SYDNEY: THOMAS RICHARDS, GOVERNMENT PRINTER.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE
INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION, 1883,

HELD IN SYDNEY, NOVEMBER-DECEMBER, 1883.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

28th NOVEMBER, 1883.

(First Day.)

THE undermentioned Gentlemen, Representatives of the Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, New Zealand, Tasmania, and Western Australia were present, and handed in their Commissions, which having been read, it was resolved that their substance should be published.

- New South Wales*: THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER STUART, M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary.
THE HONORABLE GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, M.P., Colonial Treasurer.
THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., M.L.C., Attorney-General.
- New Zealand*: THE HONORABLE MAJOR HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer.
THE HONORABLE FREDERICK WHITAKER, M.L.C., late Premier and Attorney-General.
- Queensland*: THE HONORABLE SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, Q.C., M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary.
THE HONORABLE JAMES FRANCIS GARRICK, Q.C., M.L.C., Postmaster General.
- South Australia*: THE HONORABLE JOHN COX BRAY, M.P., Premier and Chief Secretary.
THE HONORABLE J. W. DOWNER, Q.C., M.P., Attorney-General.
- Tasmania*: THE HONORABLE WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, M.P., Premier and Attorney-General.
THE HONORABLE NICHOLAS J. BROWN, M.P., Minister of Lands and Works.
- Victoria*: THE HONORABLE JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer.
THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary.
THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General.
- Western Australia*: THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

On the motion of the Honorable JAMES SERVICE, it was unanimously resolved that the Honorable ALEXANDER STUART be appointed President.

A communication from His Excellency Sir GEORGE WILLIAM DES VŒUX, K.C.M.G., Governor of Fiji and Acting High Commissioner of the Western Pacific, on the subject of the representation of Fiji at the Conference, was read, and a resolution passed that the Conference would be glad, if Sir WILLIAM DES VŒUX were so inclined, that he should take part in the proceedings of the Conference as representing Fiji.

A communication to this effect was accordingly forwarded to Sir WILLIAM DES VŒUX, who shortly afterwards took his seat in the Convention, and expressed his views as to his position there.

A communication was read from Messrs. Leefe and Langton, claiming to have been appointed by the European portion of the community of Fiji, requesting to be permitted to present a Memorial, and to represent that Colony at the Convention.

The consideration of the subject was deferred.

Mr. DALLEY moved, That in all official references to their body the term Conference should be employed in lieu of Convention; but after some discussion, and on its being pointed out that some of the commissions of members contained the word Convention, the motion was by leave withdrawn, and it was arranged the word Convention should be used.

Mr. SERVICE moved, "That the Press be admitted on such occasions as from time to time this Convention may determine," but afterwards withdrew the motion, and gave notice of it for the next day.

Mr. DIBBS proposed, and Mr. BRAY seconded, the following motion, which was unanimously adopted:—

1. That in referring to the several Colonies represented in any proceedings of the Convention, the names be placed in alphabetical order.
2. That in the event of any Division upon a motion, the votes of the Colonies shall be taken, in lieu of the individual votes of their Representatives.
3. That the Order of Debate be the same as is observed in consideration of Questions in a Committee of the Whole House of Parliament, but that the Chairman have the same right as any other member to take part in the discussion of any Questions.
4. That Mr. Alex. C. Budge be the Secretary to the Convention, and that he be required to keep Minutes of each day's proceedings, which shall be printed and circulated.

Mr. GRIFFITH moved, and it was resolved, "That the Minutes of each day's proceedings be made public by the Secretary."

Mr. STUART laid before the Convention a letter from His Excellency Governor Des Vœux, of Fiji, to His Excellency Lord Augustus Loftus, covering a memorandum on the future of New Guinea and Polynesia, with reference to the Question of Australasian Annexation or Protectorate. Ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRAY moved, and it was unanimously resolved, That the Conference meet daily at 10 o'clock, a.m., unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. GIBLIN laid before the Convention a letter from Mr. Audley Coote, Hawaiian Consul, Hobart, Tasmania, protesting against annexation of the various Islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBLIN moved, That a Committee consisting of Messrs. Service, Atkinson, and Griffith, be appointed to examine the correspondence and other papers laid before the Convention, with a view to the printing of such portion as may be considered necessary.

The Convention deliberated upon the order of their proceedings.

Mr. SERVICE undertook to hand to the Secretary a draft of Resolutions to be submitted to the Convention embodying the views of the Representatives of Victoria.

Mr. GRIFFITH handed to the Secretary a draft of Resolutions embodying the views of the Representatives of Queensland.

Ordered that the draft Resolutions be printed and circulated amongst members of the Convention.

The Convention adjourned at 4 p.m.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

29th NOVEMBER, 1883.

(Second Day.)

Present:—

Fiji:	HIS EXCELLENCY SIR G. WILLIAM DES VŒUX, K.C.M.G., Governor of Fiji and H.B.M.'s Acting High Commissioner for the Western Pacific.
New South Wales:	THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER STUART, M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, M.P., Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., M.L.C., Attorney-General.
New Zealand:	THE HONORABLE MAJOB HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE FREDERICK WHITAKER, M.L.C., late Premier and Attorney-General.
Queensland:	THE HONORABLE SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, Q.C., M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE JAMES FRANCIS GARRICK, Q.C., M.L.C., Postmaster General.

South

South Australia :	THE HONORABLE JOHN COX BRAY, M.P., Premier and Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE J. W. DOWNER, Q.C., M.P., Attorney-General.
Tasmania :	THE HONORABLE WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, M.P., Premier and Attorney-General. THE HONORABLE NICHOLAS J. BROWN, M.P., Minister of Lands and Works.
Victoria :	THE HONORABLE JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General.
Western Australia :	THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

The PRESIDENT drew attention to the letter of Messrs. Leefe and Langton, received by the Convention yesterday, and stated that having been addressed on this subject by Mr. Leefe, he had requested Mr. Dalley to advise him upon the subject, who had given an opinion, which the President read to the Convention.

Mr. BRAY moved,—

“That Messrs. Leefe and Langton be informed that the Memorial must be presented through a member of the Convention.”

Upon which an Amendment was moved by Mr. WHITAKER,—That all the words after the word “informed” be omitted, with the view of inserting the following:—

“That they will be admitted to present the Memorial, but that the Convention at this stage is not prepared to hear them in support of it.”

Question,—That the words proposed to be omitted stand part of the Question.

Ayes.	Noes.
New South Wales,	New Zealand,
South Australia,	Queensland.
Tasmania,	Victoria,
Western Australia.

The Amendment was therefore lost.

The Question was then put, as proposed by Mr. BRAY, and carried.

Upon the motion of Mr. BRAY, it was resolved,—

“That Messrs. Leefe and Langton be further informed that when the Memorial shall have been thus received, the Convention will consider whether any further steps can be taken in regard thereto, and that its decision therein will be communicated to them.”

Mr. SERVICE, in pursuance of notice, moved,—

“That the Press be admitted on such occasions as from time to time this Convention may determine.”

Mr. DIBBS moved, as an Amendment, “That all the words after the word ‘That’ be omitted, with the view of inserting the following:—[That] ‘except by publication of the Minutes, the proceedings be not made public during the sitting of the Convention, without its sanction.’ ”

Question put,—That the words proposed to be omitted stand part of the Question.

Ayes.	Noes.
New Zealand.	New South Wales,
Victoria,	Queensland
	South Australia,
	Tasmania,
	Western Australia.

The Amendment was then put and carried.

The following drafts of Resolutions were laid upon the table:—

By Mr. SERVICE—

1. That it is essential to the future well-being of Australasia that Eastern New Guinea and the Western Pacific Islands from the Equator to the New Hebrides should not fall into the hands of any Foreign Power.
2. That, in order to preclude the possibility of so disastrous an event, it is desirable to urge on the Imperial Government the necessity of at once either annexing such of those lands in respect to which no understanding exists with any other Power, or of establishing such a protectorate over them as will secure them from foreign occupation.
3. That the Colonies represented at this Convention are willing to bear such share of the cost entailed on the Mother Country by such annexation or protectorate as may be deemed fair and reasonable.
4. That, on behalf of our respective Colonies, we protest in the strongest manner against the proposal of the French Nation to pour out on any of these Pacific Islands the off-scourings of their own people; and we appeal to the Imperial Government and to our countrymen at Home to save this portion of the Empire from so dire a calamity.
5. That, in view of the foregoing Resolutions, and of the many subjects of pressing importance on which the Colonies, though of one mind, are unable to obtain united action owing to the absence of some common authority, the time has now arrived for drawing closer the ties which bind the Colonies to each other by the establishment of a Federal Union in regard to such matters as this Convention shall specifically determine.

By

By Mr. GRIFFITH—

I.

1. That in the opinion of this Conference it is essential to the safety and welfare of the British Dominions in Australasia that no portion of the neighbouring islands, and especially that no portion of the Eastern half of the Island of New Guinea, should fall into the hands of any Foreign Power.
2. That the rapid extension of Australasian enterprise and trade, and the attention which has for some time past been drawn to New Guinea, render it certain that that island will shortly be inhabited by many adventurous subjects of Great Britain and other nations, whose relations with the native tribes, in the absence of any provisions for the maintenance of law and order and the protection of life and property, cannot fail to give rise to serious difficulty and embarrassment.
3. That having regard to these considerations, and considering further that the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Acts and the Orders-in-Council for the government of British subjects in the Western Pacific are wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of existing circumstances, this Conference, while fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the Empire belongs to the Imperial Government, resolves, that it is urgently necessary, as well for the security of the Australasian portion of Her Majesty's Dominions as for the prevention of otherwise inevitable evils, that such measures should at once be adopted as will most conveniently and effectively secure the ultimate incorporation with the British Empire of that portion of the Island of New Guinea which is not claimed by any Civilized Power, and further that immediate provision should be made for the exercise of such British jurisdiction within the island as will secure the attainment of these objects.
4. That the Australasian Colonies, represented at this Conference, will cheerfully defray by contribution, in proportion to their population, the reasonable expenses incurred in giving effect to their wishes.
5. That these resolutions be communicated to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be submitted for Her Majesty's Royal consideration, and for such action as she may think proper to direct, with a view to giving effect to the earnest desire of her loyal subjects in Australasia.

II.

1. That it is desirable that a Federal Australasian Council should be created for the purpose of dealing with the following matters,—
 - (1.) The Marine Defences of Australasia, beyond territorial limits.
 - (2.) Matters affecting the relations of Australasia with the Islands of the Pacific.
 - (3.) The prevention of the influx of Criminals.
 - (4.) The regulation of Quarantine.
 - (5.) Such other matters of general Australasian interest as may be referred to it by Her Majesty or by any of the Australasian Legislatures.
2. That a Committee be appointed to consider and report upon the best mode of constituting the Council, and the definition of its functions and authority.

Mr. SERVICE moved.—

That it is essential to the future well-being of Australasia that Eastern New Guinea and the Western Pacific Islands from the Equator to the New Hebrides should not fall into the hands of any Foreign Power.

Discussion ensued.

The further consideration of the Motion was adjourned until the next meeting.

The President laid before the Convention a letter from the Revd. A. G. Fry, Chairman of the Congregational Union of New South Wales, forwarding a copy of a Resolution on the subject of the Annexation of New Guinea and New Hebrides.

The President also laid upon the Table a communication from Mr. H. Cave, of Levuka, as Chairman of a public meeting there, upon certain matters affecting Fiji which they wish to bring before the Convention.

Ordered to be printed.

The following Notices of Motion were given by Mr. Dibbs on the subject of a "General Australasian Quarantine":—

1. That it is desirable that a system of Quarantine should be established for the purpose of preventing the introduction by sea or otherwise of virulently infectious diseases.
2. That for the accomplishment of such purpose special Quarantine Stations should be appointed at various places on the coast-line of the respective Colonies in the direct route of the ocean-going steamers—notably at Thursday Island, King George's Sound, and Auckland.
3. That each of such Stations, while under the control of the Government of that Colony in which it is situated, should be supported from a common fund contributed by each Colony in the ratio of its population.
4. That the system of Quarantine throughout the Australasian Colonies should, as far as practicable, be uniform.
5. That there should be established an Intercolonial system of notification as to the actual sanitary condition of ports and places under the jurisdiction of the various Governments and of vessels arriving at or sailing therefrom.

The Convention adjourned at 4 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

30th NOVEMBER, 1883.

The Minutes having been read,—

The President informed the Convention that he had since their last adjournment directed search to be made for such information as could be obtained from Parliamentary sources as to the present condition of the New Hebrides Islands. He had ascertained from the Votes and Proceedings of the Queensland Parliament that in 1878 the following papers were presented to both Houses of Parliament, and were ordered to be printed.

THE NEW HEBRIDES ISLANDS—DESPATCH RESPECTING.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to Governor Sir A. E. Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B.
Queensland.

CIRCULAR.

Downing-street, 28 February, 1878.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit to you, for your information and for that of your Government, a copy of a letter from the Foreign Office, enclosing a communication which has been received from the French Ambassador at this Court, with reference to the intentions of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the New Hebrides Group, together with a copy of the reply which I caused to be addressed to the Foreign Office.

I have, &c.,

M. E. HICKS-BEACH.

Governor Sir A. E. Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B.
&c. &c. &c.

The Foreign Office to The Colonial Office.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 1st February, 1878.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to transmit to you, herewith, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, a copy of a communication received from the French Ambassador at this Court, calling attention to certain articles which have recently appeared in the Australian newspapers advocating the annexation of the Islands of the New Hebrides to the British Crown, and stating that, although the French Government do not attach any great importance to this movement in favour of annexation, still, as they themselves have no intentions with regard to this group, they would be glad to receive an assurance to this effect from Her Majesty's Government.

I

I am now to state that Lord Derby proposes, with the concurrence of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, to inform the French Ambassador, in reply to His Excellency's communication, that Her Majesty's Government have no intention of proposing any measures to Parliament with a view of changing the condition of independence which the New Hebrides Islands now enjoy.

The Under Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

I am, &c.,
T. V. LISTER.

The Marquis d'Harcourt to The Earl of Derby.

M. le Comte,

Ambassade de France, le 18 Janvier, 1878.

Il s'est établi entre l'île de la Nouvelle Calédonie et le groupe des Nouvelles Hébrides des rapports d'ordre commercial qui se sont rapidement développés, en raison de leur voisinage et qui présentent pour la prospérité de notre établissement Colonial une importance considérable.

Mon Gouvernement, qui attache beaucoup de prix à ce que ces relations continuent sur le même pied, se préoccupe dans une certaine mesure d'un mouvement d'opinion qui se serait produit en Australie dans ce dernier temps. Les journaux de ce pays auraient dénoué l'intention qu'ils attribuent à la France de réunir les Nouvelles Hébrides à ses possessions et demanderaient qu'afin de prévenir cette éventualité l'Archipel dont il s'agit fût placé sous la souveraineté de la Couronne d'Angleterre.

Sans attacher à ce mouvement de l'opinion une très-grande importance, mon Gouvernement tient toutefois à déclarer que pour ce qui le concerne il n'a pas le projet de porter atteinte à l'indépendance des Nouvelles Hébrides, et il serait heureux de savoir que de son côté le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté est également disposé à en respecter.

Veillez, &c.,
D'HARCOURT.

Son Excellence Le Comte de Derby,
&c., &c., &c.

The Colonial Office to The Foreign Office.

Sir,

Downing-st., 20 February, 1878.

In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to acquaint you that he concurs in the terms of the reply which the Earl of Derby proposes to give to the inquiry of the French Ambassador at this Court, with reference to the intentions of Her Majesty's Government in respect of the New Hebrides Group.

The Under Secretary of State, Foreign Office.

I am, &c.,
W. R. MALCOLM.

He had also ascertained by reference to the proceedings of the House of Commons, Hansard, vol. cclxxviii p. 898, that on 23rd April, 1883, it was officially announced, in answer to a question put to the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, that the understanding between France and England that neither Government would take possession of the New Hebrides still continued in force. He also referred to the proceedings in the House of Commons concerning the Islands of the Pacific and the Treaty of 1847, contained in Hansard, vol. cclxxiii p. 1518; and read the following question and answer, of date August 11th, 1882.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE—THE ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC—TREATY OF 1847.

MR. SALT asked the Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Whether any action has been taken on the part of France in contravention of Articles 1 and 2 of the Treaty of 19th June, 1847, between Great Britain and France, guaranteeing the absolute independence of certain Islands in the Pacific.

SIR CHARLES W. DILKE: The French flag was hoisted at Raiatea, an island to the leeward of Tahiti, shortly before Her Majesty's Government assumed office, and a provisional protectorate assumed over it by the French authorities at Tahiti, at the solicitation of the Chiefs of the Island; but the proceeding was disavowed by the French Government, as an infraction of the Declaration of June 19, 1847. The French Government, however, opened negotiations for the abrogation of the Declaration, in consideration of adequate concessions on their part in connection with other pending questions; and Her Majesty's Government have consented that the French flag shall remain provisionally hoisted at Raiatea until the 31st of December next, when, unless otherwise agreed between the two Governments, the status quo ante under the Declaration of 1847 will be reverted to.

He also quoted the declaration of the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain and France acknowledging the independence of the Islands of Huahine, Raiatea, and Borabora, and of the small islands adjacent thereto, in the Pacific Ocean, to be found in Hertlet's Treaties, Vol. VIII, pp. 998 and 999.

DECLARATION of the Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain and France, acknowledging the Independence of the Islands of Huahine, Raiatea, and Borabora, and of the small Islands adjacent thereto, in the Pacific Ocean. London, June 19, 1847.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and His Majesty the King of the French, being desirous of removing a cause of discussion between their respective Governments, relative to the islands in the Pacific Ocean which are hereinafter designated, have thought proper reciprocally to engage:—

1. Formally to acknowledge the independence of the Islands of Huahine, Raiatea, and Borabora, (to the leeward of Tahiti), and of the small islands adjacent to and dependent upon those islands.

2. Never to take possession of the said islands, nor of any one or more of them, either absolutely or under the title of a Protectorate, or in any other form whatever.
3. Never to acknowledge that a Chief or Prince reigning in Tahiti, can at the same time reign in any one or more of the other islands above mentioned; nor, on the other hand, that a Chief or Prince reigning in any one or more of those other islands can reign at the same time in Tahiti; the reciprocal independence of the islands abovementioned, and of the Island of Tahiti and its dependencies, being established as a principle.

The undersigned, Her Britannic Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the Minister Plenipotentiary of His Majesty the King of the French at the Court of London, being furnished with the necessary powers, hereby declare, in consequence, that their said Majesties take reciprocally that engagement.

In witness whereof, the undersigned have signed the present Declaration, and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

Done in duplicate at London, the 19th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1847.

The President intimated that he deemed it desirable to place this information before the Convention, as some confusion existed as to the precise nature of the relations between the Islands of the Pacific and Foreign Powers.

It was resolved that the information contained in the President's communication should be entered upon the Minutes.

Mr. SERVICE then laid before the Convention a Memorial from certain Inhabitants of the Colony of Fiji, on matters affecting that Colony, which was read, and ordered to be printed, with a view to the consideration at a future date of such portions of the Memorial as may come within the scope of the Convention.

MR. GIBLIN gave notice of his intention to move the following Resolutions, in lieu of the first, second, and third of the Draft Resolutions laid before the Convention by Mr. Griffith:—

NEW GUINEA.

1. That this Convention, while fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the Empire belongs to the Imperial Government, is emphatically of opinion that the safety and welfare of the Australasian Colonies demand that the Eastern portion of New Guinea should be annexed to the Empire, or made the subject of a British Protectorate.

NEW HEBRIDES.

2. That this Convention learns with satisfaction that the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Great Britain and France recognizing the independence of the New Hebrides Islands is still in force; and this Convention desires to place on record its deliberate conviction that it is in the highest degree desirable that such understanding should be made permanent.

PACIFIC ISLANDS.

3. That, with regard to the other islands of the Western Pacific, lying between the Admiralty Islands and Fiji, this Convention is of opinion that it is essential to the future safety and well-being of the Australasian Colonies that no Foreign Power should be permitted to acquire any of such islands.

NEW CALEDONIA.

4. That this Convention urgently requests Her Majesty's Government to use every available means for preventing the transportation by France to New Caledonia of relapsed criminals or of any criminals in large numbers; and this Convention is of opinion that the continuation of a Colony for the reception of transported offenders in any part of the South Pacific would be a permanent injury to the peace and social security of the Colonies of Australasia.

The consideration of the motion of Mr. Service was resumed, and, after discussion,

Mr. BROWN moved, and it was unanimously resolved,—“That the various Resolutions which have been laid before the Convention relating to the annexation of or dealing with the various islands be referred to a Committee, for the purpose of preparing resolutions based thereon for submission to the Convention at its next meeting, and that such Committee consist of Messrs. Stuart, Service, Griffith, Atkinson, Bray, and Giblin.”

The following papers were laid before the Convention, and ordered to be printed:—

By MR. SERVICE—A letter from the Rev. J. J. Paton, on behalf of the New Hebrides Mission, forwarding a petition respecting annexation.

By MR. SERVICE—Letter from Mr. J. Harry Haydon, Acting Secretary of the Exchange, Melbourne, forwarding a resolution on the subject of the cost of telegraphic messages to Europe and India.

By MR. STUART—Letter from Messrs. Alfred Bennett and J. Henniker Heaton, on the subject of a cable service to be owned by the Australasian Governments.

The Convention adjourned at a quarter to 1 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

(Fourth Day.)

Present :—

New South Wales :	THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER STUART, M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, M.P., Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., M.L.C., Attorney-General.
New Zealand :	THE HONORABLE MAJOR HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE FREDERICK WHITAKER, M.L.C., late Premier and Attorney-General.
Queensland :	THE HONORABLE SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, Q.C., M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE JAMES FRANCIS GARRICK, Q.C., M.L.C., Postmaster-General.
South Australia :	THE HONORABLE JOHN COX BRAY, M.P., Premier and Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE J. W. DOWNER, Q.C., M.P., Attorney-General.
Tasmania :	THE HONORABLE WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, M.P., Premier and Attorney-General. THE HONORABLE NICHOLAS J. BROWN, M.P., Minister of Lands and Works.
Victoria :	THE HONORABLE JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General.
Western Australia :	THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

The Minutes having been read, the following papers were submitted to the Convention, and ordered to be printed.

MR. STUART.—A letter from the Honorary Secretary of the Geographical Society of Australasia, on the subject of combined action on the part of the Australian Governments towards the Exploration of New Guinea.

MR. SERVICE.—From the Rev. James Nish, D.D., Clerk of the General Assembly, of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, forwarding copy of a Resolution on the subject of the annexation of Islands in the Pacific.

MR. GRIFFITH then moved the Resolutions of which he had given notice, on the subject of Federation, viz. :—

1. That it is desirable that a Federal Australasian Council should be created for the purpose of dealing with the following matters,—
 - (1.) The Marine Defences of Australasia, beyond territorial limits.
 - (2.) Matters affecting the relations of Australasia with the Islands of the Pacific.
 - (3.) The prevention of the influx of criminals.
 - (4.) The regulation of Quarantine.
 - (5.) Such other matters of general Australasian interest as may be referred to it by Her Majesty or by any of the Australasian Legislatures.
2. That a Committee be appointed to consider and report upon the best mode of constituting the Council, and the definition of its functions and authority.

And, after discussion, the further consideration of the subject was postponed until the next meeting.

The Committee appointed to prepare Resolutions on the basis of the Draft Resolutions relating to the annexation of, or dealing with the various islands, laid before the Convention the Resolutions at which they had arrived, which were ordered to be printed and circulated with a view to their consideration at the next meeting.

THAT this Convention, representing the Governments of all the Australasian Colonies, unanimously resolves :—

1. That any farther acquisition of dominion by any Foreign Power in any of the Islands of the Western Pacific would be highly detrimental to the future safety and well-being of the British possessions in Australasia, as well as injurious to the interests of the whole Empire.

2. That having regard to the geographical position of the Island of New Guinea, the rapid extension of British trade and enterprise in Torres Straits, the certainty that the island will shortly be inhabited by many adventurous subjects of Great Britain and other nations, and the inadequacy of any existing laws for regulating their relations with the native tribes, this Convention, while fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the Empire belongs to the Imperial Government, is emphatically of opinion that such steps should be immediately taken as will most conveniently and effectively secure the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea as is not claimed by the Government of Holland.
3. That although the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Great Britain and France, recognizing the independence of the New Hebrides, precludes this Convention from making any recommendation with respect to those islands, the Convention urges upon Her Majesty's Government the extreme desirability that such understanding should be embodied in some definite and permanent engagement, which shall secure them against falling under any foreign dominion; at the same time the Convention trusts that Her Majesty's Government will avail itself of any opportunity that may arise for negotiating with the Government of France, with the object of securing the control of those Islands in the interests of Australasia.
4. That the Governments represented at this Convention undertake to submit and recommend to their respective Parliaments such measures as may be necessary for defraying, in proportion to their population, such share of the cost incurred in giving effect to the foregoing resolutions as Her Majesty's Government may require.
5. That the Convention protests in the strongest manner against the declared intention of the Government of France to transport large numbers of relapsed criminals to the French possessions in the Pacific, and urges Her Majesty's Government to use every means in its power to prevent the adoption of a course so disastrous to the interests of Australasia.
6. That the Convention expresses a confident hope that no penal settlement for the reception of European criminals will long continue to exist in the Pacific; and invites Her Majesty's Government to make to the Government of France such serious representations on this subject as may be deemed expedient.

That these resolutions be communicated to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be submitted for Her Majesty's Royal consideration, and for such action as she may think proper to direct, with a view to giving effect to the earnest desire of her loyal subjects in Australasia.

The Convention adjourned at 1 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

(Fifth Day.)

Present :—

Fiji :	HIS EXCELLENCY SIR G. WILLIAM DES VŒUX, K.C.M.G., Governor of Fiji and H.B.M.'s Acting High Commissioner for the Western Pacific.
New South Wales :	THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER STUART, M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, M.P., Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., M.L.C., Attorney-General.
New Zealand :	THE HONORABLE MAJOR HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE FREDERICK WHITAKER, M.L.C., late Premier and Attorney-General.
Queensland :	THE HONORABLE SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, Q.C., M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE JAMES FRANCIS GARRICK, Q.C., M.L.C. Postmaster-General.
South Australia :	THE HONORABLE JOHN COX BRAY, M.P., Premier and Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE J. W. DOWNER, Q.C., M.P., Attorney- General.
Tasmania :	THE HONORABLE WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, M.P., Premier and Attorney-General. THE HONORABLE NICHOLAS J. BROWN, M.P., Minister of Lands and Works.
Victoria :	THE HONORABLE JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General.
Western Australia :	THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

The minutes having been read,—

The President laid upon the Table the undermentioned papers, which were ordered to be printed :—

- (1.) From the Superintendent of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Co. (Limited), stating that Mr. W. Gregor Taylor, the General Manager of the Company, was on his way to Sydney from Singapore, for the purpose of placing himself in communication with the Members of the Conference, on the subject of proposed reduction of Telegraph charges to Europe.
- (2.) From Messrs. Leefe, Langton, and others, on behalf of the European inhabitants of Fiji.

Mr. Whittaker laid before the Convention, for the purpose of being printed, certain amendments which he proposed to move in the Resolutions arrived at by the Committee, and submitted at the last meeting.

THIS Convention, representing the Governments of all the British Colonies of Australasia, having had under its consideration the correspondence between the Colonial Office and the Agents-General of several of those Colonies, relative to the annexation or protectorate of the Western Pacific Islands and the Eastern portion of New Guinea, unanimously resolves :—

1. That further acquisition of dominion in the Western Pacific, south of the Equator, by any Foreign Power, would be highly detrimental to the safety and well-being of the British possessions in Australasia, and injurious to the interests of the Empire.
2. That this Convention respectfully suggests that its object may be effectually attained in respect of the islands not connected by treaty or otherwise with Foreign Powers, by a cession, annexation, or protectorate, as may be most suitable in each case.
3. That this Convention has no desire to impose undue burthens either upon Great Britain or Australasia by any attempt to colonize or settle any of these islands, and therefore proposes to limit occupation to such an extent only as will be sufficient to prevent interference by Foreign Powers, and will enable Her Majesty's Imperial Government to establish a jurisdiction, by Orders in Council similar to those now in operation under the Western Pacific Orders, but applicable alike to the subjects of Foreign nations as well as British subjects.
4. That, having regard to the geographical position of the island of New Guinea, the rapid extension of British trade and enterprise in Torres Straits, the certainty that the island will shortly be overrun by many adventurous subjects of Great Britain and other nations, and the inadequacy of any existing laws for regulating their relations with the native tribes, this Convention emphatically expresses its opinion that such steps should be immediately taken as will most conveniently and effectively secure the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea, and of the small islands adjacent to and dependent thereon, as are not claimed by the Government of Holland.
5. That although the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Great Britain and France, recognizing the independence of the New Hebrides, precludes this Convention from making any recommendation with respect to those islands inconsistent with that understanding, the Convention urges upon Her Majesty's Government the extreme desirability that such understanding should be embodied in some definite and permanent engagement, which shall secure them against falling under any foreign dominion; at the same time the Convention trusts that Her Majesty's Government will avail itself of any opportunity that may arise for negotiating with the Government of France, with the object of securing the control of those islands in the interests of Australasia.
6. That the Convention protests in the strongest manner against the declared intention of the Government of France to transport large numbers of relapsed criminals to the French possessions in the Pacific, and urges Her Majesty's Government to use every means in its power to prevent the adoption of a course so disastrous to the interests of Australasia and of the Pacific Islands.
7. That the Convention expresses a confident hope that no penal settlement for the reception of European criminals will long continue to exist in the Pacific; and invites Her Majesty's Government to make to the Government of France such serious representations on this subject as may be deemed expedient.
8. That the Colonies of Australasia do not seek to evade any responsibilities that fairly attach to them; and this Convention is of opinion that, having regard to the relative interests of Great Britain and Australasia, such share of the cost to be incurred by the Imperial Government, in giving effect to the above resolutions as that Government shall deem fair and reasonable, should be secured to Great Britain by an "effective guarantee," in the form of permanent Appropriation Acts by the several Colonial Parliaments, such share to be from time to time contributed by the several Colonies, in proportion to population.
9. Finally, this Convention desires to place on record that it recognizes that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the British Empire rests with the Imperial Government; and that it has no intention or desire to press anything which may tend to place that Government in a position of hostility towards any Foreign Power.
10. That these resolutions be communicated to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be submitted for Her Majesty's Royal consideration, with a view to such action as Her Majesty may think proper to direct, to give effect to the earnest desire of her loyal subjects in Australasia.

The Convention then resumed consideration of the Resolutions proposed by Mr. Griffith on the subject of federation, when after discussion, the following amended Resolutions were proposed by Mr. Griffith and unanimously adopted :—

1. That a Committee be appointed to consider and report upon the best mode of constituting a Federal Australasian Council, and the definition of its functions and authority.
2. That such Committee consist of His Excellency Sir G. William Des Vœux, K.C.M.G., Messrs. Dalley, Kerferd, Downer, Whittaker, Griffith, Giblin, and Fraser.

The Convention adjourned at 4 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

(Sixth Day.)

Present :—

Fiji :	HIS EXCELLENCY SIR G. WILLIAM DES VŒUX, K.C.M.G., Governor of Fiji and H.B.M.'s Acting High Commissioner for the Western Pacific.
New South Wales :	THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER STUART, M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, M.P., Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., M.L.C., Attorney-General.
New Zealand :	THE HONORABLE MAJOR HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE FREDERICK WHITAKER, M.L.C., late Premier and Attorney-General.
Queensland :	THE HONORABLE SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, Q.C., M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE JAMES FRANCIS GARRICK, Q.C., M.L.C., Postmaster-General.
South Australia :	THE HONORABLE JOHN COX BRAY, M.P., Premier and Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE J. W. DOWNER, Q.C., M.P., Attorney- General.
Tasmania :	THE HONORABLE WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, M.P., Premier and Attorney-General. THE HONORABLE NICHOLAS J. BROWN, M.P., Minister of Lands and Works.
Victoria :	THE HONORABLE JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General.
Western Australia :	THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

THE minutes having been read, the Convention proceeded to consider the Resolutions of the Committee on the subject of the annexation of, or dealing with, the various islands; also the amendments on the same subject proposed by Mr. Whitaker.

The preamble was postponed.

Resolution No. 1, as submitted by the Committee, was proposed,—Whereupon Mr. Whitaker moved the following Amendment, which was carried, viz. :—

1. That further acquisition of dominion in the Western Pacific, south of the Equator, by any Foreign Power would be highly detrimental to the safety and well-being of the British possessions in Australasia, and injurious to the interests of the Empire.

Resolution No. 2, was then proposed, whereupon Mr. WHITAKER moved the following amendment :—

2. That this Convention respectfully suggests that its object may be effectually attained in respect of the islands not connected by treaty or otherwise with Foreign Powers, by a cession, annexation, or protectorate as may be most suitable in each case.

A further amendment was proposed by Mr. BERRY, as follows :—

2. That this Convention refrains from suggesting the action by which effect can be given to the foregoing resolution, in the confident belief that the Imperial Government will promptly and wisely take the most efficient steps to secure the safety and contentment of this distant portion of the Empire.

Mr. WHITAKER, with the concurrence of the Convention, withdrew his proposed amendments Nos. 2 and 3.

The amendment proposed by Mr. BERRY was then put and carried.

It was then moved that clause 2 of the Committee's Resolutions stand as No. 3 of the Resolutions of the Convention, which was carried with certain verbal amendments, viz. :—

3. That having regard to the geographical position of the Island of New Guinea, the rapid extension of British trade and enterprise in Torres Straits, the certainty that the island will shortly be the resort of many adventurous subjects of Great Britain and other nations, and the absence or inadequacy of any existing laws for regulating their relations with the native tribes, this Convention, while fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the Empire

Empire belongs to the Imperial Government, is emphatically of opinion that such steps should be immediately taken as will most conveniently and effectively secure the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea and the small islands adjacent thereto as is not claimed by the Government of the Netherlands.

It was then moved that No. 3 of the Committee's Resolutions stand No. 4 of the Resolutions of the Convention, which was carried with certain verbal amendments, viz. :—

4. That although the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Great Britain and France, recognizing the independence of the New Hebrides, appears to preclude this Convention from making any recommendation with respect to those islands inconsistent with that understanding, the Convention urges upon Her Majesty's Government the extreme desirability that such understanding should give place to some more definite engagement, which shall secure them against falling under any foreign dominion; at the same time the Convention trusts that Her Majesty's Government will avail itself of any opportunity that may arise for negotiating with the Government of France, with the object of securing the control of those Islands in the interests of Australasia.

It was then moved that No. 4 of the Committee's Resolutions be adopted as No. 5 of the Resolutions of the Convention, which was agreed to, viz. :—

5. That the Governments represented at the Convention undertake to submit and recommend to their respective Parliaments such measures for permanent appropriation as may be necessary for defraying, in proportion to population, such share of the cost incurred in giving effect to the foregoing resolutions as Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the relative importance of Imperial and Australasian interests, may deem fair and reasonable.

It was then moved that No. 5 of the Committee's Resolutions be adopted as No. 6 of the Resolutions of the Convention, viz. :—

6. That the Convention protests in the strongest manner against the declared intention of the Government of France to transport large numbers of relapsed criminals to the French possessions in the Pacific, and urges Her Majesty's Government to use every means in its power to prevent the adoption of a course so disastrous to the interests of Australasia and the Pacific Islands.

It was then moved that No. 6 of the Committee's Resolutions be adopted as No. 7 of the Resolutions of the Convention, which was carried, viz. :—

7. That the Convention expresses a confident hope that no penal settlement for the reception of European criminals will long continue to exist in the Pacific; and invites Her Majesty's Government to make to the Government of France such serious representations on this subject as may be deemed expedient.

It was also moved that No. 7 of the Committee's Resolutions be adopted as No. 8 of the Resolutions of the Convention.—Agreed to, viz. :—

8. That these resolutions be communicated to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, together with a request that they may be submitted for Her Majesty's Gracious consideration, and for such action as Her Majesty may think proper to direct, with a view to giving effect to the earnest desire of her loyal subjects in Australasia.

The preamble to the Resolutions was then considered, and adopted, as follows :—

“This Convention, representing the Governments of all the British Colonies of Australasia, unanimously resolves.”

Mr. Dalley, as Chairman of the Committee appointed to prepare Resolutions to form a basis for constituting a Federal Council of Australasia, brought up the Report of such Committee, which was ordered to be printed and circulated.

The Conference adjourned at 4 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

Present :—

Fiji :	HIS EXCELLENCY SIR G. WILLIAM DES VŒUX, K.C.M.G., Governor of Fiji and H.B.M.'s Acting High Commissioner for the Western Pacific.
New South Wales :	THE HONORABLE ALEXANDER STUART, M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, M.P., Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., M.L.C., Attorney-General.
New Zealand :	THE HONORABLE MAJOR HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE FREDERICK WHITAKER, M.L.C., late Premier and Attorney-General.
Queensland :	THE HONORABLE SAMUEL WALKER GRIFFITH, Q.C., M.P., Premier and Colonial Secretary. THE HONORABLE JAMES FRANCIS GARRICK, Q.C., M.L.C., Postmaster-General.
South Australia :	THE HONORABLE JOHN COX BRAY, M.P., Premier and Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE J. W. DOWNER, Q.C., M.P., Attorney- General.
Tasmania :	THE HONORABLE WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, M.P., Premier and Attorney-General. THE HONORABLE NICHOLAS J. BROWN, M.P., Minister of Lands and Works.
Victoria :	THE HONORABLE JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier and Colonial Treasurer. THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary. THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General.
Western Australia :	THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

The minutes having been read and verbally amended, the undermentioned papers were laid before the Convention and ordered to be printed:—

- (1.) From Mr. Andrew Rowan (Castella & Rowan), St. Hubert's Wine Cellars, Melbourne, on the subject of Intercolonial Free Trade in Wine.
- (2.) From the Honorable Leopold Fane DeSalis, M.L.C., Sydney, on the subject of re-stocking some of the Islands with "fur-seals."
- (3.) From Mr. John Campbell, Sussex-street, Sydney, on the subject of a "Federal Court of Appeal."

The Resolutions relating to the Islands of the Pacific having been verbally amended were finally adopted as follows:—This Convention representing the Governments of all the British Colonies of Australasia unanimously resolves—

1. That further acquisition of dominion in the Pacific, south of the Equator, by any Foreign Power, would be highly detrimental to the safety and well-being of the British possessions in Australasia, and injurious to the interests of the Empire.
2. That this Convention refrains from suggesting the action by which effect can best be given to the foregoing resolution, in the confident belief that the Imperial Government will promptly adopt the wisest and most effectual measures for securing the safety and contentment of this portion of Her Majesty's dominions.
3. That having regard to the geographical position of the Island of New Guinea, the rapid extension of British trade and enterprise in Torres Straits, the certainty that the island will shortly be the resort of many adventurous subjects of Great Britain and other nations, and the absence or inadequacy of any existing laws for regulating their relations with the native tribes, this Convention, while fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the Empire belongs to the Imperial Government, is emphatically of opinion that such steps should be immediately taken as will most conveniently and effectively secure the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea, and the small islands adjacent thereto, as is not claimed by the Government of the Netherlands.
4. That although the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Great Britain and France, recognizing the independence of the New Hebrides, appears to preclude this Convention from making any recommendation inconsistent with that understanding, the Convention urges upon Her Majesty's Government that it is extremely desirable that such understanding should give place to some some more definite engagement, which shall secure those islands from falling under any foreign dominion; at the same time the Convention trusts that Her Majesty's Government will avail itself of any opportunity that may arise for negotiating with the Government of France, with the object of obtaining the control of those Islands in the interests of Australasia.

5. That the Governments represented at this Convention undertake to submit and recommend to their respective Legislatures measures of permanent Appropriation for defraying, in proportion to population, such share of the cost incurred in giving effect to the foregoing resolutions as Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the relative importance of Imperial and Australasian interests, may deem fair and reasonable.
6. That the Convention protests in the strongest manner against the declared intention of the Government of France to transport large numbers of relapsed criminals to the French possessions in the Pacific, and urges Her Majesty's Government to use every means in its power to prevent the adoption of a course so disastrous to the interests of Australasia and the Pacific Islands.
7. That the Convention expresses a confident hope that no penal settlement for the reception of European criminals will long continue to exist in the Pacific, and invites Her Majesty's Government to make to the Government of France such serious representations on this subject as may be deemed expedient.
8. That these resolutions be communicated to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, together with a request that they may be submitted for Her Majesty's gracious consideration, and for such action as Her Majesty may think proper to direct, with a view to giving effect to the earnest desire of her loyal subjects in Australasia.

NOTE.—His Excellency Sir G. William Des Vœux, the Governor of Fiji, representing that Colony, while expressing individually his general concurrence with the resolutions, considered himself as precluded by his position from voting upon them.

The Resolutions were signed by the several members of the Convention, and directed to be sent to His Excellency the Governor of New South Wales with a request to transmit them to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, by cable.

MR. WHITAKER then proposed the following Resolution:—

That this Convention desires to express the great gratification with which it would regard the early establishment over the Pacific Islands, not now in the possession of any Foreign Power, and to which the Western Pacific orders in council are now applicable, of a jurisdiction to which all persons of whatever origin would be subject.

Discussion ensued, and a general expression of opinion being given that it was not desirable to pass any formal resolution on the subject, which might have the effect of restricting the action of Her Majesty's Government, Mr. Whitaker withdrew the Resolution.

The Convention then proceeded to consider the Report of the Committee to which was referred the preparation of Resolutions to form a basis for constituting a "Federal Council of Australasia."

The question, "That the Report be received," was adopted, and, on the motion of Mr. DALLEY, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the Bill prepared by the Committee.

Progress was reported, and the Convention adjourned at 4 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

Western Australia :	THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary.

The minutes having been read, the President laid upon the Table the undermentioned papers which were ordered to be printed, viz. :—

- (1.) From Mr. J. B. Sheridan, Adelaide, on the question of Intercolonial remedies against debtors.
- (2.) From Stenhouse & Smith, on the subject of a self-acting gaseous Vermin and Rabbit exterminator.
- (3.) From John M. Creed, Esq., forwarding copy of a letter which he had published on the "Rabbit Plague."

The Committee resumed consideration of the "Bill to constitute a Federal Council of Australasia," and the same having been amended, was ordered to be printed, with a view to its adoption at the next meeting.

The following notices of motion were then given :—

Mr. DIBBS to move :—

That the representatives of each Colony in Convention assembled pledge themselves to submit to the Legislatures of their respective Colonies Resolutions affirming the conclusions arrived at by the Convention, and inviting such Legislatures to assent to an address to Her Majesty to pass an enabling Bill such as that agreed to by this Convention.

Mr. BRAY to move :—

That His Excellency the Governor be requested to transmit to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies copies of the draft Bill to constitute a Federal Council of Australasia, and to inform the Secretary of State that this Convention has considered and approved of the provisions of the Bill, and respectfully requests that Her Majesty's Government will take such steps as may be necessary to the establishment of a Federal Council of Australasia.

Sir G. W. DES VŒUX to move :—

This Convention desires to express to Her Majesty's Government its emphatic opinion that, wherever Her Majesty's jurisdiction or dominion may be established in New Guinea and the Pacific Islands, purchases of land from the natives should be discouraged, and if allowed at all, should be placed under most stringent regulations

This Convention is further of opinion that pretended purchases of land unaccompanied by actual and substantial occupation should not be recognized.

Mr. GIBLIN to move :—

That the Premiers of the Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, and Victoria be appointed a Committee to watch over all matters relating to the subjects discussed at this Convention, and to assist in forwarding the adoption of its recommendations. That such Committee be authorized, if they find it necessary, to call the Convention together, at such time and place as they may agree, and that the Honorable JAMES SERVICE be requested to act as Chairman of such Committee.

The Convention adjourned at 4 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

THE HONORABLE GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary.
THE HONORABLE GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P.,
Attorney-General.
- Western Australia :* THE HONORABLE MALCOLM FRASER, C.M.G.,
Colonial Secretary.

The minutes having been read, the Convention proceeded with the further consideration of the "Bill to constitute a Federal Council of Australasia," as amended in Committee, and further amended the same.

Mr. WHITAKER gave notice of the following motion :—

That in the opinion of this Convention the several Colonies of Australasia, in order to meet an imminent danger, should without delay pass a uniform Law to prevent the landing on their shores of persons from penal settlements in the Pacific, who have been convicted of crimes.

The motions of Messrs. Dibbs and Bray were then considered ; and, after discussion, Mr. Griffith proposed the following Resolution, which was agreed to :—

That this Convention, recognizing that the time has not yet arrived at which a complete Federal Union of the Australasian Colonies can be attained, but considering that there are many matters of general interest with respect to which united action would be advantageous, adopts the accompanying draft Bill for the Constitution of a Federal Council, as defining the matters upon which in its opinion such united action is both desirable and practicable at the present time, and as embodying the provisions best adapted to secure that object, so far as it is now capable of attainment.

47^o VICTORIÆ, 1883.

A DRAFT BILL

To constitute a Federal Council of Australasia.

WHEREAS it is expedient to constitute a Federal Council of Preamble.
Australasia, for the purpose of dealing with such matters of common Australasian interest, in respect to which united action is desirable, as can be dealt with without unduly interfering with the management of the internal affairs of the several Colonies by their respective Legislatures: Be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the consent of Her Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

1. In this Act, unless the context otherwise require, the fol- Interpretation.
lowing terms shall bear the meanings set opposite to them respectively—

“Colonies”—The Colonies of Fiji, New Zealand, New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania, Victoria, and Western Australia, and the Province of South Australia, and their respective Dependencies, or those of the said Colonies in respect to which this Act is in operation;

“Crown Colony”—Any Colony in which the control of public officers is retained by Her Majesty's Imperial Government;

“Her Majesty's Possessions in Australasia”—The Colonies and their dependencies, and such other territories as Her Majesty may from time to time declare by proclamation;

“Council”—The Federal Council as hereby constituted;

“Governor”—The Governor Lieutenant-Governor or other Officer administering the Government of the Colony referred to with the advice of his Executive Council except in the case of a Crown Colony in which case the word shall mean the Governor Lieutenant-Governor or such other officer alone.

2. There shall be in and for Her Majesty's possessions in Federal Council to be constituted.
Australasia a Federal Council, constituted as hereinafter provided, and called the Federal Council of Australasia, which shall have the functions, powers, and authority, hereinafter defined.

- Council may make laws. 3. Within such possessions Her Majesty shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, to make laws for the purposes hereinafter specified.
- Holding of Session. 4. A Session of the Council shall be held once at least in every two years.
- Number of Members. 5. Each Colony shall be represented in the Council by two Members, except in the case of Crown Colonies, which shall be represented by one Member each.
- Legislature may define mode of appointment. 6. The Legislature of any Colony may make such provision as it thinks fit for the appointment of the representatives of that Colony, and for determining the tenure of their office.
- Place of meeting. 7. The first session of the Council shall be held at Hobart, in the Colony of Tasmania. Subsequent Sessions shall be held in such Colony as the Council shall from time to time determine.
- Mode of summoning Council. 8. The Council shall be summoned and prorogued by the Governor of the Colony in which the Session shall be held; and shall be so summoned and prorogued by Proclamation, published in the Government Gazette of each of the Colonies; and shall meet at such time and at such place as shall be named in the Proclamation.
- Names of Members to be transmitted to Governors. 9. The Governor of each Colony shall from time to time transmit to the Governors of the other Colonies the names of the Members appointed to represent the Colony of which he is Governor.
- Council may act notwithstanding vacancies. 10. Notwithstanding any vacancy in the representation of any Colony the Council shall be competent to proceed to the despatch of business, and to exercise the authority hereby conferred upon it.
- Special Session may be summoned. 11. At the request of the Governors of any three of the Colonies a special Session of the Council shall be summoned to deal with such special matters as may be mentioned in the proclamation convening it. Until the Council shall make other provision in that behalf, any such special Session shall be summoned by the Governor of Tasmania, and shall be held at Hobart.
- President to be elected. 12. The Council shall in each Session elect one of its Members to be President.
- Quorum. 13. The presence of a majority of the whole number of Members of the Council for the time being, representing a majority of the Colonies with respect to which this Act is in operation, shall be necessary to constitute a quorum for the despatch of business, and all questions which shall arise in the Council shall be decided by the votes of a majority of the Members present, including the President.
- Oath of allegiance to be taken. 14. No Member of the Council shall sit or vote until he shall have taken and subscribed before the Governor of one of the Colonies the oath of allegiance contained in the Schedule hereto: Provided that every member authorized by the law of the Colony which he represents to make an affirmation instead of taking an oath may make such affirmation instead of the oath hereby required to be taken.
- Legislative authority of Council. 15. Saving Her Majesty's prerogative, and subject to the provisions herein contained with respect to the operation of this Act, the Council shall have legislative authority over all Her Majesty's possessions in Australasia and over all British ships sailing between them, in respect to the several matters following:—
- (a) The relations of Australasia with the islands of the Pacific;
 - (b) Prevention of the influx of criminals;
 - (c) Fisheries in Australasian waters beyond territorial limits;
 - (d) The service of civil process of the Courts of any Colony within Her Majesty's possessions in Australasia out of the jurisdiction of the Colony in which it is issued;
 - (e) The enforcement of judgments of Courts of law of any Colony beyond the limits of the Colony;
 - (f) The enforcement of criminal process beyond the limits of the Colony in which it is issued, and the extradition of offenders (including deserters of wives and children and deserters from the Imperial or Colonial naval or military forces);

(g)

- (g) The custody of offenders on board of ships belonging to Her Majesty's Colonial Governments, beyond territorial limits;
- (h) Such of the following matters as may be referred to the Council by the Legislatures of any two or more Colonies, that is to say—General Defences, Quarantine, Patents of invention and discovery, Copyright, Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, Uniformity of Weights and Measures, recognition in other Colonies of any Marriage or Divorce duly solemnized or decreed in any Colony, Naturalization and Aliens, Status of Corporations and Joint Stock Companies in other Colonies than that in which they have been constituted, and any other matter of general Australasian interest, with respect to which the Legislatures of the several Colonies can legislate within their own limits, and as to which it is deemed desirable that there should be a law of general application: Provided that in such cases the Acts of the Council shall extend only to the Colonies by whose Legislatures the matter shall have been so referred to it, and such other Colonies as may afterwards adopt the same.

16. The Governors of any two or more of the Colonies may, upon an Address of the Legislatures of such Colonies, refer for the consideration and determination of the Council any questions relating to those Colonies or their relations with one another, and the Council shall thereupon have authority to consider, and determine, by Act of Council, the matters so referred to it.

Special matters may be referred to Council by two or more Colonies.

17. Every Bill passed by the Council shall be presented, for Her Majesty's assent, to the Governor of the Colony in which the Council shall be sitting, who shall declare, according to his discretion, but subject to the provisions of this Act and to Her Majesty's instructions, either that he assents thereto in Her Majesty's name, or that he withholds such assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure, or that he will be prepared to assent thereto, subject to certain amendments to be specified by him.

Royal assent to Bills, &c.

18. When the Governor assents to a Bill in Her Majesty's name, he shall, by the first convenient opportunity, send an authentic copy of the Act to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and if Her Majesty, within one year after receipt thereof by the Secretary of State, thinks fit to disallow the Act, such disallowance (with a certificate of the Secretary of State of the day on which the Act was received by him) being signified by such Governor by message to the Council, or by Proclamation in the Government Gazette of all the Colonies affected thereby shall annul the Act from and after the day of such signification.

Disallowance by Queen in Council of Act assented to by Governor.

19. A Bill reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure shall not have any force unless and until, within one year from the day on which it was presented to the Governor for Her Majesty's assent, such Governor signifies, by message to the Council, or by Proclamation published as last aforesaid, that it has received the assent of Her Majesty.

Signification of Queen's pleasure on Bill reserved.

20. All Acts of the Council, on being assented to in manner hereinbefore provided, shall have the force of Law in all Her Majesty's possessions in Australasia, or in the several Colonies to which they shall extend, as the case may be.

21. Every Act assented to in the first instance shall be proclaimed in the Government Gazette of the Colony in which the Session of the Council at which it was passed was held, and shall also be transmitted by the Governor assenting thereto to the Governors of the several Colonies affected thereby, and shall be proclaimed by them within the respective Colonies of which they are Governors.

Mode of promulgation.

Provisions in case of inconsistency of Acts of Council with local law.

22. If in any case the provisions of any Act of the Council shall be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the law of any Colony affected thereby, the former shall prevail, and the latter shall, so far as such repugnancy or inconsistency extends, have no operation.

Council may make standing orders.

23. The Council may from time to time make and adopt such standing rules and orders as may be necessary for the conduct of its business, and all such rules and orders shall be binding on the Members of the Council.

Committees may be appointed.

24. The Council may appoint temporary or permanent Committees of its Members, to perform such duties, whether during the Session of the Council or when the Council is not in Session, as may be referred to them by the Council.

Council may appoint officers.

25. The Council may appoint such officers and servants as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its business, and may direct the payment to them of such remuneration as it may think fit.

Expenditure.

26. The necessary expenditure incurred by the Council shall be defrayed in the first instance by the Colony wherein the expenditure is incurred, and shall be ultimately contributed and paid by the several Colonies in proportion to their population. The amounts payable by the several Colonies shall be assessed and apportioned, in case of difference, by the Governor of the Colony of Tasmania.

Enforcement of payment.

27. It shall be the duty of the Governor of each Colony to direct the payment by the Colonial Treasurer or other proper officer of the Colony of the amount of the contribution payable by such Colony under the provisions of the preceding section.

Proof of proceedings.

28. Whenever it shall be necessary to prove the proceedings of the Council in any Court of Justice, or otherwise, a certified copy of such proceedings under the hand of the clerk or other officer appointed in that behalf by the Council shall be conclusive evidence of the proceedings appearing by such copy to have been had or taken.

Council may make representations to Her Majesty.

29. The Council may make such representations or recommendations to Her Majesty as it may think fit with respect to any matters of general Australasian interest, or to the relations of Her Majesty's Possessions in Australasia with the possessions of Foreign Powers.

Commencement of Act.

30. This Act shall not come into operation in respect of any Colony until the Legislature of such Colony shall have passed an Act or Ordinance declaring that the same shall be in force therein, and appointing a day on and from which such operation shall take effect, nor until four Colonies at the least shall have passed such Act or Ordinance.

Short title.

31. This Act shall be styled and may be cited as the "Federal Council of Australasia Act, 1884."

THE SCHEDULE.

I do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria and Her Successors in the Sovereignty of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: So help me God.

NOTE: The name of the Sovereign of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the time being is to be substituted from time to time, with proper terms of reference thereto.

Mr. DIBBS' motion was amended as follows and adopted :—

That the Governments represented at the Convention pledge themselves to invite the Legislatures of their respective Colonies to pass Addresses to Her Majesty praying that she may be pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament for the purpose of constituting a Federal Council upon the basis of the Draft Bill adopted by this Convention.

NOTE.—The Representative of Western Australia stated that, while personally concurring in this resolution, he did not feel at liberty to record his vote.

Sir G. WM. DES VŒUX moved, pursuant to notice, viz. :—

This Convention desires to express to Her Majesty's Government its emphatic opinion that, wherever Her Majesty's jurisdiction or dominion may be established in New Guinea and the Pacific Islands, purchases of land from the natives should be discouraged, and if allowed at all should be placed under most stringent regulations.

This Convention is further of opinion that pretended purchases of land unaccompanied by actual and substantial occupation should not be recognized.

After discussion, Mr. Service moved, and it was resolved that Sir G. William Des Vœux, Mr. Bray, Mr. Whitaker, and Mr. Griffith be appointed a Committee to frame a Resolution based upon the said motion.

MR. GIBLIN moved, pursuant to Notice, viz.,—

That the Premiers of the Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, and Victoria be appointed a Committee to watch over all matters relating to the subjects discussed at this Convention, and to assist in forwarding the adoption of its recommendations. That such Committee be authorized, if they find it necessary, to call the Convention together, at such time and place as they may agree, and that the Honorable JAMES SERVICE be requested to act as Chairman of such Committee.

which was agreed to.

Mr. BRAY gave Notice of the following motion :—

That His Excellency the Governor be respectfully requested to transmit to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies copies of the proceedings of this Convention.

The President intimated to the Convention that he had received a communication from certain gentlemen on the subject of the representation of the Colony of Fiji at the Convention.

The Convention adjourned at 4 o'clock.

At the Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney.

Private Secretary.

7/12/83.

“Resolutions of Convention will receive early and careful consideration. Can Colonies supply number of, and particulars of escaped New Caledonia convicts arrested in Colonies”?

“DERBY.”

Mr. Dalley drew the attention of the Convention to the subject of the necessity that exists for another Telegraph Cable, and after discussion it was agreed that further information should be obtained before finally dealing with the matter.

The Committee appointed to frame a Resolution based upon Sir G. William Des Vœux's motion brought up the following Resolution, which was agreed to, viz. :—

That, in the opinion of this Convention, no purchases or pretended purchases of land made before the establishment of British jurisdiction or dominion in New Guinea or other islands of the Pacific not having a recognized Government, should be acknowledged, except in respect of small areas of land actually occupied for Missionary or trading purposes; and further, that after the establishment of such jurisdiction or dominion, no acquisition of land should be permitted except through the Crown, and then only for the like purposes.

Mr. WHITAKER then proposed the following motion, of which he had previously given notice, which was agreed to :—

That, in the opinion of this Convention, the several Colonies of Australasia, in order to meet an imminent danger, should, without delay, pass a uniform Law to prevent the landing on their shores of persons from penal settlements in the Pacific, who have been convicted of crimes.

Mr.

Mr. SERVICE brought forward the Memorial presented to the Convention by the inhabitants of the Colony of Fiji, and moved :—

That the Convention having considered the said Memorial, is of opinion that clauses 2, 3, 4, and 6 thereof do not come within the scope of the Convention's powers or duties, and that clauses 1 and 5 have been carried out in the proposed Scheme of Federation.

Agreed to.

Mr. SERVICE then proposed :—That the following telegram be forwarded through Reuter's Agency to England :—

“The Convention closed its labours to-day and adjourned sine die, having passed the following Resolutions, in addition to those already forwarded, on the subject of relations with the islands of the Pacific” :—

- (1.) That this Convention, recognizing that the time has not yet arrived at which a complete Federal Union of the Australasian Colonies can be attained, but considering that there are many matters of general interest with respect to which united action would be advantageous, adopts the accompanying draft Bill for the Constitution of a Federal Council, as defining the matters upon which in its opinion such united action is both desirable and practicable at the present time, and as embodying the provisions best adapted to secure that object, so far as it is now capable of attainment.
- (2.) That the Governments represented at the Convention pledge themselves to invite the Legislatures of their respective Colonies to pass Addresses to Her Majesty praying that she may be pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament for the purpose of constituting a Federal Council upon the basis of the Draft Bill adopted by this Convention.
- (3.) That the Premiers of the Colonies of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmania, and Victoria be appointed a Standing Committee to watch over all matters relating to the subjects discussed at this Convention, and to assist in forwarding the adoption of its recommendations. That such Committee be authorized, if they find it necessary, to call the Convention together, at such time and place as they may agree, and that the Honorable JAMES SERVICE be requested to act as Chairman of such Committee.
- (4.) That, in the opinion of this Convention, no purchases or pretended purchases of land made before the establishment of British jurisdiction or dominion in New Guinea or other island of the Pacific not having a recognized Government, should be acknowledged, except in respect of land actually occupied for Missionary or trading purposes; and further, that after the establishment of such jurisdiction or dominion, no acquisition of land should be permitted except through the Crown, then only for the like purposes.
- (5.) That, in the opinion of this Convention, the several Colonies of Australasia, in order to meet an imminent danger, should without delay pass a uniform Law to prevent the landing on their shores of persons from penal settlements in the Pacific, who have been convicted of crimes.

Mr. BRAY then moved pursuant to notice :—

That His Excellency the Governor be respectfully requested to transmit to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies copies of the proceedings of this Convention.

Which was agreed to.

Mr. SERVICE moved (seconded by Mr. BRAY) :—

That the thanks of the Convention be given to Mr. Stuart for the services rendered by him as President of the Convention.

Agreed to unanimously.

The Convention then adjourned sine die.

(1.)

Sir, Pfahlert's Hotel, Sydney, 28 November, 1883.

I have the honor to request you to be kind enough to inform the members of the Intercolonial Conference that the Secretary of State has authorized the representation of Fiji, and has suggested the appointment of Mr. Thurston (the Colonial Secretary of Fiji) for that purpose, and with the specific and exclusive object of affording such information as the Conference may require.

I regret however to state that circumstances have precluded Mr. Thurston's attendance, he having been left by me in the administration of the Government of the Colony before the decision of the Secretary of State had become known.

At the same time, I trust that my own presence in New South Wales will preclude any practical inconvenience from the absence of a representative. Having a strong feeling of sympathy with those who have brought about the important meeting about to take place, I need scarcely say that it will not only be a duty but a pleasure to afford to the delegates of the other Australasian Colonies any information or assistance within my power.

I have, &c.,
G. WILLIAM DES VŒUX,
Governor of Fiji and Acting High Commissioner of the Western Pacific.

AFFAIRS OF FIJI.

Letter from Messrs. Leefe & Langton to The Chairman of the Conference.

Sir, Sydney, 28 November, 1883.

We take the earliest opportunity of informing you that we have been appointed by the European portion of the community of the Colony of Fiji to present a Memorial to the Conference, and to represent their views and feelings in regard to the inclusion of Fiji in any federation of the Australian Colonies.

We have the honor, therefore, to request that you will be good enough to bring the matter before the Conference at its first sitting, and to ask that we may be permitted to present the Memorial, and to represent the Memorialists at the Conference.

We have, &c.,
R. BECKWITH LEEFE.
EDWARD LANGTON.

(3.)

From Mr. Henry Cave of Levuka—Chairman of Public Meeting on affairs in Fiji.

Levuka, Fiji, 15 November, 1883.

To the Honorable the President, Australasian Federal Convention, Sydney, N.S.W.,—

Sir,

A numerously attended public meeting was held in this town on the 15th September last, with the object of taking action to express the strong and growing feeling of discontent at the mode in which the Government of this Colony is administered.

At

At the meeting a Local Committee was elected to give effect to the resolutions then passed, and at the same time a number of gentlemen resident in Australia were appointed to represent the Colonists of Fiji in the furtherance of the objects sought to be obtained.

A petition to Her Majesty the Queen and a memorial to your Convention were prepared, and these documents (copies of which I enclose herein) have received almost universal support and signature throughout the Colony.

At a second public meeting, held on Thursday last, the 8th instant, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

First.—That in view of the Government not being in a position to accept the invitation to represent the Colony of Fiji at the Federal Convention of Australasia, the Convention be requested to hear the representatives of this Colony, elected at a public meeting held in Levuka, on the 15th September last, in support of the Memorial addressed to the Convention by the white inhabitants of Fiji.

Second.—That this meeting, on behalf of the Colonists of Fiji, would express a hope that, notwithstanding the possible presence of an official or quasi-official representative of the Government of Fiji, that the memorialists will not be debarred (through their Committee) from giving expression to the feeling of the white inhabitants of Fiji, as regards the present political condition of the Colony.

Third.—That the Hon. R. B. Leefe be requested to proceed to Sydney as a special delegate to co-operate with the other gentlemen elected as a Committee to represent the Colonists of Fiji in Australia.

Fourth.—That the Chairman of this meeting be authorized to forward copies of the resolutions passed to the Chairman of the Australasian Federal Convention.

I have therefore now, in furtherance of the foregoing, only to express a hope that your Convention will accede to the request so made, and grant to the gentlemen appointed to represent the European Colonists of Fiji at the Convention of Australasian Delegates a hearing before the Convention.

The gentlemen appointed as a Committee, referred to in the foregoing paragraph, are the Honorables Messrs. Leefe, M'Evoy, and Langton, Dr. Chalmers, and Messrs. Ed. Knox (Colonial Sugar Company), W. K. Thomson, of Melbourne, and J. C. Smith, Sydney.

I have, &c.,

HENRY CAVE,

Chairman of Public Meeting.

8th November, 1883.

(4.)

AFFAIRS OF FIJI.

Mr. R. B. Leefe and others to The Chairman and Members of the Intercolonial Conference.

Gentlemen,

On behalf of the European inhabitants of Fiji, who are most earnest and unanimous in their desire for a political, as they already have a social and financial connection with the Australasian Colonies, we wish, with a due regard to the time at the disposal of the Convention, to endeavour to show why such a connection is desirable both for them and for Fiji, and why it is desirable also that the latter should form a part of the "Dominion of Australasia."

First, then, we would point out that the European portion of the inhabitants of the Colony we have the honor to represent were for the most part before they settled there Australian colonists, that they look upon Australia and New Zealand as their home, and naturally wish to be associated with those Colonies in any great political movement, and to throw in their lot with them, and they therefore desire to be included in and form part of federated Australasia.

Secondly,—That there is at present invested in Fiji at least £1,700,000 of Australasian capital; that nearly the whole of the produce of the Colony is sent to the Australian Colonies and New Zealand for sale, and that it would greatly encourage commercial enterprise, promote the profitable investment of Australasian capital, and inspire greater confidence, were Fiji in political union with them, and under the same general form of government.

Thirdly,—That it cannot be a matter of indifference to federated Australasia that there should be a weak and defenceless Colony in which so much of its capital is invested, so near to New Zealand, and still nearer to a portion of the territory sought to be annexed, and which, in the event of England being engaged in a great European war, and the naval forces withdrawn for service nearer home, would be at the mercy of any small force of the enemy, which otherwise would be included in the general system adopted for the defence of Australasia.

Fourthly,—In view of the difficulties in the way of the Polynesian labour traffic, and of the fact that from the islands sought to be brought within the scope of inquiry of the Convention, the greater portion of the immigrants employed in Queensland and Fiji are recruited, it is very desirable that, to prevent irregularities, the whole should be regulated by some system embracing all interested in the continued supply of this description of labour.

Fifthly,—We think it would be in the future a matter for deep regret if, at a time when a federation of the British people in these parts may be effected, in order to protect Australasia from a common danger, the feelings and interests of the community most concerned in the promotion of law and order in the Western Pacific should be disregarded.

For

For these and other reasons, we desire to impress on the Convention the desirability of embracing Fiji in any scheme which may be proposed for the federation of Australasia, or the annexation to them of the outlying islands, so necessary for the consolidation and protection of the future Dominion; and we trust that the Convention will find it compatible with its function to impress on the Imperial Government the advisability of giving effect to the views of the colonists of Fiji, as made known in this communication and in the fifth paragraph of the memorial already presented; and we now leave our case in the hands of the Convention, confident that it will receive the earnest and favourable consideration due to the importance of the subject.

MEMORIAL FROM INHABITANTS OF FIJI ON THE FEDERATION OF THE AUSTRALASIAN COLONIES.

MEMORIAL to the Honorable the President and the Members of the Federal Convention appointed to meet at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, in October next.

The Memorial of the inhabitants of the Colony of Fiji,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That your Memorialists are residents of the Crown Colony of Fiji, and regard the question of the ultimate federation of the Australasian Colonies as one of vital importance to the interests of this Colony.

That the system of Government adopted in a Crown Colony such as we have here is altogether opposed to the spirit of the age; that, to a great extent, it impedes the investment and employment of capital in developing the industrial resources of the country; that it checks the producing interests by unnecessary restrictions, and exercises such an unwholesome influence on every branch of industry that it has retarded rather than advanced the natural progress of the Colony.

That the Colony is self-supporting is evidenced by the fact that our revenue now amounts to £98,000 sterling, and the expenditure to £87,000 sterling; yet in its appropriation the people are denied any voice, and this, notwithstanding that the Legislative Council contains certain non-official members, nominated and appointed by the Governor, yet—such is the dominating influence of the executive and the official members of the Council—they are powerless for good, and can neither control the expenditure in any way nor are they permitted to interfere with any appointment to office within the Colony.

The geographical position of this Colony, its large and increasing business connections with New South Wales, Victoria, and New Zealand, has induced the inhabitants to come forward and beg that they may be allowed to place before the Conference, now shortly to sit, its political position and the many benefits which would accrue to the Colony and its people by the introduction of a more liberal form of Government, so that the advantages which the Australasian Colonies must derive from federation may be extended to Fiji, whether as an appanage of one or other of the Colonial Dependencies or otherwise, as the Conference may deem most advisable for the best interests and prosperity of this Colony and its people.

And your Memorialists solicit that the combined and powerful influence of the Convention will be exercised with the Imperial Authorities in procuring their consent to the incorporation of this Colony with federated Australasia.

With the object of securing the foregoing, or, if that be denied us, of obtaining some amelioration of the disabilities under which we labour through our present form of Government, your Memorialists have prepared and forwarded for presentation to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen a petition, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and it is prayed that the members of the Convention will assist the Petitioners in obtaining the objects of their petition.

To Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, &c., &c., &c.

This the humble Petition of the undersigned your Majesty's British subjects, resident in the Colony of Fiji,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

1. That your Petitioners are colonists of Fiji, and are largely interested, commercially and otherwise, in the present and future prosperity of the Colony.

2. That Fiji has been a British Colony since the 10th day of October, 1874.

3. That the present population of the Colony consists, it is estimated, of 110,000 native-born Fijians, and of 2,500 European and other foreign residents, exclusive of labourers introduced from other of the Pacific Islands and from India.

4. That the Government of the Colony is now administered by the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council.

5. That the Executive Council, as ordinarily constituted, consists of the Governor, the Colonial Secretary, the Attorney-General, the Receiver-General, and the Agent-General of Immigration.

6. That the Legislative Council consists of the Governor and his Executive Council, the Honorable the Chief Justice and other officials not Members of the Executive Council, with certain gentlemen not connected with the Government but who are nominees of the Crown.

7. That all laws and ordinances passed for the Government of the Colony are enacted by the Governor with the advice of the Legislative Council.

8. That the votes of the official Members of the Legislative Council are recorded as His Excellency may direct, notwithstanding that their personal opinion may be at variance with his own.

9. That no Member of the Legislative Council, other than the Governor, can propose any expenditure of money, nor reduce nor add to any amount proposed by him.

10. That since the constitution of the Government as now existing, no single ordinance has been passed when introduced by any non-official Member.

11. That the revenue of the Colony has now reached a total of at least £90,000 per annum; that the European inhabitants are the principal contributors directly or indirectly thereof, and that such revenue exceeds the present expenditure of the Colony.

12. That all appointments to offices and positions of emolument within the Colony are made by the Crown alone; that a reference to the appointments made for some years past will show that only an exceedingly small proportion of the offices created have been filled by residents in the Colony, and that in the great majority of instances preference has been given to cadets from England or Scotland, or persons from India.

13. That your Petitioners are denied all right of local self-government, and show that in the year 1877 provision was made for the appointment of a Town Board in Levuka, so constituted that such a proportion of members should be elected by the ratepayers as to give them a majority in the Town Council. That this system worked successfully when tried in Levuka, but that for the management of the town of Suva an officer of the Government alone manages the municipal business of the town, and imposes and expends all rates.

14. That a reference to the statistics of the Colony and to other sources of information will show that the European colonists are as orderly, law-abiding, and well-conducted as any other subjects within your Majesty's dominions.

15. That your Majesty's subjects in this Colony are discontented and grieved that all right of being represented or heard in the Councils of this Colony is denied to them, and that they have no voice in the administration of the Government of the Colony, the enactment of its laws, or the public expenditure.

16. That, with few exceptions, the Ordinances of the Colony are introduced to the Legislative Council and passed without prior publicity having been given to them, so as to allow discussion, and objection, or suggestion thereto, to be made through the medium of the public Press, or in other ways through the non-official Members of the Council.

17. That the fact of the inhabitants of the Colony consisting of so large a proportion of native Fijians is no reason why the right ordinarily granted to British subjects of being represented in Colonial Councils of Government should be entirely denied to your Majesty's subjects in this Colony.

18. That, as there will shortly be assembled at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, a Convention of Representatives of the Australasian Colonies to consider the question of a General Federation of the Colonies, and the annexation of parts of New Guinea and also certain other islands or groups of islands in the Western Pacific, the time has therefore seemed to your Majesty's Petitioners opportune for praying from your Majesty's Government consideration of their present political position. In furtherance of which object your Petitioners have memorialized the said Convention now about to meet, and have requested them to assist your Petitioners in obtaining the objects herein set forth.

Your Petitioners therefore now most humbly pray:—

1. That your Majesty will see fit, in the event of the Australasian Colonies becoming federated, to constitute the Colony of Fiji an integral portion of Federated Australasia.
2. That in the event of such Federation not being now immediately accomplished, your Majesty will see fit to allow the Colony of Fiji to become incorporated with one of the Australasian Colonies as now existing, with the consent of such Colony.
3. Or, that your Majesty will see fit to grant to the British-born subjects resident within this Colony complete relief from the humiliating condition in which they are at present politically placed.
4. That such relief be granted with due regard to the preservation of all existing rights and privileges of the native races inhabiting this Colony.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will every pray, &c.

Dated in Levuka, Fiji, this 19th September, 1883.

ISLANDS IN THE PACIFIC OCEAN—ANNEXATION OF.

The Hawaiian Consul to The Chief Secretary, Tasmania.

Sir,

Hawaiian Consulate, Hobart, Tasmania, 10 November, 1883.

I have the honor to forward herewith, under cover of this letter, a protest on behalf of the Kingdom of Hawaii against annexation of the various islands in the Pacific Ocean. I shall be glad to hear that the Delegates from Tasmania attending the Conference to be held in Sydney early next month, on this important question, will bring this protest under the notice of the Delegates representing the other Australian Colonies.

The wish of the Hawaiian Government is, instead of annexation in the Pacific, that the four great Powers, viz., England, France, Germany, and America, should join in a protectorate over the various islands and archipelagoes of Polynesia, in a similar manner that Samoa has been governed, where Germany and the United States have for some years past jointly or separately exercised influence over public and native affairs. In fact a protectorate is now established in that group, England and Germany having entered into treaties with the King and the Government of Samoa, making that archipelago quite an independent State, and recognized as such by European diplomacy.

The Kingdom of Hawaii is, I believe, under the protection of England, France, and America, and is also recognized by the great Powers as an independent State. It is evidently the wish of the Hawaiian Government that the groups of islands in the Pacific Ocean should be under a protectorate rather than by being annexed by any one Power.

I have, &c.,

AUDLEY COOTE,

Hawaiian Consul.

Forwarded to the Honorable the Premier. This letter has not been acknowledged.—W.M. MOORE, 12 November, 1883.

PROTEST.

PROTEST.

WHEREAS His Hawaiian Majesty's Government being informed that certain Sovereign and Colonial States propose to annex various islands and archipelagoes of Polynesia, does hereby solemnly protest against such projects of annexation, as unjust to a simple and ignorant people, and subversive in their case of those conditions for favourable national development which have been so happily accorded to the Hawaiian nation.

The Hawaiian people, enjoying the blessings of national independence confirmed by the joint action of great and magnanimous States, ever ready to afford favourable opportunities for self-government, cannot be silent about or indifferent to acts of intervention in contiguous and kindred groups which menace their own situation. The Hawaiian people, encouraged by favourable political conditions, have cultivated and entertain a strong national sentiment, which leads them not only to cherish their own political State, but also inspires them with a desire to have extended to kindred, yet less favoured communities of Polynesia, like favourable opportunities for national development.

And whereas a Hawaiian Legislative Assembly, expressing unanimously the spirit of the nation, has declared that it was the duty of His Hawaiian Majesty's Government to proffer to kindred peoples and States of the Pacific an advisory assistance to aid them in securing opportunities for improving their political and social conditions: His Hawaiian Majesty's Government, responding to the national will and to the especial appeals of several Polynesian Chiefs, has sent a Special Commissioner to several of the Polynesian Chieftains and States, to advise them in their national affairs. And His Hawaiian Majesty's Government, speaking for the Hawaiian people, so happily prospering through national independence, makes earnest appeal to the Governments of great and enlightened States, that they will recognize the inalienable rights of the several native communities of Polynesia to enjoy opportunities for progress and self-government, and will guarantee to them the same favourable opportunities which have made Hawaii prosperous and happy, and which incite her national spirit to lift up a voice among the nations in behalf of sister islands and groups of Polynesia.

By order of His Majesty in Council,

WALTER M. GIBSON,

Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Iolani Palace, Honolulu, August 23, 1883.

THE PROTEST.

THE Legislative Assembly in 1880 adopted by unanimous vote a resolution recommending that His Majesty appoint a Royal Commissioner to the States and peoples of Polynesia, "who shall represent the enlightened, humane, and hospitable spirit of our Government and people to the kindred States of the Pacific Ocean." This Commissioner was authorized, in consequence of representations being made to the Government that abuses and mal-practices in the name of the Hawaiian Government had taken place in islands of western and central Polynesia, His Majesty's Government has recently carried out this recommendation of the National Legislature. The Government has been led furthermore, by various appeals and representations from chiefs and people to direct attention to the condition of several communities in Polynesia, and to endeavour to serve them by such action as will be deemed appropriate. Hence the Government has made a protest and an appeal now published by authority and to be submitted for the consideration of the great and enlightened Powers of the world who have interests in the Pacific Ocean. This protest has been forwarded to His Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington, to be by him laid before the Government of the United States, and it has been forwarded to Europe, and will be handed in person by His Majesty's especial envoy, Col. Iaukea, to the Foreign Ministers of the Governments of Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, Austria, and Italy; and to other Powers it will be forwarded through other channels.

The Chief Secretary, Tasmania, to The Hawaiian Consul, Hobart.

Sir,

Premier's Office, 14 November, 1883.

10 Nov., 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the date noted in the margin, forwarding a protest on behalf of the Kingdom of Hawaii against annexation of the various islands in the Pacific Ocean.

I have to state that your letter and its enclosure shall receive careful consideration.

I have, &c.,

W. R. GIBLIN.

The Hawaiian Consul, Hobart, to The Chief Secretary, Tasmania.

Dear Sir,

16 November, 1883.

Your letter in reply to mine, re annexation in the Pacific, is to hand, and you have told me it shall have your careful attention, for which I am obliged.

I should like to know if you will bring my letter and protest under the notice of the Delegates at the Conference; if not, please let me know in time, that I may write officially to the Chairman of Delegates at the Conference, in which case I shall be glad if you will return the protest, that I may enclose it.

If you can, please make it convenient that I may see you before you leave, re "annexation" and "cable duplication."

I telegraphed the Premier of Queensland, and also wrote him yesterday, and said I should be prepared to be in attendance at the Conference if necessary, as I see it is to be considered whether a short land line to connect the Queensland land lines with those of South Australia should not be gone on with.

Far better have another and independent cable (or system).

Yours faithfully,

AUDLEY COOTE.

The

The Chief Secretary, Tasmania, to The Hawaiian Consul, Hobart.

Sir,

Premier's Office, 20 November, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the date noted in the margin, ^{16 Nov., 1883.} and beg to inform you that I will lay the protest forwarded by you on behalf of the Kingdom of Hawaii before the Convention of Delegates which assemble at Sydney on the 28th inst.

I have, &c.,
W. R. GIBLIN.

NEW GUINEA AND NEW HEBRIDES.

From the Chairman of Congregational Union of New South Wales to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

Balmain, 26 November, 1883.

I am directed to forward to you the enclosed resolution, carried unanimously at the recent sittings of the Congregational Union of New South Wales, 18th October, 1883, and to request that you will lay it before the Annexation Convention about to be held in Sydney.

I remain, &c.,
A. G. FRY.

Resolution:—

It was moved by the Rev. James Jefferis, LL.B., seconded by the Rev. J. P. Sunderland, and carried unanimously:—

“That in the opinion of this Union it is in the highest degree important, in the interests of peace and of civil and religious freedom, that the Sovereignty of the British Empire should be paramount in the southern seas, and hence that the occupation of New Guinea and the New Hebrides by any other Power would be inimical to the future welfare of the Colonies of Australasia and that of the native races inhabiting these seas.”

NEW HEBRIDES MISSION—RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION OF CRIMINALS TO SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

Rev. J. G. PATON on behalf of New Hebrides Mission forwards petition towards annexation.

To the Hon. James Service, Premier of Victoria, and the Australasian Conference, about to meet in Sydney.

Sir,

In name of the New Hebrides missionaries and natives, being deputed by the synod, as senior missionary, to represent both in Australia at present, I protest against France being allowed, in accordance with her new convict law, to transport thousands of her lowest criminals and convicts to our South Sea Islands, as it would not only destroy the work of christianising and civilizing the islanders, but exterminate them, and be a prolific source of much evil to our Australian Colonies.

And as our missionaries and Christian natives have frequently petitioned Great Britain to annex their islands, and cast the shield of her fostering care over them, in the name of both parties we unite with all Australia now in pleading with Great Britain at once to annex the New Hebrides, New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon group, and all the unannexed islands between Queensland and Fiji, which form a complete chain round Australia, and are dependencies of it, and required to complete our Australian empire.

If Britain does not annex those islands, she cannot prevent France or any other nation making them convict settlements, by which they would become a constant source of crime and danger, and expense to Australia; and without annexing, Britain cannot suppress the Polynesian labour traffic, so steeped in blood and suffering, on the islands, even as now conducted, with its improved laws and regulations and agents.

For the following reasons I plead that our protest and petition ought to be received by you, and have some influence at the Sydney Conference:—

1. The vessels and men-of-war of at least five nations have been cruising among our islands for purposes of annexation; since by our mission labours they have been so far civilized as to render life and property comparatively safe on them; and their spacious harbours so well supplied with fresh water, their rich volcanic soil, and their great sugar, coffee, cotton, maize, copra, fibre, spice, and other tropical product-producing powers, make them such rich prizes and wealth-yielding sources, that if Britain does not annex them, undoubtedly some other nation soon will annex them, and neither France nor any other nation has spent a farthing on them for their good.

2. We plead for British annexation, because all the missions engaged in civilizing those islands, by giving them the Gospel, are British Societies, and all the two millions of money expended in doing all the good that has been done on them has been British money, per the Presbyterian, the Wesleyan, the Episcopalian, and the London Missionary Societies, by which the Bible has been translated and printed, and is now read in many formerly unknown languages; and by its teaching and elevating influences many thousands of savages and cannibals are now converted and living happy peaceful lives, serving Jesus, and longing for British protection and annexation.
3. Those islands are all dependencies of Australia, and we, British subjects on them, are part and parcel of Australia. The most of us are supported by Australian Churches. Our children are all educated in Australia, which will be their land and home. The five mission vessels, and all the missionaries of all our Societies on those islands depend upon and come to Australia for all their provisions and supplies. By our New Hebrides Mission alone we have spent over £150,000, and for it we now spend about £6,000 yearly in Australia. Our mission ship, the "Day-spring," was bought and is chiefly kept by the money of the Australian Sabbath-school children, while of our missionaries Victoria has supported three, New Zealand three, Tasmania one, New South Wales one, South Australia one, Scotland three, and Nova Scotia three; and seeing that, by great and continued persevering Christian labours, notwithstanding the trials, the dangers, and the loss of life suffered, from the death of John Williams to the three Gordons, Bishop Pattieson, and others, God has so blessed our labours with success that now about 8,000 on our group are under Christian instruction, and 70,000 ready and pleading for the British missionary to give them the Gospel, surely we have a right to be heard in pleading with Great Britain, through you and your Sydney Conference, to annex those islands, and protect us, our natives, and our philanthropic Christian work among them, and to protect Australia from all the evils sure to arise from any other nation annexing them.

Praying that God may guide your Conference with unanimity to plead for British annexation, and lead Britain to grant it, and praying that in all your consultations and conclusions He may guide you for His glory, the general good of Australia, of the Islands, and of all concerned,—

Nov. 5th, 1883, Cotham Road, Kew.

I remain, &c.,
JOHN G. PATON,
Senior Missionary, New Hebrides Mission.

RE ANNEXATION OR PROTECTORATE OF ISLANDS ADJACENT TO AUSTRALASIA.

The Rev. James Nish to The Honorable James Service.

Dear Sir,

Sandhurst, 29 November, 1883.

I have been instructed by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria to forward to you a copy of the accompanying resolution, with the view of having it submitted, if you may see fit, to the Conference of Representatives now met in Sydney.

I regret that the multiplicity of my engagements for the last eight days has led me inadvertently to overlook my instructions, but I hope it is not yet too late.

Trusting that you will be successful in your philanthropic efforts,—

I am, &c.,
JAMES NISH.

At Melbourne, and within the Assembly Hall, Collins-street, this 21st day of November, 1883, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria having met and been duly constituted.

Inter alia,

"The Assembly resolved to express their satisfaction that the Governments of the various Australasian Colonies are taking such vigorous action in favour of the British Annexation or Protectorate of the islands adjacent to Australasia, and most strongly to deprecate the landing of French convicts on the New Hebrides or even the allowing of these islands to come under French authority or influence, which would without doubt greatly hinder the progress of missionary work in the islands, increase the evils produced by the labour traffic, and blight the hopes which this Church entertains that before long all these islands now so open to missionaries shall be brought to the saving knowledge of the Gospel."

JAMES NISH, D.D.,
Clerk of Assembly.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGES TO EUROPE AND INDIA.

J. H. Haydon, Esq., to The Premier of Victoria.

Sir,

The Exchange, Melbourne, 27 November, 1883.

I have the honor to forward to you the following extract from the minutes of the meeting of the Committee of this Chamber held yesterday.

I have, &c.,
J. HARRY HAYDON,
Acting Secretary.

Extract.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted :—

“That this Chamber desires to memorialize the Convention of Australasian Delegates, urgently requesting them to take into consideration the present prohibitive cost of telegraphic messages to Europe and India in connection with the offer of the Chairman of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Company to reduce the charges, provided the Governments of the Australasian Colonies will pledge themselves to make good any loss of revenue occasioned by such reduction.”

J.H.H., A.S.

A. Bennett and J. H. Heaton, Esqs., to The President and Members of the Australasian Intercolonial Conference.

Gentlemen,

Sydney, Nov. 29, 1883.

We beg to submit for your consideration the following facts and propositions :—

1. That the present high rate for cable messages to and from Europe is prohibitory and hampers enterprise and business transactions generally.
2. That a second cable service is therefore required, and it should be owned by the Australasian Governments. [The present cables are entirely in the hands of European capitalists.]
3. That the combined Australasian Governments construct, at their own expense, but on borrowed capital, a telegraphic cable to England by the route suggested, in a valuable paper, by Mr. T. R. James, the Superintendent of Telegraphs for Victoria. This route avoids coral reefs, and is through deep and cool seas; it branches off from Western Australia to the Mauritius and the Cape, thence to Cape St. Vincent and on to England. The messages would be accelerated by this line, for in place of thirty-three preparing stations we should have only ten.
4. The distance by the proposed route does not exceed 12,000 miles, and the cost at £250 per mile would amount to £3,000,000 sterling. The interest on this sum at 5 per cent. would only amount to £150,000 per annum, a small sum when divided among five or seven Colonies.
5. The receipts, by the parties at present interested, for cable messages between England and Australia, amounted last year to £225,567, and for this year they promise to exceed a quarter of a million. For Press messages alone £20,000 annually is paid. Yet the average number of all messages, each way, did not reach seventy per day from and to the Australasian Colonies.
6. We propose that the charge on the projected Government line be 2s. 6d. per word at first [although we are convinced that 1s. per word would pay], and that the minimum charge be (for eight words) £1. By this arrangement business would be enormous, for hundreds of merchants and others, who are now prohibited by high charges, would use the cable, thereby saving months of time in correspondence by mail to and from England. It is a national work, and well worthy of the great representatives' attention who are now assembled in Conference.

We have, &c.,
ALFRED BENNETT.
J. HENNIKER HEATON.

RE PROPOSED REDUCTION OF TELEGRAPH CHARGES TO EUROPE.

Superintendent Shapley to The Chairman of the Intercolonial Conference.

La Pérouse Station, 27 November, 1883.

ON behalf of the Eastern Extension Australasia and China Telegraph Co. (Ld.), I have the honor to inform you that Mr. W. Grigor Taylor, the General Manager of this Company, is now on his way to Sydney from Singapore, for the purpose of placing himself in communication with the members of the Conference about to assemble in Sydney, with a view to afford any information which may be required during the discussion of the proposed reduction of the telegraph charges to Europe by the said Conference.

Mr. Taylor may be expected here early in December.

INTERCOLONIAL REMEDIES AGAINST DEBTORS.

Mr. J. B. Sheridan to The Secretary, Intercolonial Convention.

Sir,

71, King William-street, Adelaide, 30 November, 1883.

As I understand it is probable that the Conference may consider the question of intercolonial remedies against debtors, I beg to call your attention to apparently conflicting decisions between the Supreme Courts of South Australia and Victoria.

In Anderson v. Louttit, 2 S.A.L.R. 19, our Supreme Court decided that our Local Courts have jurisdiction in cases where persons are resident in the province, although the cause of action may have arisen abroad or on the high seas.

In Crooke v. Smith, 4 Vic. Law Rep. (Law) 95, the Supreme Court of Victoria decided, on language in the County Courts Act similar to that in our Local Courts Acts, that the County Courts have no jurisdiction in cases similar to the above.

The Acting Secretary, Chamber of Commerce, Melbourne, to The Hon. Jas. Service, M.L.A., Premier.

Sir,

The Exchange, 23 November, 1883.

I have the honor to request your favourable attention to the following resolution unanimously adopted by the Committee of this Chamber at its last meeting.

Your, &c.,
J. HARRY HAYDON,
Acting Secretary.

“That the Honorable the Premier be respectfully requested by this Chamber to place the question of absconding debtors on the list of subjects to be discussed at the approaching Federal Convention, with a view to having the same satisfactorily arranged.”

The above is a true copy of an extract from the Minutes of this Chamber.

J. H. HAYDON,
Acting Secretary.

RABBIT PLAGUE.

Jno. M. Creed, Esq., to The President of the Convention.

My dear Sir,

Athenæum Club, 5 December, 1883.

According to promise, I enclose you a copy of my letter on the “rabbit plague,” with suggested remedies. I think it is worthy the consideration of the representatives of the Colonies affected by the pest, and I shall feel greatly obliged if you see your way to bring the matter under the notice of the Conference.

I am, &c.,
JNO. M. CREED.

To the Editor of the Herald.

Sir,

So few persons outside the rabbit-infested districts seem to realize the national importance of the complete extirpation of this pest that I trust you will give me space in your journal for some few further remarks and suggestions.

By the Chief Inspector's report for the week ending November 21, it seems that out of forty-four inspectors thirty-two reported that during that week they had found upwards of a million and a half of acres infested. At the same rate, we may calculate that the twelve inspectors who have not reported have inspected another half million of acres in the like condition. As it is only reasonable to suppose that they only visit each portion of their district once in three weeks or a month, we may calculate that at the present time in New South Wales there are from six to eight million acres infested with rabbits. The report shows that during the same week one rabbit is known to have been destroyed to every 136 acres infested and inspected. If, in addition, we generously allow that as many more were destroyed by the saturation of their burrows with bi-sulphide of carbon, it seems that little more than three quarters of a rabbit per acre per annum are being got rid of, and that this is done with a staff of 289 men. This number it is intended to increase to 403 men when they can be obtained, so that when the utmost that is proposed to be done is carried out in its entirety a little over one-third more rabbits will be destroyed, and the magnificent result will be the destruction of a rabbit and a minute fraction per acre per annum.

I think the absurd futility of the means of destruction, as at present carried out, is obviously shown by these figures, for no one can doubt that ten times as many as are killed are left in a healthy vigorous condition to carry on the plague. The report also says that on twenty-five runs the rabbits are increasing, on nineteen are stationary, and that in seventy-three they are decreasing; but this can only be the case, even if true, during the time that the destruction is being vigorously carried on, and directly this ceases the trouble will, in a short time, be as bad as ever. I am informed by one of themselves that in the Wentworth district four station-holders are spending, and expect to continue to spend, at the rate of £20,000 per annum between them for the destruction of rabbits; that they feel assured that even this expenditure will only keep the pest within reasonable bounds and not extirpate it, and that, were they to lessen their expenditure, they would have to abandon their runs in a very short time, as being unable to carry any stock. That this is no imaginary fear is shown by the fact that, notwithstanding efforts at destruction, the Kulline run, which in 1880 cut 800 bales of wool, this year only cut 300 bales, the run being fully stocked in both years to its carrying capacity, the decrease being consequent on the multitude of rabbits.

As an example of the rapidity with which rabbits increase when free in suitable country, I am informed by a gentleman now in Sydney that sixteen years since he turned out on his run in New Zealand, believing he could keep the numbers within bounds, two pairs of rabbits. These, within three years, increased to such quantities that at least twelve men were kept constantly employed in their destruction, yet failed to do more than keep them from increasing. I am informed that the Government of New South Wales forbid the payment for destruction by a bonus per scalp for all destroyed, on the ground that then the men will only work in the thickly-infested places, and will leave those alone which have only a few rabbits on them until they have multiplied and established themselves, and that therefore it is better to pay by weekly wages. The disadvantage of this decision is—first, that it involves the employment of an overseer to superintend each gang of men, as many except when directly under his eye would cease work to lie on their backs in the shade; secondly, the men who would most frequently have opportunities to destroy rabbits on runs only commencing to be infested would be the boundary riders, stockmen, &c., in the course of their usual work, and the knowledge that the production of a rabbit scalp would entitle them to a small sum of money would keep them always on the lookout, so that the earlier comers would be destroyed before they became fully established.

I learn that some of the stockholders of the northern and north-eastern portion of the Colony are commencing to object to being taxed, because they say that the pest will never reach them. To show how little they are justified in thinking that their trouble will be long delayed, I may state that during the last eighteen months rabbits have spread from 200 to 250 miles further up the east bank of the Darling River, and that unless active and united measures are taken it will not take many years, at the same rate of progress, before they arrive (even supposing they only follow the course of the river) at New England, by the route of the Barwon and McIntyre. Did these gentlemen object to be specially taxed for this object merely because they are stockholders, and because the evil is a national one, concerning every man, woman, and child in the community, I think their objections would rest on a sounder basis.

With the foregoing figures and facts before them, no one will assert the destruction of rabbits by men with traps, poison, dogs, and guns will do more than keep the pest in partial subjection during the time that these measures are being actively carried on, and that to continue New South Wales as a wool-producing country it must never cease, so that the charge will be perpetual if no other means are employed. One of these, no doubt, is the turning loose of a number of the smaller carnivora, mongooses, ferrets, &c.; but until these are so numerous as to be in proportion of (say) 1 per cent. to the rabbits in the district, the effect will not be very marked, whilst, if they are so effective as to extirpate the rabbits, there will be numberless ferocious blood-thirsty little brutes half-starving and driven by hunger to destroy every head of poultry and young lambs, and to frequently attack children in the cradle, this latter being no imaginary risk, for even with the carefully-fed and caged ferrets in England every year a few newspaper paragraphs appear giving accounts of attacks on young children by ferrets which had escaped; and in India, I am informed on good authority that this frequently happens with the mongoose, which is much more fierce and bloodthirsty. As to the poultry, some of the inhabitants of Summer Hill can testify to its powers of destruction, as exemplified by one which recently escaped from the quarantine ground at that place.

In my opinion, the only really effective means to extirpate rabbits is by the spreading of a disease amongst them which will kill them off, and render the few survivors so weakly and degenerate as to be unable to propagate their species. This, I think, might be done without risk of the spread of the disease employed from them to man or the other animals. Tuberculosis would, I believe, be effective, and without serious risk. Its effectiveness and the amount of this risk could be easily determined by an experiment on a large scale, to be carried out, under proper supervision, on one of the islands in the Murray River, where rabbits are, and where the disease might be isolated until proved but slightly, or not at all, communicable to sheep also placed there. It must not be forgotten that it is now present in the flocks and herds of the Colony, and that numerous beasts suffering from it are slaughtered every day at the Sydney abattoirs. In addition to this experiment, a competent person or persons should be sent to Tasmania to inquire into the tuberculosis amongst rabbits said to be present on the Ellenthorpe Estate there.

Two American gentlemen, now in Sydney, tell me that in California, where hares used to be excessively numerous, during the last ten years they have been almost extirpated by a disease which, from their description, I believe to be a form of tuberculosis, and it is believed in a few years there will not be one left. They also tell me that, notwithstanding it is so fatal, and apparently so easily communicable to hares, it attacks no other animal. I may say that there are no wild rabbits, such as we have, in California, but it is probable that they, if brought into contact with the disease, would be equally susceptible to it, belonging as they do to so closely allied a species of the same genus. One of these gentlemen who leaves by the next mail for California, has promised to make every inquiry for me into this disease, will obtain preparations of its morbid manifestations in the animals, and will, if possible, bring with him on his return in March next, live specimens of hares infected, or rabbits inoculated from them, so that Mr. Willows, the Government Veterinarian, and myself may make inquiry into the pathology of the disease, with a view, if it is one that will be easily capable of being spread amongst rabbits, but difficult of communication to other animals, of utilizing it in their extirpation in the infected portions of the Colony.

So serious a national evil, however, should not be left to the efforts of private individuals for its remedy, but those of the Australasian Colonies who are infested should take united action, and offer a very large bonus for the discovery of some remedy, which should, before it was paid for, be shown to be effective in absolutely extirpating rabbits in some large district where it should be tried. I think that it would be possible to cultivate a special disease, which, after a time, should possess the characteristic of being easily intercommunicable and positively fatal amongst rabbits, yet not infectious to any other animal. This being arrived at the problem is solved, and the most terrible peril to their prosperity to which the Australasian Colonies have ever been exposed will have been averted. That the cultivation of some disease having such special characteristics is no mere chimera is shown by the report of Mr. Willows on anthrax amongst sheep in the Lachlan district. This disease which, in its ordinary form, is easily communicable between and rapidly fatal amongst all graminivorous animals, has become so modified by continuous transmission through sheep only that it is now in that district strictly confined to them, cattle and horses grazing in the infected paddocks without serious risk, though sheep often die within one hour after infection. It would probably require men having a special aptitude for such research to bring the project to a successful issue, and therefore to induce such men as Pasteur of France, and Kohn of Germany, to devote themselves for a sufficiently long time to this object, the sum offered should be large—perhaps, but for the magnitude of the benefit to be obtained, an amount which would be considered excessive.

The direct loss during last year from rabbits in New Zealand, Victoria, New South Wales, Tasmania, and South Australia was £2,800,000, and this loss is steadily increasing year by year under the present ineffective measures taken for their destruction. These Colonies should conjointly offer a bonus of £50,000 (less than 2 per cent. on the present annual loss) to the person or persons who should find out a means that, without unreasonable cost, shall, within a period of (say) three or five years from the time it is first commenced to be used, completely clear a given large district of the rabbits in it. The only means I think it possible by which this could be effected would be by the originating of some such disease as I have foreshadowed, the cost of destruction by which would when found out amount to only a few score pounds. The offering of such a sum as I suggest would enlist many of the best minds of the world in the inquiry, and would without doubt lead to good result. The expenditure would only be incurred if success were insured; and this being the case, £50,000 would be a very small sum as compared with the benefit received.

In addition to this, I would suggest that the New South Wales Government make such arrangement as would enable some competent gentlemen—and I would especially name Professor Anderson Stuart and Mr. Willows—to conduct an inquiry and carry out experiments with a similar object in view. Should they be the first successful discoverers, they should receive the reward, the cost at which the Government have been in enabling them to carry out their researches being first deducted.

Apologizing for the length of my letter, which I have found it impossible to make shorter,

I am, &c.,
JNO. M. CREED.

SELF-ACTING VERMIN AND RABBIT EXTERMINATOR.

Messrs. Stenhouse & Smith to The Secretary, Australasian Convention.

Sir,

Blenheim, N.Z., 15 November, 1883.

We have the honor of forwarding by book-post photos of our Stenhouse & Smith's Self-acting Gaseous Vermin and Rabbit Exterminator, with directions for use on back, and the copy of circular sent to the Colonial Secretary of each of the respective Australasian Governments, and shall deem it a favour your laying the matter before the Conference in due course for their consideration, as the rabbit pest has assumed such enormous proportions and hourly increasing, that if not dealt with by the most approved method of extirpation the evil will develop into a national calamity.

The main features of our invention are—their fatal effects, and adaptability to any position or circumstance where accessible; their construction so suitable for transit; the costs connected with working them so small, being self-acting, and devoid of anything appertaining to machinery; no danger of getting out out of repair, unless done purposely; purely and simply draughtacting on the generated sulphurous acid in the machine, driving the fatal fumes at once (while setting it) through all the main channels; the smoke emitted indicating the connection with the hole the machine is applied to; excluding any fresh supply of oxygen from the side roads or pockets where the rabbits are by this time confined with no chance of escape, resulting in their death immediately they have exhausted the necessary oxygen required to maintain their life; that one man can easily manage a dozen of them, as in many cases the burrows are large and close together; that unless the operator capsizes the machine purposely or through extreme carelessness the liquid sulphur is perfectly safe and free from danger; that the machine is only a little over five (5) pounds weight, and when the nozzles require to be attached, where the ground is rough and uneven, they will suit any emergency; that so long as the machine is kept level, it can be set by fixing the hose in the rabbit hole, the body not requiring any support, owing to its construction and weight; that in dealing with watercourses on hill ground, the method is,—commence at the bottom and lay the machines one after the other at every gap where the smoke shows until the top is reached; and that when used in conjunction with poison laid where it is impossible to apply the machine. We flatter ourselves that there is nothing now in existence equal to the invention to cope with the pest.

From the primary idea emanating from the burning of a small quantity of flour sulphur in a lead-ladle, and studying draught, until its maturity, as represented in the photo, every advancement in construction has been practically and thoroughly tested in the burrows.

We have also the honor of intimating that at the Marlborough Agricultural and Pastoral Show, held at Blenheim on the 30th ult., the exterminator, with nozzles complete, was awarded by the judges the Society's special certificate and 20s. prize.

Trusting the foregoing will receive your favourable consideration during the sitting of the Conference,—

We have, &c.,
STENHOUSE & SMITH.

ASSISTANCE TOWARDS EXPLORATION OF NEW GUINEA.

The Hon. Secretary, Geographical Society of Australasia, to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

127, Macquarie-street, 27 November, 1883.

With reference to the proposition of the Hon. J. C. Bray, Premier of South Australia, that the question of joint assistance by the Australian Governments towards the exploration of New Guinea should be brought before the approaching Federal Conference (vide your communication of 4/9/83), and also to your enclosure of 7th instant, intimating that the £1,000 voted by the Victorian Parliament for such purpose is now available, I have the honor, by direction of the Council of the Geographical Society, to express its earnest hope that the question of combined action on the part of the Australian Governments may be placed upon record on the business papers of the Conference, in order that at a future time, when the political aspects of the matter have been finally settled, it may be understood that the Australian Colonies are prepared to co-operate with the Royal Geographical Society, under Imperial authorization, and in conjunction with the local Societies of Australia, in the matter of funds and other assistance.

I have, &c.,

RESEIGH MARTIN,

INTERCOLONIAL FREE TRADE IN COLONIAL WINE.

Mr. Rowan to The Chairman of the Intercolonial Convention.

St. Hubert's Wine Cellars, 75, Collins-street West, Melbourne, 1 December, 1883.

Sir,

I have the honor to bring under the notice of the Convention a question of vital importance to one of the staple industries of these Colonies—an industry which is yearly assuming proportions of greater magnitude, and which may—I might almost say must—dwarf all others in process of time, provided its expansion is not hindered by fiscal restrictions and by a policy of jealous provincialism.

In recommending the establishment of intercolonial free trade in wines of Australian growth, I venture to speak upon a question with which I am practically acquainted, and to which I have devoted a large amount of thought and consideration; and it is one that I approach not as a Victorian, but as an Australian; not as an individual vigneron, but as belonging to a numerous body of cultivators, who must feel impelled to efface the artificial boundary-lines which now separate us, no less from the dictates of patriotism than from the lower motives of self-interest.

That

That the southern half of this continent is qualified, and is probably destined, to become one of the chief vineyards of the world, is a conclusion pointed out alike by the character of our soil, by the nature of our climate, and by the remarkable success which has already attended the efforts of our vigneron to produce wines identical in all respects with the best vintages of France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Italy, and Hungary. As a branch of husbandry, it would be difficult to name one which possesses stronger claims upon the sympathy and support of the statesman, philanthropist, and political economist, whether as a factor of national wealth, as an occasion of individual prosperity, as a means of providing steady and remunerative employment for labour, which is light, agreeable, and healthy, or as a moralizing and sanitary agency. Acre for acre, a vineyard yields a larger return to the cultivator than land devoted to almost any other form of husbandry; and as each individual vine is an object of vigilant attention during its various stages of growth, the industry of the vigneron affords remunerative occupation to a greater number of persons on a given area than is yielded by the ordinary pursuits of agriculture. Moreover, the persons thus occupied are engaged in the open air, far removed from the vicious and morbid influences of large towns, and pursue their vocations under conditions favourable to health, cleanliness, and morality. Hence the industry is one which must be viewed with special favour by every one who is desirous of seeing these Colonies grow in wealth and population, and become the homes of a vigorous and virtuous population, exempt from the vices, diseases, and misery of the masses of human beings crowded into the most squalid quarters of the largest cities of the old world.

A wine-drinking people is proverbially a sober people; and the cause of temperance is undoubtedly promoted by the substitution of light, sound, and wholesome wines for intoxicating and often sophisticated spirits, and heavy and heady malt liquors, as a daily beverage; while the great medical and dietetic value of wines both in health and disease has been conclusively shown by Dr. F. E. Anstie, in his able treatise on this subject, reprinted from the Practitioner. Therefore, from a moral point of view, the vine deserves to flourish in these Colonies; but in order to do so, the great and growing industry on behalf of which I venture to address you should be exempted from all fiscal trammels, and the wine produced in any part of Australia should be permitted the freest circulation in every one of the Colonies. To impede or prevent that circulation by the imposition or retention of border duties is a policy, or rather an impolicy, which could only be paralleled by such a suppositious case as that of the Northern Departments of France levying duties upon the wines of Medoc, or the Western Departments placing an impost on those of Reims and Epernay. That such taxes actually were exacted up to the time of the illustrious Corbert is one of those humiliating facts upon which every Frenchman looks back with mingled feelings of wonder and commiseration. It belonged to the dark ages of national finance, and is admitted to have been a disgrace to the Government which sanctioned, and to the people who endured, so ridiculous and injurious a burden. The spectacle of the subjects of the same Sovereign treating each other as rivals and aliens is now admitted to have been a scandalous one—no one ventures to excuse or defend it. But are not border duties upon Australian wines equally indefensible, equally at variance with every sound maxim of political economy, and equally hostile to the substantial interests of the vine-grower, and to the healthy and steady development of the industry to which he is devoting his energies, and in which he has embarked his capital.

Each region of this continent, in so far as its viticultural area is concerned, produces wine of a distinctive character. South of the dividing range in Victoria the lighter varieties appear to be those for which the soil and climate are most appropriate and propitious; but as we travel northward, in this Colony, in New South Wales, and in South Australia, we find the wines to be richer, fuller in body, and containing a higher percentage of alcohol. These are the qualities which naturally recommend them for winter consumption in Victoria, and for general consumption in Tasmania and the midland and southern districts of New Zealand. On the other hand, the lighter and thinner wines of Victoria would be likely to be in considerable demand in the tropical and sub-tropical portions of this continent.

Speaking as one who has a large stake in the wine-growing interest in Victoria, I am prepared to welcome the freest and fullest competition with the vigneron of the other Colonies. For, if it should come to pass that they will find an important outlet for their wines here, I am perfectly confident that we should find a corresponding outlet for our own wines there; while I am no less certain that, in the absence of all artificial obstructions, the consumption of Australian wines would be doubled in a very short space of time. This has been the experience of other countries in regard to similar, and to staple articles of commerce; and I need hardly point out that, as all commerce resolves itself into an exchange of commodities, every expansion of it, whether by natural growth or by its release from fiscal restraints and hindrances, confers a twofold benefit—each of the two parties to the transactions reaps a solid advantage from it.

Intercolonial free-trade in wine has this substantial recommendation,—that it involves no concessions and entails no sacrifices in any direction, because the conditions of production, the cost of land, labour and material, plant and utensils, and the current interest on capital, are equalized in all the Colonies. There is no valid plea for handicapping any competitor—no reasonable pretext for isolation or exclusion; whatsoever may be the argument, for or against protection as applied to Australian industries, in relation to the outside world, they have no force whatever as regards our intercolonial transactions; in respect to these, we all stand upon the same footing—none of these Colonies on the mainland can possibly lose by the free exchange of the produce of their respective vineyards, while all would gain by that expansion of industry which, as I have said, is proved by experience to result from the relaxation or removal of fiscal burdens and Custom-house fetters.

But, as all changes, however desirable they may be in theory and however excellent they are likely to prove in practice, are sure to meet with the opposition of the timid, the conservative, and the unprogressive; I would respectfully venture to suggest the adoption of intercolonial free trade in Australian wines for a period not exceeding three years, as an experiment susceptible of abandonment at the expiration of that time, should it disappoint the expectation of its promoters, or be found to have operated injuriously to the vigneron of either Colony.

At the same time, I have not the slightest misgiving as to the complete success of the experiment, and I feel confident that there would be, on the contrary, a general consensus of opinion in favour of rendering the arrangement perpetual.

I have, &c.,

ANDREW ROWAN.

RE-STOCKING ISLANDS WITH FUR-SEALS.

The Hon. L. F. De Salis to The Hon. W. B. Dalley.

My dear Sir,

Union Club, Sydney, 3 December, 1883.

There is a most interesting article in the Quarterly Review of October, "A Monograph on the Sea Islands of Alaska," showing the value to United States of a couple of islands swarming with the Fur-Seals: these being properly economised, afford a permanent revenue to the United States, sufficing to pay the interest for the whole purchase money that Russia got for her American possessions. It is stated* that we also possess similar islands whereon the Fur-Seals could be re-stocked. I know you take interest in such matters. Should the Convention now sitting not act in this matter?

Yours sincerely,

L. FANE DE SALIS.

FEDERAL COURT OF APPEAL.

Mr. John Campbell to The Hon. James Service.

Sir,

Sussex-street, Sydney, 4 December, 1883.

I desire respectfully to ask you to bring the matter of the establishment of a Federal Court of Appeal before the Federal Convention now sitting. It is because from long and bitter experience I realize the great need of such a Court that I venture to move in the matter. Pure administration of justice is without doubt the highest function of Government. As things are at present, unscrupulous persons with sufficient money at command can place justice at defiance, while the poor and those of slender means have to give up in despair.

I am, &c.,

JOHN CAMPBELL.

MEMORANDUM FOR PRESIDENT OF CONVENTION AS TO ADMISSION OF MEMBERS UNACCREDITED BY GOVERNMENTS.

THE authority of the representative of any Colony must necessarily be one from his Government and cannot be derived in any other way, for the simple and conclusive reason that in no other way can it be known that he is a representative. His commission, except in the case of a Minister of the Crown of any Colony, is his sole title to take part in the Conference, and that document can only be issued by the Governor of the Colony which he represents. And thus every representative agent, in order to be received in that character, must be furnished either with a letter of credence containing a description of the power authorizing him to negotiate, or with such powers embodied in the form of letters-patent. Indeed, it is the invariable practice, at either Congresses, Conventions, or Conferences, for the representatives to reciprocally exchange copies of their powers on their assembling.

Under these circumstances, it seems altogether impossible to receive representatives of any Colonies who come to us without the credentials of the Governors of such Colonies.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION.

COMMISSIONS OF THE SEVERAL REPRESENTATIVES.

By His Excellency The Right Honorable LORD AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

To The Honorable ALEXANDER STUART, Esquire, Colonial Secretary of the Colony of New South Wales,—

GREETING :

WHEREAS it has been determined to hold a Conference of Representatives of the Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, New Zealand, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, Western Australia, and Fiji, which Conference is appointed to assemble in Sydney, in the said Colony of New South Wales, on the twenty-eighth day of the present month of November, to consider the questions of Federation of the Australian Colonies, the Annexation or Protectorate of Islands in the Pacific, and other subjects of intercolonial interest, with a view to mutual agreement on such questions to the common advantage of the said Colonies : Now, therefore I, LORD AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, the Governor aforesaid, do, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, hereby appoint you, the said ALEXANDER STUART, Colonial Secretary thereof, in conjunction with the Honorable GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, the Colonial Treasurer of the said Colony, and the Honorable WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, Q.C., the Attorney-General thereof, to represent and act in behalf of the Government of New South Wales in and at the said Conference ; and you are hereby authorized, in conjunction with the said GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, Esquire, and the said WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, to confer and deliberate with the other Representatives thereat assembling, and in the exercise of your joint judgment and discretion to execute in behalf of this Colony any agreement in the matters above cited which the Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, New Zealand, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, Western Australia, and Fiji, may by their representatives be prepared to execute ; and you are further authorized, in conjunction with the said GEORGE RICHARD DIBBS, Esquire, and the said WILLIAM BEDE DALLEY, to enter upon the discussion of, and to join in agreement upon any other matter relating to the aforesaid Colonies which may be submitted for the consideration of the aforesaid Conference.

Given under my Hand and the Seal of the Colony, at Government House, Sydney, this twenty-seventh day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, and in the forty-seventh year of Her Majesty's Reign.

By His Excellency's Command,

ALEX. STUART.

AUGUSTUS LOFTUS.

WM. F. DRUMMOND JERVOIS,

GOVERNOR.

To the Honorable HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON, a Member of the Executive Council of the Colony of New Zealand, and holding the office of Premier of the said Colony, and the Honorable FREDERICK WHITAKER, a Member of the Legislative Council of the said Colony,—

GREETING :—

WHEREAS a Conference is shortly to be held at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, of representatives from the several Colonies of Australasia, for the purpose of conferring on various matters of importance affecting the said Colonies in common : And whereas it is expedient that the Colony of New Zealand should be represented thereat : Now therefore, I, WILLIAM FRANCIS DRUMMOND JERVOIS, the

Governor

Governor of the Colony of New Zealand, having full confidence in the fidelity, ability, and discretion of you the said HARRY ALBERT ATKINSON and FREDERICK WHITAKER, do by these Presents appoint you and each of you to attend the said Conference so about to be held as aforesaid, and to take part in the proceedings thereat on behalf of the Colony of New Zealand.

Given under the hand of His Excellency SIR WILLIAM FRANCIS DRUMMOND JERVOIS, Lieutenant-General in Her Majesty's Army, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Companion of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, and issued under the Seal of the said Colony, at the Government House at Wellington, this twelfth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

THOMAS DICK,
Colonial Secretary.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Executive Council of Queensland.

At Government House, Brisbane, 21 November, 1883.

His Excellency the Governor in Council.

HIS EXCELLENCY the Governor, at the instance of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, lays before the Council the accompanying correspondence with reference to the proposed Intercolonial Conference to be held at Sydney, on the 28th instant, and having regard to the fact that none of the other Colonies intend to appoint a Member of the Parliamentary Opposition as a representative,—recommends that

The Honorable S. W. GRIFFITH, Q.C., Premier and Colonial Secretary, and The Honorable J. F. GARRICK, Q.C., Postmaster-General, be appointed to represent the Colony of Queensland at the Conference, with authority to confer upon any propositions that may be made with respect to the incorporation of New Guinea or other Islands of the Pacific with the British Empire, the Federal Union of the Australasian Colonies, united Australasian action with regard to Marine Defences or other matters, the establishment of a Federal Council for all or any of these objects, and any other matters of general Australasian interest that may be brought before the Conference, and on behalf of the Colony to propose or concur in any such resolutions or arguments or any of the subjects above-mentioned as they may think fit.

The Council advise as recommended immediate action.

By

By His Excellency Sir GEORGE CUMINE STRAHAN, Knight Commander of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Colony of Tasmania and its Dependencies.

To the Honorable WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN, Premier and Attorney-General of the Colony of Tasmania, and the Honorable NICHOLAS JOHN BROWN, Minister of Lands and Works of the Colony of Tasmania,—

GREETING :

WHEREAS representations have been made to Her Majesty the Queen, on the part of the several Colonies of Australasia, that it is desirable and necessary that Eastern New Guinea and certain Islands in the Western Pacific Ocean should be annexed by Her Majesty to the British Dominions; and that steps should be taken to prevent the importation of criminals in large numbers into New Caledonia and the adjacent Islands by the Government of France: And whereas, in reply to such representations, The Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies has, on behalf of Her said Majesty, suggested that the various Colonies should "Confer together, and make united recommendations" to Her Majesty's Government on the subject; and has further expressed a hope "that the time is not now distant when, in respect to such questions (if not for other purposes of Government), the Australasian Colonies will effectively combine together: And whereas it has accordingly been determined to hold a Convention of Delegates from the various Colonies for the purpose of conferring and resolving on the matters aforesaid; and such Convention has been appointed to assemble in Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, on the twenty-eighth day of November instant: Now therefore I, Sir GEORGE CUMINE STRAHAN, Knight Commander of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, the Governor aforesaid, do hereby appoint you, the said WILLIAM ROBERT GIBLIN and NICHOLAS JOHN BROWN, to represent and act on behalf of the Government of Tasmania in and at the said Convention: And you are hereby authorised to confer and deliberate with the other representatives thereat assembling: And in the exercise of your judgment and discretion to come to any decision or determination upon the several matters hereinbefore mentioned: And you are further authorized to represent this Colony in the consideration of any other Intercolonial matters which it may appear to the Convention advisable to consider, and to report to me what you shall have done in the premises as soon as practicable after the proceedings of the said Convention have terminated.

Given under my Hand and the Seal of the Colony of Tasmania, at Hobart, this twentieth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

GEO. C. STRAHAN.

By His Excellency's Command,
WM. MOORE, Chief Secretary.

By His Excellency the Most Honorable GEORGE AUGUSTUS CONSTANTINE, Marquis of Normanby, Earl of Mulgrave, Viscount Normanby, and Baron Mulgrave of Mulgrave, all in the County of York, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, and Baron Mulgrave of New Ross, in the County of Wexford, in the Peerage of Ireland, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Colony of Victoria and its Dependencies, &c., &c., &c.

To the Honorable JAMES SERVICE, M.P., Premier, Treasurer, and Minister of Public Instruction, of the Colony of Victoria; the Honorable GRAHAM BERRY, M.P., Chief Secretary and Postmaster-General of the Colony of Victoria; and the Honorable GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, M.P., Attorney-General of the Colony of Victoria,—

GREETING :—

WHEREAS it is of vital importance to the future well-being of Australasia that Eastern New Guinea and the Western Pacific Islands, from the Equator to the New Hebrides, should not fall into the hands of any foreign power: And whereas the occupation of these lands by any other power than the mother country would be a standing menace and a source of common danger to all the Australasian Colonies, inasmuch as such Power, in the event of European complications, might destroy or seriously cripple the shipping trade and commerce of these colonies: And whereas it has been proposed by France to deport to her Colony of New Caledonia the vilest and worst of her criminals, whence they will necessarily overflow into the numerous islands of the Western Pacific, and many of them ultimately find their way into the different Colonies of Australasia, to the great detriment and permanent injury of their inhabitants: And whereas, in response to an appeal made by these Colonies to the Imperial Government that the lands in question should be annexed to the Empire, the Secretary of State for the Colonies has suggested that the various Colonies should "confer together and make united recommendations" to the Imperial authorities on the subject, and has further expressed a hope that "the time is not now distant when in respect to such questions (if not for other purposes of Government) the Australasian Colonies will effectively combine together: And whereas it has been determined to hold a Convention of delegates from the said Colonies for the purpose of conferring and resolving on the matters aforesaid, and such Convention has been appointed to assemble in Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, on the twenty-eighth day of November instant: Now therefore I, GEORGE AUGUSTUS CONSTANTINE, Marquis of Normanby, the Governor aforesaid, do, with the advice of the Executive Council, hereby appoint you, the said JAMES SERVICE, GRAHAM BERRY, and GEORGE BRISCOE KERFERD, to represent and act on behalf of the Government of Victoria, in and at the said Convention:

And

And you are hereby authorized to confer and deliberate with the other Representatives thereat assembling, and, in the exercise of your judgment and discretion, to come to any decision or determination upon the several matters hereinbefore mentioned: And you are further authorized to represent this Colony in the consideration of any other intercolonial matters which it may appear to the Convention advisable to consider.

Given under my hand and the Seal of the Colony, at Melbourne, in the said Colony, this twenty-third day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, and in the forty-seventh year of Her Majesty's Reign.

By His Excellency's Command,

JAMES SERVICE.

NORMANBY.

Telegram from Colonial Secretary of Queensland to Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Brisbane, 18 April, 1883.

I FEAR undue pressure upon Imperial Government to repudiate the annexation of New Guinea. I shall be obliged if you will cable your Agent-General to inform Lord Derby that our action is approved by the people of New South Wales. Had we by a policy of inaction allowed a foreign Power to annex the island, it would have been nothing short of a national calamity, for which we, by shirking responsibility, should have been highly blameworthy.

My dear Sir,

Sydney, 8 June, 1883.

I received your telegram. I have not heard any rumour of France taking hold of the islands of late years. It has always been supposed she would form New Caledonia as a centre gradually about the New Hebrides. Surprised she has not long ago.

A further extension of foreign power in these seas is to be deprecated, and therefore I have sent our Agent-General a telegram as on other side, although I see no immediate prospect either of the French or of our own Imperial authorities moving in it. Vide No. 11

I have also submitted your telegram to Lord Augustus Loftus, with the suggestion that he will be good enough to convey similar views to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Lord Derby expressed himself impressed with the gravity of the question, and discussed the subject at some length with the Agents-General; and requested them to embody their views in a joint statement, which he undertook to place before the Cabinet.

Mr. Evelyn Ashley, M.P., one of the Under-Secretaries of State, was present during our interview.

You will notice that the letter is not signed by Sir Arthur Blyth, the Agent-General for South Australia, his Government having instructed him that they did not concur in the views of the other Colonies with regard to annexation or the establishment of a protectorate over the New Hebrides and the other islands in the Pacific, whilst they were favourable to the annexation of New Guinea.

No. 21.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Colonial Secretary of Queensland.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 31 July, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 17th instant, communicating to me the views of your Government, as expressed in a minute of your Executive Council, upon the refusal of the Imperial Government to confirm the annexation of New Guinea.

In reply, I desire at the outset to assure you that I deprecate as much as any one that New Guinea should ever be taken possession of by any foreign Power, as it not only would tend to cripple the trade in Torres Straits, which has proved a beneficial enterprise both to your Colony and to ours, but would at all times, and especially in any European conflict, be highly inconvenient and menacing to the whole Australian group.

Holding this view, I had no hesitation in sending, in April last, instructions to our Agent-General to state to Lord Derby that this Colony viewed with the utmost favour the annexation of New Guinea by the British Crown, in place of permitting any foreign Power to take possession of it or obtain further footing therein.

While strongly holding these views, I am not altogether surprised at the attitude taken by Lord Derby, because it seems to me that, while deeply impressed yourself with the danger to be apprehended of immediate foreign aggressive movement upon the island, you have not very definitely shown to Lord Derby the grounds for your fears, but have urged him to accept your strong feelings as evidencing the fact, rather than submitted definite proofs of the facts themselves, or pointed out sufficient overt acts of any foreign Power upon which he could come to the same conviction as yourself.

I take a somewhat different view from you with regard to the expense of annexation. It is contrary to the English genius of colonization to be content with exhibiting the mere nominal symbol of her flag. When England annexes she must govern—she must rule. She cannot be content with the "laissez faire" system which you point out as having been followed by the Dutch,—not interfering with the aborigines, but waiting and simply holding the country as against any other Power. It seems to me, therefore, to be unwise to brush aside the matter of expense as a mere fancy; it should, on the contrary, be fairly looked at, and a division suggested as to the proportions to be borne by the countries interested. The Imperial interests are probably as great as the Australian, and the Colonies would doubtless respond to any liberal basis for its apportionment.

I have always looked upon the question of Federation as one which would not probably assume a definite shape until the outward pressure of some common danger compelled the various Colonies to sink many minor differences and jealousies in the necessity for combined action for common safety. Whether such danger exists in the present refusal by the Imperial Government to recognize the action you have taken with regard to New Guinea, I feel hardly called upon at present to decide; but I gladly accede to your suggestion that the question of Federation should be discussed by the Colonies, and if it be considered that the present is a fitting time, then that such discussion should take the form of putting forward the basis on which a Federal Government could be constituted.

This Government is also prepared to accede to your request to urge upon the Imperial Government that it is desirable that the question of annexation be reconsidered; and with that view I have addressed a letter, inviting His Excellency Lord Augustus Loftus to lay our views before the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and of such letter I beg to hand you a copy.

The Colonial Secretary to His Excellency the Governor.

My Lord,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 August, 1883.

I have the honor to address you on the subject of New Guinea annexation, with the view of inviting your Excellency to convey to the Secretary of State for the Colonies the views of this Government.

I beg to enclose a copy of a communication received from Sir T. M'Ilwraith, with a minute of the Executive Council of Queensland, and of my reply thereto. See Nos. 19 & 21

I would respectfully urge a reconsideration of the question by the Imperial Government, because that although I am not prepared to say that there was an imminent prospect of New Guinea being taken possession of by any foreign Power, yet I do fear now that the prominence which has been given to the subject will of itself cause some nation to take it up as a strong strategic point in the future domination in these seas.

From its close proximity to the northern part of Queensland, and from the control over that important highway of commerce—Torres Straits, which would be given to any possessor of the southern shores of New Guinea, its occupation by a foreign nation might be, in the event of a European war, most disastrous to Australia, and therefore to British interests.

I was at one time inclined to think that a protectorate of the Southern Coast would have been sufficient, and even yet it may be so if its effect would be to keep any other nation from obtaining a footing; but if a protectorate be inefficient for that purpose it would be better to accept the annexation, so that there might be no ground for the future disquiet arising from foreign settlements so close upon our shores.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 25 August, 1883.

With reference to Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's circular letter, enclosing a minute of the Executive Council of Queensland, in which it is proposed that some concerted action should be taken, consequent on the refusal of the Imperial Government to annex New Guinea, and that a Convention of Delegates from the Colonies should be held "to discuss the basis on which a Federal Government could be constituted," I have the honor to inform you that, at the special request of Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith, Premier of Queensland, I have consented to act in the capacity of Convener of the proposed assembly of delegates.

Having learned that all the Colonies have replied to Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's circular, I now write with a view to ascertain what date would best suit the convenience of the various Colonies; and as a means of eliciting this, I beg to communicate my own suggestion, that the Convention should meet in Melbourne at a period in the ensuing month, say on the 25th proximo.

