875. On an average, more than one hour per diem? I should say more than two or three hours.

876. Per diem? Two hours at least, I should say. I have known Captain Scott frequently to be on the bench all day long.

877. By Mr. Hoskins: Can you say whether he is more hours on the bench or in the office? Considering that he is taken away to Cockatoo Island a day every week, I should say he is more off the bench.

878. By Mr. Caldwell: You stated, yesterday, that he spends a portion of the day in the office? In the morning, sometimes he comes and opens the Court, and then goes.

879. By the Chairman: Do you mean to say Captain Scott is more than one hour a day on the bench, on an average? I think so.

880. Have you any doubt about it? I think he is; but I am a bad judge as to the time, because I have my own particular duties to do, which do not take me in the way of seeing how long he is upon the bench.

881. Does he not almost regularly leave the bench so soon as two Magistrates take their seats? I cannot answer that question. He is frequently called away from the bench to do chamber business.

882. Do not the unpaid Magistrates repeatedly open the Court? There are two Courts.

883. Do they not repeatedly open both Courts? I cannot say; I am not present when the Courts are opened.

884. By Mr. Hoskins: Do the unpaid Magistrates do chamber duties? Yes, sometimes; Mr. Lucas has frequently done so, and Mr. Cullen—I left him there this morning. All I can say about Captain Scott's movements is mere guess-work.

885. By the Chairman: Have you given us any other evidence which is the result of mere guess-work? I do not think so; whatever evidence I have given, I have given to the best of my ability.

886. Captain Scott's office is alongside yours, is it not? Yes. Sometimes, I may add, Captain Scott has a Court in his room, and I am not even aware of it. Sometimes a Court is sitting there in some criminal matter, and although apparently to the public Captain Scott is not on the bench, yet his own private room is a Court frequently and frequently.

887. By Mr. Hoskins: Are the public denied access to this Court? No, the door is open, but very few persons know anything about it, and in fact the room is not large enough to hold many persons; it is perhaps not more than one-third the size of this Committee Room. I have known that little room to be occupied as a Court by Captain Scott all day long. I believe the Honorable Chairman of the Committee has himself been professionally engaged in cases that have been heard in this room.

888. Does Captain Scott adjudicate on serious cases in this room? Frequently, not only himself but other Magistrates use it. When there has been licensing business going on in the other Courts, I have known my own room to be made a fourth Court, and Mr. Smithers' room has sometimes been used in the same way, when a case has been heard with closed doors—a case of rape, for instance.

- H. Connell, junr., Esq., C.P.S.
30 July, 1862.
889. By the Chairman : These cases are of very rare occurrence? Very rare.
890. You mentioned by name as having been present at these Courts—do you not know I have objected to it? I am not aware; you never objected to me—you never informed me.
891. By Mr. Lucas : That was not necessary, was it? No.
892. By the Chairman : Do you not know that I have protested against my cases being taken before Captain Scott in that room? I never heard of it. I have always been under the impression that it has been a matter of great convenience, and I believe Captain Scott has done it with that view.
893. I believe these cases are principally for breaches of —? Breaches of the Omnibus By-laws, Municipal By-laws, Carters Act, and so on. You are aware they are very numerous.
894. Have you had any complaints as to the inefficiency of your department, from solicitors and others interested in the business of the Court? I am not aware that, with regard to myself, any complaint has been sent to the Government, or that any complaint has been made against me, except in one instance by Mr. Cory.
895. I am alluding to the whole department? Some persons have to wait for hours to get the signatures of Magistrates, and I have heard them grumbling in the passage that their time has been lost; but I never heard any complaint as to inefficiency in the office.
896. Have you heard persons complain of being subject to very great inconvenience by delays in the office? Except in the particular case I referred to just now, never.
897. You said you had had complaints from Mr. Read, the gaoler? He complained to me one day, with reference to the prisoners' warrants not being prepared sufficiently soon for the prisoners to be classified.
898. Who is to blame for that? It is because there is no Magistrate to sign the warrants.
899. Where is Captain Scott? At Cockatoo Island perhaps, or he may have been sent for from Government House, or by the Colonial Secretary.
900. By Mr. Lucas : What would take him to Government House? He may be sent for for some particular matter I know nothing about. I know he has been sent for by the Colonial Secretary.
901. By the Chairman : How often has he been sent for from Government House? I cannot say. I have heard him say, I have just got a note from the Governor, and I am going down; and I have seen notes from Mr. Cowper frequently,* and he has gone down to the Colonial Secretary's Office.
902. Then Captain Scott is frequently called away from his official duties by the Colonial Secretary and the Governor? Frequently. I have seen notes repeatedly† from the Colonial Secretary, and sometimes from the Governor, requesting Captain Scott's attendance; and this morning there was a note from Captain M'Lerie, as is frequently the case, on subjects I am not aware of. This morning I know it was about the division of the city, for he said to me—"Here is a note from Captain M'Lerie, requesting me to meet him with regard to the police division of the city, but I do not see how I can leave the office. The object is to give the Water Police Office more duty than it is empowered to do now."
903. By Mr. Hoskins : Then Captain Scott is frequently called away from his duties? Yes.
904. By the Chairman : By whom is the business of the office conducted during his absence? The chamber business is of course left undone.
905. Is there not a large amount of chamber business to transact? There is a great deal.
906. Is it not the most important business in the whole office? It is very important business.
907. Is it not the most important in the whole office? It is not more important than the trial of cases.
908. Is it possible to proceed with the trial of any cases unless the chamber business is regularly and properly attended to? It is very necessary it should be attended to.
909. Will you answer my question;—Is it possible to proceed with the trial of cases unless the chamber business is regularly attended to? The trial of cases in many instances has nothing to do with chamber business.
910. Can any case be heard by the Bench without having regularly passed through the proper officers of the Court? A case may be initiated by an attorney, by coming and paying his 6s. 6d. fee, and placing it on the sheet; there is no chamber business then.
911. Is not the chamber business the most important business of the office? It is not the most important, decidedly not.
912. Which do you consider the most important? One is as important as the other.
913. Can warrants be issued from the office without passing through the regular process? Warrants in some instances are prepared out of doors, at any Magistrate's house, and brought to the office, and the case placed on the sheet.
914. About how many warrants have you issued during the past year? I cannot answer that question just now.
915. And about how many have been prepared out of the office? I cannot answer that question.
916. Can you name more than half a dozen that have been prepared out of the office during the time you have been there? As far as my experience goes I do not think there have been half a dozen.
917. Speaking of warrants, I think you stated, yesterday, that they were never granted except on information on oath? No, never; not to my knowledge, of course.

* NOTE (on revision) :—Omit frequently.

† NOTE (on revision) :—Omit repeatedly.

918. I think you also said that you knew of only two cases in which warrants have been cancelled by the Justices—the case of Bucknell, and the other by Mr. Day? Yes.
919. Did Mr. Day ever cancel a warrant? I am not aware of it; I heard so.
920. Did you state yesterday that you had heard so? Yes, I think so. Mr. Day came to me himself and told me of it.
921. Did Mr. Day tell you he had cancelled a warrant? Yes.
922. When did he tell you? At the time it took place.
923. Do you not know that in the case you allude to, the person was apprehended and brought before Mr. Day and discharged? I do not know the particulars.
924. Do you not know that Mr. Day acted under legal advice in the whole of that transaction? Well, I do not know anything connected with the matter except what I heard from him; in fact, the matter appeared to me so unimportant at the time that I scarcely noticed the case.
925. You do not know whether the warrant was cancelled in Bucknell's case? Yes, I saw it afterwards; the warrant was cancelled.
926. By whom? By Captain Scott.
927. How long had the warrant been in the hands of the police before it was cancelled? I do not know.
928. You do not know? No, I cannot say for a fact, not for a day or two. The first intimation I got of it was when Mr. Kettle came to me, and I went to Sub-inspector Read's office, to know the facts of the case.
929. By Mr. Lucas: You know it was in the hands of the police? Yes.
930. By the Chairman: How long does it usually take to prepare an information? It depends on the circumstances.
931. Do you produce any form of information this morning? Yes, I produce one under the Bakers and Millers Act. (Vide Appendix B.)
932. Do you consider this a fair sample of the length of the informations to produce to this Committee? This is another sample. (Vide Appendix B 2.)
933. Do you produce any other? No. Some of the maintenance cases are very long—much more lengthy than that.
934. Have you many cases for breach of the Bakers and Millers Act? Not many cases. There were four last week for weights and measures.
935. In which the informations were dismissed? One was dismissed and three withdrawn.
936. Why was it dismissed? I do not know.
937. Was it not in consequence of an objection to the informality of the information? I am not aware; I heard some remarks to the effect that they were informal.
938. You stated, yesterday, that the summonses could not be prepared at the same time as the informations? I give that as my opinion.
939. Can you state why not? This morning I asked one of the oldest and most experienced clerks in the office as to whether it could be done, and he says most decidedly not. In fact, I conferred with nearly all the gentlemen in the office, and they all came to one conclusion.
940. Can you state why they cannot be prepared at the same time? If they are prepared at the same time then the other business must be at a stand-still.
941. By Mr. Lucas: That is the only reason? That is the only reason; that is to say, if the clerk has to prepare the summonses after he prepares the information, which takes some little time, while he was doing that his other work would be neglected.
942. Have you got with you copies of summonses filled up as they are usually filled up in these cases? Not in those cases, I have not. These are summonses in different matters. (The witness handed in copies of certain summonses. Vide Appendix C.)
943. By the Chairman: Do you produce these as fair samples of the summonses issued from your office? I believe, in cases of this kind (referring to one), this is a very fair sample; this is a case under the Deserted Wives and Children's Act.
944. And the others are what? I asked Mr. Armstrong to give me copies of the usual summonses, and he gave me these; I have not looked at them.
945. You produce these four to show the nature of the summons usually issued from the office? I asked for them, and they were given to me this morning; I believe them to be correct; I have not looked over them particularly; I trust to Mr. Armstrong, who is a very efficient clerk indeed.
946. By Mr. Lucas: Was that always your opinion of Mr. Armstrong? Yes.
947. You never mentioned anything else to any one? Well, I may have said he is an eccentric character, but he is very regular in his work.
948. Have you never complained of him to any person? No, I do not think I have.
949. By the Chairman: You have known cases to be frequently adjourned for want of Magistrates? Yes.
950. And very frequently there are no Magistrates at all? Yes, at the commencement of the morning.
951. How many Magistrates are usually required to open the Court? That depends on the nature of the cases to be heard. Under some Acts only one Magistrate is required to adjudicate.
952. Are not the drunkards usually disposed of —? That is in the Criminal or Charge Court.
953. Who opens that Court? That is opened by Captain Scott regularly every morning.
954. Every morning? I believe so; I do not go in to look.
955. You do not know of your own knowledge? I am not aware of any one else doing it except Captain Scott.
956. Do you go there every morning to see? Very frequently I do.

H. Connell,

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.,
C.P.S.

30 July, 1862.

957. And you always saw Captain Scott? I would not be certain about that.
958. Does he not usually leave the Court so soon as the drunkards are disposed of? I cannot answer that question. He might possibly leave the bench and then go back again.
959. Did I understand you to state that the police usually served the summonses on their beats? I believe the summonses are usually served by a constable attached to our department, named Cook; but when they are beyond his beat or district, I believe they are given into the hands of the police—I do not know it as a fact.
960. In point of fact, you have no knowledge on the subject? Yes, I have a good deal of knowledge of it.
961. Were you correct in stating that the police usually serve the summonses on their beats? Yes, I believe so.
962. By Mr. Caldwell: Beyond the distance Cook is expected to go? Yes.
963. By the Chairman: I believe you stated, yesterday, that the whole proceedings of the Bench were frequently suspended, in consequence of the interruptions occasioned by persons wishing to get the Magistrates to sign informations? Yes, and by persons who go in to be bound over to keep the peace, by persons who go in to be bound over to prosecute at Quarter Sessions—to appear at gaol delivery—to produce property the subject of a criminal charge in the superior Courts; and by persons who go in to get sworn to affidavits, to get informations and get summonses, and to be sworn under a variety of Acts.
964. And that is all owing to there being no Magistrate to attend to the chamber business? Yes, exactly, from there being no Magistrate to attend to the chamber business.
965. Have you ever summoned any Magistrates specially to attend to chamber business? I am not aware that any summons ever went out for that purpose.
966. Have you ever been instructed by any person to summon any Magistrates for chamber duties? Never.
967. Have you, in point of fact, received any instructions since your appointment as to the duties of your office? Yes, I have received circulars from the Colonial Treasurer, as to the duties—the usual circular sent to all Clerks of Petty Sessions; I have had two or three as to what my duties are as a collector of revenue.
968. Never as to the business of the office itself? Never as to the business of the office itself.
969. Did I not understand you to say, yesterday, that you had received instructions from the Colonial Secretary to summon Magistrates to attend to chamber business? Never to attend to chamber business.
970. Are you aware if Captain Scott received such instructions? I have heard Captain Scott say that Mr. Cowper suggested to him that he should call a meeting of the Magistrates, to consult as to the advisability of having a roster for that purpose.
971. No roster has been kept for that purpose? No.
972. How long is it since you heard Captain Scott speak of that? Some few weeks ago.
973. You stated, yesterday, that you never heard persons complain of the delays of the Court, or as to the mode in which justice should be administered at the Court? I have sometimes seen letters in the papers to that effect.
974. Have you not frequently known cases to be postponed there from day to day? I have seen on the sheets that cases have been postponed, for what reasons I cannot tell.
975. Have you ever heard any persons complain of these delays? No, I have not; probably if there have been complaints —
976. If there have been they would not reach your ears? No, I am not much about the Courts.
977. And you say that frequently there is no Magistrate to open the Court? When I say that I am speaking of the Summons Court.
978. Do you find that frequently happen when any case of importance is likely to occupy the attention of the Court? I cannot answer that.
979. Do you not know that on many occasions they can scarcely find room on the bench for all the Magistrates? That is when licensing business is on.
980. No other business? The appointment of collectors of the electoral lists brings a good many Magistrates; there were twenty-six present on the last occasion.
981. Do you not know that Magistrates have attended for particular cases who have not been seen on the bench, except on particular occasions, for years? Yes, I have seen Magistrates on the bench that I had never seen before.
982. For particular cases? I do not know whether they came for particular cases.
983. Have you not heard so? I have heard so.
984. You stated, yesterday, that there was no room that Magistrates could retire to? There is no room.
985. Was there one in Mr. Dowling's time? I am not aware; I was never there in Mr. Dowling's time.
986. I believe you stated, yesterday, that you had known cases in which summonses and informations had been signed in blank by Magistrates? I do not know it of my own knowledge—I am not aware that I said informations.
987. Did you not state, yesterday, that you had known summonses and informations signed in blank? If I said informations I must have made a mistake.
988. Have you made a mistake in anything else? Possibly I may have made a mistake.
989. Then you have only been informed that summonses have been signed in blank—you do not know even that of your own knowledge? I understand that summonses have been. I cannot call it distinctly to mind; but I have a faint idea that I have seen them. I know it has been spoken of that summonses have been signed in blank, although it is specially laid down by Mr. George Robert Nichols, in his edition of Sir John Jervis' Act, that it is a most irregular proceeding. I have seen them, in fact, though I cannot call to mind by whom they were signed.

990. With reference to subpoenas issued by the Court, I believe you stated, yesterday, that you generally issue the common form? Yes. H. Connell,
Jnr., Esq.,
C.P.S.
991. Have you had any complaints at any time of the non-attendance of witnesses under those subpoenas? I have. 30 July, 1862.
992. And notwithstanding these complaints, unless special application be made for summonses, you always issue the common subpoena? Yes.
993. Knowing at the same time that the attendance of witnesses cannot be enforced? I beg to correct what I said yesterday in that respect. I think the common subpoena is as good as the summons.
994. That is your opinion? Yes. It is prescribed by the 5th William IV., No. 22, section 4, that where a person is summoned to attend, and fails to do so, he is liable to be fined not less than £2 nor more than £20. That was an omission of mine yesterday.
995. By Mr. Lucas: When you know there has been an Act passed which gives another form of summons, do you not think that virtually repeals the former one? It does not virtually repeal it. One is a summons on oath, and the other is without oath.
996. By the Chairman: According to your idea, the establishment now is a model of perfection? The only drawbacks are owing to the building. If we had a better contrived building it would be better.
997. The whole of the clerks are working most harmoniously together? I should say they are.
998. How long has that been the case? Since I have been in the office, so far as I am concerned.
999. During the whole of that time? During the whole of that time.
1000. Have you not frequently complained to Captain Scott of the conduct of the clerks under you? That is where discipline is concerned.
1001. You found the whole of them, on your entering the office, first class clerks? So far as the duties are concerned they are excellent clerks, and understand them thoroughly.
1002. Is there at the present time a good feeling existing between your side and the other side of the office? I am not aware of any bad feeling.
1003. You still state that you are not aware of any bad feeling? I still state so distinctly.
1004. In cases where complaints have been made by yourself, how have those complaints been made? On paper.
1005. By letter in the usual way? By memorandum.
1006. Which memoranda, I suppose, have been from time to time destroyed? No.
1007. Have you any of them in the office? I have a mass of them.
1008. By Mr. Hoskins: Are you speaking of complaints made by some of the clerks against other clerks? No. For instance, if a gentleman has been absent from his duty, it is my duty to call upon him to state the reasons for such absence. When I first took charge I found that some of the clerks were frequently away—possibly from intemperance—and it was my duty then, following out the system of the service, to call upon him for an explanation; I have said on paper,—will Mr. So-and-so explain the cause of his absence, and he has very likely come to me and said so-and-so and so-and-so; but I have always said he must put it on paper, and then, whatever excuse he made, I have laid it before Captain Scott.
1009. By the Chairman: You have made repeated complaints? That is, of irregularities—
1010. On the part of your fellow clerks? Yes.
1011. Repeatedly? Yes. When I first went to the office the irregularity of attendance was so great that Captain Scott wrote this memorandum, which I will read. (Memorandum read, and handed in. Vide Appendix D.)
1012. Do you know how the ill feeling was caused in the first instance? What ill feeling?
1013. Was there any ill feeling? Between whom?
1014. With reference to your own appointment, for instance? I believe the only ill feeling that existed in the matter was on the part of Mr. Smithers.
1015. Is not Mr. Smithers a most efficient clerk? He is. When I was appointed to the office of Clerk of Petty Sessions, I, of course, thought it was a hard case for me to be placed over gentlemen who had been so many years in the Central Police Office. Of course the Government had their reasons for appointing me; but before I accepted the appointment, I went to the gentlemen in the office, and said I would forego the appointment if Mr. Cowper would appoint any of them. The answer to me was, "D—n your eyes, if you ever come here I will smash you."
1016. By whom was that said? I will not mention the name, but it was said by one of the gentlemen who is still inimical to me. I have never had any words with him since I have been in the office. He said he would smash me or any other person Mr. Cowper sent. The ill feeling was engendered by my appointment.
1017. It was caused by the appointment of a stranger over the heads of those who had been long in the office? Yes. But I have never had any angry words with Mr. Smithers or any other gentleman since I have been in the office; I never give them a chance.
1018. Do you recollect on one occasion Mr. Smithers being absent from the office, and Mr. Crane informing you that he had received a letter from Mr. Smithers on the subject of his absence? Yes, I recollect the subject well.
1019. Do you recollect its being mentioned to you that Mr. Smithers had had a fit? Not to this day; this is the first time I have heard of it.
1020. Are you quite certain of that? Quite positive.
1021. I would ask you to think over the matter? To the best of my recollection it was not; I distinctly deny it.
1022. You know Mr. Crane perfectly well? I do.
1023. He is now Clerk of Petty Sessions at the Water Police Court? Yes.
- 1024.

H. Connell, 1024. Did he, on any occasion, tell you that the cause of Mr. Smithers' absence was that he Junr., Esq., had had a fit and fallen out of bed in a fit, and did you demand to see the letter? What C.P.S. letter are you referring to?

30 July, 1862. 1025. I am referring to Mr. Crane telling you he had received a letter from Mr. Smithers, informing him that Mr. Smithers had fallen from his bed in a fit, and your demanding to see the letter, although Mr. Crane told you at the time that it related to private business of Mr.
 Smithers? No; he told me he had received a letter from Mr. Smithers saying he was sick.

1026. Did you insist on seeing the letter? Yes.

1027. And you did see it? I do not think I did.

1028. Did you not take the letter from Mr. Crane's possession and insist on seeing it? I am not aware that I did.

1029. Will you undertake to state that you did not? I will not undertake to state anything of the sort. If a clerk is absent he should not write to another clerk to excuse himself, but should report the reason for his absence to the head of the department.

1030. Did you not threaten to report Mr. Crane unless he gave up this letter, although Mr.
 Crane stated that the letter referred to private business? Private business had nothing to do with the office.

1031. Will you answer the question;—Did you not threaten to report Mr. Crane unless he gave up the letter, although he stated that it referred to Mr. Smithers' private business? I cannot recollect.

1032. Were not the whole of these differences caused by what was regarded as your own harsh conduct to many of these gentlemen at the time? I am not aware that I was ever harsh to any of them.

1033. You found them first class clerks, and yet these differences arose between you? I never had any difference with any one of them.

1034. By Mr. Caldwell: Had you any fault to find with them for irregularity? Yes, there was great irregularity, but I never had any personal difference with any of them; I do not call a matter of discipline a personal matter. I was informed that Mr. Smithers had written a letter to Mr. Crane, informing him of the reason for his absence, and I said he should report it officially. It was the more necessary to be a little strict —

1035. By the Chairman: Finish what you were going to say? I said to Mr. Crane that it was necessary for him to produce the letter or note accounting for Mr. Smithers' absence, because it was impossible that Mr. Crane could receive a private note from any gentleman explaining to him why he was absent, and that that should be taken as a sufficient excuse.

1036. For all he told you it was a private note, you insisted on seeing it? I do not recollect.

1037. By Mr. Caldwell: If he had told you it was a private note, would you have insisted on seeing it? No, I should imagine not.

1038. By the Chairman: You will not undertake to say you did not do so? No; it is so long ago that I cannot recollect all that took place; I suppose it is two years ago now.

1039. By Mr. Caldwell: Do you remember his telling you he had received a private note?
 I recollect he said something about receiving a note which he said was private; I recollect that distinctly. I said, I will not take that as an acknowledgment of Mr. Smithers' absence—writing a private note to you; it was not right to me as chief clerk in the office.

1040. By the Chairman: Do you recollect Mr. Crane leaving your office? Yes, I recollect his appointment as Clerk of Petty Sessions at the Water Police Office.

1041. Do you recollect having any conversation with him shortly before he left? I recollect giving him some assistance with respect to the duties.

1042. Do you think he required that assistance? He never was employed in that kind of work before; he seemed very much obliged to me.

1043. Did Mr. Crane give you no advice at all before leaving? I cannot recollect; he may have done so.

1044. As to your treatment of the clerks in the office? I cannot recollect that he did;
 I think it would be a piece of presumption for anyone in his position to give me advice as to how I should manage the office.

1045. Did he or did he not? I say I do not recollect such a circumstance. It might be that he would recollect it himself, but the matter would be too insignificant for me to think much of it.

1046. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you consider that the management of the Police Office is perfect? No; I think that if a gentleman were appointed to do the chamber business, and Captain Scott were vested with double powers as a Police Magistrate, the office would then be in a much more perfect state.

1047. Will you explain what suggestions you would make? I think that if the Clerk of Petty Sessions was appointed to do the chamber business —

1048. What do you mean by chamber business? For instance, when informations and affidavits are brought to me, to be entered in a book, they have afterwards to be hawked about to find a Magistrate that will sign them—sometimes on the bench, sometimes in the passage, or anywhere; but if, when I receive the fee, I could swear the parties and sign the papers, there would be an end of the business. Then again, with regard to summonses, though it might be convenient to sign the information only in the first instance, I would always be there to sign the summonses when they were ready; and the same with distress warrants and committal warrants; I understand my work and the different forms that have to be used, and I would not hesitate to sign them. As it stands now these papers are hawked about the streets; they go to Mr. Peden's house, to Mr. Caldwell's house, to any other Magistrate's house that can be got to sign them; in fact, to show that there is some truth in the matter, I have a paper here signed by thirty-three or thirty-four Magistrates, recommending

mending my appointment as a Magistrate for these duties. I have made a copy of it, which I will hand in, but I will show you the original. (Copy handed in. Vide Appendix E.) I have hesitated in sending it to the Government because I know it will not be done.

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.,
C.P.S.

1049. By the Chairman: In what way were the signatures obtained? These signatures were obtained in a fair and honest way; I do not think the parties were asked twice, any one of them; I believe only three gentlemen I asked—Mr. Lucas, Mr. George Hill, and Mr. Oatley—refused to sign. I never asked any of them to sign it until they had read it. When they had read it, I said, Do you concur in that? and most of them have said at once, Most decidedly. It has never been taken out of the office to get signatures.

30 July, 1862.

1050. By Mr. Hoskins: Why do you think it would expedite the public business if this recommendation were adopted? Because I am always in my room, and would have no hesitation in signing these documents, so that there would be no delay, as there is now.

1051. How many Magistrates are in attendance daily? As an average, seven or eight. The Magistrates are very seldom there after the business of the Courts is over, and there is a great deal of business that requires to be done after that time.

1052. Do you think that if this application was carried out, it would enable Captain Scott to be more frequently and for a more lengthened period of the day on the bench? I do not think it would be necessary for him then to leave it, and if he were vested with double powers, then if the other Magistrates did go away he could finish a case.

1053. He would be able to devote more time to bench duties? Yes. We should have then three Magistrates, in fact—he being vested with the power of two, and myself being one—always on the spot.

1054. As these Magistrates have signed that recommendation, it would naturally be inferred that there are large arrears of business? No; the business I refer to must be finished every day; warrants for committing prisoners to gaol, for instance, must be signed that day, otherwise they cannot be received.

1055. Are there any arrears of business? Not in the clerical portion of it.

1056. I am not talking of the clerical portion—are cases frequently adjourned for want of Magistrates? They are frequently remanded; I cannot exactly answer that question. I only see the sheets, and I see that they are remanded; I cannot tell for what reason.

1057. Are there any other suggestions you could make which would tend to facilitate the despatch of business? No. I may mention that £1,000 has been voted for putting us in a better position as regards the building, and the offices are being arranged so that the clerks will be more together. If the warrants, informations, affidavits, and other matters of that kind, could all be signed at once, it would be a great help to the despatch of business. I could show you hundreds of forms that require the signature of a Magistrate, and sometimes a gentleman will put on his spectacles at one, for a quarter of an hour, before he will get through it. All that prevents expedition in business.

1058. Do you consider the clerical staff sufficient? Yes, when Mr. Martin's appointment is filled up. Gentlemen just recently appointed, of course, take time to be thoroughly efficient; the duties are not like the duties of temporary clerks in other offices; they require to have some knowledge of law.

1059. You think that if your suggestions were carried out, the public would have no reasonable ground of complaint? No, I think not. The office is in first rate order; the regularity of the clerks is very good; they know their work, and are improving every day; the only drawback is, that we are obliged to send a summons all over the district to be signed by the person who signed the information in the first instance.

1060. By Mr. Caldwell: You spoke of Captain Scott examining your accounts;—to what extent has he carried that examination? There is no decided check by Captain Scott himself, but he frequently comes into my room and sits sometimes, and sometimes stands, and watches the progress of the check by the other clerks; he has frequently sat in a chair in my room while some gentleman in the office—Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Hales, or Mr. Martin, rather—has been comparing with me, because he signs at the end of the month a declaration that they are correct.

1061. Do you think his examination of the accounts has been sufficient to enable him to make that declaration? Most decidedly not. It is a matter very few persons understand. Each statute gives an appropriation.

1062. He is called upon to make a declaration? Yes, and to the best of his ability he does it, trusting to me, I suppose. If he did examine the accounts thoroughly he would have no time to do many other matters.

1064. You say Captain Scott has been frequently called away from the office by the Colonial Secretary—has it been on official business? To the best of my knowledge it has been on official business. A great many petitions pass to the Crown, on which it is necessary to get his opinion as to the nature of the cases.

1065. By the Chairman: Since the appointment of this Committee, have you made any statements as to the nature of the evidence you would give here? I do not understand the question.

1066. Have you at all looked into matters, to prepare yourself for examination before this Committee? No, I did not know what the points of inquiry would be.

1067. Did you make no preparation at all? Very little; I thought you might ask me something about the fines, fees, and so on, and I was going to give you the statistics.

1068. By Mr. Caldwell: Would you not consider it your duty to prepare yourself? Yes, but I consider myself always prepared.

On taking charge of this office I stated it was not my intention to establish a "Time Book," but would rather trust to the honor of the gentlemen to attend regularly, naming half-past 9 in the morning as an hour which would satisfy me.

The gentlemen present assured me I might trust to their honor; how this promise has been kept I leave to them to judge of.

My anxiety is to make the duty as little irksome as possible, but when I perceive so systematic a neglect of hours of attendance, I must, for my own sake, Mr. Connell's, and my duty to the public, establish the "Time Book," and I here direct it to be re-established.

Sydney, 30 May, 1862.

In order to facilitate the despatch of public business at the Central Police Office, as well as to prevent the unseemly interruptions which daily take place in the two Courts, and frequently three Courts, through the Justices having to execute bail-bonds, binding over witnesses, granting and signing informations, affidavits, subpoenas, declarations, &c., &c., &c., we, the undermentioned Magistrates, do most urgently recommend to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, the appointment of Mr. Henry Connell to the Magistracy.

This appointment, we confidently believe, will give universal satisfaction to the public, the Magistrates, and the legal profession, and we believe, independently of the amount of public benefit to be derived, that Mr. Connell will, without any equivocation, exclusively confine himself to the duties of Chamber business.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Samuel Bailey Dowsett called in and examined:—

- Mr. S. B. Dowsett.
- 1 Aug., 1862.
1069. By the Chairman: I believe you have been for some time engaged as a Reporter on the Sydney Morning Herald? I have.
1070. Have you attended at the Central Police Court for any period? I cannot say precisely how long;—perhaps ten or twelve years.
1071. Almost daily? Daily, except when detained by indisposition.
1072. Are you in a position to afford any information to this Committee as to the working of that office? Of the office?
1073. The office and the Court generally? As to the Court, I should suppose I am in a position to give information, but as to the office I hardly could do so, for this reason, that although I have access to the office, as a reporter, for the use of such papers as are requisite, and see and hear things in the office, yet I have no right to see and hear them. Whatever takes place in the Court is, of course, public, and I may make use of it.
1074. Has your attention been at all directed to the mode in which the business is conducted in the Court itself? Yes.
1075. How is that business generally conducted? With great irregularity, and, I think, with not much satisfaction.
1076. To the suitors or to the public generally? To the public. One suitor or the other is sure to be dissatisfied.
1077. By Mr. Cowper: The person who loses the case is sure to be dissatisfied? Yes.
1078. By the Chairman: You say the proceedings have been conducted with great irregularity? Yes.
1079. Do you mean by the Magistrates or persons having charge of the Court? I mean that the business of the Court is conducted with a great want of decorum, and that it is very frequently difficult to ascertain on what grounds the Magistrates arrive at their decisions.
1080. Have you observed the conduct of the Police Magistrate in conducting the business of the Court? Yes.
1081. How are cases usually conducted by him? I think that, in general, his want of information or want of tact is manifest.
1082. Does he frequently sit in Court? Not frequently. I believe that the Court is usually opened by him, but he retires as soon as another Magistrate comes in, or very shortly afterwards.
1083. Almost immediately on a second Magistrate making his appearance, Captain Scott gives up charge of the Court to him? To whatever Magistrate may happen to be there.

1084. Have you heard any complaints as to the decisions given by Captain Scott? Very frequently. Mr. S. B. Dowsett.
1085. From whom? From the public at large.
1086. Do not cases involving complicated questions of law and fact frequently arise at the Police Office? Undoubtedly. Aug., 1862.
1087. Are such cases disposed of in a manner calculated to give satisfaction? I cannot say that no cases are, but many are not.
1088. Do you know of your own knowledge that it is difficult at times to open the second Court for want of Magistrates? Yes, it has frequently been so.
1089. Do you know of cases, or have you heard of cases, in which Magistrates who very seldom take part in the proceedings of the Court attend where any cases of importance are expected? Yes; I cannot recall to mind any just now, but such cases have frequently occurred.
1090. That Magistrates frequently attend to take particular cases? Yes; I have sometimes heard that a particular Magistrate was coming to take a particular case, and it has so turned out.
1091. You have heard it rumoured about the offices and about the Court? Yes, and very often it has so occurred.
1092. Can you name any particular cases in which the decisions of the Police Magistrate have been questioned? I could easily discover some, but I cannot recall them to mind at the present moment.
1093. Do you recollect two cases in which Mr. Penfold was complainant? Yes.
1094. By whom were those two cases heard and disposed of? By Captain Scott, and, I think, Mr. Peden.
1095. Did the decisions in these cases strike you as being curious at all? I think they struck everybody as being strange.
1096. I think I understood you to say, you had frequently heard complaints as to the general conduct of business in the Central Police Court? Yes.
1097. In your opinion, are those complaints well or ill founded? Very frequently well founded.
1098. Can you state the cause of those complaints? I think that in very many cases it arises from the decisions being at variance with the law or against evidence.
1099. Were complaints so often made during the time Mr. Dowling was Police Magistrate? No; nor was there such cause for them.
1100. Have these complaints increased within the last twelve months? Very much.
1101. Do you think it necessary that the Police Magistrate of Sydney should be a lawyer? He ought to understand the law certainly, for one reason among others, that the unpaid Magistrates very frequently refer to the Police Magistrate, when they have a difference of opinion between themselves or are in any doubt.
1102. You say you are frequently inside the offices of the Court? Yes.
1103. And you consequently know the whole of the clerks there? Yes, I know them all.
1104. Are the deposition clerks, and the clerks in the office generally, efficient clerks? I can only speak of the deposition clerks.
1105. Well, the deposition clerks—say Mr. Smithers? Mr. Smithers is an efficient deposition clerk, but no other clerk in the office has had sufficient experience.
1106. That is, at the present time? At the present time.
1107. Were Mr. Davidson and Mr. Crane efficient? Mr. Crane was a very good clerk. I never heard any complaints of Mr. Davidson, but he was seldom employed in taking depositions.
1108. Mr. Crane and Mr. Smithers, the two old deposition clerks, were very good deposition clerks? Yes.
1109. Did they not frequently not only take depositions but conduct the examinations? Very frequently.
1110. And both of them assisted the Magistrates at times? Yes. Of course I cannot speak of Mr. Crane now, because he is not in the department; but Mr. Smithers does not volunteer his assistance now as he used to do: he used unasked to direct the Magistrates.
1111. Until within what time back? Perhaps more particularly within the last twelve or eighteen months.
1112. He did at one time render very great assistance to the Magistrates? Yes. Of course he did not consider that the unpaid Magistrates would be always up in points of law, or ready to refer to Acts of Council, or to the clause of the Act bearing on the case then before the Court; he frequently directed their attention in that way.
1113. You stated, just now, that you had frequently seen the Second Court without Magistrates to open it? Yes.
1114. Has that led to inconvenience or delay? It has. The cases on the summons sheet have sometimes been postponed until the criminal charges, as I may call them, have been disposed of; and it has frequently arisen, that then it was so late in the day that it was impossible to get through the business on the summons sheet.
1115. And cases have been postponed in consequence? I have frequently known them to be postponed day after day for a week.
1116. Owing to the non-attendance of Magistrates? Yes, I imagine so.
1117. Have you known cases postponed on other grounds? Yes, by request of parties, perhaps.
1118. Have you not known cases postponed from day to day without the parties being consulted? Yes; or at the request of one party without the consent of the other.
1119. Cases have been postponed on the application of one party, behind the back of the other? Just so.

- Mr. S. B. Dowsett.
1 Aug., 1862.
1120. Have you heard any complaints made on this score? Frequently, both in Court and out. These postponements having taken place in Court, the parties, being outside, have sometimes been ignorant of it.
1121. And I suppose they have been kept in attendance with their witnesses? Yes.
1122. And brought there from day to day? Yes; and then sometimes when the case was called on the witnesses were not there.
1123. Do you consider the establishment in perfect working order? I think it is thoroughly out of joint.
1124. By Mr. Lucas: You have been there many years;—do you think there has been any improvement in the manner in which the business has been done at the Police Office since the appointment of a Police Magistrate? There has not been that improvement which was expected from the appointment of a Police Magistrate.
1125. Has there been any improvement, since the appointment of the present Clerk of Petty Sessions, in the clerical branch of the establishment? I cannot say—that is out of my department altogether.
1126. Do you think there are more cases postponed now, for want of attendance of Magistrates, than before the present Police Magistrate was appointed? Yes.
1127. I believe the police generally are not under the direction of the Magistrates in the Police Office? I believe not.
1128. Have you often seen the Court left without a policeman? Yes.
1129. Have you often known the Magistrates to request the attendance of a policeman, and some time has elapsed before they could get one? Yes.
1130. To keep silence in the Court? Very often.
1131. Do you think there should be a certain number of policemen told off every day to do duty in the Police Courts, and that they should be put under the direction of the sitting Magistrates for the time being? I think there ought to be some persons, whether policemen or not, over whom the Magistrates would have control.
1132. At the present time there is no person? No.
1133. Have you seen exhibitions between professional gentlemen practising in the Court and the Magistrates? Exhibitions of temper?
1134. Yes? I have.
1135. Do you remember an instance, some time back, where two professional gentlemen were quarrelling, and one called the other a liar and a scoundrel, and the other retorted by saying he was a greater swindler than Polack? I was not in Court at the beginning of the affair, but I was in before it was over, and that was the language I understood had been used by them—one called the other a scoundrel, and the other retorted as you say.
1136. Did he preface the word scoundrel with anything? Speaking from information, I believe he said “truckling scoundrel.”
1137. Do you know whether that was brought under the notice of the Magistrates by anybody? I understood that both the Clerk of the Court brought it under the notice of the Magistrates, and that the insulted attorney appealed to the Bench before he retaliated.
1138. Do you know what was the reply of the Magistrates? Yes.
1139. What did they say? One said to the clerk, “Never mind, let them go on, let them have their swing.”
1140. By Mr. Cowper: What Magistrates were they that made that answer? Mr. Peden was one, I think, and I am not sure that Mr. Asher was not the other. Which of the two was spokesman I cannot tell; I rather think, from my information, it was Mr. Peden. This is a circumstance, you must understand, that I am speaking of from information, but I have no doubt about its correctness.
1141. By Mr. Lucas: You heard some of the proceedings yourself? Yes, I was in before the tumult had settled down—before the case under adjudication was proceeded with. I went in from the other Court, because I was informed that two attorneys were abusing each other.
1142. Were you in the Court on one occasion when a professional gentleman indirectly called a Magistrate on the bench a liar, and his brother Magistrate, the Police Magistrate, remained on the bench and took no notice of it—allowed his brother Magistrate to go off the bench, and proceeded with the case? Yes, the Magistrate was contradicted as flatly as it could be done without the use of the monosyllable itself.
1143. By Mr. Hoskins: Can you state the words used? No, it is some time ago, and I did not take any note of it; perhaps the Magistrate himself could give the information; it would probably make a greater impression on his mind than on mine.
1144. By Mr. Lucas: The Police Magistrate was sitting on the bench with the Magistrate who was insulted? Yes.
1145. And took no notice of it, but proceeded with the case? He took no notice of it.
1146. The same Magistrate made his appearance next morning, and refused to hear this professional gentleman unless he apologized? Yes.
1147. Did the professional gentleman then say, “I don’t care if you will not; if you will not, there are plenty others who will”? Yes.
1148. And the other Magistrates on the bench allowed their brother Magistrate again to leave the bench? Yes.
1149. Are these cases frequent? Yes, but not so flagrant as this.
1150. Have you ever known cases to be put off at the request of professional men in opposition to the wishes of suitors? I do not know; the suitors have had no voice in the matter; it was done without consulting them, at all events.
1151. Have you ever seen the Clerk of Petty Sessions on the floor of the Court during the time the proceedings were going on? Yes.

1152. In the Court among the people? Yes.
1153. Have you seen that frequently? Several times.
1154. He came there as a listener, to hear the proceedings? Yes, among the listeners.
1155. Can you bring to mind any cases which have been decided at variance with what you consider law or facts? I do not think it would be difficult to make a list, but I cannot call any to mind just now.
1156. You believe they are frequent? Yes.
1157. You said just now, in answer to a question from the Chairman, that you thought the Police Magistrate should know the law—that he was generally referred to by other Magistrates on knotty points? Very frequently.
1158. Do you not think it would be much better if the Clerk of Petty Sessions was a professional man;—is not that the course generally pursued in England? I understand that the Clerk of the Court in England generally is a professional man, but I cannot say from my own knowledge.
1159. Would it not be better, he being always in his office and the Police Magistrate taking part on the bench, that the Clerk should be the professional man, so that any Magistrates requiring assistance could retire to his room and confer with him, instead of interrupting the business of both Courts by requesting the attendance of the Police Magistrate;—would it not be more convenient? Perhaps it would, but I think the Magistrates themselves would be the best judges of that question.
1160. You say that Mr. Smithers, as deposition clerk, used to assist the Magistrates, by pointing out the Act and the section under which the cases were initiated;—do you not think that if that information was put on the Magistrates' sheet it would be much more convenient? Perhaps it would, but the assistance I mean refers more particularly to cases in which attorneys have been engaged, and have adopted a line of argument not at all applicable, and tending to mislead the Magistrates.
1161. Then in the cases you speak of, the deposition clerk merely directs the Magistrates in matters of opinion, not matters of law? If the Clerk directs the Magistrates to the Act under which the proceeding is instituted, the Magistrate can see that the argument addressed to him is of no force.
1162. If it was placed on the sheet he could refer without the deposition clerk at all? Yes, of course he could.
1163. It is not very seemly, before the Court, for a Magistrate to apply to the deposition clerk for information on these matters, but rather derogatory to his position? I believe it is usual in England, where unpaid Magistrates take their seats upon the bench.
1164. Nevertheless, if the Act and the section of the Act under which the case was initiated, were placed on the sheet, that would give the Magistrate the information as far as the law was concerned, that he gets now from the deposition clerk? Yes.
1165. About the arrangements of the Police Office;—do you think the offices generally are well arranged? I think the whole place as awkwardly arranged as it can well be.
1166. You were there before Mr. Warburton was placed in the Commission of the Peace? Yes.
1167. When he was simply Clerk of Petty Sessions he used to occupy the room that Mr. Delohery occupied in the York-street corner of the building? Yes.
1168. And the information and summons clerks were in the adjoining room? Yes.
1169. After Mr. Warburton was put in the Commission of the Peace, he moved over to the other end of the building, and took possession of the Magistrates' room? He went into the Police Magistrate's room.
1170. Which was not so convenient for the public applying for summonses or warrants as the original arrangement was? It was not so convenient as if he had remained in the other room.
1171. Is there not a great deal of confusion created in consequence of that removal, by persons applying for warrants and summonses going from one end of the building to the other several times to find the different officers? There is a great deal of walking about, and a great deal of time is lost. I think it might be simplified.
1172. The present Clerk of Petty Sessions, when he was appointed, also took possession of the Magistrates' room, and has remained there since? Yes.
1173. Have you heard a great deal of complaint from persons frequenting the Court whose cases are on the sheet and postponed from day to day? Yes.
1174. Complaints are frequent, are they not? Yes; every postponement involves the loss of another day, and they are mostly working people whose suits come on before the Police Court.
1175. Are they not sometimes postponed from day to day for three or four days? Yes, I have known frequent instances.
1176. And frequently when the cases are called on they are written off "no parties"? Very often.
1177. That was not so much the case before the present Police Magistrate was appointed? No.
1178. Is it not a fact that for some two or three years before the present Police Magistrate was appointed, the whole of the sheet was gone through, as a rule, day after day? I think it was.
1179. The unpaid Magistrates used to attend to their duties, and go through the sheet day after day? I think, as a rule, the sheets were cleared off day after day.
1180. In those days there were not so many cases written off "no parties"? No.
1181. By Mr. Hoskins: Was the attorney who charged the Magistrate with telling an untruth suspended by Captain Scott from practising in the Court? Previously he had been.

Mr. S. B.
Dowsett.

1 Aug., 1862.

- Mr. S. B. Dowsett.
 1 Aug., 1862.
1182. Was he subsequently suspended? No.
1183. And Captain Scott heard him? Of course he did.
1184. This offensive remark was conveyed in almost direct language? Yes.
1185. Are the attorneys in the habit of insulting the Magistrates on the bench—using insulting language? Yes, but not so grossly as that.
1186. Does Captain Scott frequently hear this offensive language used to Magistrates—is it applied to himself at any time? Captain Scott is not very frequently in the Courts, and it cannot be very frequently applied to him.
1187. Is the demeanour of the attorneys towards the Magistrates generally offensive? Not of the attorneys generally.
1188. Some few of them? The demeanour of some attorneys is occasionally very offensive; I should take it so, at all events.
1189. They do not show that proper respect to the Magistrates which they ought to do? They do not.
1190. Do they make any difference in their demeanour to Captain Scott over the other Magistrates? Certainly they do not show him any greater deference.
1191. Do they show him more respect? No; some of the unpaid Magistrates receive more respect than is shown to Captain Scott.
1192. As you are in the habit of attending daily, can you tell us how many hours a day, on the average, Captain Scott sits upon the bench? I do not believe he sits one hour a day on the bench, on an average.
1193. Do you know where he is, or what he is doing? No, I cannot tell where he is when he is not on the bench; but he has duties to perform at Cockatoo Island—I understand he goes there one day in the week; and I frequently hear that he is in the Magistrates' private room—his own private room; whether he is or not I cannot tell—I have no doubt he is—I have no reason to disbelieve that.
1194. Do you happen to know whether he has many cases tried in his private room? Sometimes.
1195. Frequently? No, not frequently; on a day when there is a heavy summons sheet—such as when Mr. Stubbs brings in some 30 or 40 cases—Captain Scott takes that sheet into his own room and disposes of the cases; that is not a rule.
1196. Have you heard people express surprise at the infrequency with which Captain Scott is seen upon the bench? Yes, I have heard many complaints from the unpaid Magistrates that the business has been left to them so much.
1197. His absence from the bench is the rule, and his presence the exception? Just so.
1198. You also said that there were frequent complaints against Captain Scott's decisions;—will you be kind enough to tell us what is the general nature of those complaints, and from what class of persons they proceed? Such a class of persons as have cases at the Police Court, and from professional men and others competent to judge.
1199. Will you state the nature of the complaints you yourself would make? That the decisions are contrary to evidence and contrary to law—unsupported by either the one or the other.
1200. Are there any other complaints, such as laxity of attendance? I have said that the unpaid Magistrates complain very often of his long-continued absences from the Courts.
1201. Is his demeanour to witnesses and his brother Magistrates respectful? I think so; I never saw anything in Captain Scott's conduct unbecoming a gentleman.
1202. Do you think, from the nature of the decisions given by Captain Scott, that he is ignorant of the elementary principles of law? I do; I believe him to be in that respect—with every respect to his character as a gentleman—one of the most ignorant.
1203. Can you state of your own knowledge whether that opinion is generally concurred in by people in the habit of attending the Court? I do not know.
1204. By attorneys and by Magistrates? By professional men I know it is, and I have heard Magistrates make the same observation.
1205. Do you happen to know of your own knowledge whether Captain Scott is in the habit of granting warrants and afterwards cancelling them, without having the prisoner brought before him against whom the warrant was issued? I have heard of such a thing, but I do not know it.
1206. Have you heard of such cases having frequently occurred? No, I have heard but of one case, but then as they do not come before the Court there may have been others. There was a notoriety given to the case to which I refer; I suppose everybody has heard or read of it; I mean the case which was referred to in the House.
1207. What case was that? Mr. Bucknell's.
1208. You also say that the business of the Police Court is conducted with great irregularity;—will you state what these irregularities are, and what remedy you would suggest? I think there need be no irregularity if the head of the establishment was up to the mark, and was supplied with an officer to keep order in the Court—an officer over whom the sitting Magistrate, whoever he might be, should have control, as respects the business of the Court. The Magistrates have no control over the police; they go in and out as they please. I do not mention this as matter of fault, but merely as a fact.
1209. Then you consider the irregularities in the Court arise from the paucity of police and the ignorance of the presiding officer? From the incapacity of the Bench, and from the want of order being maintained in the Court.
1210. By the Bench, do I understand you to allude to the general body of the Magistrates as well as the Police Magistrate? Yes, certainly; I should not wish it to be inferred that Captain Scott is the only Magistrate that is not up to the mark.
1211. Do you consider the general body of the Magistrates who attend to dispense justice in the the Police Court men who, from education, acquirements, and intelligence, are qualified to perform the duty? Speaking of many of them, I should say not; but many who are deficient in education—many who are evidently deficient in education—are better Magistrates than some who are more educated.

Mr. S. B.
Dowsett.

1 Aug., 1862.

1212. Do you know whether professional men and suitors have complained of the ignorance of the Magistrates? Of their ignorance of law they have.

1213. Have they ever referred to any competent authority for advice in intricate matters of law;—are they in the habit of referring to anyone, and to whom do they refer? I am not aware, but I have sometimes seen Magistrates leave the Court to go into Captain Scott's room to consult with him, where there has been a difference of opinion on the bench.

1214. Of course I gather from your evidence that you do not consider Captain Scott one of the best authorities to apply to? Just so.

1215. The Magistrates are not very regular in their attendance? No. I am speaking of the body. Some are regular on the days for which they are summoned, and others, on the contrary, come at any time but when they are summoned.

1216. And therefore there is an accumulation of arrears in Court? Yes, very frequently from that cause.

1217. From the Magistrates not attending? Sometimes there have been a sufficient number of Magistrates present in one Court to constitute a second Court; but neither of them would leave that Court to open the second Court. Some of the Magistrates are aware of their own deficiencies and will not sit alone.

1218. Is that the reason you ascribe for their not opening a Court? Yes, sometimes it is the case.

1219. You know as a matter of fact there are a sufficient number of Magistrates in Sydney, if they would attend when summoned? Certainly; there is no complaint in point of number.

1220. You said, in reply to Mr. Driver, that there were instances in which it was the common remark of persons that particular Magistrates would attend to hear certain cases? Yes.

1221. I should infer from that, that these people meant that those Magistrates were interested in the cases? I can only state the fact. On looking over the business paper sometimes before the Court opened—and there has been sometimes a professional man also looking at the paper at the same time—a case has been pointed out to me, and the remark made, Mr. So-and-so is coming to hear that case; and it very often has happened that Mr. So-and-so did come and hear that case, and when that case was over went about his business. That is all I say about it; I do not know anything more about it.

1222. Does that remark apply to any number of Magistrates, that they attend to adjudicate in particular cases? I do not think it does; I have not heard of many; I have heard of many instances, but not of many Magistrates.

1223. Do you know whether any representations of this matter have been made to the Colonial Secretary? I have not the slightest idea. My expression is only of suspicion, from the circumstances I mention; but I think, from the remarks Mr. George Hill made, at a meeting of the Magistrates, there is something in it. He is a very old Magistrate, and knows them all; he may know what I only suspect.

1224. Have you any objection to state the nature of your suspicions? That Magistrates come to the Court to hear particular cases, already decided in their own minds.

1225. Are there any grounds for inference that they are interested in those cases at all? No, except so far as one party or the other was a friend or an acquaintance; not personally or pecuniarily interested—I do not mean to attribute any such corruption as that.

1226. Are there no police in the Court to enforce order—none detailed for that duty? I am not aware whether or not any are told off for that duty; there are sometimes plenty, sometimes none. I presume there is one officer always detailed for Court duty—a superintendent or sergeant—I do not know exactly which—a sergeant, I think; at all events, there is always one on the criminal side of the Court.

1227. Are there a sufficient number stationed in Court to preserve order? I do not know whether they are stationed in Court or merely spectators; frequently there is a large number in Court, waiting for their turn to give evidence; they take no part in keeping order in the Court then.

1228. Are the police respectful to the Magistrates generally in Court? I think so; I do not remember an instance to the contrary.

1229. Do you think these irregularities in the practice of the Police Court would be remedied by the appointment of another Police Magistrate, or the appointment of a Magistrate versed in the law—a lawyer—who would be sitting on the bench adjudicating cases for more hours a day than Captain Scott now does? I think there ought to be at all events one Police Magistrate, and that he ought to be able to give a reason from the law for his judgments. At present the judgments are mere haphazard; to take a case into the Police Court is nothing better than gambling—it is mere luck.

1230. Do you think one Police Magistrate would be sufficient, provided he was a competent person? If there were two Police Magistrates they might very easily do all the business, and I think that would be likely to give greater satisfaction; not because I attribute more sense to a Police Magistrate than to any other, but because, it being his business, he would study the law, and would make himself acquainted with the law, whether previously a lawyer or not. When gentlemen who have business of their own to attend to, and who are summoned perhaps only once a fortnight, and in the interval never take up a book on law, are called upon to adjudicate in difficult cases, I do not wonder at their making mistakes; but I think two paid Magistrates would do all the business satisfactorily.

1231. That is, provided they had the necessary qualifications? Of course.

Mr. S. B.
Dowsett.
1 Aug., 1862.

1232. Can you state whether recently Captain Scott's decisions have shown that he has a better acquaintance with the law than he had when first appointed, or that he has given the matter any consideration at all—that he has studied, in fact? I have not observed it; but speaking recently, he has not been so much in the Court as at the first. When I say recently, I mean since the meeting convened at the Police Office some month or six weeks ago; he has not been so much in Court since that time as previously he was in the habit of being.

1233. What was the object of that meeting? I think it was a meeting convened by Captain Scott to take advice how he should manage the business.

1234. Did Captain Scott take instructions how he should manage his business, from the other Magistrates? That was the object of the meeting, I understand; I was not present.

1235. By Mr. Forster: You say that you have often observed the attorneys address offensive remarks to the Magistrates on the bench—treat them with contempt, in fact? Yes.

1236. Do you find, in that respect, that there is a great difference between the present practice and the practice that prevailed under previous Police Magistrates? Yes.

1237. And are these marks of contempt shown equally when the Police Magistrate is on the bench as in his absence? Every bit.

1238. To him personally, as well as to other Magistrates? Yes; some of the unpaid Magistrates would not put up with what Captain Scott puts up with.

1239. Do you think his forbearance proceeds from amiability of disposition? I think it very likely.

1240. Or from ignorance? I think it is very likely from amiability of disposition.

1241. Does it seem to have deteriorated the administration of justice, do you know? I think that the opinion of the public, as to the administration of justice, is very low.

1242. Do you think it has been declining—getting worse and worse? I think so, within the last year or two.

1243. Do you observe this disrespect of which you speak to have been aggravated since Captain Scott took office? It had shown itself before.

1244. Under other Police Magistrates, or when there was no Police Magistrate? I do not remember any manifestation of it under any previous Police Magistrate; but it has been growing worse lately. I never saw any disrespect shown to Mr. Forbes; I think he would have taken care it was not, at all events, repeated.

1245. Or Mr. Dowling? Or Mr. Dowling. They have reprov'd attorneys before they have gone to such a length as to make it necessary to take notice of it as an insult to the Court.

1246. You spoke of the desultory attendance of the police;—suppose such an event to occur as an attorney being committed for contempt, are there no police there, as a general rule, to obey the orders of the Magistrates? Of course. I was speaking merely of keeping order in the Court.

1247. The Magistrates are not without police to put their orders in force, if they committed any person for contempt? No. Those times are the exception when there are no policemen in Court, not the rule.

1248. If I judge of your remarks rightly, you come to this conclusion, that it is the want of a presiding head, who attends continually and has some knowledge of his business, that is the real evil to be corrected? That is my decided opinion.

1249. By Mr. Caldwell: You have stated that the Bench sometimes give decisions contrary to law and evidence;—I should like you to charge your memory to state one particular case, as a specimen of the cases you refer to? Mr. Penfold's case has been already referred to.

1250. Any other? A short time since a servant woman had her mistress before the Bench, for assaulting her; the mistress admitted that she did assault her; but for some reason or other the Magistrates dismissed the complaint, both against fact and law.

1251. Who was the presiding Magistrate on both occasions—was the Police Magistrate present? In Penfold's case the Police Magistrate was there, I think with Mr. Peden, but I forget who were sitting in the other case; at all events I am sure that the Police Magistrate was not in the case.

1252. Have you witnessed, yourself, any unwillingness on the part of the police to carry out the instructions of the Bench? I do not call to mind any instance.

1253. The disrespect of attorneys to the Bench, that you have spoken of—is that applicable to attorneys generally practising in the Police Office? No.

1254. Or is it confined to one or two? Confined to one or two.

1255. By Mr. Cowper: You have spoken generally of a want of confidence in the administration of justice at the Central Police Office, and that its character has depreciated of late years;—how long have you been a reporter in the Central Police Office? Twelve or fourteen years.

1256. You were not there, then, when the late Mr. Windeyer was Police Magistrate? I have seen him sometimes on the bench, but I was not then in the Police Office every day—it was not my department.

1257. You were there during Mr. Dowling's time, and Mr. Forbes'? Yes.

1258. Did you not hear complaints then as regarded their inefficiency? I do not remember them.

1259. Have you never heard even charges against Mr. Dowling's ignorance of law? I never heard it.

1260. Is this want of confidence general towards the Magistrates, or peculiarly attached to Captain Scott? Not at all peculiarly attached to Captain Scott—other Magistrates share with him; but the expression of discontent is greater with regard to Captain Scott because he is the paid Magistrate; that is the only reason that makes him conspicuous above others. Perhaps a mistake made by an unpaid Magistrate would not be spoken of with that asperity which would be applied to a mistake by Captain Scott.

1261. You do not remember that the alleged incompetency of Mr. Dowling was frequently the subject of complaint in the Legislative Assembly? I do not.

Mr. S. B.
Dowsett.

1262. Do you bear in recollection at all the reason why the appointment of a Police Magistrate for Sydney was for some years discontinued? I understood it was because the Government desired to try the experiment of unpaid Magistrates alone.

Aug., 1862.

1263. Was it not alleged that, after the establishment of a Municipality and a Mayor, the Mayor and the City Magistrate were quite sufficient to perform the duties, and would do it more satisfactorily than a Police Magistrate? I think I have a recollection that it was so alleged.

1264. Was it not a very generally expressed opinion in the Assembly at the time? I know there were several advocates of that course in the Assembly.

1265. Do you remember a proposal to appoint an Assistant Police Magistrate for Sydney being either negatived or withdrawn by the Government, on the ground that it was not necessary, and that the unpaid Magistrates would perform the duty more satisfactorily? I think I do; I remember that there was some talk or proposal of appointing a second Police Magistrate, but the reason of its withdrawal I do not know.

1266. Do you bear in mind any case in which a decision of Captain Scott has been appealed against to the Supreme Court, or in which any prohibition has been issued against him, or a mandamus with regard to any of his judgments? No, I lose sight of the cases as soon as they pass from the Police Office.

1267. But you do not remember any? I do not remember any.

1268. When you speak of suspicion in regard to Magistrates attending in particular cases in which they may have an interest, has not that always been an allegation against the Magistrates in certain quarters since the foundation of the Colony? I cannot go back so far as that, but it is not at all a new-born suspicion.

1269. Sometimes made without being very well founded? No doubt; but I have known cases, though I cannot call them to mind now, in which the suspicion appeared to me to be very well founded, for the reasons already given.

1270. It is not an unusual allegation to make against Benches of Magistrates throughout the Colony—not only in Sydney, but elsewhere? I do not know.

1271. Would not your suggestion of two paid Magistrates, who should do the whole duty of the City of Sydney, rather tend to dispense with the services of unpaid Magistrates altogether? It would.

1272. Do you think that would be satisfactory to the public? I do not think it would cause much dissatisfaction.

1273. Then you rather lean to the impression that there should be no unpaid Magistrates in the Colony? I have no belief in amateur Judges.

1274. When the Chairman asked you whether you thought the Police Magistrate should be an attorney or a barrister, I think you said he should be a gentleman who understood the law? Yes.

1275. You think it would not be of necessity, because a gentleman was a barrister or attorney, that he would understand the law? Certainly not. I have seen people called barristers and attorneys who I believe do not understand the law.

1276. Do you think it possible or likely that the Government could obtain the services of a gentleman of eminence in the profession for the salary voted by Parliament? Certainly not.

1277. What do you think would be a sufficient amount to obtain the services of a gentleman qualified, in your judgment, being himself a lawyer, to occupy that office? I think it very unlikely you would be able to prevail on any professional man in whom the public would have confidence, to take it under £1,000 a year.

1278. Do you think we could get him for that? I should think so. I think that the veriest pettifogging attorney in Sydney would refuse it at the present salary.

1279. With regard to your reply to questions with reference to the equality of sentences, are you aware of the proceedings of the District Courts—have you ever attended them as reporter? I am not aware that I have been asked about the equality of sentences.

1280. You gave an answer implying that general dissatisfaction existed as to the inequality of sentences in the Police Court—you said it was mere gambling, mere luck? I mean as to the decision whether a person would be convicted or discharged—not as to the sentence.

1281. You do not mean that answer to apply as to the extent of punishment? No, it would be impossible to establish uniformity of sentences where there are so many Magistrates of different minds.

1282. Then you intended it to apply as to whether or not there would be a conviction? Yes.

1283. That is only a balancing of evidence, where a Magistrate may act very erroneously without being corrupt? Yes.

1284. Your opinion as to the cases before you is the opinion of an individual? Yes.

1285. With regard to the postponement of cases from time to time, have you ever considered whether these postponements have been made judiciously, or have arisen from the irregular attendance or negligence of the Magistrates, or from any other cause? The postponements I have spoken of are those arising from the non-attendance of Magistrates.

1286. Has not that always been matter of complaint;—I mean not so much that occasionally there are not very large numbers of Magistrates attending, as that the unpaid Magistrates are unwilling to attend with regularity and systematically, and generally try to escape from heavy cases? They do; but then they must be there in order to know when heavy cases are to be brought on.

1287. Is there any means, in your judgment, of avoiding these postponements;—are they not sometimes made at the request of professional gentlemen, with reference to what they consider the interests of their clients? There can be no objection to postponements under such circumstances;

- Mr. S. B. Dowssett. circumstances; the postponements to which I allude are those which take place at the end of the day.
1288. The sheet is not cleared off? No.
- 1 Aug., 1862. 1289. Is that often the case when there are no professional gentlemen? It is sometimes the case.
1290. At what hour of the day does the Court close? Four o'clock.
1291. Then there is often business, when the Court closes at four o'clock, which is not attended to that day? Yes.
1292. Are you aware whether there is any amount of arrears now? I am not. The summons sheet has been very light lately, and these are the cases that are postponed; not those of people held in custody, but cases on what is called the summons sheet.
1293. That may arise now and then from very protracted discussions on one particular case? Yes, that would have the effect, of course, and such a postponement would be inevitable; no person could be blamed for such.
1294. The Mayor is the presiding Magistrate in the City of Sydney, is he not? When he is present he takes the Chair.
1295. Are you not aware that Captain Scott's appointment as Police Magistrate had reference more to the performance of chamber duties than presiding in open Court? I am not aware.
1296. Would it be possible for Captain Scott to perform the numerous duties which belong to him in the chamber, and to be very constantly on the bench? I do not know whether Captain Scott has more duty to perform than Mr. Dowling had; Mr. Dowling was on the bench from the opening of the Court until its close.
1297. By Mr. Lucas: And also Mr. Forbes? Yes.
1298. By Mr. Cowper: The great complaint now is, that people cannot get their summonses and informations attended to in the office? I have heard such complaints.
1299. Have you not heard it suggested that the Clerk of the Court should be made a Magistrate, with the view of doing that business, to enable Captain Scott to attend more on the bench? I have.
1300. Do you think that would work well? I do not think it would.
1301. Are you aware whether the business now at the Police Office is very much larger than it was in Mr. Dowling's time? My impression is that the business is very much less now than it was then.
1302. Is that owing to the diminution of crime? I think it is. It must be either the diminution of crime or the non-apprehension of offenders—I cannot say which.
1303. The cases are, in your opinion, less? Yes.
1304. In speaking of Mr. Crane as a very efficient clerk, are you not aware that he was promoted? I am speaking of him as a deposition clerk; whatever I may know from being in the offices I am not giving any opinion.
1305. Is Mr. Smithers the only efficient deposition clerk now in the office? Yes, of necessity; the others are quite new appointments—they have been but a few months there.
1306. All of them? I think all of them. Mr. Hales has been there about six or nine months at the longest, and he is the senior of the two who take depositions besides Mr. Smithers.
1307. Do they show an aptitude for their duties? I think so, as apt as anybody could be in the short time.
1308. Mr. Martin was for a time a deposition clerk? Yes.
1309. But from his age and infirmity he was put to other duty? It was a pity he should ever have been put into the Court; it was too heavy work for him.
1310. His duties are now performed by younger men? Yes.
1311. Have you any suggestions to make with regard to the better conduct of business in the Police Office;—you think it is worse conducted now than it was in former years? I never saw, under any former Police Magistrate, so much disorder and irregularity in the Court as I have seen lately. I do not attribute it all to Captain Scott; when he is not in the Court Room he cannot preserve order there.
1312. What kind of confusion do you mean—what you have said of the indecent conduct of attorneys? Yes; one or two attorneys dictate to the Magistrates, to a great extent, the order in which cases shall be heard.
1313. Does the Mayor of the City attend much? Very seldom; I think he seldom attends except at licensing meetings; I think it has not been the custom for the Mayor to attend the Police Court for some years.
1314. Do you think the disposition of the Bench is to put down the attorneys and their improper conduct, or rather to tolerate it? I think the Magistrates generally are not aware of their powers, or they would stop it; the remedy lies in their own hand.
1315. In all Courts great latitude is allowed to professional men, is it not? Too much, very often.
1316. Is it not the case sometimes that even the Judges in the Supreme Court are snubbed by barristers? I believe it is.
1317. And they do not appear to resent it very much? They are not insulted. I think the snubbing a Judge on the bench receives is sometimes more by way of inuendo; but the insults are direct enough at the Police Office.
1318. By the Chairman: You think the business of the Court has decreased during the last twelve months? Yes.
1319. Considerably? Very much from former years; I cannot say it has decreased within the last twelve months specially.
1320. With reference to the misconduct on the part of some attorneys—have you heard one attorney in particular frequently insult the Police Magistrate since his appointment? Yes.

1321. Was he not suspended from practice? Yes, from practice before the Police Magistrate; but as almost all the other Magistrates heard him, the suspension was virtually a nullity.
1322. Did not the Police Magistrate refuse to hear him for a considerable period? Yes. Mr. S. B. Dowsett.
1323. And during his suspension he was frequently heard by other Magistrates, notwithstanding the gross insult to the Police Magistrate? Yes. 1 Aug., 1862.
1324. Have you ever heard this attorney tell the Police Magistrate he would not go there any longer to teach him his duty? Yes, I did once hear such an expression.
1325. And no notice was taken of it? None.
1326. Do you know of any other attorney having been suspended? No.
1327. Do you not think the administration of justice has been brought into contempt by the constant irregularities you have mentioned? No doubt.
1328. Has not Captain Scott, by his general conduct as Police Magistrate, forfeited the confidence and respect of the professional men who appear there? Yes, if Captain Scott ever had their confidence, I have no doubt it is gone.
1329. For the reasons you have alluded to? Yes.
1330. By Mr. Lucas: You referred to Captain Scott being in his private room, and hearing cases there, do you think that a fit place for cases to be heard? If three Courts are held, one must be in his private room.
1331. Is it a fit place for cases to be heard? It is not a place where he ought to hear cases in which he has summary jurisdiction; but there is nothing to prevent his taking ministerial inquiries in his private room.
1332. There is many a dog-kennel much larger than that—it is about one third the size of this room? Not much more; it is formed by a partition across a passage.
1333. Did it ever come under your observation that persons have been detained in gaol for the want of bail-bonds being made out? It may have been so, but I do not know it.
1334. Do you think a Magistrate could not do the whole of the chamber duties required, in two hours a day? I understand that Mr. Dowling did it.
1335. Used not Mr. Dowling to do the chamber duties between nine and ten o'clock in the morning? Between nine and ten and one and two, as I understood.
1336. Do you not think it would facilitate the business of the Police Court if there were a second roster summoned for the chamber duties? I think not.
1337. Has it ever come under your notice that the proceedings of the Court have been delayed, in consequence of the inspector of police who had charge of cases there having to attend to report duties to the Inspector General between ten and eleven and twelve o'clock? I have known several instances where cases have not proceeded in consequence of the absence of inspectors.
1338. Have you not known the Magistrates go through the sheet on some occasions, and in consequence of the absence of the inspector, he being in attendance on the Inspector General, the cases have been postponed? I do not remember a postponement of that kind; but I cannot say it has never occurred.
1339. Are there not many of the unpaid Magistrates to whom the professional gentlemen you speak of use every respect? Yes.
1340. There are many unpaid Magistrates to whom they pay proper respect? Yes, there are some who maintain their dignity. Some of the unpaid Magistrates receive much more respect than others.
1341. Speaking of the postponement of cases, do you know that during the time there was no Police Magistrate, the unpaid Magistrates made it a rule to attend daily, take their proper turns, and go through the whole sheet? I do not know what the rule was; but I know that they attended more regularly.
1342. There were not these frequent complaints about postponements that there have been since? I think not.
1343. There was no shirking the duties then—the unpaid Magistrates took any case that came before them? Yes.
1344. The reason they shirk the duties now is, that there being a paid Police Magistrate they think he has a right to take these cases? Some do.
1345. Do you know that some of the advocates go so far as placing their cases on the sheet themselves—cases in which they have drawn the information and summons—and removing cases from the sheet; after the sheet has been handed into Court they have erased certain cases, and put other cases on the sheet—has that ever come to your knowledge? I do not remember hearing of such a thing; I have heard that Mr. Stubbs has done so; I do not remember to have heard of any attorney having done so.
1346. You referred to the want of police, to carry out the directions of the Magistrates to keep order in the Court? Yes.
1347. It is useless for Magistrates to direct order to be kept in the Court unless there are some police there to keep order? Of course. It would be hardly dignified for a Magistrate to cry out "Silence in the Court!"
1348. The Magistrates do not usually support each other very much? I cannot tell what takes place on the bench.
1349. I mean, when one Magistrate is offended the other does not take the matter up—when one Magistrate is insulted he leaves the bench, and the others proceed with the case with the person who has insulted him? I think when one Magistrate is insulted the whole Bench is insulted.
1350. His brother Magistrates do not usually take notice of it, but proceed as if nothing had occurred? Yes.
1351. By Mr. Cowper: The attorneys, then, rule the Court? They do, or some of them.

- Mr. S. B. Dowsett.
1 Aug., 1862.
1352. By Mr. Lucas: You are referring now to what has taken place within the last two years—not to the previous conduct of the Court? I am speaking, as nearly as I can, of the present time.
1353. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you remember a case which occurred at the Police Office, when Captain Scott was the presiding Magistrate, in which he told a prisoner, who said he did not expect justice there, that he should see him at Darlinghurst in a day or two, and he would not be so “cocky” as he was then? Yes.
1354. Have I given the words literally? As near as I can remember.
1355. By the Chairman: Speaking of policemen in attendance on the Court, have you not frequently heard complaints from the Magistrates that it is impossible to obtain one to do anything? I have.
1356. Do you not think that a Police Magistrate, with a first class chief clerk to attend to the chamber duties, would be sufficient to transact the duties of the Court, with the ordinary clerical assistance? What has been done may be done again.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Henry Connell, junr., Esq., again called in and farther examined:—

- H. Connell, junr., Esq.
6 Aug., 1862.
1357. By the Chairman: Do you produce some returns asked for by this Committee? Yes, I do.
1358. Will you hand them in? (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.)
1359. Do you produce the information exhibited against William Wentworth Bucknell? Yes, I do. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix B.) That is the case, together with the application of the complainant that the warrant should be suspended in order that a summons might issue.
1360. When was this letter received in the office? I cannot tell you that.
1361. How long has it been with the present information? I cannot answer that question.
1362. Is there any clerk in the office who can tell that? I cannot tell that. I think I have seen that paper with Captain Scott. If you will allow me to look at it, it will probably refresh my memory. (The paper was handed to the witness.) I saw it, I think, before the 25th June.
1363. Is it usual for Captain Scott to retain possession of documents of that sort? I cannot answer that question.
1364. In whose custody has the information been since it has been exhibited? The custom is for the information always to be in the hands of Mr. Armstrong, who places it on the sheet. In that case the summons is made returnable to-day, and the case is on the sheet to-day.
1365. That summons has been issued since the commencement of this inquiry? What inquiry?
1366. The present inquiry? I cannot recollect the date of the commencement of the present inquiry.
1367. That summons has been issued since the 8th July last? No, it has not been issued since the 8th July last. I think the 24th or 25th June is the date.
1368. Have you any record in your office that will enable you to say positively when that summons was issued? If you will allow me to look at it. (The paper was handed to the witness.) I think not. I do not know.
1369. You have no record in your office that would enable you to state positively when that summons was issued? I do not know.
1370. Do you not know that it has been issued since the commencement of this inquiry? The summons was issued—I believe the summons, according to Captain Scott —
1371. Never mind about Captain Scott? I believe it was issued on the 25th June.
1372. Will you undertake to state to this Committee that that document was received before Monday last by Captain Scott? I will state positively that I saw it in his hands before the 25th June.
1373. Should it not have been kept with the information and the other papers in the case? I cannot answer that question.
1374. You cannot answer it? No; I know this application was addressed to Captain Scott —
1375. Do you recollect any inquiries being made about this case, and when? Yes, from yourself.
1376. An order was produced by me from a Justice of the Peace to see these proceedings? I do not recollect any order from you.
1377. Do you not recollect an order being produced signed by Mr. Burrill? I do not recollect.
1378. Authorizing me to inspect these documents? I do not recollect.
1379. Was that document in the possession of any clerk connected with the establishment at that time? I cannot answer that.

1380. Is the return you have handed in, a return of the number of cases placed on the summons sheet at the Central Police Office, Sydney, from the 1st of January to the 1st of May, 1859? Yes. H. Connell, Junr., Esq.

1381. And also from the 1st of January to the 1st of May, 1862? Yes. 6 Aug., 1862.

1382. Do these returns show the number of cases postponed, and also the number of cases initiated by the city authorities? They do.

1383. Do you produce the papers in the case of Sandon v. Doyle? I do. (The witness produced the same.)

1384. By Mr. Cowper: Have you brought any return showing the arrears of business in the office when you were appointed Clerk of Petty Sessions? I do. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix C.) I beg to explain, with regard to not discovering the papers and depositions, that it was impossible to get at them simply from the want of an index to the General Register of Crime, and also to the letter books and general correspondence. They were in such masses that although they might be there it was a piece of luck, as I said before, to get at them.

1385. By Mr. Lucas: Will you furnish the Committee with copies of all informations and summonses issued during the month of February last? I will do so. I may add, with regard to the case of Bucknell, that the summons was issued, to my knowledge, on the 25th of June, so that it must have been a considerable time before this inquiry commenced. I beg also to state that this case is coming on to-day; the summons is made returnable six weeks after the issue, and as the case comes on to-day, it will be evident that it was issued at that time. The rule is, when a defendant lives at a great distance, and in this case he lives at the Namoi, not to issue a warrant when a man would come upon a summons. As the summons is returnable to-day it must have been issued upon that document.

APPENDIX.

A.

A RETURN of the number of Cases placed on the Summons Sheet at the Central Police Office, Sydney, from the 1st day of January to the 1st day of May, 1859, shewing the number of postponed cases, and also the number of cases initiated by the City Authorities.

INFORMATION.

Wednesday, 6 Aug.—1862.

New South Wales,
City of Sydney
to wit.

Be it remembered that on this thirty-first day of May, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, at the City of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Susannah Bucknell, of the City of Sydney, married woman, appears before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said Colony, and on oath informs me that, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, at the Paterson to wit, at Sydney aforesaid, one William Wentworth Bucknell, of Boomi Station, on the Namoi River, in said Colony, squatter, did feloniously marry and take to wife one Hopkins, Susannah Bucknell, his former wife, to whom the said William Wentworth Bucknell was previously married, being then alive, contrary to the Act in such case made and provided: whereupon the said Susannah Bucknell prays that I the said Justice will proceed in the premises according to law.

Sworn at the City of Sydney, in the said Colony, on the day first above written, before me

SUSANNAH BUCKNELL.

D. C. F. SCOTT, P.M.

C. P. Office.—Warrant cancelled and summons issued—dispatched by letter—no answer recd.—
D. C. F. S., P.M.

4 June, 1862.

H. Connell,
junr., Esq.

6 Aug., 1862.

To Captain Scott,
Police Magistrate, Sydney.

I have had an offer of maintenance made by my husband, and am now paid the first quarters, namely, twelve pounds ten shillings. Will you direct that the warrant issued may not be sent to be executed, as I intend to proceed by the more mild method, namely, by summons, and have authorized my attorney, Mr. Moffat, to act in this matter on my behalf?

SUSANNAH BUCKNELL.

24th June summons applied for, and issued 25th June, 1862.—D. C. F. S.

C.

Arrears in the Central Police Office when Mr. Connell was appointed Clerk of Petty Sessions.

1. The Accounts not rendered for nearly 18 months.
2. The Index of the Register of Crime was in arrear 11 months. Without the aid of this Register it would be extremely difficult to find any particular case out of about 10,000 depositions—it would be like searching for a needle in a bundle of straw. The Police Magistrate paid a clerk out of his own pocket to bring up this book.
3. The Fines and Fees sometimes recorded on a piece of paper.
4. No Register at all for recording correspondence and papers received into the office. (It would be a matter of time to find any particular letter.)
5. No Dog Register (Clerk subject to a penalty.)
6. No Summons and Warrant Books in use for checking the Fees and Fines.
7. The Daily Collection Book of Licenses, Fines, and Fees, several months in arrear.
8. The Jury List Minutes for the year 1858, not recorded—no entry whatever.
9. The Electoral Minutes for the Police District of Sydney, for 1858-9, do not appear to be entered.
10. None of the Letter Books or Licensing Books indexed.
11. No Lists of Fees were posted in any part of the building (Clerk subject to a penalty.)
12. All the Licensing business jumbled in one book.
13. The Weights and Measures of the Colony in different parts of the building.
14. Newspapers missing for years.
15. Poundkeepers' Bonds missing.
16. The Roster Book in arrears upwards of 12 months.

Sub-Inspector George Read called in and examined:—

- Sub-Inspector G. Read.
1386. By the Chairman: You are Sub-Inspector of Police? Yes.
1387. Do you produce the warrant issued against William Wentworth Bucknell? Yes.
1388. What is the date of that? 2nd June, 1862.
1389. Can you state when that was received by yourself? On the 2nd June.
1390. Has it been withdrawn or cancelled? It has been cancelled.
1391. By whose indorsement? The indorsement is in the handwriting of Captain Scott, and is to this effect,—“Central Police Office, Sydney, 5th June. Cancelled at the request of the complainant.”
1392. Do you know in whose handwriting is this indorsement (referring to another indorsement)? Mr. Moffat's.
1393. “On behalf of Mrs. Bucknell, I hereby request this warrant to be cancelled and withdrawn. 3rd June, 1862. W. P. Moffat, prosecutor's attorney.”—That is in the handwriting of Mr. Moffat, the attorney? Yes.
1394. Is it usual to cancel warrants after they have been placed in the hands of the police for execution? I have about sixty or upwards cancelled warrants, on my file in my office.
1395. Can you state by whom they have been cancelled principally? By Captain Scott, Mr. Warburton, and Mr. Forbes.
1396. Extending over a period of how many years? About five years.
1397. Then the warrant was handed to you on the 2nd of the month, and not cancelled till the 5th? Yes.
1398. By Mr. Forster: Have you known any cases where warrants have been cancelled by other than the persons who have given them? One in a case of wife desertion, issued by Mr. Ronald and cancelled by Captain Scott.
1399. Do you know whether Mr. Ronald assented to the cancellation? I am not aware.
1400. Under what circumstances was it cancelled? I am not aware.
1401. Did you see it cancelled? No; I found the indorsement on the warrant.
1402. What, as a police officer, is your opinion with regard to this warrant—was it a legal warrant in the first instance? Yes.
1403. Do you consider that Captain Scott's writing something upon it which purports to be a cancellation deprives it of its legality? I question whether it does.
1404. Do you consider yourself bound to enforce it after that? I think, as a matter of prudence, I should not be justified in enforcing it.
1405. Do you consider that you have any discretion as to enforcing a warrant—that you can enforce it or not, as you like? I am bound to enforce it, until it is cancelled.
1406. You think that the cancellation of a warrant by a Magistrate, other than the Magistrate who gives it, deprives it of its validity? I question whether it does, but as a matter of prudence I think it should not be enforced.
1407. You have not done so? I have refrained from enforcing them after they have been cancelled.
1408. What have you done with them after they have been cancelled? I have filed them in my office.
1409. You keep them as a sort of justification to yourself? Yes.

1410. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you happen to know whether warrants are granted in any case without affidavits having been made to justify the Magistrate in issuing the warrant? I am not aware of any case. Sub-Inspector
G. Read.
1411. Do you know whether it is done in all cases—whether the information is made in Court? Yes, the law requires it. 6 Aug., 1862.
1412. Can a warrant be granted except upon the information of a party in Court? It is granted upon information, and not otherwise.
1413. Then it is a common practice for a warrant that has been granted for the apprehension of an offender to be cancelled without the application of the person who applies for it? It is generally done upon the application of the person upon whose information the warrant was issued.
1414. Have you ever been in the police force in the mother country? Yes.
1415. Did you ever see a Magistrate cancel warrants there? Never.
1416. Did you ever hear of such an occurrence before you came to this country? Never.
1417. How long have you been in the police force in this country, and in England? Twelve years and a half.
1418. Then this procedure of a Magistrate cancelling a warrant, without the application of the person who first applied for it, and without the consent of the Magistrate who granted it, is a procedure you never heard of before you came to this Colony? Never before.
1419. Are you often in the Central Police Office? Frequently.
1420. Every day? Almost daily.
1421. Have you the charge and general supervision of the police who do duty round the Police Office? At present I have general charge of the police in the Metropolitan District.
1422. Have you ever received any orders from your superiors, or have you yourself detailed men to preserve order at the Central Police Office? Yes, daily.
1423. How many men are sent there? Five daily.
1424. From your experience, do you consider that proper order is maintained by the spectators generally in the body of the Court? Generally pretty good order has been kept; there have been exceptions.
1425. Have you not been complained to by the Magistrates as to the disorder and noise that have prevailed in the Court? They have complained.
1426. In consequence of the police being very lax in the maintenance of order? Invariably when the Magistrates have complained the police have exerted themselves to maintain order. The Magistrates appear to entertain very different views upon this subject; some Magistrates tolerating a much greater amount of noise than others.
1427. Have you ever been led to believe that five policemen are not enough to preserve order there? I think they are sufficient.
1428. Still you admit that you have had frequent complaints from the Magistrates that order has not been preserved? There have been complaints; not frequent.
1429. Can you say of your own knowledge, how many hours a day, on the average, Captain Scott is in the habit of sitting on the bench adjudicating cases? Perhaps his attendance has averaged about three hours a day.
1430. Is he there every day? About the office every day.
1431. I want to know if he is on the bench every day dispensing justice? Not every day.
1432. Is his absence frequent? Not very frequent. Upon the average, I think he has opened the Court five days a week.
1433. Is his absence from the bench during the day, even presuming he opens the Court, more frequent than his presence? No, I think not.
1434. His average attendance on the bench daily is about three hours? I think about that, as nearly as I can judge.
1435. Do you happen to know whether cases are frequently remanded, or whether there is any arrear of cases? Cases are frequently remanded.
1436. Will you explain why they are remanded;—are they remanded from the want of attendance of Magistrates? They are frequently remanded for further evidence, and frequently from the want of attendance of Magistrates.
1437. Is the latter, more frequently than any other, the reason of their being remanded? No, they are oftener remanded for further evidence, than from the non-attendance of Magistrates.
1438. Is it the fact that the business of the Court cannot sometimes be proceeded with, from the non-attendance of Magistrates? That has been the case on a great many occasions.
1439. Have you the control of issuing summonses to Magistrates on the roster? No, I have nothing to do with them.
1440. Do you happen to know that a large number of the Magistrates who are upon the roll do not attend at the Police Office? Yes.
1441. A great number are very lax in their attendance? —
1442. You have had a great deal of experience in Police Courts in England, I suppose;—judging from your experience, do you consider that Captain Scott is a gentleman whose decisions have given general satisfaction to the legal profession, and to persons of intelligence, for instance, to yourself? I have differed from him, in some instances, in his decisions.
1443. Do you consider that Captain Scott, from his general decisions, shows that he has any acquaintance with the elementary principles of law? I am not a very good judge of Captain Scott's ability in that particular. I would rather not answer the question.
1444. Have you ever done duty in London? Five years.
1445. From what you have seen of the conduct of business in Police Offices in London, do you consider that a stipendiary Magistrate in London is a man better qualified to give a decision, in the complicated cases sometimes brought before Magistrates, than Captain Scott?

- Sub-Inspector G. Read.
6 Aug., 1862.
- Most of the London Magistrates are trained men—members of the legal profession. They are much better qualified and much better paid than the Magistrates here.
1446. Do you think it an advantage to have trained men? I think so—a very great advantage.
1447. Do you think it would be an advantage to have Magistrates here members of the legal profession? I think it would.
1448. By Mr. Cowper: What particular position did you occupy in the police force in London? I was employed for a long time in the superintendent's office, as a clerk.
1449. Your position for knowing whether warrants were cancelled or not was not so good as it has been here, in Sydney? I was not in so good a position; but I think I should have known if warrants had been cancelled.
1450. You were in the police under Mr. Forbes? Yes.
1451. And Mr. Warburton? Yes.
1452. And Captain Scott? Yes.
1453. Under each of these gentlemen it has been the practice to cancel warrants? Yes.
1454. Captain Scott has not, then, introduced a new custom? No.
1455. By Mr. Lucas: I see this warrant is dated 2nd June? Yes.
1456. When did that come into your possession? On the 2nd June.
1457. When was this put on by Mr. Moffat? When I received the warrant the address was not sufficiently definite. I applied to the clerks for farther information, and they referred me to Mr. Moffat. I was unable to see Mr. Moffat that day, but on the following day, having been from my office a short time on police business, on my return I was informed that a gentleman had called at the office in company with Mr. Moffat, and that at Captain Scott's request the warrant had been given up to him.
1458. To whom? To the gentleman I have mentioned.
1459. Do you know who the gentleman was? Subsequently I ascertained the gentleman was Mr. Hargraves.
1460. By Mr. Cowper: Which Hargraves—the gold discoverer? Yes. When the warrant was returned to me the day after, it bore this indorsement.
1461. By Mr. Lucas: Did you take it then before Captain Scott? I took it immediately and placed it before him.
1462. And he then wrote this memorandum on the margin of the warrant? Yes.
1463. Were these remarks, with reference to Mr. Dean, the solicitor, on the warrant when it first came into your possession? No.
1464. When was that written? Between the time it was given to Mr. Hargraves and its return to my hands.
1465. That was also put upon the warrant while it was out of your possession? Yes.
1466. Do the police usually allow warrants to go out of their possession? No; but as the request was made by the Magistrate who issued the warrant, it was complied with.
1467. You say you have attended Police Courts in London? Yes.
1468. Do you know whether professional gentlemen are allowed as great a latitude in Police Courts in London as they are allowed in this Colony? They have very much greater latitude here.
1469. Do you think the professional men here pay proper respect to the Magistrates, or to some of the Magistrates on the bench? I think they are sometimes very disrespectful.
1470. Have you noticed their conduct with respect to Captain Scott, the Police Magistrate? I have noticed that the conduct of some of the attorneys has been very disrespectful, on more than one occasion.
1471. Do they show more disrespect to him than to many of the unpaid Magistrates? I have not remarked that.
1472. Are there not many unpaid Magistrates who attend the Police Office, to whom the professional men show proper respect on all occasions? I think some of them are more or less disrespectful to all the Magistrates, on some occasions.
1473. Have any Magistrates complained to you that there have been no policemen in Court to swear the witnesses and keep silence? No, I think not.
1474. Are you sure of that? I do not remember any complaint having been made to me. I have heard that such complaints have been made.
1475. You say there are five policemen put on duty in the Police Office daily? Yes.
1476. Where are these stationed? Generally two in York-street Court, one in George-street Court, a sergeant in the passage, and the second sergeant's attention is divided between the two Courts. Some of these men are frequently away with letters.
1477. With letters from whom? They are employed in conveying them to the different Government offices.
1478. By whom are they employed? The sergeant receives the letters from the different clerks in the office, and sends them as directed.
1479. Do you think that a proper duty for the police to perform;—do you think they should be made messengers of? I think not.
1480. Do you not think it would be better to have a messenger appointed for the Police Office? I think it would be better.
1481. Is it not the fact that, upon various occasions, there have not been more than two policemen at the Police Office, to keep order in both Courts and in the passage? It may have occurred by accident, when they have been called away upon some emergency.
1482. Do you not know that it has occurred on several occasions? I am not prepared to say, but I think it quite likely it may have occurred.
1483. Have you ever heard a Magistrate threaten to adjourn a case, in consequence of the want of a policeman to keep order in the Court? No.

1484. Your office is on the left hand side, going into the Police Office? Yes.
1485. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you know whether Captain Scott has been in the habit of hearing cases in his private room? He has, on several occasions.
1486. Has that frequently occurred? It has.
1487. Have the public been admitted into that room during the hearing of cases? I never heard of their being refused admittance, except when the room has been crowded.
1488. By Mr. Lucas: It is easily crowded? Yes, the room is very small.
1489. It will not hold above five or six people? Not many more.
1490. By Mr. Hoskins: Can you explain the reason of cases being heard in Captain Scott's private room? It has been when the other Courts have been occupied.
1491. How many Courts have been sitting? Including the Court in the private room, three.
1492. Do you happen to know whether Captain Scott passes much of his time in his private room when he is not adjudicating upon cases? Yes, he is there generally.
1493. How many hours a day, on the average, is he there? I could not say; I frequently find him there when I have occasion to see him.
1494. Do you happen to know what duty he is engaged in while he is there? I could not say.
1495. Did you ever hear? If I have been there in the morning he has been engaged in receiving complaints from persons making applications for summonses and warrants.
1496. Do you consider the arrangements for the management of the police business in the Central Police Office perfect, or could they be improved? I think it is quite possible to improve them.
1497. Will you suggest what you would consider improvements? I think it would be a great improvement to have two paid Magistrates, that the daily attendance of two Magistrates might be ensured.
1498. Ensure their attendance on the bench? On the bench, if necessary. One should be on the bench, and one in the office, to receive complaints and grant summonses and warrants.
1499. Then I infer from the tenor of your reply, that Captain Scott is frequently absent? He frequently has to leave his office to go on the bench.
1500. Of course—but is he not absent from the Police Office? He is generally there.
1501. Do you happen to know whether he is frequently called away from the Police Office to attend to other duties, such as to visit Cockatoo, or to confer with the Colonial Secretary? He has to go away sometimes; I believe he has for some time past visited Cockatoo once a week.
1502. Are there any other reasons than those you have stated why you would suggest the appointment of a second Police Magistrate at the Central Police Court? I think there would not be so many remanded cases if there were two paid Magistrates; Magistrates who are engaged in commercial pursuits have to remand cases to days to suit their own convenience.
1503. Do you also think, judging from your experience, that the persons who have been appointed to the situation of Police Magistrate have been better qualified to dispense justice than the ordinary unpaid Justices of the Peace? I would much rather not answer that question.
1504. Are there any other suggestions you would make with reference to the management of the Police Office? No.
1506. Do you know whether there is much business transacted at the Water Police Office? Not a great deal.
1507. Do you think if there were a re-arrangement of the police business in Sydney, by which a portion of the business now conducted at the Central Police Office should be transferred to the Water Police Office, it would be an improvement? I think it would tend to relieve the Central Police Office.
1508. What arrears of business there are at the Central Police Office are from cases remanded? Yes; on both the charge and summons sheets cases have frequently to be remanded.
1509. From want of Magistrates? From want of Magistrates, or from the Magistrates not being able to get through them in the day. Some cases occupy a very long time.
1510. Do you think the Magistrates in London get through the business more expeditiously than they do here? Yes, a great deal.
1511. Will you explain the reasons? In the first place, attorneys have not so much latitude, by a very great deal, as they have here; in the next place, the Magistrates never appear to have any difficulty in coming to a decision; they are thoroughly well acquainted with their duties.
1512. You think the long harangues of the attorneys cause an accumulation of business? Yes; they occupy pretty well half of the time of the Court.
1513. Did you ever hear the Magistrates remonstrate with the attorneys? Frequently.
1514. From your experience of the management of Police Offices in London, do you not think Magistrates there would prevent attorneys conducting business as they do in the Police Office in Sydney? I believe they would; I never knew attorneys to attempt it there.
1515. Do you think it would be an improvement to the management of the Police Office here, if the Clerk of Petty Sessions were made a Magistrate, and empowered to issue warrants and

Sub-Inspector

Sub-Inspector and summonses? I think it would be an improvement to have a second Magistrate.

- G. Read. 1516. By Mr. Lucas: The police serve copies of summonses, do they not? Yes.
 1517. And keep the originals? Yes.
 6 Aug., 1862. 1518. To produce in Court in ex parte cases? Yes.
 1519. What becomes of the originals? I am not aware, unless it goes with the depositions; we do not retain them.
 1520. They are not asked for very often;—when a defendant appears to answer a complaint, the summons is not asked for? No; I believe the summons is generally attached to the proceedings, but I am not quite sure of that.
 1521. Even after the appearance of the defendant? I think so; I am not quite sure.
 1522. What becomes of the police sheet? It is forwarded to the Inspector General's Office, and filed there.

William Day, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

- W. Day, Esq., J.P. 1523. By the Chairman: You are a Justice of the Peace? Yes.
 1524. Have you, since acting as a Justice, ordered or consented to the cancellation of any warrant previously issued by yourself? No, never.
 6 Aug., 1862. 1525. Do you recollect the case of Sandon v. Doyle? Yes.
 1526. Was the warrant cancelled in that case? No; the case was heard before the Court.
 1527. The case was heard before the Court, and dismissed? Yes; the defendant was discharged.

Rowan Ronald, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

- R. Ronald, Esq., J.P. 1528. By the Chairman: You are a Justice of the Peace, and have been so for many years? I have.
 6 Aug., 1862. 1529. Have you for some time past devoted any portion of your time to the duties of a Justice at the Central Police Office, Sydney? I have for several years, but more particularly the last year, devoted a great deal of my time.
 1530. You have had, then, some opportunity of judging of the manner in which business is conducted in that office? I have.
 1531. Have you occasionally acted in the absence of Captain Scott, the Police Magistrate? I have.
 1532. Both upon the bench and in his private room? Yes, and as deposition clerk also.
 1533. Why have you acted as deposition clerk? Because I could get no assistance from the office.
 1534. Have you applied for assistance before acting as deposition clerk? I have—I was told there was no one to attend to it.
 1535. To whom did you apply? I have applied to Captain Scott, and I have applied to the Clerk of Petty Sessions.
 1536. Has that been a frequent occurrence? I cannot say that it has been a rare occurrence.
 1537. Did you require a deposition clerk for a second Court or a third? Sometimes for a second, and more frequently for a third.
 1538. Do you know the number of clerks employed in the office? I think I can tell you.
 1539. About how many? Eight or nine, I think.
 1540. Do you not think that quite sufficient, if they were properly managed? I should think so, certainly, quite enough.
 1541. Has any reason been assigned for the absence of a deposition clerk? Leave of absence, sickness, and absence.
 1542. Without leave? I did not make those inquiries, but I have known cases of absented very often.
 1543. Has the business of the Court been delayed by such absence? Very frequently.
 1544. Having acted as you have, can you give us any idea as to the mode in which the business is generally conducted at the office? As a man of business, I consider it conducted in a most slovenly manner.
 1545. Do you consider the establishment in perfect working order? I do not.
 1546. Can you state why not? I find, from my own personal experience, that the clerks do not pull together—there seems to be a petty jealousy abroad; they do not seem to feel that the business of the public is of primary importance. As a merchant, I should not keep such men in my employ a day.
 1547. Have you ever sat with Captain Scott upon the bench? Yes, very frequently.
 1548. Have you heard any complaints from the public, from suitors, or from professional gentlemen employed at the police office, as to any of his decisions? I have; but I would like to say very little upon that point. I would like to answer the question vaguely, in this way:—When I say that Captain Scott is a gentleman and impartial, I say what is true, but I have seen a want of decision of character.
 1549. How often have you acted in Captain Scott's absence, within the last twelve months? Perhaps fifty times in his absence, on the bench—he may have been in his chamber.
 1550. How often have you been in chamber, doing chamber duty for him? During the last twelve months, not an entire day at any time, but portions of days, perhaps fifty times during the year.

1551. At whose request? At the request of Captain Scott, and if I found no one in chamber, and people wish to lay informations or to get summonses or warrants, I considered it my duty to expedite the public business when there was no one else to do it but myself. B. Ronald,
Esq., J.P.
1552. Has the public business been delayed by reason of Captain Scott's absence from the office? It has, but I would answer the question in this way:—It has been delayed in consequence of his absence on other duties. 6 Aug., 1862.
1553. Do you recollect, on the 16th September last year, being upon the bench with Mr. Caldwell? Very probably I was.
1554. Do you recollect sending for the licensing clerk to bring in the papers of a person named Deering? I do.
1555. Were those papers brought in? They were refused to be brought in by the Clerk of Petty Sessions.
1556. Did he assign any reason? The orders of his superior.
1557. Had you any conversation with the Clerk of Petty Sessions upon the subject? I had; I considered that he had a right to bring in what the presiding Magistrate at the time demanded. It was a case of emergency, if I mistake not, where some Official Assignee was engaged. If my memory serves me, I was fearful of the assets of the estate being damaged to the extent of the loss of that license; for had it not been given, the police might have reported the house as deserted, and the license might have been cancelled.
1558. It was under the 33rd section of the 13th Victoria, No. 29? It was.
1559. And on that occasion the Clerk of Petty Sessions refused to produce the papers in Court? Yes.
1560. What became of the case? I think it was afterwards granted, on the next sitting.
1561. But you could not adjudicate? I could not, because the documents were not present.
1562. Were the persons interested in attendance? They were, and their license might have been jeopardized, and the creditors of the estate might have suffered a monetary loss.
1563. They were thus put to some delay? They were.
1564. Have you known cases postponed at the Police Office by the Police Magistrate? I have, and by other Magistrates also.
1565. Have you known cases to be postponed by the Police Magistrate without the consent of the parties? I cannot charge my memory with that.
1566. Have you, since you have acted as a Justice, at any time ordered the cancellation of any warrant issued by yourself? Never.
1567. Do you consider such a course regular? Certainly not; I would let it take its course, and stand the consequences.
1568. How long have you been acting as a Magistrate? I think between eleven and twelve years. Sir Charles Fitz Roy appointed me.
1569. You have stated that there appears to be a jealousy among the clerks in the establishment? There is; that is evident.
1570. Were you acquainted with the clerks in the time of Mr. Warburton? Yes.
1571. Did any such jealousy exist at that time? It did not.
1572. How was the business of the office conducted at that time? I never considered that the business of that office was conducted satisfactorily as long as I recollect it, that is from the time of Colonel Wilson. I was very young then, but I had opportunities of observing.
1573. Have you anything to recommend to this Committee, or any suggestions to make, in the way of the improvement of the department? I know a little of the practice in London, having connections in one of the Police Offices in London, and I think we ought to have much more efficient deposition clerks, such deposition clerks as could instruct the Magistrates, many of whom require instruction. That I conceive is about the main thing, because almost all the mischief is done there, and in imprudently granting warrants instead of summonses. The mere clerical department inside—the filling up of forms—is secondary, because they ought all to be checked before they are signed.
1574. But the deposition clerks have nothing to do with the granting or issuing of warrants or summonses? They have not; but the informations come before them, and they are another check.
1575. The informations do not usually come before the deposition clerk till the case is called for trial? The deposition clerk has, or ought to have, possession of the informations and sheet previous to coming into Court.
1576. By Mr. Lucas: You do not mean before the case comes on for trial? Not at all.
1577. By the Chairman: As far as the actual taking of the depositions is concerned, are the clerks in the office now not particularly qualified for that office? There is one, Mr. Smithers, whom I consider well qualified, highly qualified.
1578. And does he frequently render great assistance to the Magistrates? Before I was so well up to it, I owed everything, at least a very great deal, to Mr. Smithers' knowledge.
1579. Mr. Crane, when he was there, was he also an efficient officer? A most excellent officer.
1580. By Mr. Forster: Do you think there is a very great difference between the general proceedings in the Police Court now, as compared with what it was a couple of years ago? Yes, I think so; I think there is a sort of petty jealousy abroad among the clerks; they do not seem to go to work with a will; they do not seem anxious to perform their duty; one is jealous of another.
1581. You think the unsatisfactory state of things at the Police Office is owing to the clerks? Yes, there is a jealousy in the office.
1582. As a general rule, do you think the clerks are men qualified to perform their duties? There is only one good deposition clerk in the whole office; in fact, there is only one we can call a deposition clerk, and he is a first class one.

- E. Ronald,
Esq., J.P.
6 Aug., 1862.
1583. You have no knowledge of the way in which these appointments are made—under what system the clerks are appointed? No.
1584. You have nothing to do with that? No.
1585. In the Police Court, do you see the same degeneracy in the mode of conducting the business in the Court—a falling off from what it was in former times? There is a falling off.
1586. What do you attribute that to—to the Magistrates? No, because they have merely bench duties to perform; I allude to the internal clerical part.
1587. Then there is a falling off, then—? One man was habitually drunk, for example; another, an old gentleman, since dead, was rendered incompetent by bad health, for years; the poor man was afflicted by Providence, but he was incompetent; and then there are two or three boys; I myself have had to return summonses that have been filled up to the plaintiff instead of to the defendant; fortunately I read them over, or my name would have been seen at the bottom.
1588. Do you think this state of things is in any measure owing to the Magistrates themselves? Not to the Magistrates; they have nothing to do with the internal work.
1589. With regard to the administration of justice in the Court, do you think that as well conducted as it ever was? I do not think so.
1590. What do you attribute that to? Magistrates cannot be always found to go through the duty, as in the old time, when we had more than one Police Magistrate.
1591. Then it is the want of a Police Magistrate that is the cause? The want of some one, either of the Mayor or some one else. I think myself, if the Police Office and Municipal Chambers were together, that no second Police Magistrate would be necessary, because the Mayor would be close at hand to open his own Court, and he would not have to go any distance to attend to his other duties, which I believe are very onerous.
1592. Is there a different class of Magistrates on the bench now, from what there was in other days? Very.
1593. Do you think there is an improvement in that respect? I think some are not an improvement.
1594. What is your opinion of their general character, as compared with that of those of former days? I think they are not a better class.
1595. You think we had better qualified men in former times? Those I have come in contact with.
1596. Do you think the operation of free institutions, and the new state of things that has arisen, has been beneficial to the administration of justice in the Central Police Office of Sydney? I could not say, indeed.
1597. These irregularities you speak of, you say have arisen latterly? Yes; the irregularities in the office.
1598. The defective administration of justice? Well, I did not say the defective administration of justice, but I think there has been unnecessary delay occasioned by the inefficiency of the clerical staff.
1599. You think the clerical department is the principal reason of delay? That is a very great reason. I myself, for example, when I have arrived to open the second Court, found that the sheets have not been ready; I must therefore wait, forsooth, or go round the office to see where the sheet is, to get it ready, get a deposition clerk, and open the Court.
1600. Did you not admit that the character of the Magistrates had been deteriorated, as a general rule? I think many of the Magistrates are very deficient in education.
1601. Do you think that many of them are fit to be Magistrates at all? I have not the appointment of Magistrates.
1602. When you are on the bench, do you generally preside, or how is the question of precedence settled? I always act in this way, if it is my day as per roster:—I go, first of all, into the York-street Court, which is generally presided over by Captain Scott; if he is busy elsewhere I preside there; if he presides there, I immediately go and preside in the George-street Court. If I happen to go there and find it a busy day, I go in, but I never take the presiding Chair if the Magistrates whose day it is are present.
1603. Then the question of precedence on the bench is settled by the roster? It is settled by the roster, and I think it is very fair. It is their duty to be there on a particular day, and if any other Magistrate comes they only assist.
1604. Then there are more Magistrates than one summoned for a particular day? Yes.
1605. How do they settle the question? Generally the oldest Magistrate presides; for instance, if Mr. George Allen, Mr. George Hill, or some other Magistrate older than myself were on the bench, I would make way for him, as I should also for the Mayor.
1606. I suppose the preservation of order in a Court, and the administration of justice, depends a good deal upon the character of the person presiding? And upon the police as well.
1607. Have you any complaint to make of the way in which the police assist? We are very often at a loss for police to keep order in the Court, to call witnesses, to administer the oath even.
1608. Who is to be blamed for that? I suppose they are on other duties; I suppose the police force are not sufficiently numerous to be able to tell off the required number.
1609. Did you ever represent this? No; I consider it to be the duty of the head of the department to represent anything of the kind.
1610. Who is the head of the department? Captain Scott.
1611. If you found this defect increasing—that is, that you had not police—would you still go on sitting upon the bench without making any complaint at all? I would go and do my duty; if I thought my saying or doing anything would have any influence, I would do it for the public good.
- 1612.

1612. Did you ever find yourself altogether in want of a constable to keep order in the Court? Yes.

1613. To take in charge a disorderly person? To keep silence in the Court.

1614. Could you not have got persons who were looking on to assist you? I have done it myself; there is no difficulty about it, but it is only proper that a police officer should be present.

1615. You think that some of the defects complained of have arisen from this circumstance? Yes, certainly; from the paucity of police there.

1616. What is your opinion as to the merits of a system of unpaid Magistrates altogether, as compared with the system of paid Magistrates? I should like to see all the Magistrates in the territory unpaid, if they would attend to their duties; it would be a great saving to the country.

1617. Do you think if all the Magistrates in the Colony were unpaid, the administration of justice would be more efficient? At all events, it is quite certain that you have not the same hold on an unpaid servant as you have upon one who receives remuneration.

1618. Is not that admitting that the paid system is the most effective? The paid system is the most effective, but still I do not recede from my position that I should be glad to see the whole of the duties performed by unpaid Magistrates.

1619. That is, if you could get the business done without expense as well as you could with it, you would prefer saving it? Yes. The position of a Magistrate is an honorary one, and I think men of independent means and of good education are proper persons to put in that position.

1620. On the whole, do you not think the circumstances of the country may be such as to render it impossible to find these independent men? Yes, I think so; in a country like this, where we are all scrambling for a living, there is a paucity of such men.

1621. Consequently we are reduced, as a matter of necessity, to a paid Magistracy? Yes.

1622. Do you not think a paid Magistrate is absolutely necessary in Sydney? Yes.

1623. Do you not think the defects complained of would increase if there were no paid Magistrate? Yes; one is wanted in Sydney.

1624. With reference to the time when there was no paid Magistrate in Sydney, except the Mayor, if he may be so called, do you think business was better conducted than before or since? Mr. Warburton was put on the Commission of the Peace, and acted as a Justice at that time.

1625. He was a paid Magistrate, in fact? He was paid as Clerk of Petty Sessions, but was appointed a Magistrate.

1626. Do you think the administration of justice was more efficiently conducted then, than it is now under Captain Scott? I think it was equally well, but I do not think the clerical duties were efficiently carried out under Mr. Warburton.

1627. You have stated that Captain Scott's defect of character is that he is not sufficiently firm? I think he is of too genial a nature.

1628. Too amiable? Too amiable. He is a gentleman. That is a comprehensive term, and I apply it in its true sense.

1629. What is a gentleman? I mean by it one who deserves the name of a man.

1630. By Mr. Hoskins: I presume such persons are to be found in all ranks of society? In all ranks of society; it is the toga virilis.

1631. By Mr. Forster: Can you define the word "gentleman"? I do not know that I came here for that purpose.

1632. You have used a term I do not understand—you have said Captain Scott is a gentleman? Yes, he is, in his conduct, in his attention to any one who comes there, in his manner and address.

1633. You mean that he is courteous, and you have described him as an amiable man? Yes, but I think there is a want of decision in him.

1634. Do you think that his principal fault? I think so.

1635. You have no reason to think him deficient in the knowledge of his duties? He has been there long enough to know them.

1636. Is he not compelled to attend to a great many duties not connected with the bench? Yes.

1637. Have you any reason to believe that he takes these other duties from choice or from necessity? They are portions of his duty, I presume.

1638. Do you not think it would add to the efficiency of the Police Magistrate if he attended to his duty in the Court rather than to any other? I think he should be as much in his chambers as possible, attending to the issuing of summonses and warrants.

1639. To the ministerial part of his duty? To the ministerial part of it.

1640. You do not think his principal duty is in the Court itself? I do not.

1641. Do you think it possible for a Police Magistrate to be efficient if he does not attend the Court regularly? I think not.

1642. Do you not think every attendance at the Court is in itself a species of training? I have found it so myself. I think in that, as in everything else, without practice and without paying attention you can never be proficient.

1643. By Mr. Hoskins: You did not reply very explicitly to Mr. Forster's question with respect to the unpaid Magistrates;—Do you think the Magistrates appointed of late years have been equal, in point of education and fitness, for the performance of the magisterial function to those who were appointed formerly? Some of them have not.

1644. Will you speak of them in the mass—in the aggregate? I cannot speak of them in the mass, for many very superior men have been recently appointed.

1645. With reference to the complaint as to the police, you did not quite answer Mr. Forster's

R. Ronald,

- R. Ronald, Esq., J.P.
- 4 Aug., 1862.
- Forster's question ;—Did you complain to Captain Scott of the paucity of police to assist the Magistrate? I have frequently conversed with him on the subject ;—I have said,—“ There is no one here to attend to anything ; I do not think the police force sufficient.”
1646. What was Captain Scott's reply? He thought with me, and I believe he applied ; at all events, there is a messenger there now.
1647. Is the number of police stationed in the Court now sufficient to preserve order and to ensure obedience to the orders of the Magistrates? Frequently it is not. The police may be employed in other duty—special duty, perhaps, as for example, in the case of the fire the other night a number of the police were told off, and so in many other instances.
1648. I am not asking you about special cases, but whether, as a rule, you have a sufficient number of police in attendance? As a rule, there is not a sufficient number in attendance.
1649. Do you consider that the business of the Court would be facilitated by having a larger number of police in attendance? Yes ; I think order would be better preserved, and the dignity of the Court upheld.
1650. The dignity of the Court is not upheld, in consequence of the non-attendance of a sufficient number of police? I think so ; a Magistrate cannot go off the bench and collar a fellow for making a noise in the Court.
1651. From your experience in the Court, do you consider that attorneys have shown a proper deference to the Magistrates? As a general rule, I think they have. At times, in the heat of argument, attorneys, like other men, go beyond bounds. I have had no cause to complain for a long time, although I had once ; I always experience great respect from gentlemen of the profession.
1652. Do you think the sittings of the Court are protracted, and the business postponed, in consequence of attorneys needlessly delaying the business by lengthy harangues and examinations of witnesses? It may appear needless.
1653. I ask you as a Magistrate, whether that is your opinion? I think, as a Magistrate, that there is a great amount of needless talk—of unnecessary verbiage. It may be that legal gentlemen think they do not place their cases sufficiently clearly before a Bench without having recourse to these long harangues. We find the same thing in the superior Courts of the Colony.
1654. Do you think the Magistrates have the power to stop it, if it is irrelevant? Yes, if it is irrelevant, but it is sometimes difficult to define what is irrelevant and what is not.
1655. Do you stop it in such cases? Yes, I do ; I say “ I think there is no need to go into that, Mr. So-and-so.”
1656. Did you ever see an attorney insult a Magistrate on the bench, or hear of one doing so? I cannot call to mind — There was one case, that of Mr. Moffat ; I forget the particulars of that now, but he made a very humble apology afterwards, and begged the pardon of the Bench when the Magistrates were all together.
1657. Of course you consider that you have the power to commit for contempt, or to suspend from practice in the Court? I do not think we can suspend from practice ; I think that belongs to a higher Court.
1658. Do you know whether other Magistrates have complained to Captain Scott of the paucity of police in attendance in the Court? I cannot speak of my own knowledge, but I believe so.
1659. How often are you in the habit of attending the Police Court? Generally twice or thrice a week.
1660. Do you stop there all the time? Whenever there is business to do I stay.
1661. Can you tell me how many hours a day, on the average, Captain Scott is in the habit of sitting on the bench, from your own observation? I cannot say how long he sits, but on the average, the business of the Court would take from four to five hours.
1662. I am asking you how many hours a day, on the average, from your own observation, Captain Scott is in the habit of sitting in the Court? Perhaps, on the average, from two to three hours.
1663. Do you know where he is when he is not there—what he is doing? I apprehend he is either in chambers, at Cockatoo Island, or at the Classification Board, or in attendance upon his superiors elsewhere.
1664. That frequently occurs? Yes ; once a week, for example, he goes to Cockatoo Island ; that is, on Wednesday, and it causes considerable delay.
1665. Can you say whether Mr. Dowling and Mr. Forbes were in the habit of sitting more hours a day on the bench dispensing justice than Captain Scott has been? I believe they were ; I think they had not to visit Cockatoo.
1666. Can you state, as a matter of fact, whether the business was disposed of more expeditiously than it has been since Captain Scott has been Police Magistrate? I think it was ; they were legally qualified gentlemen.
1667. By Mr. Lucas : Was Mr. Forbes, when he was Police Magistrate, legally qualified? I believe not, but I believe he was then reading for the Bar.
1668. By Mr. Hoskins : Do you consider that Captain Scott is not a legally qualified gentleman? I think he is qualified to be a Magistrate, but I would omit the word “ legally.”
1669. Do you consider a legal training or education a necessary qualification for a Police Magistrate? I do not ; but I think every Police Magistrate should make himself conversant with the general Acts of Council.
1670. Was Mr. Dowling or Mr. Forbes acquainted with the general Acts of Council? Mr. Dowling was a barrister, and Mr. Forbes was preparing for the Bar.
1671. Do you consider that Captain Scott is? I do not consider that he is, in the sense in which they were.
1672. Do you consider that he has a better acquaintance with the principles of jurisprudence than

- than the other Magistrates? Not than some who have some knowledge of law; I think there is something more than a knowledge of law required for a Police Magistrate, a knowledge of human nature, a little colonial experience, and an acquaintance with dealings among men.
1673. Have you ever heard the complaint made by professional men, or by other persons, that Captain Scott was ignorant of the first principles of law? I have heard such things; but they might say the same thing of me.
1674. Do you think such complaints well founded? I think he might have read himself up better.
1675. Do you happen to know whether business is delayed, whether cases are postponed and remanded, in consequence of the paucity of attendance of Magistrates? Yes, I have known that frequently. I have frequently had to take the sheets, call over the names, and postpone them myself.
1676. Does that frequently occur? Frequently.
1677. Do you happen to know the number of Magistrates there are on the roster? No, I do not.
1678. Do you happen to know whether Captain Scott is in the habit of adjudicating upon cases in his private room? As a Court; I am not aware that he does in any other way; we sometimes hold a Court in his room.
1679. For the despatch of public business? For the despatch of public business.
1680. I want to ask you a question that Mr. Forster touched rather closely, although not quite;—Do you consider that the appointment of a Police Magistrate for the despatch of public business at the Central Police Office was an improvement? I think it an improvement.
1681. Do you consider that it is desirable that a person appointed as Police Magistrate should be a person of legal attainments? I do not think it a sine qua non, but at the same time I think it desirable that he should be well read up. I can easily imagine that a man of legal attainments may be otherwise unfit for the office of Police Magistrate.
1682. Will you explain what disqualification you referred to, if he has this essential qualification? He may be very ignorant of men and manners, he may have serious infirmity of temper, he may have crooked ways of viewing things, he may be partial.
1683. In making suggestions for the improvement of the mode of conducting the business, you said they were based upon the practice in London,—did you speak from personal observation? The suggestion I made with reference to the deposition, arose out of a correspondence with a relative of mine, who has been for thirty years in the Metropolitan Police Office, White Hall Place, London.
1684. Not from your personal acquaintance with the practice? Not at all. I have visited the Police Offices there, but this suggestion is from the experience of one whose knowledge of the subject is of more value than any observation of mine.
1685. Do you consider the system of management of the business at the Central Police Office as perfect or as imperfect? As very imperfect.
1686. Can you, as a Magistrate, make any suggestions for its improvement? I would suggest that there should be another efficient deposition clerk; that the other clerks should be replaced by men who are not at variance with one another, because as long as there is jealousy existing in the office the work cannot be done properly. I have seen squabbles—and a most disgraceful squabble, on one occasion—between two of the principal clerks, in the presence of the Police Magistrate himself; little short of a calling out, indeed.
1687. By Mr. Lucas: Will you name the clerks? The Clerk of Petty Sessions and Mr. Armstrong.
1688. That is, Mr. Connell and Mr. Armstrong? Yes.
1689. By the Chairman: Will you explain the nature of that altercation, or the circumstances surrounding it? It was some quarrel among themselves. I happened to be in the Police Magistrate's room when they began attacking each other: "I will meet you after hours in such a place." "Well, I am prepared." I said, "What a nice set of fellows you are—this is a most disgraceful thing."
1690. By Mr. Hoskins: Was Captain Scott present? He was.
1691. You are sure of that? If you had not so pointedly put the question I would have said yes.
1692. You have very little doubt of it? No doubt whatever.
1693. Did he reprimand the clerks? Not then.
1694. Did he take notice of it afterwards? I am not aware.
1695. Did he request them to refrain from this wrangling? No; one went one way, and the other the other.
1696. You gather that there is a spirit of insubordination in the office? Yes.
1697. What is your opinion based upon—observation? Yes; from my knowledge of the routine of business for the last twenty-five years, I would not have them in my office.
1698. Have you any other suggestions to make? I think the clerks are quite capable of doing their duty if they were kept at their duty.
1699. Are the clerks not kept at their duty? Not when such scenes as these occur.
1700. Are they irregular in their attendance? They are frequently absent. I frequently see them in the streets in business hours.
1701. Who is responsible for their being present to perform their duty? Captain Scott, as the head of the department.
1702. Have you represented to Captain Scott their frequent absence? I have not considered it my duty.
1703. Have you represented to Captain Scott the general inefficiency of the clerks? I have spoken of several who were inefficient.

R. Ronald,

- R. Ronald, Esq., J.P.
- 6 Aug., 1862.
1704. By the Chairman: Are these clerks still employed there? They are.
1705. By Mr. Hoskins: Did Captain Scott promise to attend to what you had said, or to make inquiries? No, he would not make such a promise to me.
1706. Is Captain Scott discourteous to you? Not to me, by any means. On one occasion he was so, and I will tell you how:—A man came to the Police Office to receive an amount ordered by the Court—it was for wages; there was no one there to pay it. I went into the inner office; the Clerk of Petty Sessions was not there, and there was no one deputed to act for him; the C. P. S., I thought, was guilty of great neglect in so acting. I expressed my opinion of his conduct, and got ill-will in consequence. I consider the conduct of the C. P. S., in this instance, most reprehensible.
1707. At what hour of the day was this? It was in business hours, from ten to three. I complained of it, and they were very sore upon the subject.
1708. In point of fact, do you know that the Clerk of Petty Sessions is frequently absent during business hours? He might; he was on that occasion. I thought it was very hard for a poor working man to come for his wages and not to be able to get them.
1709. Have you any suggestion to make with reference to the building? The building is very inconvenient—the offices are too much scattered. If the officers were more together a better supervision of the work could be carried out. I will illustrate it in this way:—A suitor comes in; he enters a room at the extreme end of the building in George-street; he asks for a summons or warrant; the Justice writes on a piece of paper, and he is told to go to the other end of the building, to look for Mr. So-and-so. No messenger is sent with him to show him the way, and a person not conversant with the office may wander about for three-quarters of an hour before the business is done. The applicant for a summons or warrant goes to one end of the office and applies for it, then he is sent away without a guide to the other end, then he has to come back to pay for the summons, and then he has to go away again to Mr. Armstrong at the other end of the building.
1710. Would you recommend the employment of additional police, to maintain order and to facilitate the despatch of business? There ought to be more police told off for Police Office duty.
1711. Do you consider that Captain Scott's failings, as a Police Magistrate, are more to be ascribed to want of determination of character than to ignorance of the first principles of law? I think so. I think the whole mischief has arisen from want of firmness in maintaining his position there as a Police Magistrate, and of making his subordinates do their duty properly. He is too amiable.
1712. Will you define what you mean by want of firmness in maintaining his position—do you mean in reference to his brother Magistrates or to his subordinates? His subordinates; he does not maintain his position as head of that department, and Mr. Connell is allowed far too much latitude.
1713. By Mr. Couper: You have not confined your attendance at the Police Office to your roster days, but have generally assisted Captain Scott on other days? Yes.
1714. Has that given you an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the various clerks in the office and their qualifications? Yes.
1715. You spoke of general inefficiency and want of cordial co-operation among themselves;—is that confined to only one or two clerks, or is it general among the clerks? General—the majority of them.
1716. Not as between Mr. Smithers and Mr. Connell only? No; there is a feeling between them.
1717. Do you consider Mr. Connell an efficient clerk for the general class of duties he has to perform? I think if he would keep in his room and attend to his duties, instead of cutting about the Police Office, he would be better in his place. I do not consider his duties very arduous; it is chiefly the taking and accounting for the fines and fees of the office.
1718. Has he not the general supervision of the whole clerical staff? Yes.
1719. To check the various clerks, and to keep the office records in order? Yes, but the money-taking seems to be his particular work.
1720. Mr. Ormiston is the accountant, is he not? Yes, but he has nothing to do with the money, he only keeps the books. The money ought all to pass through the hands of the Clerk of Petty Sessions.
1721. Is it your opinion that the chief duty of Mr. Connell is taking the fees and keeping an account of them? I think that is a very important part of his duty.
1722. Under whose direction are summonses and informations prepared? They used to be prepared by Mr. Martin and Mr. Davidson. Any suitor coming to the Police Office went first to the Magistrate for a chit, he then proceeded with the chit to Mr. Davidson, who prepared the information; he then came back to the Clerk of Petty Sessions to pay the money; when the money was received the information was initialled; he then returned to the Magistrate, and from the Magistrate he went to Mr. Armstrong for the summons and subpoenas.
1723. That is Mr. Armstrong's branch? Yes, and the preparation of the summons sheets for the Bench.
1724. Has Mr. Connell an office of his own? He has one that was the Police Magistrate's.
1725. Is it placed in a convenient position with regard to the other clerks? No, it is most inconvenient.
1726. Is it true that this was originally taken possession of by Mr. Warburton, when he was appointed to the Commission of the Peace? Yes.
1727. Then he abandoned his former office with the clerks and took possession of the Magistrate's room? Yes, and that is retained by Mr. Connell.

1728. Then Captain Scott has another room? Yes, it is a little room where you cannot speak a word confidentially without its being heard all over the place.
1729. Is there sufficient accommodation for Mr. Connell in the suite of rooms occupied by the clerks, without this room that he now occupies? Not as the building is at present.
1730. By Mr. Lucas: Was it not the case, that before Mr. Warburton was appointed a Magistrate he occupied a little room in the York-street end of the building? Yes. There would not be room there for Mr. Delohery and Mr. Ormiston; one is the accountant, and the other attends to the licensing business.
1731. By Mr. Couper: The office accommodation is rather insufficient? Yes, if you were to take away Mr. Connell's large room.
1732. You consider Mr. Connell competent for his position if he would attend to his business? I think he is competent enough to receive the money. I think any boy in a draper's shop could do that.
1733. You think he is a qualified clerk for that duty? Yes.
1734. Do you think Mr. Ormiston is efficient in his office as accountant? I have not had an opportunity of knowing; but I have not heard any complaint.
1735. Do you consider Mr. Armstrong well qualified in his branch? I do not; I think he has a sad infirmity of temper; he is very fidgety—apt to give annoyance and make mistakes. What I saw take place between him and Mr. Connell would have been sufficient, had he been in an office of mine, to have sent him about his business the next day.
1736. Do you refer to both of them? Yes; I would have collared them both and put them out of the office there and then.
1737. Mr. Smithers you consider well qualified as a deposition clerk? Yes; he has been there ever since he was a boy.
1738. Who are the other clerks who act as deposition clerks? Mr. Heales is the only one; he is getting well up to his work; he was a sad blunderer at first.
1739. By the Chairman: And just as he is getting up to his work he is removed to another branch? Yes, I suppose that was owing to Mr. Davidson's dismissal or resignation.
1740. By Mr. Couper: Who is the third deposition clerk? Mr. Heales was the only acting deposition clerk. There is some youth who acts in that capacity; he has not been very well lately—his name is Felton I think.
1741. You have no means of judging of his qualification? No; he used to blunder a great deal; it was he who addressed a subpoena to the defendant instead of to the plaintiff.
1742. He is the youth you spoke of in the former part of your evidence? No, that was another person who was there; I think his name is Chisholm.
1743. You are not aware that Chisholm and Day, junior, were not paid any salaries? No; I would rather pay salaries to persons who could do the work, than have persons unable to do it, for nothing.
1744. You object to youths being admitted into the Police Office to act as clerks without being paid? I do; I object to having any persons in the Police Office over whom there is no control, and if you do not pay them I do not think you have the control over them you ought to have.
1745. With regard to the police, you say they are not generally in attendance in sufficient numbers;—are you aware that the City of Sydney, for the last year or two, has been generally short of the proper complement of men? Yes.
1746. You do not imagine that the police are purposely kept away when they are available? I would not suppose that; I know they are not.
1747. It is stated by the inspector that there are five men told off every day for Police Office duty—are you aware that that is the case? No.
1748. What would you, from your experience, consider a sufficient number of men to be in attendance in the various Courts? Ten. I would place one to swear witnesses; I would place one at each door, to prevent the escape of anyone before the Bench, should he attempt it; that would be three in each Court; and then there ought to be two and a man over at the lock-up.
1749. Some of the police are occasionally required at Quarter Sessions, as well as to attend upon the various Courts? I have no doubt that they are on other duty, but still the want exists.
1750. With regard to the character of the Magistrates, are your remarks as to the want of education applicable to the Municipal Magistrates, or generally to the others;—since we have had Municipal Institutions, the Aldermen not unfrequently have been made Magistrates? Yes.
1751. Do you think putting these gentlemen into the Commission of the Peace has introduced the element you speak of? I do not refer to them so much as to others; I could point out others.
1752. Less competent even than the Aldermen? Yes; and some who affect to have education will not preside. I have frequently been in the Court and have said to a gentleman of this description, "Mr. So-and-so, will you preside—I wish you would do so, as Captain Scott is away at Cockaton?" and the answer has been, "I will sit with you if you wish it, but I will not preside." They do not like to incur the responsibility.
1753. That extends to gentlemen who have education—they do not choose to run the risk? Yes; but if they do not choose to run the risk, they are of no use as Magistrates.
1754. By Mr. Lucas: With reference to the building, do you not think it would be much more convenient if the Clerk of Petty Sessions were to take possession of what is now Mr. Armstrong's room;—Mr. Armstrong, I think took the room that was formerly the Clerk of Petty Sessions? That is Mr. Smithers' room.
1755. Would not that meet the objection with reference to the scattered nature of the offices?

offices? To a certain extent; but then you have Mr. Delohery and Mr. Ormiston isolated.

1756. Could not they follow Mr. Connell into Mr. Armstrong's room? They could go there, but it would be much better if they were all together.

1757. Would not they then be all together—would not Mr. Ormiston, Mr. Delohery, and Mr. Connell be in one room as they are now;—I would have a door leading from that room into what is now the information clerk's room, and also a door leading into the deposition clerk's—would not the clerks in the Police Office be all in one spot? I understood you to say you would remove Mr. Connell to Mr. Armstrong's present room, but I do not think that is large enough.

1758. Is it not larger than the room he now occupies? It is, if you take down the partition.

1759. Would not that meet the objection as to the scattered nature of the building, and allow the Magistrates their own room? Yes; but as an accountant, I say that the accountant ought not to be in the room where the general business is carried on.

1760. Is he not in the room with the other clerks now? No; his room is partitioned off it.

1761. Could he not have the room that is now occupied by Mr. Smithers? He might, but where would you put Mr. Smithers?

1762. He, as the deposition clerk, would not require to be seen by the public, and he might have the room now occupied by the accountant, at the other end of the building—would not that be more convenient? It would be more convenient, but I do not think it would be a satisfactory arrangement.

1763. Are you aware that a warrant issued by you was cancelled by another at any time? No, I do not remember.

1764. Have you ever found that the Magistrates have being inconvenienced by the inspector being absent when cases have come on, between ten and eleven o'clock in the morning? Yes, and I have been informed that the inspector has gone to the Inspector General's Office.

1765. Have you not known persons to be in custody where the Magistrates have been compelled to postpone their cases in consequence of the absence of the inspector, and for want of his evidence? I cannot charge my memory where cases have been postponed because the inspector was not present to give evidence, but I know that in consequence of the absence of witnesses they have been postponed.

1766. Do you not know that Mr. Warburton was often absent from the Police Office, between the time of the resignation of Mr. Forbes and of the appointment of Mr. Connell? I know he was, and I know the work was very much in arrear.

1767. Have you ever experienced the want of books of reference in the Police Office? Very much indeed.

1768. Are there not fully half the Magistrates in the Commission of the Peace in the City of Sydney who never attend either of the Police Offices? I should think there are; there are also many who attend there during a portion of the day, who adjourn the Court, and never come back to complete the business. I have frequently had to do that duty, and I dare say you have also.

1769. You say you have been doing duty at the Police Office for many years;—Have any summonses ever come before you containing so large a quantity (handing witness the summons marked C)? Nothing of the sort; two lines, or three, at the outside, is the usual thing.

1770. Do you not know that professional gentlemen, when they are engaged, prepare their own informations and summonses? Very often they do.

1771. Do you not know that in all the cases initiated by the city authorities the informations and summonses are prepared by their officers? Yes.

1772. Such as those brought before the Court by Mr. Stubbs, the Inspector of Nuisances? Yes.

1773. The summonses and warrants are all prepared by them? They are.

1774. Is it not the fact that when they come to get the Magistrates' signature they bring the informations and summonses attached? Yes.

1775. The Magistrates sign the informations and summonses at the same time? Invariably, in city cases.

1776. And also in professional gentlemen's cases? Yes, they are regularly prepared by them.

1777. Only in cases where the summons does not accompany the information are they prepared by the clerks in the Police Office? Yes, and very irregular it is too.

1778. By the Chairman: What are Mr. Connell's duties? I would define them, as far as I can, as the general supervision of the office, the checking of informations, the receiving of fees, and paying out of moneys—the receipt and disbursement of moneys.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Francis James Garrick, Esq., called in and examined:—

1779. By the Chairman: You are a Solicitor of the Supreme Court? Yes
1780. Have you had any experience as a practitioner at the Police Court? I am not a Police Office practitioner, but I have had average experience in practice there.
1781. Will your experience enable you to give this Committee any information as to the manner in which business is conducted there by the Magistrates? I consider the administration of justice on the part of the Magistracy very indifferent and incomplete, by reason of the greater proportion of the persons who occupy the bench being grossly incompetent to discharge the office of a Magistrate. As a rule, they are ignorant of common legal principles, and there is no competent person to give them information on points of law, or to direct their decisions.
1782. That is, no competent person connected with the establishment? Yes; no competent Police Magistrate, I had better say. There is no competent person to direct them in points of law; and in consequence of the successful efforts of the Police Office practitioners to mislead the Bench, the decisions given are, as a rule, erroneous.
1783. Then you have noticed attempts, on the part of Police Office practitioners, to mislead the Bench? The attempts are constant; the greater the lying the more the success, in my experience.
1784. Have you noticed anything in the decisions of the Police Magistrate himself to warrant you in stating that he is not a competent person? He is on the bench so seldom that I can hardly speak as to his decisions. I have frequently initiated a case before him, and he has left the bench for some cause or other, handing the case over to somebody else.
1785. Leaving it in the hands of other Justices? Yes. I think also that the conduct of the Police Office practitioners there degrades the Court to a very great extent, by reason of the Magistracy not having the moral courage to control them. I have heard, in one instance, both the Magistrate and the practising attorney call God Almighty to witness; and I have been a witness of other gross exhibitions of impropriety.
1786. Are these cases of frequent or rare occurrence? So far as my experience enables me to state, I believe them to be very frequent.
1787. With respect to the office arrangements——? I think they are very incomplete for the successful conduct of police business.
1788. Have you known cases postponed from time to time in consequence of the absence of Magistrates? I have had to attend on several days for trifling matters that should have been disposed of immediately.
1789. What has led to the delay? I believe it has been owing to want of departmental arrangement.
1790. By Mr. Hoskins: How often have you been in the habit of attending the Police Office? I could not give you an idea—not very often, but with sufficient frequency to enable me to form an opinion, because it has extended over years.
1791. Does that form one of the leading branches of your business? Certainly not.
1792. Are you frequently there? I am there sufficiently often to form a correct opinion.
1793. By the Chairman: You have been concerned there in many cases of great importance? In numbers of cases. They are generally cases of importance that I have to attend there.
1794. By Mr. Hoskins: Does a week or a fortnight elapse between each? Very often more than that.
1795. You cannot say then, of your own knowledge, how many hours a day Captain Scott attends on the bench? I have no idea; but I have very frequently observed that he comes into Court, initiates a case, and leaves it.
1796. Were you ever concerned in a case which he initiated and afterwards left? I cannot mention a case by name, but I know of several.
1797. Did you complain of his leaving the case? I protested against it. I may mention one that occurred the other day—the prosecution of Morrison by the Bible Society.
1798. To whom did you protest? I requested Captain Scott to continue the hearing of the case.
1799. Did he disregard your request? I cannot say he disregarded it; I think he said he had to go to Cockatoo.
1800. Did you make any representations to any other party? No, I think it was hardly necessary to do that, because the matter has been noticed in the daily Press.
1801. Do you know whether the Government have received any representations with respect to it? Not that I am aware of.
1802. You state that there are a considerable number of Magistrates whose educational acquirements and intelligence are so deficient that they ought not to be there? I am sure of that—positive of it. There are men on the bench who are grossly ignorant of the common principles of education.
1803. Do you consider that the persons to whom you refer are in excess of the number of Magistrates that have that qualification? I am sure they are. With the exception of several gentlemen, you seldom see a respectable man on the bench.

F. J. Garrick,
Esq.

8 Aug. 1862.

- F. J. Garrick, 1804. What do you consider respectable? A man competent to discharge the functions of a Magistrate.
- Esq.
- 8 Aug., 1862.
1805. You think most of the Magistrates are deficient in legal acquirements? Not only that, but defective in the knowledge of those general principles that enable a man to apply common sense in the giving of decisions.
1806. Will you have the kindness to state whether the persons to whom you now refer have been recently appointed or been Magistrates for a number of years? They are the appointments of the last few years. I think since Responsible Government.
1807. You mean to say that you consider the Magistrates who used to sit in the Police Court previous to the inauguration of Responsible Government were a superior class of men to those appointed since? With some few exceptions, I am certain of it.
1808. Are you not aware that a number of the Magistrates who sit on the bench are members of the Municipal Council? Several of them.
1809. Do you think those persons are not sufficiently well informed to dispense justice as Magistrates? My recollection only enables me to remember two, and I am certain they are quite competent in every sense of the term.
1810. Do you consider that the appointment of a Police Magistrate to preside in the Court at the Central Police Office is an advantage? I believe the appointment of a properly qualified man would remedy the whole evil.
1811. Will you define what you mean? I mean a professional man, a lawyer, a man who is able to direct the other Magistrates in difficult questions. Quite apart from other considerations, I think that gentlemen discharging the functions of a Magistrate ought to be able to apply to a lawyer to direct them on points of law governing cases, when Police Office practitioners attempt to mislead them, which they frequently do.
1812. Do you consider that Captain Scott is deficient in the elementary principles of law? I am sure he has no knowledge whatever on the subject, so far as I have been able to judge.
1813. Do you think his knowledge of the elementary principles of law is superior to that of the great body of the Magistrates? No, inferior to a great many of them.
1814. Do you happen to know whether his decisions generally are cavilled at or complained of by intelligent persons—not only by litigants but by professional men and others capable of forming an opinion? I hear that they are so, but I do not know it of my own knowledge. He never seems to me to get to the end of a case at all events, not of any that I have anything to do with. He does not seem to me to be able to stand the worrying of professional men, and he has not the moral courage to put a stop to it.
1815. I gather from what you say, that you recommend that the Police Magistrate should be a person of some legal knowledge? Yes, he should be a lawyer of good standing. You may get plenty of lawyers who are quite unqualified to discharge the duties.
1816. What would you consider a sufficient salary to enable the Government to obtain the services of such a person as you speak of? I do not think you could get a competent man under £1,000 a year.
1817. Do you happen to know of your own knowledge whether the Magistrates who presided in the Central Police Office previous to Captain Scott's appointment were subjected to the same insult and discourteous treatment from the Police Office practitioners as the present gentlemen? I believe not.
1818. Do you think the body of practitioners who practice in the Court were more respectful to the Magistrates previous to Captain Scott's appointment than they are now? I cannot say with reference to Captain Scott or any particular person, but to the Magistrates generally they were far more respectful.
1819. Are you aware whether Mr. Dowling, for instance, ever remonstrated with or directed them to be more courteous—did you ever hear him? I did not.
1820. Do you happen to know whether they were more respectful to him? Yes, so far as I had opportunity of judging. I might observe that no Police Office practitioner would address to a Magistrate an argument which he knew to be false, if he knew that Magistrate was capable of detecting it, nor would he conduct himself in an unseemly manner if he felt aware that the Magistrate had the courage to reprove or punish him. I have seen the most degrading and disgusting scenes in the Police Office, on the part of the Bench and persons practising there, which could be put down without the slightest difficulty if the Bench had the moral courage to do it; I speak of the Bench as a whole.
1821. Do you consider that Captain Scott shows a want of decision of character in common with the rest of the Magistrates? Certainly his weakness in that respect is patent to everybody.
1822. The practitioners are not more respectful to Captain Scott than to the other Magistrates? Very little.
1823. There is a little difference then? There is a little, because they treat him as a gentleman.
1824. Do they not treat other Magistrates as gentlemen? Certainly not.
1825. I should infer that there are reasons why the legal practitioners consider that the body of the Magistrates generally are not gentlemen, while Captain Scott is; will you be kind enough to say whether that is your opinion? I hardly know how to reply to that. Police Office practitioners can act in a gentlemanly way if they please, and I have generally observed that towards gentlemen on the bench they behave in a gentlemanly and courteous manner; but when men sit as Magistrates, who it is generally conceived, ought not to have been on the bench, they treat them accordingly. Judging from my personal experience, I should regard it as ridiculous to address an argument on a point of law to a man grossly ignorant of the common principles of education, and who could not appreciate it, while on the part of an attorney who has got up to speak on the other side, every effort to mislead has been successful.
- 1826.

1826. Did you ever hear the legal practitioners insult Magistrates on the bench? It is the rule, not the exception. I wish you to understand that I speak of Police Office practitioners, whom I consider a separate part of the profession. F. J. Garrick,
Esq.
1827. Have you ever heard that one of the Police Office practitioners threatened personal violence to Captain Scott when on the bench? I have, and I believe he was suspended in consequence. 8 Aug., 1862.
1828. Did you hear it from persons on whose statement you could place any reliance? I have no doubt of its truth from results—that the particular party was suspended.
1829. Do you happen to know whether he was arrested by order of Captain Scott? I do not.
1830. Do you happen to know whether he suffered any legal punishment? I think not.
1831. Beyond suspension? Beyond suspension. I may take that as an illustration of what I have been saying. Any man of moral courage would have committed the fellow at once.
1832. Do you happen to know whether that practitioner is now and has been lately practising before Captain Scott? Yes, continually; and I believe they are better friends than ever; that is to say, I believe Captain Scott is afraid of him.
1833. Did you ever hear Captain Scott use disrespectful or ungentlemanly language on the bench? I never heard or saw him behave ungentlemanly. I have heard him what I thought unkind, harsh.
1834. By Mr. Lucas: To witnesses? No, to prisoners.
1835. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you happen to know whether there have been many appeals against the decisions of the Bench—applications for prohibitions? They are far more numerous of late years than they used to be; they have increased to a very great extent.
1836. Prohibitions to stay judgments given by Captain Scott? Not by any individual, but by the Magistracy generally.
1837. Will you be kind enough to state what are the deficiencies you alluded to in the arrangements of the Police Office with respect to the clerical staff? I believe the arrangements are defective for the conduct of public business, which necessitates persons going there for several days before they can obtain the hearing of a case which should be disposed of in the course of the morning.
1838. Can you ascribe any reasons for that? So far as I have been able to judge, it results from their mode of construction of what we would call the business paper. On a particular day I have been told by the chief clerk myself that the Inspector of Nuisances has a right to pre-eminence on the sheet, to the prejudice of everybody else, but in some cases he is not ready to go on, and they are adjourned and occupy a pre-eminent position again, to the prejudice of subsequent cases.
1839. Have you ever remonstrated, against such proceedings? Yes, I made a great noise about it a little time ago.
1840. Has it been remedied? No; the chief clerk, and I think a gentleman named Armstrong, stated that such was the rule of the office, and that was all the satisfaction I could get.
1841. To whom did you remonstrate on the subject? To the gentlemen on the bench.
1842. Did you ever remonstrate to Captain Scott? No, I thought Mr. Connell was in charge of the department.
1843. Do you not consider that the Police Magistrate has general charge of the whole department? Yes, abstractedly considered.
1844. Did you never remonstrate with him? No, I should consider it useless.
1845. Why? He takes things so easy that I do not think he would worry himself by going into the departmental arrangements.
1846. I should infer, then, that the department is in a state of disorganization? I would not go so far as that, because the department may be properly organized though the Police Magistrate may not interfere; he may have a man beneath him who is able to conduct it better than himself.
1847. If the arrangements are not such as you approve of, or the body of legal practitioners approve of, and you consider they ought to be remedied; if they are not remedied to whom do you think you ought to apply? So far as my own opinion is concerned, I should think some Member of the House should take it up and ask for an inquiry into it.
1848. Do you not consider it very unfair to the person in charge of the department to bring any public charge against him without first making him acquainted with the irregularities complained of? Certainly, if they come in the nature of a charge, but it did not strike me as at all necessary. I abstain entirely from making any personal charge.
1849. You say the arrangements for public business are not satisfactory? Certainly they are not.
1850. Do you not consider that if you are dissatisfied with the arrangements, you ought first of all to appeal to the head of the department to alter those arrangements? In my own case the reason why I should not do so would be, that the Police Office not being a place where I practice habitually, I would rather endure the evils for the time being than be at the trouble of making a formal complaint.
1851. This Committee is appointed to inquire into the general management of the Central Police Office; you, I suppose, are a voluntary witness here, and you have complained of disorganization — ? I am here at the request of one of the gentlemen of this Committee.
1852. At any rate you have come here, and you complain of the general disorganization of the department, and you have illustrated it by referring to some particular case with reference to the Inspector of Nuisances having precedence;—I think, then, I ought to ask you if the body of legal practitioners in the Court have made similar complaints? I have heard them complain of that particular thing on one occasion, but the persons who are in the habit of practising there seem

F. J. Garrick, Esq. seem to have an influence also over the business sheet; they move cases and get them postponed. I do not know whether it is from constant practice, or from constantly bullying and insulting the Bench, but they seem to do just as they like.

8 Aug., 1862. 1853. Have you ever protested against that interference with the duties of the Magistracy? I have asserted what I conceived to be the rights of my client, as one of the public, but I have not travelled out of my way to bring myself into collision with professional men.

1854. Have you ever protested to Captain Scott? Not that I recollect; I do not believe I ever did.

1855. Are there any other objections to the management of the clerical staff of the office—do you think the clerks are generally efficient? I have noticed, on one or two occasions when I have been down there, that with the exception of one or two gentlemen, they seem to be disposed to hand business from one to another—"Oh, you do this, I am engaged"—"It is not my department"—or something of that kind.

1856. Do you believe that business has been delayed in consequence of this handing from one to another? I cannot say business has been delayed, but persons applying to conduct business in the ordinary course have experienced delay.

1857. Have you ever remonstrated with the chief clerk about this delay? No, I have rather given a fee to expedite matters.

1858. Are you in the habit of giving fees? No, I do so when I wish anything done quickly.

1859. Do you know whether the clerks have been in the habit of receiving fees from practitioners? Not as a rule.

1860. You have given fees? Yes, when I have been a little late, and the clerks have been detained a little over the usual time; perhaps on a Saturday afternoon, when the office was about being closed, I have given a fee in order to stop their mouths from grumbling.*

1861. Will you be kind enough to give the names of those to whom you have given a fee? I would not like to give the names, because it may have been my fault.

1862. Do you absolutely decline to give the names? Yes, because I consider it was my fault; I never was asked for a fee.

1863. Is it the practice in other Courts to give fees to enable you to get what you require? It is very common.

1864. Can you say whether it is common at the Police Office? I believe not.

1865. Did you ever hear other legal practitioners say they were in the habit of giving fees? Not that I am aware of. I believe those who practise there get their business completed for another reason, that the clerks are frightened of them. I may mention that the practitioners seem to rule the whole department with a high hand; they blow up the clerks, bounce and bully the Magistrates, and so get what they want—that is my experience.

1866. Do you consider that the clerks in the Police Office perform their duties with the same despatch, as satisfactorily, and as attentively as clerks in the offices of lawyers or any other clerks in private employ? Certainly not.

1867. Will you have the kindness to state what you have seen different in the practice there? I cannot state in what particulars, but I do not think persons in a similar capacity in a private office would conduct business in the way they do there; they would be afraid; the eye of the principal would be upon them; it would not be tolerated. For instance, I have heard of a clerk announcing to Captain Scott that he was unwell and must go home, and I have heard of him going for a day or two's shooting or fishing, or something of that kind.

1868. Do you happen to know whether the clerks are frequently absent? I believe they are frequently absent, but not the whole day. I believe they go in and out on excuses which they make; but I am not able to speak to any great extent in that particular matter.

1869. To whom do they apply for permission to absent themselves? To Captain Scott. I think the Water Police Department works very satisfactorily compared with the George-street one.

1870. Do you know whether there is much less business brought before the Water Police Office? I have heard that there is no comparison in the amount of business.

1871. Do you know whether there is any large amount of arrears of cases postponed at the Central Police Office? I do not know it of my own knowledge.

1872. Do you consider that there are a sufficient number of policemen in the Court to preserve order? I think the number is ridiculous.

1873. Too many, or too few? Far too many. It has often struck me as extremely absurd that six or seven drunken men or women should require six or seven policemen to go into the box to make oath as to the circumstances under which they apprehended them.

1874. I want to know whether there are a sufficient number of police to preserve order? Amply sufficient.

1875. Do you happen to know whether Captain Scott or other Magistrates are in the habit of cancelling warrants they have issued for the apprehension of persons, those persons not having been brought before them? No, I am not aware that it is usual. I have heard of one or two instances of such proceedings; I think, in one instance, a warrant, and in the other, a withdrawal of a criminal charge.

1876. The persons not having been brought before the Magistrates? No. One case I know of my own knowledge, the other I have heard of.

* NOTE (on revision):—The answers upon this page do not convey my meaning exactly in reference to the payment of fees. What I intended to convey was, that I have frequently paid fees to clerks, in order to insure compliance with my wishes (as in the production of Police Office documents in other Courts), and I have paid a gratuity, as stated in reply to the question "You have given fees?" at the bottom of this page.—F. J. G.

1877. Can you say whether this was the practice previous to the appointment of Captain F. J. Garrick, Scott? I do not know.
1878. Did you ever hear of it? Never. I may mention that only one of the two cases I allude to was by Captain Scott. Esq.
8 Aug., 1862.
1879. Have you any objection to state the cases? Yes.
1880. You never heard of such cases as the cancellation of warrants, without the apprehension of the persons against whom the warrants issued, occurring in Mr. Dowling's time? Never.
1881. Do you consider the arrangements for the despatch of business at the Police Office generally satisfactory? I do not.
1882. Will you be kind enough to suggest a remedy? I think a competent head of the department would remedy the whole—it strikes me so; because on the one hand, he would look into the official arrangements, and on the other, stop, on the part of the Police Office practitioners, that course of conduct the combination of which tends to all that is complained of in connection with the Police Office. If a competent man were sitting on the bench, a case which now occupies two or three hours, in consequence of the Police Office practitioners addressing what they know to be false arguments to the Bench, might be disposed of in ten minutes, because such a man would put a stop to the waste of time now occupied in this way, which so often leads to the throwing over of a great quantity of business.
1883. Are there any other recommendations you could make, with reference to the clerical staff or buildings? The buildings are considered to be thoroughly unfit for the purpose, but I do not know that I am competent to suggest any remedy on that head.
1884. By Mr. Cowper: What do you mean by a properly qualified Police Magistrate? A legal gentleman.
1885. You think if the Police Magistrate were a lawyer that would answer every purpose? He must be a competent lawyer.
1886. What do you think would be a fair salary for such an officer? I have stated that I do not think you could get a competent man under £1,000 a year.
1887. In these cases to which you allude, where in one instance a warrant was cancelled, and in the other a criminal charge allowed to be withdrawn, do you consider the proceeding improper? Highly improper; it is an offence in itself to compound a felony.
1888. By Mr. Hoskins: In the eye of the law? And in the eye of fact too, if the party were tried for it. It is generally considered that certain practitioners can, what is termed, manage anything.
1889. By Mr. Cowper: A great deal of the irregularity is owing to the improper conduct of the attorneys? I think so—in fact, I am sure it; if there was any person on the bench that would put it down the business would go on very fairly.
1890. You spoke of the Police Magistrate interfering to prevent false argument and long addresses;—do you not think that if the Police Magistrate were too arbitrary it would be matter of complaint? I think a complaint must be just before it is entitled to any weight.
1891. Is not the same complaint made against the Judges of the Supreme Court, that they permit the time of the Court to be needlessly wasted in long arguments? The public may call it needlessly, because perhaps they do not appreciate the importance of a full discussion of some matters that occupy the attention of the Supreme Court; but at all events, it is not carried to the same extent there, nor are the arguments of counsel so glaringly false as those which are made use of constantly and with success at the Police Office.
1892. By Mr. Forster: This practice of receiving fees, as to which you have declined to give the names —? I did not state it was a practice.
1893. It has happened to you? Yes.
1894. You are not aware whether it has happened to other persons? No.
1895. Do you know whether it has ever occurred with regard to either the Magistrates or the police officers of the Court? I have heard reports, but of course I have no knowledge of their truth, as to practitioners working with the sergeants of police in obtaining admission to the watch-house to get business, and all that kind of thing. I have no doubt of its truth, from what I have observed, but I cannot say I know it of my own personal knowledge.
1896. By Mr. Hoskins: Is it a commonly received opinion among professional men, that to get business despatched quickly it is necessary to give a fee? No.
1897. By Mr. Cowper: There have been some changes during the last year or two;—have you any objection to say whether the persons are now in the employ of the Government who received the fees from you? Yes, I object to state that.
1898. By Mr. Lucas: With reference to the increase of prohibition cases latterly—is it not more simple to obtain prohibitions now, under Sir John Jervis' Act, than it was some years ago? Yes.
1899. Before the passing of that Act it was very difficult—persons had to appeal to the Quarter Sessions? Yes; at least it was much more difficult than it is now. But there was always a Common Law right of prohibition, and there is that now.
1900. Does it not facilitate business to give the civic authorities precedence on one day of the week? No, I have not found it so. It tends rather to confusion, because the number of cases the civic authorities bring on prevents their being ready in the whole of them; and then if they are defended, as perhaps happens in every third case, the Inspector of Nuisances arranges for their going over, and that confuses the whole thing.
1901. I am speaking of it under the idea that they would be properly managed;—would it not facilitate business then, if the civic authorities had one day in the week set apart? Undoubtedly, if the public knew it, but they do not know it.
1902. You do not often appear as an advocate at the Police Office? Not very often.
1903. Do you know of your own knowledge that some practitioners there place on, remove,

F. J. Garrick, Esq., and sometimes postpone cases of their own on the summons sheet, without consulting any person? They appear to me to do it, from my own observation.

1904. Have you known a Police Office practitioner go up to the summons sheet and place a case on the sheet? No, I have not.

1905. Speaking of the necessity of police going into the box to prosecute cases of drunkenness;—it is necessary for the policeman who apprehends a man to go into the witness box to depose to the circumstances? I do not say it is not so; but it has often struck me as ridiculous to see six or seven stalwart policemen, each in charge of some decrepit old woman, going into the box and making a long statement.

1906. Nevertheless, it is necessary that some person should go into the box? I suppose, as a fact, it is so.

1907. By the Chairman: It has been stated to this Committee that the establishment is in perfect working; do you consider it so? Certainly not.

1908. Do you think it regular or proper for a Magistrate to order the cancellation of a warrant previously issued by himself, after it has been placed in the hands of the police for execution? No.

1909. I wish to correct you when you stated that the Inspector of Nuisances has a large number of cases; you mean Mr. Stubbs? Yes.

1910. He generally has a very large number? Yes.

1911. Do you know the average number? No, I am not aware. I think I have seen as many as fifteen on the sheet.

1912. Have you ever heard attorneys at the Police Office misstate both law and evidence to the Bench? Their conduct is the rule in that particular.

1913. Has that been done, in your opinion, through ignorance? Wilfully. I do not think at all about it; I am sure of it. With them, the more guilty the party the more glory in getting him off.

1914. Speaking of the class of persons who usually preside at the Police Office, have you not known many cases of considerable importance, involving complicated questions of law and fact, frequently decided by the class of persons you have spoken of? Frequently.

1915. With reference to the establishment generally, do you consider the present staff, if properly managed, sufficient to carry on the business? Too many, I should think; in fact, I am certain of it.

1916. Have you been acquainted with any of the clerks there for some time past? I know them; I am not intimately acquainted with them.

1917. Do you know the deposition clerks? I think I do.

1918. Mr. Smithers? Yes.

1919. Is he not considered a good deposition clerk? First class. He and Mr. Crane, now in the Water Police Department.

1920. Were the two best, I imagine? I think so.

1921. Have you heard complaints, from time to time, of suitors and witnesses being delayed at the office? No; I have spoken of my own knowledge in that respect.

1922. Their being delayed at the Court? I have said so—that a case which might be disposed of in ten minutes has kept me dancing attendance for three or four days.

1923. Do you consider that these irregularities arise from the want of a competent person at the head of the establishment? Yes, a person who could put a stop to the waste of time that occurs by needlessly long examinations and speeches. For instance, if a Magistrate admits as evidence what fills six or seven sheets by way of deposition, not one word of which should have gone down, it must necessarily lead to waste of time. Then some of the Magistrates, knowing their own incompetency, are often afraid to decide in a difficult case. I think there have been one or two cases of prohibition lately in which the Magistrates have been personally let in for costs. They are always safe in dismissing a case, but they may do harm if they give an erroneous decision. It seems to me that they are so frightened now that they often dismiss a case for no other reason. Whenever they have the slightest doubt they are afraid to adjudicate. I have heard as much stated from the bench.

1924. By Mr. Forster: Is there no remedy for that? I know of none but the appointment of a competent man who would not be afraid to decide. You cannot go by mandamus, because they have heard and dismissed. If a gentleman hearing such a case could go into the adjoining room and ask a Police Magistrate, competent to give an opinion, whether the argument addressed to him was right or not, of course he would act, if he had confidence and the public had confidence in the Police Magistrate.

1925. By the Chairman: I think you stated that you had frequently noticed a large number of policemen in Court? Yes, it takes three of them to call a witness; the inspector in charge of the summons sheet calls out the name, some one standing by calls it out again to some one at the door, and he goes outside and calls it.

1926. Have you noticed any want of order in the Court generally on the part of the public? No, that has never struck me.

1927. Have you ever heard complaints made by suitors and others, of Magistrates attending to take particular cases? No doubt they do; I have not the slightest doubt of it.

1928. You have heard such complaints made? Yes, I have no doubt the Bench is repeatedly packed.

1929. By Mr. Hoskins: Which do you consider the most important part of the Police Magistrate's duties? His judicial position.

1930. Sitting on the bench adjudicating? Yes.

1931. Can you say of your own knowledge whether Captain Scott spends more of his time in his room or on the bench? So far as my experience goes, he is seldom or ever on the bench.

1932. I think you said before, that he was not in the habit of sitting so many hours on the bench as Mr. Dowling? No, not so far as my experience goes. There seems to me to be a disposition on the part of Captain Scott to shrink from cases that worry.
1933. Do you think it would be more satisfactory to the public and to legal practitioners if the Police Magistrate were sitting on the bench adjudicating? Yes, I am certain of it. He ought to be always there, either for reference or acting personally. Everything in the Police Office is introductory to the exercise of his judicial character, and the most important part is a correct decision.
1934. I gather from what you say, that it would be more satisfactory if a Police Magistrate, who had a knowledge of the law, were dispensing justice and sitting in the Court the whole day? I do not say merely a lawyer, but a good lawyer.
1935. By Mr. Cowper: A bad lawyer would be worse than none? Yes.
1936. You are aware that very great complaints are made by the public because there is no person sufficiently accessible to enable them to get their summonses and warrants signed? I never heard that; any Magistrate can do that.
1937. Are you not aware that the unpaid Magistrates generally decline to do it, and that in consequence, Captain Scott has undertaken the chamber duty? I was not aware of it. I have experienced no difficulty in going to private Magistrates, at their counting-houses, and getting them to do what I wanted. Of course they have asked me to be sure it was quite right. If I went to an entire stranger he would probably tell me to go down to the Police Office.
1938. By the Chairman: In your opinion, the Police Magistrate should not be called upon to discharge other duties than those immediately connected with the office? What do you mean by other duties?
1939. Such as visiting at Cockatoo? I think he ought not to be out of the Police Office.
1940. By Mr. Hoskins: His duties primarily should be on the bench? I think so.

F. J. Garrick,
Esq.

8 Aug., 1862.

Mr. Edward Reeve called in and examined:—

1941. By the Chairman: You were formerly a clerk in the Central Police Office? Yes.
1942. In whose time? I joined the Central Police Office on the 11th January, 1854, and I left it on the 18th July, 1858, having been there four years and a half.
1943. I believe you are at present employed in the office of the Sydney Morning Herald? Yes.
1944. Have you, since leaving the Police Office, had any opportunity of observing the manner in which business is conducted there? Yes, some opportunities.
1945. Do you consider the establishment in perfect working order? Not quite; it could be improved.
1946. Who was Police Magistrate during the time you were employed in the Police Office? Mr. Dowling was the first, then Mr. Forbes; I left during Mr. Forbes' term of office.
1947. Can you state about how many hours per diem Mr. Dowling usually sat on the bench? He was frequently on the bench all day; he used to come off for his lunch.
1948. And adjourn the Court for half an hour or an hour? Yes, the Court he was sitting in, if he was sitting alone.
1949. During that adjournment did he usually take chamber business? Yes, he had chamber business then immediately; the moment he came off the bench people used to rush in upon him. That was always the difficulty in the Police Office, to get the chamber business done. That has been the cause, as I think and always thought, of the mismanagement of the office which has frequently happened. There was no authority to do the chamber business when the Police Magistrate was on the bench. We used to have assistance from the unpaid Magistrates, but although the unpaid Magistrates were very useful when they sat on the bench, they frequently caused great inconvenience when they acted in chamber business. This was because their attendance to it was so desultory. An unpaid Magistrate would perhaps commence a case, and there would be great difficulty to get him present at later stages in the proceedings.
1950. Then it was considered absolutely necessary, at that time, that the Police Magistrate should devote his attention to the Court duties, was it not? Yes, to both duties.
1951. Were the complaints of frequent occurrence as to the delay to suitors and others, by reason of the chamber business not being attended to? The cases could not be initiated unless there was due authority got for it; the clerks could not take any responsibility.
1952. Did not Mr. Dowling usually manage to get through the chamber business as well as the ordinary business of the Court? He did the best he could.
1953. Did he not manage to get through it? Yes, he managed to get through the business some way or other, of course.
1954. Have you any correct knowledge of the working of the Police Office establishment during the last two years? No, I have not been there except occasionally.
1955. Can you give the Committee any information as to the management of the office during the last two years or twelve months? In what way?
1956. As to the general working of the establishment—as to the mode in which the business of the office is conducted generally, or the decisions of the Court? I know nothing about the decisions of the Court; I do not take any interest in them.
1957. By Mr. Lucas: Do you not think it would be a great improvement if one or two unpaid Magistrates were summoned daily to do the chamber duties? It would be an improvement, but it would not work so well as the appointment of a second Police Magistrate.

Mr. E. Reeve.

8 Aug., 1862.

- Mr. E. Reeve. 1958. In reality, it would not take above two hours a day to do the chamber duties? It would take all day.
- 8 Aug., 1862. 1959. Why? Because people come in to make complaints at all hours—from nine in the morning to four in the afternoon.
1960. Would it not be more convenient for persons making complaints to attend at certain hours of the day? I do not think that could be done. I was summons clerk for a long time, and, according to my experience, when parties come in smarting under an injury, if they cannot get to a Magistrate at once, they immediately think the clerk is putting them off; and then, if the summons clerk went to the Police Magistrate on the bench, and tried to get an authority from him there, the case would be interrupted and the clerk would be snubbed by the Police Magistrate, as I have been frequently myself for so doing.
1961. You think it would be an improvement to summons unpaid Magistrates to do the chamber business daily? Yes.
1962. And then the Police Magistrate could be constantly on the bench? I think it might be an improvement, but it would be rather doubtful, for this reason—that it would give the police clerks too many masters; every unpaid Magistrate would be the temporary master of the department, and that would interfere with its efficiency.
1963. The chamber duties chiefly are merely to hear complaints and order summonses or warrants, as may be required? Yes.
1964. What interference is there with the clerks? I recollect a case which I think will show you the nature of the interference to which I allude:—Under the Deserted Wives and Children's Act, it was the practice of Mr. Dowling to issue warrants in the first instance, and it was always done. But there was some action taken in the matter—I forget whether by the intervention of the Supreme Court or otherwise, but however, it was found out to be illegal. We then had orders to issue no warrants in the first instance under that Act, but only warrants for disobedience of summonses. Subsequently to that, several unpaid Magistrates wanted to issue warrants in the first instance where the cases were very hard, but of course the clerks, having had directions from the Police Magistrate, made a difficulty about doing it, and they would have got into a scrape if they had done it. In that case, you see, the unpaid Magistrates and the Police Magistrate were at issue, one ordering one thing and the other another.
1965. Generally speaking, all the Magistrate does in chambers is merely to write on a slip of paper—"information for wages," or assault, or so forth, and put his initials to the paper, and send it to the information clerk? Sometimes the unpaid Magistrates would order summonses under an Act which would not be correct.
1966. Many of the paid Magistrates do that? At the time when I was a clerk in the Police Office, both the Police Magistrates were professional men—Mr. Dowling and Mr. Forbes.
1967. By Mr. Cowper: Mr. Forbes was not a professional man then? I understood he was a barrister.
1968. By the Chairman: He was then studying for the Bar? He was acquainted with the law.
1969. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you consider it desirable that the Police Magistrate should be a person conversant with the law? I do. I think it is almost a matter of necessity; not that I intend to cast the slightest imputation upon the gentleman who holds the office at present.
1970. Which do you consider the most important duties the Police Magistrate has to perform—the chamber business, issuing summonses, or granting warrants, or dispensing justice on the bench? I think it very difficult to say. The duties are all very important. The Police Magistrate, as the head of the department, must manage his department and see that all goes on right, just as any other head of a department. If he merely sat on the bench things would soon get into a state of glorious confusion.
1971. You consider the Police Magistrate responsible for the efficiency of the department? Certainly.
1972. I think I understood you to say, Mr. Dowling used to sit on the bench nearly the whole day? He was frequently there the whole day.
1973. And at the same time he used to attend to the chamber business? Yes, people used to rush into his room the first thing in the morning before the Court opened, and they used to watch for him as he came across. If he left the bench for a moment or two, for a natural occasion, he used to have two or three old women running after him, and his temper used to suffer in consequence.
1974. Was there much clerical business which the Police Magistrate has to perform, in arrears when Mr. Dowling was Police Magistrate? I do not think any of the Police Magistrate's business was in arrears.
1975. Granting summonses, issuing warrants, signing informations, and so on? No, it could not be; I do not see how business of that kind could get into arrears; it would have to be attended to one way or the other. People might complain of delay, but of course if the complaint was not made or sworn this day it would be the next. It was the business of the clerks to see that when parties came there they were attended to, and of course, if a person came for an information one day and they could not get it sworn, or whatever had to be done in the matter, they took good care to see that the matter was attended to by the Police Magistrate as early as possible the next day; or they got it sworn before any unpaid Magistrate they could get hold of.
1976. Then, in point of fact, there was no inconvenience from Mr. Dowling sitting on the bench the whole day? I think there was every inconvenience.
1977. Inconvenience to the public? There was inconvenience to the public.
1978. For what reason? The unpaid Magistrates were not always there—only occasionally; sometimes sometimes a great many and sometimes none at all. That was particularly the case during Mr. Dowling's magistrature. When Mr. Forbes was Magistrate, the unpaid Magistrates used to be more constant in their attendance. Mr. E. Reeve.

8 Aug., 1862.

1979. That being so, were there any great delays in the issuing of summonses, hearing informations, and granting warrants? You see the work at the Police Office is very irregular. Sometimes there are a great number of persons present to make complaints for two or three days, then almost none at all; at such times we might have plenty of Magistrates there in the one case, and we might have none in the other. In my time the business was exceedingly irregular, and it was impossible to regulate it, from the difficulty of having a Magistrate that one could have access to.

1980. You think the appointment of a second Police Magistrate, who should be accessible at all times for hearing informations, would be an improvement? I think it would be a great improvement; I have always thought so; of course he would have to be a competent person. I do not say that a paid Magistrate should be appointed entirely to do chamber business, but that there should be one of two always ready to do chamber business, and the other to go on the bench.

1981. You think it an advantage to have paid Magistrates? Certainly; not that the assistance of the unpaid Magistrates is not very important and valuable too, but I do not think they are to be depended upon to keep the department regularly going.

1982. Will you state generally your reasons for preferring to have stipendiary Magistrates doing duty at the Police Office? Simply because there would be always somebody there that the clerks could always have a claim upon, to attend to whatever business came in. It might be that a bail-bond was required to be executed immediately, and if the Police Magistrate was not in the office—he might have gone down to the Colonial Secretary's Office perhaps—then the only way would be, as I have frequently done, to go and watch for an unpaid Magistrate. I think I have stopped Mr. Lucas frequently to take bail-bonds and recognizances. The clerks used to get hold of Mr. Egan so often that at last he did not altogether like it. A good-natured unpaid Magistrate was in fact rather liable to be imposed upon.

1983. Do any other reasons suggest themselves to you for having paid Magistrates? No, I do not think I have any other reasons. I think if there were two paid Magistrates, the Government could then be secure that they would have a technical knowledge of the law, which is especially requisite, it strikes me, in initiating cases. Another reason is, that they would be responsible to the Government immediately; and there would always be a provision for chamber business and Court business going on at once.

1984. Do you consider that that arrangement could be carried out by making the Clerk of Petty Sessions a Magistrate, for the purpose of signing summonses and granting warrants? If he was competent to the office it might.

1985. Did you ever hear at any time, that clerks at the Police Office were in the habit of receiving fees from persons who had business there, or from legal practitioners, for the purpose of expediting business or getting their cases put prominently on the list? I have heard insinuations made, but I do not know anything about it.

1986. You know nothing of it of your own knowledge? No. There was a regular rule for setting down cases, and if any case had been put on the list in an exceptional way, Mr. Dowling would have detected it immediately.

1987. You think there is no foundation for these insinuations as to the clerks being in the habit of receiving fees? I did not make any such insinuations; I said I knew nothing about it.

1988. You said you had heard it insinuated that the clerks were in the habit of receiving fees? I did not say I had heard insinuations that they were in the habit of doing it now; I spoke of the time when I left; I cannot speak of the actual working of the office now. It is very easy to throw out these insinuations, and very difficult to answer them.

1989. By Mr. Cowper: You say the want of having somebody to perform chamber duty at the Police Office was always felt? Always.

1990. And you consider that that is a very important part of the Police Magistrate's duty, if not the most important? I think it is. If the Police Magistrate was always in the chamber he would always be able to manage his department.

1991. You consider that there is ample work for two Police Magistrates? I do. They might be occasionally idle when complaints came in slowly, but to keep the department working in thorough efficiency, my impression is that there must be two Police Magistrates, thoroughly competent men, not only to do the work but to see that the clerks do not make mistakes, and occasionally to see that the unpaid Magistrates also do not make mistakes.

1992. Did you consider Mr. Dowling overworked—that he had more to do than he could do with regard to his health? I think he was overworked.

1993. Was it not a complaint that his health broke down? It was generally said so. Mr. Forbes had the same amount of work to do, but he managed to get more assistance from the unpaid Magistrates.

1994. By the Chairman: Do you think two Police Magistrates would be necessary at the Central Police Office if a division of the city were made, allotting a larger space to the Water Police Office; for instance, by dividing the city and giving them jurisdiction as far as King-street? It would depend upon the area assigned, but still as that has been the Central Police Office so long, you would find that a great number of persons would continue to come to the Central Police Office. When I was there, after some division was made, we used to have a great deal of work belonging to the Water Police division; they would come to the Central Police Office, and when the case was initiated we had to send them back to the other Court.

- Mr. E. Reeve. 1995. Could not that be remedied by the clerk or person taking the information, by referring them at once to the other Court? It was frequently; but an idea that has taken possession of the people is that the Water Police Office is for sailors' cases only.
- 8 Aug., 1862. 1996. Have you heard of any proposition to divide the city? Yes, I have.
1997. Do you think that in the event of such a division being made, two Police Magistrates would be necessary for the George-street Office? I cannot say; it depends altogether upon the nature of the division.
1998. I believe whilst in the Police Office you had some experience in preparing informations and summonses? Yes.
1999. Will you just look at these four summonses (handed in by Mr. Connell), and say whether you consider them fair specimens of the summonses usually issued at the office—daily issued at the office whilst you were there? No; I think they are a great deal neater than the summonses I used to send out.
2000. It is not the neatness I speak of, but did you ever see any containing so great a quantity of matter as these do, whilst you were there? I have seen it in some special cases.
2001. But are these samples a fair sample in point of bulk? Certainly not.
2002. By Mr. Forster: Have you looked at the grammatical construction of them? No, I have not.

ADDENDUM.

NOTE.—With reference to the foregoing evidence given by me—in answer to questions 9, 12, 13, 26, 33, and others—relative to the performance of chamber duties at the Central Police Office, and the necessity for having some Stipendiary Magistrate always at hand to attend to those duties, I have omitted to state the significant fact, that during a considerable portion of Mr. Dowling's magistrature (and immediately subsequent to my own appointment) a very large proportion of the chamber business was voluntarily transacted by Captain M'Lerie, in addition to his own particular duties as Superintendent of Police. So that during the whole time that Captain M'Lerie's official duties were transacted by him at that office, there was, practically, a second well-experienced Police Magistrate at the Central Police Office, to whom the clerks could have recourse if Mr. Dowling happened to be specially engaged.

