending, and apparently with reason, a repetition of this proceeding, the Superintendent of the Mounted Patrol has deemed it advisable to withdraw his whole force, consisting of fifty-seven men, to Yass, having previously liberated the three men on bail, and has pressed for the assistance of the military and as strong a force as can be spared for the service.

The Gold Field being thus absolutely left without any protection, and the utter defiance of the law evinced by the rioters, seem to render it necessary that this application should be complied with with the least possible delay, and some still more stringent measures taken to quell these rebellious proceedings. His Excellency, therefore, seeks the advice of the Council as to the steps which it would be most desirable to take in the emergency.

The Honorable the Vice President, in his place, states, that immediately upon receiving intelligence of the above events he communicated with the Colonel Commanding the Troops, who has expressed his readiness to despatch at once the largest force, both of Infantry and Artillery, that can be spared from the garrison, and has also placed his own services at the disposal of the Government. The Honorable the Vice President further states, that Captain Cator, of H.M.S. "Fawn," has offered to proceed to the Gold Field with a body of sixty men, seamen and marines, and to take with him the light field-gun belonging to his ship.

Having long and anxiously deliberated as to the nature of the advice which it becomes their duty to tender in view of the circumstances above detailed, the Council record their opinion that every measure which it is in the power of the Government to take to assert the supremacy of the law and restore order must be resorted to, without regard to consequences, and they advise as follows :—

1. That Colonel Kempt be pressed to despatch to the scene of action, by such drafts as the means of conveyance will permit, the utmost force that can be spared from the necessary duties of the garrison.
2. That he be requested to accompany that force, and, with a view to the issue of a proclamation by His Excellency the Governor, establishing martial law in and over the disturbed district, should such a step be eventually considered necessary, by telegram to report his arrival at Yass, or such other place in the neighbourhood of the Burrangong Gold Field as may be most convenient for concentrating his forces.
3. That he be also requested, as early as possible after his arrival, to report by telegram, jointly with Captain M'Levie and Mr. Cloete, whether in their opinion the proclamation of martial law is absolutely necessary.
4. That immediately on receipt of a report to that effect, His Excellency should issue a proclamation establishing martial law over such a tract of country as may appear to be necessary, and consequent thereupon should also issue a further proclamation prohibiting the importation of arms, ammunition, muniments of war, and of food or other supplies, into the district within which martial law is proclaimed.
5. That the Inspector General of Police be also directed to proceed to Burrangong with as large a number of the mounted and foot police as he can spare with a due regard to the other demands upon the force.
6. That Captain Cator be also informed that the Government gratefully accept his offer, and that the emergency calls for the promptest action.

7. That in concert with Colonel Kempt, Captain Cator, and Captain M'Lerie, such provision be made for the transport of the whole force—military, naval, and civil—as may be necessary, and that the like instructions and authorities be given as on the occasion of the last outbreak at Burrangong, both for the supply of the force on the line of march and when in camp, and for the travelling and camp allowances to the military and naval portion of the force whilst engaged on this service.
8. That arrangements be made for the trial of the three prisoners originally apprehended by the police, but now out on bail, and such others as may be hereafter arrested and committed for trial for being concerned in the recent riots, with as little delay as possible.

The Council think it desirable that their Honors the Judges should be consulted as to the best mode of carrying out this latter recommendation, and would simply record their opinion that the place for conducting the trials should be the nearest Circuit Court to the seat of the disturbances—that is, Goulburn.

The Council also think it desirable that if, upon his arrival at the Gold Field, Colonel Kempt should find that the principal movers in the riots are few in number, and though well known escape apprehension, he should be authorized to offer a reward for their capture not exceeding £500; but they do not distinctly advise this, and merely recommend that Colonel Kempt be informed that such is their opinion, and requested to communicate with the Government if he think the adoption of this course likely to be attended with any satisfactory result.

The withdrawal of the military and police from Sydney will render it necessary that the Volunteers should be again called upon to afford their assistance in carrying out the garrison and patrol duties. The Council advise that this be done, and that the same rate of remuneration be granted to them for their services on this occasion as was authorized when they were first called out.

In conclusion, the Council express a strong hope that the proclamation of martial law may be averted, but they will not shrink from resorting to the measure should it be forced upon them, and they feel little doubt but that the Legislature will readily support and hold them harmless in any consequences which may ensue.

COLONIAL SECRETARY to LIEUTENANT-COLONEL KEMPT.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 17 July, 1861.*

SIR,

Referring to the interviews which I had with you, both yesterday evening and this day, on the subject of the outbreak at Burrangong, I have now the honor to inform you that at a meeting of the Executive Council, held this forenoon, amongst other arrangements for meeting this emergency the following, which either relate directly to yourself or are such as it is desirable that you should be apprised of, were approved by the Council:—

1. That you should be urged to despatch to the scene of action, by such drafts as the means of conveyance will permit, the utmost force that can be spared from the necessary duties of the garrison.
2. That you should be requested to accompany that force, and, with the view to the issue of a proclamation by His Excellency the Governor, establishing martial law in and over the disturbed district, should such a step be eventually considered necessary, to report by telegraph your arrival at Yass or such other place in the neighbourhood of the Burrangong Gold Field as may be most convenient for concentrating your force.
3. That you should be also requested, as early as possible after your arrival, to report by telegram, jointly with Captain M'Lerie and Mr. Cloete, whether, in your opinion, the proclamation of martial law is absolutely necessary.
4. That immediately on receipt of a report to that effect, His Excellency should issue a proclamation establishing martial law over such a tract of country as may appear to be necessary, and consequent thereupon should also issue a further proclamation, prohibiting the importation of arms, ammunition, muniments of war, and of food or other supplies into the district within which martial law is proclaimed.
5. That the Inspector General of Police be also directed to proceed to Burrangong with as large a number of the mounted and foot police as he can spare with a due regard to the other demands upon the force.
6. That the whole of the police should be under the direction of the Inspector General, and that you should communicate with him on all matters in which the authority or action of the civil power may be required.
7. That the Government gratefully accept an offer made by Captain Cator, of Her Majesty's ship "Fawn," to proceed to the scene of the disturbances with sixty of his men and a field piece.

8. That in concert with yourself, Captain Cator, and Captain M'Lerie, such provision be made for the transport of the whole force—military, naval, and civil—as may be necessary, and that the like instructions and authorities be given as on the occasion of the last outbreak at Burrangong, both for the supply of the force on the line of march and when in camp, and for the travelling and camp allowances to the military and naval portion of the force whilst engaged in this service.
2. It is also thought desirable that if, upon your arrival at the Gold Field, you should find that the principal movers in the riots are few in number and though well-known escape apprehension, you should be authorized to offer a reward for their capture not exceeding £500; but this is not distinctly advised by the Council, and I have, therefore, to request that you will communicate with me, if upon your arrival you consider the adoption of this course likely to be attended with any satisfactory result.

I have, &c.,

PETITION TO GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG.

To His Excellency Sir John Young, Governor of the Colony of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Residents on the Gulph Diggings, Nerri-gundah, in the Colony of New South Wales,—

SH EWETH :—

That in the month of April last, William Spicer was convicted of Riot at Burrangong, and sentenced to two years imprisonment in Berrima Gaol.

That your Petitioners, while strongly discountenancing any means for the redress of grievances otherwise than in a proper and legal manner, respectfully petition that, inasmuch as the majesty of the law has been vindicated and order restored, your Excellency would be pleased to extend the Royal mercy to the said William Spicer, by granting him a free pardon.

That should your Excellency be pleased to grant the prayer of your humble Petitioners, they would respectfully suggest that the Birthday of our Sovereign the Queen would be one which would long live in our grateful recollections, as the day on which such an act of Royal clemency was extended.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c., &c.

MEMORIAL TO GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG.

To His Excellency Sir John Young, Baronet, Governor-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Admiral of the same.

The Memorial of the Storekeepers and Miners residing on the Lachlan Gold Fields,—

SH EWETH :—

First.—That your Memorialists learn with the greatest sorrow that Mr. William Spicer has been sentenced to two years imprisonment, at the late Goulburn Assizes, for a Riot at Lambing Flat.

Second.—That your Memorialists feel that had the witnesses who were present for the defence been called, the Jury could not have returned a verdict of Guilty, because the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution would have been entirely contradicted.

Third.—That a large majority of the population of this Gold Field are aware, of their own knowledge, that the speech said to have been delivered by Mr. Spicer was in fact made by another, whose affidavit will testify to this, accompanied by those of others fully cognizant of the fact, and of the witnesses who were not called at Goulburn, fully establish the truth of this statement.

Fourth.—That your Memorialists would impress upon your Excellency the facts, that the commercial interests of Burrangong—one of the most important of that date in the Colony—was placed in great jeopardy after the Burrangong Riots, and that, had it not been for the prompt measures taken by Mr. Spicer, the greatest anarchy and confusion, with loss of life and property to an alarming extent, must have resulted.

Fifth.—That your Memorialists, each and all, feel mainly indebted to Mr. Spicer for the security they enjoyed during the period above alluded to, and they forming at present a most important element in the Constitution of New South Wales, they appeal to you with confidence to recognize their right to prefer a request, the object of which having been of such material service to them.

Sixth.—That your Memorialists pray your Excellency to take this case into your consideration, with a view to such remission or mitigation of the sentence as may seem justified by the facts set forth in the Memorial and the accompanying Affidavits.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 2.]

Donald Macdonald, now of the Lachlan Gold Field, late of Lambing Flat, in the Colony of New South Wales, miner, maketh oath and saith :—That the speech delivered between Sawpit Gully and Back Creek, attributed to William Spicer, at his late trial, and sworn to positively by the police, was in fact made by another person, and that to the said William Spicer was mainly attributed the good order preserved at Burrangong during the absence of the authorities.

Forbes, Lachlan, 7 May, 1862.

I hereby affirm and declare, that it is my firm conviction that the conduct of William Spicer during the days that intervened between the departure of the authorities from Burrangong and their return, was in the highest degree creditable and praiseworthy. I furthermore certify, that I am satisfied that had it not been for the courage, wisdom, and forethought displayed by the said William Spicer, violence, lawlessness, and even murder must have ensued, from the excited state of the district and the absence of proper protection. I feel certain that if it had not been for him, a dark page would have been added to the history of this Colony. From the 14th July last to the day upon which the police resumed their duties at Burrangong, William Spicer was mainly instrumental in preserving the respect due to life and property.

Boyd Horsburgh, holding a Commission as one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the Colony of New South Wales, formerly residing at Lambing Flat, but now of Forbes, of the Lachlan Gold Fields, in the aforesaid Colony, maketh oath and saith:—That he was requested by Mr. David Pollock, storekeeper, residing at Tipperary Gully, and others, to attend a public meeting to be held at Mr. Torpy's Hotel on or about the seventeenth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one. That he there heard Mr. William Spicer make a speech, calling upon those present to assist in preserving law and order, and that, he feels convinced, to the well directed efforts of the said William Spicer was mainly attributable the absence of riot and loss of life and property so remarkable on Lambing Flat when unprotected by the police.

That the said William Spicer did not make a speech on that occasion, and that the one sworn to by the police as having been delivered by him, was made by another person in the hearing of this deponent.

GENTLEMEN,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, with reference to the Petition recently presented by you to His Excellency the Governor from certain Storekeepers and Miners of the Lachlan Gold Fields and residents at the Gulf Diggings, soliciting a remission of the sentence of two years imprisonment passed upon William Spicer at the late Goulburn Circuit, that His Excellency regrets that, after full inquiry, there do not appear to be any grounds that would justify him in complying with the prayer of the Petitioners.

MEMORIAL FROM TRADERS AND OTHERS AT BURRANGONG.

To His Excellency the Governor and the Honorable the Executive Council of New South Wales.

The Memorial of the Traders, Miners, and others, of the District of Burrangong,—

MOST RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

That on the twenty-sixth day of March, 1862, William Spicer, formerly a Miner on the Burrangong and Lachlan Gold Fields, was tried at the District Court, held in Goulburn, before His Honor the Chief Justice, for riotously assembling and destroying property belonging to divers Chinese, on the 30th day of June, 1861; was convicted and sentenced to two years imprisonment in Berrima Gaol.

That

That the said William Spicer had subpoenaed several witnesses to prove that he never made any inflammatory speeches, or by any act endeavoured to incite any person to commit a breach of the peace.

That from some cause to your Memorialists unknown, the witnesses were never called upon to give evidence.

That your Memorialists consider that had the witnesses whose affidavits are hereunto attached been called upon to give evidence on behalf of William Spicer, at his trial, and proved what they have sworn to in those documents, that in all probability he would have been acquitted.

That your Memorialists are strongly of opinion that the said William Spicer rendered great service to the cause of law and order after these Gold Fields were left without Police protection in July, 1861, by using the influence he possessed as a miner (universally respected by the community) to protect life and property.

That your Memorialists can bear testimony to the very high character borne by William Spicer during his residence on these Gold Fields, and to the great respect in which he was held by all parties in this community.

That taking the circumstances as hereinbefore stated into consideration, your Memorialists most respectfully beg your Honorable Council will take the case of the said William Spicer into your most favourable consideration, and grant a remission of the sentence passed, or otherwise adopt such steps in the matter as your Honorable Council may deem fit.

On the twenty-seventh day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, Henry Greig, of Main-street, Young, Lambing Flat, District of Burrangong, Colony of New South Wales, general store-keeper, came before me, one of the Magistrates of the said Colony, and maketh oath as follows:—

That on the sixteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, William Spicer called upon me at my store, as herebefore described, and made the following statement:—

That he had been informed that I had some fear of my store being burnt down and all my property destroyed; he then informed me that I need not entertain such fears, as he confidently felt that no person would be guilty of such a dreadful crime, but that if I had any doubts on the subject, he William Spicer would leave on or about the premises fifty or one hundred men to guard the store and property, so that no person should interfere with anything belonging to me; at the same time he suggested that it would be advisable to call a public meeting of the inhabitants and others, to make necessary and proper arrangements for the safety of the Township and the Gold Fields, and for the security of life and property, and to maintain law and order during the absence of the regular constituted authorities.

That on the day alluded to in this affidavit, viz., sixteenth of July, I was present at the funeral of a man named Lupton, who was shot on the fourteenth of the same month, when I heard William Spicer most impressively address the thousands that surrounded the grave, and ordered them to return to their homes in a quiet and orderly manner, to keep sober, and not to plunder or commit any breach of the peace.

That to the truth of this statement I most solemnly declare.

That on the seventeenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, William Spicer called upon me at the Post Office and said, "If you are afraid the Government property now in your charge (in the Post Office) will be destroyed or plundered I will leave fifty or one hundred men to guard the Post Office, or I will remain in it myself." He further went on to state "that he had heard an anonymous letter had been sent to me, the purport of the same being that the Post Office would be burnt down."

THE UNDER SECRETARY to TRADERS AND OTHERS AT BURRANGONG.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 1 July, 1862.*

GENTLEMEN,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of a Memorial forwarded by you to His Excellency the Governor, praying for the release of William Spicer from the Berrima Gaol, together with the affidavits of several persons, and the certificate from the Jurymen, which were transmitted in support of the Petition.

2. Notwithstanding the communication made in reply to former Memorials on behalf of the prisoner, in a letter addressed from this office on the 2nd ultimo to the gentlemen who presented them, His Excellency has read the papers which have been now submitted very carefully. They do not however establish the fact that Spicer was not one of the assemblage on the occasion referred to, and therefore with others, guilty of the crime of rioting, nor does it appear that he used any of the influence which he is alleged to have possessed, as a loyal and peaceable subject was bound to do, to assist the police to quell the disturbance.

3. With respect to the certificate signed by the members of the Jury on the trial of Spicer, I am desired to state that His Excellency can attach little weight to any change in their views of the case which may be the result of popular pressure being brought to bear upon them, and that if it is to be admitted that the opinion of Jurymen no longer on their oaths is to be taken to set aside a verdict solemnly recorded in the Jury Box, it is not difficult to foresee that it would lead to consequences subversive of good order and the public peace—substituting as it practically would, popular impulse for the gravity of judicial decision.

4. The Governor therefore regrets that he sees no reason for any alteration in the former decision—that no sufficient grounds had been shown to justify His Excellency's complying with the request that the sentence passed upon William Spicer be remitted.

I have, &c.,
W. ELYARD.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

GEORGE UNDERWOOD ALLEY.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 19 August, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of George Underwood Alley, of Shoalhaven,—

SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner feels deeply aggrieved that your Honorable House should have refused to extend to his Petition—presented by Mr. Garrett, in reference to Doctor Mackenzie—that privilege which has been extended to all others, according to the rules and forms of Parliament, especially as it contains nothing but the truth, already recorded in the Supreme Court of the Colony; as, if the conduct of a Magistrate of the Territory therein referred to, be allowed by the Parliament and Government of the country to pass unproved, it will be idle to attempt the reform of existing abuses, and the moral tone of the class alluded to will continue in its present unhealthy state.

That as the truth has been denied, and the statements in that Petition have been pronounced “unjustifiable,” and your Petitioner’s veracity impeached for the first time, he prays that your Honorable House will appoint or permit to be appointed a Select Committee, to inquire into the whole circumstances alluded to in said Petition.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

RULES FOR THE POLICE FORCE OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

(UNDER 25 VICTORIA, No. 16.)

Presented to both Houses of Parliament, by Command.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
1st March, 1862.

HIS Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased to establish, under the Police Regulation Act of 1862, the following Rules for the general management and discipline of the Members of the Police Force of the Colony.

CHARLES COWPER.

INTRODUCTION.

1. The following Rules for the Police Force have been established by His Excellency the Governor and Executive Council, under the provisions of the Act 25 Vic., No. 16, in order that it may be conducted upon one uniform system, and that its Members may not be embarrassed in the execution of their several duties from the want of proper instructions.

2. The system of Police embraces in its leading features centralization of authority and unity of action.

3. It is impossible to give precise directions for the execution of every duty which the Police may be required to perform, or to anticipate every difficulty which the Members of the Force may have to encounter, as from the nature of the service its duties must vary, and consequently the mode of execution must vary with them. Every Member of the Force should therefore endeavour to become acquainted with the nature of the duty which he may be called on to execute, and by individual zeal, energy, discretion, and intelligence, endeavour to supply the unavoidable deficiency of general instructions.

4. Officers of Police who are in the Commission of the Peace, are, as a general rule, not expected to take Bench duty. If at any time they are at or near a Court of Petty Sessions, when from the absence of Magistrates, or a deficiency in the number required by law to act, their sitting in Court would be advantageous to the interests of the public, they may act judicially, provided their executive Police duties are not thereby interfered with. They are not, however, to act in any case where a Member of the Police Force is either complainant or defendant.

5. In referring to communications previously received from head quarters, Officers are enjoined to quote, not only the date of such communications, but also the numbers and letters which they may have borne, if any; and when any communication is forwarded with a minute, the party receiving it will, after noting and attending to it, return it without delay to the person by whom it was forwarded.

6. In forwarding the usual returns, or any returns which may be called for by the Inspector General, it is not required that they shall be accompanied by any communication, unless it may be necessary to give some explanation or information respecting them.

7. The Officers and men of the Force will be held strictly responsible for the execution and observance of all orders and regulations, from which they are not to deviate, except when the circumstances of the case may require. And they will be held equally accountable for their own acts and orders in such cases as may not or cannot be provided for by these instructions.

8. In the performance of their duty they are distinctly to understand that their efforts should be principally directed to the prevention of crime, which will tend far more effectually towards the security of person and property than the punishment of those who have violated the laws.

9. Every Member of the Force, from the highest to the lowest, should feel how incumbent it is on him to discharge his duty with forbearance and civility; and upon no occasion, or under any provocation, to conduct himself rudely or harshly. Nothing will tend more to create a kindly feeling, and cause the Force to be respected, than a conciliatory and decorous deportment; whilst an opposite course and bearing can only engender angry and hostile feelings. The efficiency of the Force is greatly aided by the extent of its information, and such information is likely to be withheld when it loses the confidence of the community.

10. Both Officers and men are studiously to observe neutrality in political matters.

11. Every Member of the Force should bear constantly in mind how essential it is to cultivate a proper regard for its honor, respectability, and general character.

12. As none but zealous and efficient Officers and men can be retained in the service, any Member of the Force who may be guilty of any neglect or omission of duty, or disobedience of any order or regulation, will be liable to be removed. On the other hand, those who are in every respect active, attentive, and zealous in the performance of their duty will be promoted and rewarded.

FORMATION.

13. Members of the Police Force in New South Wales are divided into the following grades, viz. :—

| | | |
|----------|---|-------------------------------|
| Officers | { | Inspector General. |
| | | Superintendents. |
| | | Inspectors. |
| | | Sub-Inspectors. |
| | | Sergeants. |
| | | Constables. |
| | | Aboriginal Trackers. |
| | | Detective Police. |
| | | Sub-Inspector and Constables. |

DISTRICTS.

14. For the purposes of Police supervision, the Colony has been divided into Districts and Sub-Districts.

15. Each District will be placed under the charge of a Superintendent, who will have under his control all the Officers and men in his District.

16. All Members of the Force below the rank of Sub-Inspector will in each District except the Metropolitan, be distinguished by a letter and number; the letter indicating the particular District, and the number, the Sergeant or Constable wearing it. In the Metropolitan District, which is divided into several Divisions, each Division will have its own letter and set of numbers.

THE DEPÔT.

17. The Depôt or Head Quarters of the whole Force shall be in Sydney, under the immediate supervision of the Inspector General.

18. Candidates for admission into the Police Force must attend, with an application in their own handwriting, and their testimonials, at the Depôt, at 9 A.M. on any Wednesday. No candidate need, under any circumstances, apply elsewhere.

19. All Members of the Force, whether Officers or men, on their arrival in Sydney, either on duty or leave of absence, are to report themselves at the Depôt.

ENROLMENT.

20. All applications for enrolment in the Force are to be made to the Inspector General direct, in whom the appointment of Sergeants and Constables is vested.

Conditions of Enrolment.

21. Candidates will be admitted into the Police Force under the following conditions :—

1.—They must be under thirty years of age.

2.—They must be of a strong constitution, and free from any bodily complaint, and must undergo a medical examination.

3.—They must read and write well.

4.—They must produce satisfactory testimonials of character. On the applicants being sworn in, these documents will be stamped with the date and words "N. S. W. Police, sworn in." They will be retained at the Depôt until the party leaves the Force, when they will be delivered up to him stamped with the date and the words, "N. S. W. Police, discharged," or "dismissed," as the case may be.

- 5.—They are to understand that in engaging for service in the Police Force it is not only for Police duties, but for fatigue or any other work they may be ordered to perform by their superior Officers.
- 6.—They will be enrolled for general Police service, and those best adapted will be selected for mounted duty, but are liable at any time, if considered advisable, to be dismounted.
- 7.—They are taken on, in the first instance, for not less than three days on trial, without pay; but before enrolment they must be certified to by the Medical Officer appointed for the purpose as being physically fit for the service.
- 8.—During the period of probation, which is always passed at the Depôt, they can leave at any time by giving notice to the Officer in charge.
- 9.—After the period of probation they are, if considered suitable, required to fill up, in their own handwriting, answers to the following queries, attaching their signatures thereto, and to take and subscribe, in the presence of a Magistrate, the following oath, as required by the Police Regulation Act.

Questions.

Have you been in any Police service—if so, in each case what and where?
 For what time?
 When discharged and why?
 By whom last employed, and where?
 By whom recommended?
 Married or single?
 Are you fully aware of the regulations for the guidance of the Force, and the provisions of the Police Regulation Act?

[Signature]

Oath.

- I, _____ do swear, that I will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lady the Queen, in the office of Constable, without favour or affection, malice or ill-will, for the period of _____ and until I am legally discharged; that I will see and cause Her Majesty's peace to be kept and preserved, and that I will prevent, to the best of my power, all offences against the same; and that while I shall continue to hold the said Office I will, to the best of my skill and knowledge, discharge all the duties thereof faithfully, according to law. So help me God.
- 10.—In order that all newly appointed Constables may have an opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of drill, and the more simple duties of the service, a certain number of supernumeraries will always be maintained at the Depôt, for the purpose of supplying such vacancies as may occur in the various Divisions; and during the period they are retained on the list of supernumeraries, they will receive but three-fourths the pay of an Ordinary Constable.
 - 11.—The period for which they will be sworn in is one year.
 - 12.—They will be required to devote their whole time to the Police Service.
 - 13.—They are to serve and reside wherever they may be ordered, and must be ready at all times to move in any direction that may be found necessary.
 - 14.—They are to appear in Police dress, at all times, unless leave be given to the contrary.
 - 15.—They are promptly to obey all lawful orders which they may receive from the persons placed in authority over them.
 - 16.—They are to conform themselves to all the regulations which may be made from time to time for the good of the service.
 - 17.—They are not upon any occasion, or under any pretence whatever, to take money or any gratuity from any person without the express permission of the Inspector General.
 - 18.—Where there is a Police Hospital, or a Public Hospital, to which Members of the Force are admitted for treatment, half-pay only is allowed to Constables while in it; but should they be suffering from the effects of their own misconduct, the whole of their pay is stopped. Where no hospital or medical accommodation is afforded, they will have to provide themselves with medical attendance and medicines; but in cases where their illness has arisen from wounds or injuries received in the performance of their duty, a special report of the circumstance is to be made to the Inspector General.
 - 19.—They will not be allowed to quit the Police Force without giving three months' previous notice. Should they leave without giving such notice, in addition to such other punishment as the Act permits, all pay then due to them will be forfeited.
 - 20.—No man in the Police Force shall marry without permission from the Superintendent in charge of the District.
 - 21.—If he be dismissed the Police Force, the whole of his pay then due or unpaid is liable to be forfeited.
 - 22.—Any Constable is liable to be discharged for unfitness, or dismissed for negligence or misconduct, independently of any other punishment to which he may by law be subject. The Inspector General may also, if he think fit, dismiss him without assigning any reason.

- 23.—Any Constable who for a moment questions or disobeys the orders he may receive from a superior Officer will be severely punished; every Officer or Sergeant in charge is held strictly responsible that he immediately reports any individual who refuses to obey him in any matter of duty. At the same time the men are informed (although obedience is their first and most especial duty) that they have a right respectfully to complain of any Officer from whom they may receive any improper orders.
- 24.—Police Constables in uniform, whether on duty or not, are prohibited from smoking in the streets or public places.
- 25.—The Members of the Police Force should bear in mind that, although they are the servants of the public, they are accountable for their conduct, while in the performance of their duty, to the Government, and to those who are especially appointed to the Department to which they belong. It is therefore not only inexpedient and unnecessary, but directly opposed to orders, that individuals in the employment of the Government should have recourse to public journals, in order to defend themselves against any reflections cast upon them.

DISCIPLINE.

22. Experience has shewn that no service can be properly conducted without a due observance of the rules and orders laid down for its guidance and discipline. It therefore becomes a matter of paramount importance that the Police Force should be governed by the strictest discipline. The most proper and effectual mode of securing this, is by establishing a gradation of responsibility, so that every individual may know precisely his duty and position, and perform his duty cheerfully.

23. Every Member of the Force must understand that it is an invariable rule in discipline that in the absence of a superior the whole of the duty or charge which was intrusted to that superior devolves upon the next in rank, so that the chain of responsibility may continue unbroken.

24. Every superior Officer is to give his orders in the language of moderation, and with due regard to the feelings of the individual under his command, and every Officer or Constable is to receive the lawful commands of his superior with deference and respect, and to execute them to the best of his power.

25. With reference to religious observances, it is expected that the Officers will do all they can to facilitate the attendance of the men under their command at the places of worship to which they respectively belong, and that particular attention shall be paid to the proper observance of the Sabbath day.

DISTRIBUTION.

26. The Force is divided into Mounted, Foot, Water Police, and Detectives.

27. The Mounted and Foot Police will be distributed among the various Districts in such strength and manner as the requirements of the country may demand, and no change whatever is to be made in the location of the Force, without express authority from the Inspector General, except in case of extreme urgency, such as when the Officer in charge of the District is convinced that the removal of men from one Station to another, or the formation of a new Station is absolutely necessary, or where the local authorities make an urgent demand for additional Police protection; but in all such cases a full statement of the particulars and necessity for the alterations must be forwarded to the Inspector General's Office without delay.

28. When a number of the residents of any particular locality apply for Police protection, the Officer in charge of the District will forward the same, with such remarks of his own respecting the necessity of the case, the facilities that may exist for forming a Police Station, the population, whether scattered or not, the amount and nature of crime in the neighbourhood, whether frequent or occasional daily or nightly patrols would be sufficient, &c., &c., as he may think fit.

29. The Police in the Districts of Parramatta, Maitland, Goulburn, Bathurst, and other large Towns, will be required to perform duty similar to the Police in the City of Sydney, as detailed in the next chapter.

SYDNEY.

30. The City of Sydney Police consists of several Divisions, with an Officer in charge of each, and to each Division is intrusted a certain portion of the city and suburbs.

31. Each Division is sub-divided into sections, each of which is under the immediate charge of a Sergeant; and the sections are divided into beats, for the safety of which the Constables on duty are held responsible.

32. The hours for duty are as follows:—

The day duty commences at 6 A.M. and continues till 10 P.M., for which purpose half the available duty men are told off, who are divided into two reliefs, and take street duty four hours at a time.

The first relief goes on at 6 A.M. and remains on beat till 10 A.M.

The second goes on at 10 A.M. and remains till 2 P.M.

The first goes on at 2 P.M. and remains till 6 P.M.

The second goes on at 6 P.M. and remains till 10 P.M.

33. During the intervening four hours between their duties one half of the men so relieved remain in the barracks, and the other half are allowed to return to their homes, but but must be ready at least a quarter of an hour before their tour of duty commences; the half who are allowed to go away in the morning will remain in the evening, thus giving to each man twelve hours duty, eight of which he will be on beat by four at a time.

34. The night duty commences at 10 P.M., and continues on beat from that hour until 6 o'clock the next morning, one Sergeant taking charge of each section.

35. Two men from each Division are told off for Station-house reserve, which is taken in turn by the men.

36. The night and day duties change every month.

37. The Sergeant in charge of each Division should, both by day and night, visit all the parts of his Division; and see that the Sergeants and Constables are alert and understand their duties properly; he is also responsible that the men in reserve both by day and night are prepared to turn out at a moment's notice.

38. It is expected that all the married Constables will lodge as near as possible to the Division to which they are attached, and that all Members of the Force (whether on duty or not) will be prepared to turn out in all such emergencies as fires, accidents of any kind, disturbances, &c.

39. Officers in charge of Divisions take their turn of day and night duty, but are not required to visit the guard-room or barracks of any Division except their own.

40. Each Officer in charge of a Division is expected occasionally to visit all parts thereof at uncertain hours during the day and night, and when on duty to attend the Court and visit the watch-houses at least once during the day and once after midnight.

41. Each Officer in charge of a Division will be held responsible for that Division, and will also take the immediate charge of the lock-up situated in it; he must also consider it his duty to make himself acquainted with all the inhabitants resident in his Division, to whatever class they may belong, and with all the lanes and alleys, rights of way, &c., &c. He should pay particular attention to the manner in which his Sergeants and Constables perform their duty, and by examination and inquiry find out whether each Constable is acquainted with the purpose for which he is placed on beat, and whether he exerts himself to the utmost of his abilities to discover all that is going on within its limits, and that he also makes himself acquainted with the inhabitants over whose property he is placed.

42. Should any suspicious characters either arrive at or leave any parts of the town within such Constable's beat, it is his duty to report it to his Sergeant, who will report the same to the Sub-Inspector with a view to its being brought to the notice of the Inspector.

43. As the detection of offences depends very much upon the support and assistance which the Detectives receive from the Constables on duty, every endeavour must be made by the Constables to assist the Detectives, by properly affording them all the information in their power respecting offences committed within the limits of their beats. In all cases of offences of a serious nature, the Constable within whose beat the offence has been committed should immediately report the matter to the Sergeant of his section, who will at once proceed to the guard-room of his Division and fill up several of the forms "Criminal Offences," with full particulars of the case, description of parties to be apprehended, &c., and forward one copy to the Detective Police Office, and one to each of the other Divisions; the Constable on being relieved should find the Officer in charge of Detectives, and explain to him personally what has taken place.

WATER POLICE.

44. The Water Police Force consists of a certain number of Sergeants and Constables and that part of the Force stationed in Sydney is under the direction of the Water Police Magistrate, who is, under the provisions of the Water Police Act, its Superintendent.

45. Detachments of the Force are also stationed at Newcastle and other ports of the Colony.

46. They are amenable to the same rules for the maintenance of discipline, and have by law the same powers as other Constables.

47. The duties particularly devolving upon them are to afford police protection and maintain order among the shipping; to enforce the port regulations; to supervise the transshipment of powder; to examine and muster the passengers and crews of vessels in the intercolonial trade with a view to prevent the escape of criminals; to supervise the ballast lighters, watermen, lights in harbour, &c.; to serve summonses, execute warrants, and other legal processes on parties afloat; to convey prisoners to and from vessels, &c., &c.

48. Every Officer and man has twelve hours duty in the twenty-four, besides which they have to attend the Police Court when required.

49. They are supplied with the same arms as the foot Police with the addition of a cutlass.

50. The boats crews on night duty are provided with signal lights, in case it should be necessary to call for assistance from the Stations.

51. All signals from vessels for Police assistance are to be registered in the occurrence book, stating the vessel's name, and the hour by night or day when made, and the hour when the signal is hauled down, answered.

52. In the event of fire occurring on shore, or in the harbour, all the available Force will proceed immediately to the spot in readiness to render such assistance as may be necessary, either in extinguishing the fire or in saving and protecting property. Should the fire occur on shipboard, the guard-boat on duty will lose no time in warning the nearest vessel to the burning ship of its dangerous position, and at the same time send immediate notice to the Harbour Master of the fire.

DETECTIVES.

DETECTIVES.

53. The Detectives, although subject to the same discipline, are in most other respects a distinct body of the Force, their duties being to detect rather than to prevent crime.

54. They are under the control of an Officer, whose office is at Sydney, and who receives his orders direct from the Inspector General, and as being dressed in plain clothes they may occasionally be required to produce the authority under which they are acting, each of them is furnished with a "Warrant Card" for the purpose signed by the Inspector General.

55. A party of one or more Detectives is stationed in each of the more important Districts, while occasionally a Mounted party is employed in various Districts, removing from one to another as circumstances may require.

56. They all however correspond direct with the Inspector in Sydney; but although they look to him for orders, they will be under the control of the Officer in charge of the District in which they may be stationed, so far as his orders do not clash with those they receive from the Detective Office at Sydney.

57. If the system is properly carried out, there should generally be no difficulty in detecting crime, and tracing out offenders, who, to escape detection, have fled from town to country or from one gold field to another; and it is expected that the Members of the Police Force will consider it imperative upon them to afford every information in their power to the Detective Police, and to facilitate, in every possible way, the proper discharge of their particular duties.

58. The Detective Body is formed by selecting from the Police Force such parties as may be considered suitable for Detective duty; they are employed on trial as supernumeraries, during which time they receive the pay of Ordinary Constables, and if reported favourably of by the Officer in charge of the body, they are promoted to the rank of a second class Detective Constable, with pay at the rate of 2s. per day increase on that of an Ordinary Constable, and in due course if recommended for zeal and efficiency will be further advanced to the pay of a first class Detective, which is 3s. per day in excess of that of an Ordinary Constable. There are no other grades in the Detective Body, and the rank of a first class Detective is to be considered equivalent to that of a Sergeant in the Preventive Police.

59. Although this is a general rule, candidates, who from previous habits, experience, or other reasons may appear to be particularly adapted for Detective duties, may be taken on as supernumeraries without having served in the Police Force, and if after due trial they are approved of, are promoted in the usual manner.

60. No further detail of Detective duty is here given, as the members of that branch of the service will from time to time receive such instructions as are necessary for their guidance from the Officer in charge.

61. The Officer in charge of Detectives has, in addition to his other duties, to compile the Police Gazette, a weekly publication, in which notices of offences committed, warrants issued, horses and cattle stolen, and other matters interesting to the Police are inserted, and thus circulated for the information of every Member of the Force.

GENERAL DUTIES OF THE DIFFERENT RANKS.

Inspector General.

62. The Inspector General is appointed by the Government to have the management and control of the whole Force, under the direction of the Colonial Secretary. He will from time to time issue such orders and regulations as may be found expedient for the general management of the Constabulary, as well as for the purpose of meeting any contingency which may arise, rendering the removal of portions of the Force from one District to another, necessary. He will take every step in his power to cause all under his control to discharge their duties both to the public and the Government satisfactorily and efficiently.

63. All communications which the Officers in charge of the Districts may wish to be made known to the Government or to the Head of any other Department should be forwarded through him, and to him must they look for advice in any case of difficulty that may occur.

64. He will furnish the Government with an annual report of the general state of the Police Force, as to the number of men, their distribution and general efficiency, the increase or diminution of crime, the number of new Stations that may have been formed, with such other information as it may be necessary to afford.

Superintendent.

65. The Superintendent is to reside constantly within his District, and not to leave it except by permission from the Inspector General; and, whenever he leaves the Head Quarters for other parts of his District, he will communicate the same, and also his return, by telegram, to the Inspector General.

66. The duties of the Superintendent are those of direction, of constant and active supervision and inspection, requiring his movements to be rapid and uncertain, and his vigilance unrelaxing. He is responsible for the prevention of crime, the detection of criminals, and the general preservation of peace within his District, of which it is expected he will acquire a knowledge, and also of its inhabitants generally.

67. On his capacity, discretion, and good management, the discipline and efficiency of the Officers and men in the District almost wholly depend, for it is only by his example as regards business habits and knowledge of Police duties, as well as his private deportment, that he can gain that respect which it should be their desire as it is their duty to evince towards him.

68. It is not possible exactly to define his responsibility, but he is bound to see that all under his control discharge their respective duties towards the public with zeal, fidelity, and efficiency; and it is expected he will be at all times ready and able to afford advice and information on any matter relating to their public duties.

69. As the advancement in the service of those under his command will very much depend on his recommendation, he will be particular to ascertain their relative merits and qualifications for promotion.

70. As he is responsible for the general conduct and good order of the Officers and Constables under his command, he should make himself well acquainted by frequent personal intercourse with the Inspectors, Sub-Inspectors, and Sergeants, and through them with the character, temper, and conduct of each Constable; he will be firm and just, and at the same time kind and conciliating towards them in his behaviour, on all occasions.

71. He is to take every opportunity of impressing on his subordinates the strong objections that exist to members of the Force being constant frequenters of public-houses; and of pointing out to them, that their character and respectability will be best upheld by seldom entering such places, except on necessary duty.

72. The consideration that his example will do much to regulate the official deportment and conduct of those placed under him, should never allow him to appear apathetic in the discharge of his own duties, but, on the contrary, should urge him to a prompt and anxious execution of all he may be called on to perform, or to superintend, without regard to individual interests, time, or his own personal convenience.

73. He is to pay strict and constant attention to economy, and whenever he sees any means of reducing the expense and promoting the utility of the Force in the locality within his charge, he should not fail to communicate his views to the Head of his Department.

74. An inventory in duplicate will be made of all property found in the possession of a prisoner at the time of his arrest, and which the Police are justified in seizing and retaining; the inventory to be signed by the Constable who makes it, and countersigned by the Inspector or other Officer in charge of Police. The prisoner is also to be invited to sign it.

75. Such property is to remain in the custody of the Police until the prisoner shall have been either discharged or convicted, or found guilty.

76. The property itself is to be at the place of trial previous to the time appointed for trial, so that it may be accessible either (if necessary) for the purposes of identification, or to be returned to the prisoner, if discharged, or delivered to the Sheriff or Gaoler, if the prisoner be convicted, with a copy of the inventory.

77. Care is to be taken that property necessary for the purposes of identification remain as much as possible in the hands of the same Constable or Officer, so as to avoid rendering the evidence of identity complicated or embarrassing.

78. If the prisoner be discharged, the property is to be restored to him, with the exception of any portions necessary to be retained as proofs in any future proceedings, or any portions proved to belong to another person, and which may be delivered to such person on his indemnifying the Police Officer against any proceedings of the prisoner.

79. If the prisoner be convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor entailing forfeiture, all property found in his possession and all other property belonging to him are to be confiscated; and any such property identified as having been stolen may be restored to the owner. The remainder is to be delivered to the Sheriff for the purpose of being sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, unless the Government should consider it advisable to direct all or any to be given to the wife or children of the person convicted.

80. If the prisoner be convicted of a misdemeanor not punishable with forfeiture, the property found in his possession and seized by the Police is to be delivered to the Sheriff or Gaoler, to be held at the disposal of the prisoner, subject to Gaol Regulations.

81. In cases of summary conviction, a similar course is to be pursued before and after conviction as before and after trial.

82. The Superintendent will cause to be entered in a book, a list of such property as may come into the possession of the Police in any other way, in order to its being disposed of as may be directed by the Inspector General or other competent authority.

83. He will be held responsible for a careful scrutiny of all estimates, accounts, and vouchers connected with the Force under him, which are to be supported and authenticated by his certificate of approval; and that all accounts, returns, reports and other official documents, are drawn up and perfected with the greatest accuracy, precision, and neatness, and transmitted punctually at the proper periods.

84. On the transference, retirement, or removal from the service, of any Officer under him, he will cause all public records, books, including files of the Police Gazette, or other documents the property of the public, in that Officer's possession, to be handed by him to his successor; and on the Superintendent himself giving up the charge of a District from any of the above causes, he will in like manner hand all public records, books, and documents to the Officer relieving him.

85. On the receipt of an order for the discharge or dismissal of any Member of the Force, he will order the party in to Head Quarters, when he will see that all his arms, accoutrements, &c., are given into Store complete and in good condition. He will then pay such salary as may still be due, unless the same has been forfeited.

86. On the transference of any Sergeant or Constable from one District to another, he will send, under cover, to the Officer in charge of the District to which the party is transferred, his defaulter's sheet, together with his register, in proper form, detailing his name, description, date up to which paid, &c., &c.

87. When the Superintendent leaves his quarters on any duty which may detain him from them for a whole day or longer, he is to direct that all official letters or documents which may reach his office during his absence shall be handed to an Officer, if one be at the Station, or if not, to his Clerk, who is hereby empowered and directed to act upon them to the best of his judgment, if it appears to him that the public service could not admit of the delay consequent upon their being forwarded to the Superintendent, or standing over until his return to Head Quarters.

88. Should it be necessary for the Superintendent to leave the District, the Senior Inspector of the District will take charge, until the return of the Superintendent or the appointment of some other Officer to it. Also, when the Superintendent is absent from Head Quarters, inspecting the Stations in the District, or on other duty, if no Officer is present, the senior first-class Sergeant will assume charge during his absence.

89. He is to superintend the discipline, inspect the Officers and Constables, the barracks or quarters, the stables, paddocks, horses, arms, clothing, appointments, and equipments of the Force committed to his charge.

90. He, or in his absence, the Officer acting in his place, will attend at his office every morning, at 9 o'clock, or as soon after as possible, to hear and decide on complaints made against any of the men of his District.

91. He may deal with complaints against any of the men under him of such lighter description as he is allowed, according to the Regulations under the head of "Punishments;" the facts of each case, with his decision thereon, are to be stated in the regular reports.

92. If a Constable is not satisfied with the Superintendent's decision, he may have the case brought before the Inspector General, when, if the objection prove to be frivolous, he will be liable to a more severe punishment than that he objected to.

93. The Superintendent will make a report, in writing, as early as possible, of any complaint of misconduct on the part of any Member of the Force, which it has been considered necessary to refer to a Bench of Magistrates for adjudication.

94. He will be at all times prepared to hear and investigate any charge which may be brought by the public against any Member of the Force, and should such offence be of a serious nature, or the complainant desirous that it should be decided by the Magistracy, he will at once bring the party before the Bench, forwarding a report of the particulars, and the decision of the Bench, to the Inspector General's Office. He may also, if he considers it advisable, suspend the individual from duty, awaiting the decision of the Inspector General, but in no case will he dismiss or discharge any Member of the Force without the necessary authority to do so.

95. Should the party who has misconducted himself be of a higher rank than a Constable, the Superintendent will at once suspend him from duty, and forward to the office of the Inspector General a report of the matter, with the evidence given, and stating his view of the case, with the previous character of the party complained of. He will not himself inflict on any Member of the Force, above the rank of Constable, any punishment greater than a reprimand, but in cases which require a more severe punishment, will await the decision of the Inspector General.

96. Should the offence be committed against the public, he will, unless the case be very gross, and will not admit of delay, mention the matter to the Local Bench, and request that it may stand over until the Head of the Department has been communicated with, in order that if it is necessary that the party should be brought before the Bench, he may be first reduced to the rank of Constable, it being considered that as his position is superior to that of a Constable, he should be reduced to that rank before receiving any punishment greater than a reprimand.

97. Any Member of the Force suspended from duty, although not performing any Police duty, will remain within the limits of the Station to which he belongs, unless under orders to the contrary, and will not be entitled to salary for the time he remains suspended, unless by special authority from the Inspector General.

98. The Superintendent will make himself acquainted with the various Stations in the District, and their requirements generally, and will from time to time, according to his discretion, grant immediate Police protection to any locality that may require it, if it is apparent that the peace of the locality would be endangered by the delay consequent upon his referring the matter to Head Quarters for instructions.

99. It is of great importance that Government should receive immediate intelligence of every occurrence involving the safety of person or property, or the maintenance of the public peace, and, whenever practicable, such intelligence is to be communicated by the Electric Telegraph, to the Inspector General.

100. If, therefore, any newspaper or other account of an outrage shall precede the Police report of it, the Superintendent in whose District such outrage shall have occurred will be deemed guilty of neglect of an important duty, unless he can satisfactorily explain the delay on his part, and shew to whom the blame of it should attach; and if any loss of time shall occur between the commission of an outrage and the necessary report of it, the cause of such delay must be explained in the report, for the accuracy of which explanation the Officer will be held strictly responsible.

101. He will see that the Members of the Force under his command exert themselves to the utmost, not only in the prevention of crime, which is their principal duty, but also in its detection, and will be answerable for their general conduct and good order.

102. He will cause the men, when they have cases to bring before the Bench, to be instructed how to obtain evidence, so as to present the particulars to the Magistrates as clearly and intelligibly as possible. He will not only give directions to this effect to the Constables, but will also see the necessity of attending the Police Court himself as frequently as possible, to see that his instructions are carried into effect.

103. He will, as far as lies in his power, act in accordance with the wishes of the Bench, for which purpose he will frequently communicate personally with the Magistrates, to ascertain whether their lawful orders are duly carried out by the Members of the Force, and whether they are active, diligent, and efficient in the prevention of crime, or the pursuit of criminals, and orderly, respectful, and steady in their conduct.

104. The Superintendents in whose jurisdiction are cities or towns, are to make a proper division thereof into walks or beats, according to the necessities, local circumstances, and strength of the Force allocated to such cities or towns respectively, adhering to the system pursued in Sydney as far as the circumstances in each case will permit.

105. Each Superintendent is to keep the following books :—

General Order Book, to contain copies of all general orders that may, from time to time, be received from the Inspector General's Office.

District Order Book, to contain copies of all other orders.

Letter and Minute Book.

Warrant Book.

Registry of Horses.

Miscellaneous Property Book.

Store Book.

Occurrence Book.

106. He will also make the following periodical returns :—

Weekly return of duty performed by men and horses, and persons apprehended at each Station.

Monthly general report to be furnished on the 1st of each month, accompanied by returns.

107. Each Superintendent is allowed a Sergeant or Constable, as circumstances may require, to act as Clerk in his Office, but he will explain to such Member of the Force that the occupation is of a very confidential nature, and that he will be held strictly responsible for his conduct in such Office, as well as for a due observance of, and obedience to the General Rules and Regulations of the Establishment.

108. No other Officer will be allowed the services of a Member of the Force as Clerk, without express permission from the Inspector General.

109. In order to maintain, as nearly as practicable, one uniform and complete system throughout the Establishment, the Superintendents are to refrain from making any regulations or issuing any orders which may be calculated to produce alterations, or cause innovations in the standing orders of the Force.

110. Whenever, in the opinion of the Superintendent, it may be expedient to introduce any new regulation, or to alter an old one, he should submit his ideas on the subject for the consideration of the Inspector General, who, should he deem the proposition advisable, will carry it into effect by a general order. This, however is not to be understood as extending to an order of a temporary nature, but a copy of any such temporary order is to be sent to the Inspector General's Office.

Inspector.

111. The Inspector is, in his Division, what the Superintendent is in his District, and should be governed by the spirit and principle of the foregoing instructions to that Officer, and will be held equally responsible for the execution of his own duties, as well as for the general conduct, discipline, and appearance of his men. He will also be responsible for the state of his barracks, horses, arms, accoutrements, and ammunition, and for the clothing and all other articles delivered to the Force of his Division.

112. He will reside constantly within the boundaries of his Division, and must not absent himself from it, except on duty, without permission from the Inspector General or the Superintendent.

113. He will receive his orders and instructions from, and make his reports to the Superintendent, from whom he will obtain such information as may be required upon matters relative to the Police.

114. He will exact a ready obedience to his orders from the Officers and Constables placed under his command, and will best consult his own interests by steadily adhering to orders and by following such a line of conduct as will place him beyond the fear of censure or reflection, in the event of being obliged to report any of his men for misconduct or breach of discipline.

115. He must respect and uphold the authority of his superiors, and must at all times conduct himself towards the Constables so as not to forfeit their respect for his person or authority by undue familiarity.

116. As he is the channel of all communications to the Constables, it is necessary that his orders to them be clear and explicit.

117. He is to make a true and precise entry in the weekly return of his Division of all duties, by whom performed, and the hour of going on and returning from duty.

118. He is to pay strict and prompt obedience to all the lawful orders and directions of the Magistrates and the superior Officers of the Force, thereby shewing those placed under him an example of respect for official rank, which they must follow in their conduct towards others as well as himself.

119. He will pay particular attention to the manner in which the cases are conducted by the Police in the various Police Courts, and will personally attend, as often as possible, during the Sitting of the Bench, for the purpose of assisting in carrying out the views of the Magistrates. He will also report to the Magistrates, on their assembling, the results of all warrants and processes issued, and of the steps taken to give effect to their judicial proceedings.

120. If there are detached Stations in his Division he must frequently visit and inspect them, by night as well as by day, and must note in the "Station Occurrence Book" the exact state in which he finds them.

121. In like manner as the Superintendent is expected to have a general knowledge of all matters connected with his District, the Inspector should be particularly acquainted with the pursuits, avocations, &c., of the inhabitants of the various localities within the limits of his charge.

122. He will inspect as frequently as possible, never less than once per week, the arms, ammunition, accoutrements, &c., of the men under his charge, for the good order of which he will be held strictly responsible to his Superintendent.

123. He must take care that all orders are carefully read and explained to the men, and that all rules and regulations are strictly adhered to; and he is immediately to report any infractions of them to the Superintendent.

124. He will take such opportunities of drilling the Sergeants and men as do not interfere with their Police duties.

125. He will establish a well-arranged system of Patrols, in order that the lines of communication and particular points in his Division may be, from time to time visited and guarded, and suspected places and persons watched, taking care, however, not to let this duty in any way needlessly harass the men or horses, or impair their efficiency for any sudden or urgent call.

126. He must minutely inspect all men, horses, arms, saddlery, ammunition, and appointments, previous to their going out on any duty, to see that they are in all respects in a fit state, and in like manner on their return, and should any article be damaged, will immediately report the matter to the Superintendent.

127. He must cause particular attention to be paid to the saddles, and to the horses' backs and feet, himself carefully and constantly inspecting them, to satisfy himself that they are properly attended to and always kept in a state fit for instant use.

128. Where there is a Police paddock, he must take care that the fencing is kept in good order, making the Constables execute any necessary repairs at times when not on other duty.

129. It will be a most important duty of the Inspector in a city or town to make himself and the men well acquainted with the persons and haunts of all suspicious characters therein, in order to their being able to bring them forward without delay in the event of their being charged with the commission of any crime or misdemeanor, or by close observation of their movements deter them from committing depredations or other offences against persons or property. A knowledge of individuals and characters is absolutely essential to the constitution of an efficient Police in cities and towns, from the greater amount of vice that exists in them, from the greater adroitness of delinquents, and from the facilities presented for disposing of plunder and evading discovery. The Inspectors will also make themselves well acquainted with the several roads and passes, and with the bush generally, in their respective neighbourhoods, and take care that the Police do the same.

130. Each Inspector must be prepared to furnish his Superintendent on all occasions with such information as may be required as to places, persons, and characters, and in short, he should be in possession of such general intelligence respecting his Division as shall enable him to supply a report or return, on any point, without waiting to collect materials for the purpose.

131. He should have a perfect knowledge of the characters, tempers, qualifications, and comparative merits of his Constables, not permitting any private feeling to influence his opinion of them.

132. He is to keep a roster and to see that there is an equitable division of all duties throughout his Division, and must never attempt to gratify any personal feeling towards his men or the public.

133. Nothing will tend more to raise an Officer in the estimation of his men than to prove that he is guided by a strict sense of duty and perfect impartiality. He will be upheld in the correct discharge of his office, but will not be suffered to be overbearing and tyrannical, and it is expected that he will shew to the men and to the public an example of general circumspection and propriety of demeanor.

134. He must strictly avoid placing himself under pecuniary or personal obligations of any kind whatever to his subordinates, or to residents within the locality under his charge, and must at all times, and in all ways, maintain a character for unimpeachable integrity.

135. It will be his duty to make himself acquainted with the characters of the several public houses, or other licensed places of entertainment and amusement in his Division, in order that he may be in a position to afford the necessary information to the Magistrates on the days appointed for granting or renewing licenses.

136. He will also direct the attention of the Sergeants and Constables to such establishments, and will question them, from time to time, as to the manner in which they are conducted.

137. When prisoners are remanded from one Bench of Magistrates to another, the Inspector will forward to the Officer in charge of Police at the place to which the prisoner is remanded, the full particulars of the case, stating why the prisoner has been remanded, with any other information he may be able to afford.

138. An inventory in duplicate will be made of all property found in the possession of a prisoner at the time of his arrest, and which the Police are justified in seizing and retaining; the inventory to be signed by the Constable who makes it, and countersigned by the Inspector or other Officer in charge of Police. The prisoner is also to be invited to sign the same.

139. Such property is to remain in the custody of the Police until the prisoner shall have been either discharged or convicted, or found guilty.

140. The property itself is to be at the place of trial previous to the time appointed for trial, so that it may be accessible either (if necessary) for the purposes of identification, or to be returned to the prisoner, if discharged, or delivered to the Sheriff or Gaoler, if the prisoner be convicted, with a copy of the inventory.

141. Care is to be taken that property necessary for the purposes of identification remain, as much as possible, in the hands of the same Constable or Officer, so as to avoid rendering the evidence of identity complicated or embarrassing.

142. If the prisoner be discharged, the property is to be restored to him, with the exception of any portions necessary to be retained as proofs in any future proceedings, or any portions proved to belong to another person, and which may be delivered to such person on his indemnifying the Police Officer against any proceedings of the prisoner.

143. If the prisoner be convicted of a felony or misdemeanor entailing forfeiture, all property found in his possession, and all other property belonging to him are to be confiscated; and any such property identified as having been stolen may be restored to the owner. The remainder is to be delivered to the Sheriff for the purpose of being sold, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, unless the Government should consider it advisable to direct all or any to be given to the wife or children of the felon.

144. If the prisoner be convicted of a misdemeanor not punishable with forfeiture, the property found in his possession and seized by the Police is to be delivered to the Sheriff or Gaoler, to be held at the disposal of the prisoner, subject to Gaol Regulations.

145. In cases of summary conviction, a similar course is to be pursued before and after conviction as before and after trial.

146. Money or other property which may come into the possession of the Police in any other way and respecting the disposal of which there may be some doubt, is to be forwarded, together with a report of the circumstances, to Head Quarters, with a view to its being disposed of as may be directed by some competent authority.

147. The Inspector is to report to the Superintendent (and in cases of urgency, also to the Inspector General), promptly and correctly, all circumstances connected with or affecting in any way the peace of his locality.

148. He is to forward all notices of resignation, and all correspondence, accounts, vouchers, and returns intended for the Inspector General's Office, to the Superintendent, in proper form and at the regulated periods.

149. In case of criminal offences, however, a copy of the information to be communicated should be sent direct to the Inspector General's Office, as the delay which would otherwise occur might be prejudicial to the public service.

150. Inspectors in charge of cities or towns are to be guided, as far as practicable, in the execution of their several duties therein, by the instructions already given for the City Police.

151. They will make a proper division of such towns into walks or beats, according to the necessities, local circumstances, and strength of the Force, and will exercise a close, constant, and active supervision over the men in charge of the several beats, holding them strictly responsible for their state.

152. They must keep their men on the alert, both by day and night, for the prevention of crime and the detection of offenders, and must, by every means in their power, aid in the maintenance of peace and good order.

153. On any alarm of fire, they will cause the Police under their command (including those who are off duty) to turn out and render every aid in their power which circumstances may demand.

154. Where there are Fire Brigades established the duty of the Constables will be simply to preserve order, protect life and property, and to procure a free scope for the exertions of the firemen and the parties more immediately interested; and with this view, the Inspector will clear the street or ground in the immediate vicinity of the fire of all persons not usefully employed, taking care that all the adjoining streets, as far as may be practicable, are kept clear of obstructions by crowds, or carriages, waggons, carts, &c., that the engines may not be delayed.

155. Every assistance possible must be given for the removal of property, conformably with the wishes of the proprietors; and if desired, such property may be conveyed to the nearest Police Station, to be there placed under the protection of the Police.

156. The Inspector should make it his duty to collect upon the spot all the information he can obtain relative to the cause of the fire, which, together with the circumstances attending it, the conduct of the Police under his orders, and the time they were employed, he will report fully, as soon as may be, to the Superintendent.

157. The powers of Inspectors to punish Constables who may have misconducted themselves, are given under the head of "Punishments."

Each Inspector is to keep the following books:—

Order Book, into which all orders received from the Superintendent are to be copied.

Occurrence Book, to contain reports of duty performed, crimes committed, accidents, apprehensions, &c.; and in which any Officer senior to the one in charge will enter his name, with a remark as to the state in which he finds the Station.

158. He will make the following returns:—

Weekly duty return.

Monthly forage return.

159. In some cases, where an Inspector is in charge of an important Station, as, for instance, a Gold Field, it will be necessary to keep a letter book.

160. He will keep a correct registry of all furniture and other Government property under his charge; and in the event of being transferred to another Station, he will obtain a receipt for the same from the Officer relieving him.

161. He will also forward, for the information of the Superintendent of the District, a weekly journal of his own proceedings, stating the particular duties he has performed, the state in which the men under his charge are, their general conduct, noting any complaints which have been brought against any of them, either by a Member of the Force or the public, the steps which have been taken to investigate such charges, any serious crimes which have been reported and the steps taken, the general state of the locality under his charge, with regard to criminal and other offences, any alteration which may have been made in the quarters or stables, any drill or inspection which has taken place, and the state in which the men, horses, arms, accoutrements, &c., appeared at such inspection; and any other matter which he considers it necessary to notice—in fact, a comprehensive report of the general state of the Division or Station under his charge.

Sub-Inspector.

162. The duties of this Officer are similar but subordinate to those of the Inspector.

Sergeants.

163. In each District, and in the City Police in each Division, one Sergeant is selected to assist the Officer in charge, by a personal supervision of the Sergeants and Constables; and he will be held responsible for the conduct and appearance of the Constables, and for the state of the barracks and quarters, the arms, ammunition, appointments, &c., at the principal Station in the District.

164. He is to a great extent responsible for the drill of the men of the District, and is selected from the other Sergeants, expressly on account of superior knowledge of his duties.

165. He must keep a roster of duties performed by himself and the men under him, and will see that those Constables who have to give evidence at the Police Court are in attendance and properly dressed.

166. He will attend daily at the Superintendent's Office with reports of such Constables under him as may have misconducted themselves, and will cause to be in attendance those parties who can give evidence.

167. He will inspect all carts and other conveyances belonging to the Force which may arrive at and leave the Station, and will see that the draught horses are properly groomed and attended to, and that the carts and harness are kept in proper order.

168. He will frequently, and at uncertain hours, inspect the quarters of the Sergeants and men, and will occasionally visit them during meals, for the purpose of seeing on such occasions that the men are properly and cleanly dressed and conduct themselves with decency.

169. He must consider his position as a confidential one, and he will therefore do all in his power to preserve regularity and order, and to make himself acquainted with anything to the contrary which he thinks should be brought to the notice of the Inspector or other Officer under whom he may be placed.

170. The remainder of his duties are similar to those of the other Sergeants.

171. In the absence of the Inspector or Sub-Inspector the Sergeant is to represent that Officer, and therefore what has been stated of the duties of those Officers as to discipline, applies equally to the Sergeant when in the temporary charge of a Sub-District or Station.

172. It is his peculiar province to watch over the conduct of the Constables, and to report every irregularity, neglect of duty, or breach of discipline they commit, to the Inspector or Sub-Inspector, without delay.

173. His conduct towards the Officers of the Force must be respectful and obedient, whilst to the men he is to be civil and obliging, without compromising the respect due to his position by improper familiarity.

174. He is never to absent himself from his Station except on duty, or by permission or direction of the Officer of his Station or Division, and he must at all times be ready to meet any demand upon his services.

175. He is to inspect minutely all parties or individuals going on duty, and if under arms is to count the ammunition in their pouches before they go out and when they return, noting in the occurrence book the hour of their despatch and return, the state of the men and horses, if they or any of them be mounted, and all circumstances connected with the particular duty on which they had been employed of which a record may appear in any degree necessary.

176. He must be perfectly impartial in the division of all the duties of his Station, taking his own regular tour of them.

177. He will be held strictly responsible for the appearance of his men and barracks, the state of the arms, ammunition, appointments, and every article of Government property committed to his charge. He must shew an example of neatness in his dress and appointments, and of perfect cleanliness in his person and quarters, and if he suffers any disobedience of orders or neglect of duty, without immediately reporting it to his Inspector or Sub-Inspector, he will be considered unfit for the position of Sergeant and be reduced accordingly.

178. He is occasionally to wait on the resident or local Magistrates, to receive their instructions; and it is of the utmost importance that he should take every pains to inform himself of the several roads, passes, residences, and characters of his neighbourhood.

179. He is to report to the Local Bench as well as to his Officer, all outrages or other matters connected with the tranquility of his District, and shall visit the scenes of all outrages as soon as possible, without reference to Districts or Stations, unless he shall have reason to know that the place had been visited by some other responsible party.

180. He will pay particular attention to the public-houses and other places of entertainment within the limits of his charge, and will report any irregularity he may observe to the Officer under whom he is placed.

181. When in charge of any Station where there is no Inspector or Sub-Inspector, he will keep the same books and make the same periodical returns as are required to be kept and made by those Officers.

182. When the number of Sergeants in a District is insufficient to place one in charge of each Station, the Superintendent, or Officer in charge of the District, will select the best conducted and most efficient senior Constable to take charge; and on such senior Constable will devolve all the duties of a Sergeant.

Constables.

183. The Constable, though frequently acting on specific orders applicable to the occasion, is very generally, in the execution of his duty as a Peace Officer, called upon to act on his own responsibility; he therefore requires discretion, intelligence, decision, and perfect command of temper. His first duty is perfect obedience to his superiors; he should receive the orders of those above him with deference and respect, and execute them to the very best of his power. He is to be ever on the alert for the prevention of crime and the protection of person and property, and is never to omit to report to his Sergeant, Sub-Inspector, or Inspector, any circumstance which may, in the most remote degree, appear to affect the public peace or the character of the Force.

184. It is of great importance that the Constables should be respected by all classes, and obtain their good opinion. They will therefore be extremely cautious in their demeanor, and by sober, orderly, and regular habits, respectful attention to every gentleman, and ready zeal to execute the lawful orders and commands of the Magistrates, endeavour to obtain their approbation.

185. The situation in which the men are placed renders it of the highest importance that they should be on the most cordial terms with each other, and join in everything that can tend to the advantage of the service. Any man who habitually quarrels with his comrades is liable to be punished and dismissed.

186. The Constable must be scrupulously exact in the care of his arms, clothing, and appointments, and be perfectly clean and neat in his person, as, independently of other considerations, men who are negligent in these respects must be looked upon as careless and slovenly in the execution of their official duties.

187. He must be of active, energetic, and temperate habits, of unimpeachable honesty, and must discharge his duty on all occasions, independently, uprightly, and conscientiously, without fear or favor.

188. As no man can be promoted to the rank of Sergeant, no matter how exemplary his conduct, who cannot write a good official report or letter, it is the interest of every Constable to devote such hours as he can spare from his duty, to reading, writing, and the general improvement of his mind; and it is no less his interest to lead a sober and steady course of life.

189. The Constable must not incur debts to publicans, storekeepers, or others in the District, nor place himself in any way under obligations which would necessarily shackle and impair his efficiency and impartiality.

190. If employed as a Mounted Constable, he must on all occasions be most careful and attentive to his horse, saddle, and accoutrements; any Mounted Man neglecting or abusing, or who is deficient in kindness to his horse, will be at once dismounted, and subject to punishment. For any loss or injury to his horse, saddlery, arms, or appointments, by any neglect on his part, the Constable will be held responsible.

191. In places where the system of Police duty pursued in Sydney is followed, a beat is committed to the care of a Constable, who will be informed by his Sergeant of the names of the streets, &c., forming his beat. He is responsible for the security of life and property, and for the preservation of the peace and general good order within his beat, during the time he is on duty.

192. It is indispensably necessary that he should make himself perfectly acquainted with all the parts of his beat or section, with the streets, thoroughfares, courts, and houses.

193. He will be expected to possess such a knowledge of the inhabitants of each house as to enable him to recognize their persons, and thus prevent mistakes, and be enabled to render assistance to the inhabitants when called for.

194. He should see every part of his beat in the time allotted, and this he will be expected to do regularly, so that any person requiring assistance, by remaining in the same spot for that length of time, may meet a Constable. This regularity of moving through his beat shall not, however, prevent his remaining at any particular place, if his presence there be necessary for the due performance of his duty, to observe the conduct of any suspected person, or for any other good reason, but he will be required to satisfy his Sergeant or superior Officer that there was a sufficient cause for such apparent irregularity.

195. He will also attend at the appointed times to make a report to his Sergeant of anything requiring notice.

196. If at any time he require immediate assistance, and cannot in any other way obtain it, he must sound his whistle, but this is to be done as seldom as possible; for though he is provided with one, and may sometimes find it necessary to use it, such alarm frequently creates the inconvenience it is intended to prevent, by assembling a crowd. He will require to report to the Sergeant every occasion of using his whistle.

197. He should clearly understand what powers are given him by law for the efficient execution of his duties, and for this purpose, extracts from the different Acts of Parliament conferring powers on the Police, under their proper headings, with instructions for their guidance, will be supplied to every Member of the Force.

198. Every person taken into custody without warrant (except persons detained for the mere purpose of ascertaining their name or residence) is to be forthwith taken to the Division Watchhouse.

199. When a Constable takes any one into custody, he should, if possible, before he leaves his beat, give notice to another Constable, who can supply his place while he is taking the party to the Watchhouse, and he will return again to his duty as soon as possible; or he may, when not himself required as a witness on the charge, deliver over his prisoner to the Sergeant or other Constable, and immediately return to his beat; but it is generally most advisable that he should accompany the party to the Watchhouse, in order to substantiate the charge.

200. No Constable is to search a prisoner by himself, but in all cases must take him to the nearest Watchhouse or Police Quarters, and in the presence of the Watchhouse-keeper or a Sergeant, will take from him all property in his possession. Before confining the prisoner in the Watchhouse the property must be given to the Watchhouse-keeper, and entered by him in the "Charge Book," which must be signed by the prisoner, if he is willing, but if not, by the Sergeant or Watchhouse-keeper and the apprehending Constable.

201. A Constable is not to leave his beat during his tour of duty, unless under the circumstances already mentioned, or others which may make it necessary. He shall not enter any house except in the execution of his duty.

202. He will pay particular attention to all public-houses within his beat, reporting the hour at which each is closed, and whether they appear to be conducted in an orderly manner.

203. On no pretence shall a Constable enter any public-house, except in the immediate execution of his duty. Such a breach of positive order will not be excused, and he subjects the publican himself to a severe fine for allowing him to remain there.

204. If he observes anything in the street likely to produce danger or public inconvenience, or anything which seems to him irregular and offensive, he must report it to the Sergeant.

205. He must not, when on duty, enter into conversation with any person whatever, except on matters relative to his duty; and when asked by any person his name and number, &c., he will immediately give them.

206. He must be particularly cautious not to interfere unnecessarily; but when required to act, is to do so with decision and boldness, but without unnecessary violence. In the proper exercise of his authority he may expect, on all occasions, to receive full support.

OFFICERS' UNIFORM.

207. All Officers are to be dressed alike, but to have a distinguishing mark of their rank. They will provide their own uniform, which is as follows:—

- Blue cloth cap, with patent leather peak and black lace band.
- Oilskin or leather cover for cap for winter, and white covers for summer.
- Stock or black silk neckerchief.
- Blue cloth single-breasted frock coat, with standing collar and uniform buttons.
- Blue cloth single-breasted waistcoat, with ditto ditto.
- Blue cloth single-breasted overcoat, with uniform buttons.
- Blue cloth trousers, with black lace stripe down the sides.
- White trousers for summer.
- Blue cloth pantaloons.
- Ditto jumper.
- White cotton or buckskin gloves.
- Wellington and Napoleon boots.
- Bush and other spurs.

208. Officers should never appear out of uniform, unless on leave of absence, or when ordered on special duty in which it may be necessary to appear in private clothes.

POLICE

POLICE CLOTHING.

209. Members of the Force are supplied on entering it with the following uniform :—

- Cap.
- White covers for ditto.
- Oilskin ditto.
- Blue cloth dress coat, with uniform buttons.
- Overcoat (foot), or cloak (mounted).
- Waterproof cape.
- Blue cloth trousers, 1 pair.
- Blue cloth pantaloons, 1 pair.
- Loose undress coat of light material.
- Wellington boots.
- Napoleon ditto.

210. The undress coat is to be worn on duty during the summer months, on fatigue or other duty of a similar nature, patrolling in the bush, or on escort duty on the country roads; on all other occasions the coat or jacket is to be used.

211. Each man is to provide himself with a box, according to the regulated pattern, a pair of sheets, three blankets, a rug, a bed-tick, a pillow-case, blacking brushes, a memorandum book, and a hold-all, containing brushes, comb, razors, &c., and a sufficient supply of under-clothing. The Sergeants will be held responsible that the under-clothing is changed sufficiently often for cleanliness. Clean straw for filling the bed-ticks and pillow-cases will be supplied by the Government once per quarter. The regulation box is the only baggage which will be conveyed for Sergeants and Constables, from one Station to another, at the expense of the Government.

212. In addition to the above, each Mounted Man is supplied by Government with military and bush spurs, horse brush, water brush, curry comb, mane comb, hoof pick, and sponge.

213. The uniform of Sergeants, whether mounted or foot, is precisely the same as that of the Constable, with the addition of stripes on the right arm, according to the grade of the wearer.

214. The uniform supplied to Constables of the Water Police consists of—

- Straw hat with badge.
- Sou'wester.
- White shirt with blue trimmings.
- Flannel shirt with blue trimmings.
- Blue cloth pea jacket with uniform buttons.
- Oilskin coat.
- One pair blue cloth trousers for winter, and two pairs white duck trousers for summer.
- One pair boots and one pair shoes.

PROMOTIONS.

215. All vacancies in the rank above that of Constable will, as far as practicable, be filled up by promotion from the next inferior rank; every inducement is thus held out for men of a good class to enter the Force, and to exert themselves while in it, for by zealously and efficiently performing their duties to the public they are consulting their own interests.

216. At the same time it must be understood, that seniority, length of service, and good conduct, are not the principal recommendations for promotion; for although they will always have their due weight, efficiency and adaptation for the particular vacancy will be the principal considerations. Hence those desirous of promotion must endeavour to merit it by a zealous attention to their duties, and the favourable report of their immediate superior Officer will be an indispensable requisite for advancement to superior grades.

217. No Member is to make application for promotion, except through the usual official channels—and no Officer is to receive any gift, address, or other token of respect or approval, on his promotion or change of jurisdiction, from the men who have served or are serving under him. If the subordinate ranks of the service are permitted to express their approval of the conduct of their superiors, they may also assume a right to condemn it; and as the expression of either praise or censure would be alike opposed to all discipline and good order, they are both equally and strictly forbidden. No Officer will be allowed to receive any present, address, or token of respect from the public, except with the sanction of the Inspector General.

218. All recommendations for promotion to the rank of Sergeant must be made according to the form for the purpose, and must be accompanied by a specimen of the handwriting of the party recommended.

REWARDS.

219. In addition to Special Rewards, which Members of the Force may be entitled, under the authority of the Government, to receive from the Police Reward Fund, for bravery or other meritorious conduct displayed in the performance of their duty, various sums are also from time to time offered, both by the Government and by private individuals, for the apprehension of notorious offenders, the recovery of lost property, &c., &c. Although these rewards are generally intended to act, not so much as a stimulant to the Police, as an inducement to the public to afford information or assistance, they are equally open to all the subordinate Members of the Force, as well as to persons who have given information or assistance. Any such rewards will be divided among the various claimants in proportion to to the relative value of their respective services; but it is to be understood that no Officer is to participate in any reward, whatever part he may have taken, or however instrumental he may have been in effecting the object for which it was offered, unless under special authority.

220. At the same time, there should be no necessity for any reward to induce a Member of the Force to exert himself to the utmost on all occasions for the public benefit, as it is for the purpose of preventing and detecting crime that the Police Force is maintained.

PUNISHMENTS.

221. The Inspector General alone is, by the Police Regulation Act, invested with the power of inflicting the extreme punishment of dismissal. As many Stations, of which subordinate Officers have charge, are so remote from the Head Quarters of the District in which they are situated, that on all occasions to bring Constables who have misconducted themselves before the senior Officer of the District, would not only be extremely inconvenient, but from the inevitable delay, injurious to the discipline of the Force, subordinate Officers of the Force are empowered to inflict certain penalties for breaches of discipline.

222. Superintendents, and Inspectors having charge of Districts during the absence of Superintendents, may inflict a fine not exceeding Three Pounds.

223. Inspectors in charge of Sub-Districts, but so remote from Head Quarters as to make it inconvenient to send Constables before the Superintendent, may inflict a fine not exceeding Forty Shillings.

224. Sub-Inspectors, when in a like position, shall have the power to inflict a fine not exceeding Twenty Shillings.

225. Punishments awarded by Inspectors and Sub-Inspectors, are, however, subject to the approval of the Superintendent, or Officer in charge of the District, and require to be confirmed by the Inspector General.

226. It is impossible to give any rule that would be of general application as to the manner in which these punishments shall be awarded, as it must be left principally to the discretion of the parties inflicting them, who will see the necessity of in every case inquiring minutely into the circumstances under which the offence was committed, so as to inflict a suitable punishment, taking into consideration the previous character of the individual, and the effect such punishment is likely to have on the Force at large.

227. It cannot be too strongly impressed upon the Officers generally that the example on their part of strict attention to their own duties, combined with a uniformly steady and watchful demeanor towards the men under their command, not allowing any neglect of duty or misconduct to pass unnoticed, will, together with the prospect of future advancement, do more to induce the men to conduct themselves well than the fear of any amount of punishment.

228. On a Constable's misconducting himself, the particulars of the case, with his name, description, &c., are entered in a "Defaulter's Sheet," which must accompany him should he be transferred to any other District. On a Constable who has never committed himself being transferred, a "Defaulter's Sheet," containing his name and description only, must be forwarded with him.

229. For the accuracy of these sheets the Officers in charge of Districts will be held responsible.

230. On the discharge or dismissal of any man from the Force, his "Defaulter's Sheet" must be forwarded to the Office of the Inspector General, to be there filed for reference; and on the application, written or personal, of any one who has been discharged, a printed certificate of character will be made out, in accordance with his sheet, signed by the Inspector General, and furnished to him. No other certificates of character or service are to be given to parties leaving the Force. No certificates of character are given to those who have been dismissed.