According to the information before me as to the sittings of the Parliaments in the different Colonies, this period would, for the convenience of the majority, be the most suitable, at least of any period within a reasonable time.

I beg also to suggest the desirability of giving this Convention a higher status than that of the Intercolonial Conferences hitherto held to discuss comparatively subordinate topics; and with this view, I propose that the number of delegates should be four from each Colony, and that these delegates should be of as generally representative a character as possible, of course any one Colony having the option of sending a less number, if that should be more convenient.

I propose sending a telegram to anticipate the arrival of this letter, in order to facilitate the despatch of an early reply.

I shall be obliged if you will similarly communicate by telegraph your answer.

My dear Mr. Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 27 August, 1883.

I received on Saturday your telegram asking me if 25th September would suit me to meet in Melbourne representatives from the other Colonies. I replied that it would not, but that I would write you to-day.

On Saturday night I received your second telegram, suggesting that to suit South Australia or Tasmania it should be end of October or beginning of November.

I regret to say that none of these times will suit us. Our Parliament meets early in October, and as our Land Bill is the first measure that will occupy our attention, and it is of overwhelming interest to this Colony, it will be quite impossible that any Minister can be absent at the time indicated by you.

Nor am I able at present to name a time, as our movements or arrangements must be guided by the mode in which our measure is received by Parliament.

Regretting that I am not able to give you a more satisfactory reply,—

My dear Mr. Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 29 August, 1883.

I am in receipt of yours of 27th, and regret exceedingly to find that you cannot make it convenient to name any time for the meeting of the Convention that would suit you.

This

This would seem to indicate an indefinite postponement of the meeting, which, under all the circumstances, is to be deeply regretted. The fact that you, like all the other Colonies, had accepted Sir T. M'Ilwraith's suggestion for a Convention was taken by me, and no doubt by him, as an indication that you meant to attend at some convenient time; and in sending a circular telegram to the other Colonies, I was influenced by a desire to consult as far as possible the convenience of all.

But now, when you put it that you cannot name a time, or any time, it seems to render the Convention at present impossible. This I think is to be greatly deplored; it will cast a damper over the movement throughout the whole of the Colonies, and will be regarded in England as an evidence that we are not all truly in earnest. My own feeling is that the occasion is one which would have justified the adjournment of the Parliament of any Colony for a fortnight.

I wish you would think over the matter again, and devise some means to go on. New South Wales is too important a factor in the Conference to be done without, but I think the other Colonies will scarcely be able to help feeling that, after being led up to the very point of fixing a date for the Convention, the whole thing is knocked on the head by New South Wales backing out of the agreement. I hope that you will see it in this light, and enable me by a quick wire on receipt yet to fix a suitable time.

Yours truly,
JAMES SERVICE.

Sir, Premier's Office, Hobart, 29 August, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, in reply to mine of the 3rd. * * * * *

I desire to thank you for the copies of your exceedingly interesting and valuable letter to Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith, and also for the copy of your despatch to Lord Loftus, on the subject of the annexation of New Guinea.

I may mention that I have informed Mr. Service that, if the proposed Conference is held in September, it is not likely that this Government can be represented; but that if the Conference is held in October, or later, we should wish to take part. The Premier of New Zealand has intimated, in reply to a message from me, that his Government proposes to send two delegates, and has wired Mr. Service that October will suit his Government. Should the Conference be fixed for the later date suggested, this Government would propose to send two delegates (as New Zealand intends to send only two), and not four as suggested by Mr. Service.

I have, &c.,

BE assured we have no desire to put a damper on views or wishes of the other Colonies. Your telegram to-day removes our difficulty of interfering with meeting of our Parliament, but apparently November suits South Australia and Tasmania better; moreover, grave constitutional difficulty appears to us to exist regarding Queensland meeting at present time, as her Government is under appeal to country. She was first to move in this matter, and her interests are, perhaps, more involved in New Guinea annexation question than those of any other Colony.

I THINK Queensland can probably surmount difficulty you mention. Am wiring there now, and will advise you reply. Can I fix any time now that will suit others, or must we meet before your Parliament opens, and if so when will that be?

No. 32.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Mr. Service, Sydney, 31 August, 1883.

I have to-day replied by telegram to your letter of 29th received this morning, and to your telegram of this day.

I and my colleagues have not held such strong views as you and Mr. McIlwraith upon the necessity of immediate federative action in formulating a system of Federal Government, merely because the Imperial Government has not seen its way to fall in at once with the action of Queensland in regard to annexation; but we have no wish to prevent in any way the fullest discussion of the whole question, when such is the evident wish of so many of our neighbours.

I have however pointed out what appears to me to be an important constitutional difficulty as regards the Colony most deeply interested, viz., Queensland. I do not see how she can constitutionally take part in so important a Conference, which I observe you elevate into the dignity of a Convention, until her recent or present appeal to the country has received a decisive stamp one way or the other from Parliament.

I think I am right in saying that it is in accordance with constitutional practice, that when a Ministry has made such an appeal, it only carries on necessary work pending the result; and that a measure fraught with such important results as are contemplated by some of you as possible from this Convention ought to remain until the appeal is finally settled.

Sir Thomas McIlwraith may be able to sustain his position with increased strength; and in that case the Convention would have the great benefit to be derived from his views on the question in which he has taken so deep an interest; but on the other hand, it is by no means impossible that he may have to give place to others in the guidance of the affairs of that Colony, and it would only be right and proper that such persons should have the opportunity of joining in so important an affair.

About November, I presume, that question will be decided; and as both South Australia and Tasmania wish it to be in that month, I think the views of all will be best met by your coming here at that time.

I remain, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

No. 34.

The Premier of Victoria to the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Mr. Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 4 September, 1883.

I am favoured with yours of 31st August. It has been quite evident to me that New South Wales did not feel so strongly on the federation and annexation question as we in Victoria do; and I must say that such should be the case surprises me a good deal. I could understand it so long as we were not threatened with annexation by France of some of the most important of the islands, and with the avowed intention of making them the receptacle for the moral filth of that country; but that any Australian can coolly contemplate an irruption of people into these parts, in comparison with whom the Goths and Vandals were civilized races, is to me quite incomprehensible.

But for these two dangers, which the recent action of the French Assembly has made imminent, we might have contented ourselves with nudging the old folks at home, at least for a time, although I do not believe in unnecessary and unmeaning delays in doing what is inevitable, and is better done soon than late.

The constitutional question re Queensland is one that concerns that Colony alone, I think. Should Sir T. McIlwraith not retain his position, the likelihood is that his successor would adopt his policy re annexation, as I think the Queenslanders are warmer on the subject than your people are: but if it were otherwise, what harm could ensue,—Queensland cannot be committed seriously without the consent of her Parliament.

I confess I will be sorry if we cannot arrange the Convention so as to have Sir Thomas present; it would matter less if I could imbue you with his ardour.

By the by, you credit me with elevating the proposed Conference into the dignity of a Convention. I cannot accept the honor. The word Convention was that used in the Minute of the Executive Council of Queensland, which was circulated to all the Colonies, and it was accepted by all of us I suppose. I have used it therefore as a matter of course.

I have wired to South Australia informing Mr. Bray that I purpose asking our Parliament to adjourn in beginning of October, if he will do the same, so that the Convention can meet then. If he does not agree, I confess I cannot see how it can meet for a good while to come. Queensland Parliament meets middle of November, and when could that Colony make it convenient to attend?

The people of England are at our back. If we are prompt and resolute, the battle is as good as won; if we are cool, or hesitating, or indifferent, I believe the New Hebrides, and probably some of the other groups, will be lost to us.

Yours very truly,

JAMES SERVICE.

No. 35.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Mr. Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 8 September, 1883.

Looking at the enthusiasm with which you have taken up the whole matter of annexation, I am not surprised that you should regard us as cold and impassive. It is not, however, that we are indifferent to the mode in which France may pour the refuse of her criminal classes into the islands to the eastward of us, but rather that we differ from you as to the best mode of meeting that threatened evil.

When you spoke to me in Melbourne upon the subject of New Hebrides, I mentioned to you that if it turned out, as I believed it would, that there was some sort of agreement or understanding between France and England that neither should take possession of the group, our action in urging annexation was in direct violation of such agreement, and might actually defeat the object we had at heart, by causing the French to use it as a justification for carrying out the annexation themselves.

Having

Having carefully watched the various phases of the movement, I am more convinced of the soundness of this view, and therefore it is that I am unable to join heartily with you, although I do not set up my own view as sufficient to warrant me in declining to hold conference with you and the other Colonies, as to the best course to be pursued in a more united manner by the whole group of Australasian Colonies.

I think you are taking a sanguine view when you say "the people of England are at our back." My own belief is that the people of England are comparatively indifferent whether the islands are annexed or not by England. To a certain portion of the community, any accession of territory by England is a subject of triumphant cry; such persons, however, often overlook the responsibility which such acquisition of territory brings with it,—a responsibility for the right administration of the islands themselves, and a responsibility to those other European nations who will not stand idly by, when we have laid violent hands upon the islands with which they have also been cultivating mercantile or trading relations.

It is because I see, or believe I see, some of these difficulties and responsibilities, that I do not enter upon the matter with the same impulsive spirit which you have brought to bear upon it, and thus it is that I seem to you to be "cool, hesitating, or indifferent."

I am strongly impressed with the idea that a protectorate by England over New Guinea, or at all events over its southern coast, and a joint protectorate by England and France over the New Hebrides and other groups of islands, would be the best and most practicable solution of the question. I believe that it would be more advantageous for us—I mean for the whole of the Australian Colonies—if the assurance were clear that no other nation would annex the islands, than that we should be saddled with the responsibility and expense of annexation; and moreover, I feel perfectly sure that whatever may be the feeling of France with regard to New Guinea (probably she would not care much about it), she would not allow us to annex the New Hebrides without a strong protest and struggle.

I do not undervalue the trade with those islands—personally I have been as much concerned in it as any man in the Colonies—but in the event of war they would be rather sources of weakness than of strength, having such a number of places to protect and defend; nor do I see where the annexation is to end; if the New Hebrides, then how about the Solomon group, the Santa Cruz, New Ireland, New Britain, and scores of others. Are we to annex them all, or are we to be content with the New Hebrides and New Guinea, and see France take up these intermediate groups as the outlets for her criminal classes?

I regret extremely to see the question complicated by injudicious letters of colonists in London, who speak of non-annexation by England involving alienation of the Colonies from the Mother Country. I hold, in contradistinction to such sentiments, that the Colonies are thoroughly loyal in their attachment to the old Country, and would best show their loyalty to her and to their own interests, if they were to content themselves at present with urging upon her the desirableness and necessity of coming to some arrangement with other maritime nations of Europe, that no one should take any overt steps towards annexation, but that free trade should be permitted to all, and that there should be combined action for the protection of that trade so far as it is legitimate, the suppression of what may be deemed illegitimate, and the regulation of what is commonly known as the labour trade upon principles of humanity and morality.

I have thought it right that, before we meet, you should know my views, which are shared by my colleagues, and to a great extent, I believe, commend themselves to a majority of the people in New South Wales.

I remain, &c.,
ALEX. STUART.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent-General.

My dear Samuel,

Sydney, 8 September, 1883.

I received duly your letter of 27th July, with copies of the joint letter of the Agents-General to Lord Derby, on the question of annexation.

I must compliment you all upon the able manner in which the historical statement of the matter is drawn up. I consider it a valuable addition to the literature of the subject, tracing, as it does, the chief points of interest in connection with that which has now culminated in a desire for annexation.

For my own part, I have not felt any strong desire to see the annexation policy carried out. I believe it would be far preferable if some arrangement could be come to whereby none of the maritime Powers should annex any of the islands; but so detrimental to colonial interests would be their occupation by foreign Powers, that, rather than leave such a contingency open, I would urge as strongly as any one that the Imperial Government should annex them; and thus it is that I telegraph to you to join with the other Agents-General in urging the Imperial Government to take some action in the matter.

In order that you may clearly understand my views, I enclose copy of correspondence I have had here with Sir Thomas Millwraith on the one hand and Mr. Service on the other.

We are to have a Conference here about the latter part of November, when the matter will be discussed in all its bearings, I have no doubt.

In New South Wales there is marked contrast between the feeling of the masses of the people and that which obtains in Victoria or in Queensland. I don't know whether we are more phlegmatic in our temperament than they are, but assuredly it would be a hard task to get up upon this subject the enthusiasm which is displayed by our neighbours on either side of us.

Believe me yours very truly,
ALEX. STUART.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent-General.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 11 September, 1883.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of 27th July last, enclosing copies of the communication laid before Lord Derby by the Agents-General, containing their views respecting the annexation of New Guinea and the New Hebrides, I have the honor to inform you that I recognize the value of the communication as an historical résumé of the subject.

2. The Government is more favourable to a protectorate than to annexation, the chief objects to be desired being—

1st. The prevention of any foreign Government taking possession of New Guinea.

2nd. The prevention of France or other nation annexing the New Hebrides, or sending the offscouring of its criminal classes to that or other island groups of the Western Pacific,—a process which would be hastened probably by our annexation.

No. 38.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary, New South-Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 11 September, 1883.

My circular letter of the 25th August was written with a view to ascertain what date would best suit the various Australasian Colonies for the meeting of the Convention which Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith, the Premier of Queensland, proposed should be held to discuss the two questions of the annexation of adjacent islands and the federation of the Australasian Colonies.

I have been since that date in constant telegraphic correspondence on this subject with the different Australasian Governments; and the result is, as already announced to you by my telegram of the 7th instant, that on collating the advices from the different Colonies, I am enabled to name the last week in November as the time most convenient for the meeting of the proposed Convention.

My telegram of the 7th instant will also have informed you that, to meet the convenience of the Sydney Government, who could not name any day on which it would be convenient for them to send delegates to Melbourne, I had suggested that Sydney should be the meeting-place. This has accordingly been arranged.

The precise date for the meeting of the Convention will be announced later on.

I beg now formally to invite your Government to appoint delegates to represent your Colony.

I find a slight difference of opinion amongst the Colonial Governments as to the number of delegates which should be appointed—some proposing four, some two. In my letter of the 25th August I suggested that each Colony should send four delegates. My reason for this was that on so important an occasion it seemed desirable that the delegation from each Colony should be thoroughly and fairly representative, not only of that party which may be at present in power but of all parties.

A precedent for this is found in the history of the formation of the Dominion of Canada, on which occasion parties and party leaders who had been long opposed coalesced for the purpose of forming that Federal Government which has so much enhanced the prosperity and importance of the Colonies united under it.

In view of the attention which this movement has received from the Imperial Government, as well as from the English Press and people, it seems to me especially desirable that the importance of the present occasion should not be under-estimated, and I feel that it would add greatly to the weight of the Convention's determinations if it were made a thoroughly representative body.

It is of course a question for each Colony to decide how many delegates it will send.

I have, &c.,

JAMES SERVICE,

Premier.

Re annexation of adjacent islands and Federation of Australian Colonies.

Sir,

Office of Colonial Secretary, Sydney, 18 September, 1883.

The time which you have ascertained by telegraphic communication with the other Colonies to be the most suitable one for the assembling of the proposed Convention will meet the convenience of this Government; and I await the announcement of the precise date, which you will doubtless make as early as you may be enabled to do so.

2. With reference to your invitation as to the appointment of delegates, and the suggestion contained in your letter of the 25th August that each Colony should send four delegates, I desire to make a few observations, which I am the more anxious to make without delay, in order that you may clearly understand in what light I regard the proposition.

3. You explain your reason for suggesting so unusually large a number of representatives, on the ground of the importance of the occasion, and the desirableness of securing the thoroughly representative character of the Convention, not only of the party which may be at present in power but of all parties.

4. While reciprocating your desire that the importance of the present occasion should not be under-estimated, I am unable, on purely constitutional grounds, to give my immediate assent to a proposal which I should have supposed to have been unprecedented, had I not been informed by you that it had been sanctioned in the preliminary steps taken for the establishment of the Dominion of Canada.

5. It appears to me that a Minister would hardly be justified in exposing himself in such a Convention to the peril of being outvoted by the representatives of a party directly opposed to his Government and yet that might be the situation in which he would find himself if he nominated as representatives those who differed with him on leading questions of public policy. And moreover, in the uncertainty of political affairs, it might very easily happen that, in nominating men who, in his judgment, at the present time occupied representative positions, he might fail to select those who, in the order of events, would become his successors in the Government; and, as I presume, this is one of the main reasons by which a course so exceptional could alone be justified. If there is any doubt about the object being attained, the thing itself could not on any constitutional ground be defended.

6. I feel sure that I should experience great difficulty in vindicating the adoption of a course of procedure which is certainly at variance with the principle of ministerial responsibility; and I am not quite satisfied that, were I convinced of the expediency of adopting it, I could make the necessary nominations, because of the great unwillingness of public men in this country to depart from well understood constitutional principles.

7. I am so anxious that you should be saved from embarrassment in your very difficult negotiations that I deem it right to place you in possession of my views upon a proposal which is certainly novel, not without danger, and as I think, some what impracticable.

I have, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

My dear Mr. Giblin,

20 September, 1883.

I replied at once to your telegram, and now send you copy of my reply to Mr. Service's circular, which pretty well explains my views. I have not yet had time to look up the particulars of the Canadian case alluded to; but it does seem to me to be against all constitutional practice that Ministers and their Opposition should be together on such a Conference. If a question were carried in which a Minister's view was defeated chiefly by the adverse view of a member of his own Colony's Opposition, how can he ask his own Colony's Parliament to affirm it?

The suggestion seems to me to be impracticable, and could only be otherwise were the rather visionary position to occur of an entire unanimity upon all questions brought before the Conference.

It is hardly to be expected that the leader of the Opposition would consent to place himself in the position, which would really be destructive of that wholesome criticism which it is one of the good effects of our Constitutional practice.

My own view is that two would be quite sufficient for each Colony to appoint, and these two should be members of the Government. Of course voting must be by Colonies and not by individuals.

REFERRING to my letter of 11th September, I now have the honor to announce Wednesday, the 28th November, as the day for the meeting at Sydney of the Convention respecting Annexation and Federation.

No. 48.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 9 October, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, in which you assent to the time named by me for the proposed Australasian Convention, and in which you deal with the proposal made in my letter of the 25th August, and further urged, in my letter of the 11th September, that the number of Delegates from each Colony should be at least four,—with a view to giving a fair representation of the whole Colony—not merely of the dominant political party.

2. I am glad to notice that, while stating your objections to this course, you only express your inability to give "immediate assent" thereto; from which I with pleasure infer that you are still open to approve of it if, after a due consideration of the objections you urge, sufficient reasons can be shown in favour of my proposal. I therefore proceed to a consideration of the points of objection submitted by you.

3. You state that a Minister would hardly be justified in exposing himself to the peril of being outvoted in the Convention, by the representatives of a party directly opposed to his Government. Now I do not see how this could possibly happen. In appointing Representatives to the Convention, the Government of each Colony, representing as it necessarily does the majority in Parliament, would be justified, if it thought proper, in nominating a majority of Representatives from its own party,—or, in selecting from the Opposition gentlemen whose views of the subject matters of the Convention were known to accord with those of the Government. That being so, the vote of such Colony in the Convention (for I presume voting must be by Colonies and not by individuals) would be determined according to the mind of the Government. This objection therefore disappears.

4. With regard to the course proposed by me being at variance with the principle of ministerial responsibility and well understood constitutional principles, it is requisite to bear in mind that the occasion is one not within the lines of ordinary constitutional procedure, but is outside the sphere of domestic politics altogether. The Convention finds no place in our Parliamentary system, and so far from being part of our Constitution, its very object is to lay the basis of another Constitution—a Federal one. The occasion being thus exceptional, I think we must be prepared to admit modes of action which may indeed appear novel, but which may really be the best adapted to accomplish the object in view.

5. That the foregoing is the view which was taken by all the leading men in the British North American provinces, without a single exception, is evidenced by the fact that each of the separate Colonies sent to the Convention at Charlottetown, about an equal number of Representatives from the Government and the Opposition. The Honorable Dr. Gray, in his History of the Confederation, says, vol. 1, page 29 :—

"In order that the question of their union might as much as possible be removed beyond the pale of party conflict, the Delegates to attend the Convention at Charlottetown were selected from the Liberal and Conservative ranks alike. Dr. Tupper, the leader of the Government of Nova Scotia, with his own colleague, Attorney-General Henry, and Mr. Dickey, a Conservative supporter, had included the Hons. Adams G. Archibald and Jonathan M'Cully, long and well-known leaders of the Liberal party. Mr. Tilley, the leader of the Government in New Brunswick, with his own colleagues, Messrs. Johnson and Steves, had included the Hons. Edward Barron Chandler and John Hamilton Gray, prominent and well known leaders of the Conservative party there; whilst in Prince Edward Island, the Premier had with equal consideration selected the Island delegates from both sides of the House. The recommendations of the respective Governments were approved by the Lieutenant-Governors, and the Convention was opened in due form at Charlottetown, September 8th, in the Chamber of the House of Assembly."

In the case of the Canadian Provinces, it was at first proposed that a Royal Commission should be formed to consist of an equal number of Members of the Government and of the Opposition, and this was only set aside because the Opposition and the Government coalesced for the purpose of Confederation.

6. The case of the Canadian Dominion therefore furnishes a powerful precedent.

There can be no doubt that the spectacle of a Convention representing the leading parties in each of the Colonies would have a much more imposing effect—because possessing a greater significance—than one based on party lines.

7. To regard a matter of this sort as in any sense a party one deprives it of all its special value. The fact of doing so would imply that there is a party in the Colony which is opposed to the objects of the Convention. If such exist, it may of course one day possess the ascendancy, and therefore the voice of a Convention based on party lines would, instead of being a national one, be merely the ephemeral utterance of the dominant party, and could not make the commanding claim to the attention of the Mother-country which a really National Council could assert. Here in Victoria our Parliament is unanimous—without a single dissident. In New Zealand the case seems very much the same. In Queensland I have reason to believe and I most assuredly hope that that Colony will be represented by the leaders of both parties, and I hope that New South Wales and the other Colonies may see their way to follow suit.

Sydney, 17 October, 1883.

I have attentively considered all the arguments put forward in yours of 9th instant.

It seems to me that you practically give up the position, when you say that the Government might select from the Opposition gentlemen whose views were known to accord on this matter with those of the Government. This seems to me to be somewhat at variance with the views propounded in your letter of 11th ultimo, in which you considered that all parties in each Legislature should be represented.

If the Members of the Opposition are merely to be echoes of the Ministerial Members (while those holding other views are left out), then I think my argument in favour of only Ministerial Members is greatly strengthened. I would test it thus: If the Convention were to arrive at the conclusion that federation is desirable and ought to be carried out, it can go no further, but has finished its work; and the Representatives of each Colony must then return to their respective Legislatures for acquiescence in the resolutions, and be then armed with powers to carry the same into effect. If the views of the Opposition accord with those of the Government, the acquiescence will be given as readily as if they had been present at the Convention; but if the Opposition views be adverse, it is surely better that the difference be fought out on the constitutional arena rather than in the Conference.

I could agree better with your fourth paragraph, with one alteration, and that is, if it be decided that a Federal Constitution is to be prepared, then I can quite understand that it would be desirable to have men of both sides engaged in raising a common platform on which we could all stand; and this, I think, is the true application of the Canadian precedent. Practically all the Colonies now united in the Dominion had expressed the opinion that the time had arrived for federation, and they were appointed to give effect to that opinion. The

The Australasian case differs in the important point that the Colonies here have not unanimously expressed an opinion that the time has arrived. We have all more or less expressed our opinion that the time will come; but there has been, so far as I can judge, no general consensus of opinion that the time has arrived.

I think that some misapprehension has arisen from the use of the word "Convention" instead of the more usual word "Conference"; i.e., we meet for the purpose of exchanging our views and endeavouring to put forward a scheme which we can submit to our respective Legislatures; and if they agree thereto, and appoint delegates to carry the views into effect, the meeting of that legislatively-created body would be better entitled to the name of Convention, which is, in diplomatic usage, as I believe, more usually applied to a body summoned to carry out in a binding manner something which has arisen out of a Conference, or out of negotiations.

I remain, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

No. 52.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Mr. Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 24 October, 1883.

Yours of the 17th to hand. I hardly know what position it is that you say "I practically give up" in suggesting that the Government might select from the Opposition gentlemen whose views were known to accord on this matter with those of the Government. This suggestion was made to meet a difficulty started by you that, if you selected members outside of the Government, you might be exposed to the peril of being outvoted in the Convention. The difficulty itself seemed and still seems to me an unreal one; but, if it be real, then it would be easily got over by the course I suggested. But if you mean that by such a suggestion I "give up" the position that it is desirable for the opposing parties in the various Colonies to be represented on the Convention, then I do not agree with you.

I think you and I are looking at this matter from different points of view. You assume that the question comes within the range of party politics, and so must be treated in a Constitutional, to wit, a Parliamentary manner. I assume that there is a substantial unanimity in your Parliament, as in ours, as to the desirability of federation; and the suggestion that the delegates should be chosen from both sides of the House is to give the outward and visible sign of that unanimity, as well as to secure the hearty co-operation of the leading statesmen, on whatever side of domestic politics they may range themselves.

The notable examples of the British North American Provinces show that my suggestion has a solid significance. In each and every case the delegates were selected in equal numbers from the Government and the Opposition. The question of being outvoted seems never to have occurred to the minds of the Governments of those Colonies; and they appear to have fully apprehended the moral effect of selecting delegates from both sides of the House.

Just imagine the difference in effect on the Home Government and the people of England which would be produced by the one and the other of the two following telegrams from Sydney:—

I.—"Mr. Stuart has carried his federation proposals by a considerable majority."

II.—"The New South Wales Parliament has unanimously agreed on the federation proposals submitted by the Government. Delegates will be chosen from both sides of the House."

The one represents a united and unanimous people; the other, a section dominant for the moment.

Unless there is a consensus of opinion * * * * * in favour of federation, then assuredly the time has not come for even a Convention; but the universal acquiescence in and acceptance of Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's proposal for a Convention surely indicated a conviction on the part of the various Governments that such a consensus did exist, and that all the Colonies were agreed as to the desirability of some sort of federal union, if existing conditions will permit it to be carried out.

I also differ from you somewhat as to the functions, and especially as to the limit of the functions of the coming Convention. You say, "If the Convention were to arrive at the conclusion that federation is desirable and ought to be carried out, it can go no further, but has finished its work," et cetera. My view is that the Colonies have already approved of the principle of federation, and that the business of the Convention will be to discover how far and on what points federal action can be carried out at present.

Your view of the Canadian, or rather the Charlotte Town Convention, is not, I think, borne out by its history. Probably at that time some of the North American Provinces were further advanced in the direction of a federal union than the Australian Colonies now are; but when the Maritime Provinces decided to hold a Convention, in 1864, all reasonable hopes of effecting any arrangement with the Canadian Provinces had been abandoned; and yet that Convention, to which, in the first instance, the Canadian Provinces were admitted on mere sufferance, resulted in the establishment of the Dominion.

You take exception to the use of the word "Convention," instead of the usual word "Conference." The word "Convention" was used in Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's original memorandum, and, as it seemed to have been accepted by all the Colonies in their replies, I have continued to use it.

The definition of the Charlotte Town Convention is thus given by the Hon. J. H. Gray, in his history, page 30:—

"It is to be borne in mind that this Convention was not a public representative body, having power to legislate, determine, or finally affect the public interests, but rather a Committee of public men deputed by their several Governments to inquire and report upon a proposition which might or might not ultimately be adopted, but which, before either its adoption or rejection, would be subject to a searching and exhaustive public discussion in the several Legislatures of the Provinces."

Now, I think this fairly describes the object of our meeting in Sydney next month, and the term "Convention" may as fairly be applied to it as to the meeting at Charlotte Town.

You

You say, "the Australasian case differs in the important point that the Colonies here have not unanimously expressed an opinion that the time has arrived. We have all more or less expressed our opinion that the time will come, but there has been, so far as I can judge, no general consensus of opinion that the time has arrived." Neither had the North American Provinces when their Convention met. As a matter of fact, New Brunswick drew back, and did not enter the Dominion for years after it was constituted. How can the Colonies express an opinion that the time has arrived, until they meet and discuss the matter? That the thing is desirable, if it can be done, must be assumed to be the feeling of all the Colonies, otherwise the sending of delegates is a delusion and the Convention a sham.

That confederation can now be effected in all its fullness I do not hope, but that some basis can be agreed on for a federal union of both a legislative and executive character, capable of dealing with those important questions which are immediately pressing, and which will gradually develop into a complete Australian Dominion, I have the greatest hopes, indeed I see no difficulty in the way if the various Colonies desire that it should be so.

Conferences hitherto have produced the minimum of results. Resolutions have been passed over and over again, but, as there existed no common legislative body to give them force, the greater part of them remain a dead letter.

A limited federation now would give practical effect to the wishes of the Colonies on those points on which they are agreed, and the basis would widen and grow as the advantages became manifest. A common danger (the outpouring of the moral filth of Europe into these seas), and a common desire (to save the islands of Australasia from the grasp of strangers) render federal action a necessity, and federal action is only possible by means of federal union of some sort.

I hope to have your hearty co-operation at the Convention in considering how this is best to be brought about, and the question as to how New South Wales should be represented I may now fairly leave to your own judgment.

Annexation of New Guinea, &c.

Resolutions adopted at a public meeting held in St. Stephen's Church, Phillip-st., Sydney, on Friday, October 12, 1883.

"1st—That this meeting strongly urges the annexation of the Islands of New Guinea and the New Hebrides, and the intervening islands, by the British Crown.

"2nd—That in view of the Convention to be held in Sydney in November next, a copy of the foregoing resolution be forwarded to the Hon. the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, in order to its being laid before the Government of New South Wales and also before the Intercolonial Convention."

Telegram from Premier of Victoria to Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Melbourne, 5 November, 1883.

OUR Agent-General telegraphs that Lord Derby has consented to representation of Fiji at Convention, and that he has telegraphed instructions accordingly. This is important, as it gives Imperial recognition to the Convention.

APPENDIX A.

[Enclosure to No. 15.]

The Premier of Victoria to His Excellency the Most Noble the Marquis of Normanby, G.C.M.G., &c.
(No. 67.) Proposed annexation of New Hebrides and adjacent islands.

My Lord,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 18 June, 1883.

With reference to the interview which I had with your Excellency on the 9th inst., respecting the desired annexation or protectorate of the New Hebrides and neighbouring islands, I now have the honor to transmit herewith to your Excellency, for the information of the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, certain documents bearing upon the subject in question.

The first is a letter from the Rev. D. Macdonald, a new Hebridean missionary, at present on a visit to this Colony, and (besides being interesting in itself) sets forth what, I submit, are cogent reasons why the British Empire should take possession of the islands in question.

I received the deputation proposed by Mr. Macdonald, and returned a reply, in substance the same as that contained in a newspaper report which forms my second enclosure.

Enclosure No. 3 gives a list, asked for by me when receiving the deputation, of the various petitions which have at different times been directly or indirectly addressed to the Imperial Government (some from the natives themselves), praying for the annexation or a protectorate of the islands; and No. 4 is a letter from the Rev. J. G. Paton, setting out the reasons for the desired course.

To the reasons contained in these documents I trust Lord Derby will give the gravest consideration.

I will now add, that the action of this Colony has been somewhat precipitated by the circumstance that it was reported in Melbourne, a few days after my interview with the deputation, that the French Consul here had telegraphed to his Government an account of the matter, with a view to prevent British possession of the islands.

It was at once felt by Ministers that it might prove a fault, to be ever deplored but never to be remedied, if Australia, through supineness, were to allow these islands in the important strategic position which they occupy towards her, to fall without an effort into the hands of a foreign power.

I therefore at once communicated with the other Colonies, and they joined unanimously in this view.

I would ask your Excellency to be so good as to call special attention to the fact that the desired annexation of these islands stands altogether apart from any question as to a general annexation policy on the part of the Empire. It is of the first importance, in order to apprehend the true bearings of the question, that it should be seen that this annexation has no connection with any such general policy; that, in fact, the unwisdom of such a policy may be freely granted, so far as it is concerned, and the proposition still remains true that it is an urgent necessity of Australia that the possibility of these island-territories becoming the post for foreign guns and foreign ships should, without delay, be placed beyond question and beyond fear. It undoubtedly prejudices the case that it comes to be considered at a time when any such general policy is before the public mind, but I trust it may not be confused with it by the experienced statesmen who will have to deal with it.

As to the question of expense, I would point out that the course we advocate may yet prove to be the truest economy. To take and hold possession would be at present a very small expense, but what would be the expense if in time of war these islands should become points from which foreign vessels could issue to attack Australian ports and harass British commerce; and it must be recollected that the great majority of the ships that trade to Australia are British registered and of British owners.

But, independently of this consideration, I feel sure that Australia would not wish the mother country to be at the whole expense of the projected measure. I have communicated with the other Colonies, asking their concurrence in this, and there has not yet been time to receive their replies; but I would ask your Excellency to be good enough to convey to Lord Derby my opinion that expense should not, and so far as an Australian subsidy is concerned, would not, be allowed to stand in the way.

It will probably be deemed equitable that, if Australia shares the expense, she should be consulted as to the mode of governing; but this is a matter of detail which should not be allowed to hinder proceedings.

There is one other consideration of great importance, and that is, that Australia is, in this respect, fettered in her action by her forming part of the British Empire. She cannot take the course which her truest interest dictates without the authority of the Crown; she is therefore entitled to make request of the Imperial authority to do that for her which her connection with the Empire prevents her from doing for herself.

I have confined myself in this letter to the political aspect of the question, but, as well pointed out by the missionaries, there are questions of humanity and civilization which seem to add a clenching force to every other consideration.

In conclusion, I would ask your Excellency to be so good as to represent that there is no doubt that a strong feeling of dissatisfaction will spread throughout these Colonies if England, while holding Australia back from acting in her own interests, at the same time neglects to take a step which Australia deems essential to her future security and welfare.

I have, &c.,

JAMES SERVICE,

Premier.

[Sub-enclosure No. 1.]

The Honorable James Service, M.L.A., Premier of the Colony of Victoria,

Sir,

4 Eamont-terrace, Grey-st., East Melbourne, 31 May, 1883.

I have the honor to lay before you, as briefly as possible, the following statement:—

From a recent telegram we learn that the British Government, partly owing to the action of Queensland, supported as it has been by the other Australian Colonies, has annexed the southern part of New Guinea to the Empire, and resolved to administer it as a Crown Colony. This is a result heartily to be rejoiced in.

But to annex merely the south-eastern part of New Guinea is not, considered from any standpoint, sufficient, whether in the way of protecting the Australasian Colonies from the danger that would arise from the establishment of an alien power in the neighbouring islands, or in the way of protecting the natives of these islands from the atrocities of the labour traffic, and so of conserving the honor of the Empire, while promoting the interests of its commerce and civilization. A glance at the map will show that the chain of islands, inhabited by the same race, extending from New Guinea to the New Hebrides, or rather to the Fijis, including New Britain, New Ireland, and the Solomons, forms a natural group, should be annexed together, and together put under the same administration.

As to the danger that might arise from the proximity of a great naval power in any part of this region of Western or Papuan Polynesia, the New Hebrides is exactly the same distance from Brisbane as New Guinea; Melbourne is somewhat, and New Zealand immensely nearer to the New Hebrides than to New Guinea. To the swift war-vessels of the present day a few hundred miles is a very small matter. The climate of the New Hebrides is healthier than that of New Guinea, or any other part of the region abovenamed except Fiji, and it has by far the best harbours; the island of Efate or Sandwich has two of the best harbours in the world, well supplied with fresh water. Finally, the natives of the New Hebrides group are more prepared for the reception of civilization than those of any other islands in the Papuan Archipelago, with the exception of Fiji, and it would be easier to establish a civilized Government among them; if not so advanced as the Fijians when Fiji was annexed, they are more advanced than the islanders of the Solomons, New Britain, and New Guinea. Speaking of Fiji reminds us that it may be regarded as the outlying extremity of the chain of islands abovenamed, being only 400 miles from the New Hebrides, which again are only 1,000 miles from New Guinea. It is most undesirable that a foreign Power should possess the New Hebrides and Solomons, lying between Fiji and New Guinea, and forming the very heart of our nascent South Sea Empire, for it would be a standing menace to it as well as to the Australasian Colonies.

As to the protection of the natives from labour traffic atrocities, and conserving the honor of the British name, the necessity of doing which we have abundantly recognized by Acts of the Imperial Parliament and otherwise, it is in the New Hebrides and Solomons that that protection is most needed; there the flag of England has been most foully stained, and there has been done to the helpless people most grievous wrong, for which we are nationally responsible; we owe therefore to them a national debt of reparation, which we do not owe to the people of New Guinea. And the perpetration of that wrong is going on every day in these islands, whereas it is only begun in New Guinea. There is no other way worth trying of putting an end to these outrages and massacres that we are constantly hearing of, and many which we never hear of, but by annexing the islands, and thereby making the islanders British subjects. Lord Derby and the Home authorities recognize the need of new efforts to put a stop to them or better regulate the labour traffic.—[See his reply to a deputation in February last.] Nothing short of annexation and putting the Papuan islander, as a labourer, on a footing analogous to that of the Hindoo coolie, will avail. This, in fact, is a strong argument for annexation. The expenses now incurred—and they are considerable—for inefficient regulations would be applied efficiently under the new system; the honor, the interests, and the safety of the Empire would be promoted, the natives protected, and commerce and civilization permanently rooted and grounded in one of the fairest and most fertile portions of the globe.

There are four Missionary Societies at work in Papuan Polynesia, and only four, and the whole four are British; the Presbyterian in the New Hebrides, Church of England in the Solomons, Wesleyan in New Britain, and London Missionary Society in New Guinea. Of these missions, the Presbyterian in the New Hebrides is the oldest and largest; it has now fourteen European missionaries, together with about 150 native Christian teachers and evangelists, who may be regarded as the hope of their race, both as to Christianity and civilization, and it is carried on at an annual expense of about £6,000 of British, Home, and Colonial money. Similar things might be said of the other missions. Already a considerable number of traders and planters have settled in the New Hebrides, and most or nearly all of these are British subjects. All would hail annexation as a boon. The natives to a man are as much in favour of British as they are opposed to French annexation. There is not commercially a richer or more fertile or desirable group than the New Hebrides throughout the vast extent of the Pacific.

The Imperial Government can have no objection, on principle, to annexing these islands, since they have annexed New Guinea and Fiji; and there can be no reasonable objection on the score of expense, as the same machinery that is necessary for New Guinea and Fiji can be extended over the intervening islands, and the present expense of the abortive regulation of the so-called "labour traffic" will be available, and probably sufficient to cover any slight additional expense. And as soon as civilized Government is extended over these islands in connection with either of the established Governments of Fiji or New Guinea, as may be most convenient, the rapid commercial development and progress certain to take place in them will speedily secure more than the defrayment of their proportion of the expense of Government; for these islands will become the Australasian Indies, and will yield cotton, coffee, and cocoa-nut oil, sugar and spices, and all other tropical products, in large quantities.

Thus, generally speaking, it is exceedingly desirable to annex these islands along with New Guinea and Fiji. Hitherto the British Government have not seen their way to annex the New Hebrides, though frequently petitioned to do so; but now that Fiji at the one extremity, and New Guinea at the other, have been annexed, it is reasonable to expect that they would see it to be their wisdom to annex the intervening islands also, attaching them to either of the existing Colonies of Fiji or New Guinea, according to their proximity; and these islands not only lie between the two extremities of our South Sea Empire, but also form a chain that runs parallel to the Australian coast.

I therefore respectfully and earnestly suggest to you, as Premier of the Colony of Victoria, that, if you agree with these views, you take such steps as your long political experience may dictate to you to secure the co-operation of the other Australian Governments, in order to the annexation to the British Empire of the New Hebrides, Solomons, and New Britain, along with New Guinea and the Fijis; and I have much satisfaction in feeling that to none could so important a business be more appropriately committed.

May I request that you will be good enough to appoint a time to receive myself and a number of gentlemen who are deeply interested in the matter, at your earliest convenience, to more fully explain their views on the subject.

I have, &c.,
D. MACDONALD,
Missionary, New Hebrides.

[Sub-enclosure No. 2.]

Extract from the Argus Newspaper of 7th June, 1883.

THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

A large deputation, including a number of clergymen, waited on the Premier yesterday, to urge him to do everything in his power to induce the Imperial Government to annex or accord its protection to the islands in the South Seas that are not at present under the dominion of any other Power. Mr. Balfour, M.L.C., introduced the deputation, which was also accompanied by Messrs. Anderson, Miriams, Gibb, and M. H. Davies, M.L.A.'s. The Minister of Justice was present with the Premier.

Mr. Balfour said that for many years those connected with the missions in the New Hebrides Islands had seen the necessity for the annexation of those islands, or else for their being brought under the protection of the Empire. The iniquitous labour traffic was really not under control, and it had had the effect of almost bringing Christianity and civilization to a standstill. Movements in favour of annexation or protection had been repeated, but unsuccessful. He assumed that Great Britain would either annex New Guinea or allow the Colonies to do so; and the present seemed a good opportunity to urge the annexation of the other islands, which could be advocated not only from a missionary's but from a statesman's point of view, for on these islands valuable products could be grown. Common humanity demanded the suppression of the labour traffic, about which there were numerous official reports, and which had lately been commented upon by Mr. Morrison, an independent witness. The Wesleyan mission at New Britain represented in the deputation. The missionaries there did not want annexation until the natives had been consulted; but the New Hebrides missionaries could speak confidently as to the desire for annexation of the natives there. Throughout these islands there was a great dread of other powers, but a great desire to be annexed to the British Empire.

The Rev. D. Macdonald, Presbyterian missionary of New Hebrides, said that the British had the most right to annex the islands, because they had spent more money there than any other nation. Moreover, precious British blood had been spilled there, and the British were more numerously represented than any other foreign nation. The annexation of the islands would be a reparation for the wrong done to them by the labour traffic by persons of British nationality more than any other. There was no other means than annexation of stopping the constantly occurring massacres. The New Hebrides were centrally situated, and were near to the Australian Colonies, and contained splendid harbours, the best of which was in central island, called Sandwich Island.

The Rev. J. King, of the Victorian Auxiliary to the London Missionary Society, said that he had spent ten years on the Navigators Islands. The missionaries did not advocate annexation, because they desired governmental patronage and help. They did not want British gun-boats to assist them in evangelizing the people. The greatest achievements of Christianity had been accomplished in the islands without such aid. He advocated annexation purely on humanitarian grounds. The British Government was the natural protector of these races. The long connection of British people with the islanders in missionary work and commercial enterprise had led the islanders to look up to the British as their natural protectors. Samoa, over and over again, asked the British Government for a protectorate, but such requests had been declined, and now Germany and America had obtained very strong footing there. Unless the British Government soon stepped in, the New Hebrides also would soon arrive at a stage at which British annexation would be impossible. The French had a considerable interest in the Loyalty group beyond New Caledonia. In the past the English Government had signally failed in conserving native races, because it had not yet adopted the right policy.

The Rev. E. I. Watkin, President of the Wesleyan Conference, said he was not authorized to speak on behalf of the Wesleyan Church, but so far as he knew the opinions of her missionaries it was that the case of the New Hebrides was not parallel with that of the Solomon Islands and New Britain. There had been a Presbyterian Mission in the New Hebrides for many years, and annexation was desired there. He was inclined to favour the establishment of a protectorate over the Solomon Islands and New Britain, with a view to annexation, should the natives desire it. There was already, it should be remembered, self-government in some of the islands. The natives had rights that should not be interfered with, except for political reasons. Such reasons justified the annexation of New Guinea, and on the same grounds the annexation of the New Hebrides, Solomon Islands, and New Britain might perhaps be justified.

The Rev. T. Nelson, of the New Hebrides Mission, said that the French strongly desired to take possession of those islands, the natives of which, however, strongly wished for annexation to Great Britain.

The Rev. J. G. Paton, missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, said that twenty years ago the Tanna chiefs petitioned for British annexation, and such request had been since renewed. As to the expenditure that annexation of the islands would entail it had been magnified because some of the islands could be governed from Fiji, and the others from New Guinea when that was annexed. The natives hated and feared the French, but they loved the name of Queen Victoria. If the French annexed the islands the Protestant missions would be suppressed. All the islanders longed for British protection. It would be a pity if, after the expenditure of so much British money there, some other nation were to step in and reap the harvest. He concluded by relating instances of atrocities perpetrated by the labour vessels.

Mr. Service said that he would like to be furnished with a short résumé of all the appeals that had been made for the annexation of the islands and of other facts bearing on the subject. Every consideration pointed to the desirableness of the course so strongly recommended by the deputation. Unfortunately, humanitarian, civilizing, and Christianizing movements were often, if not antagonistic to political considerations, at all events not on the same line with them, but here every consideration pointed in the same direction. Politics, religion, commerce, civilization, humanity, all pointed to the absolute desirability of getting hold of these islands. As to New Guinea he not only put himself in communication with the Agent-General, but requested the other Colonies to support the action of the Queensland Government. But in the steps he took on that subject he had not the slightest desire to encourage that labour trade which the deputation had referred to in terms that were not half strong enough. The mission of England all along had been to elevate, Christianize, and civilize the dark nations of the earth. Of late years she seemed to have felt that she was getting too many dependencies, but he believed that that was a mistaken notion altogether. England was an immense moral power among the nations; she owed her position to her grand moral status, and it was a position that her military power would never give her. He would immediately bring the matter under the notice of his colleagues, and would allow no delay to elapse in his efforts to bring about the desired result. If the Australian Legislatures could be induced to pass resolutions in favour of annexation that would tell very favourably with the Government and Parliament of England, who would regard such opinions as of more importance than mere governmental action. He believed the Victorian Government would be unanimously in favour of prompt action.

The deputation withdrew, gratified with the statement of the Premier.

[Sub-enclosure No. 3.]

The Honorable James Service, Premier.

Dear Sir,

Cotham-road, Kew, Friday, June 8th, 1883.

I am sorry I could not sooner send you the required dates of memorials and petitions to the Queen for a protectorate, and for annexation of the New Hebrides Islands. I feel also sorry the following are so imperfect, as all such records are kept by Dr. Steel, the agent of our mission in Sydney, and now he is in Melbourne attending a conference, but they can be got from him on his return; but at present I forward all I have been able to get from blue books, though very imperfect, as a number are not noted in books now within my reach.

In A.D. 1862 the chiefs of Tanna sent a petition through me to Sir John Young, Governor of New South Wales, for a protectorate. He did not forward it.

In A.D. 1868 a petition was presented to the Earl of Belmore, by the New Hebrides Mission, for Her Majesty the Queen.

In A.D. 1868 a petition was presented to Lord Stanley, by the Reform Presbyterian Church of Scotland, for Her Majesty the Queen.

In A.D. 1872 a petition was presented to Earl Kimberly, Secretary of State for the Colonies, by the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland, for the Queen.

In A.D. 1874 a petition was sent to the Queen regarding the labour traffic and implying a British protectorate, like all the above noted.

In November, 1874, another petition was sent from Victoria regarding the "slave or labour traffic" and a protectorate.

In A.D. 1874 or 1875 a petition was sent by the natives of Efate, per Lieutenant Carey, of H.M. gunboat "Conflict," which was presented, for annexation like Fiji as they expressed it, through Mr. Macdonald.

In A.D. 1877, the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales, and the Free Church of Scotland, and the Mission, all sent petitions to the Queen for annexation of the New Hebrides to Great Britain.

In A.D. 1882 a petition was sent from a Conference which met in Sydney, representing all the Presbyterians of Australasia, and others followed from Victoria, and South Australia, and Tasmania, and the New Hebrides Mission, and the natives, and the Free Church of Scotland, to the Queen, entreating the annexation of the group to Great Britain.

The above will show you that the subject has been long before the minds of the natives, the missionaries and Europeans on the islands, and all the churches at home and in our Australasian Colonies which have been engaged in the work of civilizing and Christianizing the New Hebrides Islands.

In the Conference of the Australasian Presbyterian Churches, which met in Sydney in April of last year, I pleaded for British annexation of the New Hebrides Islands, on account of eight reasons which I have written out to you and enclose, and which led to the six petitions being sent to the Queen, as above referred to, for annexation to Great Britain.

Thanking you heartily for the cordial reception of our deputation, and wishing you every blessing in Christ Jesus,—

I remain, &c.,

JOHN G. PATON.

[Enclosure to foregoing.]

[I enclose this from Dr. Steel, Sydney.—JOHN G. PATON.]

Some ten years ago, when an abortive effort was made by a number of private individuals to form a settlement in New Guinea, representations were made to some of the Colonial Governments on the importance of the annexation of New Guinea by the British Government. At the same period, simultaneous efforts were made by Presbyterian Churches to the Governments of Australasian Colonies respecting the annexation of the New Hebrides. The labour traffic at that time excited great interest on account of its many inhumanities.

The Government of New South Wales, at the period referred to, formally agreed to recommend the annexation of New Guinea, the Duke of York Islands, New Britain, New Ireland, and the New Hebrides. Sir John Robertson, then Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, addressed a communication to the Earl of Kimberley, the British Minister for the Colonies, urging the importance of annexation. The answer of the Earl of Kimberley was unfavourable; but the correspondence which was published by the Government of New South Wales, shows that this proposal is not now urged for the first time.

The population of natives in the New Hebrides is rapidly declining, and these islands will certainly be annexed by some power, as they are well fitted to grow all kinds of tropical spices and other fruits. They were discovered for the most part by British navigators, traded with by British vessels, regularly visited by Her Majesty's ships of war, and justice frequently administered by Her Majesty's naval officers, and finally evangelized by the labours and munificence of British subjects.

[Sub-enclosure No. 4.]

To the Honorable James Service, Premier,
Sir,

For the following reasons we think the British Government ought now to take possession of the New Hebrides group of the South Sea Islands, of the Solomon group, and of all the intervening chain of islands from Fiji to Guinea:—

1st. Because she has already taken possession of Fiji in the east, and we hope it will soon be known authoritatively that she has taken possession of New Guinea at the north-west, adjoining her Australian possessions, and the islands between complete this chain of islands lying along the Australian coast. Taking possession of the New Hebrides would not add much to her expenses, as her Governments on Fiji and New Guinea, with the visits of her men-of-war, passing through the group of the New Hebrides and intervening islands on their way to New Guinea, would almost be sufficient for all her requirements on the islands between.

2nd. The sympathy of the New Hebrides natives are all with Great Britain, hence they long for British protection; while they fear and hate the French, who appear eager to annex the group, because they have seen the way the French have treated the native races of New Caledonia, the Loyalty Islands, and other South Sea Islands.

3rd. Till within the past few months almost all the Europeans on the New Hebrides were British subjects, who long for British protection.

4th. All the men, and all the money (over £140,000) used in civilizing and Christianizing the New Hebrides, have been British. Now fourteen missionaries, and the "Dayspring" mission ship, and about 150 native evangelists and teachers are employed in the above work on this group, in which over £6,000 yearly of British and British-colonial money is expended, and certainly it would be unwise to let any other power now take possession and reap the fruits of all this British outlay.

5th. Because the New Hebrides are already a British dependency in this sense,—all its imports are from Sydney and Melbourne and British colonies, and all its exports are also to British colonies.

6th. The islands in this group are generally very rich in soil and in tropical products, so that, if a possession of Great Britain, and the labour traffic stopped, so as to retain what remains of the native populations on them, they would soon, and for ages to come, become rich sources of tropical wealth to these Colonies, as sugar-cane is extensively cultivated on them by every native of the group even in his heathen state. For natives they are industrious, hard-working race, living in villages and towns, and, like farmers, depending upon the cultivation and products of the ground for their support by their plantations. The islands also grow maize, cotton, coffee, arrowroot, and spices, &c., &c., and all tropical products could be largely produced on them.

7th. Because if any other nation takes possession of them, their excellent and spacious harbours, as on Efate, so well supplied with the best fresh water, and their near proximity to Great Britain's Australasian Colonies, would in time of war make them dangerous to British interests and commerce in the South Seas and to her Colonies.

8th. The thirteen islands of this group, on which life and property are now comparatively safe, the 8,000 professed Christians on the group, and all the churches formed among them, are, by God's blessing, the fruits of the labours of British missionaries, who, at great toil, expense, and loss of life, have translated, got printed, and taught the natives to read the Bible, in part or in whole, in nine different languages of this group, while 70,000 at least are longing and ready for the Gospel. On this group twenty-one members of the mission family died or were murdered by the savages in beginning God's work among them, not including good Bishop Patteson, of the Melanesian Mission, and we fear all this good work would be lost if the New Hebrides fall into other than British hands.

9th. Because we see no other way of suppressing the labour traffic in Polynesia, with all its many evils, as it rapidly depopulates the islands, being attended by much bloodshed, misery, and loss of life. It is an unmitigated evil to the natives, and ruinous to all engaged in it, and to the work of civilizing and Christianizing the islanders. While all experience proves that all labour laws and regulations with Government agents and gun-boats, cannot prevent such evils, which have always been the sad accompaniments of all such traffic in men and women in every land, and because this traffic and its evils are a sad stain on our British glory and Australasian honor, seeing Britain has done so much to free the slave and suppress slavery in other lands.

For the above reasons, and others that might be given, we sincerely hope and pray that you will do all possible to get Victoria and the other Colonial Governments to help and unite in urging Great Britain at once to take possession of the New Hebrides group. Whether looked at in the interests of humanity or Christianity, or commercially or politically, surely it is most desirable that they should at once be British possessions, hence we plead for your judicious and able help, and remain,—

Your humble servant,

JOHN G. PATON,

Senior Missionary, New Hebrides Mission.

NEW GUINEA.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Executive Council of Queensland, at Government House, Brisbane, 17th July, 1883. Present—His Excellency the Administrator of the Government in Council.

His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, at the instance of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, lays before the Council the following Memorandum by the Premier on the refusal of the Imperial Government to confirm the annexation of New Guinea, and recommends that the same be approved:—

Memorandum by the Premier of Queensland on the refusal of the Imperial Government to confirm the annexation of New Guinea.

The decision arrived at by Her Majesty's Government in reference to the annexation of New Guinea seems to me to justify some decided and concerted action on the part of the Australian Colonies. It is scarcely necessary to refer at any length to the previous correspondence on this subject, or to the repeated representations in connection with it which have been made to the Imperial Government.

It seems to me right that reference should be made to the various reasons assigned for this refusal. In 1875, Lord Carnarvon, while not discouraging the idea of extensive annexation, assigned as one reason why he could not act on the representations of the Australian Colonies, that the British tax-payer could not and would not bear the expenditure. Lord Derby advances the same reasons now. He adds to this other reasons—the enormous extent of the territory, the unknown character of the interior and the hostility of the natives. These objections may be easily combated. The expense need not be great, and we now know that the Australian Colonies will undertake this expense, or share it with Her Majesty's Government, if required to do so. As for the natives, the Dutch have not interfered with the aborigines in that part of New Guinea claimed by them, and their claim costs them nothing. They wait, and simply hold the country as against any other power. There would be no difficulty in our doing single-handed, in that part of New Guinea contiguous to our shores, a great deal more than the Dutch have done during the last fifty years in the north-western portion of the island. Queensland has simply been desirous that New Guinea should not fall into the hands of a foreign Power, and that the requisite authority should be exercised over those adventurers who frequent the shores of that island. Experience in Torres Straits has already proved valuable in this respect. The "beachcombers" who frequented the islands of Murray and Darnley have taken themselves off since the annexation of these islands to Queensland territory. What was effected in Torres Straits could have been carried out with perfect ease on the mainland of New Guinea. All that was required was the acceptance of the proclamation. I still think that it ought to have been accepted, and I hope that the Australian Colonies will, by their several and united representations, urge upon Her Majesty's Government a reconsideration of their decision.

But there can be no doubt that the refusal to annex New Guinea, together with the possible acquisition by foreign Powers of some of the Pacific islands contiguous to Australia, does raise very serious questions intimately connected with the future interests of the Australasian Colonies. If Her Majesty's Government does not feel that the annexation of New Guinea, or of the islands adjacent to Australia, is of so much importance to the Empire at large as it is to the Australian Colonies, let some means be devised by which those islands may be held and governed for the benefit of the Australian people. The

step taken by the Queensland Government, in causing a formal claim to be made over New Guinea, was done in the interests, not only of Queensland, but of all the Australian Colonies, and in the interests of the natives of New Guinea, who ought to be protected by some lawful authority from contact with the lawless adventurers who are too often a law to themselves. That also which is for the advantage of this country is surely for the advantage of Great Britain. The middle island of New Zealand was won for Great Britain by a timely act of annexation. In the last century, similar timely acts of annexation won large portions of America for the Anglo-Saxon race. Why, then, should not Queensland be permitted, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, to assist in carrying out this national and beneficial policy? If, then, the real reason for the refusal to annex New Guinea be, not the expense, but the difficulty of providing for the government and protection of the native races, might not this be met by the sanction and authority of the united Colonies? Some justification, it has been often said, is required for federation—may it not be found in this exigency.

I submit that a case has arisen which may be made use of to call into existence the higher forms of government required to give effect to this policy of annexation. The Australian Colonies are now united by sentiments of filial regard and devotion to the British Empire, though they are not represented in the British Legislature. The Imperial Parliament dominates the whole Empire, and the Colonies are not represented in that Parliament, though their interests may be vitally affected by its decisions. It is not possible to give authoritative effect to the wishes of the people of Australia in anything beyond their own domestic interests, except through the intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

The circumstances of the present case seem to point to a necessity for combination among the Australian Colonies—a combination for both legislative and executive purposes. Australian interests are involved in securing the peaceful and progressive supremacy of Australian influences in the adjoining seas. In order to effect this it is necessary that there should not only be sentiments held in common, but that a form of Government should be provided capable of giving expression to these sentiments. The federation of the Australian Colonies may thus be forwarded. Here is work for the united Colonies to do, if they can be got to unite. I suggest that a convention of delegates should be held to discuss the basis upon which a Federal Government could be constituted.

This, I believe, was the form adopted in Canada previous to the constitution of the Dominion Parliament. May not this example be followed here? The Dominion Government has added largely to the influence and the national integrity of Canada. It seems probable that a similar form of Government adapted to the special requirements of Australia would give life to national aspirations here, without repressing the autonomous Governments of the respective Colonies. To it would properly belong the discussion of such measures as are necessary for the consolidation and security of Australian interests, as well as for the government of these outlying islands in the Pacific, which at present are not claimed by any civilized Power.

I think, therefore, that there ought, in the first place, to be representations from all the Australian Colonies, urging upon Her Majesty's Government a reconsideration of their decision as regards New Guinea; and, in the next place, Her Majesty's Government should be invited to move in the direction of providing for a form of Federal Government suitable for the Australian Colonies. I propose that this memorandum should be embodied in an Executive minute and forwarded both to Her Majesty's Government and to the Governments of the respective Australian Colonies, for their consideration, and for such action as they may deem expedient.

T. MILWRAITH.

10th July, 1883.

The Council deliberate and advise, as recommended, immediate action.—A. V. DRURY, Clerk of the Executive Council.

APPENDIX C.

[Enclosure to No. 20.]

The Agents-General to Lord Derby.

My Lord,

London, 21 July, 1883.

In accordance with the desire expressed by your Lordship on the occasion of our recent interview with you, we purpose now to place before your Lordship in writing the representations which we then submitted to you on the annexation or protectorate of the Western Pacific Islands and the eastern portion of New Guinea.

It is no doubt well known to your Lordship that during a period now extending over more than thirty years, the Australasian Colonies have one after another pressed upon Her Majesty's Government the expediency of bringing the islands of the Western Pacific within the dominion or the protection of England; and we feel assured that the whole question will appear to your Lordship invested with a graver aspect, when for the first time the Governments of nearly all the Dependencies of England in Australasia come before Her Majesty's Government to make a united remonstrance against the present state of affairs in the Western Pacific, and to ask from the Imperial authority the adoption of such a definite policy and purpose as they believe is essential to their future well-being.

It is true that fear of foreign intervention has been the immediate cause of this concerted action on the part of the Australasian Governments; and this, we understood, seemed to your Lordship hardly adequate to justify a strong sense of present danger. We can assure you that our Governments would receive with a sense of great relief your Lordship's assurance that there is no foundation for our fears. But it is not only the apprehension of immediate foreign intervention that has influenced our Governments, nor would its removal change their opinion as to the necessity for making it impossible in the future. Other powerful reasons bring them together to urge upon the Imperial Government the necessity of a policy different from the one that has been pursued in the past; the conviction, indeed, that the state of things in the Western Pacific has at last become intolerable. We feel that we ought not to say this, without an attempt to trace the course of events that have led to so grave a declaration.

It was in 1848 that Sir George Grey, then Governor of New Zealand, first called the attention of the Imperial Government to a "species of trade in the native inhabitants which had commenced in the Pacific," and to the danger of foreign annexation, pointing out the necessity of providing against these in time. For many years successive appeals of the same kind, and from one Colony after another, were made to Her Majesty's Government to interfere. In the meanwhile, the constant repetition of outrages in the Pacific had become such a scandal to civilisation, that the Imperial Government resolved to make a vigorous attempt to repress them. The Foreign Jurisdiction Act, which had been in existence in various forms since 1828, and the Pacific Islanders Protection Act of 1872, had proved insufficient to meet the increasing difficulties of the case. At last, in 1875, two Acts of Parliament were passed, amending the former law, defining more clearly the powers and jurisdiction of Her Majesty in the Pacific Ocean, and creating the office of High Commissioner for the Western Pacific. These were followed, two years after, by the promulgation of the "Western Pacific Order in Council of 1877," which established the High Commissioner's Court, with elaborate provision for the government of the Western Pacific; and the new Colony of Fiji, which had meanwhile been created in 1876, became the centre of the High Commissioner's operations.

The humane intentions of the Imperial Government in these measures have always commanded the respect and sympathy of the Australasian Colonies; and if it had ever been possible to give them real effect, we should not be addressing your Lordship to-day; but there was an inherent difficulty, the results of which could hardly have been foreseen at the time, but which was certain to paralyze every endeavour to confer the benefits of law and order on the vast region, stretching from New Guinea across the Pacific Ocean, which those measures embraced. The Act of 1875, which created the office of High Commissioner, only empowered Her Majesty to "exercise power and jurisdiction over Her subjects" within the island, and expressly declared that nothing in the Act or in any Order in Council under it should "extend, or be construed to extend, to invest Her Majesty with any claim or title whatsoever to dominion or sovereignty" over the islands, or to "derogate from the rights of the tribes or people inhabiting them, or of their chiefs or rulers, to such sovereignty or dominion." And although the powers of the Order in Council were apparently extended so as to include foreigners in a few specified cases, they were practically restricted to British subjects only, for no foreigner could be brought under the High Commissioner's jurisdiction unless he could produce "the consent in writing of the competent authority on behalf of his own nation," a condition which, from the nature of things, could seldom if ever be fulfilled.

Nor

Nor did the Order in Council fully carry out the idea with which it had been originally devised. Though the Act was passed in 1875, it was not till 1877 that the Order in Council under it was issued; and it was not till 1878 that it could be brought into operation in the Pacific. Meanwhile the intentions of Her Majesty's Government had undergone some change. Differences arose between the naval authorities and the Acting High Commissioner as to their respective powers. The work to be done was daily becoming more and more difficult, and the nature of the difficulty was becoming better known to Her Majesty's Government. Hardly was the Order in Council brought into operation, when it was found to be too intricate and complicated an instrument, bristling as it did with technicalities and minute provisions in precise legal language, to be really workable. The High Commissioner described the position in which he was placed in the clearest terms. His jurisdiction being one extending over British subjects exclusively, he had no authority whatever to deal, whether judicially or in his executive capacity, with offences by natives of islands not under the dominion of the Crown. He more than once represented to the Imperial Government, that unless such a jurisdiction were created as would be competent to take cognizance also of offences committed against British subjects, the infliction of punishment on these for outrages against natives in the same regions was certain to excite on their part a natural irritation, and a sense of being treated with injustice. But the reply to his representations invariably was, that "in the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, insuperable obstacles existed to any assumption of jurisdiction by Her Majesty over other than British subjects, beyond the limits of Her dominions."

The High Commissioner could not with fairness be reproached for not having exercised a jurisdiction which he had been strictly forbidden to assume. Early in 1881 he reminded Lord Kimberley how often the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been painfully called to the greatly increased frequency of the murder of Europeans by natives in the islands of the Western Pacific; this he attributed (among other causes) to the "far greater intercourse between whites and natives," and to the possession of firearms by the latter, "which had given them a confidence and boldness they did not before possess." Later on he recommended that power should be granted for the trial of natives for offences against British subjects, where such a power might be conceded by the native chiefs themselves; but it would have been no easier to get the assent of the natives than that of foreigners. The High Commissioner regretted that so elaborate an instrument as the Order in Council had been in the first instance prepared; and he represented that of its 321 articles by far the greater part were never called into use, that it was constantly found, in the remoter regions of the Pacific, impossible to comply with its directions, and that the powers intended to be conferred by it were therefore ineffectual. So things went on from 1877 to 1881.

Another year elapsed, and the evils only got worse. In the hope of lessening them, the High Commissioner appointed two officers, Captain Dale, R.N., and Captain Cyprian Bridge, R.N., commanding H.M.S. "Diamond," and "Espiegle," to be Deputy Commissioners. But the old difficulty reasserted itself at once, that there was no jurisdiction over foreigners: the evil-doers of any nation had only to represent themselves as belonging to some other nationality, in order to escape control. In his instructions to the Deputy-Commissioners, Sir A. Gordon warned them that they would have difficulty in ascertaining who were British subjects and who were not, because many would seek to plead some other nationality; and that they would find caution to be essentially requisite, as they had no jurisdiction whatever over any foreigner unless he submitted to it voluntarily. There was never any doubt that this device of assuming other nationalities would be resorted to by criminals: but it was hardly necessary to resort to it, for outrages in which foreigners were openly concerned took place. A boat from a vessel named the "Aurora," flying the French flag, had a collision with the natives of an island called Api in the New Hebrides group, in which the chief of a small village was shot. The natives thereupon resolved to murder the first white man they could, in revenge. An English labour vessel, the "Dauntless," went to the island shortly afterwards to recruit labourers: her boat was decoyed to the beach, when the natives opened fire with rifles, killing the second mate and wounding the Government Agent. Complaints were often made of there being cases of kidnapping by French vessels at one island or another, and consequent threats of the natives that they would kill the first white man who went there. An inquiry was held at Noumea respecting the French vessel "Aurora." In her case it was clearly shown that the crew had put in practice the worst form of kidnapping, such as staying in or running down canoes, capturing the natives, and shooting those who attempted to escape. Labourers were being apparently recruited by the crews of vessels nearly all of which flew foreign flags. The planters of all nationalities were greatly exasperated by the conduct of masters of labour vessels, both French and English, in enticing away their servants. Where the foreigner committed an outrage, he was not amenable to punishment; where he suffered injury, he could get no redress in the High Commissioner's Court.

But if there was serious trouble by reason of there being no jurisdiction over foreigners, another trouble was growing up even more serious because there was none over natives. So far from outrages diminishing after the Order in Council was promulgated, they increased. In November, 1880, Commander Bower, R.N., of H.M.S. "Sandfly," with a boat's crew, was put to death on a small island of the Solomon group under circumstances of much barbarity. The Governor of New South Wales reported to the Colonial Office that "the atrocious murders lately committed by the South Sea Islanders had caused and were causing a very deep feeling of pain and indignation." The newspapers teemed with accounts of these outrages: it was said that "no week passed without the announcement of another massacre in the Islands." The exasperation predicted by Sir Arthur Gordon as certain to occur was becoming greater every day. Early in 1881 Lord Kimberley, in a despatch to the High Commissioner, deplored the "unusual number of outrages by natives upon white men which had recently been reported to the Colonial Office." In the meanwhile stern reprisals had been resorted to. When the outrage took place at the island of Api in revenge for what had been done by the crew of a French vessel, the Commodore had gone down in H.M.S. "Wolverene" and landed a party of 100 seamen and marines, who destroyed four of the villages implicated, and cut down the fruit plantations in their vicinity. And now, after the "Sandfly" outrage, the Commodore felt it his duty to take even severer measures. In December, 1880, he sent down Captain Maxwell, R.N., in H.M.S. "Emerald" to inflict punishment not only for the "Sandfly" murders, but for others that had been committed on crews of the vessels "Ripple," "Esperanza," "Borealis," and "Anne Brooks." The punishment was very severe. From bay to bay, from island to island, the villages were set in flames, the cocoa-nut and other fruit trees cut down, and the canoes destroyed. "There was no more to be done," said Captain Maxwell, "in the way of hunting these wretched people. . . . They have been hunted and worried till it will be long before they settle again. . . . I regret that my whole voyage in these islands has been one of apparently ruthless destruction, but no other course has been possible." Nor was this enough. A few months afterwards a still stronger step was taken. Commodore Bruce, of H.M.S. "Cormorant," was sent to the Florida Isles by the Commodore to bring the perpetrators of the "Sandfly" murders to justice. There he issued a declaration that "in consequence of an English officer and boat's crew being murdered by Florida men, the Queen of England declared war with the whole tribes of Floridas, unless the actual murderers are given up in fourteen days"; adding that "in case of any other white man being killed in the Florida Isles, the whole of the chiefs would be held responsible, and the Florida Islands be considered to be at war with the Queen of England." Bishop Selwyn, being then on the spot, humanely did all he could to save life. Writing to Commander Bruce, he says:—"I have acted as I have done, because you, sir, as the representative of Her Majesty, have declared war against all the people of these islands unless the murderers are given up. It appears to me to be my duty to save the people from such a calamity, by using what influence I possess to induce them to comply with Her Majesty's demands." The Commodore "fully approved of the 'Cormorant's' action at the Floridas." Thus it seemed that a naval officer, in reprisals for an outrage, might issue a "declaration of war" against entire tribe; in the Western Pacific, and that what he required must be considered as being "Her Majesty's demands." Surely it was not this which could ever have been looked for as the outcome of the scheme of 1875 for the government of the Western Pacific.

Remedies which were suggested.

It is no wonder that such a state of things should have caused serious anxiety to Her Majesty's Government, or that the Secretary of State should have desired the High Commissioner to advise what was now to be done. That the Order in Council had failed was evident; "an acknowledgment," says Sir Arthur Gordon, "that the present system is a failure, and the consequent repeal of the Order in Council would have the merit of simplicity." But the question was what should be put in its place. When the news came home of the events we have just described, Lord Kimberley sent a despatch to the Governor of Queensland, saying that it was contemplated to invite the Naval Powers to agree to the appointment of a Joint Commission for considering the measures which should be taken for the regulation of the labour traffic, the trade in firearms, and the prevention and punishment of outrages of all kinds, under the sanction of a Convention between Her Majesty's Government and the other Powers. The Queensland Government immediately expressed their willingness to co-operate with the Imperial authorities for such a plan. The High Commissioner expressed his own concurrence. "Some sort of international agreement," he said, "seems to me to form an essential part of any satisfactory arrangement." He then went on to make make several recommendations for improving the existing system, one of which was that the judicial powers conferred by the Orders in Council should be so extended by Act of Parliament as to render offences committed by natives against British subjects equally cognizable with those committed by British subjects against natives. But it would evidently have been useless to assume jurisdiction over the native people and continue to except foreigners. Nor did the High Commissioner shrink from admitting this. "To obtain," he said, "the power of dealing satisfactorily with the misdeeds of other whites than Englishmen, or of punishing attacks upon them, an international agreement, having the sanction of a treaty, with France, Germany, and the United States, would be necessary. Such an arrangement would probably involve the substitution for the High Commissioner of a mixed Commission similar to the old mixed Commission Slave Trade Courts." And Sir Arthur Gordon then went on, with perfect truth, to touch the real kernel of the whole matter. "It should be borne in mind," he said, "that the punishment of outrages, though at present forced into prominence, is not the only nor the most important matter which has to be dealt with in these seas"; and he reminded the Secretary of State that the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner and his Court was one "primarily created to bring law, both civil and criminal, within the reach of British subjects far from all other legal tribunals, to check aggressive lawlessness, and to regulate the growth and development of British settlements in the Western Pacific." This was wise language. But when such recommendations were made, it was difficult to escape the logical conclusion from them. Once let it be admitted that the Imperial Government can pass an Act such as was advised by the High Commissioner, and is there anything but the thinnest veil left between that and the assertion of the very right of "sovereignty or dominion" which it was the purpose of the Act of 1875 to forbid?

It would not be fair if we did not refer to other remedies which were suggested by the High Commissioner. Early in 1881, after reciting the causes for the increased frequency of murder of Europeans by natives in the Western Pacific, Sir Arthur Gordon referred to two ways by which they could be prevented in future. "One is," he said, "that which I know on good authority was seriously contemplated by Her Majesty's Government, some years ago,—the establishment of a strong chartered Company possessing an exclusive right to trade. Another course would be to limit the protection given for trading operations, to those carried on at certain specified localities." But Sir Arthur Gordon even then allowed that the time for any scheme of a chartered Company had passed; and last year he proposed another plan to improve the working of the existing High Commission, the leading features of which, in addition to extending his jurisdiction by a new Act of Parliament, were the appointment of three Deputy-Commissioners, the conferring of Deputy-Commissioner's powers on naval officers in command of H.M. cruisers, and the permanent employment of a vessel, not a man-of-war, in the service of the Commission.

Whatever might have been the recommendations some years ago, in favor of granting an exclusive right of trading in the Western Pacific to a chartered Company, we entirely agree with Sir Arthur Gordon that the time for any such scheme has long gone by. An elaborate plan was devised in 1876 by Sir Julius Vogel, then Premier of New Zealand, and the present Premier of that Colony, Mr. Whitaker, for the establishment of a great trading Company for the Western Pacific; but it fell to the ground, as any scheme of the kind now proposed must inevitably do. There are no circumstances in the Pacific similar to those which were held to justify the granting of a Royal Charter, in November, 1881, to the North Borneo Company; on the contrary, there are circumstances essentially adverse to any plan of the kind. But even if there were not, we may point to two things which alone ought now to dismiss it from consideration. In the first place, it would always have been futile to imagine that any grant of exclusive rights of trade to a Company would be effectual even in the case of British traders; not only would they have traded in spite of it, but at no time after the promulgation of the Order in Council could any such exclusive grant have been made without grave injustice to them; while as regards foreigners, such a right would not have affected the French, German, and American traders; and if it was not to be respected by everybody it must necessarily fail as a remedy. There are already French Companies established in New Caledonia, whose operations extend over many of the islands, and there will certainly be several others. By what process could these Companies be prevented from trading? The slightest attempt to do so would show how the question ever comes back to the same point; to the exercise, namely, of rights of "sovereignty and dominion." But in the second place, we feel sure your Lordship will allow that, in any scheme for giving a chartered Company exclusive rights of trade, the interests and the wishes of Australasia could not be left out of consideration. Now, the exclusive rights of trade could not exist for a moment in the islands without some right to govern; and the Governments of Australasia could not be expected to acquiesce in any right of government being transferred from the Imperial authority to any other authority than their own.

Moreover, even if anything could be said for the palliatives which have been suggested as being applicable to the smaller groups of islands, it is certain that they would be utterly useless in the case of New Guinea. Sir Arthur Gordon has himself pointed out the only means by which the question of New Guinea can ever be settled. His opinion on this subject has long been familiar to your Lordship, but it is only now that it has become known. "I am irresistibly compelled," he said, "to adopt a conclusion, which I should have wished to avoid, and which I was at first inclined to think might be avoided, namely, that the annexation by Great Britain of at least certain portions of New Guinea will speedily become inevitable, even if the necessity for such a step has not already arisen. . . . Could I see any other way of dealing satisfactorily with such a state of things I would recommend a resort to it; but I must with regret admit that after the most careful consideration, I am unable to perceive any mode of meeting these difficulties except by annexation; for it appears to me necessary that territorial jurisdiction should be assumed by Great Britain, to enable us to deal with offences committed by foreigners associated with British settlers, or with those committed by natives, and unless such jurisdiction over them be assumed, I question the practicability of exercising it with the smallest degree of efficiency over British subjects themselves; and I must confess, therefore, that I see no middle course between annexation and the abandonment of all control over the acts of British subjects in New Guinea, involving a practical acquiescence in the establishment there of a reign of lawless violence and anarchy. This latter is a course which we cannot creditably adopt, and which, indeed, were we disposed to take it, we should after a time be forced to abandon. A greater or less degree of annexation, consequently, appears to be inevitable. Should there be any other method, unknown to me but known to Her Majesty's Government, by which such cases could be met I need not say I should prefer its adoption."

It is true that this opinion was given by the High Commissioner at a time when there was much excitement over the reported existence of rich gold-fields in New Guinea, and when an expectation existed of a great influx of miners taking place there, which was never fulfilled. But though gold-mining on a large scale has not yet come to aggravate the evils described by the High Commissioner, other events have happened whose impelling force has not been less towards the same solution than would have been the presence of a large body of miners. To these we shall refer later on.

Trade.

We have endeavoured to trace the events which have gradually but surely been pressing with ever increasing force for a new policy on the Western Pacific question. We now turn from these to a matter just as pressing, namely, the constantly growing trade of all that region.

At the end of 1881 Commodore Wilson collected from the various Customs officers some valuable returns of the commerce between the Australian Colonies and the Western Pacific Islands; from these we have taken out the following evidence of what the trade amounted to in the ten years from 1871 to 1880:—

Customs Returns: Commod

The Commodore did not merely point out how large was, even at that time, the value of this trade: he said significantly that "as yet the sources of trade may be said to be in their infancy." He might have added that these Custom returns only included, of course, the British trade, and took no account of foreign traders: if the French, German, and American trade could have been added, the total would have amounted to a much larger sum than 6½ millions. It is needless for us to point out that the greater part of the produce of the Western Pacific only passes through Australia, and really comes to England. That this produce will greatly increase is beyond doubt. The whole trade, indeed, of the Pacific is destined to undergo a great change whenever the Panama Canal is made. It is then that will be seen the foresight of France in establishing herself at Tahiti and the Marquesas; and the Navigators, with the splendid harbour on Tutuila Island, will come into a new importance, while the Fiji group will become the nearest colony of England in the Pacific.

The pearl-shell and bêche de mer fisheries alone amount to nearly a million sterling annually. The growth of sugar plantations is equally remarkable. Probably £1,000,000 have been spent in Queensland alone in creating sugar estates where only a few years ago there was nothing but the wilderness: the actual produce of these estates is already 19,000 tons, and in three years will probably be 50,000 tons. The great importance of this to Australasia will at once be seen from the fact that in the single year 1881 sugar to the value of close on £2,700,000 was imported into Australia and New Zealand, of which the import from Mauritius exceeded £1,500,000. It is quite certain there will be a great extension of the growth of sugar in Queensland and Fiji, and in it a constantly larger amount of Polynesian labour is sure to be employed. Now the necessity of further regulations for the labour trade and traffic in firearms, by foreigners as well as our own people, is one of the things that have been most strongly pressed upon Her Majesty's Government by the highest Imperial officers, and by every authority of importance in the Colonies concerned.

The chief difficulty we have in referring to this is that no one in Australasia really knows how far the ground is clear of foreign claims, or to what engagements Her Majesty's Government is now committed. It is of the first importance to define with accuracy the political relation in which each group of islands stands to-day, whether to the Imperial Government or to any foreign Powers. We therefore trust that we may ask your Lordship to enable us to place before our Governments a full statement of what claims have yet been made by foreign Powers, and of the extent to which such claims have been recognized by Her Majesty.

The sense of uncertainty and insecurity which prevails in Australasia on this subject may perhaps be best illustrated by what has happened in the case of the New Hebrides. That group was originally part of the Colony of New Zealand, under the Charter of 1840. At some time, of which we are not aware, a rather vague understanding appears to have been come to with the Government of France that the New Hebrides should be relinquished as a possession of the Crown and their independence recognized. In 1878, upon reports coming to Europe of a French project to annex the group, the French Ambassador declared that his Government had no intention to interfere with the independence of the islands, and asked for an assurance that Her Majesty's Government would also respect it. Your Lordship, being then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, informed the French Ambassador, with the concurrence of the Colonial Office, that Her Majesty's Government had no intention of "changing the condition of independence which the New Hebrides now enjoyed." Upon a remonstrance being made by Sir George Grey, then Premier of New Zealand, the Secretary of State replied that the New Hebrides were no longer within the limits of New Zealand, and that the Imperial Government had no intention of proceeding in the direction of a political protectorate. In the Order in Council of 1877, the New Hebrides had (evidently by design) been omitted from the islands specified by name; nevertheless, the High Commissioner understood that his authority extended over them, for he appointed Captain Cyprian Bridge, R.N., to be a Deputy-Commissioner there, and it was in that character that Captain Bridge went down to the islands. Now we venture to ask whether it is quite certain that after Her Majesty's had once been graciously pleased to include the New Hebrides in the boundaries of New Zealand, the mere fact of new boundaries being afterwards fixed for that Colony was sufficient to make the New Hebrides cease to be a possession of the Crown? At any rate, if they have ceased to be so, and there is an understanding between the Government of England and France to respect the independence of the group, the least that can be asked is that English and French subjects shall be on the same footing there. But it transpired, in a debate in the Chamber of Deputies, on the 8th May, that a Company had been formed at New Caledonia, by a planter who had acquired 'des terrains importants' at Sandwich Island; and the Temps, only a few days ago, announced that a Company composed of colonists from New Caledonia had succeeded in "creating very important interests in the islands, had bought several of them, and had obtained large concessions in others"; whereupon that journal suggested that the "best method of procedure would be to grant to the Company rights similar to those recently accorded by the English Government to the North Borneo Company." We venture to ask whether the agreement, whatever it is, which exists between the two Governments, would allow of any grant of that kind being made by France?

Nor can the colonists feel secure against some sudden act on the part of France in annexing other islands whose independence may stand on, at any rate, no worse a footing than that of the New Hebrides. It is only a few years since Commodore Hoskins reported to the Admiralty that a French ship of war had been sent to the Chesterfield and Bampton Reefs by the Governor of New Caledonia, to proclaim those islands to be French territory, which "was done with the usual formalities." But the Governor of New South Wales had already granted a lease of the islets for working guano deposits; and it had to be arranged that the deposits should be worked jointly by French and English Companies until the question of title was decided, as to which Sir Hercules Robinson had sent a telegram to the Colonial Office immediately on receiving notice of the annexation from the Governor of New Caledonia. Still less can the colonists feel any security against other acts of which they have already complained. Early in 1880 a schooner arrived at Auckland from New Caledonia, chartered by the French authorities, bringing eleven political offenders, and nine convicts for criminal offences. Sir John Hall, then Premier of New Zealand, immediately telegraphed to all the Governments of Australia, asking them to join in urging Her Majesty's Government to remonstrate with the Government of the French Republic against a repetition of that act. The Government of New South Wales stated that "batches of pardoned convicts from New Caledonia had on several occasions arrived there." The Agent-General brought the case before the Colonial Office, and Lord Kimberley requested the Foreign Office to move the French Government to discontinue any shipments of convicts from New Caledonia to New Zealand. But convicts have often escaped from New Caledonia in open boats, and landed on the Queensland coast: more than fifty who came to Queensland were afterwards extradited, besides many others known to be French convicts from Noumea.

Again, by a "Reciprocal Engagement" entered into between England and France, in 1847, respecting the Raiatea group of islets (to the leeward of Tahiti), both nations bound themselves "never to take possession of the islands, either absolutely or under the title of a protectorate, or in any other form whatever." But the French flag has been hoisted for three years on those islands, without, so far as we know, any consent or recognition having been ever given by Her Majesty's Government.

Declaration,
June 19, 1847.

Again, a scheme is being debated even now in France, which, if it is carried into effect, will be more disastrous for the Pacific than anything that has happened since the creation of the penal settlement at New Caledonia; for it is nothing less than a well-matured design for transporting for life (transportation à vie) to New Caledonia, the Loyalty Isles, and the Marquesas Islands, great numbers of French habitual criminals (récidivistes et malfaiteurs d'habitude). Four proposals to this effect were before the French Legislature, one of them a bill brought in by the Government. They were all referred together to a Committee, which reported that the Minister of the Interior had accepted certain modifications, and that there was no further difficulty. In the debates in the Chamber of Deputies, the reporter of the projet de loi (M. Gerville-Réache) stated that at least 60,000 could be sent to New Caledonia, and 23,000 to the Loyalty Isles. It was calculated that in the first year after the law came into force 5,000 convicts would be transported for life under it, and an official estimate was presented of the probable cost of sending these 5,000 to the Loyalty Isles and the Marquesas. It was said by the opponents of the measure that the number of convicts transported would be 100,000; this was denied; whereupon it was asked whether, since in the very first year 5,000 were to be sent, it could be expected that the number would not increase every year after. The class to be sent was officially described by M. Gerville-Réache as dangerous, steeped in vice, debauchery, and crime (hommes dangereux, perdus de vices, usés par la débauche, souillés de tous les crimes). These criminals were to be transported for life (la rélegation consistera dans l'internement perpétuel des condamnés); but were not to serve any term of punishment, and were to be free on arrival (en résumé, le transporté à son arrivée dans la colonie sera libre). The object was to rid France of them (en débarrasser la patrie). The Government was to support them at first, till they could get work; if they could not work, they must live how they could (ils vivront comme ils pourront). The projet de loi appointed New Caledonia and its dependencies, and the Marquesas Group, as "colonies" to which the récidivistes were to be sent; but it was openly proposed in the debate to include the New Hebrides, the Loyalty Isles, and the Isle of Pines. Journal Officiel, Comte de Lanjuinais said it had been talked of to send the convicts to the New Hebrides (on avait parlé d'envoyer les transportés aux Nouvelles Hébrides). M. Richard Waddington, speaking officially as a member of the Committee, said that the title to the New Hebrides was not settled (il s'agit d'une question de propriété non encore déterminée) but that he thought the French title was good, and that the French flag might very soon be hoisted on the islands (Je crois que notre titre de possession est sérieux, et que dans un avenir très rapproché le pavillon de la France pourra y flotter); adding, however, that in saying so he was speaking for himself and not for the Government (en engageant ma responsabilité seule et non celle du gouvernement). Another speaker went further, and said that in response to the supposed action of England in New Guinea, the new Hebrides would be seized by France (pour répondre à l'Angleterre, qui si audacieusement vient de mettre la main sur la Nouvelle-Guinée, nous saurons à notre tour nous emparer des Nouvelles Hébrides). The Chamber of Deputies, after adopting most of the Government Bill, sent it back for revision to the Committee, who returned it with very little alteration. They estimated that in the first four years the number of convicts to be sent would be 20,000. The colonies to which the convicts might be sent remained the same, namely, New Caledonia and its dependencies, the Marquesas, an island called Phu-Quoc, and Guiana. The bill has passed the Chamber, but is not yet before the Senate.

Your Lordship will not be surprised at our Governments urging that this scheme for making the Pacific Islands the receptacle for the dangerous classes of France, is one deserving the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government. It is impossible for Australasia to look without the gravest apprehension at the prospect of any proposal of the kind receiving the tacit acquiescence of England. What hope is there for the Pacific Islands, if a great nation like France pours into them vast numbers of her dangerous classes, not as convicts under penal servitude, but free the moment they land, so long as they do not return to France? or how can Australia and New Zealand be expected to hear with patience of such a law being passed? There have been rumours of some proposal by which the penal establishment at New Caledonia should be altogether given up by France, and the convicts transferred to the New Hebrides; the inducement being that New Caledonia would then be opened to settlement by free colonists. We do not deny that there would be an advantage in freeing New Caledonia from the curse of transportation; but the Bill before the French Chambers expressly retains New Caledonia as one of the places to which the récidivistes are to be sent; therefore as to the New Hebrides, all the Colonies trust that full effect will be given to Lord Granville's assurance in the House of Lords a few days ago, that "both Her Majesty's Government and the French Government acknowledge in full the obligation which the understanding about the New Hebrides imposes upon both," and that the group shall not be allowed to pass in any way under the dominion of France.

Lord Granville,
July 10, 1883.

Nor is it only with regard to French policy that there is, in the opinion of the colonists, cause for some apprehension. It is often said that Prince Bismarck has no desire to extend the influence of Germany to the Pacific; but what happened in the case of the Navigators group shows that idea to be a mistaken one. In the early part of 1880 a scheme was proposed in Germany for a great trading Company to take over the property of Messrs. Godeffroy. In a communication to the Imperial Under Secretary of State, Prince Bismarck laid down the conditions on which the Company was to receive a guarantee from the State of an interest of 4½ per cent. on its capital, not to exceed 300,000 marks a year, and to be for twenty years. The Chancellor referred to "the interest which the State takes in the prosperity of German enterprise in the South Seas"; and justified the financial assistance he proposed giving to the new Company, by reason of the Godeffroy firm having "got into difficulties which threatened the German South Sea trade with the loss of their factories and plantations on the Samoa Islands." A Bill to give effect to the Chancellor's proposal was introduced accordingly, but rejected by the German Parliament in April, 1880. Again, as recently as December last, the Royal Colonial Institute called the attention of the Colonial Office to an article in the Allgemeine Zeitung strongly advocating the annexation by Germany of Eastern New Guinea. The answer was that neither Lord Granville nor your Lordship saw any reason for supposing that the German Government contemplated any scheme of the kind; but we venture to ask that a more definite assurance should be obtained from that Government, which can hardly refuse to recognize the vital character of the matter to every Colony in Australia.

Before leaving the subject of foreign intervention, we submit that it would be expedient to settle more clearly the extent to which the independence of the chiefs in the various islands is recognized, and their right to make treaties admitted. Where the treaty-right exists, it is quite certain that the Western Pacific Order in Council is in operation? For instance the Navigators and the Friendly Islands are among those specified by name in the Order in Council: but we understand there is an English treaty with the "king" of Tonga; and in the case of the Navigators there is a treaty with Germany, which Prince Bismarck communicated to the Reichstag in 1879. And we believe a treaty of some kind was made between Samoa, and the United States, giving to the States the exclusive right of using the fine harbour at Tutulia as a coaling and naval station, the U.S. frigate "Narragansett" thereupon saluting the chief's flag with fifteen guns; indeed, this treaty was afterwards the subject of a representation by Sir Edward Thornton to the Government of Washington. Again, several of the Powers have appointed Consuls to the Islands; Her Majesty has a Consul at Rarotonga, a Consul at Samoa, and a Vice-Consul at Tonga, while Sir Arthur Gordon, the High Commissioner, is Consul-General for the Pacific Islands, the conduct of relations with native States and tribes being confided to him in that capacity, under the control of the Foreign Office. As there is nothing that can be called law administered by the native States and tribes, it is difficult to see how one day the same evils will not arise from conflicting consular jurisdictions as have been so powerfully described by Lord Dufferin in the case of Egypt.

Lord Dufferin.
Egypt, No. 6.

The new policy proposed.

The two things we set ourselves to show were, first, that the Western Pacific Order in Council could never be made adequate to do what is wanted, without assuming a jurisdiction hitherto forbidden by Act of Parliament; and secondly, that the fear of foreign intervention which has existed in Australia was not without warrant. For this purpose we have relied not on assertions of our own but on official records, and with hardly an exception have only spoken of events that have happened in the last three years.

If we have established these two points, then the Imperial Government can hardly reject the consequence, that the time has come when complete jurisdiction ought to be assumed by England over the Western Pacific, as the only means of meeting the difficulties which beset alike the Imperial and the Colonial Governments, and of averting evils which threaten Her Majesty's loyal subjects in all that region.

We have rejoiced to see that such a policy has already received the almost unanimous support of the English Press. Some opposition to it is perhaps only natural. We are sensible of the repugnance that exists to the idea of adding to the already vast responsibilities of England a new and admittedly immense charge like that of the Western Pacific Islands. Yet it is difficult for any one to avoid the conclusion that these islands, unless they are meanwhile lost by foreign annexation, will inevitably belong to England in the end. The same impelling power, not of mere desires but of events, which induced the Imperial Government to do at last in Fiji what they had so often refused, is constantly at work, and incessantly being renewed and strengthened with regard to the Western Pacific. But it was not till Fiji had become the opprobrium of the Southern seas that Her Majesty's Government would interfere. Surely they will not now inflict upon Australasia the hard necessity of waiting till New Guinea also, and perhaps other islands, become Alsatis as dangerous as Fiji once was, scourges to the peaceable subjects of Her Majesty, and a disgrace to civilization. For it is vain to think that the trade and intercourse between Australia and New Zealand and these islands can be suppressed. Settlement both English and foreign is spreading in every direction, yet of safety for life and property there is none. The High Commissioner himself has shown that it is quite impossible to do what is wanted by any Order in Council capable of being issued under the Act of 1875: in other words impossible to do it without assuming the very jurisdiction which it was the purpose of that Act to forbid. Nor would an International Convention do it, for a convention could only extend to the nationalities concerned, and could not embrace the natives. England could not claim, in a convention with Foreign Powers, any jurisdiction over the native tribes without herself asserting over them the same right of dominion as would be asserted by the policy the Colonies are urging upon your Lordship: nor could any convention be made at all, without first acknowledging that Foreign Powers possessed an equal right with England to exercise a right of dominion over natives, an acknowledgment against which every subject of Her Majesty in Australia and New Zealand would unite in making the strongest remonstrance.

The case of New Guinea is very pressing, because whatever powers are given to the High Commissioner, they can, in the nature of things, be even less exercised there than in any of the other islands. New Guinea is in such close proximity to Queensland, that whatever is done there must affect Queensland more than anything that is done in the other islands could affect the rest of Australia or New Zealand. All the trade of Queensland with England and India by steam passes through Torres Straits: regular steam communication is now established there: it is really indispensable not only that the Straits should be free to navigation, but that there should be no risk of a foreign Power establishing a naval station there. Adventurous men are occupying portions of the New Guinea coast-line, and irregular settlement is sure to take place more and and more. What has so often happened will happen again. Failing the colonization of the great island under proper authority, adventurers will flock there who will neither show regard for the native inhabitants, nor be under any restraint among themselves; the evils and dangers which existed in Fiji will repeat themselves, only on a larger scale, and Queensland, of all the Australias, will suffer from them the most. This has been stated over and over again, in speeches in both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, by the Governments and Legislatures of Australasia, by the Royal Colonial Institute, and by private persons of high rank and experience in affairs, till we are almost ashamed to repeat it ourselves; yet it must be repeated, for the danger is not far off and a pretence, but imminent and a reality. Surely the Imperial Government cannot continue to refuse so reiterated an appeal. But if, fearing the responsibility of assuming authority over a vast and inaccessible region of mountains and forests peopled by several millions of savages, the Imperial Government finally determine not to take full jurisdiction over all New Guinea east of 143°, we trust that the same objection will not apply against establishing law and order along the coast where settlement is now extending. Let it at least exist over the fringe of the southern coast-line for the present, as was done the other day on the West Coast of Africa. No Act of the Imperial Parliament is necessary for this purpose, because Her Majesty has the same right now to assume jurisdiction over the southern coast-line of the island as she had to assume it when the islands in Torres Straits were annexed; and if it were deemed more convenient, the same process as was adopted then might be adopted now, of giving power by Letters Patent to the Governor of Queensland to declare by proclamation that certain portions of the coast-line of New Guinea should be annexed, under such conditions as it might be thought fit to prescribe. Letters Patent 42 Vict.

We have referred to the irregular settlement that is even now taking place. We must with all respect remonstrate against the doctrine laid down by the High Commissioner on the New Guinea question in 1878, when he "formally and emphatically declared that the Imperial Government disclaimed all obligation to protect or interfere on behalf of persons voluntarily placing themselves in positions of danger in a savage country, and that those who entered on such enterprises must do so at their own risk and peril." It is certainly not by colonists who have founded communities on the other side of the world, whose trade already exceeds in volume the whole foreign trade of England at the accession of Queen Victoria, that this doctrine will ever be acquiesced in. It was by "voluntarily placing themselves in danger" that English adventurers built up our Indian and Colonial Empire, and created a commerce which now is numbered by hundreds of millions every year; nor is the colonizing spirit which has done that work capable of being extinguished by the knowledge that the enterprise of founding new settlements involves risk and peril. But at least it may be said that if the Imperial Government was not to interfere on behalf of English settlers, it should not interfere against them. It surely can never be contended that an elaborate scheme of government was to be invented whose sole object should be to punish a subject of the Queen for any wrong he might commit, while it denied him redress for any wrong that he might suffer. Sir A. Gordon,
Speech at
Melbourne, 1878.

Imperial interest also concerned.

So far we may perhaps be said to have urged only points that specially affect Colonial interests, or at any rate do not closely touch Imperial ones. This may be true so long as Europe is at peace; but the Imperial interest would spring up the moment any war broke out which involved England in hostilities with a European Power. The Imperial Government have called upon the Colonies to do their part in the defence of their own harbours, and our Governments have not only acknowledged they had a duty in that respect, but are doing their best to fulfil it. They feel that they have a right to ask in return that the task shall not be more difficult for them than the Imperial Government can help, and that they shall not be exposed to the creation of fortified naval stations and places d'armes in the Pacific, which should shelter an enemy's fleet and threaten their commerce, their coal measures, and even their safety. The nation will never permit that her naval supremacy in the Pacific shall be endangered; and it can hardly be contested that if France and other European Powers created new naval stations in the islands, the existing conditions in all that ocean would be changed, and everything relating to Her Majesty's Australian squadron assume a new aspect and a new importance.

Concert between the Imperial and Colonial Governments.

But while we have thus represented what the Australian Colonies believe ought to be done by the Imperial Government, they are also ready to acknowledge what they ought to do themselves. Your Lordship stated in the House of Lords, that if anything was to be done, it must be done either by the Imperial Government itself, or by the Australian Colonies acting together in concert, or by the Imperial and Colonial Governments combined; and we assure your Lordship that our Governments will hail with the greatest satisfaction such an invitation to them to co-operate with the Imperial authority. There are two immediate ways in which the Colonies can give their co-operation: by contributing to the cost of the policy they are asking your Lordship to pursue, and by placing themselves in a position to act in union with each other and in concert with you.

As regards the first, whatever differences there were when Lord Carnarvon made his proposal of 1876, there are none now. The Victorian Parliament has already passed an Address, assuring Her Majesty that Victoria will share in the cost of the policy which is being urged upon your Lordship; the Queensland Government has assured your Lordship of its readiness to do the same; and the other Colonies will also do their part. But it does not need for us to remind your Lordship that no Ministries can engage for the payment of indefinite sums, and that the assent of our Legislatures to grants of money must be expressed in the usual way. Permanent appropriation will certainly be necessary; and for this not only time is required, but consultation among the Governments, arrangement of the respective contributions of the Colonies, and the passing of the requisite votes; in the meanwhile, the first point for us to know is the amount which the Imperial Government would require to be provided for whatever action is contemplated by your Lordship.

As regards the other question of concerted action between the Imperial and Colonial Governments, your Lordship expressed your opinion to us at our interview with you in the clearest terms, and repeated it in the House of Lords. "If," you said, "the Australian people desire an extension beyond their present limits, the most practical step that they could take, the one that would most facilitate any operation of the kind, and diminish in the greatest degree the responsibility of the mother country, would be the confederation of the Colonies into one united whole, which would be powerful enough to undertake and carry through tasks for which no one Colony is at present sufficient." The large question of Federation which your Lordship has here raised is one on which the Colonies have not made up their minds, and is one of too grave moment to be decided even under the sway of the strong feelings which now exist among them respecting the policy that ought to be pursued in the Western Pacific. But there is nothing to prevent concerted action at once with the Imperial Government for that particular policy; and we acknowledge that your Lordship may justly require not only such concerted action, but joint engagements on the part of the Colonial Governments for the permanence and stability of the policy itself. This too requires time, consultation among our Governments, and probably legislation also—at any rate concurrent resolutions in the respective Colonial Assemblies. On the other hand, the Colonies will not imagine that your Lordship has invited them to a co-operation which is to be barren of results: and our Governments will feel assured that if they on their part pass the requisite appropriations, and combine for that concert with the Imperial Government which is necessary for any policy to succeed, they may rely upon the policy itself being adopted, and effect being given at last to the wishes which they have cherished for more than thirty years. In once more urging these wishes on Her Majesty's Government, they have not come as suppliants for some light favour, but as Englishmen to whom their country has given a great destiny which must be kept from harm; desiring no new territories for themselves, but asking that the Queen's subjects may enjoy the blessings of peace and order where now the law has no terrors for the evil-doer; not seeking by a clearer policy to set new burdens on the English taxpayer, but willing themselves to bear its cost; and welcoming with gladness an invitation to be associated with the Imperial Government in a work which must assuredly be done one day, and can as certainly be best done now.

APPENDIX D.

[Enclosure to No. 23.]

The Premier of Tasmania to The Premier of Queensland.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Hobart, 30 July, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, addressed to the Colonial Secretary, with reference to the proposed annexation of New Guinea, and enclosing a copy of a memorandum by you on the subject, dated the 10th July, approved by the Administrator in Council on the 17th July.

I have perused with much interest your memorandum, which deals with a subject which the Premier of Victoria has repeatedly brought under my notice during the past two months—although Mr. Service's action appears to have been directed with a view to secure the annexation, not of New Guinea only, but of the New Hebrides and other islands in the Pacific.

This Government is prepared to act in cordial unison with the other Australasian Colonies in making all urgent representations to Great Britain to induce the Imperial authorities to prevent the occupation of either South-western New Guinea or any of the at present unannexed Pacific Islands by any foreign Power. The occupation of any of these places by a foreign Government as a penal settlement would be in the highest degree objectionable; and their occupation, even for peaceful colonization, by any Continental Power, would in all probability cause trouble to Queensland and New South Wales in the future. Now, the interests of the Australasian Colonies are so far linked together that even a probability of future trouble or danger to one Colony is a sufficient reason for united action on the part of all. But the real difficulty of the case, to my mind, lies in this—that the question of what measures are expedient, or even possible to be taken, is one the determination of which must be left to Her Majesty's Ministers in England, and in coming to their decision they must necessarily be affected by larger considerations than those which present themselves to our minds, and their action may be limited by obligations of the nature of which we are uninformed, and of the extent of which we are ignorant. The question, therefore, whether the end we seek—viz., the prevention of annexation by any other Power—is only to be attained by an act of annexation on the part of England, or whether it may not be attained by diplomatic representations, is one that only English Ministers can settle, and it should be left in their hands. It is perfectly obvious that the Australasian Colonies, standing alone, are in no position to enter upon a policy of aggression, and that, apart from their position as a portion of the great English Empire, they could offer no effectual resistance to the occupation by France, Germany, or America, of any one of the numerous islands which dot the Pacific, although the occupation of such island by a foreign Government might justly be deemed fraught with menace to the future peacefulness of these southern seas. But if we are dependent upon England for any effective check to what we regard as foreign encroachment, is it wise, or even becoming, to assume a semi-hostile position to the Imperial authorities because, on our first approach to the Queen's Advisers, we do not at once get all we ask? I cannot but believe, in view of the strong language that has been used as to this question of annexation, and of the impatience of control which the proposed action indicates, that the assembly of a Federal Council or Convention at the present time, for the purpose of expressing more forcibly and more collectively our dissatisfaction with the decision of Her Majesty's Ministers, and our opinion of the unwisdom of their action, would be the beginning of difficulties the end of which I do not profess to be able to foresee.

The mere question of the expense of governing any new dependency is, I venture to think, of secondary consideration. Shared among the Colonies it would not be burdensome, and probably Tasmania's share would be comparatively trifling. My objection to the course suggested is rather that it appears to me that we are going too fast and too far; that we are subordinating Imperial to Colonial interests, and assuming an incapacity or an unwillingness on the part of Great Britain to defend us from the evils which we dread, for which there does not seem to be any sufficient warrant.

For these reasons this Government is not prepared to do more than to join in urging Her Majesty to take such effectual steps as the wisdom of Her Advisers may suggest to prevent the occupation of New Guinea or the Pacific Islands by any foreign Power.

I have, &c.,

W. R. GIBLIN.

APPENDIX E.

[Enclosure to No. 45.]

Colonial Office to the Agents-General for New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria.

Gentlemen,

Downing-street, 31 August, 1883.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st July, placing before His Lordship the representations with regard to New Guinea and the islands in the Western Pacific Ocean which you had promised during your recent interview. Lord Derby recognizes the care and ability with which you have recapitulated the history of past transactions in that part of the world, and, as His Lordship does not perceive that this department need take exception to any of the statements in the earlier part of your letter he will not at present examine them in detail. I am, however, to inform you that, as it contains many references to the acts and opinions of the High Commissioner and of Her Majesty's naval officers, Lord Derby has transmitted copies to Sir Arthur Gordon and to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, for their consideration.

2. Turning to your inquiry as to the extent to which the claims of Foreign Powers in the Western Pacific have been recognized by Her Majesty's Government, His Lordship is disposed to doubt whether there is really so much uncertainty or absence of information on this subject in the Australasian Colonies as you seem to apprehend.

3. Referring, however, first to the islands of the Western Pacific which are most distant from Australia, the Navigators' Islands, no Power has claimed or indicated any desire to obtain a paramount influence or protectorate over that group. The Consular Officers of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States have, jointly or separately, from time to time exercised influence over public and native affairs at Samoa; and this country, as well as Germany, has entered into treaties with the King and Government of Samoa. The group therefore forms an independent State, recognized as such by European diplomacy, and under these circumstances the question might possibly arise whether its annexation by any Power would not be a violation of international law.

4. The Government of the Tongan or Friendly Islands is also recognized as independent, and this country and Germany have recently concluded treaties with the King of that group. The same argument therefore applies in this as in the former case.

5. Proceeding westward past Fiji, which, with the neighbouring island of Rotumah, is British, we come to the New Hebrides; and your letter shows that you are aware of the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of France, in pursuance of which the independence of those islands has been up to the present time recognized and respected by both Governments. The Loyalty Islands, being close to New Caledonia, are to be looked upon as dependencies of the French Government in that island.

6. The foregoing brief statement may suffice to explain to you that the claims and interests of other countries constitute a very serious impediment to that "complete jurisdiction" which you represent that England ought now to assume over the Western Pacific, and that the best known and most frequented groups of islands have already such relations with Foreign Powers, in common with England, as cannot be summarily ignored. You do not specifically refer to the important islands or group of islands known as New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon Islands, and the Santa Cruz Islands. They are at a considerable distance from Australia, and are for the most part of great size, and inhabited by warlike and cannibal tribes. Her Majesty's Government have not before them any evidence that the Governments of the Australasian Colonies have sufficiently considered the extent of the responsibilities which the annexation or protectorate of these islands would involve, and they are far from being satisfied that the assumption of those responsibilities is necessary or justifiable.

7. With reference to that part of your letter which treats of New Guinea, Lord Derby desires me to observe that he has at present nothing to add to the despatch which he addressed on the 11th July to the Acting Governor of Queensland. His Lordship concludes that, after receiving that despatch, the Governments of any Colonies desiring to bear the cost of any measures which, as indicated in the two last paragraphs of that despatch, Her Majesty's Government may be prepared to take, take, will confer together and make those united recommendations which have been invited, furnishing also an effective guarantee for such expenditure as may be incurred. They will, no doubt, at the same time consider whether they wish to make jointly any similar definite proposal with regard to other islands not already connected by treaty or otherwise with Foreign Powers.

I am to add that Lord Derby has read with attention your representations as to the inconvenience and injury which, unless great precautions are taken, might result from the continuance and development of the French penal settlements in New Caledonia and the adjacent islands, and that His Lordship is in communication with the Foreign Office on the subject.

I am, &c.,
JOHN BRAMSTON.

APPENDIX F.

[Enclosures to Nos. 49 and 50.]

MEMORIAL to the Honorable the President and the Members of the Federal Convention appointed to meet at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, in October next.

The Memorial of the inhabitants of the Colony of Fiji,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH :—

That your Memorialists are residents of the Crown Colony of Fiji, and regard the question of the ultimate federation of the Australasian Colonies as one of vital importance to the interests of this Colony.

That the system of Government adopted in a Crown Colony such as we have here is altogether opposed to the spirit of the age ; that, to a great extent, it impedes the investment and employment of capital in developing the industrial resources of the country ; that it checks the producing interests by unnecessary restrictions, and exercises such an unwholesome influence on every branch of industry that it has retarded rather than advanced the natural progress of the Colony.

That the Colony is self-supporting is evidenced by the fact that our revenue now amounts to £98,000 sterling and the expenditure to £87,000 sterling ; yet in its appropriation the people are denied any voice, and this, notwithstanding that the Legislative Council contains certain non-official members, nominated and appointed by the Governor, yet—such is the dominating influence of the executive and the official members of the Council—they are powerless for good, and can neither control the expenditure in any way nor are they permitted to interfere with any appointment to office within the Colony.

The geographical position of this Colony, its large and increasing business connections with New South Wales, Victoria, and New Zealand, has induced the inhabitants to come forward and beg that they may be allowed to place before the Conference, now shortly to sit, its political position and the many benefits which would accrue to the Colony and its people by the introduction of a more liberal form of Government, so that the advantages which the Australasian Colonies must derive from federation may be extended to Fiji, whether as an appanage of one or other of the Colonial Dependencies or otherwise, as the Conference may deem most advisable for the best interests and prosperity of this Colony and its people.

And your Memorialists solicit that the combined and powerful influence of the Convention will be exercised with the Imperial Authorities in procuring their consent to the incorporation of this Colony with federated Australasia.

With the object of securing the foregoing, or, if that be denied us, of obtaining some amelioration of the disabilities under which we labour through our present form of Government, your Memorialists have prepared and forwarded for presentation to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen a petition, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and it is prayed that the members of the Convention will assist the Petitioners in obtaining the objects of their petition.

Dated in Levuka, Fiji, this 19th September, 1883.

To Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, &c., &c., &c.

This the humble Petition of the undersigned your Majesty's British subjects, resident in the Colony of Fiji,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH :—

1. That your Petitioners are colonists of Fiji, and are largely interested, commercially and otherwise, in the present and future prosperity of the Colony.

2. That Fiji has been a British Colony since the 10th day of October, 1874.

3. That the present population of the Colony consists, it is estimated, of 110,000 native-born Fijians, and of 2,500 European and other foreign residents, exclusive of labourers introduced from other of the Pacific Islands and from India.

4. That the Government of the Colony is now administered by the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council.

5. That the Executive Council, as ordinarily constituted, consists of the Governor, the Colonial Secretary, the Attorney-General, the Receiver-General, and the Agent-General of Immigration.

6. That the Legislative Council consists of the Governor and his Executive Council, the Honorable the Chief Justice and other officials not members of the Executive Council, with certain gentlemen not connected with the Government but who are nominees of the Crown.

7. That all laws and ordinances passed for the government of the Colony are enacted by the Governor with the advice of the Legislative Council.

8. That the votes of the official members of the Legislative Council are recorded as His Excellency may direct, notwithstanding that their personal opinion may be at variance with his own.

9. That no member of the Legislative Council, other than the Governor, can propose any expenditure of money, nor reduce nor add to any amount proposed by him.

10. That since the constitution of the Government as now existing, no single ordinance has been passed when introduced by any non-official member.

11. That the revenue of the Colony has now reached a total of at least £90,000 per annum ; that the European inhabitants are the principal contributors (directly or indirectly) thereof, and that such revenue exceeds the present expenditure of the Colony.

12. That all appointments to offices and positions of emolument within the Colony are made by the Crown alone ; that a reference to the appointments made for some years past will show that only an exceedingly small proportion of the offices created have been filled by residents in the Colony, and that in the great majority of instances preference has been given to cadets from England or Scotland or persons from India.

13. That your Petitioners are denied all right of local self-government, and show that in the year 1877 provision was made for the appointment of a Town Board in Levuka, so constituted that such a proportion of members should be elected by the ratepayers as to give them a majority in the Town Council. That this system worked successfully when tried in Levuka, but that for the management of the town of Suva an officer of the Government alone manages the municipal business of the town and imposes and expends all rates.

14. That a reference to the statistics of the Colony and to other sources of information will show that the European colonists are as orderly, law-abiding, and well-conducted as any other subjects within your Majesty's dominions.

15. That your Majesty's subjects in this Colony are discontented and grieved that all right of being represented or heard in the Councils of this Colony is denied to them, and that they have no voice in the administration of the Government of the Colony, the enactment of its laws, or the public expenditure.

16. That, with few exceptions, the Ordinances of the Colony are introduced to the Legislative Council and passed without prior publicity having been given to them, so as to allow discussion, and objection, or suggestion thereto—to be made through the medium of the public Press, or in other ways through the non-official members of the Council.

17. That the fact of the inhabitants of the Colony consisting of so large a proportion of native Fijians is no reason why the right ordinarily granted to British subjects of being represented in Colonial Councils of Government should be entirely denied to your Majesty's subjects in this Colony.

18. That, as there will shortly be assembled at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, a Convention of Representatives of the Australasian Colonies to consider the question of a general Federation of the Colonies, and the annexation of parts of New Guinea and also certain other islands or groups of islands in the Western Pacific, the time has therefore seemed to your Majesty's Petitioners opportune for praying from your Majesty's Government consideration of their present political position. In furtherance of which object your Petitioners have memorialized the said Convention now about to meet, and have requested them to assist your Petitioners in obtaining the objects herein set forth.

Your Petitioners therefore now most humbly pray:—

1. That your Majesty will see fit, in the event of the Australasian Colonies becoming federated, to constitute the Colony of Fiji an integral portion of Federated Australasia.
2. That in the event of such Federation not being now immediately accomplished, your Majesty will see fit to allow the Colony of Fiji to become incorporated with one of the Australasian Colonies as now existing, with the consent of such Colony.
3. Or that your Majesty will see fit to grant to the British-born subjects resident within this Colony complete relief from the humiliating condition in which they are at present politically placed.
4. That such relief be granted with due regard to the preservation of all existing rights and privileges of the native races inhabiting this Colony.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Dated in Levuka, Fiji, this 19th September, 1883.

Foreign Office to Colonial Office.

Sir, Foreign Office, May 8, 1883.
I am directed by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to transmit to you, to be laid before Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin relative to a Company about to be formed in Germany for the colonization of New Guinea.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

My Lord, Berlin, May 3, 1883.
With reference to Sir John Lumley's despatch of the 31st March,* upon the subject of a Company about to be formed in Germany with the view of colonizing New Guinea, I asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether I was correct in reporting to your Lordship that the above-named Company was a private one, and not as yet supported by the Imperial German Government. His Excellency replied that my impression was correct, besides which the Imperial Government did not promote any scheme for the increase of emigration from Germany, as I well knew.

His Lordship desires me to request that you will inform the Committee of the Aborigines Protection Society that the question is receiving the careful consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Letter from the Chief Justice of Queensland.

NATIVES IN QUEENSLAND.‡
To the Editor of the "Times."

Sir, London, May 22.
Since my arrival in England on Thursday evening last I have read two communications published in the Times of the 15th and 18th instant on the proposed annexation of New Guinea.

Upon the policy of that step I do not propose to offer any comment. I have no doubt the matter will be settled with full knowledge and perfect ability by those whose business it is to consider and decide upon it.

In justice, however, to my fellow colonists, I am bound to ask you to publish what I deem to be a most important correction of serious errors of both your correspondents, that is to say, their statements that "the evidence of a native is absolutely excluded from consideration in all Courts of justice in Queensland;" that "even the most ordinary legal security against the perpetration of injustice on the weaker race is absent in Queensland;" and that "heathen testimony is excluded from the Courts of that Colony."

As

* Enclosure in No. 53 of [C.—3617] May, 1883.

† No. 64 in [C.—3617] May, 1883.

‡ This letter was published in the Times of May 23rd, 1883.

As ex-Premier and present Chief Justice of Queensland, I am enabled to state that your correspondents are absolutely in error in all these particulars. Ample provision exists for the administration of justice to all races in Queensland by independent Judges, whose tenure of office is the same as that of the Justices of the High Court of Justice of England, and Justices of the Peace are appointed throughout the Colony. Moreover, I and my colleagues have judicially received the testimony of "heathen and native" witnesses and submitted it to Juries, in cases even where prisoners were charged with capital offences. Polynesian heathens and native aboriginal blacks have thus given evidence in Court under the existing law of Queensland. Under the old law the testimony of native blacks was not receivable, for reasons which it is not necessary I should discuss; but under an existing statute, enacted five or six years ago, such testimony is received in all Courts of justice.

So far from being unprotected by the law, provision has always been made for the defence of Polynesian and Native blacks charged with criminal offences, the expense of counsel and attorney being paid by the Crown. In this respect they enjoy a more extended privilege than that granted to white men under similar circumstances.

I am, &c.,

CHARLES LILLEY.

Sir,

15, Strand, W.C., May 25, 1883.

Referring to my letter to Lord Derby of the 23rd instant,* requesting His Lordship to appoint a time for receiving a deputation from the Council of the Royal Colonial Institute on the subject of New Guinea, I now have the honor to transmit to you, for His Lordship's information, a copy of the memorial which it is desired to present on that occasion.

I have, &c.,

FREDERICK YOUNG,
Honorary Secretary.

[Enclosure in No. 5.]

To the Right Hon. the Earl of Derby, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The Memorial of the Council of the Royal Colonial Institute,—

SHOWETH:—

That your memorialists are the elected governing body of the Royal Colonial Institute, which Society was founded in 1868, obtained a Royal Charter in 1882, and now comprises more than 1,900 members, amongst whom are residents in every part of Her Majesty's dominions.

That your memorialists have for a considerable time been impressed with the importance of the island of New Guinea, in relation to British interests, whether regarded from Home, Colonial, or Imperial points of view.

On April 29th, 1875, a deputation from this Institute had the honor of presenting a memorial to your Lordship's predecessor the Earl of Carnarvon, advocating the speedy annexation of New Guinea.

Among the reasons assigned for this annexation were:—

- I. The proximity of the shores of New Guinea to those of Australia, and the danger to British and Australian interests which would arise from a foreign nation establishing itself on the northern shores of Torres Straits, or occupying the valuable harbours of the island.
- II.—The increased expenditure for defences which a foreign occupation would entail, even in time of peace, upon both the Imperial and Colonial Governments,—an expenditure which would be greater than the cost of establishing and maintaining British rule in the island.
- III.—That the best prospect for the Papuans was to be brought under British rule, before Europeans were attracted to the island, either to settle in or visit it.
- IV.—That the establishment of a penal settlement in New Guinea, such as that of the French in New Caledonia, from which convicts continually escape to New South Wales and Queensland, to the great detriment and expense of those Colonies, would be a source of most serious injury to the whole of Australia.
- V.—That the coast should be occupied, in order that the claims of the British Crown, arising from formal possession having been taken in Her Majesty's name by British officers, should not be allowed to lapse.

Your memorialists submit that all the preceding reasons not only exist at the present moment, but are now much stronger, and more urgently call for action, than when they were stated eight years ago.

That the published returns of the Board of Trade show, as your Lordship has recently pointed out, that there is a great and increasing necessity for obtaining fresh markets for the manufactures of the United Kingdom.

That the well-known fact that "trade follows the flag" is proved by those same returns, which clearly show that the best and most profitable customers that England has are the people who live under the British flag and under British rule.

That all experience shows that the introduction amongst an uncivilized people of British manufactures, to which they have previously been strangers, speedily creates a large and rapidly increasing demand for those manufactures.

That

* No. 4.

That New Guinea contains a large population, with whom at the present time no trade is carried on by any European country.

That New Guinea under British rule would obtain all her supplies of manufactured goods from this country, giving in return her own raw productions.

That, if New Guinea should pass into foreign hands, England will lose that trade, as the restrictive fiscal systems of all other nations practically exclude England from trade with their Colonies and dependencies.

That the Government of Queensland is extending its railway system to the Gulf of Carpentaria.

That the Government of South Australia is now busily engaged in constructing railways from the north southwards, and from the south northwards. In a very few years these railways will be united, and will form a Central Australian Trunk Railway, with a northern terminus at or near Port Darwin.

That the South Australian Government has constructed, and since its establishment maintained, the Central Australian Telegraph line, the northern terminus of which is at Port Darwin, and which telegraph line is the only means of electric communication with Australia.

That the trade between Australia and the British possessions in the East is now very large, is greatly increasing, and by the rapid growth of population in the Australian Colonies, will soon acquire most important dimensions, especially when aided by the above-mentioned railway lines.

That at present this trade, or the greater part thereof, passes through Torres Straits, and would be at the mercy of a hostile power in possession of New Guinea.

That a hostile power in possession of New Guinea could easily cut off telegraphic communication with Australia, and could greatly hamper, if not entirely destroy the trade that will be carried on by means of the railways now in course of construction, the termini of which will be on the northern shores of Australia, closely adjacent to New Guinea.

That the soil of New Guinea is very fertile, whilst the geological formation indicates great richness in minerals, metals, and precious stones.

That owing to the elevation of much of the land, the climate of a large portion of New Guinea is as well suited for the carrying on of British industries, or industries under British supervision, as that of other tropical countries.

That in these days of progress no part of the earth's surface can long escape the spirit of enterprise which, with the necessities of trade, will soon attract large numbers of adventurers to New Guinea.

That the presence of large numbers of uncontrolled adventurers in New Guinea will lead to evils and complications such as occurred in Fiji, though on a much larger scale, and the cost to this country of restraining the actions of such adventurers will equal, if it does not exceed, the cost of maintaining in New Guinea a simple and efficient form of Government.

That a large staff of highly paid officials would not be required, as a Government Resident, with a body of police for his protection, would, aided by the periodical visits of war ships from the Australian station, be sufficient for the present.

That though it has been urged that the natives of New Guinea have not requested Great Britain to extend her rule over them as the Fijians did, it must be remembered that the cases are not analogous, as the Fijians were of one race, with one single Chief having authority to speak on their behalf; whilst in New Guinea the tribal system prevails, and there is no paramount Chief whose voice would be the voice of all.

That the rights of the natives to the lands occupied by them can and ought to be as easily recognized and as fully protected in New Guinea as in Fiji, while the increase of civilization, resulting from the British rule, cannot fail to be of great advantage to the native inhabitants of New Guinea.

That the possession of New Guinea by any other European Power would, even in time of peace, cause many inconveniences and expenses to England and her Australian possessions, and in time of war would be a standing danger to Australasia, and a menace to British interests in the East generally.

That the annexation of New Guinea to Great Britain would confer many benefits on the inhabitants of that large island, and would most materially add to the security, the prestige, and the wealth of the Empire.

It appears to your memorialists, from the correspondence which was laid before Parliament in July 1876, that the Imperial Government would have annexed New Guinea if one or more of the Governments of the Australian Colonies had been willing to contribute to the expense. This, they understand, Queensland has now offered to do.

Your memorialists, therefore, respectfully urge that the island of New Guinea, or those parts thereof to which any other recognized Government cannot establish a clear right, should be annexed to, and in due form be declared to be part of, the British dominions; and your memorialists feel assured that, should Her Majesty's Government not accede to the various and renewed requests which have from time to time been made, the deepest disappointment will be occasioned throughout the whole of Australasia, as well as amongst those, both in England and the Colonies, who take the warmest interest in questions which concern the different dominions or provinces of the Empire, or affect its general prosperity, security, and welfare.

In witness whereof, the said Council have caused the common seal of the Royal Colonial Institute to be affixed hereto, this twenty-second day of May, 1883.

Queensland.

Your Excellency,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, April 6, 1883.

With reference to the Executive Minute passed on the 15th ultimo, authorizing the despatch of an officer of the Government to take possession, in Her Majesty's name, of the island of New Guinea, in anticipation of a reply to the despatch addressed by your Excellency to the Secretary of State upon the subject, I have the honor to inform you that, in pursuance of the authority granted by the minute alluded to, Mr. H. M. Chester, Police Magistrate at Thursday Island, was instructed on the 20th ultimo to proceed in the Queensland Government schooner "Pearl" to New Guinea, and to take formal possession of so much of the island as was not already in the occupation or possession of the Dutch.

Advices have since been received apprising the Government of the departure of that officer from Thursday Island with this object on 22nd ultimo.

The Government have been thus prompt in taking action in this matter, because in the opinion of those most conversant with the subject, and from information obtained from various sources, there appeared to be every probability of the island being taken possession of by a Foreign Power, and thus not only a valuable territory be lost to the British Crown, but a source of danger to the Colonies established, the extent of which cannot at present be fully appreciated.

I have, &c.

THOMAS M'ILWRAITH.

Queensland.

Your Excellency,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, April 13, 1883.

I had the honor to inform you, in a communication dated the 6th instant, that, in anticipation of a reply to the despatch addressed by your Excellency to the Secretary of State, on the subject of the annexation of New Guinea, Mr. H. M. Chester, Police Magistrate, Thursday Island, had, in accordance with instructions from the Government, left Thursday Island for New Guinea on the 20th ultimo, with a view to take formal possession of so much of that island as was not already in the occupation or possession of the Dutch.

Advices have since been received from that officer apprising the Government of his arrival at Port Moresby, and of his having, on the 4th instant, taken possession, in the name of Her Majesty, of all that part of New Guinea and the isles adjacent thereto lying between the 141st and the 155th meridian of East longitude.

In view of a possible request for an explanation of this summary step, it is considered desirable that your Excellency should impress upon the Secretary of State that the Queensland Government have acted under the full belief that the matter was too urgent to admit of the delay necessarily involved in waiting for instructions from the Imperial Government. As the possession of this valuable territory depended on mere precedence in the formality of annexation, and as the Queensland Government, from information received from various sources, had strong reason to believe in the possibility, and even the probability, of being anticipated in their proposed course of action by a Foreign Power,—a contingency which could not but gravely affect the Australasian Dependencies of Great Britain, as tending not only to limit the range of their development, but possibly also to imperil their safety,—it is hoped that the the Secretary of State will perceive that in the step taken by the Queensland Government they have been guided by considerations of expediency which justify their promptness in taking action in the matter. In anticipating instructions from the Imperial Government, they have been also largely influenced by the consideration urged in a former despatch, viz., that by undertaking the whole expense in connection with the formation, maintenance, and defence of a British settlement in New Guinea, they effectually dispose of the only objection raised on the part of the Home Government, during previous correspondence on the subject, to the annexation of New Guinea by an Australian Colony.

"THE BRISBANE COURIER," Wednesday, April 18, 1883.