The assistance thus afforded—as long as it lasted—of course enabled Mr. Dowling to devote a large proportion of his time to a very efficient performance of bench duties, without creating any great inconvenience in the office. The assistance thus afforded was rendered by one who did not interfere with the executive management of the office, properly so called. Mr. Dowling was assisted in the chamber business by Captain M'Lerie, but he always remained the sole head of the department, in regard to the management of his clerks, the arrangement of their respective duties, and all internal regulations of the business of his office. When Captain M'Lerie left, it was of course a very different matter. The difficulty I have spoken of then began to be very sensibly felt, and the clerks managed with Mr. Dowling and the unpaid Magistrates in the best manner they could.

EDWARD REEVE.

Sydney, 14 August, 1862.

TUESDAY, 12 AUGUST, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER, | MR. DICKSON,
MR. HOSKINS.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Alexander Dawson, Esq., called in and examined:—

- A. Dawson, Esq. 2003. By the Chairman: Your name is? Alexander Dawson.
- 12 Aug., 1862. 2004. You are the Colonial Architect? I am.
2005. Do you produce any plan of the Central Police Office building? I do. It is the only public building in the city of which I had not a record; but I have prepared a plan of that building. The proposal is to make it more useful until the new buildings are erected, and for that purpose several improvements were in the meantime found necessary.
2006. By Mr. Cowper: Do you propose to build upon the space inside the wall dividing the building from Market Lane? Yes; it will give additional accommodation.
2007. You provide other accommodation for the Court-keeper, removing him from the main body of the building, and giving him quarters in the north-west corner of the yard? Yes.
2008. That makes two other rooms available for offices in the main building? Yes.
2009. And it is intended to put clerks into these offices? I believe so; the alterations were made for that purpose.
2010. The space is available for them? Yes.
2011. What else are you doing? Making the roof water-tight.
2012. And making general repairs? Yes; a sum of £1,000 was voted for that purpose last Session.
2013. You have been in conference with the Mayor and City Surveyor, on the subject of negotiations between the Government Departments and the City Corporation, in reference to carrying out arrangements for the new buildings? Yes.
2014. Have you and Mr. Bell agreed upon a plan? Not exactly. I have some objections to Mr. Bell's plan.
2015. Has Mr. Bell consented to adopt your plan? I do not know. I suggested that he should make some alterations on his plan.

2016. You have not seen the plan of Mr. Bell carrying out the modifications you suggested? No; I am not aware that any alterations have been made on that plan. A. Dawson, Esq.
2017. The present buildings are exceedingly ill suited for their purpose? I believe so, though I have not been many times in the buildings. 12 Aug., 1862.
2018. And they are not of sufficient value to make it desirable to retain them? No.
2019. And no alterations or repairs would make them so? No; the building is unworthy of extensive alterations.
2020. By the Chairman: And even if they would, it would involve the expenditure of a very large sum of money? A large sum of money would require to be expended on the building, which is not worth it.
2021. By Mr. Cowper: Do you think it would be a desirable way of providing for the Police Department of the city, as well as the Municipal Corporation, provided the plan were modified as you suggest? I should suggest that the Police Department occupy one end of the building and the Town Hall the other.
2022. And instead of their going through from George-street to York-street, you propose that they should run north and south? I would have the Police Department at the Druiitt-street end, and the Town Hall at the north end. I also think the plan might be altered so as to include the open area in the centre, shown on Mr. Bell's plan, which is about twenty feet wide. That, the most valuable part of the ground, could be made available for greater convenience and accommodation.
2023. You think you could put buildings upon the area you speak of, and still leave the office equally commodious and convenient? Yes; I think more so, if you, as I have just said, include the space. I think the most valuable part of the site is taken up by this area.
2024. By the Chairman: You propose to build over it? The plan would be entirely recast. Yes, I would occupy the space, to afford more accommodation and convenience.
2025. How would you light the interior? By clere story windows.
2026. In the dome above? There are several modes of lighting.
2027. Do you not think that would be a great waste of public money—for what use would these rooms be adapted? No doubt the plan would require to be remodelled.
2028. Very considerably, would it not? Not considerable, but it would very considerably improve an objectionable design.
2029. By Mr. Cowper: You have only conferred with Mr. Bell and some of the city authorities upon this matter? That is all. The Mayor, the Police Magistrate, Capt. M'Lerie, and Mr. Bell, were there.
2030. By the Chairman: Have you only had one conference? Only one.
2031. By Mr. Cowper: When will the repairs in the present building be done? Very soon. The roof was the principal thing; the gutters were bad, and I have built two rooms for the Court-keeper, and made two additional offices, that was all that Captain Scott and the buildings required.

E. Bell, Esq., called in and examined:—

2032. By the Chairman: Your name is Edward Bell? Yes. E. Bell, Esq.
2033. You are the City Engineer? Yes, and Surveyor. 12 Aug., 1862.
2034. Do you produce from your office, Mr. Bell, the proposed plan of the new Town Hall and Police Offices? I do.
2035. By Mr. Cowper: Is that the plan originally submitted to the Government, and which received their partial assent, or the one adopting some of the suggestions made by Mr. Dawson? It is the same plan, but not exactly as it was submitted to the Government. It embodies Captain Scott's and Captain M'Lerie's suggestions, with regard to the Police Office and Watch House—Captain Scott's with regard to the Police Offices, and Captain M'Lerie's as regards the Watch House.
2037. It was not seriously considered? I had that impression. He proposed that the space between the buildings should be built over; and I pointed out that the covering of the area was objectionable in one sense—that it would deprive the Police Office and Town Hall buildings of light. In addition to which, I urged that the covering of this space instead of leaving it open, would cause a material increase in the expense, whilst we had sufficient space without it. The accommodation was considered sufficient by Captain M'Lerie and Captain Scott, except in one respect, namely, a stable for two horses. When I suggested to Captain Scott that it was not advisable to have a stable in the middle of the buildings, on account of the offensive smell that would arise therefrom, he did not press it. He thought it would have been useful for the custody of stolen horses or cattle, pending adjudication.
2038. It was not with the view of providing stable accommodation for horses used by the officers of the department? I understood that it was necessary to have stables for stolen horses or cattle. I also heard that stalls were required by the officers of the department for the accommodation of their horses, but I could not undertake to say I heard it at that meeting.
2039. You consider it is not necessary for the sake of obtaining space on which Police Office buildings of sufficient dimensions may be erected, that Mr. Dawson's suggestion should be considered—you think you have space enough? Yes, leaving that central space open.

E. Bell, Esq. 2040. You have then space enough to provide accommodation for the necessities of both departments? Everything.

12 Aug., 1862. 2041. You consider it objectionable that the whole block should be built upon? Yes, as obstructing the light and ventilation. When the plan was laid before the Government, Mr. Cowper urged the necessity of the Police Office building being kept entirely separate from those on the Corporation ground. In the plan submitted to the Government in the first instance, the strong solitary cells were under the Town Hall, but by decreasing the width of the middle area, I put the cells and waterclosets in the main building of the Police Office, of which this a plan.

2042. You have adapted your plan to the suggestions of myself? Yes. Then in order to meet Captain Scott's view of having nine rooms in addition to the Police Courts and Magistrates' room for the Police Office, I have made the two Police Offices the same size as now, and four rooms, 25 feet by 17, on the same floor as the Police Office, for Captain Scott, the Clerk, and the Magistrates. Then on the story above are five rooms. The Police Office may be higher than the clerk's room. Captain M'Lerie wished that in the plan I could make an alteration of the arrangements, so as to get a separate watch-house for the women and another for the men, and that the walls of the cells should be detached, so as to prevent communication. By a little alteration of the arrangement, I have obtained three cells at the Druitt-street end of the Police Office for women—one is 14 feet 6 inches by 12 feet 6 inches, and the others 18 feet by 12 feet. They are so arranged that women must pass the searching room and sergeants' room before going into the Police Office. In addition to the eight solitary cells, there are two waterclosets in that end. There is also a separate entrance for the Magistrates at the northern end of the Police Office. Every part will be totally distinct from the Town Hall.

2043. You still adhere to this plan, as preferable to that of Mr. Dawson? I think so, in every respect; and think that when Mr. Dawson goes into it, he will find the funds will run short in covering this immense area. We have sufficient space for all the accommodation required for the Police Office and Town Hall without this covering.

2044. By Mr. Dickson: What do you mean by the funds running short? Well, I calculate that the work may be done for £25,000; to cover the whole would cost £40,000.

2045. By Mr. Cowper: And you consider it a needless increase of the expenditure? Yes. You will find full accommodation when the building is finished, without covering the whole site.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William Conway Armstrong called in and examined:—

Mr. W. C. Armstrong. 2046. By the Chairman: You are a clerk in the Central Police Office? I am.

2047. How long have you been employed in that office? Over four years; I am now in my fifth year.

15 Aug., 1862. 2048. I believe you attend to the summons department? I do—that is part of my duty.

2049. I suppose you attend to the issue of all summonses out of that office? All summonses in that office go through my hands.

2050. Will you look at those four summonses (handing witness the copies of summonses appended to Henry Connell, junior's, evidence)? Yes, I know them.

2051. Those have been filled up by yourself? Yes, but shall I explain —

2052. You may explain afterwards. Do you consider those fair samples of the summonses issued from your office? Not generally.

2053. As regards their length or form? They are, occasionally.

2054. Will you look at the whole of them, and say about how often you make out such summonses? Perhaps once a month.

2056. Can you state how often that summons is used (C 4)? I really could not say how often; the last case we had of this kind was about four months ago—keeping a bawdy house.

2058. Could you give the places? Not without reference to my books.

2059. Have you had six within the last year? †I think so; still I could not give the places without reference to my books.

2060. Will you state how these summonses were prepared? It was, I think, on the second day that Mr. Connell was examined, and he sent for me, and said, "Mr. Armstrong, will you prepare

* Revised:—Twice or thrice a year.

† Revised:—No.

"prepare a few of our longest summonses, as the Committee wish to make it appear that there are nothing but short summonses; and I wish you to prepare some of the longest, in order that I may take and show them." He said, "Can you do them at once?" I said I could not, but that I would take them home, and get up at five o'clock the next morning to do them; accordingly, I prepared thirteen, and took them the next morning to Mr. Connell, who selected these four after looking over them: that is all I know of the transaction.

Mr. W. C.
Armstrong.

15 Aug., 1862.

2061. Were these the four longest? I think they were a fair average of those I copied; I have the others to produce, but not here.

2062. By Mr. Cowper: Is the work you have to perform at the office heavy? As much as ever I can do; I am frequently obliged to take home work.

2064. Do not the city authorities prepare their own informations and summonses? Will you explain what you mean by "the city authorities"?—There are three. Mr. Stubbs prepares his own informations and summonses; Mr. Seymour the same; and, until within the last two years, Mr. Mitchelson, who has to prosecute breaches of the law by millers and bakers, did the same.

2065. Mr. Mitchelson is not an officer of the city authorities? I was not aware of that.

2068. Can you tell me the duties that Mr. Connell performs? My answer would be the duties of a Clerk of Petty Sessions—the duties defined by Act of Council.

2069. Do you think the staff of the General Police Office is sufficient? Since the death of Mr. Martin we have been a good deal pushed.

2070. In consequence of the scarcity of hands—the insufficient number of clerks? Yes.

2071. By Mr. Wilson: Are you generally able to perform your duties during office hours? Sometimes; sometimes I am not. I wish to submit a statement of my duties, to be appended to my evidence. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix.) I wish also to submit four or five summonses that were prepared yesterday, to show the general character of the business done.

2073. By the Chairman: Those are original documents? Yes.

2074. By Mr. Hoskins: Are you often in the Police Court? Only in Captain Scott's absence, when I take a summons to an unpaid Magistrate to be signed. I confine myself closely to my office.

2075. Is Captain Scott frequently absent? Only when he goes to Cockatoo Island or to the Classification Board.

2076. How often does that occur, on the average? Twice a week.

2077. How many hours a day is he absent, or is he absent the whole day? He generally goes about ten, after having initiated the business, and he is frequently back at one; sometimes it is two or three; it depends upon the business he has to do.

2078. By Mr. Cowper: He does not go to the Classification Board weekly? I fancy so. I am told when he is absent that he is at Cockatoo or at the Classification Board.

2079. He goes to Cockatoo every Wednesday? Every Wednesday, and sometimes Thursday. I have known him to go there three times a week, when there has been any row.

2080. On all other days he is there during office hours? Yes, constantly; he is generally the first there, at nine o'clock in the morning.

2081. Does he attend in his room or on the bench? He generally sits on the bench, one day with another, two hours a day. I have known him to be sitting there at six o'clock in the evening.

2082. By the Chairman: Where? In the Court.

2083. Who? Captain Scott.

2084. How often? Occasionally.

2085. Attending to the public business till six o'clock? Yes.

2086. How often during the last four years have you known the Court to be occupied till six o'clock? Half a dozen times.

2087. Have you ever known Captain Scott to sit more than once after four? I think I have known him sit there six or seven times.

2088. I think you said you had not known the Court to be open during the last four years more than half a dozen times? I have known it to be much more frequently open after five.

2089. Can you state whether you have known it to be open more than half a dozen times during the past four years after four? Yes; but I would qualify what I before stated—I firmly believe it has been open more than half a dozen times.

2090. You cannot state positively? No, because unless I am detained by some special business, I go away at four o'clock.

2091. By Mr. Hoskins: I understood you to say that Captain Scott's average attendance is about two hours a day at the Police Court? Yes, I think, as nearly as I can judge. I do not constantly see Captain Scott, as I only go into Court when I have summonses to be signed; but I think, taking one day with another, the average would be about two hours a day.

- Mr. W. C. Armstrong. 2092. On the days when he is not attending the Classification Board or visiting Cockatoo, where does he spend his time the rest of the day, when he is not in Court? In his room, as far as I can judge. I only go to Captain Scott when I have business with him; when, for instance, I require him to sign summonses, &c., and when I go I find him there.
- 15 Aug., 1862. 2093. Do you know how he is engaged when he is in his room—what duties he is engaged in? In giving orders for summonses and warrants. Parties go to him and state they wish to lay an information; he then makes a memorandum of the names of the plaintiff and defendant, and sends them over to the information clerk, who draws the information.
2094. He is engaged more in attending to his office duties than in adjudicating upon the bench? That would imply that I watch him all day, but I see very little of the Court except when I have to visit it to get the signature of a Magistrate to a summons; I am confined to my own room.
2095. Is it part of your duty to fill up the warrants? No, the warrant clerk attends to that.
2096. By the Chairman: You have nothing to do with filling up warrants? Nothing. When I say that, I do not mean absolutely nothing, as occasionally, when there is a rush of business, I assist generally in the work of the office.
2097. Your business occasionally leads you into Court? It does.
2098. Do you recollect a person being committed to gaol for a month by the Police Magistrate, for being found asleep in her own water-closet? No, I do not.
2099. Do you recollect, in the early part of the present year, five men being arrested immediately upon their arrival in Sydney, from the Melbourne steamer? No, I do not.
2100. Have you heard it spoken of in the office? No, I have not.
2101. These men were detained in custody for a considerable time, merely upon the receipt of a telegram from Melbourne? I have not heard of it; most distinctly not.
2102. Your business is merely to fill up summonses, and to perform the duties mentioned in the memorandum you have handed in? Yes, and sometimes, assisted by Mr. Felton when he is not engaged, in taking depositions.
2103. And apart from these you can give us no information? I cannot.
2104. You stated, I believe, that Captain Scott, on a fair average, sits in Court about two hours a day? That is my impression.
2105. Can you state to me that during the last week Captain Scott has sat there a quarter of an hour a day? Where I sit I cannot see Captain Scott every time he goes in and out; I am not constantly watching Captain Scott; it is impossible for me to say.
2106. Are you not aware that the moment Captain Scott has opened the drunkards Court he leaves it? No, I have known him sit there two and three hours.
2107. Does he not invariably leave the Court the moment a second Magistrate comes in? Not to my knowledge. He may go out of Court without passing my room; but I am confined to my room, and do not see him every time he leaves the Court. He is in my room sometimes at least half a dozen times in the day; he looks over my summonses and books, and asks if there is anything for him to sign.
2108. Have you heard many complaints from suitors, witnesses, and others, as to delay in the office in the preparation of summonses, subpoenas, and bail-bonds? I have not.
2109. Never upon any occasion? Never upon any occasion. They are taken in turn, and attended to, one after another, as they come in. Of course if a number of cases come in I have but one pair of hands, and cannot attend to them all at once; if a constable comes to me with a man, and says, "Here is a man who has to be bound over to keep the peace," I must keep the others waiting while I attend to him.
2110. Whose duty is it—in the event of a person being fined, with the alternative of imprisonment—to prepare the proper document, and to send over to the watch-house when the fine is paid? The Clerk of Petty Sessions.
2111. His duty alone? His duty alone; at least I presume so.
2112. Cannot you state whose duty it is? I believe it to be his duty. Let me understand your question. When a person is fined for assault —
2113. For anything? It is the duty of the chief clerk to send over the memorandum the moment the fine is paid.
2114. Then it is the chief clerk's duty? Yes.
2115. How long ought the preparation of such a document to occupy? The person is brought over by the constable—"This man wants to pay the fine for drunkenness." Mr. Connell sends the person for the papers, the information and proceedings; they are brought to Mr. Connell, he reads them, makes out the memorandum, takes the money, enters it in his book, receipts the depositions, and sends the memorandum of receipt to the person in charge of the watch-house, who on the receipt thereof discharges the prisoner. That may occupy from five to ten minutes.
2116. And not more? And not more; that is, generally, unless it is an extraordinary case.
2117. Do you know anything about a man named Fitzsimmons? No.
2118. You do not know anything of that case? No.

APPENDIX.

Writing summons sheets for Magistrates and Senior Sergeant of Police, in charge of Courts, and for posting on outer door of Police Office, for information of public. Filing and recording informations, numbering and indorsing same with date of return of summons, and residences, &c. of defendants, and sometimes of complainants. Writing summonses and duplicates thereof, and indorsing same for service. Arranging and keeping the documents connected with the daily business of the Courts. Writing subpoenas and summonses for witnesses and depositions that persons are material witnesses witnesses. Registering dogs, and keeping alphabetical register of the names, &c., of persons registering dogs. Binding over witnesses to give evidence at Quarter Sessions and Gaol Delivery. Writing recognizances and notices thereof for witnesses to produce stolen property at Quarter Sessions and Gaol Delivery and Central Police Office. Writing notices for witnesses not to appear at Quarter Sessions or Gaol Delivery and not to produce stolen property at ditto, in cases in which the Attorney General declines to prosecute. Writing recognizances and notices thereof, viz., persons bound to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour. Recognizances of and notices of bail in cases of felony and misdemeanour. Writing affidavits of justification of bail. Keeping book for the entry of names, &c., of sureties, for approval of Sub-Inspector of Police, as bail for prisoners, and in cases of binding to the peace or good behaviour. Keeping book for recording all cases for trial at Quarter Sessions and Gaol Delivery. Writing list of drunkards, abstract of summons cases, and abstract of charge sheet, cases for chief clerk, that he may know the business of the Courts for each day. Writing and entering letters connected with the business of the branch. Recognizances and notices of bail remanding prisoners; ditto in summary cases. Recognizances and notices, in cases of lunacy, under 9 Vic., No. 34, sec. 3. Keeping record of police summonses, &c., issued without information or complaint, under 19 Vic., No. 24, sec. 23. Keeping book for entry of all fees received daily for informations, summonses, warrants, subpoenas, recognizances, &c. Writing recognizances and notices thereof, under "Deserted Wives and Children's Act." Taking charge of jury lists, electoral rolls, and plans and descriptions of roads, &c., from Surveyor General's Office, and showing same to public. Taking charge of all informations upon which warrants are issued and all remanded cases (felony and misdemeanour), and handing over same to deposition clerk when required for the Court. Writing requisitions to Government Printer and entering same in requisition book.

Mr. W. C.
Armstrong.

15 Aug., 1862.

John Icke Kettle, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

2119. By the Chairman: You are a Magistrate of the Territory? Yes.
2120. And have been in the Commission of the Peace for some years? Yes.
2121. Do you occasionally attend at the Central Police Office and perform the duties as a Justice of the Peace? Very frequently.
2122. Have you attended there frequently of late years? Yes.
2123. Having attended there, can you give the Committee any information as to the manner in which this business is now conducted? You are speaking now of the present time. I do not think it is at all well managed at the present time. I think a great many alterations could be made for the public benefit.
2124. Can you point out any alterations which you think would be beneficial to the public? I think at the present time they are very deficient of competent clerks; that there are too many young persons who are sent there without experience, and that they injure the efficiency of the Police Court very much, for I think it requires persons of experience for such positions. Young persons might be admitted to gain a knowledge of the routine of business, but they should be some time before they took any responsible office.
2125. Have you, in point of fact, heard any complaints? Many.
2126. From whom do those complaints generally emanate? From the Magistrates and from the public.
2127. Complaints of the inefficiency of the establishment? Of the want of system, in a great measure, I think.
2128. Do you recollect being present at the last licensing meeting? Are you speaking of the annual licensing meeting?
2129. I think the last quarterly licensing meeting? I do not think I was.
2130. Do you recollect being present at a licensing meeting when a statement was made to the bench by the Clerk of Petty Sessions? I was when the Magistrates applied for a clerk; he said there was not one to send. I think there was some remonstrance made about it, and he said that he had not a sufficient staff; that such a number of young persons were sent into the office who were not efficient that it was impossible for him to carry out his duties.
2131. Did he say something to this effect—that it was impossible to get anything done for himself, that he could not get a clerk to do anything for him? Something of that kind. It struck me at the time that they wanted a head somewhere to refer to.
2132. Do you think these difficulties have increased within the last few months? Very much indeed.
2133. Were there any similar complaints during the time of Mr. Dowling or Mr. Forbes? I was not there in Mr. Dowling's time.
2134. Mr. Forbes? During Mr. Forbes' time everything went on well; there appeared to be a superior or head to the department, and there seemed to be a sort of obedience which I question whether there is now.
2135. Are you acquainted with the deposition clerks, Mr. Smithers, for instance? Yes, he is a very good one.
2136. First class? There could not be a better.
2137. Mr. Crane? There could not be a better.
2138. Perhaps he was the best in the whole Colony? There could not be a better; his general conduct also was of the most praiseworthy character. I have not met a person who has not spoken in the highest terms of him, both as to his efficiency and his general character. I think his going away was a great loss to the Central Police Office.
2139. He has been promoted? He has gone to the Water Police Office.
2140. Can you say so much for the efficiency of the deposition clerks at the present time, other than Mr. Smithers? I do not think they know much about it, although there is one youth at the Central Police Office who seems to be very quick.
2141. Do you know what portion of his time Captain Scott attends in Court? He is not much in Court.
2142. Can you say, as far as you have observed, how often? I think he generally goes in every morning, but as soon as he is relieved by other Magistrates he leaves, unless he is engaged in the case.

J. I. Kettle,
Esq., J.P.

MR. WINDEYER.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

James Sheen Dowling, Esq., called in and examined:—

J.S. Dowling,
Esq.
20 Aug., 1862.

2143. By the Chairman: You are Judge of the Metropolitan District Court? Yes.
2144. And formerly were Police Magistrate of Sydney? I was Police Magistrate for upwards of six years, having all the time a double power, that is, two Justices united into one.
2145. Then you were in a position to transact all the business that came before the Court? I was in the position, and did transact, I believe, two-thirds of it.
2146. During the time you held that office, can you tell the Committee the average number of cases that were disposed of yearly at the Central Police Court? I cannot now, but there are statistics in the office that will show, because the returns were called for.
2147. Do you know the average amount of business transacted there at the present time? No.
2148. Has it increased or decreased? I am told by the clerks who are in the office now, and who were in the office with me, that it has decreased.
2149. Have you any reason to doubt the accuracy of that statement? I have no reason to doubt it in the least.
2150. Have you had any knowledge of the working of the office during the last twelve months? I have never been there since I ceased to be Police Magistrate, and cannot say I have any knowledge, except from seeing the criminal cases that have come to the Quarter Sessions, where I preside as Judge, and from reading in the newspapers the decisions. I have no personal knowledge.
2151. Can you state the number of clerks in the department during the time you were Police Magistrate? I think there were nine.
2152. Do you recollect the names of most of them? Yes; Mr. Warburton, the two Mr. Ormiston, Mr. Smithers, Mr. Crane, and Mr. Davidson. There have been many changes made there. At one time there was the gentleman who is now at the head of the Benevolent Asylum—Mr. Mansfield, and Mr. Martin, who died lately. I think those are most of them.
2153. Do you think those clerks who now remain in that department of the public service efficient? Mr. Smithers was always efficient, and Mr. Crane was also efficient. Anyone who knows Mr. Smithers knows that he is a man of intelligence, of great activity of mind, and a very good deposition clerk. Of Mr. Crane I always had a high opinion; I always thought him a very worthy person, and I was very glad to see him promoted. He is now head clerk of the Water Police Department. I took an especial interest in him, because it was during my time that he was placed in the office, and I therefore watched his career and was pleased to see him go on well; he has up to this time retained my good opinion. Mr. Smithers I found there.
2154. Did you occasionally transact the magisterial business of the department? Very seldom; I was always in Court.
2155. Do you consider that the proper place for a Police Magistrate? Certainly the place where he ought to be, or at least where a Police Magistrate ought to be. In my time there were two Police Magistrates, in point of fact.
2156. Who attended to the chamber business? Mr. McLerie, for hours daily.
2157. How many? For hours; I cannot say how many—it would depend upon the amount of business.
2162. Upon ex parte application by the party? Cases might occur where it would be so. Suppose A, believing a murder had been committed, and believing that B had committed the murder, might obtain a warrant, and while the warrant was unexecuted, A might be properly convinced that no murder had been committed—that the person supposed to be murdered was actually alive; in such cases A might and ought to go to the Magistrate and withdraw the warrant.
2163. Even that would be somewhat improper? It would be an exception to the general rule.
2164. In the case of a woman charging her husband with bigamy, with positive proof of the fact, or without positive proof, and a warrant being directed to issue, do you think upon the ex parte application of that woman the warrant should be cancelled and a summons be issued? Certainly not, except in extreme cases; if the woman once invoked the law, the law should be allowed to take its course.

2165. Do you think it would be proper to order the cancellation of a warrant upon the statement of a woman—after the warrant had been placed in the hands of the police—that a summons would do as well? No, except in extreme cases.

2166. Do you not think such a course would be highly irregular and improper? It depends upon the circumstances; a general rule would not meet all cases.

2167. Under ordinary circumstances? Under ordinary circumstances, once having granted a warrant I should not recall it; although there might be some circumstances where a summons would have the same effect as a warrant.

2168. Whilst you were in the office, when a person was sentenced to a few days imprisonment in default of the payment of a fine, and he was removed to the station-house, how long was he detained after the fine had been paid? I can scarcely understand your question. If the fine were not paid he was sent to the lock-up, and would not be removed till the van came.

2169. If a friend came and paid the fine while he was lying in the lock-up, how long a time should be occupied in the preparation of the necessary document to send to the lock-up to procure his liberation? There was no document required so long as the man was in the watch-house; it would not take a minute; it would be necessary only to go from the Court to the lock-up, and to say that the fine was paid.

2170. Whose duty would it be to walk over to the lock-up? I should think a policeman's.

2171. In the event of there being no police in attendance, whose duty would it be? I should think one of the clerks might do it; I should not like to ask him; it would not be part of his duty to go to the watch-house, but in such a case I would not mind going myself.

2172. Ought not some document to be sent from the office? There is no necessity for an actual document while the party is in the watch-house.

2173. Would you consider the detention of a man from eleven o'clock till three, under such circumstances, very irregular? Certainly; communication, either verbal or written, ought to be sent immediately. I never remember such a case happening during the six years I was there. There are cases where prisoners are in gaol under similar circumstances, under warrant, where it might be necessary to have a written document, and in such cases time would be required not only to draw up the written document but to find a messenger to send to the gaol.

2174. But I am speaking of persons being still in the lock-up? I am speaking of their being in gaol now. There are cases, again, where persons are allowed bail, and who are committed to gaol until such bail can be found. The bail-bonds are prepared in the office, and it is then necessary for the Magistrate to go to the gaol and take the recognizances of the person in gaol, and that may cause delay. I have gone to the gaol at seven o'clock on Sunday morning to do so, frequently, and I have often called at the gaol on my way to and from the office.

2177. Did you, during the time you were Police Magistrate, receive informations from any person charging another with obtaining money upon false pretences without taking that information upon oath? Never; I think it illegal.

2179. Irregularity? If the Magistrate before whom the case were initiated were near I would not like to do it, but I, as Police Magistrate, have had to do it frequently.

2180. Did you ever do it without consulting the parties to the suit? I am talking of criminal cases.

2181. I am talking of civil cases? I never would interfere with another Magistrate's civil cases. I spoke of criminal cases. Sir John Jervis' Act allows another Magistrate to issue a warrant for the enforcement of a fine in a case where that Magistrate did not adjudicate. I may have done this under Sir John Jervis' Act. When a fine has not been paid, I may have issued a distress warrant or an apprehending warrant, though I have not taken any part in the proceeding. I have not liked to do it, but the law allows it. I would not, however, adjourn or interfere in a civil case during its hearing.

2183. By Mr. Couper: When you were Police Magistrate you had considerable assistance from Mr. M'Lerie, had you not? Yes. The fact is, my time was so taken up in Court that I never knew anything about a case till it came before me. I had the double power, and used to sit from nine in the morning until four or five. In summer I always opened the Court at nine, and disposed of all the drunkards. At this time I had very little assistance from the city Magistrates.

2184. But the issuing of summonses, and the hearing of cases before they came before you judicially, was attended to by Mr. M'Lerie? Yes, generally.

2185. In fact, practically, there were two Police Magistrates? Practically, there were two Police Magistrates.

J. S. Dowling, Esq., 2186. By Mr. Forster : Have you paid any attention to the reports of proceedings in the Court lately? I read them, as very instructive.

2187. Do you notice any difference in the conduct of the business, as compared with the way in which business was conducted in the Court during your time? If we are to believe the reports, occasionally irregularities do creep in that did not exist in my time.

2188. Do you think there is anything remarkable in the manner in which attorneys are allowed to treat the Bench? No; I think the same attorneys practise now that practised in the Court when I was there. They want to be kept in order.

2189. You think they do want to be kept in order? Yes.

2190. Do you think they are kept in order as well now as they were then? Perhaps not; I think some of them are allowed to speak their thoughts a little too freely.

2193. Then if Captain Scott, either from a mistaken sense of his duty or from the demands made upon him elsewhere, is prevented from attending regularly in the Court, do you not think that is likely to lead to the bad conduct of cases in Court, and to irregularities? Yes, no doubt of it.

2194. Do you think it is a matter of essential consequence that the chief Magistrate of a city like Sydney should be a lawyer? I think it is necessary that he should have something more than a mere smattering of legal knowledge, as he has to decide, sometimes, most important cases.

2195. As a general rule, do you not think it desirable that the chief Magistrate should be a lawyer? Yes. It may perhaps be put down to my natural feeling towards the brotherhood, but I would prefer a lawyer to a military man or a civilian generally, although a military man and a civilian may, in the course of time, become as learned in the law as a barrister or an attorney.

2196. Of course his constant attendance in the Court would have the effect of training him? Yes; any man who possessed nous, who attended the Court constantly, and bought legal books and read them, would in time acquire a large amount of legal knowledge; but if a man attends Court only once a month, he forgets one month what he had learnt the previous one; a man who attends day by day would soon be au fait in dealing with prisoners and in the duties of the Court.

2197. By Mr. Couper : I judge that your views are in favour of two Police Magistrates? Yes.

2198. One for chamber and the other for judicial business? Yes, and I always thought so; I advocated the appointment of a second Magistrate, and thought I had gained my point; but "there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip"—a new Ministry came into power who took a different view of the matter, and the old system was continued.

2199. By Mr. Forster : Do you not say that the most important duty of the Police Magistrate is to be upon the bench? Yes, I think so.

2200. You gave an opinion, with regard to cancelling warrants, which seemed to imply that it had been a practice known in your time? Never, to my present recollection.

2201. You never did such a thing? I do not think I ever did such a thing.

2202. You seemed to imply that cases might occur where the cancellation of a warrant would be justifiable? Yes, I think there may be such cases.

2203. Is not a warrant granted upon sworn evidence? Yes.

2204. Is it conceivable that a witness can be allowed to withdraw his evidence? He may make another affidavit.

2205. Is there any power given to a Magistrate to withdraw a warrant;—does not the issue of a warrant imply that the case is taken out of his hands altogether? I think not. Many warrants in this Colony have been cancelled, even by Mr. M'Levie. I think where warrants have been granted improvidently, upon insufficient testimony, or upon a mistake, as in the case I put of a supposed murder, the Magistrate would be right either to cancel the warrant or to put it by in a cupboard, or stay its execution.

2206. Would not the rule apply in that case, that the same solemnity which originated a warrant should be applied to its cancellation? That may be.

2207. Has that course been adopted in these cases? I cannot say.

2208. If that rule be admitted, it will follow that as the warrant is granted on evidence it should be cancelled on evidence? Possibly so. I have no doubt many warrants have been cancelled under the above circumstances. A master finding his servant absent from his business supposes that he has absconded, and rushes to the Police Office for a warrant for his apprehension. The master goes home and finds the servant, whom he thought absconded, at home and doing his duty. He asks why he was not at home at a particular hour, and obtains a satisfactory answer. Now it would be cruel in such a case to allow a warrant to hang over the head of the servant, and to leave it in the power of a constable to apprehend him and put him in the lock-up, where he might be kept for hours or even days before he could be released. In such cases the Magistrates, when required to do so, do their duty by cancelling a warrant.

2209. Have you ever heard of a Magistrate, other than the one who had granted it, cancelling a warrant? No; that I think might be a dangerous power to give to a Magistrate, to allow him to interfere with another Magistrate's duty.

2210. By Mr. Windeyer: Does not the responsibility of getting a Magistrate to issue a warrant rest with the person who put the law in motion? No doubt the responsibility rests with him. J. S. Dowling,
Esq.

2211. Supposing a Magistrate did grant a warrant in the way you have supposed, would not the person so obtaining it be answerable in an action for malicious prosecution? No doubt; but it would be hard upon the person who had applied for a warrant under a mistake, if, after he had applied to have it cancelled, it should be executed. 20 Aug., 1862.

2212. By Mr. Forster: On the supposition that there is some doubt as to the legality of the Magistrate doing this, would you recommend that the law should give the Magistrate the power of cancelling warrants? Reverting to the case I before put, it would be a monstrous thing to apprehend a man for murder when the murdered man was in existence, presented himself, and made himself known to the informer. In such a case the warrant must either be cancelled or become a dead letter, and if a dead letter why should it not be cancelled—why should it be said that there was a warrant in existence authorizing the apprehension of the man for murder?

2213. Suppose a case of this kind occurred, where a Magistrate wished to cancel a warrant and the constable insisted upon putting it in force;—would the constable be justified in putting the warrant in force, though the Magistrate had cancelled it as far as he had power to do so? Suppose the warrant is out of the hands of the Magistrate, and in the hands of the constable, the Magistrate tries to cancel the warrant and cannot get hold of it—that I understand to be your supposition—it would be an unseemly contest between the Magistrate and the constable.

2214. You have not, I think, yet answered my question;—Suppose there is some doubt about the legality of this practice, and admitting that benefit may result from it in certain cases, would you recommend that the law should be altered so as to give the Magistrate an undoubted power to cancel a warrant? Yes.

2215. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you, as a lawyer, consider that a Magistrate is empowered to cancel a warrant after having once granted it? I know of no statute law to the contrary; I know of no law that says a man having once granted a warrant shall not have power to cancel it.

2216. Do you know whether this is the practice in England? I cannot say. I can imagine extreme cases to happen in England as well as in this Colony.

2217. You have put a case to show that the withholding from a Magistrate the power to cancel a warrant might operate harshly in the case of a servant supposed to have absconded; but I ask you whether a Magistrate ought to grant a warrant lightly—whether he ought not, in the first instance, ascertain the truthfulness of the information? Suppose a man comes and is willing to swear such and such did take place, why should the Magistrate doubt his word, if he is a man of known character.

2218. Supposing he does swear that such and such did take place, and a warrant is issued, do you not consider that the warrant should be in force, so that the person who had applied for a warrant lightly should be made amenable to punishment by action for false imprisonment? It depends upon circumstances; the person who applies for the warrant may have reasonable cause to believe the party was guilty of the offence, and that would be a good ground of defence to an action.

2219. Do you not think this system of Magistrates cancelling warrants might lead to some abuses? I do not know that any system exists; I think it is the exception; I never heard of it as a system; occasionally it occurs.

2220. Can you give us any idea how often you cancelled warrants? I do not know that I have ever actually done it, but I imagine I have done it.

2221. It was not at all a common thing with you? No.

2222. In fact it was so uncommon that you cannot remember an instance? It is almost six years since I was a Magistrate, and it is impossible I can remember instances; certainly it was not the practice.

2223. From your observation when you were presiding as Police Magistrate in the Police Court in Sydney, did you consider that the bearing and demeanour of the legal practitioners was more respectful to you, as Police Magistrate, than to the unpaid Magistrates generally? My impression was that they paid me more respect than the unpaid; but I seldom had the unpaid with me, so that I could scarcely form an opinion. They always showed a greater inclination to have the cases tried by me than by the unpaid Magistrates. I have heard the practitioners address the late Mr. Chambers very improperly; but the Magistrates may have provoked that.

2225. By Mr. Windeyer: Are they not more likely to do that in Courts where those who preside are not conversant with law? Yes.

2226. By Mr. Hoskins: Were you in the habit of checking them when they entered into irrelevant matter? Certainly I endeavoured to do so. I have the same practitioners in my Court now that I had in the Police Court—Mr. Moffat, Mr. Cory, and Mr. Roberts, and with some of those gentlemen, to check them is to increase the difficulty.

2227. Were they always respectful in their bearing towards you? Yes, the same gentlemen practise before me now who practised in the Police Court when I was there; I have known them constantly for the last twelve years, with the exception of two years, when I was at Bathurst, and I never had from either the slightest disrespect.

2228. Have you heard that they are in the habit at times of insulting the Magistrates on the bench? I have seen such a thing reported in the papers; whether it is true or not I will not venture to say. Many things get into the papers that are not true.

- J. S. Dowling, Esq.
20 Aug., 1862.
2229. Of course if insulting language were used to you, you would commit the person for contempt of Court, even if he were a legal practitioner? I certainly would; but I forgot myself once in not doing it, or rather I threatened to do it; I only had occasion once even to threaten it; but that has gone by, and I do not wish to rip up an old proceeding.
2230. It has been given in evidence that some legal gentlemen who practice in the Police Office use very offensive language to the Bench, and that in one case a practitioner even threatened personal violence to a Magistrate on the bench; nothing of the kind ever happened when you were present? Never.
2231. Would you recommend that the Police Magistrate, or the Magistrate who presides in the Central Police Court should be a lawyer? I would rather recommend that he should be a lawyer than that he should not. I do not see that it is absolutely necessary that he should be so, if he is a man of mature age, of fair intelligence and education, and moral worth, and possesses some acquaintance with law.
2232. Do you not think the business would be proceeded with with more regularity, and disposed of more promptly, if he were a lawyer? I certainly would rather have him a lawyer than not, but others who were not lawyers might make just as good Police Magistrates.
2233. Do you know whether there was much arrear in the Police Office business, whether cases were frequently remanded for want of the attendance of Magistrates, when you were there? There were frequently cases remanded, but not from want of my being there.
2235. By Mr. Windeyer: Supposing a Police Magistrate and other Magistrates were present on the bench, what position do you think the Police Magistrate ought to take up with regard to the other gentlemen? They ought to be all on a footing of equality; I see no absolute necessity for the Police Magistrate to take the Chair. As regards the Mayor he is entitled to precedence, and when I was Police Magistrate the Chair used always to be given to him, except in the case of revising the electoral lists, when, under the Act, the Police Magistrate is required to do certain duties, and on that occasion it is his duty to preside. On one such occasion Mr. Thurlow claimed precedence over me because he was Mayor. Generally I did not claim precedence over anyone, but if I were in the Chair I did not rise to give it to anyone, the Mayor excepted.
2236. Suppose you thought a man ought to be committed, and the other Magistrates thought he ought not? I would commit—I have done that in numerous cases.
2237. By Mr. Lucas: The other Magistrates could have done the same? Yes. There have been cases where five Magistrates have been against me, and I have committed, and a conviction has followed. It has also been the other way—I have refused and the others have committed.
2238. By the Chairman: You have committed occasionally, and the person has been afterwards discharged? Yes, sometimes the most guilty escape in the Courts where the cases are as clear as noonday.
2239. Would you grant a warrant except upon the information of a competent witness? In other words, would I grant a warrant upon the information of an aboriginal?
2240. No; would you grant a warrant upon the information of any person, that person not being a competent witness? I scarcely understand your question.
2241. Would you grant a warrant against a man upon the charge of bigamy, on the information of his wife? The second wife would be a competent witness.
2242. The second is not his wife, the wife I speak of, is it not illegal to do so? I would not say whether under some circumstances I would not take the information of the wife for that purpose.
2244. Would you grant a warrant upon the information of a wife charging her husband with bigamy? I am not prepared to give a positive answer to the question.
2245. By Mr. Windeyer: Do you think the holding what is called a magisterial inquiry in the private parlour of a citizen of Sydney, with reference to the death of person, a correct proceeding on the part of a Police Magistrate? I was never put in the position of holding an inquiry, and I can scarcely answer the question; but I should imagine it was not a course of proceeding I should like to adopt. I should make up my mind, as Police Magistrate, to decline holding such an inquiry. I had enough to do from nine in the morning till four or five o'clock in the afternoon, without holding these inquiries.
2246. By the Chairman: During the time you were holding the office of Police Magistrate had you any other duty to perform? None of a permanent nature. I occasionally went to Cockatoo.
2247. Not once a week? No; it was impossible for a person to do that and attend to his duties as Police Magistrate; he has more than he can do as it is; that is, presuming there is as much work to be done now as there was when I was Police Magistrate.
2248. By Mr. Cowper: When you left, was there not an impression that no Police Magistrate was necessary? No, it was the other way, and two were to be appointed.
2249. Latterly there was an impression generally prevalent, was there not, that in consequence of the attendance of the Mayor and a large number of unpaid Magistrates, the Bench duties would be performed by them? I never had that impression; I always thought there was a necessity for two Police Magistrates.

2250. By the Chairman: You say you would recommend that a Police Magistrate should be in constant attendance in the Court? That there should be one. J. S. Dowling,
Esq.

2251. And that there should be a second Police Magistrate to attend to chamber business? 20 Aug., 1862.
My idea is, that the time has arrived when the duties of that Court should be entirely performed by two Police Magistrates.

2252. And you would have no unpaid Magistrates? Yes. My remedy may be a desperate remedy, but I always did think so. From my six years' actual experience I recommended to the Colonial Secretary for the time being that there should be a second Police Magistrate. It is impossible for one Police Magistrate to do the whole duty. I know I nearly sacrificed my own life in the attempt, as I was occupied morning, noon, and night, as my night's rest was frequently disturbed by persons coming to me on business connected with my office. Two should be appointed, who should sit on alternate days, three days a week each, or in cases of urgent necessity the two could sit concurrently. If one only sat in Court the other should sit in chambers, to listen to the complaints of the poor people who might come to him. If a person were on the spot to speak to and advise these people, whose little squabbles are of as much importance to them as larger matters are to those who are in a different position of life, hundreds and hundreds of cases would never be brought into Court at all. There are now people of all classes of society who come to the Court and want advice, but cannot get it, and hang about until they become disgusted and look upon the Court as useless. I am speaking now of my own time, and I can imagine that the same state of things still exists. I would recommend that in summer time the Court should be opened at nine o'clock. I used to open it at that time, and dispose of the drunk and disorderly people. The Court could then be opened for the free list; the summons list could be returnable at a later hour of the day. With the relief of three days in, three days out of the Court, two Police Magistrates could do the business. I would farther suggest that one Magistrate should live within a convenient distance of the Court, so that he should be handy and ready to grant bail, and do a variety of things which it is necessary for the Magistrate to do.

2253. Do you think that could be carried out without some inconvenience to suitors? I think it would be a great advantage to the community at large.

2255. Do you think it could be carried out without inconvenience to suitors? No doubt about it.

2257. By Mr. Cowper: They do not get a certificate; but they are generally sent to an office for some time previously, unless there is reason to believe they are already acquainted with the duties? I know many Clerks of Petty Sessions who are entirely ignorant of their duty, and they have no one at hand to teach them, so they go on blundering from year's end to year's end, until eventually their pay is stopped.

2258. By Mr. Windeyer: Has not the Crown Prosecutor complained that the improper way in which the depositions have been taken has led to the miscarriage of justice? Yes; and the Magistrates in the country do not know how to instruct the clerks to perform their duties. In the towns the case is very simple.

2259. In recommending that a lawyer should occupy this position, do you not think it would be a saving for suitors, by preventing many applications for prohibitions and mandamus? Yes; maintenance orders have been upset because the clerks have not known how to draw them up.

2260. You think it would be especially useful where Magistrates hear matters judicially? Yes.

2261. A large number of such cases come before the Central Police Office? A great number.

2262. By the Chairman: I believe you stated that you always found Messrs. Smithers and Crane highly efficient clerks? Yes.

2263. Would not the same objection apply to the appointment of a stranger to the chief clerkship of the office in Sydney, as applies to the appointment of an inefficient clerk to an office in the country? Yes.

2264. Do you consider the appointment of such a person over the heads of others who have been many years in the department highly improper? I would not say highly improper, but I would say that it was not fair to others.

- J. S. Dowling, Esq.,
20 Aug., 1862.
2265. You consider that the gentlemen you found in the office were highly efficient as deposition clerks? I do not think Mr. Crane was a deposition clerk.
2266. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you think it would be advisable that there should be an alteration in the law, whereby a prisoner who is brought before a Police Magistrate, or a Magistrate, should be allowed to have a lawyer as counsel, to address the Court in his behalf? I always allowed it. I believe it is optional in a Magistrate, but I never had such faith in my own opinion as to be convinced that it could not be altered.
2268. By Mr. Lucas: They have no right? No, but it ties them down in their defence in another Court.
2269. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you not think it is an advantage to an illiterate person to have counsel to address the Court on his behalf? A decided advantage.
2270. And therefore, if there were an amendment in the law, as I suggest, that would be beneficial? No doubt.

Samuel North, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

- S. North, Esq., J.P.,
20 Aug., 1862.
2271. By the Chairman: You are the Water Police Magistrate of Sydney? Yes.
2272. How long have you held that appointment? From 1st January, 1854—nearly nine years.
2273. Do you know anything of the working of the Central Police Office in Sydney? Very little. I occasionally sit there under the Bakers and Millers Act; an inquiry under that law requires two Magistrates to adjudicate.
2274. Will that slight experience enable you to give any opinion as to the mode in which the business is conducted there? No.
2275. By Mr. Cowper: If an adjourned case, initiated by another Magistrate, were called on when you were present, would you postpone it to another day? That must depend upon whether the plaintiff and defendant were willing to have a postponement. I would postpone it, as a matter of course, if both persons were willing.
2276. Would you, knowing one party was present with his witnesses, upon the ex parte application of another, adjourn or postpone a case? Not without reference to the opposing party, to know whether he consented.
2277. By Mr. Forster: Have you ever been in the habit of cancelling warrants? I have done so sometimes.
2278. Is it a constant practice? No, it is not; it has occasionally happened.
2279. Are you quite sure of the legality of the practice? I think so, or I would not have done it.
2280. Have you considered the question? I consider that a Magistrate having the power to issue a warrant, if the opposite party afterwards says he will be satisfied with a summons, has the power of cancelling the warrant.
2281. Have you, in cancelling a warrant, made use of the same solemnities as you have in issuing it? I have said "Cancelled upon the application of the prosecutor."
2282. You have generally done so upon the statement of the complainant? Yes.
2283. Do you take this statement upon oath? No.
2284. You grant the warrant upon oath always? Yes, but if a summons will bring the party before me that is all that is required.
2285. Are you aware whether the practice of cancelling warrants is common? No.
2286. Have you ever cancelled a warrant granted by another person? No.
2287. On the supposition that there is any doubt of the legality of the practice, would you recommend that the law should be altered so as to give the Magistrate the power to do it? Perhaps it would be desirable to remove all doubts.
2288. By Mr. Hoskins: Are you in the habit of allowing prisoners' counsel to address you in defence, in cases that are brought before you? Yes.
2289. It is optional with the Magistrate, is it not? In criminal cases it is; a Magistrate need not hear counsel in criminal cases; in summary cases he must, and in civil cases, summons cases, wages cases under the Masters and Servants Act, or anything of that kind.
2290. Do you think it is desirable there should be such an alteration in the law as should make it imperative upon Magistrates to hear counsel if the prisoner desired it? I do not see any necessity for that.
2291. By Mr. Windeyer: The prisoner in a criminal case has a right to have the witnesses cross-examined? Yes, I never refused that; he may cross-examine the witnesses himself, or if he has a professional man, he is allowed to do so.
2292. By Mr. Lucas: The Magistrate is not compelled to allow that? I think not.
2293. By Mr. Cowper: Do you transact much general business in your office, or is it confined to sailors and shipping? I take Sydney from Bridge-street northward, and the North Shore, the whole of the business, police cases and summons cases.
2294. They would not be dealt with at the Central Court, but would be sent to you? They would be sent to me.
2295. By the Chairman: Mr. Crane, who was formerly employed in the Central Police Office, is now employed in your office? He is Clerk of Petty Sessions at present.

2296. Is he an efficient clerk? I think so.
2297. By Mr. Hoskins: Have you any attorneys who practise in your Court at times? Yes, we have. S. North,
Esq., J.P.
2298. Is their language and demeanour towards you generally respectful? Yes; occasionally there may have been some that might not be considered so, but I have always checked it immediately; in fact, I do not remember, except on one occasion, any disrespectful conduct on the part of any of them, and then the gentleman said he did not mean any disrespect. 20 Aug., 1862.
2299. By Mr. Cowper: You once had occasion to prevent one of these attorneys from practising until he had apologized? Yes.
2300. By the Chairman: Have you any objection to give the name of that attorney? No, the matter was public enough; it was Mr. Moffat.
2301. By Mr. Windeyer: Do you think where one Justice refuses to hear an attorney in the Court, on account of misconduct, that another Justice who has been sitting on the same occasion should hear him in the same Court? Yes, I do; I would not object to hear an attorney because he had been disrespectful to another Magistrate.*
2302. Is it not an offence against the Court? Yes.
2303. Is not the refusal to hear him a kind of punishment to the attorney? The particular Magistrate who has been treated with disrespect punishes him so far by refusing to hear him.
2304. Do you not think a Magistrate should put it upon higher ground—as an insult to the administration of justice, and to the Court of which he is a member? I think that would be going too far; an attorney might be disrespectful to a particular Magistrate, perhaps from personal dislike.
2305. By the Chairman: If a Magistrate, while sitting with you upon the bench, were insulted by an attorney, would you still continue to hear him? I have had cases of that kind, and have immediately put the party in custody until he has apologized.
2306. You would not sit and listen to him, then, unless he apologized? No, I would not.

James Murphy, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

2307. By the Chairman: You are a Magistrate of the Territory, and have been so some years? Yes. J. Murphy,
Esq., J.P.
2308. You were Mayor of the City, for the year 1860? Yes. 20 Aug., 1862.
2309. Do you occasionally take part in the proceedings of the Central Police Office? Yes, frequently.
2310. Will that enable you to give this Committee any information as to the manner in which the business is conducted in that office? To some extent.
2311. Have you heard complaints made from time to time as to delay in the administration of justice there? No, I am not aware; I cannot charge my memory with it.
2312. Have you frequently known cases adjourned by reason of the non-attendance of Magistrates to enable the second Court to be opened? Occasionally, for a short time; for a few minutes—perhaps half an hour; to no great extent.
2313. How long have you been in the Commission of the Peace? About three or four years.
2314. By Mr. Windeyer: You are in the habit of sitting a good deal upon the bench? Yes, I sit there frequently.
2315. Is it not the fact that the practitioners in that Court very often wrangle a good deal with the Magistrates on the bench, as to what are and what are not matters of law? No, I could not say that they wrangle; they wrangle sometimes between themselves; I have never heard them; they have never wrangled with me.
2316. Have you ever heard them with other Magistrates? No, I have not.
2317. By Mr. Forster: Did you ever attend the Court, or take notice of its proceedings in Mr. Forbes' or Mr. Dowling's time? Yes.
2318. Do you think as good order is kept in the Court now as was kept in those days? I should think so, from my observation.
2319. Do you think the attorneys are kept as quiet and in as good order? Quite as good.
2320. Do the attorneys misconduct themselves, by insulting the Bench? I have never been present when they have done so.
2321. You have never heard threats used, by attorneys, to the Bench? Well, I do not know whether it would amount to a threat, but the only strong language I have heard was a strong expression used towards a Magistrate by a practitioner who is a Member of this House.
2322. Who was the Member? Mr. Forster; but it was a very trifling affair.
2323. Perhaps the strong language might have been justified? I hardly think so, because after the Court broke up I mentioned the subject to Mr. Forster, and he expressed his regret.
- 2324.

* NOTE (on revision):—I request to be allowed to correct some portion of my answers to Mr. Windeyer's questions, some of them appearing contradictory, arising, no doubt, from misapprehension of the wording of the questions. I wish to be understood as saying, "that if sitting in Petty Session with other Magistrates, I would consider any insult offered to one of them as an insult to the Court, and would treat it as such." My two last answers to Mr. Windeyer show that such has been my practice. I do not, however, think a Court of Petty Sessions should refuse to hear an advocate because he has behaved improperly at some other Court of Petty Sessions; and this principle has been acted upon both at the Central and Water Police Courts, in the case of Mr. Moffat.

J. Murphy,
Esq., J.P.

20 Aug., 1862.

2324. You took no notice of it at the time? No, I did not interrupt the business at the time.
2325. If you thought a practitioner were misconducting himself, why not take notice of it at the time, and punish him? My reason was that I did not wish to delay the business.
2326. Do you think the delaying of business of more consequence than the keeping order in the Court? No, I always like to consider first. I might express myself too hastily at the time.
2327. You felt a doubt of your own power? Not of my own power—perhaps of my command of temper.
2328. Were there any other Magistrates on the bench who might have commanded their tempers? Yes, two.
2329. Did they take the same view of the matter as yourself, and think it better not to interrupt the proceedings, and to allow the strong language to pass unnoticed? I do not know what their feelings were.
2330. Do you not think the overlooking at one time strong language which was not justifiable, is very likely to lead to the use of strong language at another time? It was not overlooked, for after the business was over I spoke to Mr. Forster.
2331. You spoke to this gentleman privately? No, after the business was over.
2332. In your capacity of Magistrate did you reprimand him on the bench? I spoke to him; whether I reprimanded him —
2333. Did he apologize? I do not know; he came up and shook hands.
2334. On the bench? I do not know that it was on the bench.
2335. That is the way you settled the matter—you spoke to the practitioner, and he came up and shook hands with all the Magistrates on the bench? No, it was after the business was over.
2336. I thought I understood you to say that you spoke to him from the bench after the business was over, and that he then came up and shook hands with the Magistrates all round? After the business was over he acknowledged that he was too hasty.
2337. Did you find that this mode of proceeding had any effect upon him? I cannot say.
2338. Do you consider him generally a well-behaved practitioner? Yes.
2339. By Mr. Hoskins: Did you ever know any other instance where a legal practitioner used insulting language to the Bench? No, I was never present.
2340. Did you ever hear of unseemly scenes taking place? Yes, I have heard of an instance.
2341. Was it in your presence? No.
2342. Did you ever hear a member of the legal profession threaten personal violence to a Magistrate on the bench? I have heard of it, but I was not present.
2343. Is that legal gentleman now practising in the Court? Yes, but he was punished; he was suspended for three months.
2344. Do you know whether he ever practised during those three months, after the order for his suspension? Not in the Central Police Office.
2345. Are the attorneys generally respectful in their language and demeanour towards the Magistrates on the bench? I have always found them so.
2346. How often are you in the habit of attending the Central Police Court? Perhaps it would average twice a week, sometimes three or four times; in some cases I might be three, four, or five days running, where cases have been adjourned. I have sat there eight days, I think, in the same case.
2347. I should infer, then, that you are never a week absent from the Central Police Office? No, I might be a week not sitting, but there is never a week but I attend there. If I see the bench occupied I do not go on it, unless it is my day on the roster. I always take my days.
2348. Are the Magistrates who are summoned to attend, generally regular in their attendance? Not very regular.
2349. Do you know whether cases are frequently adjourned in consequence of the paucity of attendance of Magistrates? No, I am not aware of any cases being adjourned in consequence of the non-attendance of Magistrates.
2350. Do you know whether there is not an accumulation of arrears of business in the Central Police Office? I am not aware of any arrears except the adjourned cases, which are adjourned chiefly for the convenience of the legal practitioners.
2351. At what time of day do you go to the Police Office, on the days you are summoned to attend? I generally get there ten minutes or a quarter of an hour before ten, as I like to look over the sheet.
2352. Do you always find Captain Scott sitting on the bench when you go there? Not on the bench; we do not go on the bench till ten; I always find him in his room.
2353. From your own observation, can you tell us how many hours a day Captain Scott attends on the bench? No, I could not exactly. I have sat with him myself till after four, frequently.
2354. Is he to be seen every day in the Police Court? Not every day; I believe he has to go to Cockatoo.
2355. When he does not go to Cockatoo, is he to be seen on the bench? If he is not on the bench he is in his room.
2356. I want to know whether he is a larger number of hours on the bench in the Police Court, or in his room, or anywhere else? He is the whole day there, either on the bench or in his room.
2357. How do you know that he is in his room? I am there scarcely two days, but I go into the Police Office, and I always find him at his post.
- 2358.

2358. Is he more frequently in his room than on the bench dispensing justice? He is every day in his room, but he is not every day on the bench, consequently he must be more frequently in his room than on the bench. If there are sufficient Magistrates to carry on the business in the Court he has always sufficient work in his room.

J. Murphy,
Esq., J.P.

20 Aug., 1862.

2359. Would you consider it desirable to have a Police Magistrate on the bench always? I do not know that I would if there are sufficient Magistrates to form a Bench. One Magistrate is as good as another on the bench.

2361. Do you think it desirable that a Police Magistrate should be a lawyer? No, I do not think it at all desirable.

2362. Do you never, as a Magistrate, find cases in which some difficulties arise—intricate legal points—where you would like to advise with some person whom you might consider qualified to give an opinion? I have never experienced that. We have the Statutes to refer to. At the same time there is some quibbling with professional gentlemen.

2363. Do you think legal practitioners, in their arguments, endeavour to mislead the Magistrates on knotty points of law? I have fancied so myself.

2364. Would you not consider, therefore, that it would be much more satisfactory if you had a person learned in the law with whom you could advise in such cases? I think with a man of good sound common sense, justice and uprightness, there is no difficulty.

2365. Do you never issue warrants in the Police Office? No; I have ordered them.

2366. Have you never signed them yourself? We order them to be issued, and the clerk brings them to the Magistrate to be signed.

2367. Do you ever after issuing a warrant cancel it, without having the person for whom the warrant is issued brought before you? No, I never have done so.

2368. Have you ever known any other person cancel a warrant after it has been issued? Not of my own knowledge.

2369. Would you consent, after having granted a warrant for the apprehension of a person, if the person upon whose information you granted the warrant came afterwards and told you that the statement he had made to you when you granted it was not correct, and that a summons would answer every purpose, cancel the warrant? It would be out of my power; it would be in the hands of the police.

2370. You consider that it would be out of your power, and that you would not be justified in cancelling the warrant? I do not know; circumstances sometimes alter cases. If a person came to me and said a summons would be sufficient, I could see no harm in it, because a summons is a milder process than a warrant.

2371. I am supposing that subsequently to your having issued a warrant you were applied to? I should hesitate; I do not think I should do it.

2372. You never have any difficulty in getting any information from the clerks? Never; they are very civil and obliging.

2373. You are aware that the object of the appointment of this Committee is to inquire into the working of the Central Police Office; can you suggest any improvement, any means whereby the business can be facilitated? No.

2374. For instance, do you think the building defective, or the clerical staff insufficient? The building is very defective, but it is being improved now; it has been very inconvenient.

2375. You think there is a sufficient number of clerks, so far as your observation has gone? Yes, I think there is.

2376. By Mr. Caldwell: During the time you held the office of Mayor were you more frequently in attendance at the Police Office? Yes, there was scarcely a day but I went into the office.

2377. Then you had an opportunity, I presume, of observing the conduct of Captain Scott? Yes.

2378. Was he attentive to the duties of his office? Yes, very, particularly so.

2379. Do you believe he is competent to discharge the duties of his office as Police Magistrate? That is matter of opinion; I believe he is very competent.

2380. Do you know whether it is the practice of Captain Scott to open the Court at ten o'clock? Yes.

2381. Does he now? Yes, he frequently opens a few minutes before ten; I generally look in in the morning, a little before ten; generally, when I go into the office he asks me if it is time, and goes in and opens the Court.

2382. Do you think it would be an advantage to the public if the Court opened at an earlier hour than ten, say at nine? Yes, I think it would, to get rid of the drunkards cases. I tried it when I was Mayor, but I could not get the sheets in time. The clerks consider that nine is the time to come to the office, and then they have to make out the sheets. There is a good deal of writing to do.

2383. Could you suggest any plan that would expedite the business, so that the business might at once be entered upon at nine o'clock? The sheets could not be wholly prepared the night before, because there are many drunkards taken up in the night. I find the sheets are generally cleared off in the course of the day. There is very seldom any business after one o'clock.

2384. Do you think the business transacted at the Police Office has been unnecessarily delayed through the interference of attorneys? Yes, I think it has; they take up too much time in frivolous cases.

2385. Do you think there is any disposition on the part of attorneys to prolong cases, where the

J. Murphy,
Esq., J.P.
20 Aug., 1862.

the suitors are wealthy? Not particularly; no doubt they wish to make it appear that they are doing something for their fees, and they take up a good deal of the time of the Court; but the Magistrates could not very well stop it; it would deprive them of the opportunity of displaying their ability, and perhaps the losing party would think the Magistrates interfered unjustly. It is a delicate thing to do.

2386. Have you known any cases of trifling assaults that have been prolonged over two or three days, through the interference of attorneys? They have been adjourned.

2387. From day to day—small cases of assault? Yes, and perhaps after all have been dismissed, and ought never to have come before the Court.

2388. By the Chairman: Do you not think that shows the absolute necessity of having a lawyer there as a Police Magistrate? No, I do not think it shows it.

2389. By Mr. Caldwell: Do you consider it your duty to interfere with attorneys in cases of that kind? I think it a very delicate matter.

2390. By Mr. Lucas: Who prepares the charge sheet? Mr. Armstrong.

2391. I thought he prepared the summons sheet only; I thought the police prepared the charge sheet? No, the police bring the charge sheet from the watch-house.

2392. The police in the first instance fill up the charge sheet? The police bring the charge sheet in to Mr. Armstrong, and he has to copy it twice.

2393. In the first instance the police prepare the charge sheet? Yes.

2394. Could not the police at the same time prepare the copy for the Magistrates, and then they could have it ready at nine? Yes.

2395. Have you not frequently found, at a quarter past ten, the Magistrates waiting for the sheet, to proceed with the business? Not lately. I had, when I was Mayor, occasion frequently to complain, but it has not been the case for the last twelve or eighteen months.

2396. There is an amendment in that particular? Yes. I have never been there lately but both sheets have been ready, and the deposition clerk in the Court.

2397. I understood you to say that you never found a want of police there;—have you upon any occasion been sitting there, when it has been impossible to get a policeman either to call a witness or to keep silence in the Court? I have had occasions to mention it, but directly I have done so there has been a policeman brought in.

2398. You have seen the Court without a policeman? Not without a policeman; there was always one there. In the George-street Court, Cook was always there.

2399. Have you not seen the Court without a policeman at all? No, I have always seen one there; what I complained of was that he had to leave the Court to call the names.

2400. Have you known the want of a policeman to administer the oath;—I believe a policeman generally administers the oath? I never hesitate to do that myself.

2401. You have had to do that? Yes, when the policeman has been out calling witnesses.

2402. The policemen in the Court are not under the control of the sitting Magistrates at all? Whenever I wanted anything of them they were always ready.

2403. They are not under your control? No.

2404. They come in and go out when they like? Yes.

2405. With regard to having a person to refer to, would it not be better to have the Clerk of Petty Sessions a legal man as a referee than the Police Magistrate? Yes, but I find Mr. Connell very ready with the Statutes. I frequently in the morning, after looking over the sheets, refer to Mr. Connell, and find him very ready to give me information.

2406. I am not speaking about the Statutes, but about any knotty point that may occur between the Magistrates and the professional gentlemen;—do you not think in such a case that it would be better the Clerk of Petty Sessions should be a legal man than that the Police Magistrate should be so, because the latter might be engaged in another Court, and if he had to leave the bench for his private room the business of both Courts would be stopped; while if the Clerk of Petty Sessions were a legal man he would be always in his room, and might be consulted without any interference with the business? I have had occasion in some cases to leave the Court and consult the Attorney General; and perhaps, if the Clerk of Petty Sessions were a legal man, he might be consulted in the same way.

2407. Do you know that it is the case in England that Clerks of Petty Sessions are legal men where the Magistrates are not? I do not know that that is the case; it is not so in country districts.

2408. By the Chairman: You have said that you consider one Magistrate is as good as another on the bench? Yes.

2409. Do not cases involving complicated questions of law and fact frequently arise there? Certainly complicated cases arise, because it is very easy for two lawyers to complicate any case.

2410. What do they complicate, the law or the evidence? Both.

2411. Do you think it desirable that a Police Magistrate should have any knowledge of law at all? Decidedly. I do not think any Magistrate sits on the bench but has a knowledge of the law.

2412. Have you not frequently called to the bench a professional gentleman, not being employed in a case, to obtain his opinion before giving your decision? I cannot charge my memory now; it is very probable I might have done it.

2413. Have you ever known Magistrates attend Court in cases of importance, in which they themselves were interested, who did not usually appear at the Court? I cannot say that I have a knowledge of it; it would only amount to a suspicion.

2414. Have you ever heard it reported that such has been the case? Yes.

2415. Very frequently? No, not frequently.

2416. You yourself have a suspicion of the fact? Yes.

2417. I will name one case to refresh your memory,—Lassiter's case? Yes, that was a particular case. Perhaps that would refer to myself.

2418. You were not interested in that other than as Mayor of the City? Perhaps it would be as well to explain to the Committee. It was a case between Mr. Lassiter and the Corporation; and two of the Magistrates had been subpoenaed, as being interested, to give evidence. When I attended in the morning, to my surprise, I found these gentlemen on the bench. J. Murphy,
Esq., J.P.
20 Aug., 1862.

2419. And I believe one of the Magistrates grossly insulted a solicitor, for having the audacity of giving him his subpoena? I know he grossly insulted me.

2420. By Mr. Lucas: Who was that Magistrate? There were two gentlemen on the bench, Mr. Hill and Mr. Lyons. It was Mr. Lyons who insulted me.

2421. Do you say that those two gentlemen came there specially to try that case? They were subpoenaed as witnesses, and Mr. Driver having told me they were on the bench I went and took my seat. Mr. Roberts objected to their sitting, but they persisted in doing so, and I then asked Captain Scott to give me the Chair, and determined to sit if they did. They, finding that was my determination, left the bench, and I left also.

2422. Was it not understood that these gentlemen had subpoenas served upon them to prevent their taking their seat on the bench? Yes, it was stated so.

WEDNESDAY, 27 AUGUST, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,

MR. FORSTER,

MR. HOSKINS.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

George Hill, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

2423. By the Chairman: You are a Magistrate of the Territory, and have been so for many years? Yes, for upwards of twenty years. G. Hill, Esq.,
J.P.
27 Aug., 1862.

2424. Have you during that period acted as a Justice of the Peace at the Central Police Office in George-street? I have, almost every week, more or less.

2425. Sometimes once or twice a week? Yes, and more than that.

2426. Then you have had a large amount of experience in the duties of the Police Office? Yes, during my mayoralty I think I never omitted a day, being in attendance more or less during the day.

2427. How long is that since? I think about twenty years. I was one of the members elected to the first City Council, and next sessions I was appointed alderman, and then placed in the Commission of the Peace; in Governor Gipps' time.

2428. Have you attended to your duties as a Magistrate during the past two years? Yes, during the last two years I have been on the roster on alternate Wednesdays at the Central Police Office and the Water Police Office—one Wednesday at one and another at the other; I have seldom omitted attending on my roster days, and I have attended very often on other days during the week as well.

2429. Can you state to the Committee how the business of the Police Court has been conducted for the last two years? Speaking from my own experience, I do not think it has been satisfactory.

2430. In what way? Some of the officers of the Court have not been at all qualified. Some portion have been well qualified and others have not been qualified. I am speaking now of the deposition clerks, and those employed in drawing up informations and such things, some of which have been defective, and persons applying for them have not been treated with civility, in my opinion. Things have been put into the informations sometimes that were never stated by the persons applying for them, and when the information has been read in Court the person who has been the complainant has been quite surprised to hear what was in it, and has said, "I never made that statement at the time I applied for the summons or warrant."

2431. Has that statement been made by suitors when their cases were called in Court? Yes, when the information has been read before the Bench.

2432. Has that led to any irregularity or delay? It has led to this, that the information has perhaps been dismissed on some ground, and the complainant has had to apply for another, for which he has had to pay a second fee.

2433. Causing additional expense and loss of time? Yes, on both sides.

2434. Not only to the parties, but to their witnesses? Yes, and great extra trouble to the clerks of the department.

2435. Are these cases rare or of frequent occurrence? They happen very often. I mean that very often, when an information is read, the complainant has said, "That is not what I stated;" and informations are almost weekly dismissed on grounds that the clerk ought not to have introduced—making two charges in one information; for instance, if an applicant says, "I want to charge So-and-so for assault and robbery," the clerk ought, in my opinion, to separate the charges and draw two informations.

2436. Is it not pretty well known that an information should contain but one charge? It is pretty well known by the profession, but not always by the Bench; and if the objection be not taken by the profession the case may go on.

2437. You spoke just now of the inefficiency of the deposition clerks? We have had some very good deposition clerks—two of them equal to any I have seen—Mr. Smithers, and Mr. Crane, who is now at the Water Police Office.

- G. Hill, Esq.,
J.P.
27 Aug., 1862.
2438. They are two most efficient clerks, are they not? Yes; I cannot speak too highly of both; Mr. Crane, in particular, was an excellent deposition clerk. There is a young man lately appointed, Mr. Felton, who will, I think, with a little practice, make a very good deposition clerk; another, also, Mr. Hales, will be a very efficient man after a little practice. We cannot expect them to be equal to Mr. Smithers or Mr. Crane yet.
2439. Have not Mr. Smithers and Mr. Crane, whilst acting as deposition clerks, rendered very great assistance to the Magistrates themselves? No doubt they have on all occasions where a Magistrate has not been up to his work.
2440. Both of these gentlemen were, in your opinion, competent to afford such assistance? Yes; on no occasion did I ever find Mr. Smithers or Mr. Crane mislead the Bench.
2441. Mr. Smithers has been in the office some years? Yes, a long time.
2442. And always very attentive to his duties? Yes.
2443. Civil and obliging to suitors and others having business at the Police Office? Yes, I always found him so. I have heard some slight complaints against Mr. Smithers, but I never had an opportunity of knowing anything about them myself.
2444. As far as you are aware, they were without foundation? I cannot say; I am only speaking of what I have heard.
2445. You cannot state whether they were well founded or not? No. I never received anything but the greatest civility from Mr. Smithers, and he never misled me on any occasion.
2446. You said something as to the incivility of clerks at the Police Office? I do not know whether it is advisable to speak of a man who has been dismissed for drunkenness, but Mr. Davidson, who was a well qualified clerk, used to be, for the last twelve months or more, very insolent to persons making application for informations and summonses.
2447. He was the clerk usually employed in preparing informations? Yes. While speaking of Mr. Davidson, I may as well say, that some two months or ten weeks ago, I found I had been omitted being summoned on my usual Wednesday at the Police Office. At first I thought that some mistake might have arisen from my servants not giving me the notice, but when it happened again on the following Wednesday I made inquiry, and found it had never reached my house; I then went to the Police Office and saw the clerk who fills up the notices for the attendance of Magistrates, and he said he sent them out according to the roster; I asked him who had the roster, and he said the Police Magistrate; I went to the Police Magistrate and found that before he left, Mr. Davidson had made out a roster of his own, and omitted two or three names.
2448. Have you heard any complaints from the public as to the incivility of the clerks? Yes, on many occasions.
2449. Did you ascertain the names of any of the clerks? Persons have come to me and said, "Here, Mr. Hill, I have been waiting three or four hours; I wish you would just step in and get Mr. Davidson to fill up this information; he has told me to sit down till he is "ready;" and I have gone in and spoken to Mr. Davidson about it, and he has done it.
2450. Did you ever report such a case to the chief clerk? No, I never reported anything to the chief clerk. I have reported to Captain Scott about Mr. Davidson.
2451. Is the case of Mr. Davidson the only instance in which you have heard complaints of incivility on the part of the clerks? I do not think I have heard them of any other officer. I have heard complaints of Mr. Connell's office, but it would not do for me to say anything I have heard from reports.
2452. You have heard complaints — ? I have heard several complaints of Mr. Connell.
2453. From suitors? From persons who have gone in to pay fines in charge of a constable, and have been obliged to come out again and be kept in custody, because the depositions had not been sent to Mr. Connell. Of course Mr. Connell could not take the money, because the depositions were not sent in to him. Persons fined in this way think they ought to be allowed to pay their money at once and go away; but instead of that, they are kept in custody an hour or more before they can do so.
2454. Is it not the practice to wait till the information has been initialled and marked by the Magistrates before receiving payment of the fine? Yes, it has been the practice, because there is no guide for Mr. Connell but that and the depositions.
2455. Do you not think it would be more convenient to allow the fine to be paid immediately? Yes; my opinion is, that whenever a person is fined he should be allowed to put the money on the table at once and walk out of the office; I do not see why he should be kept in custody if he is ready to pay his fine.
2456. Then parties have been occasionally — ? Every day people are kept in custody because they are not allowed to pay their money at once. When the case is decided and the man fined, the police catch hold of him by the arm and walk him out, and he is kept in custody for half an hour or twenty minutes, or longer.
2457. Have you not known cases where a defendant has been detained in custody even after the fine has been paid, waiting for an order from the chief clerk to discharge him? Yes, there was one occasion where a man was kept in custody two or three hours after the fine was paid by some one for him.
2458. Was that a person employed by Mr. Wilkie? Yes, I think it was one of Mr. Wilkie's men. The fine was paid by Mr. Wilkie's foreman for him, but when the chief clerk was asked about him, he said he did not know where the man was. I believe he was in the watch-house all the time.
2459. And the man was detained in custody for some hours? Yes; but I believe a mistake slipped in there somehow.
2460. But cases very frequently occur where parties are detained in custody for an hour?
Yes.

Yes. That might be regulated by the rules of the office very easily, without keeping these people in custody. G. Hill, Esq.
J.P.

2461. You stated just now something as to the informality of the informations—did you find them so in Mr. Davidson's time? Yes, it was Mr. Davidson I complained of; he used to drink a good deal; I believe; in fact, I have seen him drunk at the Police Office, and I suppose it was owing to that that he made mistakes; but he was well qualified in his sober moments. 27 Aug. 1862.

2462. An exceedingly good clerk, was he not? Yes, very good.

2463. Do you consider the establishment now in good working order? Well, I do not know; it is always in a state of confusion; I cannot tell from what cause. The chief clerk seems to be wrangling with the other clerks, and the seniors among the other clerks seem to wrangle with the juniors; they do not seem to assist one another in their duties. I never ascertained the cause, but I know the chief clerk is not on very good terms with the others, and the seniors are not on good terms with the juniors.

2464. By Mr. Cowper: You say the business at the Central Police Office has not been conducted satisfactorily during the last two years—do you mean to say that it has been less so than during previous years? No, I do not; I do not think it has at any time been satisfactory; there has always been some defect in one office or the other.

2465. Is there not generally a mass of business—people coming rushing in, each to have his own business done first? Yes, no doubt. There are a great many orders for informations in trifling cases which ought to have been first investigated by the Magistrate applied to; they ought not to grant a summons where they find that when the case comes before the Bench it cannot be dealt with. I suppose that is for the purpose of increasing the revenue.

2466. Where does that fault rest? With those who give the order.

2467. Who generally gives the order? Generally the Police Magistrate.

2468. You say the informations are often defective—what clerk prepares them? Mr. Davidson used to do so. The Magistrate applied to for a summons gives a memorandum in writing for a summons for assault, or whatever the case may be; that was carried to Mr. Davidson, and the person wishing to take out the summons stated his case to him, and he filled it up in the information. The information is then taken to the Magistrate, and the question is asked, when it is signed by the Magistrate—"Has this been read over to you?" and if the party says no, of course the Magistrate then reads it to him before he is sworn to it.

2470. Is not that inconsistent with your statement that he was a very efficient clerk? I said that latterly he had been drinking; before he took to that he was a good clerk.

2471. You are aware that Mr. Crane was promoted to the Water Police Office in consequence of the high character he bore? I am not aware he was promoted.

2472. Did he not get a better salary? That I do not know.

2473. Was he not most anxious to get that appointment? He was. He was very anxious to get away from the Central Police Office.

2474. On what ground was he anxious to get away? I do not know; it did not become my duty to make that inquiry. I believe I recommended Mr. Smithers also for removal to the interior, if anything could be found to suit him, because he was dissatisfied with the office; he and Mr. Connell could not agree together.

2475. Have you never heard complaints of Mr. Smithers for irregularity of attendance? No; I have heard, on two or three occasions, that he has been away through sickness.

2476. Do you or do you not consider that the changes that have taken place in the clerical staff of the Central Police Office during the last two years have improved the efficiency of the department? Of course I cannot speak for the whole of them; I have not had an opportunity of overlooking them at all.

2477. You admit that Mr. Martin was too old to be efficient? Yes, he was too old to be efficient; he was a little deaf; but there are some there not equal to him now.

2478. You admit that Mr. Davidson latterly was inefficient from drunkenness? Yes, and insolence too.

2479. You speak highly of Mr. Hales and Mr. Felton? Yes, they promise to be very good clerks, and they treat everybody with civility at present; I do not know if they will get a little proud by and by.

2480. What is your opinion of Mr. Armstrong as a clerk? Well, he is not a bad clerk; I hardly know what term to apply to Mr. Armstrong; but I do not like those flying, bustling sort of men; I like a man who is steady in his way of going to his work, and knows what he has to do.

2481. Is he the clerk who prepares informations and summonses? No; Mr. Davidson used to do it; I do not know who has got Mr. Davidson's place; but I think Mr. Hales does Mr. Davidson's duty now, and Mr. Felton the summons bench duty, as deposition clerk.

2482. You say the chief clerk is not on good terms with the others? I do not say that from my own knowledge, only from what I have heard in the office; I never had an opportunity of seeing it.

2483. I suppose Mr. Smithers felt rather sore that he was not made chief clerk? I never heard him speak of that.

2484. Why is it that one does not choose to act under the other? I cannot give an opinion on that point, but there is something wrong between them.

2485. Is it your opinion that Mr. Connell is an attentive clerk? Perhaps if I were to say yes, I should not be saying what was correct; he is often absent for instance, he was absent

G. Hill, Esq.,
J.P.
27 Aug., 1862.

absent part of Friday and Saturday last, because I was there and wanted to see him. My reason for not making a note of these little things is, that I think it is the duty of the Police Magistrate to look into the department to see that every man is at his work. When I had charge of a department I used to have a book, and every man used to write down the time when he came in.

2486. Is not such a book kept at the Police Office now? I cannot say. I know Mr. Connell is not always there exactly at ten o'clock, and I dare say some of the others are not, but I always find the deposition clerks there.

2487. At what hour do you attend on your roster day? At ten o'clock exactly.

2488. Do not the clerks go there before ten? Some do.

2489. Is the office not open at nine every morning? Yes, but the clerks are not in attendance perhaps until a quarter to ten, or one or two of them perhaps at half-past nine.

2490. With regard to delay in receiving fines, was it not open to you, as a Magistrate, in any case of the kind that came under your notice, to desire the clerk to receive the money? No, I have not got the control of a common constable; I cannot order him to take a man over to the watch-house if Capt. M'Lerie had ordered him not to do it. And supposing a man was confined in the watch-house on a charge that I, as an unpaid Magistrate, thought ought to be bailed out, and I gave an order to that effect, that order would not be obeyed.

2491. What order would be obeyed? None but Captain M'Lerie's. I dare say they would pay attention to the Police Magistrate, but no other. However, I think Captain M'Lerie is perfectly right there; I think some evidence ought to be given before the Magistrate before a prisoner is allowed bail; he ought to be brought over to the Police Office and have it taken. There is another distinction made which I think is very improper:—I find there has been an order made—I do not know whether it is still in existence, or whether it has been discontinued—that if a person be confined for drunkenness, and happens to be a respectable man, who would be disgraced by being brought up in the Police Court, he may pay the maximum penalty of 40s. and go away. Now I say there should be no such distinction, but that every person should be dealt with alike.

2492. Is not bail taken from everybody that chooses to offer it? No.

2493. With reference to the payment of fines, you think no confusion would arise from an order being given to enable the clerk to receive a fine directly it was ordered to be paid—might not some confusion arise in the accounts? No, because the money and the depositions in each case would be forwarded to the proper officer.

2494. Would you suggest, then, that the deposition clerk in the Court should have a cash box to receive this money at once, and put it into account with the chief clerk afterwards? Yes, when the depositions were handed over to him. The fines are not so very great in amount that there ought to be much confusion.

2495. Can you suggest, from your experience of the Police Court, any modifications of the existing system which would put an end to delay, and cause a regular performance of the the duty? Delay in what?

2496. Generally, if there is delay to be complained of? Well, there is a good attendance of Magistrates generally. Often when I drop in I find so many Magistrates present that I walk out again. On almost every occasion I find a good number of Magistrates. The professional gentlemen take up a good deal of time at the Police Office, and you cannot stop them.

2497. By Mr. Hoskins: Why cannot you? You can refuse to hear them, if you like, of course, but would it be right not to hear them?—I see the Supreme Court and all other Courts give great latitude, and they say the Bench cannot be wrong in following the Supreme Court. They will bring a hand-barrow load of books, in a trumpery case, and quote as many Acts of Council or Acts of Parliament, some of them in existence for 250 years. Then there is an argument on a point of law, and after that you have to hear the gentleman on the other side, in reply. A good deal of time is occupied in this way. But taking the business of the Police Office generally, I think it is done in reasonable time. Some days it is over by eleven or twelve o'clock.

2498. By Mr. Cowper: Is the business generally cleared off? On the majority of days it is. Cases are sometimes postponed when the parties are not in attendance, or because professional gentlemen who have been employed are not in attendance. The defendant will generally comply with a request to postpone a case. There is sometimes an accumulation of cases in that way, but generally the business is cleared off.

2500. By Mr. Cowper: And not before? It may have been in existence before, but it was renewed in his time, I am certain. But do not let me saddle Captain Scott with what he ought not to be saddled with. I am not sure whether he made the order or whether Captain M'Lerie made it; but the order was renewed in Captain Scott's time.

2501. By Mr. Hoskins: If such an order had been in existence previous to Captain Scott's appointment, it had fallen into disuse? I do not recollect it before. The persons I speak of are allowed to pay the fine of 40s., and the case is not entered on the sheet, or if on the sheet it is marked paid, and the name is not called.

2503. Have such cases frequently occurred within your own knowledge? Not frequently; I have seen several cases; perhaps ten or a dozen during the last two years.

2504. Were the persons charged with drunkenness and incarcerated, and afterwards released in

in this way, persons whose social position was above the common? They were persons who would have been disgraced if called before the Bench and fined. G. Hill, Esq.,
-J.P.

2505. Do you, as a Magistrate, approve of such a procedure? No, I think if a person makes a blackguard of himself, that he should be subjected to the same incarceration and treatment as a poor man. I do not say that any man going drunk through the streets should be shoved into the watch-house without he makes a disturbance. 27 Aug., 1862.

2506. Have you heard of such a practice having existed in the Water Police Office or any other Police Court in the Colony? No.

2507. Then you, who have been a Magistrate for twenty years, consider this practice peculiar to Captain Scott's administration as Police Magistrate? I do not recollect it before.

2508. And you also consider, I infer from what you have stated, that the business of the Police Office is conducted in a very unsatisfactory manner? I do not think I said very unsatisfactory; I think my answer was that it was not satisfactory.

2509. What do you consider the primary causes of complaint—the laxity of attendance on the part of the clerks? Mr. Davidson used to keep people waiting for informations while he was talking to some one else, and paid no attention to the persons who were there until it pleased him to do so. I think the supervision of the office has not been sufficiently carried out to see that the clerks were at their work.

2510. There is not a proper state of discipline, in fact? No. I think it is the duty of the Police Magistrate to see that every man is doing his work, and doing it efficiently.

2511. Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether he does or does not do so? I do not know, but if he does why are complaints made.

2512. Do you happen to know whether any of these complaints are made to Captain Scott? No, I do not.

2513. Have you ever made any complaint to him yourself? I think I have spoken to him of Mr. Davidson's conduct.

2514. Did Captain Scott make any reply? He has gone over himself immediately to see about it. Captain Scott is a very obliging, gentlemanly man himself.

2515. Have these abuses been rectified? They have been rectified one day, but have happened again the next—fine one day and foul the next.

2516. Are we to infer that Captain Scott wants decision of character? Yes, firmness; and I think the chief clerk is a man who wrangles a good deal with the other officers of the department; he seems to be snappish and churlish, and wants to ride the high horse. There is one suggestion I would make, if it can be carried out:—There seems to be great delay in getting the summonses signed by the Magistrates. I have them coming to my house at eight or nine o'clock at night to be signed. I do not know whether an arrangement could be made that when the information is prepared the summons should also be filled up, so that the information could be sworn and the summons signed at the same time by the Magistrate. The summonses have to be sent about the country now for the Magistrates to sign them. It would save a great deal of trouble and a great deal of labour for Captain M'Lerie's men, if both were prepared and completed at the same time; and I think, if the matter was fairly looked into it could be done, and very easy too. There has been a good deal of talk about the appointment of a second Police Magistrate, but I do not think that is required.

2517. Which do you consider the most important duties of the Police Magistrate—the clerical duties, or attending on the bench? The clerical duties are of great importance, I think. I think that before any order for a summons or warrant is given, inquiry ought to be made by the Magistrate to know whether it was a proper case for a summons or warrant to issue.

2518. Do you know whether sufficient inquiry is made? I am not prepared to say, as a general rule; I know a great many trumpery cases come there.

2519. Are you frequently in the habit of issuing warrants? No; and when I do I am very careful what I issue them for.

2520. Do you ever after issuing a warrant cancel it, without having the person against whom it is issued apprehended and brought before you? No.

2521. Did you ever hear of such a case—do you know of such a case? No, I do not. I hear a good many things about people, but I do not believe half I hear.

2522. Do you think you would be acting illegally under such circumstances? I think so, without there was something to justify me in ordering a warrant not to issue.

2523. Has Captain Scott been on the bench every day when you have been present in Court? No, but he is very often on the bench with me.

2524. Can you say of your own knowledge whether he is in the habit of sitting on the bench adjudicating cases every day? I think almost every day he opens the Court for the drunkards. The summons Court is opened by the roster Magistrates if they attend, and if they do not, some Magistrates generally attend and take the cases.

2525. How many hours a day, on the average, do you suppose Captain Scott is sitting on the bench? His duties, it appears, call him elsewhere. This morning, for instance, he had to go to Cockatoo. Generally, as soon as other Magistrates come he leaves the bench.

2526. Where does he go? I am not in a position to say; I cannot say what instructions he has.

2527. In point of fact, is he very frequently absent from the Police Office? He is absent, but I cannot say whether it is on public duty. He has often said to me,—I wish you would come down and open the Court to-morrow, I want to go to Cockatoo, or to the Gaol, or other places.

2528. By Mr. Cowper: You do not know whether he is in his office or not, when he is not on the bench? I often find him in his office, and I often find him away.

2529. By Mr. Hoskins: You complained, in one part of your evidence, of the long speeches

G. Hill, Esq., of attorneys;—do you think that evil prevails to a greater extent than it did when Mr. Dowling was Police Magistrate? No, I think there was as great latitude allowed when

Mr. Dowling and Mr. Forbes were in office as there is now.

2530. Do you think cases are proceeded with now as expeditiously as previously to Captain Scott's appointment? Yes, I think so; I do not see any difference in the mode of conducting business.

2531. Do you consider that the attorneys practising at the Central Police Office have generally comported themselves as they should do to the Magistrates on the bench? They are a little bit knotty sometimes, but some Magistrates are so thin in the skin that they get insulted about nothing.

2532. Have you ever heard an attorney threaten personal violence to a Magistrate on the bench? No, never. I have sometimes heard Mr. Moffat make use of some very outrageous language to the Magistrates.

2533. Has the Police Magistrate compelled the attorneys to be respectful to him? I think he has refused to hear Mr. Moffat.

2534. Has he ever threatened to commit any attorney for contempt of Court? Not in my presence.

2535. Are you in the habit of allowing attorneys or counsel to address you, as a Magistrate, on behalf of persons charged with criminal offences, in mitigation of punishment? In criminal cases, when a Magistrate thinks a prima facie case is made out for committal, of course he may refuse to hear the attorney.

2536. Do you do so? I very often refuse to hear him. If I saw a case made out I should say the Bench had made up their mind, and refuse to hear anything further; but the Judges of the Supreme Court differ from that view; they say we ought to take all the evidence in a case, for and against.

2537. I suppose you are frequently in the habit of preventing counsel addressing you on behalf of persons charged with criminal offences? Not frequently. I have done so on some occasions. If there is a doubt on my mind, and I think they may be able to rebut the evidence for the prosecution by good witnesses, then I think it is the duty of the Bench to go into the inquiry, not only for the sake of the prisoner, but by way of saving the country the unnecessary expense of a trial; but if I see that all the evidence they can give ought not to prevent the Bench from sending the case to another tribunal, then I send it.

2538. Do you think an amendment of the law which would admit the right of a prisoner charged before a Bench of Magistrates with a criminal offence to be heard by counsel would be a very proper amendment—just to the party charged, and also perhaps beneficial to the country, in the saving of expense? In that case the hearing of a charge might come on before a Magistrate not able to interpret the law, and by the exertions of a professional man a guilty party might get off perhaps in a case of some importance, because some professional men would talk some of the Magistrates blind almost, and entangle them so that they would not know whether to convict or discharge the prisoner. I think it is well enough as it is, and if it goes beyond that, men better skilled in the law ought to be the judges.

2539. Do you not think your objection would be obviated by having persons skilled in the law to dispense justice as Magistrates? I will tell you what I think;—It would be a great advantage to the Police Office if there was some professional man appointed to the Police Office, to advise the Magistrates on points of law. I do not mean to say the Police Magistrate should be a professional man, but I would have no objection to that if he was a good one.

2540. Are there a sufficient number of policemen in Court generally to preserve order? Not always. I will instance a case, to satisfy you as to the defective working of the Police Office in that respect:—In a case that was being heard before me, while the case was going on, a man named William Windred jumped up in the Court and told the man that was being examined not to do so and so; he was half drunk at the time. I said to him, "Windred, you must leave the Court, if you do not I shall be obliged to put you in the "watch-house;" "I will leave the Court when I like, sir," said he; and I looked round for a policeman to take him over to the watch-house, and there was not a single constable there; and the man persisted and kept at the table till Mr. Roberts, who was conducting the case, persuaded him to go outside, but he did not stay five minutes till he came back with the same insolence. I could not help it, because there was no constable there.

2541. Have you ever represented to the police authorities the paucity of constables in attendance at the Police Office? I represented it to Mr. Higgins when he was inspector there, and he said he was bound to pay attention to the instructions of Captain M'Lerie. Of course I never gave any orders to the constables, because I knew it was not a matter of right; I knew it was a matter of courtesy if they thought proper to obey me. The Inspector of Police on one occasion told me he could not do it, when I gave him an order.

2542. Then I should infer from what you say, that the police and the Magistrates do not work in harmony? Yes, they do, but I have heard of some irregularities. I have heard them reply in this way—It is Captain M'Lerie's orders.

2543. Do I understand you that the Magistrates always find a difficulty in getting policemen to carry out the duties of the Court in maintaining order? No; on the occasion I have spoken of, the police had gone away somewhere to be sworn in. Generally there is an attendance of police to swear the witnesses and take charge of the Court; but the orders they receive from Captain M'Lerie may differ from those of the Magistrates, and then they will not do what the Magistrates require them.

2544. You are aware that some months ago a Bill was passed for reorganizing the police force? Yes.

2545. Previous to that were the police more obedient to the Magistrates? I think they were were; they are more independent now; they say Captain M'Lerie gives us our orders, and we cannot do anything without his instructions. I think there ought to be an inspector and a certain number of constables under the complete control of the Bench, while the Court is sitting.

G. Hill, Esq.,
J.P.
27 Aug., 1862.

2546. By Mr. Forster: Is there no enactment which enables Magistrates on the bench to punish constables for disobeying their lawful orders? I do not know of any; but if there were you would have to go through a process of law to decide whether the orders were lawful orders or not.

2547. Would it not be within the power of the Magistrates to make some arrangement with Captain M'Lerie by which some particular constable or constables would be responsible each day for the order kept in the Court? I am not finding fault with the order in the Court.

2548. Would you suggest any alteration in the law, in respect to the control of the police in these matters? Without reading it I could not suggest in what part it ought to be altered. The Police Act gives Captain M'Lerie the final control of the police; but I should say it should be, with the exception that when on duty in the Police Office, they should be under the final control of the Bench then sitting.

2549. Does not the Police Act give the Colonial Secretary the final control of the police? No doubt.

2550. Does it follow that because the police are under the control of a superior officer, that they are not to obey the lawful orders of Magistrates on the bench? How is it to be ascertained what are lawful orders?

2551. Would you go the length of recommending the repeal of the Police Act of last Session? No, I would not do anything of the kind. I do not find any fault with the law. I only say that whatever constables are allotted for the day's duty in the Court should be under the control of the Bench.

2552. You would suggest that the law should be put into that state, if it is not so already? I think so.

2553. Do you think the business of the Police Office has seriously deteriorated of late years, since the time before Responsible Government? In what way?

2554. The efficient conduct of business in the Court? No; I think the inefficient conduct in the Police Office, years and years before Responsible Government, was in a worse state than it is now.

2555. Then you think it has improved? I do.

2556. You have sat, I suppose, with Mr. Forbes and Mr. Dowling, when they were Police Magistrates? Yes; with all the Police Magistrates from Mr. Windeyer's time.

2557. Do you think the presence of a Police Magistrate of use? I think there ought to be a Police Magistrate. If there was not, many a day the Court would not be opened till eleven o'clock, and many an application would not be attended to.

2558. Do you not think that the more regular his attendance on the bench the better? I should say all the time he could spare he should be on the bench.

2559. Do you not think his chief business should be on the bench? From ten o'clock till four in the afternoon he should never be away from the Police Office. I do not think the Police Magistrate should have any other Government appointment to attend to.

2560. You have said Captain Scott has not been regular in his attendance on the bench? No.

2561. Do you think his non-attendance, whether blamable or not, has in any way affected the conduct of business in the Court? I have often gone into the passage that leads into the George-street Summons Court, and have seen females and men standing there, who have been waiting a long time to see the Police Magistrate.

2562. I am speaking of the efficient conduct of the business in the Court;—do you think it is any worse, as compared with what it was in the time of Mr. Dowling and Mr. Forbes? I think that Mr. Windeyer, Mr. Dowling, and Mr. Forbes, were most efficient men.

2563. There was a time when there was no Police Magistrate at all? Yes.

2564. Do you think matters were worse then than they are at the present time—are they better now under Captain Scott than when there was no Police Magistrate? Yes, I am sure they are better. There is a better attendance of Magistrates.

2565. You would not say the business is as well conducted as in the time of Mr. Dowling and Mr. Forbes? No, they were two very good men.

2566. Is it a common thing now for attorneys to insult the Bench? No, it is not a common thing; sometimes the Bench bring it on themselves; there is a little latitude on both sides.

2567. Do you think that is an excuse for an attorney—that the Bench bring it on themselves? If a man on the bench makes an improper remark I think it is likely something should follow.

2568. Then I suppose you have no complaint of that kind to make personally? Not the slightest. I receive the greatest respect from the whole of the profession.

2569. I presume, then, you think the fault is as much with the Magistrates as with the attorneys? Sometimes the attorneys get a little warm, and say a good deal they are not justified in saying.

2570. By the Chairman: You say Captain Scott is frequently absent from the Police Office? Yes, I often find that he is not there.

2571. And I think I understood you to say that the chief clerk was often wrangling with the other clerks? That is only from information.

2572. You have heard so from Magistrates or the clerks employed there? Principally from the clerks. I have heard them say, Mr. Council is getting the place into a state of confusion.

- G. Hill, Esq., J.P. 2573. You say that during the time Mr. Forbes was Police Magistrate matters were conducted very well there? I never heard any complaints, neither when Mr. Forbes was there nor Mr. Dowling.
- 27 Aug., 1862. 2574. By Mr. Hoskins: Mr. Forster asked you if you thought the Police Act now in force should be repealed, and you did not give a decided answer—have you ever read that Act? I have read portions of it.
2575. Do you approve of it? What I read I did not disapprove of; but it has not been a matter of serious consideration with me whether it requires amendment or not. But there is one Act I think requires an alteration, and that is the Act with reference to light weights, which requires that there shall be two Police Magistrates to adjudicate in cases under it. I cannot see myself why a Police Magistrate is superior to any other Magistrate. I know cases have gone over from day to day because they could not get the attendance of Mr. Allen. When there was no Police Magistrate at the Central Police Office, Mr. North and Mr. Allen were the only two Police Magistrates who could act in such cases.
2576. By the Chairman: Do you not know that there are other Acts so loosely framed and drawn that it is almost impossible to proceed under them? Yes, the Building Act in particular, and the Alignment Act, are so defective that they cannot be worked satisfactorily; and so is the Sewerage Act.

Robert Rathbone called in and examined:—

- R. Rathbone. 2577. By the Chairman: You are messenger at the Central Police Office? Yes.
- 27 Aug., 1862. 2578. Do you know the object of this Committee? Yes, I believe it is to investigate the working of the Central Police Office.
2579. Are you desirous of giving any evidence before the Committee? I will give what evidence I can.
2580. Have you been spoken to by any person with respect to your evidence? Captain Scott merely told me I would have to give my evidence—not of what nature it might be.
2581. What evidence can you give? Any questions you ask me I am prepared to answer, as far as lies in my power.
2582. How long have you been messenger at the Police Office? Since 22nd January of the present year.
2583. Were you employed in the office at all before that time? Never.
2584. And you know nothing of the working of the office before that time? No.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Richard Stubbs called in and examined:—

- Mr. R. Stubbs. 2585. By the Chairman: You are Inspector of Licensed Vehicles, appointed by the Municipal Council of Sydney? Yes.
- 29 Aug., 1862. 2586. As such Inspector, is it your duty to prosecute cases for breaches of the Hackney Carriage By-laws at the Police Office? As often as they occur.
2587. How long have you been so acting? Ever since the first formation of the City Council, in 1842.
2588. How often during that period have you been compelled to attend at the Police Office in the prosecution of your duties? Always once a week, and it has been more than that.
2589. What is the number of cases, on the average, in the week? Lately they have been from ten to twenty; there were eighteen yesterday—one withdrawn.
2590. Who prepares the informations and summonses in these cases? I do. I submit them always to the City Solicitor, for his approval.
2591. Then the whole of the clerical work necessary for the filing of informations and issuing of summonses is performed by yourself? Entirely; seeking for information, witnesses, and all that.
2592. The issue of subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses? Yes, the whole matter of it.
2593. What fee is usually paid by yourself on exhibiting an information? None.
2594. On issuing a summons? None.
2595. Then, in point of fact, you pay no fees at all to the Police Office? None to the Police Office fund.
2596. Have you not had considerable experience of the management and working of the Police Office? I may say ever since Colonel Wilson's time up to Captain Scott's, under all the Police Magistrates.
2597. Do you know the object of this Committee? To inquire into the working of the office, I believe.

2598. Do you think the Police Office has been for the last twelve months in perfect working order? No; but certainly there has been considerable alteration within the last three or six months. Mr. R. Stubbs.
29 Aug., 1862.
2599. Alteration or improvement? Improvement, I will say that if you please.
2600. In what respect? My business is to attend the Court at ten, and when I have gone there I may have found a Magistrate but no Clerk, and considerable delay has ensued in consequence, considering that I have generally from ten to twenty witnesses there.
2601. Has that irregularity been remedied? It has lately.
2602. Within what time? I should say since poor Mr. Martin's death.
2603. Within the last three months? Yes.
2604. Certainly within the last three months? Oh, certainly; more particularly within this month or six weeks, I will say. There is more regularity generally in the office altogether with regard to getting papers.
2605. Who generally makes out the orders upon convictions obtained by yourself? The Police Constable.
2606. Who generally issues them? I issue them at the office. They send them to me, under cover, at the Town Hall, and I deliver them to the constable, and tell him to serve them immediately.
2607. You generally take your cases before the Court on Thursday? I do.
2608. And have done so the last two years? Yes, there is a special day set apart for that purpose, to save time.
2609. Have you been compelled to wait any time for an order from the Court? Indeed I have.
2610. What time? Suppose I begin a case at ten o'clock, there comes in a second Magistrate, and all the double cases are taken before me —
2611. You misunderstand my question;—after obtaining a conviction at the Police Office, how long have you been compelled to wait before obtaining the necessary order to enforce the conviction? Formerly I used to wait sometimes a week or a fortnight; now they issue them immediately.
2612. You say you have frequently been compelled to wait a week or a fortnight before obtaining these orders? Formerly.
2613. Now you obtain them almost immediately? Yes.
2614. Within a day or two? Certainly.
2615. Have not the parties against whom the order has been made frequently absconded whilst you were waiting for an order? Yes.
2616. Frequently? Formerly; I do not say it is so now.
2617. Within what time has this alteration taken place? About the same time; within the last six months there has been a considerable alteration altogether.
2618. Has there not been a considerable alteration within the last six weeks? Yes; but you cannot help these people absconding; the moment they hear a summons is out against them, they bolt; it is impossible to catch these men. It has been much better certainly within the last month.
2619. It has been stated to this Committee that Captain Scott has frequently taken cases for you in his private room? He took them before the end of June; they ceased after the 30th of June last; he has not taken any since.*
2620. By whom were those cases conducted? By you, as City Solicitor.†
2621. As late as the 30th June? The last he took, I think, was the 30th June; he took only four or five cases.
2622. In his room?—think for a moment who conducted them? You did. You must excuse me, I remember your acting as clerk there, and taking depositions. I can correct myself afterwards if I look to my books.
2623. Who generally acted as deposition clerk on these occasions? He did himself.
2624. By Mr. Cowper: Captain Scott? Yes; it was only on three or four occasions.
2625. By the Chairman: Did any other person? You did yourself on one occasion.
2626. How were those cases conducted? Very well.
2627. I mean by the Police Magistrate? The same as they generally are.
2628. Do you not know that complaints were made at the time as to the manner in which they were disposed of? No, I never heard of that.
2629. By any person? No.
2630. You say within the last month or six weeks a very great improvement has taken place in the whole department? Yes, it has indeed. Yesterday I got through all the cases in an hour or so; a year or a year and a half ago they might have been two days in hand, in consequence of postponements and all sorts of things.
2631. That might possibly have been owing to the Justices who presided? I cannot complain of the Justices at all.
2632. By Mr. Hoskins: What is the nature of this improvement in the office—are the clerks more attentive to their duties? Certainly.
2633. You say there has been a marked improvement in the last month? I have found it so; I have not much to do with them, but when I go there once a week, I get everything I want with civility and attention.
2634. There has been a marked difference in the treatment you have received recently? In civility and attention, I would say; if I go and inquire about any particular case I am in doubt

* NOTE (on revision):—I find Captain Scott took three cases, 6th, 13th, and 20th March last; and again, one, 30th June, in the afternoon.

† NOTE (on revision):—I cannot charge my memory that the City Solicitor took every one of these cases. I remember one case in particular, when, to save time, he took the depositions.

- Mr. R. Stubbs. doubt about, and want to refer to it, I make the inquiry and refer to the book immediately, and the book is always kept right.
- 29 Aug., 1862. 2635. Previously you had some difficulty in this respect? Anciently it was very bad; I do not think they posted up the conviction book for a year.
2636. Are you in the habit of going to the Police Court frequently—daily? No, only to file informations and to attend the Court.
2637. How often is that? It will take half an hour to file an information, and I attend at the Court on a particular day once a week, except in special cases—once a week certain, and generally of a day to see if any licensed man under the Municipal By-laws has been committed for any other offence under any other law.
2638. You are not in the habit of attending the Police Court more than once a week? No, I have not any summons cases there more than that.
2639. Have you generally seen Captain Scott on the Bench when you have had business at the Police Court—adjudicating cases? I have often seen him.
2640. Is he to be found there generally every day dispensing justice? I do not say that.*
2641. Is he more frequently absent from the Bench than on the Bench? I do not know; I am not there every day, only calling there; not there all day, except Thursdays. He is engaged in his chamber duty a great deal.
2642. Do you know, from your own observation, that Captain Scott is more frequently to be found in his office than on the Bench? I never go there but I can find him.
2643. Where? He signs my informations, sometimes, by a quarter past nine in the morning.
2644. You are never there in the middle of the day—at twelve, one, or two o'clock? Unless I may have some particular thing to inquire after—a person, or a summons, or anything of that sort.
2645. Did you ever hear that a practice was in existence at the Police Court, to give fees to any of the clerks to have business expedited? There was a report of the kind some years ago.
2646. You have not known any cases yourself? I never gave any.
2647. By Mr. Hay: You say improvements have taken place recently—within what time have you noticed those improvements? I say within six months, but particularly within the last month or six weeks, I have found it so most certainly; the clerks are earlier at their duty.
2648. By Mr. Caldwell: Has Captain Scott been in the habit of taking the cases you have brought into Court in his private room? He has taken some in his private room.
2649. Has this been a convenience to the public? It has to me.
2650. Has Captain Scott been in the habit of hearing cases with closed doors? No, never; I should not, as public prosecutor, have allowed such a thing myself.
2651. Who has taken the depositions? Captain Scott has sometimes done so.
2652. By Mr. Cowper: Has anyone ever objected to the Police Magistrate for taking depositions? Not that I have heard. It has been done to expedite the business.
2653. By Mr. Caldwell: You have had great experience in the Police Office? Yes.
2654. Do you consider Captain Scott an efficient Police Magistrate? I do; a Justice of the Peace on the part of the Crown, and a Magistrate on the part of the people.
2655. Have you found Captain Scott attentive to his duties? He is to me; he is always ready to give me a warrant at any time.
2656. You have frequently business at the office;—do you find the clerks civil and attentive? Yes, they are always attentive to me; but the regularity of the whole department has been considerably improved within the last month or two months, unquestionably.
2657. By Mr. Cowper: Do you consider that the mode of conducting the business of the Police Office has been improved, or otherwise, since Captain Scott became Police Magistrate? Yes, I should suppose these alterations and improvements have been under his orders.
2658. You have said that since Mr. Martin's death you have found the business better done than previously? Yes.
2659. Do you consider the clerks who have been appointed during the last twelve or eighteen months more efficient than those who were there formerly? They are as attentive, but perhaps not as experienced; they require to learn something yet. I think the great improvement has arisen from pulling together, if I may use the term.
2660. The clerks do now pull together better than they did? Yes.
2661. Are the clerks there now before ten o'clock? Generally; it depends, I suppose, upon the business they have before them.
2662. By the Chairman: You state that the proceedings have never been conducted with closed doors? No.
2663. How many persons have been admitted? The room would not hold half a dozen altogether.
2664. How many persons were necessarily present? Generally about four or five.
2665. Then there was no room for the public at all? I do not know; they might have come in if they could.
2666. Do you know that witnesses and parties interested have been compelled to remain outside the door? As I have said, it would not hold above half a dozen; but the doors were open, and they could hear outside.
2667. There must of necessity have been four present? Yes; the constable, myself, two witnesses, and the defendant.
2668. Then there was no room for the public at all? I do not know that they required it.
2669. How often has Captain Scott signed summonses for you within the last twelve months? I suppose a great many, a score at a time.

2670.

* NOTE (on revision):—Except Cockatoo and Darlinghurst days.

2670. Are your informations and summonses not usually signed by Magistrates away from the Police Office? I have had them done so. Mr. R. Stubbs.
2671. Very frequently? Yes. 29 Aug., 1862.
2672. In nine cases out of ten? Yes, excepting at the Town Hall.
2673. I am referring to the Town Hall? Oh, certainly, at the Town Hall they are.
2674. In nine cases out of ten they are signed away from the Police Office? I think they are in many cases.
2675. Can you state how often Captain Scott manages to get through the business before half-past eleven? He has not had above three or four of my hearings.
2676. How often has he taken them in his private room? I think about three or four times.
2677. Can you state that, upon any one of those occasions, he has disposed of them before one o'clock? Yes, always, except 30th June. I think there was one adjourned case with reference to the Domain, in March.
2678. How many cases had he on those occasions? From ten to twenty, I suppose.
2679. On each occasion? On each occasion; about the usual number.
2680. And he got rid of them before one o'clock? I can send you a list to-morrow; I have got them all.
2681. You state that Captain Scott makes a very good Police Magistrate? Perhaps I am not competent to judge.
2682. Will you say in what respects? By doing his duty; by being always there; by hearing the evidence patiently; and, I believe, from never having any prohibitions against him.
2683. You say he is always there? Generally, I think.
2684. How often are you there? I am always there once a week; sometimes I have to go in occasionally besides.
2685. You always find him there? I do not say I always find him.
2686. Do you usually find him upon the bench, or in his private room? I think he used generally to be in his room; latterly he has been upon the bench.
2687. How long does he remain on the bench? Until some other gentleman comes in to help him.
2688. He then adjourns to his private room? Yes, I suppose so.
2689. Does he, as a general rule, do more than dispose of the drunkards and charge sheet? Yes; I have seen him lately in the other room.
2690. Only lately? Yes.
2691. It is not usual for drunkards or persons on a criminal charge to apply for a prohibition? No.
2692. Did you ever know such a case? No.
2693. So that the fact of no prohibition having been applied for against Captain Scott is no evidence of his efficiency as a Police Magistrate? He has had other decisions.
2694. How many? It is impossible that I can have a record of them. I go to the Police Office only occasionally, but I speak from my general knowledge of Captain Scott, and from my belief.
2695. You say that lately Captain Scott has sat upon the bench more than he did formerly? Yes.
2696. How long has he taken to that? Not long; within the last month. I think he took some cases of mine a fortnight or three weeks ago*—the whole of them—upon the bench.
2697. Within the last fortnight or three weeks? Yes, I think so.
2698. Have you any doubt of it? If I can correct my evidence afterwards I shall be happy to give the information.
2699. I wish to call your attention to this, for it is rather particular? I think it was the third Thursday ago.†
2700. At what time did he take his seat on the Bench on that occasion? He was there at ten.
2701. At what time did he commence your cases? Not till a second Magistrate came in.
2702. Is it not the fact, that Captain Scott walked on to the Bench, sat down, and the moment after the case was commenced rose and left the bench? He might have done so.
2703. Is it not the fact? Not to my knowledge.
2704. Did not the City Solicitor call your attention to it at the time? The City Solicitor told me he did not want him there at all.
2705. And that it was a good job he was gone? I believe that was it.‡
2706. He did leave, did he not? I dare say he did. I did not expect to be asked these questions.
2707. You are quite wrong in stating that he remained there during the hearing of the whole of the cases? If you were there, I must ask to apologize, if I have made a mistake.
2708. Is it possible that you may have made a mistake with reference to the evidence you have given as to Captain Scott's conduct of business in his small private room? That is impossible, for it is a small room.
2709. As to your getting away at a certain time? Yes.
2710. Have you not heard Magistrates frequently insulted on the bench? Indeed I have.
2711. By whom? Professional gentlemen.
- 2712.

* NOTE (on revision):—On reference, I am in error; not since 30th June.

† Revised:—I find 30th June.

‡ NOTE (on revision):—This is a very coarse expression, I must confess; and I hope, in courtesy, I may be allowed to withdraw it.

Mr. R. Stubbs. 2712. Has any notice been taken of these insults? Yes, I believe the parties have been reprimanded.

29 Aug., 1862. 2713. By whom? The Bench; and I believe one has been suspended for a month, or something of that.

2714. During your experience, have you not known many cases where the Bench have been called upon to decide very difficult questions? Indeed I have known very many difficult questions.

2715. Have you not heard many strange decisions given there? I have known an instance of a man being fined £10 for running over a man's foot; and I have known another, of a 'busman being fined 5s. for knocking down a man in the street, where two omnibuses were racing.

2716. Did Captain Scott sit on the bench when the fine of £10 was imposed? I do not know; £9 it was, it could not be £10.

2717. Was not that fine imposed by the Police Magistrate within the last six months? Yes.*

2718. About how many attorneys are in the habit of practising in the Police Office? Four or five.

2719. Do you think they occupy more of the time than is absolutely necessary? I think half the time they occupy is a great nuisance, both to the public and to the Bench.

2720. Do the Bench attempt to check it, or interfere with them in any way? They cannot check it; they cannot stop their talk. One speaks, another answers; then one says, "I reply to that"; the other, "I demur to that"; "I have a right of reply to that"; till neither knows what the other is talking about, and all about an old washing tub, perhaps.

2721. No steps have been taken by the Bench to put a stop to this irregularity and delay? No. I would send them over the way.†

2722. By "over the way," do you mean the station-house? Yes, and there I would keep them till the Court rose. Nothing else will stop it.

2723. The attorneys you refer to are those who practice there daily? Not all of them; those who seek notoriety, and who give something for their money, as they call it.

2724. They attend daily, do they not? Yes.

2725. By Mr. Hoskins: You do not include the City Solicitor among the number of those who are so troublesome? He can meet the objection and take up the time of the Court as well as others, to get rid of a quibble raised before the Bench. I refer particularly to one person, who regularly indulges in taking up the time of the Court, by an ingenious art of "objecting to everything."

2726. By the Chairman: The City Solicitor does it merely in reply? He cannot help it.

2729. You do not understand my question;—Is this abuse of the freedom of speech on the part of the attorneys worse now than it was previous to Captain Scott's appointment? No.

2730. By Mr. Cowper: Was it as bad in Mr. Dowling's or in Mr. Forbes' time? No, not in Mr. Dowling's.

2731. By Mr. Hoskins: You mean that Mr. Dowling would not allow attorneys to indulge in these mutual recriminations? He would not; that is, in a certain kind of recrimination—abusive language, in fact.

2732. Do you not think, if the Police Magistrate were more frequently on the bench these irrelevant speeches of attorneys would be checked? If he exercised the authority he has.

2733. Do you think he does exercise his proper authority? I think he is too mild.

2734. Does he exercise more authority in checking the excesses of the members of the legal profession than the ordinary Magistrates do? No; there are one or two gentlemen who will not allow it. Mr. Birrell is one, and there are two or three other gentlemen; the unpaid Magistrates.

2735. Do you think it would be an advantage in stopping this nuisance of which you complain, if the Police Magistrate were in constant attendance in the Court, sitting on the bench, and were a member of the legal profession? Certainly; that has been my judgment for years.

2736. You think it would be a great advantage if the Police Magistrate were a lawyer? I think one might be; and in my opinion, we ought to have two Police Magistrates. One an Assistant Police Magistrate, who should be resident on the spot, and then all the informations, summonses, warrants, taking bail at the watch-house, and so on, would come under him; he would have the control of the watch-house and police. He might also take drunkards' cases at nine o'clock in the morning instead of ten, and have them all sent away before ten. Mr. Dowling used to take them all at nine.

2737. Would you consider it desirable that the Police Magistrate should be sitting on the bench the whole day during the time the cases were heard? If he could stand it.

2738. If your suggestion were carried out, of having two Police Magistrates, could not one sit all day? Yes, and where the other was required, in double cases, he would be at hand.

2739. Do you consider that the business could be proceeded with with more expedition? Yes, and

* Revised:—I do not know that it was the Police Magistrate.

† NOTE (on revision):—This phrase is most exceptionable. The expression I should wish the Chairman to look at, and replace it by "committing for contempt of Court."

- W. Barker, Esq.

- of the proceedings, and it is difficult to believe that such decisions could have been given as are sometimes reported in the newspapers; they exhibit such ignorance of the law.
2758. Do cases involving complicated questions of law and fact frequently arise there? Yes, very often, cases which the Magistrates who generally preside there are altogether incompetent to deal with; and that circumstance, I believe, prevents many of the profession from attending there who would otherwise do so—I do not mean as a general practice, but who would attend more frequently than they do. I remember one occasion when I was told by two gentlemen on the bench that they had no doubt that what I said was perfectly good Supreme Court law, but that when they took their seats there, there were certain rules laid down for their guidance, and whatever the Supreme Court law might be, they would act in accordance with these rules.
2759. Did they state who told them? No, they said there were certain rules laid down for their guidance which they would follow out; and their decision in that particular case was, I believe, quite in accordance with the statements they had made.
2760. By Mr. Forster: Do you attribute these evils to the incompetency of the Magistrates presiding? Yes, I do.
2761. Do you think Captain Scott is incompetent? I do not think Captain Scott is as efficient as a trained lawyer would be.
2762. Does not Captain Scott generally preside on the Bench? As far as my experience enables me to speak, I think not. I have very often found him presiding in Court when I have attended in the morning, but shortly afterwards he has disappeared, I assume for the performance of some other duty, and has left the case to other Magistrates, whom I believed to be less competent than himself.
2763. If he attended on the Bench, generally, do you think matters would be better? My impression is, that he is wanting in firmness with regard to the practitioners there, and that that prevents the Court from being what it might otherwise be.
2764. Am I to understand that a professional lawyer must necessarily have the quality of firmness? I consider that any person who sits as a Judge ought not to be wanting in firmness.
2765. If a man were educated to the law, would that necessarily give him the quality of firmness? No; a professional man may also be wanting in firmness. But you will observe that in my previous answer I have not said that firmness is the most essential qualification of a Magistrate, nor have I said that a knowledge of the law is the only qualification required.
2766. Have not some of the best Police Magistrates in London been men without professional training originally? I am unable to speak of my own knowledge, but I think it is not improbable, because they may have had a very long course of training, which, in the end, has made them very efficient Magistrates.
2767. They have been trained on the bench, in fact? Yes.
2768. At the expense of the public, in the beginning? No doubt, in many cases; and there is no reason why such men should not be as efficient Magistrates as any professional lawyer.
2769. After a time? Yes.
2770. You do not deny that there may be a natural aptitude in some cases, which to some extent may supply the want of training? I do not; I believe there are many such men; and there are also men who occasionally preside at the Police Office who have had no legal training, and whose education is but limited, who nevertheless have a great deal of common sense, which they use in deciding cases brought before them, and generally do substantial justice.
2771. Is not the great evil the want of a constantly presiding head at the Police Office? That is one of the evils.
2772. As a general rule you would recommend the appointment of a professional man? I consider, having regard to the nature of the questions which often arise there, that only a lawyer—a sound lawyer—is competent to discharge the duties. To professional men it appears ridiculous to argue questions of law before Magistrates who are not able to construe a statute, nor capable of comprehending the legal arguments that are addressed to them; and that happens almost daily at the Police Office.
2773. I presume, from what you say, that you consider the appointment of a Police Magistrate necessary? I do. I consider it necessary that there should be a competent man to preside there constantly, and that in order to be competent he must be a lawyer.
2774. Would the present salary, £600, be in your opinion sufficient to secure a competent person? I do not believe you would get any competent man in either branch of the profession who would take the appointment for that salary. I do not think a competent man could be found to take it for less than £1,000 a year. No man in either branch of the profession, who has a pretty good business, would sacrifice that business for the appointment.
2775. Have you noticed any scenes implying a great want of power to keep order in the Court? I have not witnessed any of the scenes that have occasionally been reported in the newspapers; but I have remarked that there is not that decorum and propriety observed that ought to be maintained; and I think that arises chiefly from want of firmness on the part of the Magistrates.
2776. Do you think the police give the Magistrates proper assistance now, as compared with what they used to do in former days—is there any difference in their demeanor of late? I am not able to state anything in regard to the conduct of the police.
2777. Have you had any occasion to observe the operation of the New Police Act? No.
2778. Have you ever contrasted or compared the conduct of the Police Office business under former Police Magistrates with what prevails at present? My experience at the Police Office is but very limited; I certainly do not go there more than half a dozen times in the course of the year.

W. Barker,
Esq.

10 Sept., 1862.

2779 By Mr. Hoskins: In reply to a question of Mr. Forster's, you alluded to the Police Magistrates in London;—did you ever hear, within the last twenty years, of a person having been appointed to the situation of Police Magistrate in any of the suburban Courts in London—that is, not including the Police Courts at the Guildhall, or the Mansion House, in the City of London—who was not an attorney or barrister? I think you have misapprehended my answer. I made no allusion whatever to the Police Magistrates in London. On the contrary, I stated that I had no experience with regard to the Courts in London.

2780. Mr. Forster asked you, did you not happen to know that persons who had not been lawyers had been appointed? And my answer was, that I did not know, but I thought it not improbable.

2781. You never heard of a case where a person who was not a lawyer was appointed? No.

2782. By Mr. Cowper: He might have been without your knowing it? Of course. A gentleman may qualify himself for the performance of the duties; but generally I think a man who has not been trained as a lawyer cannot discharge the duties efficiently; and I believe that many practising lawyers would be altogether incompetent for the office.

2783. You said you thought Captain Scott wanted firmness, and that you considered firmness and decision of character a primary qualification, combined with a knowledge of the law? I said I considered firmness to be one of the necessary qualifications.

2784. You consider an acquaintance with the law to be a primary qualification? I consider it indispensable, if the law is to be administered in that Court at all.

2785. Did you ever hear that persons had been in the habit of paying fees to clerks in the Police Office for the purpose of getting their business expedited? No, I never did; I have had no experience with regard to the conduct of the officers connected with the Police Office; I know nothing of the working of the offices connected with the Court; when I have had business of any kind there I have always had the office part of it transacted by others, and have myself only attended the Court.

2786. Did you ever hear of warrants being cancelled without the persons against whom they were issued being brought before the Magistrates? I do not know of such a case of my own knowledge; I know it only as a rumour, or from statements that have appeared in the newspapers.

2787. Do you think such a practice would be legal, or in contravention of the law? If the warrant were properly issued at first, I should consider it to be in the highest degree improper to cancel it, unless the party against whom it issued had otherwise been brought before the Court.

2788. And therefore, of course, if such a practice had existed at the Central Police Court, you consider it deserving of the severest reprehension? I should consider that if such a thing were done, except under the circumstances I have mentioned, it would be suspicious, but I know of no such case. It is quite possible, however, that it might be done properly enough under particular circumstances. I apprehend that if a Magistrate had issued his warrant, and before it had been acted upon he found that he had made a mistake, or been deceived, or had too hastily granted the warrant, it would be quite competent for him to cancel it, and I should consider it a duty for him to do so.

2789. Do you think a person ought to be continued in the Commission of the Peace who lightly grants warrants? I do not; but if you were to dismiss all Magistrates who commit blunders of such a nature, you would have to remove a good many of them from the Commission of the Peace.

2790. Do you think a Magistrate ought to be continued in the Commission of the Peace who commits blunders that seriously interfere with the liberty of the subject? I do not; but I believe there are many persons in the Commission of the Peace who never ought to have been.

2791. I believe by the law as it at present exists, prisoners can only be heard by their counsel in the Police Court through the grace and favour of the Magistrates;—do you think that right, or do you think there ought not to be an alteration of the law, by which prisoners could insist on their right to be heard through counsel? I have never considered the matter; my impression is, that a prisoner should have the right to be heard by counsel in the first instance; but it is a question I have never had occasion to consider, because, as a rule, I decline to have anything to do with criminal cases.

2792. By Mr. Cowper: Supposing application were made for a warrant, and it was found, after it was granted, that a summons would bring the party named to the Court—do you think there would be anything wrong in withdrawing the warrant? Certainly not. I consider that if the Magistrate to whom the application had been made were of opinion that he had been deceived, or that it was a case in which he ought not to have granted a warrant, it would be his duty to cancel it.

2793. By the Chairman: A warrant having been granted on a charge of bigamy, do you think it would be proper there to order its cancellation? I think that if a Magistrate were satisfied, in such a case, that he ought to issue his warrant at all, he ought not to cancel it.

2794. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you not think that if such a practice was followed it might lead to the compounding of felony? It might lead to that, but I certainly believe that it would tend to defeat the ends of justice. You are quite aware that of myself I know of no such instance of misconduct; and as I have been asked some questions respecting the Police Magistrate, perhaps I may state that, with regard to his conduct and demeanor on the bench generally, I have never seen the slightest occasion to complain.

2795. By the Chairman: You are there, you say, very seldom? Very seldom.

2796. By Mr. Cowper: Your impression is that a lawyer ought to be there always? My impression is that a lawyer should always preside. When I say lawyer, I mean not simply a man that happens to be a member of either branch of the profession, but one well qualified by his knowledge of the law, experience, and character. I should consider that the appointment of a young man just called to the Bar, or of an attorney with very little practice, would be a much greater evil than to have some of the gentlemen who now preside there. The fact of his being a professional man would not be sufficient.

2797. By the Chairman: Unless he were competent? Competent, and a man of experience.

Robert Henry Mariner Forster, Esq., M.P., examined:—

R. H. M. Forster, Esq., M.P.
 10 Sept., 1862.

2798. By the Chairman: I believe you are desirous of offering some evidence before this Committee? No; I was asked if I would give evidence, and I said I would do so, so far as I knew anything of the matter, but I have no particular desire.

2799. Have you been practising recently at the Central Police Office as an attorney? A little.

2800. Within what time? Within the last three months.

2801. By Mr. Cowper: You have been familiar with Courts of Petty Sessions throughout the Colony for years past? Yes, for a number of years, both on the Southern and Northern side.

2802. Can you make any suggestions to the Committee, as the result of your experience, that would tend to put the Central Police Office in better working order than at present, if you think it is in any respect inefficient? I think I might offer some suggestions; I think it would be advisable there should be a professional man as a Police Magistrate in Sydney.

2803. Do you think one Police Magistrate sufficient, or do you think two are requisite, at the Central Police Office? Having been told that it is intended to divide the city more equally between the two Police Offices, I think that would do away with the necessity for two Police Magistrates at the Central Office; but if the quantity of business that heretofore has been done at the Central Police Office were to be continued there, then I think it would be advisable to have two Police Magistrates there. I think one of the advantages of having a professional gentleman on the bench would be this—that knowing the way business should be conducted in a Court of law, he would prevent a great deal of the waste of time that is committed now by professional gentlemen, and also a great deal of the waste of time occasioned by some of the unpaid Magistrates; besides that, I consider he would prevent the unpleasant style of addressing the Court, because he would know the proper bounds and extent to which a professional gentleman should be allowed to proceed.

2804. Were you, many years ago, in the habit of attending the Sydney Police Office, or has your practice there been confined to the last three months? I visited it frequently, but I have only practised there for the last three or four months.

2805. You are not aware whether, when a professional man did preside over the proceedings at the Police Office, he did not find very great difficulty in restraining the irregular proceedings of attorneys? I am not aware of that.

2806. Great latitude is allowed in all Courts to counsel? Yes, so long as they confine themselves to the points at issue; but if they wander from the question, then it would be the duty of the Police Magistrate, if he understood his business properly, to check it immediately. If he is a man of firmness he can do that many times where it is not done now. It appears to me to require a man of firmness and decision of character. I would give the Police Magistrate the entire control of the department. The unpaid Magistrates should not in any way interfere with the management of the office, either in the clerical work or in any other way. I should hold the Police Magistrate, if I had anything to do with it, responsible for the efficient performance of the duty by every person in the department.

2807. Would not that give great dissatisfaction to the unpaid Magistrates? I do not see what right they have to expect to interfere with the management of the office; it appears to me that all they have to do is to assist in the administration of justice on the bench.

2808. Do you consider the business, on the whole, fairly managed? I do; much better than I expected, from what I had heard. There is one very good deposition clerk—Mr. Smithers—who has had a good deal of experience in that particular duty; but others are not so efficient.

2809. Do you know a younger clerk, of the name of Hales? Yes; he will become, I think, a very expert writer; I fancy he has improved since I came to Sydney—since I first saw him practising there. I think there ought to be at least three deposition clerks at the office. The other day, for want of a third clerk, one Court was at a stand-still, Mr. Hales being employed in one Court, and Mr. Smithers being unwell. There ought to be an additional deposition clerk, who could be occupied, when not in Court, in filling up informations and so on; and he might be of great use in that way, if he was a competent man and had a knowledge of his business. I do not think there is any necessity at all for a chief clerk if you have a Police Magistrate who understands his duty. The chief clerk might be called first clerk, but I would have him to do a particular branch of duty—as accountant, or something of that kind. It appears to me, that to have a chief clerk who seemingly has nothing to do but to supervise the duties of others is a perfect waste of money. Every man in the department, from the Police Magistrate downwards, should be a working man, and should be able to take depositions if necessary. I recollect, that when I was Clerk of a Bench, I had a Police Magistrate over me who was one of the best deposition writers in the Colony—Mr. Bowen. The great drawback in having an inefficient deposition clerk is, that a question may be put of very great importance, and an answer may be given that ought to be taken down word for word, but through his inefficiency it is blundered, and in trying to bring it to rights, some other matter may be imported into it that gives it a different complexion from what it originally had.
 bring

R. H. M.
Forster, Esq.,
M.P.

10 Sept., 1862.

2810. Cannot the presiding Magistrate supervise the taking of the evidence, and keep the deposition clerk right? When I was Clerk of a Court, the course I adopted was to read out, as I took it down, the statement of the witness, so that the witness, the Magistrates, and the whole Court knew what was taken down. It was an index to the witness of what would next have to be stated, and saved a great deal of time.

2811. By Mr. Hoskins: How often have you been in the habit of attending the Police Office since you have been in Sydney this last time—daily? No, I went for some time daily, and then I left off for some time again. I have only been once for the the last week or fortnight, but for the first two months I went daily.

2812. You have been very frequently in attendance? Yes, whether engaged in business or not.

2813. Have you generally seen the Police Magistrate on the bench? I have seen him there at the opening of the Court, but not regularly afterwards; but I have seen him almost every time I have been at the Police Office, either on the bench or in his room.

2814. Have you remarked whether he is more frequently in his room or on the bench? I think he is more frequently in his room than on the bench.

2815. Do you know how he was engaged in his room? As I understood, from something I have seen, in receiving informations and complaints from parties, and giving instructions to have them prepared.

2816. Which do you consider the most important of a Police Magistrate's duty—attendance on the bench, or receiving informations in his office? I think attendance on the bench, decidedly. The final decision of cases is the more important to the public.

2817. Do you not think the daily attendance of the Police Magistrate on the Bench, desirable, both for expediting the business of the Court and advising or giving information to the unpaid Magistrates on points of law? I think the Police Magistrate ought to be a lawyer. If you want a professional man for drawing informations, the chief clerk might do that; but if you want a man to assist his brother Magistrates generally, then he ought to be constantly on the bench. It would be folly to have only the chief clerk a professional man, unless he was a deposition clerk, so as to be always in Court, that he might understand the matter on which his advice was sought, and the bearing of the evidence. I think it highly important that the Police Magistrate should be on the bench every day. I would have the Police Office open at nine o'clock, and dispose of all the watch-house cases before anything else was done. It is a disgrace to the city to see, at almost mid-day, those destitute wretches coming across the yard one after the other, in Indian file, with constables marching them before the people, in sight of the main thoroughfare in George-street.

2818. Drunkards' cases you mean? Drunkards, whores, thieves, and vagabonds. I would have them disposed of, if possible, before nine o'clock, and send them off. All this business could be done before the ordinary hours of business, and then the other Magistrates could assist in disposing of the other cases. It occurred to me at first that it would be necessary to have two Police Magistrates at the Central Police Office, because it would come very hard on one to sit all day in the Court room inhaling the foul air that always attends a crowded Court; but if the city is to be divided at King-street, as I understand is the case, the work will be greatly reduced, and one Police Magistrate will be quite sufficient for the Central Police Office, and one for the Water Police Office.

2819. Do you not think the business would be expedited by having a Police Magistrate on the bench who would check the attorneys making long harangues? Certainly. I have heard attorneys address the Bench on matters having nothing at all to do with the case, and the Magistrates patiently listening to him; and I have heard attorneys address the Bench very improperly too, and then, if an unpaid Magistrate takes offence, he gets a very sharp answer, and does not know what to say in return.

2820. Do you consider the attorneys generally respectful in their bearing to the Magistrates? Generally I think they are; but I have seen occasions when they were anything but respectful. At times some of the Magistrates provoke the attorneys to use hard language; for instance, I had occasion when Mr. Murphy was presiding with Mr. Hargraves, the gold discoverer, to take some objections, and Mr. Hargraves made some very impertinent remarks to me for taking these objections—"most ridiculous," "silly," "absurd," and that kind of thing, in a blustering style. When he had done, I addressed him to the following effect:—"Your worship, I request you will treat me with that degree of courtesy with which I treat the Bench. I expect to be treated as a gentleman; if I did not think the objections were proper ones to take, I would not take them"; and he went on in the same style again. I then said, "It is useless to argue the question with you, but I shall take steps for my protection elsewhere; attorneys are entitled to be treated with respect just in the same way as they are bound to treat the Bench with respect."

2821. Do these recriminations take place when the Police Magistrate is on the bench? I have heard that such a thing has taken place when the Police Magistrate was on the bench, but I have never witnessed it.

2822. You have seen it when he has been absent from the bench? Yes; I have seen Mr. Moffat jump up, and say to Mr. Murphy, "Every word you are saying is untrue, and that is tolerably plain speaking." I should add, that Mr. Murphy had just before flatly contradicted Mr. Moffat.

2823. The presence of a competent Police Magistrate on the bench all day would check these excesses? Yes. A Magistrate who understood his duty would give an attorney into custody if he were insolent or insulting to the Bench. A great amount of waste of time is occasioned by attorneys in this way:—They take fees in cases, perhaps two or three guineas, and let the parties go to the Clerk at the Court, who is not a professional man, to get an information information drawn up that requires some degree of legal knowledge, so as to avoid objections that might be taken when the case comes into Court. If the attorney on the other side discover these defects he argues them, and then the attorney who ought to have provided against them in the first instance, wastes time by trying to bolster up his bad case, the thing being patent on the face of it.

2824. Have you ever seen a Police Court where a lawyer presided in which these evils did not exist? No, I have not.

2825. You have been in the habit of attending other Police Courts, and you think the evils here greater in degree than what you have seen in other Courts? Yes, certainly.

2826. Did you ever hear, yourself, or did you ever hear of an attorney, threatening personal violence to a Magistrate on the bench? I never heard it myself; I have been told of it as a matter of report.

2827. Have you generally found the clerks in the office civil and attentive to their duties? Yes, invariably.

2828. Do you think there is any disorganization or want of subordination and discipline in the office? I am inclined to think there is not that kindly feeling that ought to exist; but towards me, and, so far as my observation enables me to judge, towards all strangers, they are courteous and respectful. I have never seen any of them behave otherwise.

2829. Do you think the public business suffers from that want of good feeling existing among the clerks? I think it must. There seems not to be a properly organized system; there does not seem to be a proper division of labour. I think matters might be greatly simplified if a man with a knowledge of the work of the office were to systematize the whole. I think there is a great deal of waste time—that clerks are doing nothing when they ought to be at work, and when perhaps others are overworked.

2830. By Mr. Couper: Does that arise from different clerks being deputed to different duties? It seems to proceed from want of system; a clerk is stuck at a particular table, and he does not move from it, no matter what may be required to be done. The clerks that have to go and take depositions have an immense amount of work to do; but the other clerks in the office are not able to assist them, from want of practice. It is not necessary to take down everything a witness says, and a clerk with a knowledge of the duty can pick out the substantial parts of his statement, and so save time.

2831. Does not the presiding Magistrate suggest to the clerk as he goes on? The presiding Magistrate, generally speaking, knows no more about it than the clerk.

2832. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you not think the want of organization among the clerks might be remedied if there were effective supervision by some person? As I said before, I would make the Police Magistrate responsible that everything was carried out with efficiency; and I think if you had an efficient professional man, with a knowledge of the business, he would in a very short time so arrange the various duties that everything would work harmoniously.

2833. Do you happen to know whether cases have been frequently adjourned from day to day in consequence of dilatoriness on the part of the clerks, or through the paucity of attendance of Magistrates—whether, in fact, there has been delay in the prosecution of business at the Police Office? I have no doubt that cases have been adjourned through the attorneys. There is a monopoly of the business in the hands of two or three men—Brown is on one side and Jones on the other in the Court, and they get information that a case is going to be called on in the other Court; one tells his client that he must get it put off; the client applies to the Bench to postpone the case in consequence of the absence of the attorney, and they manage in this way to get cases postponed, and to keep them in their own hands. I pointed that out as being improper and unjust, not only to other professional men, but to the parties concerned, because they may have witnesses in attendance whose expenses they are bound to pay, besides perhaps fresh fees to their attorneys. I mentioned the matter to a number of the Magistrates several times, as having the effect of giving a monopoly of the business to a few men. I said there was a very simple remedy, and that was, that if a professional man did not appear when the case was called on they should go on without him, and let the party who had employed him engage another if he chose to do so.

2834. Did you ever complain of this to the Police Magistrate? I do not know whether I ever complained to the Police Magistrate, but I have spoken of it to the Mayor and several others.

2835. Do you not consider that an efficient Police Magistrate would interpose, and prevent these delays and loss to suitors? The Police Magistrate could not well, unless it was brought before him. He simply goes on the bench to try the cases that are put before him. The attorney for the defendant says he is not ready, and the attorney for the plaintiff says he has no objection to the postponement; and it would seem rather a harsh thing for the Police Magistrate then to say that the case must go on. But he might call the plaintiff and defendant into Court, and ask them if they were ready to go on with the case—if they had their witnesses; and if they said yes, then he might go on with the matter whether the professional men were there or not. If he were a professional man himself he could take care that justice was done. In fact, I think the appointment of a professional man to the Bench would do away with the employment of attorneys in one-half the cases in which they are employed now.

2836. Did you ever hear of attorneys having altered the charge sheet so as to give their own cases precedence? I have heard of it.

2837. Has it been a common topic of conversation? Yes. I think it a most extraordinary thing for an attorney to be permitted to do.

2838. Do you know whether any complaint was ever made to Captain Scott about such a practice? I do not know.

2839. Have you ever made any complaint to Captain Scott of things of that kind? No.

2840. Do you happen to know whether persons have paid fees to clerks in the Police Office for for the purpose of getting their clerical business expedited? I have heard a great many rumours, but I know nothing of the kind of my own knowledge.

2841. Did you ever hear of Magistrates, after having issued warrants, cancelling those warrants without having the persons named in them brought before them? I never heard of such a thing being done.

2842. Do you consider such a practice to be legal or proper? Circumstances may arise that would justify a Magistrate in not carrying out the law to the letter. I cannot call to mind a very pertinent case on the spur of the moment; but imagine that I apply for sureties for the peace against you, on some statement that has been made to me, something having occurred between us that leads me to believe that you intend to do me some serious injury; a warrant is issued, but in the interim some communication may be made to me that shows me my impression was wrong. If I went to the Magistrate who had granted the warrant and told him this, I do not think it would be right for him to insist on the warrant being persisted in. I do not say that any Magistrate has the power of cancelling a warrant.

2843. Have you heard of such cases in Sydney or other parts of the Colony? I only heard of one case where a warrant, issued by the gentleman I mentioned before, was suspended—that is, he gave directions not to put it in force if the party came to the Court without. It was the case of a party who was summoned as a witness in the celebrated case of Lynch, for murder, and did not attend. There was an affidavit of the service of the summons, and a warrant was issued to compel his attendance, but a letter was sent at the same time, to the effect that if he obeyed the order of the Court the warrant was not to be put in force.

2844. I suppose you would not justify the frequent occurrence of the cancellation of warrants? No; I do not think a Magistrate ought hastily to issue a warrant; it seems to me that the cases should be very few in number where such a thing should occur, if a Magistrate takes pains to inquire into cases.

2846. Do you think an alteration of the law in that respect should be made? I think it very necessary; in fact I made it my business to call upon the Attorney General and invite his attention to the matter. I myself was inclined to bring in a short Bill on the subject, but I did not wish to move in it if I thought I should be opposed by the Government, and so I let the matter drop.

ADDENDUM.

NOTE.—To illustrate the advantage of having a professional man as Police Magistrate, I may state that it was the practice of the City Solicitor to prosecute "minors," who are employed as conductors (or some such title) to omnibuses, for breaches of the City By-laws, and on conviction, and in default of payment of fines, &c., these lads have been sent by the J.P.s to gaol; thus imprisoning minors for fines which ought properly to be levied on the employers.

Again: frequently, in cases in which attorneys are employed, the unpaid Magistrates consult with the deposition clerk; and I have noticed, in many cases, that they have been influenced by his (the clerk's) opinion. It is needless to point to the impropriety of this practice.

In explanation of my statement, that I considered that there did not exist that kindly feeling amongst the clerks which there ought to be in all departments, I would add, that I believe much of this arises from the fact that the present chief clerk was appointed to his present office from another department, over the heads of those in the department who had a right to expect promotion. There is no doubt but that the chief clerk is an efficient public officer; but if the clerks find that their services are ignored by the Government, it appears to me impossible to expect them to perform their duties with that zeal which they otherwise would.

I would not only hold out assurances of promotion in the department to the efficient officers, but I would make the Police Office the nursery, as it were, for the office of Police Magistrates throughout the Colony.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. William Crane called in and examined:—

2847. By the Chairman: You are Clerk of Petty Sessions at the Water Police Court? I am. Mr. W. Crane.

2848. You were formerly a clerk in the Central Police Office? Yes.

2849. When were you first appointed? In January, 1854.

8 Oct., 1862.

2850. How long did you remain there? About seven and a half years.

2851. You left there to go to the Water Police Office? I did.

2852. What were your duties at the Central Police Office? Sometimes preparing summonses, bail bonds, and subpoenas; but my duties were chiefly preparing warrants and acting as record clerk.

2853. Did you occasionally act as deposition clerk? Yes; I may say that I frequently did so.

- Mr. W. Crane. 2854. I understand you to say, then, that you were frequently employed in the work of almost every branch of the office? Yes.
- 8 Oct., 1862. 2855. Had you opportunities of observing the working of the office during that time? I had.
2856. Do you recollect Captain Scott being appointed Police Magistrate? I do.
2857. Were you in the office at that time? I was.
2858. In what condition was the office, in so far as you had an opportunity of judging, at the time of his appointment? I believe that everything was in proper order at that time. I heard no complaints against it.
2859. Was Mr. Connell appointed Clerk of Petty Sessions at the Central Police Office before you left? He was.
2860. And were things in the same state in the office upon Mr. Connell's appointment as they were before? At the time of his appointment everything was in proper order. I allude to the general working of the office.
2861. Was it possible to find records of old cases at that time? I had been acting as record clerk for several years, and can therefore speak on that point; and I believe that the records could not have been kept better. If they were continued in the same state as that in which I left them, I would in ten minutes find any case of even five or six years old. I bestowed a large amount of time and trouble on these records.
2862. Were there any changes made in the department by Captain Scott or Mr. Connell after their appointments? In what respect?
2863. As to the work of the office—the general establishment? I cannot call to mind any changes, except taking me from the duties I had previously fulfilled, and appointing me deposition clerk in the second Court.
2864. Had you acted as deposition clerk before the appointment of these gentlemen? Occasionally.
2865. How long did you remain in the office with Captain Scott and Mr. Connell? Perhaps about twelve months.
2866. How was the business of the office conducted during that period? I speak more particularly with reference to my own portion of the business, and that was conducted as usual.
2867. That is, in regard to the mere taking of depositions in Court? Yes.
2868. Have you heard complaints made, or do you know that complaints were made, by the public, at the general mismanagement of the office? I cannot call to mind any distinct complaints.
2869. Before Mr. Connell's appointment, how did the clerks in the office work together? Well, I never saw a more united body of men in any branch of the public service than there was in that.
2870. Did this continue after Mr. Connell's appointment? I am sorry to say that they were not so united at the time of my leaving the office.
2871. Can you state what had been the cause of this alteration? I cannot.
2872. Can you give the Committee no information at all on the point? I cannot, of course, say what influenced the minds of some of the gentlemen in our office; I can only state as a fact, that there was a great difference in the unanimity of feeling between the time I left the office and previously.
2873. You cannot state what brought about this state of things? I do not know what cause operated amongst the clerks themselves.
2874. Who was chief clerk of the office before Mr. Connell? Mr. Warburton.
2875. During the time you were there, how often did Captain Scott take part in the proceedings of the Bench? He was on the bench, as far as I recollect, every day.
2876. How long did he remain there, as a general rule? For some time after he was first appointed he remained longer on the bench than he did afterwards; and just before I left he was accustomed to open the Court, and on some other Magistrates coming in, to leave it, to attend to the chamber business.
2877. Did he at any time take cases that were likely to be long ones? At times.
2878. How many hours a day did he devote to his Bench duties? More or less according to the cases dealt with. Possibly he might be in a long case, which he could not leave; and when that case was ended, he would go to his room to attend to the chamber business.
2879. Used he to take long cases? Yes, occasionally.
2880. Is it not a fact that he frequently shirked them? I cannot say that.
2881. Can you state what Mr. Connell's duties were when you left, or rather what he did? He received all the moneys for fees, fines, and other matters connected with the police; his duty was monthly to account for them to the Auditor General. Besides this, he exercised a general supervision over the department.
2882. Can you state whether the accounts were made up on Mr. Connell's taking charge of the office? I do not know of my own knowledge whether they were or not; but I have heard the money accounts were not made up.
2883. Were the records in a state of perfect regularity? They were.
2884. Then it is not true that, on Mr. Connell's coming to the office, everything in connection with the office was in the worst state of irregularity? It is not correct.
2885. Do you know if any of the books were indexed at that time? They were, but I think the general index was behind hand.
2886. Is it true that none of the books were indexed when Mr. Connell took charge of the office? The offences were indexed, and had been so for years.
2887. Do you know how the letter books were then kept? All the letters written by me were entered in the letter book, but I do not think it was indexed at the time.
2888. Were they in the most irregular state? I think not; so far as I know, they were not.
- 2889.

2889. Is it true that, at the time of Mr. Connell's appointment, the amounts received for fines and fees were taken upon sheets of paper, instead of being entered in the day book? At times they might have been, but this was very seldom.

Mr. W. Crane.
8 Oct., 1862.

2890. Would it have been very difficult to find any record at all of any case that was dealt with previous to his appointment? No, on the contrary, it would have been perfectly easy.

2891. It is then untrue that it was a marked piece of luck to find any papers, letters, depositions, or, in fact, anything connected with the department? It is incorrect.

2892. At the time of Mr. Connell's appointment were the clerks in the office told off to different classes of duty? They were.

2893. Did you find that system work well? Yes, very well.

2894. Did you inform Mr. Connell, or was Mr. Connell informed, shortly after his appointment, that you had to look after the records—that you had, in fact, been the record clerk for some years past? I cannot call to mind that I ever informed him, but he was aware of it, because he would apply to me for papers whenever he required them. If my memory serves me, he had an account furnished him of the duties performed by every clerk in the office.

2895. Was there a day book in which was kept an account of all moneys received? Yes; and perhaps I may be here permitted to mention, that the reason why the moneys received were sometimes entered on sheets of paper instead of in the day book was, that the accountant would occasionally find it necessary to have the day book, in order to post up his journal from it. During the time he was so using it, moneys would be received in the office, and an account of them would sometimes be kept on a sheet of paper until they could be entered in the day book when the accountant had done with it.

2896. What became of these sheets of paper? The amount would be entered in the day book.

2897. Had many of them been entered at the time of Mr. Connell's appointment? Yes, all of them, as far as I know.

2898. Was the office in a most disorganized state at the time of his appointment? No, quite the contrary.

2899. Was there any book called the licensing book kept at that time, or was the licensing business entered in any book, or any record whatever of it kept? I believe there was. I never had anything to do with the licensing business, but I believe the way it was done was that the licenses were all regularly sorted and taken into Court, and a list of them made and laid before the Bench; and then, as each was disposed of, the Magistrate would mark on it granted or otherwise, as the case might be, and this list was used as a kind of record.

2900. Was there more than one list kept? I cannot say.

2901. Who was the accountant at the time you were there? Mr. Ormiston.

2902. What sort of an accountant is he? He is a very competent person for the office.

2903. He has been a great many years in the establishment? Yes.

2904. And you consider him to be a most efficient clerk? I do; his books would do credit to any office.

2905. Had you an opportunity of seeing his accounts shortly before Mr. Connell's appointment? Yes, I have observed them many times.

2906. Were they in a confused state, or did they appear to you to have been regularly brought up? They always appeared to me to be properly brought up; but, speaking generally, it was necessary that they should be so; he could not let his accounts go back, because if there was any delay in furnishing them after the first of the month, he would receive a letter from the Auditor General, requiring to know the cause of delay.

2907. Do you consider it necessary or advisable that the Police Magistrate should attend regularly in Court? I think it would be advisable that he should do so.

2908. After Mr. Connell's appointment were there complaints made by suitors of the delays that occurred in obtaining informations and warrants? Yes; but I may also say that similar complaints were made previously. Complainants come occasionally nearly all at one time, and it is impossible to serve all at once.

2909. Were complaints of delay frequent, or were they of rare occurrence? Not so very frequent.

2910. Can you account for the delays that occurred in the general business of the office after Mr. Connell's appointment? In no other way than this, that the clerks were taken from their legitimate duties, to which they had been accustomed, and were expected to perform other duties with which they were not so well acquainted. That is the only way in which I can account for it.

2911. Have you ever known a Magistrate to issue a warrant, and, after placing it in the hands of the police for execution, to order its cancellation? I do not remember such a case.

2912. Do you think such a practice at all proper? Perhaps in some cases a Magistrate might be allowed to exercise a discretion. In trifling cases, such as assaults, for instance, he might do so; but as a general rule, when once a warrant has been granted it is better that it should go through the regular course, and that the matter should come before the Court, even though the party has to be discharged immediately the case is called on.

2913. Do you consider a charge of bigamy a trifling case? No, it is a charge of great importance, and if a warrant were placed in the hands of the police the party ought to be apprehended.

2914. You say that it was your duty, occasionally, to fill up summonses and to draw up informations? Yes.

2915. Would not these duties be better discharged by one clerk who could prepare informations and fill up the summonses at the same time? I think not; because there may be six or eight persons waiting to have informations prepared, and the summonses take five or six times as long as some of the informations to draw up. This would cause unnecessary delay

to

Mr. W. Crane. to applicants, and therefore I think it would be much better to have the duties performed separately by different clerks.

8 Oct., 1862.

2916. Did Mr. Connell, soon after his appointment, ever apply to you for documents? Yes, for the depositions frequently.

2917. But I mean old cases? I cannot remember any particular case in which he did so; but any matter that he might require, whether it were a few days or whether it were years old, he could have by applying to me.

2918. Before you left that department did you hear frequent inquiries from attorneys for papers of an old date, that could not be found? I did not.

2919. If such inquiries had been made would they have reached your ears? Very probably they would; but I was then acting as deposition clerk, and was not in the office. Still, we generally heard from each other all that transpired in the office in the course of the day.

2920. Were the records in a very satisfactory state when you left? I think so, very.

2921. Were the jury list and the electoral list made out at the Police Office, or copied there, before Mr. Connell's appointment? Parties out of the office were paid for making out the electoral list. The jury list was also prepared out of the office. I speak of this from my own knowledge, because once I prepared it myself, previous to going into the office.

2922. Since Mr. Connell's appointment, do you know how or by whom these lists have been copied? I believe that a young man named Day has been engaged to do that work.

2923. Has the business at the Central Police Office increased since Mr. Connell's appointment? At the time of my leaving the office I should say it had not.

2924. Do you recollect receiving a letter from Mr. Smithers, on any occasion, just before you left the office? I have received several letters from him.

2925. Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Connell in reference to one letter you had received from Mr. Smithers? I do. Mr. Smithers had had a fit, and was ill, and he wrote requesting me to mention the matter to Mr. Connell.

2926. Did you tell Mr. Connell that Mr. Smithers had had a fit, and could not attend? I did, and I also read a part of the letter to him.

2927. Are you certain about that? I am. Quite certain.

2928. Did Mr. Connell demand to see the letter? Mr. Connell wished to retain it. I read a portion of it to him, and know that he had it in his hands; but whether he took it from me or I gave it to him I do not know. He wished to retain it, but as it was a private letter to myself, I refused to let him do so.

2929. You are quite convinced that he had it in his hands? Yes, quite.

2930. And that he read it? I cannot say that he read it, but I read a portion of it to him.

2931. And he wished to retain it? Yes; and I said that as it was a private letter, and my own personal property, I could not think of allowing him to do so.

2932. Did he not threaten to report you if you did not give him the letter? No; I think he stated that he should take no notice whatever of the letter, in regard to Mr. Smithers' absence—that he should not consider it as a sufficient excuse, because it came through me.

2933. Do you remember having a conversation with Mr. Connell shortly before you left? What particular conversation do you allude to?

2934. With regard to his giving you some assistance in respect to the performance of your duties at the Water Police Court? No; while there he never gave me any assistance, nor did I require any.

2935. Had you a conversation with him as to his treatment of the clerks in his office? Yes, I remember speaking to him on the subject.

2936. Will you tell the Committee what you said to him? I remember particularly speaking to him about Mr. Smithers as one of the most efficient clerks in the office; and I stated to Mr. Connell, I thought if Mr. Smithers were treated properly, he would find him willing to oblige in all matters; and further stated to him, I thought if he were not so dictatorial in his style matters would go on much better in the office.

2937. Anything further? The chief part of the conversation was with respect to Mr. Connell's manner, and I thought it my duty to advise him to alter it before I left the department.

2938. I believe that you were anxious to leave the office? I was, very anxious.

2939. And that was in a great measure caused by Mr. Connell's mode of conducting the business of the office? Matters were not certainly so comfortable with me as they had been formerly, and I therefore preferred leaving.

2940. Will you look over these summonses and informations, marked B, B 2, C, C 2, C 3, and C 4? Yes, I have done so.

2941. Are these fair specimens of the summonses and informations daily prepared in the Central Police Office? They are not, with the exception of one information "for general purposes," marked B 2.

2942. Why are they not fair samples? The first is a case of Inspector Mitchelson's, and we have them very seldom.

2943. Do they not contain more writing than the general run of informations and summonses prepared in that office? They are properly prepared, but we seldom have to use them.

2944. What I mean is, is there not more writing in these forms than in the forms more generally required? Yes.

2945. By Mr. Wilson: And of course take a longer time to prepare? Yes.

2946. By Mr. Hoskins: Was Mr. Connell generally respectful in his bearing towards the Police Magistrate? I know of no instance in which he showed any disrespect.

2947. Did the Police Magistrate show by his manner towards Mr. Connell, that he required him as a subordinate under him? He did not.

2948. From what you say, it would seem that the Police Magistrate allowed Mr. Connell to control the whole of the clerical establishment? The whole of it. Mr. W. Crane.
2949. And some of the clerks were seniors in the service to Mr. Connell? Not his seniors in the service. Mr. Connell has been many years in the Government service, but they were his seniors in that department. 8 Oct., 1862.
2950. Was there a feeling of dissatisfaction in the department on hearing of his appointment? There was.
2951. Was there a willingness shown by the clerks in the department to obey Mr. Connell's orders? I know of no instance to the contrary. Wherever he desired information, it was of course given to him.
2952. In the event of any of the clerks considering he was not well or fairly treated by Mr. Connell—suppose, for instance, that Mr. Connell should give him orders that he could not reasonably obey—was there any appeal from Mr. Connell to the Police Magistrate? None that I am aware of.
2953. Did Captain Scott frequently or generally direct or supervise the clerical staff of the Police Office? He did not.
2954. Previously to his appointment, did the Police Magistrate take a lively interest in the clerical business of the office? Yes; Mr. Dowling especially did so.
2955. He acted in a very different way from what Captain Scott has done? Yes, he did. At times when I least expected such a thing, Mr. Dowling would call upon me for my books, in order to see that they were properly kept up.
2956. You have not heard of Captain Scott having done so? No; the whole management of the office, up to the time of my leaving, had devolved upon Mr. Connell.
2957. When Mr. Dowling was Police Magistrate did you consider yourself to be immediately responsible to him? I did.
2958. But after Mr. Connell's appointment you inferred, from appearances, that Captain Scott had delegated the management of the office to Mr. Connell? I did.
2959. Was the effect of this alteration to conduce to the efficiency of the department, or did it, on the contrary, tend to render it inefficient? I could not answer that question, because I consider the chief clerk should exercise a certain control over the subordinates in the office. No doubt it would be as well that the Police Magistrate should himself look at times into matters, but the control over the clerical staff should be with the chief clerk.

Mr. Charles Smithers called in and examined :—

2960. By the Chairman: You are a clerk in the Central Police Office? I am.
2961. How long have you been employed there? Nearly fourteen years.
2962. What are you there? Deposition Clerk.
2963. How long have you acted in that capacity? About twelve years.
2964. Have you had frequent opportunities of judging of the mode of conducting the business of that office, under the different Police Magistrates? I have. Mr. C. Smithers.
2965. Do you recollect Captain Scott being appointed Police Magistrate? I do. 8 Oct., 1862.
2966. Was Mr. Connell appointed as Clerk of Petty Sessions at the same time? Shortly afterwards, I think.
2967. Can you describe the state of the office when Mr. Connell took charge of it? In what way?
2968. In regard to its general efficiency—was it in fair working order? I fancy it was.
2969. Were the books regularly kept? Yes, I think so, up to that time; but I was in Court so much that I cannot speak positively, but I believe they were.
2970. Do you know many hours, on a daily average, or how often Captain Scott has sat in Court since his appointment? Recently, since the meeting of Magistrates that was called some time back, he has not sat so much in Court as he did before.
2971. Did he ever sit much in Court? On some occasions he has been there some two or three hours, perhaps.
2972. Does he usually take cases of a complicated nature, or does he more generally proceed with the charge sheet? He takes the charge sheet—light cases.
2973. Have you heard frequent complaints from the general public since his appointment, as to the mode in which the business was conducted? I have.
2974. Were they complaints of delay, or of what nature? Complaints of delay. I have heard such complaints made.
2975. How were the clerks in the office working together at the time of Mr. Connell's appointment? Very well indeed.
2976. Did that state of things continue after his appointment? No.
2977. Was there not a complete change in the whole establishment? There was.
2978. Do you know how this change was caused? Mr. Connell's manner was rather objectionable.
- His bearing towards the clerks there, or towards some of them, was not such as it should have been.
2979. Do you not consider it necessary that the Police Magistrate should attend the business of the Court as much as possible? I think so, provided we have some one to attend to the chamber duty.
2980. Do not causes of great importance frequently come before the Police Court? Yes.
2981. Cases involving complicated questions of mingled law and fact? Yes.
2982. Then, do you consider that the Police Magistrate should sit in Court, and that the Clerk

Mr. C.
Smithers.

8 Oct., 1862.

Clerk of Petty Sessions should be appointed a Magistrate, for the performance of chamber duties? No, I do not.

2983. You think that a second Magistrate should be appointed? Yes, for the chamber business.

2984. Do you think it could be managed by means of telling off the unpaid Magistrates for chamber business, in the same way as is now done for the Court? I think it might; but I would prefer that a second Magistrate should be appointed for the purpose, in the same way as in Mr. Dowling's time.

2985. Who attended to the chamber business then? Captain M'Levie.

2986. Was not Mr. Warburton appointed in the same way, and for the same purpose? He was.

2987. But he was occasionally in Court? Yes, he was.

2988. Was he compelled to go into Court? He was, and I was the first who asked him to do so. It was one afternoon that I found it necessary to request him to sit.

2989. Will you state the circumstances under which this occurred? There were several persons remanded from the morning, and in the afternoon there was no Magistrate in attendance. Rather than see men locked up for the night, I thought it my duty to ask Mr. Warburton to go into Court and dispose of the cases.

2990. That was the reason why he went into Court in the first instance? Yes. He told me that it was expected that he should not go into Court, but merely attend to the chamber business; but finding we could get no other Magistrate, I pressed upon him, for the sake of the prisoners, to go in and deal with the cases. Some of the solicitors also asked him to do so, and at last he consented.

2991. Was everything in the Central Police Office in the worst state of irregularity on Mr. Connell's taking charge of it? Not that I am aware of.

2992. Who was the record clerk? Mr. Crane.

2993. Have you heard frequent complaints from attorneys and others, at the time Mr. Crane was record clerk, at the non-production of papers? I cannot say that I have.

2994. Was it at the time of Mr. Connell's appointment a mere piece of luck to find a record, or a deposition, or anything else in the office? Mr. Crane, as record clerk, had charge of these documents at that time, and he was always exceedingly careful.

2995. Was Mr. Ormiston a clerk in the office at that time? He was.

2996. Was he an efficient clerk? He was; both as an accountant and in the general knowledge of the business of the office.

2997. Has the office during the last two years been properly managed? In what way?

2998. By the head of the establishment? No; there have been many complaints made.

2999. By whom? Both the professional men and the general public have complained.

3000. Of what? That they cannot get their business attended to so quickly as they did before; the attorneys state that obstructions have been thrown in their way.

3001. By whom? By Mr. Connell.

3002. In what way? In reference to his not allowing them to see depositions that they required to make use of.

3003. What does Mr. Connell really do—how does he employ himself during the day? I cannot say; I am in Court so much that I have no opportunity of knowing.

3004. When you are in Court do you frequently see him there? Yes, frequently.

3005. Does his business lead him there? Not at all, but he comes in and out very frequently.

3006. Do you know who performs the duties in Mr. Connell's room? Mr. Delohery assists him a good deal, and so does Mr. Ormiston.

3007. Have you heard complaints made by suitors in the Court, as well as by professional gentlemen, that they had been treated with incivility by Mr. Connell? Yes, I have; but there are always complaints being made there of one kind or another; they are always complaining, not only of him, but of the whole establishment.

3008. Are these complaints well or ill founded? I cannot say in regard to all cases; perhaps in some instances they are well founded, and in others they are not.

3009. You stated, I think, that up to the time of Mr. Connell taking charge of the office it was in good working order, and that the clerks all worked well together? Yes, I think so.

3010. That is not the case now? Recently we have been working together better than we have done for some time previously.

3011. Recently—within what time? During the last six weeks or two months.

3012. Is Mr. Connell generally liked in the office? By whom?

3013. By the clerks in the office, or by the suitors generally? Judging from what the clerks tell me, I do not think he is liked.

3014. Is he courteous and obliging to the public? Not at all times.

3015. At what hour does the Court usually open now? Recently, since the first of the month, being the commencement of the summer season, the Court has opened at half-past nine. The office, however, opens at nine, half an hour before the Court.

3016. And do all the clerks attend in the office at nine o'clock? Yes, all, with one exception.

3017. Who is the one exception? Mr. Connell; he does not attend punctually at nine o'clock.

3018. By Mr. Cowper: And do all the clerks attend at nine o'clock? Yes, all, since you gave the order that they were to do so.

3019. That is not all the year through? No, only in the summer months. In the winter months the office opens at half-past nine, and the Court at ten.

3020. By the Chairman: What are your duties in the office? I am deposition clerk, and am in charge of the criminal business generally.

3021. And these duties render it necessary for you to remain in Court from its opening to its close? Yes.

3022. Is there any work expected from you after the Court has closed? Yes.

3023. You have other duties then? Yes, and a great deal too. I have not only my own duties to attend to, but I am expected to assist others, who may have more work than they can manage, and I frequently do so.

3024. What do you consider to be your own duties after the closing of the Court? To prepare convictions in cases disposed of by the Court—but these are really not very numerous—and to draw up orders, such as orders for maintenance under the Deserted Wives' and Children's Act.

3025. Anything further? And to assist the other clerks when I can, and as much as I can.

3026. Is Mr. Hales an efficient clerk? Yes, he is a very good clerk, in my opinion.

3027. Do you know who receives the money in the pay office? Generally, I think, Mr. Delohery.

3028. By Mr. Cowper: The fees received? The whole of the money paid into the Court. Nearly the whole of it is for fees or fines.

3029. By the Chairman: Is the amount received for fees and fines immediately entered in the proper book? That I cannot say. Being in Court, I am unable to say how they conduct this branch, but I believe it is entered in a kind of rough day book.

3030. By whom is this done? By Mr. Delohery, who receives the money. Mr. Connell afterwards enters the amounts from that in the book kept for the purpose.

3031. By Mr. Cowper: But Mr. Ormiston is the accountant of the office? He is.

3032. What is his duty? He prepares the accounts and keeps the ledger.

3033. He does not touch the cash? No, except when Mr. Connell happens to be out.

3034. By the Chairman: Have you within the last week or so heard complaints made by the Magistrates at the way in which the office was managed? Yes, I have heard a complaint by a Magistrate—last Thursday I think.

3035. You heard complaints made of the manner in which business was carried on there? Yes, I heard complaints from Mr. Birrell in particular.

3036. Has it not been stated publicly by a Magistrate in open Court, that Captain Scott was nothing more than a tool in the hands of Mr. Connell? Yes, I have heard that said.

3037. And that he was nothing more nor less than a complete messenger in his hands? Yes, I heard a remark to that effect coming from a Magistrate on the bench, on Thursday last.

3038. Has the business of the office increased since Mr. Connell's appointment? No, there is not so much business now as there was in Mr. Dowling's time, or even in Mr. Warburton's time.

3039. And I think you said that you considered it necessary that the Police Magistrate should sit in Court as much as possible? Yes, provided we have some one appointed to attend to the chamber business.

3040. Do you think it requires a professional man to fill the situation of Police Magistrate? Certainly I do.

3041. During your long experience in that Court, have you not heard cases in which very strange decisions have been given? I have.

3042. Decisions that have been utterly opposed to every principle of law, as well as to the facts of the case? Yes.

3043. Have you heard it stated that certain Magistrates attended the Central Police Court to hear and dispose of certain cases? Yes, I have heard it so said.

3044. Has that rumour been confirmed by the attendance of those Magistrates? I have heard these remarks made after the cases have been disposed of.

3045. In your opinion was there any foundation for these remarks? I do not know. I had my own duties to attend to at the time, and do not pretend to form any opinion.

3046. Did Mr. Connell, after his appointment to the Central Police Office, repeatedly ask you for papers and documents that could not be found? No, not repeatedly.

3047. Did he ever, on any occasion, ask you for papers that could not be found? He has asked me for papers, but when he has done so I have always referred him to the persons who had the custody of them, and who ought therefore to know where to find them.

3048. You have referred him to the record clerk? Yes.

3049. Do you consider the clerical establishment of the Central Police Office to be in perfect working order at the present time? In what way?

3050. Do you consider the system of working it just now to be perfect? It is certainly not so perfect as it might be.

3051. Is it as perfect as it was during Mr. Dowling's time, for instance? Not by any means.

3052. Mr. Dowling managed to get through the business of the office, and yet he attended to cases in Court? He did; but he was a most excellent Magistrate—very attentive to business, and very exact.

3053. Is Captain Scott frequently absent from the office? He is out sometimes, but I cannot say what causes his absence, as I am busy in Court and cannot know where he is.

3054. He is frequently off the bench? Yes, but he comes into Court occasionally during the day.

3055. Without taking part in the proceedings? Sometimes he does, but not when we have other Magistrates to go on with the business: The Court opens in summer at half-past nine o'clock. Captain Scott generally comes in and opens the Court, and goes on with the business

Mr. C.
Smithers.

8 Oct., 1862.

Mr. C.
Smithers.

8 Oct., 1862.

business until some other Magistrate arrives. He then leaves the business to be proceeded with by the other Magistrate. If there are cases requiring two Magistrates he is sent for, and comes in and takes a part in them.

3056. How often does he remain in Court all day? He never remains in Court all day; there is no necessity for his doing so, as there are always other Magistrates in attendance.

3057. Has he been frequently on the bench all day long? In what time?

3058. At any time since his appointment? Yes, he has—several times.

3059. Does he remain on the bench more than an hour a day—taking the average of his daily attendances? Until lately, before the meeting of Magistrates was held, he generally sat throughout the whole of the morning; but since then he does not remain for any length of time in Court.

3060. Will you just look through these forms, marked in the Appendix B, B 2, C, C 2, C 3, and C 4? Yes, I have looked at them.

3061. You see what they are? Yes, informations and summonses.

3062. Are they fair samples of those in daily use at the Police Office? This information marked C 2 is, but not the rest. This one under the Deserted Wives' and Children's Act is not the usual style of information.

3063. Are they a fair sample, as regards length, of those in daily use in your office? No, they are not.

3064. Do they not contain more words, and consequently more writing, than those in daily use? Yes, with the exception of the one I have mentioned.

3065. And they would consequently occupy a longer time in preparation than those usually prepared? Yes. As regards the summonses, they are most unusual forms.

3066. Then, if these have been produced to the Committee as fair samples of those which have to be daily prepared in the Police Office, they are not correct? No, certainly not.

3067. Do you know by whom these forms were prepared? Yes; the informations were prepared by Mr. Fraser, at my request. It was done in this way: Mr. Connell came into the office after he had left this Committee, at which he had been examined, and he said that the Committee required to be furnished with some few forms of informations and summonses. He said he had asked Mr. Armstrong to look out for some of the longest forms of summons he had in the office, and he then asked me if I would pick out a few of the longest forms of informations and prepare them to be sent to this Committee. I pointed out two or three of the longest informations we used, to Mr. Fraser, and he prepared them.

3068. Are you desirous of offering any suggestion, or of making any statement to the Committee, relative to the subject matter of their inquiry? I would wish to state to the Committee, that my duty in the Court is not simply to take the depositions, but to examine the witnesses in every case in which an attorney is not concerned for the prosecution; and that I have frequently to advise the Bench.

3069. And has your opinion been frequently asked by the unpaid Magistrates? Yes, very often.

3070. And you frequently instruct them as to their duties in difficult cases? I do; and I have frequently been snubbed by the Magistrates for offering my advice.

3071. Did you ever know, during the time that Mr. Dowling was Police Magistrate, of a warrant being cancelled after it had been placed in the hands of the police for execution? I never heard of such a thing being done.

3072. Do you not think that such a thing as cancelling a warrant under such circumstances is highly improper? I do not think that such a thing is correct, though I lately heard that some were cancelled by Mr. Dowling when he was there.

WEDNESDAY, 15 OCTOBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,

MR. HOSKINS.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

John Birrell, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

J. Birrell,
Esq., J.P.

15 Oct., 1862.

3073. By the Chairman: Have you, during the last six months, taken part in the duties of the Bench at the Police Office in George-street? I have.