231. Any Member who shall be dismissed will not be again admitted into the Police Force or any other branch of the Government service.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

232. No Officer is to absent himself from his District or Station except on duty, without permission from the Inspector General. Every Officer who shall obtain leave of absence is to return to his quarters on the evening of the day on which the period of such leave shall terminate, and is to report his return accordingly on the following day to the Inspector General.

233. When an Officer applies for leave of absence he is to submit the name of the Member of the Force who is to act for him, and such Member of the Force will be held responsible for the correct discharge of that Officer's duties during his absence.

234. Leave of absence granted to an Officer of the Force will not be renewed or extended, except in case of urgent necessity, which must be clearly shewn by the Officer applying for such extension. In the event of illness being the plea for an extension of leave, a medical certificate of such illness must accompany the application.

235. When Sergeants and Constables are allowed leave of absence, it will be according to the following scale:—

For any period not exceeding fourteen days, on full pay; above fourteen, and not exceeding twenty-one days, on half-pay; and for any period exceeding twenty-one days, without pay.

236. Officers in charge of Districts may occasionally grant leave of absence for periods not exceeding seven days, but not beyond the boundary of their respective Districts.

They

They must give to the party obtaining leave a Certificate of the fact, on one of the Printed Forms supplied for the purpose, carefully preserving the counterfoil for reference.

237. Applications for leave of absence for more than seven days must, in every case, be submitted for the approval of the Inspector General.

238. Men obtaining leave are not to take any part of their arms or appointments, or any Government horse with them, and are to report themselves to the Senior Officer of the Force at or near whose Station they may be residing while on leave.

239. In all applications for leave of absence, it must be stated at what periods, and for what length of time, the applicant had previously obtained leave of absence.

240. Members of the Force when on leave are to consider themselves subject to every order, rule, and regulation of the Force, and as liable to be called on to act as Constables, and to the consequences of any breach of discipline or good order, as if they were serving at their proper Stations. All Members of the Force, whether Officers or otherwise, are required to report all cases of misconduct, on the part of men on leave of absence, whether such misconduct may have been witnessed by them or reported to them by others.

COMPLAINTS.

241. Members of the Police Force can at any time make any representation they may wish to the Inspector General; all that is required being, that the complaint shall be in writing, and that it shall be made in a respectful manner, and forwarded through their immediate superiors.

242. Any Officer on receiving any complaint will forward it to the Officer in charge of the District, who, if it is intended for the Inspector General, will forward it accordingly.

243. While the Officers are to consider it imperative upon them to forward all such complaints, they should accompany them by such statements of their own, having reference to the subject of the complaint, as they may consider necessary.

244. Every attention that justice, reason, and expediency admit, will be paid to the wants or wishes of the Constable; but all combinations, and, as a general rule, any Petition signed by numbers, for any purpose, will subject those who sign it, or join such combination, to punishment.

245. The means of redress are at all times open to any Member of the Force who may think himself aggrieved; but it is to be understood that protection will be equally afforded to any person against whom frivolous or unfounded complaints may be made; and the person making such, more especially when against his own superiors, will himself be liable to a proportionate punishment.

246. Any Member of the Force feeling himself injured or aggrieved, must bring the circumstances of the case under the notice of his superior Officer at once; for if he broods over and delays making his statement, whether real or imaginary, his motives will be judged of by such delay, and his statements questioned in proportion to it.

ARMS, AMMUNITION, APPOINTMENTS, &c.

247. Each Member of the Force below the rank of Sub-Inspector will be furnished, at the expense of the Government, with the arms, ammunition, appointments, &c., named in one of the following lists, according as he may be attached to the Mounted or Foot Police,—

Mounted Police Appointments.

|---------------------------|-------------------------|
| Saddle. | Bridoon. |
| Holster and flounce. | Bit. |
| Crupper. | Curb. |
| Stirrup leathers. | Regulation head collar. |
| Stirrup irons. | Halter. |
| Carbine bucket and strap. | Log and chain. |
| Surcingle. | Carbine. |
| Three cloak straps. | Sword. |
| Three valise straps. | Pistol (Revolver). |
| One carbine stay strap. | Pouch belt. |
| Four holster straps. | Swivel. |
| Breast-plate. | Handcuffs. |
| Girth. | Number and letter. |
| Bridle. | |

Foot Police Appointments.

| | |
|---------------------|----------------------|
| Rifle. | Pouch belt. |
| Bayonet and sheath. | Waist belt and frog. |
| Baton. | Whistle. |
| Handcuffs. | Number and letter. |

248. On being supplied with these, or such other articles as it may be deemed advisable to supply him with, he will be required to sign a certificate containing a list of them, the date of issue, statement of condition when issued, together with any other remarks it may be necessary to insert, which certificate will be countersigned by the Officer issuing the articles, and must be retained by the party supplied and be produced prior to his receiving his monthly pay; and the Officer by whom the pay is issued, after examining the articles, will enter in the Station Occurrence Book a certificate to the following effect:—

“I certify that on paying the men of this Station I carefully examined all the articles mentioned in their certificates, and find that they were all in good and serviceable order.”

249. In the event of any Member of the Force, on leaving the service, taking with him any of the articles mentioned in the certificate, he will be prosecuted for felony.

250. Any one losing or defacing the certificate will be charged one shilling for a new one, and it will be presumed that he had been provided with every article mentioned in it.

251. In case of any of the articles being lost or damaged through intention or neglect, the amount of the cost of the articles lost, or the damage, will be charged against him in proportion to their original cost, and the amount must be forwarded direct to the Officer of the Depôt, by whom it must be received before other articles can be supplied.

252. When any Sergeant or Constable receives his discharge, or is dismissed from the Police Force, the Officer in charge of the District will see that his arms, accoutrements, or any other Government property in his possession, are returned to store in a clean and proper state, and not used till his successor is appointed. On the back of his parchment certificate it should be stated in what condition the arms, &c., issued to him were returned, and his certificate should then be forwarded to the Depôt, from whence a new one will be supplied for his successor, without which the kit must not be issued.

253. Each man will be taught by the Sergeant or other Officer under whose immediate charge he is placed, the proper manner of cleaning and keeping his arms, &c., in good order.

254. He will be supplied with twenty rounds of ammunition, and in the event of the quantity being unaccounted for at any time the amount of sixpence for every missing cartridge will be deducted from his pay; when applying for more, he will state in writing how and when that previously issued had been expended.

255. A certain number of handcuffs will be supplied to each Watchhouse-keeper, for which he will be responsible, and to the office of each Officer in charge of a District twelve pairs, for which the Clerk will be responsible.

256. No Constable is to presume to load or discharge his firearms unless ordered to do so by his superior Officer, or in cases of emergency.

257. Such Officers as are mounted, are expected, in addition to their uniform, to supply themselves with a saddle, bridle complete, head collar and strap, breast-plate, crupper, a revolver, pouch, belt, &c., in accordance with the patterns at the Depôt.

258. Every mounted Constable will be held strictly responsible for the state of the saddlery in his charge, and any breakages or damage done to any of the articles, unless satisfactorily accounted for as having occurred in the execution of his duty, and not through any carelessness, will be repaired at his expense.

REQUISITIONS.

259. Requisitions for all supplies must be sent to the Office of the Inspector General.

260. In every case requisitions must be signed by the Officer, or Sergeant in charge of the Station where the supplies are required, and countersigned by the Officer in charge of the District; and no requisition whatever will be attended to, unless it contains particulars of former supply, how disposed of, and the quantity and condition of stock on hand.

261. For the purpose of providing for the supply of forage to Mounted Constables when at a distance from any Police Station, or procuring conveyance for Constables or prisoners, and other services of the kind, a Requisition Book is given to each Officer of the Force, who, in the case of any supplies or services of this nature being required, will fill up one of the forms, and give it to the party making the supply or performing the service.

262. Every such requisition, signed by an Officer of Police, will be honored by the Inspector General on being presented; but should it appear that a requisition has been given for any supply that was not required for the public service, or for any supplies for Constables, such as meals, beds, &c., which should be borne by the usual sum allowed them as night allowance, the amount will be deducted from the pay of the Officer signing the requisition.

263. In all cases wherein these requisitions are given, the full particulars must be entered in the counterfoil of the book, which must be carefully preserved for reference.

264. All Members of the Force below the rank of Sub-Inspector are strictly forbidden to sign these requisitions, as the Government do not hold themselves responsible for articles so obtained.

DRILL.

265. The liability at all times of the Police Force to be called upon, in case of internal disturbances, or from other causes, to act in concert as an armed body, and the nature of many of their duties, such as escorting and guarding treasure and prisoners, and other similar duties, render it necessary that they should receive instructions in the use of such arms as may be furnished to them, and that they should acquire such a knowledge of drill as will enable them, if required, to act with precision as a body.

266. For this purpose, every Constable who has been sworn in will, if circumstances permit, be instructed at the Depôt, in marching, the movements by files, threes, &c., and the platoon exercises.

267. Those selected for mounted duty will, in addition to these instructions, be taught riding and the sword exercise.

268. All Officers, whether in charge of Districts or Stations, will take occasional opportunities to exercise their men in these movements; but it is to be understood that such exercises are not in any way to interfere with the discharge of their regular Police duties.

269. It should be impressed upon all Members of the Police that they belong not to a Military, but to a Civil Force, and that all unnecessary Military parade and show, as well as the frequent and unnecessary parade of firearms or other weapons is discountenanced.

The

The principal object to be kept in view, in all exercises in drill and the use of arms, is to make the Force effective, and not to make it approximate in its character to a Military body, further than by introducing the promptness and uniformity of action attained in such bodies.

BARRACKS, STABLES, &c.

270. The Officer in charge of a Station will be held strictly responsible for the state of his quarters, which must always be orderly, cleanly, and fit for inspection; the arms, accoutrements, clothing, and barrack furniture, being regularly arranged, and kept in good and serviceable repair and order.

271. All damages must be promptly reported to the Officer in charge of the District; and when occurring through carelessness or negligence, the party in charge at the time will be responsible that the cost of the repairs is defrayed by the party through whose carelessness or negligence the damage has occurred, and in the event of his failing to discover the party, he will defray it himself.

272. A board, with a list of all articles the property of the Government, will be hung up in each room, and the Officer, Sergeant, or Constable in charge of the Station will be held responsible for the articles mentioned therein, and in the event of such Officer, Sergeant, or Constable being removed, the party relieving him will take care that the articles correspond with the list, and are in such condition as stated in the list; if not, a report must be forwarded to the Superintendent of the District.

273. If any man should report himself unable, from illness, to attend any parade or to perform any duty, the Officer in charge is to note the circumstance in his Occurrence Book.

274. He is to make an immediate report of any man who absents himself from any parade or duty (unless illness be the cause of such absence), or from quarters at night.

275. No man shall leave his barrack without acquainting the Sergeant or Constable on duty where he is to be found, nor go from his Station any greater distance than a quarter of a mile, without permission from the party in charge, nor be absent under such authority for more than two hours at one time.

276. Except when on duty, no greater number than one-half the Force at a Station shall leave their quarters, or their immediate vicinity.

277. No poultry, cows, horses, goats, pigs, or other animals are to be kept by the Police without permission.

278. The men are to keep every part of the barrack, its approaches, passages, and yards, clean and in good order; and are to study to uphold an appearance of neatness and regularity in everything connected with their post.

279. The Officer in charge is not himself to follow any trade or business, nor suffer his men to do so, for his time as well as theirs, and that of all the Force, belongs to the public, and must be wholly devoted to its service. The Officer in charge will be held strictly responsible for the due observance of this regulation.

280. The windows must be kept clean, and should be opened whenever the weather will admit of it, and must be instantly repaired whenever they require it.

281. If the Officer of the District at his inspection finds any article of bedding unduly dirty, he is to order it to be immediately washed at the expense of the person in whose use it has been.

282. As regards hours, the following should, where practicable, be observed at all Police Stations in the Colony. All Constables with the exception of those who have been employed on night duty, should rise in the morning not later than half-past five in the summer and half-past six in the winter; they should be dressed and their bedding neatly folded during the next half hour, and the rooms should be swept and set in order immediately afterwards.

283. No deviation from this rule will be tolerated except in cases of sickness. The hours for breakfast should be eight in the summer and half-past eight in the winter; for dinner half-past one in the summer and one in the winter; and for tea or supper, half-past six in the summer and six in the winter. At half-past nine such men as have not leave or are not on duty should go to bed, and all lights and fires, except such as are authorized to be kept up during the night, should be extinguished by ten o'clock.

284. Where the men are mounted they should attend morning stable parade at six in the summer and seven in the winter.

285. The horses should then be taken to water and after returning should be properly groomed, and receive the regulated allowance of food; this when water is in the neighbourhood, should not occupy more than one hour. At noon such horses as may not be on duty should be again watered and fed. The hours for evening stables should be in the winter at half-past four and in the summer at five, when the horses should be taken to water, and after returning be properly cleaned, fed, and bedded down for the night; every man's saddle and bridle being properly cleaned and carefully placed away on the saddle rack.

286. When an Officer is on the Station, he should always attend stable parade, to see that the men groom their horses properly.

287. From the very great variety in the different Police duties, it cannot be expected, nor is it intended that these hours should be adhered to in all cases and at all times, but only when regularity of hours does not interfere with the performance of Police duties.

288. During the summer months, no fire will be allowed in any of the apartments except the cook-house or kitchen.

289. Where it is possible, it is expected that the Police will supply themselves with wood and water, but where this is not practicable, the Officer in charge will make the most advantageous arrangement in his power, having due regard to economy in the expenditure of the public money.

290. The Officer in charge will be held strictly responsible that the relatives of Policemen, but more particularly discharged Constables, or other persons not connected with the Establishment, shall not be allowed to sleep in the barracks, and that no person except on business relating to the public service, shall be allowed to frequent Police premises.

291. A man who has been dismissed from the Force must never be allowed to enter Police quarters on any excuse whatsoever; nor is any Member of the Force to associate with such person, if the offence for which he was dismissed was of such a nature as to attach disgrace to the Force.

292. Smoking is strictly prohibited in the sleeping rooms of the barracks, and card-playing and every other species of gambling is forbidden.

293. As it is evident that the establishment of messes at the various Stations is advantageous to the men, in enabling them to obtain comfortable meals at a moderate cost, and to the Government in economizing the consumption of fuel, the Superintendents or other Officers in charge of Districts will pay particular attention to this subject, and insist on the Officers or Sergeants in charge of Stations taking proper steps for forming and supporting messes adapted to the requirements of the Constables under their charge, and so managed that those from other Stations, who may be passing on duty, can obtain their meals at a moderate cost, though somewhat in excess of the rate charged to members of the mess.

294. It is unnecessary that any particular regulation should be here laid down for the guidance of messes, as a great deal must be left to the management and discretion of the Officer or Sergeant in charge, but as a rule, regularity of hours (when possible), cleanliness, proper costume, and behaviour at meals must be strictly observed. In all matters relating to the expense and quality of food the minority must give way to the majority, but the Officer or Sergeant in charge will be held responsible that the food which is used, both as regards quality and quantity, will sustain the men in a fit state for active duty.

295. When the Station is too small to support a mess, or in the case of married men, the Officer, Sergeant, or Constable in charge will report any man who from penuriousness or other causes, subsists on food, the quality or quantity of which is insufficient to support him for the active and arduous duties to which he is at any time liable to be called.

296. Every article in a barrack room is to have its appointed place, and when not in use is not to be out of that place. Provisions are not to be exposed to view nor are mess utensils to be left unarranged or uncleaned.

297. The Officer in charge of a Station is to take into his possession the private effects of any Policeman who dies at such Station, and he is to make a careful inventory of such effects in the presence of a subscribing witness, and shall give a true copy of such inventory to the Superintendent of his Division, who is to transmit the same with all necessary information on the subject to the Inspector General, with a view to the proper disposal of such private effects, in accordance with the Police Regulation Act.

298. When the importance of the barrack regulations are duly considered, it will be observed that a great responsibility rests with the Officers in charge, for they will be held strictly responsible that the whole of the foregoing regulations are enforced, and that they immediately report any infraction of them.

HORSES.

299. Horses will be purchased for the Force by the Inspector General, or by some Officer appointed by him, and the horses so procured must, in all cases where practicable, be examined by a veterinary surgeon in conjunction with the Officer of the Force so appointed, and must be certified to by them as to soundness, age, and general fitness for service, before payment is made.

300. In the event of authority being given for the purchase of horses in remote Districts, the certificate must be signed by two Officers.

301. No pecuniary or other advantage whatever from such purchase is to accrue to any Member of the Police Force.

302. Each Member of the Mounted Force will be furnished with a horse which will be branded with the crown and the letter and number of the District to which it belongs, and the Officer or Constable taking charge of it will be held strictly accountable for the manner in which it is treated, and the general condition in which it is kept. Should it be found that any Member of the Force, either ill-treats or permits to be ill-treated or neglected, the horse told off to him, or any other horse under his charge, he will, in addition to such other punishment as may be inflicted upon him, be dismounted, and ordered to return to Foot Police duty, or in extreme cases, subject to dismissal.

303. No Member of the Foot Police is to be mounted, nor is any mounted Constable to be dismounted, without authority from the Inspector General.

304. Each Officer in charge of a District will keep a register of the horses under his charge, in which their age, height, distinctive marks, brands, letters, and numbers, are to be carefully entered, and on no occasion are the horses belonging to one District to be ridden or otherwise used by the Officers or men of another.

305. A similar register must be kept by the Officers in charge of Stations of the horses in their charge, for which they will be responsible to the Officer in charge of the District, who, in like manner, will be held accountable by the Inspector General.

306. It is expected that the Officers in charge of Districts will see that every horse under them, as well as its rider, shall have a fair share of the work to be done, and that they will not allow some horses to be petted and kept idle in the stables, while others are being injured by severe usage or neglect; nor are any of the horses to be kept clothed in the stables unless sick.

307. All Members of the Mounted Force will be particular to see that the saddles are carefully fitted to the horses' backs, and the Officers in charge of Districts will hold the men accountable for horses in their charge having sore backs or saddle galls (which in most cases are caused by hard riding, or inattention in not seeing that the saddles are properly fitted), as well as for any other diseases which could have been prevented by attention. No excuse will be received for a horse being rendered unserviceable from the above causes, unless it can be satisfactorily proved that some accidental and unlooked for circumstance has rendered it necessary that the horse should be so used; and unless the cause can be traced to some other source than neglect, the Constable to whom the horse was told off will be charged for the forage of the animal while unfit for use, in addition to such other punishment as may be awarded.

308. No horse is to travel at a pace exceeding five miles per hour, unless in cases of emergency, such as the pursuit of offenders, &c., where it is apparent that speed is absolutely necessary.

309. When on prisoner or other escort duty the pace must not exceed four miles per hour, and, in all cases, every opportunity must be taken by the rider to spare the horse as much as possible. Any Constable violating this rule will be severely punished.

310. When any horse, from disease or injuries received, becomes totally useless, a report of the circumstance should be forwarded to the Inspector General, when an order will be given for its disposal; but in the event of a limb being fractured, or any other such injury, the Officer in charge will at once put an end to its misery by killing it on the spot, forwarding a report of the case in the usual manner.

311. A table stating the prescribed daily ration for each horse will be issued, and a copy thereof is to be hung up in every stable wherein a Police horse is to be permanently foraged, and the party having the charge of a horse will be held responsible that the animal receives the authorized ration.

312. No Mounted Officer or Constable will, on any consideration, use in harness the horse set apart for him, unless ordered to do so for Government purposes by his superior Officer, nor is any Member of the Force to use his horse unless in the execution of his duty.

313. Any Officer who may particularly wish to use a private instead of a Government horse in the discharge of his duty, must forward to the Inspector General in the usual manner an application to that effect, accompanied by a certificate signed by the Superintendent of the District that the animal in question is of the proper height and appearance, and in every respect suited for the service; but he will not be allowed to make use of any Government horse in addition to his own private horse unless in a case of emergency, when it must be shewn that his own was injured in the service, or otherwise unequal to the duty required of it; nor will he be allowed to make use of the horse so kept at the Government expense in harness or for his private purposes, nor to dispose of it without the sanction of the Inspector General.

314. The Officers are not to ride the horses told off to the men under their command, nor are Police horses to be ridden by any other member of the community unless under special authority.

315. When a report is made by a Constable or other Member of the Force of the bad state or condition of his horse, the Officer in charge of the District will direct an immediate inquiry to be made, as to the amount of duty lately performed by it, and how it has been treated by its rider.

316. Should it appear that all that is required is a run at grass, the Officer will make arrangements accordingly, but if it is apparent that it is unfit for further service (after due inquiry that such unfitness does not proceed from any improper usage), he will direct that the animal shall be turned out in the nearest Police paddock until an order is received to forward it to the Dépôt, where it will be inspected by a Board to be appointed by the Inspector General, and will be disposed of in such a manner as they may recommend; exceptions to this may occasionally be necessary in remote Districts, but in these cases an order on the subject will be issued from the Inspector General's Office.

317. Draught horses will be frequently inspected by the Officer in charge of the Station to which they belong, as well as by the Officer in charge of the District; they must be driven steadily, and never on any account more than four miles per hour, and their collars and harness must be kept in proper repair, and so fitted as not to chafe or injure the horses.

318. In the event of any horse being sold from the Force, it will be disposed of by public auction in such a manner as the Inspector General may direct, but prior to the sale it will be branded with the "condemned" brand together with a private mark, for the purpose of preventing fraud.

319. A greater number of horses will be allowed in each District than are in actual use, that those requiring it may occasionally have rest; but should the number of mounted men in a District be reduced, the Officer in charge will cause the supernumerary horses to be turned out into the nearest Police paddock until he has received instructions as to their disposal; and should he be instructed to send them to the Dépôt, he will send with with them, addressed to the Officer in charge, a return, giving the names of the horses, their brands, colour, age, &c. Should additional horses be required in a District, an application to that effect must be forwarded to the Inspector General.

FORAGE.

320. Members of the Force in charge of Stations are expected to give due notice to local contractors, if any, stating the supplies of forage needed, in accordance with the terms of contract.

321. When forage is delivered at any Station by a contractor, the net weight must be ascertained, and the receipt signed for that quantity for which the Officer having charge, and who signs the receipt, will, in his issues, be held responsible.

322. If a Station be under the charge of a subordinate Member of the Force, he should permit no one but himself to issue forage; at large Stations one Constable only must be authorized to issue.

323. When a fresh supply of forage is received at a Station it must not be issued until the old stock in store is consumed.

324. The Police at every Station are to exert themselves to insure the supplies being stored in such a manner as to prevent any injury through the effects of weather or other causes, as, should any damage or loss occur, the strictest investigation will be made, and the party who, from negligence or other fault, allowed the same to take place, will be held personally liable for it.

325. At out-stations, where the stores are kept in a tent, or any insecure building, the Police on the Station must erect a strong fence round the same to prevent any damage by cattle, &c.

326. No forage is on any account to be issued from the Police stores to any Government Officer or other person whatever, without special authority, and in every instance where forage is issued for any other service than the Police, a requisition must be obtained from the party requiring the same, which order must be attached to the weekly Forage Return, in which also care must be taken to insert the particulars of the amount of forage drawn, the Officer's name, and on what duty engaged.

The regulation scale of a ration of forage is:—

|----|----------------------|
| 8 | lbs. of Maize |
| 4 | „ Bran |
| 12 | „ Hay |
| 4 | „ Straw for bedding. |

327. The Forage Returns will have to be entered up day by day, and the draft copy filed at the end of each week, thus obviating the necessity for keeping forage books (unless under special directions). One other copy of the returns only to be forwarded to Head Quarters for transmission to the Office of the Inspector General.

328. Should any errors appear in the returns, on examination, whereby the Government might be losers, the responsibility will rest with the Officer certifying to their correctness, he having recourse to the subordinate Officer by whom the return was compiled.

329. At every Station where there is grass in the neighbourhood, Officers in charge will when it is advisable turn out the duty horses to graze, issuing to them only half rations, or such other allowance as may be deemed necessary, due regard being had to their being kept in a serviceable condition.

330. If possible, in Districts where there is good grass, the horses should be kept without any forage whatever.

331. Police horses are not to be foraged or stabled at hotels oftener than is absolutely necessary; in cases where it is unavoidable, a requisition in the printed form for the purpose must be given by the Officer in charge of the Station to which the party belongs, and each horse must be groomed by its rider (and not by servants at the inn) in the same manner as if at a Police Station.

332. No disputed horses or cattle are to be foraged by the Police, unless the parties claiming are able beforehand to pay the regulation amount for the forage, otherwise the cattle must be turned into a paddock or handed over to one of the claimants on his giving a sufficient guarantee for the animal's production when required. But in the event of its being necessary to retain an animal in the possession of the Police, as ordered in a case of felony, and when if turned into a paddock it would probably be abstracted by the friends of the accused, such animal can be allowed half the usual ration of forage, and if possible the cost must be recovered from the owner.

333. On the charge of any Station being given over from one Member of the Force to another, the forage in the store must be weighed and receipts given for the actual weight, and any deficiency or surplus noticed in the weekly Forage Returns.

334. If any Constable absent from his Station draws more than one ration per diem for his horse, en route, he will be charged with the amount overdrawn.

ESCORTS.

335. Escorts form a very important part of the duty of the Police. In many instances on main lines of communication, where Stations are far apart, and in Districts in the interior, remote from main roads, it forms a very onerous and even harassing part of their duty; for this reason every means that experience, method, regularity, and systematic co-operation can devise must be brought to bear upon it, in order to render it as light as the necessities of the service will allow.

336. The first consideration, and that which must never be lost sight of by Escorts, is the security of the prisoners or commodities placed in their charge, to this all else must be be secondary and subordinate. The first point therefore to be looked to by the Constabulary when employed on this duty is, that the prisoners or property they are to escort are delivered to them with due precautions for safe custody, and this they are to state in the receipt they give on taking them over.

337. Whoever delivers to any Escort prisoners or property, must at the same time prescribe the nature and degree of personal restraint to be imposed on prisoners and the description of boxes or packages containing and the fastenings securing property, and neither should be deviated from, or in any way altered by the Escort or successive Escorts in whose charge they are placed, unless under such circumstances of necessity as will fully justify the act. In all such cases the Escort, or person in charge of the Escort, making the alteration, will report clearly and at length upon the matter.

338. Having thus received their charge properly secured, it will be their duty to guard against that state of security being diminished or impaired; for this purpose they will frequently and closely inspect the handcuffs, chains, &c., placed on the prisoners, and the fastenings of doors, windows, &c., of any place of confinement. In like manner as regards property, they will inspect the locks, seals, or other means by which the boxes or packages are secured. Neither by day or by night must their charge be separate from or lost sight of by an Escort.

339. There may be occasions for Escorts to stop during the night at public-houses; this, however, must never be done when it can be possibly avoided, but when such a step is absolutely necessary an agreement must be made with the proprietor of the house for the use of a room and for meals supplied to prisoners on the most moderate terms.

340. In such cases they are not to drink nor allow the prisoners in their charge to drink any fermented or spirituous liquors whatever; they are to place the prisoners in the most secure and private room obtainable, and are to adopt all proper and necessary precautions against escape.

341. Escorts with prisoners or property in charge are not to call or halt at public-houses during the day. The necessary provisions and refreshments must be procured at, and taken with them, from the place they have stopped at on the previous night.

342. On the march they will keep the prisoners in the centre of the party, and will not allow them to separate or straggle, and therefore the rate of marching must be regulated according to the powers of the prisoners if on foot, and if in carts according to the pace at which the vehicles can conveniently proceed. Neither acquaintances of the prisoners nor other persons are to be allowed to mix with or accompany the prisoners and Escort.

343. The arms of an Escort are invariably to be loaded; they must be kept from wet as much as possible, and always in a state for instant use. After rain they must be examined, and if the powder in the nipples appears in the least damp the charge must be drawn and the arms thoroughly cleaned, dried, and reloaded. This of course applies more particularly to cases where treasure, or prisoners in custody on a charge of felony, are being escorted, but in escorting females, lunatics, or persons charged with some trifling misdemeanor, it will not for the most part be necessary that the Escort be provided with firearms.

344. It must, however, be clearly understood and constantly borne in mind that nothing short of absolute and inevitable necessity can justify the Police in firing upon prisoners endeavouring to escape, or upon other parties attempting to rescue.

345. As prisoners are not on any account to be left in the possession of money or other property when under Escort, everything belonging to them is to be made up into separate sealed packages, marked with the name of the prisoner and the amount, and these separate parcels (with a list) enclosed in a strong sealed cover a memorandum is to be delivered with this sealed parcel to the Officer in charge, his acknowledgment and signature being taken to a duplicate retained. This memorandum and the sealed parcel he is to hand, with the seal unbroken, to the person into whose charge he delivers the prisoners, taking his receipt for it.

346. The Officer in charge of a party on Escort duty should always march in the rear of such Escort, and enforce a strict attention to the duty on the part of the men, who should not be allowed to straggle under any pretence.

347. Before taking charge of prisoners, for the purpose of conveying them from one place to another, the Officer in charge of the Escort will be particular that they are searched in his presence, and that he receives the proper authority for their custody, whether they may be remanded from one Bench to another or under sentence. In every case the Officer in charge will examine the warrants or other authority, to see that they correspond with the prisoners handed over to their charge.

348. When taking charge of gold, specie, or other treasure, or Government parcels, he must be particular that the same are duly entered in the way-bill, and obtain a receipt for them from the party to whom he delivers the articles.

349. Where practicable, after having given up charge of property, or prisoners intrusted to them, the parties composing the Escort will return to their Stations by twos, starting at different hours, and where convenient by different roads, the Officer in charge of the Escort forming one of the last party, so that he may be able to check any irregularity that may take place. In this manner they will form an efficient patrol.

350. Any Constable accompanying a Judge when on Circuit, or any other Government Officer, as an Orderly, should be relieved at each Station, so as to avoid as much as possible taking any man to a distance from his Station or into another District.

351. No Superintendent or other Officer of the Force is under any circumstances to be accompanied by a Constable as Orderly. When an Officer has to perform any duty in which his personal safety is endangered, he may take with him one or more Constables; as the necessity of the case may require ; but under such circumstances the Constable or Constables will precede instead of following him, as the attendance of Constables on Officers as a mark of honour is strictly forbidden.

PATROLS.

352. The duties of a District cannot be performed efficiently without the establishment of a proper system of Patrolling, which should be carried out under the general instructions of the Superintendent, so that the Patrols from the different Stations may be regulated with a view to general co-operation.

353. The particulars of every Patrol made from a Station will be entered in the "Occurrence Book" of the Station, the hours at which Patrols have been made from each Station, the places visited, and the incidents which have occurred to the Patrols, so that the Officers in charge may be enabled to form a return of the patrolling which has taken place at Stations. He can then regulate it with a due regard to the requirements of the service and the extent of duty which the men are called on to perform.

354. This duty, to be performed efficiently, must be performed silently, and without any sign of preparation which can attract attention, and put ill-disposed persons upon their guard.

355. Patrols are not to go out on stated nights, or at particular hours, but at irregular periods, and are always to visit suspected places, and observe suspicious houses and persons.

356. They will not confine their attention to the main lines of road only, but will occasionally proceed through the bush, calling at the houses of the settlers to find out what is going on, to ascertain if their assistance is required, or to obtain any information they can relative to horse and cattle stealers, or any other offenders.

357. If disorderly and suspicious persons are met by Patrols at unseasonable hours they are to be apprehended and brought before a Magistrate for examination.

358. In certain cases it may be more conducive to the objects of Patrols to conceal themselves near suspected passes or places than to prolong their march along a public road ; when so concealed the strictest silence must be observed.

359. When on Patrol duty Constables are not to smoke, to separate, nor talk loudly, or enter public-houses except in the performance of their duty.

DUTIES AT THE WATCHHOUSE.

360. A Sergeant, senior Constable, or Constable, must always be on duty at the Station-house, who is on no account to quit it during his time of duty.

361. He will receive all charges against prisoners brought in by the different Constables or other individuals, ascertain their nature, and when he is satisfied that it is a proper charge, cause the name of each prisoner to be entered, with the particulars of his offence, in a book which he shall keep for the purpose, to be called the "Charge Book."

362. He will not receive into custody any person brought in by a Police Constable on the vague charge of obstructing the Constable in the execution of his duty, unless it be accompanied by a specification of particulars.

363. He may admit to bail persons charged during the night time with any petty misdemeanor, such as trifling assaults, committing trifling wilful mischief, and others of a similar description ; also, persons charged with drunkenness may, when they become sober, be admitted to bail, as in other cases of petty misdemeanor.

364. Persons against whom charges for assault attended by cutting and wounding have been received, or for felonies or aggravated misdemeanors, when the charge has been received and entered in the "Charge Book," are to be detained in custody at the Watchhouse until they can be taken before a Magistrate for examination ; and no prisoner can be detained in the custody of the Police after he has been once brought before a Magistrate to answer the charge preferred against him, without a warrant for his detention.

365. Persons apprehended on warrant charged with offences not indictable should only be admitted to bail with the sanction of the Magistrate by whom the warrant was signed, or, in his absence, by an Officer of Police. In all cases of persons being taken into custody for indictable offences, whether by warrant or otherwise, they are not to be discharged on bail until they have been brought before the Bench, and bail ordered by the Magistrates.

366. When a party is accused of having committed a felony or a misdemeanor (as the case may be), and there is reasonable ground for preferring the complaint, inquiry as to the facts is to be made only of the person who prefers the complaint (who does so on his own responsibility), and is not to be made of other persons, although they may be cognizant of them ; but in a subsequent stage of the proceedings, before the Magistrate, they may be heard as witnesses. For this purpose their names and addresses, if they are in attendance at the Watchhouse, should be entered in the "Charge Book."

367. If a complainant, after having given a person into custody on a criminal charge, should refuse to sign it in the "Charge Book," supposing the charge to have been made in the first instance to a Constable, the Constable shall, if he has seen the offence committed, enter and sign the charge himself, and the complainant may be summoned before the Magistrate to substantiate it. The Sergeant on duty, or Watchhouse-keeper, is, for this purpose, always to ascertain the name and address of the party complaining previously to his making any inquiry of him. If the Constable is himself unable to establish the charge, and the complainant refuses to support it, the party accused is not to be detained, save when the offence is serious, and there are grounds to suppose the prisoner guilty, notwithstanding the prosecutor's refusal to sign the charge.

368. If the complaint in the first instance is not made by a third person, but by a Constable on his own view, the charge is to be received, entered in the "Charge Book," and submitted to the Magistrate; but if it should turn out, upon the statement of the Constable, that in point of fact there are not reasonable grounds for suspecting that the offence has been committed by the party, then the party must be discharged, and a full report of the particulars of the case must be made in writing to the Superintendent. This power of inquiry and discharge by the Officer on duty is necessary to protect the public against the ignorance or improper behaviour of Constables.

369. If any property be brought to the Constable on duty at the Watchhouse, either taken from persons apprehended or otherwise, he will immediately make an entry of the same in the "Charge Book," and the several articles of property are to be marked at the time they are received, so that they may be afterwards certainly known to be the same. They should be taken by the Watchhouse-keeper himself from the party bringing them, and not allowed to be out of his sight until marked in the manner directed; they should then be locked up in the place for the purpose, or in certain cases when required as evidence, given back to the charge of the Constable who took possession of them.

370. When any person who may be brought to the Watchhouse in a state of intoxication is searched, which should be at the Watchhouse (except in particular cases when immediate search becomes necessary), the articles should always be taken by one person, and called out distinctly and entered in the book by another; and when the person from whom they are taken is discharged, he should sign a book or receipt for the whole. No part of such property is to be returned to the prisoner until the decision of the Magistrate on the case is known. In the case of persons of known respectability being arrested for some trifling misdemeanor, they need not be searched, but should be requested to produce such property as they may have on their persons, and should if possible be placed in a cell by themselves.

371. As a confession from a prisoner in custody on a charge of felony, to be admissible as evidence against himself, must be free and voluntary, that is, must not be extracted by any sort of threat or violence, nor obtained by any direct or implied promises, the Police in receiving a confession which a prisoner may be desirous of making, should warn him that it may be used either for or against him. It is advisable that in such cases, the Constable shall fix in his memory any conversation immediately preceding the confession, so as to be able to prove it in connection with the detailed confession.

372. The daily ration allowed by Government to prisoners in Solitary Cells or Watchhouses is 24 ounces of third quality bread, or 20 ounces of the same quality flour, and to prisoners in transitu, awaiting trial, or under committal, 12 ounces of bread third quality, 12 ounces of maize meal, 4 ounces of fresh meat, 8 ounces of vegetables, half an ounce of salt, half an ounce of soap. In cases where maize meal or vegetables cannot be obtained, 12 ounces is to be added to the allowance of flour, and 12 ounces to the allowance of fresh meat. The Officers in charge of Police at the Stations where there are Lock-ups, and where no Government contract exists, will call for tenders for these supplies, according to the above scale, and will transmit such tenders as they may receive to the Inspector General's Office, in the usual manner. As soon as the acceptance of any tender has been notified, the rations may be ordered by the Officer in charge of the Station, and the account rendered to the Superintendent of the District, and by him forwarded to the Inspector General's Office for payment.

373. No person in the employment of Government shall have any interest in such contracts.

374. When it is necessary for prisoners in confinement to have other refreshments than what is provided by Government, no beer or spirits can be admitted into the cells, but only tea or coffee, with such eatables as are usually given in those cases; but this cannot be permitted without the sanction of an Officer.

375. Prisoners in the Watchhouse must be frequently visited, and immediate attention given to any case requiring assistance or medical aid.

WITNESSES AND PROSECUTORS.

376. In all trials wherein the Police may be either witnesses or prosecutors, they should give their testimony in a manly straightforward manner, without caring, or appearing to care, about the effects of it, either as to the conviction or acquittal of the accused in criminal matters, or as to its result in any civil or other suit.

377. They should merely and briefly answer the questions put to them, without remark or commentary, and if cross-examined, they should carefully avoid making a disrespectful or intemperate reply; for if their testimony be fairly and honestly given they need not fear, and should not be annoyed at any ordeal to which they may be subjected.

378. It must, however, be clearly understood that no man can be considered as a worthy Member of the Force who is not a respectable witness, and that any instance of prevarication before any Court of Assize, Sessions, Inquiry, or other tribunal whatsoever, will insure the immediate punishment of the witness who prevaricates, or gives partial or vindictive evidence.

379. Any Member of the Police who shall have arrested an individual committed or bound for trial at Assizes or Quarter Sessions must be considered a witness in the case, whether summoned or not.

380. When Members of the Force are subpoenaed as witnesses in civil cases, the amount of their expenses should be paid by the party who has subpoenaed them.

CONVEYANCE

CONVEYANCE OF LETTERS AND DESPATCHES.

381. When it is absolutely necessary to send a letter or other document from one part of the country to another by despatch, it should be sent by a Mounted Constable to the next Police Station, to be given over to the Officer in charge there, when the Constable will return to the Station from which he started, and the Officer to whom the letter was delivered will, in like manner, forward it to the next Station, and it will thus be forwarded to its destination without any Constable being taken further from his own Station than to the next.

382. When despatches are thus forwarded from Station to Station, written instructions, called a "Route," will accompany the despatch, and in it should be stated the time of starting, the rate per mile at which it is to be carried, and whether it is to be conveyed during the night. The time of the receipt of the letter, and of its despatch from each Station, will be entered in the "Route" by the Officer in charge of the Station, who will also make such remarks as he may consider advisable as to the condition in which the man and horse arrived. This "Route" should be carefully preserved, in case of its being necessary to refer to it.

383. No Officer is to forward a despatch by means of a mounted man, unless it is of so urgent a nature as to require a more speedy delivery than could otherwise be obtained; and every such letter shall be indorsed "Urgent," and have the name of the writer written on its cover, and every Officer so forwarding a despatch will be held responsible that there was a sufficient cause of urgency to justify his having done so. If the line of Stations is not specified, the Officer in charge of each Station where the despatch arrives will use his discretion in forwarding it to the next, by the best line for its reaching its destination.

384. The weekly Reports, Returns, &c., when not sent by post, can for the most part be forwarded to Head Quarters by the usual patrols, without the necessity of despatching a special messenger.

INSTRUCTIONS RESPECTING CORRESPONDENCE, REPORTS, ETC.

385. All letters and reports from any District, for transmission to the Inspector General's Office, should be forwarded through the Superintendent of the District, except in case of outrage, serious breach of the public peace, or in any matter of an urgent nature, when Officers in charge of Stations or Divisions are to report direct to the Inspector General.

386. All correspondence and reports must be expressed in clear and concise terms, and should be written in a neat and legible hand on foolscap paper, with one-third margin.

387. Reports from subordinate Members of the Force should be drawn up in the third person, according to the following form:—

| | | |
|--------------|--|-------|
| | " Police Station, | 185 . |
| " No. " | " Constable (or Sergeant, &c., as the case may be), reports | " |

388. With the exception of Officers in charge of Districts, who are each allowed the services of a Member of the Force as a clerk, it is expected that all Members of the Force will make out their reports in their own handwriting, and all Members of the Force except those in charge of Districts and important Stations, will supply themselves with stationery.

389. Reports relating to outrage upon person or property, or to the peace of the country, although conveyed in concise terms, should embrace a full statement of facts, and of such other particulars as may enable the Government to form a correct opinion upon the case. In every instance of crime the Officer should state in his report, whether any and what clue has been obtained to the discovery of the perpetrators, and the steps which have been adopted to trace out the offenders, and should also inform the Police of the neighbouring District or Station of the particulars of the offence.

390. Such occasions afford the Head of the Department a fair opportunity of judging of the zeal, intelligence, and ability of the Members of the Force, who should bear in mind that in estimating their claims to promotion due reference will be had to the manner in which they have been accustomed to acquit themselves of this immediate branch of their duties, and to the success which has attended their efforts to bring criminals to justice.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

P O L I C E .

(REPORT OF THE PROGRESS OF FORMATION OF THE POLICE ESTABLISHMENT SINCE THE NEW POLICE ACT CAME INTO OPERATION.)Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 12 August, 1862.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

Police Department,Inspector General's Office,Sydney, 11 August, 1862.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to submit, for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, the following Report of the progress of formation of the Police Establishment since the Police Regulation Act of last Session came into operation, on the 1st of March last.

I commence by drawing attention to the attached Statement, marked A, showing the number of Mounted and Foot Police drilled, instructed, and equipped, at the Police Depot in Sydney, and forwarded since the above date to the several Police Districts named. These constables were all appointed after careful personal examination and scrutiny of their testimonials by myself, and I believe I am fully justified in stating that they are a fine, active, and intelligent body of men, and would compare favourably with those employed in any similar service elsewhere.

New Police Stations have, during the same period, been formed at the places named in the list marked B, and mounted men have been also added to the Stations, as distinguished in the same Return.

My endeavours to distribute the Mounted Police have, of course, been circumscribed, by the difficulty experienced in obtaining quarters and stabling; by the fact of the existing force being, on the 1st of March, nearly equal to that provided on the Estimates; and the vacancies occurring, from time to time, not being sufficiently numerous to meet the requirements for Mounted Police.

It will also be borne in mind, that unexpected demands for mounted men for the Gold Fields have been made, and also for Escort purposes.

I further append a Statement, marked C, showing some of the places at present unprotected, where Police Stations are urgently required; these I am prevented from forming, from want of men and means to provide accommodation.

At the same time, I am far from desiring to involve the Colony in an increasing expenditure for Police, as I am of opinion that, when proper Stations are formed at reasonable distances apart, the protection will be greater, even with a smaller body of men, as the duty will be less harassing to Police and horses, though far more efficiently performed; moreover, there are still a large number of men in the Force, who, from age and infirmity, are not equal to the active duty required of the Police in this Colony.

I should here remark, that it cannot be expected that constables newly appointed should be at once acquainted with the country in the districts where they are stationed; a reasonable period must elapse before they can be made thoroughly efficient in this respect.

During the last five months, 13 sergeants, 8 senior constables, and 18 constables, have been certified by the Medical Board unfit for service, and have been awarded pensions or gratuities from the Police Reward Fund, according to their length of service, as provided by the Act, to the amounts mentioned below.

29 members of the Force under 15 years service have received gratuities from the Police Reward Fund, amounting to £2,339 4 5 17 members over 15 years service, pensioned,—total amount per annum £1,561 11 8

Although there have been, unhappily, of late, several cases of serious crime, yet, considering the elements of the population, extent and nature of the country, and the bad characters attracted to the Gold Fields from other Colonies, crime has not been more prevalent than might have been expected.

Of the officers appointed to the various ranks in the Police Force, several had Police experience; and among those who were not possessed of that advantage, many have shown a considerable aptitude for duty; and as far as I have been yet able to judge, I see reason to congratulate myself and the Government upon the selection of the officers placed under my orders; but the number considered necessary by me to carry out the system having been so materially reduced by Parliament, I have been unable to station officers at all the places I should desire, through the large area of country over which their supervision is required.

The Escort Service having been proved to be on an unsatisfactory footing (for which I may be pardoned in saying, in passing, I was not responsible), I was directed to take steps for providing an efficient mounted guard. This made a considerable inroad into the force at my disposal.

Under existing contracts, the horses of the mounted guard could not stand the rate of travelling, and it therefore became a question whether the Government should provide conveyance for the gold; but considering the great expense attendant upon such a system, and the loss by the delay in transit, I have thought it advisable to recommend that some modification only should be made of the present arrangement, that is to say,—that the contract vehicle conveying the gold should travel only by daylight, and at a pace which mounted men can accompany without overtaxing the horses, and that there shall be a guard, to consist of the force specified in the margin.

In the vehicle alone—
1 Conductor,
3 Constables.

Mounted—
1 Sen. Constable,
2 Constables.

This would allow of a weekly escort, and be perhaps nearly as economical in the end as a fortnightly service, if conducted entirely by Government.

With the view of carrying out this arrangement, I have been authorized to invite tenders for the service, on the Southern and Western lines.

An officer having been appointed by the Government to act for me during my absence, in carrying on the official routine in Sydney (as provided by the Police Regulation Act), I have been enabled to take a short tour of inspection to the Southern District, and purpose shortly visiting the Gold Fields and other important stations in the Western and South-eastern Districts; but am desirous of knowing first what resources will be placed at my disposal for forming other stations, and perfecting present arrangements.

Among matters of detail which have occupied my attention, I may mention the following:—

The preparation of Departmental Regulations.

The introduction of a complete system of Books and Returns, of a simple description, throughout the Colony, to check the duty of the men, issue of forage, stores, and other expenditure.

Devising a new system of Accounts, with the view of placing the same on a more satisfactory basis, and to insure prompt payment with as little trouble as possible to claimants. I annex printed Regulations, marked D, explaining the arrangement.

POLICE.—REPORT FROM INSPECTOR GENERAL.

I have also submitted to the Government a proposal for an alteration in the present system of Contracts, so far as it affects supplies of forage and prisoners' rations, and which will simplify the arrangements, and I am satisfied ultimately prove economical.

In conclusion, it is probably unnecessary for me to observe, that although these alterations may not yet have been in operation long enough to work smoothly, or to show such a marked improvement as perhaps anticipated by some persons, yet I have every confidence that the purposes desired and expected to result from the Police Regulation Act will be ultimately satisfactorily accomplished, if I meet with the support I have every hope will be accorded to me.

I have, &c.,

JNO. M'LERIE,

Inspector General of Police.

POLICE ACCOUNTS.

The following Regulations respecting the manner of preparing Police Accounts and obtaining payment of the same, are notified for general information :—

1. No accounts are in future to be made out in duplicate.
2. Salaries and Allowances to be drawn on the Abstract Forms, (Nos. 36 and 41.)
3. All accounts for Contingencies to be on one form, (No. 3.)
The particulars to be made out in detail, quantities in figures only.
Forage.—By weight, to agree with the quantities acknowledged to be received in the weekly forage return.
Prisoners' Rations.—The total number supplied for the period according to the different scales, and to agree with issues entered on the back of the Station Duty Reports. No returns of the issues in detail will be required to accompany such accounts.
Conveyance of Prisoners.—No special certificates will be required that prisoners were unable to walk, as the accounts will be certified by the Superintendents as correct in every particular, but a note should be indorsed on such accounts explaining the necessity for the expenditure.
Accounts for prisoners' rations, forage, and farriery, should quote the No. of the General or Departmental Contract for the supply, otherwise a note should be indorsed by the Superintendent on the face of the claim explaining why no Contract was taken.
4. Postage stamps will be supplied, on requisition, from the Inspector General's Office, to each Superintendent, he distributing the same as required to out-stations and seeing that a proper account is kept of the appropriation of the same.
5. No account will be passed unless supported by the requisition (No. 13), given by the member of the Force incurring the expenditure, and the certificate of the Superintendent in charge of the District to the account will be indispensable.
6. No receipts to be signed under any circumstances until the money is actually paid.
7. The claimant will be required, in rendering his account, to sign his name opposite the total, as a guarantee of its correctness.
8. Payment will be made in either of the following courses :—
(a.) If in Sydney, on presentation of the account by the claimant at the Office of the Inspector General.
(b.) If the amount be under £4, it will be paid in cash by the Superintendent of Police in charge of the District (from its contingent advance.)
(c.) By filling up the authority in favour of an Agent in Sydney, who will be paid the amount on application at the Inspector General's Office, and then sign the receipt.
(d.) By filling up the authority to pay the sum into any bank, to any branch and credit named.
9. An advance not to exceed £50 will be made by the Inspector General of Police to each Superintendent, to enable him to pay when on tours of inspection, and at other times, in cash, accounts for services or supplies, incurred under proper authority and not exceeding £4, such as forage at inns, conveyance of prisoners, fuel, light, and water, rations, farriery, &c., the general account-form (No. 3) being completed for each payment.
10. All such vouchers to be collected at the end of each month (or earlier if the advance be expended), and sent with a list to the Inspector General of Police, the total amount being equal to the advance made, or the balance to accompany the accounts in adjustment.
11. If the accounts be found correct on examination, the amount will be again promptly placed to the Superintendent's credit.
12. No account is to be rendered a second time without a written report that the original has been lost or mislaid, and stating the circumstances.
13. In order to reduce as far as possible the number of accounts, the Superintendents should endeavour (when the claimants do not object to such a course) to let small running accounts, under contract, &c., accumulate to the end of each quarter.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

CHARLES PHILLIPS LAWRENCE.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 11 July, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Charles Phillips Lawrence, of Bathurst, in the Colony of New South Wales, late Sergeant-Major in the Western Mounted Patrol,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner was, for eight years prior to the twentieth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty, Sergeant-Major of the Western Mounted Patrol, during which long period your Petitioner acted with satisfaction to his superior officers.

That your Petitioner was, on the twentieth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty, apprehended, without any previous inquiry from your Petitioner, under a warrant charging him with forging the name of one John Chesher to a voucher for two pounds and eight shillings, for forage supplied to Trooper William Rorisson, and was committed, on the twenty-fourth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty, to take his trial at the following Bathurst March Circuit Court.

That your Petitioner was tried on the eighth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, at the Bathurst Circuit Court, when the Jury, without calling on your Petitioner for his defence, pronounced a verdict of "not guilty," and the Chief Justice, Sir Alfred Stephen, who tried the case, stated that your Petitioner left the dock without the slightest stain on his character.

That your Petitioner, who was suspended from his duties on his apprehension, immediately after his acquittal reported himself to the Commandant of the Western Patrol as ready to return to his duty, when your Petitioner was informed that he must still continue suspended.

That your Petitioner was, on the eighteenth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, dismissed from the Western Mounted Patrol, on the alleged grounds that your Petitioner refused to prosecute Trooper William Rorisson, the principal witness for the Crown, on the trial of your Petitioner, for perjury on the said trial.

That your Petitioner was always ready and willing to give evidence and to procure evidence against the said Trooper William Rorisson, for committing perjury, but your Petitioner was advised by his solicitor that the charge against Trooper William Rorisson should be initiated by the Government, to which effect your Petitioner wrote to the Police Magistrate at Bathurst.

That your Petitioner, moreover, on his dismissal, was informed that all arrears of pay due to him, both before and since the time of his suspension, had been forfeited to the Government.

That your Petitioner then mentioned the case to Henry Rotton, Esquire, one of the Honorable Members of your Honorable House, who kindly undertook to endeavour to obtain redress for your Petitioner, and, if necessary, to bring the matter before your Honorable House.

That

That the said Honorable Member, Henry Rotton, Esquire, brought your Petitioner's case under the notice of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, who consented to have the case investigated by a special Commission to be appointed by the Government.

That a Commission was appointed by the Government, consisting of the Chief Gold Commissioner for the Western Gold Fields, the Commandant of the Western Mounted Patrol, and Thomas J. Hawkins, Esquire, J. P., who held an inquiry, in the month of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, into your Petitioner's case, when witnesses were examined, both against and for your Petitioner.

That the Commissioners, after a careful investigation, forwarded to the Government a report favourable to your Petitioner, entirely exonerating him from blame on the charge for which he was dismissed the service, namely, refusing to prosecute Trooper William Rorisson, and strongly recommending your Petitioner to the favourable consideration of the Government.

That, notwithstanding this favourable report, the Government, acting, as stated to your Petitioner, upon the suggestion of the Inspector General of Police, still refuse to reinstate your Petitioner in his former position.

That your Petitioner was, besides the shame of being placed in the dock on a charge of forgery, put to a very heavy expense in defending himself on his trial.

That your Petitioner would humbly submit that his dismissal from the Western Mounted Patrol, wherein he had served so long and faithfully, and the depriving him of his pay, was an act of injustice, as your Petitioner had been so honorably acquitted on the false charge of forgery brought against him.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to take your Petitioner's case into consideration, and will grant unto your Petitioner such relief as to your Honorable House may seem fit.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

(PETITION TO BE HEARD BY COUNSEL.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 4 September, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Charles Phillips Lawrence, of Bathurst, in the Colony of New South Wales, late Serjeant Major in the Western Mounted Patrol,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That on the fifth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, on the motion of Henry Rotton, Esq., one of the Members of your Honorable House, your Honorable House granted a Select Committee, to inquire into and report upon the circumstances attending the dismissal of your Petitioner from the Western Mounted Patrol.

That the decision to be arrived at by your Honorable House will be of the utmost importance to your Petitioner, as vitally affecting his character, and your Petitioner is therefore desirous of having legal professional assistance.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will graciously permit your Petitioner to appear, by his counsel, attorney, or agent, before the Select Committee appointed by your Honorable House to inquire into your Petitioner's case.

And your Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

SERGEANT-MAJOR LAWRENCE.

No. 1.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

*Office of Inspector General of Police,
Sydney, 11 April, 1861.*

SIR,

Having reference to the recent trial at the Bathurst Assizes of Sergeant Major Lawrence, of the Western Patrol, upon a charge of forgery, in which one Trooper Rorison was the principal witness, and which resulted in Lawrence's acquittal, I do myself the honor to state, for the information of the Chief Secretary, that the evidence given by Rorison before His Honor the Chief Justice, as compared with that he adduced before the committing Magistrates, appearing so widely discrepant, I felt morally certain that collusion between these men had existed; and therefore considered it my duty to suspend both until the Police Magistrate at Bathurst had gone through both depositions alluded to.

2. This has been done, and, as reported in the enclosed letter, "great discrepancy is found," but not sufficient to proceed against Rorison for "perjury, unless he (Lawrence)" would lay the information; but this, under date 28th ultimo, Lawrence positively declines doing. Thus Rorison escapes prosecution, and the ends of justice are defeated.

3. Taking the case in all its bearings under consideration, the judgment can arrive at no other conclusion than that it is necessary to the credit and moral status of the Force that both Lawrence and Rorison be removed; and I therefore beg to recommend that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government be advised to exercise the power vested in him by the 4th section of the Police Regulation Act, 16th Vict, No. 33, and annul their appointments accordingly.

JNO. M'LERIE,
I. G. P.

[Enclosures in No. 1.]

*Police Office,
Bathurst, 3 April, 1861.*

Sir,

I have the honor to forward a letter from Charles Lawrence, late Sergeant-Major in the Western Patrol.

With your permission I will explain the meaning of the letter. After Lawrence's trial, in accordance with your instructions, I informed him he was still suspended. I then very carefully went through the depositions taken before the Bench, and compared them with the evidence given by Trooper Rorison at the trial; I found great discrepancy in the evidence, but not sufficient to proceed against Rorison for perjury, unless Lawrence would lay the information; I accordingly sent for him and explained the matter to him; he seemed most anxious to prosecute, and said he would see me again. I have since had several interviews with him, but he has always put it off, and at last sent me the enclosed letter.

He is fully aware that he need be at no expense in the prosecutions, as I have told him several times the Government will bear all that. He has evidently had advisers.

I have again gone carefully through the depositions, but cannot see my way clear to file an information against Rorison; for if I did do so, I must be dependent upon Lawrence's evidence for a committal, and he might probably turn round and not prove what he says he can, and so the conviction would be quashed.

Will you give me instructions respecting Rorison, whether he is still to be suspended or to return to duty; also please to say what is to be done about Lawrence's suspension?

I have, &c.

W. HALL PALMER, P.M.,
Acting Superintendent, Western Patrol.

The Inspector General of Police, Sydney.

Bathurst, 23 March, 1861.

To Dr. Palmer, P.M.

Sir,

I beg most respectfully to state that I am prepared any moment to give evidence, and also to produce evidence, for the Crown, against Trooper Rorison; but it occurs to me that I am not the proper person, after recent occurrences, coupled with my present arrest upon the same charge, to initiate proceedings.

If the Government consider the ends of justice are not met through my prosecution, then it becomes (so it strikes me) the Government to begin de novo at Rorison. Moreover, my now very slender means preclude all thought of my throwing away any more money in legal expenses, which a fresh prosecution would entail upon me.

I have, &c.,

C. LAWRENCE.

Colony of New South Wales. }
Bathurst, to wit. }

BE it remembered, that on the eighteenth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty, at Bathurst, in the Colony of New South Wales, personally came and appeared before me, W. Hall Palmer, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the Colony aforesaid, resident and acting in and for the Colony aforesaid, and duly authorized in this behalf, Edward Montagu Battye, of Bathurst, Superintendent of the Western Patrol, and gave me the said Justice to understand he informed and complained that Charles Lawrence, Sergeant-Major of the Western Patrol did,

did, as the complainant is informed and verily believes, feloniously forge the name of one John Cheshier, to the voucher hereunto annexed and marked A, with intent thereby to defraud Her Majesty of the sum of two pounds eight shillings, contrary to the Act of the Governor and Council of New South Wales in such case made and provided. Wherefore the said Edward Montagu Battye prays that the said Charles Lawrence may be brought before one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, to answer the said charge and make defence thereto, and that justice may be done in the premises.

Depositions of Witnesses.

Bathurst, New South }

The examination of John Merrin, of Bathurst, in the Colony of New South Wales, Edward Montague Battye, John Cheshire, and William Rorison, of Bathurst, in the said Colony, trooper, taken on oath, this 24th day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty, at Bathurst, in the Colony aforesaid, before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in the presence and hearing of Charles Lawrence, who is charged this day before me, for that he, the said Charles Lawrence, on a day of . . . at . . . in the said Colony, did feloniously forge the name of John Cheshire to a document, with intent to defraud Her Majesty.

Bathurst, New South }
Wales, to wit. }

Charles Lawrence charged with forging the name of John Cheshier to a voucher, with intent to defraud.

And this deponent, John Merrin, a constable of the Bathurst Police, upon oath, states:—I produce a warrant, in virtue of which I apprehended Charles Lawrence, before the Court, on Thursday evening, the twentieth of December, 1860, at the Abercrombie; I showed him the warrant; I brought him in and lodged him in the lock-up on Saturday evening, the twenty-second instant.

W. HALL PALMER, P.M.

And this deponent, Edward Montague Battye, Superintendent of the Western Police, being duly sworn, states:—The information now read is my information; the document marked A I have seen three times; the body of the document is in the handwriting of Sergeant-Major Lawrence; the signature as witness is his signature; the first time I saw the voucher was on my own table; it was not then in the same state as it is now; it was afterwards added by Sergeant-Major Lawrence, on my seeing Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and asking him upon what service and what trooper it was for, "The above forage was supplied to Trooper Rorison, of Carcoar, when in search of highway robbers and 'cattle-stealers'; the document was signed 'John Cheshier,' and witnessed by Lawrence, before I attached my signature; the voucher being completed, when the money was paid to me I should have paid it to Rorison, if he was in town, or I should have paid it to Lawrence to pay to Rorison, prior to inquiry; had no inquiry been made, I should have sent the money by cheque through post to Cheshier, unless I was satisfied that the money had been actually paid by Rorison or any other person to Cheshier; I do not think that Lawrence mentioned to me from whom he got the information; I depended upon Sergeant-Major Lawrence; I have a strong idea that Rorison was in town at the time I transmitted the voucher in duplicate to the Inspector General; in consequence of an interview with the Inspector General, and from other facts, I have instituted the present proceedings.

By Mr. Sergeant, for Lawrence:—I believe Lawrence's book is in the hands of the Police Magistrate; that is the chief diary, (diary produced); I can't recollect which trooper came in with Rorison on the 16th or 17th of October; most likely the monthly forage returns would shew what day Rorison was in Bathurst; (witness referred to voucher); I do not know the signature "John Cheshier" attached to the voucher; I certainly do not believe it is the hand-writing of Sergeant Lawrence; Sergeant Lawrence's name appears as witness; it is not a witness to my signature, it is a witness to Cheshier's receipt; we are obliged to get a receipt witnessed, before the person entitled to the money can get it from Sydney; I know from Rorison, and it agrees with his own statement of 1st December, that Rorison was employed on the days and at the places mentioned in his diary. By Rorison's diary it appears that, on the 23rd of July, 1860, he was at Long Swamp; on the 24th, at Corrawa, and thence to Bathurst, by order of Sergeant-Major Lawrence. (Entries in diary read marked B.) The voucher A was made out by returns furnished to the Sergeant-Major; I compared the voucher with the diaries, and found that Rorison was actually away from his station, and did not draw forage at his station on those days; it is not usual that the troopers themselves sign a money voucher for another person; I do not recollect an instance of it; I did not know the signature to the voucher was not Cheshier's till I saw Captain M'Leerie on Monday or Tuesday last; the vouchers are sometimes signed in the bush, and brought in and filled up afterwards; if I had received that money I should not have known, unless inquiries had been made, that it was paid actually to Cheshier; either Rorison or Lawrence would have been paid the money; Rorison, if he had been in town—if not, it would have been paid to Lawrence, or a certificate for Rorison, or otherwise it would have been sent by post to Cheshier, up to 1st December, 1860; after that I would have paid it to Rorison or Sergeant-Major Lawrence; on paying moneys to Sergeant-Major Lawrence, I should pay it upon his own authority; the Sergeant-Major's word is ample for payment to a trooper; the alteration of the payment after the 1st December, 1860, was in consequence of the statement I got from Rorison on that day; it has not happened for a long time, that where a trooper has been at various places on one journey the whole expense for the various places have been put into one voucher; then it was necessary to attach the receipts for the money, and for the trooper himself to sign the voucher; when the voucher A was returned to me the first time from Sydney, I was told by Rorison, in Lawrence's presence, that he had included in the voucher Rorison's accounts at other places, and that only two nights were due to Cheshier out of it. [Rorison's statement put in, and marked C, dated 1st December, 1860; also, copy of letter to Mr. Beardmore, Police Magistrate, Carcoar, dated 1st December, 1860, marked D; Mr. Beardmore's answer, dated 5th December, 1860, marked E.] Rorison's statement (marked C) was made to me in consequence of what I heard from Sergeant-Major Lawrence; upon hearing his report I immediately sent for Rorison.

By

SERGEANT-MAJOR LAWRENCE.

By Crown: When I got the voucher produced first, I was led to believe the signature was that of John Cheshier's, and that the whole of the money was due to him; when Lawrence first told me that only two nights were due to John Cheshier, I made him account to me for the other sums; I did not ask him why the name of John Cheshier was signed to the voucher, as the amount was not due to him, but I gave certain directions to Rorison; I have had no vouchers from Jemalong, for the dates mentioned in the voucher marked A; if I was aware that the amount charged in the voucher had not been paid or charged, I should certainly not have sent the voucher; I ordered Rorison, on the 1st December, 1860, to go and get certificates of his having paid for his horse from the publicans from Jemalong; I have not received them yet.

Trooper William Rorison states:—I am stationed at Carcoar; last Friday evening week a constable came down with a message from Mr. Beardmore, the Police Magistrate, stating that he wanted to see me at the Court House; I immediately went, and concluding he wanted me on business, I rode down; I went into his office with the Chief Constable, whom Mr. Beardmore told to remain in the room; Mr. Beardmore then commenced by asking me if I knew the Campbell's River country; I replied I did, as I had been stationed there nine months; he then asked me if I knew my way across to there, which I told him I did, as I had been oftentimes; he then asked which way I would go; I said there were two routes—one by Triangle Flat and Long Swamp, and the other by Dunn's Hall; he then asked me what sort of a place it was to stop at—the Long Swamp Inn—that he meant Cheshire's; I replied I never had seen anything wrong there; he said, "Then you have stopped there?" I told him I had frequently, and that I always saw the place orderly; he then asked me if I had stopped there all night; I said I had twice, and at those times there was only Cheshire's family; and to other questions, which I could not understand why they were put to me, I replied that Mr. Cheshire had never charged me for anything for myself, that I had stabled my horse each night and did not pay for him; that I was on Government duty, looking out after a man for robbing, and also took a message to a witness regarding horse-stealing; that I had never received any money from any person to pay for my horse at Cheshire's, and if any person had said so it was false; that I was positive I had never stopped more than twice at Cheshire's; that I had not stopped six times there; Mr. Beardmore then handed me a voucher to look at; I told him I knew the writing; he said, "Look at the dates, and tell me where you were then"; I replied I could not, as I had not my diary with me, upon which he replied "Oh! then you do keep a diary, and if you had it here you could tell me, and if you were hereafter put on your oath you can swear to the truth of what you have said"; Mr. Beardmore then wrote a piece of paper (I now produce), "Did you draw forage for July 3, 4, 7, 23, 24, and August 10th," telling me to bring an answer back from the diary on the following Monday morning, and shewing where I was on those dates; he then said, "Take care, you must not say a word to any one about it"; the Chief Constable was in the room all the time; I went away after a Government horse the following day, and have not seen Mr. Beardmore since; I have seen the Chief Constable since, whom I told that the account was perfectly correct as to the dates; that I had not drawn forage for those dates; that the expenses incurred were correct, but had been placed in one voucher as due to Cheshire, as I had not paid him, but had the others.

Made before me, this 1st December, 1860, at Bathurst, E. M. BATTYE, Capt., J.P.

Examination in re a certain Voucher belonging to the Western Patrol.

Mrs. John Cheshier:—Did any mounted troopers ever stop with you? Yes; shortly after we opened, last July, Trooper Rorison stopped two or three nights with us. Do you ever charge constables? No. Did you charge Rorison? No. Do you know this signature, and is it your husband's? No, it is not his.

How

How do you spell your name? Cheshier, without an i. I now give you his signature.

Trooper Rorison:—Did you ever stop at John Cheshier's? Yes, twice.

Have you the dates of stopping there? Yes, I keep a diary, and that will show.

Was any other trooper with you on either occasion? No.

Did you pay for your horse? No.

Did you ask what they charged? Yes; they said nothing—did not charge a policeman anything.

Were you on public duty? Yes; once to warn a party to appear at Bathurst, and again in search of a thief.

Did the Sergeant-Major know of your absence? Yes, I told him; he would also know it from my forage list.

Have you ever paid Cheshier anything? Never; got nothing to pay him.

Did you ever pass six nights at Cheshier's? Never.

How much did you receive to pay the voucher I now show? Nothing; I never gave the Sergeant-Major such an account; on the 3rd and 4th July I was at home.

John Cheshier:—Do you recollect any trooper stopping at your house after you opened? I do; Trooper Rorison stopped with me; I opened in July last.

How many nights did Rorison stop? Twice, at different times.

Was any mounted man with him? No.

What did you charge for his horse? Nothing.

Did you ever charge a constable? Never.

Is the signature I show you your own? No; I do not spell my name that way.

Have you received anything for the two occasions Rorison stopped with you? Nothing; never was offered anything by anybody.

These are correct answers to my questions. •

Sir,

Trooper Rorison has reported to me the examination you put him under on Friday evening week last, regarding his stopping at Cheshire's and elsewhere, and regarding a certain account to cover those expenses for his horse. The roundabout and detective way in which you appear to have put your questions (if Trooper Rorison's statement is correct) was so extremely unbecoming, that I must request your informing me why such an examination took place, without communicating with me first, the Commanding Officer of the Mounted Police—and upon what authority you have gone. I have since more fully inquired into the matter myself, and find that the voucher signed by Cheshire includes other accounts at other places on those dates which Rorison paid, he (Rorison) not having money enough to pay Cheshire, and to save a multiplicity of vouchers for small amounts, the Sergeant-Major put the lot into one voucher for Rorison.

And this deponent, William Rorison, a trooper of the Western Police, upon oath, states:—I am stationed at Carcoar; I went there on the 4th day of June, 1860; I know the last witness, John Chesher; he is a publican, residing at Long Swamp; I recollect being at his place in July once; I believe I was there in August; I stabled my horse there; I asked Mr. Chesher in the morning what I was in his debt; he replied, I can afford without charging you—made no charge; I asked on both occasions; I sent in an account to Sergeant-Major Lawrence for six nights for my horse—two nights at Canowindra, one at Jemalong, one at Nanima, and two at Long Swamp, at Mr. Chesher's; it was my return to show where I had been, and the nights I had not drawn forage from the Government; it is the return I have to send in monthly; I have seen a voucher of the same amount as that produced marked A; I did not see the names John Chesher attached to it; the first time I saw it, it was handed to me by Mr. Beardmore, at Carcoar, on the 23rd of November, 1860, on a Friday; I told Lawrence that Chesher had not been paid—that if he made the demand I was the person who was there; I have not been applied to for payment; I have not seen Chesher since till to-day.

By Defendant: I do not recollect telling Sergeant Lawrence that there was one night's money due to me for my horse at Orange at that time—having been previously paid by Captain Battye; I signed a voucher for washing blankets; it was on the 17th October; I was in Bathurst that day; I came into Bathurst on the 15th October; I left on the 17th; Trooper Day, of Cowra, and O'Rourke and an aboriginal, came in with me; I gave Lawrence the account in Captain Battye's office; it was there I signed the voucher for washing the blankets; Day was present; I do not remember if the clerk was there or not; to the best of my belief he was there; I can't say if the Sergeant-Major wrote in about the blankets or not; it was two shillings a blanket, I believe; it was due by the Government to me; I could not get it without a voucher; Sergeant-Major asked me to sign a voucher and he would get the money for me; the usual rate I pay when I stable my horse is 8s. a night.

I had told him that Mr. Beardmore had been there and asked me if I had charged anything, and I had said no; he did not say that he had signed my name to any paper.

SIR,

In accordance with your instructions, I caused Trooper Rorison to be suspended from duty. Since then I have applied to the Attorney General for the depositions (taken before the Bench), for the purpose of going carefully through them, and see if there is sufficient evidence to proceed against Rorison. I will attend to it as soon as the Circuit Court is over.

Will

SERGEANT-MAJOR LAWRENCE.

Will you please to say what steps are to be taken with respect to Lawrence? You will perceive, by the report of the trial, that the Judge, on Lawrence being acquitted, stated "that he (Lawrence) left the dock without any stain upon his character." In consequence of the above statement, is Lawrence to remain under suspension, or is he to be reinstated? Please send me an answer at your earliest convenience.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 18 April, 1861.*

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, recommending, under the circumstances therein stated, the removal from their situations of Sergeant-Major Lawrence and Trooper Rorison, of the Western Mounted Patrol, I am directed to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator of the Government has been pleased, under the 4th section of the Act 16th Victoria, No. 33 to annul their appointments accordingly.

I have, &c.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 4 November, 1861.*

SIR,

A charge having been made against the late Sergeant-Major Lawrence that he had forged the name of John Cheshier to a voucher for forage, he was recently tried at the Circuit Court at Bathurst, and acquitted. There was, however, reason to suppose that the evidence given by Trooper Rorison was incorrect, and it was desired to proceed against this man for perjury, which could not be done without an information from Lawrence, who evaded taking any step in the matter, and was in consequence removed from the service.

2. Some representations having been made on behalf of Lawrence, the Colonial Secretary wishes that a further inquiry should take place, in order to ascertain whether his conduct was or was not such as justifies his dismissal from his situation; and I am, therefore, directed to request that you will instruct the Superintendent of the Mounted Patrol, Mr. Chatfield, to meet Mr. Hawkins as Chairman, and Mr. McLean, the Commissioner of the Western Gold Fields, to make the investigation, and to report to this Office whether they consider this to be the case or not.

3. The papers on the subject, including the voucher (forged), the original depositions and exhibits in the case, and the letter from the Police Magistrate, Bathurst, reporting his communication with Lawrence respecting the evidence given by Trooper Rorison at the trial, are transmitted herewith, to be forwarded to Mr. Chatfield, to be laid before the Board. They should be carefully returned with their report.

4. It will be desirable that the Board should examine the Police Magistrate of Bathurst, and the Police Magistrate of Carcoar, also John Cheshier, and, if procurable, Trooper Rorison.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

*Police Department of New South Wales,
General Branch,
Sydney, 3 December, 1861.*

SIR,

Having reference to your letter of the 4th ultimo, enclosing depositions and other papers connected with the trial of one Charles Lawrence for forgery, in order to their being laid before the Board appointed to inquire into the circumstances attending his removal from the Patrol, I now do myself the honor to transmit, for the information of the Chief Secretary, the report of this Board upon the matter referred to; to which is appended, notes of evidence taken, and an expression of the opinion they have arrived at, "that, under all the circumstances of the case, and having in view the former good character of Lawrence, together with the long period and activity of his service, they beg to recommend his case to the favourable reconsideration of the Government;" but from which, with all due deference, I entirely dissent.

2. Without reference to the moral evidence of collusion (most systematic and complete) between Lawrence and the Trooper Rorison, to defraud the Government and yet escape the consequences of the crime,—to the assumption of inimical feeling between them, to blind justice,—to the discrepancies which their depositions and subsequent statements exhibit,—I pass at once to the acknowledged fact (acknowledged by Lawrence himself) that he filled up a voucher purporting to be for forage supplied to Patrol horses, which was not supplied, and that he witnessed Trooper Rorison forge the Innkeeper Chesher's name to this voucher, with a view to the payment of the amount therein included being obtained from Mr. Superintendent Battye. Thus are fraud and forgery combined; fraud, as regards the filling in the document with false and excessive quantities, (the act of Lawrence); forgery, the affixing a signature, presumptively John Chesher's, that of Rorison. To all this—(not simple irregularity, but absolute crime)—is urged by the Board the weak plea that, to a certain extent, "irregularity" in such matters had obtained in the Superintendent's office. To my mind such excuse is worthless; it certainly does not justify nor even palliate the offence; and how the Board could arrive at the conclusion they have, I am at a loss to conceive.

3. Having these facts before me, that Lawrence colludes with a forgery and compasses a fraud, I certainly feel it my duty to express a hope that, should this man be restored again to the service of the Government, it may not be to any branch of the department of which I am the head. Were such the case, I could place no reliance either in his reports or vouchers of account; should be unable to attest their accuracy; and thus confusion, irregularity, and possibly insubordination, would shortly ensue.

I am, &c.,

JNO. M'LERIE,
Inspector General of Police.

[Enclosure in No. 8.]

Bathurst, 22 November, 1861.

Sir,

We have the honor to report, for the information of the Honorable the Chief Secretary, the result of our inquiry as to the circumstances which led to the removal from the Patrol of Mr. Charles Lawrence, late Sergeant-Major, for which purpose we were appointed a Board.