The cablegrams we publish to-day concerning our annexation of New Guinea and the reception which the news of that action has obtained in the Imperial Parliament convey impressions of a somewhat contradictory nature. From one we learn that the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, Parliamentary Under Secretary for the Colonies, announced in the House of Commons that the Queensland Government had taken possession of New Guinea in the name of the Queen, pending the decision of the Home Government, and that the object of the annexation was to prevent Foreign Powers obtaining possession of the island, to the detriment of British interests. From this, one would be led to suppose that our action had the approval of the Imperial Government, and at least the tacit consent of the Imperial Parliament, but this is supplemented by another message that the Members of the House of Commons were greatly annoyed, and that pressure was being exercised on the Government to induce it to repudiate the annexation. This is quite likely to be true, but notwithstanding the strong doubts expressed as to the approval of the Imperial authorities, we have no serious fear for the result. If the Queensland Parliament support the action of Sir Thomas M'Lwraith, it is not likely that the Home Government will order the flag, once hoisted, to be hauled down, and the beginning of occupation made at Port Moresby to be stopped short.

[Enclosure 4 in No. 8.]

"THE BRISBANE COURIER," Thursday, April 19, 1883.

The overt act of the annexation of New Guinea by the authority of the Queensland Government has no doubt created some sensation in Downing Street. Lord Derby, in the interview which he lately granted to the Missionary Societies connected with the New Hebrides, expressed himself strongly against further annexations in the Pacific. Lord Granville, by his presence on the occasion, also lent the sanction of the Foreign Office, the statements then made to the effect that an arrangement might not improbably be arrived at by which Foreign Powers who were interested in the commerce of the Pacific would mutually abstain from annexation. It cannot be doubted that representations of this character must have been made by this time to the French Government. It can be understood, therefore, how extremely awkward under these circumstances must have been the intimation given that a formal act of annexation had been applied to a territory so vast as New Guinea, a territory which, as compared with the New Hebrides, is a whole continent.

It will be replied, probably, that this annexation has not been authorized, and that the assertion of a merely formal claim, such as that made by Mr. Chester, is no more binding on the Imperial Government than was a similar act of annexation effected by Captain Moresby in April, 1873. When John Moresby, ten years ago, in the name of the Queen, read a proclamation at Hayter's Island to the officers, marines, and seamen of the "Basilisk" assembled round a flagstaff, on which he hoisted the British ensign, he did nothing more than Mr. Chester has done, acting under instructions from the Queensland Government. He felt, as he says, that the occupation by any foreign maritime Power of the islands which he then claimed to annex would be a "standing menace to Queensland." The reasons which he gives for his action on that occasion are so excellent that they will bear to be repeated here: "I was so surprised by the richness and beauty of the new islands, and the number of their vegetable products, fine timber, the cocoa-nut, sago-palm, sugar-cane, maize, jute, and various vegetable fibres and rich grasses; and my conclusion, after weighing all the considerations involved, was that it was my duty to take formal possession of our discoveries in the name of Her Majesty. Such a course secured a postponement of occupation by any Power till our Government could consider its own interests; and whilst the acquisition of these islands might commend itself, and my act result in annexation on the one hand, it might be negatived on the other with easy simplicity by a neglect to confirm it." These are the reasons given by Captain Moresby for his formal claim, on behalf of the Queen, to the group of islands at the south-eastern extremity of New Guinea. If they are good as applied to them, they are equally good as applied to the mainland of New Guinea. The annexation authorized by the Governor and the Government of Queensland has been effected very much in the same way as Captain Moresby made his claim in 1873, in connection with the islands which he described in his proclamation. It has been done by the authority of Sir Arthur Kennedy, acting on the advice of his Executive Council. It is, of course, a somewhat more formal and important act of executive authority than that of Captain Moresby; it applies to a magnificent island of which as yet very little is known; but this annexation does not differ in kind from that effected by Captain Moresby. As it stands, it is simply a preferential demand, and it may either be acted upon or allowed to lie dormant as Captain Moresby's claim was.

Will Lord Derby repudiate it and disavow it? We think he will scarcely venture to do that. The previous correspondence which took place in connection with this subject all points to the ultimate annexation of New Guinea, in the interests of the Australian Colonies. An address to the Queen, on the motion of Mr. Douglas, was adopted by the Assembly in 1875. It was maimed, it is true, by Mr. Palmer, who was then leading the Opposition, when he moved an amendment omitting that portion of it which referred to the co-operation of Queensland in sharing the burdens of expenditure in connection with the annexation; the amendment was carried, but the address in favour of annexation was adopted, and and even acknowledged by Lord Carnarvon as an important representation of Australian feeling. Similar addresses came from South Australia and Victoria, and the Government of New South Wales went so far as to recommend not only the annexation of New Guinea but also of all the adjacent islands. Mr. Robertson, who was then Premier in New South Wales was very anxious to have everything annexed, but like Mr. Palmer in Queensland, he declined to "co-operate" with the Queen's Government. He did so, however, for different reasons. He assigned as his chief reason "the apparent impossibility of this Colony having any share in the control of the Colony contemplated commensurate with the amount subscribed." That is to say, he was very anxious to have a finger in the pie if he could pull out all the plums. But Lord Carnarvon could not see it in this light. If the Australian Colonies would not contribute, they could not expect the Queen's Government to annex New Guinea and the islands of the Pacific for nothing. And so the matter ended for a time with a polite refusal, but an assurance that "Her Majesty's Government would contrive to examine the arguments for and against the extension of British sovereignty over New Guinea by the light of such information as they may be able to procure."

And so must Lord Derby. The light now shed upon this subject is the provisional annexation which has been authorized, accompanied by the offer to bear the preliminary expenses. The proposal has already, as we now learn, been favourably received by the leading journals in England, and whatever reluctance Lord Derby may feel in giving effect to the proclamation, the annexation will ultimately be carried out. The course adopted by Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith in appealing to the several Australian Governments to support his action is quite justified by the position of affairs, and we trust that he will be successful in his spirited endeavours to bring to an issue such an important negotiation.

We understand that the Governments of the various Australian Colonies have been requested to communicate with their Agents-General in London, and to authorize them to support the proposed annexation of New Guinea. In doing so, it has been explained that no preferential right has been set up to any special territorial advantages on the part of this Colony further than this, that the Government of Queensland has expressed its willingness to accept a territorial extension, if it is considered desirable to carry out the annexation in that form. But it is to be clearly understood that Queensland desires no exclusive possession, and that the action in this case has been taken chiefly in order to set at rest any doubt as to the ultimate possession of New Guinea by some Foreign Power. It is sought, in fact, in the first place, to extend the sovereignty of Great Britain to that portion of New Guinea not claimed by the Dutch. Whether it should be included within the territorial definition of Queensland, or whether it should be constituted a separate territory under the protection of Great Britain, must be matters for further consideration; and the Premiers of the several Australian Colonies have been advised that the action taken has been with a view to serve the interests of the Australian Colonies as a whole, without any undue prominence being given to the special interest which Queensland undoubtedly has in the settlement of the question.

Sir,

I have the honor to forward you herewith, for the information of the Earl of Derby, copies of correspondence received to-day from the Colony relative to the pearl shell and bêche-de-mer Fisheries in Torres Straits, and of the number and tonnage of vessels passing through the Straits to and from the Colony during 1882, and also a printed copy of Mr. Chester's report of his visit to Port Moresby, and of the ceremony of taking possession of New Guinea in the name of Her Majesty.

In laying these papers before Lord Derby, I would desire to bring to his notice one other point in favour of the annexation of New Guinea which has not been mentioned in my previous correspondence, but which has been brought to my knowledge in a despatch from the Colonial Secretary, viz., "That in addition to the contingent danger of occupation by a foreign and possibly hostile Power, there is an actual and present danger to Queensland interests in the fact of a coast-line so near to the scene of several of her industries, and dominating one side of the direct channel of communication between Queensland and Europe, being in the hands of a savage race.

"In view of the many necessities for landing on that coast, and the possibilities of shipwreck and other accidents, which may reasonably be looked for, owing to the development of the industries referred to and the rapidly increasing communication by the Torres Straits route, it is evident that the time has arrived for taking seriously into consideration whether we can now, with safety to our interests and the lives of British subjects, allow this territory to remain outside the control of civilisation."

Sir,

Thursday Island, May 2, 1883.

At the request of the Under Colonial Secretary I have the honor to furnish the following information re the pearl-shell and bêche-de-mer fisheries in Torres Straits.

There are now 192 vessels and boats employed in these fisheries, and some 1,500 men, principally South Sea Islanders and Malays. There are also a number of bêche-de-mer vessels sailing out of Cooktown, and fishing on the New Guinea Coast, of which I have no statistics.

The fisheries are extending rapidly, no less than twenty-five new vessels having commenced operations since the beginning of the year, and more are expected. The trade of the port is consequently increasing, and from ten to twelve large steamers call here every month. The revenue last year was over £7,000, and this year it will not be far short of £10,000.

ANNEXATION OF NEW GUINEA.

Mr. H. M. CHESTER has furnished to the Colonial Secretary the following very interesting report of his recent visit to Port Moresby, and of the ceremony of taking possession of New Guinea in the name of Her Majesty.

Sir,

Port Moresby, New Guinea, April 7, 1883.

I have the honor to report that, in accordance with your instructions I left Thursday Island in the "Pearl" on the 24th ultimo. There being a difficulty in engaging a crew, I took with me three of the water-police and two men from the pilot cutter. Mr. Frank Walsh also accompanied me as a volunteer. I proceeded to Somerset to water the vessel, and left for Port Moresby on the 27th idem. We experienced light easterly winds with a strong westerly set and did not reach the Port until noon of 3rd instant. The same afternoon the annual large trading canoes arrived from Motumotu (Freshwater Bay) with supplies of sago.

At 10 a.m. on the 4th instant I took formal possession, in Her Majesty's name, of all that portion of New Guinea and the adjacent islands not already in occupation by the Dutch, and read the accompanying proclamation in presence of about 200 Natives and thirteen Europeans. A royal salute was fired from the "Pearl," and at the close of the proceedings three cheers were given for Her Majesty the Queen. I then, in presence of the people, recognised Boe Vagi as head chief of Port Moresby, and gave the flag into his charge until such time as an official should be sent to represent the Government. Mr. Lawes kindly explained the meaning of the ceremony to the people, and assured them that they would remain in undisturbed possession of their lands. A short impressive prayer by Mr. Lawes terminated the proceedings, after which about £50 worth of trade was distributed to the heads of families by Ruatoka, the Rarotongan teacher, in the name of Her Majesty. In the afternoon a long procession filed up the hill to the mission-house, each man bearing some small present, such as two or three spears, an armet, a grass petticoat, or an ornament, and after this the Europeans present, the teachers and their wives, and Boe Vagi, were invited to a banquet, given by Messrs. Lawes and Chalmers, at which, after the usual loyal toasts, "Prosperity to the latest gem added to the British Crown" was drunk, and the health of the missionaries who have done so much for the civilisation of the people. Great regret was expressed by all at the absence of Mrs. Lawes, a lady of whom it is no disparagement to our beloved Queen to say that she alone reigns in the hearts of this people.

It is now five years since I first visited Port Moresby, and I was much struck by the improved appearance of the town. The mission premises are situated on a small hill to the westward of the harbour, overlooking Ethel Island and the village built on piles in the sea at its base. They consist of two neat wooden houses with iron roofs, one of which is the residence, and the other a training college for the mission students, drawn from all parts of the coast who occupy six neat grass houses on the right of the college. A fence surrounds the whole, and well-kept paths, covered with shingle and bordered with handsome variegated crotons, lead up the hill from the beach. Two years ago the village on the eastern side of the harbour was totally destroyed by fire, and the people have not yet recovered from the loss, the most serious part of it being the flooring boards of the houses, made of the sides of the old canoes, and handed down for generations. There are 221 houses in the two villages, and the population now numbers about 800 souls, having increased during the last five years.

During the evening the missionaries received information that the Motumotu men on their return voyage intended to attack Kabadi, a village inland in Redscar Bay, having been subsidised to do so by a tribe at enmity with them. If De Quincey had visited New Guinea he might have added a chapter to his essay on "Murder considered as one of the Fine Arts." In no part of the world probably is murder as an art more cultivated than in New Guinea. Apropos of this I relate a tragic story told me by Mr. Chalmers of the recent massacre of an entire village by the Lési tribe. It may be remembered that a Dr. James and Mr. Thorngren were murdered on the coast, near Yule Island, in 1876, by the Roro tribe, who occupied a village some distance to the south-eastward of the Lési, in Hall Sound. During one of Mr. Chalmers' visits to the westward, being in the neighbourhood of this tribe, he determined to visit them and make peace, it being too late to punish them for the murders, but he narrowly escaped meeting the same fate, and reached his boat with difficulty. In an evil hour they surprised three of the Lési and killed two of them. Their doom was sealed. The Lési turned out in force, and lying concealed by day and travelling in their canoes at night, arrived after dusk at one of the many streams running into Hall Sound. Here they were at fault, not knowing which to ascend; but fortune favoured them, them, they captured a canoe in which was a Roro man and two women, and gave them the option of guiding them to their village (Paitana) or being killed. The man consented to pilot them, and the women were let go. When near Paitana they allowed the guide to escape in his canoe. Sending a party to surround the village the rest camped in the middle of it and sat silently down to await the first streak of dawn. One of the villagers awoke, and to his astonishment found the place occupied by strangers. "Who are you?" said the Roro man. The others sprang to their feet and cried out, "We are the Lési come to pay you! You murdered foreigners; they did not pay you, they were afraid! That we have nothing to do with; but you tried to kill Tamate, and you murdered our men, and we are here to avenge them! Come out and fight!" At the same moment they let fly a cloud of arrows, until wearying of the slaughter the chief called out, "We have no time to kill them all; burn the houses and those inside." The order was obeyed, and when the sun rose Paitana was a blackened heap of ashes. This happened last July, and Mr. Chalmers meeting a chief of Roro in August inquired how many were killed. "Ah! Tamate," said the chief, "I cannot number the slain, I can only tell you how many are left alive." A lad of seven years old was brought to Mr. Chalmers. His father had lowered him down through a hole in the floor of his house, and he hid in the scrub. After all was over he returned to find only the charred remains of father, mother, brother, and two sisters. The murderers of James and Thorngren perished with the rest.

On the 5th April, thinking that a little shell practice from the "Pearl" might deter the Motomotu from attacking Kabadi, we took the chiefs and several of their people on board, and fired six rounds of segment shell. In the afternoon I attended an examination of the school children. The building which is used both as a church and school-room, is 66 feet long by 24 feet, cool and well ventilated. About 120 boys and girls, of all ages between five and twenty, were assembled in classes. Large maps were unrolled, and it was pleasant to see the quick, bright intelligence displayed by the pupils. Scarcely did the wand of the teacher touch an ocean or a continent than its name was shouted by all simultaneously. Chief towns, rivers, and mountain ranges were given in rapid succession. The globe was produced, and I found to my astonishment that zenith and nadir, equator and ecliptic, zones and signs of the zodiac, were "familiar in their mouths as household words." Each class was presided over by a pupil teacher, mostly native girls from Port Moresby, the chief's daughter being one of the most intelligent. Only the most advanced scholars are privileged to attend the writing and English classes, and in a very few months a valuable staff of interpreters will be available should settlement on the coast progress.

In laying in a supply of trade from the limited sources available at Thursday Island I had not forgotten the children. A number of really good mouth harmonicons, and some toy watches, lockets, and chains make capital prizes, while the system adopted in the distribution was not only novel but relieved Mr. Chalmers of the invidious task of selection. "Who best deserves the prize for arithmetic?" cried Tamate. Without an instant's hesitation the children unanimously shouted the name of the girl or boy; and so on in geography, reading, &c., and in every instance the prize fell to the one whom Mr. Chalmers would have selected. Then ensued a scene which would have horrified an English School Board inspector. The children formed a line on either side and Mr. Chalmers and a native girl advanced from opposite ends. As he passed the girl, who, by the way, was remarkably pretty, he raised his hat, and with a bow, said, "Good morning," "Good evening," and "Good night" followed with the like ceremony. Then the children, placing their hands on the shoulders of the one in front, pranced round the long room in high glee, singing the multiplication table. A little elementary drill followed, and a distribution of lollies. Then a scramble for pieces of tobacco, which the children took home to their parents, and school broke up with the same boisterous mirth that is so characteristic of English lads of the same age. Too much credit can scarcely be given to Mr. and Mrs. Lawes and Mr. Chalmers for the wonderful results produced among a people who only eight years ago were pure savages. School work is interspersed with sufficient play to prevent it becoming irksome, it being evidently the aim of the missionaries "to make the people happy in their own way, even if that way should be quite opposed to European theories of how they ought to be happy."

The average daily attendance at the Port Moresby School is 140, and the total number of children attending the various at places where teachers are established is 1,000.

The following morning the mission teachers and their families, with the pupil teachers, came up to the mission house, each bearing some little present for Mamoose (my native name), a plume of paradise feathers, or some other token of their goodwill.

If Yule Island has been thought of as a site for the first settlement I trust the Government will reconsider the matter. Hall Sound as a harbour is not to be compared with Port Moresby. In consequence of the strong set of the current to the eastward it is at times almost impossible for sailing vessels to enter the Sound. The land opposite Yule Island is one vast swamp, and the neighbouring tribes are fierce and turbulent. The unhealthiness of the climate is such that the inhabitants have recently removed to the mainland, leaving only a few men to look after the plantations. Port Moresby, on the contrary, is now fairly healthy. The Motu tribe, inhabiting the port, are the great traders of the coast; their dialect is understood from Bald Head to Milne Bay, and the missionaries, after eight years' experience, have come to the conclusion that Port Moresby is the only locality suitable. It is the real key to New Guinea, and from it civilising influences will radiate as from a centre. The Laloki River, which takes its rise in the Owen Stanley range, and receives the Astrolabe waters, runs through fine agricultural land, well watered by a chain of lagoons, and falls into the sea in Redscar Bay. There is a depth of 6 feet on the bar at low water spring tides, and the river is navigable for vessels of light draught to within 5 miles of the diggers' camp at the back of Port Moresby. Cooktown is so situated that it must necessarily become the port of communication between Queensland and New Guinea. Vessels bound to and from New Guinea have a leading wind at all seasons.

Sixteen years ago small-pox was introduced via Torres Straits, and decimated the coast and inland tribes. Old men still speak, with tears in their eyes, of the frightful disease that carried off their children and friends. Eight years ago measles was imported from Somerset, and the mortality was very great. This points to the necessity of strict enforcement of quarantine regulations at Cooktown and Thursday Island, the portals of New Guinea.

In 1878, before leaving Port Moresby, the diggers and others purchased large areas of land from the natives with the trade they had no further use for. I am informed that one man bought a square mile almost in the town. These lands have never been improved by the owners, and are still cultivated by the natives. The people complain bitterly of the damage done to their plantations by the horses left behind by the diggers. These have increased to about 60, and the marvel is that they were not speared long ago.

Cooktown, 13 April.

We were detained at Port Moresby until the 9th instant by calms, met the south-east trades about 5 miles outside, and carried strong-trades to the Barrier. Entered at Lizard opening (Cook's) on 12th instant, and arrived at Cooktown at 9 p.m. of 13th idc, all well.

I have, &c.

Proclamation read at Port Moresby on 4th April, 1883:—

I, HENRY MAJORIBANES CHESTER, resident magistrate at Thursday Island, in the Colony of Queensland, acting under instructions from the Government of the said Colony, do hereby take possession of all that portion of New Guinea and the islands and islets adjacent thereto, lying between the 141st and 155th meridians of east longitude, in the name and on behalf of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs, and successors. In token whereof I have hoisted and saluted the British flag at Port Moresby in New Guinea, this fourth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

God save the Queen!

HENRY M. CHESTER.

The following is a list of places visited by Mr. Chalmers, with the population of each village or district. They are included in a coast-line of 60 miles from Boera to Kerepunu, say 60 miles by 40 to the Owen Stanley range:—Moumiri, 100; Munakahila, 300; Eikiri, 200; Kupele, 600; Logeri, 600; Faveli, 400; Moroka, 400; Maiara, 200; Iovi, 300; Epakari, 500; Epara, 300; Taburi, 400; Makapili, 400; Tubuselei (inland), 400; Kaile (inland), 1,000; Kapakapa (inland), 1,000; Palanai, 500; Boera, 300; Porebada, 200; Port Moresby, 800; Vapukeri, 200; Pari, 300; Tupuselei, 350; Kaile, 350; Kapakapa, 300; Hula, 600; Papaka, 400; Kamari, 200; Kalo, 1,500; Kerepunu, 1,500; Kuaipo, 600; Animarupa, 300; scattered Koitapuans, 1000. Total, 16,500, equal to nearly seven persons to the square mile.

Governor Sir A. E. Kennedy, G.C.M.G., C.B. (Queensland), to the Right Hon. the Earl of Derby. (Received June 19, 1883.)

My Lord,

Government House, Brisbane, April 26, 1883.

I do not propose to trouble your Lordship with a repetition of details already before you in reference to the Colonial annexation of New Guinea.

2. I have only to express my entire satisfaction with the action of my Government, especially Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith, in the matter.

3. I think his apprehension of New Guinea being annexed by another European Power was reasonable, and his promptitude in adopting our only safeguard very laudable.

4. Sir Thomas has laid his views before you, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that they are heartily adopted by all the Australian Colonies, which we trust may be our excuse for any irregularity we have committed.

5. I have never heard any well-informed person doubt the great disaster which the occupation of New Guinea by a European Power would prove to Australia.

6. I have had less difficulty in dealing with this subject from the knowledge that Her Majesty's sanction was necessary for its completion.

7. I do not anticipate any difficulty in providing for the cost of maintaining our authority.

The Hon. Sir A. H. Gordon, G.C.M.G., to Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Sir,

5, Bryanston Square, W., June 16, 1883.

I have the honor to enclose, for the information of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the copy of a letter which I have just received from the Russian explorer, Baron Miklouho Maclay.

I have, &c.,

[Enclosure in No. 16.]

Baron Maclay to Sir A. Gordon.

Your Excellency,—Sir,

Hongkong, May, 2 1883.

Learning from newspapers about the desire of the Government of the Colony of Queensland to annex the S.E. part of the Island New Guinea, I take the liberty, in the case if Her Majesty should sanction this annexation, of reminding respectfully your Excellency of request made by me in January, 1879, and April, 1881, which I now repeat again:—

1. That the right of the Natives of the Maclay Coast (New Guinea) to the soil in the fullest extent of the word should be respected.

2. That the importation of spirits should be prevented.

Allow me also to quote here the own words of your Excellency (from a letter to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated Armitage Hill, April 9, 1879:—"I entirely agree with Baron Maclay in thinking that 'les tentatives généreuses des Gouvernements, Européens pour protéger les indigènes contre les violences et les injustices des envahisseurs blancs sont ordinairement venues trop tard, quand le mal était déjà fait,' and that comparatively slight precautions taken in time might avert misunderstandings which lead too often to the murder of white men, and to the steps, too generally of a most unsatisfactory nature, which have then to be taken for the punishment of those who have committed them. I also agree with him as to the importance of recognizing the native titles to land and of discouraging the importation of spirits and firearms."

Knowing

Knowing well that your Excellency is a friend of justice, and is not afraid to take the part of the weak, I have reasons to hope that my request shall not always remain "vox clamantis in deserto."

Sir,

5, Pump Court, Temple, June 16, 1883.

On looking over my papers about New Guinea, I have felt that the experience and opinions of Captain Yule, given in the enclosed letter, ought to be contributed to the other valuable information on the subject collected in your Department. I therefore send you the original letter which I received from Captain Yule, in reply to an invitation to be present at a private conference of gentlemen, which was held to consider the question of the annexation of New Guinea, just 10 years ago.

I shall be much obliged by your kindly returning the letter when you have made any use of it you may think fit.

I am, &c.

Mr. C. B. Yule to Mr. F. P. Labilliere.

Sir,

Anderton, Devonport, June 19, 1873.

As I have no intention of going to London at present, I regret not being able to avail myself of your invitation to be present at the meeting which is to take place at the Royal Colonial Institute on the 25th instant, more especially as I take a great interest in the part of New Guinea you refer to, having been engaged in the survey of its southern coast and that of the Louisiade Archipelago, very little of which had been previously known to the civilised world, especially in the vicinity of Cape Possession, which I so named from my having formally taken possession of that part of New Guinea in Her Majesty's name, as it had previously appeared as a blank on the old charts.

The chief aspect of our survey of this part of the island having been of a hydrographic nature, we were not prepared for exploring the interior, but its general aspect reminded me much of the island of Java, with its lofty range of inland mountains, and vast tracts of undulating and apparently alluvial plains, with much wood and vegetation and numerous rivers, some of which are doubtless navigable between the mountains and the coast.

We had frequent communication with the Natives, who are of various shades from copper colour to black, well formed and intelligent; their canoes and dwelling-places are of superior construction, and they pay much attention to the cultivation of yams and other vegetables, as they brought off in their canoes yams, bananas, cocoa-nuts, sugar-cane, and a quantity of coarsely manufactured arrowroot or sago, all of which were evidently indigenous as the inhabitants possessed no iron or any other article indicative of their ever having had any previous communication with civilised men. They are very warlike, and probably, like most untamed people of the kind, are treacherous, although they spared the lives of myself and two boats' crews at Cape Possession when we were upset in the surf and, unarmed, were quite at the mercy of a large body of armed Natives.

The greater portion of the coast is fronted by a barrier of coral reefs, within which are perfectly sheltered harbours, and although the coast we surveyed lies within 8 to 12 degrees of the Equator we found the climate very healthy, which may, I think, in great measure be attributed to the south-east monsoon or trade wind which blows home to the coast during a great part of the year.

I am very glad this apparently fine country is now attracting the attention of the influential gentlemen you name, as I have often thought the portion of New Guinea that I have seen is quite adapted to the cultivation of all such productions as those of Java.

The "Voyage of the Rattlesnake" gives, as far as it goes, a correct account of the parts of New Guinea we visited; and the second volume of the "Australia Directory," compiled by myself, will afford some hydrographic description of its coasts, and I shall at any time be most happy to give you any further information in my power, for I think it a great pity that such an apparently fine country, and so near our Australian Colonies should remain fallow, or perhaps worse still, be eventually taken in hand by some Foreign Power.

I am, &c.

C. B. YULE.

This afternoon, in obedience to the instructions conveyed to me by your Lordship's despatch of the 20th instant, I recited to M. J. Ferry the conversation which your Lordship had on that day with Count d'Aunay on the subject of New Guinea.

When I mentioned that your Lordship had said to M. d'Aunay that you presumed you might feel confident that the French Government had themselves no design of annexation in New Guinea, M. Jules Ferry affirmed very positively that no design of the sort was entertained by the French Government.

No. 21.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Derby to The Administrator Sir A. H. Palmer, K.C.M.G. (Queensland).

Sir,

Downing-street, July 11, 1883.

Her Majesty's Government have given their careful consideration to the request of the Government of Queensland, as placed before them in the correspondence with Sir Arthur Kennedy and with the Agent-General for the Colony, which has been laid before Parliament, that the eastern portion of the Island of New Guinea, with the islands adjacent thereto, may be annexed to Queensland. Although the first communication reached me through Mr. Archer on the 28th February, it was not until the 19th of June that I received Sir A. Kennedy's observations on the subject, and through Mr. Archer, a copy of the proclamation with which Mr. Chester, the magistrate, took possession of the territory in the name of the Queen. It has therefore not been possible to communicate to you before now the conclusions at which Her Majesty's Government have arrived.

2. They are unable to approve the proceedings of your Government in this matter. It is well understood that the officers of a Colonial Government have no power or authority to act beyond the limits of their Colony, and if this constitutional principle is not carefully observed serious difficulties and complications must arise. If there had been any evidence of the intention, which is said to have been apprehended, of a foreign Power to take possession of any part of New Guinea, the views and proposals of the Colonial Government could have been placed before Her Majesty's Government by telegraph, and if the circumstances had justified immediate action it could have been taken without a delay of more than a very few hours. It is therefore much to be regretted that your advisers should, without apparent necessity, have taken on themselves the exercise of powers which they did not possess.

3. The apprehension entertained in Australia that some foreign power was about to establish itself on the shores of New Guinea appears to have been altogether indefinite and unfounded, and the inquiries which have been made by Her Majesty's Government have given them the strongest reasons for believing that no such step has been contemplated. Nor is there at the present time any sufficient ground for anticipating the early settlement on the shores of New Guinea of a white population from the Australasian Colonies which, in the absence of any established authority, would become a source of trouble and danger to the Colony. The results of former expeditions have been disastrous, and unless there should be indications of their intended renewal on a considerable scale no question would arise with respect to the prevention of disorders resulting from that cause.

4. Her Majesty's Government are, moreover, clearly of opinion that even if the time had arrived for asserting and exercising the Queen's authority and jurisdiction on the shores of the island, or on some portions of them, there would be no necessity or justification for including in these measures the whole of the vast territory to which the proclamation of the Queensland Government purports to apply. It is estimated that the interior of the country contains several millions of savage inhabitants of whom little or nothing is known, but it is certain that they have given no sign of a desire that their land should be occupied by white men. It would require exceptionally strong reasons to justify the annexation of these tribes and their territory, and in the absence of any such reasons a grave responsibility would be incurred in establishing the Queen's jurisdiction over a large coloured population which would certainly resist subjugation and has apparently nothing to gain by it.

5. If, however, it had been shown that the extension of the Queen's sovereignty to the eastern portion of New Guinea has become necessary, the proposal that the territory so annexed should form part of the Colony of Queensland would be open to strong objections. The Colony already comprises an immense extent of territory: the seat of Government is situated in the south, a thousand miles from the south-eastern point of New Guinea: it is practically governed by a Parliament which represents the white population, whose interests are altogether different from those of the coloured races, aboriginal and imported, within the Colony: and while I am aware of the difficulties with which the Colonial Government has had to contend in connexion with the labour traffic and other questions affecting native interests, the fact that those difficulties have not in all cases been successfully dealt with cannot be disputed, and has often of late been the subject of much comment. The Queensland Government is at present undertaking heavy charges and responsibilities in connexion with the settlement and development of its vast northern territory, which cannot be fully occupied for many years to come, and even if it could be reconciled with former precedents and sound general principles that the Imperial Government should devolve upon any Colony the duties incident to the establishment of British dominion in such a country as New Guinea, neither the time nor the circumstances would appear favourable for the assumption by the Queensland Government of the control of a large native population owning a territory not required, and, to a great extent, at least not suited, for the occupation and labour of European settlers. It has been stated in the press that one reason for which some persons in Queensland desire the annexation of New Guinea is the facility which would thereby be afforded for obtaining a large supply of coloured labour for the sugar plantations without going beyond the limits of the Colony. It is no doubt generally understood that the natives of New Guinea would not willingly accept or be suitable for labour engagements at a distance from their shores, but the fact that the suggestion has been made indicates a special difficulty which might present itself if the request of the Colonial Government were complied with.

6. Her Majesty's Government have not failed to give due attention to the representations made by the Governments of New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia in support of the action taken by your Government. Those Governments do not, as I understand, definitely endorse the proposal that the island should form part of Queensland, nor do they undertake to share the expenses which might be entailed by any attempt to govern it, but they express in general terms a desire that it should be brought under British rule. Such an expression of opinion has, necessarily, much weight with Her Majesty's Government, but it does not indicate any substantial advance towards the more effective settlement of a question of this nature. The affairs of the Pacific Ocean, and the political and commercial relations of the Australian Colonies with adjacent places and powers, are matters of the highest importance to those Colonies, and require to be dealt with on broad and clearly defined principles, and by the united action of the Colonies. Her Majesty's Government regret that it should be necessary from time to time to refuse assent to proposals coming from individual Colonies for the assumption of large and serious responsibilities in regard to places and questions not specially concerning those of Her Majesty's subjects who live in other parts of the empire; and I trust the time is now not distant when, in respect of such questions (if not for other purposes of government) the Australasian Colonies will effectively combine together, and provide the cost of carrying out any policy which after mature consideration they may unite in recommending, and which Her Majesty's Government may think it right and expedient to adopt.

7. In the meantime Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that they must continue to decline proposals for large annexations of territory adjacent to Australia, in the absence of sufficient proof of the necessity of such measures. In the case of New Guinea there is already in existence a jurisdiction which may be made to suffice for immediate exigencies. The powers of the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific extend to that island, and if the Colony of Queensland, with or without assistance from other Colonies, is prepared to provide a reasonable annual sum to meet the cost of placing one or more Deputies of the High Commissioner on the coast, Her Majesty's Government will be willing to take steps for strengthening the naval force on the Australian station so as to enable Her Majesty's ships to be more constantly present than hitherto in that part of the Pacific. A protectorate thus gradually established over the coast tribes would be capable of meeting the principal requirements of the case for some time to come, and would be free from the grave objections to which, as I have shown, the course now urged upon Her Majesty's Government is open.

I have, &c.,

No. 22.

Governor the Marquis of Normanby, G.C.M.G., (Victoria), to the Right Hon. the Earl of Derby. (Received July 12, 1883.)

(Telegraphic.)

12th July.—Am requested by both Houses of Parliament to forward resolutions unanimously agreed to by them, viz., that it is essential to the future well being of the Australian Colonies that New Guinea, and the Pacific Islands lying between New Guinea and Fiji, including New Hebrides, should be annexed to the British Crown, or that England should establish a Protectorate over them; that concerted action on the part of the Australian Colonies is desirable in order to accomplish this result; that this Colony is willing to contribute its proportion of the expense entailed by such annexation or Protectorate.

8, Victoria Chambers, Victoria-street,
Westminster, S.W., July 12, 1883.

My Lord,

I have the honor to inform your Lordship that, at the instance of my Government, a resolution was passed unanimously by both Houses of the Victorian Parliament yesterday in favour of the annexation of New Guinea and other Islands in the Western Pacific; or, pending the adoption of such a course of policy, the assumption of a protectorate over these territories, in order to prevent the establishment of any foreign power within them. I am also to inform your Lordship that the Government and Parliament of Victoria have expressed their willingness to contribute towards the expense of such an undertaking.

I would take the liberty of urging on your Lordship the evidence thus afforded of the strength and sincerity of Colonial feeling on this subject, which is further stimulated by the uneasiness excited by French movements in the Pacific, which my Government are of opinion indicate danger to the New Hebrides group of islands.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION, 1883.

[Laid before the Convention by the Representatives of New Zealand.]

AREA, POPULATION, TRADE, &c., OF THE PRINCIPAL GROUPS OF ISLANDS.

(By Mr. W. Seed, Secretary of Customs.)

Hon. Mr. Vogel,—

23 September, 1873.

In obedience to your directions, conveyed to me in Mr. Fox's letter from Christchurch, dated the 20th ultimo, I have had a map of the Pacific Ocean made from the Admiralty sheet charts. In order to save time I had this done by the photo-lithographic process; it would have taken a long time to construct a chart of this size by hand.

I have also collated all the information I could procure as to the area, population, and trade of the principal South Sea Island groups, and of the other tropical islands named in Mr. Fox's letter. This information is appended hereto. For facility of reference I have prefixed to it a table showing the area, population, imports, and exports of the islands referred to, where statistics of this nature have been procurable; as also a table showing the latitude and longitude within which the principal groups of islands in the Pacific are situated.

I feel that the information here presented is most meagre and incomplete, but it is all I can procure at present, after most careful search in the library of the General Assembly, and in other directions where I thought it likely such information might exist.

The general descriptions of the islands have been mainly taken from Findlay's South Pacific Directory; but some of them have been taken from Admiralty hydrographic notices, from McCulloch's Commercial Dictionary, from Chambers's Encyclopædia, from missionary notices and reports, and from various books of travel.

The statistics have been gathered principally from the Statesman's Year Book for 1873, the American Year Book for 1869, and from the reports from Her Majesty's Consuls, which are printed annually and laid before Parliament.

With regard to the government of the various islands, so far as I can ascertain, all the groups that are situated north of the equator (with the exception of the Sandwich Islands, which have a settled form of constitutional government, the Marshall Islands, about which I can gather no information whatever, and the Kingsmill group, part north and part south of the line, and which has no form of government) are either claimed by or are in the possession of some civilized Power. The Philippines, Ladrões, Palaos or Pelew, and the Caroline Islands, are all Spanish possessions. The Galapagos belong to the Republic of Ecuador. Of the islands in the South Pacific, the Society Islands, Paumotu or Low Archipelago, Loyalty Islands, New Caledonia, and New Hebrides are in the possession of or are claimed by the French. The Tongan Islands are governed by a King, assisted by a Parliament of chiefs. Fiji can scarcely now be said to have a Government, whilst all the rest are a kind of "no-man's land," are without government, and are constantly torn by the debasing and savage wars of the petty chiefs inhabiting them.

In relation to the question of annexing the Samoan or other group of islands to New Zealand, I find that a small group in the Indian Ocean, the Seychelles, occupies the position of a dependency of the Mauritius, from which it is distant over 900 miles; there is, therefore, a precedent for distant islands becoming "dependencies of a dependency." The revenue of the Seychelles is principally derived from Customs duties. The duties on goods sent from Mauritius to Seychelles are carried to the credit of the revenue of the dependency. Through this arrangement, which appears only lately to have been made, the Civil Commissioner, in his report to the Governor of Mauritius, dated the 9th February, 1872, says: "The settlement of the much-vexed question as to whether the Seychelles group is a burden to the parent colony or not is now happily solved." From this it would appear that the ordinary revenue of the group is sufficient to meet its expenditure without assistance from the Mauritius.

In further relation to this question, it may be worthy of consideration whether the plan which is adopted in Ceylon for the Government of the native races inhabiting that island would not furnish a useful model for framing a system of government for the Polynesian Islands. Whatever may be done with regard to the occupation of those islands, it is certain that one of the main questions to be considered in connection with that occupation will be, "How are the natives to be governed?" I have been led to refer to the case of Ceylon because, in the course of looking up the information appended hereto, I came across a copy of the Governor's Address on opening the session of the Legislative Council of that Colony in September, 1872, in which reference is made to a "Village Communities Ordinance," and to an amendment which it was proposed to make in that Ordinance for the purpose of empowering Police Courts to try breaches of rules made by village communities where no village tribunals exist. The object of this Ordinance is stated to be, "To enable village communities to frame their own administrative regulations, and to enforce them in Police Courts in districts where it may be inexpedient to establish the village tribunals created by the Ordinance of 1871."

The importance of the occupation of some of the Pacific Islands by Great Britain cannot be better set forth than by quoting the following passage from the letter addressed by the late Admiral Washington to the Colonial Office in 1859, on the occasion of his being called upon by that department to furnish some information regarding the Fijis. He remarked, "But on looking into the subject I have been struck by the entire want, by Great Britain, of any advanced position in the Pacific Ocean. We have valuable possessions on either side, as at Vancouver's and Sydney, but not an islet or a rock in the 7,000 miles of ocean that separate them. The Panama and Sydney mail communication is likely to be established, yet we have no island on which to place a coaling station, and where we could insure fresh supplies. . . . and it may hereafter be found very inconvenient that England should be shut out from any station in the Pacific, and that an enemy should have possession of Tongatabu, where there is a good harbour within a few hundred miles of the track of our homeward-bound gold ships from Sydney and Melbourne. Neither forts nor batteries would be necessary to hold the ground. A single cruising ship should suffice for all the wants of the islands. Coral reefs and the hearty goodwill of the natives would do the rest."

23rd September, 1873.

TONGA OR FRIENDLY ISLANDS.

The Tonga Archipelago is composed of at least 100 islands and islets, comprised between 18° and 20° S. lat., and 174° and 179° W. long. The three islands of Tonga-tabu, Vavao, and Eoa are alone of any extent, which is from 15 to 20 miles in length. Seven others, namely, Late, Tofua, Kao, Namuka, Lefuga, Eoa, and Ilaano, are from 5 to 7 miles in their greatest extent. The rest are much smaller. Many of them them are only banks of sand or coral, covered with some tufts of trees. Tofua, Kao, Late, and the two rocks of Hunga Hapai and Hunga Tonga, are sufficiently high to be distinguished at 15 or 20 leagues off at sea. Eoa, Namuka, and Vavau are of a moderate height; Tonga-tabu and all the rest are very low.

The population of the Tonga Islands, as given by the missionaries in 1839, was 18,500; namely, Eoa, 200; Hapai, 4,000; Vavau, 4,000; Keppel's Island, 1,000; Boscawen Island, 1,300; Tonga-tabu, 8,000. At that time about 4,500 of the natives were Christians, of whom 2,500 were church members. But a later missionary estimate made it very much more, about 50,000, but this is probably excessive (Erskine, p. 161). The group is divided into three Protestant missionary stations, Tonga-tabu, Hapai, and Vavau, at each of which missionaries reside.

Tonga-tabu Group.—This is the principal and southernmost group, taking its name from the best known and largest of the islands. It is of the form of an irregular crescent, whose convexity faces the south and the concavity the north, deeply indented by a lagoon of 5 miles broad and 3 miles deep. Immense reefs of coral extend six or eight miles off the island on all its north part, and form different channels, with a useful road for any ship that anchors here. Many islets are disseminated on these corals; the greater parts covered with trees. The island itself is nearly a dead level, with the exception of a few hillocks 30 or 40 feet high. Its highest point is 60 feet.

Eoa, or Eooa, lies to the south-east of Tonga-tabu; a channel of three leagues broad separates them. Tasman called it Middleburg. The island is about 10 leagues in circuit, and is about 600 feet high. It is rocky and barren, and contains only about 203 inhabitants.

Namuka Group.—The principal island of this group is that which gives it the name. Namuka is rather higher than the small surrounding islets, but still is low. It is composed of a steep, rugged, coral rock, 9 to 10 feet high, except where there are two sandy beaches; defended, however, by coral reefs to seaward. In the centre of the island is a salt-water lake, without communication by the sea, and about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile broad. Cook found the island to be well cultivated, chiefly with yams and plantains, with bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees interspersed.

To the north and east of Namuka the sea is sprinkled with a vast number of small islands. They lie scattered at unequal distances, and are in general as high as Namuka, but only from 2 to 3 miles in breadth to $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile in length, and some less. Most of them are entirely clothed with trees, among which are many cocoa palms, and each forms a prospect like a beautiful garden placed in the sea.

The Hapai Group is composed of four larger and numerous smaller islands, connected by coral reefs, so that they are considered by the inhabitants as but forming one island. They are all very low.

Lifuka is not above 7 miles long, and in some places not above 2 or 3 broad. The east side of it, which is exposed to the trade-wind, has a reef running to a considerable breadth from it, on which the sea breaks with great violence.

The Kotoo Group may be almost considered as a portion of the Hapai group, as the distinction is not so well marked as in the others, being more or less connected together by coral reefs. The largest island of the group is called Kotoo, and is scarcely 2 miles long, and about the same breadth; a coral reef surrounds it. Its N.W. extremity is as low as Hapai, and around it are eight other islands, as shown on the charts.

Tofua, or Tofoa, an active volcanic island, lies to the N.W. of Kotoo, in lat. $19^{\circ} 45' S.$, long. $175^{\circ} 3' W.$, according to D'Urville, and is about 2,800 feet high. A remarkable lake is said to exist on it, from which the islanders bring small black volcanic pebbles, which are much in request, to cover the graves of their friends. It is covered with trees to the summit, and is about 5 miles in diameter.

Kao is a vast rock of a conical figure, and about 5,000 feet high, to the N.E. of Tofoa.

Vavau Group.—This, which is the northernmost cluster, is one of the most important, as it is perhaps as much frequented as any. It lies 70 miles N.N.E. of the Hapai group. Vavau is the principal island of the group.

Latte or Lette Island lies to the west of the Vavau group. It is a high island, formerly a volcano. The peak, 1,790 feet high, is in the centre of the island, from which the hill falls with a pretty gradual slope into the sea. The island is 6 or 7 miles in circumference, and is sufficiently high to be seen at 20 leagues off.

Amargura, or Fanoualsi, is the northernmost of the group. It is a barren spot. It is formed of two hills, the N.E. the highest, connected by a very low space, everywhere surrounded by rocky cliffs, except in two places on the west side.

The following particulars regarding Tonga-tabu are extracted from Lieut. Meade's account of the South Sea Islands, visited by him in 1865, in H.M.S. "Curaçoa":—

"The native population numbers from 9,000 to 10,000, all of whom profess Christianity.

"The present King, whose name is George Trebon, and title 'Tui Kanakabulu,' governs with the assistance of a Parliament of chiefs, and has reigned for twenty years. There are fifty-four Europeans in the island, who look to the Consular Agent in the Fijis."

In Commodore Wilkes's account of this island (1840) he states that "the natives cultivate yams, sweet potatoes, bananas, cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, sugar-cane, shaddocks, limes, and the ti (Spondias dulcis); the pandanus is much attended to, and is one of their most useful trees, and of it all their mats are made; a little corn is grown, and they have the paparo apple (Papaya) and water melon. The missionaries have introduced the sweet orange from Tahiti, and a species of chirimoyer (Aumona). The botany of this island resembles that of the Samoan group. A species of nutmeg was found here, differing from either of the Samoan ones; the trees were full of fruit and much larger; one of them was observed $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet in diameter, and upwards of 40 feet in height.

FIIJI.

Admiral Washington, the late Hydrographer to the Admiralty, in his report dated the 12th March, 1859, in reply to certain questions sent to him by the Colonial Office, states that the "Fiji group consists of some 200 islands, islets, and rocks, 1,900 miles N.E. of Sydney, and 1,200 north of Auckland; the two largest islands may be some 300 miles in circumference: 65 of the islets said to be inhabited."

A proposition was made in 1858 by Thakombau, the present King of Fiji, to cede the sovereignty of the group to Great Britain. The British Government thereupon sent Colonel Smythe, R.A., in December, 1859, as a special commissioner to inquire into the nature of the cession, and as to the desirability or otherwise of accepting it. Colonel Smythe, it will be remembered, reported that it was not advisable to accept this offer.

The

The principal islands are Viti Levu, Vanua Levu, Ovalau, Lakemba, Koro, Moala, Totoia, Vuna, Kandavau, Ngau, Vanua, Valavo Vatata, and Yasawa. The following description of them is abridged from that given in Findley's South Pacific Directory:—

The island of Viti Levu is the largest of the Fijian group. The affix Levu means "great," thus Viti Levu means Great Fiji. It is about 30 miles in length by 55 in breadth.

Vanua Levu ("great land") is the great northern island of the group; its greatest length is about 96 miles from E.S.E. to W.N.W., and its average breadth may be about 25 miles.

Ovalau is 8 miles in length north and south, by 7 miles in breadth east and west; it is of volcanic formation, and its rocks are composed of a conglomerate or pudding-stone; it is high and rugged throughout. The valleys only extend a short distance into the interior, and leave but little level ground; they are, however, exceedingly fertile and well cultivated. Ovalau is the principal residence of the white men of the group. It possesses a fine harbour, Levuka, on its eastern side. It has always been the favourite residence of the whites, and must continue so to be, from its central position with regard to the remainder of the group.

Lakemba is the largest island of the eastern group. Its form is nearly round, with an extensive encircling reef. Lakemba is 5 miles from east to west by 3 miles north and south, and, like the rest of this (the eastern) group, is of volcanic formation. The soil is similar to that of Vanua, composed of a dark-red loam.

Koro, or Goro, is considered by the natives one of the most fruitful islands of the group. It is a high island, though not so much so as the others, and from appearance would be susceptible of cultivation to its very top. The island is $9\frac{3}{4}$ miles long by 4 miles wide. The produce of Koro is oil and tortoise-shell, and exceeds in quantity that of any other island of the group.

Moala or Monala is of a triangular form, and may be about 18 or 20 miles in circuit. It is mountainous and volcanic, about 2,000 feet high, and covered with wood.

Totoia is of a circular form, 6 miles in diameter, and when viewed from its peak presents a huge extinct crater, now full of ocean water, of 30 fathoms deep, over a space of 3 miles diameter; the wash of the tide and swell on the southern side has reduced the rim to low-water level, while the ridge contains peaks nearly 1,200 feet above the sea, surrounding this large but to a vessel inaccessible basin. The island is surrounded by a barrier reef of the triangular form, 22 miles in circuit, the elbows of which are 2 miles off the south-west, the north-west, and the eastern projections of the island.

Vuna is one of the principal islands of the group. Its length is 25 miles, and breadth 5 miles; it rises gradually to a central ridge, the height of which is 2,072 feet. The summit is generally covered with clouds. From its gradual rise and its surface being smoother, it is susceptible of a much higher state of cultivation than the other islands. The soil is a reddish loam, and it appears to be considered the most fruitful of the islands.

Kandavau is the south-westernmost of the Fiji Islands; it is 25 miles long, and throughout its whole length is high and mountainous, except a small part at its centre, near Malatta Bay. The island is well covered with pine timber, resembling the New Zealand kauri pine, and most of the large canoes used in the Fiji Islands are built here. The people are industrious, and have abundance of provisions.

Vanua Valavo is the largest of the group called the Exploring Isles; it is of a serpentine shape, and 14 miles in length. Each island of this group has its own separate reef around its shore, and the whole are enclosed within an extensive reef, somewhat in the shape of a triangle, whose sides are 24 miles in length.

Vairi, or Nairi, is the largest of the Yasawa group, and rises to the height of 954 feet above the sea.

Yasawa, or Ya-asawa, is the northernmost island of this group; it is very narrow, and about 10 miles in length; towards its southern end it rises to a peak 780 feet in height.

Area.—According to Dr. Petermann's calculation the superficial area of the Fiji group is equal to that of Wales (7,397 English square miles), or eight times that of the Ionian Islands.

Productions.—Mr. Consul March, in his report for 1869, in speaking of the capabilities of Fiji, says: "The productions and resources of Fiji have been described in previous reports; it is sufficient, therefore, to state that these islands, rich and fertile, yield an almost endless variety of vegetable treasures. They abound in edible roots, medical plants, scents, and perfumes, and timber of various descriptions; whilst sugar, coffee, and tobacco grow most luxuriantly, and if cultivated would, I think, prove as remunerative as cotton." Dr. Seeman's report to the Colonial Office, printed in the Appendix to "Correspondence relative to the Fiji Islands," presented to Parliament in 1862, contains an elaborate description of the productions of Fiji. He remarks that "Colonial produce, properly so called, such as sugar, coffee, tamarinds, and tobacco, may be expected from Fiji in considerable quantities, as soon as Europeans shall have devoted their attention to the subject, since the plants yielding them, long ago introduced, flourish so well that a judicious outlay of capital might prove a profitable investment. The sugar-cane grows as it were wild in various parts of the group, and a purple variety, attaining 16 feet in height and a corresponding thickness, is cultivated to some extent. Coffee will one day rank among the staple products of the country, the mountain slopes of the larger islands, especially those of Viti Levu, Vanua Levu, and Kandavau, and, above all, those of the Valley of Namosi, seeming well adapted for its growth."

Population.—Colonel Smythe, in 1860, estimated the native population at 200,000, and the permanent white residents at less than 200. Mr. Thurston, formerly Acting Consul at Fiji, in 1867, estimated the natives at 100,000; but this number must be considerably below the mark, for in the report of the Australasian Wesleyan Missionary Society for the year ending March, 1873, there is a return given of 109,250 attendants on public worship. Mr. March, in 1870, estimated the native population at 170,000. In 1868, the number of white settlers had increased to 1,288, and in 1870, to about 4,000, of whom three-fourths were British subjects.

Notwithstanding the unsettled condition of Fiji, the progress of the group, especially in the production of cotton, has been remarkable, as will be seen from the following statistics, taken from the commercial reports of the Consul for 1869 and 1870:—

In 1865 the quantity of cotton exported was 2,400 cwt., valued at £9,300.

In 1870 the value was, of Sea Island cotton, £91,500; and of short staple cotton, £1,200; total, £92,700.

The total value of exports in 1870 was £98,735. The approximate total value of imports in that year was £71,950. Most of the articles were of English manufacture, and shipped from Australia and New Zealand. The imports from the latter place amounted to about 2,000 tons; and, judging by the efforts there made to establish regular communication with the South Sea Islands, it is probable that the present year (1871) will see the trade doubled, and competing successfully with that of Sydney, which port has hitherto supplied Fiji with the bulk of its requirements.

The principal articles exported in 1870 were,—

Cotton, Sea Island	£91,500
Cotton, short staple	1,200
Cocoa-nut oil	4,950
Tortoise-shell	260
Cotton-seed	250
Kauri gum	100
Other articles... ..	475
Total	£98,735

This augmentation in the trade of Fiji is due to the increasing operations in cotton-planting, and the continued immigration from the neighbouring Colonies.

The passenger lists of the vessels reported at the Consulate show that the white population in these islands received an accession of 1,035 souls during the past twelve months (1870).

NAVIGATORS ISLANDS.

The following description of this group is by the Rev. J. Powell, F.L.S., of the Samoan Mission:—

“Samoa is the native name of the Navigators group, which lies between 13° 30' and 14° 20' S. lat., and 169° 24' and 172° 50' W. long. Its number of inhabited islands is ten, with a population of about 34,700. It is 265 miles long, and includes an area of 1,650 square miles. All the islands are of volcanic origin, and contain several craters, the largest of which, if we accept the harbour of Pangopango, Tutuila, is on Savaii.

“The variety and beauty of the appearance of these islands almost baffle description. The effect upon visitors of a first sight of them is enchanting, nor is much of the enchantment lost after a long acquaintance with them.

“The first island that comes in sight of voyagers arriving from the eastward is Ta'u, the largest of the three islands that constitute the group, which the natives call Manu'a. It is about 6 miles long, 4½ broad, and 16 in circumference, and contains 100 square miles.

“About 6 miles west of Ta'u is the island of Olosenga. This is a very rocky island, 3 miles long, 500 yards wide, and about 1,500 feet high. It contains 24 square miles. It is precipitous on every side, least so on the north-east, most on the north and south-west. On the latter side, about 200 feet from the shore, rises up a mural precipice 1,200 feet high. The principal village is situated, in times of peace, on the strip of land in front of this precipice. In times of war the people live on the mountain.

“About 2½ miles of the eastern point of the island a volcanic eruption burst out from the deep ocean in September, 1866.

“Ofu, the smallest of the three islands included in the Manu'an group, is neither so high nor so precipitous as Olosenga. It is separated from the latter by only a narrow, shallow strait, about a ¼ of a mile wide. A double-pointed crag off its eastern extremity, together with the precipitous, craggy nature of Olosenga, give to the neighbourhood a remarkably romantic appearance. The population of the Manu'a'n group is about 1,500.

“Aunuu.—60 miles west of Ofu is the island of Tutuila. A mile from Tutuila, off its south-east point, is the little island of Aunuu. This island is about 5 miles in circumference. Population, 200.

“Tutuila is a most beautiful island. It is 17 miles long, 5 wide, and 60 in circumference, and contains 240 square miles. Its population in 1866 was 3,948. It has a mountain range running along almost its entire length from east to west. From the main ridge spurs branch off north and south. The island appears to have been formed by a number of volcanoes, situated in a line extending in a direction from east by north to west by south. As these have thrown up their burning lava and scoria they have formed one united ridge, and many craters on both its north and south sides, with wide openings towards the sea. The spurs running down from the ridges are the sides of these craters, and near their junction with the main ridge there occur at intervals along the island mountains towering far above the ridge and spurs. Thus are formed mountains and ridges, slopes and valleys, and bays of varied forms and sizes, which, covered with the luxuriant vegetation which a moist tropical atmosphere produces, furnish scenes of surpassing beauty.

“Upolu is situated north-west by west of Tutuila, at a distance of about 36 miles. It is about 40 miles long, 13 broad, and 130 in circumference. It contains 560 square miles, and has a population of about 15,600.

“Manono.—Two miles from the western point of Upolu, and encircled by its reef, is the island of Manono. It is nearly of a triangular shape, and less than 5 miles in circumference. It contains 9 square miles. It has a mountain a few hundred feet high, from whose summit can be obtained a splendid view of Upolu and Savii. It is itself ‘one entire garden, in looking at which the eye can scarcely tire.’ It has a population of about 1,000. This island held a very extensive political supremacy over Upolu till the war of 1847–54, in which she lost that supremacy, and was obliged to take her place on a level with those over whom she had formerly exercised much despotic power.

“Apolima is about 2 miles from Manono. It is a crater somewhat resembling a horseshoe, while its depth may well suggest the idea of the hand with the fingers contracted, which is the meaning of the name. Its highest part is 472 feet above the sea. The population is about 200.

“Savaii—This island is the largest of the group. Its most eastern point is about 10 miles from the western point of Upolu. It is about 48 miles long, 22 broad, and 150 in circumference. It contains 700 square miles. It has a high mountain-chain running along its length, the highest point of which is more than 4,000 feet above the sea-level. This is the edge of a large crater. The volcanoes which formed this island seem not to have been extinct so long as those which formed the other islands of the group.”

The

The native population of Samoa at the beginning of 1872 was estimated at from 33,000 to 34,000. Of Europeans there were then about 250 on the group.

The value of imports in 1871 was set down at £25,000; but the year before they amounted to £42,000.

The exports in 1871 were valued at £45,000, and consisted chiefly of copra (dried cocoa-nut).

Further particulars regarding the Navigators Islands can be gathered from Mr. Seed's report on them, dated the 13th February, 1872, and printed in E.—2, "Further Papers relative to the San Francisco Mail Service," presented to the General Assembly in the session of 1872.

COOK'S ISLANDS.

This group of islands, which lie scattered over a considerable space, extending from lat. 18° 54' S. to 21° 57' S., and from long. 157° 20' W. to 160° W., without any intimate connection between each other, consists of nine or ten separate islands, the greater part of which were discovered by Cook; hence the appropriateness of their collective appellation.

Mangaia is the south-easternmost of the group, is of volcanic origin, and is about 30 miles in circumference; population, 2,000. The productions of the island are numerous and cheap; they consist of pigs, turkeys, fowls, ducks, yams, sweet potatoes, pineapples, which the inhabitants obtain, in spite of the poverty of the soil, by assiduous labour and care, but little common to these islanders.

Rarotonga is a beautiful island; it is a mass of mountains, which are high, and present a remarkable and romantic appearance. It has several good boat harbours. The productions of this island, which is much more fertile than Mangaia, are exactly the same. The population does not exceed 4,000.

Atui resembles Mangaia in appearance and extent. It is a mere bank of coral, 10 or 12 feet high, steep and rugged, except where there are small sandy beaches and some clefts, where the ascent is gradual.

Mitiero is a low island, from 3 to 4 miles long and 1 mile wide.

Mauki or Parry Island is also a low island; it is about 2 miles in diameter, well wooded, and inhabited.

Hervey Islands.—This group consists of three islands, surrounded by a reef, which may be 6 leagues in circumference.

Aitutakai presents a most fruitful appearance, its shores being bordered by flat land, on which are innumerable cocoa-nut and other trees, the higher ground being beautifully interspersed with lawns. It is 18 miles in circuit. Population, 2,000.

TUBAI OR AUSTRAL ISLANDS.

This is a dispersed group lying between lat. 21° 50' S. and 23° 42' S., and long. 147° 11' and 154' W., to the southward of the Society Islands and Low Archipelago. They have not been much frequented, as they are small, and do not offer many inducements for the calls of passing navigators.

KERMEDIC ISLANDS.

Are a scattered group of small rocky islets to the north-east of New Zealand, within lat. 29° 15' 30" and 31° 37' 30" S., and long. 177° 54' 52" and 179° 14' W.

SOCIETY ISLANDS.

Tahiti.—The area of Tahiti and its dependencies is 1,175 square kilometers; the area of Poumotu Islands, 6,600 square kilometers.

Tahiti is about 32 miles long from N.W. to S.E.

Tetuaroa is a small low island, or rather group of small low islets, about 6 miles in length, enclosed in a reef about 10 leagues in circuit.

Moorea, or Eimeo, is 10 miles distant from Tahiti. There are several large villages on the southern side of the island. Coffee, cotton, sugar, and all other tropical plants succeed well at Eimeo, and sugar is made to a considerable extent.

Tapamanoa.—Length from E. to W. is about 6 miles.

Huaheine is the easternmost of the group, which was called the Society Islands by Cook. It is about 20 miles in circumference.

Raiatea, or Ulietea, is situated about 130 miles to the N.W. of Tahiti. It is about 40 miles in circumference, of mountainous character, covered with vegetation and well watered. The soil is exceedingly fertile.

Taha, or Otaha, lies to the northward of, and is about half the size of Raiatea.

Bola-Bola, or Bora-Bora, is four and a half leagues N.W. of Taha, to which it is inferior in extent.

Marua, or Maupiti, is the westernmost of the group. It is a small island of about 6 miles in circumference.

Tubai, or Motu Iti, is the northernmost of the group, and consists merely of some very small low islets, connected by a reef about 10 miles N. of Bola-Bola.

Population (foreigners from all quarters included) spread over Tahiti and the whole of its numerous dependencies is approximately estimated at 21,000, of whom some 500 or 600 are Chinamen, labourers, domestic servants, and artisans, whilst a large number are natives of distant islands in the Pacific, imported as contract labourers.

Imports, during the years 1869, 1870, and 1871, valued approximately at from £110,000 to £120,000 per annum. About one-third of this consisted of British or British-colonial products and manufactures, imported for the most part from Australia and New Zealand.

Exports.—Value of Tahitian and other island products:—

In 1869	£105,000
„ 1870	96,000
„ 1871	90,000

Cotton was the principal item of export. The value of it in 1871 amounted to about one-half the total value of exports. The apparent falling-off in 1870 and 1871 was owing to a reduction of the valuation of this chief article of export.

The

The important position of New Zealand in relation to the South Sea Islands is shown by the following passage from the British Consul's report from Tahiti for 1871, from which the above figures are taken:—

"The countries for which the exports of island produce were destined may be stated as follows: England (chiefly through New Zealand or Australia), France, California, Chili, and lately some to Hamburg.

"The foreign merchandise mentioned in the return as re-exported was mainly that portion re-shipped for islands in the Pacific beyond the limits of the French Protectorate over Tahiti."

Government.—Tahiti is nominally under the French Protectorate, which was established in 1844, but practically their power is absolute.

Papeite is the seat of Government. It stands at the foot of the highest mountain of the island. The ground here is level, but there is not much space between it and the foot of the mountains. It is covered with the richest and most beautiful vegetation.

Commodore R. A. Powell, C.B., of H.M.S. "Topaze," who visited Tahiti in 1867, in speaking of the French occupation of the Society Islands, says:—"The French appear to be very liberal in their government, and the natives have only to pay a small capitation-tax, in default of which they give so many days' work. The Protestant religion is not interfered with, and the missionary schools are encouraged: order is preserved, and the only restrictions on the natives are for their own benefit. On comparing the state of this island with that of others where European influence is not felt, I am of opinion that the presence of the French at Tahiti has been very beneficial, and it is to be regretted that their settlements in the Marquesas have been abandoned, although doubtless they were expensive to keep up.

LOW ARCHIPELAGO OR PAUMOTU GROUP.

This vast collection of coral islands, one of the wonders of the Pacific, extends over 16 degrees of longitude, without taking into consideration the detached islands to the S.E. of it. They are all of them of similar character, and exhibit very great sameness in their features. When they are seen at a distance, which cannot be great on account of their lowness, the aspect is one of surpassing beauty, if the dry part of the island or belt is sufficiently covered with trees; but much of this beauty is dispelled on a nearer approach, as the vegetation is usually found to be scanty and wiry.

The archipelago, like the adjoining groups of the Marquesas and the Society Islands, are under the French Protectorate. There are seventy-eight islands; eighteen are uninhabited, and sixteen are still occupied by savage tribes. These are in the south-eastern parts of the group, furthest removed from the civilizing neighbourhood of Tahiti. The western portion is divided by the French into four groups or circles; that to the west with eight islands, the north with five, the centre with fourteen, the the eastern of seventeen islands. They are all coralline or lagoon reefs, with three exceptions, and a few have entrances for large vessels.

The native population of the entire archipelago only amounts to 3,500, of which 700 are still uncivilized. There has been much improvement of late in their houses and clothing, to procure which they have opened some branches of industry, the chief of which is cocoa-nut oil and mother-of-pearl shell

MARQUESAS ARCHIPELAGO.

The Marquesas Archipelago is composed of two tolerably distinct groups, lying in a general N.W. and S.E. direction, between the parallels of lat. 7° 50' and 10° 31' S., and long. 138° 39' and 140° 46' W. They are all of volcanic origin, very high, and may be seen in clear weather at 15 or 20 leagues distance.

The sovereignty of the group was ceded to France by a treaty with Admiral Du Petit Thouars, in May, 1842, and a military Colony was established in Taiohai Bay, at Nukahiva, but the result was in no way commensurate with the expense of the establishment; and this, after the experiment lasted seventeen years, was abandoned on the 1st January, 1859.

Nukahiva is the principal island of the Marquesas Archipelago. It is 17 miles in length from east to west, and 10 miles broad. It has been frequently visited and described, and its inhabitants are perhaps the best known of any in the archipelago. The population of this island was estimated by Captain Krusenstern, when he visited it in 1804, at 18,000. Notwithstanding the opinion of Krusenstern that his estimate for so large an island was low in 1804, it is reduced to 8,900 by the estimate of M. de Tesson in 1838, and to 2,690 by Lieutenant Jouan in 1856.

O-hiva-oa, or La Dominica, is the most fertile, the most populous (6,000 inhabitants), and the most important for its productions of the whole archipelago. It is about 21 miles long from E. by N. to S. by W., and 7 miles in its average breadth.

The following remarks are from the report of Commodore R. A. Powell, C.B., of H.M.S. "Topaze," 1867:—

"Magdalena Island.—On June 8, at 9 a.m., the island of Magdalena was sighted, bearing W. $\frac{1}{2}$ N., and distant 40 miles, the summit of the high mountain being observed in the clouds. The eastern side of the island is extremely rugged, steep ridges coming down from the central mountain, and terminating in high precipices over the sea. Very few of the valleys or gorges appear to reach the beach, so that, independent of a dangerous surf which dashed against the rocks, landing would have been quite impracticable. On the north and south sides of the island the land sloped more regularly towards the sea, but there was no landing.

"Point Venus, on the south side, is a perpendicular rocky cliff, about 700 feet high, overhanging the sea, which breaks within a few yards of its base; from some points of view the break assumes the appearance of a reef extending out further than it really does. Bon Repos Bay is immediately round Point Venus, on the western side of the island, and the best anchorage is about a mile from the shore in 17 fathoms, opposite a shingly beach, with the valley well open. This bay is open to westerly winds, which, according to the native account, blow occasionally with great force from December to March, which would appear to be the bad months. A heavy surf rolls continually on the beach, but landing can be effected on the rocks on the north side of the bay. Water can be obtained, but with difficulty, as boats must lie a considerable distance from the beach where the stream comes down. The valley, which winds up among the hills from the bottom of the bay, is very beautiful, being covered with rich foliage of tropical fruit trees, whilst the native cottages and huts, sheltered under the bread-fruit, cocoa-nut, and orange trees, add greatly to the attractiveness of the scene.

"Fruits of all descriptions are to be procured in sufficient quantities to refresh a large ship's company, but meat and vegetables are very scarce, pigs and poultry being the only animal food. The inhabitants are supposed to be less than 500 in number, and are said to be fast decreasing; this may be attributed to the prevailing custom of polygamy, as well as to continual warfare, which exists between the tribes inhabiting the two principal valleys.

"The French have practically given up all control over the natives, whose only intercourse with foreigners is confined to the crews of the few whalers that occasionally call for supplies. They are to all appearance in the same primitive state they were described to be in 100 years ago; for, though some have Polynesian Bibles and all profess Christianity, they still practise the same heathenish rites and entertain the same superstitions as formerly, whilst cannibalism yet exists in connection with prisoners of war.

"The men, who are of ordinary stature, with good features, are rendered hideous by tattooing; the women are fairer than the men, and pleasant-looking, as they are only tattooed on the face, with a few blue marks on the lips. The only apparent difference between what we saw and read in early accounts was the conduct of the women, all of whom wore a becoming robe of tappa or native cloth, and were very modest in demeanour, whatever their morals may be."

San Christina Island was sighted on June 10. The "Topaze" remained here two days, without experiencing any difficulty from the swell or squalls from the mountains. There is no doubt, however, that a heavy swell sets in from the S.W.

The landing-place, constructed by the French authorities at considerable expense, was washed away, and there were other marks of destruction by the waves. It was also reported that vessels had been driven to sea by the force of the violent gusts down the valley, and altogether the bay has such a bad character that whalers seldom visit it, although it is believed to be the only place where it would be advisable for ships to anchor.

The formation of the island, with its steep shore on the east and numerous valleys on the west sides, closely resembles Magdalena Island, and the facilities for watering and obtaining supplies are about the same. There are wild cattle on the mountains, but difficult to get at, and still more difficult to carry away when shot. The inhabitants of this island are far inferior in appearance and manner to those of Magdalena Island; they do not number more than 300, and from disease and other causes are fast decreasing.

The French had a considerable settlement here some few years since, but they have now entirely abandoned it, and fort, house, and gardens have fallen into a state of decay.

Dominica Island.—Whilst the "Topaze" remained in Resolution Bay, Commodore Powell proceeded to Dominica Island with two boats. After skirting the shore around Tava Bay without being able to land, the boats made for a small round island (not marked on the charts) at the entrance of Taogon Bay, and, passing to the eastward of it, a small land-locked harbour was discovered, known to the French as Traitor's Bay, where the landing is good, and water can be obtained with great facility. Ships of 1,000 tons could here refit with great security.

The French have no settlement on Dominica, but there are two or three priests on the island, one of whom stated that they had entirely failed in making converts, and that in his opinion there was not a native Christian. He also described the inhabitants as being inveterate cannibals, always at war with each other, much addicted to drunkenness and other bad habits. The priests had succeeded in cultivating cotton, and had lately sold their produce for £2,000.

The island has some well-watered, beautiful valleys, and was described as being extremely rich, and well suited for coffee, sugar, and other tropical productions. It was extremely difficult to arrive at any correct estimate of the number of inhabitants, but they are said to amount to about 1,500 and decreasing. The men are tall and able-bodied, but the women are depraved and ill-looking.

Nouka-Hwa or Marchand Island.—The "Topaze" left San Christina Island on the 12th June, and sighted Cape Martin, Nouka-Hwa, at daylight the following morning. The French have reduced their establishment here to a resident, four soldiers, and a captain of the port, who also acts as pilot. The French authorities insist upon vessels taking the pilot, although he cannot possibly be of any service, as the only difficulties to contend with are baffling winds. The payment amounts to 200 francs going in, and the same sum going out; and this charge has effectually kept out whalers that formerly were accustomed to frequent the bay.

The island of Nouka-Hwa offers great resources for cultivation, for its valleys are broad, well watered, and possess rich soil. Tropical fruits abound, as in the other islands; but the guava, recently introduced, is fast overrunning the land, and destroying the bread-fruit and many other valuable trees.

In 1864-65 the small-pox raged here with great virulence, and carried off all but a few hundreds of the natives; in the Happar and Taipi Valleys, where the population numbered nearly 2,000, only about 150 are left. These valleys have been purchased by an English Land Company, but as yet no steps have been taken to people or cultivate them.

NEW CALEDONIA AND LOYALTY ISLANDS.

New Caledonia belongs to the French. It lies about 720 miles E.N.E. of the coast of Queensland in Australia, in lat. 20° to 22° 30' S., long. 164° to 167° E. It is about 200 miles in length, 30 miles in breadth, and has a population estimated at 60,000. It is of volcanic origin, is traversed in the direction of its length, from north-west to south-east, by a range of mountains, which in some cases reach the height of about 8,000 feet, and is surrounded by sandbanks and coral reefs. There are secure harbours at Port Balade and Port St. Vincent, the former on the north-east, the latter on the south-west part of the island. In the valleys the soil is fruitful, producing the cocoa-nut, banana, mango, bread-fruit, &c. The sugar-cane is cultivated, and the vine grows wild. The coasts support considerable tracts of forest, but the mountains are barren. The inhabitants, who resemble the Papuan race, consist of different tribes, some of which are cannibals. New Caledonia was discovered by Captain Cook in 1774. In 1854 the French took official possession of it, and it is now comprised under the same government with Otaheite and the Marquesas Isles.

THE LOYALTY ISLANDS

may be considered as part of the New Caledonia group, running parallel with the trend of that island, at a distance of 50 to 60 miles. They consist of three principal islands, Maré, Lifu, Uea; between the former two are five smaller islets.

NEW

NEW HEBRIDES ISLANDS.

This group extends from lat. 13° 16' to 20° 15' S., and from long. 166° 40' to 170° 20' E., and includes the following islands:—Aneiteum, Tana, Erromango, Vate or Sandwich Island, Api, Ambrym, Whitsun, Aurora, Lepers, Mallicollo, and Espiritu Santo. The last-named is the largest of the group. It is 22 leagues in length, and about half that breadth. Mallicollo is 18 leagues in length and 8 leagues broad.

Erromango has acquired a sad notoriety from the massacre there of the indefatigable missionary Mr. Williams, the well-known author of "Missionary Enterprise."

Aneiteum, Tana, and Vate are thus described by Lieut. the Hon. Herbert Meade, R.N., who visited these islands in H.M.S. "Curaçoa" in 1865:—

"Aneiteum is about 14 miles long by 8 broad, and bears a population of 2,200, which is at present stationary, or very slightly decreasing. The natives are all Christians; the first teachers (Samoan) were placed here in 1841. The last case of cannibalism occurred thirteen years ago. Every person in the island above five years old can read more or less, and attends school. Crime is rare; life and property secure. Mr. Inglis, the missionary, states that their standard of morality is at present a high one, but asserts that before Christianity took hold on them they were as bad as any in the group. The climate is damp and rather unhealthy. Cotton grows well. There are about twenty Europeans, traders and others, usually in the island. The island is volcanic, but reef-bound. Hurricanes frequent and severe.

"Tana is about 25 miles long by 12 broad, and the population is between 10,000 and 20,000; but since the introduction of European diseases and weapons there has been a steady decrease. In 1861 a third of the people died of the measles. The state of morals is extremely low; the natives assert that the present excessive licentiousness was introduced by the whites who formerly resided on the island. The chiefs endeavour to get drunk every night on Kāoa. The women do all the work, the men the fighting, which is their constant employment. Cannibalism is the custom all over the island.

"Vate.—This island is from 30 to 35 miles long, and about 15 broad. Population, which is said to be decreasing, is estimated at 10,000 to 12,000. Climate rather damp, but healthy enough if care be taken. One village, Erakor, is Christian, and in another are a few favourable to the faith; but all the other people are up to their ears in paganism, cannibalism, murder of old men, widows, and children, and all the other ills that affect the heathen morals at dead low-water. The cotton-plant, which has lately been introduced, does well. The Government is carried on by petty chiefs, who mostly rule over independent villages. Earthquakes common, sometimes severe."

The following description of the New Hebrides is by Commander Thomas C. Tilly, R.N., lately in command of the Melanesian Mission schooner "Southern Cross":—

"General Remarks.—The fine weather or dry season among the New Hebrides and Solomon Islands may be said to extend from May to October, both months inclusive, and the wet season from November to April; occasionally much rain falls in the so-called dry season, and is generally accompanied by a change of wind from the eastward. The normal direction of the trade-winds is from E.S.E., but the stronger winds, which usually succeed calms, are from S.E., and as a rule such may be expected when the wind veers round to E. or N.E.

"When in the vicinity of the islands the prevailing trades are frequently interrupted, and calms occur, followed by easterly and north-easterly breezes accompanied with rain; occasionally the wind backs round, by way of north to west, and the trade direction is resumed with what is known among the Banks Islands as the 'Lan San,' or strong S.E. wind.

"Hurricanes prevail during the whole of the wet season, and blow with greatest violence during the months of January and February. It does not appear that they are of frequent occurrence, but the information on the subject derived from the natives is very vague.

"It is said that storms are experienced more frequently at Aneiteum Island, at the southern extremity of the New Hebrides range, than amongst the islands further to the northward, and have been described as blowing with sufficient violence to destroy trees, huts, &c., their length of duration varying from two to four or even six days. They generally commence from the westward, from which quarter it blows hardest, and veer round by way of north, causing the sea to advance as a wave on the shore; whilst between Amota, Vanua Lava, and Valua Islands the sea breaks as on a reef.

"The approximate mean temperature of the air amongst Banks Islands, during May and June, was 84°, and that of the sea generally corresponded with the temperature of the air at 9 a.m.

"Population.—The natives of the New Hebrides group are dark in colour, of moderate stature, and in some places, as at Pentecost and Mallicollo Islands, are robust muscular men, with woolly hair. For weapons they have clubs, spears, bows and arrows—the latter generally poisoned—and, in some places, tomahawks. Their canoes are rude in shape, clumsily made, and fitted with outriggers. They have no recognized chiefs; and, as their lives are characterized by suspicion and constant quarrelling, there is no security for either life or property.

"Although an appearance of friendly confidence will often tend to allay their natural feelings of distrust, strangers visiting those islands would do well to maintain a constant watchfulness, and use every precaution against being taken by surprise.

"Productions.—The productions of the islands composing the New Hebrides, including Banks Islands, consist of bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, sago, bananas, nutmegs, sugar-cane, taro, arrowroot, sweet potatoes, and yams. Pigs are also occasionally procurable at Banks Islands, but principally at Mai Island. The best articles for barter consist of beads, fish-hooks, calico, axes, and, in some of the less frequented islands, iron hoops and iron cut into short lengths.

"Mai or Three Hills Island has three elevations, which are respectively 1,850, 1,450, and 1,400 feet high; the eastern and highest hill, Rave-ná, is the most regular in outline, with a gentle slope from its summit, whilst its sides are thickly cultivated. The island lies about N.E. and S.W. for a distance of 6 miles, the average breadth being about 2½ miles.

"A supply of pigs and yams, the latter very good, may be procured; the barter used by the 'Southern Cross' being calico and tomahawks. No fresh water is obtainable, and but little fire-wood. The population has been estimated to be about 800 or 1,200, and in this small island no less than three dialects are spoken. The character of the natives is noisy and quarrelsome, and during communication strangers should be on their guard against surprise. The arms of these islanders consist of clubs, tomahawks, bows, and poisoned arrows; and they daub their faces, as well as other parts of their bodies, with turmeric. They possess only a few canoes.

"Api

"Api or Tasiko Island.—This island is about 25 miles in length in a N.W. and S.E. direction, and from 6 to 10 miles in breadth. It is of a very fertile character, well wooded, with a high range on its western part, and numerous appearances of streams or where water may be found after rain. The island is apparently thickly inhabited, and the natives in character and appearance resemble the inhabitants of Mai Island.

"Namuku Islet, off the centre of the south side of Api Island, rises to the height of 500 feet, and forms a conspicuous object.

"Lopevi Island resembles Star or Meralaba Island in appearance, but with a sharper cone. The crater was very active, and only a few inhabitants and but little vegetation remain."

"Ambrym Island.—The population appeared to be numerous, and the natives at the village on the north part of the island appeared very friendly, but at other places arrows were occasionally shot at the bishop's boat, probably in consequence of some injury received at the hands of traders. The canoes, like those of other islands of the group, are clumsily made, and would probably contain ten or twelve men.

"Mallicollo Island.—The north-east coast of this island is bordered with a succession of islets and fringe reefs, which in some places run out some distance. At the islet of Orumbau, which has a white sandy beach along its N.E. face, and somewhat bluff at its S.E. extreme, the reef projects about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile from its northern end. This islet, which lies in lat. $16^{\circ} 4' S.$, long. $167^{\circ} 21' E.$, is covered with cocoa-nut trees, and has a good landing-place on a steep beach at its inner or western side, with deep water close to the beach. The natives were friendly on the only occasion the islet was visited; from 200 to 300 were assembled on the beach, and the island may possibly contain about 500 inhabitants.

"St. Esprit Island.—The Bay of St. Philip is not so deep as it appears on the charts; the position of the mouth of the river Jordan, which flows into the head of the bay, was found to be in lat. $15^{\circ} 9' 41'' S.$, long. $166^{\circ} 53' 15'' E.$

This is a most convenient place for watering, as the boats pull into the river, where any quantity of good fresh water may be obtained. The ordinary trade-wind comes beautifully fresh and cool over the land, whilst the temperature is about 4° lower than in other parts of the group, and occasionally sea breezes from northward contend with the trade-winds when light.

"Lepers Island.—The magnificent mountain of this island, rising to the height of 4,000 feet, resembles a whale's back in outline, and from the sea assumes a most imposing appearance.

An abundance of yams and cocoa-nuts are grown on the island, but in consequence of the swell on all the beaches it is difficult to land a ship's boat; and the natives, though apparently energetic, have not yet accustomed themselves to bring off supplies in their canoes, which, though numerous, are small.

"Pentecost or Whitsuntide Island lies N.N.W. and S.S.E., with moderately high ranges, and occasional fringe reefs on its western or lee side, extending in some cases $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile off shore. There are two good watering-places towards the south-west end of the island, where boats may lie a few fathoms off running streams; but it should be borne in mind that the beds of the streams are liable to change after heavy rains. It is apparently more thickly populated and highly cultivated than the neighbouring island of Aurora.

Communication was established with the natives at Vunmarama, a village at the north-west point of the island, where, in general, a good supply of yams, &c., may be obtained. At the southern portion of the island the canoes are large, and the people dark, tall, and muscular.

BANKS ISLANDS.

These lie to the northward of the New Hebrides, between lat. $13^{\circ} 16'$ and $14^{\circ} 10' S.$, and $167^{\circ} 17'$ and $158^{\circ} 34' E.$

"Vanua Lava, the largest of the Banks Islands, is 15 miles in length north and south, and is a remarkable looking island, with several high rounded mountains, the highest, to the north-west, being some 2,800 feet above the sea. In the Suretamiti Mountain are several hot springs always steaming, whilst a stream impregnated with sulphur runs down to the sea on the north-west coast, and a similar one falls into Port Patteson on the eastern side. There are two waterfalls on the western side, one single and the other double. The population of Vanua Lava amounts to about 1,500. The natives were quiet and friendly.

"Santa Maria or Gana Island, the second largest of the Banks Islands, lies between the parallels $14^{\circ} 12'$ and $14^{\circ} 22' S.$, and between the meridians $167^{\circ} 23'$ and $167^{\circ} 36' E.$ The main range of mountains, about 2,000 feet high, lies in an east and west direction, and excepting on the south side, where the land falls in ridges, the slopes are regular to the shore; the island is well wooded and cultivated, but during the usual trade-winds landing would be very difficult, even if practicable, on the southern and eastern sides.

The information respecting this island is somewhat limited, owing to the quarrelsome nature of the inhabitants of the western side, who seldom failed to shoot arrows after the boat on her leaving the shore. This occurred at Lakona, a village near the waterfall at the north end of the western bay. Although the natives at Lakona proved themselves unfriendly, those at Losolava, Avire, and Tarosag were disposed to be friendly to strangers, though quarrelling amongst themselves. The population appeared to be great, but the island cannot be recommended to strangers for obtaining supplies, in consequence of the uncertain nature of communication with inhabitants.

"Mota or Sugar-loaf Island is about 8 or 10 miles in circumference, and derives its English name from its peculiar shape. It lies about 9 miles to the eastward of Port Patteson, in lat. $13^{\circ} 49' S.$, long. $167^{\circ} 39' 30'' E.$, and attains an elevation of 1,350 feet. The island is better known by Bishop Patteson than any other; the inhabitants are quite friendly, and some of them understand a little English. The number of villages amounts to forty-two, with an aggregate population of about 2,000, but no recognized chiefs. The weapons of the natives consist of spears, clubs, bows, and poisoned arrows. Fruit, sugar-cane, taro, potatoes, and yams, and occasionally pigs are to be procured; the articles of barter being beads, fish-hooks (very small fish-hooks at Mota), calico, and axes.

"Valua or Saddle Island lies between lat. $13^{\circ} 36'$ and $13^{\circ} 41' S.$, and long. $167^{\circ} 34'$ and $167^{\circ} 41' E.$, and is about 8 miles long, north-east and south-west.

"Araa Island.—Off the S.W. end of Valua Island is the small island of Araa. The distance between Araa and the main island can be waded. The natives, numbering from 2,000 to 3,000, are friendly and well disposed.

Ureparapara

Ureparapara or Bligh Island, about 16 miles to the north-west of Rowo Reef, attains an elevation of 1,950 feet, is nearly circular in form, and about 12 miles in circumference; it is steep, too, except a few fringed reefs close in on its lee side; it is well watered, and produces abundance of taro, though but little else.

SANTA CRUZ ISLANDS.

This group is composed of seven larger islands, Vanikoro, Santa Cruz (Nitendi), Guerta, Volcano (Tinakoro), Edgecombe, Ourry, and Lord Howe, besides several smaller ones to the north and north-east of Volcano Island. Vanikoro is the southernmost of the group. It is an important island in the eyes of Europeans, not from its extent or riches, but from its being the scene of the disastrous loss of the two ships of La Perouse in 1788, an event which was not ascertained with any certainty until May, 1826, or thirty-eight years afterwards.

The group forming the Vanikoro Islands is composed of two of unequal extent: the first is not less than 30 miles in circumference; the other is not more than 9 miles. They are both high, and covered with trees to the water's edge.

Vanikoro has but a slender population. The coasts are alone inhabited, all the interior being only a dense forest, wild and nearly impenetrable.

Santa Cruz Island is thus described by Captain Tilley:—

"Santa Cruz Island is about 15 or 16 miles in length, with fringe reefs along the shore, but apparently no off-lying dangers. The north point, near the centre of the island, was found to be in lat. $10^{\circ} 40'$ S., long. $166^{\circ} 3'$. The high land extends close out on its north-east side, but towards the north-west the hills slope at some distance from the extreme, leaving a considerable extent of low land near the coast. The island is well wooded and watered, the streams in some places running through the villages into the sea.

"The natives are a fine athletic-looking race, and come off readily to the ship, bringing pigs, bread-fruit, and yams; mats, in the manufacture of which great skill is displayed, are also offered for sale. The appearance of the canoes, houses, &c., evinces great ingenuity. Canoes with out-riggers, and mostly limewashed, have a neat appearance; they have also large sea-going double canoes. The villages are large, and houses surrounded by stone fences. On the north side the villages are close to the sea, with from 300 to 400 inhabitants to each.

"The natives are apparently merry and good-natured, but not to be trusted; for without any known reason they attacked the bishop's boat on leaving a village at the north-west extremity of the island, and nearly succeeded in cutting it off. Three of the crew were wounded with arrows, and of these two died from the effects of their wounds. Their bows are formidable-looking weapons, being 7 feet in length, with arrows in proportion."

THE SOLOMON ARCHIPELAGO

extends north-west and south-east for the space of 200 leagues. It is composed of eight or ten principal islands, and many other smaller ones. The largest are Bougainville, Choiseul, Ysabel, Gaudalcanar, Malayta, and San Christoval. The last-named is stated to be 73 miles long and 23 miles broad at its widest part. Malayta is 70 miles long; Ysabel, 120 miles long, and 25 miles in its maximum breadth. The sizes of Bougainville and Choiseul have not been ascertained, but they must be of greater area than those named above. The structure of these islands is throughout the same; it is a long chain of mountains, often very lofty, which form their axes in the general direction of the group. On either side the slopes incline gently towards the sea; the shores generally appear low, and often furnished with a belt of mangroves, the edge of which is washed by the salt water. An active and vigorous vegetation covers the whole of the land, and it is only here and there that in rare intervals the soil may be seen, or only covered with ferns, or often consumed by fire intentionally. The principal islands have all the advantages of extensive land; extended plains and large rivers descend from the hills, and, if we may judge by the trees which cover the land, the soil is of great fertility.

The inhabitants of these islands are generally shorter than those of the groups previously described, and appear to be characterized by greater energy and activity than are usually exhibited. Their canoes are exceedingly graceful and light, and without the outriggers common to all others. The natives also possess large war canoes carrying from thirty to sixty men, and in these they traverse great distances, sometimes beyond the sight of land. They are skilful in carving, and most of their implements are inlaid with the mother-of-pearl shell.

LOUISIADE ARCHIPELAGO, near the south-east end of New Guinea, embraces the following islands: Adele Island, Roussel Island, the Rénard Islands, St. Aignan Island, De Boyne Islands, the Bonvouloir Isles, D'Estrecaux Islands, and the Trobriand Islands.

Roussel and St. Aignan are the largest of the group; the last-named is about 27 miles in length. The others are small coral islands. This group is but imperfectly known, and little or no intercourse appears to have been had with the natives, who are said to be numerous. The known productions of the islands are cocoa-nuts, yams, bananas, and sweet potatoes.

It is probable that fuller information regarding this group will result from Captain Moresby's recent visit to the coasts of New Guinea in H.M. ship "Basilisk," under his command.

NEW BRITAIN AND NEW IRELAND

are two large islands situated between the eastern part of New Guinea and the equator; contiguous to them are numerous smaller islands.

The western part of New Britain is thus described by M. D'Urville, who visited it in 1827:—

"Rarely has nature imprinted so delicious an aspect on a country untouched by the hand of man, with such an agreeable diversity of surface and beautiful effects of perspective. The coast throughout quite safe, accessible, and washed by tranquil waves; the land gently rising in the form of an amphitheatre in various places, here and there shaded by dark forests, or by less thick vegetation, and more particularly by extensive tracts of greensward, the yellowish tints of which contrasted richly with the darker shades of the more sombre forests and woods surrounding them. The two peaks of Mount Gloucester crowned this smiling scene with their imposing masses, their majestic summits frequently hidden in the clouds. In all the western quarter, and at 12 miles distance, our horizon was occupied by the undulating lines of Rook Island, which, with New Britain, forms the Strait of Dampier."

ADMIRALTY

ADMIRALTY ISLANDS.

The largest of this group is Admiralty Island, the centre of which is in lat. $2^{\circ} 18' S.$, long. $146^{\circ} 44' E.$ Some of the islands of this group are described as being thickly populated by an apparently happy and contented people. They appear to live principally on cocoa-nuts, which are abundant on the islands.

TOKELAU OR UNION GROUP, ELLICE GROUP, AND GILBERT OR KINGSMILL GROUP.

These islands are thus described by the Rev. J. S. Whitmee, of the London Missionary Society, who visited them in the mission barque "John Williams" in 1870:—

"Tokelau or Union Group."

"This group consists of three clusters of islets, named respectively Takafo, Nukunono, and Atafu. The islets of each cluster are connected by a reef, forming one of the numerous atolls to be found in the Pacific. These reefs are more or less circular in form, enclosing a lagoon in the centre. The land is formed on the raised reef by the washing of sand and broken coral from the sea during rough weather. In some of the older atolls the land is connected and forms a continuous ring round the lagoon; but more commonly land exists only here and there along the reef, thus forming a ring of islands, some from 1 mile to 6 miles in length, covered with cocoa-nut and palm and other trees, and some only a few yards across, upon which two or three stunted cocoa-nuts barely manage to exist, while others again are mere sandbanks destitute of all vegetable life.

"Takafo (Bowditch Island), lat $9^{\circ} 26'$, long. $171^{\circ} 12' W.$, the most easterly in the group, consists of more than twenty small islands, encircling a lagoon 8 miles long by 5 miles wide. All the islands are very barren, yielding little except cocoa-nuts, palms, and a species of edible pandanus. Upon these and fish, which are plentiful, the people entirely subsist, and they appear to thrive very well upon them. The population of the island is only 223 at the present time, and more than two-thirds of the adults are females.

"Atafu (Duke of York Island), in lat. $8^{\circ} 33' S.$, and long. $172^{\circ} 25' W.$ —This atoll is of similar formation to Takafo, but the lagoon is smaller. The islands studding the annular reef are about twenty in number, and consist of sand and broken coral washed up by the action of the waves, without the slightest trace of soil. Here I had a peep into the secret of island formation. As I was walking on one side of the island on which the village is situated I noticed a series of sandy mounds running parallel with the coast, and varying from 10 to 50 feet in breadth. Some had cocoa-nut palms and pandanus already growing on them and producing fruit, on others the vegetation was of a more recent growth, while others were bare, or with only a few of the pandanus fruit, which had by some accident been cast upon them, sprouting and giving promise for the future. The outer mound was fully 50 feet across it, and had been washed up during heavy weather at the beginning of the present year. The population of the island is 136, it having been greatly diminished by Peruvian slavers.

"Ellice Group."

"Nukulaelae (Mitchell Island or Group).—It lies in lat. $9^{\circ} 18' S.$, and long. $179^{\circ} 48' E.$ There are several small islands encircling this lagoon, on one of the largest of which is the village. The population is very small, only ninety at the present time. This is the place where the Peruvian slavers made the greatest havoc in 1863.

"Funafuti (Ellice Island).—We reached this atoll the day after leaving Nukulaelae. Its position is in lat. $8^{\circ} 29' S.$, and long. $179^{\circ} 21' E.$ The lagoon is 12 miles or more in one direction by 5 or 6 miles in the other. In two places there is a sufficient depth of water over the reef to allow vessels to go inside the lagoon. Captain Fowler took the vessel inside and anchored. The island presents an appearance very similar to the others we had visited. Some of them were evidently older than any we had hitherto seen, except Quiros Island. The island on which the village stands could boast of a nearer approach to a legitimate soil; consequently more variety of food is produced. Besides the cocoa-nut palm, which is almost sure to be found wherever a sandbank raises its head above low-water mark, and the pandanus, we found here a few bread-fruit trees and bananas, with two species of the edible arum or taro. One of these grows to an immense size; and, although to our palates it appeared to be quantity without quality, it doubtless is an acceptable addition to the alimentary stores of those whose daily fare is chiefly confined to cocoa-nuts, pandanus fruit, and fish. The way the people cultivate the taro, bananas, &c., in these islands is worthy of a brief notice in passing. They dig large trenches, like wide moats, along the centre of the islands. Some of these are from 100 to 200 yards across them, and from 6 to 8 feet deep. To carry out the sand from these trenches must have been the work of generations. These low levels are moist, and on them they make as much soil as possible by throwing in decayed wood and leaves, and here they plant everything which requires special care. Nothing edible but the cocoa-nut and the pandanus grows on the upper sand. We brought two cases of useful plants from Samoa, and distributed them amongst the islands we visited, in order to add to the temporal as well as the spiritual well-being of the people. These were very gladly received.

"Vaiputu (Tracy Island), lat $7^{\circ} 31' S.$, long. $178^{\circ} 46' E.$ —We reached this island the morning after we left Funafuti, October 7. It is nearly round, about 4 miles across, and has a salt-water lagoon in the centre, completely shut off from the sea by a ring-like strip of land about half-a-mile across. The island is evidently older than some of the others we have visited, and is more productive. Cocoa-nut palms are very abundant and very productive. There is also a good supply of taro, and there are some bananas. These people are the most advanced we have yet visited; they were delighted to see the missionary ship, and gave us a hearty reception. The population amounts to 376; and besides these there were thirty or forty natives of Nintao, a heathen island in the group, here on a visit. Before we went ashore we were struck with the appearance of the settlement, which is very pretty. A neat stone chapel stands in the foreground, behind which is the teacher's house, while on either side are ranged the houses of the natives.

"Nukufetau (De Peyster Island), in lat. $7^{\circ} 51' S.$, and long. $178^{\circ} 35' E.$, was the next atoll at which we called. We arrived on Sunday morning, October 9. Here there is a large lagoon, surrounded by a coral reef, on which a number of islands have been formed. The village is on one of the larger islands. There is a passage into the lagoon by which ships may enter, so we went in and anchored. The description of Funafuti will apply equally well to Nukufetau, except that the lagoon in the latter is smaller and more circular in form. The population of the island is 202.

"Nui (Netherland Island).—We reached this island the morning after leaving Nukufetau, 11th October. It lies in lat. $7^{\circ} 15' S.$, and long. $177^{\circ} E.$ It is a single island, nearly circular, with a lagoon on one side of it partly open to the sea, but with no entrance for ships. Its productions are similar to those of Vaitupu, and very abundant. The people are very different from those peopling the rest of the Ellice group. All the other islands have been peopled from Samoa. The Samoan language is the basis of theirs, and they have traditions of their forefathers being drifted from Samoa to Vaitupu, whence they spread to the other islands. On Nui the people trace their origin to the Gilbert group, and they speak the language of that group, which is totally different from the Samoan. Here, for the first time, I had to speak entirely through an interpreter. The entire population is 212.

"Niutao (Speiden Island).—This island is in lat. $6^{\circ} 8' S.$, and long. $170^{\circ} 22' E.$ It lies to windward of Nui, and we had light winds and calms on the way, so we were more than two days in reaching it. We landed on the morning of October 15. The island is of similar formation to the others we had visited, but has, I was told, two lagoons. I saw one; it is very shallow, and not more than 1 mile across. The belt of land around it is not less than from three-quarters of a mile to 1 mile broad. This lagoon is situated in one end of the island, and I was told there is a similar one at the other end, but I had no time to visit it. The island is plentifully supplied with cocoa-nut palms and bananas, but there is not much besides of an edible nature. At the time of our visit there was a scarcity of food on account of a long-continued drought. The population on the island at present is about 360; but over 100 people are away at other islands, many of them at Vaitupu.

"Nunomaga (Hudson Island).—This island lies to the west of Niutao. I determined not to detain the vessel to call at the island, but to proceed at once to the north and visit the Gilbert group.

"Nanomea (St. Augustine Island) is in lat. $5^{\circ} 38' S.$, and long. $176^{\circ} 17' E.$ This is the last island in the Ellice group. As a call there would have taken us 50 miles to leeward of our course for the Gilbert Islands, we proceeded first to that group, and called at this island on our return south. But I will give my notice of it here, and finish up with this group before describing our work in the other.

"We reached Nanomea on Sunday morning, October 23. There are two islands within 3 or 4 miles of each other, connected by a reef, which is dry at low-water. The westerly island is named Lakena. It is nearly round, 2 miles or more across, well stocked with cocoa-nut and other trees, and has a deep fresh-water lagoon in its centre. The natives described it as being unfathomable; but by that they would only mean they cannot dive to the bottom. This and Quiros are the only two islands where I have found fresh-water lagoons. Lakena is not inhabited, but is used by the people on the other island for the cultivation of food. Nanomea is the name of the other island, which is about 4 miles long by 1 or 2 wide. It has a shallow salt-water lagoon towards the east end, partially open to the sea.

"The inhabitants of the island are, taken altogether, the finest race of men, so far as muscular development goes, I have ever seen. They are almost a race of giants. I believe nine out of every ten would measure six feet or more high, and their breadth is proportionate to their height.

"As a race the Ellice Islanders are very quiet and peaceable. Quarrels are rare, and ordinary disputes are settled by the authority of the king or chiefs. On some of the islands wars are unknown. An old man on Vaitupu brought me a hatchet made out of the back of a turtle, and I asked if it had ever been used in war. He replied that he had never heard of war at Vaitupu.

"Gilbert or Kingsmill Group.

"This group of islands lies between the parallels of about $4^{\circ} N.$ and $2^{\circ} 36' S.$ lat., and 172° and $178^{\circ} E.$ long. There are, I believe, sixteen islands in the group, nine to the north and seven to the south of the equator.

"Arorae (Hurd Island), in lat. $2^{\circ} 36' S.$, and long. $177^{\circ} E.$ —This island is from three to four miles long. At one end it is not more than half a mile across, at the other end it appeared from the ship to be a mile and a half broad. I was told there is a small lagoon at the wider end, but I had no time to visit it. From the number of houses, which are almost continuous for two and a half or three miles, one would suppose the population to be very great; but we only saw about four hundred, although we walked nearly the whole length over which the villages extended. The small number of people in comparison with the number of houses was soon accounted for. They had been taken away by what the natives themselves described as 'the men-stealing vessels.' We could not find out the number who had been 'stolen,' but some said there were 'many taken, and few remaining.' When we landed we found the people armed with knives and hatchets, while one man shouldered an old firelock, and had a revolver stuck in his belt. Our vessel was at first supposed to be a 'man-stealing ship,' and the poor creatures had determined to defend themselves against their 'civilized' assailants. As we were approaching the shore in our boat a canoe met us, and we informed the men of the object of our visit. One of them had been to a Christian island, and knew there was no harm to fear from a missionary ship, so the canoe preceded our boat to the shore, and carried the news of our peaceful and friendly intentions.

"Tamana (Rotch Island), in lat. $2^{\circ} 30' S.$, and long. $176^{\circ} 7' E.$, was the next island at which we called. It is not more than two and a half or three miles long, and from one to two miles wide. There is no lagoon. The island is well supplied with cocoa-nut palms and pandanus, and although it was suffering from drought when we were there, there seemed to be no lack of food. Good water is procured in abundance by sinking wells in the centre of the island. Many of the people were away working at their plantations when we were there; but I estimated the number of those we saw at about 600. All the males were naked, as on Arorae. We found a very bitter feeling existing against 'men-stealing vessels,' and especially against those from Tahiti.

"Onatoa (Francis Island), in lat. $1^{\circ} 56' S.$, and long. $175^{\circ} 44' E.$, was sighted before dark on the same day (October 19), and we were off one end of it early next morning. This is an atoll, with a number of islands partially surrounding a lagoon eight or ten miles across. Besides this large lagoon, there are several small shallow lagoons in various parts of the larger islands. Where we landed there was very little soil. The cocoa-nut and pandanus trees grow out of the sand, but on other parts there is more soil, and the people said they had plenty of food. When we were there they had been several months without rain, and the vegetation was very much parched up.

"Peru, in lat. $1^{\circ} 18' S.$, and long. $176^{\circ} E.$ —This is an island several miles long, and varying from half a mile to a mile or more wide. It is not an atoll like most of the islands we visited, but there are several shallow lagoons in it, some very small, surrounded by the land, and dry at low tide, others larger and open on one side to the reef which runs round the island. The island itself is formed of successive ridges of sand, broken coral, and shells. These ridges are most of them from 30 to 50 feet across, and the hollows formed between them are generally from 4 to 6 feet in depth. For some distance, at that end of the island which I examined, they run across, and in the middle they run parallel with the sides of the island. The whole extent examined presented the same appearance, and the ridges were so regular that they gave one the idea of being artificially formed. The waves must exert a mighty force during heavy weather to form these extensive ridges. There is little doubt but each ridge is the result of a single storm. I have already referred, in the notice of Atafu, in the Tokelau group, to a similar ridge of smaller dimensions which was thrown up during the present year; and I have seen several small islands of broken coral and shells, which were formed on the reefs in Samoa during a hurricane of a few hours' duration.

"The productions of Peru are in every respect similar to those of other islands in the group. The natives appear to value the pandanus even more than the cocoa-nut palm. They consume immense quantities of the fruit raw; and the variety which they cultivate in the Gilbert group (which is much superior to that found in the Ellice Islands, and immeasurably superior to the kind cultivated in Samoa) produces a very palatable fruit. The women prepare a kind of cake by baking the fruit till it becomes soft; they then pound a large number together in a fine mat, and spread the prepared pulp in cakes 2 or 3 feet wide by 6 or 8 long and one-sixth of an inch thick. The whole is then dried in the sun, and made into a roll like an ancient manuscript. This keeps for a length of time, and tastes something like old dates.

"Peru was the last island in the Gilbert group which we visited. We had information from Tapeteuea (Drummond Island), the nearest island to Peru, that the Sandwich Island missionaries were already there; and we concluded that they had also occupied another island to the north of Drummond Island, but on the south of the equator, about which we had no information. Only one other island remained, viz., Nukunau (Byron Island), which lies considerably to the east of Peru. As this was directly to windward of us, and would have been a dead beat, we made no attempt to go there this year."

PHENIX GROUP.

This group consists of seven or eight small low coral islands, extending from lat. 2° 53' to 5° 38' S., and from long. 170° 40' to 174° 22' W. Their names are Swallow Island, Enderbury's Island, Birney's Island, Gardner or Kemin's Island, M'Kean's Island, Hull Island, and Sydney Island.

The following were visited by Commodore Wilkes, from whose description of them the particulars here given are taken:—

Kemin's or Gardner Island, in 4° 37' 42" S., long. 174° 40' 18" W., is a low coral island, having a shallow lagoon in the centre, into which there is no navigable passage.

McKean's Island is in long. 174° 17' 26" W., and lat. 3° 35' 10" S., and lies about N.N.E., 60 miles from Kemin's Island. It is composed of coral, sand, and blocks, and is three-quarters of a mile long by half a mile wide.

Enderbury's Island is in lat. 3° 8' S., long. 171° 8' 30" W. It is 3 miles long by 2½ wide, and is only covered in parts with a stunted vegetation.

Hull Island lies in long. 172° 20' 52" W., and lat. 4° 29' 48" S. It has a little fresh-water upon it, and a few cocoa-nut trees.

SANDWICH OR HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

Sandwich or Hawaiian Islands, forming the Kingdom of Hawaii, are a rich, beautiful, and interesting chain, eight in number, exclusive of one or two small islets. The chain runs from south-east to north-west, and lies in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, in lat. 19° 22' N., long. 155° 160' W.

Area, 6,000 square miles. The names, with the areas of the respective islands, proceeding from the south-east of the group, are—Hawaii (formerly Owhyee), 4,000 square miles; Maui, 620; Oahu, 530; Kauai, 500; Molokai, 167; Lanai, 100; Niihau, about 70; and Kahoolau, about 60 square miles.

Population.—The official census of 1866 puts the total population of the group at 62,959 souls, of whom 4,194 were foreigners (exclusive of Chinamen), and 58,765 natives.

Imports in 1871, $1,625,884, £325,176.

Exports in 1871, $1,892,069, £378,413. Sugar continues to be the great staple of this group of islands, and shows an advance of 2,977,034 lbs. over last year, the whole export of 1871 having amounted to 21,660,773 lbs.

Shipping.—There were fifty-seven Hawaiian registered vessels, of 8,068 tons, one of them a steamer of 414 tons; 163 merchant vessels, of the united tonnage of 102,172 tons, arrived at the port of Honolulu in 1871, from all parts of the world; of these, eighty-nine, of 65,112 tons, were American; forty-four, of 24,267 tons, were British.

Government.—In 1840 the King, Kamehameha III, granted a Constitution, consisting of King, Assembly of Nobles, and Representative Council. In 1843 the independence of the Hawaiian Kingdom was formally declared by the French and English Governments.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Area, 3,100 geographical square miles, or 65,100 English square miles.

Population, 4,319,269.

Total exports to Great Britain in 1871 were of the value of £1,391,254.

Imports of British produce, value £463,359.

The chief article of exports in 1871 was unrefined sugar, of the value of £604,114. Of the imports in 1871 the value of £290,203, or considerably more than one-half, was represented by cotton manufactures. The commercial intercourse between the Philippine Islands, as well as the rest of the colonial possessions of Spain and the United Kingdom, has been steadily declining for a number of years.

CAROLINE ISLANDS AND PELEW ISLANDS.

Area, 43.1 geographical square miles, or 905 English square miles.

Population, 28,000.

PELEW ISLANDS.

A group of islands in the North Pacific Ocean, 450 miles east of the Philippines, in lat. 7° to 8° 30' N., long. 134° to 136° E., at the western extremity of the Caroline Archipelago. The group includes about twenty islands, which form a chain running about 120 miles, from S.S.W. to N.N.E. The principal island island is Babelthouap, 28 miles by 14, containing a mountain from whose summit a view of the whole group is obtained. As seen from the sea the islands appear mountainous and rugged; but the soil is rich and fertile, and water is abundant. Bread-fruit, cocoa-nuts, bananas, sugar-cane, lemons, oranges, and other tropical trees and fruits, are grown. Cattle, fowls, and goats thrive, and fish abound on the coasts. The inhabitants, who are estimated at about 10,000 in number, are of the Malay race. They show considerable ingenuity in building their canoes, are active agriculturists, and entertain exceedingly primitive notions regarding dress, as the men go entirely naked, and the women nearly so. In 1783 the "Antelope" was wrecked upon the Pelew Islands, and the crew were treated by the natives with the greatest kindness. Further acquaintance with white men, however, seems to have altered their disposition, and several vessels, while visiting these islands, within comparatively recent years, have narrowly escaped being cut off. The islands are said to have been discovered by the Spaniards in 1545.

LADRONES ISLANDS.

A group of about twenty islands, the northernmost Australasian group, in lat. $13\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ to $20\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ N., and long. $145\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ to 147° E. They are disposed in a row, almost due north and south. Their united area is about 1,254 square miles. They are mountainous, well watered and wooded. Among the trees are the bread-fruit, banana, the cocoa-nut; fruitful in rice, maize, cotton, and indigo. European domestic animals are now very common. At the time when they were discovered the population was reckoned at 100,000, but the present population is only about 5,500. The inhabitants, who are docile, religious, kind, and hospitable, resemble in physiognomy those of the Philippine Islands. The islands are very important to the Spaniards in a commercial point of view. The largest island is Guajan, 90 miles in circumference; on it is the capital, San Ignacio de Agamea, the seat of the Spanish Governor.

GALAPAGOS ISLANDS.

The Galapagos Islands are a group lying on the equator, extending $1\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ on each side of it, and about 600 miles from the west coast of the Republic of Ecuador, to which they belong.

There are six principal islands, nine smaller, and many islets, scarcely deserving to be distinguished from mere rocks. The largest island, Albemarle, is 60 miles in length and about 15 miles broad, the highest point being 4,700 feet above the level of the sea. The constitution of the whole is volcanic. With the exception of some ejected fragments of granite, which have been most curiously glazed and altered by the heat, every part consists of lava, or of sandstone resulting from the attrition of such materials. The higher islands generally have one or more principal craters towards their centre, and in their flanks smaller orifices. Mr. Darwin affirms that there must be, in all the islands of the archipelago, at least 2,000 craters. Considering that these islands are placed directly under the equator, the climate is far from being excessively hot—a circumstance which, perhaps, is chiefly owing to the singularly low temperature of the surrounding sea.

JAVA.

Area of Java, including Madura, is 51,336 English square miles.

Population, according to census of 1871, 16,452,168, or 320 per square mile. The population has nearly quadrupled since the year 1816.

Imports in 1870, merchandise £3,704,229
Do. specie 197,413

£3,902,341

Exports in 1870, merchandise £5,102,353
Do. specie 361,830

£5,464,183

The principal articles of export from Java are sugar, coffee, rice, indigo, and tobacco. With the exception of rice, about one-half of which is shipped from Borneo and China, nearly four-fifths of these exports go to the Netherlands.

The exports from Java to the United Kingdom in 1871 consisted principally of rice, of the value of £383,757. The chief articles of British home produce imported into Java in 1871 was cottons, including cotton yarns, of the value of £600,866. The exports from Java to the United Kingdom have increased enormously during the past few years, having risen from the value of £13,773 in 1867 to £470,235 in 1871. The total exports from Java to the United Kingdom in 1871 were valued at £470,234.

The total value of British home produce into Java in 1871 was £826,476.

Shipping.—There are 420 vessels of all sizes registered in Netherlands India.

Cinchona cultivation in Java, under the special care of the Government, is increasing yearly.

CEYLON.

Area, 24,454 square miles.

The total population, according to the census of March, 1872, was 2,405,287. Of the total population in 1870, 2,128,884, including 2,847 military, 4,732 were British, 14,201 other whites of European descent, and the rest coloured.

Total value of imports in 1871, £4,797,952.

Total value of exports in 1871, £3,634,358.

The staple exports are coffee, cinnamon, cocoa-nut oil, and coir, the respective values of which articles exported in 1871 were—

Coffee	£2,432,427
Cinnamon	68,410
Cocoa-nut oil	257,770
Coir	45,448

The greatest part of the exports go to the United Kingdom.

The great bulk of the imports are from the United Kingdom and from British possessions in India.

MAURITIUS.

Area, 676 square miles.

Population, census, April, 1871, 316,042.

Total value of imports in 1871, deducting specie, £1,807,382.

Total value of exports in 1871, deducting specie, £3,053,054.

The principal article of export is sugar. In 1871 the quantity exported was 123,000 tons, valued at £2,819,344. Average price per cwt., £1 2s. 7d.

The Mauritius has several small dependencies between lat. 3° and 20° S., and long. 50° and 70° E. The chief of these is the Seychelles Islands, between lat. 4° and 5°, about 930 miles north from the Mauritius, one of which, Mahé, is 16 miles long by from 3 to 4 miles broad, fertile, well watered, very healthy, and having a population of about 7,000. Mahé, its chief town, has on its north-east side about 100 wooden houses and a garrison of thirty men.

Seychelles, a dependency of Mauritius. The staple article of export is cocoa-nut oil. The quantity exported in 1871 was 253,370 gallons.

The total value of imports, 1871, was £61,780.

The total value of exports, 1871, was £40,598.

Revenue in 1871, £9,787.

Total expenditure in 1871, £8,035.

LABUAN.

Area, 45 square miles.

Population, 4,898.

Total imports in 1870, £122,983.

Total exports in 1870, £61,218.

The chief articles of export, the produce of the island, or brought into the island from Borneo for exportation, are bees'-wax, birds'-nests, camphor, coals, gutta-percha, india-rubber, hides, pearls, seed-pearls, rattans, sago, tortoise-shell, and trepang.

BORNEO (BRUNEI).

The population of the town of Brunei is a branch of the Malay race, and is estimated to number between 30,000 and 40,000 people.

The trade is conducted with Labuan, Singapore, and places on the coast of Borneo.

The value of exports from Brunei in 1871 was roughly put down at between £40,000 and £50,000, and the imports at £46,000 or £47,000.

THE NAVIGATORS GROUP.

REPORT BY MR. SEED.

Sir,

Custom-house, Wellington, 13th February, 1872.

I have the honor to state that, in obedience to your instructions, I left Auckland on the evening of the 30th December last, by the mail steamer "Nevada," for the Navigators Islands, and reached that group at 3 a.m. on the 6th ultimo. The steamer, without anchoring, stopped off the eastern end of Tutuila, and sent a boat on shore to land me at Pango Pango Harbour. It was dark when we left the steamer, but daylight dawned just as the boat approached the shore at the native settlement at the head of the harbour. The natives, on hearing us, turned out in considerable numbers, and rushed into the water to drag the boat on shore and to assist us in landing. Very soon afterwards the sun rose and revealed to us the full beauties of the tropical scenery by which we were surrounded. Cocoa-nut palms, bread-fruit, bananas, oranges, limes, native chestnuts, and other trees covered the small flat on which the native village stood, and extended close down to the beach. Dotted about here and there in the shade of these trees were the natives' houses, and a little distance in rear of the village the ground rose rather abruptly towards the high, bush-covered hills that surrounded the harbour.

I had been led to believe that the language of the natives was very similar to that of the New Zealanders; and I was disappointed at finding that, though a dialect of the same Polynesian language, it was so difficult that I was unable to carry on conversation with them. This was the more perplexing, as the resident missionary, the Rev. Mr. Powell, to whom I had letters of introduction, was absent, and had been so for several months. Fortunately one or two of the natives spoke a little English, and came to my assistance.

assistance. They conveyed me to the house of the chief, Maunga, who welcomed me most courteously, and requested me to take up my quarters with him. I at once accepted his offer, hoping that I should soon find some European settler who would be able to assist me in getting about the islands. My anxiety on this head was soon relieved by the arrival in the course of the morning of a white settler of the name of Hunkin, who, it appears, had boarded the "Nevada" outside, and had been urged by Captain Blethen to communicate with me as soon as possible, with a view of facilitating my movements. Mr. Hunkin offered to assist me in any way he could, and I gladly availed myself of his services. He informed me that he had been a settler on the Navigators for the last thirty-five years, and had acted as British Vice-Consul for a considerable part of that time. I am indebted to him for much of the information I acquired, especially respecting the natives, with whose customs and traditions he is acknowledged to be better acquainted than any other European in the group. In the afternoon I accompanied him to his place at Tafuna, a few miles to the westward of Pango Pango, where I stayed for the night, and on the following day started for Leone, the principal town of Tutuila, where I was detained for a week waiting for a fair wind to Upolu, the next island to the westward, on which there is the port of Apia, where most of the European settlers reside. Early on the 15th January I left Tutuila by a whaleboat, and reached Apia on the following morning. The distance from Tutuila to the eastern end of Upolu is 36 miles, thence to Apia is about 20 miles further. The British, American, and German Consuls reside at Apia, as it is the centre of trade, and altogether the most important place at present in the whole group. Immediately after my arrival I placed myself in communication with Mr. Williams, the British Consul, who showed me every attention in his power, and supplied me with much valuable information. I called on the American Consul and on the German Consul, both of whom courteously furnished me with every information on various points. Mr. Weber, the German Consul, is the representative of the large mercantile firm of Messrs. Goddefroy and Sons, of Hamburg, who for many years past have had in their hands almost the whole trade of the group. I was unable to procure exact returns of this trade, but that it must be very large is shown conclusively by the fact that from ten to twelve large ships are despatched each year from Apia with full cargoes. These cargoes, however, are not composed exclusively of local produce. Messrs. Goddefroy have trading stations in other parts of the Pacific, and employ small vessels to bring the produce to Apia for shipment. Some of the large vessels occasionally leave Apia and fill up for Europe at ports in the adjacent groups. They have always, throughout the year, one or two large vessels loading for home, and have four brigs trading to Sydney, and five or six small vessels of from 40 to 140 tons trading regularly between Apia and the Solomon Islands, Friendly Islands, Savage Islands, Peru Island, and other islands in the Pacific, where their agents are stationed. The produce brought by these vessels is beche de mer, cocoa-nut oil, and cobra, which is shipped direct to Hamburg. Whilst I was at Apia they had five or six square-rigged vessels lying in port.

I expected to have been able to return from Upolu by one of the small trading schooners, but found that there was no probability of one going to Tutuila for a considerable time. I therefore determined to return by the whaleboat by which I came, and accordingly left Apia on the evening of the 19th January, reached Ulotongea (at the eastern end of Upolu) by daylight next morning, and about 11 o'clock started for Tutuila with a light leading wind, which died away before we were half-way across, and caused us to make a long and tedious passage. We landed at a harbour called Masefau, on the northern side of Tutuila, and the following day proceeded to the small island of Aunu'u, where, by arrangement with Captain Blethen, I was to wait for the steamer. As I was detained at Aunu'u nine days, I took the opportunity of paying a second visit to Pango Pango Harbour, and had the pleasure of meeting the Rev. Mr. Powell, who had returned to his station a few days previously. He treated me with great kindness, and supplied me with much interesting information.

The "Nevada" arrived off Aunu'u on the night of the 30th January, and I returned by her to New Zealand, reaching Auckland on the 17th instant.

Having referred to the various localities I visited, I now proceed to give a general description of the whole group, and to remark upon such points as appear to me to be specially interesting.

Samoa is the native name of the Navigators Islands. The group is situated in the Pacific Ocean, between the meridians of 169° 24' and 172° 50' west longitude, and between the parallels of 13° 30' and 14° 30' south latitude. There are ten inhabited islands, extending from Ta'u, the easternmost, to Savaii, the most western island—viz., Ta'u, Olosenga, Of'u, Aunu'u, Tutuila, Nuutele, Upolu, Manono, and Savaii. The native population is from 33,000 to 34,000. The islands were surveyed by the United States Exploring Expedition in 1839. Commodore Wilkes, in his narrative of that expedition, states that they contain 1,650 square miles, divided as follows, viz. :—

Savaii	700	Apolima...	7
Upolu	560	Manu'a	100
Tutuila	240	Olosenga	24
Manono	9	Of'u	10

The principal islands, it will be seen, are Savaii, Upolu, and Tutuila. Savaii, which I was unable to visit, is the largest island. The following description of it is quoted from the work mentioned above :—

"Savaii is the most western island of the Samoan group, and is also the largest, being 40 miles in length and 20 in breadth. It is not, however, as populous or as important as several of the others. It differs from any of the others in its appearance, for its shore is low, and the ascent thence to the centre is gradual, except where the cones of a few extinct craters are seen. In the middle of the island a peak rises, which is almost continually enveloped in the clouds, and is the highest land in the group. On account of these clouds angles could not be taken for determining its height accurately, but it certainly exceeds 4,000 feet.

Another marked difference between Savaii and the other large islands is the want of any permanent streams, a circumstance which may be explained, notwithstanding the frequency of rain, by the porous nature of the rock (vesicular lava) of which it is chiefly composed. Water, however, gushes out near the shore in copious springs; and, when heavy and continued rains have occurred, streams are formed in the ravines, but these soon disappear after the rains have ceased.

"The coral reef attached to this island is interrupted to the south and west, where the surf beats full upon the rocky shore. There are, in consequence, but few places where boats can land, and only one harbour for ships, that of Mataatua: even this is unsafe from November to February, when the north-westerly gales prevail."

"The

"The soil is fertile, and was composed, in every part of the island that was visited, of decomposed volcanic rock and vegetable mould."

Upolu is 10 miles to the eastward of Savaii, and is next in size. It is about 40 miles long and 13 miles broad. It has a main range extending from east to west, broken here and there into sharp peaks and hummocks. From this main ridge a number of smaller ridges and broad gradual slopes run down to a low shore, which is encircled by a coral reef, interrupted here and there by channels which form the entrances to safe and convenient anchorages for small vessels. At Apia the reef extends across a good-sized bay, and forms a safe and commodious harbour for large ships, which is entered through a deep and clear channel formed by a break in the reef.

Between Savaii and Upolu are two small islands. At the south-east end of Tutuila there is the small island of Aunu'u, and 60 miles to the east of this lies Manu'a. The following description of these islands is taken from an account of the Samoan group, published in 1868, by the Rev. Mr. Powell, in the Chronicle of the London Missionary Society :—

"The first island that comes in sight of voyagers arriving from the eastward is Ta'u (Ta-'oo), the largest of the three islands that constitute the group which the natives call Manu'a (Ma-noo-a). It is about 6 miles long, $4\frac{1}{2}$ broad, and 16 in circumference, and contains 100 square miles.

"About 6 miles west of Ta'u is the island of Olosenga (O-la-say-nga). This is a very rocky island, 3 miles long, 500 yards wide, and about 1,500 feet high. It contains 24 square miles. It is precipitous on every side—least so on the north-east, most on the north and south-west. On the latter side, about 200 feet from the shore, rises up a mural precipice 1,200 feet high. The principal village is situated, in times of peace, on the strip of land in front of this precipice. In times of war the people live on the mountain.

"About $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles off the eastern point of the island a volcanic eruption burst out from the deep ocean in September, 1866.

"Of'u (O-foo), the smallest of the three islands included in the Manu'an group, is neither so high nor so precipitous as Olosenga. It is separated from the latter by only a narrow, shallow strait, about a $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile wide. A double-pointed crag off its eastern extremity, together with the precipitous, craggy nature of Olosenga, give to the neighbourhood a remarkably romantic appearance.

"The population of the Manu'an group is about 1,500.

"Annu'u, 60 miles west of Of'u is the island of Tutuila (Too-too-ee-la). A mile from Tutuila, off its south-east point, is the little island of Aunu'u (Au-noo'oo). This island is about 5 miles in circumference. Population, 200.

"Manono: 2 miles from the western point of Upolu, and encircled by its reef, is the island of Manono (Ma-no-no). It is nearly of triangular shape, and less than 5 miles in circumference. It contains 9 square miles. It has a mountain a few hundred feet high, from whose summit can be obtained a splendid view of Upolu and Savaii. It is itself 'one entire garden, in looking at which the eye can scarcely tire.' It has a population of about 1,000. This island held a very extensive political supremacy over Upolu till the war of 1847-54, in which she lost supremacy, and was obliged to take her place on a level with those over whom she formerly exercised much despotic power.

"Apolima (A-po-lee-ma) is about 2 miles from Manono. It is a crater somewhat resembling a horseshoe, while its depth may well suggest the idea of the hand with the fingers contracted, which is the meaning of the name. Its highest part is 472 feet above the sea. The population is about 200."

Tutuila, the easternmost and smallest of the three principal islands, is 36 miles distant from Upolu. It is 17 miles long, and its greatest width is 5 miles. The total native population of Tutuila is about 4,000. The land is generally mountainous, with steep, sharp-edged ridges, rising here and there into lofty peaks, the highest of which (that of Matafae) is 2,327 feet above the sea, and forms a prominent landmark for the excellent harbour of Pango Pango. As the existence of this harbour so greatly enhances the importance of the Navigator's Islands, and as a description of it by a nautical man will be more valuable than any account of it I could give, I quote the following from a report by Captain Wakeman, an experienced master-mariner, who was recently deputed by Mr. Webb to visit Tutuila and ascertain whether this harbour would be a suitable place for a coaling station for his steamers :—

"At daylight I found myself in the most perfectly land-locked harbour that exists in the Pacific Ocean. In approaching this harbour from the south, either by night or day, the mariner has unmistakable landmarks to conduct him into port; one on the port hand, a high, peaked, conical mountain, 2,327 feet high, and on the starboard hand a flat-topped mountain, 1,470 feet in height, which keep sentinel on either hand. These landmarks can never be mistaken by the mariner. The entrance to the harbour is $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile in width, between Tower Rock, on the port side, and Breaker Point, on the starboard hand, with soundings of 36 fathoms. A little more than 1 mile from Breaker Point, on the starboard hand, to Goat Island, on the port hand, we open out the inner harbour, which extends 1 mile west, at a breadth of 3,000 feet abreast of Goat Island, to 1,100 feet at the head of the bay, carrying soundings from 18 fathoms to 6 fathoms at the head of the bay. The reefs which skirt the shore are from 200 feet to 300 feet wide, almost awash at low water. They have, at their edge, from 4 fathoms to 5, 6 and 8 fathoms, and deeper in the middle of the harbour. The hills rise abruptly around this bay from 800 to 1,000 feet in height. . . . There is nothing to prevent a steamer, night or day, from proceeding to her wharf. About half-way from Breaker Point to Goat Island, and near mid-channel, is Whale Rock, with 8 feet of water over it at low sea. It has a circumference of about 50 feet, and breaks frequently. A buoy renders this danger harmless. The services of a pilot can never be required by any one who has visited this port before, as the trade-winds from E.S.E. carry a vessel from near Breaker Point with a free sheet in a N.N.W. course into the harbour. It follows that vessels under canvas will have to work out, which in the ebb tide, with the trades, will generally be accomplished in a few tacks. The trouble is that a ship close into the reefs goes in stays, and frequently the whirlwinds off the high land baffle her a few points and prevent her tacking properly aback, whence a boat is kept ahead ready to tow her round upon the right tack. Mr. Powell, a missionary, has been a resident of this place twenty-two years, and says that he never knew of a longer detention than nine days to any ships in that time, and of but one gale, which came from the eastward, and unroofed a wing of his kitchen. Even the trades themselves are frequently liable to haul from E.S.E. to E.N.E., giving a ship a chance to get out with a leading wind. At the different quarters of the moon the tides rises $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet. . . . On the top of the little island of Aunu'u, to the east of Tutuila, at an elevation of 600 feet, a sight for a light-house has been secured, as it can can be seen alike from the north or south, and is right in a line with the ship's course in passing. Being only 7 miles from the entrance to Pango Pango Bay or Harbour, the ships could pick up the port lights, and go in immediately to the wharf, in the darkest night. There are several fine harbours for schooners on both sides of Tutuila.