3074. A frequent part? I am generally there once every week, and frequently twice.

3075. Do you consider that establishment in perfect working order? No, I do not.

3076. Have you had reason to find fault with the clerical department? I have had reason to complain of a want of deposition clerks.

3077. Have you had any other cause of complaint? No, I have none. I know nothing at all about the internal arrangements or working of the office; I simply go there to do the duties as a Magistrate, and on some occasions we have not been able to open a second Court at all for want of a deposition clerk.

3078. That is within the last six months? Within the last six months.

3079. Do you recollect, about last Thursday week, being present with Mr. Alderman Speers and Mr. Alderman Smithers? I do.

3080. Do you recollect on that occasion anything being said about a deposition clerk? I remember that I went there at ten o'clock and opened the Court, and remained till twenty-five minutes past ten without a deposition clerk coming in. I sent the officer of the Court

Court once or twice to make inquiries why no deposition clerk was coming, and he returned saying, "He will be here in a moment, sir," each time.

3081. Do you recollect having any conversation with Captain Scott on that day? I did. Perhaps about half an hour afterwards, I gave up the Court to some other Magistrates, to take an adjourned case, and went into another room to open the third Court. The order of the Government was that the office should close at twelve o'clock that day, on account of the rifle match. I met Captain Scott in the Magistrates' room, and I complained to him of the Court having been kept waiting twenty-five minutes, leaving only an hour and a half to get through the whole of the business.

3082. The consequence was that the Court was closed, notwithstanding the desire of the Magistrates to proceed with the business? The Court was closed at twelve o'clock; that was an order of the Government.

3083. By Mr. Cowper: Did any business remain over? Yes; on that day we opened three Courts.

3084. By the Chairman: But you say you have frequently felt the want of a second deposition clerk during the last six months? Yes; I have gone there when there was only one deposition clerk, and only one Court could be opened.

3085. By Mr. Cowper: Are you aware whether the deposition clerks were summoned to any other Courts, to produce papers? I cannot say.

3086. You know nothing of the office arrangements? I do not.

3087. By the Chairman: You say you repeatedly sent in, on the morning you allude to, for a deposition clerk, and were kept waiting nearly half an hour? Yes, perhaps I sent in three times during the twenty-five minutes, perhaps more.

3088. Do you know whether any deposition clerk was in attendance that morning? I do not know. There was one came in at the end of that time. I do not know, of my own knowledge, whether there was one in the office before then, except from the answer Captain Scott made to me when I spoke to him about it.

3089. What answer did he make? When I complained to him, he informed me that Mr. Connell had the management of the department, and that he (Captain Scott) had instructed a clerk of, I think, the name of Delohery, to come in at ten o'clock, but that Mr. Connell would not allow him, but would insist on Mr. Ormiston coming in. This is what Captain Scott said in answer to Mr. Speers, Mr. Smithers, and myself.

3090. Was any reply made to that? I asked Captain Scott, then, who had the management of the department—who were the Magistrates to look to as the head of the department? and he stated that Mr. Connell had been the head of the clerical department. I then told him that I myself should never think of going to Mr. Connell, it was to himself (Captain Scott) that we looked as Police Magistrate, and I said that I thought it was his duty to take the management and responsibility of the office.

3091. Did anything further take place? He then stated that he would do so from the following week, and he went then and sent Mr. Delohery, and we opened the third Court.

3092. Do you recollect any remark being made by one of the Justices, that Captain Scott appeared to be the messenger in Mr. Connell's hands? Well, I cannot positively say anything about that. I remember some remarks were made by Alderman Smithers and Alderman Speers,—something meaning that Captain Scott was under Mr. Connell, but I cannot remember positively what words were made use of.

WEDNESDAY, 22 OCTOBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,

MR. HOSKINS.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain D. C. F. Scott, Police Magistrate, called in and examined:—

3093. By the Chairman: You have been already examined as a witness before this Committee? Yes. Capt. D. C. F. Scott, P.M.

3094. Do you produce some papers that have been called for, in the cases of Constables Gaskin and Mein against Nicholas Ward, and also in the case of Constable Mein against James Sullivan? I have them all here. (Papers produced.) 22 Oct., 1862.

3095. When were these cases tried? On the 3rd of September, 1862.

3096. Before whom? The first two cases, against Nicholas Ward, before me, and the other case before Mr. Armitage.

3097. What was the charge? For assaulting a constable—knocking him down insensible.

3098. Did you make any order? I sent him to gaol for fourteen days in each case.

3099. Did you sign the warrant of commitment? I did.*

3100. In the usual form? In the usual form.

3101. In pursuance of that order, what became of the man? He was taken to gaol.

3102. How long did he remain there? Until the afternoon.

3103. What then became of him? Mr. Cory, his solicitor, came to me and informed me that a telegram had been received from Melbourne, stating that the man's wife was dying and wished to see him; I then altered the fine to £5 in each case, in default fourteen days.

* NOTE (on revision):—I find I committed, but Mr. Peden signed the warrant.

- Capt. D. C. F. Scott, P.M. 3104. That was after — ? When he was in the gaol.
 3105. Without any re-hearing ? Simply upon that one reason.
 3106. What became of the warrant of commitment ? I do not know whether I have got it, or whether it is in the gaol.
 3107. Is it not the fact that you received the warrant of commitment from Mr. Read, and ordered the man's discharge from custody ? I ordered his discharge undoubtedly.
 3108. Did you go to the gaol yourself ? Yes.
 3109. When ? That very evening.
 3110. Or the following day ? No, that very evening.
 3111. At all events, you made an order sentencing the man to fourteen days' imprisonment, which you altered after the man had been sent to gaol ? Yes.
 3112. What became of the case tried before Mr. Armitage ? A fine of 20s. was imposed, in default, levy and distress.* I believe it is not unusual for Judges to sentence, and then alter the sentence.
 3113. You do not happen to be a Judge of the Supreme Court ? I know two cases in which it was done—one by Sir John Dickinson, and the other by Sir Alfred Stephen. In the case of Abraham Polack the sentence was changed from the roads to the gaol, and the same in the case of Battinson Kay.
 3114. James Sullivan was not sent to gaol by you ? No, I do not think so ; I might have signed the warrant, but I did not commit him.
 3115. Did he remain in gaol, or was he discharged ? I cannot tell you.
 3116. That was the case tried before Mr. Armitage ? Yes. I beg to hand in a letter from Mr. Cory relating to this case. (Letter handed in and read. Vide Appendix.)

APPENDIX.

209, York-street,
 Sydney, 21 October, 1862.

Sir,

Understanding that some inquiry is about to be made respecting a person named Nicholas Ward, who was brought before you at the Central Police Court some time since, for an assault on two constables (Mean and another) in Pitt-street, I beg to inform you that a telegram was shown me, purporting to have come from Ward's wife at Melbourne, saying that she was in a dying state, and that she wished to see her husband as soon as possible ; and on my representing that fact to you, and your asking me whether you could inflict a fine or alter the sentence, I then informed you that at any time during the same day you were at liberty, if you thought proper, to alter any sentence ; and under that advice you acted, and which the law so allows you to act.

And this, I think, is sufficient to satisfy any person.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD J. CORY.

D. C. F. Scott, Esq., P.M.

William Elyard, Esq., called in and examined :—

- W. Elyard, Esq.
 22 Oct., 1862. 3117. By the Chairman : You are Under Secretary to the Government ? Yes.
 3118. Do you produce a letter, written to the Colonial Secretary by His Honor Mr. Justice Wise, with reference to the case of Rosanna O'Brien ? Yes. I have also had a copy made of it. I produce the original. (Original produced, and copy handed in. Vide Appendix.) 3119. Is the copy you produce a true copy of this document ? Yes.

APPENDIX.

Supreme Court, Sydney,
 12 April, 1862.

Sir,

I think it right to draw your attention to a proceeding by Captain Scott, the Police Magistrate, which was brought under my notice at the last Criminal Sittings at Darlinghurst, in the course of the trial of Rosanna O'Brien, for murdering her infant child. The prisoner had lived as a servant in the house of Mr. Lazarus, and the child was found in the privy, to which the prisoner had shortly before gone. It lived about twelve hours after it was taken out, and on the following day, as appears by the depositions sent herewith, an inquiry was held by Captain Scott, at the residence of Mr. Lazarus, touching the death of the child. No inquest was directed to be held, or post mortem examination had ; but Captain Scott satisfied himself with taking the evidence of several witnesses on oath, in the absence of Rosanna O'Brien, and without any information being laid against her. At the conclusion of the investigation, Captain Scott wrote on the proceedings :—

" I find that death resulted from the shock to the system by the child being precipitated into the water-closet, and I hereby commit Rosanna O'Brien to take her trial at the next Criminal Court, for concealing the birth of the child.—Signed W. C. F. Scott, P.M."

Thereupon the warrant of committal sent herewith was drawn up, alleging on the face of it that Rosanna O'Brien was charged before Captain Scott with concealing the birth of a child ; and I also find one of the recognizances purports to have been taken before him, as acting Coroner. It appears to me that

* ADDED (on revision) :—Or twenty-four hours in gaol. The fine was paid in the morning, and he was not sent to gaol.

that the blunders made in this transaction must have arisen from some strange misconception on the part of the Police Magistrate as to his powers and duties, which, if entertained and acted upon in other cases, and by other Magistrates, may lead to serious consequences—on the one hand by exposing persons to illegal imprisonment, and on the other by facilitating the escape of the guilty, by the omission of the means provided by law for taking and preserving legal evidence.

W. Elyard,
Esq.

22 Oct., 1862.

The blunders committed on this occasion were:—

First.—The omission to direct an inquest; or, if Captain Scott intended to act as a Coroner, in assuming to do so without a jury.

Second.—The taking evidence, as upon a criminal charge, against an absent prisoner.

Third.—Committing that person for trial for an offence with which she had never been charged, and as to which she had had no opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses, and had never been called upon for her defence.

Fourth.—Stating in the warrant of committal that she had been charged with that offence before him, which was not the case.

Fifth.—In not directing an information to be laid against her on which she could have been committed after a legal investigation.

It should always be borne in mind by Justices and Coroners, that a Coroner has no power to commit for concealment of birth, but upon the verdict of a jury he may commit for murder or manslaughter. A Magistrate, on the other hand, who has made an inquiry, and believes that there is ground of suspicion against any person, cannot commit at all, but should direct an information to be laid in due form against the suspected person, and then, after public inquiry, a committal or discharge may take place.

When the witnesses are examined in a legal manner, the depositions of any witness, duly taken under Sir John Jervis's Act, may be read in evidence at the trial, in case of the death of any witness or absence from illness. In like manner, by 14 Vict., No. 43, s. 16, the deposition of any witness called by the prisoner may be read at the trial, in case of the death of the witness. None of these statutes apply to magisterial inquiries, and it is doubtful even whether there is any power of compelling the attendance of witnesses at such an examination.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD WISE.

The Honorable
The Colonial Secretary,
&c., &c.

Mr. John Cecil Read called in and examined:—

3120. By the Chairman: You are Principal Gaoler at Darlinghurst? I am.

3121. Do you recollect, some time in the month of September last, a person named Nicholas Ward being committed to gaol for fourteen days, by order of the Police Magistrate? I have some faint recollection of it. Had I been prepared for it I could have got the particulars from the books before I left the gaol.

Mr. J. C. Read,

22 Oct., 1862.

3122. Can you state how long he remained there? If it was the man I have heard of this morning, since I have been here, he was only a few hours in the gaol; he was discharged about 8 o'clock on the night he came in; he came in between 4 and 5 o'clock, and was discharged between 8 and 9 the same evening. The man I refer to was sent in for an assault on the police. I recollect Mr. Cory, the attorney, coming there with Captain Scott, and the man was then discharged on payment of a fine of £10.

3123. What became of the warrant of commitment? It is in the gaol now.*

3124. The man was committed for fourteen days? Yes, without fine in the first instance.

3125. Did you ever hear of any other Magistrate acting in a similar way? I cannot recollect any instance.

3126. Have you had occasion to complain about the warrants of commitment not being sent up to your department in proper time? No; I merely requested that they would send the prisoners up earlier. The warrants come in with the prisoners.

3127. At what time are the prisoners usually sent to you from the Central Police Office? Between 4 and 5 o'clock. I merely requested that they should be sent up as early as possible, so that I could have them washed before they went to bed; if they go to bed without being washed they dirt their clothes.

3128. To whom did you make that request? I think I made it to the Sheriff and to the Police Magistrate.

3129. Has that request been attended to? They come a little earlier since.

3130. By Mr. Hoskins: I believe you were for some time in the Metropolitan Police in London? I was—for fifteen years.

3131. During that time did you ever hear of cases in which warrants were issued by Magistrates for the apprehension of persons, and afterwards cancelled by those Magistrates, without the persons for whose apprehension the warrants were issued being brought before them? Not of my own knowledge, but I have heard of it—warrants have been handed in where parties had left the country or could not be found, and cases of that kind. I have known some of these warrants to stand over for years.

3132. Have you ever known, in your experience as a police officer, warrants to be issued and not executed, but the parties brought before the Magistrates by summons? No, I never knew such a case as that; because all warrants and summonses, except for some particular reason, are applied for in open Court in London, before any other business is gone into.

3133. Are they applied for here in open Court? No, they are applied for in the office. In London that is the first business before the Magistrate opens the Court for general business.

3134. And in every case, I suppose, a person applying for a warrant for the apprehension of another makes an affidavit before the Magistrate? He does; and after the Magistrate grants warrant or summons the applicant for it is shown into the clerk's office, where it is made out, and then he comes into Court and swears to it, in the presence of the Magistrate.

* NOTE (on revision):—I stated before the Committee that the warrants of Nicholas Ward were at the gaol, which is not correct, as I sent them to the Police Office, with the fines, next morning, and they have not since been returned. There are more warrants issued in Sydney than in London.

- Mr. J. C. Read. 3135. Are the stipendiary Magistrates in the habit of sitting on the Bench during the whole day? They sit from ten o'clock in the morning till five in the afternoon. Each 22 Oct., 1862. Magistrate only sits three days in the week in London.
3136. Are they all barristers? I believe there are only two stipendiary Magistrates in London who have not been members of the legal profession—Mr. Hall, of Bow-street, who is, I believe, a medical man, and Mr. Broughton.* I understand they are obliged now to have had seven years practice at the Bar.
3137. I presume the two gentlemen to whom you have referred were appointed some years ago? They were, long before my time.
3138. Do you think it is an advantage to have lawyers as Magistrates dispensing justice? Decidedly it is.
3139. Do not the decisions of the Police Magistrates of the various Courts around the suburbs of London give general satisfaction? Where a Police Magistrate sits they do; but in the country districts I have heard great complaints of the unpaid Magistrates. I think generally the stipendiary Magistrates give the greatest satisfaction about London, and are even preferred to the Aldermen of the City, who sit at the Guildhall and the Mansion House.
3140. Have not those aldermen always an adviser who is a lawyer, in the Clerk of the Court? They have, and so have the stipendiary Magistrates.
3141. Do you consider that it would be an advantage in the Central Police Court, where a great deal of business is transacted, to have the stipendiary Magistrate a lawyer? I do.
3142. Which do you consider the most important part of the Police Magistrate's duty—sitting on the Bench dispensing justice, or attending to what is called chamber business in his office? I never heard of chamber business in London; everything is done in open Court.
3143. By Mr. Cowper: Granting summonses and informations? Yes, even the summonses issued for the police are applied for again in open Court, even after they are signed by the Police Commissioner, Sir Richard Mayne.
3144. By Mr. Hoskins: Are there always representatives of the press present? Always. I do not know that I have ever known any of the Courts open without one being there; the Times reporter is always there.
3145. Then I infer that, in your opinion, it is desirable that at the Central Police Office in Sydney, where the principal police business is transacted, there should always be a stipendiary Magistrate on the Bench? Decidedly. I have never known another Magistrate interfere in London; when he has sat on the Bench, it has been by the courtesy of the Police Magistrate.
3146. You also think it desirable he should be a lawyer? I do, decidedly; but if I may be pardoned for making the observation, I do not think you will get a competent lawyer for the pay allowed here.
3147. Do you think the fact of the Police Magistrate being a lawyer would tend to facilitate the despatch of business in the Police Office? They get through more business at the London Police Offices.
3148. Are not the stipendiary Magistrates in London very curt and peremptory in their manner towards the legal gentlemen practising in the Police Courts—do they not refuse to let them waste time by long speeches? I do not know that I have ever known them to allow any man to occupy their time more than fifteen or twenty minutes, with the exception of Mr. Clarkson on one occasion.
3149. You have often attended the Police Court here? Yes.
3150. Do you not think there is a great deal of time wasted by long-winded speeches? I think there is.
3151. Would it not, therefore, be desirable to have a lawyer on the Bench who would prevent irrelevant speeches and arguments being used? Certainly.

Robert Scott Ross, Esq., called in and examined:—

- R. S. Ross, Esq.
 22 Oct., 1862. 3152. By the Chairman: You are a Justice of the Peace, and have been so for some years? About ten years.
3153. Have you devoted any portion of your time to the duties of a Justice at the Central Police Office? I have, a great deal of time.
3154. Can you state the mode in which business has been conducted at that office during the past two years? I think till within the last six months it has been unsatisfactory.
3155. Has any improvement taken place within the last six months? I think a great improvement has taken place in the clerical department during the last six months.
3156. In what respect? I think the clerks have attended to their duties better, and are more efficient than they were; and I have not the slightest doubt that it is in consequence of this inquiry.
3157. Do you consider the establishment in perfect working order? I do. If you were to go there as I have done during the last two months, and look at the books, see the way in which which the moneys are accounted for, and the style in which the books are kept, you would say they are kept in a very creditable business-like manner. R. S. Ross, Esq.

3158. By whom are the books you speak of kept? Principally by Mr. Connell and the next clerk to him, Mr. Delohery. I think Mr. Ormiston is one of the most efficient men at a ledger that I have ever known. 22 Oct., 1862.

3159. Mr. Ormiston has been in the office some years? He has.

3160. And is a most efficient clerk? I have always had a high opinion of him.

3161. Do you not consider Mr. Smithers a most efficient deposition clerk? I do, an excellent deposition clerk.

3162. And Mr. Crane also, who is now at the Water Police Office? Yes; I was very sorry to find Mr. Crane removed from the Central Police Office. With Mr. Crane and Mr. Smithers the office would be in first-rate working order. In fact, we could not do without Mr. Smithers, or a man like him.

3163. These gentlemen have been in the office some years? Yes, ever since I knew the office—ten or eleven years.

3164. Have you, during your experience, at any time cancelled a warrant issued for the apprehension of any person? Never.

3165. Do you consider it legal that a warrant should be cancelled after having been placed in the hands of the police for execution? Most certainly not.

3166. Are you desirous of making any statement to this Committee, by way of suggestion, with reference to the working of the Central Police Office? I have for many years been of opinion, in consequence of the numbers of persons that attend there daily requiring summonses, that it is quite impossible for one man to attend to all of them, and at the same time give that attention to the Bench duties which they require.

3167. Do you consider it absolutely necessary that the Police Magistrate should always attend in Court, or as often as possible? I think the Police Magistrate ought to be in Court from 10 a.m. till the business is disposed of. You see in the daily prints the attendance of the Mayor, the Police Magistrate, and six or seven names. Now, I know that were it not for the attendance of a few gentlemen I could name, the office would be at a standstill four days out of the six, and the business of the Court could not be got through.

3168. For want of Magistrates to open a second Court? Not so much for want of Magistrates to open a second Court, for it is generally open, but to remain in Court till the business is over. Magistrates will come, sit for half an hour or an hour; but if one o'clock comes before the business of the Court is finished, it is the most difficult thing possible to get them to come after two o'clock. It was most difficult in the time of Mr. Dowling and Mr. Forbes, and in that respect matters are not a whit better now. No man could work harder than Mr. Dowling did; but if it had not been for a few Magistrates, who do not go there now—for what reason I do not know—he would not have got through the business. And in fact now, if it were not for the Magistrates appointed within the last two or three years, the business would not be got through. I refer more particularly to the Aldermen of the City and some half dozen other gentlemen.

3169. Have you heard complaints made by the public of the delays that take place in the Police Court? Constantly. I have been at the Police Office this morning to settle a matter, and I suppose there were twenty men and women standing round Captain Scott's door, and nobody to attend to them, Captain Scott being here. If the Police Magistrate does not go back, those people will wait probably till one or two o'clock, and then have to come again to-morrow.

3170. By Mr. Hoskins: I should infer that the Police Magistrate is not on the Bench all day? He is not; he cannot be.

3171. By the Chairman: How often does the Police Magistrate attend in Court? When he finds efficient Magistrates there he invariably leaves the Court, to attend to the chamber business in his room.

3172. By Mr. Hoskins: Do you think it desirable that the Police Magistrate should be always presiding in Court? I do.

3173. Do you think it would be an advantage if he were a member of the legal profession? No; I think the qualifications necessary for a Police Magistrate are, that he should be a man of mature age, say forty years or upwards, a man who knows the world, with good common sense and good average abilities. Nothing more is required.

3174. Do you know whether cases are often remanded in the Police Court in consequence of their occupying so much time in the hearing—or is it the fact that cases are frequently remanded from day to day? It has not been so much the case within the last six months as before that. At one time it was a crying evil—some twelve or eighteen months ago.

3176. It has been given in evidence here, that a good deal of time is wasted at the Police Office in this way? It is really not so much the case generally. It all depends upon the Magistrates who are sitting. There are Magistrates who never permit it, but there are others that they always take advantage of. I refer to those Magistrates who are not in the habit of attending regularly.

3177. By indulging in irrelevant arguments? Yes.

3178. Do you not think it would be a great advantage to have a lawyer constantly presiding who would not permit professional men to waste time? No, I do not think a legal man is required at all. I do not think a legal mind is the proper mind for the Police Office; it is not so much law as good common sense which is required.

3179. Are you frequently in the habit of sitting on the Bench? I am, constantly.

R. S. Ross, Esq. 3180. Is there frequently confusion in the Court, from want of sufficient police to preserve order? The same remark will apply to this question as to a former one. If the Magistrates are not up to their work, a constable very often is not there; but Magistrates in the habit of attending there regularly have policemen in the Court, to keep order and prevent confusion there.

TUESDAY, 28 OCTOBER, 1862.

Present:—

MR. COWPER,
MR. LUCAS,

MR. HOSKINS,
MR. CALDWELL.

RICHARD DRIVER, JUNR., ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

His Honor Mr. Justice Wise examined:—

His Honor Mr. Justice Wise. 3181. By the Chairman: You are one of the Judges of the Supreme Court? I am, and previously I was Attorney General for four months.

3182. Do you recollect a case coming before you some short time since in which Rosanna O'Brien was the prisoner? Yes.

3183. Did the depositions in that case come before you? Yes, I make it an almost invariable practice to read the depositions in every case that comes before me, finding it essential—although I know there are differences of opinion upon the point—that the Judge should see the depositions in some stage of the case.

3184. By whom had this prisoner been committed to take her trial? My impression is that she was committed on a warrant by Captain Scott. The depositions would show for themselves whether they were taken at the Police Office, but my impression is that they were not.

3185. Do you recollect addressing a letter to the Colonial Secretary upon the subject? Yes; there were some matters connected with the case which I thought it necessary to commit to paper and forward to the Colonial Secretary. I have with me no copy of that letter, but it would contain a statement of all the particulars that it then seemed to me to be necessary to refer to, in order to draw attention to what appeared to be a current mistake with reference to the powers of Magistrates—an error into which the Police Magistrate had fallen, and one calculated to be of very serious consequence in other cases. I thought it so important a matter, that the Government ought to be acquainted with it, to prevent any such mistake occurring again. My attention was more especially drawn to the matter, having previously learnt, on circuit, that coroners' inquests were being given up; and, entertaining a strong opinion that it is of essential importance that there should be inquiries into the causes of the deaths of persons whose deaths cannot be obviously accounted for, this certainly alarmed me; and when I found that in this particular instance a magisterial inquiry had been substituted, and that powers had been attempted to be used which had no legal existence, I supposed it must arise from some widely pervading mistake in the community, with reference to the powers of Magistrates in such cases. In this particular instance it was the more striking, because it did so happen that no other depositions had been taken—no actual depositions at the Police Office—and consequently, if any of the witnesses had died, their evidence would not have been used against the prisoner, because the evidence taken before Captain Scott was legally no evidence at all. For the details I should prefer referring the Committee to my letter to the Colonial Secretary.

3186. Did it not appear in that case that the evidence had been taken behind the back of the prisoner? I think so. My letter would give all the details connected with the case, but I have not read it since, and do not clearly remember them.

3187. Those details are correctly set out in your letter? Yes.

3188. Do you consider it legal for a Magistrate to order the cancellation of a warrant after it has been placed in the hands of the police for execution? I think I must be allowed to decline answering that question. I think hypothetical opinions on law, given by a Judge, are very undesirable.

3190. Would you issue a warrant in a case of bigamy upon the information of the first wife? If the facts presented to a Magistrate appear to him, primâ facie, to justify the charge, it is in his discretion to take such steps to initiate the proceedings as he may think necessary and proper under the circumstances; but there is no absolute law that I am aware of, to compel him to adopt any particular course. The law recognizes the discretion of the Magistrate.

3191. Should a warrant be granted upon the information of any other than a competent witness? Of course the information should be given by a competent witness.

3192. Would the first wife be a competent witness in a case of bigamy? The law says not, certainly.

3193. By Mr. Lucas: Has it ever come to your knowledge that Magistrates sign warrants in blank, and hand them over to the police, to be filled up and used by them when they think them necessary? Never. I have heard of such things having been done in the old times of the Colony, but it has never been done to my knowledge, and it is clearly illegal.

3194. It has not come within your knowledge that it has been done within the last few months? Certainly not. If a matter of that kind had come before me judicially, I have very little doubt I should have communicated the circumstance to the Government.

3195. You think it a most dangerous practice? Highly dangerous, and utterly subversive of first principles.

3196. It would be a dangerous practice for Magistrates to sign even blank summonses or informations, much less blank warrants? Very dangerous indeed, I think.

3197. Do you think any person who forgets his duty in that way should remain in the Commission of the Peace—a Magistrate who should sign a blank warrant and give it into the hands of a policeman, to ride through the bush and fill it up when he thought proper, when he might imagine, perhaps, that some person had committed a felony? That involves the question as to the amount of legal knowledge that a Magistrate should be required to have. I intended to have made some remarks on the undesirableness of persons being entrusted with the administration of justice who have not had some degree of legal education; but that involves nearly the whole question of unpaid Magistrates.

3198. The gentlemen who commit these offences happen to be paid Magistrates? Indeed.

3199. By Mr. Hoskins: Without any reference to the law of the Colony—and I should be glad to get your opinion on this matter, because different opinions have been given by the legal witnesses examined before this Committee—without reference to the law of the Colony, do you consider it legal for a Magistrate to cancel a warrant issued for the apprehension of any person, unless that person be brought before him? I think the form of your question illustrates the reasons I gave just now for declining to give any opinion; the fact that a difference of opinion exists on the question is a reason in itself why I should not hastily give an off-hand opinion. It is one of those points that do not often present themselves, and it is undesirable that a Judge should give an opinion upon it, because probably more weight will be attached to it than it deserves, the argument not having been presented before him at all. However, my off-hand impression would be, that it was not right that, having issued the warrant, the Magistrate's ministerial duty had been performed, and was at an end. (Vide Appendix A.) But at this moment I could not say whether in Jervis's Acts there is or is not any provision for it. Without referring to Jervis's Acts I could not say that there is not.

3200. Would you consider, without reference to the Act, that such a practice might lead to great abuses? Undoubtedly.

3201. Might it not even lead to compounding felony? Undoubtedly. My personal impression would be that it would be a very dangerous thing.

3202. I apprehend you are of opinion that a Magistrate ought not lightly to grant a warrant without being assured that there were good grounds for granting it? The grounds for granting a warrant are set out in Jervis's Act. At the same time, it is impossible to give any general opinion of that kind, discretion varies so infinitely. For instance, supposing a Magistrate is informed by A, that B had actually threatened to do so and so; it may turn out to be a mistake, or a hoax even, and then one might say, judging after the event, what a silly thing it was to think of it. The Magistrate must use his discretion, and so much is left to his discretion that the Supreme Court has refused to order Magistrates to grant a warrant; they say it is a matter for their discretion—if one refuse it, another may grant it; but at the same time, the Courts have punished Magistrates, upon any proof of misconduct, as may be seen by the reports of cases in the Court of Queen's Bench.

3203. Do you know anything of the practice of the stipendiary Magistrates in and around London? I do not, except that my impression—derived not from personal attendance, but from general sources of information—is, that the stipendiary Magistrate in each Court does all the work himself.

3204. I was going to ask whether you know what is their practice with reference to the issuing of warrants? I do not.

3205. You do not happen to know whether the stipendiary Magistrates are very chary in issuing warrants? I do not. I have no knowledge of it at all.

3206. Then you cannot say whether warrants are granted by these Magistrates in open Court, or in a private room? Constantly in a private room. The very object of obtaining a warrant would be defeated if it were applied for in open Court. If you were to publish to the world that you were going to arrest A, of course A would take care to be out of the way.

3207. Is it your opinion that the presiding Magistrate required to adjudicate in the Police Court, where a great amount of business is transacted, should be a lawyer? Undoubtedly.

3208. What do you think would be the advantages to be gained by having a lawyer presiding in this Court? A Police Magistrate in a city like this, referentially to the number of persons affected by his decisions, has more in his power than any Judge of the Supreme Court. He decides and disposes of matters connected with property, with character, with the liberty of numbers of individuals, who, from their position, from their being deprived of the ordinary means of legal assistance, and their ignorance, are very much unprotected, and are also liable to suppose that they are not fairly treated. A Magistrate, by his oath, which simply states his duty, undertakes to discharge the duties of his office "according to the laws and statutes of the realm and of this Colony." (See 20 Victoria, No. 9.) But as the greater number of the Magistrates are necessarily engaged in business, and many of them have had insufficient education, it follows, that though they have raised themselves in society and have been appointed Magistrates, they are not fully qualified to fulfil those judicial duties that devolve on them day by day. A lawyer, however, has been educated in a special manner; and though as a paid Magistrate he may make a mistake, if he does there is direct responsibility for his blunders, and we have a right to expect from a person who is a lawyer, and paid, that he shall devote his mind and study to the subject matter. He has no excuse for ignorance, from his other occupations, or from want of education; and therefore a succession of serious blunders would amount to misconduct. With an unpaid Magistrate these blunders are not spoken of—you do not interfere with them—you do not even complain of them. I never heard of an unpaid Magistrate being removed because he had made a mistake or blunder, or avowed himself ignorant of the law. The only thing he is ever removed for, if at all, would be for actual corruption, or actual misconduct. And further, I think a lawyer, from the very nature of his education, has a certain amount of professional pride, over and above the desire of each man to do his duty. That applies, I believe, in every profession. He would, therefore, other things being equal, show a greater eagerness, zeal, and desire to ascertain what the law was, and to administer it properly. I should also add, that with a lawyer as a paid Magistrate, you have a continuity of character; you have no vacillation beyond the ordinary vacillation that every person is liable to, of taking different views at different times. But with different Magistrates, varying from day to day, there is absolutely no basis of certainty whatsoever; justice is administered without the slightest regard to what has been decided previously. No one Magistrate thinks himself bound by another Magistrate's decision. You get a much greater security for uniformity in dealing with offences if you have a paid and legal Magistrate attending regularly on the Bench, than when you have unpaid Magistrates, without legal knowledge, attending at uncertain times. In the management of the office, also, there is direct responsibility, and punctuality, which is of the greatest importance, can be enforced, which cannot be the case when the Magistrates are bound by no absolute duty to attend; you do not know against whom to complain, practically, if delays occur. And then, with reference to knowledge of the law, it is quite a misapprehension for persons to suppose they can become qualified to administer justice, "according to the law and statutes," by instinct. The experience of all countries is, that as population increases they must have paid Magistrates. It is found to be so throughout England, in all the towns of any importance. No doubt there are reasons, in other states of society, to show that country Justices are a very useful institution; but these reasons fail when you come to administer justice to a population centred together in numbers, where the personal influence of the Magistrate has ceased, and where you have to provide for what is not the rare cases here and there, but the continual daily administration of justice throughout the community. It is of the greatest importance in another way. It may be thought sometimes that rough justice is done, and that the rest is of no consequence. It is very possible it may be so; but there is great evil attending it. If mistakes are made, the poor man suffers, the rich man does not; he can appeal—he can get it rectified; the poor man, practically, cannot; and the result is, that a species of despotic power is necessarily exercised—under no responsibility—really greater as to its consequences, as I said before, relatively to the numbers of persons affected, than that of a Judge of the Supreme Court. The influence, I mean to say relatively upon the litigants may be of more lasting importance. There is another reason, perhaps, that fairly comes in. My attention was immediately drawn to it by a matter that arose before me at Darlington, the circumstances of which are detailed in the first number of the Supreme Court Law Reports, page 51. There seemed to be some personal feeling in this particular matter, and the question arose whether a witness had asked a particular Magistrate to sit in the case at the Police Office. It was objected that he could not be asked the question. I ruled that he could, on the ground that it was an attempt improperly to interfere with the administration of justice; and the question was answered in the negative. He was then asked this question, whether he had not heard a previous witness ask the Magistrate to sit in the case. He denied it. It was then proposed to contradict him. This was objected to. But after hearing argument, I ruled that he could be contradicted. I said,—“It appears to me that the object of asking a particular Magistrate to sit must be to secure the presence of a person who will not act impartially. I am aware that the evidence may relate to the character of another person, but the misconduct is not the misconduct of the Magistrate, who is merely asked to sit, but of the person who thus attempts to pack the Bench, and thereby interfere with the administration of justice.” It turned out that the evidence did not show what was expected, but it confirmed what I had previously heard to the same effect, that this practice of packing the Bench was frequent. I can only speak of common rumour, and I am quite aware that slander may be directed against Magistrates sitting at a Police Court, as well as against Judges, and therefore, whether it is true or not I cannot tell; but the existence of a system by which a number of Magistrates attend at uncertain intervals, and irregularly, gives an opportunity for persons to say that they come there for a particular reason.

3209. It has been stated, in evidence, before this Committee? If the fact be so, I can imagine no greater curse to the community than that there should be a widespread feeling that justice is not administered in the Police Court fairly, or, according to the oath taken by Magistrates, “without fear, favour, or affection.” If a man goes deliberately to sit in a particular case because his friend is concerned in it, the parties against whom his decision was given could not feel that it was given uninfluenced by fear, favour, or affection. If a paid Magistrate is there regularly doing his work, that evil cannot exist, or the suspicion cannot exist, and it is very important to the administration of justice that it should be so regulated, if possible, as to prevent the suspicion of unfairness, even though things may be perfectly fair. On that particular ground, it seems to me, of the greatest importance to the community that the administration of justice should bear a uniform and continuous character; and this can only be the case when the bench is occupied regularly by a person whose habits, train of thought, and education, would make him familiar with the principle, amongst others, that no person who sits to decide a case of any kind shall be interested in the matter in any way. There is, I believe, considerable misapprehension in the community with reference to people being interested in matters connected with the administration of justice; I do not think the question is understood in the way it should be; and my reasons are these: I believe it is a matter of fact—certainly I have been told by individuals themselves of high personal character—that when appointed as arbitrators, each party appointing one, the arbitrators look upon themselves as the partisans of the persons appointing them, not being in the least aware that an arbitrator is placed precisely in the position of a Judge, and that his decisions are received implicitly, on matters of evidence or fact, because he is a Judge, and has acted impartially; and therefore, for any person to suppose that as an arbitrator, he is to be guided by any feeling of interest, is quite contrary to the first principles that should regulate the administration of justice. Another fact will show the grounds of my opinion:—It once happened to me that, in a case in which I appeared as an appellant, one of the gentlemen sitting to decide the appeal was a person avowedly largely interested in the rates against which I was appealing; but it had never occurred to anyone up to that moment that it was wrong that he should be sitting in these cases. I thought it right, on public grounds, to make the objection; and the reason given for his being there was, “Oh! he knows all about it.” I said that was just the reason why he should not sit. But it evidently had not occurred to anyone, that every one of their decisions could have been, and would have been upset, if a reference had been made to the Supreme Court, and it could be shown that a person had taken part in them who was interested. I have here an extract from a decision of the House of Lords, laying down the principles that bear upon this question, which, if the Committee think it worth while to insert it in the evidence, is at their service. It was a case in which the Lord Chancellor had heard a cause in which he was remotely interested. He had one share in the Canal Company, against whom the suit was brought, and the House of Lords reversed his judgment, Lord Campbell making these remarks:—“No one can suppose that Lord Cottenham could be, in the remotest degree, influenced by the interest that he had in this concern; but, my Lords, it is of the last importance that the maxim that no man is to be a judge in his own cause should be held sacred; and that is not to be confined to a cause in which he is a party, but applies to a cause in which he has an interest. Since I have had the honor to be Chief Justice of the Courts of Queen’s Bench, we have again and again set aside proceedings in inferior tribunals, because an individual who had an interest in a cause took a part in the decision; and it will have a most salutary influence on these tribunals, when it is known that this high Court of last resort, in a case in which the Lord Chancellor of England had an interest, considered that his decree was, on that account, a decree not according to law, and was set aside. This will be a lesson to all inferior tribunals to take care, not only that in their decrees they are not influenced by their personal interest, but to avoid the appearance of labouring under such an influence.” (Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Company. 3 House of Lords Cases.) The principles here laid down seemed to me so valuable that I have made this extract for the use of the Committee. In a community like this, however, Magistrates must be left in a great degree to their own good sense, whether they do sit or do not sit in cases in which they are interested; for there are many cases in which, though parties directly interested are prohibited by statute from sitting in certain cases, yet the prohibition does not go to the full extent. The Publicans’ Act, for instance, prohibits any person being a spirit dealer or proprietor of a public-house from sitting at licensing meetings; but there is nothing to prohibit him from sitting in a case in which his tenant or customer is defendant. The Magistrate may be furnishing goods to the very individual who is charged. It may be a baker brought up for a breach of the Bread Act, and the Magistrate may be supplying him with flour; or he may be a grocer or spirit dealer supplied by the Magistrate on the bench with the commodities in which he deals. Under a system by which justice is administered by unpaid Magistrates you cannot avoid the liability to such things as these; and if you have a suspicious community, the persons liable to the jurisdiction of a Bench so constituted very naturally say that they have not had justice, because Mr. So-and-so was on the bench. I think that the effect is almost as bad, whether the suspicion be true or false, and on that ground my own private opinion is very strong indeed that we should avoid the administration of criminal justice in that mode. Then there is another point which is worth referring to. I believe attorneys practising in the Police Courts have greater opportunities of doing injury to their clients, and oppressing them, than they have before any other tribunal, because of the ignorance of many of the persons who are suitors or defendants there. In the judgment of the Supreme Court, delivered in the case of Moffat against White, page 141 of the Supreme Court Reports, I thus expressed myself with reference to the general question of attorney and client:—“The Legislature looks upon laymen as requiring protection, and it would be most grievous if that protection were not to be extended to a class of persons whose position and circumstances at all times cause them to be most strongly influenced by the passions of hope and fear; and who, when under criminal charges especially, would seem to require all the protection which the law endeavours to afford against oppression and extortion.” I think that a Police Magistrate, a lawyer, sitting in the Court daily, would be better able than unpaid Justices to watch that the proceedings of the Court were not turned into the means of oppression or extortion in any way. He would, for example, be more alive to the evils arising from continual adjournments.

3210. Have you not heard that there are frequent complaints on that ground? I only speak speaking from rumours, which may or may not be true, that adjournments are exceedingly common. I know perfectly well, from experience in my own Court, that these things have to be constantly watched over, and that they do require the interposition of the Court, not only here but elsewhere. I recollect the Courts of Westminster making a rule that no case should be adjourned from one term to another without a motion in open Court consented to. That is a matter which can be better guarded against by a person continually there than by Justices attending irregularly. Another reason for having the duty done by permanent Magistrates would be, that their moral influence would be much greater. Advocates who practise before a Court of a fixed nature learn that a good deal may depend upon the opinion which the Court entertains of them; and if the Court is of a fixed and continuous nature, its moral weight must be stronger than that of a judicature changing from day to day. There is a marked illustration of what I have been saying as to the uncertainty incident to the system, if the report be true that I have seen in the paper this morning, of an application having been made at the Police Court yesterday, by Mr. Moffat, to be allowed to practise there as an agent, notwithstanding his having been struck off the Rolls, when he stated that he should apply to every Bench of Magistrates, because no Bench is bound by what the others say. That is a practical illustration of the desirability of having a continuity in the judicial administration. With reference also to professional advice in the Police Court, I cannot help thinking that there has been great ignorance in the public mind as to the law with reference to the employment of professional men. We had to decide, in the case of Moffat against White, that an attorney cannot recover in respect of services as an attorney, without delivering his bill; that is to say, he is in precisely the same position in the Police Court as everywhere else. Matters of that kind would be more likely to present themselves to a lawyer than they would to a Magistrate who was not a lawyer. Before that decision the impression seemed to be, that any body at the Police Office was entitled to get anything he could for his services, and that his bill could not be taxed; but the law is not so. It is also to be remembered, that a Magistrate whose duty is continuous, is more likely to be interested in the character of his Court, and to endeavour to fit himself for the position. No Justices sitting irregularly can, in the nature of things, as it seems to me, feel that so strongly. I think also that advocates and attorneys practising before a Court of continuous character would soon know how far they could go, and how far they could not go; whereas, with Magistrates shifting from day to day, they would, in common parlance, try it on.

3211. Have you ever heard that a great deal of time is wasted in the Police Court by irrelevant argument? I should judge that that must be so; but charges of the same kind are often made against every Court.

3212. I think I understood you to say that you had heard that a great many cases were adjourned? I have heard statements of that kind repeatedly, and that these adjournments do work very serious injury to the suitors. Of course adjournments cannot be altogether prevented, but still they should be as infrequent as possible.

3213. Do you not consider that business would be expedited by having a lawyer on the bench who would prevent any irrelevant argument? He would be more able to do it, but there is always a difficulty. It happens in every Court that arguments are addressed to the Bench which are clearly against law; but if the Judge knows that a point has been decided, of course it is no use for the advocate to argue it any more; and it is much more likely that a person qualified to fill the post would step in, in such a manner as that, than that persons not educated to it would do so. When I was Attorney General, one of the things I did was, to send a circular to all the Benches throughout the country, to ascertain in what way they were furnished with books for their guidance; because I felt in my own mind that, not being educated to a knowledge of the law, they should at any rate have it to refer to; and the answers I received displayed at that time (I believe it has been remedied since in some degree) the most lamentable absence of everything that could give them any information whatever. My intention at the time was to have endeavoured to supply them with necessary books of reference, and that has been done, I believe, to some extent since. As an illustration of the assistance that might be given in this way, I have before me Reports of Cases decided in the Supreme Court, now being published by Messrs. Wilkinson and Owen, involving a considerable number of cases on Magistrates' law. If the Police Courts were supplied with these they would be able to refer to decisions of the Supreme Court, in many cases similar to those that come before them—as for instance, under the Impounding Act, the Publicans' Act, and others; and their course would be plain, and many mistakes might be avoided.

3214. Can you say whether there are fewer convictions in the Supreme Court here, in proportion to the number of committals, than in the Criminal Courts in England—in London especially? I could not give an answer to that question. But there is one matter in connection with the subject which I am glad to have an opportunity of bringing before the notice of the Committee. I had intended to bring it under the notice of the Attorney General, but perhaps if I state it here it will reach him. Since I have been on the bench, I have never tried a single case in which a man has been indicted as having committed an offence after a former conviction. The law, however, specially provides for that, with the express object of heavier punishment being given to twice or thrice convicted offenders than to persons committing a first offence. I have never tried a single case in which that has been done; and yet one knows, as a matter of fact, that a great number of persons who make their appearance in the Criminal Courts have been tried and convicted for different offences at former periods. It seems to me that the law should be followed up in that respect, and that twice, or thrice, or oftener convicted offenders, should be tried as such, when their former convictions have taken place within the Colony—for of course we have nothing to do with offences out of the Colony. How the present practice has arisen I do not know, but I suppose the difficulty of communication between different parts of the country in former times had something to do with it, but now that communication between the principal towns is becoming so easy, there would be little difficulty in many instances, and not much additional expense, in having that additional evidence. It is very material, I think, when we have such a class of crimes as have lately been prevalent.

His Honor
Mr.
Justice Wise.
28 Oct., 1862.

3215. Do you know whether the convictions are very numerous, and, in fact, acquittals very rare, in cases of committals from the Police Courts in and around London to the Central Criminal Court? No, I have not studied the statistics at all. The impression on my mind is, that the effect of the numerous small Criminal Courts in this country of late years has been to diminish the number of convictions.

3216. Do you happen to know whether the Police Magistrates who preside in the various Police Courts in and around London are barristers or lawyers? Nearly every one, I think; I do not at this moment recollect one that is not.

3217. Is it not a fact that their decisions, and the manner in which the business of their Courts is conducted, have met with the general approval of the public, and also of the profession? I believe so.

3218. Are you aware whether it is the fact, that the Grand Juries at the Central Criminal Court have on several occasions passed resolutions, which they have transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, asking that Grand Juries might be dispensed with, in consequence of the decisions of the Police Magistrates being so very correct, and their labours therefore unnecessary? Yes; and a Bill was brought into the House of Commons to dispense with Grand Juries in the County of Middlesex, in consequence of the abuse to which they were exposed on the one hand, and their non-necessity on the other.

3219. In consequence of the legal attainments of the persons presiding in the Police Courts? Yes; and the whole system of Grand Juries being in fact suited to another state of society.

3220. By the Chairman: Have you any other suggestions to make to the Committee? I would make one general remark, that even the progress and material wealth of the country will depend upon, or be intimately connected with, the administration of justice with certainty and purity. If you can by that means gradually permeate the minds of the community at large with a sense of justice, it will influence them indirectly even beyond the actual result of the immediate decision; and therefore, I think, the subject of your inquiry of vast importance.

3221. By Mr. Hoskins: Would you recommend that the Police Magistrate presiding at the Central Police Court should be a member of the legal profession of some position and standing? He should. I would also add, that it is of very great importance that the persons employed as clerks should be persons of competent attainments; I do not mean to say they should be lawyers; but a great deal does depend upon the clerks in the Police Courts; their position is one of great importance, and they have a very great deal in their power indirectly. I speak without reference to any individual personally, for I know nothing of any of them. Especially in what is called taking depositions, I have daily opportunity of seeing the necessity for accuracy and care. Very much may depend upon that, because by law, in all criminal cases, if a witness is unable to attend at a trial, from death or illness, the depositions are made evidence without the personal appearance of the witness, and they may weigh most strongly against the prisoner, or, on the other hand, in his favour, if they have not been taken down properly. Care and accuracy in taking depositions is even more necessary now than before, because, in consequence of a recent change in the law, parties are entitled to cross-examine witnesses as to former statements without putting them in evidence, and time is frequently taken up with very lengthy examinations as to what was said at the Police Office or what was omitted from the depositions. It is therefore very necessary to the proper working of the machinery of criminal justice, that the clerks should be competent and intelligent, and for that reason that they should have adequate salaries.

3222. Have you been frequently in the habit of perusing depositions taken at the Central Police Court? Yes.

3223. Are they generally taken correctly? Some of them are taken very well; but I had in my mind more particularly some depositions taken in the country. There were some that came before me from one of the country police offices, when I was last at Bathurst on circuit, that were exceedingly bad; in fact, I drew the attention of the Crown Prosecutor to them.

3224. By the Chairman: You say some of the depositions from the Central Police Office are taken very well? Yes, there is evidently a difference between them.

3225. Do you consider that a Police Magistrate should devote as much of his time as possible to Bench duties? Yes, they should be exclusively his duties, I think. That reminds me of another advantage of having a paid Magistrate, that he would know the characters of particular individuals who come before him—persons who may be receivers of stolen goods, or persons of notoriously bad character, who might make successfully a particular defence before a Magistrate before whom they appeared for the first time, but unavailingly if the same defence had been brought up twenty times previously before a Police Magistrate who would know what the value of it was. With reference to what I have just said respecting clerks, I might add, that I think a practice might be adopted with benefit, as regards clerks at the Police Office, similar to that pursued when a recent appointment was made in the Supreme Court. There might be a species of competitive examination. A certain knowledge should be required. In that particular instance Mr. Cowper requested two or three gentlemen to inquire into the capacity of the candidates, and report. Then, with reference to what I have called “packing the Bench.” If there is only one Police Magistrate, and two Courts are open, the responsibility and duty should entirely devolve upon him of settling what cases should be taken before him, so that it should

His Honor
Mr.
Justice Wise.
28 Oct., 1862.

should not be in the power of any Magistrates to say, we will take this case or that case. What we may call making out the list should devolve solely upon the Police Magistrate.
3226. By Mr. Hoskins: Which do you consider the most important duty appertaining to the office of Police Magistrate—issuing summonses, granting warrants, and hearing informations, or dispensing justice on the bench? Dispensing justice on the bench, certainly.
3227. And therefore I infer, you consider the Police Magistrate should be on the bench all day? Yes.

APPENDIX.

In Barrons v. Luscombe, 3 Adolphus and Ellis. This question arose as to a warrant of distress under a statute for a balance of account, but it was not decided. Lord Denman, C.J., said, "After that settlement the Magistrates had no right to rescind their decision." Littledale, J., says, "They had no right to suspend on account of a supposed mistake. If it had appeared that they had made a wrong inference as to the fact of a refusal to pay, I will not say whether they might or might not have countermanded their warrant." Patterson, J., says, "The doubt all along on my mind has been as to the general question, whether the warrant could, in any case, be revoked, upon its being discovered that it had issued improperly. I do not say whether it could, or could not; no authority goes the length of determining this point, and if it were now necessary to enter into the general question, I should wish for more time to consider it." Williams, J., says, "I need not give any opinion how far, upon the discovery of a mistake in matter of fact, the Justices would have power to withdraw their warrant."

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

POLICE MAGISTRATE FOR GUNNEDAH.
(INHABITANTS.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 26 August, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of Gunnedah and the immediate neighbourhood,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

1. That Gunnedah is the medium of traffic on the great highway to that large tract of pastoral territory lying north-west of Liverpool Plains, in continuation of the line of road from Maitland, the head of the navigation, and has sprung into importance chiefly within the last three or four years, lands having been since then freely bought up and built upon, and in many instances a very considerable outlay has been made in improvements.

2. That the Town of Gunnedah and neighbourhood now number some five hundred inhabitants, and contain two hundred tenements, dwelling-houses, and places of business of various trades and callings, and bids fair to preserve a steady and continued progression.

3. At present Gunnedah is included in the District of Tamworth, distant fifty miles, having no interests in common with that town, and consequently deprived of the advantages accruing from the establishment of District Courts, and are unable to avail themselves of the objects for which these were constituted, namely, the bringing cheap and speedy justice within the reach of all.

4. This Township of Gunnedah is the great centre of a large and rich tract of populous country, and being so distant from Tamworth, and also seventy miles from Murrurundi, at both of which places District Courts are held, and at the former also a Court of General Sessions, the separation of this place and establishment of these desiderata, would be a boon of incalculable benefit to persons within a circuit of nearly one hundred miles.

5. Your Petitioners would urge upon your Honorable House the absolute necessity which exists for the appointment of a Stipendiary or Police Magistrate, a functionary which cannot longer be dispensed with, unless to the imminent peril of the public weal, and of the speedy punishment of crime, there being only two local Magistrates, both residing at a distance from the Town, and on the opposite side of the Namoi River, which at times, not unfrequently, is so swollen as to prevent their crossing to the Court House.

6. The major part of the magisterial duty is and has been performed by our respected fellow-townsmen and Clerk of Petty Sessions, Mr. Thomas Forster, who fortunately is in the Commission of the Peace, and has efficiently and impartially performed his duties, so far as he has been able, but not being a Police Magistrate, it has frequently occurred that cases requiring the presence of a second Magistrate could not be gone into, because of the impossibility to command one;—thus are the ends of justice in danger of being frustrated, and crime unpunished.

In conclusion, your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to take the premises into your favourable consideration, with a view to the obtaining of the advantages sought and so long needed and agitated in this community.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

POLICE REGULATIONS.

(PETITION OF WILLIAM PALMER MOFFAT.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 25 September, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament at Sydney assembled.

The Petition of William Palmer Moffat, of Sydney, Attorney and Solicitor of the Supreme Court of New South Wales,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

1st. That during this present month he was retained to, and did defend, one William Ford, at the Central Police Court, Sydney, charged with attempting to pick a man's pocket of a knife, upon the Randwick Racecourse.

2nd. That no other property of any kind was alleged to have been missed from the pocket but the knife; and upon the arrest of the said William Ford on that charge, nine pounds in money, a watch, a glazier's diamond, and other property in no way connected with the offence, were taken from him by the Police, and produced in Court when examined before the Magistrates.

3rd. The prosecutor as well as the apprehending officer stated on oath before the Magistrates, that the property mentioned (except the knife) was in no way connected with the charge, whereupon Petitioner moved the Court to order that property to be delivered up to the prisoner, as he had no other means of defending himself against the charge, but upon the application of the Police, who claimed it under the Police Rules of 1862, it was refused to be given up.

4th. That on referring to the 74th to 80th Rules inclusive, established on 1st March last, for the general management and discipline of the Members of the Police Force of the Colony, by His Excellency, with the advice of the Executive Council, and under which the Police claimed the property referred to, Petitioner discovers that the common law rights of individuals are not only abridged, but even one of these Rules enacts and declares what is to become of certain property found upon prisoners after conviction.

5th. That the power to make any such Rule to take away a prisoner's common law rights was, it is believed, not contemplated by your Honorable House, nor could it have been contemplated that any but property in some way connected with the charge, found upon a prisoner, should be taken from him and detained by the Police when power to pass these Rules was granted; nor could it have been contemplated that the prisoner should not have had the reasonable control of his property in no way connected with any charge against him for the purposes of his defence.

6th. That the 74th and 80th Rules inclusive, are calculated, unless explained and restricted, to operate most prejudicially upon parties under certain circumstances, by leaving it too much to the discretion of an apprehending constable to deprive a prisoner of all his property, and prevent him from being defended against such charge as may be brought against him.

May it therefore please your Honorable House to take the premises into consideration, and to grant such relief as may seem fit.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

W. P. MOFFAT.

(Mr. Saddleir.)

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

*Inspector General's Office,
Sydney, 8 October, 1862.*

SIR,

In compliance with the instructions conveyed in your letter of the 2nd instant, I have the honor to transmit Returns containing the information required by the 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th paragraphs of the Address carried in the Legislative Assembly on the 30th ultimo.

2. The Criminal Statistics, called for by the 1st and 2nd paragraphs, must be collected in the country districts, through the officers in charge,—involving a probable delay of some weeks. I therefore consider it advisable to forward the information prepared at once, with the understanding that the Returns “wanting to complete” shall be sent in at the earliest possible date.

I have, &c.,

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

THOMAS DUKE ALLEN.

(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 21 August, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of Thomas Duke Allen,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner held the office of Head Gaoler of Parramatta Gaol, for upwards of twenty years.

That during this period, your Petitioner performed the duties of the said office to the general satisfaction of the Government and the Public.

That in one thousand eight hundred and sixty, a Commission was appointed by the Government, at the suggestion of the then Sheriff, Mr. Brennan, to inquire into certain charges against your Petitioner, the result of which was that your Petitioner was honorably acquitted of the said charges.

That the Select Committee of your Honorable House which was, in one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, appointed to inquire into and report upon the state and management of certain public Prisons, paid a visit of inspection to Parramatta Gaol, and subsequently reported favourably of its management under your Petitioner.

That on the twenty-fourth of June last your Petitioner was, by a letter from the present Sheriff, dismissed from the said office, on the ground of having received a fee of £3 ls. 6d. for executing a Writ of Habeas Corpus in the case of John Taylor.

That your Petitioner acknowledges having received the said fee in the said case; but submits, that in receiving it he acted in pursuance of a long established practice, which had prevailed with the knowledge and acquiescence of the Gaol authorities in Sydney and elsewhere.

That your Petitioner, as well as other Gaolers, have frequently received such fees in similar cases.

That in particular, your Petitioner has been credibly informed, that on or about the third of January last, the Head Gaoler of Maitland Gaol lately received a fee of Five pounds from Mr. Teal, Solicitor, for executing a Writ of Habeas Corpus in the case of Arthur Edwards, committed for trial by the Bench of Magistrates at Glen Innes.

That in proof of these allegations, your Petitioner can appeal to the testimony of many respectable Solicitors in Sydney and elsewhere.

That your Petitioner was never cautioned against receiving, or prohibited to receive such fees in such cases.

And your Petitioner, feeling that he has been harshly and unjustly dealt with, appeals to your Honorable House in consideration of his long services, and prays your Honorable House, upon the premises, to take such steps in your Petitioner's behalf as the justice of the case may require.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

THOMAS DUKE ALLEN.

MR. THOMAS DUKE ALLEN.

No. 1.

SHERIFF to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

Sydney, 3 June, 1862.

SIR,

Mr. Hargrave having brought under my notice that the Gaoler at Parramatta had made a charge of three guineas for executing a writ of habeas corpus, granted on behalf of a prisoner in his custody, I proceeded with that gentleman to the Parramatta Gaol, and finding the matter substantiated in the presence of Mr. Allen, I deemed it my duty to suspend that officer.

2. I refrained from reporting until this evening, to allow Mr. Allen time to prepare any statement he might desire to place before the Government, relative to this very unpleasant matter.

I have, &c.,
GEO. UHR,
Sheriff.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 1.]

H. M. Gaol, Parramatta,
2 June, 1862.

Edward Taylor: On Saturday last I brought a writ of habeas corpus to Mr. Allen, to bring my son to Sydney; he told me he could not bring him without I gave him three guineas; I gave him £3 1s. 6d., and he (Mr. Allen) said he must have those too; I then gave him (Mr. Allen) the five pennies, in copper, making in all £3 1s. 11d.; Mr. Allen said that was always his fee for taking my son to Sydney; I was told that it was corruptly and fraudulently obtained from me; whereupon I have charged Mr. Allen with corruptly and fraudulently obtaining the above amount.

EDWARD TAYLOR.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 1.]

Parramatta Gaol,
3 June, 1862.

Sir,

With reference to the case of the prisoner Taylor, and my receipt from his father of a sum of £3 1s. 11d., as expenses for bringing the prisoner to Sydney, I have the honor to state that I received that sum, believing that I am entitled to my expenses by law under the Habeas Corpus Act itself. When I was served with the writ, on being asked, I mentioned the sum I always received; and when it is considered that I, being responsible for the safe custody of the prisoner, must accompany him myself, and must pay the travelling expenses of a turnkey and the prisoner, I did not think that sum too much, more particularly having always received that amount from every attorney by whom a writ of habeas corpus has been served on me; in proof of which I beg to enclose certificates from those gentlemen, and also a certificate signed by them, and other members of the legal profession, who have considerable practice in criminal matters, as to the custom on service of writs of habeas.

Having been spoken to on the subject by Mr. Roberts, the solicitor in the matter, I made no demand, and would have taken the prisoner down without receiving any money, knowing that Mr. Roberts would pay me afterwards.

The Sheriff of New South Wales.

I have, &c.,
THOMAS ALLEN,
Gaoler.

(CERTIFICATES.)

We, the undersigned members of the legal profession, do hereby certify that we believe it to be the invariable custom to pay the Governor of the Gaol the expense of bringing out on habeas corpus prisoners in his custody.

I HEREBY certify that I have in all cases wherein I have been employed, paid Mr. Allen, of Parramatta, the sum of three guineas for bringing a prisoner to Sydney on habeas corpus, and I consider that amount a proper charge according to the amounts allowed on taxation for witnesses' expenses; Mr. Allen paying thereout the expenses of travelling and living of himself, the turnkey in charge, and the prisoner.

MINUTE OF COLONIAL SECRETARY.

THIS case is presented in rather an incomplete state; but the Sheriff has personally represented to me that he was in utter ignorance of any such charge being made by the Gaolers—that he considers it illegal and most improper

* * * * *

Before submitting the case to the Executive Council, or taking any further step, I should like to be favoured with the Attorney General's view of it. I am not disposed to consider as of any great moment the certificates of the attorneys if the course is so manifestly wrong as the Sheriff thinks. Mr. Allen's insisting upon the small balance not forthcoming is certainly discreditable in the highest degree, if true.

REPORT OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

THE Gaoler ought to obey the writ, though his fees are not paid; but he was entitled by the 2nd section of the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car 2., c. 2, to insist on payment or tender of the charges of bringing the prisoner from the Gaol to the Court, to be ascertained by the Judge or Court that awarded the writ, and indorsed upon the said writ, not exceeding 12d. per mile; also to require security to be given by the prisoner's own bond to pay the charges of return if remanded, and that he should not escape.

I assume that the proper amount was indorsed and demanded, and that Allen did not disobey the writ under the 5th section; if he disobeyed he would lose his situation and be liable to heavy penalties.

SHERIFF to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 9 June, 1862.

SIR,

In accordance with your request, I have ascertained the opinion, which is, that Gaolers are not entitled to any fees, being salaried officers of the Government. It is further observed that in the absence of an indorsement, the Sheriff's officer obeying the writ of habeas corpus is only to receive the actual expense of travelling and sustenance, which, in the matter under consideration, would be 6s. 10d. A charge beyond this is extortion; the penalty for which is fine and imprisonment, and sometimes forfeiture of office.

I have, &c.,
GEO. UHR,
Sheriff.

I SHALL be glad to know whether the Sheriff recommends Mr. Allen's dismissal; if so, I shall be prepared to carry out his recommendation.

MINUTE OF SHERIFF.

I REGRET being obliged to say that I cannot see anything in the conduct of Mr. Allen in this case to justify my altering my views of the serious nature of the charge brought against him, and I quite concur in the opinion expressed by the Honorable the Chief Secretary, that it is a discreditable transaction.

I should feel disposed to hesitate, did the charge rest upon the mere statements of the parties, as would be the case in an ordinary official inquiry; but two persons having verified the charge upon oath before a legal tribunal, subjected to the cross-examination of an advocate, therefore, painful as it may be, I have no alternative, unless I am ready to believe that deliberate perjury has been committed, which I would not be justified in doing.

In view of the grave responsibility of my office, I cannot recommend a deviation from the course adopted on such occasions.

SHERIFF to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 17 June, 1862.

SIR,

I have the honor to forward for your consideration two communications which I have received, one from Mr. James Byrnes and one from Mr. Allen.

No doubt, as Mr. Byrnes remarks, Mr. Allen has been a long time in the service; and it may be worthy of your consideration under that circumstance, and also seeing that hitherto a very lax system has prevailed, whether the Government can visit the offence with less than the extreme penalty. Although not very material to the question, I have sent to Taylor for an explanation as to the roll of notes.

I have, &c.,
GEO. UHR,
Sheriff.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 7.]

Monday Evening.

My dear Sir,

Allen called upon me this evening, and notwithstanding that he is to blame in this unfortunate affair, I think he is painted much blacker than he deserves. There is a want of candour in Allen which is rather a disadvantage to him; but I think it arises in some measure from either stupidity or gross ignorance, and therefore ought not to prejudice his case to the same extent that it would otherwise do when connected with education, or in other words, a more highly cultivated mind. With all Allen's faults, you will have some difficulty in finding a man fit to take his place; he has some claims upon the Government, which ought to weigh in his favour, and certainly one in particular which cannot be lightly considered—very long service. I told Allen that he had better see you, and tender such evidence as may be necessary to show that he did not send back the man to Sydney to borrow the three guineas, &c., and in any other way that might be necessary to enable you to look more favourably upon his case.

Yours faithfully,

JAMES BYRNES.

Geo. Uhr, Esq.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 7.]

H. M. Gaol, Parramatta,
16 June, 1862.

Sir,

I have the honor to state, in further explanation of this case—Taylor against myself—and can prove to your satisfaction that I never saw Taylor but once before he served me with a writ of habeas corpus, and that was about a week previous; he came to the gate and inquired for me; I went out and asked him what he wanted; he said he had a paper from Mr. Roberts, solicitor, for his son, to sign an authority from his son to employ Mr. Roberts to get him brought to Sydney to have him bailed out, and for me to witness his son's signature, which I first declined to do; he said if I did not do so he would have another journey to Sydney. I then allowed him to see his son and sign the paper, and I witnessed his signature; he then told me he was getting a habeas corpus to bring his son to Sydney, and asked me what my expenses would be; I told him that the solicitors usually gave me three guineas; he went away and made no reply. I happened to be in Sydney a short time afterwards, when Mr. Roberts'

Roberts' clerk—I believe his name is Mr. Smith—came to Mr. Abbott's office and left word there that Mr. Roberts would like to see me in his office before I would leave town. I went to Mr. Roberts' office, but Mr. Roberts was not there at the time. I saw Mr. Smith; he asked me what day would it be convenient for me to bring the prisoner Taylor to Sydney on a writ of habeas corpus. I told him if he would give me twenty-four hours notice, to make a return to the writ, and a copy of his warrant, that I did not care what day. He then asked me what my expenses would be. I told him I usually got three guineas. I heard no more of the case until the Saturday following when, in company with a Mr. Whiteside of this town, coming from my house to the Gaol, this man Taylor came up and took out a habeas corpus and hands it to me saying, "You will have to bring my son to Sydney." I took the writ and read it, and told him I will have him there on Tuesday. He then put his hand into his pocket and took out a roll of notes, and asked me what my expenses was. I told him I usually got three guineas. He then took three one pound notes off the roll and handed them to me. I told him then that would do. He then said, "I have change in my pocket." I told him again that would do. He then said, "I will pay you all." I felt quite sure it was Mr. Roberts or his clerk that sent me the money by Taylor, as he had been speaking to me a few days previous about it. All this happened in the presence of Mr. Whiteside, which he can prove to your satisfaction. He was present when Taylor handed me the writ, and heard what passed between he and I, and saw him take the three one pound notes off the roll of notes and hand them to me.

The Sheriff, Sydney.

MINUTE OF EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

17 June, 1862.

Extract from Minute, No. 62/20. Confirmed, 24 June, 1862.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a Minute Paper by the Honorable the Vice-President, submitting certain documents with reference to a charge against Mr. Allen, the Gaoler at Parramatta, in demanding a fee of three guineas for executing a writ of habeas corpus, granted on behalf of a prisoner named Taylor, and for which he has been suspended from office.

It appears from the statement of Mr. Taylor, the father of the prisoner, that having given Mr. Allen the sum of £3 1s. 6d., the latter required from him a further sum, when he gave him in addition five-pence in copper, which was all he had in his possession.

Mr. Allen's explanation, herewith submitted, does not, in the opinion of the Sheriff, justify his proceedings, and the Honorable the Vice-President therefore recommends that Mr. Allen's suspension be confirmed, and that he be removed from his office.

2. The Council, having carefully considered the circumstances of the case, express their opinion that the charge against the Gaoler is one of a very discreditable nature, which has not been disproved by him, although every opportunity has been afforded for that purpose, and therefore advise that the recommendation of the Honorable the Vice-President be approved and carried into effect accordingly.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 20 June, 1862.

SIR,

I am directed to inform you that your communication respecting the suspension of Mr. Allen, the Gaoler at Parramatta, for his conduct in demanding a sum of three guineas for executing a writ of habeas corpus granted on behalf of a prisoner in his custody, has been submitted to the Executive Council. From the representation of the father of the prisoner, it appeared that, having given the Gaoler £3 1s. 6d., the latter required from him a further small sum of five-pence in copper, which was all he had in his possession. Mr. Allen had been called upon for an explanation, but it appeared from your report that there was not anything in the case to justify his proceedings, and that it was a discreditable transaction.

2. I am further to apprise you that, under your report, His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Council, has been pleased to approve of Mr. Allen's suspension by you, being confirmed, and of his being removed from his office.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, with reference to Edward Taylor having had a roll of notes in his hand at the time of paying Mr. Allen the sum of £3 1s. 11d. as a fee for bringing his (Taylor's) son to Sydney under a writ of habeas corpus.

2. I have not seen Taylor since the day Mr. Allen was at the Police Office in Sydney; I have however sent a constable to him, requesting his attendance at my residence, when I will lose no time in forwarding the required affidavit.

3. I can however assure the Sheriff that such was not the case, and the £3 ls. 11d. was lent to Edward Taylor by me; and further, I had to pay his expenses back to this district.

I have, &c.,

Edward Taylor, of Tumby Umby Creek, in the Police District of Brisbane Water, came before me, the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, this thirtieth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and maketh oath and saith as follows:—My son, George Taylor, was confined in the Parramatta Gaol on remand, charged with stealing a horse, the property of his aunt, Mrs. G. Taylor, and in the month of May last past I visited my said son, for the purpose of obtaining his authority for his solicitor, Mr. Roberts, to sue out a writ of habeas corpus, calling upon Her Majesty's Attorney General to show cause why my said son should not be admitted to bail upon giving good and sufficient security; when there I saw the Gaoler, Mr. Allen, who said to me as follows:—"You will have to give me three guineas, as a fee for taking your son to Sydney, when you bring the writ"; I asked him what the charge of £3 3s. sterling was for? Mr. Allen replied, "It is my fee for taking your son to Sydney, and I mostly get £5 5s."; I further say I was not possessed of the sum required, and went to Mr. Hargraves to borrow it, as also to pay Mr. Roberts for suing out the writ; Mr. Hargraves told me that Mr. Allen was not entitled to any fee whatever, and was bound to produce my son, in accordance with the writ, but if Mr. Allen still demanded the amount aforesaid, or any other amount, to pay it in presence of a witness; and I further say that I went to Parramatta with a writ of habeas corpus, signed by one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, and delivered the said writ to Mr. Allen, in my mother's presence; when Mr. Allen said, "Well, where are the three guineas?" I put my hand into my pocket and pulled out the sum of three pounds one shilling and sixpence, and five pence in copper money; I handed the three pounds and one shilling and sixpence to Mr. Allen, who then said, "What is that you have in your hand?" I said, "Only five pence, in coppers"; Mr. Allen then said, "Well, I must have them too—hand them here"; whereupon I gave the five pence to Mr. Allen aforesaid; and I further say that I had not a roll of notes in my possession at that time, and if Mr. Allen has made such a statement it is untrue, as I was obliged to borrow money the next day from Mr. Hargraves to pay my expenses home to this district.

WILLIAM FORSTER, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR, pro. temp.

William Elyard, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government, called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are aware of what this Committee has been appointed for? Yes.
2. Have you brought any papers connected with the case, for the information of the Committee? The papers have been laid before Parliament, but the letter addressed to me requested me to bring a declaration, said to have been made by Mr. Whiteside. I do not find such a document as that referred to in the Colonial Secretary's Office, but in the papers printed by order of the Legislative Assembly, Mr. Allen alludes to Mr. Whiteside as being able to substantiate what he alleges.
3. Are you aware whether any such document is in existence? I do not know.
4. Can you refer the Committee to anyone who knows where such a document is to be found? No, unless to Mr. Allen himself, who says, in the paper already referred to, that he can prove a statement made by him by the evidence of Mr. Whiteside. The Sheriff may, however, have the paper in question.

ROBERT H. M. FORSTER, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Thomas Duke Allen called in and examined:—

5. By the Chairman: You presented a petition to the Assembly, complaining of your dismissal from the office of gaoler at Parramatta? Yes.
6. When were you appointed gaoler at Parramatta? In February, 1842.
7. When were you removed from that office? At the latter end of June last.
8. June, 1862? Yes.
9. Then you were twenty years gaoler there? Upwards of twenty years.
10. Will you state to the Committee the facts of the case, and what occurred when this man Taylor called upon you? Taylor's son was then a prisoner in Parramatta Gaol, committed for horse-stealing. His father came to Parramatta Gaol with a note from Mr. William

Mr.
T. D. Allen.
28 Nov., 1862.

Mr.
T. D. Allen.
28 Nov., 1862.

Roberts, the solicitor, to get him to sign an authority for him to get him out by writ of habeas corpus. That was the first time I saw his father. His father asked me would I be good enough to witness his son's signature? I told him it was a thing I was not accustomed to do, as it might get me into unnecessary trouble. Said he, "If you do not do so I shall have to go back to Sydney again;" and then I said, sooner than he should do that I would do it. I then went and witnessed the signature. I happened to be in Sydney some few days afterwards, and being at the office of Mr. Abbott, solicitor, I received a message from Mr. Roberts, requesting me to call on him before I left town. I did call, but Mr. Roberts was not there. I saw his chief clerk, Mr. Smith, who asked me when it would be convenient for me to bring down the man under the writ of habeas corpus; I said it did not matter, if they gave me twenty-four hours' notice. "Of course," said he, "your expenses will be paid." I went home, and on Saturday, 31st May, I happened to be at my cottage, near the gaol, talking to a Mr. Whiteside, when this man Taylor came up and said he had got a writ for his son. I read the writ, which I found was returnable on the following Tuesday. I told him I would have his son down on Tuesday. "Well," said he, "what are your expenses?" "Well," said I, "the solicitors generally give me three guineas." He put his hand in his pocket, and pulled out a large roll of notes—I dare say as large as this inkstand—and handed me three £1-notes. Then he turned half round, and seemed to be searching his pockets. I thought he was looking for change to make the amount three guineas. "This is quite enough," then said I. Seeing he still continued as if feeling in his pockets, "I do not require any more," said I, again. "Oh, no!" said he, "I may as well pay you this." "Well," said I, "as you are so anxious, I will take it." I then held out my hand and he dropped the change into it. The whole time I was quite certain that Mr. Roberts had sent the money to me.

11. By Mr. W. Forster: Mr. Whiteside, you say, was standing by? Mr. Whiteside was standing by the whole time. I never asked the man for a farthing, directly or indirectly.

12. Did you refuse to bring the man down without payment? No; I knew very well I dare not refuse. The custom was, when bringing down prisoners by habeas corpus, after they were disposed of, I went to the solicitor who had caused them to be brought down for my expenses, and they never gave me less than three guineas.

13. You had brought men down before under habeas corpus, without receiving your expenses beforehand? Sometimes I did—sometimes not.

14. Mr. Whiteside saw this proceeding? He saw all of it.

15. You have read the correspondence and the papers in your case, I presume? Yes. Mr. Whiteside made a declaration and sent it down to the Sheriff.

16. At what time? It was drawn up by Mr. Lyons, the attorney, at Parramatta, and signed by Mr. Langley in the Police Office.

17. By Mr. Holroyd: What date was that? I do not know. I sent it to the Sheriff by post.

18. Did you post it yourself? Yes. There is a mistake here in Mr. Byrnes' letter (referring to printed papers), with regard to the Sheriff sending Mr. Ennis to Mr. Roberts to inquire. If I did say Mr. Roberts I must have made a mistake; I should have said Mr. Roberts' clerk.

19. By the Chairman: Did you forward that statement of Mr. Whiteside in company with your letter of the 16th June, printed here? I did. One day I happened to meet the Sheriff coming down in the boat, and I explained to him that Mr. Whiteside saw the payment; and it was the Sheriff himself who advised me to get a declaration from Mr. Whiteside on the subject, saying it was very material. I never gave it a thought before that.

20. Did you send it under cover? I did, with this letter. I was speaking to the Sheriff about the matter that very day, and told him I did not know it was any harm to take the money, for it was an old practice, and had always been done, and that the late Sheriff, Mr. Brennan, was aware of the practice, and had allowed it; and he said he would do what he could for me in the matter. It was the first time I was aware it was wrong.

21. Have you ever had any instructions given you by the present or any former Sheriff, as to what expenses were allowed, or whether you were at liberty to make any charge in reference to prisoners brought down by habeas corpus? Never.

22. Have you had many writs of this kind served on you? I dare say not less than fifteen or twenty during the last twenty years.

23. Can you tax your memory whether any of them have been endorsed, or whether they have all been endorsed, by the Judge, setting forth what charges you were authorized to make? None of them, never.

24. Nor have you ever received any instructions from the Sheriff as to what charges you were to make? Never.

25. Then, in fact, you have been left to your own judgment? My principal guide was that as the solicitors always paid me I thought it was legal, because I thought they would not have paid me unless it was legal. I thought I was doing nothing but what was perfectly right. Those were the very last words I spoke to the Sheriff the day I came down with him in the boat—the day he authorized me to send him the declaration of Mr. Whiteside. Said he, "Mr. Allen, I have known you for a long time; never mind, old boy (hitting me familiarly on the shoulder), I will do what I can for you; there is no fear of you."

26. Have you read the affidavit made by Edward Taylor before "E. H. Hargraves, J.P."? I never read it till I saw it printed in these papers.

27. Is the account there given of what passed between you true? Not one word of it is true—not a single word. I never asked the man, directly or indirectly, for one farthing of money. When he paid me the three one-pound notes he pulled them deliberately, one after the other, from a roll of notes as large as that inkstand, and when I thought he was looking for more change, I said "I do not want any more—that is enough."

28. If such a thing as this occurred, must Mr. Whiteside have heard it? He must.
29. Could it have been said without his hearing it? It could not. He was within a yard or two of me. Independent of the roll of notes, I saw a sovereign in his hand among the coppers and silver he had in his hand.
30. Did you in any way communicate to the Sheriff that it was your wish, or did you know that it was intended, to forward your letter of explanation to the Government? It was intended for that purpose, because it was through the Sheriff's suggestion that I did so. He said if this declaration of Mr. Whiteside's was forwarded with my papers it would change the aspect of the case altogether.
31. Did you communicate your wish that the declaration should be forwarded with your letter? I sent it for that very purpose. He said he would forward Mr. Whiteside's declaration with my letter. The Sheriff wanted to make it appear that the man had no money with him, and that because he had no money I refused to carry out the writ, and he had to come to Sydney again.
32. Was there never any communication from any of the predecessors of the Sheriff, as to your making charges for bringing prisoners down under writs of this kind? The time I had Mr. Sage in the gaol at Parramatta he was brought down frequently—I think five or six times; Mr. Gilbert Wright was his solicitor, and every morning that I brought him down he gave me a cheque for three guineas; but the last time I brought him down Mr. Wright did not pay me. He said he thought he had paid me enough already. He applied to the Sheriff—Mr. Brennan—on the subject, and the Sheriff wrote up to say that he thought, from the number of times I had brought down Mr. Sage, that I was paid quite enough, or rather overpaid; which I considered sanctioned the practice.
33. Was that a letter from the Sheriff's Office to you? Yes.
34. Have you got it? No, I have not; because, having left the gaol, I could not get it.
35. Did you ever get a letter from the Sheriff telling you that you had no right to make any charge at all? No.
36. You are quite sure that there was an admission in that letter that there was a right to make a charge? Yes; the Sheriff said, from the many times I had brought Mr. Sage down I was even overpaid.
37. In the third paragraph of your petition you say that, in 1860, "a Commission was appointed by the Government, at the suggestion of the then Sheriff, Mr. Brennan, to inquire into certain charges against your Petitioner, the result of which was that your Petitioner was honourably acquitted of the said charges;"—is that the fact? It is quite true.
38. Who constituted that Commission? Mr. Rolleston, the Registrar General, Mr. John Blaxland, and Mr. Edward Hill.
39. And they went into this investigation? Yes, fully; I think the inquiry lasted nearly a month.
40. Was it in reference to that inquiry, made into charges brought against you by the Sheriff, that the Sheriff got reprimanded? That was the very case.
41. In 1861, a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly was appointed, you say, to inquire into and report upon the state and management of the prisons;—was their report favourable as regards the prison under your charge? Very much so.
42. Who was Chairman of that Committee? Mr. Parkes.
43. You say here this practice has been of long standing? Previous to my becoming gaoler and ever since, up to this time.
44. Do you know whether any other gaoler has received similar fees? I know the gaoler at Maitland has received ten guineas from Mr. Abbott, for bringing two prisoners down under habeas corpus. There is another case—a very similar case to mine—where a man was committed for horse-stealing, and Mr. Teale, the solicitor, sent up five guineas for bringing him down; and then when my case came under the notice of the Government, seeing that I was removed from office for it, he applied to the Government for this amount of money.
45. If the money had not been tendered to you that day, would you have brought the prisoner down? Decidedly I would.
46. Do you consider you were bound to do so? Certainly; I dared not refuse.
47. By Mr. Hoskins: What made you on a previous occasion complain to Mr. Brennan of not receiving a fee for bringing down Mr. Sage? It was not I that made the complaint—it was Mr. Wright.
48. But you asked Mr. Wright for a fee? Yes, he had paid me every morning before, and I asked him then, and he said he had paid enough; and then he applied to Mr. Brennan, who said he thought I had been paid quite enough.
49. By Mr. W. Forster: In regard to writs of habeas corpus, do you consider yourself bound to execute the writ without reference to the receipt of a fee at all? Certainly; I dare not refuse.
50. Did you consider that in all cases of writs of that kind you were entitled to a fee when you were gaoler? I thought I was quite entitled to it.
51. In all cases? In all cases.
52. Are you still of the same opinion? Well, I am.
53. Is there no distinction between civil and criminal cases? I never knew any till this case of mine occurred; I was not aware of it before.
54. I suppose you can see a plain distinction, apart from the question of the fee, in the principle of the two cases, where a man is brought down to give evidence on a trial in a civil case, or any case where he is brought down merely to give evidence, and a case where he is brought down to be examined upon the actual matter which led to his being incarcerated? All I know is this, that I would not in any case refuse to obey the Judge's writ of habeas corpus.

Mr.
T. D. Allen.
28 Nov., 1862.

- Mr. T. D. Allen.
28 Nov., 1862.
55. Do you think you are equally entitled to a fee in both cases? I did until this case occurred; and in fact I concluded that so long as attorneys paid me I was entitled to it.
56. You can see a distinction in principle? I can now.
57. Supposing it had occurred that, in case of a writ of habeas corpus, a fee was refused you, what would have been your course of proceeding? I would apply to the Judges in Chambers.
58. Did any cases of that kind ever occur to you? I recollect one case of the kind that occurred fourteen or fifteen years ago, where Mr. George Robert Nichols had a man brought down by habeas corpus, and I think all he gave me was two guineas.
59. Was this a criminal case? I do not remember. The present Chief Justice was a Puisne Judge at that time.
60. By Mr. Holroyd: That must have been more than seventeen years ago? It was a good while ago. I said to Mr. Nichols, "I do not think you have given me enough; I will apply to the Judge."
61. By Mr. W. Forster: Did you apply in open Court? I did.
62. For the payment of the fee? I did, and he ordered Mr. Nichols to give me another guinea.
63. Then your application was on account of insufficient payment? Yes.
64. Is this case on record? I cannot say. It was in open Court.
65. You have stated that you have frequently received such fees in similar cases—will you state some other similar case in which you have received such fees? From memory I cannot.
66. As you have come here on purpose to be examined, is it not singular that you cannot state such a case if you have frequently received such fees—can you not refer to them now by description, so that we can obtain evidence about them? No, I cannot from memory.
67. Are you quite sure you have frequently received such fees? Frequently.
68. Both in civil and criminal cases? Yes.
69. Can you not recollect the names of the persons? I can recollect the names of solicitors who paid me on these occasions—that is all I can recollect.
70. By Mr. Holroyd: Are there any records in the gaol office of persons brought to Sydney under writs of habeas corpus during the time you were gaoler—is there any book in which there was a record made of these things? I do not think there is.
71. Or any minute in the office? I do not think there is.
72. By Mr. W. Forster: You say you can recollect the names of solicitors who paid you these fees? Yes; Mr. John Dawson, Mr. Driver, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Croft, Mr. Macnisch, and Mr. Abbott.
73. Do you say that all these gentlemen have paid you fees? They have.
74. Frequently? Frequently.
75. Did you ever know an instance of one of them objecting to pay you? Never.
76. Are you aware whether the cases were civil or criminal? I do not recollect, because I never knew any distinction until this case.
77. How did you derive the knowledge that three guineas was the fee to which you were entitled? Because they always paid me three guineas. They knew the distance from Parramatta to Sydney and back, and I suppose the fee was what was allowed.
78. Out of this fee you were required to pay your own expenses and the expenses of the prisoner to Sydney and back? Yes, and of the turnkey also.
79. Did you ever get anything more for the additional distance, by way of mileage? I have got £5 sometimes when I brought a prisoner a second time.
80. Had you an officer attending you as well? Yes.
81. By Mr. Holroyd: Then you had to pay all the expenses of the transit both ways, of yourself, the prisoner, and a turnkey, both ways, as well as expenses in Sydney? Yes.
82. By Mr. W. Forster: Are you sure nothing was allowed by the Government for your expenses? I never applied to them.
83. Were you ever a loser in this way? I do not think I was.
84. You think the fee fairly covered the expense? It did.
85. Do you know whether any other gaoler has been a loser under similar circumstances? I do not.
86. There was some case where you mentioned something about returning a fee? That was in the case of Mr. Sage; the Sheriff desired me to return some of it, because he thought I was overpaid.
87. Did the Sheriff make any remark in disapprobation of your having received fees? He said that under the circumstances of coming so often and getting a fee every time, that I was overpaid, and I had to return £3 or £4.
88. Did he order you to do it, or was it a mere recommendation? He directed me to do it.
89. Was this in the shape of a letter? It was by letter.
90. Can you produce that letter? No, I cannot. I think it is in the gaol office at Parramatta; it ought to be.
91. Did Mr. Brennan, in doing this, imply some approval of your receiving a fee? He did not express at any time disapproval of the act. He did not say it was illegal, but from the number of times I had brought this man down he said he thought I was overpaid, and that I was to return a portion.
92. Was that done from consideration of the circumstances of the party, or from the circumstances of the case? From the circumstances of the party, I suppose.
93. Was he a man in poor circumstances? He was at that time.
94. You did retain a portion? I did, except what he ordered me to return—I think £4.
95. Was Mr. Brennan cognizant of your receiving fees in other cases? I suppose so.
96. Did Mr. Brennan ever tell you not? Never.

97. Was Mr. Uhr cognizant of it? He must have been, because he was Under Sheriff at the time, and must have known what correspondence went through the Sheriff's Office. Mr.
T. D. Allen.
98. You mention in your petition a particular case where the Maitland gaoler received a fee of £5 from Mr. Teale, solicitor—what do you know of this except from hearsay? Only 28 Nov., 1862.
what Mr. Abbott told me.
99. Are you quite sure that was a similar case? Quite similar. The man was committed for horse-stealing.
100. In your statement with regard to the transaction between you and Taylor, you state that you never asked him for the money? I never asked him for a farthing.
101. From whom would you have got it then? I would have gone to Mr. Roberts for it. I thought it was from Mr. Roberts it came when he gave it me.
102. What was your meaning when you said that was enough? When he gave me the £3 off the roll of notes he had, I saw him turn round and seem to be looking in his pockets for change, and then I told him I did not require any more.
103. Would you have been satisfied with that without going to Mr. Roberts any further? Quite. I was quite certain that it was Mr. Roberts that had sent the money all the time.
104. Will you state to the Committee whether this fee of three guineas, for bringing a prisoner down from Parramatta and back again, in general greatly exceeded your expenses? I do not think it did.
105. What sort of place did you keep the prisoners in while they were in Sydney? In one of the private rooms of the Supreme Court, in charge of an officer.
106. I suppose you had to feed him? Yes.
107. Can you refer to any special cases in which other gaolers have received fees of this kind? Except the Maitland Gaol, I cannot.
108. Was there not a prosecution against you in this case at the Police Office? There was.
109. By Mr. Holroyd: Have you got the summons here? I have not.
110. By Mr. W. Forster: Who was the prosecutor? This man Taylor. I forgot to say, that on the Wednesday morning after I had brought the man to Sydney and got him discharged the Sheriff came up to the gaol with Mr. Hargraves. I was out in the yard, and when I came into the office accidentally I saw the Sheriff there. Mr. Hargraves was there also, leading on Taylor in his evidence. I did not know who Mr. Hargraves was at the time. The case was taken on, and the man swore to his information, and the Sheriff then said to me, "Did you receive this money from this man?" "Yes," said I, "I did." "You are suspended," said he. I said, "Will you not give me leave to say a word in my defence?" "No," said he, "you will have an opportunity in another Court."
111. By Mr. Holroyd: Was it the prisoner's evidence that was then taken? No, the prisoner's father. It was taken down by the clerk of the gaol, before Mr. Hargraves.
112. By Mr. W. Forster: Were Mr. Uhr and Mr. Hargraves both sitting down at the table? Yes, and the clerk of the gaol was taking the deposition.
113. Where was the other man? He was standing at the table.
114. Where were you? I happened to come in out of the yard, and found them all there, and the deposition of Taylor being taken down.
115. Was the prisoner present? No, he was discharged before this.
116. Were the doors open? Yes.
117. Was the principal turnkey there? Yes.
118. Who was the person examining the witness? Mr. Hargraves.
119. He asked questions of this man, did he? He asked all the questions, and led the man on.
120. Who wrote them down? The clerk of the gaol.
121. Did Mr. Uhr take any part in the matter? No, he sat on one side.
122. He did not ask any questions? No, not a word.
123. Did you see the oath administered to the man? Yes.
124. By the Bible? Yes.
125. Who administered the oath? Mr. Hargraves.
126. By Mr. Holroyd: To Taylor—the father? Yes.
127. By Mr. W. Forster: He was sworn regularly? Yes.
128. You took this to be an information against you? Yes.
129. Were you cautioned against making any statement? Yes, by Mr. Hargraves.
130. Did Mr. Hargraves make any remarks? After the Sheriff had told me I was suspended, Mr. Hargraves said, "Say nothing, Mr. Allen; what you say might come against you."
131. Was nothing further said to you? Nothing further.
132. What was the next proceeding with regard to the prosecution against you? A summons was sent up to me, signed by the Police Magistrate of Sydney.
133. What was the nearest Police Court to you? Parramatta.
134. What was the nature of the summons? It was for fraudulently obtaining money under false pretences.
135. Did the case come on? It did.
136. Did you appear? I did.
137. Had you a solicitor? Yes, Mr. Moffat.
138. Who was on the other side? Mr. Barker.
139. Who were the Magistrates present? Mr. Ronald was the Magistrate.
140. Was he the only one? There were two or three off and on the bench besides him.
- 141.

* Revised:—And the clerk of the gaol sitting at the table and Taylor standing by. I was not made aware of the proceedings. Mr. Hargraves questioned Taylor, and suggested replies; and, finally, swore Taylor to what he had stated. The Sheriff never put a question to Taylor, nor even spoke on the subject whilst I was present, nor to me further than

- Mr. T. D. Allen.
28 Nov., 1862.
141. Captain Scott was not there? He sat for a short time, and then went to another Court. I had all my witnesses there.
142. By Mr. Holroyd: Was Mr. Whiteside there? No.
143. Did you go into evidence on your part? No, on the evidence for the prosecution the case was dismissed. I said I had witnesses in attendance, and requested to be allowed to examine them, but I was not allowed.
144. By Mr. W. Forster: Who were the witnesses for the prosecution? Taylor and his mother, a feeble old woman.
145. Was Mr. Hargraves present at the Police Court? He sat on the bench, but took no part in it, as far as I can say.
146. If you had gone in without knowing anything of the case, would you have said he was a Magistrate on the bench? I would, certainly.
147. But he took no part? No, I did not take notice of him saying anything.
148. By Mr. Holroyd: Can you state how it happened that Mr. Hargraves had got Edward Taylor into the gaol for the purpose of holding a Court of Petty Sessions there? I did not know they were coming until I saw them actually sitting at the table before me.
149. Has that practice ever prevailed before? Never to my knowledge.
150. During the twenty years you have been there? Never.
151. By Mr. W. Forster: You were dismissed in consequence of these proceedings? Yes.
152. Was any investigation made in your presence? Not one word.
153. Were you allowed to make any defence? Afterwards the Sheriff called upon me for an explanation in writing.
154. And afterwards you were dismissed? Yes.
155. By Mr. Holroyd: Was that inquiry at the Police Office before or after you were dismissed? Before I was dismissed—after I was suspended.
156. Is there any fund, that you are aware of, out of which the expenses of the gaoler, turnkey, and prisoner can be paid, in bringing a prisoner up on habeas corpus? Not that I am aware of.
157. I think you say that this man was merely the agent of Mr. Roberts when he paid you the fee? Yes, I never saw a writ of habeas corpus brought in the same way before; it was always brought by the attorney's clerk.
158. By Mr. Forster: Mrs. Allen has been removed from her office as matron? Yes.
159. I presume the only ground for that was that you had been removed? Yes.
160. There was no charge against her? Not the slightest.
161. Have you made any application for compensation in her case? No, I have not. I mentioned it in my petition, that was all.
162. By Mr. Hoskins: Did Mr. Uhr examine the witness Taylor at the time of this inquiry in the gaol? He did not say a word at all to him.
163. You are quite sure of that? Never a word.
164. Was any charge formally preferred against you, or read over to you, at the time that inquiry was held in the gaol? Not the slightest. I did not know, in fact, what it meant, until I heard the man giving his evidence.
165. By Mr. Holroyd: Was the evidence given by Taylor in the gaol read over to you? It was.
166. Was that before or after Mr. Uhr suspended you? It was after.
167. By Mr. Hoskins: Were you suspended when the charges referred to in the third paragraph of your petition were inquired into by the Commission? No.
168. Previous to this Commission being appointed, did Mr. Brenan examine you with reference to the charges? Yes, he had an inquiry there, and examined a good many witnesses.
169. Is it not customary in the public service, when any complaint is made against a subordinate, that his superior should first inquire into it? Yes, in all cases it is.
170. In this case of Taylor's, were you called upon to make an explanation? Never. I never knew a word about it till I saw them sitting in the office before me when I walked in out of the yard.
171. What salary did you receive? £175 a year.
172. When appointed to the office were you formally informed that all the remuneration you were to receive was this salary? No.
173. Were you told the salary could be supplemented by fees? No, nothing at all of the kind.
174. By Mr. Holroyd: Were any instructions given you as to your duties as gaoler—any printed or written instructions? There was a small blue book, called the gaol regulations—that was the only guide I had.
175. Have you a copy of that book? No, I have not.
176. When did you first receive that—was it in the gaol when you were first appointed? Yes.
177. Have you never received any other instructions? No.
178. Was there anything in this book about receiving fees? No, except that we were not to receive anything from prisoners as compensation for any accommodation in the gaol.
179. Then you did not consider that in receiving this fee for bringing down a prisoner under habeas corpus you were violating those instructions? No; it was not for accommodation in the gaol—it was to pay expenses.
180. Is it necessary, or are you instructed, to accompany prisoners on these occasions? I always did so.
181. Were you specially instructed? No; the writ specifies that I am to produce the prisoner in the Court before so and so.

182. The prisoner remains in your charge until formally released by law? Yes.
183. I think you stated, in reply to some questions of Mr. Forster's, that you did not know of any rule whereby you were empowered to receive fees on these occasions? No, I do not.
184. Have you looked through this correspondence? Yes.
185. You see the Attorney General, in a minute of the 5th June, says the gaoler is required to obey the writ of habeas corpus, but he is entitled to receive a fee not exceeding twelvenpence per mile for expenses? Yes, I see that now, but I did not know it before.
186. Has 1s. a mile ever been tendered to you as a fee by any person, for bringing prisoners to Sydney under habeas corpus? Never.
187. Did you ever bring a prisoner to Sydney, under a writ of habeas corpus, from Parramatta Gaol, when no fees were tendered? If they were prisoners of the Crown brought down at the instance of the Government, the Government would afterwards pay me.
188. Did they only pay you mileage—not three guineas? No, they used to pay me a certain sum; I do not know whether it was mileage, or what it was.
189. In all cases where you brought prisoners up at the request of the Crown, have you been paid fees? I have.
190. What have you been paid? I cannot say.
191. Can you cite a case? No, I cannot.
192. Could you state any specific amount that you have ever received on one occasion from the Crown? No.
193. Did you ever sign vouchers as receiving payment of such fees from the Crown? I have.
194. Could you give any of the dates? No.
195. Are these vouchers to be found in the gaol office at Parramatta? No, they ought to be in the Treasury or Audit Office.
196. Are duplicates to be found in the Sheriff's Office? I cannot say.
197. By Mr. Dangar: Did you, on the 3rd of June, prepare a statement as to your suspension, as suggested by the Sheriff—on the same day as Mr. Hargraves and Taylor were at the gaol? No, I did not on the 3rd of June.
198. Are you aware that by law you can only charge mileage independently of your salary and allowances? I was not aware of it.
199. Did you ever refuse to bring a prisoner down unless payment was tendered? Never.
200. Can you say whether other gaolers have charged three guineas? I have mentioned a case where ten guineas was charged.
201. Are you aware of the custom in England? I am not.
202. Do you state positively that the statement Taylor has sworn to is untrue? I do.
203. By the Chairman: Will you look at the Attorney General's minute, in which he says that you are entitled to mileage by statute law, and he also says that the gaoler should require security to be given by the prisoner's own bond, with sureties, that he will not escape;—have you ever been informed by the Sheriff or any other authority that it was necessary to obtain this bond? Never.
204. In point of fact, you never received any instructions as to what your duties were, with reference to prisoners brought down by habeas corpus? Never.
205. Is there anything in the gaol regulations having any bearing upon it? Not a word.
206. By Mr. Dangar: You have not seen either of the Taylors since the investigation? I do not think I have.

Mr.
T. D. Allen.
28 Nov., 1862.

Mr. Thomas Whiteside called in and examined:—

207. By the Chairman: You are resident at Parramatta? Yes.
208. Do you follow any business? No.
209. You saw and heard what took place between a man named Taylor and Mr. Allen, with reference to a writ of habeas corpus? I recollect the circumstances that took place.
210. Will you just relate what came under your own observation? I think about the 31st of May, on a Saturday afternoon, I saw Mr. Allen at his own place, and had some conversation with him. We were passing on in the direction of the gaol when a man and woman came up and spoke to him; he stood, and the man handed him a paper; he read it, and put it in his pocket. I then understood the man to say, "What is your fee?" and I heard Mr. Allen distinctly say three guineas; the man then put his hand in his trousers pocket and pulled out a very considerable sum of money. It crossed my mind at the time that it was strange for a man of his appearance, a shabby-looking man, to have so much money carrying about with him. He took off one, two, three notes, and handed them to Mr. Allen.
211. By Mr. Holroyd: What did he do with the remainder? He returned the roll to his pocket. Then there was some payment of some small coin; but I heard Mr. Allen say, "That will do." He paid him some silver or copper, I cannot exactly say which, but I heard Mr. Allen distinctly say, "That will do, that will do."
212. By the Chairman: Did you hear Mr. Allen ask him, "What is that you have in your hand?" I do not remember hearing it; I might have heard it, but I do not remember it.
213. There is a statement made by Edward Taylor to this effect:—"Mr. Allen said, 'What is that you have in your hand?' I then said, 'Only five-pence in coppers.' Mr. Allen then said, 'Well, I must have them too—hand them here;'"—is that a correct statement of what took place? I do not believe he said a word of it; I am sure if he did I could have heard it.

Mr.
T. Whiteside.
28 Nov., 1862.

- Mr. 214. Were you close by all the time? I was, on horseback.
 T. Whiteside. 215. Close by? Yes. There were only the four individuals of us present, and I had more opportunity to see what was going on, being on horseback, than if I had been on the ground.
 23 Nov., 1862. He never said such a word, I am sure; I would have heard it if he did. As for the money, there was no manner of doubt about the money.
 216. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you see a sovereign in Taylor's hand with the notes or small change? No.
 217. By the Chairman: Have you made a statement to this effect before? Yes, at the Police Office, at Parramatta. I made a declaration at the Police Office, signed by George Langley, Esq., Justice of the Peace.
 218. Before whom? Mr. Lyons drew it up. Mr. Langley was there, but whether he took any part in it or not I cannot say. It was in Mr. Langley's room.
 219. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you sign it? Yes.
 220. By the Chairman: Was it read over to you? Yes.
 221. By Mr. Holroyd: Were you sworn to it? No.
 222. In whose possession did you see it last? Mr. Allen got it, I think. I never saw it once.
 223. By the Chairman: Did Mr. Allen ever tell you what his object was in getting that document? He said he wanted to forward it to the Sheriff.
 224. Have you any interest in giving evidence in favour of Mr. Allen in this matter? Not any particular interest. I would go a far way to oblige him, but nothing more than that. I would not give my evidence wrong for all the men in Parramatta.
 225. By Mr. Holroyd: You have been some years residing in Parramatta? Yes.
 226. And you are out of business—you are an independent gentleman? Yes.
 227. By the Chairman: Have you any objection to state what is your opinion of Mr. Allen's character? I have known him very many years, long before I came out to this country, and I never knew him to be incorrect yet. He is as honest a man as any in the country—a most upright, straightforward, honest man, and an industrious man. We have been acquainted these thirty-five years now.
 228. By Mr. W. Forster: Did you hear anything that led you to know what this man's name was whom you met? No, except that after he had passed on, Mr. Allen said, "That is a habeas corpus that has come up to get that young chap Taylor down."
 229. By Mr. Holroyd: Whereabouts did this conversation take place? Between Mr. Allen's new house and the gaol.
 230. Then it was not very far from the gaol? We did not go far from the house before this man and woman came up. We were just walking leisurely along, talking.
 231. By Mr. Dangar: After reading that statement of Edward Taylor's (see printed papers, enclosure in No. 10), do you believe it? No, that never took place.
 232. By Mr. Hoskins: Did you hear Mr. Allen say, "You will have to give me three guineas, as a fee for taking your son to Sydney"? No; the man handed him the writ, and immediately after pulled out a roll of notes and paid him.
 233. Did you hear the man Taylor ask what the charge of three guineas was for? No.
 234. Did you hear Mr. Allen say it was his fee for taking Taylor's son to Sydney, and that he mostly got five guineas? No; there were not a dozen words altogether; it was all over in some two or three minutes. I never heard any of these things.
 235. By Mr. Dangar: You supposed the roll that the man pulled out to be notes? Yes, and only that I did not see the numbers I could swear to them. At all events, he seemed to take care of them as if they were notes.

ROBERT H. M. FORSTER, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

George Uhr, Esq., Sheriff of New South Wales, called in and examined:—

- G. Uhr, Esq. 236. By the Chairman: This is a Committee appointed to inquire into the allegations of a Petition to the Legislative Assembly from Mr. Thomas Duke Allen, and you have been summoned in order to give evidence upon certain charges on which he was dismissed from office? Yes, sir. I may perhaps be permitted at the outset to make a short explanation in regard to an assertion made in the course of the debate upon this question, and reported in the newspapers, in which Mr. Forster, in speaking of the Sheriff who had suspended Mr. Allen, alluded to him as being the Sheriff who had brought certain charges against Mr. Allen on a previous occasion. Now as it was I who suspended Mr. Allen, I wish it to be understood by the Committee that I was not the Sheriff who had brought the charges alluded to against Mr. Allen.
 237. You are Sheriff now, I believe? I am.
 238. And you were also Sheriff when Mr. Allen was dismissed? I was.
 239. Will you just shortly state the circumstances that led to your recommending Mr. Allen's removal from office? You have made a statement there that I must at once contradict.

- tradict. I did not recommend his removal; I suspended him, and then brought his case under the notice of the Government, leaving it to the Executive to deal with it.
- 240. You did not recommend his dismissal? No.
- 241. Will you look at the bottom of page 3 of the printed correspondence, and you will there find the following memo., signed C. C.:—"I shall be glad to know whether the "Sheriff recommends Mr. Allen's dismissal; if so, I shall be prepared to carry out his "recommendation." You saw that memo., I believe? Yes, I did.
- 242. Then on the other side is a minute No. 5, signed by yourself as Sheriff, in answer to that memo. of Mr. Cowper's? There is.
- 243. Does not that minute recommend Mr. Allen's dismissal? I do not say that it does not recommend it, neither will I say that it does. It merely leaves the matter in the hands of the Government, and the reason I wished to do this rather than to decide upon the case myself, I will explain, if the Committee desire it.
- 244. Perhaps you will be good enough to explain it? The reason was this: Mr. Allen had been a number of years in the service of the Government, being nearly as long in the department as I am myself, and when he was suspended by me in the discharge of my duty, I laid the whole case before the Government. The matter was referred back to me, with the minute of the Chief Secretary that you have just read, and it is very possible that, had not the circumstances which I am now about to explain been witnessed by myself, I should have recommended the Government not to dismiss him, but merely to severely reprimand him for this act of extortion.
- 245. Were those circumstances connected with the subject matter of this petition? No, but they were connected with his duty as gaoler.
- 246. Were they circumstances that had occurred subsequently to this charge? No, they occurred at the same moment.
- 247. If they have nothing to do with the petition they have nothing to do with the case the Committee have before them;—I told you that we were appointed to inquire into the allegations of Mr. Allen's petition to the Assembly, and that is all we have a right to inquire into? You asked me then a further question, which caused me to answer that subsequent matters had influenced me in framing that minute.
- 248. If you will read that minute you will see from the wording of it that it is not shown that anything beyond this transaction influenced you in coming to a decision? It is quite true that nothing of the kind is there stated, but still I had a reason for wording that minute in the way I did.
- 249. Is that reason connected with the allegations in this petition? It has nothing to do with the habeas corpus question, but it regards the gaoler's conduct.
- 250. Then it is another matter? Yes, quite another matter altogether.
- 251. As you say it influenced you in coming to your decision, did you ever bring it under the notice of the Government? No, not that matter; but a precisely similar matter has been under the notice of Mr. Cowper.
- 252. By Mr. Dangar: Did you recommend him to be retained in office? No, certainly not.
- 253. But on the inquiry into the case Mr. Allen was honorably acquitted, was he not? Where?
- 254. You speak in your minute of an oath before a legal tribunal, and an examination by an advocate;—when that legal inquiry was held was not Mr. Allen honorably acquitted? I had nothing to do with the case before the Police Court.
- 255. By the Chairman: And the reason that influenced you had nothing to do with this matter? No; there were other reasons that influenced me.
- 256. By Mr. Cowper: Do you not consider that your minute of the 13th, in answer to mine of the 9th June, was, in fact, a recommendation to the Government to dismiss Mr. Allen? No; whatever the effect may have been, it did not in plain terms recommend his dismissal. Being an old officer of the Government, and I being only young in my office of Sheriff, I could not bring my mind to recommend his dismissal; but, at the same time, witnessing what I had done, I could not conscientiously recommend his reinstatement in office.
- 257. Did you not suspend him on the 2nd June? I did.
- 258. And was not that of itself practically a dismissal from office, unless the Government chose to restore him? Yes, unless the suspension had been withdrawn.
- 259. And was not your minute of the 13th June, in answer to mine of the 9th, a distinct recommendation to the Government to dismiss Mr. Allen? I did not intend it to be so. I intended to leave the matter entirely in the hands of the Government without comment.
- 260. Did I not, in my minute, require a distinct answer from you? Yes.
- 261. And was not your minute a reply to that? It was.
- 262. What do you mean by saying in that minute, "I cannot recommend a deviation from the course adopted on such occasions"—is not the usual course upon such occasions to dismiss the person suspended? No; I have heard of cases in which they have been reprimanded and reinstated.
- 263. Would not that be a deviation from the usual course, such as you say you are not prepared to recommend? I have heard of its being adopted in many instances.
- 264. What did you understand when you wrote the words "I cannot recommend a deviation from the course adopted on such occasions?" I was influenced by what I had seen in the gaol, and I wished the Government to decide upon the case before them uninfluenced by any other circumstances.
- 265. But you recommended no deviation from the usual course? Yes.
- 266. What was meant by that? Knowing other circumstances against Mr. Allen, I wished to bring matters to a crisis.
- 267. What was that crisis? A consideration of the whole case by the Government.

G. Uhr, Esq.
 3 Dec., 1862.

- G. Uhr, Esq. 268. By the Chairman: You received a letter from Mr. Allen, dated 16th June, 1862? Yes.
- 3 Dec., 1862. 269. Did you receive with that letter a statement or declaration that had been made by Mr. Whiteside? Yes.
270. Do you produce that letter and enclosure? I do. I may state that immediately I received that letter by post, I walked down and showed it to Mr. Cowper, and I made on the back of it a memorandum of Mr. Cowper's remark upon it.
271. Is that the letter printed in the correspondence as enclosure No. 2 in No. 7, dated 16th June? No; it is a subsequent letter, and is dated 18th June. I now hand it in. (Vide Appendix A.)
272. When did you receive it? I received it by post, and it is dated the 18th, so that it was most probably the 19th. Immediately that I received it I went with it to the Chief Secretary.
273. By Mr. Cowper: You did not receive this letter until after the Executive had come to a determination on Mr. Allen's case? No; I received it by post, and the memorandum on the back is exactly what took place between us.
274. Do you remember what you said to me on that occasion, with regard to the impression this declaration had made on yourself—as to whether you considered it correct or not? I think I made the remark to you, that I did not think anything of it.
275. The object of this declaration was to prove that the man Taylor had plenty of money to give if he had wished to give it? Yes.
276. By the Chairman: Do you know Whiteside? I do not; I have seen him. I met him on board the steamer with Mr. Allen. Mr. Allen brought him to me to make a statement in reference to this matter, but I attached no weight to it.
277. The document you now produce is a solemn declaration? It is.
278. In the form prescribed by the Act substituting declarations in place of oaths? Yes.
279. And what is the reason why you attached no importance to it? When Mr. Allen brought Whiteside to me on board the steamer, and stated that Whiteside was present when the document was brought to Allen by Taylor, I questioned Whiteside on the subject, and he would not state distinctly whether the bundle or roll produced by Taylor was or was not a roll of notes.
280. Does he say so in this declaration? I think he says there positively that it was a roll of notes.
281. The passage is, "a roll of notes, as I took them to be;" he does not speak positively? On board the steamer he would not state to me what it was. He said that Taylor took a roll of something out of his pocket, and from off it he took the notes which he gave to Allen.
282. With reference to these writs of habeas corpus, are there any instructions from the Sheriff making the gaolers acquainted with their duties in connection with these writs whenever they may be transmitted to them? I find that as far back as I have been able to look into the records of the office that there have not been any.
283. How far back have you searched? As far as the records will admit—between twenty and thirty years.
284. And during that period there is no record of any instructions having been given to gaolers in reference to these writs? None whatever.
285. Have you, since this inquiry into Mr. Allen's conduct, looked at the writs of habeas corpus, to see if there was any endorsement on the back by the Judge in regard to the charge to be made? The Judges here have never made endorsements on writs of habeas corpus.
286. No order has been made as to the amount to be charged? No.
287. And no security for expenses received from the prisoner before he is brought down? No, that is not necessary.
288. Will you look on page 3, at the opinion of the Attorney General? Yes, that applies only to cases at Home, but the circumstances are different here, and do not apply. There there are Sheriffs of Counties, and the prisoner has to be handed over from the custody of one Sheriff into the custody of another. Here the prisoner never leaves the custody of the Sheriff.
289. By Mr. Cowper: Have we got an Habeas Corpus Act for the Colony, or do you take and apply the English Act? We have no Colonial Act; we take the English Act, in so far as it can be made applicable to the circumstances of the Colony.
290. By the Chairman: But the report of the Attorney General is to the effect, that not only are the expenses of bringing the prisoner up to be paid, but that security is to be given by prisoner to pay the charges of return if remanded? That applies merely to civil cases.
291. Have there been any instructions issued to gaolers in criminal cases? No, never.
292. Then in what way were they to know what they were to charge, except from what their predecessors had charged, or from what others had done? I cannot say what course they would pursue; but in the discharge of my duty I look to the law only, and am not influenced by any practice.
293. There are rules framed for the guidance of gaolers, either by yourself or by the Government? Yes, by the Government.
294. And these are supplied to the different gaolers? Yes.
295. Is there anything about this charge in those rules? No, nothing.
296. By Mr. Cowper: So that really gaolers are entitled to charge nothing? No, except the charge by law, and that is limited to a charge of 1s. per mile.
297. And he is at liberty to charge that? Yes, if the circumstances of the case justify the charge.
298. By the Chairman: But you say that Mr. Allen was entitled only to 6s. 10d.,—can you you explain to the Committee how you arrive at that amount? It was, I believe, by calculating the cost of the return ticket for the officer, of the single ticket for the prisoner, and the sustenance of the officer in town—just the actual expenses of the warder and the prisoner. G. Uhr, Esq. 3 Dec., 1862.

299. Was not Mr. Allen there with the prisoner? I do not know, but he need not have been without he had thought fit, because I instructed him to that effect, and told him that he need not come down himself with the prisoner; but he said he had to be in town on that day, and would fetch the prisoner down.

300. Gaolers have, however, never had any instructions as to what they were to charge? Not from the Sheriff's Department up to that time; at least I have been unable to find any. I have searched the records of the office but could find none.

301. Do you know whether, at any time during his tenure of office, anything ever occurred in reference to charges made by Mr. Allen under a writ of habeas corpus? Yes, I believe there was, but I do not know the particulars.

302. You were in the Sheriff's Office at that time? Yes.

303. In a subordinate position? Yes.

304. You have none of the documents connected with that case? No; I knew nothing about it, except what Mr. Allen himself told me.

305. Have you made any search for the documents connected with that case? No. The only search I have made has been for the general instructions as to carrying out writs of habeas corpus.

306. You did not know the circumstances of that case? No, I did not; I know now, because I have been informed.

307. You did not obtain that information from the records in your office? No; I did not find any on the subject.

308. Nor from any letters before you? No.

309. From whom did you receive your information? I spoke to the Under Sheriff in regard to this charge against Mr. Allen, and he then told me something about a dispute that had previously occurred with regard to the expenses attending upon carrying out an habeas corpus ad testificandum.

310. Then the matter is one that has been mooted before? So it appears.

311. Have you any idea of what the charge was? I have not. The Under Sheriff might very probably be able to tell you, for it was he who carried out the instructions of the then Sheriff.

312. By Mr. Holroyd: You were Under Sheriff at that time? Yes.

313. By the Chairman: You cannot tax your memory in reference to this matter? I cannot.

314. By Mr. Cowper: I think you stated to me that you were not under the impression that any charge had been made for bringing prisoners up under habeas corpus, except upon the scale authorized by law? That is what I stated.

315. You are not aware of any other charge having been made? I am not.

316. By Mr. Holroyd: What do you mean by the scale authorized by law—do you allude to the charges authorized by the Habeas Corpus Act? Yes.

317. That is 1s. per mile, to cover all expenses? Yes.

318. Do you think that amount would cover all the expenses of a turnkey and prisoner—taking the average of cases—from Albury to Sydney, from Bathurst to Sydney, from Maitland to Sydney, and from Parramatta to Sydney? I cannot say. I have never had a case from Albury; but from Maitland to Sydney it would pay.

319. And from Mudgee to Sydney? The cost of conveyance between Mudgee and Sydney would be high, but that would be matter for special application.

320. By Mr. Cowper: Application to whom? To the parties concerned—the prisoner brought down. From Parramatta or Maitland there would be no difficulty, the amount would be amply sufficient.

321. By Mr. Holroyd: Would 1s. per mile cover all the expenses, from Parramatta even, to bring the prisoner and turnkey down, to take the turnkey back, and give him necessary refreshment? Yes, I think it would be ample to cover the expenses of the legal custody of the prisoner.

322. What is your definition of what may be supposed to be legal custody? In this instance the presence of one ordinary turnkey would be sufficient to constitute legal custody.

323. Supposing one turnkey to bring a prisoner down by rail, and then to take him back, with some allowance for refreshments in Sydney during the day, would 1s. per mile be sufficient to cover the expenses? Yes, and more than cover it.

324. If it was found necessary to send a second person with the prisoner, in order to ensure his safe custody, would the 1s. per mile cover the expenses? I am not prepared to give an exposition upon improbable cases, but merely to say what is the law.

325. But without reference to the law, do you think the 1s. per mile sufficient to cover the expenses of a prisoner and two turnkeys? If it is found necessary to have more officers, in order to carry out the law, then, of course, something extra would be required, and would no doubt be allowed.

326. By Mr. Cowper: Do you consider it necessary that the gaoler should accompany the prisoner when brought up on habeas corpus? No, certainly not.

327. It is not imperative on him? Certainly not. It could not be, for supposing him to receive two writs of habeas corpus at one time, made returnable at different places, it would be manifestly impossible for him to go with both prisoners.

328. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you ever know of such a case as a gaoler being served, at one time, with two writs, made returnable at different places? No, I did not.

- G. Uhr, Esq.
3 Dec., 1862.
329. By the Chairman: And suppose the prisoner to be sent back again to labour, would the gaoler be bound to bring him down? The gaoler is bound to obey the writ and bring the prisoner down, under any circumstances.
330. But to take him back—supposing him to be ordered back to gaol? That would be matter for subsequent application.
331. By Mr. Cowper: Under any circumstances, however, the gaoler is bound to bring the body before the Court? So it has been held by the best legal authorities.
332. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you ever furnish Mr. Allen with the scale of charges, in conformity with the Act 31st Charles I. No, I find that there is no record in the office of anything of the kind having been done.
333. By the Chairman: Have the gaolers facilities for referring to old statutes, such for instance as the one regulating the law of habeas corpus? I am not aware that they have.
334. They are not obliged to have copies of them? The law does not compel them to have a copy of such statutes. The 4th Victoria, No. 29, is all that they are compelled to have in the gaol.
335. And as a guide for their conduct in all cases, are they not confined solely to the printed rules and regulations laid down by the Government? There are rules laid down by the Government for the guidance of gaolers.
336. And is not that paper, with the printed rules and regulations, such as are hung up in the gaols, the extent of the facilities the gaolers have of knowing what their duties are? I cannot say what knowledge they have of their duties beyond those rules.
337. Have you or your predecessor put them in possession of any other information? I have looked back through the records and can find no such instructions.
338. You have not issued any? No, not previous to this affair. Since it has occurred I have done so.
339. By Mr. Holroyd: How long is it since you, the Sheriff of the Colony, became acquainted with the fact, that 1s. per mile was the only amount authorized by law for expenses under the Habeas Corpus Act? Not very long before this matter occurred; as soon as my duty required that I should know. I had occasion to look into the Act in connection with a female confined in Darlinghurst Gaol.
340. How long ago is that? About fifteen months ago.
341. And that was the first that you heard of it? It was.
342. By the Chairman: Do you know how long Mr. Allen has been gaoler at Parramatta? I entered the department on the 1st July, 1840, and Mr. Allen joined it about two or three years afterwards.
343. And during the whole of the time since then he has been in charge of the Parramatta Gaol? He has.
344. Do you know Mr. Gilbert Elliot, who was at one time Sheriff? I do.
345. He was before that Police Magistrate at Parramatta, and Visiting Justice of the Parramatta Gaol? Yes.
346. Do you know, from your own knowledge, or from records in your office, that Mr. Elliott had communications with your department in which he spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Allen? I am not aware of it, but I know nothing against it. Possibly he may have done so. I never heard him speak otherwise than well of Mr. Allen.
347. Will you look at Mr. Allen's petition, and say whether you do not believe in the correctness of the allegations contained in the second paragraph of that petition? That is scarcely a fair question to put to me, because I am aware that the late Sheriff, Mr. Brennan, had a very bad opinion of Mr. Allen.
348. Are you aware of the truth of the allegation contained in the third paragraph of the petition? All that I know about that affair is, that Mr. Brennan received a very severe letter upon the subject, which letter he showed to me.
349. A letter from the Government? Yes.
350. And you knew nothing of the circumstances? No, I knew nothing of them, except that there was a Committee sitting (on the subject), and Mr. Brennan showed me a letter he had received when the inquiry was concluded.
351. You saw that letter? Yes.
352. The purport of which was a reprimand of the Sheriff? Yes, a very severe reprimand.
353. And that reprimand was administered in consequence of a Report from a Committee of this House? Yes, so I gathered.*
354. Do you recollect when it was that he showed you this letter? I do not remember the date.
355. You are aware, however, with reference to this charge, that Mr. Allen was honorably acquitted, and that Mr. Brennan received a reprimand? Yes, but you must permit me to explain. Having been so long in the office, very many circumstances in connection with it are known to me, and Mr. Brennan would mention matters to me that he would not talk of to others. In regard to this case he told me that it was not a charge of his, but that as Sheriff he had felt bound to bring under the notice of the Government a matter that had been brought under his observation by a subordinate officer. That is my remembrance of the affair, that it was no charge of Mr. Brennan's at all.
356. With regard to the next paragraph—the fourth—do you recollect the circumstance alluded to? Yes, I do.
357. Is that statement true? Yes, I have seen the printed Report of this House to that effect.
358. And bearing out the assertion here made by the petitioner? Yes.

* Revised:—No, a Committee appointed by the Government.

359. Do you know of any other charge having been preferred against Mr. Allen, or of any other inquiry being held into his conduct, except this charge that was brought under your notice by Mr. Hargraves, and on which you suspended him—of course I mean only charges involving official investigation? I have had two or three matters of complaint against him, since I have been Sheriff. Matters were brought under my notice immediately after my being appointed, of a most serious nature, against Mr. Allen. G. Uhr, Esq.
3 Dec., 1862.
360. When were you appointed? On the 17th April, 1861.
361. Did anything result from these matters which you say were of so serious a nature? No; that is to say, that I never brought them under the notice of the Government, excepting upon one occasion.
362. By Mr. Cowper: Then you demur, in fact, to the second allegation of the petition? As far as my own knowledge extends, personally, I do.
363. Upon grounds irrespective of this transaction with Taylor? Yes.
364. Do you or do you not consider him to be a proper person to be retained in his position as gaoler, irrespective of Taylor's transaction? Most decidedly not.
365. By Mr. Holroyd: And you state that, in consequence of something that has occurred irrespective of this matter on which he has been dismissed? Yes, in consequence of various circumstances that have occurred from the time of my appointment to the office of Sheriff.
366. And though these circumstances lead you to the opinion that he is not a fit person to hold the office of gaoler, you have never brought them under the notice of the Government? I have not, except once, when I mentioned the matter incidentally.
367. So that if it had not been for this matter of Taylor's, Mr. Allen would still have remained in his office? Possibly.
368. But in passing them over in the manner you have done, have you not by that, to a certain extent, condoned them? I do not know what you mean by condoned.
369. Had you not overlooked them? No, decidedly not; but I did not bring the matter under the notice of the Government, because I had entertained the hope that there would have been a reformation of his conduct. He was an old servant of the Government, and I did not wish for his dismissal so long as I had a hope of his reformation; and to show that I had that hope, I may mention that I twice applied to the Government for an increase of his salary.
370. Whilst these charges were hanging over him? Whilst these matters were known to me.
371. By Mr. Cowper: Were your applications made subsequent to the discovery of these acts of irregularity? Yes, subsequent to some of them—at least I applied once subsequent and once before.
372. By Mr. Holroyd: Does not that appear to you to be a rather paradoxical proceeding, that you should have these charges against him, of so serious a nature as to render him unfit for his office of gaoler, and that notwithstanding, you should apply for an increase in his salary? It may appear so, but then I have reasoned with Mr. Allen on the subject, and pointed out the impropriety of his acts. I always hoped for reformation.
373. Do you know if it has been customary for professional men to pay gaolers for bringing down prisoners on writs of habeas corpus? Yes, I know of its having been done in several cases of habeas corpus ad testificandum.
374. In what way are they made to pay? I believe the solicitor who issues the writ gives the gaoler his fees or expenses, or whatever they are called. They have been in the habit of doing so, I believe.
375. Do you know whether this has been done in all cases of habeas corpus, irrespective of the character of the writ? Yes, subsequent to this transaction a matter was brought under my notice where the gaoler at Maitland had received his expenses at a rate, as I was informed, similar to this.
376. By Mr. Cowper: Was that a criminal case? Yes.
377. Do you recollect what amount he received? He received £5.
378. For bringing the prisoner from Maitland to Sydney? Yes; but on calculation I found it was within the amount allowed by the statute. Maitland is more than 100 miles from Sydney.
379. By Mr. Holroyd: You are aware that mileage is calculated as the crow flies? We cannot do it so there; the roads will not allow of it—they are too bad.
380. By Mr. Cowper: Do you know of any other charge of the kind? No other has been brought under my notice.
381. Have you heard of any other? Yes, I have been told that Mr. Allen made the Maitland gaoler a present of £10 for bringing down one prisoner.
382. By Mr. Holroyd: When you found that the Maitland gaoler had charged £5 for bringing the prisoner down, did you take any steps to remove him? No; the matter was brought under my notice by the Government.
383. Did you afterwards suspend him? No; I called upon him to explain the matter, and he showed me that his expenses were quite equal to the amount he had received.
384. Did you do the same in Mr. Allen's case—did you call on him for an explanation? Yes.
385. Before suspending him? Yes. When Mr. Hargraves brought his charge against Mr. Allen, I proceeded to Parramatta Gaol to inquire into it. Taylor gave his evidence, and on that I suspended Mr. Allen.
386. By the Chairman: Have you got Taylor's statement? The Government have it; I forwarded it with my first letter.
387. Was it taken on oath? It was not.
388. By Mr. Holroyd: Have you since taken steps to prevent the gaoler at Maitland, or other

- G. Uhr, Esq. other gaolers, from receiving these fees, so as to hinder the recurrence of similar circumstances? I have. Immediately after this affair I sent instructions to all the gaolers.
- 3 Dec., 1862. 389. By the Chairman: If the gaoler at Maitland brings a prisoner down to Sydney on habeas corpus, and he is detained more than a day, what does he do with his prisoner during the night? Lodges him in Darlinghurst Gaol.
390. Takes him there at night, and brings him up to Court on the following morning? Yes.
391. By Mr. Holroyd: Have you got any calculation of what the gaoler's expenses of coming down to Sydney from Maitland would come to? No.
392. Do you know what the steamer fare is? I do not know what the steerage fare is, but the cabin fare is 17s. 6d.
393. One turnkey you say would be sufficient? Yes.
394. And he would not go in the cabin? I suppose not.
395. Nor the prisoner either? No.
396. So that the fare for the gaoler and prisoner would be about £1? The gaoler's explanation was that he never received anything until the matter was decided, and then when he spoke about his expenses the attorney presented him with £5.
397. Did the gaoler go down with the prisoner himself, or did he send a turnkey? He came down with the prisoner himself. I am not aware that he had a turnkey with him.
398. By the Chairman: Did you take any other evidence against Mr. Allen besides this statement of Taylor's? No, nothing else; except that Mr. Hargraves said that Taylor was a poor man who could not afford to pay such a charge, and who had to borrow the money from him in order to pay Mr. Allen. Mr. Hargraves was with me when Taylor made his complaint, and he then told me about Taylor being a poor man.
399. Did it not seem to you a very singular thing that Mr. Hargraves should have lent Taylor the exact money required? I do not know; I only know that he told me Taylor was a poor man, and that he had lent him the money.
400. Then the only things upon which you acted were this statement of Taylor's and the personal communication of Mr. Hargraves? They were all.
401. Have you any idea of the character of the man Taylor? No. I never saw him before Mr. Hargraves brought him to me.
402. The son was charged with horse-stealing, I think? Yes, but was acquitted.
403. By Mr. Cowper: You have stated that, irrespective of this matter of Taylor's, Mr. Allen was unfit for the office of gaoler,—will you state anything definite on which you form that opinion? Yes. Very shortly after my appointment some accounts were sent down to the Sheriff's Office from the Parramatta Gaol, with a letter from Mr. Allen, stating that they had never been paid. I was appointed on the 17th April, 1861, as Sheriff, and on the 10th June following I received certain accounts, with a letter from Mr. Allen, stating that the accounts enclosed had only lately been rendered. At this time there was a new accountant in my office, the Under Sheriff under me having held the office of accountant under Mr. Brennan. When he was promoted, he instructed the new accountant to refer to him on all matters in which he felt any difficulty. These accounts, although they have Mr. Allen's certificate, and were accompanied by his explanation that they had only lately been rendered, yet being dated in May and June, 1860, the accountant had some hesitation about them, and he consequently referred them to the Under Sheriff, for his advice respecting them. The accounts which were sent by Mr. Allen, in his letter of 16th June, I now hand in. (Vide Appendix B.) The Under Sheriff fancied he remembered some of the items, and he at once referred back to the books, and found that they had been paid. I produce a copy of the first accounts rendered, procured from the Audit Office, to which they had been sent after having been paid. (Vide Appendix C.)
404. When did you find this out? Some time in June, 1861. My letter to the gaoler at Parramatta is dated the 17th June, 1861.
405. Did you in that letter point out to Mr. Allen that he was attempting to pass accounts of a fraudulent character? I did not; the idea of fraud did not occur to me at the time. I considered it grossly improper. Here is my letter. (Vide Appendix D.) I also produce Mr. Allen's letter of the 10th June, to which the above is in reply. (Vide Appendix E.)
406. Did you consider this to be an attempt to obtain payment of an account twice over? I thought it most objectionable; but as he was an old servant of the Government, and as I was then but young in the office of Sheriff, I was disposed to look less severely upon it than perhaps I ought to have done.
407. Did it not strike you as a very serious offence, that a person entrusted with the duty of certifying to the correctness of accounts should thus lend his assistance towards the perpetration of a fraud? No doubt it was a most serious offence, but Mr. Allen's high character disarmed suspicion at the time.
408. Did you regard it as an oversight, or as a deliberately planned fraud? It appeared to me to be a grossly improper act.
409. You regarded it, then, only as an improper act? As a grossly improper act, of which I should have taken more notice had I not been so young in office at the time.
410. What other charges have you against Mr. Allen? The second charge is this—that in his letter of the 10th June he sent in an account for extra firewood, said to have been supplied by the contractor between September, 1858, and March, 1860.
411. It is alluded to in the letter you have just laid before the Committee? It is.
412. As regards the other accounts, did the parties acquiesce in the propriety of your decision as to their having been previously paid? There could be no doubt whatever about it. It was the Under Sheriff who brought the matter under my notice. As far as I was concerned, I had instructed the accountant to prepare cheques for the money, for Mr. Allen's certificate, with his accompanying letter of explanation, were sufficient to warrant me in so doing.

doing. But the accountant, who has to look more narrowly into these accounts, observed (what I did not) that the accounts were dated so far back, and therefore he referred to the Under Sheriff for his advice, and in that way the matter was discovered.

G. Uhr, Esq.

3 Dec., 1862.

413. And you state now confidently to this Committee that subsequent inquiry satisfied you that these accounts had been paid? There is no question about it, as regards the accounts for forage, &c.

414. So that there must have been gross negligence, or an attempt at fraud, on the part of Mr. Allen? It could not be otherwise.

415. Will you proceed now with your second charge? The second charge is this account for extra firewood supplied from September, 1858, to March, 1860, and amounting to £48 5s. 5d. That account I now hand in. (Vide Appendix F.) It is very probable that this would have been paid, notwithstanding the error we had discovered in the other accounts, but that it happened that Mr. Innes, the second clerk in my office, was clerk of the gaol at Parramatta during the period over which this account ranged, and it was his duty in that capacity to check the accounts as rendered by the contractors. Having looked through this account, he assured me that not a single item of it was due, for no extra firewood whatever had been supplied during that period, and consequently not a farthing was due to the contractor on that account.

416. By Mr. Holroyd: Who is Mr. Innes? He was clerk in the Parramatta Gaol, and was afterwards promoted into the Sheriff's Office.

417. By whom? By Mr. Brennan.

418. Is he not a relative of Mr. Brennan's? I believe so; he is a connection, not a relative.

419. Is this account certified by Mr. Allen? It is.

420. As having been furnished by whom? By the then contractor, Patrick Hayes.

421. By Mr. Cowper: You did not pay this account? No; I visited the gaol shortly afterwards, and took that opportunity of speaking to him on the subject. I said that there was no doubt but that everything due to the contractor had been paid.*

422. However, the contractor did not further prosecute his claim? No, there was no further application on the subject.

423. What was your opinion on the subject—do you think there was collusion between Hayes and Allen? I have the authority of Mr. Innes for saying that he had examined all the accounts for the firewood supplied to the gaol, and that there were no such items as these amongst them—in fact, that no extra firewood had been supplied.

424. By the Chairman: When did he examine these accounts? At the Parramatta Gaol, when he was clerk there.

425. But not these particular items—I presume he only spoke from memory? Yes, quite so.

426. By Mr. Cowper: Have you any other transaction of a suspicious character, or calculated to excite a want of confidence in Mr. Allen's probity? There was an account rendered for medical comforts—for supplies furnished to the gaol hospital, amounting to £1 19s. 6d.

427. By Mr. Holroyd: Was it after this that you recommended Mr. Allen for an increase of salary? Yes.† When I received this account for £1 19s. 6d. I paid the money, and sent the voucher down to the Audit Office, without observing that it had not the signature of Dr. Pringle, the Visiting Surgeon of the gaol. The mistake was soon discovered in the Audit Office, and when I received the account back, I caused it to be sent up to the gaol for Dr. Pringle's certificate. His letter in reply to mine, together with the account as sent in, and as afterwards reduced and certified, I now hand in. (Vide Appendix G.)

428. Were these sent in a letter? I cannot say.

429. Where is the letter—have you it with you? No, but the accountant will prove the sending a cheque in the usual way.

430. What is this James Devlin? He was the contractor at the time. It was returned to me from the Audit Office because Dr. Pringle's certificate was wanting, and on sending it up for this certificate the overcharge was discovered.

431. This was not brought by you under the notice of the Government? It was not. The Government lost nothing by it. I had to pay a surcharge of 18s. 6d. on the difference of the two accounts. The Auditor General's receipt and correspondence on the subject I now hand in. (Vide Appendix H.)

432. By Mr. Cowper: The second voucher for £1 1s. is the proper one for the articles really supplied? Yes; and before sending it in I saw Mr. Austin on the subject, who told me he was satisfied that none of these other articles had been supplied.

433. By Mr. Holroyd: Was it after this third charge of yours against Mr. Allen that you recommended him to the Government for an increase of salary? No, it was before that.

434. Then the two occasions upon which you recommended him must have been within two or three months of each other? No; they were made at the ordinary time, when we were preparing the estimate of our department for the Government.

435. By the Chairman: Is this a monthly or a quarterly account? A monthly account. There is a statement of the date on the face of it.

436. Do you know if there were any people in the hospital during that time? There are always some few in hospital.

437. How many are there on an average? The last time I saw the patients there were only five of them.

438. Would they not require a supply of soap during the month? That I cannot say.

439.

* ADDED (on revision):—Excepting the account for wood, which would be brought under the notice of Government, I would not pay without being instructed by the Colonial Secretary.

† Revised:—No.

- G. Uhr, Esq. 439. But do you not think it absolutely necessary that they should use some? Of course, but I cannot say that it was necessary to draw any from the contractor.
- 3 Dec., 1862. 440. By Mr. Cowper: What is the next ground of complaint you have against Mr. Allen? In September, 1861, it was brought under my notice that Mr. Allen was permitting the prisoners to do work for the officers of the gaol. On the 10th November, 1859, I received a letter from the Colonial Secretary's Office strictly prohibiting such work being done. I now produce it. (Vide Appendix I.) A copy of that letter was forwarded to Mr. Allen, as well as to the other gaolers of the Colony. When the matter was brought under my notice that work was being done for the officers, I instituted an inquiry into the matter. Dr. Greenup and Mr. Langley were present at the time, and Mr. Allen at once admitted that he had permitted the prisoners to do this work for the officers. I told him that it was contrary to the express instructions of the Government, as given in the Colonial Secretary's letter of the 10th November, 1859. Dr. Greenup said that he was not aware that there had been any letter received prohibiting the work being done. Mr. Allen said that he had express authority from the late Sheriff for having work done for the officers of the gaol, with the stipulation that they should pay the same price for the articles as were obtained for them by auction. Thinking that if this were the case there might be some excuse for Mr. Allen's breach of instructions, I asked the late Sheriff, Mr. Brennan, if he had given him any such permission, and he said that Mr. Allen's assertion was utterly false.
441. What work was it? Making boots for the officers.
442. Did you find the amount due for making them credited in the accounts? I did not look into that. There was no imputation against Mr. Allen on the ground of the money not having been paid, but solely that he was permitting work to be done in the face of a direct order to the contrary. To excuse himself he said he had authority for doing so, and this I found to be false. It is so evident that by permitting such a system of corruption would be sure to creep in, that I peremptorily ordered him to discontinue it.
443. Is there any other irregularity that he is chargeable with? Yes, in connection with this same matter. I consider him to have been guilty of a great irregularity in not bringing the prohibition contained in the letter of 10th November under the notice of the Visiting Justice, who told me that he did not know of such a prohibition having been issued; and it is one of the duties of a gaoler to bring all the communications from the Sheriff under the notice of the Visiting Justice. There is another matter—it is only a trifling affair, but it shows Mr. Allen's continued disregard of instructions. It is with regard to a stable in the gaol, and the property of Mr. Allen. In Mr. Brennan's time it was found necessary to have a Government horse for the use of the Colonial Architect's Department. The matter was brought under notice, and it was suggested that the animal should be kept in the gaol. The Government, in a letter from the Principal Under Secretary, dated 22nd June, 1860, issued instructions that the gaoler at Parramatta was to remove the materials of his stable inside the gaol, if he considered them to be worth removing. That letter I now hand in. (Vide Appendix K.) After my appointment the Colonial Architect sent me this letter, dated 2nd April, 1861, a copy of which I now hand in. (Vide Appendix L.) Subsequently to this I had a communication with Mr. Allen, the result of which was that I thought an arrangement might be made by which he might have the privilege of keeping his horse in the gaol. I therefore tried to reason the matter with Mr. Close, as it appeared that there was room enough in the stable for the two horses, but he objected to the arrangement, because he said it had reached the Colonial Architect, that whilst the Government horse was there he was starved. I therefore sent Mr. Allen the letter of 22nd April, 1861, a copy of which I now hand in. (Vide Appendix M.) In this matter both Mr. Brennan's instructions and mine were entirely disregarded by Mr. Allen; and subsequently the Colonial Architect sent me in a bill for the cost of his horse. This I, of course, declined to pay.
444. What do you mean by sending you a bill for the cost of his horse? For the expenses entailed by keeping him outside the gaol.
445. Have you any other charge against him? In January, this year, I visited the gaol, and I found a prisoner in a cell with a chain round his waist, and in a state of nudity.
446. By the Chairman: Was it a man or a woman? A man. The chain was so tightly drawn round him that I could not introduce my fingers between the man's flesh and the chain. I was certainly so astonished and annoyed that I scarcely felt able to trust myself to speak to Mr. Allen; but I restrained myself, and walked out of the cell, and beckoned Mr. Allen to follow me. We went to the lower part of the landing, and I then spoke to him of the impropriety of adopting such a course of conduct towards the prisoners. I told him that I could not permit such a thing, and that he must have the irons removed. At the same time I said that I would allow it to appear as if it was his own act, but that he must have the irons taken off at once. In September, at the time when I discovered about the prisoners making boots for the officers, a circumstance was brought under my notice of a prisoner being handcuffed in such a way that he could not relieve nature with decency; this was clearly proved to me in the presence of Dr. Greenup and Mr. Langley. I then told Mr. Allen, but certainly in much milder terms than such an offence merited, never to let such a thing occur again.
447. Was this the same man that you afterwards found chained by the body? Yes, the same. The chains that were used to fasten round him I have here with me now. They are a sort of bullock chain, and were drawn so tight round his body that you could not introduce your finger between the chain and the flesh.
448. Was he free, or was he chained to the cell in any way? He was walking about, but his arms were pinioned.
449. By Mr. Cowper: Did Dr. Greenup, as Visiting Justice, appear to know of the man being chained in this way—was he surprised at seeing him in this state? I did not observe how how he appeared to regard it. I spoke to Mr. Allen on the subject, in his and Mr. Langley's presence, but I forget whether or not I had any conversation with him. G. Uhr, Esq.

450. By Mr. Holroyd: Had he been aware of this handcuffing and chaining before you saw the man? I am not aware—I never asked him if he was or not. 3 Dec., 1862.

451. By Mr. Cowper: But was not this apparently brutal treatment afterwards made the subject of conversation between you and him? No; he was present when the matter was brought under my notice with regard to the man being handcuffed night and day, but I do not remember any conversation with him.

452. Who brought it under your notice? The prisoner. I witnessed the chaining myself, and on the day following Mr. Allen's suspension I found the prisoner in the cell chained in the same way as I have previously described, except that his wrists were not fastened, and he was clothed; but he showed me his wrists. They were very much excoriated, and he said that this arose from his being handcuffed so tightly that the iron had been forced into his flesh. This statement was confirmed by Mr. Austin, who stated that he found the handcuffs so forced into the flesh of the wrists that he at once ordered them to be taken off.

453. Was any reason assigned for this handcuffing in the first instance, or for this subsequent chaining round the body? When I spoke to Mr. Allen, he said he had been compelled to restrain the man, as he tore his clothes to pieces. I told him there was a very simple remedy for that—there was a cell in which he could hurt nothing, and there was no occasion for this chaining.

454. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you ascertain whether this man was put into handcuffs or was chained by the orders of Mr. Allen, or by those of the Visiting Justice? No, I never ascertained.

455. You never made inquiry whether this had been done by Mr. Allen on his own motion, or under the direction of the Visiting Magistrate? No, I did not.

456. By Mr. Cowper: Is there any other charge? When the late clerk of the Parramatta Gaol was guilty of the recent defalcations, I spoke to Mr. Allen with regard to his great neglect of duty in permitting the clerk to have charge of the prisoners' money. In answer to this, Mr. Allen said that he had been instructed by Mr. Brennan, when Sheriff, to place the money of the prisoners in the hands of the clerk, and their trinkets or other valuables in the care of the chief turnkey. This was not a satisfactory explanation for me, although it might have been for him, so I took an opportunity of speaking to Mr. Brennan on the subject, and he informed me that Mr. Allen's statement was utterly false—that he never gave any such instructions.

457. By the Chairman: You are aware that Mr. Brennan made certain charges against Mr. Allen, and that instead of proving those charges he utterly failed in so doing, and was himself censured by the Government? I am aware that a difference existed, and that Mr. Brennan was censured.

458. And all these denials of having given Mr. Allen instructions were subsequent to this censure? Yes.

459. By Mr. Cowper: Is there anything else that you have against Mr. Allen? There were reports reached me, upon which I gave certain instructions, but that is a matter which did not happen in my time. There is another matter in regard to the prisoners' food. I found, before Mr. Allen's suspension, that he was appropriating the refuse food of the prisoners, and I asked Mr. Brennan how it was that he had permitted such a state of things as that to exist in the Parramatta Gaol, when it had been found necessary to stop it elsewhere. He then assured me that he had strictly prohibited the gaoler at Parramatta from using the refuse food.

460. How was it that he appropriated it—did he keep a large stock of pigs or poultry? I have only heard so.

461. Did you speak to Mr. Allen about this? I did.

462. What did he say? He said that he had received no instructions to deviate from the old practice.

463. The old practice being —? For the gaoler to make what use he thought proper of the refuse food.

464. By Mr. Holroyd: Do you know if he had any such instructions? I do not—not of my own knowledge. I know that such instructions were sent to Darlinghurst Gaol, and I have Mr. Brennan's authority for saying that they were given by himself to the gaoler personally.

465. By Mr. Sutherland: Have you issued any such instructions? Yes, to Darlinghurst and Parramatta Gaols I have issued specific instructions. I sent them to all but the minor gaols.

466. Did you send any to Mr. Allen? Not in Mr. Allen's time, because I was not aware that formal instructions had not been sent there; I believed that instructions had been given; nor was I aware that he was acting so until shortly before his suspension.

467. By Mr. Holroyd: Having all these charges against Mr. Allen, can you tell us how it happens that you have not reported any of these circumstances to the Government—charges of fraud, of disobedience of orders and of instructions, and of negligence—had you evidence in support of them? As to the facts alleged there is plenty of evidence to prove their truth; but with regard to the motives that influenced me in not reporting them to the Government, they are simply these: Mr. Allen was an old servant of the Government, and I was only a very young head of a department, and I did not wish one of my first acts on taking office to be the dismissal of an old public officer from the service. Besides, as I said before, I did hope that matters would mend—that there would be none of these complaints, for I really did think that the salary was too small for such an office as that of gaoler at so important a gaol. It was on that account that I recommended an increase of salary, and I thought that when he obtained it there would have been an improvement in him.

- G. Uhr, Esq. 468. And that is your only reason for not mentioning these charges to the Government? The only reason. I always entertained the hope that he would improve.
- 3 Dec., 1862. 469. By the Chairman: With regard to these items for firewood supplied in 1858-59-60, have you made an examination of that account by which you are able to say that the whole of those items have been previously paid? No; I do not say that anything has been paid on that account. It is for extra firewood, and I say that I have Mr. Ennis' authority that none has been delivered.
470. The account does not state on the face of it that it is for extra firewood? Yes, at the head.
471. And you say that no extra firewood has been delivered in these years? Yes, Mr. Ennis is very clear on that point. He says that before he left the gaol he checked the account for the firewood that remained unpaid for at that time. He had been instructed to do this, on account of a difference of opinion arising in regard to the supply of firewood; Mr. Darvall, then Police Magistrate, being of opinion that the quantity allowed by Government was amply sufficient, and that it ought not to be exceeded.
472. Was that direction given in writing? I am not aware.
473. When any alteration of the practice of a public institution is made, is it not in writing? It would certainly be the more proper way to have it in writing, but there are many important orders that are not so given.
474. In what way does Mr. Ennis arrive at the fact that this wood was not supplied? He explained to me that the accounts were rendered monthly for the firewood supplied to the gaol, and that he had to check them in order to see that the charges made were in exact accordance with the quantity of wood actually supplied. Wishing to be perfectly clear on the subject, I then asked him if there had been more wood supplied by the contractor than had been paid for in the accounts rendered, and he said there had not.
475. Upon what principle could he say this—he could only speak from the books he himself kept? Because he stated he had gone through the accounts with the person who kept the account of wood sent in to the gaol on the part of the contractor.
476. Did he give any reason for going specially through these accounts? He said it was his duty to check all the accounts for items supplied to the gaol.
477. And then that he specially recollected this circumstance of going through the firewood account? Yes.
478. Dr. Pringle, I presume, is the doctor of the gaol hospital? He is the Visiting Surgeon.
479. Did he sign the voucher for medical comforts which was sent in in the first instance, and which you paid? No; it was because his signature was not appended that the account was returned to me by the Audit Office as informal.
480. You sent this account to the gaol for his signature? Yes, the account returned me by the Audit Office.
481. Is this the original account that was sent in? No, that is a copy procured from the Audit Office.
482. It contains, I presume, the same items as the original? It does.
483. The voucher was returned to you in consequence of not having the Visiting Surgeon's signature? Yes.
484. And you in consequence forwarded it to Parramatta to Dr. Pringle? Yes.
485. In order to obtain his signature, vouching that the articles had been received? Yes.
486. And in answer to that you received this note of July 9? Yes.
487. This note only speaks of wood and oil being in dispute, whilst the voucher has only one bottle of oil entered on it, and has no charge at all for wood,—is not this some mistake of yours, and does not the note refer to something else? No; there were other accounts sent up with this, and they were not returned at this time.
488. Have you referred to the accounts previous to the 1st January, 1862, to ascertain if this vinegar, soap, and oil has been really supplied? When I sent this down I requested Mr. Austin to say if he was clearly of opinion that these articles had not been supplied, and he said that he was perfectly clear.
489. Did you make any search through the accounts? No. Having referred the matter to two officers, and received their report on it, I required nothing further.
490. Did you yourself make any examination of the gaol books? No; I took my information from Dr. Pringle's note and the declaration of Mr. Austin.
491. Did you ever report any of these irregularities to Mr. Allen, and call upon him to explain them? There are before the Committee copies of my letters on the subject, addressed to Mr. Allen. That is with regard to some of the matters; as to the rest, I have spoken to him personally on the subject.

APPENDIX.

A.

H. M. Gaol, Parramatta,
June 18, 1862.

Sir,

With reference to my conversation with you on the subject of my suspension, and of the statement of the man Taylor, that I had refused to produce prisoner George Taylor upon a receipt of a writ of habeas corpus until I first received a fee of three guineas, I now beg to enclose a declaration made by Mr. Whiteside, a respectable resident of this town, who was present when Taylor presented the writ, and who heard the conversation that ensued, which will, I trust, in your opinion completely refute Taylor's statement, the truth of which I have already emphatically denied, and as to which I am also prepared to make a declaration, if you consider such necessary.

I have, &c.,
THOMAS ALLEN.

To the Sheriff,
Sydney.

Mr. Cowper having read this, said it did not alter the case, which had been decided upon.

DECLARATION.

New South Wales, }
Parramatta, to wit. }

I, Thomas Whiteside, of Parramatta, in the Colony of New South Wales, do solemnly and sincerely declare, that I was present on Saturday, the thirty-first day of May last, in company with Mr. Thomas Duke Allen, the keeper of the Parramatta Gaol, when a man and woman came up to Mr. Allen. The man pulled out of his pocket a paper or parchment—I believe parchment—which he handed to Mr. Allen, who read it. I heard Mr. Allen say to the man, "Solicitors usually give me three guineas;" the man then took out of his pocket a roll of bank notes (as I took them to be), and took two or three of them off the roll, and handed them to Mr. Allen, and returned the remainder of the roll to his pocket. The man alluded to also gave Mr. Allen some silver or metal money, the amount of which I do not know; we were at Mr. Allen's house, near the gaol at Parramatta, at the time spoken of. And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and in virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

THOMAS WHITESIDE.

Taken and declared at the Police Office at } Parramatta, in the said Colony, this } 18th day of June, 1862, before me, }

Sheriff's Office,
Sydney, 17 June, 1861.

MEMO. :—With reference to your letter of the 10th instant, forwarding accounts of Patrick Hayes (late contractor) for forage, lime, and charcoal supplied to Parramatta Gaol for April and May, 1860, and which you state have only lately been rendered by him, you are informed that an account for one hundred and fifty bushels of charcoal, twenty bushels of lime, and thirty days' forage supplied from the 1st to the 30th April, 1860, and duly certified by you as the quantity supplied by Hayes, was paid on the 9th May, the cheque having been sent to yourself as part payment for articles purchased by you which had been neglected to be supplied by Hayes.

In the month of June an account was received from you for one hundred and fifty bushels of charcoal, ten bushels of lime, and thirty-one days' forage, from 1st to 31st May, 1860, which was paid to Mr. Badcock, as authorized by Mr. Hayes.

As to the account for firewood supplied in excess from September, 1858, I must decline to entertain it, as it has been so long kept in arrear.

It being evident that the charcoal, forage, and lime supplied in April and May, 1860, have thus previously been paid for, you are instructed for the future to be more careful in the accounts certified by you as correct, as, in addition to the accounts having been paid before, a claim was made for a larger quantity than had actually been supplied. For the future, therefore, you will take care that no accounts for the gaol under your charge remain longer than three months before they are forwarded to this office, and that the quantities certified for by you are previously ascertained to be correct.

Sir,

In reply to your memo. relative to the Revd. Armitage and Barlow, I beg to enclose you their respective letters upon the subject. They decline to give a declaration, but I trust this will answer the end in view. I beg further to state that I brought the matter before Mr. Allen, who declines to have anything to say upon the subject, only that he believes the articles mentioned in voucher No. 8 were had. He also declines to pay the amount in question, viz., £1 19s. 6d.

I have also brought the subject before the Visiting Surgeon, relative to the consumption of the extra wood and oil, and beg to enclose you his letter upon the subject.

With regard to the abstract you sent me relative to the supply of wood and oil necessary for summer and winter months, I am endeavouring to find what is actually required, by weighing out the wood for the various fires, and also the quantity of oil necessary, so that there may be no misunderstanding for the future.

Sir,

With reference to your letter of the 4th instant, requesting that instructions may be given to the Colonial Architect to cause a stable to be erected for the horse of the gaoler at Parramatta Gaol, and to your communication of the 11th of this month on the same subject, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that he does not think that the Government should erect a stable for the gaoler's horse.

If the materials of the stable inside are worth removing by him, perhaps that will be the best way of arranging matters.

Sir,

Taking into consideration the Architect's recent letter respecting the Government horse, the very limited space within the walls of the Parramatta Gaol, I do not see my way clear to an authority in opposition to the Colonial Secretary's letter of the 22nd June last; I must, therefore, request that you will comply with the instructions contained in the Colonial Secretary's letter, with regard to the stabling in the gaol belonging to you.

*Colonial Architect's Office,
2 April, 1861.*

Sir,

I do myself the honor to request that instructions may be given to the gaoler at Parramatta, with reference to the employment and stabling of the horse employed upon the works at that establishment. The horse in question is not fully employed, in consequence of the carter being for a portion of his time engaged as messenger, and for other purposes, and it is only when he is spared from these employments that his attention is given to the horse and cart.

The Government horse is at present stabled outside the works, and I am informed that a change is intended to be made for this accommodation; there is, however, a stable within the gaol in which a private horse, belonging to Mr. Allen, is kept. I am not aware whether the gaol regulations permit the gaoler to keep a horse within the establishment, but I consider the animal belonging to the Government should first be cared for, and expense on that account be avoided.

I would therefore suggest, that a person be employed to act as carter and attend to the Government horse, and beg to request you will give directions to the gaoler to remove his horse from the establishment.

502. Do you recollect about what time that was? No further than the book will show.
503. Can you show me in the book? Yes.
504. John McCallaghan, I think, is his name? Yes. (Witness referred to page 5 of charge book.)
505. This appears to be on the 26th of July; what year is that—the book does not state what year? It would be last July.
506. July, 1861? Yes.
507. The first entry is—"John McCallaghan, for mutinous conduct in No. 2 wing, this morning, when the prisoners were falling in for roll call. When he was ordered to fall in by Turnkey McEwins he turned round in a very sulky manner and made use of a very improper expression, by saying—"Who cares for you—is it for you that I would be silent!" This was a charge preferred by turnkey McInnes? Yes.
508. For which he received three days in a cell? Yes.
509. Whose signature is this attached? It is the signature of Dr. Greenup.
510. Then again it goes on, on the same day—"Secondly, for disobedience of orders, by refusing to go to the cells when ordered by the principal turnkey, and making use of threatening language, by saying—"Come on; the first man that comes in here I'll knock his bloody brains out!" at the same time taking up a stool in his right hand to put his threat into execution." That is preferred by the principal turnkey? Yes.
511. What is the name of the principal turnkey? Mc Cormack—he has left.
512. For that he was committed for trial, by whom? By Dr. Greenup.
513. Here is a third charge—"For violently assaulting turnkey Connor while in the execution of his duty, by striking him a violent blow on the head with a stone, which gave him a severe cut." That was preferred by turnkey Connor, and for it the man was sentenced to be put in irons for forty-eight hours;—was that sentence confirmed by Dr. Greenup? It was sanctioned by him.
514. Are there any other charges in this book against the man McCallaghan, with the records of the sentences? Yes, on the 11th of November, 1861, there is this entry—"John McCallaghan, for mutinous conduct and disobeying the orders of the gaoler, by refusing to have his irons struck off previous to going to Quarter Sessions at Parramatta, where he was committed to take his trial for an assault on turnkey Connor."
515. This was preferred by the gaoler and the principal turnkey? Yes.
516. And for that offence twenty-four hours in the cells was his sentence, by order of Dr. Greenup? Yes.
517. And to be kept separate? Yes.
518. On the same day, again, he is charged with having threatened to take the life of the gaoler the first opportunity that he could get, and saying, "that he could eat him at once," and "that he would meet the fate of John Price soon." That was preferred on the same authority? Yes.
519. Do you know if there was anything done in reference to that? No.
520. There is no record filled up? No.
521. And here again he is charged with "making use of abusive language to the gaoler in the streets of Parramatta, when on his way to the Court-house, by saying repeatedly, "There goes Allen, the bloody tyrant!" This was preferred by turnkey McInnes and turnkey Harrison? Yes.
522. Have you any other record of what was done? No; the Visiting Magistrate is the person who could answer that question.
523. By Mr. Cowper: Was he tried for that offence (26 July) for which he is put down as having been committed for trial? I believe he was, but I do not know.
524. Here again is another entry on the 28th November—"For violently assaulting turnkey Connor whilst in the execution of his duty—getting the prisoner's cell cleaned, and the

- Mr. H. Hargrave. "prisoner shaved—by striking him on the face, which caused two wounds, one on the nose and one on the upper lip; also taking up the stone to strike him with, but was prevented from doing so by turnkey Connor." That was preferred by turnkeys Connor and Rispen. It appears that he was brought before the Visiting Justice on the 4th December, and ordered into close confinement for one calendar month, and that his sentence would expire on the 4th January. That order seems to be signed by Dr. Greenup himself? Yes, and there was a second Magistrate.
- 10 Dec., 1862.
525. You know whose writing this is on the 14th April, 1862, I presume? Yes.
526. When did you say you joined the establishment? At the end of April.
527. Is there anything else against this man? Yes; that on the 14th April is, "for mutinous conduct in No. 2 wing at dinner time, by coming, in a very excited manner, and making a false report to the principal warder, by saying that his bread was bad and not fit to be used, and that they would not have the doctor's decision,—the same being inspected by the gaoler and the surgeon and was pronounced good."
528. This was preferred by the principal warder and warders Bourke, Stergest, Neale, and Colvin—are these warders the same as the turnkeys? They are all turnkeys except the principal one.
529. Doctor Greenup sentenced him to three days in the cell for that? Yes.
530. Here again, on the 24th April, you have got another entry—"Making use of threatening language when removing from the cells in No. 3 wing to the cells in No. 1 wing." There is no record of anything having been done in that case—can you give any information in reference to the matter—you were in the gaol at that time? I had just come.
531. And you do not know what was done? No.
532. Does not the Visiting Justice inquire into all the entries made here? Yes.
533. Is there anything else against this man? Here is another entry, but no punishment seems to have been inflicted.
534. On the 14th May last—"For making use of abusive language to warder Flanders when getting his cell cleaned and searched"—nothing seems to have been done on that occasion? No.
535. Is there anything else against him? Yes, here is an entry on the 25th May.
536. "For violently assaulting the head gaoler by striking him a blow in the face when in the execution of his duty, inspecting the prison, on Sunday morning at eight o'clock." The head gaoler, warder Armstrong, and warder Mather, preferred these charges, and there is an entry—"Both counts having been heard, the Court sentenced the prisoner to close confinement for one calendar month." That was before Dr. Greenup and Mr. Langley? Yes.
537. Here again, on the same day (May 25th) is an entry—"John M'Callaghan, for maliciously destroying the head gaoler's coat, by violently seizing it by the collar and breast and tearing it down, during the execution of his duty, inspecting the prison, on Sunday morning at 8 o'clock." This was preferred by the same three persons, and for which the prisoner was sentenced to be put on confinement? Yes.
538. Is there anything else? Yes, on the 1st of last September—"Mutinous conduct in H. M. Gaol, Parramatta, on the morning of the 2nd instant, by refusing to go to work; also causing a disturbance in the gaol, when locked up in the cells, by singing and shouting." For that he was reprimanded.
539. Have you any other book? Yes. (Thin unbound book produced.)
540. What do you call this book? It is a punishment book, the same as the other.
541. This (unbound book) was finished before you commenced that (large bound book)? Yes.
542. Here is an entry on the 15th May—what year will that be? 1861.
543. "For violently assaulting turnkey Sadlier, when on duty in the hard labour yard, by striking him a blow with his shut fist in the face, and repeating the assault until turnkey Hergest came to the assistance of turnkey Sadlier, and got him outside the gate." For this he received six months in irons, and the first week in the cells. That sentence is signed here by Mr. M'Rae and Dr. Greenup? Yes.
544. Do you know at what time this man was confined in the cell in irons? No.
545. Have you any idea what time this man has been in the Parramatta Gaol? No; I could tell by his warrant; I could not tell in any other way.
546. By producing all the warrants you mean? Yes, by finding out his particular sentence.
547. Have you looked through these books with reference to these offences? Of that case?
548. With reference to this particular man's case? No.
549. Have you got a record of his sentence—six months in irons? Yes.
550. Did he perform that sentence of six months in Parramatta Gaol? I cannot say.
551. Where do they send the prisoners to when they are sentenced by the Visiting Justice—to some other gaol? I never saw a sentence so long as that.
552. Six months in irons—the first week in the cells? Yes.
553. You have seen this man, I suppose, frequently since you have been in the gaol? Oh, yes.
554. Is his conduct that of a mild man—of a well-behaved man—or is he violent? He is a very quiet man now.
555. How long is it since that change has taken place in his character? I have not noticed in him anything incorrect for the last four or five months.
556. By Mr. Cowper: That is since you have been there, is it not? No, that is six months.
557. By the Chairman: Did you not read a record of an offence committed by him in the month of September? Yes, he has been once or twice guilty of improper conduct.

558. How many times has he been brought up before the Magistrates during the last six months? Twice, I think.

559. I think you told us oftener than that? I would have looked closer into the books if I had thought I should have been asked about that.

Mr.
H. Hargrave.

10 Dec., 1862.

560. What other books have you with you? The ration book.

561. Have you any book in the gaol in which things are entered which are received from contractors for the use of the gaol? Of the things received from the contractors?

562. Yes, or from any other persons? We send out a requisition for the things, and they send them in, and we enter them in the ration book at the end of the month, and furnish an account to the Government.

563. Have you a book in which, when anything comes into the gaol, you make an entry? Yes, if we receive anything from the stationery department we make an entry in the book.

564. Do you make requisitions for everything required? Yes.

565. Do you make an entry of these? Yes.

566. And if the things are received do you make an entry of it? Yes.

567. Where is that book? Up in Parramatta.

568. What do you call it? The requisition book.

569. What does the ration book purport to be—a daily return of the rations supplied to the prisoners? Yes.

570. Does it show what wood and other things have been received? The wood we have allowed so much a month, which is not exceeded.

571. Have you seen any extra wood received? Not during my time. I have seen nothing extra worth noticing.

572. What extras have you seen? A little wood at the commencement of Mr. Green's time perhaps.

573. Where do you keep an entry of the things supplied for the use of the hospital? There is a book for the purpose of containing what the doctor writes for.

574. By Mr. Cowper: Do you keep it, or the dispenser? The dispenser.

575. By the Chairman: That has not been given you to produce here to-day? No.

576. By Mr. Cowper: Who is the dispenser now, Mr. Austin? Yes.

577. By the Chairman: How long has he been dispenser? I think he has been twelve months—I do not know exactly.

578. Will you produce the ration book, if you please? Yes. (Ration book produced.)

579. Can you refer to the supplies furnished to the gaol in 1858—September, October, November, and December? No, this book only goes to 1861.

580. How far before it? I have never seen any other ration book.

581. This commences in the year 1861? Yes.

582. There must be one in the gaol? I cannot find it.

583. Do you mean to say there is no ration book until that—it is dated October, 1861? Neither Mr. Green nor myself can find it; we have searched everywhere for it.

584. I understood you to say that any things supplied for the hospital would be entered in a book which is held by the dispenser? Yes, it is always entered in those sort of vouchers. It is signed by the Visiting Justice and also by the gaoler and contractor.

585. Will you tell me exactly, as far as you can remember, when things are required for the hospital how are they ordered, in what way are they received, and what is the course pursued? The doctor orders it; the dispenser writes out an order for the different articles required, and then it goes into the office.

586. What office? Where I sit. It goes there, and goes out in the evening to the person who supplies the articles; and the contractor, in a day or two, sends in the supply, and we keep a record of it.

587. Show me the book where you keep entries of things supplied during 1862, commencing at January, if you please. (Book produced.) Here is an item I see ordered by the doctor—a bottle of oil—what date was that ordered? On the 4th of the month.

588. Whose memorandum is that? That is the late prison clerk's.

589. By Mr. Cowper: What was his name? Williams.

590. By the Chairman: And when the doctor ordered anything to be supplied to the dispenser it was entered by the clerk? Yes.

591. What date is that? The 4th of the month.

592. Now look at this entry: Here are "three bottles of brandy," and "a dozen boxes of matches"? That is ordered by the doctor.

593. Half a gallon of vinegar is put down here, and forty-four pounds of soap extra? I could not say for that; there is an allowance of soap.

594. I am merely asking you if these are the entries of things ordered by the doctor? Yes, but I could not speak for that.

595. Whose writing is this—this is not written by the same person, is it? I think not.

596. By Mr. Cowper: Did you say prison clerk? Yes.

597. Was he a prisoner himself? Yes.

598. Not a free man? No.

599. By the Chairman: Are these the whole of the entries for the month of January? Yes.

600. By Mr. Cowper: Is this ration book kept all in the handwriting of the prison clerk? It is roughly; every week he comes in, and we balance it up.

601. And he still keeps it? He keeps it in his office.

602. Is it the same man, Williams? No.

603. And who is prison clerk now? A man of the name of Fletcher.

604. And he still keeps the ration book in this shape? Yes, 605.

- Mr. Hargrave. 605. By the Chairman : This shows the articles which have been ordered by the doctor ; I understood you to say a while ago that you made entries when these things were received—can you show me where you have made these entries? No.
- 10 Dec., 1862. 606. Cannot you recollect? No. I recollect that when a requisition comes in it is pinned to the issue papers, and furnished at the end of the month. The doctor never signs the vouchers until the dispenser says that they are all right.
607. By Mr. Cowper : What is this—a book showing the rations to which the men are properly entitled, or a statement of the rations actually furnished by the contractor? They send out an issue every night according to the strength of the gaol.
608. By the Chairman : Who makes out these vouchers? The clerk of the gaol.
609. It is his duty to make out the vouchers, is it? Sometimes there are some letters come up from the Sheriff, and I set him to do them.
610. Suppose you were called upon to make out this account for the month of January, in what way would you arrive at the fact of what was served to the hospital beyond this? I would go to the requisition book, which is kept by the dispenser.
611. What do you mean by the requisition book? It is a book like a cheque book.
612. The butts remain? Yes, and they would have the order written on them; perhaps they would not tally, and then I should have to go by what the butts said.
613. You have not got that book here? No, the dispenser keeps it.
614. By Mr. Cowper : What are the duties of this prison clerk you speak of—is he always employed in assisting you, and nothing else? He has to attend to the doctor, and to go round with him and see when he alters the diets of the patients; he also writes the prisoners' letters or petitions, or anything of that kind.
615. What is Fletcher—do you know what he was sentenced to gaol for? He says he was the chief mate of the White Star; I do not know whether that is correct or not.
616. Do you know what he was punished for? For stealing, I think he said.
617. By Mr. Lackey : Or was it for some imposition on the publicans of Parramatta? That I cannot say.
618. By Mr. Cowper : Does he keep the books? No, that is the only book; he never sees the letter book without we tell him to copy a letter in it.
619. But he has access to the letter book? No, not without Mr. Green's permission or my own.
620. But you say that sometimes he is ordered to copy a letter in? Yes; but Mr. Green is sitting present, so that he can only copy it before his eyes.
621. Is this ration account a statement of the rations actually delivered, or only a statement or correct account of what these prisoners ought to have according to the Government authorized scale? That is according to what has been had; it is exactly according to what the Government allow.
622. Do you make this calculation according to what they are entitled to have, and put it in as if it had been actually delivered? That is not my way; I put in what I know has come.
623. By Mr. Lackey : And does the prison clerk do the same? Yes; I make it up every week, as near as I can.
624. By the Chairman : Who appoints this prison clerk? The gaoler, I believe.
625. By Mr. Cowper : Here is an entry, dated November, 1862, and signed by Mr. Devlin : "Extra articles:—1,770 pounds of bread, ninety-three and a quarter quarts of milk, one dozen eggs, a quarter of a pound of tea, half a pound of sugar, and twenty pounds of soap";—now, who authorized these extra articles? Those underneath are the articles; the others are the odd pounds allowed to every man for his supper.
626. Well, 1,770 pounds of bread? Mr. Green allows that; Mr. Burns has got the contract for bread now; there are two vouchers.
627. Is this contingent upon good conduct, or what? I could not say.
628. You do not know what principle guides the gaoler in ordering extra bread? No, I do not.
629. Here is extra beef for October? That is ordered by the doctor.
630. Oh, the doctor ordered that? Yes.
631. By the Chairman : Have you any entry in this book of firewood received? Yes. (Entry pointed out in the ration book.)
632. By Mr. Cowper : That is only an entry of an account? That is the only entry we keep in this book; it comes in, and is weighed by Mr. Green himself, or he sees it weighed.
633. Are 48,000 pounds of firewood delivered at one delivery? Oh, no.
634. Is there no other book where this charcoal or firewood is entered in detail? No; what is put down there is what is allowed; if they bring more firewood than the quantity they ought to bring, we take no notice of it. Accounts go in only for what is ordered.
635. By Mr. Lackey : Is the firewood actually weighed when it is received in the gaol, or is it taken in bulk to represent a certain weight? No; I think Mr. Green told me he has the wood weighed.
636. By the Chairman : What month was this—is it since Mr. Green's appointment—it seems to be very lately? Yes, last month.
637. Can you go back to the date of your own appointment in the gaol, and show me the entries, so that we may see how the entries were made then? (Witness referred to ration book, and pointed out two accounts of James Devlin, for extra lamp oil and firewood.)
638. What month is that? They are both in the same month.
639. What is the quantity of firewood allowed in the gaol for the month of May, 1862, by the regulations—you have a fixed scale, have you not? Yes; 52,000 lbs.
640. What is the scale? 1,800 lbs. in the winter, and May is a winter month.

641. 1,800 lbs. what? 1,800 lbs. a day.
642. That would make 55,800 lbs. for the month? There is properly 60,000 lbs.
643. That is the scale throughout all the winter months? Yes.
644. No matter as to the number of people in the gaol, or the severity of the weather, or anything else,—just that quantity is allowed? I believe so.
645. Is there any fixed principle? Yes.
646. Of your own knowledge, was it customary to weigh the wood when it came in? I cannot say of my own knowledge.
647. And who wrote this entry? Williams, the prison clerk.
648. He seems to have done all the work—you do not seem to have done anything? The prison clerk always does that; he brings it in and we cast it up.
649. What do you do—do you take anything from him? No, I go from the documents; I do not take it from what he says.
650. Where is that fellow Williams now, do you know? I think he is in Darlington.
651. By Mr. Cowper: Is he still a prisoner? Yes, I have heard so, but I could not say actually of my own knowledge.
652. By the Chairman: Do you know of your own knowledge whether, when it is necessary to get extras for the gaol, such extras are received? Yes, to my own knowledge I think they have been received.
653. Who did I understand you, to say makes out these vouchers? The free clerk makes out these.
654. You do it now—have you done this since you have been in the gaol? Yes.
655. Where do you take the entries from? From this book (the ration book).
656. You make out the vouchers, and when you make them out what is the next thing you do? I lay them before the gaoler.
657. And do you tell him that the accounts are correct? Yes.
658. And does he act upon that, as a usual course? Yes.
659. He has confidence in you? Yes.
660. He takes it for granted that the accounts are correct as made out by you? Oh, yes.
661. And I suppose he sometimes looks over them to see? Yes, he asks how much wood there has been this month, and so on.
662. You were in the gaol when Mr. Allen was suspended? Yes.
663. Who was appointed to act when he was suspended? Mr. M'Cormick, the principal turnkey.
664. Were you in the room when this order was made? Yes.
665. And Mr. M'Cormick took charge there and then? Yes; I always went to him when I required anything.
666. Who did you say makes out the vouchers for articles supplied for the hospital? I generally find the dispenser. He does not make out the voucher; he furnishes a list of articles.
667. He furnishes the clerk with a list of articles supplied during the month, and you make out the vouchers? I see whether it tallies with the ration book, and whether they have been entered as they ought to have been.
668. When are these accounts sent in—monthly or quarterly? They are sent in monthly.
669. About the end of each month? Yes, on the first day or so of the next month.
670. Who are they forwarded to? To the Sheriff.
671. Does the Visiting Justice sign them before they are sent to the Sheriff? No.
672. By Mr. Lackey: Whose duty is it actually to receive the goods when they come to the gaol? One of the turnkeys comes in and sings out "bread," or whatever it may be, and then the principal turnkey goes out to see to it.
673. Is it their duty to make a memorandum of the quantity received? They see that it is according to the quantity ordered.
674. And the order is the check in the books of the establishment? Yes.
675. Does not the Visiting Surgeon sign the vouchers at all? Yes, those connected with his department.
676. That is what I asked you—if he signed them before they go to the Sheriff or afterwards? Before they go to the Sheriff.
677. By Mr. Dangar: Who writes the requisitions? The prison clerk.
678. Every night? Yes.
679. For the next day's supplies? Yes.
680. By Mr. Lackey: Supposing the quantity should be more or less, as I imagine it is sometimes? It is never more to my knowledge.
681. By the Chairman: But if there are twenty prisoners more in the gaol one day than on another the supply would have to be greater? We should see it in the requisitions.
682. By Mr. Lackey: That necessitates a fresh order, does it not? No; these requisitions are made out in the evening—at five o'clock. The requisition so made out remains until the Visiting Surgeon has been.
683. By Mr. Dangar: Supposing prisoners came in in the morning—on the next morning—how are they provided for during that day? I never saw them send out a requisition again. They have generally gone on until the evening, and then had a supply ordered for them.
684. You sent for extra supplies from the contractor perhaps? Mr. Green may have sent down an order of that kind without it coming near me.
685. By Mr. Lackey: I suppose the duty devolves upon some particular individual to receive these supplies as they come in? The gaoler receives them.
686. In the absence of the gaoler who receives them? The principal turnkey.
687. Then I suppose it is always the case, that either the gaoler or the principal turnkey is there? I believe they cannot both be off the establishment together.
- 688.