2. We return herewith the papers which were referred to us with our instructions, and we transmit the notes of evidence taken before us at the enquiry. It will be observed that the evidence of Mr. Chesher, mentioned in our instructions as desirable to be taken, is not included. That person failed to attend at the request of the Board, and we did not consider his testimony to be material.

3. The verdict of the Jury, coupled with the remark of the Chief Justice "that Mr. Lawrence left the Court without any stain upon his character," disposes of the original charge of forgery, in the criminal sense of the term.

4. We have, however, found it to be quite impossible to separate entirely this part of the case from that on which our report is mainly required—as to the circumstances following the trial, in consequence of which Mr. Lawrence was removed.

5. With respect to the signing of Chesher's name to the voucher, we have, after a careful consideration, to express our conviction that it was signed by Rorison himself in the manner stated by Mr. Lawrence. It does not appear to us that Mr. Lawrence had any intention of fraud, nor that he could have expected to derive any pecuniary benefit from the transaction. At the same time we are of opinion that, in witnessing the signature by another person purporting to be that of Chesher, he committed a grave irregularity, not warranted by the very improper practice formerly obtaining, to a certain extent, in the Patrol Office.

6. The matter, therefore, for our further report appears to be, the conduct of Lawrence in respect to the desire of the Police Magistrate, then also in charge of the Patrol, that he should initiate proceedings for perjury against Rorison after the trial.

7. The views of Dr. Palmer on this head are stated in his letter of the 3rd April, enclosing that of Lawrence, dated the 28th March, and which together formed the enclosures to that of the Inspector General of Police to yourself, dated the 11th April, in consequence of which the appointment of Lawrence was annulled. To those three letters we beg to direct special attention.

8. Because of Lawrence having declined to lay the information, Dr. Palmer evidently had the impression that he was actuated to that line of conduct by some improper motive, as shewn by his remark that he (Lawrence) had "bad advisers." This impression his letter would seem also to have conveyed to the Inspector General, who was further of opinion, as shewn by his letter of the 11th April, that "collusion" had existed between Lawrence and Rorison.

9. Having given a careful attention to the explanation of Lawrence, and to those of his legal advisers (whose advice we think it unfortunate that he did not at the time communicate to Dr. Palmer), we have arrived at the conclusion that he was deterred from filing the information by the very decided advice of those gentlemen, having regard to probable ulterior legal proceedings against himself by Rorison for malicious prosecution on the almost certain failure of the case against Rorison, and not by any improper motive. So far as we can judge, in the absence of the notes taken at the trial, we are disposed to concur in the opinion that there was not a sufficient case for proceeding against Rorison; and we doubt also whether it was not rather the province of the Crown Prosecutor, had there been discrepancies in his opinion amounting to perjury, to have directed the taking of the necessary steps to initiate proceedings. From the opportunities we have had of looking through the whole matter, we are satisfied that between Lawrence and Rorison there was no collusion, and that the feeling existing between them was, and now is, most inimical; and we conceive that Lawrence is still willing, as stated in his letter of the 28th March, "to give and procure," or endeavour to procure, evidence against Rorison.

10. Under all the circumstances, and having in view the former good character of Lawrence, together with the long period and activity of his service, we beg to recommend his case to the favourable reconsideration of the Government.

[Sub-Enclosures to No. 8.]

Notes of Evidence taken before Board of Inquiry respecting circumstances leading to dismissal of Sergeant-Major Lawrence.

THOS. J. HAWKINS, Chairman.

*W. Hall Palmer, Esq., P.M., Bathurst, states:—*I recollect a trial of the late Sergeant-Major Lawrence, at the March Assizes, respecting a voucher alleged to have been forged; he was acquitted, the presiding Judge (Chief Justice) remarking that he left the Court without any stain upon his character. At the time of the trial I was in charge of the Western Patrol; Mr. Lawrence was under suspension; after the trial I communicated with the Inspector General of Police, for instructions as to whether he should be reinstated; under instructions received Mr. Lawrence did not resume duty, and Trooper Rorison, who had given evidence at the trial, was suspended, in consequence of, as it appeared to me, material discrepancies between his evidence at the Police Office examination and the trial, which in my opinion did involve a case of perjury against Rorison; I wished Lawrence to lay an information against Rorison, and I had conversations with him on the subject; the results are embodied in my letter to the Inspector General, dated 3rd April, enclosing Lawrence's letter of 28th March. I believe that in consequence of my communication Mr. Lawrence and Trooper Rorison were dismissed; Lawrence distinctly stated to me his belief that a case of perjury respecting the signing of the voucher could be established against Rorison, and he mentioned some person formerly in the Police, whose name I do not recollect, who could prove it; the case to be established against Rorison was that he was present at the signing of the voucher, which, at the Police Office examination, he swore to having seen for the first time in the hands of Mr. Beardmore, to whom it had been sent from Sydney; to the best of my recollection, Lawrence stated that the witness above referred to could prove that Rorison was present and signed, or saw signed, the voucher; in the first instance Lawrence was anxious to afford every assistance to a prosecution of Rorison; he subsequently became unwilling to do so, as shown by his letter of the 28th March; I told him at the time that he was badly advised; I cannot say whether Lawrence was aware that I would not take any steps in the prosecution of Rorison unless he laid the information.

*By Lawrence's advocate:—*When I say that Lawrence became unwilling to assist in the prosecution, I mean that he declined to lay the information; he might have suggested that the Chief Constable Shearman could file the information, and that he would give evidence; I do not remember his having done so; previous to the occurrences referred to I have had charge of the patrol; I always considered Lawrence a trustworthy and efficient officer; I had, and have still, a high opinion of him; I see the voucher marked A belonging to the depositions; the body and his own signature are in Lawrence's handwriting; the three signatures "John Chesher," are not, I believe, in his handwriting.

*By Board:—*I did not consider it judicious to initiate a case against Rorison without first having the sworn information of Lawrence; I conceive that he might be either unwilling or unable to establish his statements to me, and did not therefore feel satisfied to proceed.

W. HALL PALMER.

*Owen C. Beardmore, Esq., Police Magistrate of Carcoar, states:—*Some time in the month of November, 1860, I recollect having proceeded to Mr. Chesher's, at Long Swamp, to make some inquiry respecting a voucher, which I believe to be the same as that now in my hands marked A; the voucher purported to have been signed by Chesher; he denied the signature, and stated that he had made no charge; I afterwards had communication with Trooper Rorison on the subject; he denied ever having seen the voucher before; he most strenuously denied ever having reported an expense, as charged in the voucher, to Sergeant-Major Lawrence, or even to have rendered a memorandum of it; he admitted to having been at Chesher's, but said that he was not charged; he said his diary would contradict the charges for some of the nights named in the voucher; I have no further knowledge of the matter.

OWEN C. BEARDMORE, P. M.

*Francis William Rorison, late of Mounted Patrol, states:—*I know the voucher marked A I saw it first in the hands of Mr. Beardmore, again at the Police Office in Bathurst, and then at the trial at the Assizes; the body is in the handwriting of Lawrence, as also his own signature; I do not know in whose handwriting are the signatures "John Chesher"; I believe they are not in Lawrence's; from circumstances I have formed the opinion that they were written by a trooper then in the Force, named Walter O'Rourke; I formed this opinion because Lawrence, being in the office, after filling up a voucher for washing some blankets, which I signed, sent me for O'Rourke, and I told him to go to Lawrence in the office; I believe that I had previously given to Lawrence a memorandum including the charges for my expenses at Chesher's, with others; I had a conversation with Lawrence about Chesher's account; I told him that I owed for two nights for my horse; Chesher had told me that he would not charge me; I considered that he referred to myself alone, and not for my horse; we paid for ourselves, and the Government for the horses; it was a general custom at public-houses to charge for the horses alone; I considered at the time I rendered the memorandum that Chesher had to be paid for the horse; I have served for some time under Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and was always on good terms with him; I estimated myself the charge for the horse at Chesher's according to charges in the neighbourhood; the memorandum marked B is in my handwriting, and is the memorandum above referred to; by the wording of the document, and my explanation to Lawrence, he must have understood that I had either paid already or was responsible for all the items; according to the voucher the whole amount would have been paid to me or to Chesher by Captain Battye, either direct or through Lawrence; if the money had not been paid to Chesher, and he had asked for it, I would have made inquiry at the office; I would have inquired for all the rest which was coming to myself; there was only 16s. coming to Chesher; had it been paid through Lawrence he must have passed it on either to myself or Chesher; at the time the voucher was made out Lawrence could not have known that Chesher would not receive the money for the horse, but he believed, as I did, that he would; I do not believe that I could have told Mr. Beardmore that Chesher made no charge for the horse, because I did not then know that he could not charge; I cannot recollect whether I said anything to Mr. Beardmore about having rendered an account to Lawrence; when Mr. Beardmore asked me about Chesher having charged, I thought he was referring to my own private charge, and not to that for the horses on account of the Government; when I told Mr. Beardmore that I never rendered "such an account" to Lawrence, I meant for six nights at Chesher's; I was there only two nights; previous to the trial a trooper said to me "Look out for yourself, the Captain and Lawrence are trying to get you in for it;" I have kept aloof from Lawrence ever since; I used formerly to go to his house; I am not aware of any difference between my evidence at the Police Office and at the trial, except that at the latter I mentioned my suspicion of O'Rourke, which I did not refer to at the Police Office, having confined myself to answering the questions asked; at the trial I stated that I believed I had not rendered an account shewing Chesher's account as "paid" by me; I saw afterwards, by memorandum B, that I had included it with other items which I had paid, and the memorandum was marked accordingly.

Samuel Wadeson Esq., Solicitor, of Bathurst, states:—I defended Mr. Lawrence at his trial for On the part of forgery, on 8th March last; some day or two after the trial Lawrence came to me, for the purpose of instituting proceedings against Rorison with regard to his evidence; Lawrence was most anxious to proceed; I pointed out to him that, in my opinion, there would not be a sufficient case against Rorison, and that he (Lawrence) would lay himself open to an action for malicious prosecution; I am still of the same opinion as I then gave; I understood that Lawrence accepted my advice, but I had great difficulty in inducing him to do so; I was well acquainted with the whole case, both at the Police Office and the Supreme Court, and I am convinced that there was no discrepancy in Rorison's evidence to justify proceedings against him.

SAM. WADESON.

Charles Lawrence states:—I know the voucher marked A; it was filled in and witnessed by me; it is all in my handwriting except the signatures E. M. Battye and "John Cheshier"; the names of Cheshier were signed by Trooper Rorison in my presence; the voucher purports to be entirely for sums due to Cheshier, but I was aware contained items stated to have been paid to other persons by Rorison; the voucher was drawn from the memorandum marked B rendered to me by Rorison; when I had prepared the voucher I handed it across the table to Rorison, instructing him to get it signed by Cheshier; he said, "I have got Cheshier's authority, and I told him that I would sign the voucher for him"; he then did so, and I attested the signature; it was an occasional practice to include in one voucher items due to different people, when the money had been paid by the troopers; I have not been on good terms with Rorison since my committal; I have barely spoken to him; Trooper Wylie was in the room when the voucher was signed; I afterwards learned that he denied having been there; when I first communicated with Dr. Palmer after the trial, I was anxious to prosecute, and thought I could establish a case against Rorison; I was deterred from initiating the proceedings by the advice of my legal adviser, Mr. Wadeson; when I wrote to Dr. Palmer the letter of the 28th March, I was willing to give and procure evidence; the evidence I proposed to procure was that of Wylie, Day, and O'Rourke; I was aware at the time that Wylie had denied having been in the room, but I thought that if put on his oath he might tell the truth; my letter of the 28th March was written by the advice of my solicitor; I am willing now to endeavour to do as proposed in my letter; I did not abstain from laying the information from any disrespect to the service, nor any feeling of resentment at the prosecution against myself; had the money been paid to Captain Battye, it would not have been passed through my hands unless under a written order from Rorison; it was not in my line of duty to receive money for payments to troopers or other persons.

C. LAWRENCE.

Kenneth Price, Esq., managing clerk in Mr. Wadeson's office, states:—I gave much attention throughout to the case of Lawrence; I had frequent conversations with him about prosecuting Rorison; he was most anxious to do so; I urged upon him that if he initiated proceedings he would be liable to an action for malicious prosecution; Lawrence's letter of 28th March was written by my advice, to shew his willingness to assist in the matter.

SIR,

Having been favoured by you with a perusal of the Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into Sergeant-Major Lawrence's case, which seems to me to be very favourable to that officer, I take the liberty of asking you if it is the intention of the Government to reinstate him.

Having taken considerable interest in this case, and it having been at my instance you were kind enough to appoint the Commission, it may not be considered out of place for me to ask if you will oblige me with a copy of the Commissioner's Report, and Captain M'Leerie's letter thereon.

SIR,

In compliance with the request preferred in your letter of the 19th instant, I am directed to forward herewith, a copy of the Report of the Board appointed to inquire into the circumstances that led to the removal of Mr. Charles Lawrence from the situation of Sergeant-Major in the Western Road Patrol, and to inform you that the Colonial Secretary is

is not prepared at once to adopt the recommendation of the Board, but that, as soon as Parliament is prorogued, Mr. Cowper will give the matter full consideration.

2. I am desired further to state that the Inspector General of Police has remonstrated against Lawrence being forced again upon his department; and that, concurring as he does with Captain M'Lerie in his view of the case, the Colonial Secretary has great doubts whether he can consent to reinstate a man who, it is admitted, has been a party to great irregularities. That these irregularities, if not frauds, had been so long tolerated as to have become systematic, is no palliation, in Mr. Cowper's judgment, of Lawrence's connivance at them.

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th January last, wherein, with reference to my communication of the 24th December, 1861, respecting Mr. Charles Lawrence, who was removed from the situation of Sergeant-Major in the Western Road Patrol, you requested that Mr. Lawrence's case might be brought under the notice of the Colonial Secretary.

2. I have received instructions to apprise you, in reply, that Mr. Cowper has again referred to the Inspector General of Police, and finds that officer as strongly opposed as ever to the readmission of Lawrence into the Police—his opinion of Lawrence's merits being directly at variance with that of some other persons.

3. The Colonial Secretary's impression is, that in an interview which he had with you, you expressed a desire that Lawrence might be paid the salary during the time of his suspension. Captain M'Lerie does not consider Lawrence as entitled to this, but in deference to the strong opinions which have been expressed to Mr. Cowper in his favour, he is disposed to take an exception in his case, and to authorize this payment.

No. 13.

H. ROTTON, ESQ., M.P., to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

Blackdown,

Bathurst, 6 April, 1862.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, in due course, of your communication 62-856, of the 10th March instant, have reference to the case of Sergeant-Major Lawrence.

I beg to state that Mr. Cowper appears to have forgotten a portion of the conversation which transpired between him and myself. The request I made on behalf of Lawrence was not only that he should be paid his salary, but that, for the sake of establishing his character, he should be reinstated; but that as Captain M'Lerie appeared to be so much prejudiced, against him, he would feel uneasy in holding office under Captain M'Lerie, and intended immediately after his reinstatement to resign. Mr. Cowper remarked that Captain M'Lerie had strong opinions regarding Lawrence's conduct, and vehemently objected to having him in the Force again, but that if Lawrence would resign immediately after being reinstated, he thought there could be no objection to his being reappointed. Lawrence does not care so much for the pay—although that is an object of some importance to him—as he does for the re-establishment of his character. He is highly connected, his father was an attorney of considerable repute, and his two sisters are married to Officers—one to Colonel Skilly, and the other to Captain Brown, of the 12th Bombay Infantry; reports of his case may have reached them; he is therefore anxious for their sakes, as well as for his own and family's, to obtain a full vindication of his character.

I cannot help remarking that I think Lawrence has been very harshly treated up to the the present time. Captain M'Lerie was sent up to Bathurst to investigate charges made against Captain Battye, and it was in making such investigation Captain M'Lerie discovered what he supposed was a grave case against Lawrence. It is stated that it was explained to Captain M'Lerie that Lawrence had done nothing more than follow a practice which had previously obtained in the office, but notwithstanding that, he caused a warrant to be taken out against Lawrence, without first questioning him or asking any explanation from him, and the warrant was executed by one of his own subordinates, he was taken into custody when he was absent on duty, having at the time charge of a prisoner and a number of stolen cattle, being thereby submitted to all the indignity it was possible to heap upon him. Captain M'Lerie then suspended him, and placed him on his trial. He was committed, and subsequently tried at the Circuit Court at Bathurst, before Sir Alfred Stephen, C.J.; the Jury acquitted him without leaving the box, and the Judge publicly proclaimed that he left the Court without a stain upon his character. Notwithstanding this, Captain M'Lerie continued him in suspension, and afterwards insisted upon his prosecuting Trooper Rorison (who was a witness in the case against Lawrence) for perjury. Lawrence was advised by his attorneys not to do so, as in the event of the case against Rorison breaking down, and it has been subsequently shown that that result would have been almost certain (vide Report of Commissioners), he would render himself liable to an action. He therefore respectfully declined to undertake a prosecution against Rorison, but offered both to give and procure evidence (vide Lawrence's letter to Dr. Palmer). This was construed by Captain M'Lerie into a grave offence, and for which he procured Lawrence's dismissal, at the same time depriving him of all his arrears of pay and allowances, and all the advantages he was entitled to under the Police Superannuation Act; and, worse than all, blasting the character of an innocent man.

These circumstances having come to my knowledge, I considered it my duty to seek redress for Lawrence, and intended to have moved in the Assembly for a Select Committee to inquire into and report upon the case; but before doing so, thought it would be more courteous in the first instance to appeal in his behalf to the Government. I accordingly had an interview with Mr. Cowper, who consented to appoint a Commission to investigate the case. The Commission was appointed and an investigation made in due form, and the Report, which is highly favourable to Lawrence, is long since in the hands of the Government. The Report casts some censure upon Lawrence, for the laxity which he adopted in reference to the signing the accounts and vouchers which had to pass through his hands, but admits that he only followed a practice which was prevalent in the department; but it must be borne in mind that Lawrence had been placed upon his trial and honorably acquitted of that charge. The charge which the Commission was more particularly appointed to investigate, and for which Lawrence was dismissed the service, the Report entirely exonerates him from. It also makes special mention of his services and previous good character, and concludes with a strong recommendation in his favour. Now, it certainly was understood between Mr. Cowper and myself, that all parties should abide the result of the investigation by the Commission. Had it been unfavourable to Lawrence, he would have had to submit to it, and I certainly should never have dreamt of taking the case into the Assembly, or troubling the Government any more about it; but as it is favourable, I have a right to expect that the Report should be acted upon by the Government, and justice be done to Lawrence; and I hope I may be forgiven for remarking, that I certainly shall consider that Mr. Cowper will not be acting in good faith towards me if he does not follow that course.

I hope I may be excused for having written at such length. I have done so with the view of bringing the whole case under the notice of Mr. Cowper, and under the impression that Mr. Cowper has not made himself fully acquainted with it, but has rather suffered himself to be prejudiced against Lawrence. I don't wish to say one word to the prejudice of Captain M'Lerie, but I submit that in this case he is scarcely the proper person for Mr. Cowper to take advice from; there is no doubt but that, in reference to Lawrence, he has acted both hastily and harshly—perhaps the result of his military education and ideas of military discipline—and it may be expecting too much from human nature to suppose that he could now view Lawrence with any degree of favour.

I should mention that Lawrence has been entirely out of employment ever since his first suspension; considering himself up to the present time in the service of the Government, he has not felt himself at liberty to accept any offers of employment from private persons until his case should be finally settled. He has, besides, been put to enormous expenses in defending himself from the charges preferred against him, and but for the assistance of friends, would now be entirely destitute, with a wife and family depending upon him. He has received no pay since his first suspension; there are, besides, other moneys due to him from the department, for which he has made applications, but his applications have been either refused or remain unanswered.

I have to request that you will be good enough to lay this letter before Mr. Cowper, and I solicit from him an attentive perusal of it, and an impartial consideration of Lawrence's case; and I now appeal to him for the last time for his final decision thereon; but before concluding, I desire to remind Mr. Cowper that there were no general charges against Lawrence. The charges were specific; for them he has been tried by two tribunals—one of Mr. Cowper's own creation—and of them honorably acquitted. Can there then remain any valid reasons for so long withholding from him the justice he is entitled to?

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, with reference to my communication of the 10th ultimo, respecting the case of Sergeant-Major Lawrence.

2. In reply, the Colonial Secretary desires me to inform you, that he has read and carefully considered your communication, but must beg to differ with you altogether in the view you take of Lawrence's case, of which it appears to him, Captain M'Lerie's statement is the more correct. With reference to the Report of the Board, Captain M'Lerie remarks thus:—"Without reference to the moral evidence of collusion (most systematic and complete) between Lawrence and the trooper Rorison, to defraud the Government, and yet escape the consequences of the crime—to the assumption of inimical feeling between them, to blind justice—to the discrepancies which their depositions and subsequent statements exhibit—I pass at once to the acknowledged fact (acknowledged by Lawrence himself) that he filled up a voucher, purporting to be for forage supplied to patrol horses, which was not supplied; and that he witnessed Trooper Rorison forge the innkeeper Cheshier's name to this voucher, with a view to the payment of the amount therein included being obtained from Mr. Superintendent Battye; thus are fraud and forgery combined; fraud, as regards the filling in the document with false and excessive quantities (the act of Lawrence); forgery, the affixing a signature, presumptively John Cheshier's, that of Rorison. To all this (not simple irregularity, but absolute crime) is urged by the Board the weak plea that, to a certain extent, 'irregularity' in such matters had obtained in the Superintendent's office."

3. You state that the Colonial Secretary appears to have forgotten a portion of the conversation which took place between him and yourself, on the subject of Lawrence's being reinstated in the Western Patrol. Mr. Cowper cannot admit that he has forgotten any part of his communication with you, and according to his recollection, he distinctly declined to entertain the proposal to reinstate Lawrence, with the understanding that he would resign immediately afterwards. The Colonial Secretary objected, because he was not willing to do anything which would imply that, in his opinion, Lawrence had not been guilty of something more than irregularity; nor does Mr. Cowper admit that, in appointing the Board, he was prepared to adopt implicitly their recommendation, whatever it might be. It was suggested by you that, if opportunity were afforded by inquiry on the spot, Lawrence could exculpate himself from the charge of having acted improperly; but the Board have reported that the charge is practically sustained; and if such delinquencies as those of which Lawrence is proved to have been guilty, are to be justified or palliated on the ground that others have acted in a similar way without being convicted or punished, the Colonial Secretary fears there is no crime that would be dealt with as it deserves.

4. Your comments upon Captain M'Lerie are, in Mr. Cowper's judgment, wholly undeserved; and the allusion to that gentleman's military career might, he conceives, have been spared. If Captain M'Lerie were to reply to your remarks in a similar style of argument, the Colonial Secretary is sure that you would feel that you were not very courteously treated.

5. I am desired to add, that Lawrence has, so far as Mr. Cowper can form an opinion, not been in any way harshly dealt with.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

MR. CHARLES PHILLIPS LAWRENCE.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 5th of August last, "to inquire into and report upon the allegations contained in the Petition of Charles Phillips Lawrence, with power to send for persons and papers," have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee having had the Petition of Charles Phillips Lawrence referred to them by your Honorable House, after a very patient investigation of his case, during which the witnesses named in the margin (whose evidence is appended) were examined, and various papers relating to the case were perused, the most important of which appear to your Committee to be the Judge's Notes of the evidence given at Lawrence's trial at the Circuit Court, at Bathurst, and His Honor's indorsement thereon, and the Report of a Commission subsequently appointed by the Government (consisting of the gentlemen named in the margin), to inquire into the charge for which Lawrence was dismissed, have come to the conclusion that the allegations contained in Lawrence's petition are generally sustained.

Your Committee are of opinion that Lawrence was guilty of a grave irregularity in having witnessed a signature not affixed by the person whose signature it purported to be. Your Committee cannot, of course, excuse such an act, but in this case it is clearly proved that Lawrence had no guilty intention; that he did it on the assurance of the trooper that it was correct, and with the view of facilitating the progress of the accounts through the office; that it was to some extent a practice prevailing in various Government departments, and that he had the example of his superior officer, whose signature was attached to the same document.

After the punishment the Petitioner has suffered, and considering his previous good character, your Committee recommend his being restored to a position equivalent to the one he previously held in the Public Service.

Your Committee cannot but strongly condemn the practice which, according to the evidence of Mr. Lawrence, has prevailed, of issuing blank warrants. Such a practice is not only illegal, but is an exercise of magisterial authority which nothing can justify.

| | | |
|-------------|--|---------------|
| Mr. COWPER, | | Mr. SADLEIR, |
| Mr. DRIVER, | | Mr. WINDEYER, |
| Mr. ROTTON, | | Mr. WISDOM. |

HENRY ROTTON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Hellyer appeared as Solicitor for the Petitioner.

Mr. Charles Phillips Lawrence called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are the Charles Phillips Lawrence who was formerly sergeant-major in the Western Mounted Patrol? I am.
2. You are the person who presented this Petition to the Assembly? I am.
3. You have also presented another Petition in which you have asked to be heard by 9 Mr. C. P.
Lawrence.
Sept., 1862. counsel, and as your advocate is now present, perhaps it will be better that you should be examined by him.
4. By Mr. Hellyer: When were you first appointed to the Western Patrol? In 1854.
5. How long did you remain in the patrol? I remained from 1854 until April, 1860.
6. Until April, 1860 or 1861? 1861.
7. Then you were dismissed, I believe? I was dismissed.
8. You were sergeant-major of the patrol? I was.
9. How long did you occupy that position previous to your dismissal? About five years.
10. Do you know what led to your dismissal? It was in consequence of my arrest my dismissal took place.
11. You were arrested upon a charge of forgery? Yes.
12. And tried? Yes.
13. At Bathurst? Yes.
14. Before Sir Alfred Stephen? Before Sir Alfred Stephen.
15. Do you know the handwriting of the Chief Justice? I do not.
16. Did you procure a copy of the Judge's notes? Yes, through my solicitor.
17. Is this a copy of the Judge's notes? (Handing a document to the witness.) Yes.
18. That indorsement upon it, do you believe that to be in the handwriting of the Chief Justice? Yes. (Mr. Hellyer read the paper. Vide Appendix A.)
19. After the trial, when you were acquitted, did you report yourself to the superintendent in charge? I reported myself to Dr. Palmer the next day.

- Mr. C. P. Lawrence.
- 9 Sept., 1862.
20. What did he tell you? He told me I was still suspended.
 21. Did any conversation occur between Dr. Palmer and yourself relative to Trooper Rorison? Frequently.
 22. Was any request made to you to prosecute him? Dr. Palmer advised me to prosecute him.
 23. By Mr. Windeyer: What did he advise you to prosecute Rorison for? For perjury.
 24. What was the precise accusation respecting which he wished you to prosecute him for perjury? He did not tell me.
 25. Did he say how he had committed perjury? I believe he had a conversation with my solicitor afterwards about it.
 26. By Mr. Hellyer: Did Dr. Palmer say what was the particular false statement? Rorison stated that he had never seen the voucher before he had seen it at Carcoar.
 27. Did you consult with your attorney as to the propriety of prosecuting Rorison? I did.
 28. With his advice did you write a letter to Dr. Palmer? I did.
 29. Is the letter in page 2 of the printed correspondence, dated Bathurst, 28th March, 1861 a copy of that letter? That is a copy. (Mr. Hellyer read the same.)
 30. In consequence of your refusal to prosecute were you dismissed the force? Yes.
 31. Were you paid your arrears of pay? No.
 32. What was the amount of pay due to you at the time of your dismissal? I considered that there was pay due from the date of my arrest up to the date of my dismissal.
 33. What did that amount to? I could not exactly tell you the amount.
 34. What was your pay? My pay as sergeant-major was 8s. 3d. a day, from the 20th December to the 8th March.
 35. By the Chairman: Was there any pay due to you previous to that? After my arrest; I was paid up to the 20th—the time of my arrest.
 36. By Mr. Hellyer: Do you know of any commission having been appointed afterwards to inquire into your case? Yes.
 37. Mr. Thomas Hawkins, Mr. Harold M'Lean, and Mr. William Chatfield were the parties? Yes.
 38. And a report was made by them? Yes.
 39. Has that been communicated to you in any way, or do you know it from the printed papers? I received a copy of it myself.
 40. Is the report at page 9, and the evidence on the two following pages, what you refer to? That is the one I refer to—"Enclosure in No. 8."
 41. Were you present during the inquiry? Yes.
 42. Were the witnesses named there examined? Yes, these are the witnesses who were examined.
 43. Was there anything more due to you at the time of your dismissal? Yes, there was a small amount in my books, but I never could get my books to copy them out, although I applied for them to Dr. Palmer the following day—after my acquittal.
 44. There was some amount due to you? Yes, a small amount.
 45. That amount is entered in your books, which have not been returned to you? Yes.
 46. Was there anything due to you for night money? Yes.
 47. Did you communicate with the Inspector General upon the subject? I did.
 48. Will you look at that letter and see whether that is a copy of the letter forwarded? (Handing a letter to the witness. Vide Appendix B.) It is.
 49. Is that a copy of a second letter? (Handing a letter to the witness. Vide Appendix C.) It is.
 50. Did you receive that in reply? (Handing to the witness—letter. Vide Appendix C.) Yes.
 51. Do you remember the amount due to you for night money? About £8 4s.
 52. Has that ever been paid to you? Never. (Mr. Hellyer read the several letters marked B, C, and D.)
 53. That memorandum from the Inspector General's Office refers to the superintendent;—who was the superintendent for the time being? Captain Battye; I applied to him, and he tells me he never received it.
 54. By the Chairman: That money you did not receive? No; Captain Battye says it has been disallowed.
 55. By Mr. Hellyer: You formerly, I believe, served at the Cape of Good Hope, did you not? Yes.
 56. Were you attached to the 1st battalion of the Rifle Brigade? Yes.
 57. How long did you serve? I served very nearly two years at the Cape, and I then had my discharge.
 58. Did you receive a medal from the Queen for your services? I did; it was sent out to this Colony to me.
 59. Is that the letter and envelope that accompanied it. (Handing a letter to witness. Vide Appendix E.) It is.
 60. Can you say how soon after your suspension your office was filled? The following month after my arrest. My office as sergeant-major was not at once filled up, but a sergeant from Sydney was sent up, who took my place.
 61. Do you know his name? Sergeant Granger.
 62. Had he been in the force previously? Not in Bathurst.
 63. Do you know when he received his appointment? In January.
 64. When you were discharged by the Judge your position was filled up? Soon afterwards.
 65. Then you mean that in the first instance it was temporarily supplied—was he appointed sergeant-major? Yes.

66. By the Chairman: He was acting sergeant-major first of all, and then his appointment was confirmed? Yes, it was confirmed afterwards.

Mr. C. P.
Lawrence.

67. Are you not aware whether he was in the police force before? Only by hearsay; I have heard so; I do not know the man myself.

9 Sept., 1862.

68. It appears by the Judge's notes that you called at Chesher's? Yes.

69. Were you directed to do so by Captain Battye? Yes. I was not directed by Captain Battye to call at Chesher's, but I was directed to go to Mulgunnia, and that was the only route.

70. Was that direction in writing? Yes.

71. Is that it? (Handing a paper to witness. Vide Appendix F.) Yes.

72. Part of that is destroyed; can you supply the rest? I had to go to a place called Back Creek, to Kaloolah Creek, and to Mulgunnia, in the caves at the back, in search of some persons who had escaped from Campbelltown.

73. Is this the handwriting of Captain Battye? Yes.

74. That is the customary order for the discharge of duty? Yes.

75. With reference to the voucher marked A printed at page 4, before you signed that voucher —? Before I witnessed it.

76. Before you witnessed that voucher did Rorison tell you that he had the authority of Chesher to sign it? Most distinctly, before the clerk.

77. Before Day? Before Wiley; I do not think anyone else was present. I might be mistaken; I know Trooper Day was outside the door.

78. Before you witnessed that signature did Rorison give the voucher printed at page 11? That was given me the night before at my own house, in the presence of Sergeant Price and Trooper Day.

79. Rorison was absent from the barracks on the days mentioned in the voucher? That I did not know at the time; I could not tell whether he was absent. Since then I have referred, and I find he was.

80. During the time he was absent from the barracks would the forage be drawn from the contractor? No.

81. The forage supplied would be absolutely necessary for his horse? Yes.

82. Had you any interest in that document? Not the slightest—I considered it a matter of duty on my part to make out the voucher, the man bringing me a written statement that he had paid the money.

83. Look at the foot of the first certificate—"I hereby authorize the amount of the above account to be paid on my behalf to Captain Battye"—could you have received that money? I could not; it was impossible I could have received it—Rorison at this time had not got the publican's receipts, and he was distinctly told by me to bring these receipts to Captain Battye.

84. Is it not necessary to send the vouchers in the first instance to the Inspector General, before the money is paid to the commandant for the time being? Yes.

85. The money still being then in the possession of the officer in command of the patrol until the receipts of the publicans or parties supplying stores, would it come away from the hands of the Government? No; Captain Battye would not pay it unless he had the publican's receipts.

86. By the Chairman: Has that money been ever paid to anyone? Not that I am aware.

87. Not even to Rorison? Not that I am aware.

88. After your acquittal, was your feeling friendly towards Rorison? No, not very.

89. Do you mean not at all? Decidedly not.

90. I believe you were restrained from following him that night? Yes.

91. Had you any communication with him before the sitting of the commission of which Mr. Hawkins was a member? One day he met me in the street in Bathurst; I was just turning round the corner in William-street, and he said "I hear you are going to bring that case of yours before the Council." I said "Yes, a gentleman is going to do what he can for me below."

92. Did you consider yourself badly used by him? I did, grossly used—I did this out of kindness.

93. You could have no interest in the matter? None whatever.

94. Then the hostile feeling between you was not assumed for any purpose? No purpose on my part; I have been grossly abused by the same man since in Bathurst.

95. Did you ever attempt to defraud the Government in any way with reference to the vouchers? Not that ever I knew of in my life.

96. Did you forge Chesher's name? No.

97. Have you yourself, at the request of Captain Battye or of any person else, signed your name as a witness for vouchers that have been sent in for payment? I have, frequently.

98. Do you know any vouchers so signed? Yes, they have been signed by Captain Battye himself and every man in the force.

99. Will you name any instances where you have signed them yourself, or have known them to have been signed by others? Almost without exception it has been done. Every publican around Bathurst has done it.

100. It was a general thing? I have seen Captain Battye do it frequently. I have witnessed as many as fifty of a morning; they used to accumulate, and I would sit down and sign them on Sunday morning.

101. The signing was merely that the money might be transferred from the Treasury to the commandant? Yes, or to the person to whom it was owing.

102. They were always vouchers for what you knew had been supplied? Yes.

103. By the Chairman: Are you aware of any vouchers having been signed in blank? I have

Mr. C. P. Lawrence. have known abstracts to be signed in blank—pay abstracts—in fact it is an invariable course; it must be done in some cases.

- 9 Sept., 1862. 104. By Mr. Hellyer: They must be signed before the money can be obtained? Yes.
105. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you not sign your pay lists before receiving your pay? Yes.
106. By Mr. Windeyer: Unless this is done delays occur in sending in abstracts of payment? Yes, the pay might be kept back a couple of months.
107. Sometimes you cannot find your men at the time? The men may be a hundred miles from one another.
108. By the Chairman: With regard to signing abstracts in blank—do you know if Captain Battye, when in charge of the Western Mounted Patrol, took blank vouchers with him when travelling, and got publicans to sign them; afterwards filling them up when he returned home? Yes, that was the plan generally adopted. I sometimes carried vouchers with me, sometimes I did not. The publican's bill would be attached to the voucher, and the voucher would be filled in from the bill when I got to the office; the voucher itself was signed in blank.
109. By Mr. Hellyer: When you were out on duty were you supplied with money to pay for your forage? No.
110. You were bound to obtain credit in this way? Frequently.
111. The witnessing you have referred to was done by you to facilitate payment to the parties who had supplied the forage? Yes.
112. And the witnessing this voucher for Rorison was with the same view? That was all; I distinctly understood that he had paid the money; I had no doubt about it at all.
113. By the Chairman: Are you not aware that many of the publicans will not charge the police with their expenses when they stay at their houses? Very few; I never found one yet but charged me.
114. You do not know of instances? I do not; I know a circular was put into my hands after my arrest, asking the publicans if they were willing to supply the police without charging, and to send their names; however, I do not think there were many who did so.
115. By Mr. Hellyer: Do you know a person named M'Donald? I do.
116. Where was he residing? On the Abererombie, near the Wyrong Mountain.
117. When in the discharge of your duty, searching for prisoners, did your horse knock up near his place? Yes.
118. Had you received any directions from Captain Battye to replace or to purchase horses in such cases? Captain Battye told me to do so, and in one or two instances I have done so. I have bought ten or twelve horses; in some cases under a written authority from Captain Battye.
119. Did you buy a brown colt from Mr. M'Donald, on the 30th February, 1860? Yes.
120. Was that horse recognized as a troop horse? He was; he was brought home to barracks.
121. Was forage drawn for him? He was put on the books, and forage was drawn for him.
122. Was he subsequently lent to Mr. Cole, of the Colonial Architect's Office, by Captain Battye? Yes.
123. That horse was subsequently exchanged, I believe? He knocked up with Mr. Cole somewhere between Wellington and Stony Creek.
124. Where he was exchanged with Mr. Hughes for another horse? Yes; Captain Battye advised that he should be exchanged for a grey horse.
125. That horse died subsequently? It died the very first journey—the next day.
126. Were you required to supply any certificate of its death? Yes.
127. Did you report its death at head quarters? Not only so, but I took a veterinary surgeon with me, who saw the horse and gave Captain Battye a certificate.
128. A few days before your trial at Bathurst, did you see Mr. M'Donald? Yes.
129. Had you any conversation with him? Yes.
130. Did he show you a letter? Yes.
131. From whom? Captain M'Lerie.
132. What was the purport of that letter? To prosecute me for obtaining a horse under false pretences.
133. Do you know whether the report and certificate of the horse's death had been forwarded to the Inspector General? I have no idea; it was given to Captain Battye for that direct purpose.
134. By Mr. Driver: By whom? By myself; my own certificate, and one from the veterinary surgeon.
135. Were you paid for that horse? Never.
136. By Mr. Hellyer: What sum did you pay for it? £20.
137. This was urged upon you at the time you were preparing for your defence? This was the Saturday previous to the Monday when my trial came on.
138. By Mr. Wisdom: Have you a receipt for the payment of that? Yes.
139. By Mr. Hellyer: Is that the receipt (handing a paper to the witness)? Yes.
140. By the Chairman: Did you see the letter Mr. M'Donald told you he had received from Captain M'Lerie? Yes, after he told me.
141. Do you know that it was from Captain M'Lerie? Yes.
142. Did it state the grounds upon which the advice was given? I think it did; that Captain Battye had denied having ever given me authority to purchase a horse; that he had said he had never done such a thing while I was in the force.
143. And you had purchased many? Yes.
144. By the Chairman: That horse had been used for a troop horse? Yes.
145. Upon whose authority was it exchanged for the other horse that died? Mr. Coles took up

- up the other horse, and he knocked up between Wellington and Stony Creek; he remained there three or four weeks, and was then brought down in a very low condition. Mr. Hughes looked at him and thought he would do better for a draft than for a saddle horse, and exchanged him for a grey horse.
146. Who gave the authority for that exchange? Captain Battye.
147. By Mr. Driver: Was any person present? I was present, and Mr. John Hughes, the contractor.
148. By Mr. Hellyer: I believe you bought five horses for the Government, did you not? Yes.
149. All the horses have been paid for except this one? Yes.
150. By the Chairman: The other horses have been paid for by Government, through Captain Battye? Yes.
151. By Mr. Hellyer: Do you know whether there was any investigation before Dr. Palmer with reference to this horse? Yes, after my trial.
152. After you had paid for it? Yes.
153. By the Chairman: You have stated, in your Petition to the House, with reference to your trial at Bathurst, that the jury "pronounced a verdict of 'not guilty,' and the "Chief Justice, Sir Alfred Stephen, who tried the case, stated that your petitioner left the "dock without the slightest stain upon his character"—Is that the fact? Yes.
154. By Mr. Hellyer: His Honor did so state? Yes.
155. Was Dr. Palmer then present? He was.
156. By the Chairman: Has your dismissal from the service, affected you in a pecuniary way, besides the actual loss of your pay? It has affected me greatly.
157. By Mr. Hellyer: Will you state how? The expense I was obliged to incur was a great loss to me.
158. What had you to pay for your trial? Not a halfpenny under £250.
159. Have you not obtained any employment since? None.
160. Your father, I believe, is an attorney? He was; he is dead now.
161. You had some property? I had, and I have some at present.
162. Have you been compelled to sacrifice a portion of that? Yes, for one-fourth of its value.
163. Is that real property? Yes, in South Wales.
164. I believe you have some members of your family who are officers in Her Majesty's service at the present time? One brother-in-law, Colonel Skelly, is in India with his regiment; I have another brother-in-law, Lieutenant-Colonel Stroode; my own brother was Adjutant in the 12th, and died in the service.
165. Then you have a name and character to support? Yes.
166. These proceedings have been exceedingly injurious to you? Very much so.
167. By Mr. Driver: Where were you arrested? I was out on duty at the Abererombie.
168. At what distance from Bathurst? I was at a man named Dillon's place, who was a jockey, I think, in Sydney.
169. At what distance from Bathurst? Between sixty and seventy miles. We had sixty-seven head of cattle, and there were other two men with me —
170. By whom were you arrested? By a constable that went out with me; he had to come back to attend the Quarter Sessions at Bathurst.
171. You were arrested by one of your subordinates? He belonged to the foot police. I told him to be there to meet me, and said I would have the cattle there and the men too—
172. Was Bathurst your head quarters at this time? Yes.
173. By Mr. Hellyer: Were you handcuffed? No, they did not handcuff me.
174. By Mr. Driver: Was it known to the authorities at Bathurst that you were out on police duty? Yes, I had a warrant on a sworn information.
175. You were acting under a warrant at the time of your apprehension? Yes.
176. By the Chairman: Would you not, if you had remained in the police, have been entitled to some benefit arising from the superannuation fund? After a certain length of service.
177. Your dismissal deprived you of any benefit you might have had under that? Yes.
178. Supposing you had been incapacitated for service, and had been in a position to claim under that fund, what pension would you have been entitled to? It all remains, I imagine, with the Board; there is no fixed scale, I think.
179. By Mr. Wilson: If you were reinstated now, would the time during which you have been suspended count? No, I should imagine not. I never heard of such a case; of course I cannot tell.
180. By Mr. Cowper: What were you angry with Rorison for? For telling untruths, in the first place, to Mr. Beardmore at Careoar.
181. What untruth did he tell him? He told Mr. Beardmore that he had never seen the voucher in his life until he saw it in the office.
182. Did he sign Chesher's name in your presence? Yes.
183. And told you an untruth too? Yes, he told an untruth.
184. He told you that Chesher desired you to charge this money? Yes.
185. That was an untruth too? Yes. Chesher told me he never charged him anything.
186. By Mr. Driver: You did not know it to be an untruth at the time? No.
187. By Mr. Cowper: What did you think was the value of these certificates—did you look upon them as a mere matter of form; as a means of getting money from the Government, without reference to whether the service was performed for the Crown;—I allude to the statement made by you that vouchers were signed in blank and sent to the Government, without reference to the actual fact whether the service was supplied or not? I did not say that; I never intended to say that.

Mr. C. P.
Lawrence.

9 Sept., 1862.

188. In this particular case of Chesher the voucher was sent in without any charge having been made by the individual? That was found out afterwards.

189. Supposing Captain M'Lerie had not detected the fraud, the public would have been defrauded of this amount? Rorison would have been found out.

190. How would it have been found out if the fraud had not been detected by Captain M'Lerie? If there had been no inquiry made it might not have been, but I might have mentioned it to Mr. Chesher, and it would then have been found out.

191. Did I not understand you to say that it was a common practice in the service to make out these accounts, and to get certificates without reference to the supplies? Not without reference to the supplies; if people charge they expect to be paid.

192. When you signed these you believed the money to be due to the parties? Yes.

193. You are not aware that the practice was to send in fraudulent documents, and to get Captain Battye's signature to them? No.

194. By Mr. Windeyer: You trusted the officers and men under your control, in their statements that they had spent these amounts? My object in getting this statement from Rorison was that I might make out my vouchers, as he had not the publican's bill.

195. By Mr. Hellyer: He must produce the bills before he could be paid? Yes, I told him most distinctly that he must get them.

196. By Mr. Wisdom: At the time he signed Chesher's name, he did not produce any bill? No, he must have produced the publican's bill before the account would have been finally paid.

197. By Mr. Driver: Although the amount might have been received from the office of the Inspector General, it could not have been received by him without the publican's signature? No, not without he got a receipt from the publican.

198. By Mr. Sadleir: Look at No. 1—a letter signed John M'Lerie, the Inspector General of Police. He says, the ends of justice are defeated because you declined to prosecute this man Rorison? He does.

199. If you turn to another document, at page 9, paragraph 9, it is stated that your legal adviser told you that if you did prosecute Rorison you might be subject to serious personal consequences;—was that the reason you did not prosecute? Yes.

200. Was there any other reason assigned for your being dismissed than your refusal to prosecute this man? No other.

201. By Mr. Driver: Then you were merely suspended, in the first instance? Yes, from duty.

202. And upon declining to prosecute, you were dismissed? Yes.

203. You acted in that matter under the advice of your solicitor, Mr. Wadson, did you not? Yes.

204. You stated that there was a sum of £8 4s. due to you, which was never paid? Yes.

205. Has it never been paid up to the present time? Never.

206. What was the other amount? Letter money, for stamps; that is in the books.

207. Have you ever applied for permission to refer to the books? I applied for the books to Dr. Palmer.

208. He declined to let you have them? He would not let me have them.

209. Did you apply by letter or verbally? Verbally.

210. These books, if produced, would enable you to make out your accounts in full? For the letter money it would.

211. Besides the letter money, and this sum of £8 4s., is there any other sum due to you by the Government? The £8 4s. is for night money.

212. Is there any arrears of pay? I was paid up to the date of my arrest—the 28th December—and I was kept under arrest until the 16th April.

213. During the whole of that time you were kept without pay? Without pay.

214. When did you say the sergeant was sent up from Sydney? In January.

215. That was before your trial? Yes; I was not tried till March.

216. Shortly after your arrest and before your trial? Yes.

217. How soon after was he appointed? Soon after my dismissal.

218. By Mr. Wisdom: Did anyone tell you that you would not be put to any expense in prosecuting Rorison for perjury? When I was first asked by Dr. Palmer, I was under the impression that I should have to pay the whole expenses, but afterwards he told me it would cost me nothing; he said if I would go up to Mr. Naylor he would get him to draw out the information, which would cost me nothing. This was on the cricket-ground. I said, "If my solicitor will advise me to take that course, I will do it." I then went to Mr. Wadson, who drew out the letter in which I declined.

219. By Mr. Windeyer: You were not given to understand that if the prosecution failed, and an action were afterwards brought against you, that you would be indemnified for that? No.

220. By Mr. Wisdom: It was the fear of anything of that kind that induced you not to prosecute? Yes.

221. Were you ever in the habit of paying money on the representation of troopers, without getting any bills? No.

222. You never paid in any case? I have paid publicans when I have been out.

223. When a trooper has been out on duty, and has represented that he has paid money to a publican, have you paid the trooper without having some guarantee that it was actually paid? Never.

224. Therefore, in this case of Rorison, he would not have been paid unless he had produced something? No, he could not have got the money unless he had the publican's bills.

225. By Mr. Windeyer: You stated something about Captain M'Lerie suggesting you should be prosecuted for obtaining a horse under false pretences? Yes.

226. When was that suggestion made? A little previous to the time that I saw Mr. M'Donald. Mr. C. P. Lawrence.
227. At what time with reference to your trial? On the Saturday previous to my being tried on the Monday. 9 Sept., 1862.
228. Will you state briefly the circumstances under which such suggestion arose with regard to this horse? Mr. M'Donald came to my house late at night, and he told me that the Government repudiated all idea as to their paying for the horse. I said, "I suppose if they will not pay I must." He said, "Yes, you will have to do so." I almost forget the exact words he made use of; but at the time I made a written statement of the whole affair to Dr. Palmer. The case was investigated by Dr. Palmer in Court.
229. By Mr. Driver: With reference to this horse? Yes.
230. What was the result? I never heard—I never could hear.
231. By Mr. Windeyer: What was the nature of the investigation? I do not know for what reason the investigation was made; I suppose to see whether a case could be brought against me.
232. Were you present when the investigation took place? I was sworn.
233. Was there any information laid? I believe the investigation was in consequence of instructions Dr. Palmer received from Sydney. Dr. Palmer said to me, "I have received instructions from Sydney to investigate this case of M'Donald's, respecting the horse."
234. By Mr. Hellyer: Was this after you had paid for him? Yes.
235. By Mr. Windeyer: Was this a proceeding in open Court? Yes, it was in Dr. Palmer's room in the Police Office.
236. By the Chairman: In his own room? In the room where the police business is generally conducted.
237. Who gave evidence besides yourself? Captain Battye.
238. By Mr. Sadleir: Was any information read to you, or a charge against you from any one? None whatever.
239. By Mr. Driver: Were the public admitted? It was in the afternoon, after the ordinary business was over.
240. Were you sworn? Yes, both Captain Battye and myself were sworn.
241. By the Chairman: You have not stated the amount due to you; you say you cannot say the exact amount;—can you give somewhere near the amount that is actually due to you from the Government? Altogether?—I consider that I ought to be paid for the horse, for one thing—
242. By Mr. Windeyer: The case of the horse I understand to be this:—you were in the habit, if a horse were wanted in a case of emergency, of buying a horse? Yes.
243. You had done so in former cases? Yes.
244. You bought this in consequence of another horse knocking up? Yes.
245. It was used by Government for Government purposes? Yes.
246. Afterwards the Government would not adopt the horse, and you had to pay for it? Yes.
247. By Mr. Wisdom: This voucher for things supplied by Cheshier is certified to by Captain Battye? Yes.
248. Did Captain Battye certify to that? Yes, when he came back from Hartley; he was not there at the time.
249. What inquiry did Captain Battye make before he certified to it? He asked me what it was, and I said it was an amount that Rorison had paid.
250. Before he signed did he ask for any bill from Cheshier? No; he knew that I had this account of Rorison for £2 2s., and there was 6s. besides.
251. By Mr. Windeyer: You have stated that the signing of blank forms was frequent;—have you ever known forms of more importance than these, attesting the expenditure of money, to have been signed in blank? Yes, frequently.
252. For instance, what kind have you known? Warrants, arresting warrants and search warrants; I always took two or three when I was in the bush, and I filled them up any way that was necessary. I found them exceedingly useful.
253. Were they signed by Captain Battye? Yes.
254. Have you got any such documents? I have one here. (The witness produced the same.) They are very useful to the police.
255. This is a search warrant signed in blank by Captain Battye? Yes; I used always to take some with me.
256. Do you not know that it is illegal to issue such warrants? I know that they are of great value to the police in the bush; if I received information I could follow it up at once.
257. However, you got them from Captain Battye? Yes, and I filled them up frequently.
258. By Mr. Wisdom: It appears that Captain Battye signed this voucher merely upon your representation, without any bill being produced? Yes.
259. He just did what you did in the case of Rorison? Yes.
260. You accepted Rorison's representation, and Captain Battye accepted yours? Yes, I took Rorison's written statement.
261. Captain Battye had no other means of knowing whether this money was paid or not, except from what you stated to him? No, unless he had written to Cheshier.
262. By Mr. Driver: He had in some measure to trust to you, as you had in some measure to trust to Rorison? Yes.
263. By Mr. Hellyer: As sergeant-major had you been engaged in the arrest of criminals and defaulters? Yes, my principal duty consisted in being away in the bush.
264. You were often in circumstances of peril? Yes, many times; sometimes I have been fired at.

- Mr. C. P. Lawrence. 265. You never thought it necessary to run away? No.
- 9 Sept., 1862. 266. By the Chairman: I wish to know near about the amount due to you for arrears of pay, &c., exclusive of the horse? About £80.
267. Do you calculate up to the time of your dismissal? No, it was more than that then—about £90.
268. How long is it since your dismissal? I was dismissed on the 16th April, 1861.
269. Then from that time up to the present you have not been in any other service? None whatever.
270. You have been making solicitations to the Government for your reinstatement? Yes.
271. Why have you not taken any other service or engaged in any other occupation to obtain a living? Because I considered when that investigation took place that it would result in my reinstatement.
272. You thought it would not be proper for you to enter into any other employment until the case should be finally decided? Yes.

APPENDIX.

A.

CORAM STEPHEN, C.J.

Friday, 8 March, 1861.

Charles Lawrence—1st. Forging an acquittance and receipt for money. 2nd. Uttering same.

John Merrin:—Took prisoner on a warrant, on 20th December, at the Abercrombie Rooms.Cross-examined:—He was then on duty there.

Edward M. Battye:—Commanding Mounted Police in October last, and long previously; on 22nd October sent this paper to the Inspector General, at Sydney; I had previously seen it on my table without this certificate now here, but all of it was there when I forwarded it to Sydney; excepting the signatures John Cheshier and my own signature, all the paper is in writing of the prisoner; don't know whose writing is this, the name Cheshier; on finding this paper, without the certificate, I spoke to prisoner, who was then sergeant-major of the force, and asked who was the trooper, and "why was he at Cheshier's so long?" and, on his explanation, I told him to add a certificate, and he did so; I then signed the paper and sent it down. (The paper is a voucher for supplies to a trooper by John Cheshier.) The prisoner had previously informed me that Trooper Rorison had begged him to make out the account for him, and that he had done so accordingly; prisoner had been accustomed to make out similar papers; the result of this voucher in the ordinary course would have been a payment by the Inspector General into the Bank of New South Wales to my account; it was returned to me by the Inspector General in a few days for investigation.

Letter of Battye of 22 Oct., '60.

Cross-examined:—Can't recollect prisoner's exact words; I asked him who the trooper was, and what was the service; he told me that it was Trooper Rorison, and that he had been supplied when he was in search for cattle-stealers; I will not swear that he said it was at Cheshier's for six days; both prisoner and Rorison told me, when the voucher was returned to me, that the forage, &c., was only for two nights at Cheshier's, and the rest at other places; it was sent back to me for investigation; I said, then I should require receipts from the persons there; it was Rorison who told me so, in plaintiff's presence; can't say if I had any conversation with either before the voucher came back; I might or might not; I should not have been likely to speak to Rorison, but to the prisoner; if the money had been paid in to my account, it would, in the ordinary course, have been sent up by me to Cheshier; I have known several instances of small sums paid by troopers being included in one large sum and voucher, in order to save a multiplicity of vouchers. "Has it or not been the habit for troopers to sign the name of the party supplying, to similar vouchers?" [Objected to—but I receive it.] It has not been ordinarily done to my knowledge; I have detected an instance of it subsequently to this case. "Has the person so acting ever been prosecuted for it?" [Objected to—I reject this.] "Have you not known two or three instances—Costello and Nightingale?" [Admitted, after objection.] I have not known those instances—nor Foster, nor Oliver; I don't recollect any instance where any of those persons had been paid in vouchers not signed by themselves; I don't, of my own knowledge, know that they personally signed; I don't believe that the signatures John Cheshier are in the prisoner's handwriting; this prosecution is directed by Government; the prisoner has been in the troop seven or eight years, six years as sergeant-major; nothing could be better than his conduct; he has been always a zealous officer; according to the diary for the troop, Rorison was in fact absent on the six nights mentioned on duty; he is in attendance; sometimes troopers pay for themselves, and then put in all the items in one voucher; but in every case the receipt of the publican (party supplying) is requisite before the Government pays; Rorison is still in the force, then and still at Carcoar; the prisoner when the voucher came back was out on duty; (it was sent back about the 5th or 6th November, and I returned it with explanations, about a week following;) in the course of it he would go near Cheshier's—in that neighbourhood; I have occasionally given prisoner money to pay parties.

Costello, Nightingale, Foster, Oliver.

Letter of 12 Nov., '60.

Re-examined:—"If the money had been paid in to your account, would the invariable course have been to send the money to Cheshier?" [Allowed, after objection.] If the voucher had been returned for inquiry, and I had found that only two nights were due to Cheshier, and that the other four had been paid for by Rorison, I should have given the money to Rorison; I have in many instances paid Lawrence moneys due to him for sums paid by himself.

John Cheshier, publican at Long Swamp, 30 miles from Bathurst and 20 from Carcoar:—Remember Trooper Rorison stopping two nights last year, one night on two occasions, at my house; he did not pay anything, nor did I charge any; I had a conversation with him before he went; I know of no other publican of this name; these signatures are none of them mine; I was never asked to make a charge; in November, 1860 (about the end of the month), the prisoner called on me and asked if Rorison had been at my house, and I told him that he had—two nights; prisoner then said, "How much was it; and was it paid?" I said that I had made no charge; prisoner said, "You may as well make a charge, and I will pay for it now"; I refused; the Police Magistrate at Carcoar had been with me previously, and I had told him the same; I told the prisoner so, and that I could not then send in a charge.

William Rorison:—I was stationed at Campbell's River in June, and was removed to Carcoar in July; I know Cheshier's public-house; stopped there a night on two occasions; he made me no charge, and I paid him nothing; I sent in a return to the prisoner of my having been there those two nights; this is it; this document (the forged voucher) was seen first by me at the Police Office at Carcoar. [Cross-examined as to whether he told the Police Magistrate that he never had seen it before.] After that I had conversation with prisoner, and told him what had occurred at Police Office, and that I had paid paid nothing to Chesher; "Oh," says he, "it's all bosh; I put into one voucher the six nights that you were down the Lachlan"; I know nothing of this voucher whatever.

Cross-examined.—I have received a college education; have been teacher once in a school; had no conversation with any of the troopers before prisoner's committal; I have since, with several; never told Day that I had paid Chesher, nor asked him to make out my account for six nights; the man can't write; I did pay at the four other places; I complained that the Race Committee had not paid me for my expenses on two of those four nights; the prisoner told me that if I would send in my account he would get the money for me; saw him the next day making out a voucher, in duplicate, for washing blankets; not any others; I have told prisoner that I had witnessed a dozen vouchers which I had never seen signed; I have said that I knew who signed the name Chesher; I know Evenden; never told him that I was present when this voucher was made out, but left the office before it was signed; I saw O'Rourke come out with the prisoner from the office just after I had seen the duplicate voucher for the blankets; the table where the prisoner had been writing was covered with papers; I signed the blanket voucher in four places in prisoner's presence; I have made a statement to Captain Battye; in it I said that the dates in the voucher were correct; "that the expenses were correct"; I so concluded; and that I had been at the six places, and that the whole were placed in one voucher, and I had paid for four of the nights, and not drawn forage for them; I had seen the voucher then; the Police Magistrate had shown it to me; I thought that that was the reason why the voucher was so drawn up; what I said to Captain Battye was from memory, and I believe it to be correct, [Read—It is in Captain Battye's handwriting]; What I understood from Chesher was that he would not make any charge for me, but I always expected that he would charge for my horse; I told the same thing to the prisoner before I saw the voucher; it was when we were on the Lachlan; I told him the places stopped at, and that I had paid at the four other places; don't remember that I ever told prisoner that I had paid Chesher for my horse; I said that he had not been paid; I gave to the prisoner this paper (produced by you) when he made out the voucher about the blankets [Read]; I explained that I had paid for four of the nights and had not paid for the other two; it was that he might make out a voucher for me, and enable me to get back the money which I had paid.

Re-examined.—I never saw the voucher till I saw it at Carcoar.

At my suggestion the case for the Crown closing here, the prisoner was here acquitted. (It seems to me that all idea of fraudulent intent is excluded by the facts.)

Mr. C. P. Lawrence.

9 Sept., 1862.

ENDORSEMENT.

It appeared to me clearly upon the evidence adduced that the charge against this prisoner wholly failed; because whatever the irregularity, his conduct could not on such testimony be attributed to fraud—or intention to defraud—which was the essence of the accusation against him. And of this opinion I still remain.

ALFRED STEPHEN.

B.

Bathurst, 19 March, 1862.

Sir,

Between the month of May, 1859, and the month of April, 1860, I forwarded to you, through Captain Battye, vouchers for night and escort money due to me as Sergeant-Major of the Western Patrol, amounting to the sum of eight pounds and four shillings, I have the honor to request that you will inform me, at your earliest convenience, whether that sum, or any other sum on the above account, has been paid by the Government to any person on my behalf.

The vouchers included amounts due to others serving in the Mounted Patrol at the same time, for the same description of services.

I have, &c.,

C. P. LAWRENCE.

To the Inspector General of Police,
Sydney.

C.

Bathurst, 27 March, 1862.

Sir,

On the 19th March instant, I had the honor to forward to you a letter, a copy whereof I enclose.

Having received no reply, I beg that you will have the kindness to inform me whether that letter has been received by you, and if so, that an answer may be forwarded to me.

I have, &c.,

C. P. LAWRENCE.

To the Inspector General of Police,
Sydney.

Police Department of New South Wales,
Account Branch,
Sydney, 1 April, 1862.

MEMO:—Mr. Charles Lawrence, in answer to his letters of date 19th and 27th ultimo, is hereby informed that the vouchers for night and escort allowances between May, 1859, and April, 1860, have long ago passed this office, and the particulars he requires cannot therefore be furnished; and Mr. Lawrence himself must be aware that all payments on account of the Western Patrol were paid through the Superintendent.

Mr. Charles Lawrence,
Bathurst.

F. M. MARTIN,
(For the Inspector General of Police.)

Mr. C. P.
Lawrence.

9 Sept., 1862.

Charles Lawrence,

I am directed by Secretary Major-General Peel to transmit to you the accompanying medal granted by the Queen for service in the Kafir Wars.

You are requested to acknowledge the receipt of the same.

E.

War Office, 18 May, 1868.

I am, &c.,
H. D. STORKS,
Late 1st Battalion Rifle Brigade.

MEMO:—Sergeant-Major Lawrence and a trooper will start to-morrow for Mulgunnia, and the following day visits the gold fields, down by Stapleton's, and at the back of the caves, in search of the convicts Foley and the three others who have lately escaped, taking with him an accurate description of the men, it being * * * * * these men may be traced and re-captured. The horses are not to be ridden fast.

E. M. B., Captain.

25 June, 1860.

Sergeant Middleton is gone to Tuena.

Thomas J. Hawkins, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

T.J.Hawkins, 273. By the Chairman: You were the Chairman of a Board which I believe was appointed Esq., J.P. by Government to investigate the case with reference to Sergeant-Major Lawrence? I was.

9 Sept., 1862. 274. Were there any particular instructions given with reference to the course of the inquiry? There were.

275. Will you be kind enough to state what they were? They were conveyed in a letter which unfortunately I have not brought with me.

276. From whom did you receive that letter? From Mr. Cowper.

277. Was it signed by the Under Secretary? I think it was.

278. Will you look at page 8 of the printed correspondence, at a letter No. 7, signed Wm. Elyard—is that the letter you received? I believe that to be a copy of the letter I received.

279. The instructions, in fact, were to inquire into the charges against Lawrence only with reference to his refusal to prosecute Rorison? I think so, "which could not be done without an information from Lawrence, who evaded taking any steps in the matter, and was in consequence removed from the service."

280. There is a printed copy of the report of that Commission, and I see by that report that you did in some degree inquire into other charges against him—charges for which he had been previously acquitted at the Assizes? It was mixed up with our inquiry, for we could not very well separate the cases; one seemed to be so blended with the other that it was almost impossible entirely to separate them.

281. Did you consider that that had anything to do with his dismissal? No, we considered that what we had particularly to inquire into was his refusal to lay an information against Rorison.

282. You have seen this printed report—Enclosure No. 8? Yes.

283. Is that a correct copy of the report you sent in? I believe it is; I have read it over, and I think it is.

284. As regards the matter that you were particularly appointed to inquire into, I see by the report that you have exonerated Lawrence entirely from any blame—I mean with reference to his refusal to prosecute Rorison? We certainly did think he was not the man to initiate the proceedings. He appeared to be the person to give evidence, and by his letter to Dr. Palmer he seemed to be quite ready to do so.

285. Will you read the 9th paragraph of that report? (The witness read the same.)

286. Was that the concurrent opinion of the Board? It was the unanimous opinion of the Board; there was no difference of opinion on the matter at all.

287. Upon a review of the whole case, you say in the 10th paragraph of the report, "Under all the circumstances, and having in view the former good character of Lawrence, together with the long period and activity of his service, we beg to recommend his case to the favourable reconsideration of the Government"? Yes.

288. By Mr. Hellyer: Do you remember Dr. Palmer speaking of Lawrence's character before the commission? Yes, he did.

289. Did he not give him a good character for past services, and also express a high opinion of him still, notwithstanding all? Yes, notwithstanding all. Dr. Palmer seemed afterwards to have altered his opinion when he had in fact heard more of the case; but I am of opinion that he would not have used the words "following bad advice" if he had known from whom the advice had come.

290. Will you read the second paragraph of Dr. Palmer's evidence, at page 10? "When I say that Lawrence became unwilling to assist in the prosecution, I mean that he declined to lay the information; he might have suggested that the chief constable, Shearman, should file the information, and that he would give evidence; I do not remember his having done so; previous to the occurrence referred to I have had charge of the patrol; I always considered Lawrence a trustworthy and efficient officer; I had, and have still, a high opinion of him."

291. That was the evidence of Dr. Palmer, after the dismissal of the charge? Yes; he stated distinctly, notwithstanding all, that he had every confidence in Lawrence.

292. The commission were evidently of opinion that no advantage could have accrued to Lawrence by signing these vouchers? I think so.
293. It was an irregularity that had gained great ground in the police force? It was common in other branches to sign receipts before taking the money.
294. You find it necessary to report upon it, and that it was to a certain extent common? Yes, we all knew that it was the common practice.
295. That the mere signature attesting the voucher had nothing in it of fraud? It was done we believed for convenience, and not with the intention of fraud.
296. To expedite payment? Yes.
297. Has it not been necessary to do so to ensure the prompt furnishing of supplies? Yes, without putting parties to the inconvenience of waiting for their money.
298. Would not the police have suffered in their convenience by the refusal of parties to supply forage? Yes, they could not have demanded it if people had chosen to refuse.
299. By the Chairman: You have been a Magistrate for many years in the District of Bathurst? I have.
300. And have frequently sat on the Bathurst Bench? Yes.
301. During that time have you ever had any opportunity of judging of the efficiency of Lawrence as a police officer, and as to his general character? His character I believe, from all I know of him and I have always heard the man well spoken of. Great regret was generally expressed at the time of his dismissal, and still exists. I never heard any other feeling than that of regret expressed at his dismissal, for which I believe there was no occasion.
302. By Mr. Sadleir: Will you look at page 11, at the statement of Samuel Wadeson;—at the latter part of that statement he says, “I had great difficulty in inducing him not to prosecute”? Yes.
303. Does not that show that Lawrence was willing to prosecute, but that Mr. Wadeson would not allow him? It was stated that he advised him not.
304. He had great difficulty in preventing him? Yes, for fear of ulterior consequences. We believed, and Lawrence’s legal adviser believed, that a prosecution against Rorison would have failed—that there was not sufficient evidence to convict him. Our opinion was that if the Government thought they had a case against Rorison they might have commenced the prosecution.
305. Without risk of any injurious consequences to themselves? Yes, and Lawrence was willing to give evidence.
306. By Mr. Wisdom: Lawrence would have run a risk of having an action brought against him if he had failed? So we believed. We had nothing before us in the shape of a guarantee to Lawrence that he would be held harmless, nor did we know that any such guarantee had been given. I see Captain M’Lerie states in his letter that he considers we recommended Lawrence to favourable consideration on what he calls weak grounds—he having followed a practice common in the office, and practised by his superior officer. I am of opinion, in opposition to Captain M’Lerie, that they were anything but weak grounds, and so the Board thought.
307. On the Board was the present Superintendent of the Western Patrol? He is not the present Superintendent; he was Superintendent at that time; he is now at Campbelltown, Mr. Chatfield.
308. He knows a good deal of this matter? Yes, he is thoroughly conversant with the practice. There were two Government officers on the Board, and they both had a favourable opinion of the case, as well as myself.
309. By the Chairman: May I ask why the Board sent the report to Captain M’Lerie? I do not know; I believe Mr. Chatfield did that; I am not aware whether he sent it to Captain M’Lerie in the first instance, but I am informed he did.
310. It seems to have been sent to Captain M’Lerie before the Government had an opportunity of seeing it themselves, and that he sent it, with his own remarks on it, to the Government? The inquiry was held at Bathurst, and as I live about three miles from Bathurst, the report was left with Mr. Chatfield to forward it; but if I had thought at the time that it would have been sent to Captain M’Lerie, I should have taken care and forwarded it direct to the Colonial Secretary, from whom our instructions came. I suppose Captain M’Lerie would then have been put in possession of it afterwards.
311. Will you refer to letter No. 8, page 8? I see that letter.
312. Have you read that letter of Captain M’Lerie? Yes, I have.
313. Do you see that it is, to a great extent, contradictory of the report? He is of a different opinion from the Board.
314. By Mr. Hellyer: He did not hear the evidence? No, he had not an opportunity of knowing what we know.
315. By the Chairman: Captain M’Lerie was not present? He was not present; he did not see or hear the evidence given, and could not judge of the manner in which the witnesses gave their evidence. In fact he had not, in my opinion, the opportunity of forming a judgment that the Board had, and I think our opinion was better than his.
316. You are still of opinion that the judgment of the Board was correct, notwithstanding what Captain M’Lerie has said? Yes.
317. And that the evidence fully warranted your making that report? Yes.
318. By Mr. Wisdom: Was Captain Battye examined by the Board? No, he was not.
319. By the Chairman: Was he in Bathurst at the time? I do not think he was; I think Captain Battye at that time was under suspension; I think so, but am not certain.
320. By Mr. Driver: What was the date of your examination? The date of the letter is the 22nd November, 1861; it might have been a day or two previous to that.
321. By Mr. Sadleir: In Captain M’Lerie’s letter, he says there was “collusion, most systematic

T. J. Hawkins,
Esq., J.P.
9 Sept., 1862.

T.J.Hawkins, Esq., J.P. systematic and complete";—do you consider there was any evidence of collusion? No, I do not.

9 Sept., 1862. 322. Would you not, from the 2nd paragraph of this letter, consider that Captain M'Lerie wrote under very strong feeling? I think the language is very discourteous to the Board.

323. Do you not think the temper of this letter shows—I will not say a malicious, but a very strong feeling against this man Lawrence? I should be sorry to give any opinion as to Captain M'Lerie's motive; but I may give the opinion, that I think the style of his letter was not very courteous to the Board.

324. By the Chairman: You state that, at any rate you do not consider Captain M'Lerie's letter is a very courteous one to the Board, after all the trouble they had taken gratuitously to investigate the case? Yes. I never got any remuneration, and never asked for any. Notwithstanding Captain M'Lerie's letter, I am of the same opinion as before; it has not in the least shaken my opinion, nor do I believe it has affected the opinion of the other members of the Board.

325. By Mr. Driver: Having read his letter upon the subject, you still adhere to your opinion? I still adhere to it, quite as fully as at first.

326. By the Chairman: I suppose your opinion is, that Lawrence has been unjustly dismissed from the service, from all the evidence you have had an opportunity of examining? As to his dismissal from the service there may be a military view taken of this matter. I should hardly like to give an opinion upon that point.

327. I understand that you were especially appointed to inquire into the charge against Lawrence, of having refused to prosecute Rorison, and that the evidence you had an opportunity of taking entirely refuted that charge? We believed so.

328. Consequently, he was dismissed for no reason? We recommended his case favourably, as stated by the report.

THURSDAY, 11 SEPTEMBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER, | MR. MACLEAY.

HENRY ROTTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Hellyer appeared on behalf of the Petitioner.

* John M'Lerie, Esq., Inspector General of Police, called in and examined:—

John M'Lerie, Esq. 329. By the Chairman: Have you received notice to produce some papers with reference to the case of Sergeant-Major Lawrence? I have. I have all the papers connected with the case here.

11 Sept., 1862. 330. By Mr. Hellyer: Have you the exhibit A, at page 4 of the printed papers, the voucher of Mr. Chesher? I have.

331. From whom did you receive it? It came into my possession in the first instance in October, 1860.

332. From whom did you receive it? By post.

333. From whom? The Superintendent of the Western Patrol, Captain Battye, at that time.

334. Did you afterwards return that voucher to Captain Battye? I did, with a minute.

335. Did any letter accompany the minute? No, none. I will read the minute:—"Some check must be put on these enormous charges for forage supplied at public-houses to the horses of the Mounted Patrol when absent from their stations. Neither in the Southern nor the Northern District are such charges made. In this case some explanation must be given why one trooper, sent in search of highway robbers and cattle stealers, was eight days put up at one place." This minute was written on the 8th October, and on the 12th of the following month a minute in reply was received by me from the Superintendent of the Western Patrol to this effect:—"This trooper was sent out specially to watch certain branch roads commonly travelled by horse and cattle stealers to avoid detection. We have occasionally thus to station a single trooper to watch by-roads, while others patrol and visit the small settlers." That is signed "E. BATTYE," and dated 12th November.

336. You returned it again, did you not? I did, with another minute.

337. What was the date of that minute? It was initialled by me, but the date does not appear. It was probably four or five days after the receipt of Captain Battye's reply to my first minute. The minute I made upon Captain Battye's explanation was this:—"This is a duty belonging to the ordinary police of the Colony and not to the Mounted Patrol, and quartering one trooper at a public-house for such a purpose cannot be sanctioned."

338. Did any letter of instructions go to Captain Battye after the 12th October? No, I took further steps after that.

339. Will you state what further steps you took? After the receipt of this second minute of Captain Battye's I enclosed these vouchers, with a series of questions, shown at the bottom of page 5 and upper part of page 6, to Mr. Beardmore, who was then Police Magistrate of Carcoar,

Carcoar, requesting him, in a private note I sent with them, to show these vouchers to Mr. John M'Levie, Cheshier, and also to Trooper Rorison, and to take their answers to the several questions that I sent up to him. Esq.

340. Have you a copy of that private note? I have not. I can give you the purport of it. Having reason to believe, I said, that an attempt was being made to defraud the Government, by imposing upon them a spurious voucher, herewith enclosed, I would thank him, as a public officer, to assist me in detecting the fraud, by putting these questions. 11 Sept., 1862.

341. Mr. Beardmore was not in any way under your control—he formed no portion of the police force? He was a paid Police Magistrate.

342. But not a member of the police force under your orders? No.

343. You were not satisfied with Captain Battye's reply? No; I can explain the reason, if you think proper.

344. I think it would be only fair to yourself to do so? As already shown in my minute, the charges for these services on the Western Patrol were so enormous that on receipt of the accounts from that district, I looked at the charges for forage for horses absent from their stations with more scrutiny than usual, and on looking at this voucher made out in the handwriting of Sergeant-Major Lawrence and witnessed by him, the publican's name "John Cheshier" having, in my opinion, been signed by a man named Wiley, employed in the office of Captain Battye and Sergeant-Major Lawrence, my suspicions were aroused.

345. Employed in the office of Captain Battye and Sergeant-Major Lawrence, do you say? Yes, he was under the orders of both; and it was these suspicions that induced me to communicate with the Police Magistrate of Carcoar.

346. You received in reply, I suppose, the papers printed at pages 5 and 6—the answers and questions? Yes.

347. Was there any examination of Rorison? Yes, you will see it among the printed papers.

348. What followed then—I believe you went to Bathurst? After the receipt of these replies from the Police Magistrate I made a report of the matter to the Chief Secretary, and was instructed by him to proceed to Bathurst and prosecute the party supposed to be guilty.

349. Did you prosecute Captain Battye? I did not.

350. Although he had certified the voucher made out by Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and had given you a false minute? Which he explained. I communicated, by direction of the Chief Secretary, with Mr. M'Intosh, a solicitor, at Bathurst, and placed the matter in his hands, and directed Captain Battye to communicate with that gentleman; and it was at the instance of Mr. M'Intosh the information was filed.