Savaii and Opolu contain the largest extent of flat land; fully two-thirds of their area, about 500,000 acres, are fit for cultivation. Tutuila is more mountainous than Savaii and Opolu; probably not more than one-third of its area, or about 50,000 acres, would be fit for cultivation; but it has a great advantage over the neighbouring islands in the possession of the excellent harbour of Pango Pango, described above. The whole group is of volcanic origin. Craters of extinct volcanoes are seen at various points. Some of the small islands of the group are composed of a single large crater rising abruptly from the sea. The soil on all the islands is exceedingly rich, and everywhere covered with dense vegetation, from the water's edge up to the tops of the mountains. The high mountain ridges, extending through the middle of the larger islands, attract the passing clouds, which furnish a copious and never-failing supply of moisture, and feed the numerous streams of beautiful clear water that abound in every direction.

The climate is mild and agreeable; the temperature generally ranges between 70° and 80°, but the heat is greatly subdued by the breezes that are constantly blowing. Mr. Williams, the British Consul, kept a meteorological register, for the Board of Trade, from 1860 to 1865, from which I made an abstract of the mean recorded temperature in every month in the year 1864. (Copy of this abstract is appended hereto.) The south-east trades blow steadily from April to October, being strongest in June and July. From November to March westerly winds frequently blow, but not for any length of time together. A strong gale may generally be looked for some time in January, but frequently an entire year will pass without a severe gale. February, as a rule, is fine, with variable winds. March is usually the worst and most boisterous month in the year, the winds being still variable, and gales occurring from north to north-west. Copious rains fall from the beginning of December to March. June and July are the coolest, and September and October the hottest months, although it will be seen, from the abstract above referred to, that there is very little variation in the temperature throughout the year. Hence the growth of vegetation goes on without check all the year round. Cotton and Indian corn yield three crops a year. I saw some of the latter gathered in the middle of January, which had been sown at the beginning of last October: thus it was planted and the crop gathered within four months. The taro also comes to maturity in four months, and is planted continuously all the year round. When the natives take up the taro they cut off the top, make a hole in the ground with a stick, into which the top is thrust without the ground being dug over or in any way prepared. A short time after it is planted they clean the ground, and mulch between the plants with grass and leaves to keep down the seeds. Bananas yield ripe fruit nine months after planting; some of the introduced varieties come to maturity in six months. This fruit attains a great size, especially the indigenous varieties, some of which I measured, and found to be 8 inches long and 9 inches in circumference.

Samoa is very rarely visited by the destructive hurricanes that so frequently sweep across most of the groups in the Pacific. In December, 1840, there was a severe gale, but scarcely what could be called a hurricane. In April, 1850, a hurricane occurred, when two ships and a schooner were wrecked at Apia. For twenty years after this—that is, up to 1870—the islands were entirely free from hurricanes; but four or five heavy gales occurred during that period. These hurricanes, when they occur, are often very local; sometimes they visit one island, leaving the others untouched; for instance, in January, 1870, a cyclone swept over Tutuila, but did not reach the other islands.

The following are the principal productions of the group: Cocoanuts, cotton, native chestnuts (Inocarpus edulis), candlenuts, bananas, mountain plantains, oranges, lemons, limes, citrons, shaddocks, pineapples, mangoes guavas, Malay apples, rose-apples, custard-apples, pawpaws, tamarinds, bread-fruit, yams, taro, pumpkins, melons, sweet potatoes, arrowroot, ginger, wild nutmeg, sugarcane, mandioc or sweet casava, indigo, coffee, Indian corn, tobacco, chilis, vi (Spondias dulcis), medicinal plants, several trees with very fragrant blossoms that might be used for the preparation of scents, some that exude aromatic gum, and others that furnish very handsome and durable wood, suitable for cabinet-ware and furniture.

There are two cotton plantations on Upolu, of from 200 to 300 acres each, belonging to Messrs. Goddefroy, and several smaller ones, belonging to other Europeans. Both the Sea Island and kidney cotton grow most luxuriantly, and bear well. When planted in March the first crop is ready for picking in July. The first year of planting there are two crops, one in July and one in September or October; in succeeding years three crops may be picked.

The chief article of export is cobra, which is the kernel of the cocoanut cut into small pieces and dried in the sun. The preparation of cocoanut oil has been almost entirely given up by the natives, as they find that they can get a more rapid and certain return for their labour by the simple process of preparing cobra. The oil is now expressed from the cobra on its reaching Europe. The trade mostly in request by the natives is white and printed calicos (which are known by the general name of "cloth," and are used by both sexes as lava-lavas or waist-cloths), gay-coloured cotton handkerchiefs, butcher's knives, and American axes. The knives most approved of are large heavy ones of about 14 or 16 inches in length, which the natives use for all purposes. Soap, sewing-cotton, and small fish-hooks come next. Double-barrelled guns, powder, lead, and shot are also in great demand just at present. It is alleged that since the introduction of fire-arms the loss of life in the native wars is much less than it used to be formerly, when they fought only with clubs and spears at close quarters, as the combatants observe great caution in approaching each other, from fear of the guns, and both sides commence firing a long way out of range.

The British Consul puts down the European population as under:—

British subjects	250
Subjects of the United States of America	45
Germans, Spaniards, Portuguese, and others	150
							445

This must include the half-castes, for I am satisfied, from inquiries I made from old residents and others best able to give information on this point, that the foreign residents do not reach the number here given. I believe there are altogether about 250 Europeans on the group, most of whom are English.

The

The following statistics of imports, exports, and shipping, for the last five years were supplied to me by the British Consul:—

Year.	Imports. Value.	Exports. Value.
1867	£36,600	£40,598
1868	37,200	38,020
1869	35,992	32,500
1870	42,800	25,600
1871	25,000	45,000

The imports in 1871 were less than in previous years on account of the large stocks that were on hand; the increase in exports was caused by the natives pouring in all the produce they could gather for the purpose of purchasing arms and ammunition for a war that was going on between two of the tribes.

The arrivals of shipping were as under:—

	No. of Ships.	Tonnage.
1867.—British	26	5,951
Foreign	31	3,800
		9,791
1868.—British	34	8,038
United States of America	5	3,072
German	24	3,875
Tahitian	2	159
		15,144
1869.—British	29	4,402
United States of America	3	3,690

In 1871 four ships of war visited Apia, namely, one British, one American, one French, and one Russian.

Referring to the trade of Samoa, Mr. Williams, in his last consular report to the British Government, states that "The imports are from the Australian Colonies and Hamburg: the greater part, however, are of British manufacture. About one-third of the exports are shipped to the Colonies, and go thence to England; two-thirds to Hamburg direct, being shipped by the representatives of the German firm, Messrs. Goddefroy & Sons.

"In 1858 the business of these islands was in the hands of two British merchants, one German house, and one American. In 1870 six British merchants and traders were established in Apia, besides a number of small agencies; one German house, with several out-stations and agencies; and three American houses, with their agencies."

Large tracts of land are being sold by the natives to the foreign residents. Upwards of 70,000 acres have already been disposed of, principally on Upolu. The price paid has been from 4s. to £1 per acre; but where the land is near the sea-shore, and covered with bread-fruit and cocoa-nuts, it has fetched as much as £2 and £3 an acre.

Whilst enumerating the advantages possessed by the Navigator's group it is only right to point out that these islands, like all other tropical countries, are not free from certain drawbacks. Chief of these is the prevalence of elephantiasis, from which disease the foreign residents are not exempt. They are not usually attacked by it for several years after their arrival, and some have remained free from it after a lengthy residence; but most of the old settlers suffer more or less from it in some shape or other. Opinion varies very much as to the cause of the disease; some say that it is caused by incautiously lying about in the bush in wet weather; others, that it arises from the constant and almost exclusive use of vegetable diet; whilst others say it results from the malaria that must constantly arise from decaying vegetation. Many of the residents think that the moderate use of stimulants averts this disorder, and it is generally believed that quinine is an excellent remedy for it. At some parts of the islands, especially in damp, low-lying situations, the inhabitants are more affected by it than they are in others, whilst on the small island of Aunu'u they are entirely exempt from it.

Flies and mosquitoes are very numerous, and are particularly annoying and troublesome, especially to strangers; but they will probably disappear, to a great extent, when wider clearings are made in the dense vegetation that everywhere surrounds the towns and villages.

The Samoan natives are a fine, tall, handsome race, of a light-brown colour. They are docile, truthful, and hospitable, and are very lively and vivacious. In conversation among themselves and in their intercourse with foreigners they are exceedingly courteous and polite. They have different styles of salutation, corresponding with the social rank of the persons addressed. For instance, in addressing the chiefs or distinguished strangers they use the expression Lau-Afio, or "Your Majesty." In speaking to chiefs of lower rank they address them as Lau Susu, as we would use the words "Your Lordship." To chiefs of lower degree than those who are thus addressed the term Ala-ala is used; and to the common people the salutation is Omai or Sau, simply meaning "You have arrived," or "You are here."

The men only tattoo, and not on their faces, as the New Zealanders do, but on their bodies, from the waist to the knee, entirely black for the most part, except where relieved here and there by graceful stripes and patterns. At a short distance this tattooing gives them the appearance of having on black knee-breeches.

knee-breeches. The clothing of both sexes is a piece of calico or native cloth wound round the waist and reaching to the knees. Some of the women wear a couple of coloured cotton handkerchiefs, in the shape of a narrow poncho, over their breasts and shoulders, and hanging loosely down to below the waist. When in the bush, or working in their taro plantations, or when fishing, they wear a kilt of the long handsome leaves of the ti (Dracæna terminalis). They have a kind of fine mat, plaited of fine strips of the leaves of a plant called lau-ie. These mats are only used on important occasions, and they esteem them more highly than any European commodity. Some of them are quite celebrated, having names that are known all over the group—the older they are the more they are valued. The oldest one known is called moe-c-fui-fui, meaning “the mat that slept among the creepers.” This name was given to it from the circumstance of its having been hidden away among the creeping kind of convolvulus that grows on the shore; it is known to be over 200 years old, as the names of its owners during that time can be traced down. The best mats are made at Manu’a. They are the most coveted property a native can possess, no labour or enterprise being considered too great to secure them. Both men and women spend a deal of time in dressing their hair, and frequently apply lime to it, which is laid on in a liquid state, about the consistency of cream, and has the effect of turning the hair to a reddish hue. Both men and women frequently wear flowers in their hair, generally a single blossom of the beautiful scarlet hibiscus, which is always found growing near their houses. Nature has supplied them so bountifully with food, in the shape of cocoa-nuts, bread-fruit, bananas, native chestnuts, and other wild fruits, and the taro yields them an abundant crop with so little cultivation, that they have no necessity to exert themselves much, and they are therefore little inclined to industry, and probably will never be induced to undertake steady labour of any kind. Their houses are neat, substantial structures, generally circular in shape, with high-pitched conical roofs, supported in the centre by two or three stout posts, and open all round, but fitted with narrow mats made of cocoanut leaves, which are strung together like Venetian blinds, and can be let down in stormy weather. The Samoans are very expert in the management of their canoes, of which they have five different kinds—the a-lia or large double canoes, some of which are capable of carrying 200 men; the tau-mua-lua, from 30 to 50 feet long (these were first made about seventeen years ago, and are fashioned after the model of our whaleboats); the va alo, or fishing canoes, with outrigger (these are a most beautiful little craft, and very fast; they look exactly like our modern clipper ships, and probably furnished the model from which they were designed); then there is the soatua outrigger dug-out canoe, capable of carrying five or six people; and lastly, the paopao, a smaller dug-out canoe, for one person.

The natives are all professed Christians. Christianity was first introduced into Samoa in August, 1830, by the father of the present British Consul, the Rev. J. Williams, who landed a number of native teachers from Tahiti. A few years afterwards, about 1835, five English missionaries, belonging to the London Missionary Society, landed on the islands, and from that time to the present several Congregational missionaries have been constantly resident on the group. In addition to these there is a Roman Catholic Bishop resident at Apia, and a number of Catholic priests in various parts of the islands. The natives for nearly thirty years past, I understand, have annually contributed considerable sums towards the support of the mission establishments.

There is no principal chief having authority over the whole group, although there are three great chiefs having the title of tui or king—viz., Tui-Manua, Tui-A-ana, Tui-atua. The first named is at Manu’a and the other two at Upolu. Although holding the high-sounding title of king, these chiefs really have no more authority than the alii, or chiefs of towns, all being controlled by the councillors of the towns. Formerly there was a tui somoa, or king, of the whole group, similar to the Tui Tonga and Tui Viti (King of Tonga and King of Fiji), but this has not been the case for probably hundreds of years. Each town or village has its own chief. In some cases a number of villages are banded together in a kind of confederacy, over which the chief who has the greatest influence exercises a nominal kind of rule. The principal chiefs are called alii, next to whom are the heads of certain families in each village, called tu-la-fale, who comprise a very considerable section of the community, and really exercise more influence than the chiefs. Everything affecting the interest of the village is debated in council, where the tu-la-fale sit with the chief, and do most of the speaking. The decisions of the council become law for the whole village. The system of government varies in different districts. In some towns the matuas, or patriarchs, exercise considerable authority, whilst in others the tu-la-fales have the most influence; this, however, they only possess collectively, not individually. The natives, having so little to do, spend a great deal of time in their councils, where they discuss and regulate all the affairs of the town or village, down to the most trifling matter. They are constantly laying down laws for the price of food when sold to the Europeans, and what shall be paid by the Europeans to the natives they employ as boats’ crews. The village council leaves no man, not even the chief, free to bargain for the disposal of what is his own. No argument can overcome its decisions, and the only way to remove these restrictions is for foreigners to abstain altogether from having any dealings with the natives whilst they endeavour to enforce these mischievous and absurd laws for regulating prices.

None of the Samoan natives up to the present time have been taken away in labour-vessels. They would have the strongest objection to being removed from their own islands, and would not willingly engage themselves as labourers. There is, however, on Samoa a considerable number of natives from islands near the line, and from Niue, or Savage Island, who have been imported to work on the cotton plantations and about some of the warehouses. I saw a gang of thirty-five of the Line islanders hoeing in a cotton field; they are darker in colour, and much smaller men than the Samoans. It struck me that they looked wretchedly dejected and forlorn, and that they plodded along at their work in a most languid and monotonous manner. Some were engaged, I was told, for five years, and some for three years, with pay of from $3 to $5 a month. They have to labour from 6 o’clock in the morning to 6 o’clock in the evening, with a rest of an hour for breakfast and an hour for dinner. The Niue men that I saw were working about one of the stores at Apia; they were clothed in European costume, and had a lively and cheerful look. Several of them, I was told, after being sent back to their homes, had engaged themselves for a second term of service and returned to Apia; but I did not hear that this had been the case with any of the natives from the Line Islands.

A feud has existed for some time past between two sections of the natives on Upolu and Manono; they have already fought twice during the last three years, when several were killed on each side, and hostilities are again imminent. The quarrel commenced about three years ago between Tua Masanga and Manono (one of the small islands off the western end of Upolu, the inhabitants of which formerly had considerable considerable political influence over the people of Upolu), as to which party should have the right to nominate a chief to succeed to the title of malieatoa, which is an old hereditary title of high rank. The Tua Masanga nominated for the title the eldest son of the late Malieatoa; the Manono party set up the brother of the deceased chief. The chieftainship, although hereditary, does not necessarily descend from father to son. Although the present war began ostensibly for the purpose of settling the succession to the title of malieatoa, yet it soon took wider dimensions; and the Manono party, with a view of gaining more adherents their side, declared it to be the taua o tu la fono, or "war for establishing laws;" but probably the real motive that impelled the Manono party to take up arms was a jealousy of the advantages enjoyed by the Tua Masanga in having the foreign settlement of Apia within their borders. This jealousy, and the fear of being deprived altogether of their political supremacy, induced the Manono party to establish themselves on the long low point that forms the western boundary of Apia Harbour, the name of which they changed from Marinuu to Samoa na tasi—"Samoa is one." From this position they hope to gain the ascendancy over the party who are now paramount in Apia. Great preparations are being made by both sides, and blows will no doubt be come to very shortly; but the Samoans do not appear to be a warlike race, and the war, although it may be protracted, is not likely to be a sanguinary one. The present disturbed state of affairs, however, is most disastrous to the natives, as they congregate together in large numbers and neglect their cultivations. They are selling their land in all directions to buy arms, without retaining sufficient reserves for their own support; and of course this disposition is being eagerly taken advantage of by many of the white settlers who desire to acquire land. Although not a warlike they are a very vain race, and their vanity compels them to enter into hostilities that both sides would probably gladly avoid. It is the opinion of many of the oldest residents, who are thoroughly acquainted with the natives, that the parties now at war would be glad to see peace restored, and that they, as well as the rest of the native population, would welcome a foreign Power that could put an end to their troubles and establish law and order among them.

Whilst I was at Apia I took the opportunity, through the aid of Mr. Williams, the British Consul (who has been thirty-three years in the islands, and is thoroughly acquainted with the language, manners, and customs of the natives, and has their confidence), to ascertain their views, from one of the leading chiefs from each side in the present quarrel, as to the feelings of the natives with reference to a foreign power assuming the government of the islands. The most influential chief of the Manono party, and representing one of the three great districts into which the island of Upolu is divided, said: "There is no country we should like to take over Samoa equal to England. We know the English are just; an English protectorate would be sweet." The principal chief belonging to the Tua Masanga, or section inhabiting the central district of Upolu, in which is the harbour and settlement of Apia, said that "his own feeling and that of his people was that they would gladly welcome British rule, but that they did not want any other Power." He was repeatedly questioned, and his answer was always the same. He was then asked why the natives preferred the English? His reply was that "they knew that the British would deal justly by them, but other Powers would oppress them." This conclusion, he said, was formed from the experience of the oppressive treatment they had already experienced at the hands of the subjects as well as the vessels of war of other nations. His opinion was that the great majority of the natives were anxious for the British Government to come to Samoa to establish law and good government. What they would prefer would be to have a council of chiefs, aided by English officers, to frame and carry out laws, and to have the occasional presence of an English vessel of war to back up the authority of the Council.

On Tutuila, Maunga, the chief at Pango Pango Harbour, told me that the natives would be glad to see Great Britain take the Islands under her protection. He said they made an application to this effect through the British Consul to the Queen about twenty-five years ago; that they were still of the same mind, and were waiting for a favourable reply. An answer, I was told, was returned to this application, to the effect that the British Government was not prepared to take possession of the islands, but that it would not stand by and see any other Power exercise greater authority in them than it did. The chiefs of Tutuila and of Upolu, I understand, have twice forwarded requests, through the British Consul, to the Home Government to take possession of the islands, or establish a protectorate over them. The foreign residents are exceedingly desirous of seeing some settled form of Government established, and the great majority of them are in favour of British rule. In an interview I had with the Roman Catholic Bishop at Apia, he told me that he very much regretted the present disturbed state of the natives on Upolu, as it stopped all progress among them. He would like to see some Government take possession of the group, and thought that the natives would be glad to welcome any Power that would establish law and order, and put an end to their fights. He would rather see England or America than any other foreign power take possession of the islands. He knew that British rule was just and liberal, and that all religions would have equal liberty. Any authority that came to the islands would have to be from some recognized Government, and should be introduced by a vessel of war. He estimated the population at about 34,000; this was the number set down a few years ago, after careful inquiry, and he did not think there was much difference now—the population was about stationary. He had a high opinion of the Samoans, and considered them docile, truthful, and honest; but the chiefs were exceedingly jealous of each other, which led to frequent wars.

In the course of conversation with Mr. Weber, the German Consul, he informed me that he had large claims against the natives, and that he had been applying to his Government for several years past to get a vessel of war to call. The Prussian Government had at length acceded to his application, and promised that the "Nympha" should visit the islands on her way to China. This vessel is expected at Apia very shortly. Mr. Weber told me that he had no intimation whatever that it was the intention of his Government to take possession of, or to assume any authority over, the islands. On reaching Auckland, on my return from the Navigator's, I learnt from a gentleman just returned from Sydney that the "Nympha" had reached that place, and that the captain had stated that he had instructions to proceed thence to the Navigator's Islands, where he was to refit his ship, and to land and exercise his men.

There can be no doubt, I think, that both natives and Europeans would gladly welcome the establishment of British authority on the islands, and that it will be a matter of lasting regret to all who are in any way interested in the extension of commerce and civilization among the countless islands of the Pacific if the Government disregard the wishes of the natives, and refuse to take possession of, or to establish a protectorate over, this valuable group. The importance of securing possession of the harbour of of Pango Pango for a coaling station for the steamers carrying the New Zealand and Australian English mails to and from San Francisco is too obvious to require comment. The distance from—

Pango Pango to Auckland	1,577 miles.
" Vavau, Friendly Islands	380 "
" Levuka, Fiji	630 "
" Tongatabu	475 "
" Tahiti	1,250 "
" New Caledonia	1,445 "
" Sydney	2,410 "
" Melbourne	2,864 "
" Honolulu	2,283 "

From its central and commanding position in respect to the other groups in the Pacific, Pango Harbour would further appear to be admirably suited for a naval depôt, or for a station from which Her Majesty's cruisers would rapidly reach the different islands, and thus be able to suppress the abuses of the South Sea labour traffic. The Government of the United States appear to be fully sensible of the important position of the Navigator's Islands, for intelligence has just been brought by the "Nevada" that the United States sloop of war "Narragansett," which vessel was at Honolulu when the "Nevada" left that place, is under orders to proceed to the Navigator's for the purpose of forming a naval station at Pango Pango Harbour. Commerce is rapidly increasing in the Pacific, and trading stations owned by British subjects are being established in it in various directions. Large numbers of British vessels are now constantly employed in distributing British manufactures, and gathering up produce at the various islands for shipment (generally through the Australian Colonies and New Zealand) to Great Britain. Very large interests are thus rapidly springing up among the South Sea Islands, and the necessity for having some station in the Pacific where British authority shall prevail, and where British justice can be administered, will year by year become more pressing.

If British authority should be established on Samoa I believe that the natives, under proper management, would readily adapt themselves to our institutions, and conform to all necessary laws for maintaining order among themselves. They have already made efforts to establish laws for the punishment of crime. A simple code was some time since drawn up by the British Consul, which the natives approved of, but owing to dissensions among themselves it did not come into operation. Perhaps the most certain indication of their fitness for civil government that can be adduced is the fact that they have adopted the plan of levying taxes among themselves for particular objects. For instance, quite recently the Upolu people fixed a tax of $1 a head on adult males, $$ \frac{1}{2}$ on youths, and $$ \frac{1}{4}$ on male children, for the purpose of buying arms and ammunition for the present war.

New Zealand, in addition to being the nearest British Colony to the Navigator's, is also most favourably situated for communicating with that group, owing to the prevailing winds for nine months in the year being favourable for the passage both ways. One or two vessels are already employed in trading to them, and it is certain that at no distant date this trade will rapidly increase, as the islands are capable of yielding sugar, coffee, cotton, and almost every kind of tropical produce; whilst New Zealand raises in abundance and can supply, in exchange for these commodities, exactly those articles which the white settlers on the islands stand most in need of, such as flour, butter, cheese, preserved meats, &c.

Many of the European settlers are fully alive to the advantages they would derive from a connection with New Zealand, and a large number of them, I have no doubt, would willingly aid in establishing such a connection. Several of them recognize that the long experience the New Zealand Government has had in the management of the Maoris would enable it to suggest measures or to take steps that would avert many complications that they think would arise if the management of the islands were placed entirely under persons having little or no knowledge of the character and prejudices of the Polynesian natives.

From the particulars given above it will be seen that the Navigator's Islands occupy a most important position in the Pacific; that they possess two safe and commodious harbours, suitable for the largest sized vessels, which harbours are admirably adapted for stations from which operations could be rapidly carried out for suppressing the pernicious and iniquitous labour traffic that is now carried on among the South Sea Islands; that the islands are capable of producing almost everything that is grown within the tropics; and that they are likely to become an important centre for trade; further, that they are inhabited by a docile and amiable race of natives, who have the warmest attachment to Great Britain, and earnestly desire to place themselves under her rule and protection.

On reviewing these conditions, and having regard especially to the geographical position of New Zealand in relation to the Navigator's and adjacent groups, and to the fact that a considerable trade is likely soon to spring up between this Colony and those islands, the conclusion, I think, that must be arrived at is that it would be advisable that the New Zealand Government should strongly support the wishes of the natives, and should urge upon the Imperial Government to comply with those wishes, by establishing British protection and authority over the islands of Samoa.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION, 1883.

[Laid before the Convention by the Representatives of Queensland.]

DESPATCH RESPECTING TRANSPORTATION OF FRENCH CRIMINALS TO NEW CALEDONIA.

The Agent-General for Queensland to The Colonial Secretary, Brisbane.

Queensland Government Office, 1, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, London, S.W., 21 September, 1883.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your information, copies of the correspondence which has taken place between the Foreign Office, the Colonial Office, and the Embassy at Paris, relative to the transportation of Relapsed Criminals from France to New Caledonia.

I have, &c.,
THOMAS ARCHER,
Agent-General.

The Foreign Office to The Colonial Office.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 27 August, 1883.

I am directed by Earl Granville to transmit to you herewith, for the information of the Earl of Derby, a copy of a Despatch which His Lordship has addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Paris, instructing him to make a representation to the French Government in the sense suggested in your letter of the 10th instant, respecting the transportation of relapsed criminals from France to New Caledonia.

I have, &c.,
J. PAUNCEFORT.

Earl Granville to Mr. Plunkett.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 25 August, 1883.

I communicated in due course to the Colonial Office Lord Lyon's despatch, No. 313 of the 9th of May last, in which His Excellency reported that the "Transportation of Relapsed Criminals" Bill had passed the first reading in the French Chamber of Deputies, and that New Caledonia and its Dependencies were included amongst the settlements to which relapsed criminals are to be sent.

The Earl of Derby has now brought under my notice, in connection with this matter, a joint communication, annexed herewith in copy, which has been addressed to His Lordship by the Agents-General of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria and in which, inter alia, very strong representations are made with a view to the adoption of effective measures for preventing the serious consequences to be anticipated from the above-mentioned resolution of the French Government, by which large numbers of the worst class of criminals would be transported to New Caledonia, where, as it is stated, they would be free.

And with further reference to this subject, His Lordship has received from the Agent-General of Queensland a letter, of which copy is also enclosed for your information, and which forwards a telegram from the Premier of the Colony, calling attention to the refusal of the French authorities of New Caledonia to apply for the extradition of criminals who escape from Noumea to Queensland.

It is clear that this question, being is one which gravely concerns the welfare of the Australian Colonies, must command the prompt attention of Her Majesty's Government, and I have accordingly to request that you will lose no time in placing yourself in communication with the French Government upon the subject with a view to ascertain what is the course which they propose to pursue; in the first place as regards the number of convicts to be sent out to the Western Pacific, and as to the position of such criminals after arrival; and, secondly, with respect to the failure of the Government of New Caledonia to demand the extradition of criminals whom they have permitted to escape in the cases pointed out in the above mentioned telegram from the Queensland Government.

I am, &c.,
GRANVILLE.

The Colonial Office to The Foreign Office.

Sir,

Downing-street, 10 August, 1883.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to transmit to you, to be laid before Earl Granville, a copy of a letter from the Agent-General for Queensland, forwarding a telegram from the Premier of the Colony, in which he desires that the attention of Her Majesty's Government may be called to the refusal of the French Authorities in New Caledonia to apply for the extradition of criminals who have escaped from Noumea.

2. In connection with this matter, I am to request Earl Granville's early consideration of the enclosed copy of a joint letter from the Agents-General of New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria on the subject of New Guinea and the New Hebrides, in which it is strongly urged that measures should be taken to prevent the consequences anticipated from the declared intention of the French Government to transport large numbers of the worst class of criminals to New Caledonia, where they would be free on arrival.

3. Considering the grave importance of this question to the welfare of the Australian Colonies, it appears to Lord Derby to be necessary to obtain immediate explanations from the French Government as to the course contemplated (1) in regard to the number of convicts proposed to be sent out and their position after arrival, and (2) the failure of the Government of New Caledonia in the cases just reported to demand the extradition of criminals whom they have permitted to escape: and Lord Derby will be glad to be able to assure the Government of Queensland that Her Majesty's Government has not failed to give prompt attention to the serious representation which has been made to them, and has communicated with the French Government.

4. I am also to request that Lord Granville may be reminded that in 1881 the Queensland Legislature passed a Bill to prevent the influx of foreign and other criminals into the Colony, which was the subject of correspondence between this Department and the Foreign Office. This Bill did not at that time receive Her Majesty's assent, as objection was taken to the unequal incidence of certain of its provisions; but under the circumstances now reported, and having regard to the contemplated increase in the number of French convicts to be transported to the Western Pacific, it appears to Lord Derby that it will not be possible to continue to resist such legislation.

The Under Secretary of State, Foreign Office.

I am, &c.,
R. H. MEADE.

Sir,

Downing-street, 19 September, 1883.

With reference to your letter of the 26th of July, enclosing a telegram from the Premier of Queensland respecting the refusal of the French Authorities in New Caledonia to apply for the extradition of criminals who have escaped from that Colony, I am directed by the Earl of Derby to transmit to you copies of a letter from this Department to the Foreign Office, and of two letters from that Department, with their enclosures on the subject.

I am, &c.,
JOHN BRAMSTON.

The Foreign Office to the Colonial Office.

Sir,

Foreign Office, 5 September, 1883.

With reference to my letter of the 27th ultimo, I am directed by Earl Granville to transmit to you herewith for the information of the Earl of Derby, copy of a Despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Paris, enclosing a copy of a "Note Verbale" which he has left with the French Government, respecting the proposed transportation of habitual criminals from France to New Caledonia.

The Under Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

I am, &c.,
E. V. LISTER.

Mr. Plunkett to Earl Granville.

No. 563.

Paris, 31st August, 1883.

My Lord,

On the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch, No. 820 of the 25th instant, I drew up the memo., copy of which I have the honor to enclose, explanatory of the anxiety felt in the Australian Colonies as to the serious consequences which the proposed French law for the "transportation of relapsed criminals" to New Caledonia may entail.

My intention was to speak to M. Challemeil Lacour in the sense of your Lordship's instructions, and to leave the memo. with His Excellency only as a semi-official document.

I found, however, on calling at the Foreign Department this afternoon, that M. Challemeil Lacour, who has been in poor health for some days past, has suddenly become so much worse that he is about to proceed at once to Vichy, and at that moment he was in conference with the President of the Council arranging the temporary transfer of his duties to the latter.

I therefore placed the memorandum in the hands of M. Marcel, the Chef de Cabinet of M. Ch. Lacour, and begged him to submit it to the Minister for Foreign Affairs in my name.

Speaking quite unofficially, M. Marcel said he thought there was little prospect of the Recidivist Bill being passed in its present shape, and in any case many months must yet elapse before it can become law. He promised to call the attention of the Minister as soon as possible to the failure of the Government of New Caledonia to apply for the extradition of the three persons who had escaped from Noumea, as reported in the telegram from the Governor of Queensland of the 26th ultimo.

I have, &c.,
F. R. PLUNKETT.

Note Verbale.

The Australian Colonies of Great Britain have made strong representations to Her Majesty's Government with a view to the adoption of effective measures for preventing the serious consequences which they fear will result to them if the Bill now before the Chamber of Deputies for the transportation of relapsed criminals to New Caledonia and its Dependencies should become law.

The Queensland Government, in particular, complain that the Government of New Caledonia now decline to demand the extradition of criminals who may have escaped from Noumea, and in the absence of such a demand on the part of the French authorities the British colonial authorities cannot act against these individuals.

The Governor of Queensland telegraphed on the 26th ultimo that the French authorities have hitherto applied for the extradition, but now refuse to do so, and that consequently he had just been obliged to discharge three convicts who had escaped from Noumea.

As the transportation to New Caledonia is intended to rid France of the worst class of her criminals, who apparently are to be set free when they reach New Caledonia, and whose neighbourhood will be a constant source of danger to the Australian Colonies, Lord Granville would be glad to know what course the French Government propose to pursue as to the number of convicts to be sent out to the Western Pacific; and as to the position of such criminals after arrival at their destination.

His Lordship would also be glad to learn what course the French propose to follow with regard to the failure of the Government of New Caledonia to demand the extradition of the criminals who escaped, as explained in the telegram from the Governor of Queensland above referred to.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION, 1883.

MEMORANDUM BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR OF FIJI AND ACTING-HIGH COMMISSIONER OF THE WESTERN PACIFIC ON THE FUTURE OF NEW GUINEA AND POLYNESIA WITH REFERENCE TO THE QUESTION OF AUSTRALASIAN ANNEXA- TION OR PROTECTORATE.

Governor of Fiji and Acting High Commissioner of Western Pacific to His Excellency Lord Augustus Loftus.

My Lord,

Pfahlert's Hotel, Sydney, 24 November, 1883.

I have the honor to forward to your Excellency a memorandum which I have written on the future of New Guinea and Polynesia with reference to the question of Australasian annexation or protectorate, and I request that you will be good enough to cause this paper to be made known to your Ministers, with a view to its being brought under the notice of the Conference of the Australasian Colonies in such manner as to your Excellency may seem fit.

I deem it right to mention that my estimate of Australasian sugar consumption is, I find, probably under the mark, and there are certain parts of the paper which require to be slightly modified in consequence; but as I have been unable to obtain the correct figures, and as the error could not appreciably affect the position which I have taken up, even if it were far greater than it can possibly be, I have not deemed it necessary to incur the delay which would be involved in re-printing.

I have, &c.,

G. WILLIAM DES VCEUX,
Acting High Commissioner of the Western Pacific.

MEMORANDUM on the future of New Guinea and Polynesia, with reference to the question of Australasian Annexation or Protectorate.

Government House, Suva, Fiji, 7 November, 1883.

AN ordinary acquaintance with the circumstances of this part of the world can scarcely fail to create sympathy with the desire of Australasians (by which term is meant the people of Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania), to obtain control over the neighbouring islands. The establishment there by foreign nations of depôts, either for convicts or for purposes of war, would constitute a serious danger to the colonists, which in making a strenuous effort to avert, they are simply discharging a duty to themselves and their descendants.

But though holding this view strongly, I should not in my position feel justified in giving it expression, but for a reason which seems to render such a course a matter of duty. Having been now over four years officially concerned with the islands of the Western Pacific comprised within the jurisdiction of the High Commission, I have learned quite enough of their condition to justify the conviction that the attainment of the object desired by Australasia may be made consistent with their best interests. Indeed, in view of the not unnatural reluctance of the Imperial Government to undertake additional responsibility, I have gradually formed the opinion that control on the part of the confederated Colonies over these islands affords the only reasonable prospect of material and moral advantage to them, and the only rational hope that they will for centuries to come prove of any substantial benefit to the world at large.

I propose, therefore, in the following paper to give my reasons for this conclusion ; and I shall at the same time venture to indicate the only policy under which the annexation of, or assumption of protectorate over, the islands is likely to be useful for any other purpose than that of defence.

Though the jurisdiction of the High Commission has a considerably wider range, extending in some places considerably to the north of the Equator, the islands whose destiny I propose to consider (and which for the sake of convenience I shall term Polynesia), are New Guinea, with the exception of the portion claimed by the Dutch, and all the other islands which lie between it and Australia on the one side, and the Navigators and Friendly Islands on the other, with the exception of those comprised within the Colonies of Fiji and New Caledonia.

As colonization by white men is commonly regarded, especially in New Zealand, as one of the principal objects to be aimed at in the annexation of Polynesia, it may serve to clear the ground if I consider in the first instance how far this is practicable or desirable.

With one or two trifling exceptions, all the islands of Polynesia are situated within the tropics, and are thus places where, according to all previous experience, field labour must be exclusively that of coloured men.* Many attempts have been made in various parts of the world during the last three centuries to carry on tropical plantations with white labour ; but the result has always been failure, even in mountainous districts enjoying a comparatively temperate climate. In all cases the labourers have either died miserably, or have been compelled to seek other means of livelihood.

We have thus at the outset a very serious limitation of the possible number of Polynesian colonists ; and when we consider what other occupations are likely to be followed by white men, we find that those of a pastoral nature must be almost altogether excluded. Pastoral pursuits under the sun of the tropics have not in other parts of the world proved a sufficient economical success to encourage emulation. In most countries, with a hot damp climate, such as that of Polynesia, the wool of sheep almost entirely disappears in the second or third generation. Even in tropical Australia sheep-raising is not believed to have been a success ; and if that country constitutes an exception as regards cattle, there are entirely absent from Polynesia the tropical, and also probably the climatic, conditions which tend to render it so.

But, however this may be, it cannot be regarded as within the range of reasonable probability that Polynesia will ever be able to compete with Australia in this branch of industry. A certain number of cattle may be raised, as in Fiji, merely for the supply of local consumption, but the likelihood of stock-raising having any appreciable effect upon the future of the islands may be regarded as extremely small.

As regards mechanical trades, all experience is against their being generally pursued by white men in the tropics. High wages occasionally offer a temporary attraction, but the great majority leave after a short time, and the instances are very rare indeed where white mechanics, who remain such, find in the tropics a permanent home.

Apart therefore from commerce, the occupations of white men in Polynesia must, speaking generally, be expected to be confined to the cultivation and manufacture of tropical products. What are the prospects of such enterprises I will now proceed to consider.

Though there are, probably, in one or other of the islands of Polynesia, many places suitable as regards soil and climate for all, or nearly all, tropical products, one essential condition of success in this kind of agriculture is nearly everywhere wanting, namely—a supply of regular and sufficiently cheap labour.

Nearly the whole, if not all Polynesia, has an extremely sparse population, and it is only in densely populated countries that, in the absence of slavery, the natives can be depended upon to work for wages with the certainty and regularity which are necessary for the success of all, and especially tropical, agriculture. For this reason, all the West India Colonies that are in a flourishing condition (with the single exception of Barbados, which has as dense a population as any in the world), have been compelled to import labourers ; and similarly, such plantations as have been opened in Fiji and Polynesia could not have been maintained with labour obtainable in their immediate neighbourhood. For some plantations where the treatment is known to be good, a certain number of labourers may occasionally be obtained in the vicinity ; but speaking of plantations in the Pacific generally, their main dependence has been, and must always be, upon people brought from a distance, and this is equally true of the plantations of Hawaii, Samoa, and the New Hebrides, as it is of those situated in the Crown Colony of Fiji.

Now this movement from island to island, whatever may be its other good or evil effects, is certainly having one upon which all independent authority is agreed : it is rapidly extinguishing the people taking part in it. Polynesians, though sometimes muscular, are constitutionally a weak race ; and though as a rule it is only the young and able-bodied who emigrate, they have a terribly high death rate when transferred to European plantations, even where, as in Fiji, the most stringent regulations are in force for their protection. Again, the abstraction of so large a proportion of the able-bodied men, together with the other accompaniments of the labour trade, have had an even more rapid effect in decreasing the population at the places from which the labourers come ; so that, if the process should be allowed to continue—and any extension of white colonisation would tend to accelerate it—all question as to the labour of Polynesians would in no long time be set at rest by their entire extinction.

But apart from this ultimate result (which may be expected within a generation in places such as the New Hebrides and Solomons, that have been a long time subject to the labour trade), it is evident that in the meantime, as plantations increase in number, Polynesian labour, which is already expensive from the mere fact that it requires to be for the most part imported, will inevitably become dearer, not only from the enhanced demand but from the exhaustion of the supply ; and as other labourers from the more distant parts of the world can only be imported at heavy cost, a very slight consideration will serve to show that the prospect of profitable production in the Western Pacific is on this account much more limited than is generally supposed.

There are certain articles of large consumption such as rice, and many in less demand, in the production of which no country, except to an extremely limited extent, has ever been able to compete with the densely populated countries of Eastern Asia and their immediate neighbourhood (countries which, for the sake of convenience, I shall henceforward designate as Asia) ; and there appears to be good reason for supposing that the competition of these countries will preclude the profitable cultivation in Polynesia of nearly all other articles except for the supply of the wants of Australasia. So

* Since writing the above, I have been informed that parts of Queensland furnish an exception to this otherwise universal rule. If so, it must be owing to a dryness of climate which probably exists nowhere else in the tropics, and certainly not in Polynesia.

So far export from Polynesia to countries outside Australasia has proved profitable as regards only one agricultural product, namely—copra, the dried kernel of the cocoa-nut, and even that has been in only a limited degree derived from European cultivation; an enormous majority of the cocoa palms having been planted either by nature or by the natives, and not cultivated at all. As within a very recent period the market price of the article fell to a point which is believed to have been unremunerative to European cultivators even at the present price of labour, and in view of the fact that the cocoa-nut is equally at home, and thrives fully as well, in the many islands of the Eastern Archipelago, it may be doubted whether the field for extended enterprise in this production is other than a very narrow one; for even if at some future time this Polynesian product should come to be required in Australasia, not merely for export as now but for local consumption, it is not improbable that it may have even there to compete with an article brought from Asia, and produced under conditions in all other respects equal and superior as regards cheapness of labour.

Unless, as there is as yet no reason to suppose, there are in parts of the Western Pacific conditions of soil or climate so far more favourable to certain tropical products than any which exist elsewhere as to outweigh the disadvantage of dear labour, it may be regarded as probable that the causes above indicated will impose a serious restriction upon nearly all agriculture on the part of Europeans in this part of the world. The consumption of Australasia may be supplied from Fiji and Polynesia, possibly in a large proportion as regards sugar (the weight of which relatively to its value renders carriage an important element in its cost), and more doubtfully and, in any case, in lesser proportions as regards coffee, tea, cocoa, tobacco, spices, cinchona, edible fruits, &c. But if it be conceded, as it probably must be, that there are nearer to all other centres of large consumption places where these articles can be more cheaply produced, it cannot be anticipated that they will ever, except to a very limited extent, be exported beyond Australasia.

If it should be suggested that the western seaboard of North and South America is likely to furnish markets for Polynesian produce of the future, the reply is that the cost of freight upon imports received from China and its neighbourhood, will be little if at all greater than in the case of imports from Polynesia, and at all events the difference is not at all likely to be such as to outweigh the comparative cheapness of production in the former country. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind that in the important article of sugar, South America has hitherto been able to supply its own wants, and even to export largely elsewhere; while the Western United States obtain all they require from Hawaii, which, having a soil even more remarkably adapted for the growth of the cane than any yet known in Polynesia, has over the latter a great advantage as regards proximity.

It is possible that the recent war in Peru may have placed a permanent check upon production there, and a similar effect would no doubt be brought about in Hawaii, if the reciprocity treaty with the United States should come to an end. But even then Polynesia would have to face other competition scarcely less formidable than that of China. The completion of the Panama canal will open all the western markets of America to the planters of the West Indies, and there is good reason for believing that they will have over those of Polynesia a great advantage in other respects than proximity.

As the case of the West Indies illustrates in various ways the opinions above expressed, it may be useful to draw further attention to it.

The natives of the West India Islands were long ago almost completely destroyed by causes very similar to those now operating in Polynesia. Their place was supplied by negro slaves imported from Africa, and it is the free descendants of these who now form the principal source of labour supply. In those islands (except Barbados, the dense population of which renders it an exception) where agriculture conducted by white men has proved most successful, it has however been found necessary to stimulate the industry of the negro by the introduction of coolies, at great expense, from the countries of Eastern Asia. This importation has now been carried on for nearly a generation, and to such an extent that the small island of Trinidad, with an area only about one-fifteenth that of Tasmania, has introduced more than 60,000 people,* and yet even there, where in proportion to its size the immigration has been largest, it was found only a few years ago (and the case is probably not very different now), that the descendants of the slaves furnished the larger proportion of labour to the plantations.

This latter circumstance has an extremely important bearing upon the question now under consideration. Though all the West India Islands, except Barbados, are thinly peopled, and nearly all of them have by far the greater part of their cultivable land still in a state of nature, yet in none of those which are colonies is population nearly as sparse as it is in the greater part of Polynesia. In New Guinea the highest of recent estimates gives a population of only five millions to an area of over 300,000 square miles, or less than seventeen for each mile, and, in so far as is known, there are few, if any, islands with a population greater relatively to area than Fiji; and yet while there 125,000 people live upon 8,000 square miles, in Jamaica, one of the most thinly-populated of the West Indies, 500,000 live upon only 4,000 square miles. Moreover, while the population of Polynesia is dwindling, that of the West Indies has a high natural rate of increase (that is, exclusive of immigration), which in some islands approximates to 2 per cent. per annum.

It may indeed be said that, though the West Indies have thus a great advantage in respect of existing population, Polynesia is, on the other hand, nearer to Asia, which is commonly regarded as an inexhaustible source of labour supply. Past experience, however, does not tend to show that this fact would be likely to give any advantage to Polynesia. Though the people of Southern China are admirably adapted for agricultural labour in the tropics they, except when subjected, as in Cuba and Peru, to conditions very nearly approaching to slavery, have not hitherto been found to work satisfactorily under binding engagements with Europeans, such as would alone justify the heavy cost of importation. It is possible that a scheme might be successful of introducing them under contracts with their own guilds; but too little is known of that system to enable any safe calculation upon it; and it is at least open to question whether, in connection with tropical agriculture at so great a distance from the homes of the labourers, it would not have too close a resemblance to slavery to be tolerated under the British flag. It is also to be borne in mind that

Chinese

* I have not the statistics at command, but I have reason to believe that this number is within the mark. It is also worth mentioning, as further illustrating the question considered in a later part of this paper, that the small island in question from 93,300 acres, or less than one-twelfth of its surface, produces 55,000 tons of sugar, or about one-half the consumption of Australasia, besides a quantity of cacao, which (in so far as I recollect) exceeds one-third of that consumed in Great Britain.

Chinese prefer almost any occupation to that of field labour, and even those who could be induced to emigrate to gain their livelihood thus, would in all probability choose places nearer home, such for instance as Borneo, which, if its settlement prove successful, I should for this reason, and on account of its proximity to India, expect to be the most dangerous of all the rivals of Polynesia in Australasian markets.

For the above reason it is probable that, as regards imported labour, Polynesia (including Fiji) must, in a by no means distant future, rely mainly upon Indian coolies as the West Indies do now, and it is therefore important to know that a comparison between the cost of carrying Indians to Fiji and to the West Indies is so far in favour of the latter. It is true that the voyages to Fiji have all been by sailing-ships to the south of Australia, and the cost of passage would no doubt have been less in steam-vessels coming through Torres Straits. It is, however, to be hoped that this latter route will never be taken for this purpose, at least until Polynesians are extinct, as, being wholly within the tropics, the use of it would create special danger of the introduction of Indian disease. Out of the five vessels which have brought Indians to Fiji, two have had on board cholera and small-pox, and it was probably due mainly to the cold weather experienced at the south that these dread diseases disappeared before the end of the voyage.

It is no doubt possible that the cost of introducing Indians will decrease as the chance increases of a return freight for the carrying vessels; but, in view of the high rates of insurance charged in respect of navigation in Polynesia, it is extremely improbable whether this part of the world will ever in this respect obtain any appreciable advantage over the West Indies.

But apart from the cost of passage, in which the West Indies and Polynesia may be considered to be on about an equal footing, there is another limitation to Indian immigration which is likely to operate to the greater disadvantage of Polynesia as having the smaller resident population,—I mean the increasing difficulty of inducing Indians to emigrate at all. Whether from the general improvement of their condition or from enlarged opportunities for employment in their own country, the people of India are year by year showing a greater reluctance to leave home, and the cost of recruiting labourers is thus continually rising, while the requisitions of the colonies can rarely be complied with.

Finally, there is another difficulty in the way of this immigration into Polynesia, which will probably be found the most serious of all. The Indian Government, warned by former experience, rightly exacts very stringent conditions, as to the treatment of its people and as to the control of their labour contracts, from those colonies which are allowed to import them; and in view of the practical impossibility of effectually supervising the proceedings of employers in the greater part of the Pacific, on account of the difficulty and cost of communication, it is open to grave doubt whether this immigration will ever be allowed except to places like Fiji, where there is a Government near at hand to afford to the labourers the requisite protection.

It would thus appear that, besides Asia and the islands contiguous to it, the West Indies and other places, like Mauritius, which are in a similar position, will for a long time to come have a great advantage over Polynesia as regards the cost of labour, inasmuch as, being able to import labourers at equal or lower cost, they will be by no means dependent upon those imported, and will have at command an incomparably better supply of resident labourers, even if the process of depopulation should in the course of a few years leave any such to Polynesia.

It may be urged that this disadvantage would be outweighed by the newness and richness of Polynesian land. This, however, appears improbable for two reasons:—First, as land becomes exhausted tillage improves, and thus lands in Barbados and Mauritius, which have been used for centuries, are still able to maintain a competition with those recently brought into cultivation; and second, not to speak of the vast unreclaimed forests of tropical Asia and of the Malay Archipelago, where the advantage in respect of labour is likely to be greatest, there is probably, even in the British and Foreign West India Colonies, including Guiana and Honduras, quite as much rich virgin soil as exists in Polynesia. Speaking comparatively, but very small areas of Cuba, Jamaica, Trinidad, and many smaller islands, have been cultivated within the period of European settlement, while the British portion of Guiana, with its 80,000 square miles, though it produces more sugar than is consumed in Australia, is reclaimed from forest only in portions of a thin fringe of coast and river frontage, which is nowhere greater than six miles in depth. In view of the fact that these colonies have, up to a time still very recent, supplied by far the larger proportion of the requirements of the civilized world in respect of tropical produce, and even yet export the larger portion of the cane sugar consumed by it, the thought cannot but suggest itself that the area required for tropical cultivation is comparatively a very small one, and that making full allowance for the increasing wants of civilization, its extension can scarcely be otherwise than very gradual, and will be chiefly confined to those parts of the world where conditions are specially favourable.

This, and the other above-mentioned considerations, would appear to point unmistakably to the conclusion that in any period which can be regarded as within the range of practical politics, agriculture on the part of whites in Polynesia can for the most part be directed only to the supply, and the very partial supply, of the Australian Colonies; and if this view be correct, the field for European colonization is evidently very narrow indeed. I do not for a moment contend that no sugar or other cultivated products will be exported from Fiji and Polynesia to places beyond Australasia. Under exceptional conditions of markets and freights some will, and not unfrequently perhaps, be attracted to America and even to Europe. But what I do say is, that the amount of such export must in any case be extremely insignificant relatively to the area of Polynesia, and that the cultivated land required for it, as well as for the consumption of Australasia, will be of far too small extent to render further colonization of the ordinary kind desirable.

In order to make this clear it is well to draw special attention to sugar, the only product the cultivation of which has as yet proved to be sufficiently profitable to attract any substantial amount of capital to Western Pacific agriculture.

At present the annual consumption of Australasia (which is considerably larger per caput than that of any other part of the world*) is only 110,000 tons. Supposing the population to increase within the next century so as to reach 20,000,000 (a very sanguine estimate in consideration of the fact that the number of immigrants will bear a continually less proportion to the other inhabitants), and supposing also, what is scarcely probable, that the present high consumption per caput should be maintained, the total quantity consumed would even then fall short of 750,000 tons. This quantity, though large, is not greater than than has been exported in a year from the single island of Cuba which, as mentioned above, is still forest as regards by far the larger portion of it; and, with virgin soil such as that of Northern Australia or Polynesia, it could be easily produced from 400,000* acres, an area scarcely larger than is probably suitable for the cane out of the 5,000,000 acres of Fiji, and incomparably less than is available for the same purpose in tropical Australia.

But besides this reason and those above indicated, there is another which renders it additionally improbable that any very large proportion of this quantity can be produced in Polynesia.

The cultivation of beetroot for sugar-making in the temperate climates of Europe, though commenced in comparatively recent times, has of late years been immensely extended. Though speaking from memory, and having no statistics at command, I believe I am right in stating that, notwithstanding the enormous importations of cane sugar from the West Indies, from Brazil, and from the East, the quantity of beet sugar manufactured in Europe is now fully equal to it, and it is, I observe, estimated for this year at 2,000,000 tons, or much more than half of the total consumption there. Sugar is also being largely produced in the United States and Canada, not only from the beet but from sorghum; and as it is not, I believe, a matter of doubt that there are large areas in Australasia, especially in New Zealand, which have a soil and climate favourable to this kind of agriculture, it may be expected at no distant date to occupy, with reference to local consumption, if not as prominent a position as it does in Europe, at least one that will materially diminish the necessity for importation.

As Queensland and New South Wales are, I understand, already producing about one half of all the sugar consumed in this part of the world, it is thus by no means improbable that Australasia will in the future be able, whether from the cane or from the beet, to supply all its own wants in respect of sugar; and in view of this, and of the competition of the countries which now supply its markets, as well as of others, such as Borneo and the Malay Peninsula, which are only just beginning to be developed, I should regard as unduly sanguine any estimate which would leave for Polynesia anything beyond a very small portion of the total supply.

As regards tropical products of large consumption other than sugar, it is of course possible that some may be eventually found which will yield a profit on their cultivation. So far, however, no such experiments have proved successful, except in respect of cocoa-nuts, and the demand for these in the world can, as shown in a recent instance, be very easily over-supplied. In view of the fact that the difficulty and cost of obtaining labour are likely to become greater instead of less, and also that no single article can be named the cultivation of which is not being vigorously prosecuted elsewhere under conditions more favourable in this respect and not less advantageous in all others, it may well be doubted whether the Western Pacific affords anything beyond an extremely limited field for such enterprise. It is at all events certain that the existing British Colonies of Northern Australia and Fiji could, from a very small portion of their surface, supply all the probable wants of Australia as regards tropical produce for centuries to come, while for several generations Fiji could easily do so alone; and, as the trade produced by cultivation is in the aggregate no larger, because the latter is widely scattered, it would appear to be by no means to the advantage of Australasians, to encourage planting enterprise in this part of the world outside of existing British Colonies.

There is, moreover, another consideration which points to the same conclusion.

Except in countries having very dense population, tropical agriculture can be successfully carried on only by labourers bound under contract. For securing just treatment to coloured labourers in this condition, the experience of the whole world goes to show that strict regulations are necessary, and their observance requires to be carefully supervised. It is sometimes forcibly urged against such regulations that the welfare of the labourer is to the direct interest of the employer; but, as the blue books of the last generation show, this consideration did not shield from all kinds of barbarous treatment slaves who were worth several hundred pounds each; and, as is proved by the recent records of every tropical colony, it is by no means a sufficient protection for labourers who can be replaced for a far less sum. Though deliberate cruelty is now probably of rare occurrence, want of consideration for people of a totally different origin, needs, and habits, and inability to see from their point of view, are still common even among men of humane disposition; and this, there is reason to believe, has caused far more suffering and death among coloured labourers than any of the graver forms of ill-treatment.

As security against such evils, regulations are more or less strictly enforced in all British Colonies, and it is scarcely necessary to say that their observance involves considerable cost to the employer. Now, it will never be contended by any one who has had experience on the subject, that such regulations could be effectively enforced on plantations scattered over the large area of the Pacific; and especially such regulations as experience has proved to be necessary for securing the barest justice to the peculiarly unintelligent and helpless, and on that account specially irritating Polynesian. Except in a few cases where the plantations were sufficiently numerous and near together to warrant the appointment of a resident official staff, some of the most important regulations could not be enforced, and would in all probability be rarely observed at all. Moreover, land in these remote places would be obtained at extremely low cost; and thus employers who have voluntarily separated themselves from the restraints of civilized government would have, in both these respects, an appreciable advantage over those of existing British Colonies. To encourage planting enterprises of this kind, which for reasons above stated would not be desirable on other grounds, would thus appear open to this additional objection, that it would be to foster new interests deserving of little consideration at the expense of existing and established interests in British Colonies.

For the above reasons I hold strongly, that, even for the purely economical interests of Australasia, and apart altogether from higher considerations on the score of humanity, the best policy to be pursued in Polynesia would be to discourage planting there, except such as could be carried on in each island by the natives indigenous to it, there being no other apparent means of putting an end to the depopulation now going on, and of thus preserving the only secure foundation for commerce in the future.

For the same reason the labour trade should be inexorably suppressed, land purchases should be placed under stringent regulations, and the sale to natives of firearms, explosives, and intoxicating liquors, should be prevented by heavy penalties, all due encouragement being at the same time given to such legitimate trade as involves no recruiting and carrying away of labourers. Though

* In Hawaii as much as 6 tons of sugar is said to have been produced from an acre, while in other places 4 tons per acre is not an uncommon yield from new land.

Though an appreciable advantage has been conferred by the labour trade upon Queensland and Fiji, it is one of a very ephemeral character, which, even if no such measure of suppression be adopted, will in a few years come to an end by the exhaustion of the people who are producing it. But, on the other hand, the evils caused to the islands from which the labourers come, even when regarded simply from the point of view of Australasian interest, are according to all independent authority of a far more lasting character, and, if the trade be allowed to extend as it is now doing, will very soon become irremediable.

There are many indications in most of the islands that, within a very recent period, the population was much greater than it is now, and there appears to be no reason whatever why Polynesians should not again increase and multiply, if an effective check were given to the plainly evident causes which are now destroying them. For in tropical countries the disappearance of coloured races is by no means the necessary result of contact with whites. This is shown not only in India but by the enormous increase of population in Java and Natal, and by the fact that even in Fiji the decrease which has been going on for generations has been effectively checked, though the conditions, on account of the number of whites, are far more unfavourable than they are likely to be in the greater part of Polynesia.

I am aware that a policy directed to the saving of native races is commonly regarded, if not avowedly characterized, as undeserving of consideration when it at all affects the interests of white men; but, even if it be admitted that this view has force with reference to countries like Australia and the United States, which are fitted to be the permanent home of the superior race, I venture to think that, as regards Polynesia, it is entitled to no weight at all. For there the place of the natives as they disappear cannot be supplied by white men,—indeed, for many generations, can only be partially supplied at all, and the greater part of the islands will gradually become as useless to Australasians as if they were in the other hemisphere. On the other hand, an increasing population, under the civilizing influences of the missionary and trader, might in no long time render them of immeasurably greater value to Australasians than they are now, and would, in any case, give them a commercial importance beyond all comparison greater than that of the interests sustained by the present system of destruction.

As it would thus appear that purely economical as well as philanthropic interests point in the same direction, it remains to be considered how the object indicated can be best attained. Both this and the other object mentioned at the beginning of this paper, which has been hitherto regarded as of chief importance, might of course be secured by international agreement between the civilized Powers concerned; but such an agreement would probably be long in the making, and before it could be concluded, even if it should prove practicable at all, some of the principal dangers which are feared might be actually incurred.

Such agreement apart, the only sure means of securing the desired objects would be to annex to the British Crown, or to take under British protection, all the islands mentioned, except those which are already in the possession of civilized Powers, or where foreign interests are too predominant to admit of such a course. An undertaking of this kind would no doubt appear at first sight to involve heavy responsibility and enormous expense, and it has on that account been regarded with disfavour by those who consider, not without much reason, that British responsibilities are already heavy enough, and who recognize that the demand for national expenditure is continually increasing, while the growth of national wealth has, as regards the most recent years, by no means kept pace with it.

But, though there would indeed be a certain responsibility with reference to foreign nations, I question whether that would be of any very appreciable amount, if no attempt were made without their consent to interfere with islands in which they are specially interested. We cannot, for instance, without the consent of France, contravene the international understanding with respect to the New Hebrides; and with regard to Samoa, again, it would be both unjust and unwise to take action without the previous approval of Germany, whose existing interest in the group is considerably greater than ours, and which in keeping war vessels there for several years past, has afforded the principal protection to the white residents.

But if the commission of such follies be considered out of the question, the responsibility of adopting the proposed policy would scarcely be greater than that of leaving things as they are, and would not probably be such as to prevent its being undertaken if no additional burden to British taxpayers were necessarily involved in it.

The whole question is so evidently one rather of local than Imperial concern that, I apprehend, there need be no doubt on this latter point. If, as indicated in Lord Derby's recent despatch, England were to make a small addition to its squadron in the Western Pacific in connection with this policy, I venture to think that Australasia would not expect more. For if, as I estimate, the whole cost of administration, including that of necessary means of communication, should not exceed £100,000 per annum (and after the first year it would, I believe, fall considerably short of that sum), it may be doubted whether the expense of a single small war vessel would not bear a larger proportion to it than would fairly represent the material interests of Great Britain. It is no doubt probable that the strong attachment entertained by the people of Great Britain for their Australasian cousins (as remarkably illustrated by the almost complete unanimity of the English and Scottish Press on a recent occasion), might induce Parliament to undertake a larger share of the cost than mere material interest would require*: but knowing the just sense of dignity which is entertained by colonists with regard to the great position achieved by them, I feel satisfied that they would not only not demand, but would not permit, such a sacrifice; and I venture to think, therefore, that if this policy be adopted at the request of Australasia, the question of necessary cost to the mother country may be left entirely out of consideration.

As to the question whether Polynesia should be annexed, or merely a protectorate of it assumed, the reply which would suggest itself is that the action to be taken might be called by either name, so long as it is distinctly recognized as securing the two following objects:—

First—power to legislate in respect of, and to control, persons of all nations in their relations not only with natives but with one another.

Second—exclusion of foreign nations from assuming the sovereignty of any islands not already annexed by them.

If

* Though the notion of national sentiment prevailing over material interest is not uncommonly derided, I venture to think that the maintenance of the present Australian squadron, out of the heavily-burdened resources of the mother country, is an instance in point.

If the term "protectorate," as describing the relation to be assumed towards the islands, be held to cover these objects, it would probably be more convenient than any other; and this especially if annexation would necessarily involve the elevation of Polynesians to the status of British subjects. For it is obvious that in New Guinea, and in any of the larger islands, to enforce upon the natives the observance of British laws would be out of the question; and though punishment for outrages committed by them should, wherever possible, be preceded by trial, it would not probably be convenient to give up altogether the right to inflict it by act of war, as it might be necessary to do if they had become British subjects.

As regards the policy to be pursued in administration, I would strongly deprecate any attempt in the first instance to govern the natives. For until they know something more or better of us than they do now, their consent would be hard to obtain, and to govern them without it would be not only unjust but in a high degree impolitic and, as regards the greater part of the large islands, impracticable. As a commencement, a certain number of Commissioners (probably from twelve to twenty would be sufficient) should be stationed in the more important places. They should besides their salaries have good houses provided for them, and should be enabled to maintain a native guard, not only for police purposes but with a view to make a moral impression on the natives, which it would be more difficult to secure otherwise. These officers should have complete civil and criminal jurisdiction over whites and over individual natives in their relations to whites. Where a whole native community was at fault, either by conniving at an offence or shielding the offenders, their punishment would probably be best achieved by act of war. The latter, however, would in all probability be very seldom necessary if the officers were carefully selected, and were instructed to direct their chief attention to promote the idea of British justice and consideration. No interference in tribal warfare should be permitted, and attempts to use one tribe for the conquest of another should be prohibited, except for defence from imminent danger or under instruction from the supreme authority. But, on the other hand, the Commissioners should always show themselves ready to offer their friendly arbitration in native disputes, making it clear that the desire of peace is their only object in doing so.

By such a policy as this (which I have only sketched in the rough, leaving the details to be filled in if necessary hereafter) I feel satisfied that a desire for British Government might be made to spread round each Commissioner in an ever widening circle, and that the way might thus be prepared for the complete government of the natives such as now exists in Fiji.

The superintendence of these Commissioners should be entrusted to an officer having no other duty to perform, and able to give his whole time and attention to it. He should have at least one swift despatch vessel for every five Commissioners; and his powers should be similar to those of the present High Commissioner, from which, if dangerous complications are to be avoided, that of deporting persons dangerous to good order must certainly not be excluded.

The Chief Commissioner's place of residence, though a matter of comparatively little importance, is one as to which I have much doubt. All things considered, I am at present inclined to think that it should be in Australia, and probably in Melbourne, where he would be comparatively free from the pressure of interests at variance with the policy to be pursued, and would, with the assistance of the telegraph, be quite as well able to perform his duties as if he lived further north. As it would be important that he should make occasional visits to the different posts, and business would have to be transacted at head-quarters in his absence, he would require to be furnished with an assistant, armed with all his own powers. Probably there might also be required in the islands a few medical men for quarantine purposes, and perhaps also a small number of Customs officers, if it were deemed necessary to raise a revenue to meet expenditure. But in any case the administrative staff required for a long time to come would be very small, if the policy above indicated were to be strictly kept in view. What would be necessary when the islands began to be governed in the ordinary sense may well be left for future consideration.

I have left to the last the important question whether the control of administration should be Imperial or Colonial. That it not only would be, but in no long time ought to be, undertaken by the confederated Colonies, I regard as beyond doubt, and the question is really therefore one which concerns only the immediate future.

Having had many and varied opportunities of learning what is required to obtain the confidence and respect of natives, and having seen how common is the want, even in able and humane men, of that imaginative faculty which enables the recognition of this, I must frankly confess that it is not altogether without anxiety that I contemplate the conduct of a great experiment of this kind by Colonies which, however remarkably supplied with able statesmen, have had either no experience at all of native government, or such as was gained under conditions that would for this purpose render it worse than useless.

But, on the other hand, I fully recognize the difficulty in the way of Imperial control; which must, I fear, be regarded as out of the question. Assuming therefore that the policy above indicated would be pursued, I should immeasurably prefer the control of a confederated Australasia, even in the first instance, to the continuance of the present condition of things. The above assumption, however, I regard as all-important; and I make it in the confidence that the public opinion of a large confederation, as distinguished from one swayed by local interests, will be such as to warrant it. I am satisfied that when the true position of things comes to be recognized, Australasians will refuse to permit a policy which, for the sake of a temporary and selfish end, would destroy a whole population, and would thus render eventually useless possessions likely under better auspices to be of inestimable value to their descendants.

For this, I emphatically repeat, would be the result of present colonization for any other than trade purposes, as unmistakably foreshadowed by many instances in history, and by the present condition not only of the Western Pacific but of the apparently flourishing kingdom of Hawaii. As the latter is likely to be quoted as in one respect an instance against me, I think it may be useful for this and other reasons to draw attention to its circumstances.

It is true that the revenue of Hawaii and the value of its exports have greatly increased during the last few years, despite the decay of its native population. This, however, has been entirely due to the reciprocity treaty with the United States, under which Hawaiian sugar enters the American market without any payment of duty, and thus has an enormous advantage* over imports from any other country.

Under

* I believe this amounts to about £12 per ton, a sum equal to the total cost of production in some of the West India Colonies.

Under these exceptional, and as I venture to think unhealthy, conditions, Hawaiian planters are able to pay wages to their imported labour such as under ordinary circumstances would leave no margin of profit; and yet even this temptation is failing to keep up the required supply, and the Government is at this moment seeking to supplement it from the very islands which have been the subject of this paper, and which under the ægis of an Australasian Dominion will, I trust, in no long time be protected against such enterprise.

As showing how the latter is sometimes regarded in the United States, I quote from a recent number of an American paper:—"It is evident that the supply of Scandinavians and Portuguese for Hawaiian sugar-fields is running short. A schooner has just been despatched to the South Sea Islands to gather recruits from the New Hebrides and Solomon Islands and other groups. The captain is fortified by letters and presents from Kalakaua for the chiefs of the island, and it is expected that with their aid a large number of these poor islanders may be secured for the sugar-coated slavery by which the reciprocity monopolists thrive." It is of course probable that there exist in Hawaii excellent regulations on paper for the protection of imported labourers, and it is even possible that they may be carried out; but, in view of the difficulties which have been encountered in British Crown Colonies, and knowing that Hawaii is completely controlled by the sugar interest, I should in any case have had grave doubts on this point, even if a complaint recently received from a neighbouring island had not given special reason for them; and that these doubts are shared by others than myself is shown by the recent refusal of the Indian Government to permit the importation of its subjects there. Though the language of the American writer above quoted may be unjustifiably strong, I cannot but regard as open to question the humanity of a Government with reference to coloured labourers if, after all the experience of the past, it permits white men, and especially such as come from a climate like that of Scandinavia, to be imported for field work on tropical sugar plantations. If this action has been allowed, it will afford only another striking instance of how the greed of money-making adds to the sum of human suffering, and one which will not be without use in forming the judgment of Australasians upon some of the opinions which I have above ventured to express.

But what I chiefly wish to point out in the case of Hawaii is the condition of its native population, under a Government which, though nominally that of a native King, is controlled by white men's interests alone, and in the face of a colonization such as that not uncommonly desired for Polynesia. That population, which was estimated at 250,000 sixty years ago, had within the last decade been reduced to 40,000. Since the late epidemic of small-pox it can scarcely exceed 25,000, and in the course of another generation it will in all probability be extinct. When that occurs a few white men may still become rich on such labour as can be brought from China or elsewhere, but even that prospect would be out of the question on the occurrence of the often-threatened repeal of the reciprocity treaty. In any case, is this a future which Australasians would desire for Polynesia? I feel sure that it is not; and I have every confidence that their statesmen will forego immediate advantages which can be purchased only at so heavy a cost, and will direct their energies to the real civilization of these savage islanders instead of a sham one—which means nothing less than their destruction.

In expressing some of the above views, let me not be for a moment misunderstood as saying that colonization of the ordinary kind, as distinguished from the policy recommended, might not for a few years be profitable. Indeed, if in connection with it the labour trade were permitted to continue without check, it might no doubt for a short time be very profitable in places situated in the immediate neighbourhood of islands from which labourers could be cheaply imported. But what I do say is that the benefit would be derived by very few, and those principally capitalists, while the cost, not only to the natives but to present and future Australasians, would be out of all proportion.

Let me endeavour, therefore, in conclusion, to forecast, from experience already acquired in these seas, what would be the immediate result of such colonization as apart from the ultimate one of native extinction.

I may premise by saying that, in so far as is known, all, or nearly all, land in Polynesia is owned in community, and that the greater part of the people as well as the chiefs have individual rights in it. Now one of the first results of the policy deprecated would be a rush of land speculators to all parts of the Pacific. The probability that the greater part of the land purchased would not be utilized for generations would no more be recognized generally than it is at the present moment in Fiji; and even many who did recognize it would buy in the hope of selling at a profit.

That in all, or even in the majority, of these purchases all the owners would willingly join in the sale is in a very high degree improbable. Perhaps in most cases the chief owners would take part, and where these were powerful the rest might accord a compulsory acquiescence, which would be repudiated on the first favourable occasion. But some transactions would unquestionably take place such as that reported in the following telegram, which I extract from a recent issue of an Australian newspaper:—"From our own correspondent. Port Moresby, via Cooktown, 15,000 acres of good sugar land has been bought for a Sydney syndicate at 1d. per acre. The real owner of the land was never seen, and took no part in the transaction."

But whether all, or part, or none of the owners take part in sales, it is certain that for a long time to come natives will for the most part be unable to appreciate the effect of absolute alienation. Their own alienations have no effect beyond existing lives; and though they may seem to understand transfer in fee simple when it is explained to them, and under the temptation of some immediate benefit, their almost complete inability to look forwards precludes the possibility of its real meaning being fully comprehended.

Again, the deeds of many of such purchases will in all probability (as has happened in Fiji) describe large blocks, the back boundaries of which are unknown both to the native and the white man, while the latter only will at all comprehend the extent of area. The villages and planting lands of whole tribes may sometimes also be expected to be included (as again has happened not only in Fiji but in Samoa and elsewhere); and when the people discover that they are offered the alternative of becoming the serfs of the white man or of removing to the lands of other and perhaps hostile tribes, they will in most instances either resist its enforcement, or indulge in secret retaliation of a more protracted character.

Such evils would no doubt be considerably less if a law were enacted that no purchases would be recognized unless made through or from the Government; but they would be by no means entirely precluded. Indeed, I can conceive no provision, practicable of enforcement, which would prevent some of the worst consequences to be feared; and I have not the slightest doubt, that by the end of two or three years years after annexation, there would have been fighting and bloodshed in almost every island annexed. In the small islands, the greater part of which could be dealt with by ships of war, this would be of comparatively little moment; but in New Guinea especially, and also in New Britain, New Ireland, and the larger Solomons, it would mean either military expeditions involving great cost, or continual warfare with the settlers for an indefinite period.

But even if the above picture should be overcoloured—and I am satisfied that many who have a better acquaintance with the subject than I have will not regard it so—I apprehend that no one at all fit to form an opinion upon it will doubt that a policy of agricultural colonization will involve enormous cost, not only for additional war vessels but for police purposes. I would ask, therefore, are Australasians prepared to pay this? or will they, however small the preliminary expense, desire a measure which may at the best enrich a few capitalists or speculators, and afford a livelihood for some years to a few thousand others; but which will much more certainly be the cause of horrors unspeakable, and eventually render tenantless and desolate one of the fairest portions of God's earth.

After reading over this paper, and recognizing a want of lucidity in the logical connection of its argument, besides other obvious defects, I deem it necessary to say that, though I have thought much on the subject to which it refers, the idea of writing it occurred to me only a few days before it required to be finished. It has therefore been composed hastily, under a heavy pressure of other duty; and for want of the necessary books of reference I have been compelled to trust unduly to memory. For these reasons there are also probably some errors. These however must, I think, be very great indeed to affect the general conclusion; and in any case I trust that I may have afforded information on a subject of which but little is generally known, and may have made some few suggestions likely to be of use, with reference to a question of such vital importance to the Australasian future.

It is also incumbent upon me to say that, though I hold a position which causes me to take a deep interest in the affairs of the Western Pacific, my opinions, as above expressed, are in this sense unofficial, that I have been unable to obtain for them the previous sanction of, and am unaware how they may be regarded by, Her Majesty's Government.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION, 1883.

NOTES ON SOME UNDERTAKINGS OF FEDERAL IMPORTANCE IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

(By His Excellency Governor F. Napier Broome, C.M.G.)

Commanding geographical position of Western Australia.
Fortification of King George's Sound.
First and last port of call of Australian mails.
Eucla Telegraph

THE commanding geographical position of Western Australia, upon the seaboard of the continent nearest to India, to Europe, and to England, cannot fail to give that Colony a more important place in the Australian system of the future than its present resources and population would seem to indicate. The fortification of King George's Sound has lately been declared to be part of the general scheme of continental defence, and this excellent harbour has for many years been the first and last port of call of the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, which carry the principal European mails of the Eastern Colonies. Since 1877 the arrival and departure of these mails has been notified to Adelaide, Melbourne, Sydney, and Brisbane by means of the Eucla telegraph, a work of Federal importance. The object of these notes, which I take the liberty of transmitting to the Australasian Convention through the representative of this Government, is to draw attention to some other West Australian undertakings, also of high intercolonial value.

Eucla Railway.

The chief of these, and one which may be called a truly Federal work, is the projected Eucla railway, by which it is proposed to connect Fremantle with South Australia. The total length of this line will be 840 miles, of which a section of 90 miles, from Fremantle to York, is now in course of completion, and will shortly be open. The construction of the remaining 750 miles, with borrowed capital, would be an enterprise quite beyond the present resources of Western Australia, and would probably have to remain in abeyance until it could be undertaken by the Federal Government of the future, were it not for a proposal to proceed with it on the Land Grant System. A syndicate of capitalists now offers to build and work the entire railway, in consideration of a grant of 12,000 acres of land per mile. The scheme has been approved; and, if the syndicate be as prepared as would appear, the whole line may be completed in ten or twelve years. In conjunction with this railway, the West Australian Government propose to construct at Fremantle harbour works which will render that port safe and commodious for the largest steamers, and plans for these works have been prepared by Sir John Coode. The estimate of cost is £638,000 or £242,000, according as a larger or smaller scheme be adopted.

Fremantle Harbour Works.

Continental advantage of the Eucla Railway.

The continental advantage of this Eucla line of railway is so great and manifest that its construction, even should the present scheme fall through, can only be a matter of time. Coming first to Fremantle from Ceylon, the European mail steamers would reach Australia at a saving of three degrees of southing, and of about 300 miles of distance, as compared with the present arrival at King George's Sound. Passengers landing at Fremantle would avoid the rough and cold weather of the voyage round the Leeuwin and across the Australian Bight; and both mails and passengers—presuming the railway to be continued from Eucla, in the same manner as the intercolonial telegraph, by the South Australian Government—would reach the Eastern Colonies from two to four days sooner than at present, after a land-journey through the most temperate regions of Australia. The time thus economized would be a most valuable saving in the business of the continent.

Submarine Cable to Ceylon or Singapore.

A second trans-continental Telegraph.

The West Australian Government have just taken a step which will, it is hoped, solve the difficulties arising out of the existing monopoly of the Eastern Telegraph Company. They have granted a concession to Sir Julius Vogel, for twenty-one years, for the laying of a Submarine Cable from a point on the North-west coast to Ceylon or Singapore. The inland lines of the Colony will in a few months form a second trans-continental telegraph, another work of intercolonial value. They will be completed over a distance of 2,113 miles, from Eucla to Roebourne, where the new cable will probably be landed. The distance from Roebourne to Ceylon is about 2,600 miles, to Singapore about 1,300 miles, and it is a condition of the concession that the cable is to be laid and ready for use within five years. It is scarcely necessary to point out that this additional submarine line will be of the highest advantage to all the Australian Colonies, placing them, as it will, in more certain, and probably considerably cheaper and speedier telegraphic communication with the world than at present.

Breaksea Island Cable and Signal Station.

In connection with the subject of telegraphs, it may be mentioned that the West Australian Government, having been in communication with the Committee of Lloyds on the matter, are now laying a short submarine cable from Breaksea Island, off King George's Sound, to the mainland. This signalling station will be very useful to Australian shipping, as Breaksea Island is the first land made after passing the Leeuwin.

A light of the first order, and an ocean signal station, on Cape Leeuwin itself would be most desirable, and a work of Federal importance. It would cost about £12,000. The West Australian Government have not felt justified in incurring this expense, since it considers that the cost of such a light-house should be contributed to by the other Colonies, or that the general boon to shipping would warrant, as in the case of the Great Basses and other lights, the levying of a due, guaranteed by Imperial and Local Acts. If the matter could be arranged on this basis, Western Australia would be glad to contribute its share of the expense, and to execute the work.

Cape Leeuwin
Light-house and Signal Station.

It has been proposed to organize a Federal Quarantine Station at King George's Sound. The Government of the Colony are ready to give every facility, and it may be hoped that a basis of action on this and other Federal matters of pressing need will be settled or suggested during the sitting of the Convention.

Federal Quarantine Station at King George's Sound.

The systematic Marine Survey of the coasts of Western Australia, begun ten years ago, is a work of Federal value. The expense is borne jointly by the Admiralty and the Colony. The survey is steadily progressing, and a great extent of coast line, from King George's Sound and Cape Leeuwin in the South to the new port of King Sound in the far North—entered a month or two ago by a merchant steamer for the first time—has been carefully mapped, and sounded out to the 100 fathoms edge. One important result of the survey is that the Rambler and Beaver reefs, so long a cause of anxiety to seamen, have been conclusively proved not to exist. The West Australian seaboard embraces nearly half the continent, but she has kept pace with the sister Colonies in providing mariners with full and accurate charts. Taking into account her small means, she has probably spent a larger proportionate sum than any other State of the continent in perfecting the knowledge of Australian waters.

Marine Survey of West Australian Coast.

These few notes may serve to show how the geographical position of the Western Colony already connects it in no small degree with works and projects of continental concern, promising to make it the thoroughfare of the European mails, passengers, and telegrams of the federated Dominion of the future; and how its Government and Legislature are occupying themselves with undertakings which must tend to knit the Colony more closely to the rest of Australia.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION.

ON THE SUBJECT OF THE ANNEXATION OR PROTECTORATE OF NEW GUINEA AND THE WESTERN PACIFIC ISLANDS.

The Agents-General for New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria, to Lord Derby.

My Lord,

London, 21 July, 1883.

In accordance with the desire expressed by your Lordship on the occasion of our recent interview with you, we purpose now to place before your Lordship in writing the representations which we then submitted to you on the annexation or protectorate of the Western Pacific Islands and the eastern portion of New Guinea.

It is no doubt well known to your Lordship that during a period now extending over more than thirty years, the Australasian Colonies have one after another pressed upon Her Majesty's Government the expediency of bringing the islands of the Western Pacific within the dominion or the protection of England; and we feel assured that the whole question will appear to your Lordship invested with a graver aspect, when for the first time the Governments of nearly all the Dependencies of England in Australasia come before Her Majesty's Government to make a united remonstrance against the present state of affairs in the Western Pacific, and to ask from the Imperial authority the adoption of such a definite policy and purpose as they believe is essential to their future well-being.

It is true that fear of foreign intervention has been the immediate cause of this concerted action on the part of the Australasian Governments; and this, we understood, seemed to your Lordship hardly adequate to justify a strong sense of present danger. We can assure you that our Governments would receive with a sense of great relief your Lordship's assurance that there is no foundation for our fears. But it is not only the apprehension of immediate foreign intervention that has influenced our Governments, nor would its removal change their opinion as to the necessity for making it impossible in the future. Other powerful reasons bring them together to urge upon the Imperial Government the necessity of a policy different from the one that has been pursued in the past: the conviction, indeed, that the state of things in the Western Pacific has at last become intolerable. We feel that we ought not to say this without an attempt to trace the course of events that have led to so grave a declaration.

It was in 1848 that Sir George Grey, then Governor of New Zealand, first called the attention of the Imperial Government to a "species of trade in the native inhabitants which had commenced in the Pacific," and to the danger of foreign annexation, pointing out the necessity of providing against these in time. For many years successive appeals of the same kind, and from one Colony after another, were made to Her Majesty's Government to interfere. In the meanwhile, the constant repetition of outrages in the Pacific had become such a scandal to civilization that the Imperial Government resolved to make a vigorous attempt to repress them. The Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, which had been in existence in various forms since 1828, and the Pacific Islanders Protection Act of 1872, had proved insufficient to meet the increasing difficulties of the case. At last, in 1875, two Acts of Parliament were passed, amending the former law, defining more clearly the powers and jurisdiction of Her Majesty in the Pacific Ocean, and creating the office of High Commissioner for the Western Pacific. These were followed, two years after, by the promulgation of the "Western Pacific Order in Council of 1877," which established the High Commissioner's Court, with elaborate provision for the government of the Western Pacific: and the new Colony of Fiji, which had meanwhile been created in 1876, became the centre of the High Commissioner's operations.

The humane intentions of the Imperial Government in these measures have always commanded the respect and sympathy of the Australasian Colonies: and if it had ever been possible to give them real effect, we should not be addressing your Lordship to-day; but there was an inherent difficulty, the result of which could hardly have been foreseen at the time, but which was certain to paralyze every endeavour to confer the benefits of law and order on the vast region, stretching from New Guinea across the Pacific Ocean, which those measures embraced. The Act of 1875, which created the office of High Commissioner, only empowered Her Majesty to "exercise power and jurisdiction over her subjects" within the islands, and expressly declared that nothing in the Act or in any Order in Council under it should "extend, or be construed to extend, to invest Her Majesty with any claim or title whatsoever to dominion or sovereignty" over the islands, or to "derogate from the rights of the tribes or people inhabiting them, or of their chiefs or rulers, to such sovereignty or dominion." And although the powers of the Order in Council were apparently extended so as to include foreigners in a few specified cases, they were practically restricted to British subjects only, for no foreigner could be brought under the High Commissioner's jurisdiction unless he could produce "the consent in writing of the competent authority on behalf of his own nation," a condition which, from the nature of things, could seldom if ever be fulfilled.

Nor did the Order in Council fully carry out the idea with which it had been originally devised. Though the Act was passed in 1875, it was not till 1877 that the Order in Council under it was issued; and it was not till 1878 that it could be brought into operation in the Pacific. Meanwhile the intentions of

Her

Her Majesty's Government had undergone some change. Differences arose between the naval authorities and the Acting High Commissioner as to their respective powers. The work to be done was daily becoming more and more difficult, and the nature of the difficulty was becoming better known to Her Majesty's Government. Hardly was the Order in Council brought into operation, when it was found to be too intricate and complicated an instrument, bristling as it did with technicalities and minute provisions in precise legal language, to be really workable. The High Commissioner described the position in which he was placed in the clearest terms. His jurisdiction being one extending over British subjects exclusively, he had no authority whatever to deal, whether judicially or in his executive capacity, with offences by natives of islands not under the dominion of the Crown. He more than once represented to the Imperial Government, that unless such a jurisdiction were created as would be competent to take cognizance also of offences committed against British subjects, the infliction of punishment on these for outrages against natives in the same regions was certain to excite on their part a natural irritation, and a sense of being treated with injustice. But the reply to his representations invariably was, that "in the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, insuperable obstacles existed to any assumption of jurisdiction by Her Majesty over other than British subjects, beyond the limits of Her dominions."

Sir A. Gordon,
July 16, 1881.

Sir A. Gordon,
Feb. 26, 1881.

The High Commissioner could not with fairness be reproached for not having exercised a jurisdiction which he had been strictly forbidden to assume. Early in 1881 he reminded Lord Kimberley how often the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been painfully called to the greatly increased frequency of the murder of Europeans by natives in the islands of the Western Pacific; this he attributed (among other causes) to the "far greater intercourse between whites and natives," and to the possession of firearms by the latter, "which had given them a confidence and boldness they did not before possess." Later on he recommended that power should be granted for the trial of natives for offences against British subjects, where such a power might be conceded by the native chiefs themselves; but it would have been no easier to get the assent of the natives than that of foreigners. The High Commissioner regretted that so elaborate an instrument as the Order in Council had been in the first instance prepared; and he represented that of its 321 articles by far the greater part were never called into use, that it was constantly found, in the remoter regions of the Pacific, impossible to comply with its directions, and that the powers intended to be conferred by it were therefore ineffectual. So things went on from 1877 to 1881.

Sir A. Gordon,
April 23, 1881.

Sir A. Gordon,
July 16, 1881.

Another year elapsed, and the evils only got worse. In the hope of lessening them, the High Commissioner appointed two officers, Captain Dale, R.N., and Captain Cyprian Bridge, R.N., commanding H.M.S. "Diamond," and Espiègle, to be Deputy Commissioners. But the old difficulty reasserted itself at once, that there was no jurisdiction over foreigners: the evil-doers of any nation had only to represent themselves as belonging to some other nationality in order to escape control. In his instructions to the Deputy Commissioners, Sir A. Gordon warned them that they would have difficulty in ascertaining who were British subjects and who were not, because many would seek to plead some other nationality; and that they would find caution to be essentially requisite, as they had no jurisdiction whatever over any foreigner unless he submitted to it voluntarily. There was never any doubt that this device of assuming other nationalities would be resorted to by criminals; but it was hardly necessary to resort to it, for outrages in which foreigners were openly concerned took place. A boat from a vessel named the "Aurora," flying the French flag, had a collision with the natives of an island called Api, in the New Hebrides group, in which the chief of a small village was shot. The natives thereupon resolved to murder the first white man they could in revenge. An English labour vessel, the "Dauntless," went to the island shortly afterwards to recruit labourers; her boat was decoyed to the beach, when the natives opened fire with rifles, killing the second mate and wounding the Government Agent. Complaints were often made of there being cases of kidnapping by French vessels at one island or another, and consequent threats of the natives that they would kill the first white man who went there. An inquiry was held at Noumea respecting the French vessel "Aurora." In her case it was clearly shown that the crew had put in practice the worst form of kidnapping, such as staving in or running down canoes, capturing the natives, and shooting those who attempted to escape. Labourers were being apparently recruited by the crews of vessels, nearly all of which flew foreign flags. The planters of all nationalities were greatly exasperated by the conduct of masters of labour vessels, both French and English, in enticing away their servants. Where the foreigner committed an outrage, he was not amenable to punishment; where he suffered injury, he could get no redress in the High Commissioner's Court.

But if there was serious trouble by reason of there being no jurisdiction over foreigners, another trouble was growing up even more serious because there was none over natives. So far from outrages diminishing after the Order in Council was promulgated they increased. In November, 1880, Commander Bower, R.N. of H.M.S. "Sandfly," with a boat's crew, was put to death on a small island of the Solomon group, under circumstances of much barbarity. The Governor of New South Wales reported to the Colonial Office that "the atrocious murders lately committed by the South Sea Islanders had caused and were causing a very deep feeling of pain and indignation." The newspapers teemed with accounts of these outrages: it was said that "no week passed without the announcement of another massacre in the Islands." The exasperation predicted by Sir Arthur Gordon as certain to occur was becoming greater every day. Early in 1881 Lord Kimberley, in a despatch to the High Commissioner, deplored the "unusual number of outrages by natives upon white men which had recently been reported to the Colonial Office." In the meanwhile stern reprisals had been resorted to. When the outrage took place at the island of Api in revenge for what had been done by the crew of a French vessel, the Commodore had gone down in H.M.S. "Wolverene" and landed a party of 100 seamen and marines, who destroyed four of the villages implicated, and cut down the fruit plantations in their vicinity. And now, after the "Sandfly" outrage, the Commodore felt it his duty to take even severer measures. In December, 1880, he sent down Captain Maxwell, R.N., in H.M.S. "Emerald," to inflict punishment not only for the "Sandfly murders, but for others that had been committed on crews of the vessels "Ripple," "Esperanza," "Borealis," and "Anne Brooks." The punishment was very severe. From bay to bay, from island to island, the villages were set in flames, the cocoa-nut and other fruit trees cut down, and the canoes destroyed. "There was no more to be done," said Captain Maxwell, "in the way of hunting these wretched people. . . . They have been hunted and worried till it will be long before they settle again. . . . I regret that my whole voyage in these islands has been one of apparently ruthless destruction, but no other course has been possible." Nor was this enough. A few months afterwards a still stronger step was taken. Commander Bruce, of Commander Bruce, May 15, 1881. H.M.S. "Cormorant," was sent to the Florida Isles by the Commodore to bring the perpetrators of the "Sandfly" murders to justice. There he issued a declaration that "In consequence of an English officer and boat's crew being murdered by Florida men, the Queen of England declares war with the whole tribes of Floridas, unless the actual murderers are given up in fourteen days"; adding that "in case of any other white man being killed in the Florida Isles, the whole of the chiefs would be held responsible, and the Florida Islands be considered to be at war with the Queen of England." Bishop Selwyn, being then on the spot, humanely did all he could to save life. Writing to Commander Bruce, he says:—"I have acted as I have done, because you, sir, as the representative of Her Majesty, have declared war against all the people of these islands unless the murderers are given up. It appears to me to be my duty to save the people from such a calamity, by using what influence I possess to induce them to comply with Her Majesty's demands." The Commodore "fully approved of the 'Cormorant's' action at the Floridas." Thus it seemed that a naval officer, in reprisals for an outrage, might issue a "declaration of war" against entire tribes in the Western Pacific, and that what he required must be considered as being "Her Majesty's demands." Surely it was not this which could ever have been looked for as the outcome of the scheme of 1875 for the government of the Western Pacific.

Remedies which were suggested.

It is no wonder that such a state of things should have caused serious anxiety to Her Majesty's Government, or that the Secretary of State should have desired the High Commissioner to advise what was now to be done. That the Order in Council had failed was evident; "an acknowledgment," says Sir Arthur Gordon, "that the present system is a failure, and the consequent repeal of the Order in Council would have the merit of simplicity." But the question was what should be put in its place. When the news came home of the events we have just described, Lord Kimberley sent a despatch to the Governor of Queensland, saying that it was contemplated to invite the naval powers to agree to the appointment of a Joint Commission for considering the measures which should be taken for the regulation of the labour traffic, the trade in firearms, and the prevention and punishment of outrages of all kinds, under the sanction of a Convention between Her Majesty's Government and the other Powers. The Queensland Government immediately expressed their willingness to co-operate with the Imperial authorities for such a plan. The High Commissioner expressed his own concurrence. "Some sort of international agreement," he said, "seems to me to form an essential part of any satisfactory arrangement." He then went on to make several recommendations for improving the existing system, one of which was that the judicial powers conferred by the Orders in Council should be so extended by Act of Parliament as to render offences committed by natives against British subjects equally cognizable with those committed by British subjects against natives. But it would evidently have been useless to assume jurisdiction over the native people and continue to except foreigners. Nor did the High Commissioner shrink from admitting this. "To obtain," he said, "the power of dealing satisfactorily with the misdeeds of other whites than Englishmen, or of punishing attacks upon them, an international agreement, having the sanction of a treaty, with France, Germany, and the United States, would be necessary. Such an arrangement would probably involve the substitution for the High Commission of a mixed Commission similar to the old mixed Commission Slave Trade Courts." And Sir Arthur Gordon then went on, with perfect truth, to touch the real kernel of the whole matter. "It should be borne in mind," he said, "that the punishment of outrages, though at present forced into prominence, is not the only nor the most important matter which has to be dealt with in these seas;" and he reminded the Secretary of State that the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner and his Court was one "primarily created to bring law, both civil and criminal, within the reach of British subjects far from all other legal tribunals, to check aggressive lawlessness, and to regulate the growth and development of British settlements in the Western Pacific." This was wise language. But when such recommendations were made, it was difficult to escape the logical conclusion from them. Once let it be admitted that the Imperial Government can pass an Act such as was advised by the High Commissioner, and is there anything but the thinnest veil left between that and the assertion of the very right of "sovereignty or dominion" which it was the purpose of the Act of 1875 to forbid?

It would not be fair if we did not refer to other remedies which were suggested by the High Commissioner. Early in 1881, after reciting the causes for the increased frequency of murder of Europeans by natives in the Western Pacific, Sir Arthur Gordon referred to two ways by which they could be prevented in future. "One is," he said, "that which I know on good authority was seriously contemplated by Her Majesty's Government some years ago,—the establishment of a strong chartered Company possessing an exclusive right to trade. . . . Another course would be to limit the protection given for trading operations, to those carried on at certain specified localities." But Sir Arthur Gordon even then allowed that the time for any scheme of a chartered Company had passed; and last year he proposed another plan to improve the working of the existing High Commission, the leading features of which, in addition to extending his jurisdiction by a new Act of Parliament, were the appointment of three Deputy-Commissioners, the conferring of Deputy-Commissioners' powers on naval officers in command of H.M. cruisers, and the permanent employment of a vessel, not a man-of-war, in the service of the Commission.

Whatever might have been the recommendations some years ago, in favour of granting an exclusive right of trading in the Western Pacific to a chartered Company, we entirely agree with Sir Arthur Gordon that the time for any such scheme has long gone by. An elaborate plan was devised in 1876 by Sir Julius Vogel, then Premier of New Zealand, and the present Premier of that Colony, Mr. Whitaker, for the establishment of a great trading Company for the Western Pacific; but it fell to the ground, as any scheme of the kind now proposed must inevitably do. There are no circumstances in the Pacific similar to those which were held to justify the granting of a Royal Charter, in November, 1881, to the North Borneo Company; on the contrary, there are circumstances essentially adverse to any plan of the kind. But even if there were not, we may point to two things which alone ought now to dismiss it from consideration. In the first place, it would always have been futile to imagine that any grant of exclusive rights of trade to a Company would be effectual even in the case of British traders; not only would they have traded in spite of it, but at no time after the promulgation of the Order in Council could any such exclusive grant have been made without grave injustice to them; while, as regards foreigners, such a right would not have affected the French, German, and American traders; and if it was not to be respected by everybody, it must necessarily fail as a remedy. There are already French Companies established in New Caledonia, whose operations operations extend over many of the islands, and there will certainly be several others. By what process could these Companies be prevented from trading? The slightest attempt to do so would show how the question ever comes back to the same point; to the exercise, namely, of rights of "sovereignty and dominion." But in the second place, we feel sure that your Lordship will allow that, in any scheme for giving a chartered Company exclusive rights of trade, the interests and the wishes of Australasia could not be left out of consideration. Now, the exclusive right to trade could not exist for a moment in the islands without some right to govern; and the Governments of Australasia could not be expected to acquiesce in any right of government being transferred from the Imperial authority to any other authority than their own.

Moreover, even if anything could be said for the palliatives which have been suggested as being applicable to the smaller groups of islands, it is certain that they would be utterly useless in the case of New Guinea. Sir Arthur Gordon has himself pointed out the only means by which the question of New Guinea can ever be settled. His opinion on this subject has long been familiar to your Lordship, but it is only now that it has become known. "I am irresistibly compelled," he said, "to adopt a conclusion, which I should have wished to avoid, and which I was at first inclined to think might be avoided, namely, that the annexation by Great Britain of at least certain portions of New Guinea will speedily become inevitable, even if the necessity for such a step has not already arisen. . . Could I see any other way of dealing satisfactorily with such a state of things, I would recommend a resort to it; but I must with regret admit that after the most careful consideration, I am unable to perceive any mode of meeting these difficulties except by annexation; for it appears to me necessary that territorial jurisdiction should be assumed by Great Britain, to enable us to deal with offences committed by foreigners associated with British settlers, or with those committed by natives, and unless such jurisdiction over them be assumed, I question the practicability of exercising it with the smallest degree of efficiency over British subjects themselves; and I must confess, therefore, that I see no middle course between annexation and the abandonment of all control over the acts of British subjects in New Guinea, involving a practical acquiescence in the establishment there of a reign of lawless violence and anarchy. This latter is a course which we cannot creditably adopt, and which, indeed, were we disposed to take it, we should after a time be forced to abandon. A greater or less degree of annexation, consequently, appears to be inevitable. Should there be any other method, unknown to me but known to Her Majesty's Government, by which such cases could be met, I need not say I should prefer its adoption."

Sir A. Gordon,
Nov. 22, 1873

It is true that this opinion was given by the High Commissioner at a time when there was much excitement over the reported existence of rich gold-fields in New Guinea, and when an expectation existed of a great influx of miners taking place there, which was never fulfilled. But though gold-mining on a large scale has not yet come to aggravate the evils described by the High Commissioner, other events have happened whose impelling force has not been less towards the same solution than would have been the presence of a large body of miners. To these we shall refer later on.

Trade.

We have endeavoured to trace the events which have gradually but surely been pressing with ever increasing force for a new policy on the Western Pacific question. We now turn from these to a matter just as pressing, namely, the constantly growing trade of all that region.

At the end of 1881 Commodore Wilson collected from the various Customs officers some valuable returns of the commerce between the Australasian Colonies and the Western Pacific Islands; from these we have taken out the following evidence of what the trade amounted to in the ten years from 1871 to 1880:—

Customs returns: Commodore Wilson,
Feb. 26, 1882.

Colony.	Vessels.	Tonnage.	Value.
			Imports.	Exports.	Total.
New South Wales	1,305	395,391	2,147,858	2,726,227	4,874,085
Victoria.....	187	67,725	162,095	110,647	272,742
Queensland	320	47,390	2,899	83,800	86,699
New Zealand	908	349,681	705,223	548,187	1,253,410
	2,720	860,187	3,018,075	3,468,861	6,486,936

The Commodore did not merely point out how large was, even at that time, the value of this trade: he said significantly that "as yet the sources of trade may be said to be in their infancy." He might have added that these Customs returns only included, of course, the British trade, and took no account of foreign traders: if the French, German, and American trade could have been added, the total would have amounted to a much larger sum than 6½ millions. It is needless for us to point out that the greater part of the produce of the Western Pacific only passes through Australia, and really comes to England. That this produce will greatly increase is beyond doubt. The whole trade, indeed, of the Pacific is destined to undergo a great change whenever the Panama Canal is made. It is then that will be seen the foresight of France in establishing herself at Tahiti and the Marquesas: and the Navigators, with the splendid harbour on Tutuila Island, will come into a new importance, while the Fiji group will become the nearest colony of England in the Pacific.

The pearl-shell and bêche de mer fisheries alone amount to nearly a million sterling annually. The growth of sugar plantations is equally remarkable. Probably £1,000,000 has been spent in Queensland alone in creating sugar estates where only a few years ago there was nothing but the wilderness: the actual produce of these estates is already 19,000 tons, and in three years will probably be 50,000 tons. The great importance of this to Australasia will at once be seen from the fact that in the single year 1881 sugar to the value of close on £2,700,000 was imported into Australia and New Zealand, of which the import from Mauritius exceeded £1,500,000. It is quite certain there will be a great extension of the growth of sugar in Queensland and Fiji, and in it a constantly larger amount of Polynesian labour is sure to be employed. Now the necessity of further regulations for the labour trade and traffic in firearms, by foreigners as well as our own people, is one of the things that have been most strongly pressed upon Her Majesty's Government by the highest Imperial officers, and by every authority of importance in the Colonies concerned.

Foreign.

Foreign intervention.

The chief difficulty we have in referring to this is that no one in Australasia really knows how far the ground is clear of foreign claims, or to what engagements Her Majesty's Government is now committed. It is of the first importance to define with accuracy the political relation in which each group of islands stands to-day, whether to the Imperial Government or to any Foreign Powers. We therefore trust that we may ask your Lordship to enable us to place before our Governments a full statement of what claims have yet been made by Foreign Powers, and of the extent to which such claims have been recognized by Her Majesty.

The sense of uncertainty and insecurity which prevails in Australasia on this subject may perhaps be best illustrated by what has happened in the case of the New Hebrides. That group was originally part of the Colony of New Zealand, under the Charter of 1840. At some time, of which we are not aware, a rather vague understanding appears to have been come to with the Government of France that the New Hebrides should be relinquished as a possession of the Crown and their independence recognized. In 1878, upon reports coming to Europe of a French project to annex the group, the French Ambassador declared that his Government had no intention to interfere with the independence of the islands, and asked for an assurance that Her Majesty's Government would also respect it. Your Lordship, being then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, informed the French Ambassador, with the concurrence of the Colonial Office, that Her Majesty's Government had no intention of "changing the condition of independence which the New Hebrides now enjoyed." Upon a remonstrance being made by Sir George Grey, then Premier of New Zealand, the Secretary of State replied that the New Hebrides were no longer within the limits of New Zealand, and that the Imperial Government had no intention of proceeding in the direction of a political Protectorate. In the Order in Council of 1877, the New Hebrides had (evidently by design) been omitted from the islands specified by name; nevertheless, the High Commissioner understood that his authority extended over them, for he appointed Captain Cyprian Bridge, R.N., to be a Deputy-Commissioner there, and it was in that character that Captain Bridge went down to the islands. Now we venture to ask whether it is quite certain that after Her Majesty had once been graciously pleased to include the New Hebrides in the boundaries of New Zealand, the mere fact of new boundaries being afterwards fixed for that Colony was sufficient to make the New Hebrides cease to be a possession of the Crown? At any rate, if they have ceased to be so, and there is an understanding between the Governments of England and France to respect the independence of the group, the least that can be asked is that English and French subjects shall be on the same footing there. But it transpired, in a debate in the Chamber of Deputies, on the 8th May, that a Company had been formed at New Caledonia, by a planter who had acquired 'des terrains importants' at Sandwich Island; and the Temps, only a few days ago, announced that a Company composed of colonists from New Caledonia had succeeded in "creating very important interests in the islands, had bought several of them, and had obtained large concessions in others;" whereupon that journal suggested that the "best method of procedure would be to grant to the Company rights similar to those recently accorded by the English Government to the North Borneo Company." We venture to ask whether the agreement, whatever it is, which exists between the two Governments, would allow of any grant of that kind being made by France?

Nor can the colonists feel secure against some sudden act on the part of France in annexing other islands whose independence may stand on, at any rate, no worse a footing than that of the New Hebrides. It is only a few years ago since Commodore Hoskins reported to the Admiralty that a French ship of war had been sent to the Chesterfield and Bampton Reefs by the Governor of New Caledonia, to proclaim those islands to be French territory, which "was done with the usual formalities." But the Governor of New South Wales had already granted a lease of the islets for working guano deposits; and it had to be arranged that the deposits should be worked jointly by French and English Companies until the question of title was decided, as to which Sir Hercules Robinson had sent a telegram to the Colonial Office immediately on receiving notice of the annexation from the Governor of New Caledonia. Still less can the colonists feel any security against other acts of which they have already complained. Early in 1880 a schooner arrived at Auckland from New Caledonia, chartered by the French authorities, bringing eleven political offenders, and nine convicts for criminal offences. Sir John Hall, then Premier of New Zealand, immediately telegraphed to all the Governments of Australia, asking them to join in urging Her Majesty's Government to remonstrate with the Government of the French Republic against a repetition of that act. The Government of New South Wales stated that "batches of pardoned convicts from New Caledonia had on several occasions arrived there." The Agent-General brought the case before the Colonial Office, and Lord Kimberley requested the Foreign Office to move the French Government to discontinue any shipments of convicts from New Caledonia to New Zealand. But convicts have often escaped from New Caledonia in open boats, and landed on the Queensland coast; more than fifty who came to Queensland were afterwards extradited, besides many others known to be French convicts from Noumea.

Again, by a "Reciprocal Engagement" entered into between England and France, in 1847, respecting the Raiatea group of islets (to the leeward of Tahiti), both nations bound themselves "never to take possession of the islands, either absolutely or under the title of a protectorate, or in any other form whatever." But the French flag has been hoisted for three years on those islands, without, so far as we know, any consent or recognition having been ever given by Her Majesty's Government.

Again, a scheme is being debated even now in France, which, if it is carried into effect, will be more disastrous for the Pacific than anything that has happened since the creation of the penal settlement at New Caledonia; for it is nothing less than a well-matured design for transporting for life (transportation à vie) to New Caledonia, the Loyalty Isles, and the Marquesas Islands, great numbers of French habitual criminals (récidivistes et malfaiteurs d'habitude). Four proposals to this effect were before the French Legislature, one of them a bill brought in by the Government. They were all referred together to a Committee, which reported that the Minister of the Interior had accepted certain modifications, and that there was no further difficulty. In the debates in the Chamber of Deputies, the reporter of the projet de loi (M. Gerville-Réache) stated that at least 60,000 could be sent to New Caledonia, and 23,000 to the Loyalty Islands. It was calculated that in the first year after the law came into force 5,000 convicts would be transported for life under it, and an official estimate was presented of the probable cost of sending these 5,000 to the Loyalty Islands and the Marquesas. It was said by the opponents of the measure that the number of convicts transported would be 100,000; this was denied; whereupon it was asked whether since in the very first year 5,000 were to be sent, it could be expected that the number would not increase every year after. The class to be sent was officially described by M. Gerville-Réache as dangerous, steeped in vice, debauchery, and crime (hommes dangereux, perdus de vices, usés par la débauche, souillés de tous les crimes). These criminals were to be transported for life (la rélegation consistera dans l'internement perpétuel des condamnés); but were not to serve any term of punishment and were to be free on arrival (en résumé, le transporté à son arrivée dans la colonie sera libre). The object was to rid France of them (en débarrasser la patrie). The Government was to support them at first, till they could get work; if they would not work, they must live how they could (ils vivront comme ils pourront). The projet de loi appointed New Caledonia and its dependencies, and the Marquesas Group, as "colonies to which the récidivistes were to be sent; but it was openly proposed in the debate to include the New Hebrides, the Loyalty Islands, and the Isle of Pines. The Comte de Lanjuinais said it had been talked of to send the convicts to the New Hebrides (on avait parlé d'envoyer les transportés aux Nouvelles Hébrides). M. Richard Waddington, speaking officially as a member of the Committee, said that the title to the New Hebrides was not settled (il s'agit d'une question de propriété non encore déterminée), but that he thought the French title was good, and that the French flag might very soon be hoisted on the islands (je crois que notre titre de possession est sérieux, et que dans un avenir très rapproché le pavillon de la France pourra y flotter); adding, however, that in saying so he was speaking for himself and not for the Government (en engageant ma responsabilité seule et non celle du gouvernement). Another speaker went further, and said that, in response to the supposed action of England in New Guinea, the New Hebrides would be seized by France (pour répondre à l'Angleterre, qui si audacieusement vient de mettre la main sur la Nouvelle-Guinée, nous saurons à notre tour nous emparer des Nouvelles Hébrides). The Chamber of Deputies, after adopting most of the Government Bill, sent it back for revision to the Committee, who returned it with very little alteration. They estimated that in the first four years the number of convicts to be sent would be 20,000. The colonies to which the convicts might be sent remained the same, namely, New Caledonia and its dependencies, the Marquesas, an island called Phu-Quoc, and Guiana. The Bill has passed the chamber, but is not yet before the Senate.

Your Lordship will not be surprised at our Governments urging that this scheme for making the Pacific Islands the receptacle for the dangerous classes of France, is one deserving the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government. It is impossible for Australasia to look without the gravest apprehension at the prospect of any proposal of the kind receiving the tacit acquiescence of England. What hope is there for the Pacific Islands, if a great nation like France pours into them vast numbers of her dangerous classes, not as convicts under penal servitude, but free the moment they land, so long as they do not return to France; or how can Australia and New Zealand be expected to hear with patience of such a law being passed? There have been rumours of some proposal by which the penal establishment at New Caledonia should be altogether given up by France, and the convicts transferred to the New Hebrides; the inducement being that New Caledonia would then be opened to settlement by free colonists. We do not deny that there would be an advantage in freeing New Caledonia from the curse of transportation; but the Bill before the French Chambers expressly retains New Caledonia as one of the places to which the récidivistes are to be sent; therefore, as to the New Hebrides, all the Colonies trust that full effect will be given to Lord Granville's assurance in the House of Lords a few days ago, that "both Her Majesty's Government and the French Government acknowledge in full the obligation which the understanding about the New Hebrides imposes upon both," and that the group shall not be allowed to pass in any way under the dominion of France.

Nor is it only with regard to French policy that there is, in the opinion of the colonists, cause for some apprehension. It is often said that Prince Bismarck has no desire to extend the influence of Germany to the Pacific; but what happened in the case of the Navigators group shows that idea to be a mistaken one. In the early part of 1880 a scheme was proposed in Germany for a great trading Company to take over the property of Messrs. Godeffroy. In a communication to the Imperial Under Secretary of State, Prince Bismarck laid down the conditions on which the Company was to receive a guarantee from the State of an interest of 4½ per cent on its capital, not to exceed 300,000 marks a year, and to be for twenty years. The Chancellor referred to "the interest which the State takes in the prosperity of German enterprise in the South Seas," and justified the financial assistance he proposed giving to the new Company, by reason of the Godeffroy firm having "got into difficulties which threatened the German South Sea trade with the loss of their factories and plantations in the Samoa Islands." A Bill to give effect to the Chancellor's proposal was introduced accordingly, but rejected by the German Parliament in April, 1880. Again, as recently as December last, the Royal Colonial Institute called the attention of the Colonial Office to an article in the Allgemeine Zeitung strongly advocating the annexation by Germany of Eastern New Guinea. The answer was that neither Lord Granville nor your Lordship saw any reason for supposing that the German Government contemplated any scheme of the kind; but we venture to ask that a more definite assurance should be obtained from that Government, which can hardly refuse to recognize the vital character of the matter to every Colony in Australia.

Before leaving the subject of foreign intervention, we submit that it would be expedient to settle more clearly the extent to which the independence of the chiefs in the various islands is recognized, and their right to make treaties admitted. Where the treaty-right exists, is it quite certain that the Western Pacific Order in Council is in operation? For instance, the Navigators and the Friendly Islands are among those specified by name in the Order in Council; but we understand there is an English treaty with the "king" of Tonga; and in the case of the Navigators there is a treaty with Germany, which Prince Bismarck communicated to the Reichstag in 1879. And we believe a treaty of some kind was made between Samoa and the United States, giving to the States the exclusive right of using the fine harbour at Tutuila as a coaling and naval station, the U.S. frigate "Narragansett" thereupon saluting the chief's flag with fifteen guns; indeed, this treaty was afterwards the subject of a representation by Sir Edward Thornton to the Government of Washington. Again, several of the Powers have appointed Consuls to the Islands; Her Majesty has a Consul at Rarotonga, a Consul at Samoa, and a Vice-consul at Tonga, while Sir Arthur Gordon, the High Commissioner, is Consul-General for the Pacific Islands, the conduct of relations with native States and tribes being confided to him in that capacity, under the control of the Foreign Office. As there is nothing that can be called law administered by the native States and tribes, it is difficult to see how one day the same evil will not arise from conflicting consular jurisdictions as have been so powerfully described by Lord Dufferin in the case of Egypt.

The new policy proposed.

The two things we set ourselves to show were, first, that the Western Pacific Order in Council could never be made adequate to do what is wanted, without assuming a jurisdiction hitherto forbidden by Act of Parliament; and secondly, that the fear of foreign intervention which has existed in Australia was not without warrant. For this purpose we have relied not on assertions of our own but on official records, and with hardly an exception have only spoken of events that have happened in the last three years.

If we have established these two points, then the Imperial Government can hardly reject the consequences, that the time has come when complete jurisdiction ought to be assumed by England over the Western Pacific, as the only means of meeting the difficulties which beset alike the Imperial and the Colonial Governments, and of averting evils which threaten Her Majesty's loyal subjects in all that region.

We have rejoiced to see that such a policy has already received the almost unanimous support of the English Press. Some opposition to it is perhaps only natural. We are sensible of the repugnance that exists to the idea of adding to the already vast responsibilities of England a new and admittedly immense charge like that of the Western Pacific Islands. Yet it is difficult for any one to avoid the conclusion that these islands, unless they are meanwhile lost by foreign annexation, will inevitably belong to England in the end. The same impelling power, not of mere desires but of events, which induced the Imperial Government to do at last in Fiji what they had so often refused, is constantly at work, and incessantly being renewed and strengthened, with regard to the Western Pacific. But it was not till Fiji had become the opprobrium of the Southern seas that Her Majesty's Government would interfere. Surely they will not now inflict upon Australasia the hard necessity of waiting till New Guinea also, and perhaps other islands, become Alsacias as dangerous as Fiji once was, scourges to the peaceable subjects of Her Majesty, and a disgrace to civilization. For it is vain to think that the trade and intercourse between Australia and New Zealand and these islands can be suppressed. Settlement both English and foreign is spreading in every direction, yet of safety for life and property there is none. The High Commissioner himself has shown that it is quite impossible to do what is wanted by any Order in Council capable of being issued under the Act of 1875: in other words, impossible to do it without assuming the very jurisdiction which it was the purpose of that Act to forbid. Nor would an International Convention do it, for a convention could only extend to the nationalities concerned, and could not embrace the natives. England could not claim, in a convention with Foreign Powers, any jurisdiction over the native tribes, without herself asserting over them the same right of dominion as would be asserted by the policy of the Colonies are urging upon your Lordship: nor could any convention be made at all, without first acknowledging that Foreign Powers possessed an equal right with England to exercise a right of dominion over natives, an acknowledgment against which every subject of Her Majesty in Australia and New Zealand would unite in making the strongest remonstrance.

The case of New Guinea is very pressing, because whatever powers are given to the High-Commissioner, they can, in the nature of things, be even less exercised there than in any of the other islands. New Guinea is in such close proximity to Queensland, that whatever is done there must affect Queensland more than anything that is done in the other islands could affect the rest of Australia or New Zealand. All the trade of Queensland with England and India by steam passes through Torres Straits: regular steam communication is now established there: it is really indispensable not only that the Straits should be free to navigation, but that there should be no risk of a foreign Power establishing a naval station there. Adventurous men are occupying portions of the New Guinea coast-line, and irregular settlement is sure to take place more and more. What has so often happened will happen again. Failing the colonization of the great island under proper authority, adventurers will flock there who will neither show regard for the native inhabitants nor be under any restraint among themselves: the evils and dangers which existed in Fiji will repeat themselves, only on a larger scale, and Queensland of all the Australias will suffer from them the most. This has been stated over and over again, in speeches in both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, by the Governments and Legislatures of Australasia, by the Royal Colonial Institute, and by private persons of high rank and experience in affairs, till we are almost ashamed to repeat it ourselves: yet it must be repeated, for the danger is not far off and a pretence, but imminent and a reality. Surely the Imperial Government cannot continue to refuse so reiterated an appeal. But if, fearing the responsibility of assuming authority over a vast and inaccessible region of mountains and forests peopled by several millions of savages, the Imperial Government finally determine not to take full jurisdiction over all New Guinea east of 143°, we trust that the same objection will not apply against establishing law and order along the coast where settlement is now extending. Let it at least exist over the fringe of the southern coast-line for the present, as was done the other day on the West Coast of Africa. No Act of the Imperial Parliament is necessary for this purpose, because Her Majesty has the same right now to assume jurisdiction over the southern coast-line of the island as she had to assume it when the islands of Torres Straits were annexed; and if it were deemed more convenient, the same process as was adopted then might be adopted now, of giving power by Letters Patent to the Governor of Queensland to declare by proclamation that certain portions of the coast-line of New Guinea should be annexed, under such conditions as it might be thought fit to prescribe.

Letters Patent,
42 Vict.

Sir A. Gordon,
Speech at
Melbourne, 1878.

We have referred to the irregular settlement that is even now taking place. We must with all respect remonstrate against the doctrine laid down by the High Commissioner on the New Guinea question in 1878, when he "formally and emphatically declared that the imperial Government disclaimed all obligation to protect or interfere on behalf of persons voluntarily placing themselves in positions of danger in a savage country, and that those who entered on such enterprises must do so at their own risk and peril." It is certainly not by colonists who have founded communities on the other side of the world, whose trade already exceeds in volume the whole foreign trade of England at the accession of Queen Victoria, that this doctrine will ever be acquiesced in. It was by "voluntarily placing themselves in danger that English adventurers built up our Indian and Colonial Empire, and created a commerce which now is numbered by hundreds of millions every year: nor is the colonizing spirit which has done that work capable of being extinguished by the knowledge that the enterprise of founding new settlements involves risk and peril. But at least it may be said that if the Imperial Government was not to interfere on behalf of English settlers, it should not interfere against them. It surely can never be contended that an elaborate scheme of Government was to be invented whose sole object should be to punish a subject of the Queen for any wrong he might commit, while it denied him redress for any wrong that he might suffer.

Imperial

Imperial interest also concerned.

So far we may perhaps be said to have urged only points that specially affect Colonial interests, or at any rate do not closely touch Imperial ones. This may be true so long as Europe is at peace; but the Imperial interest would spring up the moment any war broke out which involved England in hostilities with a European Power. The Imperial Government have called upon the Colonies to do their part in the defence of their own harbours, and our Governments have not only acknowledged they had a duty in that respect, but are doing their best to fulfil it. They feel that they have a right to ask in return that the task shall not be more difficult for them than the Imperial Government can help, and that they shall not be exposed to the creation of fortified naval stations and places d'armes in the Pacific, which should shelter an enemy's fleet and threaten their commerce, their coal measures, and even their safety. The nation will never permit that her naval supremacy in the Pacific shall be endangered; and it can hardly be contested that if France and other European Powers created new naval stations in the islands, the existing conditions in all that ocean would be changed, and everything relating to Her Majesty's Australian squadron assume a new aspect and a new importance.

Concert between the Imperial and Colonial Governments.

But while we have thus represented what the Australian Colonies believe ought to be done by the Imperial Government, they are also ready to acknowledge what they ought to do themselves. Your Lordship stated in the House of Lords, that if anything was to be done, it must be done either by the Imperial Government itself, or by the Australian Colonies acting together in concert, or by the Imperial and Colonial Governments combined; and we assure your Lordship that our Governments will hail with the greatest satisfaction such an invitation to them to co-operate with the Imperial authority. There are two immediate ways in which the Colonies can give their co-operation: by contributing to the cost of the policy they are asking your Lordship to pursue, and by placing themselves in a position to act in union with each other and in concert with you.

As regards the first, whatever differences there were when Lord Carnarvon made his proposal of 1876, there are none now. The Victorian Parliament has already passed an Address, assuring Her Majesty that Victoria will share in the cost of the policy which is being urged upon your Lordship; the Queensland Government has assured your Lordship of its readiness to do the same; and the other Colonies will also do their part. But it does not need for us to remind your Lordship that no Ministries can engage for the payment of indefinite sums, and that the assent of our Legislatures to grants of money must be expressed in the usual way. Permanent appropriation will certainly be necessary; and for this not only time is required, but consultation among the Governments, arrangement of the respective contributions of the Colonies, and the passing of the requisite votes; in the meanwhile, the first point for us to know is the amount which the Imperial Government would require to be provided for whatever action is contemplated by your Lordship.

As regards the other question of concerted action between the Imperial and Colonial Governments, your Lordship expressed your opinion to us at our interview with you in the clearest terms, and repeated it in the House of Lords. "If," you said, "the Australian people desire an extension beyond their present limits, the most practical step that they could take, the one that would most facilitate any operation of the kind, and diminish in the greatest degree the responsibilities of the mother country, would be the confederation of the Colonies into one united whole, which would be powerful enough to undertake and carry through tasks for which no one Colony is at present sufficient." The large question of Federation which your Lordship has here raised is one on which the Colonies have not made up their minds, and is one of too grave moment to be decided even under the sway of the strong feelings which now exist among them respecting the policy that ought to be pursued in the Western Pacific. But there is nothing to prevent concerted action at once with the Imperial Government for that particular policy; and we acknowledge that your Lordship may justly require not only such concerted action, but joint engagements on the part of the Colonial Governments for the permanence and stability of the policy itself. This too requires time, consultation among our Governments, and probably legislation also—at any rate concurrent resolutions in the respective Colonial Assemblies. On the other hand, the Colonies will not imagine that your Lordship has invited them to a co-operation which is to be barren of results; and our Governments will feel assured that if they on their part pass the requisite appropriations, and combine for that concert with the Imperial Government which is necessary for any policy to succeed, they may rely upon the policy itself being adopted, and effect being given at last to the wishes which they have cherished for more than thirty years. In once more urging these wishes on Her Majesty's Government, they have not come as suppliants for some light favour, but as Englishmen to whom their country has given a great destiny which must be kept from harm; desiring no new territories for themselves, but asking that the Queen's subjects may enjoy the blessings of peace and order where now the law has no terrors for the evil-doer; not seeking by a clearer policy to set new burdens on the English taxpayer, but willing themselves to bear its cost: and welcoming with gladness an invitation to be associated with the Imperial Government in a work which must assuredly be done one day, and can as certainly be best done now.

We have, &c.,

THOMAS ARCHER.
R. MURRAY-SMITH.

The Right Honorable the Earl of Derby,
Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies,
&c., &c., &c.

Colonial Office to The Agents-General for New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria.

Gentlemen,

Downing-street, 31 August, 1883.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st July, placing before His Lordship the representations with regard to New Guinea and the islands in the Western Pacific Ocean which you had promised during your recent interview. Lord Derby recognizes the care and ability with which you have recapitulated the history of past transactions in that part of the world, and, as His Lordship does not perceive that this department need take exception to any of the statements in the earlier part of your letter he will not at present examine them in detail. I am, however, to inform you that, as it contains many references to the acts and opinions of the High Commissioner and of Her Majesty's naval officers, Lord Derby has transmitted copies to Sir Arthur Gordon and to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, for their consideration.

2. Turning to your inquiry as to the extent to which the claims of Foreign Powers in the Western Pacific have been recognized by Her Majesty's Government, His Lordship is disposed to doubt whether there is really so much uncertainty or absence of information on this subject in the Australian Colonies as you seem to apprehend.

3. Referring, however, first to the islands of the Western Pacific which are most distant from Australia, the Navigators' Islands, no Power has claimed or indicated any desire to obtain a paramount influence or protectorate over that group. The Consular Officers of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States have, jointly or separately, from time to time exercised influence over public and native affairs at Samoa; and this country, as well as Germany, has entered into treaties with the King and Government of Samoa. The group therefore forms an independent State, recognized as such by European diplomacy, and under these circumstances the question might possibly arise whether its annexation by any Power would not be a violation of international law.

4. The Government of the Tongan or Friendly Islands is also recognized as independent, and this country and Germany have recently concluded treaties with the King of that group. The same argument therefore applies in this as in the former case.

5. Proceeding westward past Fiji, which, with the neighbouring island of Rotumah, is British, we come to the New Hebrides; and your letter shows that you are aware of the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of France, in pursuance of which the independence of those islands has been up to the present time recognized and respected by both Governments. The Loyalty Islands, being close to New Caledonia, are to be looked upon as dependencies of the French Government in that island.

6. The foregoing brief statement may suffice to explain to you that the claims and interests of other countries constitute a very serious impediment to that "complete jurisdiction" which you represent that England ought now to assume over the Western Pacific, and that the best known and most frequented groups of islands have already such relations with Foreign Powers, in common with England, as cannot be summarily ignored. You do not specifically refer to the important islands or group of islands known as New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon Islands, and the Santa Cruz Islands. They are at a considerable distance from Australia, and are for the most part of great size, and inhabited by warlike and cannibal tribes. Her Majesty's Government have not before them any evidence that the Governments of the Australasian Colonies have sufficiently considered the extent of the responsibilities which the annexation or protectorate of those islands would involve, and they are far from being satisfied that the assumption of those responsibilities is necessary or justifiable.

7. With reference to that part of your letter which treats of New Guinea, Lord Derby desires me to observe that he has at present nothing to add to the despatch which he addressed on the 11th July to the Acting Governor of Queensland. His Lordship concludes that, after receiving that despatch, the Governments of any Colonies desiring to bear the cost of any measures which, as indicated in the two last paragraphs of that despatch, Her Majesty's Government may be prepared to take, will confer together and make those united recommendations which have been invited, furnishing also an effective guarantee for such expenditure as may be incurred. They will, no doubt, at the same time consider whether they wish to make jointly any similar definite proposal with regard to other islands not already connected by treaty or otherwise with Foreign Powers.

8. I am to add that Lord Derby has read with attention your representations as to the inconvenience and injury which, unless great precautions are taken, might result from the continuance and development of the French penal settlements in New Caledonia and the adjacent islands, and that His Lordship is in communication with the Foreign Office on the subject.

I am, &c.,
JOHN BRAMSTON.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

INTERCOLONIAL CONVENTION.

(RELATIONS WITH ISLANDS OF THE PACIFIC—TELEGRAM TO SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 6 December, 1883.

TELEGRAM sent to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, through His Excellency the Governor, on Wednesday, the 5th of December, 1883.

RESOLUTIONS ARRIVED AT.