Mr.
H. Hargrave.

10 Dec., 1862.

- Mr. H. Hargrave.
10 Dec., 1862.
688. By the Chairman: I understand you, that in preparing these articles for the hospital the course of proceeding is simply this—you obtain from the dispenser a memorandum of what things he says have been supplied? I can get that if I ask for it.
689. What do you do—Supposing the end of the month arrived, and you were about to send your accounts, what course would you pursue? I should go to the dispenser and see what he has had by his requisition book.
690. Do you make a memorandum yourself on receiving it from him? If it does not tally with the book, I go over it and see what has been put down that ought not, and what has been missed that ought to be included.
691. Do you examine this dispensary book yourself, or do you take it on the dispenser's word? I take it on his word.
692. Does he supply you with a memorandum of the various articles that have been furnished for the hospital during the month, and do you from that memorandum make out the vouchers, having compared it with your own book? I make out the vouchers as they lay before you. I leave it until Saturday, the dispenser looks over it and says it is right, and on his stating that it is correct, the Visiting Surgeon signs it, and it comes back to the office.
693. After that it goes to the gaoler? Yes.
694. In point of fact, it passes through the hands of the Visiting Justice and comes to the gaoler? The Visiting Surgeon, I said. The gaoler then signs it, but if it has not the signature of the Visiting Surgeon the return comes back.
695. Then before it reaches the hands of the gaoler for his signature, it has to pass through the hands of the Visiting Surgeon, through your hands, and through those of the dispenser; it goes to the Visiting Surgeon and then to the gaoler, and who does it go to afterwards? To the Sheriff.
696. I presume that after it has passed through those hands no alterations are permitted to be made? None, to my knowledge.
697. Have you never seen anything of that kind done? I have never seen anybody touch them. They are folded up in my presence and sealed down.
698. By Mr. Cowper: You have no knowledge yourself, personally, whether the accounts during Mr. Allen's time were correct or incorrect? I never noticed any further than that book. I never had anything to do with those accounts.
699. By the Chairman: Who took charge of the office after Mr. Allen was suspended? Mr. M'Cormick would be the head.
700. By Mr. Cowper: You were there during a short time when Mr. Allen was gaoler? Yes, but it was a very short time.
701. By Mr. W. Forster: You do not know anything of the circumstances of the case now before the Committee? Nothing further than that I was present when the Sheriff suspended Mr. Allen.
702. Were you present? Yes.
703. Had you heard beforehand of the circumstances at all? Not the slightest.
704. This was the first knowledge you had of the matter at all? Yes.
705. Will you state what occurred in your presence? Well, Mr. Hargraves, the gold finder —
706. Who were present? Mr. Hargraves, Mr. Taylor, the Sheriff, and Mr. Allen, and I think there was only myself beside.
707. Were the doors shut? There were no doors to the room.
708. It was in the office? Yes; it was closed in with green baize, and a space was left for a door, but there was no door there.
709. Did this opening, then, open into the yard? No, into a larger room.
710. Was there anyone looking on from the outside? Not to my knowledge.
711. Will you state what occurred? Mr. Hargraves came in with the Sheriff, and sat down in the chair the gaoler had hitherto occupied, and Mr. Taylor sat opposite him. I was also sitting in a chair, and Mr. Allen was sent for. He came in, and the Sheriff said he was very sorry to have to pursue such a course, but that he must suspend Mr. Allen for obtaining money—I do not know whether he went so far as to say "under false pretences"—for obtaining money from Mr. Taylor.
712. Was this the first remark made? To the best of my knowledge.
713. Before any question was asked? No; Mr. Taylor was first examined.
714. Go to the beginning, if you please—state all the proceedings as they occurred? Mr. Hargraves, turning to Mr. Taylor —
715. Was that after Mr. Allen was brought in? Yes.
716. Did he sit down with the others? No.
717. He stood up? Yes.
718. All the other persons were sitting? Yes; Mr. Uhr had a chair to sit upon.
719. But Mr. Allen stood? Yes, and Mr. Taylor gave his evidence.
720. Was that the beginning? That was the commencement.
721. On Mr. Allen going into the room Mr. Taylor was examined? Yes, so far as that statement went which was written down.
722. That was a statement from his lips, and taken down? Yes.
723. Who wrote it down? I wrote it myself.
724. How was it taken—by questions from Mr. Hargraves? No, Mr. Taylor was asked to state the circumstances of the case.
725. And from Mr. Taylor's lips you took it down as he stated it? Yes.
726. Was there any cross-examination? I do not think there was; there might have been one or two questions.
727. Was Mr. Allen asked any questions, or were any remarks made to him? I think the Sheriff made one or two.

728. Was that before or after? It was after Taylor's statement.
729. You took down Mr. Taylor's statement, and Taylor signed it, I presume? I think he did. Mr.
H. Hargrave.
730. Before you? Yes. 10 Dec., 1862.
731. And did Mr. Hargraves sign it? I do not think he did.
732. Who else signed it? No one else, I think.
733. Did you see the oath administered? No.
734. It was a statement not on oath? Yes.
735. What remarks were made to Mr. Allen? The Sheriff said he was very sorry to have to pursue such a course in reference to an old servant of the Government.
736. After Taylor's evidence was taken and put down on paper, Mr. Uhr commenced in that way—did he not ask Mr. Allen if he had any explanation or defence to offer? I think he did, but I think Mr. Allen said that what was stated was perfectly correct—that he did receive that money from Taylor.
737. He said he admitted receiving the money? Yes.
738. Did he question any of the circumstances? No.
739. Did he state anything in his defence otherwise or by way of explanation? He said he believed he was justified in taking it.
740. He said that? He said so, I believe.
741. Was Mr. Allen's statement taken down on paper? No.
742. Mr. Uhr then proceeded to ———? Suspend Mr. Allen.
743. He told him? Yes, he said, in the presence of Mr. M'Cormick and myself, that Mr. Allen was suspended, and you must take charge.
744. He said that to Mr. M'Cormick—that he was to take charge? Yes.
745. Did Mr. Allen make any remark? He said he was extremely sorry if he had done wrong.
746. Did Mr. Hargraves make any remark? No; I think Mr. Hargraves got up, and they then showed him round the gaol.
747. Was there anything said about a roll of notes being in the possession of Taylor at the time he paid Mr. Allen? I saw nothing about that.
748. And you did not hear any remarks made about "five-pence in coppers"? I have heard about it.
749. But was anything said about it on this occasion? No.
750. Was there nothing said about 5d. in coppers? I did not notice it.
751. Does the statement say anything about 5d. in coppers? I think it does.
752. Just tell us whether that (printed statement) is the statement you wrote down, as well as you can recollect? I think part of it is what I said; he brought a writ on that day to Mr. Allen. I do not remember anything about the coppers. The latter part I know nothing about.
753. You are not quite sure whether that is the statement you wrote down? Not the latter part of it.
754. Do you mean to say that you do not know anything about it? Yes.
755. That is a matter of some consequence? I do not recollect Taylor saying it was fraudulently obtained.
756. Do you think, then, from your recollection, that this is not exactly what you wrote down? I could tell in a minute if I saw my own writing.
757. Yes, but without seeing it you are not quite certain whether this is what you wrote down or not? Not the latter part of it.
758. Well, Mr. Allen, you say, did not question the truth of the statement as you wrote it down at the time? He did not attempt to deny it.
759. Did he make any remarks about a roll of notes, or about 5d. in coppers? He did not make any remarks about a roll of notes—he may have said something about 5d. in coppers.
760. After this what occurred? After that the Sheriff told Mr. M'Cormack to show Mr. Hargraves round the gaol, and they all left the office, and I went home myself.
761. You say you were clerk for a time while Mr. Allen was there? Yes, for a short time.
762. Do you know whether it has been the habit of the gaoler of Parramatta Gaol to keep fowls or pigs? Not that I am aware of.
763. You do not know? No; I never saw a pig on the premises.
764. Is there not always a quantity of refuse upon the establishment of one kind or other? Yes, I believe there is.
765. What becomes of that? I do not know.
766. Have you any idea? I have never seen it taken away.
767. You know nothing about it? No.
768. Were you there on the 22nd of November, 1860? No.
769. Do you know anything of a man named Patrick Irwin? He was let out last week.
770. By Mr. Cowper: He had finished his term? Yes.
771. By Mr. W. Forster: Under what sentence was he? Two years and a fine.
772. Do you know whether he paid the fine? Oh, yes, Mr. Green remitted it down.
773. That you are aware of? Yes.
774. Was it two years' imprisonment or one? Two years.
775. Did you see the money paid? No.
776. But you know it was a transaction which really took place? Yes.
777. Do you know whether there was any money taken from Irwin, when he entered the gaol, in excess of the amount he paid as his fine? No; that was in Mr. Dobbins's time, the late clerk.
778. Did you ever hear him make any complaint of any money having been stopped? Yes, he was grumbling.
- 779.

- Mr. 779. What about? Because he could not get the balance, £6 12s. 6d.
H. Hargrave. 780. Oh, he claimed a balance, did he? Yes, out of the money he brought in.
10 Dec., 1862. 781. Why was it not paid him? Because we had not got it.
782. Who ought to have it? The clerk.
783. Then Dobbin went away with it? I suppose so.
784. There was a balance due to this man? Yes, the books kept by Dobbin show it.
785. Who was responsible for it, the clerk or the gaoler? I could not say.
786. Suppose such a thing occurred in your time, would you be responsible? We have to furnish every month an account of the moneys which the prisoners bring in.
787. You are in Mr. Dobbin's place? Yes.
788. Would you hold yourself responsible for such a balance? No, because every month we have to furnish an account.
789. Who receives the money? I receive it, and sometimes Mr. Green receives it; but every month we have to furnish to the Sheriff a statement of the amount of money we have belonging to the prisoners.
790. And you pay the balance over? No, the book is signed by the gaoler, and the money is remitted to Mr. Uhr.
791. Who retains the money? I hold the money.
792. Well, then, are you not responsible for the money you hold? Mr. Green can get it whenever he likes.
793. But at any time after a prisoner is discharged, I presume you would be called upon to pay any money that you hold on his account? I certainly should, in a manner of speaking; but the way it is is this—Mr. Green, having the use of my keys, and that statement being furnished—I never heard of it before —
794. That is a new regulation? Yes.
795. This was adopted in consequence of Mr. Dobbin's defalcation—you look upon it as a check upon the honesty of the clerk? Well, if he likes to be dishonest he could be so now.
796. You are responsible for the money you hold, are you not? Certainly, but Mr. Green keeps the keys of it.
797. Keeps the keys of what? Of the cash-box.
798. Oh, the money is put into a cash-box, which is in your charge, but you do not keep the keys? I have the keys in the morning.
799. But if the cash-box were robbed, you would not hold yourself blamable? I should hardly think myself responsible.
800. The gaoler always keeps the keys? No.
801. But no money is taken out of this cash-box without your knowledge? No, not without my knowledge or concurrence.
802. The two of you must be cognizant of all moneys taken out of this cash-box? Yes.
803. You say that you and Mr. Green are always present when money is taken out? Yes; but there is a fresh regulation, that prisoners shall be let out at 7 o'clock in the morning, and I am not there until 9.
804. In that case the money might be taken out in your absence? It is taken out overnight. I leave the prisoner's warrant on the table, with the money belonging to the prisoner, and Mr. Green comes in and says, "This warrant is to go out to-morrow," and he puts it in his drawer and locks it up.
805. He takes possession of that money? Yes; and when the prisoner goes out he signs the book.
806. But no money is taken out of the cash-box without your knowledge? Or Mr. Green's.
807. And you are both present when the cash-box is opened? Yes; sometimes I am there and he is out in the yard.
808. There is only one key? There is only one key.
809. By Mr. W. Forster: What is the average amount of prisoners' money kept in this cash-box? £8 or £10.
810. Not more than that? No.
811. Altogether? Yes, including watches and trinkets the women bring in.
812. By Mr. Dangar: Mr. Dobbin was short £150, was he not? No, I think not so much as that.
813. By Mr. Lackey: You keep the accounts of the moneys held? Yes.
814. And supposing Mr. Green takes any particular amount from this cash-box during your absence, he intimates that to you, and you make a memorandum of it? Yes, I go to my book and check it off.
815. Were you in Parramatta Gaol on 12th February, 1862? No.
816. Is it the custom, within your knowledge, ever to allow a prisoner to come to Sydney, who at the time is supposed to be confined in the gaol? I never knew it.
817. You have never heard of such a thing? No.
818. Have you heard of such a thing being done before your time? No.
819. By Mr. Dangar: Do you keep a cash-box—do you account for your cash every month? Yes.
820. You show the balance in hand? No, we merely furnish the amount.
821. Do you not count your cash to see if it agrees with the statement? No; if I have an hour to spare I might.
822. By Mr. Cowper: Were you in the habit of going into the cells? I never was in a cell in my life.
823. And you do not know how the prisoners are treated there? No.
824. Have you ever heard of any charge of cruelty alleged to have been exercised by Mr. Allen, or his subordinate officers, towards the prisoners? No.
825. Do you live in the gaol? No.

826. How far away from it? I live near the Domain gate.
827. And you go into your office in the morning, and perform your duties, and leave the prison in the evening? Yes. Mr.
H. Hargrave.
828. Do you never go amongst the cells and the prisoners? No, not further than when I have occasion to go down into the yards, that is all. 10 Dec., 1862.
829. By the Chairman: How often did the Visiting Surgeon visit the gaol? Twice a week, and sometimes oftener.
830. Can you speak of your own knowledge as to what he does when he comes? No.
831. Do you know if it is his duty to visit the prisoners and their cells, and all that? I do not know.
832. By Mr. Dangar: Was John McCallaghan in irons when you went to the gaol? No, I never saw him.
833. You never saw him in irons? No.
834. Have any prisoners been placed in irons since you have been there? There was a prisoner named John Williams put in irons, but they were struck off some time ago.
835. Does the gaoler keep his horse in the gaol? No, he does not keep a horse at all.
836. By the Chairman: Did I understand you to say that the money belonging to the prisoners, in hand, is very small? Yes.
837. You said, I think, that it was not more than £8 or £10? Yes.
838. That is since you have been there? Yes.
839. Have you ever looked through the records of moneys taken from prisoners before your arrival? I could show you Mr. McCormick's book.
840. Of what date? From 1860.
841. Let me see it? I have not got it with me.
842. By Mr. Dangar: Does the prisoner McCallaghan behave well now? Yes.
843. Then the punishment he has received has made him a better man? Yes, I suppose so.
844. Did he come from Darlinghurst Gaol to Parramatta Gaol, or how did he come into the Parramatta Gaol? I could tell you if I was in the office.
845. I thought you might be able to tell me from memory? I could not say from memory.
846. By Mr. Cowper: Did you ever hear it alleged that Mr. Allen's conduct towards him was unnecessarily harsh? I never heard anyone say so.
847. By Mr. Dangar: Are you aware whether Mr. Uhr ordered the irons to be taken off McCallaghan, or whether they were ordered to be taken off by the Visiting Surgeon? The letter book would tell that.
848. Were the irons ordered to be put on by the Visiting Surgeon? I think it was a sentence from the Court. It was for some affair at Darlinghurst, I think.
849. He had the irons round his waist—is that the way they generally iron prisoners in the gaol? As far I have seen them.
850. This charge that was read out from the book a short time ago—"violent conduct in striking the gaoler and tearing the coat off his back"—was that done in your time? Yes, that was on a Sunday, I think. Mr. Allen showed me the coat on the Monday, and the man was punished before the Visiting Justice and Mr. Langley.
851. Was he in irons then? I think not at the time that he was brought up.
852. Was he then put in irons? No, he was ordered into close confinement for a month.
853. In the cells I suppose? Yes, by himself—on confine rations.
854. By Mr. Dangar: Is Mr. Hayes confined in Parramatta Gaol now? No.
855. By the Chairman: Can you tell me whose writing this is (voucher)? It is written by the prison clerk.
856. The man in the gaol now? No, he is at Darlinghurst now.
857. Whose writing is that (voucher)? Mr. Dobbin's.
858. It is January, 1862—who made out the accounts of January, 1862? That was before my time.
859. Dr. Pringle is the Visiting Surgeon? Yes.
860. What is Dr. Greenup? Visiting Magistrate.
861. Does Dr. Pringle ever sign these vouchers for the hospital? Yes.
862. Would you just look at the returns for the month of January, 1862, and let the Committee hear if there are any, and what, items set down there as ordered for the hospital? There is a bottle of oil.
863. On what date? On the 4th.
864. On the 4th January, a bottle of oil? Yes; three bottles of brandy on the 11th, and one dozen boxes of matches; on the 13th there is half a gallon of vinegar, and on the 23rd, 44 lbs. of soap.
865. These items are in the ration book? Yes.
866. As having been ordered for the hospital? Yes.
867. Will you look again at the accounts you showed me a while ago, for January, 1862;—what is this entry here? A bottle of oil and three bottles of brandy.
868. Is that (entry) merely a copy of this (voucher)? That is all. Some of these things the surgeon said he never had; but that I know nothing about, because it was before my time.
869. The butts of the requisitions are in the hands of the dispenser? Yes; they would be a guide; but, as I said before, when I made an account of that character I sent it over—
870. I am not asking you about that;—did I understand you to say that the butts of the requisitions in the hands of the dispenser will show what articles were ordered for the use of the hospital? Yes.
871. And when those articles are furnished, to whom have they been delivered since you

- Mr. H. Hargrave. have been in the gaol—suppose vinegar or oil was ordered? The requisition comes into the office, and is laid on the table —
- 10 Dec., 1862. 872. I asked you to whom are the articles delivered? To the dispenser.
873. Then the gaoler has to take the dispenser's word for whatever is received? Before that requisition goes it has to have the Visiting Surgeon's signature, or else it would be signed by Mr. — for the Visiting Surgeon.
874. Who would have these requisitions? The contractor.
875. Is the gaoler communicated with at all as to signing these requisitions? Not at all—he has nothing to do with the hospital; the surgeon orders the things, and it is not disputed.
876. Then, as I understand you, the things are ordered, the requisition goes out, the vouchers are made out by you, or the prison clerk and the dispenser, signed by the Visiting Surgeon, and merely sent to Mr. Allen to carry out this form? Mr. Green or Mr. Allen would sign them.
877. And have no opportunity of telling what he had signed? He would sign it; it has Dr. Pringle's signature to it.
878. He takes it for granted, I suppose, when he sees the Visiting Surgeon's name to the paper, that it is correct, and signs the document? Yes.
879. The responsibility, according to your statement, should lie on the shoulders of the Visiting Surgeon? He would not sign it without having the assurance that it was correct.
880. He would not communicate with the gaoler? No.
881. Then the gaoler knows nothing except what this document would show? No.
882. By Mr. Lackey: Does the gaoler certify to the accuracy of the contractors' accounts at the end of the month? No, the clerk.
883. You say that the proof he has as a safeguard is merely seeing the signature of the Visiting Surgeon? Yes.
884. If the gaoler finds that attached to the form he signs it —? As correct.
885. But if it turns out to be wrong? I do not know.
886. You say it sometimes happens that the entries in the ration book are made on different dates to those on which the entries are made by the dispenser, is it not so? I have never seen it.
887. I understood you to say a while ago, that it sometimes happens that the entries made by the dispenser differ from the entries you have here? I have never noticed it; it comes over, and I take care that Mr. Hoskins sees it. After it has gone through the necessary forms it comes to my office, and is closed up and sent to the Sheriff.
888. Is it you, the clerk of the gaol, and the dispenser of the hospital, who test the accuracy of these hospital accounts? As far as the hospital goes. I do not notice the requisition when it comes in. It is laid on the table, and sent out with the others. At the end of the month, when the hospital account is made up, I see it sent over to Mr. Hoskins, and if those articles have been had, Dr. Pringle signs it upon his word.
889. If you have more articles or less than he has had? I trust to what he says. That (January) account has come to me since I have been there, and sent back from the Audit Office saying that they wanted the surgeon's signature, and I forwarded it back to Mr. Uhr.
890. It was sent back for the surgeon's signature? Yes; he would not sign it because he said there were things there which he knew nothing at all about.
891. That he would not sign it, or that he had made a mistake in signing it incorrectly? He would not sign it at all.
892. Perhaps you are not aware that the surgeon has admitted that he did sign accounts and found them afterwards to be wrong? I know that that account was sent back from the Sheriff's Office, and I made it out afresh.
893. When did you get notice to produce these books and documents? A letter came up the other day, addressed to Mr. Green.
894. Was it delivered by hand? It came up by post.
895. Has Mr. Ennis been up at the gaol since then, from the Sheriff's Office? He has been up there; he came up the day I received the first letter to attend here.
896. He came up on that day? Yes, he was in the gaoler's house.
897. Did he examine the gaol books on that day? He looked over them. I said, "What books are you going to take away—not those that I use every day?" He said, "They are past books I want," and he took away three of the books.
898. He took away three of the books belonging to the gaol? Yes.
899. What did he do that for? I do not know.
900. Who authorized him to take them out of the gaol? He came with Mr. Green and asked to see them.
901. Is there any record of his having taken them away? Both Mr. Green and I saw him.
902. But supposing you left the gaol, and Mr. Green was also away, and any inquiry were made about the books? It might be —
903. By Mr. Lackey: He might have had some authority from the Sheriff to Mr. Green? He might.
904. By the Chairman: But are not these filed in the office? No.
905. Is it usual to send up to the gaol and take away public books in that way? I never saw it done before.
906. What were these books that he took away? The book containing the stone-work in Mr. Dobbin's time, I think it was. I do not know, though, whether I am correct in saying that it was stone-cutting in Mr. Dobbin's time. I could point out the books if I saw them, and I know that they were for past years, and did not interfere with me.
907. By Mr. Lackey: In your notice to attend here you were asked to bring certain books? Yes.

908. Were any of those books included to which you refer? No. I was not going to let him touch the books I should require. Mr.
H. Hargrave.
909. Do you know what those books are—did they form a portion of the official records of your office, or of the gaol? They were records, decidedly, but I should never require the books at all. 10 Dec., 1862.
910. So far as you know? So far as I know, I have never had any occasion for them.
911. They contain records of the transactions of the gaol? Yes.
912. By Mr. Dangar: Are those books all you have under your charge? Oh, no.
913. You were ordered to bring all your books, were you not? No.
914. By the Chairman: Did Mr. Ennis look through these books, any of them? Not that book.
915. Did he look through any of the gaol books? Yes, he glanced through some of them.
916. By Mr. Dangar: He was clerk before you? Yes, he was there before Mr. Dobbin.
917. By the Chairman: What books did he examine? The account of the work done by the female prisoners. I said, "You must not take that." He examined also the book in which we keep the account of moneys given to prisoners when they go out.
918. Did he make any extracts from these books? No.
919. Has he been up at any other time examining the books since Mr. Allen was suspended? I never saw him.
920. Has anyone else been up, from the Sheriff downwards, including the Sheriff? I never saw anyone there beside Mr. Ennis.
921. Have you got the requisition book there? No.
922. We can get that, of course? Yes.
923. And the gaol regulations? Yes.
924. And the hospital regulations? Yes.

ROBERT H. M. FORSTER, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

George Hogarth Pringle, Esq., Visiting Surgeon, Parramatta Gaol, called in and examined:—

925. By the Chairman: You are aware, I suppose, that this is a Committee appointed at the request of Mr. Allen, to inquire into the cause of his dismissal from the office of gaoler at Parramatta Gaol? I am. G. H. Pringle,
Esq.
12 Dec., 1862.
926. We have sent for you to give evidence in this matter. Are there any fixed regulations with reference to the supply of extras for persons in the hospital at the gaol? There are no fixed regulations—at least I have never received a copy of any such regulations. I have been guided by the practice of my predecessor. The plan adopted is this: When I see that a person requires anything beyond his regular rations I make an entry opposite that man's name, and he receives it. At the end of the month a voucher is brought to me of such extra things as have been required, and that is signed by me.
927. Is there a diary kept of your visits? I have a book in which the names of the patients are entered opposite to the medicines prescribed, and any alteration I think it necessary to make in the diet, such as an allowance of milk, or eggs, or wine.
928. In the event of your absence from the gaol and anything being required, has the dispenser authority to procure it? He would order anything that was absolutely necessary for the time being, but his order would only extend to that day, and it would have to be confirmed by me on the following morning.
929. Who keeps that book to which you have referred? It lies on my desk in the surgery, and in it the general entries are made. For instance, if one of the prisoners requires spoon diet, or half diet, I make an entry to that effect after his name.
930. Is that book in the custody of the dispenser? Yes.
931. When are the returns made out for payment to the parties who supply these articles? Once a month, I believe. The vouchers are brought to me every month to sign for the different things supplied under the head of medical comforts.
932. Do you know if the vouchers are made out from this book? From the requisitions made up by the dispenser from this book. Twice a month I make a point of going over the different allowances, to see that there is nothing allowed that, according to my idea of what is required, ought not to be allowed.
933. When you make an order for anything, what is the next thing done in reference to the matter? The dispenser issues it.
934. If you order anything for the hospital, how is that carried into effect? The dispenser sends a requisition for what is required.
935. To whom? I believe to the gaoler. I have only been in charge of the gaol less than two years, and I have gone on in the routine I found prevailing at the time of my appointment.
936. Who signs that requisition? The dispenser, I believe; I have never been called upon to sign any requisition of that kind. At the end of the month I certify to the correctness of the vouchers presented to me.

- G. H. Pringle, 937. I presume it would be from that requisition that the gaoler would get the first intimation of what was ordered for the hospital? Yes.
Esq.
- 12 Dec., 1862. 938. Do you know who makes up the weekly or quarterly accounts? I understand the clerk of the gaol, but I do not know.
939. When the accounts are made up, to whom are they submitted in the first instance? I do not know; the vouchers are brought to me. When I first went to the gaol, and the vouchers were brought to me, I occasionally found that small items, ordered in cases of emergency, such as a bottle of brandy, or thread, or tapes, were included among things supplied to other departments of the gaol. I signed them, testifying to the correctness of the vouchers as far as I was concerned; but in that I believe I was in error, and I now insist on having the hospital vouchers distinct. This last month I sent one back in which the clerk had inserted things not required for hospital use along with those required for the use of the hospital.
940. After you sign the vouchers what becomes of them? I do not know; the clerk brings them to me, and I sign them, generally about the end of the month.
941. Are you the first person that should sign these vouchers? I think, as a general rule, the gaoler signs below to testify that the things have been received, and there is a blank left for my signature.
942. Does your signature come before the gaoler's? It comes above it in the account, and as a general rule the voucher is signed by the gaoler before it comes to me.
943. Would it not be more regular for him to sign first? I believe it would. There are different forms for different institutions.
944. You have not the book with you, I suppose, that you keep your diary in? No, that is a very large book—a sort of day book; I received no instructions to bring such a book. In the course of twelve months, at least two, and sometimes three, sets of books are expended. Everything prescribed is entered in the book.
945. When you are called upon to sign the requisition, who lays it before you—the dispenser? No, generally the master of the gaol, or the clerk of the gaol.
946. What are the steps you take then? I look over the vouchers to see if, in my opinion, they are correct; then they are referred to the dispenser. If I have any doubt as to the quantity—if anything seems to be excessive, if there seems to be a larger number of quarts of milk, or a larger quantity of eggs—I call for the list of the clerk, and see if they have been supplied according to order.
947. You mean the dispenser, I presume, when you say “clerk”? No, one of the prisoners acts as assistant to the clerk, and he keeps a statement of the medical comforts. If I see a larger quantity, I make him refer to his accounts, to see to whom they were given and by whose order they were served.
948. Then it would seem that, so far as these necessaries for hospital purposes are concerned, the gaoler would have nothing to do with it—that, generally speaking, it is simply a carrying out of your orders? Simply a carrying out of my orders.
949. How long have you been Visiting Surgeon of Parramatta Gaol? I believe my appointment dates two years back; I know it was in November.
950. Who was your predecessor? Dr. Bassett.
951. Do I understand you to say that there are no regulations for your guidance published by the Government? None that I have ever had. When I first joined the gaol I asked for them, but received none. I asked Dr. Bassett if he had any, but he said “no.” He said he would let me see the course he pursued, and I have followed that as nearly as possible; but latterly I have been more strict in regard to the vouchers.
952. Have you ever read the gaol regulations? I do not know that I have; I have read the regulations regarding turnkeys and so on.
953. Have you noticed whether there is any reference to you in those regulations? I do not think there is; it has never been brought under my notice.
954. Have you received any circular letter from the Government? None; I received a letter notifying my appointment, and that is the only letter I received.
955. Did I understand you to say that the dispenser is a prisoner? No, the dispenser is not; but there is a man appointed as assistant to the clerk who is a prisoner.
956. And the dispenser ———? Is a gentleman employed by the Government.
957. He is a Government officer in the establishment? Yes.
958. It is he who makes the requisitions? He makes the demands for whatever I require. After my visits he goes over the entries, and sees what is ordered for the day. If I order a man, say six ounces of wine, that goes on uninterruptedly until I stop it; it becomes part of the daily issue.
959. He receives these articles? Yes, he receives those articles.
960. Then it would be he only who could check what was received? Yes.
961. It would be from these books that the returns would be made of articles required? Yes, from those books.
962. In the custody of the dispenser? Yes.
963. If the clerk of the gaol desire to make out these accounts, he would have to make application to the dispenser? But he would have the requisitions sent to him by the dispenser, and the account of what had been received from the store.
964. The requisitions are sent to the clerk of the gaol? Yes, or to the master of the gaol.
965. And they could make an entry of it there? Yes.
966. Has it ever happened, do you know, that things have been sent for that have never been received? Not that I know of. A case of the kind may have occurred when I have made a late order for beef tea, and there has been no beef and something else has been substituted. I have never had reason to find fault in consequence of anything I have ordered not being supplied.

967. There is an account here for things supplied which it seems you considered wrong,—do you recollect that circumstance? I recollect it being referred to me what these things were required for. I saw that the circumstance had occurred which I have mentioned before—that things belonging to the hospital and things not belonging to the hospital had been put in the same voucher, and I had signed it in the belief that I was merely signing for the things received in my own department; but I believe now that I ought to have had a separate voucher.

G. H. Pringle,
Esq.
12 Dec., 1862.

968. You do not intend, then, to convey by the note you sent that the things were not received, but that they did not form part of the things required in the hospital? Certainly. I merely meant that in that voucher there were some bottles of brandy, and that with that exception the things were not required in my department.

969. Do you know whether there has been any wood supplied for the hospital? There has.

970. Which you have not issued a requisition for, or signed an order for, yourself? There is a certain allowance of wood made for the hospital use, and I believe that on some occasions (I have no notes of the matter, and cannot tell when), when the nights have been cold, I have ordered wood for the use of the prisoners beyond the limits supplied by the Government; but how often I have done so I have no notes to tell me, but there will be an entry in the book to show when it has been made.

971. Where? In my diary.

972. Do you know whether a fire is kept up all night in any of the wards? In the hospital wards, where I have people suffering from inflammation of the lungs, some nights in the year there are fires all the night.

973. By Mr. Jockey: How often have you been in the habit of visiting the gaol? Certainly three times a week always, and I should think on an average five times a week.

974. Is it ever your duty to visit any of the prisoners in the gaol who are in close confinement? It is, when I am requested to do so by the gaoler, or by the prisoners themselves.

975. Do you recollect the circumstance of a man named M'Callaghan being in the gaol? I do.

976. He was confined in irons, I think? He was.

977. Did you observe, at any time during your visits there, any unnecessary harshness or cruelty on the part of Mr. Allen? No, I did not observe any harshness; but on one occasion I remarked that the chain was too tight, and it was loosened at my request.

978. Was that the chain on his arms, or round his body? Round his body.

979. Only on one occasion? Only on one occasion.

980. You never had any other instance? I never had.

981. On this occasion was that chain removed at the suggestion of a third party, or at your own request? It was loosened, I believe, at my own request. I had seen the man the day before, when he had a leathern belt. I was told that he had cut the leathern belt with a knife he had manufactured with a hoop off his kit. He feigned to be a lunatic. I remarked that I thought the chain was too tight, and that it was galling the man.

982. You did not notice at any time that his skin was cut or bruised from the effect of the irons? Never. I did not observe any recent bruises; I saw the marks of old bruises.

983. But not on his body or arms, from the tightness with which the chain was fixed on? No.

984. Had you any knowledge of the general character of this man, M'Callaghan? I have no knowledge at all, except that he feigned madness for a period—I cannot say how long, but certainly for some weeks he obviously feigned madness. He refused his medicine from everybody but from me. He never showed any violence towards me. I could go to him at all times and give him medicine. He would do what I told him when he was feigning madness at the worst. I heard of him being violent, but I never saw him commit any act of violence. He was very impertinent occasionally until he was brought to order.

985. By the Chairman: The fact of him refusing to allow anyone to administer anything to him showed anything but a pacific disposition? He was an excessively turbulent man in that respect. I could always, by simple persuasion, make him do what I wanted.

986. It was absolutely necessary that you should do the work the dispenser would have done if he had conducted himself like an ordinary man? Certainly.

987. Did any other instance come within your knowledge of persons in confinement having chains on them, or being treated with harshness or unnecessary severity? I cannot say that there has. I have seen men in irons, and I have been appealed to by prisoners as to whether the irons were not too tight. I remember on one occasion that they were. In that instance the prisoner was a remarkably large made man, and he had the largest shackles on; but I thought they were too tight, and they were removed. If there had been any cruelty I think I should have noticed it, and —

988. Do you know if this man M'Callaghan had irons on him at any other time than this occasion to which you have referred, when you ordered them to be removed? I did not order them to be removed; I merely suggested that they should be slackened.

989. Slackened? Yes. He was for a long time shamming insanity, and refusing to work or to do anything. I fancy that on one or two occasions I must have seen him with irons on, but I cannot speak as to how often.

990. Did Mr. Uhr, the Sheriff, have any conversation with you in reference to the treatment this man had to submit to? I had no conversation with Mr. Uhr.

991. At the time? No.

992. Mr. Uhr did not ask you whether you thought the treatment was not warranted? Certainly not.

993. Nor did Mr. Uhr suggest to you the propriety of pointing out to the gaoler the necessity of loosing the irons? No.

994. By Mr. Morrice: Do you know if Mr. Uhr was aware that the prisoner was in the state

G. H. Pringle, Esq., state you speak of? I cannot say. I have had no conversation with Mr. Uhr on the subject at all until this morning, when I saw him on the steamer, and he told me he thought the man had been harshly treated.

12 Dec., 1862.

995. I mean at the time you speak of? At the time I had no conversation except with Mr. Allen and the prisoner himself. I was requested by Mr. Allen to see him, and I saw him for some weeks while he was shamming. It became a delicate question whether he was really insane or shamming. I saw him every visit. I never saw anything that I thought wrong, except on that occasion to which I have referred, when I believed the irons were too tight upon him. I believed the man, using threats as he did, required coercion at the time.

996. By the Chairman: You were about to say, a short time ago, that if there were some cruelty you would have noticed it, and brought it under the notice of the Visiting Justice? Yes, I should have considered it my duty to do so, and have entered it in my book.

997. Did you ever make such an entry? No.

998. Then it is scarcely necessary to ask the next question, because I presume that no cruelty has been exercised? I should have mentioned it if I had seen any cruelty.

999. Did the gaoler ever complain to you of having his coat torn off his back by this man, and of being struck by him? I cannot recollect whether his coat was torn. I recollect the gaoler or the turnkey complaining that the man had assaulted him, and I knew that the prisoner was a very powerful man.

1000. Do you know whether he has been in the habit of breaking handcuffs? I do; I had ocular demonstration of that. On one occasion he was handcuffed and perfectly naked. He had torn his clothes to pieces, and was walking about the cell; he had plastered figures all over the wall, and altogether he was in a beastly condition. It was observed that he had spilt all the water over the floor; I thought at first that he had made water on the floor. He jumped up from the floor; and on going afterwards I was shown the handcuffs he had had on; he had worn them nearly through by grinding them on the floor.

1001. You saw them? Yes, I saw them, and I believe they were within the thickness of a halfpenny, having been worn down by friction.

1002. I presume you do not know who gave the order for his being fastened up? I do not.

1003. From what you have seen of his general conduct—the beastly way in which he disfigured the walls—the way in which he tore the clothes off himself—his going about naked—and his breaking the handcuffs—do you think he was a safe man to have loose? Not at that time. I believe his passions were roused. It is not for me to say whether gentler means might not have been more useful. At that time it was absolutely necessary to confine him. From what he said himself, he was determined to wreak vengeance on some of those whom he supposed to be injuring him—on Mr. Allen or the principal turnkey. To me he was always docile; but I think he required confinement of some kind.

1004. Might not all the things in this voucher (produced) have been supplied to the hospital without an order from you, or a requisition;—there is oil mentioned there—is that used in the hospital? I do not know what it could have been used for. We do not use lamps, nor do we use oil for dressing blisters. These matches might have been used, but the dispenser assures me that he did not order them, and I did not. There are 4 lbs. of liquorice and 1 lb. of tow. The dispenser tells me that a portion of the liquorice was ordered by him, as well as the brandy, for medical purposes.

1005. Look at the next voucher? Here is liquorice, which we are constantly using in the preparation of different mixtures.

1006. You never ordered them, but the dispenser told you that this was correct? Yes.

1007. There is an item for vinegar—do you use vinegar in the hospital? It might be used in cases of head affections, as a cooling lotion. I inquired of Mr. Austin whether he had ordered it, and he told me that he had not. Of course, when I am not there he has the power to order such things as this when they are absolutely required.

1008. There is also soap—is that used in the hospital? Of course soap is used.

1009. In that particular month was there any ordered? I never order soap for the hospital, that comes under the general supplies of the gaol. It may have been considered part of the medical requisites.

1010. Do you know what quantity of soap is allowed for the hospital? No, I do not; it varies I suppose from one week to another. Sometimes there are only two or three men in the hospital, and sometimes all the wards are full.

1011. Is it apportioned according to the number of people in the gaol, or according to the number of rooms? I do not know what the regulation is. My duty is to see that the things are kept clean.

1012. Will the gaol regulations inform me? Of course soap must be used. If I found the hospital dirty I should make a report upon it.

1013. You know, then, of no regulation regulating the quantity of soap, or whether any quantity of soap is allowed for the hospital? I do not.

1014. But you know that it is absolutely necessary to have such an article? I do.

1015. And as you say properly, if it was not there—? I should report.

1016. You have heard a remark made by Mr. Allen to me just now—that it is required for blankets and bedding and such things? Yes.

1017. And scrubbing the floor? Yes.

1018. And for washing articles of clothing? Yes, there are many things which require to be washed.

1019. Under those circumstances, then, that soap may have been supplied? It may have been supplied without any order from me or the dispenser.

1020. Your objection to certifying to that voucher being correct, was not because you thought the soap had not been used, but because you did not find that you had ordered such a thing? I did not order it, and I had no recollection of such a requisition being handed to me before for soap; it might have been, but I declined to sign for anything I was not certain of.

G. H. Pringle,
Esq.

12 Dec., 1862.

1021. You have no doubt at all that it is regularly used? I know that it is.

1022. You cannot tell me what was the character of the complaints from which the patients in the hospital were suffering? I cannot. It is ten months back, and upwards of 2,000 cases come under my care during the twelve months. I cannot recollect individual cases.

1023. By Mr. Holroyd: Is there any record or diary kept of what the prisoners are brought into the hospital for? Yes.

1024. A case book? Yes, a book in which I make entries, when persons are sent to the hospital, of the treatment, and what alterations are made from day to day.

1025. By the Chairman: Is vinegar used for more complaints than the one you named just now—affections of the head? I do not know; many use it as a disinfectant, but we use chloride of lime or chloride of zinc, and have no use for vinegar except for the purpose I have mentioned. It might have been used in making medicines, but the dispenser assured me that it was not ordered by him for that purpose.

1026. By Mr. Holroyd: Who? The dispenser.

1027. The dispenser of the gaol? Yes.

1028. What is his name? Mr. Austin.

1029. By the Chairman: During the time you have been attached to the gaol have you ever heard any unkindness or harshness on the part of Mr. Allen towards the prisoners? No.

1030. What has been the character of his conduct towards the prisoners? I think he has been always kind towards the prisoners, as far as I can judge. I have heard them invariably speak well of Mr. Allen and his kindness—of course with the exception of such men as M'Callaghan, and where actual coercion is required. I can only speak of what I have heard and what I have not heard. I have never heard any complaints against Mr. Allen of unkindness to the prisoners; on the other hand, I have heard them speak well of him.

1031. By Mr. Holroyd: You have never seen any cases of harsh treatment towards the prisoners? I have seen none, except the one case where I asked that the chain should be loosened a little. I do not think that that was unnecessary harshness. I merely thought that the chain was too tight, and I had it loosened.

1032. M'Callaghan was the man's name? Yes.

1033. Is he there now? Yes.

1034. Was he under your treatment for any of the alleged injuries he received? Never for any injury.

1035. In Mr. Allen's time? In Mr. Allen's time.

1036. Neither from the chain nor from the handcuffs? Neither from the chain nor from the handcuffs.

1037. Did you see him when he was on the chain, or when he had the handcuffs on? I saw him frequently during that time.

1038. When he had the handcuffs on? I did.

1039. Did he make any complaint to you that he was unable to attend to the usual duties of nature? Never.

1040. He did not? He did not.

1041. By the Chairman: You mentioned just now about the wall of the cell being smeared over—was that with human ordure? It is difficult to say; it was plastered in so many places that I cannot say. He said he had done it with soap; he had a small piece of soap, with which he could make marks, but I do not think he had sufficient to make so many.

1042. Did you notice any offensive smell? No, the cell had the close smell which cells often have; there was no particularly offensive smell.

1043. Did you notice these violent turns more than once? It is so long ago that I cannot recollect distinctly, but I think I did.

1044. Was it the first time you saw him that you noticed this piece of soap? I rather think it was.

1045. Can you tax your memory as to the size of the piece of soap? It was a small piece, not much thicker than a penny-piece.

1046. You could speak with certainty as to that? I do not know what size it was when he had it.

1047. When you saw the walls smeared the second time, could it have been with the same piece of soap? Not the same piece he had before.

1048. By Mr. Holroyd: As far as you have formed an opinion, you think the marks were made with soap? I do not think so; he took the soap and showed me a small mark, but my impression is that it was not done so.

1049. Your impression is that it was done in some other manner—from filth? Yes.

1050. By the Chairman: And beyond this simple tightening of the chain there was nothing about his person that indicated that he had been harshly treated? There was nothing about his person that he ever called my attention to; he was generally perfectly naked, and walking up and down the cell in an excited state.

1051. Did you, at any time you went in when he was in that way, see any of his clothes lying about? Yes; it is difficult to recollect. Sometimes he certainly had no clothes on when he was walking about; on one occasion he had a jumper, partly torn, tied on by the sleeves, the other part of his body being naked; once he had a pair of trousers with one leg on and the other uncovered.

1052. You have seen his clothes torn? Yes, but I cannot say that I have seen them torn on more occasions than one.

1053. You recollect that portion of your examination where I asked you about Mr. Allen or some one of the officers complaining of being struck? Yes.

1054.

- G. H. Pringle, Esq.
12 Dec., 1862.
1054. You could not say whether it was the chief turnkey or the gaoler? I cannot.
1055. Can you recollect who it was that disclosed marks on the face of ill-treatment—you said something about one of them having received wounds on the face? I can merely say that I have an impression that such was remarked to me; but it was a thing I did not pay much attention to at the time. I do not think I prescribed anything for it; if I did there will be a record of it. There were a number of bruises, but I knew that the man was in the habit of being violent, and I was not surprised.
1056. Do you know whether the night-tubs, or any of the utensils in the cells, were broken? I have mentioned that this man, M'Callaghan, on one occasion made a knife out of a hoop of one of the night-tubs, and that with this knife he divided the leather belt by which he was attached to the chain.
1057. Do you recollect whether you have been informed by any of the officers of the gaol that he destroyed the bedding? I recollect being told that he had destroyed the bedding, and that he conducted himself as a furious lunatic, evidently with the idea of passing himself off as a lunatic.
1058. Can you tax your memory so as to say that you recollect seeing these things? I cannot.
1059. It is possible they might have been removed before you came to the gaol? Yes, they may have been removed before my time.
1060. Do you recollect whether you ever had occasion to dress the wounds of any of the turnkeys? I know that I have dressed some of the turnkeys for slight wounds from the prisoners, but I cannot remember now whether they were inflicted by M'Callaghan. I could have probably refreshed my memory in that respect by referring to the diary, but I know that I have on either one or two occasions dressed wounds for turnkeys; but, as I said before, whether they were in connection with M'Callaghan or not, I do not know.
1061. To return to these vouchers—articles may have been supplied to the hospital without your knowledge or without the knowledge of the gaoler, because the dispenser (you say) has authority to obtain articles? Yes, he has authority to send out a requisition; but that requisition would have to come in some way for a voucher to be presented for signature, through the clerk's hands, at any rate.
1063. Exactly, the general voucher; but you would have to depend upon the statement of the dispenser whether things had been received which you had not specifically ordered? Yes, but at the same time I could satisfy myself generally.
1064. In the absence of any suspicion of any impropriety, I suppose the usual course would be, that the dispenser would simply tell you that these articles have been received? I should ask him, if I saw anything I had not ordered myself, why it was there.
1065. Do you recollect ever dressing the head of a turnkey named Connor, for a blow from a stone? I recollect dressing the head of a man for a wound inflicted by a stone, but I cannot recollect whether his name was Connor or not.
1066. By Mr. Holroyd: Do you recollect whether he was one of the turnkeys? Yes.
1067. By the Chairman: Can you recollect by whom the blow was inflicted? I cannot.
1068. By Mr. Dangar: Did you see the prisoner John M'Callaghan in irons? I did.
1069. Where was the chain placed? I saw him on different occasions. One time he had a belt round his waist, and on another occasion he had a large chain.
1070. Was it tight on? On one occasion it was so tight that I asked to have it loosened.
1071. Are you aware who ordered that chain to be placed on the man's body? I am not.
1072. You are not the Visiting Surgeon now? Yes, I am the Visiting Surgeon now.
1073. Then you have seen this man I allude to, recently perhaps? I have not; he has not been on my list for the last two or three months. His name was down yesterday for me to see him, but he had recovered. He may have been sick from the heat of the sun, but he had gone to work in the morning.
1074. Are you aware if the punishment which has been inflicted has been the means of his becoming a better subject? Certainly; his confinement in the cell, his being kept on bread and water, and his finding out that he could not palm himself off as a lunatic, have restored him to his senses; but as to whether he has become more docile by being severely treated, I cannot say. For several weeks he simulated violent madness during his treatment in the cells. One time he refused to take food for several days, but he gradually grew tired of that, and came to his senses.
1075. Your opinion, as a medical gentleman, is, that the punishment he was sentenced to was necessary? I think it was necessary to put him in the cells; I can hardly give an opinion as to the necessity of putting a heavy chain upon him; he certainly required confinement of some kind. I think had he not been confined he would have done some injury to Mr. Allen or to some of the turnkeys.
1076. By Mr. Holroyd: You looked upon this as a case of simulated madness? Yes.
1077. By Mr. Dangar: When he was brought up and the Visiting Magistrate and Surgeon had occasion to punish him —? I do not know anything about the Visiting Magistrate; I have only to do with the health of the prisoners.
1078. But, as Visiting Surgeon, you know that he was frequently punished? I knew that he was frequently in the cells; and on this occasion he was in the cells for a considerable period. I believe there was a necessity for punishing the man, and that he required severe treatment.

Richard Greenup, Esq., M.D., called in and examined:—

R. Greenup,
Esq., M.D.

1079. By the Chairman: You are Visiting Justice of the Parramatta Gaol, I believe? Yes.

12 Dec., 1862.

1080. How long have you been Visiting Justice of that gaol? Three years to-day; that is, the first visit I made as Visiting Justice of the gaol was on the 12th December, 1859.

1081. How often do you visit the gaol? My regular visits are twice a-week, but I visit besides at irregular times.

1082. What do you do when you go to the gaol on your visits? The regular duties of the Visiting Justice are in the printed rules; they are principally to see as to the state of the prisoners. I do not know that he has strictly any other duty than to see in what state the prisoners are. I see the gaoler has got the gaol regulations here.

1083. These (documents referred to) are instructions for Visiting Magistrates? They are taken from the Act of Parliament, I believe.

1084. Do you recollect a prisoner of the name of M'Callaghan? Yes.

1085. Was he confined in the gaol? Yes, he has been there twice, I think, since I have been there, on two different charges.

1086. Where did he arrive from first, do you recollect? I do not know, I do not see the warrants; I find them there, and if there is any inquiry about the prisoners I refer to the warrants, but not necessarily or generally.

1087. Are you aware that this man has been confined in one of the cells? Yes, he was confined in the cell by my order occasionally. All punishments, I beg to observe, are entered in the punishment book.

1088. We have already taken notice from this book that he received a sentence of six months in irons from two Justices, yourself and Mr. M'Crea, I think? Yes.

1089. Do you recollect him being confined in a cell, with a chain round his body? I dare say he was, I am not certain. The gaoler, without reference to the Visiting Magistrate, has power to keep a man in irons for forty-eight hours—that you will see in the gaol regulations. And as to the chain being round his body, to be handcuffed in that way to a chain is not so severe as having the handcuffs on the wrist. If a man has a chain or strap round his body, and is handcuffed with his hands near, he can use his hands better than when his wrists only are chained together.

1090. What was the conduct of this man? Generally very bad.

1091. Has it ever been reported to you that he has assaulted the officers of the gaol, or torn his clothes or bedding? I think he was twice before me for assaults. I think the sentence in irons was for assaults; once or twice afterwards he was up for similar offences. He was a very violent tempered man.

1092. Do you recollect ever seeing any of the officers of the gaol with wounds on their faces or persons, said to have been inflicted by him? I do not know in the face, but certainly on the head. I am not quite certain that I have not seen one with wounds on the face too.

1093. Do you know who it was that exhibited these marks? I do not recollect his name, but it is all in the Petty Sessions book.

1094. Do you know whether he ever destroyed any of the utensils he had in the cells, or the irons that were on him—whether he broke them? I do recollect that perfectly.

1095. Will you state what you remember in reference to that circumstance? He was fastened with handcuffs. He and others had power of snapping their handcuffs. If he found he could not snap them he would rub them on the ground. I think I have seen two or three pairs of irons that were shown to me as having been broken by him, but I never saw him break them.

1096. Have you ever seen any violence in his conduct when you have been present yourself? In the conduct of M'Callaghan?

1097. Yes? No, I cannot say that I have seen any violence; generally when I was there, there was force enough to put it down. I have seen him very insolent, but I do not think I ever saw him attempt to strike anybody.

1098. Was he considered a lunatic or otherwise? Well, he was certainly considered a lunatic. He was taken before the surgeon, as showing what might be lunacy, and he was visited by the surgeon several times, I think, for what the surgeon considered, and what I considered, simulated mania.

1099. Do you know whether you had occasion to give any order to fasten him with a leather belt, at any time, round the waist, in consequence of his violence? I do not remember that I gave any order of that kind, but I was cognizant of the fact that he was in irons—I do not recollect the length of time.

1100. Did you ever see any marks on his body from wearing iron round his waist? No.

1101. Did you ever observe whether it was unnecessarily tight on him? If he had complained of it to me, I should have examined him. The only tightness required is that he should not be able to slip it over the hips. If it were fastened so tight that he could not slip it over the hips, it would be tight enough. I do not know that my attention was ever called to the state of the tightness of it.

1102. Did you ever notice his wrists? Yes, I believe his wrists were chafed.

1103. How long is that ago? I cannot tell how long; but I believe his wrists were chafed, and when I asked how it was, I was told that he was in the habit of rubbing the irons on the ground.

1104. By Mr. Holroyd: Then his wrists were not chafed on account of the handcuffs being too small, but in consequence of his rubbing the handcuffs on the ground and attempting to destroy them? Yes.

1105. By the Chairman: You say he was one of those men who could snap the handcuffs?

R. Greenup,
Esq., M.D.

12 Dec., 1862.

Yes, I have seen a man show me how he could do it; he would require a few minutes' preparation, and then slip his hands out of the handcuffs.

1106. Do you recollect having your attention drawn to the walls of his cell being smeared with filth? Yes, I think I saw it; I know it was reported to me, and I think I went to look at it too—I think I must have done.

1107. Do you recollect at any time before this chain was put round his waist whether he had a leather belt on? I do not remember.

1108. Do you recollect whether a report was made to you of the night-tubs in the cell being damaged—did you ever hear of a hoop being taken off one of the night-tubs, and sharpened so as to cut? I do not remember.

1109. Have you at any time seen his clothes or his bedding torn? Yes, I am pretty certain that I have seen his clothes torn.

1110. Do you know whether the blankets he had were torn? I think on one occasion they were brought to me as torn, but I would not be quite positive of that; if it were so, it ought to have been put down in the offence book, and I dare say it is.

1111. You say if he had ever complained to you of this chain being too tight, you would of course have ordered it to be loosened? Certainly.

1112. But no complaint of that kind was made? No, I believe not; I do not remember any. It is my duty to attend to any complaint made by the prisoners, and I have no doubt that I should have attended to this had the complaint been made.

1113. During the three years you have been Visiting Justice of the gaol, what is your opinion in regard to Mr. Allen's conduct as a humane man towards the prisoners, or otherwise? Mr. Allen is what most people are who have been very much with prisoners—he certainly was a strict gaoler.

1114. Do you think it is not necessary in that position to be strict? Yes, I certainly think it is. It would have been my duty to have objected to any undue strictness or severity, and if ever I had seen it I should at once have spoken of it.

1115. But with reference to this man,—did you ever hear that Mr. Allen was unnecessarily severe in his treatment towards him? I do not remember that I ever thought him unnecessarily severe; McCallaghan was a very difficult man to manage. I remember when he was first brought up before me, after my appointment, he was said to be a man of that character that he would commit offences for the purpose of being punished; and I said, "Then I will disappoint him," and I did not punish him.

1116. They seemed to be generally satisfied with the discipline he was carrying on? There was not much complaint; and so far as the prisoners are satisfied —

1117. They are not very easily satisfied, are they? No, it is a very difficult matter indeed to satisfy them sometimes; I do not know a more difficult position.

1118. Have you had any complaints made by the Sheriff of the conduct of Mr. Allen? I do not remember that I have.

1119. Did he ever complain to you about a horse being kept there—about Mr. Allen's horse being kept in the gaol, and a horse belonging to the Government being kept outside the gaol—do you recollect that being mentioned? No.

1120. By Mr. Uhr? No, neither by the Sheriff nor by anybody else.

1121. Used you to see Mr. Uhr occasionally up there? Yes, occasionally.

1122. You say you visited the gaol twice a-week? Yes.

1123. Had you stated days for your visits? Yes, Tuesdays and Fridays.

1124. And you have been in the habit of going at stated hours? Yes, within half an hour or an hour of the time; generally about eleven o'clock in the morning.

1125. At other times you visited it without any warning or preparation on the part of the gaoler? Yes; all that can be shown in the visitors' book. I write my name in the visitors' book every time I go.

1126. And the hour of your visit, I suppose? No.

1127. Only the day? Only the day. Last night I went at 4 o'clock; I just walked round the gaol, because I could not go to-day. I used first to hear any cases which might be entered in that book (punishment book).

1128. That is the book which contains charges preferred against the prisoners? Yes. It is shouted out that anyone who wants to see the Visiting Magistrate may do so—that he is ready to hear them. Then a number of them come in. Those are not all put down; but as many of them came very frequently, I had a book to put down their names in and any trifling request they might make.

1129. Have you heard any complaint on the part of the prisoners about the rations? Oh, yes, frequently.

1130. I know it is a fertile source of complaint—have these complaints been as to the quality or the quantity, or both? Both.

1131. I presume you then investigate as to the quality and quantity also? I do not investigate as to the quantity so much as to the quality; it is the gaoler's business to see to the quantity. It is generally, I believe, handed over to the principal turnkey; it may be his business (but of this I am not quite certain) to weigh everything that comes in. By the ration scale the gross quantity is clearly marked. If there is any complaint of quality I generally hear of it.

1132. Is there any fixed regulation with reference to the scale of rations for the prisoners in the gaol? There is a strict scale.

1133. Is it published? It is published in all the ration accounts.

1134. I mean, is there any printed regulation published? I do not know.

1135. I suppose you cannot tell me what the scale is from memory? I can tell you from memory what they receive, for it was before me the other day. The meat is very poor just now.

now. It is the gaoler's duty to see that the full weight is served out. Of course bony meat loses a great deal of weight in the cooking, and when I was first appointed I found that the mess of cooked meat for four men was put at one and a half pounds—that was only six ounces for each man. As I did not think it enough, I tried some experiments in the different establishments to which I belong, and I found that with the common ration of meat they ought not to have less than eight ounces of cooked meat per man. I gave that order, and wrote it out in my own memorandum book, which is kept at the gaol. What makes me know it particularly is, that it was told me that now the meat is poor they could not weigh out the eight ounces per man of cooked meat; I said then the contractor must send so much more meat to enable them to do it—that it was not fair they should have more bone than would allow eight ounces to be weighed out.

R. Greenup,
Esq., M.D.

12 Dec., 1862.

1136. Do you know what the scale of soap is? I do not know.

1137. You do not know what quantity of soap is allowed, or what is the scale of allowance? I do not know. I have seen the men with two or three bits of soap, but I do not know what the scale is; it is all on the ration paper.

1138. When was this chain put round M'Callaghan? I do not know; I do not remember.

1139. By Mr. Dangar: Was it ordered off in your presence? No, not in my presence; I do not think it was ordered off when I was present.

1140. You ordered it to be put on? I did not order it to be put on, but I allowed it to be kept on. As I said, the gaoler has the power of putting a man in irons, and keeping him in irons for forty-eight hours, without reference to me. When a man is guilty of striking, I have found it necessary occasionally that the irons should be kept on longer.

1141. By the Chairman: Can you recollect where M'Callaghan came from, or how he came into the gaol? No, I cannot; he was in the gaol, I think, when I was first appointed. He was subsequently discharged, but in three or four months he was back again.

1142. By Mr. Holroyd: Have you had many complaints made by the prisoners of the treatment of Mr. Allen towards them? I cannot say that I have had.

1143. Have you had occasion to complain to the contractor of the quality of the provisions sent in? Very often in the course of the three years.

1144. I mean in the course of the three years? Very often; in fact it was one of the most troublesome parts of my duty—speaking about the rations, because occasionally I thought the prisoners complained without reason, and it was very difficult to satisfy them; occasionally the contractor thought the complaint without reason, and it was very difficult to satisfy him. Now, if there is any complaint, there is generally a board called at once.

1145. A board from Sydney or a local board? A local board. Formerly, if a ration was objected to, it was generally, I think, first taken before the Surgeon, if he happened to be there, and if not it was brought before me. The bread was generally the source of complaint, and if this was bad they sent word to the contractor to take it back, and if he refused a board was called; but often he took it back without a board being called, knowing that it was bad.

1146. By whom is the board called—by you? That is in the contract papers—by the objecting party.

1147. And if a prisoner is the objecting party? The prisoner has no right to call a board. A prisoner is represented by his officers and the Visiting Magistrate and the Surgeon.

1148. If the prisoners objected to the quality of the rations would you call a board? If I agreed with them.

1149. You would not have to refer to head quarters? No.

1150. How many did the board consist of? One party chosen by the gaoler, one by the contractor, and these two must call upon a third.

1151. By Mr. Dangar: Have there been many complaints made to you of Mr. Allen's severity or harshness of conduct towards the prisoners? No, I cannot say there have been many complaints.

1152. Do you think he was justified as regards the treatment of this man, M'Callaghan, from time to time? Yes, I think he was.

1153. You perhaps are aware that harshness is charged against Mr. Allen? Yes, here I have been told that it is.

1154. Do you still think that Mr. Allen only did his duty as a gaoler? I think Mr. Allen was obliged to treat this man severely.

1155. In that particular case? In that particular case.

1156. By the Chairman: I presume if you had not thought so you would have ordered the irons to be taken off? It would have been my duty to have done so, and I think I should have done so.

1157. With reference to the Government horse—was there such a thing as a Government horse attached to the gaol at Parramatta? I think there are two; certainly there is one.

1158. Have you seen it frequently? Yes, frequently; I saw it almost every day.

1159. Do you know whether that horse has been ill-used or abused in any way whatever? It was ill-used once or twice by the messenger, who was either dismissed or severely reprimanded for it. That was in Mr. Allen's time, I think.

1160. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you notice if, in Mr. Allen's time, the horse fell off in condition at all? If Mr. Allen had been appointed, and the horse had been fat before and had fallen off afterwards, I should have noticed it; but Mr. Allen was there, and the horse was there, at the time I was appointed.

1161. Within Mr. Uhr's time, during the last year and a half, have you noticed whether the horse has fallen off in condition? No; it is very fat now, because they give it a portion of the waste hominy.

1162. Oh! it is placed on gaol rations now, is it? It always had rations.

- R. Greenup, Esq., M.D.
12 Dec., 1862.
1163. But not hominy? No. I am not certain, I do not think they give it hominy now, because the hominy is sold—all the waste of the gaol is sold now, I think.
1164. For the benefit of the Government? No; the Government gave it to the Benevolent Asylum at Parramatta, and it is sold for their benefit.
1165. By Mr Dangar: When Mr. Allen was suspended, Mr. McCormick took charge? Yes, he was put in charge.
1166. By the Chairman: Do you know whether there are any regulations in force for the guidance of the Visiting Surgeon of the gaol? I believe there are; I was Visiting Surgeon myself for several years, and I believe there are certain rules, but I forget what they were.
1167. By Mr. Holroyd: According to these regulations should not the surgeon keep a record of the state of the prisoners who are sick? We always keep a journal, in which is entered the names of the prisoners, and I think the disease from which they are suffering.
1168. Is tobacco used now amongst the prisoners in the gaol? Yes.
1169. How long has that been allowed? I do not know, but I think about three months.
1170. By whose order was it supplied? By the Sheriff; and a very good order it is, I believe.
1171. It was supplied by the Sheriff's order? Yes; I was always very anxious that it should be allowed. If you look through the punishment book, you will see that half the punishments were for getting in tobacco. By allowing tobacco in the gaol you have taken away a great element of quarrel between the authorities and the prisoners.
1172. Are you aware that it is prohibited in all the English gaols? I dare say it is; but I think it is so easily carried in, and the men are so determined to have it, that it is almost like holding out a bonus to contention to refuse it. By giving tobacco the quarrels between the turnkeys and the prisoners must be infinitely less numerous.
1173. Would you not consider that tobacco given to the prisoners in the gaol is allowed to them as a luxury? Clearly.
1174. Does not that do away with a great deal of the effect of prison punishment and prison discipline? No, I do not think it does.
1175. Do they purchase it, or do they have it given to them as a ration? Any man who works, and keeps a fair character, is allowed it; I forget whether he is allowed half a fig or a fig a-week.
1176. Then he has not to pay for it; or, if he has to pay for it, does he pay for it out of his own earnings? No, it is entirely done by the Government, and there is no charge made to the prisoners for the tobacco supplied to them.
1177. Then those who do not smoke do not get anything in lieu of the tobacco? No.
1178. Is it also allowed in the female department? I think not, but I am not quite certain.
1179. Have you noticed any boys smoking in the gaol? It is not allowed to any of the prisoners under twenty years of age.
1180. Have you seen the last work published by Mayhew, on Prison Discipline? No, but I have read through the reports of the Irish management, for six or seven years.
1181. By the Chairman: It has been the constant practice, I believe, to employ at work some of the prisoners in the gaol? All the prisoners committed and sentenced to hard labour must be employed in some kind of work.
1182. Is there any record kept of the quantity of work done by each man in the gaol, do you know? I do not know that there is a record; the results of the work of course appear.
1183. In what way do you arrive at the results? Against the stone-cutters there is a record, but against others I do not know whether there is a written record kept. The shoemaker has to make so many shoes, and the hatmaker so many hats, and so on.
1184. Is this done without charge, or is money received for it by officers of the gaol, on account of the Government? The things are sold.
1185. By Mr. Holroyd: The raw material is purchased by the Government, the manufacturing is done in the gaol, and then the things are sold by the Government auctioneer, I think, Mr. Staff? Yes.
1186. Then the prisoner gets half the profit of the Government, less a small sum for the raw material? The prisoners get nothing.
1187. By the Chairman: Does the whole pass to the Government? Yes, all, except Mr. Staff's commission.
1188. The proceeds of the sales will give you some idea of the work done? Oh, nothing like it, because all the stone-cutting is done for the Government—all the most expensive work done by the carpenters and blacksmiths is done for the Government.
1189. You can tell what has been realized every month by the sale of articles worked up in the gaol? Of course, we know what is realized by the sale, because the gaoler makes an affidavit in reference to that before me or some other Magistrate.
1190. And a record is kept of it, I suppose? Of course, that is in the accounts.
1191. Since Mr. Allen left, can you state from memory whether there has been an increase or a decrease in the proceeds of the sales of goods manufactured in the gaol? I cannot say; I believe it is very small now; but I cannot say whether, immediately on his going, there was an increase or a decrease. All the accounts are there, and can be easily referred to.
1192. By Mr. Holroyd: Is there much stone now brought in and cut in the gaol, and sent out? There is none now cut for private hands.
1193. That practice has been discontinued then? Yes; for two or three years all works for private hands have been discontinued, with the exception of that done by the sempstresses on the women's side.
1194. Is there anything done by the women, as laundresses, for the people outside? No.
1195. Since tobacco has been given to the prisoners, have you had any complaint from the prisoners themselves about the quality of the tobacco? No, I do not think I have.

1196. As to whether the Government were issuing colonial instead of American tobacco? R. Greenup, Esq., M.D.
I believe it is colonial.
1197. And have they complained about its being colonial? I do not remember that they have—I think not; if they had, I should have heard of it. 12 Dec., 1862.
1198. Who finds the pipes—the Government? Yes.
1199. By the Chairman: During the whole time you have been Visiting Surgeon to the gaol, has Mr. Allen had a horse of his own? Do you mean during the whole time I have been Visiting Surgeon and Visiting Justice?
1200. Do you mean the Visiting Surgeon or Visiting Justice? I have only been three years as Visiting Justice; but I have known Mr. Allen since my first appointment, ten years ago, as Visiting Surgeon, and I believe he has always had a horse.
1201. In the gaol? I do not know whether he has had it in the gaol, but he has always had a horse.
1202. Since you have been Visiting Justice? I do not know whether he has had it in the gaol;—yes, he had, he had a stable there; and it was the same when I was Visiting Surgeon. I remember that now, because there was some dispute as to whom the materials belonged—to the gaol or to Mr. Allen.
1203. By Mr. Holroyd: That question arose when he was being dismissed? I forget whether it was at that time, or before the stable was removed and something else put up. Nothing else was put up until the old stable was pulled down, and I think it must have been after he left.
1204. By the Chairman: Will you state your opinion as to Mr. Allen's general conduct and character as a gaoler? I always considered Mr. Allen a smart, strict gaoler; it is necessary, I think, to be strict with prisoners.
1205. By Mr. Dangar: You are aware, Dr. Greenup, that there were two charges investigated against Mr. Allen previously, but perhaps that was before your time? In my time I think there have been either two or three investigations.
1206. And he was always —? He was always acquitted.
1207. By the Chairman: You know Mr. Elliot, formerly Police Magistrate at Parramatta? Not since his appointment as Police Magistrate.
1208. At the time he was Police Magistrate were you resident in Parramatta? No, my first acquaintance with him was when he had some office connected with Sydney; I think Mr. Forbes was Visiting Magistrate almost all the time that I was Visiting Surgeon.
1209. Have you ever heard from Mr. Forbes an expression of opinion as to what he thought of Mr. Allen? I think so; I never heard that he was spoken of unfavourably.

Mr. James Green called in and examined:—

1210. By the Chairman: You are gaoler of the Parramatta Gaol? Yes. Mr. J. Green.
1211. When were you appointed to that office? On the 4th July last. 12 Dec., 1862.
1212. Do you produce the prisoners' private account book? Yes. (Book produced.)
1213. Is that a book which purports to contain an account of moneys found on the prisoners when they are received into gaol? Yes.
1214. Who makes these entries? Mr. Hargrave.
1215. The clerk of the gaol? Yes.
1216. This commences in the month of October, 1860? I do not know anything about that.
1217. But it does commence there? Yes.
1218. And you continued to keep up the account yourself? Yes, just in the same way. It would be entered in that book when the prisoner came in, and showed to him when it was paid to him on going out.
1219. This is called the requisition book (book produced by witness)? Yes, that I got done; it is during my time, the whole of that.
1220. Oh! this is all in your time? Yes.
1221. Do you know what is the quantity of soap allowed in the gaol? I would have to look at the ration book to tell you.
1222. Here is the ration book—you produce also the old requisition book in Mr. Allen's time? I produce the butts of the requisitions.
1223. Have you got any of the hospital books? No, there is no hospital book kept. Sometimes I get books from the hospital; sometimes the doctor desires me to send for things when he requires them—a dozen eggs, or the like of that.
1224. Do you make out vouchers at the end of the month? Yes, we make out vouchers at the end of the month.
1225. From the butts, and from the ration book? From the ration book.
1226. Show me where you have entered these things in the ration book (extract referred to)—what are these facts here? Hospital ration account—20 lbs. soap for washing purposes. A ration of soap is drawn for the prisoners.
1227. This is drawn for the prisoners to wash their clothes? It is drawn for washing prisoners' clothes or blankets.
1228. Whether they are in the hospital or not? Yes.
1229. You enter it under the head of hospital rations, although it is not for hospital purposes alone? Yes; that 20 lbs. is used for every dirty sheet.
1230. What voucher would you put that in when you wanted to get it signed for—would you put it down among the hospital accounts? I really think it is in the hospital accounts; if I saw one of the vouchers I could tell.
1231. It appears that there was no fixed principle to guide you? It must be by the heading of the vouchers. 1232.

- Mr. J. Green. 1232. An article is received and entered here under the hospital ration account, although it is not for the hospital alone, but for the general purposes of the gaol? I understand that.
- 12 Dec., 1862. 1233. Do I understand you that you do not consider it to matter whether you put it under the hospital account or under any other account for the gaol, so long as it is received and charged? Oh, no, so long as it is charged, and so long as we are sure that it has been drawn for the purposes for which it is required.
1234. And this soap, you say, was for the general purposes of the gaol, and for the hospital too? Yes.
1235. That was in the month of November—that was only last month;—have you sent in your accounts for the month of November? Yes.
1236. Can you call to mind under what particular head you charged that particular item? I cannot.
1237. How many vouchers have you sent in? We have three contractors, and there is a voucher each.
1238. Do you know, with reference to that item, whether the Visiting Surgeon would vouch for that? The Visiting Surgeon—I think he does.
1239. Are there any other things received for the use of the gaol, independent of the hospital, that are put under this head as well as this article of soap to which we have just referred, can you tell—"14 lbs. of oatmeal,"—what was that for? That was for the hospital.
1240. And "18 lbs. of tobacco"? That was drawn for the hospital in October, 1862.
1241. For the hospital? Yes.
1242. By Mr. Holroyd: Was that all consumed in the hospital? No.
1243. But you say it was all for the hospital? It was not all for hospital use.
1244. That is not all used in the hospital? No.
1245. Who get it besides the people in the hospital? The other prisoners—it is allowed by the Government.
1246. Under what voucher does the tobacco appear which is issued to the prisoners who are not in the hospital? I cannot answer that without I see the voucher.
1247. Can you tell what quantity was used in the hospital, and what was consumed by the general body of the prisoners? No, but that has been used.
1248. You cannot tell, by reference to this, what was used in the hospital and what by the general body of the prisoners? No; they get an ounce each.
1249. An ounce each? Yes.
1250. Have those who are not in the hospital any limited time for smoking, or do they smoke at their work? They are allowed to smoke at six o'clock in the morning.
1251. Do they smoke at any other time? Yes, at eleven o'clock they get tea and have a quarter of an hour to take another smoke.
1252. And again? And again at five o'clock.
1253. They smoke a third time? Yes.
1254. And do they smoke again after that? No.
1255. They smoke three times a-day? They smoke three times a-day.
1256. Supposing a prisoner gets tobacco and does not consume it, does he hand it over to the other prisoners? He can do so; I have nothing to prevent it.
1257. Therefore, any prisoner over twenty years of age who may draw tobacco and not smoke it, may hand it over to other prisoners? He can.
1258. By Mr. Dangar: Is that an ounce per week? Yes, an ounce a-week.
1259. By Mr. Holroyd: That would be about a fig? A fig or a little more. If it was a small fig, and you only gave them a fig, they would say that they had not their allowance.
1260. Can you give me any idea in what voucher that tobacco is included which is given to the prisoners? There is a voucher sent to the contractor for that.
1261. Who signs that? I sign that.
1262. Does it come through the medical comfort voucher or the surgeon's voucher? One comes through the medical comfort voucher and another through the surgeon's voucher; when I apply, I apply for a certain quantity of tobacco.
1263. And who supplies it? Mr. Devlin.
1264. Both to those in the gaol and those in the hospital? Yes.
1265. Is the tobacco colonial or foreign? I believe that some of it is colonial.
1266. And some of it is foreign? Yes, some is foreign.
1267. Have you not had complaints on the part of the prisoners that some of the tobacco has been colonial? Yes, it has been refused by them.
1268. Answer my question? There have been complaints.
1269. There have been complaints on the part of the prisoners that you have been issuing colonial tobacco instead of American, is that so? It is a fact.
1270. And it is only three months since it was introduced? Yes.
1271. Have these complaints been made frequently—how many times? Only once.
1272. What did you do in that case? I returned it to the contractor. I said that it was refused by the prisoners, and that he must send a better quality, because the prisoners would not use it.
1273. In your opinion would the man who complained have rather smoked colonial tobacco than not have smoked at all? I think he would.
1274. But he preferred that it should be sent back and American tobacco substituted? Yes.
1275. By the Chairman: Tea is provided, I understood you to say, in the middle of the day? Yes, they get tea at eleven.
1276. And a smoke? Yes.
1277. They have tea and a smoke? Yes.
1278. And do they get tea at six? No, at five.
- 1279.

1279. By Mr. Lackey: What is the meal at eleven? That is tea they have then. Mr. J. Green.
1280. Have they nothing to eat—no cheese? No; bread.
1281. By Mr. Holroyd: Then they have tea again with their tobacco at five in the evening? 12 Dec., 1862.
Yes.
1282. And are they not allowed to smoke after dinner? No.
1283. What time do they dine? At one o'clock.
1284. Do they not complain that they cannot have a smoke after dinner? No.
1285. They have not complained yet? No.
1286. I suppose if you withheld the indulgence they would complain? Yes, I suppose so.
1287. Who fixed the times for the smokes during the day? It was left to me. They were not to smoke during working hours.
1288. They do not go to work immediately they have bolted their dinner? No, they are locked up during dinner.
1289. How long are they allowed for dinner? An hour.
1290. How long do they take to eat their dinner? Half an hour.
1291. In that interval between dinner and going to work, if they required it would you object to letting them have a smoke? It would be against orders.
1292. You say you fixed the time? It would be against orders; it would be against the cleanliness of the place.
1293. But you say that you fixed the times—supposing they wished to smoke again at dinner time—the time gentlemen generally smoke—would you object to their smoking? Yes.
1294. Why? Not until I saw the Visiting Justice.
1295. You say you gave these orders? I say they might smoke three times a day.
1296. The Visiting Justice has nothing to do with the ordering of it, has he? I acquainted him with the order.
1297. That was, after you had given the order, he sanctioned it? Yes.
1298. If you allowed them to smoke after dinner, would not he sanction that? No doubt he would, and if he did I would not object to it.
1299. Well, if you had given the order, of course you could not;—do you not think it a great privation that these men should not be allowed to smoke? I believe so.
1300. Do you smoke at all? I do.
1301. Do you smoke after dinner? I do.
1302. Do you not think it would be a great luxury to the prisoners to be able to smoke as well as you? I think it would, but I think they are getting plenty.
1303. By the Chairman: How much tobacco do the prisoners get? An ounce weekly; about a quarter of an inch more than a fig.
1304. Is that given to them every Monday morning? Yes, every Monday morning.
1305. By Mr. Holroyd: Are the pipes entered in the voucher for medical comforts? I believe they are; they can't smoke without a pipe.
1306. Who finds the matches—do the Government light their pipes? I have not bought any matches; before they were allowed to have matches they had tinder.
1307. How did they get tinder? They made it of rag, by striking a light with their flint and steel.
1308. They strike lights with their flint and steel, and that is the way they light their pipes? It is.
1309. And flint and steel are permitted there? Well —
1310. By the Chairman: Have you noticed whether they smoke at night? I have seen a light at night, and I found that they had matches.
1311. Where did they get them from? They can get those things in spite of us at times.
1312. Are you not supposed to make a record of that kind of thing? Of trifling things of that kind I do not.
1313. You do not consider lights in the cells at night a trifling matter, surely? There was a light struck, and I called the man up the next morning.
1314. But you have no record of any such thing in your diary? No.
1315. By Mr. Lackey: Do you keep a diary? I have a private one of my own.
1316. By the Chairman: I mean, have you got an official diary, which you keep as a gaoler? No.
1317. Are you not, by the regulations, required to keep a journal of transactions—to make a record of any breaches of the regulations that occur—is it not required by the regulations? It is.
1318. By Mr. Holroyd: I think you say that you do not keep a journal—do you keep a journal of this kind, as provided by the 20th regulation:—"Every gaoler shall keep a journal, in which he shall record all the punishments inflicted by his authority or by that of the Visiting Justice, and the cause thereof, and the day when such punishment shall have taken place, and all other occurrences of importance within the said gaol, and such other books, inventories, &c., as shall be required of him, particularly an inventory of all fixtures and furnitures in the gaol, an account of all expenses incurred for the gaol, the number of persons daily rationed in it, and an account of all moneys or other articles received for the use of the prisoners, or taken from prisoners on their entrance into the gaol";—have you ever, since you have been gaoler at Parramatta, kept such a journal as that? Yes.
1319. Have you got it now? No. I have one here—I think this is it (punishment book).
1320. Does that combine all these particulars? No, not in one journal.
1321. By the Chairman: That is the punishment book, and not a journal? It is not.
1322. By Mr. Holroyd: Have you got a journal in which you record all punishments, and their dates, and all occurrences of importance within the gaol? Certainly.
1323. All these things ought to be put in one journal—the number of prisoners, the daily rations, an account of the money taken, and so forth? Certainly. 1324.

- Mr. J. Green. 1324. That is this journal? No, that journal is not here.
1325. Ought you not to enter such a circumstance as a man wishing to have American tobacco instead of colonial? No, I think not.
- 12 Dec., 1862. 1326. By the Chairman: You say you have seen lights in the cells at night—do you keep a record of those circumstances? I keep a private record of it.
1327. But this is to be a public book, kept by the gaoler? I have not a book like that.
1328. Have you not had any book of that kind since you have been there? No.
1329. Have you in any other book made entries (call it by what name you like) of such occurrences as that of a man refusing to take colonial tobacco and demanding negrohead; or of matches being found in the cells at night—is there any entry made of such occurrences? There is an entry made of the refusal of the tobacco; it is in the letter book.
1330. James Devlin, for extra articles—there is so much bread;—is that for the general body of the prisoners? Yes.
1331. This (November, 1862) is an account sent in to the Government of articles received for the gaol? Yes.
1332. 1,770 lbs. of bread, at so much per pound—what is that for? For the half pound of bread that every prisoner gets in the evening.
1333. $93\frac{1}{4}$ quarts of milk—is that for the hospital? Yes.
1334. One dozen eggs? That is for the hospital.
1335. $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. of tea? For the hospital.
1336. $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of sugar? For the hospital.
1337. 20 lbs. of soap? For washing.
1338. But for what particular use? It is for washing purposes.
1339. For the purpose of washing what? Dirty clothes.
1340. What clothes? The clothes of the prisoners.
1341. In what part? Prisoners in general.
1342. Has that all gone in one account? It has all gone in one account.
1343. That is last month? Yes.
1344. All these items have gone in one account to the Government;—have you made out one voucher headed, “The Department of the Gaol at Parramatta, indebted to Mr. Devlin,” and then set out those items? I believe that 1,770 lbs. of bread is in a voucher by itself; I directed it to be done so, and not to have it mixed up with the doctor’s things.
1345. And the soap has gone into these vouchers, it appears? Yes.
1346. That is for the general purposes of the gaol as well as the hospital? Yes.
1347. Has that voucher been certified by the Visiting Surgeon? Certainly.
1348. It is necessary that the Visiting Surgeon should sign it before it can be passed? He must sign it. That item I had to leave out; I thought it was wrong to have it in the Visiting Surgeon’s voucher.
1349. These articles—milk, eggs, tea, and sugar—by whom were they ordered—can you state? They were ordered by Mr. Austin, for Dr. Pringle.
1350. By Mr. Lackey: That is, by the dispenser? By the dispenser.
1351. By the Chairman: You signed this requisition? Yes.
1352. The dispenser says he wants such a thing — ? Yes, and he comes to me; he says, “This woman is very bad, and must have some eggs,” and they are sent for. I wish to have nothing to do with the hospital work at all.
1353. Have you a requisition book? No.
1354. On the 3rd November you have a requisition—7 lbs. 5 oz. of tobacco? Yes.
1355. Is it entered in any other book;—there is an entry in the ration book of 33 lbs. 6 oz.? That is for the month—the total.
1356. By Mr. Lackey: What is the amount of money in your hands now? Prisoners’ money?
1357. Yes? It does not amount to £10.
1358. What is about the usual average? About that.
1359. By Mr. Holroyd: That money has been taken from prisoners awaiting trial? No, from every prisoner.
1360. From those who have been tried? Yes.
1361. By Mr. Lackey: What becomes of that money afterwards? When the prisoner is going out he comes into the office, and I give it to him again.
1362. Is that kept in a cash-box? Yes.
1363. Who has charge of it? Mr. Hargrave has charge of the small amount; I have in a safe what money is paid for work done in the gaol.
1364. But that is a different account? Yes.
1365. Does Mr. Hargrave always keep charge of the prisoners’ cash? Yes.
1366. It is the duty of the clerk to do so? Yes; but when he is going home at night he leaves me the keys.
1367. The clerk is responsible for it? Yes.
1368. By Mr. Holroyd: Are you not aware that in a conviction for felony, all the money of the prisoner, and watches and things of that kind, are forfeited to the Crown? I am.
1369. Then why have you not given these moneys to the Sheriff? I do.
1370. I thought you said you had got money belonging to prisoners under sentence? Yes.
1371. For felony? Some for felony.
1372. How do you retain this money when it belongs to the Crown and not to the prisoner? I make a return of it to the Sheriff.
1373. By Mr. Lackey: Monthly? Yes; I do not pay any of these for felony.
1374. By Mr. Holroyd: You told me that you paid the moneys you received from prisoners, when they went out;—were those prisoners convicted of felony or misdemeanor? Not for felony—I said so a while ago, without thinking.
1375. Have you ever refunded any money that any prisoner has had on him who has been convicted

- convicted of felony and confined in the Parramatta Gaol—have you ever paid such money over to the Sheriff? I have not. Mr. J. Green.
1376. Not on any occasion? Not on any occasion. 12 Dec., 1862.
1377. Then you have money now in hand that belongs to felons—not to misdemeanants, but to persons convicted of felony? No, Mr. Dobbin made away with it.
1378. Mr. Dobbin was not in your time? I have not a penny in my hands belonging to prisoners committed for felony.
1379. I would ask Mr. Green to produce at the next meeting the names of all prisoners whose money is deposited in the gaol, the amount he has belonging to each prisoner, and also the crime for which each prisoner has been convicted, as well as an account of the moneys he received from his predecessor, and the date of their receipt;—do you know Mr. Ennis in the Sheriff's Office? Yes.
1380. Have you seen him within the last few days? I have.
1381. Where? About eight days ago.
1382. Where? In Parramatta.
1383. He came to see you? He came from the Sheriff.
1384. Was it in reference to this inquiry? Yes, he asked for the books.
1385. What books? The ration book and two money account books.
1386. Of your time or of Mr. Allen's time? Of Mr. Allen's time.
1387. Did you produce them to him? I did; I gave them to him.
1388. What do you mean by giving them to him? I handed them over to him, and he took them away with him. The Sheriff sent for them.
1389. Did he send an order? No.
1390. You gave them up on the verbal representation of Mr. Ennis? I did.
1391. Have you ever received those books back again? Not yet; they are in the Sheriff's Office—this is one of them.
1392. That has come out of the Sheriff's Office to-day then? Yes.
1393. By Mr. Lackey: You knew Mr. Ennis previously? Yes, I knew him to belong to the Sheriff's Office.
1394. By Mr. Holroyd: These books properly belong to the Parramatta Gaol? Yes.
1395. By Mr. Lackey: Had you any experience in the management of a gaol before you came to Parramatta? I was four years at Bathurst as principal warder.
1396. Was it customary there to indulge prisoners by giving them tobacco? No, and they didn't have it in Parramatta Gaol until I came; it was allowed by the Government.
1397. Recently? Yes.
1398. By Mr. Holroyd: I suppose you smoked before you went to Parramatta Gaol? I smoked before I ever saw this country at all.
1399. By Mr. Lackey: Have you ever known an instance of a prisoner being sent for on a writ of habeas corpus, to attend to give evidence at Sydney or any other Court? No, that did not occur while I was at Bathurst.
1400. By Mr. Holroyd: Did you succeed Mr. O'Brien at Bathurst? Yes.
1401. Had you been a turnkey under him before? No.
1402. Were you in any other gaol before you went to Bathurst? No.
1403. By Mr. Lackey: Is the prisoner M'Callaghan in Parramatta Gaol? Yes.
1404. Have you found him troublesome since you have been there? No.
1405. He has not given you trouble at any time, or made complaints? No.
1406. You have not had occasion to inflict summary punishment upon him? No.
1407. By Mr. Holroyd: Does he smoke? Of course he does.
1408. By Mr. Lackey: And work? Yes, he works very well indeed; I have seen him work.
1409. By the Chairman: Does he feign madness now? No.
1410. By Mr. Holroyd: Does he attend school? He does.
1411. Are there many of the prisoners who attend school? About forty a day.
1412. How long do they attend? Two hours in the morning, and two hours in the evening.
1413. Then, in fact, these four hours are taken from the time when they would otherwise be employed in hard labour? Yes.
1414. By Mr. Lackey: How long has the school been carried on at Parramatta? Two months.
1415. By Mr. Holroyd: Mr. Kendall is the master, is he not? Yes.
1416. By Mr. Lackey: Have you had an opportunity of marking the progress made by the scholars? Most of them seem to be getting on very well. I have seen one or two write who could not write before.
1417. Have you noticed whether they are diligent at their studies? They seem to be diligent.
1418. They do not take advantage of those particular hours to indulge in the luxury of a smoke? No.
1419. By Mr. Holroyd: Are they not allowed to smoke in school? No.
1420. By Mr. Lackey: Does the schoolmaster smoke at all? I do not know.
1421. Is M'Callaghan making much progress at school? I do not think he is.

1862.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

PRISONS.

(LETTER FROM HENRY PARKES, ESQ., RELATIVE TO THE PRISONS AT WORCESTER, LEICESTER AND WARWICK.)

Ordered to be Printed by the Legislative Assembly, 11 September, 1862.

HENRY PARKES, ESQ., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

London, 12 November, 1861.

SIR,

The extent to which the management of Colonial Prisons had been brought under my notice as a Member of the Legislature before leaving Sydney, had so impressed upon my mind the importance of the general question, that I have availed myself of such opportunities as have offered to inspect the prisons of England, with the view of affording to the Government of New South Wales the information I may thus be enabled to obtain. I am favoured with many facilities for this purpose, through introductions to influential persons connected with the improvements that have taken place of late years in the prison discipline of Great Britain. As yet, however, I have only visited three large prisons, as my time has been too much occupied with the duties with which I am specially charged for me to act upon the orders to inspect other establishments which I have in my possession; and these three visits have been made on days when I have had to address public meetings in the evening. Before returning to Australia I hope to visit the principal prisons of the United Kingdom, and also to find occasion for a careful examination of the system introduced by Captain Crofton in Ireland, which is still eliciting much discussion here.

2. On the 20th September, through the kindness of Richard Padmore, Esq., M.P., I visited the Worcester County Gaol, which is situated within the boundaries of the city, and is partly a modern erection of castellated brickwork, retaining a number of the old-fashioned cells of a former building. I found this prison so scrupulously clean, that there was no single spot in any of the cells where you would fear to place an article of the most delicate texture. It is of singular construction, arising from the incorporation of the old and new buildings in adapting the premises to the modern rules of discipline. The criminal corridors all open into a semi-circular corridor, from which they radiate similarly to the wings in Darlington Gaol, the advantage at Worcester being that the prisoners, while under one roof, are all brought under one view of the officers, without having to pass into the open air.

3. The size of the new cells (to which I shall confine my observations) is about 7 feet by 13 feet, with a height of 9 feet. In one corner of each cell there is a neat contrivance sustaining a metal wash-hand basin about three feet from the floor, and a metal pan for night use at a lower height, the water, which is kept in constant supply by pipes, passing from one to the other and carrying away all filth. On the occasion of my visit both these utensils in every case were bright and without a spot of soil, and presented a strange contrast to the horrible, air-poisoning night-tubs in the gaols of New South Wales. Each cell contains a neat table, an octagon-shaped block of wood for a seat, a bed neatly rolled up in the day time and placed on a corner shelf, and such articles for table use as are necessary for cleanliness and decency. Every prisoner is supplied with a Bible, and the prison regulations are posted on his cell wall, and also a notice from the Prisoners' Relief Society offering assistance to discharged prisoners who are disposed to reform. I append a copy of the prison regulations, marked A, and a copy of the Society's notice, marked B. In the ventilation of the cells the air is forced downwards by means of a fire in the roof of the building, to prevent injury to the prisoner's health from the rising particles of dust lodging in his system.

4. The last precaution may at first sight appear to evince an undue care for the prisoner's health, but the system of separate confinement is strictly enforced in this prison, as in the other prisons I have visited, which necessitates the working of the men in their cells, and some of the work, such as weaving coarse mats, is very dusty in its execution. It will be admitted by most persons that the right of society to deprive an offender against its laws of his liberty does not include the right to injure his health.

5. In the corridors of the Worcester County Gaol, and also in the prisons at Leicester and Warwick, there are gongs fixed against the walls, with wires communicating to them from each cell. The prisoner, if he require to see the gaoler, can strike the gong by pulling the wire in his cell, which at the same time throws out a small sign-plate containing his number, so that the officer in charge discovers at a glance who it is that strikes. The food and other articles of weight are conveyed to the upper stories by the lifting apparatus now generally introduced into large storied buildings in England, to save loss of time and labour in travelling up numerous stairs.

6. On the day I visited this gaol, the criminal division contained 184 males and 39 females, and the debtors' division contained 14 males and 2 females. The work carried on was chiefly rug-weaving, shoemaking, knitting stockings, and tailoring. The governor informed me that he had sold in 1860 mats and hearthrugs to the value of £2,000. Many of the hearthrugs are very handsome, such as are often seen in well-furnished rooms.

7. The warders in this gaol are all dressed in uniform which is made by the prisoners, and each officer wears a strong belt from which his keys are suspended. There is attached to the gaol a schoolmaster, who teaches the uneducated among the prisoners to read and write; and the governor reports that nearly all manifest much anxiety to learn. I was permitted to speak to a boy eighteen years of age, who had learnt to read and write (and to read and write well) and also the trade of shoemaking during his imprisonment. The boy expressed his gratitude for these advantages, and his determination to profit by them when he obtained his release. The Prisoners' Relief Society is a great help in cases like his. I append a copy of the Society's rules, marked C. It would be a great benefit if private gentlemen in the Colony would form a similar society.

8. The female department of the Worcester County Gaol contains an extensive and well-organized wash-house. The women stand at their tubs with their faces to the wall in separate stalls, where it is impossible for them to be seen or to see each other. Among other improved arrangements, a large iron clothes-horse runs upon a railway into a drying stove, adding greatly to the expedition of the work, and, I presume, to the facilities of bleaching.

9. The prison chapel is so constructed that the women cannot be seen by the men, either during divine service or on entering and leaving the room, an overhanging screen completely concealing them. Prayers, I was told, are read twice every Sunday, but a sermon is preached only in the morning.

10. On the 23rd September I was accompanied through the Leicester Borough Gaol by the Mayor of Leicester, E. J. Ellis, Esq. The arrangements here are much the same as at Worcester, but do not appear to be so complete, and the building is faulty in construction from the same cause, the old prison having been extended to adapt it to the new system. The very full and explicit prison regulations, a copy of which I append, marked D, will furnish much information respecting the discipline and order of this gaol. The paper also contains the scale of prison diet, a piece of information I omitted to obtain at Worcester; the prisoners here numbered 44 males and 9 females.

11. Mr. Marshall, the Governor of the Leicester Gaol, showed me several detective photographs, which appear to be generally used in the system of communication maintained between the authorities of different prisons; the prisoner's chances of confounding the traces of his identity by a change of name are, by this means, greatly circumscribed. A man was pointed out to me who had been received on a charge of robbery under the name of White; his photograph was secretly taken, and, accompanied by a written description, sent the round of the other prisons; at Nottingham it was identified as the portrait of a former prisoner there of the name of Black. Thus, while the arrest of the criminal is hastened by the electric telegraph, the art of sun-painting is made the discoverer of his history.

12. I visited the Warwick County Prison on the 8th October. This is a new, commodious, handsome brick building a short distance out of the town, the well-known gaol of former times being no longer used for such purpose. It is built in the form of a cross, dividing itself interiorly into four three-storied corridors, the prisoners being all under one roof, and, when out of their cells, all within the range of observation of any person standing in the centre; one corridor, however, appears to be wholly occupied by waiting-rooms and offices. The corridors assigned to prisoners contain a total of 241 cells, for male criminals; a balcony of blue slate and ironwork runs along on each side before the doors of the upper cells, the opposite front railings forming a polished railway, on which a kind of carriage-tray travels with the food and other requisites for the prisoners; all articles of weight are raised from the ground floor by a lifting apparatus as in Worcester.

13. The cells at Warwick are about 6 feet by 11 feet, with a height of 10 feet; the arrangement and fittings are much the same as at Worcester. I noticed that the prisoner's hammock is slung at night across his cell from iron rods fastened along the walls for that purpose, and that his bedding consists of a straw mattress, a pillow, one pair of sheets, one blanket, and one rug, with two leather straps that serve as stays to the hammock at night, and to secure the whole when rolled up during the day. Besides a copy of the prison regulations a card is hung up in the cell of each convict, containing his name and the particulars of his offence and sentence.

14. Underground there are ranges of store-rooms, bath-rooms, punishment cells, workshops, and kitchens; there were some men and boys here picking oakum. The day's task task is 2lbs., and the oakum, when ready for use, is pressed into tubs of 56lbs each, and in that state sent to the dockyards. There are six baths, and the men are all bathed, six at a time, on a Saturday. I noticed in one of the workshops an ingenious plan of guarding against the abstraction of tools; the shape of every tool was painted on the back of the tool-rack in the place where it ought to be, so that, if it were missing when closing the shop, the overseer could not fail to notice the exposed picture. There were several men in this prison employed weaving strong calicoes; and all the cotton cloth used in the gaol is made by the prisoners. The rations served out vary according to the sentence of the prisoner, but appear to be of good quality, and sufficient in quantity. On the day of my visit the gaol contained on the criminal side, 190 males and 24 females, and on the debtors' side, 30 males and 2 females.

15. In the chapel of the Warwick prison, which is a fine commodious room, a complete division, extending to the interception of sight, is effected between the criminals and debtors as well as between the males and females; and the seats are so arranged that the officer on duty can see the face of every prisoner.

16. I append copies of the regulations referring to criminal prisoners, marked E and F, and copies of the regulations referring to debtors, marked G and H.

17. I have given but a very imperfect description of these prisons, as my time did not allow of my making myself thoroughly acquainted with any one of them. The same system of discipline is carried out in all three, and the main feature of this system is complete separation. The prisoners are not only confined in separate cells, but, when out of their cells, in the exercise ground, or working in the corridors, or in the garden, they are not permitted to communicate one with another by word or sign; when in muster they must stand with their faces to the wall, and their voices are only heard in answer to their gaolers. The visiting-room at Warwick is fitted up with two iron cages on opposite sides; the prisoner appears in one, and the friend who desires to see him in the other, several feet apart, and a warder remains in the space between during the interview; so rigorously is the principle of separation enforced. It will be observed that this severity of discipline is accompanied by every precaution for the preservation of the prisoner's health, and that his natural wants are provided for by pure air, wholesome food, and sufficient bedding. There is no attempt whatever at moral classification, which indeed is scarcely practicable under the separate system; and the industrial economy of these prisons appears to me capable of much improvement.

I have, &c.,
HENRY PARKES.

A.

WORCESTER COUNTY GAOL.

Rules and Regulations for Prisoners sentenced to Hard Labour.

If convicted of felony, they shall be clothed in a party-coloured prison dress; if not convicted of felony, in a plain grey prison dress.

They shall be employed, unless prevented by sickness, at such hard labour as can be provided, not exceeding ten hours daily, exclusive of the time allowed for meals, except on Sundays, Christmas Day, Good Friday, or Public Fast and Thanksgiving Days. They shall not be allowed any portion of their earnings, neither shall they receive any extra allowance in consequence of any labour performed by them.

They shall not receive any food, clothing, bedding, or other necessaries, other than the prison allowance, except by order of the Surgeon, or under special circumstances, to be judged of by one or more of the Visiting Justices.

The general rule as to visitors for these prisoners shall be as follows:—They shall not be permitted to see any relation or friend until after the expiration of the first three months of their imprisonment, but subsequently to that period they shall be permitted to receive one visit in the course of each successive three months. The days for admission of visitors shall be Wednesdays and Saturdays, between the hours of ten and twelve o'clock in the forenoon, and in the afternoon between two and three in winter, and three and five in summer. They shall not be permitted to send or receive more than one letter in the course of every three months.

Rules and Regulations for Prisoners committed for Trial or Examination.

THEY shall not be compelled to work or labour, but, at their own request or with their own consent, may, when practicable, be supplied with any work or employment not severe. But nothing in this rule shall prevent the Governor from requiring prisoners of this class to make their own beds, and clean the cells, wards, yards, and passages of the division of the prison to which they belong.

They shall be permitted to maintain themselves, and to procure for themselves and to receive, at proper hours, a reasonable quantity of cooked provisions and malt liquor, not exceeding one pint in any one day of twenty-four hours, and any linen, bedding, or other necessaries (subject to a strict search, and under such regulations as may be deemed expedient in order to prevent extravagance and luxury in a prison) and such articles so procured may be paid for out of the moneys belonging to such prisoner in the hands of the Governor. No part of such food, malt liquor, or other articles, shall be given to or exchanged with any other prisoner; and any prisoner transgressing this rule shall be prohibited from procuring any food or other articles for such a period as a Visiting Justice may direct, and be liable to punishment.

They shall not receive the prison allowance of food on the days whereon they procure or receive food under the foregoing rule.

Prisoners for trial shall be permitted to see their relations and friends on Wednesdays and Saturdays, without any order, between the hours of ten and twelve in the forenoon, and in the afternoon noon between three and five in summer, and two and three in winter, and at any other time on a week-day by an order in writing by a Visiting or Committing Justice; and they shall be permitted to see their Legal Adviser on any week-day, at any reasonable hour, except during the hours of meals, and in private if required. Prisoners of this class may write or receive letters, to be inspected by the Governor.

Prisoners for trial, upon a representation by two Visiting Justices to the Secretary of State, and with the sanction of the Secretary of State, may be placed under the rules provided for misdemeanants of the first division.

Caution.

Every prisoner shall fold up his blankets neatly and strap them in his hammock as soon as convenient after he rises, and on no account unfold them during the day without permission. He must at all times be clean in his person, and keep his washing bowl, closet, table, and all other articles provided for his use perfectly clean, or he will be liable to punishment. Any prisoner guilty of the following offences, viz. :—

- Assault by one prisoner on another;
- Exchange of food or other dealing;
- Irreverent behaviour at Chapel;
- Making use of profane or indecent language;
- Speaking to, making signs to, or in any way attempting to communicate with another prisoner;
- Refusing to obey the orders of any officer of the prison;
- Insolence or incivility to any officer;
- Refusing to work;
- Idleness or neglect of work;
- Wasting or damaging any article intrusted to him to manufacture;
- Altering or damaging clothing, bedding, or prison property of any kind;
- Writing on or defacing the walls, or any part of the prison;
- Singing, whistling, rapping on the cell walls, or making any unnecessary noise; shall suffer such punishment as the Visiting Justices or the Governor may award under the Prison Rules.

B.

PRISONERS' RELIEF SOCIETY.

ANY prisoner who may wish, on leaving the prison, to "earn an honest livelihood," and who may be recommended to the Visiting Magistrates by the Chaplain, on account of good behaviour during imprisonment, will obtain relief from the above-mentioned Society for a few weeks.

Application must be made through a warder to the Chaplain, a week before leaving the prison.

C.

WORCESTERSHIRE PRISONERS' RELIEF SOCIETY.

AT the Annual Meeting of the "Worcestershire Prisoners' Relief Society," held this 8th day of October, 1853—

Right Hon. SIR JOHN SOMERSET PAKINGTON, BART., M.P., in the Chair.

RESOLVED—

That the following be the Rules of the Worcestershire Prisoners' Relief Society :—

1. That the public be respectfully solicited to give their support to the objects of the Society by donations or annual subscriptions. Subscriptions to be due on the first day of January in each year, and to be paid in advance to the Treasurer, or into some Bank in the County of Worcester.
2. That every donor of Five Pounds, or annual subscriber of Ten Shillings, be a Governor.
3. That the Governors shall meet on such Saturday of October in each year as the Honorary Secretary may appoint, to receive the Report, to examine and pass the accounts of the preceding year, and to transact other business connected with the Society.
4. That the President shall call a special meeting of Governors at any time he shall see fit, or on the requisition of three Governors.
5. That the Chaplain of the gaol, or in the event of the prisoner not being a member of the Established Church, the Minister who shall attend the prisoner whilst in gaol, be requested to report to the Visiting Magistrates the name of any prisoner about to leave the prison, upon whom he shall have reason to hope that the discipline of the gaol, and his own admonitions, have had their due effect in producing repentance for the past, and resolutions of good conduct for the future.
6. That on receiving such report, the Visiting Magistrates, or any two of them, should they concur in the view taken by the Chaplain or other Minister, do communicate with the Clergyman of the Parish to which the prisoner is about to go, one week at least before he is discharged, or if the prisoner shall not be a member of the Established Church, to the Minister he shall name, remitting such sum of money as they shall deem necessary, and requesting the kind offices of the Clergyman or Minister to lay out the money sent, either in part payment of labour, if procurable, or for maintenance during such period as shall be prescribed—the sum allowed not exceeding Four Shillings weekly.
7. That the weekly allowance shall be paid so long as the Visiting Magistrates, or two of them, shall approve; but if the person so relieved shall, through misconduct, cease to be worthy of assistance, the Clergyman or Minister will be pleased to acquaint the Visiting Magistrates at the County Gaol, Worcester, with his opinion of such unworthiness, and withdraw the allowance until he shall receive further instructions respecting it.
8. That when the imprisonment of young persons under the age of sixteen shall terminate, they shall be forwarded by a public conveyance to their respective homes, and that the parents, or next of kin, of such released prisoners, shall be informed of their being so forwarded.
9. That the Visiting Magistrates be empowered to draw on the Treasurers of the Society for the sum remitted under Rule 6, as also for the money expended under Rule 8.
10. That a Bible and Prayer Book, not exceeding the cost of 4s., be given to such prisoners, upon their leaving the gaol, as the Chaplain shall deem worthy of receiving the same.
11. That Sir John Somerset Pakington, Bart., be appointed permanent President of the Society, and that the Secretary for the ensuing year be appointed at the annual meeting.
12. That Messrs. Berwick, Lechmere, and Co., be appointed Treasurers.
13. That the Rules of the Society may be altered by a majority of Governors, at the annual or special meetings, as occasion shall require.
14. That the Banks in the different towns in Worcestershire be requested to receive subscriptions, and to transmit the same, with the names of subscribers, on each quarter-day, to the Treasurers.

JOHN PEARSON,
Honorary Secretary.

PRISONERS ARE REQUIRED TO PAY STRICT ATTENTION TO THE FOLLOWING REGULATIONS.

Silence must be strictly observed by day and by night.

Opportunities of communicating with the officers are afforded by means of a bell, which, on being rung by the prisoner, will immediately bring an officer to his cell; an important advantage in case of accident, or when any necessary communication is to be made by the prisoner; but if this privilege be abused, and the bell rung unnecessarily or under frivolous pretences, it will be punishable as a prison offence.

What Prisoners are required to do.

They are to rise, every morning, on the ringing of the bell. An hour, after unlocking, is allowed for cleaning their cells and their persons, and to prepare for work; during which time they must strip, well wash themselves, and comb their hair neatly; fold up, strap together, and place on the upper shelf their bed, bedding, and hammock, after airing the same as directed. The washbasin, tin ware, hammock staples, and cell numbers to be polished. The water closet pans well scoured and cleansed, allowing a sufficient quantity of water only for that purpose to run through them, and the cleansing materials and all other articles in use to be put in their proper places. To open the ventilators after they have used the water closet. They are required at all times to keep their persons and clothing clean and tidy, and their cell in perfect order; and when allowed sheets, to sleep in them, not in the blankets, and always to place the sheets over the pillow in order to keep it clean.

At all times to be respectful in manner and language to the officers and servants of the prison.

At all times to be ready to leave the cell immediately after the bell has been rung for chapel or exercise, and on no account to leave the cell without their number; and, upon all occasions, when quitting their cells, to leave the ventilators and doors wide open, and on returning, to shut the doors gently without slamming.

Instantly to report to the officer in charge if they have by accident damaged or broken anything, and also any repairs required in their cells or clothing, or the absence of water for their use.

If prisoners have any complaint to make of deficiency in the weight of their food, it is to be made immediately the meal is served, and before any portion of it is eaten. The time allowed for meals is half-an-hour for breakfast, one hour for dinner, and half-an-hour for supper. After dinner to place in their dinner tin any bits of bone, potato peel, &c., remaining, which, with the knife, are to be returned to an officer.

When at exercise to walk at a brisk pace, keeping one uniform step, and at least three yards behind another prisoner.

Prisoners employed on the tread-wheel are required to pay strict attention to the signal bell, and to take their proper turn either on or off the wheel, without hesitation or delay. When going on the wheel to hang the number plate in the place previously pointed out by an officer. When sitting down to wear the number on their breast. If they have any communication to make to the officer on duty, to hold up one of their hands, until observed by him. To instantly obey the orders of the officer on duty at all times. Prisoners employed at crank labour, &c., &c., to perform the work allotted to them, in the time set apart for that purpose.

Prisoners employed at shoemaking, tailoring, matmaking, weaving, or at other industrial occupations, are required to execute their work with diligence and despatch. As soon as the work in hand is finished they are to ring their bell in order to be supplied with more. When the bell rings at a quarter before nine in the evening, to prepare to go to bed, by first hanging up their hammock, and placing the mattress and pillow properly thereon, and the bed clothes, as previously directed by an officer.

School.—Prisoners having the privilege of attending school are to be orderly, attentive, and respectful; and any disposition on their part not to profit by the instruction given them, or being insolent, careless, or inattentive, will forfeit the indulgence.

Chapel.—They are to proceed to, and return from chapel, as directed by an officer. They are invariably to be decorous and attentive, to face the Minister during the whole of the service, and utter the responses in an audible and reverent tone of voice. Prisoners able to read must, during the service, pay strict attention to their books.

If a prisoner should be taken ill and finds it necessary to leave the chapel, he is to hold up his hand until observed by an officer.

What Prisoners are not to do.

The fittings of the cells having been arranged with a view to the health, comfort, and cleanliness of the prisoners, prisoners are desired not to destroy, damage, deface, soil, scratch, or mark any part thereof, nor the bedding, clothing, furniture, or implements therein; not to tear up, draw upon, nor otherwise mutilate or deface any books, or to write on anything except their copybooks and slates; not to waste any portion of their daily food, nor the water supplied to their cells, nor to leave their closet pans open; not to spit on the floors of their cells, or any part of the prison; nor commit any kind of nuisance therein.

Not to make any noise by talking, singing, whistling, knocking, shouting, reading aloud, nor in any other way to disturb the quiet of the prison. Not to attempt to communicate with another prisoner by signs, or in any other way whatsoever; not to take any article out of their cells except what may be required for use in chapel or school.

Not to leave their cells without their numbers on their breast; not to wear their caps in their cells; not to enter another prisoner's cell without permission to do so; not to interfere with or misuse the

the gas burners; not to place any article against the ventilating plates in their cells, nor to hang anything over nor to interfere with the inspection holes in the door.

Not to pass shreds of cloth, shavings, any portion of their daily food, or the bones or potato peel, the sweepings of the cells, or any article whatsoever except water and waste paper down the closets or sinks; nor in any way intentionally to destroy, mutilate or injure any of the prison property.

Not to exchange food, clothing, bedding or any other article whatsoever belonging to the prison or prisoners.

Not to approach near to each other while at exercise or in going to and from chapel or school, or while at work in the corridors, or any other part of the prison; not to turn round to look about, nor attempt to speak to one another; not to run, but only walk at a brisk pace; not to let go the rope, when used at exercise; not to walk with their hands behind, nor in their pockets, nor to leave the ranks when at exercise, or when passing from one part of the prison to another.

Not to purloin, wilfully waste, destroy, cut up, or appropriate to their own use, any materials of prison manufacture, nor any other article whatever of however trifling value; not to alter or repair their clothing without orders or leave to do so; not to be idle or negligent in their work, nor wilfully mismanage the same. Not to be in possession of any article not supplied or allowed by the Visiting Justices or an officer of the prison.

School.—Not to answer a question put to another prisoner, nor to speak until spoken to.

Chapel.—Not to sit when at chapel except at the proper times; not to turn round or stare about, nor to lounge, or bury their faces in their hands while at prayers; not to mark the seats or fittings, nor attempt to communicate with any other prisoner.

Labour.—The work and labour in the prison to cease at a quarter before eight o'clock in the evening, at which hour the knives, tools, implements, and all materials, are to be withdrawn from the cells; and before finally locking up for the night, the wearing apparel of each prisoner to be carefully folded up, and with the tables and stools placed outside the cell door.

Duties of the Governor.

The Governor shall direct that a prisoner, before trial, who does not receive the prison allowance of food, may procure for himself, or receive at proper hours, a reasonable quantity of cooked provision, and malt liquor not exceeding one pint in any one day of twenty-four hours, and any linen, bedding, clothing, or other necessaries, subject to a strict search, and under such regulations as may be deemed expedient, in order to prevent extravagance and luxury in a prison. But he shall not permit such prisoner to receive the prison allowance of food, on the days whereon he procures or receives food under this rule.

He shall provide useful employment with the necessary materials and instructions for all prisoners, in order that all convicted prisoners sentenced to hard labour, but not placed on the treadmill, and all prisoners sentenced to simple imprisonment, be set to work; and that all prisoners before trial may have the option of employment.

He shall on the acquittal of any prisoner, or when no bill is found against him, pay to such prisoner on his discharge, such an allowance out of his earnings as the Visiting Justices may think fit and reasonable; but he shall not allow convicted prisoners any portion of their earnings, nor any extra allowance, in consequence of any labour or work performed by them.

He shall allow prisoners, committed for examination or for trial, to see their legal advisers at all reasonable times, and in private, if required, unless a Committing or Visiting Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary, or unless he shall know any sufficient cause why such legal adviser should not be admitted. He shall also allow convicted prisoners to see their legal advisers on an order from a Visiting Justice. Every person, however, claiming admission as a legal adviser, must be a certificated attorney or solicitor, or his authorized clerk.

He shall allow prisoners, for trial, to see their relations and friends, at reasonable hours, twice a week without any order, or oftener by an order in writing, from a Visiting or Committing Magistrate, unless a Visiting or Committing Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary, or unless he shall know any sufficient cause why any person should not be admitted.

He shall not allow convicted prisoners to see their relations and friends until after the expiration of the first three months of their imprisonment; but subsequently to that period, he shall allow them to receive visits once in the course of each successive three months. In case of sickness, or other special circumstance, however, he shall allow convicted prisoners, and prisoners committed for non-payment of penalties, or for want of sureties, to see their relations and friends at other times.

Upon the special application of a prisoner of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church, he, the Governor, shall allow a Minister of such persuasion, at the special request of any such prisoner, to visit him in order to give him the instruction and counsel which he would otherwise receive in his class or private cell from the Chaplain, under such restrictions imposed by the Visiting Justices as shall guard against the introduction of improper persons, and as shall prevent improper communications.

He shall see that no prisoner who is a Jew be compelled to labour on his Sabbath.

He shall not permit the admission of visitors on a Sunday, except in special cases, by a written order of a Committing or Visiting Justice, and except in the case of a Minister visiting any prisoner of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church.

He shall allow prisoners, for examination or for trial, to send and receive letters, unless a Visiting or Committing Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary, or unless he shall know a sufficient cause why any such letter should not be sent or received. He shall, under the same restrictions, allow convicted prisoners to send and receive one letter in the course of each quarter of a year.

He shall have power to hear all complaints, touching any breach of the Prison Rules, or of common assaults by one prisoner upon another, or against prisoners guilty of profane cursing and swearing. He may examine any persons touching such offences, and may determine thereupon, and may punish all such offences, by ordering any offender to close confinement in a refractory or solitary cell, and by keeping such offender upon bread and water only, for any term not exceeding three days.

In case any criminal prisoner shall be guilty of any repeated offence against the rules of the prison, or shall be guilty of any greater offence than the Governor is by the Act, 4 Geo. IV, c. 64, empowered to punish, he shall forthwith report the same to the Visiting Justices, or one of them for the time being, and any one such Justice, or any other Justice, acting in and for the Borough, shall have power to inquire upon oath, and to determine concerning any such matter so reported to him or them, and to order the offender to be punished by close confinement, for any term not exceeding one month, or by personal correction in the case of prisoners convicted of felony, or sentenced to hard labour.

The following are the prescribed Rates of Diet.

Boys under 14 years of age to be placed on the same diet as females.

These Rules are to extend to female prisoners, so far as they are applicable.

By order,

Leicester Borough Gaol,
February 20th, 1860.

EDWARD MARSHALL,
Governor.

E.

COUNTY PRISON, WARWICK.

Rules for the Treatment and Conduct of Prisoners.

ALL prisoners on admission shall be placed in a reception cell, strictly searched, and all knives or other sharp instruments, or dangerous weapons, or articles calculated to facilitate escape, taken from them; except as hereinafter provided with respect to debtors and misdemeanants of the first division; but in no case shall any prisoner of any class whatever be searched in the presence of any other prisoner.

As soon as possible after the admission of a prisoner, except in the case of debtors, the prisoner's name, age, height, features, &c, shall be taken. The Governor shall take charge of, and enter, or cause to be entered, in the prisoner's property-book, an inventory of all money, clothes, and other effects which the prisoner may have on his admission, or which from time to time may be sent to the prison for his use. He shall take charge of them for safe custody only, and for the purpose of being restored, as directed by one or more of the Visiting Justices; or, (in the case of misdemeanants of the first division,) as directed by the rules for that class.

Every prisoner shall wash himself thoroughly, at least once every day, and his feet at least once each week; and each prisoner shall have a sufficient supply of soap, towel, and comb.

All prisoners, except debtors and misdemeanants of the first division, or unless they are excepted by the medical officer, shall be washed in a bath on their admission into the prison, and afterwards go into a tepid bath at least once in each month; but no prisoner shall be stripped or bathed in the presence of any other prisoner.

In no case shall the hair of any female prisoner be cut, except when necessary on account of vermin or dirt, or when the medical officer deems it requisite on the ground of health; and the hair of male prisoners shall not be cut except for the purpose of health and cleanliness. All male prisoners shall be shaved at least once a week.

All convicted prisoners shall be supplied with a complete prison dress, and all such prisoners, except misdemeanants of the first division, be required to wear it; and all prisoners before trial, and misdemeanants of the first division, shall be allowed to have the prison dress, if they desire it, and be required to wear it, if their own clothes be insufficient or unfit for use, or necessary to be preserved for the purposes of justice. The prison dress for prisoners before trial shall be of a different colour from that of convicted prisoners.

Every prisoner shall be supplied with clean linen, including shirt (whether of linen, cotton, or flannel), stockings, and handkerchief, at least once in each week.

The distribution of food shall be according to the prescribed scales of diet. Any article of food shall be weighed or measured, if so required by a prisoner.

Prisoners before trial who do not receive the prison allowance of food, may procure for themselves, or receive at proper hours, a reasonable quantity of cooked provision and malt liquor, not exceeding one pint, in any one day of twenty-four hours; and any linen, bedding, clothing, or other necessaries, subject to a strict search, and under such regulations as may be deemed expedient, in order to prevent extravagance and luxury in prison; and such articles so procured may be paid for out of the moneys belonging to such prisoner, in the hands of the Governor. No part of such food, malt liquor, or other articles, shall be given, sold to, or exchanged with any other prisoner; and any prisoner transgressing this rule shall be prohibited from procuring any food or articles for such a period as a Visiting Justice may direct. But the prisoner shall not be permitted to receive the prison allowance of food on the days whereon he procures or receives food under this rule.

No prisoner shall be set to work immediately after any meal.

Hard labour, and employment with the necessary materials and instruction for prisoners, shall be provided, in order that the sentences of all prisoners sentenced to hard labour be carried out, and in order that all prisoners, sentenced to imprisonment without hard labour, be set to some work or labour not severe, except such prisoners as maintain themselves, according to the provisions of 4 Geo. IV., cap. 64, sec. 38; and misdemeanants, adjudged to the first division, under the provisions of 3 and 4 Vict., cap. 25, sec. 2. Prisoners before trial, debtors, and misdemeanants of the first division, shall have the option of employment.

No prisoner who is a Jew shall be compelled to labour on his Sabbath.

Every prisoner shall obey the orders of the Governor, and of every other officer of the prison, and shall strictly observe all rules and regulations made from time to time for the better government of the prison.

The Governor shall have power to hear all complaints touching any of the following offences; that is to say,—disobedience to the rules of the prison; common assaults by one prisoner upon another; profane cursing and swearing; indecent behaviour, or any irreverent behaviour at chapel; remissness or negligence in performing what shall be reasonably required of him; all of which are declared to be offences, if committed by any description of prisoners; absence from chapel without leave; idleness or negligence in work, or wilful damage or mismanagement of it; which are also declared to be offences if committed by any prisoner under charge or conviction of any crime. He may examine any persons touching such offences, and may determine thereupon; and may punish all such offences, by ordering any offender to close confinement in a refractory or solitary cell, and by keeping such offender upon bread and water only for any term not exceeding three days; but he shall not determine any of these cases without previous examination; neither shall he delegate his authority in these matters to any other person.

No

No punishments or privations of any kind shall be awarded except by the Governor, or by a Visiting or other Justice.

Prisoners committed for examination, or for trial, may see their legal advisers at all reasonable times, and in private, if required, unless a Committing or Visiting Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary; or unless the Governor shall know any sufficient cause why such legal adviser should not be admitted. Convicted prisoners may see their legal advisers on an order from a Visiting Justice. Every person, however, claiming admission as a legal adviser must be a certificated attorney or solicitor, or his authorized clerk.

Prisoners committed for examination may see their friends and relations at reasonable hours, unless a Visiting or Committing Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary, or unless the Governor shall know any sufficient reason why such person should not be admitted.

Prisoners committed for trial may see their friends and relations twice a week, on such days and hours as may be fixed by the Visiting Justices, without any order, or oftener, by an order in writing from a Visiting or Committing Magistrate, unless a Visiting or Committing Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary, or unless the Governor shall know any sufficient cause why any person should not be admitted.

Convicted prisoners may see their relations and friends after the expiration of the first three months of their imprisonment; and, subsequent to that period, once in the course of each successive three months. In cases of sickness or other special circumstances, however, convicted prisoners, and prisoners committed for non-payment of penalties, or for want of sureties, may see their relations and friends at other times; and no convicted transport remaining for a time in the prison shall be allowed to receive more than one farewell visit from his friends, except under a special written order of a Visiting Justice; such visit not to exceed twenty minutes in duration.

Upon the special application of a prisoner of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church, the Governor shall allow such prisoner to absent himself from chapel; and, in accordance with the spirit of the law with respect to prisoners of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church, he shall allow a Minister of such persuasion, at the special request of any such prisoners, to visit him, in order to give him the instruction and counsel which he would otherwise receive in his class or private cell from the Chaplain, under such restrictions imposed by the Visiting Justices as shall guard against the introduction of improper persons, and as shall prevent improper communications.

The admission of visitors to prisoners on a Sunday, Christmas Day, or Good Friday, shall not be permitted, except in special cases by a written order of a Committing or Visiting Justice, and except in the case of a Minister visiting any prisoner of a religious persuasion differing from that of the Established Church.

Prisoners committed for examination, or for trial, may send and receive letters, unless a Visiting or Committing Magistrate shall have issued an order to the contrary; or unless the Governor shall know a sufficient cause why any such letter should not be sent or received. Convicted prisoners shall, under the same restrictions, be allowed to send and receive one letter in the course of each quarter of a year.

Every letter to or from a prisoner under charge or conviction of any crime, shall be inspected, except such letters as are addressed to a Visiting Justice or other proper authority. Prisoners under examination, or committed for trial, may deliver personally to their legal advisers (such being certified attorneys), or their authorized clerks, any confidential written communications prepared as instructions for their defence, without being previously examined by any officer of the prison; but all such written communications, not personally delivered to the legal adviser, or his clerk, are to be considered as letters, and are not to be sent out of the prison without being previously inspected by the Governor.

In case any criminal prisoner shall be guilty of any repeated offence against the rules of the prison, or shall be guilty of any greater offence than the gaoler, or keeper, is by this Act (4 Geo. IV., c. 64) empowered to punish, the said gaoler, or keeper, shall forthwith report the same to the Visiting Justices, or one of them, for the time being; and any one such Justice, or any other Justice acting in and for the county, or riding, or division of a county, or for the district, city, town, or place to which such prison belongs, shall have power to inquire, upon oath, and to determine concerning any such matter so reported to him or them, and to order the offender to be punished, by close confinement, for any term not exceeding one month, or by personal correction, in the case of prisoners convicted of felony or sentenced to hard labour.

The Magistrates, Governor, Chaplain, and Surgeon, are always ready to hear anything any prisoner may have to say.

[Adopted by the Court of Quarter Sessions at Easter, 1860, and confirmed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department.]

F.

PRISONERS ARE REQUIRED TO PAY STRICT ATTENTION TO THE FOLLOWING REGULATIONS:—

Silence must be strictly observed by day and by night.

The principal object of the discipline of the prison is "complete separation," and the consequent prevention of all evil communications. Opportunities of communicating with the officers are afforded by means of a bell, which, on being rung by a prisoner, will immediately bring an officer to his cell—an important advantage in case of accident or necessity; but if this privilege be abused, and the bell rung unnecessarily, or under frivolous pretences, it will be punishable as a prison offence.

What Prisoners are to do.

You are to behave yourself at all times in a respectful and becoming manner; closely to observe the rules, encourage cleanly habits, and a cheerful compliance with all orders and directions of those in authority over you, so as to obtain and preserve a good character as a respectable prisoner.

When the first bell rings in the morning, you are to rise and make up your bedding. Half an hour is allowed to clean your cell and prepare for work, during which time you must wash yourself well, and comb your hair neatly, and the furniture of your cell to be cleaned and polished, and the floor and water-closet pan well scoured and cleansed, and when finished, put all the cleaning materials in their proper places. You are at all times to keep your person and clothes neat and tidy, and your cell in perfect order, and when allowed sheets, to sleep between them, and not the blanket, and always place the sheet over the pillow, in order to keep it clean.

You are to respectfully salute the Visiting Justices, Governor, Chaplain and Surgeon, and Principal Warder, by raising your right hand to your cap when visited, passed, or addressed by either of them. When visited in your cell by any person except a warder, as soon as the door is opened, to stand upright, with head uncovered, under the window facing the door, placing your heels together, and your hands close to your sides. When a stranger enters your cell, immediately face the wall under the window, unless otherwise directed.

At all times to be ready to leave your cell directly after the bell has been rung for chapel or exercise, and never leave the cell without your number on your jacket, and always leave the cell door wide open.

At chapel, to place your books on the right of your seat; to be orderly and decorous; face the chaplain, and stand upright at the proper times, and when not standing, always to sit upright, with your hands placed together before you, unless reading, when you are to hold your book well before you, say the responses in a proper tone of voice, and not whisper or hide your face in your hands, so as to prevent the view of the officers, and to avoid, as much as possible, coughing, blowing your nose, &c., and never turn your head to look at another prisoner. If taken ill, so as to render it necessary for you to leave the chapel, hold your hand above your head, when you will be attended to by an officer. Rise to quit the chapel when signalled by an officer, move smartly off to your cell, and close the door quietly after you.

Instantly to report to the officer in charge if you have by accident damaged or broken anything.

What Prisoners are not to do.

You are not to destroy, damage, deface, soil, scratch, or mark any part of the fittings of the cell, nor the bedding, clothing, furniture, or anything therein; not to tear up, draw upon, or mutilate any books, or write upon anything except your copy-books and slate; not to waste the water, nor leave your closet pan open; not to spit upon the floor of your cell, or any part of the prison, nor commit any kind of nuisance therein.

Not to make any noise, nor in any way disturb the quiet of the prison; not to attempt to communicate with another prisoner by signs, or in any other way whatever; not to take any article out of your cell except what may be required for use in chapel or school.

Not to leave your cell without your number on your left breast; not to wear your cap in your cell; not to go into another prisoner's cell without permission to do so; not to interfere with or misuse the gas burners; not to place anything against the ventilating plate of your cell, nor to hang anything over nor interfere with the inspection hole in the door.

Not to pass anything whatever except water and waste paper down the closet or sink.

Not to approach near to any other prisoner while at exercise, or in going to and from chapel or school, or while at work in the corridors, or any part of the prison; not to turn round to stare about; not to run, but always walk at a brisk pace; not to keep your hands in your pockets; not to leave the rank at any time out of your turn.

Not to purloin, waste, cut up, or appropriate to your own use, any materials of prison manufacture, nor any other article whatever, of however trifling value; not to alter or repair your clothing without orders, or leave to do so; not to be idle or negligent in your work, or wilfully mismanage the same; nor to be in possession of any article not allowed by the establishment.

When at school, not to answer a question put to another prisoner, nor to speak until spoken to.

Not to look about when waiting to be admitted into a cell, but to stand upright facing the door, and close to it, with your heels close together, and your arms to your sides.

Not to fold your arms in chapel, nor at any other time.

Not to take your cap to chapel, nor have your jacket unbuttoned or unfastened.

COUNTY PRISON, WARWICK.

RULES for the Classification and Treatment of Debtor Prisoners committed under the several provisions of the 8th and 9th Vict., cap. 127, the 9th and 10th Vict., cap. 95, and the 12th and 13th Vict., cap. 101; also, for Debtors adjudged under the 77th, 78th, and 96th clauses of the 1st and 2nd Vict., cap. 110, as not entitled to the benefit of the Act, and adjudged to be discharged at some future period; for Debtors in Prison, refusing or neglecting to file a Schedule of their property when ordered to do so by the Court for the relief of Insolvent Debtors, as provided by the 36th section of the 1st and 2nd Vict., cap. 110; and Bankrupts against whom a warrant may be issued and lodged by the Commissioners of Bankruptcy for fraud or contempt of Court; and Bankrupts committed in execution whose certificate shall be suspended, and to whom protection has been refused under the 256th section of the 12th and 13th Vict., cap. 406, intituled "An Act to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Bankrupts."

They shall be placed on admission in a reception room by an officer appointed for the purpose, where they shall be examined, but not in the presence of any other prisoner, in order to ascertain that they have no dangerous weapons or articles calculated to facilitate escape, spirituous liquors, tobacco, or other prohibited articles. After examination, they shall be placed in the class to which they shall belong, and the cell or room, or part of the cell or room, they are respectively to occupy, shall be assigned to them.

They shall make their beds, and clean their sleeping-cells, day-rooms, and airing-yards every morning. They shall also keep the furniture and utensils appropriated to their use clean and neatly arranged, in the intervals between their meals. They shall be required to keep themselves clean and decent in their persons, and to conform to such regulations for that purpose as the Governor may lay down.

They may, when not receiving any allowance from the prison, receive from their friends, or purchase, food or clothing; but no debtor of this class, or classes, shall be allowed to receive or purchase more than one pint of malt liquor in any one day of twenty-four hours. Articles of food shall only be received between the hours of eight in the forenoon and four in the afternoon, and shall be subject to the inspection of the Governor or subordinate officers, and to such restrictions, both as to quality and quantity, as the Visiting Justices may deem proper, in order to prevent extravagance and waste. No part of such food, malt liquor, or other articles, shall be given, sold to, or exchanged, with any other debtor; and any debtor transgressing this rule shall lose the privilege of receiving or purchasing any malt liquor, for such a time as the Visiting Justices may deem proper, and be subject also to such other privations or restraints as the said Justices may lawfully impose.

They shall not be allowed the use of tobacco, spirituous liquors, or wine, under any pretence whatever, unless by a written order of the medical officer, specifying the quantity, and for whose use; and no beer, cider, or other fermented liquors, shall be admitted for their use, except in such quantities, in such manner, and at such times, as may be allowed by the rules.

They may be permitted to work and follow their respective trades and professions, provided their employment does not interfere with the good government of the prison; and such debtors as shall find their own implements, and shall not be maintained at the expense of the prison, shall be allowed to receive the whole of their earnings; but the earnings of such as shall be furnished with implements, or shall be maintained at the expense of the prison, shall be subject to a moderate deduction, to be determined by the Visiting Justices, for the use of implements and the cost of maintenance.

They shall attend Divine Service, when performed, unless prevented by illness, or other reasonable cause, to be judged of by the Governor; but no debtor so exempted from attendance shall be permitted to leave his ward or room during Divine Service.

They shall, as a general rule, be allowed to see their friends and relations on three days in the week; the hours of visiting to be fixed by the Visiting Justices, and subject to such regulations as may be necessary to prevent improper communication, especially between persons of different sexes, and to prevent the introduction of forbidden articles. Any exceptions which may be made to the regulation for

for restricting visits, either in consequence of the illness of a prisoner, or other reasonable cause—to be determined by the Governor—shall be recorded, with the grounds of such exceptions, in the Governor's journal.

No visit shall be allowed from a person of bad or suspicious character—to be judged of by the Governor—who shall record the grounds of such exclusion in his journal.

They shall be allowed to see their legal advisers at all reasonable hours, and in private, if required.

They may write to and receive letters from their relations and friends; but the Governor, if he deem it necessary, may inspect and withhold any letter to or from any prisoner when he has reason to believe that it relates to an escape, or attempt at escape, or any breach of the rules of the prison; and, whenever he shall open or withhold a letter, he shall mark it with his initials, record the fact in his journal, and report it to the Visiting Justices.

They shall be separated from other debtors, and, when the construction of the prison shall admit of it, be divided into two classes, viz. :—

The first class to be comprised of those who maintain themselves, and the second class of those who are destitute.

Debtors unable to maintain themselves shall be provided with the following articles of diet and bedding :—

DIETARY.

| | Males. | Females. |
|---|--|--|
| | Breakfast,—1 pint of oatmeal gruel; 8 oz. of bread. | } 1 pint of oatmeal gruel; 6 oz. of bread. |

Ingredients of soup and gruel.—The soup to contain, per pint, 3 ounces of cooked meat, without bone, 3 ounces of potatoes, 1 ounce of barley, rice, or oatmeal, and 1 ounce of onions or leeks, with pepper and salt. The gruel to contain 2 ounces of oatmeal per pint, and on alternate days to be sweetened with $\frac{3}{4}$ oz. of molasses or sugar, and seasoned with salt.

Bedding.—Bedstead, mattress, and pillow, a sufficient number of blankets, a rug, and a pair of sheets.

The surgeon may direct the supply of such additional allowance of food to debtors, who do not maintain themselves, as in their particular cases may appear necessary to him for the preservation of health.

The Governor, or keeper, has power to hear complaints against debtors touching any of the following offences, that is to say :—Disobedience of the rules of the prison, assaults committed by one prisoner confined in such prison upon another, when no dangerous wound or bruise is given; profane cursing and swearing; any indecent behaviour, and irreverent behaviour at chapel; and may punish such offences by ordering any offender to close confinement in the refractory or solitary cells, and by keeping such offenders upon bread and water only for any term not exceeding three days.

In all other respects, the rules for the government of debtors in general shall be applicable to those of the classes here provided for.

COUNTY PRISON, WARWICK.

Rules for the treatment and conduct of Debtors.

THEY shall make their beds, or cause them to be made, and clean their rooms, or cause them to be cleaned, every morning. They shall be required to keep themselves clean and decent in their persons, and to conform to such regulations for that purpose as the Governor may lay down.

They shall be placed on admission in a reception room, where they shall be examined, in order to ascertain that they have no dangerous weapons or articles calculated to facilitate escape, no spirituous liquors, or other prohibited things; such examination to be in no instance conducted in the presence of any other prisoner. After examination they shall be placed in the class to which they belong, and the room, or part of the room, they are respectively to occupy, shall be assigned to them.

They may, when not receiving any allowance from the prison, receive from their friends, or purchase, food or clothing; but no debtor shall be allowed to receive or purchase more than one pint of wine, or one quart of beer, in any one day of twenty-four hours. Articles of food or clothing shall only be received between the hours of eight in the forenoon and four in the afternoon, and shall be subject to the inspection of the Governor or subordinate officers, and to such restrictions as the Visiting Justices may deem proper, in order to prevent extravagance and waste. No part of such food, wine, malt liquor, or other articles, shall be given, sold to, or exchanged, with any other debtor; and any debtor transgressing this rule shall lose the privilege of receiving or purchasing any wine or malt liquor for such a time as the Visiting Justices may deem proper, and be subject also to such other privations or restraints as the said Justices may lawfully direct.

They shall, after a declaration to that effect, and on making it appear to the satisfaction of the Visiting Justices that they have no other means of support, receive the allowance of food and bedding provided by these rules.

They shall be permitted to work and follow their respective trades and professions, provided their employment does not interfere with the good government of the prison; and such debtors as shall find their own implements, and are not maintained at the expense of the prison, shall be allowed to receive the whole of their earnings; but the earnings of such as are furnished with implements or are maintained at the expense of the prison, shall be subject to a moderate deduction, to be determined by the Visiting Justices, for the use of implements and the cost of maintenance.

They shall attend Divine Service, when performed, unless prevented by illness or other reasonable cause; to be judged of by the Governor.

They shall, as a general rule, be allowed to see their friends and relations only during broad daylight, under such regulations as may be necessary to prevent improper communication, especially between persons of different sexes, and to prevent the introduction of forbidden articles; and all exceptions which may be made to the regulation for restricting visits to the time of broad daylight shall be recorded, with the grounds of such exceptions. No visit shall be allowed from a person of bad or suspicious character; to be judged of by the Governor. And no visitor shall be admitted into the debtors' wards, nor allowed to remain therein during Divine Service.

All

All casual benefactions of articles liable to damage by keeping, sent to the prison for the benefit of debtors, shall be distributed at the discretion of the Governor, and as soon as convenient after they have been received. All other charitable donations, and all donations or bequests in money, shall be reserved to be distributed under the direction of the Visiting Justices, except such as may have been specifically appropriated by the donors, and which, if not contrary to the rules of the prison, shall be applied as directed.

Debtors unable to maintain themselves shall be provided with the following articles of diet and bedding:—

| | | DIETARY. | |
|---|--|---|---|
| | | Males. | Females. |

NAVAL ALLOWANCE.

(DESPATCH RESPECTING DISCONTINUANCE OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 10 October, 1862.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

(Circular.)

*Downing-street,
July, 1862.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acquaint you that I have been in communication with the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, on the question of Allowances voted for Her Majesty's Navy by the Governments of Australia and New Zealand.

Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that it is not desirable that the Colonies should be called upon to contribute towards the expense attending the employment of Her Majesty's vessels in their waters, except in cases where any extra expense is occasioned to this Country, or where it is desired to recognize the advantages derived from the employment of the sailors in duties not properly belonging to them—as in forming a Naval Brigade, or in aiding to suppress an internal disturbance.

You will, therefore, understand that the practice of giving a Colonial Allowance to particular ships merely because they happen to be within the limits of the particular Colony voting that allowance is objectionable, and is to be discontinued, and that such an allowance is only to be given when the Legislature of that Colony may vote it as a reward for some special services such as those in the late War in New Zealand.

COLONIAL ALLOWANCE TO THE MILITARY.

No. 1.

THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

(No. 75.)

*Downing-street,
22 November, 1861.*

SIR,

You are aware that on account of the great and sudden increase in the price of all articles of consumption at the time of the discovery of gold, large special allowances were granted to Her Majesty's Troops serving in Australia, and also to those in New Zealand. Special allowances, but of smaller amount, have likewise been assigned, on account of local circumstances, to the Troops serving at the Cape of Good Hope.

After much inquiry and deliberation, the Secretary of State for War has come to the conclusion that the rate of allowances in Australia and New Zealand, established as it was at a peculiar crisis, has become excessive; and further, that on account of the manifest objections to any needless inequalities in the advantages granted to Regiments called upon to serve in different parts of the Empire, these allowances should be assimilated to those at the Cape of Good Hope.

13 Nov., 1861.

I transmit to you an extract of a letter from the War Office, with its enclosure, from which you will more fully learn the views of the Secretary of State for War.

You will perceive that it is his intention to introduce the change at once in those of the Colonies where the special allowances are paid from Imperial Funds. For the sake of the important object of uniformity, in order to guard against jealousies amongst the Troops, and out of fairness also to the Colonial Exchequer, it is very desirable that the same change should be effected simultaneously in the remaining Colonies which provide for these allowances from their own funds.

The Officers in command of the Troops at the several stations have been instructed, by the Secretary of State for War, to afford every co-operation in their power to the Civil authorities in carrying these measures into effect, and to put your Government in possession of them, with a view to any communication which may be requisite to the Legislature, in order to accomplish the objects which I have explained.

I have, &c.,
NEWCASTLE.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

Extract of a letter from Sir B. Hawes to the Under Secretary of State, Colonial Office, dated War Office 13th November, 1861.

The Secretary of State for War having for some time past had under consideration the special allowances issued to Her Majesty's Troops in the Australian Colonies, with the view to their reduction or abolition, it has been determined, for the present, to place the Troops serving in New Zealand, Tasmania and Western Australia, where these allowances are defrayed from Imperial funds, on the same footing as the Troops at the Cape, thereby reducing the allowances to an average of about one half the present amount.

The reasons for this change, and the nature of the new allowances, are detailed in the accompanying draft of a circular despatch which it is proposed to address to the Officer in Command at each of the Stations above named, and are such as, it is believed, will ensure the desired reductions being effected without delay.

In connection with the general question, and also in reference to your letters of the 7th May and 2nd instant, on the subject of the allowances of the Head Quarter Staff in Victoria, it is considered very desirable (in order to prevent jealousy on the part of the Troops) that simultaneous reductions should be effected in the allowances provided out of Colonial funds in Victoria, New South Wales, South Australia, and Queensland; and I am accordingly to request that this subject may be brought under the notice of the respective local Governments, with a view to an early and, if practicable, an uniform revision of these allowances.

[Sub-Enclosure.]

Draft of Circular Despatch to the Officers in Command of the Troops at New Zealand, Tasmania, and Western Australia.

*War Office,
November, 1861.*

Sir,

The question of the issue of special allowances to Her Majesty's Troops serving in the Colonies having been under consideration, I am directed by the Secretary of State for War to acquaint you, that he has come to the conclusion that there are no longer any just grounds for continuing in any of the Australian Colonies the allowances which were some time since sanctioned, in order to meet the special and exceptional circumstances which existed during the earlier years of the gold discoveries, and the continuation of which, now that these circumstances have passed away, gives rise to dissatisfaction and well founded complaints in other Colonies where no such allowances are issued, and where the expenses of living are now on a par with those in Australia.

Pending

Pending further inquiry, however, into this subject, the Secretary of State does not propose altogether to abolish these allowances; but he considers that the Troops throughout Australasia should now be placed on the same footing as those at the Cape of Good Hope, thus reducing the money allowances of officers from 5s. to 3s. per diem, that of employes in the several departments in proportion; and in the case of the soldier, resuming the stoppage of 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ for the ordinary ration, granting in lieu an extra ration of bread and groceries, for which no stoppages will be required. And I am accordingly to request that the change, as respects the money allowances, may take effect from the 1st of the month succeeding the receipt of this instruction, and that the payment of the stoppage by the Troops may be resumed, so soon as the Commissariat, to whom the necessary instructions will be forwarded, shall be prepared to commence the issue of the extra ration. This ration will consist of 4lb. bread, 3oz. coffee, 4oz. tea, 2oz. sugar, 4oz. salt, 3oz. pepper per man per diem; and it is considered that with this addition to the ordinary ration, the requirements of the Troops will be fully and liberally met, and in a manner which, while less costly to the Government, is likely to conduce more to the health and comfort of the Troops than the present allowance. It is therefore expected that no delay need arise in effecting the desired change.

MAJOR GENERAL PRATT to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

Victoria,
Head Quarters,
Melbourne, 30 January, 1862.

SIR,

With reference to letters received from the Colonial and War Office, dated as ^{22 Nov., 1861.} per margin, and addressed to the Governors of New South Wales, South Australia, and ^{13 " "} Queensland, relative to a reduction and proposed uniform scale of pay and allowances in ^{23 " "} those Australian Colonies where all, or a portion thereof, are defrayed by the Colony, I have directed the Officer Commanding in New South Wales, in communication with your Excellency, to carry into effect the same measures I have adopted here, to come to a just conclusion whether the measure proposed by the Home Authorities regarding a reduced scale of pay and allowances can be, and to what extent, made applicable in the respective Colonies; and I would solicit your Excellency's co-operation in this matter, and would further venture to suggest that the Governors of the respective Colonies above enumerated should communicate with each other on the subject.

I have, &c.,

YOUR EXCELLENCY,

I have the honor, in accordance with instructions received from Head Quarters, Melbourne, directing me to put myself in communication with your Excellency, and to forward, for your information, the enclosed copies of letters as per margin. The other documents mentioned in the Assistant Military Secretary's letter of the 14th ultimo are not included, your Excellency having received them direct from England, the whole having reference to an, if practicable, uniform revision of the allowances (voted by the Colonial Legislature to the Troops serving in this Colony), with those of the Colonies named, where the allowances are paid from Imperial Funds.

As it appears by the Despatch from His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, that he considers it is requisite that the Colonial Legislature be consulted on the subject of the proposed change; and as I am directed to co-operate with the Civil Authorities as far as possible, I have the honor to state, for your Excellency's information, that I am quite prepared to do so; and when the Civil Authorities express a wish to that effect, I am ready, should it be approved by your Excellency, to meet them, by nominating Officers to form a Board, in conjunction with such Civil Employé as may be selected, as suggested by Major General Pratt.

Your Excellency will see by the correspondence, that a Board was assembled at Melbourne.

I may also add, that should the Colonial Government not consider it expedient to nominate a Civil Officer to sit on the Board, I am authorized, by telegram from Melbourne, to assemble a Board of Military Officers.

Trusting that your Excellency will give this matter your early consideration,—

I have, &c.,

JOHN FRAS. KEMPT,

Lieut. Colonel Commanding Troops.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 5.]

Assistant Military Secretary's Office, Melbourne, 14 January, 1862.

Sir,

By direction of the Major General Commanding, I have the honor to enclose copies of documents, as per margin; and am to request, with reference to their contents, that you will place yourself in communication with the Governor of the Colony, and report to me the decision which shall be arrived at, as soon as possible, for the information of the Major General.

I have, &c.,

GEO. DEAN PITT,

Major, Ass. Mil. Secretary.

The Officer Commanding the Troops,
Sydney, New South Wales.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 5.]

*War Office,
23 November, 1861.*

Sir,

I transmit to you herewith, for your information, the copy of a letter which I have caused to be addressed to the Officers in Command of the Troops in Tasmania and Western Australia, on the subject of placing the Troops serving in those Colonies on the same footing, in respect to special allowances, as the Troops serving in the Cape of Good Hope.

I also transmit an extract of a letter, addressed to the Colonial Office, suggesting the adoption of a similar arrangement in the case of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Queensland, where these allowances are provided at the expense of the several local Governments.

The Duke of Newcastle having signified His Grace's concurrence in this proposal, and being about to convey the requisite instructions to the Governors severally concerned, it only remains for me to request that you will do what in you lies to co-operate with the local authorities in the revision of the allowances in question, and that you will direct the Officers Commanding in New South Wales, South Australia, and Queensland, to adopt a similar course.

I have, &c.,

G. C. LEWIS.

Major General T. S. Pratt, K.C.B.

Ass. Mil. Sec.'s Office, Melbourne, 30 Jan. 1862.

Sir,

Referring to the documents forwarded from my office on the 14th instant, and again, in duplicate, on the 29th instant, I am directed by the Major General Commanding, to convey to you the course he has adopted here, to come to a just conclusion whether the measure proposed by the Home Authorities regarding a reduced scale of pay and allowances can be, and to what extent, made applicable to this Colony; and to request that, in communication with His Excellency the Governor, to whom a letter has been addressed, you will adopt the same measures, informing me of the result of your inquiries.

You will be pleased to forward to the Governor copies of documents from the War Office, sent to you with my letter of the 14th and 29th instant.

The Major General has directed the assembly of a Board of Officers, including one employé of the local Government, and a copy of the instructions given them for their guidance is herewith enclosed; and he desires me to add, that on application to the Governor, you will doubtless be able to procure a copy of the letters addressed to Governors of Colonies relative to this subject.

The Officer Commanding the Troops in New South Wales, Sydney.

[Sub-Enclosure in foregoing.]

General Instructions for the Board assembled to report on the Scale of Colonial Allowances to Troops in Victoria, in reference to the enclosed documents from the War and Colonial Offices.

The Board will make strict inquiry, from persons best competent to give evidence, as to the price of house rent, servants' wages, average rates of wages for unskilled labour, and general expenses of living in the Colony.

The Board will ascertain how far the expense of living in this Colony has varied since 1857, and if practicable, how far the expense is similar to that at the Cape of Good Hope.

The Board, taking the documents furnished them as their guide, will frame scales of pay and lodging allowances, in accordance with the views expressed and the peculiar circumstances of the Colony, and for all ranks, as laid down in the relative rank Warrant Cir. 641.

The attention of the Board is particularly directed to the wish of the Government, that a uniform system should be adopted throughout the Colonies, and that in reducing the allowance to the Troops, a proportionate reduction should be made in those of the Officers.

The views of the Home Government were taken when the allowances granted for 1861 were in force; since then a reduction of 25 per cent. has been made for all ranks, but the former must be taken as the basis to start from.

The reduction made in the allowances to the Troops in Colonies paid out of the Imperial Exchequer is about two-fifths that of last year, and the Board will have to consider the position of the soldier at the present time relatively with that of the labouring class in the Colony, as also what reduction can be made in the pay of Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates (as issued in 1861), to place them in the same relative position as the Troops in the other Australian Colonies and the Cape of Good Hope.

Regarding lodging allowance to Officers and others, the existing scale being taken as a basis, and the sum necessary for the junior class being ascertained by the rate of house rent generally, that for the other classes follows as a matter of course.

Colonial allowances to Regimental Officers should, it is considered, be at one uniform rate for all ranks.

For Staff Officers, the relative rank Circular 641 should be taken as a guide, and the rate of allowances sufficient to enable each class to maintain a proper position in the place should be shown.

With reference not only to the rates of wages, living, &c., but to the expenses attending outfits and passages for families out and Home, and bearing in mind that Staff appointments are limited to periods never exceeding five years.

To facilitate inquiry, reference should be made to the Estimates of the year 1861, for the Mauritius, Ceylon, and Cape of Good Hope, which can be obtained in the Office of the Chief Secretary.

COLONEL KEMPT to HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

Brigade Office,
Sydney, 17 February, 1862.

YOUR EXCELLENCY,

In forwarding, for your Excellency's information, the enclosed copy of proceedings of a Board assembled here on the 14th instant, to inquire into and report on the Colonial allowances granted to the Troops serving in this Colony, I have the honor to say, that having received no instructions direct from England on the subject of the reduction of such allowances, I can only act under the direction of the Executive, or the authority of the Major General Commanding. I shall therefore forward to him another copy of the proceedings of the Board, by to-morrow's mail, with a request that he will be good enough to state whether he approves of the suggestions contained in the same; and also that I may be informed what measures are adopted at the Head Quarters of the Command, as if there is no reduction in Victoria, and there is one here, much jealousy and discontent would probably arise, the consequences of which might be serious.

I have, &c.,
JOHN FRAS. KEMPT,
Lieut.-Col. Commanding Troops.

The Board having assembled according to order, proceed to peruse the documents, as per margin, laid before them, and to take evidence.

Captain Heywood, Major of Brigade, informs the Board:—I find almost every article of consump-^{1st Evidence.} tion, clothing, furniture, &c. very much dearer in New South Wales than in England. I am paying £168 a year for a small furnished house; £84 a year, with board and lodging, to a married couple; and 12s. a week, with board and lodging, to a boy as groom; all of which rates are certainly more than double what I should pay in England.

I pay for beef, 5d. per lb.; mutton, 6d. per lb.; veal, 7d. per lb.; milk, 10d. per quart; potatoes, from 7s. to 12s., or 14s. a cwt.; bread, 2d. per lb.

For some months after my arrival in this Colony, last year, I lived in lodgings, and paid three guineas a week for two furnished rooms with breakfast. I know a gentleman who is paying two guineas a week for one room with breakfast, and another who is paying two guineas a week for two rooms with breakfast, but these rooms are not nearly so good as those which I occupied, and none of the lodgings I have mentioned are in the most expensive streets.

I am informed by the Quarter Master of the 1-12 Regiment, that the wives of men of his Corps living out of Barracks pay from 3s. 6d. to 7s. a week for wretched accommodation that can be procured at Home for from 1s. to 2s. a week.

I have made inquiries about labourers' (&c.) wages, and find that the Municipal Council here pays 7s. a day to its labourers; and this morning a gentleman who occupies a farm a short distance from Sydney informed me that he is paying £50 a year for labourers with board and lodging, and that he cannot get good men at a lower price, and that he has not found any alteration in the rates for several years. He also says that he cannot get female servants for less than 12s. a week with board and lodging.

I find, on comparing the latest Estimates of New South Wales with those of the Cape, that office messengers (who are of the same class in society as soldiers) receive on an average £70 a year at the Cape, but £110 in New South Wales, which is a conclusive proof that the Government of the latter Colony consider the expenses in it are greater than those at the Cape, the pay of the lower class of officials being a better test than that of the higher. I also see that at the Cape, the Governor's salary is £5,000 a year, while in New South Wales His Excellency receives £7,000 a year, which I suppose is on account of the greater expenses here. I cannot say whether the Imperial Government have proposed that the Colonial Legislature of New South Wales should reduce the salary of His Excellency to the Cape rate, on the same principle that the reduction of the pay of the military is proposed.

The only other Colony south of the Line with which I am acquainted is New Zealand. I was stationed at Auckland for a short period at the beginning of last year, and know that the expense of houses is much less there than in Sydney. There the houses are almost all small wooden cottages. There is very little entertaining, and not half as many servants are required as in Sydney. In fact the general expenses of society are much less.

As I have taken my house to the end of November of this year, on the supposition that my Colonial allowances would not be disturbed until the commencement of the next financial year, 1st January (and not even then unless altered by the Colonial Legislature), and as I have calculated my expenses for the year according to my promised income, I shall consider that I am most unfairly treated if my Colonial allowances are suddenly reduced without the slightest warning, and after they have been voted. In fact, if they are to be reduced to the rate proposed for New Zealand, Tasmania, &c., I hardly know how I am to live. As His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, in his Despatch to His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief of New South Wales, says, that after much "deliberation and inquiry," he has come to the conclusion that the allowances in Australia are excessive, I have searched in vain in the Brigade Office, and used every endeavour to discover whether any report has at any time been called for on the subject. I can find no trace of such report, and I therefore think that the Board cannot be wrong in inferring that His Grace must have been decided in his opinion by the erroneous information of persons at Home, who are guided more by their zeal to cut down the expenditure of the Imperial or Colonial Exchequers, than by a real knowledge of the subject on which they profess to give such information.

I lay before the Board a copy of a Return from the 1-12th Regiment, showing that at present the soldier in that Corps, after paying for his necessaries, clears a little over 6½d. a day, including his Colonial allowance. I also produce a leaf from the Statistical Register of New South Wales, for 1860, page 123 of which shows the rates of wages in the Colony for the last 10 years.

The Board will see, at page 123 of the Statistical Register, 1860, New South Wales, now produced the rates of wages in the Colony for the last 10 years.

Sydney, 1 January, 1862.

JOHN FRAS. KEMPT,
Lieutenant Colonel,
Commanding 1st Battalion 12th Regiment.

2nd Evidence.

Assistant Commissary General Rolleston informs the Board:—I, when quartered in Edinburgh, occupied, in the best part of the town, a flat consisting of a drawing room, dining room, four bedrooms, kitchen, pantry, and servant's room, for which I paid £70 a year, furnished. I consider that I cannot get the same accommodation in as good a position in Sydney for less than £250 a year, unfurnished, or £350 a year furnished.

Paymaster

Paymaster Olivey, 1-12th Regiment, informs the Board:—I pay £1 a week, with board, to a man as general servant. I should pay in England about £15 a year, with board, for the same. I pay on an average 12s. a week, with board and lodging, to female servants. I have looked at many houses, by no means large ones, and cannot get a suitable one near the Barracks under about £180 per annum. 3rd Evidence.

Captain Leeson, 1-12th Regiment, informs the Board:—The men (privates) 1-12th Regiment clear about 8½d. a day, and then have to pay for their necessaries. 4th Evidence.

Captain Lord John Tylour, Aide-de-camp to His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief of New South Wales, informs the Board:—I was stationed with my Regiment (85th) at Fort Beaufort, Queens-town and Tylden, Cape of Good Hope, in the years 1857-'58-'59. I consider that no comparison can be formed between the expenses of this Colony and those of the Cape, those of the latter being as a rule much less. I pay in Sydney £250 a year for an unfurnished house, and I know that a much better house was let at Fort Beaufort for £72 a year. I paid a female servant at the Cape 30s. a month—I pay in Sydney 50s. a month to a female servant doing the same work. There were plenty of very good men servants (coloured) to be got at the Cape at infinitely lower prices than in Sydney. Meat, poultry, and vegetables were cheap, and on the coast everything much cheaper than in Sydney; of course as we were removed from the coast imported articles were dearer. I consider that I could live at the Cape in the same style as I now do here for £300 a year less. 5th Evidence.

Private George Prince, 1-12th Regiment, informs the Board:—I was stationed at the Cape, on the Eastern frontier, from 1851 to 1859. When I left, the ration consisted of 1½lb. meat, 1lb. bread, 1oz. sugar, ½oz. coffee, 2oz. rice, ¼ gill salt. The ration stoppage was 3½. We had to purchase more groceries; they were cheap, otherwise we could not have lived. We cleared about 4d. a day, but directly we got our pay we bought bread. Bread, meat, and potatoes were much cheaper than in Sydney. Labourers (white) wages about 8s. a day; clothing was much cheaper than in Sydney; we paid at the Cape, in a shop, 8s. for a pair of boots, and 12s. 6d. for the same in Sydney; a shirt at the Cape was 2s. 6d., in Sydney about double that price; a bottle of ale 8½d. at the Cape, 1s. in Sydney; Cape brandy 7d. a bottle, brandy in Sydney 7s. 6d. a bottle; gin at the Cape, 3d. a glass, in Sydney, 6d.; tobacco at the Cape, 2s. 3d. per lb., in Sydney, 5s. 6d. per lb. We clear in Sydney about 8½d. a day, out of which we have to find our regimental necessaries. 6th Evidence.

The Board regret that they have not more ample means at their disposal to enable them to institute fully a comparison between the expenses at the Cape and those in New South Wales; but from the evidence before them, they are quite satisfied that no fair comparison can be instituted between the two Colonies. The Board, however, think that it is of little importance whether the soldier is in a better or worse position in New South Wales than at the Cape, the main questions being,— Colonial pay of the soldier.

1. Is the soldier, when serving in New South Wales, in a better or worse position relatively to the labouring classes of that Colony, than, when serving at Home, he is to the labouring classes in England?
2. If the scale of Colonial allowance proposed for New Zealand, Tasmania, &c., is extended to New South Wales, would the soldier be absolutely in a better or worse position than if serving at Home?

To the first question the Board have not the slightest hesitation in saying, that the soldier in New South Wales, clearing 8½d. a day, is relatively in a worse position, where unskilled labour is valued at 7s. a day, and where men often refuse to work for less than 6s. a day, than he is when clearing 3½d. or 4d. a day in a country where wages are high when they reach 2s. a day.

In reply to the second question, the Board are of opinion that, if the despatches mean that the soldier is to lose 6d. a day, and to receive in place of it an extra ration (the value of which in New South Wales is about 2½d.), he will, then clearing only about 4½d. a day, be absolutely in a far worse position than the soldier serving at Home; for, making further allowance for the extra price of his regimental kit, he will only clear about the same as a soldier in England. This, the Board are of opinion, is quite inadequate, considering the great temptation to which the soldier is exposed in a gold-producing Colony and the generally high prices.

As regards the Colonial pay of Officers, the Board are unanimously of opinion that it would be an injustice to place Officers serving in the Colony of New South Wales on the same scale with those serving at the Cape, as, from the very high rates of house rent and lodging in Sydney (where alone Troops are permanently stationed), and the still higher rates of servants' wages, the high price of furniture and of most of the essentials of life, and from the well-known lavish expenditure of the whole community, no comparison can be drawn; and the Board consider that it is only by great economy that an Officer without private means can live as a gentleman, even with the present rate of Colonial pay. The Board also think that the great distance of New South Wales from England should be taken into consideration. By the War Office Regulations, £40 is the Government passage rate from England to the Cape, and £75 to New South Wales. Colonial pay of Officers.

Consequently, if an Officer goes Home on leave, and pays his own passage Home and out from this Colony, he must pay £70 more than his brother Officer at the Cape under the same circumstances, and to do this, he would have to lay aside 1s. a day for nearly four years.

From the evidence adduced, and from their own knowledge, the Board are of opinion that no comparison can be instituted with other Colonies, and that the class of houses in which Officers would live, are, in Sydney, more than three times as dear as in England. Lodging allowance.

The Board, therefore, recommend that the subaltern's lodging allowance be fixed at 5s. a day, that of other Officers rising according to War Office scale.

The present scale was fixed by a Board in 1851, and does not rise according to War Office Regulations. Major of Brigade, A. C. General, D. A. C. General, D. A. Supt. of Stores.

It may appear at first sight that this will cause increased expense, but practically the result will be otherwise, as those actually drawing lodging allowance, as per margin, will draw less than at present.

The Board cannot for an instant suppose that it is intended that the lodging allowance be reduced to the Home rates, and they do not know what are the Cape rates.

As regards soldiers' lodging allowance, the Board consider it should not be less than 6d. a day, or three times the Home rate, but they do not anticipate there can often be cause to issue it.

The Board regret that, though they have carefully studied the despatch from His Grace the Duke of Newcastle to His Excellency Sir J. Young, and that from the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for War to Major General Pratt, K.C.B., with their respective enclosures, still they are utterly unable to give an opinion as to what really is proposed for those Colonies in which the Colonial pay is voted by the Colony.

Is it proposed, at one blow, to reduce the Colonial pay of a Staff Serjeant from 2s. 6d., of a Serjeant from 1s., and of a private soldier from 6d. a day, to an uniform issue of a ration worth 2½d.?

Is it proposed to cut down Officers' Colonial allowances from 11s. 3d., 9s. 6d., 8s., &c., to one uniform rate of 3s.?

The Board cannot suppose that such is the intention; and are inclined to think that His Grace the Duke of Newcastle and the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for War must have been misinformed as to the actual rates current in the Colony. The Board believe that the utmost that is intended is that the reduction of Colonial pay in New South Wales should only be proportionate to the reduction in those Colonies where the allowances are paid from Imperial funds.

For instance; if, in New Zealand, a soldier, now receiving a free ration worth 3½d., receives in lieu of it another ration worth 2½d., (this is the value in New South Wales), it is very evident that, as he only loses 1½d., he loses exactly one third of what the soldier would lose in New South Wales by receiving

receiving this ration in lieu of 6d. a day. The jealousies which the Home Authorities assume exist between various Colonies on account of the different rates of allowances (but of the existence of which jealousies the Board can find no trace—as, for instance, no jealousy exists amongst the Troops in New South Wales because the allowances in Victoria, or in India, are higher), the Board respectfully, but firmly, beg to state, would, in their opinion, be as nothing in comparison with the discontent which would be engendered in the mind of the soldier by what would to him appear an injustice.

The Board, on the whole, considering the vagueness of the instructions from Home, and also that the Colonial allowances for 1862 have passed the Colonial Legislature, recommend that the Officer Commanding the Troops in New South Wales should request His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief and the Executive Council (pending reference Home, which the Board assume will be made by His Excellency and by the Major General Commanding in the Australian Colonies) to suspend the operation of the despatches.

But if such a course should not meet with the approbation of His Excellency and the Executive Council, the Board having in view, as before stated, the great vagueness of the despatches, would recommend that the Colonial pay and allowances of H. M. Troops serving in New South Wales be reduced only in the same proportion as civil salaries have been reduced since 1852, the year in which the Colonial allowances were first granted. This course would be adopted with “fairness to the Colonial Exchequer,” as the Colonial Government can hardly wish that the military are to suffer a greater proportionate reduction than the civil employés, and it is a course which, pending reference to England for more precise instructions, would be considered fair both by officer and soldier.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to COLONEL KEMPT.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
 Sydney, 19 February, 1862.*

SIR,

With reference to my letter of the 4th instant to the Brigade Major, which enclosed a copy of a Despatch and its enclosure from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, relating to the rate of allowances made from Colonial funds to the troops in Australia, and to the communication from General Pratt and yourself, respecting the steps to be taken for carrying out the intention of the Home authorities, that these allowances should be assimilated to those of the Cape of Good Hope, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that these documents have been laid before His Excellency the Governor and the Executive Council, and to transmit for your information a copy of a Minute of the Council on the subject.

2. You will observe that, under the circumstances therein stated, it is deemed unnecessary that the Government of this Colony should take any action in reference to directions which appear to have been well considered by the Secretary of State for War before they were issued, and, as advised by the Council in the Minute now forwarded, the Colonial Secretary desires me to communicate to you the request of this Government that you will carry out the instructions contained in the Despatch from the Secretary of State and its enclosures from the War Department, in the distribution of the money paid to you for the troops from the Colonial Treasury.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

[Enclosure in No. 7.]

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 11th February, 1862, with reference to a Despatch from His Grace the Secretary of State for the Colonies, relative to the excessive rate of allowances granted to the Military in the Australian Colonies.

Minute No. 62/5. Confirmed 18th February, 1862.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a Minute paper by the Honorable the Vice-President, submitting a Despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated the 22nd of November, 1861, in which the Duke of Newcastle states, that after much inquiry and deliberation the Secretary of State for War has come to the conclusion that the rate of Colonial allowances to the troops in Australia and New Zealand has become excessive, and further, that on account of the manifest objections to any needless inequalities in the advantages granted to Regiments called upon to serve in different parts of the Empire, these allowances should be assimilated to those of the Cape of Good Hope.

The Secretary of State for War intends to introduce the change in those of the Colonies where the special allowances are paid from the Imperial funds, and intimates, that in order to guard against jealousies amongst the troops, and out of fairness to the Colonial Exchequer, it is very desirable that the same change should be effected simultaneously in the remaining Colonies which provide for these allowances from their own funds. The Officers in command of the troops at the several stations have been instructed by the Secretary of State for War to afford every co-operation in their power to the civil authorities in carrying those measures into effect, and a copy of the Despatch has been transmitted to Colonel Kempt, commanding the troops in New South Wales, for his information and guidance.

Accompanying this Despatch are letters from General Pratt and Colonel Kempt, with reference to the steps to be taken for carrying out the intention of the Home authorities.

The.

The General having appointed a Board of military officers, in conjunction with a civil officer, in Melbourne, to consider the matter, suggests that His Excellency Sir John Young should co-operate, and that the Governors of the respective Colonies named should communicate with each other.

2. The Council having fully considered this important matter, and bearing in mind the fact that the New South Wales Parliament has for some time shown an unwillingness to grant the military allowances now objected to by the Secretary for War, and has been mainly influenced in voting the amount to the present time in consequence of the Imperial Government upon a former occasion insisting upon the fulfilment of what was considered a compact, but which is now voluntarily given up, feel that it is unnecessary for this Government to take any action in reference to instructions which appear to have been well considered by the Secretary for War before they were issued.

They therefore advise that no steps should be taken to appoint a civil officer to co-operate with the military Board, but the Commander of the Troops in New South Wales be requested to carry out the instructions of the Secretary of State, as contained in his Despatch of the 22nd November last.

CHAS. COWPER, JUNR.,
Clerk of the Council.

No. 8.

COLONEL KEMPT to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

*Brigade Office,
Sydney, 20 February, 1862.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th instant (giving cover to a Minute of the Executive Council having reference to a reduction proposed by the Home authorities in the allowances made to the troops serving in this Colony), in which I am requested to carry out the instructions given to His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief of this Colony, in a Despatch (with enclosures) dated 22nd November, 1861, from His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, regarding the distribution of the money voted by the Colonial Legislature for the Military serving here. Entertaining great fears of the consequences, both by an increase of desertion and in the weakening of military discipline, if an immediate and sweeping reduction be carried out in the allowances now for some years granted to the troops, I have given expression of this fear to the Major General, and request that the Colonial Government will suspend action, as regards taking steps to carry out the instructions contained in the Despatch, pending an expression of opinion on the part of the Major General as to the extent to which he considers the rule applied to New Zealand, Tasmania, &c., can be carried out in New South Wales. After a careful study of the Despatch and its enclosures, I am led to suppose that the Home authorities were hardly aware of the differences which exist in this Colony in the allowances made to the various ranks of Officers and Non-Commissioned Officers, otherwise I cannot for an instant imagine that they wished that only two scales should for the future exist, one for Officers, the other for the lower ranks. But I think that the utmost that can be desired is a proportionate reduction: all Officers now drawing more than 5s. a day losing $\frac{2}{3}$ ths of such pay; and the Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates losing only in the same proportion as the Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates in New Zealand and Tasmania, or about one-third of their extra pay.

I have, &c.,

JOHN FRAS. KEMPT,
Lieut. Col. Comd. Troops N. S. Wales.

SIR,

The proceedings of a Board held at Sydney, to report upon the projected reductions in the Colonial pay and allowances of the troops, having been sent to me, though the decision of your Excellency's Government is not known, I feel it my duty to submit for your Excellency's consideration and that of the Government, the advantage of postponing the contemplated reduction until reference be made to the Home authorities, to whom the whole case will be referred by this mail, with my recommendation that the troops in Australia should be relieved by others who have not enjoyed the larger allowances; and also that the reductions generally should be reconsidered.

SIR,

Adverting to the letter of the Lieutenant Colonel Commanding, of the 20th ultimo (on the subject of the proposed reduction of the Colonial allowances at this station), to which no answer has been received, I have the honor, by direction of the Lieutenant Colonel Commanding, to enclose for the information of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary a copy of a letter since received from the Major General Commanding, which I am to request may be favourably considered.

I have, &c.,
WM. HEYWOOD, CAPT.,
Major of Brigade.

[Enclosure in No. 10.]

Asst. Military Secretary's Office, Melbourne, 25 Feby., 1862.

Sir,

Referring to your letter dated 22nd instant, just received, and to your former communications, regarding the reduction of pay and allowances suggested by the Colonial and War Departments, in which you inform me that the Government of New South Wales have decided upon carrying the proposed reductions into effect,—

I am directed by the Major General Commanding to acquaint you that he has written to His Excellency the Governor of New South Wales, earnestly soliciting that his Government should not carry the reductions into effect until a reply should be received from England to the strong remonstrances which the Major General has sent Home requesting a reconsideration of the matter, and transmitting the proceedings of the Boards held here and at Sydney, with all documents connected with the case.

The Major General would fain hope that this request will be complied with; but of this you will be able to ascertain on application.

The Major General has pointed out the ambiguity which exists regarding the extent of the reductions contemplated by the Home authorities, and requests explanation; but, after repeated perusal of the Despatches, he can only come to the conclusion, that, under imperfect information, the authorities intend to reduce all ranks of Officers to 3s. per diem, and to one rate of lodging allowance; whilst, for the soldiers, the only advantage for non-commissioned officers and privates is a grocery ration, value 2½d., in addition to Imperial pay,—rations being chargeable to the soldier.

The Major General does not feel in a position, from the statements made by the Colonial and War Office, to suspend the order and direct payment to be made out of the Imperial chest.

If, therefore, the Government at Sydney decline to accede to the Major General's request (which, as before stated, he would fain hope they will not do), there appears no resource but compliance with the orders received, and to look for compensation, should the Home authorities on reconsideration take a more favourable view of the case.