351. Was any notice given to Sergeant-Major Lawrence to communicate with Mr. M'Intosh? No. During the whole time I was in Bathurst, Sergeant-Major Lawrence was absent on duty; he was reported to me by Captain Battye to be down the Abercrombie, looking after cattle-stealers.

352. Will you explain why a different course of proceedings was adopted towards Sergeant-Major Lawrence to that adopted towards Captain Battye? As I said the matter was left by me to Mr. M'Intosh, with instructions to prosecute the guilty party.

353. You said you directed Captain Battye to communicate with Mr. M'Intosh;—why did you not also direct Mr. Lawrence to do the same? As I have said I had not the opportunity of doing so, because during my stay in Bathurst Mr. Lawrence was absent.

354. By the Chairman: Is it not the fact that you ordered Captain Battye to file an information against Lawrence? I placed the matter in the hands of an attorney.

355. You will observe that is not an answer to my question;—my question is, is it not the fact that you ordered Captain Battye to file an information against Sergeant-Major Lawrence? I will explain what took place. I saw Captain Battye —

356. Mr. Hellyer: I should like to have a direct answer to the Chairman's question? I do not recollect giving any positive directions to Captain Battye to file an information.

357. By the Chairman: Were you not in Court at the time Captain Battye filed the information? No, I do not think I was. To the best of my recollection I was not.

358. Is it not the fact that Captain Battye somewhat demurred to filing the information, and that he was threatened with the consequences if he did not do it? He did not; he made no demur. I said, "Here is a document sent from your office, which I have no reason to doubt is a forgery—this voucher signed 'John Cheshier,' for £2 8s., certified by you and witnessed by Sergeant-Major Lawrence." He said, "This document was put before me by Sergeant-Major Lawrence as a bonâ fide document, and I signed it on his statement. I see now, from the replies to your queries sent to Carcoar, that the document is forged, and of course I am in a position to take steps if necessary"; I then said, "Steps must be taken; Mr. M'Intosh is employed on the part of the Government—you must see him."

359. By Mr. Hellyer: Why did you not file the information yourself? I thought the officer under whom the fraud was committed was the most proper person.

360. You had discovered the resemblance to the handwriting of Wiley? Yes.

361. Do you not think the head of the department was the best person to prosecute? That is matter of opinion. So long as justice was not defeated it did not seem to me to be of much consequence who prosecuted.

362. By the Chairman: I do not think we have exactly got an answer to my question whether you did not in fact order Captain Battye to file this information against Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Captain Battye was the officer in charge of the patrol, the forged document was sent from his office, and I called upon him to take steps to prosecute and communicate with Mr. M'Intosh.

363. By Mr. Hellyer: Did you place the minute of Captain Battye before Mr. M'Intosh? I placed the whole of the papers in Mr. M'Intosh's hands.

- John M'Lerie, Esq. 364. With instructions to prosecute the guilty parties? Yes.
365. Do you know why Captain Battye was not prosecuted? I do not.
- 11 Sept., 1862. 366. Had you not before you a false certificate appended to the voucher, and also a false return? There was a certificate signed by Captain Battye—the usual printed certificate.
367. Had you not also a minute from Captain Battye explaining that Trooper Rorison was stationed on by-roads, to watch for cattle-stealers? Yes.
368. Did you not receive, before you left for Bathurst, another letter from Captain Battye, giving an explanation that Rorison was only two nights at Chesher's. It will be a letter dated about the 12th of November, 1860. In order to guide you I will refer to Captain Battye's evidence before the Chief Justice:—"The prisoner, when the voucher came back, was out on duty. It was sent back about the 5th or 6th of November, and I returned it with explanations about a week following." Now have you those explanations? That is the only explanation—the minute of Captain Battye that I have read, dated the 12th November.
369. You say that was the only explanation received from Captain Battye? Yes, because I made a second minute, and then communicated with the Police Magistrate at Carcoar. If any other explanation had come it would have appeared with the printed papers.
370. Have you no other letter from Captain Battye with reference to this matter. I have not.
371. Not after Rorison had been seen? I think not. (The witness looked through his papers.) I am quite sure there was not, because if I had received it, it would have been with the printed papers.
372. When you went to Bathurst did Captain Battye show you a deposition of Rorison's, or a declaration that had been taken by him? Yes, he showed me something about being part of the time quartered at other houses, and that they were mixed up in the one voucher with Chesher's.
373. Was that before issuing the warrant? Yes.
374. Did not that declaration show you that Captain Battye had been guilty of giving two false certificates? It showed me that Captain Battye had been guilty of an indiscretion in signing to the correctness of the account without inquiry.
375. Does the rank of the party alter the degree of the crime? Not with me; it never has.
376. Nevertheless, in your opinion, Sergeant-Major Lawrence's conduct in witnessing this voucher was far worse than Captain Battye's signing these two false certificates? In the one case a forgery had been committed; in the other it was signing the certificate without inquiry.
377. Did you not know that Mr. Wiley had signed it? I suspected it.
378. Did you tell Captain Battye so? I did.
379. Did you see Dr. Palmer, the Police Magistrate of Bathurst, previous to Mr. Lawrence's apprehension? I saw him repeatedly while I was waiting for Lawrence's return.
380. You were in Bathurst, I believe, when Mr. Lawrence was in Bathurst? I was not. I never saw the man, to my knowledge, till he came up-stairs the day before yesterday.
381. Did you give any directions before you left Bathurst to have the depositions forwarded to you? I cannot at this moment recollect whether I requested that copies should be forwarded to me or not, but I have got them.
382. Do depositions come to the Inspector General? Copies of them do in police cases, frequently.
383. Would they have come without your requesting them? I do not recollect requesting that they should be sent, but it may have been done at my request.
384. Did you tell Dr. Palmer that it was not a case for bail—that he was to refuse bail to Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Most positively I did nothing of the kind; I never would interfere so much with a Magistrate's duty. I know Dr. Palmer well, and I know the reply he would have given me if I had done so.
385. Is he a gentleman in whose statement you can place confidence? Yes, of course he is.
386. If he told Mr. Lawrence to that effect —? If Dr. Palmer ever told Sergeant-Major Lawrence that I had requested him not to take bail I would believe Dr. Palmer.
387. Did not Dr. Palmer tell you he knew Sergeant-Major Lawrence better than you did? He may have done so; of course he did know him better than I did, both of them having been at Bathurst many years.
388. The depositions then were before you after the committal? Yes.
389. Did you notice that passage in Captain Battye's deposition, in which he says he does not believe the handwriting to be the handwriting of Sergeant-Major Lawrence—the fifth line of the cross-examination by Mr. Serjeant, page 3;—if you look at the information, the information is that Captain Battye on oath swears he is informed and verily believes that Sergeant-Major Lawrence did feloniously forge the name of one John Cheshier to the voucher;—did you inform Captain Battye that Sergeant-Major Lawrence did forge the name? I did nothing of the kind; I laid the voucher before Captain Battye and allowed him to draw his own conclusion. I said—"A forgery has been committed, and that forgery is witnessed by your Sergeant-Major."
390. Did you tell him, at the same time, that you believed it to have been signed by Wiley? I think I did. I said—"My impression is that the whole document has been made up in your office."
391. Why was not Wiley prosecuted for this forgery? I called Wiley before me, but of course you cannot get a man to criminate himself. I said—"Did you ever see this handwriting before—do you know this signature?"—and when he said "No," what could I do.
392. But Sergeant-Major Lawrence was to have a warrant against him? Yes.
393. No explanation was asked of him? No, because the voucher was given by Lawrence to Captain Battye—not by Wiley, but by Lawrence.

394. You say you believe it is Wiley's handwriting? I do.

395. Do you believe so still? I do.

396. Will you kindly refer to the 5th line of the cross-examination, in which Captain Battye says—"I certainly do not believe it is the handwriting of Lawrence"? Well, I quite concur with him.

John M'Lerie,
Esq.

11 Sept., 1862.

397. And yet you gave instructions to prosecute this man for forgery? For tendering a forged voucher.

398. Did he tender it? He tendered it to Captain Battye.

399. Captain Battye explains it also with a false minute? He does.

400. Did Captain Battye tell you he saw the voucher on his table for the first time? When?

401. I presume you had some conversation in reference to the voucher? He told me the voucher was given to him by Sergeant-Major Lawrence, as a charge for forage supplied to a troop horse when absent on duty, and believing it to be correct he signed it.

402. Has there not some certificate been signed to that voucher—something added to it? Yes, "I hereby authorize the above account to be paid on my behalf to Captain Battye. John Cheshier."

403. He told you it had been given to him by Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Yes, and that in the common course of duty, when the amount was paid to his credit at the bank, he would have given Lawrence a cheque for it. That was the way payments were made for such accounts—that when the advice reached Captain Battye of the amount being placed to his credit in the branch bank at Bathurst he would have given Lawrence a cheque for it.

404. Do you notice the order to pay Captain Battye? I do, but Captain Battye explained how it would have been paid by him—that the money, after being placed to his credit, would have been paid to Sergeant-Major Lawrence by cheque.

405. Was this explanation given after he had informed you that Rorison was two nights only at Mr. Cheshier's? All this conversation took place in Captain Battye's office, on the morning of my arrival at Bathurst, but whether Rorison's explanation was shown to me before or after this I cannot recollect.

406. You had seen these depositions, I presume, before the trial? Yes.

407. In the 4th line of Captain Battye's evidence, page 3, he says, "The first time I saw the voucher was on my table; it was not then in the same state it is now; it was afterwards added by Sergeant-Major Lawrence, on my seeing Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and asking him upon what service, and what trooper it was for"? That must be that voucher. (Referring to a document produced.)

408. That is not Sergeant-Major Lawrence's writing? No, it is in the handwriting of Captain Battye.

409. By the Chairman: One question arises from the question just asked you as to what Captain Battye would have done with the money. I see in Captain Battye's evidence before the Judge, he says, "If the money had been paid to my account it would, in the ordinary course, have been sent by me to Mr. Cheshier"—you have just stated that it would have been paid to Sergeant-Major Lawrence? That was the practice.

410. Can you reconcile Captain Battye's evidence with what you have just stated? I will not attempt to reconcile it. I know what the practice in the office has been.

411. By Mr. Hellyer: You saw, by the depositions at any rate, that he says the ordinary course would have been—"If I had received that money I should not have known, unless inquiries had been made, that it was paid actually to Cheshier; either Rorison or Lawrence would have been paid the money"—either the one or the other? Exactly so.

412. Then you see the certificate is for Rorison—why would it have been paid to Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Rorison's name does not appear on the voucher at all.

413. "The above-named forage was supplied to Trooper Rorison, of Carcoar"? That was added by the sergeant-major.

414. Do you still believe that Captain Battye informed you the money would have been paid to Lawrence and not to Rorison? Yes, I do, because I know the practice in making these payments.

415. Is it the practice of the Police Department to make payments to parties not entitled to it? It was the practice of the Superintendent of the Western Patrol to give cheques to the sergeant-major, to make payments on the public account as soon as he was aware that the money had been placed to his credit in the bank.

416. Can you say that was the practice? I have every reason to believe it was the practice.

417. You believe Captain Battye's statement, that it was the practice, notwithstanding his false certificates? Yes; I do not believe the certificate was signed by Captain Battye with any intention to deceive the Government.

418. Then you believe the sergeant-major witnessed the receipt in order to appropriate the money to himself? Yes, that is precisely my opinion.

419. You had not any knowledge, you say, of Sergeant-Major Lawrence before this proceeding? No, except as an officer of police; I merely knew him as an efficient officer of police; but I had long suspected something wrong with respect to these payments in that district.

420. The cash was not always right, at that time, in the Western Patrol, was it? No.

421. Did you ever hear anything affecting the honesty of Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Never before this.

422. Had you heard anything affecting Captain Battye's honesty? I had heard he was careless in keeping his accounts—so careless that he led the department into endless trouble and annoyance.

423. Was that all? That was all. I do not believe Captain Battye was a dishonest man—far from it.

- John M'Lerie, Esq.
 11 Sept., 1862.
424. What did you hear with respect to what was laid to Captain Battye's charge? I found, on referring to his account at the bank, that he had allowed his public and private accounts to get so mixed up that it was impossible to find out how he stood.
425. Did you not find out that many of the troopers were unpaid? Yes.
426. Was there a balance to his credit in the bank sufficient to meet the payments to the troopers? No.
427. Do you think that also merely an indiscretion? It is not a direct act of dishonesty.
428. The law says it is embezzlement? It was not embezzlement in my opinion.
429. You never heard anything against Lawrence's honesty? No, not before this.
430. I suppose you never inquired into his private account? No, I had no right.
431. Had you any right to inquire into Captain Battye's? Into his public account I had.
432. His private account I mean? I found he had allowed his private funds to become mixed up with his public account. He had been in the habit of placing his private money to his credit in his public account, and drawing upon it.
433. Then he had other sources of revenue besides his pay? I believe he had; I found that he allowed the monthly payment of his salary to go to the credit of his account, and in drawing upon that he mixed up the accounts, public and private, in such a way, that all this irregularity—you may call it dishonesty—occurred.
434. By the Chairman: You inspected his account at the bank? I did.
435. By Mr. Hellyer: He drew more cheques on his private account than were represented by the amount of his salary? Yes, and hence public cheques were dishonored.
436. Were not the troopers very much in arrear when you went up in December? Some of them were.
437. Will you refer to page 11 of the printed papers, a voucher, marked B, for £2 2s.—did you know anything about that previous to the prosecution? The voucher, of which this is a copy, was shown to me in Captain Battye's office —
438. Before the prosecution? Yes; and I told him it did not justify the commission of a forgery.
439. By the sergeant-major? There was a forged document.
440. What do you call a forged document—is not the signature of Mr. Lawrence in his own handwriting? Yes, but the signature of the publican is not his own handwriting.
441. You knew that? I had ascertained it before I went up.
442. Is not this the bonâ fide information that Lawrence had received? It is neither for the same amount nor at the house of Chesher.
443. There are two nights at Chesher's? Two nights instead of six, as charged in the other voucher.
444. Do the dates correspond? Not altogether. (The witness referred to the two documents marked A, page 4 of the printed papers, and B, page 11, and showed the discrepancies between them.)
445. By the Chairman: I see that Captain Battye, in his evidence before the Judge, says he has known several instances of small sums being included in one large sum and voucher, in order to save a multiplicity of vouchers? He was guilty of great irregularity in permitting it. It may have been winked at by Captain Battye, but it was not known in my office, or the accounts would not have passed.
446. Supposing that to have been the case, would not that alter your opinion of Lawrence's conduct? If the voucher witnessed by Sergeant-Major Lawrence had been a copy of the voucher B there might have been some ground for his petition, even if it had been a copy of it.
447. By Mr. Hellyer: Were you not informed previous to the prosecution, that Rorison had paid all the sums excepting two nights at Chesher's? I was not. I depended on Rorison's own statement to Mr. Beardmore.
448. That is his own statement to Mr. Beardmore, I believe? No, this is it,—“Did you ever stop at John Chesher's? Yes, twice. Have you the dates of stopping there? Yes. I keep a diary, and that will show. Was any other trooper with you on either occasion? No. Did you pay for your horse? No. Did you ask what they charged? Yes, they said nothing—did not charge a policeman anything. * * * Did the sergeant-major know of your absence? Yes, I told him. He would also know it from my forage list.”
449. Does not the diary show that Rorison had not drawn forage for any of these nights that are charged? Yes, of course the station diary does; that is to say, forage was not issued in the stable for horses that were absent.
450. A trooper is not expected to keep his own horse when away from the station? If a publican gives him forage without charging, he has no right to charge the Government with it.
451. You saw Rorison's deposition, made before Captain Battye on the 1st December, before the prosecution? Yes; that was with reference to his examination before Mr. Beardmore.
452. You find there that he told the chief constable that the expenses included in this voucher were correct? Yes.
453. This is an examination on oath of Rorison? Yes.
454. You were acquainted with this before you directed Captain Battye to file an information against Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Yes.
455. Have you the letter enclosing the replies from Mr. Beardmore? No, it was a private note—not merely sending back the voucher with the result of his examination.
456. Was it not directed to the Inspector General? It was a private note from Mr. Beardmore to myself. I sent the papers with a private note, and he sent them back in the same way.
457. By the Chairman: You were in fact constituting Mr. Beardmore a sort of detective for the

the time? Precisely so; I found I could not arrive at the truth at Bathurst, and I sent to John M'Levie, Mr. Beardmore at Carcoar.

458. By Mr. Hellyer: You found you could not get the truth from Captain Battye, do you mean? I will not go that length. John M'Levie,
Esq.
11 Sept., 1862.

459. Why not? Because I believe Captain Battye was imposed upon.

460. Will you tell the Committee why you believe he was imposed upon to give that second minute? He could only have got this information from Rorison or the sergeant-major.

461. Does the minute say one word about it? No.

462. Who gives the orders for troopers to go out? The superintendent ought.

463. Why do you call this letter to Mr. Beardmore a private letter—was it not on public service? He was requested to do an act connected with the public service, yet not an act coming within his duties officially—I asked him as a favour.

464. Did you keep the replies? I have not even got the reply. I marked my note “private and confidential,” and destroyed them both.

465. Did you request him to communicate with you in the same manner? I addressed my note “private and confidential” to him.

466. Have you the papers relative to an inquiry by Dr. Palmer about a horse? I have.

467. When were you first informed that a horse had been purchased by Sergeant-Major Lawrence from Mr. M'Donald? On the 16th November, 1860, I received a letter from Mr. M'Donald, which I will read. (Witness read and handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.) This is my reply. (Read. Appendix B.) To that I received a reply from Mr. M'Donald, dated 6th December. (Read. Appendix C.)

468. Where is the letter of Sergeant-Major Lawrence there referred to? That I returned to Mr. M'Donald, at his special request.

469. Where is the request? I do not know where the request is, but I know it was returned.

470. Have you any letter returning it? I do not think I have. There may be such a letter, or it may have been returned under blank cover, as requested. He quotes the letter correctly in his first communication to me. I am sure he made a request that it should be returned. It was the only guarantee he had.

471. By Mr. Cowper: It may have been on the face of the letter? Yes. This is the letter I wrote to the Superintendent, Captain Battye, in consequence of Mr. M'Donald's letter of the 6th December. (Read. Appendix D.) This is his answer. (Read. Appendix E.) The next is a letter from Mr. M'Donald, calling attention to his former letter, to which I had not replied, because I had not got Captain Battye's reply to my former letter. (Read. Appendix F.) Upon receipt of Captain Battye's reply, which I have just read, I wrote to Mr. M'Donald a letter, dated 11th February, 1861. (Read. Appendix G.)

472. By Mr. Hellyer: What time did you visit Bathurst? I think I arrived in Bathurst about the 15th December, 1860.

473. You had been communicated with on the 6th, by Mr. M'Donald, with reference to this horse? Yes.

474. Did you look through the books of the force at Bathurst, to ascertain whether this horse had been entered there? I did not. It was my intention to have communicated with Sergeant-Major Lawrence about it, but as he was absent at the time I could not do so.

475. You did not make any inquiries to ascertain whether the horse was entered on the books? I did not.

476. Have you the papers relative to the inquest held by Dr. Palmer with reference to it? I have. But, if you will allow me, I will complete this correspondence with Mr. M'Donald. The next is a letter from Mr. M'Donald, dated 20th February. (Read. Appendix H.)

477. If you recollect, I asked whether you had the inquest held by Dr. Palmer about this matter? Yes, and I said it would be as well to complete this correspondence first. The inquiry was ordered by myself after this correspondence; and if you will allow me to read it, you will see the reasons I had for causing it to be made.

[Mr. Hellyer said he did not require any more of the correspondence.]

478. By Mr. Cowper: Have you any further correspondence about this transaction with Mr. M'Donald? Yes; this letter is in reply to the letter I have just read. (Read. Appendix I.) Then, as the matter remained in this unsatisfactory state, and as Captain Battye was then under suspension, I thought that, both for the sake of Mr. Lawrence and of the public service, an inquiry should be held by Dr. Palmer, who was then acting as superintendent of the patrol in Bathurst, and with that view I wrote this letter to Mr. M'Donald on the 14th March, 1861. (Read. Appendix K.) And the day after, I wrote to Dr. Palmer to this effect. (Read. Appendix L.)

479. By Mr. Hellyer: Have you the evidence there given by Sergeant-Major Lawrence? I have a memorandum of the inquiry. (Read. Appendix M.) I will also hand in the letter referred to in Dr. Palmer's memo. at foot of the evidence. (Appendix N.) I may as well say that, after reading this evidence, if Lawrence had applied for the price of this horse, though I myself would not have been justified in giving it him, I would have made such a report to the Government that I have no doubt it would have been paid him.

480. You would not then have recommended Mr. M'Donald to prosecute him for obtaining the horse under false pretences? No.

481. Was Captain Battye suspended? He was.

482. For irregularities in his accounts, I think you say? Yes, for allowing cheques drawn by him on public account to remain unpaid.

483. Was he not suspended for appropriating public moneys? No.

484. The moneys of the force were regularly paid to him as superintendent? Yes.

485. And the troopers were not paid? In some instances they were not.

- John M'Lerie, Esq. 486. He himself had applied the money to his private purposes? I infer so from the examination I made of his accounts when at Bathurst.
487. Do you not call that appropriating public moneys—was it not embezzlement? My opinion was, and I reported so to the Government, that it resulted more from a careless mode of keeping his accounts than from anything else.
488. By the Chairman: Are you aware of the answer given by Mr. Cowper, in the House, in reply to a question of mine as to the cause of Captain Battye's dismissal? I may have read it.
489. Do you not know that the substance of that answer was to the effect that it was for appropriating public moneys? It may have been for mis-appropriating public moneys.
490. By Mr. Hellyer: Under the new Police Act I believe Captain Battye has been re-appointed? He has been appointed to a subordinate position—a position in which he has nothing to do with accounts. He is a very active police officer.
491. Sergeant-Major Lawrence has been dismissed? He has.
492. You received the result of Dr. Palmer's inquest about the horse before he was dismissed? Yes, before he was tried; when he was under committal, I think.
493. And you recommended his appointment to be annulled by the officer administering the Government for the time being? I did.
494. You received a telegram from the Police Magistrate as soon as Lawrence was acquitted? I did.
495. Sergeant Grainger, I believe was appointed to his office? After some months—not at the time. Sergeant Grainger was a sergeant in Sydney, and was sent up as sergeant to Bathurst, but was not appointed as sergeant-major for six months afterwards, and then on the recommendation of the superintendent.
496. How long had Sergeant Grainger been in the force? In the New South Wales Force, five years, and he had been an experienced officer of the Irish Constabulary. He is one of the best drill instructors I have had for some time.
497. By the Chairman: How long had he been a sergeant in Sydney before you sent him up? He was only acting sergeant; he was appointed full sergeant in January, 1861.
498. Was he not appointed acting sergeant-major at Bathurst? He did the duty, but I would not appoint him until he was reported as competent.
499. Was he not your orderly at the time you sent him up; No, I only knew him as an efficient young police officer, a rising man, who will be a good officer yet.
500. Is it the practice to appoint young officers over the heads of older officers? Yes, when necessary; I look to efficiency.
501. Sergeant Grainger having been but a short time in the service, and only an acting sergeant, was it in accordance with practice to appoint him sergeant-major over the heads of older officers? It was my intention that he should be sergeant in the patrol, and I had in view a very old sergeant, Forbes, whom I intended to appoint as successor to Sergeant-Major Lawrence; but on the report of the superintendent that Forbes was not a good instructor, and that this man, Grainger, was a first-rate instructor, and he would wish him to be Sergeant-Major, I appointed him six months afterwards. Nothing has occurred since his promotion to warrant me in regretting having appointed him—he does his duty most satisfactorily.
502. At the time he was sent up was he not totally unacquainted with bush work? I was quite aware of that, and that was one reason why I did not at first appoint him. The man I intended to appoint was Forbes.
503. Did you hear that on his first trip to the Abercrombie Sergeant Grainger lost himself? I heard of that.

APPENDIX.

A.

*Jerrong, Abercrombie River, near Taralga, by Goulburn,
16 November, 1860.*

Sir,

In February last I sold a bay horse, branded D in circle on near shoulder, and small D on near cheek, to Sergeant-Major Lawrence, of the Bathurst Police Force, for the use of said force; he, Sergeant-Major Lawrence, stating that he was instructed by Capt. Battye to purchase for the force. The price agreed upon was twenty pounds (£20) sterling. I drew out a receipt containing a description of the horse and brands, and acknowledging payment, which I handed to Lawrence; but it appeared that he was not prepared at the time with the necessary funds, and as he came here upon other business—that is, to make inquiry about some cattle which had been stolen from me, and not purposing to purchase horses—I did not hesitate to give him both horse and receipt, upon the understanding that the £20 were to be forwarded to me in fourteen days thereafter. Considering the responsible position which Lawrence holds in the troop I did not for a moment doubt his word. Finding, however, that the money was not forwarded according to promise, I wrote him upon the subject and received his answer, dated 4th April, stating “The Estimates for 1860 (and including seven new horses we have bought the “last six months) are not yet passed. The Council meets to-day, and in the course of this month I “will remit you the £20 for the horse.” The money, however, was not remitted, and though I have since written both him and Capt. Battye, neither have deigned a reply.

Under these circumstances I deem it not only a duty to myself, but to you, sir, as the head of the department, to lay the matter before you, and to request that you will be kind enough to look into it and advise me accordingly.

Lawrence's

Lawrence's letter, which I hold, and which I will forward to you, if required, will show that the John M'Lerie, horse was purchased for the use of Government.

Capt. M'Lerie,
Inspector General of Police.

I have, &c.,
JOHN M'DONALD. Esq.
11 Sept., 1862.

Request Mr. M'Donald to forward Sergeant-Major Lawrence's letter, and if it is found that the horse was purchased for the public service steps will be taken to have the amount paid.

*Office of Inspector General of Police,
Sydney, 23 November, 1860.*

Sir,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 16th instant, complaining of your inability to obtain payment for a horse sold by you to Sergeant-Major Lawrence, in February last, I have to request you will forward to this office the letter from Lawrence alluded to in your communication, when, if it be found that the horse was bought for the public service, steps will be taken to have the amount paid. £20.

Mr. J. M'Donald,

*Jerrong, Abercrombie River,

6 December, 1860.*

Sir,

I do myself the honor of acknowledging receipt of your favour of the 23rd ultimo, and according to your instructions, enclose Sergeant-Major Lawrence's letter, which I trust bears sufficient internal evidence to prove to your satisfaction that the horse was sold to him for the public service, and for no other.

Capt. M'Lerie,
Inspector General of Police,
Sydney.

I have, &c.,
JOHN M'DONALD.

D.

*Office of Inspector General of Police,
Sydney, 27 December, 1860.*

Sir,

I have herewith to transmit for your report, copy of a letter from Mr. John M'Donald of Jerrong, Abercrombie River, complaining of his not having been able to obtain payment for a horse sold by him in February last to Sergeant-Major Lawrence, as alleged, for the use of the Mounted Police, the price being £20, and to request you will succinctly state:—

1st.—Whether you ever authorized your Sergeant-Major to purchase horses for the Western Patrol?

2nd.—Whether the purchase herein instanced was made?

3rd.—Whether Mr. M'Donald made any representation of the matter to you, and the steps you took in consequence?

The Superintendent, Mounted Police,
Bathurst.

JNO. M'LERIE,
Inspector General of Police.

E.

Bathurst, 26 January, 1861.

Sir,

With regard to Mr. John M'Donald's letter about a bay horse branded D in circle, said to have been purchased by Sergeant-Major Lawrence, on my authority, for the police force, I beg to inform you that the Sergeant-Major never, in one single instance, has had authority to purchase a horse for the service. This particular horse I recollect the Sergeant-Major riding home, having knocked up his own horse in the mountains. He told me he thought the animal would make a good troop horse, and spoke to me about buying him. A few days afterwards, when out in the bush, the horse was seized with gripes, and there dropped and died. Had the horses been purchased by him on any authority from me I should have at once transmitted Mr. Jno. M'Donald a voucher for his signature.

When Mr. M'Donald addressed me upon the subject I acquainted Sergeant-Major Lawrence of it. I looked upon it as a private matter between them, and have since considered that it had been arranged between them, until I received your's and the copy of Mr. M'Donald's to you regarding it.

Inspector General of Police,
Sydney.

I have, &c.,
E. M. BATTYE,
Captain.

Since writing the above I find I am mistaken. The Sergeant-Major exchanged this horse of M'Donald's with a Mr. Hughes for another, and it was Mr. Hughes' horse that died of the gripes.

The Sergeant-Major tells me he has written to Mr. M'Donald, acquainting him when he will pay him.

This day is the first time I have spoken to the Sergeant-Major about it since Mr. M'Donald's letter to me.

Sir,

I had the honor of addressing to you a letter on the 6th of last month, which was registered and posted at the post office, Teralga, on the 8th of the same month, containing, according to your instructions, Serjeant-Major Lawrence's communication respecting the horse sold to him for the police force. As up to this date I have received from you no acknowledgment of the receipt of that letter and its enclosure, you will not be surprised that I should feel anxious about it. I trust, sir, you will therefore have the kindness to relieve my anxiety upon this subject, and at the same time remit me the amount (£20) at your earliest convenience.

Sydney, 11 February, 1861.

Sir,

Sergeant-Major
Lawrence's letter herewith returned.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letters dated 6th December and 24th ultimo, I beg to inform you, Mr. Superintendent Battye has reported to me that he never, "in one single instance gave authority to Sergeant-Major Lawrence to purchase a horse for the service," and adds that, had Lawrence bought the horse from you under his authority, he (Captain Battye) would have sent a voucher for your signature.

Under these circumstances, it is clearly out of my power to recognize the transaction as of an official nature: but were this man now an effective member of the patrol (and not, as is the case, committed to take his trial at the next Bathurst Gaol Delivery, for forgery), I should be in a position to take some steps in the matter. As it is, I regret I can only suggest your proceeding criminally against Lawrence for obtaining property under false pretences.

by Teralga, 20 February, 1861.

Sir,

I beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, enclosing Lawrence's, and regret to find that now you consider the transaction one which you cannot officially recognize. In your letter of the 23rd November, you say, "when, if it be found that the horse was bought for the public service, steps will be taken to have the amount paid." From this I took it for granted that, if you found satisfactory evidence of this fact in Lawrence's letter to me, you would consider me entitled to payment. But as Captain Battye denies that he ever gave Lawrence, in any single instance, authority to purchase a horse for the service, the case is altered. But, sir, when I call to your recollection that after Lawrence failed in paying me, I wrote to Captain Battye, informing him of the transaction and requesting to know if Lawrence had delivered the horse to him (though he did not condescend to answer my letter), and when I further inform you that my horse was delivered to Captain Battye (as he was, and is, for all I know to the contrary, still in the force), and that the Government have actually enjoyed the services of said horse, I trust you will view the transaction in a different light, and use your influence to see me paid. Captain Battye, I should hope, will not deny my letter; and if so, how can he justify his conduct in still retaining Lawrence in the force after perpetrating so gross a fraud. Though Lawrence is not now an effective member of the patrol, yet you will not, I trust, forget that he was when I first addressed you upon this subject, and that by committing him subsequently upon a charge of forgery, you have completely debarred me from every chance of payment from that quarter. Under these circumstances, I do sincerely hope, sir, you will reconsider the matter, and do me the justice which I humbly submit my case demands.

Captain M'Lerie,
Inspector General of Police.

I have, &c.,
JOHN M'DONALD.

MEMO.—This transaction was never an official one, neither was the horse ever made use of on the public service by my authority. Sergeant-Major Lawrence rode him home when he crippled his own, which he had to leave in the bush.

Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 20th ult., urging me to reconsider your claim to payment for the horse purchased by Sergeant Lawrence.

2. The communication has been laid before Captain Battye, who reiterates his assertion that the transaction "was never an official one, neither was the horse ever made use of by his authority;" it is therefore, you will perceive, clearly out of my power to comply with your request.

MEMORANDUM of Inquiry, held by Wm. Hall Palmer, Esq., at the request of the Inspector General of Police, respecting the purchase of a horse by Charles Lawrence, Sergeant-Major in the Western Patrol, from Mr. M'Donald, of Jerrong, Abercrombie River.

Charles Lawrence, having been duly sworn to answer truly such questions as shall be put to him, respecting the purchase of a horse from Mr. M'Donald, of Jerrong, Abercrombie River:—

Were you in the Western Patrol in February, 1860? I was.

Were you sent on duty at that time? I was.

Where were you sent, and by whom? To Mr. M'Donald, of Jerrong, by order of Captain Battye, to inquire into a case of cattle stealing.

Did you at that time purchase a horse? I did.

From whom? I purchased him from Mr. M'Donald.

State the circumstances under which you purchased the horse? In consequence of a troop horse called "Hastings" having been disabled in the off fore fetlock, I was obliged to take a troop horse named "Roaney," which horse was purchased by me from Mr. Potking, of King's Plains, about six months before, on public account, and which horse was approved of by Captain Battye; the "Roaney" horse, at the time when I left for Jerrong, was very weak; on my arrival I found the horse could not carry me; I mentioned it to Mr. M'Donald, and he offered me the choice of two saddle horses; I bought one for £20 on the public account; M'Donald asked me if I had authority to buy; I told him, yes, for I had done so before. He seemed satisfied, and I told him as soon as the money was paid in I would send him a cheque. After performing my duty, and arresting the prisoner (Patrick Conalley), I returned to Bathurst on the horse which I had purchased; the roan horse, which was knocked up, was left at Mr. Stevenson's, of Swatchfields, and could not be brought home for five weeks.

Did you report the purchase of the horse to Captain Battye as soon as you returned? On my arrival, I showed the horse to Captain Battye, and told him the whole particulars why I purchased him.

What was said by Captain Battye? Captain Battye told me distinctly no horse could be paid for until the Estimates had passed, and I wrote and told M'Donald. At this time "Roaney," the troop horse, was not paid for.

Where was the horse taken to when you returned? He was taken to the stables at the barracks.

Was he at that time rated on the forage allowance? He was, and entered on the books.

Was he ever used on public service after your return from Jerrong? He was; he was lent, by Captain Battye's orders, to Mr. Cole, the Colonial Architect, to go to Wellington, Stony Creek, Tambaroora, and round; he knocked up with Mr. Cole; in consequence of his knocking up, Captain Battye said he would not suit, and must be changed, as he thought he was more fit for draught than saddle.

What became of the horse then? He was exchanged with Mr. John Hughes, of Black Rock, for a grey horse.

Who made the exchange? I did, with the knowledge of Captain Battye; Mr. Hughes having offered the horse to Captain Battye before he came to me.

Who was present when the exchange was made? One of the troopers took M'Donald's horse out, and brought in Mr. Hughes' horse from his farm.

What became of Hughes' horse? About three days after the exchange I was sent out on duty down the Macquarie, and rode the horse obtained from Hughes; I was ordered by Captain Battye on the duty, and this was the only horse I could ride; he was the only one in the stable at the time; he was taken ill with gripes close to Mr. Piper's hut, and with a great deal of trouble we got him near home, when he fell and died; about a week after Captain Battye sent Trooper Wyllie for a certificate of the cause of the horse's death; I wrote one out and gave it to the Captain, and I saw it some time after in the office; the certificate was given for the express purpose of being sent to the Government to obtain payment for the horse I had purchased from M'Donald.

Have you at any time before purchased horses for the patrol? I have purchased horses several times for the Government, when I have been in the bush; when I saw a good horse I used to purchase him, and it was always passed and the money was paid to the parties I bought from.

Have you had any correspondence with Mr. M'Donald about the horse? I wrote to him once; I think it was after he had written to me; what I wrote to him was what Captain Battye told me; I cannot recollect exactly what I did say, but my letter will show.

Have you seen M'Donald or had any other communication since? I have—I saw him on the 1st of this month; he came to my house, and said he had applied for payment for his horse to the Government, they had denied all knowledge of the transaction, and he should look to me for the money; I then paid him the £20, and I hold his receipt. I also told him it was most unfair I should be called upon to pay for the horse, and that I had no doubt when it came to be explained to Captain M'Lerie he would return it to me; just previous to Captain Battye going down to Sydney, he showed me a letter from M'Donald, and said he (Captain Battye) did not think the Government would pay for the horse; I then told him if the Government would not pay for him I would; as the horse was dead, I supposed I would never recover the amount.

C. P. LAWRENCE.

W. HALL PALMER, P.M.

MEMO.—Captain Battye, after having been sworn, wishes it to be noted that he objects to any one except the Inspector General of Police, or a Superintendent of the Mounted Patrol, inquiring into, or taking examinations respecting matters concerning the Mounted Patrol, as being contrary to the regulations of the Mounted Police, issued about 1854; but at the same time has no objection to give every information touching the present inquiry.

W. HALL PALMER.

Captain

John M'Lerie,
Esq.

11 Sept., 1862.

Captain Battye being duly sworn, states in answer:—

Were you in charge of the Western Patrol, in February, 1860? I was.
Did you about that time order Sergeant Lawrence on duty to Jerrong? I believe he went on that occasion by my orders. (Frequently he has gone without, when he has received information of importance, because the whole of the bush duties devolve upon the Sergeant-Major and myself.)
Do you recollect his returning with a fresh horse? I recollect his bringing back a strange horse, and not bringing his own.
Did he account for not bringing his own horse? He did; he said his own horse had knocked up with him, and that Mr. M'Donald had produced a horse before him, which he thought would answer the force, which he (Lawrence) had bought for the force, but if not accepted he was responsible for; the price was £20; I objected to the horse; Lawrence had no authority from me to purchase a horse for the Government; I believe this horse was exchanged by Lawrence for another horse more adapted to the saddle, which latter horse was occasionally used by the troopers for patrol and other duties, Sergeant-Major Lawrence not having sufficient work for him; his own troop horse was away about that time, and useless from over fatigue. It was on one of these particular occasions, to the best of my belief, that this horse was made use of by a trooper on duty, when he was taken with the gripes and died about two or three miles from town. Sergeant-Major Lawrence, to my knowledge, has never kept a horse for his own private use, and I have no doubt he purchased this horse for the use of the Government, thinking it would answer for that purpose, but he had no authority from me for doing so; I did not like him when I saw him. On this particular occasion, when he purchased the horse, he brought a prisoner home with him, and, from the report given of his own horse, he would not have been able to have performed his duty unless he had obtained another horse.
When the horse was brought from Jerrong was he rated as a troop horse? Decidedly he was, as far as being foraged, the Sergeant-Major's horse not being at home. Whenever a horse is lent for the public service he is invariably rationed as a troop horse.
Was the horse used at any time on service? I cannot recollect.
Was he used by Mr. Cole, the Colonial Architect? Mr. Cole did use the horse on public service; he went to Wellington, and Lawrence lent him the horse. Mr. Cole reported unfavourably of him.
Do you recollect what became of him? He was exchanged with Mr. Hughes for a grey horse.
Did you sanction the exchange? I did not sanction the exchange on the part of the Government, but I recommended the exchange.
What became of the grey horse? He is the horse I have previously spoken of as having died of gripes when on Government duty.
Are you aware whether Lawrence has ever purchased horses before? He has not purchased any, but has recommended some, which I have afterwards purchased.
Have you had any correspondence with M'Donald about the horse? I have not, but have received two letters from him—one couched in such terms I did not reply to it. I may have received a second one, but I did not reply to it.
Does the horse purchased from M'Donald appear in the diary? On reference to the diary, the name "Wyrong" appears, on the 26th March, as "turned out to grass"; and on the 4th of April he was brought up, and handed over to Mr. Cole, entered as "troop horse, 'Wyrong,' to Wellington," and 15th April he appears as "'Wyrong' from Carcoar"; and there appears an entry on the 7th May, "New troop horse, 'Georgy,' died."
Did you receive a certificate from Lawrence of the death of the grey horse? He reported to me the death of the grey horse; I think he did give me a certificate of the death, so that he might obtain the amount of purchase money from the Government; I believe I asked him for it, as I considered him justly entitled to the amount, or portion of it, paid for the horse.

Forwarded to the Inspector General of Police, in accordance with letter, dated 15th March, 1861.

W. HALL PALMER, P.M.,
Acting Superintendent of Mounted Patrol,
Bathurst.

Letter from Sergeant-Major Lawrence received this morning, 22nd March, 1861, forwarded to the Inspector General of Police.

W. H. P.

N.

To Dr. Palmer.
Sir,

Bathurst, 22 March, 1861.

I beg most respectfully to state the following facts in connection with my having bought a horse from Mr. M'Donald, of Jerong, Abercrombie Mountains.

In the month of February, 1860, I was ordered to proceed on duty by Captain Battye to Mr. M'Donald's, Jerong, in a case of cattle stealing; and in consequence of my usual troop horse "Hastings" having been disabled through a disjointed fetlock I was obliged to ride troop horse "Roany," purchased by me from Mr. Potkery, of King Plains, for the Government service. This horse was only just broken in and off grass, consequently weak. Upon my arrival at M'Donald's, the horse, I felt, would not be able to carry me through the journey and perform the duty I had been ordered to do; and upon M'Donald offering me the choice of two saddle horses, I picked one out and gave M'Donald the price he asked for the horse, viz., £20. I was asked by M'Donald if I was authorized by the Government to buy horses? I said, I had bought horses before and that not one of them had been objected to, which I considered was tantamount to the same thing, but I never looked for a written authority, as whenever I saw and was confident the horse would suit us, and we wanted one, it could not and did not make any difference. After performing my duty upon the horse and arresting my prisoner, Patrick Connolly, at Duck Malloy, forty miles from M'Donald's, I came into Bathurst.

The roan horse knocked up a little way from M'Donald's, and it took us, myself, Troopers Ross, Gile, and Wilson, the whole day and part of the night to get the horse to Mr. Stevenson's of Swatchfield, where I left him.

Shortly after, Mr. Cole, the Colonial Architect, and Capt. Battye, one Sunday morning, called at my house, and Capt. Battye asked me what horse Mr. Cole could have to go to Wellington, &c.; I replied he could have the new horse "Jerong," purchased by me from M'Donald, which he got the next morning, and Mr. Cole knocked him up since then. Mr. Cole the next time he came up here upon the very same journey, knocked up another troop horse, viz., "Wellington." The horse bought from M'Donald has been ridden by Troopers Gile, O'Rourke, Corporal Dunn, and myself, upon Government duty, and never was used upon any other duty since I purchased him until he was exchanged, which was in consequence of Mr. Cole knocking the horse up. Upon my arrival in Bathurst I showed Captain Battye the horse, telling him the cause of my having to get the horse, and that I thought the horse would suit us. The Captain said no horse could be paid for until the Estimates were passed. (At this time some horses then being used in the force were not paid for by the Government, amongst them troop horse horse "Roany," named before.) I wrote and told M'Donald this, upon the horse being fetched back by a trooper from where Mr. Coles had left him; Captain Battye then said he would not suit us. The horse was subsequently exchanged with Mr. John Hughes for a grey horse with the knowledge of Captain Battye. The grey horse, the following day after he was brought to the barracks, and upon his first journey, died of the gripes, under the charge of Trooper Ross.

John M'Lerie,
Esq.

11 Sept., 1862.

The horses "Jenny" or "Wyrong," and also the grey horse's death, is entered in the books and the diary. I gave Captain Battye a certificate of the grey horse's death, for the purpose of applying to the Government for payment of the horse, as M'Donald had not signed a voucher, and consequently I was liable. Captain Battye, at the same time, told me that the Government would pay for the horse. I had no reason at this time to doubt it, as a precisely similar occurrence took place once before, when a horse of Captain Battye's died, and the Government paid for him. I have bought five horses for the police force, three of which are now in the force. I have not heard more of the matter until shortly before Captain Battye went to Sydney, he told me the Government would not pay for the horse, and that he had heard from Mr. M'Donald, but did not show me the letter. I replied, if the Government would not I must, but that not just at that minute having the money M'Donald must wait a little time. The Captain desired me to write to Mr. M'Donald upon Friday, 1st March, 1861. M'Donald called upon me for payment of the horse, telling me he had written to the Government, and that they denied all knowledge of the transaction, and that he should look to me for payment. I paid him at once, but told him that it was not fair I should be called upon to pay him, but I trusted when I had explained the matter to Captain M'Lerie he would cause the money to be refunded.

I most solemnly declare my only object in purchasing the horse was for the public good and service, and if I have committed any error by so doing, I hope the above facts will be received as some mitigation of any unintentional fault I may have committed.

I have, &c.,
C. P. LAWRENCE.

TUESDAY, 16 SEPTEMBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,
MR. HART,

MR. MACLEAY,
MR. SADLEIR.

HENRY ROTTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. W. Hellyer appeared on behalf of Mr. Lawrence.

John M'Lerie, Esq., again called in and examined:—

504. By the Chairman: Captain Battye was Lawrence's superior officer, was he not, at the time this transaction took place? He was. Captain Battye was Superintendent of the Patrol in the Western District, and Lawrence was Sergeant-Major under him.

John M'Lerie,
Esq.

16 Sept., 1862.

505. Is it not a fact that you were sent up on that occasion specially to investigate charges against Captain Battye? I think I have the letter of instruction with me. I went up to Bathurst under instructions from the Chief Secretary, with the object of getting the parties supposed to be guilty of this forgery prosecuted.

506. Was not Captain Battye himself suspected of complicity in this matter at the time you went away;—was not that one of the reasons why you were required to go up there? I never suspected him of complicity, although I looked upon him as having been excessively careless in the matter.

507. Why, as superintendent of the district, could he not have been intrusted with the conduct of this matter, instead of yourself going up specially for that purpose? Well, I went up under instructions from the Chief Secretary.

508. By Mr. Cowper: Had you not reason to believe that there had been some laxity in Captain Battye's accounts? I had.

509. You took the matter into your hands in consequence of my instructions, and in order that Captain Battye might afford you an explanation as to supposed irregularities in his accounts, as other officers in public establishments are called upon to do when there are like grounds of suspicion on the part of the authorities? That was the reason I believe you had for sending me up.

510. And you intimated to him that you entertained a suspicion that for some time past there had been some irregularities in the accounts and charges made? I did, and suggested to him that I should avail myself of the opportunity of my being in Bathurst to examine his public account, which I did.

511. By the Chairman: Did Captain Battye give any explanation of the matter? I questioned him with respect to this voucher, and he told me that he signed it on the faith of its being all correct when brought before him by Sergeant-Major Lawrence; and when he was asked to reply to my minute upon the voucher he said he had signed it on the representation of Lawrence, who gave him the information as to Rorison having been at this public-house.

512. Did not Captain Battye tell you that the course pursued in that instance was customary? In what instance?

513. In that instance, in making out the voucher in that way, and his witnessing it? No, he never did. I should have been surprised if he had.

514. At the time you went to Bathurst were you not informed by Captain Battye that Lawrence was out on duty? Yes, I think I have already said so.

515. And you did not, I believe, before directing Captain Battye to file an information against

John M'Levie, Esq. against Lawrence and procure a warrant, afford Lawrence an opportunity of explaining the matter; nor did you wait till he returned, so as to have such opportunity? No; he was absent all the time I was in Bathurst.

16 Sept., 1862.

516. I presume you had no suspicion that Lawrence was going to abscond;—were there any particular reasons why that extreme course should be taken? It was taken on the advice of the solicitor I employed on the part of the Government, Mr. M'Intosh; I left the matter to him as to what course should be taken, with instructions to Captain Battye to communicate with him. Captain Battye, the Police Magistrate, and the solicitor directed the steps that were taken.

517. You had previously obtained from Mr. Beardmore the assurance of the publican, whose name was appended to the document, that it was not put there by his authority? I had; and Rorison, on his examination at Bathurst, swore that he had not seen the document before it was shown to him by Mr. Beardmore at Carcoar.

518. You say you had nothing to do with pressing the charge in this extreme way, further than directing that steps for the prosecution should be taken? It was placed in the hands of the legal gentleman I employed on behalf of the Government to carry out.

519. There would be some instructions from you? That the perpetrator of the fraud was to be prosecuted.

520. I believe you knew that Lawrence was expected back at Bathurst in a day or two? I waited, I think, two days before these steps were taken.

521. Did you not yourself positively and authoritatively direct Captain Battye to take these proceedings under some indirect threats? I used no threats whatever. His attention was directed to this document. I said a forgery had been committed in his office, and the guilty party must be prosecuted.

522. Did he not make some explanation or excuse, or show a disinclination to institute these proceedings? He did not show any disinclination, because I think he went at once with me to the solicitors.

523. Did he not tell you that the matter could be explained? No, he never did.

524. You have stated that Mr. M'Intosh was employed as the attorney on behalf of the Government? Ycs.

525. Is it usual in such cases for the Government to employ attorneys in that way—for the mere initiation of a case? Very often it is done. If the matter had been inquired into in Sydney it would have been initiated by the Crown Solicitor, but being out of Sydney I had the authority of the Government to employ a private solicitor.

526. Being employed in the case, he must have had every opportunity of learning the merits of the case? I placed all the documents in his hands.

527. Are you aware that he thinks Lawrence is entirely innocent? I am not aware of it.

528. Has he not made application to you on Lawrence's behalf? No, on behalf of Sergeant Middleton, who was shot.

529. Did he not at the same time mention Lawrence's case to you? No, I am not aware that he did.

530. He stated to me that he did? He may have done so, but he never expressed to me his opinion that Lawrence was entirely innocent, if he did speak about the case.

531. He told me that he had spoken to you about Lawrence—that he had asked you to reinstate him, and that he had given you his opinion that he had been unfairly treated? He must be mistaken; he spoke and wrote strongly about the other officer, Sergeant Middleton, who was afterwards reinstated, not in his former position, but with a promise that within a few months he should be put in the place he held before.

532. I think you stated before, that Captain Battye had the control of these accounts? The control of the whole of the police accounts of the district—they had to pass through his hands.

533. Then in whatever offence or irregularity has occurred Captain Battye must in some degree be implicated? As far as being careless.

534. Captain Battye has since been dismissed from the service, has he not? Yes, he was dismissed from the charge of the Western Patrol.

535. He has since been reinstated? He has been re-appointed, but to another situation.

536. In the police service? In the police service, to an inferior situation to that he held before.

537. It is already in evidence, and I need not ask the question again, that Captain Battye was dismissed for misappropriating public moneys—I believe that was the ground of his dismissal? Not the misappropriation, but because he kept his accounts in such a confused manner that public moneys were drawn out for private uses.

538. Although your opinion has been that Lawrence's original intention was a fraud, he has been tried by a jury of his country and found innocent; the criminal part of the case must thus be considered to be disposed of, and nothing remains but the irregularity to take cognizance of. Supposing that to be the state of the case, what reason can you give for reinstating Captain Battye, who has committed a much more grave irregularity, whilst you continue Lawrence in suspension, his offence being a mere irregularity? I call it more than that. I have no doubt a fraud was committed, and that by a certain collusion between Lawrence and another man in the force, the ends of justice were defeated.

539. Are you not aware that Lawrence was tried by a jury, who pronounced him innocent, and that the Judge who presided said he left the Court without any stain upon his character? I admit that.

540. And that since he was tried and so acquitted the Government had authorized a Commission to inquire into the matter, by whom he was acquitted of any collusion with Rorison? There is a document filled up by Lawrence, with the forged name of "John Cheshier" attached attached to it; it is witnessed by Lawrence, and purports to be a voucher with regard to forage supplied to Trooper Rorison. Rorison in his evidence said he never saw the document until he saw it at Carcoar. Lawrence afterwards goes to the publican whose name is forged to the document, and presses upon him to receive payment of the money—money which had never been demanded, and which the publican declined to receive. John M'Levie,

Esq.
16 Sept., 1862.

541. You state, in a previous part of your evidence, that you believed a man named Wiley had written that signature "John Cheshier"? I came to that conclusion, Wiley being employed as an assistant clerk in the office of Captain Battye and Sergeant-Major Lawrence. A strong similarity that it bears to Wiley's handwriting, which on inspection the Committee will perceive, led me to that conclusion.

542. By Mr. Cowper: That is only a suspicion of your own? I think the Committee will bear me out that my suspicion is well founded.

543. By the Chairman: Have you taken any steps to ascertain whether that suspicion is correct? I asked the man if he had signed this document with the signature of Cheshier which it bore, and he denied that he did; but I am still satisfied that it is the handwriting of Wiley. In fact it was that circumstance that drew my attention to the forgery, seeing the body of the voucher made out in the handwriting of the sergeant-major, and the signature purporting to be that of the landlord in the handwriting of his clerk.

544. By Mr. Hellyer: Wiley is still attached to the force, is he not? He is a trooper in the police.

545. No proceedings have been taken against him? None.

546. You say your letter of instructions directed you to prosecute all who were concerned in the forgery? Yes.

547. Why did you not prosecute Wiley? Because it was a mere suspicion that he was implicated.

548. Had you anything more than a suspicion with respect to Lawrence? Yes, I had. There was a voucher filled up by him, witnessed by him, and a signature appended which I had previously ascertained to be a forgery.

549. Does not your own mind draw a distinction between witnessing a document and forging it? I have no doubt they were acting in concert.

550. That is no answer. Do you draw no distinction between witnessing a forged signature and forging it, or do you call them both forgeries? I call them both forgeries.

551. You have Rorison's declaration before you of the 1st of December? That is the declaration he made to Captain Battye—yes.

552. Will you look at it for a moment;—you see that he states in the last four lines, "I have seen the chief constable since, whom I told that the account was perfectly correct as to the dates; that I had not drawn forage for those dates; that the expenses incurred were correct, but had been placed in one voucher as due to Cheshier, as I had not paid him but had the others"? I do.

553. Do you believe it? I do not.

554. Do you believe the statement he made before Mr. Beardmore that he had never seen the document before it was shown to him at Carcoar? I do.

555. But not the statement he made to the chief constable that the account was correct? I take them to be a confirmation of my suspicion that there had been collusive arrangements between Lawrence and himself.

556. You speak of collusive arrangements—have you any foundation for doing so? I have facts.

557. Are you aware that at this time Lawrence was out in the discharge of his duties? Yes, he was at the station where Rorison was stationed.

558. Do you not know that this declaration of Rorison was taken without the knowledge of Lawrence? I do not think it was—it was taken at Bathurst.

559. Why do you not think so? Because I do not see any grounds for believing it, particularly as Rorison went to Bathurst to make the declaration.

560. Did you consult the diary of the establishment, to see where Lawrence was at the time this declaration was taken? No, I did not.

561. The statement referred to is that marked with the letter C on page 5—the statement made by Rorison before Captain Battye? Yes.

562. In Captain Battye's deposition on page 3, reference is made to it;—Captain Battye there says—"Rorison's statement (marked C) was made to me in consequence of what I heard from Sergeant-Major Lawrence; upon hearing his report I immediately sent for Rorison." It appears by this that Lawrence himself reported the matter? Only after a communication from Rorison, which convinces me the more strongly that they had collusion.

563. Did you see the communication he made to Captain Battye? I believe the attention of Captain Battye was first drawn to the impropriety on the part of Lawrence by the Police Magistrate who inquired into the matters connected with this voucher.

564. Was it not the duty of Lawrence, notwithstanding anything done by the Police Magistrate, to report it to his superior officer? It was no part of his duty, because he must have been aware that Mr. Beardmore, as a Magistrate, had only been acting under instructions. Mr. Beardmore, he must have known, would never undertake to put such questions to a member of the patrol unless he had been requested and authorized to do so.

565. Does it not occur to you, then, that a man not compelled to make the report as a part of his duty, was likely to connive at a forgery and afterwards report it to his superior officer? The forgery was discovered before it was reported to Captain Battye.

566. Do you consider that Lawrence not being compelled, as it formed no part of his duty, to report what information he had received from Rorison, was likely, if he were guilty of a forgery, to report it to Captain Battye? The probability would be that if he were guilty of it he would take all the steps he could to quash the matter and have it stifled.

- John M'Lerie, Esq. 567. Was the information he gave to Captain Battye likely to have the effect of quashing it? He might have thought so at the time.
- 16 Sept., 1862. 568. As you consider that this conduct was not likely to be the conduct of a guilty man, how is it that you consider Lawrence guilty of this fraud? From all the facts within my knowledge in connection with the matter.
569. What fraud has been committed? It was an attempt at fraud. If the voucher had passed, the Government would have been charged with this £2 8s. not properly due.
570. Then what fraud has been committed? The tendering a forged voucher for the payment of public moneys.
571. That you call a fraud? A serious fraud.
572. Do you consider it an embezzlement, a misappropriation of public money, or an irregularity? I consider it a very serious offence.
573. Why was not Captain Battye prosecuted? He was not charged with an embezzlement.
574. Have you any letter of instructions upon which you proceeded to Bathurst in connection with this matter? Yes.
575. Will you be kind enough to hand it to the Committee? I will if it is required. (Vide Appendix.)
576. Are you aware that at the time Lawrence is said to have called upon Cheshier he was in the discharge of his duty? I am not aware of that, but the probability is that he was so. He was absent from his station.
577. Do you not know that he was directed to go? I do not.
578. Did you inquire from Captain Battye if such was the case? No.
579. You conclude that he went there purposely to obtain the acquiescence of Cheshier in the charges made in the voucher, and to get him to receive the money, so as to quash the fraud? I merely judge from the sworn evidence of Cheshier, where he says—"I saw Sergeant-Major Lawrence about a month ago; he said if I made out a bill of what I charged he would pay it to me."
580. Did you notice the statement made by Lawrence before the Commission (page 11)? A bill had then already been made out.
581. Not a bill? A voucher.
582. Look at that statement;—Lawrence says—"I know the voucher marked A; it was filled in and witnessed by me; it is all in my handwriting except the signatures E. M. Battye and John Cheshier; the names of Cheshier were signed by trooper Rorison in my presence; the voucher purports to be entirely for sums due to Cheshier, but I was aware contained items stated to have been paid to other persons by Rorison; the voucher was drawn from the memorandum marked B, rendered to me by Rorison; when I had prepared the voucher I handed it across the table to Rorison, instructing him to get it signed by Cheshier; he said 'I have got Cheshier's authority, and I told him that I would sign the voucher for him'; he then did so and I attested his signature; it was an occasional practice to include in one voucher items due to different people when the money had been paid by the troopers; I have not been on good terms with Rorison since my committal." This evidence of Lawrence before the Commission you pass by unnoticed, then? It is at variance with the evidence given by Rorison; and the evidence of one neutralizes the other, because Rorison states positively that when the document was shown to him at Carcoar he had never seen it before. He must then have been stating that which was untrue, or this evidence by Lawrence is not correct.
583. By the Chairman: You have seen the sworn evidence of Rorison before the Judge at the trial? Which resulted in the accused being discharged.
584. There is no material discrepancy between that and the statement of Lawrence? No.
585. By Mr. Hellyer: Will you refer to Rorison's evidence on page 10. In a portion of his statement he says—"I had a conversation with Lawrence about Cheshier's account; I told him that I owed him for two nights for my horse; Cheshier had told me that he would not charge me; I considered that he referred to myself alone, and not for my horse; we paid for ourselves and the Government for the horses; it was a general custom at public-houses to charge for the horses alone; I considered at the time I rendered the memorandum that Cheshier had to be paid for the horse; I have served for some time under Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and was always on good terms with him; I estimated myself the charge for the horse at Cheshier's according to charges in the neighbourhood; the memorandum marked B is in my handwriting, and is the memorandum above referred to; by the wording of the document, and my explanation to Lawrence, he must have understood that I had either paid already or was responsible for all the items." Do you believe Rorison there? It is impossible to say which is right. If you look at the first three lines of Rorison's statement, and then at the first three of that made by Lawrence, it is impossible to say which is correct.
586. Does not the voucher itself turn the scale? No. Lawrence in the first part of his statement says, "I know the voucher marked A; it was filled in and witnessed by me; it is all in my handwriting except the signatures E. M. Battye and John Cheshier; the names of Cheshier were signed by Trooper Rorison in my presence." On the other hand, Rorison in the first part of his statement says, "I know the voucher marked A; I saw it first in the hands of Mr. Beardmore, again at the Police Office in Bathurst, and then at the trial at the Assizes; the body is in the handwriting of Lawrence, as also his own signature; I do not know in whose handwriting are the signatures John Cheshier." Who is to believe either of these statements as correct?
587. I am calling your attention to the statement of Rorison as to the conversation at the office with Lawrence? It is impossible to say which is telling the truth, Lawrence or Rorison.
588. You say Rorison states that he had never seen the voucher before he saw it at Carcoar? Yes.
- 589.

589. Which was telling the truth in that matter, Rorison or Lawrence? Rorison's evidence is to a certain extent borne out by the fact that the name John Cheshier was written by a person at that time employed in the office. John M^r Lerie,
Esq.

590. But that person (Wiley) denies it? It is not Rorison's handwriting. Lawrence states that this voucher was signed by Rorison. Now I have here a specimen of the handwriting of the person I suspect did sign it; and on a comparison of Rorison's and Wiley's handwriting, I am more convinced than ever that Rorison did not sign it. 16 Sept., 1862.

591. Supposing you were signing a false document, would you write the signature in your ordinary hand? No; though it is a thing I never attempted.

592. Is it likely that if Wiley wrote the name of Cheshier he would write it in his ordinary hand? Yes.

593. Is it not more likely that he would try to write it like the handwriting of Cheshier himself? If he was acting under the instructions of Lawrence, who might just say—"Put Cheshier's name to this"—I think he would not alter his handwriting. The forgery was committed in the office.

594. Will you refer to the statement, in page 10, in which Rorison says—"I do not believe I could have told Mr. Beardmore that Cheshier made no charge for the horse, because I did not then know that he could not charge; I cannot recollect whether I said anything to Mr. Beardmore about having rendered an account to Lawrence; when Mr. Beardmore asked me about Cheshier having charged I thought he was referring to my own private charge, and not to that for the horses on account of the Government; when I told Mr. Beardmore that I never rendered such an account to Lawrence I meant for six nights at Cheshier's." In the last four lines he states—"At the trial I stated that I believed I had not rendered an account shewing Cheshier's account as paid by me; I saw afterwards, by memorandum B, that I had included it with other items which I had paid, and the memorandum was marked accordingly." Now assuming that Rorison did make the statement to Sergeant-Major Lawrence that these charges in the vouchers were correct, that he had stayed at this place, and that the amounts had been paid, does that palliate the irregularity in witnessing the document? No, it does not justify the commission of a forgery.

595. Of course it would be an irregularity if done by Captain Battye—he could not commit any crime—his was a mere irregularity—an indiscretion of youth? I do not know.

596. Have you any of the pay abstracts for the Western Patrol? I have not; they are all in the Audit Office.

597. Do you know whether an abstract relative to night money for Sergeant-Major Lawrence has been passed? I am not aware that any vouchers on account of the Western Patrol remain unpaid.

598. Do you know that such a voucher has been passed? I do not; but if it has been passed the money has been paid.

599. To whom? If it was passed when Captain Battye was in charge of the patrol it has been paid to the public account.

600. You have nothing with you that would enable you to say whether it was or was not? I have not; but if I had thought a question of that kind was likely to be asked I would have called at the Audit Office and have ascertained.

601. Are you not aware that that night money has been referred to before? Yes.

602. And that correspondence respecting it has been handed in? Yes; and judging from what appears in that correspondence it would appear that inquiry was necessary. That money was paid to Captain Battye, and if any night money was due Captain Battye would have it—it would be paid to him for the service.

603. Do you think that by the payment of the money to Captain Battye the Government relieve themselves of the responsibility? No; but I think that officer is responsible for the payment of the money on behalf of the Government.

604. Is it not necessary that an abstract shall be sent to the parties before the payments are made? It was at one time; it has however ceased in my department, and other arrangements are made under the authority of the Chief Secretary.

605. How long is it since these instructions that you refer to came into force? In about the month of April in the present year. No receipts are under any circumstances to be sent in until the money has been actually paid. There is a copy of the Chief Secretary's instructions with regard to the police accounts.

606. Do you know who signed the abstracts for the payment of this night money? It would be required that they should be signed by Sergeant-Major Lawrence and the officer in charge of the patrol. The money could not be paid unless it was vouched for in that way by the signatures of the claimant and the officer in charge. If not so vouched for the money could not have been paid, because the voucher would be incomplete.

607. By the Chairman: Have you stated it as a fact that the money has been paid? No; but I am not aware that any money remains unpaid on account of night money for the Western Patrol.

608. By Mr. Hellyer: You state that a fraud to the extent of £2 8s. would have been committed;—now are you not aware that Rorison himself had paid for everything charged in this account, with the exception of 16s.? I am not aware of it.

609. Have you made any inquiries from Captain Battye with regard to the production of all vouchers or receipts from the other parties excepting Cheshier? No, I can only recognize Cheshier as claiming the payment of this amount of £2 8s.

610. You have seen the voucher or account marked B, on page 11? Yes; I never saw it until it came to my office.

611. Were you not told that Rorison had produced to Captain Battye four receipts out of the five? I am not aware of it; he may have done so.

- John M^cLerie, Esq.
16 Sept., 1862.
612. You say that £2 8s. would have been the amount of the fraud; now if Rorison produced vouchers for the payment of all except 16s., the amount of this alleged fraud would be reduced to that sum? Yes, but it would still be a fraud.
613. The money would be paid to Captain Battye? The amount would be placed to the public account of Captain Battye, and he would be so advised that it was placed to his credit at the branch bank in Bathurst.
614. The authority is to pay to his public account? Yes.
615. And if a fraud had been committed it would have been upon Captain Battye's public account? Yes, because a cheque for the amount would have been handed to Lawrence.
616. Inasmuch then as no money was sent to his public account, and as no payment was made, where is the fraud? The fraud has not been committed, but a forged voucher has been tendered with a view to obtaining the money. I merely call attention to Lawrence's own statement in connection with the horse, that he would have got the cheque from Captain Battye, and have sent it to M^cDonald, the claimant; and he admits that to be the practice.
617. You have seen Captain Battye's evidence, in which he says what he would have done in the matter? Yes.
618. By the Chairman: You stated just now, in answer to a question from Mr. Hellyer, that there was a great discrepancy between the evidence of Rorison and that of Lawrence? Yes.
619. And you seem still to give the preference to the evidence of Rorison? No, I say it is impossible to decide which is true; one must be false.
620. Are you not aware that Rorison, upon more than one occasion, has been examined upon oath? I believe he was examined upon oath before the committing Magistrates, and before the Judge at the trial.
621. Notwithstanding Rorison's evidence upon oath, the jury thought fit to acquit Lawrence of any blame in the matter? I am aware that he was acquitted by the jury.
622. And why then do you consider that you cannot place any credit in the statement of Lawrence? Because, taking all the circumstances together, I hold him to be more deeply implicated in the attempted fraud than Rorison.
623. Then you do not think the jury took a correct view of the evidence? They may have taken a proper view of the evidence before them.
624. That evidence is before us? Yes, and it is at variance with Rorison's previous evidence.
625. Would it not convince you that Rorison was telling an untruth, when you find his statement before Mr. Beardmore directly conflicting with his sworn evidence? It showed me that Lawrence and Rorison had been acting collusively.
626. Rorison has been dismissed from the service since then? He never did duty after he gave evidence before the Court at Bathurst. He was dismissed at the same time as Lawrence, at my recommendation.
627. For what offence? For the reason I have just given—that they acted collusively in this matter to defeat the ends of justice; and I am still of that opinion.
628. You are aware that a Commission was appointed at Bathurst, to which you yourself consented, and that one of your own officers, Mr. Chatfield, then Superintendent of the Western Patrol, was one of the Commission? I am aware of that.
629. And that their opinion was that there could not have been collusion between Lawrence and Rorison? Here is the report.
630. That report says—"From the opportunities we have had of looking through the whole matter, we are satisfied that between Lawrence and Rorison there was no collusion, and that the feeling existing between them was and now is most inimical; and we conceive that Lawrence is still willing, as stated in his letter of the 28th March, to give and procure, or endeavour to procure, evidence against Rorison." Now what reasons, if any, have you for differing so widely as you do from the conclusions of the jury and of the Commission? From all the facts that have come before me in the matter, either in evidence or in this printed paper.
631. Notwithstanding that the jury had an opportunity of examining witnesses upon oath, and notwithstanding the opportunities the Commissioners had of obtaining full evidence on the matter, and that both acquitted Lawrence, you still persist in the opinion that Lawrence is guilty? I do.
632. I should like to hear you give some good grounds for that opinion? I think I have.
633. You state an opinion that there was collusion between them? If you like I will go over the ground again. In the first instance there is the transmission of a forged document to my office for the payment of money, which money was never claimed. That document is made out in the handwriting of Lawrence.
634. I believe you stated in evidence that you gave orders to withhold the money? I could not, because it was never paid.
635. I think you stated that you took good care that it should not be paid? The money has never been paid.
636. But would there be any other way of making application for the money except by the transmission of the voucher and by the passing of the documents through the regular form? No.
637. Then you refused to transmit the money on account of some view you yourself took of the matter? I refused to pay the money because the document claiming it is a forgery.
638. Is the Committee to understand that you still believe Lawrence intended to keep the money? That must be the object of his sending such a voucher.
639. You think so notwithstanding that Captain Battye states, in his sworn evidence, that in the ordinary course of such payments he would have handed the money to Lawrence?
Captain

Captain Battye says so, but it is not the practice. I again draw attention to what Lawrence said about the horses, namely that if the money was paid to Captain Battye he would have obtained a cheque, and have sent it to M'Donald.

640. That is a different case; he was then responsible for the payment of the money, having bought the horses? That was the proper course to take.

641. You still believe that there was collusion between Lawrence and Rorison? I do.

642. Now, supposing the money had gone into Lawrence's hands, is it likely that he was going to keep it all himself—would there not have been a partition of it between himself and Rorison? I cannot say, but if so they would have shared the spoil. No intention of that sort is proved.

643. Is it not clearly proved that Rorison was a party to the voucher? No, he swears that he never saw the document until he saw it in Mr. Beardmore's hands.

644. That evidence was not upon oath? No.

645. What did he afterwards swear? That he never saw it until it was handed to him by Mr. Beardmore at Carcoar on the 23rd November. On page 10 you will find in his evidence before the Board of Inquiry—"I know the voucher marked A; I saw it first in the hands of Mr. Beardmore, again at the Police Office in Bathurst, and then at the trial at the Assizes." That is his statement before the Commission, and then there is Lawrence's statement before the same Commission:—"I know the voucher marked A; it was filled in and witnessed by me; it is all in my handwriting, except the signatures E. M. Battye and John Cheshier; the names of Cheshier were signed by Trooper Rorison in my presence."

646. By Mr. Hart: Was Rorison examined at the preliminary trial before the Magistrates? Yes, he was the principal witness.

647. By the Chairman: Will you be kind enough to state the special grounds upon which Lawrence was dismissed? If you refer to my letter to the Government I think you will find them.

648. If I remember rightly, the documents were placed in Rorison's hand when he was giving evidence before the Judge, and induced the Judge to stop the case? They gave him an acquittal.

649. You say then that Rorison must have perjured himself, as he told different stories on the two different occasions? Yes.

650. By Mr. Hellyer: Have you any letter conveying the directions to Mr. Chatfield for instituting this inquiry? I have not a copy with me, but I can send it over.

651. Had you any voice in the appointment of that Commission, as to the selection of the parties? No; they were selected by the Chief Secretary.

652. Mr. Chatfield was a member of your force at that time, was he not? He was.

653. By the Chairman: You had an opportunity of objecting to any of the parties selected for that Commission? No.

654. By Mr. Hellyer: You were consulted as to their selection? Mr. Cowper named them to me. He said he had named the Police Magistrate, the Superintendent of the Western Patrol, and an unpaid Magistrate to sit on the inquiry; he said that Mr. Hawkins would be one.

655. Mr. Chatfield was then Superintendent of the Western Patrol, and now holds that office? Yes, he now holds the office of Superintendent of Police.

656. Your opinion is different from his upon the question of their finding? It is.

657. How does it happen that the report of the 22nd November, 1861, was forwarded to your department? Their report?

658. Yes. Mr. Chatfield must have forwarded the document to you? I do not think he did. If it was addressed to the Principal Under Secretary it could not have come to me.

659. Have you a letter from him dated the 22nd November, 1861? No; the Board was convened by the Chief Secretary, and the report would of course be sent in to the Under Secretary.

660. Do you say that the report was not sent to you? It must have been sent to me by the Principal Under Secretary.

661. By the Chairman: It does not appear so by your letter, because you say, "I now do myself the honor to transmit, for the information of the Chief Secretary, the Report of this Board upon the matter referred to." So that it appears the report comes first from you? The report must have been sent to me by the Under Secretary in the first instance. It is dated the 22nd November, and has my stamp of the 25th, when it reached my office.

662. By Mr. Cowper: Was not a letter sent with it? No; if there had been one it would have been here. That letter would have been forwarded by me with the proceedings of the Board, to the Principal Under Secretary, and no reference is made to one in my letter.

663. By the Chairman: With reference to the money being paid to Lawrence, it is to be inferred, as a natural consequence, with reference to such matters as this, where you suspect a collusion for the purposes of fraud, between the parties, that the money would have been divided? I suppose that if both were mixed up in the fraud, they would have a mutual interest.

664. Then the whole they could have obtained by such means is but £2 8s., I believe? Just so.

665. Then, supposing it to be divided, it would leave each the sum of £1 4s.? If the division was equitable.

666. Do you suppose it probable that a man in Mr. Lawrence's position would run the risk attending the commission of a fraud for the sake of such a sum as £1 4s.? There are instances of persons in much higher positions doing dirtier things than that.

667. You never had other complaints of the same character against Lawrence? No.

668. This is the only case you know of? The only case I know of.

669. The special grounds you give for Lawrence's dismissal are, I believe, that he is suspected of collusion with Rorison? Yes.

John M'Levie, Esq. 670. You had no other charges against him? No, but by that I believe the ends of justice were defeated.

671. Were there any other reasons coupled with that? No.

16 Sept., 1862. 672. And up to that time, as far as you have had opportunities of informing yourself, he has been a very efficient officer, and a man of good character? There has not been a word against him. I never saw him before this case arose, but from what I heard of the way in which his duty was performed I looked upon him as a very efficient police officer.

673. Did you instruct the Police Magistrate at Bathurst not to take bail in Lawrence's case? I have already answered that question, and distinctly denied having done so. I would not presume to take such a liberty with any Magistrate as to direct him how he should do his duty.

674. You have read Dr. Palmer's evidence before the Commission? Yes.

675. And notwithstanding Dr. Palmer's evidence, who was then acting as Superintendent of the Western Patrol, and the other evidence given before this Commission, you still remain of the opinion that there must have been collusion between Lawrence and Rorison? I do.

676. Dr. Palmer says in his evidence, "I always considered Lawrence a trustworthy and efficient officer; I had, and have still, a high opinion of him." You do not know what has become of Rorison now? No. I believe some allusion was made to his having become a National schoolmaster.

677. I have been so informed, but I do not know whether any reference was made to you as to his character? No reference of the kind was made to me.

678. By Mr. Cowper: Supposing your suspicions with regard to the collusion between Lawrence and Rorison were not altogether well founded, do you consider that the irregularity which is called by the Board "a grave irregularity, not warranted by the very improper practice formerly obtaining to a certain extent in the patrol office," was not of itself sufficient to justify his dismissal? I think so. I think it was sufficient to justify the dismissal of any public officer; it was a perfectly sufficient reason.

679. And that there are grave objections to receiving back into the force a person so guilty of such irregularity? I think very grave objections.

680. By the Chairman: But you have, in other instances, reinstated persons who have been guilty of graver charges than that? Not with my knowledge, certainly.

681. I think it must be within your knowledge that persons have been replaced in the force, perhaps not exactly in the same situation, who have committed offences that occasioned their dismissal? It is not within my knowledge that any person who had committed such an offence as that which, I consider, was committed by Lawrence, has been received into the force again.