THIS Convention, representing the Governments of all the Australasian Colonies, unanimously resolves:—

1. That further acquisition of dominion in the Pacific, south of the Equator, by any Foreign Power, would be highly detrimental to the safety and well-being of the British possessions in Australasia, and injurious to the interests of the Empire.
2. That this Convention refrains from suggesting the action by which effect can best be given to the foregoing resolution, in the confident belief that the Imperial Government will promptly adopt the wisest and most effectual measures for securing the safety and contentment of this portion of Her Majesty's dominions.
3. That having regard to the geographical position of the Island of New Guinea, the rapid extension of British trade and enterprise in Torres Straits, the certainty that the island will shortly be the resort of many adventurous subjects of Great Britain and other nations, and the absence or inadequacy of any existing laws for regulating their relations with the native tribes, this Convention, while fully recognizing that the responsibility of extending the boundaries of the Empire belongs to the Imperial Government, is emphatically of opinion that such steps should be immediately taken as will most conveniently and effectively secure the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea, and the small islands adjacent thereto, as is not claimed by the Government of the Netherlands.
4. That although the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Great Britain and France, recognizing the independence of the New Hebrides, appears to preclude this Convention from making any recommendation inconsistent with that understanding, the Convention urges upon Her Majesty's Government that it is extremely desirable that such understanding should give place to some more definite engagement, which shall secure those islands from falling under any foreign dominion; at the same time the Convention trusts that Her Majesty's Government will avail itself of any opportunity that may arise for negotiating with the Government of France, with the object of obtaining the control of those Islands in the interests of Australasia.
5. That the Governments represented at this Convention undertake to submit and recommend to their respective Legislatures measures of permanent Appropriation for defraying, in proportion to population, such share of the cost incurred in giving effect to the foregoing resolutions as Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the relative importance of Imperial and Australasian interests, may deem fair and reasonable.
6. That the Convention protests in the strongest manner against the declared intention of the Government of France to transport large numbers of relapsed criminals to the French possessions in the Pacific, and urges Her Majesty's Government to use every means in its power to prevent the adoption of a course so disastrous to the interests of Australasia and the Pacific Islands.

7. That the Convention expresses a confident hope that no penal settlement for the reception of European criminals will long continue to exist in the Pacific, and invites Her Majesty's Government to make to the Government of France such serious representations on this subject as may be deemed expedient.
8. That these resolutions be communicated to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, together with a request that they may be submitted for Her Majesty's gracious consideration, and for such action as Her Majesty may think proper to direct, with a view to giving effect to the earnest desire of her loyal subjects in Australasia.

I FEAR undue pressure upon Imperial Government to repudiate the annexation of New Guinea. I shall be obliged if you will cable your Agent-General to inform Lord Derby that our action is approved by the people of New South Wales. Had we by a policy of inaction allowed a foreign Power to annex the island, it would have been nothing short of a national calamity, for which we, by shirking responsibility, should have been highly blameworthy.

My dear Sir,

Sydney, 8 June, 1883.

I received your telegram. I have not heard any rumour of France taking hold of the islands of late years. It has always been supposed she would form New Caledonia as a centre gradually about the New Hebrides. Surprised she has not long ago.

A further extension of foreign power in these seas is to be deprecated, and therefore I have sent our Agent-General a telegram as on other side, although I see no immediate prospect either of the French Vide No. 11 or of our own Imperial authorities moving in it.

I have also submitted your telegram to Lord Augustus Loftus, with the suggestion that he will be good enough to convey similar views to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

You

You will notice that the letter is not signed by Sir Arthur Blyth the Agent-General for South Australia, his Government having instructed him that they did not concur in the views of the other Colonies with regard to annexation or the establishment of a protectorate over the New Hebrides and the other islands in the Pacific, whilst they were favourable to the annexation of New Guinea.

No. 21.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Colonial Secretary of Queensland.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 31 July, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 17th instant, communicating to me the views of your Government, as expressed in a minute of your Executive Council, upon the refusal of the Imperial Government to confirm the annexation of New Guinea.

In reply, I desire at the outset to assure you that I deprecate as much as any one that New Guinea should ever be taken possession of by any foreign Power, as it not only would tend to cripple the trade in Torres Straits, which has proved a beneficial enterprise both to your Colony and to ours, but would at all times, and especially in any European conflict, be highly inconvenient and menacing to the whole Australian Group.

Holding this view, I had no hesitation in sending, in April last, instructions to our Agent-General to state to Lord Derby that this Colony viewed with the utmost favour the annexation of New Guinea by the British Crown, in place of permitting any foreign Power to take possession of it or obtain further footing therein.

While strongly holding these views, I am not altogether surprised at the attitude taken by Lord Derby, because it seems to me that, while deeply impressed yourself with the danger to be apprehended of immediate foreign aggressive movement upon the island, you have not very definitely shown to Lord Derby the grounds for your fears, but have urged him to accept your strong feelings as evidencing the fact rather than submitted definite proofs of the facts themselves, or pointed out sufficient overt acts of any foreign Power upon which he could come to the same conviction as yourself.

I take a somewhat different view from you with regard to the expense of annexation. It is contrary to the English genius of colonisation to be content with exhibiting the mere nominal symbol of her flag. When England annexes she must govern—she must rule. She cannot be content with the "laissez faire" system which you point out as having been followed by the Dutch,—not interfering with the aborigines, but waiting and simply holding the country as against any other Power. It seems to me, therefore, to be unwise to brush aside the matter of expense as a mere fancy; it should, on the contrary, be fairly looked at, and a division suggested as to the proportions to be borne by the countries interested. The Imperial interests are probably as great as the Australian, and the colonies would doubtless respond to any liberal basis for its apportionment.

I have always looked upon the question of Federation as one which would not probably assume a definite shape until the outward pressure of some common danger compelled the various Colonies to sink many minor differences and jealousies in the necessity for combined action for common safety. Whether such danger exists in the present refusal by the Imperial Government to recognize the action you have taken with regard to New Guinea, I feel hardly called upon at present to decide; but I gladly accede to your suggestion that the question of Federation should be discussed by the Colonies, and if it be considered that the present is a fitting time, then that such discussion should take the form of putting forward the basis on which a Federal Government could be constituted.

This Government is also prepared to accede to your request to urge upon the Imperial Government that it is desirable that the question of annexation be reconsidered; and with that view I have addressed a letter, inviting His Excellency Lord Augustus Loftus to lay our views before the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and of such letter I beg to hand you a copy.

I have, &c.,

The Colonial Secretary to His Excellency the Governor.

My Lord,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 August, 1883.

I have the honor to address you on the subject of New Guinea annexation; with the view of inviting your Excellency to convey to the Secretary of State for the Colonies the views of this Government.

I beg to enclose a copy of a communication received from Sir T. M'Ilwraith, with a minute of the Executive Council of Queensland, and of my reply thereto. See Nos. 19 & 21.

I would respectfully urge a reconsideration of the question by the Imperial Government, because that although I am not prepared to say that there was an imminent prospect of New Guinea being taken possession of by any foreign Power, yet I do fear now that the prominence which has been given to the subject will of itself cause some nation to take it up as a strong strategic point in the future domination in these seas.

From its close proximity to the northern part of Queensland, and from the control over that important highway of commerce—Torres Straits, which would be given to any possessor of the southern shores of New Guinea, its occupation by a foreign nation might be, in the event of European war, most disastrous to Australia, and therefore to British interests.

I was at one time inclined to think that a protectorate of the Southern Coast would have been sufficient, and even yet it may be so if its effect would be to keep any other nation from obtaining a footing; but if a protectorate be inefficient for that purpose it would be better to accept the annexation, so that there might be no ground for the future disquiet arising from foreign settlements so close upon our shores.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 25 August, 1883.

With reference to Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's circular letter, enclosing a minute of the Executive Council of Queensland, in which it is proposed that some concerted action should be taken, consequent on the refusal of the Imperial Government to annex New Guinea, and that a Convention of Delegates from the Colonies should be held "to discuss the basis on which a Federal Government could be constituted," I have the honor to inform you that, at the special request of Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith, Premier of Queensland, I have consented to act in the capacity of Convener of the proposed assembly of delegates.

Having learned that all the Colonies have replied to Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's circular, I now write with a view to ascertain what date would best suit the convenience of the various Colonies: and as a means of eliciting this, I beg to communicate my own suggestion, that the Convention should meet in Melbourne at a period in the ensuing month, say on the 25th proximo.

According to the information before me as to the sittings of the Parliaments in the different Colonies, this period would, for the convenience of the majority, be the most suitable, at least of any period within a reasonable time.

I beg also to suggest the desirability of giving this Convention a higher status than that of the Intercolonial Conferences hitherto held to discuss comparatively subordinate topics; and with this view, I propose that the number of delegates should be four from each Colony, and that these delegates should be of as generally representative a character as possible, of course any one Colony having the option of sending a less number, if that should be more convenient.

I propose sending a telegram to anticipate the arrival of this letter, in order to facilitate the despatch of an early reply.

I shall be obliged if you will similarly communicate by telegraph your answer.

I have, &c.,
JAMES SERVICE,
Premier.

My dear Mr. Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 27 August, 1883.

I received on Saturday your telegram asking me if 25th September would suit me to meet in Melbourne representatives from the other Colonies. I replied that it would not, but that I would write you to-day.

On Saturday night I received your second telegram, suggesting that to suit South Australia or Tasmania it should be end of October or beginning of November.

I regret to say that none of these times will suit us. Our Parliament meets early in October, and as our Land Bill is the first measure that will occupy our attention, and it is of overwhelming interest to this Colony, it will be quite impossible that any Minister can be absent at the time indicated by you.

Nor am I able at present to name a time, as our movements or arrangements must be guided by the mode in which our measure is received by Parliament.

Regretting that I am not able to give you more satisfactory reply,—

I remain, &c.,

No. 27.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Mr. Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 29 August, 1883,

I am in receipt of yours of 27th, and regret exceedingly to find that you cannot make it convenient to name any time for the meeting of the Convention that would suit you.

This

This would seem to indicate an indefinite postponement of the meeting, which, under all the circumstances, is to be deeply regretted. The fact that you, like all the other Colonies, had accepted Sir T. McIlwraith's suggestion for a Convention was taken by me, and no doubt by him, as an indication that you meant to attend at some convenient time; and in sending a circular telegram to the other Colonies, I was influenced by a desire to consult as far as possible the convenience of all.

But now, when you put it that you cannot name a time, or any time, it seems to render the Convention at present impossible. This I think is to be greatly deplored; it will cast a damper over the movement throughout the whole of the Colonies, and will be regarded in England as an evidence that we are not all truly in earnest. My own feeling is that the occasion is one which would have justified the adjournment of the Parliament of any Colony for a fortnight.

I wish you would think over the matter again, and devise some means to go on. New South Wales is too important a factor in the Conference to be done without, but I think the other Colonies will scarcely be able to help feeling that, after being led up to the very point of fixing a date for the Convention, the whole thing is knocked on the head by New South Wales backing out of the agreement. I hope that you will see it in this light, and enable me by a quick wire on receipt yet to fix a suitable time.

Yours truly,

JAMES SERVICE.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd instant, in reply to mine of the 3rd. * * * * *

I desire to thank you for the copies of your exceedingly interesting and valuable letter to Sir Thomas McIlwraith, and also for the copy of your despatch to Lord Loftus, on the subject of the annexation of New Guinea.

I may mention that I have informed Mr. Service that, if the proposed Conference is held in September, it is not likely that this Government can be represented; but that if the Conference is held in October, or later, we should wish to take part. The Premier of New Zealand has intimated, in reply to a message from me, that his Government proposes to send two delegates, and has wired Mr. Service that October will suit his Government. Should the Conference be fixed for the later date suggested, this Government would propose to send two delegates (as New Zealand intends to send only two), and not four as suggested by Mr. Service.

Be assured we have no desire to put a damper on views or wishes of the other Colonies. Your telegram to-day removes our difficulty of interfering with meeting of our Parliament, but apparently November suits South Australia and Tasmania better; moreover, grave constitutional difficulty appears to us to exist regarding Queensland meeting at present time, as her Government is under appeal to country. She was first to move in this matter, and her interests are, perhaps, more involved in New Guinea annexation question than those of any other Colony.

Can I fix any time now that will suit others, or must we meet before your Parliament opens, and if so when will that be?

No. 32.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Mr. Service,

Sydney, 31 August, 1883.

I have to-day replied by telegram to your letter of 29th received this morning, and to your telegram of this day.

I and my colleagues have not held such strong views as you and Mr. McIlwraith upon the necessity of immediate federative action in formulating a system of Federal Government, merely because the Imperial Government has not seen its way to fall in at once with the action of Queensland in regard to annexation; but we have no wish to prevent in any way the fullest discussion of the whole question, when such is the evident wish of so many of our neighbours.

I

I have however pointed out what appears to me to be an important constitutional difficulty as regards the Colony most deeply interested, viz., Queensland. I do not see how she can constitutionally take part in so important a Conference, which I observe you elevate into the dignity of a Convention, until her recent or present appeal to the country has received a decisive stamp one way or the other from Parliament.

I think I am right in saying that it is in accordance with constitutional practice, that when a Ministry has made such an appeal, it only carries on necessary work pending the result; and that a measure fraught with such important results as are contemplated by some of you as possible from this Convention ought to remain until the appeal is finally settled.

Sir Thomas McIlwraith may be able to sustain his position with increased strength; and in that case the Convention would have the great benefit to be derived from his views on the question in which he has taken so deep an interest; but on the other hand, it is by no means impossible that he may have to give place to others in the guidance of the affairs of that Colony, and it would only be right and proper that such persons should have the opportunity of joining in so important an affair.

About November, I presume, that question will be decided; and as both South Australia and Tasmania wish it to be in that month, I think that the views of all will be best met by your coming here at that time.

I remain, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

No. 34.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Mr. Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 4 September, 1883.

I am favoured with yours of 31st August. It has been quite evident to me that New South Wales did not feel so strongly on the federation and annexation question as we in Victoria do; and I must say that such should be the case surprises me a good deal. I could understand it so long as we were not threatened with annexation by France of some of the most important of the islands, and with the avowed intention of making them the receptacle for the moral filth of that country; but that any Australian can coolly contemplate an irruption of people into these parts, in comparison with whom the Goths and Vandals were civilized races, is to me quite incomprehensible.

But for these two dangers, which the recent action of the French Assembly has made imminent, we might have contented ourselves with nudging the old folks at home, at least for a time, although I do not believe in unnecessary and unmeaning delays in doing what is inevitable, and is better done soon than late.

The constitutional question re Queensland is one that concerns that Colony alone I think. Should Sir T. McIlwraith not retain his position, the likelihood is that his successor would adopt his policy re annexation, as I think the Queenslanders are warmer on the subject than your people are; but if it were otherwise, what harm could ensue,—Queensland cannot be committed seriously without the consent of her Parliament.

I confess I will be sorry if we cannot arrange the Convention so as to have Sir Thomas present; it would matter less if I could imbue you with his ardour.

By the by, you credit me with elevating the proposed Conference into the dignity of a Convention; I cannot accept the honor. The word Convention was that used in the Minute of the Executive Council of Queensland, which was circulated to all the Colonies, and it was accepted by all of us I suppose. I have used it therefore as a matter of course.

I have wired to South Australia informing Mr. Bray that I purpose asking our Parliament to adjourn in beginning of October, if he will do the same, so that the Convention can meet then. If he does not agree, I confess I cannot see how it can meet for a good while to come. Queensland Parliament meets middle of November, and when could that Colony make it convenient to attend?

The people of England are at our back. If we are prompt and resolute, the battle is as good as won; if we are cool, or hesitating, or indifferent, I believe the New Hebrides, and probably some of the other groups, will be lost to us.

Yours very truly,

JAMES SERVICE.

No. 35.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Mr. Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 8 September, 1883.

Looking at the enthusiasm with which you have taken up the whole matter of annexation, I am not surprised that you should regard us as cold and impassive. It is not, however, that we are indifferent to the mode in which France may pour the refuse of her criminal classes into the islands to the eastward of us, but rather that we differ from you as to the best mode of meeting that threatened evil.

When you spoke to me in Melbourne upon the subject of New Hebrides, I mentioned to you, that if it turned out, as I believed it would, that there was some sort of agreement or understanding between France and England that neither should take possession of the group, our action in urging annexation was in direct violation of such agreement, and might actually defeat the object we had at heart, by causing the French to use it as a justification for carrying out the annexation themselves.

Having

Having carefully watched the various phases of the movement, I am more convinced of the soundness of this view, and therefore it is that I am unable to join heartily with you, although I do not set up my own view as sufficient to warrant me in declining to hold conference with you and the other Colonies, as to the best course to be pursued in a more united manner by the whole group of Australasian Colonies.

I think you are taking a sanguine view when you say "the people of England are at our back." My own belief is that the people of England are comparatively indifferent whether the islands are annexed or not by England. To a certain portion of the community, any accession of territory by England is a subject of triumphant cry; such persons, however, often overlook the responsibility which such acquisition of territory brings with it,—a responsibility for the right administration of the islands themselves, and a responsibility to those other European nations who will not stand idly by, when we have laid violent hands upon the islands with which they have also been cultivating mercantile or trading relations.

It is because I see, or believe I see, some of these difficulties and responsibilities, that I do not enter upon the matter with the same impulsive spirit which you have brought to bear upon it, and thus it is that I seem to you to be "cool, hesitating, or indifferent."

I am strongly impressed with the idea that a protectorate by England over New Guinea, or at all events over its southern coast, and a joint protectorate by England and France over the New Hebrides and other groups of islands, would be the best and most practicable solution of the question. I believe that it would be more advantageous for us—I mean for the whole of the Australian Colonies—if the assurance were clear that no other nation would annex the islands, than that we should be saddled with the responsibility and expense of annexation; and moreover, I feel perfectly sure that whatever may be the feeling of France with regard to New Guinea (probably she would not care much about it), she would not allow us to annex the New Hebrides without a strong protest and struggle.

I do not under-value the trade with those islands—personally I have been as much concerned in it as any man in the Colonies—but in the event of war they would be rather sources of weakness than of strength, having such a number of places to protect and defend; nor do I see where the annexation is to end; if the New Hebrides, then how about the Solomon Group, the Santa Cruz, New Ireland, New Britain, and scores of others. Are we to annex them all, or are we to be content with the New Hebrides and New Guinea, and see France take up these intermediate groups as the outlets for her criminal classes?

I regret extremely to see the question complicated by injudicious letters of colonists in London, who speak of non-annexation by England involving alienation of the Colonies from the Mother Country. I hold, in contradistinction to such sentiments, that the Colonies are thoroughly loyal in their attachment to the old Country, and would best show their loyalty to her and to their own interests, if they were to content themselves at present with urging upon her the desirableness and necessity of coming to some arrangement with other maritime nations of Europe, that no one should take any overt steps towards annexation, but that free trade should be permitted to all, and that there should be combined action for the protection of that trade so far as it is legitimate, the suppression of what may be deemed illegitimate, and the regulation of what is commonly known as the labour trade upon principles of humanity and morality.

I have thought it right that, before we meet, you should know my views, which are shared by my colleagues, and to a great extent, I believe, commend themselves to a majority of the people in New South Wales.

I remain, &c.,
ALEX. STUART.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent-General.

My dear Samuel,

Sydney, 8 September, 1883.

I received duly your letter of 27th July, with copies of the joint letter of the Agents-General to Lord Derby, on the question of annexation.

I must compliment you all upon the able manner in which the historical statement of the matter is drawn up. I consider it a valuable addition to the literature of the subject, tracing, as it does, the chief points of interest in connection with that which has now culminated in a desire for annexation.

For my own part, I have not felt any strong desire to see the annexation policy carried out. I believe it would be far preferable if some arrangement could be come to whereby none of the maritime Powers should annex any of the islands; but so detrimental to colonial interests would be their occupation by foreign Powers, that, rather than leave such a contingency open, I would urge as strongly as any one that the Imperial Government should annex them; and thus it is that I telegraphed to you to join with the other Agents-General in urging the Imperial Government to take some action in the matter.

In order that you may clearly understand my views, I enclose copy of correspondence I have had here with Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith on the one hand and Mr. Service on the other.

We are to have a Conference here about the latter part of November, when the matter will be discussed in all its bearings, I have no doubt.

In New South Wales there is marked contrast between the feeling of the masses of the people and that which obtains in Victoria or in Queensland. I don't know whether we are more phlegmatic in our temperament than they are, but assuredly it would be a hard task to get up upon this subject the enthusiasm which is displayed by our neighbours on either side of us.

Believe me yours very truly,
ALEX. STUART.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent-General.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 11 September, 1883.

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 27th July last, enclosing copies of the communication laid before Lord Derby by the Agents-General, containing their views respecting the annexation of New Guinea and the New Hebrides, I have the honor to inform you that I recognize the value of the communication as an historical resumé of the subject.

2. The Government is more favourable to a protectorate than to annexation, the chief objects to be desired being—

1st. The prevention of any foreign Government taking possession of New Guinea.

2nd. The prevention of France or other nation annexing the New Hebrides, or sending the offscouring of its criminal classes to that or other island groups of the Western Pacific,—a process which would be hastened probably by our annexation.

No. 38.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 11 September, 1883.

My circular letter of the 25th August was written with a view to ascertain what date would best suit the various Australasian Colonies for the meeting of the Convention which Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith, the Premier of Queensland, proposed should be held to discuss the two questions of the annexation of adjacent islands and the federation of the Australasian Colonies.

I have been since that date in constant telegraphic correspondence on this subject with the different Australasian Governments; and the result is, as already announced to you by my telegram of the 7th instant, that on collating the advices from the different Colonies, I am enabled to name the last week in November as the time most convenient for the meeting of the proposed Convention.

My telegram of the 7th instant will also have informed you that, to meet the convenience of the Sydney Government, who could not name any day on which it would be convenient for them to send delegates to Melbourne, I had suggested that Sydney should be the meeting-place. This has accordingly been arranged.

The precise date for the meeting of the Convention will be announced later on.

I beg now formally to invite your Government to appoint delegates to represent your Colony.

I find a slight difference of opinion amongst the Colonial Governments as to the number of delegates which should be appointed, some proposing four, some two. In my letter of the 25th August I suggested that each Colony should send four delegates. My reason for this was that on so important an occasion it seemed desirable that the delegation from each Colony should be thoroughly and fairly representative, not only of that party which may be at present in power but of all parties.

A precedent for this is found in the history of the formation of the Dominion of Canada, on which occasion parties and party leaders who had been long opposed coalesced for the purpose of forming that Federal Government which has so much enhanced the prosperity and importance of the Colonies united under it.

In view of the attention which this movement has received from the Imperial Government, as well as from the English Press and people, it seems to me especially desirable that the importance of the present occasion should not be under-estimated, and I feel that it would add greatly to the weight of the Convention's determinations if it were made a thoroughly representative body.

It is of course a question for each Colony to decide how many delegates it will send.

JAMES SERVICE,

Premier.

Re annexation of adjacent islands and Federation of Australian Colonies.

Sir,

Office of Colonial Secretary, Sydney, 18 September, 1883.

The time which you have ascertained by telegraphic communication with the other Colonies to be the most suitable one for the assembling of the proposed Convention will meet the convenience of this Government; and I await the announcement of the precise date, which you will doubtless make as early as you may be enabled to do so.

2. With reference to your invitation as to the appointment of delegates, and the suggestion contained in your letter of the 25th August that each Colony should send four delegates, I desire to make a few observations, which I am the more anxious to make without delay, in order that you may clearly understand in what light I regard the proposition.

3. You explain your reason for suggesting so unusually large a number of representatives, on the ground of the importance of the occasion, and the desirableness of securing the thoroughly representative character of the Convention, not only of the party which may be at present in power but of all parties.

4. While reciprocating your desire that the importance of the present occasion should not be under-estimated, I am unable, on purely constitutional grounds, to give my immediate assent to a proposal which I should have supposed to have been unprecedented, had I not been informed by you that it had been sanctioned in the preliminary steps taken for the establishment of the Dominion of Canada.

5. It appears to me that a Minister would hardly be justified in exposing himself in such a Convention to the peril of being outvoted by the representatives of a party directly opposed to his Government; and yet that might be the situation in which he would find himself if he nominated as representatives those who differed with him on leading questions of public policy. And moreover, in the uncertainty of political affairs, it might very easily happen that, in nominating men who, in his judgment, at the present time occupied representative positions, he might fail to select those who, in the order of events, would become his successors in the Government; and, as I presume, this is one of the main reasons by which a course so exceptional could alone be justified. If there is any doubt about the object being attained, the thing itself could not on any constitutional ground be defended.

6. I feel sure that I should experience great difficulty in vindicating the adoption of a course of procedure which is certainly at variance with the principle of ministerial responsibility; and I am not quite satisfied that, were I convinced of the expediency of adopting it, I could make the necessary nominations, because of the great unwillingness of public men in this country to depart from well understood constitutional principles.

7. I am so anxious that you should be saved from embarrassment in your very difficult negotiations that I deem it right to place you in possession of my views upon a proposal which is certainly novel, not without danger, and as I think, somewhat impracticable.

I have, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Tasmania.

My dear Mr. Giblin,

20 September, 1883.

I replied at once to your telegram, and now send you copy of my reply to Mr. Service's circular, which pretty well explains my views. I have not yet had time to look up the particulars of the Canadian case alluded to; but it does seem to me to be against all constitutional practice that Ministers and their Opposition should be together on such a Conference. If a question were carried in which a Minister's view was defeated chiefly by the adverse view of a member of his own Colony's Opposition, how can he ask his own Colony's Parliament to affirm it?

The suggestion seems to me to be impracticable, and could only be otherwise were the rather visionary position to occur of an entire unanimity upon all questions brought before the Conference.

It is hardly to be expected that the leader of the Opposition would consent to place himself in the position, which would really be destructive of that wholesome criticism which it is one of the good effects of our Constitutional practice.

My own view is that two would be quite sufficient for each Colony to appoint, and these two should be members of the Government. Of course voting must be by Colonies, and not by individuals.

Believe me, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

MANY thanks for your letter and enclosure. My reply, fully concurring in your views, missed mail yesterday, and will not reach you for a week. I find end of November awkward to leave here, and should much prefer middle of November or early in January. Perhaps changes in Brisbane and Adelaide may alter date of meeting.

REFERRING to my letter of 11th September, I now have the honor to announce Wednesday, the 28th November, as the day for the meeting at Sydney of the Convention respecting Annexation and Federation.

No. 48.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 9 October, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, in which you assent to the time named by me for the proposed Australasian Convention, and in which you deal with the proposal made in my letter of the 25th August, and further urged, in my letter of the 11th September, that the number of Delegates from each Colony should be at least four,—with a view to giving a fair representation of the whole Colony—not merely of the dominant political party.

2. I am glad to notice that, while stating your objections to this course, you only express your inability to give "immediate assent" thereto; from which I with pleasure infer that you are still open to approve of it if, after a due consideration of the objections you urge, sufficient reasons can be shown in favour of my proposal. I therefore proceed to a consideration of the points of objection submitted by you.

3. You state that a Minister would hardly be justified in exposing himself to the peril of being outvoted in the Convention, by the representatives of a party directly opposed to his Government. Now I do not see how this could possibly happen. In appointing Representatives to the Convention, the Government of each Colony, representing as it necessarily does the majority in Parliament, would be justified, if it thought proper, in nominating a majority of Representatives from its own party,—or, in selecting from the Opposition gentlemen whose views of the subject matters of the Convention were known to accord with those of the Government. That being so, the vote of such Colony in the Convention (for I presume voting must be by Colonies and not by individuals) would be determined according to the mind of the Government. This objection therefore disappears.

4. With regard to the course proposed by me being at variance with the principle of ministerial responsibility and well understood constitutional principles, it is requisite to bear in mind that the occasion is one not within the lines of ordinary constitutional procedure, but is outside the sphere of domestic politics altogether. The Convention finds no place in our Parliamentary system, and so far from being part of our Constitution, its very object is to lay the basis of another Constitution—a Federal one. The occasion being thus exceptional, I think we must be prepared to admit modes of action which may indeed appear novel, but which may really be the best adapted to accomplish the object in view.

5. That the foregoing is the view which was taken by all the leading men in the British North American provinces, without a single exception, is evidenced by the fact that each of the separate Colonies sent to the Convention at Charlottetown, about an equal number of Representatives from the Government and the Opposition. The Honorable Dr. Gray, in his History of the Confederation, says, vol. 1, page 29:—

"In order that the question of their union might as much as possible be removed beyond the pale of party conflict, the Delegates to attend the Convention at Charlottetown were selected from the Liberal and Conservative ranks alike. Dr. Tupper, the leader of the Government of Nova Scotia, with his own colleague, Attorney-General Henry, and Mr. Dickey, a Conservative supporter, had included the Hons. Adams G. Archibald and Jonathan McCully, long and well-known leaders of the Liberal party. Mr. Tilley, the leader of the Government in New Brunswick, with his own colleagues, Messrs. Johnston and Steves, had included the Hons. Edward Barron Chandler and John Hamilton Gray, prominent and well-known leaders of the Conservative party there; whilst in Prince Edward Island, the Premier had with equal consideration selected the Island delegates from both sides of the House. The recommendations of the respective Governments were approved by the Lieutenant-Governors, and the Convention was opened in due form at Charlottetown, September 8th, in the Chamber of the House of Assembly."

In the case of the Canadian Provinces, it was at first proposed that a Royal Commission should be formed to consist of an equal number of Members of the Government and of the Opposition, and this was only set aside because the Opposition and the Government coalesced for the purpose of Confederation.

6. The case of the Canadian Dominion therefore furnishes a powerful precedent.

There can be no doubt that the spectacle of a Convention representing the leading parties in each of the Colonies would have a much more imposing effect—because possessing a greater significance—than one based on party lines.

7. To regard a matter of this sort as in any sense a party one deprives it of all its special value. The fact of doing so would imply that there is a party in the Colony which is opposed to the objects of the Convention. If such exist, it may of course one day possess the ascendancy, and therefore the voice of a Convention based on party lines would, instead of being a national one, be merely the ephemeral utterance of the dominant party, and could not make the commanding claim to the attention of the Mother-country which a really National Council could assert. Here in Victoria our Parliament is unanimous—without a single dissident. In New Zealand the case seems very much the same. In Queensland I have reason to believe and I most assuredly hope that that Colony will be represented by the leaders of both parties, and I hope that New South Wales and the other Colonies may see their way to follow suit.

No. 51.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Mr. Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office,

Sydney, 17 October, 1883.

I have attentively considered all the arguments put forward in yours of 9th instant.

It seems to me that you practically give up the position, when you say that the Government might select from the Opposition gentlemen whose views were known to accord on this matter with those of the Government. This seems to me to be somewhat at variance with the views propounded in your letter of 11th ultimo, in which you considered that all parties in each Legislature should be represented.

If the Members of the Opposition are merely to be echoes of the Ministerial Members (while those holding other views are left out), then I think my argument in favour of only Ministerial Members is greatly strengthened. I would test it thus: If the Convention were to arrive at the conclusion that federation is desirable and ought to be carried out, it can go no further but has finished its work; and the Representatives of each Colony must then return to their respective Legislatures for acquiescence in the resolutions, and be then armed with powers to carry the same into effect. If the views of the Opposition accord with those of the Government, the acquiescence will be given as readily as if they had been present at the Convention; but if the Opposition views be adverse, it is surely better that the difference be fought out on the constitutional arena rather than in the Conference.

I could agree better with your fourth paragraph, with one alteration, and that is, if it be decided that a Federal Constitution is to be prepared, then I can quite understand that it would be desirable to have men of both sides engaged in raising a common platform on which we could all stand; and this, I think, is the true application of the Canadian precedent. Practically all the Colonies now united in the Dominion had expressed the opinion that the time had arrived for federation, and they were appointed to give effect to that opinion.

The

The Australasian case differs in the important point that the Colonies here have not unanimously expressed an opinion that the time has arrived. We have all more or less expressed our opinion that the time will come; but there has been, so far as I can judge, no general consensus of opinion that the time has arrived.

I think that some misapprehension has arisen from the use of the word "Convention" instead of the more usual word "Conference"; i.e., we meet for the purpose of exchanging our views and endeavouring to put forward a scheme which we can submit to our respective Legislatures; and if they agree thereto, and appoint delegates to carry the views into effect, the meeting of that legislatively-created body would be better entitled to the name of Convention, which is, in diplomatic usage, as I believe, more usually applied to a body summoned to carry out in a binding manner something which has arisen out of a Conference, or out of negotiations.

I remain, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

No. 52.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Mr. Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 24 October, 1883.

Yours of the 17th to hand. I hardly know what position it is that you say I "practically give up" in suggesting that the Government might select from the Opposition gentlemen whose views were known to accord on this matter with those of the Government. This suggestion was made to meet a difficulty started by you that, if you selected members outside of the Government, you might be exposed to the peril of being outvoted in the Convention. The difficulty itself seemed and still seems to me an unreal one; but, if it be real, then it would be easily got over by the course I suggested. But if you mean that by such a suggestion I "give up" the position that it is desirable for the opposing parties in the various Colonies to be represented on the Convention, then I do not agree with you.

I think you and I are looking at this matter from different points of view. You assume that the question comes within the range of party politics, and so must be treated in a Constitutional, to wit, a Parliamentary manner. I assume that there is a substantial unanimity in your Parliament, as in ours, as to the desirability of federation; and the suggestion that the delegates should be chosen from both sides of the House is to give the outward and visible sign of that unanimity, as well as to secure the hearty co-operation of the leading statesmen, on whatever side of domestic politics they may range themselves.

The notable examples of the British North American Provinces show that my suggestion has a solid significance. In each and every case the delegates were selected in equal numbers from the Government and the Opposition. The question of being outvoted seems never to have occurred to the minds of the Governments of those Colonies; and they appear to have fully apprehended the moral effect of selecting delegates from both sides of the House.

Just imagine the difference in effect on the Home Government and the people of England which would be produced by the one and the other of the two following telegrams from Sydney:—

I.—"Mr. Stuart has carried his federation proposals by a considerable majority."

II.—"The New South Wales Parliament has unanimously agreed on the federation proposals submitted by the Government. Delegates will be chosen from both sides of the House."

The one represents a united and unanimous people; the other, a section dominant for the moment.

Unless there is a consensus of opinion * * * * * in favour of federation, then assuredly the time has not come for even a Convention; but the universal acquiescence in and acceptance of Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's proposal for a Convention surely indicated a conviction on the part of the various Governments that such a consensus did exist, and that all the Colonies were agreed as to the desirability of some sort of federal union, if existing conditions will permit it to be carried out.

I also differ from you somewhat as to the functions, and especially as to the limit of the functions of the coming Convention. You say, "If the Convention were to arrive at the conclusion that federation is desirable and ought to be carried out, it can go no further, but has finished its work," et cetera. My view is that the Colonies have already approved of the principle of federation, and that the business of the Convention will be to discover how far and on what points federal action can be carried out at present.

Your view of the Canadian, or rather the Charlotte Town Convention, is not, I think, borne out by its history. Probably at that time some of the North American Provinces were further advanced in the direction of a federal union than the Australian Colonies now are; but when the Maritime Provinces decided to hold a Convention, in 1864, all reasonable hopes of effecting any arrangement with the Canadian Provinces had been abandoned; and yet that Convention, to which, in the first instance, the Canadian Provinces were admitted on mere sufferance, resulted in the establishment of the Dominion.

You take exception to the use of the word "Convention," instead of the usual word "Conference." The word "Convention" was used in Sir Thomas M'Ilwraith's original memorandum, and, as it seemed to have been accepted by all the Colonies in their replies, I have continued to use it.

The definition of the Charlotte Town Convention is thus given by the Hon. J. H. Gray, in his history, page 30:—

"It is to be borne in mind that this Convention was not a public representative body, having power to legislate, determine, or finally affect the public interests, but rather a Committee of public men deputed by their several Governments to inquire and report upon a proposition which might or might not ultimately be adopted, but which, before either its adoption or rejection, would be subject to a searching and exhaustive public discussion in the several Legislatures of the Provinces."

Now, I think this fairly describes the object of our meeting in Sydney next month, and the term "Convention" may as fairly be applied to it as to the meeting at Charlotte Town.

You

You say, "the Australasian case differs in the important point that the Colonies here have not unanimously expressed an opinion that the time has arrived. We have all more or less expressed our opinion that the time will come, but there has been, so far as I can judge, no general consensus of opinion that the time has arrived." Neither had the North American Provinces when their Convention met. As a matter of fact, New Brunswick drew back, and did not enter the Dominion for years after it was constituted. How can the Colonies express an opinion that the time has arrived, until they meet and discuss the matter? That the thing is desirable, if it can be done, must be assumed to be the feeling of all the Colonies, otherwise the sending of delegates is a delusion and the Convention a sham.

That confederation can now be effected in all its fulness I do not hope, but that some basis can be agreed on for a federal union of both a legislative and executive character, capable of dealing with those important questions which are immediately pressing, and which will gradually develop into a complete Australian Dominion, I have the greatest hopes, indeed I see no difficulty in the way if the various Colonies desire that it should be so.

Conferences hitherto have produced the minimum of results. Resolutions have been passed over and over again, but, as there existed no common legislative body to give them force, the greater part of them remain a dead letter.

A limited federation now would give practical effect to the wishes of the Colonies on those points on which they are agreed, and the basis would widen and grow as the advantages became manifest. A common danger (the outpouring of the moral filth of Europe into these seas), and a common desire (to save the islands of Australasia from the grasp of strangers) render federal action a necessity, and federal action is only possible by means of federal union of some sort.

I hope to have your hearty co-operation at the Convention in considering how this is best to be brought about, and the question as to how New South Wales should be represented I may now fairly leave to your own judgment.

APPENDIX A.

[Enclosure to No. 15.]

The Premier of Victoria to His Excellency the Most Noble the Marquis of Normanby, G.C.M.G., &c.
No. 67. Proposed annexation of New Hebrides and adjacent islands.

My Lord,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 18 June, 1883.

With reference to the interview which I had with your Excellency on the 9th inst., respecting the desired annexation or protectorate of the New Hebrides and neighbouring islands, I now have the honor to transmit herewith to your Excellency, for the information of the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, certain documents bearing upon the subject in question.

The first is a letter from the Rev. D. Macdonald, a new Hebridean missionary, at present on a visit to this Colony, and (besides being interesting in itself) sets forth what, I submit, are cogent reasons why the British Empire should take possession of the islands in question.

I received the deputation proposed by Mr. Macdonald, and returned a reply, in substance the same as that contained in a newspaper report which forms my second enclosure.

Enclosure No. 3 gives a list, asked for by me when receiving the deputation, of the various petitions which have at different times been directly or indirectly addressed to the Imperial Government (some from the natives themselves), praying for the annexation or a protectorate of the islands; and No. 4 is a letter from the Rev. J. G. Paton, setting out the reasons for the desired course.

To the reasons contained in these documents I trust Lord Derby will give the gravest consideration.

I will now add, that the action of this Colony has been somewhat precipitated by the circumstance that it was reported in Melbourne, a few days after my interview with the deputation, that the French Consul here had telegraphed to his Government an account of the matter, with a view to prevent British possession of the islands.

It was at once felt by Ministers that it might prove a fault, to be ever deplored but never to be remedied, if Australia, through supineness, were to allow these islands in the important strategic position which they occupy towards her, to fall without an effort into the hands of a foreign power.

I therefore at once communicated with the other colonies, and they joined unanimously in this view.

I would ask your Excellency to be so good as to call special attention to the fact that the desired annexation of these islands stands altogether apart from any question as to a general annexation policy on the part of the Empire. It is of the first importance, in order to apprehend the true bearings of the question, that it should be seen that this annexation has no connection with any such general policy; that, in fact, the unwisdom of such a policy may be freely granted, so far as it is concerned, and the proposition still remains true that it is an urgent necessity of Australia that the possibility of these island-territories becoming the post for foreign guns and foreign ships should, without delay, be placed beyond question and beyond fear. It undoubtedly prejudices the case that it comes to be considered at a time when any such general policy is before the public mind, but I trust it may not be confused with it by the experienced statesmen who will have to deal with it.

As to the question of expense, I would point out that the course we advocate may yet prove to be the truest economy. To take and hold possession would be at present a very small expense, but what would be the expense if in time of war these islands should become points from which foreign vessels could issue to attack Australian ports and harass British commerce? And it must be recollected that the great majority of the ships that trade to Australia are British registered and of British owners.

But, independently of this consideration, I feel sure that Australia would not wish the mother country to be at the whole expense of the projected measure. I have communicated with the other Colonies, asking their concurrence in this, and there has not yet been time to receive their replies; but I would ask your Excellency to be good enough to convey to Lord Derby my opinion that expense should not, and so far as an Australian subsidy is concerned, would not, be allowed to stand in the way.

It will probably be deemed equitable that, if Australia shares the expense, she should be consulted as to the mode of governing; but this is a matter of detail which should not be allowed to hinder proceedings.

There is one other consideration of great importance, and that is, that Australia is, in this respect, fettered in her action by her forming part of the British Empire. She cannot take the course which her truest interest dictates without the authority of the Crown; she is therefore entitled to make request of the Imperial authority to do that for her, which her connection with the Empire prevents her from doing for herself.

I have confined myself in this letter to the political aspect of the question, but, as well pointed out by the missionaries, there are questions of humanity and civilization which seem to add a clenching force to every other consideration.

In conclusion, I would ask your Excellency to be so good as to represent that there is no doubt that a strong feeling of dissatisfaction will spread throughout these colonies, if England, while holding Australia back from acting in her own interests, at the same time neglects to take a step which Australia deems essential to her future security and welfare.

I have, &c.,

JAMES SERVICE,
Premier.

[Sub-enclosure No. 1.]

The Honorable James Service, M.L.A., Premier of the Colony of Victoria,

Sir,

4, Eamont-terrace, Grey-street, East Melbourne, 31 May, 1883.

I have the honor to lay before you, as briefly as possible, the following statement:—

From a recent telegram we learn that the British Government, partly owing to the action of Queensland, supported as it has been by the other Australian Colonies, has annexed the southern part of New Guinea to the Empire, and resolved to administer it as a Crown Colony. This is a result heartily to be rejoiced in.

But to annex merely the south-eastern part of New Guinea is not, considered from any standpoint, sufficient, whether in the way of protecting the Australasian Colonies from the danger that would arise from the establishment of an alien power in the neighbouring islands, or in the way of protecting the natives of these islands from the atrocities of the labour traffic, and so of conserving the honor of the Empire, while promoting the interests of its commerce and civilization. A glance at the map will show that the chain of islands, inhabited by the same race, extending from New Guinea to the New Hebrides, or rather to the Fijis, including New Britain, New Ireland, and the Solomons, forms a natural group, should be annexed together, and together put under the same administration.

As to the danger that might arise from the proximity of a great naval power in any part of this region of Western or Papuan Polynesia, the New Hebrides is exactly the same distance from Brisbane as New Guinea; Melbourne is somewhat, and New Zealand immensely nearer to the New Hebrides than to New Guinea. To the swift war-vessels of the present day, a few hundred miles is a very small matter. The climate of the New Hebrides is healthier than that of New Guinea, or any other part of the region abovenamed except Fiji, and it has by far the best harbours; the island of Efate or Sandwich has two of the best harbours in the world, well supplied with fresh water. Finally, the natives of the New Hebrides group are more prepared for the reception of civilization than those of any other islands in the Papuan Archipelago, with the exception of Fiji; and it would be easier to establish a civilized Government among them; if not so advanced as the Fijians when Fiji was was annexed, they are more advanced than the islanders of the Solomons, New Britain, and New Guinea. Speaking of Fiji reminds us that it may be regarded as the outlying extremity of the chain of islands abovenamed, being only 400 miles from the New Hebrides, which again are only 1,000 miles from New Guinea. It is most undesirable that a foreign power should possess the New Hebrides and Solomons lying between Fiji and New Guinea, and forming the very heart of our nascent South Sea Empire, for it would be a standing menace to it as well as to the Australasian Colonies.

As to the protection of the natives from labour traffic atrocities, and conserving the honor of the British name, the necessity of doing which we have abundantly recognized by Acts of the Imperial Parliament and otherwise, it is in the New Hebrides and Solomons that that protection is most needed; there the flag of England has been most foully stained, and there has been done to the helpless people most grievous wrong, for which we are nationally responsible; we owe therefore to them a national debt of reparation, which we do not owe to the people of New Guinea. And the perpetration of that wrong is going on every day in these islands, whereas it is only begun in New Guinea. There is no other way worth trying of putting an end to these outrages and massacres that we are constantly hearing of, and many which we never hear of, but by annexing the islands, and thereby making the islanders British subjects. Lord Derby and the Home authorities recognize the need of new efforts to put a stop to them, or better regulate the labour traffic.—[See his reply to a deputation in February last.] Nothing short of annexation and putting the Papuan islander, as a labourer, on a footing analogous to that of the Hindu coolie, will avail. This, in fact, is a strong argument for annexation. The expenses now incurred—and they are considerable—for inefficient regulations would be applied efficiently under the new system; the honor, the interests, and the safety of the Empire would be promoted, the natives protected, and commerce and civilization permanently rooted and grounded in one of the fairest and most fertile portions of the globe.

There are four Missionary Societies at work in Papuan Polynesia, and only four, and the whole four are British; the Presbyterian in the New Hebrides, Church of England in the Solomons, Wesleyan in New Britain, and London Missionary Society in New Guinea. Of these missions, the Presbyterian in the New Hebrides is the oldest and largest; it has now fourteen European missionaries, together with about 150 native Christian teachers and evangelists, who may be regarded as the hope of their race, both as to Christianity and civilization, and it is carried on at an annual expense of about £6,000 of British, Home, and Colonial money. Similar things might be said of the other missions. Already a considerable number of traders and planters have settled in the New Hebrides, and most or nearly all of these are British subjects. All would hail annexation as a boon. The natives to a man are as much in favour of British as they are opposed to French annexation. There is not commercially a richer or more fertile or desirable group than the New Hebrides throughout the vast extent of the Pacific.

The Imperial Government can have no objection, on principle, to annexing these islands, since they have annexed New Guinea and Fiji; and there can be no reasonable objection on the score of expense, as the same machinery that is necessary for New Guinea and Fiji can be extended over the intervening islands, and the present expense of the abortive regulation of the so-called "labour traffic" will be available, and probably sufficient to cover any slight additional expense. And as soon as civilized Government is extended over these islands in connection with either of the established Governments of Fiji or New Guinea, as may be most convenient, the rapid commercial development and progress certain to take place in them will speedily secure more than the defrayment of their proportion of the expense of Government; for these islands will become the Australasian Indies, and will yield cotton, coffee, and cocoa-nut oil, sugar, and spices, and all other tropical products in large quantities.

Thus, generally speaking, it is exceedingly desirable to annex these islands along with New Guinea and Fiji. Hitherto the British Government have not seen their way to annex the New Hebrides, though frequently petitioned to do so; but now that Fiji at the one extremity, and New Guinea at the other, have been annexed, it is reasonable to expect that they would see it to be their wisdom to annex the intervening islands also, attaching them to either of the existing Colonies of Fiji or New Guinea, according to their proximity; and these islands not only lie between the two extremities of our South Sea Empire, but also form a chain that runs parallel to the Australian coast.

I therefore respectfully and earnestly suggest to you, as Premier of the Colony of Victoria, that, if you agree with these views, you take such steps as your long political experience may dictate to you to secure the co-operation of the other Australian Governments, in order to the annexation to the British Empire of the New Hebrides, Solomons, and New Britain, along with New Guinea and the Fijis; and have much satisfaction in feeling that to none could so important a business be more appropriately committed.

May I request that you will be good enough to appoint a time to receive myself and a number of gentlemen who are deeply interested in this matter, at your earliest convenience, to more fully explain their views on the subject.

I have, &c.,

D. MACDONALD,
Missionary, New Hebrides.

[Sub-enclosure No. 2.]

Extract from the Argus Newspaper of 7th June, 1883.

THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

A large deputation, including a number of clergymen, waited on the Premier yesterday to urge him to do everything in his power to induce the Imperial Government to annex or accord its protection to the islands in the South Seas that are not at present under the dominion of any other power. Mr. Balfour, M.L.C., introduced the deputation, which was also accompanied by Messrs. Anderson, Mirams, Gibb, and M. H. Davies, M.L.A.'s. The Minister of Justice was present with the Premier.

Mr. Balfour said that for many years those connected with the missions in the New Hebrides Islands had seen the necessity for the annexation of those islands, or else for their being brought under the protection of the Empire. The iniquitous labour traffic was really not under control, and it had had the effect of almost bringing Christianity and civilization to a standstill. Movements in favour of annexation or protection had been repeated, but unsuccessful. He assumed that Great Britain would either annex New Guinea or allow the Colonies to do so; and the present seemed a good opportunity to urge the annexation of the other islands, which could be advocated not only from a missionary's but from a statesman's point of view, for on these islands valuable products could be grown. Common humanity demanded the suppression of the labour traffic, about which there were numerous official reports, and which had lately been commented upon by Mr. Morrison, an independent witness. The Wesleyan mission at New Britain was represented in the deputation. The missionaries there did not want annexation until the natives had been consulted; but the New Hebrides missionaries could speak confidently as to the desire for annexation of the natives there. Throughout these islands there was a great dread of other powers, but a great desire to be annexed to the British Empire.

The Rev. D. Macdonald, Presbyterian missionary of the New Hebrides, said that the British had the most right to annex the islands, because they had spent more money there than any other nation. Moreover, precious British blood had been spilled there, and the British were more numerously represented than any other foreign nation. The annexation of the islands would be a reparation for the wrong done to them by the labour traffic by persons of British nationality more than any other. There was no other means than annexation of stopping the constantly occurring massacres. The New Hebrides were centrally situated, and were near to the Australian Colonies, and contained splendid harbours, the best of which was in the central island, called Sandwich Island.

The Rev. J. King, of the Victorian Auxiliary to the London Missionary Society, said that he had spent ten years on the Navigators' Islands. The missionaries did not advocate annexation, because they desired governmental patronage and help. They did not want British gun-boats to assist them in evangelizing the people. The greatest achievements of Christianity had been accomplished in the islands without such aid. He advocated annexation purely on humanitarian grounds. The British Government was the natural protector of these races. The long connection of British people with the islanders in missionary work and commercial enterprise had led the islanders to look up to the British as their natural protectors. Samoa, over and over again, asked the British Government for a protectorate, but such requests had been declined, and now Germany and America had obtained very strong footing there. Unless the British Government soon stepped in, the New Hebrides also would soon arrive at a stage at which British annexation would be impossible. The French had a considerable interest in the Loyalty group beyond New Caledonia. In the past the English Government had signally failed in conserving native races, because it had not yet adopted the right policy.

The Rev. E. I. Watkin, President of the Wesleyan Conference, said he was not authorized to speak on behalf of the Wesleyan Church, but so far as he knew the opinions of her missionaries it was that the case of the New Hebrides was not parallel with that of the Solomon Islands and New Britain. There had been a Presbyterian Mission in the New Hebrides for many years, and annexation was desired there. He was inclined to favour the establishment of a protectorate over the Solomon Islands and New Britain, with a view to annexation, should the natives desire it. There was already, it should be remembered, self-government in some of the islands. The natives had rights that should not be interfered with, except for political reasons. Such reasons justified the annexation of New Guinea, and on the same grounds the annexation of the New Hebrides, Solomon Islands, and New Britain might perhaps be justified.

The Rev. T. Nelson, of the New Hebrides Mission, said that the French strongly desired to take possession of those islands, the natives of which, however, strongly wished for annexation to Great Britain.

The Rev. J. G. Paton, missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, said that twenty years ago the Tanna chiefs petitioned for British annexation, and such request had been since renewed. As to the expenditure that annexation of the islands would entail, it had been magnified, because some of the islands could be governed from Fiji, and the others from New Guinea when that was annexed. The natives hated and feared the French, but they loved the name of Queen Victoria. If the French annexed the islands, the Protestant missions would be suppressed. All the islanders longed for British protection. It would be a pity if, after the expenditure of so much British money there, some other nation were to step in and reap the harvest. He concluded by relating instances of atrocities perpetrated by the labour vessels.

Mr. Service said that he would like to be furnished with a short résumé of all the appeals that had been made for the annexation of the islands and of other facts bearing on the subject. Every consideration pointed to the desirableness of the course so strongly recommended by the deputation. Unfortunately, humanitarian, civilizing, and Christianizing movements were often, if not antagonistic to political considerations, at all events not on the same line with them, but here every consideration pointed in the same direction. Politics, religion, commerce, civilization, humanity, all pointed to the absolute desirability of getting hold of these islands. As to New Guinea, he not only put himself in communication with the Agent-General, but requested the other Colonies to support the action of the Queensland Government. But in the steps he took on that subject he had not the slightest desire to encourage that labour trade which the deputation had referred to in terms that were not half strong enough. The mission of England all along had been to elevate, Christianize, and civilize the dark nations of the earth. Of late years she seemed to have felt that she was getting too many dependencies, but he believed that that was a mistaken notion altogether. England was an immense moral power among the nations; she owed her position to her grand moral status, and it was a position that her military power would never give her. He would immediately bring the matter under the notice of his colleagues, and would allow no delay to elapse in his efforts to bring about the desired result. If the Australian Legislatures could be induced to pass resolutions in favour of annexation, that would tell very favourably with the Government and Parliament of England, who would regard such opinions as of more importance than mere governmental action. He believed the Victorian Government would be unanimously in favour of prompt action.

The deputation withdrew, gratified with the statement of the Premier.

The Honorable James Service, Premier.

Dear Sir,

Cotham-road, Kew, Friday, June 8th, 1883.

I am sorry I could not sooner send you the required dates of memorials and petitions to the Queen for a protectorate, and for annexation of the New Hebrides Islands. I feel also sorry the following are so imperfect, as all such records are kept by Dr. Steel, the agent of our mission in Sydney, and now he is in Melbourne attending a conference, but they can be got from him on his return; but at present I forward all I have been able to get from blue books, though very imperfect, as a number are not noted in books now within my reach.

In A.D. 1862 the chiefs of Tanna sent a petition through me to Sir John Young, Governor of New South Wales, for a protectorate. He did not forward it.

In A.D. 1868 a petition was presented to the Earl of Belmore, by the New Hebrides Mission, for Her Majesty the Queen.

In A.D. 1868 a petition was presented to Lord Stanley, by the Reform Presbyterian Church of Scotland, for Her Majesty the Queen.

In A.D. 1872 a petition was presented to Earl Kimberley, Secretary of State for the Colonies, by the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Scotland, for the Queen.

In A.D. 1874 a petition was sent to the Queen regarding the labour traffic and implying a British protectorate, like all the above noted.

In November, 1874 another petition was sent from Victoria regarding the "slave or labour traffic" and a protectorate.

In A.D. 1874 or 1875 a petition was sent by the natives of Efate, per Lieutenant Carey, of H.M. gun-boat "Conflict," which was presented, for annexation like Fiji as they expressed it, through Mr. Macdonald.

In A.D. 1877 the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, the Presbyterian Church of New South Wales, and the Free Church of Scotland, and the Mission, all sent petitions to the Queen for annexation of the New Hebrides to Great Britain.

In A.D. 1882 a petition was sent from a Conference which met in Sydney, representing all the Presbyterians of Australasia, and others followed from Victoria, and South Australia, and Tasmania, and the New Hebrides Mission, and the natives, and the Free Church of Scotland, to the Queen, entreating the annexation of the group to Great Britain.

The above will show you that the subject has been long before the minds of the natives, the missionaries and Europeans on the islands, and all the churches at home and in our Australasian Colonies which have been engaged in the work of civilizing and Christianizing the New Hebrides Islands.

In the Conference of the Australasian Presbyterian Churches, which met in Sydney in April of last year, I pleaded for British annexation of the New Hebrides Islands, on account of eight reasons which I have written out to you and enclose, and which led to the six petitions being sent to the Queen, as above referred to, for annexation to Great Britain.

Thanking you heartily for the cordial reception of our deputation, and wishing you every blessing in Christ Jesus,—

I remain, &c.,

JOHN G. PATON.

[Enclosure to foregoing.]

[I enclose this from Dr. Steel, Sydney.—JOHN G. PATON.]

Some ten years ago, when an abortive effort was made by a number of private individuals to form a settlement in New Guinea, representations were made to some of the Colonial Governments on the importance of the annexation of New Guinea by the British Government. At the same period, simultaneous efforts were made by Presbyterian Churches to the Governments of Australasian Colonies respecting the annexation of the New Hebrides. The labour traffic at that time excited great interest on account of its many inhumanities.

The Government of New South Wales, at the period referred to, formally agreed to recommend the annexation of New Guinea, the Duke of York Islands, New Britain, New Ireland, and the New Hebrides. Sir John Robertson, then Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, addressed a communication to the Earl of Kimberley, the British Minister for the Colonies, urging the importance of annexation. The answer of the Earl of Kimberley was unfavourable; but the correspondence, which was published by the Government of New South Wales, shows that this proposal is not now urged for the first time.

The population of natives in the New Hebrides is rapidly declining, and these islands will certainly be annexed by some power, as they are well fitted to grow all kinds of tropical spices and other fruits. They were discovered for the most part by British navigators, traded with by British vessels, regularly visited by Her Majesty's ships of war, and justice frequently administered by Her Majesty's naval officers, and finally evangelized by the labours and munificence of British subjects.

[Sub-enclosure No. 4.]

To the Honorable James Service, Premier.

Sir,

For the following reasons we think the British Government ought now to take possession of the New Hebrides group of the South Sea Islands, of the Solomon group, and of all the intervening chain of islands from Fiji to Guinea :—

1st. Because she has already taken possession of Fiji in the east, and we hope it will soon be known authoritatively that she has taken possession of New Guinea at the north-west, adjoining her Australian possessions, and the islands between complete this chain of islands lying along the Australian coast. Taking possession of the New Hebrides would not add much to her expenses, as her Governments on Fiji and New Guinea, with the visits of her men-of-war passing through the group of the New Hebrides and intervening islands on their way to New Guinea, would almost be sufficient for all her requirements on the islands between.

2nd. The sympathy of the New Hebrides natives are all with Great Britain, hence they long for British protection ; while they fear and hate the French, who appear eager to annex the group, because they have seen the way the French have treated the native races of New Caledonia, the Loyalty Islands, and other South Sea Islands.

3rd. Till within the past few months, almost all the Europeans on the New Hebrides were British subjects, who long for British protection.

4th. All the men, and all the money (over £140,000) used in civilizing and Christianizing the New Hebrides, have been British. Now fourteen missionaries, and the "Dayspring" mission ship, and about 150 native evangelists and teachers, are employed in the above work on this group, in which over £6,000 yearly of British and British-colonial money is expended, and certainly it would be unwise to let any other power now take possession and reap the fruits of all this British outlay.

5th. Because the New Hebrides are already a British dependency in this sense,—all its imports are from Sydney and Melbourne and British colonies, and all its exports are also to British colonies.

6th. The islands in this group are generally very rich in soil and in tropical products, so that, if a possession of Great Britain, and the labour traffic stopped, so as to retain what remains of the native populations on them, they would soon, and for ages to come, become rich sources of tropical wealth to these Colonies, as sugar-cane is extensively cultivated on them by every native of the group even in his heathen state. For natives they are an industrious, hard-working race, living in villages and towns, and, like farmers, depending on the cultivation and products of the ground for their support by their plantations. The islands also grow maize, cotton, coffee, arrowroot, and spices, &c., &c., and all tropical products could be largely produced on them.

7th. Because if any other nation takes possession of them, their excellent and spacious harbours, as on Efate, so well supplied with the best fresh water, and their near proximity to Great Britain's Australasian Colonies, would in time of war make them dangerous to British interests and commerce in the South Seas and to her Colonies.

8th. The thirteen islands of this group, on which life and property are now comparatively safe, the 8,000 professed Christians on the group, and all the churches formed among them, are, by God's blessing, the fruits of the labours of British missionaries, who, at great toil, expense, and loss of life, have translated, got printed, and taught the natives to read the Bible, in part or in whole, in nine different languages of this group, while 70,000 at least are longing and ready for the Gospel. On this group twenty-one members of the mission family died or were murdered by the savages in beginning God's work among them, not including good Bishop Patteson, of the Melanesian Mission, and we fear all this good work would be lost if the New Hebrides fall into other than British hands.

9th. Because we see no other way of suppressing the labour traffic in Polynesia, with all its many evils, as it rapidly depopulates the islands, being attended by much bloodshed, misery, and loss of life. It is an unmitigated evil to the natives, and ruinous to all engaged in it, and to the work of civilizing and Christianizing the islanders. While all experience proves that all labour laws and regulations, with Government agents and gun-boats, cannot prevent such evils, which have always been the sad accompaniments of all such traffic in men and women in every land, and because this traffic and its evils are a sad stain on our British glory and Australasian honor, seeing Britain has done so much to free the slave and suppress slavery in other lands.

For the above reasons, and others that might be given, we sincerely hope and pray that you will do all possible to get Victoria and the other Colonial Governments to help and unite in urging Great Britain at once to take possession of the New Hebrides group. Whether looked at in the interests of humanity or Christianity, or commercially or politically, surely it is most desirable that they should at once be British possessions, hence we plead for your judicious and able help, and remain,—

Your humble servant,

JOHN G. PATON,

Senior Missionary, New Hebrides Mission.

[Enclosure to No. 19.]

NEW GUINEA.

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Executive Council of Queensland, at Government House, Brisbane, 17th July, 1883. Present—His Excellency the Administrator of the Government in Council.

His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, at the instance of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, lays before the Council the following Memorandum by the Premier on the refusal of the Imperial Government to confirm the annexation of New Guinea, and recommends that the same be approved :—

Memorandum by the Premier of Queensland on the refusal of the Imperial Government to confirm the annexation of New Guinea.

The decision arrived at by Her Majesty's Government in reference to the annexation of New Guinea seems to me to justify some decided and concerted action on the part of the Australian Colonies. It is scarcely necessary to refer at any length to the previous correspondence on this subject, or to the repeated representations in connection with it which have been made to the Imperial Government.

It seems to me right that reference should be made to the various reasons assigned for this refusal. In 1875, Lord Carnarvon, while not discouraging the idea of extensive annexation, assigned as one reason why he could not act on the representations of the Australian Colonies, that the British tax-payer could not and would not bear the expenditure. Lord Derby advances the same reason now. He adds to this other reasons—the enormous extent of the territory, the unknown character of the interior, and the hostility of the natives. These objections may be easily combated. The expense need not be great, and we now know that the Australian Colonies will undertake this expense, or share it with Her Majesty's Government, if required to do so. As for the natives, the Dutch have not interfered with the aborigines in that part of New Guinea claimed by them, and their claim costs them nothing. They wait, and simply hold the country as against any other Power. There would be no difficulty in our doing single-handed, in that part of New Guinea contiguous to our shores, a great deal more than the Dutch have done during the last fifty years in the north-western portion of the island. Queensland has simply been desirous that New Guinea should not fall into the hands of a foreign Power, and that the requisite authority should be exercised over those adventurers who frequent the shores of that island. Experience in Torres Straits has already proved valuable in this respect. The "beachcombers" who frequented the islands of Murray and Darnley have taken themselves off since the annexation of these islands to Queensland territory. What was effected in Torres Straits could have been carried out with perfect ease on the mainland of New Guinea. All that was required was the acceptance of the proclamation. I still think that it ought to have been accepted, and I hope that the Australian Colonies will, by their several and united representations, urge upon Her Majesty's Government a reconsideration of their decision.

But there can be no doubt that the refusal to annex New Guinea, together with the possible acquisition by foreign Powers of some of the Pacific islands contiguous to Australia, does raise very serious questions intimately connected with the future interests of the Australasian Colonies. If Her Majesty's Government does not feel that the annexation of New Guinea, or of the islands adjacent to Australia, is of so much importance to the Empire at large as it is to the Australian Colonies, let some means be devised by which those islands may be held and governed for the benefit of the Australian people. The step taken by the Queensland Government, in causing a formal claim to be made over New Guinea, was done in the interests not only of Queensland, but of all the Australian Colonies, and in the interests of the natives of New Guinea, who ought to be protected by some lawful authority from contact with the lawless adventurers who are too often a law to themselves. That also which is for the advantage of this country is surely for the advantage of Great Britain. The middle island of New Zealand was won for Great Britain by a timely act of annexation. In the last century, similar timely acts of annexation won large portions of America for the Anglo-Saxon race. Why, then, should not Queensland be permitted, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, to assist in carrying out this national and beneficial policy? If then, the real reason for the refusal to annex New Guinea be, not the expense, but the difficulty of providing for the government and protection of the native races, might not this be met by the sanction and authority of the united Colonies? Some justification, it has been often said, is required for federation—may it not be found in this exigency?

I submit that a case has arisen which may be made use of to call into existence the higher forms of government required to give effect to this policy of annexation. The Australian Colonies are now united by sentiments of filial regard and devotion to the British Empire, though they are not represented in the British Legislature. The Imperial Parliament dominates the whole Empire, and the Colonies are not represented in that Parliament, though their interests may be vitally affected by its decisions. It is not possible to give authoritative effect to the wishes of the people of Australia in anything beyond their own domestic interests, except through the intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

The circumstances of the present case seem to point to a necessity for combination among the Australian Colonies—a combination for both legislative and executive purposes. Australian interests are involved in securing the peaceful and progressive supremacy of Australian influences in the adjoining seas. In order to effect this it is necessary that there should not only be sentiments held in common, but that a form of Government should be provided capable of giving expression to these sentiments. The federation of the Australian Colonies may thus be forwarded. Here is work for the united Colonies to do, if they can be got to unite. I suggest that a convention of delegates should be held to discuss the basis upon which a Federal Government could be constituted.

This, I believe, was the form adopted in Canada previous to the constitution of the Dominion Parliament. May not this example be followed here? The Dominion Government has added largely to the influence and the national integrity of Canada. It seems probable that a similar form of Government adapted to the special requirements of Australia would give life to national aspirations here, without repressing the autonomous Governments of the respective Colonies. To it would properly belong the discussion of such measures as are necessary for the consolidation and security of Australian interests, as well as for the government of these outlying islands in the Pacific, which at present are not claimed by any civilized power.

I think, therefore, that there ought, in the first place, to be representations from all the Australian Colonies, urging upon Her Majesty's Government a reconsideration of their decision as regards New Guinea; and, in the next place, Her Majesty's Government should be invited to move in the direction of providing for a form of Federal Government suitable for the Australian Colonies. I propose that this memorandum should be embodied in an Executive minute and forwarded both to Her Majesty's Government and to the Governments of the respective Australian Colonies, for their consideration, and for such action as they may deem expedient.

T. M'ILWRAITH.

The Council deliberate and advise, as recommended, immediate action.—A. V. DRURY, Clerk of the Executive Council.

APPENDIX C.

[Enclosure to No. 20.]

The Agents-General to Lord Derby.

My Lord,

London, 21 July, 1883.

In accordance with the desire expressed by your Lordship on the occasion of our recent interview with you, we purpose now to place before your Lordship in writing the representations which we then submitted to you on the annexation or protectorate of the Western Pacific Islands and the eastern portion of New Guinea.

It is no doubt well known to your Lordship that during a period now extending over more than thirty years, the Australasian Colonies have one after another pressed upon Her Majesty's Government the expediency of bringing the islands of the Western Pacific within the dominion or the protection of England; and we feel assured that the whole question will appear to your Lordship invested with a graver aspect, when for the first time the Governments of nearly all the Dependencies of England in Australasia come before Her Majesty's Government to make a united remonstrance against the present state of affairs in the Western Pacific, and to ask from the Imperial authority the adoption of such a definite policy and purpose as they believe is essential to their future well-being.

It is true that fear of foreign intervention has been the immediate cause of this concerted action on the part of the Australasian Governments; and this, we understood, seemed to your Lordship hardly adequate to justify a strong sense of present danger. We can assure you that our Governments would receive with a sense of great relief your Lordship's assurance that there is no foundation for our fears. But it is not only the apprehension of immediate foreign intervention that has influenced our Governments, nor would its removal change their opinion as to the necessity for making it impossible in the future. Other powerful reasons bring them together to urge upon the Imperial Government the necessity of a policy different from the one that has been pursued in the past: the conviction, indeed, that the state of things in the Western Pacific has at last become intolerable. We feel that we ought not to say this, without an attempt to trace the course of events that have led to so grave a declaration.

It was in 1848 that Sir George Grey, then Governor of New Zealand, first called the attention of the Imperial Government to a "species of trade in the native inhabitants which had commenced in the Pacific," and to the danger of foreign annexation, pointing out the necessity of providing against these in time. For many years successive appeals of the same kind, and from one Colony after another, were made to Her Majesty's Government to interfere. In the meanwhile, the constant repetition of outrages in the Pacific had become such a scandal to civilisation, that the Imperial Government resolved to make a vigorous attempt to repress them. The Foreign Jurisdiction Acts, which had been in existence in various forms since 1828, and the Pacific Islanders Protection Act of 1872, had proved insufficient to meet the increasing difficulties of the case. At last, in 1875, two Acts of Parliament were passed, amending the former law, defining more clearly the powers and jurisdiction of Her Majesty in the Pacific Ocean, and creating the office of High Commissioner for the Western Pacific. These were followed, two years after, by the promulgation of the "Western Pacific Order in Council of 1877," which established the High Commissioner's Court, with elaborate provision for the government of the Western Pacific: and the new Colony of Fiji, which had meanwhile been created in 1876, became the centre of the High Commissioner's operations.

The humane intentions of the Imperial Government in these measures have always commanded the respect and sympathy of the Australasian Colonies: and if it had ever been possible to give them real effect, we should not be addressing your Lordship to-day; but there was an inherent difficulty, the results of which could hardly have been foreseen at the time, but which was certain to paralyze every endeavour to confer the benefits of law and order on the vast region, stretching from New Guinea across the Pacific Ocean, which those measures embraced. The Act of 1875, which created the office of High Commissioner, only empowered Her Majesty to "exercise power and jurisdiction over Her subjects" within the islands, and expressly declared that nothing in the Act or in any Order in Council under it should "extend, or be construed to extend, to invest Her Majesty with any claim or title whatsoever to dominion or sovereignty" over the islands, or to "derogate from the rights of the tribes or people inhabiting them, or of their chiefs or rulers, to such sovereignty or dominion." And although the powers of the Order in Council were apparently extended so as to include foreigners in a few specified cases, they were practically restricted to British subjects only, for no foreigner could be brought under the High Commissioner's jurisdiction unless he could produce "the consent in writing of the competent authority on behalf of his own nation," a condition which, from the nature of things, could seldom if ever be fulfilled.

Non

Nor did the Order in Council fully carry out the idea with which it had been originally devised. Though the Act was passed in 1875, it was not till 1877 that the order in Council under it was issued; and it was not till 1878 that it could be brought into operation in the Pacific. Meanwhile the intentions of Her Majesty's Government had undergone some change. Differences arose between the naval authorities and the Acting High Commissioner as to their respective powers. The work to be done was daily becoming more and more difficult, and the nature of the difficulty was becoming better known to Her Majesty's Government. Hardly was the Order in Council brought into operation, when it was found to be too intricate and complicated an instrument, bristling as it did with technicalities and minute provisions in precise legal language, to be really workable. The High Commissioner described the position in which he was placed in the clearest terms. His jurisdiction being one extending over British subjects exclusively, he had no authority whatever to deal, whether judicially or in his executive capacity, with offences by natives of islands not under the dominion of the Crown. He more than once represented to the Imperial Government, that unless such a jurisdiction were created as would be competent to take cognizance also of offences committed against British subjects, the infliction of punishment on these for outrages against natives in the same regions was certain to excite on their part a natural irritation, and a sense of being treated with injustice. But the reply to his representations invariably was, that "in the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, insuperable obstacles existed to any assumption of jurisdiction by Her Majesty over other than British subjects, beyond the limits of Her dominions."

Sir A. Gordon,
Feb. 26, 1881.

The High Commissioner could not with fairness be reproached for not having exercised a jurisdiction which he had been strictly forbidden to assume. Early in 1881 he reminded Lord Kimberley how often the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been painfully called to the greatly increased frequency of the murder of Europeans by natives in the islands of the Western Pacific; this he attributed (among other causes) to the "far greater intercourse between whites and natives," and to the possession of firearms by the latter, "which had given them a confidence and boldness they did not before possess." Later on he recommended that power should be granted for the trial of natives for offences against British subjects, where such a power might be conceded by the native chiefs themselves; but it would have been no easier to get the assent of the natives than that of foreigners. The High Commissioner regretted that so elaborate an instrument as the Order in Council had been in the first instance prepared; and he represented that of its 321 articles by far the greater part were never called into use, that it was constantly found, in the remoter regions of the Pacific, impossible to comply with its directions, and that the powers intended to be conferred by it were therefore ineffectual. So things went on from 1877 to 1881.

Sir A. Gordon,
April 23, 1881.

Another year elapsed, and the evils only got worse. In the hope of lessening them, the High Commissioner appointed

Sir A. Gordon,
June 16, 1882.

two officers, Captain Dale, R.N., and Captain Cyprian Bridge, R.N., commanding H.M.S. "Diamond," and "Espègle, to be Deputy Commissioners. But the old difficulty reasserted itself at once, that there was no jurisdiction over foreigners: the evil-doers of any nation had only to represent themselves as belonging to some other nationality, in order to escape control. In his instructions to the Deputy-Commissioners, Sir A. Gordon warned them that they would have difficulty in ascertaining who were British subjects and who were not, because many would seek to plead some other nationality; and that they would find caution to be essentially requisite, as they had no jurisdiction whatever over any foreigner unless he submitted to it voluntarily. There was never any doubt that this device of assuming other nationalities would be resorted to by criminals: but it was hardly necessary to resort to it, for outrages in which foreigners were openly concerned took place. A boat from a vessel named the "Aurora," flying the French flag, had a collision with the natives of an island called Api in the New Hebrides group, in which the chief of a small village was shot. The natives thereupon resolved to murder the first white man they could, in revenge. An English labour vessel, the "Dauntless," went to the island shortly afterwards to recruit labourers: her boat was decoyed to the beach, when the natives opened fire with rifles, killing the second mate and wounding the Government Agent. Complaints were often made of there being cases of kidnapping by French vessels at one island or another, and consequent threats of the natives that they would kill the first white man who went there. An inquiry was held at Noumea respecting the French vessel "Aurora." In her case it was clearly shown that the crew had put in practice the worst form of kidnapping, such as starving in or running down canoes, capturing the natives, and shooting those who attempted to escape. Labourers were being apparently recruited by the crews of vessels nearly all of which flew foreign flags. The planters of all nationalities were greatly exasperated by the conduct of masters of labour vessels, both French and English, in enticing away their servants. Where the foreigner committed an outrage, he was not amenable to punishment; where he suffered injury, he could get no redress in the High Commissioner's Court.

But if there was serious trouble by reason of there being no jurisdiction over foreigners, another trouble was growing up even more serious because there was none over natives. So far from outrages diminishing after the Order in Council was promulgated, they increased. In November, 1880, Commander Bower, R.N. of H.M.S. "Sandfly," with a boat's crew, was put to death on a small island of the Solomon group under circumstances of much barbarity. The Governor of New South Wales reported to the Colonial Office that "the atrocious murders lately committed by the South Sea Islanders had caused and were causing a very deep feeling of pain and indignation." The newspapers teemed with accounts of these outrages: it was said that "no week passed without the announcement of another massacre in the Islands." The exasperation predicted by Sir Arthur Gordon as certain to occur, was becoming greater every day. Early in 1881 Lord Kimberley, in a despatch to the High Commissioner, deplored the "unusual number of outrages by natives upon white men which had recently been reported to the Colonial Office." In the meanwhile stern reprisals had been resorted to. When the outrage took place at the island of Api in revenge for what had been done by the crew of a French vessel, the Commodore had gone down in H.M.S. "Wolverene" and landed a party of 100 seamen and marines, who destroyed four of the villages implicated, and cut down the fruit plantations in their vicinity. And now, after the "Sandfly" outrage, the Commodore felt it his duty to take even severer measures. In December, 1880, he sent down Captain Maxwell, R.N., in H.M.S. "Emerald," to inflict punishment not only for the "Sandfly" murders, but for others that had been committed on crews of the vessels "Ripple," "Esperanza," "Borealis," and "Anne Brooks." The punishment was very severe. From bay to bay, from island to island, the villages were set in flames, the cocoa-nut and other fruit trees cut down, and the canoes destroyed. "There was no more to be done," said Captain Maxwell, "in the way of hunting these wretched people. . . . They have been hunted and worried till it will be long before they settle again. . . . I regret that my whole voyage in these islands has been one of apparently ruthless destruction, but no other course has been possible." Nor was this enough. A few months afterwards a still stronger step was taken. Commander Bruce, of H.M.S. "Cormorant," was sent to the Florida Isles by the Commodore to bring the perpetrators of the "Sandfly" murders to justice. There he issued a declaration that "in consequence of an English officer and boat's crew being murdered by Florida men, the Queen of England declares war with the whole tribes of Floridas, unless the actual murderers are given up in fourteen days"; adding that "in case of any other white man being killed in the Florida Isles, the whole of the chiefs would be held responsible, and the Florida Islands be considered to be at war with the Queen of England." Bishop Selwyn, being then on the spot, humanely did all he could to save life. Writing to Commander Bruce, he says:—"I have acted as I have done, because you, sir, as the representative of Her Majesty, have declared war against all the people of these islands unless the murderers are given up. It appears to me to be my duty to save the people from such a calamity, by using what influence I possess to induce them to comply with Her Majesty's demands." The Commodore "fully approved of the 'Cormorant's' action at the Floridas." Thus it seemed that a naval officer, in reprisals for an outrage, might issue a "declaration of war" against entire tribes in the Western Pacific, and that what he required must be considered as being "Her Majesty's demands." Surely it was not this which could ever have been looked for as the outcome of the scheme of 1875 for the government of the Western Pacific.

Remedies which were suggested.

It is no wonder that such a state of things should have caused serious anxiety to Her Majesty's Government, or that the Secretary of State should have desired the High Commissioner to advise what was now to be done. That the Order in Council had failed was evident; "an acknowledgment," says Sir Arthur Gordon, "that the present system is a failure, and the consequent repeal of the Order in Council would have the merit of simplicity." But the question was what should be put in its place. When the news came home of the events we have just described, Lord Kimberley sent a despatch to the Governor of Queensland, saying that it was contemplated to invite the Naval Powers to agree to the appointment of a Joint Commission for considering the measures which should be taken for the regulation of the labour traffic, the trade in firearms, and the prevention and punishment of outrages of all kinds, under the sanction of a Convention between Her Majesty's Government and the other Powers. The Queensland Government immediately expressed their willingness to co-operate with the Imperial authorities for such a plan. The High Commissioner expressed his own concurrence. "Some sort of international agreement," he said, "seems to me to form an essential part of any satisfactory arrangement." He then went on to make several recommendations for improving the existing system, one of which was that the judicial powers conferred by the Orders in Council should be so extended by Act of Parliament as to render offences committed by natives against British subjects equally cognizable with those committed by British subjects against natives. But it would evidently have been useless to assume jurisdiction over the native people and continue to except foreigners. Nor did the High Commissioner shrink from admitting this. "To obtain," he said, "the power of dealing satisfactorily with the misdeeds of other whites than Englishmen, or of punishing attacks upon them, an international agreement, having the sanction of a treaty, with France, Germany, and the United States, would be necessary. Such an arrangement would probably involve the substitution for the High Commission of a mixed Commission similar to the old mixed Commission Slave Trade Courts." And Sir Arthur Gordon then went on, with perfect truth, to touch the real kernel of the whole matter. "It should be borne in mind," he said, "that the punishment of outrages, though at present forced into prominence, is not the only nor the most important matter which has to be dealt with in these seas"; and he reminded the Secretary of State that the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner and his Court was one "primarily created to bring law, both civil and criminal, within the reach of British subjects far from all other legal tribunals, to check aggressive lawlessness, and to regulate the growth and development of British settlements in the Western Pacific." This was wise language. But when such recommendations were made, it was difficult to escape the logical conclusion from them. Once let it be admitted that the Imperial Government can pass an Act such as was advised by the High Commissioner, and is there anything but the thinnest veil left between that and the assertion of the very right of "sovereignty or dominion" which it was the purpose of the Act of 1875 to forbid?

It would not be fair if we did not refer to other remedies which were suggested by the High Commissioner. Early in 1881, after reciting the causes for the increased frequency of murder of Europeans by natives in the Western Pacific, Sir Arthur Gordon referred to two ways by which they could be prevented in future. "One is," he said, "that which I know on good authority was seriously contemplated by Her Majesty's Government some years ago,—the establishment of a strong chartered Company possessing an exclusive right to trade. Another course would be to limit the protection given for trading operations, to those carried on at certain specified localities." But Sir Arthur Gordon even then allowed that the time for any scheme of a chartered Company had passed; and last year he proposed another plan to improve the working of the existing High Commission, the leading features of which, in addition to extending his jurisdiction by a new Act of Parliament, were the appointment of three Deputy-Commissioners, the conferring of Deputy-Commissioners' powers on naval officers in command of H.M. cruisers, and the permanent employment of a vessel, not a man-of-war, in the service of the Commission.

Whatever might have been the recommendations some years ago, in favour of granting an exclusive right of trading in the Western Pacific to a chartered Company, we entirely agree with Sir Arthur Gordon that the time for any such scheme has long gone by. An elaborate plan was devised in 1876 by Sir Julius Vogel, then Premier of New Zealand, and the present Premier of that Colony, Mr. Whitaker, for the establishment of a great trading Company for the Western Pacific; but it fell to the ground, as any scheme of the kind now proposed must inevitably do. There are no circumstances in the Pacific similar to those which were held to justify the granting of a Royal Charter, in November, 1881, to the North Borneo Company; on the contrary, there are circumstances essentially adverse to any plan of the kind. But even if there were not, we may point to two things which alone ought now to dismiss it from consideration. In the first place, it would always have been futile to imagine that any grant of exclusive rights of trade to a Company would be effectual even in the case of British traders; not only would they have traded in spite of it, but at no time after the promulgation of the Order in Council could any such exclusive grant have been made without grave injustice to them; while as regards foreigners, such a right would not have affected the French, German, and American traders; and if it was not to be respected by everybody, it must necessarily fail as a remedy. There are already French Companies established in New Caledonia, whose operations extend over many of the islands, and there will certainly be several others. By what process could these Companies be prevented from trading? The slightest attempt to do so would show how the question ever comes back to the same point; to the exercise, namely, of rights of "sovereignty and dominion." But in the second place, we feel sure your Lordship will allow that, in any scheme for giving a chartered Company exclusive rights of trade, the interests and the wishes of Australasia could not be left out of consideration. Now, the exclusive right to trade could not exist for a moment in the islands without some right to govern; and the Governments of Australasia could not be expected to acquiesce in any right of government being transferred from the Imperial authority to any other authority than their own.

Moreover, even if anything could be said for the palliatives which have been suggested as being applicable to the smaller groups of islands, it is certain that they would be utterly useless in the case of New Guinea. Sir Arthur Gordon has himself pointed out the only means by which the question of New Guinea can ever be settled. His opinion on this subject has long been familiar to your Lordship, but it is only now that it has become known. "I am irresistibly compelled," he said, "to adopt a conclusion, which I should have wished to avoid, and which I was at first inclined to, think might be avoided, namely, that the annexation by Great Britain of at least certain portions of New Guinea will speedily become inevitable, even if the necessity for such a step has not already arisen. . . . Could I see any other way of dealing satisfactorily with such a state of things, I would recommend a resort to it; but I must with regret admit that after the most careful consideration, I am unable to perceive any mode of meeting these difficulties except by annexation; for it appears to me necessary that territorial jurisdiction should be assumed by Great Britain, to enable us to deal with offences committed by foreigners associated with British settlers, or with those committed by natives, and unless such jurisdiction over them be assumed, I question the practicability of exercising it with the smallest degree of efficiency over British subjects themselves; and I must confess, therefore, that I see no middle course between annexation and the abandonment of all control over the acts of British subjects in New Guinea, involving a practical acquiescence in the establishment there of a reign of lawless violence and anarchy. This latter is a course which we cannot creditably adopt, and which, indeed, were we disposed to take it, we should after a time be forced to abandon. A greater or less degree of annexation, consequently, appears to be inevitable. Should there be any other method, unknown to me but known to Her Majesty's Government, by which such cases could be met, I need not say I should prefer its adoption."

It is true that this opinion was given by the High Commissioner at a time when there was much excitement over the reported existence of rich gold-fields in New Guinea, and when an expectation existed of a great influx of miners taking place there, which was never fulfilled. But though gold-mining on a large scale has not yet come to aggravate the evils described by the High Commissioner, other events have happened whose impelling force has not been less towards the same solution than would have been the presence of a large body of miners. To these we shall refer later on.

Trade.

We have endeavoured to trace the events which have gradually but surely been pressing with ever increasing force for a new policy on the Western Pacific question. We now turn from these to a matter just as pressing, namely, the constantly growing trade of all that region.

At the end of 1881 Commodore Wilson collected from the various Customs officers some valuable returns of the commerce between the Australasian Colonies and the Western Pacific Islands; from these we have taken out the following evidence of what the trade amounted to in the ten years from 1871 to 1880:—

Customs Returns: Commod

The Commodore did not merely point out how large was, even at that time, the value of this trade: he said significantly that "as yet the sources of trade may be said to be in their infancy." He might have added that these Custom returns only included, of course, the British trade, and took no account of foreign traders: if the French, German, and American trade could have been added, the total would have amounted to a much larger sum than 6½ millions. It is needless for us to point out that the greater part of the produce of the Western Pacific only passes through Australia, and really comes to England. That this produce will greatly increase is beyond doubt. The whole trade, indeed, of the Pacific is destined to undergo a great change whenever the Panama Canal is made. It is then that will be seen the foresight of France in establishing herself at Tahiti and the Marquesas: and the Navigators, with the splendid harbour on Tutuila Island, will come into a new importance, while the Fiji group will become the nearest colony of England in the Pacific.

The pearl-shell and bêche de mer fisheries alone amount to nearly a million sterling annually. The growth of sugar plantations is equally remarkable. Probably £1,000,000 have been spent in Queensland alone in creating sugar estates where only a few years ago there was nothing but the wilderness: the actual produce of these estates is already 19,000 tons, and in three years will probably be 50,000 tons. The great importance of this to Australasia will at once be seen from the fact that in the single year 1881 sugar to the value of close on £2,700,000 was imported into Australia and New Zealand, of which the import from Mauritius exceeded £1,500,000. It is quite certain there will be a great extension of the growth of sugar in Queensland and Fiji, and in it a constantly larger amount of Polynesian labour is sure to be employed. Now the necessity of further regulations for the labour trade and traffic in firearms, by foreigners as well as our own people, is one of the things that have been most strongly pressed upon Her Majesty's Government by the highest Imperial officers, and by every authority of importance in the Colonies concerned.

The chief difficulty we have in referring to this is that no one in Australasia really knows how far the ground is clear of foreign claims, or to what engagements Her Majesty's Government is now committed. It is of the first importance to define with accuracy the political relation in which each group of islands stands to-day, whether to the Imperial Government or to any foreign Powers. We therefore trust that we may ask your Lordship to enable us to place before our Governments a full statement of what claims have yet been made by foreign Powers, and of the extent to which such claims have been recognized by Her Majesty.

The sense of uncertainty and insecurity which prevails in Australasia on this subject may perhaps be best illustrated by what has happened in the case of the New Hebrides. That group was originally part of the Colony of New Zealand, under the Charter of 1840. At some time, of which we are not aware, a rather vague understanding appears to have been come to with the Government of France that the New Hebrides should be relinquished as a possession of the Crown and their independence recognized. In 1878, upon reports coming to Europe of a French project to annex the group, the French Ambassador declared that his Government had no intention to interfere with the independence of the islands, and asked for an assurance that Her Majesty's Government would also respect it. Your Lordship, being then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, informed the French Ambassador, with the concurrence of the Colonial Office, that Her Majesty's Government had no intention of "changing the condition of independence which the New Hebrides now enjoyed." Upon a remonstrance being made by Sir George Grey, then Premier of New Zealand, the Secretary of State replied that the New Hebrides were no longer within the limits of New Zealand, and that the Imperial Government had no intention of proceeding in the direction of a political Protectorate. In the Order in Council of 1877, the New Hebrides had (evidently by design) been omitted from the islands specified by name; nevertheless, the High Commissioner understood that his authority extended over them, for he appointed Captain Cyprian Bridge, R.N., to be a Deputy-Commissioner there, and it was in that character that Captain Bridge went down to the islands. Now we venture to ask whether it is quite certain that after Her Majesty had once been graciously pleased to include the New Hebrides in the boundaries of New Zealand, the mere fact of new boundaries being afterwards fixed for that Colony was sufficient to make the New Hebrides cease to be a possession of the Crown? At any rate, if they have ceased to be so, and there is an understanding between the Governments of England and France to respect the independence of the group, the least that can be asked is that English and French subjects shall be on the same footing there. But it transpired, in a debate in the Chamber of Deputies, on the 8th May, that a Company had been formed at New Caledonia, by a planter who had acquired 'des terrains importants' at Sandwich Island: and the Temps, only a few days ago, announced that a Company composed of colonists from New Caledonia had succeeded in "creating very important interests in the islands, had bought several of them, and had obtained large concessions in others"; whereupon that journal suggested that the "best method of procedure would be to grant to the Company rights similar to those recently accorded by the English Government to the North Borneo Company." We venture to ask whether the agreement, whatever it is, which exists between the two Governments, would allow of any grant of that kind being made by France?

Nor can the colonists feel secure against some sudden act on the part of France in annexing other islands whose independence may stand on, at any rate, no worse a footing than that of the New Hebrides. It is only a few years since Commodore Hoskins reported to the Admiralty that a French ship of war had been sent to the Chesterfield and Bampton Reefs by the Governor of New Caledonia, to proclaim those islands to be French territory, which "was done with the usual formalities." But the Governor of New South Wales had already granted a lease of the islets for working guano deposits; and it had to be arranged that the deposits should be worked jointly by French and English Companies until the question of title was decided, as to which Sir Hercules Robinson had sent a telegram to the Colonial Office immediately on receiving notice of the annexation from the Governor of New Caledonia. Still less can the colonists feel any security against other acts of which they have already complained. Early in 1880 a schooner arrived at Auckland from New Caledonia, chartered by the French authorities, bringing eleven political offenders, and nine convicts for criminal offences. Sir John Hall, then Premier of New Zealand, immediately telegraphed to all the Governments of Australia, asking them to join in urging Her Majesty's Government to remonstrate with the Government of the French Republic against a repetition of that act. The Government of New South Wales stated that "batches of pardoned convicts from New Caledonia had on several occasions arrived there." The Agent-General brought the case before the Colonial Office, and Lord Kimberley requested the Foreign Office to move the French Government to discontinue any shipments of convicts from New Caledonia to New Zealand. But convicts have often escaped from New Caledonia in open boats, and landed on the Queensland coast: more than fifty who came to Queensland were afterwards extradited, besides many others known to be French convicts from Noumea.

Declaration,
June 19, 1847.

Again, by a "Reciprocal Engagement" entered into between England and France, in 1847, respecting the Raiatea group of islets (to the leeward of Tahiti), both nations bound themselves "never to take possession of the islands, either absolutely or under the title of a protectorate, or in any other form whatever." But the French flag has been hoisted for three years on those islands, without, so far as we know, any consent or recognition having been ever given by Her Majesty's Government.

Again, a scheme is being debated even now in France, which, if it is carried into effect, will be more disastrous for the Pacific than anything that has happened since the creation of the penal settlement at New Caledonia; for it is nothing less than a well-matured design for transporting for life (transportation à vie) to New Caledonia, the Loyalty Isles, and the Marquesas Islands, great numbers of French habitual criminals (récidivistes et malfaiteurs d'habitude). Four proposals to this effect were before the French Legislature, one of them a bill brought in by the Government. They were all referred together to a Committee, which reported that the Minister of the Interior had accepted certain modifications, and that there was no further difficulty. In the debates in the Chamber of Deputies, the reporter of the projet de loi (M. Gerville-Réache) stated that at least 60,000 could be sent to New Caledonia, and 23,000 to the Loyalty Isles. It was calculated that in the first year after the law came into force 5,000 convicts would be transported for life under it, and an official estimate was presented of the probable cost of sending these 5,000 to the Loyalty Isles and the Marquesas. It was said by the opponents of the measure that the number of convicts transported would be 100,000; this was denied; whereupon it was asked whether, since in the very first year 5,000 were to be sent, it could be expected that the number would not increase every year after. The class to be sent was officially described by M. Gerville-Réache as dangerous, steeped in vice, debauchery, and crime (hommes dangereux, perdus de vices, usés par la débauche, souillés de tous les crimes). These criminals were to be transported for life (la rélegation consistera dans l'internement perpétuel des condamnés); but were not to serve any term of punishment, Art. 1. and were to be free on arrival (en résumé, le transporté à son arrivée dans la colonie sera libre). The object was Journal Officiel, to rid France of them (en débarrasser la patrie). The Government was to support them at first, till they could get work; if they would not work, they must live how they could (ils vivront comme ils pourront). The projet de loi appointed New Caledonia and its dependencies, and the Marquesas Group, as "colonies" to which the récidivistes were to be sent; but it was openly proposed in the debate to include the New Hebrides, the Loyalty Isles, and the Isle of Pines. Journal Officiel, Séance du 1 Mai. Comte de Lanjuinais said it had been talked of to send the convicts to the New Hebrides (on avait parlé d'envoyer les transportés aux Nouvelles Hébrides). M. Richard Waddington, speaking officially as a member of the Committee, said that the title to the New Hebrides was not settled (il s'agit d'une question de propriété non encore déterminée), but that he thought the French title was good, and that the French flag might very soon be hoisted on the islands (je crois que notre titre de possession est sérieux, et que dans un avenir très rapproché le pavillon de la France pourra y flotter); adding, however, that in saying so he was speaking for himself and not for the Government (en engageant ma responsabilité seule et non celle du gouvernement). Another speaker went further, and said that, in response to the supposed action of England in New Guinea, the New Hebrides would be seized by France (pour répondre à l'Angleterre, qui si audacieusement vient de mettre la main sur la Nouvelle-Guinée, nous saurons à notre tour nous emparer des Nouvelles Hébrides). The Chamber of Deputies, after adopting most of the Government Bill, sent it back for revision to the Committee, who returned it with very little alteration. They estimated that in the first four years the number of convicts to be sent would be 20,000. The colonies to which the convicts might be sent remained the same, namely, New Caledonia and its dependencies, the Marquesas, an island called Phu-Quoc, and Guiana. The Bill has passed the Chamber, but is not yet before the Senate.

Your Lordship will not be surprised at our Governments urging that this scheme for making the Pacific Islands the receptacle for the dangerous classes of France, is one deserving the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government. It is impossible for Australasia to look without the gravest apprehension at the prospect of any proposal of the kind receiving the tacit acquiescence of England. What hope is there for the Pacific Islands, if a great nation like France pours into them vast numbers of her dangerous classes, not as convicts under penal servitude, but free the moment they land, so long as they do not return to France? or how can Australia and New Zealand be expected to hear with patience of such a law being passed? There have been rumours of some proposal by which the penal establishment at New Caledonia should be altogether given up by France, and the convicts transferred to the New Hebrides; the inducement being that New Caledonia would then be opened to settlement by free colonists. We do not deny that there would be an advantage in freeing New Caledonia from the curse of transportation; but the Bill before the French Chambers expressly retains New Caledonia as one of the places to which the récidivistes are to be sent; therefore, as to the New Hebrides, all the Colonies trust that full effect will be given to Lord Granville's assurance in the House of Lords a few days ago, that "both Her Majesty's Government and the French Government acknowledge in full the obligation which the understanding about the New Hebrides imposes upon both," and that the group shall not be allowed to pass in any way under the dominion of France.

Lord Granville, July 10, 1883.

Nor is it only with regard to French policy that there is, in the opinion of the colonists, cause for some apprehension. It is often said that Prince Bismarck has no desire to extend the influence of Germany to the Pacific; but what happened in the case of the Navigators group shows that idea to be a mistaken one. In the early part of 1880 a scheme was proposed in Germany for a great trading Company to take over the property of Messrs. Godeffroy. In a communication to the Imperial Under Secretary of State, Prince Bismarck laid down the conditions on which the Company was to receive a guarantee from the State of an interest of 4½ per cent. on its capital, not to exceed 300,000 marks a year, and to be for twenty years. The Chancellor referred to "the interest which the State takes in the prosperity of German enterprise in the South Seas," and justified the financial assistance he proposed giving to the new Company, by reason of the Godeffroy firm having "got into difficulties which threatened the German South Sea trade with the loss of their factories and plantations on the Samoa Islands." A Bill to give effect to the Chancellor's proposal was introduced accordingly, but rejected by the German Parliament in April, 1880. Again, as recently as December last, the Royal Colonial Institute called the attention of the Colonial Office to an article in the Allgemeine Zeitung strongly advocating the annexation by Germany of Eastern New Guinea. The answer was that neither Lord Granville nor your Lordship saw any reason for supposing that the German Government contemplated any scheme of the kind; but we venture to ask that a more definite assurance should be obtained from that Government, which can hardly refuse to recognize the vital character of the matter to every Colony in Australasia.

Prince von Bismarck, Varzin, Jan. 1, 1880.

Sir J. Vogel, April 30, 1880.

Royal Colonial Institute, Dec. 9 1882.

Before leaving the subject of foreign intervention, we submit that it would be expedient to settle more clearly the extent to which the independence of the chiefs in the various islands is recognized, and their right to make treaties admitted. Where the treaty-right exists, is it quite certain that the Western Pacific Order in Council is in operation? For instance, the Navigators and the Friendly Islands are among those specified by name in the Order in Council: but we understand there is an English treaty with the "king" of Tonga; and in the case of the Navigators there is a treaty with Germany, which Prince Bismarck communicated to the Reichstag in 1879. And we believe a treaty of some kind was made between Samoa and the United States, giving to the States the exclusive right of using the fine harbour at Tutuila as a coaling and naval station, the U.S. frigate "Narragansett" thereupon saluting the chief's flag with fifteen guns; indeed, this treaty was afterwards the subject of a representation by Sir Edward Thornton to the Government of Washington. Again, several of the Powers have appointed Consuls to the Islands; Her Majesty has a Consul at Rarotonga, a Consul at Samoa, and a Vice-consul at Tonga, while Sir Arthur Gordon, the High Commissioner, is Consul-General for the Pacific Islands, the conduct of relations with native States and tribes being confided to him in that capacity, under the control of the Foreign Office. As there is nothing that can be called law administered by the native States and tribes, it is difficult to see how one day the same evils will not arise from conflicting consular jurisdictions as have been so powerfully described by Lord Dufferin in the case of Egypt.

Prince Bismarck, Jan. 1, 1880.

Foreign Office List, 1883.

Sir A. Gordon, July 16, 1881.

Lord Dufferin, Egypt, No. 6.

The new policy proposed.

The two things we set ourselves to show were, first, that the Western Pacific Order in Council could never be made adequate to do what is wanted, without assuming a jurisdiction hitherto forbidden by Act of Parliament; and secondly, that the fear of foreign intervention which has existed in Australasia was not without warrant. For this purpose we have relied not on assertions of our own but on official records, and with hardly an exception have only spoken of events that have happened in the last three years.

If we have established these two points, then the Imperial Government can hardly reject the consequence, that the time has come when complete jurisdiction ought to be assumed by England over the Western Pacific, as the only means of meeting the difficulties which beset alike the Imperial and the Colonial Governments, and of averting evils which threaten Her Majesty's loyal subjects in all that region.

We have rejoiced to see that such a policy has already received the almost unanimous support of the English Press. Some opposition to it is perhaps only natural. We are sensible of the repugnance that exists to the idea of adding to the already vast responsibilities of England a new and admittedly immense charge like that of the Western Pacific Islands. Yet it is difficult for any one to avoid the conclusion that these islands, unless they are meanwhile lost by foreign annexation, will inevitably belong to England in the end. The same impelling power, not of mere desires but of events, which induced the Imperial Government to do at last in Fiji what they had so often refused, is constantly at work, and incessantly being renewed and strengthened with regard to the Western Pacific. But it was not till Fiji had become the opprobrium of the Southern seas that Her Majesty's Government would interfere. Surely they will not now inflict upon Australasia the hard necessity of waiting till New Guinea also, and perhaps other islands, become Alsatias as dangerous as Fiji once was, scourges to the peaceable subjects of Her Majesty, and a disgrace to civilization. For it is vain to think that the trade and intercourse between Australia and New Zealand and these islands can be suppressed. Settlement both English and foreign is spreading in every direction, yet of safety for life and property there is none. The High Commissioner himself has shown that it is quite impossible to do what is wanted by any Order in Council capable of being issued under the Act of 1875: in other words, impossible to do it without assuming the very jurisdiction which it was the purpose of that Act to forbid. Nor would an International Convention do it, for a convention could only extend to the nationalities concerned, and could not embrace the natives. England could not claim, in a convention with Foreign Powers, any jurisdiction over the native tribes, without herself asserting over them the same right of dominion as would be asserted by the policy the Colonies are urging upon your Lordship: nor could any convention be made at all, without first acknowledging that Foreign Powers possessed an equal right with England to exercise a right of dominion over natives, an acknowledgment against which every subject of Her Majesty in Australia and New Zealand would unite in making the strongest remonstrance.

The case of New Guinea is very pressing, because whatever powers are given to the High Commissioner, they can, in the nature of things, be even less exercised there than in any of the other islands. New Guinea is in such close proximity to Queensland, that whatever is done there must affect Queensland more than anything that is done in the other islands could affect the rest of Australia or New Zealand. All the trade of Queensland with England and India by steam passes through Torres Straits: regular steam communication is now established there: it is really indispensable not only that the Straits should be free to navigation, but that there should be no risk of a foreign Power establishing a naval station there. Adventurous men are occupying portions of the New Guinea coast-line, and irregular settlement is sure to take place more and and more. What has so often happened will happen again. Failing the colonisation of the great island under proper authority, adventurers will flock there who will neither show regard for the native inhabitants, nor be under any restraint among themselves: the evils and dangers which existed in Fiji will repeat themselves, only on a larger scale, and Queensland, of all the Australias, will suffer from them the most. This has been stated over and over again, in speeches in both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, by the Governments and Legislatures of Australasia, by the Royal Colonial Institute, and by private persons of high rank and experience in affairs, till we are almost ashamed to repeat it ourselves: yet it must be repeated, for the danger is not far off and a pretence, but imminent and a reality. Surely the Imperial Government cannot continue to refuse so reiterated an appeal. But if, fearing the responsibility of assuming authority over a vast and inaccessible region of mountains and forests peopled by several millions of savages, the Imperial Government finally determine not to take full jurisdiction over all New Guinea east of 143°, we trust that the same objection will not apply against establishing law and order along the coast where settlement is now extending. Let it at least exist over the fringe of the southern coast-line for the present, as was done the other day on the West Coast of Africa. No Act of the Imperial Parliament is necessary for this purpose, because Her Majesty has the same right now to assume jurisdiction over the southern coast-line of the island as she had to assume it when the islands in Torres Straits were annexed; and if it were deemed more convenient, the same process as was adopted then might be adopted now, of giving power by Letters Patent to the Governor of Queensland to declare by proclamation that certain portions of the coast-line of New Guinea should be annexed, under such conditions as it might be thought fit to prescribe. Letters Patent 42 Vict.

We have referred to the irregular settlement that is even now taking place. We must with all respect remonstrate against the doctrine laid down by the High Commissioner on the New Guinea question in 1878, when he "formally and emphatically declared that the Imperial Government disclaimed all obligation to protect or interfere on behalf of persons voluntarily placing themselves in positions of danger in a savage country, and that those who entered on such enterprises must do so at their own risk and peril." It is certainly not by colonists who have founded communities on the other side of the world, whose trade already exceeds in volume the whole foreign trade of England at the accession of Queen Victoria, that this doctrine will ever be acquiesced in. It was by "voluntarily placing themselves in danger" that English adventurers built up our Indian and Colonial Empire, and created a commerce which now is numbered by hundreds of millions every year: nor is the colonizing spirit which has done that work capable of being extinguished by the knowledge that the enterprise of founding new settlements involves risk and peril. But at least it may be said that if the Imperial Government was not to interfere on behalf of English settlers, it should not interfere against them. It surely can never be contended that an elaborate scheme of government was to be invented whose sole object should be to punish a subject of the Queen for any wrong he might commit, while it denied him redress for any wrong that he might suffer.

Sir A. Gordon,
Speech at
Melbourne, 1878.

Imperial interest also concerned.

So far we may perhaps be said to have urged only points that specially affect Colonial interests, or at any rate do not closely touch Imperial ones. This may be true so long as Europe is at peace; but the Imperial interest would spring up the moment any war broke out which involved England in hostilities with a European Power. The Imperial Government have called upon the Colonies to do their part in the defence of their own harbours, and our Governments have not only acknowledged they had a duty in that respect, but are doing their best to fulfil it. They feel that they have a right to ask in return that the task shall not be more difficult for them than the Imperial Government can help, and that they shall not be exposed to the creation of fortified naval stations and places d'armes in the Pacific, which should shelter an enemy's fleet and threaten their commerce, their coal measures, and even their safety. The nation will never permit that her naval supremacy in the Pacific shall be endangered; and it can hardly be contested that if France and other European Powers created new naval stations in the islands, the existing conditions in all that ocean would be changed, and everything relating to Her Majesty's Australian squadron assume a new aspect and a new importance.

Concert between the Imperial and Colonial Governments.

But while we have thus represented what the Australian Colonies believe ought to be done by the Imperial Government, they are also ready to acknowledge what they ought to do themselves. Your Lordship stated in the House of Lords, that if anything was to be done, it must be done either by the Imperial Government itself, or by the Australian Colonies acting together in concert, or by the Imperial and Colonial Governments combined; and we assure your Lordship that our Governments will hail with the greatest satisfaction such an invitation to them to co-operate with the Imperial authority. There are two immediate ways in which the Colonies can give their co-operation: by contributing to the cost of the policy they are asking your Lordship to pursue, and by placing themselves in a position to act in union with each other and in concert with you.

As regards the first, whatever differences there were when Lord Carnarvon made his proposal of 1876, there are none now. The Victorian Parliament has already passed an Address, assuring Her Majesty that Victoria will share in the cost of the policy which is being urged upon your Lordship; the Queensland Government has assured your Lordship of its readiness to do the same; and the other Colonies will also do their part. But it does not need for us to remind your Lordship that no Ministries can engage for the payment of indefinite sums, and that the assent of our Legislatures to grants of money must be expressed in the usual way. Permanent appropriation will certainly be necessary; and for this not only time is required, but consultation among the Governments, arrangement of the respective contributions of the Colonies, and the passing of the requisite votes; in the meanwhile, the first point for us to know is the amount which the Imperial Government would require to be provided for whatever action is contemplated by your Lordship.

As regards the other question of concerted action between the Imperial and Colonial Governments, your Lordship expressed your opinion to us at our interview with you in the clearest terms, and repeated it in the House of Lords. "If," you said, "the Australian people desire an extension beyond their present limits, the most practical step that they could take, the one that would most facilitate any operation of the kind, and diminish in the greatest degree the responsibility of the mother country, would be the confederation of the Colonies into one united whole, which would be powerful enough to undertake and carry through tasks for which no one Colony is at present sufficient." The large question of Federation which your Lordship has here raised is one on which the Colonies have not made up their minds, and is one of too grave moment to be decided even under the sway of the strong feelings which now exist among them respecting the policy that ought to be pursued in the Western Pacific. But there is nothing to prevent concerted action at once with the Imperial Government for that particular policy; and we acknowledge that your Lordship may justly require not only such concerted action, but joint engagements on the part of the Colonial Governments for the permanence and stability of the policy itself. This too requires time, consultation among our Governments, and probably legislation also—at any rate concurrent resolutions in the respective Colonial Assemblies. On the other hand, the Colonies will not imagine that your Lordship has invited them to a co-operation which is to be barren of results: and our Governments will feel assured that if they on their part pass the requisite appropriations, and combine for that concert with the Imperial Government which is necessary for any policy to succeed, they may rely upon the policy itself being adopted, and effect being given at last to the wishes which they have cherished for more than thirty years. In once more urging these wishes on Her Majesty's Government, they have not come as suppliants for some light favour, but as Englishmen to whom their country has given a great destiny which must be kept from harm; desiring no new territories for themselves, but asking that the Queen's subjects may enjoy the blessings of peace and order where now the law has no terrors for the evil-doer; not seeking by a clearer policy to set new burdens on the English taxpayer, but willing themselves to bear its cost; and welcoming with gladness an invitation to be associated with the Imperial Government in a work which must assuredly be done one day, and can as certainly be best done now.

APPENDIX D.

[Enclosure to No. 23.]

The Premier of Tasmania to The Premier of Queensland.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Hobart, 30 July, 1883.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, addressed to the Colonial Secretary, with reference to the proposed annexation of New Guinea, and enclosing a copy of a memorandum by you on the subject, dated the 10th July, approved by the Administrator in Council on the 17th July.

I have perused with much interest your memorandum, which deals with a subject which the Premier of Victoria has repeatedly brought under my notice during the past two months—although Mr. Service's action appears to have been directed with a view to secure the annexation, not of New Guinea only, but of the New Hebrides and other islands in the Pacific.

This Government is prepared to act in cordial unison with the other Australasian Colonies in making all urgent representations to Great Britain to induce the Imperial authorities to prevent the occupation of either South-western New Guinea or any of the at present unannexed Pacific Islands by any foreign Power. The occupation of any of these places by a foreign Government as a penal settlement would be in the highest degree objectionable; and their occupation, even for peaceful colonisation, by any Continental Power, would in all probability cause trouble to Queensland and New South Wales in the future. Now, the interests of the Australasian Colonies are so far linked together that even a probability of future trouble or danger to one Colony is a sufficient reason for united action on the part of all. But the real difficulty of the case, to my mind, lies in this—that the question of what measures are expedient, or even possible to be taken, is one the determination of which must be left to Her Majesty's Ministers in England, and in coming to their decision they must necessarily be affected by larger considerations than those which present themselves to our minds, and their action may be limited by obligations of the nature of which we are uninformed, and of the extent of which we are ignorant. The question, therefore, whether the end we seek—viz., the prevention of annexation by any other Power—is only to be attained by an act of annexation on the part of England, or whether it may not be attained by diplomatic representations, is one that only English Ministers can settle, and it should be left in their hands. It is perfectly obvious that the Australasian Colonies, standing alone, are in no position to enter upon a policy of aggression, and that, apart from their position as a portion of the great English Empire, they could offer no effectual resistance to the occupation by France, Germany, or America, of any one of the numerous islands which dot the Pacific, although the occupation of such island by a foreign Government might justly be deemed fraught with menace to the future peacefulness of these southern seas. But if we are dependent upon England for any effective check to what we regard as foreign encroachment, is it wise, or even becoming, to assume a semi-hostile position to the Imperial authorities because, on our first approach to the Queen's Advisers, we do not at once get all we ask? I cannot but believe, in view of the strong language that has been used as to this question of annexation, and of the impatience of control which the proposed action indicates, that the assembly of a Federal Council or Convention at the present time, for the purpose of expressing more forcibly and more collectively our dissatisfaction with the decision of Her Majesty's Ministers, and our opinion of the unwisdom of their action, would be the beginning of difficulties the end of which I do not profess to be able to foresee.

The mere question of the expense of governing any new dependency is, I venture to think, of secondary consideration. Shared among the Colonies it would not be burdensome, and probably Tasmania's share would be comparatively trifling. My objection to the course suggested is rather that it appears to me that we are going too fast and too far; that we are subordinating Imperial to Colonial interests, and assuming an incapacity or an unwillingness on the part of Great Britain to defend us from the evils which we dread, for which there does not seem to be any sufficient warrant.

For these reasons this Government is not prepared to do more than to join in urging Her Majesty to take such effectual steps as the wisdom of Her Advisers may suggest to prevent the occupation of New Guinea or the Pacific Islands by any foreign Power.

I have, &c.,
W. R. GIBLIN.

APPENDIX E.

[Enclosure to No. 45.]

Colonial Office to The Agents-General for New South Wales, New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria.

Gentlemen,

Downing-street, 31 August, 1883.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st July, placing before His Lordship the representations with regard to New Guinea and the islands in the Western Pacific Ocean which you had promised during your recent interview. Lord Derby recognizes the care and ability with which you have recapitulated the history of past transactions in that part of the world, and, as His Lordship does not perceive that this department need take exception to any of the statements in the earlier part of your letter he will not at present examine them in detail. I am, however, to inform you that, as it contains many references to the acts and opinions of the High Commissioner and of Her Majesty's naval officers, Lord Derby has transmitted copies to Sir Arthur Gordon and to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, for their consideration.

2. Turning to your inquiry as to the extent to which the claims of Foreign Powers in the Western Pacific have been recognized by Her Majesty's Government, His Lordship is disposed to doubt whether there is really so much uncertainty or absence of information on this subject in the Australasian Colonies as you seem to apprehend.

3. Referring, however, first to the islands of the Western Pacific which are most distant from Australia, the Navigators' Islands, no Power has claimed or indicated any desire to obtain a paramount influence or protectorate over that group. The Consular Officers of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States have, jointly or separately, from time to time exercised influence over public and native affairs at Samoa; and this country, as well as Germany, has entered into treaties with the King and Government of Samoa. The group therefore forms an independent State, recognized as such by European diplomacy, and under these circumstances the question might possibly arise whether its annexation by any Power would not be a violation of international law.

4. The Government of the Tongan or Friendly Islands is also recognized as independent, and this country and Germany have recently concluded treaties with the King of that group. The same argument therefore applies in this as in the former case.

5. Proceeding westward past Fiji, which, with the neighbouring island of Rotumah, is British, we come to the New Hebrides; and your letter shows that you are aware of the understanding arrived at in 1878 between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of France, in pursuance of which the independence of those islands has been up to the present time recognized and respected by both Governments. The Loyalty Islands, being close to New Caledonia, are to be looked upon as dependencies of the French Government in that island.

6. The foregoing brief statement may suffice to explain to you that the claims and interests of other countries constitute a very serious impediment to that "complete jurisdiction" which you represent that England ought now to assume over the Western Pacific, and that the best known and most frequented groups of islands have already such relations with Foreign Powers, in common with England, as cannot be summarily ignored. You do not specifically refer to the important islands or group of islands known as New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon Islands, and the Santa Cruz Islands. They are at a considerable distance from Australia, and are for the most part of great size, and inhabited by warlike and cannibal tribes. Her Majesty's Government have not before them any evidence that the Governments of the Australasian Colonies have sufficiently considered the extent of the responsibilities which the annexation or protectorate of these islands would involve, and they are far from being satisfied that the assumption of those responsibilities is necessary or justifiable.

7. With reference to that part of your letter which treats of New Guinea, Lord Derby desires me to observe that he has at present nothing to add to the despatch which he addressed on the 11th July to the Acting Governor of Queensland. His Lordship concludes that, after receiving that despatch, the Governments of any Colonies desiring to bear the cost of any measures which, as indicated in the two last paragraphs of that despatch, Her Majesty's Government may be prepared to take, take, will confer together and make those united recommendations which have been invited, furnishing also an effective guarantee for such expenditure as may be incurred. They will, no doubt, at the same time consider whether they wish to make jointly any similar definite proposal with regard to other islands not already connected by treaty or otherwise with Foreign Powers.

8. I am to add that Lord Derby has read with attention your representations as to the inconvenience and injury which, unless great precautions are taken, might result from the continuance and development of the French penal settlements in New Caledonia and the adjacent islands, and that His Lordship is in communication with the Foreign Office on the subject.

I am, &c.,

JOHN BRAMSTON.

APPENDIX F.

[Enclosures to Nos. 49 and 50.]

MEMORIAL to the Honorable the President and the Members of the Federal Convention appointed to meet at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, in October next.

The Memorial of the inhabitants of the Colony of Fiji,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That your Memorialists are residents of the Crown Colony of Fiji, and regard the question of the ultimate federation of the Australasian Colonies as one of vital importance to the interests of this Colony.

That the system of Government adopted in a Crown Colony such as we have here is altogether opposed to the spirit of the age; that, to a great extent, it impedes the investment and employment of capital in developing the industrial resources of the country; that it checks the producing interests by unnecessary restrictions, and exercises such an unwholesome influence on every branch of industry that it has retarded rather than advanced the natural progress of the Colony.

That the Colony is self-supporting is evidenced by the fact that our revenue now amounts to £98,000 sterling, and the expenditure to £87,000 sterling; yet in its appropriation the people are denied any voice, and this, notwithstanding that the Legislative Council contains certain non-official members, nominated and appointed by the Governor, yet—such is the dominating influence of the executive and the official members of the Council—they are powerless for good, and can neither control the expenditure in any way nor are they permitted to interfere with any appointment to office within the Colony.

The geographical position of this Colony, its large and increasing business connections with New South Wales, Victoria, and New Zealand, has induced the inhabitants to come forward and beg that they may be allowed to place before the Conference, now shortly to sit, its political position and the many benefits which would accrue to the Colony and its people by the introduction of a more liberal form of Government, so that the advantages which the Australasian Colonies must derive from federation may be extended to Fiji, whether as an appanage of one or other of the Colonial Dependencies or otherwise, as the Conference may deem most advisable for the best interests and prosperity of this Colony and its people.

And your Memorialists solicit that the combined and powerful influence of the Convention will be exercised with the Imperial Authorities in procuring their consent to the incorporation of this Colony with federated Australasia.

With the object of securing the foregoing, or, if that be denied us, of obtaining some amelioration of the disabilities under which we labour through our present form of Government, your Memorialists have prepared and forwarded for presentation to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen a petition, a copy of which is hereto annexed, and it is prayed that the members of the Convention will assist the Petitioners in obtaining the objects of their petition.

Dated in Levuka, Fiji, this 19th September, 1883.

To Her Most Gracious Majesty Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, Empress of India, &c., &c., &c.

This the humble Petition of the undersigned your Majesty's British subjects, resident in the Colony of Fiji,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

1. That your Petitioners are colonists of Fiji, and are largely interested, commercially and otherwise, in the present and future prosperity of the Colony.

2. That Fiji has been a British Colony since the 10th day of October, 1874.

3. That the present population of the Colony consists, it is estimated, of 110,000 native-born Fijians and of 2,500 European and other foreign residents, exclusive of labourers introduced from other of the Pacific Islands and from India.

4. That the Government of the Colony is now administered by the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council.

5. That the Executive Council, as ordinarily constituted, consists of the Governor, the Colonial Secretary, the Attorney-General, the Receiver-General, and the Agent-General of Immigration.

6. That the Legislative Council consists of the Governor and his Executive Council, the Honorable the Chief Justice and other officials not members of the Executive Council, with certain gentlemen not connected with the Government but who are nominees of the Crown.

7. That all laws and ordinances passed for the Government of the Colony are enacted by the Governor with the advice of the Legislative Council.

8. That the votes of the official members of the Legislative Council are recorded as His Excellency may direct, notwithstanding that their personal opinion may be at variance with his own.

9. That no member of the Legislative Council, other than the Governor, can propose any expenditure of money, nor reduce nor add to any amount proposed by him.

10. That since the constitution of the Government as now existing, no single ordinance has been passed when introduced by any non-official member.

11. That the revenue of the Colony has now reached a total of at least £90,000 per annum; that the European inhabitants are the principal contributors, directly or indirectly thereof, and that such revenue exceeds the present expenditure of the Colony.

12. That all appointments to offices and positions of emolument within the Colony are made by the Crown alone; that a reference to the appointments made for some years past will show that only an exceedingly small proportion of the offices created have been filled by residents in the Colony, and that in the great majority of instances preference has been given to cadets from England or Scotland or persons from India.

13. That your Petitioners are denied all right of local self-government, and show that in the year 1877 provision was made for the appointment of a Town Board in Levuka, so constituted that such a proportion of members should be elected by the ratepayers as to give them a majority in the Town Council. That this system worked successfully when tried in Levuka, but that for the management of the town of Suva an officer of the Government alone manages the municipal business of the town and imposes and expends all rates.

14. That a reference to the statistics of the Colony and to other sources of information will show that the European colonists are as orderly, law-abiding, and well-conducted as any other subjects within your Majesty's dominions.

15. That your Majesty's subjects in this Colony are discontented and grieved that all right of being represented or heard in the Councils of this Colony is denied to them, and that they have no voice in the administration of the Government of the Colony, the enactment of its laws, or the public expenditure.

16. That with few exceptions the Ordinances of the Colony are introduced to the Legislative Council and passed without prior publicity having been given to them, so as to allow discussion, and objection, or suggestion thereto—to be made through the medium of the public Press, or in other ways through the non-official members of the Council.

17. That the fact of the inhabitants of the Colony consisting of so large a proportion of native Fijians is no reason why the right ordinarily granted to British subjects of being represented in Colonial Councils of Government should be entirely denied to your Majesty's subjects in this Colony.

18. That, as there will shortly be assembled at Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, a Convention of Representatives of the Australasian Colonies to consider the question of a General Federation of the Colonies, and the annexation of parts of New Guinea and also certain other islands or groups of islands in the Western Pacific, the time has therefore seemed to your Majesty's Petitioners opportune for praying from your Majesty's Government consideration of their present political position. In furtherance of which object your Petitioners have memorialized the said Convention now about to meet, and have requested them to assist your Petitioners in obtaining the objects herein set forth.

Your Petitioners therefore now most humbly pray :—

1. That your Majesty will see fit, in the event of the Australasian Colonies becoming federated, to constitute the Colony of Fiji an integral portion of Federated Australasia.
2. That in the event of such Federation not being now immediately accomplished, your Majesty will see fit to allow the Colony of Fiji to become incorporated with one of the Australasian Colonies as now existing, with the consent of such Colony.
3. Or, that your Majesty will see fit to grant to the British-born subjects resident within this Colony complete relief from the humiliating condition in which they are at present politically placed.
4. That such relief be granted with due regard to the preservation of all existing rights and privileges of the native races inhabiting this Colony.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Dated in Levuka, Fiji, this 19th September, 1883.

Telegram from The Agent-General to The Colonial Secretary.

London, 12 November, 1883.

NEW GUINEA.—Nothing reliable since Lord Derby's reply of 22nd October; substance telegraphed to Victoria, for information of Colonial Governments; other rumours unreliable; appreciate your views, which I communicated to Colonial Office.

The Agent-General to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

5, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street S.W., 16 November, 1883.

Referring to my telegram of the 12th instant, on the subject of New Guinea, in which I informed you that since the issue of Lord Derby's letter on the 22nd October, addressed to the Agent-General of Victoria, nothing reliable had transpired in connection with this question, I have the honor to state that vague rumours as to the action intended to be taken by the Imperial Government in regard to New Guinea being in circulation at the time, I thought it wise to telegraph to you, lest some of the groundless opinions entertained here might reach you. You may rest assured that I will not fail to keep you promptly and fully informed of such matters as it is desirable you should know in relation to this important subject.

Since I last wrote to you I have been favoured by Mr. Murray Smith, the Agent-General for Victoria, with a copy of Lord Derby's reply of the 22nd October last to a communication addressed to him by Mr. Murray Smith, at the request of the Victorian Government. I now forward a copy of this letter for your information, the purport of which was telegraphed to the Government of Victoria, and has already, I have no doubt, been conveyed to you.

I have, &c.,
SAUL SAMUEL.

[Enclosure.]

J. Bramston, Esq., to The Agent-General for Victoria.

Sir,

Downing-street, 22 October, 1883.

I am directed by the Earl of Derby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, in which, at the request of the Government of Victoria, His Lordship is invited to state more fully the views of Her Majesty's Government on certain questions connected with the subject of the proposed annexation of various islands in the Western Pacific Ocean.

You ask (1) on what general conditions Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to assent to the annexation of the islands in question. (2.) If the Australian Colonies were to become federated would the annexation of the islands be allowed, or would it be allowed on the simple agreement of the Colonies concerned to provide for the expense of the proceedings. (3.) Can an estimate be given of the cost of the measures indicated at the conclusion of Lord Derby's despatch to the Officer Administering the Government of Queensland, of the 11th July last.

In reply to the first of these questions, I am to observe that it was explained, in the letter addressed on the 31st of August last to you and other Agents-General, that there are obstacles in the annexation by Great Britain of some of the Western Pacific Islands, and that with regard to others Her Majesty's Government are not of opinion that their annexation, with all its attendant expenses and responsibilities, is necessary at the present time. Her Majesty's Government will, of course, be prepared to give their best consideration to the views of the Australian Governments, after those Governments have more fully considered the whole subject at the approaching Conference; but it is obvious that Her Majesty's Government are not now in a position to define any conditions on which they will be prepared to assent to annexation.

(2.) If the Colonies should decide either upon confederation, or upon united action, in regard to this particular question, there would undoubtedly be much less difficulty than at present in arranging for the transfer to them of the obligations of this country in respect of neighbouring native communities; but it is not possible to say, without full consideration of the manner in which the confederated Colonies would propose to discharge their obligations, whether annexation could be agreed to.

If the Colonies at the approaching Conference decide that the annexation of some of the islands is desirable, Her Majesty's Government would be willing to discuss all details fully with the Agents-General or other Colonial representatives, and to consider whether and how far annexation would be justifiable and practicable.

(3.) With respect to the last point raised in your letter, it does not appear to Lord Derby to be possible to give an approximated estimate of the probable cost of strengthening the staff of the High Commissioner on the coast of New Guinea, as proposed in the last paragraph of His Lordship's despatch to the Governor of Queensland, of the 11th of July.

If the authority and protection of the High Commissioner is to be effectively extended over other important islands or groups of islands, as well as over the coasts of New Guinea, a considerable number of officers, with adequate provision for their safety and for means, enabling them to communicate with some Australian Colony, would have to be maintained.

The cost of such arrangements could hardly fail to amount to some thousands of pounds annually, even if the area to be supervised were limited; but it is feared that any attempt to state it more precisely might tend to mislead.

I am, &c.,

JOHN BRAMSTON.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

NEW GUINEA AND NEW HEBRIDES.

(FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING PROPOSED ANNEXATION OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 24 September, 1884.

No. 1.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor.

My Lord,

Downing-street, 9 May, 1884.

Her Majesty's Government have not lost sight of the Resolutions adopted by the Convention of Representatives of the Australasian Colonies at Sydney in December last, and have considered the provisions of the Draft Bill for constituting a Federal Council, which the Representatives pledged themselves to submit to the Legislatures of their respective Colonies. I had been led to believe that Addresses in favour of this Bill would be adopted by the Colonial Legislatures in time to enable Her Majesty's Government to introduce the measure during the present Session of Parliament with a good prospect of its being passed; but the necessary action does not appear to have been yet taken in any Colony. As therefore the probability of legislation during this year is diminishing it appears desirable to consider the position of Her Majesty's Government and of the Colonial Governments in regard to the proposals of the Convention.

2. I had explained in my despatch of 11th July, 1883, to the Administrator of the Government of Queensland, which was before the Convention, that, in order to place Her Majesty's Government in a position to consider proposals for the protection or government of New Guinea or other places in the Western Pacific Ocean, it was desirable for the Australasian Colonies to combine together effectively, and provide the cost of carrying out any policy which it might be decided to adopt, and that, in the meantime, Her Majesty's Government must continue to decline proposals for large annexations of territory adjacent to Australia, adding that if a reasonable annual sum were provided by the Colonies Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to strengthen the Naval Force on the Australian Station, and make the High Commissionership more effective.