I have, &c.,
GEO. DEAN PITT, MAJOR,
Assist. Mil. Secretary.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, enclosing the copy of one from the Major General Commanding, respecting the instructions recently transmitted from England for reducing the Colonial allowances to the troops in this Colony. A letter has also been received by His Excellency the Governor from Major General Pratt on the subject.

2. It appears from these documents that a representation has been made to the Home authorities, with a view to obtain a reconsideration of the instructions alluded to, and that the regiment now here should be exchanged for another which has not enjoyed the larger allowances.

3. The Executive Council having duly considered the matters urged by the Major General, I am directed to inform you that, with the advice of the Council, His Excellency the Governor has been pleased to sanction the payment, from the provision made by Parliament, to the Officer commanding the troops in New South Wales, of a sum to meet the allowances according to the existing scale, for the second quarter of the present year, or until a reply shall (if previous to the expiration of the quarter) be received from the Imperial Government to the remonstrance of the Major General.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL HAMILTON to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

*Brigade Office,
Sydney, 16 June, 1862.*

YOUR EXCELLENCY,

As no answer has been received from England relative to a remonstrance sent Home against reductions proposed in the Colonial allowances of the military, I have the honor to request that your Excellency will, with the concurrence of the Executive Council, be good enough to direct that the present scale be continued till the answer arrives.

I cannot too strongly urge on your Excellency the imperative necessity of so doing, if the almost wholesale desertion which I am induced to fear may follow the adoption of the reduced rates is to be prevented. Since the beginning of last year, upwards of sixty private soldiers (about 15 or 20 per cent.) 1-12th Regiment have deserted in this Colony. It may be estimated that each soldier landed in New South Wales costs the Imperial Government at least £100. I should therefore imagine that the military will be entirely withdrawn if steps are not taken to obviate the heavy and unnecessary loss likely to arise from increased desertion; a loss that, in a pecuniary point of view, will probably far exceed the amount paid by the Colony to the troops, which, though in itself a great boon, is hardly sufficient to meet necessary expenses.

H. MEADE HAMILTON,

Lt. Col. 12th Regt.,

Commanding Troops, New South Wales.

SIR,

With reference to your communication of date the 16th ultimo, I have now the honor to forward for your information a copy of a Minute of the Executive Council, from which you will perceive that this Government is prepared to continue the present scale of Colonial allowances until a further communication has been received from England.

I have, &c.,

JOHN YOUNG.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 24th June, 1862, relative to the continuance of the present scale of Colonial Allowances to the Military, pending a communication from the Home Government.

Minute 62/21. Confirmed 1st July, 1862.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a Minute paper by the Honorable the Vice-President, submitting a letter from the Lieutenant Colonel Commanding the Troops, urging the expediency of continuing the present scale of Colonial allowance to the military in this Colony until the arrival of an answer to the reference which has been made to the Imperial Government on the subject, at whose instance the reduction was proposed.

It appears from this letter, that since the beginning of the last year, upwards of sixty private soldiers, or nearly 20 per cent. of the regiment, have deserted, and it is feared that, should the reduction be insisted on, the desertion will be still greater.

2. Under these circumstances, and upon the recommendation of the Honorable the Vice-President, the Council advise that the necessary authority be given for the continuance of the present scale of Colonial allowance until a further communication has been received from England.

SIR,

I have the honor to forward for your Excellency's consideration and that of your responsible advisers the accompanying copy of a letter from the War Office, dated 30th April last, and received by the present mail, on the subject of a reduction in the Colonial allowances in Australia, and I would solicit an early consideration of the suggestion contained in the said letter, and that whatever decision may be arrived at by your Government may be communicated to me as soon as possible, with a view of my acquainting the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for War with the result.

It will be observed that the proposed reduction is to take effect not later than the 1st July, which, with regard to the soldiers, will have a retrospective effect.

[Enclosure in No. 14.]

War Office,
30 April, 1862.

Sir,

I am directed by Secretary Sir George Lewis to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 22nd and 24th February, Nos. 62-49 and 51, with their enclosures, and to acquaint you, with reference to those portions of them which relate to the reduction of the Colonial allowances of the troops serving in Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland, and South Australia, that although it is considered that a uniform scale of Colonial allowances should be adopted as soon as convenient throughout the Australian Colonies, it is not the wish of Her Majesty's Government that the change should be brought about in such a manner as to press severely on either the Officer or the soldier, and which it is apprehended would be the case were the troops in those four Colonies, where very high allowances have for a long time been sanctioned, to be suddenly reduced to the scale fixed for New Zealand and the other two Colonies, where very much lower allowances had always obtained.

The object of Her Majesty's Government would be sufficiently met, if for the present the reductions in the four Colonies referred to were to bear about the same proportion to the scale of Colonial allowances existing in each during 1861, as did the reductions in the other three Colonies to the Imperial scale of allowances, the lodging allowances being also reduced.

The Secretary of State has always been sensible of the difficulty of deciding here upon a suitable scale of allowances for those four Colonies, where they are paid from Colonial funds—not only because of the very conflicting evidence before him of the relative expenses of living in them and in the other Colonies, but also because of the absence of any uniformity either in the amount of the allowances, or in the principle upon which they appear to have been framed; and he would therefore still prefer that the respective Governments, being apprised generally of what was being done elsewhere, should themselves, in conjunction with you, revise the existing scales. But in view of the difficulties which seem to surround this question, even on the spot, Sir George Lewis deems it advisable to offer some further suggestions for your guidance: and I am accordingly to state, that you are at liberty to submit for the consideration of the respective Governments the following scale, as one which the Secretary of State for War would be willing to see adopted as a temporary arrangement, subject to revision from 1st January, 1863, if found advisable after receipt of further reports from the Colonies:—

1. The Colonial allowance of all officers and employés in the four Colonies to be reduced to three-fifths of the rates existing in each in 1861, such reductions being in proportion to the reduction in New Zealand.
2. Lodging allowances of officers in Victoria, New South Wales, and Queensland, to be reduced to the scale existing in New South Wales previous to the gold discoveries, with 25 per cent. added to meet enhanced prices. No change is proposed in the lodging allowance in South Australia, it being already below these rates.
3. The Colonial pay and allowances of the non-commissioned officer and soldier in the four Colonies to be reduced to one-half the amount granted in each in 1861, the local Governments giving him in lieu a free grocery ration, or its equivalent in money.
4. The change to take effect not later than 1st July, 1862.

I am to add, that while the Secretary of State would view with dissatisfaction any addition to the rates here suggested for officers, he would not object to any revision of the scale which, while keeping within the proposed amounts, would provide for a better or more uniform distribution than at present, nor to any modification of the scheme as affecting the soldier which the local Government and yourself may agree upon.

From the tenor of the correspondence accompanying your letter, Sir George Lewis infers that no important reductions will have been made in the allowances either at Victoria, Queensland, or South Australia, pending your present reference; and should your anticipations with respect to the reductions being carried out at Sydney prove correct, Sir G. Lewis does not doubt that you will have no difficulty in adjusting with the local Government any claims that may arise out of the present recommendations.

EDWARD LUGARD.

Sir,

I have the honor to request that you will be good enough to submit to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, for his favourable consideration, this my application, that my present rate of lodging allowance be not altered till the end of the present quarter, on the following grounds:—

By Imperial regulations (copy enclosed), when an officer, responsible for the rent of his apartments for the whole of the current quarter, is removed from his station, he receives the full lodging allowance for such quarter. As I am responsible for the rent of my house beyond the current quarter, I shall, under the proposed regulation, be a loser to a greater extent than if I had been altogether removed from the station on, say, the 2nd of this month, for then I could have drawn full lodging allowance at the higher rate to the end of September.

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, in which you submitted a communication from the Brigade Major, with its enclosure, requesting that his present rate of lodging allowance may not be altered before the end of the present quarter, and recommended the cases of other officers who are in the same situation.

2. In reply, I have received instructions to state, that if the amount of rent actually paid by the Brigade Major or other Officer is such that his being at once restricted to the reduced rate will, having regard to the higher rate he has been enjoying, involve loss to him to the extent of the difference between the present and the reduced rate up to the end of the present quarter, the Colonial Secretary approves of his application being complied with, but that otherwise it cannot be acceded to, as it is at variance with the spirit of the regulations, fixing such allowances, that an officer shall derive any profit from them.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 22nd July, 1862, with respect to the reduction of the Colonial Allowance of the Troops serving in the Australian Colonies.

Minute No. 62/25. Confirmed 31 July, 1862.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a Minute Paper by the Honorable the Vice President, stating that the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in a Despatch of the 24th May, 1862, has enclosed copies of a communication from the Secretary of State for War, and of a letter to the Officer Commanding the Military in Victoria, respecting the allowance from Colonial funds to the troops in the Australian Colonies:—

In the letter to Sir T. Pratt referred to, it is stated that the object of Her Majesty's Government would be sufficiently met, if for the present the reduction in the four Colonies referred to were to bear about the same proportion to the scale of Colonial allowance existing in each during 1861, as did the reduction in the other three Colonies to the Imperial scale of allowances, being also reduced; and the Major General is further informed that he is at liberty to submit for the consideration of the respective Governments the following scale, as one which the Secretary of State would be willing to see adopted as a temporary arrangement, subject to revision from 1st January, 1863, if found advisable, after receipt of further reports from the Colonies.

1. The Colonial allowance to all officers and employes in the four Colonies to be reduced to three-fifth of the rates existing in 1861, such reduction being in proportion to the reduction effected in New Zealand.
 2. Lodging allowances of officers in Victoria, New South Wales, and Queensland, to be reduced to the scale existing in New South Wales previous to the gold discovery, with 25 per cent. added, to meet enhanced prices.
No change is proposed in the lodging allowance in South Australia, it being already below these rates.
 3. The Colonial pay and allowances of the non-commissioned officer and soldier in the Colonies to be reduced to one-half the amount granted in 1861, the local Governments giving him in lieu a free grocery ration, or its equivalent in money.
 4. The change to take effect not later than 1st July, 1862.
- The Honorable the Vice President recommends that the allowance in New South Wales be reduced in accordance with these suggestions, but that as the soldier has been already paid during a portion of the present month, it should not be required that anything should be refunded, as that would fall oppressively on him.

It is further proposed that the arrangement should take effect from the 1st August next.

2. The Council advise that the recommendation of the Honorable the Vice President be adopted.

No. 1.

MAJOR GENERAL PRATT to GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG.

*Victoria,
Head Quarters,
Melbourne, 20 Nov., 1861.*

SIR,

Referring to the appointments of Officers of the Royal Artillery, Capt. Lovell and Lieut. Pitt, stationed in New South Wales, to be Commandant and Adjutant of the Volunteer Artillery in that Colony, which in my absence in New Zealand appears to have been acquiesced in by Lieut. Colonel Kempt, Commanding the Troops, without reference to me,—

I beg to bring to your Excellency's notice the irregularity in this case, as all such appointments should be regularly applied for, and duly notified to His Royal Highness the General Commanding in Chief for his approval. This course was adopted in the case of Lieut. Colonel Kempt's appointment to the Volunteers.

I do not bring this to your Excellency's notice with any view of obstructing the Volunteer movement (on the contrary, I will assist it by all means in my power), but only that the regulated course may be adopted.

At the same time, I regret to state that I have received such statements respecting the inattention of Captain Lovell to his own duties, that I am constrained to ask you to cancel the appointment of Capt. Lovell, in order to his devoting his whole time to his immediate duty.

I have, &c.,
T. S. PRATT,
Major General Commanding.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased to cancel your appointment as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery in this Colony, in compliance with a request contained in a communication received by His Excellency from the Major General Commanding the Troops in the Australian Colonies, and that a Notice that your Commission as such Commandant has been cancelled will be inserted in the Government Gazette of this date.

GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG to MAJOR GENERAL PRATT.

*Government House,
Sydney, 20 December, 1861.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 20th November, 1861. I have delayed my reply until I could inform you that I had acted in accordance with your wishes in cancelling Captain Lovell's appointment as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery.

From

From the Minute of the Executive Council, a copy of which I enclose, you will perceive that this has been done. With regard to the last paragraph of this Minute, I trust you will be able to give your sanction to Lieutenant Pitt's acting as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery until some permanent arrangement can be made.

I have, &c.,

JOHN YOUNG.

[Enclosure in No. 4.]

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council, on the 3rd December, 1861, relative to the cancellation of Captain Lovell's appointment as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery, and other matters in connection therewith.

(Minute No. 61-53. Confirmed, 10th December, 1861.)

His Excellency the Governor invites the attention of the Council to a letter addressed to him by Major General Pratt, the Officer commanding Her Majesty's Forces in the Australian Colonies, relative to the appointment of Captain Lovell and Lieutenant Pitt, Officers of the Corps of Royal Artillery in this Colony, as Commandant and Adjutant, respectively, of the Volunteer Artillery.

2. General Pratt observes that these appointments should have been applied for regularly through himself, and the sanction of His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief obtained; and while expressing his desire to promote the Volunteer movement by every means in his power, says that he has received such statements respecting the inattention of Captain Lovell to his own duties that he is constrained to ask that his appointment to the command of the Volunteer Artillery be cancelled, in order to his devoting his whole time to his immediate duty.

3. The Council, after mature deliberation, conceive that no other course is open than that of acceding to General Pratt's desire, and in compliance therewith, they advise that Captain Lovell's appointment in connection with the Volunteer Artillery be cancelled accordingly.

4. Feeling, however, the desirability of having this branch of the Volunteer Service under the supervision of an Officer of the Royal Artillery, in order that its efficiency may be promoted and sustained, the Council further advise that General Pratt be requested to permit Lieutenant Pitt, R.A., who holds the rank of Captain and Adjutant in the Volunteer Artillery, to act as Commandant for the present, as a provisional appointment, and until other arrangements can be made.

CHAS. COWPER, JUNR.,

Clerk of the Council.

No. 5.

GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG to LIEUTENANT COLONEL KEMPT.

Government House,

Sydney, 23 December, 1861.

SIR,

I beg to forward, for your information, a copy of a communication I have (No. 1.) received from Major General Sir Thomas Pratt, and also a copy of a Minute of the (No. 4.) Executive Council with reference to Sir Thomas Pratt's letter.

2. I have forwarded a copy of this Minute to Sir Thomas Pratt, informing him that, in accordance with his wishes, Captain Lovell's appointment as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery had been cancelled, and requesting the Major General's permission to appoint Lieut. Pitt, R.A., as Commandant, as a temporary measure, and until some other arrangements can be made.

I have, &c.,

JOHN YOUNG.

No. 6.

CAPTAIN SHEPHERD to COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 3 January, 1862.

SIR,

On behalf of the Volunteer Artillery of New South Wales, I have the honor to forward a petition, for His Excellency the Governor, in favour of Captain C. N. Lovell, R.A.

I have, &c.,

P. L. C. SHEPHERD,
Senior Captain, Volunteer Artillery.

[Enclosure in No. 6.]

To His Excellency the Right Honorable Sir John Young, Baronet, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales, and Vice Admiral of the same.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Members of all the Volunteer Artillery Batteries in New South Wales,—

SHEWETH :—

1. That your Petitioners have heard with regret that your Excellency has been pleased to cancel the commission held by Captain Lovell, R.A., as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery.
2. That as the circumstances which led to the appointment of Captain Lovell as Commandant occurred before the arrival of your Excellency, your Petitioners beg respectfully to acquaint you with them.
3. At the first general meeting of the Volunteer Artillery, held at the Chamber of Commerce on the _____, it was unanimously resolved, that His Excellency the Governor General should be asked to appoint Captain Lovell, R.A., Commandant, and Lieutenant Pitt, R.A., Adjutant of the Volunteer Artillery, and in consequence of, and in accordance with, a request made in pursuance of that resolution, His Excellency thereupon appointed these gentlemen.

4. At the said meeting it was a generally expressed opinion that it would be highly advantageous to the interests of the corps to have the command of the Volunteer Artillery held by an Officer of the Royal Artillery, and your Petitioners are confirmed in that opinion by subsequent experience.

5. From the first establishment of the corps until his reluctant acceptance of the office of Commandant, in compliance with the unanimously expressed wishes of the members, and ever since, Captain Lovell has most unremittingly promoted, in every way in his power, their interests; and, indeed, without the assistance afforded by him throughout, the Volunteer Artillery would never have been effectively established.

6. That your Petitioners feel there will be a great difficulty in carrying on the Volunteer Artillery unless commanded by the Officer in charge of the Royal Artillery on this station,—or, at all events, by some Officer in that corps, which alone would secure what we respectfully submit to your Excellency is almost indispensably necessary to the efficiency of the Volunteer Force,—the instruction, co-operation, and assistance of the Royal Artillery.

7. Under the circumstances existing in this Colony, your Petitioners are fearful that the removal of Captain Lovell would result, if not in the extinction, at least in a serious injury to the efficiency, of the Volunteer Artillery.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your Excellency will be pleased to reinstate Captain Lovell as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

[Here follow the Signatures of the whole of the Officers, and upwards of 200 Gunners, &c.]

THE UNDER SECRETARY to CAPTAIN SHEPHERD.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 20 January, 1862.*

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant, wherein you submitted a petition to His Excellency the Governor, from certain members of the Volunteer Artillery of New South Wales, for the reinstatement of Captain Lovell, R.A., as Commandant of the above Corps, I am directed to state that, as Captain Lovell's appointment was cancelled at the instance of the General Commanding, the Colonial Government cannot accede to the request made.

I have, &c.,
W. ELYARD.

No. 8.

MAJOR GENERAL PRATT to GOVERNOR SIR JOHN YOUNG.

*Head Quarters,
Melbourne, 8 February, 1862.*

SIR,

As it would appear that the Volunteer Artillery in New South Wales is not constituted under the orders of Lieutenant Colonel Kempt, commanding the Garrison, I enclose to your Excellency a petition that has reached me direct from the Senior Captain of that Regiment, and which I would request may be returned to that Officer, who, I presume, has sent it to me through a want of knowledge of the channel of communication.

(See No. 6.)

While on the subject of Volunteers, I would submit to your consideration and that of the Government of New South Wales, that whatever Officers may be named to the command of any particular branch of the Volunteer Service, that the Officer in command of the Garrison should be gazetted to the command of the whole.

I am most anxious to encourage, by all means in my power, the Volunteer movement, and regret that, under existing circumstances, it is not in my power to recommend Captain Lovell to command the Volunteer Artillery, nor do I think my doing so would benefit the service. And, in conclusion, I would beg your Excellency to call the attention of the Volunteer Force to the unmilitary proceeding of forwarding a petition, as they have done, signed by a large proportion of the members of the regiment.

I have, &c.,
T. S. PRATT,
Major General Commanding.

[Enclosure in No. 8.]

*Volunteer Artillery Brigade Office,
Sydney, 25 January, 1862.*

Sir,

I have the honor to inform you that, in consequence of the cancellation of the commission held by Captain C. N. Lovell, R.A., as Commandant of the Volunteer Artillery of New South Wales, and from the general feeling that his removal would greatly injure the Volunteer Artillery Service in this Colony, a Committee from the Batteries stationed in Sydney was immediately (upon its becoming known) appointed to devise means for obtaining his re-appointment. This Committee prepared a petition (of which the enclosed is a copy), whereunto the signatures of every member of the various Batteries who could be communicated with was at once obtained (including the members of the Newcastle Battery, who fully concurred in the prayer of the petition), as it was deemed advisable that no delay should take place. This petition was forwarded to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary for presentation to the Governor, and an answer has been this day received (a copy of which is also enclosed), whereby it appears that the Colonial Secretary throws the onus of the cancellation of Captain Lovell's commission upon you. I therefore, immediately upon ascertaining this circumstance, communicate with you, in the hope that you will give effect to the prayer of our petition to Sir John Young, rather than see the cause which, in the present uncertain state of affairs, must be looked to as the only means of an effective defence to the Colony, materially injured.

See No. 6.)

I have, &c.,
P. L. C. SHEPHERD,
Senior Captain, Volunteer Artillery, N.S.W.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 6 March, 1862.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that the enclosed memorial has been forwarded to the Governor, in a letter addressed to his Excellency by the Major General Commanding the Forces in the Australian Colonies, with a request that it might be returned to Captain Shepherd of the New South Wales Volunteer Artillery, who appears, the General observes, to have sent it to him direct, owing to his not knowing the channel of communication.

2. The Major General, whilst stating that he is most anxious to encourage by all means in his power the Volunteer movement, has expressed his regret that, under present circumstances, he cannot recommend Captain Lovell to command the Volunteer Artillery, which was the object of the memorial. At the same time he has drawn attention to what he points out as an unmilitary proceeding in forwarding a petition, as in this case, signed by a large proportion of the members of the regiment.

3. I am further to request that you will apprise Captain Shepherd of this communication, and return the petition, in compliance with the wish of the Major General.

(PETITION RELATIVE TO.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 17 June, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That a Public Meeting of the Colonists of New South Wales, called together by public advertisement in the daily press of Sydney, and by placard, was held at the Temperance Hall, in Pitt-street, Sydney, on Monday evening, the 16th June, 1862, when the following Resolutions were adopted :—

That in view of the large public expenditure of the Colony, it is the opinion of this Meeting,— “ 1st. That the Revenue should be supplemented by a revision and extension of “ the Tariff.

“ 2nd. That such revision and extension should contemplate the encouragement of “ agriculture and manufactures as well as revenue.

“ 3rd. That a Petition, embodying the above Resolutions, signed by the Chairman
“ on behalf of this Meeting, be forwarded to the Assembly.”

The prayer of your Petitioner therefore is, that your Honorable House will adopt the above Resolutions ; and your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.
 The humble Petition of the undersigned,—

SHewETH:—

That a Public Meeting of the Inhabitants of Newtown, called together by public advertisement in the daily papers of Sydney, and by placards, was held at the Masonic Hall Hotel, Newtown, on Friday Evening, the twenty-seventh of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, when the following Resolutions were adopted:—

That in view of the large public expenditure of the Colony, it is the opinion of this Meeting—

1. That the Revenue should be supplemented, by the revision and extension of the Tariff.
2. That such revision and extension should contemplate the encouragement of Agriculture and Manufactures, as well as Revenue.
3. That a Petition, embodying the above Resolutions, signed by the Chairman, on behalf of this Meeting, be forwarded to the Assembly.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

EQUALIZATION OF TARIFFS.
(CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 27 August, 1862.

No. 1.

CHIEF SECRETARY, SOUTH AUSTRALIA, to COLONIAL SECRETARY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

South Australia,
Chief Secretary's Office,
Adelaide, 18 March, 1862.

SIR,

I have the honor, by desire of His Excellency Sir Dominic Daly, to request that you will call the attention of the Government of New South Wales to the fact that the existence of different tariffs in adjoining Colonies, and the systematic treatment of each Colony by its neighbour as though it were a foreign state, are gradually creating, and must continue to excite, feelings between the inhabitants of the several Colonies scarcely in accordance with the unity of their origin, and which may eventually render impossible that federation which all look forward to as ultimately desirable.

2. As the populations of the Colonies press closer to each other through the extended occupation of the country, the erection of frontier Custom Houses which will be necessitated by the diverse tariffs, will have the effect of checking freedom of intercourse, and will perpetuate and embitter the most undesirable state of feeling above alluded to.

3. Until the means of intercommunication are much improved, probably matters will not ripen sufficiently to allow of complete federation; but meanwhile it appears to this Government that much may be done towards creating a more cordial feeling, and preparing the way for a future federal union.

4. As one step towards attaining this desirable end, this Government intend seeking legislative authority to receive, free of duty, all articles bonâ fide the produce of any other Australian Colony which is willing, on the same terms, to receive the produce of this; and they trust that the Government of New South Wales will consider it desirable to adopt the same policy with reference to South Australia and the other Colonies.

5. This Government would at the same time bring under your notice the desirableness of steps being taken in order to place the tariffs in this and the adjacent Colonies on a uniform basis. So long as they remain essentially different, it will be impossible for the Colony with the higher tariff to prevent the introduction of goods that have paid duty under a lower one, unless a large and costly revenue service be maintained.

6. It was this consideration that, two years ago, mainly induced the Parliament of this Province to repeal the then existing ad valorem duties. Since then, if I am not misinformed as to the state of public feeling elsewhere, the necessity for a greater Customs Revenue seems to have been felt in all the Australian Colonies, and it appears likely that a similar reason to that which principally led to the abolition of ad valorem duties here, is now operating in other Colonies to prevent their imposition.

7. Under these circumstances it seems desirable that steps should be taken to ascertain whether it be not possible for the several Australian Colonies to agree upon a uniform tariff. The necessity for this will be more apparent, when I state that the natural adaptedness of this Colony to the culture of the vine, and the extent to which this interest is being developed, are facts hurrying us towards free distillation, the restrictions upon which cannot be—and this Government would be extremely sorry to see—much longer continued.

8. I need scarcely observe that free distillation in South Australia, with high duties on spirits in adjacent Colonies, would at once necessitate upon their Government the establishment along our frontier of a costly and extensive revenue service.

EQUALIZATION OF TARIFFS.

9. It is therefore the more important that the question of uniform tariffs should be speedily considered, and with this end, this Government would propose that the Treasurers of the several Colonies, or some other person possessing the confidence of the respective Governments, should meet in Melbourne, in order to discuss how far united action in this respect is attainable.

10. I am aware that no mutual agreement can be permanently binding upon the different legislatures; but I can scarcely doubt that identity of interest would lead to the general and continued maintenance of any such arrangements, if once adopted.

Chief Secretary.

Sir,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th of March last, drawing attention to the serious inconvenience arising from the existence of different tariffs in adjoining Colonies, and to the necessity of taking some steps with a view to the establishment of a uniform scale of duties.

2. The importance of adopting an arrangement for this purpose has already pressed itself on the notice of this Government, and they have now under consideration the appointment of Commissioners to confer with any who may be nominated by the other Colonies, and to ascertain how far united action in this respect is attainable.

3. It is the intention of the Government also to submit the subject to Parliament in the Session about to commence, and I trust that the result of the steps contemplated will be the establishment of uniformity of system throughout the Australian Colonies.

SIR,

The Government of South Australia having suggested a conference of delegates from each of the Australian Colonies, to be held in Melbourne, to consider the subject of uniform tariffs, I have the honor to intimate that this Government have notified their assent to the proposal.

It appears to the Government of Victoria that the time of holding the conference would be a favourable opportunity to consider the important question of Australian federation, and I have, therefore, to invite your attention to the matter, and would suggest, for the favourable consideration of the New South Wales Government, that the delegates nominated to represent them at the proposed conference be authorized also to confer and report upon that question. All the papers on the subject have been published in the form of a pamphlet, six copies of which I enclose.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

MR. ARTHUR EDENBOROUGH.
(PETITION OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 23 September, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.
The Petition of Arthur Edenborough,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner having been appointed an extra Tide Waiter in the Customs Department of the Colony, in the month of April, 1848, was successively promoted to the office of Baggage Searcher, in the year 1852, and of Sixth Locker in 1853, rising afterwards by rotation to that of Fourth Locker, with a salary of £130 (one hundred and thirty pounds) per annum, to which an addition of £100 (one hundred pounds) per annum was added on account of the Gold discovery.

That on the 13th January, 1851, your Petitioner was placed, at a moment's notice, by his superior officer, Mr. Bramwell, Tide Surveyor, on board the ship "Emerald Isle," then lying in this Harbour, bound to California, as no other officer could be found at the time, on the understanding and condition that he was to be relieved at daylight next morning; but that the said ship having sailed at midnight, in defiance of the remonstrance of your Petitioner, he was carried off in a piratical manner by the Captain, to Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands, where she had been obliged to touch for want of water.

That, at the instance of your Petitioner, she was there taken possession of by General Miller, the British Consul General for the Pacific, who sent your Petitioner back to Auckland, in New Zealand, from whence he obtained a passage to Sydney, by H. M. S. "Havannah," Captain Erskine, arriving in Sydney on the 7th June following.

That as your Petitioner, expecting to be only a few hours on board the "Emerald Isle," had taken neither bed nor extra clothing of any kind with him, and was therefore obliged to sleep on the bare planks of the damp cuddy, he caught a violent cold in his loins and spine, on board that vessel, which eventually brought on a paralysis of his lower extremities, and obliged him to resign his appointment, towards the close of the year 1856 or the beginning of 1857.

That although your Petitioner received from the Treasury a gratuity of a year's salary on his resignation, the disease which he contracted in the discharge of a public duty, through the piratical conduct of the persons into whose hands he had unexpectedly fallen on board the "Emerald Isle," has reduced your Petitioner and his family to a state of extreme poverty and abject dependence.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays that your Honorable House will, in consideration of the facts and circumstances he has stated, recommend him and his case generally to the merciful consideration of the Executive.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

ARTHUR EDENBOROUGH.

BONDED DISTILLERIES AND SUGAR HOUSES BILL.
 (MERCHANTS, SYDNEY.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 9 September, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned Merchants in Sydney,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners are importers of sugars to this market, and that the Bill now before your Honorable House entitled the "Bonded Sugar Houses and Distilleries Bill," will, if passed into law, materially affect their interests, by conferring great advantages on the Colonial Sugar Company, and to a corresponding degree depressing the market value of the stocks of sugar now held by your Petitioners, and of certain cargoes to arrive, which were engaged in on the faith of the existing law.

That in such a case your Petitioners venture to represent to your Honorable House that it is only fair and reasonable that some time should be allowed to realize such importations before the proposed law comes into operation; and seeing that the sugar market is at present overstocked to an unusual degree, they cannot hope to attain that object in less than nine months from the present date without serious loss.

That under these circumstances your Petitioners respectfully beg your Honorable House to defer the operation of the proposed law until the first day of July next.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

BONDED DISTILLERIES AND SUGAR-HOUSES BILL.

FRIDAY, 11 JULY, 1862.

Present :—

MR. CALDWELL,
MR. DALGLEISH,

MR. DICKSON,
MR. SAMUEL,
MR. SMART,
MR. WEEKES.

THE HON. ELIAS CARPENTER WEEKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

John Grafton Ross, Esq., called in and examined :—

1. By the Chairman : You are manager of the Colonial Sugar Company? I am.
2. You are aware that a Bill has been introduced to authorize the establishment of Bonded Distilleries and Bonded Sugar-houses? I am.
3. Have you given any consideration to the details of that Bill? I have given them very careful consideration.
4. Are its provisions, in your opinion, calculated to remove the difficulties under which it is alleged the manufacturers of refined sugar and distillers in this Colony now labour? I think they are, to a very great extent.
5. It has been stated that the sugar refiner in this Colony labours under certain disadvantages, in consequence of being obliged, under the existing law, to pay a duty on the raw material before he takes it into his refinery;—is that the case? Yes; most certainly it is.
6. Will you state what those disadvantages are? First, he is compelled to pay duty upon the whole of the waste which is contained in his raw material; that waste is extracted during the process of refining, is utterly valueless for any purpose, and is thrown away. Again, he is unable to export any of his treacle, necessarily produced in the process of refinement, without losing the duty he has already paid upon such treacle as part of the sugar which he refines.
7. These are the main disadvantages? These are the main disadvantages.
8. Do the importers of an article similar to your refined sugar labour under similar disadvantages? No; the importer of foreign refined sugars receives those sugars all ready to go into consumption, and he pays the duty on them in that state, the dirt already being extracted; or even if there is any dirt in them, he sells it to the consumer, and gets the duty paid back to him by the consumer. He is also able to import treacle, to keep it in bond, and to export it again without payment of any duty, in the same manner as he can import, bond, and export almost every other dutiable article; in fact, I think sugar-house treacle is the only article which cannot be so treated.
9. You say they have to pay duty upon dirt in fact? The Colonial refiner has to pay duty upon dirt.
10. Does not the refiner receive back from the consumer the duty he has paid upon the dirt in the shape of an increased price? No, he does not; because the Colonial refiner's

Ross, Esq.

John Grafton
Ross, Esq.

refiner's goods have to be sold in a market where they compete with similar foreign sugars in the market at the same time, and which pay but the £5 duty. In this way: suppose imported sugars are sold at cost price—say £35 a ton in bond, or with £5 per ton duty added, £40 per ton duty paid; let the refiner's sugars also cost, supposing no duty to be paid, £35 per ton in bond, the extra duty, £5 10s., including the duty on the dirt, brings the cost up to £40 10s. But the refiner cannot obtain more than £40 a ton for his goods, because the consumer, while he can buy the imported sugars at £40, will not give £40 10s. for the local refiner's, and the 10s. per ton paid by him as duty on the dirt is consequently not repaid him in the price of his refined sugar by the consumer, but is a positive loss to the refiner.

11. Are you not able to make some use of this dirt—does it not contain saccharine matter of some kind or other, from which you might distil spirits? Most certainly not. That is a sample of the dirt lately extracted from one lot of sugar; and this is a sample from another lot. (Samples alluded to placed upon the table.)

12. That is a sample of what you call dirt? That is an average sample of what we call dirt.

13. By Mr. Smart: What do you do with it? Make our roads with it if we want it; or throw it in the Blackwattle Swamp if we do not.

14. By the Chairman: What per centage of dirt or waste is there in the sugars usually refined by your Company? From 8 to 10 per cent.; we reckon that the average of five years is about 8 per cent.

15. Does the duty paid on this waste amount to any considerable sum? Taking a period of five years it amounted to about £13,700.

16. Then do you mean to state that that amount has been paid to the revenue as a duty upon dirt? Yes; the revenue has received in five years about that sum as duty upon dirt, which it could not have received from the imported sugars or if no local refinery had been in existence.

17. You think that operates as a special tax on you as Colonial manufacturers? It must do; it can have no other effect.

18. I think you said you had perused the Bill which has been introduced with respect to this matter? I have.

19. And that it is calculated to remove some, at all events, of the disadvantages which you allege? It would enable us to take the raw sugar into the Bonded Sugar-houses to extract the dirt from it there, and to pay the full rates of duty upon the whole of our product of refined sugar, bastards, and treacle; and it would enable us also to export any treacle we might wish to send out of the Colony without paying any duty thereon.

20. How would the Bill affect you, supposing the raw material you refined contained a much less average of dirt than what you state—8 or 10 per cent.? I do not see that it would make any difference. If there was less dirt in the sugar there would be more refined product and treacle, and consequently the revenue would receive more duty. The refiner would have to pay duty on whatever he produced; and if there was less dirt there must be more sugar or treacle, upon which he would have to pay more duty.

21. By Mr. Smart: That is assuming the treacle is consumed in the Colony? Of course.

22. Not if it is exported? No, of course not.

23. By the Chairman: Is the Bill in your opinion calculated to give the Colonial refiner any advantage whatever over the sugar importer—will it operate as a protection in any way? I cannot see how it can do so at all. It will oblige the refiner to pay duty on all his refined product and treacle, in the same way as the importer now does; and, while it puts the refiner on the same footing as the importer, I cannot see how it can act as any protection to either the one or the other.

24. Has the right to refine sugar in bond ever been granted to English refiners? Yes.

25. For what—for home consumption or for exportation? Never for home consumption, only for exportation.

26. Do they now possess the right to refine in bond for exportation? No, they do not; it was withdrawn in 1854, I think.

27. Are you aware for how long that privilege had been granted? I cannot say from recollection how long it was in force. The measure was introduced at the time when there were differential duties between slave-grown and free sugars, or rather when slave-grown sugars could not go into consumption in Great Britain; and the license was granted at that time for the sake of easing the holders of these slave-grown sugars, by allowing them to work them up in England and to export the product. When free trade was introduced, and all restrictions were abolished, the license to refine in bond for exportation was done away with.

28. Those were the reasons, you consider, that have led to the withdrawal of that privilege? Yes. I have it on very good authority, a letter from a gentleman connected with the Customs in London, that it was withdrawn at the request of the trade. The system was too restricted. Not only were the sugars stored and refined in bond, but they were entirely prohibited from passing such goods into the home market.

29. Are you sure that refining in bond was never permitted for home consumption, and found so dangerous to the revenue as to necessitate its withdrawal? I have carefully looked to see if it ever has been granted, and I can find no trace of it; and I have it from the Customs in London that no such right was ever granted. If never granted it never could have been found dangerous to the revenue, and as a matter of course could never have been withdrawn.

30. When you state that you received that information from the Customs in London, is that official information? No; a gentleman was requested to make certain inquiries in the matter, and he made that inquiry from the Customs, and the Customs informed him it never had been granted. The records of Acts of Parliament will show that it never has been granted.

31. Is the sugar refiner in England placed in the same disadvantageous position that you state the refiner is in this Colony? No, he is not. The duties on imported sugars in Great Britain are so arranged that the refiner really is to a certain extent protected. They have four duties there: one on the lowest class of sugars, 12s. 8d. per cwt.; on a higher class than that, 13s. 10d.; a higher than that again, 16s.; and on the highest, 18s. 4d. Here we only have two duties; and nearly the whole of the sugars come into consumption at one duty, £5 per ton.

John Grafton
Ross, Esq.

11 July, 1862.

32. Do I understand you to say that the refiners labour under no disadvantages in England? I am not aware that they labour under any disadvantage. I know that when Mr. Wilson, I think it was, brought in the tariff at present in force in England, he framed the scale of duties with special regard to the interests of the sugar-refiners.

33. Are you aware whether there was ever any application made by the sugar refiners in England, for permission to refine in bond for home consumption? I have never heard of it, and I have looked carefully to see if such has been the case, and can find no record of any such application.

34. Is the sugar refiner in England allowed to carry on the business of a distiller at the same time, or is there any prohibition from his distilling from treacle or sugar? No, there is no prohibition that I am aware of. I have never heard of such a prohibition, and I can find no record of any such. Distillers in England can distil from sugar or treacle, or molasses. In this Colony the sugar refiner is not permitted to have a distillery on the same premises; but neither in England or in this Colony is there anything to prevent him from being a distiller, and having separate premises therefor.

35. Are you aware whether refining in bond is allowed in any of the British Colonies? It is allowed in the neighbouring Colony of Victoria, and has been in force there for upwards of two years.

36. For home consumption? For home consumption.

37. Is the business of distilling carried on there likewise? There is a distillery there, which has been in operation, but at the present moment it is shut up. Within the last few months there has been a protective Act passed there, enabling the Colonial distiller to pass his goods at a much less duty than the imported spirits.

38. Are you aware of any case that may be considered a parallel one—where the importers of dutiable goods are allowed to extract what would answer to the dirt in sugar, before being called upon to pay any duty? Yes, I am aware of two articles in this Colony, and several others in England. The wine merchant here can refine his wine to any extent he likes in bond; he can extract the lees, and only pay the duty on the refined product. The tobacco importer also, if any of his tobacco has perished and become unfit for use, can extract that portion which is waste, and pay duty only on the sound portion of the tobacco that goes into consumption.

39. Does the Company you represent carry on the business of distilling to any great extent? It does.

40. Do you export spirits to any considerable extent? We used to do so, but since Queensland has been separated from this Colony we have lost that trade altogether.

41. Do you receive a drawback on exportation of spirits equivalent to the amount of duty you have paid on the raw material? No, we do not.

42. What is the drawback allowed on the exportation of Colonial spirits? We are not allowed any drawback on the exportation of Colonial spirits. We are allowed to export in bond, direct from the distillery; but having already paid the duty on the raw material, we do not get that duty refunded to us. It is calculated that 7d. per gallon is the amount of duty paid on the raw material, and when Colonial spirits are entered for home consumption there is a remission of duty of 7d. per gallon allowed the Colonial distiller, but on exportation there is no such remission; consequently he loses it.

43. What duty do you pay the Government on Colonial spirits entering into home consumption? We pay a direct duty of 6s. 5d. per gallon, and the 7d. that we have previously paid on the raw material makes it 7s.—the same rate that is imposed on imported spirits of similar description.

44. Then that is the reason of the distinction between the imported spirits at 7s. per gallon and the Colonially distilled spirits at 6s. 5d.,—that the raw material to make a gallon of spirits pays a duty of 7d.? Exactly. The distiller gets $8\frac{1}{2}$ gallons from a cwt. of sugar, which makes the duty on the raw material come to 7d. a gallon.

45. Does that affect your ability to export to any extent? It has the effect of preventing exportation altogether.

46. You have ceased to export? We have ceased to export.

47. Would you, in point of fact, lose 7d. per gallon were you to export? Yes, entirely.

48. Then in fact your operations are crippled, we may say, to some considerable extent by the operation of that law? Yes, we are prevented from doing a good export trade.

49. Are your works of an extensive character in this Colony? I think ours is the largest manufactory in the Colony; we employ a large number of men.

50. How many men do you employ? Sometimes more, sometimes less; we pay about £400 a week in wages.

51. Do you estimate that your business would very much increase if the disadvantages to which you have referred were removed—would it give greater facilities for your operations? It would give greater facilities. I do not know that it would add actually to the number of tons of sugar that enter into consumption in the Colony, but the power to export treacle and spirits would add considerably to our business.

52. Do you consider that you have now to compete with importers of refined sugar at a disadvantage? We do; we estimate the disadvantage at 10s. a ton. Taking the experience of

John Grafton of five years as the basis of the calculation, we affirm that on the whole of the sugar we have Ross, Esq. sold during five years we have paid fully 10s. a ton more duty than has been paid on imported sugars during the same time.

11 July, 1862. 53. And I think you state that you make no use whatever of what you call the waste, the residuum of your refining operations? No, it is valueless.

54. Would this Bill give you any advantages over the importer, either of refined sugars or of spirits? None whatever; it would merely place us on the same footing. By clause 8 it expressly provides that in all cases we are to pay the same duties as the importers.

55. Have you any manufactory in Queensland? No, we have not.

56. What would be the effect of your removing your establishment or manufactory to Queensland, so far as the importation of refined sugar into this Colony is concerned? The effect upon the revenue do you mean?

57. The effect upon your own operations. You would then import into this Colony? We would send the whole of our sugar into this Colony, in the same state as other foreign imported sugars are now received. We would pay duty to this Colony only upon the refined sugars so sent. We should save the duty now paid by us in waste. In fact, we should be exactly on the same footing as we would be were the Bill to pass, and refining in bond allowed here. But the Colony would lose all the advantages incidental to a large manufactory.

58. You are aware that considerable opposition has exhibited itself against this Bill by large importers of sugar? I am aware of it. I have seen their petition.

59. Are the allegations in that petition well founded? Quite unfounded, as I am prepared to prove.

60. In what particular? They state, in the first place, that the license which the Bill is intended to grant is of a character inconsistent with the safety of the revenue, and they attempt to prove this by stating that it was found to be so in England. Now that license never was granted in England, and consequently was never withdrawn from the refiners in England; and, therefore, that statement is no proof whatever of the unsafe character of the Bill. They state further that the Colonial Sugar Company being allowed to distil rum from molasses, enjoys a privilege not enjoyed by English refiners. The English refiner has the same power if he likes. They state that the Company can have no waste, because it is all repaid to the Company in the price of the refined sugar. I have already proved that that cannot be the case, because we can only get the market value for our refined sugars, which market value is regulated by the competitive price of the imported sugars. They state that we have no waste; that all the dirt of our refinery can be converted into spirits. I give that an emphatic denial; and I think the Committee will see, from the samples shown, that it is impossible. They state that "any compensation or remission of duty, such as that "conferred by the Bill, must be considered as in reality a bonus, which will give the Company
 "a virtual monopoly." We deny that it is either a compensation or remission of duty, and therefore it cannot be a bonus. They state that we "already enjoy a protection of seven-
 "pence per gallon over the importer," which I have already proved to be inconsistent with the fact, because the 7d. represents the duty we have already paid on the material from which our spirit is produced. They insert a statement purporting to be the Company's own statement, which it is not. They leave out a most important item, the insertion of which would have the effect of making their statement and our own agree exactly; but they leave that out, and make it appear that the loss to the revenue would be much greater than we have shown it would be. They say that "there can be no check to the percentage of what the Company calls waste and molasses," and that "the sugar revenue will be injured to an extent that no one uninitiated in the "manufacture can estimate." It must be self-evident to any one that it can never be to the advantage of the refiner to make waste or treacle instead of making refined sugar.
 Supposing the raw material costs him £20 a ton, it will never pay him to make what is valueless, or what will only give him £12 or £15 a ton, so long as he can make from it an article worth £30 a ton. The last part of the petition charges the Company with being a monopoly, a matter which I think is entirely beside the question.

61. The business of a distillery and the business of a sugar refinery are carried on separate and distinct? Entirely distinct. By law they are obliged to be so. A distillery must be an isolated building, a certain distance from any other building.

62. And quite unconnected with the sugar refinery? Quite unconnected.

63. By Mr. Allen: No matter what quantity of treacle you have here, you have no market for it but the home market, according to the present law—that is, you cannot export it and get the drawback although you have paid duty on the raw material? Yes, that is the case.

64. And that inconvenience would be removed by the operation of this Bill? Yes, it would allow us to export our treacle without having paid duty on it. An advantage in the Bill would be that all troublesome systems of drawbacks would be done away with.

65. The revenue which the Customs received, in five years, on account of the waste you have spoken of, you think, amounts to £13,700? Yes, about that sum.

66. That of course has been a dead loss to the Company—I mean to say, the Company have paid that to the revenue, under the operation of the present law, more than the revenue would have received had these goods been imported? Yes, exactly.

67. Then the present law appears to have sacrificed you to the amount of £13,700 in five years, owing to your manufacturing sugar here instead of having it manufactured abroad and sent here? Yes, it has; that is with reference to the duty on waste only. There is another matter I have not mentioned. The compensation that the refiner has by the extra duty of £1 13s. 4d. a ton, levied on imported refined sugar, does not make up to him for £1 13s. 4d. less duty levied on treacle, and this loss increases the £13,700 I have just mentioned to about £17,000, which is the amount that the revenue has in five years received from the refiner more than it could have received had there been no refinery in existence. I mention this to make the amount £13,700 agree with the £17,000 mentioned in statements I have circulated.
 for

John Grafton
Ross, Esq.

11 July, 1862.

68. That is the way the £17,000 is got out? Yes.
69. You pay an Excise duty on Colonial spirits of 6s. 5d. a gallon? Yes.
70. And you pay a Customs duty equal to 7d. a gallon on the sugar used in its production? Yes.
71. That makes the duty on your spirits equal to the import duty on foreign spirits, viz., 7s. a gallon? Exactly.
72. So that you have no advantage whatever by distilling here more than by distilling abroad and sending here? No, we are just exactly on the same footing.
73. If you export spirits to Queensland or New Zealand or any outside Colony, will you receive back from the Customs, by way of drawback, the 7s. per gallon that you have already paid? No, we are not allowed to export spirits and receive drawback; after they have had the duty paid on them they must be exported direct from the Excise department. But from the Customs we do not receive back the 7d. a gallon already paid as duty on the raw material.
74. You lose 7d. a gallon by sending your own spirits, that you would receive if you sent foreign spirits for your export trade? If imported spirits were sent there would be no loss at all by way of duty, but on Colonial spirits we lose the 7d. a gallon.
75. Then the present law, instead of being an advantage to you, is a direct tax on the exporter? Exactly so.
76. You were saying that the Sugar Company employs a large number of hands, and pays about £400 a week in wages? Yes.
77. Do you imagine that in the event of the passing of this Bill, which proposes to allow you to manufacture your goods upon the same footing as the merchants can import them, you would be in a better position to employ more labour by extending your trade and taking the export as well as the home trade? I think we would, for this reason, that one of the principal causes why we have not further enlarged our works of late years has been that we seem to have reached the full limit at which we could dispose of our treacle.
78. That is in the home market? Dispose of it at all under the existing law. If we refined more sugar we would make more treacle, a great quantity of which we could not dispose of.
79. In the event of this Bill passing, the whole market of the world would be open to you? The passing of this Bill would enable us to dispose of our treacle elsewhere; consequently there would be no such clog to our working off larger quantities of sugar.
80. And consequently you would employ more labour? We should.
81. But supposing this Bill did pass, you would still be at the same disadvantage, would you not, with respect to the import merchant, in the price of sugar, inasmuch as you would have to pay freight and charges on this "dirt," from which the importing merchant would be relieved? Quite true; but I do not think that is a matter of which we can complain, if we chose to import dirty sugar.
82. Still that does militate against you? No doubt.
83. Then, instead of this Bill putting you on a better footing than the import merchant, it would not, in fact, bring you up to that footing by the difference of the freight on the dirt that always accompanies raw sugar? No.
84. By Mr. Alexander: Is it your opinion that the passing of this Bill will interfere with the other importation of refined sugars? No, I do not think it will.
85. You think it will still give scope and profit for the purchase and import of refined sugar? Yes, most certainly.
86. You say this "dirt" or "waste" is actual loss? The duty on the waste is actual loss.
87. Is not that charged upon the first cost of the article with which you supply the public? No, it is not—not the extra duty. How can we do so. Supposing the cost of the sugar were the cost of the duty only, the importer would sell it at £5 a ton; but our refined product we should have to sell at £5 10s. to recover the cost; but while the consumer can buy at £5 he will not, of course, give us £5 10s.
88. Is not the difference in the duty on refined sugar an equivalent for that? No, it is no equivalent. We proved that in the statement that has been published.
89. Now, about the rum. You say if this Bill passed it would enable you to export rum in bond. You are aware that merchants are not able to get the drawback? No, but we do not complain of not being able to get the drawback of 6s. 5d., but of the 7d. a gallon which we have paid on the raw sugar or treacle from which we make the spirits. We can export in bond, and consequently avoid payment of the 6s. 5d., but the 7d. a gallon we lose altogether—we cannot get it back.
90. If you export your spirits you would have to export it merely to the outports—not to England; you would not presume to send it to the London market? I do not know. We have presumed to send treacle to the London market; but it is not likely we should send spirits there. Queensland is the special instance where we have found the difficulty.
91. If you import rum from England there are the charges for a distance of 16,000 miles to be added to the cost before it can be exported from here, but by exporting spirits produced on the spot you save that? I do not think that has anything to do with the matter. We are now considering the effects of the tariff, not of any particular charges. It is a fact that we cannot export Colonial distilled spirits without losing 7d. a gallon that we have paid as Customs duty.

John Grafton
Ross, Esq.

11 July, 1862.

92. Would this Bill remedy that? Yes. If we are entitled to a drawback at all, we are entitled to have it to the full extent on the rum that is exported.

93. By Mr. Dalgleish: What is it that the Sugar Company specially desire by the passing of this Bill? We specially desire to avoid payment of duty upon waste; we specially desire to be allowed to export our treacle without losing the duty already paid upon it; and we desire to export our Colonial distilled spirits without losing a portion of the duty already paid thereon.

94. Are you in any worse position in the importation of your sugars than any other merchants or consumers of sugar in the Colony? Yes.

95. In a worse position than the importer, with no regard to the manufacturer? No.

96. You are placed at no disadvantage with the rest of the community? Putting the results of manufacture out of the question, but merely as importers, we are on the same terms as other importers.

97. Can you give any reason why you should be placed in a better position than other importers of sugar? We do not seek to be.

98. Then your special claim is with regard to manufacture? Yes.

99. You have entered on that as a business? We entered on that as a business when the duty on sugar was about 10s. a ton.

100. Is it the waste you lose by, or is it the unequal mode of assessing the amount of duty on sugars; is it from the process of manufacture that your loss ensues, or is it from the inequitable mode of raising the duties? It arises, first of all, from the waste, and then because the present mode of assessing the duties does not compensate us for the duty we lose on such waste.

101. Waste is incidental to all manufacturers; no manufacture is carried on without waste? Ours is certainly not: I am not intimately acquainted with other manufactures.

102. Iron manufactures, for instance, are carried on with a vast amount of waste; and all other manufactures, where the raw material is manufactured into a superior article, are accompanied with a large amount of waste? I should imagine so.

103. Are you, then, in a worse position than other manufacturers; is not the result paying you a legitimate profit on the business? We are at a disadvantage as compared with other manufacturers; in other goods there is generally a considerable difference between the duty assessed on the manufactured goods and that assessed upon the raw material; for instance, wherever there is a duty on iron, I fancy there is a much higher duty on the manufactured than on the raw iron, to protect the manufacturer of iron; here sugars of similar quality to those we produce pay the same duty that we pay on our raw material which contains all the dirt we have to extract; therefore we are not protected.

104. Would your object not be more legitimately gained by a proportionate duty on the different classes of sugars, that is to say, that sugars should pay a duty in proportion to their market value—that refined sugars should pay a duty of 6s., 7s., 8s., or 9s., and that the raw material, that is to say, sugar in the lowest state of manufacture, should pay a lower rate in proportion. Supposing refined sugar to be worth £60 a ton, and raw sugar £20, should there not be a proportionate decrease of duty, and would not that answer your end equally well? I would object to purely ad valorem duties; let them be fixed duties, and I agree that that would answer our purpose.

105. And be more equitable to the community? I am not prepared to give a positive answer to that, but I do not think so.

106. If I choose to use this low-priced sugar for my ordinary purposes, do I not put into actual consumption the whole of this "dirt," and do I not pay the duty on it? Yes.

107. You manufacture it in order to make an increased profit by the manufacture—why should you be placed in a superior position to me? Be kind enough to repeat the question.

108. If I use this inferior sugar I pay the whole duty and put the whole waste into consumption—dirt and everything else is paid for by me; you manufacture this dirty sugar—this low-priced sugar—into a superior article, which pays a superior profit; I say why should the community be placed in an inferior position to yours. If there were a fixed scale of duties in proportion to the price of the different classes of sugar, would it not be more equitable to the community, who would then be placed in a similar position to you? It may be so. I would have no objection whatever to a scale of duties.

109. That would meet every object you have? If at the same time we were allowed to export our treacle free of duty.

110. Are you not allowed to export your treacle free of duty now? No, we have paid duty on the raw material, but cannot, on exportation of treacle, receive back its fair share of the duty so paid.

111. Then it strikes me that is the only thing you have to complain of—that after having paid duty on the raw material you have no right to get the drawback on exporting the treacle. In fact, treacle is one of the proceeds of the manufacture? Yes; it is contained in the sugar.

112. And is the residue after the extraction of the clean sugar and dirt? Yes.

113. You have paid duty on the whole of this already? Yes.

114. And the only ground I can see for relief is, that you pay duty twice on the treacle if you export it? We do not exactly pay it twice; but we have paid it once, and when the treacle is exported we do not get it back. We have paid duty on what does not go into consumption in the Colony.

115. What treacle do you at present obtain in the process of working—how much per cent.? It varies; some sugars contain 18 per cent., some contain 25 per cent.

116. What sugar is it that at present bears the title of refined sugar, so as to carry the high duty? Only loaf sugar, and pure white sugar of exceeding dryness.

117. The Mauritius sugars—are they refined sugars? They are sugars that are in such a state of fineness that they enter into direct competition with our sugars which are refined, are of equal value in the market, and obtain the same price. John Grafton
Ross, Esq.
118. These sugars bear no higher duty than the lowest priced sugars? No. 11 July, 1862.
119. Is it a trade evasion of the term “refined sugars” to import those sugars in that state of purity? No, I do not think it is. By the wording of the Act I do not think that in all cases they can be considered as “refined” sugars.
120. They do not pass through charcoal, I presume? They may or may not; but I do not think that has anything to do with their being refined sugars. They are in such a state of perfection that you can put them alongside our best refined sugars and they are equal to ours; they compete with ours, and sometimes realize better prices.
121. Is not that the principal cause of complaint? Of course.
122. Therefore the whole matter would be met by having a revision of the sugar duties? It would be met no doubt to a certain extent that way; but it would depend on what constituted that revision of the sugar duties, and whether sufficient care were taken to guard the refiner against loss.
123. At the present time the duties on sugar being so high—£5 a ton on low-priced sugar, and low-priced sugar principally entering into the consumption of the working classes—throws a greater burden of taxation on them than on those who consume the higher class of sugar? I have not considered where the burden of taxation rests.
124. Presuming that the poorer people use the cheaper sugar, that is the natural inference? I have already proved that we get but £5 a ton back from the consumer, although we pay £5 10s. ourselves; therefore, as far as our sugar is concerned, £5 a ton only is paid by the consumer on account of the duty, with the exception of a small quantity of very white sugar which is paid for at a higher rate.
125. I do not understand how the 7d. a gallon is lost on spirits? Before we can take any material—say sugar—into our distillery, from which to distil spirits, we have to pay duty on that sugar at the rate of £5 a ton—that is 5s. a cwt. That sugar is distilled, and the cwt. produces say $8\frac{1}{2}$ gallons; that is the average that is arrived at from experience. $8\frac{1}{2}$ into 60d.—that is the 5s. duty on the cwt. of sugar—makes the duty on the raw material about 7d. a gallon. When we come to take the distilled spirits out of the distillery, and sell it for home consumption, we are called upon to pay a duty of 6s. 5d. per gallon, which, added to the 7d. already paid on the raw material, makes 7s. a gallon, which is the rate charged the importer of similar spirits. If we wish to export, we can go to the distillery and take out the spirit and export it free of charge, but we have no power to go to the Customs and receive back 7d. a gallon we have already paid on the sugar from which this spirit is made.
126. Then raw sugar being charged at a less duty in the first instance would meet that also? No, never, unless we got the duty so paid back from the Government. Whatever the duty is, we should lose it unless we get it back on exportation.
127. Do you not manufacture a large amount of treacle into spirit? Yes; we principally make it from treacle—in fact altogether.
128. Then the duty to be returned would be the duty that would be due to the treacle, not to the sugar? Yes.
129. Which would be something considerably less? Yes, it is assessed at £3 6s. 8d. a ton, the duty on imported treacle; we can but get six gallons of spirits from the cwt.; we cannot get the same product of spirit from treacle or molasses as we can from sugar.
130. By Mr. Samuel: What quantity of treacle do you export at the present time annually? A very small quantity.
131. What quantity would you say? Speaking merely from recollection, I do not think we export 20 tons a year.
132. At the present time? At the present time.
133. And what is the amount of waste or dirt you estimate you have annually at the present time? At the present time we estimate our dirt—say for this year—at 10 per cent.
134. What would that be in quantity—what amount of sugar do you annually get rid of? Supposing we refine 10,000 tons this year, one-tenth will be 1,000 tons.
135. By Mr. Caldwell: You set out with a basis of £35 a ton as the price you pay for raw sugar? Let it be anything you like—let it be £25, or less—any figures will serve to show that we cannot get back the 10s. a ton extra duty that we pay, because our price is regulated by the market.
136. The class of sugar you usually import is low sugar? Altogether low-classed sugars.
137. Consequently the waste will be something very considerable—about 8 per cent. I think you say? From the class of sugar we are working just now it is 10 per cent.
138. Supposing you imported a finer class of sugar, such as you referred to as being imported to compete with you, what would be the waste on that if you refined it? It would not pay us to refine such sugars. If it did, the waste would be much less; there would be more refined sugar or more treacle produced; and consequently more duty received by the Government.
139. Is it likely that any merchant would compete with you in importing sugar only fitted for refining purposes? No, they do not at present.
140. Then you have no competition in low-class sugars? Now and again there is a cargo—nothing much.
141. Supposing a cargo of that description should come into the market, is it likely there would be any customers for it excepting the Sugar Refining Company? We have not purchased any sugar in this market for a considerable number of years. There has been a small sugar refining manufactory, worked by a respectable man, and when any low-classed sugars have come here, he has taken off a good deal of it.

John Grafton 142. You find it to your interest to import a low class of sugar in which there is no person
 Ross, Esq. to compete with you? That is not the reason why we import it. We find it answers our 11 July, 1862. purpose better than importing a higher class of sugar, without reference to what is imported by other people. We import it simply because it is the sugar that we find answers our purpose best.

143. By Mr. Allen: Did I understand you to say, with reference to the question put by Mr. Dalgleish, that sugar is imported here which, placed alongside yours in the market, will command an equally high figure, and which only pays 5s. a cwt. duty? Yes, the same duty as we pay on the raw material.

144. On your very inferior sugar, that is not fit for consumption in a family in its original form? Yes, which cannot be sold in the market for consumption.

145. By the Chairman: Is it not found almost impossible in the English market to classify sugars for various rates of duty? It has been the source of great annoyance, I believe, and the authorities are constantly issuing fresh regulations and having fresh standard samples.
 It also entails a large staff of officers.

146. It is done by sealed standard samples? Yes.

147. Renewed from time to time? Yes.

148. By Mr. Dalgleish: You are aware that they are not allowed to manufacture sugar in bond in England? Yes, I am aware of that. They never were for home consumption, merely for exportation; and that was done away with in 1854, as I am informed, at the request of the trade.

149. Was it not in consequence of frauds on the revenue? I have never heard so, except in a certain petition. I have it on good authority that it was found to be a restriction, and the trade requested it to be removed.

150. Are you aware that the duties on sugar in England have a much wider range than they have here? Yes.

151. That gives the relief to the sugar refiner that I suggested would be given to you by the adoption of a similar scale? Yes, it would in England more than here, because in England they work nearly always from a much higher class of sugar than we do here; they consequently have less waste and less treacle, and therefore the scale of duties fully protects them from any injustice in competing with the importer.

152. Is it absolutely necessary to have standard samples of sugar sealed up and kept under restriction in order to fix the duties? Supposing a cargo comes in with half a dozen different qualities of sugar, they must have some standard by which they can assess the duties.

153. Supposing three qualities were adopted—refined sugars, clayed or ration sugars, and pieces—could not three distinct rates be fixed which would be just to the people as a whole, and would give you the relief you seek to obtain by working in bond? It might.

154. That would increase the revenue? That depends on whether you increase or diminish the duty.

155. It would cause no loss to the revenue if the duties were fairly averaged according to the cost of the sugars—the loss would cease to you as a Company but the revenue itself would sustain no loss? It entirely depends on what rates you fix.

156. If fixed according to the fixed value—say that one sugar is always worth in proportion to another 100 per cent., and another 50 per cent.? You misunderstand me; I say the loss or gain to the revenue must depend on the duties you fix as compared with the rates at present levied. The revenue at present receives so much; if you make the scale of duties higher on an average than £5 a ton, of course the revenue will gain, if lower it will lose.

157. If you had the sugar at a lower rate, would it not cause you to extend your works and refine more? Of course we should always go on to the full extent that we could with profit.

158. That would cause a gain to the revenue? I do not see that; if they received a less sum I do not see how it can be a gain: increased consumption it is true may compensate them.

159. Are not the principal sugars imported now commonly called bastards? Yes.

160. If they paid a higher rate than £5 the revenue would be improved? Yes.

161. Although the sugars you manufacture were to be decreased a little, say one shilling per cwt.? The revenue would then be improved on the whole.

162. The revenue would be improved and you would obtain the relief you seek? If the scale of duties were such as to grant that relief.

163. It is a mere matter of calculation? Yes. There is just this difficulty in framing such a scale of duties, that it is necessary to protect the revenue by guarding against the possibility of the refiner (by making the greatest possible quantity of highest class sugars and exporting them) receiving back, by way of drawback, a larger amount than he has paid duty on the raw material. The refiner wants a law by which he can receive no injustice, while working in the style that suits him best.

164. There are one or two more questions I should like to ask, and, I think, legitimate ones.
 You have alluded to a small refiner—would not this Bill place this small refiner at a disad-vantage in the market, as a seller? I think not, for this reason, that he works on so small a scale that he can have no difficulty in disposing of all he can make of the best sort of sugar. While he can do that, he does not suffer under the same disadvantages as we do.

165. You do not deny, for a single moment, that he pays duty on all he makes? No, I do not deny that. But if he can sell all he can make of fine white sugar, the duty of £6 13s. 4d. imposed on imported sugars of similar quality is sufficient protection to him.
 The large refiner cannot make a sufficient proportion of that kind of sugar, and, therefore, he is not protected in the same way.

166. It would not pay the small refiner to work in bond—it would be a direct loss to him if he were compelled to work in bond? Certainly; but there is no compulsion about the Bill, I hope. John Grafton
Ross, Esq.

167. Were twenty or thirty, or more, individuals to embark in this refining on a small scale, would not the injustice that you complain of be as great to these thirty as to your Company—they would refine as much as your Company, in the aggregate, each refining a little;—would it not be an injustice to them, if this Bill were to pass into law? If such a thing were possible, it perhaps might; but I deny the possibility. 11 July, 1862.

168. If one exists, we may suppose forty can. If the sugar duties were raised, as I have proposed, in proportion to the quality of the sugar, that would place them on an equal footing with yourselves? Yes, I believe it would.

169. By Mr. Alexander: How long is it since the increased duty was taken off these refined sugars? It has never been taken off.

170. How long is it since these sugars, that you say come into competition with yours, have passed with the smaller duty: I was always under the impression that sugars up to M.O. paid the refined rate? No, they do not. There was a case the other day where some sugar came down from Java, and also from Mauritius—pure white sugars—that realized a higher price in the market than our refined sugar; and yet, because it was asserted that they contained some moisture they paid the £5 duty, while ours would have had to pay £6 13s. 4d.

171. By Mr. Dalgleish: These are done by the defecating process, by means of charcoal? I do not think so. However, the process had nothing to do with the comparative value of the sugars.

172. Do you see any objection to the plan of raising three discriminating duties? As far as we are concerned, as refiners, I do not think we should find any difficulty in the matter, but I think there would be great objection to it on the part of importers, and it would cause considerable extra expense to the Customs.

173. By the Chairman: There are only two steps in the sugar duties now? Yes.

174. And is it not found exceedingly difficult to discriminate between the two classes which bear different rates? Yes, I believe so.

175. Would not that difficulty be greatly increased by requiring further discrimination? No doubt it would.

176. By Mr. Dalgleish: Is it not rather the want of these discriminating duties that makes the difficulty now? No. Sugars are of so many different grades, that it requires trustworthy and experienced men to detect the differences between them. It is easy to say this is a pure white sugar, and that is not; but when you have before you a light brown and a dark yellow, it is not so easy to decide which grade they belong to. There is so much left to the honesty of the officers, under such a system, that it is very dangerous. I know in some foreign countries where I have been, I have heard the same complaint, that in assessing the duties from standards, they are always open to frauds.

177. By the Chairman: How could the third step in the classification be carried out—would it be a simple distinction between brown sugars as compared with white, or how could the different classes be distinguished? Sugars are made of very many colours.

178. Would it not require very nice discrimination to distinguish between the different classes of inferior sugars? Yes, it would, and it has to be left to the discretion of individuals. I have a paper here in which the subject is treated of. It states that the Lords of the Treasury have authorized the exercise of discretion on the part of the officers in assessing the duties on sugars which may be of bright colour but deficient in other elements. I merely cite this to show that in England they cannot get standards sufficiently suitable for all purposes, to do away with discretionary power in the officers.

179. Did I understand you to say, just now, that if a small refiner was compelled to refine in bond it would be a loss to him? If he was compelled to refine in bond, and to pay the expense of officers, then it would, I think, be a pecuniary loss; but if he had not to bear that expense, it would merely be a loss to him in so far as all Excise regulations are the cause of annoyance and expense.

180. Then would it be a loss if he was not called upon to pay the expense? It would not be a positive or direct loss, but it might be an incidental one.

181. Would he not reap the same advantage, in proportion to the business he transacted, in not having to pay for the waste you refer to, as the larger refiner? He would be exactly in the same position in that particular.

182. Then setting aside the cost of supervision, would it not be an advantage to him to refine in bond? I never have been a small refiner, and therefore I cannot say positively; but I think that so long as there is the one small refiner he is under no disadvantage under the present tariff.

183. Is there any disadvantage inherent in refining in bond to which the small refiner would be subject, setting aside the expense of supervision? Certainly not.

184. By Mr. Dalgleish: In all cases where a refiner's or any other business has to be carried on in bond, it has to be under the direct supervision of an officer? Of course.

185. And when his time arrives to leave, everything is placed under lock? If he ever does leave. I imagine that, as in distilleries, there would be a constant relay of officers.

186. Do you think the Government could afford to keep a constant relay of officers for a small refiner's business? I really cannot say.

187. Is it probable such a thing would be done? I should think not.

188. By the Chairman: If there were no sugar duties at all, your ground of complaint would be removed? Yes.

189. You would then take the loss of waste as naturally incident to the manufacture? Yes, there would be no duty on it, and we could get back all we had paid for the waste from the consumer. 190.

- John Grafton Ross, Esq.,
11 July, 1862.
190. You only complain because what is waste you have to pay duty on? Yes.
191. By Mr. Caldwell: Would you not have to compete with importers? Yes.
192. You have stated a loss of 8 per cent.? It is the duty on that 8 per cent. that we complain of.
193. By the Chairman: Wherever it is manufactured there is the loss by waste? Wherever it is manufactured there is the loss by waste; and the importers have to pay for that loss by waste to the foreign refiner. Be kind enough to remember that it is the loss of the duty on the waste we complain of, not the cost of the waste in any other way.
194. The waste itself you accept as unavoidable? Yes.
195. By Mr. Dalgleish: Are you aware if candied sugar is imported here? About five years ago there was one lot.
196. Does it bear any duty at all? Yes, the highest duty.
197. By Mr. Alexander: The fact is, that the high duty that is charged is only on loaf sugar and Cossipore? And I think they charge it on the small quantity of crushed lump that is imported.
198. By the Chairman: It is charged on all refined sugars? Yes, on all so considered by the Customs authorities.
199. The difficulty being to tell what is refined and what is not? Yes.
200. In respect of which considerable difficulty exists? Yes.
201. By Mr. Dalgleish: Would there be any difficulty if sugars were classed under two heads—sugar that has passed through any process of defecation, or charcoal refining, and granulated sugars, where the treacle has been extracted? The process has very little to do with it. I have seen men making sugars, and the only utensil they had was a little earthenware pot, from which the sugars have come out as pure as from the best manufactory.
202. Would not this plan of making sugar of two classes only, for purposes of duty, get rid of the difficulty with regard to the escape of superior sugar from paying the superior duty? You mean by taking a low standard for the second duty?
203. And all above that paying the higher duty? At first sight it strikes me there would be no objection to that, as far as we are concerned. It is a matter purely of calculation; but as to the equity to others, I am not sure of the effect of such a measure.
204. By the Chairman: How would one uniform duty for sugar operate—how would it affect your operations as refiners—either higher or lower, as the case might be? Supposing, of course, we had the drawback on treacle to the same extent?
205. In regard to treacle, has it not been always found, in every country where it has been found necessary to impose sugar duties, that a drawback on treacle was never permitted? For this reason, that it is very easy—
206. Is it not difficult to detect the adulteration? I was just going to say that it is very easy to add water and adulterate it; and for that reason the drawback has generally been refused.
207. You are not aware of any country where a drawback on treacle is allowed? No; and that is one reason why refining in bond should be allowed, because if there is no system of drawbacks at all there can be no chance of fraud to the Government on exportation of these dutiable articles—sugar and treacle. Having paid no duty, none would have to be refunded. If there were a uniform duty of £5 a ton, and we exported our treacle without getting the drawback, it would be most unfair; we should be in a worse position than we are now.
208. By Mr. Dalgleish: It appears that treacle is the only thing you complain of? Treacle, dirt, and spirits.

WEDNESDAY, 16 JULY, 1862.

Present:—

MR. ALEXANDER, | MR. ALLEN,
MR. DALGLEISH.

THE HON. ELIAS CARPENTER WEEKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Isaac Peck called in and examined:—

- Mr. Isaac Peck.
16 July, 1862.
209. By the Chairman: What business do you carry on? Sugar refining.
210. In Sydney? In Sydney.
211. How long have you carried on that trade? Very near three years.
212. Is it an extensive business? Four tons a week.
213. You petitioned, I think, last Session, against a Bill called the Bonded Distilleries and Bonded Sugar-houses Bill? I did.
214. Have you given any further consideration to the provisions of that Bill? A great deal.
215. Do you hold the same opinions now that you held then, or have you seen reason to modify them in any way? I have seen reason to modify them greatly.

216. Will you state what your present views are with respect to that Bill, as to its effect upon the small refiner;—it was, I think, one of the grounds of your petition that it would interfere with the operations of the small refiner? My impressions then were wrong—they were not correct. I was under the impression then that, under the Bill, the Sugar Company, working in bond, would only pay £5 a ton duty on all the refined sugar that went out of the sugar-house. At the time I brought about this petition I was not aware that they were to pay 6s. 8d. a cwt. on refined white; I thought all would go out of the house alike; and that, of course, would have been much against me; in fact it would have ruined me, for I could not have competed with them when I had to pay £5 a ton on the sugar I took into the sugar-house. I thought then they would merely pay the £5 after taking the dirt out, and £3 6s. 8d. on the treacle after they sent it out.

Mr. Isaac Peck.
16 July, 1862.

217. Then you believed that the operation of this Bill would have been that, after refining the sugar in bond, the Sugar Company would have paid upon their refined sugar, as it was made and passed into home consumption, only the £5 duty? That was my impression at that time.

218. Does the knowledge that it will not be so remove the objection you had to this Bill? Very largely.

219. Altogether, or modify it only? It modifies it.

220. What are your remaining objections? The only objections I have to it, or that I had, I have given way upon, on moral and social considerations, a great deal. In the first place, it would certainly be a great calamity to the country if any such establishment was withdrawn, and Mr. Knox has given me conclusive proof that they must withdraw unless there is some modification of the law, and I cannot see how it is possible for any set of gentlemen to carry on such a business as the law stands now; it is not possible.

221. Do I understand you to say that you consider that the Sugar Refining Company being compelled to remove their operations from this Colony would be a great calamity? No question about it.

222. By Mr. Dalgleish: Did you say they will be compelled? I am certain they will be compelled, for I am certain no set of gentlemen can carry on an establishment like that without some outlet for their treacle, and there is no possible consumption for it here.

223. By the Chairman: That is because there is no drawback allowed on treacle, if exported; and it appears almost impossible there can be? Therefore there must be a consideration in some other way; either by the remission of duty of some sort, or by working in bond; and working in bond is rather against the small refiner.

224. In what way? Merely in this way:—Upon calculating, I find it will make somewhere about 30s. a week difference to me, as compared with the Company, upon the quantity of sugar I use; and if I were to work up 14 or 15 tons instead of 4, of course it would be worse against me.

225. How does that loss occur? I make now all my first process, amounting to about 30 per cent., into fine whites, and issue that at the £5 a ton duty on the raw material; but if I worked in bond, of course I would pay 6s. 8d. a cwt. on that, and get the treacle out at 3s. 4d., and the bastards at 5s.; that would make the duty come to a little less than £20 a week, which I pay now on four tons of raw sugar. If I worked in bond I would pay £18 or £18 10s. The Company would have the advantage over me to that extent if they worked in bond and I did not, and it would not pay me, with the small quantity I make, to do so. Of course, if I worked off 15 or 16 or 20 tons a week, it would be worse for me, just in proportion as I worked in a larger way, so long as I did not work in bond.

226. In proportion to your business, would you not derive the same advantage as the large Company if you worked in bond? I would not work in bond; I would not be cramped with the officers. Of course, to the extent of the difference of duty, there would be an advantage; but to those working on a large scale the advantage would be immeasurably greater, because by refining in bond they would be able to get rid of their treacle. There is no outlet for it without. With such sugar as the Company is refining now—Taal, Zebu, and so on—if they refine 100 tons they will get 10 per cent. of waste, and three, four, or five and twenty tons of treacle, for which there is no consumption here.

227. Supposing this Bill passed into law, would you take advantage of it and refine in bond? Certainly not; I would not be hampered with the officers for the consideration it would be to me; I would not be under the lock and key of anybody for the consideration.

228. That is, looking at the present limited character of your business? Just so.

229. Would your objection to refining in bond still prevail if you increased your business? Certainly, if the officers were found me, if my business was larger I might do it, but not if I had to pay them. I would not pay them and be under their surveillance and their checks. I would not be bored with them; I would rather forego the loss.

230. Have you had considerable experience in the management of a sugar refining warehouse? A great deal, both practically and theoretically; I have studied the matter well.

231. Is there necessarily some waste in a sugar-house? Most decidedly.

232. What extent of waste? It depends upon the character of the sugar used for working. This sugar (producing a sample) cost me £20 a ton, duty paid, and there is about 12 per cent. absolute waste in it—dirt, mud.

233. Is that waste useless? Utterly so.

234. Does it contain no saccharine matter at all? None at all; it is muck, it is mire, it is dirt.

235. Could you not, by some process of distillation, extract some saccharine matter from it? Nothing at all—no more than you could out of this table.

236. Do you complain of having to pay duty upon waste—mud; as you call it—or do you consider it the natural result of a manufacture? It is a hardship to have to pay duty on dirt,

Mr.
Isaac Peck.
16 July, 1862.

dirt, no doubt about it. If I had the means to import my own sugar to advantage, and to do business on an extensive scale, no doubt I should have felt it; but being a small man it does not affect me so much, because I have a ready market for all I can make, and I can make all my first process into fine whites.

237. Do you go along with the Sugar Company, in their complaint of being compelled to pay duty on this waste? Well, you see the Bill is surrounded with so many circumstances, and the working in bond of course is an advantage, in being able to ship and get rid of the treacle, which is at the bottom of it all. I believe if they could get rid of the treacle, they could carry on with paying duty on the waste, if they only had an outlet for the treacle. It seems impossible to get any relief on that point without working in bond, because of the difficulty of detecting frauds if duties are remitted on treacle exported. As I said at first, I never opposed the Company for hostility's sake at all; what I opposed them for was that the Bill did not seem to reach everybody, by allowing working in bond, so much as taking the duty off sugar would do; but there seems to be so much objection to that. What I said was, that taking the duty off sugar would reach everybody. If the duty was off sugar for bonâ fide manufacturing purposes, it would reach everybody without any bother; I think that would be fair, because what is called the sugar used for manufacturing purposes is certainly not sugar—there is no mistake about that. You go to a merchant and pay £20 a ton for that (pointing to the sample before produced), and you get it for £20 a ton because it is not sugar—it is sugar and dirt. This (another sample) fetches £50 a ton, and you pay £50 a ton for it because it is sugar. It pays us better to buy sugar and dirt, because it is in separating the sugar from the dirt that the whole of our business lies; but certainly it does seem hard that the manufacturer should pay as much duty for sugar and dirt as he pays for sugar—there can be no question about that part of it. Any man, certainly, with any moral feeling, will say it does seem hard that the manufacturer, when he has erected large machinery in the country at an enormous expense, should be compelled to pay £5 a ton duty on sugar and dirt, while importers pay only £5 for sugar. I think there ought to be some consideration for that. I deem it morally right that any set of gentlemen, either now or in times to come, that open a factory for sugar refining, ought to have a let-out for their treacle, because that is the bugbear, no doubt about it.

238. Then you complain of being compelled to pay duty on what is really dirt? No doubt about it.

239. Supposing the duty on sugar were abolished, the amount of waste remaining the same, would you complain? Decidedly not. If there was no duty at all we could not pay on dirt then.

240. You would not complain then of the amount of waste that resulted from your manufacture? Certainly not. We should then have a consideration, in the low price of the sugar we use, for the amount of dirt it contains. But the duty recognizes nothing of that kind. It says you must pay £5 a ton for this, and £5 for that, whether the sugar is dirty or not. The thing is unjust. It is as plain as a pikestaff. If the duty is taken off sugar—which is really the easiest way of settling the matter—you can deal with the merchant in a true spirit. You give him the price of sugar and dirt, and he gives you sugar and dirt; if you give him the price of sugar he gives you sugar.

241. Is the dirt in sugar in proportion to its colour? Not at all times.

242. What kind of sugars do you prefer to refine from? Manila sugars.

243. The darkest sugar? We do not talk of the darkest; it is according to their strength. It pays us best according to their saccharine contents.

244. Is there any other mode which you could suggest by which this hardship could be avoided, besides the abolition of the duty altogether;—would any modification of the scale of duties operate to give relief? I see nothing for it but taking the duty off.

245. Would not a modification of the duties effect the same object? Decidedly.

246. In what way? Simply because the quality of the sugar would be recognized, the same as it is when you go to a merchant.

247. There are two classes of duties, are there not now—5s. and 6s. 8d.? Yes.

248. Would giving a third rate in that scale remove the hardship which is now complained of—would it operate in the same way as a removal of the duty altogether, so far as refining goes? It would give me an advantage. It would be as good to me, as I work in my small way, as working in bond; but it would not be so good to the Company, because they would not get rid of the treacle. I take it there ought to be some legislation, so that a large refiner here, or any refiner, may have an outlet for his treacle. That is the bugbear.

249. Do you know any country in which treacle is allowed to be exported under drawback? No, I do not.

250. It is a difficulty that has always been found insurmountable? It does not apply in England; you have consumption for it there.

251. Is it not the fact that treacle is not allowed to be exported on drawback in any country? There is no question of it, so far as my knowledge goes.

252. Am I to understand that you are of opinion that no modification of the duty or alteration in the scale of duties would meet the difficulty? It would meet the difficulty in a measure.

253. Are you aware why no drawback is allowed on treacle? Not at all.

254. It could be easily mixed, could it not? Not so easily.

255. Not with water? Not so easily; it could be done, no doubt.

256. Then with your present views regarding this Bill—your present and altered views—should you, had you then had the same feeling as you have now, have presented this petition? I should not—most decidedly not.

257. It was a misconception of the provisions of the Bill which induced you to do so? In part part it was; but there are some moral considerations about it too with me. I see so plain before me the utter hopelessness of any large factory carrying on sugar refining here without having an outlet for the treacle, and I should not like to see the place withdrawn.

Mr.
Isaac Peck.

16 July, 1862.

258. Would you wish to see it established even if it injured the small refiner to some small extent? I should like it some other way certainly. There is no question that to a person doing 14 or 15 tons a week the duty on the waste would be a consideration; but it would not pay him to work in bond, if he had to pay the officers. If the Government would pay for the excise supervision, then a person working on a little larger scale than I am would receive the same benefit, in proportion to his business, as the Company; but certainly not if he paid the officers. They must be there night and day, and each refinery would, therefore, probably require three officers—say it would involve salaries to the amount of £1,000 a year; perhaps the consideration a refiner of 14 or 15 tons a week would get for that would not pay for these officers; therefore he would be under a disadvantage as compared with a large refiner. No doubt the larger the refiner the greater the advantages he would derive from this as compared with the small refiner. In a large refinery the consideration they give for the officers is covered by the consideration they receive by not paying duty on dirt.

259. As it would be optional with you to refine in bond or not under this Bill, with your present views you would have made no opposition to this Bill? No, I would not—not with my present views.

260. By Mr. Allen: You do not seem to have any opposition to the Bill now? I have no opposition to the Bill, principally on moral grounds. I feel in my mind so convinced that it is impossible to carry on in this way on account of the treacle.

261. Is there any way of testing the quantity of saccharine matter in treacle? Yes, I can tell you to a pound what there is in a cwt. gross weight.

262. Suppose the Government gave a drawback on the tested quality of the treacle, the revenue could not then lose anything by the admixture of water? Certainly not; they would simply lose the duty on the dirt.

263. This test you think could be fairly applied, so as to allow drawback on treacle so tested? No question of it, but you would have to gauge every cask, and you cannot gauge it when it is cold, because the saccharometer will not float. There might be one made for it, no doubt. That matter is a merely mechanical matter; but I think it would have to be warmed somehow or another. No doubt the saccharometer will tell you the saccharine contents of syrups and so on, down to a certain grade. If you come into my house I will show you some sugar in solution, and I can tell you by the saccharometer how many pounds of sugar there are in the vessel, if I get the number of gallons.

264. You think it is unfair to the manufacturer to charge the same duty on these two sugars (referring to samples)? Decidedly. I do not see that any man can say it is not unfair; the merchants themselves would acknowledge that, I believe.

265. By Mr. Dalgleish: You have stated that you have withdrawn your objection, in consequence of your certainty that the manufacture of sugar cannot be carried on in the Colony, provided the Legislature make no outlet for the treacle? On a large scale I do not think it can.

266. You have spoken very confidently—will you give us your reasons for this extreme confidence? I have given it as my opinion from the knowledge I possess of the matter.

267. I think you stated that you had obtained it from conversation with Mr. Knox? I did, a great deal.

268. Have you had private interviews with Mr. Knox? I had an interview with Mr. Knox.

269. With regard to the Sugar Bill? With regard to many matters. We accidentally met up at the Court.

270. And Mr. Knox, you say, has assured you that did this Bill not pass, the Company would be unable to carry on their manufactory? He did not; I saw it in his pamphlet, and I drew my inferences. I always saw the uselessness of extending my place, in consequence of the treacle. My sugar-house would have been bigger than it is now only for that.

271. You state that were the Company allowed to manufacture sugar in bond, it would place you at a direct disadvantage in competing with them, of some 30s. a week? I think about that.

272. You refine about four tons a week? About four tons.

273. That, then, would afford a fair example of the ratio of profit that would accrue to the Company—30s. on every four tons? It does not follow at all. I only refine four tons a week, and I can make all my first process fetch me £51 and £52 a ton; but if the Company were to do that, they might keep it in their stores for twenty years and not sell it. I do it because I make only a small quantity altogether; but the Company melts 200 tons a week, and if they made 60 tons of fine whites they never could get rid of it. I have that advantage, that I can make all my first process into fine whites.

274. You have also stated that it pays you to buy sugar and dirt? Just so.

275. Then it pays the Company better to buy sugar and dirt? Yes, all what we call low grade sugars.

276. Does not this enter into the calculation when they purchase it? Probably it does.

277. Then if there was any unerring standard by which the value of sugar could be ascertained, and the duty charged in accordance with that standard, you could have no objection to a duty on that scale? No; no manufacturer would have a right to complain.

278. Such a standard exists, does it not? It would be very hard to tell, because it is only the crystallizable contents the refiner takes into consideration.

279. It is a common mode of expression to talk of sugar of different qualities—does any such thing exist? Not chemically.

280. It is only sugar and the impurities that accompany it? That is all.

281. And it is the impurities that make the difference in value? Just so.

- Mr. Isaac Peck.
16 July, 1862.
282. Is there any unerring standard to measure sugar in the same way as to measure spirits? Not marketably, there is not.
283. I did not say marketably;—does such a standard exist to measure the absolute or the specific gravity of sugar in the same way as the specific gravity of spirits? Yes; but that is not the question.
284. That is the question I have asked? You did not ask me straightforward. If you ask me, is there any test to tell the saccharine contents of sugar, I could answer you.
285. If a pound of this sugar you purchase at £20 a ton were melted in one gallon of water, and a pound of this superior sugar were melted in a gallon of water, the difference between the specific gravities of the two would show the total quantity of sugar in the one and the total quantity in the other, irrespective of dirt? No doubt.
286. That would be an unerring standard of the quality of the sugar? It would be an unerring standard of the saccharine contents, but not of its market value.
287. In the same way that the salinometer measures the exact quantity of salt in water? Of course. Your question is now plain, and I answer it truthfully. There is a way of telling the saccharine contents of any sugar.
288. Were the duty charged in accordance with that standard, would you then pay any duty on dirt? Certainly not, if you only charge for sugar.
289. You claim to be charged for sugar and nothing else? That is all.
290. Then that would meet your views? No doubt.
291. That is to say, if, out of a cargo of sugar, ten samples were taken indiscriminately and subjected to this test, which can be very quickly performed, then the quantity of sugar per ton and the quantity of dirt per ton could be accurately measured by the saccharometer? Not the dirt—you could not measure the dirt.
292. The quantity of sugar being given, the residue would be dirt? No.
293. The residue would not be sugar? It would not be sugar, but it would not be dirt; a good deal of it would be water; there is 10 per cent. of water.
294. In the same way as there is water in spirits? Just so.
295. By the Chairman: Could you, by the saccharometer, test in any simple manner the proportion of sugar and the proportion of treacle? Certainly not, because treacle is merely glucose or grape sugar, and enters into solution.
296. Does the proportion of treacle differ in various samples of sugar? No doubt, very much so.
297. By Mr. Allen: What is the average proportion of sugar and dirt in such sugar as that on the table? There is 12 per cent. of absolute waste in that.
298. Is there any in this other? There is no dirt there.
299. By Mr. Dalgleish: I think we were speaking of the specific gravity as being an unerring standard of the saccharine contents of sugar, and you say this would be an unobjectionable mode of levying the duty? You see you will not admit me to qualify my answers in any way —
300. Most decidedly you may? I said it would most undoubtedly tell you the saccharine contents.
301. I may be allowed to say, that it is the usual mode, in the examination of witnesses, to answer first and qualify afterwards? Well, I say the saccharometer will tell the saccharine contents unerringly—no doubt about that; but if I am allowed now to explain myself, it is no test for the market value of sugar at all, because you may take sugar that may have 50 per cent. of treacle in combination with 10 or 15 per cent. of sugar, and the remainder dirt. You may apply the saccharometer—the treacle will enter into solution with the sugar; but while the one is glucose sugar, the other is muscovado sugar, though both will show equal saccharine contents.
302. Be kind enough to explain the terms glucose sugar and muscovado sugar? Glucose sugar is grape sugar, and is much less valuable to the refiner.
303. Would not this weakness be indicated by the saccharometer;—if a pound of this grape sugar were dissolved in a gallon of water, would it not show its weakness, in comparison with a pound of muscovado sugar treated in the same way? Unquestionably it would be weaker, if it was embedded with treacle—no doubt about that.
304. On a comparison of sugars of different qualities, a pound of refined or loaf sugar, which contains the smallest quantity of treacle and the smallest quantity of water, would show the greatest specific gravity, would it not? Just so; the sugar that is the most free from syrup, colouring matter, treacle, and so forth, would float the saccharometer highest.
305. Which shows that the saccharometer measures the treacle as well as the grape sugar? In part.
306. In proportion as they exist in the sugar? No doubt.
307. The consequence is, that your objection in regard to the application of this test for duty purposes does not apply? I cannot see that exactly. I am confining myself to the market value of the sugar, and that must be what the operations of life must go by. We are bound to go by the usage of trade and the market value of things. I will illustrate what I mean:—I have sugars of different qualities now, one that cost me £7 a ton less than I would have to give for another—for one I pay £21 and for the other £28 a ton—and I find a discrepancy in the saccharine contents to the extent of 15 per cent. One pound of the sugar that I have to pay £28 a ton for shows less saccharine contents than the other, but the market value is £7 a ton better.
308. This sugar that you state you paid £20 a ton for, duty paid, and this sugar which you saw sold at £52 a ton, were they tested by the saccharometer would lead you to the exact value of the two sugars? No doubt about it.
309. The consequence is, that the argument you have used with regard to its not being a fair test test is done away with? If you go into another room and make solutions of these two sugars, and fetch me in the vessels with the saccharometer floating in them, I should certainly know how to guide my price.

Mr.
Isaac Peck.

310. Then that would be an equitable mode of raising the duty on all sugars? There is no question to get the duty in proportion to the quality of the sugar would be the most equitable way.

16 July, 1862.

311. So that if the Sugar Company or the merchants were to import refined sugar, the value could be ascertained by the Customs by this standard for a fixed scale of duties, in the same way as for spirits? No doubt, if it is practicable. It would be very hard, I think, to test in that way all the sugar imported. No doubt that is a test—the saccharine contents.

312. Is the colour of sugar any test of its value? A great deal.

313. Would there be a difficulty in regulating discriminating duties on sugar, by the Customs authorities, by colour? I think there would.

314. A great deal would have to be left to the discretion of the officers? No doubt, unless there were sealed bottles; but then they vary so, from one colour up to a hundred.

315. Provided sugar be manufactured in bond, will not a very great deal depend on the integrity of the Excise officers who have the control of the manufacture? If they are only ordinarily honest men, who can be relied upon to give a truthful account of what goes out of the manufactory, that is all that is requisite. It pays the manufacturer, of course, to extract all the clean sugar he can from the raw material.

316. Is there any means by which the Government could check the sugar refiner in the manufacture of sugar, in the same way, for instance, as they can with regard to the distillation of spirits? Certainly.

317. In what way? It is perfectly simple. When you get sugar into your sugar-house, the first operation is to melt it—what we call blowing up—that is an operation that cannot be disguised from any one; the next operation is to let it through the filter bags, which cannot be concealed from any person—the dirt is left in the bags; then it goes through the charcoal cisterns, and you see it pass through them; and then when it comes out we boil it.

318. Provided 100 tons of sugar went into the bond, is there any standard as to what quantity of sugar should issue from the bond? No.

319. Has not that been the principal objection to manufacturing in bond in England? I cannot see how it exists, because it is simply absurd. It pays the manufacturer to get all the sugar he can out.

320. There might be other ways of getting sugar out than the authorized one? As for bribes or officers neglecting their duty, that is equally applicable to every other operation in bond.

321. Supposing the duty on sugar to be assessed by the saccharometer, would not the saccharometer also be a fair test for treacle;—it appears to me to be a clumsy idea you have of the saccharometer floating in the treacle;—would not a pound of treacle dissolved in a gallon of water show its saccharine contents in the same way as sugar—would not the same standard for the export of treacle give you the value? No doubt, the then value of it. Treacle is sugar destroyed in the process of manufacture; it is not sugar at all—it is burnt or decomposed sugar, in fact. It is done before it comes here in part, and also here. You cannot manipulate sugar without destroying part of it.

322. Nevertheless, it would show its relative value for the purpose of fixing the duty? It would show how much water was in it.

323. So that if the duty were raised in that mode, it would allow the manufacturer a fair drawback if he exported his treacle, and it would be equally fair for the merchant and the manufacturer in the import? It would, if it was practicable; but you would have to try every cask—there are no two casks alike.

324. Of treacle? No.

325. Well, you have to try every cask of brandy;—you say that from moral considerations you withdraw your petition? Some of it. Social considerations.

326. Have you explained what your moral considerations were? No.

327. Will you be kind enough to explain them? The word social perhaps I ought to have used. I know of my own knowledge that there are two or three hundred men employed there; I know one or more of my own friends will be ruined if the Company withdraws, or sent about their business, which comes to the same thing; and I know several hundreds that are not my friends will be out of employment if they withdraw from this Colony.

328. That is, taking it for granted the sugar-house will be shut up unless this claim is allowed? Yes; and I think it must be; I cannot see the outlet for the treacle; they have six or seven hundred tons of it in their store now that they do not know what to do with.

329. Do you think it at all probable, that if a Company were to start as distillers, to distil from treacle, the Sugar Company could sell their treacle for the purpose of distillation;—would they sell treacle to another Company, for the purpose of entering into competition with their own distillery? I think they would be glad to get rid of it.

330. Do you think you could possibly continue your manufactory, were you now compelled to work in bond? If the Bill was compulsory, and the officers were paid by the Government, unquestionably I should continue on, but if I had to pay the officers I would have to give it up.

331. What are your hours of working? They take in nearly all hours. The men come at six, and go at six, but I have a watchman, and the place being small, I make him do duties that would devolve on other parties if my establishment were larger.

332. You could not leave your place at any time without attendance? No.

333. And, of course, while you had even but one man in the refinery, you would have to have an Excise officer there to watch him? Yes.

Mr.
Isaac Peck.
16 July, 1862.

334. Were these small refineries multiplied, as is very possible—say there were 30 or 40, instead of one—do you think it at all possible the Government could carry on such a system? Certainly not, if they paid the officers; and if a small refiner paid the officers he would have to shut up.

335. By Mr. Alexander: It appears you have sent in a petition against this Bill? I did.

336. What might have been the objections you had to the Bill? I thought, as I understood the thing then, that I should be ruined if this Bill were to pass, because I thought the Company would pay only £5 a ton duty on all their sugar, as it went out, and £3 6s. 8d. on the treacle, while I would be paying £5 a ton on my raw sugar, as I brought it into the factory, which I considered was unfair, and would do me a great amount of injury.

337. Is it your opinion that the passing of this Bill will prevent the establishment of other sugar refining manufactories? Not on a large scale, but it would on a limited scale, if they have to pay their officers; if a refiner is doing fourteen or fifteen tons a week it will not pay him to spend £1,000 or £1,200 a year for officers.

338. I think it does provide that the manufacturers shall pay the officers? Then I unhesitatingly say that a small refiner, as compared with the Company, will be prevented from entering into the business; the difference of duty would not be large enough to pay the officers.

339. Then do I understand that, for the benefit of the Company, you are prepared to forego the interest of your business, small as it may be? For the considerations I have alluded to.

340. Social considerations? Just so. I am.

341. Well, it seems rather strange to me that you should be inclined to forego the business you have been established in for some years? The explanation I give is this:—that being now fully aware that the Company will have to pay on their white sugar the higher duties, and knowing the great calamity that it will be to the country if they withdraw to another Colony, and the amount of misery it will cause, I am willing to forego my opposition. If I thought that the Company would still continue manufacturing sugar here, very possibly I should carry on my opposition now.

342. You say this Bill will not affect you so much, as your business is small;—does it not affect you in the same proportion as the large manufacturer? Certainly not, because, as I have said before, I make all my first process into fine whites, which it is impossible for them to do, because they could not sell it.

343. Is it your opinion that the passing of this Bill will be the means of making a monopoly for the present Sugar Company, or what effect do you think it will have? The effect I think it would have would be this,—that the small refiner like myself might keep in existence, but that it would certainly be injurious to any middle class refiner, say of 15 or 20 tons a week, because it would not pay him to have the officers, and hence he could not come under the advantages the Company would come under; no doubt it would be a monopoly rather for the large refiner on these grounds.

344. What effect will the passing of this Bill have on the importers of sugar? No doubt the importers of sugar will stand in a worse position than they do now.

345. In what way? Because the Company will be able to work at a less loss than they do now, and with greater freedom and agility, because they will have an outlet for their treacle.

346. Am I to understand that for the last two or three years the Company have been working at a loss? I am positive they cannot be making much.

347. If the quality of treacle could be tested and drawback allowed, would that do away with the whole of this complaint? I should say it would alter it.

348. By Mr. Dalgleish: I will ask a question, but you need not answer it if you do not like;—Are you in any moral fear whatever that should you oppose this Bill the Company would so oppose you that they would run you out of the market? Why you know a man must have a little policy; they could certainly injure me by selling the treacle cheaper, but of course that is a mercantile consideration; any two shops may sell what they like at what price they like.

349. Are you under any moral fear whatever of the consequences, should you oppose this Bill? I am under a business fear.

George King, Esq., called in and examined:—

George King,
Esq.
16 July, 1862.

350. By the Chairman: You are a merchant in Sydney? I am.

351. And among other business you import sugar? I do.

352. Were you one of the parties that signed the petition to the Assembly, with reference to the Bill called the Bonded Distilleries and Sugar-houses Bill? I was.

353. Have you given consideration to that Bill? I have.

354. Are your views now the same as were contained in that petition? My views are still that the Bill should not be passed, unless there were three or four sugar refineries in the Colony, to exercise a wholesome competition or check upon the existing Company.

355. Then is your objection that this Company would in fact become a monopoly? This Company would monopolize the entire sugar market, and the whole community of the Colony would have to pay them their own price for one of the necessaries of life, and be at their mercy.

356. Do you consider that they would possess advantages which importers would be deprived of? They possess at present an advantage over importers of similar sugars equal to at least £5 a ton—at the very least.

357. Will you state how that arises? It is the profit on the manufacture. The importer is at the mercy of the foreign refiner, and he must pay him his price. The importer pays the profit of the foreign refiner, and the Sugar Company get that profit themselves.

358. By Mr. Allen: That is the inducement to carry on their business? It is.

George King,
Esq.
16 July, 1862.

359. By the Chairman: Is that anything more than a natural operation of trade? No, it is probably no more.

360. May not that arise in other matters except sugar? It may, in any article manufactured: it may, or may not.

361. In the petition you presented to Parliament you state that it had been often and urgently pressed on the British Parliament by the sugar refiners in England that they should be allowed to refine sugar in bond for home consumption? I was informed it had been the case.

362. Do you speak with any certainty when you make that statement, or can you refer me to any measure? I cannot refer to any Legislative enactment, but I have seen a letter, written by a Mr. McGregor, agent in London for the West Indian Association, stating that he had made application to Mr. Wilson, then President of the Board of Trade, but that Mr. Wilson resisted the application, under the impression that the revenue would be unfavourably affected.

363. Do you gather from that that the application was one to refine in bond for home consumption? That is how I understand it.

364. Does it state as much? That was my impression.

365. Are you able to state as a fact that there ever has been refining in bond for home consumption in England? I cannot state it as a fact.

366. The petition states that at one time it was granted? From the pamphlet published by the Sugar Company I believe that to be erroneous.

367. You are not quite sure whether the refining you refer to was not for exportation? I am not quite sure about that; but it is not a very material point.

368. The petition also states that a person being a refiner in England may not also be a distiller? I believe that is the case.

369. Have you any doubt upon that point? It is a mere allegation, to be taken for what it is worth. I have been told it is so.

370. You have seen a statement put forward by the Sugar Company, that as Colonial sugar refiners they pay to the revenue, by way of duty, about 10s. a ton more than could be collected on imported foreign sugars of qualities exactly similar to the Company's sugars? I have seen that.

371. Have you tested that statement in any way, or do you believe it to be correct? I think it very likely to be correct; that is, they pay duty on the dirt the raw sugar contains; that I believe is the case; but the public repay that to them in the price they give for the refined sugar.

372. The revenue receives 10s. a ton for what is not consumed? It is not for what is not consumed, but for that which is wasted in the manufacture.

373. Do you believe that any use can be made of that which the Sugar Company call waste, and of which a sample is now on the table? That I do not know; I am not sufficiently acquainted with the manufacture to say; but I should think not.

374. Then to that extent you think their statement is correct—that there is that loss by waste? Yes, unquestionably, there must be a per centage of dirt and waste.

375. You state also in your petition that what is designated as waste is not a loss to the Company, and that in fact it is repaid to them by the public;—how do you explain that? In manufacturing their sugars they must make allowance for the waste and charge a price for the manufactured article accordingly; just as a tailor would allow for the pieces of cloth he cuts to waste in making a coat.

376. Would the public pay the sugar refiner £5 10s. as the cost of production, when they can get the same article for £5? I do not understand the drift of your question.

377. At the Customs the Sugar Company, as they allege, pay £5 10s. as duty upon the quantity of raw sugar necessary to make a ton of the manufactured article—that is including 10s. a ton as the duty on the dirt or waste, as to the existence of which you admit their allegation to be correct; the importer upon a ton of sugar of equal quality to the Company's manufactured article pays £5;—supposing the duty to be the cost of production, would the public pay the Sugar Company £5 10s. when they could get the same article from the importer for £5? The importer cannot compete with them within £5 a ton. On the article which they sell at £40 they make a considerable profit, but on the article which the importer imports and sells at £40 he makes little or no profit at all.

378. You state that they have an advantage of £5 a ton? More than that.

379. How does that arise? I will instance a case. There is a sugar manufactured in Manila called "M. O."; it is a species of bastard sugar, and resembles very much the Company's "pieces"—rather inferior perhaps. That sugar, with the present rates of exchange, freights, and expenses, cost recently £38 a ton laid down in Sydney, as near as I can estimate it. Therefore the importer of that sugar, selling at the price that rules here, makes almost nothing, while the Company, manufacturing their "pieces" from Taal sugar, purchased at much lower rates, can produce an article which, selling at £38 or £40 a ton, will leave them a profit of £5 or £6 a ton. Therefore to that extent they drive the importer from the market.

380. Looking at it as a question of manufacture generally, do you think that any great objection? There is no objection whatever to their making a profit.

381. Is it an unfair advantage which they have over the importer? Not at all. I merely state that to show the extraordinary advantages which the sugar refiner of this country

George King, Esq. possesses compared with the merchant who has to buy his sugar from the foreign refiner. He cannot compete with the Company.

16 July, 1862. 382. Would not that be an argument in favour of the establishment of additional sugar companies? Unquestionably, it would be a great boon to the Colony if there were half-a-dozen sugar refineries established here, and I would be very glad to see it.

383. Would you object to this Bill if other companies were established? Not in the least; I would consider it quite right.

384. Is not that the ordinary remedy for a monopoly, to set up an opposition? No doubt. The course of events must bring that about; but we ought not to legislate for it.

385. If other companies were established it would be an advantage to have a Bill of this character? It would be an advantage, unquestionably, to the companies. As remarked by Mr. Peck, "the treacle is the bugbear." Find an outlet for your treacle, and refining is a very good game. I do not see why other refining companies should not start here; but unquestionably, whoever starts now must have a trial of strength with the old company, who, in all probability will pursue their old tactics of buying up other sugar-houses.

386. Is there not the same inducement without this Bill? Perhaps so, but the advantage would be greater if it were passed.

387. That advantage being that they would avoid paying duty as now upon what is really dirt? Having no market for the treacle is the great thing.

388. How would the question of the treacle arise at all in the institution of another company? I allude to refining in bond.

389. I say, do not the same reasons exist for the establishment of another company in competition with the present one, so far as having a tendency to correct a monopoly, whether this Bill is passed or not? Yes, but the inducement, I say, would be greater if this Bill were passed, and you were to admit of refining and distilling in bond.

390. Do you think that without this Bill there is any unfair pressure upon any sugar refiner here which ought not to exist? I do not think there is any undue pressure.

391. Would you complain of the waste which arises from the manufacture, stated to be 10 or 12 per cent.? The waste is incidental to the manufacture, and is paid for in the price.

392. Is it not the fact that to produce a certain quantity of sugars, refined and bastards, an additional duty of 10s. per ton must be paid by the Colonial refiner as compared with the foreign importer—that is, supposing the refiner produces a certain quantity of refined sugar, a certain quantity of bastards, and a certain quantity of treacle, to produce that quantity does he not pay a duty of 10s. a ton in excess of what the importer would pay to lay down in Sydney the same quantities? We pay the same duty for this as for that (referring to samples on the table.)

393. Is it a fact that the refiner has to pay 10s. a ton more than the foreign importer? That I cannot tell you.

394. I understood you to say that you had tested their statement? According to their statement it is the case.

395. Which you are satisfied to take as correct? I will take it on their own figures.

396. Is it not the fact, on this statement, that the refiner must pay 10s. a ton more than the importer would if he laid down in Sydney the same quantity and the same description of article? No doubt.

397. Do you think that a fair thing to the refiner, carrying on an important branch of manufacture, that he should be placed in that position as regards the foreign importer? The public pay for that in the price.

398. That must be regulated by the ordinary competition of trade, I suppose? Yes.

399. He cannot sell it at a higher price than that for which the importer sells a similar article? No importer can come up to the Colonial refiner within £5 or £6 a ton. It is not the foreign refiner, but the Sydney merchant who keeps the Colonial refiner in check. Drive us out of the market, and they will put up their prices £5 or £6 a ton beyond what they are now, and the population of the country will have to pay sixty or seventy thousand pounds a year more than they do for their sugar. We make little or nothing now on our importations of sugar.

400. Do not the merchants keep each other in check? They do.

401. Is it anything more than the ordinary competition of trade—is the Sugar Company doing anything more than carrying on a fair competition with other traders in the article? No doubt they do the best they can.

402. You state in your petition that in point of fact the Company have no waste, as all the refuse contains saccharine matter, and may be converted into spirit—do you still hold to that statement? I do not know. If there is no saccharine matter in it of course it cannot be distilled; but that is a question I cannot answer.

403. Then you are not prepared to indorse that statement in the petition? No, I signed the petition although I did not altogether agree with it on that point; I was not quite certain on that point; but I agreed with it in the main, and signed it that the subject might be investigated.

404. There is an allegation also in the petition that this Bill "will give the Company a virtual monopoly in the two important articles of sugar and rum, on the latter of which they already enjoy a protection of seven-pence per gallon over the importer"? I cannot tell you anything about rum, for I do not know anything about it.

405. Then you are not prepared to support that allegation? I do not know anything at all about it.

406. Are you aware what the duty on colonially distilled spirits is? I am not aware.

407. Then, if I understand you, your objections settle down into the great one of preventing a monopoly? Yes, that is the sum and substance of my objection.

408. Then you believe that the importer of sugar cannot trade upon terms of equality in the article with the sugar refining company? I do not think he can.
409. The institution of another company would remove your objections? Yes.
410. Would you consider the waste, to which any company is necessarily liable in the manufacture, any ground of complaint? No, I do not think the waste is ground of complaint.
411. Would you not think it ground of complaint that you should be called upon to pay duty on waste? If I were a refiner I might of course ask to get that duty remitted.
412. I am alluding to the institution of another company—another company would correct the evil? Yes, the monopoly.
413. Would you think then, as a sugar refiner, competing with the present company, that it was any hardship to pay duty on what is termed waste, the result of your manufacture—or would the removal of the monopoly remove all your objections, and you would take the waste as an ordinary incident to the manufacture? I would take the waste as an ordinary incident of the manufacture, but if I were a refiner, of course I would like to have the duty remitted.
414. Then you must think the Sugar Company have good claims to try and get this duty removed? They have a perfect right to try.
415. As you would adopt the same course if a refiner yourself, it is because you are not a refiner you object? I object on general principles. I do not see why they should complain about the waste. They get paid for it.
416. Do you ever import treacle? No; no merchant ever imports treacle; there is no market for it here. All the distilleries here are in the hands of the Sugar Company, except, perhaps, the old one at Glenmore, and that has fallen into decay; they rented it, and locked it up.
417. By Mr. Allen: Then it seems that you give up all the allegations of the petition? What allegations?
418. You have given up the first one, with reference to refining in bond in England? I cannot state with any degree of certainty what may be the facts.
419. Then you give up the statement that the Company, being distillers, have in reality no waste? I say I cannot speak with any degree of certainty to that.
420. What can you speak of with certainty, when you wish us to legislate upon the veracity of your petition? My object in signing the petition was to have the matter fully investigated.
421. You sign a petition praying the House to take a certain course with regard to a measure before it, alleging certain grounds, and now, when it comes to be inquired into, you say you do not know anything at all about it? I say it is a question requiring investigation.
422. You say the sugar refiner here has an advantage of over £5 a ton over the importer—how is that? To prove that I would have to go into a calculation of what we have to pay in Java, and other countries, for an article of a similar description to that produced here—
423. What has that to do with the duties—you can go and buy in any market? I was going to show that the foreign refiner does not enter into competition; it is the Sydney merchant who buys from the foreign refiner.
424. It is only another step in the business. The foreign refiner must have a profit, and the Sydney merchant pays him that profit, and brings the sugar here after the waste is taken out, and pays 10s. a ton less duty than the colonial refiner would have to pay on the raw sugar necessary to produce it? The colonial refiner, as I have said, gets it back in the price he sells it for.
425. By Mr. Dalgleish: I am led to suppose from your evidence that the foreign refiner exacts, as his price, as much as he possibly can from the purchaser or importer? He does.
426. That is, whatever profits are due to refining principally go into the pocket of the foreign refiner? Yes.
427. In the same way as the profit on any other manufactured product? Just so.
428. Therefore you look upon this Bill as an attempt to obtain protection to the colonial sugar refiner to the extent of the relief he asks for? Precisely.
429. The Sydney importer has to enter into competition with all the importers from different countries at the foreign manufactory, the result of which is that he has to import sugars to this market which leave a very bare profit? Precisely so.
430. Whilst the sugar refiner, purchasing a very low class of sugar, which does not enter into general consumption, finds his profit in refining that sugar? Precisely.
431. And obtains the profit which the foreign refiner obtains and keeps? Yes.
432. Therefore it will place the community at a disadvantage, not the importer, by making such a concession as they demand; it will, in fact, virtually give them a monopoly? Yes.
433. And you admit that this monopoly can be cured by an opposition Company? Yes.
434. Is it your opinion that we have any right to legislate so as to cause opposition? The best plan would be to leave matters to cure themselves.
435. In the usual way of trade? In the usual way of trade.
436. Can you see any other cure for the complaint the Sugar Company have made, or for the demand the Sugar Company have made for legislation—any other way of meeting that demand, so as to make it equitable to the community, other than passing this bonded Bill? Do you mean the community at large?
437. To adopt any measure which should grant the relief to the Company that they desire, and at the same time be equitable to the community? I do not see how it can be done exactly.
438. If a remission of 10 per cent. of the duty on low sugars were made, would that meet their views? I should think that would meet their views.

George King,

- George King, Esq.

439. Would it not be equitable for the whole community? It would to a certain degree; but there is great opposition now in England to differential duties on sugars, which are ad valorem duties, and they are now endeavouring to do away with them. By adopting them here now, I think we should be going a step backward.
440. You misunderstand me—at the present time we have two fixed rates of duties? Yes.
441. Are they fixed in any artistic manner? One applies to refined sugar, and the other to bastards and all sugars that come under the denomination of raw.
442. Do you think that an equitable arrangement? I should say white sugar, like that on the table, ought to pay a higher duty than the raw sugar.
443. Then would the difficulty be removed by making the duty on raw sugars £4 10s. a ton, still keeping that on refined sugars at £6? By refined sugar do you mean loaf sugar, or bastards; between them there are a great many intermediate grades.
444. The term “bastards” would afford a clear mark of discrimination between the two? No doubt.
445. Then with duties of £4 10s. for this raw sugar and £6 for refined sugar would there be any difficulty? I think not.
446. Would that afford relief to the Sugar Company? I think so.
447. Do you see any objection to getting the dutiable value of sugar by the saccharometer? That is a subject I have never given any attention to.
448. The saccharometer gives the actual strength, or amount of sugar, in the same way as the hydrometer gives the strength of spirits? Yes.
449. Sugar itself is pure, like gold, and low sugars, as they are termed, are simply those which contain a large amount of alloy, or dirt—just in the same way spirits contain water, and the proof of the spirits is obtained by the hydrometer; but by the hydrometer you do not obtain the merchantable value of spirits—brandy, worth 2s. a gallon, pays exactly the same duty as brandy worth 12s.—is there any reason why the same rule should not be applied to sugar? The question is, whether sugar should not pay duty according to strength instead of quality. That is putting a new feature on the case. I think there would be considerable difficulty in introducing that new system, or of collecting duty under it.
450. If it could be done would there be any objection? No, I do not see any great objection to it; but it would be something quite new.
451. By the Chairman: Is there not sometimes, in the lower class of sugars, the most saccharine matter? There may be. Really I am not sufficiently conversant with the different qualities of sugar to say.
452. By Mr. Dalgleish: Does it strike you that there is something unjust in the present mode of fixing the duty? The fact is, we have got so accustomed to the simple mode of paying £5 a ton that we would rather bear an evil, if it be one, than have a lesser duty in another way involving complication in the collection thereof.
453. Would it not be a great advantage to the community generally were the duties to be taken altogether off sugar, and would it not put the matter on a right footing? No doubt if you take off the duties you will put us all on a footing of equality.
454. Have the merchants, or people of Sydney, any reason to expect that the duties on sugar will be taken off? There has been some talk of it in the Legislature.
455. Promises have been made? I believe so.
456. That would settle this matter? Yes.
457. You think the public expect a remission of the tariff? We merchants, generally speaking, have not complained of the tariff.
458. If any revision of the tariff is expected, would it not be better to postpone the consideration of this Bill until that question is settled? Most unquestionably, if a revision of the tariff be contemplated it would be better to postpone all legislation on such questions.
459. By the Chairman: Is there not always a difficulty in classifying sugars for duty in England? Yes, I have been told so.
460. On account of the near approach to each other of the different qualities? Yes.
461. By Mr. Dalgleish: The general term bastards would include them? The term bastards would include many different kinds.
462. By the Chairman: Are you aware that a case has lately been investigated by the Board of Customs, arising from the difficulty of distinguishing the different qualities? I have heard of it.
463. By Mr. Dalgleish: The refuse or “waste” of the sugar refinery you see on the table—have you tasted it? No.
464. Have you any objection to do so? It does not look very inviting, I must confess; but if you like I will follow your example.
465. Does it contain any saccharine matter? That I cannot tell.
466. Does it taste sweet? Well, it has a sweetish taste.
467. Should you imagine that it would be of some value in distillation if it contains saccharine matter? If it contains saccharine matter, I suppose it would.

Present :—

MR. DALGLEISH, | MR. SMART.

WILLIAM BELL ALLEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

John Brown, Esq., called in and examined :—

468. By the Chairman: You are a merchant in this city? I am.
469. This is a Committee of the House, appointed to inquire into and take evidence upon the Bill to authorize the establishment of Bonded Distilleries and Bonded Sugar-houses, and has originated out of certain petitions presented last Session against this Bill—you were, I believe, one of the parties who petitioned? I was.
470. Will you be kind enough to state what your objections are to the passing of that Bill? I object principally on the grounds stated in the petition. That, as a merchant importing sugar in competition with the Sugar Company, this Bill will give them an unfair advantage over me.
471. Do you imagine, then, that this Bill will give to the Sugar Company advantages that you do not possess? Yes, very great.
472. In what way? In several ways.
473. In the way of dirt? Yes, in the way of dirt, and also in the supply of sugar to the community on terms of advantage that we do not possess.
474. Will you state explicitly what the advantages are that you refer to? The advantages are, first, that they get all their dirt duty free, and next, that they are entitled to hold their sugar under supervision duty free, until they can sell it. All the advantage they would thus derive cannot be properly understood by any one but themselves. No one but a practical man can realize all the advantages they would derive.
475. Do I understand you then to consider that the advantages are such as only to be visible to the Company? I think so. There is one point they insist upon that will give them a very great advantage; it is the allowance of duty on the refuse commensurate with the loss of weight in the manufactured article as compared with the weight of the article previous to its manufacture. This, I contend, they are not entitled to. The allowance of 10s. per ton for waste would make a very great margin in the price of such sugars as the Company make.
476. Supposing you import a ton of white Mauritius sugar, such as the sample now before the Committee, and that you pay a duty on it of £5 per ton; and that the Company import a ton of dark Mauritius sugar, such as this other sample, for which they also pay a duty of £5 a ton; then if they, by the process of manufacture, produce a ton of sugar from this inferior article that shall be equal in quality to this other sample, do you not conceive that they will pay more duty on their ton of refined sugar than you will have paid for yours, seeing that they will have to use a larger quantity of sugar in order to produce the ton, or that their ton of sugar will necessarily give a less weight when refined? They may do so, but then they import these low sugars for the express purpose of manufacture; and they get more than the duty by the process through which they put them. They import only the very lowest sugars from Manila, as these suit them best for manufacture. They must lose by these, as a natural consequence of the refining. Out of an article like this dark sugar, they produce an article like this white Mauritius, for which they get a greatly enhanced price; and they do it without loss to themselves, since the public pays them back any loss in the increased price it pays for the article.
477. But does not the very fact I have named, that they pay the same duty on their low sugars as you do upon your fine qualities, put them on an unfair and unequal footing as regards the importer? I do not see it, since, as I say, it is the public and not the Company that pays the loss.
478. You import a fine white sugar like this sample, at a duty of £5 per ton, and they pay the same duty on their low-class sugar, does this not place them at a disadvantage by making them pay, in reality, more than you for the fine sugar they produce from their manufacture? No, I think not, because I do not make the sugar, and get no profit on the manufacture as they do. The price I pay is measured by what the article will fetch in the market in proportion to its fineness. If I pay so much per ton for duty, that has of course to be added on to coarse. I pay the foreign refiner for the manufacture, and the Sugar Company manufacture themselves, and of course get the refiner's profit, which I have to pay.
479. We are not legislating for the refiner? So I should imagine.
480. But for the public? Precisely.
481. However, the duty on these two sugars now before the Committee is the same? Yes.
482. Although they are of very different qualities? Yes.
483. With regard to your petition—you say in the 1st clause that “the license sought by the Bill was often and urgently pressed on the British Parliament by the sugar refiners of England, and at one time it was granted.” Is that a fact that comes within your own knowledge? If I may be allowed, I should wish to offer some explanation of this, as I am led to believe that this statement is not perfectly correct.
484. In what way? I believe it is not positively correct, though at the time we were led to believe that it was so. If you will be kind enough to read the passage again I will explain how.
485. The passage is :—“The license sought by the Bill was often and urgently pressed on the British Parliament by the sugar refiners of England, and at one time it was granted”? It is the last statement that is wrong. The license was never granted. It was pressed upon the British Parliament, but not granted.

John Brown,
Esq.
23 July, 1862.

- John Brown, Esq.
23 July, 1862.
486. By Mr. Smart: The statement is not altogether so incorrect as you assume, since the license was granted by the British Parliament for the manufacture of sugar for exportation? Yes, I believe it was.
487. And granted for the purpose of giving an advantage to the slave-grown sugars of the West Indies? Yes, it was granted for exportation, but not for home consumption. The petition refers to the home consumption, and in so far is incorrect. This, however, was the best information within our reach at the time.
488. You further state in your petition:—"The Colonial Sugar Company, moreover, is allowed to distil rum from the waste of the refinery, a privilege that never was allowed to the English refiner, and this must further endanger the revenue to an unknown extent." This sample now on the table is given in evidence as the waste that is alluded to; do you think it possible to distil spirit from that? That may be the waste given in evidence, but I doubt very much if it would all be the same. What guarantee is there that all the waste will be such as this. I am an importer of rum, and what guarantee have I that all will be the same. If it was all like this, perhaps there would be no very great objection, but then we have no guarantee that it will be so, and as an importer of rum, I have to look to their privileges in this respect also, so that they may not be brought unfairly into competition with me.
489. The Sugar Company allege that, in consequence of their having to pay the same duty on their unmanufactured sugars as you pay for your refined sugars, they actually pay 10s. a ton on waste, which is not paid by the importer who brings sugar here ready refined;—is that correct? I know it only on the assertion of the Sugar Company, and in no other way. I have myself no means of knowing what the amount of waste per ton is.
490. You state in your petition:—"What is designated as waste in the Company's statement is the necessary result of all manufacture, and it is not a loss to the Company, as it forms part of the price of the refined sugar, and is repaid to the Company by the public." Do you still adhere to that statement? I adhere to every syllable of it.
491. That is still your opinion? It is, most certainly.
492. You state:—"That any compensation or remission of duty, such as that conferred by the Bill, must be considered as in reality a bonus which will give the Company a virtual monopoly in the two important articles of sugar and rum." Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee in what way this will act as a monopoly, and on what you justify the statement, "on the latter of which they already enjoy a protection of seven-pence per gallon over the importer"? That I think is all correct.
493. But you have not given your reasons for believing it to be correct? My reasons for saying this may be very briefly given. The Sugar Company have a very large profit, as shown by their own figures of the quantities they manufacture and the prices they get. If they have the further profit that the advantages under this Bill will give them, they will be able without any inconvenience to themselves to depress, whenever it may suit them, the price of sugar from £5 to £6 or £7 per ton, and thus cause a very heavy loss to any importer who may be unfortunate enough to have a cargo on hand.
494. But as regards monopoly, would this Bill prevent other sugar refineries from being established? It would, since none but very large capitalists would be able to enter upon the speculation. The expenses of supervision under this Bill would be so great that they would prevent any but very large companies from coming into operation.
495. And is that the only monopoly you fear from the Bill? In the first place it is. But then, if you allow the Company to export their molasses to England, and get a drawback on them, and at the same time permit them to get their refined sugar made in so cheap a way without any loss from refuse, they would have an advantage of £4 or £5 a ton over the importer of sugar, and this would be quite sufficient to enable them, in a short time, to drive the importer out of the market. An importer could not face a loss per ton which the Company, through these advantages, would be able to make without feeling it much.
496. These, however, are circumstances that the Legislature could not interfere with? They are circumstances that are of very great importance for the community to consider.
497. But the Legislature ought not to interfere between the manufacturer and the importer, to restrict the legitimate operation of trade? No, certainly not, and therefore we wish things to be allowed to remain as they are. We are perfectly content to submit to legitimate competition, if we only have perfect free trade.
498. You speak of a protection of 7d. per gallon on rum, which you say the Company enjoys over the importer? I regard it as a protection to that extent.*
499. Is it not rather to compensate for the duty already paid upon the sugar out of which the rum is made? That is what they state, but they do not show how they lose to this extent.
500. They pay that amount of duty on the sugar they use? Yes, but they are repaid that in the manufactured article.
501. Are you aware that the Company in the duty they pay upon sugar, from which the Colonial rum is made, when it enters into their establishment, pay an amount equal to 7d. per gallon? Yes, but you are now asked to abate that.
502. But when it is sent for export they only get a drawback of 6s. 5d. per gallon? I do not exactly see the tendency of the question.
503. When the Company export rum, they only get a drawback of 6s. 5d. per gallon, whilst if the importer ships in bond he pays nothing, although the Colonial manufacturer will actually ADDED (on revision):—I regard it as a protection, because it is allowed to be made out of a refuse for which he is already paid by the public in the price of the refined sugar, and the Company enjoys a further and very large protection over the West India producer, to the amount of freight to and from London and agency charges. Refiners may, I believe, distil rum in London from duty-paid sugar; but in London I don't suppose any man ever asked such a privilege.

actually have paid 7d. per gallon. To that amount, therefore, the Colonial distiller will be a loser? I am speaking only of the home market. In alluding to this matter, I referred, not to the export but the home trade.

John Brown,
Esq.

23 July, 1862.

504. When the Company are selling their rums for home consumption, what duty do they pay? 6s. 5d. a gallon.
505. The odd 7d. between this price and the 7s., which the importer pays, being for duty paid on the sugar out of which the rum is made? Exactly.
506. So that they shall not be asked to pay duty twice, on the rum as well as on the sugar from which it is made? Yes.
507. In all, they pay 7s. a gallon? They do.
508. The Colonial distiller then, in fact, has not an allowance made him of 7d. a gallon? No; he merely gets a return of the duties he has paid upon the sugar from which the rum is made.
509. By Mr. Dalgleish: You have stated that you are one of the petitioners against the proposed Bill for granting certain privileges to the Sugar Company? I have.
510. And your main objection to the Bill is, that it confers benefits on that Company that are not shared in by the community? I think so; most clearly.
511. Can you in any way make your views clear to the Committee on this matter? They are contained in the petition.
512. What I mean is, that you will give your reasons for coming to those conclusions? My reasons will merely be an amplification of what is stated in the petition. All the principles on which I object to the Bill are contained in the petition; the rest is a mere matter of opinion. The conclusions contained in the petition have been arrived at from a long experience of the sugar market, as well as of the operations of this Company.
513. Then if this Bill be passed, the effect of its working will be to drive importers out of the sugar market? I have no hesitation in saying that it will. It has had that effect, partially, already; as far as I am myself individually concerned, I have countermanded orders I have given for sugar, whilst this Bill is pending.
514. It will thus give a virtual monopoly of the sugar market to this Company? It will give them an actual monopoly within twelve months of its passing.
515. It would, within that time, place the sugar market entirely in the hands of this one Company? That is my opinion.
516. If such a monopoly were to occur in the usual course of trade, I presume you would raise no objection to it; that is, supposing all parties to be on a fair and equal footing, and that you were driven out of the market by competition? No, certainly not. All that we ask is, that we may be left to the ordinary operations of trade.
517. Your objection is, that any such effect should be produced by legislation? Undoubtedly.
518. Such an effect you believe will be produced by this Bill? Yes.
519. Can the object at which this Bill is supposed to aim be obtained in any other and more legitimate manner than by this Bill? Yes; it might be obtained by a total remission of the sugar duty. That seems to me to be the simplest way.
520. Have the mercantile community had any reason given them to expect a remission of this duty? Not that I know of; I have heard that the matter was under discussion at one time, with a view to the remission of the tea and sugar duties.
521. And was not a remission of those duties promised by the gentleman at the head of the Treasury Department? It is not long since I returned to the Colony; but I believe that before I came here such a promise was made; I have so heard it stated.
522. Then if the sugar duty were remitted, there would be no ground for the complaints the Sugar Company now make? No; all ground of complaint would be removed.
523. All the importing merchants and the Colonial manufacturers would be placed upon perfect grounds of equality? Certainly.
524. If it were possible to place a discriminating duty on sugar—not levied on the colour of the sugar, as in England, but upon the class to which the sugar belonged—as for instance, the first class to consist of loaf or highly refined sugars, which should pay a high class duty; then the second class to consist of that quality of sugar known in the trade as bastards, to pay a second class duty; and the third class to consist of raw sugars, and to pay a third class rate of duty—if the duty on these three classes were fixed in a discriminating ratio, so as to pay duty in proportion to fineness—would that in your opinion effect the object at which this Bill aims? I think not; the shades of colour in sugar are so infinite, that it would be altogether impossible to fix a standard; sugars vary so very much in quality, fineness, and colour, and one merges into the other so closely and imperceptibly, that you would never be able to set up a standard by which to fix your duty.
525. You misunderstand me; I do not propose to attempt to raise the duty upon colour, but upon the class to which the sugar belongs; for instance, there is the class of loaf, or pure white sugar—I presume no one can mistake that; then there is the class known in the trade as bastards—that would be clearly recognizable from the third class, the coarse raw sugars imported for manufacturing purposes; no one could mistake between the bastards and the sugars known in the trade as raw sugars. There would thus be three classes, easily recognizable; and if a discriminating duty between these three were imposed, so as to place the highest duty on the highly manufactured article, and the lowest duty on that which was unmanufactured altogether, would not that be a more equitable mode of obtaining a revenue than the system now in force? It would be more equitable if it could be made practicable, but I do not think that in practice such a system could be worked; for though these three classes may be distinct in themselves, in so far as the trade is concerned, yet there are so many shades, merging one class into the other, that I think the thing would be impossible to work.

- John Brown, Esq.
23 July, 1862.
526. Would you call this dark Bourbon sugar, now before the Committee, a bastard sugar? No, certainly not.
527. Is this white Mauritius sugar that I hand you a bastard sugar? I should think not, but I do not know positively, because I am not a practical judge of sugar. It requires a practical refiner to give an opinion on the point.
528. However, the loaf sugar would give a clearly defined line? Yes.
529. And in the trade bastards would easily be known from raw sugars? By the trade, probably.
530. If, then, a discriminating duty were levied between the three, the object of the Company would be gained? I do not see how it could be worked, with so many intermediate shades of colour.
531. I do not care about the colour, I only regard the class or quality. At all events, would not such a system be much more equitable than the present one of raising only two duties, the high and the low? I think it would, if it could be carried out.
532. If any measure could be obtained, or was now in existence, that would give a measure of the exact quantity of sugar contained in any sample, without any reference to the dirt, moisture, or other foreign matter mingled with it—if the exact value of the sugar could be measured in this way, and the duty assessed on that measurement in the same way as the duty on spirit is assessed by its strength as proved by the hydrometer—would that be objectionable? It could not be objectionable in system.
533. If such a measure exists, that will be the true test of the actual value of the sugar? No doubt.
534. Do you know of any such test for ascertaining the precise quantity of saccharine matter contained in sugar? I believe the saccharometer is the test you allude to.
535. Precisely; so that by the saccharometer the precise quantity of sugar held in solution can be ascertained, and thus the exact sugar value of a sample of sugar may be shown, independently of the dirt, moisture, or other matter mixed with it: this being shown, and the duty levied, not on the bulk of the article, but on its exact sugar value, would not the Sugar Company be relieved of the evils of which they complain, the merchants be placed on a fair footing with the Company, and the public generally be advantaged? There could be no objection to it, I think.
536. If this Bill were passed into law as it now stands, is it your opinion, in so far as you have any knowledge on the subject, that it would operate injuriously on the small sugar refiner, if any such exist? I have no doubt of it; they could not exist under the Bill. No small sugar refiners could carry on under the heavy expenses this Bill would entail; they could not do it.
537. So that this Bill, instead of developing trade, would tend to cripple it, by confining its operations, in so far as sugar is concerned, to this one large Company? Quite true.
538. Thus the tendency of this Bill is to cramp and confine the trade in sugar to this one Company? Yes, and will confirm the large power they have already acquired; and will increase their monopoly of all sugars, manufactured as well as raw.
539. Were this Company to change their location or seat of manufacture—say to establish themselves in Queensland; if they were to commence the manufacture of sugar there, and obtained the same privileges from the Queensland Parliament that they are now asking for from this Parliament, viz., that of refining in bond—could they then export sugar to this Colony at a cheaper rate than the manufacturer here could produce it under the now existing system? I think not; they could not place their sugars here cheaper than the manufacturer could produce similar sugars, because the freight and charges they would have to pay would amount to more than the advantage they would derive under such a Bill as this.
540. You have stated in the terms of the petition, that in your opinion the Company have no right to any remission of duty on the ground of waste, as such waste is incident to all manufactures? Yes.
541. Do you still adhere to that opinion? I do.
542. You know of no manufacture in which there is not waste of some kind or the other? Manufacture means the improvement of a raw article; and in the process of improvement there must necessarily be a residuum, which is the waste.
543. The petition says:—"It is not a loss to the Company, as it forms part of the price of the refined sugar, and is repaid to the Company by the public." As a matter of fact, if the Company did not purchase these raw and dirty sugars, there would be no need of manufacture; so that they complain of a matter incidental to their manufacture, and without which there would be no need of their manufactory? Exactly.
544. They purchase these sugars at a very low rate in consideration of the dirt that is contained in them? Yes, on an average, about 30 per cent. lower than the ordinary price of sugar.
545. And their profit lies in cleaning this sugar and offering a pure article in the market? Yes.
546. If they imported a clean, marketable article, there would be no need of their manufacture? There would not; and I may add, that if this claim for a return of duty on account of waste is admitted on the part of the Sugar Company, I myself, as an importer, can make a similar claim. I pay duty on the wine I import, and there is not any in which there is not at least five per cent. of lees and dirt; now I ship and pay duty on the lees and dirt as well as on the wine. In beer it is the same thing, only to a larger extent; there is not a hogshead of beer shipped in which there is not a much larger loss by waste than that complained of by the Company; the hops and the dirt amount to very much more; and if this claim is allowed to the Sugar Company, in common justice it should be allowed to all importers who pay duty.
- 547.

547. If you import rum, wine, or any other spirit on which duty is payable, and take it out of bond, would you be allowed any drawback or remission of duty if you wished to export it? No.*
548. So that the Company having imported sugar, and paid duty upon it, would have another advantage that no other importer enjoys, in getting a drawback on their treacle? Of course they would.
549. They have already an advantage, in being allowed to get a drawback on the exportation of the rum they manufacture? Yes.
550. It is considered to be in bond when it is manufactured? Exactly.
551. And by giving them the other privilege also, they would be allowed an advantage that no other country gives to its manufacturers? There is certainly nothing similar to, or in any way corresponding with, it in our trade.
552. This then would form another objection to the Bill, beyond those mentioned in the petition? Yes, and a very great one too.
553. If it were found to be necessary, as a matter of policy, to allow the Company a remission of duty on the treacle they may export, would there, in your opinion, be any difficulty in testing the sugar value of the treacle by means of the saccharometer, so as to avoid the suspicion of fraud by mixing water with it? I think there would not.
554. The precise quantity of sugar contained in the treacle could be ascertained by the saccharometer? Yes, I think so.
555. I believe it is well known what amount of sugar treacle ought to contain? Yes, I believe it is.
556. Something like 33 or 34 per cent.? Yes, somewhere about that.
557. There being that amount of destroyed sugar that cannot be grained, contained in the treacle? Yes.
558. One part of the complaint of the Sugar Company is that they cannot dispose of their treacle—that there is no market in this Colony for the quantity they produce; so that as a matter of policy it might be necessary to grant them relief to this extent. If this were done there would be no fear of adulteration by water, since this would be immediately detected by the saccharometer? I will not say positively, for I have never seen the saccharometer worked.
559. It is precisely on the same principle as the hydrometer, only graduated differently? I am aware that the instrument is used, but whether it is sufficiently correct to ascertain the precise quantity of sugar in such a weak solution as treacle I am not practical enough to say.
560. By Mr. Smart: In the event of this Bill becoming law, what loss would the revenue be likely to suffer during the present year—during the first year of the operation of the law? It is just a matter of calculation.
561. Have you ascertained the amount of waste upon which duty would have to be refunded, and the quantity of treacle likely to be exported, on which drawback would have to be allowed? I have no means of ascertaining, except from the Company's own figures; the Secretary of the Company talks of their employing 10,000 tons of shipping during the year. Then if, as he says, there is a loss of 20 per cent. by means of the sugar that is converted into molasses, that would give, in round numbers, 2,000 tons of molasses, which, with a drawback of £5 per ton, would entail a loss upon the revenue of £10,000 a year on the export of treacle alone. Then if the waste is added, at the rate of 10 per cent. on the whole quantity imported, which I believe is assumed to be the proportion, there will be an additional £5,000; thus making a total loss to the revenue of £14,000 or £15,000 a year.
562. And that would only be during the first year? Yes.
563. Do you think that the revenue would be likely to be affected to a greater extent every year? Yes, of course. As the merchants are driven out of the trade the operations of the Company will extend, until you will at last have to refund to the Company an amount proportionate to the whole quantity of sugar consumed in the Colony, whatever that may be.
564. This loss, which the Company say they suffer by means of waste, does it in reality fall upon the Company or upon the public? On the public certainly, and not on the Company at all.
565. Are the public likely to gain anything, or to receive any advantage, from the passing of this Bill? Nothing to gain, but, on the contrary, everything to lose by it, in the price of sugar when the market is entirely in the hands of the Company.
566. Then, in your opinion, whilst the public cannot be benefited by the Bill, the revenue is likely to be very materially affected? I think so.
567. To the extent of £15,000 in the first year, and to a larger extent in subsequent years? Yes.
568. By the Chairman: Do you know, as a matter of fact, whether in England spirits are allowed to be distilled in bond? Whether they have permission to do so or not I cannot say, but I have never heard of such a thing at Home as a sugar refinery with a distillery attached to it.
569. By Mr. Smart: You cannot say positively whether such an advantage as this has been granted to the sugar refiners in England? I know that I have never heard of such a thing, but I cannot say whether the law at Home prohibits it or not; at all events it is not allowed in bond, which this Bill would allow.
570. By the Chairman: Are you aware of the amount of duty proposed to be levied on the rum distilled by the Company? It is the same as now exists; the Bill proposes no alteration of duty.

571.

* NOTE (on revision):—This is wrong; I may export duty-paid wine, spirits, or sugar, and get the drawback, but it must be in the same condition and packages in which it was imported. I am not allowed to change its nature or condition in any way.

- John Brown, Esq. 571. Then under this Bill it is proposed to charge the Colonial distiller and the importer the same duty for spirit taken into home consumption? No, that would be an alteration from the present law; at present the Colonial distiller pays 7d. less than the importer.
- 23 July, 1862. 572. However, the Government charge the same duty on refined* sugar that is used for home consumption as they do on raw sugar? Yes.
573. And you say that if this Bill is passed giving the Company what they ask for, that the revenue will fall off greatly? Yes, taking the figures of the Company; it is a very simple calculation, shown on the face of the Company's own statement, that the loss will be what I have stated—£14,000 or £15,000; always supposing that their figures are correct.
574. But the Company say that they are unjustly charged duty upon a large proportion of waste, from which they get no return? They do.
575. Are you aware whether a similar privilege to that they now ask has been granted to a sugar refining Company in any other Colony? Yes, I believe it has been granted to a Company in Melbourne.
576. Have the merchants there ever complained that such privileges have operated injuriously to them? The Bill was passed there without being inquired into. It never seemed to strike the importers that it would act prejudicially to them, and it was passed without any attention being drawn to it.
577. That law has been in force now some time? Yes, I believe it has; it was passed before I returned to the Colony here.
578. Have you ever heard of merchants being driven out of the sugar market in consequence of the operation of this law? I have heard of men in the trade being nearly ruined by it, from the power it put in the hands of the Company.†
579. By Mr. Smart: In the event of an alteration in the tariff, do you see any objection to imposing a higher duty on manufactured than on raw sugar? I see a difficulty in the way of collecting it.
580. A differential duty would, in your opinion, be difficult of collection? It would.
581. Even if it were only fixed in this way, to have the highest duty on the loaf or highly refined sugar, the lowest upon the raw sugar, and the medium duty upon the sugar intermediate between these two? As far as the loaf sugar is concerned, I do not consider it of much consequence whether a higher duty is imposed or not. The quantity imported is so trifling that, for the sake of simplicity, the duty would be as well abolished altogether. It will be seen by the imports that the quantity of loaf sugar imported into the Colony is very small indeed.
582. The Sugar Company complain that they are not placed on the same footing as the importer, since they have to pay the same duty on the raw sugar they import as the importer does upon his refined sugar, and it is on that account I ask you whether you see any objection to imposing a higher duty upon refined than upon raw sugar? There is a higher duty now imposed upon loaf sugar imported.
583. That is not the point. I ask if you would see any objection to make a difference between the duty paid on the intermediate class of sugar, between loaf and raw, that known generally as bastards, and that paid on the inferior or low class sugar? I have no doubt that the thing is fair enough in principle, but in practice it would never work well. You could never raise differential duties on sugar unless you applied the saccharometer to test their value. I am sure you would never do it by colour, nor yet by the mere description of "bastards." There is a very great range of quality in what is generally known in the trade as bastards, and the duty would fall very unequally if such a plan were adopted.
584. By Mr. Dalgleish: With regard to the 8th clause of the Bill, it is to be assumed that the Company would be willing to pay higher duties upon spirits, sugar, or molasses, after they had passed through the process of manufacture, and when taken into home consumption, provided that a higher duty was charged upon similar articles imported. The clause says:—"All spirits distilled from sugar or molasses or treacle in any such approved distillery and all sugar molasses or treacle obtained from the process of refining in any such approved sugar-house and warehoused as aforesaid shall be subject to the same regulations while in the warehouse or being exported therefrom or entered for home consumption and shall be liable to the same duties as if such spirits sugar and molasses had been imported into the Colony"; but, in point of fact, the raw sugar they import paying 5s. per cwt. duty, and the imported sugar of a like quality to the manufactured sugar they produce being only charged the same duty of 5s. per cwt., any increase of duty upon the superior article must, in so far as the Company is concerned, result in a dead loss to the revenue? No doubt.‡
585. Because of the decreased value of the duty on the treacle which will be exported—on the treacle duty? Exactly.§
586. And the increased amount of drawback the Company will be allowed to claim? Yes.
587. If they work their sugars in bond the duty will not interfere with them? There will be no question of duty then.
588. Will the treacle they take into consumption pay the 5s. duty? No; the treacle will pay

* NOTE (on revision):—Refined sugar means here not loaf or crushed loaf sugar, but such bastard sugars as the Company makes, viz.:—No. 1 pieces, Snowdrops, &c.

† NOTE (on revision):—Not my answer. I said that the sugar trade had been so bad in Melbourne that many had been half ruined by it. Over-importing very likely caused that, in addition to the Company's privileges. Not residing there I cannot measure the Company's power, but here I can.

‡ ADDED (on revision):—Imported loaf and Cossipore pay 6s. 8d. per cwt., whereas the Company pay only the original duty of 5s. on the raw sugar, although the value is doubled or trebled by the manufacture.

§ ADDED (on revision):—In a system of drawbacks the revenue would lose 3s. 4d. per cwt., but under this Bill the loss will be 5s. per cwt., as before stated.

pay a lower rate of duty if brought into consumption. If it did not there would be no very material loss to the revenue.

589. How much treacle is produced from a ton of sugar? About one-fifth of the entire weight, as shown by the figures given by the Company.

590. What would be the effect upon other manufacturers, supposing this privilege to be given to the Sugar Company—take Messrs. Tooth, for instance—what would be the effect upon them—would this Bill place them at a disadvantage as regarded the Sugar Company? It would.

591. The Messrs. Tooth pay the full duty upon the low sugars they use in the manufacture of their beer? They do.

592. If it is an act of justice to this Company that they should have this Bill, would it not be equally an act of justice to Mr. Tooth that he should be included in it? Most certainly.

593. He has waste in his manufacture, in the same way that the Company have in theirs? He has; and it is the same with all persons engaged in manufactures in which these low sugars are employed.

594. Then it would be an act of gross injustice to other manufacturers at present existing, and who use these raw sugars, if this advantage were given to the Sugar Company and not to them? Certainly it would.

595. By the Chairman: Have you any further suggestion to offer? No, nothing beyond what is contained in petition, excepting the point just taken by Mr. Dalgleish, which did not strike me before, as to the injustice this Bill would inflict upon Mr. Tooth and other manufacturers using raw sugar. I see no advantage to the community at large to be gained by this Bill; and it is the community who ought to be considered, since they are the consumers. The refiner brings in these coarse sugars, Pampanga and other low-class Manila sugars, because they suit his purpose for refining; they go into consumption as refined sugars, the additional price paying the refiner his profit. All these advantages would go into the pocket of the Company, and not of the consumers, who would get no benefit by the Bill. It would not cheapen the price of sugar to the man who could afford to pay the refined price, but it would pay the Company a very good profit.*

John Brown, Esq.

23 July, 1862.

Henry Moore, Esq., called in and examined:—

596. By the Chairman: You are a merchant residing in this city? I am.

597. And are engaged in the importation of sugar? Yes, occasionally.

598. This is a Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon a Bill to authorize the establishment of Bonded Distilleries and Bonded Sugar-houses, against which a petition was presented during the last Session of Parliament:—you were, I believe, one of the petitioners against the Bill? I was.

599. And you petitioned because you imagined that this Bill would interfere materially with your legitimate business as a merchant and an importer of sugar? Yes; I think it would operate against the profitable importation of sugar by the merchant.

600. You are aware that the 1st clause of the petition is:—“The license sought by the Bill was often and urgently pressed on the British Parliament by the sugar refiners in England, and at one time it was granted; but it was found so inconsistent with the safety of the revenue that it was soon withdrawn, and the refiner is now allowed to work in bond for exportation only.” Are you of the same opinion now as when you signed the petition containing this clause? No. I believe the statement there made, with regard to the privilege having been granted to the sugar refiners in England, is erroneously made.

601. The second part of the clause states:—“The Colonial Sugar Company, moreover, is allowed to distil rum from the waste of the refinery—a privilege that never was allowed to the English refiner—and this must further endanger the revenue to an unknown extent.” Do you know anything of this particular part of the matter, so as to give the Committee any information respecting it? No, I do not. My consideration has been given to the question solely with regard to the effect upon sugars, and not as to how it would affect rum.

602. The 3rd clause of the petition states:—“What is designated as waste in the Company’s statement is the necessary result of all manufacture, and it is not a loss to the Company, as it forms part of the price of the refined sugar, and is repaid to the Company by the public.” Are you of the same opinion now as when you signed this statement? Yes, I still adhere to that opinion.

603. You see the two samples of sugar on the table? I do.

604. The one is a white Mauritius and the other a dark Bourbon—is there any difference of duty charged by the Customs on the importation of these two sugars? No, I believe not.

605. They both pay the same duty? Yes.

606. Have you any idea of what the difference in value between the two may be? The white Mauritius has certainly a much higher value in the market than the other.

607. Would it fetch double the price of the other? Not double; but it would fetch considerably more than the other.

608. It has been stated that, in March last, the white Mauritius sold at £52 per ton? I dare say it may have done so.

609.

Henry Moore,
Esq.

23 July, 1862.

* Revised:—And which already pay the Company a very large profit, while the poor man who uses the dirty raw sugar would reap no benefit whatever from the Bill.

Henry Moore, Esq. 609. The value of the other at the same time is stated to have been £17 15s. per ton, that being the price at which it was sold? I should not have thought that it would have sold at so low a price, or that there was so great a difference of value between the two.

23 July, 1862 610. And yet, that being the difference in value, the two sugars pay the same rate of duty on importation? They do.

611. One being valued at £52 per ton, and the other at £18? Yes.

612. What do you consider to be the relative value of the two sugars? I do not consider the brown sugar to be worth so much as half the value of the white; probably worth something short of half the value of the other.

613. How with regard to the 3rd clause of the petition;—If you import a ton of this fine sugar, you pay on it a duty of £5 only; then if the Company imports sufficient of this other sugar, for the purpose of refining, to make from it a ton of sugar equal to that you have imported, it follows that the Company must import a larger quantity than a ton in order to turn out a ton of refined sugar; then if they have to pay the same duty on their unrefined as you pay on your refined sugar, they must pay more duty than you on their refined sugar, by reason of the larger amount they consume in the process? No doubt, in that way, they would be paying more duty than the importer.

614. In the fourth paragraph of the petition it is stated:—“The Company being distillers, can in reality have no waste, as all the refuse of a sugar refinery contains saccharine matter and may be converted into spirit.” This sample before us is in evidence as the refuse of the sugar refinery. Do you think there is any saccharine matter in that? I should say not; but I am not sufficiently well acquainted with the working of a sugar refinery or a distillery to say whether it could be made available or not.

615. Let me now direct your attention to the 5th clause of the petition. It is there stated:—“That any compensation or remission of duty, such as that conferred by the Bill, must be considered as in reality a bonus which will give the Company a virtual monopoly in the two important articles of sugar and rum”;—will you explain to the Committee how, under this Bill, such a bonus will arise? The bonus will arise, in my opinion, in regard to the sugar. The Bill will give the Company a much greater advantage, by allowing them to import these raw sugars of a very low quality, and which they obtain at a very low price, and which no one else will import, as they are not saleable. Upon these they already have a large margin of profit, as shown by the statement of their Secretary; but when the advantages given by the Bill are added, no importer will ever be able to compete with them, and the Company will soon clear the market, unless other refineries are established.

616. But I do not understand how you use the word “monopoly” in connection with this matter;—how do you consider that a monopoly is given to the Company? Perhaps monopoly is too strong a term; because nothing can strictly be a monopoly in which others are at liberty to engage.

617. This Bill does not attempt in any way to prevent any one from engaging in sugar refining that may choose to do so? Not that I see.

618. Does not the Bill, on the contrary, charge the same rate of duty on the same article to all parties, whether refiners or importers? In this respect it gives no advantage to the refiner.

619. But the 8th clause says clearly enough that all spirits distilled, all sugar, molasses, and treacle shall, on being exported or entered for home consumption, be liable to the same duties as if they had been imported into the Colony;—so that the articles produced by the refineries would pay the same duties as were chargeable upon the merchants for similar articles imported by them? The clause professes to do so.

620. And do you consider that, under the 8th clause of the Bill, the Sugar Company will have an advantage that the merchants have not, seeing that the duty will be the same to both parties if the articles are sent into consumption? It does not appear that they would, by the wording of the clause; but then that does not say what the practical working of the Bill will be, or the advantage they will actually gain in practice.

621. However, the clause professes to charge the same to both parties? It does.

622. To the manufacturer as well as to the importer? Yes, it professes to do so.

623. By Mr. Dalgleish: You are acquainted with the provisions of the Bill that this Committee has been appointed to consider and report upon? Yes, I am.

624. If this Bill passes into law, will it give to the present Sugar Company, or to any other similar Company that may commence operations, advantages that will not be shared in by the general public? I think so.

625. If the Bill be passed into law, unless its provisions are extended to meet the case of beer, syrup, and blacking manufacturers, and in fact of all persons engaged in operations in which low sugars form the basis of manufacture,—unless the Bill takes in all these persons will they not be damaged by it; or rather, will not the Sugar Company be placed in a position superior to theirs? Yes, I think so; most certainly.

626. Is that one of your objections to this Bill? It was not one in the first instance. It is only since I have been in this room, and heard the examination of the previous witness, that this has struck me as an objection to the Bill.

627. You see now, however, that this is an objection? Yes; the case of Mr. Tooth that has been mentioned has suggested to me that the operations of the Bill must be extended, or else it would work injustice to that gentleman.

628. On him for one, but also on many other persons? Yes, upon all those who use low sugars for manufacturing purposes.

629. Any refiner, on however small a scale, if he is compelled to pay the full amount of duty on the sugar he uses for refining, will be placed at a disadvantage in respect to the larger Company to the extent of the remission of duty that is made to them? He would.

630. I think you said that you had no knowledge of the process of sugar refining? I have Henry Moore, Esq.

631. You cannot say then, of your own knowledge, whether the profits of a small refinery are sufficient to enable its owner to support the staff of officers necessary for getting the sugar worked in bond? I cannot say of myself; but I have heard it expressed that the expenses of supervision would be so great, that it would be altogether impossible for the small refiner to compete with the larger one. 23 July, 1862.

632. Would that, in your opinion, be a disadvantage? Yes, I think so.

633. The general public, or in other words, the poorer classes of the people, who consume the low class sugars in their unrefined state, would obtain no advantage under this Bill, but on the contrary, would rather be placed at a disadvantage? I think so.

634. In what way would this disadvantage be made apparent? By the partial cessation of imports that would occur on the passing of this Bill.

635. Thus the law would be made to step in for the purpose of creating a monopoly for this Company? Yes; that is the general impression. From my knowledge of the sentiments of many importers of sugar in this city, I know that action has been taken by them to check the importation of sugar whilst this Bill is before the Committee. I can say also that I have myself taken action that will have that effect.

636. If the Sugar Company are allowed to import these raw sugars, or very inferior sugars, upon which they now have to pay a duty of £5 per ton, and instead of paying this duty are allowed to work it in bond, by which means they will obtain a reduction of 10 per cent. for loss by dirt, of 20 per cent. in the treacle they make, making together 30 per cent., besides the loss incidental to manufacture of say 5 per cent., would not the revenue suffer to a very great extent? Yes, very greatly.

637. Is there any reason why the present arbitrary duties should be continued, or do you know upon what foundation they have been fixed? I am not aware of the principle on which they have been based, but they have always appeared to me to be most arbitrary and inconsistent.

638. Can you conceive no reason why they should have been fixed as they now stand? None whatever. I have seen a great deal of sugar in the course of my business—for I warehouse extensively as well as import—and I have seen sugars imported here that could hardly be distinguished from the higher classes of refined sugar; yet these still paid the same duty as the lowest class of sugar. In this way the system operates most unequally.

639. Do you recognize this sample of sugar before the Committee? Yes. I should call it a sample of white Mauritius crystals.

640. And this inferior sample, which is said to be a brown Bourbon sugar? Yes.

641. Do you recognize the one as a raw and the other as a manufactured sugar? My own common sense would tell me, with regard to the white Mauritius, that the manufacturing process had brought it to its present superior state. With regard to the other, I am not practical enough to say whether it has undergone manufacture or not. There is one thing certain, which is, that one sample has undergone more manufacture than the other.

642. You are not conversant with the trade names of sugars? I am not.

643. If there were any mode of measuring the exact value of sugar by means of an instrument, so that the duty could be fixed in proportion to its fineness—for instance, these low sugars contain, we will say, 14 per cent. of dirt, 5 per cent. of water, and the remainder is sugar in some state or other; the refined sugar is much drier and much cleaner, and of course contains a larger remainder of sugar than the other—now if a pound of each of these be melted separately in a fixed quantity of water, and the density of the water can be ascertained, so that the precise quantity of sugar held in solution can be measured by an instrument, so that the duty shall be fixed on that measurement—would that, in your opinion, be a more equitable mode of fixing the duty than the present plan? I consider that it would be more equitable; but as to its practicability I cannot speak, as I have never seen the saccharometer used.

644. Would it not at once relieve the refiners from the complaint they now make with regard to the dirt? It appears to me that it would.

645. As an importer of sugar, have you had any reason to suppose that the duties at present collected on sugar would be remitted? I have understood so, when the question has been raised from time to time. I understood, some time back, that the tea and sugar duties were to be gradually remitted until they were extinguished. Lately, however, the matter seems to have been allowed to drop. Some time back I really thought we were going to have a reduction and gradual extinction of the duty, and I acted upon that idea in my correspondence.

646. You are an old colonist, I believe? I am.

647. From your knowledge of the habits of the people of this Colony, can you say whether tea and sugar are to be regarded here as a luxury or as a necessary? As a necessary, certainly.

648. Then there is a fair claim on the Government that this necessary should be as easily come at as possible by the public? I think so.

649. You have had reason, from what has been said by the gentleman at the head of the Treasury, to suppose that this duty would be foregone? I thought so for a time. The Government proposed that it should be gradually relaxed, until it was completely extinguished.

650. That was the statement made by the Treasurer? Yes; some time since I saw that he had made a promise to that effect.

651. This duty on sugar is more felt by the humbler classes than the duty on tea? I should imagine so.

- Henry Moore, Esq.
23 July, 1862.
652. By Mr. Smart: Do you think that either of them is felt at all by the community? I do not think they are felt oppressively.
653. By Mr. Dalgleish: The duty on sugar amounts to about three-farthings a pound? Not so much as that. About a half-penny; a trifle over a half-penny.
654. Then a half-penny a pound would not, in your opinion, be a matter that would be felt in the consumption of sugar by a poor family? Not oppressively.
655. But taking off the duty altogether would do away with this necessity for manufacturing in bond, and place all parties—manufacturers and importers—on an equal footing? Yes, certainly.
656. It would be desirable on that account to remit the duty? I may be permitted to say that my attention has not been particularly directed to this point. I did not come prepared to give an opinion upon the advisability of doing away with the duty on sugar altogether; and I have not considered the subject in that point of view.
657. But if we remove the duty we remove the disability under which the Sugar Company say they labour, and place all parties on the same level? No doubt.
658. We should thereby encourage trade, and at the same time further develop the manufacturing resources of the Colony, by promoting the refining of sugar on a larger scale? Yes, I think you would.
659. Referring to the petition presented last Session against the Bill, you have stated that, in your opinion, the first statement as to the permission to refine in bond in England was a mistake;—in saying that, do you not mean to say that it was a mistake only in so far as refining in bond for home consumption was concerned? I do.
660. Are you aware that sugar refining was carried on in England, in bond, for exportation? Yes, I am.
661. And that it was found so objectionable, even for exportation, that it was discontinued? Yes, I believe so.
662. Extensive frauds were perpetrated on the revenue, and their discovery led to the privilege being annulled? I am not aware whether any frauds were perpetrated, but I know that it was considered objectionable, and that it was discontinued.
663. You have not heard of any frauds? No, I have not.
664. If it has been found objectionable to allow sugar to be worked in bond in England, is there any reason why the same objections should not exist here? No; on the contrary, the objections would be the same, only in a larger degree.
665. Would it be possible for the Company to exist, if they were not to import these low sugars containing the waste of which they complain? No. Their profit depends upon their taking these low sugars into manufacture. They import the coarse dark sugars from the provinces of Manila and other parts, such as Taal, Panpanga, and such like. These they get at a very low price, and make a large profit on refining them.
666. Are you aware that sugar is like gold—that there is no difference in its purity, whatever may be the source whence it is derived; gold may exist in combination with many impurities, but relieved of these it is always the same wherever it may have been found; and so with sugar—it may be mingled with many impurities, but taken away from these pure sugar is always the same; therefore, any Company importing sugars for the sake of refining them, knowing that they contain dirt and impurities, must expect the profit of refining to cover the loss by dirt? Yes, I should think so.
667. This loss by waste is a loss incidental to all manufactures? Yes, and the public always pay for it in the price they pay for the article manufactured.
668. Just in the same way that a tailor charges a higher price for the coat he makes, by reason of the waste of cloth in cutting it out? Yes.
669. By the Chairman: Have the Company made any demand for compensation for the loss of dirt, or is it only for the duty paid on that dirt? They claim for the duty on the dirt.
670. By Mr. Dalgleish: You say that you are inclined to give up the fifth clause of the petition, which states that the remission of duty to the Company is in reality a bonus, which will give the Company a virtual monopoly of the sugar and rum market? No, I do not say that; all that I say is, that I consider the word “monopoly” as being rather too strong to use. It will not in point of fact be a monopoly, because I fancy that, under the Bill, it will be open to others to establish sugar refineries if they fancy to do so. If it will, that will do away with the necessity for using the word.
671. But until others were established it would in fact be a monopoly? I look upon it as such to a certain extent; but then “monopoly” is a strong word to use. I would rather say that it was an exclusive advantage. It would be an exclusive advantage until other refineries could come into operation of equal strength and force. A weaker Company would not be able to compete in any way with the present Company; it will require a Company of men strong in capital and substance, to prevent the present Company from availing themselves of the advantages they will have in the trade, and which will operate injuriously to the community at large.
672. Were they able to beat the importers out of the market fairly, by competition in the trade, you would not regard that as a monopoly? No, certainly not.
673. You only object to their having any advantage that may give to their operations the appearance of a monopoly? Yes.
674. And then you object that such an advantage should be brought about by legislation? Precisely.
675. You have no objection to their having a monopoly, brought about by the natural course of trade? No, certainly not; I believe, however, that the thing will soon cure itself. If they have any very great advantages, others will be sure to come in to have a share of them. This agitation alone will be beneficial, for the information that has filtered through this this inquiry will bring about a state of things that will be good for the country, without any legislation being required. I am aware of projects being on foot for carrying out sugar refineries in competition with the present one. For myself I object to any monopoly; if it exists, all we shall have to do will be to set to work to meet it. Rather than lay by and complain we must try to do the same thing, and so meet the Company with their own weapons. As it is stated in the petition, however, I object to it; I consider the effect this Bill will have upon myself and other importers, as well as upon the revenue. Whether the Company require legislation to relieve them in the manner they seek, or whether this relief may not be brought about in some other and less objectionable way, is what the Committee have to determine; they judge between us and the Company. The Company look at the matter solely as it affects their own interests; and of course it is quite open to us to regard it in the same way.

Henry Moore,
Esq.

23 July, 1862.

676. Under this Bill, would the revenue derive any advantage from the sugar refined by the Company? I should think not; on the contrary, it would lose considerably.

677. The sugar the Company turned out would come to the same duty as that they took in? Yes, I believe so.

678. So that the loss would arise from the treacle exported, on which drawback would be paid, whilst the loss of duty on dirt would also be a loss to the revenue? Yes, clearly.

679. But for this refining, the treacle and dirt would be sold with the sugar and consumed? Yes.

680. By the Chairman: The answer you have given to the question that the Company will pay the same duty on the sugar they turn out as on that which they take in, would make it appear that the Company paid less duty for their loaf or refined sugar than what the merchant pays—do you adhere to that? I hardly understand you.

681. The importer pays 6s. 8d. per cwt. on the refined sugar he imports—the Sugar Company take in their sugar at 5s. per cwt., and would pay, according to the Bill, on their loaf sugar at 5s., but 6s. 8d. per cwt. when taken into consumption? My idea was that all that passed out would pay the 5s. duty, except loaf.

682. Then if the Company manufactured loaf sugar, they would have to pay the 6s. 8d. duty? Yes.

683. Then you believe that the consequence would be a loss to the revenue, by reason of the treacle and dirt? Yes, because the treacle is not used here, and being exported in bond would pass out duty free.

684. And you estimate that the loss of duty on the treacle and dirt would cause a loss to the revenue of 25 per cent. on the present duty on sugar paid by the Company? Yes, quite that.

685. Less the extra duty paid by them on the loaf sugar taken into consumption? Of course, less that amount.

686. Would not that go towards the relief of the loss? Only a very small way.

687. By Mr. Dalgleish: There is only a very small proportion of loaf sugar used in this Colony? Very small.

688. So that a heavy loss would be entailed upon the revenue? Yes.

689. Would this loss to the revenue go, in your opinion, to benefit the public, or would it form a further source of profit to the Company? It would go to the profit of the manufacturer, and would not be felt generally.

690. Were the Company to close their establishment here, and commence operations in a neighbouring Colony, where similar advantages have been conceded to refining Companies that the Company now ask for here, would they then be enabled to compete successfully in this market with the importers of sugar? Yes, I think they would.

691. Although in another Colony, and having to pay freight and charges, they would be still able to compete with our importers? I think so.

692. By refining in bond in the same way as they now ask to do here? Yes; these privileges would still give them an advantage over the importer.

693. As a matter of policy, would it not be a loss to the Colony to drive this manufacture from here into a neighbouring Colony, where these privileges are given? According to their own showing it would be, but I am not so sure about it.

694. Then supposing that the Parliament conceded the drawback on treacle, to be valued by the saccharometer, would that be an advantage to the Colony, and at the same time meet the requirements of the Company? I cannot tell; I have not made the calculation.

695. Do you think it would, from the petitions and other documents before the Committee? I do not.

696. You are aware that the Company have now no means of getting rid of their treacle, and that this Bill would afford them a means? Yes; but how far it would relieve them I have not calculated sufficiently to say.

697. Would it be felt to be a loss to the community if this benefit were conferred upon the Company? I do not think it would affect the community either way, but it would certainly be a loss to the revenue.

698. By the Chairman: With respect to the tailor and his waste of cloth, you consider that the Company, in the claim they make for remission of duty on the waste of this article of sugar, are in a similar position to the tailor who loses by waste in cutting his cloth? Yes, something.

699. Now supposing that the tailor paid duty on the cloth he imported, and that a merchant imported a coat ready-made at the same duty as was paid by the tailor on his cloth, would not the tailor be placed at a still further disadvantage, as compared with the merchant importer, by reason of these clippings, on which he would have paid duty? Yes, to a certain extent.

- Henry Moore, Esq. 700. The merchant not paying duty on the clippings from the coat he imports? Yes.
- 23 July, 1862. 701. In the same sense as this Company pay duty on the dirt, which the importer does not pay, are they not in the same position as the tailor with his cloth? But then he makes it up and gets a profit on his manufacture, so as to cover his loss by waste; and the Company do the same thing.
702. No doubt he makes up for his waste in the price he charges, but is he not at a disadvantage in the market by reason of the duty on this waste, which he pays and the importer does not? It would appear so.
703. In the same way as the sugar refiner is placed at a disadvantage through the duty he has to pay on this dirt? Yes, to a certain extent.
704. With respect to the treacle, you think the revenue would lose greatly if the proposal were carried out? Of course you would lose the amount of the duty, whatever it may be, by allowing the drawback.
705. But we should lose nothing on all that went into consumption;—everything going into consumption would pay duty? Of course.
706. And it is not to be expected that the revenue should derive an advantage from that which is not taken into consumption? No.
707. The loss on the treacle would be made up by the increased duty on refined sugar? Only in a very small degree.
708. However, whatever loss there was to the revenue could not be regarded as unjust, seeing that the articles would not be consumed in the Colony? No, I think not.

TUESDAY, 5 AUGUST, 1862.

Present:—

MR. ALEXANDER,
MR. CALDWELL,

MR. DALGLEISH,
MR. LOVE,

MR. SAMUEL.

THE HON. ELIAS CARPENTER WEEKES, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

William Augustine Duncan, Esq., Collector of Customs, called in and examined:—

- W. A. Duncan, Esq. 709. By the Chairman: Have you perused a Bill which has been introduced into the Assembly, called a Bill to authorize the establishment of Bonded Distilleries and Bonded Sugar-houses? I have.
- 5 Aug., 1862. 710. Have you formed any opinion of the necessity of a Bill of that kind? I cannot say I have formed an opinion of its necessity; it may be expedient, but it is a measure that I think requires very considerable caution in dealing with.
711. Do you think that a sugar refiner, as the law at present stands, is under any considerable disadvantage in pursuing his manufactures? Judging from the representations in a pamphlet I have read, issued by the Sugar Company, I think there must be some disadvantage, though I can scarcely think to the extent they mention.
712. Then you go with them to a certain extent? To a certain extent.
713. How could this Bill be carried out, as respects your department, with perfect security to the revenue? It would entail considerable risk on the revenue, no doubt; but I believe the revenue can be protected under it. It will also entail very considerable cost on the revenue.
714. The cost of supervision? The cost of supervision.
715. Have you formed any idea what that expense would be? With respect to a refinery, I think the cost could not be less than £1,000 or £1,200 per annum. I am not so well acquainted with the supervision necessary in a distillery.
716. I do not think the Bill provides that this charge should be paid by the refiner, does it? I think not. I think that was intended originally, but somehow or other it does not appear in the Bill.
717. I believe that it is the intention that the expense should be met by the refiner or distiller—do you see any objection to that? I think it would be objectionable if it were put precisely in that way; but I think a fee or tax might be imposed on each refinery or distillery that would be sufficient to cover somewhere about the amount of the necessary expenditure. If put in the shape of payment to the officers coming direct from the Company I think it would be objectionable.
718. Are you aware why it is that treacle is never allowed to be exported for drawback? I know of no reason, except that it is not provided in the law.
719. Do you know why that omission has taken place with reference to treacle? I imagine it must have been an oversight. I do not know of any special reason why drawback should not be allowed on treacle as it is on refined and bastard sugar.
720. Would you be able to apply any test as to the quality of treacle, whether it had been tampered with or not? It would be very difficult. I think that may have been the reason why treacle was left out; very probably it was.
721. Is there any instrument by which that could be ascertained—would the saccharometer test the quality of treacle? I am not sufficiently acquainted with the saccharometer to say positively; I believe an approximation might be got, but I am in some doubt about it.
722. Are you aware whether the privileges provided in this Bill to the refiner and distiller in bond are granted in any other country? Sugar and treacle are allowed to be delivered free of duty in England to distillers under the Act 18 and 19 Victoria, cap. 94. Formerly sugar used to be refined in bond for exportation only, but that is not the case at present.

723. Is there not distilling and refining in bond in Melbourne? There is refining; I am not aware whether there is distilling or not. W. A. Duncan, Esq.
724. Have you any information of the practical working of that measure in Victoria? No; I wrote to the Collector of Customs there on the subject, and he promised to send me an answer, but he has not done so; I suppose he has forgotten it. 5 Aug., 1862.
725. You think the necessary supervision could be carried out, which, although it would be expensive, would still preserve the revenue? Yes, I think so; by employing proper officers and paying them well, no doubt the thing could be done.
726. Have you given the Bill much consideration—are you able to speak as to its provisions, whether there is any objection to them? I do not know of anything practically objectionable in the Bill; I have read it several times, and I believe it to come as near the point as is necessary.
727. By Mr. Dalgleish: What is the amount of duty at present obtained from refined sugar imported into the Colony? I could not say without reference to returns; I do not carry these things in my memory, as I have them to refer to whenever I want them.
728. You say that in England a drawback is allowed on refined sugars—is that the case? Yes, I think so, certainly. There are several drawbacks on different qualities of sugar in England, viz.—refined loaf or crushed, 17s. 2d. per cwt.; refined sugar, unstoved, 16s. 4d. per cwt.; bastard, superior, 15s. 1d. per cwt.; bastard, inferior, 12s. 8d. per cwt.
729. That is to say, that if raw sugar were taken in at a low duty and refined, a drawback would be allowed on the refined sugar at the high rate of duty? I believe that a drawback is allowed on sugar refined in England. A drawback certainly is allowed on imported sugar which has paid duty, and I believe also that it is allowed on sugar refined in England. I should state, however, that the drawback is somewhat less than the import duty.
730. I think you said you were not aware whether any drawback is allowed on the export of treacle in England? I believe there is not; in fact I am pretty sure there is not.
731. You know the present rates of duty levied on sugar in the Colony? Yes, £5 a ton on raw sugar, and £6 13s. 4d. on refined sugar.
732. Have you any knowledge of the different qualities of sugar yourself or the different processes of the manufacture? I cannot say I have much knowledge of the processes. I have some knowledge of the qualities, from constant reference, but I do not know much about the processes of refining sugar.
733. Would there be any difficulty in levying three distinct rates of duty on sugar—say, on raw sugar, on bastards, and on refined or loaf sugar? There has always been great difficulty with regard to classifying sugar.
734. That is, where the classification is made with regard to colour? With regard to colour and quality.
735. If there are certain broad lines of difference, essential difference in sugars—if raw sugars can be distinctly and at once known to differ from sugars commonly termed bastards, and the same could be shown with regard to the difference between bastards and refined sugars, which might be classified as at present either for highly refined white sugar or loaf—would there be any difficulty then? There is great difficulty in distinguishing. I have seen sugars imported here as raw sugars which it was very difficult to distinguish from some of the Company's sugar; even after calling in some of the best judges of the article in Sydney we have found great difficulty in classifying them. Colour and appearance are very deceptive. We go generally upon the moisture more than anything else.
736. Do you know any reason why the present duties have been levied on the two descriptions of sugars? I have always been of opinion that the duty should be uniform.
737. The same on sugars at £80 a ton as on sugars at £20? I cannot see any reason why the duties should be different.
738. Is the same rule followed with regard to spirits? I am quite of the same opinion with regard to spirits. I have proposed on more than one occasion to the Government to have an uniform duty on spirits.
739. Without any reference to strength? Certainly not without reference to strength. What I mean is, that rum and whiskey and brandy should bear the same duty.
740. Should rum and water, according to your idea, pay the same duty as rum? I mean according to strength, of course; reducing the spirits to proof, for duty.
741. Then you think this sugar (referring to a sample of coarse sugar) though it contains twelve per cent. of dirt, and is in fact sugar and dirt, should pay the same duty as pure sugar? I think it should, for this reason, that many persons would use the better sugar if they got it a lower duty, and discard that altogether, and then there would be more work for the refiner. I do not think any one ought to use that sugar as an article of food.
742. In order to prevent them, you would put a very high tax upon it? I do not say whether the tax should be high or low; I only say it should be equal, in order to encourage people to use the better article, and to remove the difficulty in classification for duty.
743. Then you are of opinion that it would be difficult to establish three rates of duty on sugar? That is my opinion. I may say also, that it is the opinion of the mercantile body in England, and efforts have been recently made to establish an uniform duty?
744. What would you advise then with regard to treacle? There is hardly such a thing as imported treacle in this Colony.
745. I think there is a good amount of treacle imported—it is imported in the sugar? Yes, but it is not called treacle.
746. Nevertheless it is in the sugar? No doubt of it.
747. And you would levy the same duty on sugar, dirt, and treacle, as on highly refined sugar? If dirt is brought in and called sugar I would levy a duty on it.
748. But you would not levy a duty on water contained in brandy? It would, perhaps, be an advantage to the Colony if all the brandy in it were saturated with water; but duty is charged according to strength.