682. Supposing it to be an irregularity, do you conceive that it would be a palliation of the offence if it could be shown that such a custom had prevailed, not only in that, but other Government departments;—do you not know that it is customary, at the present day, to witness signatures for the payment of public moneys, by people who never saw the signature? No. It would be a palliation certainly, if this document had been sent to Chesher for signature, and Lawrence knew that the signature was his; but it is no palliation to attach his signature as a witness to a signature which has been forged. If the document had been sent to Chesher, and had been signed by him, and then, when it was sent back, had Lawrence witnessed the signature under the impression that it was Chesher's, that would have been a palliation; but for witnessing a document with a forged signature there is no palliation.

683. But if he does not see the signature affixed, where is the difference? There is this difference—that in the one case the document would be sent to Chesher for signature, but Chesher never saw the document.

684. Is it not a fact that Captain Battye signed the same document Lawrence is stated to have signed, upon the representation by Rorison, his subordinate, just under the same circumstance, namely, on the representation of his subordinate Lawrence? The statement is denied by Rorison; he states that he never saw the document before it was handed to him by Mr. Beardmore, at Carcoar.

685. By Mr. Hart: In whose handwriting is the document marked B, on page 11—do you know? I think that is in Rorison's handwriting.

686. And when was this first produced? I do not know. I found it among the papers sent back to me.

687. If Lawrence's statement that Rorison represented to him that he had authority to affix Chesher's signature to the document be correct, would your suspicions against Lawrence be still the same? Yes.

688. You consider that that document was got up afterwards for the purpose of exculpating Lawrence? That is my impression.

689. By Mr. Sadleir: You consider an officer ought to be dismissed for this grave irregularity, as it is called by the Commission—was that the only reason for his dismissal? No, that is not the only reason, as you will see by my letter to the Government.

690. That states several reasons; among others, you say the moral evidence of collusion is most systematic and complete—have you any proof of that? The proof is in the facts.

691. You refer to an understanding between Lawrence and Rorison that they should appear hostile to each other, for the purpose of cheating the Government and carrying out this fraud—have you any proof of that? Not for that purpose. The probability is that this hostility never existed.

692. Do you think that, after a man is tried by a jury, and acquitted honorably—tried by a Commission, and acquitted of every thing but a grave irregularity which is said to be common in all departments of the public service—he should still be considered and treated as criminal? If there is no doubt that the offence was committed.

693. But he is acquitted in both cases? But if I knew a man guilty of a grave and disgraceful offence, notwithstanding his acquittal, I would not allow him to remain in the force. John M'Levie,
Esq.

694. But how is the man's innocence to be proved if it be not done by the acquittal given him by the jury and the Commission, who must be supposed to have had full evidence of the facts. In page 12 a doubt appears to be expressed in a letter from the Under Secretary to Mr. Rotton, whether the alleged offence is an irregularity or a fraud. It says, "That these irregularities, if not frauds, had been so long tolerated as to have become systematic, is no palliation, in Mr. Cowper's judgment, of Lawrence's connivance at them." It seems hard to settle whether it is an irregularity or a fraud. The Government seem to have treated it as a fraud by dismissing him? I have no hesitation in coming to an opinion upon the matter. 16 Sept. 1862.

695. Can you put your opinion against the decision of the jury and Commission? If the jury had not all the facts put properly before them.

696. By the Chairman: You were consulted, I believe, previously to the appointment of the Commission to inquire into Lawrence's case? I was not consulted. Mr. Cowper told me that, on my representation, he intended to have a Commission appointed.

697. You must recollect that a conversation took place between Mr. Cowper, yourself, and myself, in Mr. Cowper's office, when Mr. Cowper consulted you on the matter at the time, asking you if you had any objection, and you said you had none? No, I offered none.

698. You are aware, I believe, that my application to the Colonial Secretary was to prevent the necessity of bringing the matter before Parliament? I am.

699. Although not in express terms, was it not tacitly understood that all parties were to abide the decision of that Commission? It might have been your own impression, not mine.

700. What was the use of appointing a Commission if its decision was ignored? I do not know.

701. At any rate, you are aware that an application was made by me for the appointment of a Commission to inquire into the case, with a view to saving the necessity of bringing the matter before Parliament, and the trouble of obtaining a Committee of Inquiry? You have told me that you would rather have a Commission to inquire into the matter than have to bring it before Parliament.

702. To save the trouble and waste of time attendant upon such inquiries as this? Yes.

703. At any rate, the report of the Commission is to some extent favourable to Lawrence? It does not acquit him.

704. Have you read the commission? I have.

705. The instructions were, I presume, to inquire into the charge of collusion, and not with reference to the previous charge, of which he was acquitted? They were accidentally obliged to make inquiry into the facts in both cases.

706. You will be kind enough to look at the 3rd paragraph of the Report from the Commission. It says—"The verdict of the jury, coupled with the remark of the Chief Justice, that "Mr. Lawrence left the Court without any stain upon his character, disposes of the original charge of forgery, in the criminal sense of the term"—do you not agree with that? Perhaps so, in the criminal sense of the term.

707. Then in the 9th paragraph, they entirely acquit Mr. Lawrence of any collusion with Rorison. They say—"From the opportunities we have had of looking through the whole matter, we are satisfied that between Lawrence and Rorison there was no collusion, and that the feeling existing between them was and now is most inimical." And they go on to state that Lawrence was and still is willing to give evidence against Rorison? That is the report.

708. And so far the Commission has acquitted him? They have.

709. And they wind up their report with the recommendation that his case be favourably considered by the Government? They do.

APPENDIX.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 14 December, 1860.*

Sir,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, enclosing vouchers and other papers, having reference to the accounts of the Western Mounted Patrol for forage supplied to troop horses, when absent from their stations.

2. It would appear from these documents, which are herewith returned, that there is strong ground for believing, amounting almost to positive proof, that the Government has been defrauded in this case certainly, probably in others. But it is impossible to determine this, without inquiry of the parties who may be implicated.

3. The Colonial Secretary therefore thinks that you should proceed to Bathurst forthwith, and take all proper steps for bringing the delinquents to justice; and besides proceeding against the actual participators in the fraud at the Police Office, Mr. Cowper would wish you to satisfy yourself, if you can, whether the system has gone to any great extent beyond this particular instance, and upon whom the blame rests.

4. As these charges are not made in the Southern and Northern Districts of the Colony, the Colonial Secretary cannot understand why they should be allowed in the West. You will report whether the practice of drawing this forage, which prevails in the Western District alone, cannot be discontinued.

W. ELYARD.

The Inspector General of Police.

FRIDAY,

FRIDAY, 19 SEPTEMBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,
MR. MACLEAY,MR. HART,
MR. LACKEY.

HENRY ROTTON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Hellyer appeared as Solicitor for the Petitioner.

Edward Alexander Rennie, Esq., called in and examined:—

- E. A. Rennie, Esq.
19 Sept., 1862.
710. By the Chairman: You are subpoenaed to produce some papers—do you produce them? I have got some of them with me, and some are coming down from the office.
711. By Mr. Hellyer: Have you the night returns of the Western Patrol for the years 1859 and 1860? I have some of them—as many as I could trace. If you could specify any particular ones I can pick them out for you.
712. Will you produce those that have reference to Sergeant-Major Lawrence's performance of duty at night? Yes.
713. Can you produce the returns of any particular month? No, I do not know that I can. Here is one from January to March, 1859, the time in which Mr. Lawrence was employed. (Document produced.)
714. Is there any pay abstract in which the payment of these night returns will appear? That (document previously produced) is the pay abstract.
715. They are paid monthly, are they? Sometimes they are paid monthly. This is a quarterly abstract. The next one happens to be a monthly one—for the month of April.
716. I am afraid we must have them, sir, if you please? Each of them?
717. Yes, if you please, although I dare say the Committee will take one as the form of return for all. The receipts have been signed in blank? The following one is an acquittance (document produced). That is for the month of April.
718. That you call a complete one? Yes.
719. It is without the signature of the Clerk of Petty Sessions? The Clerk of Petty Sessions does not require to sign those forms.
720. This one is signed by Captain Battye, I see? Yes. This is signed by Dr. Palmer; it is a complete voucher.
721. That is between the 1st April —? For the month of April, 1859. These are the only two I have brought with me for 1859. The others are in the office, but I could get them up, and refer to any one you wish.
722. Do you know how the payments would be made under these abstracts, or when? Well, that abstract is paid by the Inspector General of Police in full, in one sum. For anything we know he pays them individually, but I believe —
723. You do not know anything about it yourself? No. That (abstract before Committee) is the abstract produced in support of the full sum paid by the Inspector General on a certain date. The date is June 7th.
724. And the payment would be made on June 7th? On that day—when the Inspector General paid the whole amount in gross.
725. The receipt of 1st April would not be an acquittance for payment then made? There is no date to the acquittance beyond this.
726. The receipt of the 1st April would not be for a payment made on that day? It is necessary for that to be sent down in this way to obtain payment from the Government in the first instance? That is the abstract of their claims for the month of April.
727. That is more correctly an abstract of claims than an abstract of receipts? Yes, the receipt or acquittance ought to be a subsequent completion of the document.
728. It ought to be? Yes.
729. But it is not? I could not say that.
730. Do you not receive these documents in the state they are in now? We do; that purports to have been paid on the 7th June.
731. And was so returned to you? To us.
732. By the Inspector General? Yes.
733. Is it not the custom that abstracts have to be signed by the parties entitled to receive moneys long before the payments are made? I believe that is the practice, but as we do not pay money we do not know.
734. Have you the pay abstracts for the Western Patrol for the year 1860? Yes.
735. Will you produce the abstracts for about September or October, 1860? Here is the abstract for September (document produced) and here is that for October (also produced).
736. Would the same remark have reference to this latter voucher—that it is an abstract of claims rather than an abstract of payments? Well, it is both; it is an abstract of claims prior to the signatures being attached to the acquittances.
737. And when the signatures are attached? It becomes both an abstract of claims and an abstract of payments.
738. Although no payment is made? No; these claims then purport to have been paid by the Inspector General.
739. Will you state at what time the Inspector General returns those payments to have been made? The date is not marked on this voucher; it is on some of the others; but I could find out the date when he reports this to have been paid, from his cash statement.
740. Have you that with you? No, but I can send for it if it is important.

741. If you can do so in two instances, we will not trouble you for any more—they will establish the rule? Yes. There are no dates marked on these. These (produced) are charged as paid in the months of October and November respectively. Some time in the month of October this September abstract is charged as paid, and some time in November this October abstract is charged as paid, but the exact date is not marked on the voucher. The August one is marked as paid on 17th September. E. A. Rennie,
Esq.
19 Sept., 1862.
742. The pay abstracts are signed by the parties before any payment is made to them? That I could not say.
743. But if you look at the date of the abstracts, you see that the August abstract is paid in September, and the September abstract in October? Yes, but it does not at all follow that the names are there before the date of payment.
744. Is it not a custom in your own office—Have you not to sign your own abstracts before you get payment? No, we generally get payment on the same day we sign.
745. But before you get payment you sign the abstract? No, not always.
746. Never at any time? Well, I might have done so for my own salary in the office, certainly, but it would be on the same day. We never used to do it until we actually got paid, when we were paid direct from the Treasury. When we pay ourselves, the paying clerk hands round the money, and sometimes the abstract is sent round for signature afterwards.
747. But that would not be the course pursued in the country districts, where the money is paid by the Inspector General? He must have an agent on the spot to pay—he cannot pay himself.
748. But supposing the agent does not pay at all? That is a matter between the Inspector General and the agent.
749. Would you call those receipts the acquittances? Yes, the Inspector General produces these, and they bear on their face evidence that the money has been received. Each of the parties states that he has received the sum opposite to his name from the Inspector General of Police, in full, of his pay and his allowances.
750. Do you know whether the payments to the Western Patrol, in the year 1860, were regularly made? For anything I know to the contrary they were.
751. For anything you know to the contrary? Yes.
752. Do you know anything about Captain Battye's payments? These are Captain Battye's payments.
753. That is why I asked you—do you know whether Captain Battye's payments were punctually made? There is nothing in our office to the contrary.
754. I am asking you whether you know it of your own knowledge? Officially, I do not know anything about it.
755. I did not ask that? I know nothing beyond rumours that the payments were not regularly made.
756. By Mr. Cowper: You know nothing about it, in fact? Nothing came before us in the examination of these accounts to show that there had been any irregularity.
757. By the Chairman: Are not those accounts furnished to you from the Treasury before payments are made there;—are they not forwarded to the Auditor General's Office to see if they are correct, before payments are made? Not these; these are paid by the Inspector General of Police; they are not payments made direct from the Treasury.
758. By Mr. Hellyer: Will you state the date for which the payments of the two vouchers produced were made? The payment for the month of September is entered in the cash account of the Inspector General of Police as having been made on the 15th October following; the entry of payment for October is dated the 9th November.
759. By the Chairman: Is there any difference, then, with regard to practice between the police service and other services, in respect to payments? Not that I am aware of.
760. But with respect to contractors, for instance, who have claims upon the Government—is it not a fact that their accounts are first examined at the Audit Office before they are paid by the Treasury? There are very few payments now made direct from the Treasury. There are no contractors' payments, I think, that are now paid direct at the Treasury; if there be they are very limited in number.
761. Do you not know that it is the practice for contractors, and almost all persons who have claims upon the Government, to sign vouchers, or abstracts, or whatever you call them, before they actually receive the money? I believe that is the general practice. Most of the vouchers upon which money is paid direct from the Treasury come with the signature attached to the form of acquittance, but the acquittance is not filled up until after the payment is made.
762. Then you would not have any opportunity of ascertaining when the payments due by the Police Department are made, because it seems that you pay the whole of the money for that department in a lump sum to Captain M'Levie, and that the payments are made by him? Yes, the Inspector General.
763. By Mr. Cowper: That is, the payments are made by the Treasury? Yes.
764. You do not pay at all? No, we pass the warrants.
765. You have no opportunity of knowing when the Inspector General makes his payments? The only opportunity is that of referring to his cash account.
766. By Mr. Hellyer: Have you there the acquittance from the 1st November to the 30th November? This is part of it (document produced), and this (another document) is the remainder.
767. You see the names of George Pool, Warrington, and Wallings? Yes.
768. They are in that abstract? Yes.
769. That is your acquittance for payment? Exactly.
770. Of course you do not know whether payments have been made? No.

- E. A. Rennie, Esq.
19 Sept., 1862.
771. You find the names here also (September) Thomas Wallings, and in the next page, Pool and Warrington? Yes.
772. The names are on that? Yes, Pool and Warrington for October, and Wallings for October. They are acquittances.
773. For the pay of those men for those months? Yes, for the month of October.
774. By Mr. Hart: Will you state what is the proper course to pursue to obtain payment from the Government for any services rendered to the Police Department, such, for instance as the supply of forage? The claims are made out on the prescribed form for supplies of forage, and sent to the Inspector General of Police, certified by the officer who orders the forage to be supplied; that is the usual course.
775. And what follows then? The Inspector General satisfies himself as to the correctness of the claim, and pays it.
776. He having a sum of money at his disposal for that purpose? Yes.
777. And it is essential to the validity of every document, I presume, that it should be properly signed and witnessed? Well the witnessing is not essential.
778. That is not necessary? No; we used to make it an imperative rule that every voucher should be witnessed, but we do not insist on that now. The officer who pays may insist for his own security.
779. That is merely for his satisfaction as to the authenticity of the signature? Partly that, and partly to show the fact of the payment having been made; that is the chief object of the voucher being witnessed.
780. But has a voucher to be first sent into the Inspector General, and after he passes that voucher, is it necessary to obtain another document giving an acquittance to the Inspector General for the amount, or is it one and the same document? It is the same document. The form provides for the acquittance being taken upon it.
781. Is it the custom for persons to whom the Government is indebted to sign a discharge before receiving payment? I believe it is the practice; it is generally done, I know.
782. Then it would appear that the regulations of the Government require that to be stated on a document which is not true? No, they do not.
783. For instance, a person who has supplied forage to the Government, certifies that he has received payment of a certain amount, whereas in point of fact, at the time of his giving that certificate he has not received payment? No, there is no certificate on the claim sent in that he has received the money. The certificate is to the effect that the supplies have been furnished, and not that payment has been made.
784. But is not the receipt on the same document? Undoubtedly, but it is differently worded. There is a separate form attached to the general abstract of forage supplied or any other supplies, to this effect: Received on such a date, from such an officer, the sum of so and so, in full of the above account. That form of acquittance is sometimes filled up by the party, but it is wrongly filled up. The acquittance is usually filled up in the office where payment is made.
785. But is it or was it a custom to take that acquittance before the money was actually received by the person to whom it was due? Yes, I believe it was.
786. By the Chairman: Will you look at that voucher marked A (Vide p. 4 of Correspondence)? Yes.
787. That is the usual voucher for such a purpose? Yes, that is the general form for articles supplied to the public service.
788. You see there the signature of Mr. Chesher—he signs the receipt for the money apparently before he received it? Yes, but then you will observe that while the essential parts of it are blank, it is no acquittance at all; it stands for nothing.
789. But are they not filled up at the time he signs? No; the filling up of the blanks is done when the payment is made, or ought to be done at that time—it is supposed to be done then. If a voucher comes in with all those blanks filled up, it is irregular.
790. This is the usual form, at any rate? That is the usual form.
791. By Mr. Hellyer: The mere witnessing of such a document as that would not be a discharge? Oh no, certainly not.
792. By Mr. Hart: Is the receipt ever filled up? Sometimes it is.
793. By Mr. Lackey: By the party sending it in? Yes; in those cases if they have filled in the date it is just corrected by the paying officer, whoever he may be.

Kennett Price, Esq., called in and examined:—

- K. Price, Esq.
19 Sept., 1862.
794. By Mr. Hellyer: You are clerk to Mr. Wadson, of Bathurst? Yes.
795. You know Mr. Lawrence? Yes.
796. Did you see him after he was arrested, in December, 1860? I did.
797. At the police office? At the police office on, I think, the 24th—on the day he was committed, at all events.
798. Were you acting in any way for him? Yes, I appeared with Mr. Serjeant on behalf of Mr. Wadson; I assisted Mr. Serjeant.
799. You were assisting the defence? Yes.
800. You have seen the exhibit B that has been produced here (Vide p. 11 of printed Correspondence)? Yes.
801. When did you first see that document? In Mr. Serjeant's hands, on the 24th—on the day Mr. Lawrence was committed.
802. Do you know in whose possession it remained up to the time of the trial? I think it came into my possession immediately afterwards. I produced all the papers.

803. You produced them at the trial, did you? Yes. They might have remained about a week or two afterwards with Mr. Serjeant.
804. You were examined on the Commission, were you not? I was.
805. And Mr. Wadeson also was examined? Yes.
806. And the evidence referred to at page 11 (of the printed Correspondence) is a transcript of the evidence then given? I have no doubt it is.
807. When you first saw the document, had you any conversation with Mr. Lawrence respecting it? Mr. Lawrence was very anxious to have it put in at the time.
808. And had you a reason for not putting it in? I consulted with Mr. Serjeant, and seeing that the Magistrate would most likely commit, it was thought best not to put it in, but to reserve it for the defence.
809. But it was not "cooked"—it was not a document got up for the trial—you had it at the time of the committal? Yes, but we consulted together, and determined that it would be better to reserve it.
810. You thought —? We thought the Magistrate seemed inclined to commit, and that we had better not put it in then.
811. Do you know whether the proceedings in this matter were injurious to Mr. Lawrence? They were very much so indeed.
812. Do you know whether he had to borrow money for his defence? Yes, he had to mortgage everything.
813. Had he to borrow money to pay for the horse to M'Donald? Yes, that £20 was paid out of the money borrowed for his defence, and he could not pay his lawyer's fee. I do not think Mr. Serjeant has been paid yet.
814. You were present in the Court at the time of Mr. Lawrence's acquittal, were you not? I was.
815. Do you know anything of Mr. Lawrence's efficiency or otherwise, as officer? He has always borne a very good character as an efficient officer. I do not know much about his efficiency, but I know this, that he was the best trooper we ever had in Bathurst.
816. Was a dinner given to him soon after his acquittal? I believe there was; I was not present.
817. You were not present? No.
818. Do you know that it was so from information? Yes, from certain information.
819. You heard Mr. Hawkins state once a feeling of regret at his dismissal—is that so? Yes.
820. And is that the general feeling throughout the district? Yes.
821. By Mr. Hart: I think you said that Mr. Lawrence's character depended upon his prosecuting Rorison for this alleged forgery? I do not think I said that.
822. In your evidence before the Commissioner you say, "I had frequent conversations with him (Lawrence) about prosecuting Rorison; he was most anxious to do so"? Yes.
823. Were you not aware that the Government wished him to institute proceedings against Rorison? I was.
824. Then, acting for him professionally, why did you not urge him to pursue that course, and bring Rorison to justice, if you thought him in the wrong? As I mentioned before, Mr. Wadeson and I thought the Government ought to institute proceedings, and Mr. Lawrence wrote that letter (letter of 28th March) to Dr. Palmer. He wrote the draft, and I altered it afterwards.
825. But that is not the reason urged in your evidence before the Commission? No, I said that if he initiated proceedings he would be liable to an action for malicious prosecution.
826. Were you under that impression? I was under that impression then, and am still. I thought it would be very difficult for him to get a conviction of Rorison for perjury, and I therefore advised him to let the Government institute the proceedings.
827. But as a person connected with the legal profession for a long series of years, are you not aware that anything done bonâ fide by a person will not render him liable to malicious prosecution? I took the advice of my principal, and others, and we were of the same opinion.
828. That Lawrence would be liable to an action for malicious prosecution? Yes.
829. From whom did you receive voucher B? From Mr. Serjeant, I think. I cannot exactly remember. After Mr. Lawrence was committed all the papers were handed to me. I drew the brief, and had the management of the whole case until the trial.
830. Do you know from whom Mr. Serjeant received it? No; (Mr. Lawrence is present); I think I got it from Mr. Lawrence, but I could not say.
831. You cannot state? No.
832. Did you ask him about it? Mr. Serjeant showed it to me. I think he must have said at the time, "I got this from Lawrence," and we had a conversation about producing it.
833. Had you that document at the time of the committal? At the time of committal—yes. Dr. Palmer said at the trial that if he had seen this document he would not have committed him.
834. By the Chairman: You said just now that you were in the Court at the time of the acquittal? Yes.
835. Did you hear the remarks of the Judge? I did.
836. Can you remember what they were—can you give the precise words? He said that he (Lawrence) left the Court without a stain upon his character. After his acquittal Lawrence was kept in the dock for several minutes. The Judge made some remarks as to irregularities happening in reference to almost all vouchers, and he instanced his own case. He said,— "Very often a blank voucher is put before me on the bench and I sign it, and it is witnessed by somebody who never saw me sign it."

K. Price,
Esq.
19 Sept., 1862.

837. Is it a fact that the Judge on the bench stated this, in substance—that he knew the practice was common which had been adopted in this instance, or something to that effect? “In this instance”! No, he did not say “in this instance.” He said, as far as I recollect, that there were great irregularities in all branches of the Government, with reference to abstracts and vouchers, and he instanced his own case, stating that very often a blank abstract was put before him when he was on the bench, that he signed it on the top line (knowing that he was at the head of that branch), and that it was witnessed by some one who was not in the Court, and did not see him sign his name. I distinctly remember him saying that. This was the reason Lawrence was kept in the dock some time before he was discharged.

838. The Judge making remarks of that character upon the case? Yes.

839. And what were the words he used when Mr. Lawrence was released? That he left the Court without a stain on his character—“you are discharged, and you leave the Court without a stain on your character.”

840. By Mr. Hellyer: Lawyers occasionally differ in opinion, Mr. Price? I believe they do.

841. Did you ever bear of a prosecution for perjury being carried through on the evidence of one witness? Not without some corroborative evidence beside.

842. I ask you upon the evidence of one witness? No.

843. And upon inquiry could you get any further witness to attest —? No.

844. By the Chairman: When Mr. Lawrence was called upon by Dr. Palmer to prosecute Rorison, are you aware whether he was under the apprehension—or were you, as his legal adviser, under the apprehension—that he would himself be saddled with the costs of the prosecution? I always thought so; and in the draft of the letter to which I have referred that was stated as one of the grounds—that he expected he would be saddled with the costs.

845. And, in the event of the case breaking down, were you also under the apprehension that he would be liable to an action for malicious prosecution? Most decidedly.

846. And you so advised Mr. Lawrence? I so advised him.

847. And it was in consequence of your advice that he declined to prosecute? In consequence of the advice given by Mr. Wadeson and myself, he declined in any way to initiate proceedings.

848. Do you know why Rorison was not prosecuted afterwards by the Government, when they found that Lawrence was unwilling to initiate proceedings? I have not the slightest idea, at least that I can collect from the papers.

849. But if the Inspector General supposed there was a sufficient case for Lawrence to prosecute upon, and if he was aware that he could have had Lawrence's evidence, would there not have been an equally sufficient case for the Inspector General to prosecute? Most decidedly, I think so; it could not alter the case.

850. Has Mr. McIntosh ever made any statement to you of any conversation with Captain M'Lerie in reference to Lawrence's case? He has.

851. Will you say what? He was an advocate, you know, for Mr. Lawrence before the Commission; he appeared with Mr. Wadeson; he seemed to take a great interest afterwards in the case; he said he was going down to Sydney, and would speak to M'Lerie about the matter. When he came back he told me he had seen Captain M'Lerie, and he gave me a long detail of the conversation.

852. Did he tell you that he expressed his opinion to Captain M'Lerie that Lawrence was innocent? Yes, but he said he could do no good with Captain M'Lerie, who was still of opinion that Lawrence was guilty of the forgery. He then said—“I said, ‘Well, Captain M'Lerie, do show me how you arrive at this conclusion, and then perhaps I may agree with you too.’” I remember that part of the conversation.

853. Did he tell you that he had pressed upon Captain M'Lerie the injustice Lawrence was suffering, and that he thought he ought to be reinstated? He did.

854. By Mr. Cooper: Did you understand the Judge on the bench to express an opinion that there was nothing wrong in a party sending in a demand upon the Government for money not due by the Government, and then witnessing a signature which was put to that document without the authority of the party whose name was signed, on purpose to obtain that money from the Government? No.

855. You did not understand the Judge to exculpate that crime? No.

856. Then what did you understand the Judge to mean? That there were great irregularities in every department of the Government with reference to vouchers. He instanced his own case, and said that often a blank abstract was put before him in the Court; that he signed his name at the top, and that it was witnessed by some one who was not in the Court and who did not see him sign it.

857. That was a bonâ fide claim. When money was due by the Government he trusted somebody to make up an honest account? Yes.

858. You did not understand him, as Judge, to justify a fraudulent account being presented by a party on account of another person, who made no charge against the Government for money. I can only say what he said. I did not understand, of course—“No” is the best answer to your question. Certainly not.

859. What did you understand the Judge to mean? He said there were great irregularities in the whole of the departments, and that vouchers were signed very loosely—that pay abstracts were signed very loosely.

860. That pay abstracts were signed very loosely? Yes.

861. What had that to do with this matter? He made that remark. I do not know. He kept him in the dock four or five minutes talking about this thing. Usually when a man is acquitted they discharge him at once, but he was kept in the dock while the Judge was making these remarks.

862. Are Judges in the habit of keeping prisoners in the dock while they make irrelevant remarks? No.

863. Then you think the Judge's conduct on this occasion very remarkable? It was not usually the case. Perhaps he frequently makes a remark or two; but I have heard Judges make some strange remarks.

K. Price,
Esq.

19 Sept., 1862.

864. Aside to the audience, or to the Bar? To the whole of the persons present.

865. You have heard Judges make this sort of irrelevant remarks when trying a case? I do not know whether you would call them irrelevant remarks. The Judge did it in this instance, and Lawrence was kept in the dock while he made these remarks.

866. About what he did sometimes himself? Yes; he said there had been great irregularities, as I have stated before, and mentioned an instance in his own case.

867. Did he say that the Government required him to do these irregularities? No.

868. Then he committed them voluntarily? He said it was the custom.

869. Did he say that he had ever signed a document to get from the Government money that was not due to him? No.

870. Did you understand him to say that he had witnessed the name of a party to a document on behalf of another person, when that other person had not authorized the party to sign the name? No, he did not go so far as that.

871. He did not go so far as that? No.

872. By the Chairman: Did you understand him to refer to the practice as being customary, more with the view of showing that Mr. Lawrence had committed no crime? Yes; he immediately said, "You are discharged, Lawrence, and you will leave the dock without a stain on your character."

873. By Mr. Cowper: That was after the verdict? Yes.

874. By the Chairman: When he said he frequently signed a blank abstract—do you infer that he was obliged to depend upon the information of other parties as to its correctness? He said it was the practice—that it was a common custom; and that the irregularities were very great, and he instanced his own case.

875. Did not the evidence at the trial show that Lawrence had relied upon statements made to him as to the correctness of these vouchers by other people—was there not evidence to that effect? I can hardly answer that question, put in that way. The Judge's notes are not very full. The way Lawrence was acquitted was this:—Mr. Stephen, who was his barrister—

876. By Mr. Cowper: Oh, the Judge's son was counsel for the prisoner? He was. Mr. Rorison was asked a question whether he had ever given a written statement that he had paid this money, and he swore that he had not. That document was put to him, turned down by Mr. Stephen, so that he could only see his own name, and he said "that is my signature." He then asked him to look at the body of the document. Mr. Stephen asked him whether that was his writing, and he said yes. There was great sensation in the Court when it was read, and the case dropped that moment.

877. What was the sensation about? This man having sworn that he had never given a written statement.

878. Who was this? Mr. Rorison.

Mr. Charles Phillips Lawrence called in and further examined:—

879. By Mr. Hellyer: After your committal had you any conversation with Dr. Palmer? Yes, on the same morning.

Mr. C. P.
Lawrence.

880. On the same morning? On the same morning.

881. Will you state what passed between you—what he said to you? Yes. I was allowed bail. Dr. Palmer sent for me. One of the constables came for me. He sent a message that he wished to see me. I saw Dr. Palmer, and he asked me who signed the voucher. That was the object for which he sent for me. I told him Rorison. (This was after I had been admitted to bail.) He then told me that Captain M'Lerie had requested him not to grant me bail, but that he (Dr. Palmer) replied, "I know Lawrence longer than you do, Captain M'Lerie"——

19 Sept., 1862.

882. By the Chairman: Dr. Palmer told you this? Yes, on the morning of my committal—"I shall grant him bail, but very high bail." Captain M'Lerie's answer to Dr. Palmer was, "If you do, what will the Government say?" This is the conversation which Dr. Palmer told me passed between himself and Captain M'Lerie. Previous to this, on my arriving at Bathurst under arrest—in fact, at the watch-house—I told Dr. Palmer, I said, "At home I have Rorison's written statement that he has paid Cheshier." Dr. Palmer said, "Don't you say anything to me, Lawrence, your depositions have got to go to Sydney." This was when I was brought in under arrest.

883. By Mr. Hellyer: Before the depositions were taken? Yes, before anything was done. I was locked up at the time in the watch-house. I was only granted bail that night. I then requested Dr. Palmer to go down to my house with me and seal my books up, so that no one could tamper with them. My solicitor, at that time, was Mr. Serjeant. I sent for him to get me bail, and he came down to my house the same night.

884. Did you give up your books? I got Dr. Palmer to seal them up in my presence. At the same time I handed to my solicitor, in the presence of Dr. Palmer, the exhibit "B." Mr. Serjeant said, "Lawrence, don't show that to Captain Battye." I requested him to take it with him.

885. By the Chairman: Mr. Serjeant told you not to show it to Captain Battye? Yes.

886. By Mr. Hellyer: Had you told Mr. Serjeant anything Dr. Palmer had said about the depositions having to come to Sydney? He said this in the presence of Mr. Serjeant. Mr. Serjeant

- Mr. C. P. Lawrence.
 19 Sept., 1862.
- Serjeant was present in the watch-house. That was the reason I wished him to come down. If I had kept my books, afterwards they might have said —
887. That they had been tampered with? No doubt of it.
888. You had no opportunity of referring to any dates after that? I never saw the books afterwards. I had not made my forage returns out up to the time I left, but I did so at Dr. Palmer's request. When I got there I found the books broken open—the seals had been broken. I said, "I am going to be tried, and I might want something out of that book." He said, "Capt. Battye came up to see for the forage accounts, and took them."
889. Were you informed by Rorison that he had paid this money to Chesher? I have been on duty with Rorison and Day, and two other men. The man was a perfect nuisance about it—he speaking publicly about it before Day.
890. When you were ordered on duty by Captain Battye, as you previously stated, you called at Chesher's—it was a direct road, was it not? Yes; I should consider it my duty to call there, as Captain Battye traced these men to Forster's Valley.
891. When you were informed by Mr. Chesher that money had not been paid by Rorison, what did you do? It is a distance of about twenty-six miles from Bathurst, but I came straight in that night. It was rather late, but I came straight in to Captain Battye.
892. And reported it? I did not even go home; I went and reported the whole circumstance to him, and Captain Battye the next morning sent for Rorison.
893. Then you returned, and went on your duty? Oh, yes.
894. It was upon your information that Rorison was examined? It was.
895. Had you been asked to explain the voucher before that at any time? At the time I made the voucher out Captain Battye was down in Hartley; when he came back he asked me—"What is the meaning of this account of Rorison's?" I said, "There are four different places in it," and I said, "Rorison has paid the money." Captain Battye admits it to this day that I told him so; he has never denied it, and could not deny it in my presence.
896. That was the information you had received from Rorison—that he had paid the money? Yes.
897. Did you tell Rorison that he would have to produce Chesher's vouchers? I told him to go and get them. He produced Mr. Hebberson's receipt, and Mrs. Robertson's of Canowindra, and Mr. O'Shaughnessy's, of Nanima. He did not produce Mr. Law's receipt, or Mr. Chesher's, and these he was directed to get.
898. Did you mention to Captain Battye that you had seen the vouchers for some portion of these payments? Yes, I did so.
899. And that you had requested Rorison to get the receipts? Yes, it was at Rorison's request that I made inquiries at these three places, and this one down towards the Lachlan previous to the voucher being made out.
900. You had been informed, then, by some of the parties—by O'Shaughnessy, and Hebberson, and Mrs. Robertson at Canowindra? That he had paid these three.
901. And you took his word only for the payments to Chesher and Law? Mr. Law, of Jimmalong. I got him to make out a statement for the Captain if he had asked me.
902. By the Chairman: Then the whole amount due to Chesher would only have been 16s.? That is all, I think, he had paid Chesher.
903. By Mr. Hellyer: He told you so? He told me he had paid Chesher.
904. And that he had Chesher's authority to sign the voucher? Yes. His exact words were—(My intention was—I intended him to take the voucher to Chesher and get his signature.)—"I have got Chesher's authority, and I told Chesher I would sign the voucher for him." Of course I had no reason to doubt the man.
905. You requiring Chesher's receipts before the money was paid? Yes.
906. After your committal, in January, did you see Captain Battye? I saw him in January, this year.
907. This year? Yes, 1862. I was committed in the month of December, 1860.
908. In 1862 you saw him? Yes.
909. Did you see any letter from the Inspector General's Office to him at that time? Yes.
910. Did he show it to you? Yes, he sent for me down to my house to meet him at Turner's. It was shown to me in the presence of Turner.
911. What was the letter? It was a letter from Mr. De Phillipsthal.
912. The chief clerk in the Inspector General's department? The chief clerk, telling Captain Battye that a petition had been received from Troopers Warrington, Wallings, and another man.
913. With reference to what? With reference to their October pay. Captain Battye sent to me to borrow the money of me. I offered to —
914. What does the letter say beside? Mr. De Phillipsthal had not sent the petition on.
915. He had kept it back? If he had sent it on, Captain Battye's chance of appointment was gone.
916. Was it not something about receipts? He was to send the receipts at once. The exact words were—"Do, like a good fellow, send these men's receipts down at once, or your chance of appointment is gone."
917. Did you offer to lend him money? I offered to buy the letter off Captain Battye. Mr. Battye borrowed the money afterwards.
918. By the Chairman: You offered to lend him the money if he would give you the letter? Yes, I did so in the presence of Turner.
919. By Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Turner, the innkeeper? Yes.
920. By the Chairman: What did you want with the letter? I think—things of that sort going on—I should have made use of it; I should have published it, I think.
921. Had you any conversation with Captain Battye relative to that transaction? Yes, that was the day of my committal.
- 922.

922. What did he tell you? This is after I was committed?
923. Yes? He told me that Captain M'Lerie had told him that he (Captain M'Lerie) had shown the voucher to Mr. Chambers, the Crown Prosecutor.
924. Who was then in Bathurst? Yes, it was Quarter Sessions time when I was arrested. He had asked Mr. Chambers who was to be prosecuted, and he was told that there was no case against Lawrence. Mr. C. P. Lawrence.
19 Sept., 1862.
925. Have you had any conversation with Mr. M'Intosh? I have.
926. Did he tell you anything of —? Yes, he told me at the time Captain Battye swore to the information. Mr. M'Intosh was present, and Dr. Palmer, and Mr. Joseph West, tertius, and Captain M'Lerie.
927. By the Chairman: Captain M'Lerie was present at the time the information was sworn to? Yes, and Captain Battye too, in Dr. Palmer's private room. This is the information upon which the warrant was granted.
928. Are you quite certain that Captain M'Lerie was present? I am so far certain that Mr. M'Intosh told me so.
929. Oh! Mr. M'Intosh told you so? Yes.
930. I think it is in Captain M'Lerie's evidence that he left the case in Mr. M'Intosh's hands, and that he had left town? Captain Battye hesitated to sign the information, telling Captain M'Lerie, "Lawrence can explain the whole of it if you will wait until he comes home." Captain M'Lerie then asked Captain Battye, "Do you object to sign that, sir?" Captain Battye said, "No, I cannot," of course. The information was signed, and the warrant granted.
931. That was told you by Mr. M'Intosh? Yes.
932. Did Captain Battye ever tell you that he was in any way forced to institute proceedings against you? Yes. On my acquittal I went down to Captain Battye's house; I said, "Captain Battye, how did you ever come to lay that information against me?" He said, "I did it by order of the Government." I said, "By whose order do you mean when you say by order of the Government?" and he said, "By Captain M'Lerie's order."
933. By Mr. Hellyer: Had you any conversation with Mr. M'Intosh relative to his interview with Captain M'Lerie in Sydney? No, I have not seen him since.
934. You have not seen him since? No.
935. After your acquittal, was a dinner given to you at Bathurst? Yes, on the evening of my acquittal.
936. By the Chairman: By whom was the dinner given to you? By a number of my friends in Bathurst—the whole of the troopers.
937. Was it a sort of ovation on account of your acquittal? Yes.
938. By Mr. Hellyer: You had previously been in the first battalion of the Rifle Brigade, had you not? Yes.
939. Is that (document produced) your certificate of discharge? Yes. Previous to that I was eight years in the Long Room of the Customs, London, as receiving clerk, second branch.
940. Were you put to much personal inconvenience by the prosecution? I was not only put to great personal inconvenience, but I suffered greatly in my health.
941. I believe you had to borrow money for your defence, had you not? I had.
942. You had to sacrifice a property? Yes.
943. By the Chairman: Are you aware whether this money had ever been paid to Rorison? Not that I am aware of; I believe not; I know it was not paid up to the time of my trial.
944. None of it? None of it—Captain Battye told me so himself.
945. By Mr. Hellyer: Had you at any time applied to Mr. Rorison to interest himself in your behalf in any way? Applied to Rorison!
946. To Rorison—yes? I apply to Rorison! No. I think he interested himself in my behalf very well when he went to Mr. Beardmore.
947. This feeling is natural, and has never been assumed by you for any purpose of fraud? No, not in the slightest degree—never.
948. What was your first impulse after your acquittal? I think if I had been at the Cape and he had been in the service with me, I should have shot him dead.
949. What was your impulse? To thrash him on the spot.
950. Do you know whether any persons interested themselves sufficient to advise you on the subject? I remember Mr. Stephen and Mr. Price coming to me.
951. Both Mr. Stephen and Mr. Price? Yes.
952. Requesting you not to disgrace yourself by taking notice of it? Yes.

HENRY ROTTON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

His Honor Sir Alfred Stephen, Knight C.B., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, called in and examined:—

953. By the Chairman: This Committee have requested your attendance in order that you may give your evidence on a case they have been appointed to inquire into, in reference to a charge of forgery, tried before you at the Bathurst Circuit Court, preferred against Charles Lawrence, lately Sergeant-Major in the Bathurst Mounted Patrol;—you no doubt have a recollection of such a person having been tried before you? I have only a general recollection of the case, but I have with me my notes taken on the trial. Sir A. Stephen,
Knight C.B.
10 Oct., 1862.
954.

Sir A.
Stephen,
Knight C.B.

10 Oct., 1862.

954. Will you be kind enough to state what was the charge against him? The charge was first forging, and second uttering knowing it to be forged, a certain memorandum or receipt for money, with of course the usual averment that the act was done with intent to defraud.

955. The prisoner, I presume, was tried in the usual way? He was tried in the ordinary manner, and was acquitted at my suggestion, and with the assent of the Crown Prosecutor, who agreed with me that there was no case against the prisoner.

956. I believe he was not called upon for any defence? He therefore was not called upon for any defence. The case was quite clear upon the evidence before me that there was no fraudulent intention, which was the essence of the crime.

957. It has been given in evidence before this Committee that you stated on the conclusion of the case that Lawrence left the Court without a stain upon his character? I can only say that I have no very clear recollection of having done so, but I believe I did; but I spoke of course only with reference to the evidence that came before me; upon that only my opinion was formed, that there was no evidence of fraudulent intent. Upon reading over my notes I am of the same opinion now, but I have only a very general recollection of the case.

958. Do you remember making such a remark as this—that neither legally nor morally did you consider the prisoner guilty? I stopped the case because there was no evidence of fraudulent intent; that wanting, it was useless to go on with the case, as it was the very essence of the crime.

959. It has also been stated in evidence previously given before this Committee, that you made some remarks in reference to the offence with which Lawrence was charged, to the effect that it had been a usual practice or a common practice to witness vouchers of this description without actually seeing the signatures attached? I said that I had known such a thing done by very respectable people; I gave an instance, which I now repeat; it was that of a highly respectable person, as respectable as any in the community, who had put his name to a voucher attesting the signature of a person, on the assurance that it was the signature of the party represented, and yet he had never seen it signed; he told me this himself. I know also an instance which occurred to myself, in which a paper was sent to me to sign, to which the signature of the person who was to witness my signature had been previously attached. I was informed, on making inquiry, that such was the usual practice in that office.

960. Was that a voucher for the payment of money? No, an attestation to some paper that I was required to sign on taking a woman into my service from the Immigration Department. It is now some years ago that it occurred. It was the practice then—and I dare say the Honorable Chief Secretary may remember it—to sign some documents showing what the agreement was; this required to be in writing, and there was a printed commencement and a printed conclusion, and between these the terms of agreement were written; at the end there were the ordinary words "Signed and delivered in the presence of"; but this instead of being left blank was filled in and signed, although my signature which this purported to witness had not been appended.

961. Have you any recollection of the evidence given on that trial by a trooper named Rorison? I have in my note book an accurate statement of every word that was given in evidence. If he was a witness I have his evidence also.

962. Was there anything in that evidence to warrant any strong suspicion that Rorison had been guilty of perjury? That I cannot remember; I only know that I understood at the time, and probably I suspected at the time, that he was giving at the trial evidence rather more favourable to the prisoner than he had done originally, but I cannot say that a suspicion of his having committed perjury ever crossed my mind. I understood that it was on Rorison's account particularly that the man was charged with forgery, and it did strike me as strange his saying all he could in the prisoner's favour, in so far only as a friendly feeling and a desire to serve him were concerned.

963. If you had discovered anything in Rorison's evidence to warrant the suspicion that he had been guilty of perjury, would you not at the time have taken some steps to bring him to trial? No; a Judge has no power to do anything if he merely suspects perjury; he must have sufficient evidence before him to call for further inquiry, and there was nothing of that sort I am certain.

964. Supposing there had been, would you have considered it to be the duty of Lawrence to have come forward after the trial and to have prosecuted Rorison for the perjury, or would it not rather have been the duty of the Government to institute proceedings? It would be the duty of the Crown to institute proceedings if the evidence on which perjury was imputed was given in favour of a person indicted by the Crown; but if the false evidence happened to be given against the party charged with an offence, then it would be manifestly the duty, and the interest, and in fact the natural course, for proceedings to be taken by the party thus charged who was affected by the evidence; but it would be a very unusual thing to prosecute another for false evidence which has been given in favour of oneself, and been forced from the witness on the trial, in opposition to what was before stated; because, even assuming that he had given false evidence in the first instance, in the examination at the police office, by recalling that evidence before the Judge and jury he would be doing all in his power to undo the mischief which his previous false swearing had caused. That is, if you assume that he had perjured himself on his examination before the Magistrate. In that case the party wrongly accused would be expected to prosecute for the perjury—that would be the natural course. But then, when this person who has committed the perjury comes before the Court, and by the evidence he then gives tries to undo any mischief he may have caused, however much he may have perjured himself, it would be scarcely natural to expect that the person who has thus benefited by the change of testimony will prosecute the witness.

This

This of course is only assuming that perjury was committed, and I repeat that the idea of perjury never entered my head. I can only say, that I believe—judging from the evidence that was before me, and from nothing else—I really believe in my conscience that the man was innocent—that he had committed an irregularity certainly, but nothing more. It was that which led me to put the question to the Crown Prosecutor—“After this evidence can you maintain this charge?—However wrong it may have been for him, as an officer of the Government, upon whom a grave responsibility devolved, to commit such an irregularity, yet can you say that there is any fraud here?” He said he did not think there was, and abandoned his case; and thereupon I told the jury to acquit the prisoner, and they did so. There was no ground whatever for the charge against the prisoner.

Sir A.
Stephen,
Knight C.B.
10 Oct., 1862.

965. Was there not some evidence given of a similar practice prevailing in Government departments—some such practice as that of which Lawrence was said to be guilty? There was some evidence on the point, but not evidence of common practice. In answer to the question, “Has it not been the habit for troopers to sign the names of absent parties to whom money was due?” the answer was, “It has not been ordinarily done to my knowledge, but I have detected an instance of it since the case now before the Court.” Then again, in answer to the question, “Have you not known two or three other instances of the same kind?” the witness replied, “I have not known of them. Sometimes, however, the troopers pay for themselves, and then they put all the items paid in one voucher; but in every case the receipt of the publican is requisite before the Government pays the money.” That is all the evidence on the point that I find on my notes.

966. The Committee have been given to understand that a good deal was said in Court in reference to a similar practice prevailing in Government departments, and it has been said here that you made a statement on the bench to that effect, and mentioned that a similar paper had been put up for you to sign without your knowing the purport of it;—have you signed similar papers—pay abstracts, for instance? Yes, we are always in the habit of signing the pay abstracts, acknowledging the receipt of the money before we receive it; I never in my life waited for the money before signing a receipt for it; it is a matter of common practice, and I have done so; taking it for granted that I should get the money, I say that I have got it. Of course, in signing this I sign to what is in fact not true; for if I were put upon my oath, and asked, “Did you receive this money when you signed your name?” I should be obliged to say that I had not. However, my conscience never pricked me upon that score. My belief was that this man did no more than what he considered himself warranted in doing. From the whole case as it came then before me, and from inquiries I subsequently made (for I did not allow the matter to rest there), my understanding was that these men being driven in the execution of their duty all over the bush, one night at one place, and another night at another, calling upon them to produce vouchers for every sixpence they expended amounted almost to an impossibility. Sometimes it would happen that the publican at whose house they stopped made them a present of his charges. In that case, being really entitled to make the charge against the Government under any circumstances, whether the publican received the money himself or made it a present to them, they might not have thought there was any harm in putting his signature to the voucher acknowledging the money to have been paid. They did not at the time believe that they were committing a fraud, nor do I. I do not think, from what I knew of the case, that the circumstances were sufficient to justify a charge of fraud against the man.

967. From all you heard—and you must have had full opportunities of judging—do you think there was sufficient evidence in the case to justify the Government in taking the extreme course they did, of dismissing Sergeant Lawrence from the public service, especially after he had served in it so long and so faithfully? That is a matter involving a great number of considerations. I form my opinion solely from what came before me; and if I am asked as regards myself, I should say I would not do so myself; but perhaps I may be more good-natured than many others, notwithstanding that I can be severe enough when the case seems to call for it. I do not regard it as a crime, but as an irregularity—a great one certainly. If I had a servant, a good man in every other respect, who committed such an offence, I should forgive him and keep him in my service; but of course what I would do myself is different from what the Government would do. The Government, of course, regard it differently, as calculated to lead to grave breaches of public trust; and they would necessarily deal with it more strictly than I, as a private person, would deal with my servant. However, I repeat that I do not think he did anything wrong, either legally or morally.

968. By Mr. Cooper: Was it not patent on the evidence that a fraud on the Government had been committed? No, I think not.

969. Was not Chesher examined at the trial? I think he was—indeed he must have been.

970. Did he not state in his evidence that he did not intend to make his charge for entertainment a present to the men, but to the Government? I do not remember that he did so; but I do not think that would in any way affect the case, because the question was not what took place between the men and Chesher, but what they had reason to believe when they signed the voucher. My impression was, that at the time of signing the voucher Lawrence thought that the publican had charged or that he had not charged, that he had been paid or that he was to be paid, or that he had made the money a present to the men; and under any one of those suppositions, he might do that which it is notorious is done in other cases. There is no doubt of the fact that it is done in other cases—that it is general.

971. The Inspector General denies that it is general? I think he will find, if he makes inquiries, that it was general amongst the publicans of that neighbourhood especially. The police of those days were great favourites with the publicans; and in order to assist them, they very willingly made them a present of the charges for refreshment at their houses. When the Inspector General says it is not the case I cannot of course contradict him, but I simply say that I believe him to be mistaken.

Sir A.
Stephen,
Knight C.B.
10 Oct., 1862.

972. Do you consider that if a person makes a charge against the Government for money that he has no authority to draw, and that he obtains the money on the strength of a signature he has no authority to put there, that the Government have no right to dismiss him, and that the person so doing commits no more than a mere irregularity? So put, it is certainly more than an irregularity; but that is not the case that was proved against Lawrence.

973. Nor as against Rorison? I have not been considering what his conduct in the matter was.

974. Taking the two cases in connection, do you not think that if a person is so negligent that he certifies to a signature that is not genuine, and thus allows another to obtain money for which he has no authority, he has been guilty of gross negligence? It is a very gross irregularity, but without being fraudulent, and I do not see fraud in any case you have put. If he put his name to the signature knowing that the publican never meant to make the money a present, but to charge the man, and then took the money, he would be guilty of fraud; or if he knew that the Government was not to be charged, and that but for this entry the Government would not have to pay a shilling, then that would be a fraud for which he ought to be punished. But, on the other hand, if he believed that the money was made a present to him, and that the publican never meant the money to go as a present to the Government—and few people do make presents to the Government—and that the sum was such a one as the publican himself would have charged, then there would be no fraud. Mind, I still think there would be an irregularity; one, too, opening the door to serious frauds, and that no Government could for a moment tolerate. I do not see a fraud even in the case of Rorison. There is an irregularity—an impropriety—but there is a distinction between that and fraud.

975. Suppose the Inspector General to be under the impression that these cases were becoming general, and that accounts were being made up in a negligent manner, and that having that suspicion he was watching with more than ordinary caution to discover a case of the kind, and that in consequence of this watchfulness he at last detected an officer of the force permitting this sort of thing to pass—do you not think that having found such a case, it was one for exemplary punishment, in order to make an example, and to put a stop to this mode of making demands of a fraudulent character? I think he deserved some punishment, but I think it was going too far to degrade him altogether. If he were guilty of fraud, and intended to defraud the Government, then of course dismissal and non-restoration would be richly deserved; but if it were only an irregularity, I think that probably suspension would have met the justice of the case, as an example to show what would be the consequence to others of following such a course. But if the man was of good character previously—and in this case he was of most excellent character—I think suspension would have answered all the purposes of warning. The punishment is disproportioned to the offence. I would not hang a man for stealing a pair of stockings, although if every person who stole a pair of stockings were hanged, very few stockings would be stolen; yet though you might attain that result, it would be simple cruelty to reach it by such means.

976. You are not aware of any instances of parties filling up these vouchers improperly? No, I never knew of such an instance; the criminality would altogether depend upon what was passing in the man's mind when he filled them up. As regards Rorison, if he thought the money was given to him by the innkeeper, he might very fairly say to himself, "The money is meant for me; if he were to receive it he would give it back to me; and therefore there is no harm in my signing his name and taking the money."

977. But does not Cheshier's evidence rebut that notion? I think it does to some extent.

978. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you think that there was any collusion between Lawrence and Rorison in signing these vouchers—any understanding between them of a fraudulent character? If you assume that Rorison was guilty of a fraud, and that he charged that which he knew ought not to be charged, it does not follow even then that the sergeant colluded with him, nor does it follow from the evidence before me that there was any collusion. There was no evidence of anything of the kind beyond this,—that it struck me, in giving his evidence, that Rorison was doing all he could to serve the prisoner; this I could not account for, except from fancying that perhaps it might arise from remorse at what he had done in getting the prisoner into his present scrape, and from his determination to do all he could to get him out of it again. The whole case was exactly one of those in which character should turn the scale.

979. Would Lawrence have been justified in bringing a charge of perjury against Rorison, when he was advised by his lawyer not to do so? I do not understand why he should do so. In the first place he could not get a conviction without two witnesses, and those he could not have had; then, again, juries are very reluctant to convict for perjury. Only last week I tried a man for perjury at Darlinghurst; I had committed him myself for the perjury during a civil trial, and I have long desired to put some stop to the immense amount of false swearing that takes place in our Courts. The case against him was one as clear as the day, and it was proved equally as clearly in the Court, and yet the jury acquitted him. I cannot understand this unwillingness on the part of juries to convict for perjury.

980. Do you think it was just on the part of the Government to try and force him into a prosecution of Rorison for perjury? I cannot see why he should prosecute the man for perjury, unless he really believed that he had been guilty of false swearing; and what is the first thing?—That he is accused of perjury in the evidence he gave in Lawrence's favour. Surely Lawrence would not say that he disbelieved that evidence. How then could he prosecute? Then the next thing is, that he could not prosecute without having two witnesses, and here he would be met with this difficulty, that only three persons were present at the time, and that two of the three gave evidence against Lawrence. The consequence quence would be that the third man would again be likely to stand by his comrade, particularly when he was in difficulties, and the jury would acquit him.

981. Lawrence has declared that his only reason for not prosecuting Rorison was, that his professional adviser did not wish him to do so? I can understand that, and I can very well see why it was that the Government wished him to prosecute Rorison; because by so doing they would, to use a forcible though not very elegant expression, have put him in a fix.

982. By Mr. Hellyer: Will you look at the passages I have underlined, in the evidence given before the Commission that inquired into this case, since the trial? Yes, I have read it.

983. Now assuming that Rorison had made that statement to the Sergeant-Major, does not that materially alter the aspect of the case? That is, supposing the memorandum B to have been really handed in, and to have been given by Rorison to Lawrence?

984. Yes? Of course it does. That would go to show that he really believed that somebody had paid the money. But still that does not get rid of the irregularity, which is of such a character as no Government could tolerate.

985. It has been given in evidence that Lawrence, as soon as he found out that the money had not been paid, rode 26 miles in order to report the matter to Captain Battye;—is that the conduct of a man guilty of fraud, or is it what an innocent man would be most likely to do under such circumstances? Well, I have seen so many practices of this kind that I never form an opinion on them. It is the course that an honest man would take, but it is also that which a guilty but a very cunning man would take also. It is these sort of things being done in embezzlement cases that so often impose upon juries and make it difficult to secure a conviction. But I am too old a bird to be caught by such tricks as these. If we could only get jurymen to reason upon the evidence, instead of taking it just as it is given to them, they would soon see, as I do, that there are always two faces in which these things are to be regarded.

986. By the Chairman: Supposing we admit that Lawrence has committed an irregularity, in witnessing a signature that he has not seen attached, would you consider the offence to be one of so grave a character, under all the circumstances that have been shown—that it was impossible that he could derive any personal benefit from the amount in question, and that he only signed in order to facilitate the business of the office—(Mr. Cowper: Your question assumes that to be a fact, which in reality is not so—) I assume that it is a fact. It is evident that an irregularity has occurred; is it of a sufficiently grave character to warrant such an extreme course as the dismissal of this officer, when as I say nothing more is proved against him than an irregularity, and there is some proof that it was the practice of the department. If the man was under the impression that he was doing nothing wrong, was the offence of such a grave character as to warrant the Government in taking the extreme course they have done in dismissing him from the force, and depriving him of all the benefits that long service had entitled him to? Speaking solely from my own impression of the case, I can only say that if I had had to do with the matter I should not have dismissed him, except to restore him. Just in the same way as a Judge passes a sentence of five years on the roads, without meaning to keep the offender for that time under punishment, but merely as a signal to others who may be guilty of that offence, that such is the punishment they are liable to. It is held out in terrorem to deter others, but is never meant to be carried out, and the criminal is generally informed that if he behaves well a remission will be recommended. This is just a case of that kind. Lawrence might have been suspended for a time as a warning to others, and then restored to his position. To dismiss him altogether was a very severe punishment, unless you assume fraud.

987. But the real ground of Lawrence's dismissal was, as shown in Captain M'Levie's letter of 11th April, 1861, his refusal to prosecute Rorison for perjury;—now do you see anything at all in the case to warrant them in taking such a course? I do not see why a man is to be prosecuted who is not guilty, and I do not see the guilt in this case. Lawrence would have no right to prosecute a man for perjury when he knows that he cannot prove him to be guilty, even though he knows him to be so. But I do not see or know any grounds for proceeding. As to the matter of morals, I do not see that the circumstance of a man saying that he saw no harm in doing a wrong act is any answer, because he ought to have seen and known it. When a man is so far degraded to the level of a beast as to be without conscience, the sooner he is got rid of and kept out of society the better for himself and for society also. I should say to such a man "If you have no conscience and do not know when you do wrong you ought to know, and you must be punished in order to teach you." But I do not see that a man is guilty of an immorality or of a gross irregularity in what has been done here. To be sure if Lawrence got O'Rourke to sign the voucher in Cheshier's name, as Rorison in his evidence would seem to imply, that, if proved, would have been a very strong feature against him, because the question would naturally arise, "Why did he not sign himself?" But if he thought he was only getting back from the Government that which he was fairly entitled to, I do not see that there was anything wrong. If I thought that I had authority from Mr. Cowper to do a certain thing, and he did not give me authority to do it, and if I in consequence sign his name to some paper that would be a very wrong thing for me to do, but it would be no fraud. It would be a very wrong thing indeed that no gentleman would ever be guilty of; but if by chance he were, then his character would stand him in good stead, because people would naturally say—"How could he have possibly done such a thing—he must have been labouring under some delusion." When I say a gentleman, I mean a man of good character.

988. By Mr. Hellyer: Will you refer to the evidence given by Rorison before the Commission? Yes, I have read it. If you assume that Rorison thought that he was in the position of a man who had committed a forgery, he would then be placed in the shoes of Lawrence; and a man is not very willing to subject himself to the ordeal of a trial. Seeing this he soon discovers that the only means of getting himself out of the scrape is to deny the signature, and he accordingly does so. Then there is a third man present, and he would be likely to assist with his evidence whichever of the two he might happen to like best; and that shows me at once why Rorison states here that all is regular and correct as regards the account. But after all, is there sufficient here on which to convict a man of perjury? Suppose you try him for having signed the name of Cheshier, in the presence of Lawrence, and Wiley, and then denying that he did so, how is he to be convicted? Lawrence, knowing that he has been guilty of an irregularity, would naturally not be very willing to come forward; whilst the other man would be afraid of being brought into it, and so denies being present,—and very likely he would do so;—what then becomes of your prosecution for perjury? I think it was rather harsh in the Inspector General to expect a man to prosecute under such circumstances.

John N. M'Intosh, Esq., called in and examined:—

John
N. M'Intosh,
Esq.

10 Oct., 1862.

989. By the Chairman: This Committee has been appointed to investigate the case of Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and they have requested you to give evidence as to what you know of the matter. It has been stated before this Committee that you were employed by Captain M'Lerie to prosecute Lawrence upon certain charges brought against him,—is that correct? It is.

990. Will you state the nature of the instructions given to you? I will, in so far as my memory serves me. Captain M'Lerie came to Bathurst at the time, but I do not recollect in what month this occurred. I was engaged in Court at the time. I was first spoken to, and was requested to come into one of the rooms of the Court House to speak to Captain M'Lerie. I went into the room where Captain Battye was with Captain M'Lerie. There were some papers put into my hands, with vouchers and other documents, and Captain M'Lerie asked me to prepare an information against Sergeant-Major Lawrence for forgery, and for uttering a forgery in the name of Captain Battye, which that gentleman would be prepared to swear. I was there only a very few minutes, being exceedingly busy in Court at the time, and after giving me the instructions, Captain M'Lerie requested Captain Battye to swear to the information when it was drawn out. I prepared the draft of an information, which I sent down to my office to have a fair copy made from, and when this was done one of my clerks got it sworn to by Captain Battye. I recollect that a warrant was applied for, and Doctor Palmer said he would grant a warrant in the case.

991. Were you consulted in the case, or did you give any advice on it? No; the whole matter did not occupy five minutes. I knew nothing whatever of the case until Captain M'Lerie put into my hands a sheet of paper with the vouchers appended, and said that a forgery had been committed, that the signature of Chesher's name had not been by Chesher or with his sanction, and that Lawrence had signed his name as the witness to a forged signature.

992. Was the case left entirely in your hands to take any other course you might deem advisable? No; I have given you the entire substance, as nearly as I can recollect, of all the conversation that took place, or of the instructions I received.

993. Captain M'Lerie was present through the whole time? Yes; there were three persons in the room when I came in, and I made the fourth.

994. You conducted the prosecution against Sergeant-Major Lawrence? Yes, at the police office, up to the time of his committal.

995. You had then of course every opportunity of learning the merits of the case? No, not at that time. I knew the case for the Crown only. I was merely acquainted with the fact that Lawrence had witnessed a signature that was believed to be a forgery. The case for the defence was conducted by Mr. Serjeant, and he did not call any witnesses for the defence, and consequently I had no opportunity of knowing what that defence was.

996. But as far as the case for the Crown was concerned, you knew all the particulars? Yes; the case for the Crown was a very simple matter indeed, and did not require much consideration.

997. From what you now know of the case, do you believe that if Mr. Serjeant had called witnesses for the defence, the Police Magistrate, Dr. Palmer, would have committed Lawrence to take his trial? That I cannot answer; it is impossible for me to say what the Bench would have done. If a prima facie case is made out, it is the duty of the Magistrate to commit, and consequently I cannot say whether the Magistrate would have committed or not; but if the evidence for the defence had been brought forward, I think it would have shown sufficient evidence of Lawrence's innocence to have led the Attorney General not to file a bill against him. I cannot, however, say that he would not have been committed, because my own impression is that he would have been.

998. From Captain M'Lerie's manner, and from all you saw take place in the room in which you found them when you were sent for at the time you were requested to file an information against Lawrence, did Captain Battye appear to you to be going willingly into this matter, or did he seem to be dictated to by Captain M'Lerie? It appeared to me, not that he was exactly dictated to, but that he was somewhat irresolute; I cannot say that he was directed to file the information, but it was pressed upon him. However, I was so short a time in the room that I presumed all had been arranged before I came in. I think that Captain Battye did say that Sergeant Lawrence was away on duty, and would be back in a few days, and perhaps it would be better to wait till then; and that Captain M'Lerie answered that it would be better to be done at once. But it is so long ago that I cannot recollect the exact words.

999. Was there not some demur on the part of Captain Battye as to swearing the information? He appeared to hesitate certainly.

1000. And after that, did not Captain M'Lerie, in the most peremptory manner, ask Captain Battye if he refused to go on with the matter? I think he said, "Do you refuse, Battye?" and Captain Battye answered "No, I do not." He did not at the first refuse to proceed against Lawrence, but merely made a statement as to Lawrence's being away on duty, and then Captain M'Lerie said "Do you refuse, Battye?" or something to that effect; and Captain Battye said, "No"; but the thing happened so long since, and I did not pay much attention at the time, that I cannot perfectly remember with exactness all that took place.

1001. Having now had full opportunity of knowing the whole merits of the case, what opinion do you form respecting the guilt or innocence of Sergeant Lawrence? I have taken some considerable interest in this case, and more particularly since I heard the evidence for the defence. Having heard the greater portion of that evidence, and having read a large number of papers connected with the case; and having attended before the Commission appointed by the Government to inquire into the case—which Commission met at Bathurst, and consisted of Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Harold M'Lean, and Mr. Chatfield—I attended there throughout the whole inquiry, and having thought the matter over and sifted the evidence, and given it the most deep and earnest consideration—all these things have brought me to the conclusion that Sergeant Lawrence was innocent of the charge brought against him, and that he never intended to defraud the Government; and further, that there was no collusion between him and Rorison. That is my impression, from all I have heard of the case.

1002. Did you ever state your opinion of this case to Captain M'Lerie? I had a conversation with Captain M'Lerie on the subject at Randwick, but I consider it to have been of a private character, and that I am therefore not in a position to make it public. I do not consider that I should be justified in stating more than the bare fact that I did make a communication to Captain M'Lerie, in reference to Sergeant-Major Lawrence, and to Sergeant Middleton. It was made at Randwick, and in the presence of Dr. Palmer. The result of that conversation was that he assented to my request in the one case but not in the other. Beyond that I do not consider I have a right to make public what took place.

1003. Of course the Committee would not require you to state anything that you may have believed to have occurred in a strictly private conversation; but would you object to say whether you spoke to Captain M'Lerie on Lawrence's behalf? I did, upon two occasions; but beyond that I decline stating what occurred.

1004. From your own knowledge of similar practices having prevailed, from the evidence you have heard, or from hearsay reports, do you happen to know or do you believe that similar practices to that with which Sergeant Lawrence was charged have generally prevailed? I have no knowledge personally of such a thing, but I have heard on more than one occasion that such was the practice. I have heard of its being done in the police, when persons residing at a distance could not put their names to the abstracts, and their names were signed for them without any imputation of fraud. I repeat that I have merely heard so, and cannot speak to the fact of my own knowledge. I heard so when the matter was before the Commission, and also when it was before the police office.

1005. Do you not know that it is a usual practice amongst innkeepers in the district not to make any charge to the police when staying at their houses? I can only say that such is the case from what I learned during the course of this case. Cheshier stated in his evidence that he never made a charge to a policeman when travelling on duty.

1006. Is that an act of grace to the policeman on his own account, or on account of the Government—is it meant to save expense to the Government or to the policeman? I can only say from what I heard Cheshier say at the Court.

1007. You do not know of the practice? No, I do not.

1008. At any rate, you believe Lawrence to be innocent of the charges brought against him? As I stated before, from the evidence I have heard, from the statements that have been made, and from going carefully into the case, I have come to that belief. I always had a very high opinion of Sergeant Lawrence; I believed him to be an active and energetic officer, and a straightforward, manly fellow; that has always been my impression. I believe him to have been always most anxious to do his duty, and that he did it faithfully.

1009. Was he, in your opinion, a man likely to commit such an offence as that of which he was charged, even supposing the amounts were much greater;—would he in fact have been likely, had he known it, to have done anything wrong? I have answered that question before, when I stated that I had the highest possible opinion of Sergeant Lawrence's integrity and moral character. I was surprised in the first instance at his being charged with such a crime, but from what I have since learnt, this charge has not at all shaken my high opinion of him.

1010. The charge preferred against him, and for which as the papers before the Committee show, he was dismissed the service, was the refusing to prosecute Rorison for perjury? Yes, I think that was stated in Captain M'Lerie's letter, a copy of which was before the Commission.

1011. Do you think there was anything in the case to justify such an extreme course as that of dismissing him? I think not; I thought so at the time, and I think so now.

1012. By Mr. Sadleir: Will you look at page 9 of the Return now before the Committee, and you will see Enclosure No. 8, being the report of the Commission appointed to inquire into Lawrence's case? Yes, I have read it.

1013. You had something to do with that Commission, I believe? Yes, I appeared for Lawrence.

1014. Do you think that a fair, honest, and impartial report? I do, certainly.

1015. The Commissioners took a great deal of pains over the matter, in order to arrive at a correct correct conclusion? Yes; they were two days over the inquiry, sitting very late on each occasion, and investigating the matter most thoroughly; I believe it to have been most conscientiously given.

1016. Do you think the Commissioners had any interest in the matter to give a report either one way or the other? Certainly not.

1017. They are men altogether above suspicion? Yes; I know two of them intimately, and they are far above all suspicion.

1018. They came to the conclusion that Lawrence had been guilty of a grave irregularity, but that he had not been criminal? Yes.

1019. Will you look at paragraph No. 2 of Captain M'Lerie's letter of the 8th December, 1861? Yes, I have read it. I see that he regards it "as not simple irregularity, but absolute crime."

1020. Do you think that statement in his letter is borne out by the facts of the case? Certainly not.

1021. Do you not think that this letter has the appearance of having been drawn up by a person prejudiced in the case against Lawrence? Taking away the name, and assuming the letter to have been from a person with whom I was unacquainted, I should certainly, on reading it, be under that impression.

1022. If a witness were to give such evidence as this before a Court, would you consider it to be that of an unprejudiced person, and would it be likely to have any weight with you? Not with me; he appears to me to have taken a very extreme view of the case.

1023. He speaks of Sergeant Lawrence's collusion with Rorison to defraud the Government—now do you think that Lawrence had any such intention? No; if I thought so for a moment I should have altered my opinion of him at once; but I do not think so, and therefore I have the same high opinion of Lawrence as I ever had.

1024. Can you in any way conceive how the Inspector General of Police came to entertain that view? I cannot; I am not in a position to account for it.

1025. Do you think that the inimical feelings between the parties were put on, as Captain M'Lerie's letter states, to blind justice, or were they in your opinion real? I think so; I think they were real. Of course this is a mere matter of opinion, and I may be deceived; but I do not think that they speak even now. Rorison is living out on the Abererombie, but he is occasionally in Bathurst, and I do not think that he and Lawrence speak when they meet. He is a most intelligent and well educated man.

1026. What was Lawrence tried for? Forging and uttering.

1027. Do you think that a man who chanced to put his name as a witness to a forgery committed by another would therefore be himself guilty of forgery? He would be participis criminis if aware of what was being done, but he could not be guilty of forgery.

1028. Particularly if he put his name down as a witness to the signature forged on being told that the party so signing was authorized to do so? I do not know. One very material ingredient necessary to complete the crime would be wanting, and that is the animus furandi. You may write a man's name at his request, and that is not a forgery; you may sign the most important document of all—a man's will—if he desires you to do so, without committing forgery.

1029. Do you think that, in acting as he did, Sergeant Lawrence really intended to commit a fraud upon the Government by filling in these excessive quantities in the voucher? No. I repeat that if I thought he had any intention to defraud I should have changed my opinion of him; but that opinion has not changed, and therefore, as far as I believe and can judge of the circumstances of the case, I entirely exonerate him of all intention to defraud.

1030. But Captain M'Lerie says it was not an irregularity, but an absolute crime? I agree with the report of the Commissioners that Lawrence was guilty of an irregularity, but I certainly never viewed his conduct in the light of a crime.

1031. He also says in his letter that the report urged a weak plea, that to a certain extent irregularity prevailed;—do you class it so, as a weak plea? I do not. I would not believe that either Mr. Hawkins or Mr. M'Lean would lend his name to anything he thought improper. I have a very high opinion of Mr. M'Lean's ability and judgment, and am sure that he would not attach his name to any document that he would afterwards be ashamed of.

1032. Do you think the report a more satisfactory document than Captain M'Lerie's letter? Knowing the evidence as I do, and knowing that on that evidence the report was drawn, it is my opinion that the report is the more satisfactory document, and simply from its having been based upon proper data.

1033. Do you think that Lawrence would have been justified in prosecuting Rorison for perjury, after a professional gentleman had advised him not to do so? I think not. There could be no object in getting a professional opinion, if that opinion is not afterwards acted upon.

1034. Was he willing to prosecute Rorison? Yes, he told me he was anxious to do so, and would have proceeded had it not been for the letter from his legal adviser. I have no doubt whatever that had he not been advised to refrain from so doing that he would have prosecuted Rorison.

1035. Then it was from no want of will on his part that he did not do so? No; in that letter he says that he is quite willing to give evidence if a prosecution were commenced, but that he himself would not prosecute.

1036. Are you aware that Captain Battye signed this document—the voucher on which forgery is imputed? Yes, I think I recollect that he did so.

1037. Then if Captain Battye put his signature to the voucher equally with Sergeant Lawrence, must not the two be equally guilty or equally innocent? Believing that Sergeant Lawrence put his signature to the document with no intention whatever to defraud, and that Captain Battye did the same, both were equally in the same position of innocence.

1038. By the Chairman: It is in evidence that Captain Battye's name was signed there before that of Sergeant Lawrence, and consequently there must have been a greater excuse for Lawrence signing it, since seeing his superior officer's signature there, he would naturally conclude that the document was correct? Yes.

1039. By Mr. Sadleir: Then both were alike criminal, if there were any criminality attaching to the proceeding? If they attached the signatures for the purpose of defrauding the Government, both would alike be criminal, but as neither ever did so there could be no charge against either of them.

1040. And if there were to be any prosecutions in the matter, Captain M'Lerie was as much bound to prosecute the one as the other? I should imagine so; that is what my common sense tells me should be done.

1041. By Mr. Hellyer: Do you know whether Captain M'Lerie directed Dr. Palmer not to allow bail when Sergeant Lawrence was apprehended? I do not.

1042. At the time you received instructions to draw the information against Sergeant Lawrence, were the Assizes on—was the Criminal Court sitting? The Court was sitting, but whether it was the Sessions or the Assizes I really forget.

1043. Was Mr. Chambers in Bathurst at the time? I cannot say; I know that I was in Court at the time, and was requested to come out into another room to speak to Captain M'Lerie.

1044. I do not wish to ask you any question touching the conversation you had with Captain M'Lerie, but I should like to ask you whether you did not tell him of your conviction as to Lawrence's innocence? Yes, I had that conviction, or I should not have interceded for him.

1045. If Captain M'Lerie has said that you have not at any time informed him of your conviction of Lawrence's innocence, would such a statement be correct? As I have said before, I would not have interested myself at all for Lawrence if I had not been convinced of his innocence. If Captain M'Lerie has said that I did not tell him of my conviction, he must be labouring under an error, and has possibly forgotten it.

1046. I believe that Lawrence was very successful as an apprehender of criminals? Yes, he was a very active man in his situation.

1047. And since his departure from his post, the criminals have been very active in that district? Yes, because the population has greatly increased latterly, and we have now some of the worst characters from Victoria in the district.

1048. Have you now any officer of the Government in that district possessing his activity and efficiency? Yes, Lieutenant Morriset is a very active officer, and does his duty well.

1049. But I mean in Lawrence's situation—is the person who is acting as Sergeant-Major as active or as efficient as Lawrence? No, it is a complete farce—his appointment; he does not know the bush, and therefore cannot be so useful as Lawrence was.

1050. By the Chairman: He is in no way equal to Sergeant Lawrence? No.

1051. By Mr. Sadleir: Do you think that Sergeant Lawrence's dismissal from the service has done him any injury either in character or in circumstances? It has not done him any injury amongst those who have taken the trouble to investigate the matter, I believe; but there is no doubt that the simple fact of his dismissal must have injured him considerably with those who were unacquainted with the evidence in the case, or who would not take the trouble to make inquiry into it. Lawrence, I know, was very badly off for some time after his dismissal, and until he was relieved by funds from England.

1052. Would not his dismissal have been ruinous to him if it had not been for his receiving those funds from England? Yes, he was so cut up about his dismissal, and the unjust way in which he had been treated, that he was utterly unfit for anything; but after so many years service in the police I hardly know what work he is now fit for.