3. The Convention does not appear to have taken this part of my despatch into consideration; but it agreed that the Governments represented at it should recommend their respective Legislatures to make permanent provision for the cost of the policy advocated, viz. :-

- (1.) To check, in whatever manner might be deemed wisest and most effectual, the further acquisition of dominion in the Pacific south of the Equator, by any Foreign Power.
- (2.) To secure the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea and the small islands adjacent thereto, as is not claimed by the Government of the Netherlands; and
- (3.) To acquire, if possible, the control of the New Hebrides in the interests of Australasia.

The Legislature of Queensland has recorded its entire concurrence in these resolutions, but no Colony has taken measures to provide the requisite funds, as suggested by the Convention.

4. As, therefore, in the absence of any joint action by the Colonies, Her Majesty's Government are not in a position to deal with these questions of policy to which I have referred, and some further delay seems unavoidable, it may be desirable that your Government should consider, with the Governments of the other Australasian Colonies, whether there may not be advantage in making provision for the intervening period in the manner suggested by me in paragraph 7 of my despatch of 11th July last to Sir A. H. Palmer. As I then stated, Her Majesty's Government are confident that no Foreign Power contemplates interference with New Guinea; but in the absence of any controlling authority it is always possible that the subjects of a Foreign Power might require the protection or intervention of their Government; and British subjects also, by coming into collision with the natives, or by setting up claims to land, might cause complication which would give much trouble hereafter.

5. Her Majesty's Government are disposed to think that there should be a High Commissioner, or at least a Deputy Commissioner, with large powers of independent action, stationed on or near the Eastern Coasts of New Guinea, and that he should be furnished with a steamship independent of Her Majesty's Naval Squadron, and with a staff sufficient to enable him to exercise protection in the name of the Queen on those shores. The cost of this arrangement cannot be accurately estimated, as I have previously stated; but if one or more Colonies will secure to Her Majesty's Government the payment of a sum of (say) £15,000 during the year ending 1st June, 1885, they will be prepared to take immediate steps for establishing the High Commissioner's jurisdiction, and will render to the contributing Governments an account of the expenditure incurred. It would be possible after some months to determine whether this arrangement should be further continued, and to consider with the Colonial Governments (or with the Federal Council, if established) what arrangements should be made for the future supervision of the labour trade, if it should be decided that it can continue to be allowed. Her Majesty's Government have come to no conclusion as to the recommendations of the Western Pacific Committee, in regard to which the Colonies should first be consulted; but I think it doubtful whether it will be found practicable to place the regulation of the labour traffic under Imperial control.

6. I may also state, in conclusion, that the annual expenditure of this country in the maintenance of the Squadron on the Australian Station, including schooners and surveying vessels, is estimated as amounting at present to about £157,000. I need hardly add that it is desirable that I should learn, as soon as possible, the result of the careful consideration which I trust that this despatch will receive from your Government, in conjunction with the Governments of the other Australasian Colonies.

THIS Colony joins in paying proportion of fifteen thousand New Guinea expenses.

The Agent-General to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir, 5, Westminster Chambers, Westminster, S.W., 4 July, 1884.

Referring to your telegram, of the 30th ultimo, as follows:—"This Colony joins paying proportion of fifteen thousand, New Guinea expenses,"—I have the honor to inform you that immediately upon its receipt I communicated your message to Lord Derby; and, by appointment, Sir Francis Dillon Bell, Mr. R. Murray Smith, Mr. Hemmant, and myself, had on Wednesday an interview with his Lordship, I regret to say without any definite result.

We informed Lord Derby that five of the Australian Colonies were prepared to guarantee the payment of £15,000 (the amount named in his Lordship's despatch of the 9th of May to the Governors of the Australasian Colonies), on the understanding that a complete Protectorate would be established over New Guinea, and, if possible, the islands adjacent thereto.

Lord Derby, after discussing the matter at great length with the Agents-General, stated that he would at the earliest possible moment submit the whole question to the Cabinet, and communicate the decision of the Government to the Agents-General.

I will address you more fully on this subject by next mail.

The Agent-General to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir, 5, Westminster Chambers, Westminster, S.W., 17 July, 1884.

Referring to my last letter of the 4th instant, reporting an interview of the Agents-General with Lord Derby, relating to New Guinea, in which I promised further particulars, I have now the honor to forward, for your information, a copy of a minute, which the Agents-General who were present at the interview agree to as being substantially a correct statement of the conversation which took place between Lord Derby and themselves on the 2nd instant.

[Enclosure.]

MINUTE of an interview on the 2nd July, 1884, between the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Agents-General for New Zealand, New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland.

Present:—

Earl of Derby.
Sir Robert Herbert.
Sir Saul Samuel.

Sir F. Dillon Bell.
Mr. R. Murray Smith.
Mr. W. E. Hemmant.

Sir F. Dillon Bell commenced the discussion by stating that the Agents-General had now been instructed by the Governments of the Australasian Colonies to guarantee the payment of the contribution of £15,000 asked in Lord Derby's despatch of 9th May, but that there appeared some points which it was desirable to submit to Her Majesty's Government for consideration. The Government of New Zealand being engaged in a contested election had been unable to join at present in the undertaking given by the four Continental Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Queensland.

In the first place, the Colonies desired to ascertain whether the protectorate, promised in the despatches of 9th May last, and 11th July, 1883, would only be exercised over New Guinea, or whether it would be extended over other islands of the Western Pacific. Lord Derby here interposed with the observation that Her Majesty's Government had never undertaken to assume any formal protectorate even over New Guinea, upon which we referred to the following phrases from the despatches above-named, the correctness of which was corroborated by Sir Robert Herbert.

"5. Her Majesty's Government are disposed to think that there should be a High Commissioner, or at least a Deputy Commissioner, with large powers of independent action stationed in or near the eastern coasts of New Guinea, and that he should be furnished with a steamship independent of Her Majesty's Naval Squadron, and with a staff sufficient to enable him to exercise protection in the name of the Queen over those shores."

"7.

"7. Her Majesty's Government will be willing to take steps for strengthening the Naval Force on the Australasian Station, so as to enable Her Majesty's ships to be more constantly present than hitherto in that part of the Pacific. A protectorate thus gradually established over the coast tribes would be capable of meeting the principal requirements of the case for some time to come."

Lord Derby then remarked that New Guinea, owing to its proximity to the Australasian Continent, stood in a somewhat different position from any other of the islands which formed the subject of discussion, that Prince Bismarck's declarations were undoubtedly very serious, and that Her Majesty's Government felt in consequence the desirableness of taking some action now. He asked what other islands the Colonies proposed should be dealt with. We mentioned the New Britain, New Ireland, Solomon, and Santa Cruz groups. Lord Derby combated with some vigour the notion that the possession of these islands could affect Australia. We examined the map, and the position occupied by each group. We pointed out in answer to Lord Derby's objection the extent of trade now springing up with those coasts, the danger of their being occupied by Foreign Powers for convict stations, and the difficulties attending the control of the labour traffic, which drew its principal supplies from the groups in question. Lord Derby said that, so far as the control of the labour traffic and the prevention of convict establishments were concerned, he fully agreed with the Australasian Colonies, and was disposed to do everything in his power to help them. He could not share, however, their fears as to the occupation of these islands for ordinary purposes, by other nations, nor did he think we could reasonably assert, what amounted to a Monroe doctrine, over the Western Pacific. We then discussed the nature of the protection to be announced, urging once more the radical defects in the present Pacific Protection Acts and Orders in Council, which as Sir F. D. Bell had previously pointed out, gave the Lord High Commissioner the power of punishing British subjects for any wrong they might commit, but denied them any protection against injuries which they might suffer. Thus we endeavoured to obtain some declaration from Lord Derby on two points.

1. The geographical extent of the protectorate to be assumed.
2. The nature of the jurisdiction to be established.

On the first point Lord Derby retreated even from the position which he had taken in the despatch of 9th May. While admitting that the case of New Guinea was more urgent than that of the other islands, he declined to pledge himself to any positive step regarding even New Guinea, without consulting the Cabinet; and as to any other islands he held out no prospect to us that anything would be done towards securing them from foreign occupation. We pointed out that the recent declarations of Prince Bismarck evidently pointed to the Pacific, and we asked whether Lord Derby did not think it probable that if Her Majesty proclaimed a protectorate over New Guinea, the German Government would follow up that proclamation by annexing the Solomon Islands, where they already had trading and missionary ports? Lord Derby said he thought it very likely they would. We suggested that they might possibly also establish a convict station there, but Lord Derby said, as to that he was quite with us, and any such movement ought to be resisted. We then asked whether Her Majesty's Government would not at any rate endeavour to come to some understanding with the Powers on two points, namely, the control of the labour traffic, and the prevention of any further convict establishment in the Pacific. To this Lord Derby gave a ready assent, but so far as we could gather was disposed to establish a control over the labour traffic, not by obtaining from the other Governments an assent to extending the High Commissioner's authority over their subjects, but by the erection of some kind of mixed tribunal.

We then said it should be clearly understood that this would not satisfy the Australasian Colonies. What they desired was, the extension of British authority under some form of protectorate over New Guinea and the islands of the Western Pacific, which would preserve them from being appropriated by Foreign Powers, and secure them eventually for Australasia. Lord Derby said, that in that case what we wanted was the whole South Pacific; and he objected that we had no right to dictate to other nations that they should not form settlements there, adding that grave responsibilities and complications would follow from such a course as that proposed. He did not, however, explain to us what these responsibilities and complications might be. It was strongly urged by us that, while the Colonies put forward no Monroe doctrine to extend over the Pacific, and could not object to the right of appropriation being claimed by other powers over unoccupied groups of islands, they were desirous of securing these islands from such appropriation, while there was yet time to do so. We deprecated the repetition in any other islands, if understandings such as had been made between France and England in the case of the New Hebrides, as being likely to produce much more troublesome complications than could arise from the course we advocated. We pointed out that in any future arrangements of any kind relating to the Pacific the Colonies ought to be previously consulted; adding, that if they had been so consulted in the case of the New Hebrides, they would not have assented to the Convention now in existence. We then went on to refer to the case of Angra Pequena, as showing that what Prince Bismarck had required in that case really was an undertaking with Her Majesty's Government, and that if Her Majesty's Government had assumed the protectorate over Angra Pequena, and consequently had given the protection of England to the German Missionaries and Traders there, the Chancellor would probably have been satisfied. In like manner as regarded the Pacific Islands, where Germans were now settled, the Australasian Colonies were ready to defray the cost, and accept the responsibilities of such a protectorate as would secure the objects of Prince Bismarck.

Lord Derby, however, refused to commit himself to any positive declaration on either of the points with regard to which we asked a decision, and his view appeared to us to be that a simple strengthening of the High Commissioner's jurisdiction in New Guinea would answer all requirements. We thus parted from his Lordship with an impression that it was doubtful whether even the promises contained in the despatch of 9th May would not be interpreted in a sense very different from that in which they were understood by the Colonies when they agreed to make the contribution of £15,000.

No. 5.

Minute by Colonial Secretary.

Subject: Secretary of State for the Colonies' Despatch dated 9th May, 1884, No. 27.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 23 July, 1884.

THE passage through Parliament of one of the most important and difficult questions of Colonial legislation, namely, the readjustment of the land laws of the Colony, having absorbed nearly the whole time since the Intercolonial Convention concluded its sitting, has prevented the resolutions of that body from being considered, but it is the intention of the Government to submit them during the present session.

I have no hesitation in saying that, whatever may be the conclusion arrived at with regard to the Federal Council Bill, I am confident there will be an almost unanimous agreement with regard to the willingness of this Colony contributing its share of the £15,000 estimated by Lord Derby as the annual expense of maintaining a High Commissioner, to be stationed in New Guinea, and furnished with a suitable steamship for the purpose of exercising some protectorate power over that and adjacent islands; but at the same time I would take this opportunity of pointing out that while this Colony has always been desirous that the labour trade in the South Sea Islands should be governed by wise regulations, the object of having a High Commissioner stationed at New Guinea is not solely for the purpose of a better administration of such regulations, but for that which is deemed by the Australian Colonies generally of even greater importance, viz., the carrying out of such protectorate over New Guinea as will secure the Colonies from the great disadvantage and danger which it would be to these Colonies if the southern shores of that island were to fall under the acquisition or dominion of any Foreign Power.

[No. 5.]

I enclose you herewith a minute which I have made upon Lord Derby's despatch of 9th May on the subject of the contribution to the High Commissioner whom he proposes to appoint at New Guinea.

You will observe that I have taken the opportunity to point out that it is not so much for administering regulations connected with the South Sea Island traffic as for the obtaining by the Imperial Government of a footing in New Guinea, that the Colonies are in my opinion showing their readiness to share in the expense. I have deemed it necessary to allude to this, because, in the latter part of his despatch, Lord Derby seems inclined to make the regulation of the labour traffic the chief object.

I will be obliged by your telegraphing the main purport of my minute, viz.:—"That important legislation has prevented its being dealt with, but that I am very confident that that portion of the suggestions of the Convention will be cordially approved whatever may befall the other portions."

In continuation of my letter of the 17th instant, I have now the honor to forward for your information copy of a joint letter which has been addressed by the Agents-General to the Right Honorable the Earl of Derby, asking His Lordship to be good enough to inform us as soon as possible the decision of Her Majesty's Government in reference to the proposals we laid before His Lordship, on the 2nd instant, in regard to the Western Pacific.

The Agents-General to The Right Hon. the Earl of Derby, K.G.

My Lord,

8, Victoria Chambers, Westminster, S.W., 23 July, 1884.

At the interview which we had with your Lordship on the 2nd instant, you were good enough to say that you would submit to the Cabinet the proposals then brought under your consideration in reference to the Western Pacific, and inform us of the result. As the Parliaments of the Australasian Colonies are at present in session or about to meet, when authority must be asked for the confirmation of the contributions of the respective Colonies to the guarantee of fifteen thousand pounds (£15,000) given by their Governments in response to the proposals contained in your Lordship's despatch of the 9th of May, we hope we shall not be considered importunate if we request that the decision of Her Majesty's Government may be communicated to us as soon as possible.

Telegram from Premier of Victoria to Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Melbourne, 17 September, 1884.

INVITE your attention to the still unsettled and unsatisfactory condition of the Islands question. We have gained something as regards Guinea, but even that is imperfect, leaving out, as I understand, north-west portion. As regards other islands, the policy of delay adopted by Lord Derby simply increases the difficulty. Twelve months ago the islands might have been ours without difficulty; now at any moment another Power may appear upon the scene. All considerations induce me to submit at the present junction that we make united one more effort to prevail upon England to make a complete work by establishing protectorate over unappropriated islands, respecting of course international obligations. If you concur in this, the course I should suggest is that Colonies having an Agent-General should instruct by telegram their Agents to consult and make one more united effort with Lord Derby, or even the Premier. Colonies not having an Agent-General but concurring to authorize one of the other Colonies to speak for them in this matter. To leave matter where it is would be an impotent conclusion to our efforts, but more than that, we should be letting slip an opportunity that may never recur.

Telegram from Premier of Victoria to Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

Melbourne, 19 September, 1884.

I SEND for your information the following telegram just to hand from Premier, New Zealand, in reply to my circular telegram of which you had copy, namely:—Pacific Islands; quite concur; will instruct Agent-General as you suggest; telegraph me terms.

No. 3.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 20 September, 1884.

Three days ago I received your telegram respecting the protectorate over the unappropriated South Sea Islands. I regret to have to inform you that I do not concur with the view you take of the desirability of again urging upon Lord Derby that immediate steps be taken to extend England's protectorate over all these islands as well as over the whole of New Guinea, notwithstanding the announcement in your telegram of yesterday that New Zealand had signified concurrence.

As regards New Guinea, I do not think it was ever contemplated by the Convention to urge a protectorate over the north-west portions. All that we desired to secure was that the portion not hitherto claimed by the Netherlands—i.e., the southern and eastern portions—should be thus protected or in some way incorporated into the British Empire. The matter is, in my opinion, an urgent one, but I think we have done enough for the present in the way in which we have represented this urgency. If this matter be not within a reasonable period carried out by the Imperial Government, I am sure that this Colony will join with you and others in reiterating the views of the colonists, but at the present moment I think that our doing so would be open to an imputation of restlessness and impatience, as we know that grave steps of this kind, wherein questions of international character may arise, cannot be forced as those of minor importance.

But however this may be, I find myself unable to join with you in urging such a departure from the resolutions of the Convention as to agitate for a complete protection over all unappropriated islands. All that the Convention did, as it appears to me, was to state broadly its view that further acquisition of dominion by any foreign Power over these islands would be highly detrimental to Australia and injurious to the British Empire; but the Convention carefully guarded itself from dictating in any way to the Imperial Government the mode by which such should be accomplished.

Personally, my own belief is that such a course as you favour would be at the present juncture extremely injudicious, and that it probably would be better if the Imperial Government could see its way to unite with other European Governments in coming to an understanding that none of these islands outside New Guinea should be taken directly or indirectly by any one Power, but that the inhabitants of all nations should be permitted to the freest trade and communication with all, and that such trading should be under the joint protection of the nations.

I can conceive no time more unsuitable than the present, when the watchful, and it may be, in some degree, the jealous, eye of foreign nations is fixed on these islands, for any such distinctly assertive act as you suggest being taken by Great Britain; and I do not see that we would be acting a truly loyal part to the Empire if we were to urge her to assume a position of embarrassment which would be likely to provoke the hostility of foreign nations; nor do I think that such a course would hasten that which we really do want, and which alone the Convention urged, viz., a protectorate over the south-eastern portion of New Guinea, and a friendly arrangement with other Powers as to the non-interference with the South Sea Islands other than is involved in the regulation of the trade therewith by mutual arrangement.

In putting forth these views, I beg to assure you that I am not actuated by any wish to stand aloof from co-operation with your or any other Colony, but solely from a desire to look upon the question in the broad light of what is most likely to accomplish the object we have at heart, and to do that effectively, but with the least embarrassment to the interests of the whole Empire.

I remain, &c.,
ALEX. STUART.

No. 4.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 22 September, 1884.

Your letter of 20th reached me only this afternoon at 5'30, but I had seen the text of it in our newspapers this morning, and felt much regret at the view you take of the islands question, and of the course these Colonies should now take in respect thereto.

Let me say first that, by a clerical error in my circular telegram, the word "north-west" was used instead of "north-east," which I did not observe when signing it. My object in referring to the northern side at all was because, although there is a northern side to the eastward of the Netherlands line, Mr. Gladstone, in his recent remarks in the House of Commons, appeared to ignore that portion of the coast altogether, and confined his remarks to the southern and eastern coast alone. Whilst none of us desire to interfere with the Dutch claims, the Convention was unanimous in desiring "the incorporation with the British Empire of so much of New Guinea and the small islands adjacent thereto as is not claimed by the Government of the Netherlands," and I think we shall agree that to leave a part of the coast line on the northern side open to be appropriated by a third Power would be most undesirable. In this opinion I have no doubt you fully concur.

There are two points in your letter which I was sorry to read:—

- 1st, that the time has not come to further urge on the Imperial Government the necessity of prompt action with respect to New Guinea,
- and 2nd, that you describe the policy of agitating "for a complete protection over all the unappropriated islands" as "a departure from the resolution of the Convention."

With respect to the 1st point, of course the exact time to repeat our appeals to the Home Government must necessarily be a matter of opinion. You admit the matter, as far as New Guinea is concerned, is an urgent one, and yet you hesitate at present to say so a second time, lest we be charged with "restlessness and impatience." I deem it of far greater importance to show our deep earnestness in the matter by a frequent importunity, than to save ourselves from any small imputation of the sort you deprecate. It appears to me that nothing but a continual knocking at the door will arouse the Imperial Government to action. Patience is but a poor substitute for pressure in cases like the present. You must not forget that it is now fourteen months since Lord Derby invited the Colonies to unite for the express purpose of securing the objects we desire, an invitation emphasized in His Lordship's despatch of 9th May last in the following terms, viz., "that in order to place Her Majesty's Government in a position to consider the proposals for the protection or government of New Guinea or other places in the Western Pacific Ocean, it was desirable for the Australasian Colonies to combine together effectively and provide the cost of carrying out any policy which it might be decided to adopt."

The Colonies have now combined together to provide the cost, and it remains for Lord Derby to carry out his part of the contract.

But to my second point: I think all our Convention colleagues will be amazed at your describing our agitating "for a complete protection over all the unappropriated islands" as a "departure from the resolution of the Convention." In the resolutions of the Convention as finally passed, the special mode of preventing "the further acquisition of dominion in the Pacific south of the Equator by any Foreign Power" is not suggested; but no one ever imagined what you now propose, viz., that this could be best accomplished by placing all the islands except New Guinea (why do you except New Guinea?) under the joint protection of the European nations. It takes one's breath away to read such a proposal. I thought it was an accepted principle with all the Colonies that the people of Australasia had the best right to the islands of Australasia, and that when the Convention deprecated the further acquisition of territory by any Foreign Power they did not mean that the whole of the islands should be handed handed over to the protection of all the European Powers. To my mind it is clear as day that the only method of preventing Foreign Powers from acquiring territory is to take it ourselves; and that this was the view of the Convention I think must be admitted. You will remember that clause 2 of the Resolutions (see page 13 of the proceedings), as originally proposed by Mr. Whitaker (see pp. 10 and 11) indicated the means of preventing Foreign acquisition to be "by a cession, annexation, or protectorate," thus clearly indicating that England was by some means or other to secure the islands against all Foreign acquisition, and the more colourless clause as finally passed was adopted because we had some difficulty in ascertaining what a cession or a protectorate exactly meant, and we cared not how the islands were made safe so long as they were made safe. But the proposal for the introduction of a dual control or a plural control over these islands was certainly never mooted at the Convention, and contains within it, in my opinion, the germs of infinite troubles.

I am very sorry that your views on these matters are so divergent from those held by the Governments of the other Colonies. Queensland, South Australia, New Zealand, and Victoria are all agreed on the necessity for further action. Tasmania I am quite sure will join heartily, as soon as our present tedious mode of communication by letter (owing to the breaking of the cable) will permit. Western Australia I did not ask to join in this particular matter, because she is a Crown Colony. I am sorry New South Wales cannot join—a pull altogether would almost certainly have gained our object, and I fear that if England delay much longer, the problem will be solved in a way none of us will like. I yield to no man in a desire to preserve our Mother Country from "embarrassment," and it is because "the further acquisition of dominion in the Pacific by any Foreign Power" would be, to use the language of the Convention resolution No. 1, "injurious to the interests of the Empire," as well as "highly detrimental to the safety and well-being of the British possessions in Australasia," that I feel it imperative to strain every nerve to prevent a consummation so devoutly to be deprecated.

I am, &c.,
JAMES SERVICE.

No. 5.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 24 September, 1884.

I have to express my regret that my last letter to you was published in the papers in Melbourne before it reached you. This was a proceeding which, as you will readily imagine, I never authorized, and for which I am in no way responsible.

Your letter of yesterday informs me that the inaccuracy in your circular telegram, to which I invited your attention, was a clerical error. It is consequently unnecessary to continue any correspondence on the New Guinea matter, upon which we are agreed, save as to the necessity of any immediate appeals to the Colonial Minister, a course which I deem alike inopportune and unnecessary. On this subject I may be permitted to say that I have no doubt that in the course of a few days the necessary steps will be taken by the Imperial naval authorities in these seas to give effect to the policy of the Imperial Government in the protectorate of New Guinea. Our views have been already fairly and fully put before the Imperial Government; and I do not think that instructions to our representatives in England to exercise pressure by repeated importunities to the Colonial Office would have any beneficial result, even if I could regard such a course as one which it would be proper under all the circumstances to adopt, of which I am by no means satisfied. But my principal object in writing to you is to remove a misconception under which you appear to be labouring, as to the committal of the members of the Convention to the steps which you invite me to take. And in this matter I am obliged, not only on my own account but from a consideration of what is due to my colleagues in the Government who sat with me in the Convention, to question the precise accuracy of one of your statements, which, if allowed to pass unchallenged, might seem to amount to an admission on our part that the course which I am now adopting was inconsistent with that which the representatives of this Colony pursued in that body.

You say, "I think that all our Convention Colleagues will be amazed at your describing our agitating for a wholesale protectorate over all the unappropriated islands as a departure from the resolutions of the Convention." In the resolutions of the Convention as finally passed, a special mode of preventing "the further acquisition of dominion in the Pacific, south of the Equator, by any Foreign Power is not suggested; but no one ever imagined what you now propose, viz., that this could be best accomplished by placing all of the islands except New Guinea (why do you except New Guinea?) under the joint protection of European nations. It takes one's breath away to read such a proposal."

I think I can recall to your recollection circumstances which will abundantly satisfy you that there is no ground whatever for the amazement which you apprehend will be inspired by my statement. In the first place I know of no single fact which could justify the belief that the Imperial Government ever seriously contemplated the annexation of or the exercise of any general protectorate over the unappropriated islands of the Pacific. There were abundant reasons indeed for coming to a precisely opposite conclusion. Neither the policy of the Imperial Government nor, as far as it could be gathered from the Press and public discussion, the tone of English public feeling in any way favoured the idea that any proposal to indefinitely extend the Colonial responsibilities of the Empire would be seriously entertained. All that we knew, alike from the utterances of English statesmen and from the Press effectually discouraged the idea that the Imperial Government ever contemplated such a course of procedure; but the curious circumstance is that nothing was more clearly and distinctly recognized at the Convention than this fact, and the whole course of action of the representatives of this Colony was openly and avowedly governed by a recognition of this state of things. You will not fail to remember that at the Convention the policy which you now suggest was emphatically protested against by one of my colleagues (the Attorney-General) who, in these words, which I take from the Sydney Morning Herald of December 5th, 1883, expressed our entire dissent from a proposal to exercise a British protectorate over all the unappropriated islands.

"It

"It was known" he said "that the Imperial Government had no desire to extend its Colonial responsibilities. The representative of the Imperial Government who sat in that Convention had, in speech and writing, warned them against colonization in that sense. These islands, according to the proposals, were not to be occupied for colonizing purposes, but so to speak as fortresses against the occupation by any Foreign Power of any portion of the Pacific to which they belonged. They were not to be occupied except by the sentinels of Imperial authority, for the protection of the Colonial Empire. Would England undertake any such duty as that? Was it consistent with her policy of colonization? Above all, was it a practical thing to ask her to do?" The honorable and learned gentleman proceeded to point out the interests of Foreign Governments in that matter, and reminded the Convention that it was not to be expected that the Foreign Powers, particularly those interested in those islands, would calmly regard and permit the appropriation of such vast tracts, with such an enormous population, by any Power which professed that it had no immediate intention of using the territory for colonizing purposes, but simply to protect it against the possibility of being appropriated by other Powers. He thought that any such proposal as that would involve the Imperial Government in the greatest difficulties of diplomacy with the Foreign Powers of Europe; but he did not suppose for a moment that England could entertain any such proposal: Mr. Dalley referred at length to the various despatches from the Colonial Office in support of the views to which he gave expression. It was also clear, he said, that even if England were permitted to take that unprecedented step in the way of annexation of territory, she would not undertake the responsibility at her own cost of maintaining the necessary powers in those islands to preserve order and to hold them against adventurers. It was manifest that the cost of the maintenance of the possessions, whatever that might be, should be borne by the Colonies. He referred to various State papers in support of that view. He asked, could they honestly represent to England that the Legislatures of the various Australian Colonies would be prepared to undertake so indefinite and possibly so enormous an expenditure. They would be proposing, in the first place, if they adopted those resolutions, a system of colonization with which England had been hitherto unfamiliar. It was not a characteristic of her Colonial history to colonize by symbol—to plant a flag simply as a mark of her authority, for the purpose of warning any trespassers who might have their own prospects of beneficent colonization if she had not taken their place. When England colonized she gave the protection of her flag to those who occupied her Colonies, and brought in her train the blessings of civilization which she carried everywhere. It was intended by those resolutions that she should do nothing of the kind; but that she should practically reverse her Colonial policy, and only hold that vast territory against all the rest of the world. Other great nations of Europe had large interests in these seas. Was it to be expected that they would sanction that policy, even were England disposed to adopt it? He thought there would be no hope of such representations as those being attended to by the Imperial Government, and with that conviction he deprecated their being forwarded, because they would render practically valueless all the other representations which this Conference deemed it to be to the interests of the Australasian people to make to the Mother Country. Their primary duty was to protect themselves; but that duty ought to be discharged with a due regard to the interests and difficulties of the Empire, with a fair consideration of her Colonial policy, and without placing in the way of her assenting to our views, difficulties which, considering her place amongst the Nations, might prove to be insurmountable." These were the views which have been consistently held by this Government on this question: and the reference of the Attorney-General to Sir William Des Vœux was significant, because His Excellency had at the very same sitting of the Convention suggested an International jurisdiction over the islands to be exercised by the Great Powers interested which would be universally applicable; and he had, as you are aware, cited historical examples to justify his proposal which he had previously in a formal way submitted to the Convention. I feel sure, when you have carefully considered all these circumstances, you will perceive that there will not be the slightest ground for any feeling of amazement at my statement that the resolutions of the Convention did not in any way warrant your proposal to appeal to the Imperial Government for a complete protection over all the unappropriated islands. But whatever might have been the state of things with which we had to deal in December last and I have pointed out—I think very clearly that at that time what you now suggest was never thought reasonable or possible—you must be perfectly well aware that, at present, to attempt to press such a proposal upon the Imperial Government would be singularly inopportune, and certainly unsuccessful. You can readily understand that I have not the slightest sympathy with any course of Colonial action which would seriously embarrass the Imperial Government, without the faintest hope of accomplishing any advantage to the Colonies. And judging from the present attitude of Continental Governments towards England, on her Colonial policy and its development, I can conceive no course more embarrassing and more fruitless than that in which you invite my acquiescence. I regret as much as you can do that I am unable to act, as I would sincerely desire to do, in accord with your government; but I am compelled to take that course which is alone in agreement with views which I have repeatedly expressed, with my conviction of the very embarrassing state of things at present, and with that duty which we all owe both to our respective Colonies and to the Empire of which we are citizens.

The Premier of Victoria to The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales.

My dear Stuart,

Premier's Office, Melbourne, 29 September, 1884.

I duly received yours of the 24th instant, and have given it very careful consideration. First, as to my use of the word "Protectorate." I still cannot agree with you that my circular telegram of the 16th instant in any way suggested a departure from the resolutions of the Convention. The main object of that telegram was to urge the necessity of some immediate action on the part of the Imperial Government, rather than to indicate the precise mode of that action, and in using the term "Protectorate" I naturally adopted the word which has become associated in the public mind and in the Press with the movement for preventing the acquisition of further dominion in the Pacific by any Foreign Power, and which, indeed, has been used by Lord Derby himself. And now as to your suggestions of an international control. There is no hint in Mr. Dalley's speech of such a thing; and in turning to Sir William Des Vœux's memorandum which he tabled at the Convention, and to which you appeal, I find that, whilst he barely alludes to an international jurisdiction as a possible alternative, he brushes it aside altogether as undesirable, if not impracticable, and boldly advocates annexation or a Protectorate. (See pp. 117 and 122 of Proceedings.) Not only so, but the idea of an international jurisdiction has never been in the public mind at all; and the only question has been whether England should annex or protect. But annexation, Protectorate, or international control, whichever we might prefer, is not the question at this moment. My anxiety is, by some means or by any means, to attain the object which the Convention had in view, viz., the prevention of the "further acquisition of dominion in the Western Pacific south of the Equator by any Foreign Power," and if you could join the rest of the Colonies in assisting towards this end—I don't care how you do it—if you could send a telegram to your Agent-General in the sense of that which you sent on the 8th June, 1883, it would suffice to complete the Australasian concert. One word more, and I have done. You repeatedly refer to Imperial considerations as influencing you in dealing with this matter. I would ask, are we in any such position as can qualify us to judge the situation from an Imperial point of view? I think not, because we are, and must be, without any complete knowledge of the considerations which influence Imperial policy. We all admit that the Imperial Government must take into account, in dealing with this matter, other than merely Australasian considerations, but it seems to me that our business and duty is, while saving international obligations (as my circular telegram clearly proposed), that we should place in the strongest manner before the Imperial Government the paramount importance of securing the islands from all possibility of foreign dominion, and if hereafter the Imperial Government can show to us that Imperial considerations prevented their doing so, we can loyally, even if sorrowfully, bow to their decision. I still cling to the hope that you may yet see your way to cast in your lot with the rest of us.

I am, &c.,

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to The Premier of Victoria.

My dear Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 October, 1884.

A press of work in Parliament has prevented me from earlier acknowledging your letter of 29th ultimo.

We seem unlikely to agree as to the views expressed by members of the Convention; but we are left in no doubt as to the conclusions at which the Convention after mature discussion arrived, for the resolutions show very distinctly that while, as regards New Guinea, annexation or protection was unanimously desired, yet, as regards the Western Pacific generally, the Convention declined to commit itself to any such overt step on the part of England; but on the contrary, contented itself with urging that they be not permitted to become the property of any other nation.

This is precisely what I desire; and I am not inclined to go further, and join in urging upon Lord Derby to annex or appoint a protectorate over those wide-spread islands as the means of accomplishing that end. I consider that the prudent course, because the more likely to obtain that which we laid down, is to leave the matter in England's hands just as the Convention left it.

With regard to New Guinea protectorate, I have as much desire as you to see it done, and done speedily; but as I believe it to be in process, I do not think that we hasten it by continually urging it, unless we had some ground for believing that England had only got our promise to contribute without any intention of carrying it out.

Circular Telegram from Premier of Victoria to Colonial Secretary of N. S. Wales. Melbourne, 24 April, 1884.

RECENT London telegrams re Recidivistes Bill now before French Legislature indicate that Colonies have little to hope in way of modification of Bill by French Government, or that any decided action will be taken by Imperial Government to avert the dreaded consequences which must inevitably follow the coming into operation of such an outrageous proposal. I think an emergency has arisen such as was in the mind of the Convention when it delegated to us the duty of watching over matters relating to the subjects discussed by it. Upon no subject was it more determined than upon that of protecting these Colonies from being made receptacle of the worst criminals of France. As we shall be called upon by the people of our respective Colonies to submit legislation and to take concerted action in the matter, I shall be glad of an expression of your views as to the most desirable course to be pursued. Inform me if you think it desirable to convene Committee; and if so, where and when.

No. 2.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to Premier of Victoria.

My dear Mr. Service, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 May, 1884.

I received a few days ago your telegram in regard to the important question of the Recidivistes Bill now before the French Legislature. I have to apologize for not having written to you before.

While I hold just as strong views as you can possibly do with regard to the danger to these Colonies from having a large body of these criminals settled at New Caledonia, I yet do not see that any good would be derived from the calling together of the Committee recently appointed by the recent Convention. I think that we can do all that is requisite by correspondence, while the assembling together of the Premiers of the various Colonies would tend to irritate those who are opposed to the conclusions which the last Convention arrived at, and such meeting might be misinterpreted into an assumption of power on our part as a quasi-federal Council, which I am sure is far from the intention of each one of us.

I would be prepared to face all this in view of the great issue at stake, if we had differences of opinion to be reconciled; but seeing that our views upon this subject are entirely in unison, I am persuaded that that which we wish to attain can be as perfectly and more promptly effected by correspondence.

I think that each of us should address a minute to the Governor of our respective Colonies, with a view to its being forwarded to the Secretary of State, urging again, in decided but temperate language, that the Imperial Government should press upon the French authorities the great grievance of which we so justly complain.

I venture to think that a remonstrance of this kind going from each Colony, and reaching the Secretary of State nearly simultaneously, is more likely to impress upon him the urgency and importance of the crisis than representations made through the Agents-General. These latter, although valuable aids in the cause, cannot, as it seems to me, speak with the same weight which would be attributed to the utterances of the various Premiers of the Colonies, speaking, under a sense of responsibility, the views of their respective Colonies, and together forming the united voice of Australasia.

Lord Augustus Loftus has just returned from a visit to Norfolk Island, paid in his official capacity, and I propose immediately to address him such a minute as I have indicated, in order that it may go forward by the present P. and O. mail; and I propose to ask him to telegraph the main purport of it to the Secretary of State.

I remain, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

I send below the draft of a circular telegram which I propose to issue before despatching; however I should be glad of your concurrence or amendment. Can you reply to-day? Concerted action in a telegram will I think suffice for the present. As to a memorandum to Governor, that can be left to the individual Governments. The following is my proposed telegram:—"The replies to my last circular favour two things,—first an immediate hearty identical protest against Recidivistes Bill to be forwarded through respective Governments by telegraph; second, preparation of stringent Bill for introduction to Legislatures should French Bill pass. I propose the adoption of following identic telegram:—"The Government of _____ protests emphatically against the passing of the Recidivistes Bill through the French Legislature so far as it applies to the Eastern Pacific, and desires the Imperial Government to further earnestly press on the French Government the grievous wrong which such Bill if passed will inflict on these Colonies."

I FAIL to see to whom our protest can be addressed with effect, and therefore I would suggest the following:—This Government most earnestly urges upon the Imperial Government to make emphatic protest to the French Government against the passing of the Recidivistes Bill, so far as it applies to the Western Pacific, by which a grievous wrong would be inflicted on these Colonies, which already suffer from the frequent escapes of convicts from New Caledonia.

THIS Government most earnestly urges upon Her Majesty's Government to use its utmost influence with the French Government against the action of the Recidivistes Bill so far as it applies to the Western Pacific, by which a grievous wrong would be inflicted on these Colonies, suffering as they now do by the frequent arrival of expirees and escaped convicts from New Caledonia. This action if persisted in cannot but be considered by these Colonies as an unfriendly act towards them on the part of the French Government.

REPLIES to my last circular favour two things: first, an immediate hearty identical protest against Recidivistes Bill to be forwarded through respective Governors by telegraph; second, preparation of stringent Bill for introduction to Legislatures should French Bill pass. I propose the adoption of following identical telegram—kindly reply if approved:—"This Government most earnestly urges upon the Imperial Government to make emphatic protest to the French Government against the passing of the Recidivistes Bill, so far as it applies to the Western Pacific. By such Bill a grievous wrong would be inflicted on these Colonies, which already suffer from the frequent escapes of convicts from New Caledonia.

HAVE replied to Service's circular telegram of yesterday as follows:—"It appears to us that the proposed telegram does no more than repeat individually what has already been done collectively, and therefore more effectively by the Convention. Moreover, we know that the Imperial Government are doing their utmost in the matter, and it appears ungracious to urge them to do what they are already doing. In our judgment, the most effectual course to adopt would be to let it be known through Reuter's Agency and the Agents-General that the Colonies have agreed, in the event of the Recidivistes Bill becoming law, to introduce stringent measures to discourage all intercourse with New Caledonia. This can be done not as a threat, but as an announcement of a settled determination."

My dear Mr. Service,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 8 May, 1884.

My attention has been drawn to a paragraph in my letter to you of 1st instant which might be misinterpreted into conveying an idea that there was a party here opposed to the view taken by the Convention in regard to the French Recidivistes Bill. The paragraph I refer to was intended to allude to those who were opposed to the conclusions arrived at in regard to a Federal Council. I am happy to say that there is no party here opposed to the view we took with regard to the French criminals, but, on the contrary, I am persuaded that in all that I have written on this subject I have expressed the unanimous views of the whole community.

No. 20.

The Colonial Secretary of New South Wales to Premier of Queensland.

My dear Griffith,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 10 May, 1884.

Following up my telegram of yesterday, I now place before you my views upon the suggestion in your telegram the other day that, in place of sending what Service calls his "identical" telegram, we should send one threatening to pass legislation adverse to French communication with these Colonies.

My view is that we have no locus standi with the French Government which would make our threats to be felt by them, and the probability, therefore, is that they would be met with ridicule. We are, so far as concerns intercourse with foreign nations, part and parcel of the British Empire, and the only channel of communication with such foreign nations is through the Secretary of State and the machinery acting under his control. I do not think that the diplomacy which guides intercourse between nations would, at this stage, permit the use of language which savours rather of an ultimatum than of a negotiation.

I prefer addressing the Home Government, in language of remonstrance against the injustice and unfriendliness of the proposed French legislation.

If the announcement with regard to our future legislation has to be made to the Home Government, I think it would be better that at the present stage it should be made by the Governor drawing it as a conclusion which would probably follow from the very strong feelings which exist in the Colonies.

It must be borne in mind that no legislation which went outside of the treaty between England and France could be assented to by the Governor. It is peculiarly within the class of cases which he is instructed to reserve for Her Majesty's assent, and it could not be assented to at home without forming a breach of treaty relations, which might possibly be considered as approaching that of a casus belli.

I quite think that we might well consider in the meantime to what extent we could legislate without a breach of the treaty; for instance, we could possibly extend the application of the law which now enables enables Victoria to prevent criminals from any place to land on their shores; but this is quite a different thing to prohibiting French intercourse with these Colonies; the latter is secured by treaty rights, the former is not only against the comity of nations, but being applicable even to other parts of the British Empire, could not be objected to as a breach of the "most favoured nation" clause.

Under these circumstances, I think we are pursuing the right course to continue to urge upon the Home Government the absolute necessity of bringing its influence to bear upon the French Government, and I think we do that more emphatically by a telegram from each Colony, through the Governor, than by a remonstrance emanating from our respective Agents-General.

I enclose you a copy of a minute which I have addressed to the Governor, and which he is sending home by the next outgoing mail. 6 May, 1884.

Minute for His Excellency the Governor.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 6 May, 1884.

French Criminal or "Recidivistes" Bill.

I DESIRE to lay before His Excellency some remarks relative to the above subject with a request that he would be good enough to forward them to the Secretary of State so that they may be brought under the notice of Her Majesty's Government.

This Colony views with the greatest alarm the sending of large numbers of criminals to the French Settlement of New Caledonia and possibly to other islands of the Western Pacific which it is understood forms part of the scheme in the Bill now before the French Legislature.

Already this Colony is put to great trouble and expense by the French escapees from New Caledonia. It is no unfrequent occurrence for several of them to escape the vigilance of the French authorities, and seizing a boat, to land upon this coast, sometimes in a state of extreme destitution, when they immediately come under the notice of our police and are detained or kept under surveillance until the French Consul obtains from the Governor of New Caledonia an order for their extradition. Sometimes, arriving in better condition, they beg or work their way to our towns where they swell the criminal class as is attested by many of them being found in our gaols, while probably a large number elude the vigilance of our police and continue to live a lawless and vicious life.

I enclose herewith a memorandum* from the Inspector-General of Police, showing those cases which have come under his notice. I enclose also a letter* from him with a report from an officer whose special duty it is to watch this traffic, pointing out that it has now assumed a new shape in the arrival by the French steamer of nine of these criminals who, having performed their sentences, are apparently induced to leave New Caledonia, although not permitted to return to France. These persons take refuge in this Colony and form a most undesirable class for us to receive.

If we suffer so much under the present comparatively limited deportation of French criminals to New Caledonia, is it any wonder that the colonists should view with the utmost alarm, and make the strongest and most indignant protests against, a proposal that would deluge New Caledonia with criminals to such an extent as would force them no longer by twos and threes, but probably by hundreds, to seek refuge on this coast?

It is often assumed that the distance of New Caledonia from Australia (about 1,000 miles) renders it a matter of extreme difficulty to get from the former to the latter; but there are many parts of the year during which the prevailing winds—smooth sea and fine weather—enables a voyage to be made in an open boat with comparative ease and safety.

It will be remembered that in former days these Colonies made strenuous efforts, which after a long struggle were successful in freeing themselves from the contaminating influence of English criminals, and the prospect of the danger arising from being made the receptacle of escaped or semi-pardoned French criminals causes them to speak out as with one voice against the threatened danger. The Colonies cannot appeal direct to France, but they do appeal in the very strongest manner to the Imperial Government to use its high influence in remonstrance with the French Government against a policy fraught with such disastrous consequences to these Colonies, and which must in the long run involve England and France themselves in complications and difficulties which cannot then be easily settled.

I enclose copies of correspondence which have taken place between myself and Mr. Service, the Premier of Victoria, with regard to this subject.

No. 21.

Minute for The Honorable the Colonial Secretary.

THE Governor begs to acknowledge the receipt of the Minute addressed to him on the 6th instant, containing observations on the French Relapsed Criminal or Recidiviste Bill, showing the injurious consequences which cannot fail to result to the Australian Colonies by their becoming the receptacle of escaped or semi-pardoned French criminals from New Caledonia.

The Governor, in conformity with the wish expressed by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, will forward to Her Majesty's Secretary of State by the next mail a copy of his Minute to be brought under the notice of Her Majesty's Government.

Fully recognising the serious consequences which must inevitably result to the Australian Colonies by an increased deportation of French convicts to New Caledonia from whence as is now unfortunately proved they escape in considerable numbers to this and the adjoining Colony, the Governor considers that these Colonies are fully entitled to expect from the Government of France that consideration of their just representation which is dictated by those feelings of amity and friendship which have so happily existed between Great Britain and France.

The Governor cannot doubt that the representations of the Colonies, expressed in friendly and courteous terms, will be responded to by the French Government in the same conciliatory and friendly spirit.

The Governor is convinced that the French Government, guided by a spirit of goodwill and justice, will never enforce any measure, however legally entitled to do so, in its own possessions, which could in any way bear the character of an unfriendly act towards the Australian Colonies.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith, and so forth,—

To our trusty and well-beloved—

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esquire, M.P., of Carcoar; JOHN BASSETT CHRISTIAN, Esquire, of Mount Pleasant, Hinton; and SAMUEL M'CAUGHEY, Esquire, of Coonong, Urana;

Greeting:

Know ye that We, reposing great trust and confidence in your ability, zeal, industry, discretion, and integrity, do by these presents authorize and appoint you, or any two of you, as hereinafter mentioned, to make a diligent and full inquiry into the Quarantine Regulations for Stock coming to this Colony, either from other Colonies or other parts of the World, and also into the circumstances under which the American sheep recently destroyed at Carcoar passed through Quarantine without the existence of scab in them having been discovered: And We do by these presents give and grant to you, or any two of you, at any meeting or meetings to which all of you shall have been duly summoned, full power and authority to call before you all such persons as you may judge necessary, by whom you may be better informed of the truth in the premises, and to require the production of all such books, papers, writings, and all other documents as you may deem expedient, and to visit and inspect the same at the offices or places where the same or any of them may be deposited, and inquire of the premises by all lawful ways and means: And Our further will and pleasure is that you, or any two of you, after due examination of the premises, do and shall, within the space of three months after the date of this Our Commission, or sooner if the same can reasonably be, certify to Us, in the Office of our Secretary for Mines, under your or any two of your hands and seals, what you shall find touching the premises: And We hereby command all Government Officers and other persons whomsoever within Our said Colony, that they be assistant to you and each of you in the execution of these presents: And We appoint you, the said GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esquire, to be President of this Our Commission, and do give you power at your discretion to procure such clerical and other assistance as you may deem necessary for enabling you duly to execute this Our Commission.

In testimony whereof, We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of Our Colony to be hereunto affixed.

Witness Our right, trusty, and well-beloved Councillor, SIR AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS (commonly called LORD AUGUSTUS LOFTUS), Knight
Grand Cross of Our Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Our Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Our said Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies, at Government House, Sydney, in New South Wales aforesaid, this twenty-ninth day of April, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, and in the forty-seventh year of Our Reign.

ROYAL COMMISSION to inquire into the Quarantine Regulations for Stock and the recent cases of scab in sheep at Carcoar.

WHEREAS it is necessary to extend the time by which the Commissioners are to make their Report in the above matters: Now, therefore, I do hereby, with the advice of the Executive Council, extend the time within which the said Commissioners are to make such Report to and for the period of one month beyond the time in and by the said Commission appointed for such purpose.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS FOR STOCK, &c.

REPORT.

To His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,—

As Her Majesty's Commissioners, appointed by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the Colony, dated the 29th day of April, 1884, to make a diligent and full inquiry into the Quarantine Regulations for Stock coming to this Colony, either from other Colonies or other parts of the world, and also into the circumstances under which the American sheep, recently destroyed at Carcoar, passed through quarantine without the existence of scab in them having been discovered, we have the honor to submit to your Excellency the following Report:—

We are unanimously of opinion that, with the following additions, the existing Quarantine Regulations for Stock, if properly administered, are sufficient to protect this Colony from any infectious disease brought hither, either from the Australian Colonies or any other parts of the world.

We recommend, in respect to imported sheep from places other than the Australian Colonies,—

1. That sheep be prohibited from coming from any country where it is known that scab exists.
2. That all imported sheep proved to be infected with scab on their arrival in this Colony, or within ninety days thereafter, be destroyed.
3. That in case of their being so destroyed, the Crown not to be held liable.
4. The sheep, if not proved scabby, to be subjected to three dippings (in accordance with the existing Regulations) in tobacco and sulphur, at intervals of ten days, all three dippings to be administered within the last twenty-one days.

With respect to sheep coming from any of the Australian Colonies we would recommend,—

1. That all sheep be prohibited from coming from any Colony where it is known that scab exists.

2. That all sheep proved to be infected with scab coming from any Colony on their arrival in this Colony, or within twenty-one days thereafter, be destroyed.
3. That in case of their being so destroyed, the Crown not to be held liable.
4. That all seaborne sheep arriving in this Colony from any of the Australian Colonies, before leaving quarantine and being removed inland, be dipped three times (in accordance with the existing Regulations) in tobacco and sulphur, at intervals of ten days, and subjected to a twenty-one days' quarantine.
5. That all sheep from this or other Colonies brought overland, and open for inspection at the same time and place as seaborne sheep, and under such circumstances that the public can go from the seaborne sheep to the overland sheep at the risk of conveying infection, be dipped three times and subjected to a twenty-one days' quarantine before going inland.
6. All seaborne sheep landed in adjoining Colonies, or sheep that have come in contact with any such sheep within six months of their landing, shall be dipped three times before being allowed to cross our borders.

We would further recommend,—

1. That the Carcoar district be kept in quarantine until the 31st March 1885, but sheep might be removed after 1st November next upon their receiving three dippings (in accordance with the existing Regulations) in tobacco and sulphur, prior to removal, provided that no scab be detected in the district in the meantime.
2. That the Quarantine Regulations, with regard to the Coast scab district, be kept in force for twelve months from present date.
3. That the existing scale of charges for the dipping of sheep be abolished, and that the actual cost of dipping only be charged.
4. That section 6 of the Regulations, dated 20th day of May, 1884, under the Diseases in Sheep Act of 1866, be cancelled, and that the following be substituted in lieu thereof:—

“Any person holding the diploma or certificate of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, London, or a diploma of equivalent value, shall also be required to pass the prescribed examination, so far as it relates to diseases in stock, and to satisfy the Board of Examiners that he has a practical knowledge of such diseases, and more particularly an extensive experience of scab in sheep.”

5. That all sheep, previous to their being admitted to quarantine, be examined by the Chief Inspector of Sheep and the Government Veterinarian, who should both be men possessed of a practical knowledge of scab, that these officers should also inspect the sheep in consultation previous to releasing them from quarantine, and that the release of the sheep only be allowed on a certificate signed by both.

We have made a most searching inquiry into all the circumstances connected with the recent outbreak of scab in sheep at Errowangbang, near Carcoar, and on this matter we have the honor to report as follows :—

We are unanimously of opinion that the existence of scab in the American sheep, spoken of in evidence as Mr. Garland's, and destroyed at Mr. Lomax's station, Errowangbang, near Carcoar, has been clearly proved by several witnesses brought before us, and more particularly by the distinct and clear evidence on this point given by Messrs. Bruce, West, Brown, and Lomax, all of whom saw the acari in the sheep.

The evidence taken in connection with these sheep, from the time of their landing up to the time they were removed from the Quarantine Station at Summer Hill, affords ample proof that there were sufficient reasons why the Stock Branch should have exercised a much more careful and rigorous supervision in regard to carrying out the Quarantine Regulations than has been shown to be the case.

In the first place, we direct special attention to the evidence of Mr. Bruce Lowe, whose statement goes to show the prevalence of scab throughout California, and to create the strong suspicion that the scab disease existed amongst certain sheep aboard the "City of New York," by which steamer Mr. Lowe was a passenger to New Zealand from San Francisco, and aboard of which ship there was a consignment of American stud sheep for Sydney, which consignment reached here about six weeks prior to the arrival of the sheep known as Mr. Garland's.

Mr. Lowe having noticed that the ration sheep for ship's use showed all the symptoms of being scabby, and that as soon as the pen was cleared of the ration sheep it was occupied by the consigned sheep, communicated what he had observed to Mr. Bruce, Chief Inspector of Sheep, by a private letter from New Zealand, and which letter is admitted by the Chief Inspector to have been received by him.

In the next place, on the 11th October, 1883, Mr. Garland distinctly intimated to the Chief Inspector his suspicions that his (Mr. Garland's) sheep were scabby; and although the Chief Inspector and the Veterinarian, Mr. Willows, examined the sheep immediately after, these officials both state that the affection from which the sheep were suffering was not scab, but was attributable to grass-seed, as they found the seed in every spot they examined.

At the same time it is very evident that, although the Chief Inspector decided that the sheep were not scabby, he must have had doubts on the subject when, according to his own evidence, he instructed Mr. Willows to have the sheep dipped three times, once in Little's Fluid and twice in tobacco and sulphur.

Then there is the evidence of Mr. Weaver that, shortly before the sheep left the quarantine station at Summer Hill, for Errowangbang, he informed the Chief Inspector that he did not like the look of them.

Then again, on 2nd January, 1884, Mr. Sölling, Manager for Messrs. Brunker & Wolfe, in Sydney, drew the attention of the Chief Inspector to Garland's sheep, by asking him if he had seen them lately, and expressed his opinion that he did not think they ought to go up country.

We consider that any of these warnings ought to have been sufficient to arouse the Chief Inspector to the full necessity of exercising the greatest care, and of having the most searching examination made, before permitting the sheep to leave quarantine quarantine for Mr. Lomax's station; and we certainly think that he should have assured himself that the dippings which he had ordered to be given to the sheep had been administered as directed by him, viz., one in Little's Fluid and two in tobacco and sulphur.

It is quite clear to us that, some considerable time before the infected sheep were removed from Bradley's Head and Shark Island Quarantines, the disease was fully developed; and it must have been so apparent while the sheep were at the Summer Hill Quarantine Station that any one with a practical knowledge of scab would have had no difficulty in detecting it, as we feel certain that the irritation which caused the sheep to rub themselves, and which Mr. Weaver thought was heat of blood, was really scab.

Mr. Weaver appears to have been in doubt as to the real nature of the disease until his doubts were set at rest by an opinion which he considered of superior value and authority to his own, viz., that of Mr. Pottie, who expressed the opinion that the sheep were suffering from sheep erysipelas or sheep scarlatina.

It does not appear clear to us that during Mr. Willows' absence in Tasmania for seven weeks, and whilst his position as Inspector of Stock at Sydney was occupied by Mr. Weaver, that the last-mentioned officer received any instructions either from Mr. Willows, before his departure, or from the Chief Inspector, during Mr. Willows' absence, as to completing the dipping of the sheep then in quarantine; and it also does not appear that Mr. Weaver ever asked for any instructions with regard to these sheep, although he states that he found on his desk a memorandum relating to them, and mentioning the number of their previous dippings, but conveying no directions of any kind as to future dippings required by the Act, nor is it shown that these dippings, as so required, were ever administered.

By reason of Mr. Willows' absence from the Colony for seven weeks previous to Mr. Garland's sheep leaving quarantine, he cannot be held answerable for the removal from Summer Hill of the sheep which were afterwards found to be infected; but we cannot absolve him from blame for allowing the sheep to leave Bradley's Head and Shark Island Quarantines without a clean certificate.

We certainly think that Mr. Willows, by his own admission, possesses such a limited knowledge of scab, and, in fact, by his own statement to Mr. Sölling, knows nothing about it, that we cannot consider him competent to decide upon or judge of any case which might be submitted to him or come under his notice. Although failing to discover scab when examining the sheep with Mr. Bruce, at the instigation of Mr. Garland, we consider that in the interval between that examination and his leaving for Tasmania he must have had ample opportunities, had he possessed a knowledge of the disease, to have discovered its existence in the sheep in which it was suspected, as we have not the slightest doubt but that the disease must have been apparent to any practical observer whilst the sheep were in quarantine at Bradley's Head and Shark Island under Mr. Willows' charge.

Mr. Willows, according to his own statement, appears to have acted altogether under instructions from the Chief Inspector, and not to have exhibited that intelligent action which, in our opinion, ought to have been looked for in one holding the important office which he fills, and which would justify the confidence that his chief has evidently reposed in him.

We

We find that in no case have the Quarantine Regulations been carried out as to the number of dippings administered to the American sheep.

The Chief Inspector in his evidence distinctly asserts that he never instructed Mr. Willows to dip the sheep a less number of times than the Act directs, while Mr. Willows as positively asserts that the Chief Inspector informed him two dippings would be sufficient. As to which statement is correct we are unable to decide, no corroborative evidence having been adduced by either of these gentlemen; but at the same time a discrepancy in Mr. Willows' evidence on this matter (see page 19) should be noted. In the first instance he says—

“I am not aware that, under the Act of 1866, 54th section, it is necessary to dip sheep three times,” whilst he subsequently asserts (see page 19),

“I asked the Chief Inspector distinctly if the sheep were to be dipped three times, according to the Act, and he said no; twice was sufficient.”

No subsequent examination obtained from Mr. Willows any satisfactory explanation of this discrepancy.

We now consider it necessary to call attention to a consignment of American sheep, known as Jones's, for which Messrs. Bruncker & Wolfe were the agents. These sheep arrived here some short time subsequent to those of Mr. Garland's. They comprised two lots: lot 1 contained 25 ewes and 15 rams, and lot 2, 29 rams.

Mr. Willows in his evidence (page 40) states that lot 1 was dipped on the 16th October and the 1st November last, and lot 2 on the 16th October and 12th December last, and he also declares that the lambs were dipped in every case. Notwithstanding this testimony, we regret to say that the evidence of several reliable witnesses creates very grave doubts as to any dippings whatever having been administered to a portion of these sheep.

Mr. Cleeve, Inspector of Sheep, states that, whilst examining these sheep at Maitland (where they had been taken after the expiration of their quarantine), on opening their fleeces it struck him that the wool looked bright and the skin looked pink and clean, and he did not discern any stain as though the sheep or lambs had been dipped. (See pages 24 and 25.)

The Chief Inspector of Sheep states that it did not strike him, when examining the sheep at Maitland, that they had not been dipped, but he thinks the wool looked very clean. (See page 36.)

The evidence, however, which bears most strongly on this matter is that of Mr. Sölling, which was given throughout by him in a fair, straightforward, and impartial manner. We attach to it so much importance that it will be necessary to quote it at length:—

“When the first lot was offered for sale (24th October, 1883) the rams showed every appearance of having been dipped, but I do not think that some of the ewes had been dipped. I could swear, and do swear, that the ewes I saw at the sale had not the appearance of sheep which had been dipped, comparing them with the rams which had been dipped. * * * If the ewes I refer to had been dipped on the 16th October (the date on which Mr. Willows states they were dipped), they certainly must have shown some appearance of it on the 24th of the same month. * * * I saw the same sheep afterwards at Summer Hill, and noticed that they looked very well, and still had the appearance of sheep which had not been dipped. This was on the 2nd January last. * * * They had very heavy fleeces on them. * * * Mr. Willows generally called in to say when he was going to dip any sheep we had in quarantine; he did not make it a special duty to do so. I see him very frequently. In speaking to Mr. Willows about the

ewes which were heavy in lamb being dipped, and the consequent danger if they were dipped, I inferred from what he said that he would not have them dipped. I asked Mr. Willows to have special care taken in dipping the ewes in lamb, and, as before stated, I inferred that they would not be dipped. He assigned a reason, and said that the stuff would run from the ewes' fleeces on to their udders and get into the mouths of the lambs and kill them. I do not think they have been dipped,—I mean the ewes which had the lambs. At Summer Hill Quarantine, on the 2nd January, I noticed that the eight or nine ewes which had not been dipped looked remarkably well—I never saw sheep looking better. * * *

“On the 2nd January I saw the 29 rams (lot 2) which had been at Shark Island, at Summer Hill. I opened the fleeces, and the wool looked bright and clean; the fleece had the tip on; they did not appear to have ever been dipped; the wool looked as beautiful and clean as any I ever saw. If they had ever been dipped, it must have been immediately after they had been shorn in September; I thought that the wool must have grown since they had been dipped.” (See page 41.)

If, as Mr. Willows states, the first lot had all been dipped on the 16th October last, they must, as Mr. Sölling said, have shown unmistakable signs of the dipping on the 24th of the same month; and likewise the second lot, containing 29 rams, had they been dipped on the 12th December, as stated by Mr. Willows, the wool most certainly would not, on the 2nd January following, have presented the appearance described by Mr. Sölling.

The evidence which should have been most strongly corroborative of that given by Mr. Willows is that of John Connell Laycock, quarantine-keeper at Bradley's Head, who was supposed to have assisted at the dipping of Jones's sheep; but we regret to say his evidence is next to worthless, as we found him an unreliable and unwilling witness.

Besides the evidence quoted, we have other strong grounds for our doubts as to the dipping of Jones's sheep, as will be hereafter seen. In order to explain these grounds, we consider it necessary to call attention to several serious discrepancies between the evidence of Messrs. Bruce, Willows, and Laycock, but more particularly that of the two latter.

It was noticed during the examination of Laycock that he frequently referred to private notes which he had in his possession. Upon being questioned, he stated that these notes (Appendix G) had been copied from his pocket-book, which he could produce if necessary, and in which book the transactions as regards Jones's and Garland's sheep had been jotted down upon the same date as they had occurred. Laycock was then asked if Mr. Willows had furnished him with any information for the purposes of this inquiry; this he denied. The date of Laycock's examination was Wednesday, June 4th, and he was then asked if he had seen or spoken to Mr. Willows on the preceding Monday, June 2nd; this he at first denied, but subsequently admitted that he had seen Mr. Willows on that day, and had got an order for a shovel from him, but that nothing else had passed between them, nor had Mr. Willows then or at any time instructed him to prepare any information for this inquiry.

The notes were handed in by Laycock (Appendix G), and he was ordered to produce the pocket-book the following day.

Mr. Willows was then examined as to whether he had seen Laycock on the preceding Monday, and if so as to what had passed between them. He admitted that he had seen him, and had instructed him to take what books and references he would require before the Commission, to give all the information carefully, and to

to try to recollect what had taken place, but he denied having furnished Laycock with any information whatever. Upon being questioned as to whether it was not his (Mr. Willows') usual practice to go to Homebush every Monday morning, and why he had not done so on Monday the 2nd June, he stated that such was his practice, but that the Chief Inspector had requested him to go in the afternoon of the day in question instead of in the morning.

The Chief Inspector, upon examination on the 13th June, in respect to the above statement, says (see page 37):—

“I did not instruct Mr. Willows last Monday week not to go to Homebush in the morning, but to stay until the afternoon; he told me that he wished to go to Bradley's Head, but could not obtain a steam launch.”

On Thursday, June 5th, the day following Laycock's examination, he produced his private pocket-book, from which he alleged he had made the copies handed in the previous day, and upon examination we found that,—

1. The entries with regard to Garland's and Jones's sheep were the only entries in the book other than private ones, and Laycock was unable to explain why he should have taken the trouble to note down transactions respecting these sheep, and had never done so, before or since, in respect to other lots of sheep.
2. That the entries did not agree, so far as the wording and rotation were concerned, with the alleged copy handed in the previous day.
3. That the entries appeared to have all been made at the one time, and at a very recent date.

We refrain from expressing any opinion on the evidence given on this matter by Messrs. Willows and Laycock, but we think it our duty to call attention to the discrepancies in the same.

The only other evidence that we have as to the dipping of Jones's sheep is that of Morris, quarantine-keeper at Summer Hill, who stated that when the sheep came into his charge they had every appearance of having been dipped; and that of Freeburn, quarantine-keeper at Shark Island, who first stated that the sheep had been dipped three times, next that they had been dipped twice, and then finished up by saying that he would not swear they had been dipped at all.

Having carefully considered the evidence taken before us, we can come to no other conclusion than that the Chief Inspector of Sheep is mainly answerable for the recent outbreak of scab at Errowangbang, by reason of his having placed too much reliance upon his subordinate officers as to carrying out the Quarantine Regulations, and by neglecting to ascertain, as he ought to have done, that all instructions he had given such officers as to the enforcement of and adherence to the Regulations had been faithfully attended to; for we are decidedly of opinion that, had the Regulations with regard to dippings been carried out as prescribed by the Act, the outbreak of scab would have been prevented, or at any rate the disease would have been cured in quarantine, provided tobacco and sulphur had been used as the dip instead of Little's Fluid.

With regard to the officers upon whom the actual duty of the management of the quarantine stations devolved, and upon whom the Chief Inspector's confidence was placed, we will first allude to Mr. Willows.

Mr. Willows occupies an important position, which we certainly think requires the services of an intelligent man of large practical experience in the management of sheep and in their diseases. We find, as we have already stated, that Mr. Willows did not exhibit that intelligence which his position requires. Some necessary alterations in the management of the quarantine stations were certainly suggested by him and were put into effect, but we find that one of the most important of his duties, viz., the examination and periodical inspection of the sheep, must either have been performed with carelessness and laxity, or else the fact of the infected sheep passing through the quarantine stations in his charge without the disease being discovered by him must be put down to his utter want of knowledge of scab.

The dipping of Garland's and Jones's sheep whilst in quarantine was the duty of Mr. Willows. We find that this duty was not effectively performed by him, and in the case of some of Jones's sheep, we are of opinion that it was wholly neglected.

We consider that the important duty of protecting this port from the introduction of diseased stock should be entrusted to a person of large practical experience, and we consider that that experience should embrace a practical knowledge of scab, founded on an extensive acquaintance with the disease.

With regard to Mr. Weaver, who acted as the Metropolitan Inspector of Sheep during Mr. Willows' absence, we consider that he showed a want of interest in the performance of his duties; and we are of opinion that, had that not been the case, the existence of scab in the sheep must have been detected before they left the quarantine station, Summer Hill.

In conclusion, we beg to express our appreciation of the able and efficient manner in which the duties of Secretary have been discharged by Mr. Thomas Hewitt Myring.

Certified under our hands and seals, this 20th day of August, 1884,—

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS FOR STOCK, &c.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

TUESDAY, 27 MAY, 1884.

MEMBERS PRESENT :—

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esq., M.P., PRESIDENT,
JOHN BASSETT CHRISTIAN, Esq.

Alexander Bruce, Chief Inspector of Sheep, being duly sworn, states :—

My name is Alexander Bruce ; I am Chief Inspector of Sheep in the Colony of New South Wales ; I have held that position since the end of 1863, nearly twenty-one years ; my duties are—the carrying out of the Sheep Acts, the Imported Stock Act, the Brands Act, the Rabbit Act, Pastures and Stock Protection Act, the Impounding Act, the Commons Act ; and, under the Sheep Act, questions of travelling stock. Commons come under my supervision and direction, as well as the protection of travelling stock reserves, and there are no travelling stock reserves cancelled without reference to me ; it is my duty to see that all proclamations and regulations in connection with these Acts are carried out, and to see to the control and management of all public tanks and wells ; my staff is forty-two sheep inspectors, thirty-two rabbit inspectors, three quarantine keepers, and an office staff of nineteen clerks.

Alex. Bruce.
27 May, 1884.

I am intimately acquainted with all the above-mentioned Acts.

I am aware that American sheep have been imported into the Colony ; I remember Mr. Garland's sheep being imported into this Colony ; there were several lots, the first lot consisted of 124, the next 50, the next 25—ewes and rams ; the first lot arrived on 1st August, 1883 ; I do not recollect the name of the ship, but they came from San Francisco ; the next lot arrived on 22nd September, 1883 ; I do not recollect the name of the sheep ; they came from the same port ; the information above I obtained from my officers ; the third lot arrived from San Francisco on 23rd October, 1883 ; the sheep were all accompanied by certificates, with the exception of the last lot, consisting of twenty-five ewes ; they had no certificate, but Roberts, the party who brought a lot by the same vessel, made a statutory declaration that these sheep had been passed in San Francisco at the same time as his own ; the certificates referred to were certificates of health and freedom from disease ; the first and second lots of sheep on arrival were examined by Mr. Willows, and subsequently by Mr. Willows and myself ; the third lot was examined by Mr. Willows ; I do not recollect being present ; they were examined on board ship and while being put into the lighter.

When examining the sheep with Mr. Willows they appeared to be clean and free from disease ; we examined them as closely as we could do ; the sheep were not inspected officially by any other person ; they were seen by other persons unofficially ; (Appendix A.), which I now hand in, is a proclamation ; this proclamation refers only to diseases not known in the Colony. The dipping of sheep does not come under the Imported Stock Act, but under the Diseases in Sheep Act.

The sheep were removed to quarantine at Bradley's Head, but not all the lots ; we endeavoured as much as possible to shift previous lots to make room for others, and some of the sheep were removed to Shark Island ; the sheep were removed by lighter ; they were seen about once a week by Mr. Willows ; it was his duty to see them once a week, and he did so prior to their being dipped ; Mr. Garland and some person who I think came out in charge of the sheep had access to them, under certain conditions, prior to their being dipped ; the conditions were that they obtained leave and saw the sheep in the presence of the quarantine keeper ; there was one occasion on which the quarantine keeper had been present with a party and had left, and the young man who came out with the sheep—a friend I think of Mr. Garland's—remained with the sheep in his absence ; I heard a rumour that something had been put on the sheep, but the quarantine keeper said "No" ; Mr. Garland said something which amounted almost to a statement that something had been put on—he did not say by whom ; I did not cause inquiry to be made, but I examined the sheep, and could find nothing ; the statement was made to me by Mr. Garland at the time he came to my office and said he thought the sheep had scab ; this remark was made in my office ; Mr. Willows and myself, accompanied by Mr. Garland, examined the sheep ; the very same day at Bradley's Head we handled about half a dozen of the 124 sheep ; he pointed out those he wished examined ; we handled all which he stated he had any suspicion of ; Mr. Garland pointed out the sheep himself ; every spot Mr. Willows and myself examined (Mr. Garland looking on) ; we found the grass-seed in ; this was before they were dipped ; we made use of a glass when examining the spots ; we examined both the wool and the spots, as is customary when examining sheep ; it was a scab-glass we used, quite powerful enough to find the insect ; we found no insect, nothing other than the grass-seed ; I came to the conclusion it was a mistake on Mr. Garland's part, largely because Mr. Willows or the quarantine keeper ought to have seen it before Mr. Garland, if it had been scab ; Mr. Garland seemed satisfied that what we saw was grass-seed ; as owner, it was Mr. Garland's duty if he saw anything to inform us of the fact ; he did not dissent to the view taken by Mr. Willows and myself ; we did not handle any other of Mr. Garland's sheep ; I do not think any of his sheep were at Shark Island at that time ; I did not again see the sheep until I saw them at Carcoar ; the sheep examined were certified to as being taken to Carcoar, therefore I think they must be the same sheep I saw ; the papers in the office show that these sheep were transferred from Bradley's to Tattersall's, from Tattersall's to Summer Hill, and from Summer Hill to Carcoar, Mr. Lomax's station, near Carcoar ; I saw them at Lomax's station ; I do not know how long they were at the different places—Mr. Willows should know this ; before these sheep left for Mr. Lomax's station, I received a report from Mr. Weaver, acting inspector of sheep in Mr. Willows' absence ; he came in one day and said, "I do not like the look of the sheep" ; I asked him what was the matter ; he said, "They Alex. Bruce. were rubbing," and I said, "You know scab—you could tell if it was scab"; he said he did; I then said, "Do you think it is scab?" he said he was not sure, and then I said, "You examine the sheep again and come in to-morrow morning and let me know what you think, and I'll go out with you and examine them"; he came in next morning, and I asked him if he had any doubts, and he said no, the sheep were all right—they only had heat in the blood; I have since learned that Mr. Pottie, Veterinary Surgeon, was there at the same time as Mr. Weaver and examined them with him—I only state this from hearsay; I requested Mr. Pottie to go to see a sick ram, but I did not know that he and Mr. Weaver were there together; after receiving Mr. Weaver's report I did not consider it necessary to take any further action, as Mr. Willows had been telling me all along that they were affected with heat in the blood and sore eyes; Mr. Willows had been treating them all along for what he considered heat in the blood and for sore eyes; Mr. Weaver simply confirmed what Mr. Willows had reported to me; Mr. Weaver did not speak about them biting themselves, nor did he speak about what the quarantine keeper has since told me, namely, that he (the quarantine keeper) had spoken to Mr. Weaver about the sheep; I did not consider it necessary to inspect the sheep myself after what Mr. Weaver told me, and I caused no further inspection to be made; I was satisfied that he knew scab, from what his testimonials stated, and I also knew that Mr. Pottie had seen them; no further inspection was made by my order prior to their leaving for Lomax's station; I beg to correct a statement which I have made respecting Mr. Garland being owner of the sheep within the meaning of the Act while the sheep were in quarantine, and I do not know if he would not be liable to a penalty for not reporting existence of scab, if he knew it existed. There was no application or dressing administered to the sheep while in quarantine at Tattersall's and Summer Hill, or at all events not to my knowledge.

(The Commission adjourned at 1.5 p.m.)

(Resumed at 3.30 p.m.)

I beg to state that since the adjournment I have been thinking over the matter in connection with the statement that something had been put upon the sheep while in quarantine, and I recollect that the quarantine keeper, whose name is Laycock, told me about a month ago, on inquiry, that he had got something from either Mr. Garland or the young man who accompanied Mr. Garland, to put on for footrot or for any spot the sheep were rubbing. Laycock also said that he had asked Mr. Willows if he was to use it, and Mr. Willows said, "No." I also beg to explain that my statement that upon examination of the sheep I found nothing, I meant no scab, but I saw a greasy appearance on the spot where the grass-seed was, and I asked Garland what it was, and he replied that something had been put on to stop the rubbing; the sheep were dipped twice before leaving quarantine; under the Act they should have been dipped three times; Mr. Willows reported to me that they had been sufficiently dipped; I presumed from that, that they had been dipped as required by the Act; the sheep were more than ninety days in quarantine—they were more than five months; the 124 sheep arrived on 25th August, 1883, and were released from quarantine on 22nd January, 1884; the second lot, fifty, arrived on 22nd September, 1883, and left on 22nd January, 1884; the third lot, twenty-five, arrived on 23rd October, 1883, and left on 22nd January, 1884; there were also ten rams belonging to Mr. Mungar, which arrived on 26th July, 1883, and left on 22nd January, 1884; Mungar's rams were sometimes, along with others, consigned to Messrs. Bruncker & Wolfe, and were handed over by them to Mr. Garland; Mungar's ten rams were treated in the same way as others, and examined with a lot of Jones's on arrival; they came with Jones's on 26th July; I believe that 207 sheep were released from quarantine and went to Lomax's; two were killed on transit, and 205 were burned; the sheep were released from quarantine, on Mr. Willow's authority as inspector of stock, as being free from disease; the sheep were brought over from both Bradley's Head and Shark Island when the quarantine of ninety days was up, and were offered for sale at Tattersall's; as a matter of convenience for the owners, not being sold, they were taken to the quarantine at Summer Hill; it was necessary that they should be inspected by Mr. Willows before leaving Bradley's Head and Shark Island, and they were so inspected; I do not believe that Mr. Willows gave a certificate before the sheep left Bradley's Head and Shark Island; Mr. Willows said to me he left that to be given (as they did not leave Sydney) before they left Summer Hill; Mr. Willows should have given a certificate; I do not know why he did not do so, but I presume he intended to give the purchasers the certificate; it was his duty to have given a certificate on their leaving quarantine at Bradley's Head and Shark Island; legally they had no business to leave quarantine without the certificate; Wilkinson, Graves and Lavender took charge of the sheep when they arrived from quarantine, and took them to Tattersall's; I do not recollect Mr. Willows making any remark to me about the sheep before they left, and I took it as a matter of course that he had given them the certificate; I did not see the sheep when landed either at Tattersall's or Summer Hill Quarantine. Our own people had charge of the sheep at Summer Hill; I am aware that the sheep referred to as Mr. Garland's and Mr. Mungar's were removed to Mr. Lomax's, near Carcoar; Mr. Weaver granted the certificate from Summer Hill, which Mr. Willows should have granted from Bradley's Head and Shark Island before the sheep were removed from there; I had a letter in the end of June or beginning of July from a Mr. Bruce Lowe, at one time a sheep inspector, to the effect that he believed the ship sheep, namely, the sheep which were put on board for the use of the passengers, were scabby; he referred to the sheep which were on board the vessel in which he came from America, and in which Messrs. Hay and McFarland's sheep were brought over; his letter, which was a private one, I took as being a caution to the Department; Messrs. Hay and McFarland's sheep were dipped in the ordinary course; I do not think I received the letter before the sheep arrived, but the letter served its purpose, and Hay and McFarland's sheep were more carefully examined in consequence; I examined them myself; I think Mr. Willows was with me; I found nothing in the shape of scab or disease; they were dipped with Little's fluid; (Appendix B.) contains the directions for using Little's fluid; the fluid was used at the request of stock-owners, who considered that it did not damage the wool as tobacco and sulphur does; Little's fluid was used for Hay and McFarland's sheep at an extra strength by mistake, and killed some of them in consequence; there are no regulations as to what fluids are to be used, other than that of 22nd December, 1882, which refers to sheep arriving by sea from any of the Australian Colonies. (Appendix C.)—Under this regulation the same dip was used for the American sheep, and was considered sufficient; the fluid had been fully tested, and had killed tick, which is stronger than scab; this fluid is in general use in some parts of the world for scab.

Mr.

Mr. Wilkinson, of the firm of Wilkinson, Graves, and Lavender, called on 11th February to say that he had information from Carcoar that the American sheep were scabby. Mr. Willows was then sent to examine the sheep immediately on this statement being made to me by Mr. Wilkinson; he went and examined the sheep at Mr. Lomax's, and reported that, although he had been unable to find the insect, he knew of nothing that would cause the same symptoms on the sheep but scab; on this I went up to Carcoar myself; Mr. Willows' report is dated 13th February, 1884, and I went to Carcoar the same night. On seeing the sheep, which I found about 4 miles from Mr. Lomax's house, in a paddock (in which there was a wool-shed) in charge of a shepherd, I examined them after having had them put in a yard, and had two or three caught, and soon found the scab insect; I obtained some wool from the first sheep I caught, and with the aid of a glass found the scab insect; I noticed a good many of the sheep biting. From the first sheep caught I found several of the scab insects, which I showed to those with me; I showed them to Mr. West, sheep inspector for the district, Mr. Lomax, and the person in charge, whose name I do not know; I did not look at any other sheep, not considering it necessary; I never saw sheep biting keener—they laid down and bit themselves; the bare patch I saw was on the shoulder, about 2 inches by 2 in size; the sheep had lost very little wool; I do not mean that I noticed the majority of them biting, but I saw a good many doing so, and a good many of them keenly; I have not the slightest doubt, from the examination I made, but that the sheep were infected with the disease known as scab; I consider the biting and the peculiarity of it as one of the principal signs of the existence of scab; I have had a good deal of experience in scab, having been all through the scabby districts in this Colony when the scab was here from 1863 to 1867; my first experience was at Ulupna, in Victoria; I have never superintended personally the dressing of scabby sheep—my experience has been acquired chiefly in the course of my duties as Inspector of Sheep; I did not have the management of sheep stations in Victoria; I have detected scabby sheep on several occasions in the course of my duties; I was offered the appointment of Chief Inspector of Sheep at the time the scab was in existence, and it was under my supervision that the Colony was cleared; the Colony has been perfectly clear of scab since 1868, with the exception of sheep brought to the port in ships, but detected and destroyed.

Alex. Bruce.
27 May, 1884.

When at Carcoar I gave Mr. West instructions on the spot to issue the proper notices and put the advertisements in the newspapers placing portions of Mr. Lomax's run and the runs along or through which the sheep had travelled up to and including the Blayne Railway-station, in quarantine; I think there was some delay in carrying into effect my instructions; there ought to have been no delay, as the Act is plain; I gave him instructions to carry out the Act.

(The Commission adjourned until 11 a.m. on Wednesday, 28th instant.)

WEDNESDAY, 28 MAY, 1884.

The Commission met, pursuant to adjournment, at 11 a.m.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esq., M.P., PRESIDENT,
JOHN BASSETT CHRISTAIN.

Examination of Alexander Bruce continued:—

I am not able to speak decidedly on the question of the delay in issuing notices by Mr. West; I came back to Sydney after quarantining the run, to report to the Minister; I was thoroughly satisfied the sheep were infected with scab.

Alex. Bruce.
28 May, 1884.

I beg to inform the Commission that I have examined in the neighbourhood of Sydney about forty cases of active scab, and in the country even more; that I was engaged for months at a time examining sheep which had been dipped for scab; I beg to hand a pamphlet on scab and its cure (Appendix D), prepared by myself, also my report on the clearing of the Colony (Appendix E); after returning from Carcoar I reported to the Minister. I stated to the Minister that I had found an unmistakable case of scab; I recommended that the sheep should be twice dipped in tobacco and sulphur, and afterwards put into waggons and conveyed to the train, then put into cattle trucks and conveyed back to Sydney, to be taken to quarantine at Shark Island or Bradley's Head, there being no power under the Act to destroy them, section 54 of the Act of 1866 providing that imported sheep be only dipped and not destroyed.

In consequence of it being reported that scab had broken out amongst the American sheep at Maitland, I was instructed to proceed there to report on the matter, it being a new centre creating new danger; I proceeded to Maitland, inspected them, but found no scab; they were the sheep which were brought here belonging to Jones, in charge of Messrs. Brunner & Wolfe; there were eighty-four sheep originally, but some of them had lambed; these were some if not all of the sheep referred to in my previous evidence as "Jones's" sheep with which Mungar's sheep mixed; they were quarantined at the same time and place as Garland's sheep; I cannot speak definitely as to the sheds or yards the sheep occupied when in quarantine; I put them through a close examination and used a glass; there was no indication of scab; Mr. Wolfe was with me, also Mr. Burness, and afterwards Mr. Weaver was with me when I examined the sheep; it was on the report of Mr. Weaver that I went up to Maitland, and I asked him to point out the symptoms of scab; he was unable to point out any; the sheep have, since my visit, been dipped in tobacco and sulphur three times at Maitland; they have been examined by the acting inspector there, a man of large experience, and they have been kept under supervision since; they are still in quarantine at Maitland.

A report was made that scab had broken out at Gunnedah, but after careful inquiry it was found to be groundless; there was another report of a ram imported about twelve months previously being infected with scab, but on inquiry the report was found to be without foundation; I remember four American sheep being sent to the Southern District, to Messrs. Barrett and Wreford's station; they went direct from Bradley's shortly before the infected sheep at Carcoar were destroyed, but after they were released from quarantine; these four sheep went through the usual course of dipping, and were released on certificate; Mr. Willows appears to have mistaken the Act, as to the number of dippings required, in regard to American sheep. The sheep have been examined two or three times and have been dipped; they had no symptoms of scab; I did not consider it necessary to quarantine them, but I directed Mr. Wreford to dip them at once in tobacco and sulphur, and it is reported by the inspector that this was done.

Alex. Bruce. done. Tobacco and sulphur have been always used at the strength prescribed by the Regulations. The directors afterwards quarantined the station—I mean the sheep directors of Wentworth; and they also asked that a proclamation should be issued preventing sheep from going from this part of the Colony to theirs; their application was not complied with, the answer being that the only risk there could be would be from the American sheep, which could not leave quarantine for six months from last dressing. All previous shipments of American sheep have been systematically examined; Hay, Brown, and M'Farland's sheep have been examined fortnightly; some of the earlier lots have been examined—but I cannot say how often; they have all been found to be clean.

28 May, 1884.

While I was away at Maitland the Minister issued instructions for the sheep at Mr. Lomax's run, in Carcoar district, to be destroyed; there are some American sheep now in quarantine at Summer Hill, which were in indirect contact with Lomax's sheep; they never mixed with them, but may have been on the same ground.

It was reported by the Summer Hill quarantine keeper that one of the sheep showed symptoms of scab, but Mr. Willows and myself inspected this sheep and could find no scab; the sheep presented an appearance as if it were suffering from fever in the blood; they have been dipped three times and have been shorn; the American sheep were twice dipped in the wool and once after they had been shorn; the Maitland sheep and the Carcoar sheep were in the same quarantine station, but were never to my knowledge running together.

It was reported to me by Mr. Willows that the sheep which went to Maitland were dipped in the usual way.

Some six sheep were taken to Summer Hill from Bradley's Head undipped with others which had been dipped, but on the error being discovered they were immediately returned to Bradley's Head.

Any lambs amongst the American sheep which were there when the dipping was going on would have been dipped also; none of the rams which went to Maitland were put with the ewes that went to Carcoar, so far as I know; if they had been, it would be contrary to the regulations.

I can only account for the outbreak of scab in the sheep at Carcoar through their being infected before arrival in the Colony, they having brought the disease from America, although not apparent when examined; I believe that the disease originated in the 124 sheep of Garland's, which arrived on the 24th August, 1883, and went to Carcoar; I saw a good deal of the wool which was shorn from the sheep, and I gave instructions that all the wool should be put up in bales as prescribed by the Act.

I consider that the 124 sheep had been in quarantine sufficiently long before they were dipped to develop symptoms of scab, and I can only account for these symptoms not showing themselves through the sheep being spotted or rubbed with some application that would check or destroy the scab.

Mr. Garland requested that a friend of his whose name I do not know, who had experience in sheep, should have access to the sheep occasionally to see that they were properly cared for; Mr. Willows, thinking this person was too frequently about the quarantine, applied to me for regulations to be prepared which would lay down the rules by which access was to be had, and how often, to the sheep; in consequence of Mr. Willows' representation, regulations were prepared and are now in force.

Laycock, the quarantine keeper, recently informed me that the person referred to had left him some dressing to be put on the sheep for foot-rot and on any part of the body of the sheep where they were rubbing; he (Laycock) said that he asked Mr. Willows if he were to use it, and Mr. Willows replied, "No."

The dressing was given to Laycock when the sheep were in quarantine at Bradley's Head; I could not say if the regulations respecting the allowing of access to the sheep were in force at the time the stuff was given to Laycock; the impression on my mind was that Laycock meant me to understand that he did not use it; all this information from Laycock has come to me since the outburst of scab occurred.

I believe the Quarantine Regulations, with respect to imported stock, as they stood at the time the American sheep were introduced, if strictly carried out, would have been sufficient to prevent the recent outbreak of scab.

Having my attention called by Mr. Christian to Little's Fluid, I beg to add that I now have some doubts as to its efficacy as a cure for scab, and would in future use tobacco and sulphur.

(Adjourned at 1:30.)

(Resumed at 2:35 p.m.)

Alexander Bruce further examined on oath:—

Alex. Bruce. I would also recommend that foreign stock, that is, stock from any colony or country other than the Australian Colonies or New Zealand, be kept in strict quarantine, and that no one except the inspector and quarantine keeper and attendants be allowed access to them unless they are sick, until their term of quarantine has expired.

28 May, 1884.

New Zealand sheep should be specially treated by a twenty-one days quarantine and three dippings.

ALEX. BRUCE.

Taken before us, at Sydney, this twenty-eighth day of May, 1884,—

GEORGE CAMPBELL.

Anthony Willows, Inspector of Sheep and Government Veterinarian, being duly sworn, states:—

Anthony Willows. My name is Anthony Willows; I am a duly qualified veterinary surgeon of the London Royal Veterinary College; I succeeded Mr. Yeo as Metropolitan Inspector of Sheep, under the direction of the Chief Inspector of Sheep, Mr. Alexander Bruce; my duty is to examine all stock arriving in the Colony; I remember some American sheep arriving here; various lots have arrived here since I joined joined the Department, which was on 14th May, 1883; the first lot arrived on 9th July by the "City of New York"—in fact, there were two lots on that ship, but they were kept separate in quarantine. They came from San Francisco; one lot (90) belonged to Hay, Brown, & Winter; their respective men took charge of them after the quarantine had expired; there were 68 others, independent of the above lot, belonging to Messrs. McFarland; all the sheep were released on 9th October, 1883; they were released on my certificate, after having been the legal time in quarantine, and after having been twice dressed, the last time under my supervision; the necessary certificates were received by me with these sheep; I examined the sheep before they landed, and found them apparently free from disease. The next lot comprised 50, by the "Zealandia," on 26th July, 1883—40 belonging to Mr. Jones and 10 to Mr. Mungar; they were dipped both times under my supervision; they were only dipped twice; I have never had instructions to dip sheep three times; I thought the Regulations ruled the number of times they had to be dressed; I acted under instructions, and did not know it was my duty to have them dipped three times; there were regulations issued last year with respect to American sheep, but I am not aware that these regulations limit the dipping to twice; I am not aware that under the Act of 1866, 54th section, it is necessary to dip the sheep three times; I acted under instructions of the Chief Inspector as to the number of times the sheep were to be dipped, and the fluid to be used and mixed; the instructions were not in writing; I received these instructions soon after my appointment, about the month of May or June; I was directed to use Little's patent fluid, and to obtain it from Messrs Griffiths & Weaver; the dressing was administered twice, and was to be mixed according to the printed instructions, which says "one part of it was to be used with 80 to 100 of water"; the dressings were administered at intervals of ten days—sometimes longer elapsed. I am acquainted with the Diseases in Sheep Acts; I asked the Chief Inspector distinctly if the sheep were to be dipped three times, according to the Act, and he said, "No, twice was sufficient"; Little's fluid kills tick with certainty; I know nothing of Little's fluid, except that it kills tick, as I before remarked; but I am sure from the analysis of it, diluted with 100 parts of water, that it would not be effective as a cure for scab. I informed the Chief Inspector, whom I made acquainted with the exact analysis, that I considered it would be too weak so diluted—that I used it throughout the stud sales diluted at 80 parts to 1 without any ill effects, and I thought it best to continue using it at that strength. He made some remarks concerning some sheep which had apparently died from the dressing being too strong and said I must use it at 100 parts of water, at which strength it was afterwards always used. The fifty sheep which arrived by the "Zealandia" were released from the Summer Hill quarantine during my absence from Sydney; the next lot was 124 in all, belonging to Mr. Garland, which arrived by the "City of Sydney" from San Francisco, and were quarantined at Bradley's Head, on 25th August, 1883; I examined these sheep on their arrival; the Chief Inspector examined them also; we did not examine them in consultation, although we were on the ship together; I saw Mr. Bruce examine them; the sheep were not, in my opinion, affected with scab; they were very poor; they had been fed on wild oats, and the oats and grass-seed had insinuated themselves into their skins; we both agreed that the sheep were free from disease; the sheep were then placed in quarantine at Bradley's Head; they were dressed on 13th October; they had two dressings—the second was administered on 8th November; they were in quarantine more than six weeks before they were dipped; we had to delay the dipping until wool was clipped off the shoulders for samples and specimens; there was no fixed time for the dippings—persons interested to a great extent directed quarantine management; I often complained that the quarantine regulations were violated; I am aware that Mr. Garland made a representation that he thought the sheep were scabbed; the Chief Inspector of Sheep informed me of that fact on 11th October, and asked me to go with him to examine the sheep in consultation; we went on the afternoon of the same day, accompanied by Mr. Garland; the attendant of the sheep noticed marks; the attendant I refer to is a Mr. Townsend, a friend of Mr. Garland's, who appeared to take a great interest in the sheep, and lived close to the station, and this gentleman pointed out the sheep he wanted examined; on looking at the sheep we noticed marks made by rubbing; there was no pencilling of wool; on one place on the ribs the wool was dirty, and looked as if it had been rubbed with the foot; the sores were red, and about the size of a shilling; out of some of them we took enough matter to fill a teaspoon, and there were seeds in the sores which I released in every case; the sheep were not biting; without any hesitation we arrived at the conclusion that there was no scab—the irritation arose from local causes; I did not notice that any dressing had been applied to the sores; two days after these sheep received their first dipping in Little's fluid, diluted with 100 parts of soft water, each sheep being immersed for a minute and a quarter; the sheep were again dipped on November 8, twenty-six days after the last dipping; this was administered under my supervision; at the time that the sheep received their last dipping many were blind, in all seventy-two of them were blind, which I attributed to their being so long on dry food, and subjected to such a glare of sun; on an average I saw the sheep twice a week; I did not hear Mr. Garland make any remark when we were examining the sheep as to any stuff having been put on them; the sheep left Bradley's Head on 22nd November for Hawkes' (Tattersall's) to be sold by auction; I inspected them with care on the day they left; I did not catch any of them to examine; Mr. Garland and Mr. Wilkinson appeared to take charge of them on their arrival at Tattersall's; I did not give a permit or certificate at the time of their removal from Bradley's Head; the 124 sheep were removed when their full term of quarantine had expired, and ten of Mr. Mungar's rams were removed with them; their term of quarantine had also expired; also forty-nine other ewes were removed, whose term of quarantine had not expired; I was aware the sheep were being taken from Bradley's Head quarantine for the purpose of being sold; I knew Messrs. Wilkinson and Graves and Lavender were the agents; I did not consider it necessary to give them a certificate or permit, because part of the sheep had not served their quarantine and were treated as one lot, and I was never desired to issue such a certificate; I believe it was understood that the forty-nine sheep were to finish their quarantine at Summer Hill; the sheep were taken to Summer Hill in consequence of their not being sold; if any of the sheep, excepting the forty-nine ewes, had been sold there would have been no difficulty about any one obtaining a permit; I did not report to the Chief Inspector that I had allowed the sheep to leave quarantine without a certificate or permit; the Chief Inspector gave instructions that they were to be delivered to Mr. Garland; Mr. Garland went before me to the quarantine and waited for me, and then took charge of the sheep; Mr. Garland did not ask me for any certificate; the forty-nine ewes went to Summer Hill with the others on 25th November—182 in all went there. I saw the sheep last on 11th December; I do not know when they left; they continued at Summer Hill a long time; I saw them four or five times while at Summer Hill; I am not aware that anything irregular was done to them at Tattersall's, or that any of them were taken out; I saw them once while at Tattersall's; I went there to give the attendant (Laycock) instructions that they were not to be removed; it did not occur to me that a certificate should be given by me when the sheep were leaving Bradley's Head; I protested against the removal, and both I and the Chief Inspector wished that they should go back after the sale, under any circumstances, whether sold or unsold; I treated the sheep at Summer Hill for foot-rot and blindness; some of them had maggots; they improved very much at Summer Hill; I was not at Summer Hill when the sheep were removed; I was in Tasmania at that time. I believe they got a permit. I am aware that they were taken to Mr. Lomax's run at Carcoar.

Twenty-five ewes arrived by the "City of New York" from San Francisco and were placed in quarantine at Shark Island on 23rd October, 1883; these sheep had no certificate from San Francisco; a special declaration was made under the direction of the Chief Inspector, and upon that declaration the sheep were landed.

These ewes were once dipped under my supervision on 12th December; one of the 124 lots (a ram) was removed from Bradley's Head to Shark Island on 23rd November, to serve the twenty-five ewes of Mr. Garland's there in quarantine, and with these twenty-five ewes the ram in question was dipped on 12th December; the sheep were only dipped once under my supervision; the twenty-five ewes, I believe, went with the 124 to Carcoar; Mr. Weaver acted for me while away at Tasmania.

Besides the sheep referred to in my previous evidence, twenty-nine rams arrived by sailing barque "J. Pendleton" from San Francisco, and were placed in quarantine on 13th September; these sheep belonged to Mr. Jones; they were dipped the first time on 16th October under my supervision, and second time on 12th December with the twenty-five ewes, under my supervision, and were at Shark Island where I last saw them.

Another lot of seventy-two sheep, the property of Mr. Roberts, came from San Francisco by the "City of New York" and were placed in quarantine on the 22nd October; they were removed from Shark Island to Bradley's Head on 29th November, and when I last saw them, some had been shorn, but none had been dipped; I last saw them on 18th December.

With the exception of four sent to Messrs. Barrett and Wreford, the bulk of these sheep are now at Summer Hill; they have all been dipped since February in tobacco and sulphur, three times to my knowledge, perhaps more, by direction of the Chief Inspector.

I am aware that Mr. Garland's sheep went to Mr. Lomax's; I heard this after my return from Tasmania; Mr. Wilkinson called at the Chief Inspector's Office on 11th February; I was present during the latter part of the interview with Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Bruce having sent for me; Mr. Wilkinson said that Mr. Lomax thought the sheep were scabby, but that he (Mr. Lomax) had been unable to find the insect; Mr. Lomax had sent Mr. Wilkinson some of the wool down; Mr. Bruce and myself examined the wool with a powerful glass, but could not come to any definite conclusion as to the cause of the disease Mr. Lomax complained of; Mr. Bruce directed me to at once proceed to Carcoar; I started the same evening, and reached Carcoar the next morning; I was met by Mr. West, inspector of stock for the district, who accompanied me that morning to Mr. Lomax's residence at Errowangbang; we afterwards went to the paddock in which the American sheep were depastured, accompanied by Mr. Lomax, and found many of the sheep continuously rubbing themselves; the sheep had sought the shelter of a creek, and were constantly rubbing themselves against the trees; they were also biting themselves, and rubbing themselves very much with their hind legs; I asked that they should be taken to Mr. Lomax's woolshed, which was done; here we watched them for a little time, and caught those sheep which showed indications of skin disease, examined them, found their wool moist in patches of perhaps the size of a penny; the skin was moist and much darkened in colour where infected; we examined six or seven—the general appearances were similar; in two cases I distinctly found the insect alive, but was unable to show it to the gentlemen with me to their satisfaction or mine either; Mr. Lomax was not sure whether the movements were natural, or whether it was the wind; Mr. West said, "That looks like the chap," but he was not sure; I have not had much experience of scab in Australia, but had to do with three cases in England; my experience of scab must be regarded as limited; I had no Australian experience previous to this; I think that my previous experience would admit of my being able to detect the existence of scab independent of influencing statements.

I did not report in writing that I had found the insect, but I told Mr. Bruce that I had done so; although I saw the insect myself I could not demonstrate its presence to those with me, and therefore did not feel justified in declaring the sheep scabby, and I made a report accordingly to the Chief Inspector of Sheep; I placed the sheep in the woolshed in strict quarantine, and asked Mr. West to see that these conditions were carried out; I returned to Sydney the same night; Mr. Bruce left for Carcoar the same evening that I made my report, and returned on the Friday following; I saw Mr. Bruce just after 9 o'clock; he remarked to me that he had found the insect, or words to that effect, and that he had no doubt but that scab existed, or implied as much; I did not examine the sheep after that; on the following Monday evening, the 18th February, I went up for the purpose of dipping the sheep; I stayed at Blayney on my way up, succeeded in discovering the skin of one of the American sheep that had died en route, and had it burned in my presence; obtained exact particulars as to the route the sheep had travelled from the railway station, which part of the Colony passed over, and how long they had been permitted to graze there; Mr. West was with me; I placed the station yards in quarantine—I mean the railway station-yards; I gave the station-master written instructions not to truck any skins from there at all; I placed the four lots of butchers' sheep, which were in the habit of grazing about the common, in quarantine, and made preliminary arrangements for their early slaughter; I then went to Carcoar in the afternoon, and on arrival there I found a telegram awaiting me from the Minister directing me to have the sheep immediately destroyed, woolsheds and paddocks burned, according to Mr. Lomax's directions, as he (Mr. Lomax) would be up in the morning; the wool-press was removed out for disinfection, but was not burned; everything else, of which I have a list, was burned; this was all done by noon on the 20th February; part of the fences were not burned, but were blackened by the fire; the following day a meeting of the Board of Sheep Directors and Stockowners Stockowners generally was convened and held at the Court-house, and they advised that the whole of the country, about 20 miles square, should be quarantined; the Chief Inspector was met by Mr. West and myself at Blayney on the following Friday, and consented to the quarantine as desired; after this Mr. Lomax and Mr. Fagan were directed to dip their sheep in tobacco and sulphur at a temperature of 110°. Upon one occasion a few of Mr. Lomax's rams were mixed with the sheep after they were known to be scabby, while at the watering-place; they were together about twenty minutes; in consequence of this I hastened the dipping of the rams; they were dipped at Swallows Creek. The dipping of Mr. Lomax's sheep was carried out by Mr. Dawson, in the presence of Inspectors Cleeve and West. Mr. Fagan's sheep were dipped in my presence; there appeared to be nothing wrong with them; they travelled by one of the trucks that brought the infected sheep to Blayney; I never heard that any of the American rams were placed with any of the station ewes, and I have every reason to believe that they were not so used.

There was a communication received to the effect that the first lot of sheep, Hay, Brown, and Winters, were scabby; in consequence of this they were dipped immediately they were received in quarantine; they were very weak, and the fluid killed some of them.

The Commission met, pursuant to adjournment, at 11 o'clock.

All I know with respect to the communication referred to in the last part of my evidence is that I was verbally informed by the Chief Inspector of Sheep that a communication had been received by him that Hay, Brown, and Winter's sheep were likely to be contaminated by some other sheep that were on board the same vessel and which were scabby; I believe they were dipped within three days after being placed in quarantine.

Anthony Willows.
30 May, 1884.

By pencilling, stated in my former evidence, I mean the protrusion of a comparatively small portion of wool from beyond the surrounding fleece.

On February 8th, the day after my return from Tasmania, I went to Summer Hill Quarantine, and was then ignorant of any special arrangements being made with reference to any sheep which might be there, and was surprised at being informed by the keeper specially engaged to take charge of this station, that the sheep then within the quarantine were not in any way under his supervision or management, and in fact he had no charge of them: a man named Crisp in the employ of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves and Lavender, being placed there, had sole charge of these sheep in every respect; by these sheep I refer to Roberts's sheep, comprising sixty-eight in all of the original lot brought into quarantine at Shark Island on 22nd October, 1883, also fifteen young lambs; I looked at the sheep, and I specially remarked seven rams shut up in the shed alone; these rams had full fleeces, which looked brighter in colour than they would be likely to look had they been dipped; I made inquiry as to whether any of the sheep had or had not been dipped, and I was given to understand, to the best of the knowledge of the men in charge, that the sheep which had been shorn had been dipped, but that the seven unshorn rams had not been dipped or dressed in any way; I remarked to Messrs. Wilkinson & Co's. man that I considered this a most extraordinary evasion of quarantine laws, which I did not think that any private consideration would justify; the following day I reported verbally to Mr. Bruce what I had found; I expressed disapproval of the whole arrangements, making over the quarantine ground to other people; the Chief Inspector considered it was the right course to adopt—he said so; he further said he would not sanction the sheep being at Summer Hill under any other conditions, for by this arrangement the Government would not be responsible for any accidental deaths that might occur from dogs getting in, &c.; on the following Monday I was asked to meet Mr. Wilkinson in the Chief Inspector's Office, the Chief Inspector being also present; my object in going there was to examine some wool which was lying on the table, taken from the scabby sheep at Carcoar; after this matter was attended to, Mr. Wilkinson asked me if I had said to his man at Summer Hill that I should have tried to have prevented the sheep being placed at Summer Hill under the conditions in which I found them; I said that I considered it a most extraordinary proceeding; what I referred to was the seven rams being taken to Summer Hill without having been either shorn or dipped, and the keeper at Summer Hill not being allowed to have any charge of the station or the sheep which it contained; Mr. Bruce said "Hush! you ought not to interfere at all about it; whenever you have any complaint to make, you ought only to make it in writing"; Mr. Wilkinson got up and said something to the following effect—"If you think you are going to over-rule me, you make a great mistake"; he was apparently much annoyed, and left the room; I remarked that I did not desire to do anything of the sort.

A few hours afterwards Mr. Bruce sent for me, and ordered me to have the seven rams sent back to Bradley's Head; this was done I think the next day; with the exception of these seven rams, which still remain at Bradley's Head, and have been three times dipped in tobacco and sulphur, and shorn, the other sheep, part of the sixty-eight, still remain at Summer Hill, under the previous arrangements.

I cannot say if the seven rams were taken to Summer Hill before Mr. Garland's sheep were taken to Mr. Lomax's, at Carcoar; four of the original lot of Mr. Roberts were sent to Messrs. Barrett & Wreford, Moorara Station, in the Wentworth District.

The sheep remaining at Summer Hill, with the exception of one ewe, have been dipped three times; the one ewe broke her leg, and has only been dipped twice.

The three last lots of American sheep which have arrived have been placed respectively at Bradley's Head and Shark Island, and still remain there.

When I left for Tasmania, the Summer Hill quarantine and all the sheep in it were under the entire management of the keeper, who had an assistant to help him, and no person was allowed access to the sheep without a written permit.

My complaints as to quarantine arrangements referred to in my previous evidence were generally verbally, sometimes in writing; my first letter on the subject is dated 25 September, 1883. On a letter from Mr. Garland, applying for leave to allow his agents to have continuous access with buyers to the sheep in quarantine, I wrote the minute—the letter being referred to me—objecting to such a course, and stated "that I thought it very unwise to permit the quarantine stations (which ought to be solely maintained for the protection of the whole Colony from such diseases as they may be contaminated with) to be utilized by individual speculative parties, at the risk of the said Colony."
and

After my objection to Mr. Garland's application being entertained, Regulations were framed and issued on 16th November, 1883, as to the admission of the public to the quarantines; on the 22nd October the Minister gave instructions "that no persons except the officials are to be allowed to go into the quarantine stations to inspect any sheep until half the period of the quarantine has elapsed, and then only upon a written order, and shall then only be allowed to see the sheep which have done half the period of quarantine."

(Adjourned at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock.)

Resumed at 2:30 p.m.

The instructions of the Minister before referred to were observed, except in one case, when Mr. Roberts went to Shark Island (application for permission to see the sheep having been refused), with the person who desired to see the sheep.

Shortly after this the Regulations of 16th November, 1883, were published in the Government Gazette, and so far as I am aware these Regulations have been observed.

As to the sheep now at Maitland, 25 ewes and 15 rams, and some lambs (Jones' sheep) were in quarantine at Summer Hill when I last saw them; the custom is to dip the young lambs as well as the sheep; on 11th December I saw all the sheep at Summer Hill, and 29 rams also belonging to Jones' lot at Shark Island, a few days later; I am sure that the sheep which went to Maitland were in the same quarantine at the same time as those which went to Carcoar; the 40 sheep went on November 7th to Summer Hill, and 182 sheep of Mr. Garland's went there on November 25th, and so were side by side and attended to by the same man for 16 days to my knowledge.

I have no recollection or knowledge of Laycock, the quarantine keeper at Bradley's Head, ever having informed me that Townsend (Mr. Garland's man) had given him stuff to put on the sheep as dressing, and ever having asked my opinion as to the desirability of using it; from remarks made to me by the Chief Inspector I questioned Laycock about it recently, and he replied that some green vitriol had been given him to apply to the sheep, and he stated that he had asked me at the time if it were to be applied, and I replied "No." He says he has never used it.

I am not aware of any of the rams being put with the ewes at any time, excepting two of Mr. Garland's rams, which were alternately placed with his ewes at Bradley's Head station, and one ram which was removed from Bradley's Head to Shark Island, and left with his twenty-five ewes there.

The Commission met, pursuant to adjournment.

Richard Weaver, Rabbit Inspector, being duly sworn, states:—

Richard
Weaver.
2 June, 1884.

My name is Richard Weaver; I am an inspector under the Rabbit Act; I have held that appointment since 25th May, 1883; I have been employed under the Sheep Act, during the absence of Mr. Willows, as acting inspector of sheep; Mr. Willows was absent, I think, about three months, and during that time I did his duty; some American sheep were brought under my notice while I was acting; they were at Summer Hill; Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender were the agents; I did not know the owner; there were 207 sheep in number, consisting of 82 ewes and 125 rams; they were in quarantine at Summer Hill, for the accommodation of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender, and under charge of their man; the quarantine keeper had nothing whatever to do with them; the keeper made no complaint about the matter to me; I went to inspect the sheep, under direction of Mr. Bruce; I ordered the fodder for the sheep, and frequently went to see it delivered; I think I had instructions to examine the sheep occasionally; on one occasion I said to Mr. Bruce that the sheep were scratching; I do not recollect upon what date I said this; I said I did not think there was anything the matter with them in the shape of scab; I have seen scab in sheep, and some years ago had acquaintance with it in my own sheep; I think I could tell scab if I saw it; Mr. Bruce said, "You had better examine the sheep again, and see me again"; I examined them four or five days afterwards, and reported that I was of the same opinion as at first, that the sheep were suffering from over-heating of the blood; they were still scratching a little, but not nearly so much as when I first saw them; Mr. Pottie was at the quarantine when I examined the sheep the last-mentioned time; he had come out to examine a ram which was sick; he examined the sheep, and agreed with me that they were suffering from over-heating of the blood; the quarantine keeper reported to me that the sheep were scratching a little—that was the principal cause of my going out; there were other sheep in quarantine at the time; Brunker and Wolfe were the agents; I think there were 44; that comprised the whole number in quarantine at that time; the sheep were not dipped under my superintendance, and as far as I know, not dipped at all there. I remember the 207 sheep being removed from quarantine—it was on the 22nd January, 1884; I was told by Mr. Bruce to deliver the sheep to the order of Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender; I gave a certificate under the terms of the Act to the effect that they were clean; the certificate was in the form of Schedule M. The 44 sheep went to Maitland; they were released whilst I was acting inspector; inspector; I gave a similar certificate as in the case of the 207 sheep; three or four rams of the 207 lot were mixed with the sheep that went to Maitland; they were weakly rams and were getting knocked about by the others, so they were put with the Maitland lot; they were mixed two or three weeks; they were not put with the Maitland ewes but with the rams, of which there were 15; the ewes numbered 25, and there were 4 lambs. I believe I gave the wrong certificate in each case, as the sheep (both lots) were passed into the Summer Hill Quarantine as clean—I should only have given the "Permit to travel." I never saw the 207 lot after they left the quarantine; I heard they had gone to Carcoar, and I also heard that they belonged to Mr. Garland; my whole acquaintance with these sheep is confined to the time they were in the Summer Hill Quarantine, and I know nothing of what happened to them afterwards; on Mr. Willows' return from Tasmania he resumed his duties as Inspector.

Richard
Weaver.
2 June, 1884.

I do not remember any one saying to me that if the sheep went inland "there would be a big row about it."

The appearance of the sheep did not to the best of my belief approach scab in any way; there was but a slight irritation, and the wool would not pluck; they were simply scratching themselves with their feet, and did not rub; the sheep did not bite either.

I remember bringing 7 rams with 75 other sheep from Bradley's Head on 31st January; there were 30 ewes, 14 lambs, and 38 rams; I was told they were the property of Mr. Roberts; they came into Summer Hill Quarantine nine days after the 207 lot were removed to Carcoar.

The Maitland sheep left on the 29th January, and three days before the rams referred to reached Summer Hill. All the sheep had been shorn, with the exception of the 7 rams which had full fleeces on, but I could not say whether the 7 rams had been dipped or not; they had every appearance that they had been dipped, but I was afterwards told they had not; Wilkinson's man asked that they should be kept separate at Summer Hill, and I had them kept separate accordingly; I took the 7 rams back to Bradley's Head on 12th February; I was told to do so by Mr. Willows; he said they ought not to have been removed, as Roberts's agent had made some arrangement to have them left there; I was not aware of this; I was told to remove them by Mr. Bruce, who said "Remove Roberts's lot," and I took that as meaning the whole lot; I used to go to the Quarantine Stations at Bradley's Head and Shark Island during Mr. Willows' absence occasionally, to take forage, &c., but not particularly to inspect the sheep, and I was not aware that any dipping of the sheep took place; I know nothing of what was done with the 7 rams after I took them back.

The quarantine keeper (Morris) at Summer Hill told me that some stuff had been left with him by Mr. Willows to be used on the 207 sheep; I do not know for what purpose, but I could see where it had been applied, by the discolouration of the wool; I should call this "spotting the sheep"; I did not see the stuff.

The quarantine keeper told me that he had spotted the sheep with the stuff; the quarantine keeper said to me "that he did not think it was scab."

I was sent to Maitland after the sheep belonging to Bruncker and Wolfe were sent there, and after the Carcoar sheep had been destroyed for scab, or about the same time; I think I went to Maitland about the 21st or 22nd February; I received my instructions from Mr. Bruce to inspect the sheep.

I thought there were two lambs scabbed; in consequence of my reporting this Mr. Bruce came up; he did not think it was scab; we examined the sheep together; the spots on the lambs were on the back, where they could not get at them with their feet, but they were rubbing; I did not examine them with a glass—I am not aware that Mr. Bruce did either; I am still of opinion that what I saw was scab.

Nothing was done with the sheep while I was there, but I believe they were dipped afterwards.

To the best of my belief the lambs in question were not dipped while in quarantine; three or four of them were lambled at Summer Hill.

I could see that the 207 lot had been dipped, but the lot that went to Maitland did not appear to me to have been dipped.

I consider tobacco and sulphur the very best specific for dressing scabby sheep; I have had a lot of experience, and it is the only thing I have never known to fail.

John Pottie, V.S., being duly sworn states:—

My name is John Pottie; I am a veterinary surgeon, and have practised in Sydney for twenty years; I remember being at the Summer Hill Quarantine when Mr. Weaver was there inspecting some sheep; I went on behalf of the agents, Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, and Lavender, to examine a sick ram; I believe Mr. Weaver brought me the message; the sheep I went to inspect was suffering from inflammation of the liver; it was almost dead when I saw it, and died a few hours afterwards; it was not suffering from any skin disease; I was there before Mr. Weaver arrived; one of the attendants said to me, "There is something the matter with those sheep, Mr. Pottie; would you like to see one or two of them?" I said I had no objection at all; so he caught one and showed me a patch on the hip, where the growth of wool was deficient; I looked at it, found it had been recently dressed with some preparation, and I said, "I cannot examine this, because it is all wet from the recent dressing; catch me another that has not been spotted"; so he caught another, and I found that on this one the skin along the bare part and along the belly was a deep purple red, and on examining up towards the back the redness extended half way up and died away; I had a close look at this; I scraped off the yolk, but I could not see any evidence of scab; I am acquainted with the disease known as "scab in sheep"; I have often decided many difficult cases for the Department.

We caught another sheep, similar conditions were observed, and similar appearances, and in addition there was a pustule, which I took for sheep-pox pustule; I burst it and examined its contents, but could not observe anything living; I had no glass, but I was looking for scab insect; I concluded that the inflammation was sheep erisipelas or sheep scarlatina.

John Pottie.
2 June, 1884.

I questioned the men after this, and they told me "the sheep had several skin diseases about them, that Mr. Willows knew of it, and that they were under his treatment"; I said, "Well perhaps this is not right for me to interfere in this matter—I'll let the sheep alone"; I waited for about five minutes, and Mr. Weaver arrived; I said, "I have been intruding here a little, and have been looking at the sheep; I said, "Well, I suppose you'll have them made right before you leave"; Mr. Weaver told me that the sheep were dressed every day on the patches; he said, "They are not under my charge—they have been under Mr. Willows' charge"; he said, "What do you recommend?" I replied, "Well, I would stop this hard feeding for one thing, and give them a thorough change of feed, and I'll report the condition of things such as I have seen them, and if professional examination is desired I am willing to attend their cure."

Mr. Weaver might have put the question to me as to whether I considered the sheep were scabbed, in a casual way; if such a question were put, my answer would be—"The sheep being newly dressed, I am not in a position to say."

I had an impression that the patch I saw on the first sheep I examined might have been cured scab, although I have seen similar conditions on the hip among imported sheep which had been forced to lay in dirty pens on board ship.

My son, at my instance, sent a report to Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender; my instructions to him were to write with regard to the sick sheep and the condition of the other sheep.

Had I had any suspicion of scab, or thought that it existed there, I should have at once declared it; so far as my examination went I did not see any scab—not even a scab sore or pustule; I used the hand tests for scab on the sheep I examined.

There are no other insects that I am aware of that closely resemble the scab insect; the scab insect, as seen with the eye, looks like a small glistening white mite, with a dark end; if this be taken and placed in a proper sun-light, some of the legs may be seen; put under the microscope it has an oblong body, with eight legs, hair processes attached to each of the legs, short round head, two suckers and two feelers; the head of the male is rounder than that of the female, and the two inner hind-legs seem less developed than that of the female.

The dead insect looks like a little dark ball, with what appears to be the remnant of legs.

The only other insect likely to be confounded with scab insect is the sheep-lice, which raises no pustule, is much larger, and can be seen easily with the eye; it does not burrow, but only inhabits the wool.

There is not the same amount of irritation caused by sheep-lice as in the case of scab.

I never saw the sheep in question again; Mr. Weaver called at my office some time after, and asked me if I would be surprised to hear the sheep that I saw had scab; I replied—"Well, the sheep I saw had no scab, Mr. Weaver"; I said something to the effect "that I did not think it possible for the sheep to pass through the quarantine and still have scab."

The sheep that I saw I understood to be Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, and Lavender's.

The Commission met pursuant to adjournment.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esq., M.P., PRESIDENT,
JOHN BASSETT CHRISTAIN, Esq., | SAMUEL M'CAUGHEY, Esq.

George Albert Cleeve, Inspector of Sheep, being duly sworn, states:—

G. A. Cleeve.
3 June, 1884

My name is George Albert Cleeve; I am an inspector of sheep under the Chief Inspector of Sheep; I have held that appointment seventeen years next February; my duties have been confined to the Windsor and Penrith Police Districts, and for the last three years to the Camden and Picton Districts also; I remember some American sheep which were sent to Maitland, and I first saw them there; I was sent to Maitland to inspect and dip the sheep; I received my instructions from Mr. Bruce; there were forty-four rams, twenty-five ewes, and eleven lambs, total eighty; they were in charge of Mr. Wolfe, and at his residence; I examined the sheep—I examined them for scab; I found no indication whatever of the existence of scab; I first examined the sheep promiscuously in the pen, and as every sheep and lamb came out to be dipped I examined each one separately; I examined them on the 6th and dipped them on the 7th.

Mr. Weaver was not present—I never saw him at Maitland; the local inspector (Mr. Burness) was with me at the dipping; to my knowledge the sheep were only dipped once; I dipped the sheep in tobacco and sulphur; I made the dip extra strong—it was 50 per cent. stronger than the regulations required; I kept them in the dip two minutes; the liquor was poured over the rams' heads with a pint pot, and they were afterwards dipped under twice; the sheep were thoroughly dipped; some of the sheep were shorn, some were unshorn; the sheep were excessively dirty and greasy looking, very much more than I have ever noticed in our colonial sheep; on opening the fleece the wool looked bright—the skin looked pink and clean; I am speaking of the rams more particularly; it struck me on opening the fleece that the wool looked particularly bright and clean; I did not discern any stain as if the sheep had been dipped; the instructions I received were to dip the sheep at Maitland, but I was not asked to examine them.

A lamb was pointed out to me as being the one which Mr. Weaver had said was scabby; I examined and watched it, but I could find no spot or indication of scab; I examined it most particularly and carefully; I watched the sheep for an hour and a half or so, and could see no signs; I believe I can readily detect scab—I have had experience with it; I have seen the scab insect, and could discover it if it existed.

I think it was about a week or ten days after Mr. Bruce and Mr. Weaver had seen the sheep that I was sent to dip them. It

It did not strike me that any of the sheep, or lambs either, had stained fleeces, as having been G. A. Cleeve. dipped; I did not make any remark to any one.

On the 29th February I was directed by the Chief Inspector to proceed to Carcoar; I was instructed to dip some sheep of Mrs. Mutton's and Mrs. Flynn's; Mrs. Flynn's sheep had crossed the track of the American sheep which went to Carcoar, and amongst which scab had broken out on Mr. Lomax's station of Errowangbang; on the 1st and 2nd March I dipped 719 wethers belonging to Mrs. Mutton, and two Southdown sheep the property of Mr. Price, of Blayney.

3 June, 1884.

There were 593 sheep belonging to Mrs. Flynn, and with these I dipped eight pet sheep, the property of Mr. M'Intyre, of Brown's Creek.

After seeing these sheep dipped I returned to my own district; and, on the 11th March, I received special instructions from the Chief Inspector to take charge of the Carcoar district as inspector, having under me the regular inspector, Mr. West, and Mr. Dawson, who was engaged to superintend the dipping of sheep.

Upon my arrival I found the dipping of Mr. Lomax's sheep at Errowangbang being proceeded with, under the superintendence of Mr. Dawson—that was the first dipping of Mr. Lomax's sheep. Every exertion was made to collect Mr. Lomax's sheep; some of the country is very rough, and some sheep might have been left behind; in such country I consider it impossible to collect all the sheep.

During the interval of dipping Mr. Lomax's sheep, we mustered all the little lots, and had them dipped—I mean the little lots belonging to other people whose land abutted on Mr. Lomax's; the first thing I did was to go round and ascertain whose sheep should be dipped as having been near Mr. Lomax's.

I know that some of Mr. Lomax's sheep were only dipped once, under instructions from the Chief Inspector; the reason was that these sheep were situated far away from the seat of the infection, and had never crossed the route of the American sheep. The total number of Mr. Lomax's sheep dipped once was 30,306; of this number 15,682 were dipped twice, and 771 (rams) were dipped three times; all the rams were dipped three times in tobacco and sulphur. I found Mr. Dawson was using a race-dip, and that the stuff was made of an extra strength; this was in consequence of the sheep swimming through the race (which was 70 feet in length), in about 50 seconds. If I had known the sheep to be scabby, I would have given them double the time, but I thought the shortness of the time was somewhat rectified by the extra strength of the fluid and the temperature it was kept at all the time; the temperature was at an average of 110°.

In consequence of the wire fences not being sheep-proof, some of the dipped sheep became mixed with the undipped, or vice versa, and some odd sheep belonging to the adjoining owners became mixed with Mr. Lomax's. Some of Mr. Rothery's sheep which mixed with Mr. Lomax's undipped sheep were dipped with them, and about 200 of Mr. Rothery's sheep which had mixed with Mr. Lomax's dipped sheep were handed back without being dipped.

The dip is erected on Flyer's Creek, situated about 2 miles from the woolshed where the scabby sheep were killed.

All the sheep that crossed the route of the scabby sheep were dipped twice.

(Adjourned at 1 o'clock.)

(Resumed at 2:30 p.m.)

All the sheep on the holdings adjoining Mr. Lomax's have been dipped, with the exception of those belonging to Mr. Henry and Mr. Rothery, and about one-third of Mr. Cain's sheep, which were mixed with Mr. Rothery's; Mr. Henry uses a portion of Mr. Rothery's land for his sheep, and this portion adjoins Mr. Lomax's; Mr. Rothery's run adjoins that of Mr. Lomax's for a considerable distance.

At the "Hell Hole" paddock Mr. Rothery's sheep can slide down the mountain into Mr. Lomax's land, but Mr. Lomax's sheep cannot get up to Mr. Rothery's; there are facilities for the sheep getting mixed.

I strongly recommended that Mr. Rothery's sheep should be dipped, on the grounds of their being in contact with Mr. Lomax's, and I knew they had intermixed from the fact that the fences were not sufficient to prevent them from doing so, and that some sheep had been found amongst Mr. Lomax's sheep that had been dipped.

I recommended that the sheep should be dipped, and Mr. Rothery came down to Sydney and saw the Minister, who decided that the matter of the dipping should be referred to the Board; it was from the Chief Inspector that I heard that Mr. Rothery had made the objection; it was referred to the Board of Sheep Directors at Carcoar; I attended the meeting of the Board, having given Mr. Rothery notice to attend; I made representations to the Board that Mr. Rothery's sheep should be dipped; Mr. Rothery was present with his solicitor. I represented that Mr. Rothery's sheep had been found with Mr. Lomax's, and that I therefore considered the sheep ought to be dipped; Mr. Rothery gave the Latin interpretation of the word "contact" incorrectly, and argued that his sheep and those of Mr. Lomax had not touched together; the Board decided that as sufficient evidence had not been produced by me that there was contact, the sheep should not be dipped; the names of the gentlemen comprising the Board are—Mr. Stimpson (Chairman), Mr. Sloan, Mr. Hall, Mr. Glasson, and Mr. Alford; Mr. Hall was in favour of Mr. Rothery's sheep being dipped; the others were against it; Mr. Sloan and Mr. Glasson, in conversation afterwards, said that if Mr. Rothery's sheep were dipped there was no knowing where it would stop, as Mr. Rothery's sheep were all over the country; I told them privately, after the meeting, that if any further outbreak of scab took place the responsibility would rest on their shoulders; the meeting took place on the 31st March; on May 6th a meeting of the Board was held to consider the advisability of dipping Mr. Henry's sheep, which I had recommended also should be dipped; in this case I had clearly proved that the sheep belonging to Mr. Henry had intermixed with Mr. Lomax's; the Board admitted that Mr. Henry's sheep were infected within the meaning of the Act, but as it was some four months since the destruction of the American sheep, and no further outbreak had shown itself, they considered there was no necessity to dip the sheep. These sheep have never been dipped since to my knowledge.

I left the district on the 27th May; at this time all the sheep had been dipped which have been referred to by me.

I hand in a list of all the sheep dipped under Mr. Willows' supervision in the first place and mine afterwards (Appendix F.)

At

G. A. Cleeve. At the time of my leaving, there was no indication of scab in the district; during the latter part of my stay, about eight days, I was constantly among Mr. Lomax's sheep, and devoted myself to their close inspection.
3 June, 1884.

When going through the run I caught several sheep that presented the appearance of not having been dipped, but on examining them, found they had been dipped. I also examined all the dead sheep, and found they had been dipped.

I am aware that Mr. Lomax gave orders that any of the sheep which could not travel into the dip were to have their throats cut. Mr. Lomax gave me all the assistance in his power, and ordered that a clean muster should be made, and every sheep found, dipped.

All the owners of sheep who I considered should have their sheep dipped were served with the notice required by the Act to dip, and although some of them made objection, they all complied ultimately, with the exception of Messrs. Henry, Rothery, and Cain.

Cain's sheep were afterwards seized and dipped.

WEDNESDAY, 4 JUNE, 1884.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esq., M.P., PRESIDENT,
JOHN BASSETT CHRISTIAN, Esq., | SAMUEL M'CAUGHEY, Esq.

The Commission met pursuant to adjournment.