W. A.
Duncan, Esq.

749. Would it not be to the advantage of the community, if the Custom House were altogether done away with, and direct taxation introduced? There are very good opinions in favour of doing away with Custom Houses and establishing direct taxation; and I do not say, though I am an interested party, that I have not, to some extent, an opinion of that kind myself.

750. You think it would increase the expenditure of the Government to establish bonded sugar-houses in the Colony? No doubt of it, very considerably.

751. Do you know of any benefit that would accrue to the community by allowing this sugar to be worked in bond? I do not know of any benefit that would accrue to the community from it; it would be merely removing an obstacle to a certain description of trade.

752. We have been informed in Committee that it is very probable that, should the present hindrances to the refining of sugar in this Colony be kept up, refineries will be established in adjacent Colonies, where these facilities are afforded, and that it will pay the Company to import their refined sugars from the adjacent Colonies, paying the duty, rather than to manufacture it here;—if that is the case do you think the present duties ought to be maintained, at the expense of destroying that branch of manufacturing industry in this Colony? I do not think it is of the slightest consequence to the Colony, generally, where the sugar is refined.

753. If there are three or four hundred men employed by the Company, do you not think that an advantage to the Colony? I think there is no advantage in the one case or disadvantage in the other, because there is plenty of employment for the men at other industrious enterprises.

754. By Mr. Caldwell: I think you said you were not aware of treacle being imported? I am quite sure it is imported, but I do not think in very large quantities.

755. What is the duty on treacle? £3 6s. 8d. a ton.

756. Supposing a person exported treacle, would he be allowed the drawback? Yes, if it was exported in the original packages.

757. After its being taken out of bond, if he exported the treacle again, he would be allowed the drawback? There is nothing in the law to prevent it.

758. And yet parties would not be allowed the drawback on colonially manufactured treacle? Just so.

759. Supposing there were three classes of duties fixed on sugar:—1st, low class or raw sugar; 2nd, what is now called refined lily sugar—that I suppose comes under the head of bastards; and 3rd, refined sugar;—would there be any difficulty in discriminating between them? There is very great difficulty in discriminating. The same difficulty has been found in England; and for that reason, as I stated before, an effort is being made now by the mercantile community in England to do away with the inequalities of duty.

760. I think you stated that you do not think it would be any loss to the Colony if the sugar manufactory was removed from the Colony? I do not think it would be the slightest loss to the Colony if any manufacture whatever was removed. At the same time, I would not hamper that or any other Company with unnecessary restrictions; it is a mere matter of justice and expediency.

761. By Mr. Samuel: Looking at the political bearing of the question, do you think this is a desirable measure. I put that question in consequence of the reply you have just given. You say you have no desire to restrict this particular manufacture any more than any other. Then, this manufacture, I infer, is restricted to a certain extent? The Company complain that they are under certain restrictions, and I think there is something in the complaint. I do not think it is exactly to the extent they represent, but I believe there is something in it. The grievance first having been ascertained, I would redress it.

762. By Mr. Alexander: Would the allowance of a drawback on treacle, as a compromise of the matter, place the Company in the position they should be placed in? I think it would about place them on an equality with the importers. The difficulty would be, as an Honorable Member has mentioned, in saying exactly what was treacle and what was not.

763. Could not that be tested by any instrument, in the same way as spirits are tested by the hydrometer? I know sugar can be tested, and I believe treacle might be tested, but I am not quite so sure about the accuracy of the test in the case of treacle, never having applied it.

764. By the Chairman: Then I understand that a drawback is allowed on imported treacle, if exported in the original packages? Yes, but I do not know that I have ever had any applications for it; if any, they must have been very few; but I should be obliged to allow it if any application was made.

765. Is there any law preventing a drawback on any other articles? Spirits and tobacco.

766. Drawback is refused on spirits and tobacco? Yes. I think drawback ought to be refused on wine, for the same reason as was mentioned in the case of treacle, as attempts have been made, and made successfully, to export colonially manufactured wines for drawback.

767. There is one case under investigation now? There is.

768. Do you think the Sugar Company have any just grounds of complaint at being required to pay duty on what they term dirt? I have seen an answer to that question from the merchants, in which they say that they have the difference between the price of the imported article and the price of the refined sugar to make up for the dirt. I am not quite sure that that is a sufficient answer; I think there is some loss on the dirt.

769. By Mr. Samuel: Do you think we should look at this question as it bears politically—that we should look at it as a question of political economy? I think that is the view all legislators ought to take of such questions.

770. By the Chairman: Do you know of any other article from which dirt is extracted in the form of refuse? There may be others, and the same reasons would apply in any other article where dirt is extracted in the process of manufacture.
771. By Mr. Dalgleish: In English ale, for instance, there is an immense amount of loss in hops and dregs? A considerable allowance is made on imported ale. In saying that I scarcely think the figures given by the Company represent the amount of loss; I imagine the waste they speak of includes the charcoal, blood, and bones, and other articles used in the manufacture. If no deduction is made for these articles they must be a portion of the refuse.
772. By Mr. Caldwell: Is not a person allowed to unpack tobacco in bond, and to reject dirt or useless packing? He is allowed to destroy in bond any tobacco that is not considered saleable; it is often destroyed in large quantities.
773. By Mr. Samuel: Do you consider at all the loss that will arise to the revenue from this measure? It is very difficult to estimate the loss; it depends upon the accuracy of the calculations I have seen; they may be very accurate, or they may not.
774. Can you form no idea? I can form no idea.
775. I presume there will be some loss to the revenue? No doubt there will, especially if there is now so much loss to the Company as they assert.
776. By Mr. Dalgleish: If you allow a drawback on treacle exported in the original packages, do you take any care to know the specific gravity of the treacle when imported—could a hoghead of treacle be half filled with water, and exported in that state? It could not be half filled, but some adulteration might take place.
777. If you take no means of knowing the strength of the treacle, or its density, in the first instance, how could you object to it when exported, in the original packages, even though it might be adulterated? I have never been satisfied with the tests applied to exports for drawback, and there is always great difficulty, because merchants are very unwilling to allow us to tamper with their packages to examine them properly.
778. You see this dirt on the table; that is said to be the refuse from the manufacture of sugar; you observe that it consists of clay, and fibrous matter from the sugar cane; do you think it right that a duty should be levied on that, or that the same amount of duty should be levied on sugars containing that dirt as on highly refined sugars? I think so. If refined in bond it would pay no duty on importation.
779. Is there any refuse in wine? Yes.
780. Are not merchants allowed to draw it off in bond? They are allowed to draw, under certain restrictions, for ship's stores.
781. It is only on what they draw off that you charge duty? We charge duty on the whole of the liquid.
782. You do not charge duty on the refuse? We charge duty on the whole quantity. There is not much refuse in a cask of wine, if it is really wine. I have never destroyed much wine in bond, but it may be destroyed if valueless.
783. By Mr. Caldwell: Still persons would be allowed to draw off—in fact, to refine the wine in bond—and only pay duty on the quantity they draw off? They pay the duty on what they take out of bond; or they may leave it in bond, and it is sold at the periodical sale; but the duty is not remitted.
784. By Mr. Love: What do you understand by refined sugar? That is a difficult question; that is where the difficulty lies in classifying sugar, because we receive sugars now from the Mauritius and Java which it is difficult to distinguish from refined sugars.
785. Would you call any sugar that had gone through any refining process refined sugar? No; bastards is refined to a certain extent.
786. Do you call the Company's No. 1 pieces refined? Yes, that is refined, no doubt.
787. Do you call what is termed crystals refined? Yes, some crystals are.
788. Would you call that (referring to a sample) refined sugar? No.
789. Does that come in at the £5 duty? Yes, I think I have seen as good as that imported at £5 duty.
790. That is a sample of Mauritius crystals—you think that is not refined sugar? No, it pays the lower duty.
791. The duty on refined sugar is £6 13s. 4d. a ton? Yes.
792. Is not sugar refined in Mauritius or Manila? I believe not, but there is some method of washing it there which makes it almost as pure. I have asked several mercantile men who have received sugar from Mauritius, and they all unite in saying there is no refinery there. I have been told that, in fact, it is illegal to refine for exportation in Mauritius.
793. Would you charge the duty for refined sugar on Cossipore? There are two kinds of Cossipore; number one pays the high duty, and number two the low duty.
794. You do not consider the sample of Mauritius crystals I have shown you equal to Cossipore number one? It is not equal to it, I think.
795. Is it equal to the Company's crystals? I think not.
796. If the Company's crystals were imported here, would you charge for it as refined sugar? I have compared the Company's bastard sugar with a fine kind of Java sugar, and it is very difficult to distinguish between them.
797. Supposing there was a refinery at Melbourne, and they sent to this Colony sugars which you would call bastards, and which I would call crystals, what duty would you charge? That would be a very nice question; there might be great difficulty in deciding.
798. As an officer of Customs how would you manage? I could hardly say until the question arises. The same difficulty has often occurred, and very great doubt has been expressed.
799. By Mr. Caldwell: Suppose they wanted drawback, how would you decide? It could only be done by close examination of the sugar.

W. A.
Duncan, Esq.
5 Aug., 1862.

- W. A. Duncan, Esq. 800. By Mr. Love: No sugar from the Mauritius pays the high duty? No.
801. And none from Manila? No, I think not.
802. Then the only sugars that pay the high duty are Cossipore number one and loaf sugar? 5 Aug., 1862. Cossipore number one, loaf sugar, and crushed lump.
803. By Mr. Dalgleish: You have stated that no refined sugar comes from Mauritius and none from Manila—what do you understand by refined sugar? I have already said that great difficulty is experienced in deciding what is refined sugar and what is unrefined. The same difficulty exists everywhere where the classification of sugars is attempted.
804. There is a process called defecating sugars, is that a process of refining? It may be so called, but it is not usually understood in that sense.
805. Or is the term refined sugar confined to that which is filtered through animal charcoal, and subjected to the higher processes of the manufacture? I think that in this Colony all sugars that pay the higher duty are supposed to go through the charcoal process.
806. You state that in Mauritius refining is prevented by law? I speak only of what the merchants tell me; they unite in saying that there is no refinery in Mauritius. They say there is a very fine kind of machinery for what they call washing the sugar, which gives it a fine colour.
807. You take it all on hearsay, and levy duties on hearsay? Not exactly so; that is one way of getting evidence on the subject.
808. You have no knowledge of your own that there are no refineries in Mauritius? I have not.
809. And you do not know of your own knowledge that there is no sugar refinery in Manila? No.
810. You take it for granted because the merchants have told you so? Unless I have some reason I cannot disbelieve what the merchants tell me. That is one, but not the only mode of getting evidence which a person in my position is obliged to resort to. A Board, appointed by the Treasurer, very recently inquired into the subject, and adopted a kind of standard for the different descriptions of sugar, which we act upon at present. They examined a variety of sugars, and fixed on standards of the different kinds of sugars imported.
811. Who does this Board consist of? Myself, Mr. Fanning, and Mr. John Brown.
812. When was the Board appointed? I do not remember the date exactly; perhaps two or three months ago.
813. What was the cause of its being called together? The doubt which I had about the classification of a particular kind of sugar that was imported. I felt considerable hesitation in admitting it as unrefined, and yet it was hardly equal to what is termed refined sugar. I mentioned my doubts to the Treasurer, who requested these two gentlemen to meet me at the Custom House, and examine the sugar and give an opinion.
814. What name is this Board known by? No name that I know of.
815. By the Chairman: Was it not in fact calling in parties who were merchants, and competent to judge of the qualities of sugar, to assist your judgment in the matter? That was the meaning of the thing. It was called a Board, I recollect, but I do not think there is much in the name.
816. By Mr. Dalgleish: Does the Board still exist? No.
817. Should any doubt arise as to the classification of sugar to-morrow, would you call in these gentlemen? I should again express my doubt to the Minister at the head of my department, and he would call in whom he thought proper.
818. This Board does not now exist? I think not. The object for which it met was settled for the time, and no other case has arisen of any difficulty.
819. What was the point of difficulty, do you remember? The point of difficulty was as to the classification of some particular importation of sugar which was somewhat different in quality from anything of the kind that we had seen before—a little better than any sugar that had been admitted as refined previously. There was some doubt whether we ought to charge the high duty, or admit it, as the merchant contended, at the lower duty.
820. What was the result? It was admitted at the lower duty.
821. Are there any minutes on the subject? A short minute.
822. Would it throw any light upon this matter? It is merely the record of the opinion of these gentlemen on that case.
823. Have you any objection to append that to your evidence? None whatever. (Vide Appendix.)
824. By the Chairman: Did not these two gentlemen represent, one the refining interest, and the other the importing interest? Yes; Mr. Fanning was understood to represent the refining interest, and Mr. Brown the importing interest. That was your intention, I believe.
825. By Mr. Love: Mr. Fanning is an importer also, is he not? Yes, I believe so.
826. Then he may be said to have represented both interests? Yes; but principally the refining interest it was thought.
827. By the Chairman: The point being whether certain sugar was refined or not? Yes. We took the opportunity of examining several other parcels on which similar questions had arisen, but not so difficult as that particular one.
828. By Mr. Caldwell: With reference to that particular sugar, was it equal, in your opinion, to Colonial refined sugar? No, I do not think it was.
829. Then you agreed with the majority? There was in fact no majority; we were quite unanimous after discussing the question.
830. Was it deficient in colour? The colour was very good.
831. Was it equal in colour to Colonial refined? I do not think it was quite equal.
832. By Mr. Dalgleish: Was it as dry? It was not dry; that was the point we chiefly went upon; there was a considerable amount of moisture on it.

833. You think a little water in the sugar not so objectionable as a large amount of dirt? I think not. W. A. Duncan, Esq.
834. By Mr. Caldwell: Do you think any system of washing that could be adopted could bring it to the perfection you now speak of? If it be washed sugar they certainly do bring it to great perfection; but I only speak on that point from representations made to me. 5 Aug., 1862.
835. By Mr. Love: How do you undertake to find the weight of sugar? An officer is appointed to see it weighed.
836. You do not take the invoice as your guide? Certainly not.
837. Do you provide scales? I have had great difficulty with respect to scales. The wharfingers are bound by the regulations to provide proper scales and weights, but I find great difficulty in getting them to do it.
838. When a vessel arrives with sugar, does the owner of the ship, the owner of the sugar, or the wharfinger, provide the scales? The wharfinger, as I have said, is bound, by the regulations, to provide scales for use on the wharf; but however provided, it is the duty of the landing surveyor to satisfy himself that the scales are equitable.
839. Do you think it should be the duty of the Custom House officer to provide scales? I think it would be preferable, but then the expense would be great, and we should have to tax the wharfingers, which I think ought to be done in any case, it being unjust to the public that such a number of sufferance wharves should exist, entailing a large expense without paying anything to the revenue.
840. The reason why I put this question is, that a vessel discharged at Campbell's Wharf, some months ago, and the sugar was being weighed out with a pair of scales that were totally wrong? That is possible.
841. Some of the sugar came up to me, and I think it wanted about half a hundred to the ton; I went down to the wharf, saw the officer, had the scales tried, and found out they were wrong? Then the officer had neglected his duty.
842. By Mr. Caldwell: What practical difficulty do you find in carrying out the regulations of the Government obliging wharfingers to provide weights and scales—is it not part of the conditions? It is; but I do not think there were scales on one out of three wharves when I took charge; there are scales on most of the wharves now, but I had great difficulty in getting the parties to procure them; I had to insist on it, and threatened, what perhaps I should not have been able to accomplish, to withdraw their licenses. I would beg to suggest, that it would have been well if the matter spoken of by Mr. Love had been reported to me at the time, because, up to this moment I have not heard one word of it; and I have to complain generally that merchants will go about the town complaining of things to anybody but to me, who have the power and a strong desire to correct them.

APPENDIX.

No. 73.

*Custom House, Sydney,
24 April, 1862.*

Sir,

I do myself the honor to report, for the information of the Honorable the Minister of Finance, that the Board appointed to determine the classification of certain sugars for duty, having met, and examined the sugars in question—having also compared them with various other sugars, both refined and unrefined—have arrived at the conclusion that the inferior Cossipore sugar, as well as the white Mauritius and Java sugars, though of remarkably good colour, are not refined sugars within the meaning of the New South Wales Tariff.

The Board being, from their own knowledge, unanimously of this opinion, did not think it necessary to take any formal evidence on the subject; at the same time, feeling the very great difficulty of drawing an exact line in classifying sugars which so nearly approach each other in appearance as the best washed and the lowest refined sugars now do, they recommended that the samples before them should be preserved as a standard for future reference, and desired that their opinion should be conveyed to the Minister, that it would be desirable to remove all difficulties of this nature, by adopting an uniform duty on all imported sugars.

I enclose herewith the original minute, bearing the signatures of the different Members of the Board.

I have, &c.,

W. A. DUNCAN.

To the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

I find that I took no copy of the minute, but the above letter, I believe, conveys all the information contained in it. W. A. D.

Edward Knox, Esq., examined:—

843. By the Chairman: You are Chairman of the Colonial Sugar Company? I am. Edward Knox, Esq.
844. You are aware that a Bill is now before this Committee for the purpose of establishing bonded distilleries and bonded sugar-houses? I am. 5 Aug., 1862.
845. Have you looked at its provisions? I have.
846. Are they calculated to remove any grievance of which you have just ground to complain as a refiner? They are calculated to remove all the grievances of which we complain.
847. What are the disabilities under which you labour? The first disability we labour under is this, that we are compelled to pay a duty upon the waste of our refinery, at the rate of £5 per ton, the same as is paid on refined sugar coming in from other parts; and that although neither the Manila refiner, the Calcutta refiner, nor the refiner in Victoria, pays any such duty on waste as we are called upon to pay. In consequence, this duty on waste waste assumes the character entirely of a special tax upon the refiner in the Colony. The second disadvantage we labour under is this, that although we pay £5 a ton duty on the raw material, from which a quantity of treacle is produced, we are not allowed, on exportation of that treacle, to receive back any portion of the duty we have paid on the material used. We have at this moment 1,000 tons of treacle on hand; we are desirous of exporting those 1,000 tons to England, but on doing so we do not receive back one penny of the £5,000 we have already contributed towards the revenue here, upon the material from which this treacle was manufactured. In other words, we pay £5,000 to the revenue of New South Wales, as duty on treacle that goes into consumption in England. The third disability under which we labour is not as refiners but as distillers. We are compelled to pay the duty on the material that we use in the distillery, which consists of sugar and treacle; that duty is 5s. per cwt.; and to compensate for it, when we take our spirits out for home consumption, we are only required to pay a duty of 6s. 5d. per gallon against 7s. paid by the importer. That, of course, is perfectly fair, as we have paid the additional seven-pence by way of duty on the material we use; but on exporting that spirit to Queensland, or Victoria, or anywhere else, we cannot receive a drawback equal to the amount of duty paid on the material used. In other words, we have paid seven-pence per gallon as duty on the material used in the distillery, we export the entire product of that material, but we receive back no part of the seven-pence which we have contributed to the revenue of this Colony on spirits that go into consumption in Queensland.

848. Are these the principal disabilities of which you complain? These are the entire disabilities, so far as I know, of which we have any reason to complain.

849. At what do you estimate the loss to your Company from the existence of these disabilities? I estimate the loss by the payment of duty on waste, no particle of which enters into consumption, at between £4,000 and £5,000 a year; and I may say that this is not a mere estimate, but a calculation based on the actual results of five years' operations. Of course, with regard to loss by the export of treacle, it depends entirely on the quantity we export. If we export our entire make of treacle we lose £5 per ton on 1,600 tons, or £8,000; but as we expect only to have to export about 1,000 tons per annum, the loss would probably amount to £5,000 per annum.

850. What proportion of the treacle you make can the Colony consume? The Colony consumes a mere nothing, but we use a large quantity for purposes of distillation; we can use about 25 tons a week in the distillery. Beyond that we have not been able to find sale for the spirits manufactured.

851. Then an increase in the sale of colonially distilled spirits would to that extent diminish the necessity for the exportation of treacle? As far as we are concerned, it would not in any way affect the policy of the matter, I take it.

852. Have you noticed a petition which has been presented by certain merchants of Sydney to the Assembly, respecting this Bill? I have.

853. Are the statements there made to be relied upon? They are not.

854. Are they not facts? They are not; they are the very reverse of facts.

855. Will you particularize;—do you object to the whole of their statements more or less? I believe there is only one correct statement in the whole petition. The first paragraph states that “the license sought by the Bill was often and urgently pressed on the British Parliament by the sugar refiners in England.” I am not in a position to prove that this is not the case, but I have searched Hansard through for the year 1854, when refining in bond was abolished in England, and I cannot find that any one single petition was presented on the subject to the House of Commons. I have industriously looked through other papers, and I can find nothing to guide me to such a conclusion. It would have been very easy for the petitioners, some of whom I understand have been examined, to have produced the authorities, if there be any, on which such a statement is made. The next statement is that the permission to refine in bond for home consumption was at one time granted in England. I deny this. It never was granted; no Bill was ever introduced for the purpose into the House of Commons; and I doubt very much if such a thing was ever suggested. “But it was found so inconsistent with the safety of the revenue that it was soon withdrawn.” Of course if the permission never was granted—if refining in bond for home consumption never existed—the license never could have been withdrawn, nor could there have been any insecurity to the revenue. These statements therefore, I consider, are wholly inconsistent; and as further evidence, to show that it was not on account of insecurity to the revenue that refining in bond was done away with, I would beg to state that refining in bond was authorized in the year 1834, and was abolished in 1854, thus remaining in operation in England for twenty years. The sole object of allowing refining in bond was to permit slave-grown sugars, which were prohibited from entering into consumption in England, to be refined in bond, and the product to be exported. The necessity for allowing refining in bond ceased in the year 1854, when the duties upon slave-grown and free-grown sugars, if I may use the term, were equalized. Hence the reason why refining in bond for exportation was abolished in 1854. “And the refiner is now allowed to work in bond for exportation only.” The refiner, as I have said, has not been allowed to work in bond for exportation since 1854. The paragraph goes on to say,—“The Colonial Sugar Company, moreover, is allowed to distil rum from the waste of the refinery, a privilege that never was allowed to the English refiner, and this must further endanger the revenue to an unknown extent.” The refiner and the distiller in this Colony are two entirely distinct persons; the premises must be distinct, the supervision is distinct, the accounts are distinct, and in no possible way are the two businesses allowed to be mixed up together. The only “privilege” we have is this, that we may distil spirits from treacle made in our refinery, which has paid £5 a ton duty, whereas anybody else may distil spirits from molasses, imported into the Colony, which pays £3 6s. 8d. duty! As for distilling from the waste of a refinery, it is simply an absurdity. I produce a sample of what that waste is, and I think anybody who can make spirits out of that will be more clever than I am, at all events. How the revenue, under these circumstances, can be endangered, is of course a question I cannot answer. That is all I have to say about the first paragraph. It contains six glaring misstatements.

Edward
Knox, Esq.
5 Aug., 1862.

856. The only refining, I understand you to say, that has ever taken place in England has been for exportation only? The only refining that has taken place in England has been for exportation only; and for this reason, that the graduated scale of duties which is in force in England, and has been in force for years, returns to the refiner the full amount of the duty that he pays upon his waste, and something more. The duties in force in England at the present time are 12s. 8d. for low sugars, 13s. 10d. for the next quality, 16s. for the next quality, and 18s. 4d. for the next quality; and what I mean is this, that if a refiner pays 12s. 8d. duty on the sugar which he uses in his refinery, he, by reason of the enhanced price which he gets for his other qualities of sugar, which compete with the sugars that pay the 13s. 10d. duty, the 16s. duty, and the 18s. 4d. duty, gets back something more than the 12s. 8d. he paid to the revenue on his raw material, dirt and all. This is also a reason which makes me doubt that any refiner could be so foolish as to "urgently press on the British Parliament" to allow him to do that which would be actually a loss to him.

857. Would any alteration in our sugar tariff obviate the disabilities which now press upon refiners? Yes; an alteration in the sugar tariff would obviate the difficulty, provided we were allowed drawback on treacle.

858. What alterations would do that? 10s. a ton would do it, according to the results of our five years' experience—10s. a ton lower duty on the lowest quality of sugar, or 10s. a ton higher on the next. The total disability that we complain of, and which is shown by our statement, amounts as near as possible to 10s. a ton; but of course that would not give us back the duty on our treacle if we exported it. I apprehend there would be no difficulty in giving drawback on treacle; the saccharometer test for that purpose is as safe a test as the hydrometer test for spirits. The only safeguard necessary in the case would be that it should be declared that no treacle should be entitled to drawback that did not show a gravity of 40 by Beaume's saccharometer.

859. By Mr. Dalgleish: Are you in the habit of washing your sugar-bags? Yes.

860. Will not that account in some degree for the waste? No; we do not take our statement of the waste from experiments made in the sugar-house; we arrive at it from a comparison of the actual amount taken into our sugar-house, and the actual amount taken out of it; that is the way we have arrived at it—not by any guess. I have a statement here which shows that, from the 30th June, 1855, to the 31st December, 1859, we took into our sugar-house and refined 34,421 tons, and our total deliveries and stock on hand at the end of that time, added together, made only 31,676 tons, leaving an actual loss, in dirt washed away, of 2,745 tons for the period. I have no doubt the washing of the sugar-bags increases the quantity of dirt shown in any particular process, but it does not increase the quantity of dirt shown in our statement to result from the whole manufacture.

861. Your distillery is, I think you have stated, altogether a separate establishment? Altogether; we have, in fact, no license as distillers. We are virtually distillers, but the license is in the name of one of our servants, as it could not be issued to the Company.

862. So that you would not be allowed to take any waste from the sugar-house to the distillery, on any pretence whatever? We are not allowed to take anything into the distillery except it comes under the cognizance of the officer, and it is weighed and an account taken of it as it goes into the place; we can of course take nothing but duty-paid material into it, as distilling in bond is not permitted.

863. I think you stated that were 10s. a ton added to the duty on the higher qualities of sugar, it would meet your object? 10s. a ton taken off the duty on low sugars.

864. Would not an increase of 10s. a ton on the higher qualities meet the object? Supposing the duties were fixed at 4s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. 8d. per cwt., that would meet the object; of course if the lowest duty were 5s. the next would have to be 5s. 6d., and the next 7s. 2d., or something like that.

865. Would it not require an immense increase on refined sugars, to have the object of giving you an equivalent for the molasses? It would require duties levied in the same proportion as in England; at the present time the duties in force in England would be equivalent to 5s., 5s. 6d., 6s. 4d., and 7s. 3d.; these would be exactly equivalent to the duties now in force in England, but I think they would be very objectionable.

866. If the duties were taken off sugar altogether that would leave you no ground of complaint? Not the slightest in the world; all we seek for and all the Bill will give us is, to place us in the same position, in relation to the foreign refiner and the importér here, as we should be in if there were no duties at all.

867. The public have a right to expect a remission of the duties on sugar, I believe? It is a subject that has been agitated, and at one time it was announced that the duties would be taken off sugar altogether; our principal argument in the whole matter is this—that by reason of the duties being levied on dirt, we are placed in a worse position than we should occupy if there were no duties on sugar at all.

868. Would allowing you to distil and refine in bond be equitable to the rest of the community? I think it would, quite.

869. I have already asked other witnesses, and I will ask you the same question, whether it would be equitable to Mr. Tooth, as a brewer? Quite; Mr. Tooth pays no duty on sugar at all, because he gets the entire duty remitted to him in an equivalent duty placed on beer; I believe the duty of one penny a gallon on beer to have been specially put on, to return to the colonial brewer the duty he was called upon to pay on his material.

Edward
Knox, Esq.
5 Aug., 1862.

870. He pays duty on dirt? He pays no duty at all, because it is returned to him; he pays the duty on sugar and dirt, I admit, but he gets it back again; I admit to the fullest extent that it is a hardship that the consumer who eats that coarse sugar should pay the same duty as another who eats that white sugar we saw on the table just now, but at the same time I would beg to point out that the two questions are entirely different. This is a question as between the home manufacturer and the foreign manufacturer—not a question between the consumer and the manufacturer—and the complaint of one might be cured without doing any injury to the other. This is purely a question whether a refiner in Manila or Victoria shall be allowed to bring in his goods £5,000 a year cheaper than the man who refines in the Colony, and gives the Colony all the advantages of his manufactory. We are not consumers in the usual acceptation of the term; we are parties who make a raw material into a superior or different article. I admit that as between the consumer of low sugar and the consumer of refined sugar, there is the anomaly you speak of.

871. I presume you are practically acquainted with the manufacture of sugar? I am.

872. Would there be any difficulty in fixing discriminating duties on sugar, having three rates, and defining better than in the plan now in operation, the difference between the classes? There is no other way than by colour; the saccharometer would not do it.

873. Would the terms commonly used here—raw sugar, bastards, and refined sugar—give a clear enough distinction? These fine sugars are not known as bastard sugars at all, or as refined sugars either. I apprehend there would be no great difficulty in having merely two standards—say, that all sugars below that standard (referring to a sample) should pay a certain rate, all sugars between these two should pay a certain duty, and all above should be considered as refined.

874. The difficulty would be when the sugars approximated? Yes, the same difficulty arises in England very often.

875. You say the saccharometer would not show the relative value? No, the saccharometer would only show the gravity of the mixture, whatever it might be. If all the sugars that came into the Colony were pure—free from gluten, glucose, or dirt—then the saccharometer would show the difference in value between the different kinds; but as long as sugar is mixed with any foreign matter which can give gravity as well as sugar itself, the saccharometer is useless. I will illustrate my meaning: I will take a pound of treacle and put it into a gallon of water on the one hand, and a pound of the finest loaf sugar and put it into water on the other hand, and the saccharometer shall show a difference of only 8 per cent. in the gravity of the mixtures. The best authorities say that 100 lbs. of loaf sugar are equal to 129 lbs. of raw sugar, and that 100 lbs. of treacle are equal to only 39 lbs. of raw sugar; and yet the saccharometer only shows a difference of 8 per cent. between the two; therefore, as a test of value it is of no use. It is an admirable test as to gravity, or as to giving the quantity of any admixture that there is in water; it will give you exactly how many pounds there are in the mixture, whatever it is, but it will not indicate the crystalizable matter.

876. It would be an accurate standard of what the sugar contained, but not for crystalizing purposes? Not for crystalizing purposes, nor as a test of saccharine qualities, because treacle will show almost as great a gravity as sugar, and still it cannot be contended that treacle contains the same quantity of saccharine as fine sugar does. I think it would be a perfect test as regards the quality of treacle exported—quite a sufficient test for every purpose in connection with that.

877. Sufficient to detect the water in treacle? Yes; and treacle is of too little value to mix anything else with it.

878. Would the suggestion of Mr. Duncan, to equalize the duties on all kinds of sugar, meet your views? It would double our loss, I believe.

879. By Mr. Caldwell: In reference to the loss, is this description of stuff (referring to a sample of waste) the only loss you have to complain of? There is 10 per cent. of that kind of stuff in the sugar on which we pay the duty, which makes the duty 10 per cent. higher to us than on sugars that compete with our manufacture.

880. Would not the loss greatly depend upon the mode of treating the sugar? There is not the slightest doubt that it does to the extent of, perhaps, 1 or 2 per cent. A skilful and careful refiner may take 1 per cent. more sugar from the raw material than a careless or bad refiner. But I would beg to add, that if we refined in bond, it would be of very little consequence to the revenue if we made 20 per cent. of waste. As long as it did not go into consumption there would be no necessity for its paying duty. Perhaps I might also add, that we should be quite satisfied, if in the Bill a clause were introduced to say that no greater waste should be at any time allowed than 10 per cent. Much has been said about there being no guarantees that we might make 20 or 30 per cent. of waste, and take it out over the wall by collusion with the officers; but we should be quite satisfied that the Bill should state that no greater waste should be allowed than 10 per cent.

881. By Mr. Love: What per centage of treacle do you make? About 22 per cent. from this sugar (referring to a sample.)

882. By the Chairman: Have you any observations to make on the second paragraph of the petition? I may be allowed to take the second and third together. The second paragraph states, that the Sugar Company "has circulated a statement in which they state that they pay 10s. per ton more duty on their refined sugar than the foreign importer, inasmuch as they pay "duty on a certain amount of waste resulting from the process of manufacture"; and the third goes on to say that this waste "is the necessary result of all manufacture, and it is not a loss to the Company, as it forms part of the price of the refined sugar, and is repaid to the Company by the public." Now, with regard to this, I beg to state that the loss necessarily resulting from a refinery or any manufactory is, to my mind, that loss which every manufacturer factorer must sustain. The loss occasioned by the waste from this dirt is the necessary result of our manufacture, not the slightest doubt about it; it is the necessary result of the manufacture of the refiner in Manila who uses the same sugar; it is the necessary result of the manufacture of the refiner in Victoria who uses the same sugar; but I beg most positively to deny that the loss occasioned by payment of duty on waste is the necessary result of the manufacture. The easiest way to disprove it is this, that the refiner in Manila does not pay a duty on waste, nor does the refiner in Victoria. How, then, can the loss by that duty be a necessary result of the manufacture? The next allegation is that that duty on waste, or the cost of the waste including the duty, is repaid to the Company by the public. This also I most positively deny. I make a sugar of a certain quality which costs me £35 a ton to make, the refiner in Manila makes a sugar of exactly the same quality, which costs him £35 in this market; he pays £5 a ton duty on that sugar when it comes in here, I pay £5 10s., by reason of the special tax—the duty on waste—which is levied on me. If then his article costs £40 and mine costs £40 10s., how can I get back the 10s.? How can I get £40 10s. when my next door neighbour can sell at £40? The thing is an absurdity.

883. Is the amount of waste at all owing to the proportions of the different qualities that you make out of the raw sugar, or does it arise equally from any quality that you manufacture? The waste arises entirely from the dirt contained in the raw material.

884. It would arise in any event, whether you make a larger proportion of refined or a larger proportion of bastards? Exactly the same. The waste is the foreign matter which cannot be converted into crystallizable sugar, or indeed, into sugar at all or treacle.

885. By Mr. Samuel: And paying duty on that increases the duty on the rest? It increases the duty by 10s. a ton. The hardship is this:—I say I am taxed specially £10,000 a year, £5,000 on waste, and £5,000 on treacle. We will suppose the profit to be derived from the working of this refinery in the Colony is £9,000 a year, as against £10,000 special tax; the refinery necessarily ceases, and with the cessation of its operations, the Colony loses the £10,000 which it has derived as a special tax on our profits; but the Victorian refiner and the Manila refiner can get from the Colony £9,000 a year more than they could if we were in operation without any restrictions at all. The whole of the objections will not bear an argument from beginning to end; there is not a single point in them that can be maintained; I could at this moment manufacture in Victoria double the quantity of sugar that I am manufacturing there; the works are there; everything that is necessary is there; and as I refine in bond in Victoria, I should not be bound to pay the duty on waste; I am also allowed to export my treacle in bond without paying duty upon it; I could send the product of ten thousand tons of sugar worked at that refinery into this market upon payment of £45,000 a year duty, but in this Colony I am obliged to pay £50,000 a year duty before I am allowed to refine the sugar. The only argument that could be used in favour of maintaining the present state of things would be, that it was most undesirable to have any manufactory in the Colony at all; it is of course a matter of opinion what are the advantages derived from a manufacture of the kind; but I may be permitted to state that I consider the advantages of a large refinery are not inconsiderable. We spend £400 a week in wages to men, who are well and profitably employed; we consume seven or eight thousand tons of coals a year; we spend £300 a week in incidental expenses of one kind and another, such as cartage and labour of different kinds, which involve other wages than those we pay ourselves to our own men; and we bring to the port annually ten thousand tons of shipping. That shipping is engaged here after coming from another voyage; the ships therefore are obliged to refit here, take in their provisions, and pay their men's wages here; and the ships having to come back here, the same process has to be gone through again. All these advantages must be lost to the Colony the moment we withdraw our refinery. No, say our opponents, the ships must still come, in order to bring the sugars necessary for consumption in the Colony; but what is the actual state of the case? The refinery in Victoria is obliged to keep two ships running constantly between Melbourne and Newcastle to supply them with coals; and I leave it to any one to say what the expenditure of these vessels would be touching in here and leaving our sugar, or what benefit the Colony would derive from these vessels coming here and merely dropping the sugar and going away again. The fourth paragraph of the petition says that "the Company being distillers can in reality have no waste, as all the refuse of a sugar refinery contains saccharine matter and may be converted into spirit." I beg to give this statement a most unqualified denial; I have placed on the table of the Committee the stuff that is waste, and I am prepared to prove that from eight to ten per cent. of that kind of dirt has been for the last eighteen years extracted from the sugar used in the refinery with which I am connected, and continues to be so. If any Member of the Committee would favour me by going down to the works, I will be able to show him how the dirt is extracted and thrown away to the extent of two tons a day. The fifth paragraph states "that any compensation or remission of duty, such as that conferred by the Bill, must be considered in reality a bonus which will give the Company a virtual monopoly in the two important articles of sugar and rum." I merely have to say, with regard to that statement, that we seek no bonus, we seek no remission, we seek simple justice, and that whatever "protection" there is, it is the protection at present existing to the foreign refiner and to the merchant, not to ourselves. Nor would there, under the present Bill, be any protection whatever to us; it would be merely giving to us that to which we are justly and fairly entitled. As for 10s. a ton difference in the duties constituting a virtual monopoly, and driving importers out of the market, the objection is really so absurd that I do not think it requires any comment. The paragraph goes on to say, that on rum we already enjoy a protection of seven-pence per gallon over the importer." Now I have before stated that we pay 5s. a cwt. duty on the material we use in the distillery; from each cwt. of sugar we produce $8\frac{1}{2}$ gallons of spirit, and we pay seven-pence a gallon less duty on our Colonial spirit than the importer pays; but it will be found that $8\frac{1}{2}$ gallons of spirit produced from one cwt. of sugar, at seven-pence per gallon, only returns to us the exact 5s. we have already contributed to the revenue as duty on the material we use. The allusion to the extra freight on loaf sugar I shall not touch upon, as that has nothing to do with the question of duty.

Knox, Esq.

886. By Mr. Dalgleish: You state that on the material used in the distillery you have already paid 5s. a cwt. duty, but I think you also state that you principally distil from treacle? We have paid 5s. on that while it was in the raw sugar; we pay in fact more than 5s.; nine-pence a gallon would not return to us what we have actually paid.

887. How is the treacle taken into the distillery? Duty paid. We are not allowed to work in bond.

888. You pay duty on the sugar, and are allowed to take the treacle produced from it into the distillery free? They cannot help it; it is the product of an article which has already paid duty.

889. Can you import treacle at a cheaper rate, paying duty and all together, than what the treacle can be manufactured for here? We could do so; we could import treacle at the duty of £3 6s. 8d. a ton, whereas, being compelled to pay £5 a ton duty on the material from which the treacle is made, we have virtually paid £5 a ton on the treacle itself. We are in that respect at a disadvantage of £1 13s. 4d. a ton.

890. Does the Sugar Company import the higher class of sugars? We do not; they would not pay us to work from. There would be no art in making a refined sugar from a semi-refined sugar, but there is a great art in making refined sugar from a dirty article like that on the table.

891. Then the Company do not import these superior sugars? No, not to any extent.

892. By Mr. Love: Do you know whether there are any refineries in Manila? Yes, there are; there is a refinery as large as ours. I can produce you a witness who has seen every part of that refinery; Mr. Ross, our manager, has done so himself.

893. Are the sugars they make admitted into this Colony at the higher or the lower duty? At the lower duty.

894. You consider that unfair? I do; but it could not be otherwise under the existing state of the law.

895. Are there refineries in the Mauritius? I am not aware of what are called refineries in the Mauritius; but the manufacture of sugar direct from the sugar cane has now attained such perfection that in many instances the refiner may be dispensed with. The refiner here is principally of use now in converting low sugars, badly manufactured sugars, into a superior article.

896. There is a very superior kind of sugar called Mauritius crystals imported here at present—do you consider that ought to pay the higher duty? Yes, I consider it ought to be made to pay the higher duty, but it could not be made to pay it under our present law. Undoubtedly it ought to be made to pay the same duty as refined sugar.

897. By Mr. Dalgleish: Is it not refined? That depends on what is called refining. I do not know whether it is produced in a refinery having charcoal cisterns and all the paraphernalia of a sugar-house. That is the difficulty which is felt here. The English Act states that the higher duty shall be imposed on refined sugar, or any sugar made by any process equal thereto. These words, unfortunately, were left out in our Act. The sixth clause of the Petition I will not trouble the Committee about, excepting to state that the loss to the revenue which would result from this measure is to my mind the same loss as would result if any individual member of the community were taxed £5,000 a year personally, and the Legislature were to consider it wise to repeal that law, and to free that member of the community from a special and unjust tax. As regards the loss to be sustained by the revenue by granting drawback on treacle, it will be no more a loss than is every drawback paid by the Customs. If I import one hundred tons of sugar, and pay £500 duty, and I export that sugar again, I receive back my £500. If I import sugar and convert it into treacle, what reason is there why I should not also be able to get the drawback if I export that treacle again. The supposed loss in both cases is in reality no loss, because neither the sugar nor the treacle enters into consumption in the Colony. The seventh paragraph states, "that there can be no check, to the per centage of what the Company calls waste and molasses, all of which will be converted into spirit, and the sugar "revenue injured to an extent that no one uninitiated in the manufacture can estimate."

It will be found that the eighth clause of the Bill specifies that all sugar, all molasses, all spirits, produced in the refinery or distillery and going into consumption, shall pay exactly the same duties as sugar, molasses, or spirits imported from abroad; therefore, under this Act the high class sugars will pay 6s. 8d. per cwt., the next class 5s., and treacle 3s. 4d.; and spirits will pay 7s. per gallon; which duties are exactly those paid by the importer. How, under these circumstances, there can be any loss to the revenue, much less a loss that could not be estimated by anyone uninitiated in the manufacture, I cannot understand. I have before said that it might possibly be used as an argument that we could conspire with the officers and take out large quantities of sugar without payment of duty; but I may mention that that is what might be done in any bond in the town—it is what might be done in any distillery in the town—it is what might be done in any Government office in the town where money might be abstracted without its being found out. But I should be quite willing, as I said before, that the Bill should provide that on no account should we ever be allowed more than ten per cent. of waste.

898. Would it not be far better for the Company, in every way, if the duties were levied more rateably on sugar than to have this refining in bond at all? No doubt of it; but the Company were not in a position to ask for that, simply for this reason, that it is impossible to state the exact difference or the exact fraction at which justice ends and protection commences. We of course could not place ourselves in the position of asking for a differential duty of 10s. a ton, when our opponents might say 8s. would be fair to them, and they ask for 10s. By asking for permission to refine in bond, we ask for that which cannot by any means give us more or less than we are entitled to. We have also offered to pay the expense the Government must necessarily be put to; and this, I may mention, amounts to £570 a year in Victoria, where for the last two years we have been refining in bond. It is a great mistake to say, as has been said, that it should not be allowed because we should have the paying of the officers, who might thus be under our influence. It is no such thing. We pay in Victoria £570 a year for permission to refine in bond, and that meets the expense the Government are put to for officers. It may be just as well said that a bonded storekeeper here has undue influence over the officers, because he pays two or three hundred a year, or whatever the sum may be, for his license.

899. By Mr. Alexander: I think the great question is the monopoly by any particular Company; any other Company which might be started would require very extensive premises and so forth, and they might be crippled if obliged to work in bond? How can you give us a monopoly if you only give us justice, and put us on the same footing as importers?—How can there be a monopoly in a place where anyone can go into the same business the next day?—How can it be a monopoly when, at this present moment, we have a Company forming by the very parties who are opposing this Bill?

900. Will not this Bill tend to cripple small refiners? I am quite prepared to show that the small refiner does not work under the same disabilities as the large refiner.

901. By the Chairman: Is it the fact that a new Sugar Company is about to be started? I believe so.

902. Do you know whether they intend to start altogether irrespective of this Bill? I do not know. I stated before, that refining in bond had been allowed in Victoria for the past two years; but it has been stated that if refining in bond were allowed here, the importer must necessarily be driven out of the market; in other words, if justice were done to us the importer could not live. But what are the facts? Permission to refine in bond was granted in Melbourne on the 11th July, 1860, more than two years ago, and has existed ever since. In the year 1860, there were imported by the merchants of Melbourne, 24,337,000 lbs. of Mauritius sugar. Refining in bond has existed ever since, has never been objected to by any one merchant, and in 1862 they imported 32,464,000 lbs. of sugar against the 24,337,000 lbs. imported in 1860.

903. By Mr. Samuel: Does that return include your own importations?* Not one pound of it was of our own importation. I might also be permitted to state, that I do not see how a difference of 10s. a ton, amounting in the whole to £4,000, could prevent parties from engaging in a business in which by one swoop they save the community £70,000 a year. It has been stated by the merchants, that by importing sugar this year they saved the community £70,000 in the one year, and yet if we are put in a just position, and have not to pay £4,000 that we have to pay at this present moment, importations must all cease. The two statements do not seem to square at all.

904. Do you pay the expense of the Government supervision in Victoria? Yes, in the shape of license fee. At the beginning of the year we have a letter from the Collector of Customs, requiring us to pay £700, to meet the expense imposed upon the Government by allowing us to refine in bond.

905. If other Companies started, a like charge would have to be made to them? Undoubtedly, provided they elected to work in bond.

906. By the Chairman: Is your refinery in Melbourne carried on under any special Act? It is not. It is carried on under certain clauses which are contained in the Victorian Customs Act.

907. By Mr. Dalgleish: If our Customs Act were altered to such an extent as to make sugars of the finer descriptions, which are refined though not refined by the charcoal process, pay a higher duty, would that meet your case? It would be an advantage, but it would not meet our case, unless there was a lower duty for the very lowest raw sugar; and I may be allowed to state, that even that never could meet the real justice of the case as well as refining in bond necessarily must do, because under an adjustment of the duties we might receive a little too much or we might receive a little too little; but by refining in bond we can neither get too much nor too little. I would, however, infinitely prefer a scale of duties of this kind, because working under Government supervision is by no means pleasant.

908. Would there be any difficulty in fixing two rates of duty, taking a low sugar as a standard, and fixing a low duty upon that, all above that paying a higher duty? I do not know that there would be any objection to that.

909. By Mr. Samuel: Placing a high duty upon high-priced sugars would be protection to the Colonial refiner, would it not? That depends upon the amount of the duty. If the amount were exactly such as to return to us, in the enhanced price of our superior qualities of sugar, the amount of duty we pay upon waste, there would be no protection.

910. By Mr. Dalgleish: Would it not be necessary to reduce the duty upon treacle as well as that on low-priced sugars? I do not see what would be the advantage of reducing the duty on treacle. If the duty on low sugar were reduced 10 per cent., the duty on treacle might be reduced 10 per cent. also; but the duty on treacle bears in reality no proportion to the duty on sugar, as regards their relative values.

911.

* NOTE (on revision):—I find, in reference to the importations from Mauritius herein alluded to, that of the 32,464,000 lbs. of sugar mentioned in the preceding answer, 1,034,613 lbs. were imported by the Victoria Sugar Company, leaving for account of merchants 31,430,000 lbs. in 1862, against 24,337,000 lbs. in 1860.

Edward
Knox, Esq.

911. Is there any equity in the present mode of assessing the duties on sugar? None at all.

912. The usual price of the first-class sugar on which the 6s. 8d. duty is charged, is something amounting to four times the value of the low-class sugars on which the 5s. duty is paid? There is three times the value in the difference between the cost of that coarse sample and that fine sample—quite three times.

913. I was alluding to loaf sugar, which only pays 6s. 8d.? That would be four times. But the consumption of loaf sugar is very small indeed. I may mention that all the sugar that has come in under the high duty here for the past six or seven years can scarcely have amounted to 300 tons per annum, out of 14,000 tons consumed in the Colony.

914. If all sugars below a certain class—say such as this sample which you have exhibited as a specimen of the sugar that pays the 13s. 10d. duty in England—were to be classed at the low duty, and all other descriptions at the higher rate, would that meet the equity of the case more completely than the present mode? Yes; provided we were allowed drawback on treacle.

915. There would appear to be a pretty clear line of demarcation? Yes, the next in quality to that would be almost a crystal. With regard to the eighth clause of this petition, I would only beg to remark that I cannot see how there would be any greater security in our refining sugar in bond for exportation than in refining in bond for home consumption. If the danger, as is stated in the seventh paragraph, be such that no one uninitiated can estimate it, in the case of refining in bond for home consumption, the danger must be equally great in refining in bond for exportation. The only way of explaining it is, that as the parties to this petition have no interest at all in shipments for exportation, they would not be affected individually by refining in bond for exportation being allowed. I believe it has been stated that there would be no objection whatever to the Bill if there were five or six refineries, and I take that to be an admission that there really is no objection to the Bill at all.

916. Did Mr. Fanning sit on the Board which has been spoken of by Mr. Duncan, as the representative of the Sugar Company? I believe I was to have sat on that Board to consult with the Collector of Customs, but as I happened to be away at the time, Major Fanning, as a director of the Company, was asked to sit in my stead. But nothing hinges upon it, because the law as now framed necessarily excludes all these fine sugars from the operation of the 6s. 8d. duty. The sugar that decision was given upon was number two Cossipore, not these very fine white Mauritius sugars that I am informed have been put on the table. There are Mauritius sugars of considerably finer quality than number two Cossipore which did not come under the notice of those gentlemen. The others were admitted at the low duty, because they were said to contain more moisture than our sugars did, although they fetched a higher price in the market, and were of higher quality.

917. That is a matter with respect to which even this Bonded Sugar House Bill would give you no remedy? I should not require any remedy then, because if I refined in bond I should pay the same duty as they do.

918. You acknowledge that the better mode of dealing with the question would be to take the duty off sugar altogether? Most undoubtedly.

919. Or otherwise to reconstruct the present scale of duties? That would be more satisfactory to the refiner than working in bond, as allowing him to work more freely; but at the same time I cannot but say —

920. I ask with regard to the public—would it not be more equitable to the public? I think, quite apart from this question, that the public have a right to pay a different duty on that coarse sugar than on this fine sugar (referring to samples), but not at all as connected with this question, because I do not see that refining in bond can be any possible disadvantage to the public; on the contrary, it would enable us to give them a sugar at £5 a ton duty on which we now pay £5 10s., by which they might at times benefit.

921. My questions with regard to the present rates of duty have relation to the public? The one injustice, I take it, might be remedied without injustice at all to the community; in the same way that one might legislate for a specific crime, although it was impossible by legislation to reach every crime.

922. By the Chairman: Are there any other remarks you would like to make to the Committee? I desire again to call the attention of the Committee to the following facts, viz. :—

1. The duties we complain of as being levied on the waste of the refinery and on treacle exported from the Colony and consumed abroad are such as neither our competitors in Manila, in Calcutta, nor in the adjoining Colony of Victoria, are compelled to pay, and constitute therefore a virtual protection to the foreign refiner. 2. These duties being levied upon articles which do not enter into consumption, and not being repaid to the colonial refiner, must sooner or later have the effect of annihilating the refining interest in this Colony; and, with the cessation of the refiner's business, the revenue derived from these sources necessarily ceases. 3. It has been proved beyond doubt, that were we to carry on our business in Victoria and ship our refined sugar to this Colony, we should only pay duties to the extent of £45,000 upon the product of the same quantity of sugar upon which we now contribute £50,000 to the revenue here; whilst—being permitted in that Colony to manufacture and export our treacle in bond we should cease to pay towards the colonial revenue duties amounting to £5,000 per annum on treacle consumed in England. These and other facts alluded to in my evidence incontestably prove that the duties of which we complain on waste and on exported treacle are taxes on profits, and, "like all other partial taxation, unjust and specially prejudicial to the increase of the national wealth." PAWNBROKERS BILL.
 (PETITION OF PAWNBROKERS.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 1 July, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the House of Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Pawnbrokers of the City of Sydney,—
 HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners have learned that a Bill has been introduced into your Honorable House, having for its object to alter the present law of pawnbroking.

That the provisions of the said Bill are such as would effectually put a stop to the business carried on by your several Petitioners, and inflict great hardship on the poor people who are your Petitioners' customers.

That your Petitioners, if allowed the opportunity, would undertake to point out the great evils which would result from the passing of the said Bill; and to shew how an interference with the present law, in the direction proposed in the said Bill, would be mischievous instead of beneficial to the poorer classes which it is proposed to serve.

Wherefore your Petitioners humbly pray that your Honorable House will not pass the said Bill without giving your Petitioners an opportunity of fairly placing all the circumstances in evidence before you.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

PAWNBROKERS BILL.

(CITY OF SYDNEY, AND SUBURBS.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 4 July, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the House of Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of the City of Sydney, and Suburbs,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH, AS FOLLOWS:—

Your Petitioners are persons who have occasion, at times, to borrow money on pledges, and who have heard that a Bill is under consideration in your Honorable House which purposes to alter the present law regulating pawnbroking, in two respects, namely,—

1. To lengthen the minimum period for pawning; and—
2. To limit the charges of the pawnbroker to forty per centum per annum.

This Bill, if passed into law, will, in the first respect, inflict a great hardship on your Petitioners in a pecuniary point of view. It stands to reason, that if the pawnbroker is compelled to reckon on his pledges being left a long time on his hands, he will not advance his customers so much on them as at present. As a general rule, your Petitioners want to borrow money for a short time, and they would feel it a hardship to be obliged to deposit more security (if they have it) for the same amount of money than they have been accustomed to. When they want to borrow money for a longer period the present law allows them to bargain specially for the time their pledges shall be held.

Your Petitioners know their own wants better than other persons not placed in their circumstances possibly can do, and they object to being deprived, as a class, of the same control over their property which is enjoyed by other persons better off in the world. They cannot see any reason for depriving them of a power possessed by all others, of raising money on the security of property, even for a day; and they respectfully, but emphatically, protest against having the value of their security depreciated through the operation of the proposed law.

With regard to the proposal to limit the rate of interest, your Petitioners would urge, that they are quite content to pay the present charges. There are, at present, about two dozen pawnshops in Sydney, and if they are dissatisfied with one they can go to another; and your Petitioners are satisfied that the pawnbrokers do not make a greater profit from them than their grocers or their bakers get, on purveying the necessaries of life in parcels of the same value.

And your Petitioners are afraid, if the present Bill should become law, that the pawnshops would be closed, in which case they would be obliged to sell their goods altogether when in urgent want of money, when they would be at a great loss; for most of the articles they now pledge, and which they would be compelled to sell, are articles of domestic use, and of more value to your Petitioners than to any other persons, and those articles would be sold at prices far below what it would cost to replace them, either by buying new or by redeeming the old ones, under the present system of pawning. Moreover, your Petitioners would not like to be hawking their goods about for sale. They would not like to offer them where your Petitioners are known, for that would reveal their poverty to their neighbours, and to apply to strangers would subject your Petitioners to the cross-examination consequent upon a suspicion that the goods might be stolen; and if a broker would not give a fair price, your Petitioners would not like to be travelling about to get the best price, but would be at the mercy of the first broker they called upon; whereas at present, when they get to be known as regular customers to a pawnbroker, he lends them fully as much, if not more, than their goods would sell for; for the pawnbroker knows the pledges are of more value to your Petitioners than to any one else, and that they will be sure to redeem them.

Some one has observed, that the greatest drawback to the poor is "their poverty"; meaning thereby, that their poverty places far greater obstacles in the way of their exertions towards an improvement of their circumstances than exist in the case of other classes of the community. The weight of poverty is indeed hard to bear; but your Petitioners would humbly protest against having their burden increased through the interference of professedly philanthropic persons, who do not understand their wants and feelings. The patronage and protection of such people your Petitioners can well do without. Your Petitioners wish to be let alone, and to be allowed to manage their own business in their own way, and to be spared from having the burden of their straitened circumstances increased by over-legislation or misdirected philanthropy.

Wherefore your Petitioners humbly pray that your Honorable House will take the premises under consideration, and decline to pass the Bill before your Honorable House to amend the present Act regulating pawnbroking.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will every pray.

PAWNBROKERS BILL.
(CITY OF SYDNEY, AND SUBURBS.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 3 October, 1862, and Printed under the Sessional Order of 4 June, 1862.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the House of Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of the City of Sydney, and Suburbs,—

SHEWETH, AS FOLLOWS:—

Your Petitioners are persons who have occasion, at times, to borrow money on pledges, and who have heard that a Bill is under consideration in your Honorable House which proposes to alter the present law regulating pawnbroking, in two respects, namely,—

1. To lengthen the minimum period for pawning; and
2. To limit the charges of pawnbrokers to forty per cent. per annum.

This Bill, if passed into law, will, in the first respect, inflict a great hardship on your Petitioners in a pecuniary point of view. It stands to reason, that if the pawnbroker is compelled to reckon on his pledges being left a long time on his hands, he will not advance his customers so much on them as at present. As a general rule, your Petitioners want to borrow money for a short time, and they would feel it a hardship to be obliged to deposit more security (if they have it) for the same amount of money than they have been accustomed to. When they want to borrow for a longer period the present law allows them to bargain specially for the time their pledges shall be held.

Your Petitioners know their own wants better than other persons not placed in their circumstances possibly can do, and they object to being deprived, as a class, of the same control over their property which is enjoyed by other persons better off in the world. They cannot see any reason for depriving them of a power possessed by all others, of raising money on the security of property, even for a day; and they respectfully, but emphatically, protest against having the value of their security depreciated through the operation of the proposed law.

With regard to the proposal to limit the rate of interest, your Petitioners would urge, that they are quite content to pay the present charges. There are, at present, about two dozen pawnshops in Sydney, and if they are dissatisfied with one they can go to another; and your Petitioners are satisfied that the pawnbrokers do not make a greater profit from them than their grocers or their bakers get, on purveying the necessaries of life in parcels of the same value.

Moreover, your Petitioners would not like to be hawking their goods about for sale. They would not like to offer them where your Petitioners are known, for that would reveal their poverty to their neighbours, and to apply to strangers would subject your Petitioners to the cross-examination consequent upon a suspicion that the goods might be stolen; and if a broker would not give a fair price, your Petitioners would not like to be travelling about to get the best price, but would be at the mercy of the first broker they called upon; whereas, at present, when they get to be known as regular customers to a pawnbroker, he lends them fully as much, if not more, than their goods would sell for, for the pawnbroker knows the pledges are of more value to your Petitioners than to any one else, and that they will be sure to redeem them.

Some one has pithily observed that the greatest drawback to the poor is "their poverty"; meaning thereby, that their poverty places far greater obstacles in the way of their exertions towards an improvement of their circumstances than exist in the case of other classes of the community. The weight of poverty is indeed hard to bear; but your Petitioners would humbly protest against having their burden increased through the interference of professedly philanthropic persons, who do not understand their wants or feelings. INTERCEPTION OF LETTER ADDRESSED TO G. U. ALLEY, ESQ.

No. 1.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

*Nowra, Shoalhaven,
24 December, 1860.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to submit to you the annexed copy of a note which I had occasion to address to the Sheriff, to which he has not had the courtesy to reply, and as the answer to my query ("in what manner the envelope was fastened, that is, whether in the usual way with gum, or with wafer or wax?") is not only of importance to the ends of justice, but also to me, and in its legal sense has connection with your department, as upon receiving the answer to which I am entitled, I should have placed all the evidence before you, may I request your attention to the matter.

I know the person who had the letter alluded to from the 15th to the 17th, and who brought it to the office in Nowra. I am also positive that he opened it, and re-closed the envelope. It is essentially necessary therefore that the above quoted question should be distinctly answered by the Sheriff, or whoever directed the letter. I may here mention that I have the written testimony of the Numba postmaster, and of the Nowra one, on the subject; the answer will render the evidence conclusive. I cannot but add that I am astonished at the neglect of duty and marked insolence of the Sheriff; no gentleman would have been guilty of such discourtesy.

I have, &c.,
GEORGE UNDERWOOD ALLEY.

No. 2.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to SHERIFF.

*Shoalhaven,
Nowra, 19 November, 1860.*

SIR,

I received a letter on Saturday, 17th instant, purporting to be from your office, bearing on the left corner the figures 13/11/60, but without the usual postmarks, save that of "Shoalhaven 15," and without any date or reference, internally, to shew that it really was transmitted by your authority or from your department, and containing "Copy" of note signed Bernard Brown, dated "Shoalhaven, February 17th, 1860," in reference to the execution in the case Hyam v. Alley.

As there is a mystery connected with this letter since its arrival in this district, before it reached me, which it is of considerable importance to unravel, I shall feel much obliged if you will inform me, at your earliest convenience, whether it was transmitted through the General Post Office, and in what manner the envelope was fastened, that is, whether in the usual way with gum, or with wafer or wax.

Your early attention to this will much oblige.

I have, &c.,
GEORGE UNDERWOOD ALLEY.

MINUTE from Under Sheriff.

It is due to the Sheriff that I should explain that the fault of Mr. Alley not receiving a reply to his question rests with me, the Sheriff having given to me Mr. Alley's letter. The envelopes used in the Sheriff's Office are the same as the one attached hereto; such an one was, I believe, used to enclose the letter referred to by Mr. Alley.

POSTMASTER GENERAL to G. U. ALLEY, ESQ.

*General Post Office,
Sydney, 7 January, 1861.*

SIR,

I lost no time in placing before the Sheriff your communication to me on the subject of an apparent discourtesy, and beg to transmit a copy of the answer I have received, no doubt by direction of that officer.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

*Nowra, Shoalhaven,
14 January, 1861.*

SIR,

I am much indebted to you for your attention to my communication of the 24th ultimo, to which I have duly received your reply and enclosures.

The explanation of the Sheriff's conduct is as unsatisfactory as the answer to my question meant to be conveyed by the blank envelope is evasive, yet, though meagre this answer, it is quite conclusive of the guilt of the person who opened my letter; but as, from eleven months experience, I have much reason to question the truth and integrity of the officials of that department, it is necessary to the ends of justice that there should be a distinct and inevasive answer to my question, viz, "in what manner the envelope marked "13/11/60 was fastened, whether in the usual manner with gum, or with wafer or wax." I trust the Sheriff or his apologist will be induced or compelled to give a direct reply.

There is one link more in the evidence, which I hope to obtain this week, which will render conviction certain. I shall transmit the whole to you.

Again acknowledging your courtesy, and thanking you.

SIR,

I yesterday received the last and conclusive link connected with the letter from the Sheriff's office about which I wrote you some time since.

I shall do myself the honor to wait upon you with all the documents on next Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock; but if the day or hour be inconvenient to you, a note addressed to the care of Mr. William Hezlet, commission agent, Sussex-street, will reach me.

I have another appointment the same day at 12 o'clock.

SHOALHAVEN POSTMASTER,

Referring to the enclosed statement from you, state whether you were in the habit, in November last, of transmitting a bag to Mr. Brown. The Shoalhaven stamp only (not the Nowra one) appears on the envelope of the letter which you state you got on the 15th November, and Mr. Alley received from Nowra Postmaster, who received from Mr. Brown on the 17th November.

It is suggested that Mr. Brown must have received it in some way direct from you.

This case is most unsatisfactory, and you must report again. The letter did not go from Shoalhaven in Mr. Brown's bag.

It has not been stamped in your office, through which it is stated by the Shoalhaven P. M. to have been sent. How did it get from your custody? What did Mr. Brown say when he brought it back? What steps have you taken to force Mr. Brown to give an explanation? And why did you not report the circumstance to me, under clause 60 P. O. Regulations?

MR. BROWN, District Constable, brought me a letter addressed O.H.M.S., George Underwood Alley, Esq., Nowra, Shoalhaven, on Saturday, 17th instant, bearing the postmark "Shoalhaven 15th." It was sealed when he delivered it to me with red sealing-wax, and pressed with a common office wafer-stamp. I don't know how he came possessed of it, unless it came with the Nowra bag with Mr. Brown's own letters. I don't remember seeing it before.

No. 15.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

20 August, 1861.

SIR,

I have seen the Sheriff, and asked him whether he had transmitted the letters to Brown addressed to me: he states that, most certainly, he never did.

It is, therefore, now clearly ascertained that the letter was posted in Sydney; that the Numba Postmaster did not make up a private bag for Brown, which sets at rest the idea that he might have accidentally sent my letter in his bag; that Brown detained it for two whole days; that he broke the seal, re-sealed it, and himself delivered it to the Nowra Postmaster, who, I am certain, never gave it to him.

The evidence being now complete and conclusive of the guilt of Brown, I trust immediate steps will be taken to punish him.

It strikes me that he should be indicted under three distinct counts, and that the information should contain the same, viz. :—

- 1st. Stealing a certain letter;
- 2nd. Detaining ditto;
- 3rd. Breaking the seal, and opening said letter with felonious intent.

As the evidence of the Sheriff and of Mr. Hunt will be required, I would suggest that information be preferred this day, and warrants be issued and sent by to-night's steamer to the Chief Constable of Wollongong, or that one from Sydney be sent down, to return by Thursday's boat; at the same time subpoenas might be sent to Postmasters of Numba and Nowra.

If this course be adopted I shall wait till Friday's steamer, as the case might be made to come off on that morning.

If, however, you still think delay necessary, it will be more safe to have the information prepared in Sydney, so that no trick of the law, no slip of a pen of a Clerk of the Bench, or the patronising friendship of a J. P., may give him a chance of escape.

I shall do myself the honor to wait upon you at 12 o'clock to-day.

NOWRA POSTMASTER to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

*Nowra, Shoalhaven,
29 August, 1861.*

SIR,

In returning the enclosed, I beg leave to make a few observations by way of explanation. There is heavy sickness in my family, and owing to the hurry and pressure of business when the mail arrived in Nowra with your letter addressed to me, I placed it by itself in a box, intending to read it as soon as I had leisure; but, unfortunately, I forgot all about it; the letter consequently remained unopened till yesterday, when on my opening the box I found it exactly as I had placed it there. The fact of my having received it entirely left my recollection, which I can only ascribe to the undue anxiety I felt owing to the affliction in my house, and I hope you will accept my apology, which explains my delay in replying.

With regard to Mr. Alley's letter, permit me to explain that it came here in November last year. At that time the Nowra Post Office was not regularly organized. I had not received the Post Office stamp or books, and had no case with pigeon holes, or desk, but had to sort the letters and despatch them as I best could, until the month of January, 1861. This is the reason why the letter was not stamped in the Nowra Office. Besides, I have no recollection of ever seeing the letter until Mr. Brown handed it to me, and said he had received it in mistake, which was all the remark he made, so far as I can now recollect. Mr. Brown's bag is usually made up in Nowra; on the day in question, the 15th November, I put his letters in his bag after the mail arrived from Shoalhaven. The day was very wet, and the damp had penetrated some of the letters. I can only account for this particular letter getting into Mr. Brown's bag by supposing that it must have adhered through wet to one of his own letters, and was thus placed in his bag inadvertently. I know of no other way in which it could possibly have gone to him, and as I before said, I had then no stamp, and have no recollection of having ever seen it till Mr. Brown brought it back to this office.

With respect to your inquiry as to what steps I have taken to force Mr. Brown to explain how he got the letter, I beg leave to say that I have not been able to see Mr. Brown since I discovered your letter, but I will unquestionably call on him for his explanation immediately on his return from Ulladulla, where I am informed he is gone on business, and I shall, without delay, report his statement to you for your further information.

The only answer I can return to your question—namely, the reason why I did not report the facts to you under Clause 60 of the Post Office Regulations—is, that I gave Mr. Alley at the time the statement in writing which is annexed to your letter, and I was not aware at that time that any further report was necessary, except required by you in the event of any further or ulterior investigation. To the best of my belief I had not then received a copy of the Post Office Regulations. This office was then only opened, not in the regularly established manner, but merely as an accommodation, till Mr. Kemp at Greenhills finally delivered up the stamp and other requisites, in the month of January last.

I respectfully submit this statement, and trust that the explanation is satisfactory. It contains all the information on the matter which I possess until I have the opportunity of receiving Mr. Brown's statement, and of reporting it to you.

Shoalhaven,
4 September, 1861.

SIR,

Having been informed by the Postmaster, Nowra, that there has been an inquiry made by you relative to a letter belonging to Mr. Alley,—

I beg respectfully to say, the circumstances connected with the letter are these :—

About the middle of November last my private letter bag, as usual, was sent to the Post Office by the southern postboy, and returned to me by him ; at this time the weather was very wet, and the letters were all wet and stuck together ; in separating two of the letters the wafer of one was partly destroyed ; on looking I found it was addressed to Alley. Of course in separating them I took no particular care, not knowing but they all belonged to me, as it was a large letter such as I am in the habit of receiving from Sydney and other places. I immediately put sealing-wax to secure it, and stamped it with a wafer stamp ; and I can solemnly assure you it was not opened, or the contents known.

The next morning I took it to the Nowra Post Office. I intended to have taken it the same evening, but it rained so tremendously it was almost impossible to get there.

I trust this explanation will be satisfactory, and will exonerate all parties from any suspicion or blame.

Adverting to the subject of your letter, that came by some unexplained casualty into the hands of Mr. Brown, District Constable of Shoalhaven, I beg to enclose for your further information a copy of the account given by Mr. Brown of the transaction in question, which the Postmaster at Nowra has sent to me since I wrote you on the 3rd instant.

No. 28.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Nowra, Shoalhaven,
12 September, 1861.

SIR,

The copy of "Brown's explanation," received yesterday, touching the taking, detaining, and breaking the seal of my letter on the 15th November last, (with other documents in my possession) completes the evidence.

I shall therefore, as concisely as possible, place the whole in order, that the statements on both sides may be laid before the law authorities, that such proceedings may be taken as the law directs in such cases. The "official investigation" mentioned in your letter of the 3rd instant, if meant to be any other, or in addition to that which the correspondence discloses, would only leave the matter in the exact position that it is at present, and I am sure that you will admit that the mere fact of his being District Constable does not entitle him to any further indulgence, but, on the contrary, aggravates the offence; especially as it will be made evident, on examining the facts, that he has endeavoured to explain away and justify his conduct by falsehood upon falsehood.

1st.—The Nowra Postmaster's excuse for not replying to your letter, and his explanation, are not entitled to credit; there was no such "pressure of business or hurry," nor the other incidents named, to cause his neglect or forgetfulness of an official letter, but I have no doubt he waited Mr. Brown's return from Sydney, that their separate "explanations" might agree—which opinion is justified by the words and character of each, although I expressly cautioned him not to be led astray by Brown.

2nd.—Nowra Postmaster states,—“On the day in question (15th November) I put his letters in his bag, after the mail arrived from Shoalhaven; the day was very wet, and the damp had penetrated some of the letters”; and “he supposes that it must have adhered through wet to one of his (Brown's) own letters.”—August 29th.

3rd.—Brown states—“At this time the weather was very wet, and the letters were all wet, and stuck together; in separating two of the letters the wafer of one was partly destroyed; on looking I found it was addressed to Alley. The next morning I took it to the Nowra Post Office; I intended to take it the same evening, but it rained so tremendously it was almost impossible to get there.”—September 4th. Brown lives but two miles from Nowra.

In Mr. Brown's explanation to the Sheriff, he writes more at length, and more precisely upon the matter, speaks of the wet weather, and presses upon him to recollect that the letters are conveyed overland on horseback.

In simple refutation of the above, I give copies of letters, and extracts from diaries in the District; the originals of the former I shall transmit if required.

(1st copy.)

“Barrellan,
“6 September, 1861.

“My dear Sir,

“In answer to yours of the 5th, asking what statement was made to me by Mr. Brown about a letter addressed to you,—

“As far as I can remember he stated that it had come to him in an enclosure, and that it was unsealed, and that he sealed it and forwarded it to you.

“I remain, &c.,

“G. U. Alley, Esq.,
“Nowra.”

“ALFRED ELYARD.”

It may be necessary to recollect when drawing up the information, that the regular Post Office as an authorized branch of the General Post Office was not established until January, 1861, but that a bag was permitted to be made up at Numba, in compliance with request of the Shoalhaven Municipal Council.

When the circumstance occurred I mentioned it to Mr. M'Kay, J.P., hence the inquiry by the Magistrates (G. Aldwin also), and such was his explanation there.

I wrote to Rev. Wm. Scott for state of the weather on 13th and 14th November, 1860.

(2nd copy.)

Extract from Meteorological Register for 1860 :—

“Sydney, November 13th, fine throughout; November 14th, light shower; 8-30 a.m. fine day. There was no rain at Parramatta on 13th or 14th. No register kept at Campbelltown.

“WM. SCOTT.”

(3rd copy.)

Extract from diary of Mr. Lang, Postmaster, Numba :—

“November 13th, fine day; 14th, dull morning, cleared up fine; 15th, wild looking morning, continuing dull all day, came on to rain at night; 16th, wild looking morning, rained all day, not heavy.”

Mr. Lang permits me to say that the letter could not have been stuck to Brown's, as it has the Numba stamp near the seal; before he could place the stamp there he must have detached them, had they been “stuck.”

Had the seals of each been stuck, both the Nowra postmaster and Brown must have seen the address of each; and had the seal of my letter been stuck to the superscription of Brown's, his envelope must have given way first.

He had my letter on the 15th; there was not any tremendous rain on that day—“it came on to rain at night;” but on the 17th, the day on which he did leave it at Mr. M'Arthur's store, Nowra, it really did rain heavy all day, for the next day there was a flood.

The letters for Nowra, in November, 1860, seldom if ever then exceeded six, as the privilege of having a bag made up for Nowra was neither generally used or known. They were sent from Numba, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles, in loose leather bag of the usual sort, and free from pressure of any kind; and Brown's letter-bag is of strong leather, slung over the shoulder of the post boy, so that even had the weather been tremendously wet, it is not even probable they could be stuck together.

INTERCEPTION OF LETTER ADDRESSED TO G. U. ALLEY, ESQ. 11

Two years before this occurred I publicly complained of his utter inefficiency as a constable, on many occasions. His conduct as special bailiff to me since February, 1860, has been most dishonest; yet, in thus pressing this case against him, I am not actuated by any personal feelings or desire to punish him by legal process. I have long looked upon him as both useless and exceedingly dangerous to the community, therefore upon public grounds only I seek only for his dismissal from office, with a mark rendering him unfit ever to hold office under the Crown. It is an insult to the Crown, an offence to the law, an injury and injustice to the public, that such a man should hold office. His punishment by criminal proceedings will not undo the great wrong he has done me, nor compensate me; and as a father I cannot but feel for his daughter, his wife, and young children; therefore if his dismissal can be effected without the extreme course of the law, I shall, on behalf of the public, be content; but with you, as Postmaster General, the guardian of our interest postally, it rests wholly to say whether law and justice should in such an extremely aggravated case be avenged and vindicated, and if so, it should be well done by your own (official) law authorities, and a competent person should be sent down to Nowra Court to prosecute, as suggested in a former note, and for the reasons there stated. The matter is now entirely in your hands, and I have no doubt of the result; act as you may determine on—dismissal or prosecution.

I have, &c.,

POSTMASTER GENERAL to G. U. ALLEY, ESQ.

19 September, 1861.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated 12th instant, and waited yesterday, with the papers in the case, on the Inspector General of Police, under the impression, that although the Bill for placing the country police under that officer's supervision has not yet passed Parliament, that he might even at the present time exercise some degree of control as to the removal of particular constables, if satisfied that such removal were desirable.

2. As Captain M'Leerie states however that he has no such control, I am induced before taking the final step of applying to the Law Officers of the Crown, by whose opinion I should altogether be bound, to make three propositions to you on the subject, viz:—

- 1st. I am prepared to enclose the papers to the Bench of Magistrates, Shoalhaven, requesting that they will dismiss District Constable Brown, provided they are satisfied that he has acted improperly.
- 2nd. To require the various postmasters to give you every assistance and entire access to all the papers, which I would transmit to the Shoalhaven postmaster, in case you consent to conduct the case against Brown before the Shoalhaven Bench.
- 3rd. To send down the Postal Inspector on his return from a tour of inspection in which he is now engaged, which return will probably be in the month of November next, and require him to try the case before the Bench of Magistrates at Shoalhaven.

In requesting your early reply, I have to state that I am prepared, in case of your refusal to be satisfied with any one of the three courses as above proposed, to forward a statement of the case to the Law Officers of the Crown, together with all the documents, and request their decision as to the course that it will be proper and expedient to adopt.

SIR,

I have the honor to be in receipt of your letters of the 19th instant, doing me the favour of submitting three propositions in the case of District Constable Brown, to which I take the earliest opportunity of replying.Carefully reviewing the whole case, and fully weighing the three propositions, I am forced, by every consideration, to adopt the third as the only one calculated to be at once effective, viz., "To submit the papers to the Law Officers of the Crown"; it relieves the Magistrates from the exercise of a discretionary power which they might have a delicacy in exercising, and obviates the delay which waiting the Inspector's return would cause.But, perhaps, submitting the papers to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, with whom I believe alone rests the power of dismissal, would save that pain and humiliation to his family which submitting the case to the Law Officers must necessarily entail.That Brown's entire conduct and motive in this matter may be fully understood, I beg leave to refer you to the correspondence with the Sheriff from August 19th last.If the extreme course be the only one, I request leave to refer you to the last paragraph in my note of the 20th August, that there may be no flaw in the law by which justice may be defeated.

POSTMASTER GENERAL to CROWN SOLICITOR.

General Post Office,Sydney, 1 October, 1861.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to enclose certain papers selected from a mass of correspondence concerning a postal irregularity that occurred in the month of November last (1860) at the Nowra Post Office, by which a letter addressed to Dr. Alley of Shoalhaven was mis-delivered to Mr. Edward Brown, a District Constable of that place, instead of to the proper owner.I refer you to these papers as shewing the main facts of Dr. Alley's case and cause of complaint. I also transmit the explanations which the Postmaster at Nowra and the District Constable have furnished in reply to the charge made against them, observing that Dr. Alley is dissatisfied therewith, and, after a long correspondence with the Sheriffs and Postal Departments, wishes that the whole matter of his complaint should be brought before the Law Officers of the Crown, in order that Constable Brown may be punished; assuming that he (Brown) has brought himself criminally under the 46th clause of the Postage Act 15th of Victoria, No. 12.It is necessary, however, to state that, at the date of Dr. Alley's complaint, the office at Nowra was not an accredited Post Office, but merely a receiving office for the accommodation of the inhabitants at Shoalhaven.I shall be glad if you will be good enough to lay these papers before the Crown Law Officers, and inform me whether, in their opinion, it would be expedient to commence proceedings against Constable Brown; and, if so, the nature of the proceedings that should be taken.

SIR,

I have the honor to return, herewith, the papers forwarded to me respecting the complaint made by Dr. Alley against Constable Brown, and to state I have submitted them to Mr. Attorney General, who has been pleased to advise as follows:—

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the irregularity that attended your letter, which by inadvertency was delivered from the Nowra Office to Constable Brown, I have now to enclose for your information a copy of the Attorney General's opinion, as communicated to me by the Crown Solicitor.

* No. 35.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

*Nowra, Shoalhaven,
21 October, 1861.*

SIR,

The opinion of the Honorable the Attorney General in the case against District Constable Brown, received on the 18th instant, for taking, detaining, and breaking the seal of my letter, is so repugnant to the law, and so inconsistent with the facts, that I have determined to have the matter brought before Parliament, and a Committee moved for; because to permit such an offence, unjustified and unjustifiable, to go unpunished would shew that, notwithstanding the justly nature of the Postal laws, there is neither protection nor redress against acts which those laws declare a misdemeanor or a felony, and that protection may be extended to the offender in the face of the clearest evidence of guilt.

The very extraordinary opinion of the honorable gentleman has more the appearance of a desire to support a Government servant “right or wrong,” as of old, rather than of that impartial administration of Justice which it was fondly hoped would distinguish the conduct of a responsible Minister of the Crown. I should have thought that the very fact of Bernard Brown being a District Constable, would have greatly aggravated the case, and would at once have roused the authorities, law and magisterial, to faithfully discharge that obvious duty to the offended law and to society, which I have no doubt would have been discharged in any other case than that of a District Constable or other servant of the Crown. Since my last communication on this painful subject, I have learned another marked fact, adding to the bold, unblushing falsehoods which he (Brown) has so recklessly put forward to account for his having, detaining, and breaking the seal of the letter addressed to me; but it would be idle to submit any additional proof to an Attorney General who, despite such facts as I furnished you with, and in the face of the well-defined law in such cases made and provided, could give an opinion which sets aside all law, and is tantamount to conniving at crime, if the whole of the facts were before him; instead, therefore, of sending the fresh matter to the “law authorities,” I shall submit the whole case to the Honorable the Premier, in the hope that a Parliamentary inquiry will be rendered unnecessary.

I may add, that, were my complaint connected with any other than the Postal Department, I might allow it to be strangled by an Attorney General; but it is of too grave a nature to admit of so great a sacrifice of justice and truth. Great social interests and important rights are necessarily involved in, and entirely depend upon the proper observance and impartial stern administration of the law, which ought in all cases, especially such as I have so clearly, and at so much trouble, proved. It is notoriously most difficult to detect persons who commit such a breach of the Post Office laws, and, methinks, when detected so unequivocally as in this case, it should be promptly and vigorously met, and an example made. The law demands it, justice requires it, and society expects it, or all confidence must be destroyed. Most certainly the administration of the same law is very different in England.

G. U. ALLEY, ESQ., to COLONIAL SECRETARY.
*Nowra, Shoalhaven,
 28 October, 1861.*

SIR,

The very extraordinary opinion of the Honorable the Attorney General in the following case—copied herein—submitted to him by the Postmaster General, constrains me to appeal to you, in the hope that, by your recommending a reconsideration of the whole, and of the additional facts, the law authority may find grounds to arrive at a different opinion, more in accordance with the law made and provided in such cases. The case is—Complaint against Bernard Brown, District Constable of Shoalhaven, for taking, “detaining,” and breaking the seal of a letter addressed to George Underwood Alley, Esq.,” from the Sheriff, viz.:—On the 13th November, 1860, the letter was posted at the General Post Office, Sydney, as the “obliteration stamp” proves.

On the 15th it arrived at the Post Office, Numba, Shoalhaven, and on the same day was despatched, having upon it the usual office stamp, in time to be delivered at the Nowra Office same day at 1 p.m., the distance between the two offices being from four to five miles.

On the 17th the Postmaster of Nowra handed me the letter, after post hour, saying that Mr. Brown had just given it to him; that he knew nothing more of it, nor how he, Brown, had got it, nor did he recollect having seen it before; it was sealed with a large daub of red sealing-wax, stamped with a wafer-stamp, and had evident marks of having been violently opened and resealed. I had called at the office on the 15th and 16th, and was told, “Nothing for you.”

The Postmaster at Numba recollected transmitting the letter to the Nowra Office, in the Nowra letter-bag, by the mail contractor's post-boy, on the 15th. Postmaster General has the letters written by the above two postmasters on this part of the subject.

Immediately after the occurrence I mentioned it to Mr. Mackay, J.P., in order that it should be known to a Magistrate, with whom I might occasionally confer, and presuming that he would mention it to the other Magistrates, that at a future stage I might use the fact as I should find necessary.

I wrote to the Sheriff, asking whether the envelope had been fixed in the usual way, with gum or with wafer, or with wax, but did not receive a satisfactory reply until the 2nd or 3rd of August last, stating “in the usual way, with gum, possibly with wafer.” (Postmaster General has the Sheriff's letter.)

Having obtained the final answer, I placed all before the Postmaster General early in August; he then called upon the local postmasters, and Bernard Brown, for explanations; and the Sheriff also called upon the latter to explain his conduct, from which I give the following extracts, viz.:—

Extracts from Brown's letters to the Sheriff, dated 27th August, 1861:—

“A letter of his (Alley's) was brought by the post-boy that goes to the south'ard, in my private letter-bag; the weather at the time was very wet, and the mail bags, as perhaps you are aware of, are carried on horseback from Wollongong; the letters were all wet, and adhered one to the other. In separating two of the letters a portion of the envelope of one stuck to the back of the other, which partly destroyed the wafer of the one which I found was addressed to Alley. Of course, in separating them, I took no care, not knowing but they belonged to me.”

Extract from Nowra Postmaster's letter to the Postmaster General, dated 29th August, 1861:—

“On the day in question, the 15th November, I put his (Brown's) letters in his bag after the mail arrived from Shoalhaven. The day was very wet, and the damp had penetrated some of the letters, and he supposes that it must have adhered through wet to one of his own letters.” The studied care with which the two accounts are made to agree cannot fail to attract attention.

Extract from Brown's letter to Postmaster General, dated September 4th, 1861:—

“At this time the weather was very wet, and the letters were all wet, and stuck together. In separating two of the letters the wafer of one was partly destroyed. On looking I found it was addressed to Alley. The next morning I took it to the Nowra Post Office. I intended taking it the same evening, but it rained so tremendously it was almost impossible to get there.”

The

INTERCEPTION OF LETTER ADDRESSED TO G. U. ALLEY, ESQ. 15

The following facts prove the utter falsehood of the foregoing statements of Brown, and his tergiversation :—

“ Barellan, 6 September, 1861.”

“ My dear Sir,

“ In answer to yours of the 5th, asking what statement was made to me by Mr. B. Brown, about a letter addressed to you,—as far as I can remember, he stated that it had come to him in an enclosure, and that it was unsealed, and that he sealed it and forwarded it to you.

“ I remain, &c.,

“ ALFRED ELYARD.”

“ G. U. Alley, Esq.,
“ Nowra.”

Brown made the same statement to other Magistrates at the time, but at a later period, finding it would not do, he fabricated the tale of the tremendous rain and sticking together of the letters, and the premeditated falsehood upon falsehood, of which the following facts incontestibly prove :—

Extract from Meteorological Register for 1860 :—

“ Sydney, November 13th, fine throughout. 14th, light shower 8:30 A.M.; fine day.
“ There was no rain at Parramatta on the 13th or 14th. No register kept at Campbelltown.
“ W. SCORR.”

Extract from diary of Mr. Lang, Postmaster, Numba :—

“ 1860.—13th November, fine day. 14th, dull morning. 15th, dull morning;
“ all day. 17th, rained tremendously all day and night.”

Mr. Lang permits me to say that the letter could not have been stuck to Brown's, as it has the Numba postmark upon it, stamped by him; as from the position of the stamp near the seal, before he could place the stamp there he must have detached them, had they been stuck.

From the very few letters sent to Nowra at that time, and from the strong nature of Brown's private letter-bag, free from all pressure, even had the weather been tremendously wet, which it was not, and had the southern post-boy brought him the letter in his private bag (which he did not, as the 15th was not the southern mail day), it is not even probable the letters could be stuck together.

The foregoing are the facts which were, or should have been, submitted by the Postmaster General to the Attorney General, and the following is the strange opinion of that honorable and learned gentleman, viz. :—

“ Independently of the technical objection as to the Nowra Office not being an accredited Post Office, I am clearly of opinion that there is no ground disclosed in these papers for instituting any criminal proceedings against Mr. Brown.”

To sum up briefly,—

1st.—The letter was not sent in an enclosure to Brown; it was posted in Sydney, as directed, as the obliteration stamp proves.

2nd.—Throughout its whole course, per mail, 13th, 14th, 15th, from Sydney to Nowra, there was no rain.

3rd.—Brown did not bring the letter to the Nowra Post Office the next day; he had it from the 15th to the 17th, inclusive; thus he detained it two days, which, according to the law read to me by the Postmaster General, is a misdemeanor, and broke the seal, which is felony, which he has attempted to justify by falsehood upon falsehood.

4th.—The Nowra Office was an accredited Post Office in November, 1860, because the mail was regularly made up; letters, official and private, were addressed to Nowra; the Numba Postmaster made up the letter-bag, and the mail contractor conveyed it from Numba to the Nowra Post Office, by the express order of the Postmaster General—the Attorney General's technical objection is therefore wholly untenable; even though it were not an “accredited office” it would not in the least diminish the offences of detaining and breaking the seal, under the very marked circumstances attending the act.

There is, however, an additional fact, viz. :—

5th.—The letter was not “brought by the post-boy that goes to the southward” in his (Brown's) private letter-bag. The 15th was on Thursday, the day on which he had it; the next day, Friday, was the southern mail day; and on the 17th Brown himself handed the letters to the Nowra Postmaster.

“The wafer of the one addressed to Alley” was the part that “adhered”, as alleged; the direction was therefore plain to be seen, yet he says, “I took no care, not knowing but they belonged to me.”

Brown had a very strong and anxious reason for taking, detaining, and opening the letter addressed to me, from the Sheriff, viz. :—He was bailiff in the case of Hyam v. Alley, and before selling my lease, under the execution—worth to me £1,000, or to a buyer £500—he negotiated an arrangement with the landlord, and conspired with others to allow the landlord to purchase the lease unopposed, and at his own price, which he did for £80, on condition that he would pay to Mr. Hyam the balance due upon the execution, which bargain was literally carried into effect. Mr. Hall fully satisfied the execution, notwithstanding which Brown levied twice, and sold, after he knew the execution had been paid in full (at the time I informed the late Sheriff of the fact, but could get no redress from him); consequently it was of importance to Brown to know the nature of the replies from the Sheriff. I have no doubt but he took the letter from the Nowra Office knowingly and wilfully, which then he could have done very easily.

That,

That, in the face of such stubborn unquestionable facts, not admitting of even a shadow of doubt, a man should be permitted to go unpunished, and be still allowed to hold the office of District Constable, despite both legal and moral guilt, is an injury and insult to the community, a reproach to the law, and a mockery of justice; I therefore submit the whole to you, as Premier, expecting that you will recommend the Honorable the Attorney General to reconsider the matter, as I would fain hope there were some great omissions in the case submitted to him to warrant such an opinion, and that you will do that justice to the public and to me which the merits of the case so obviously demand.

I have, &c.,
GEO. UNDERWOOD ALLEY.

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S FURTHER OPINION.

G. U. Alley, Shoalhaven, respecting complaint against District Constable Brown, for breaking seal of letter addressed to him, &c.

MR. ALLEY, in the concluding paragraph of his letter, now, for the first time, suggests a motive for Brown's having unlawfully possessed himself of the letter in question, as to which there is not the slightest hint in Mr. Alley's previous long communication, and which I could not possibly guess.

Mr. Alley evidently views his own case with great partiality, and charges his opponent with falsehood in every fact alleged on his side of the matter.

I must decline giving any opinion on the case in its present state, as Mr. Alley's proper course is to proceed before the Magistrates in the usual way, when I doubt not the facts will come before me as legal evidence on oath, and in a fit state for me to decide upon.

31 December, 1861.

With regard to the latter part of his letter, accusing me of abstracting a letter from Nowra Post Office, and his statement of my knowledge of his corresponding with your office, I deny. A letter of his was brought by the post-boy that goes to the southward, in my own private letter-bag; the weather at this time was very wet, and the mail-bags, as perhaps you are aware, are carried from Wollongong on horseback; the letters were wet, and adhered one to the other. back of the other, which partly destroyed the wafer of the one which I found was addressed to Alley. Of course in separating them I took no care, not knowing but they belonged to me. I can solemnly assure you the letter was never opened, nor the contents known, at my house. I immediately put some sealing-wax to secure it, and stamped it with my stamp, and took it to the Post Office, Nowra, the next morning.

I intended to have taken it the same evening, but the rain was so tremendous it was almost impossible to get there.

I am fully aware of a very strong dislike Alley has against me personally, and has often threatened to do all he could to deprive me of my situation, and would gladly avail himself of any opportunity of trumping up a charge against me. I trust therefore that you will, before you attach any blame to any of my actions in connection with your office, fully ascertain the grounds of complaint, and not depend alone on the report of such a man as George Underwood Alley.

The whole of the documents in connection with this matter are now in my hands, and I can assure you that I am not afraid of any investigation as to my conduct in this transaction, but would rather court the fullest inquiry you may think proper to make or institute with regard thereto. I hope I may hear from you as to the above explanation, and that it may be satisfactory.

I have perused Constable Brown's letter of explanation to the Sheriff, and find certain matters referred to which I have a personal knowledge of, and though, for obvious reasons, I decline to make them the subject of special reference, still I consider it a public duty, taking into consideration my official position and the responsible office at present held by Brown, to state that his explanation is perfectly false.

DETENTION OF LETTERS AND NEWSPAPERS AT GUNDAROO POST OFFICE.

No. 1.

J. J. BROWN, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

*"Courier" Office,
Yass, 7 November, 1861.*

SIR,

I take the liberty of calling your attention to the enclosed extract from the Golden Age newspaper, referring (apparently with some authority) to the discontinuance of the mail between Yass and Gundaroo, and the substitution therefor of an additional mail from Goulburn.

I have had several letters from correspondents on the subject, requesting me to endeavour to ascertain if such an alteration is contemplated, in order that the inhabitants of Yass and Gundaroo should take steps to ascertain the public feeling on the alleged contemplated change; and I have also been informed that the only two persons in the Gundaroo District in its favour are Mr. Charles Massey and Mr. Fraser—the Postmaster; the latter most probably being instigated thereto in order to check the circulation of the Courier in that District, he being the agent of another newspaper (the Golden Age), and I having had occasion at one time to withdraw the agency for the Courier from his hands.

In order to prove the extent of the inconvenience that will be occasioned to parties having correspondents at Gundaroo, I take the liberty of enclosing a letter which I only received yesterday (the 6th November), but which by coming direct I would have had delivered on the 1st November. If the existing mail is discontinued all our letters will be equally long delayed, so that it will take a fortnight to get a reply from a neighbouring township. By glancing at the postmarks you will perceive the route as well as the time taken in its transmission.

Not having endeavoured to ascertain the feelings of the people of Yass on the subject, I am now only in a position to state that the discontinuance of the mail will be a very great inconvenience to me personally, as well as occasion a positive pecuniary loss, as it is not to be expected that the present subscribers to the Courier shall continue the paper when it reaches them in not less than a week after publication, instead of on the afternoon of the same day. As the inconvenience will be equally felt by all persons having business connection with Gundaroo, I trust you will see fit to continue the present mail if its discontinuance was ever in contemplation.

I should have written earlier on the subject, were it not that I saw the line included in the list for which tenders were recently called.

I am, &c.,
J. J. BROWN.

ADDITIONAL MAIL SERVICES.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for an additional mail from Goulburn to Gundaroo via Collector, thus giving those places the advantage of three mails per week. But the extra mails should not only run to Gundaroo, but be brought on, through Gininderra, to Queanbeyan. Gininderra as much needs the additional mail as the other places, and while, in point of fairness, it ought to be brought on so far, a complete job might be made of it at once, by putting on the extra mail to run throughout the line from Goulburn to Queanbeyan. We should then be in possession of a daily mail, which our importance and necessities demand. It is also intended to take off the mail at present running between Yass and Gundaroo, it being thought by the authorities that the small number of letters and papers conveyed does not warrant the expense.

Sydney, 12 November, 1861.*

SIR,

Acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, I beg to acquaint you that the question as to the Yass and Gundaroo mail line being renewed during 1862 will have to be decided on by the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer; but it may be proper to remind you that the present correspondence between those places is very trifling.

I am, &c.,

SIR,

I beg to thank you for your favour of the 12th instant, and to call your attention to the enclosed printed letter from the Courier's correspondent at Gundaroo, and request that inquiries as to the detention of the letter referred to (the cover of which was forwarded to you on the 7th instant) shall be at once instituted. I can guarantee that the writer of the letter can substantiate all he states.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.—THE GUNDAROO POSTMASTER.

To the Editor of the "Yass Courier."

SIR,

No doubt you have noticed the remarks of that remarkable functionary, our Postmaster, both in the Goulburn Chronicle and the Golden Age. As the document in the Golden Age refers to you alone, I will leave you to deal with it; but as I am spoken of in the Chronicle I will just say a few words, as I have answered it in full in the issue of that paper to be published to-morrow. Our Postmaster wishes to make it appear that your footnote, as he calls it, was written at my instigation. Now, I appeal to you if ever I passed any remarks to you about the delay of my communication. Again, he wishes to make it appear that the letter when posted was too late, but I assert it was nothing of the sort, for I have plenty of evidence to prove that the letter in question was posted about half-past eight a.m., and, as you are aware, the bag does not close until ten a.m. I ask you, was it too late? Perhaps our Postmaster considers all letters too late that are not posted twenty-four hours before the mail leaves. However, be that as it may, I think all unprejudiced persons will agree with me, that a letter posted an hour and a half before the mail starts ought to be in time. The only thing that makes me believe he alluded to me in the matter at all was, because he had no other thing to pick a quarrel with me about, and my opinion of him is that he is like the French, never at peace (I mean satisfied) unless when he is at war. However, I will leave him alone in his glory, and remain

SIR,

I have to apologize for further troubling you on the subject of a recent letter, but since writing I observe the following letter in the Goulburn Chronicle of the 16th inst., and last evening received the following letter from the Courier's correspondent at Gundaroo, authorizing me to supply you with his name, in order that the inquiry asked for may be properly instituted, if you should deem it a matter demanding investigation.

COPY of Letter in "Goulburn Chronicle."

To the Gundaroo Postmaster. Per favour of the Goulburn Chronicle.

SIR,

Your epistle, which appeared in yesterday's Chronicle, I would have passed by with silent contempt, were it not that I wish to give a few facts, which will enable the public to judge whether you were justified in writing the said letter. You say there you wish to let me into a secret about forwarding letters by the first mail after they are posted, which was not the case with the letter that this dispute arose about. To come to the point: The letter in question was posted on Friday, the 1st instant, about half-past 8 a.m., which Mr. Gambell, junior, is prepared to prove. The mail bag does not close until 10 a.m. Now, I ask, was it not posted in good time? Please answer that. You again say, if this letter did not not come to hand in time for the Wednesday's issue of the Courier, I ought to be careful as to who I blamed for the delay. Now I defy our Postmaster to prove that I blamed you, and I beg of you to refer to the proprietor of the Courier if ever I mentioned your name to him in connection with the letter alluded to. I took no trouble concerning it, nor did I intend to do so until your letter appeared in the Chronicle; then I made inquiries concerning it. If I blamed any one I may state it was Mr. Gambell I wrongfully blamed for the delay. But the appearance of your letter has enabled me to put the saddle on the right horse, and that is on you as Postmaster.

POSTMASTER GENERAL to J. J. BROWN, ESQ.

General Post Office,
Sydney, 9 December, 1861.

SIR,

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your communications, dated respectively on the 16th and 20th of November last, and to forward herewith, for your information, a copy of the report of Mr. Fraser, the Gundaroo Postmaster, on the matters alleged against him.

If his statement as to the time when Mr. Affleck's letter was posted, be correct, then the Postmaster has not been guilty of any neglect—as everything depends on this single point.

As regards the proposition of Mr. Affleck, contained in one of the two letters herein returned, viz., to despatch the mail from Yass at 7 o'clock in the morning instead of 10 a.m., as at present, I may state that alteration of time table to suit one particular place on the line can hardly ever be done, and in the instance of Mr. Affleck's suggestion, it would cause the Melbourne and other mail to be left at Yass, at which place they do not arrive before 9 o'clock a.m., or two hours after Mr. Affleck proposes the Yass mail shall start.

I have, &c.,

W. H. CHRISTIE,
Postmaster General.

POSTMASTER, GUNDAROO, to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Post Office, Gundaroo.

SIR,

In answer to the complaint made by Mr. Brown, I have merely to state that the letter in question was not posted at this office at a $\frac{1}{4}$ to 10 a.m., when I made up the Yass mail on that day. I can remember distinctly taking from the letter-box one paper and two letters for Yass, at a $\frac{1}{4}$ to 10 a.m. The letter in question was not in the box at that time. I found it there after the mail had been despatched, and forwarded it to Yass on the Sunday, via Goulburn. Mr. Brown, and his correspondent at Gundaroo, Mr. Affleck, seems to have joined in a conspiracy against me, and the cause is simply because I gave you my opinion as to desirability of abolishing the Gundaroo and Yass mail, which I still say is of no benefit to any portion of the community but to Mr. Brown, and his paper, the Yass Courier. I admit a portion of Mr. Affleck's letter to Mr. Brown, where he says that he seldom posts his letters for Yass, but gives them to the mail-boy; and it answers his purpose to do so, as the Post Office is four miles from Mr. Affleck's residence, while the mail-boy resides within one and a half miles of him.

I have, &c.,

A. FRASER.

J. J. BROWN, ESQ., to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

"Courier" Office,
Yass, 16 December, 1861.

SIR,

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favour, enclosing report of the Postmaster at Gundaroo, and to thank you for your courtesy. I have forwarded the report to the gentleman at Gundaroo who wrote the letter alleged to have been detained, and who is better able than I to form an opinion of the truthfulness of the Postmaster's statement. From my own acquaintance with the former, I would value his statement more than I should a much stronger asseveration from the latter (the Postmaster), who is an interested party, and bound to make the best of the matter for his own sake. However, from private information I am enabled to state, that if an oath is taken, the Postmaster will either have to oppose oath against oath or acknowledge he is in error.

MR. W. AFFLECK to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Gundaroo, 14 December, 1861.

SIR,

This day I received a letter from Mr. Brown, of Yass, enclosing a communication from you, and a copy of a letter from Mr. Fraser, Postmaster of this place.

After perusing the documents referred to, I beg to inform you that I consider Mr. Fraser, in his report, has endeavoured to make me appear a liar; but perhaps the facts of the case will enable you to judge correctly which is most worthy of credence.

On the 30th October we played a cricket match at Gininderra, and I, as correspondent for the Yass Courier, wrote a report for that paper that night. Mr. William Gambell, of this place, was at my residence next morning, about 7 a.m., and I asked him to favour me by taking up the said letter with another two, and a newspaper, which he did; and he states to me that he is prepared, on oath, if necessary, to prove that the said letters and newspaper were posted by half-past 8 a.m. It is not at all likely that Mr. Gambell would post two note-paper letters and a newspaper, and forget to post a foolscap letter.

As to whether Mr. Gambell is worthy of being believed or not, I may inform you that I have now known him nearly seven years, and I can fully trust his statement as correct; however, I would not like you to believe him on my authority alone, but you can write to any person in Gundaroo as to Mr. Gambell's character, and I have no doubt but you will find that he is worthy of being believed.

Mr. Fraser again says—"Mr. Brown, and his correspondent at Gundaroo, Mr. Affleck, seem to have joined in a conspiracy against me." And he goes on to state the cause. Now I can assure you that I did nothing of the kind. Mr. Fraser knows well, if he would only state the truth, that I am afraid of no one, and anything I do or say I am at all times prepared to substantiate. I entered into no conspiracy with Mr. Brown, for, at the time alluded to, I was on the most friendly terms with Mr. Fraser, and I would not have taken any notice of the delay of my communication to Mr. Brown, had Mr. Fraser not wrote an unmanly letter to the Goulburn Chronicle, which every person that read the letter stated he alluded to me and Mr. Brown. As to his statement about my giving my letters to the mail-boy, I admit I generally did, but with this instruction—If you are at the Post Office before the bag closes, post my letters at Gundaroo; but since the delay of my communication my instruction to the mail-boy has always been not to post at Gundaroo, but to carry them in his pocket to Yass Post Office.

I trust I have now explained the matter sufficiently to shew you that I was not in the wrong. Mr. Fraser may say what he likes, and try to make me appear in your eyes anything he chooses; but I may inform you that I am not afraid, as far as character is concerned, to stand face to face with him in Gundaroo, and get public opinion expressed concerning us both.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM AFFLECK.

No. 12.

MR. W. AFFLECK to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

Gundaroo, 14 December, 1861.

SIR,

Perhaps I may be allowed to draw your attention to a few facts, drawn from your letter as numbered in the margin.

You say it would not suit to change the hour of departure of the Yass mail from Yass to 7 a.m. for the convenience of one place on the line.

As the hour of departure from Yass at present stands, the Yass mail only benefits Yass and Gundaroo, for it does not arrive here until three hours after the Gininderra and Queanbeyan mails have left; therefore, any up-country letters that may come this way for Gininderra or Queanbeyan have to remain at the Gundaroo Post Office three days, so that it would make very little difference whether they remained in the Gundaroo or Yass Post Office. No doubt it would put the Gundaroo letters from Melbourne three days behind, but I think that ought to be overlooked when it would advantage other two post towns, and while there were no objections raised by the inhabitants of this place.

As I stated before, it would make the line pay much better, and convenience a great many more of the inhabitants of the County of Murray, for then letters arriving by the Yass mail could be forwarded to their respective destinations on the day of arrival in Gundaroo, instead of having to be kept here three days, as at present.

I hope I have explained the matter so as to enable you to see that it would be an advantage rather than otherwise.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM AFFLECK.

POSTMASTER, GUNDAROO, to POSTMASTER GENERAL.

*Post Office, Gundaroo,
28 December, 1861.*

SIR,

In reply to enclosed document from Mr. Brown and Mr. Affleck, respecting their delayed letter, I have only to report as previous, that I believe it to be a concocted affair between the two, for the simple reason, I do not remember Affleck ever posting a single letter for Yass since that mail has been running. He always forwards them by the mail-boy who lives near him, as I said in my previous report. I took from the letter-box two papers and one letter that morning, at a $\frac{1}{4}$ to 10, and the letter complained of was not in at that time. The reason is simply this, because I reported to you, and gave my opinion to this effect, that the Yass and Gundaroo mail ran for the benefit of the Yass Courier. Mr. Affleck is a young man just emerging from boyhood, residing with his father and mother, and wishes to become Postmaster at Gundaroo; in fact, he has told me so, and no doubt his friend Mr. Brown will do all that lies in his power to procure him the office; but I can refer you to any gentleman in Gundaroo as to my character, and also as to my attention to Post Office duties. I can with confidence refer you to the following gentlemen, who are the most influential in this place:—

J. T. Styles, Esq.,
C. A. Massey, Esq.,
W. J. Packer, Esq.,
D. K. McLeod, Esq., J.P.,
J. Donnolly, Esq.

With these few remarks I leave the matter in your hands.

Your obedient servant,
A. FRASER.

*Post Office, Gundaroo,
28 December, 1861.*

SIR,

I have the honor to report, in reference to the Yass and Gundaroo mail, that I consider it a waste of public money to continue the same; that it runs almost exclusively for the benefit of Mr. Brown, of Yass. The inhabitants generally of that place are of the same opinion with me—that it is not a public benefit. Mr. Brown and Mr. Affleck are the only persons that I have heard of who wish to have it continued; the latter gentleman is correspondent and agent to the former; of course it is to their interest to have the mail continued. It often happens that there is but one letter forwarded by that mail—sometimes none; at present it conveys the Yass Courier (about twelve copies) to Gundaroo, on the days of publication.

Your obedient servant,
A. FRASER.

REPORT.

THE Board appointed by His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, as notified in the letter of the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, dated 6th March, 1862, “for the purpose of instituting a thorough and searching inquiry into the whole management and general working of the Post Office Department, of reporting thereon, and of recommending such changes as they may deem necessary to insure its efficiency to meet the increasing requirements of the Colony,”—have agreed upon the following Report.

The Board commenced their investigation on the 11th March, and have carefully perused a very large amount of correspondence and documentary evidence laid before them—have minutely examined the Post Office buildings and the various books of the Department—and have taken such evidence as they deemed necessary to promote the objects of their inquiry. The Minutes of the Board, forwarded herewith, will give more full information upon their proceedings.

REPORT.

1. We are of opinion that few of the recommendations of this Report can have any practical or permanent value, unless a new Post Office, suitable in every way to the requirements of the Department be erected with as little delay as possible.

2. It is difficult to imagine a locality more completely unsuited to the increasing wants of the office than the buildings now occupied by the Postal Department. The different branches are scattered, rendering complete surveillance almost impossible, and the employees are, consequently, unable to render that effectual assistance which is required in any other branch when a momentary pressure of business may need their aid; letters are carried in baskets from building to building, across an open yard; nor is it possible that the same unity of direction can exist as if the entire business of the department were carried on under one roof.

3. The offices are also for the most part miserably unhealthy. That portion of the business of the department which comes most immediately in contact with the public, is carried on in a wooden building, badly drained and ventilated, and close to the stables and Tank Stream.

4. In all other countries the health of the officers employed appears to be a primary consideration; but in this Colony, where the great changes of temperature and extreme heat should render such attention more than ever necessary, it appears to have been entirely ignored.

5. The Store Room and Newspaper Sorting Room are damp unwholesome cellars. It is in these cellars, which are quite unfit for occupation, that a large portion of the business is carried on.

6. There is no public department in which the community have so direct a personal interest as in the Post Office, and we have no hesitation in declaring that a new building is of perhaps more importance than any other public work.

7. We find that the efficiency of the department has been much impaired by the want of accord between the other officers of the establishment and Mr. Hunt, leading to lengthy correspondence, or minutes, as they are called, and engendering a want of harmony of action and feeling among the clerks in the different branches. A great number of documents, establishing this want of accord, have been laid before us, and have had our attentive perusal.

8. Taking into consideration the very pointed manner in which this subject was commented upon by the Postal Board of 1851, we must express our astonishment and regret that a similar state of affairs should be existing at the present moment.

9. We have arrived at the conclusion that blame is more attributable to the Superintendent of the Letter Branch than to the other officers of the establishment, and accordingly recommend that the former gentleman should be removed to some other department, where his services may prove of greater advantage.

10. We strongly deprecate the habit that appears to have grown up in the department, among many of those employed in it, of communicating to others, not connected with the office, either vivâ voce or by newspaper correspondence, their opinions upon the details or probable action of the establishment; and we recommend that, in future, any party to whom such conduct can be brought home should be summarily dismissed.

11. Having carefully examined all the details of the working of the establishment, and the books kept by the various clerks, we are of opinion that, as far as the present departmental arrangements will allow, the work is generally well done, the books carefully kept, the checks upon clerks sufficient, and the few irregularities of which complaint has been made, whenever substantiated, we attribute principally to want of the necessary accommodation.

12. We must, however, except the office of Postal Inspector, whose duties, we conceive, should lead him to be always travelling, visiting every road at least once in each year, inspecting] the various Post Offices, and reporting upon the mode in which the contracts are carried out. We consider that but little of his time should be passed in the metropolis, but that he should, without further instructions, make a monthly report of his inspection to the Postmaster General.

13. It is to the want of attention on the part of Postal Inspectors to the Instructions of 1st January, 1859, (Vide Appendix to Mr. Levinge's Evidence, p. 45,) that we attribute many of the complaints that have been urged against the Post Office; and we are of opinion that it would be more advisable that there should be two Postal Inspectors, than that each postal route should not be visited annually.

14. We doubt if the Accountant's Branch is carried on as satisfactorily as it might be, owing to want of harmony among the officials—a portion of work being even now in arrear, notwithstanding that the clerical assistance is more than sufficient for the duties to be performed—and this assistance could, we apprehend, be economized with advantage.

15. We have given great attention to the working of the Stamp Department, and, with the exception that we recommend that a self-registering printing press should be employed as soon as procurable, we see no reason to be other than satisfied with this branch of the establishment.

16. The system followed with respect to the issue and repurchase of stamps meets with our decided disapproval. We are of opinion that stamps once issued should never be repurchased. We believe that the present system of selling stamps to up-country postmasters is essentially bad, and much clerical labour would be saved if it were conducted in a different manner.

17. We suggest that all country postmasters should be paid a salary in proportion to the business they may have to transact, instead of receiving their emolument in the shape of discounts; and that they should be obliged to keep on hand a stock of stamps sufficient for the requirements of their offices, paying for the same when issued at an uniform discount of five per cent., while the allowance to licensed vendors should be no more than two and a half per cent.

18. There appears to have been considerable discussion in the Post Office upon the respective merits of Road and Alphabetical sorting; and we are inclined to believe that when a new building is erected, affording sufficient space, the Alphabetical system, if carried out in its integrity, will, in the greater degree, economize labour and insure regularity.

19. We are under the impression that Post Offices in outlying districts (which, in proportion to revenue, entail the greatest expense on the department) have often been established with a greater view to the accommodation of individuals than to the public advantage, and several of these might, we think, be suppressed.

20. We recommend that some arrangement should be made with the Railway Department, to prevent the delay that continually occurs in forward mails being detained twelve or fifteen hours in Campbelltown

Campbelltown before transmission to Sydney, and that the immediate attention of the Postal Inspector should be directed to such re-arrangement of the time tables as may prevent the inconvenience, to which the public are often subjected in country districts, of missing a course of post.

21 We find that, at many Post Offices in the interior, the mail does not arrive until seven or eight o'clock in the evening, and the letters are not delivered until nine o'clock the next morning, while the return mail is despatched at 8 or 9 a.m., a course of post thus being lost. Inasmuch as the postmaster is obliged to receive the mails on arrival, we would suggest that he should be instructed to deliver during the space of one hour after receipt of mail.

22. We have been exceedingly desirous of ascertaining from correct data the exact number of newspapers and letters that passed annually through each Post Office in the Colony, but we find that the whole of this information could not be obtained under six months, for which period of time we did not feel justified in extending this inquiry. But from the documents we have received, we are led to believe that some postal contracts are made use of almost solely for the conveyance of newspapers, thus making correspondence with the interior the accessory, and not the principal aim, in the establishment of Post Offices and postal routes.

23. We think it very advisable that when a change is contemplated in any time table, the same should be advertised in the Sydney papers and the nearest local journals for at least one month, and that suggestions should be invited respecting the same. When any alteration in a time table is finally decided upon, it should not only be advertised in the papers, but should also be posted in legible characters outside the local Post Offices.

24. We observe with pleasure that the last English mail brought out to the Colony Money Orders from Great Britain upon the Post Office here, although they are as yet unauthorized; and it is much to be regretted that all arrangements to establish this scheme are not perfected in New South Wales. We earnestly recommend that immediate steps should be taken to carry out the Money Order System with all the principal towns of this Colony, and those of the Colonies adjacent, as well as with the Mother Country, with as little delay as possible.

25. Much clerical labour might be spared, and accumulation of papers and vouchers avoided, if some effort were made to diminish the cash accounts of the country postmasters; and it would tend to further this object if accounts for postage payable in the interior were, when practicable, collected at the head office.

26. We find that the postal speed throughout the Colony averages scarcely more than four miles an hour, but from the evidence we have taken, there appears but little likelihood of this rate being improved upon without greatly limiting the number of passengers permitted permitted to be conveyed by the mail, and the so doing would considerably increase the expense of the postal contracts.

27. We are of opinion that it would be very desirable to expedite and extend the course of post of the Suburban Post Offices, and advise that the recommendation of Mr. Hunt in this matter, as contained in Appendix A, paragraph 3, of that gentleman's evidence, be carried into effect.

28. In connection with the recommendations hereinafter contained, we are of opinion that a similar postal rate should be established for a circuit of five miles from and around Sydney with that chargeable in the metropolis.

29. It would be very advisable that some effort should be made to reciprocate with the Post Office in Victoria for the transmission of ship letters arriving in either Colony unstamped. It appears that, though such are now forwarded hence, correspondence so arriving is often detained for some length of time in the Post Office at Melbourne, to the great inconvenience of the parties interested.

30. We are of opinion that, as a general rule, no clerks should be appointed to the department of the Post Office unless commencing at the lowest grade, after examination; and that promotion should be regulated more by efficiency than by seniority, but nevertheless with a due regard to length of service.

31. We hold it to be unwise to expect due efficiency among the officers of the establishment, or that they should be zealous in and proud of the employ, unless they feel a conviction that energy and talent will be rewarded. It appears to us that the system hitherto pursued of nominating strangers to the department has been injudicious, and we recommend that the appointment and promotion of officers should be vested only in the Postmaster General.

32. We entertain a strong opinion that the situation of Postmaster General should be a political and independent office, seeing that he is brought into immediate contact with the public to a greater extent than any other official,—that he is frequently called upon to exercise immediate judgment, the good effects of which may be lost by referring to another department,—that in order to secure the greatest amount of accommodation to the public he should possess a large discretionary power,—and thus he should be in a position to act independently, and at need to defend his actions.

33. The Postmaster General should possess full and uncontrolled direction of his own department, enabling him to act with the most perfect independence, and should have an able clerk under him, who should be termed Secretary of the Post Office.

34. The Accountant's duties might be limited strictly to the care of the books, while the Clerk appointed to act as Cashier might at the same time take charge of the issue of stamps, as falling more directly in his province, and these officers would act as checks one on the other.

35. The management of the Letter Branch does not appear to us to require a Superintendent, but should vest in a Chief Clerk; and all the officers of the establishment should be made to understand that it is a part of their duty to study the working of every portion of the department, and not only to lend their aid when required in any branch in which they may not be directly employed, but also to be competent to do so effectively.

36. We disapprove of the lengthened correspondence which has taken place and still exists in the establishment, called "Minutes," and upon which we think much valuable time is wasted, while a single sentence rendered virá voce would have answered all the purpose.

37. The deficiency in the income of the Post Office has become a heavy charge upon the revenue of the Colony, and this is the more to be regretted, as the increase in the material wealth and numbers of the community gives them a right to demand increased postal facilities commensurate with the expansion of trade, but which it would be impossible to hope to accomplish in the present state of the postal revenue. In many countries of the world Government derives a large income from this source (see margin), whilst in this Colony the total revenue of the Post Office in the past year appears to have been £48,167 18s. 6d. and the expenditure (including the English postal subsidy but exclusive of stores, stationery, &c.) amounting to no less a sum than £97,225 5s. 10d. We cannot hold that the Post Office should at present be a source of revenue, but we are decidedly of opinion that it would be vain to seek to give the public any greater facilities, or to increase the efficiency of the department, in the face of the larger deficit that would be thereby created.

38. We find by the latest returns, that the number of letters posted in England was 22 per annum to each unit of the population, and the number of newspapers about $2\frac{1}{2}$. When unstamped the latter pay a postal rate of one penny, but which rate otherwise is considered as equalized by the stamp; and we observe that a similar charge for the conveyance of newspapers exists in the neighbouring Colony of Victoria.

39. In this Colony the average number of letters conveyed by post is about 12 per annum to each unit of the population, and of newspapers about 10; or, according to the estimate of weight, the conveyance of newspapers costs about six times as much as the cost of transmission of letters.

40. By the subsidized English Mail Contract, the weight of letters despatched during 1861 amounted to only 5,154 lbs., while that of newspapers reached 75,724 lbs.; the amount received for the conveyance of the former was £6,443, and of the latter, £1,147; and in fact, setting aside the difference in weight, there was 41,019 more newspapers despatched than there were letters. These newspapers paid a postage of one penny, and even then, upon this contract alone, the deficiency reaches over £8,000 per annum.

41. Considering that a large portion of the expenditure on our postal contracts arises from the weight of newspapers to be conveyed, it appears to us manifestly unjust that, without enjoying ratable advantages, any one portion of the community should contribute by taxation for the amusement, luxury, or instruction of any other portion; and this they are, without their consent, compelled to do, whilst the deficiency in the income of the Post Office is supplemented year by year by contributions out of the Consolidated Revenue.

42. This is the more to be deprecated, since the recipients of newspapers are for the most part those who can well afford to pay for the luxury, whilst the revenue of the Colony, which is raised almost entirely by indirect taxation, is principally, and in consequence of their greater number, derived from the earnings of the daily labour of the working classes, who are thus in a double degree the sufferers by the free transmission of newspapers.*

43. Thus, although the argument might be valid for the conveyance of newspapers without charge if the department were self-supporting, it appears quite untenable whilst it shews a large deficiency.

44. It does not seem to us necessary to urge the increasing circulation of provincial newspapers, which impart locally that national information which might not otherwise have been made public, but we confine ourselves to the broad principle that those alone who receive an advantage should be called upon to pay for it.

45. We think that the following remarks of Lord Elgin, which appear in the English Postal Report for 1859, are peculiarly pertinent to the subject:—"It is of great importance, doubtless, that every person should be able to procure cheap bread, yet no one proposes to establish State Mills at which corn shall be ground for half the cost, or even at the full expense without profit. In truth, the demand for special privileges in the case of newspapers is, in my opinion, only one of the many forms of a claim for protection, and resolves itself into a proposal to tax the country at large for the advantage, real or imaginary, of a particular class."

46. It may be urged as an example illustrating the views of Lord Elgin, that in the course of their inquiry the Board have learned that one of the weekly journals published in Sydney at present employs the Post Office to circulate its suburban delivery; nor does there appear any reason why, if it suited their convenience, all other newspaper proprietors should not follow the same plan, should increased facilities be afforded for the delivery of letters and newspapers in the city and suburbs.

* NOTE.—Although foreign to this Report, yet fearful of their opinions being misquoted, the Board would carefully guard themselves from being supposed to be antagonistic to indirect taxation as it now exists in the Tariff of New South Wales, but in stating a bare fact, apprehend that by other additional imposts the incidence of taxation might be rendered more equitable.

47. Entertaining these views, we would suggest that all newspapers transmitted through the post should henceforth pay a postage of one penny; and we estimate that this impost would increase the revenue of the department by about £10,000 per annum.

48. In the neighbouring Colony of Victoria, the postage upon town letters is two-pence, and upon country letters four-pence. Taking into consideration the much greater extent of our postal lines, we recommend that these rates should be adopted in New South Wales; and, as abundant evidence is before us that a small and legitimate increase in a postal rate will not diminish the amount of correspondence, this would, we consider, further increase the revenue to the extent of £25,000 per annum. If to these items be added the alteration proposed of the discount upon stamps, the total annual revenue of the Post Office would be augmented by about £40,000; while, taking into consideration the reduction that might be effected in the withdrawal of distant and expensive postal lines, and the exercise, after the erection of a new Post Office, of a more rigid economy in all branches of the establishment, we feel very sanguine that it would in a few years cover its own expenses.

49. It appears to us not out of place, before closing this Report, to allude to the very large sum now paid for the conveyance of the English mails, which service in 1861 shewed a deficit of £8,398 1s. 10d. It is well to remark with respect to this subsidy that this Colony pays a ratable share of the contract with Great Britain and Victoria, yet without enjoying anything like ratable advantages; and we think that such advantages as we may now possess are more likely to be diminished than to be increased.

50. The amount of loss accruing from the contract now in existence is about £72,000 per annum, of which the Mother Country bears only one-half, while the losses sustained by the contracts for the West Indies, North America, and India, are respectively £198,000, £78,000, and £70,000, falling entirely upon Great Britain. Taking into consideration the amount of trade, and apart from questions of national policy, the arrival of an Australian mail is of more importance to the English money market than that of any other country, yet we do not find that any State contributes as liberally as do the Australian Colonies to a subsidized postal route with England.

51. Viewing the class of boats now employed by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company in carrying out the Mail Contract, and bearing in mind the performances of the "City of Sydney," we are of opinion that the service might be performed as efficiently for a much smaller subsidy than the one now paid, £134,672,* and with equal advantage to the public. We would therefore suggest whether it might not be advisable to carry out the plan

* NOTE.—It is reported that, at the last meeting of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, the Chairman, in reply to a question as to whether the Australian line was paying, stated that the Directors had taken great care to obtain a subsidy for it sufficient to make it pay, independently of goods or passenger traffic.

plan proposed by Sir William Denison, that the Colonies should deliver their own letters at King George's Sound, where collectively they might offer some small subsidy to the Mother Country towards conveying their mails thence to England.

52. Failing the carrying out of this recommendation, it appears to us that application might be made to the Home Government to convey our mails from Point de Galle to England, and to contribute £30,000 a year in aid of a subsidy which the Colonies might be called upon to pay for delivering their letters at Ceylon; and we recommend that an early opportunity should be taken of cancelling the existing contract, with the view of effecting such an arrangement, or of subsidizing a local company.

53. In conclusion, we have only to add, that although it is quite possible that our Report may not have touched upon every alteration or amelioration that might be made in the business of the Post Office Department, yet, having adverted to all those which seem of the greatest importance, we consider that any others, should such appear, would be merely in points of detail, which ought without difficulty to be rectified by the energy of the Postmaster General, when possessing the larger powers with which we recommend that he should be invested, and when a new and convenient Post Office shall have been erected.

William Harvie Christie, Esq., Postmaster General, called in and examined :—

1. By the Chairman: You are Postmaster General? I am.
2. Do you superintend the general management of the Post Office? Yes.
3. In every department? In every department; but the Letter Branch being more a matter of detail, I have interfered less with that than any other.
4. You consider the Letter Branch immediately under the supervision of Mr. Hunt? I have seldom interfered with it, except where an abuse has been brought forward which required my interposition. Generally speaking, I have let Mr. Hunt arrange everything in his own way.
5. Do you give your personal supervision to the management of the accounts and correspondence? The correspondence chiefly comes before the Postmaster General; it of course comprises all letters received and despatched, time tables, contractors' arrangements, new Post Offices, and so on.
6. Who is the clerk in the Post Office that has, under yourself, the supervision of the correspondence? Everything comes before me, and the Secretary of course carries out my instructions.
7. That is Mr. Abbott? Mr. Abbott.
8. What supervision do you exercise over the Accountant, Mr. Keble? Every month an attested statement of the country postmasters' accounts, including the accounts of the General Post Office, is brought before me. This statement gives all the collections for postage and for postage stamps, and I go over them and check the accounts myself; I further see that all the vouchers are sent in. Every cheque is signed by myself.
9. Do you supervise the issuing of stamps? Requisitions are made out by the office in Sydney, and also by the country postmasters, and if it is certified by the Accountant that 75 per cent. has been paid on the previous issue, I approve the requisition; it is then taken to the Inspector of Stamps, which is a distinct department, and he grants these postage stamps on such requisitions; and they are then furnished to the General Post Office, or forwarded to the country postmasters from the Sale of Stamps Room.
10. Suppose a country postmaster had paid 75 per cent. on an issue to the extent of £10, and then made a requisition for £200, would it be granted? Certainly not. Even with regard to the General Post Office, I thought at one time that they were in the habit of drawing too much, and I made a limit to them of £300 at any one time. But the Accountant, in a case like that you put, would say the application was altogether ridiculous, and it would not of course be granted. Of course the larger the Post Office the larger would be the amount of stamps that would be issued to the postmaster at one time.*
11. Supposing that the postmaster at Maitland, for instance, were to ask one month for £50, and paid 75 per cent. upon that, and suppose that the following month he asked for £100, would he have the £100 worth of stamps issued to him without any payment at all? Certainly; the £100 would be more than covered by his security, and his salary is of that importance that I would give it.

12.

By witness on revision*:—An order was given by me that no country postmaster should receive a larger supply than £100 at a time, which is the amount of his personal bond.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.
13 Mar., 1862.

12. Is that issue at par cost, or at any discount? Ten per cent. discount. It was originally five per cent., but I think it was when Sir Henry Watson Parker was Premier, I shewed him that the country postmasters were not sufficiently paid, and he then said that, rather than put any additional sum on the Estimates to increase their salaries, he would prefer increasing their commission on the sale of stamps, which was accordingly done.

13. Does the Post Office purchase back stamps that have been issued? Yes. I found that in Victoria, in some of the larger Post Offices, it was allowed, and I recommended that it should be done here—that we should receive back stamps that had not been defaced, on payment by the public of five per cent.

14. If not defaced they are good for use? They are; but Mr. Richards, the Government Printer, and the Auditor General, I think, wished that they should be destroyed, and they are destroyed. That is not in my province. I believe Mr. Richards prefers destroying the stamps, although they are supposed to be not unfit for use.

15. You think it advisable that stamps should be purchased back in this way? I think it is a great convenience to the public; it acts as a kind of minor money order, and to people up the country it is very convenient. The only abuse I have known arise from it will be prevented if a recommendation of mine is carried out. I may state that this is the rule under which postage stamps are taken from the public. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.) This is the letter of the Treasury which approves of the mode in which it was to be conducted (Handed in. Vide Appendix B.), and this is the draft of a subsequent letter I sent in on the subject, which was acted on. (Handed in. Vide Appendix C.) But if a proposition of mine is carried out which I sent in in September, 1860, the country postmasters will get a fixed salary, and the only two objections to the system of giving commission on stamps will at once cease. The two objections are these, that while we give the licensed stamp sellers in Sydney five per cent. only, we give the country postmasters ten per cent., and in two instances country postmasters have undersold other parties; for instance, the postmaster at Newtown has been underselling the licensed vendors of stamps by going round to the banks in Sydney and other places and offering them at a reduction. Again, having a commission of ten per cent. on the sale of stamps, and being allowed for simplicity's sake to send stamps, for which money has been exchanged, as cash, and such exchange having only a deduction of five per cent., the country postmasters can, if they choose, take an advantage of the larger per centage, which was not intended. This is the draft of the letter in which I recommended that there should be no commission whatever to country postmasters. (Handed in. Vide Appendix D.)

16. You have had no answer to this? No. This is a Minute of mine, made for my own satisfaction, which puts more clearly the two objections I have just pointed out. (Handed in. Vide Appendix E.) What I proposed was, that the commission on the sale of postage stamps for the year might be taken as a guide, and that the country postmasters should have their salaries permanently increased to that extent. After this year the revenue would gain by such an arrangement; the postmasters would get less, and there would be less trouble in keeping the accounts.

17. When money is received for these postage stamps, does the Accountant take notice of it? Yes.

18. Does he enter it in a cash book? Yes. There is £100 placed to credit to meet advances, and these stamps that come in go to the debtor account against that. I think he settles once a quarter, closes the account, and a number of stamps are handed in equivalent to the advance.

19. Are you aware what books the Cashier keeps? Yes; he keeps a regular cash book—or as it may be more correctly styled, a revenue book and an expenditure book—and a separate book shewing the account of postage stamps exchanged; and some other books that perhaps he will explain better than I can. The bulk of the books kept by him is as Secretary, the correspondence being very large, and the registration of letters very complete. The letters received are about 1,000 a month, or 12,000 per annum; the manuscript letters in reply about 3,000 per annum; and the blank covers about 5,000, besides the various returns. A personal inspection of the books will be more satisfactory than my description. They are very well kept.

20. Are they separate departments—the Secretary and Cashier? The Secretary and Cashier are united in one, which I do not approve. The Cash and Corresponding, the Letter Branch, and the Account, are the three great branches; and they are perfectly distinct, except as they come before me in official correspondence, through the Secretary.

21. Are there separate clerks in each of these? Yes, but they go from one to the other as I think right.

22. Then, supposing there were a press of business, you would direct some of the clerks from one department to go into another for the time? I invariably do that. On an English mail arriving I send clerks down into the Letter Branch to assist, and the same occasionally in the case of the despatch of mails; but there is a difficulty about reciprocating, the clerks are not brought up from the Letter Branch to assist the other branches.

23. Is there perfect harmony reigning between these branches? No, I am sorry to say very much the contrary.

24. How do you account for that? I account for it by the influence of Mr. Hunt entirely.

25. In what way exercised? Before I came into the office—I believe I must go into the history of the matter—there existed a great deal of party feeling, and Mr. Thacker's Board reported, that though the Government did not think proper to remove two officers, Mr. Hunt and Mr. Raymond, they were at all events ordered to eschew all party spirit as much as possible. That was confirmed by a Minute of the Executive Council. On that check being given to Mr. Hunt, things went on very fairly till he went on leave to England, when Mr. Abbott took charge of the department, and I never had it in such good order as it was then.

It

It was nearly perfect. Mr. Hunt returned from England, and he then put some printed suggestions in the newspapers, which I did not think correct in the first place, and in the next I considered that it was impossible for me to carry on the department if the officers under me were to put printed suggestions in the papers; and as he attached his name, I at once represented the matter to the Government, and they reprimanded him very severely. Mr. Hunt was then tolerably quiet until the Retrenchment Committee of the Assembly sat; he then gave evidence, in which he alluded to other branches of the department, that he knew nothing about, and reflected on them. My evidence was given before his, and therefore I had no means of counteracting the prejudicial tendencies of his evidence; but the whole of the clerks in the Secretary's and the Accountant's Branches sent in a remonstrance to the Colonial Secretary, and requested a Board of Inquiry. I also requested to be heard before the Retrenchment Committee. Mr. Cowper did not think a Board of Inquiry necessary at the time, but he stated that when Parliament met again the remarks made by myself and the Secretary, the Accountant, and the clerks would be considered by the Committee. However, the matter was not taken up, and I think from that time Mr. Hunt thought he had more power than any one else. At all events, from that time more particularly he has carried on a system of annoyance, and the officers in the other branches fancying they were aggrieved, of course that did not tend to unanimity; and from that time the department of the General Post Office has not been what it should be as far as dissensions are concerned. To prove all that I am stating, in the fullest manner, I will ask the Board—although they seem a great mass of papers—to be kind enough to accept these papers. (Papers handed in.) I have not selected any papers prior to 1858, when he gave his evidence. These papers will shew the difficulties I have had to contend with. For the years 1858, 1859, 1860, and 1861, certain papers only have been selected; but to shew that I have not been unjust, I have put in the whole of the correspondence for the two months last, viz., January and February, 1862. There are minutes of various officers on these papers, and if the Board will be good enough to cause them to be printed, I think they will shew better than any document or evidence how the office has been conducted.

W. H. Christie, Esq.
13 Mar., 1862.

26. Is Mr. Hunt under your immediate supervision? He is under my supervision.
27. Do you interfere at all with his branch—I do not mean interfere in the sense of meddling, but do you supervise and order the duties? Very little. I have felt from the first that the Letter Branch was a branch, being a matter of detail, that it was impossible for me to go into minutely with advantage, and in fact, if I attempted to meddle with it too much, I saw that it might be brought against me; and therefore I have let Mr. Hunt have his own way very much indeed. Of course, if anything goes wrong in that branch it is brought before me, and I then deal with it, as may be seen from the papers selected, but the minor internal details I leave very much to the Superintendent.
28. Have you had any occasion to find fault with Mr. Hunt in the management of his department? Yes, very much so.
29. Are you aware that letters have not only gone astray, but that very often there have been great delays in the delivery? The Letter Branch is the branch in my department that is the least satisfactorily conducted.
30. Are you aware that what I have mentioned is the case? I am aware of it, and I think it is the fault of superintendence; and I say distinctly that it is perfectly impossible that the Post Office can be properly conducted as long as the present Superintendent of the Letter Branch holds his present appointment.
31. Who has the supervision of the clerks in that department? The Superintendent; everything is under his own control.
32. Do you not look after them in any way? When these questions arise, of course I do—when anything goes wrong, as will be seen from the papers I have just handed in, I issue an order, give a reprimand, or impose a fine, or deal otherwise with the case, as may be required; but in the details of the department, as I have said, I do not interfere.
33. You are cognizant of them all? Of course.
34. Are you aware what time the clerks come in the morning? There are attendance books kept, and they all have seven hours a day in the office. It is a continuous attendance in the case of the Account and Corresponding Branches, but it is not so in the Letter Branch, as some of the clerks have to be in attendance earlier and later for the receipt and despatch of mails, and they are consequently allowed certain hours of intermission.
35. They have to work extra time when there is an English mail? They have, and they then get extra pay.
36. Do you consider that the Letter Branch could be conducted in any way more advantageously to the public than it is now—giving greater facilities to the public. I do not know if you are aware of it, but in Victoria the facilities afforded to the public are greater than they are here? I do not know to what you particularly allude, but I have already stated that I do not think the Secretary ought to be Cashier, and if he were not, he would be able to look after the Letter Branch. He did so before, and it was then very well conducted indeed. That alteration would be the first step towards a great amelioration.
37. I will point out a particular instance:—If a mail from Melbourne arrives at the Post Office between five and six o'clock in the afternoon, although we know the mails from Melbourne are sometimes important in consequence of bringing English news, yet the letters are not delivered until the next day? It is perfectly true that the Delivery Branch closes at 5 p. m., and that the letter carriers do not go out after 4 p. m., except in the case of the English mail.
38. But they are not sorted for the boxes? The Hunter River mails are sorted.
39. The Melbourne mails are not? No, if they arrive after the office hours. The truth is, the Victorian Government are much more liberal in their expenditure than is the case here, and of course that has an important influence on the amount of facilities which can be afforded to the public.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.
13 Mar., 1862.

40. They could give greater facilities with more liberal arrangements? Yes; we pay £100 a year for the Hunter River mails. That has covered everything, and the clerks do not grumble; they are glad to wait and deliver the Hunter River mails, and to receive letters for post up to half-past seven. No doubt the Melbourne mails could be sorted for a trifle more. Anything of that kind is a matter of finance, and of extra pay.
41. Are you aware that in Melbourne the holders of boxes also receive their letters, after the arrival of an important mail, at six o'clock the following morning? I was not aware of that. But any arrangement of the kind is only a matter of money. I have drawn up a comparison between the Victorian and New South Wales Estimates for 1862, which presents a strong contrast not only in the details, but even more so in the totals. (Handed in. Vide Appendix F.)
42. Are your orders communicated directly to the Letter Branch when you require the clerks to wait. Is it by your orders they wait, or by Mr. Hunt's? Mr. Hunt's; except in the case of the English mail; that is always regulated by me. The rule is, that with the exception of the Hunter and Clarence River mails the Letter Branch closes at six o'clock.
43. If the Melbourne mail were to arrive, with late English news, who would give the orders for the clerks to remain. Supposing you thought it advisable, would you give the order? If I thought so, I would; but the Post Office regulation is that the Letter Branch closes at six o'clock, and, except in the case of the English mail and the Hunter River and Grafton mails, I would be disposed to allow the clerks to shut up at the hour named.
44. Do they never work after hours except when you give them instructions? It has not been usual with regard to the Letter Branch, but with regard to the Corresponding Branch that is more under my own eye.
45. Do you consider it advisable that the clerks in the Post Office should rigidly adhere to the hours named, regardless of the public convenience? No, but I think if they work overtime they should be allowed extra pay.
46. Would they not be allowed extra pay for other mails besides those you have named? They might be if reference was made to the Government. Of course, if it is desirable, arrangements could be made to afford greater facilities by increasing the payments.
47. Do you supervise the country contracts that are entered upon? Entirely, with the assistance of the Board that opens the tenders.
48. Do you consider that the work of the up-country contracts is as well done as it could be under the circumstances? I do.
49. Would you consider it advisable that the postal contractors should undertake large contracts for the whole of one district. In Victoria, I will explain, the contractors are generally men of large means, who undertake the whole postal lines of a district? Of course I would prefer the more responsible men, but whenever the American contractors have come down here their terms have always been so much dearer than those of others that they have not been recommended, and the Government have always stood out for the lowest tender.
50. Is the lowest tender always the best? It is not always the best; but it is always the one that is taken—except of course where there has been any previous breach of contract, or any other disqualification against a man who has tendered at a low price.
51. Is the delivery of the mails tolerably regular? I think it is very fairly so, considering the state of the roads, the bridges that are required, and the rivers and creeks that have to be crossed.
52. Are the mail routes as direct as they might be? Sometimes the direct route would not answer the object in view. On the banks of the great rivers in the interior, for instance, the great point is to visit every station that can be reached, and therefore it is not desirable to take the shortest route.
53. Is it desirable that the mail route should be diverted for the sake of calling at different stations? Decidedly. These are the only parties to be benefited in such districts. There are hardly any townships to supply on these rivers. But a great deal of trouble is taken in settling the mail routes, and if any question arises, the Postal Inspector reports on the route, and I also take the opinion of the Bench of Magistrates for the district.
54. Do you know what accounts are kept by the country postmasters? Yes; there is a ledger, in two volumes; there are three sets of accounts kept with them—a salary and fine account, a postage stamp account, and a postage account.
55. Is there any account current by which you can ascertain at a moment the liability of any individual? Certainly.
56. How is that made up? Daily. The cash for postage accounts is sent down monthly, the salary account goes out quarterly, and the postage stamps account half-yearly.
57. The stamps account only half-yearly? Yes.
58. Is that the case with all the postmasters of large towns as well as others? Yes.
59. Might it not happen that in Maitland or Bathurst, during the half-year, there would be some hundreds of pounds worth of stamps used? They would not be indebted to the full extent. You must recollect that they have to pay 75 per cent. on the previous issue before they can obtain another; then they have all given bonds for security; and, practically, the debts are very little indeed; altogether from £2,000 to £4,000 would cover the whole outstanding accounts of the country postmasters. I have held the office of Postmaster General for ten years, and our bad debts I may say are nothing. Care has always been taken with regard to the payment of 75 per cent. I should also point out that a new regulation has been made, which changes the present system as to the supply of postage stamps to country postmasters. Perhaps I had better hand in the whole of these regulations, which when promulgated will become the rules of the Post Office. (Handed in.)
60. By Mr. Knox: Clause 31 is the one you refer to? Yes.
61. By the Chairman: When you consider a step necessary for the immediate advantage of the public, or the good of the Post Office, do you act on it at once? I have no power without referring to the Government.

62. You have to apply to the Government first? Yes.
63. When such cases do occur, do you get an answer immediately? Sometimes.
64. And sometimes I suppose you have to wait some months? I think anything of the nature you mentioned, with regard to the Melbourne mails, would be answered at once. If there had been any requisition or representation on that subject from the merchants of the city, I should have at once forwarded it and recommended it, and no doubt immediate attention would have been given to it. But the truth is, the Post Office building itself has a great deal to answer for, it is so small and inconvenient in every way.
65. You find the accommodation not sufficient? Yes; but the chief difficulty lies, perhaps, not so much in its insufficiency, as in the detached nature of the accommodation it affords, which in a manner forces us to keep up all these separate branches, instead of having the business conducted in a long room like a bank. I have prepared myself with a few recommendations for the improvement of the Post Office arrangements, if the Board would be good enough to accept them. In the first place, I think that a new Post Office is very urgently required, and that it is impossible that the work can be done as efficiently and economically as it ought to be until there is a new Post Office. Then I have said before, and I will say again, that the Post Office can never be properly conducted so long as the present Superintendent of the Letter Branch is at the head of that branch. If you ask my reasons, I will state that he has always obstructed me, which I can prove, and which I trust these memoranda (alluding to papers before handed in) will prove incontestably. On another point, it is difficult to prove who prompts the newspaper editors, but it is a fact that there have always been articles in the papers puffing up Mr. Hunt and depreciating others connected with the Post Office. He has also, as I believe, been the cause of dissensions amongst the officers of the establishment, which I can only prove negatively, by saying that they were very unanimous as long as Mr. Abbott was at the head of the Letter Branch. I should recommend that the office of Cashier should be distinct from that of Secretary altogether. The Cashier's duties are duties that must be attended to at once, and I find at times, when the Secretary is required for higher duties, that I cannot take him off from the duty of counting the money. I think the present Secretary should be relieved of the duties of Cashier; and that, having been formerly Superintendent of the Letter Branch, he ought to have the superintendence of it again, and in that case we could do without a Superintendent of the Letter Branch at all. In making that recommendation, the only difficulty I feel is as to whether the Cashier should be in the Account Branch; but perhaps that might in some degree get rid of the check that has hitherto existed, and therefore I should be disposed to put him under the Secretary. In Victoria there are at different Post Offices in the interior forty Government officers who are not storekeepers, but entirely under the control of the Government; and I think that ought to be the case in many instances in New South Wales. For example, I am of opinion that Post Offices ought to be built, and there ought to be Government officials as postmasters, at Bathurst and Mudgee on the Western Road; at Maitland, Murrurundi, Tamworth, and Armidale on the Northern Road; and at Goulburn, Albury, and Deniliquin on the Southern Road; and that gradually that system ought to be extended to any very rising township. Then, as I have mentioned elsewhere, I think the per centage on the sale of stamps ought to cease, and that a permanent increase of salary to the country postmasters ought to be made equal to their present commission on the sale of stamps, as I stated in my letter of the 12th September, 1860. Your questions do not lead to retrenchment, and, perhaps, I need not now take up that subject; but I may say, that if the present duties of the establishment are augmented, not much retrenchment can be made. I certainly have a clerk in charge of the Delivery Branch, who has not during the day a particular compartment to attend to; and if it were an object to pinch very closely, he might be dispensed with; but if there is to be any increased work thrown on the Delivery Branch, I would not make that recommendation.
66. When does he attend? He attends in the morning, and is engaged in sorting for the private boxes, and he also has charge of the registered letters; but during the day he is not employed continuously in serving the public; and if there were a great question of retrenchment, perhaps he might be more easily spared than any other.
67. What is the name of that clerk? Mr. Buchanan. I do not mean to prejudice him personally; he might be employed at other work; I am speaking without reference to the party himself.
68. Have you any other suggestions to offer? The public have called for the Money Order System for a very long time, and I have recommended it. I think it ought to be carried out. Whether it could be carried out in the General Post Office, I cannot say; but my Report of 1860 specifies the way I propose to introduce it. I know no reason why a separate building could not be taken, where the Money Order System could be commenced; and until it is introduced into this country, we cannot get the advantage of the same system between this Colony and the United Kingdom.
69. You are aware there is a Money Order System working in connection with the Telegraph Office? Yes; but I do not think that serves the same purpose as the other would do.
70. Do you think it would add to the better conduct of the one department or the other, if the Telegraph Office were under the Post Office? It might be desirable, but I think they are distinct systems. One is the quickest mode, but the other is altogether the most businesslike.
71. You have mentioned that there is disunion among the clerks, and that that disunion has caused parties in the Post Office? It has got to be a kind of up-stairs and down-stairs thing. Mr. Hunt, being the head of the Letter Branch, has got his adherents of course; but I believe the Superintendent of the Letter Branch is at the bottom of it all; I am obliged to say that. It never existed when Mr. Hunt was away, and it existed to a very small extent shortly after Mr. Hunt was reprimanded; but certainly it now exists to an extent that makes it very unpleasant to everybody.

W. H.
Christie, Esq.

13 Mar., 1862.

W. H. Christie, Esq. 72. Is the Letter Office locked every night? Yes, there is a party in charge as housekeeper, being the wife of the party who drives the mail cart, and is resident at the General Post Office; they are very respectable people, and the keys are given to them; but all the compartments are locked up, and each of the clerks takes the key of his own. The registered letters are all kept in safes, and those for delivery are represented in the Delivery Room pigeon holes, by envelope only, bearing their address. With regard to the sorting of the English mails I recommended, when the mails were delivered at Kangaroo Point, South Australia, that two clerks should go down there and come up with the return mail steamer, and sort the mails on the passage. It would be more expensive now that they would have to come from Western Australia, but the delivery would be quicker, and they might make up mails going down.

13 Mar., 1862.

73. You mean in the same way as the Post Office authorities do in the steamers going home? Yes; that might be done if expense was no object. Then I consider that the letter carriers and officers of that grade, and also all country postmasters under £100 a year, ought to be appointed by the Postmaster General. I have nothing to do with the appointments now.

74. Who appoints them now? The Treasurer. I am not allowed to suspend officers; I consider I ought to have the right of suspension, even if I have no right of dismissal. I think with regard to the inferior officers, such as letter carriers, I ought to have the right of dismissal, as I used to have.

75. By Mr. Knox: Has that only been altered lately? I will hand in the papers connected with the cases that gave rise to the above decisions. The next suggestion I have to make relates to an unpopular tax; but if revenue is really required, it is one of the first things that should be dealt with. Newspapers, except after being published seven days, pay nothing; and I suppose they make up four-fifths of the whole weight of the mail bags. I think 20 newspapers weigh 3 lbs. Of course, if a tax were put on newspapers, not only would an additional revenue be derived, but the contracts would be immeasurably less expensive. I am hardly prepared to say how much it would affect the mail contracts; I certainly think I am within the mark when I say it would make a difference of £12,000 a year.

76. By the Chairman: You refer to colonial newspapers? Yes, and to re-addressed newspapers, on which no postage is sometimes paid, and yet they pass without detection.

77. By Mr. Knox: It would be the difference of weight that would make the difference in the cost of contracts? Yes. The postage on newspapers may be called a tax on knowledge, but if the object is to make the Post Office yield more revenue, that is the most feasible tax. Then, as I have already said, I would propose that no commission should be allowed on the sale of stamps, and I would extend that to the licensed stamp sellers in Sydney also, and allow all parties to sell who might choose to do so. I think it would be very desirable to appoint sub-offices in Sydney, and perhaps in some of the larger towns, to take in registered letters (and they might also sell stamps), and that they should receive a fixed salary. I think that would be a great convenience. I, some time back, was asked by Mr. Parker, when Colonial Secretary, to draft a new Postage Bill, which repealed all former Acts, and gave a great deal more power to the Executive. This I did, and the Bill was subsequently referred back to me by the present head of the Government, and it is now with the Parliamentary Draftsman. At present, though the Executive can make postal arrangements with Great Britain, they have very little power to do so with the colonies, or foreign countries. For instance—from Victoria there is a proposition to put a fine on letters and book-packets which are not sufficiently paid by stamps, but our law is against that; the law is, that they must be delivered without further charge. The only other two recommendations I have to make are matters of detail. It was proposed formerly, when a Postage Bill was brought in, that ships proceeding outwards should not be allowed to clear at the Customs till they had shewn a certificate from the Post Office that they had given notice of the port they were going to, and their probable time of departure. That was called an Algerine clause in the Assembly, and it was got rid of; but I am still of opinion that it ought to be the rule. At present many vessels start without our knowing it, and we have no opportunity to put mails on board. I think that might be prevented by a port regulation.

78. By Mr. King: You know that, sometimes, the captain of a vessel does not himself know where he is going to when he puts to sea, that he is guided often by the winds he meets with—he “goes seeking,” as it is called? At all events, the time of departure ought to be stated.

79. By Mr. Watt: Supposing a ship does not wish to carry a mail, why should she be compelled to do so? For the general good of the public. We oblige them to carry mails by law, and I do not think they ought to evade it by not giving notice. The only other recommendation I have to make is a mere matter of detail. In the Port Regulations it is stated that mails are to be delivered to the Postmaster General, or any officer he may appoint, or to the Portmaster. I find that has led to some little confusion; and I think the Portmaster ought to be left out, and the Post Office only be made responsible. It has been stated to me that it has given rise to a little trouble.

80. By the Chairman: Does the revenue derived from the boxes form part of the general revenue of the Post Office? Yes; the revenue of the department is derived from postage stamps; from postage, which is now a very small item, being made up chiefly by loose ship letters, and from private boxes. I would beg to hand in a return of the revenue and expenditure of the Post Office for the last nine years, from 1852 to the end of 1861. (Handed in. Vide Appendix G.) I have also prepared a return of the Sydney Establishment, shewing the cost of the three branches separately, and the number of persons employed; that is also from 1852 to 1861. (Handed in. Vide Appendix H.) By this it will be seen that, lately, the Establishment though increasing has not been extravagant.

81. By Mr. Watt: Is there a uniform charge for private boxes? Yes. It will be raised by the new regulations, and was recommended to be raised by the Post Office Board of 1856. It will be £2 2s. next year.

82. By Mr. Knox: Can you furnish us with details of the number of letters and newspapers and so on? My last Report contains all that so fully that I beg to refer the Board to it for information of that kind. I beg to hand in some papers relating to certain cases which the Treasurer directed to be laid before the Board. The first case, No. 32, is one in which I felt it necessary to call attention to the general tone of the Minutes of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch, Mr. Hunt, in his correspondence of a very recent date. (Papers handed in.) The other, No. 34, relates to a complaint of Mr. Hunt, respecting certain letters which appeared in the newspapers. (Papers handed in.) There are other papers which bear upon the matter, but which were not specially directed to be laid before the Board; as these will, doubtless, be referred to, I beg to hand them in. (Handed in.) I also hand in a Nominal Return of the Department of the General Post Office, on 31st December, 1861. (Handed in. Vide Appendix I.)

APPENDIX.

A.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
26 June, 1861.*

POSTAGE STAMPS.

THE public are informed, that on and after the 1st July next, they can procure money for postage stamps at all Post Offices throughout the Colony.

A charge of 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ cent. will be made for such accommodation, on the following scale:—

| | s. | d. |
|---|----|----|
| For stamps not exceeding 1s. 8d. in value | 0 | 1 |
| Exceeding 1s. 8d., and not exceeding 3s. 4d. | 0 | 2 |

and so on, at the rate of 1d. for every 1s. 8d., or portion of 1s. 8d.

None but New South Wales postage stamps will be exchanged, and those only on condition that they are neither soiled nor damaged.

*The Treasury, New South Wales,
2 August, 1861.*

Sir,

The propositions contained in your letter of the 13th ultimo, respecting the further arrangements which are necessary for the purpose of giving effect to the Regulations for converting postage stamps into cash, having been duly considered, I am now directed to inform you, that it has been decided to adopt the following measures:—

1. Stamps purchased by country postmasters are to be received by you in payment of their remittances.
 2. These stamps will be paid for, at their representative value, by the Inspector.
 3. Stamps purchased at the General Post Office are to be periodically handed over to the Inspector, who will reimburse you the amount paid for them.
 4. The stamps thus transferred to the Inspector are to be accompanied by an account shewing their number and value, and the difference between the amount paid and that represented by them.
 5. All such stamps will be destroyed at stated periods, under due supervision.
- A credit will be opened, on application, to enable you to make payments, as above.

I have, &c.,

HENRY LANE,
Under Secretary.

The Postmaster General.

C.

Sir,

I have the honor to enclose, for the information of the Honorable the Secretary for Finance, communications from the postmasters, Bendemeer and Peel respectively, shewing the necessity for making further arrangements in order to carry out effectually the late plan adopted by the Government of allowing the public to obtain money for postage stamps.

2. As stated by the Peel postmaster, 5 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. is the commission allowed to postmasters on the purchase of stamps, according to the recent notice. It must be remembered, however, that 5 per cent. is the minimum commission, and that if the postmaster only obtains that on a sale of one-eighth, the commission is much more on smaller sales.

3. As the plan proposed by me of an increase of salary to country postmasters equivalent to 5 per cent. commission on their sale of stamps, and a consequent reduction of their present commission to 5 per cent., has not been adopted, I have no other remedy to propose, and am disposed to think that there is not much to complain of on the head of the commission authorized.

4. It will no doubt be a hardship to postmasters if they have not the power of obtaining money for their stamps, and I would therefore propose that the stamps purchased by country postmasters should be used as remittances to the General Post Office, and that all stamps purchased from the public should be exchangeable for money at the office of the Inspector of Stamps, where they can be destroyed or served out again as that officer may decide.

4. As the Auditor General concurs with me in the expediency of adopting the plan pointed out in the preceding paragraph, I have to request the sanction of the Honorable the Treasurer thereto, and that the necessary instructions be given to the Inspector of Stamps.

I have, &c.

D.

*General Post Office,
Sydney, September, 1860.*

Sir,

I have the honor to request that you will bring under the notice of the Honorable the Minister for Finance and Trade, the desirability of withdrawing, from the 1st January next, the commission on the sale of postage stamps now allowed to postmasters and licensed vendors, and of substituting therefor a fixed addition to the salary of each postmaster, equal to the amount of commission that will be received by him during the present year, and to each licensed vendor the minimum amount of salary allowed to postmasters on this revised scale.

2. The getting rid of the commission in question will considerably increase the revenue, simplify the accounts, and abolish the competition that has sprung up on the part of some country postmasters with the licensed vendors of stamps. The competition to which I allude is caused by some of the postmasters furnishing the public with wholesale supplies of postage stamps at a discount, thereby rendering comparatively useless the discontinuance, at the General Post Office, of the discount formerly allowed

W. H. Christie, Esq. allowed the public, and competing unfairly with the licensed stamp sellers, who only receive 5 per cent. commission, and are consequently not able to sell postage stamps to the public on the same advantageous terms.

13 Mar., 1862.

3. The amount that will be received by the postmasters for the present year, as commission on the sale of postage stamps, I estimate at something short of £3,000, and the proposed salary to licensed vendors of stamps at £700 per annum; so that, if the change proposed by me be approved, it will be necessary to supplement the vote for country postmasters' and licensed vendors' salaries by the sum of £3,700, which will not only provide for the additions to the salaries of the postmasters of offices already in existence, but will allow for the increase that will have to be made to the salary given to the postmasters of any new offices that may be established during 1861; whilst it is certain that the augmented revenue derivable from the sale of stamps without commission will more than compensate for the increase in the estimate, and the proportionate saving will be greater every year.

I have, &c.,

The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Postmaster General.

E.

MEMO. for Secretary, and for my own reference.

With reference to the matter of exchanging postage stamps for money, I am disposed to think that abuses that were not foreseen may arise therefrom. For example:—Postmasters may remit stamps to Cashier as cash, on account of sale of postage stamps, on which they have received already a discount of 10 per cent., and may then send in another requisition, and receive 10 per cent. commission on such requisition, the supply from which may be the substitute for the stamps remitted.

My recommendation that the commission allowed on the sale of stamps should cease, and an increased rate of fixed salary be accorded to country postmasters, has not yet been replied to.

If the proposed recommendation be carried out, it will put a stop to the abuse above alluded to, and also to that of country postmasters underselling licensed vendors of stamps.

MONDAY, 24 MARCH, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

| | | |
|-----------|--|------------|
| MR. KING, | | MR. SMART, |
| MR. KNOX, | | MR. WATT. |

Robert Allen Hunt, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are the Superintendent of the Letter Branch of the Post Office? R. A. Hunt, Esq.
Yes.
2. The Letter Branch falls immediately under your own supervision? Yes.
3. The Postmaster General does not interfere with your department? Yes, he does, very much. 24 Mar., 1862.
4. Do you then consider your management of it interfered with? Yes, by him and the Secretary; I have no authority in the matter; I must refer to the Postmaster General for instructions upon every point.
5. What do you consider your duties to be? Merely the superintendence of the mechanical department, the delivery and despatch of mails. I see that the clerks and letter carriers attend to their duties, and are punctual in their attendance. I also attend to verbal complaints of non-delivery of letters.
6. Are the clerks directly under your supervision? Yes, directly, the clerks in the letter branch, the letter carriers and messengers.
7. Are they so much under your supervision that if you thought it advisable for the convenience of the public to direct them to remain beyond the usual hours, for the delivery of the mails, you could do so? I have no authority; the hours are fixed by Act of Council for the closing and opening the office; the Act prevents it being open longer than from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. A mail arriving after 5 o'clock cannot be delivered.
8. Is that according to Act of Council? According to the rules of the Executive.
9. Are not the Hunter River mails delivered after five? That is a special service, and for which the clerks are paid extra; they attend two hours later.
10. Would it not be for the convenience of the public if in the case of a mail arriving from Melbourne with late intelligence the letters were delivered until a later hour? No doubt.
11. Have you ever represented that? No, I never have; because the hours appeared to be fixed, and therefore it would require this clause in the regulations to be abrogated.
12. By Mr. Knox: Have not the Executive the power of altering those regulations? Yes; and the Postmaster General may suggest any improvements.
13. By Mr. Watt: Which the Executive adopt or otherwise? Yes. All rules by the Act must be submitted to the Executive—that is the second clause of the Postage Act.
14. By the Chairman: Have you anything to do with the issue of stamps? They are sold in my department; I have nothing to do with the issue of them. There is a clerk who has charge of stamps.
15. To whom does he account? To the Cashier, through me; the cash goes through me up to the Cashier. He locks the money up in a box, to prevent the necessity of two people counting, and I send it up to the Cashier.
16. Is it in your department stamps are received back? It is.
17. And payment made for them? Yes.
18. And then I believe these stamps are destroyed? They are returned to the Government Printer, with the account current every month shewing the whole amount returned, and I believe he destroys them.
19. Do you consider the re-purchase of stamps beneficial to the public? I do not think it is any great benefit; I think the Money Order System better.
20. Can you conceive it to be any advantage for stamps to be bought back at five per cent. discount which had been issued at ten per cent., and then to be destroyed? No, I cannot. I thought at the time that alteration was made it would be better to have the stamps exchanged by the stamp sellers, who were allowed five per cent for selling, instead of reselling them to the office; there would thus be necessity for their destruction.
21. Are you aware of many complaints of postal irregularities in the suburbs? If you will allow me I will read some suggestions which I think will meet the case of the suburban districts, and the Board may afterwards put any questions to me.
22. Does the paper to which you refer bear upon the question I have asked you? Yes, upon the suburban districts.
23. Does it refer to irregularities that have occurred or to the prevention of them in future? To the prevention of them in future.
24. You are aware that these irregularities have occurred? Yes.
25. To what department can blame be attached for that—is it to your branch? If the clerks in making up the mails mis-sort the letters, that of course causes the irregularity; which is more serious in consequence of the alphabetical system of sorting in the Post Office here. That system has been found to be highly objectionable in England.
26. Your department is entirely separate from that of the Secretary and Cashier, is it not? As far as this, they are up stairs and we are down.
27. Does the Secretary's Branch work beneficially? I do not know much of the working of it latterly; since I gave my evidence before the Retrenchment Committee in 1858 there has been an unpleasant feeling.
28. You are not able to state whether it is worked to the advantage of the public? I cannot speak from my own knowledge; and I may say the same of the Account Branch.
29. Does the time of the arrival of mails fall immediately under your supervision? Yes.

- R. A. Hunt, Esq.
 24 Mar., 1852.
30. Are the mails pretty regular? Yes; they may be a few minutes later on the Monday morning, the train on the Southern line is generally later then.
31. That is immediately into Sydney? Yes—that is the Secretary's Department.
32. Then I imagine it would be to the Secretary we should look for the working of the Postal Inspector's department? Yes.
33. Have you ever suggested any improvement in the inland postal service? I have.
34. Could you attach any copy of such suggestions to your evidence? They are contained in the evidence I gave before the Retrenchment Committee.
35. By Mr. Watt: Were those suggestions made some time ago? In 1858.
36. Do you now adopt them without amendment? I do; I still think they should be carried out. You will find them in the 113th page of the Report. I refer particularly to the 5th suggestion.
37. You have nothing to add to that? No; I thought at the time that ought to have been carried out, and I think so still.
38. By the Chairman: Would not the delivery of letters on the arrival of an English mail be facilitated by having a Post Office clerk on board the mail coming from Melbourne? Yes, very much; and at the establishment of the service the Home Government wrote out here requesting the co-operation of this Government to pay a portion of the expenditure. It was suggested that there should be four clerks substituted for the Admiralty Agent, and I recommended Major Christie to comply with the suggestion. The proposal was, that there should be two clerks sent from England, and, as they would know nothing of our method of sorting, that there should also be a clerk sent from Melbourne and one from Sydney who, from their local knowledge, could sort the letters ready for delivery. The Government here declined to have anything to do with it.
39. What I ask is, would not the sorting of the mail be facilitated by having a clerk on board the vessel from Melbourne to Sydney? Very much.
40. Would there be any difficulty in carrying out such an arrangement? No; it would require two clerks merely, a senior and a junior clerk.
41. Would two clerks be sufficient? Quite sufficient to sort the letters.
42. To sort the letters only? Yes; if they could join with the Melbourne people and send to King George's Sound it would be much better.
43. Would it not much increase the expense? The Melbourne people might co-operate to send to King George's Sound.
44. By Mr. Smart: Do you think there would be sufficient time on the passage from Melbourne to Sydney to enable two clerks to sort the letters? Yes, I think two good clerks would do it.
45. It would then be necessary to provide a model Post Office on board the steamers, as there is on the Southampton line? They have spare fittings at Suez, and they might put them on board the steamers down here.
46. Have they spare boxes at Suez? They have, all ready to ship.
47. Belonging to the British Government? Either to the British Government or to the P. and O. Company, but it would be necessary to give six months notice before the abolition of the office of Admiralty Agent.
48. By Mr. Watt: Do you think there would be sufficient space? Yes.
49. By Mr. King: They would merely want pigeon holes in alphabetical order? Not in alphabetical order; the letters must be sorted in divisions, into town and country; for town into eight districts.
50. By the Chairman: The inland contract service in no way falls under your supervision? No.
51. Does not the despatch of mails? Not the contracts, I have nothing to do with contracts.
52. Could the time of the despatch of mails in your opinion be advantageously altered in any case? I think we are at the mercy of the railway authorities. You mean the Southern and Western mails?
53. All mails—all or any mails? It would be a great convenience if they could all be despatched at the same hour, as they are in London. The railway people will not wait for us, we are obliged to comply with their rules. We have been obliged to shift and change several times. They now go at five o'clock, and last winter they went at half-past six. These changes are very inconvenient, and upset all our arrangements.
54. By Mr. Knox: They now leave at five? Yes, and we are obliged to close the mail at four, while the Southern and Western mails go at one, at the special request of the inhabitants of Bathurst.
55. They used to close at half-past four? They used to go at five, and the train went at half-past six.
56. How long has that been the case? Three or four months.
57. By Mr. Watt: There is now a train at half-past six? That goes only to Parramatta.
58. By the Chairman: Have you made any suggestions by which the working of the department under your immediate supervision could be improved for the benefit of the public? I have; I have a copy of them here. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.) My own impression is that the office ought to be amalgamated, and that I ought to have the control of the clerks in the Account Branch and Secretary's Office, and be able to call upon them to assist in cases of emergency.
59. Do they not assist in cases of emergency? I receive the assistance of two on the arrival of the English mail, on its despatch I get none; the consequence is, that I have to go myself to Moore's Wharf to receive late letters.
60. How many clerks are there in the department under your supervision? Seventeen.
61. Are you aware how many there are in the Accountant's Department? Two.

62. How many are there under the Secretary? I think five or six.
63. You receive the assistance of two only in cases of emergency? Yes, two on the receipt of the mail—I have had three—but I get no assistance in despatching the mail.
64. Do you think such assistance is necessary? I do; in fact ten years ago all I had to do was to ring the bell and the whole of the clerks came down without further notice—now I am obliged to send in a requisition for the assistance of two or three.
65. By Mr. Smart: To whom do you send the requisition? To the Postmaster General. I am obliged to go to Moore's Wharf myself to keep the mail open. I was there on Saturday last, and received 255 letters, the revenue derived from the late fee upon which amounted to £23.
66. That is for the outward mail? Yes. I go myself, and have done so since I commenced it.
67. By the Chairman: What are the hours of attendance for the clerks in the Post Office? In the Inland Rooms the hours are from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., seven hours.
68. How many are there at seven o'clock? The inland clerks are seven.
69. Do you consider that the duties of all the clerks in the Letter Department extend over eleven hours? I do not say eleven, but seven hours. The hours are fixed by the Government. The clerks who go at seven go away to breakfast and dinner—those in the Inland Room. They come at seven and open the mails that come from the Hunter and railway, and despatch the letter carriers at nine. The clerks in the Delivery Room come at eight, and go away at eleven to get their dinners; they then come back at one o'clock and leave at five. They do not all leave at the same time, but relieve each other.
70. Are these hours of attendance strictly adhered to even when you are pushed for assistance, when a mail is coming in or going out? When a mail is going out they come at six, and remain till eight, nine, or ten.
71. Then these hours are not strictly adhered to? Yes, except when an English mail is going out.
72. During these periods you have not the assistance of the other clerks in the office? No, except on the arrival of the English mail.
73. When the English mail is going, do you get any extra assistance from other clerks, those in the Secretary's and Accountant's? I have already stated —
74. You state that you have only two on the receipt of the English mail? I have stated that I have none on the despatch of the mail.
75. Do you not conceive that it would be for the advantage of the public if you were to have such assistance? I do.
76. Is there any reason why the clerks in those branches should attend merely on ordinary hours when there is a press of business? I should say not, if they were ordered to come.
77. If they were ordered to come they would come? If I had authority to order them to come they would.
78. Is the Post Office building as convenient as it might be? No, it is very inconvenient. I have now seven rooms which I have to visit in three different buildings. They are still patching it up, and I think it is a great waste of money to patch it up as they have done for a Telegraph Office.
79. Has not the Telegraph Office diminished somewhat of your room? Very little; a small portion of the Stamp Room, the Stamp Sale Room, they have converted into a hall, and they have removed the old Registry Office which formerly stood in the hall.
80. You are aware that the Post Office is not self-supporting? I am, perfectly.
81. Could you suggest any means by which it could be made so in a greater degree than it is now? I made the suggestion in my evidence in 1858. I think we ought to derive the same revenue from our letters as the Melbourne people. I do not see why they should get four-pence and we only two-pence. They have been pocketing four-pence ever since the separation, besides two-pence for town letters, and one penny for newspapers.
82. Are newspapers in Victoria taxed one penny? Yes.
83. That is local papers? Yes.
84. By Mr. Knox: What difference would that make in your revenue? Nearly double, if country letters were four-pence and town letters two-pence. The inland postage would increase about £15,000, on a rough calculation.
85. By Mr. King: Would you alter the foreign postage? No, that is the same as Victoria. Victoria has been deriving about £100,000 from their postal revenue, while ours is about £40,000.
86. By Mr. Watt: Is the Post Office Department self-supporting in Victoria? I think so.
87. By the Chairman: Does your department work harmoniously with other departments of the Post Office? Yes, I know of no quarrel with anybody there.
88. Then there is a general good feeling prevailing between you and the others? There has been a little ill feeling against myself, in consequence of the evidence I gave before the Retrenchment Committee, and there have been some little attacks in the newspapers in various ways.
89. By Mr. Smart: Do you think the attacks in the newspapers emanated from the office? If the Committee will ask the Postmaster General for some documents he has in his possession, they will see that it is so.
90. By Mr. King: Do they bear upon that subject? Yes. This attack upon me in the papers was made by a man of the name of Plumb, who had formerly been a clerk in the Post Office, and was then living at Muswellbrook. I went to Mr. Hanson, of the Empire, respecting the articles written under the name of Scrutator, and he refused to publish any more of them, and they were then sent to Plumb, who forwarded them to the Empire under his own name.
91. By Mr. Smart: Who is Plumb? He was a clerk in the office when I gave my evidence before the Committee, and was allowed to resign.

- R. A. Hunt, Esq.