1053. Is there any indorsement on his testimonials to the effect that he has been dismissed from the police, without stating what for? I do not know whether there is or not.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

ALFRED WITTS.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 26 August, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

May it please your Honors,—The humble Petition of Alfred Witts, late Chief Constable of Bombala,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

That after seventeen years hard service as Chief Constable of Queanbeyan and Bombala, he was dismissed from his office, through the illegal conduct of George Hebden, Esq., J.P., under the following circumstances:—

In the month of April, 1859, a Mr. Ashton, proprietor of a travelling Circus, performed at Bombala for several nights, and on Tuesday, 12th April, invited your Petitioner and his family to see the performance gratis.

In compliance with the invitation, your Petitioner introduced his daughter, then between 14 and 15 years of age, and shortly after, the said George Hebden, Esq., J.P., ordered her to be arrested and turned out of the Circus, unless she paid the admission fee. I was outside at the time, and my attention being drawn to this, I informed Mr. Hebden that my daughter was there at Ashton's request and permission; nevertheless, Mr. Hebden insisted the police should arrest her and remove her from the Circus.

I remonstrated with Mr. Hebden and showed him the illegality of his act, nevertheless he persisted, and threatened to dismiss Constable Zoellner if he did not arrest my daughter and remove her. The effect was, she was arrested and removed, whereupon I immediately commenced an action against Mr. Hebden, and eventually succeeded in getting a verdict and £25 damages upon the merits of the case.

In the meantime the Justices for the District, the majority of whom, together with Mr. Hebden, had refused to act as Justices for many months before the 19th of April, 1859, dismissed me, thereby convincing me that I was not dismissed for the breach of any law, moral or divine, but merely because I had resented the illegal arrest of my daughter.

The consequence to your Petitioner was his complete ruin, for I was kept nearly five months in suspense before the sentence was confirmed by the Government, and me and my large family have suffered severely ever since.

Your Petitioner hath applied to be heard upon the subject of his wrongs to your Honorable House, from time to time, through the kindness of the Honorable D. Egan, Esq., H. Parkes, Esq., and last Session, T. Garrett, Esq., through whose kindness the Petition was referred to a Committee.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to take his cause into your consideration, and should any defect of form be detected in this Petition the same be mercifully overlooked.

And your Petitioner will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

ALFRED WITTS,
Late Chief Constable of Bombala.

ALFRED WITTS.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 16th September last, “to inquire into the circumstances connected with the removal of Alfred Witts, senr., from the office of Chief Constable at Bombala, as set out in Petitions presented to the Legislative Assembly on the 6th November, 1860, on the 6th November, 1861, and on 26th August, 1862,” have agreed to the following Report :—

Your Committee have examined the witnesses named in the margin*, and carefully considered the Petitions referred to them, together with the various documents appended to the evidence. They also caused several other witnesses† to be summoned, but the season of the year and the distance at which they reside from the metropolis, have been pleaded as an excuse by several of them for their non-compliance with the summons of the Committee.

* Mr. A. Witts,
Mr. G. Heritage,
W. Elyard, Esq.,
Capt. M'Lerie.

† Dr. Campbell,
H. Nicholson,
Esq.,
J. Nicholson,
Esq.,
E. Jonas, Esq.,
J. H. Baddeley,
Esq.

Your Committee find the following allegations of the Petitions proved :—1st. That Alfred Witts was Chief Constable at Bombala on the 19th April, 1859, on which day he was dismissed by the Bench of Magistrates, consisting of Mr. Massie (Chairman), Mr. John Nicholson, Mr. J. B. Campbell, and Mr. C. H. Baddeley, on a charge of “neglect and violation of his duty in his office, on the night of the 12th April.” This charge, according to the allegations of the Petition, and the evidence given before the Court, was based on the following circumstances :—A performance was given by Mr. Ashton, part of the proceeds of which were to be devoted to the Bombala Church Building Fund. The Petitioner, accompanied by his daughter, entered the circus without payment, in accordance with a permission which he states he had from Mr. Ashton ; subsequently, objection was taken to the Petitioner’s daughter remaining in the circus without paying the usual entrance fee, and she was removed by a constable, at the instance of Mr. Hebden, a Magistrate. It was for protesting against‡ this procedure on the part of Mr. Hebden in a violent manner, that the charge of “neglect and violation of duty,” on which the Petitioner was dismissed, was considered proved. 2nd. That the Petitioner brought an action in the District Court, Bombala, against Mr. Hebden, for causing evidence before Court.

Evidence, p. 18.

causing the illegal arrest of his daughter, and obtained a verdict in his favour, with £25 damages. 3rd. That the allegation of the Petitioner, that Messrs. Massie, Campbell, and J. Nicholson were actuated by an improper feeling towards him, must be considered as well founded, inasmuch as (as shown by the table appended to the letter of Messrs. Baddeley and Murray to the Colonial Secretary, dated 27th July, 1859) they only attended to their duties as Magistrates on occasions when cases in which the Petitioner was concerned were subject to investigation. 4th. That Petitioner had been in the Police Force of this Colony for a period of eighteen years* as Chief Constable, and that without having any charge of misconduct or inefficiency proved against him, though it is also proved that he, by resigning his office in 1851, lost his right to the allowance on retirement for a continuous service, and was, by his final dismissal by the Bombala Bench, deprived of his legal claim for a gratuity or pension. It has, on the other hand, been shown to your Committee, that the Eden Bench, in April, 1858, and two Magistrates of the Cooma Bench, in September of the same year, complained of the conduct of the Petitioner as Chief Constable; but it is also shown that these charges have not been investigated, and were only brought forward by the Bombala Bench to justify them in dismissing the Petitioner on another and distinct charge the following year.

*Vide Capt. M'Leir's evidence.

Under all these circumstances, your Committee feel justified in coming to the following conclusions:—That the Petitioner was wrongfully dismissed, the charge upon which he was tried not being borne out by the evidence, that three of the four Magistrates who joined in that dismissal appear to have acted in such a way as to throw the greatest suspicion upon their conduct, and to give prima facie evidence in support of the charge of partiality preferred against them by the Petitioner.

Your Committee, therefore, recommend, that if the Petitioner should not be found fit for employment in as nearly as possible a corresponding position in the new Force with that from which he has been wrongfully dismissed, he should, if he applies, be given employment in some capacity for which he is fitted, of equal value to that of which he has been deprived.

Your Committee cannot close their Report without expressing their strong and unqualified disapprobation of the conduct of the gentlemen named in the margin,* in having neglected their duty as Magistrates, excepting on occasions when a particular person was interested in the cases to be tried. Such conduct tends to bring the administration of justice into distrust and contempt amongst the community, and ought to be marked with the severest reprehension by the Executive.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

PETITION OF ALFRED WITTS.

THURSDAY, 2 OCTOBER, 1862.

Present :—

MR. DANGAR,
MR. GARRETT,MR. HARPUR,
MR. LEARY.

THOMAS GARRETT, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Alfred Witts called in and examined :

1. By the Chairman : You were chief constable at Bombala in 1859? Yes.
2. Were you suspended or dismissed in that year? On the 19th April I was suspended.
3. By whom? By the Magistrates.
4. Who were the Magistrates? Mr. Massie (he was the chairman), Mr. Jno. Nicholson, Mr. J. B. Campbell, and Mr. C. H. Baddeley.
5. They suspended you? They did.
6. On what ground were you suspended? They charged me with one offence, and tried me instantly on another, giving me no opportunity to file a defence to it.
7. What was the charge on which you were suspended? I produce the papers respecting what I was prepared to defend, but I cannot produce what they charged me with.
8. This is a copy of the proceedings? Yes. I was charged with neglect and violation of my duty.
9. In what did this neglect and violation of your duty consist? I really cannot say what passed through their Worships' minds, but these are the proceedings. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix.)
10. You were dismissed on the 19th April? I was suspended rather.
11. It is stated here, "Defendant is found guilty of the charge preferred against him, and is ordered to be dismissed forthwith"? Under the law the Magistrates have not the power of dismissal—only of recommending dismissal.
12. On this they recommended your dismissal? That is it.
13. To whom did they recommend your dismissal? To the Colonial Secretary, no doubt.
14. Were you doing duty after the 19th April? I considered that I was from that time to the 30th August, when a letter came up.
15. What was that letter? I never could catch sight of that letter.
16. How do you know it came up? I know from hearsay that it did come up; I also know from hearsay that on the 24th June another letter came up.
17. That was the previous June? Yes.
18. What took place on the 30th August? A letter came up stating that I could no longer hold office there.
19. From whom? I would say from the Colonial Secretary.
20. Have you seen that? Yes; I would correct what I said before—I have seen that.
21. Have you a copy of that? No.
22. It was confirming the decision of the Bench? It was, but nearly five months had then elapsed.

Mr. A. Witts.
2 Oct., 1862.

- Mr. A. Witts. 23. Did you take any steps relative to that dismissal—did you remonstrate against it? I did not; but I was kept in a state of suspension for nearly five months.
- 2 Oct., 1862. 24. Did you receive your salary for that five months? I did not.
25. Have you made application for that? I have repeatedly.
26. To whom? To the Colonial Secretary.
27. With regard to the removal of your daughter from the circus, did you take any proceedings against Mr. Hebden for his conduct in that matter? Yes, I brought an action against Mr. Hebden in the District Court and was nonsuited, because I did not use the word "malice," in the information. I then became very poor, and did not follow out the matter at the next sittings, but I did the following, and got £25 damages.
28. For the illegal removal of your daughter? Yes, for her illegal arrest. I would beg to draw your attention to the circumstance that I wanted the Magistrates to postpone the case, in order that Mr. Ashton might be called, as he was only ten miles distance, at the Dragon, and he could have cleared up the matter, but they refused.
29. I see the Magistrates, who sat upon your case, and dismissed you, were Mr. J. Nicholson, Mr. Massie, Mr. Campbell, and Mr. Baddeley? Yes.
30. Of your own knowledge, can you state whether all those gentlemen were regular attendants at the Bench? No, they had not been there for months—they had all kept away from their magisterial duties. Mr. Hebden had six months previously stated in the Court, that he would not interfere with the proceedings of the Bench while the present arrangements existed.
31. What arrangements? The appointment of Mr. Baddeley and Mr. Solomon.
32. Do you know whether Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Massie, or Mr. Campbell, had sat on the Bench for some time before this case of yours was tried? I am positive they did not enter the Court House, or interfere at any time from about six months before, when Mr. Hebden made those remarks in Court.
33. Was it supposed to be for the same reason that Mr. Hebden expressed? It was so supposed.
34. They belonged to the old Magistrates? Yes.
35. Have you ever made any application, since your dismissal was confirmed by the Colonial Secretary, to be reinstated in the office on its becoming vacant? Yes.
36. The situation subsequently became vacant, and you applied for it? I did.
37. What took place? Mr. Massie and Dr. Campbell, who had never been in the Court House from the time I have spoken of, came expressly for the purpose of opposing me.
38. What Magistrates sat? (The witness read from a paper.) "Tuesday, March 9th, 1861. Present:—H. Massie, Dr. Campbell, J. Nicholson, and H. Nicholson."
39. That was two years after your dismissal? All but one month.
40. These gentlemen attended at Court on the occasion you name? Yes.
41. Had you been residing at Bombala? Yes, at least I had been at the diggings, still I kept my eye on it, and made inquiries.
42. Had these gentlemen attended regularly at Court during that interval? They had not, and as a proof I wrote to the Colonial Secretary, stating that I was persecuted. They had not been in the Court for two years before.
43. And they sat upon this application of yours? Yes.
44. What was the result? The result was that they sent to Sydney again.
45. Were you the only applicant? No, there were other applicants.
46. Who did they elect at the time? They wrote, leaving it to the Inspector General to send up one.
47. They would not decide upon the applicants, but left it to the Inspector General to send up one? Yes.
48. What was the salary of the chief constable? £175 a year.
49. How long had you been chief constable before this? At Bombala, during five years; at Queanbeyan, thirteen years; and I had been in the London Police five years and three months.
50. Had there ever been any complaint lodged against you while you were chief constable? None.
51. Have you held any official position since? Since the passing of the Small Debts Act I have been bailiff to the Court of Requests, but it does not bring in much—it hardly finds me in shoe leather.
52. Did the Bench give you that appointment? Yes.
53. Who were the Magistrates who sat on that occasion? I cannot answer that.
54. The allegations in your petition that you suffered grievous loss and are still suffering from the loss of that situation, are true? They are true.
55. You are clear that you were not paid for the five months during which you were suspended? Yes.
56. What was the amount due? Between £60 and £70.
57. By Mr. Leary: When this case was tried on the 19th April, you state that you were dismissed? Yes.
58. What do you mean by saying that the Bench could not dismiss you? By the law they could not; it must be confirmed by the Inspector General.
59. That is not the law? It was at the time, pardon me. That will be seen by one clause of the Police Act. I will even show the Committee lawyer Forbes' report, who took my case in hand, and he showed that they could only recommend my dismissal.
60. How do you know they recommended your dismissal? By that (referring to the paper handed in.)
61. Does not the decision of the Magistrates show that they had the power of dismissing you when they state that they dismiss you forthwith? I admit that.

62. By Mr. Harpur: You state that you acted afterwards? I did, under orders from Mr. A. Witts. Mr. Murray, the Police Magistrate at Eden, who sent me up a letter.
63. By Mr. Leary: How do you mean that you acted—did you wear the uniform? I did 2 Oct., 1862. not; the clothing did not come up, but I received the money.
64. Did you exercise the powers of a chief constable? I was very cautious, but I walked about as before.
65. Did you ever apprehend a man during that time? I did not; there was no cause, but I went about the same as usual.
66. Was no man apprehended for drunkenness or other offence during that time? I dare say there might have been.
67. Did you ever see a man drunk during that time? No.
68. Did you never see a man commit a violation of the law during the whole five months? No.
69. Would you have seen it if you had been acting as you used to do before you were dismissed? Then, probably, I would not have seen it; I might have done so.
70. Then you did not act after the 19th April as you did before that time? Not with the same zeal.
71. Who were the Magistrates residing in your district at that time? There were a good number at that time.
72. What Magistrates generally attended? For six months before the 19th April, no one but Mr. Baddeley.
73. How were cases decided that required the adjudication of two Magistrates? The Crown commissioned Mr. Murray to come up once now and then, according to circumstances. They were disposed of with the assistance of Mr. Murray.
74. Where do the Magistrates reside—in the town? Mr. Baddeley does.
75. The others, how far from the town of Bombala do they reside? Mr. Hebden, seven miles; Dr. Campbell, nine miles; Mr. Massie at the Dragon, ten miles; one of the Messrs. Nicholson, twelve miles, and one seven miles.
76. You state that Mr. Baddeley was the only Magistrate who usually attended the Bombala Bench? Unless when he was assisted by Mr. Murray, of Eden.
77. Are you aware that it requires more than one Magistrate to try a chief constable for neglect of duty? No; to try him I do not suppose it would require more than one.
78. Do you not know that one Justice could not dismiss a policeman? He could an ordinary constable, but not the chief constable.
79. You think the chief constable could not be dismissed by one Justice, but that an ordinary constable could be? By law; I am taking the law.
80. Have you ever read the law? Yes, under that Act.
81. You give that as your opinion? Yes; if the law were before me I could point it out.
82. With reference to the removal of your daughter, were you present when Mr. Ashton told Mr. Hebden that he had not given permission to your daughter to enter the circus without payment? I was not present, but if I had been I should have said, "Ashton, Ashton, it is very strange that you should tell Mr. Hebden one thing and me another." That is why I wanted Mr. Ashton as a witness. There should be a memorandum on the proceedings that I applied to have the case postponed that he might be called. It was Mr. Ashton took my daughter in, and then I walked out and attended to my duty outside.
83. Was there ever a policeman dismissed during the time you were chief constable? Yes.
84. Did you ever see a policeman dismissed by one Justice? Yes. You see you want this almost upon oath.
85. If you do not like to answer the question you need not? In my opinion Mr. Massie has dismissed a policeman.
86. From your memory you say you have known a single Justice to dismiss a policeman? Yes.
87. Where? At Bombala.
88. Did ever you know any other policeman dismissed? I have known several.
89. As chief constable, were you aware whether the Bench were summoned on these particular occasions? I never knew such a thing.
90. Were the Bench never summoned for licensing meetings and others? Yes.
91. By whom? By official letter from the Clerk of the Court.
92. You state that when a charge is preferred against a policeman for neglect of duty, there is never any special summons? The word "policeman" would not come under that Act.
93. Under what Act? The old Act. You remember that three years and a half have gone by—it was the word "constable."
94. By Mr. Harpur: Where does the Magistrate who requested you to act as chief constable reside? At the Bay.
95. How far is that? Between fifty and sixty miles.
96. Is he the Police Magistrate? Yes.
97. He came at the request of the Government to form a Court? Several times.
98. When these other Magistrates, owing to the appointment of Mr. Baddeley, refused to act? Yes.
99. These gentlemen who met for the purpose of forming a Court to dismiss you, had not sat as Magistrates for some time previously, and they did so then for the purpose of dismissing you? That was my impression.
100. They did not meet for some time subsequently? No.
101. You stated to Mr. Hebden that he had no liking for you? Yes.
102. What was your meaning in saying that? On a certain given day, about twelve months

Mr. A. Witts.
2 Oct., 1862.

months before this, I was in the street, and Mr. Hebden came to me and said, "You are the very man I want—where is your horse?" I said, "Here." He then proceeded with me to the residence of one Warburton, whom Mr. Hebden accused of cattle-stealing—in fact, of stealing some of Mr. Hebden's property. I sat and stood by because some of the conversation took place while I was on horseback, and overheard the conversation that took place. I afterwards took Warburton into custody, and locked him in the lock-up. I immediately went a few yards to the Court House, and black-leaded the occurrence that took place, and put down the language. It was some few days after this that Warburton was examined and Mr. Hebden gave his evidence. I was outside the Court, so as not to hear his evidence. I was sworn, and gave mine. The evidence did not appear to please Mr. Hebden, and he wished the Magistrate to dismiss the case, and implied that I had not given correct testimony. Some little time—a day or two—after this I went to Mr. Hebden to get some summonses signed, or, at all events, in the execution of my duties, and he told me not to come there again; in fact, he insulted me. I did not say much at that time, but after deliberation I wrote to Mr. Hebden, stating that if he had any specific charge against me, to give it—that I had given honest evidence before God and my conscience. I sent that letter. A few days after this, he and I were in the Court House alone, when he produced this letter, and said, "Is this your writing?" I said, "It is, sir." He said, "Was it done in haste?" I said, "No, I sat up all night, and commenced writing it at three o'clock in the morning, after study." He said, "I think the subject had better drop; here are your papers, you can put them in the fire if you like." I had got copies of them, and he put his into the fire; instead of me putting mine in the fire I put them on the file, and afterwards put them in the fire, but not in his presence. From that moment I saw a change in Mr. Hebden. I could do nothing right after that.

103. By Mr. Leary: I think you stated that Mr. Baddeley had taken some dislike to you? No.

104. When was Mr. Baddeley appointed Magistrate? About seven months prior to this occurrence—about a month before Mr. Hebden said he would not interfere in the Bench matters.

105. By Mr. Harpur: What position did Mr. Baddeley occupy before he was appointed to the Magistracy? He had been in the Colony a long while. Shortly prior to this he had been superintendent to Mr. Hebden.

106. Do you know what Mr. Hebden's objection was to his being made a Magistrate? It could not be on the score of education, for he was a man of good education and character; I think it must have been because he was carrying on business as a tanner.

107. He could have had no other objection? I do not see that he could; he bore a good moral character.

108. You referred to another gentleman who had also been appointed a Magistrate? Yes, Mr. Solomon.

109. Had Mr. Hebden and the other gentlemen an objection to him? Yes, as being of an inferior class.

110. Is he a storekeeper? Yes.

111. Is he a man of good character? He is a man of character for humanity and fair dealing.

112. He was just such a man as the people wish to have for a Magistrate? Yes.

113. On account of these two gentlemen being appointed to the Magistracy the others refused to act? That was the general impression.

114. I think you said Mr. Hebden stated that it was on that ground he would not sit? His precise words were "while the present arrangement exists."

115. Meaning that? Yes, Mr. Baddeley sat on one side and the other gentlemen on the other, and they did not speak.

116. By the Chairman: Where did this take place? In the Court House, about six months prior to the 19th April.

117. By Mr. Leary: Who attended to the duties of the Bench at Bombala prior to the appointment of Mr. Baddeley? Mr. Hebden was very active.

118. When did they hold the Courts? I have known them to be three months without a Magistrate in the district—I would recall the word "three" and say two months or six weeks.

119. You have known the district to be without a Magistrate for two months? For many weeks.

120. By Mr. Harpur: I am not perfectly satisfied as to your having acted as chief constable after your dismissal;—were you not in the habit, as chief constable, of making returns to the Government? Yes.

121. Did you after your dismissal make any such returns? I never went into the Court House.

122. By Mr. Leary: And never went into the lock-up? No.

123. By Mr. Harpur: You supposed you were suspended? Yes.

124. By Mr. Leary: Did you hear the decision of the Bench? Yes.

125. Was not that very plain that they dismissed you forthwith? Yes; but there was the law before me, and I doubted their power.

126. You thought you knew the law better than the Magistrates? There is the written law.

127. By Mr. Harpur: Your impression was that there was such a law? Yes.

128. Your impression might have been wrong, and yet there might not have been any great fault in entertaining it? When the Government did send up the letter, they said the offence, if any, was too severely visited upon an old officer.

129. Where is that letter? In the Court House.

130. By Mr. Leary: You have been told that? Yes.

131. By the Chairman: Did that come from the Colonial Secretary's Office? Yes; it will bear date somewhere in the month of June; it was during a prorogation that took place in Mr. Forster's time.

Mr. A. Witts.

APPENDIX.

Bombala Police Office,
16 April, 1859.

Sir,

I am instructed by the Bench of Magistrates at Bombala to request your attendance at a Court of Petty Sessions to be holden at this office on Tuesday next the 19th (nineteenth) instant (at 11 o'clock, A.M.) to answer a charge which will then and there be preferred against you of insubordination and insolence to a Magistrate on the night of the 12th instant.

To Mr. Witts,
Chief Constable, Bombala.

I remain, &c.,
THOMAS FOX,
C. P. S.

Bombala Police Office,
19 April, 1859.

Before John Nicholson, Esq., J.P., H. H. Massie, Esq., J.P., Jno. Campbell, Esq., J.P., C. H. Baddeley, Esq., J.P.

Alfred Wits, Chief Constable of the Police District of Bombala, appears to answer a charge preferred against him of neglect and violation of his duty in his office, on the night of the 12th instant, at Bombala.

(Defendant pleads not guilty.)

George Hebdon, Esquire, being duly sworn upon his oath, saith:—I am a Magistrate for this Territory; I usually reside at Maharatta, in the Police District of Bombala: Mr. Wits is the chief constable of this district; there was a performance at Ashton's Circus, on the 12th inst., for the benefit of the Bombala Church Building Fund; I do know Mr. Lawrence the Postmaster here; I believe he is Secretary or Treasurer, or both, to the Church Building Fund; he told me he was acting as doorkeeper or money-taker, or both, on that night; I was present at the circus on that evening; my interference as a Magistrate was on that evening called for by Mr. Lawrence; Mr. Lawrence complained that the chief constable had taken two persons into the circus, and that they refused to pay for admission or to leave; I told him that his proper course in such a case was to give them in charge to a constable to be removed; in a short time he came and told me that the constables had declined to take and remove them, because they were taken in by the chief constable; I then had the constable called to me, and told him that if Mr. Lawrence pointed out any persons in the circus who refused to pay for admission, he was to request them to retire, and if they did not do so he was to remove them; just before giving this order I sent for Mr. Ashton, the proprietor of the circus; I asked him if he had given any persons permission to enter the circus without payment; he said, "Certainly not; that constables were privileged to go in without payment;" I asked him whether that privilege extended to constables' families, and he said, "Certainly not;" after giving the order to Zoellner, I followed him to the place where those persons were sitting; one of them, a man, retired, I don't know his name; the other was a female, whom I have since heard was Mr. Wits's daughter, but I did not then know her; as soon as the constable approached, Mr. Wits came forward in a very violent manner and told her not to move, and repeated several times, "Don't go, let him (meaning the constable) drag you out; I want him to touch you—that will be an assault;" and turning round he said, in substance, "That was just what he expected from me;" his manner was very violent to me; when the constable laid his hand on this person, after waiting some time for her to go out, the chief constable said, "That'll do—that's an assault—now I'll pay."

Cross-examined by Defendant:—I don't know what arrangement was made that night (the 12th instant) for the distribution of the proceeds of the circus with Mr. Ashton; I understood that the proceeds were to be for the benefit of the Church Fund; I did not hear you say at the first outset that you had Mr. Ashton's permission to take your family on that night into the circus; you did not tell me you were in by Ashton's permission, when the constables apprehended your daughter; you did not warn me that the arrest of your daughter was an illegal one, at least I did not hear you do so; when the complaint was first made to me of persons being admitted into the circus, I was in company with several other gentlemen; there were several other gentlemen then present who are in the Commission of the Peace.

By the Bench:—I gave no orders to any person to apprehend any person found in the circus without payment, but I advised him to remove any such person; I do not know that I threatened a constable with dismissal for refusing to remove any person pointed out to him by me, but when the chief constable interfered in the matter, I did say to a constable, "You are to obey my orders, and not those of the chief constable;" I might have said, "or I will dismiss you," but I don't remember saying so.

J. NICHOLSON, J.P.
H. H. MASSIE, J.P.
J. B. CAMPBELL, J.P.
C. H. BADDELEY, J.P.

John Richard Lawrence, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I am Postmaster at Bombala. I am Secretary of the Bombala Church Building Fund; on Tuesday Mr. Ashton gave a benefit at his circus towards the Bombala Church Building Fund; public notice to that effect was posted on the Post Office; Mr. Ashton at first offered the whole proceeds, but subsequently arrangements were made by myself and others that half the proceeds should be given to the church fund, and he should retain the other half; on that night I acted, with Mr. Ashton's authority, as money and ticket taker; Mr. Ashton said expressly that he should issue no tickets himself, but requested me to sell the tickets at the door; I know Mr. Hebdon, as a Magistrate of this District; on that night I did call for Mr. Hebdon's interference as a Magistrate; before I called for Mr. Hebdon's interference, Mr. Wits, with his daughter on his arm, and, I believe, his nephew, came into the circus, and said to me and Mr. Ashton "privileged," and passed on; I immediately turned to Mr. Ashton, and said to him, "I thought there was no privilege on a benefit night;" he said, "No more there is, but we allow the constables in;" I said, "Not as spectators without paying, and also his family ought to pay;" and he said, "Of course they ought." I then said, "Well, you make them pay;" and he said he had nothing to do with it, as I was selling the tickets and taking the money. I immediately went to Mr. Wits, and asked asked him to pay for his daughter and nephew; he asked me, "what I had to do with it?" I told him, and he then said, "he knew who I was and all about it." I then went to Mr. Ashton, and told him what had occurred, and said "that if Mr. Witts was not made to pay for the two persons he had taken in with him, that I would have nothing to do with it;" I then went out for the express purpose of consulting Mr. Hebden, as a Magistrate, but seeing Mr. Hebden I detailed to him what had occurred, and said, that if Mr. Witts were not made to pay for these two persons, that I would have nothing more to do with it. Mr. Hebden then told me to go to Mr. Witts again; I went, and asked him to pay for these two persons; he told me that the lights were not yet lit, and also said, "he knew who I was;" and I said then, "If you don't pay, I shall find means to make you;" according to Mr. Hebden's directions I went to look for Constable Zoellner, but at the door of the hut I met Mr. Hebden, who asked for Mr. Ashton; I went and brought him; Mr. Hebden then asked Ashton if the constables and their families had his permission to go in without paying; Mr. Ashton said, "he generally allowed the constables in, but not their families without paying, particularly on a benefit night;" Mr. Hebden then gave me orders to tell Zoellner the constable to take them in charge, or put them out if they would not pay—I mean the two persons in mention; I told Zoellner to do so, and Zoellner went to them; I heard Mr. Witts tell his daughter to sit still and not to move, I then heard Mr. Witts say, "Assault—that'll do; I'll pay the money;" Mr. Witts after this came and paid five shillings to me, but Bowtell the constable had previously paid me six shillings for Mr. Witts' daughter; I told this to Mr. Witts, who said in an off hand manner "There's the money, keep it, I shan't take it back;" the principal part of the audience were in at the latter part of this discussion; the words and demeanour of Mr. Witts on this occasion during the discussion, were the reverse of proper and respectful, his language was loud; the other person afterwards came in, paid me six shillings later in the evening.

By Defendant: I did not see Mr. Ashton escort you into the circus, as I was between Mr. Ashton and the door; I do not think he could have done so, there were two or three persons, or perhaps half-a-dozen in the circus at this time; I do not remember your saying that you were in with Mr. Ashton's authority; you did say you had a higher power in being there than me; I don't remember Mr. Ashton saying "How can I turn those persons out when I have invited them in?" Mr. Ashton did not say "Rather than have any bother about it you will have to pay me some money, and you can deduct it from me;" I did not say to Mr. Ashton "that I would make Witts pay the money out of his own pocket;" when the Magistrate gave the orders for these persons' apprehension, you did caution the Magistrate that he was committing an illegal act; I don't remember your saying that your daughter had as good a right to be there as Mr. Hebden himself.

*Constable August Zoellner, being sworn, upon his oath saith:—*I am a constable of police at Bombala; I was on duty at Ashton's Circus on the night of the 12th instant; I know Mr. Lawrence as Postmaster at Bombala; he did act as money-taker on that night at the circus; he did in the course of that night tell me there were some persons in the circus who had not paid for admission; he did ask me to remove them; he asked me to remove Mr. Witts' daughter and his nephew, John Ford; I told him the chief constable was about, and I did not like to interfere while he was so; afterwards Mr. Hebden himself came to me and ordered me either to make these two persons pay or to turn them out; I told Mr. Hebden I did not like to interfere, as Mr. Witts was there, and Mr. Hebden said, "You must obey my orders;" I then went to these persons, and told young Ford either to pay or to go out, and he went out, but the girl stopped; the girl did not at the time offer to pay; Mr. Witts was present, and told the girl to stop where she was; I reported what had taken place to Mr. Hebden, who said I must go and remove these persons, or make them pay, or else I should be dismissed myself; I then went again and caught hold of the girl to put her out, when the girl said she would neither pay nor go out; when a Mrs. Funnell paid Constable Bowtell 6s. for her, I then let her go; Mr. Witts said to his daughter, "You keep your place; don't move;" Mr. Hebden was also there; I heard Mr. Hebden say to Mr. Witts, "that he would dismiss him if he did not mind," when Mr. Witts said "I know sir, you have got a great love for me;" Mr. Witts' manner was violent, and his talk was loud; he defied anyone to touch the girl, and he would give them law for it; I was bothered, and don't know what Mr. Witts had said to Mr. Hebden before he threatened to dismiss him (Mr. Witts.)

*By Defendant:—*I heard Mr. Ashton say it was customary for constables' families to go in free; I took my own wife, and he refused to take payment for her; he has at different times returned the money to you; under such circumstances you did, from the first, say "You had Mr. Ashton's authority "for the girl to be there, and that, under such circumstances, whoever apprehended the girl would act "illegal; and I was to be careful I had a Magistrate's order."

*By the Bench:—*I did not hear Mr. Ashton on that particular night give permission for the free admission of Mr. Witts' family, and I did not tell Mr. Hebden that Mr. Witts had such permission.

AUGUST ZOELLNER.

Taken, &c., &c.—

H. H. MASSIE, J.P., &c.

*Wilbraham Edwards, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—*I reside at Captain Campbell's station at Bombala; I was present at a performance at Ashton's Circus on the 12th instant; I heard some discussion that evening as to the admission of some persons into the circus that night; I heard Mr. Hebden ask Ashton whether he had given permission to certain persons to go in without payment; Mr. Hebden did ask Ashton whether it was customary to allow constables' families to go in without payment, when Ashton said "it was customary for constables to go in, but not their families;" afterwards I did see a person, whom I believe to be Mr. Witts' daughter, about to be removed for not paying; Mr. Hebden was present when this person was about being removed; I heard Mr. Hebden tell Constable Zoellner to remove Mr. Witts' daughter, when Mr. Witts told her not to go, to let them drag her out, and if they laid hands on her that was an assault, or words to that effect; I also heard Mr. Witts say to Mr. Hebden, "I am perfectly aware of your goodwill towards me"; Mr. Witts' manner was the reverse of being respectful and proper—rather violent than otherwise; Mr. Witts desired his daughter not to go, in direct contradiction to Mr. Hebden's order to remove her.

*By Defendant:—*The question was a general one, as to the admission of constables' wives and families, which Mr. Hebden addressed to Ashton, as far as I know; I heard Ashton say, in effect, that constables and chief constables were admitted free, but certainly not their wives and families; the conversation that I first heard between Mr. Hebden and Ashton was outside the tent; I believe I heard you say that you were in with Ashton's permission, but I heard nothing about Mr. Witts' family.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE PETITION OF ALFRED WITTS.

By the Bench:—When I said that the question was a general one, as to the admission of constables wives and families, I mean that he (Ashton) said—such was the general rule—that the families were not allowed to enter without payment; I understood that the discussion arose out of the discussion going on about persons being present without payment.

William Shelley, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I am a grazier by business, and usually reside at Bong Bong; I was present at a performance at Ashton's Circus on the 12th instant; before the performance I did hear a discussion outside the circus; Ashton, who had been called by Mr. Hebden's request, was present; I did hear Mr. Hebden ask Ashton whether the constables had his permission to take their families in on that particular night, and Ashton said, "Certainly not, but constables were privileged to go in for protection, not their families"; there was a discussion in the circus afterwards; Mr. Hebden ordered a constable to remove a female, for being there without payment; Mr. Witts said to the person ordered to go out, "Don't go—let them drag you out"; when the constables went to remove this person, Mr. Witts said, "An assault was committed—that would do"; Mr. Witts's manner was very boisterous; his manner appeared to be anything but proper or respectful.

By Defendant:—I believe the person ordered to be removed to be your daughter.

FOR THE DEFENCE.

Defendant hands in a written document, endorsed A, which is hereto annexed, the said document being read aloud by the Clerk of the Bench.

Charles Bowtell, being duly sworn, &c., saith:—I am a constable of police at Bombala; it was customary to admit constables' wives and families into Ashton's Circus; I have tendered money for my wife, which has been returned to me by Ashton himself; I did not hear Ashton himself tell you to take your family into the circus that night.

By the Bench:—I did not take my wife to the circus that night; I did know that was a benefit night; I was offered a ticket by Mr. Fox, who offered to treat my wife, but she did not go as she was ill.

G. HEBDEN, ESQ., J.P., v. ALFRED WITTS, Chief Constable.

DEFENCE.

Alfred Witts, chief constable, of Bombala, states in his defence:—I consider that from the first to this moment the conduct of the plaintiff is illegal; Mr. Hebden, as a Justice, had not any right to interfere in the matter; my family was in the circus by the consent of the owner Mr. — Ashton, and therefore had as much right to be there as Mr. Hebden himself or any one else.

ALFRED WITTS,
Chief Constable.

Signature of Alfred Witts, acknowledged before me,—
H. H. MASSIE, J.P.

Defendant applies for an adjournment until the return to Bombala of Mr. Ashton, on the grounds that his (Ashton's) evidence has a bearing in his favour.—Application refused.

Defendant is found guilty of the charge preferred against him, and is ordered to be dismissed forthwith.

Mr.

Mr. George Heritage called in and examined :—

Mr. George
Heritage.

2 Oct., 1862.

132. By the Chairman: You reside at Bombala? Yes.
133. And are a storekeeper there? Yes.
134. Do you know anything of the circumstances connected with his dismissal from the office of chief constable there? Yes, I was in the theatre at the time it occurred, with Mr. Hebden.
135. State what you know about those circumstances? I remember Mr. Ashton, the proprietor of the circus, inviting Mr. Witts to bring his family there.
136. This was before the performance commenced? About three nights before. He invited them for this special night as being the last performance there, and Mr. Witts of course brought them there.
137. Were you in the circus when Mr. Witts' daughter entered it? Yes.
138. Who brought Miss Witts in? I think Mr. Witts brought her in, for I remember hearing him say he claimed the privilege, or something of that kind.
139. Did you give evidence in the District Court in this case? No, I was at Cooma at the time, and was subpoenaed, but did not give evidence.
140. Do you know anything of the practice of the Magistrates as to sitting on the Bench? No, I do not know much about the Bench; it is a matter I have not much to do with. I know that some Magistrates sat on Mr. Witts' case who had not sat for a long time before. I know that, for it was very much remarked upon at the time that they came in to decide upon that case.
141. Were you residing in Bombala at the time Mr. Witts applied for re-appointment as chief constable some two years after? Yes.
142. Had you been residing in Bombala during the interval, from the time of this matter connected with the circus? I was away about six months at Kiandra. That was at the time I was subpoenaed from Cooma. I have been residing at Bombala the last four years.
143. During the interval of two years to which I have referred, were Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Massie, Dr. Campbell, and Mr. Baddeley regular attendants at the Bench? I could not be certain, but from what I can recollect they had not attended for some time previously—the Magistrates that sat, at least two of them, Mr. Hebden and another.
144. Was Mr. Hebden one of the Magistrates who sat and decided upon the application of Mr. Witts for the situation? I will not be certain.
145. His application was refused at that time? Yes.
146. Are you any relative of Mr. Witts? No relative whatever.
147. While he held the office of chief constable was any dissatisfaction expressed by the public as to the way in which he discharged his duty? I never heard any while I have been in Bombala; had there been I should have heard it no doubt.
148. By Mr. Leary: Who was at the entrance of the circus when Mr. Witts took his daughter in? I was.
149. Who was taking money? I was.
150. For Mr. Ashton? No; it was on behalf of the Church Building Fund. I think Mr. Ashton was to receive half the proceeds, but I cannot say positively, for it is now so long since that I almost forget the circumstances.
151. Did you tell Mr. Witts to go on when he made the remark that he was privileged, or did you demand the money for his daughter? I almost forget—I know I called the attention of one of the Committee at the time to the fact of Mr. Witts' walking in; I do not think I remonstrated at all, for I recollected Mr. Ashton giving him permission.
152. For his daughter? Yes, I also recollect Mr. Ashton, when I think it was Mr. Lawrence made so much fuss about it; he spoke to Mr. Hebden, who was —
153. Who was Mr. Lawrence? He was appointed money-taker for the night; but having his post office dues to attend to, I took his place for an hour or so.
154. Were you present when Mr. Hebden spoke to Mr. Ashton and asked him whether he had given permission to Miss Witts to be there without paying? Yes.
155. What did Mr. Ashton say? He told Mr. Hebden that he had given Mr. Witts permission.
156. Are you aware that when the charge against Mr. Witts was investigated that certain persons gave evidence that Mr. Ashton informed Mr. Hebden that he had given no such permission to Mr. Witts' family to go in without paying? No, I am not aware. I was in the theatre at the time Mr. Ashton gave him permission and asked him to come that night; as nearly as I can recollect it was about three nights before that.
157. By Mr. Harpur: You heard Mr. Ashton give Mr. Witts permission to go and to take his family? Yes, any members of his family.
158. You also heard Mr. Ashton tell Mr. Hebden that he had done so? Yes.
159. That was in the circus? Yes.
160. Was that after the removal of Mr. Witts' daughter, or previously? I could not say positively whether it was before or after.
161. You cannot say whether Mr. Hebden persisted in having Mr. Witts' daughter removed, notwithstanding that Mr. Ashton had told him he had given permission—Ashton had a right to give this permission, seeing that he was to have half the proceeds? Yes, I know that Mr. Ashton came and offered money to me for her when Mr. Hebden said she had no right there.
162. There were several Magistrates attended the Bench when Mr. Witts was dismissed who had not attended for many months previously? Yes, if I remember rightly.
163. Nor for several months subsequently? Yes.
164. What was the general opinion of people with reference to the Magistrates coming on that particular particular occasion—was it supposed that they came for the purpose of dismissing Mr. Witts? Yes, that was the impression at the time.

165. You do not think that was an impression calculated to strengthen the confidence of the public in the administration of justice or in the conduct of the Magistrates? No.

166. Is it a thing that has often come under your observation, that Magistrates attend the Benches in the country to carry out their own personal objects, or it may be to gratify a personal revenge? This is the only case I have known.

167. What is the general opinion of the public at large, as to such conduct—do they not think it very dishonest and ungentlemanly? Yes, I imagine the public at large would think so.

168. By the Chairman: Do you know whether Mr. Massie attends Bench duties now? I think Mr. Massie is in England; I am not sure.

169. How long is it since he left the Colony? About nine or twelve months. I know he left Bombala to go to England; whether he went or not I am not certain. I heard at one time that he was in Queensland, and then I heard it contradicted.

170. How long did he remain in the district after Mr. Witts was dismissed—after April, 1859? I suppose he remained till about twelve months back.

171. From April, 1859, until twelve months back, did he attend to the duties of the Bench? I think not.

172. Do either of the Messrs. Campbell attend to the Bench duties regularly now? Neither of them, that I am aware of; I do not think they have attended these two years.

173. Are they both residing in the district? Yes, they are both living on the station.

174. By Mr. Harpur: Some two years after the dismissal of Mr. Witts a vacancy occurred in the situation of chief constable? Yes.

175. Mr. Witts, you are aware, made an application for this situation? Yes.

176. Did those Magistrates who dismissed him attend to decide upon his or upon other applications? I am not aware of the circumstances; I remember perfectly well Mr. Witts making an application for the office.

177. By Mr. Leary: Do you know Mr. Hebden? I have known him only from his coming into my store.

178. What is his general character? His general character is that he is a shrewd sharp man.

179. Is he considered an honorable man? Yes, a very honorable man in all his transactions.

180. By Mr. Harpur: A very proud man? Yes, a very austere man.

181. By Mr. Leary: What do you mean by a proud man? Austere, imperious, treating inferiors with contempt.

182. Did he ever treat you with contempt? Yes.

183. Perhaps it would be as well to explain what you mean? I can hardly describe it, but I know what my feelings have been.

184. By Mr. Harpur: When a man walks by you like a turkey cock you think he treats you with contempt? Yes.

MR. LEARY,
MR. SADLEIR,

MR. TERRY.

THOMAS GARRETT, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

W. Elyard, Esq., called in and examined:—

185. By the Chairman: This Committee has been appointed to inquire into the allegations contained in the Petition of Mr. Alfred Witts, and we have summoned you to see if you can give us any information relative to the removal of Mr. Witts from his office of Chief Constable at Bombala, in April, 1859;—you are Under Secretary in the Colonial Secretary's Department? I am.

186. Have you the copies of any letters written by the Bombala Bench to your office, and from your office to that Bench, relative to the complaints alleged against Mr. Witts, or to his dismissal from office? Yes; I produce copies which I have had made of several letters written in the case, from the Colonial Secretary's Office, which I think will explain the grounds of his removal from office, as well as the reasons for the decision of the Government upon Mr. Witts' appeal against the sentence of the Bench. It will be observed that, in the explanation obtained from the Magistrates in consequence of that appeal, other matters of complaint against him were stated besides those which formed the immediate ground of his dismissal. (Correspondence produced and read. Vide Appendix.)

187. I see, from this correspondence, that Mr. Witts' resignation of office in 1861 was prior to the issue of the Proclamation of the Governor declaring that all persons resigning their situations would be deprived of all benefit from their length of service? This was a notice to persons in the public service, that any who resigned in the emergency arising from the discovery of gold would be considered ineligible to serve again; but it is the rule of the service, that any officer voluntarily resigning his situation gives up all claim he may then have for a retiring pension. The notice referred to was intended chiefly as a warning to officers

W. Elyard, Esq., officers of the Government, that if they resigned to go to the gold fields they would not be again employed.

23 Oct., 1862. 188. Have you any correspondence bearing upon the subsequent application of Mr. Witts for the office of Chief Constable at Bombala, when that situation became vacant some time after his dismissal? Not that I am aware of.

189. Nor any application from him for other appointments in the Government? With the exception of what was made in his memorials, referred to in the letters to Mr. Witts, of the 23rd September, 1859, and the 10th May, 1860, I do not know that there was; his representations were chiefly with reference to his removal and the retention of salary for the time he was suspended.

190. By Mr. Sadleir: It appears from one of the letters from Mr. Cowper that you have read, that he states that he saw no objection to appointing Mr. Witts to a similar office elsewhere;—what is the reason that he has not been so appointed? I cannot say. The appointments to the police were, until recently, vested in the Magistrates of the districts.

191. Has Mr. Witts made application for any other appointment? I believe not, with the exceptions before mentioned. His object seems to have been rather to get reinstated at Bombala, or some of the Magistrates appear to have desired this.

192. By Mr. Harpur: Mr. Baddeley was one of the Magistrates who sat in Mr. Witts' case, and he appears to have concurred in the decision of the Bench to dismiss Mr. Witts? Yes, it appears so; his name is appended to the decision.

APPENDIX.

(1.)

Bombala Police Office,
16 March, 1859.

Sir,

We do ourselves the honor to draw your attention to the following facts:—

On the 16th February last, Mrs. Anne Summerill, of Bombala, appeared in the Police Office at this place, during the sitting of the Justices assembled in Petty Sessions, and preferred a charge against the bailiff of the local Court of Requests, in which she stated that certain shingles were her property, and that John Summerill had got possession of them, and they were now in Bombala. She had (it appears) given information of these shingles, to the effect that the bailiff should attach them under a writ of execution issued in her husband's favour, in re "George Summerill v. John Summerill."

Mrs. Summerill was so violent and insolent in the Court, while preferring her complaint, that we, considering it a frivolous case, dismissed it forthwith.

This day the gentlemen named in the margin, who have not acted magisterially for some five months since, took their seats on the Bench first, yesterday, in our absence, and opened above case again; and to-day they also pursued a similar course of conduct, and persisted in re-hearing the charge preferred against Mr. Witts.

After protesting against such proceedings as being ungentlemanly and illegal, we retired from the Bench. The evidence subsequently taken at the further investigation is enclosed for your perusal, together with the decision appended thereto.

The gentlemen named declined to join in adjudicating in the twelve other cases before the Court, stating (through Mr. Hebden) that they merely came to see justice done in the matter alluded to, and that we would be ashamed afterwards for not taking the matter up again.

We also beg to add, that Mr. Hebden is the employer, and has been so for the last four years, of George Summerill and his wife Anne—the plaintiffs in this matter.

Summerill v. Witts.

Before George Hebden, Esq., J.P., J. B. Campbell, Esq., J.P., and H. Nicholson, Esq., J.P.

Anne Summerill, being duly sworn, upon her oath maketh complaint as follows:—I am the wife of George Summerill, of Maharatta, and appear before this Court on his behalf; on the 12th October last my husband had a verdict awarded him, in a case tried in the Bombala Small Debts Court, for £10, against John Summerill; John Summerill did not pay me the £10, or any part of it; I applied for an execution in the case, and obtained it; I told Mr. Witts of some shingles in Charles Kyle's yard; Mr. Witts levied on these shingles in my husband's name, and sold them; I never got any money from Mr. Witts since; I gave Mr. Witts £1; this was to pay 4s. 6d. for going out to Mr. Boucher's, with the intention of levying on John Summerill's property, when he said he had nothing but his blankets, which were not worth taking.

Taken and sworn, &c., &c., &c.

Defendant, Alfred Witts, examined:—

By the Bench: Did you seize and sell certain shingles in virtue of the writ of execution now produced? I did.

What did you sell them for? First to Anne Summerill, for £6 10s., who refused to acknowledge the purchase. Tait afterwards bought them for £6 12s. 6d.

What did you do with the money realized at the sale? I did not receive one farthing.

Did you then leave the shingles?

Did you deliver the shingles to Tait? No.

Under what authority did you seize those shingles? By authority of the execution.

Alfred

Alfred Witts further states in explanation:—I did not receive any money, for the following reason:—Mr. Kyle had a claim for carriage, I think £2 10s., and would not let them go till his carriage was paid; Tait put in a protest that they had become his property, for work and labour done, and Summerill said he had parted with possession to Tait, and that they were no longer his property—I mean John Summerill's property; this, added to the fact that they were George Summerill's property, her husband, and she was a fool for buying them, this created in my mind so much uneasiness as to the identity of the property, that I hardly knew what to do. Mrs. Anne Summerill first set me going on those shingles; I afterwards learnt that she had been to a Justice to obtain criminal proceedings against for stealing these shingles, which were her husband's property, and she afterwards did claim them at the sale as her husband's property.

By the Bench: Did you state that you had not received any money for the shingles sold, because you believed them to be Tait's property, and because he gave you written claim on them? I did state so.

Thomas Fox, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I am Clerk of Petty Sessions at Bombala; there is no written record in my possession of any charge preferred by George Summerill against Mr. Witts touching this matter.

THOMAS FOX.

Taken and sworn, &c., &c., &c.

Alfred Witts, as Bailiff of the Court of Requests, is ordered to pay into Court the sum of £6 12s. 6d., as the amount realized by sale of the property levied on, and all claims to or protests against the same are to be proven in Court, under the provisions of the Act of Council 10 Victoria, No. 10.

*Bombala,
20 April, 1859.*

Sir,

We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, enclosing copy of a letter from the Bench of Magistrates, Bombala, complaining of our proceedings in the case of Summerill v. Witts.

As neither the letter in question, nor the depositions themselves, which have been taken in a loose and incomplete manner, disclose the real nature of the proceedings referred to, we beg to give a detailed account of the matter in question.

The case calling for our decision was not a matter of complaint on the part of Summerill v. Witts, but was a charge entertained against the chief constable, for neglect and violation of his duty, in his capacity of bailiff of the local Court of Requests, in which Ann Summerill was a material witness.

From the evidence adduced, and admission of the chief constable himself, and as shown by his own indorsement on the precept hereunto annexed, together with the bill of sales, it appears that he seized and levied upon a certain quantity of shingles, which were sold by him on the 31st January last, for the sum of £6 12s. 6d., in satisfaction of the amount of judgment and costs in the matter of Summerill v. Summerill, awarded by the Court on the 12th of October, 1858.

He did not pay this sum, nor any part thereof, into the Court of which he was bailiff, as directed by the precept in virtue of which the levy and sale were made; but he gave up the proceeds of such sale in satisfaction of alleged claims made upon the goods sold, by persons not being parties against whom process had issued.

This was done on his own responsibility, and in direct contravention of the rules laid down in the xxxiv 10 Vic., No. 10, for the guidance of bailiffs in charge of goods under execution.

These rules are so clear and precise, that a disregard of them can only proceed from corruption or the most wilful and culpable negligence.

The circumstances, as thus detailed, having been proved to our satisfaction, we made an order that the chief constable should pay into the Court of which he was bailiff, the sum of £6 12s. 6d., being the amount of sale effected by him in virtue of a writ of execution, leaving him to recover in the ordinary way that amount from those whose claims he had illegally satisfied.

This order has not been complied with.

We have next a few observations to offer, relative to certain statements made by Mr. Murray and Mr. Baddeley, in the letter referred to.

These gentlemen would infer that the case in which we adjudicated had been heard before them, and dismissed as frivolous.

That the case was very summarily dismissed we have every reason to believe; that it was heard and adjudicated upon by them, we beg emphatically to deny. It is clear that they refused even to entertain a complaint involving a charge of corruption or culpable neglect of duty on the part of the chief constable, for no evidence was taken, nor is there any record in the Police Office of their having taken action in the matter at all.

Their charge, therefore, of our having re-heard a case entertained and dismissed by them, is not true, and is opposed to the facts disclosed.

Their

Their remarks about our proceedings being "ungentlemanly" and "illegal," we are disposed to pass over without much comment. It may be that we entertain grave doubts ourselves how far Mr. Murray and Mr. Baddeley are qualified to decide what is either legal or becoming.

The concluding paragraph of their letter contains a most unworthy imputation, that we cannot allow to pass unnoticed. Anne Summerill is the wife of a man in the employment of Mr. Hebden, and incidentally was a material witness in a charge against the chief constable, in which it cannot for one moment be presumed that Mr. Hebden was either directly or indirectly interested.

We have, &c.,

The Honorable
The Colonial Secretary,
Sydney.

Police Office, Bombala,
22 April, 1859.

Sir,

We have the honor herewith to transmit the depositions taken before us on the 19th instant, in the case of Mr. Alfred Witts, charged with a violation of his duty in his capacity as chief constable, on the night of the 12th instant, with the view of the same being laid before His Excellency the Governor General, in order that our decision in the case referred to may be confirmed.

2. We are of opinion that the misconduct of the chief constable complained of is sufficiently shown by the evidence adduced, without further explanation from us; it may, however, be desirable to offer a few observations relative to our refusing to comply with Mr. Witts' request to have the case postponed for the evidence of Mr. Ashton.

3. We declined to comply with Mr. Witts' application for a postponement, because we were of opinion that, even in the event of our being able to procure in a reasonable time the attendance of Mr. Ashton, who had left the district, his evidence was immaterial.

4. The misconduct complained of was, that Mr. Witts took advantage of his position as chief constable to introduce certain persons into a place of public amusement without payment of the admission fee, and then violently and insolently resisted the authority of a Magistrate appealed to by parties entitled to call for his interference.

5. Not only had Mr. Ashton, the proprietor of the circus, delegated his authority on the night in question to another, but on being appealed to whether on that particular occasion he had authorized the admission of the parties complained of, without payment, he distinctly and repeatedly replied that he had not.

6. The evidence of all the witnesses examined on this point is conclusive.

7. In addition to the evidence taken, many other gentlemen who were present on the occasion volunteered their testimony in support of the charge of misconduct against the chief constable; but it was declined, because it was believed to be unnecessary.

8. Had this been a solitary instance of misconduct, the offence, though fully proved, might have been visited with a less severe sentence than that of dismissal; but we have to record it as our deliberate opinion, that for some time past the conduct of Mr. Witts has been anything but satisfactory, and that his unfitness for the office he holds has become a frequent and growing matter of complaint.

We have, &c.,

The Honorable,
The Colonial Secretary.

Before John Nicholson, Esq., J.P.; H. H. Massie, Esq., J.P.; Jno. Campbell, Esq., J.P.; C. H. Baddeley, Esq., J.P.

Alfred Witts, Chief Constable for the Police District of Bombala, appears to answer a charge preferred against him of neglect and violation of his duty in his office, on the night of the 12th instant, at Bombala.

(Defendant pleads not guilty.)

George Hebden, Esq., being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I am a Magistrate for this Territory; I usually reside at Maharatta, in the Police District of Bombala; Mr. Witts is the chief constable for this district; there was a performance at Ashton's Circus, on the 12th instant, for the benefit of the Bombala Church Building Fund; I do know Mr. Lawrence, the postmaster here; I believe he is either Secretary or Treasurer, or both, to the Church Building Fund; he told me he was acting as door-keeper or money-taker on that night; I was present at the circus on that evening; my interference as a Magistrate was on that night called for by Mr. Lawrence; Mr. Lawrence complained that the chief constable had taken two persons into the circus, and that they refused to pay for admission, or to leave; I told him that his proper course in such a case was to give them in charge to a constable to be removed; in a short time he came and told me that the constables had declined to take and remove them, because they were taken in by the chief constable; I then had the constable called to me, and told him that if Mr. Lawrence pointed out any persons in the circus who refused to pay for admission, he was to request them to retire, and if they did not do so he was to remove them; just before giving this order to the constable I sent for Mr. Ashton, the proprietor of the circus; I asked him whether he had given any persons permission to enter the circus without payment; he said "Certainly not," that constables were privileged to go in without payment; and I asked him whether that privilege extended to constables' families, and he said "Certainly not;" after giving the order to Zoellner, I followed him to the place where those persons were sitting; one of them, a man, retired—I don't know his name; the other was a female, whom I have since heard was Mr. Witts' daughter, but I did not then know her; as soon as the constable approached, Mr. Witts came forward, in a very violent manner, and told her not to move, and repeated several times "Don't go—let him (meaning the constable) drag you out; I want him to touch you—that will be an assault;" and turning round he said, in substance, "That was just what he expected from me;" his manner was very insolent to me when the constable laid his hand on this person, after waiting some time for her to go out, the chief constable said, "That'll do—that's an assault—now I'll pay."

Cross-examined by Defendant: I don't know what arrangement was made that night (the 12th instant) for the distribution of the proceeds of the circus with Mr. Ashton; I understood that the proceeds were to be for the benefit of the Church Fund; I did not hear you say at the first onset that you had Mr. Ashton's permission to take your family on that night into the circus; you did not tell me you were in by Ashton's permission; when the constables apprehended your daughter, you did not warn me that the arrest arrest of your daughter was an illegal one—at least, I did not hear you do so; when the complaint was first made to me, of persons being admitted into the circus, I was in company with several other gentlemen; there were several other gentlemen then present, when this complaint was made, who are in the Commission of the Peace.

By the Bench: I gave no orders to any constable to apprehend any person found in the circus without payment; but I desired him to remove any such person; I do not know that I threatened a constable with dismissal for refusing to remove any person pointed out to him by me; but when the chief constable interfered in the matter, I did say to a constable, "You are to obey my orders, and not those of the chief constable;" I might have said, "or I will dismiss you"—but I don't remember saying so.

J. B. CAMPBELL, J.P.
C. H. BADDELEY, J.P.

John Richard Lawrence, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I am postmaster at Bombala; I am Secretary of the Bombala Church Building Fund; on Tuesday Mr. Ashton gave a benefit at his circus towards the Bombala Church Building Fund; public notice to that effect was posted on the Post Office; Mr. Ashton at first offered the whole proceeds, but subsequently arrangements were made by myself and others that half the proceeds should be given to the Church Fund, and he should retain the other half; on that night I acted, with Mr. Ashton's authority, as money and ticket taker; Mr. Ashton said expressly that he would issue no tickets himself, but requested me to sell the tickets at the door; I know Mr. Hebden as a Magistrate of this district; on that night I did call for Mr. Hebden's interference as a Magistrate; before I called for Mr. Hebden's interference, Mr. Witts, with his daughter on his arm, and, I believe, his nephew, came into the circus, and said to me and Mr. Ashton, "Privileged," and passed on; I immediately turned to Mr. Ashton, and said to him, "I thought there was no privilege on a benefit night;" he said "No more there is, but we allow the constables in;" I said "Not as spectators, without paying, and also his family ought to pay;" and he said, "Of course they ought;" I then said, "Well, you make them pay;" and he said he had nothing to do with it, as I was selling the tickets and taking the money. I immediately went to Mr. Witts and asked him to pay for his daughter and nephew; he asked me what I had to do with it; I told him, and he then said he knew who I was, and all about it; I then went to Mr. Ashton and told him what had occurred, and said that if Mr. Witts was not made to pay for the two persons he had taken in with him, that I would have nothing more to do with it; I then went out with the express purpose of consulting Mr. Baddeley as a Magistrate, but seeing Mr. Hebden I detailed to him what had occurred, and said that if Mr. Witts was not made to pay for these persons, that I would have nothing more to do with it; Mr. Hebden then told me to go to Mr. Witts again; I went, and asked him to pay for these two persons; he told me that the lights were not yet lit, and also said he knew who I was; and I said then "If you don't pay I shall find means to make you;" according to Mr. Hebden's directions I went to look for Constable Zoellner, but at the door of the tent I met Mr. Hebden, who asked for Mr. Ashton; I went and brought him; Mr. Hebden then asked Ashton if the constables and their families had his permission to go in without paying; Mr. Ashton said he generally allowed the constables in, but not their families without paying, particularly on a benefit night; Mr. Hebden then gave me orders to tell Zoellner, the constable, to take them in charge or put them out if they would not pay—I mean the two persons in mention; I told Zoellner to do so, and Zoellner went to them; I heard Mr. Witts tell his daughter to sit still and not to move; I then heard Mr. Witts say "Assault! that'll do—I'll pay the money." Mr. Witts after this came and paid five shillings to me, but Bowtell, the constable, had previously paid me six shillings for Mr. Witts' daughter; I told this to Mr. Witts, who said in an off-hand manner, "There's the money, keep it, I shan't take it back;" the principal part of the audience were in at the latter part of this discussion; the words and demeanor of Mr. Witts on this occasion, during the discussion, were the reverse of proper and respectful; his language was loud; the other person afterwards came in again, and paid me six shillings later on in the evening.

By Defendant: I did not see Mr. Ashton escort you into the circus, as I was between Mr. Ashton and the door; I do not think he could have done so; there were two or three persons, or perhaps half a dozen in the circus at this time; I do not remember your saying that you were in with Mr. Ashton's authority; you did say you had a higher power in being in there than me; I don't remember Mr. Ashton's saying "How can I turn those persons out when I have invited them in?" Mr. Ashton did not say "Rather than have any bother about it, you will have to pay me some money, and you can deduct it from me;" I did not say to Mr. Ashton that I would make Witts pay the money out of his own pocket; when the Magistrate gave orders for these persons' apprehension you did caution the Magistrate that he was committing an illegal act; I don't remember your saying that your daughter had as good a right to be there as Mr. Hebden himself.

Constable August Zoellner, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I am a constable of police at Bombala; I was on duty on the night of the 12th instant, at Ashton's Circus; I know Mr. Lawrence, as Postmaster, at Bombala; he did act as money-taker at the circus on that night; he did, in the course of that night, tell me there were some persons in the circus who had not paid for admission; he did ask me to remove them; he asked me to remove Mr. Witts' daughter, and his nephew, John Ford; I told him the chief constable was about, and I did not like to act while he was so; afterwards Mr. Hebden himself came to me, and ordered me either to make these two persons pay, or else turn them out; I told Mr. Hebden that I did not like to interfere, as Mr. Witts was there, and Mr. Hebden said, "You must obey my orders;" I then went to these persons, and told young Ford either to pay or go out, and he went out, but the girl stopped; the girl did not at the time offer to pay; Mr. Witts was present, and told the girl to stop where she was; I reported what had taken place to Mr. Hebden, who said that I must go and remove these persons or make them pay, or I should be dismissed myself; I then went again and caught hold of the girl to put her out; the girl said she would neither pay nor go out, when a Mrs. Furnell paid Constable Bowtell six shillings for her; I then let her go; Mr. Witts said to his daughter, "You keep your place, don't move;" Mr. Hebden was also there; I heard Mr. Hebden say to to Mr. Witts, that he would dismiss him if he did not mind, when Mr. Witts said, "I know, sir, you have got a great love for me;" Mr. Witts' manner was violent, and his talk was loud; he defied any one to touch the girl, and he would give them law for it; I was bothered, and do not know what Mr. Witts had said to Mr. Hebden before he threatened to dismiss him (Mr. Witts).

By Defendant: I heard Mr. Ashton say it was customary for constables' families to go in free; I took my own wife, and he refused to take payment for her; he has at different times returned the money to you under such circumstances; you did, from the first, say you had Mr. Ashton's authority for the girl to be there, and that, under such circumstances, whoever apprehended her would act illegal, and that I was to be careful I had a Magistrate's order.

By Bench: I did not hear Mr. Ashton on that particular night give permission for the free admission of Mr. Witts' family, and I did not tell Mr. Hebden that Mr. Witts had such permission.

Wilbraham Edwards, being duly sworn, upon his oath saith:—I reside at Captain Campbell's station, at Bombala; I was present at a performance at Ashton's Circus on the 12th instant; I heard some discussion that evening as to the admission of some persons into the circus that night; I heard Mr. Hebden ask Ashton whether he had given permission to certain persons to go in without payment; Mr. Hebden did ask Ashton whether it was customary to allow constables' families to go in without payment, when Ashton said, "It was customary for constables to go in, but not their families;" afterwards I did see a person, whom I believe to be Mr. Witts' daughter, about to be removed, for not paying; Mr. Hebden was present when this person was about being removed; I heard Mr. Hebden tell Constable Zoellner to remove Mr. Witts' daughter, when Mr. Witts told her not to go, to let them drag her out, and if they laid hands on her that was an assault, or words to that effect; I also heard Mr. Witts say to Mr. Hebden, "I am perfectly aware of your good will towards me;" Mr. Witts' manner was the reverse of being respectful and proper—rather violent than otherwise; Mr. Witts desired his daughter not to go, in direct contradiction to Mr. Hebden's order to remove her.

By Defendant: The question was a general one, as to the admission of constables' wives and families, which Mr. Hebden addressed to Ashton, as far as I know; I heard Ashton say, in effect, that constables and chief constables were admitted free, but certainly not their wives and families; the conversation that I first heard between Mr. Hebden and Ashton was outside the tent; I believe I heard you say that you were in with Ashton's permission, but I heard nothing about "Mr. Witts' family."

By the Bench: When I said that the question was a general one as to the admission of constables' wives and families, I mean that he (Ashton) said, such was the general rule, that the families were not allowed to enter without payment. I understood that the question arose out of the discussion going on about persons being present without payment.

By Defendant: I believe the person ordered to be removed to be your daughter.

DEFENCE.

Alfred Witts, Chief Constable of Bombala, states in his defence :—I consider that from the first to this moment the conduct of the plaintiff is illegal ; Mr. Hebden, as a Justice, had not any jurisdiction to interfere in the matter ; my family was in the circus by the consent of the owner Mr. — Ashton, and therefore had as much right to remain there as Mr. Hebden himself or anyone else.

Sydney, 2 July, 1859.*

Gentlemen,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22nd April last, reporting that you had dismissed Mr. Witts from the office of chief constable, Bombala, for violation of his duty, and submitting the matter for the confirmation of the Government, and to express the regret of the Colonial Secretary, that some delay, owing to a pressure of other urgent business, has occurred in replying thereto.

2. I am now directed to state, that after fully considering the case, Mr. Cowper cannot perceive in the conduct of the chief constable, on the particular occasion referred to, sufficient grounds for the extreme punishment of dismissal. If, as alleged, this is the first time he has been charged with improper conduct, and if he has been in the office of constable for upwards of sixteen years, and a chief constable for nearly the whole of that time, the punishment would appear to be too severe for the offence.

3. The Colonial Secretary would, however, wish to be informed more specifically of the meaning of the following extract from your communication now under reply, viz. :—

“ Had this been a solitary instance of misconduct, the offence, though fully proved, might have been visited with a less severe sentence than that of dismissal ; but we have to record it as our deliberate opinion, that for some time past the conduct of Mr. Witts has been anything but satisfactory, and that his unfitness for the office he holds has become a frequent and growing matter of complaint.”

4. I am further desired to remark, that the deprivation of office would entail a loss of pension, besides the usual penalties involved in a dismissal from an appointment not having such a boon attached to it ; and to punish so severely for a first offence seems excessively harsh.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

The Bench of Magistrates,
Bombala.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 15 July, 1859.*

Gentlemen,

With reference to your letter of the 16th March last, respecting the proceedings of Messrs. Hebden, Campbell, and Nicholson, Justices of the Peace, in re-hearing and adjudicating in a case which you state was dismissed by you in February last, I am directed to forward to you the accompanying explanation, which has been received from those gentlemen, on the subject, and to observe that it is apparent that there is some misapprehension regarding some of the facts of the case.

2. The Colonial Secretary, therefore, wishes to receive your further report, as well as that a definite statement should be transmitted to him as to the period of the uninterrupted absence from the Bench of the gentlemen who adjudicated in the complaint against the chief constable, on the 16th March last, and their attendance to act in that case only on that day, and their refusing, as alleged, then to act in any other.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

P. J. Murray, Esq., J.P.,

(7.)

*Police Office, Bombala,
20 July, 1859.*

Sir,

We have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 22nd instant, in reply to our communication of 22nd April, relative to the dismissal of Mr. Witts from his office of chief constable for the District of Bombala.

2. We join in the regret expressed by the Colonial Secretary, that so much delay should have occurred in the matter, as it has been productive of much inconvenience, involving loss of the services of a chief constable for a period of nearly three months.

3. We cannot agree with Mr. Cowper that the sentence of dismissal was more severe than was required to meet the justice of the case. Insubordination, insolence of language and demeanor, towards a a Magistrate publicly appealed to in his official capacity, cannot be considered as constituting a trivial offence in a chief constable, or one lightly to be dealt with.

4. Mr. Cowper is in error when he assumes that the misconduct on the occasion referred to, which led to the dismissal of Mr. Witts, is the only instance of impropriety laid to his charge.

5. We beg to draw the attention of the Colonial Secretary to the annexed copies of letters from the Cooma and Eden Bench of Magistrates, dated 3 April, and 27 September, 1858, respectively, complaining of culpable neglect of duty on the part of Mr. Witts; in reply to which he was unable to offer any satisfactory statement. Other instances might be adduced, but it can hardly have escaped the recollection of Mr. Cowper, as the case afforded matter for a correspondence between this Bench and the Colonial Secretary's Office, that a short time previously to the dismissal of Mr. Witts for insolence and insubordination, an inquiry was made into his conduct in his capacity as Bailiff of the Small Debts Courts, and that it was the opinion of the Justices holding the inquiry that, on that occasion, he had acted with great impropriety, and in direct violation of his duty.

6. We have also to refer the Colonial Secretary to the annexed copy of certain proceedings relative to a gross charge preferred by Mr. Witts against the Clerk of the Bench, for abstracting or repressing a letter from the Government, supposed to be favourable to Mr. Witts—a charge made in the most reckless and insolent manner possible, resting on no foundation whatever, and quite sufficient, in the event of his reinstatement to his office of chief constable, to cause his immediate dismissal.

7. We have further to remark, that Mr. Cowper has been misinformed as to the length of service of Mr. Witts in his capacity as chief and ordinary constable entitling him to a pension. There has been no continuous service of Mr. Witts for the alleged period of sixteen years; that period was interrupted by the voluntary resignation of his office as chief constable for the District of Queanbeyan, to enable him to proceed to the gold fields, thereby forfeiting any advantages that might be attached to previous length of service.

8. We are, therefore, of opinion that no valid reasons have been adduced by Mr. Cowper for reversing our decision relative to the dismissal of Mr. Witts, and have to request that the whole matter may be laid before the Governor General, for the consideration of His Excellency.

We have, &c.,

Police Office, Eden,
3 April, 1858.

Gentlemen,

We do ourselves the honor to draw your attention to the very great unwillingness evinced by the chief constable in your district to assist in the apprehension of parties who escape from here, and for whom warrants have been issued.

Information was laid before a Magistrate of this Bench, in the month of November last, charging one George Lyons with horse-stealing, on which a warrant was granted; but the accused has as yet escaped the vigilance of the police. Mr. Walker, the chief constable here, informs us that soon after the warrant was granted he communicated with Mr. Witts, and gave him the description of Lyons, but received no reply.

Again, on the 16th February, a warrant was issued for the apprehension of one Henry Archer. This man has since been working at the "Dragon" (in the vicinity of Bombala), though Mr. Witts was aware of a charge being against him, having been informed by Mr. Walker, whose second letter he treated with silence. The man was only apprehended last week by a constable (McMahon) sent from this place, who had been sent to Bombala in the hopes of meeting Lyons at the races. McMahon reports that he arrested Archer near Bombala, and took him to the lock-up, where he was informed by Mr. Witts that he could give him no rations for the prisoner, and further, that he should act as lock-up keeper himself. McMahon told Witts that he was sent to Bombala for the purpose of apprehending Lyons, when Mr. Witts replied that he saw him on the previous evening, and heard him called by name. Had Mr. Witts not been aware that a warrant had been issued for Lyons there would be no grounds for attaching blame to him, but it was clearly shown to us that he had received information of it from Mr. Walker soon after the information was laid.

Bombala.

Police Office, Cooma,
27 September, 1858.

Gentlemen,

The chief constable of Bombala, accompanied by one of his subordinates, arrived at Cooma yesterday afternoon, with an aboriginal prisoner named "Harry" in charge, for whose apprehension a warrant had been granted by this Bench on a charge of rape and attempt to murder one Margaret McMahon, residing in this district.

We are of opinion that the chief constable ought not to have left Cooma as he did, unknown to the Police Magistrate or the Bench, his evidence being essential respecting the apprehension of the prisoner. We consider his conduct extremely uncourteous towards this Bench, and request he may be informed that a summons will be issued for his attendance here on Monday, the 11th proximo, to give evidence in the case, which course would have been avoided had he remained until the sitting of the Court.

Bombala Police Office,
11 July, 1859.

Gentlemen,

I have the honor to request the favour of your attention to enclosed copy of a charge preferred at this office, on the 25th ultimo, by Mr. Alfred Witts, against myself.

I much regret that the evidence of Mr. Witts' principal witness (recorded by a young constable) was not committed to writing verbatim, as he said, in answer to the complainant's interrogation—"that it was all a pack of lies," and that Mr. Witts was always badgering the constables to know what occurred inside the Police Office on Court days. Mr. Baddeley offered to dismiss the case at once, but an adjournment adjournment was ordered, on my request, to the following Wednesday, that so serious a charge should be more fully investigated. On that Wednesday no Justice attended; but Mr. Witts' daughter (the noon of that day) placed in my hands a lengthy statement, addressed to the "Bench of Magistrates," and throwing the onus of a false and unfounded charge on Constable Bowtell.

A long course of gratuitous insult, disrespect, and annoyance, with a former charge, most unjust and frivolous, I have borne in silence and treated with contempt. Vide copy of letter A.

My arrangements have been interfered with, my influence weakened, and my integrity questioned by Mr. Witts; but he has now gone so far as to prefer a serious charge against me, which is without foundation.

And as I hope the District Magistracy will do me the justice to say that I endeavour to discharge my official duties honestly and conscientiously, I feel I have a right to solicit their interference in a matter that affects my reputation and peace of mind.

I have, &c.,
THOMAS FOX,
Clerk of Petty Sessions.

The Bench of Magistrates,

Bombala, County of Wellesley, }
New South Wales, to wit. }

Alfred Witts, Chief Constable of Bombala, being duly sworn, deposeseth:—I charge Mr. Thomas Fox, the Clerk of Petty Sessions at Bombala, with the following offence or offences:—

1st. That he, the said Thomas Fox, in his capacity of Clerk of Petty Sessions at Bombala aforesaid, has feloniously, and with malice aforethought, kept back or withheld from the Justices of the district a certain document or documents most materially affecting me, and also the course of justice, in the case of "George Hebden, Esq., v myself," to wit, a letter from the Government of New South Wales, that arrived by post on or about Saturday, the 18th day of June, 1859 (if not before the said 18th day of June, 1859).

And further, the said Thomas Fox did issue certain circulars to the said Justices, calling upon them to attend the Police Office, Bombala, on Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1859, relative to the appointment of a chief constable in my place, although I had not resigned; and he, in the meantime, in possession of the letter from the Government, that I verily believe the contents of are decidedly in my favour.

I therefore pray that the Court House be immediately searched, with a view of finding the said letter, or any other steps taken that may be deemed proper to further the ends of justice.

And this application I make, not out of malice to the said Thomas Fox, Clerk of Petty Sessions aforesaid, but for the purpose of proving whether I am reinstated or not to the office of chief constable for this district, after having for these last nine weeks been suspended.

And if the allegations herein contained be substantiated, I pray the said Thomas Fox be proceeded against according to law.

ALFRED WITTS,
Chief Constable.

Constable Bowtell, sworn, saith:—I was in Kyle's house on duty, on Thursday, June 23rd, 1859; I came home with you; I did not tell you that I saw in the Court House any paper or letter in which you were reinstated, the pay to go on from the day of suspension, and the charges said to be frivolous; I was with you yesterday again (24th); I met you yesterday again; I deny that you asked me was I sure of this conversation we had previously.

By Bench: I never saw a paper in this office to say that Mr. Witts was reinstated.

Department of Lands and Public Works,

Sir,

Mr. Alfred Witts having represented that he purchased for his daughter certain land at Bombala, for the purpose of erecting a water-mill, being led to do so by the tracings of the land exhibited at sale, and forcibly dwelt upon by the auctioneer, I am directed to call upon you for an explanation, any such portraiture of the supposed advantages attaching to Crown Lands being forbidden under clause 12 of the General Instructions for the guidance of Land Agents, dated 16th November, 1857.

I have, &c.,

Police Office, Bombala,
27 July, 1859.

Sir,

We do ourselves the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, forwarding the letter, herewith returned, from the gentlemen named in the margin, on the subject of a charge brought against Mr. Witts, Chief Constable of Bombala, by one Summers, which was heard by those gentlemen, after it had been dismissed by us. J. B. Campbell,
J.P.
G. Hebden, J.P.
H. Nicholson,
J.P.