John Connell Laycock, quarantine keeper, Bradley's Head, being duly sworn, states:—

J. C. Laycock. My name is John Connell Laycock; I am quarantine keeper at Bradley's Head; I have to look after any stock that may be placed in quarantine and to keep the place in thorough repair; I am responsible for whatever occurs on the Quarantine Station; I have been at Bradley's Head, and held the same appointment for nearly six years; I remember some American sheep being landed there—the first American sheep that were placed under my charge were thirteen; I do not know who owned them, and I do not know what date they arrived; I remember Mr. Garland's sheep being landed—they were the next lot; there were 116 rams and eight ewes; I was never instructed to keep any account or record of the sheep placed under my charge; I cannot say when they came under my charge.
4 June, 1884.

The sheep were once dipped to my knowledge under the supervision of Mr. Church; I do not recollect how long it was after they came into the quarantine, but it was some considerable time after; I have heard Mr. Church is a rabbit inspector; I assist at the dipping of the sheep whenever any dipping takes place; before the recent outbreak of scab I was always at the quarantine at Bradley's Head; I do not know if the sheep could have been dipped in my absence; a good many people came to see the sheep, but they always had an order—no one saw them without an order; plenty of people came without orders, but I never allowed them to see the sheep; Mr. Garland used to come without an order; a Mr. Townsend used to come very frequently, sometimes with Mr. Garland and sometimes without him; Mr. Townsend stayed a week at the quarantine; he said he liked to be with the sheep, and I think he got permission from the office.

I never saw Mr. Townsend touching or meddling with the sheep, as I never would allow him to do so; he at one time asked me if I would allow him to dress their feet—I told him I would not; I only noticed on one sheep a spot which was caused by grass-seed; Mr. Bruce and Mr. Williams came on one occasion to inspect the sheep; they came to sell the sheep which was rubbing with the irritation of the grass-seed; some time before this I said to Mr. Willows that I thought the grass-seed was getting into the wool, and they were scratching in consequence.

The only sheep which we noticed with a spot on was a ram; I do not think the sheep were shorn before being dipped.

I was present when Mr. Bruce and Mr. Willows examined the sheep; I saw Mr. Willows cut the grass-seed out of the sheep; a spot like an abscess had formed where the grass-seed was cut out, and there was some discharge; most of the sheep were examined, but this was the only one upon which we noticed any spot.

I dressed the sheep sometimes with a weak solution of "Little's Fluid," to keep the flies away; I trimmed their feet, which had overgrown.

Mr. Townsend gave me some bluestone at one time, and a small drop of turps to use on the sheep's feet, but I never used any of it; I mentioned this to Mr. Willows; he told me not to use it.

The sheep were never dressed over the body or spotted in any way—it could not be done without my knowing it.

All the rams and eight ewes were ninety days in quarantine; they were taken to Mr. Hawkes's (Tattersall's); I went with them; forty-nine other ewes went with them; these ewes had only been sixty days in quarantine; I think they were dipped, but I am not sure; Mr. Garland came for the forty-nine ewes, but I would not let him have them; he then brought an order—I think it was from Mr. Bruce; the forty-nine ewes belonged to Mr. Garland; they were in addition to the 124 I have referred to; they were the next shipment; the order was for the delivery of the whole of the sheep; I referred Mr. Garland to Mr. Willows, who was standing on the wharf.

173 sheep in all were taken to Tattersall's; I remained at Tattersall's till the place closed up; Mr. Willows came in the evening and released me; I was there to prevent any one handling the sheep or mixing them with any others; I never saw the sheep after; I think they were taken to Summer Hill; I did not notice the sheep scratching or biting themselves while at Tattersall's.

I have had seventy-two sheep of Mr. Roberts's in quarantine since Mr. Garland's, comprising forty-one rams, thirty-one ewes, and there were also fourteen lambs; some of the lambs were lambed on Shark Island.

On

On 19th January I brought twenty-five ewes and one ram to Sydney; they had been shifted from J. C. Laycock. Shark Island to Bradley's Head, to finish their quarantine; I think that this lot had been dipped at Shark Island; I delivered these sheep at the Circular Quay; I think Mr. Weaver took charge of them; the notes which I am now looking at were taken the same day that I dipped the sheep; I sometimes assisted to dip at Shark Island; I believe I must have been present at the dipping of these sheep at Shark Island, otherwise I should not have taken a note of it; I have not had any conversation with Mr. Willows about the present inquiry—I have not had any conversation with him recently; I am quite sure Mr. Willows has not told me anything about what is going on; Mr. Willows has not said anything to me about Mr. Garland's sheep being pronounced scabby, nor has he instructed me to prepare any information for the inquiry.

4 June, 1884.

I was at this office on Monday last, but I do not recollect seeing Mr. Willows on that day; I received no order from the Department on that day which I neglected to carry out; I was not with Mr. Willows a great part of Monday last—I do not recollect being with him at all on Monday; I may have seen him on Monday—I do not recollect it; my business at the office on Monday was to bring an order to Mr. Farr from Freeburn for some money which I had received for him some time before—I had no other business to attend to; I think I had a subpoena to attend here on Monday—I think I was present all day Monday.

I think Mr. Roberts's sheep were dipped at Bradley's Head; I now recollect that Mr. Church dipped them all but seven; I am in error in stating that Mr. Church dipped Garland's sheep; I recollect this in consequence of the circumstance of the seven sheep not being dipped; the notes I have with me are copied from my pocket-book, which I think I can produce I think Garland's sheep were dipped, but I am not sure.

On 31st January I took all Mr. Roberts's sheep, seventy-two in number (forty-one ewes, thirty-one rams, and fourteen lambs), to Sydney; all these sheep were shorn, with the exception of seven rams; the seven rams were not dipped before they left; the seven rams were brought back to the quarantine by Mr. Weaver on 12th February; they were afterwards shorn and dipped, and are still at Bradley's Head; they were dipped in tobacco and sulphur; I am not sure, but I think they have been dipped twice; I assisted to dip them on the first occasion, but I am not sure about the second time; sometimes the quarantine keeper from Shark Island comes over to help dip.

I made copies of the notes from my pocket-book at home yesterday; I did not think of bringing them on Monday; I hand in copy of the notes I took from my pocket-book (Appendix G.)

None of Roberts's sheep were removed from my charge before the whole lot went away.

There were some of Jones's sheep at Bradley's Head; they were brought over from Shark Island; I cannot say how many.

(Adjourned at ten minutes past 1 o'clock).

(Resumed at 30 minutes past 2 o'clock.)

Examination of John Connell Laycock, continued:—

I remember some of Jones's sheep being offered for sale by Messrs. Brunner & Wolfe; there were some rams amongst them; I was present at the sale; they were offered at Bradley's Head; I think there were some ewes and lambs amongst them, but I am not sure; I was told they were not sold; they remained at the station some time after; we generally dip the lambs with the ewes, but when they were very young they were not dipped; the ewes were all dipped, whether heavy in lamb or not; I went to Maitland to help dip Jones's sheep; the sheep were at Brunner & Wolfe's; I only helped to dip them once; I went up twice; the second time the sheep had been dipped the day before I got there; there were some lambs amongst these sheep, and they were all dipped; I looked at the sheep, and opened the fleece, which looked as if they had been dipped before; I cannot say if they had been dipped at Maitland before I saw them; they were not scratching or biting; I now recollect Garland's sheep being dipped once at Bradley's Head, in consequence of Mr. Garland taking samples of wool before we dipped them; all Garland's sheep were then dipped, the ewes and the rams—I mean all those that were at Bradley's Head; I now recollect that I did see Mr. Willows last Monday morning and got an order for a shovel from him; I do not recollect anything else passing between us; before I was appointed quarantine keeper at Bradley's Head I was working on a station in Northern Queensland among sheep.

James Freeburn, quarantine keeper at Shark Island, being duly sworn, states:—

My name is James Freeburn; I am quarantine keeper at Shark Island; I have held that appointment since 1st November, 1883; my duty is to look after the sheep, feed them, and see if there is anything the matter with them; I have had some American sheep under my charge at Shark Island; I remember amongst these sheep twenty-five belonging to Mr. Garland; there were twenty-five ewes and one ram; I do not remember when they came into quarantine; I did not keep any record—I have never been instructed to do so; Mr. Garland's sheep came to the quarantine after I took charge; before I got the appointment of quarantine keeper I was employed as assistant keeper under Elias Laycock; the twenty-five ewes came straight from the ship; the ram came from Bradley's Head; at the time the sheep arrived I was assistant quarantine keeper; there were two other lots of sheep in quarantine at Shark Island; it is my duty to get the dressing ready and help put the sheep through the dip; the sheep were never dipped except in the presence of an inspector except in one instance recently; I have no authority to dip sheep; in one case, the quarantine keeper at Bradley's Head, John C. Laycock, came over and dipped the sheep; I don't know of any sheep leaving Shark Island without being dipped; I don't remember the twenty-five ewes (Garland's) being dipped twice—I am sure they were dipped once; Laycock has been in the habit of coming to Shark Island with the inspector to help to dip; J. C. Laycock removed the twenty-five ewes and one ram from Shark Island to Bradley's Head; I know nothing of what became of them after that; the

J. Freeburn.

J. Freeburn. the inspector (Mr. Willows) comes down to the quarantine occasionally; there is no fixed time for his coming; he comes about once a week on an average, since I have been at Shark Island; other inspectors have visited the station during Mr. Willows' absence; Mr. Weaver was one, and some other whose name I do not remember; I had twenty-nine rams belonging to Mr. Jones under my charge; I recollect these sheep being dipped three times; I also recollect having forty other sheep, belonging to Mr. Jones, at Shark Island; they were there when I first went there; I am quite sure the twenty-nine sheep were dipped twice, but I am not quite sure about their being dipped three times; the whole of Jones's sheep might have been dipped at the same time, the forty with the twenty-nine; I have no recollection of any sheep being taken from Shark Island to Sydney without being dipped.

4 June, 1884.

I never allowed any one to see the sheep without a permit, but upon one occasion Mr. Roberts entered without my knowledge and went amongst his sheep; I reported the matter; sometimes permits were given by Mr. Bruce, and sometimes by Mr. Willows.

The twenty-five ewes taken from Shark Island to Bradley's Head were never brought back—I allude to Mr. Garland's; all of Mr. Jones's sheep were taken away, the twenty-five ewes and fifteen rams first, and the twenty-nine rams went last.

I would not swear that all the sheep which left Shark Island were dipped, and I would not swear that Jones's forty were dipped.

At the time the American sheep were in the quarantine, I had a boy named Archibald Gregory assisting me to feed the sheep; he is now at the Clarence River.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

GEORGE CAMPBELL, Esq., M.P., PRESIDENT,

John Connell Laycock, further examined on oath:—

J. C. Laycock.

I can produce my note-book; I presume the Commission only require to see what is said about the sheep; I produce my note-book herewith; I swear that the entries of each event in connection with the sheep were made on the dates mentioned in the note-book.

5 June, 1884.

I was never in the habit of keeping any record of the transactions in connection with the sheep, and I do not know why I did so in this case; I do not usually carry my note-book about with me; I swear positively that the book produced was not bought and the entries made therein within the last week; I bought the book in George-street—I do not recollect whose shop it was at; I did not produce the book yesterday because there are private entries in it. I do not understand why I have not made entries in it lately about the sheep; I cannot account for not having made entries before the entries concerning Garland's sheep were made, and I cannot account for having made any entries at all; no one suggested to me to make any entries.

Hubert Leonard Gough Morris, quarantine keeper at Summer Hill, being duly sworn, states:—

H. L. G.
Morris.

June, 1884.

My name is Hubert Leonard Gough Morris; I am quarantine keeper at Summer Hill station; my duty is to feed and attend to the sheep, and report when I see anything wrong with the sheep in the shape of disease; I have occupied the position since 1st October, 1883; I remember some American sheep being there belonging to Mr. Garland; I had 125 rams and 57 ewes on 25th November, 1883; they came by road from Hawkes' stables, in two lots, in charge of William Crisp; he is in the employ of Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender; the sheep were placed under my charge by Mr. Willows; when the sheep came to me there were about 15 rams and 10 ewes suffering from partial blindness; they were very dirty and subject to get fly-blown; sometimes there were ten or twelve a day and sometimes two or three fly-blown, and in consequence of this Mr. Garland asked that they should be shorn; the shearing was commenced by one man on the 3rd December, and two others were subsequently engaged; the sheep were all shorn; on 19th January twenty-five ewes and one ram, all in the wool, belonging to Mr. Garland, were brought into the quarantine; up to about the first week in January Mr. Garland's sheep appeared healthy, with the exception of the blindness—I then noticed several commence rubbing themselves against the fences and trees; these were rams, for all the ewes appeared healthy during the whole time they were in my charge; I noticed the rams scratching themselves, and in two or three cases biting themselves; I caught the sheep, but did not notice any spots; on the two rams I noticed that the wool had been drawn out about the shoulder and thigh; I mentioned the fact to Mr. Weaver the next day, I think; Mr. Weaver was acting during Mr. Willows' absence; Mr. Weaver examined the sheep and said that he did not think it was anything, but that he would mention it to Mr. Bruce; just about this time one of Mr. Garland's rams was sick internally; I also mentioned that to Mr. Weaver, and he told Mr. Bruce; Mr. Pottie came out on the 8th or 9th January; he brought a small bottle of medicine for the sheep that was sick and told me to give it to him, and he said he would send me some oils to rub the ram with; this ram died on the 12th January; I told Mr. Pottie that I had noticed some of the sheep rubbing, and I asked him to examine them; the sheep (Mr. Garland's rams) were out in the big paddock, under the trees; I, with the assistance of the man who was helping me to look after the sheep, caught about twenty or thirty; after Mr. Pottie had examined them them all, he told me that the sheep were suffering from over-heating of the blood, caused by dry food; Mr. Pottie examined those that had the wool apparently plucked out, and he took two or three pieces of wool away with him in his purse to examine; I told Mr. Pottie that I did not consider the sheep were in a healthy state, but I did not mention anything about scab; Mr. Pottie did say something about scab, but I could not say what it was; just as Mr. Pottie had finished examining the sheep Mr. Weaver came, and we were all standing in the paddock talking about the sheep; Mr. Weaver asked Mr. Pottie's opinion, and he told him the same as he had told me, and he said that if they had mangel-wurzel or cabbage, to cool the blood, he thought in a few days they would be all right.

H. L. G.
Morris.

5 June, 1884.

I showed Mr. Pottie a patch on the shoulder or thigh of either one or two of the sheep; Mr. Pottie did not make any remark about any dressing or preparation having been put on any of the patches, and that he could not examine them in consequence; the sheep were perfectly dry; Mr. Pottie never mentioned any such thing to me; nothing further passed, and Mr. Pottie and Mr. Weaver went off to the railway station; the sheep had only been dressed where they were fly-blown, but there was no dressing on the patches shown to Mr. Pottie; only a few were fly-blown after they were shorn; Mr. Pottie did not say to me he did not wish to interfere.

No one gave me any dressing to put on the sheep except Mr. Pottie, who gave me the oil; the oil was for the sick ram.

The only stuff Mr. Willows left with me was eye-lotion, and some powders for the sheep suffering from blindness.

The sheep were in fair condition when they came to Summer Hill, and improved very much in condition after they were shorn.

After the inspection by Mr. Pottie, the sheep continued rubbing, scratching, and biting.

While the shearing was going on, about the 5th or 6th December, I noticed a ram with some of the wool off the back of the neck; on opening the wrinkles we found it full of grass-seed; this ram was always scratching with the hind foot; Mr. Willows told me it was only the grass-seed.

There was no further examination of the sheep until they were going away; Mr. Weaver came to the station on one or two occasions, but did not examine the sheep closely; he did not catch any of them; he asked me if they were still scratching; I told him I did not think they were quite as bad as they had been.

All the time Mr. Garland's sheep were in quarantine they were under my entire control and my assistant's; my assistant's name is Arthur Dempster.

When I first received Garland's sheep, on the 25th November, they looked as if they had been dipped, and the wool was very dirty; the second lot, received on the 19th January, appeared to have been dipped, but they were not so dirty; the twenty-five ewes and the one ram were not shorn.

Mr. Garland's rams had finished their quarantine when I received them, but the forty-nine ewes had not—they had some thirty days to do.

I remember one of Mr. Garland's rams which was in the wool being much knocked about by the shorn rams of Mr. Garland's, and was put in with Mr. Jones's rams which were in the wool; the ram remained there two days until the whole of Mr. Garland's sheep were taken away.

The whole of Mr. Garland's sheep were released on the 22nd January; Mr. Weaver was there, and he counted them out at the gate.

Mr. Weaver just looked at the sheep—he did not examine them.

Up to the morning they were released the sheep were noticed by me to be scratching, though not so much as they had been before.

Two hundred and seven sheep were released, and a man named Bambury, in the employ of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender, took them to Homebush; I heard they were going to Carcoar; Bambury told me the sheep were going to Mr. Lomax's station; I am aware that scab has broken out amongst them; I have never seen them since they left the quarantine station.

I remember some sheep going to Maitland—they belonged to Mr. Jones; I received fifteen rams, twenty-five ewes, and ten lambs at the quarantine, on the 7th November; one lamb died the night of arrival, and I received twenty-nine rams in wool, belonging to Mr. Jones, on 28th December; I received the whole of Mr. Jones's sheep in the wool, but the first lot were shorn before they left.

The first and second lots were taken away to Maitland on the 28th and 29th January; all the sheep appeared to have been dipped, but none of the lambs were dipped when received by me, and were taken away without being dipped at all; the lambs were very young when I received them—they were a good size when they left.

I judged by the outside appearance of the wool of the ewes that they had been dipped, but I examined the wool of the rams for curiosity and found they had been dipped.

I remember on one or two occasions when Mr. Jones's lambs were very small, they got between the bars of the gate and mixed with Mr. Garland's rams; only a fence separated Garland's ewes from Mr. Jones's rams; on two or three occasions Mr. Jones's ewes and lambs were allowed to run in the big paddock after Mr. Garland's rams were brought in; I never noticed anything wrong with Mr. Jones's sheep during the time they were in quarantine under my care; they improved very much—I never saw any of them scratching or rubbing; I remember seven rams of Mr. Roberts's being brought to the quarantine on 31st January; they appeared to have been dipped; I did not examine them; I could not say positively that they had been dipped; they came after Garland's and Jones's sheep had left the quarantine; they had full fleeces on them; they were not under my charge; they were sent back on the 13th February to Bradley's Head; the thirty-one rams of Mr. Roberts's were put in the shed that Mr. Garland's rams had occupied part of the time that they were there, and had the run of the big paddock that Mr. Garland's sheep had been in; and Mr. Roberts's ewes and lambs followed Mr. Garland's sheep in the occupation of the same shed and yards, both before and after the sheds and yards had been disinfected.

Mr. Willows did not say anything to Mr. Wilkinson's man about the sheep being placed under his charge.

About the 10th or 11th February, Mr. Willows (after his return from Tasmania), told me that he did not like the arrangements as to the sheep not being under my charge; the sheep referred to are Roberts's lot still in quarantine; I think he must have heard that they were not under my charge in Sydney.

He asked me where the sheep were, and I replied that I had nothing to do with them; I said they were brought here by Saunders & Horn's van, and Mr. Weaver told me I had nothing to do with them.

Mr.

H. L. G.
Morris.

Mr. Weaver said Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender had arranged with the Minister to have the sheep left there.

5 June, 1884. I keep a book recording anything which takes place at the station with regard to the sheep; I obtained it upon an order given me by Mr. Willows at my request; the book produced is the one.

Mr. Willows told me that he disapproved of the man being there in charge of the sheep, and if he had been at home he would have endeavoured to have averted it.

Roberts's sheep, now in Summer Hill quarantine, comprise thirty-one rams, thirty ewes, and fourteen lambs; there were fifteen lambs, but one died.

I understand the Summer Hill Quarantine is simply for colonial and intercolonial sheep.

Anthony Willows, duly sworn and further examined, states:—

A. Willows.

5 June, 1884.

I was instructed to perform some duties at Homebush last Monday, and I carried them out; I saw Laycock, the quarantine keeper, Bradley's Head, at this office; we had no special conversation with respect to the present inquiry; he told me that he had been subpoenaed and would be examined.

I told him to take what books and references he would require, and to give all the information carefully, and to try to recollect what had taken place; he did not ask what information would be required, nor did I furnish him with any notes, figures, or information.

The quarantine keepers are not supposed to keep any books.

I gave him a little book some months ago, to keep a check account of the goods supplied to his station, fodder, &c., but no books as to the management of sheep.

Laycock is a very good keeper, and has performed his duty in a trustworthy and reliable manner; I believe him to be a very good keeper, and not defective in his memory.

It is my usual practice to go to Homebush on Mondays, but the Chief Inspector requested me to go last Monday in the afternoon instead of the morning.

John Studd Brown, being duly sworn, states:—

J. S. Brown.

11 June, 1884.

My name is John Studd Brown; I am a stock and station agent at Dubbo; I was inspector of stock for the Dubbo and Cannonbar Districts for many years; I remember being asked to see some sheep at Blayney—I received a communication from a sheepowner in the Carcoar District on Saturday the 16th February; the communication stated that certain sheep belonging to Mr. Lomax were supposed to be scabby—will you come and see them; I replied that I would be at Blayney on Sunday night; I went to Mr. Lomax's station at Errowangbang; I was then driven out by Mr. Fagan to Mr. Lomax's woolshed; we saw the overseer, who said Mr. Lomax had gone to Sydney; the overseer said "I am very glad you have come—I will go to the woolshed with you"; we went on to the woolshed, which was between 3 or 4 miles from the head station; the woolshed is in a small paddock; Mr. Fagan opened the gate; as soon as we got in the paddock I said "I think we are on scabby ground"; he said, "Why, do you think so?" I said, "Look at the stumps and the ends of the logs"—they looked as if they had been well rubbed against by the sheep; I added, "It reminds me of 1863 and 1864 when I was down at Duck Creek, and where there were scabby sheep"; we then drove to the woolshed, hung up the horses, and went inside where the sheep were; there were ewes and rams; a young man was in charge; I took my coat off and went into the shed with the overseer and the young man; we found the sheep suffering very much from irritation; they were running round the shed and rubbing—some were biting; I said to the overseer, "Catch that sheep," pointing to a ram; he caught the sheep and took it where there was a good light; I opened the wool in several places; I could see where the wool had been drawn; on the ram we caught the skin had thickened very much; I found an immense number of small pustules on the skin that was not thickened; there were a great many old sores on the ram we examined, which I considered had been caused by rubbing; evidently the insect had left these sores and gone into another part of the skin; Mr. Fagan said "Do you think the sheep are scabby?" I said "The appearances indicate scab"; I pulled some of the wool from the sheep and held it up and applied my magnifying glass, and found the insect in every piece, with one exception, and showed the insect to Mr. Lomax's overseer, Mr. Fagan, and the man who was in charge; we caught four rams and two ewes, and found the insect in all of them; some of the rams were very bad—the skin had become very thick; I should say they had been bad many weeks; I think I could have found the insect seven or eight weeks before; the rams were most affected; there were about 200 sheep, rams, and ewes, as far as I can remember, and they were all more or less suffering from irritation; I asked the man in charge (an American) how long it was since he had first noticed the sheep rubbing; he said that they were rubbing and biting when he first took charge of them; he said that he first took charge of them at the Blayney trucking yards, and he noticed them biting and rubbing when they were taken out of the trucks; I asked him if he had driven them direct from the railway station, and he replied that they camped at Brown's Creek, in an old yard, and that they had fed about the township; I said "Did you notice the sheep rubbing about the yards?" he replied, "Yes; when I saw the sheep the fleeces appeared to be full of insects; I should have been afraid to drive a clean flock of sheep over any ground they might have occupied for a few hours."
in

J. S. Brown.
11 June, 1884.

Most of the sheep have been shorn, but one or two I noticed were not shorn; the sheep did not appear to me to have been dressed; they may have been dipped in some preparation, but I could not distinguish any discolouration in the fleece.

It would have struck me at once if they had been dipped in tobacco and sulphur; I opened the wool and smelt it, but could detect no odour; I remarked to those present "It is strange that there is no smell"; I could detect no stain; I am sure that I could have detected any odour such as carbolic or sulphur.

My early experience amongst sheep was with my father at Brownlea, near Bathurst, when there was scab amongst the sheep, which were destroyed about the year 1854 or 1855. I received my appointment as inspector of sheep in 1863, and was sent to Duck Creek, where I reported that between 70,000 to 80,000 sheep were scabby; in about three years the district was cleaned; the sheep were dipped in tobacco and sulphur; I was in charge for the greater part of the time.

We always endeavoured to use one pound of tobacco to five gallons of water, but in some cases, in consequence of the difficulty in obtaining tobacco, only half the quantity of tobacco was used to the same quantity of water, and effected a cure; I have no doubt but that tobacco and sulphur is a certain cure for scab; the heat of the dip is ordinarily 112°, but the rams I have dipped in as high a temperature as 119°.

The scab insect has a pearly white appearance, with long feelers or legs before and behind, and they are of a brownish tinge near the head; the legs are a little thick near the body, and taper off to a fine hair; the insect can be discerned with the naked eye, especially if shaken off the wool on to blue paper.

My reason for saying that I could have found the insect seven or eight weeks before I saw the sheep at Mr. Lomax's is because the skin had become very thick in patches, and I believe it would have required that time to produce that thickness.

I did not look in these thick patches for the insect, but searched just outside them.

The colour of the skin, where the pustule is, is of a faint bluish tinge.

I am not acquainted with any insects resembling the scab insect, but I have read that there are such.

I have no doubt but that the sheep I saw at Errowangbang were affected with scab.

From my experience I would not deem it safe to put sheep on land upon which scabby sheep had been depastured until after the expiration of eight or nine months from the time of their removal.

Under any circumstances I would not deem less than three dippings sufficient, at intervals of nine days between each.

I am decidedly of opinion that special supervision should be exercised over the infected district at Carcoar until after the spring rains; if nothing is detected then, say about October, I think that we might be considered as safe.

I think that supposing sheep to be infected with scab, though latent, they would develop the disease more readily if fed on green food than if they were kept on dry food.

The sheep in question were in very good condition when I inspected them at Mr. Lomax's.

(Resumed at 30 minutes past 2 o'clock.)

Henry Grimshaw Lomax, being duly sworn, states:—

My name is Henry Grimshaw Lomax; I am a sheep-owner residing at Errowangbang, near Carcoar; I remember some American sheep coming on to my run.

H. G. Lomax.
11 June, 1884.

I arranged partly with Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender, and partly with Mr. Garland, the agent for the owner, that I was to provide paddocks for their feeding during the day-time and a woolshed for their shelter at night; there were 81 ewes and 125 rams; they arrived at my station on 24th January last; I saw the sheep on their arrival—I did not examine them; they came in charge of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender's man, named Bambury, and an American, named Baker, who represented the owner; my man Brown was also with them; I was at home the day the sheep arrived; they stayed at the head station one night, and the following day were sent to the woolshed, distant 4 miles.

When I arranged to take the sheep Mr. Garland told me I could use one or two of the rams if I liked them, but when I saw them I was so disappointed with them that I did not examine them.

On February 9th a man named Watson, whom I had sent to help Garland's man look after the sheep, came and told me that there was something the matter with the sheep; I went to the woolshed immediately; I examined the sheep, which were rubbing and biting very much—I never saw sheep worse; from my examination I came to the conclusion that it was scab; I took some of the wool in to Carcoar and examined it there, but could not find the insect; from my previous knowledge of scab I concluded that the symptoms were those of scab; I immediately wrote to Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender, reporting that I thought the sheep were scabby, and told them something should be done at once.

Mr. Willows, of the Stock Department, accompanied by Mr. West, the inspector of sheep for the district, came to Errowangbang on the 12th February; they both, accompanied by myself, went to the woolshed

H. G. Lomax. woolshed and there examined the sheep; Mr. Willows examined the sheep with a glass; he said he thought he saw the insect, but neither Mr. West nor myself saw it, although he tried to show it to us.
11 June, 1884.

We pulled wool out of several of the sheep but did not see the insect; we were examining the sheep for about two hours without finding anything.

Sometimes Mr. Willows said it was scab, and sometimes he said it was not.

Mr. West said it was scab; on the 14th February Mr. Bruce, the Chief Inspector of Sheep, arrived, Mr. West being with him.

We again examined the sheep, and Mr. Bruce found the insect, which he showed me; I afterwards saw it myself.

The insect had a pearly white appearance, with legs before and behind; it is just visible with the naked eye.

The place we took the wool from was a fresh sore alongside of an old one. We found plenty of grass-seeds.

Mr. Bruce after his examination of the sheep said it was scab, and ordered a dip to be made.

When Mr. West was examining the sheep with Mr. Willows and stated it was scab, I warned him not to make such a statement unless he could produce the insect, as there was too much at stake.

The sheep were driven from Blayney to Brown's Creek by Bambury and Baker, and from Brown's Creek to my station they were accompanied by my man Brown.

Brown was acting-overseer for me at that time—he has since left; after the outbreak of scab was discovered, Brown said to me that he had noticed the sheep scratching while on the road to the station; he also said that he had noticed Baker catch one of the sheep on the road and spot it with something.

When I examined the sheep the first time for scab I noticed they had been dressed in spots with something which had stained their wool like iodine; they did not present the appearance of having been dipped; they did not in any way resemble Tasmanian sheep which I have purchased, and which had been dipped.

The majority of the sheep had been shorn; the wool on those which had been shorn was very short; I believe the others had full fleeces.

The woolled sheep I examined were quite clear and bright in the staple; I opened the wool up and smelt it, but could not detect any odour.

The yards in which the sheep were placed at Brown's Creek were destroyed by fire.

About 16 or 17 of my rams got mixed with the American sheep; the man in charge and the overseer informed me of this fact; this took place before the scab was discovered; this information came to me about the 20th February; the rams were taken out and put back very shortly afterwards into their own paddock.

The sixteen or seventeen rams belonged to a flock of station rams of about 700 or 800 in number.

In accordance with Mr. Bruce's order, a dip was made close to the woolshed to dip the American sheep; I came to Sydney on the 18th February, and on the 19th I went with a deputation and waited on the Minister for Mines to represent the case to him; he ordered the destruction of the sheep, after consulting with his colleagues, and accordingly they were destroyed on the 20th February; they were killed and burned in my presence; there were 124 rams (one having previously died), and eighty-one ewes; they were destroyed in the woolshed, which was also burned; the yards, grass, and about 2 miles of fencing were also burned; an area of about 2,000 acres of grass was burned; the work of destruction was thoroughly done; Mr. Willows was present during the whole time the sheep were being destroyed; the burning of the paddocks occupied about four or five days—that is, including the watching of it afterwards to keep it from spreading, which was the most troublesome part.

After this a temporary dip was made to dip my own rams; they were dipped in tobacco and sulphur; another dip was prepared for the other sheep on the station; the rams were dipped three times, and the other sheep on the station were all dipped once, and half of them, those adjoining the woolshed, were dipped twice; about 15,000 sheep belonging to other people were also dipped; in all about 60,000.

The station rams were dipped on the 26th February.

Besides the rams mixing as before described, one of the American ewes got out and mixed with my flock of 5,000 to 6,000 ewes, and was there about two hours.

I have kept a very careful watch on my sheep since, especially the rams, and have found no indication of scab.

A very complete muster of the sheep was made for the dipping; I do not think one escaped; I gave strict orders that every sheep which could not travel should be killed.

Mr. Rothery's land adjoins mine, and about 1,000 of his sheep were found amongst mine and dipped with them; all the sheep which came in were dipped.

I consider all Rothery's sheep should have been dipped, and I wrote a letter to the Board to that effect.

The nearest part of Mr. Rothery's land to the woolshed is distant about 4 miles; his sheep frequently mix with mine; it is impossible to keep them apart—they get through the wire fencing.

I heard that about 400 of Mr. Rothery's sheep had mixed with my dipped sheep; they were sent back without being dipped.

My sheep that they mixed with were an outside flock, and therefore pretty safe.

So far as my own sheep are concerned, I do not think it is necessary for the Government to keep any special supervision over them, but I think special attention should be given to Mr. Rothery's sheep, as they were not dipped.

I hand in as exhibit clean certificate which I received with the American sheep (copy retained, Appendix H).

Charles Wright Church, having made an affirmation in accordance with section 343 of Act 46 Victoria No. 17, states:—

My name is Charles Wright Church; I am an inspector under the Rabbit Act; I have acted as sheep inspector occasionally in dipping sheep; some American sheep were dipped under my supervision—I believe they were Mr. Roberts's; they were dipped at Bradley's Head; I only superintended their dipping once; I could not say if they had been dipped before; I dipped them on 27th December, 1883; I never dipped any sheep but these at Bradley's Head. Joseph Walker West, being duly sworn, states:—

My name is Joseph Walker West; I am an inspector of sheep in the Carcoar district; I have held that position seven years last February; I remember some American sheep being brought to Mr. Lomax's station at Errowangbang; I received a telegram on the 11th February last from the Chief Inspector of Sheep to proceed to Errowangbang on the 12th, with Mr. Willows, to Mr. Lomax's station, about 10 miles from Carcoar; I met Mr. Willows, in accordance with those instructions, on the morning of the 12th, at Carcoar, and went with him to Errowangbang, and then we went to the woolshed, where there were some ewes and rams; Mr. Willows told me, when we were going out, that they were some American sheep, and that he was going to inspect them; Mr. Lomax accompanied us; when we got to the paddock the rams were lying in a sandy creek among a lot of oak-trees; Mr. Lomax and one of his men got the rams out of the creek and drove them towards the woolshed; after they had gone about 50 yards, I was riding alongside of Mr. Lomax, and said: "My God, Mr. Lomax, you have the scab here." J. W. West.
12 June, 1884.

Mr. Lomax answered and said, "How do you know—you have not seen the insect"; I said I did not require to see the insect, but I would wait until the sheep went into the shed.

The sheep were put into the shed; I got off my horse and went inside the shed, and examined the sheep, with Mr. Willows and Mr. Lomax.

I examined one sheep which I had taken particular notice of; I scratched it, and it turned round and licked, as is usual with scabby sheep.

There were a good many patches on the sheep, and the wool was rising in places; in many places the skin was hard and dry; I assisted Mr. Willows in pulling wool to try to find the insect, but we did not succeed in finding any.

Mr. Willows said he thought he saw the insect once, and endeavoured to show it to me, but I could not see it; the wool was of so yolkly a nature that it was a difficult matter to find the insect.

I caught several sheep, but there were none so bad as the one examined first; these were examined by Mr. Willows also; Mr. Willows had a glass when looking for the insect; he did not say he saw any of the insects in any other sheep; they were rubbing and biting very much.

The ewes were also examined; they were in another yard; they were rubbing and scratching very slightly.

The sheep had no appearance of having been dipped, especially the rams; I think all the rams had been shorn but one; I think all the ewes were in the wool; they did not present the appearance of having been dipped.

The wool was not stained or discoloured at all—it looked perfectly natural.

The rams I examined had no appearance of having been spotted.

After the examination of the sheep, Mr. Willows said he was doubtful as to what was the matter with them; I said it was scab, but Mr. Lomax cautioned me not to be too sure, as the insect had not been found; I replied that in my day we never looked for the insect.

We left and went to Carcoar; Mr. Bruce arrived at Carcoar on the morning of the 14th; I accompanied him to Errowangbang, to where the rams and ewes were which had been previously inspected by Mr. Willows and myself.

We found the sheep in the woolshed in the same state as before, rubbing and biting.

We examined the sheep; Mr. Lomax and Mr. Baker (an American), who was in charge, was present.

After examining the wool on the rams for some time Mr. Bruce found the insect beyond all doubt; by the insect, I mean the scab insect; Mr. Bruce showed me two; I saw it also with Mr. Bruce's glass; Mr. Bruce said he saw three insects, but I could not see the first, but I saw the next two; Mr. Lomax and the man Baker also saw the insect.

Mr. Bruce and Mr. Lomax both expressed themselves satisfied that it was scab.

I drew Mr. Bruce's attention to the fact that I thought the sheep did not look as if they had been dipped; he replied that they had been dipped; my remark applied to the whole of the sheep there.

I consider that the sheep referred to had been scabby fully four months before, judging from the stage the disease had arrived at; the hot weather and dry feed would keep it back.

I neither know nor have read of any skin disease in sheep resembling scab, and I do not think that any one who has had any experience of scab could mistake the movements of scabby sheep for anything else but scab, or even the appearance of the skin of scabby sheep.

The scab insect resembles in appearance that of the "crab"; it has a pearly body, some insects being darker than others, long legs or feelers, and when held to the light in the wool the insect always makes downwards. I

J. W. West.
12 June, 1884.

I have seen the insect easily when I was young with the naked eye, especially in lambs.

Mr. Bruce instructed me to quarantine that portion of the Errowangbang Run that the sheep were running on, which I did on the 16th February; I gave notice at once.

Mr. Willows arrived on the 19th, and instructions were immediately afterwards given for the destruction of the sheep; they were destroyed on the 20th in the woolshed, which was also destroyed by fire, together with the fencing, yards, and the grass in the surrounding paddocks; Mr. Willows was present, and I assisted him in carrying this out, by order of the Minister.

I am aware Mr. Lomax's sheep were ordered to be dipped, and I saw some of them dipped.

I saw sheep dipped there which had been running on land adjoining Mr. Lomax's.

I know Mr. Rothery's run; his sheep were not dipped, and I certainly consider they should have been dipped, for the reason that a continual intermixture of Mr. Lomax's and Mr. Rothery's sheep takes place; I know this of my own knowledge.

The sheep get through the wire fences, and at one particular place, which is unfenced, Mr. Rothery's sheep come down the side of the mountain on to Mr. Lomax's run; I saw some of Mr. Rothery's sheep, which had mixed Mr. Lomax's sheep, dipped, and I also saw some of Mr. Lomax's sheep, that had not been dipped, on Mr. Rothery's run; this was since the outbreak of scab.

I suggested that all the sheep adjoining Mr. Lomax's, on that side upon which Mr. Rothery's land is, should be dipped; my suggestion was made to the Chief Inspector; I am not aware that Mr. Willows made any representation to this effect.

I am aware that all the sheep in the neighbourhood, with the exception of Mr. Rothery's, have been dipped.

I was present at the meeting of the Board of Sheep Directors, Carcoar, when the matter of dipping Mr. Rothery's sheep was under consideration; Mr. Cleeve was also present.

It was decided by the Board that Mr. Rothery's sheep were not to be dipped.

I was present when the decision was given by the Chairman; he said there was no necessity whatever for dipping Rothery's sheep.

I have inspected some of the sheep of Mr. Rothery's near Mr. Lomax's paddock since the outbreak, but I saw nothing which would lead me to think they were infected; the nearest point of Mr. Rothery's run to Mr. Lomax's woolshed is about 5 miles; the boundaries of the runs adjoin for a considerable distance.

I know the country very well; I do not think a clean muster of all the sheep on Mr. Lomax's was made; it would be impossible to do so, in consequence of the rough nature of the country.

The general condition of Mr. Lomax's sheep was very poor, many of the first 10,000 had to be lifted out of the dip; I believe everything was done by Mr. Lomax and his men to bring about a clean muster.

I would not consider that sufficient time has elapsed since the outbreak of scab at Errowangbang to make the district safe from scab.

I know of an instance which came under my notice in my young days of some rams my father bought from Mr. Kite, of Bathurst, that were driven to Blayney, and there got mixed with a flock of scabby sheep, and were in the yard with them all night; they were then taken on to my father's station, and were put into two flocks of ewes; in six weeks after they were taken out and put with a flock of young wethers, and about the month of October the whole three flocks were scabby and had to be destroyed; the sheep were first mixed in the month of March, and the scab did not break out till the month of October following; I think this was in the year 1855.

From my previous experience of scab, I do not consider it would be safe to release the district from quarantine until the expiration of eight or nine months from the time the sheep were destroyed.

12 June, 1884.

My name is Robert Bliss Wilkinson; I am senior partner of the firm of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender, stock and station agents, Sydney; I remember some American sheep, in charge of Mr. Garland, which arrived in Sydney—they were the property of a Mr. Markham; it was arranged that the sheep should be advertised on 26th September for sale on the 24th October, 1883, by our firm; the sheep were to be sold at Bradley's Head; about the 15th October Mr. Garland came to us and said he was very much afraid the sheep were scabby; Mr. Garland asked us what was the proper course for him to take; we told him that he should at once report the matter to Mr. Bruce, Chief Inspector of Sheep; Mr. Garland and I then went up and saw Mr. Bruce, and told him of Mr. Garland's fear as to the sheep being scabby; Mr. Bruce said he could do nothing until he had them inspected; I believe Mr. Bruce had the sheep inspected, and he told Mr. Garland that the sheep were not scabby, but were suffering from grass-seed, but that they had better be dipped; it was in consequence of the dipping being ordered that we postponed the sale of the sheep till 23rd November; but previous to the dipping, samples of the wool were taken, so that people could see what it was like; the sheep were then brought from Bradley's Head to Tattersall's on the 23rd November, it being understood that their quarantine expired on the 22nd; I saw the sheep at Tattersall's; I helped to pen them up; I did not notice any scratching or rubbing, having no suspicion that anything was wrong with them; I do not think any of the sheep were shorn; they had been shorn before they left America; some had longer wool than others.

There were a good many people inspecting the sheep, catching and opening the wool in the usual way.

The sheep had the appearance of having been dipped when they arrived at Tattersall's.

On an application by my firm, copy of which letter I produce (Appendix I) 50 ewes were permitted to leave quarantine at Bradley's Head to go to Tattersall's before their term of quarantine had expired; I could not say whether the ewes had been dipped; I cannot say whether any samples were taken from these ewes, but I think so; none of the sheep were sold, and they were sent to Summer Hill Quarantine on the following day; they went to Summer Hill in charge of our men; I believe a man from the Department went with them; I believe the sheep were all shorn at Summer Hill Quarantine about the middle of December.

The

The ewes went to the quarantine at Summer Hill at the same time as the rams.
I could not say if a certificate was received with the sheep when they left Bradley's Head Quarantine for Tattersall's.

12 June, 1884.

After the sheep had remained some time at Summer Hill, and after we had received a letter and several personal applications from the Chief Inspector of Sheep, urging their early removal from there, they were sent to Mr. Lomax's station at Errowangbang, Carcoar, Mr. Garland having arranged with Mr. Lomax for the use of a paddock and a woolshed for their accommodation.

No communication has been ever received from the Stock Department as to anything being wrong with the sheep.

The sheep left Homebush by the 3 p.m. train on the 22nd January last for Blayney.

They were taken from the quarantine by a man in our employ named Bambury.

On the 11th February we received a letter, dated the 10th, from Mr. Lomax, to the effect that the sheep were infected with something which looked very much like scab; he enclosed some wool (copy of letter handed in, Appendix J).

On the same day I saw the Chief Inspector of Sheep, Mr. Bruce, and showed him the letter and the wool referred to.

(The Commission adjourned at 1 o'clock.)

(Resumed at 2:30 p.m.)

When Mr. Garland left the Colony there were 125 rams and fifty-seven ewes at Summer Hill Quarantine, and one ram and twenty-five ewes at Shark Island.

Besides the sheep referred to, forty-one rams and thirty-one ewes, of which I believe Mr. Roberts is the owner, were placed in our hands by Messrs. Gilchrist, Watt, & Co., and Roberts, and we advertised them to be sold about the 15th November last, for sale on the 24th November; they were not sold by auction on that date, but four of them (three rams and one ewe) were sold privately to Messrs. Barrett and Wreford; they were sold to be delivered on the expiration of their quarantine.

We arranged with the Government, some time after they were offered for sale, that the sheep should remain at Summer Hill Quarantine until July.

After the quarantine was over the sheep were brought from Shark Island and Bradley's Head; Messrs. Barrett and Wreford's four were trucked at the Redfern Station to Hay, and the remainder taken to Summer Hill Quarantine Station; this was on the 31st January last.

We applied for permission (Appendix K) on behalf of Mr. Roberts, for ten rams to remain at Shark Island, unshorn and undipped, until the sales in July next.

In accordance with this request, seven rams were left at Shark Island.

I am not aware that the seven rams were brought from Shark Island to Summer Hill, unshorn and undipped, and returned to Shark Island, except from what was told to me by Mr. Willows.

I met Mr. Willows at Mr. Bruce's office, and was informed that he wanted to dip the sheep at Summer Hill; not understanding this, as I believed they had all performed proper quarantine, I thought it a piece of extra officiousness on the part of Mr. Willows, and told him so; some words took place, but when it was explained to me that the seven unshorn rams that ought to have been left at Shark Island were at Summer Hill, I said I was satisfied; I do not know whether the seven sheep were returned to Shark Island or not.

Roberts's sheep are still at the quarantine at Summer Hill, under the arrangements made in the first instance.

13 June, 1884.

Some time in June, 1883, I left San Francisco by the "City of New York"; the ship carried a consignment of American sheep of about 100; some belonged to Hay, of Boomoonomana, and some, I believe, to Jones; there were also some ration sheep for the ship's use—about thirty, I think; I went to look at the American sheep on the voyage, and I noticed the ration sheep, which were in the centre of the vessel, biting themselves, and showing every symptom of scab; they were only separated from the consigned sheep by a passage; after the ration sheep were used the stud sheep were put into their pen; I examined the sheep frequently.

I was at one time an inspector of stock in New South Wales. I saw the ration sheep turning round and biting at the shoulder; the movements of the sheep were such that I at once knew they were scabby.

I spoke to Mr. W. J. Dangar, who was a passenger by the vessel with me, and told him that I would write the Chief Inspector of Sheep about it; he quite agreed with me.

I left the ship at New Zealand, but sent a letter on by her to the Chief Inspector; my letter was to warn Mr. Bruce that I thought the ration sheep were scabby, and that the sheep that were placed in the same pen would probably be scabby also.

I visited a ranche while in California, where there were 40,000 sheep, and noticed how short the wool was; I was informed, on my remarking that fact, that the sheep were all scabby. They were in consequence shorn twice a year, and after each shearing were run through the dip; in fact, I was told by the proprietor of the ranche that all the sheep in California were scabby more or less.

I believe in my letter to Mr. Bruce I advised him of this fact.

13 June, 1884.

My name is Warden Harry Graves; I am a member of the firm of Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender; I remember some American sheep of Mr. Garland's being put into our hands for sale; they were brought from Bradley's Head to Tattersall's and offered for sale on the 23rd November last; they had all completed their quarantine, with the exception of some of the ewes; I was penning up the sheep at Tattersall's all day and handling them—they all appeared to have been dipped; I did not notice any of the sheep rubbing or biting; the sheep were not sold, and they were removed to the quarantine station at Summer Hill on the following day; I never suspected for a moment that the sheep were scabby; I have never seen scab.

Alexander Bruce, Chief Inspector of Sheep, recalled and further examined on oath:—

Alex. Bruce.
13 June, 1884.

Mr. Willows never asked me if the American sheep were to be dipped three times. When we examined the sheep at the time Garland reported scab, before we left Bradley's Head, I cautioned him, and said, "We have not found scab, but this is a warning," and I said, "You will dip once with Little's Fluid, and twice with tobacco and sulphur"; these were my instructions, but I do not know if they were carried out; Mr. Willows never expressed any opinion to me as to the value of Little's Fluid as a cure for scab, or at any rate not before scab was found at Carcoar.

It has not been the rule that each dipping of sheep should be reported to me; it is the duty of the inspector who dips to keep such a record.

I had no knowledge whatever of three dippings not having been administered until I was getting information for this Commission; and when I was asked for information by South Australia and Victoria, after the outbreak of scab, I wrote back and said three dippings had been administered, and when I found out the truth of the matter I was obliged to write again to contradict it.

After giving Mr. Willows the instructions as to the one dip of Little's Fluid and the two in tobacco and sulphur I never asked him if they had been carried out. The dippings in Little's Fluid should have been administered according to printed directions, and each sheep should have been immersed from two to three minutes.

I remember an application being made by Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender for some ewes to be allowed to leave quarantine before their term had expired; this was submitted to the Minister and granted, as they had completed their quarantine so far as scab was concerned. The quarantine for scab is fixed by the Sheep Act as not less than two months.

During Mr. Willows' absence the superintendence of the dipping should be the duty of the inspector appointed in his place, whoever he might be; when I examined the sheep at Maitland it did not strike me that they had not been dipped, but I think the wool looked very clean.

Before Mr. Willows went away to Tasmania I gave him verbal instructions to give Mr. Weaver written instructions as to the state of the sheep and how they were to be treated, and when their time was up.

I mentioned in my previous evidence that six sheep, I should have said seven sheep (rams), had been removed from Shark Island to Summer Hill without being either shorn or dipped; the mistake arose by my not giving Mr. Weaver particular instructions about these seven sheep, as I thought Mr. Willows had supplied him with all particulars as instructed; these sheep were Roberts's, and are still in quarantine.

I could not say if the lambs at Maitland looked as if they had been dipped.

Country which had been occupied by scabby sheep should not be considered safe, in my opinion, until the expiration of twelve months from the time the infected sheep were removed from it.

Mr. Willows, in Mr. Wilkinson's presence, objected to the terms under which Roberts's sheep were at Summer Hill.

Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender are the agents for these sheep; Mr. Willows wished that they should remain under the charge of the Government; I objected to that, as they had done their quarantine, on account of the risk and responsibility in connection with the safety of the sheep; it is not a usual occurrence to have sheep there under such terms; the arrangement was that they should remain there until the July sales, if there was room for them, but they were to be taken away should the quarantine be required for other sheep.

I would recommend that the sheep at Maitland be removed to Newcastle, after having been dipped in tobacco and sulphur.

Mr. Willows on several occasions reported to me that people were interfering or trespassing at the quarantine, and on each occasion when he did so I asked him to put it in writing.

These memos. were attended to, and regulations were framed and submitted to the Minister.

In any case where the Quarantine Regulations would be interfered with, requests have always been made in writing and submitted to the Minister in the usual way; Mr. Willows and myself have always been on good terms until this matter of the outbreak of scab turned up.

I did not instruct Mr. Willows last Monday week not to go to Homebush in the morning, but to stay until the afternoon; he told me that he wished to go to Bradley's Head, but could not obtain a steam launch; I afterwards told Mr. Willows that as he had not gone to Homebush that Monday morning he was not to do so in future, but was always to go in the afternoon; he did not say what he wanted to go to Bradley's Head for; he made some remark, but I do not recollect what it was.

Arthur Pownall, being duly sworn, states:—

My name is Arthur Pownall; I am a clerk in the employ of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender; I remember some sheep being offered for sale at Tattersall's on the 23rd November last; they were the property of Mr. Markham, who was represented by Mr. Garland; I helped to pen them, and helped Mr. Garland to put tickets round their necks.

A. Pownall.
13 June, 1884.

I noticed the sheep rubbing up against the pens and against the wall.

One of the clerks in our office (Mr. Crisp) remarked to me some time afterwards that he had seen the sheep while at Tattersall's "sitting down on their haunches, scratching like dogs."

I was not more than an hour with the sheep, and I do not know that those which were rubbing were taken out and put by themselves.

The sheep all appeared to be rubbing.

I opened the wool on the sheep and examined it, and it appeared to be of a natural colour though rather yellow.

On the outside the wool was very dark; I think there were more rams than ewes.

Anthony Willows re-called and further examined on oath:—

I am quite sure that after Mr. Garland reported that he thought his sheep were scabby, and after the examination with the Chief Inspector of the suspected rams at Bradley's Head, that the Chief Inspector of Sheep did not as an extra precaution say anything to me about having the sheep dipped once in Little's Fluid and twice in tobacco and sulphur.

A. Willows.
13 June, 1884.

I received no special instructions with regard to these sheep.

What guided me as to the number of dippings to be administered to the sheep were the instructions of the Chief Inspector of Sheep; I was not guided by the Regulations nor the Act, but simply carried out Mr. Bruce's instructions that the sheep were to be dipped twice.

I told the Chief Inspector verbally that I did not consider Little's Fluid diluted with 100 parts of water sufficiently strong to cure scab.

This statement was made by me to the Chief Inspector when Mr. Wilson was trying to bring forward "Calvert's Carbolic Dip." The analysis of Little's Fluid to which I referred came from Calvert, the carbolic manufacturer, of Bradford, England.

I think if the fluid were used at a greater strength it would kill the scab insect, but might injure the sheep.

The Chief Inspector made some such remark as that it was highly recommended.

This conversation took place about last July, the time of the stud sales of 1883.

Before I went to Tasmania the Chief Inspector asked me to let him have a written statement of how long each lot of sheep had been in quarantine, and how often they had been dressed.

I gave the Chief Inspector a statement as directed, and he said he would have a copy made for Mr. Weaver.

The Commission adjourned at 1 o'clock.

(Resumed at 2:30 p.m.)

Examination of Anthony Willows continued:—

The paper I now hand in (Appendix L) is a copy of the statement I gave Mr. Bruce before I left for Tasmania, as to the sheep at the different quarantines; I found it on Mr. Weaver's desk on my return.

I understood the 12th section of the Regulations of 17th May, 1883, under the Imported Stock Act, to mean dipping or dressing.

There never has been any such process as washing applied to sheep or other animals since I have been in the Department.

It has been my habit to go to Homebush on Monday and Thursday mornings; why I did not go last Monday week in the morning was because I had been asked on the previous Wednesday by the Chief Inspector to attend to the office in the morning, and to go to Homebush in the afternoon, in case there should be anything wanted; since then I have attended at Homebush in the afternoon, as directed.

The Chief Inspector of Sheep and myself have been on amicable terms, except in regard to little matters in connection with the outside duties of the Department.

Thomas

T. Dawson.

13 June, 1884.

Thomas Dawson, being duly sworn, states:—

My name is Thomas Dawson; I have lately been engaged in the dipping of Mr. Lomax's and other sheep at Carcoar; I was sent up there on account of these sheep being infected, within the meaning of the Act, to dip them; I acted under instructions of the Chief Inspector of Sheep; I was occupied three months in dipping; I dipped about 65,000 sheep; they were not all dipped twice; the rams on Mr. Lomax's I dipped three times; I am told that some of these rams had mixed with the American sheep that had been destroyed; some of the sheep were only dipped once; I cannot say why some were only dipped once; about 14,000 of Mr. Lomax's were dipped twice; Mr. Connolly's were dipped twice.

A number of sheep mixed with Mr. Lomax's sheep that were not dipped at all, especially Mr. Rothery's, whose run adjoins Mr. Lomax's.

I know that I dipped fully 700 of Mr. Rothery's sheep which had been found with Mr. Lomax's.

Sheep belonging to the different proprietors around were found amongst Mr. Lomax's.

Several owners told me that all their sheep had not been mustered and dipped, and only one owner was satisfied that all his sheep had been dipped; they had been shepherded.

The country is very rough, which renders mustering very difficult, and I think it almost impossible that all the sheep at large could have been mustered, although I am certain Mr. Lomax did all he could to do so.

I have had much experience with scab in sheep in this Colony; in the year 1844 was my first experience in this Colony, and in 1848 I was engaged by Messrs. Flower, Salting, & Co., as Capt. Cockburn's agents, to undertake to cure their flocks at Braidwood, containing 10,000 sheep, and I cured them; I used the best tobacco and sulphur; all these sheep were shepherded.

I used tobacco and sulphur to dip the Carcoar sheep, which I consider a certain cure if properly used; leaf tobacco was used; I condemned one lot of 2 tons which was not used—this was cake tobacco.

Some of the leaf tobacco was very good, and some of it not so good.

The dip was used according to the Regulations.

I consider that in such country as Carcoar, the disease may be latent for twelve months before it would be discovered or become apparent.

I think a strict supervision should be kept over the quarantined district by some one who is acquainted with the disease till at least after shearing.

The disease, if it exists, is most likely to become apparent in the spring-time; warmth and green feed is likely to develop it.

There was no indication of scab in the sheep I dipped at Mr. Lomax's; the number of dippings were directed by the Chief Inspector of Sheep.

There were five weaners amongst Mr. Lomax's sheep that had been in the paddock in which the American sheep were for some five or six weeks, so Mr. Lomax informed me; these sheep received my special attention in the dipping, but they were only dipped once—they were about the last sheep dipped.

I consider the infected ram paddock should be closer burned; there are still pieces of wool attached to the logs and stumps which have been untouched by fire.

G. A. Crisp

16 June, 1884

My name is George Alfred Crisp; I am in the employ of Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender, as cattle and sheep salesman and book-keeper; I remember 174 sheep being offered for sale at Tattersall's; they belonged to Mr. Markham, and he was represented by Mr. Garland as agent.

The sheep were offered for sale on 23rd November, 1883.

The sheep came to Tattersall's early on Friday morning, the date of sale; I assisted in penning them up according to the ear-marks.

I noticed the sheep rubbing up against the stalls, and I noticed them sitting down and scratching themselves like dogs; I also noticed the sheep biting at each others heads, and some of the tickets were chewed off.

The sheep appeared to have been all shorn; I opened and looked at the wool—it had a dirty appearance on the top, but appeared to be of the natural colour about the lower part of the staple; I did not notice any signs as if the sheep had been dipped; I opened the wool on about twenty of the sheep; on some the wool was very short, and on some it was about an inch in length.

I recollect very well the appearance of the twenty sheep I examined; the top of the wool was dirty, but nearer the skin the wool appeared to me to have a natural colour; it was of a yellow colour, such as most of the American sheep have; after the sheep left Tattersall's they were taken to Homebush—I saw them again there, and noticed them scratching as before; this was on the Sunday morning after the sale; the last time I noticed the sheep scratching was at the Homebush Sale Yards; they were then rubbing themselves up against the fence; it was at the new sale yards I saw the sheep; a good many of the sheep were rubbing; I noticed nothing wrong with the ewes; my previous evidence refers to the rams; I was not much amongst the ewes.

Henry Grimshaw Lomax, further examined, on oath, states :—

I wish to add that some five sheep were in the infected paddock with the American sheep, but did not mix with them; they were dipped and placed with my other sheep; I told Mr. Dawson of this fact, and he gave them an extra strong dipping. H. G. Lomax.
16 June, 1884.

When these sheep were found in the paddock I ordered that they should be kept there, in order to see if they would show any sign of scab, and I ordered that a strict watch be kept over them, and I also saw them once a week myself; there were no sheep adjoining them on either side; so far as my run is concerned, I fully believe that every sheep was mustered and dipped.

One reason why I wished to be recalled to give further evidence that I had done all in my power was, that Mr. Willows showed me a telegram which he sent from Carcoar to the Minister, to the effect that I was not pushing on matters as I should do.

Mr. Willows seemed to have no practical knowledge of any matters connected with sheep, and did not know what should or what should not be done; he appeared to have no knowledge of the management of sheep whatever.

I am sure some of the sheep had full fleeces, from the fact that Mr. Garland asked me to have them shorn; the American in charge of the sheep made a similar request, and I said "I would advise you not to, as the sales are so near."

There were some ten of the ewes extra good sheep, of which I took particular notice; the wool upon them was perfectly clear in the staple, and had not the slightest appearance of having been dipped.

Mr. Willows did not appear to even know how to go about making a dip.

I was in personal attendance at the first dipping; Mr. Dawson simply looked to the temperature, and the mixing of the tobacco and sulphur.

The infected paddock, namely, the paddock where the rams were, was all burned, stumps and all.

My name is Robert Bambury; I am a labourer; I recollect taking charge of some sheep at the quarantine at Summer Hill; I took them to Homebush, and trucked them from there to Blayney; I drove one lot, I think the ewes, from Blayney to Mr. Lomax's station, Errowangbang. R. Bambury.
16 June, 1884.

I first noticed the sheep scratching at the quarantine ground, and wherever I was present with them afterwards.

I drove the rams from Summer Hill to Homebush, and, as I before stated, I think, the ewes from Blayney to Mr. Lomax's.

The rams at Summer Hill were scratching themselves with their feet and with their horns, and were also biting themselves; I noticed the sheep I drove from Blayney to Mr. Lomax's scratching themselves against the fences and trees.

I asked the American who was in charge of one lot what he thought was the matter with them; I asked him this several times, but I could get no satisfactory answer from him.

I did not see any spots on the sheep.

The wool on the sheep appeared very greasy, but I did not notice whether they had been dipped.

Alexander Bruce, Chief Inspector of Sheep, further examined on oath :—

I wish to correct a statement I made on Friday, the 13th instant, that I did not know that less than three dippings had been administered to Garland's sheep at the time I wrote to the Governments of Victoria and South Australia; I now find that, from a document that was given to me by Mr. Willows before he left for Tasmania, to give to Mr. Weaver; I must have seen that Mr. Willows reported that only two dippings had been given, as I have since had search made for the paper and find that he had so reported; upon examining the paper I find that Mr. Willows reported that one lot of sheep had only been dipped once. Alex. Bruce.
16 June, 1884.

I twice asked Mr. Willows before he left for Tasmania whether he had given Mr. Weaver full instructions as to the sheep, and I understood that he had given Mr. Weaver written instruction.

I do not recollect Mr. Willows ever saying to me that Little's Fluid diluted with 100 parts of water was insufficient to cure scab, and I am sure he never did; the efficacy of the fluid was never brought into question until after the recent outbreak of scab.

I leave it to the Commission to decide if it is not more probable that Mr. Willows would instruct his successor himself, rather than to request me to do so.

I never instructed Mr. Willows to give the sheep less than three dippings.

Richard Weaver, recalled and further examined on oath:—

R. Weaver.
18 June, 1884.

What instructions I received before Mr. Willows went away to Tasmania I got from him; I only got verbal instructions from him, and information as to the number of sheep in the several quarantines; I had no instructions what I was to do.

The document produced (Appendix L) I have seen before—I found it upon Mr. Willows' table, but it was not given to me by any one; I supposed that it was for my information; I do not recollect the Chief Inspector saying anything to me about it.

I remember Mr. Bruce telling me that I was to take up Mr. Willows' work; Mr. Willows had at that time left for Tasmania; Mr. Bruce may have referred me to the written instructions that were on my desk (Appendix L), but I do not recollect his doing so; I had no instructions to dip the sheep, and I presumed that they were not to be dipped until Mr. Willows returned.

I am positive Mr. Bruce never asked me anything about the sheep; I had no instructions from Mr. Willows or from Mr. Bruce to treat the sheep in any way—I thought I had simply to attend to the forage.

I had instructions to remove Jones's sheep from Bradley's Head to Summer Hill, and I did so; these instructions were given verbally by the Chief Inspector.

I never acted as inspector of stock before I received my present appointment.

I was present when Mr. Garland's sheep left Summer Hill Quarantine; I saw them taken out of the yard; I counted them out.

I did not notice anything peculiar in their appearance; I do not remember making any remark about their being taken away.

On the morning the sheep were taken away, and for four or five days previous to this, I did not notice the sheep scratching; when I saw the sheep scratching I examined them carefully, but could not notice any symptoms of scab; I did not have a glass when examining the sheep.

The quarantine-keeper Morris told me that Mr. Willows had left some stuff with him to "spot" the sheep with; I am quite sure that the sheep were discoloured in patches with some stuff with which they had been spotted.

I was not present when Mr. Pottie examined the sheep; he told me he had looked at them.

Morris told me distinctly that Mr. Willows had given him instructions to dress the sheep on the patches, and he told me that he had done so.

A. Willows.
18 June, 1884.

Prior to my leaving for Tasmania, I did not give Mr. Weaver any instructions, either verbally or in writing, as to what he was to do; I left the statement with the Chief Inspector, previously referred to by me in my evidence.

I understood the Chief Inspector to say that Mr. Weaver would take my duties in part during my absence.

I did not give the quarantine keeper at Summer Hill any stuff for dressing the sheep other than that for treating the sheep for blindness; I did instruct him to use Little's fluid at a greater strength on the places where the sheep were fly-blown or infested with maggots—lots of the sheep had maggots; the keeper used Little's fluid because there was a supply on hand at the station, and it seemed to effect the desired purpose.

Lot 1, twenty-five ewes and fifteen rams, were once dipped at Shark Island, and once at Bradley's Head; the first time on 16th October, the second time on 1st November.

Lot 2, twenty-nine rams, were dipped at Shark Island; the first time on 16th October, and the second time on 12th December.

When I left Sydney, lot 1 were at Summer Hill with a few little lambs, and lot 2 were at Shark Island; I believe these are the sheep which afterwards went to Maitland; the lambs were dipped in every case.

Wilhelm Boye Sölling, being duly sworn, states :—

My name is Wilhelm Boye Sölling; I am manager for Messrs. Bruncker & Wolfe, in Sydney. I W. B. Sölling.
remember two lots of American sheep being placed in our hands for sale; we offered Jones's lot on 24th 19 June, 1884.
October last—they comprised twenty-five ewes and fifteen rams; there were four or five lambs; they were not sold; at this time we also had twenty-nine rams on Shark Island belonging to Mr. Jones—this lot was not offered for sale; when the first lot was offered for sale the rams showed every appearance of having been dipped, but I do not think that some of the ewes had been dipped; I could swear, and do swear, that the ewes I saw at the sale had not the appearance of sheep which had been dipped, comparing them with the rams which had been dipped; I saw the same sheep afterwards at Summer Hill, and noticed that they looked very well, and still had the appearance of sheep which had not been dipped—this was on 2nd January last; if the ewes I refer to had been dipped on the 16th October, they certainly must have shown some appearance of it on the 24th of the same month; they had very heavy fleeces on them; I know that both lots of sheep belonging to Jones were taken to Maitland; Mr. Willows generally called in to say when he was going to dip any sheep we had in quarantine—he did not make it a special duty to do so; I see him very frequently; in speaking to Mr. Willows about the ewes which were heavy in lamb being dipped, and the consequent danger if they were dipped, I inferred from what he said that he would not have them dipped; I asked Mr. Willows to have special care taken in dipping the ewes in lamb, and, as before stated, I inferred that they would not be dipped; he assigned a reason, and said that the stuff would run from the ewes' fleeces on to their udders and get into the mouths of the lambs and kill them; I do not think they have been dipped—I mean the ewes which had the lambs; at Summer Hill Quarantine, on the 2nd January, I noticed that the eight or nine ewes which had not been dipped looked remarkably well—I never saw sheep looking better; the whole of Mr. Jones's sheep are now in quarantine at Mr. Wolfe's, at West Maitland.

On the 2nd January I saw the twenty-nine rams which had been at Shark Island, at Summer Hill; I opened the fleeces, and the wool looked bright and clean; the fleece had the tip on; they did not appear to have ever been dipped; the wool looked as beautiful and clean as any I ever saw; if they had ever been dipped, it must have been immediately after they had been shorn in September; I thought that the wool must have grown since they had been dipped.

In consequence of something I heard about Garland's sheep, my visit to the Summer Hill Quarantine was made on 2nd January; I went out expressly to see Mr. Garland's sheep; it was at this time that I examined the twenty-nine rams and noticed the bright condition of the wool; I had been out to the quarantine at Summer Hill a short time previously, and at that time I saw Mr. Garland's sheep where I afterwards saw ours; I remember seeing Mr. Garland's sheep at Tattersall's in November last; I examined them casually, going from one pen to another; some of them were very ragged—the wool was loose, and they were rubbing themselves slightly as if in a state of irritation—the wool was hanging out in locks; I said to Mr. Garland, who was present, "I do not think some of these sheep look very well—had you not better have them trimmed up?" Mr. Garland went straight over to Mr. Graves to tell him, as I thought, what I had said; I thought they might think I had been interfering, so I left; I noticed that the sheep had dark patches on them; the reason I spoke to Mr. Garland about the appearance of the sheep was because he had confided in me with respect to them.

On the 12th October last, or a day or two before, I met Mr. Garland in Pitt-street; he told me that he thought his sheep at Bradley's Head were scabby; he asked me if I knew scab; I answered that I did not—I had never seen it; I then asked him, "Have you been to the Department?" he said, "I have just come from there now;" he appeared very anxious and excited about the matter, in fact so much so that when I met him I said, "Whatever is the matter, Mr. Garland?"

Immediately after I saw Mr. Garland I saw Mr. Willows; I said, "What about the sheep at Bradley's Head—have you decided to dip them?" I meant the sheep generally; Mr. Willows gave me no answer as to what he was going to do, but I then informed him that Mr. Garland told me that he thought scab had broken out amongst his sheep, and that he had reported the matter to the Department; Mr. Willows then said that Mr. Bruce was going down to inspect the sheep, and that he (Mr. Willows) would let me know the result.

I saw him the following day, and he told me Mr. Bruce said it was not scab, but that it had been decided by Mr. Bruce to dip the sheep; I said, "What is the use of dipping the sheep if they are not scabby?"

In a letter dated the 12th October, 1883, addressed to Mr. Bruncker, at West Maitland, I informed him that I had heard scab had broken out at Bradley's Head Quarantine, and that Mr. Willows informed me they had decided to dip the sheep, and that Mr. Jones's lot at Shark Island were to be dipped on the following Tuesday. [Extract handed in, Appendix M.]

Mr. Willows told me distinctly at the time he was informing me of the inspection of the sheep at Bradley's Head that he (Mr. Willows) did not know scab and had never seen it.

After the report of scab having broken out at the quarantine an order was issued that no one should be allowed access to the quarantine without a written order; previous to this I had access to all the quarantines.

It was in consequence of Mr. Roberts informing me that he was sure Garland's sheep were scabby that I went out to Summer Hill Quarantine, and I examined them closely with a magnifying glass; we did not see anything, but we did not know how to set about looking for scab, as we knew nothing about the disease; some of Garland's sheep were so bad that they laid down and scratched and bit themselves, and would not get up if you kicked them; when I caught the skin between my finger and thumb they turned round and bit me.

A Mr. Johnson, who is in the employ of Messrs. Bruncker & Wolfe, was with me when I examined Garland's sheep. When the sheep were at Bradley's Head I noticed that they had been spotted;
Laycock

W. B. Sölling. Laycock told me that Mr. Willows had given him stuff to dress them with; Laycock told me that the sheep were no better than when they first arrived, and that he was dressing them with Little's Fluid used very strong; Laycock said that he was continually spotting them.

19 June, 1884

Mr. Roberts always expressed himself as anxious that his sheep should never be allowed to go near Garland's; he said, sooner than that they should do so he would cut their throats, he was so sure that his (Garland's) sheep were scabby.

After seeing the sheep at Summer Hill on the 2nd January I saw Mr. Bruce at his office; I asked him when Mr. Garland's sheep were going up country, and he told me they were going on the 18th of that month; I then asked him if he had seen the sheep lately; he said, "No," but that Mr. Pottie had; I then asked him if he would see them before they went up the country; he said, "Why, don't you think they are right?" I said, "I don't know, but I don't think they should go up country"; I then asked him if he knew where they were going; he said he thought up the Southern line; I then left him.

I did not see the sheep at the Summer Hill Quarantine after seeing them on the 2nd January.

A few days after I had the conversation with Mr. Bruce, Mr. Weaver called at our office in Hunter-street; I asked him where they were taking Mr. Garland's sheep to; he answered, "Some scrubby place up along the line"; I said that they would all soon die then; I said, "Have you seen the sheep lately?" and he said, "Yes"; I said, "They are all scabby"; he said, "No, they are not"; "Well," I said, "they are not in a fit condition to leave the quarantine, and if ever they are sent up the country there will be a big row over it"; he said, "I think so too, but they are not scabby."

I hand in as an extract from a letter (Appendix N) addressed to Mr. J. W. Bruncker, West Maitland, by me, on 2nd January, 1884, relative to the condition of Mr. Garland's sheep at Summer Hill.

Denis Kearney, being duly sworn, states:—

D. Kearney.

My name is Denis Kearney; I am a shearer; I remember shearing some sheep for Messrs. Bruncker & Wolfe in December last, at the Summer Hill Quarantine; there were rams and ewes and some lambs; I do not remember the number—I should say there were about a score of ewes.

19 June, 1884.

The wool I sheared off the ewes had the appearance of ordinary greasy wool; the wool was dirty on the outside; the wool off the rams was much cleaner than that on the ewes.

I have sheared sheep at Shark Island, and on that occasion the wool was clotted and ropy and discoloured; I understood they had been dipped.

The sheep I sheared at Shark Island were different to me in cutting the wool to those I sheared at Summer Hill.

Anthony Willows, further examined on oath, states:—

24 June, 1884.

I never treated Garland's sheep for over-heating of the blood alone; I said and reported that the sheep were generally out of order, and that their blood was out of order from dry food. In treating them for eye disease I gave them medicines which would cool their blood; I thought the blindness was from this cause and from the glare of the sun; I do not think the spots on their bodies were caused by the heat of the blood; the spots I saw were caused by the seeds; my attention was never drawn to any spots which were caused by heat of the blood or which looked like it.

I did not leave for Tasmania until about two months after the time that Mr. Bruce and I inspected the sheep together.

QUARANTINE REGULATIONS FOR STOCK, &c.

APPENDIX.

A.

Supplement to the New South Wales Government Gazette. Thursday, 17 May, 1883.

New South Wales, to wit.—AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, Governor.

PROCLAMATION by His Excellency the Right Honorable Lord AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

WHEREAS by a Proclamation dated the eleventh day of January, 1882, issued under the 10th section of the Act of Parliament of New South Wales, passed in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled the "Imported Stock Act of 1871," and numbered six, the importation or introduction into this Colony of all horned cattle or sheep, fodder, or fittings, from any Colony or Country other than the Colonies of Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania, Western Australia, and New Zealand, is absolutely prohibited for the period of two years from the eleventh day of January, 1882; and whereas it is considered that sheep may, under proper regulations, be now imported into this Colony from the United States of America without incurring any risk of introducing any infectious or contagious disease: Now therefore I, Lord AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, the Governor aforesaid, with the advice of the Executive Council, do hereby withdraw the Proclamation aforesaid, so far as regards the introduction of sheep from the United States of America, and declare that the same may be imported or introduced into this Colony, subject to the following regulations, namely:—

1. No introduction of sheep shall take place from any of the said States in which any infectious or contagious disease not known in Australia exists.
2. All such sheep intended to be introduced into this Colony shall be taken direct from the place from which they start to the port of shipment; and if they do not travel on foot they shall be conveyed in a goods waggon or horse-box, and shall not be put into any conveyance, stable, or other place where cattle, sheep, goats, or pigs have been within the next preceding sixty days; and the shipper of such sheep shall, if called upon, make a statutory declaration that the requirements of this regulation have been duly complied with.
3. All such sheep, prior to their being shipped for this Colony, as well as all cattle, sheep, goats, pigs, or other animals put or to be put on board the same vessel as the first-mentioned sheep, for the use of the passengers or crew, shall be carefully inspected by a duly qualified Veterinary Surgeon appointed in that behalf for this Colony.
4. The exporter of such sheep shall produce to the Veterinary Surgeon inspecting the same a certificate from the seller or owner of such sheep, to the effect,—(1st.) That they had been in the State from which they came for a period of not less than sixty days; (2nd.) That they are free from infection; and (3rd) that they had not within the sixty days next preceding been in contact with infection; and such certificate shall be endorsed as correct by the Inspector of Stock for the district in which such sheep were when sold for exportation or from which they started for the port of shipment.
5. If the Veterinary Surgeon be satisfied that the sheep intended to be introduced into this Colony, and the cattle, sheep, or other animals put on board, or to be put on board for the ship's use, are free from infection, and that all the other requirements of the said Act and of these regulations have up to that time been duly complied with, he shall grant a certificate to that effect, in the form of Schedule A hereto, and shall deliver the same to the captain of the vessel, together with the certificate required by No. 4 of these regulations.
6. The skins of all cattle, sheep, or other animals which may have died or been slaughtered on board any such vessel during the voyage, and not destroyed or thrown overboard, shall be salted and securely packed in cases or casks, and shall not be landed in this Colony.
7. The captain of the vessel on which such sheep are and their attendant shall, during the voyage, make a daily entry in books to be kept by them for that purpose, of the state of the health of such sheep and of the stock put on board for the ship's use, and shall deliver over the same to the Officer of Customs first boarding such vessel on her arrival at the port in this Colony at which it is intended to land such sheep, together with a declaration in the form of Schedule B hereto, and the certificates and all other documents relating to such sheep hereinbefore mentioned.
8. On the arrival of a vessel from any of the said States at a port in this Colony with sheep on board, the Captain shall give the Inspector of Stock for such port immediate notice of their arrival.
9. All such sheep shall forthwith be examined by a Veterinary Surgeon duly appointed in that behalf, and by the Inspector of Stock, and they shall determine whether or not such sheep are infected and grant a certificate accordingly; and no such sheep shall be landed until such certificate be granted.
10. If any sheep be found to be infected they shall be forthwith destroyed, whether the same were intended to be landed or not.
11. All such sheep found on inspection to be free from infection shall before leaving the vessel be washed and disinfected as the Chief Inspector shall direct, and shall be conveyed by water to the quarantine set apart for imported stock.
12. Imported sheep intended to be landed in this Colony shall remain in quarantine for a period of not less than ninety days, during which they shall be kept at their owner's expense, and shall be washed and disinfected as the Chief Inspector shall direct; and such sheep shall not leave the quarantine until they shall have been examined by a Veterinary Surgeon and Inspector, and declared by them to be free from infection.
13. All cattle, sheep, or other animals put on board any such vessel, for the use of the passengers or crew, and removed to quarantine, shall remain there until the vessel is about to leave the port, when they may be reshipped, on the order of the Chief Inspector of Stock.
14. No fodder put on board any vessel with or for the use of cattle, sheep, or other animals, shall be landed in this Colony.
15. All fittings used for, with, or about such cattle, sheep or other animals, and all effects belonging to their attendants, shall be disinfected as the Chief Inspector may direct.

SCHEDULE A.

Certificate and Declaration by Veterinary Surgeon at Port of Shipment of Soundness of Stock.

I, the undersigned duly qualified Veterinary Surgeon, having made a thorough inquiry respecting, and a careful examination of, the live-stock about to be shipped from the port of _____ by the _____ of which is the Master, for the Colony of _____ which are more particularly described in the Schedule below, and having made a like inquiry in regard to, and examination of, the stock about to be put on board the said vessel for the use of the passengers or crew thereof particulars of which are also given below), do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, none of the said stock are infected or likely to be infected with any infectious or contagious disease.

DIRECTIONS FOR USING LITTLE'S FLUID.

FOR SHEEP AND LAMB DIPPING.—As this Fluid is now 20 per cent. stronger than formerly, it will dip 20 more sheep to the gallon, say one gallon of Fluid to 120 gallons of cold water; but if used at the strength of one gallon to 100 gallons of water, ticks and other insects are killed instantaneously, and the good effect on the wool is still more perceptible. The water must be poured on the Fluid, and not the Fluid on the water. Stir well while mixing. For bottling, or as a dressing for animals suffering from foot-and-mouth disease, ringworm, foot-rot, &c., use double the above strength. Where procurable, it is better to use rain or soft water for mixing, and not brackish; where brackish water is plentiful, first mix with a little fresh and then add the brackish. Shake the casks or drums well before mixing.

FOR CURING SCAB.—The Fluid can be used 1 part to 100 (same as for tick), and the sheep bottled or dipped, and allowed to remain in the solution two or three minutes. This should be repeated on the eighth day, and in very bad cases a third dressing will sometimes be required. This will effect a complete cure, and the constitution not only be uninjured but strengthened.

PROTECTION AGAINST THE FLY.—Mix two pounds of sulphur with each gallon of concentrated Fluid; stir well up and shake the tin each time before use, and then apply same as for dipping.

FOR INTERNAL USE TO CURE WORM IN THE THROAT IN LAMBS.—Mix 1 part of Fluid with 100 parts of rain or soft water. About two tablespoonfuls may be given to each lamb once a week for a month. Two teaspoonfuls of the Fluid to a pint of water will make a strength of 1 to 50; at this strength it will be found invaluable for washing horses, dogs, or cattle, also for washing any kinds of wounds that are at all likely to fester; of half this strength it acts as a disinfectant.

Dips in which sulphur and lime have been used should be cleansed, as lime prevents the Fluid from mixing.

DISEASES IN SHEEP ACTS AMENDMENT ACT OF 1882.

THE following Regulations, made by His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, in accordance with the provisions of the abovenamed Act, are hereby published for general information.

Duration of quarantine and number of dressings.

1. The duration of quarantine for imported sheep arriving by sea from any of the Australian Colonies shall be not less than ten days.

Medicaments for dressing.

2. The medicaments to be used in the dressing of sheep shall be any of the following:—

(i.) Tobacco and sulphur, 1 lb. each to 5 gallons of water.

(ii.) Lime and sulphur, in the proportion of 4 ozs. sulphur to 2 ozs. lime, and 1 gallon water to 6 ozs. of the mixture.

(iii.) Little's Chemical Fluid, at a strength of one part of the fluid to fifty of water.

(iv.) Each dressing shall be administered at the temperature and in the manner directed by the Chief Inspector of Sheep.

Quarantine charges.

3. The rates to be charged for the keeping and dressing of imported sheep whilst in quarantine shall be as follows:—

	s.	d.
Sustenance and attendance, for every day or part of a day, each sheep.....	0	6
Administering three dressings, each sheep	2	6

SCAB IN SHEEP AND ITS CURE.

By ALEXANDER BRUCE, Chief Inspector of Sheep for New South Wales.

LIME AND SULPHUR DRESSING.

SINCE this pamphlet was originally published, lime and sulphur has been recommended by Dr. Rowe, Campaspe, Victoria, as a cure for scab in sheep, and has been found to be very efficacious. It is cheaper than tobacco and sulphur, and in ordinary cases more easily obtained; and, where any doubt exists as to the quality of the tobacco, the lime and sulphur dressing should be used in preference. It is prepared as follows:—

Take flowers of sulphur and fresh slaked stone lime, and pass them separately through a fine sieve, removing all the lumpy portions. The sulphur and the lime, after being weighed separately, should be put together dry, in the proportion of 4 ozs. sulphur to 2 ozs. lime; and, having been thoroughly mixed, should be carefully stirred into water nearly boiling, in the proportion of 1 gallon of water to 6 ozs. of the mixture, and boiled for about twenty-five minutes.

It is then fit for use, and should be applied at a heat of not less than 110° Fahrenheit, nor should the sheep be kept in the bath less than one minute. In no case should the dressing be prepared more than one day before it is used; if longer, it becomes unfit.

The dressing should be applied in the same manner as tobacco and sulphur, and repeated in the same way.

SCAB IN SHEEP.

CAUSE.

THE scab in sheep is commonly known as an eruptive affection of the skin, very highly contagious, and accompanied with an almost incessant itching. It is caused by a minute insect like the horse mite, but smaller, and known as the scab acarus Sarcoptes ovis. It may be conveyed from one sheep to another, either by actual contact, or indirectly by being left in old yards or camping grounds where diseased sheep have been folded, or in wool hanging to trees or fences against which these sheep have rubbed, and with which the clean sheep afterwards come in contact.

In Australia scab has been caused solely by contagion. It is true that at first some cases were attributed to spontaneous generation consequent on ill-treatment or the poverty of the sheep; but fuller inquiry showed they were due to contagion—and sheep have thousands of times been subjected to all sorts of bad treatment and privation without originating this disease in a single instance.

2.—SYMPTOMS.

The symptoms of scab are generally to be looked for, in the first instance, on the sides of the shoulders, or along the back, or on the rump and near the tail; and they may be one or more of the following, namely:—

Biting, scratching, or rubbing.—On watching sheep for a short time in which scab has existed for a few days, if the weather be at all favourable, some of them will be observed to bite, rub, or scratch themselves very suddenly and keenly, much more so than when they are affected with grass-seeds, which causes them to exhibit the same symptoms; but when they are affected with grass-seeds the sheep bite, rub, and scratch in a comparatively slow and lazy manner.

The signs of biting may be a break, a light-coloured spot, or a dirty-looking, wet, knotty, and matted patch in the fleece, caused by gnawing; or there may be merely a moist spot or patch, generally indicated by a little cloud of flies settling upon it.

Sheep scratch themselves with their horns and their hind feet, and they rub themselves on fences, trees, or stumps. The signs of scratching and rubbing are abrasions or breaks in the fleece, and discoloration of it through scratching with their hind feet or rubbing on burnt logs.

Change in colour of fleece.—Besides the changes in the natural and healthy appearance of the fleece from biting, rubbing, or scratching, just noted, patches, of a small size at first, but which gradually enlarge, till they are in some cases larger than a man's hand, of an unhealthy, whitish, harsh, yokeless appearance, sometimes indicate the presence of scab. If arising from this disease (small patches of the same appearance are sometimes caused by grass-seeds) a dry thin scab will be found at the root of the wool on the patch thus indicated—the skin will be thick and discoloured, and if the disease be not checked by dressing, the wool would in course of time fall or be rubbed off; but in this description of scab (which may be termed the dry form) the wool adheres longer and more firmly than where the patch is green and moist. The dry form of the disease is generally met with on sheep in good condition, and at a season of the year—the height of summer—when the insect is comparatively inert.

Broken fleece and bare patches.—In an early stage of the disease there will be locks or pencils of wool sticking out from the fleece, and as it advances these pencils will spread into bare patches of different sizes, according to the length of time the disease has existed. These signs are caused by the wool (which loses its holding power through the insect destroying the vitality of the skin) being pulled, rubbed, or scratched off by the sheep; and they vary in size, from a spot no larger than a shilling—and only noticeable from the loose pencil—to a patch extending over half the sheep. If the disease be long neglected the sheep will present a miserably ragged appearance, and in some instances they will be all but naked.

This pencilly appearance is always to be met with more or less in every outbreak of the disease, but the attack is at times much more pencilly than patchy. This is especially the case in re-outbreaks of the disease in flocks which have been dressed for scab, and is due probably to insects, which have remained undestroyed on the run for a longer period than the dressing protected the sheep, again settling on them, separately, though often in considerable numbers.

Changes in the skin.—The skin of the affected part, in the early stage of the disease, say the third or fourth day after the infection is conveyed, will have lost its beautifully delicate pink colour, and will be of a pale bluish green tint, and somewhat thick in texture, while a small clear white scab (a small patch or spot of dried lymph) will have gathered round the point where the insect entered the skin. In the course of five or six days more this spot, or pustule as it is sometimes termed—although it seldom or never assumes the shape of a pustule as generally understood—exhibits the appearance of a small patch of decided scab; and the exudation becomes thicker and of a greenish tinge. As the disease advances, the patches affected, which vary in size according to the duration of the disease, are gradually denuded of wool, and the skin, where the disease is active, becomes thick, and assumes a decidedly unhealthy green and watery appearance (an unmistakable symptom of scab), exactly like the outer or hairy side of a piece of moist green bullock hide, from which the hair has just been scraped, but with a discharge of greenish lymph exuding from it. This discharge—the amount of which of course depends upon the number of insects—with the dust and dirt, forms an incrustation or scab sometimes one-eighth of an inch in thickness. In any case there will be considerable scab on the patch; but as it increases in size with the progress of the disease, the scab gets generally dry and comparatively dead towards the centre of the patch, and is only green, wet, and active round the outer edges, where the insect is still at work.

As the disease progresses, and the patches increase in size, the skin on them will feel thick, harsh, and boardy; and if, at this stage of the disease, or even earlier, the skin of the affected parts be either scratched or pinched, the sheep will sidle up to and rub against the person scratching or pinching it, sometimes turning its head as if it would bite, and all the while moving its lips and tongue, as indicating its enjoyment: this is also an unmistakable symptom of scab.

These symptoms follow each other, and increase in fulness till the disease gradually spreads over the greater part of the sheep, and if not checked would eventually cause its death, the sheep wasting away and dying through the continued torture inflicted on it by the existence of the acari.

Except in a very early stage, scab is easily distinguished from all other cutaneous ailments and diseases to which sheep are subject—on the one hand by the symptoms described above, which are peculiar to scab, and on the other by contrast with the distinctive appearances, so well known to persons of ordinary experience among sheep, which denote grass-seeds, wounds, fever spots, prickly heat, and rubbers—the only ailments for which scab is at all likely to be mistaken.

Thus, in grass-seeds, either the seed, the slight swelling or gathering caused by it, or the wound, or mark of the wound, where the gathering has festered and broken, can always be detected; and where any doubt exists, an incision should be made in the suspected spot.

Wounds, hurts, and scalds plainly show what they are while open, and when healed up they do so by the mark or cicatrix they leave, and the thin, although hard, appearance which the skin exhibits around it.

Fever spots can be distinguished by the thinness, pliability, and healthiness of the skin on the denuded spots; and in the case of fever the fleece is generally weak all over, and easily detached from the skin, at any rate near the bare spot. Where the fever has been general all over the body, there can of course be no mistaking it. Prickly.

Prickly heat. A rash on the skin, generally following a fresh spring of grass after a long drought, is known among shepherds by this name. In this affection the skin, as in scab, assumes the same pale greenish appearance, while the sheep will bite and scratch very fiercely, and pustules will follow, but on examination it will be found that these pustules or pimples extend to every part of the sheep's body, and are more decided pustules and pimples than are to be met with in scab: they burst or break, in two or three days from their first appearance, and speedily disappear, leaving the skin quite healthy in appearance, and the sheep free from irritation.

Rubbers are confined to the portion of the sheep around and near the root of the tail, and although causing very great irritation and rubbing, with a thickening and slight discoloration of the skin, they never injure its pliability, nor does any scab arise on the affected part.

3.—ACARUS.

Appearance.—The following woodcut, copied from the work of M. Walz, one of the closest observers of the disease, exhibits the insect as seen with the naked eye and with the microscope.

FIG. 1.—The natural size of the insects, as seen with the naked eye on a dark ground—0·16—0·22" in length, and 0·16' 17" in width.

When seen with the naked eye at rest in the wool, or on the skin of the sheep, the live insect appears like a minute whitish round speck or object, such as that delineated in figure No. 1, and of the dimensions there given; the naked eye can, in a good light, also generally detect a brownish appearance at one end of the object, as well as the glistening pearly appearance which is so noticeable in examining the insect with the glass, and which is generally the first thing to attract attention when searching for it in that way.

In a good light, the brown anterior legs and suckers of the insect can be seen with the naked eye, if it be placed in an active state on a favourable surface—such as the blade of a knife, a piece of paper or glass, or on the finger-nail; and the legs and suckers may at times, under similar circumstances, be also observed in motion in the wool, as the insect crawls from one fibre to another.

The dead insect presents much the same appearance to the naked eye as it does while alive and in a state of rest; but when dead it soon loses its plumpness, and looks more or less shrivelled up, according to the time it has been dead: its body, too, becomes duller and darker, while the brownish colour of the head and anterior legs seems to increase, and the milk-white pearly appearance disappears.

Under a good *scab glass the live insect, if moving, or moderately lively, looks like a diminutive crab, somewhat longer than it is broad, but not so elongated as it appears to be from the accompanying woodcut, with a glistening or pearly milk-white, plump body, and a small head, from which two suckers appear to protrude. The head and suckers are of a brown colour, as are also the legs, one of which appears to be attached to each shoulder, and one to each side of the body near its posterior extremity. The suckers and legs, which are very distinctly seen with the plano-concave glasses, as the insect crawls or moves in the wool, or on some plane surface, seem to be less, proportionately, than they appear in the accompanying woodcut, and the posterior appendages are barely discernible.

When disinclined to move, the insect has much the same appearance under the glasses as above described, except that the legs, suckers, and appendages appear to be all gathered under or close to the body. When on its back, and in a state of rest, these are distinguishable as slight brown streaks; while, if it be on its face, only slight traces of the anterior legs and suckers (in the shape of small brown spots) are noticeable; and the existence of the posterior legs is denoted by spots of the same colour, even more minute.

The dead insect under the glasses presents similar appearances to those now stated, except that the body is flat and shrivelled up, and the suckers, legs, and appendages are less distinguishable, and look stumpy, as if portions of them had been broken off.

Under the Codrington lens the insect, in an active state, is seen more distinctly than under the glasses; and what appeared as a single leg turns out under the lens to be two—thus making the insect an octopod; while the suckers, legs, and appendages are plainly visible. It is, however, when the acarus is in a state of rest that the lens is most useful, in showing distinctly that the object under observation really is an insect.

Detection.—Although scab in sheep may be unmistakably recognized by the symptoms which have been noticed above, the insect should in every case where the disease is active be demonstrated, and it is generally easily found. The readiest mode of doing so is to pluck a lock or two from the fleece at the edge of a green patch of scab, or of a patch where the disease is comparatively recent, and subject the wool thus plucked from the fleece, in a good light (in the sun, and holding it up), to a close scrutiny with the naked eye, gently pulling the wool apart as the examination proceeds, when the insect, if present, will be detected in the shape of the minute speck or object already described.

Where a scab glass or magnifier cannot be obtained, there are several ways of ascertaining whether or not the object noticed be an insect. The first thing is to get it from the wool, and this may be done by picking it out with a blade of a penknife, slightly moistened, so as to cause the speck to adhere to it, and gently moving the object along and away from the fibre. If the day be hot, and the speck be a living insect, it will, on being allowed to remain on the knife, † make for the

* The best description of scab glass is that sold by Messrs. Flavelle Brothers, Sydney, having two plano-concave glasses, from about three-quarters of an inch to one inch in diameter, and one-sixth of an inch apart at one end, and a Codrington lens at the other. The plano-concave glasses having the wider field, will of course be used in the first instance, till the insect, or something resembling it, be detected, when, if any doubt exists, the Codrington lens can be turned upon it, and will show what the object actually is.

the under or shady side of the blade, moving at the rate of about an inch a minute. A puff of tobacco smoke is a good mode of starting the insect into activity. Where a glass or lens is available, the question as to whether or not the object on the knife be an insect can of course be readily settled.

Where the insect cannot be readily detected with the naked eye in a lock of wool plucked from the affected part, it can with care invariably be so on the skin or at the roots of the wool, at or near the diseased patch; and in searching for it there, after having in the first place examined the diseased or green portion of the patch, the wool should be laid open at right angles to, and for 4 or 5 inches from its outer edge, and the roots of the wool and skin along the lines thus exposed should be subjected to a careful scrutiny, when, if the insect be present, it can be picked up with a knife or pin. This is a good plan to adopt, for another reason: patches of scab which do not exhibit any outward sign of their existence are thus exposed, and the course and extent of the disease more fully traced.

The acarus when present can thus generally be detected with the naked eye, but it is sometimes necessary to use a scab glass of a moderately large field to find it, especially in cold weather, when the insect will be found at the roots of the wool, or perhaps partially buried in the scab or scurf. Where, therefore, a search with the naked eye is unsuccessful, the examination should in every case be continued with the glass, in the wool both on and off the sheep, and on the skin.

It has been said that the insects shortly after death moulder into dust, and cannot be found. This is not the case, for dead insects have been found in the pelt of a diseased sheep, more than two months after it was taken off; but to find them in this way the skin must not be shaken or knocked about. Dead insects can also be detected on a badly affected sheep shortly after dressing. In the case of the living sheep, however, it would seem that not only are large numbers of the acari, as they die, washed off in the dip, but they are also shaken out of the fleece after it is dry, by the motion of the sheep, as after death they can possess no holding power.

Habits and nature.—Where the acari effect a lodgment on a sound sheep, their procedure is thus lucidly sketched by M. Walz:—"If one or more female acari are placed on the wool of a sound sheep, they quickly travel to the root of it and bury themselves in the skin—the places at which they penetrated being only distinguishable by minute red spots, about the size of the point of a pin. * * * * About the sixteenth day the mothers again appear, with their little ones attached to their feet, and covered with a portion of the shell from which they have emerged. These little ones immediately set to work and penetrate the neighbouring skin, burying themselves beneath it, where they find their proper nourishment, and grow and propagate until the poor animal has myriads of them to prey on and torment it—every litter of the parasites comprising from eight to fifteen little ones; and it is not wonderful that the sheep should speedily sink and die."

"Some male acari," the same author states, "were placed on the skin of a sound sheep, where they, too, burrowed and disappeared for a time, and the pustules duly arose; but the itching and scab soon disappeared without the employment of any remedy." Kucheumeister, on parasites, says that the acari "bore passages beneath the epidermis, from which the little hexapod brood, which grows quickly and soon becomes octopod, issues in about eleven to sixteen days." He adds that, "Hertarg's experiments in inoculation (transferring the sheep acari to other animals) gave no result"; and it is now a well ascertained fact that the scab parasite or mite peculiar to one class of animals will not propagate on another.

The acari attack all sheep, whether they be fat or lean; and, although they almost invariably originate the disease in the sheep with which they come in contact, they are far more certain to do so, and to thrive and propagate in a poor miserable sheep than in one in good condition and very robust health. Thus, we not unfrequently see little lots of pet sheep, in high condition, running on infested ground, escape the disease, when others (almost any others but pet sheep) in less robust health would have been certain to have become contaminated.

The circumstances most favourable to the existence and increase of the acari are, moderately warm and moist weather, a full fleece, and a low condition of the sheep; and, if a low swampy run be added, with crowded dirty yards, and heaps of old dung, its development and spread will be most rapid and destructive; for not only are sheep in crowded yards in a position where the acari can pass readily from one sheep to another, but, unless in the height of winter, the acari are more active in the evening and at night than during the day.

In very warm dry weather, such as is generally experienced in summer in districts like the Bogan, the lower parts of the Lachlan, Murrumbidgee, and Murray, and the country to the north-westward of these districts, the insect is comparatively inactive, and does little more than hold its ground; while, in cold frosty weather, again, it is also somewhat slow in its increase.

The reason that the insect in the first instance is almost always found on the sides of the shoulders, the back, or rump, would seem to be that those are the portions of the sheep with which it first comes in contact, either in rubbing against other sheep, or against fences and trees. This feature in the attack of the acari has also been attempted to be accounted for through the wool on the parts indicated being longer and closer, and more likely to shield them from the cold and light.

The insect dislikes going a second time over the same ground in the same attack; thus, where the disease has been of some standing, and the patches rather large, the skin may have become thin and sound, with a nice crop of new wool on it, on one portion of the patch where the insect had once been at work and caused the wool to fall off; while on another portion of the same patch, the skin is bare, thick, and green, and the disease quite active. This is an appearance which is apt to puzzle a person slightly acquainted with scab.

Unless the pelt be quite recently taken off the sheep, the live insects can very seldom be detected in it, as they leave it soon after, or, at any rate, when it begins to dry. It is necessary, too, in order to preserve insects intended to be kept for examination or experiments (although they may be placed in locks of wool) to put them in a securely corked bottle. Even in such a position as this they have been found to forsake the wool and take up their quarters and breed in the cork; and it would seem that the instinctive desire which they possess for burrowing—whether that be for the purpose of escaping from the light, for breeding, or in search of food—leads the insects to quit those substances in which it cannot carry out this propensity, and take to those in which it can do so. It will thus be seen why infested sheep-yards, where there is an accumulation of manure, are so likely to convey the disease, and how necessary it is that where there is much dung it should be burned, for in ground where scabby sheep have been folded or yarded for any length of time, there must be thousands of living acari left in the dung.

From what has been said it will be gathered that the fecundity of the scab acarus is very great, and both experience and observation go to show that its complete destruction and eradication is very difficult indeed, both on this account and also from its tenacity of life.

With respect to its tenacity of life, which is the characteristic principally affecting the question of a cure of the disease; in Australia the insect has been known to live for weeks in water, for five or six weeks in a dry sitting-room, and, according to Dr. Thornton, for nearly three months in a glass cell. Not only so, but that gentleman states, in a subsequent communication, that insects confined in this way bred and propagated for nearly two years, the one race dying off as the new brood arrived at maturity. It has also been no uncommon occurrence for sheep to receive the infection from yards and trees in which the acari must have existed for several weeks after leaving the scabby sheep on which they were propagated.

In climates, again, such as that of Great Britain, and some of the colder and more upland districts of Victoria and New South Wales, the insects or their eggs, in favourable situations, live throughout the winter in a torpid state, and become active when the warm weather of spring sets in. In such climates it is advisable to give sheep which had been cured in the middle or end of summer, or during the winter, a precautionary dressing in the following spring.

It is questionable how far the insects, and their eggs and young which are buried in the skin when sheep are dressed, can be reached and destroyed by the dressing. At any rate, all experience goes to show that, whether from its being all but impossible to administer a single dressing to a flock of sheep without some omission or error, or from the insects or their increase being protected by the scab or by the skin in which they are embedded, a single dressing is not to be relied upon, and the system of dressing a second time at such an interval as would allow the young of the insect—which may be in an embryo state in the skin when the first dressing is administered—to be developed, and on the surface of the skin where the dressing could take effect on them, has been universally adopted to ensure success.

II.—THE CURE OF SCAB.

1.—ITS PRINCIPLES.

It will be gathered from the foregoing remarks that it is necessary, in order to effect a permanent cure of scab in sheep, in the first place, that the sheep be dipped and re-dipped in some "curative," i. e., a medicament which will completely destroy both the acari and their eggs; and, in the second place, that the sheep which have been thus thoroughly dressed should either be immediately removed to a clean run, or that such a thorough and lasting "disinfectant,"—i. e., a preservative against against re-infection,—should be used with the “curative” as would ensure the protection of the sheep from the acari existing on the infected runs, for a period beyond that during which the insect could possibly live in any other situation than on the sheep.

In early days the former course was adopted in Australia, as there was then plenty of spare clean ground to which the sheep could be removed on being dressed, and a permanent cure was generally effected.

2.—TOBACCO AND SULPHUR CURE.

History.—As, however, the country became so thickly stocked as to render it impracticable to find fresh pasturage for such sheep on their being dressed, the other alternative—the employment of a lasting disinfectant with the curative—became necessary. Among other specifics for this purpose sulphur was tried, but with such fluctuating success that its qualities as a disinfectant of sufficient duration to outlive the insect were for some time very much doubted. It was not until 1854 that Mr John Rutherford, then of Hopkins’ Hill, and now of Yarra Wonga, Upper Murray, Victoria, by properly apportioning the quantities of tobacco and sulphur (viz., 1 lb. of each to 5 gallons of water), and by dipping the sheep twice at an interval of from ten to twenty-one days, in a careful and systematic manner, fairly established the character of sulphur as a lasting “disinfectant,” while he at the same time confirmed the belief in tobacco as a most effective “curative” which, although very destructive to insect life, is comparatively innocuous to that of animals.

Result in Victoria, South Australia, and New South Wales.—On the Hopkins’ Hill Station, Mr. Rutherford, with two dressings of these ingredients, then cured over 52,000 sheep, which had been infected for eighteen months; and he also subsequently cured with two dippings the sheep on Mount Fyan’s Station, where they were in a most wretched state, and had been scabby for more than three years; and that, too, in both cases, without destroying a single hurdle or yard, or removing any of the sheep from their old runs.

Since then millions of scabby sheep have been permanently cured in Victoria in the same way, and in South Australia and New South Wales hundreds of thousands of scabby sheep have also been cleansed with tobacco and sulphur. In fact, this dressing has the credit of having eradicated scab from the flocks of both the latter Colonies; and there are good grounds for asserting that had this remedy not been known and used, neither Colony would be, as they both are now, almost entirely free from the scourge.

3.—TOBACCO AND SULPHUR AND OTHER DRESSINGS CONTRASTED.

The particulars of the dressings used in South Australia are not here adducible, but those of New South Wales are, as returned by the different inspectors, and they speak for themselves. They are as follow:—

Tobacco and sulphur cured 184,270, failing at first in some few instances, through the carelessness or ignorance of the operators; but in the end proving always successful. Of this number, about 116,000 had only two dressings—the regular course; about 17,000 had three, about 33,000 had four, and some 18,000 had five or more, owing to mismanagement in their application.

Allen’s Specific cured none, and failed in the case of 80,021.

Hayes’ Specific cured 6,255, and failed with 80,931.

Arsenic, and arsenic and tobacco (with fresh runs) cured 9,284, and failed with 9,271.

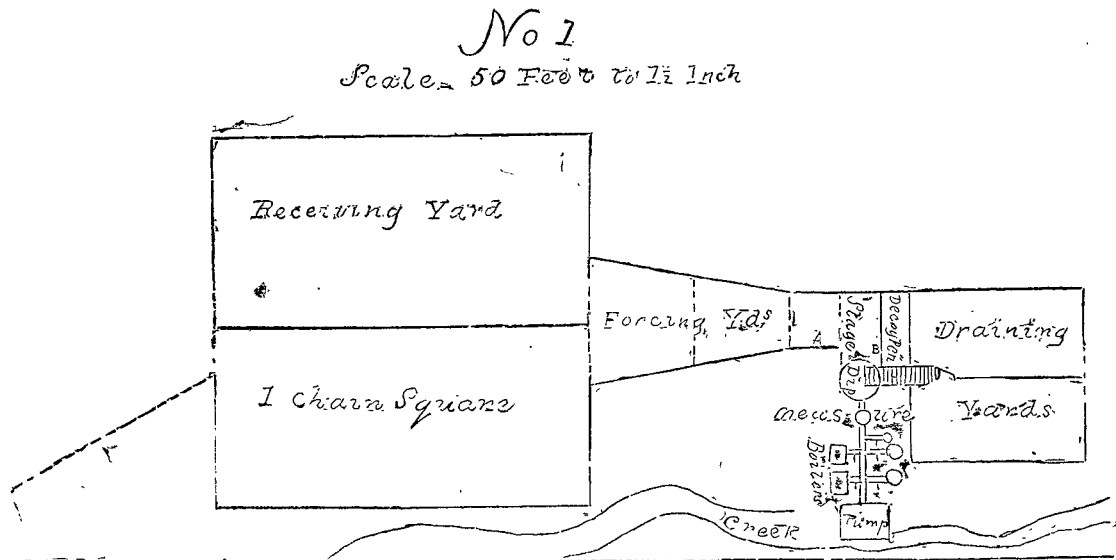

In England, too, and on the Continent of Europe, the faith in tobacco as the best curative for scab is still unchanged, as may be gathered from the following extract from the Scottish Farmer:—“Preparations of tobacco have as yet been recognized as the best for the destruction of the scab insect. Professor Gerlach, Director of the Veterinary College, Hanover, accords them the first position for this purpose, and farmers in this country seem to agree on this point.”

There may be other medicaments as effective as tobacco and sulphur, in the cure of scab, and perhaps cheaper; but if there are, and lastingly so, the fact has not as yet been established; and it would be the height of folly in an owner to make experiments in such a case, as nothing can possibly pay him so well as the speedy cleansing of his sheep; and he knows that tobacco and sulphur can effect this.

Experiments on a small scale on the efficacy of specifics for the cure of scab have proved thoroughly unreliable, for all these specifics which cured sheep at the trials which took place in Melbourne some years ago, failed completely when used on stations of even a moderate size; and it would seem that they did so principally from the want of a lasting disinfectant in their composition, such as sulphur has proved to be. Almost everything tried as cure for scab will be effectual on a small scale. Even soft soap and warm water frequently applied have cleansed a scabby sheep.

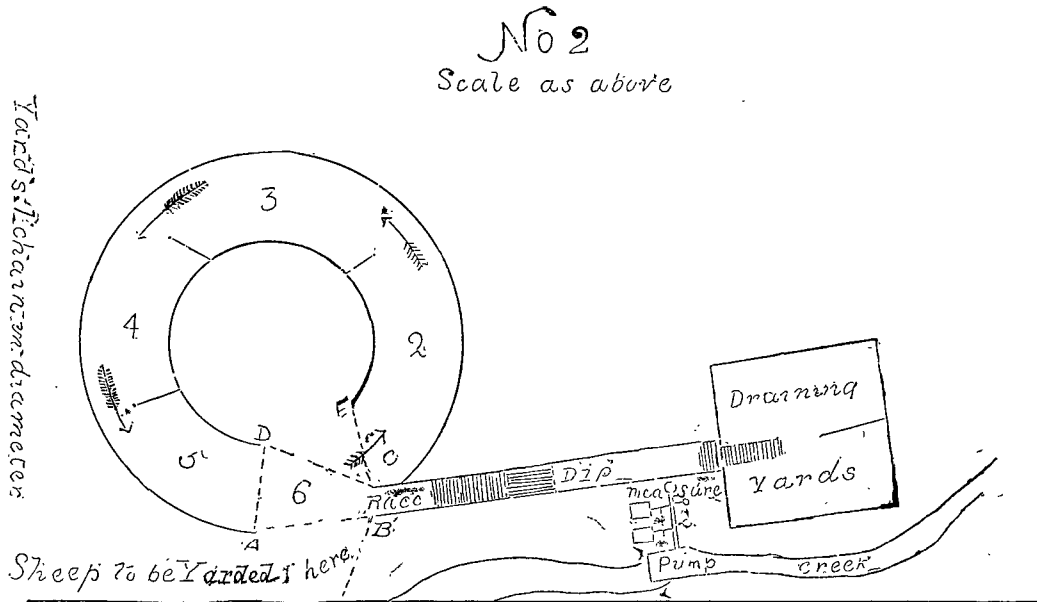

Preparations of corrosive sublimate, arsenic, sulphuric acid, and other poisonous ingredients, which have been and still are used to some extent as medicaments for the cure of scab, should be avoided, for the following reasons:—(1st) They are liable to poison the sheep if administered in the shape of a bath, and their application by hand is impracticable, considering the rate of wages and the number of sheep to be dressed; (2nd) to cause them to lose their teeth, and even to hurt their constitutions; (3rd) to bring on sloughing and ulcerations, which frequently carry numbers of them off; and, in the case of the arsenical dressing, cold wet weather following the dip is certain to cause a great many deaths*; (4th) to cause great loss of wool; (5th) to occasion painful sores on the hands, and even deaths, among the men dressing; and (6th) to be the means, through carelessness on the part of persons using the poison, of causing the death of animals, and sometimes even of human beings. Besides, the advocates for the use of any of these poisonous ingredients forget that they are only curatives, not disinfectants; and they will find on inquiry that the cures of former days, which they attribute to these medicaments, were only effected through placing the sheep on clean runs immediately after dressing, or perhaps through keeping up such a regular round of spotting or dressing with some of these ingredients as to continue their effect on the sheep beyond the term of the existence of the acari.

Judging, therefore, from the experience of the three Colonies, there is no medicament or specific yet known that can be compared with tobacco and sulphur, as a thorough and lasting cure for scab in sheep; and the best form of dips and appurtenances (the plans of which are here given), and the proper modes of preparing and applying this mixture, will now be described.

No. 2.

* In some instances during the last outbreak of scab in New South Wales the deaths from dipping with arsenic in winter were from 40 to 50, and in one flock as high as 80 per cent.

4.—ERECTION OF DIP, YARDS, AND APPURTENANCES.

The site.—The proper site for a dip is on the bank of a creek or water-hole, where the boilers can be placed so that a pump can lift the water into them by means of short spouts or pipes. It will of course be necessary also to keep in view that the situation is such as will allow ample room for the erection of the necessary yards, and for bringing in and taking out the sheep.

Receiving and forcing yards.—The receiving and forcing yards, which may be of several shapes, should not be fewer than five in number, and it will be found to add to the convenience and to expedite the work to have even more.

A very efficient style of receiving and forcing yards is the circular form (No. 2) planned by Mr. Rawdon F. Greene, of Melbourne, and now in use in several parts of Victoria, both for drafting and dipping sheep. In this plan it will be seen that the habit of "ringing," which all stock have when disturbed in a yard, is turned to account, and the sheep do of themselves to a great extent, and comparatively speedily, what any number of men and dogs can with difficulty accomplish in square yards.

It will also be seen that in this plan there are so many yards, and their shape such, that the sheep have not the same chance, even if they were so inclined, to pack and stop, as they have in the other form.

Another habit, or rather instinct of the sheep, is also taken advantage of, viz., the instinct which leads it to strive to make its exit at the place of entry: for the circular yards are so constructed that the sheep, when they get back to the gate at which they were yarded, will be close to the place where they are required,—at the entrance of the race leading into the dip. Thus, the sheep are yarded at the entrance AB, which is (say) four hurdles wide, whence they find their way into yards Nos. 1 and 2 at the entrances CD (four hurdles) and CE (two hurdles wide). On these being filled, the gates into yards 3, 4, 5, and what, when all the gates are closed, is yard No. 6, are opened, and the sheep expecting to escape at the gate at which they entered will run round in a continuous stream, if properly managed, till yard No. 6, and say 5 and 4 also are filled, when the gates of those yards should be closed. If the sheep be at all backward in moving, a man by jumping suddenly over the fence and running through the sheep in the opposite direction to that in which they are wanted to move (as is usually done in such cases) will start them off at once.

On the process of dipping being commenced the gate across the mouth of the race, at its junction with yard No. 6, should be opened, when the sheep will move into the race and thence into the dip. To accomplish this a narrow race is formed from forcing yard No. 6 to the dip, about 2 feet 3 inches wide, and about 20 feet long, the last 5 feet of the flooring of which should be dressed quite smooth, and should slope into the dip at an incline of from 25 to 30 degrees. The sheep, on reaching the incline, cannot stop themselves, but must slide into the dip. Where there is no natural fall in the ground, this slope is obtained by gradually raising the bottom of the race (which should be laid with cross battens to the commencement of the incline) till the proper turning point is arrived at. To prevent the sheep from jumping over the sides of the race, the fences on both sides of it, and especially as they approach the dip, should be of extra height, and they should also be extended for a short distance along both sides of the dip for the same purpose.

It will of course be seen that the fences of the smaller forcing yards, and those around the stage in form No. 1, should be of such a height and strength as will render it impossible for any of the sheep to break away; and it would be more convenient, as well as more secure, were slide-gates fitted up at the several gateways, where practicable, instead of hurdles. When the sheep are clean, these yards and gates can be turned to account in the erection of drafting or other yards; and if erected in the circular form, and conveniently situated, they might, even as they stand, when free from infection, be turned to use as drafting-yards, by making the race about 10 feet long instead of 20, and adding the necessary swing-gate and yards.

Although the circular receiving and forcing yards are specially adapted for the working of dip No. 2, they may be used for any form with very considerable saving of time and trouble; and it is for that reason they have been here so minutely described.

The

The stage.—In form No. 1 a stage around a portion of the dip will be necessary. If a tilt is to be used for throwing the sheep into the mixture, the stage will occupy only a small extent of the frontage; while, if they are to be thrown in by hand, it will require to be of sufficient size to hold about fifty sheep, and to be so constructed around the dip as will allow the men ample room to work in throwing in the sheep without extending too far around the sides, or too far back from the dip. There should in that case also be fittings at intervals along its extent to allow of a hurdle being put up, where required, to confine the sheep as the number on the stage becomes fewer, so as to prevent them from running about when being caught.

Blinds.—The fence at the back of the stage should be blinded, either with bark or with sacking, to keep the sheep in the yards from seeing the stage and dip; and a blind of sacking, such as is sometimes put up at sheep-washes, to work on a roller like a window-blind, should be erected on the edge of the stage next the dip, to hide it from the sheep till the stage is full.

In the circular form (No. 2) instead of the roller-blind, as in No. 1, a piece of sacking fixed across the race, at its junction with the dip, which should be loose at the sides and bottom, and should fall back into its place as the sheep dropped into the dip, is all that is required by way of a blind.

Decoy-pens.—These are necessary, in form No. 1, to save time in putting the sheep on the stage; and should be so placed that the sheep, looking to the entrance from the forcing yard to the stage, and from this again to the further end of the stage, would have a full view of those in the decoy-pens.

The dip.—There are several forms of dips.

No. 1.—The form first used and still generally so, and upon the whole the most convenient and efficient, is round, about 9 feet in diameter, and 8 feet deep in the clear, with draw-gate (C) $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet wide to work up and down in grooves in the side of the race, from the dip to the draining-yard. This race should be of the same width as the draw-gate, and from 10 to 15 feet in length, starting at about 2 feet from the bottom of the dip, and sloping upwards to a level with the bottom of the draining-yard. It is important to obtain the exit of the sheep as quickly as possible from the dip, as soon as the overseer is satisfied that they are properly dressed; and it is to attain this end that the draw-gate and race to the draining yard are made so wide.

In some instances oblong dips, about 20 feet in length, 4 feet wide at one end, and 2 feet 6 inches at the other, have been used; but the sheep are more liable to pack and ride in this form, and the process is less under the eye of the person in charge than in the round dip.

No. 2 is the form used with the circular receiving and forcing yards, and should be from 40 to 45 feet in length (which is longer than appears in the form given), and of a uniform width of 2 feet 3 inches throughout, with a pine float or draw-gate erected at the junction of the dip and gangway to the draining-yard.

In whichever of these forms the dip and race are constructed, they may be either of pine tongued and grooved and pitched, or of colonial timber sawn or in slabs. If the former be used, puddling may be dispensed with, although it would be advantageous in many cases. If the latter, it will be absolutely necessary to puddle all round and below the dip and race to a thickness of 2 feet, and in that case, also, to secure the slabs with stays attached to posts, put well into the ground behind the dip.

There should be a depression at the bottom of the dip on the side next to the boilers, for collecting the mixture, when it is required to be cleaned out.

In order at all times to know the depth of the mixture in the dip, it should be gauged and marked, at (say) every 3 inches, and the number of gallons corresponding to the different measurements should also be marked on the sides.

Movable water-tight covers should be made for the dip and race to the draining yard; or where bark is plentiful, and a large number of sheep are to be dressed; it might be well to put a roof over the dip and race, which would render water-tight covers unnecessary.

Gangway to draining-yards.—On the bottom of the race leading from the dip to the draining-yards a framing of battens is to be placed, so constructed as to give the sheep foot-hold to get out of the dip, and to allow the mixture to run back into it from the draining-yards.

Draining-yards.—These are to be constructed to hold from 200 to 300 sheep each, and they should be at least two in number, so as that, in turning out the sheep after dripping, those that are newly from the dip may not be turned out with those that are thoroughly dripped. The bottom of the draining-yards (which should have an incline from all sides to the race) should be lined throughout, the same as those of the race and dip; and over it should be placed a grating of battens, with the supports so laid down as to allow the drainage from the sheep to flow from all parts of the draining-yards into the race and thence into the dip.

Corrugated iron laid down in sheets on sleepers, with the fluting running longitudinally towards the dip, makes a very good and economical flooring for the gangway and draining yards. With a piece of batten nailed across the end of the sheet next the dip, and at each joint, the sheep can walk out steadily, and without slipping; and the mixture falling from the sheep is carried back without waste into the dip.

A movable sluice-gate should be constructed at the junction of the draining-yards with the race from the dip, and a spout or pipe should be affixed to an opening from that to a point clear of the dip, to run off any rain-water that might gather in the draining-yards, and prevent it from flowing into the dip. When in work the sluice-gate would of course be removed, and the opening to the spout or pipe closed.

5.—BOILERS AND UTENSILS.

Boilers.—Two square boilers, each capable of holding 400 gallons, for heating water, and two round ones of from 80 to 120 gallons each for infusing the tobacco, will be sufficient for a station with from 20,000 to 40,000 sheep. The boilers should have taps, to which iron spouts or pipes are to be attached, to carry their contents into the measure, and thence into the dip. Although the infusing boilers are here put down at from 80 to 120 gallons, it would be more convenient, but of course more expensive, that larger (say 400-gallon) boilers should be used. All the boilers should have covers; and it is essential that those on the infusing boilers should be perfectly air-tight, to prevent the escape in the steam of any of the curative properties of the tobacco while it is undergoing the process of infusion.

It is very important that there should be plenty of boilers, for otherwise it will be difficult to maintain the proper heat and strength; and, as 400-gallon square boilers can afterwards be turned to account as water-tanks, there ought to be no false economy in this respect.

Where a portable engine is available, it is a great convenience, both in keeping up the temperature of the mixture by turning the steam-pipe into it, and in cutting up firewood for the boilers; but it would be going too extravagantly to work to purchase an engine for these purposes.

Pumps.—There should be a pump (one of common sheet-iron would answer the purpose) to supply the water required from the creek or water-hole to the boilers and dip.

Measure.—In filling up the dip it is most important that the exact quantities of liquid added from time to time should be known, and for this purpose a cask, gauged and marked, should be placed between the boilers and the dip, with both of which it should communicate by means of spouts or pipes; and all liquids, of every description, should be passed through the measure before going into the dip, so that the quantity added might in every case be correctly measured.

Crutches.—The head of the crutch, which should be about 12 inches long, should be made of half-inch round iron, bent so as either to pull or push, something in the shape of an elongated letter S, with a handle 7 feet long attached to the middle of the head.

6.—PREPARING THE MIXTURE.

Infusing tobacco.—Supposing that the quantity to be dipped in is 2,000 gallons, and that the infusing boilers are of the sizes mentioned, it will be necessary to begin to prepare the mixture two days at least before the dipping is to be commenced; and the infusing of the tobacco is, at the beginning of the process, to be carried out exactly in the same manner as tea—boiling the tobacco in the first water being carefully avoided. Thus, 400 lbs. of good imported manufactured or leaf tobacco (that is, 1 lb. to 5 gallons of water, and it ought never to be less) is to be weighed out, and the infusing boilers having been nearly filled with water, and the water brought to the boiling-point—the fires are to be removed from under the boilers; from 80 to 120 lbs. of tobacco are to be put into each of them, and the covers carefully adjusted, to prevent the escape of any of the steam, which, as already stated, would carry off with it some of the more active curative properties of the tobacco. In six or eight hours draw off the infusion, and add fresh water to the tobacco in the boilers, which boil gently for two hours, keeping the steam from escaping by covering the boilers with gunny-bags or some such material, and draw off a second time, leaving the tobacco again in the boilers. To this add a third water, and boil for two hours more in the same manner, when the strength of the tobacco will be thoroughly exhausted. Carefully repeat this process of infusing and boiling, till the proper quantity to commence dipping with be made up.

Where

Where there is time to make the infusion previous to commencing to dip, it is a good plan to infuse the whole or nearly the whole of the tobacco required for the dressing, and to put the liquid away in casks, after filling up the dip. It can easily be seen how very convenient it would be—supposing the tobacco had been infused in water at the rate of 1 lb. of best tobacco to a gallon of water—in replenishing the dip, to do so by adding one bucketful of the infusion to four of clean hot water. In that case, as the infusion was made, the tobacco leaves would be put aside and afterwards boiled as directed, in the boilers supplying the hot water. Although the second and third waters no doubt contain some nicotine, and other ingredients destructive to insect life, these boilings should in practice be only reckoned as clean hot water. This plan of infusing the greater part of the tobacco previous to dipping must of course be always adopted when the requisite boilers cannot be obtained.

Of good sound colonial leaf tobacco it has been the practice to use from one-half to three-fourths more than imported to the same quantity of water; and, although it is likely there is not this actual difference in the curative properties of the two sorts, it is safer, until the matter be thoroughly tested, to use the larger quantities of colonial tobacco. When more tobacco is required to replenish the dip, it must be carefully weighed out according to the scale given above, and should be infused and boiled in exactly the same manner as now detailed.

Tobacco juice (not the liquor), of good quality, may, where procurable, be used instead of tobacco, but it should never be used without an analysis or a guarantee that it contains a certain amount of nicotine per gallon.

Mixing sulphur.—Weigh out 400 lbs. of sulphur (i.e., 1 lb. to 5 gallons of water) of which put (say) 100 lbs. into a tub or vat half filled either with the tobacco water from the infusing boilers, or with cold water, and stir and break the sulphur till it be thoroughly mixed and of the consistency of thick gruel, when it is to be poured into the dip. Repeat the process until the proper quantity of sulphur has been added, and, when requisite, replenish in the same manner as the dipping proceeds.

It is said to improve the bath—by rendering it more penetrating (especially where the water is hard)—to add 1 lb. of soda ash or 2 lbs. of common soda, to 40 gallons of the mixture.

7.—SPOTTING.

Although this practice is not absolutely essential, it is safer to adopt it, but not in the mode usually done. The old plan of spotting was to pick out the badly diseased sheep, and one man held them, either on their side on the ground, or standing up, and opened the wool on and near the affected spot, while another scarified it and poured some strong mixture from a bottle on the part thus exposed. The sheep treated in this way were mixed with the others, and run through the dip on the follow day.

The better plan is to draft out from the different flocks every sheep showing the least symptom of the disease into a “diseased” flock, and subject it to three or four dressings, both extra strong and extra hot; and it would be making the cure a certainty if the sheep in the “diseased” flock were handled, after the first dressing, and the dead scurf or scab and loose wool removed from and around the affected spots.

8.—DIPPING.

Mode of operation.—In order not to lose time in the morning waiting for the mixture to be ready, the large boilers should be filled with water the night before dipping is to be commenced, and fires lighted under them, which should be replenished by some one during the night.

As early as possible in the morning, add boiling water from the large boilers to the mixture of tobacco water and sulphur which has been prepared and put into the dip, until the proper quantity be made up, and until the mixture is of the right strength and at the proper temperature.

Supposing that the plan of the dip is No. 1, and that the sheep are in the receiving yards, and also that the pumps and other conveniences are complete, six hands besides the overseer will be amply sufficient to carry on the work—that is, one man to yard, two men to throw in the sheep, two men to crutch, and one man at the boilers, while the overseer would take his stand at the gangway to the draining yard, where he could overlook and control the process. It is necessary that all the hands should be men to be depended upon, but especially the person at the boilers, who should be both active and intelligent; and the same hands should stick to the same posts throughout.

The stage having been filled with sheep, and the dip with mixture to within 12 inches of the top, the men on the stage will commence and throw in any number which the overseer sees can be attended to at once in the dip. In the circular form of dip (No. 1) the sheep on being thrown in will generally make for the draw-gate, when the overseer with his crutch will turn their heads, and make them swim (say) twice round the dip, the crutchmen in the meantime using their crutches, and putting each sheep not less than twice over head in the mixture. When the overseer is satisfied that the sheep have had enough they are guided towards the draw-gate and put out into the race, whence they soon find their way into the draining-yards.

With dips made on the No. 2 principle, the process of putting the sheep into the mixture and treating them there will be somewhat different from that to be followed in No. 1. In No. 2, the supplies of sheep will require to be much less at a time, but more frequent and steady, so as to allow the work to proceed regularly and quickly, while the sheep are at the same time kept sufficiently long in the mixture. The crutchmen might not be able in this dip to give the sheep much of the crutch; but, being stationed at different points along the dip, they would be able to immerse each sheep twice completely over the head in the mixture, and the rest of the body oftener; while the length of the dip would ensure the sheep being sufficiently long in it for the dressing to take a proper effect.

As the mixture diminishes a fresh supply has to be made of the proper strength and heat, and, while there are many sheep to be run through, it should be kept as near the top of the dip as possible, for the nearer the sheep are to the men the more efficiently will they be able to use their crutches on them. In any case there should never be a less depth of mixture in the dip than 2 feet 3 inches, otherwise there would be a risk of breaking the sheep's legs when throwing them in.