92. What is he now? He has been a police constable, and was dismissed for drunkenness.
93. He is a person over whom the Post Office authorities have no control? No, but he is in correspondence with the clerks in the office—no doubt of it. (The witness put in the paper. Vide Appendix B.) I have but one object in view,—namely, to make the department as efficient as possible.
94. By the Chairman: Are the Board to consider that the papers you have handed in give them all the information you can give, as to making your department more efficient for the public service? I do not think so.
95. Can you make any other suggestions? The time has been so short since I received the summons to attend the Board, that I have not been able to prepare any further written suggestions, but I shall be happy to answer any questions that may be put to me.
96. Can you make any suggestions for improving the branch of the department immediately under your supervision? The only suggestion I have to make is with reference to the building; if the building were more concentrated, no doubt the work might be performed with fewer clerks, but at present, the offices being so detached and scattered, we cannot do with a less staff, indeed we often find ourselves short-handed.
97. In consequence of the scattered nature of the premises? Yes. In the evidence I gave before the Committee I recommended the Government to carry the Post Office buildings through to Pitt-street.
98. Is there any other suggestion you can make? I do not think there is any.
99. By Mr. Watt: What is the nature of your authority in your own department—does any one interfere with you in your particular department? Yes, they do interfere, because they keep up a correspondence with the clerks under me which I think is not regular—from Major Christie downwards.
100. With some of your clerks? Yes, when I think they ought to address me.
101. Do you mean in matters connected with the details of your department, that the Postmaster General addresses your subordinate clerks? Yes.
102. Are these matters brought before you by your subordinates? Yes. After I had given my evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, Major Christie sent a copy of it to the shipping officer, with a memorandum, which I consider was wrong, to get up a case against my evidence. I remonstrated with Major Christie, in writing, upon the subject. A copy of that remonstrance I have here.
103. The shipping department comes under you? Yes. I told Major Christie it was not right, and requested him to send a copy of the memo. to me, in order that it might pass through me. He refused to do so, and being a subordinate, I was obliged to submit.
104. Have you had other instances of the same kind? Yes; they are not very numerous, but that is one, and I thought it wrong to get up remonstrances to the Government to weaken the force of my evidence.
105. That is an exceptional case, or is it habitual? It is a common practice, but now I do not mind it.
106. By Mr. King: If you gave an order, would the Postmaster General give a counter order? No, this was a remonstrance; but the Secretary will send a message to the clerk in the Delivery Room to do so and so, and Major Christie will do the same. These orders should be addressed to me.
107. By Mr. Watt: That might occur when you were absent? No, when I have been there. I have been very much annoyed about it.
108. By Mr. Smart: You think it weakens your influence in the department? No doubt, very much.
109. Have you had occasion to complain of any clerks in the office in consequence of this correspondence? Yes, I complained of that man, the shipping officer.
110. By Mr. Watt: Is that M'Mahon? Yes.
111. By Mr. Smart: Did Major Christie entertain your complaint? I have a copy of his answer.
112. Did he refuse to entertain your complaint? He said he could act as he thought proper.
113. Do the clerks under your orders carry out your orders, or disobey them in consequence? They do anything I want them.
114. You find they do not disobey your orders at all? No, they would not.
115. At what time does the first delivery in the city take place? Nine is the hour fixed.
116. And for the suburbs? They are ordered to go at the same time.
117. Are not some of the mails for the suburbs detained till ten or half-past ten? Yes; there is a new arrangement with the contractors which detains the mail till ten.
118. Why was that alteration made? I pointed out the inconvenience of that. For instance, they ought to go to Watson's Bay at nine o'clock, but instead of that they altered the hour, and gave them two mails per day instead of one.
119. These mails now do not leave the Post Office until ten o'clock, and do not reach their destination until half-past eleven or twelve? Yes.
120. That arrangement came into force from the commencement of this year? Yes; you will find some useful suggestions with reference to the suburban mails in the paper I have handed in.
121. How soon after the arrival of the English mail do you get all your letters delivered? The sorting is calculated generally to occupy about four hours and a-half, that is, the opening and sorting of the English mail.
122. Are all the letters delivered through the city and suburbs as soon as sorted? Yes. The last mail came in at three o'clock in the afternoon, and we despatched the letter carriers to Balmain and the suburbs at seven.

123. How do you account for the fact of some of the letters being detained till the following Tuesday? These letters are frequently mis-sorted and sent in the Melbourne mail, and these are then sent on from Melbourne by the next steamer; we got hundreds from Melbourne that have been thus mis-sorted.
124. How do you account for these letters not being sent until the following Tuesday, as neither the Melbourne nor Adelaide steamers had arrived in the interim? Without seeing the envelope of the letter I cannot say. A letter sent on from Melbourne would bear the Melbourne stamp. It might have been mis-sorted in consequence of sticking to another letter. I had a letter for Lady Young the other day which went to Albury; people wondered how it could get to Albury; on turning it over, I found it had no Sydney stamp, and I then saw that it had stuck to another letter, and been sent with it to Albury.
125. Do you see any difficulty in the way of suburban mails leaving the Post Office at the same time as the city mails leave? They might leave.
126. In point of fact they do not? They do not leave till ten.
127. By Mr. Knox: What was the reason of this alteration? It was to make them uniform with the railway mails.
128. Whose alteration was this—yours or the Postmaster General's? Major Christie's.
129. Then you have not the entire control? No, that is a contract; a man has a contract to take the mail to Watson's Bay, and I have nothing to do with the contracts.
130. You made no remonstrance against the alteration? Yes, I did.
131. By Mr. King: Is the fact that the letters are not sorted at the time, or that the contractors do not call at the time? That is the time fixed by the contract.
132. By Mr. Watt: Has the mere convenience of contractors led to this change? I do not know.
133. No suggestion came from the public? No; I was astonished at it myself, and objected to it when Sir Henry Watson Parker complained of the late arrival previously, when it went at nine.
134. By Mr. Smart: What was the cause of the alteration in making up the Southern mails; I believe there have been great complaints at Queanbeyan? I do not know anything about it beyond what I saw in the newspapers.
135. By Mr. Knox: That does not come under your department? No; the Postal Inspector and Secretary have the management of these things.
136. I observe in this Report of the Postmaster General for the year 1860, that 349,000 letters were posted for town delivery, and 3,012,000 were posted for the country; do I understand that all these would be subject to a double fee if your suggestion were adopted? There would be more than double the amount received from them, because there would be the charge for weight, which goes on increasing.
137. By the Chairman: You said you know nothing of the Accountant's or of the Secretary's Branches, but do you know enough of the general working of the Post Office to give any opinion whether those branches work satisfactorily? I do not know of my own knowledge. I stated in my evidence before the Retrenchment Committee that if the postmasters paid cash for their stamps, the Accountant could be dispensed with altogether, as there would then be no necessity for keeping separate accounts for each of the postmasters. I recommended that the Accountants of all the public departments should be congregated in the Audit Office, and form a Board of Audit. The Accountant of the Customs is already in the Audit Office; and you will find, if you refer to the Estimates, that there is no Accountant under the head of Customs.
138. By Mr. Knox: There are no payments made by the Collector of Customs, and the payments made by the Postmaster General are numerous? Yes.
139. By Mr. King: Does the Postmaster General pay all the salaries in the department? He does by cheques.
140. And contracts? Contracts.
141. By the Chairman: Do you refer to the Estimates for this year, when you say there is no Accountant under the head of Customs? No, last year. I recommended that the Accountants should be congregated in the Audit Office, as it seems strange that accounts which have passed through the hands of a qualified Accountant should be examined at the Audit Office by a clerk at £200 a year.
142. By Mr. Watt: Who pays the letter carriers in the Post Office? The Postmaster General by cheque.
143. By his own hands? The Accountant and Cashier sign the cheques.
144. Who hands them to the letter carriers? One of the clerks gives them the cheques, and takes their receipts.
145. Would not a superior clerk be required to do that? No.
146. By Mr. Knox: Do you mean to say that there is so much work connected with the credit given to country postmasters for stamps, as to render it necessary to have an Accountant? Yes; I think if they paid cash as they do in England, the clerk who keeps the issue book would do all that was necessary, as there would be no accounts. They now pay 75 per cent., and get credit for the remainder.
147. How many country postmasters are there altogether? I think there may be 300.
148. By Mr. King: Does the country postmaster get commission on the sale of stamps? Yes, ten per cent.
149. And credit? Yes.
150. If he were made to pay for the amount of postage stamps issued to him, he would require a larger remuneration for the loss of interest on the money invested in the purchase of stamps? They do it in Melbourne.
151. By Mr. Watt: Pay cash for stamps? Yes.

R. A. Hunt,
Esq.

- R. A. Hunt, Esq.
24 Mar., 1862.
152. What discount do they get in Melbourne? Five per cent.; here they get ten.
153. Is there any such custom as we have here of allowing five per cent. for stamps returned to the Post Office? No; in Melbourne they have money orders.
154. Can you suggest any reason why such an allowance should be made? I cannot; it was pointed out to the Postmaster General.
155. By Mr. King: Have you any idea of the amount of commission you pay for the sale of stamps? I have no idea of the exact amount.
156. What allowance do you make to the vendors of stamps who are not postmasters? Five per cent. to the vendors, and ten per cent. to the postmasters.
157. How is it then that vendors come to us, and offer if we will take a large quantity to allow five per cent. discount? There is a postmaster at Newtown who vends stamps, and complaints were made by some of the vendors of his underselling them, in consequence of which his supply was limited; but Mr. Holt interested himself in his behalf,—he said the stamps were made to be sold, and any one had a right to sell as many as he could. He is now allowed stamps to the amount of £40 a month, on which he receives ten per cent., and for any further supply he receives only five.
158. By Mr. Knox: Can you give any idea of the amount of stamps received back at a discount of five per cent.? No, I cannot; Mr. Reeve keeps that account.
159. It is in your particular department? It is, and I might have seen the account. I think he gets an advance of £50 or £60 a month. It does not amount to much.
160. Do you know anything about the Money Order System? Yes. I visited the Money Order Office when I was in London in 1855, and when I returned to the Colony I recommended Major Christie to adopt the system in the principal post towns, as Maitland, Parramatta, Bathurst, Goulburn, Mudgee, and Brisbane.
161. It is in force in Victoria? Yes, and has been for some years; it is now in full force. I think Major Christie committed a great error in not adopting the system.
162. By the Chairman: Does not the Telegraph Office answer the purpose of a Money Order Office? No; people prefer the Post Office; they have a sort of liking for it. Every mail we are almost inundated with applications from poor people, who state that they have had sovereigns or half-sovereigns taken out of registered letters which have been sent to their friends in England or Ireland.
163. By Mr. Knox: You think the Money Order System would be a great safeguard? Yes, a sovereign is a great temptation.
164. By Mr. Smart: The registered letters you receive here to transmit to England are made up in a private box? In a separate mail bag, made up in the Registry Office.
165. Have you a separate office called the Registry Office? Yes.
166. All the clerks have access to it, have they not? No, only two.
167. As you make up the registered letters, do you forward a way-bill? A list of all the letters.
168. And get an acknowledgment for the receipt of them? ———
169. Can you form an opinion, or have you any idea, where the pilfering takes place? We suppose in England, because none have access to the room but the two clerks, and the mail bag is sealed up by them.
170. Are you satisfied that there are no means of opening and taking out the money from letters in the office after they are registered? I am.
171. You think there is sufficient protection over the letters before they are closed up? Yes; no one has access to them but the two clerks.
172. That is Mr. Thompson's room? Yes. If the party were a rogue, he would take the letter altogether; but the fact is, that in such cases the letters are delivered without the sovereigns.
173. By Mr. Knox: Have you many complaints of this kind? We generally have five or six every mail from England. The money is taken from letters going from here; they seldom send sovereigns out here. The money is generally sent by persons here to their poor relations in England or Ireland. The only way to stop it is by a system of money orders.
174. By Mr. Watt: Would not that require an additional staff? It would require a couple of clerks, but the commission would pay the expense, though perhaps not for the first year or two.
175. By Mr. Smart: Could not the registry clerks perform the duty which would be required by the establishment of the Money Order System? Not well; they might do it with the assistance of one clerk. The same room might answer by opening a window at the other end.
176. Are the two clerks connected with the Registry Office fully employed? Yes.
177. Have you any idea of the number of registered letters which go through the office every year? 86,847. When the mail is going away we have to put two extra clerks in the Registry Room.
178. By Mr. Watt: Are these letters all indorsed? Yes; a list is sent to the Post Office, London, of the parties to whom the letters are sent.
179. By Mr. Smart: According to the return, there are received and despatched by ship 1,500 a month? Yes. I think there are about 700 or 800 sent by the English mail.
180. By Mr. King: Do you think as much as £5,000 a year would be transmitted in small sums? Not much more.
181. By Mr. Watt: I suppose you would recommend a Money Order System for the Colonies? Yes.
182. In answer to one of the questions of the Chairman, you stated that you attributed many of the irregularities to the alphabetical system of sorting? Yes. I would recommend that the letters should be sorted according to the roads; for instance, I would sort letters for

- for Parramatta, Penrith, Hartley, and Bathurst, and then if in sorting a letter were put into the wrong division it would go into the division for the next town, while now, by the alphabetical system, a letter addressed to Albury may be sent to Bathurst.
183. By Mr. King: Instead of there being so many chances of mis-sorting, you would sort the letters only into three or four compartments? They would first be sorted into the three main roads, and then be re-sorted into the post towns on the line as they go. There was a letter some time ago addressed to Bathurst sent to Brisbane. Under the system I now propose such an error could not occur, as if a letter addressed to Bathurst were put into the next division it would be forwarded to Hartley, whence it could be sent on the next day.
184. By Mr. Watt: Have you the same system for the town delivery? No, only for the inland. In the Shipping Room they do not sort alphabetically, but into the different colonies; for instance, all for New Zealand are sorted together, or for Tasmania, so that if a Hobart Town letter is mis-sorted it is sent from Launceston.
185. What do you do with ship's letters addressed to Melbourne that come in ship's letter bags, with no postage stamps on them—do you simply keep them? No, we do not keep the letters; if a ship comes in with letters unstamped for Melbourne we send them on.
186. By Mr. Knox: You send the letters on? Yes.
187. By Mr. Watt: Do you claim the postage from Victoria? No.
188. Then Victoria is not so liberal? No.
189. By Mr. Knox: If letters are not sufficiently stamped do they go to their destination? It depends upon where they are addressed to. If it is a double letter addressed to England, and bears a stamp for the single rate, we send it on, charging the deficiency and a fine of sixpence. Letters for the Continent of Europe not prepaid are re-opened and sent back to the writers. The same thing has been done in the case of letters addressed to Melbourne; but a correspondence is now going on with the Victorian postal authorities, to arrange that if a letter bear a single rate it shall be sent on—the Melbourne people have offered to do that.
190. By Mr. Watt: Do not all printed circulars bear the same postage as letters? No, book rate.
191. A small circular of two pages? Not unless a letter is enclosed in it.
192. If it is open at the end, it goes at what? If sent via Marseilles it is sixpence under a quarter of a pound, if via Southampton fourpence. It is charged as book post.
193. By Mr. Knox: When letters are kept back on account of being insufficiently stamped, are they opened the next day? Immediately.
194. When are they returned? By the first opportunity; if they are sent by a party who has a box, we put them into his box; in fact we send them on occasionally, and get the money afterwards, if they are from persons whom we know; every care is taken to find out the parties.
195. By the Chairman: A case occurred the other day, in which it appeared to me to be easy to discover the sender of the letter. The Bank of Australasia, on Friday, posted a letter to its Manager at Newcastle; the letter had the bank seal upon it—the clerk taking it to the Post Office forgot to put the postage stamp upon it—the letter was of importance, but the bank did not know until Monday that it had not been sent; you cannot say that in that case every care was taken? Not in that case, but I know the clerks do generally take every care—I have seen them do so myself. That was a colonial letter and there might have been an objection in that case; but with reference to letters going by the English mail they are very particular.
196. By Mr. Watt: You receive letters for the Hunter and Grafton, I think, later than other letters? Yes, until half-past seven; there are two clerks who go back to the office to attend to them; they are paid extra for that duty.
197. By Mr. Smart: No money passes through your office except that paid for registered letters and for stamps? No.
198. By Mr. King: Even registered letters are paid for by stamps? Yes.
199. By Mr. Knox: And fines? Yes, the letter carriers collect very little for letters re-directed or not sufficiently stamped; very little is collected as postage, everything is done by stamps.
200. By Mr. Watt: Many people complain of general incivility from the clerks at the window—have any instances come under your notice? I have removed a clerk this week in consequence of some complaints having been made against him; but you do not always hear the other side of the question, sometimes it is the other way; however, there were some complaints made against this clerk, and I thought it better to remove him. He was rather tart I thought myself. Still I know what the position is, as I held it myself for three years; when I was at the window and was attacked by people I used to laugh at them.
201. By Mr. Smart: How many years have you been in the Post Office? Twenty-nine years.
202. By Mr. Knox: In your letter to the Board you ask to be allowed to state the improvements you would suggest in the Post Office—are they contained in the paper you have handed in? No. What I there refer to are the original suggestions made by me, when I returned from England, to Major Christie. I have no copy of that paper. One of my suggestions was the establishment of the Money Order System, and another the separation of the office of Cashier and Secretary. I consider the duties of Cashier and Secretary antagonistic. I pointed out that if the Cashier's account were incorrect, and the Secretary were a rogue, he must support his own account.
203. By the Chairman: What was the date of this suggestion? I came back to the Colony in October, 1855, and shortly after I made these suggestions to Major Christie.
204. By Mr. Watt: The Accountant must be a check on the Cashier or Secretary? To a certain extent he may.

R. A. Hunt,
Esq.

- R. A. Hunt, Esq.
24 Mar., 1862.
205. If you separate the office of Secretary and Cashier, the department of the one would not come under the other, but you would have only the Cashier, so that I do not see how there would be a greater safeguard? I think Major Christie should be the Accountant, and check the Cashier's accounts.
206. Do you not think it desirable for the head of a department to be as free from such details as possible? I think the Cashier, and I have stated so in the suggestions I have referred to, should be under the Accountant, the same as it is in England.
207. By Mr. Smart: That was the practice in Mr. Raymond's time, and caused so much complaint? Yes, because his son was Accountant. I got into great disgrace then, because I compelled Mr. Raymond to pay money that had been in his possession for several years; it made my place very uncomfortable.
208. You entertained a different opinion then from what you do now? No, I always thought the same, but my objection was to the son being the Accountant, and the father and son being in the same office. Major Christie might be supposed to be a check in such a case.
209. By Mr. King: Do you not think there would be a more efficient check if there were a Cashier to take the cash only, and an Accountant to keep the account, that the one would be a check upon the other? Yes.
210. By Mr. Watt: Could not one of the Accountant's clerks act as Cashier? Yes.
211. Then you would simply remove the duty of Cashier from that of Secretary? Yes, it is a clerk under the Secretary who does it now—it was performed by Mr. Bailey, who has gone to the Bank of New South Wales. The Secretary does not do the cash himself.
212. By Mr. Smart: There is an impression out of doors that the different departments in the establishment do not work harmoniously together; that there is division between the heads of the department; is it so or not? I have stated that, since I gave my evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, there has been a very bad feeling against me on the part of Major Christie, Mr. Abbott, and the Accountant.
213. Is that personal to yourself? Personal to myself.
214. It does not affect the working of the establishment? No, it is merely personal.
215. Has there been any collision between yourself and these gentlemen? I seldom see them from one week to another.
216. Has your communication with them been by writing? Yes.
217. By Mr. Knox: Has it not led to more frequent writing than has been necessary; have there not been letters going backwards and forwards for days or weeks respecting matters which might have been settled in a few minutes by a personal interview? Sometimes.
218. By Mr. Smart: There is no personal communication between you and Major Christie? No.
219. Does he ever visit your department? Yes, he was in it this morning, and he is in it every morning since he has come to reside in Sydney, but since I was examined before the Retrenchment Committee he has shewn a coolness towards me. I have read the evidence over half a dozen times, but cannot find anything that I think should have been offensive to Major Christie. He says I spoke disrespectfully of him before the Committee, and Mr. Abbott says the same. I said, "Where is it—I cannot find it"; and Major Christie referred to the part of the evidence where I said that he could not do without Mr. Abbott. I replied, "That is true. Mr. Abbott has been many years in the office, and I do not think you could do without him." However, it does not interfere with me in my business.
220. It does not interfere with the proper work of the establishment? No.
221. By the Chairman: Do you think the establishment would work better if you had more direct control than you appear to have over your department? I do think so. I am completely cramped, and I stated so to the Retrenchment Committee.
222. By Mr. Watt: I cannot see that exactly, if regulations are laid down by the Postmaster General, and you are left at liberty to carry them out? Yes, but suppose he is not here. I expected the English mail to be in last Sunday, and before its arrival I was doing everything I could to get the letters delivered on Sunday. I did so once before when Major Christie was away on leave of absence, and I ran about in all directions to get leave and could not.
223. To whom would it be necessary for you to apply? To the Postmaster General.
224. By the Chairman: Would you not require the permission of the Secretary of Finance and Trade? Yes, in that case; because, in reply to a petition from the clerks themselves, it was stated that they should not be called upon to work on Sundays. Nevertheless, they are still working behind the scenes; the only difference is that the letter carriers are not sent out.
225. By Mr. Smart: Are they there every Sunday? No, on the arrival of the English mail, in getting ready for the delivery, the only difference is that the letter carriers have not to go out to deliver. I say that the officer in charge of the letters ought to have the discretion of sending them out or not on Sundays, the same as in London, and then if any one objected to receive them on that day, he could notify that his letters were not to be sent.
226. By Mr. Knox: You consider that the Superintendent of the Letter Branch should be responsible to the Postmaster General? Of course, but that he should have power to act in case of his absence.
227. By the Chairman: Does it not, upon consideration and reflection, notwithstanding what you have said in evidence, appear to you that the department would work better if greater harmony were existing between you and the other officers, taking into consideration what you have just said with respect to the English mail? I do not think it interferes with the duty at all, it is merely a personal matter.
228. By Mr. Watt: In referring to the English mails you told us that you had the assistance

- ... tance of two clerks in arranging for the delivery, was your application for two clerks only? R. A. Hunt, Esq.
229. Do you get what you ask for? Yes.
230. If you asked for half a dozen, then, you might get them? No, I should not.
231. Were you ever refused—I ask whether in general your application was limited to two clerks? I would not get six.
232. In practice you get as many as you ask for? Yes, except on one occasion, I got two instead of three, but I would rather have two good sorters than four indifferent ones.
233. Suppose you preferred any particular man, would you get him? No.
234. Have you tried that? Yes.
235. By Mr. Smart: How do you say your energies are cramped in your department by the Postmaster General, when you say that the whole of the clerks in your department obey your orders most strictly—do your remarks apply only to the delivery of letters on Sunday? Yes.
236. You have stated that letters are delivered in London on Sunday, that is a mistake? I was under that impression.
237. By the Chairman: Are you aware that in Victoria, after the arrival of the English mails, there is a delivery at six in the morning? Of the Marseilles letters, the Marseilles mail can be easily sorted, as it is a small one; it is the Southampton mail that is the heavy one.
238. By Mr. Knox: Government do not derive any more postage from the Marseilles than from the other mail? No, it goes to the French Government.
239. By Mr. Smart: That is the extra postage? Yes.
240. By Mr. Knox: Is that amount paid by Government to the French Government? The English Government keep an account current with us—we give in each letter bill the weight of the letters sent by us via Marseilles. The weight of the letters I took in at Moore's Wharf last Saturday was eleven pounds.
241. Are you aware how that account is settled? It is settled every year, or two years.
242. By Mr. Smart: That is the account between you and the London Post Office? Yes, and they settle with the French Government.
243. Does the French Post Office take your weight, or do they examine for themselves? They take our weights, they never open the post boxes to see whether the weight is correct.

APPENDIX.

A.

There are various improvements which are much required in the Postal arrangements of this Colony, to which I will respectfully invite the attention of the Board of Inquiry. I have arranged them under separate heads, namely:—

1. Unclaimed Letters and Packets.
2. Unregistered Letters containing Money or other valuables; and the necessity for establishing the system of Money Orders.
3. The expediency of extending the delivery of Letters, &c., throughout the Suburbs of Sydney.
4. Opening new Postal Address Books at the beginning of every year.
5. Sorting and making up the Inland Mail.

R. A. HUNT.

I.—Unclaimed Letters and Packets.

With reference to "Unclaimed Letters and Packets," I would suggest, that, at the General Post Office, and at all the Country Post Offices, such letters and packets shall be kept according to the following arrangements:—

1. Letters and packets posted in the Colony to be kept one month.
2. Letters and packets received from any of the other Colonies of Australasia or New Zealand to be kept three months.
3. Letters and packets from the United Kingdom or Foreign Countries to be kept for six months.
4. At the expiration of the said terms, such letters and packets as may remain unclaimed and undelivered, shall be sent to the Dead Letter Office, Sydney; and there opened and sent to the writers or persons sending them.

I would further suggest, that during the terms that letters and packets shall be so lying, their addresses shall be published once a week, by the Postmaster General, in the Sydney daily newspapers, of such letters and packets as may be lying unclaimed and undelivered at the General Post Office; and also, that all country postmasters shall, in like manner, publish lists of addresses in the nearest local newspaper, of their respective towns or districts.

The present system of advertising unclaimed letters, &c., in the Government Gazette, and by placards, is a very costly one, and obtains but little publicity, the circulation of the Gazette being very limited, and in the country districts scarcely extending beyond the Police Courts; but by the plan which I suggest the cost of advertising may be met, by it being enacted by the Legislature that a small fee, say of one penny or two-pence, be charged by the Postmaster General and the country postmasters, upon their delivery of any letter or packet which may have been advertised as lying unclaimed.

I would further recommend that all written applications for unclaimed letters be finally acted upon in the Letter Branch. The present practice is to report, transmitting the information to the Secretary and Cashier, who sends a printed letter, in reply, embodying the information originally received from the Letter Branch. By transferring this duty, the Postmaster General, the Secretary and Cashier, the Register and Corresponding Clerks, would be relieved from heavy duties, and the present circumlocution would be materially lessened. As a matter of course, all complaints should be submitted to the head of the department.

|---|--------|
| The number of unclaimed letters addressed to Sydney, and advertised, during the year 1861, was | 10,968 |
| The number of unclaimed letters addressed to the Country Districts, and advertised, during the same year, was | 17,080 |
| Total | 28,048 |

II.—Unregistered Letters containing Money and other valuables, &c. Necessity for the Money Order System.

24 Mar., 1862.

My attention has been frequently directed to unregistered letters, containing coin or other valuables.

In the event of such letters not reaching the proper hands, by reason of their safe reception not being certified in the letter carrier's receipt book, suspicion may arise that the contents have been abstracted by an employé in the department; I would, therefore, beg to recommend that unregistered letters, containing money or other valuables, should be registered at the offices where they are posted, and the fee of sixpence charged to the parties to whom they are addressed; in fact, to treat them as registered letters from the moment it is found that valuables are enclosed in them.

The transmission of money per post in this Colony, more especially coin, is hazardous. Persons in humble circumstances here, who may be desirous to send small sums to distant relatives, labour under much disadvantage, and are too often deterred from doing so by the fear of the money not reaching its destination. To assist, very materially, such persons in their desire to send home money to their poorer friends, I have long urged the expediency of establishing in this Colony, the admirable system of Money Orders, which has been carried out with such success in the Mother Country. It is really painful to read the complaints of poor persons in the United Kingdom, in respect to the abstraction or the accidental loss of small remittances of sovereigns or half-sovereigns from their letters from Australia.

Upon my return to Sydney from England, in 1855, I strongly urged the initiation here of the Postal Money Order System, but my recommendations were opposed by Major Christie, chiefly on the ground that in the General Post Office buildings there was no room for a Money Order Office. Since that time an ample central Telegraph Office has been established in the south wing of the General Post Office. But it is proper to observe, that it is not necessary that a Postal Money Order Office should be in the General Post Office buildings. A small office in its vicinity, either in George or Pitt streets would be quite sufficient to carry out a comprehensive Money Order System.

III.—Extending the Delivery of Letters, &c., throughout the Suburbs of Sydney.

The present postal communications between the various populous suburbs of Sydney are very unsatisfactory in their arrangements.

The letters, &c., posted at a suburban Post Office for another suburb, are now sent via Sydney, and the course of post is more than four days; for instance, a letter posted at St. Mark's Post Office, and addressed to Newtown, is not delivered under two days, and the reply, if one be needed, is not returned to St. Mark's under two days more.

The populations of the chief suburbs, namely, Paddington, Newtown, Redfern, Camperdown, the Glebe, Pyrmont, and Balmain, may be now taken at 20,000, the dwelling-houses at 4,000.

I would recommend that a suburban postal circuit be established.

That an intelligent youth should start on horseback, at 8 o'clock every morning (Sunday excepted) from St. Mark's, and passing through Paddington, Botany Road, Redfern, Newtown, Camperdown, the Glebe, and Pyrmont, deliver his letters, &c., at the respective Post Offices, and arrive at Sydney by 10 o'clock, leaving the General Post Office at 1 o'clock, and taking the same route he would easily return to St. Mark's by 3 p.m.

As respects the delivery of the suburban letters, which are posted at the General Post Office, I would observe that two deliveries a day are now afforded to Paddington, and I conceive that each of the other chief suburbs having a larger population than Paddington, the whole are entitled to a second daily post delivery from the General Post Office.

In order to give every facility to the suburban residents to obtain postage stamps, I would beg to recommend that the letter carriers for the suburbs, including the circuit rider, from St. Mark's to Pyrmont, may be permitted to sell stamps on their rounds, and allowed the usual commission.

IV.—Opening new Postal Address Books at the beginning of every year.

A great saving of time and labour to the Delivery Office would result from adopting the rule that obtains in Melbourne, namely, the opening new Address Books at the beginning of every year; and so throwing the onus on the public of renewing or correcting addresses to their letters, &c.

In this Colony, at present, some of the addresses are seven and eight years old, and it not unfrequently happens that letters are mis-sent.

Advertisements should be published at the close of every year, notifying that persons desiring their addresses to be retained, or altered, in the Post Office Address Books, must make applications to that effect.

V.—Sorting and making up the Inland Mails.

Upon the subject of sorting and making up the mails for the interior, I would submit to the Board the opinion which I have long entertained and expressed, that the mails should be made up in roads, instead of alphabetically.

In a Minute by the Postmaster General, No. 2,576, and dated March 30, 1860, he says:—

"The question of the mode of sorting has been decided; and the late Mr. Stone did not take the Superintendent's view."

I beg to state that the late Mr. Stone did coincide with me in regard to the mode of sorting the mails in roads; and in a letter annexed, which I received in 1857 from Mr. Bokenham, of the General Post Office, London, he also agrees with me on this point.

Amongst the many vexatious mistakes in making up the mails by the alphabetical system, I may select a few which have occurred during the last few years:—

The Ashfield Mail sent to Armidale,
The Armidale Mail sent to Brisbane,
The Bathurst Mail sent to Brisbane,
The Bathurst Mail sent to Albury,
The Goulburn Mail sent to Grafton,
Lambing Flat Mail sent to Grafton,
West Maitland Mail sent to Warialda,
West Maitland Mail sent to Warwick; and very many other mistakes.

I would respectfully submit to the Board that the evidence of the sorters in the General Post Office be taken in respect to the alphabetical and road sorting systems. I am confident that the most able and experienced of the sorters in the Inland Room will express their condemnation of the alphabetical system, and their preference to that of road sorting.

I therefore would beg to recommend an alteration in the present system of sorting for the general advantage of residents in the country districts.

General Post Office,
14 December, 1857.

R. A. Hunt,
Esq.

My dear Sir,

I thank you very much for the copy of the Report you so kindly sent me; I was absent from town at the time it arrived, and I am ashamed to say both the Report and the letter from you were afterwards forgotten until last week. As regards the Alphabetical Sorting, it is an old story here. I have always differed with Mr. Hill upon the point, and to this moment I do not see any advantage that can be derived by its introduction.

I have sent you by the Southampton portion of this mail a blue book, in which you will find the subject has been freely gone into, and from which I think you will gain more information than I can give you.

Our next mails from Australia, &c., will be sorted (by clerks sent out for the purpose) on their way from Alexandria to England. In this instance it is an experiment, but I have no doubt as to its result, and I hope to see, ere long, the plan generally adopted; the saving of time even in our large establishment will be very great.

I presume you have been already communicated with upon the subject.

Wishing you all happiness in the approaching season.

R. A. Hunt, Esq.

I am, &c.,
W. BOKENHAM.

B.

MEMORANDUM for the Board of Inquiry into the Management of the General Post Office.

In justice to myself, and from respect to the responsible appointment which I have the honor to hold, as Superintendent of the Letter Branch of the General Post Office, I will respectfully submit to the Board of Inquiry into the management of this Department, the following statement for their inquiry and consideration.

2. In 1858, a Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly was appointed on "Retrenchment in the Public Expenditure," and my evidence was taken with reference to the General Post Office Department.

3. By referring to my evidence, the Board will find that I recommended that the high commission of ten per cent. allowed to country postmasters and stamp sellers be reduced to five or six per cent. I further expressed an opinion that two clerks might be dispensed with in the Accountant Branch, and that I could make a reduction in the number of boatmen.

4. From that time to the present I have been made the object of the most libellous charges by correspondents of the Sydney Morning Herald and Empire newspapers; and direct charges sent to the Honorable the Treasurer of attempted bribery and corruption have been preferred against me by a person named Plumb, formerly a clerk in the General Post Office, who avows himself to be the author of various scurrilous letters in the Empire signed "ONE WHO KNOWS." From these charges the Honorable the Treasurer has declared that I have exonerated myself; but I will respectfully solicit the attention of the Board of Inquiry to the very painful correspondence which it entailed on me.

5. But in addition to these charges preferred by Plumb, I have to complain of certain other letters in the Empire signed "SCRUTATOR," and which I have every reason to believe were written by Mr. Augustus Dillon, late a clerk, but now Postal Inspector, General Post Office. I would request that the proprietors of the Empire be examined on this point, because it is subversive of all official discipline, if a subordinate officer be allowed to vent his spleen on his superior by anonymous contributions to the press.

6. The whole of the correspondence arising out of Plumb's charges have been placed by the Honorable the Treasurer in the hands of the Postmaster General, and I respectfully request that the Board of Inquiry will direct that officer to produce it for their perusal.

R. A. HUNT.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

| | |
|-----------|------------|
| MR. KING, | MR. SMART, |
| MR. KNOX, | MR. WATT. |

John Keble, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are the Accountant of the Post Office? Yes.
2. Did we see yesterday all the books that you keep? No.
3. What books are there that we did not examine? A vote account book, in which I keep an account of the money expended under the head of each vote of the Assembly.
4. All your books, I observed, are kept by single entry? Yes.
5. Do you think that the best way of keeping the books of the Post Office? I find, by experience, that it is the best,—that it is just as safe, the check is just as good. I have tried double entry.
6. You tried double entry when first you went there? Yes.
7. How many clerks have you in your department? Two.
8. What are their hours of attendance? From nine till four.
9. Without going out? They have half an hour for lunch.
10. From nine to one, and from half-past one to four? One goes out at one time, and the other at another; they are never both absent together.
11. Are they both occupied the whole day? Yes.
12. Do they ever assist in any other work of the office? Yes, they used to go down to sort mails when the English mail came in.
13. Have they not sufficient time to do so now? They were ordered down the other day, and the Superintendent refused to have them; he said they did not know how to sort; for what reason I do not know.
14. Is there any communication between your department and that of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch? No.

J. Keble,
Esq.

27 Mar., 1862.

- J, Kebble,
Esq.
- 27 Mar., 1862.
15. Are the clerks in your department directly under your control? Yes.
 16. And you say you believe these two clerks are continually occupied? Yes.
 17. You have nothing to do with any part of the department except the accounts. No.
 18. Are you able to form any opinion as to the working of the Secretary's Branch? No, I never interfere.
 19. No cash passes through your office, I think you told us yesterday? Not a sixpence.
 20. Your book-keeping is the only check on the cash accounts of the Cashier? That is all, except that the country postmasters are a check on him as well, because he has to send a receipt for every sum he receives by return of post.
 21. Do you not think it would facilitate the working of your office if the cash accounts were kept in the same department as the books? That is my opinion, but I believe there is some objection, the nature of which I am not aware of.
 22. Will you give the reasons for your opinion? It would be more convenient, in the first place, for now I have to run backwards and forwards from one room to another for reference. The country postmasters are in the habit of sending down money under certain forms, and they often send it under wrong forms; for instance, they will sometimes send what ought to go to the stamp account to the postage account, and what ought to go to the postage account they will send to the stamp account. Now, if that was in my branch, I should know at once that it was wrong, whereas the Cashier enters it as they send it down, generally. There is one objection to my having the cash, that is, I do not give security.
 23. And yet you are supposed to act as a check on the cash account? Yes; but no cash passes through my hands.
 24. Is there sufficient accommodation in your branch for all the duties you have to perform? Yes, quite.
 25. Then, in fact, you have no duties in the Post Office whatever, beyond keeping the accounts as handed to you by the Cashier? There are the stamp accounts, which do not come through him, and the petty cash accounts that come from the Ship Letter Office; and the stamp accounts from the Stamp Sale Room. Every account in the office, of whatever kind, is checked by me.
 26. Does the Postmaster General ever look at your books? Yes.
 27. Does he check them over? Yes, for his own monthly account that he has to swear to, and the stamp account that is sent to the Audit Office.
 28. You know nothing of the working of any other branch of the Post Office? No.
 29. And could not form any opinion upon it? No. I acted as Secretary many years ago, in Mr. James Raymond's time, when he was absent, and also once or twice for the present Secretary.
 30. By Mr. Knox: How long have you been in the department? Ten years. I left the Australian Trust Company to go into it.
 31. What were your duties when you entered the department? I went in as Accountant under the Report of the Board of 1851.
 32. By the Chairman: Is your own time fully occupied? Yes.
 33. What time do you go to the office? Nine o'clock.
 34. And what time do you leave? Four, or a little after.
 35. Have you any interval? Only for lunch, twenty minutes or so.
 36. What are the names of the clerks in your office? Nicholas Nelson and Charles Nightingale.
 37. What are their salaries? Mr. Nelson has £375, and Mr. Nightingale, £300.
 38. By Mr. Knox: What are their principal duties? Mr. Nightingale checks all stamp requisitions, compares them with the ledger account, sees that the postmasters have paid up 75 per cent., keeps the whole of the ledger accounts, and makes out half-yearly accounts for the postmasters of their postage and stamp accounts.
 39. By the Chairman: Their work is entirely subordinate? Yes.
 40. Nothing more than checking over additions and seeing that no error has been made, and handing them to you who keep the accounts? Mr. Nightingale keeps the ledger entirely.
 41. By Mr. Knox: Which ledger? The country postmasters and the contracts ledger.
 42. By the Chairman: What has Mr. Nelson been always employed on—was he always in that department? Yes, he was there when I went.
 43. By Mr. Knox: Have you always had two clerks? I have had four—they reduced me lately to two.
 44. By the Chairman: Two are able to do the work? Yes, now that we have done away with checking the country postmasters' postage accounts, but not before. It took one person's whole time to sort off the vouchers; there were five or six thousand vouchers to be sorted off before he could make out one account.
 45. If your clerks left at five o'clock instead of four, do you think the extra hour would enable them to find time to examine these postmasters' accounts? No, I do not think it would. There are 350 of these accounts to examine monthly, besides sorting off 5,000 vouchers every month into the pigeon holes. Then memoranda have to be made. Some of them do not send in their letter bills properly, and they have to be written to. The accounts cannot be examined until the letter bills are sent in.
 46. By Mr. Knox: What accounts are these—the postage on insufficiently paid letters? Yes.
 47. That is but a small amount? Yes, about £400 a year.
 48. How is it that the vouchers amount to so large a number as you speak of? Each of these letters has to be entered in the letter bills, and all the letter bills connected with each Post Office have to be examined. For instance, Parramatta exchanges daily with a dozen or more other Post Offices, and we have to sort off the letter bills of those offices every day before we can check the account.

49. Then it costs £375 a year to check accounts bringing in £400? That is what it did, but that has been done away with; the junior clerk has been struck off, and Mr. Nelson, who did the checking of these accounts, does his duty. J. Kebble,
Esq.
50. Are not these accounts checked at all now? They will be, ten of them. 27 Mar., 1862.
51. By the Chairman: Who will do it? Mr. Nelson.
52. How will he find time? He will have time to do it; we are rather pressed just now, because all the quarterly accounts have to go out; there are 196 contractors' accounts, and 356 postmasters' accounts to be sent out, on which the contractors and postmasters are paid.
53. Are you aware whether there is perfect harmony existing between the different branches of the department? I believe there is not.
54. Do you know there is not? I have heard there is not; personally I am not perfectly acquainted with all the reasons.
55. By Mr. Knox: Are the accounts or abstracts you spoke of furnished to the contractors? Yes.
56. To be sent in to the Government? They are sent to the Government after being signed by the contractors and certified by the Postmaster General; they are paid, and then sent in to the Audit Office as vouchers for the payment. The account is sent to the contractor; the contractor signs it, and returns it to the Postmaster General; it then comes to me, and I mark it off in the ledger; the cheque is made out, and I enter the cheque; the Postmaster General signs the cheque and voucher, and it is afterwards put into account and sent to the Audit Office.
57. By Mr. Smart: Are the contractors paid from the office? The Cashier pays the contractors, and I furnish the accounts and vouchers to the Auditor General.
58. By Mr. Knox: The abstract only contains a very few lines? Yes, it is made out in a printed form—for running the mail from so and so to so and so, at the rate of so much, under bond dated so and so.
59. Then the labour involved amounts to making out 350 accounts quarterly, each containing one item, a great portion of which is printed? Yes, I have brought the forms with me. Here is the contract form. (Handed in.)
60. How many contractors are there? 196.
61. How many postmasters? 356.
62. Are these abstracts copied from the ledger? Yes.
63. Then the ledger is made up before the abstracts are sent out? Yes.
64. I think you said it was Mr. Nelson's duty to make out these? Yes, all the abstracts.
65. And your check, when these come back to you, is to compare them with the ledger? Yes, and mark them. We are obliged to make these out in the office on account of the fines inflicted at times, both on contractors and postmasters.
66. By the Chairman: You say there are 196 contractors and 356 postmasters, but I observe that the Postmaster General's Report for 1860 states that there are open accounts? Each postmaster has three separate open accounts—a postage account, stamp account, and salary account.
67. Could not these be amalgamated in any way? We could not well amalgamate them, because we could not tell whether a postmaster had paid 75 per cent. on his stamp account if they were all blended together.
68. By Mr. Knox: As a matter of fact, is it not the case that there is not above one entry in each of these accounts in a month, taking the average of these postmasters' accounts? Yes, there are sometimes thirty a day.
69. I mean one entry to each postmaster during the month? No, not more.
70. Some none, some two or three? Yes, one debit and one credit.
71. And the same with the salary accounts? Yes, they are made out once a quarter.
72. The postage account is quite uncertain? Yes.
73. By Mr. Smart: How many years has Mr. Nelson been in the office? I think twenty or twenty-two.
74. Do you find him an efficient clerk? He is rather slow, but he does his business very well.
75. I think you said a short time ago that he is now doing the duties of a junior clerk? Yes.
76. What salary was this junior clerk receiving? £150.
77. And Mr. Nelson has £375? Yes.
78. Is there no other employment in the office better fitted for Mr. Nelson's experience? I cannot form an opinion. I have to take what clerks are given me.
79. Who has the arrangement of such matters? The Postmaster General, I suppose. Mr. Nelson's salary has been increased, under the old system, at the rate of £15 a year, to a certain step, and then £20 a year afterwards, and the gold increase.
80. How long has Mr. Nelson been in the office he now fills—how long is it since he succeeded the junior clerk? About a month.
81. Has he only been in your office a month or six weeks? He has been in my office seven or eight years.
82. What duties did he perform before? He did the examination of the country postmasters' monthly accounts, for which the letter bills have to be sorted off.
83. By the Chairman: You are perfectly confident these two clerks are fully occupied all day? Yes, at present, certainly.
84. I mean through the year? Yes, certainly, they have sufficient work to do. There are many little things to do it is impossible to describe.
85. By Mr. Smart: Is Mr. Nightingale an efficient clerk? Yes. He came from a mercantile house into the Post Office.

- J. Keble,
Esq.
27 Mar., 1862.
86. How long is it since he joined the Post Office? I think he has been eight or ten years there. He had been at the Patent Slip, with Captain Fotheringham.
87. By Mr. Knox: Have you the examination of the way-bills also? No, I merely enter any fines that may be levied on the way-bills.
88. How do you get information of these fines? They are reported from the Secretary's Branch.
89. Are the way-bills examined in the Secretary's Branch? Yes, and the calculations made as to the fines for late arrivals.
90. I believe they are very numerous—are they not? Yes.
91. But they do not constitute any part of your work? Not the examination of them; merely the entering of the fines that are levied.
92. By Mr. Watt: Do you come in contact at all with the Letter Branch? Not at all. The only thing I have to do with it is the checking of the petty cash that comes out of the Ship Letter Room.
93. From whom do you take your instructions? From the Postmaster General, or the Secretary.
94. Are they generally given you direct, or conveyed through the Secretary? Sometimes direct, and sometimes through the Secretary.
95. Would it not be more convenient to have the office of Cashier in your department? I think so.
96. Was it so before? No, it has never been so. The Secretary and Cashier were recommended to be one person by the Board of 1851.
97. Are you aware what are supposed to be the objects of that amalgamation? I am not.
98. By Mr. Knox: Was it not with the intention of having a double check? If a clerk in my department were appointed to do the duty of Cashier, I do not see that the check would be lost at all; the check would be as good.
99. By Mr. Watt: Do you check the Cashier's accounts at all in fact? Yes.
100. You do something more than transcribe them? Yes. There is a check when the remittance papers come in.
101. By Mr. Knox: Besides that your ledger accounts would check them? Yes. I think there is a perfect check on everything in the office; I do not think it could be more perfect as regards the receipts and payments.
102. If the Cashier were to omit to give you an account of any payment from a country postmaster, the country postmaster would have notice of that in the next account? Yes, and not only that, but he would complain immediately to the Postmaster General that he had received no receipt for his remittance.
103. He might receive a receipt and yet no credit be given him in your books? In that case he would find it out when his next half-yearly account was furnished. That is the reason of my furnishing half-yearly accounts; they get their stamp account and postage account furnished every half year.
104. Have you any other forms with you? All the forms that are used I have brought with me. (The witness handed in a number of forms.)
105. Perhaps you will state what they are? They are marked on the top. That (referring to a particular form) is for forage.
106. You do not keep an account specially for this in the books? Only as against the vote of the Assembly for forage, because we have to shew the balance on every vote every month. That (referring to another form) is the form of the half-yearly account that is sent out to the postmasters.
107. This is the stamp account, I presume? Yes, and there is a form for the postage account. Here is another form—the account sent to the Treasury every month of cheques drawn under three heads—salaries, contingencies, and conveyance of mails.
108. By the Chairman: Do you know at all, from keeping the books, what is the amount of the deficiency in the Post Office annually—the difference between the revenue and expenditure? No, I could not say at this moment.
109. By Mr. Smart: Have you got the books balanced to the end of last year? Yes, the stamp account.
110. But your general ledger? Yes.
111. By the Chairman: Can you find out and inform the Board what is the deficiency in the working of the Post Office last year? Yes.
112. By Mr. Watt: The balance will be the balances owing by country postmasters? Yes.
113. By the Chairman: Does not that balance chiefly arise in giving credit for stamps? Yes; but the system to be brought into operation by the new regulations will shew a larger balance, because each postmaster will be allowed a certain stock in hand, and afterwards he will have to pay for what he actually wants, but always with a stock in hand.
114. By Mr. Knox: What regulations do you refer to? New regulations that have been just printed under the orders of the Executive Council.
115. By the Chairman: Are we to understand that under that order there will be a larger amount due? The accounts will shew a larger amount, because each man will have a certain stock on hand, which will constitute a balance due by him at the end of the year.
116. By Mr. Watt: In point of fact they always have a balance now? They always have to pay 75 per cent., but under the new order they will not be compelled to pay 75 per cent. For instance, if a postmaster has £10 worth of stamps allowed as stock on hand, he may send £2 and get £2 worth of stamps back, but the £10 will always stand against him.
117. By Mr. Knox: But supposing that he gets a first £10 worth now, upon paying £7 10s. on account of that he can get a second £10 worth? Yes.

118. By Mr. King: Do I understand that every postmaster is to keep a stock of about £10? Yes, on the average. J. Kebble, Esq.
119. That will make on the whole a stock of about £4,000 in the hands of the country postmasters? Yes. 27 Mar., 1862.
120. By Mr. Knox: I think you stated yesterday that the discounts allowed to the country postmasters for the year 1861 amounted to £2,800? Yes.
121. And the discounts allowed to town purchasers to £800 or £900? Yes.
122. Will you furnish the Board with a return, shewing the amount of discount received by each postmaster during the year 1861? Yes.
123. What is the highest amount of salary paid to any country postmaster? The postmistress at West Maitland has the highest salary, £250.
124. And the lowest? £12.
125. I suppose a great number of the country postmasters only receive £12? Yes, a great many; all the very small offices.
126. By Mr. Smart: Is there a greater amount of business done at West Maitland than any other? Yes. The postmistress there gets the highest amount of commission on the sale of stamps, which is generally the criterion.
127. Do you know how long she has been there? For a considerable time I believe. About two years ago she got an increase.
128. Then the pay was not so great as it is now at the time there was no allowance of discount? No.
129. At present with discount and salary together she receives nearly £400 a year? Yes.
130. By Mr. King: She finds premises? Yes.
131. By Mr. Knox: So she did previously, I presume? Yes.
132. By Mr. Smart: Are these increases to the country postmasters fixed by the Postmaster General, or how are they recommended? They are fixed by the Postmaster General, and recommended to the Treasurer for his approval.
133. The Postmaster General recommends the increase? Yes.
134. By Mr. Knox: Do you know when the system of stamps was first introduced? I do not recollect the year; it was since I joined the office.
135. Could you furnish a return of the salaries paid to all the country postmasters for the year preceding the introduction of postage stamps? Yes.
136. And a similar return, shewing also the commission on the sale of stamps for the year 1861? Yes, I will do so.

Thomas Kingsmill Abbott, Esq., called in and examined:—

T. K. Abbott,
Esq.

1. By the Chairman: You are Secretary and Cashier of the Post Office? I am. 27 Mar., 1862.
2. You have the entire management of the Secretary's Department? Yes, and the Cashier's Department too.
3. You consider these separate departments? They are separate departments; the duties are completely different.
4. Do you think the duties sufficiently harmonise to make it advantageous that they should be together? They have been found to do so up to the present. The greatest disadvantage is that, perhaps, their union entails too much duty on me; I have been the only sufferer up to the present moment.
5. How many clerks are there in your branch? Six.
6. Who are they? Mr. Levinge, Mr. Salisbury, Mr. Pierce, Mr. Dalgarno, Mr. Cuttriss, and Mr. Unwin, supernumerary—he has been recently appointed, and takes the place of Mr. Bailey, whose name you may observe in the nominal list.
7. What are the duties of the various clerks in your office? The duties of Mr. Levinge, Mr. Pierce, Mr. Salisbury, and Mr. Unwin, are almost entirely confined to the correspondence.
8. Four clerks for the correspondence? Four—and the duties connected with it, of course.
9. How many letters are written daily? I cannot tell how many are written daily, but I can tell the number that passed through the office during the last year; there were 11,984 registered during the last year.
10. How many were answered? 3,616 manuscript letters were despatched.
11. In round numbers that would be about twelve letters a day? Yes; in addition to those, 3,600 blank covers were also despatched, which are almost equal to manuscript letters.
12. I have received these blank covers, or printed letters, containing one word, Major Christie's signature? That is a printed letter. Blank cover minutes are made on original papers by the Postmaster General, when such papers are of such importance as to require his decision.
13. Major Christie writes that? Major Christie writes the more important minutes. I minute papers that do not require to be referred to him.
14. Would the work of writing these letters occupy four clerks? Everything connected with the whole Postal Department is transacted in my office.
15. I ask specially what is the work of these four clerks? The correspondence and the duties connected with the correspondence, such as preparing contractors' bonds and contracts, postmasters' and other bonds, statistical returns, returns required by Assembly, and copies of correspondence to be laid before that body, besides very many duties that occupy considerable time in their performance, but which I cannot well enumerate now.
16. Is making up and checking the time bills part of the duties connected with the correspondence?

T. K. Abbott, Esq.
27 Mar., 1862.

spondence? Not exactly; Mr. Cuttriss has the charge of that duty. Irregularities shewn on time bills are brought before the Postmaster General, who inflicts fines; these fines have to be intimated to contractors, and occasion the writing of many letters, which are written by the correspondence clerks.

17. What are the duties connected with correspondence? Mr. Salisbury is employed registering papers, and in bringing forward previous papers on same subjects; it is as much and more than he can do; I do not think there is a harder worked man in the office than he is.

18. What time does he arrive at the office in the morning? Nine o'clock.

19. When does he leave? Nominally at four, most generally, as may be seen by the attendance book, at half-past four.

20. Do you know anything of the working of the Delivery Branch? Yes, I had the charge of it for a long time.

21. Do you consider clerks coming to the office at nine and leaving at four peculiarly hard worked? Yes, I do; I consider it very hard work. They are employed continuously, not being allowed to go out to lunch; not a clerk in my office goes to lunch; he is not allowed to leave the office from the time he arrives until he leaves at night, unless by special permission, for a few minutes.

22. The other two clerks—what is their business? Mr. Levinge is chiefly employed in writing letters.

23. I say the other two; there are two besides the four you say are employed in connection with the correspondence? Mr. Unwin is entirely employed in copying.

24. Do you copy all letters by hand? No, by machine; but there are a very large number of letters written that necessitate copies of correspondence being sent with them.

25. You say the whole of the working of the department is seen in your office—do you think the appointment of a Postal Inspector has been of advantage? It has been of considerable advantage, and in my opinion it might have been of much greater advantage.

26. Is the Postal Inspector generally travelling? During the last year he was travelling perhaps five or six months.

27. What did he do in the other six months? Towards the end of the year he has to be in attendance when the contracts are taken for the ensuing year, for the purpose of preparing time tables, and to afford information if required as to the contracts referred to.

28. That is a month in the year? It is nearly two months.

29. That leaves four months—was he doing nothing during those four months? From January to the present moment the Postal Inspector has had as much as he could do in reporting on papers relating to contracts, time table, &c., and in altering and framing time tables. Papers on these subjects are all referred to him, and Major Christie considers and decides on his reports.

30. Then it is the Postal Inspector who directs the time tables? At the present.

31. Has he ever suggested any improvement? He has suggested improvements in the time tables sometimes.

32. Are you aware that he ever, for example, suggested the alteration of a line of mail route, as he might find one more advantageous than the other? I do not recollect.

33. By Mr. Watt: I see Mr. Levinge is returned as Postal Inspector here (referring to a nominal list of employes in the Post Office)? He was, at the time that was made out.

34. Has he been reduced in rank? Only exchanged. I do not know whether it is any actual loss to him, because the Postal Inspector has to pay his own travelling expenses out of the salary of £500 per annum allowed to him, and on that account I do not think he regards it as a positive loss.

35. By the Chairman: You receive all the cash, and all cheques are drawn by you? They are.

36. Have you any check over the cash received—do you know that the amounts received are the correct amounts? I open the remittance papers myself, and the cash is made up in my presence.

37. When petty cash is given out for use in the office below, what check do you exercise over it? I exercise no check, but the Accountant does; there is a regular account kept of all sums paid, and vouchers have to be produced, which are sent to the Audit Office. The petty cash account is not closed till the 31st December of each year, and then if any balance remains in hand it is returned to the Treasury.

38. Do you consider your department entirely separate from that of the Accountant and the Delivery Branch? Yes, completely.

39. Suppose there are more hands required to assist in the Delivery Office, do the clerks in your department go down to assist? I have had to do it frequently, to the great detriment of my own duties, and on that point I think great improvement might be effected; the assistance might be made mutual, which up to the present has seldom been done. When a pressure of work occurs in the Letter Branch, Mr. Hunt makes a requisition for assistance, but let me be pressed ever so much I can very seldom get assistance in return.

40. Can you state that as many as four clerks have gone down at one time to assist in the Letter Branch? Yes, I can produce papers to shew it. On the occasion of the last mail by the "Northam," two clerks were sent from my office and two from the Accountant's.

41. There is no connection between your office and that of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch? Except in this way, that he receives all his instructions from my office.

42. Does he receive them from you, or from your office as the hand of Major Christie? When Major Christie is present, in most cases they come from him nominally, but in reality they come from me, and in very many cases they come direct from me. When Major Christie is absent they come direct from me, as a matter of course.

43. Can you point out any case in which you personally give these directions? They occur very frequently. The establishment of new Post Offices, the establishment of a postal line, alterations in time tables, everything connected with the department is done under instructions received from me.
44. Do they come from you or through your office? They come from me as Secretary.
45. There is no great harmony between you and the Superintendent of the Letter Branch? There is the same harmony that there was between my predecessor and him.
46. By Mr. Watt: Perhaps it would be better to confine yourself to the question—the Board are not aware what may have been the state of matters at the time you speak of? The Report of the Board of 1851 shews it. I may say there is not harmony between him and me. The reason is this:—In September, 1855, I was appointed Secretary, having up to that period, from 1841, been in the Letter Branch with Mr. Hunt. In May, 1856, Mr. Hunt made an official application to the Postmaster General to be recognized as senior in the department, and to rank next to Major Christie, on the sole ground of his length of service. On various occasions, when he has had the opportunity, he has always shewn an impatience of anything like control or receiving directions from me, directly or indirectly; and I think that in giving evidence before the Retrenchment Committee in 1858 you will find that he put himself out of the way to lower my position and to elevate his own. In that case he pointed out the anomaly of my being called Secretary, and ranking next the Postmaster General, although the Government had decided the question in 1856, and he suggested that he should be called postmaster of Sydney, and that his rank should be next to that of Major Christie. Holding the important office I do, I cannot consent to relinquish any of the authority necessary for the due performance of its duties; otherwise, I have no feeling against Mr. Hunt. I always regarded him as a friend, and would be glad to do so still. I have repeatedly expressed myself to the effect that, for the sake of harmony in the office, I would be happy if Mr. Hunt would take my place and I would take his; but that, having a superior duty to perform, I objected to his assuming seniority of rank over me. I have made my feelings known to Mr. Hunt through his relatives. From the time I joined the office I worked with Mr. Hunt until I was made Secretary, my appointment to which office was influenced probably by Mr. Hunt's own recommendation. After my appointment we acted harmoniously for about six months, after which period Mr. Hunt began to shew the same feelings towards me that he had done towards the late Mr. James Raymond, my predecessor; and my opinion is that he will shew the same feelings to any one, no matter whom, that is in my position. If a suggestion comes from Mr. Hunt, and is approved, it is carried out willingly by him, but if instructions are given contrary to his idea of the matter, the reverse is the case. There is ample correspondence in the department to shew how matters really stand.
47. By the Chairman: Is the department under Mr. Hunt satisfactorily conducted? In my opinion it is far from being so.
48. Why not? I do not think he exercises proper surveillance.
49. In what manner? I think the Postmaster General can place correspondence before the Board to shew exactly what I mean. When information is required on matters connected with his department, Mr. Hunt does not take the trouble to afford the information that he ought to do. He insists on all papers being sent through him, but in nine cases out of ten the only part he takes is attaching "R. A. H." to them, and reference on reference has to be made before the necessary information is obtained.
50. Is the building used as the General Post Office in every way as convenient as it could be? I think it is the very reverse.
51. Does it not seem to you that if the building were better arranged a smaller number of clerks might be employed? Yes. I stated the same to Mr. Rolleston's Board in 1856, that if the offices were more concentrated a much less staff would be required. At the present time each branch requires a separate staff, and, when assistance is required in one part of the office, it cannot be afforded from another, although the clerks in the latter may have comparatively little to do.
52. Does the Telegraph Office take away any room from the Post Office? It took away what was used as a store room, and the lobby that was used for selling stamps, when there was an English mail being made up.
53. Does the Post Office make any use of the Telegraph Department? Frequently, in matters that require despatch.
54. Is it the Postal Inspector who supervises all contracts? That depends on what you mean.
55. I mean the working of all contracts? The Postmaster General does. In special cases the Inspector is employed to report, and, when travelling, he, as a regular duty, supervises and reports on contracts.
56. And the Postal Inspector the time bills? Yes, the time tables when he is present; when he is absent I do. Last year I had not only to do that, but to attend to all contracts for the present year—to prepare bonds and contracts, letters of acceptance, mail tenders, and letters of non-acceptance; and I also had to prepare the time tables. These time tables give a good deal of trouble, for I have not only to make myself acquainted with the lines of route the mails have to take, but the features of the country, so as to regulate the rate of speed at which the mails should be conveyed, and also to consult the wishes of the people, newspaper editors, and many local interests.
57. Is not the public interest the paramount one? Certainly; but where special interests can be consulted without detriment to the public, they are always considered. The public interest is chiefly looked to; in fact, always looked to.

T. K. Abbott,

T. K. Abbott,

58. Have you given any consideration at all to the advantages or disadvantages of the re-purchase of stamps? Yes; I am acquainted with the arrangement of the affair from the time it was introduced. So far as the Post Office is concerned it is no advantage whatever, but rather the contrary.
59. What is the advantage to the public? If persons in Sydney receive trifling remittances from the country in postage stamps, and their correspondence is such as not to require them to make use of such stamps, then there is a manifest advantage in being able to exchange them for money at the Post Office.
60. Would it not be more advantageous to the public to have the Money Order System introduced? Yes; there would then be little necessity for such an exchange.
61. In fact none? It would depend on the limit of the money orders. For instance, if a person desired to remit 5s., it is probable an order for so small a sum would not be issued, and in that case the present system would be a convenience. I receive stamp remittances from postmasters in the country for less sums than that.
62. Do you consider that you have any right of supervision over the clerks in other branches of the Post Office? In the absence of Major Christie I have. I consider that if any irregularity occurs, I have perfect right and authority to interfere, and I do.
63. Who assigns the occupations of the clerks in the office? The Postmaster General; but in the Letter Branch, for some time past, Major Christie has allowed Mr. Hunt to make his own arrangements, except as to the senior clerks, who have regularly appointed duties.
64. Can you point out, during the time that you have held your present appointment, any suggestions that you may have made for the advantage of the public service? I do not know that I have formally put forward any list of suggested improvements, but as Secretary I have made suggestions to the Postmaster General, from time to time, as appeared necessary, and he has acted upon them or not,—they have passed from my memory. Whilst I was in the Letter Branch I made some suggestions.
65. Suppose the Cash Department were removed from your office to the Accountant's office, would it not lessen the work of your office? Certainly.
66. To the extent of one or two clerks? Only one clerk is employed with the cash duties, and he is not fully occupied with them.
67. In your opinion, would the public service suffer by such an alteration? I do not think the check would be so effectual.
68. The Accountant has stated that he has to run from room to room? It is his own fault; there are messengers he can send.
69. Do you think it advisable to keep messengers for the purpose of carrying messages between the different rooms? They are there, and they may as well be made use of. If they were not so employed the clerks should be, and more valuable time would be lost.
70. Might they not be dispensed with? They are indispensably necessary to carry on the work of the office; in fact, they are so much required in the office that one must be always present.
71. You now employ four messengers? There are in reality five.
72. What is their work? There are two connected with the offices of the Postmaster General, the Secretary, and the Accountant, and two who were appointed in lieu of boatmen who were discharged after the sitting of the Retrenchment Committee in 1858, and the fifth is attached to the Letter Branch.
73. What do these five messengers do? The shipping messenger is employed in conveying mails to and from coasters and steamers, and in various ways in connection with the office.
74. Will you state the various ways? One is almost wholly employed in connection with the Ship Letter Room; his chief duties are to convey mails to and from coasting vessels, and to assist in the duties of the Ship Room generally. The other is employed in communicating between the different offices—the Inland Office and the Delivery Office, the Ship Office and the Registry Office—carrying registered letters to the Ship and Delivery Branches, letters from the Inland Office to the Delivery Office, and in carrying newspapers between the Newspaper and Inland Offices. The third, the senior messenger, although paid as such, is employed as a stamper in the Inland Office.
75. You have now five messengers employed at a total cost of £552 a year? I believe that really the proper designation should only apply to three, for I think one called a shipping messenger is employed more in connection with the arrival and despatch of mails by vessels, and in sorting newspapers, than in messages. I know one of them is much employed in going to the Customs seeking information as to the movements of ships.
76. Information as to the movements of ships? Yes, when they clear at the Customs. He has then to go to the different mercantile houses to make inquiries as to their probable time of sailing.
77. Has not that generally been done by the shipping officer, Mr. M'Mahon? Yes; but he is very often down the harbour, for the purpose of landing or shipping mails, and should mails have to be made up in the meantime for foreign ships, or coasting steamers, to Melbourne, Brisbane, and other places, this messenger has to perform the duty.
78. By Mr. King: Does Mr. M'Mahon board every ship that arrives? I think he boards the majority. Mr. Hunt will be able to speak more positively as to that.
79. By the Chairman: There are two messengers connected with your office? I think they have plenty to do.
80. What do they do? They are employed in conveying communications between the Post Office and the different departments of the Government, and between the various offices of the department itself. They are also employed in paying contractors' and postmasters' cheques, and in placing under cover to postmasters time tables, tables of rates, notices, circulars, &c., and in collecting orders received as remittances.

81. What cheques? Cheques for contractors and postmasters.
82. Do not the contractors come to the office to get their cheques? Not generally. I have to dispose of them as they may direct; it is necessary to send a messenger with them in order to get the receipts.
83. I suppose they merely have to take them to the different banks? Yes, or to private individuals, according to the wish of the contractors. I am obliged to send them out in this way in order that I may have the vouchers for the payments complete for transmission to the Audit Office at the appointed time. It is very inconvenient to have the cheques lying in the office for weeks, as is sometimes the case.
84. Do you not think the Post Office authorities might reasonably say they would decline to pay any money except through a bank? I am obliged to send the cheques to the parties to whom they are made payable, or I should have the vouchers without receipts when required by the Audit Office.
85. Do not country postmasters often make remittances in orders on different people in Sydney? Yes. The difficulty with respect to the cheques arises in a great measure from the contractors in many cases having no agents; there are many small contracts of £60, £70, or £100 a year, where the contractor has no agent in Sydney.
86. Does it tend to the advantage of the public service that there should be a number of small contracts? There must be small contracts for small postal lines.
87. Would not contractors take whole districts if they had the opportunity? Such a tender has never yet been made, and the Government are averse to it for fear of monopoly.
88. Have you ever tried it? Nothing has been done to prevent it. If a man tendered for fifty lines, and his tender was lower than those of other tenderers, his tender would be accepted if the Board considered him capable of performing the services required; but the Government have always looked doubtfully upon anything having the appearance of monopoly. In fact on one occasion, in the case of Mr. Gill, he held so many contracts in the Northern Districts, that competitors were at length entirely shut out, and his prices became so exorbitant, that Sir William Denison directed that Mr. Gill's tender for the Main Northern Road should not be accepted, and the Mounted Police had to do the duty for a considerable time, until contractors from the Southern District were induced to undertake them; but they eventually failed. Mr. Gill had a monopoly for a long time.
89. Was the work properly done? Yes, whilst he had it.
90. And it was not properly done afterwards? No, in fact it failed.
91. By Mr. Knox: I imagine there must be a number of small lines where the service is done for a mere nominal consideration, in order to secure the advantages of a post? Yes; for instance, where a farmer possesses sons and horses, he is in a position to perform a contract at a trifling expense.
92. By the Chairman: Are the duties defined of all the different departments in the Post Office? They are.
93. Where? They are understood, and expressed when necessary in the Postmaster General's Minute Book.
94. It seems the Superintendent of the Letter Branch does not understand it? That is because he will not understand.
95. By Mr. Smart: Why should he? His duties pertain to the Letter Branch alone. He receives instructions from Major Christie, and in Major Christie's absence from me; and in matters of detail from me even in Major Christie's presence.
96. By the Chairman: Can you give any one example where, Major Christie being present, the orders have gone from you to the Letter Branch, and have been by the Letter Branch carried out? Yes, I think Mr. Hunt can produce documents to shew it.
97. I ask can you? I think I can by reference.
98. Those orders having emanated from you solely? As Secretary; and from the very nature of my duties, considering that the whole arrangement of the postal service throughout the Colony is effected in my office, such are unavoidable and indispensable.
99. Have you anything to do with the Stamp Department? Merely in receiving cash from it, and in calling for reports when information as to the office may be required.
100. You do not check it at all? Not at all.
101. You have nothing to do with the accounts of the country postmasters? No, only when irregularities are reported I call on the Accountant to report; he sends in his report, and if it is a matter of detail, I act on it myself; if not, I bring it before Major Christie.
102. Any cases of postal irregularities do not fall within your department? All do.
103. Are you aware of any cases of postal irregularity having lately occurred? Almost every day connected with postal lines.
104. Are you aware that there have been a great many cases in the suburbs lately? No. There was a complaint with regard to Waverley Post Office, and it is now in process of correction. The postmaster of that office is not the most efficient person, but he has been there a long time; he is a very old man, and his means are very limited, so that Major Christie did not like to dismiss him if he could avoid it without public injury. Bishop Barker, too, interested himself for him, and tried to retain him in his office, but at the present moment a substitute is about to be appointed.
105. By Mr. Smart: Has there been no complaint from St. Mark's? St. Mark's has never been a regular Post Office, and the Postmaster General would have willingly changed the postmaster if we could have found a substitute. He has made repeated references to residents, but they have always failed.
106. Have you not heard complaints? Not recently. I think the only complaint was from Mr. Henderson, about his newspapers.

T. K. Abbott,
Esq.

27 Mar., 1862.

T. K. Abbott, Esq. 107. Was there not a complaint by Sir Henry Watson Parker, some weeks ago, about not being able to get his letters till half-past ten? Yes, and the reply was, that the late arrival of the trains in the morning prevented the contractor from getting the mails in time to deliver them sooner.

27 Mar., 1862.

108. Was any attempt made to remedy that? So long as the railway continued irregular it could not be done. When the starting of the morning train was fixed at a quarter past ten it was considered that it would facilitate the despatch of the mails if all the morning mails were made up together, those for despatch by train as well as to the suburban offices.

109. Are the mails for the suburban offices made up at a quarter past ten? This one is made up at half-past nine, and there is nothing to prevent its being sent immediately after.

110. Do you not know that letters for St. Mark's do not reach their destination till half-past ten? I have not observed, and I do not think a single complaint has been made on the subject. So far as St. Mark's is concerned, this year St. Mark's has a mail twice a day. Last year the mail was only despatched once a day. The residents of St. Mark's can get their correspondence in the morning and afternoon if they choose to send to the office for it. Anything posted after ten o'clock is sent away at four, I think. Generally speaking, in framing the time tables for suburban mails, the wishes of the contractors, are considered as far as possible without detriment to the public, for the suburban contracts are taken generally at a merely nominal sum; for instance, the mail to Cook's River is carried to and from twice a day for £12 a year; the contractor only conveys the mail for the sake of clearing his tolls. The same with Randwick, where the contractor only gets £20 a year, and conveys the mails twice a day.

111. Who are usually the contractors for these districts—the proprietors of omnibusses? Yes; Grice is the contractor to Randwick, and Gannon to Cook's River.

112. By the Chairman: Do you think there is perfect union and harmony between the junior clerks of the different branches of the Post Office? I think there is. I know of no ill feeling between them worthy of notice. As to any other ill feeling I believe it entirely proceeds from a restlessness and impatience on the part of Mr. Hunt to any one nominally above him. Whoever is above Mr. Hunt he will be antagonistic to, and ill feeling must be engendered.

113. By Mr. King: Is it understood that the Secretary ranks above the Superintendent of the Letter Branch? Yes, Mr. Hunt was aware of that on two separate occasions when he might have taken the office.

114. He might have taken your position if he had liked? He might. When Mr. Kemp was appointed Postmaster at Port Phillip, before separation, he refused it then, and Mr. James Raymond was appointed; then, on Mr. Raymond's death, he had the opportunity of taking it, and he would not apply for it; and I may say positively, and I am in a position to say most positively, that one of the great motives for Mr. Hunt wishing me to become Secretary was to prevent the possibility of the feeling existing in the department that existed when Mr. Raymond was alive, and that now exists. In order to prevent the same feeling arising again Mr. Hunt did all he could to induce me to apply for the position, and the ill feeling did cease for some time, but was again revived by him.

115. By Mr. Smart: You cannot state any grounds for that feeling on the part of Mr. Hunt? I conscientiously believe it to proceed from an impatience of control or direction, and restlessness of disposition on the part of Mr. Hunt, which he has shewn to the Postmaster General as well as to me. I consider the tone of some of his writings to the Postmaster General most unjustifiable and insubordinate.

116. You do not feel that you have given Mr. Hunt any cause for this? None whatever. Mr. Hunt I regarded as a personal friend, and I would be glad to consider him so still. He is not unacquainted with my feelings in the matter, for I have asked his own relatives to tell him how much I deprecated the misunderstandings between us, and that if he liked to take my position I would cheerfully give it up to him for the sake of unity, but that so long as I held an onerous position in the public service I felt bound to carry out my duty.

117. Have you ever made any attempt to remove the feeling which exists? On all occasions, directly and indirectly.

118. And you have not been met in the same spirit by Mr. Hunt? Never.

119. By the Chairman: Supposing Mr. Hunt required any information from your department, to whom should he apply? To me.

120. You would not consider him as acting correctly if he were to apply to Mr. Salisbury? No. If he required information or papers relating to a matter of detail, as a rule Mr. Salisbury would inform me; if the request had reference to papers of importance, then Mr. Salisbury would not give them without my permission.

121. Do you consider that you would be right in applying to a junior clerk in Mr. Hunt's department for information? Not when Mr. Hunt is there, unless the urgency of the case would not admit of delay. I may say, with regard to Mr. Hunt, that it was through Mr. Hunt that I joined the Post Office in 1841, and up to 1855 Mr. Hunt and I always acted together, and it was with pain that I saw that anything like ill feeling existed on his part towards me.

122. Mr. Hunt is your senior by some years? Yes; I am in my twenty-third year of service in the Post Office, and Mr. Hunt in his twenty-eighth or twenty-ninth year in the same department.

123. Up to your appointment as Secretary you were on the best of terms? On the very best of terms.

124. On the 21st October, it appears that you made an application to Mr. Thompson, a clerk in Mr. Hunt's branch, for information, and when Mr. Hunt complained of any inquiries from your office to his office being directed to any one but himself, you justified yourself yourself for applying to Mr. Thompson? It must have been a matter of trivial importance— T. K. Abbott, Esq.

125. I am referring to the principle? The principle is as I have stated.

126. If you want information from Mr. Hunt's branch and you apply to a junior clerk, instead of applying to Mr. Hunt, you are not using your endeavours to promote harmony? I cannot speak positively of the case you mention until I know the particulars. 27 Mar., 1862.

127. By Mr. Smart: Have you any recollection of having applied to Mr. Thompson? It is quite possible that I did so, but the circumstances may have warranted it. It may have been a case of urgency, or of such petty detail that it was not necessary that it should go through Mr. Hunt.

128. By the Chairman: Do you know or believe that any clerk in your office has given information to any party out of doors, or to any newspaper editor, to enable him to make undue remarks on parties connected with the Post Office? I do not. I do not believe that such information was given by any party connected with my branch.

129. Perhaps you would refer to the circumstance I was alluding to just now that took place on the 21st October last, and explain it to the Board more fully when we meet again, inasmuch as Mr. Hunt made you aware that he was taking a copy of the minute at the time? Unless the paper is registered I will not be able to refer to it. If the paper was, as I suppose it to be, a matter of no importance, it is not a registered paper, and I shall not be able to get it.

130. Are these disputes in the office of such frequent occurrence that when one makes a remark to another that he will keep a copy of the memorandum or minute, and even the Postmaster General makes a minute on the matter, that still you cannot call to mind the particular instance I speak of? I do not believe any one in the office keeps copies of these things but Mr. Hunt. I have so many papers to recollect the subjects of, that I cannot store such matters in my mind. With regard to copying papers and avowing them as copied, I never knew anybody to do it but Mr. Hunt. I know, that in dealing with the Postmaster General, he has marked papers "seen and copied"—why, I could not tell. I never attached such importance to them as to consider it worth my while to copy them, or even to make a note of them, if time would admit of such a proceeding.

WEDNESDAY, 31 MARCH, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

| | |
|-----------|------------|
| MR. KING, | MR. SMART, |
| MR. KNOX, | MR. WATT. |

Thomas Kingsmill Abbott, Esq., Secretary and Cashier, General Post Office, called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You were saying the other day that you considered yourself Chief Clerk in the office? No; I said, I think, that I was Secretary and Cashier. I do not think the term Chief Clerk was used.
2. Chief in the office in the absence of Major Christie? Yes, and in his presence next to him.
3. You have been in the Post Office, I believe, all the time you have been in the public service? Entirely; I joined the Post Office Department in January, 1841.
4. During the time you have been in the Post Office, have the clerks been promoted according to their seniority or their capability, or what regulations have you had that have guided the appointment of clerks? Generally by seniority.
5. Has capability had any influence in the matter? In some cases latterly it has had. I think the rule was deviated from in two or three cases since I became Secretary, in 1855, but prior to that period seniority was generally the rule, and from my experience I do not think a worse rule could possibly exist. I know it has been the bane of the Post Office; it has kept back very many young men possessing energy, ability, and industry, while men who entirely lacked these qualities were promoted; year by year, a regular increase was allowed, and year by year it was, as a matter of course, received.
6. Whether capable or not? Whether capable or not, most generally.
7. Then you think that system has not worked satisfactorily? Most unsatisfactorily. It had been the rule of the Government service that seniority should always be taken into consideration, and as a rule it had been acted upon. By the same rule capability had also to be considered.
8. Does it not seem to you that in a public department, of the nature of the Post Office, it is advisable that capability should rank before seniority? Yes, unquestionably.
9. Do you think that all the senior, or what are called second class clerks, in the Post Office, are equally capable with some of the juniors? I do not. I have often expressed my opinion to the Postmaster General, that the clerks should perform duties according to the salaries they receive. Such has not been the case. Clerks receiving high salaries having been appointed originally to a certain position, have acquired a thorough knowledge of that position, and have been retained in it, irrespective of the salary they receive, and the relative importance of the duty. At the present moment there is a clerk in the Accountant's Office receiving £375 a year, whose duties have not been of such importance as to warrant their performance by a man receiving so high a salary.

10.

- T. K. Abbott, Esq.
31 Mar., 1862.
10. That is one instance where seniority has not led to the advantage of the service. Does it seem to be necessary that the Postmaster General should have it in his power to appoint all those who are employed in his office, and to suspend them upon occasion? Until recently he had the power of suspension. I think within the last year such power was withdrawn. I certainly think that, if the department is to be carried on efficiently, the Postmaster General, if he has not the power of appointing the superior officers, should, at least, have some voice in the matter; and he ought, at all events, to have the power of suspension.
11. He has not the power at present of appointing any one in the office? No; with the exception of five messengers, and three lads called boy riders. These boys are employed to empty the iron letter-receivers.
12. He has not the appointment of any of the clerks? No, nor of the postmasters nor letter carriers. By the Post Office Act, the authority to appoint postmasters was vested in the Postmaster General, but I believe the Constitution Act abrogated that part of the Post Office Act, and such appointments are now made by the Minister for Finance.
13. By Mr. Smart: Even supposing it to be so, do you not think it would be desirable for the Postmaster General to recommend the country postmasters, as well as the letter carriers, for appointment? He does recommend the appointment of postmasters, because all communications on that head, as a rule, go from him to the Treasurer, and generally speaking he is first informed.
14. Are his recommendations always attended to? Not always. As a rule, they are with regard to the appointment of postmasters.
15. With regard to the appointment of clerks? No; two new clerks have been appointed within the last month who were previously wholly unknown to him, and without reference to him; and the same course has been pursued with regard to letter carriers.
16. By the Chairman: Are they capable? Judging from their appearance, and from what little experience I have had of their capabilities, they are certainly not the style of clerks I should like to see appointed.
17. Are you aware whether the health of those employed in the Post Office is generally good? I think, as a rule, it is not good. I think the building is unhealthy, and the duties of the office are harassing. On the arrival of an English mail I have known the clerks and others to be brought there at four o'clock, two or three mornings in succession, when the mail steamer was expected; and I have often known them turned out of bed at two o'clock, and to work till seven or nine o'clock p.m. the same day.
18. Do you think the work would affect their health if a proper office were built, fully ventilated, and otherwise unobjectionable? I think if an office were constructed, as described, regulations might be made by which the clerks would not be so much taxed. As I have before remarked, the present staff seems to be a large one, but, constructed as the office is, it is indispensable in great measure. Each room must have a separate staff, and let there be ever so great a pressure, the clerks in one room cannot be transferred to another. For instance, in the Ship Letter Room there is little to do between the arrival and departure of the English mails, except the making up of mails for the coasting steamers; yet there are constant calls, such as shipmasters applying for gratuities, and to make declarations required for presentation at the Customs to enable ships to enter, &c., which require the constant attendance of a clerk, who has little or nothing to do during a great portion of the day.
19. How many clerks are in that office? There are two.
20. And their time is but partially employed? Yes.
21. By Mr. Knox: Is there any other office similarly circumstanced? Yes, in the Delivery Office, after the morning delivery, the clerks have comparatively little to do for the remainder of the day, unless a mail may happen to arrive.
22. By the Chairman: Does it not much impede the rapid working of the Delivery Office having to carry letters and newspapers from one building to another? Yes, and it also endangers the safety of the letters, for not only ordinary but registered letters have to be sent from one part of the building to another. It is a well-known fact in the office, that a large number of letters containing money are sent without being registered, and if a messenger should be so dishonest as to steal one of these in transitu, it could not be traced.
23. How would you trace it if he took a registered letter? It would be traced to the registry clerk, and if he delivers registered letters to a messenger he ought to get the messenger's initials for them.
24. By Mr. Smart: Suppose they never reach the registry clerk? Then of course he is not responsible for them.
25. And in the transit from these out-buildings registered letters might be appropriated? No; the registry clerk is in the room when the mails are opened and sorted, and he takes charge of the registered letters; the register list that accompanies the letters is handed to him with the letters, which he checks and initials; the letters are then entered in the register; they are afterwards sorted for the different beats, and the letter carriers are obliged to sign for every letter delivered to them.
26. By Mr. King: Are the registered letters put into a separate bag? No, but they are always tied up in a separate bundle, and the cover is coloured, to indicate that the enclosures are registered, and the district from which they come, whether western, southern, or northern.
27. By the Chairman: It has been suggested that it would be a very great improvement in the Delivery Branch—and I ask your opinion, because you have been in the Delivery Branch—if the letters were sorted according to the roads, or in Sydney according to the beats, instead of alphabetically? It is the Inland Office you speak of, not the Delivery Office. I can speak positively as to that, for I have had experience of both. The alphabetical arrangement was introduced by me. When the letters were sorted according to the roads, it required an experience of six months before a clerk could sort expertly; and if a letter happened to be mis-sorted, mis-sorted, the error might not be detected for a week or more, if mis-sorted into a drawer appropriated to a place the mail for which was only despatched once a week or once a fortnight. I have known such cases to occur frequently, and I have known the office to suffer the most serious inconvenience from the absence of a clerk who was an expert sorter. To sort according to the roads requires a thorough geographical knowledge of the interior of the Colony, and that is not easily acquired. According to the alphabetical arrangement the letters are first sorted alphabetically, then divisionally, that is, according to the names of the Post Offices, and finally, before the mails are made up, they ought to be checked by a clerk, so that the check is applied three times. When the system was carried out in its integrity very few mistakes occurred, but now it is completely different.

28. How is it now? Formerly every Post Office had a box appropriated for it; now such is not the case, the "Direct Offices" only have separate boxes, or pigeon holes appropriated to them. By Direct Offices I mean those to which direct mails are despatched from Sydney, in which mails correspondence for the "Forward Offices" is included. For example, letters for Tuena, Taralga, Binda, Laggan, &c., are sorted under the head of G, and placed in Goulburn compartment, at which office mails for those places are made up. It will therefore be seen that the present system is not the alphabetical system, and that newly appointed clerks must experience as great difficulty in sorting under it as was found to operate against the old road system, for they will require to know the district in which the places named are situated before they can sort letters for them into the Goulburn compartment, whereas if the alphabetical system was in operation no such difficulty would arise. The merits and demerits of the two systems are fully discussed in the Postmaster General's First Report on the Post Office.

29. Do you think the Delivery Branch of the Post Office now is worked as well as it was at the time you managed it? It may be thought egotistical of me to say it, but I think it is not, and it is not managed so well as when the late Mr. Stone had it. I have known letters to be returned to England, as dead letters, addressed to persons in the city as well known as any one of the gentlemen present. I have known letters for Mr. S. H. Smythe, the Marine Surveyor, and for Mr. R. A. A. Morehead, returned to England, and for Captain Scott, the Police Magistrate, advertised as unclaimed; and the same with letters for the Rev. Mr. Quaife, Mr. Thomson, of the firm of How, Walker, and Co., and others, who are well known. A case occurred a short time ago, which brought me into collision with the Superintendent of the Letter Branch, where a letter for Mr. Stuart Russell was advertised. I think I then suggested, that if Mr. Hunt would make a practice of going through the Delivery Office periodically, and checking the letters that the clerks were unable to re-direct, it would, from his knowledge, effectually put a stop to cases of the kind occurring for the future. Mr. Hunt replied, that after twenty-eight or twenty-nine years service, he did not think he ought to be made a sorter. When I had charge of that branch I used to do it myself.

30. Then Mr. Hunt never looks over these lists? I do not know whether he looks over the lists, but he ought to look over the letters before they are advertised.

31. Does not the list emanate from the Delivery Office? The letters remain for thirty days in the Delivery Office, and if unclaimed are transferred to the Dead Letter Office, where the list is made out. There are cases which Major Christie either has or intends to lay before the Board that will fully explain this matter. I may remark, while on the subject, with regard to the ill feeling that exists, that I fear I spoke rather warmly on the last occasion of my examination; if I did so, it was from a feeling of indignation, because I felt that some of the questions put to me were based on information which is incorrect. As before stated, I joined the office in 1841, and when I joined it there was ill feeling existing between Mr. Hunt and the then Postmaster General. Mr. James Raymond was appointed Accountant and Secretary in 1842, and the ill feeling continued with still greater intensity, being exhibited towards him also to such a degree that it was really uncomfortable to be in the office, owing to their continual contentions. In 1851 a Board was appointed to inquire into the Post Office, which Board recommended the removal of Mr. Hunt. The death of the then Postmaster General, I believe, prevented this recommendation from being carried into effect, and Mr. Hunt was retained, but was warned to eschew, for the future, all party feeling. Since the present Accountant joined the office, I do not think he and Mr. Hunt have ever been on friendly terms. I know Mr. Hunt has lost no opportunity of offering suggestions with regard to Mr. Keble's Office, of which he is completely ignorant, and of the nature or routine of the duties he knows no more than a stranger, which led to the latter remonstrating, in conjunction with others, against evidence given by Mr. Hunt, and requesting that the Colonial Secretary would appoint a Board to inquire into the department. In September, 1855, I was appointed Secretary, and in May, 1856, Mr. Hunt applied to be allowed to take precedence of me. His application was refused; and in the July following, he published suggestions that he had made to the Postmaster General. With reference to one in particular, that of iron letter receivers, I myself received an illustration of the first pillar letter box erected in London, which I brought before the Postmaster General before Mr. Hunt returned to the office, after his visit to England. The result was that they were introduced, and with a saving of expenditure, because their introduction enabled the Postmaster General to dispense with what were called receiving offices. For the publication of these suggestions the Postmaster General reported Mr. Hunt for insubordination, and he was reprimanded and threatened with dismissal; and for a short time afterwards the annoyances, that were caused through his unduly interfering with matters that should not concern him, ceased. Business then went on quietly till the sitting of the Retrenchment Committee, when Mr. Hunt was examined, and when he offered opinions and suggestions with regard to the Accountant's Office and mine, but never offered any with regard to his own, with one exception, although there is no part of the department

T. K. Abbott, Esq. that requires so much revision as his. The only suggestion he made with regard to his own department was that two boatmen might be dispensed with; but, instead of his suggestions being carried into effect, the four were discharged. This was no sooner done than Mr. Hunt recommended that two shipping messengers should be appointed, so that it will be seen, that although he was of opinion that the duty of landing and shipping mails could be performed by two boatmen, yet, when that duty was wholly performed by the new boat arrangement, he then discovered that two additional messengers were indispensably required. The tone and temper of Mr. Hunt towards the Postmaster General and myself, and others who differ in opinion with him, have been extremely offensive. I may say, with regard to that, that having been in the Letter Branch for so many years, I am in a position to make suggestions and offer opinions in matters concerning the Letter Branch, to the Postmaster General, founded upon my personal experience. When required, or that I thought explanation necessary, my opinions were given, and whenever they were antagonistic to Mr. Hunt's, the matter was regarded by him as a personal matter. He looked upon everything with which he did not agree as done out of opposition to him, and he acted accordingly; and through this disposition on his part much unpleasantness has been created. There is nothing in connection with the Letter Branch that I am not quite as well acquainted with as he is. When Mr. Hunt was absent in England, from the beginning of 1854, to September, 1855, I took his place, and I am quite certain that the Postmaster General, or any one conversant with the state of matters then, will bear testimony to the fact that not a word of contention was heard during that period. Mr. James Raymond, the then Secretary, and I, acted in harmony. After Mr. Hunt's return, numerous newspaper articles appeared, time after time; statistical articles appeared in the daily papers, which could not have been written unless information had been supplied from the department; and it is remarkable that in almost every one of these, no matter who was blamed, Mr. Hunt was generally praised. I can positively say that Mr. Hunt has nothing to do in the department. If he was fully employed, I think he would not find time for interfering as he has done. In 1849 Mr. Hunt had a salary of £260 per annum, and was allowed to collect and retain, in addition, certain fees, viz., 6d. for each registered letter, 6d. for each late letter, and two guineas a year for every private box at the Post Office. The collection of these then formed the greater part of Mr. Hunt's duties, and from the time these were withdrawn, I think in 1849, Mr. Hunt's office became a sinecure. I may add, that within a recent period he has been twice reported for insubordination. From these remarks I think the Board will be able to form some idea of the cause of the want of harmony in the department.

31 Mar., 1862.

32. Do I understand you to mean that the Superintendent of the Letter Branch could be dispensed with altogether? Most unquestionably; and with advantage to the department.

33. By Mr. King: On whom would you confer the duties? The Postmaster General expressed an opinion that the duties of Secretary and Superintendent might be combined. I think, however, the latter officer would find ample employment if he performed all the duties pertaining to the office. The duties of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch should be properly defined, for, from the very nature of the duties of the Secretary, he must give directions, and unless the holder of the office of Superintendent of the Letter Branch will consent to work with him for the good of the public service, regardless of personal feeling, the present state of affairs will continue. The whole arrangement of the postal service throughout the Colony is done in the Secretary's Office, including everything of importance connected with the Letter Branch.

34. Could the Secretary perform his own duties and yet give that personal supervision which is necessary in the Letter Branch? I think an hour a day would be almost enough to enable him to do those duties as they are now performed. At present every application for information concerning letters has to go from the Secretary's Office to the Letter Branch, and Mr. Hunt insists on every paper going through him. He places his initials to these papers, and sends them on for report to the different clerks to whose office they refer. Some of the clerks—as in the Delivery Office Mr. Buchanan—attaches his initials and refers to another, who gives his report, and most generally these papers are returned through Mr. Hunt; and whether the answer be right or wrong, explicit or obscure, it passes. Time after time I am obliged to refer again and again before I can get the necessary information to enable me to reply.

35. It is from that cause that you are obliged to place yourself in personal communication with the clerks under the Superintendent? It is very often the cause. The memorandum writing in connection with the Letter Branch is most harassing.

36. By the Chairman: You have perused these suggestions of Mr. Hunt's? Yes.

37. Have any of them been acted upon? The suggestion with regard to the iron letter receivers was, as I have said, acted upon, independently of Mr. Hunt. The floating office at Moore's Wharf—the work of which ought to be performed by a junior clerk, might be performed, with more advantage to the public, at the Post Office—I believe, was brought into operation in consequence of a letter or communication of some kind from yourself. With regard to the sorting of the mails on board the mail steamers, the expense it would occasion was considered too great for the advantages it would confer, and which was the chief reason why it was not brought into operation. With regard to the sorting of the Hunter River mails, Mr. Hunt's estimate of the cost was so exorbitant, that it was not at first entertained, and the plan was only brought into operation through a letter from Mr. Robertson, the Minister for Lands, and then it was done at a comparatively trifling expense. A short time since, when Mr. Cowper desired that the mails for Grafton should be made up at the same late hour, Mr. Hunt was called upon to state how it could be done; he said it could only be done by appointing another clerk at a salary of £125 a year; but Mr. Weekes ordered it to be done by those employed in making up the Hunter River mails, and it was done.

done. With regard to the conveyance of mails, I think he knows nothing about the subject. I do not think he has given it proper consideration. The idea of introducing the carriages from England, at the expense of the Government, and letting the contractors supply the horses, is simply absurd. At present there is the greatest difficulty in getting contractors to carry out the contracts for which they are paid so highly; and if the Post Office had to employ people to find horses, and trust to them to take care of carriages supplied by the Government, the expense would, in my opinion, be enormous.

T. K. Abbott,
Esq.
31 Mar., 1862.

38. Could not the English letters be sorted on the way from Melbourne? Yes, I think they could. The Sydney letters are all distinct from the letters for the country, so that the clerk employed could confine his whole attention to the Sydney letters.

39. And you think the time would be sufficient? He would have at least forty-eight hours, and I think he might do it in that time. It would require one clerk who understood perfectly the letter carriers' beats, and who was acquainted with the holders of private boxes.

40. You said you could make many suggestions by which the Delivery Branch would be improved—will you oblige the Board by naming them? I am not aware of having done so; but the reconstruction of the Post Office would be one, which would afford proper accommodation and position for the Delivery Office.

41. A new building entirely? Yes; I do not think it possible to make the present building suit. My idea is, that it should be constructed somewhat like a bank. The offices immediately in connection with the public should occupy the front part, and the sorting and making up of mails should be done in the rear; so that all the clerks would be concentrated, and their services could be made use of as required. By that means, I think, a strict surveillance could be exercised, whereas at present it is much more difficult. With regard to the system of delivery, I think the present system of sorting in the Delivery Office is very good; the subdivision of the alphabet is most simple, and expedites the delivery of letters to a great degree. The system of private boxes is, I think, as simple as it can be rendered.

42. Is it not the practice in England that clerks are examined before entering the Post Office? It is at present. Until within a recent period, I believe, the examination was not strict.

43. Would it be advisable that such an examination should be pursued in the Colony? I think it would be very advisable. The system was in existence some years ago, but it did not always operate as was intended. I have known clerks pass the Board, and receive certificates that they were able to perform clerical duties, who could not spell.

44. Do you think the clerks in the Post Office are generally satisfied with their position? I do not think you could find in the Government service a number of clerks so completely dissatisfied.

45. To what do you attribute their dissatisfaction? In some measure to the fact that when vacancies have occurred strangers have been put into the department. On the death of Mr. Stone, two strange clerks—Mr. Springett and Mr. Newman—were appointed, and his salary divided between them. On the death of Mr. Ussher, Mr. Garnett was brought from the Colonial Storekeeper's Department —

46. What was Mr. Ussher's salary? £375. The vacancy created by Mr. Garnett's death will, I believe, be filled up from the office up to a certain grade, but there are two young men who will be passed over, viz., Mr. Unwin, who has been doing duty as substitute for Mr. Newman, the acting postmaster at Lambing Flat, and another young man who has been in the department since November, and was well recommended. Two strangers have been brought in at £150, while Mr. Unwin gets only £132, and Mr. Murdoch, the junior clerk, will be dispensed with altogether.

47. By Mr. Knox: What are the names of these two who have been brought in, as you say? Mr. Danne and Mr. Mahony.

48. Have they been in the Government service before? I do not think either of them has.

49. By the Chairman: Do you think the postal lines through the Colony are as well arranged for the convenience of the public as they might be? I think some few might be improved.

50. Whose business is it to look after that, to see whether they might be improved or not? It ought to be the duty of the Postal Inspector.

51. Has the Postal Inspector ever made any suggestions with that view? The lines I now speak of—one in particular, the line from Cowra to Marengo—runs parallel with the line from Cowra to Lambing Flat. It has been brought under notice, and the Inspector's attention has been directed to the subject; but in consequence of contracts having been taken for both, for the present year, it is impossible to put an end to either at present. It will be the duty of the Postal Inspector to report on the matter.

52. Are the lines that stretch far away into the interior as direct as they might be? I think so. With regard to some of the cross lines, which are of great length, they are often made to pursue the course that will most benefit the population of the districts, that is, the greatest number of stations. In fact most of those lines are established for the purpose of supplying large squatting establishments with postal communication.

53. By Mr. Knox: In some cases, I suppose, the letters are very few? Very few. In fact that is the cause of the postal department being so expensive.

54. Have you any means of ascertaining the number of letters delivered at each Post Office during the year? Yes, there is a return, an average return.

55. What does that shew? The number of letters posted and received at each office during one week in every month, and then the average for the year.

56. Could you send that return in to the Board? Yes.

57. Are you aware that there have been any observations made lately with regard to the Queanbeyan service? Yes.

- T. K. Abbott, Esq.
31 Mar., 1862.
58. Will you read that letter (handing to witness a letter written by Mr. Andrew Morton on the subject of the Queanbeyan mail service)? I understand the subject. I think Mr. Morton puts it in a worse light than it really deserves. I do not think the present time table works as badly as he represents.
59. Has the matter come under your notice as Secretary? Yes. Queanbeyan receives three mails a week by Goulburn, Boro, and Bungendore, and twice a week by Goulburn, Collector, and Gundaroo.
60. It would appear by that letter that there are no means of answering those letters? Mails arriving on Monday can be answered on Wednesday; those of Wednesday can be answered on Saturday; and Saturday on Monday. The disadvantage is that the mails arrive at nine o'clock in the morning and leave at the same hour; that is because it is necessary to bring them into Goulburn at a certain time, as they have to travel through the night.
61. What was the alteration that was complained of? The alteration was merely an alteration of one day, and that, I think, was an advantage. The Collector and Gundaroo mail was altered to give Queanbeyan communication five times a week, if possible, and in endeavouring to do that the residents of Gundaroo were inconvenienced. Mr. Murray, the Speaker of the Assembly, and the Gundaroo people, then petitioned that the old time table should be reverted to, and their request was complied with, but the altered time table to Queanbeyan still continues. I think I can shew you how it works. (The witness referred to the printed time table.)
62. Does this come properly under your duties—the regulation of this? In the absence of the Postal Inspector I have to do it; when he is in the office he prepares the time tables and reports on letters on this subject; when absent, I do. According to the present time table the mail reaching Queanbeyan on the Saturday, at nine o'clock in the morning, can be answered on Sunday, and the mail reaching Queanbeyan on Wednesday, at nine o'clock, can be answered on Thursday.
63. I understood you to say it arrived on Wednesday at nine, and left at the same hour? That is the direct mail by Boro route, but that can be answered by Gundaroo on Thursday; and the mail arriving by Boro on Saturday can be answered by Gundaroo on Monday. Persons who reside at any distance from Queanbeyan can answer the correspondence they receive on Monday by Boro on Wednesday, that received on Wednesday can be answered on Saturday, and that on Saturday can be answered on Monday.
64. Does the mail by Gundaroo get to Sydney as quickly as the mail by Boro? Yes; it leaves Queanbeyan at five o'clock in the morning, gets to Goulburn at nine o'clock in the evening, and comes on to Sydney the same night.
65. According to your version of the arrangement, letters can be answered five days in the week? They can. The great difficulty in these matters arises from the conflicting interests of the townships along the postal lines. For instance, the mail by Boro goes on to Cooma and other places beyond that, and in framing the time tables for so long a line it is impossible to meet the wants of every locality.
66. Have any complaints been made to you? A great many. The altered Gundaroo time has satisfied some, but I really think the great clamour has been raised by the local newspapers.
67. By the Chairman: What reason have the local newspapers for being dissatisfied? It does not suit their publication.
68. By Mr. Knox: Had they the same opportunities, under the old time table, of receiving and answering letters? I do not think the arrangement was so good. By the old table the Sydney mail arrived at Queanbeyan on Monday, and left on return on Monday; the next mail arrived on Thursday, but the return mail left the day before (Wednesday). At present Thursday's mail returns on Thursday, and those who are anxious to answer their letters expeditiously can do so.
69. But not on Wednesday, because the mail returns at the same hour? Nominally it does, but it is at the postmaster's discretion to detain the contractor for a time.
70. Is he not bound to deliver the mail at Goulburn at a certain time? At nine o'clock; but so long as it arrives there in time to come on to Sydney, a very strict adherence to the rules is not required.
71. By the Chairman: Have you ever formed any opinion as to whether it would facilitate the working of the Post Office on the up-country lines, if the telegraph, or a branch of it, were connected with the Post Office? I do not know that it would confer any greater advantage than the present arrangement does. The Telegraph Office affords every facility, and it is made use of whenever extraordinary despatch is required. So long as the Telegraph Department is in such close connection with the Post Office, I do not think there is anything to be desired.
72. By Mr. Knox: Do all the contracts pass through your hands? Every one; the arrangement of all of them.
73. Is it the custom now to call for yearly contracts, or for contracts for longer period? One year or three years.
74. Do you receive tenders for the long service and the short service? For one or three years. It rests with the Board to decide upon them.
75. How have the tenders been mostly sent in—for the longer period or the shorter period? I think, generally speaking, for the longer period. According to this list (referring to a list before him) I think they are pretty nearly divided; but there are a great many contracts in this list that have now nearly expired; they will expire this year.
76. Since when has the mode of calling for contracts been altered? Since I became Secretary (1855). Tenders have been called for for one or three years. I am at present unable to speak as to the practice prior to that date.

77. Do you think it advantageous to enter into contracts for a long period? Decidedly. It pays the contractor better to expend money in good material. When contracts are taken for a short period, I am aware that new contractors purchase the old material belonging to the out-going contractors, which is patched sufficiently well to last the term of their contracts, and as a natural result the services are often unsatisfactorily performed. T. K. Abbott,
Esq.
31 Mar., 1862.
78. I think you said the other day that all the bonds and contracts were made up in the Secretary's Office? Yes.
79. What are the numbers generally? I think very little short of 200.
80. The contractors enter into their own personal bond, with two sureties? Yes, their own personal bond, and a separate bond in conjunction with two sureties.
81. These sureties, I presume, are approved of by the Postmaster General? They are approved of by the Board. I think you asked me for a list of these contracts for last year, and the year previous. I have them here. (Handed in.)
82. Do the clerks in the office give security bonds? Every clerk in the department, with the exception of the Accountant, gives a bond for £100, and two sureties of £50 each. The Postmaster General and the Secretary and Cashier give security to the extent of £1,000 each.
83. All the others only £100? Yes.
84. Do any of the junior officers receive money? No, except the postage collected in Sydney, which is very trifling.
85. Was the amount of security given greater in former times? No, it was never greater.
86. Mr. Kebble stated the other day, that one reason why the Cashier's office was separate from his was, that he gave no security—I suppose he must have overlooked the fact of his giving security for £100? Mr. Kebble is the only exception to the rule; he does not give security. It is a question that has been brought forward on more occasions than one, and it was brought prominently before the Government on one occasion, although no alteration took place. I am not aware that the fact of the Accountant not having given security was a reason for the Cashier's office being separate from his. That formed an objection to his performing those duties during my temporary absence. (The witness referred to printed Post Office Regulations.) The Accountant is an exception to the rule; you will find it there (handing the regulations across the table.)
87. You give security in £500, and two sureties in £250 each? Yes.
88. The postmasters give security in £200? Yes, themselves in £100, and two sureties in £50 each. By the new regulations just printed, postmasters will be obliged to give security in proportion to the salary they receive.
89. I think you stated that the office hours are from nine to four? Yes.
90. When were they altered? By a regulation of the Government in 1857.
91. Were they previously from eight to five? No; in my office they were from ten to four, and the clerks were allowed an hour for lunch.
92. I find it stated in the Postmaster General's Report for 1855, that the hours of attendance were from eight till five? That must have referred to the Letter Branch, which was kept open during those hours, though the whole of the clerks were not in attendance all the time.
93. I observed the other day in your office, that most of the letters were copied in a copying machine? Yes.
94. Are they all copied in that way? All.
95. However important? However important.
96. Do you not think that rather a dangerous practice? My staff will not admit of the duty being otherwise performed.
97. Have you ever had to refer to a letter and found that you could not make out the copy? On one or two occasions I have found it faint, but in such case I refer to the original draft.
98. Do you not think it would be an improvement if letters of great importance were copied into a book? I think it would; it would be much safer.
99. With regard to routine letters the copying machine would answer every purpose? Yes.
100. Perhaps one letter out of ten would need to be copied by hand? Letters to the Government, and occasionally to contractors and the public, when of importance, might be copied into a book. A copy might first be taken by the machine, which could afterwards be copied into a book when time would admit of such a course.
101. Are all the accounts of the department kept in accordance with suggestions made in 1855? Yes, by Mr. Rolleston's Board.
102. Do you find the mode in which they are kept to work satisfactorily? Very; I do not know of a single complaint.
103. There are no complaints of contractors not being able to get their money? Not a single complaint.
104. There used to be a great many when they had to go to the Treasury? Yes, and at the time the Postmaster General was allowed to pay his advances to his private account; but that was a very old date, between 1841 and 1850. In fact at that time all the accounts were paid from revenue; the revenue was placed to the credit of the Postmaster General, who drew against it. At the expiration of every month he received an advance from the Treasury to the amount of the cheques he had actually paid, which advance was placed to his private credit in the bank.
105. By the Chairman: Are you aware that there is a deficiency in the revenue of the Post Office at the present moment, as compared with the expenditure? I think the revenue covers little more than half the expenditure. I think the revenue for last year was £47,000 or £48,000, while the expenditure was something like £81,000.
106. That is exclusive of the English subsidy? Yes. I suppose the whole expenditure amounts to something like £105,000.
107. Can you suggest any means by which the revenue of the Post Office might be increased?

T. K. Abbott, Esq., I can suggest a means, but I am afraid not a very popular one, viz., that some tax should be placed upon newspapers carried by post.

31 Mar., 1862. 108. There would require to be a very large tax on newspapers to make up the deficiency? The number of newspapers sent by post is enormous; I think during the past year it was about four millions.

109. What postage would you suggest might be put on newspapers? I do not think the public ought to object to a halfpenny, and that would increase the revenue considerably; when it was a penny the public complained. The weight of newspapers despatched from the Sydney Office is very great, especially after the arrival of an English mail. The newspapers despatched on one day for the Northern road often weigh over a ton.

110. What is the average weight of the letters? Under half an ounce.

111. You are aware that the average weight of a newspaper is estimated to be two ounces and a-half? Yes.

112. A halfpenny on each newspaper would give but a small increase to the revenue? It would be something.

113. Can you suggest any other means of increasing the revenue? The only other means would be to increase the postage, which, I think, would not be politic.

114. For what reason? It would decrease the number of letters, and the revenue might suffer.

115. You are aware that in Victoria the postage is double the rate that it is here, but the revenue has gone on increasing? On the other hand the extent of Victoria is not nearly so great as this Colony —

116. That is an argument, I take it, in favour of an increase of the postage? For instance, if the postage of letters to Fort Bourke were increased to four-pence or even sixpence, how far would that increase go to defray the expense of a long postal line—say from Wallgett, on the Barwin, to Wentworth, on the Darling and Murray Rivers—established without any idea of profit to the Post Office. The cost is probably not less than £1,000 a year, which the returns for the sale of stamps would probably not amount to £200.

117. By Mr. King: Would you suggest a differential postage to apply to those who profit by these long lines, because if a few squatters some thousand miles distant wish to have a Post Office, would it not be fair that they should pay for the accommodation in some proportion to the cost? I think such cases might be met, by allowing the squatters themselves to establish postal lines, and subsidising them; let them establish the communication, and let the Government give so much a year towards the expense, on certificate that the service has been regularly performed; but I do not think it would be advisable for the Government to establish lines with the idea or hope that the public would subscribe to defray in part the expense as suggested.

118. By the Chairman: Are you aware what the tariff is at the Melbourne Post Office? I have seen their rates of postage; I think their outward rate of postage is the same as our own, 6d. the half ounce, the inland 4d. and the town 2d.

119. And newspapers 1d.? I was not certain, I thought that merely applied to ship newspapers.

120. As I have just stated, the number of letters in Victoria goes on steadily increasing in spite of these rates—why should it not be the same here if the rates were the same as they are there? I think for our correspondence to increase, we must have an increase of population.

121. Do you think the amount of correspondence has attained its limit? No, but the increase in the squatting districts is necessarily slow.

122. From what you have just stated respecting these country lines, it would appear that the larger proportion of the postal revenue is not derived from the squatting districts? Certainly not, it is derived from the centres of population.

123. Would the number of letters be likely to diminish in consequence of such an increase of the rates of postage? No, I do not think there would be a very great decrease, but the amount of correspondence in the case of the larger towns of the Colony would probably decrease. I know that when our postal rates were enormously high, our revenue then did not amount to anything like the same sum that such rates ought to have commanded, for the reason that they amounted to a prohibition. People did not write unless they were positively compelled.

124. Would the effect be the same, supposing the rate being now 2d. were increased to 3d., which would still be considerably less than the Victorian rate? I do not think it would; but still, I think, if a proper tax were put on newspapers, it would not only have the effect of increasing the revenue in some degree, but would also reduce the cost of contracts. The contractors take into consideration the enormous weight of newspapers they have to carry, and charge accordingly. On the line from Tamworth to Warialda, for instance, they have to employ in some cases three pack horses, besides a horse for the mailman to ride. On the line from Murrurundi to Gulligal representations to the same effect have been received; and on several occasions portions of the mails had to be left behind, because the mailman was not prepared with the number of pack horses required to carry them, owing to the quantity of newspapers they contained. If the weight of newspapers were diminished by the imposition of postage on them, the cost of contracts would be also diminished.

125. Do you think that many persons who now take a newspaper would not do so if they had to pay postage? No; but I think many persons who now send newspapers away to get rid of them, would not pay 1d. on each with the same readiness.

126. If the weight of newspapers would be diminished, so would also the dissemination of the news they contain? That has been the argument for not taxing them. It was considered that it would be a tax upon knowledge. It has never yet been mentioned without calling forth the condemnation of newspaper proprietors.

127. Mr. Dillon is now Postal Inspector, is he not? Yes.

128. When did Mr. Levinge cease to be Postal Inspector? He ceased to be Postal Inspector on the 28th February. T. K. Abbott, Esq.
129. By whose authority was the exchange made? By that of the Minister for Finance. Mr. Weekes in fact directed that Mr. Levinge should exchange, and that such exchange should take place in the department. In the first instance a certain discretion was allowed, but afterwards it was considered that the exchange should take place in the department. 31 Mar., 1862.
130. By Mr. King: Was any reason assigned for the exchange? I believe the real reason for the exchange was irregularity on the part of the late Postal Inspector on his last tour of inspection. He occupied a much longer time than the amount of duties he performed warranted, and I believe his explanation was not considered satisfactory by the Treasurer.
131. By Mr. Knox: Is Mr. Dillon in town now? He is.
132. By Mr. Smart: He has not commenced his duty yet? He has been doing the duty the Postal Inspector always performs when in town, regulating time tables, and other matters relating to the postal service.
133. He has not commenced his inspection yet? No.
134. He was employed in your office previously to the exchange with Mr. Levinge? Yes. Mr. Levinge was also employed in my office before I became Secretary. Afterwards he was employed in the Letter Branch, from thence he was transferred to my office, and subsequently he was appointed Postal Inspector.
135. I think you stated last week that the whole of your clerks were fully employed? I can conscientiously say, I do not think there are any clerks in the whole department so hard worked, and in most cases there is more exacted from them than there ought to be.
136. Are they allowed any time for lunch at all? Merely while they partake of their lunch in the office.
137. They bring it with them? Yes, I think generally they do—merely sandwiches, and with which they generally have a glass of beer each. With regard to the memorandum the Chairman spoke of on Thursday last, I find it has been registered, but I have not yet been able to get it. As to my giving instructions to Mr. Hunt, as Secretary, those instructions are generally retained by Mr. Hunt. They are of almost daily occurrence. Mr. Hunt has nothing to do with the arrangement of postal matters. On all these matters he has to receive instructions through me. Mr. Hunt's department is like a country post office, only that it is of greater magnitude—with this exception, that the country postmasters have to keep their own accounts. On all matters connected with the postal service Major Christie gives his orders, and those orders are carried out by me. I have found one or two cases where I have given such orders. For instance, on the establishment of new Post Offices, Mr. Hunt receives instructions as to the offices with which they should exchange mails, and the mode in which he should send his correspondence to them. This is one I found with regard to the establishment of an iron receiver. It seems in that case Mr. Hunt received instructions as to it. (Papers handed in). This is another (handed in), where direct mails were ordered to be made up to Eden. Mr. Hunt received instructions in that case. Here is another with reference to the establishment of the Botany Post Office and postal line. (Handed in). These are matters of trifling detail, but they are the only ones I could put my hand on. This (handed in a paper) is a letter I met with in going through other papers, which may throw some light on Mr. Hunt's claim for precedence. I may say with regard to my duties, that a very large amount of my time is occupied in interviews with the public on postal matters; two-thirds of a day is sometimes lost in interviews with persons seeking information on postal matters. With regard to Mr. Hunt's obtaining assistance from my office, the Chairman told me to bring forward any applications for it; here are a number, one in particular relating to the last mail. (Handed in.) You will find from these papers, that on the occasion of the arrival of every English mail, Mr. Hunt has sought and obtained assistance; in some cases to the number of three and four clerks.
138. By Mr. Watt: Generally three clerks are required? Two to four. On the last occasion Mr. Hunt asked for four; and after they were sent down he sent two back, and said he would not have them, although the same clerks had been repeatedly employed in the Letter Branch.
139. By Mr. Knox: These were Mr. Kebble's clerks the sent back? Yes; the same clerks had been employed repeatedly, and Mr. Nightingale is certainly an intelligent active clerk. These are the papers relating to the making up of the mail for Grafton. (Handed in.)
140. By Mr. Smart: I see Mr. Dillon initials some of these papers, what is the reason of that? He must have been acting for me at a time when I was absent; Mr. Dillon was senior clerk in my office.
141. By Mr. Knox: In Major Christie's absence all letters addressed to the Postmaster General would be opened by you? All letters addressed to the Postmaster General are opened by me whether he is absent or present. It is the first duty I perform every morning. In looking through the papers, I have met with some which, if the Board will look through them, will give an idea of the working of the department, and the system practised with regard to applications for letters. (Papers handed in.)

THURSDAY, 3 APRIL, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

| MR. KING, | | MR. SMART, |
| MR. KNOX, | | MR. WATT. |

Mr. Thomas William Levinge called in and examined:—

Mr. T. W.
Levinge.

3 April, 1862.

1. By the Chairman: You were lately the Inspector of the postal branches in the Colony? Up to the 28th of February last.
2. How long did you fill the office of Inspector? Upwards of three years; I was appointed in November, 1858.
3. What do you consider were your duties as Postal Inspector? I was supposed to be always in readiness to go wherever the Postmaster General might direct me; wherever anything might be wrong to go as directed; to visit certain districts; to see that the proper returns were forwarded; to listen to any complaints that might be made with reference to the performance of the postal service, and to suggest means of obviating them, if possible. I beg to hand in a copy of the Instructions given me when appointed Inspector. (Vide Appendix A.)
4. You consider that it was your duty only to visit when you were instructed by the Postmaster General? When I was absent on a tour of duty if anything occurred which I thought it was necessary to be looked after, I would use my discretion to go into it without waiting for orders, if it did not interfere with my special instructions.
5. Do you not consider it your duty to visit all Post Offices, and all the postal lines of the Colony? Of course, but it would be impossible to do it in one year and to do my other duties attendant upon the office.
6. How many days were you occupied during the year 1861—the last year? I cannot state the exact number of days. I was, I think, fourteen days at Black Creek investigating matters there.
7. Let us refer to another year, as you do not recollect that. I see from the Report that you were a hundred and thirty-five days in 1860? Yes.
8. And about the same number in 1861? About the same, probably.
9. How was the remainder of your time occupied? I attended the office daily to arrange the time tables, in connection with which there was a great deal of labour cast upon the office in consequence of some facilities I had endeavoured to give, and which rendered it necessary that the time tables should be re-arranged.
10. The time tables are arranged at the commencement of the year, and continue throughout the year, do they not? They were all altered before the first quarter of 1861.
11. Do you mean that the time of the Postal Inspector is taken up principally in making and altering the time table? In Sydney.
12. Why does he remain in Sydney? He is required to be in Sydney at times. Country gentlemen call upon the Postmaster General for new lines, and when the Inspector is in Sydney he attends at the office to afford information in such matters, in consequence of his knowledge of the topography of the country.
13. Could not the Postal Inspector give that information from any place where he might be travelling? He could; but he would require to be more than man to do it if he were kept constantly on horseback. I have had to ride both day and night.
14. You have travelled a hundred and thirty-five days? Yes; but I have had to do it on an emergency. It depends upon the distance you have to travel. On my last tour I travelled 1,600 miles.
15. In how many days? I was five months on it. I would have performed it in much less time, but I was unwell, as I had had a fall from my horse.
16. Then you do not quote that as very hard travelling? No; but you cannot place yourself in communication with the inhabitants of a district, and ascertain their wants by coming into a town at six o'clock in the evening and leaving the next morning. I travelled by coach whenever the mail was conveyed by coach, as I was entitled to a free seat, and I availed myself of it as much as I could, because there was no provision made for horse travelling. I had always to pay for my own forage.
17. Was it not considered that the salary of £500 included travelling expenses? When I first made application for the appointment, I was under the impression that an arrangement would be made about forage when upon horse lines.
18. Why so—was it not understood that £500 would include travelling expenses? When I first applied for the appointment, I was under the impression that there would be three Inspectors appointed; there were three put upon the Estimates.
19. How many Post Offices are there in the Colony? About 350.
20. How many did you visit in the years 1859, 1860, and 1861? My report is printed with the Postmaster General's Report; you will find it in the last paragraph.
21. It is stated that you visited 70 in 1860—have you during the three years visited all the Post Offices in the Colony? No.
22. Why not? I went where I was directed, except in such cases as those I have referred to when I have visited places to which I have not been directed, and I have gone to some others for the purpose of obtaining information.
23. Do you consider that the duties of your appointment were only to go about where you were told to go? And to use my discretion, and when necessary go elsewhere.
24. Any way you have not visited all the Post Offices in the Colony during the three years you have held the office of Inspector? My duty was not confined to visiting the Post Offices.

I had to see that proper arrangements were made by the contractors, and to suggest new postal lines where necessary.

25. I mean that you have not visited all the postal lines of the Colony? No; I had a great variety of duties to perform, and I may mention in illustration of the interest I took in the improvement of the means of communication here, that the first American coach which ran upon the roads of this Colony was introduced by myself. I was at Port Phillip on leave of absence, being the only one I had had in ten years, and a contractor gave me a carte blanche for the purpose of enabling me to introduce any improvements in mail vehicles I might see there.

26. Can you conceive the use of a Postal Inspector if he does not visit all the lines? Yes. I think there has been a great improvement since that appointment has been made, and I can now give an opinion impartially, as I am no longer Postal Inspector. The appointment of an Inspector made the contractors look up and improve their arrangement, and this was the result not so much of the actual surveillance exercised as of the fact that such an officer was in existence and might come upon them at any moment.

27. That was all the advantage? That was an advantage, but there was this further advantage, that suggestions were made for the improvement of the service.

28. There were suggestions with reference to some roads, of course? Yes. There are seven such officers in Ireland, in a small country, while here, in a country nearly as large as Europe, there is but one.

29. What is the speed at which mails are conveyed? The average is not more than four miles and a-half an hour; that is doubtless capable of great improvement; but it is a very difficult thing to move a mail contractor. I made the most strenuous efforts to get a more rapid rate of travelling.

30. Why has there not been more rapid travelling? There are several reasons for it; one is, that the contracts put in are very often too low, for the tenders are often made from a spirit of opposition, by persons who are more anxious to prevent others from getting the contracts than to get them themselves.

31. Does the contract specify the time in which the mail shall be conveyed? One of the conditions of the tenders states that the postmaster shall not oblige the contractor to travel at more than eight miles an hour, but it does not state the minimum rate. There are roads over which the mails cannot travel more than four miles an hour.

32. Where? On the Southern Road, at the Jugiong Hill; that was the case there, but it is now better, as the hill is avoided.

33. That is to say, that for perhaps five miles of a road you could not travel at more than five miles an hour, what is to prevent the mails from going the rest of the road at eight? The chief reason is that the vehicles are not sufficiently horsed, and there are not sufficient relays.

34. Would it not be the duty of the Postal Inspector to look to that? The contracts are too low.

35. Is it not the duty of the Postal Inspector to see the contracts properly carried out? It is, and I did so, so far as was in my power.

36. Can you assign any reason why the mails should not be conveyed at the rate of eight miles an hour? On some of the roads it would be impossible.

37. On which line of road is it impossible? On the Bathurst line it is impossible for the mail to travel eight miles an hour with safety, because the mail travels at night along a great portion of the road. Even in daylight there are parts of the road where that rate of speed could not be maintained.

38. When a letter leaves Sydney at five o'clock, at what time does it reach Bathurst? The mail now leaves at two o'clock.

39. When does it arrive at Bathurst? The next day at three o'clock in the afternoon. The distance is 120 miles.

40. You are of opinion that it could not be conveyed at a more rapid rate—I am now referring to that particular mail line? I think that is quite as much as the contractor can do, taking all weathers, to keep it punctual. There are some roads which are wonderfully good, and where the horses are in good order, upon which a higher speed might be attained, but as a general rule I think that is a fair rate.

41. You refer to the roads being in good order, are you aware that in Victoria they have a summer and winter rate of travelling? I am aware that they have a summer and winter time table. When I was on my visit to Victoria I took notice of these things, and gained all the information I could with reference to the department, and on my return I suggested the adoption of this system.

42. Why should it not be carried out here? It was, and was abandoned. The difficulty here arises from the uncertainty of the seasons. When the experiment was tried here, the seasons appeared to be reversed—in the winter we had summer weather, and vice versa; and as there is a break of gauge, if I may use the term, between the main and branch lines, when the time table is changed at the beginning and end of winter great confusion is caused from one end of the line to the other. No doubt a great deal of this arises from the mail arrangements of the contractors.

43. What is the advantage of a Postal Inspector if he does not remedy these evils? A Postal Inspector cannot be all over a country as large as Europe; if he is at Moreton Bay, he cannot be present and know what is going on at Bathurst or Goulburn.

44. Certainly not, but 135 days seems to be rather a small number of days out of 310 to be travelling; if the Postal Inspector instead of 135 had been travelling 270 days he could probably have visited more places? During the first year I was travelling more than that, but the fact of having to attend to other business of my office in Sydney prevented me travelling more.

- Mr. T. W. Levinge.
- 3 April, 1862.
45. Mr Dillon is now the Postal Inspector, is he not? Yes.
46. And you are now employed in the Secretary's Office? I have gone back to my old appointment. He succeeded me as senior clerk and correspondence clerk.
47. By whose authority was the exchange made? By direction of the Minister for Finance and Trade; he recommended that I should exchange with some qualified person in the department, and I considered that Mr Dillon was one of the best qualified persons.
48. What are the hours at which you are engaged now? In the corresponding branch from nine to four, sometimes till five or six, and I have frequently taken home papers with me that require consideration.
49. Is Mr. Dillon now in Sydney? He is; he is engaged now in other business of his office.
50. By Mr. Smart: Are not the tables of the present year made up? There is one table which is revised every month, the arrival and despatch table, and there is scarcely a day in the week in which there is not a remonstrance from some one. In these cases, the Postal Inspector is the person to refer to; and I may say that during the period I was Inspector I was harder worked than at any period from the time I was engaged as extra clerk until I was appointed senior clerk of the branch where I now am.
51. By the Chairman: You say that you consider Mr. Dillon was the best qualified person you could recommend to the Secretary for Finance and Trade—what were his particular qualifications? His general knowledge of the postal department. Postal Inspector is almost a misnomer, as that officer is in fact a sort of instructor to the postmasters and contractors; he is required to teach them. Mr. Dillon was sometime in the London Post Office, and is very conversant with everything connected with Post Office matters, as much so as any gentleman in the office, and more so than many.
52. Would you consider remarkable activity, energy, and ability to ride a long time on a stretch in case of need qualifications for such an office? I possess those myself, and yet I did not give satisfaction.
53. I am not asking you as to your qualifications; my question refers to Mr. Dillon? I do not know that he does not possess them.
54. Do you know that he does? I do not; but he has been on one tour of duty to Wallgett, and I believe he performed that very satisfactorily to the Postmaster General. That was before my appointment.
55. Did you ever make any suggestion for the improvement of any of the lines you travelled over? I did, but I cannot quote the particular instances from memory. I may refer to the case of the Carcoar line. I accelerated the table there, but no sooner was it done than some influential person interfered, and we had to go back to the old table.
56. Did persons like their letters to be a longer time on the road—was that the reason? The contractors manage to get a certain amount of influence, and they get people to sign a memorial that they are satisfied with the late arrival.
57. Can you point out any instances of any parties being anxious that the mails should be delayed instead of accelerated? Yes. The Carcoar mails arriving at Bathurst from Sydney at three or four o'clock remain till the next morning. I proposed that they should go on. A proposal made by me, that the Orange mail should be sent on, also met with opposition.
58. Will you state from what parties the opposition arose? The Board can obtain the papers. With reference to Carcoar I think there were some influential residents, and among others Mr. Icely, who pointed out it was no benefit in consequence of the mail arriving at Carcoar without the Bathurst mail. The error arose not from any blunder in my time table, but from the contractor not doing his duty.
59. What power does the Post Office exercise over contractors who fail in doing their duty? The contractors give security for double the amount of their contracts, and are liable to a fine of 30s. an hour for overtime, with the exception of the first ten minutes; for the first hour the contractor would be liable to a fine of £1 5s.
60. Do the Board understand you to say that the postmaster has the power to compel the contractors to convey the mails at the rate of eight miles an hour all over the country? No, he has not, as I read it.
61. How do you read it? That he shall not have the power to compel him to travel at a higher rate, but it does not state the lower rate.
62. If there is no limit the contractor may as well then travel at one mile an hour as two or three? He is bound to travel by a time table.
63. Does not that regulate the speed at which he shall travel? The average speed is not more than five miles an hour for the whole Colony, though on some roads it is under four.
64. Can you assign any reason why that speed should not be greater under present contracts? I think, considering the present state of the roads and bridges, it ought to be greater. The only reason I can assign for not being done is this, that if we look for a higher rate of speed, they would look for a higher amount of remuneration.
65. What would be the extent of the higher amount of remuneration they would be likely to require—how much per cent.? I think it would make a difference of at least fifty per cent., if not more.
66. To increase it from five miles to what? From five to seven miles all through.
67. That would require an increase of fifty per cent.? I think so.
68. Both by coach and horse? A horse mail cannot possibly travel as fast as a coach.
69. How fast can a horse mail travel? Five miles an hour is, I think, pretty fair for a horse mail; a coach may travel up to seven.
70. What is the reason a horse mail cannot travel so fast as a coach mail? You can drive a good trotting horse from this to Liverpool, or from this to Campbelltown, and trot him all the the way, but you cannot ride him so fast, particularly if he has a mail to carry. Sometimes the mailmen have to carry two or three mail bags, and these are very cumbersome.

Mr. T. W.
Levinge.

71. My own experience is that I could travel with saddle bags six miles an hour easily, and I have done it frequently. What is the reason that the mail cannot be carried at the same rate? You have had a superior class of horse to what these people employ.

3 April, 1862.

72. Then they have only to obtain a superior class of horses to accomplish the same result? Yes.

73. The question I ask you then is, would an extra payment at the rate of fifty per cent. enable them to do this? Yes, and should provide them with relays both for horse and coach mails; now they hardly ever dream of relays for a horse mail, they ride a horse as far as he will go.

74. The expense, which is now £45,000 for the conveyance of mails, would then be £22,000 more? I think so.

75. For that difference the accelerated speed could and should be obtained? It should be obtained; there would be nothing to prevent it if proper carriages were used. The mail is conveyed much more rapidly in Victoria than here; but there they pay much higher rates.

76. You consider the postal lines you have visited to be as well arranged as possible? To say as well as possible would be rather like egotism on my part. I have done my best to make them as well as possible.

77. As direct and affording as large an amount of convenience to the public as possible? I have endeavoured to make them so, but local interests have sometimes interfered.

78. You are now in the Correspondence Branch of the Post Office? I am.

79. You were there before you became Postal Inspector? Yes, I was only about three months in the office when I was placed in charge of that branch by Mr. Merewether, when Mr. Raymond was Secretary.

80. Do you consider that the arrangements of that department could be in any way improved? The greatest improvement would be better accommodation, and another clerk.

81. How many clerks are there now? Six, including myself.

82. You think six, including yourself, are not sufficient for that department? I do, considering the extraordinary amount of correspondence in our branch, and the variety of work we have to perform. The bonds and other documents are drawn up in our office, which in other departments, I am under the impression, would be sent to the Crown Solicitor.

83. These are all printed? The forms.

84. Then they require only a few figures and names to fill them up? They involve a great deal of work, and occupy a great deal of time.

85. The accommodation you say is not sufficient in your department? Not at all.

86. You are of opinion that if the accommodation were improved you would still require another clerk? Certainly; but the work would be better done even with the present staff, and we should be able to get through it with much greater satisfaction to ourselves and the public.

87. I ask you whether with better accommodation you would still require another clerk? Unless other arrangements were made.

88. Then what is the use of improved accommodation? Even with an extra clerk we want improved accommodation. We want both; either alone would be only one step in the right direction.

89. Are the clerks in your office satisfied with their position? I have not heard much dissatisfaction among them, in fact I have heard none, excepting that they always look very anxiously for promotion, and if they do not get it, they feel a little disappointed if some one else does. I think a system of notice or encouragement, in some way similar to that which prevails in the English Post Office, would be an advantage. If encouragement were given to those gentlemen who suggest improvements, it would make them more zealous and anxious to benefit the service.

90. Can you, from your tours of inspection, give the Board any idea what proportion the letters taken by the inland mail bore to the newspapers—what was the relative weight of newspapers and letters? I should say that the letters were not one-fiftieth, or less than that.

91. Do you mean to say that the weight of the newspapers was fifty times greater than that of the letters? I am giving you merely my impression, but if the Board desire it I will furnish them with a memorandum upon the subject.

92. Will you do so, and forward it to the Board? I will. (Vide Appendix B.)

93. I suppose, considering the limited speed, that the arrival of mails throughout the Colony is pretty regular? On some lines it is; it depends a great deal upon the energy of the contractor. It is not so bad, all things considered, as might be expected. In bad weather the mails are very irregular sometimes, but these things are very much magnified. There is unquestionably great room for accelerating the speed of the mails, but the increased expense that would be involved has checked it.

94. Does a good feeling prevail among those employed in the Post Office in Sydney? So far as the majority of the officers are concerned. I am myself, personally, on friendly terms with all the officers in the place.

95. That is not answering the question, you are speaking individually rather than generally? There is a want of cordiality among some parties, among the chiefs, which more or less affects those under them.

96. Am I to understand you to mean that, in consequence of the want of cordiality among the chiefs, there is not the cordiality there should be among the subordinates? There is a certain distance observed among the others for fear of giving offence.

97. There is not the alacrity to assist each other in the public work there should be? No.

98. By Mr. Knox: When did your exchange with Mr. Dillon take place? On the 1st of March.

99.

- Mr. T. W. Levinge.
3 April, 1862.
99. You were Postal Inspector up to that time? Yes.
100. Any alterations that have been made since that time have been made by him? They were made by me, but for the last month I was engaged in winding up various matters which had arisen in the course of the three years of my office.
101. Were you acting at the time the alterations were made at Queanbeyan? I was, and I objected to them.
102. Did you not make these alterations? I did, by direction.
103. By direction of whom? Of the Postmaster General. Mr. Roberts, the contractor, was persevering in the matter; he represented that the alteration was requisite, that it was impossible he could carry out his contract unless the change were made, and I was directed to make the best time table I could. I did so, but at the same time I pointed out that the changes Mr. Roberts required would involve changes upon eight other lines.
104. Did the change originate with the contractor? The proposition to make the change originated with Mr. Roberts; he stated he could not perform the contract unless the changes were made.
105. There was no wish expressed on the part of the public to have these alterations made? None.
106. Are you aware of the alterations that were made with regard to this? There was only one day changed, and that was in what we called the up-country mail, from Thursday to Wednesday, and the consequence was, that it involved changes in eight lines, and gave me a great deal of work to make it fit. It is a difficult thing to make a time table fit, for the mails do not keep railway accuracy.
107. Do you think the arrangements on that line are as satisfactory as they were before these alterations were made? I think they are more so for the contractor.
108. More satisfactory to the contractor, but not to the public? Yes.
109. Will you state the exact nature of the alterations, and how they affected all these lines? Yes. I will forward a statement to the Board. (Vide Appendix C.)
110. Was it your duty to give official intimation to the different postmasters of these alterations? It was my duty to arrange with the postmasters.
111. To give notice to the postmasters? No; I sent to the Secretary.
112. You would not give them verbal notice? No, unless when travelling. If there were a blunder, if a mail went earlier, or later, than it should, I corrected it, and reported to the office that I had made the change.
113. Are you able to inform me how it was that the postmaster at Goulburn was not informed for fourteen days of the change? Because it was not considered necessary, as there is a daily mail to Boro, the junction at which the mails to Queanbeyan and Braidwood meet; and it is the practice in the Sydney Office to send a forward mail, daily, wherever there is a daily post.
114. Still it would be necessary for correspondents in Goulburn to know on what days they should send to Queanbeyan and Collector? It was the postmaster's want of discretion, and I could not calculate upon that. Any other postmaster than himself would not have made the mistake; besides, the mail contractor told him.
115. Should he receive his instructions from the mail contractor? No; but if he saw there was an alteration he should have telegraphed up to us, and made inquiry, and not have allowed this evident irregularity to go on for fourteen days. Still I admit that there was a lache on both sides.
116. The sole cause of the alteration was the wish of the contractor? Yes, and the representation made by him that it was impossible to carry out the contract without it.
117. By Mr. King: Was he supported by local influence? I should say he could command a great deal of it.
118. By Mr. Watt: That alteration affected other contractors? It affected eight others; I pointed that out.
119. Did you consult them? No; we do not always consult them; the Postmaster General decides upon the subject.
120. Then for the convenience of Mr. Roberts you ordered eight other contractors to alter their arrangements? It amounted to that; it was not done with that view.
121. That is the fact—that there were eight other contractors whose convenience was not consulted at all? That is precisely what it amounts to.
122. Did it appear to be for the public advantage in any way? It did not appear to be so disadvantageous as it turned out.
123. Did it appear to be an advantage in any way? Yes; the Genninderra line, respecting which there was some agitation, was arranged by myself to give Queanbeyan the advantage of two more mails, but in consequence of the people wishing to have local information, they preferred going back to the old table. The Boro and Bungonia is the proper line decidedly to send anything from Sydney, the shortest and best road.
124. By Mr. Knox: That is the line they had before? Yes, that was the line they had three times a week. The Genninderra line was more important some time ago when the Kiandra diggings were in full operation. There is a place called Lanyon, at a short distance from Queanbeyan, through which there was a great deal of traffic.
125. By Mr. Watt: Do you think there would be any difficulty in arranging the rates of speed on different roads—for instance, might there not be one rate from Sydney to Goulburn, another from Goulburn to Queanbeyan, and so on as the road becomes worse? Not the slightest, but in order to do that you should give the Postal Inspector greater power than I had; he should have the power instead of reporting of making the changes he might deem desirable.
126. Do you think there would be any difficulty in deciding that mails should travel at a particular particular rate of speed on a particular road, having one rate for winter and another for summer? No, but the great objection is the confusion that would occur at the change of time.

127. There surely need be no confusion? I think to prevent it the contractors would require a greater amount of supervision than the service would pay for.

128. An active Postal Inspector could tell at what rate of speed the mail should travel over a particular line of road? No one would be more capable, as he of course has to travel both by day and night. I have myself travelled over a road in the daytime to see its state that I would not like to ride over at night.

129. When the rate at which the mail could travel has been ascertained, there would be no difficulty in inserting that in the contract? Certainly not; it might be stated not higher than eight miles an hour nor less than so-and-so.

130. That would tend to regularity throughout the country? Certainly.

131. Would it involve more trouble to the Postal Inspector? Yes, he should be a man having the requisite energy.

132. By Mr. Knox: Are there any Postal Inspectors in Melbourne? When I was there, five years ago, there was one, and he had an assistant. He had, if I recollect rightly, a salary of £700, and was allowed £300 a year for travelling expenses; his assistant had £300 a year and nothing for travelling expenses; but when the Inspector was at home, if anything occurred he sent his assistant, whose expenses were paid out of the £300 voted for travelling. He had the same facilities as I had, a free seat in the mail; but besides that he was allowed a guinea a day. I had only a free seat in the mail, and where there was no coach I had to pay my own expenses; and I was at very great expense when travelling in the Queensland country for forage for horses and so on.

Mr. T. W.
Levinge.

APPENDIX.

A.

INSTRUCTIONS for the Postal Inspector, as approved by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary.

1.—COUNTRY POST OFFICES.

The Postal Inspector, in visiting the various Post Offices throughout the Colony, will make strict inquiry and examination into the efficiency of the Postmasters, and their mode of performing their duties, as prescribed by the Post Office Regulations and the Postal Enactment of the Colony.

He will carefully examine the books and stamps in use, and see that the former are properly kept and the latter in good order, and the date stamp changed daily.

He will further see that the registered letters are securely kept, that the requisite notice as to unclaimed letters is made, and that unclaimed letters, after being detained the period required by law, are transmitted to the General Post Office.

He will see that the way bills are carefully despatched and delivered by the mailmen on receipt of the mails, as also find out the number and condition of the mail bags in hand at each Post Office.

He will examine the receiving boxes, and see that they are secure; and will insist on a portion of each Post Office building being entirely set apart, where practicable, for the business of the office.

He will make inquiry of the residents in the different parts as to complaints of postal irregularities, and will ascertain whether there are just grounds for such complaints; and finally, will make his suggestions to the Postmaster General as to any changes in postal arrangements that he may deem conducive to increased efficiency in the Department.

2.—CONTRACTORS AND MAILMEN, &c.

The Postal Inspector will make himself familiar with the agreements entered into by the mail contractors, and see that they are carried out.

He will make report as to the conduct and character of the mailmen, as to the efficiency of the vehicles, horses, and harness employed, and inquire whether the mail bags are fully secured from injury from wet or otherwise.

3.—INTERNAL COMMUNICATION.

The Postal Inspector will ascertain whether any changes in the direction of postal lines are advisable, and report as to the possibility, with advantage to the public, of discontinuing those in operation, or of establishing new ones.

He will make separate reports as to the state of roads, bridges, punts, ferries, &c., when the urgency of the case demands, that a special representation on the subject should be addressed to the Minister of Lands and Public Works.

4.—REPORTS AND RETURNS.

The Postal Inspector will be directed by the Postmaster General to make such special or periodical tours of inspection as may be found expedient, and will keep a journal during such tours, in which he will enter the distances travelled by him, the various stages, the details of the Post Offices visited, together with such remarks as to the performance of mail contracts and postal duties as may be necessary for the information of the Post Office Department.

After every journey so taken he will, with as little delay as possible, transmit such journal, or a copy thereof, to the Postmaster General, together with his remarks and suggestions.

He will forward to the Postmaster General on the fifteenth day of every month, or as soon after as the nature of his duties will permit, a report of the late arrival and other irregularities connected with the Mail Inland Service which have been brought under notice during the preceding month, giving suggestions as to the course to be pursued with reference thereto.

In cases in which the Postal Inspector has been specially despatched to the country he will transmit to the Postmaster General, from the spot, an immediate and detailed report of the results of his inquiry.

At all times, and more especially when in Sydney, he will be required to make reference to the Postmaster General from day to day as to postal irregularities, changes in postal lines, mail contracts, or time tables, where such require immediate attention and decision.

1 January, 1859.

B.

I was in error when I stated the weight of newspapers in the Mails was 50 times greater than letters; I should have said 5 times.

This Table is in accordance with Mr. Roberts' request in his letter of 15th December, and although only one day is changed, it will cause changes in the following Tables:—Goulburn and Queanbeyan via Collector, &c.; Bungendore and Molonglo; Queanbeyan and Lanyon; Cooma and Kiandra; Cooma and Buckley's Crossing-place; Jegizrick and Jindabyne; Cooma and Bombala; Bombala and Delegate; Bombala, Cathcart, Pambula and Eden—9 contracts, only 1 of which Mr. Roberts is contractor for. Mr. Roberts, when here in town, wanted further alterations than asked for in his letter of the 15th December. I have gone over the Tables carefully, and I cannot meet his views without detriment to the public and entailing changes to which other contractors might fairly object.—

T. W. LEVINGE. 25 January, 1862.

Mr. Roberts is satisfied with this Table.—T. W. LEVINGE. 5 February, 1862.

Amended Time Tables sent to,— Postmaster Bungendore and Molonglo, and Contractor Williams; Postmaster Cooma, Adaminiby, Russell's, and Kiandra, and Contractor W. McGregor; Postmaster Jindabyne, and Contractor Francis; Cooma and Buckley's Crossing-place, and Contractors Francis and Walsh; Bombala, Delegate, and Contractor Read; Bombala, Cathcart, Pambula, and Eden, and Contractor W. McGregor; Cooma, Nimitybelle, and Bombala, and Contractor Wm. McGregor.—19th February, 1862.

Queanbeyan, Lanyon, and Contractor Hutchison; Queanbeyan, Michelago, Bunyan, and Cooma, and Contractor Roberts; Boro, Bungendore, and Queanbeyan, and Contractor Roberts; Goulburn, Collector, Gundaroo, Ginninderra, and Queanbeyan, and Contractor Roberts.—20th February, 1862.

Thomas Richards, Esq., examined:—

T. Richards,
Esq.

3 April, 1862.

1. By the Chairman: You are the Government Printer and Inspector of Stamps? Yes.
2. What checks have you upon the stamps that are printed here? I keep the paper in this safe. (The witness went to the safe referred to, and produced therefrom a blank book.)
- Each book contains a certain quantity of paper. I issue them to the printer, and he returns to me the printed sheets of stamps every afternoon.
3. What do you do with these stamps when they are printed? I lock them up until required for issue.
4. How do you deliver these stamps? Upon requisitions from the Postmaster General.
5. Upon his signature? Yes.
6. You deliver them to whom? To Mr. Reeve, the clerk in charge of stamps. He comes here for them, counts them, and takes delivery from me.
7. Have you one of those requisitions here? I have. (The witness produced a requisition.) That is the last I received.
8. You issued that quantity to Mr. Reeve? Yes.
9. Do you not receive from the Post Office returned stamps? Yes, I repay the Post Office for stamps which have been purchased from the public.
10. You purchase from them? Yes.
11. In saying that you purchase them, do you mean that you pay for them? Yes.
12. Do you pay for them at a discount or at a par rate? At a discount. That is my letter of instructions on the subject. (The witness handed the same to the Chairman.)
13. It appears from that letter that you destroy these stamps when you receive them? Yes.
14. And that you have instructions so to do from the Secretary for Finance and Trade? Yes.

15. Is there any object in destroying the stamps? It was thought that bringing them into re-issue would be more expensive than printing a similar number.
16. Why? Because it would entail a certain amount of clerical labour to bring a number of small parcels of stamps into account. It was also thought that the stamps issued by me should be perfectly clean, and stamps passing through such a number of hands from the time of issue to their return, were likely to become soiled.
17. Can you conceive any object in purchasing the stamps at all? I have not thought much about the matter. I fancy some other system might be adopted which would be better; that some medium might be prepared for the purpose which would be less expensive in the preparation than postage stamps.
18. There is no reason why they should not send money orders? No reason that I can conceive. I think a money order system would be better.
19. By Mr. King: You receive the stamps at a discount under these instructions? Yes.
20. By the Chairman: The Postmaster accounts to the Audit Office for these stamps that you issue? I do not know what system is pursued at the Post Office; I account to the Audit Office for the issue of stamps to the Postmaster General.
21. By Mr. Smart: How do you account for the stamps that come in—by your own cheque upon the Bank of New South Wales? Yes, I have a credit.
22. And you give your own cheque for the amount you receive, less the discount? Yes.
23. How often, and in whose presence, are the returned stamps destroyed? They are destroyed monthly, in the presence of the Chief Clerk of the Audit Office, of the Accountant, and of myself.
24. The Accountant of your own department? No; the Accountant of the Audit Office.
25. Have you any of these stamps on hand now? I have none on hand which have been received under the discount system.
26. What is the amount of your credit at the Bank of New South Wales, generally, as the Inspector of Stamps? £100 a month.
27. And more, I suppose, if you should require it? Yes.
28. Do you find the stamps returned to you soiled and unfit for use? I have not examined them particularly for that; I have merely had them counted to see that the number was correct.
29. By Mr. Knox: I see there is a distinction in this letter—some of the stamps it appears are to be paid for at the full value and some at a discount—It says, "With reference to the regulations for the exchange of postage stamps for cash, I do myself the honor to inform you that it has been decided that all stamps remitted by country postmasters to the Postmaster General, as money, shall be paid for by you at their representative value?" Yes. Stamps remitted by country postmasters are paid for at their full value.
30. The paper used for the stamps—does that come from England? Yes.
31. How is that ordered? By the Treasury. I prepare a demand for a certain number of books, transmit it to the Treasury, and it is then, if approved, sent to England.
32. A certain number of books containing how many sheets? 150 leaves.
33. By whom are these books issued? By the Storekeeper.
34. Upon your requisition? Upon my requisition.
35. You issue them to the printer, and make him account for the number you have issued? He brings me every evening the printed sheets of stamps.
36. Would there be anything to prevent the printer striking off stamps on common sheets of paper? I am so near to him, and visit the printing room so frequently, that there is little danger of any such attempt being made. There is only that door between me and the press. (Referring to the door leading from the office to the printing room.)
37. That is the only check? Plain paper is not allowed to be taken into the stamp room.
38. He might bring paper with him—of course I am speaking only of the possibility of the thing? Yes, it is just possible. The water-mark is, however, a good safeguard. Stamps printed on plain paper would be detected by a printer, or person accustomed to such matters, immediately.
39. Would he after the stamps were gummed on to a letter? No, that would be difficult. I may state that I have just purchased an Indicator, which, when attached to the press, will shew the number of revolutions of the cylinder, and, consequently, the exact number of impressions. Besides these precautions, I am always at hand.
40. Do you never leave? Occasionally.
41. Do you lock the printing room when you go out? I leave it in charge of the Superintendent, whose office adjoins mine.
42. What are the hours of the stamp printers? From nine to four or five o'clock.
43. By Mr. King: Are they wholly occupied in printing stamps? Yes.
44. Their time is wholly taken up in that? Yes; the number of stamps printed is very considerable now—it is increasing very much.
45. Have you a return of them? Yes, I have returns of them from 1857 to 1861. (The witness handed in the same.)
46. By Mr. Smart: Have you a return of the number destroyed during those years? No, I have not; but it is not very considerable—something like £700 value.
47. In the five years? No; during the last three years. I have not held the office five years.
48. Will you state the amount you have paid during the three years? ———
49. By Mr. Knox: During the last two years your issue has been about £51,000? That was for 1861.
50. And for 1860? It was £53,000.
51. There must be a large stock held by the public? Yes, and by the postmasters throughout the country.

- T. Richards,
Esq.
3 April, 1862.
52. By the Chairman : Do you keep a large stock here? No, by no means large; it has been as much as I could do to keep up the supply. I have now, however, a new twopenny plate, which gives me double power; it contains 240, instead of 120, heads.
53. By Mr. Smart : What check is there upon the amount you receive and issue; how often are your accounts checked—once a year? Once a month. Here is the last account. (Handing an account to the Board.)
54. That is the account you furnish to the Auditor General? Yes; it is accompanied by the butts of the printed books.
55. You return the butts to the Auditor General at the end of the month? Yes. I also make a return to the Treasury in this form. (Handing a return to the Board.)
56. By Mr. Knox : The Storekeeper also makes a return? Yes.
57. By Mr. Smart : There is no person appointed by the Auditor General to take stock? No, I furnish an attested statement, and the Secretary of the Treasury has power to come and inspect at uncertain times, and he does so. I also furnish this return to the Audit Office, shewing the number of books I have on hand. (Handing the same to the Board.)
58. By Mr. Knox : The Storekeeper makes a return of the number of books issued to you—is his stock counted? I am not aware. I imagine it is checked by the invoices.
59. Are you aware of the mode adopted in England to insure the best amount of security in printing off stamps to guard against forgery? No, excepting that they use water-marked paper of the best quality, and have the finest engraving for their plates. I believe there has never been known a case of forgery of postage stamps. Nor is there much danger of it, for the simple reason that it could not be made to pay. It would be no easy matter to get a large number of stamps exchanged for cash; besides, the forger would have to go to a great expense, not only to engrave the plate, but also to make his own paper and ink. The ink with which postage stamps are printed differs from ordinary printer's ink—it is called "fugitive ink," and prevents the obliterating mark being removed without destroying the stamp itself.
60. By Mr. Smart : What course does the Secretary for the Treasury take when he makes these periodical visits—does he take the stock then on hand? He took an exact account of the stock when the department was handed over to me, but generally he inspects the office and safes, and looks over the books.
61. Does he count all the stock you have on hand? He does not always count the sheets.
62. Then, in point of fact, there is no check upon your amount? It is not a very minute check, but by looking into the safe you will see —
63. When the Secretary comes he cannot say whether you have in account the stamps you had on hand the previous month? He would form a good idea by looking into the safe.
64. Does he count those that are being printed and gummed? No.
65. He takes no account of the stock on hand? No, only in the way I have stated.
66. The balance of your return at the end of the month is not checked in any way by any officer—the stamps are not counted, your statement is taken as correct? Yes.
67. By Mr. Watt : All the stamps, I understand, are taken by you at an uniform discount of five per cent.? There are stamps returned on which no discount is charged. Such as are remitted to public offices as revenue.
68. Those received as revenue are not subject to discount? They are not.
69. By Mr. Smart : How long have you been here as Inspector of Stamps? Since June, 1859.
70. Nearly three years? Yes.
71. How many visits have you had from the Secretary to the Treasury during that time? About six.
72. And on no occasion during this time has he ever counted the stamps? He has not counted the sheets.
73. By Mr. Watt : From the returns you have handed in, you would seem to have a large balance accumulating every year? It does not accumulate; the balance on hand is brought forward every year.
74. By Mr. Smart : About what amount would you consider to be a fair amount to have in stock? I always like to have a fortnight's supply in stock.
75. What amount would you require for that? A fortnight's supply for March would have been about £2,000 value.
76. You think that would be a fair stock to have on hand? Yes; I have a larger stock this month.
77. By Mr. Knox : Your stock was in reality £2,800? Yes; it is intended to take the press to pieces and to put it in repair, and of course during that time there will be no printing, so we have been working up as much as possible.
78. By Mr. Smart : You destroy the stamps once a month? Yes, they go in with the accounts to the Auditor General.
79. And they are destroyed in the Auditor General's Office? Yes.

MONDAY, 7 APRIL, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. SMART,
MR. WATT.

Mr. Henry Reeve called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: What appointment do you hold in the Post Office? I am clerk in charge of stamps. Mr. H. Reeve.
2. How long have you held that appointment? Since February, 1854. 7 April, 1862.
3. Did you hold any other employment in the Post Office before that? Yes, in the Inland Letter Branch, as general clerk, under the Superintendent.
4. Will you inform the Board in what manner you obtain stamps for the use of the office? We obtain them from the Inspector of Stamps under the signature of the Postmaster General.
5. What course do you follow when you wish to obtain stamps? I have a number of requisitions from the country postmasters, and, after looking them over, to see that the amounts are

Mr. H. Reeve. are correct, I embody them in a large requisition book, shewing the total number at the bottom; I sign this myself as being correct, and send it up to the Postmaster General, who signs it; the Accountant initials it, and I take it to the Inspector of Stamps at the Government Printing Office, where I obtain the stamps in the mass, perhaps £600 or £700 worth at a time.

7 April, 1862.

6. Do you take it up personally? I send it by the man, and go up a couple of hours afterwards, and receive and count over the stamps.

7. You yourself receive the stamps? Yes.

8. When a country postmaster sends a requisition for stamps, is it your business to examine whether he is entitled to the quantity of stamps he asks for, and whether he has paid the amount that is necessary according to the regulations? No, that is the Accountant's business.

9. Does the Accountant examine them for that purpose before he initials your requisitions? Yes, he marks them in this way (handing in a paper).

10. Has the case ever occurred that the Accountant has disallowed any requisition you may have made in that way? No, they go to him in the first instance, and unless I see them properly marked I do not supply them.

11. The requisitions from the country postmasters go to the Accountant before you make a requisition on the Inspector of Stamps? Yes.

12. Do stamps repurchased at the window, or sent as remittances by country postmasters, pass through your hands? Yes, every stamp passes through my hands, whether for exchange or otherwise.

13. What course do you pursue with any stamps that you may receive in that way? I have to make them out in abstract, if for stamp exchange account, and send it to Major Christie, who signs it, and obtains a cheque from the Government Printer.

14. What do you do with these stamps? I have to check them over, count them, and see that they are correct as to amounts, and then seal them up, and forward them, either with a letter or memorandum, to Major Christie, and he forwards them to the Inspector of Stamps.

15. You have nothing at all to do with the sale of stamps? Yes, I have control over the whole. I am answerable for all the books, to see that they are correct.

16. When you reckon up the stamps at the end of the month, to balance your books, do you count them over? Yes.

17. Who checks your count? I check the clerk at the window, and a clerk up stairs, in the Accountant's Branch, checks the stamps after me. I see that the number is right, and then they check me afterwards. I give a certificate every month.

18. Then you have complete supervision of the Stamp Department? Yes.

19. Is that considered a separate department in the Post Office? No; I assist in the Letter Branch when required, or in any part of the office.

20. What are your hours of attendance? From half-past nine till half-past four—sometimes later.

21. Have you often been called upon to assist in the Letter Department? Yes, continually, if there is any one ill, or there is a press of business.

22. Who instructs you to do so? The Superintendent of the Letter Branch.

23. Do you know anything of the working of the Secretary's Branch? No.

24. You can form no opinion about it? No.

25. Do you know anything of the working of the Accountant's Branch? Only so far as it is connected with the accounts I keep myself.

26. No further? No further.

27. As far as your knowledge goes, could the mode of keeping the accounts between your office and the Accountant's Branch be improved—do you believe they are as well kept as they might be? I think they might be simplified a good deal.

28. How? Some time ago the public offices kept an account with the Postmaster General, and the Accountant kept these accounts. Now they draw out a cheque for the amount, and they come to me with the vouchers, and the thing is at an end at once. Formerly there were two or three books kept for the purpose.

29. Are those books kept now? No, the system does not require them.

30. How at the present moment could the business be simplified? I think if something of that sort was adopted with the postmasters, it might simplify the accounts very much. If you will allow me I will shew you what I mean by a book. (The witness produced an account book.) This is a discount book kept at the Sale of Stamps window, and it shews the gross amount and the per centage allowed to the stamp sellers and some of the suburban postmasters. This man (pointing to an account in the book) wants £10 worth of stamps, and he brings me £9 10s. I pass it through the book, and there is an end of the matter. Now, if the postmasters were to remit to me £9 10s. when they wanted £10 worth of stamps, they could be passed through this book in the same way, and it would save a good deal of accounts up stairs.

31. You would recommend that the postmasters should remit the amount at the time they make the requisition? Yes, minus the discount.

32. Then you would recommend that the postmasters should not obtain the same amount of credit as they now do? No, except as an advance, when they open a new office; afterwards I would have them remit the same as the stamp sellers do about the town.

33. Do you consider that this alteration would make much difference in the clerical labour of the Accountant's Office? I think it would considerably lessen the number of entries in the books.

34. To what extent—can you form any idea—would it make the difference of the work of one clerk? I could not say exactly.

35. By Mr. King: It would do away with all the country postmasters' stamp accounts? Mr. H. Reeve. Yes, it would do away with keeping the books open—the ledger. In the case of the public offices it was done away with, and must have saved a good deal of clerical labour in the ^{Accountant's Office at that time.} 7 April, 1862.
36. By the Chairman: Do you think the plan is a good one, of allowing the repurchase of stamps? There are various opinions on that point. I think it is good in some measure, because there are many people who have register stamps and others, such as eightpenny and five shilling stamps, sent to them, that are unsaleable, and they bring them to be exchanged for money.
37. I am talking of the principle of buying back the stamps at five per cent. discount. If the Post Office gave back the money value of the stamps, the convenience to the public would be just the same? I think it is a bad system in one way—that it entails a great deal of clerical labour; but I think it is a boon to the public.
38. What is the extra clerical labour it entails? They have to be entered in a book, and the value worked out; a cash book has to be kept, and they have to be sent to the Inspector, through Major Christie, in abstract. If you will allow me I will shew you the form of abstract. (Produced.)
39. Have you any idea of the extent of clerical labour this repurchase of stamps entails? About a couple of hours a day to myself.
40. If there were no repurchase of stamps you would have a couple of hours per diem to employ otherwise? I think so.*
41. You consider yourself immediately under the supervision of the Superintendent of the Letter Branch? Yes.
42. Does the Postmaster General in any way interfere by giving you instructions? Yes; he interferes in this way, that if he thinks a requisition for the window excessive he will cut it down.
43. I mean as to your occupation in the Letter Branch? He does not interfere at all in that way.
44. Are you aware whether general harmony reigns in the Post Office among those employed in the different offices of the establishment? It does among all the officers of the Letter Branch.
45. That is not an answer to my question—it seems there are ten clerks in the Accountant's and Secretary's Branches, and seventeen in the Letter Branch—I am asking whether general harmony reigns among the officers employed in the establishment? I think the Superintendent, since he gave certain evidence before a Committee of the Assembly, has been annoyed a good deal.
46. How? For giving certain evidence.
47. How has he been annoyed? By minutes that have been written. Some people have not a very nice way of writing, putting their meaning on paper; in fact, I think, at times, he has been snubbed.
48. Are you aware if the clerks generally in the Post Office are satisfied with their position there? Some of them, I believe, are dissatisfied.*
49. Generally? I think pretty generally they are satisfied; I think the majority are.
50. You have seen something of the working of the Letter Branch, I presume? Yes.
51. Can you give any opinion as to the duties of the Postal Inspector? I suppose he supervises the postmasters in the country, the same as the English Inspectors do. In England the Inspectors of Post Offices see that they are conducted properly, and where new Post Offices are required.
52. Do you know if he is generally travelling with that view? I could not say that; he is from Sydney at times.
53. When additional assistance is required in the Letter Branch, are not clerks sent to assist from the Accountant's and Secretary's Branches? At times we have assistance.
54. When it is required? Well, we have partial assistance.
55. When it is required, do you have such assistance as can be afforded? Yes, we have as many as they can afford; but the assistance, except of a few clerks, is of no use, because they are not conversant with the working of the Letter Branch.
56. Is there any cordial co-operation between the different branches of the Post Office—the Letter Branch, the Accountant Branch, and the Secretary's Branch? I do not think there is that co-operation that should exist.
57. Can you suggest any means by which it might be made to exist? I do not know that I could suggest anything; the heads of the branches would be more likely to make suggestions than I.
58. Who had charge of the stamps before you were appointed? Mr. Dillon.
59. Do you know how long he was in charge of the stamps? About two months.
60. Why was he removed? He was removed through some defect in the accounts, I believe.
61. Some error in the accounts? Yes.
62. And he was still kept in the Post Office? Yes, he was put at the disposal of Mr. Hunt, the Superintendent, in the Inland Office.
63. He is the present Postal Inspector, is he not? Yes.
64. Who appointed him as Postal Inspector, do you know? I suppose the Treasurer; or the Treasurer allowed the exchange with Mr. Levinge.
65. By whose orders was he removed from the charge of the stamps? Major Christie's.
66. Major Christie removed him? Yes, to another part of the office.

67.

* By witness on revision:—On re-consideration I would rather say one hour a day, because there are not so many stamps now brought for exchange as there used to be at first.

- Mr. H. Reeve. 67. Do you know anything of any postal irregularities that have taken place, that is to say, in the letter deliveries? I can speak of myself, that I have written a letter that never reached its destination; where the irregularity occurred I do not know.
- 7 April, 1862.
68. Do you think such irregularities occur in the country offices, or in the town office? A good deal in the country offices.
69. Are you aware of any irregularities in the town office? No.
70. Do you think the business of the Letter Branch is as well conducted as it could be? No, I do not think it is.
71. Can you suggest where it may be improved? I think a better system of sorting would prevent mistakes. I think it would be better if letters were sorted in districts, as they were in 1851 and 1852. If a letter, though mis-sent, got on the district, it would take a long time such a hardship on the public as when it got off the district entirely.
72. Do you refer to the roads more particularly? Yes. The system now is alphabetical; Albury, for instance, is next to Armidale, and in sorting fast, when time is short, in the hurry, a letter intended for Armidale might be sent to Albury, and it would take a long time to have the error corrected, whereas under the old system of sorting by divisions, it might have gone to Tamworth, or some other place, on the same line of road as Armidale.
73. If you sorted according to the roads, would not a sorter require to be experienced in the geography of the roads, and if he were away, would anybody else be able to sort? I think so. When I was in the Letter Branch, we division sorted; that is, we took the whole mass and sorted in divisions.
74. Northern, Southern and Western Roads? Yes, three masses.
75. In the absence of an experienced sorter, under that system, do you think any junior clerk would be able to divide the letters into the three great districts correctly? If he was at all quick, and had a good local knowledge.
76. It would require good local knowledge? Yes.
77. Supposing he did not possess good local knowledge? Then he would not be fit for the room.
78. Would he not be fit for alphabetical sorting? Even now he must have a certain local geographical knowledge, or he would not be fit at all; there are many places that have no direct mails; for instance, letters for Aberdeen would not be put into A, but into M, to go to Muswellbrook, and the postmaster there would send them on. Letters for Tuena are put into G, Goulburn; if put into T they might get astray altogether; they might go to Tamworth.
79. You have, I see, at the office, all the boxes or compartments labelled where the letters are put—would it not be very easy to label all the on mails? Then they would have to be removed; if you had a box for Aberdeen the letters would have to be moved to the M division, because they all go into the Muswellbrook bag.
80. There would be no more labour than you have by district sorting? I apprehend that, in carrying the letters from one to the other, they would be more likely to be mixed or mislaid than if they were to be sorted in districts, and each district clerk were there to subdivide his district.
81. Are you aware who prepares the time tables in the office? The Postal Inspector.
82. Who prepared them before there was a Postal Inspector? It was done in the Secretary's Office.
83. It is not necessary there should be a Postal Inspector to prepare the time tables? I think not.
84. Have you ever had occasion to wait after hours in the office? Yes.
85. By whose orders do you wait? The Superintendent orders me to remain when there is an English mail; otherwise, if I have work to do, I remain of my own accord; I have certain work to do, and must do it.
86. Is the Post Office building as convenient as it might be for the work of those employed in it? No, and the more we enlarge it the worse we get; it is so detached.
87. Then you think the alterations made are disadvantages rather than improvements? I think they might have been necessary, but they have great disadvantages connected with them.
88. Are you aware if the offices are generally healthy? The lower offices are decidedly unhealthy.
89. Which do you refer to? Those where the newspapers are sorted, in the cellars; there is a horrid smell of foul air; and in those near the Tank Stream, where the letters are delivered—the Shipping Office, and the Foreign Letter Office—the smell from the Tank Stream and stables is very bad.
90. Is the health of those employed in those offices generally good? Pretty good.
91. As good as that of those employed elsewhere? Some of the clerks there are not so healthy as in the other offices.
92. Is the space now sufficient for all the requirements of the Post Office? We want more room for sorting, and in the Delivery Office more especially.
93. You have seen enough of the working of the Post Office to be able to give an opinion whether the services of some of the clerks might not be dispensed with if the offices were made more convenient? I think they could if there were a better arranged building.
94. Have you ever thought at all of the working of the Money Order System? Yes, I have thought of it. I think it could be carried out in the large towns where there are efficient postmasters, who would understand keeping the simple forms of accounts that would be necessary.
95. By Watt: You are not alone in your office? I have one clerk. I formerly had charge of the registered letters as well as the stamps.

96. How do you divide the duties? We mutually assist each other, but his more immediate ^{Mr. H. Reeve.} duties are with the public—selling stamps.
97. You say the duties connected with the repurchase of stamps occupy you about two ^{7 April, 1862.} hours a day? Two hours at the outside, I should think, would do it; sometimes not above an hour; but the office being so divided, it takes a good deal of time to run backward and forward. They have cut off a part of my room, and I am obliged to sit in the Superintendent's room; so that there is a good deal of time consumed going from one place to the other.
98. Does that arise chiefly from the stamps purchased back at the window? At the counter, not at the window; that would interfere with the current sale.
99. Do the stamps taken from the country postmasters come into your hands? No, not the exchange.
100. Do the stamps repurchased at the counter come in small sums? Very small, sometimes a shilling at a time.
101. By the Chairman: Does the office purchase back stamps of one shilling in value? Yes.
102. Would they purchase sixpence worth? Yes.
103. By Mr. Watt: And you really think it a facility to the public? Yes, it enables them to make small remittances.
104. By the Chairman: If there were a Money Order System this repurchase of stamps would not be required? No.

Mr. Francis William Hill called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: What is your occupation at the Post Office? I am clerk in charge of ^{Mr. F.W. Hill.} the Inland Letter Branch.
2. How long have you held that charge? About three years, I think; I am not sure about ^{7 April, 1862.} the date; in fact I have been in every office in the department.
3. I see you were first appointed to the public service in August, 1850? Yes.
4. Will you state to the Board the different employments you have filled at the Post Office? When I joined the department in 1850, I came in at a salary of five shillings a day; my duty was to attend at seven o'clock in the morning, enter all registered letters, sort the letters from the country and distribute them, and leave at nine; then I came back at one and remained till six, and received all the money at the window.
5. Afterwards? I really do not remember all the different grades I served in.
6. You have stated that you have served in all the branches—were you ever in the Secretary's Branch? No, I mean in the Letter Branch.
7. Your time has been exclusively in the Letter Branch? Yes; I have been in every office in the Letter Branch. I have had charge of the newspapers, charge of the Foreign Letter Office, charge of the Delivery Office, and now I have charge of the Inland Office.
8. Do you know anything at all of the working of the Secretary's Branch? Nothing whatever.
9. Or the Accountant's? No.
10. From being in the Letter Branch you must have seen something of the duties of the Postal Inspector—do you think the creation of that office has tended to the public advantage? I do not think so.
11. Why not? Because I think there is too much for one to do, and that the country Post Offices require a visit from the Postal Inspector two or three times a year. I do not think the Postal Inspector has gone through all the offices, at least if we are to judge by the fact that there has been no improvement whatever in some of them.
12. You think one Inspector is not sufficient? I think not.
13. Do I understand you to mean that the office is an advantage, only that it is not properly carried out? I do not think it is properly carried out; I think the Postal Inspector should never be in the Post Office at all, with the exception of the beginning of the year, to see and arrange about the contracts.
14. Do you think it necessary he should be in Sydney then? I think he would be of great assistance to the Secretary by affording information about the different lines of road.
15. Could he not do that by letter? He could do so, but I do not think he could give so much information by letter as he could verbally.
16. Do you think the work of the Letter Branch is as well conducted as it could be? I do, with the present space that we have.
17. The want of space is a disadvantage? A very great disadvantage. If we had as much room again we could do with less clerks, and the business could be carried out much better than it is.
18. Are the offices generally healthy? Well, I have always enjoyed very good health.
19. Speaking generally? I think so.
20. Do you think those cellars where the newspapers are sorted are healthy? No, I reported against them when I had charge. The officers that are in them do not complain, but I do not think myself they are fit to have gentlemen in at all. I complained against the office myself, and was removed, and they put the letter carriers and sorters in.
21. Do you think by any possible patching up the present offices could be made to answer all the postal requirements? It is not possible. Where the mails are opened, the letter carriers, sorters, stampers, and clerks are all together. The letter carriers have no business
to

Mr. F.W. Hill. to have access to the rooms where the mails are opened, but you cannot keep them away from the letters.

- 7 April, 1862. 22. You mean to say that when the mails are opened they have sufficient access to be able, say, to touch a registered letter? Not exactly a registered letter, but while we are opening the mails they have to come backwards and forwards through a small space two or three feet wide, to get the letters sorted for them; they are continually passing and repassing.
23. Are the letters, when the letter boxes are opened, all taken across the yard in baskets? Yes, for the merchant's boxes, the Government offices, and ship letters; those for the country are taken to another room, and those for the letter carriers are sorted into divisions for them. Those for the ship room, the Government offices, and the private boxes, have all to pass from one office to another through the yard.
24. What is the average time of the attendance of the clerks in the Letter Branch? About seven hours, some at one time and some at another.
25. When the English mail arrives they attend late if necessary? They attend late, and receive pay for overtime at the rate of 2s. an hour.
26. Do you receive assistance in the Letter Branch in that case from the Accountant's and Secretary's Branches? We generally get two clerks; but we often have very heavy mails at other times. This morning we had nearly as many letters as by the English mail; it was as much as we could do to sort them between seven o'clock and half-past nine. There were as many as 7,000 letters—the Melbourne mail, the Hunter River mails, the Western mail, and the Southern mail were all opened this morning, and this being the beginning of the quarter, we had an unusually large number of town letters.
27. Do you know anything of, or could you give any opinion touching, the conveyance of mails? No, that is a subject I never looked into.
28. Do you know anything about the system followed lately of repurchasing stamps—could you give any opinion upon it? No; I know we do do it.
29. Are you aware that there have been complaints latterly of postal irregularities in the suburbs—that letters have been mislaid, and some have been lost entirely? No; I think that in general, in the Post Office in Sydney, there are less mistakes than in most other offices in the world; there is more care taken than in any other office. The complaints are very few, so far at least as they reach the head of the department.
30. You are aware that there is no delivery of Melbourne mails if they reach the Post Office after five o'clock? There is not; but if a Melbourne mail comes in any time up to five o'clock there is a delivery; it takes an hour and a-half to deliver a Melbourne mail, and would take more if the general public were to have the advantage of it.
31. Some years ago the Melbourne mails used to be delivered later? Only up to six o'clock. The hours were altered, in consequence of the recommendation of the Postmaster General to keep the office open from nine till five.
32. Would it not be a very great advantage to the public if the Melbourne mail were delivered when it arrives later—do you see any objections? I see none; but you must have a certain time fixed as a limit. If the mail comes into the office at five o'clock it takes till half-past six to sort it.
33. Have you ever formed any opinion on the establishment of a Money Order System? No.
34. Would it not greatly accelerate the work of the Sydney Post Office if there were sorters put on board the English mail steamers from Melbourne to Sydney? I do not think it would make a difference, at the outside, of two hours, because the letters all have to be stamped in the office, and the letter carriers have to arrange them for their beats afterwards, which they do now while sorting; they arrange all their letters as they deliver them. You might give all his letters to each man, but it would take him at least two hours and a-half to sort them according to the delivery. It might accelerate the delivery of the letters for private boxes and those addressed to the Post Office, but not to the general public, because the letter carriers have to arrange them according to the houses; they could not take them out indiscriminately.
35. By Mr. King: I suppose they know the name of every person on their beat? Yes. In George-street, for instance, Mr. Harbottle's is next to the Post Office, and the letter carrier would put that first, one for Denison House next, and so on; he must arrange them according as he delivers them. Then in sorting for the boxes, the clerks on board the steamers must have the names of all the holders of private boxes, and the letters would have to be re-sorted and stamped when they came into the Post Office.
36. By the Chairman: Of course in the Inland Delivery Branch the newspapers pass also under your supervision? Yes; there are more complaints about newspapers than about letters; there are very great complaints about the delivery of English newspapers.
37. With whom does the fault rest? I think myself they are never posted; no doubt people say they post them, but I do not think in every instance they are posted.
38. Is the number of newspapers very large? About the same number of newspapers as letters every English mail.
39. At what do you estimate the average weight of the letters that pass through the Post Office? I should say the average is not quite half an ounce; most of the letters posted are under half an ounce, both in England and in the Colony.
40. By Mr. King: The larger packets are the exception? Yes.
41. By the Chairman: Is not a quarter of an ounce the single letter weight? No, that is viâ Marseilles; half an ounce is the single letter weight viâ Southampton and in the Colony.
42. What is the rate at present charged for Post Office boxes? One guinea.
43. Do you think that sufficient? I think so. If the fee were increased I think half the boxes boxes would be given up. A private box has its advantages and disadvantages; many people who have boxes do not get their letters as soon as the carriers would deliver them, and they have to send a clerk three times a day to get them.