2. In reply, we beg to make the following explanation, which we hope will be considered satisfactory, and be the means of bringing this very unpleasant matter to a conclusion.

3. In the third paragraph of the above letter, the gentlemen state that the charge against Witts was not made by Mrs. Summers, which, we regret to say, is untrue, as she attended at this office on the 16th February, when she made the complaint, which we dismissed, it being frivolous, and which we should certainly do again were such another charge laid before us.

4. We must only refer to the last paragraph of the letter, as we presume the whole of the circumstances connected with the case are known to you; but we could not allow the statement to pass without the the contradiction that Mrs. Summers was not a servant of Mr. Hebden's. Her husband was then, and is now, in that gentleman's employ, and we are aware that Mr. Hebden got his friend to come to Bombala specially to hear the charge against Mr. Witts. Before the case was gone into, Mr. Murray asked the three gentlemen, in open Court, to join with us in the hearing of eight cases then on the cause list; they not only refused to comply, but Mr. Hebden said they came for the purpose of seeing justice done in the above case. A few days before this circumstance took place, Mr. Murray remonstrated with Mr. Hebden on his neglect of his duty as a Magistrate, when he stated he had made up his mind never to sit again on the Bombala Bench; at the same time he should not resign, as he had been advised not to do so by his friend, Sir William Macarthur.

5. We enclose a statement, showing how often those gentlemen have acted, from the 26th of October, 1858, to this date, which will clearly show what little desire they have to co-operate with us; and as they are still as little inclined as ever to assist us, we would strongly urge on the Government the necessity of depriving them of the Commission of the Peace at once, as the present disputes tend to lessen the dignity of the Bench.

6. Should you deem it proper to act on our suggestion, we should also recommend that Mr. Witts should be allowed to resume his duties, and that the Clerk of Petty Sessions should be removed to some other district. In so doing, we deem it only right to state, that we have no fault to find with Mr. Fox; but a new officer arriving here would not be under the influence of gentlemen who have already given the Government a great amount of trouble, and who have, we regret to say, shown a very bad example to the inhabitants of the district.

We have, &c.,

C. H. BADDELEY, J.P.
P. J. MURRAY, J.P.

P.S.—It may be well to state that Mr. Witts has been in the Police since the year 1841, and we are not aware of any charge having been brought against him. He did resign at one time for the purpose of going to the gold fields, but his resignation took place six weeks before the Proclamation was published, so that it could in no way affect him.

(9.)

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 30 August, 1859.

Gentlemen,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, with reference to the letters from the Magistrates forming the Bench at Bombala, dated the 20th and 27th of last month, that the circumstances now stated in the former show that Mr. Witts cannot be allowed to remain as chief constable at that place; but although not continued in that office, there will not be any objection to his being considered eligible for employment elsewhere.

2. You will accordingly be pleased to apprise Mr. Witts that his appeal against his removal is disallowed.

I have, &c.,

The Bench of Magistrates,
Bombala.

W. ELYARD.

(10.)

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 31 August, 1859.

Sir,

With reference to your further report of the 22nd instant, on the subject of the appeal of Mr. Witts against his removal from the office of chief constable of Bombala by the Magistrates, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to transmit, for your information, a copy of a letter which has been addressed to the Bench, by which you will observe that Mr. Witts' appeal cannot be allowed, although he may be considered eligible for other employment elsewhere.

The Government, however, has not the means of transferring him to another district, as suggested in your report.

I have, &c.,
W. ELYARD.

The Inspector General of Police.

(11.)

Bombala, 9 September, 1859.

To the Honorable the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of Alfred Witts, late Chief Constable of Bombala,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That the defendant got me non-suited in the case named in the margin, not on account of its merits, but because I had not used the word malice in my notice of action.

Alfred Witts
v.
G. Hebden, Esq.
J.P.

And has cost me in costs in the sum of £26 10s., his expenses.

The consequence is I am ruined, for I cannot pay the costs, not having had any salary for the months of April, May, June, July, and up to the 30th of August (the date of the letter from the Colonial Secretary, stating my removal from my capacity of chief constable at Bombala, on account of a certain letter from this Bench, dated 20 August, which letter the Clerk of the Bench refuses to let me see.)

I therefore emphatically pray your Honor to cause me to be informed if my salary is allowed for the time of my suspension; what amount of pension I am entitled to for sixteen years and four months' service in the Police as chief constable at Queanbeyan and Bombala, and one year and five months as ordinary constable; and if it is your Honor's pleasure to appoint me anywhere else.

I have not earned one farthing during my suspension, fearing it might prejudice me if I took any other employment. I have a large family to support, and earnestly pray to be relieved from this terrible state of suspense.

I would have been much more satisfied if the case against Mr. Hebden had been tried upon its merits, and I did not engage an advocate until Mr. Hebden had so done, and unfortunately for me he selected Mr. Solicitor Freestone, whom I had consulted in the first part of the case, and knew the omission of the word malice.

By granting the prayer of an answer as speedily as possible, your Honor will confer an obligation upon your humble servant,

ALFRED WITTS.

Who, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To the Honorable

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales,
Sydney.

(12.)

Copy of Minute of Inspector General of Police on a Petition from Alfred Witts, late Chief Constable of Bombala.

"According to the Rules of the Police Force, the pay of an officer withheld during suspension is only repaid to him when he is reinstated in his office; in this case the chief constable was dismissed; such dismissal also deprives an officer to any claim his services may entitle him from the Police Pension Fund. Witts, however, had no claim, his service not having been continuous."

(13.)

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 23 September, 1859.

Sir,

In reply to your Petition of the 9th instant, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that, according to the Rules for the regulation of the Police Force, the pay of an officer under suspension can only be issued to him if he is reinstated, and that you are therefore not entitled to any further salary. Your removal from the situation of chief constable at Bombala would also deprive you of any claim on the Police Pension Fund; although, as your service had not been continuous, you would not have been entitled to benefit from it.

I am, &c.,
W. ELYARD.

Mr. Alfred Witts,
Bombala.

(14.)

To His Excellency the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

May it please your Excellency,—

The humble Petition of Alfred Witts, late Chief Constable of Bombala,—

G. Hebden, Esq.,
J.P.,
v.
Alfred Witts, C.C.
April 12th, 1859.

SHEWETH :—

1st. That your Petitioner now forwards to your Excellency the copy of a letter received from Mr. Gemell, Chief Constable of Bombala.

2nd. That your Petitioner earnestly entreats your Excellency will be graciously pleased to cause a communication with the Bench of Justices at Bombala, relative to their opinion as to whether, when I brought the accusation against Mr. Fox, the Clerk of the Court, I had reasonable cause for so doing, by acting upon the statement made to me by Charles Bowtell, a constable at Bombala, and who also had the clearing out of the Court House.

3rd. For your Petitioner hath been ruined by the effects of that accusation; inasmuch as your Petitioner was removed from his office through it.

4th.

4th. And thereby deprived of nearly five months' salary due your Petitioner.
 5th. And also, your Petitioner begs leave to state, he never had the least opportunity of explaining the reason why he brought the accusation; for your Petitioner could never get a sight of the letter dated July 27th, 1859, nor a copy of it, although application has been frequently made.
 6th. Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that the salary due him, for part of April, 1859, until the 30th of August, 1859, be paid him. And that Your Excellency will be graciously pleased to cause him to be appointed to another Government situation.

And your Petitioner will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

ALFRED WITTS.

Bombala, 12 April, 1860.

Bombala Police Office,
 14 January, 1860.

Sir,

I feel it a duty which one man owes to another to apprise you of the following fact:—It is in your recollection that some time since you brought a case before the Court, Witts v. Fox, relative to a letter which Bowtell told you he read (but afterwards denied on oath) in Court.

Now, I have found out that Bowtell not alone had that conversation with you, but also with two other men, who can come forward and prove it. Bowtell has sent in his resignation; but I do not think it will be accepted until this matter is looked into. Hoping to hear from you soon, and that you are doing well,—

I remain, &c.,

To Mr. A. Witts,
 Bendock Diggings.

WILLIAM GEMELL,
 Chief Constable, Bombala.

(15.)

MEMO. OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

THE case of Witts, lately chief constable at Bombala, has received most careful consideration, and subsequent reconsideration; it resulted in his dismissal from the Police Force, but did not preclude his obtaining other employment in the Government service.

The Bench of Magistrates at Bombala, when the matter was referred to them, laid marked emphasis upon Witts' infirmity of temper (a failing highly objectionable in an officer of police). It, therefore, does not appear to me that any explanation, such as that presumed to be contained in Chief Constable Gemell's letter, would remove a constitutional disability.

2. With respect to Witts' request, that salary calculated from April to 30th August, 1859, be paid him, I, on the 19th September last, reported upon a similar application, that, under the Police Regulations, the pay of an officer withheld during suspension, is only repaid to him when reinstated in his office; in the present case Witts was dismissed.

Dismissal likewise deprives an officer of any claim (to which his services may entitle him) to provision from the Police Pension Fund; Witts, however, has no foundation for such claim, as his service is not continuous.

I may also remark, that during the whole period of his suspension (for which he now asks payment) he was absolutely unemployed.

B.C.—Papers herewith returned.—April 20/60.

JNO. M'LERIE,
 Inspector General of Police.

(16.)

Colonial Secretary's Office,
 Sydney, 10 May, 1860.

Sir,

With reference to your further Petition of the 12th ultimo, praying to be paid the salary that accrued between the period of your suspension and that of your dismissal from the office of Chief Constable, Bombala, and that you may be appointed to another Government situation, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to refer you to the answer already given on the subject of the salary in question, as conveyed in my communication of the 23rd September last, and to inform you that your removal from the above office does not preclude your obtaining other employment in the Government service.

Mr. Alfred Witts,
 Bombala.

THURSDAY, 30 OCTOBER, 1862.

MR. TERRY, Present:—
 MR. WILSON, | MR. LEARY,
 MR. HARPUR, | MR. DANGAR.

THOMAS GARRETT, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain M'Lerie, Inspector General of Police, called in and examined:—

Capt. M'Lerie. 193. By the Chairman: We have summoned you, Captain M'Lerie, to give evidence relative to the Petitions of Alfred Witts—there are two of them—he presented one Petition in which he states that he was dismissed from his office in April, 1859? Yes.

30 Oct., 1862. 194. Did any correspondence pass through your office in reference to the matter? The matter was merely referred to me for report by the Chief Secretary; at that time the police were under the control of the Benches of Magistrates, but the report of his dismissal, together with the subsequent correspondence respecting it, was referred to me by the Chief Secretary for my report.

195. What was the nature of your report? My first report is dated the 28th June, 1859, and is to the following effect:—"Sir,—In returning the accompanying correspondence, bearing upon the dismissal of Mr. Witts from the office of chief constable at Bombala, together

“together with his appeal against such dismissal, and the depositions taken in the case, Capt. M'Lerie. transmitted to me under your B.C. Memo. of the 30th instant, I do myself the honor to state, for the information of the Chief Secretary, that having carefully perused these 30 Oct., 1862. depositions, together with the letter of the Magistrates transmitting them, it does not appear that the chief constable has sufficient grounds for appeal to His Excellency, under the 9th clause of the Police Regulation Act, 16 Victoria, No. 33; for although the sentence of dismissal from office appears to be a severe one for the offence which has been proved in evidence against him, yet it is found that four of the five Magistrates who usually officiate on the Bench (the fifth having been a witness in the case), record their deliberate opinion, that Mr. Witts' conduct, as chief constable, has for some time past been anything but satisfactory, and that his unfitness for office has become a frequent and increasing matter of complaint.”

196. You do not know anything about the specific charge on which he was dismissed? No, except what appeared on the evidence.

197. Did the evidence extend over a series of charges, or relate to one specific charge? The evidence on which he was dismissed embraced only one charge; but the Magistrates, in recording their opinion on that case, made the comment to which I have just alluded—that his conduct for some time past had been anything but satisfactory.

198. Do you know anything personally of Mr. Witts? I do not; I never saw him.

199. There has never been any complaint made to you in reference to him? No; at that time he was under the control of the Bench.

200. Do you know anything of Mr. Witts' police services? I know that he served in the force for two different periods.

201. He was first in the constabulary and resigned? He was chief constable at Queanbeyan.

202. He states in one of his petitions that he was chief constable at Queanbeyan for thirteen years? Yes.

203. And afterwards that he was chief constable at Bombala for five years? Yes, with a breach in the service.

204. Will the effect of that breach be to invalidate any claim of Mr. Witts to a pension or gratuity? It deprives him of the first period of service altogether, under the 16 Victoria, 33. In the 11th clause it is stated: “Any chief or other constable who shall resign his office, or shall be convicted of unlawfully withdrawing or absenting himself from the duties thereof, shall forfeit all claim to any allowance, remuneration, or superannuation, to which he might otherwise have been entitled on retirement under the provisions of this Act.”

205. Do you know of any case in which this rule has been deviated from? No, it has never been deviated from in any one case.

206. Do you know anything of the case of Mr. Hildebrand, late chief constable at Wollongong? Yes, but the cases are not at all analogous. There was no breach in his service, but only an interregnum of a few days when he was passing from one district to another.

207. He was under appointment all the while? Yes; the cases are not at all similar.

208. By Mr. Wilson: Mr. Witts' interregnum lasted for several years? Yes, I think he was in business for himself for a considerable period.

209. By the Chairman: Under the old system, when a policeman was suspended or dismissed, was it an actual dismissal by the Bench, or was it merely a suspension? It was dismissal under this Act.

210. But according to Mr. Witts' petition it appears that it was some time in August before a decision was come to? Yes, but he was in fact dismissed by the Magistrates. He then appealed. There is a power of appeal under that Act, and that period was pending the appeal. He was, in reality, dismissed.

211. Then under this Act he would not be entitled to any remuneration for the period between April and August? With respect to suspension the rule is this: If a member of the Police Force is suspended during investigation, and that investigation ends in his re-instatement, he is entitled to remuneration, but if he is not re-instated he loses the pay for that time.

212. Has Mr. Witts made any application for employment in the Police Force since his removal by the Bench? Not through my department. I find in a subsequent report that I recommended that he should be re-employed.

213. How did that subsequent report come to be made? When he appealed to the Governor under the Act, his appeal was referred to me, and I thought he had been hardly dealt with, and that, although it might be unadvisable for him to be permitted to remain at that Bench, he might be removed to some other Bench. But at that time the Government had no power to make such appointments in the country; and a reply was received to that effect.

214. He states in his petition that there was a communication sent to the Clerk of the Court in which it was stated that your petitioner had not committed any offence to warrant his dismissal after so many years service? I think it must have come up with the other papers. There is a communication made to the Bench of Magistrates here by the Under Secretary to this effect: “Mr. Witts cannot be allowed to remain chief constable at that place; but although he may not be continued in that office, there will be no objection to his being employed elsewhere.” That is what I recommended. I thought it undesirable that he should remain at that Bench. I believed, however, that he had been treated rather harshly, and that he might be employed elsewhere.

215. Are you of that opinion still? I am. The man is ineligible from age to enter the Police Force, but there are other positions he might occupy. He might be placed in charge of one of those new gaoles; he would be just the sort of man.

- Capt. M'Lerie. 216. By Mr. Dangar : You believe Mr. Witts was harshly dealt with ? I think the punishment was more severe than the offence merited.
- 30 Oct., 1862. 217. By Mr. Harpur : You are not aware of the circumstances of the case—that on the occasion of his dismissal a number of Magistrates were present who had not sat upon the Bench for some time previously, and that subsequent to the dismissal they never took their seats on the Bench again for a considerable period ? Those are facts which would not come within my knowledge.
218. You have never heard, I suppose, of an unpaid Magistrate ordering a constable to apprehend a young girl in a place like a circus, during the whole time you have been Inspector General of Police ? For what ?
219. By Mr. Wilson : Because she was in a circus ? I cannot conceive why a Magistrate should interfere.
220. The circumstances are stated so :—Mr. Witts' family were invited to attend a performance given for the benefit of some local charity. Mr. Hebden, the Magistrate, considered himself a sort of trustee, I believe—in some way connected with the local charity—and took upon himself to order Mr. Witts' daughter out of the circus. Mr. Witts told his daughter not to retire, and then this Hebden called upon a constable to remove her, and she was removed ? I cannot see that a Magistrate had any right to interfere at all ; he may have done so under the impression that the interests of the institution for which the performance was to take place were interfered with, but that was a matter for the proprietor of the circus.
221. By Mr. Harpur : It would appear that Mr. Ashton was entitled to a part of the proceeds ? I think the matter one in which the Magistrate had no right to interfere.
222. By Mr. Dangar : He then brings an action, and obtains £25 damages ? Yes ; I find that after he gained that verdict he made a claim upon the Government for his pay while under suspension, and I replied to it as follows :—“ The verdict of the jury on which Alfred Witts has renewed his application does not affect the report previously made by me in this matter—namely, that under the Police Regulations an officer has no claim to his pay while “ under suspension, unless he is restored to his office.”
223. By Mr. Harpur : Are those regulations independent of the Act, or are they founded upon it ? There were the regulations in existence under this Act.
224. This suspension took place before the passing of the Act, and they would not apply to his case ? With respect to pay, they have been in existence since the first Police Act was passed.
225. By the Chairman : Can you state whether Mr. Witts resigned before this Police Act came into operation at Queanbeyan ? He resigned during the gold fever, which was after the passing of the Act.
226. Was it not at an early stage of the gold fever ? The Act of 1850 contained a clause precisely similar to that.
227. By Mr. Dangar : Were there not separate Police Regulations framed by you on that Act ? On the Act of 1851 ?—not by me, but by my predecessor in office.

MANAGEMENT OF THE CENTRAL POLICE OFFICE.REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 8th July last, "to inquire and report to this House upon the Management and General Working of the George-street Police Office, and the fitness and state of the Building," and empowered, on the 15th of the same month, "to send for persons and papers,"—have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee have examined twenty-seven witnesses (whose evidence is appended hereto), and are of opinion that the business of the Central Police Office has not been conducted in a satisfactory manner.

This state of things appears to your Committee to have in some measure arisen from the number of inconsistent and comparatively trivial duties imposed upon the Police Magistrate, which have been the means of leading him away from his proper sphere of public action and responsibility, and into the habit of depending upon the accidental and irregular assistance of other Magistrates, in the performance of those duties for which a Police Magistrate was specially appointed, and for which this officer should be held more immediately responsible. The ordinary proceedings of the Central Police Office, as reported to your Committee, have for a long time past, too obviously exhibited the want of a constantly presiding authority. To this cause may be traced the absence of harmonious action among the Magistrates, and the undue license assumed by practitioners. Your Committee cannot acquit Captain Scott of blame, but consider him chargeable with want of firmness, in not resisting whatever influences have injuriously affected his public utility, with negligence in not having foreseen and warned the Government of the consequences of the position in which he found himself placed, and with some degree of ignorance of his official duties.

Your Committee recommend that, with a view to the inauguration of an improved system, some arrangement should be effected under which constant and regular attendance on the Bench should be regarded as the special duty of the Central Police Magistrate, who should be held generally responsible for the due administration of justice in that Court.

Your

Your Committee cannot refrain from giving expression to their opinion that the manner in which the Clerk of Petty Sessions gave his evidence is very unsatisfactory.

The buildings occupied as Police Offices, and the Watch House, are in very bad condition, and your Committee are glad to find that the attention of the Government has been already directed to this subject, and that steps have been taken for remedying this evil. Your Committee would earnestly recommend that new buildings, sufficiently commodious, and in every respect suitable for the purpose, should be erected without delay.

Chairman submitted Draft Report.

Same read 1^o, viz. :—

“ Your Committee have examined twenty-seven witnesses (whose evidence is appended hereto), and it appears to your Committee that the business of the Central Police Office has been conducted in a most irregular and unsatisfactory manner.

“ 2. The irregularity in a great measure arises from the want of a competent person to preside over the Department, the present Police Magistrate being, in the opinion of your Committee, altogether unsuited for such an office, who should forthwith be removed to some other branch of the Public Service. Cases have been brought under the notice of your Committee, showing that the liberty of the subject has been trifled with, suitors put to unnecessary delay and great inconvenience, and decisions given of a most unsatisfactory nature, utterly at variance with both law and evidence.

“ 3. Your Committee have been somewhat surprised at the evidence given with respect to the disgraceful conduct of some of the Police Office Practitioners, who evidently do as they please in the Court, without any strong effort on the part of the Bench to maintain its dignity, and that Magistrates have not unfrequently taken particular cases, where they have been specially solicited to do so by the parties concerned. This practice is calculated to bring the administration of justice into contempt, and strong efforts should be made by the Government to detect persons guilty of such gross misconduct, and at once remove them from the Commission of the Peace.

“ 4. The building itself is in a very bad condition, and your Committee would recommend the adoption of the plan for new offices produced by the City Surveyor.

“ 5. The appointment of the present Clerk of Petty Sessions over the heads of gentlemen many years in the same department, has led to much confusion and irregularity; and your Committee cannot too strongly condemn the conduct of that officer in endeavouring wilfully to mislead and impose upon your Committee in furnishing certain forms of information and summons as fair samples of those in daily use, whilst the samples produced were not only seldom used, but exceedingly lengthy, and were specially selected at the request of that officer, who ought, in the opinion of your Committee, to be immediately removed from the public service.

“ 6. As many cases of considerable importance are frequently entered upon at the Central Police Office, your Committee beg to recommend that a professional gentleman, of some standing in his profession, should be appointed Police Magistrate, and who should be directed to devote the greater portion of his time to Bench duties.”

Committee deliberated.

Motion made (Mr. Wilson) and Question,—That the Draft Report be printed and circulated amongst the Members of the Committee prior to next meeting,—agreed to.

Chairman laid before the Committee letter from Mr. Justice Wise, expressing a wish that certain observations, enclosed, respecting Jury Lists in the Supreme Court, may be added to his evidence.

Committee deliberated, and Resolved,—That it is inexpedient to print the same.

Draft Report as submitted by Chairman on the 12th instant—before the Committee—printed copies having been previously circulated.

Draft Report read 2^o paragraph by paragraph.

Paragraph 1 read, amended, and agreed to.

Paragraph 2 read and considered.

Motion made (Mr. W. Forster) and Question,—That this paragraph be omitted with the view to substitute the following :—

“ This state of things appears to your Committee to have in some measure arisen from the number of inconsistent and comparatively trivial duties imposed upon the Police Magistrate, which have been the means of leading him away from his proper sphere of public action and responsibility, and into the habit of depending upon the accidental and irregular assistance of other Magistrates, in the performance of those duties for which a Police Magistrate was specially appointed, and for which this officer should be held specially responsible. To this cause may be traced the absence of harmonious action among the Magistrates, and the undue license assumed by practitioners. Your Committee cannot entirely acquit Captain Scott, who must be charged with want of firmness in not resisting whatever influences have injuriously affected his public utility, and whose undoubted duty it was to have foreseen and warned the Government of the consequences of the position in which he found himself placed. At the same time, your Committee consider the chief fault to have been in the system itself, which, owing to the great increase of business, has been gradually growing worse and worse, and which unquestionably calls for immediate consideration and amendment,”—agreed to.

Paragraph 3 read and negatived.

Paragraph 4 read and postponed.

Paragraph 5 read and considered.

Motion made (Mr. W. Forster) and Question—That this paragraph be omitted, with the view to substitute the following :—

“ Your Committee, therefore, recommend that, with a view to the inauguration of an improved system, some arrangement should be effected for relieving Captain Scott of his duties on the Bench, and for separating the chamber from the other business, while in future the Central Police Magistrate should be “ instructed

"instructed to consider constant and regular attendance on the Bench as his "special duty, and that he should be held generally responsible for the due
"administration of justice in that Court,"—agreed to.

Paragraph 6 read and negatived.

Postponed paragraph considered.

Motion made (Mr. Cowper) and Question,—That this paragraph be omitted, with the view to substitute the following, to stand as the concluding paragraph of the Report:—

"The buildings occupied as Police Offices, and the Watch House, are in very "bad condition, and your Committee are glad to find that the attention of the "Government has been already directed to this subject, and that steps have been "taken for remedying this evil. Your Committee would earnestly recommend "that new buildings, sufficiently commodious and in every respect suitable for the "purpose, should be erected without delay,"—agreed to.

Draft Report to be further considered.

Re-assembling of the Committee to be arranged by Chairman.

[Adjourned.]

TUESDAY, 9 DECEMBER, 1862.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

| Mr. Cowper, | | Mr. W. Forster, |
| | | Mr. Lucas. |

Committee met pursuant to summons.

Mr. W. Forster, in the absence of the Chairman, called to the Chair.

Draft Report submitted at the last meeting further considered and amended.

Letter to be written to Captain Scott, to furnish copies of all the summonses and informations issued from the Central Police Office during the month of February last.

[Adjourned to Thursday next, at Twelve o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 11 DECEMBER, 1862.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

Mr. Driver in the Chair.

| | | |
|-----------------|--|---------------|
| Mr. W. Forster, | | Mr. Cowper, |
| Mr. Lucas, | | Mr. Wilson, |
| Mr. Windeyer, | | Mr. Caldwell. |

Copies of the summonses and informations issued from the Central Police Office during the month of February last, as forwarded to the Chairman, before the Committee.

Draft of amended Report considered, paragraph by paragraph.

Paragraph 1 read, and agreed to without amendment.

Paragraph 2 read, viz.:—

"2. This state of things appears to your Committee to have in some measure "arisen from the number of inconsistent and comparatively trivial duties imposed
"upon the Police Magistrate, which have been the means of leading him away "from his proper sphere of public action and responsibility, and into the habit of "depending upon the accidental and irregular assistance of other Magistrates, in
"the performance of those duties for which a Police Magistrate was specially "appointed, and for which this officer should be held more immediately responsible.
"The ordinary proceedings of the Central Police Office, as reported to your Com"mittee, have for a long time past too obviously exhibited the want of a constantly
"presiding authority. To this cause may be traced the absence of harmonious
"action among the Magistrates, and the undue license assumed by practitioners.
"Your Committee cannot 'entirely' acquit Captain Scott of blame, but consider "him chargeable with want of firmness in not resisting whatever influences have
"injuriously affected his public 'utility,' with negligence in not having foreseen
"and warned the Government of the consequences of the position in which he "found himself 'placed.' At the same time, your Committee consider the chief "fault to have been in the system itself, which, owing to the great increase of "business, has been gradually growing worse and worse, and unquestionably calls
"for immediate consideration and amendment."

Motion made (Mr. Windeyer) and Question proposed,—That the word "entirely," in the 14th line, be omitted from the proposed paragraph.

Question,—That the word proposed to be omitted stand part of the paragraph,—put.
Committee divided.

Motion made (Mr. W. Forster), and Question,—That after the word “placed,” in the 18th line, the following words be added, viz., “and with some degree of ignorance of his official duties,”—agreed to.

Motion made (Mr. Cowper), and Question,—That the last sentence of the paragraph be struck out,—agreed to.

Paragraph, as amended, agreed to.

Paragraph 3 read, amended, and agreed to.

Paragraph 4 read and agreed to without amendment.

Motion made (Mr. Wilson), and Question,—That the following new paragraph be inserted after paragraph 3 of the Report,—

“Your Committee cannot refrain from giving expression to their opinion, that the manner in which the Clerk of Petty Sessions gave his evidence is very “unsatisfactory,”—agreed to.

Motion made, and Question,—That this Report be the Report of the Committee,—put.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

CENTRAL POLICE OFFICE.

FRIDAY, 25 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

| | | |
|--------------|--|-----------------|
| MR. COWPER, | | MR. HAY, |
| MR. HOSKINS, | | MR. CALDWELL, |
| | | MR. W. FORSTER. |

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain D. C. F. Scott called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are doubtless aware of the object of this Committee, which was appointed to inquire and report upon the management and general working of the Central Police Office? Perfectly. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
2. What is your name? David Charles Frederick Scott. 25 July, 1862.
3. And you are a Police Magistrate of this city? I am Police Magistrate of this city, and have been so for two years and a few weeks; before I was appointed to that office I was for twenty-two years a Magistrate of the Territory; I acted for some time as Police Magistrate of Muswellbrook; and once acted in Sydney, in the absence of Mr. Forbes.
4. Can you state how long you acted in the absence of Mr. Forbes? I think about a fortnight; I am not sure.
5. And how long at Muswellbrook? Two or three different times in the absence of Mr. Allman, and also I think in the absence of Mr. Day; the time I allude to is about fifteen or sixteen years ago.
6. Do you desire to make any statement to the Committee? No; I have merely come here to answer any questions that may be put to me.
7. Do you consider the management of the George-street Police Office as perfect? Not quite as perfect, but in far better working order than it was when I received it: at that time many of the books were a year in arrears, moneys received were not entered for three months, and were not paid to the Government for eighteen months after being received by my predecessor.
8. Have all these arrears been made up? They have all been made up; and so anxious was I to forward the work, that I paid a clerk for three months out of my own pocket.
9. Have you increased the staff of your office? It is the same now, with this exception, that in the place of Mr. Seely, who received £200 a year, two clerks have been introduced at £100 a year each. The number of clerks at present is nine. Mr. Martin died a short time ago, and there are really now only eight working clerks. I hand in a list of the clerks, specifying their term of service and salaries. (Vide Appendix A.)
10. I believe the term of service set down for Mr. Connell, namely eighteen years, relates to the whole time he has been in the public service? It relates to his public services altogether.

- Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
- 25 July, 1862.
11. Is there not a gentleman named Day employed in the office? No; he is a volunteer.
 12. By Mr. Cowper: Not salaried? No; I have two or three volunteers; there was another of the name of Tunks who received no salary.
 13. By Mr. Hoskins: They perform the duties without salaries? Day is remarkably useful in copying electoral rolls and jury lists, and we give him a certain sum—about £30 or £40 a year; he writes a very good hand.
 14. Are these volunteers daily in attendance? Yes; a son of Major Chisholm (the husband of Mrs. Caroline Chisholm, so well known in connection with immigration) was in the office for eighteen months without receiving a penny.
 15. By the Chairman: Is Mr. Day paid to perform any other duties? Only those two.
 16. Was he not employed to prepare the list of applicants for publicans' general licenses? No, that is Mr. Delohery's business.
 17. Was he employed to do so? I think not; they are Mr. Delohery's duties.
 18. By Mr. Cowper: If he did it he was not paid for it by the Government? No.
 19. By the Chairman: You are sure Mr. Day was not paid a sum of money for preparing the list of applicants for publicans' general licenses? I think not a penny. May I hand in a statement of the duties of every clerk in my department, as it may save the Committee some trouble; I have put them all upon different sheets. (Vide Appendix B.)
 20. Do you consider the clerical assistance sufficient or insufficient? I think that when the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Martin is filled it is sufficient.
 21. By Mr. Cowper: Do you consider it more than sufficient? Certainly not.
 22. Are there not arrears in the office now? None; and there have not been any for a long time to my knowledge.
 23. By the Chairman: With the exception of the experience you have already stated, had you any other before being appointed to the office of Police Magistrate? Reading and studying at home.
 24. Have any complaints been made to you at any time, as to the manner in which the business of the office has been conducted? In what way?
 25. In any way? Sometimes. On one occasion myself and four clerks were summoned away at the same time to attend other Courts, and occasionally they are absent from sickness, having to work in a very unhealthy place, where, from the closeness of the office to the markets and a draystand, they suffer from the nasty stinks that is almost continual.
 26. By Mr. Hoskins: What Courts do they attend? I am talking of the office where the clerks perform their duties.
 27. You say they are sometimes called away to attend other Courts; what Courts? The District Court and Supreme Court as witnesses; clerks are constantly being called away for that purpose, and on account of illness.
 28. Do you know of more than one occasion when yourself and four clerks have been called away on any one day? Only on one occasion. Two or three have been absent several times.
 29. From what cause? From being sick, on medical certificate.
 30. In point of fact, I understand you to say you have not received any complaints? Oh yes. The Magistrates have sat once or twice when they complained that there was not a clerk to perform the duty in Court. I recollect one occasion—I think the last; I was absent on account of Colonel Barney's death, and Mr. Connell was absent on account of the dangerous illness of a near relation. Mr. Smithers then came out and stated that there was no clerk for the second Court. That was the last time, I think. I may add that I have repeatedly, on the bench and in my private room, acted as Magistrate and clerk, to expedite the public business; and I believe you are aware of that, Mr. Driver.
 31. Has not the second Court been frequently closed in consequence of the inability to procure a deposition clerk? I think not, not lately, for I have three deposition clerks.
 32. How long have you had three deposition clerks? Mr. Hales has been in the office fourteen months.
 33. Are you not aware that many irregularities exist in that office? I will answer that if you point them out.
 34. Do you recollect the 2nd of June last? I recollect that there was a 2nd of June.
 35. Do you recollect a case, Butt against Martin the younger, for an assault, being called on before yourself and Mr. Murphy. Yes.
 36. Was that case adjourned by you until the following day at twelve o'clock? It was. There were two cases of assault, and with regard to the one we declined to give a decision until the following day, in order that both might be heard, so that we could judge more fairly.
 37. Do you recollect the case being called on on the 3rd of June? I recollect the case being called on on the day to which it was adjourned.
 38. Do you recollect any application being made to you to adjourn the case? Yes.
 39. By whom was it made? By Mr. Moffat?
 40. On whose behalf? On behalf of the defendant, I think; I am not quite sure.
 41. Was the complainant present? He was, in the body of the Court, among the spectators.
 42. Are you quite certain of that? I saw him there myself. I feel as certain as I can be, though from seeing so many faces there I cannot positively swear it.
 43. What was the nature of the application of Mr. Moffat? To adjourn the case, as far as my recollection goes.
 44. Did you adjourn the case? I did. All assault cases require the attendance of two Magistrates, and I was on the bench alone. It was in the evening.
 45. Do you then consider you had the power to adjourn the case, in the absence of a second Magistrate? Scarcely, but for the convenience of the public I think we ought to have the power.

46. Was the complainant represented by counsel or attorney? I was on the bench alone when the application was made, and after some discussion I said the case should be adjourned, when in came Mr. Murphy. He said—"I have private business of my own, and cannot attend to the case." Two of us then, at Mr. Moffat's request, and whilst Mr. Cory was standing near him, consented to comply with the application for an adjournment. We did adjourn the case, but afterwards Mr. Cory came into my private room and said he would not consent to it.
47. Then behind the back of complainant and his attorney this case was adjourned? The first case. I adjourned it simply because I was unable to sit upon it in the absence of a second Magistrate.
48. Was not the complainant in attendance with his witnesses? Probably he was, but as I could not go into the case I adjourned it.
49. As you before stated, believing you had not the power to do so? That is doubtful. I know it is often done.
50. Why doubtful? Doubtful whether I have the power or not. I am not to keep the public there the whole day, and say I will not adjourn the case to oblige them. I have a certain time daily to be at the office, and I sat there the whole time.
51. Do you recollect an information being exhibited by a Mrs. Bucknell before you? Perfectly.
52. Was that information upon oath? Well I suppose it must have been, but I have not seen it since. It was a bigamy case, I think.
53. If you signed it, it would be exhibited upon oath? I do not think I should have signed it unless it was.
54. You are certain the information was exhibited by Mrs. Bucknell? By Mrs. Bucknell, with Mr. Moffat, I think.
55. Do you recollect the information? It was charging her husband with bigamy.
56. The offence was clearly stated in the information, was it not? I think so, but I have not seen the information since I signed it.
57. Did any person appear with her, to present or exhibit the information? I think Mr. Moffat.
58. What was done upon the information? A warrant was issued.
59. Was that warrant duly prepared in the proper office? In the first place.
60. In the proper office? In the first place.
61. What afterwards became of it? It was withdrawn, at the request of Mrs. Bucknell, and a summons was issued, she stating that a summons would do as well as a warrant.
62. Did you withdraw that warrant? I did.
63. Or cancelled it? I cancelled it.
64. Which was it? It is one and the same thing, I think. I cancelled it.
65. How long had that warrant been in the hands of the police before it was cancelled? That I cannot answer, but I do not think it was more than a day or two.
66. You have no doubt about its being in the hands of the police a day or two? Not the slightest.
67. And the only reason you had for cancelling that warrant was because Mrs. Bucknell stated a summons would do as well? Yes; I did not think it my duty to bring a respectable man down to the Court upon a warrant, putting the Government to great expense.
68. Did you consider it your duty to issue the warrant? I did.
69. And you still consider it was your duty? In the first instance.
70. Did it never strike you that Mrs. Bucknell, the party submitting that information, was not a competent witness, and that therefore the whole proceeding was highly irregular? I do not see that it was irregular in any way. I have since ascertained that she has committed bigamy, by marrying a man named Reuben Bryant.
71. But you were not aware of that fact at the time the information was exhibited? No, it was a day or two afterwards.
72. After you had ordered the cancellation of the warrant? After I had ordered that.
73. I think I understood you to say that after the warrant was cancelled a summons was issued—was a summons issued? I believe so; I gave an order to that effect.
74. Does it appear upon the proceedings in the case, either upon the information or warrant? I do not know; I have not seen it since. In nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand I give an order in my office in writing if a warrant or summons is to issue, and that is filed when the summons or warrant is issued.
75. Is it not customary to indorse upon the information what steps are to be taken in the matter—whether a warrant or summons is to be issued? No, it is done from my little slip of paper, which is the authority to the clerk to draw out a summons or warrant.
76. Was that summons regularly entered and numbered? Oh yes, I think so.
77. Then you do not know whether any record remains of your instructions? If they were carried out it would remain.
78. To whom were the instructions given? Who the clerk having that duty was at that time I do not know. It may have been Mr. Davidson. However, it was to that clerk who had the duty to perform at the time—the duty of drawing out summonses.
79. Should these instructions appear upon the face of the proceedings in any way? No proceedings were taken.
80. There was an information, certainly? Yes, an information.
81. And warrant? The proceedings are these:—I grant an information; it is brought to me and sworn to or exhibited; I sign it and send it to Mr. Armstrong, who draws up the summons or warrant. Those are the proceedings in the office.
82. You stated just now that Mrs. Bucknell called and requested that this warrant should be withdrawn? I think so.

- Captain D. C. F. Scott. 25 July, 1862.
83. Was it not Mr. Moffat, her attorney? I cannot say.
84. Do you not know that Mr. Moffat indorsed some statement on the warrant itself? He was sent for to attend at the office of Mr. Read, the Police Inspector, and there, I believe, he put something on that warrant; I believe it was the place where Mr. Bucknell resided, or something of that kind.
85. Nothing else? Not that I know of.
86. Do you not know that a statement has been indorsed on the back of that warrant by Mr. Moffat, or have you never heard of it till now? I saw something in his handwriting on that warrant, but what it is I am perfectly ignorant of.
87. Have you the warrant with you? No.
88. Can you produce it to this Committee? I believe so; I think it is at the office.
89. You say it never struck you that the complainant or person exhibiting the information in that case was not a competent witness? I had no occasion to think of it. She laid her complaint of bigamy.
90. Do you not know, as a matter of law, that no warrant can or ought to issue upon the information of any person not being a competent witness? I fancy that when the case came on she could swear to the facts; that she was married to him on a certain day.
91. But did it never occur to you that she was not a competent witness? She could on that point.
92. What point? That she was married to him.
93. You still adhere to that opinion? I think so.
94. Did you take any trouble to inquire or look into that point before you ordered the warrant to issue? I am always particular about all —
95. Did you take any steps to ascertain whether you were right upon that point? I considered the point, and ordered the warrant to issue.
96. Did you take trouble to look into the question before you directed the warrant to issue? In what way?
97. As to whether she was a competent witness? No, that was a matter for after consideration when the case came on.
98. But do you not know that a warrant should not be granted on the information of a person who is not a competent witness? I think that, as far as regards proof of the marriage, she was a competent witness.
99. Can you give any instance from your experience as a Police Magistrate, where a warrant was cancelled after being placed in the hands of the police for execution? Many.
100. Can you name them? A woman gets, for instance, a warrant against her husband who may be at Lambing Flat, but subsequently she gets a remittance, stops the case, and gets the warrant cancelled.
101. But those cases are of rare occurrence, are they not? I have known of about half a dozen.
102. In how many cases positively? I cannot say positively.
103. Do you not know that it is irregular and improper? I think it would be irregular to drag a man down from the country when his wife was perfectly satisfied.
104. By Mr. Hoskins: Have you power by law to cancel warrants? I cannot say positively, but I think I have.
105. By the Chairman: Do you think that you have power to cancel a warrant in any case? Perhaps not by law, but by justice I have. The warrant is brought to me by the Chief Inspector, with a request that it be cancelled.
106. Did the Chief Inspector bring this warrant in Bucknell's case, with a request to cancel it? No, he did not.
107. Did Mr. Read make any request to you in this matter? I do not think he interfered at all in the matter.
108. Do you recollect the 27th of September last? If you mention any fact, I shall recollect it, perhaps.
109. Were you in the office that day? I think I have been four days absent from the office, on account of sickness.
110. You were not present then? I might have been.
111. Do you recollect two females waiting there the whole day, one in order to prefer a charge of felony, and the other a charge of assault? If you mention the case I may know. Once a week I am absent at Cockatoo Island.
112. Then you have other duties to discharge besides those at the Police Office? I am Visiting Magistrate at Cockatoo Island.
113. Does that require you to absent yourself from the Police Office? I am ordered to attend once a week if I can. I have not been able to do so always; I have been absent about eight times, I think, in two years. On other occasions, when I have not been able to attend, I have asked Mr. North or other Magistrates to go and perform my duty there.
114. Do you recollect an information being exhibited by Sir George Blaxland Rogers before you? I recollect something about it.
115. Against a person named Crosse, I think? I do not know the name.
116. Where did he then reside? I do not know.
117. Was it not at the Macdonald River? He exhibited it, said it was his name and signature, and I signed it.
118. He exhibited the information? I think so.
119. What was the charge set forth in the information? If I had to read all the informations that come through my hands, I could not do so if I were cut in four.
120. Do you direct summonses and warrants to issue upon informations without reading them? I think it is impossible to read them all. I ask questions before signing them.
- 121.

121. By Mr. Hoskins: What questions do you ask generally? I inquire as to the truth of the statements contained. If a woman wants a warrant against her husband, I ask her how long she has been married; how long she has been deserted; how long since she received support from him; and if he lives in Sydney I grant a summons; if a digger, I usually grant a warrant with bail. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
25 July, 1862.
122. By the Chairman: Was not this an information charging Crosse, the defendant, with obtaining money under false pretences? I have heard so many cases that I cannot bear each in recollection. Will you tell me what the false pretences were, or the amount.
123. You recollect the information being exhibited by Rogers? Yes.
124. Was the informant sworn to the truth of his information? I do not think he was; not that I recollect. He might have been.
125. And without swearing him, you directed a summons to issue;—do you not know that it is necessary that an information should be upon oath? I do not recollect that it was upon oath, but if he was to be sworn I swore him.
126. Can you say that Rogers was ever sworn to the truth of that information? I cannot tell without referring to the case.
127. If he swore to it would it appear upon the information? I think so.
128. By Mr. Hoskins: Is every information sworn to? They are always upon oath, as far as I recollect, except exhibits.
129. By the Chairman: In this case the information was not sworn? I cannot tell you. If you had mentioned it I might have brought up the papers. I recollect a person coming in about this matter, but what took place I do not recollect.
130. Are you aware that it is absolutely necessary, where a charge is made of obtaining money under false pretences, that the informant should swear to his information? Yes.
131. But in this case you do not believe he was sworn? I cannot tell you whether he was or not. I recollect the person coming in with a long statement occupying about four sheets, but what it was about I do not know.
132. Do you recollect a case of Cowie against Cardwell? Cardwell has been at the Court about twenty times; he is a poundkeeper, I think.
133. The case was part heard by Mr. Peden and Mr. Ronald? I do not recollect the case. What was the offence?
134. You do not recollect the case? Not that individual case.
135. Is it customary for the Police Magistrate to step in after a case has been part heard by other Magistrates, and order a further adjournment without consulting the presiding Justices or the parties to the suit? It is not customary.
136. Was it not done by yourself in the case I have just named? I do not recollect. If it was I had good reason for doing it. The parties very likely were not present.
137. Do you undertake to say that neither of the parties was present? I do not; but the Justices may not have been present. The parties very probably were present.
138. Do you recollect adjourning it further for four days? Every adjourned case is marked upon the sheets.
139. Do you recollect a person named O'Brien being brought before you, for stealing to the value of 8s.? No.
140. Is it usual upon the application of either of the parties to order witnesses to leave the Court? Certainly.
141. Are not witnesses compelled after proclamation to leave the Court? Yes.
142. Is it usual after such an order has been made to allow any particular witness to remain in Court? The prosecutor is generally allowed to remain.
143. No other witness? Not that I know of.
144. Have you ever done so? I do not recollect. I have not willingly done it to my knowledge.
145. You do not recollect this case of O'Brien? I have not the slightest recollection of it.
146. You cannot say that he requested you to order witnesses out of Court in that case? No. If requested I always order it.
147. Do you recollect Mr. Moffat appearing for the complainant, and requesting you to rescind the order? I do not recollect the case at all.
148. Had such an application been made to you by any person in any case, would you have consented? No.
149. Will you undertake to say you did not in this case? I have not the slightest recollection of the case.
150. I will give you the name of the witness—Mr. Rennie? I do not recollect it.
151. Will you say you did not in that case allow this person to remain after giving evidence? I do not recollect the case in any one way.
152. Do you recollect a person named Fitzsimmons being fined for a trivial assault? No.
153. When persons are fined for trivial assaults, with the alternative of a few days in gaol, is it usual to give them time for the payment of the fine? If the assaulted party consents; but it is very seldom, if done at all. I do not recollect it being done.
154. Are they not generally taken off to the station-house at once? Yes, unless they pay the fine. Directly the depositions are signed, if they wish to pay the fine, they are taken into the clerk's room.
155. How long after? They wait till the depositions are sent off the bench, and then they are taken out at once.
156. They are never detained for two or three hours? Never.
157. If the fine in this case was paid at half-past ten, how soon after would the defendant have been discharged? Immediately; I do not interfere with that.
158. Can you state why this person was detained in custody (the fine having been paid at half-

- Captain
D. C. F. Scott,

- half-past ten) until a quarter before four o'clock? I do not know the case; I do not know that he was so detained in custody. As far as I recollect, he never complained to me in the matter.
159. Will you state that he never did? No; but I think I should have had a recollection of it if he did. I should have made a row about it.
160. Did you inquire into the circumstance? I do not recollect it.
161. You do not state that he did not make a complaint, but you know you did not interfere? I do not recollect the case; if I could see the papers it would then revive my recollection.
162. Can you tell me who regulates the charges for informations and other processes? In all the offices there is a printed list of charges.
163. What is the usual charge for a summons? A summons for wages is 4s. 10d., a summons for assault about 6s. 6d., for obstructing pavements about 2s. 6d., a declaration I think is 2s. I do not know the whole of them, but all are printed in a list which is stuck up in the offices, according to the Act; and the Clerk of Petty Sessions is subject to fine unless he does it.
164. Do you recollect a case of the Queen against Cardwell within the last two months—I think he was fined £2 16s. 6d.—a case in which a prohibition was afterwards obtained? Was I on that case?
165. No? Cardwell has appeared so often that I cannot recollect a particular case.
166. Who has charge of the moneys in that department? The moneys all finally get into the charge of Mr. Connell. Some moneys for summonses and other things are received by Mr. Armstrong, and some by Mr. Delohery, and some by one of the other clerks.
167. By whom, and upon what and whose authority, are moneys paid out of that office? The authority of the appropriation. The clerk who receives is checked by two other clerks, and the appropriation made by a third clerk. Some moneys go to the Benevolent Asylum—such as fines from drunkards. Fines for assaults upon police are divided, one-half going to the police, and the other to the general revenue. Others go to the Corporation, others entirely to the general revenue; and these appropriations are made by Mr. Ormiston, the accountant, and the money is placed every day in the bank.
168. You have not answered the question—By whom, and upon what and whose authority, are moneys paid out of that office? When a person is fined he is taken to the Clerk of Petty Sessions, to whom it is paid. That has always been the custom. He makes out his account, and pays the money into the bank every day. The money books are made up every hour.
169. By whom are these books kept? By several parties. There is a list of the books. (Vide Appendix C.) When I took charge I introduced ten new ones, to make the business of the Court much clearer.
170. Then what moneys are paid out of that office are paid by the chief clerk upon his own responsibility? Yes, into the bank. I have seen him examine and check the accounts repeatedly.
171. Do you recollect Messrs. Smithers and Cohen adjudicating in a case, I think, named The Queen v. Cardwell? No.
172. Do you recollect a prohibition being applied for in that case? I recollect that they showed me a prohibition.
173. I believe 10s. 6d. was awarded to Mr. Redman upon that occasion, for professional costs? I am not aware of it.
174. Then you do not know whether the money was paid or not? No.
175. Who could give that information? Mr. Connell.
176. And him only? I think he is the person. Perhaps Mr. Ormiston can do it too.
177. Did you not know that at the time that money was paid to Mr. Redman a rule nisi for prohibition had been obtained from the Supreme Court, and a prohibition afterwards directed to issue? I knew something about it, but I do not know that money was awarded to Mr. Redman at all.
178. But did you not know that Messrs. Smithers and Cohen have complained that they were called upon to pay this amount? Mr. Connell, I think, can explain that satisfactorily.
179. Do you not know that Messrs. Smithers and Cohen had to pay the money? I think the prohibition was established after the money was paid.
180. Have any steps been taken by you on behalf of these gentlemen, or on behalf of either of them, to obtain from Mr. Redman that amount? I told Mr. Cohen that his best plan would be to draw up a plain statement of the case and lay it before the Government, when the money would be refunded.
181. Do you not consider that that should have been done by the chief clerk under your directions? I have spoken to him about it, and he seems to think not. I have a very vague recollection upon the matter.
182. Do you usually consult the chief clerk upon such matters? Mr. Smithers told me that the prohibition had been granted after the money had been made payable to Mr. Redman.
183. In cases of summary conviction do you interfere in the preparation of the various documents, further than signing them? Those who go to gaol—I sign those.
184. By whom are those documents generally prepared? They are usually prepared by Mr. Martin, sometimes by Mr. Hales, sometimes by Mr. Fraser, and sometimes by Mr. Smithers.
185. Are these documents generally very carefully read by yourself, or do you trust entirely to your officers? Formerly some few mistakes were made; but latterly they are drawn up by one clerk, checked by Mr. Smithers, and checked a second time by Mr. Connell, produced before me, and I sign them.

186. You have not answered my question? I never read them after the two checks.
187. Then warrants of commitment and other documents are signed by you without reading them? Nearly all. If I sat there all night I could not read them. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
188. Do you recollect the case of Lavers against Douglass? No. 25 July, 1862.
189. Another case in which a prohibition was granted, and pending the decision a warrant to arrest, signed by yourself, was issued, and the man was actually incarcerated, pending the application for prohibition? I have no recollection of the case.
190. Did not Douglass complain to you himself about the matter? I do not recollect.
191. Have you any doubt about it? I have. I do not recollect it. If I could see the documents I could tell at once.
192. The case was Lavers against Douglass? What was the crime?
193. The case was tried before Mr. Day and Mr. Donovan? I do not recollect it.
194. Do you recollect a case Mulligan versus Mulligan—husband against wife? Yes.
195. Did the husband prefer a charge against her? He preferred against her as his barmaid, for robbing him of £40.
196. Did he prefer any charge against his wife? He stated to me that she was not his wife, and no relation, but his barmaid. I then made an order for a warrant, and when he took it to Mr. Davidson, Mr. Davidson said, "this is your wife?" Mulligan then said, "By the Holy Christ she is not." Mr. Davidson then said, "She is your relative?" To which Mulligan replied, "By the Holy Ghost she is not," or words to that effect. Then the warrant was granted. He then told Mr. Carroll, and I think Mr. Roberts, that he had obtained a warrant under false pretences, that this was his barmaid and not his wife.
197. By Mr. Hoskins: Did he make an affidavit to that effect? Yes.
198. By the Chairman: And obtained a warrant against his wife? Yes, under that false pretence.
199. That warrant was issued by your order? Yes.
200. The wife was apprehended, and afterwards discharged? Yes.
201. How long was this person in custody under warrant? I suppose during the night. She was brought before Mr. Solomon Cohen, who, instead of reprimanding, sympathized with her, and sent out constables to apprehend him on a charge of perjury. Mr. Cohen is in town, and willing to be examined. Any human being might be deceived by that false swearing.
202. Have you not frequently declined to adjudicate upon informations brought before you? No, I do not think so.
203. Have you never in any case declined to adjudicate? In any case in which I am interested, or may know the parties, I believe I do not adjudicate.
204. Have you told us correctly the whole of your duties from the time of your appointment as Police Magistrate? No; my duties are to be at the office at nine o'clock in summer, and perform all the duties there until four in the evening.
205. You visit Cockatoo Island on the Wednesday? Yes, or oftener if possible.
206. By Mr. Cowper: You do not adjourn the Court at four o'clock, simply because it is four o'clock? No, it is often carried on later.
207. By the Chairman: How often since you have been appointed? Many times.
208. Half a dozen? Many more times than that.
209. How often have you occupied the bench after that time? Only about half a dozen times, I think.
210. Have you any other duties? Granting warrants and summonses, hearing people who come in to make declarations, swearing in volunteers, and people appointed to the post office, soldiers; and people are constantly coming for advice, for admission to the Benevolent Asylum and Infirmary, and many other things of that kind.
211. Have you any idea what number of summonses have issued from that office during the past twelve months? From the 1st July, 1859, to the 31st December, 1860, the average was 4,886 cases; and from the 1st January, 1861, to the 30th June, 1862, the average was 4,104 cases. (Vide Appendix D.)
212. Have all these cases been disposed of at the Police Office? I cannot say.
213. About how many have been actually tried? To answer that would require a look at the books.
214. Do cases involving complicated matters of law and fact frequently arise before you? Oh yes.
215. Cases involving the most difficult and complicated questions? Yes. May I mention that it is my invariable custom to go into the room of the clerk who draws out the sheets, to look at every case, and when I find cases that I am not acquainted with I go into my office and read up. The result is, that out of about ten thousand cases I have tried, I do not know of an appeal against any one judgment I have given, or of one mandamus being issued.
216. By Mr. Hoskins: Will you explain what you mean by cases that you are not acquainted with? A lawyer himself is obliged to bring books into Court and read up his cases. Cases of protection, of drunkenness, use of obscene language, and things of that kind I know what to do with; but if there is any complicated cases, which sometimes, though seldom, come before the Court, I get a few books and look into the mode of dealing with such cases.
217. By Mr. Cowper: Do you mean ejection cases? No, I do not think them difficult.
218. What cases, involving questions of law, come before the Court that require reading up? There are cases of that kind.
219. By the Chairman: Very nice points of law arise there at times? Yes.
220. By Mr. Cowper: But such as are usually dealt with by Magistrates throughout the country—nothing else? No.

- Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
25 July, 1862.
221. By the Chairman: During the whole experience you had at Muswellbrook, and other places you have named, did any difficult question arise? Muswellbrook is a small place, and the Court sits only once a week, generally.
222. Is it not a fact that the business at the George-street Police Office is greatly in advance of that at any Police Office in the country? It is a most gigantic establishment.
223. Do not many questions frequently arise there that very rarely or never arise in country districts? I think so, being so much larger. Our average is about thirty-four cases a day.
224. By Mr. Cowper: Does that include drunkards? Every case. Some cases occupy many days.
225. By the Chairman: Have Magistrates at any time complained to you of insolence of the clerks in that establishment? Well, they have said that one or two had been uncivil to them.
226. Have not some, or what steps have been taken thereon by you? I never received an official complaint, but in private conversation I have been told that So-and-so was rude or brusque.
227. Although you have been told by Magistrates that clerks have been offensive or insolent? Yes.
228. And complaints not having been made officially, you did not feel called upon to interfere? No, and very probably they would not like me to interfere.
229. But you did not? It has been said that Mr. Smithers was out of temper, or something of that kind. They would tell me such things as this.
230. By Mr. Cowper: What kind of insolence or discourtesy had been complained of? He sometimes answers them sharply.
231. By the Chairman: Is Mr. Smithers the only clerk against whom complaints have been made? Complaints have been made against Mr. Davidson.
232. Any one else? Not to me officially. I do not know of any, even privately.
233. Do you recollect on the 14th April leaving some papers with Mr. Connell, to be produced in Court? No, I do not recollect; I might have done it.
234. Do you recollect Mr. Ronald speaking to you of the chief clerk having refused to produce those papers? That is a licensing case, and if he did so the chief clerk obeyed my orders. I have devoted two days in the week, Tuesdays and Fridays, for Mr. Stubbs's cases, and this was one of those days, and he called for the papers against the rule.
235. Who called for them? Mr. Ronald.
236. As a Justice of the Peace, in the discharge of his duties? No; because they had no right to be placed before him.
237. And yet the chief clerk refused to produce papers which ought to be before him when discharging his duties? They ought not; it would be breaking the rules of the office.
238. Have you any rules made with regard to these papers? Yes.
239. Will you state them? Yes.
240. Is yours a Court of Record? Yes, but they have been badly kept. I think you could scarcely trace them five or six years. When I went to the office I found that any person, particularly attorneys, could at any time go and look into these documents without permission, and I thought it but justice to the public to stop that. Suppose an important document were attached to any of these records, it might be taken away at any time by some of these persons coming to look at them. I adopted the course pursued at the Water Police Office, precluding any person from examining the documents without an order from me in writing. That is the rule.
241. And that is the only rule you have made with regard to them? I might have made other rules.
242. With reference to the perusal and inspection of documents? They ask me for permission, and I give it them in writing.
243. Are not reporters allowed to peruse the papers without an order? They are allowed to peruse the papers of the day without an order.
244. But yet attorneys and others having business there are required to obtain an order from yourself? That is for documents that have been placed by, not documents of the day. I do not think I ever refused any application.
245. Still there is such a rule in existence? Well, I do not think there is; I do not know it; I do not think it ever occurred to me. I know the reporters come and complete their reports by the documents, because they cannot be in both Courts at once; and the attorney often takes up a document in Court and reads it, and I never interfere.
246. But an attorney requiring to see papers filed, of record, in that office, would be compelled, before seeing them, to obtain an order from yourself? Not only attorneys, but everybody else.
247. How is it provided for in the event of your absence? They must wait till I come back. I am never absent a whole day, and from nine to eleven I am invariably in the office.
248. But during your absence? During those three or four hours the parties must wait.
249. Do you not know that that rule has led to a vast amount of confusion? I do not believe it, or know of it. I know Mr. Cory has complained of it. I am very seldom absent, even on my visits to Cockatoo Island, more than three hours.
250. Have you occasionally other duties to discharge? Latterly.
251. Do you occasionally act as Coroner? I did.
252. When? I acted for about a fortnight.
253. Do you recollect a case tried before Mr. Justice Wise, when your name appeared prominently before the public? That was a Coroner's case. I simply did the Coroner's duty whilst he was sick. I did it to assist him during illness, and not as part of my duties. I occasionally also go to Darlinghurst Gaol.

254. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you consider that part of your duties? No, I go there to assist Captain M'Lerie and Mr. Read. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
255. By the Chairman: Do you recollect a case coming before you on Tuesday last—James Carnes, charged with stealing wearing apparel? There are many charges of that kind. 25 July, 1862.
256. Do you recollect making any order for money to be paid to Mr. Moffat? Yes, perfectly.
257. Was James Carnes in custody? Yes.
258. On how many charges? He might have been on more than one.
259. Do you recollect the application being made for restoration of some money? Yes. The articles were owned by some sailors belonging to one of the steamers, and all were found. The money found on him was not part of the property stolen, and an application was made to the Bench by Mr. Moffat to have this money given to him to defend prisoner.
260. Do you not know, or did you not know when the application was made, that there were other charges against the prisoner? No.
261. Were you not told so by Inspector Ryland, in open Court? No; he said there might be. He said that during that time there were other properties stolen, but never said a word about there being other charges against prisoner.
262. Had you any conversation with Sub-Inspector Read upon this matter? He refused to give up the money, and the Bench agreeing with myself, ordered it to be produced in Court, and I then, on the application of Mr. Moffat that he wanted the money for the defence of prisoner, granted it.
263. Notwithstanding the refusal of Sub-Inspector Read, you ordered its production in Court? Yes, but I was not then aware of the provisions of New Police Act as regards the retention of money by the constables.
264. Did not Mr. Read or Mr. Ryland state that they could not hand over this money—that it would be a breach of duty? Mr. Read previously told me so.
265. And notwithstanding all this, you handed over the money? Yes.
266. How was the money handed over? It was given to Mr. Moffat to defend the prisoner, by Mr. Cohen and myself.
267. Did you handle the money? No, I think not.
268. Did you not take the money, and say, "Here, Mr. Moffat," and hand it to him? I think not.
269. Will you undertake to say you did not? No, I will not.
270. You ordered the money to be given over? Yes.
271. Had you read the Police Regulations then? Not the new ones.
272. How long after they had been in force? I do not think I should have handled the money.
273. Will you undertake to say that Mr. Moffat did not enter the bar by the deposition clerk, and receive the money from your hands? I do not think he did.
274. And that you did not hand over the money to Mr. Moffat? I do not think I did.
275. There was a strong remonstrance on the part of the police? Mr. Read said he could not obey the written order I gave; we afterwards consulted, and I thought it only just to the prisoner.
276. Before going into Court on that occasion, had you any conversation with Inspector Read about the case? Yes.
277. And Inspector Read then told you it would be a breach of duty? I think not—I think not; he said he was ordered not to give up the money.
278. Did he not say it would be a breach of the Police Regulations to hand over the money? No, or I should have referred to the Police Regulations.
279. I believe you said, in an early part of this examination, that you considered the clerical assistance at present not too much? Yes.
280. And that it is impossible to dispense with the services of any of them? I think so; our duties are not exactly the Court duties; we have all the lists of applicants for publicans' general licenses, electoral lists, jury lists, registration of dogs, auctioneers, hawkers, and pedlars, to prepare in the office. I think the dog registration necessitates about 25,000 entries.
281. By Mr. Cowper: Have you any to do for pawnbrokers? Yes, there are also pawnbrokers' licenses.
282. By Mr. Hoskins: You were never before a Police Magistrate in any part of the Colony? No.
283. Were you paid at Muswellbrook? No, unpaid.
284. How often were you in the habit of sitting? I resided about five miles off, and used to attend about once a week or fortnight.
285. Did you ever have any legal training or devote yourself to legal studies? None, but as a Magistrate, and reading up in cases.
286. Previous to your receiving this appointment, I understand, you had studied law? By myself.
287. Had you any object in view? I applied for this situation, but did not get it for months afterwards.
288. You admit that there are much more intricate cases, that require a knowledge of law, than ejection and Corporation cases? Yes; those are easy. With regard to ejections it is necessary to know something.
289. Do you ever consult the Crown Solicitor? Yes, I put off a case for that purpose, and I also consult the Attorney General.
290. Before giving a decision? Yes.
291. Some cases involve considerable sums of money? Cases of robbery, such as that of Oliver, or the case of the Bible Society, which involved some £700.

Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
25 July, 1862.

292. Were you presiding on the bench when the case of Lassiter, with regard to some premises in George-street, came before the Court? Yes, and I committed; it was clearly proved that the parties not only knocked the place down, but had gone inside the house.

293. You considered that a difficult case? Yes, a nasty case.

294. You frequently have cases as difficult as that? Yes.

295. Did you receive any instructions from the Government as to what your duties were? No positive instructions, but I have all these things to do that I have mentioned. The office is full, and I sit all day; I sit down in the office at nine o'clock in the summer, and at half-past nine in the winter, and remain there till four in the afternoon.

296. I want to know what other duties, besides those mentioned, you have to perform? I have bench duties, and see that the books are all kept up, and that the people of the office attend regularly; I have to act on the Classification Board once a month.

297. What is the Classification Board? It is a Board comprising Capt. McLerie, Mr. North, and myself, to report upon the petitions and memorials of all prisoners from Berrima, Cockatoo, Darlinghurst, and Parramatta.

298. How often does it meet? Once a month, and occupies one or two hours.

299. What other duties have you? None.

300. Are you Visiting Magistrate to the Gaol or Cockatoo? At Cockatoo.

301. How frequently do you visit there? My orders are for once a week, but when I cannot go I ask Mr. North, and sometimes an unpaid Magistrate, to go for me. I think that I have been absent perhaps eight times during the two years.

302. Do you mean to say that you sit on the bench every day, except when you visit Cockatoo? Yes. I visited Cockatoo to-day and knocked off about twelve cases, and sometimes on my return I have to sit again. Magistrates sometimes adjourn the Court for an hour, and then do not come back.

303. Ought you not to sit all day? My office business is of importance.

304. Do you not think that when the Government appointed a paid Magistrate for Sydney, he should adjudicate upon cases in Court? I always do if I am wanted, and have sat upon about 8,000 or 10,000 cases.

305. Are there not as many decided by unpaid Magistrates as by yourself? Very probably. There are often several Courts open.

306. Are there not many hours in each day when you do not preside? Not in each day. Many days I preside for a short time; there are very few days when I do not sit at all on the bench.

307. For a few hours? Sometimes all day, and sometimes a few hours. There was a large meeting of Magistrates some time ago, who seemed to think the office duties of more importance than anything else.

308. Do you think so? Except in particular cases, I do not think so. If a particular case is going on in Court it is my duty to be there, or otherwise my duties in the office are more important.

309. Have you heard any complaints about your not being in attendance doing the duties of Police Magistrate on the bench? No. I do not think that I have been off the bench above two or three times when I was wanted.

310. You know that there are stipendiary Magistrates in London? Yes.

311. Are you not aware that they are always in attendance upon the Bench until the whole of the cases are disposed of? I never was in a London Police Court in my life.

312. They sit the whole of the day? Yes; but there must be the assistance of another person in the private room to do the office duties. If I leave the bench to get a glass of water, I almost always find two or three persons waiting at the office door for summonses or something of that kind. Sometimes they go upon the bench and ask an unpaid Magistrate, who generally tells them to go to the Police Magistrate. The public business is often interrupted by parties coming to the bench to ask questions.

313. Did you receive any instructions from the Government when you were appointed, except to attend regularly in Court and dispense justice? I did not.

314. Do you consider that the Magistrates who generally attend the Central Police Office in Sydney, are men of sufficient intelligence and practical acquaintance with the law to perform properly the duties of Magistrates? I think many of them are. Many of them are old Magistrates, who have sat in a very large number of cases. Some of the new Magistrates are not; many will not take the Chair. I have often done this: I have said to them, with reference to such and such a case,—if guilty, such punishment; and in that way have gone through the whole sheet. If I had not made that explanation they would not have sat. I say,—for this offence, if proved, the fine is 5s., for that 10s., for some other 40s., referring to each separate case, so that a young Magistrate is thus up to every case he has to deal with.

315. By the Chairman: Can you tell what the penalty should be for these offences without reference to the evidence? No; I tell them what the law is if the parties are guilty.

316. By Mr. Hoskins: You consider that, in adjudicating cases, the evidence will affect that materially? Yes.

317. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that there have been a great number of appeals in cases where other Magistrates have presided? A good number of mandamuses.

318. By the Chairman: A large number? They never told me, and I cannot say for a certainty.

319. By Mr. Hoskins: There are a number of the Magistrates who do not possess the qualifications they ought to have for the discharge of their duties? A number of them are very good.

320. How many Magistrates are there on the roster? There is an average of perhaps twenty during the six days of each week, some come every week, others only once or twice in a month; but they do not all attend regularly. This morning not one of the Magistrates summoned attended there, and I had to send for three other Magistrates before I could begin. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
25 July, 1862.
321. Do you, at the end of every week, allot the days of attendance for the ensuing week? I have a roster book with the days of the week, and the names of the Magistrates who are summoned to attend. They are written to, and requested, in the name of the Mayor, to attend. On the other side there is a list of those who attend without being asked. I keep that myself.
322. Does it frequently occur that cases are postponed on account of the laxity in the attendance of Magistrates? Sometimes.
323. Frequently? When cases are remanded, perhaps one will come who has not acted upon them, whilst those who have are not in attendance, and delay occurs in that way sometimes. Yesterday, and generally, I knock off all the cases.
324. How many Magistrates attend at the Police Office generally? We sent in a return the other day. By guess I should say about forty or forty-five.
325. In giving your opinion, do you think that they are generally very inattentive to their duties? Oh no; they are attentive in the morning, but I only wish they would come back sooner. During nine months Mr. Peden has attended 189 times, because he lives opposite, and I had frequently to send to him and come and finish the day's work.
326. Are there not many who never obey the summons to attend? Some come but once a year, others but once a month, and we scratch their names off if they do not attend.
327. If another Police Magistrate were appointed would not the business be expedited? Not in that Court.
328. Is it not in arrears? No. I think it would be a great convenience to the public if the Government would establish a Police Magistrate and Clerk of Petty Sessions somewhere about the Glebe, taking one of my clerks with a small salary, and give him all the work coming from Homebush, Burwood, the Glebe, and those places around. I think there would be more money got in for summonses, and those kind of things, than would be required to pay the expenses. People would rather submit to many offences than incur the expense and inconvenience of coming for a long distance to the Central Police Court.
329. You consider the arrangements are not perfect; what are the imperfections? The building is very bad, though it is getting better now. I cannot recommend anything for improvement. I do not consider it perfect, nor can I recommend the appointment of another Police Magistrate. I think the improvement would be the establishment of another Court.
330. In the suburbs—to relieve the George-street Police Office? Yes.
331. Do you consider there is a sufficient number of clerks? Yes, when the vacancy occasioned by the death of Mr. Martin is filled up.
332. You have some volunteers? Yes, to help the others in copying.
333. Of what ages are these young men—do they receive any salary? Both, I think, are about twenty or twenty-two.
334. Appointed by the Government? No, they come there by my permission.
335. Are they not considered as responsible for anything they do? They are not recognized; the heads of their departments are responsible. One is the son of Dr. Day, of Windsor, the other a son of Mr. Tunks, the cricketer, and we had also a son of Major Chisholm.
336. Do you consider you have the power to cancel a warrant issued without having the prisoner brought before you? Perhaps I have not, but I think in some cases it ought to be done, for instance in maintenance cases where the husband may be living in the country, and may send remittances after the warrant is issued, when the wife may not desire to proceed.
337. Are you in the habit of doing it? In maintenance cases.
338. In any other cases? None except the cases alluded to, when a summons would do as well as a warrant.
339. Previous to granting any warrant, do you not ascertain whether a summons will have the desired object? A summons will hardly do when a party is a long way off; a digger would laugh at a summons.
340. Do you never issue a warrant without taking affidavits? We always take affidavits.
341. Under any circumstances? Unless they grant bail. In very few instances.
342. You consider you have the power also to order witnesses out of Court? Yes, I request the parties to leave the Court.
343. And on their refusal to leave? I consider that contempt of Court.
344. And may punish them? Yes.
345. Did you preside in the case of Cullen v. Keith Collins? No, I was not present at the altercation when Colonel Hamilton refused to leave.
346. Did he refuse to your knowledge? He told me himself that he did not consider himself a witness at all, and he said to the Magistrates, "but if you wish it I will leave the Court."
347. Are you in the habit of allowing persons to give evidence from the bench? Well, some people do. I invariably go into the box.
348. Have you allowed persons to give evidence from the bench? Medical men.
349. Why is the exception made? He generally steps down when a question is asked. I have never heard any person make objection to it.
350. Does this exception frequently take place when persons occupying a higher social position than ordinary are called as witnesses? I do not suppose it takes place more than once or twice in a month.
351. By Mr. Cowper: Not with regard to the Magistrates? No.

- Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
25 July, 1862.
352. By the Chairman: With regard to military officers? They go into the box. They were in the box. When the Roman Catholic Bishop of Adelaide appeared as a witness he give his evidence from the bench.
353. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you admit that you recognize the principle? In some cases.
354. By Mr. Cowper: In cases of eminent persons.
355. By Mr. Hoskins: You could compel them, if it were desirable, to go into the witness box? Yes, I have the power.
356. By Mr. Caldwell: Have any complaints been made to you respecting the accommodation provided for Magistrates? There is no accommodation except my small room. I do not think there is sufficient accommodation; but now they are building a room for the Magistrates.
357. Have any complaints been made to you in consequence of the Magistrates not having Acts of Parliament to refer to? Yes.
358. Do you think a sufficient accommodation is provided for the public who are waiting on business? Particularly bad accommodation. They are obliged to remain in the passage. There is no consulting room for professional gentlemen, nor any room for people to sit in when waiting for business with Magistrates.
359. Do you think the situation of the Police Office is suitable? I think it very bad, being close to the market, and filth being thrown close around us. The central position is a good one.
360. By Mr. W. Forster: How long have you been a Magistrate? Two or three and twenty years.
361. What is your opinion as to the necessity for a Police Magistrate in Sydney—can the business be conducted properly without one? I will tell you the fact. When I received the office I found a great number of the books had not been kept up for upwards of a year; and the moneys were not entered for three months. I found the whole office in a state of great disorder.
362. But were these disorders capable of being remedied if the other Magistrates attended to their duties? No, the books require some one to be constantly seeing that they are kept up.
363. You consider that, from the large amount of business in Sydney, and the central situation, it is not possible to conduct the public business properly without a Police Magistrate? I think it scarcely possible.
364. I suppose you are aware that people now make complaints of the delays and postponements of business? Perfectly.
365. Do you think that any of these take place to suit the personal convenience of Magistrates? Sometimes; and sometimes to suit the convenience of legal gentlemen.
366. Which is the commonest? If a legal gentleman has a case in both Courts, I have agreed that one of them should be postponed when it can be done.
367. That is when there is an agreement between the parties, and when there is no objection to it? Yes. I think those Magistrates who do attend perform their duty properly.
368. With regard to these postponements to suit the convenience of the parties, are not witnesses considered? No.
369. Their convenience is never considered? Seldom.
370. It never enters the heads of Magistrates to consider whether witnesses are kept waiting or not? It is sometimes mentioned in Court.
371. Then the convenience of legal gentlemen is attended to more than that of other parties? Sometimes; and sometimes their clients will not go on without the presence of their legal advisers, whom they have to seek perhaps in another Court, and importune them to come and look after their cases.
372. Do you think the hearing of cases is in any way lengthened by the conduct of the legal gentlemen who attend in them? Yes; very much the same questions are frequently asked over and over again.
373. Are there any means of preventing it? When they are spoken to about it they answer that they are doing their best for their client, and they continue to put the same questions to a witness several times.
374. And you cannot interfere? Not if they behave correctly.
375. You have some power to keep them to their subject? I sometimes say that does not bear upon the question at issue, but they say, stop till you see how I am going to make it apply.
376. Do you think that is profitable to them? If they are paid by the day.
377. By Mr. Hoskins: Have they any legal status or right to plead? I believe so; I do not think we have a right to prevent them.
378. Could you prevent a civilian from pleading? I think so.
379. On what authority? It is the custom in all Courts of law to allow none but legal gentlemen to plead.
380. You have no objection to state, with regard to the unpaid Magistrates in giving you assistance? No, except with regard to those who do not come.
381. You get sufficient assistance? I am quite satisfied with it.
382. Do you think any difference prevails in the practice, with regard to the regularity of proceedings, when you are on the bench and when you are not; or because the other Magistrates allow greater latitude to lawyers than is right;—are you aware of any difference in the practice when you are on the bench from that when others are presiding? Some Magistrates are far more quiet than others, and do not enter into the arguments; others will talk and argue, and when unnecessary questions are put that would be stopped.
383. You make it a point of presiding in cases of importance? I always take the Crime Court or York-street Court, and remain there if other Magistrates will take the other work.

384. Are you not in the habit of asking the advice of other Magistrates? I consult with them, and with the clerks sometimes.

Captain
D. C. F. Scott.

385. With regard to the practice of issuing warrants, are there any Magistrates who take upon themselves to cancel warrants? I am not aware.