Mr. F. W. Hill.

7 April, 1862.

44. Would the delivery clerks give the letters for the holder of a private box to any clerk who asks for them? No; they are frequently refused, even to clerks who have been in the mercantile house ten or fifteen years, if they are not well known. I am frequently called as a reference in such cases.

45. Do not these boxes relieve the Post Office Department of a certain amount of work, the letters being sent for instead of delivered? No, they have to be sorted; they go through the same process.

46. Would it not give extra work to the postman to deliver them? No doubt.

47. Then it is for the convenience of the office? It is to that extent.

48. Does the Postmaster General take any active part in the management of the Letter Branch? Not much.

49. Are you preparing at the present time a diagram shewing the relative advantages and disadvantages of alphabetical and road sorting? I am.

50. Have you informed any party out of the Post Office that you are doing so? No.

51. Not any? Not any. I mentioned it to Mr. Reeve this morning.

52. The gentleman examined here to-day? Yes.

53. And to no one else? No.

54. You have formed a very decided opinion, I believe, on the respective advantages of road and alphabetical sorting? I believe in alphabetical sorting; but not to be carried out in its integrity.

55. How do you mean? I prefer the system we have at present to the alphabetical system as introduced at first by the Postmaster General, which would require not only extra clerks but extra time to make up the mails.

56. Will you explain the system as introduced? Under a strictly alphabetical system, letters addressed to every post town, whether there were a direct mail made up for it or not, would be sorted into the letter representing it; for instance, Cundletown is a post town, and, by the arrangement first introduced, letters so addressed would be sorted into C, and would be again re-sorted into another division for Cundletown; but, as Cundletown has not a direct mail, they would have to be taken out and put into the Raymond Terrace bag; so would those for other places, such as Taree and Tinonee, which would first have to be sorted into T, and then, when we were making up the Raymond Terrace mails, we should have to collect the letters for each of these places to put into it.

57. What is the other system you think more advantageous? If a letter is addressed to Cundletown we sort it now into R at once, for Raymond Terrace.

58. That is done from the knowledge of the sorter that the Cundletown mails go to Raymond Terrace? Yes.

59. Supposing you had a new hand who did not know this? In either case he would have to know what places have direct mails; under the first system, in making up the direct mail, he would have to clear all the divisions that went with it.

60. Having to learn this he would be liable to mistakes? Yes, even those who have been in the office so long make mistakes occasionally.

61. Can you suggest any better plan? Not better than the present one; but I think, if the road system were carried out, if a mistake were made it would be more easily rectified; for instance, under the alphabetical system Windsor and West Maitland, which lie in opposite directions, are next to each other in the compartments, and if a Windsor letter were put into the West Maitland bag, it would take longer to rectify the mistake than if it were put into the Richmond, St. Mary's, or Penrith bag, as it might be under the road system.

62. Is there cordial co-operation between the clerks employed in the different branches of the Post Office? Not, generally speaking, with some of the officers of the department. As far as the Letter Branch is concerned I believe there is no ill feeling whatever.

63. Does general harmony reign among all those employed in the Post Office Department? No.

64. Why not? There has always been, since I have been in the department, a kind of jealousy between the up-stairs department and the down-stairs.

65. Why should that jealousy exist? I do not know. It is believed that the Postmaster General favours the Corresponding Branch, which is more immediately under his control, more than the other.

66. There was a Post Office Inquiry in the year 1851, after you joined the department? Yes.

67. Did not the same feeling exist then? Yes.

68. The same jealousy? Yes. Some of the gentlemen, who are up stairs now, were down stairs then.

69. Who assigns the occupations of the clerks in the Letter Branch? The Superintendent, subject to the approval of the Postmaster General.

70. Are the clerks in the Letter Branch—I presume you know more about them than the others—generally satisfied? No, they are very dissatisfied with the remuneration they receive, because they have been passed over in more instances than one, and their responsibility is very great.

71. Do you think competent clerks have been passed over to the advantage of incompetent clerks? Officers have been brought into the department over the heads of those that were in it. In one instance, where an officer was receiving £50 a year, and left the employ to better himself, after being away six or seven years, he was placed over the heads of those who were his seniors when he was in it.

Mr. F. W. Hill. 72. With whom does the nomination of clerks in the Post Office rest? The Colonial Treasurer.

7 April, 1862. 73. Have the clerks in the Letter Branch been advanced in proportion to their ability? I do not think so.

74. It is to be presumed that some are more able and competent than others? Yes; we have two or three clerks there—I could mention two in particular—who have been there six or seven years, and are receiving £175 a year; while clerks not nearly so competent, who have not been in the Office two years, are receiving the same salary.

75. Whence does that arise—merely by the order of the Secretary for Finance and Trade? In great measure; or more by good fortune perhaps than anything else.

76. Is the health of the department generally good? Yes.

77. As you have said that the Letter Branch is as well conducted as it could be, as a matter of course you could suggest no way in which it could be made better? Not unless we had a larger amount of room; we might have an additional delivery if we had more room, but it would be almost impossible now. The clerks and letter carriers are huddled together now, much more so than they ought to be; and all these offices that are separated so widely should be almost adjoining one another—that is, the Foreign Letter Office, the Dead Letter Office, and the Delivery Office.

78. By Mr. Watt: With reference to the mode of sorting letters, what is your practice in making up mails; for instance, for the Northern Road, the first point, I believe, is Maitland? Yes.

79. Do you send the whole of the letters for the Northern Road through Maitland? There are distinct bags for Newcastle, Hexham, and other intermediate places.

80. I mean beyond Maitland? We make up separate mails for other post towns.

81. Does the Maitland postmaster open the bags to put in other letters? No, he has to make up separate mails to other offices; he is not allowed to interfere with our mails, because if he did our clerks could not be responsible for registered letters.

82. Further on is another bag made up? Yes, in every case. It is according to the offices he exchanges mails with; for instance, the Newcastle postmaster may make up a mail for Maitland, and the Maitland postmaster opens the bag, and sends on the forward letters.

83. Supposing letters are posted at Muswellbrook for Warialda, what would be done with them? They would be made up in the bag for Tamworth or Murrurundi, and the postmaster there would forward them on. In that way, the direct mail from Sydney is not interfered with.

84. Then, under the road system of sorting, a letter put into a wrong bag would travel to the extreme point to which that bag went, and then come back again; for instance, if you put a letter intended for West Maitland into the Warialda bag, the mistake would not be detected till it reached Warialda? No.

85. Then it would come back? Yes; but supposing, under the alphabetical system, a letter addressed to Wagga Wagga got sent to Warialda, see what a difference it would make.

86. By the Chairman: According to the old system, the plan followed was to make three great divisions, and then divide alphabetically, was it not? No.

87. Would it not be an advantage to divide alphabetically? Then there would be sorting and re-sorting. I think the way the mails are at present made up is the best; each clerk has a fair proportion of the work—that is, the partial alphabetical sorting—but if it were carried out as originally wished, it would cause endless confusion, and, in all probability, many letters would be left behind. For instance, Tamworth has fifteen or twenty minor offices to which it sends letters on, and, under the alphabetical system, all these minor offices would have a division of their own, and, in making up the mails for the major office, all these minor divisions have to be cleared out, and the letters put into the bag for the major office, in doing which some might get mixed with other letters, and some, perhaps, left behind altogether. Under the road system, they would be put into the proper bag at once.

88. You do not send a mail from Sydney to every country office? No, only to any office of importance; but it is tantamount to making up a bag for each; the letters go into the bag for the major office, and the postmaster there makes up a bag for the minor office, and sends it on by the next post. In road sorting all the Southern mails, for Liverpool, Campbelltown, Picton, Berrima, Goulburn, Yass, Gundagai, and so on, would be sorted in one division; at present they are sorted quite differently; the mail for Gundagai is made up at one end of the office, and that for Yass at the other. The great difficulty we have to contend with is want of room; the bags are huddled together in, I may say, a disgraceful manner; and it is marvellous there are not many more mistakes.

89. Could you give us any idea of the relative weight of letters and newspapers that go inland? I should say there are a greater number of letters than newspapers, but the newspapers weigh five or six times as much as the letters. If we had a tax on newspapers there would not be near so many. It is the weight of newspapers that makes the contracts cost so much. When there is an English mail we sometimes have to send the cart twice to the Railway Station with the bags. I should say there would be over a ton of an English mail for each road.

90. By the Chairman: Are you aware of there being any other country in the world where newspapers are carried free? No, except in the neighbouring Colonies.

91. Not in Victoria? Indeed; I understood they were. I do not think in any Government office the responsibility is so great as in the Letter Branch. I could shew that it is easy enough to take any registered letter if any two clerks came into collusion for the purpose; though, of course, it would be missed in time. I have seen bank parcels of, I should say, thousands of notes, with hardly an address on, from friction, to enable us to see where it was intended for.

92. What remedy is there for that? No remedy except the honesty of the clerks. Mr. F.W. Hill.
93. They all give security? £50 each, and two sureties.
94. Do none give higher than £50? Not in the Letter Branch; and every clerk is at the mercy of any postmaster in the Colony. 7 April, 1862.
95. How so? Suppose there are half a dozen registered letters for Bathurst, and the clerk can swear that he put them in the bag, if the postmaster says he does not receive one of them, the clerk who makes up the mail, or to whom they can trace the letter last, is responsible. I knew a clerk who had to pay £30 on account of the loss of a registered letter, although I swore that I saw him put the letter in the bag. The postmaster at the place the letter was directed to said he did not receive it, and the clerk had to pay the money.
96. Who decided the case? I believe the Postmaster General. It was in consequence of his not tying the registered letter up, and putting it in the bill, that the case was decided against him. He was rather late with the mail, and put it in the bag loose. There is no question it hastened the man's death.
97. By Mr. Watt: You receive letters late in the evening for the Hunter River and for Grafton? Yes.
98. Is that largely taken advantage of? In despatch it is, but not in receipt; for instance, when the Maitland mails are opened, with the exception of the Herald Office, and one or two people, the public do not call for them. That was one reason why the office was closed at five o'clock, that seldom any one came for letters after that time.
99. Does the regulation for keeping the mails open apply to the Hunter River only, or to all the Northern country? It was originated for six offices on the river, but any letters for beyond Singleton are placed in the Singleton bag, and the Singleton postmaster forwards them on. That is not the rule, but it was done by my direction.
100. Is it not strange that the public are not aware of that? It is strange how little the general public do know of the regulations. Many people could not even tell you how many deliveries there are in the day.
101. With reference to the jealousy which is said to exist between up stairs and down stairs in the Post Office, does promotion take place from one to the other indiscriminately, or are they kept entirely separate. If there were a vacancy down stairs, would a clerk up stairs, if next in seniority, be appointed to it, or are the branches kept distinct? It would not be kept distinct.
102. Do you not think that would work out any jealousy? It is not strictly carried out; clerks belonging to the Corresponding Branch have been promoted although they were not the senior officers.
103. Promoted in the Corresponding Branch? Yes.
104. With whom would that rest? It would be done on the recommendation of the Postmaster General, I think. The Postmaster General has nothing to do with any new appointment, but promotion in the office is generally carried out on his recommendation. The Postmaster General's authority is so curtailed, that if I wanted more than twenty-four hours' leave of absence, I could not get it without sending an application to the Treasury, although we do not have Christmas Day, Easter Monday, or any public holiday.
105. What are the duties of the Postmaster General? The letters received are all opened by the Secretary, and handed to the Postmaster General, who makes his minute upon them; that goes to the Secretary, and the replies are drafted from the minutes of the Postmaster General. He signs all letters and gives general directions.
106. Has he any power of action, or power of control? Over the officers of the department?
107. Yes? We are all bound to obey him.
108. Supposing you did not? I do not think he has now the power of suspending, though he had at one time. No doubt he would act upon an emergency, as I would do myself. If I were to see a letter carrier drunk, in the absence of the Superintendent, I would not let him go out with his letters.
109. But you would be conscious of exceeding your power? Yes, but I believe I would be doing right.

THURSDAY, 10 APRIL, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. SMART,
MR. WATT.

Mr. Richard Thompson called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are the author of two letters that have been addressed to this Board? Yes. Mr. R. Thompson.
2. In your last letter you inform us you can give us information respecting certain details of the working of the Post Office—have you ever been employed in that department? No. 10 April, 1862.
3. What means have you of knowing the correctness of your details? Not of knowing the details exactly—I have no other than those I possess of knowing of any other public office.
4. What means had you then of gaining this information, or of knowing that the information you have supplied is correct? In my last letter I mentioned that Mr. Dillon had not left Sydney since his appointment.

- Mr. R. Thompson.
10 April, 1862.
5. There are other matters besides that? Will you name the one you particularly allude to?
 6. You say firstly that Mr. Levinge was removed from the office of Postal Inspector "for some unexplained cause"—how do you know there was some unexplained cause? It was patent to every one that Mr. Levinge was removed, and that he was succeeded by Mr. Dillon—that was a matter of public notoriety.
 7. It was a matter of public notoriety that he was removed, but it was not a matter of public notoriety that no notice was given by the heads of the department why he was removed? Generally speaking removals of this character are noted in the Government Gazette; in this case it was not—at least, I believe not.
 8. You say Mr. Dillon "was appointed, soon after his employment at the General Post Office, seller of stamps; in this office he remained but two months, when it was painfully apparent that he was totally incompetent to perform duties which any junior clerk in a banking or mercantile establishment would regard as mere child's play"—to whom was it painfully apparent? To Major Christie, most certainly; he was removed at the end of two months. Mr. Bradshaw, who, I believe, is still in the office, complained that, from the incorrect manner in which the stamps were handed to him, he was a considerable loser. In making up his accounts, I believe, in one week he found himself minus £8.
 9. "Mr. Hunt declined to avail himself of the services of so incompetent a person, and he was transferred to the Corresponding Branch, where his chief employment seems to have been writing scurrilous attacks upon Mr. Hunt through the columns of the Empire"—are you aware that he has done so? I believe I have said that Messrs Hanson and Bennett will tell you that.
 10. You have stated that he did so—how do you know that? I cannot possibly know who an anonymous writer in a newspaper is, but it was understood that he was the author of the letters signed "Scrutator," published in the Empire.
 11. I do not ask you what is understood, but what you know? Mr. Hanson will easily prove that Mr. Dillon was the author.
 12. You state here that Mr. Hill is preparing a diagram shewing the superiority of the road system of sorting over the alphabetical—how do you know that? I was in Mr. Hunt's room, when I heard Mr. Hill state to Mr. Reeve—"I wish the Board would postpone my examination for another week, as I would prepare a diagram shewing the superiority of the road system of sorting to the alphabetical."
 13. You were in Mr. Hunt's room, and were talking with Mr. Hunt of this business? Mr. Hunt was not present.
 14. Were you in Mr. Hunt's room, Mr. Hunt not being present? Yes; Mr. Reeve's office is in Mr. Hunt's room. I went to see Mr. Hunt on a matter quite apart from this affair—on Mr. Wentworth's business—and I heard Mr. Hill say to Mr. Reeve what I have mentioned in my letter.
 15. Mr. Hill has stated that he did not give that information to any party whatever—I suppose he considered that he was not giving information? He did not give the information to me. I have stated how the conversation took place between himself and Mr. Reeve.
 16. Have you ever contributed any articles to the newspapers on the subject of the Post Office? I have stated in my letter that I have written more upon the Post Office than any other journalist in New South Wales for the last three and twenty years.
 17. From what party in the Post Office did you obtain your information? From no party in the Post Office; generally speaking from my own observation of what has been published officially. My writings have been chiefly comparative reviews of the reports of the Postmaster General of England and of the Postmaster General here.
 18. Were these articles written from any information derived from any persons in the Post Office here? From no person whatever. I must observe, what I have already explained by letter to you, that in several Post Office Guides for various Almanacs, compiled by myself, I was assisted by the late Mr. James Raymond and Mr. T. K. Abbott. I have a very large correspondence, and have had numerous complaints from the country districts. Every one will allow that the Post Office is the best abused department of the public service, as every one complains of the slightest omission or neglect; but I never wrote upon the dictation or information of any officer in the Post Office.
 19. By Mr. Watt: We want to get all the information we can, and you state that you have devoted great attention to this matter—can you, from the attention you have given to it, point to any specific abuses, can you lay your finger upon anything tangible? I think, and I believe every one will agree with me, that where an office is in such a state of disunion, that disunion must be a great detriment to the public service, as where the up-stairs branch and the down-stairs branch are in a most determined state of warfare it is very unpleasant for one who, like myself, has business with both. One cannot speak in the street to an officer of one branch without being regarded by the officers of the other branch as an enemy. This state of things has been known to exist for the last four years. Unless there is a good feeling prevailing between the heads of a department, as a matter of course it extends to the subordinates, and that must be to the detriment of the public service. Now I have the entrée of every public office in Sydney; sometimes I am for three or four days at the Custom House, sometimes I am at the Treasury making returns, and I find that the greatest cordiality exists between all the officers in other departments, but here there is nothing but disunion. That, being apparent to every one, must be a great detriment to the public service.
 20. That may be a fair inference, but I do not see that you have pointed to any actual inconvenience that has arisen; you infer that there is detriment, but you do not shew in what way it has manifested itself. I can understand that such a state of discord is likely to produce inconvenience, but where has it been produced? I am not acquainted with the details of the Post Office.
 21. My question does not refer to the details of the Post Office, but to the results outside of the the Post Office, as affecting the public? I could not state any particular case in which this disunion has been a direct injury to an individual, but where the state of things exist that does in the Post Office, it must be detrimental to the public service.

22. Are you aware that it has led to irregularity in the despatch of mails and sorting of letters? No; I believe in the Inland Branch, down stairs, nothing can be more correct and more prompt, looking to the imperfect state of the building, which is totally unfit for a Post Office.

23. Still, so far as you know, no practical inconvenience has resulted to the public? I myself have a very large correspondence, and I have had no complaints of the non-delivery of letters at the proper time, but I give it as my opinion that it is very unpleasant for any one who has occasion to go to the Post Office to find that state of things existing.

24. Can you state what this ill feeling arises from? I believe from evidence given by Mr. Hunt before the Retrenchment Committee, advising certain reductions. A remonstrance was drawn up and forwarded to the Colonial Secretary, protesting strongly against Mr. Hunt's recommendation. From that time to the present there has been a very strong feeling against him on the part of the Postmaster General, the Cashier and Secretary, and the Accountant.

25. Do you speak of this feeling of your own knowledge—has it been manifested before you? If Major Christie and Mr. Hunt pass each other in the street without recognition, or in the passage of the Post Office without even "Good morning," I think that is pretty good evidence of the feeling which exists.

26. There is another question I would ask you—you speak, as I understand you, with reference to the feeling of certain of the officers towards Mr. Hunt, is that feeling reciprocated by Mr. Hunt? I should certainly say—No.

27. By the Chairman: What means have you of knowing? I can scarcely answer that question, for this reason—I have no means of knowing at all whether Mr. Hunt has reciprocated this sort of feeling towards the officers, but I believe he does not.

28. What means have you of knowing the feelings of the other officers towards Mr. Hunt? I have as far as Major Christie is concerned, I believe they do not speak when they meet, when they pass each other in the passage, or in the street.

29. That implies reciprocity of feeling—that is a fair inference? Well, of course you are as good a judge of that matter as I can be myself; I do not myself believe there is any feeling towards any of them on the part of Mr. Hunt. I have known Mr. Hunt for many years, and a more courteous or more amiable man I do not know.

30. Has there been any want of amiability on the part of Major Christie or other officers? On the part of Major Christie, certainly.

Mr. R.
Thompson.

10 April, 1862.

John Fairfax, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are the proprietor of the Sydney Morning Herald? Yes.

John Fairfax,
Esq.

2. A very large amount of correspondence, I presume, passes through your hands daily? Yes.

3. Do you see any reason to complain of the way the Post Office business has been conducted, as far as you are connected with it? No, I think not; I think, on the contrary, we have every reason to be satisfied. We have sometimes—in fact, frequently—had to make complaints, but they have always been redressed, or suggestions have been made by which they should not occur again.

10 April, 1862.

4. To whom have you made complaints? Direct to the Postmaster General.

5. And you have always met with courtesy and attention? Invariably.

6. As far as you know, the postal business has been well conducted? As far as my own experience has gone in the matter. I do not know whether any particular attention has been paid to us; but I suppose we have as much to do with the Post Office as any in Sydney, and we have no reason to complain. As I have already stated, if any complaints have been made by us—whenever complaints have come to us—and they very often do—of mistakes in consequence of new Post Offices being opened in the far distant interior—we forward them to the Postmaster General, and he perseveres and finds out where the evil has been, and corrects it as far as he can.

7. Do you consider that any larger amount of irregularity exists in this Post Office than might be expected in a country where the postal towns are so scattered, and the distances to be travelled are so great? I have scarcely sufficient personal experience to speak to that point, from my own knowledge, but it must be very difficult to manage in all its branches the postal arrangements of a country so widely extended, and where the population is so scattered.

8. Are you aware who are the authors and contributors to your paper? Yes.

9. Have you any objection to state whether you have received any articles from Mr. Richard Thompson, relating to the Post Office Department? Yes, I have received communications from him—not lately, because I have rejected them—but, I think, two or three years ago.

10. Mr. Thompson has told us, in evidence, that he has never had any communication with any party connected with the Post Office in the preparation of those communications—do you, from your experience as connected with the newspaper, believe that he could have composed those articles without such communication? I am in a position to speak positively upon that point.

11. Will you have the goodness to do so? The articles that he furnished to us in 1860 were compilations with reference to the Home Office and the Colonial Office, and I expressly asked the question—from whom did he get the information.

- John Fairfax, Esq.
12 April, 1862.
12. Are these the articles to which you refer (handing a paper to witness)? Yes; I have a very strong impression, although I would not swear to it, that in this particular case, when he brought these articles to me, I asked him from whom he got this information, and he told me from Mr. Hunt.
13. Do you recognise that handwriting (handing to witness a letter forwarded by Mr. Hunt to the Board)? Yes.
14. Whose handwriting is that? Mrs. Thompson's.
15. Can you suggest any improvement in the department? I would suggest that the Post Office should be kept open rather later in the evening, for the purpose of delivering letters to any one who might have boxes in the office.
16. We have been told that it is kept open; that if any mail arrives from the Hunter, for instance, before five o'clock, the mail is delivered that night? I do not refer to the delivery but suppose a boat comes in at six o'clock with letters containing important information, I think those who have boxes should be able to obtain them, in order to answer them by eleven.
17. You would have the office open still later? I would have it open till midnight if necessary. An extra clerk might be kept for the purpose of putting important letters into the boxes of those who pay for them; I do not expect them to be delivered after seven, or whatever the hour may be.
18. You would have the office kept open later for the advantage of those who have private letter boxes? Yes.
19. Do you consider that the fee paid for private boxes is sufficient to pay for an extra clerk? Perhaps not; I would then double it.
20. Are you aware what the fee is at present in Victoria? I am not.
21. Five guineas—would you consider that too much? I should not care about paying five guineas, if I could get my letters.
22. By Mr. Smart: Do you think merchants would be willing to pay five guineas a year for their letters? Our business is rather different.
23. By Mr. Watt: How far would you extend this privilege—to letters from a particular town, or would you embrace all the Northern mails? I do not see why so important a branch of the public service should not be kept open eighteen hours a day.
24. By Mr. Smart: You would not expect one set of clerks to attend there eighteen hours? Not one set throughout the whole time; but one extra man might do the work.
25. By the Chairman: Have you found a very great convenience, or any convenience, in being able to resell postage stamps at the Post Office? I never tried to sell them there.
26. Then you have not derived any advantage from the facility afforded by the Post Office in buying back stamps that have been remitted from the country? We have no difficulty in selling them in Sydney. We have agents who take them.
27. Do you think it a good plan that the Post Office should buy back its own stamps? I have never thought of the subject, and was not aware that it was done. I know that it is very convenient to receive remittances by stamps from the country.
28. By Mr. Smart: Do you not think the Money Order System would be better than this of reselling stamps? Yes; but the remittances by stamps are very small.
29. But you could get a money order for any amount you pleased? For so small a sum as 3s.?
30. Yes. You are accustomed to receive small remittances in stamps? Yes, sometimes two or three times in a day.
31. And you do not resell them to the Post Office? No; we have no difficulty in selling them to agents.
32. At what discount? Five per cent.
33. By Mr. King: Do your correspondents who remit to you allow you five per cent.? No: it is so far a loss to us; but it is a convenience in this way, that we have not to open so large a number of small accounts.

MONDAY, 14 APRIL, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. SMART,
MR. WATT.

Mr. Frederick William Webb called in and examined:—

- Mr. F. W. Webb.
14 April, 1862.
1. By the Chairman: What is your present employment? Clerk of the Printing Branch, Legislative Assembly.
2. Have you ever been employed in the Post Office? I was, two years ago.
3. What situation did you occupy there? When I left, I was a third-class clerk; before that, I had been in almost every branch of the office, at different times.
4. Third-class clerk in what? The Correspondence Branch last of all.
5. Were you ever in the Letter Department? Yes, I was there for four years.
6. How long were you in the Post Office altogether? About six years and a half.

7. You were occupied in each different branch during that time? I was chiefly employed in the Inland Letter Department, but when any of the gentlemen got leave of absence, or they were short-handed, from any cause, in the other branches, I took the place of the one who happened to be absent.
8. And in that way you had an opportunity of seeing much of the working of the Post Office? Of the Letter Branch—yes.
9. Of the other departments? Yes, and of the other departments; although I was only a short time in some of them.
10. Was the working of the Letter Branch as perfect, in your opinion, as it might have been? It was not at all perfect, I thought.
11. Could you suggest how it might have been made better, if such an improvement has not already been made? I am not aware what improvements have been made. Mr. Dillon suggested an alteration that was made while I was there, but I thought it anything but an improvement. I allude to the alphabetical system of sorting and despatching mails. I thought the old system much preferable.
12. What was the old system? It was known by the name of the "Road System." The letters were divided into three heads—Northern, Southern, and Western, and then sorted into different boxes labelled with the names of the post towns.
13. You consider the road system preferable to the alphabetical system? Yes, because by that plan mistakes, when made, were rectified more readily, and were made less serious.
14. Would it not necessitate on the part of the clerks sorting a certain amount of geographical knowledge of the interior of the Colony? No doubt.
15. Suppose a clerk possessing such knowledge were ill, or absent from any cause, how would his place be supplied? All the clerks in that department ought to have that geographical knowledge.
16. Did they have it? Yes, I think they did, generally speaking, know enough to be able to distinguish whether a post town was in the Northern, Western, or Southern division; that might easily be acquired.
17. According to this road system, you first separated the letters into three great divisions; what plan was followed afterwards? Three clerks, one for each road, took the letters and sorted them for the different post towns into the respective boxes.
18. Does it not appear better to combine the two systems; that is, to sort into three great divisions for the different roads, and then to subdivide the letters according to the alphabetical system? I think that would be an improvement; but it never suggested itself to me.
19. Can you make any other suggestions that might be carried out with advantage? There was one thing I wished to mention, and that is, that I think it very desirable that the clerks in the Inland Letter Branch should be protected. When I was there it was in the power of any dishonest postmaster to impeach the honesty of any clerk who made up a mail containing registered letters, by saying that he had not received them.
20. Were they not entered in the way-bill? They were entered by him; but he might put them in his pocket afterwards, or the postmaster might do the same and say he did not receive them. There ought to be some witness to the actual despatching of a registered letter.
21. You mean that, before despatching the mail, the way-bills ought to be checked over? Yes, and the second party ought to put the letters into the bag—the two being present while they were being put in.
22. Do you think the Post Office building is in every way fitted for the work that has to be done there—is it sufficiently commodious? I do not; I think it is particularly small for the number of officers employed in it.
23. Is it generally healthy, in your opinion? I found it unhealthy, remarkably so.
24. Do you think that if a new Post Office were built, arranged in a suitable manner, the work could be done by a smaller number of hands? I think it could.
25. Was there general harmony among the different branches of the establishment while you were there? When I first went there, there was; but, latterly, it was not so.
26. In what way? There was a difference between the up-stairs and down-stairs branches.
27. Between the clerks, or between the heads of the different branches? Between the heads, and the clerks seemed to take up the quarrel; they formed themselves into parties, as it were.
28. Where do you think the blame lay? It is hardly possible for me to answer a question like that with any degree of certainty.
29. Can you give any reason for the disagreement or want of harmony? Only that of the present Secretary being raised above one who was formerly his senior in office—I mean the Superintendent; that I think under any circumstances would give rise to jealousy and perhaps ill feeling.
30. Jealousy between whom? Between these two officers; and the subordinates under them would probably range themselves on either side.
31. Do you think this want of harmony prevented in any way the efficient working of the Post Office—do you think it impeded the public service? Yes, I do.
32. In what way? If the gentlemen were engaged in carrying on a private correspondence, they could not of course be attending to their public duties, and the service must suffer more or less in a case of that kind.
33. Was there a general willingness to assist from one branch to another? Yes, amongst the subordinates, undoubtedly. Perhaps I should say here, that when the clerks of the up-stairs branch were called upon to assist below, they were paid for it as overtime.
34. Was the office of Postal Inspector in existence while you were in the Post Office? It was created while I was there.
35. It was in existence before you left? It was.

Mr. F. W.
Webb.
14 April, 1862.

- Mr. F. W. Webb.
14 April, 1862.
36. Do you know if the Postal Inspector passed most of his time on the roads or in Sydney? I think he passed the greater portion of his time out of Sydney.
37. Seven months out of the twelve? I should think so.
38. What was he doing the other five months? Attending to matters that had been laid by for him by the Postmaster General, giving decisions in matters relating to postal lines, preparing time tables, and so on.
39. When you first went to the Post Office the appointment did not exist? No.
40. Who examined the time tables before that time, and did the other office work now done by the Inspector? The Postmaster General and the Secretary, assisted by one of the clerks in the office (Mr. Levinge), who was afterwards Postal Inspector.
41. Had you anything to do with the Stamp Department while there? Yes, I was there for one month during the absence of one of the clerks, and assisted for an hour each day for a considerable time, during the luncheon hour of one of the gentlemen.
42. Doing what? Selling the stamps at the window.
43. Was the system in force, before you left, of the Post Office repurchasing its own stamps? It was not.
44. The latter portion of the time you were in the Post Office you were in the Secretary's Department? Yes, the latter portion, fifteen months in all.
45. Was the time of all the clerks fully occupied in that department? Yes, with the exception of the half hour or thereabouts at lunch. I am speaking of the Corresponding Branch; I know nothing of the duties of the Account Branch.
46. Are you aware whether the Postal Inspector ever suggested any improvements in the carrying out of any inland contract? I remember that he made several reports which contained suggestions, but I cannot now recollect what they were, or any of the particulars.
47. Can you make any suggestions by which the general management of the Post Office might be improved and its efficiency increased? None, except that of combining the offices of Superintendent and Chief Clerk.
48. By Mr. King: Secretary you mean? No, Chief Clerk in the Letter Branch. I think there is no occasion for a Superintendent.
49. By the Chairman: You mean Superintendent of the Letter Branch? I do.
50. What are the duties of Superintendent of the Letter Branch? Merely to pass on applications and letters concerning the Inland and Delivery Branches, initial them, and see that they are properly replied to. That could be easily done by the Chief Clerk, who could give all the superintendence that is necessary in that branch. I consider the office of Superintendent almost a sinecure.
51. The Chief Clerk is actively employed in the duties of the department? Yes, in assisting.
52. What did the Superintendent do while you were there—how did he employ his time—what was his daily occupation? His daily occupation consisted in receiving, after they were registered up stairs, the letters that concerned his particular department, seeing that they were properly replied to, and then walking about the building, to see that things went right. He had no stated occupation; he never did anything that I saw, more than what I have stated, except when an English mail arrived, when he might assist in a small way; I confess I very rarely saw that.
53. Did not the Superintendent often make suggestions for increasing the efficiency of the department under his control and for the advantage of the public? He very often made suggestions to the Postmaster General by memoranda, during the time I was there, that might have benefited the department.
54. Did the Postmaster General himself take any active part in superintending the management of the office? Personally superintending it?
55. Personally? No, I should say not; he was seldom seen down stairs, except on the arrival of a mail, when he came to assist or to look on.
56. By Mr. Smart: I think you said the clerks in the up-stairs department, when called upon to assist in the Letter Branch, were paid for it? Yes, at the rate of two shillings an hour; that is, after their hour for leaving the office, four o'clock.
57. Were the clerks in the Letter Branch also paid for extra time? Yes, after six o'clock—for all over seven hours a day.
58. The clerks in all the branches were paid alike for what is called overtime? Yes, precisely.

William Hanson, Esq., called in and examined:—

- W. Hanson, Esq.
14 April, 1862.
1. By the Chairman: You are one of the proprietors of the Empire newspaper? Yes.
2. You receive a large amount of correspondence? Yes.
3. Of course you must have a great deal of business to do with the Post Office? We have a great deal.
4. Have you any complaint to make as to the way in which the work of the Post Office — ? Our complaints extend over a very long period—two or three years.
5. Will you specify them? The complaints usually come to us in the way of business, and with the large mass of correspondence that we have, which is tied up and put away as it comes in, it is not easy, as you will readily understand, to select the most prominent cases without considerable trouble. Still I have casually taken up a few letters which have been recently received and have brought them with me. The complaint has been existing ever since we have had the Empire.
6. By Mr. Smart: Have you any complaints to make that have come under your own personal observation, without reference to your correspondents—from your own experience have you any any complaints personally against the way in which the business of the Post Office is conducted? When I speak of correspondence, you must understand that I do not allude merely to letters written to the Empire for publication, but to complaints made by our business correspondents. Here are three letters from business correspondents, dated in January last, which I can shew the Board—letters that have not been published, and were never intended for publication. With regard to the delivery of papers we have constant complaints made. This is one, dated 20th January, 1862, from Machett, Cooper, & Co., our agents at Lambing Flat:—"The Empires that we ordered to Binalong arrived there 150 short of the number. We enclose £4, and please send us 300 Weekly Empires of the next issue to Binalong, and 100 to Lambing Flat. Be sure that they are addressed to different names, to the care of Machett, Cooper, & Co., or else we may expect some difficulty with the Post Office authorities." Here is another from the same parties, dated 27th January:—"We are again greatly disappointed and much inconvenienced at not getting our complement of Empires as ordered—only 126 to hands. Last week we lost in Empires nearly £10, having been compelled to sell them as waste paper only." That was because they were posted and did not reach their destination in time. Again, on the 4th February, Machett, Cooper and Co. write as follows:—"We are again compelled to complain to you of the manner in which our orders have been executed. We have now been greatly disappointed three times, and the neglect at your office has been a most serious loss to us. Our first order to send the papers to Binalong was not attended to, only 100 arriving in place of 400 as ordered—the remainder coming on Thursday, three days late."

W. Hanson,
Esq.
14 April, 1862.

7. By the Chairman: Were 400 sent? Yes, decidedly; I can testify to their being posted. The letter goes on—"Our next order was not attended to at all—out of 400 all we received at Binalong was 26, the remainder having been posted in Sydney too late, as the post-marks clearly prove. The consequence was we had to send to Yass to have them brought on by coach, and had to pay carriage at a very high rate. This spoilt the sale of the papers, and we had to dispose of nearly 1 cwt. of papers at the rate of 6d. a pound for waste paper. Our last Monday's (January 31) papers came as directed by us to Lambing Flat."

8. By Mr. Watt: What steps did you take on receiving the first letter? I went up and shewed it to Mr. Hunt, and Mr. Hunt assured me that the papers had left the Sydney Post Office. I do not know that I did go on the other occasions, because we have such numberless complaints. Not a day passes without some complaint.

9. When you received the second letter what steps did you take—or did you make any application to the Post Office? I do not think I did; I merely wrote to our agents on the subject.

10. By Mr. Smart: Are these three letters from the same correspondents? Yes.

11. By Mr. Watt: Could you give us readily any instance where such a complaint was made and you followed it out, in order that we may see what steps were taken by the Postmaster General to remedy the grievance? There is one case which I have marked which we did follow out. Mrs. Bennett, who resides at Newtown, posted a letter, somewhere in December last, addressed to Miss Armstrong, Post Office, Appin. She also posted another in a fortnight afterwards, and another in a week or ten days more; the three were posted, I think, in December. Miss Armstrong is in the habit, when in Sydney, of visiting at my house and at Mr. Bennett's, and when she was down in January, it was found that none of the three letters had reached her, but while she was at my house all three letters were delivered at once at Appin, and the covers were sent down to her. Now Mr. Bennett had accused his little boy, who was sent for the purpose, of not having posted the letters, but it was ascertained that they were posted at Newtown and had come in to the Sydney Post Office, and I learnt from Mr. Hunt that they had been in the Post Office during the whole month, and I have no doubt if you question Mr. Hunt, he will recollect the circumstance.

12. Did Mr. Hunt give any explanation as to the cause of the detention of the letters? He said the clerk in the office who had charge of these letters, had put them into a wrong pigeon-hole.

13. How was Mr. Hunt aware that they had been a month in the Post Office? I can scarcely tax my memory, but I think Mr. Hunt said he had discovered the letters himself, and when they were found they were stamped and forwarded as they should have been at first. I saw the covers at my house after they had been detained a month.

14. All bearing one date? All bearing one date.

15. It is difficult to conceive that any letter-box in the Post Office would remain uncleared for a month? It was more than a month I think. Mr. Hunt must remember the circumstance perfectly well. It was not a matter in which I was personally concerned, but Miss Armstrong being at my house I went to inquire about it, and got the explanation I have stated from Mr. Hunt.

16. By Mr. Smart: Were the letters sent to Appin, to Miss Armstrong? Yes.

17. And forwarded on to Sydney? The covers were forwarded to her in Sydney.

18. By Mr. Watt: Can you mention any case of your own that you followed up by communicating with the Postmaster General with a view to having inquiry made by him? We have done so, but the answers we get are generally the usual official answer, that inquiry has been made and the letters cannot be traced.

19. Can you produce an instance? I think I have given you an instance that you may easily trace.

20. You had no official communication in that case? No. If we did officially communicate, the answer we should get would be a mere printed statement to the effect that inquiry had been made and no trace had been discovered.

W. Hanson, Esq.
 14 April, 1862.

21. Do I understand you to say that you have received such letters? Yes; I have made such complaints, and have had an official notification in the usual way, without any possibility of finding out the cause of the delay. Here is another case in which, however, I cannot bring anything written. It is a complaint made to us by Cleghorn and Jaques at Uralla. It seems that when sent through the Armidale Post Office letters and papers were never delivered punctually at Uralla, and they applied to have a private bag made up at Sydney, and now the letters, and our papers as well, go safe, but if they went in the regular post bag there was no certainty about it.

22. Do you infer neglect in the Central Post Office, or in the Post Office at Armidale? I think the fault was in the Armidale Post Office in that case; but in the case of the three letters I spoke of just now, the fault was entirely in the Sydney Post Office; when I called there I found that the fault lay in Mr. Hunt's own department. Here is another letter, dated Mulla Villa, Wollombi, 31st March, 1862, in which the writer, after reporting that two numbers of the Empire had not reached him, goes on to say:—"It appears to me that there must be something radically wrong in Post Office arrangements when there have occurred so many detentions to one individual, and I have not reported half of the missing papers to my address. I desire to add that several papers have reached me having written on the cover, 'Why returned to Maitland.' One of these I took to our local postmaster, who solemnly stated that that paper had never been in his hands until the evening of delivery to me. If newspapers can be systematically stopped, the same I presume may be extended to letters, and believing as I do that the Post Office is one of the most important establishments of the Government, as respects the masses of the community, strict regularity ought to be enforced." Here is another letter:—"To the Editor of the Empire. Sir,—How comes the mail to be so irregular? I beg to direct your attention to this grievance which the public has to suffer from on the Western Road. From Parramatta to Bathurst, Orange, Sofala, and Mudgee, the mail is often carried on horseback. So irregular has it become of late that we never can rely on it at any particular time. Why does not our worthy Postmaster General compel the mail contractors to carry the mail in vehicles within the prescribed time, and make them responsible for delays? Is their convenience to be considered by the Postmaster General in preference to that of the public? The mail coach to Bathurst is drawn by two miserable horses, who travel not much quicker than a good walking pace. Previous to this late contract the mail kept such good time that we had not much room for complaint. I trust our Postmaster General will look into this affair, which so much affects the public, as also his own honor, and compel the mail contractors to fulfil their contract as punctually as it was done the six years previous to the present contract." This is dated, Bathurst, 2nd April, 1862.

23. By Mr. King: How do you forward papers to your agent at Burrangong? We pack them up twelve in a packet, directed.

24. Might they not be abstracted at the local Post Office? I think it must be in some such way they are abstracted. We never could trace them, though I gave myself a great deal of trouble about it.

25. By the Chairman: In a matter so serious, did you never make any representation to the Postmaster General? Certainly I did. I forgot to bring two official letters, merely intimating that the papers could not be traced. I went up and saw him personally, and complained with regard to alterations in the mail to Braidwood. He said he would take care to inquire, and he did inquire, and communicated with me sometime afterwards; but I forget whether he had made a change, or found some difficulty about it. For the last twelve months we have not communicated with him, but previously we did, frequently.

26. But this affair of these papers was something so serious, considering the number that were missing, that I should have thought you would have felt bound to trace it out. It seems they were marked "Too late"—were they posted too late? My people assure me that they were not. If they were marked "Too late," no doubt that was written in the Post Office here. I made particular inquiry when this letter came, and I know the papers all went from our office. We publish early in the morning, and the mail does not go till three o'clock; consequently, there was plenty of time to have posted them, and as all the papers for the country are checked off in a regular manner, I see no reason to suppose that they were too late in leaving our office.

27. By Mr. Smart: Do you think it likely any of the officials in the Post Office would mark the papers "Too late," if they had been received in time? I cannot say they would.

28. Do you think there is any disregard to forwarding papers in consequence of their having no stamps on them? I think it very likely.

29. What do you think would be the effect if they had each a penny stamp on them—do you think they would have more attention paid to them? I have no doubt of that at all; but at the same time I think it would be a step that would be very injurious to the country at large.

30. That is, if a stamp on newspapers was adopted? Yes.

31. Still you think they would be more likely to be forwarded, if stamped, than when not stamped? Yes, I do.

32. Can you give us any further instances of irregularities in the Post Office that have fallen under your own knowledge? I do not know that I can specify any particular case, but they are very very numerous. Complaints very frequently come to us from our correspondents, who put their complaints in a postscript to letters on business, or for publication.

33. By the Chairman: Have you any means of judging whether, in general, the irregularities that occur arise through carelessness in the Letter Department of the Central Office, through the irregularities of contractors, or through the carelessness of the up country postmasters? The difficulty is in tracing to which party the error is due. In our communications with the Post Office, of course it is for them to shew where the error lies.

34. Can you form no idea? No idea. I am quite clear that with respect to these Newtown letters the fault lay with the Sydney Post Office.
35. With respect to the newspapers —? I can form no idea.
36. Have you made no inquiry? We have sometimes. I know that during the Burrangong riots our papers were kept at Campbelltown for nearly a fortnight, but that was by order of the Government. We did not know it till it was over. No papers were forwarded for nearly a fortnight.
37. By Mr. Watt: Was that from the conveyance being otherwise engaged? Being occupied in taking up the military, I believe. And they had orders not to send on any newspapers.
38. By Mr. King: Are you allowed to tie twelve papers in a packet? Yes.
39. By the Chairman: You have printed in your journal sundry articles upon the Post Office—would you have any objection to state whether any of those articles have been contributed by any of those employed in the Post Office Department? I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that they know no more about them than you do. Not a single individual in the Post Office knows anything about any article that has appeared in the columns of the Empire.
40. You think they have not in any way contributed the information? Not at all, not in any way. I may state that from my having been in the Government employ for six or seven years I am very conversant with the intricacies of every department, and I will not accept information from an official; if he comes and volunteers it I will not use it. The information respecting matters that we take up in the leading columns of the Empire is never supplied in any such manner.
41. You have received correspondence under the signature of Samuel Plumb? Yes.
42. Have you reason to believe that the person writing under that name is other than Mr. Samuel Plumb, of Muswellbrook, or that the letters are really the production of some other person? Now you are speaking of letters published in the Empire—Mr. Plumb's letters—published under the signature of "One who Knows." We do not insert such letters without we have the name of the author. We know Mr. Plumb's writing, and we know his signature. He has been the principal writer of letters under the signature of "One who Knows," in the Empire, in defence of the Post Office; but I have no knowledge of myself how he gets his information.
43. By Mr. King: Is Plumb in any way connected with the Post Office now? I do not think he is, but I do not know.
44. By the Chairman: Do you consider the general management of the Post Office defective? Very.
45. In what way? I have watched the Post Office for many years, and I am quite satisfied that in the present management all the evil rests. For instance, there is the Postmaster General, and then there are three officers, at salaries of £530 each, who have a divided authority; one is very jealous of the other; one will not allow the other to interfere in his department. There is no possibility of having anything like proper organization where you have three gentlemen so utterly opposed to each other, and all on the same salary—I mean the Secretary, the Accountant, and the Superintendent. Now if we had a Postmaster General, and then a General Superintendent, say at £600, the others would be mere clerical duties—subordinate duties. It is from having these three heads always fighting one against the other, that all the difficulty arises. One will not be interfered with by the other, each exercises authority to a certain extent, they consider themselves quite equal to one another, and hence the squabbles that take place; and the Postmaster General does not know how to act between them.
46. Can you say how the public are in any way injured by these dissensions? You will find in all matters of business, that if you have in any establishment three individuals working one against the other, they cannot carry on their duties satisfactorily. I can see very clearly the way in which the department could be managed by having a Postmaster General, with a Superintendent under him, at a superior salary, who should be responsible for the conduct of the whole office; but not when there are three individuals, each having a separate department, and not co-operating one with the other. I believe they exclude from each other all sorts of information. I know as regards letters, I have once or twice asked Mr. Hunt with regard to letters, and he said he had no power of looking at the letter book.
47. Have you ever formed any opinion as to the advisableness of the Postmaster General being a political officer? Yes, I have thought very much on the subject, and I am of opinion that the only course to be pursued, in order that the department may be put on a proper footing, is to make the Postmaster Generalship a political office. My idea has always been that there should be a political head, with a good Superintendent.
48. Have you had much to do with the Post Office in the way of reselling stamps to them? Yes.
49. Do you find that a convenience? No, I do not at all.
50. Would not a Money Order System be a convenience? It would be a great convenience; vastly more convenient than the present system of repurchasing stamps.
51. You do not consider the system of repurchasing stamps an advisable one? No, it is merely suicidal; it is false in every respect. I consider it places the revenue in a false position, for one thing; these stamps are returned as postage stamps, so many issued for letters, which is not the fact.
52. Beyond what you have stated to the Board, could you make any suggestions that you think would improve the efficiency of the Postal Department? With regard to stamps, there is a stamp for registering letters, which is very difficult and troublesome to print, because it is printed in two colours. The original idea was, that by putting a register stamp on a letter, and dropping it in the Post Office, it was considered registered, whereas in fact it does not register it at all, but it points out to the thief the letter that contains money; and it is inconvenient, too, for you have to go and buy a register stamp and put the ordinary postage stamp on as well.

53. Is it necessary that a registered letter should have a register stamp upon it? Yes.

54. If it had not the register stamp upon it, would it not be marked as registered? Yes, but persons would not be deceived, as they are likely to be now, by thinking it is registered in virtue of the stamp.

55. Then, in your opinion, the register stamp is useless? It is a piece of deceit, because a great portion of the public do not know but what a letter is registered when the stamp is put upon it. There is an eightpenny stamp, which is scarcely ever used now, that would answer well for postage stamp and register stamp together, and there is nothing peculiar in the stamp that would point out the letter as containing money. The plate for this eightpenny stamp is never used, and is perfectly new. This register stamp was introduced in 1854 or 1855, and it was the idea that it would save all the trouble of registering, but that it does not. It is got up in a fanciful way, to look very conspicuous, being printed in two colours, the outer ring in red and the inner part of another colour, and is a very troublesome stamp to print. That, I believe, was entirely a suggestion of Major Christie.—Here is another letter, apparently written for publication but not published, which I may as well read to you, to shew one kind of complaint that is made against the Post Office:—“The unmerited contumely which parties are subjected to at the General Post Office when inquiring for letters is beyond endurance, and I am positively assured that Major Christie is not cognizant of such injudicious proceedings on the part of the clerks in the Delivery Office. I had occasion to inquire the other day whether there were any letters to my address, being answered in the negative by one of them, whose physiognomy is anything but prepossessing, and who interrogated me with a multiplicity of inquisitorial questions quite incompatible with the subject. I presume that every one is entitled to common civility, whether gentleman or labouring man. Knowing that you are an advocate for public rights induces me to write these few lines to your valuable journal, and beg you will be kind enough to give publicity to the same in Monday’s issue. Apologizing for thus intruding, I am, your obedient servant, _____.”

56. Was Mr. Plumb the author of the letters signed “Scrutator,” in your paper? No, he was not.

57. Did you, at the requisition of Mr. Hunt, cease publishing any more of “Scrutator’s” letters? Never; Mr. Hunt never applied to me.

58. Have you ever visited the building at the General Post Office? Very frequently.

59. Do you think it sufficiently commodious or convenient for the work that has to be done there? No, I do not think it at all convenient.

60. Do you think it a building well suited for a Post Office? No, it is not well suited for a Post Office. It appears to me to want one very large room for the sorting of letters and papers, and then, also, merely one large room for the rest of the clerks. It is too much cut up into separate rooms. I think that is a fault attaching to all the Government offices. The clerks should be more together.

61. Does not that appear to be more essentially necessary in a Post Office where a direct surveillance over all the clerks is requisite? Yes; it appears very necessary that they should be under the surveillance of the head of the office.

62. Are you aware that there is a wide difference between the revenue and the expenditure of the postal department? I am.

63. Could you suggest any mode by which this deficiency might be lessened, and yet the public service not suffer? I am not in a position to go into the intricacies of postal routes, but I believe an immense deal might be done by re-arranging them. I believe that some places, where they do not get more than one or two letters by each mail, cost the country £30 or £40 a year. When I was in England there were many places of considerable population that had no direct mails, but here every little place that one or two letters go to must have a postal contract. I am not thoroughly up in the subject of postal routes, but I am quite sure there might be effected an enormous saving.

64. Do you not think, now that these Post Offices have been established, that if they were taken away the complaints would be very loud and great? No, I do not. I think they never ought to have been placed there.

65. Having been placed there, do you not think the parties interested would complain if they were removed? I dare say one or two parties in each case would feel inconvenienced, but I think the Government ought not to go to such a large expenditure. There is room for economy, too, in the system of contracts. The contractors from Melbourne were here twelve months ago. It appears they take the whole post roads of Victoria, and manage the whole of them. They are not cut up into so many different contracts. These are men of capital, who are able to carry out the postal contracts much more satisfactorily in consequence of having such large contracts. I forget their names now, but I had some considerable conversation with them about it.

66. Are you aware of the relative difference of the cost of conveyance in Victoria and in New South Wales? No, I am not.

67. You are not aware perhaps that it is very nearly double in Victoria? No, I was not aware of it. It has often occurred to me, with regard to increasing the revenue of the Post Office, though it would not be a popular thing, that if town letters were made to pay 2d., and country letters 3d., it would increase the revenue enormously. I went into a calculation, when I was Inspector of Stamps, to shew what the increase would be. Though there might be be some dissatisfaction at first, I think it would subside; for when the postage on Melbourne letters was raised to 6d. there was a great outcry, but the public now willingly pay the 6d., and it produces a very large revenue. It would not cost anything to set the new postage afloat, for they have the 2d. plate now, and also a 3d. plate, so that there would be no expense in the production of more stamps, while it would increase the revenue enormously. The revenue from town letters would be doubled.

W. Hanson,
Esq.

14 April, 1862.

68. Do you think there would be an equal number of letters posted? Yes.

69. Do you not bear in mind that it would be the same here as in London—that, when a number of circulars are sent out from any business establishment, the party sending them could make a tolerably accurate calculation of what it would cost him to deliver them by private hand; and, though it might be cheaper to post them at a 1d., yet there might be a saving, if the postage were 2d., by sending them out in another way. In London it can be done for less than the postage comes to? No doubt in London it could; but in Sydney it would be more expensive by private hand. If four or five hundred circulars were to be sent out it might come cheaper to do it by private hand; but, with regard to bills, it would be better to send them by post.

70. Do you think it would cost more than five hundred pence to deliver five hundred circulars in Sydney? I think it would.

71. Are you aware what the postal tariff is in Victoria? No.

72. Would you suggest that letters should be delivered at the furthest post town in the Colony—for instance, at Wentworth, 700 miles distant—for threepence? No; it is one of those Post Offices, probably, that ought to be dispensed with.

THURSDAY, 17 APRIL, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. SMART,

MR. WATT.

Mr. Augustus Dillon called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: What is your occupation at the Post Office? Postal Inspector. Mr. A. Dillon.
2. How long have you been Postal Inspector? Since the 1st of March last.
3. How long have you been in the Post Office? Since the 1st of July, 1853—nearly nine 17 April, 1862. years.
4. Have you entered upon your duties as Postal Inspector? I have.
5. What do you consider those duties to be? Part of my duties have reference to the country alone, and my other duties I have to perform in Sydney. My duties in the country are to visit certain districts whenever the Postmaster General may order me to inspect the country Post Offices; to instruct the postmasters in their duties; to inquire into the manner in which the mail contractors perform their contracts; to ascertain if there are any irregularities or any complaints against the Post Offices; to inquire into the postal wants of the districts; to see if any changes could be made, and to propose such as might appear to me desirable. When I am absent I have to keep a journal of my proceedings, and to send a weekly report to the Postmaster General. When I have terminated a tour of inspection I have to send in a final report accompanied by a copy of my journal. In the event of any derangement of the service I am liable to be sent off at a moment's notice to remedy it. When there is any serious complaint against a postmaster I am liable to be sent to the Post Office to inquire into it. In such cases I have to make a special report. When I am in Sydney I have to revise the time tables, make out a monthly time table, and report upon a number of cases that are referred to me concerning the Post Offices. Perhaps I can better explain what my duties are if you will allow me to refer to a note I have made. I have on my table, at the present moment, 248 time bills; upon each of these time bills is to be found a record of some irregularities. I have to inquire into these, and report upon them to the Postmaster General—whether fines should be inflicted or not. I also have proposals for changes in the time table on twenty-nine postal lines. I have also a proposal for a new line, and a partial discontinuance of an old one. I have to draw up a report shewing the rate at which the mails travel throughout the Colony; to report concerning the abandonment of a contract by a mail contractor. I have two reports concerning missing mails, one concerning the habitual detention of mails upon a line of road, one concerning gross misconduct on the part of a mail contractor, two concerning missing money letters; and in the tables of the arrival and despatch of mails, since they were published on the 1st of January, there have been eighty changes made. I mean that the time tables upon eighty lines have been changed since the 1st of January, requiring the time tables of each of those lines to be revised.
6. Who performed this work in Sydney before there was a Postal Inspector? The Secretary and Cashier.
7. Is not the Secretary and Cashier equally able to perform it in Sydney now? One of the chief reasons for making this appointment was to relieve the Secretary and Cashier of these duties. The work connected with them became so heavy, that it was impossible he could attend to them and perform his other duties.
8. Was it not understood that one of the chief duties of the Postal Inspector was to look after the proper performance of the country contracts? Yes; but it was also to revise the time tables.

- Mr. A. Dillon. 9. Do you think any Postal Inspector could do this duty efficiently if he were travelling about the country only six months in the year? Yes.
- 17 April, 1862. 10. You have mentioned that there have been eighty changes made since the first of January—have these been made without a visitation of the districts? Without visiting the districts.
11. Do you think it advisable changes should be so made? It is not advisable in one sense; but they would be made at long intervals unless they were made without my visiting the districts.
12. Is it not advisable that, before these changes are made, the districts should be visited by the Postal Inspector? I do not think it is absolutely necessary.
13. You say you have to advise respecting changes on twenty-nine postal lines? On twenty-nine postal lines.
14. Are you going to make these changes without visiting the districts? I am.
15. Do you think that is advisable? Yes; I can do it very well. It depends entirely upon what the complaints are; if it is a complaint which has reference merely to the change of a day, and that change can be made so as to satisfy any particular application, without causing any harm to the rest of the service, it can be done at once, without any reference.
16. How are you to ascertain whether the application made is worthy of attention without visiting the district yourself? The time tables are never framed by merely visiting the districts. I can make out the whole of the time tables for the Colony without leaving Sydney.
17. Could a time table be properly made out without the Postal Inspector had previously visited the line, and reported upon the state of the road? That is only supposing there is some peculiarity in the country.
18. Do you consider it advisable that a time table should be made out in Sydney by one who never visits the country districts, and knows nothing about the postal route—would a time table be better made by such a person? I do not say that it would be better, but that it is not absolutely necessary that the person should visit a district in order to form an opinion as to the alteration of a time table; it certainly is not necessary in every case; it depends upon the kind of alteration required. Perhaps I should make myself better understood if I were to instance a case now under consideration. There is a three times a week communication between Goulburn, Queanbeyan, and Cooma. One of those mails formerly left on Wednesday—it now leaves on Tuesday—and there is a complaint made respecting it, and a request that it may leave on Wednesday. That change could be made without visiting the district.
19. Do you think it advisable to wait till complaints are made before making changes? Certainly not; but these things are brought under my notice in the office—unless I happen to be travelling, when, of course, I report them to the Postmaster General.
20. That is what I wish to arrive at—whether the Postal Inspector should not be always travelling, in order that he might learn what changes were necessary? But I could ascertain that without leaving Sydney.
21. Before complaints were made—could he ascertain that without leaving Sydney? Not before complaints were made.
22. When applications are made for new lines, are the new lines established without the Postal Inspector visiting the district? Frequently they are.
23. Do you think that is advisable? There is no analogy between the two cases.
24. I ask you whether you think it an advisable course? I do not; but I doubt whether any other course could be pursued at present.
25. Are you aware whether any care is taken to ascertain the traffic likely to exist upon any postal line before a new Post Office is established? No care is taken, generally speaking.
26. What would induce the Post Office to establish a new postal line—suppose any person in authority were to make an application for a particular postal line, would it be established? It depends a great deal upon the application sometimes.
27. What application would the Post Office consider sufficient? It is generally made by a petition of the inhabitants of a district.
28. Supposing a petition were to come from twenty inhabitants in an out of the way part of the country, would a Post Office be established upon such an application? I have known it to be done.
29. Do you think that advisable? It depends entirely upon the circumstances that surround the case. I have known a Post Office to be established upon the application of one person, who has been a Member of the Assembly.
30. Can you give an instance? I cannot at this moment call one to mind; but I have no doubt you will find out one by reference to the office records. I am not quite sure that Douglass Park was not established on the requisition of one person, but I cannot say positively.
31. As you make out the time tables, you also, of course, see the contracts? No; but I know the particulars of the contracts—they are printed.
32. You know nothing further of the cost of contracts? We always publish the cost of contracts. What we mean by contracts is the legal documents that are drawn up.
33. Are you aware whether the cost of establishing a line ever enters into the consideration of the Post Office before a line is established? Yes, it does. We have now called for tenders for a line to Wellingrove; whether it will be established or not will depend upon the cost.
34. Have you formed some estimate of the probable traffic upon the line? We are not able to do that. We generally ask as many questions as we can of the applicants and others connected with the district, but the probable traffic upon a line they are rarely in a position to state.

35. Let me take a distant post town. It appears that the township of Wentworth is the most distant in the Colony, seven hundred miles? It is, as far as mileage distance is concerned. Mr. A. Dillon.
17 April, 1862.
36. Letters go to Wentworth from Deniliquin? Yes, via Balranald.
37. Are you aware of the probable cost of carrying the mail as far as Wentworth? No.
38. Can you form no idea? No, it has to go by so many different lines, involving different costs—it could at best be only an estimate. It could only be arrived at by sending to all the postmasters along all the lines leading to that place for a return of all the letters received and despatched by them. We have no such return in the office.
39. You have not, since your appointment, left Sydney? I have not.
40. Do you remain in Sydney until the Postmaster General directs you to go on some tour of inspection? Yes; I am entirely under his orders, and never leave Sydney without instructions from him.
41. Have you ever communicated to any party out of the office, any information that you may have gained in your official position? To what extent am I to understand the question to apply; is it intended to inquire whether I have spoken to any one at all?
42. Have you ever given information to persons which have been the groundwork of letters published in the Empire? I have not, either directly or indirectly.
43. Have you ever yourself written in any journal? Yes.
44. Touching the Post Office? Touching the Post Office.
45. Under your own, or under an assumed name? I have written two letters under my own name, to defend myself from a personal attack.
46. Not otherwise? I have also written under the name of "Scrutator." Those letters were written to defend the Post Office against articles written in the Herald, headed "Mail Statistics of the United Kingdom and of New South Wales." In those two articles the Post Office was attacked, and also the Postmaster General. I wrote in reply, and signed the letters "Scrutator." Sometime afterwards a "communicated" article appeared in the Empire, and I wrote a second letter, signed "Scrutator," to rebut the statements made therein. Those are the only two letters I have ever written to the public newspapers under an assumed name, since I have been in the Post Office, respecting that establishment.
47. During the time you have been in the Sydney Post Office, what employment have you held there? I entered the Sydney Post Office in July, 1853, and was in the Account Branch from July till December. In December I was removed to the Stamp Office, and took charge of that and the Registration Office, where letters are registered. In February, 1854, I was transferred to the Inland Letter Office.
48. How was it you left the Stamp Office so soon? In consequence of a disagreement with Mr. Peel Raymond, the former Inspector of Stamps. In October, 1855, I entered the Secretary and Cashier's Office, where I remained till I was appointed to the Postal Inspectorship.
49. During the time you were in the Inland Letter Office, I suppose Mr. Hunt was the chief of your department? During the time I was in the office Mr. Hunt went to England; he was in the office a portion of the time—from February to April. When he went to England, Mr. Abbott became Acting Superintendent.
50. During the time you were in the Letter Branch, did it appear to you that that branch of the Post Office business was well conducted? Generally?
51. Yes, generally? It was certainly capable of improvement in many ways; in fact, many improvements were made.
52. Such improvements have been made subsequently? A great many improvements have been made since I have been in the office. From year to year improvements have been made, and the Letter Branch is now conducted very differently from what it was when I entered the office.
53. Can you suggest any further improvements? I think if all the officers could be under one roof, on one floor in the same building, it would be very desirable. They are now much disconnected, and this causes great labour.
54. Do you think some clerical labour might be dispensed with if the premises were more commodious? I think so.
55. Are you aware whether the health of the department is generally good? I do not think I was ever in a department where there were more deaths. On the average one clerk has died every year since I have been in the office. I am not prepared to say that that is to be attributed to the building, but I believe it is very unhealthy, especially the north side, where Major Christie's room is.
56. Were you always fully occupied while you were in the Secretary's department? Completely so; in fact I had more than I could do frequently.
57. Did you not, about six months ago, apply for literary employment upon one of the journals? I did.
58. Do you think you could find time for literary labour and attend to your duties in the Secretary's Office? Certainly not at the same time; but when I made that application I intended to work in the evening.
59. Were you never called upon to work late in the evening at the Post Office? Sometimes I have worked until five or six o'clock, and I have frequently stayed there on what are called holidays, on race days and cricket days.
60. We have heard a great deal about the different modes of sorting letters, about what are termed road sorting and alphabetical sorting; do you know anything of the road system of sorting letters? Yes. I have sorted by the road system myself, and I suggested the alphabetical system.
61. You are aware that there are great differences of opinion as to which is the better mode? I am.

Mr. A. Dillon. 62. Does it seem to you that the objections to the alphabetical system will outweigh those to the road system? No, it seems to me that if the alphabetical system were carried out in its integrity it is the better system of the two.

17 April, 1862.

63. Are you aware of the number of mails that have gone wrong in consequence of following the alphabetical system? No, I am not; but I am aware that the alphabetical system is not in operation now, and has not been for years.

64. What system is in operation? A kind of hybrid between the alphabetical and road systems.

65. Will you explain what you mean? The alphabetical system is this:—The letters are sorted into twenty-four different compartments, labelled alphabetically according to the first letter of the post town of the district to which they are addressed—Armidale into A, Bathurst into B, and so on. There are two classes, the one Direct, and the other Forward. The Direct are those with which Sydney exchanges mails; the correspondence for the Forward offices is sent through the Direct offices. Goulburn is a Direct office, but Binda is a Forward office, the correspondence for Binda being sent through the Goulburn office; according to the system now in use, a letter for Binda is sorted into G, G being the initial for Goulburn, the Direct office to which correspondence for Binda is sent. The alphabetical system has not been in operation for many years, in fact not since the late Mr. Stone's decease. It was changed in some way or other by his successor, and at the present time it is the road system virtually, but nominally the alphabetical.

66. It has been stated in evidence that several instances have occurred of mistakes in the last few years; for instance, we have heard that the Armidale mail has been sent to Bathurst, and the Bathurst mail to Brisbane; and we have been told the reason of this is that under the alphabetical system the clerk may make a mistake and put a letter into the B compartment which should go into the A? I apprehend the cause of the mis-sending of the mails is to be explained as follows:—Formerly, the letters after being cleared out of the compartments were placed upon a table having divisions, a bag being hung under each division; at present, the mails are made up on a kind of ledge in front of the compartments and the bags are hung behind, and in taking the letters from the compartments, turning round, and putting them into the bags, the bags hanging closely together, the letters may be put into the wrong bag. I do not think it has anything to do with the system of sorting.

67. Does it not appear to you that if the letters were preliminarily sorted into three districts, west, north, and south, and then subdivided, it would tend to obviate this evil? In the first place it is impossible to separate them into those divisions; formerly it might have been done, for then there were three roads quite separate, now they are so connected by the postal lines and post towns lying between them that it is often difficult to say whether a letter belongs to a post town in the northern or western district.

68. It would effectually prevent a mail for the northern road being sent to the southern? That could be done only by having distinct sets of compartments.

69. I mean that there should be distinct sets of compartments? It would prevent that, but I think it would increase the clerical labour.

70. I do not see how it would increase the clerical labour if you had sufficient accommodation? You must have clerks for each division. If you had the letters divided under three heads, you would require three clerks to do the preliminary sorting.

71. Might they not be the same that did the subsequent sorting? Yes, but they could not do it so rapidly. No doubt it would prevent the letters going to wrong districts. The difference between the alphabetical and the road system is simply this—under the road system, if a mistake is made it is more easily rectified; but for ten mistakes made under the road system there is not more than one under the alphabetical. There is another objection to the road system, which is this, none but an experienced clerk can sort according to it, whereas an inexperienced clerk can sort according to the alphabetical system. If a man has been only twenty-four hours in the office he will sort by the latter system as well though not as fast as any other.

72. Will you explain what is the course that would be pursued under the alphabetical system, whether one clerk would sort the letters, or two or three? One clerk. It depends upon the number of sets of compartments, if there were a very large number of letters the sets of compartments must be increased, at present one is sufficient. The clerk to be put to the preliminary sorting must be acquainted with every place in the Colony.

73. What do you do with letters that have no post town on them? They are thrown aside if the post town is not known to the sorter, and an experienced hand then writes the post town upon them. When this sorting is completed they are taken out of these compartments and put into compartments having the name of every Post Office arranged alphabetically, as Albury, Bathurst, Binda, and so on. They are then put upon the table for despatch; those for the direct offices are taken out first, and then those for the forward offices; they are then tied up and put into the bags. As my name has been prominently before the public, I would beg to hand in a statement of my official career in England and in this Colony. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.)

74. We see from this statement that you were occupied in the Money Order Office at Home? Yes.

75. Do you know anything of the Money Order System? I do.

76. Do you know why it has not been adopted in this Colony? I think, in the first place, there was a belief that it would not pay, and in the second, the present Post Office building is very inconvenient. I am not aware of any other reason.

77. Beyond these you know of no reason why it should not be introduced here? No; the second reason I do not think a very valid one. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the Colony to say whether it would or would not pay; but I see no obstacle to the mere working of the system.

78. Are you aware whether there is a good feeling prevailing among the clerks of the Post Office? There has been a feud in the department ever since I have been in it; in fact, for years and years past. Mr. A. Dillon.
17 April, 1862.
79. From what cause arising? There has always been a disagreement between the superior officers for years past.
80. Has this led to disagreements between the subordinate officers? To a certain extent. Some do not regard it; others take their tone from their superior officer, and of course side with him.
81. Are you aware whether the clerks of the Post Office are satisfied generally with their employment? In what respect—with regard to their salaries?
82. With regard to their salaries and promotion? They are not satisfied with regard to promotion—with the manner in which strangers are put over their heads in the office.
83. Are you aware whether they consider that promotion has been tolerably equitably distributed? I conclude you refer to my promotion?
84. I do not refer to any specific case? There have been two systems of promotion in operation since I have been in the office; one before Responsible Government, and one since. I know there were complaints when I was promoted over the heads of two gentlemen; they naturally complained. I know also that complaints have been made that strangers have been put in the office recently instead of promoting those already in it.
85. Is there a feeling that efficiency and seniority will command advancement? Certainly not. Efficiency combined with seniority, I presume you mean; the very reverse has been the case for years past.

APPENDIX A.

A BRIEF statement of Mr. Augustus Dillon's official career in England and New South Wales.

- 10th February, 1847.—Appointed by the Marquis of Clanricarde a clerk in the Chief Money Order Office, London.
- From 16th March to 8th September, 1850.—In charge of the Post Office at Rye, Sussex.
- From 9th September, 1850, to 19th June, 1851.—Resumed duties in London.
- From 20th June to 15th August, 1851.—Performing money order duties at the Shrewsbury Post Office.
- From 16th August to 17th October, 1851.—In charge of the Post Office at Market Drayton, Staffordshire.
- From 18th October, 1851, to 1st September, 1852.—Resumed duties in London.
- From 2nd September to 2nd October, 1852.—On leave of absence.
- 3rd October, 1852.—Resigned. (Copy of certificate, &c., herewith.)
- June, 1853.—Arrived in Sydney.
- 1 July, 1853.—Appointed by Major Christie, upon the introduction of Captain Dumaresq and production of certificate, an assistant clerk in the Account Branch of the General Post Office, at 5s. per diem.
- 8th August, 1853.—Salary increased to £190 per annum.
- 12th December, 1853.—Transferred to Postage Stamps and Registered Letter Office, at a salary of £191 5s. per annum.
- 9th February, 1854.—Transferred to Inland Letter Office.
- 1st April, 1854.—Salary increased to £209 10s.
- 1st June, 1855.—Salary increased to £225 per annum.
- 6th to 16th June, 1855.—Engaged in inspecting the twenty-two Suburban and Receiving Offices.
- Same year.—Visited Newcastle for the purpose of installing and instructing new Postmaster.
- 1st October, 1855.—Transferred to Secretary and Cashier's Branch.
- 1st April, 1856.—Salary raised to £240 per annum.
- 1st January, 1857.—Salary reduced to £230 per annum. (Consequent upon general reduction.)
- 1857.—Engaged in inquiring into charge brought against Postmaster at Longbottom; also visited Windsor, for purpose of inspecting office, and to inquire respecting alleged abstraction of letters.
- From 18th May to 18th June, 1858.—On a tour of postal inspection, viz.—from Newcastle to Tamworth, and thence to Wallgett, about 500 miles.
- 26th June, 1858.—Appointed senior and corresponding clerk of Secretary and Cashier's Branch, at a salary of £300 per annum.
- 1st March, 1862.—Appointed Postal Inspector, with a salary of £500 per annum (including travelling expenses), and a free seat upon every mail coach. The "travelling expenses" include the hire of horses and the purchase of forage for them, when the Inspector has to travel on lines on which no coaches run, which lines form about three-quarters of the total extent of postal lines.
- During the whole of Mr. Dillon's official career he has never been reported for misconduct or incapacity.

AUGUSTUS DILLON,
Postal Inspector.

Copy of certificate, &c., alluded to in the foregoing statement.

*Money Order Office,
11 December, 1852.*

Dear Sir,

I send you herewith, as requested, the certificate of character during the period you held an appointment in this Office, and I trust it will be of use to you, and that change of climate will re-establish your health.

Mr. A. Dillon.

Very faithfully your's,
T. R. JACKSON.

*Money Order Office,
London, 11 December, 1852.*

I hereby certify that Mr. Augustus Dillon, during a period of upwards of five and a half years, discharged his duties in the London Money Order Office with integrity, ability, and zeal, and that he quitted that service of his own free will.

(L.S.) T. R. JACKSON,
President.

Thomas

T. K. Abbott,
Esq.

17 April, 1862.

Thomas Kingsmill Abbott, Esq., again called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: There are two or three more questions I should like to ask you, chiefly with reference to the office of the Postal Inspector—do you consider the duties of that office best performed by the Postal Inspector residing in Sydney? Certainly not; it was never the intention that he should reside permanently in Sydney; it was always intended that he should proceed to the country when occasion required, and that whilst in Sydney he should perform the duties pertaining to his office.
2. It is stated that a large portion of his time in Sydney is occupied in the preparation of time tables; before the appointment of the Postal Inspector these tables were prepared in the office by the clerks; could they not still be prepared by them? They were prepared by me before his appointment, and one great reason for making the appointment was, that I had too much to do, and could not devote the attention necessary to this matter. In order to perform this duty efficiently a considerable knowledge of the country and of what the country requires is necessary.
3. Could not the time table be more efficiently drawn out if the party in Sydney whose duty it was to prepare them had correspondence with the travelling Inspector on each line? That is, if he could correspond with him upon the instant; but the Inspector might be at the extremity of the Colony when the information might be required.
4. Nevertheless is it not the duty of the Postal Inspector to visit each line and report upon it before any change is made? It has never yet been done.
5. Should it not be done? If it were, great delays would take place before any change could be made; for instance, a change might be required between Deniliquin and Balranald, and he might be at Liverpool Plains when information was required upon that point. Of course, unless he had previously visited that line, such information could not be given by him. Until he has visited all the postal lines of the Colony he cannot be expected to give information upon all.
6. Is it possible that he can inspect all the postal lines of the Colony if he is to pass six months in Sydney? It is not.
7. Does it not appear desirable that the duty of preparing the time table should be prepared by some one else? If it could be prepared by the Postal Inspector it should be prepared by him, as he ought to possess the most intimate knowledge of the country.
8. Could not that knowledge be conveyed by correspondence? Correspondence very seldom conveys accurate knowledge of the features of a country; it may give the distances between two points, but it does not give a correct idea of the speed at which mails might be conveyed.
9. What is the use of the creation of the office of Postal Inspector if he is to pass half his time in Sydney? It may be said that the office of Postal Inspector heretofore has not conferred the benefits it ought to have conferred; but that is not to be ascribed so much to the office itself as to the person holding it.
10. Do you think any changes ought to be made in a postal line without the line having been previously inspected by the Postal Inspector? I think it would be a great advantage if the line were to be inspected before any change were made; but it would not always be practicable.
11. Do you know what course is taken in the establishment of new Post Offices? Yes, they come before me every day.
12. What applications induce the department to establish new Post Offices? Applications either from private individuals or from persons collectively interested in a certain locality. Sometimes inquiry is made of the nearest postmaster, or Bench, or of some person of note on whom the Postmaster General can rely; and it depends upon the report he receives whether the office is approved. If the report is favourable, he refers the matter to the Treasurer for his decision.
13. I imagine the Treasurer acts upon the reports from the Post Office? Generally, but not always.
14. Considering that the department shews so large a deficiency in the revenue as compared with the expenditure every year, before recommending the establishment of any Post Office, do you take into consideration the probable cost of the postal line and the probable revenue to be derived from it? The establishment of a Post Office does not always entail the establishment of a postal line; when it involves the establishment of a postal line the cost is always considered in connection with it, and the probable expense brought under the special notice of the Treasurer.
15. Have there not been a great many postal lines established which would appear to be rather for private interests than for the public advantage? I think it not improbable there may have been a few of such cases.
16. Are there any cases you can name? I think it would be rather invidious to name any particular one, for my judgment might be erroneous.
17. Without naming any particular case, do you think there are any such cases? I think it quite possible there may be. In fact I think there are some postal lines established which might be dispensed with, where the advantages do not compensate for the cost. I may say with regard to this point that I have often thought, and I have named it to Major Christie, that it would not only be a saving of expense and an advantage to the public, but that it would remove all suspicion of jobbery, if a Board were established to consider periodically applications for postal lines. The highest cost of postal lines is for those from which the least revenue is derived, those in the interior, and those are established for the indirect purpose of opening up the country, and are claimed by the squatters as some return for the large assessments and rents they pay.
18. Are not these lines those upon which the number of newspapers greatly exceeds that of letters? Certainly.

19. So that the chief cost has been for the conveyance of newspapers? Yes. I have been speaking with two contractors of great experience, one the contractor for the main Western Road as far as Orange, and the other for the Southern Road as far as Yass, and they both agree that a third of the cost of the contracts would be saved if the weight of newspapers were diminished. T. K. Abbott,
Esq.
17 April, 1862.
20. Are you aware who suggested the introduction of the Money Order System into this office? I am inclined to think that the introduction of the Money Order System is alluded to in the Post Office Report of 1851, but my memory will not enable me to speak positively. The matter has been before the Postmaster General and the public many times within the last few years. It has been discussed in the daily papers, and the Postmaster General has been in communication with the London Post Office upon the subject, and also with the Post Office of Victoria.
21. Are you aware what is the average rate of speed at which the mail travels along the roads of the Colony? Taking the whole of the roads I do not think the speed averages four miles an hour.
22. Is that sufficient? Any speed is almost too great upon some of the roads in bad weather.
23. Might you not have two time tables—one for winter and one for summer? Winter is often the best for travelling; sometimes the rains prevail here more in summer than in winter.
24. May not the Postmaster General exercise a reasonable discretion if a mail arrives late in consequence of the state of the roads? Yes. The time table ranges up to five miles an hour in some places. Where the road is better the speed is greater.
25. Is the rate anywhere up to six miles? I think so.
26. Can you name any road? I think from Parramatta to Penrith the distance is beyond eighteen miles, and it is done in three hours. The distance from Penrith to Hartley is forty-eight miles—the mail leaves the former place at half-past six, and reaches the latter at four in the morning. I think the time table for the Bathurst Road averages about four miles an hour, which, considering the state of the roads, is as much as can be done, considering the impediments to be overcome.
27. In time of flood there is a reason for delay, but there is no reason why, at other times, the Bathurst mails could not be conveyed at five miles an hour? We never could get them conveyed at that rate.
28. Would not increased expenditure induce greater speed? Yes; and I think if the number of passengers to be conveyed by mail coaches were limited, it would induce greater speed. I think the number of passengers carried by the mail coaches is the most general cause of the irregularities that occur. Heretofore, the rule has been to allow contractors to convey passengers, and these have, in many cases, been conveyed beyond what the license has permitted.
29. If the mail were permitted to carry only two passengers, would there be any difficulty in increasing the speed to five miles and a half an hour? There would be no difficulty in increasing it to eight miles, but then you would have to pay in proportion. That system was suggested by either Mr. Merewether or the present Postmaster General, but it was found that the cost would be so enormous that it was not brought into operation.
30. Can you give any idea, supposing the mails were limited to the carrying of two passengers, and were obliged to travel at the rate of six miles an hour, as to what would be the expense? As much again as they are at present. I think the mail contractors rely more upon the revenue derived from passengers than upon that from the Post Office. It is a question that has been often considered; almost year after year the Postmaster General has expressed his desire that it should be introduced, but considering the enormous cost, he has not recommended it.
31. As the opinion you have just expressed that the cost would be about doubled must be rather vague, perhaps in a week's time, after consideration, you will be enabled to give a more definite answer to the Board upon this point? The only way by which I can get more accurate information will be by communicating with some of the principal contractors.
32. Perhaps you will do that? I will. (Vide Appendix.)
33. Is the Post Office open to any visitors who choose to go in and examine it? No.
34. Suppose any persons call upon any of the heads of departments, say either the Postmaster General, yourself, Mr. Hunt, or the Accountant, is it supposed that you have private rooms in the office where to receive them? No; in fact there is no waiting-room in the Post Office, which is a very great inconvenience.
35. You at one time held the office of Superintendent of the Letter Branch? I did, from the early part of 1854 to the latter part of 1855.
36. What do you consider to be the duties of that office? The direct supervision of the Letter Department and of everybody in it. When I had charge of the department I not only exercised a general supervision, but I did just as much work as any one there. I assisted in every department, in making up mails, sorting for letter carriers, sorting for despatch, and in fact in everything that was to be done. Any one who performs the duties of that office as they ought to be done, will have quite enough to do. When I was there I attended as early as any one, and did not leave till the last. I saw the whole of the duties performed from the commencement to the close.
37. There have been some complaints about the large number of newspapers that occasionally go astray—do the particulars ever come to your knowledge? Correspondence continually passes through my hands.
38. In one case it has been stated that 400 Empires were posted, and only 128 reached their destination? I do not think any complaint has reached me with reference to that instance.

- T. K. Abbott, Esq.
17 April, 1862.
39. They were going to Lambing Flat? I do not recollect that, but complaints of a like nature were so frequent some time ago that the Postmaster General was obliged, in self-defence, to ask for a list of subscribers to some of the papers published in Sydney, and by these lists the numbers posted were checked, and the errors upon the part of the publishers were, in some cases, proved to be so numerous, that at length they refused to supply their lists. It was shewn clearly that the errors were traceable, not to the Post Office, but to themselves.
40. It appears that in this case of the Empire the error did not occur only once but three several times; that not more than one-fourth of the papers posted reached their destination? I do not recollect the cases; they did not come before me.
41. No, they were only referred to the Superintendent for the Letter Branch? Then that is an irregularity on his part, for such complaints as this could not be inquired into by him. Reference ought to have been made to the Post Office at Lambing Flat, and that could be done only through the Postmaster General or myself.
42. Suppose the complaint had been referred to you, what steps would you have taken? I would have referred first to the Letter Branch, as to whether such newspapers had been posted, and if so what had become of them. If the answer was not satisfactory I would then have referred to the Post Office to which they were addressed, for further report.
43. How do you account for so great an error? I can only account for it in this way: that the outside paper was addressed to some other office, and that the whole parcel was sent accordingly. It is the duty of the sorters to open and check such parcels, and when they fail to do so, and that errors result, they are fined sixpence for every newspaper mis-sent.
44. By Mr. Smart: Had not the proprietors of the Empire the right to send any number of newspapers addressed to the same individual? No; I think they are limited to twenty ounces by one post.
45. So that an individual making up newspapers to the number of fifty, addressed to one person, has no right to send them free of charge? According to the regulations he has not.
46. By the Chairman: According to the statement made they arrived too late? I think in nine cases out of ten the complaints are rather attributable to the newspaper agents than to the Post Office.
47. By Mr. King: Is it in the power of a country postmaster to retain newspapers for his own use? Certainly not.
48. By Mr. Smart: If a packet of twelve or twenty newspapers were addressed to one individual, would it pass through the Post Office? If the newspapers are not above seven days old, provided they do not exceed the prescribed weight—twenty ounces.
49. What does a newspaper usually weigh? About two ounces and a-half.
50. By Mr. Watt: What would be done if the papers were above the prescribed weight? They would be thrown into a basket in the newspaper room and ultimately sold as waste paper.
51. Would the proprietors be told of it? We have no means of knowing the senders; if they were from a newspaper office the proprietors would be informed, but I think they are quite aware of the rule.
52. They do not seem to attend to it, for we have heard of their sending newspapers in packets of twelve or more? If you will refer to the rule you will see that the weight is limited to twenty ounces.
53. Is the rule carried out; we hear of 400 papers being addressed to one party? I am not aware. I know that by the English mails large packets are sent to the news agents here; we have no means of preventing that.
54. But in the present instance the newspapers were sent from Sydney to an agent at a distant place? I am ignorant of the fact.
55. We gather that it is done? It is contrary to the regulations if it is.
56. From the evidence given it would appear that the parties are not aware of the regulations? The fact is that the newspaper office is not under the control of a clerk. I would suggest that it should be under a clerk who should exercise a control over the sorters; at present the newspapers are sorted by sorters who are superintended by a sorter.
57. By Mr. King: What standing has he? He is not recognised as a clerk, but has a position somewhat superior to that of a sorter.
58. By the Chairman: We have heard the registration stamp objected to on the ground that it serves to draw special attention to the letter bearing it? It was for that purpose it was introduced. Before the stamp was used it was required that the word "Registered" should be written in red ink upon a registered letter.
59. Do you not think it would be better that the required fee should be paid, and ordinary stamps used. If any one wished to purloin the letters, does it not appear to you that this stamp would facilitate his taking those which were likely to be of the most value? The stamp would certainly render it more easy to discern which were the registered letters than if they bore no such stamp; but it has been the object of the office to make them easily distinguishable from other letters, to prevent mistakes on the part of the postmasters. In addition to the registration stamp it is required that registered letters shall be tied round with red tape, and be enveloped in coloured paper.
60. Registered letters no doubt must be posted separately; but I mean while they are in the office? When they leave the office it is just as necessary that they shall be easily distinguished in any office to which they may be sent. If there are three letters in a mail addressed to one person, how is the registered letter to be distinguished from the others unless it bears a stamp of some kind?
61. By Mr. Smart: By being included in a separate packet? Sometimes the packets get loose from the motion caused by the jolting of the mail.
- 62.

62. By the Chairman: If they were inclosed in a gummed envelope? The very fact of T. K. Abbott, Esq., their being so inclosed would attract attention.
63. But it would not attract attention before the letters were despatched? I cannot see the danger to be apprehended. So long as they are in the custody of the clerk in the Registry Room, as he has given his receipts for them he will, for his own protection, see to their safety, and the clerk who receives them from him will be equally careful for the same reason. I know where the postmaster has failed to mark the registry of a letter difficulty has arisen. We are supposed to mark every letter, and to get receipts for them. The experience of the London Post Office ought to be a pretty good one, and they always stamp registered letters in red ink, and mark them registered.
64. Are you not aware that people buying the stamp are under the impression that by affixing that stamp their letters are registered without their filling up the registration form? I do not recollect a single instance of any one making such a statement.
65. It seems to be a very natural supposition? I know that letters have been posted after the Post Office has closed with the registration stamp upon them under the supposition, or rather hoping that they would be registered.
66. Why not supposing—I can hardly imagine that you can distinguish in such a case between a supposition and a hope? I know the case to which you refer. So far as I can recollect, I do not remember it to have been stated. With regard to registered letters in the Sydney Post Office the transmission of these has been marvellously correct; very few have been mislaid or miscarried. I know none that have actually miscarried except from mail robberies.
67. You know, of course, from having had the supervision of the office, the difference between the alphabetical and road systems of sorting, of which we have heard so much? Yes.
68. From your experience, which do you consider the best? The alphabetical; the very fact of its being alphabetical conveys the idea of simplicity.
69. Is the alphabetical system followed in the office? It is now a sort of hybrid system.
70. Will you explain what you mean? For the Post Offices to which mails are made up direct the alphabetical system is carried out, but for Post Offices to which direct mails are not sent it is not applicable.
71. Have not many mistakes arisen from the alphabetical system of sorting within the last few years? Within the last few years mistakes have arisen, but not from the alphabetical system; I believe they are to be attributed to carelessness. When the system of alphabetical sorting was carried out by the late Mr. Stone, a mistake was the exception. During the time he had charge of the Inland Office it excited remark when a mistake was made, and since then mistakes have frequently occurred, especially since the system was altered. The present system was introduced when Mr. Hunt was in England, when he came back he disapproved of it, and he disapproves of it to the present moment. I think so far as Mr. Hunt is concerned it never had his good wishes.
72. It appears that almost all the clerks consider the road system better than the alphabetical? I think where the head of a department expresses a decided opinion upon a subject the clerks under him are generally influenced by that opinion. I know that formerly when a stranger came into the office as a clerk, he was for some months almost useless as a sorter.
73. Suppose some such plan as that adopted in London were established here, and the public were directed to write upon their letters Northern, Southern, or Western District, would not that prevent these errors? In some cases it might be done, in others it would not. They have been requested to address persons by their Christian names, but it has been of very little use, they do not do. We often have letters addressed without any Christian name to persons in Sydney without stating the street, and many of these letters are left in the Delivery Office unclaimed. It would be no harm, as a matter of course, to do so, but I do not think the benefit to be derived from it would be appreciable.

THURSDAY, 24 APRIL, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. WATT.

Mr. Nicholas Nelson called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: What is your occupation in the Post Office? I am at present attached Mr. N. Nelson, to the Account Branch.
2. You have stated that you are able to give the Board information respecting the working of the Post Office which we are not likely to obtain in any other way—will you explain what that information is? With reference to the general working of the branch with which I am connected. Perhaps I had better speak about my own duties first. Since the office has been established the examination of the country postmasters' accounts has been considered absolutely necessary to the well-doing of the postal arrangements; but lately the Accountant has suggested that that examination should be done away with. When a postmaster has no stamps on hand he takes money at his window, and debits himself with the money, on certain forms, which adds considerably to the amount of his account, and which can only be checked by examination. There are 35,000 of these forms examined every month, and great reference is made to them in tracing registered letters, and also missing mails. Formerly, when there were only about 70 Post Offices in the Colony, there were four

Mr. N. Nelson. four clerks attached to that one duty—Mr. Ussher, who lately died, Mr. Raymond, who has been I may say pensioned off, Mr. Gosling, also pensioned off—and now there is only myself, when there are 360 postmasters. You may think it strange how I can do the work that required four to do it when there were not one-fourth the number of offices, but I can explain it by saying that the forms have been made more simple now than they were before. The Accountant suggested, some little time ago, that the words of the postmasters were to be taken for the amount of their accounts as they thought proper to make them out, and the correspondence which ensued was very voluminous. I will not attempt to read it, but I have copied it all. Mr. Keble suggested that the offices should be divided, and that ten only of the number should be called major offices, and those alone to be examined, and for the minor offices the words of the postmasters were to be taken. Well, I asked the Accountant which offices he would term major offices, and the answer he gave was in effect that he had not decided; but when the January accounts were to be examined I received instructions that the accounts of ten offices only were to be checked, namely, Aberdeen, Albion Park, Bathurst, Bega, Berrima, Black Creek, Broughton's Creek, Boro, Braidwood, and Brownlow Hill. I thought it strange that an office like Boro, one of the most minor offices in the Colony, and an office like Bega, which is of very small importance, should form two out of the ten, when offices like Maitland, Goulburn, Yass, and Bathurst, were not examined at all. I was yet kept in the dark which offices were to be termed major offices; but I was no more enlightened when I got the memorandum relating to February, when ten more offices were selected—seven offices beginning with C, and three offices beginning with D—when I was informed that it was intended to take up the book which contained the list of Post Offices, and take ten offices indiscriminately as they might present themselves before the mind of him who held the book, and so the examination should be proceeded with; and considering there are three hundred and sixty Post Offices, and only ten examined each month, many of the offices would never be examined in the year at all, and some only once in three years. An office which was of no importance the other day—Forbes, on the Lachlan—suddenly became a great place, so much so that instead of a postmaster at a nominal salary, a clerk has been sent from the Sydney office to take charge of the Post Office there at £200 a year. It was, therefore, necessary to close the account of him who had been removed, and this was an office the account of which was taken at guess-work.

3. What do you mean by guess-work? From a few vouchers that might be lying at hand; the clerk who examined the account looked in the division, and from the few vouchers he found there he made out the account.

4. You mean to say the account was made out from the vouchers received, as well as it could be made out according to those vouchers? He looked into the division —

5. Where the vouchers for this office ought to be? Yes, and he took the vouchers he found there, and from those few he made out the account.

6. That is what you call guess-work? Yes, for this reason, that he should have known whether all the vouchers were there appertaining to that office, and that could only be ascertained by examination.

7. By application to you? By application to him who had the duty of examining these vouchers. For Black Ridge, now called Forbes, he entered in the ledger as the account of the postmaster for December, £1 2s. 3d., whereas had he examined it as formerly was the usage, the December account for Black Ridge, or Forbes, would have been £17 17s. 10d. more; and if in the January account the matter is taken at guess-work, as it was in this case, the Forbes account for January would be deficient £19 10s. 5d.

8. By Mr. Watt: The actual account? The actual account for January.

9. By Mr. King: What is the name of the clerk who makes out these guess-work accounts? This gentleman gets £300 a year. That is my reason for saying I believe the Commission has been kept completely in the dark regarding the Account Branch, for I can say safely that the Accountant, on the average, has not got half an hour's work to do a day. A requisition comes up for stamps, and the ledger-keeper is asked the question if the postmaster has paid 75 per cent. on the former supply; if he says he has, the stamps are issued, and Mr. Reeve, having issued the stamps, sends that requisition from up-stairs, and Mr. Keble, the Accountant, enters it in his day-book, from which it is entered in the ledger, and that is all that has to be done.

10. By the Chairman: That is the whole of the Accountant's work, is it? That is the whole of the stamp account. Then, regarding postages, as I am only asked for these matters every six months, the ledger-keeper enters them straight into his ledger at once, every six months.

11. How, then, do you account for the postmasters' accounts being written up to the end of every month, and that, when I examined them in March, they were balanced to the end of February? The postmasters' accounts?

12. Yes? The accounts have not been examined.

13. Whose fault is it if they are not examined? The party whose duty it is.

14. Whose duty is it? The ledger-keeper has taken upon himself to perform that duty.

15. Where does he get his information? From the vouchers; and the postmasters not having sent their accounts in —

16. How long do they keep them out? They should send them in at the end of each month, but they fail in doing so.

17. How long do they keep them out? Some of them might keep them for four or five months.

18. Is that allowed at the Post Office? They are continually being applied to, and still they keep delaying.

19. Before you go any further, as you are very liberal in your remarks about the Account Branch, Branch, I should like to ask what you know of the working of the Account Branch? I Mr. N. Nelson. know simply this, that I see the ledger-keeper making an entry of the stamps issued when there are any issued in the day; I see him also putting to credit, from the cash-book, the sums received and entered by the Cashier; and in the afternoon, the greater part of the time, he is asleep.

20. By Mr. King: Do you mean the Accountant? No; a young man brought in at £300 a year to keep this ledger.

21. What is his name? Mr. Nightingale.

22. By the Chairman: By your account it would appear that no one in the Accountant's Office, except yourself, has any work? No, I beg your pardon.

23. The Accountant himself, you say, has not more than half an hour's work a day; the ledger-keeper is asleep half his time; but you yourself have done the work that used to occupy four clerks? That is the case.

24. That is in effect saying, that the only one in the Accountant's Office that does any work is yourself—is that clearly what you mean? I mean to say, I do what four did before.

25. Do I understand you to mean that the only person in the Accountant's Branch who does a day's work is yourself? I believe the duty assigned to me to do one cannot do.

26. I cannot get a direct answer. You have told me the Accountant does no more than half an hour's work a day? That is what I do say.

27. And the ledger-keeper is asleep half his time? Yes.

28. And you do the work that used to be done by four clerks. Do I understand you to mean that the only person that does a proper day's work in the Accountant's Branch is yourself? I believe so. You will allow me to say a good deal of this work should be given to a very humble junior to do—the sorting of these letter bills, which occupies my time, and is entirely lost, when I could be more usefully employed. They come from the country in this form (producing certain forms), and the arranging of them, and putting them in divisions, occupies nearly a fortnight in the month.

29. What is the work you have in the other fortnight? The examining of these accounts, and putting them in form.

30. Will you explain what you mean by examining them? As in the case of Wollongong, for instance, they come in this shape, and are sorted and put in divisions. I must ascertain what offices Wollongong exchanges mails with, which I know from a book which I keep.

31. I want to know the nature of the examination? To see that the accounts on the face of these vouchers correspond with the account as drawn up by the postmaster.

32. You have said you should consider that a junior might do the work that you do for fourteen days in the month—do you not think he could do the examination of these accounts too? I do not think he could, except he had a knowledge of the interchanges which should be made, and which it takes long experience to be familiar with.

33. Suppose he has that knowledge? If he had that knowledge, or was able to acquire it, he could do it.

34. What is there that is difficult to do in this work? The arrangement of the mails in one series of offices being intertwined with the others.

35. You mean to say the chief difficulty is the arrangement of the papers? Yes, for this reason; that it occupies my time, and I cannot get on with work of importance.

36. Can you give any opinion as to the causes of the want of harmony in the Post Office? I believe that the whole want of harmony arises from several causes. I believe if Major Christie acted on his own judgment he would be right nine times out of ten. I speak of him with great respect; but he takes the opinions of his officers, who mislead him. For instance, the simplest movement in the office, he has the Accountant, the Secretary, and Mr. Dillon, meeting to arrange a reply or a report, and when it is given it is the concoction of the three. Parties in the office who scarcely have been warm in their seats have suddenly risen to importance, both as regards salary and position, which they never anticipated. One clerk in the office suddenly rises to £300 a year; I believe he was only three years in office before he attained this salary; and I was, I suppose, seventeen years in office before I rose to that amount.

37. Do you think the officers generally are not satisfied with the way in which promotion takes place? Very much dissatisfied.

38. Does the want of harmony that exists in any way prejudice the public interest? I believe it does, because the minds of many are occupied with internal grievances instead of being directed to their duties.—I will mention one matter. Some years ago a Commission, consisting of Mr. James and Mr. Smith, came out from the London Post Office, and I was appointed their Secretary. I thought I would shew you the letters the Commission addressed to the Postmaster General, arriving in Sydney as they were strangers seeking information about the Sydney Post Office, and the way in which they set about it. I would like to have shewn these letters to you, for I entered them in a book as I wrote them for the Commission.

39. How will that assist us in our inquiry? I thought you might have liked to see the information they sought, which would perhaps be interesting to you. Mr. James is now Postmaster at Glasgow, and the other holds an equally important position in Ireland. I was going to mention one matter regarding the discontent in the office. As a servant of the department, I think I might be permitted at any time to see documents or vouchers in the office, but I cannot do so without making an application to the Accountant, who sends it to the Secretary. For instance, I sent a message to the Secretary to ask him to let me see a minute of the Colonial Treasurer on a letter I had addressed to him, and I was informed by the Secretary that I must apply through the Accountant. In former years I might have gone and seen it without any trouble. I sent the Accountant the following memo. :—

“ The

Mr. N. Nelson. "The Accountant will oblige by granting the necessary authority for the Secretary
 "to permit me to see the Treasurer's minute on a letter I addressed to the Minister, 24 April, 1862. "referred to the Postmaster General for report.—NICHOLAS NELSON. 24/2/62."

Upon that the following minutes were made:—

"For the Secretary and Cashier.—JOHN KEBBLE, Accountant. 24/2/62."

"Mr. Kebble,—I think the letter in question is with you for report.—T. K. ABBOTT, Secretary. 24/2/62."

"Yes. Herewith.—JOHN KEBBLE, Accountant. 24/2/62."

"For Mr. Nelson's perusal.—JOHN KEBBLE, Accountant. 24/2/62."

"Read. Returned to Accountant.—NICH. NELSON. 24/2/62."

"For the Secretary and Cashier.—JOHN KEBBLE, Accountant. 24/2/62."

Then again I begged permission to be allowed to see the Accountant's second report, and there was a long correspondence on that. I also wanted to see the letter-book for 1845, with the letters addressed from the office to the Colonial Secretary, and the Secretary and Cashier wrote—"If Mr. Nelson will state the information he requires"—

40. What is the object of all this—what has it to do with our inquiry? You were asking me the reason of the grievances in the office, and I was shewing you the way in which I was served in a simple matter of reference to papers.

41. You say you have only ten of these postmasters' accounts to do each month, instead of 360? Only ten to be examined.

42. Is it the examination of these ten that takes up the remainder of your time when you are not arranging the other papers—the other fourteen days? The examination of the ten, which they propose to come into operation, would only take me a very short time indeed.

43. For January and February you examined only ten? There were only ten to be examined for January and February this year; only ten for each month.

44. By Mr. Watt: Have they been examined yet? Mr. Nightingale is preparing the vouchers for the present year.

45. Then you have nothing to do? I have had the accounts of Mr. Miller, whose duties have been transferred to me.

46. By the Chairman: Part of your work during the past year was the examination or arrangement of these accounts? Yes.

47. What is about the total amount of cash you have had to check—did it amount to £300 a year? Some of the postmasters would make out that they owed two-pence, where I made out that they owed 7s. by checking their accounts with the vouchers.

48. I want to know the total amount that these accounts came to in the year? £400 or £500; I am not aware exactly.

49. Have you anything further to state to the Board, bearing upon their public inquiry? I have much to say, but will only occupy your time by mentioning, respecting the discontent in the office, the nepotism existing in it. The Accountant first brings in Mr. Charles Nightingale, then his brother Mr. Alfred Nightingale, then Mr. Rogers who lives with him. Then afterwards when the gentleman lodging with him goes, the Accountant's nephew comes in, Mr. Coleman.

50. Who makes these appointments? They are made upon the Accountant's recommendation.

51. Who makes the appointments? The Accountant recommends the appointments in his branch to the Postmaster General, who recommends to the Treasurer.

52. Has every recommendation of the Postmaster General to the Treasurer been followed? In these cases they have been all, I believe.

53. Has every recommendation of the Postmaster General been followed? I am not aware, only regarding the Account Branch.

54. Do you not think that in an office like the Post Office it would be far better that the clerks should be advanced according to their efficiency rather than according to their seniority, and do you not think the Post Office would be far better worked by very efficient clerks who had, perhaps, been there only one year, than by clerks not equally efficient who had been there fifteen years? Decidedly; but I would say one thing, that I do not believe there is any duty in the Post Office requiring any very superior ability. I am sure if I were to enter the counting-house of a merchant in Sydney I would feel very much taken aback. The duties of the Post Office are, comparatively speaking, trifling to what invoices and tare and tret would be. You asked me also another thing, regarding the matter of grievances in the office. Greater indulgence is shewn to one clerk more than to another. We have heard a great deal of the Postmaster General's Reports, which Major Christie was well able to prepare himself, but it was given to Mr. Dillon to do, and I believe he was a fortnight away from the office, and a week, by the Postmaster General's minute, exempt from any duty excepting the preparing of that report, and then the material of it was given in information from the several branches. I believe a junior reporter on the Herald or Empire would have done it in a day—and I know something of literary as well as letterary labour. I am sorry, for Major Christie's sake, that he did not prepare it himself, which he was well able to have done. I would suggest one matter, too, regarding the expenses, if you will allow me. There are a great number of Post Offices that might easily be abolished. I believe many of them are established through the influence of persons in the interior, who, having property to sell, wish to enhance the value of it by getting a Post Office established, so that when sold by the auctioneer he can state that it is an "allotment adjoining the Post Office," or "within five minutes walk of the Post Office." Then there are such places as Fort Bourke, which exchanges with Walgett and Mount Murchison, and other offices in the remote interior, that I might allude to; it costs large sums to convey the mails to these places, and they might easily be abolished. Perhaps only two or three residents reside at the scene of the locality, and each letter so conveyed might cost from £1 to £5. Then again a large office on the Western Road, like Bathurst, might be made an office of more importance, to which the tributary offices might be subservient, and to which reports might be made without referring to the head office; Mr. N. Nelson. and in the same way Gundagai, Albury, Gundaroo, Collector, and those offices about Yass, might be subservient to it. Newcastle, Hexham, Raymond Terrace, and others might be subservient to Maitland. And so with others in other parts. The postmaster of each important office might have the surveillance of the offices in the immediate vicinity, and might take within his range perhaps twenty offices. There is one more matter. There are many Post Offices congregated within a short distance. For instance, on the Parramatta Road, there are Ashfield, Burwood, Longbottom, Five Dock—four offices all within a pleasant walk of one another, and not so very far off a fifth, Ryde, across the river, and even a sixth, Hunter's Hill. These offices have been established through interest; and a great many of them could be done away with and make an immense reduction in the expenses. Then again I have spoken about the indulgence shewn to some clerks in the department. I can mention one clerk, the ledger-keeper, who in the years 1860 and 1861 has been longer away from office by leave than I have been after nearly twenty-three years' service. Again there is the attendance book kept in the Accountant's Office. Several of the clerks do not go in till about twenty minutes to ten. The attendance book is not attended to.

55. Do I understand you to mean that the clerks make false entries? I am sure of it. I have seen Mr. Nightingale put down dates as if he had been there when he had not been there at all, and that I can certify. There are two matters I can prove by a gentleman within a few yards of this room, Mr. Miller, in the Premier's department. He sat in the room with me for a long time, and will corroborate what I say regarding the ledger-keeper being asleep in the afternoon; and about the entries made in the attendance book when a clerk has not been there, which book the Accountant does not check for months. For instance, no entry has been made since Thursday last excepting by myself. It is very painful to me to give evidence in this way, but I am convinced the Board is kept as much in the dark as possible. I believe in the vote account book two hours would fill up all that has been done in it last year. The revenue account, on the 13th January last, he first took it over to himself. The expenditure book—no cheques entered between the 24th February and the 4th March last; and first cheque entered on 13th January. There surely cannot be much to do in that book. And in the revenue account book I saw Mr. Miller entering two quarters' arrears in it lately. I know this—that since the Board of Inquiry has sat a number of small books have been prepared by the Accountant from printed estimates, and their newness will shew that they are merely the work of the other day, and the half-yearly stamp accounts to the postmasters were not sent till the 19th February last. The contractors' accounts every quarter, and the postmasters' accounts every month form the principal work of the branch. There are merely the two ledgers, debiting the postmasters with stamps and postages, and the contractors with the amounts paid to them. And I would mention one thing—the ledger-keeper—I saw him on the commencement of January entering in the ledger from the Accountant's only book, the day-book, the issues of stamps from October—I am willing to swear it—I challenged him with it. He was entering from the day-book, in last January, the issues of stamps for October. And one word I will say—that in the first week of this month, the ledger-keeper, Mr. Nightingale, first opened an account with the contractors whose tenders had been accepted in October. He took it from the Treasurer's printed matter—the accepted tenders in the Gazette, and opened the ledger.

56. Are you aware whether it was necessary to enter them before? I imagine, when the tenders were accepted in October, when the tenders received the sanction of the Board, the contractors were informed that an account would be opened with them.

57. Was any money paid before the beginning of April? No, that was the reason why he was obliged to enter them then—because the quarter's accounts had to be paid.

58. Is there any necessity to open a ledger heading before you have to pay money or receive money under it? I thought that immediately a contract was accepted an entry would be made.

59. By Mr. King: What entry would you make? Presuming that the contract was for £500 a year, an account would be opened with the contractor for that sum.

60. By Mr. Watt: Before any of it is earned? The account would be opened with the party at once I should think, because the accounts already have gone out. I thought immediately on the acceptance of a contract an account would be opened in the ledger.

61. By Mr. King: Surely not till the contractor has earned some money or some payment has been made? The correspondence is carried on with him.

62. You would not enter correspondence in the ledger? No, it is only to shew he is in treaty with the office, and fines are exacted from the moment his contract begins to run, which, from time to time, should be debited to him in the ledger.

Robert Allen Hunt, Esq., called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: There are two or three points on which we wish to have a little more information. No delivery is allowed by the Government on Sundays—do any of the Post Office clerks attend at the office on Sundays? On the arrival of an English mail we all in the Letter Branch attend.

2. Whether any letters go out or not? Whether any letters go out or not. It is only on the arrival of the English mail.

3. Would any extra work be entailed on the clerks in the Post Office, supposing the holders of boxes, after the arrival of an English mail on Sundays, were allowed to send for their letters? I should think not—certainly not.

4. You have stated in your previous examination that the existence of private boxes is a very great convenience to the Post Office? Very great.

5.

R. A. Hunt,
Esq.

24 April, 1862.

- R. A. Hunt, Esq.
24 April, 1862.
5. And for this convenience the holders of boxes pay £1 ls. per annum? Yes, and next year they will have to pay £2 2s.
 6. What special advantages do the holders of boxes derive from this payment? They get their letters immediately after the window is opened in the morning, instead of waiting for the letter carriers to go round.
 7. Beyond getting their letters, on an average, say half an hour sooner, is there any other advantage? That is the only advantage.
 8. If there were no private letter boxes, what would be the extra expense to the Government for additional letter carriers? I do not think there would be any additional expense; a letter carrier can deliver 500 letters almost as soon as he can 100.
 9. On the arrival of an English mail the correspondence delivered through these 200 boxes is very large? No doubt, but it would not make much difference to the letter carriers, because it would be distributed among the different beats.
 10. Would the letter carriers on the different beats be able to take out this additional correspondence? Yes.
 11. What is the reason for increasing the fee for private boxes to £2 2s? Merely to make it uniform with Melbourne.
 12. In Melbourne it is £5 5s., is it not? Not now, they have reduced it.
 13. What do they charge now? £2 2s. I think.
 14. Do they not at Melbourne give special privileges to the holders of boxes—can they not always send for their letters as soon as the mail is sorted, and get them every morning by six o'clock? Yes.
 15. Why are not the same advantages given here? They will be given here as soon as we get the rule revoked which says that there shall be no additional advantage to the parties.
 16. Is it reasonable to expect the double fee, without additional advantages? I think the rule will be revoked, but I do not know if the delivery will take place as early as six o'clock in the morning. A regulation has been made that the Marseilles letters should be first sorted and delivered; and I think if I succeed in what I have recommended, that is, in having four deliveries a day, there will be one at eight o'clock in the morning.
 17. The fact is, at present, that the holders of private boxes pay for a privilege which saves the Post Office trouble? Yes.
 18. When a letter is not sufficiently stamped at present, does it go forward or is it returned to the writer? That depends on where it is addressed to.
 19. A local letter, for instance? It goes forward, charged with double the amount of deficiency.
 20. Suppose such a letter is addressed to Queensland or Melbourne, does it go forward? No, it is sent back to the writer.
 21. Do you not think it would be an advantage to send such letters on, charged with double postage? Then we should lose the revenue.
 22. Why? We should put it in the pockets of the Melbourne and Queensland people.
 23. Might there not be a reasonable interchange of courtesies between the respective Post Offices. If you get a letter by a ship's mail, addressed to Queensland, you send it on? Yes.
 24. Would it not be better that there should be some reciprocity, so that all deficiently stamped letters should be sent on, and charged double postage? No doubt; I think that ought to be the case with all the Colonies. The rules and laws of the Post Office in all the Colonies should be the same.
 25. It has been suggested to us that there is some disadvantage attached to the registry stamp, inasmuch as it points out the registered letter particularly—Does it do so more than if you wrote on it the word "Registered"? Not any more.
 26. If a letter is registered it must be noted somehow? Yes, it is stamped with the word "Registered" in large letters, in the office.
 27. It is said that some persons are under the impression that by merely putting on a registry stamp, and dropping the letter in the box, it is registered—do you think such a thing often happens? Very seldom.
 28. Would your clerks inform you if they saw such a thing? Once or twice I have seen it done. Sometimes people use them for postage stamps, but that is not allowed, as the registry stamps do not indicate any amount of postage, and the Act says the stamp must indicate the amount.
 29. We have had some complaints from the Empire Office, about the non-delivery of newspapers—are you aware where the fault lies? It is difficult to tell. It is principally on the coast lines; Broulee, for instance, and down to the southward.
 30. Have any complaints been made at the Post Office on the subject? Yes; Mr. Hanson has called upon me several times, and I have endeavoured to point out that sometimes the fault rests with themselves, the newspapers not being posted in time.
 31. They have always been sent from your office? Yes.
 32. How do you account for the irregularity? There are two or three offices where the letters and newspapers are re-sorted and forwarded to their destination; but we have now commenced making up direct mails to some of the places about which complaints are most frequent, in order to prevent their being sorted at intermediate offices. There have been several complaints this last month from between Broulee and Moruya, and that direction.
 33. By Mr. King: If newspapers are posted too late one day, they go by the next mail? Yes. The proprietors of newspapers are afforded great facilities.
 34. By Mr. Watt: Mr. Hanson told us that in one case he posted 400 papers for Lambing Flat, and only about 100 were received in time? Yes, he stated that himself.
 35. Was any inquiry made? I told him to write officially, with a view to inquiry.
 36. Did he do so? I do not know; I never saw any letter on the subject.

37. Did you set on foot any inquiry? I could not without he wrote about it. He complained of his papers being detained; he said the Sydney Mail went on, and his did not go. R. A. Hunt, Esq.
38. What is the limit to the size of the packets sent through the Post Office? I think it is 20 ounces in weight, for one person, under one envelope, or one string. 24 April, 1862.
39. How many papers? Ten or twelve; but if they put twenty papers together we do not mind it.
40. You do not observe the rule strictly? No; in fact, we afford them very great facilities—the Herald, and Empire, and Bell's Life.
41. By the Chairman: Mr. Hanson also mentioned a case about the non-delivery of three letters addressed to Appin by Mrs. Bennett—can you explain that? The word "Appin" was written very low down. I forget the exact address; but the clerk whose fault it was sorted them away into one of the divisions, where they remained until they were making out the list of unclaimed letters, when he observed the word "Appin." The word "Appin" looked more like "Office," from the way in which it was written; reading it in those dark places it looked like "Office." That was the excuse he made.
42. You have stated in your previous examination that you saw no objection to a small postage charge on newspapers. Supposing you had four deliveries a day—one beginning as early as eight o'clock—under the present Act, could newspaper proprietors in Sydney avail themselves of the Post Office for their morning deliveries? Under the present Act they could do it; in fact, we are now delivering Bell's Life, on Saturday mornings, in different localities in the suburbs.
43. In accordance with your request, several questions have been put to different witnesses, touching any information they may have given to newspapers, or to any party not in the Post Office. Now we should like to ask you, if you have ever given any information to any party not in the Post Office? Not for publication in the newspapers.
44. Have you ever given any information to any party who has made use of such information for publication? Certainly not.
45. Nor to any party likely so to make use of it? I should think not. It was never intended by me for publication—that I most emphatically deny.
46. I am not telling you that any one has said so? It has been said outside; of course, I do not know whether they have said it here.
47. You are aware that Mr. Richard Thompson has written sundry articles in the newspapers? I am; at least I understand he has. I have heard so.
48. Has Mr. Thompson never received any information from you, directly or indirectly? Certainly not for that purpose. Mr. Thompson has been employed by me in a totally different capacity.
49. Mr. Thompson has stated here that he has, in some measure, the entrée of your rooms at the Post Office? He has, and so has any person that chooses to come in. He comes into my rooms frequently. He has been employed, in fact, in a private capacity by me for the last two years. The remark was made by Major Christie himself, and I explained to him what Mr. Thompson came to me for. These will shew you. (The witness handed some written papers to the Members of the Board.)
50. Did you suggest the employment of sorting clerks on board the mail steamers? Yes.
51. The suggestion was originally made by you? In England—yes. When I went home from this country to England, I changed ship at Rio, and went into the mail steamer, and it was there it struck me that the Admiralty Agent, or Post Office clerks, could be employed sorting. When I went to London, I wrote to the Post Office authorities there on the subject, and the answer I received is printed in my evidence before the Retrenchment Committee, page 112.
52. Will you give the Board an idea of the exact nature of your duties during the whole time you are in the office, all day? I am there at eight o'clock in the morning; I walk round all the offices to see that the clerks are there and on duty; examine all the letter carriers to see that they are sober, clean, and fit for duty; check the attendance books of the clerks and letter carriers. After the letter carriers are despatched I have the applications and letters to attend to, which are sent down from the Secretary's Office and returned from the different branches. Numerous applications are made verbally respecting the non-delivery of letters, and I have to attend to them, in order to do which I have to go to the different offices—the Dead Letter Office, for instance—and search. Then I return to my office till one o'clock, when I go to dinner; I return at two, and remain till four, five, or six, according as the business of the office requires my attendance. At one o'clock I see that the letter carriers are despatched, and again at four. I also take my rounds again, and there are various other duties I have to see to.
53. Are the attendance books regularly kept? Yes, I initial them every morning. I go round during the day, at intervals, to the newspaper rooms, and see that the men are sorting; and on London mail days I am generally there fourteen or fifteen hours, seeing to the opening of the boxes and the delivery of the mail; in fact, I do many things I cannot call to mind now. I go to Moore's Wharf, on the departure of the English mail, and receive letters there. Last mail day I received upwards of 180, and £20 in postage and late fees for the Government. That I do myself with the assistance of a stamper.
54. In reference to newspapers—I suppose no book whatever, of any nature or kind, will go free of postage through the office? No.
55. Beyond the information which you have given us, can you make any further suggestions to increase the efficiency of the office, supposing you had a new building, which if I recollect aright, you think of importance? I think in that case we could do with less hands. If there were fewer apertures we could do with less hands; there are, I think, ten apertures at which I am obliged to keep clerks. You saw the state of the delivery room yourself. If I had

R. A. Hunt, Esq. been here I never would have allowed them to make such a place, but it was done when I was in England at the time.

24 April, 1862. 56. Would you think it advisable that every Post Office in the Colony should be visited annually? I think so, and oftener if practicable. I think those offices where there are complaints should be visited often.

57. It is stated that there have been 80 changes made in postal lines since the 1st of January, 1862—do you think it advisable that such changes should be made without the Postal Inspector having visited the locality? I think not.

58. Would you suggest the appointment of more Inspectors than one? I think one is quite sufficient for the present. At all events one might do the Southern and Western Roads, if there were another for the Northern Road.

59. You consider it advisable that each Post Office should be visited once a year? Yes, at least.

60. And in the same way the working of the contracts should be inspected? Yes, that requires inspection more than the Post Offices.

61. Do you think it necessary that the Postal Inspector should be in Sydney to prepare time tables? I do not; I do not think it is his duty.

62. Could not an ordinary clerk prepare time tables as well as the Inspector? Of course, with proper instructions and information.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

| MR. KING, | | MR. SMART, |
| MR. KNOX, | | MR. WATT. |

Thomas Dangar, Esq., M.P., called in and examined:—

T. Dangar, Esq., M.P. 1. By the Chairman: You have informed the Board that it is in your power to give them some information respecting the working of the Country Post Offices? Yes.

28 April, 1862. 2. Will you be good enough to furnish us with such information? In my place in the Assembly I applied for a great number of Post Office returns, but at the close of the Session they had not been laid upon the Table; I have since been informed by Major Christie and by Mr. Weekes that they are now ready, and will be laid upon the Table of the House when Parliament meets. These returns, if they were laid before the Board, would furnish them with a great deal of useful information. I beg to hand in a copy of the motion made by me on the subject. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix.)

3. The largest portion of that information is already before us? I have had a great number of letters from various parties, complaining of the smallness of the salaries of postmasters in the interior, and I think they are not sufficiently equalized.

4. Do you think the salaries of the postmasters in the interior are generally too small? Yes.

5. By Mr. Knox: What is the smallest salary? £12 a year.

6. By the Chairman: Are not the salaries in some measure equalized by the discounts received on the sale of stamps? There is a vast difference there also; they are not uniform; in some towns there are more sold than in others. I complain generally of the system adopted in the interior, of publicans and storekeepers being made postmasters; gentlemen who are merchants here suffer from irregularities in the Post Office, but not in the same ratio as we in the country. I disapprove of publicans being made postmasters, as the letters are often sorted and kept in the tap instead of in divisions, and are liable to be lost. As to the appointment of a Post Office Inspector, I think that is a fallacy altogether, for he goes only to a few towns selected on the main lines, and where there is any real cause of complaint, at the remote and by-road Post Offices, he does not inspect. I think the office ought to be abolished.

7. Would it be a fallacy if he visited every Post Office in the Colony once in the course of a year? Yes, because I believe the moment his back was turned the postmasters would revert to their old practices—everything would appear to be properly managed while he was present, and the postmasters would promise to conduct their offices according to regulations. Having been a postmaster myself for fifteen years, I can judge how Post Offices are conducted. Great complaints are made of newspapers not reaching their proper destination, but that is easily accounted for: A shepherd or servant goes to a store which is also a Post Office, and lays out £5 or more; he says to the storekeeper, "Can you give us a few old newspapers?" "Oh! certainly, take a few out of that box, they won't be missed"; and then complaints are published in the press that the newspapers do not reach the persons to whom they are addressed or sent. What I have just stated has occurred in my presence. In many instances newspapers are lost or purloined, or lost by the parties who are sent for them, and are forwarded to distant stations by any person travelling past the residences of those thinly populated districts.

8. How could you remedy such a state of things? My impression is, and I mean to argue in favour of this when the matter comes before the Assembly, that the postmaster should be appointed from head quarters to all up country districts. Postal communication is the greatest luxury in the interior, and the people there are more anxious to get their letters and newspapers than they are in Sydney, often read them on the Sabbath instead of going to church, as in many places there is none for hundreds of miles.

9. Supposing new postmasters were appointed, would that prevent newspapers being made away with? I believe the Postmaster General acts illegally by making publicans postmasters.
10. I think you are in error; I believe the appointments are made by the Minister for Finance? I believe they are recommended by the Postmaster General, or Magistrates of the district. I have been speaking with Mr. Weekes, and he says when there is a vacancy in these small hamlets—for you cannot call them townships—there are generally three, four, or five applicants for the office, and I can easily understand that, because I know there is a feeling in the country that if an innkeeper or storekeeper has a Post Office attached to his place of business it adds to his trade or income, and brings customers. When I gave up the Post Office, after having had it for fifteen years, half a dozen persons were quarrelling to be my successor. Recently the postmaster in Scone, who succeeded me, resigned, and there is the same quarrelling about it again. I have suggested to Major Christie and to Mr. Weekes that it would be better to appoint some person from the office here who understands the routine, and who would be likely to manage it better than a storekeeper could do.
11. By Mr. Knox: What is the emolument of the postmaster at Scone? £40 a year; he is a storekeeper, and is going to have charge of the telegraph office there. There is a person named Denshire who has been postmaster at Muswellbrook for eleven years, and he has been only one or two days away from the office during that time; he has no time even to attend church, as the mails come in at the time when service is being performed; and he receives but £65 a year and the per-centage on the sale of stamps. He has a great number of mails to attend to both by day and by night. I have interceded with Mr. Weekes for him, and both Mr. Cowper and Mr. Robertson have promised to recommend the increase of his salary to £100 a year.
12. By the Chairman: I understand you to recommend that postmasters should be appointed all over the country, who should have nothing to do but to attend to the Post Office? Yes; and that is the general wish of the Magistrates in the interior.
13. Have you any idea what salaries you would have to pay these men? From £100 to £120 a year, and the revenue or per-centage from the sale of stamps should go to the Government.
14. Do you think any clerks who understood the routine of the office in Sydney would be willing to go into the country upon such a salary? I think they would; they could live a great deal cheaper in the interior; they would have no taxes to pay, and nothing to pay for wood or water; I think also that the Government should pay their house-rent. Mr. Luscombe, the postmaster of Molong, a very old resident in the Colony, sent me this note (producing a paper) to shew what duties he has to perform, and his salary is only £35 a year, and commission on sale of stamps.
15. Then do you think that salaries should be given to these different persons ratably according to the amount of correspondence that passes through their hands? I think according to the number of mails they have to make up.
16. Irrespectively of the number of letters? Yes; I think the system now adopted as regards the counting of letters is fallacious altogether. They are now counted only once a month; heretofore, letters as well as newspapers were counted as they were put into the bag; at present they are only counted on the fifteenth of each month, and the average taken. When I was postmaster, from the letters all passing through my hands and being counted by me, I could almost tell, even without registration, whether a letter had gone through my office; now they are thrown into the bag and not counted at all. I expect there will be great complaints made from the country postmasters and correspondents about the system which Major Christie is going to bring into operation next month or very shortly, of sending letters from Sydney to be re-sorted at the principal post towns, instead of being made up direct from Sydney; thus letters will be sent to Maitland to be re-sorted for the Williams, Hinton, Paterson, the Upper Hunter, and so on. No doubt the object is to lessen the number of clerks in Sydney, but I think it will be a great loss to correspondents in the interior, because letters will go astray, and more difficulty in tracing lost letters.
17. If postmasters were paid ratably have you any idea what the salary of the postmaster at Maitland would be likely to be? If the plan proposed in Major Christie's circular is adopted no doubt the postmistress at Maitland will apply for extra salary, as she will have to re-sort so many additional mails. I think she used to get £120 or £150, but with her additional duties I think £200 would be a very fair salary, with house-rent free.
18. You think £200 a year would be a very fair salary? Yes, and I think many of the others would be perfectly satisfied with £100 a year; at present the postmaster at Cassilis has £25, Molong, £35, Scone, £40, Merriwa, £20, and Aberdeen, I think, £12 a year, and commission on stamps. It is to be remembered that the postmasters are supposed to be in their offices from nine o'clock till six every day, and that in consequence of the alteration made within the last year or eighteen months, the northern mail now travels by night, so that the postmasters have now in many cases to get up at all hours of the night to receive and despatch mails.
19. Do you think the Assembly would be likely to sanction the appropriation of so large a sum as would be necessary to pay the salaries you propose to the postmasters of all Post Offices through the Colony? I am afraid not, but yet the present arrangement I think is not equitable.
20. Do you think the system a good one of allowing a discount of ten per cent. to up country postmasters? No, my opinion is that it would be better to give the postmaster a fixed salary, the Government retaining the discount at present allowed on the sale of stamps. The Postmaster General has ample security, if he performs his duty, as he is required to take bonds from every country postmaster for the due performance of his duties. The postmaster is also sworn not to allow any one to enter on the portion of his premises devoted devoted to the Post Office but those who have taken the oath, but this is much abused in the country parts, as strangers often go into the office, and children are allowed to deliver letters and newspapers.

21. Can you point out any abuses in the conduct of the up-country Post Offices which require special attention? The chief complaint is as to the salaries. There have been complaints made about postmasters not being attentive to their duties, but so far as I have myself observed, I do not think there is much cause of complaint in my electorate, except as to not giving out the letters after the arrival of a mail in the evening. In some of the districts the mails come in at seven, eight, or ten o'clock in the evening, and the postmasters refuse to deliver them the same evening, because, they say, that according to the regulations, the Post Office is open for the delivery of letters only from nine till six. I think the postmaster should be instructed to deliver the mails the same evening, as he is at present obliged to get up to receive the mails, and the convenience would be very great.

22. Would not the postmasters generally consider that a hardship? No doubt they would, but it would be a great convenience to the public. I believe many of the postmasters would deliver the letters after the stipulated hours, but in these small hamlets there is sure to be a little quarrelling and jealousy, and therefore they abide by their letter of instructions or regulations.

23. Beyond the appointment of country postmasters from the central office, can you suggest any improvements in the postal arrangements of the interior? Very generally the Postmaster General appoints a storekeeper or publican, and this is objected to by the Magistrates, who are of opinion that the Post Offices should be detached from business premises. Persons who are in business become acquainted with the correspondence going through their office, by watching the superscriptions of the letters. I know that at Seone the postmaster was accused of prying into other people's business; he is now I believe going to have the telegraph office, though I believe a petition is about to be sent to Mr. Arnold to appoint some other person. I think that a married person should have both offices; if he were married, he could carry on the telegraph, and his wife the Post Office.

24. If he were not married? Then two persons would be required; but I think nine out of ten of the postmasters are married. I also think many of the cross mails in the Unsettled Districts could be abolished; they go long distances and carry only a few newspapers and letters, and there are often no Post Offices between the two points of starting and arrival. There is a great waste of the public money in this way to serve a half-dozen stations on the route. Sheep and cattle returns are sent by these cross mails; it saves messengers to go for the post.

25. Are you aware what proportion of newspapers and letters go into the interior? No, nor do I think the postmaster could tell, unless he took a particular day upon which a leading local paper was published, for the purpose of counting.

26. By Mr. Watt: With reference to the sale of stamps, you have recommended that the postmasters should not receive the discount? Yes, I think it would be better to give the postmasters fixed salaries, and to let the revenue from stamps go to the Government.

27. But you would still require the postmasters to sell stamps to the public? Yes; they all give security to the Postmaster General, and should be supplied with stamps from the office, and more regularly than at present.

28. If you were to withhold the discount from the postmaster, you would take away the inducement to him to supply the wants of the public? Nearly all the storekeepers in the interior would be almost inclined to give premiums to be allowed to keep the Post Office, as both publicans and storekeepers believe it brings customers to them.

29. That is hardly an answer to my question? The object, I apprehend, of giving this discount to the postmasters is to give facilities to the public for the purchase of stamps, and to hold out an inducement to the postmaster to keep a sufficient supply; deprive him of that inducement, and he will let the public shift for themselves. They think the public are induced to visit their place of business in consequence of having the Post Office. As to the inspectorship of Post Offices, I have the greatest objection to that office, and when the subject comes before the House I shall vote against the salary.

30. As to the stamps—do you not think the number of stamps sold at an office is an indication of its importance and of the extent of the correspondence which passes through it? No, because squatters and others going up the country having forgotten to buy stamps on leaving home may go into an office on the road and buy ten shillings or a pound's worth, as they can buy them as cheap at one office as at another.

31. But the average of that would be pretty equal over all the Post Offices? Yes. The chief fault we have to find with the postmasters is that they do not keep sufficient stamps, and we are now often obliged to send to distant offices for them; but if there were officers appointed as I have suggested, the authorities at the head office would have confidence in them, and would keep them well supplied in stamps; more letters would be written and despatched, which would add to the Post Office revenue.

32. What I want to get at is, whether you do not think the sale of stamps is a guide to the amount of duty the postmaster has to perform, by shewing the extent of the correspondence in the district? Not at all. Their duties, if performed according to the regulations, are very hard; they have to attend in the office from nine in the morning till six in the evening, and often have to receive and despatch mails at twelve o'clock at night.

33. And you would increase the hardship by making them deliver the letters after the mail comes in at seven or eight o'clock in the evening? I think that would be right if an equivalent were given to the postmasters. Would you not consider it very hard, if your letters came in at seven o'clock in the evening in summer time, and you could not get them? And as postmasters have to stop up waiting for mails, it is no hardship.

34. It is the case in Sydney—we cannot get our letters after five o'clock? But you have all the day before you to answer your letters. Unfortunately, the time of the arrival of our mails in the north has been altered. The mail now travels by night, and this is found to be much less convenient than the former arrangement. No opportunity of replying to letters from Europe as in Sydney.

T. Dangar,
Esq., M.P.

28 April, 1862.

35. When you were postmaster were the mails pretty regularly conveyed? Yes, but they were not then conveyed so often; they were then conveyed three times a week, now they are six times.

36. With regularity? Generally they are. Our northern contractor has conveyed them for the last three or four years, and they are now conveyed much more regularly than formerly.

37. Can you suggest any mode of increasing the speed of the conveyance of mails, without entailing any great additional expense? I do not think they can be conveyed at greater speed without better roads. I think too much is given for the mail contracts. I know that when I was mail contractor there was less paid per mile for conveyance, and less passengers than now, although run daily, yet the calculation could be arrived at. I do not know whether there is any competition for the contract, but it appears singular that one man should have it year after year, and at a very high price. No doubt he has performed his contract very well, and that may be a good reason.

38. We are told that the great weight of newspapers sent to different parts of the country adds greatly to the cost of the conveyance of mails? No doubt; the newspapers are increasing every day, every month, and every year, and add to the cost.

39. Can you suggest any remedy for that? No, I do not know any remedy. What I should like to see would be that the mails should be carried without any passengers. I believe the question was mooted some years ago. The mail contractors now often take more passengers than they are allowed; they are not very particular about the number for which they are licensed, and constables do not interfere. Every one travelling says, "I wish to go on," and the consequence is that the coaches are overloaded, and break down. It would be much better if the mail coaches were allowed to carry only the mail driver and a guard.

40. Would not that add much to the cost of the conveyance of mails? Yes, but it would be saved in the cost of police protection; we should not have so many trials at Court, and should not require so many constables on the roads. During the time we had guards on the Northern line we had no mail robberies. I intend to assist others to endeavour to re-establish guards. It might not be necessary that they should travel with the mails every day, but perhaps twice or thrice a week on days which would be publicly known, so that bankers and others desirous of transmitting money might know when to send their money. I was told by a high officer that now we had the patrol under the new Police Act he hoped we should hear no more of mail robberies, but I believe they are still taking place in the south and west.

41. The question of expense is a very serious one, and the conveyance of passengers would appear to reduce to cost? No doubt.

42. Do you think, looking to the large cost of the conveyance of mails, we should continue to carry newspapers free of charge? I should be sorry to see the press taxed. If a tax were put upon newspapers the public would suffer.

43. Do you think the public would not be content to pay? I think they would rebel against it.

44. I suppose the public would also like to have their letters carried free; they are more important than papers. To the poor man, who gets a letter only once in three months, that letter is of infinitely more importance than a dozen papers—do you not think it is very hard for him to have to pay more than he otherwise would do for the carriage of his letter, in order that the rich man may get his paper for nothing? I would rather see 4d. charged for letters than the newspapers taxed. I believe 4d. was the sum fixed when the new Post Office Act was first introduced in Parliament, and I believe people would rather pay 4d. for letters than have the newspapers taxed.

45. You say you do not approve of a tax on newspapers, to make up the revenue—would you agree to an additional tax on letters? The mails, as far as the Northern Districts are concerned, would be a mere nothing to convey, but for the newspapers and books.

46. Books pay? Yes; but there are the Illustrated News and magazines.

47. Both pay? Yes, but only a small amount.

48. By the Chairman: They pay something? Yes.

49. By Mr. Watt: Should newspapers pay in the same ratio—you say there would be very small mails, but for the newspapers, on the northern lines—these northern lines are very expensive? Yes. I believe the newspapers were formerly paid for by a stamp tax, and that was objected to, but I think that would be better than to charge for postage.

50. That was not so here, but in England? I know it was so in England and here too.

51. By Mr. Smart: You are aware that the expenditure of the Post Office exceeds the revenue very considerably? I am.

52. Do you think the Post Office ought to pay its own expenses, or be a tax upon the country? I am of a different opinion from a great number upon that score; I think that internal communication, both by rail, telegraph, and postal, should be conducted for the benefit of the masses, without reference to the revenue or cost.

53. Do you think that portion of the public service should be carried on gratuitously for the benefit of those who avail themselves of it, or do you think those who use it should pay for it? They do pay for it indirectly, by taxes on commodities, and in the bush —

54. Do you think they pay sufficiently for it? I think the charge upon letters might be increased. I think the public would be just as well pleased to pay 4d. as 2d. for letters.

T. Dangar,
Esq., M.P.

23 April, 1862.

55. Do you think it right that £50,000 or £60,000 of the revenue should be appropriated to pay the expense of the Post Office Department? No, I do not; nor do I think postmasters in the interior ought to work for nothing.

56. According to the present scale of payments there was at least £50,000 deficiency in the postal revenue as compared with the expenditure, and you think that should be further increased by larger salaries to the postmasters—do you not think there should be some increased charge on letters or newspapers, or both, to meet this expenditure, or how do you propose to meet it? I would suggest an increase upon the charge for letters. I should be sorry to tax newspapers, though certainly the weight of the newspapers the mail contractors have to carry increases the cost of conveyance to a large degree.

57. Still you consider that newspapers should not be taxed to pay for these increased expenses? It is only my opinion; I think not.

58. That is all I ask? I should be sorry to tax the poor for the sake of literature and knowledge.

59. Do you think you tax the poor by putting a tax on newspapers—is it the poor who are the chief subscribers to the papers? They would be very much affected. The newspaper proprietors I do not think much of, but if you were to tax newspapers, I believe there would be a falling off of half the subscribers to the papers.

60. There would be less expense in carrying the mail if there were no newspapers? No doubt if you were to reduce the weight you would reduce the expense. But at present the mails in the Northern District are carried at a very high price, and the contract has been given to one man for several years in succession. I do not say it is, but many seem to think there is some kind of favouritism in the matter.

61. From your experience as a postmaster have you ever known a number of newspapers to lie at country Post Offices that were never called for? Yes; when I was postmaster I often had a great number, and after a given time and notice I returned them to the General Post Office.

62. By Mr. Watt: From your experience as a country postmaster, can you say whether the greater number of newspapers were addressed to the more opulent people in the district, or to the poorer classes? To the poorer classes, such as mechanics, even to shepherds and stockmen.

63. By the Chairman: The majority of newspapers? Yes; in fact on many establishments I knew men who received more newspapers than the master himself. Some of these people do nothing but read newspapers or books when they are looking after their sheep. They pay their subscriptions very regularly.

64. By Mr. Smart: Do you think they could not afford to pay some tax for the conveyance of their papers? They could afford if they chose, but there would be a great deal of discontent. Many of them could better afford to pay than those who move in higher circles.

65. By the Chairman: Do you not think there are many good books that could be transmitted which would be more instructive to these poor men than newspapers? Yes, but they prefer the newspaper.

66. I am not talking of what they prefer, but of what would be most beneficial to them? I do not know. I was agent to Mr. Richard Jones, and I found that these parties were the best patrons of his paper, and preferred them to books.

67. That is not an answer to my question. I ask whether you do not think there are many books which would be more instructive to the poorer classes than newspapers? No doubt they may be so.

68. If so, would not they be more entitled to go post free than the newspapers? If the proprietors of the papers would charge so much a quarter, including the postage, perhaps there would not be so much objection to it; that is the case with books, the charge of postage is included in the price. They would not object to pay a shilling or a couple of shillings a year in that way.

69. You have said that all these establishments should not be a source of revenue, but should be worked for the good of the masses; there is now a deficiency in the revenue of the Post Office of £50,000, who pays that deficiency? Of course it comes out of the general revenue. With respect to books, they are seldom sent by post, but in packages by ordinary conveyances, and the cost of conveying a book to its destination at a store seldom costs more than a penny, or perhaps not more than a farthing.

70. By Mr. Watt: Do you think if the Post Office conveyed them free a great many would be conveyed by the mail? Of course there would be a vast quantity.

71. Would it not be a great convenience to the public? No doubt.

72. The question comes to this, whether the expense of the Post Office Establishment should be borne by those who reap the benefits of it, or whether it should be paid for by the general public? I think as the sparsely populated districts do not enjoy the luxuries possessed by those in large towns they should at least have this privilege.

73. By Mr. Smart: If you are in favour of a stamp duty, what objection have you to a small postage stamp on newspapers? I would then let newspapers go free of postage.

74. You are in favour of stamp duties generally, but would not extend them to newspapers? No; I would rather increase the postage of letters to 4d.

75. Suppose you did that and the revenue were still deficient, how would you make up the deficiency? By direct taxation of the general public.

76. This is a species of direct taxation you now object to? I object to many things besides that.

77. By the Chairman: Suppose that, in consequence of the increasing wealth and population of the Colony, instead of two, there were six daily papers, and that, owing to the increase in the expense of the up-country mails, the deficiency in the revenue, instead of £50,000, were were to amount to £150,000, or £200,000, would you still propose that the expense of the conveyance of newspapers should be borne by the general revenue? It would then be much better to follow the English system, and to stamp the newspapers; the expense would then be borne by the parties who received them, and they perhaps might not object if it were imposed in that way.

T. Dangar,
Esq., M.P.

28 April, 1862.

78. By Mr. Knox: It would be the same in effect? It would, but I think they would like it better.

79. By Mr. Watt: Would you recommend that course? I would recommend a stamp duty.

80. Upon newspapers? Upon them and many other things, such as bank notes, dividends, probate of wills, &c.

81. By Mr. King: For the purpose of supplementing the revenue? Yes; I think it would be the most equitable tax that could be imposed—I know it was so when I was a child, and I believe it is the law in England now, and that there is no grumbling about it.

82. By Mr. Watt: Have you been in England recently? I have not been there for nearly forty years.

APPENDIX.

9. Post Office Returns:—Mr. Dangar moved, pursuant to amended notice, That there be laid upon the Table of this House, a Return of all the Deputy Postmasters and Postmistresses in the Colony; their present salaries and emoluments, describing each, and dates of appointments; whether in business and of what kind; the number of mails received and despatched on each day and night; describing also the hours of attendance, including Sunday duty; the amount of bonds required and entered into by each Deputy Postmaster and Mistress; and the dates of increase of salary, and amounts, since appointed.

Debate ensued.

Question put and passed.

Henry Moore, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are the Agent for the Peninsular and Oriental Company? I am. Henry Moore, Esq.

2. Are you aware what is the sum now paid as postal subsidy? £134,672.

3. The contract is performed by how many boats? Between Galle and Sydney three; at Galle it is incorporated with the Calcutta line.

28 April, 1862.

4. What is the tonnage of the three boats now employed? The three ships at present on the line are the "Northam," which is 904 tons registered, 426 tons engine-room, or 1,300 tons, and 1,600 tons builder's measurement.

5. Is not the "Northam" about to be removed for the "Shanghai"? I do not think so.

6. What is the horse-power of the "Northam"? 350.

7. Working up to 350, or actually 350? Actually 350.

8. What are the other two boats? The "Bombay" and "Madras". The "Bombay" is—registered tonnage, 608 tons; engine-room, 578; builder's measurement, 1,230; and horse-power, 275. The "Madras" is 607 tons registered, 578 tons engine-room, 1,230 builder's measurement, and 275 horse-power. They are sister ships.

9. Are you aware what was the subsidy the P. and O. Company received when they commenced the contracts by way of Singapore some twelve years ago? No, I never had a copy of that. The service opened here with the "Chusan" and "Formosa"; the "Formosa" was substituted by the "Shanghai"; and these in turn were replaced by the "Madras" and the "Norna."

10. Was the "Madras" a larger boat than the "Chusan" and "Formosa"? Yes, the "Chusan" and "Formosa" were about 700 tons; the "Madras" about 1,230. The Company found it necessary to put on the "Madras" and the "Norna," which were both about 1,200 tons.

11. These boats are branch boats from Galle? Yes.

12. What accommodation is given to Australian travellers going on from Galle? Up to two months since I had the privilege of availing myself of thirty berths, which were specially set aside in the Calcutta steamers, but in consequence of the pressure from the Colonies our Company have put on extra ships from Galle to Suez, to meet the steamers there during the busy season, mainly for the convenience of Australian passengers, and I was authorized to take passengers up to the extent of the vessel's capacity, leaving fifty berths for Indian and China passengers. The extra vessels were put on for the convenience of the whole passenger traffic.

13. By Mr. Knox: Larger vessels go from Galle? Yes, and the "Salsette" was one of these extra ships.

14. By Mr. Watt: What number would that give them? A great many more than would go from here.

15. How many berths does the "Salsette" make up? Upwards of a hundred; a hundred and twenty or a hundred and thirty. The Company being very anxious to meet the convenience of Australian passengers, had instructed me to be particular to send on to Calcutta beforehand as to our probable wants, so that extra accommodation might be provided if necessary. It was a great expense to them, without any advantage, to provide extra steamers during two months.

16. The thirty berths reserved are for the whole of the Colonies? Yes, which is more than the average.

Henry Moore, Esq. 17. By the Chairman: Will you state the contract speed? There is no speed specified, but there is time and penalty.

18. By Mr. Knox: Are the penalties rigidly enforced? I believe so.

28 April, 1862. 19. Excepting, I suppose, the case of the "Bombay"? I believe in her case it would be claimed, as it was on the occasion of the "Emeu's" detention here.

20. By Mr. Watt: Possibly that might be because there was not a spare boat in readiness? There was another ship in port, but not ready at the time. I believe the penalty was afterwards given back, but it was stopped in the meantime. I should like to say something about the power of these two ships, "Bombay" and "Madras," as rumours have gone abroad that they are deficient in speed and size. I have a letter from the Superintendent in Bombay, officially informing me, before the "Bombay" came on the line, that on her trial trip she made twelve knots an hour. At the time the accident took place, when she broke her shaft, she had advanced further on her voyage than any other vessel on the line had done in a similar period. With regard to the "Madras," she was unquestionably late on the last passage, having arrived on the 20th instead of on the 17th; but that was not the fault of the vessel, as she started two days late from Galle; she was then kept five hours off Port Phillip in consequence of the pilot not going off, and then she was again detained for eighteen hours in consequence of the violence of the weather; and at length, being unable to land him, she brought the pilot on here. So that, taking the time she was actually on the voyage, she performed it in exact contract time.

21. By the Chairman: As you have mentioned the matter, are you not aware that the "City of Sydney" came out in the face of the gale when the "Madras" would not venture to do so? I do not. I know the commander of the "Madras" told me that the pilot objected to take the vessel to sea on his own responsibility, and he himself would not do it. I may perhaps say, on behalf of the Company, that these vessels have been employed in the mail service for the last nine years, and have been singularly successful; they have met with fewer mishaps than any other vessels in the Company's fleet. I do not know that they will be permanently on the line.

22. By Mr. Watt: Do you think vessels of that size are perfectly competent for the service all the year round? Yes, perfectly. The "Northam" is superior to these two, but she is one of the fastest screw steamers afloat. During the last voyage her average rate of speed to King George's Sound was thirteen knots. They say she is the fastest screw steamer out of the eighty vessels of the Company. The vessels have always been up at Galle before their time, from the commencement of their contract; it is only down here that they are ever behind.

23. They put them in such thorough order here? No doubt; they turn round from Galle at once, while here they remain four or five weeks.

John Keble, Esq., again called in and further examined:—

John Keble, Esq. 1. By the Chairman: In reference to the evidence you gave when you were before the Board on a previous occasion, I would ask you whether it occupies the whole of Mr. Nelson's time to check the accounts you then spoke of? Yes, the country postmasters' accounts, and he could not get through them.

2. Does he get through them? They are not checked now.

3. There are ten now monthly checked? Yes.

4. Would not a good deal of labour be saved in the Post Office if there were none of these accounts there at all? I proposed that they should altogether do away with the checking of them. I think it a useless waste of time.

5. Could it not be done if all money were received in the head office instead of being received by the up-country postmasters? No, we cannot charge the cross-country postmasters.

6. Why not? We do not know what to charge for redirected letters or for the fines which may be charged upon them.

7. Could you not check these in the Sydney office? No.

8. Why not? If a letter were sent to Bathurst directed to some person there, the person having removed to some other place, and the letter were redirected to him with a charge of two-pence upon it, we could not charge that in Sydney, and we must give the country postmasters credit for letters charged against them originally, and redirected to other places.

9. Why would you propose giving up the checking of these accounts? Because the accounts do not pay for the work caused; it is not worth while for the sake of two or three shillings a month to have so much labour. I think the average for every postmaster throughout the Colony is about £1 a year. The only way I see of reducing the number of accounts to be checked, if they are to be checked, is, that all the postmasters of the direct offices should be responsible for the whole amount collected from the sub-offices; that would reduce the number of accounts from 300 to 105. I answered a suggestion which the Chairman made through the Postmaster General upon that subject.

10. You think that change might be effected? Yes; but that would depend upon the direct postmasters themselves, for they might say they would not take this trouble without they received higher salaries, as it would throw upon them a great deal of trouble.

11. Suppose you still follow the system now pursued, could not a junior clerk check all these accounts? There would be no difficulty.

12. Could not a clerk at £120 a year check them? No doubt about it; but one clerk cannot do it; he cannot check 350 accounts a month and sort over all vouchers.

13. Do you not think it is desirable that some system should be devised for doing away with this work? I have tried every year since I have been in the Post Office to reduce the system to as simple an one as possible. When I went there originally I tried to get the postmasters to make up their accounts, and at length having done so, I found they were £1,500 in arrear. Unless this system of checking is done away with, I do not see any help but to keep one clerk specially engaged at it; and as the business increases, I do not think one clerk can do it. John Kebble,
Esq.
28 April, 1862.
14. Are you aware whether any of the work of Mr. Nightingale, the ledger-keeper, is or has been within the last six months in arrear? No, I am certain it is not the case.
15. You are certain none of his work has been in arrear? Yes.
16. None whatever? None; he is obliged to post every day; he cannot allow his work to get into arrear.
17. By Mr. Knox: He posts from the cash-book? From the cash-book and day-book.
18. By the Chairman: Is Mr. Nightingale's time fully engaged? Yes. If I might take the liberty I would suggest that he should be examined.
19. Do you think Mr. Nightingale has any leisure time in the day? I do not think he has; what little he has he assists me.
20. Do you think you require that assistance? Certainly. My duties are not confined to merely the keeping of books, but a large number of papers are sent to me to report upon, and these take up a great portion of my time. I am even required to search with reference to a missing registered letter from a cross-country Post Office. If I had only to attend to the mere book-keeping my duty would be very simple.
21. I think we have seen long papers from the Post Office with minute after minute upon them, initialled by you, do you think that system advisable? I am not aware that I have initialled such minutes; matters referred to me to report upon are matters of account.
22. Would not vivâ voce remarks save much time and labour in the Post Office? Yes; and I believe I have myself got into disgrace, and have given rise to the remark that I have nothing to do, because I have run about to the different branches for information, instead of writing a note and sending a messenger.
23. Would it much increase the labour of your department if the cash department were amalgamated with your own? No, I should much prefer it; it would save me a world of trouble. It was recommended by the Board in 1851 that the Secretary and Cashier should be one person, and that has never been altered.
24. You think the office of Accountant and Cashier could be combined, and so relieve the Secretary's Office of some clerical labour? Yes.
25. Which might be done without any increase of clerical assistance in your office? Not if you put upon me the examination of 350 country postmasters' accounts every month.
26. By Mr. Watt: Are these the accounts that Mr. Nelson checks? Yes.
27. What items are they composed of? Unpaid and redirected letters to cross Post Offices.
28. Unpaid letters from Sydney might be charged in Sydney? They might be charged against the direct offices, but not against the cross offices; they are charged, but the direct offices have to get credit for the money for letters sent on by them to the cross offices.
29. Suppose he got the money from the other offices? That is the system I wished to be adopted.
30. Suppose you charged the direct office when the mail left Sydney? The postmaster at the direct office would then see that the others paid.
31. That would do away with the account so far as that was concerned? Yes; but not as regards the other offices.
32. As to redirected letters from cross roads, for instance a letter directed to Goulburn and redirected to Queanbeyan, suppose no postage were charged upon them? Then the Government would lose.
33. Is not the loss a great deal more by checking the accounts? Yes.
34. By the Chairman: Might not all letters that were insufficiently or wrongly stamped be at once passed to the Dead Letter Office, and so save all this money? That is done with regard to up-country, but not with regard to English letters; the latter are forwarded Home—but I am not exactly aware of the process in the Letter Branch.
35. By Mr. Knox: In the event of the postmaster being out of stamps, and receiving payment in money for letters, is that also included in this account? Yes.
36. By Mr. Smart: It is not compulsory under the Postage Act that all letters shall be stamped? No, they must be prepaid; but it is not absolutely necessary that they shall. We seldom meet with cases of postmasters taking payment in money, but we do sometimes, if they have not stamps. If they have stamps they put them on themselves, or oblige the parties to do so.

MONDAY, 5 MAY, 1862.

Present:—

MR. MONTEFIORE IN THE CHAIR.

MR. KING, | MR. KNOX,
MR. SMART.

Mr. David Winton called in and examined:—

Mr. David
Winton.

5 May, 1862.

1. By the Chairman: You are postmaster at Gundagai? Yes.
2. How long have you been so? About six years.
3. Had you been postmaster in any other district before you were appointed at Gundagai? No.
4. During the time you have been postmaster at Gundagai, have you been able to observe whether there are any irregularities or abuses in carrying out the business of the Post Office, or whether the work is generally well done, in reference to the inward and outward mails? It has been very regularly done; so much so that they have never any fault to find. If irregularities take place by sending letters or papers wrongly, of course it is notified to the Post Office here, and a fine is inflicted; but that is very seldom the case.
5. How many mails pass through your hands? We have a daily mail, one up and one down. Six nights in the week I make up two mails up, and three nights in the week four; that is, to the Tumut and Adelong; and then of down mails I have three.
6. Have you any idea of the number of letters that pass through your hands by each mail, on the average? We do not count the letters now, generally.
7. Can you not give an idea? I daresay sometimes, with the down mail, there might be an average of from 200 to 500; and then the up mail at night at ten o'clock is much heavier; perhaps there are sometimes as many as 1,000 letters to sort.
8. And the newspapers? Besides newspapers. The quantity of newspapers is very large sometimes; I should think it averaged from about 500 to 800 a night.
9. Are there as many newspapers as letters? I think there are, if not more, on account of the local newspapers now.
10. Is there a large number of local newspapers? Yes, a considerable number several nights in the week; there are the Goulburn local papers and various others.
11. Are you aware whether the larger number of these newspapers are addressed to the wealthy or the poorer classes? I think that most of the respectable settlers and squatters all round about the district, and every one in any way connected with business, besides a considerable number of small farmers, take in a newspaper.
12. Can you give us an idea whether the bulk of the papers are addressed to the poorer classes, or to the wealthy or well-to-do classes? I should certainly say the greater number are of the poorer and middling classes, because the population among these classes is far more numerous in the district.
13. Can you offer any suggestions by which the Post Office service might be improved at Gundagai, for the convenience of the public? I am not aware of any additional convenience that is required further than this, that according to the strict letter of the law I am not permitted to deliver letters before nine o'clock; and if persons take offence at the postmaster, as has been the case with one individual at Gundagai, they watch the Post Office, and if they see the slightest deviation from the rules they make reports about it, which tends to prevent a postmaster exercising a sound discretion in accommodating the public. Until that individual interfered I used to take upon myself to deliver letters early in the morning, because it is a great convenience to business people to get their letters and papers at seven or eight o'clock instead of waiting till nine. The mail comes in at nine o'clock and is despatched at eleven in the evening, and immediately after the mail is despatched I have all the letters sorted and ready for delivery next morning; so that if any person should require to have his letters very early I can give them to him—if he should be starting on a journey for instance at five or six o'clock in the morning.
14. Would it not be advisable that postmasters should be instructed to deliver letters to any person who may call for them in the evening, supposing they were paid for such trouble? I invariably do it, because it is a great convenience to the public.
15. But it is against the Post Office rules, I think you say? It is against the strict rules.
16. Do not the postmasters at present derive a large amount of their emolument from their commission on the sale of stamps? Not very much. I derive from that source about £24 or £25 a year.
17. Do you think it would be better that the whole amount should be paid in the shape of salary? It would save the postmasters trouble.
18. Do you look upon it as a good system to allow credit to postmasters for the purchase of stamps? No, I do not think it is a good system; I think it would be better that they should remit the full amount; it would save them trouble in the General Post Office.
19. In what way? It would save them posting and making out the quarterly accounts.
20. At present the Sydney Post Office repurchases stamps that have been issued—are you aware of that? As remittances, yes. There was a rule put in force some time ago authorizing postmasters to buy stamps from the inhabitants to a certain amount by deducting five per cent.
21. Do you think that is an advisable plan to be pursued, that the Post Office should repurchase stamps once issued? Stamps are very convenient in the country for making up remittances instead of sending silver money. It is a great convenience when there is a balance of a few shillings to be able to make up the deficiency with stamps.

22. Would not a Money Order System answer much better? I do not know. There are a great many people in the country that would not take advantage of a Money Order System; there are a great many even in very good circumstances that can neither read nor write.

Mr. David
Winton.

5 May, 1862.

23. Suppose a Money Order System were introduced the same as at Home? No doubt it would be a very great convenience.

24. Are you aware of any reason why it should not be introduced? No; I think it would be highly advisable. The system adopted at Home is found to work with very great benefit.

25. By Mr. Smart: Do you find all the newspapers sent to your office regularly called for by the subscribers? Yes.

26. There is no accumulation of them in your office? No, only when sometimes parties leave the district.

27. The residents generally get their papers regularly? Yes, very regularly.

28. How do the poorer classes of persons you alluded to just now get their newspapers—are they delivered to them, or do they send for them themselves? They call or send for them themselves.

29. What do you mean by the poorer classes? The working classes—men engaged in splitting and fencing, or sawing, bricklayers, masons, and that class of men.

30. From their position do you think they are not as well able to pay for their newspapers as what are called the better classes? They pay very regularly. I find that class pay their quarter's subscriptions as punctually as the better class.

31. Do you think the same class of persons would as readily subscribe to a newspaper if a small tax were put on newspapers in addition to the subscription? I think it would have the effect of causing many to give up taking newspapers.

32. You think such an increase in the cost of a newspaper would cause a diminution in the number of the subscribers? Yes.

33. Are you aware that there is a very great deficiency in the Post Office revenue during the year? I observe there is a deficiency when the accounts are published at times.

34. From your experience as a postmaster can you make any suggestion as to how the revenue might be increased—do you think there would be any objection to an increase of the postage on letters, in the first place? I should think not, supposing the postage should be increased from 2d. to 3d.

35. Do you think it would be a fair charge to put a small stamp upon newspapers, so as to pay the expense of delivery and conveying them over the country? I do not think a small charge in the shape of a stamp put on by the publishers, and charged in the quarterly account, would be complained of—something like a half-penny or a penny.

36. You do not think it would be complained of by the class of persons who pay for newspapers in your district? Not if the subject were properly explained, so that they could understand it. I think the great majority would not object to it; rather than give up their newspaper I think they would be content to pay a very small item in the quarterly account.

37. The majority of subscribers in your neighbourhood who pay now £4 a year, for the Herald for instance, would not, you are of opinion, object to pay £5 for it, so as to increase the Post Office revenue? I think a great many would give it up if it were increased 25 per cent.; it would limit the circulation of the paper. They might not object to pay four guineas instead of £4; or an increase of four or five or even ten per cent.

38. By limiting the circulation of the papers the expense of conveying the mails would be lessened? No, I think not, inasmuch as the mails have to go. It would lighten the labour of the contractors, but they would make no difference in the price of the contract, because they would have to keep up their staff, and go through the same routine with light mails as with heavy mails.

39. By the Chairman: What is the rate of speed on the postal contracts along your line of road—the high road? It is very slow, about five miles an hour, or even slower. The mail that leaves my place about five o'clock in the afternoon reaches Yass about eight next morning; that is, fifteen hours doing sixty-five miles; but then it is night travelling. I think in the state of efficiency the roads are in now, the hours could very easily be shortened.

40. Do you think there is any objection to increasing the rate of speed to six miles an hour? I think they ought to be able to do that.

41. Would it materially increase the cost of the contract? No, I do not see that it would. There is one improvement that I have advocated for the last four or five years, that is, shortening the stages. Sometimes they drive stages of twenty or twenty-five miles, even in winter. When the roads were very heavy, I have seen the horses come in behind time thoroughly exhausted, so much so as hardly to be able to drive up to the Post Office; that was in the case of very wet weather. Twenty-five miles I consider far too long a stage for postal communication.

42. Do any mails arrive at Gundagai on Sunday? Two. The mail for Sydney comes down the country at four, and is despatched at five o'clock; and the mail from Sydney reaches me at ten, and is despatched at eleven.

43. Then you have a certain amount of Sunday work which you must necessarily perform? Yes; in fact on Sunday many parties will send in for their letters and newspapers—some a distance of twenty-five miles.

44. And you deliver them? Yes, I never allow the place to be left; there is always someone there in case of emergency, although there is only one hour stipulated for delivery on Sunday. I know parties cannot always send at the exact time; and it would be very hard to send them back without their papers and letters, a distance of twenty-five miles.

45. Has the Postal Inspector ever visited your office? Yes.

- Mr. D. Winton.
5 May, 1862.
46. When? I think about the end of last September or the beginning of October, and about two years before that. I was about to remark, that there has been a controversy with a man in Gundagai, named Hayes, a miller; he has been endeavouring to subject me to all the inconvenience he could, and I was obliged to take steps in the case, and he has been committed to take his trial at the next Quarter Sessions. He was anxious at one time to be made a Magistrate, but a memorial was got up and sent to the Government against him, and I am the only one, out of the 80 persons who signed it, that he has pitched upon for a victim. He attacked me with respect to the Post Office, and the case has come before the Magistrates once or twice, and witnesses have come forward to contradict all his statements. Such things as these are the greatest drawbacks that postmasters are subjected to. As the Magistrate told him, when summing up, if he had any fault to find on my part, it was his place to have called a public meeting, and taken the sense of the inhabitants.
47. By Mr. Smart: I suppose you think country postmasters ought to have a discretion as to delivering letters at any time in addition to the prescribed hours? Yes, in the country certainly. I think any postmaster who cannot be allowed to use his discretion is not worthy to hold office.
48. If you had this discretion, you would not be subject to such annoyance as you have experienced from Mr. Hayes? Just so.
49. By Mr. Knox: In that case you would deliver letters to everybody who called for them—not to some favoured persons only? To anyone calling; I never make any favouritism.

Michael Metcalfe, Esquire, called in and examined:—

- Michael
Metcalfe, Esq.
8 May, 1862.
1. By the Chairman: You are Chairman of the Australasian Steam Navigation Company? I am.
2. Your position as Chairman makes you well versed in the cost of working steamers? Yes.
3. Could you give the Board any idea for what sum your Company would be prepared to undertake such a contract as now exists on the subsidized Indian postal route, as far as Galle? I could give you an approximate idea. With boats such as we have at present, and those we have ordered, I think we could do it for from £85,000 to £90,000 a year, taking exactly the same route as is now taken by the Peninsular and Oriental Company's boats, from Sydney to Galle by way of King George's Sound, and back by the same route.
4. What class of boats would you use for such a service? We consider the boats we have at present quite capable of performing the service, but we are now going into a larger class of boats; we have ordered one, and if we had such a contract we should order another. We are quite of opinion that the boats we have now are capable of doing that work with punctuality.
5. Do you think that such boats as the "City of Sydney" and "Wonga Wonga" could carry sufficient coal to be certain of performing the service by that route with punctuality? Yes, I am sure of that. We do not speak from a mere idea; we know that the "City of Sydney" did perform the longer voyage from Sydney to Suez and back, and did it within the time taken by the contract boats. She carried 630 tons of coal, and had 100 tons to spare when she arrived; having coaled, of course, at King George's Sound.
6. Are you aware of the number of boxes of mails the mail steamers now carry? No, but I imagine they would take about 100 tons of room.
7. After allowing for that 100 tons of room, do you think the boats you now have could carry sufficient coal to ensure the performance of a contract with regularity? Yes.
8. If your Company had such a contract, would they be prepared to enter into conditions as to fines and penalties? Not more than the Peninsular and Oriental Company now submit to—not such a contract as the European mail contract.
9. The Peninsular and Oriental Company are now liable to fines unless they show that the delay results from unavoidable causes? Yes; we should be prepared for that. For instance, if a vessel left Sydney thoroughly equipped, with a certificate from proper surveyors, and broke down on the voyage, as the Bombay did lately, that we should think ought not to cause the imposition of a fine; it would be a matter over which we should have no control.
10. Supposing a steamer should meet with very heavy weather, and that from that cause delay took place, should you consider that a proper case for penalty? That is a question we have not considered, but I think we should not refuse to take such a risk as that.
11. You think about £85,000 or £90,000 a year would be a sufficient remuneration? Yes, with such boats as we have now, and I think about £5,000 more for boats of 1,000 tons, that is, of one-fourth more capacity than the present.
12. How many boats would be required to perform the service efficiently? I think three would do it.
13. What would be likely to be the subsidy, supposing the service were fortnightly? On that point I would not like to speak; I have not given it consideration, and we have never thought such a service would be demanded.
14. In performing this service, after taking on board the requisite quantity of coal, would there be any room for passengers in your boats? Yes, for cabin passengers.

15. For cabin passengers only? Yes; none other go by the mail boats. No man without means can afford to go, with the chance of having to pay the heavy rates demanded by the Indian Companies. Michael Metcalfe, Esq.
16. The French steamers now about to commence running will take second-class passengers? 8 May, 1862.
- In the boats we have at present there would be no room for second-class passengers.
17. You would have in boats of 1,000 tons? I think so, but I am not quite certain; such a thing was never contemplated by our Directors.
18. Have you any idea what would be the probable cost to first-class passengers from Sydney to Galle? I think about £50.
19. When the vessel from the Colonies arrived at Galle, do you think your Company could find any facilities for transmitting the mails onward to England? That is a matter which I have never thought of; but I imagine that, as the Home Government have a fortnightly if not a weekly, communication with Galle now, there would be no difficulty on that head.
20. Have you received any communication from Home that would lead you to believe that you might make an arrangement with any other than the Peninsular and Oriental Company? No. I have always been of opinion that the Home Government would perform that part of the service, and that we should have nothing to do but fetch the mails to and from Galle. I think Sir William Denison's idea was, that the Colonies should perform their own service to and from Galle, and the Home Government carry it on between Galle and England.
21. The amount of the present subsidy being £134,672, of which the Home Government pays half, and the Colonies the other half, would not the Home Government have rather the best of the bargain, if we were to undertake the service as far as Galle, at a cost of £90,000, the Home Government continuing to receive all the outward postage on letters from England? Perhaps they would. I presume that would be left as matter of negotiation between the Home Government and the Colonies.
22. Do I understand you to say that, in the event of your obtaining such a contract, your Company would be prepared to have boats of 1,000 tons? Yes, I have no doubt we should.
23. By Mr. Knox: Are you aware what amount the Company received for the service performed by the "City of Sydney" in 1857? I think it was £8,500; I am not quite sure.
24. That was for the voyage to Suez and back? Yes. I believe the Mail Company found coals, or a part of them.
25. You are aware that the "City of Sydney" on that occasion was obliged to carry a considerable quantity of coal on deck when leaving King George's Sound? Yes, that was a matter of extreme caution; I believe she could have done it without; but the present voyage is nothing near the same in length.
26. I believe the consumption of coal is not so large as it was on board your steamers, in consequence of alterations? It is not, from slight alterations in the machinery.
27. Are you aware whether your Company have any contracts with the Government for carrying letters to the Hunter River, or to Melbourne? No.
28. Would the Company not be willing to enter into such contracts? I dare say we should be willing, if properly paid for it.
29. The present payment they receive is so much a letter? Yes; for Foreign mails, 1d. a letter; and for the Hunter River mails and others within the Colony, $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

APPENDIX.

My dear Sir,

Bridge-street, Sydney, 21 May, 1862.

In reply to your inquiry whether, and upon what terms the A. S. N. Co. would undertake a fortnightly service to and from Galle, I beg to say that I have consulted my Co-Directors, and we are of opinion that such a service could be performed for a subsidy of from £130,000 to £140,000 per annum. I remain, &c.

M. METCALFE.

J. L. Montefiore, Esq.,
Chairman, Postal Inquiry Commission.

John Fairfax, Esquire, called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: In asking you to attend the Board again, the Board are anxious to know what mode you would suggest as the most advisable—if you have given any thought to the matter—to supplement the deficiency that there is in the revenue of the Post Office? I really have not thought on the subject; the thing has not come before me in any shape, and I have not given attention to it. John Fairfax, Esq.
8 May, 1862.
2. You are aware that there is a large deficiency? Yes.
3. And that that deficiency is year by year made up out of the General Revenue? Yes.
4. Do you think it would be advisable to supplement that deficiency by increasing the rates of postage? I would very much prefer that a series of questions should be put to me, and that you would allow me to return my answers, say the next time you meet. It is a matter requiring very serious consideration, especially when a question will probably arise in which I have a personal interest, though at the same time, I hope, a feeling above that of mere personal interest would induce me to speak with due regard to what I may conceive to be best for the country.

(After some conversation, the witness was requested to withdraw. The Board deliberated. Witness recalled, and the following questions submitted to him, with a view to his being prepared with answers at the next meeting:—"Can you suggest any means for supplementing the deficiency of about £50,000 in the revenue of the Post Office—whether by increased postage on letters, or charging a postage stamp on newspapers, or both? Can you inform the Board if you know of any other Country or Colony where newspapers are carried free by post?" Further examination of the witness then postponed until Monday next.)

Mr.

Mr. Robert
Craig.

8 May, 1862.

Mr. Robert Craig called in and examined, (at his own request personally preferred):—

1. By the Chairman : You are the agent for the Sydney Morning Herald at Goulburn? I am.
2. Can you give us any information respecting the postal communication between Sydney and Goulburn? With respect to the arrival and departure of the mail I can.
3. Will you state whatever you know that may be of interest to the Board? Till very lately the mail for Sydney used to leave Goulburn at nine o'clock in the evening, and arrived at Campbelltown the following evening in sufficient time to come down to Sydney by the last train. The passengers were much benefited by this arrangement, as they arrived in Sydney by the same train, instead of remaining for the night in Campbelltown, as they now have to do. Within a short time—these few days—an order has come up from the Postmaster General delaying the departure of the mail from Goulburn from nine o'clock to half-past ten; and the consequence is that the mail does not arrive in Campbelltown till it is too late to be brought on by the evening train to Sydney.
4. At what time does it arrive in Campbelltown? About half-past six o'clock. The consequence is that the mail bags remain in Campbelltown all night, and to the annoyance of the passengers the same is the result with them. We feel aggrieved at this, seeing that the previous arrangement was so much better; and speaking for myself, and I think I may say for several persons in Goulburn to whom I have spoken on the subject, we would wish to go back to the old arrangement, that is, leaving at nine o'clock, with a view to arriving the next day in Campbelltown in time to allow mails and passengers to come on to Sydney the same evening. If such an arrangement cannot be made, it would be better to delay the departure of the mail from Goulburn till the morning, allowing sufficient time for it to arrive in Campbelltown for the train that now brings down the mail in the morning when it is too late the previous night. Then the same result would be effected,—that the mail would arrive in Sydney at the same time in the morning that it now arrives when it is too late to come on the previous evening.
5. By Mr. Smart : What benefit would that be to the residents of Goulburn? We should be able to remain a night in our own beds at home, instead of having to pass a night at Campbelltown.
6. By the Chairman : What has that to do with the post? It would not delay the mail in any way, for the same advantage can be obtained by the mail leaving Goulburn at six or seven o'clock in the morning as is now obtained by leaving at half-past ten at night—that is to say, it would be delivered at the same hour in Sydney as at present. And by this arrangement there would be some benefit to the up country post towns, inasmuch as when their mails were delayed by very heavy weather or accidental causes, they would have a far better chance of being in before the departure of the mail from Goulburn. At present, if a country mail does not arrive before the Goulburn coach leaves, at half-past ten in the evening, as may frequently happen, they lose a post; whereas if the coach was delayed till next morning, all those that were late would be able to come in during the night.
7. By Mr. Watt : Do you not think that would risk the conveyance of the Goulburn mail—Would not the wet weather that operated to delay the up country mails also tend to retard the mail from Goulburn to Sydney? That might be the case certainly if the start were delayed too long, but the hour might be fixed so as to give sufficient time to make allowance for casualties.