25 July, 1862.

386. Are you aware that it is done by other Police Magistrates? No.

387. Was it done up the country where you acted as a Magistrate? I have no recollection.

388. Then it is not a general rule that warrants are invariably enforced? In the cases I have alluded to we should be putting the parties to great inconvenience and incurring much expense; if the husband is brought from a distance on warrant he may claim his satisfaction.

389. In cancelling warrants have you cancelled any that were granted by other Magistrates? I do not recollect; I have repeatedly refused to interfere with matters adjudicated on by others.

390. Any warrants you cancelled were warrants granted by yourself? Very few have been cancelled except this.

391. Other Magistrates have the power? Oh yes.

392. You do not interfere if they grant warrants? No, as far as I know, I have declined.

393. Are not functions performed by Magistrates in some instances which you think might safely be confided to the clerks; for instance, the granting of summonses? He can sign certain exhibits. I think in wages cases there are.

394. Do you think it would be a good plan to give a clerk the power of issuing summonses? If you make him a Magistrate. One trial was made before my time, but I believe failed, because the Clerk of Petty Sessions would sit as a Magistrate instead of doing office business only.

395. By Mr. Cowper: There was at that time no Police Magistrate? No.

396. By the Chairman: Was he not compelled to sit in consequence of the non-attendance of other Magistrates? Very probably.

397. By Mr. W. Forster: You think it would be advisable to give a clerk the power of a Magistrate, in order that he might attend to office duties exclusively? I think it would be a benefit if he were made a Magistrate. He could prevent any interruption of the public business of the Court, by persons applying to me whilst I am on the bench, and could attend to the business of those parties who are often kept waiting for hours. He would then also have the power, whilst I was absent at Cockatoo or elsewhere, of giving orders for advocates to look at depositions.

398. Are you aware of any public inconvenience arising in any case from the late alterations in the police force? No; I think it has rather tended to decrease crime.

399. You think it has been beneficial? Yes, and I think the longer it is in existence the more beneficial it will prove.

400. There is no difficulty in carrying out orders given to constables? None.

401. And no disposition on the part of the police to be insubordinate or resist orders? They are always very courteous to me, as I am to them.

402. Are there any complaints by other Magistrates on that subject? No; the senior sergeants and men are generally very respectful.

403. By Mr. Cowper: Practically the system did not affect the Sydney police? The improvement I mean is, that the present police force detect crime sooner.

404. There is more organization; but the principle was carried out in Sydney before the new Police Act came into operation; it was then only extended to the country? Yes.

405. With reference to your opinion as to the qualifications for a Police Magistrate—will you state what official appointments you have held during your life? I was in the Army, and holding very good staff appointments.

406. How long? Eighteen years.

407. What rank? Captain.

408. Was it in the Imperial or in the Company's service? In the Company's. I was a cadet in the Royal Engineers, with Sir William Denison and Sir W. Williams of Kars. I went up to Bombay, and was there for sixteen years, holding a situation as brigade major, adjutant of a regiment, and also as engineer for the Company. Then I came out here.

409. What was your occupation here—that of a settler? Yes; I bought land, occupied it as a country gentleman, and acted as a Magistrate in country districts.

410. What was your first appointment? Disputed Boundary Commissioner.

411. How long? About three months, when I settled all claims.

412. You were afterwards appointed to what? A short time afterwards I was made Provincial Inspector of Police.

413. Under the system at that time? Yes, just as the gold discovery broke out.

414. In 1851? Or 1852.

415. How long did you hold that appointment? About two years. I was in charge of the whole of the mounted and foot police between Bathurst, Shoalhaven, to within a few miles of Newcastle; and had frequently to ride 600 miles a month.

416. What was your next appointment? That of engineer upon the Bathurst Road.

417. How long did you hold that? About two years.

418. What was your next official appointment? I became Private Secretary to Mr. Donaldson.

419. How long did you hold that office? Until you assumed office. After that I was Private Secretary to Sir Henry Watson Parker for a short time, who offered me the appointment of Police Magistrate at Parramatta, and I declined it.

420. Have you, since you have held the office of Police Magistrate in Sydney, felt yourself embarrassed in the performance of your duties, from the alleged ignorance of law on your part? Very seldom. I have stated it as a fact, that out of the many cases I have tried I have never heard of any dissatisfaction, or of an appeal or mandamus, to my recollection.

Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
25 July, 1862.

421. You never had an appeal or mandamus? I do not recollect any.
422. Do you suppose that the duties in Sydney are more difficult for a layman to perform than those at Bathurst, Goulburn, or Maitland;—must not the Magistrates there have quite as many questions involving points of law—or, although they may not be so numerous, have they not the same classes of cases? Yes; I think a layman, who has the qualifications, can fill the place as well as a legally bred man.
423. If a lawyer is necessary in Sydney, he would be just as necessary in Bathurst, Maitland, and Goulburn? Yes.
424. By Mr. Hoskins: But more necessary in Sydney? Yes. I think that the Police Magistrate should be a married man, of a certain age, of good moral character, on account of the numerous temptations he every day meets with in his office, a man of known integrity, of education, courteous, possessing a good temper, and having many other necessary personal qualities. He should be able to write all the correspondence of his office; he should be a gentleman by education and birth, on whose word people may rely as much as if it were upon oath. I think these qualifications are as necessary as a full knowledge of the law.
425. With regard to the duties and the time you devote to them—do you not understand that you are bound to be in the office during the usual official hours? Yes, generally; and I take my luncheon in my hand.
426. And you are always either on the bench or in your office? Yes.
427. Do you find that the supervision of the office duties occupies much time? No; they are particularly under the care of Mr. Connell.
428. You exercise a general supervision? Oh yes.
429. Have you any periodical examination of accounts, to see that the fees are correctly entered and the books properly made up? Every evening the page for such and such a day comes under my notice, and I see that Mr. Connell's signature is there to show that he has inspected it.
430. Who regulates the fees, or sees that the proper fee is charged in every case according to the scale? There is a printed form in every room hung up, and from that the fees are charged.
431. And returns made for the Auditor General's checking? Yes.
432. How do you check them? By looking them over.
433. You certify to their correctness—is it monthly or quarterly? No. They are sent to the different departments—to the four different departments—by Mr. Connell, and then receive his signature.
434. Then the Auditor General must have some returns to check your accounts? No other return.
435. You must have some statement of accounts? There is a statement sent to him of so many fees received.
436. I am speaking of returns? There is a return sent when the money is sent.
437. There is always a declaration on oath attached to the warrant by the clerk? Yes.
438. Do you not check that before it is sent away from the office? I take Mr. Connell's sworn declaration to the truth of it.
439. By the Chairman: Do you look into the books? Occasionally.
440. Do you examine the entries and compare them with the documents? No.
441. By Mr. Cowper: Then if the clerk acted dishonestly you would not find him out? He is checked by others, and he makes a declaration of his statement being perfectly true.
442. Have you, since your appointment, introduced many changes, in order to establish a more regular system than existed previously? There was great irregularity there. I have introduced a book for the registering of dogs, and ten new books for publicans', auctioneers', and other licenses, &c., so that the whole thing is simplified.
443. You stated that when you came into the office the accounts were in arrear? Yes.
444. Are they now correct and regular? Quite so.
445. The time book is one that shows when the different persons employed there come and go from the office? Yes.
446. Every clerk has to enter his name in it? Yes. Mr. Smithers is sometimes irregular.
447. By the Chairman: Mr. Smithers seems to be the black sheep there? At times he is irregular.
448. By Mr. Cowper: With regard to queries by the Auditor General—second accounts come through you from Mr. Connell? Yes.
449. And if he committed mistakes it would be known in the office, if the query led to that conclusion? Yes.
450. How do you know that the money is periodically paid to the bank;—is a report made, or do you require to see the book? I see it entered in the book as paid.
451. Do you never require the bank book to be exhibited? I have seen it, but did not examine it.
452. Is there any particular time when it is submitted periodically? No; I look at it often.
453. Which book? The fee book.
454. You never examine the bank pass book? No.
455. With regard to the attendance of the unpaid Magistrates, does the Court often fail for want of such attendance? Only perhaps in the evening, or if it is a rainy day.
456. You have a roster? Yes.
457. Do they attend upon that regularly? About two-thirds of them.
458. Can you form an estimate of the acting Magistrates in your Court? I should say about forty. Some are very particular in their attendance, and others are just the contrary.
459. With reference to your suggestion of establishing a Court in the suburbs, have you fully fully considered the subject of appointing the Clerk of Petty Sessions as a Police Magistrate, and do you approve of that principle? I do not think he could take the office unless you appointed two clerks. I thought more of the expense than of the principle.

Captain
D. C. F. Scott.

460. Has any representation been made to you in favour of the establishment of a police office in the suburbs? I have heard suggestions upon that matter. 25 July, 1862.

461. You have heard that there is to be a new division between the Water Police and Central Police Office districts;—do you not think that would be a better means of remedying the evils you speak of? If they take some of the office business from me it will be better, but if they simply take the assault and summons cases I do not think it will remove 200 cases in the year.

462. Is it not likely to relieve you of more business than if a police office were established at the Glebe? No. There are many places all round that district—Burwood, Ashfield, Newtown, Canterbury—the cases from which would all go to that Court.

463. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you make the suggestion with a view to relieve people from the necessity of travelling a distance, or in order to reduce the amount of business at your Court? Both. I should like a Court there because it would relieve these parties, and also the people of Sydney who had to wait so long for a hearing of their cases.

464. By Mr. Cowper: You have no arrears of business? None.

465. Then what necessity is there for an additional office? In order that people might not be kept waiting.

466. You say that is rather occasioned by attorneys? Sometimes I have opened three Courts, and once four Courts, in order to expedite the public business.

467. If the business of the Water Police Office is extended to relieve you of part of your business, some of the clerks can be removed. Yes, if they supply their district with publicans' licenses and dog registrations, otherwise it will not relieve me of 200 cases.

468. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you think that the persons who have business in your Court generally are satisfied with having a Police Magistrate to dispense justice without an unpaid Magistrate? I have often been asked to sit in cases, but I make it a point not go out of the ordinary routine of my duties.

469. By Mr. Cowper: Have you not observed that some of the unpaid Magistrates attend in particular cases, but do not attend to their general duties on the bench? I have seen Magistrates take part in cases in which they had an interest.

470. It does not go to a great extent? No.

471. By the Chairman: You know it does exist? I think I have traced it. I do not think it is a general practice.

472. But you have seen it in particular cases? I think I have, but I am not acquainted with all the ramifications and all the relationships.

473. By Mr. Cowper: Do you consider that the clerks now in the office are efficient in their various capacities? I am satisfied with them.

474. Mr. Martin has died since the appointment of this Committee? Yes.

475. You consider that the clerks are efficient, and the office well conducted? Yes. Mr. Connell is a first-rate person in his office, Mr. Ormiston is a first-rate accountant; then comes Mr. Armstrong with all the summonses—he attends well to his duty.

476. Who are the three deposition clerks? Mr. Smithers, Mr. Hales, and Mr. Felton—he writes a good hand, and has an aptitude for taking depositions.

477. You are not aware of any grounds for a charge of general inefficiency against your establishment? I have all the books to produce.

478. You make a suggestion, and spoke of the facilities that might be given for the transaction of office business if the chief clerk were appointed a Magistrate? Yes.

479. Would not that interfere with the general duties of his office? Not if he promised not to sit upon the bench.

480. You are aware that Mr. Warburton made the same promise and did not fulfil it? Mr. Connell has conducted himself remarkably well. It would prevent persons interrupting us on the bench.

481. What time do you devote to those office duties? From nine to ten o'clock in the morning, and whenever I am not required on the bench.

482. Is not that sufficient to keep up that branch of your duties? It causes delay.

483. Serious delay? I have seen people waiting for an hour or more. Ladies do not like to come to the bench when there is no person in my room.

484. By Mr. Hoskins: If the suggestion as to the establishment of a police office in the suburbs were carried out, you would be able to attend more frequently, and for longer periods on the bench than at present? Oh yes; there would be fewer demands upon my time in the private room.

485. Do you not think that is much to be desired? I think it would be a great benefit to all classes.

486. By Mr. Caldwell: In reference to summonses—have private Magistrates ever granted summonses without going through your office? Sometimes, but not often. They frequently sit in the room and do some work.

487. Have they ever granted summonses without the ordinary fees being paid into Court? Not often; because my distinct order is that payment should be made at once, unless I put "credit" on the document.

488. Have Magistrates obtained forms in order to grant summonses without paying the fees? It might have occurred. As far as the office is concerned we decidedly object to it; I do not allow a Magistrate to give a summons on credit.

489. By the Chairman: You stated that you did not recollect a case where a mandamus or prohibition was issued against yourself? I do not recollect any.

- Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
- 25 July, 1862.
490. You usually sit for the disposal of the charge sheet? Yes.
491. Where prisoners are committed to take their trial? Yes.
492. It is not usual to have prohibitions in such instances? I have been threatened five or six times by Mr. Moffat and others that application would be made.
493. You say that you have introduced several changes into the management of the office, and amongst others the time book? Yes.
494. It does not appear to be signed by the chief clerk? I do not think the chief clerk of any department in the Colony signs a book. In some offices the heads of rooms do not sign.
495. You sign it, but not the chief clerk? I signed it for a short time, as an example to others to do it.
496. The first name on the book is H. H. Roscoe, introduced by you? Yes.
497. Do you know where he is? At Darlington.
498. He was one of the changes you made? Yes.
499. Do you recollect any fault being found with his appointment when it was made? I heard the charge made that he was not native born.
500. No fault stated by clerks or others in the establishment against him? I heard that he was addicted to drink, and that caused his dismissal.
501. How long was he in the office before that was discovered? Some months. I had no idea of it myself.
502. You have stated that the attorneys take up much of the time of the Court;—can you say how many attend there constantly? There is Mr. Moffat, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Carroll, yourself.
503. I say constantly? You practice twice a week—that is pretty constant—in Stubbs's cases.
504. But once a week for the Corporation? There are other attorneys that come now and then; there is Mr. Cory.
505. Who are the attorneys you have difficulty in keeping in order, and who waste the time of the Court? Every one. I mean that if the same assault case could be tried in two Courts—the one before unpaid Magistrates without the appearance of legal gentlemen, and the other before four Magistrates with attorneys to plead—the former would be settled in an hour, whilst the latter would occupy two or three hours.
506. And you never attempt to check these gentlemen? Oh! I have often done it.
507. You stated that you did not believe that Magistrates attended there to take particular cases? I believe some do, although I do not know their family relationship.
508. Have you not seen in some cases of particular interest a large number of Magistrates attending, who seldom or never attend to their duties, except to take such cases? I think I have.
509. Have you any doubt about it? I have no doubt it has been done once or twice; I cannot mention it as a matter of fact. I have heard it said that a certain party came to the Court, and that it was likely for the purpose of taking this or that particular case.
510. You believe the whole of the clerks in the office are highly efficient? Not the younger ones; they are learning. The others are.
511. And you have no fault to find with the mode of conducting business? No.
512. How long has it been in this perfect state? We had to find fault with a clerk a fortnight or three weeks ago, but with that exception we have been getting on very well lately, except with regard to Mr. Davidson. One gentleman was reported to me as being drunk, and I packed him off.
513. This gentleman does not now belong to your office? No; I requested him to resign, and he did so. I am perfectly satisfied with the parties who now fill the vacancy.
514. With the exception of the complaint you have spoken of, have you heard any other? Not that I am aware of.
515. From the head of the establishment? Against one of the clerks, that he is not zealous, and does not assist in instructing the young clerks, or give sufficient time to the duties of his office. This was reported, but he is now very attentive to his duties.
516. I believe you have had occasion to check some solicitors for misconduct? Yes.
517. And declined to hear them? One.
518. Did you refuse to hear him for a stated time? Three months.
519. How long is that since? I think his time expired some time last year.
520. And now he enjoys an extensive practice in your Court? Yes. He lost his temper.
521. And you say that you have found the police, since the passing of the new Bill, to be attentive and courteous? I have no complaint to make about them.
522. Have complaints been made by clerks, that they could not get the police to do anything for them since the passing of the new Bill? I do not think so, because since then we have had a messenger, and do not employ the police at all.
523. Has it been reported by the chief clerk, that it was impossible to get one of the police to do anything for them? I cannot say.
524. If he stated it to others, it was untrue? I cannot say.
525. By Mr. Couper: What could he call upon the police to do? I do not know. What I ask the police to do is as a favour.
526. By the Chairman: You have a messenger connected with your establishment, you say? Yes.
527. And the only fault you have to find with the situation of the Police Office is that there is a stench there from the markets and the dray stand in York-street? It is not a suitable building.
528. Have you made any complaints about the filth of the markets? I sent out one day to say, that if a heap of dirt that was there was not removed I would bring the party up for a nuisance.
- 529.

529. Who made the complaint? I sent out one of the clerks.
530. That was in regard to the dray stand? If we open the windows in summer the smell all round is very bad. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
531. By Mr. Caldwell: You also suffer inconvenience from the noise? Oh! very much. 25 July, 1862.
532. By the Chairman: With the exception of the knowledge you have stated you possessed as a qualification for your office, you have no knowledge of accounts? I have been accused of saying in Court that I was no accountant.
533. You never meant that? The statement I made was this:—A serious case was being tried against the Secretary of the Bible Society, for a robbery of £700. Mr. Ronald and myself had gone into the case to some extent, when Mr. Ronald said he must go away. Addressing Mr. Roberts, I then said, “Mr. Ronald is obliged to go away, and as this evidence hinges upon the accountant’s books, I should like to have Mr. Ronald’s assistance.”
534. You are not an accountant? I took high honors in mathematics at Woolwich.
535. By Mr. Caldwell: Did you say you were not an accountant? I did not, I believe. I said Mr. Ronald was an accountant, and as I should like his assistance, I asked for a postponement.

TUESDAY,

TUESDAY, 29 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,
MR. CALDWELL,
MR. W. FORSTER,MR. HOSKINS,
MR. LUCAS,
MR. WILSON.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain D. C. F. Scott, Police Magistrate, called in and further examined:—

536. By the Chairman: I believe you are desirous of offering some explanation with respect to some of the evidence you gave the other day? I have a few documents here. Captain
D. C. F. Scott.
29 July, 1862.
537. I wish you to understand that this is not by way of examination on the part of the Committee, but merely by way of explanation at your own request, because the Committee may desire to have you further examined, and no doubt will further examine you with regard to these matters; you will please confine yourself merely to explanation? These charges, or whatever they are—these accusations, have lasted over two years, and of course my memory cannot carry me to every point during two years.
538. By Mr. Lucas: What charges? About the management, and what I have done in this case and in that—why I issued a warrant, or why I cancelled a warrant—why I did this, and why I did that—why I issued a distress warrant when a prohibition was applied for—and all that kind of thing—these are what I mean. I will just read you this, if you please. This is from Captain North; these were some of the questions put to me, and I have got Captain North's answers to them. "Do you permit civilians to plead in your Court when they are neither complainants nor defendants?" Captain North says, "Never." (Objection being taken that the Committee could examine Captain North for themselves, the reading of the document alluded to by witness was not proceeded with.) Would you wish me to explain Mr. Rogers's case—here is the information on which I issued the summons. Here is a case where a warrant of distress was issued.
539. By Mr. Cowper: What is your object in bringing these documents? Just to show that I have not been in fault in any one case in which I have been accused. This is the case where it was said a warrant of distress was issued when no order was made by the Magistrates. There is the Magistrate's name, and there is no order for a prohibition at all.
540. By the Chairman: What case was it? The case of Taylor against Cardwell.
541. Was that the case in which the professional costs were paid to Mr. Redman? The same. There is no record here of any application for a prohibition, and of course in the office we cannot do anything except on the record of the Magistrates.
542. By Mr. Cowper: You mean to produce that to show you are not culpable? Exactly; nor the clerks in the office. I was asked whether I gave certain money to Mr. Moffat; the constable says he gave it, not me. In the morning before I came here, I told Mr. Read that if I had committed any fault in the matter I was answerable for the money, and he went then and told Captain M'Lerie that I was answerable. There is another point I wish to explain, that when Mr. Roscoe committed the forgery he had long left our office.
543. I believe he was recommended to the Government by Sir William Macarthur? He brought out letters to Sir William Macarthur, Mr. Mitchell, and several other gentlemen; he was a grandson of the great historian, Roscoe, and behaved very well until he took to drink. This is a case I have been much abused about, in a leading article in the Herald, and in other ways, Penfold against Harrison. These are the papers.
544. By the Chairman: Are these the only documents you desire to produce before the Committee? No, others will be produced by other parties; these are merely in explanation of what took place on Friday; they show that our department was not in the wrong.

Henry Connell, junr., Esq., called in and examined:—

545. By the Chairman: You are Clerk of Petty Sessions for Sydney? I am. H. Connell, junr., Esq.
29 July, 1862.
546. Do you recollect the date of your appointment? 13th August, 1860.
547. By Mr. Cowper: Previously to being appointed to that office, what other position in the Government service had you filled? I was a clerk in the Colonial Secretary's Office, from the 21st August, 1844—nearly seventeen years.
548. Just state to the Committee what was the position of the office when you took charge of it;—were the accounts made up, or the records generally in a state of regularity? I found everything in the worst state of irregularity; I found the accounts had not been settled, and they were not settled for eighteen months afterwards. Subsequently to my appointment there was a great deal of correspondence with the Government on the subject, and they were finally posted about eighteen months afterwards. I found none of the books were indexed; the letter books were kept in the most irregular state; the fines and fees very often, instead of being taken in the day book, were taken on sheets of paper; and I dare say it would be found very difficult to find any record at all of anything previous to my appointment.
549. Any record of what? Of depositions or letters; in fact, of anything connected with the department; it was a mere piece of luck if you could find any of the papers at all.
550. Was there no place where these records were put up for safety—systematically, I mean? None. The dome is the record place at present, and it contains police clothing, old hats, coats, and boots, and all descriptions of old records are deposited there.
551. What was the system when you entered the office;—were not the different clerks appropriated to different classes of duties? Yes.

- H. Connell, junr., Esq.
29 July, 1862.
552. What clerk was it to whom was intrusted the duty of looking after these records? I am not aware who the clerk was.
553. Did you not inquire? Well, the office was so badly conducted altogether that no clerk was allowed to do any particular duty; there were sometimes two, sometimes three, sometimes four Courts sitting, and consequently the clerks were taken away from their duties.
554. You consider the office now in a comparative state of order? In a perfect state.
555. Will you state to the Committee what you have done to put it on the footing on which it is now? In the first place, I have had a day book of the moneys received kept regularly, and they are banked regularly every day; in the second place, I have initiated a regular system of licensing books—for the licensing business is very extensive—I might say gigantic.
556. Do you mean publicans' licenses? All licenses: publicans' licenses, removals, transfers, temporary extension licenses, auctioneers' licenses, pawnbrokers' licenses, spirit merchants' licenses, and so on. I have had a daily register introduced into the office, by which means all papers and documents that come into the office are registered, showing the date, the subject, from whom, and the ultimate result of the application.
557. So that you can trace them? I can trace any document in one moment. With the permission of the Committee I will show the book. (Book produced.) It is very neatly kept up to date, and would be a credit to any establishment. This book was introduced when I first joined, and has been kept up and all the entries made up to this morning. Now, there is a perfect index to this. If I want to find a letter from the Colonial Secretary, for instance, or the Colonial Treasurer, the Crown Law Officers, letters from poundkeepers, for authority to sell, or with returns—any subject can be discovered in a moment; letters respecting depositions, or anything else, at a minute's notice, by any person who refers to the book.
558. What other books have you introduced? There was only one licensing book for all the licensing business. All kinds of licenses were entered into it, and I believe it was not properly kept; they considered it depended entirely on the importance of the case whether it was entered or not; but now I have an auctioneers book, a pawnbrokers book—the law requires a pawnbrokers book to be kept, under a penalty, and it is prima facie evidence under the summary jurisdiction of the Magistrates. I have a transfer and removal book, a hawkers and pedlers book—there are two descriptions, pack and foot. These books are all kept perfect in themselves, and there is an index to them, so that any license can be traced at a moment's notice.
559. Are there any new books for the receipt of fines and fees, or cash of any kind? It was a very poor book they had when I first went there. This is the day book. (Produced.) Since I have been in the office this has been kept up regularly, and the money banked every morning to the credit of the Crown.
560. How do you know that the proper amount that ought to be paid is paid to you from the clerk that hands it over to you? I receive it myself. There may be occasions, when I am very busy, when another clerk may receive money.
561. Then it is part of your own duty to receive the proper amount of fees payable according to law? Yes, and it is rather a difficult matter. I am obliged to know every statute that provides for the appropriation of fees under it, and some of these are very long. Where it is not provided for by special Act, the 16 Victoria, No. 1, section 24, provides that half the penalty shall go to the informer.
562. You retain in your own hands this duty? Yes.
563. What are the duties of Mr. Ormiston, as accountant? I will show you his duties. (Book produced.) These are the statements of the daily collections. They are appropriated here.
564. That book is kept by Mr. Ormiston? Yes, entirely.
565. And he is to a certain extent a check upon you? Yes, his book must balance with mine. I have other books. I am not aware that they have been even a fraction out, not even the fiftieth part of a half-penny, since I have been in the office.
566. When do you make statements of your accounts to the Auditor General? Monthly, and that regularly. I beg to hand in copies of letters that have been received from the Colonial Treasurer and Auditor General, as to the correctness of the accounts; also a letter from the Chief Inspector of Distilleries. I will read them to you. (Letters read and handed in. Vide Appendices A, B, and C.)
567. What is the document you transmit to the Auditor General monthly;—have you a blank form of it here? No. It is usually rather voluminous; it takes in sometimes six and twenty pages; the offence, the party's name, and the Act of Parliament under which the fine is imposed, are given.
568. Does the Police Magistrate ever go through your accounts so as to check them? He frequently comes to my table and looks over the accounts. Sometimes I have known him to come daily.
569. Is there any minute periodical examination of them? None whatever, by the Police Magistrate. I must tell you, with regard to the fees of office, that Mr. Armstrong, the summons clerk, who prepares all summonses, enters in a book kept by him the amounts received for them, and at the end of the day he brings his book and compares it with mine, so that no irregularity can take place there with regard to the fees. In the same way with regard to distress warrants and other fines, Mr. Martin, who is now dead, used to bring his book; and his successor, Mr. Hales, now does so, and compares with me also. In the same way the books of Mr. Delohery, the licensing clerk, are compared with mine. By these means there is a perfect check for every day.
570. You have to attest your accounts by declaration? Yes, monthly.
571. Before whom do you make that? Captain Scott. He then looks over my accounts, but he has not much time to do it; not so much time as I should require.

572. Will you go on to state what other books you have introduced, with the view of putting the office duties on a more regular footing? We have a new book—the Crown Law Officers book; there is correspondence, not very frequently, with that department. H. Connell,
Junn., Esq.
573. That is only a letter book? Yes. Then there is the dog register. 29 July, 1862.
574. Was there no dog register previous to your appointment? No. If there is not a dog register kept I am liable to a penalty.
575. Was Mr. Ormiston the accountant before you went there? He was.
576. Were his accounts then in the confused state which you describe? They were not brought up.
577. Do you know why? Mr. Warburton had taken him away from his duties, to do other work; I believe that was the reason.
578. What were his duties? His duties were the accountant's duties, but he was taken away to receive money and attend to other duties in the office.
579. By the Chairman: You do not know this of your own knowledge? No, except that there was a great deal of correspondence with the office about it afterwards.
580. By Mr. Cowper: Were there no books of account when you went there? Yes, but the books had not been brought up for many months. The day book had been very irregularly kept.
581. What do you consider now your peculiar duties? My duties are these:—To inspect, first of all, the charge sheet and summons sheet every morning; to bank the previous day's moneys; to pay informers and other claimants their proportion of fines or costs. I must add, that my office is made very irregular by the number of interruptions I have during the day, by people coming in on these and other matters. All day long I am constantly interrupted.
582. By Mr. Hoskins: When you received your appointment did you receive instructions that these were your duties? No, I received no instructions as to what my duties were; I only know that their accounts are the stumbling block of most Clerks of Petty Sessions, and I was determined they should not be mine. To receive the fines and fees of the day; to discharge prisoners who pay their fines; to check the warrants for the conveyance of prisoners to gaol; to sign and forward various license returns to the Auditor General and the Treasury—I am subject to a penalty if this is not done; to initial all license papers referred to the Inspector General of Police for police report; to grant informations and sign summonses under the Masters and Servants Act—these are numerous; to inspect and initial informations before they are placed on the sheet. I have introduced this system because it was the rule before I went there for attorneys to place their cases on the sheets, and thereby the fee of 6s. 6d. was frequently lost to the Crown. I thought the best plan was to give an order to the summons clerk to have my initials before any case could be placed on the list, and of course I take care not to initial any information until the fee is paid. To make a certificate on license applications before the Bench can entertain the cases. The Publicans Act requires that there shall be no police objection known to the Clerk of Petty Sessions, so I am bound in all cases, and they are very numerous, to write the certificate. Then there is the correspondence of the office; initialling poundkeepers' applications for authority to sell. I have eight poundkeepers in the Police District of Sydney to attend to, and their accounts must be audited and checked. I have repeated letters from the Treasury, complaining of these parties not paying in surplus money; and I am bound to write to them to pay the money in. Before any poundkeeper can sell any horse or other animal, he must first come and get his book initialled by me, to show that his accounts are correct, before the Magistrate can sign his authority to sell. To furnish the Treasury with poundkeepers' accounts, and to post them on the Police Office door. These returns are forwarded to me in triplicate, and by the Poundkeepers Act, 19 Victoria, No. 36, I am obliged to furnish the Treasury with one copy, keep a second for record, and post the third, for public inspection, on the door. To pay weekly the amounts received for fines, fees, and licenses, to the Treasury, the Police Reward Fund, the Benevolent Asylum, and the City Corporation, according as they may be appropriated by Act of Parliament; to forward returns of spirit merchants and brewers to the Chief Inspector of Distilleries within ten days after registration, under a penalty; to furnish monthly my attested accounts to the Auditor General, and to make a declaration before a Magistrate as to the correctness of the same; to take affidavits and declarations as a Commissioner of the Supreme Court.
583. By Mr. Lucas: Does that form part of your duty? Yes; and it is very useful to the public. To show that the applications are numerous, I beg to state that my fees from that source amount to about £20 a year. I received 4s. this morning as Commissioner before I came away.
584. By Mr. Cowper: Do you pay that money into the Treasury? No; that is my own, as a Commissioner of the Supreme Court.
585. By Mr. Lucas: How much do you get for each case? 1s. for the affidavit, and 6d. each for exhibits. In the case I have alluded to, that of Oliver, who is being prosecuted for embezzlement, he filed his schedule on oath, and I was sent for to swear him; there were six exhibits at 6d. each, and the affidavit 1s., which made altogether 4s. I have also been appointed by the Chief Justice to administer the oath to naturalized foreigners, and there I get a fee of 13s. My fees for the last twelve months, by an account I kept of them, amounted altogether to nearly £20. In the country I believe the Clerk of Petty Sessions, or rather the Commissioner, is allowed 2s. instead of 1s. You will find that nearly all the Clerks of Petty Sessions, who are Commissioners for Affidavits, receive from £5 to £20. To post notices respecting hawkers, auctioneers, and general licenses, on the police door; to have the jury list transcribed and revised. Four copies are made; two copies in the

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.

the first instance when they are brought before the Bench and revised by the Magistrates, and afterwards one copy each for the District Judge and the Sheriff. These lists contain somewhere about 4,000 names. I am allowed a clerk for one month specially for this duty, to make a transcript of the names. To have thirteen electoral lists prepared and revised, and to forward them to seven Returning Officers. Fourteen Members of Parliament are returned in the Police District of Sydney. This duty entails a great deal of trouble. In fact I entirely supervise or perform the duty myself. When these thirteen lists are prepared, Revision Courts have to be appointed for the different electorates. Collectors and clerks have to be appointed, and furnished with returns to complete the lists; and I am subject to penalties if the work is not properly conducted or carried out. Preparing and checking the accounts with the warrant and summons clerks; checking moneys received from the gaol, paid there by prisoners. A man committed to gaol in default of payment of a fine may pay it there, and it is forwarded to me by the gaoler; this is forwarded monthly. Issuing stationery, stamps, and requisitions, and directing the operations of the office generally.

586. By Mr. Couper: You exercise a general supervision over other clerks? Yes.

587. The office establishment you say is now in good working order? Yes, excellent.

588. Are there no arrears? No arrears of any sort.

589. When did Mr. Martin die? On the 13th of this month, I think.

590. There have been two vacancies recently in your office—Mr. Martin and Mr. Davidson? Yes.

591. Neither of whom were very efficient, were they? Mr. Davidson was a very efficient clerk.

592. Was he not frequently absent? He was frequently absent, but he was an efficient clerk when he was there; he was an excellent clerk. His duties, preparing informations, requires a man of some ability and knowledge of the law to understand his business; he was there eight or nine years. Mr. Martin was also a very excellent clerk; but he was a very stout man and could not move about much, and he was getting deaf latterly.

593. He was ready with the pen? Yes, but getting infirm latterly. He was a man of great intelligence and ability, as much so as any other man in the office.

594. But infirm from old age? Yes, he was seventy-two years of age.

595. By Mr. Hoskins: Are your duties confined to the office entirely? Yes.

596. You are never in the Court? Never in the Court except casually.

597. Is Captain Scott's office contiguous to your office? It is alongside of mine; the doors open so that we can see one another.

598. Is Captain Scott in his office a great portion of the day, or during the day, attending to any office business? He is there sometimes. He is frequently sent for when on the bench, to do chamber business. He attends every morning at nine o'clock; sometimes I have known him to come at half-past eight, to attend to persons who come to see him there.

599. Can you say whether he is more in the office or in the Police Court? That is very hard to say. One day in the week he is at Cockatoo Island; another half-day, or sometimes more, he gives to the Convict Classification Board. Then there are two Courts, and he is sometimes in one and sometimes in the other, so that when he is not in his office I cannot say whether he is on the bench or not, and I have got plenty to do without watching him.

600. You cannot say whether Captain Scott sits on the bench every day? I believe he does every day, more or less. I have known him to be there from ten o'clock in the morning till six in the evening.

601. I am not asking you about any particular occasions? On many occasions. A hundred times I have known him to be there all day, and not even to go away to get luncheon. The chamber business takes him a good deal away from the bench.

602. Do you think it desirable to have a clerk invested with the power of doing what is called chamber business? Yes, I think if it were done the complaints would cease.

603. There are complaints? Yes, persons go away dissatisfied.

604. What is the nature of these complaints? People get dissatisfied when they come there wanting informations and cannot get a Magistrate to attend to them. They are obliged to go on the bench to get a Magistrate to sign the informations. I may say the bench is a bear garden during the day; it is interrupted frequently and frequently; and the Magistrates will often refuse to sign them. It was only the other day I went myself to Messrs. Hill and Neale, to get some distress warrants signed, and they said they would not do it, and I was obliged, as is very often the case, to send a clerk to some Magistrate's house to get the warrants signed.

605. Where was Captain Scott? At Cockatoo Island.

606. By Mr. Couper: Do they require two Magistrates? No, only one signature. The Magistrates frequently will not sign affidavits or distress warrants. They say, "Where is Captain Scott?" and Captain Scott may be either away at Cockatoo Island, or on the Convict Classification Board, or he may be on the bench, and the Court so densely crowded that it is almost a matter of impossibility to get to him.

607. By Mr. Hoskins: You mean to say that the multifarious duties Captain Scott has to attend to, take him away from the chamber business? Yes, frequently.

608. And you think this difficulty would be obviated by giving the Clerk of Petty Sessions the power of swearing informations, issuing summonses, and so on? Yes; I will just give you an example. A person comes there to get an information; he cannot get that, in many cases, without going to a Magistrate on the bench; he gets a slip of paper ordering the clerk to give him an information; he then comes to me and pays his money, 6s. 6d., and instead of signing it, as I might do as a Magistrate, I can only initial it to show that the fee has been paid; he then goes back to the bench again, and the Magistrate signs it; he then brings it back to the Summons Clerk, and goes away. When the summonses are prepared, they they have to go to the house of the Magistrate who signed the information, if, as is most likely the case, he has left the bench, for signature—some to Canterbury, some to Manly Beach, and other places.

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.

29 July, 1862.

609. Who takes them? The constables.

610. What time of the day is this? At all hours.

611. Where is Captain Scott? Captain Scott cannot sign the summonses, because he did not sign the information. The Magistrate who signed the information has probably left the Court and does not come back again. I have known them to be sent to Brisbane Water. Only the other day one or two were sent there to Mr. Hargraves.

612. Who had been in the Court in the early part of the day? Yes, and signed the information, and the summonses were sent after him. Such instances as these are very numerous.

613. You think these inconveniences might be obviated by empowering the clerk to do this duty? Yes. When I enter the summonses in the book there would be an end of the business if I signed them.

614. You think there is great inconvenience to the public at present? Great inconvenience. If it was not for Mr. Peden, a Magistrate of Sydney, I think the office would sometimes be at a stand-still. When prisoners are committed to gaol, the warrants cannot be sent with them without the signature of a Magistrate, and Mr. Read, the Gaoler, has often complained of the warrants not being sent up in time. The prisoners cannot be classified; they have not time to get washed, and go to bed filthy; that is because the warrants are not signed; they must be sent to Mr. Peden, or Mr. Cooper, or Mr. Ross, or any one we can get to sign them.

615. The Magistrates sign the informations that are laid before them? Yes, and they are supposed to sign the summonses.

616. Between the time of signing the information and signing the summonses some lengthened period elapses? Yes.

617. And when the summonses are ready they are not there to sign them? Just so.

618. By Mr. Cowper: Why could you not prepare the summonses at the same time with the information? They are very numerous; first of all the information has to be drawn out, and some of them, under the Bakers and Millers Act for instance, are very long.

619. Why cannot the clerk who prepares the information complete the matter by preparing the summonses at the same time, so that a Magistrate accepting an information on oath can at once sign the summonses? The summonses are not prepared by the same clerk who prepares the information, and at the particular time the information is ready the summons clerk, Mr. Armstrong, may be engaged in some other duty which cannot be put aside—preparing bailbonds for parties to prosecute, binding over witnesses to appear at gaol delivery, and such things.

620. Is there any reason why the clerk who prepares the informations should not also prepare the summonses? There are other persons waiting for informations—which is he to do first?

621. By Mr. Hoskins: Is the clerical staff sufficient to carry out the arrangement Mr. Cowper proposes? No, it would require a dozen clerks, if all the parties who came there are to be attended to at once. Supposing fourteen persons to come there for informations and summonses, the summonses require to be prepared in duplicate, and if the clerk commenced to finish one case at a time when would he finish the fourteen?

622. Still the work is done? It is done, because it is done during the lull. At times the cases are very numerous; I have known Mr. Armstrong to stop there till five, or six, or even eight or nine at night, and to take work home with him.

623. By Mr. Lucas: Have you got a form of summons? I have not.

624. By Mr. Hoskins: Why is it not done at the time? There is an immense quantity of writing in many instances; sometimes he has to quote the whole of the information.

625. By Mr. Cowper: It comes to this: the party has to wait and lose some portion of time—would he not lose less time by waiting until the clerk had completed the summons as well as the information, so that he might go to the Magistrate with both documents, instead of requiring to come back again to get the summons? The party is not put to inconvenience who comes for a summons. The information is signed and the party goes away, and the summonses are signed in due time and served, but the party himself is not put to inconvenience. We have to send to get them signed, and they are served by a constable; perhaps it may be two, three, or even four days before they are signed and served.

626. By Mr. Hoskins: You mean to say that there is no inconvenience to the public from these four days delay? The public are not inconvenienced at all.

627. A person wishing to obtain a summons may have to wait four days, you say? No; he has only to wait till he gets the information signed; after that the summons can be prepared at convenience; Sir John Jervis most distinctly points out the necessity of giving parties time in order that the defendant may have an opportunity to bring his witnesses. As a rule we never make the summonses returnable till that day week.

628. In the event of the information and summonses being signed on the same day, would it not expedite the hearing of the case? Not one minute.

629. Why not? Because the summonses are made returnable seven days afterwards. Sir John Jervis states here, that it is better to allow a case to be as long as possible, say seven days, in order that the defendant may have an opportunity of bringing his witnesses.

630. Defendant knows nothing about the complaint till he gets the summons? No.

631. Is the law to the effect that cases are to be heard seven days after service of the summons, or seven days after the information is filed? Seven days after the information is filed.

632. By the Chairman: Is the law to that effect? No, not the law, but Sir John Jervis recommends it; the rule since I have been in the office—and I did not make the rule, I am not

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.
29 July, 1862.

not a Magistrate, and can only obey instructions—the rule is to make these summonses in every instance returnable in seven days, except where there is a warrant, or if there is any supposition or well grounded belief that the defendant is going away; then a warrant is issued and the case tried immediately on his apprehension; in all other cases the summonses are made returnable that day week—in all cases that come under the category of summary jurisdiction.

633. By Mr. Lucas: There is nothing in Sir John Jervis' Act that prevents it coming on before that day week? I imagine the principle is adopted so that the defendant may have time to prepare.

634. Sir John Jervis says he should have time after he receives the summons? Yes; if there is any irregularity, it is from the Magistrates not being able to sign the summonses.

635. By Mr. Hoskins: Why are the Magistrates not able to sign the summonses at the same time as the information? Because they cannot be prepared in time.

636. Why cannot they be done at the same time? Because the clerk has other duties to do.

637. Are warrants never granted except on an affidavit by the person applying for one? No; warrants are, of course, granted at the discretion of the Magistrate.

638. Does the person applying for a warrant make an affidavit? He swears to the correctness of his information.

639. Have you ever seen any departure from that practice;—have you known warrants to be granted without the information being sworn to? No, I do not think I ever knew one. Sir John Jervis expressly states that a summons may be granted on parole evidence, but no warrant except on information.

640. Do you know whether warrants have been cancelled without the persons for whose apprehension they were granted having been brought before the Magistrates? I recollect two cases—one of Captain Scott's in reference to Bucknell's case, and the other of Mr. Day; these are the only two cases, that I am aware of, where a warrant has been suspended.

641. Can you tell us how many hours a day, on the average, Captain Scott spends in the office during office hours? I could not tell you that; I have not an opportunity of knowing all his movements. Frequently I am very busily engaged, and do not go out of my room perhaps all day; when he is not in his office, he may be on the other bench for anything I know.

642. Do you know whether cases are frequently adjourned for want of Magistrates? Frequently.

643. Is it more frequently the rule or not? I cannot say; it is not my business to know why cases are adjourned; I may see by the list that they are adjourned, but I do not know why.

644. Do you happen to know whether the unpaid Magistrates are very regular in their attendance;—is the Court frequently adjourned for want of Magistrates? There is often delay from that cause; even this morning they did not commence till eleven o'clock because there were no Magistrates.

645. How many Magistrates are there altogether? I believe about 60 or 70 for the City of Sydney.

646. Are Magistrates usually to be found in attendance from nine or ten in the morning till four? No; some go away at one o'clock, some at twelve; some at one hour and some at another.

647. And seldom return? Seldom return.

648. Is it not the fact that there is an accumulation of cases not disposed of? Sometimes there is.

649. Is it not so now? No. Sometimes the whole of the business on the sheet is finished, but frequently the cases are not all gone through. I have known 60 or 70 cases to be on the charge sheet and summons sheet at once.

650. Are there not now a large amount of arrears of cases unsettled? No, I do not think so. I think this morning there were about 18 cases on the charge sheet, and 11 on the summons sheet. For the last few days the Court has been over much earlier than usual.

651. By Mr. Forster: Is the summons generally longer or shorter than the information? Never longer.

652. Is it not generally much shorter? Yes.

653. If every information had the summons tacked on to it as a matter of course, would it not occupy the clerk only a short time longer in proportion to the time already spent in preparing the information? Frequently he may be engaged on other duties, and cannot attend to this.

654. When he prepares the information—? The summons clerk does not prepare the information at all; another clerk prepares the information. It is an important matter to prepare an information properly; if it is incorrectly prepared it may be thrown out of Court—the plaintiff may be nonsuited. It frequently requires great care, and great research, and some knowledge of the law. That is one clerk's special duty.

655. If the summons were added to that it would make very little difference;—could not the same clerk prepare the two? He would not have time to do it, because they are separate duties.

656. Would it not be possible to arrange to have them both prepared by the same clerk? If that were done, other persons who might be waiting to have informations prepared would have longer to stop. To practically carry it out would be a very difficult matter; they are different duties altogether; one man has to set his head to work, the other is merely a machine, and copies from the information.

657. One follows the other so naturally, that I do not see why the clerk who does all the head work should not be allowed to relax himself a little by preparing the summons? Where one one prepares the information, and the other copies, it must necessarily be done with greater expedition than if one had to copy what he had already written.

658. Well, I grant the general rule that division of labour does lead to greater expedition, but there may be peculiarities in the case—and you, I think, have shown those peculiarities—that may make the division of labour an absolute delay; it seems to delay somebody—does it not delay the public? I do not see that the public are delayed at all.

659. If you are obliged to send these summonses about, in the way you have described, to get them signed, is not the public put to greater expense than they would be the other way? The constables serve them.

660. This delay, on your own showing, arises from the two things not being done simultaneously;—may there not be greater expense, delay, and trouble, caused by separating these two processes into two different departments, than if you did them together? No, I think not. If you knew the many ramifications attached to the office you would not think so. Very often they cannot be prepared at all that day because we must go on with other business.

661. Assuming that the information is prepared, why should not the summons follow as a matter of course? Then another party would have to wait.

662. Other parties would have to wait if the information that was being taken happened to be a little longer? So they would.

663. Then it would make no greater difference if the summons were treated as part of the information, and prepared at the same time accordingly? It would upset the whole system. There are books kept by the various clerks for all these things. The clerk who copies the summons enters the information in the book, and the party who wanted it would have to wait for that also.

664. I presume that this arrangement is one that you originated? No; it has existed a long time.

665. It is a very antiquated custom then? It may be a very antiquated custom, but I confess I think it is a good one.

666. You have described the bench as on certain occasions a bear garden? That is from the numerous applications that are made to the Magistrates when on the bench. I am sure Mr. Caldwell can testify as to the number of times he has been interrupted in his business.

667. What do you mean by its being a bear garden? The proceedings of the Bench are very frequently suspended, by applications from persons for summonses and informations. Sometimes there are five or six persons in one case being bound over to appear at Quarter Sessions or Gaol Delivery.

668. You do not mean that the Magistrates themselves make it a bear garden? No; the Magistrates cannot help it.

669. Summonses are sometimes granted without an oath? Yes.

670. Where an information is taken it implies an information on oath? Yes.

671. You spoke of having to send warrants to be signed? Yes, we have frequently.

672. And in the absence of these warrants the parties cannot be sent to gaol? No; these are warrants of committal.

673. Not warrants to apprehend? No. As prisoners are convicted of the various offences the clerk prepares the warrants for their committal to gaol—sometimes twenty or thirty in a day—and these are taken to the Police Magistrate to be signed, if he is there, and if he is not there, some other Magistrate must be got to sign them.

674. These are merely the sequences of the proceedings of the Court? Yes.

675. Can you give the Committee any idea of the proportion of copying work that is done in your office—mere copying? I think there is very little copying except the copying of these summonses and entering letters.

676. By Mr. Lucas: The jury lists? The jury lists once a year.

677. By Mr. Foster: Are there many letters? Yes.

678. Can you state the proportion of copying work, including letters and any other copying work that is done in your office, compared with what may be called original work—work that is written without copying? I do not know whether you call depositions copying; that is copying in one sense.

679. Do you mean that after the depositions are taken a copy is made? No; the clerks take them down from an oral statement.

680. Sometimes you have to prepare copies of depositions? Yes; if copies are applied for, and we can find time, I have it done in the office, because it brings in an additional revenue to the Crown; they are paid for at the rate of 8d. a folio of 72 words.

681. You make no distinction of parties? No.

682. Does the amount you name fully pay the expense? Yes, I think so. If there is a lull in the office it is better to be doing something.

683. Do you think the copying part of the work of the office could be done by contract in any way, or by sending it out to be copied;—do you think there is any feasibility in a plan of that sort;—I have heard it spoken of in other offices? Do you mean that we should send out our letter books and letters to be entered—if we wrote a letter to the Colonial Secretary, for instance, that we should call a cab and send the letter book and the letter out to have it entered?

684. Whatever copying you wanted done, suppose you got it done by contract? That is a thing I could not reconcile in our office.

685. For what reason? I do not think it could be worked.

686. A plan of that kind would not be practicable in your office? No.

687. You state that you have often heard complaints made by the public of the delay of justice in the Court? I never heard persons complain of justice there.

688. I mean the delay? No, I never heard any one complain of delay.

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.

29 July, 1862.

689. Did you not state that there were complaints? I said complaints with regard to not getting Magistrates to sign informations.

690. Do these complaints come generally from the parties? Yes; I have known persons to remain in my room waiting for Magistrates for a considerable time.

691. You never heard any complaints from witnesses who are summoned to attend the Court? No, I have nothing at all to do with them.

692. By Mr. Caldwell: You state that Captain Scott visits Cockatoo Island? Yes.

693. Does he attend to any office duty on the day he visits Cockatoo? Yes; first of all he opens the Court, and after he sees that there are sufficient Magistrates to conduct the business, he goes.

694. Would it not assist in clearing off the business of the office if Captain Scott was relieved of the Cockatoo duties? I think it would materially.

695. Have you known private Magistrates to continue the Court till four o'clock or later in the afternoon? We have plenty of Magistrates, but they do not sit till four o'clock, except in special cases to finish their business.

696. Have you not known the Court continued on till four o'clock with general business by the private Magistrates? Yes, and to six, seven, and eight o'clock occasionally.

697. Is it not frequently the case that the private Magistrates clear off all the business on the sheet before they leave? Yes, except in cases which require remand. Sometimes they leave at one or two o'clock, because they are under the impression that the remaining cases will be taken in the other Court.

698. Do you think there is sufficient accommodation provided for conducting the business of the Court? There is plenty of accommodation, but the building is so very ill contrived that it neutralizes the good effects.

699. Is there any room that Magistrates can retire to, to consult upon cases? None.

700. Do you think it necessary that the Magistrates should have a room to retire to? I think so.

701. Have there been any complaints of the want of books for reference? Yes, we have frequent complaints.

702. Are there books provided for the Magistrates? I have had some correspondence in getting the books. Recently I have had three copies of the Public Statutes supplied by the Government, one for each Court, and one for office use.

703. Where are they kept? In the Court. I have given special instructions, written instructions, to each deposition clerk, that these books are to be kept in his desk, for the use only of the Magistrates and himself, and not to be taken out of the Court.

704. Have you not a case provided specially on the bench for books of reference? Yes.

705. Are the books not kept there? No, the clerk keeps them in his desk, as being more convenient for the Magistrates; he can turn to what is required and hand it up to the bench.

706. Have you heard any complaints about the noise arising from the situation of the building? I have. The Police Magistrate has received two or three letters on the subject—from Mr. Ronald on one occasion, I forget who the other was—complaining that they could not hear the cases, in consequence of the noise from the dray stand outside; and application was then made by Captain Scott to the City Corporation, but they did not comply with his wishes that the dray stand should be removed.

707. Are not considerable alterations being carried out now at the Police Office? Yes.

708. What is the object? To make the offices more convenient; they are to be built so as to be contiguous to one another, instead of, as at present, three on one side and three on the other.

709. Will it make it a complete establishment when that is done? I think so; it will make it pretty perfect.

710. Do you think the business of the office is increasing? Yes. I beg to hand in a statement which will show the increase of licensing business. (Vide Appendix D.)

711. By Mr. Lucas: I believe this (referring to a form of summons) is a copy of the summons required, is it not? Yes, it is the skeleton of it.

712. This shows how it is to be filled up? Yes.

713. Taking the summonses generally that are filled up in the office, how long does it take a clerk to fill up one of these summonses? It might not take in some instances five minutes; to fill up the duplicates also, I should say ten minutes.

714. Will you let us have one of the forms of summons, and a form of information, as used in the Police Office? Yes.

715. I believe in the space left for filling in a summons, it is impossible to put in more than three or four lines? There are ten or twelve sometimes.

716. By the Chairman: Those are extreme cases? Yes, they are not common.

717. By Mr. Lucas: There are usually about four lines? Yes.

718. Have you ever known cases to be dismissed because the summons was not properly drawn with the information? I am not aware of it. I have known cases to be dismissed when the summons was not properly drawn out, but that was the fault of the police.

719. What have the police to do with the summons? They give us the complaint. Under the Police Act no information is required.

720. I asked you whether you had known any cases to be dismissed because the summons was not in keeping with the information? No.

721. Does it not state on the form of summons—"here state shortly the matter of the information?" Yes.

722. Can not the person who draws up the information draw up the summons more readily and correctly than by handing it to another clerk? That would do away with the necessity of a summons clerk at all.

723. By the Chairman: That is not an answer. Could it not be done more easily? No. H. Connell, junr., Esq.
724. By Mr. Lucas: The present system is this:—The complainant goes to a Magistrate and gets an order for an information, and at the bottom of the slip the Magistrate puts down a warrant or a summons, whichever he thinks proper; the party takes this to the information clerk, in some part of the building, gets his information drawn up and brings it back to the Magistrate and is sworn to it; he then takes it back again to the person who originally drew the information —? No. 29 July, 1862.
725. Where does he take it? To the summons clerk.
726. How does he find the summons clerk? In the same way that he found the information clerk.
727. How many different clerks has he to go to before his business is done? He has to go to the information clerk to get the information prepared, and then he has to go to the summons clerk to give the name of the party and where he lives.
728. Could he not, much easier than running all over the building, give these particulars to the information clerk; would it be more easy to do it? It would, of course.
729. Then he has to pay the money to you? Yes.
730. Then, in reality, he has to go to three or four different rooms before he can get his business done? Yes, in the present building.
731. And these rooms are in all parts of the building? In all parts of the building.
732. It is your duty to look after the preparation of the electoral lists? In what way?
733. In the appointment of collectors? It is not my duty to appoint them; that is done by the Magistrates.
734. Do you know of your own knowledge a case where one collector was paid by the Magistrates £20 more than he asked for performing the duties? Yes.
735. He asked £100, and they very liberally gave him £120? The rule is to appoint fourteen collectors in December, to take the electoral lists between the first and twenty-eighth of January, and the Magistrates have power to give what they consider a fair and proper price for the duty. This particular case was that of Mr. Solomons, the collector for St. Leonards.
736. Are you sure it was Mr. Solomons? Yes.
737. Are you sure Mr. Leggatt did not get £20 more than he asked? He did not get 6d. The Electoral Act, 22 Victoria, No. 20, I think, distinctly states that the Magistrates shall fix the remuneration.
738. By Mr. Cowper: They did fix £20 more than the man asked? They gave him what they considered right and correct. They gave Mr. Solomons £100 for doing the duty, but the case was subsequently brought forward before the Magistrates in Petty Sessions, on the ground that the sum allowed was not sufficient remuneration for the trouble and difficulty he had in performing the duty.
739. By Mr. Lucas: Do you know how long he was engaged in it? No, I cannot tell. The Magistrates decided that it was not sufficient remuneration, and awarded him £20 more. It was recommended by fourteen Magistrates before it was brought before the Bench.
740. Is it not usual for persons to give in a tender of what they will do the lists for? It has not been so in my time.
741. How are they appointed? They are appointed by the Magistrates. There were twenty-six Magistrates present the last time.
742. No tenders had been called for? I never heard of them. The work was done by the police formerly; but about the time I went there, there was some correspondence with the Government, and it was decided that in future it should be done by collectors appointed by the Magistrates.
743. Can you tell us what Mr. Leggatt got for performing the duties the last time? £120. That was the amount awarded him by the Magistrates in Petty Sessions. It was decided by six and twenty gentlemen that he should have £120.
744. Are you sure? Yes.
745. Have you had any conversation with me on the subject? Yes; from the inquiries you made of me I have looked into the matter, and I find it to be as I state.
746. By Mr. Cowper: Have there been any complaints with regard to the way in which these lists are prepared? None.
747. Have you any reason to believe they are well prepared, or not? I think they are pretty well.
748. Do you think they were better prepared by the police formerly? I do not know.
749. You have no means of knowing? No.
750. By Mr. Lucas: Have you ever summoned any Magistrates to perform the chamber duties? No.
751. Have you heard it suggested that that should be done? I have heard it spoken of.
752. Have you never, on any occasion, summoned Magistrates specially to do chamber duty? Never.
753. If Magistrates were to attend and do chamber duty, it would get rid of all these objections as to signing informations? Yes.
754. By Mr. Cowper: Are you aware whether Captain Scott, in consequence of a suggestion of mine to him, some months ago, endeavoured to carry out a system of summoning two sets of Magistrates on the roster, the one for the performance of bench duties, and the other for chamber duties? Yes, I am aware of it; Captain Scott said something to that effect at the meeting of Magistrates which took place.
755. Did he attempt to carry that out? No.
756. You think it would not work? The Magistrates will not sign the informations in many instances; they say, let Captain Scott do it, he is a paid officer. Most of them will not

H. Connell, junr., Esq. not do it. Some Magistrates, however, will work like a horse when they are there. I have known them even to sign summonses in blank.

29 July, 1862. 757. They must sign a good number of these informations, because you have already told us that the difficulty consists in having to send the summonses to their private residences? Yes, that is very often the case; but there are all kinds of persons who require to be sworn besides those who get informations; persons who accept office under the Post Office Department must make a declaration; then there are volunteers and many others.

758. You think there is an unwillingness on the part of the unpaid Magistrates to perform these duties in the chamber? Yes.

759. Captain Scott has never tried the system of summoning them regularly for it? No; there are some Magistrates who will do it; I think Mr. Lucas has offered to come and do chamber duties; Mr. Cullen, in particular, has given a great deal of assistance.

760. By Mr. Lucas: If the Magistrates were summoned, no doubt they would perform that duty as well as sitting on the bench? If they would come —

761. You have never tried it? Never, but I do not think it would ever work.

762. At the same time you admit that several Magistrates do come? Yes.

763. Mr. Cullen, Mr. Burdekin, and several others? Yes. I must confess that in many instances it is a great nuisance to me, for I am constantly interrupted with questions as to what is to be done, and it takes me some time to explain what may be done in a moment.

764. Professional costs awarded by the Bench are paid to you? Yes.

765. To whom do you hand them over—to the professional man or to his client? To the professional man.

766. What check is there against what moneys you receive there? There is a check against every sum.

767. How does Mr. Ormiston, the accountant, get the amounts;—where does he take his amounts from? From my book.

768. What check is there upon you? He is a check upon me.

769. How does he get the check on you;—suppose you should omit—I do not say it offensively—any sum in your account? Mr. Armstrong keeps a book of all fees received by me, entered separately; that is brought to me to compare with mine, and sometimes when there is an affidavit short it is made up.

770. There are a large number of fines—what check is there against you for that? There are two books, one called the gaol book—if a man does not pay his money he goes to gaol and there is an end of him; then there is what is called the levy and distress book.

771. Who keeps these books? Mr. Martin did before he died.

772. Who keeps the account of fines paid? I do.

773. Any person else? No.

774. What becomes of the Magistrates' sheet? They are filed in the office.

775. They are in duplicate—one kept by the police and one for the Magistrates? Yes.

776. In each Court—both summons and charge sheets? Yes.

777. There are two copies of each, one for the police and one for the Magistrates? Yes.

778. With reference to the Magistrates' room, I think you took possession of it, did you not;—there was a Magistrates' room at one time, but you took possession of it? Yes.

779. Before you came there I believe the whole of the clerical duties were performed on the other side of the office? No, I am not aware of it; I believe Mr. Warburton did the duties in that room.

780. Before he was made a Magistrate he used to sit in the small room at the other end of the building? I am not aware; I was never in the building in my life until I went there on my appointment.

781. You bank your moneys every evening? Every morning, the first thing when ten o'clock comes.

782. By Mr. Cowper: I think I gave you an order strictly to do that when you were appointed? Yes, and it has been strictly adhered to.

783. By Mr. Lucas: Do you know the number of cases postponed? There have been cases postponed, but not as a rule—not if the business can be got through.

784. Is the business got through? There are occasions when there are a large number of cases, when they cannot all be gone through.

785. Have you known cases to be put off for three or four days at a time, and written off at last, "no parties"? Yes, frequently.

786. That is where they are postponed from day to day? I cannot tell when there have been postponements in these cases; I say there are many instances where cases have been dismissed for want of parties, but I cannot say whether they have been postponed cases. You must take into consideration that I am not in the Court; I just pick up what I know of the matter from the papers, and therefore I cannot give satisfactory answers to questions of this kind.

787. What form of subpoena is usually issued to witnesses whose attendance is required at the Central Police Court? There are two classes of subpoena,—the common subpoena and what is called the summons subpoena.

788. Are you aware that a witness cannot be made to attend under the common form of subpoena? They are always attended to.

789. The Magistrates cannot compel a witness to attend under it? No, they cannot.

790. Do you think they should continue to issue these things;—do you think it does not bring the administration of justice into contempt? It is nothing more than any other form; in the Police Court or the District Court, if a witness disobeys a summons, the Court can issue a warrant.

791. Can a Magistrate issue a warrant if a witness neglects a common subpoena? No.

792. I believe that (referring to a form) is the form of summons for a witness, is it not? H. Connell, junr., Esq.
Yes; a warrant is issued where a witness has not obeyed a summons.
793. Do you often issue this form of warrant? Not very often; it is done sometimes in an affiliation case, for instance, where the man does not appear—when it is proved on oath that the summons has been served ——— 29 July, 1862.
794. And the money tendered for his expenses? And the money tendered for his expenses, then the warrant is issued.
795. You still continue to issue the other document? Yes.
796. Do you charge anything for it? Yes, 1s. 6d. and 4d. for every copy.
797. What do you charge for one of these summonses under Sir John Jervis' Act? That is a part of the process.
798. Do you charge anything for it? No, not when he is made come.
799. You charge 1s. 6d. for a thing that is valueless, and issue a proper summons for nothing? Yes.
800. By the Chairman: That swells the fees of the establishment? Yes, it does a little.
801. By Mr. Lucas: Do you think any decisions are given at the Police Office for the purpose of swelling the revenue? I do not sit on the bench, and therefore I cannot answer that question.

APPLICATIONS for Licenses under the Publicans Act, Hawkers Act, Pawnbrokers Act, Auctioneers Act, Spirit Merchants, Brewers, Slaughtering Act.

29 July, 1862.

| NATURE OF LICENSE. | 1861. 1st January to 31st December. | 1862. 1st January to 30th June. | REMARKS. |
|---|---|---------------------------------------|--|
| For publicans' licenses. | 513 | 415 | Every application is registered in the daily register, the number, date when received, and nature of application, is recorded in red ink on the application; a list is then made of every application, name, residence, sign, &c., and posted on the police door on the third Tuesday of each month through the year, with the exception of April. The annual meeting takes place in that month, and the list is posted on the first Tuesday. Each application is then forwarded to the Inspector General of Police, for police report, under blank cover; after its return, with report, it is entered in the general licensing book, and brought before the Bench, after due notice has been given as required by law; if approved a certificate is made out in favour of applicant. (For certificate, see form A.) A return is then made out as required by law, and furnished respectively to the Colonial Treasurer and Auditor General. Licenses are granted every month, and circulars sent to the Justices, informing them of the time each meeting takes place. The license fee is £30. |
| For transfer of licenses ... | 82 | 63 | A similar course pursued as above in every case. (For forms of certificate, see B. C. D. and E.) Applications can be made at any time, and granted, on giving fifteen days' notice, in transfer and removals. |
| „ removal „ | 37 | 14 | |
| „ appointment of agents in insolvent and de- ceased publicans' estates | 23 | 7 | |
| „ packet licenses | 20 | 7 | |
| „ confectioners' licenses | 24 | 1 | |
| „ night licenses | 15 | 0 | |
| „ billiard table licenses | 288 | 0 | |
| „ bagatelle licenses | 19 | 15 | A similar course pursued as above, with the exception of there being no certificates. License fees—billiard table, £10; bagatelle, £5 a year. |
| „ music licenses | 0 | 38 | |
| „ temporary extension licenses | 138 | 96 | The same course as above, with the exception of no return to the Auditor General and Colonial Treasurer. Certificates issued on the payment of 2s. 6d. and 10s. respectively. (For certificates, see forms F. and G.) |
| Hawkers: | | | |
| For hawkers' foot licenses | 91 | 74 | |
| „ „ pack licenses | 103 | 57 | Applications dealt with as above; they are made every quarter; notice has to be given in the Government Gazette and posted on Court House door of each meeting; circulars have to be sent to the Magistrates; certificates issued on the payment of £1 and £2 respectively for the year. (For forms of certificate, see H. and I.) Applications are made on the third Tuesdays in February, May, August, and November, and are granted on the second Tuesdays in March, June, September, and December. |
| „ „ | 11 | 16 | |
| Auctioneers: | | | |
| For auctioneers' general licenses | 58 | 79 | Applications dealt with as above. The annual meeting takes place the fourth Tuesday in November in every year; but special applications are granted at any time through the year. (For certificates, see forms J. and K.) The license for the year is £15. |
| Pawnbrokers' licenses | 26 | 8 | Applications dealt with as above. Certificates issued on payment of £10. (For certificate, see form L.) |
| Slaughtering licenses | 1 | 2 | Applications are registered as above, and forwarded to the Inspector of Slaughter-houses, for report. Certificates are issued on payment of 2s. 6d. (For certificate, see M.) |
| Total | 1,446 | 880 | |
| Spirit merchants registered | 58 | 59 | |
| Brewers registered | 2 | 2 | |
| | 1,506 | 941 | |

Inquiries are constantly being made throughout the day, by parties who have licensing business on hand, as to when their cases are coming on; and also reference has constantly to be made to papers months back, which take up a great deal of time. In cases where objections are lodged against an applicant for a license, minutes have to be taken and entered in a book, and signed by the Chairman.

Central Police Office,
Sydney, 11 July, 1862.

HENRY CONNELL, JUNR.,
Clerk of Petty Sessions,
Sydney.

WEDNESDAY,

WEDNESDAY, 30 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

MR. CALDWELL,
MR. W. FORSTER,MR. HOSKINS,
MR. LUCAS.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Henry Connell, junr., Esq., C.P.S., Sydney, called in and further examined:—

802. By the Chairman: I believe you stated yesterday that you had been a clerk in the Colonial Secretary's Office since August, 1844? Since the 21st August, 1844.

803. And remained as a clerk in the Colonial Secretary's Office from that time until your appointment as Clerk of Petty Sessions? Yes.

804. Do you perform the whole of the duties mentioned by yourself yesterday? Assisted by Mr. Delohery.

805. Is that the only assistance you receive? When I want to bank the previous day's moneys, for instance, I do not go to the bank myself.

806. Just answer my question;—Is that the only assistance you receive? In some slight respects I may be assisted by others.

807. How many clerks were in the office when you were appointed? Including myself, do you mean?

808. How many did you find there? I think seven clerks.

809. Can you give their names? Mr. Smithers, Mr. Martin, Mr. Crane, Mr. Ormiston, Mr. Davidson, Mr. Armstrong, and Mr. Sealy.

810. How many clerks are there in the office at the present time? At the present time there are eight, including myself.

811. How long have you had but eight? Since the 13th of this month—since Mr. Martin's death.

812. Then you have received increased clerical assistance during the time you have held office? Yes, the appointment of Mr. Crane,* when he left the office, was split into two; the salary was divided into two.

813. How many of the gentlemen named by yourself still remain in the office? Three, I think.

814. And you consider the establishment in perfect working order at the present time? It is in perfect working order; there are two or three gentlemen, who have just come in, who are not as efficient as they will be as time progresses.

815. In what state of efficiency did you find the clerks on your taking charge? The clerks I found to be very efficient.

816. Were they not all first class clerks? I think so.

817. But you found everything in the worst state of irregularity on your taking charge? The greatest irregularity.

818. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Crane, shortly after taking charge, about the record room? I cannot recollect it.

819. Could not Mr. Crane lay his hand, at any time, upon any document that was required in the whole office? He might have done so; I never asked him.

820. Did you ever ask any of the others? Yes.

821. Whom did you ask? I have had repeated inquiries from attorneys for papers of old date, and I know that they could not be found.

822. Whom did you ask to find them? I requested Mr. Davidson, who was the record clerk after Mr. Crane left, to get them, but he found difficulty in getting them frequently. Since he has left we have found great difficulty.

823. Have not the papers been all disturbed since Mr. Crane left? I cannot say.

824. Have you not had occasion to make many searches for papers since Mr. Crane left? Not many.

825. Have not the papers been disturbed in these occasional searches? I should imagine they were.

826. Immediately upon your appointment had you any occasion to search for papers? None.

827. Then it is impossible for you to state whether or not the papers could be found at that time? That was not the irregularity I was speaking of —

828. Will you answer my question—you can explain afterwards;—You cannot state of your own knowledge whether papers could have been found or not immediately on your appointment? No, most decidedly not.† But I beg to add that the irregularity I have alluded to is the irregularity of attendance and want of discipline: clerks coming when they thought proper, going away when they thought proper, and deputing others to do the duties assigned to them, which is against all rule, order, and discipline. I found the letter books were not indexed up, the licensing business in a state of great irregularity, and altogether the books of the establishment not properly kept. I found the depositions always properly recorded; I had no fault to find with the depositions; it was simply having no record of them, and the way in which the business of the office was conducted—the manner in which it was conducted.

829. You stated yesterday that it was a mere piece of luck to find anything? The depositions I have since discovered; it is a piece of luck to find depositions in some instances, because of no record.

830.

* Revised:—Sealy.

† ADDED (on revision):—The papers were thrown together in confused masses—no classification, no date, and no record. Police stores, such as hats, boots, brooms, and clothing, being stored in the same place.

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.,
C.P.S.

30 July, 1862.

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.,
C.P.S.
30 July, 1862.

830. You stated yesterday, that on entering the office it was a mere piece of luck to find anything;—can you mention anything you had occasion to look for at that time that could not be found? The letter books. If I wanted to find any references to letters I found there was no index. For instance, all the letters that had been written by the Government to the Police Magistrate—a correspondence of years—I cannot trace now up to this date. If I want to find a letter addressed to the Police Magistrate by the Colonial Secretary, the Colonial Treasurer, the Auditor General, or any other department, I should find it difficult to trace it now.

831. Did you ever require the assistance of any of the clerks to aid you in searching for the documents you have mentioned? I required the aid of all in getting the papers, but I found they could not get them at all.

832. You have, then, from time to time required the whole of the clerks you have named to assist in these searches? I have tried to discover who kept these papers, of course, if I could not get at them.

833. Can you give the name of any single clerk in the establishment that you have called upon to assist you in these searches? I have given a memorandum—left it in the room—that I wanted papers or documents. In fact, I was obliged to have a correspondence with Mr. Warburton after he left the office, with regard to the poundkeeper's bonds and the weights and measures.

834. You cannot name any single clerk that you have asked to search for papers? The rule is not to go and ask a clerk, but to write a memorandum, and give it to one of the senior clerks, Mr. Smithers, Mr. Davidson, or Mr. Ormiston, to get the papers.

835. Can you name any case in which you gave a memorandum to Mr. Crane, Mr. Smithers, or Mr. Davidson? I do not think I can.

836. Have you any recollection of ever having done so? Yes, repeatedly.

837. To one or to several? Yes, I have constantly done it—to this day.

838. To which of them? To every clerk within whose province the duty lay.

839. I name three clerks? I have asked Mr. Smithers, I have asked Mr. Davidson, and I have asked Mr. Crane.*

840. Repeatedly? I cannot say now; whenever I have required any papers or documents.

841. On more than one occasion? I think so—several occasions.

842. How do you manage to get through the work mentioned by yourself? By attending strictly to it. When I was first appointed to the office of Clerk of Petty Sessions there was a great deal of correspondence between the Auditor General and the office, with regard to the attested accounts of the office, which I believe were not completed till nearly eighteen months afterwards.

843. You stated yesterday that the Police Magistrate frequently came to your table and looked at your accounts? Frequently.

844. Did he ever, on any single occasion since your appointment, go through your accounts? In what way do you mean?

845. Go through them for the purpose of examination or audit in any way? No, he never went through them to audit them.

846. Has any person ever audited the accounts of that office since your appointment? The Auditor General audits them monthly.

847. Does the Auditor General inspect and examine your books, or any person on his behalf? No.

848. Then no regular audit has taken place? Yes.

849. By whom? So far as fees are concerned, by Mr. Armstrong; so far as fines are concerned, by Mr. Martin, and now by Mr. Hales; so far as licensing is concerned, by Mr. Delohery; and so far as the attested accounts are concerned, by Mr. Ormiston.

850. Has there been any periodical examination of your accounts by Captain Scott, or any person on behalf of the Government? None, except the clerks I have alluded to.

851. How is the audit made? I beg to hand in statements which will show the way the accounts are audited. (Vide Appendix A.)

852. I think you stated, yesterday, that the books of the other clerks were compared with yours, and that is how the audit is made? Yes.

853. Who compares them? Mr. Armstrong has the fees, Mr. Martin (now Mr. Hales) the fines, and Mr. Delohery the licensing business.

854. But Captain Scott never compares them in any way? No. He is obliged to certify that, to the best of his knowledge and ability, they are correct. You will see it attached to that form.

855. Captain Scott has no time, has he, to examine the books? Not much, if any at all; if he attended to his own work he would find plenty to do.

856. Does he attend to his own work? He does; he gives all the time he possibly can to it.

857. You stated, yesterday, that you have a Crown Law Officers' book in the department? I have.

858. Have you frequent correspondence with the Crown Law Officers? Very little.

859. On what subjects do you usually correspond with them? When the Magistrates want an opinion on any particular subject—any difficulty in a case—the Police Magistrate writes a letter and gets the information.

860. Then cases do arise in which you require the opinion of the Crown Law Officers? Yes. It has been the custom, I believe, throughout the whole Colony, for all Benches to consult the Attorney General.

861. You stated yesterday that it was a portion of your duty to have the jury list transcribed and four copies made? Yes.

* Revised:—Sealy—Mr. Sealy was the licensing clerk.

862. By whom are those copies usually made? They have been prepared for the last two years by Mr. Henry Day, a brother-in-law of mine.

863. Has any amount been paid by the Government for the preparation of these documents? I think he has been compensated according to the practice previously adopted before my appointment. I am not certain of the amount, but I think he has been paid £15—the same amount as was paid to other persons for the same duty.

864. Is he a clerk on the books of the establishment? He is not; he gives his assistance voluntarily to the office.

865. Has he been paid for any other work during that time? Yes, he has; he has been employed as a clerk in assisting in the performance of the duties done under the Electoral Act, 22 Vict., No. 20.

866. Any other sums? On one occasion, for assisting in the performance of some duties required under the old Publicans Act, he was paid, I think, £10 or £12 for a month's duties. That is all, I believe—all that I can recollect—that he has received from the Government for eighteen months he has been there now.

867. In answer to Mr. Cowper, I think you stated that you were allowed a clerk for one month, to perform certain duties? I was allowed a clerk, to prepare the jury list, for one month, and a clerk for three months, to do the electoral duties.

868. A clerk in addition to the officers you have already named? Yes, temporarily.

869. Who has been generally appointed for these duties? Mr. Day has been appointed by Captain Scott to do the jury lists and the electoral lists; and I beg to add, that the jury lists have had very high encomiums passed upon them, for the way in which they have been transcribed; in fact, Mr. Dowling intimated to Captain Scott that they had never been done so well before.

870. Did you hear him? No.

871. Have you not heard many complaints out of doors about the manner in which this thing has been done? What I speak of has nothing to do with the police portion; it is the transcribing I allude to. I believe there have been many complaints about the incorrectness of the names, but that is a duty which does not attach, in any way, to the Police Office. The police collect the names, in the first instance, in the different divisions.

872. How often does Captain Scott take his seat upon the bench? Every morning.

873. How long does he remain upon the bench? Well, I cannot answer that question satisfactorily, because —

874. Does he remain on the bench more than one hour per diem on the average? Yes, most decidedly; I know that much at least.