Although 3,000 and even 4,000 sheep might be dressed in a day in a dip constructed on the No. 1 principle, and twice that number on No. 2, of the dimensions here given, the hands ought not to be hurried or bustled, and 2,000 in the former and 4,000 in the latter form is a sufficient number to run through in one day. This ought to be accomplished early in the afternoon, when the men can be employed preparing mixture for the following day; and the fires should during the dipping be kept up through the night. In cold weather dipping should cease early in the afternoon, so as to give the sheep's fleeces a chance of drying before night.

Duration and heat of bath.—When the fleece is short, the bath should be administered at a temperature of 120 degrees Fahrenheit in the winter, and at 110 degrees in the summer, at which it should be the endeavour to keep it throughout the dipping (the thermometer being tried every other dipful); and the sheep should be allowed to remain in the dip from 60 to 80 seconds, and as much longer as they can stand it; for with short fleeces they dry almost immediately after being put into the draining-yards, and if the bath was not severe both as to temperature and duration, they would stand less chance of being cured than if they were in full fleece or nearly so, whereby they take out and retain more of the mixture. As the mixture cools it will be necessary to keep the sheep longer in it, say from 1½ to 2 minutes altogether, but in no case should the temperature be allowed to fall below 100 degrees.*

When the fleece is long, the heat of the mixture should be maintained at a temperature of from 100 to 110 degrees in summer, and from 105 to 115 degrees in the winter; and the sheep should be kept in the dip nearly, though not quite, as long as when the fleece is short.

These periods are given by way of a guide, for the purpose of timing the process, which ought to be carefully attended to, but it will be for the overseer to see that, while the sheep are all thoroughly saturated and kept as long in the dip as they can stand it, none of them are detained till they are in danger of being drowned.

Management of sulphur.—In putting through the first and second dipfuls of sheep, it was at first found that some of them were killed, as has been generally supposed, by the fumes of the sulphur, which, when allowed to do so, collects, at the commencement of the dipping, on the surface of the mixture; and the practice has been to keep it well stirred up till the third or fourth lots have left the dip. This answers the purpose (although it is very doubtful if the losses occur from the cause to which they have been attributed), and, when attended to, there are no deaths. It

*While it only takes 30 seconds to kill the scab insect, with the mixture at 90 degrees, it will live for ten or twelve minutes in the same mixture at 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit. It will thus be seen how very essential a high temperature is to the success of the dipping, and, as a case in point, it may be stated that an owner at a long distance from Sydney ran short of materials, and effected a thorough cure with half the ordinary strength of ingredients, by keeping the temperature of the bath at fully 130 degrees. There is little doubt, too, if we are to judge by the experience of the process of incubation of eggs by artificial heat, but that the high temperature here given destroys many of the eggs of the insect, which, at the time of the dipping, are still in the skin, and not near maturity. Indeed, if the destruction of the aari and their eggs on the sheep were all that was necessary to a permanent cure, there are good grounds for supposing that this might be effected by the high temperatures sometimes attained in the Turkish bath, without the use of any medicaments.

It is necessary, too, that the sulphur, as the dipping proceeds, be kept stirred up from the bottom with a strong garden rake, or with the crutches where a rake cannot be got, so that each sheep may carry away a sufficient quantity of it in the wool. When examined after a proper dressing, the fleece should appear thoroughly peppered with the grains of the sulphur. The sulphur is not meant, as some suppose, to be dissolved. That (if practicable) would spoil its effect as a lasting disinfectant. Deposited as it is by the process here described in small grains in the fleece, it remains there for many months, and, on a hot day, with the breeze coming off the flock, it can be distinctly smelt in sheep which have been properly dressed, six or seven months after the dressing. Another end is served, too, by the sulphur being carried into and remaining in the fleece. It thus forms a coating over the skin of the sheep, which must, to a considerable extent, destroy any acari which may have been protected by being buried in the skin when the dipping was administered, and which, on coming to maturity, make their exit from the skin.

Second dipping.—One dipping, if carefully and thoroughly performed, as directed, is said, in some hands, to have made a cure; but the practice ought always to be to dip twice at an interval of from ten to twenty days to make the matter a certainty; for not only will any sheep which may have been imperfectly dressed at the first dipping be thus certain of being thoroughly so at the second, but all the acari which were in an embryo state in the skin at the first dipping, and thus escaped destruction, would, by the time the second was carried out, have reached maturity, and would be destroyed.

Third dipping.—This may be necessary at times, when any doubt whatever is cast upon the efficacy of the dressings administered. Thus, it is most essential, when sheep are exposed to a fall of rain, or allowed to go into water shortly after dressing, and especially so when their fleeces are short.

Lambs dipped.—Where lambs are dropped, about, or shortly after the second dressing given to their infected mothers, they should be properly dipped as soon as they are able to stand the operation, for, by running on the infected ground, they would otherwise stand a great chance of becoming diseased.

Rams dipped.—As rams are bad swimmers, care should be taken that they are not allowed to leave the dip until they are thoroughly dressed, which their heavy fleeces and twisted horns render somewhat difficult. They should of course be put through by themselves, and no more than seven or eight of them should be put into the dip at once, while every part of their heads and necks should be thoroughly saturated.

Dipping stragglers.—Although it should happen, as it is to be hoped it will, that the two dippings effect a cure, the use of the dip will not then cease, for in or near a district where scab has existed, it ought to be an established rule with the sheep-owner, for at least twelve months after the last case of infection in or near his neighbourhood, that every sheep which has strayed off his run, or has mixed with those belonging to other runs, should, on recovery, be carefully dipped either once or twice, according to the character of the ground on which it was found, or of the sheep with which it had mixed.

When the sheep have all been run through, the mixture left in the boilers should be put into the dip along with that remaining in it, and salt, to the extent of (say) 1 lb. to 10 gallons, should be added, to prevent it from becoming fetid and useless; the dip gangway and race to the draining-yards should then be covered up, and the sluice-gate put in, and the spout opened at the junction of the gangway with the draining-yards. Where there is no mixture left, the dip should be filled with water, to keep it in a serviceable state.

9.—PORTABLE DIP (No. 3).

For stations with no more than (say) 5,000 sheep, small portable dips, made of 1½-inch pine boards tongued and grooved, and well pitched, or of galvanized iron, would answer the purpose; and, if necessary, might, with the requisite boilers and utensils, be removed from one station to another on drays.

Such a dip, made of wood, should be about 3 feet 6 inches wide, 4½ feet deep, and about 4 feet long at the bottom, lengthened to about 9 feet at the top, the difference in length arising from the extension of one of the ends to form the necessary race and gangway to the draining-yards, and there should be a bar or pine-float across the gangway, to keep the sheep in the dip till they are sufficiently saturated with the mixture.

As there is no risk of tobacco and sulphur poisoning sheep, the dip should be large enough to allow them to swim; for not only is the dressing more easily administered in this way but it is more certain to have the proper effect. On this account, and also because the larger quantity of liquid retains the heat longer than the smaller, these dips should be made as large as is compatible with their portability.

When filled to within one foot of the top, such a dip will contain about 500 gallons; and, in order to strengthen it, as well as to facilitate the putting in of the sheep, the dip should be let into the ground till its mouth is below the level of the floor of the stage.

The forcing and receiving yards, stage, draining-yards (which should be about 30 feet long and 4 feet wide, and floored with corrugated iron), and other appurtenances, should be made of proportionate sizes, after the plans already given, and will of course be of a temporary nature.

In such a dip there would be ample room for four sheep at a time, and five hands—one yarding, one at the boilers (which should be (say) two 100-gallon boilers and one large pot of from 40 to 60 gallons), one throwing in, and two, including the overseer, crutching and letting out the sheep—would be able to thoroughly dip from 800 to 1,000 sheep a day.

III.—DRESSED SHEEP.

1.—PRECAUTIONS AFTER DRESSING.

Shepherding and Inspection.—While under treatment for scab, sheep should be in the charge of a particularly careful and trustworthy shepherd, but especially so after their course of dressing is completed; and he should receive strict injunctions to watch for and report the least sign of activity in the disease. The owner or superintendent should make a point of seeing the sheep every other day, and he should not only examine every sheep showing any symptoms of the disease, but he should spend an hour now and then with the shepherd, watching the movements of the sheep as they feed; and he should be increasingly watchful when the weather is favourable to the development of the disease. If ordinary care and watchfulness be displayed by the owner and shepherd the very first symptom of a re-outbreak will be detected, and another dressing would then make the cure a certainty.

Mode of examination.—In examining a flock of sheep which have undergone a course of dressing, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not they are cured, every sheep showing any symptom of the disease should be handled; and, after the bare portion of any suspected spot (such as the mark of an old patch of scab) has been carefully examined, the scurf and loose wool should be well cleared away from its outer edges, and the portions of the skin thus exposed should be subjected to the strictest scrutiny, for it is at the edges of the patch that any acari which have escaped destruction by the dressing are most likely to be found. After that the fleece should be opened for 4 or 5 inches, at right angles to and all round the patch—in the manner already directed—and the skin and roots of the wool along the lines thus exposed should be carefully examined, both with the naked eye and the scab glass.

Keeping infected flocks apart.—The duty next in importance to careful shepherding and regular inspection of sheep which have been dressed, is to see that the infected flocks are neither allowed to come in contact directly or indirectly with clean sheep, nor even with one another. It might sometimes do no harm for two infected flocks to come in contact, but at other times it would, for the one might be perfectly cured and the other not; and thus, through the want of a little care, both flocks would be again infected. The infected flocks should be kept strictly apart until thoroughly clean, and the better to enforce this the owner should put a distinguishing brand on each flock when branding them as infected, or rather, he might put the scab brand (S) on the rumps of the sheep in one flock, on the back of another, and on the hip of a third.

Burning yards.—Although not absolutely essential, it is a wise precaution to burn all brush yards, and the dung which may have accumulated in old yards and camps used by infected sheep, and, if practicable, the run where infected sheep have been depasturing should also be purged by fire. If these suggestions are not or cannot be followed, the sheep should at any rate be kept away from such places for six or eight months.

2.—SUCCESSFUL DRESSING.

Symptoms of a cure of wet scab.—If the dressings have been thoroughly effective, the following symptoms will be observable on patches where the attack has been moderately severe:—By the time the sheep are to be dipped a second time, and even earlier, there will be little or no rubbing, biting, or scratching, observable in the flock, and the scab will have become dry, while those portions of the skin of the scabby patch which were green when the sheep were dipped will have lost their moistness and appear of a pale dead colour. At a distance of a week from the second dipping the scab will become finer and drier, and the skin, although still of an unhealthy colour, will be less harsh and boardy, and thinner and more more pliable. At fifteen or twenty days the young wool will begin to shoot up, and, as it does, it perceptibly raises the scab (which has now assumed more the appearance of scurf) from the skin, and the skin will become much healthier in its colour and texture, although still deficient in both respects. At thirty days the young wool will begin to cover the patch, and the scurf will be almost completely cleared off, leaving the skin somewhat white and thick, but perfectly healthy: a slight scratch will at once bring up the proper hue. From that time it is purely a question of growth of wool.

When the attack is a slight one and the patches small, if the first dressing has been effective the scab will be quite dead and dry in the course of twelve or fourteen days, and the patch will, in many instances, be clear of scab. In the course of a week from the second dressing the patches will be entirely free from scab and scurf, and the skin will have become soft, thin, and of a healthy pink colour, while the young wool will begin to sprout.

Symptoms of a cure in dry scab.—In the case, again, of a cure of a spot or patch of dry scab from which the wool had not been denuded when the sheep were dressed, changes similar to those already described would take place in the scab and skin, but the old wool would not come off until the young fleece, springing up after the second dressing, forced it, as it were, off the affected spots. In the course of a week or fourteen days after the second dressing, these spots would be noticeable by a rising and slightly ragged or broken appearance of the wool on them; and, by the latter period, a slight new crop of wool would be found on pulling away the raised portion of the old fleece.

3.—UNSUCCESSFUL DRESSING.

Mode of tracing cause of failure.—If it should unfortunately happen that a course of dressing has been unsuccessful, the owner should not rest satisfied till he discovers the cause of failure. To do this, he will of course make the necessary inquiries of the shepherds and hands on the station; and if he cannot in this way arrive at the reason for the outbreak, he should handle and examine every sheep in the flock, when he will be able to see whether any strange sheep have joined with and re-infected it, or whether the disease has re-appeared from the cure being imperfect. If the dressing is at fault, he will of course also be able to discover, from the appearance of the spots, whether the failure has occurred in the curative or the disinfectant, and to remedy his mistake in the next dressing. Thus, where the dressing has failed through being badly applied, he will meet with the insect, or with green or active scab on some portion of an old patch, most likely at its edge, where the wool, though loose, has not yet fallen off. In the case of re-infection from insects on the run, again, the symptoms will be pencilly, and the scab or insect found may be at a distance from any old patch or spot, while the symptoms of the attack will of course resemble those of an original outbreak of the disease.

Recapitulation of causes of failure in a cure.—Although nothing is more certain than that the process now detailed is, with care, punctuality, and attention, not only a positive cure but also a lasting disinfectant, it must be continually borne in mind, that, if one sheep be omitted or is insufficiently dressed, the greater part of the labour will be lost. It is imperative, therefore, that the person superintending the operation should be keenly alive to the responsibility devolving upon him. He will have to look after everything and everybody, and he must see that the dressings are correctly and carefully made up and applied to every doubtful and infected sheep on the run. It is utterly needless for careless sheep-owners or superintendents to cure sheep of scab.

To those, however, who will take the necessary pains, but who are as yet but little acquainted with the process of dipping, it may be useful to mention briefly the chief causes of the numerous failures which have occurred in the attempts made to cure sheep with tobacco and sulphur. They may be enumerated as follows:—

1. Leaving sheep, and especially crawlers, which are unable to follow the flock to the dip, out on the run, and thus omitting to dress them, or neglecting to destroy the carcasses of infected sheep which may have died on the run. Before dipping is commenced every crawler should be killed and burned; and a careful account should be taken, some three or four times at least, immediately before dipping, of all sheep on the run, to ascertain their actual number beyond the possibility of a doubt, with which the number dipped must be made to tally exactly, while a thorough search should be made for dead sheep, which should be burned where found.

2. Using inferior tobacco.—There will be little or no difficulty with respect to the quality of imported manufactured or leaf tobacco; and the colonial leaf must be well sweated and tough in texture.

3. Omitting to keep the mixture at the proper strength and heat.—The overseer, until he can thoroughly depend on the man at the boilers, must see personally that the proper quantities of tobacco and sulphur are weighed out, and that the replenishing of the dip and heat of the mixture are correctly attended to.

4. Neglecting to form a "diseased" flock of those sheep which are very badly scabbed.

5. Allowing sheep to pass from the dip before the mixture has been thoroughly applied to them, or before it has had time to do its work, especially as it becomes cool. The overseer ought to time the operation, watch in hand, and the heat should be frequently tested with the thermometer.

6. Neglecting to re-dip within the proper time.

7. Being in too great a hurry to draft or class sheep which, although apparently clean, have not served their proper probation, and taking sheep from one flock and putting them in another.—This is very imprudent, as it may happen that though the cure is perfect in one flock, it is not in the other, and thus both lots would be again contaminated.

It must, in conclusion, be remarked that a great deal of the success depends upon the plan of the dip and yards, and on the convenience of the other arrangements. In the foregoing directions these subjects are fully discussed, and ample instructions given for successfully carrying out the cure in several ways; but, although they are so, the sheep-owner, in determining the form of yards and dip which he should adopt, ought to bear in mind that certainty of effecting a cure is the object to be aimed at, and should adopt the form by which he sees he can best attain this end, although the dipping might thereby be comparatively tedious and expensive.

E.

SCAB IN SHEEP.

(REPORT FROM CHIEF INSPECTOR OF SHEEP.)

Chief Inspector of Sheep to Secretary for Lands.

Sir,

Department of Lands, Sydney, 14 July, 1866.

I have the honor to report that the sheep in this Colony are now entirely free from scab; and as this result has been fortunately attained, it may be both interesting and instructive to recur briefly to the origin and extent of the disease, and to review the measures adopted by the owners in cleansing their infected sheep, and the success with which they were attended, as well as to consider what steps should be adopted for the future protection of our flocks.

ORIGIN OF THE OUTBREAK.

The origin of the disease in this instance, although not positively proved, has been very clearly settled by circumstantial evidence; for the infection of the flocks on the Namoi and Bogan, in which scab was first discovered, has been traced beyond dispute to some culls of fat flocks taken there from Sydney and Maitland in the end of 1862. These culls, again, which had been drafted out from time to time by the carcass butchers, and sold by them in small flocks as store sheep, must have been infected either by some of the Victorian sheep, which were then largely imported for slaughter (the culls from which formed a large proportion of those taken up the country), or by infected sheep imported for breeding purposes, and sent out, as they sometimes were, to paddocks in the neighbourhood of Windsor and Richmond, where they might have come in contact with the butcher's culls.

In either way it is now known that there were many opportunities by which the disease might have been introduced; for scab has for years been so rife in Victoria as to render it impossible for sheep to have been brought from Melbourne in the numbers they were in 1862 without some of them being scabby; and in the early part of 1864, several instances were met with of breeding sheep which had been imported during the previous year from the neighbouring Colonies, and from Europe, having been landed diseased.

There can, therefore, be no doubt that the infection was imported, and most probably by the sheep brought from Melbourne for slaughter; for although very great laxity prevailed in the inspection and dressing of sheep imported for breeding purposes, it is believed that they were generally inspected, while those intended for slaughter seldom were so in Sydney, and never in Newcastle, where they were landed in considerable numbers from the vessels engaged in the coal trade between that port and Melbourne.

EXTENT

EXTENT OF OUTBREAK.

As will be seen by the tabulated Report herewith, marked No. 1, the ascertained and estimated numbers of sheep infected during this outbreak amounted to 350,000; of which, 143,191 were dealt with or were accounted for previous to the Act of 1863 coming into force, and 206,809 under that Act. Nearly all these sheep were infected when it was discovered that the scab had broken out; and although it may at first appear strange that the disease could have spread to such an extent before being detected, it will not do so, when it is considered that our flocks had been so long free from the disease that owners were completely off their guard, and few of them even knew scab, or could recognize it when they saw it. The season, too, was altogether in favour of the development of the disease; for through its severity, not only were the sheep in the state most susceptible of the infection, but stragglers from the infected travelling flocks—especially from that which was taken to the Namoi—were dropped on every run through which they passed; and the owners on these stations attributing their miserable appearance solely to starvation, did not destroy them, as they ought to have done.

MEASURES ADOPTED IN CLEANSING, AND THE RESULT.

If sheep-owners generally were at a loss in detecting the disease, those of them who were so unfortunate as to have their sheep infected were still more so in cleansing them; and, as will be seen on reference to Report No. 2 (where the details of the dressing are given in each case), many different sorts of medicaments were tried for that purpose, but so frequently without success that, what with the expense of medicines and the cost of applying them, joined with the losses otherwise consequent on the disease remaining on these stations, it would, in many cases, have paid the owners better had the sheep been destroyed by Government, and the old rate of compensation (4s a sheep) been paid for them.

It unfortunately happened that, some short time previous to the scab breaking out among our flocks, a number of experiments had been made at Melbourne on the efficacy of different specifics for the cure of scab, and the result was that the owners of several of these specifics obtained testimonials that their preparations were cures for the scab. Among others, Hayes' specific and Allen's were recommended in this way; and upon the faith of these recommendations, many of our sheep-owners were induced to purchase and use large quantities of both these specifics with anything but success. By the abstract of the results of the dressings appended to Report No. 2 (which are compiled from the inspectors' reports, it will be seen that Allen's specific, with which there were 80,021 sheep dressed, proved a total failure, and Hayes', with which 87,186 were dipped, only succeeded with 6,225. Thus, from all accounts, has also, in a great measure, been the experience of Victoria, where these specifics were at one time very largely used.

Other owners tried arsenic, and arsenic and tobacco; and where the sheep could be placed upon a clear run after being dipped, the dressing was generally successful; but the losses in bad weather with this poison were very severe; as many as 30, 40, and even 80 per cent having died after dressing, in some flocks. Where the sheep were not taken to fresh ground, on being dipped, this medicament was generally a failure. The abstract of the dressings shows that of 18,555 which were dressed with arsenic, 9,284 were cured, while the balance, 9,271, had to be dipped with tobacco and sulphur.

Some owners, again, used tobacco and sulphur from the first, and with ordinary care, effected a thorough cure. As these succeeded, the owners who had used other remedies and failed, also tried tobacco and sulphur, and they too at last made a permanent cure; till, as will be seen by the abstract of dressings appended to Report No. 2, 184,270, or nearly 93 per cent. of the whole, were cleansed with these ingredients. They no doubt failed in some instances, but, as the result has shown, entirely through the want of knowledge or care; and so well has the efficacy of this dressing been established throughout the three Colonies, that its want of success is at once put down to a failure in its preparation or application. Its efficacy is now a thoroughly established fact.

By the abstract appended to the Report No. 2, it will be seen that the licensed sheep have been cleansed as follows—
98,972 between the 1st March (when the Act of 1863 came in force) and 30th November, 1864;
85,743 between the 30th November, 1864, and 30th November, 1865,
15,094 between the 30th November, 1865, and 31st May, 1866

It thus appears that while some owners had thoroughly cleansed the greater part of their infected flocks at 30th November, 1864, and had completely eradicated the disease on their station by 30th November, 1865, others had made but little progress at the first period, and still had the disease among their sheep at the second. The question therefore naturally arises how this happened, seeing by that time the proper remedy (tobacco and sulphur) had become known. It would seem to have arisen from several causes. Some owners were prejudiced in favour of other dressings, and would not use tobacco and sulphur. Others, again, who did use these medicaments, failed through their non-acquaintance with the proper mode of preparing and applying them. But the most frequent cause of failure was carelessness—sheep being left without dressing, or only dressed imperfectly, and the strength and heat of the mixture but little attended to.

Another cause which in no slight degree tended to retard the eradication of the disease was, that some owners were so unscrupulous as to conceal its existence on their stations; and not only took their own time to eradicate the disease, leaving their runs open and liable to contaminate other flocks passing over the infected ground, but they sent imperfectly cleansed sheep to market, whereby the infection was spread in several instances,—a course of conduct which cannot be too severely reprobated, and one which it is hoped will, under the provisions of the proposed new Act, be at any rate severely punished, if it cannot be altogether prevented.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FUTURE PROTECTION.

Now that the Colony is free from scab, the object, of course, will be to prevent infected sheep from being imported or introduced; and the experience of the last three or four years, here detailed, shows that the utmost vigilance and care is necessary in the admission of both these classes of sheep.

With respect to imported sheep, this has, so far as possible, been provided for by stationing inspectors at the ports where sheep are usually landed; but power will require to be taken under the new Act to place imported sheep regularly in quarantine, at a station to be set apart for that purpose, where they would be kept and dressed under the charge of the inspector, and undergo a much longer probation than they now do before being allowed to leave the port.

With regard to sheep from the adjoining Colonies, the strict and vigilant measures which are now being adopted with respect to Victorian sheep should still be maintained. In that Colony, so far as can be known, there are infected sheep in most of the districts; and until there are reliable grounds for believing the disease to be very much abated there, it does not appear prudent to relax either our restrictions or watchfulness.

The past season has been one of extreme risk from this source. Immense numbers of sheep have been compelled to travel for feed and water on both sides of the Murray, and many stragglers must have been dropped along these routes. This state of things was most likely to spread the disease in Victoria, and to increase the risk of infection from that quarter to a very considerable extent; for as the river was low, and sheep could cross almost anywhere, our flocks were put in great jeopardy, not only from some of these abandoned stragglers which might cross the river, but also from sheep from known infected stations. Victorian sheep actually did cross on several occasions; and if it had not been that they were found and destroyed by the boundary riders employed by the Government, as well as by the owners on this side of the river, there is every probability that some of our flocks on the frontage would have been infected; and if they had, it is hard to say where the mischief would have ended, as the infection might have been spread by the travelling sheep on our side for hundreds of miles.

It is therefore to the adoption of these measures, and the zealous discharge of their duties by the inspectors on the Murray—in which they have on all occasions been ably supported by their Directors—that the safety of the flocks in those important districts is to be mainly attributed.

Now that the river has risen, and travelling sheep have nearly all returned to their stations, the risk is considerably less; but as the sheep on the Victorian bank are running at large, they might even yet cross at any time; and where scab is known to exist on that side of the river, it will be necessary to maintain boundary riders on this.

The flocks both in Queensland and South Australia are free from scab; and although sheep coming from those Colonies are always examined before being introduced, there is little or no risk to be apprehended from those quarters.

Although these precautions should be taken with regard to imported and introduced sheep, a sufficient staff of inspectors should still be maintained to watch the main roads throughout the Colony; for it is not absolutely impossible for infection to escape the inspectors at the ports or on the borders; and there is still a certain degree of risk attached to the districts in this Colony where infected sheep have been kept; besides, the services of inspectors are required for the protection of our flocks from catarrh. That being, in a great measure, a local disease, its spread might, under a proper system of inspection and quarantine, be greatly retarded, if not entirely prevented.

I have, &c.

ALEX. BRUCE,

Chief Inspector of Sheep.

Clean Certificate for Imported Sheep, and Permit to Travel.

No. 1,515.

January 22, 1884.

I, the undersigned, Inspector for Sydney, do hereby certify that the imported sheep, of which W. G. Markham is the owner, and which are more particularly specified in the Schedule below, have remained in quarantine for a period of three months, and have been duly dressed in accordance with the provisions of the abovenamed Act, and that such sheep are clean, and may be removed.

Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender to The Chief Inspector of Stock.

Dear Sir,

As our sale of American sheep is to take place on Friday, at Tattersall's, and as it would be inconvenient and a great loss to have two sales in place of one, we would pray you to permit the fifty ewes, whose quarantine time has not quite expired, to be sold at the same time at Tattersall's, subject to the condition that their quarantine time be completed at the Petersham Quarantine Station. This concession will much oblige,—

Your obedient servants,
WILKINSON, GRAVES, & LAVENDER.

Mr. Willows, B.C., 21/11/83.—A.B.

The ewes here referred to have been in quarantine at Bradley's Head sixty (60) days, and have been sufficiently dipped. In my opinion there is no practical objection to the procedure Messrs. W. G. & L. desire to adopt.—A. WILLOWS, 21/11/83.

As Mr. Willows reports that the granting of this request will entail no risk, it might perhaps be complied with.—A.B., 21/11/83. The Under Secretary for Mines.

Submitted.—H.W., 21/11/83. Approved.—J. P. ABBOTT, 22/11/83.

J.

Mr. H. G. Lomax to Messrs. Wilkinson, Graves, & Lavender.

Dear Sirs,

Errowangbang, Carcoar, 10 February, 1884.

Mr. Markham's man (Baker) sent for me yesterday to look at the American merinos. I went at once, to find that they are infected with something like scab, but whether it is or not I cannot be positive. I have examined very carefully some of the wool I now enclose for your inspection, which is scraped off with a knife. Baker told me he noticed one ram bad soon after he left Blayney, but never until yesterday was anything mentioned to me. The sheep were low in condition when they arrived here, and have not improved, and will not unless they give them more food, as the grass is dry. Something had better be done at once, as all the sheep are infected more or less, but I do not think it is scab, as I cannot see any insect, although it has every appearance of it.

Yours very truly,
H. G. LOMAX.

K.

Wilkinson, Graves & Lavender to The Chief Inspector of Stock.

Dear Sir,

Spring-street, Sydney, 15 December, 1883.

It would be a very great advantage to Mr. Roberts if you could allow a few (say ten) of his sheep to remain unshorn and undipped, at the Quarantine Station, till the ram sales in July next, as he would then be able to show them to buyers as samples of what his sheep can do, and so help the sale of the others.

Of course Mr. Roberts will gladly pay the cost of keeping the sheep.

If you can do this we shall be obliged.

Yours faithfully,
WILKINSON, GRAVES & LAVENDER.

This might perhaps be granted for (say) six sheep, but on the clear understanding that the Government incur no responsibility or risk in keeping them.—A.B., 20/12/83.—The Under Secretary for Mines.

Appd.—J. P. Abbott,—20/12/83.

Particulars of sheep at Bradley's Head, Shark Island, and Summer Hill, when Mr. Willows left Sydney for Tasmania.

WILKINSON, Graves and Lavender are agents for 182 sheep at Summer Hill which have been twice dipped and shorn; their quarantine has some time expired, and according to promise they are to be immediately removed.

W., G. & L. are also agents for twenty-five ewes and one ram in quarantine at Shark Island; these were placed in quarantine here on October 23rd, and have been once dipped.

W., G. & L. are also agents for seventy-two sheep placed in quarantine at Bradley's Head on October 22nd; some of these are shorn, but none of them have been dipped.

Messrs. Brunker & Wolfe are agents for forty rams and ewes and ten little lambs now at Summer Hill; these have been shorn and twice dipped, and their quarantine of ninety days has long expired.

B. & W. are also agents for twenty-nine rams now in quarantine at Shark Island; they have been twice dipped, and their quarantine of ninety days expired on 12th instant; these rams have not been shorn.

M.

Extract from letter, dated the 12th October, 1883, addressed by Wilhelm Boye Sölling, Manager for Messrs. Brunker & Wolfe, Sydney, to James N. Brunker, Esq., M.L.A., West Maitland.

I am informed that scab has appeared amongst the American sheep at Bradley's Head, and that the sheep are being dipped to-day. Mr. Jones's lot at Shark Island will be dipped on Tuesday, so that it will be useless advertising them for sale just now. I informed Mr. Jones that Mr. Willows had decided to dip his sheep on Tuesday, but did not assign any reason why it had been decided to dip them. I thought I had no right to inform him that scab had broken out at Bradley's Head, the Department being most anxious that the information should not be made public.

N.

Extract from letter, dated the 2nd January, 1884, addressed by Wilhelm Boye Sölling, Manager for Messrs. Brunker & Wolfe, Sydney, to James N. Brunker, Esq., M.L.A., West Maitland.

I sent you a telegram re sheep at Petersham. Mr. Bruce sent round this morning to know when we would remove them, as he did not wish to order any more feed for them. Another reason for telegraphing was that Mr. Garland's lot now at Petersham are not well, and I am afraid of them. I went out yesterday to look at the sheep; our lot look in really good form, but Mr. Garland's are scratching and biting themselves at a great rate, and I noticed the skin hard underneath, and upon being pinched or brought together between the fingers the sheep would bite at you.

Mr. Willows has gone over these sheep more than once, and he pronounces them clean. I am anxious about our sheep, or the money we have in them, so I wish you would decide what's best to be done.

Minute of Secretary for Mines.

IN acknowledging the receipt of the Report of the Commissioners I desire to thank them for the great labour and attention bestowed by them upon the subject of their inquiry, and also for their valuable suggestions as to the provisions for improving the future management of the quarantine of Stock.

Approved by the Cabinet.—
J.S.F. 5/9/84.

I shall deal with the recommendations of the Commission seriatim. With respect to sheep imported from places other than the Australian Colonies—

1. This recommendation is in effect being now carried out as the existing proclamations prevent the introduction of sheep from countries other than the Australian Colonies.
- 2 and 3. Though I approve of these recommendations fresh legislation will be requisite to give them effect.
4. The necessary steps to give effect to this recommendation are to be taken.

With respect to sheep coming from any of the Australian Colonies,—

1. I quite agree with this recommendation, but as scab is not known to exist at present in any of the Colonies no action is immediately necessary.
- 2 and 3. I think the conclusions of the Commission are wise and just in both of these recommendations,—
 - 1st. Because if a person who owns sheep infected with scab attempts to introduce them into the Colony, no consideration should be shown to him, but the interests of the Colony should be the primary consideration.
 - 2nd. If persons introducing sheep are aware that they will be destroyed without compensation should they be infected with scab, or should they develop scab in ninety days, this knowledge will make such persons take every possible precaution not to introduce infected sheep. It is right that any loss should fall upon the person attempting to introduce such sheep rather than upon the owners in the Colony, who are of themselves powerless to prevent the introduction of disease by the importation of stock.

But to carry out these recommendations new legislation will be required,—

- 4, 5, and 6. I quite agree with these recommendations, and shall take steps to have them carried out, so far as it is practicable to do so. There must be a difficulty in giving effect to the sixth recommendation, tion, because it may not be possible to obtain accurate information respecting the movements of sheep after they are landed in any of the adjoining Colonies.

With reference to the further recommendations of the Board,—

1. I agree with this recommendation, and steps are to be taken for its adoption.
2. These Regulations have been, and are now causing much inconvenience to owners and to buyers; but there can be no doubt they are of great value to the majority of sheep-owners in the Colony. It is far better that temporary inconvenience and loss should be suffered by the owners directly affected by these regulations, rather than by neglect of any possible precaution, to increase the risk of scab reaching the interior. These regulations are therefore to be adhered to as recommended.
3. This recommendation may be carried out, if it can be without a breach of the provisions of the Act.
4. If this recommendation was attempted to be carried out, so far as requiring the Examinee to show that "he had a practical knowledge of such diseases, and more particularly an extensive experience of scab in sheep," it would be absolutely impossible to obtain any inspectors, or very few, to fill the several offices in the Colony; for how could inspectors have a practical knowledge of scab, or an extensive experience of scab in sheep, without seeing and mixing with sheep affected by that disease; and as at the present time, and for some time past, it is supposed that scab does not exist in any of the Colonies, where could any one obtain this practical knowledge of the disease without visiting Europe or America? It could be only gained by the Government keeping nurseries where the disease might be developed, and where the scab might be demonstrated to those who desired to obtain a practical knowledge of it, but I am sure such a source of danger in our midst would be most undesirable. I feel sure that flock-owners in this and the neighbouring Colonies will join with me when I express the hope that examinees for the office of inspector may for a long time be deprived of the means of obtaining a practical knowledge of scab.

For years past the system of appointing Sheep Inspectors has been of the very worst kind possible, and the least likely by which to obtain the services of men qualified and experienced :

- 1st. The salaries have not been sufficiently high in all cases to induce good men to seek the office.
- 2nd. Candidates for the office of inspector have been nominated by Boards of Sheep Directors who have not taken any steps to satisfy themselves as to the qualifications for the office of the person nominated.
- 3rd. This Department has not until recently done more to ensure the efficiency of inspectors for their offices than to pass regulations defining what their qualifications should be before they are nominated for the office; but neither the Boards nor the Department have adopted any means by which to prove that the candidates are in any way qualified.

The

The Regulations of the twentieth May, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, will, I think, so far as they can do so without requiring a practical knowledge of diseases, do much to improve the character and efficiency of the inspectors. Coupled with these regulations, I think the offer of services of persons best qualified for the inspectors can be more readily obtained by—

- 1st. Depriving the Boards of the nominations, except from a certificated class of persons, as provided by the regulations.
- 2nd. By fixing the salaries upon a graduating scale.
- 3rd. By occasionally moving and promoting inspectors from one to another district according to merit and efficiency.

It will be essential to have a change made in the law before all this can be done.

I quite agree with the Commissioners in the recommendation “That all sheep, previous to their being admitted to quarantine shall be examined by the Chief Inspector of Sheep and a Government veterinarian”; and for the future this course will be adopted, and the Chief Inspector must be relieved of some of the duties now devolving upon him, in order that he may efficiently perform this service. I regret that I cannot agree with the recommendation that both of these officers should “be men possessed of a practical knowledge of scab.” Of course such a qualification, if possible, would be most desirable, and would add to the efficiency of the officers in question; but as with the exception of the late outbreak there has been no scab in any of the Colonies for many years, and it is to be hoped that we may be kept free from this infliction, it is evident that the selection of officers would be restricted to those persons advanced in years, or who had visited Europe or America, unless indeed a depôt were formed for the maintenance of scab, in order that our youths might obtain a practical knowledge of the insect scourge, which would be very like introducing small-pox in order that medical men might, by study of symptoms, become more assured and unanimous in their opinions. These officers must also in future inspect sheep in quarantine in consultation previous to releasing them, and the clean certificate must be signed by both. A regulation to this effect should be prepared at once.

THE OUTBREAK OF SCAB AT ERROWANBANG.

No one, I think, can fail who reads the evidence given before the Commission to agree with their conclusion, that disease known as scab had developed itself in the American sheep at Errowanbang at the time of their destruction. I entirely agree with the conclusion of the Commission that from the time when the sheep were landed up to the date of their removal from Summer Hill quarantine, there were ample reasons why the officers of the Stock Branch should have exercised a particularly careful and vigorous supervision in reference to these sheep. The letter of Mr. Bruce Lowe, the conversations of Mr. Sölling, the suspicions of Mr. Weaver, and other circumstances, ought to have made Mr. Bruce and Mr. Willows more than usually careful. I am led to the conviction that the long immunity from scab which the Colony had enjoyed, the perfect confidence which the Chief Inspector appears to have placed in the Metropolitan Inspector, Mr. Willows, coupled with the excessive amount of work imposed upon Mr. Bruce by the many and various duties he had to perform as head of his branch, led him to rely too much upon Mr. Willows; and in this respect his conduct is censurable, because the magnitude of the importance of of maintaining an efficient system of quarantine, coupled with the warnings he had received, should have led Mr. Bruce to neglect any and all other duties rather than those relating to the quarantine of these sheep, but in stating this I cannot overlook the fact that since Mr. Bruce's appointment to his present position he has rendered much good and faithful service to the Colony—that he has been the means of introducing many and valuable reforms into the laws relating to stock. I have always found him a faithful public servant, conscientious in the performance of his duties, and never sparing himself in the devotion of time or trouble in their accomplishment. These considerations must largely influence me in arriving at a conclusion as to the extent to which he should be censured. In dealing with all imported sheep Mr. Bruce appears to have left the whole arrangements for their quarantine and management whilst in quarantine to Mr. Willows, and so far as I can learn this is no new practice, as it was followed when Mr. Yeo held the office now filled by Mr. Willows. At that time the office was certainly filled by a gentleman of large practical experience in scab, and I have no doubt Mr. Bruce's confidence in this new officer was equal to that placed by him in Mr. Yeo, and must have been greatly strengthened by the diplomas and testimonials of qualifications held by Mr. Willows. Certainly, if these are of any value at all they would convince almost any one that the holder of them was qualified and capable to deal with all diseases to which stock are liable. Having regard to the warnings Mr. Bruce had received about these sheep, when he failed himself to detect the disease, he took the best if not the only course open to obtain further inspection—he consulted the Government Veterinarian (Mr. Willows), who would be supposed to be the best qualified person in the Colony to give an opinion; but I regret that he did not take better means than he did to satisfy himself that the Quarantine Regulations had been properly carried out, and in this respect I think blame rests upon him, and if it were not for the faithful services and the general diligence before noted I should not consider my censure sufficient to convey my sense of his culpability.

With respect to Mr. Willows the conclusions I have arrived at are that he was—

- 1st. Careless in the performance of his duties.
- 2nd. That he did not endeavour to make himself acquainted with those duties.
- 3rd. That he allowed the sheep to leave quarantine without giving the owner the clean certificate required by the 54th section of the Act.
- 4th. That he did not carry out the Regulations in reference to the quarantine of the sheep.
- 5th. That his evidence, given before the Commission, is unreliable and is suspicious.

The manner in which Mr. J. C. Laycock is shown to have carried out his duties is most unsatisfactory, and the character of his evidence before the Commission upholds the conclusion that he is not a person fit to be entrusted with responsible duties, and he should therefore be removed from his present position.

Mr. James Freeburn has displayed such a lack of reliability that his services ought also to be dispensed with.

Mr. Weaver's connection with the Department having ceased some time ago it is not necessary for me to deal with him.

I therefore direct that Mr. Bruce be censured for not having taken more personal supervision than he did, after his attention was directed to the probability of the arrival of scabby sheep and to the subsequent suspicious symptoms; but as I am satisfied that he has more to do than any one man can attend to, I shall take early steps to relieve him of some of those duties, so that he may give more of his attention to stock.

With regard to Mr. Willows, under the nineteenth section of the Act the Chief Inspector has power to suspend him, and I direct that course to be taken, and the Treasurer may be asked to suspend him also from his position as Veterinarian. Pending the determination in reference to the continuance of Mr. Willows' service—Mr. G. A. Cleeve, Sheep Inspector, Windsor, to act as Inspector in Sydney.

It is highly satisfactory to me to find that Mr. Myring has so performed the duties of Secretary to the Commission as to induce that body to express their appreciation of the able and efficient manner in which those duties have been discharged.

CLAIM FOR KILLING A RAM AT QUARANTINE STATION, CANTERBURY.

No. 1.

Messrs. Maiden, Hill, & Clark to The Chief Inspector of Stock.

Sir,

Sydney, 19 September, 1881.

On behalf of Sir John Hay we have the honor to enclose herein a claim for the loss of a valuable South Australian "Canowie" stud ram which was killed by the dogs while at the Quarantine Station, Summer Hill, in July last.

We have, &c.,

MAIDEN, HILL, & CLARK.

Mr. Yeo, for report and explanation.—A.B., 20/9/81.

Warland, the man in charge of Quarantine Station, informs me that on Sunday, 18th July, he found a small terrier dog chasing the sheep in the Quarantine paddock, and on going to the creek he found one of the rams belonging to Sir John Hay dead in a waterhole containing only 3 or 4 inches of water. He also informs me that he believes the dog belongs to Mr. W. W. Richardson, who was there that morning in company with Mr. Hill, looking at some sheep they had in Quarantine. The dog must have been let in at the gate as the fence is dog-proof all round.—G.S.Y., 28/9/81.

Mr. Yeo,—It would seem from this report that Mr. Richardson should pay for this sheep; but as you are Quarantine-keeper you are responsible for the safe custody of the sheep placed in Quarantine, and it will be for you to recover the amount from Mr. Richardson.—A.B., B.C., 8/10/81.

Mr. Richardson refuses to pay for the sheep, stating that there is no proof that his dog destroyed it. Mr. Warland was appointed Quarantine-keeper by the Government, and resides on the premises. I having only a general supervision over it as I have over the Quarantine Station at Bradley's Head and Shark Island therefore I fail to see how I can be held responsible for the safe custody of the stock.—G.S.Y., 16/11/81.

No. 2.

Memo. by Chief Inspector of Stock to Under Secretary for Mines.

Claim by Sir John Hay, K.C.M.G., for ram killed in quarantine.

1. This is a claim made by Messrs. Maiden, Hill, & Clark, as agents for Sir John Hay, for the ram killed in Quarantine; and the particulars of the case, so far as I have been able to ascertain them, are the following:—

2. During the time that the stud sheep (numbering some 300) sold at the annual sale were in Quarantine at Summer Hill, owners were constantly visiting the yards to see them.

3. Among others, Mr. Wm. Hill, of Messrs. Maiden, Hill, & Clark, and Mr. W. W. Richardson, of Duck Creek, Bogan, and now residing at Ashfield, came to the Quarantine on the forenoon of Sunday, the 18th July last, with a couple of dogs, one of which was a small black-and-tan terrier, belonging to Mr. Richardson, and, as they state, left them at the gate while they went in to look at the sheep; after doing so they left for home without seeing the dogs.

4. Some short time after, while Warland, the resident Quarantine-keeper, and his assistant, were at dinner, a neighbour called to them that there was a dog among the sheep in the Quarantine paddock, and on going out they saw a small black-and-tan terrier coming back from chasing the sheep, and going across the paddock they found the ram for which the claim is now made lying dead in a creek, some 4 feet deep and nearly dry.

5. This ram was all but blind, through the wool growing over his eyes, and in running with the other sheep away from the little dog he apparently ran into the creek and broke his neck.

Warland says that on coming back from the ram they looked for but could not find the dog, and he was not seen again (he had hidden under the sheep-sheds) until late in the afternoon, when a man who was there in charge of some of the owners' sheep saw him and unfortunately turned him out at the gate, instead of keeping him and finding the owner.

That the dog was Mr. Richardson's there could be little question from the fact of his bringing a dog of that description there; but the matter is put beyond all moral doubt from the fact that as the dog did not go home, Mr. Richardson came next morning to the Quarantine looking for him, and in doing so exactly described the little dog which had chased the sheep.

His getting inside the Quarantine is easily accounted for:—When Mr. Richardson left him and went inside, the dog would be sure to wait at the gate, and would take the first chance he got to slip in after his master, and that he soon got, as other people besides Messrs. Hill and Richardson were at the Quarantine the same forenoon.

It was strange that gentlemen so well acquainted as Messrs. Hill and Richardson are with the value of the sheep in Quarantine and the habits of dogs should have allowed these dogs to follow them, and have left them, as they did, at the gate; and as there cannot be a doubt that the dog that did the damage was Mr. Richardson's he ought to pay for the ram.

While, however, this is the case, such arrangements should have been made at the Quarantine as that no dog could possibly gain admission without been seen.

This could have been done by simply keeping the gate bolted, and allowing no one to enter without either Warland or some one employed in the Quarantine going to the gate and opening it; and as Mr. Yeo is in the receipt of a salary for taking charge of the Quarantine I think he and Warland, the resident keeper, should have seen that such a precaution as that mentioned was taken.

They did not do so, and as they are responsible within reasonable limits for the safety and proper dressing of the sheep, they should, I think, if Mr. Richardson will not, pay this claim. But before calling upon them to do this I would suggest that formal application in writing be made to Mr. Richardson for payment.

A.B.,

22 November, 1881.

Submitted.—H.W., 23/11/81. The application may be made, without prejudice as to any claim that may hereafter be made against any other person.—A.R., 23/11/81.

No. 3.

The Chief Inspector of Stock to W. W. Richardson, Esq.

Sir,

Stock Branch, Department of Mines, Sydney, 25 November, 1881.

Messrs. Maiden, Hill, and Clark, as agents for Sir John Hay, K.C.M.G., having made a claim against this Department for the sum of £51 9s. for the ram belonging to that gentleman, which was killed at the Quarantine station, at Summer Hill, on the 18th July last, I am directed by the Secretary for Mines to refer this claim to you for settlement, and I do so on the following grounds, namely:—

On the day in question Mr. William Hill, of Messrs. Maiden, Hill, and Clark, and yourself visited the Quarantine with a couple of dogs, one of which was a small black and tan English terrier, which you left outside the gate at which you entered the grounds, and after having viewed the sheep left without seeing the dogs.

Shortly afterwards, while Warland, the resident Quarantine keeper, and his assistant were at dinner, a neighbour called to them that there was a dog among the sheep in the Quarantine paddock, and on going out they saw a small black and tan terrier coming back from chasing the sheep; and going across the paddock they found the ram for which the claim is now made lying dead in a creek, into which he had been chased by the dog, and broke his neck.

When the men returned from the creek they did not see the dog, but later on in the afternoon one of the other men in charge of the sheep saw him (he had been under the sheep sheds), and turned him out at the gate.

That the dog was yours there is no doubt, for on the following morning (the dog not having returned home) you went to the Quarantine again, and exactly described the dog seen by the keeper chasing the sheep.

He had, there is no doubt, watched, as dogs will do, at the gate after you left him, and slipped in when the gate was opened with some of the people who visited the Quarantine that forenoon.

I have therefore the honor to request that you will be good enough to forward a cheque at your earliest convenience for the amount claimed.

I have, &c.,

ALEX. BRUCE,

Chief Inspector of Stock.

No. 4.

Memo. from Chief Inspector of Stock to Under Secretary for Mines.

It will be seen by Mr. Richardson's answer herewith that he refuses to pay for the ram killed in Quarantine through his dog.

As therefore there is a case, although I understand not a strong one, against Mr. Richardson, I would suggest that the matter be placed in the hands of the Crown Solicitor, with the view to the recovery of the amount claimed by Sir John Hay for the ram; and I do so especially, as it is not likely that Mr. Richardson will allow the case to come into Court, and the facts to become known to his fellow owners with the circumstantial evidence so strong against him.

Submitted.—H.W., 13/12/81.

Refer case accordingly.—A.R., 14/12/81.

No. 5.

W. W. Richardson, Esq., to The Secretary for Mines.

Sir,

Sydney, 30 November, 1881.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 81-4,160 S.B., referring a claim of £51 9s. made by Messrs. Maiden, Hill, & Clark, as agents for Sir John Hay, to me, the claim being for a sheep smothered at the Quarantine pound, and said to have been caused by one of my dogs. Not considering myself liable in any way I decline to send a cheque for the amount claimed, or any portion of it. As the squatters (of whom I am one) are taxed to provide funds to pay officers and men to keep up these absurd Quarantine Regulations you must excuse my saying I think the fund ought to pay any loss of this kind, and that none of the officers of the department should be held responsible.

I have, &c.,

The Crown Solicitor to The Under Secretary for Mines.

Sir,

Crown Solicitor's Office, Sydney, 19 December, 1881.
I have the honor to return herewith the papers relating to the claim against Mr. Richardson, on account of a ram said to have been chased by his dog at the Quarantine Station, and to state that as the chief point in dispute in the case will be as to the fact of the sheep falling over the bank through being chased by a dog, and the identity of the dog, it is desirable that the statements of the person who saw the dog actually chasing the sheep should be obtained. All that the person in charge of the Quarantine saw appears to be that a dog was coming back from where the sheep was found; it is said he was coming back from chasing the sheep, but this hardly agrees with the context.

I have, &c.,

JOHN WILLIAMS,

Crown Solicitor.

Mr. Hutton, a clerk in the Lands Office, informs me he saw a small dog chasing the sheep, and on going to the creek he found three or four of the rams in a waterhole, one of which was dead. He does not think he can identify the dog.—G.S.Y., 3/11/82.

Sir,

We have again the honor to direct your attention to the claim we have made for Sir John Hay, for a ram which was killed by dogs while in charge of the department.

We would also call your attention to the fact that the claim is now about twelve months old, and that Sir John Hay paid cash for the ram, then charged the department exactly what he paid for the animal, although it was worth much more money, and that he is (even if paid the same sum) a loser, as he has charged the department no interest.

Memo. from Chief Inspector of Stock to Under Secretary for Mines.

THE amount asked for by the Crown Solicitor (£20 18s.) might perhaps be placed to the credit of his Public Account.

This was a case brought by the Government against W. W. Richardson, of Cannonbar, who resides at Ashfield, for the price of a ram destroyed on the forenoon of the 17th July, 1881, in the Quarantine at Summer Hill, through being chased by a little dog belonging to Mr. Richardson; but through Warland, the Quarantine keeper, not securing the dog, but allowing him to be turned out, the evidence was, to a large extent, circumstantial.

The defendant, Mr. Richardson, acknowledged to having come to the Quarantine in the forenoon of the day mentioned with three dogs (one of which was a small black and tan terrier), which he says he left outside the gate. He stopped among the sheep for some time, and then left. Next morning he returned to the Quarantine and asked Warland whether he had seen his little dog, which he described, and Warland said he had, and that the dog had chased the sheep after he (Richardson) left, and caused the death of the ram they were then skinning.

Mr. Richardson denied that it could have been his dog which caused the accident; but some time afterwards, in talking over the matter with Warland, he acknowledged to him that while he was amongst the sheep he saw his little dog inside the Quarantine playing with a small dog Warland keeps chained up at his hut.

When the alarm was given that there was a dog among the sheep, Warland ran down to the creek in which the sheep was smothered, and met the little dog, which had been driven off, coming up towards the shed, under which he hid and was turned out by one of the other men later in the afternoon.

There cannot be a doubt but the dog was Mr. Richardson's; but the proof was almost entirely circumstantial; and as Warland, who was the principal witness, gave his evidence in an exceedingly rambling and confused way, the case broke down and ended in a non-suit.

The price of the ram (£50 13s.) was paid to Sir John Hay by Mr. Inspector Yeo—see 82-1,052 herewith—as immediate payment was urged. A.B., 3/10/82.

Submitted.—H.W., 13/10/82. I regret that the advice of Mr. Crown Solicitor Williams to the Chief Inspector of Stock, Mr. Bruce, was not adopted in this case. The amount asked for must of course be paid.—A.R., 13/10/82.

Sir,

Stock Branch, Department of Mines, Sydney, 27 March, 1882.

With reference to the papers forwarded to you some time ago respecting the claim of Messrs. Maiden, Hill, and Clark (£59 1s.), on behalf of Sir John Hay, for the ram killed at the Sheep Quarantine Ground, I have now the honor to inform you that the amount claimed was paid them on the 17th instant, and they have since returned the sum of £8 8s., as their first claim was incorrect—see papers herewith.

Memo. from Mr. Inspector Yeo to Chief Inspector of Stock.

As urgent payment was required in this case, and as the matter was to be brought into Court, I paid to Messrs. Maiden, Hill, and Clark, as agents for Sir John Hay, the amount claimed, viz., £50 13s.; this was the sum Sir John Hay paid for the ram. Although I have the supervision of the Quarantine Station it is not to be expected that I should be held responsible in a case such as this, where Warland, the Quarantine keeper, not only allowed one of the dogs to get inside, but failed to secure him, and thus identify the owner.

I have therefore the honor respectfully to ask that the above amount may be refunded to me.

G.S.Y., 15/12/82.

No. 15.

Memo. from Chief Inspector of Stock to Under Secretary for Mines.

MR. YEO'S claim is recommended to the favourable consideration of the Minister for Mines on the ground that while he is Quarantine keeper, and perhaps legally responsible, the fault, so far as the officers and employees of the Government are concerned, lay through Warland, the man in charge of the place, who resides there and attends to the sheep, not having kept the door fastened on the inside, as it was frequently impressed upon him to do, and see who entered, and particularly that no dogs were admitted.

He was, as Mr. Yeo points out, in fault also in that he did not secure the dog but allowed him to be turned out.

The blame, however, really rests with Mr. Richardson, who, although of course, well acquainted with the habits of dogs and sheep, took three dogs with him to the Quarantine. He says he left them at the gate; but any one knows that if left there they would take the very first chance of rushing in on the door being opened, as the little dog which caused the death of the sheep evidently did.

I might perhaps be allowed to say here, with reference to the Crown Solicitor's remarks on the case, that I understood from him that it was a weak one, based as it is almost wholly on circumstantial evidence, but I would point out that the long delay which took place in prosecuting it (twelve months) had a good deal to do with its failure, as well as the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence given by Warland.

DISEASES IN SHEEP ACT OF 1866, AND THE DISEASES IN SHEEP ACTS AMENDMENT ACTS OF 1878 AND 1882.

(REGULATIONS UNDER.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 30 Vic. No. 16, sec. 77.

Department of Mines, Stock Branch,
Sydney, 20th May, 1884.DISEASES IN SHEEP ACT OF 1866, AND THE DISEASES IN SHEEP ACTS AMENDMENT ACTS OF 1878 AND 1882.

THE following Regulations, made by His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, in accordance with the provisions of the abovenamed Acts, are hereby published for general information.

Those portions of the Regulations of 18th June, 1878, which relate to the qualifications of applicants for the appointment of Inspector of Sheep, and the Regulations of 22nd December, 1882, and of 27th July, 1883, relating to the quarantine and dressing of sheep imported from the Australian Colonies and the charges to be paid for such sheep, are hereby cancelled.

JOSEPH P. ABBOTT.

Duration of quarantine and number of dressings.

1. The duration of quarantine for imported sheep arriving by sea from any of the Australian Colonies shall be not less than ten days.

Medicaments for dressing.

2. The medicaments to be used in the dressing of sheep shall be as follows:—

Tobacco and sulphur, 1 lb. each to 5 gallons of water.

3. The dressing shall be administered at the intervals, at the temperature, and in the manner directed by the Chief Inspector of Sheep.

Quarantine charges.

4. The rates to be charged for the keeping and dressing of imported sheep whilst in quarantine shall be as follows:—

	s.	d.
Sustenance and attendance, for every day or part of a day, each sheep	1	0
Administering dressings, each sheep	5	0

Inland and overland sheep.

5. The provisions of section 58 of the Diseases in Sheep Act of 1866, relating to the Coast Scab District, shall apply to sheep brought from any of the Inland Districts of this Colony, or overland from any of the adjoining Colonies, which are in Sydney, or in the suburbs, during the time that any imported sheep are or remain in Sydney or the suburbs, without being dressed as such.

Attendants at Special Quarantines.

6. In any case where a special quarantine has been granted, an attendant may where necessary be placed by the Chief Inspector of Stock in charge of the sheep in such quarantine, and the person to whom such quarantine has been granted shall pay the expense of such attendant.

Appeals and applications.

7. Any person intending to make an application or appeal to a Board of Sheep Directors, as provided by section 86 of the Diseases in Sheep Act of 1866, shall, with every such application or appeal deposit with the Inspector the sum of £10, to pay the expenses connected therewith; and in the case of appeals against the payment of travelling charges on sheep, the amount of such charges shall also be deposited.

Examination of Inspectors and of applicants for appointment as Inspectors.

8. The Chairman of the Board of Sheep Directors, Sydney, the Chief Inspector of Stock, and the Government Veterinarian shall be a Board to examine any person who holds or who may intend to apply for the appointment of Inspector of Sheep; and such Board shall meet at such places and times, and hold such examinations as the Minister for Mines shall direct, and shall report the result of the same to the Minister within ten days after the holding of the same.

9. The Board, on being satisfied that the persons examined possess the necessary qualifications, and are in all other respects fit to hold the appointment of Inspector, shall grant a certificate to that effect, in the form of the Schedule hereto; and any person unable to produce such certificate shall not be eligible to hold or apply for such appointment.

10. No certificate shall be granted by the Board unless the person examined is found to possess, among others, the following qualifications:—

1. That in case of future appointments the applicant is over twenty-five and under forty years of age.
2. That he is not in any way incapacitated by ill health or bodily infirmity from the active discharge of an Inspector's duties.
3. That he is thoroughly conversant with the provisions of the Acts relating to Diseases in Stock, the branding, marking, mustering, travelling, and impounding of stock,—to the prevention of stock-stealing,—to the destruction of noxious animals,—to public watering-places,—to dividing fences,—and to those portions of the Land Law which relate to reserves for travelling stock.

4. That he is possessed of a practical knowledge of horses, cattle, and sheep, and their management, and a thorough theoretical and practical knowledge of the diseases known as Scab, Catarrh, Fluke, Worms, and Foot-rot in sheep; of Pleuro-pneumonia and Black-leg in cattle; of Anthrax (Cumberland) disease, and of the proper treatment of these diseases.
5. That he has a general knowledge of the character, nature, cause, symptoms, and treatment of Rinderpest, Sheep-pox, Foot and mouth disease, Glanders, Farcy, Pinkeye, Swine fever, Rabies, Tuberculosis, and Hydatids.
6. Any person holding the diploma or certificate of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, London, or a diploma of equivalent value, will not be required to pass the foregoing examination, so far as it relates to diseases in stock.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

RABBIT NUISANCE ACT OF 1883.

(PROCLAMATION.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 46 Vic. No. 14, sec. 45.

NEW SOUTH WALES, to wit. (L.S.) AUGUSTUS LOFTUS, Governor.	} Proclamation by His Excellency The Right Honorable Lord AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.
---	---

WHEREAS by section 31 of an Act of the Parliament of New South Wales, passed in the forth-sixth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "The Rabbit Nuisance Act of 1883," it is enacted that the Governor may from time to time by proclamation declare any animal to be a natural enemy of the rabbit, and prohibit within certain proclaimed districts the killing or capturing of any such animal without a special permit in that behalf, and may from time to time alter and revoke any such proclamation: And whereas it is necessary, for the purpose of the destruction of rabbits in the rabbit-infested portions of the Colony, and to prevent their spread to other portions, to proclaim certain districts to be districts in which the domesticated cat is declared to be a natural enemy of the rabbits: Now, therefore, I, the Right Honorable Lord AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS, the Governor aforesaid, with the advice of the Executive Council, do hereby declare the domesticated cat to be a natural enemy to the rabbit, and prohibit the killing or capturing of any such animal within those portions of the Electoral Districts of Albury, The Hume, The Murrumbidgee, The Murray, Balranald, Bourke, and Wentworth, which are not included within the boundaries of the towns situated in such Districts.

Given under my Hand and Seal, at Government House, Sydney, this twenty-fourth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, and in the forty-seventh year of Her Majesty's Reign.

By His Excellency's Command,
JOSEPH P. ABBOTT.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

THE RABBIT PEST.
(PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF TUBERCULOSIS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 20 December, 1883.

From the Sydney Morning Herald, 31st March, 1883.

THE RABBIT NUISANCE

To the Editor of the Herald.

Sir,

In addition to the many effective measures provided for in the Bill now under the consideration of the Legislature for the abatement of this nuisance, there is one of a scientific character, and quite practicable, which has been apparently overlooked—that is, the effective contamination of colonies of rabbits by means of the introduction amongst them of a contagious and infectious disease, which, while destroying them in large numbers, undermining their constitutions, and impairing their procreative power, would (if rabbits thus diseased were not used for food) be harmless to other animal life. Tuberculosis—a disease to which the rabbit is particularly susceptible—ought to be a great force in the resolution of the rabbit plague. I have had considerable experience in the artificial production of this disease in rabbits when conducting a series of experiments in this and other infectious and contagious diseases at the Royal Veterinary College on behalf of Professor Axe. In numerous experiments the virus of tuberculosis never failed to produce an acute and destructive form of the disease in the inoculated rabbit, which was not only itself the victim but its progeny were invariably fatally diseased. Further than this, the malady was directly conveyed from one to another during copulation. The infectious and contagious properties of the virus of tuberculosis would also be augmented by the contamination of burrows and other resorts of the rabbits with the secretions and excretions of the diseased ones; and these rodents would be rendered more susceptible both from being brought directly in contact with germs of disease in the limited space they usually occupy, and from inspiring impure air (always a predisposing cause), resulting from the presence of disease germs and from the limited supply of oxygen which could reach the more distant and sinuous excavations. The insignificance of the excretions of the rabbit would render them when submitted to atmospheric influences harmless to the domesticated animals.

I feel satisfied that if a few rabbits in proportion to the numbers existing were captured, inoculated with the virus of tuberculosis, and turned out again in such localities as are overrun, that it would be a powerful factor in arresting this nuisance, and that it would not interfere in any way with the action of such other destructive measures as it is considered advisable to adopt, except probably so far as causing the deaths of a few dogs which might eat diseased rabbits. As an illustration of the power of destruction which inoculated tuberculosis would have amongst rabbits, I will relate the particulars of one among a series of remarkable experiments which I carried out in conjunction with Professor Axe, in the early part of 1874. In the February of that year I inoculated a very fine young doe rabbit with gray tubercle from the lung of a diseased heifer. Three weeks after this a vigorous buck rabbit had access to her, and at the termination of utero gestation she brought forth seven young ones which were all weakly and much emaciated. In the course of three weeks these little rabbits died from tuberculosis, as also did the doe a fortnight after. Six weeks later on the buck, who could only have contracted the disease by the copulation with the inoculated doe, died too. Post mortem examinations showed internal deposition of tubercle in every case.

At this time I made in all ten experiments, in each of which there was the same positive result. The virus of tuberculosis can unhappily be obtained from cattle in this colony, for on the only two occasions I visited the Homebush saleyards I saw animals with every appearance of this disease.

I need scarcely mention that it is absolutely indispensable, in order to ensure the success of this means of destruction, that there should be no mistake as to the specific nature of the virus used, for although some of the abortive products of inflammatory diseases bear some resemblance to and may by unskilled persons be mistaken for tuberculous matter, they possess none of its fatally specific properties. This mode of rabbit destruction has this advantage over such measures as have been previously advocated, that the few rabbits which for a time escape actual death would be in too degenerate and diseased a condition to vigorously propagate their species, and would contaminate such other healthy rabbits as joined their colony, whereas if but a few in a district escaped destruction by trapping or ordinary poisons, they would remain a patent source of future trouble.

So convinced am I of the effectiveness of my proposal in abolishing this terrible plague that, should the Government of the Colony, or any body of gentlemen whose runs are affected desire it, I am willing on the payment of my actual travelling expenses to leave for a time my professional work, go into the rabbit-infested districts, and inoculate a sufficient number of the animals to ensure the destruction of the race, on the understanding that I may trust with confidence to the generosity of the persons benefited for my reward, this only to be paid when rabbits in the district worked on are practically extinct.

I have written this letter at the suggestion of Dr. Creed, editor of the Australasian Medical Gazette, with whom I have discussed the matter in all its bearings, and who is convinced that it will be effective in the destruction of the rabbits without risk to the health of other animals or man, provided rabbits are no longer used as an article of food. As I am leaving town for about a fortnight on professional business I beg to refer any gentleman wishing further particulars to him.

There are other animal poisons that would have even a more rapid effect than that of tuberculosis, but we could not be so confident as to their innocuousness to man and the other animals.

I am, &c.,

ANTHONY WILLOWS, M.R.C.V.S.L.,
Coleman Medallist, 1874.

166, Princes-street, 22 March, 1883.

I shall be glad if Dr. Mackellar will favour me with a report upon Mr. Willows' letter, and his views upon the subject.—J. P. ABBOTT, 6/4/83. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, B.C., 7 April, 1883.—H.W. Health Officer for report.—G.R.D., 13/4/83. B.C., 13/4/83.—J.T., for U.S.

Mr. T. Brown to The Chief Inspector of Stock.

Sir,

Tuppal, Deniliquin, 14 April, 1883.

I have the honor of calling your attention to a letter published in the Sydney Morning Herald of the 31st March, by Dr. Willows, on the destruction of rabbits by inoculation of the disease called tuberculosis, and would suggest that the subject should be brought before the Minister for Mines, with a view to get the proposal made by Dr. Willows reported on by some scientific gentlemen in Sydney, and upon their report, if favourable, that an opportunity should be given in (say) the Balranald District, where the rabbits are numerous, for Dr. Willows to test his scheme, and where the utility of it could be ascertained in one or two years. I am more than ever convinced that mere poisoning, shooting, and trapping will never eradicate, even with the most stringent legislation; and if Dr. Willows' plan is practicable without danger to stock there would be no difficulty in raising funds (by special assessment if necessary) to pay him for the time and trouble if his scheme is successful.

I have, &c.,

THOS. BROWN.

Submitted.—A.B., 18/4/83. Submitted.—H.W., 19/4/83. Mr. Willows may be sent for, as I should like to see him. Inform the writer that my attention had been directed to the letter in question, and that I had asked the Government Health Officer to report upon it. I shall be glad if Dr. Mackellar will expedite his report.—J. P. ABBOTT, 20/4/83. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, B.C., 21 April, 1883.—H.W. Dr. Mackellar for report—G.R.D., 27/4/83. The Health Officer, B.C., 28/4/83.—J.T., for U.S. I am already engaged in this inquiry, which I may state will involve a great amount of work and a considerable period of time. I shall however pursue it with vigour.—C.K.M., B.C., 5/5/83. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade. Secretary for Mines.—G.R.D., 8/5/83. The Under Secretary for Mines, B.C., 8/5/83.—J.T., for U.S. The Health Officer, B.C., 17/11/83.—A.B.

Mr. W. T. Read to The Chief Inspector of Stock.

Sir,

Wentworth, 26 October, 1883.

At a meeting of stock-owners, held to-day, it was resolved to ask the Government to send Mr. Anthony Willows to the Wentworth District to experiment with tuberculosis against the rabbits, as it is felt that some other than the existing means of destruction must be tried if the rabbits are to be exterminated. And I am instructed to write on behalf of these gentlemen to ask that you will be good enough to place the matter before the Honorable the Minister for Mines, and use your best endeavours to give compliance to their resolution.

I have, &c.,

W. T. READ,

The Colonial Treasurer might perhaps be moved to obtain from the Health Officer the report asked from him on this subject.—A.B., 13/11/83. The Under Secretary for Mines. Submitted.—H.W., 14/11/83. Appd.—J. P. ABBOTT, 15/11/83. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, B.C., 16/11/83.—H.W. Health Officer.—G.R.D., 23/11/83. G.E., 24/11/83. B.C.

The President of the Board of Health and Medical Adviser to the Government to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Board of Health Office, 127 Macquarie-street, Sydney, 3 Dec., 1883.

I have the honor to state that in obedience to the wish of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer, as embodied in your blank cover communication dated 26th April, 1883, I have taken such steps as were under the circumstances possible, to acquaint myself with the disease known as tuberculosis in its relations to herbivorous animals generally, and especially as to the possibility of artificially introducing it amongst the wild rabbits of the Colony, with a view to their extermination.

In undertaking the consideration of the subject it seemed to me that there were three special points for determination.

1st. Could true tuberculosis be artificially produced amongst the rabbits?

2nd. Would tuberculous rabbits transmit the disease to their healthy fellows by intimate association in the burrows or otherwise?

3rd. Would the flocks and herds upon the infected runs be liable to contract the disease?

I have made, in conjunction with Mr. Anthony Willows, M.R.C.V.S., the Government Veterinarian, a series of experiments with a view to the production of tubercle in rabbits; but I regret to say that they have been, from a variety of circumstances, over which I have had no control, both few and incomplete; they have nevertheless demonstrated one or two facts in regard to the pathology of the disease, which are worthy of notice.

The chief cause of the paucity of the experiments has been the impossibility of procuring rabbits for inoculation. The "Rabbit Act" was passed at an early stage of my inquiry, and within a few days every tame rabbit in the Colony was destroyed.

To each of the questions before referred to I have given very careful and deliberate consideration, but I regret to say that only in regard to the first have I been able to arrive at a definite conclusion.

Rodent animals have long since been considered to be especially prone to tuberculous disease, both naturally and by inoculation, and indeed many writers have averred that the introduction of any foreign substance into the tissues of their bodies is sufficient to excite tuberculous inflammation in their viscera; but that the latter statement is not true, has, I think, been recently conclusively proved by a very complete series of experiments, which were made by Mr. Watson Cheyne, of London; however that gentleman also proved beyond doubt that while specific tubercle was used for inoculation, general tuberculosis was always the result, and our experiments, of which I hereunder give detailed account, have in many particulars verified the fact.

No. 1.—On April 10th we inoculated at the inner side of the thigh a healthy grey buck rabbit with purulent matter from a small disintegrating and foul tubercular cavity in the lung of a bullock slaughtered for food at the Abattoirs, Glebe Island, on the previous day.

The rabbit rapidly lost flesh, until April 16th, when it was found dead—prior to death it had been violently purged, but it had exhibited no other signs of distress—post mortem examination showed that the subcutaneous tissues in the vicinity of the seat of inoculation were infiltrated with a dense gray membranous substance, somewhat resembling wash leather; this also extended amongst the femoral muscles and into the inguinal canal.

The lungs and other viscera were in a perfectly healthy condition.

No. 2.—A healthy white buck rabbit was inoculated on 10th April, with calcareous and ulcerated tuberculous matter from the lungs of a bullock slaughtered at the Abattoirs, Glebe Island, on the previous day.

This rabbit rapidly wasted until the 21st April, when it died, and a post mortem examination showed conditions exactly similar to those of number one.

No. 3.—On April 30 a black buck rabbit was inoculated with miliary tubercle from the lung of a bullock killed for food that day at the Abattoirs.

The rabbit gradually wasted away and died on the 15th August; and on post mortem examination its lungs were found to be thoroughly infiltrated with tubercle, and considerable deposits of tuberculous matter were also discovered in the kidneys and heart.

No. 4.—On April 30th a white doe rabbit was inoculated with miliary tubercle from the same source as above; she died on August 18th, and on post mortem examination the lungs and kidneys were also found to be tuberculous.

No. 5.—On May 1st a gray and white doe was inoculated with miliary tubercle from the lungs of an animal killed at the Abattoirs.

This rabbit was killed on the 9th November, and on post mortem examination showed deposits precisely similar to Nos. 3 and 4, but more abundant.

No. 6.—On 15th August a yellow and white doe was inoculated with tubercle from the lungs of an ox killed on the same day. On 9th November this rabbit was killed, and on post mortem examination showed signs similar to No. 5.

No. 7.—A white buck rabbit was inoculated with tubercle from the Abattoirs on 15th August, and died on the 30th November. On post mortem examination more extensive tubercular deposits were discovered than in any other experiment, the lungs and kidneys being principally affected, but in a minor degree the liver, spleen, muscular coat of the stomach, bowels, and bladder, as well as the whole glandular system.

No. 8.—A brown and white doe rabbit, inoculated with tubercle from the same source as the preceding on 15th August, died on 3rd December, and a post mortem examination showed exactly similar signs.

This series of experiments, to my mind, demonstrates two things: First, that inoculation with fresh tuberculous matter is always followed by a development of general tuberculosis in the inoculated animal; second, that inoculation with decomposing tubercle, although followed by death, is not followed by the development of tuberculosis, but, I take it, by blood poisoning not essentially contagious. I acknowledge that to affirm this positively would perhaps be straining the matter further than is warrantable, but I think that I am justified in directing attention to the results.

As I have before stated, I was unable to obtain a further supply of rabbits to test the infectious properties of the disease; but even in the absence of further proof I see no reason to doubt that in the narrow narrow and sinuous excavations in which the rabbits usually pass a large portion of their time the presence of a tuberculous animal would be likely to prove a means of communicating that disease to the rest.

Tuberculosis is a blood disease, characterized by the occurrence in different parts of the body of caseous or calcareous deposits, or both, varying in size and structure, and most frequently affecting the organs contained in the thoracic or abdominal cavities. It probably exists amongst the domesticated animals over the entire globe; its frequency largely depends upon the sanitary conditions which surround the animals concerned, but probably not entirely so.

It is considered by many of the leading pathologists of the modern school to be an infectious disease, dependent on the reproduction within the system of a specific germ, which they have termed the "Bacillus Tuberculosis."

In some countries it exists to an extraordinary extent; in Mexico, for instance, 34 per cent. of the animals slaughtered for food are found to be affected. In Europe it is very prevalent, especially in the bovine species, and I regret to say that in our own Colony I have found that it is not at all uncommon; indeed, the facility with which I was able to procure the tuberculous matter from the lungs of animals consumed for food in this city was to me a matter of deep concern.

Human and bovine tuberculosis have between them the closest possible pathological affinity. When the matter of either is inoculated into the system of a susceptible animal it gives rise to a similar tubercular formation in the inoculated subject; it is therefore probable that their virus is identical, and hence shows the necessity for resorting to prophylactic measures to prevent the transmission of the disease from animals to man.

The fact that tuberculosis may be transmitted from one animal to another by the ingestion of affected meat or milk is, I think, beyond all question, and that it is also transmissible in a similar manner to the human species may be fairly inferred; it therefore behoves us to be exceedingly careful in wilfully propagating a disease of such a subtle nature.

Numerous objections to the proposal of Mr. Willows, both on the score of its supposed cruelty and of its danger, have been made by various correspondents in the public press, usually with a dogmatic certainty in the inverse ratio of their knowledge of the subject.

That there are serious objections, I verily believe; and, moreover, I consider that the chief objection arises from our want of positively accurate acquaintance with the life history of the organism, to the development of which I believe the disease to be due; for, although I think that immediately on the putrefactive change occurring, after death of the affected animal, all possibility of producing the disease by its means ceases, yet I am free to acknowledge that the matter is too serious to admit of the very remotest doubt. I would, therefore, not counsel the adoption of Mr. Willows' method in the present state of our knowledge.

I have observed, from various newspaper reports, that on the estate of Mr. Brown, M.H.H. of Tasmania, tuberculosis exists amongst the wild rabbits to a very considerable extent, and that the sheep depasturing in the same paddocks are not similarly affected. This I consider to be a matter very worthy of being inquired into, and I would therefore recommend that Mr. Willows should be at once sent to that locality to conduct the necessary investigation, which I am confident he is exceedingly well qualified to do.

I would also recommend that a few inoculated rabbits, together with a few healthy rabbits and some sheep, should be placed upon one of the islands in the Harbour, with a view to a very complete series of experiments being made, in order to set at rest the vexed question of the transmissibility of tuberculosis by association.

In the absence of such an inquiry, carried on in a scientific way, I am unable to recommend the adoption of the proposal under consideration.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES K. MACKELLAR,

President of the Board of Health, and Medical Adviser to the Government of N.S.W.

The question of getting rid of the rabbits in this Colony, or even of holding them in check, is of so much importance that no steps should be omitted to obtain information which might assist in one or the other object. I therefore agree with the Health Officer in thinking that good service would be rendered by Mr. Willows going at once to the estate of Mr. Brown in Tasmania, to conduct the necessary investigation into the disease said to be tuberculosis amongst the rabbits there, or in any other part of Tasmania, and generally to report thereon without delay. Upon his return, if deemed advisable, some rabbits may be obtained for the purpose of experimenting, as suggested by the Health Officer.—J. P. ABBOTT, 10/12/83.

RABBIT AND CATTLE DISEASE IN TASMANIA.

(REPORT ON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 7 May, 1884.

The Government Veterinarian to The Minister for Mines.

Sir,

Department of Mines, Stock Branch, 24 March, 1884.

I have the honor to submit to you the following report of my investigations into the prevailing diseases of the rabbits and cattle of Tasmania, in obedience to the written instructions herewith attached.

Upon my arrival at Ellenthorpe Hall, on the 5th of January last, where I had proceeded for the purpose of reporting upon the alleged disease amongst the rabbits on that estate—publicly stated by Bruni, the pastoral correspondent of the Australasian, to be tuberculosis,—I learned that in 1880 the rabbits upon a part of one particular paddock were first observed to die from some cause uniform in its manifestations and result.

The centre from which this disease apparently originated consists of about 10 acres of grazing land, the soil of which is an admixture of red clay and gravel, and, like the surrounding country, is elevated and undulating on its surface, dry in nature, and generally stony in character; it is bounded on the north, east, south, and west by irregularly elevated bush country; the flowing water of this part is confined to one comparatively small creek, which has its origin in the western tier of hills, from whence it pursues a circuitous course, and although it has occasionally been slightly flooded from extraordinary causes, no results have accrued from this temporary overflow worthy of comment; fairly grown wattle, peppermint, and gum trees abound in this district, and the grasses natural to it are of the varieties known as bush, kangaroo, and silver, in combination with ordinary bush herbage. From the time this rabbit disease was first observed the infected area and adjacent land have been regularly grazed by sheep, in company with some cattle, and since it made its first appearance amongst the rabbits no attempt whatever has been made to keep them down, the disease, unaided, having effected this, although this part formerly contained a great many rabbits, and has constantly been invaded by varying quantities of strangers during all seasons of the year from a thickly infested rabbit country situated beyond its eastern boundary. This district, with its immediate surroundings, is in such a satisfactory sanitary condition as not to favour the development of any disease.

Taking the 10 acres primarily infected as a centre, I carefully and uniformly examined the rabbits, live stock, and general nature of an area of the adjacent country extending from this centre, and comprising about 1,000 acres; excepting that the extended area is bounded on the south by open, light, sandy grass land, and that about 100 acres of it has been regularly cultivated, it differs in no material condition from the more limited region previously described.

During my investigation I passed over the whole of the extended area in a methodical manner, accompanied by gentlemen with their guns and dogs; during five days 100 rabbits, fairly selected from every portion of the extended infected area, were killed in my presence, and every rabbit we discovered was destroyed if possible until the hundred were obtained; most of these were shot, a few were killed by the dogs, and in two instances young rabbits in their nests were destroyed; ninety-five of these were common grey, three were black, and two were blue fawn. Post mortem examinations of this hundred rabbits:—Forty-six were from half-grown to full-sized, and fifty-four were from three weeks old to half-grown; thirty-five of the forty-six were diseased from tuberculosis in one or other of its stages, the remaining eleven showed no indications of this disease; of these thirty-five, twenty-eight were in the first stage of the disease and seven were in the second or third stages; of the fifty-four not half-grown, forty-one were diseased from tuberculosis, and in thirteen there were no indications of this disease; of the forty-one diseased ones, eleven were in the first stage of the disease and thirty in the second and third stages.

These rabbits did not present any external peculiarities from which a direct inference could be drawn as to their normal or abnormal state,—excepting when the disease was far advanced, when their bodies were much emaciated, and their abdomens were enlarged and pendulous, palpation proved this increase in bulk to depend upon a firm, unyielding mass which occupied the antro-inferior portion of the abdominal cavity, but entirely free from such dropsical effusions as result from parasitic affections; upon free incision into the abdominal cavity consistent indications of the disease when in its first stage were always apparent as frequent minute caseous tubercular depositions, varying from the size of a pin's head to that of a hemp-seed, distinctly isolated from each other, and infiltrated into that part of the proper tissue of the liver which is in apposition with its fibrous envelope, the so-called "Glisson's capsule." These depositions in every case studded the external surface of the liver irregularly, without in any way impinging upon the biliary ducts; and in this stage no other part of the body showed any indications of disease.

At the commencement of the second stage—that is, so soon as softening of the tuberculous deposit commenced—the pathognomonic appearances were distinctly diagnostic, but unique; at this stage the liver had attained such dimensions that immediately upon cutting into that region of the abdominal cavity which it naturally occupies, it mechanically protruded through the incision thus made, and exposed upon its every aspect nodular enlargements from the size of a shot to that of a large pea, of a yellow rather than a grey tint, which to my mind resulted in part from the presence of bile imperfectly secreted by this organ only yet partially destroyed by structural disease, and in part from the retrograde changes consequent upon the partial breakdown of the centres of the tuberculous deposits; further examination of the structure of the liver proved that its whole substance was infiltrated by similar depositions to those observed upon its surface; within these caseous and purulent depositions, which resulted from the retrograde changes that had already taken place, were small quantities of the salts of the blood, which caused some calcification, as evidenced by a distinct gritty sensation when these morbid growths were incised.

When the disease was thus far advanced, the mesenteric glands were invariably involved, and by carefully cutting open and cleansing the intestines, numerous limited infiltrations of tubercle were discovered between the muscular coat and serous lining membrane.

No other evidences of positive structural disease were apparent to the unaided senses, although the microscope occasionally showed tubercle elements in the lungs.

The lungs of every rabbit examined in this advanced stage were pale and flaccid, and wasted to less than half their natural size; so marked was the atrophy which resulted from the continuous compression occasioned by the pressure of the liver, which had assumed such enormous proportions. As an example, I will mention to what extent this existed in one of the worst diseased rabbits killed: The carcass, skin, and kidneys, without other viscera, of a little rabbit about six weeks old weighed just 13 ounces, and its liver, which was one mass of broken-down tubercle, alone weighed 5 ounces. The last ravages of this disease, as exemplified in several cases, are worthy of comment. In these the liver was pale, softer, and more or less collapsed from ulceration of the walls of the biliary ducts, as well of such interstitial tissue as before separated the larger tuberculous deposits from each other. These, which had broken down and were more or less purulent in character, had become confluent and passed freely from one cavity to another, and also into such of the smaller ducts as communicated with each other; this progressive ulceration soon extended to the large biliary duct, which at once became inundated with the diseased products. These then passed into the gall bladder, through the cystic duct, and through the terminal portion of this, the ductus communis choledochus, and from thence into that part of the anterior portion of the small intestines termed the duodenum; the excessive quantity of the morbid matter necessary to destroy the important organism with which it had been in contact now entered the main channel of the digestive apparatus, and was at once taken up by the selecting absorbents peculiar to the alimentary tract, and conveyed directly into the portal and probably into the general circulation. The most apparent evidences of septicæmia, or the blood-poisoning which followed, existed in the bowels, and occasioned severe superpurgation, which had evidently been very violent for some time prior to death, and of which the traces were unmistakable.

Histological examinations.—I made the most careful microscopic examinations of every product that could exercise any influence upon or be in any way connected with the disease under consideration, and these examinations in every case showed a complete uniformity of diseased elements, and indubitably confirmed the positive existence of tuberculosis.

There was present in every rabbit thus examined miliary, caseous, and broken-down tubercle, which had often undergone calcification, but not to such an extent or so consistently as is usually observed; large giant cells, irregular in outline and containing a number of nuclei, were always present in continuity with a varying-sized zone of small-celled tissue, together with evidences of fatty degeneration, and the elements consequent upon calcification, with such other débris as resulted from complete or partial disintegration of the tissue of the organism thus diseased; the broken-down tubercle, which had assumed a purulent appearance, consisted nearly entirely of very distinct multinucleated and branched cells particularly well defined and characteristic of this form of tuberculosis.

The process of softening is one of the modifications of tubercle, whether calcification has or has not taken place.

No parasites whatever existed in any of the rabbits killed, excepting in four instances, in which a few flukes were found in the biliary duct, where their presence had not induced any change in the texture with which they were in contact.

I was able to glean a complete history of the infected area, with regard to its exact pastoral and agricultural results during the past eleven years, with full particulars of the nature, age, and actual condition of the whole of the live stock depastured upon it; but a description of these prior to the appearance of the rabbit disease seems uncalled for. Less than a tithe of this area has recently been cultivated, and live stock have only had access to this portion when the special crops, resulting from such cultivation, were secured from the probable damage these animals would be likely to occasion. Practically speaking, the infected area consists of permanent pasture, of a carrying capacity of $1\frac{1}{2}$ acre for one sheep, by which animals it has always been closely and regularly grazed, in conjunction with a small number of cattle. During the time I was investigating the rabbit disease, 2,200 ewes and wethers with a few lambs were depastured upon it. This flock consisted of 900 two-tooth sheep, about 300 culls, and of the remainder some had four and some had six permanent incisors, and all were bred upon this land. The young sheep had been continuously in their present situation during the past ten consecutive months, and the aged sheep for two years; all these have regularly grazed and have been nearly entirely confined to the district under consideration. These sheep I carefully inspected upon two occasions, and all of them were free from any indications of disease. All the sheep required for household consumption at Ellenthorpe Hall have been entirely and invariably fattened upon and taken directly from this area. I made post mortem examinations of numbers killed for this purpose during my visit, and found all of them quite free free from disease of any description. Since May, 1879, eight sheep per week have on an average been killed for consumption upon the estate, and by cautious inquiry I learned of the three men, whose veracity is currently reported to be above suspicion, and who have killed and dressed them all during that time, that all these sheep were always found in good condition and healthy, without any suspicion of internal disease, and that, excepting the occasional presence of a few flukes in the ducts of their livers, nothing irregular was observed. The ten head of cattle grazing upon this area were, when I twice inspected them in a healthy condition.

Cause.—There is no doubt in my mind but that this form of specific tuberculosis, which is recorded as that to which rabbits are naturally most subject, under the appellation of Hepar tuberculosis, originated amongst the rabbits through their contamination by the products of scrofulous inflammation resulting from a chronic disease frequent amongst the cattle of Tasmania, and of which I report fully further on.

In a pathological sense tuberculosis and scrofula are inseparable, as proved long since by Chauveau, Gerlach, and others, who produced tuberculosis by feeding animals on scrofulous products. The marked susceptibility of rabbits to the former disease render them unconditional victims of a malady invariably fatal, although acquired from a disease which in its original subject only gives rise to chronic inflammatory action of a peculiar type, powerless to directly arrest the vital functions with which it so seriously interferes.

In my opinion this form of tuberculosis is confined to the liver, because the germs of the disease probably only originally gained access to the rabbits' system through the medium of their food, contaminated by the excretions of diseased cattle, and perhaps of other rabbits, and are then injected in the alimentary tract, from which these germs are taken up through the villi of the intestines; and as the blood capillaries lie outside the lacteal or lymphatic radical, which they surround in each villus, it is probable that the blood-vessels carry off the greater part of all the soluble nutrition (excepting actual fat) from the alimentary canal, and as all the blood brought to the capillaries of the stomach and intestines is gathered into veins that unite in a single trunk, the portal vein which proceeds directly to the liver, where it breaks up into an immense multitude of capillaries which ramify through the substance of that organ, and thus the germs of this disease may gain direct access to the liver without having ever entered the general circulation, and when once established as a constitutional peculiarity this condition is reproduced through systemic influences.

During my investigation I had abundant proof of the direct hereditary transmission of this malady in many instances. Young rabbits, varying in age from four to six weeks, were examined in the last stage of the disease; in some cases they certainly had not left their nests more than a fortnight, if so long. Although it is evidently congenital, I had not sufficient opportunity to demonstrate this fact.

This form of tuberculosis is of a less infectious nature and less active in the destruction of rabbits than that acute form of the same disease artificially produced by me, for in this the disease is established principally in the respiratory tract, when after a certain stage all the air expired by the diseased rabbit comes directly from a surface studded with the active elements of the disease, and next after this the principal seat in the acute form is the kidneys, from which the germs, so soon as the tubercle breaks down, pass off with the urine, consequently the associations of the rabbits become regularly and frequently contaminated, and in addition to these important seats general tuberculization of the entire system results; whereas that form of this disease now especially under consideration is not only slower in its course, from the fact that it only seizes upon the liver, which is not strictly speaking one of the vital organs, but as this organ is practically situated within an enclosed cavity the germs have but little opportunity to extend the disease by infection until the terminal stage, when the tubercle breaks down, flows into the bowels, and is voided per anus, when death results from septicæmia, and the probabilities are that the active germs are destroyed with the victim's life, but this could only be proved by systematic experiments which I had no opportunity of carrying out. The diseased rabbits must invariably have died in burrows, holes, or some other hidden situations, for they were not found dead on the surface, and there were large numbers of blow-flies very frequently observed around many such places.

In spite of the sub-acute nature of this disease it is doing good service as a rabbit exterminator in Tasmania, which Colony it is likely to entirely clear of rabbits, if not allowed to die out, and if properly worked, for not only has it in its own quiet way, when left to chance, to a great extent rescued a district (formerly thickly infested and still subject to constant invasion) from the rabbit plague, but it is extending the area of its operation by a process of consistent if slow expansion. Of this I had a marked illustration, for upon one part of the infested area previously described all the rabbits caught were opened and found healthy four months prior to my inspection. A few rabbits caught upon land the soil, vegetation and water of which are freely and permanently impregnated with salt, were fatally diseased from this form of tuberculosis. That this rabbit disease has been more or less prevalent in Tasmania in times past in conjunction with the prevailing cattle disease is probable from the testimony of many respectable persons who have been familiar with the latter disease all their lives, and who relate instances of disease in its general characteristics like this having completely cleared certain districts of rabbits, and which have for a few subsequent years remained clear of them but afterwards became again infested. My supposition that the rabbit disease originated from bovine scrofula is confirmed by the fact of observing occasional instances of commencing disease—perhaps two or three per cent. of the rabbits examined in four districts distinct from Ellenthorpe Estate, for the prevailing cattle disease is common in every part of Tasmania.

PREVAILING DISEASE OF THE CATTLE IN TASMANIA.

On the 8th of January last, in conjunction with Mr. Park, M.R.C.V.S., of Hobart, who throughout rendered me valuable assistance, I had the honor to receive orders from the Honorable the Premier of Tasmania to report upon the alleged cancer in the cattle of that Colony. In compliance with these orders, I beg to submit the following explanation of the nature of this disease, its causes and consequences; prefaced by such an account of its general history as was obtained by travelling more than 380 miles, in order to hear the deductions of those persons who had most experience of it, to watch its influence during life, and to obtain sufficient diseased animals of an average type for post mortem examinations.

All the oldest colonists interrogated have, throughout their earliest experiences of live stock, been sufficiently conversant with this disease to recognize its existence by its simple external manifestations, and their explanation of its course and termination were evidently founded upon such facts as are only gained gained by long-continued personal observation, the tenor of which will be embodied ; but their ideas as to its causation were generally so crude and conflicting as to be scarcely worthy of consideration. No one questioned had ever known an animal thus diseased to recover.

In all, ten animals were killed and submitted to the most careful post mortem examinations, and every kind of diseased product was carefully examined with a reliable and powerful microscope.

These cattle were of various sexes, breeds, ages, and in different stages of the disease, as shown below :—

The ordinary early evidence of this disease is the appearance of a swelling in the bones which form the upper or the lower jaw, more frequently in the latter, and, in the majority of cases, commencing in the region of the third and fourth molar teeth. This enlargement at first appears as a hard, somewhat diffused swelling ; after a time it gradually becomes more defined, and develops very slowly as a hard bony tumour, the dimensions of which ever continue to increase from infiltration into this tumorous growth, and from ulceration of the surrounding structures, with which by its extension it is brought into apposition. The most apparent result of this progressive ulceration, to an ordinary observer, is the destruction of the skin and other tissue over the region of the diseased part, which principally from this cause then presented the appearance of an ill-defined tumour, irregular on its surface, studded with small accumulations of matter of a fetid odour. This condition results more commonly when the lower jaw is the seat of the disease, for when the upper jaw is seized upon, the structures of which it then causes the decay, being of lower organization than those destroyed in the lower jaw, it appears more as a diseased bony expansion comparatively free from the softer depositions. As a rule there is but one external diseased centre in one animal, which increases so slowly that the general condition of the animal is often not affected for years, and then more from mechanical derangement than from specific causes. The ordinary concomitant symptoms of this disease are so palpable and so uniform that it is not necessary to mention them here.

Post mortem examinations.—Although some of the cattle killed had immense tumorous growths and had been diseased for years, none of them were really emaciated. Upon cutting into the external surface of the tumorous excrescence, the skin when not entirely destroyed by ulceration was hard, thickened, and adherent to the diseased tissue, which it covered, the whole exhibiting distinct evidences of long-continued inflammatory action of a very low type, and throughout was infiltrated with scrofulous products, which were softer than the adventitious tissue in which they were embedded ; these varied in appearance from yellow speck-like depositions of caseous consistency, which thickly studded the incised surface, to accumulations more purulent in character, thinner in consistency, lighter in colour, and of increased dimensions—the retrograde changes consequent upon advanced disease. Section of the diseased bone showed that the proper bone tissue was exceedingly spongy and soft, that the finer osseous lamellæ were broken down or absorbed, that the Haversian canals were obliterated, that the internal medullary tissue was completely destroyed, and that the salts of the blood were only present in very limited quantities. There existed throughout this diseased osseous structure similar invasions of scrofulous products to those observed in the surrounding diseased tissue. The mesenteric lymphatic glands were in every case enlarged and changed to a homogenous mass, dark in colour, and infiltrated with speck-like scrofulous or tuberculous deposits, which in some instances had undergone liquefaction. In each animal the liver was similarly diseased, for although the greater part of this organ was not involved, certain portions of the biliary ducts always showed thickening of a cartilaginous nature, with calcareous degeneration, which prevented osmosis of the secreted bile, from the retention of the solid elements of which and from the deposition of the salts of the blood biliary calculi, both large and numerous, resulted. On the surface of liver, immediately under Glisson's capsule, and occasionally in its substance, small yellow tuberculous deposits were distinctly seen, generally of small dimensions, but invariably present. In four of the animals killed well-marked scrofulous deposits were discovered in their lungs. In the lungs of four of the others there were evidences of the chronic inflammatory action peculiar to the scrofulous diathesis, but in the remaining two these organs were apparently healthy.

The oldest bullock had been diseased for nearly four years, and his kidneys were seriously involved, both the cortical and medullary substances were pale, soft, and friable, and infiltrated by large and well-defined calcareous depositions.

In every animal either the kidneys or pancreas was in an abnormal state. The smaller glands near the organs most diseased were always involved ; but the result of this implication, both as to degree and extent, was irregular. In some of these cattle a limited number of flukes were occasionally found in the main ducts of the liver, but neither these nor the few other parasites observed in any way influenced the organism of the animal in which they existed.

Microscopic examination was carefully made of each of the abnormal products peculiar to this disease ; these were of three varieties :—

The special elements diagnostic of scrofulous inflammation.

The elements resulting from the low inflammatory action caused in the organ or part by the irritation and contamination induced by the presence of the specific germs.

The formations resulting from the retention in that part of the organ implicated of some of the elements of the secretion selected (in parts of the organ less involved) for excretion.

Throughout

Throughout the tumorous growths and in the mesenteric glands and liver of each of the ten animals killed, large giant-cells with many nuclei and in various stages of development were distinctly seen; these cells were also frequently observed in their lungs, kidneys, and in some other parts of their bodies; and although in these organs their deposition was irregular, these disease germs when present were always of uniform appearance.

The elements resulting from the destructive inflammation which the presence of the germs caused in the organ or part appeared as débris of the natural tissue, intermingled with pus cells and with the specific cells before mentioned, together with evidences of exudation of a fluid, poor in albumen, into the surrounding connective tissue. The formations, which principally resulted from an accumulation of the solid elements of bile, as biliary calculi, were common in those portions of the biliary ducts which had undergone calcareous degeneration.

Nature and cause.—Scrofula of cattle absolutely depends upon only one positive cause—"the presence of its specific germ"; but there are many determining influences which either favour, check, or arrest the propagation of this specific element. The fact that similar chronic disease of many organs of the body prevailed at the same time proves the existence of a blood disease, and the consistent presence of tubercle in the many organs thus diseased is actual proof of its real nature,—when all the collateral consequences and coincidents of the disease confirm this diagnosis. This malady is both hereditary and acquired. The principal cause of its frequency amongst the Tasmanian cattle is the transmission of the germs of this disease from breeding-cattle with a scrofulous diathesis to their progeny.

In and in breeding is only second to direct hereditary contamination, for when animals of consanguineous relationship breed together, not only is there the greater probability of them being constitutionally tainted from any disease common to such animals, but the vital powers of their progeny are so impaired that even if born free from actual disease they would be likely to become infected from such insidious forms of this malady as would be inert to more vigorous animals. This disease may be directly acquired by a healthy animal by contagion from one suffering from this malady when in an advanced stage, for if the germs of this disease enter the system of a healthy animal by injection or otherwise, this disease will be reproduced in that animal. Such a cause may at any time operate so soon as the actual diseased products contaminate the surroundings of other cattle.

That scrofulous matter given to animals with their food will reproduce in them this disease, or even produce tuberculosis, is a fact long since known to many pathologists.

The exciting causes which favour the development of this disease in any animal with a scrofulous taint are—insufficient nourishment, undue exposure to unfavourable climatic influences, injury to the face from external violence; (but this must not be confounded with those cases in which simple inflammation results from injury to a healthy animal and afterwards passes off by resolution); the inflammation of the alveolar cavities situated in the internal structure of the bones of the jaws, consequent upon the development of the last permanent molar teeth. It is a well-known fact that any inflammation, however simple in its nature, in a scrofulous subject, not only has a constant tendency to spread to the surrounding structures, but such exudations as result from this inflammation not being absorbed exercise a destructive influence upon the tissues with which they are in apposition.

This disease, as prevailing in all the cattle examined, is remarkable for the smouldering malignancy of its protracted ravages, which, although incapable of directly arresting the vital functions, ever continue to extend over them their destructive action, and further cause such mechanical derangement as ultimately insures the extinction of the victim seized upon.

This disease can after a time be stamped out by the thorough and consistent enforcement of the obvious prophylactic measures.

Under no circumstances whatever should any animal with scrofulous disease, or any animal to which such a suspicious taint directly or indirectly attaches, be permitted to breed.

In and in breeding should be carefully avoided, and the existing herds of cattle, after being purified from all associations with diseased animals, should be invigorated by the introduction of fresh strains of blood from healthy and vigorous progenitors.

Perhaps there is no objection to the direct fattening of cattle in the earliest stages of the disease, providing that such cattle are, during the fattening process, so circumstanced as to be unable to contaminate other cattle by contagion from their diseased secretions or excretions.

In accordance with the principles which now regulate the inspection of meat intended for human consumption in Europe, only the carcasses of cattle fattened in the earliest stages of this disease, which after death prove to be really nutritious and quite wholesome, and in which there are but comparatively slight deposition of the diseased products in the internal organs, it being carefully ascertained that there is no breaking up or softening of these depositions, and providing that every portion of these diseased organs or parts are completely removed from the carcass involved, then, and then only, should the remaining parts of such carcasses be permitted to pass into human consumption. But I am of opinion that the consumption of meat or milk from scrofulous or tuberculous animals is always dangerous.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

ANTHONY WILLOWS, M.R.C.V.S., London,
N.S.W. Government Veterinarian.

Questions 4 and 5.

The total estimated cost of the works yet to be done, exclusive of land, is, £1,024,461. Of these works nearly the whole are under contract, and the balance will be shortly.

The actual cost of the whole works when completed cannot of course yet be given, but the estimated cost is £1,639,678, in addition to which there will be a further sum of £145,663, to provide for works required in bringing the water to Sydney previous to the completion of the Prospect Reservoir, for land and compensation and for salaries and supervision, for which items money was not originally voted.

About £250,000 of the excess is due to the increased capabilities of the works, which have been raised from 80 million gallons a day, in accordance with Mr. Clark's recommendation, to about double that quantity, or something over 155 million gallons. About £200,000 is due to the increased cost of labour since the Commissioner's and Mr. Clark's estimates were framed, and £100,000 is due to the increased cost of dam, which has been very considerably enlarged.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

LANDS FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES ACQUISITION ACT.

(RESUMPTIONS FOR WATER SUPPLY, SYDNEY AND SUBURBS.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 44 Vic. No. 16, sec. 6.

NOTIFICATION OF RESUMPTION OF LAND UNDER 44 VICTORIA No. 16.

NEW SOUTH WALES,) By His Excellency the Right Honorable to wit.) Sir AUGUSTUS WILLIAM FREDERICK SPENCER LOFTUS (commonly called Lord AUGUSTUS LOFTUS), Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, a Member of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

(L.S.)
AUGUSTUS LOFTUS,
Governor.

WHEREAS I, the Governor aforesaid, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, have duly sanctioned the carrying out of certain works for and in connection with the supply of water to the City of Sydney, and its suburbs, in the said Colony, for and towards the completion of which said works public funds are available under the provisions of the "Public Works Loan Act of 1879," and whereas the lands hereinafter described are required for the construction of the said works: Now I, the Governor of the said Colony, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, in pursuance of the powers in this behalf given to or vested in me by the "Lands for Public Purposes Acquisition Act," do, by this notification published in the Gazette and in a newspaper, that is to say, in the "Sydney Morning Herald," circulated in the Police District wherein the said lands are situated, declare that the lands hereinafter described have been resumed for the public purposes hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, for and in connection with the supply of water to the said City of Sydney, and its suburbs, to the intent that upon the publication of this notification in the Gazette, the legal estate in the said lands shall forthwith be vested in the Minister for Public Works and his successors, on behalf of Her Majesty, for the purposes of the said last-mentioned Act, for an estate of inheritance in fee simple in possession, freed and discharged from all trusts, obligations, estate, interest, contracts, charges, rates, rights-of-way, or other easements whatsoever; and to the intent further that the legal estate therein, together with all powers incident thereto or conferred by the said Act, shall be vested in the said Minister as a trustee with the powers stated in the said last-mentioned Act: And I declare that the following are the descriptions of the lands hereinbefore referred to, that is to say:—

Honorable Privy Council, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

WHEREAS I, the Governor aforesaid, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, have duly sanctioned the carrying out of certain works for and in connection with the supply of water to the City of Sydney and its suburbs in the said Colony, for and towards the completion of which said works public funds are available under the provisions of the "Public Works Loan Act of 1879": And whereas the lands hereinafter described are required for the construction of the said works: Now, I, the Governor of the said Colony, with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Colony, in pursuance of the powers in this behalf given to or vested in me by the "Lands for Public Purposes Acquisition Act," do by this notification, published in the Gazette and in a newspaper, that is to say, in the "Sydney Morning Herald," circulated in the Police District wherein the said lands are situated, declare that the lands hereinafter described have been resumed for the public purposes hereinafter mentioned, that is to say, for and in connection with the supply of water to the said City of Sydney and its suburbs, to the intent that, upon the publication of this notification in the Gazette, the legal estate in the said lands shall forthwith be vested in the Minister for Public Works and his successors, on behalf of Her Majesty, for the purpose of the said last-mentioned Act, for an estate of inheritance in fee simple in possession, freed and discharged from all trusts, obligations, estate, interests, contracts, charges, rates, rights-of-way, or other easements whatsoever; and to the intent, further, that the legal estate therein, together with all powers incident thereto, or conferred by the said Act, shall be vested in the said Minister as a trustee with the powers stated in the said last-mentioned Act. And I declare that the following are the descriptions of the lands hereinbefore referred to, that is to say:—

1st. All that piece or parcel of land situate in the parish of Minto, county of Cumberland, and colony of New South Wales, being part of a grant of 100 acres to William Gaudry, as also part of lots A 12 and A 13 of the Gledwood subdivision: Commencing on the eastern boundary of Crown land used for water supply purposes, at right angles to and distant 1 chain from 20 miles 3,105 feet on the chainage of the centre line of canal; and bounded thence on the south and east by other parts of the said lots as follows: North 83 degrees 48 minutes east 1 chain; north 6 degrees 57 minutes east 2 chains 54 links; north 33 degrees 15 minutes east 2 chains 54 links; north 59 degrees 33 minutes east 2 chains 54 links; north 85 degrees 52 minutes east 2 chains 54 links; and south 80 degrees 59 minutes east 2 chains 25 links to the western side of a reserved road; thence by that road northerly 96 links to the southern boundary of the aforesaid Crown land used for water supply purposes; and bounded thence on the north and west by that land, to the point of commencement, being a strip of land 1 chain wide lying along a portion of the southern and eastern boundary of a parcel of land, part of the above-mentioned grant and lots, resumed by notification in the Government Gazette of the 13th October, 1882, containing 1 acre 1 rood 6 perches or thereabout, and said to be in the possession and occupation of J. Mahoney.

2nd. All that piece or parcel of land situated in the parish of Minto, county of Cumberland, and colony of New South Wales, being part of a grant of 100 acres to William Gaudry, as also of lot A 3 of the Gledwood subdivision: Commencing on the eastern side of a reserved road at its intersection with the southern boundary of Crown land used for water supply purposes; and bounded thence on the north by the said Crown land as follows: North 84 degrees 45 minutes east 2 chains 12 links; and north 70 degrees 29 minutes east 4 chains 25 links; thence on the east and south by other parts of the said lot A 3; south 19 degrees 31 minutes east 1 chain; south 70 degrees 29 minutes west 4 chains 72 links; and south 84 degrees 45 minutes west 2 chains 36 links to the eastern side of the aforesaid reserved road; thence on the west by that road northerly 1 chain 12 links, to the point of commencement, being a strip of land 1 chain wide lying along a portion of the southern boundary of a parcel of land, part of the above-mentioned grant and lot, resumed by notification in the Government Gazette of the 13th October, 1882, containing 2 roods 22 perches or thereabouts, and said to be in the possession and occupation of A. Munro.

3rd. All that piece or parcel of land situate in the parish of Minto, county of Cumberland, and colony of New South Wales, being part of a grant of 300 acres to Henry Kable, as also part of lot A 6 of the Gledwood subdivision: Commencing on the southern boundary of lot A 7 of the said subdivision at its intersection with the western boundary of Crown land used for water supply purposes; and bounded on the north by lot A 7 bearing north 45 degrees west 66 links; on the west and south by other parts of the said lot A 6; south 4 degrees 32 minutes west 1 chain 66 links; south 17 degrees 28 minutes east 2 chains 77 links; and north 72 degrees 32 minutes east 50 links; thence on the east by the aforesaid Crown land northerly, to the point of commencement, being a strip of land 50 links wide lying along a portion of the western boundary of a parcel of land, part of the above-mentioned grant and lot, resumed by notification in the Government Gazette of the 13th October, 1882, containing 31½ perches or thereabouts, and said to be in the possession and occupation of A. Munro.

4th. All that piece or parcel of land situated in the parish of Minto, county of Cumberland, and colony of New South Wales, being part of a grant of 300 acres to Henry Kable, as also part of lot A 7 of the Gledwood subdivision: Commencing on the southern boundary of the said lot at its intersection with the western boundary of Crown land used for water supply purposes; and bounded thence on the south by lot A 6 north 45 degrees west 66 links; on the west by other part of the said lot A 7 north 4 degrees 32 minutes east 3 chains 13 links; and north 26 degrees 33 minutes east 10 chains 91 links to the southern boundary of Cordeaux's, now H. Bell's, 700 acres; thence on the north by that boundary south 40 degrees east 54 links to the aforesaid western boundary of Crown land used for water supply purposes; thence on the east by that land southerly, to the point of commencement, being a strip of land 50 links wide lying along the western boundary of a parcel of land, part of the above-mentioned grant and lot, resumed by notification in the Government Gazette of the 13th October, 1882, containing 2 roods 30 perches or thereabouts, and said to be in the possession and occupation of Mrs. R. Thompson.

5th. All that piece or parcel of land situate in the parish of Minto, county of Cumberland, and colony of New South Wales, being part of two grants of 200 acres each to S. Lord: Commencing at a point on the southern boundary of the most southern of the aforesaid two grants (which is also the northern side of the Denham Court Road) at its intersection with the western boundary of Crown land used for water supply purposes; and bounded thence on the south by the Denham Court Road north 40 degrees west 60 links; thence on the west by other parts of the said grants; north 53 degrees 22 minutes east 6 chains 44 links; north 45 degrees east 2 chains

20 links; north 23 degrees 16 minutes east 2 chains 20 links; north 11 degrees 33 minutes east 2 chains 20 links; north 5 degrees 10 minutes west 2 chains 20 links; north 13 degrees 32 minutes west 10 chains 50 links; north 8 degrees 5 minutes east 17 chains; north 14 degrees 6 minutes east 30 chains 9 links; north 6 degrees 51 minutes east 1 chain 40 links; north 7 degrees 40 minutes west 1 chain 40 links; north 22 degrees 10 minutes west 1 chain 40 links; north 36 degrees 41 minutes west 1 chain 40 links; north 43 degrees 56 minutes west 4 chains 9 links; north 7 degrees 15 minutes west 9 chains 74 links to the southern boundary of J. Drummond's, now J. Moore's, 410 acres; thence on the north by that 410 acres bearing south 60 degrees east 63 links; thence on the east by the aforesaid Crown land used for water supply purposes southerly, to the point of commencement, being a strip of land 50 links wide lying along the western boundary of a parcel of land, part of the above-mentioned grants, resumed by notification in the Government Gazette of the 13th October, 1882, containing 4 acres 2 roods 19 perches or thereabouts, and said to be in the possession of R. Bloomfield, and occupation of H. Bell.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the Great Seal of the Colony to be hereto affixed, at Government House, Sydney, this twenty-second day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four, and in the forty-eighth year of Her Majesty's Reign.

ARTESIAN WELLS.

NOTES ON DRILLING AND BORING, AS PRACTISED IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA: BY C. W. DARLEY, M. INST. C.E.]

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 14 October, 1884.

NOTES ON DRILLING AND BORING ARTESIAN WELLS.

DURING my recent visit to America I availed myself of the opportunity, thus afforded, of inspecting the various systems which have been adopted there for sinking artesian well bores, and, at the request of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, I now have the honor to submit a report upon what I saw, together with particulars and sketches of the appliances in use. I trust that my notes may be of some practical benefit and assistance to those who are likely to be engaged in searching for water at great depths in these Colonies.

In some respects I fear the information I have obtained may appear scant and insufficient, but it must be borne in mind that the time at my disposal was somewhat limited, and the distances to be travelled over, in order to see the various boring operations in progress, were immense.

The boring, as hereinafter described, being in most cases carried on by contractors who have portions of their apparatus covered by patents, some difficulty was found in obtaining information on many important points of practical detail, the contractors frequently being reticent, and suspicious as to the object of my interrogations; on the other hand, manufacturers and vendors of apparatus were most willing to furnish me with abundant information, but in all cases this had to be received cum grano salis, as the information imparted seldom went beyond praise of their particular apparatus, and but rarely were any really useful and practical notes to be obtained from such sources.

The States where I found most boring operations in progress, were California (where wells are being sunk for both water and oil), Colorado, New York, and Pennsylvania; in the latter State, so far as I am aware, oil and gas wells only have been sunk.

The process of sinking holes through rock, as is necessary in nearly all instances where great depths have to be reached, either for water or oil, is usually termed "drilling": and "boring," when alluvium or gravel and sandbeds only have to be passed through; but in these latter cases drill gear is sometimes used to advantage, as will be hereinafter explained,—the immediate difference between the two methods being that drilling is usually done with only a limited length (about 40 feet) of iron rods, which are worked suspended from a stout hawser, while boring is carried on with continuous bars, either wood or iron, in about 25 feet lengths.

In California I found a great number of wells being bored all through the San Joaquin Valley, which embraces a large district, some 280 miles in length north and south, and some 70 or 80 miles wide, lying south of Stockton, and between the foot of the Sierra Nevada on the east and the coast range on the west. This district in its natural state, owing to the extreme dryness of the climate, the rainfall only averaging from 8 inches to 10 inches per annum, is a barren desert, the soil is of a light loamy or sandy nature, only covered in places here and there with patches or tufts of a wiry grass, and so far as I could ascertain is quite useless without irrigation. Within the last five years this land has been obtainable at about a dollar (4s. 2d.) per acre; its value however when properly irrigated has long been known. Some years ago a large tract was brought under cultivation, with the assistance of water supplied by canal and flume companies, who constructed flumes from the head waters of the King's River, and entered into contracts to supply landowners with a certain quantity of water per acre per annum, at a fixed rent, the supply being guaranteed to the users by deed for a fixed period, usually 99 years; the right thus acquired is transferable with the land. Owing to the limited quantity of water, however, but a comparatively small district has been thus improved. Knowing how valuable the land became with the assistance of water, induced the settlers to endeavour to obtain a supply by artesian wells, which latter have now proved so successful and reliable that land throughout the valley is worth on an average at least $50 to $60 (£10 to £12) per acre, some land suitable for fruit growing realizing over $100 = £20 per acre.

The water is usually found at depths varying from 350 to 600 feet, in a bed of sand which is overlaid by beds of impervious clay, and clay and gravel mixed, the upper 40 to 80 feet throughout the valley being light loamy and alluvial deposit.

In the gravel beds, immediately beneath the upper alluvial deposit, water is frequently met with, but it is usually limited in quantity, indifferent in quality, and seldom or indeed never rises to the surface; on small farms and homesteads however it is not despised, being generally sought for and obtained by the ordinary drive, or Abyssinian tube wells, but as the water must then be pumped, it cannot be economically used for irrigation purposes, although in some districts where water has not been obtained from deep artesian wells, hundreds of the drive wells have been sunk and the water raised by windmills.

When sinking artesian wells it is necessary to stop back this upper water, for two reasons: first, to prevent it contaminating the purer supply from below; and, secondly, which is the more important, to prevent the rising water being lost or absorbed in the upper pervious measures. This led to the bores being lined throughout with iron tubes or casings, which is an imperative necessity, for, in some instances, where the ground was found strong enough to stand without caving, unlined bores were tried, but they were found never to flow till lined.

The absence of watertight lining will probably be found the reason why water has not risen to the surface more frequently than it has done in the numerous well-shafts sunk in Australia, where it is well known that a porous stratum, frequently containing brackish water, is usually found at depths of from 40 to 90 feet below the surface, the brackish water in some cases having been stopped back sufficiently to allow the sinking to continue till fresh water was reached; the latter then rose in the well to within some 30 to 60 feet of the surface, but no higher. There can be little doubt that in such cases the lower water found an escape through the pervious measures; had a watertight lining been used it is quite possible that many of these wells would now have been flowing ones, i.e., the water would have risen above the surface.

I wish, however, to guard myself from being misunderstood on this point, as I do not desire to raise false hopes by conveying the idea that any method of treating artesian bores in water-bearing measures will obtain flowing wells, as this wholly depends on the situation of the bore geologically; to obtain this, the water must be stored in the earth and have communication with an under stream or water-bearing strata, leading from hills situated higher than the ground surface at the bore. The hill source may be a great distance away, still if the water-bearing strata is overlain with measures of impervious clay, upon these measures being pierced the water will rise to the surface, unless, as before-mentioned, it finds an escape through upper pervious measures.

In the case of the San Joaquin Valley, already referred to, the abundant supply found there of course comes from the neighbouring Sierra Nevada, where the winter snow is stored and given out throughout the spring and summer months, just when the water is most needed, the mountains thus acting as a natural reservoir for conserving the water.

The business of sinking artesian wells has become such a large one in the States that a great many contractors have turned their attention to the subject, nearly all of whom have introduced some special methods and appliances of their own own for carrying on the work. Frequently the contractors take the work on the "No cure, no pay" system, that is, if they do not find a flowing well they are not paid; but of course this is only done in districts known to contain artesian water, it being merely a matter of going sufficiently deep to reach it. Under this system, should any failure occur, either through carelessness or accident which may render it necessary to abandon the bore, and perhaps a considerable length of the casing within it, the loss falls on the contractors. So far as I could ascertain, the cost of the work is very much the same with one apparatus as with another; but as there are varying circumstances under which each kind may have a special advantage, I will describe three kinds of apparatus which will fairly represent the different types of machines mostly in use:—

- 1st. The ordinary boring apparatus, with a variety of special tools used in connection therewith.
- 2nd. The hydraulic well-borer.
- 3rd. The ordinary drilling apparatus, as specially suited for artesian wells, where the depth rarely has to exceed 600 feet.

HAND-BORING APPARATUS.

The ordinary boring apparatus consists of a wood or iron derrick (see plate I), with a sheave on top, about 30 feet over the ground; beside the single leg is placed a crab-winch carrying a sufficient length of $1\frac{1}{2}$ " iron or steel wire rope; the winch usually has two driving pinions, one for working by hand, the second for working by horse-gear, for running up the rope quickly, more especially when working with the sand pumps. The boring bit (varieties of which are shown on plate II, figures 7, 8, 9, 11) is attached to the rods, which are usually made up in 25 feet lengths, either wood or iron, the iron ones being made of $1\frac{1}{2}$ " gas pipe, with screwed pin and box ends welded on; these however would be found too heavy on the boring tool if wholly used, so it is the practice to use some rods of pine, 4" x 4" (see plate I, fig. 2), which, owing to their buoyancy in the water, with which the bore is charged, help to balance the weight of the iron rods. The top or working rod is usually made of $1\frac{1}{2}$ " square iron, on which a capstan spanner travels and works—two men are sufficient for giving the necessary circular motion to the rods. It will be seen that in this process much delay must necessarily be incurred in drawing the rods every time the auger is filled, which happens about every fourth or fifth foot sunk. The rods on each such occasion have to be raised, unscrewed, and laid aside one by one, the reverse operations when lowering taking an equal time. Notwithstanding this delay I found that the 7-inch wells were bored to a depth of 400 feet and lined with casing at an average rate of nearly 25 feet per day—the first 100 feet being performed much quicker, and of course the last 100 feet proportionately slower. When adding on or sinking casing, the rods need not be withdrawn, but left standing on the bottom or suspended from the expanding plug (see plate II, fig. 3), the top or capstan length only being removed. The auger bits are made in a variety of patterns, some altogether with closed sides for working in sandy or very loose ground, others made with one side quite open like a carpenter's shell auger and termed the pod auger (see plate II, fig. 7). This pattern is found to work very well in stiff clay and is readily emptied. When beds of fine sand are met with, then the sand or sludge pump, as shewn at plate V, fig. 15, must be used; this is usually lowered by a small line and jumped when at the bottom till the sludge or sand is worked up loose, when it readily fills and upon being drawn up quickly the ball valve prevents the sludge from escaping; when emptied it is again lowered and the process repeated till the bore is clear, ready for the rods to be lowered and the boring resumed.

Besides the common sand pump last referred to, which can only be filled by jumping it on the bottom, there are others made with a sucker valve rod, which, when the pump reaches the bottom, is worked up and down with a light line from the surface; this pumps the barrel full of the sand or silt, at the same time discharging the water above the plunger. Another form of pump for clearing out bores is shewn on plate V, fig. 12. The great advantage attending this somewhat more expensive form of pump is the facility with which it can be emptied by simply knocking up the sliding sleeve on top, when the tube opens longitudinally with a scissors' joint, instantly releasing its contents.

Care

Care must be taken in boring not to let the excavation get too far in advance of the casing, or the sides may cave in, and cause the bore to become out of line. Should this occur it may be found impossible to force down the casing and consequently render it necessary to abandon the bore.

I found that the invariable practice is to start the bore 7 inches diameter, and if possible carry it the same size all the way down, but in most cases the friction against the casing becomes too great to admit of its being sunk more than 300 feet of this size, and then a 6-inch casing is put inside and the hole carried on with the smaller diameter to the required depth. In a few cases I found 8-inch and 7-inch holes being sunk, but these sizes are exceptional, 7-inch and 6-inch being generally found large enough. When a hole containing two sizes of casing, in this way, is finished, the inner or smaller casing is usually cut off by special tools a little above the bottom of the large casing, and the upper length withdrawn to be used again. A tool suitable for this purpose is shewn on plate II, fig. 6.

As it is necessary that the auger should bore as near as possible to the inside diameter of the casing, it is necessary to have a set of augers for each size, i.e., about a $6\frac{3}{4}$ -inch auger for the 7-inch casing, and $5\frac{3}{4}$ -inch for the 6-inch casing.

When about to start a bore, as soon as the derrick is set up, a hole should be dug under the centre some 6 to 8 feet deep, and the first length of casing set up vertically in the centre; the earth is then filled in round it again and well rammed, thus forming a guide and insuring a fair start for the boring tools.

A horse-power machine is usually used in conjunction with this boring apparatus for the purpose of operating the winch rapidly when drawing the rods and working the sand pump; the most convenient method of conveying the motion to the winch is with friction wheels applied with a cam motion; in this case the horse can be kept constantly moving when drawing rods; the attendant need only place his foot on a lever to throw the friction pinion in contact with the winch wheel, and thus wind up the rods 25 feet at a time or as may be necessary. The circular motion for working the rods is, however, given to them by two men walking round with the capstan spanner as before mentioned.

HYDRAULIC BORING APPARATUS.

This apparatus (see plate III, fig. 7) is worked very much on the same principle as the diamond drill, the action of which is, I believe, pretty well understood now in this country. The rods are formed in the usual 25 feet lengths of strong gas or lap welded iron piping, $2\frac{1}{2}$ inch or $2\frac{3}{4}$ inch internal diameter, with screwed wrought iron spigots and socket connections at their ends (see plate III, fig. 1); the lower length carries the cutter, the best form of which is shewn at plate III, fig. 2.

A strong stream of water is pumped continuously down the rods, through a swivel cap at the top, shown at figure 4. The rods are driven at a speed of about 80 to 100 revolutions per minute, and the debris from the cutter is carried up the annular space between the rods, and the casing, with the escaping water, and discharged at the surface. As the casing is rarely less than 7 inches internal diameter, it is necessary to thicken up the rods, encasing them in wooden lagging to reduce the area between the rods and casing, and thus increase the velocity of the discharge water, to enable it to carry up the debris as fast as the cutter excavates it. The rods, joint, and lagging are shown at figure 1.

The arrangement of derrick used is shown on plate III, fig. 7. To secure the proper speed and power requisite to manipulate this machinery a steam-engine is necessary. The pump for forcing the water down the boring bar may be attached to the engine, and the water supplied to the pipe head through a flexible rubber hose. This machine is capable of doing very rapid work. I witnessed about 20 feet being sunk in about half an hour, the depth of the bore at the time being some 524 feet below the surface; this included pressing down the casing at the same time, but of course not the building and riveting up of the casing, this part of the work occupying more time than the actual boring.

The contractor had arrived on the ground with his plant to start the bore just $11\frac{3}{4}$ working days before the date of my visit, and, as above mentioned, the bore was then then over 500 feet deep, cased all the way; necessarily some time was lost at first in setting up the derrick and engine, excavating a tank for water supply, &c., so that the actual boring and casing must have been carried on at a rate considerably over 50 feet per day. The actual quantity of water required was not very great; for by providing a settling tank to receive the discharge water, the silt and debris soon settles, and thus the same water can be used over and over again. However, the very fact of any water being required, even for working the engine, will restrict the use of this apparatus very much indeed in Australia.

Upon reference to plate III, fig. 4, it will be observed that on the upper hollow boring bar, a, is screwed a short length, b, carrying a cast-iron chamber, c, in the base of which the head of the short bar, b, can revolve freely between brass washers, at the same time making a comparatively watertight joint; on the same bar is keyed a spur wheel, d, into which a pinion wheel, e, gears; this pinion has a square hole through the centre travelling freely up and down the $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch square bar, f, at the side; to this bar is conveyed rapid rotary motion through bevel wheels, g, which are driven by a belt from the main shaft, h. As the bars sink in the hole, the pinion slides down the square bar, following the spur-wheel and imparting the necessary rotary motion to it in every position. To the head, c, is coupled the flexible hose leading from the pump attached to the engine.

In this apparatus, as in the hand-boring apparatus, much time is lost when it becomes necessary to draw the rods; but of course, owing to the debris being conveyed out of the bore by the water, the rods have not to be so frequently drawn; but when a gravel bed is passed through the large stones cannot be washed up, and the rods must then be drawn, and a large valved sand pump lowered down to bring up the shingle, &c. With this apparatus I saw hydraulic pulling jacks very suitably applied for drawing down the casing, which will be described further on, one man attending them drawing down the casing, while the second man attended to the engines and boring apparatus. An ingenious and simple device for suspending the rods in the bore while adding on casings is shown on plate II, fig. 3. This is simply a round piece of pine, nearly the diameter of the casing, cut in three pieces, the central portion being wedge-shaped. Into this piece is fixed a length of bar with spigot and socket screwed unions; this is screwed on to the top of the rods and lowered; when a short way down the side pieces are checked with a string; the weight of the rods drawing down the central wedge causes the blocks to jamb in the casing; there they remain suspended till the upper bar is lowered down, screwed on, and pulled up, thus drawing the wedge and permitting the rods to run up freely.

It is only right that I should mention that Messrs. Jerome Haas, and James Manning, of Stockton, California, U.S.A., contractors for well-sinking, have brought this system to great perfection, and have taken out several patents for improvements in the various parts of the apparatus.

DRILLING APPARATUS.

The drilling apparatus ordinarily used for sinking wells not exceeding (say) 800 feet deep is shown on Plates Nos. IV and VI. These are both handy and portable machines; they are usually provided with an axle and wheels, which enable them to be transported across country easily, all the gear, horse-power, &c., being stored on top for transit.

When holes have to be sunk much greater depths, such as 1,500 to 2,000 feet, then it is desirable to use much heavier appliances driven by steam, and what is known as a walking beam or Pennsylvanian rig becomes necessary; this is however seldom made in a portable form, a fresh derrick being usually erected over each hole. Nearly all drilling apparatus, for bores from 600 to 800 feet deep, are worked on the same principle, so one description practically answers for all.

The derrick, shown on plate 4, fig. 1 (and partly enlarged at fig. 2) has two working barrels; on one is wound sufficient 2-inch rope, termed "the sand pump line," to reach the bottom of the deepest bore required, and the second barrel carries the drill cable, which may be either a hempen or Manila rope of similar length and about 5 inches girth; this rope passes from the barrel over a sheave, fixed halfway up the derrick, then down and through what is termed the Pitman sheave, a, in fig. 2, then up and over the sheave at the head of derrick, and finally down and made fast to the head of the drill bars.

The

The drill bars are made up as follows :—

First the bit,	about	4 feet long
next „ auger stem	„	12 „
„ „ jars	„	5 „
„ „ sinker bar	„	8 „
„ „ rope socket	„	1 foot long

In all say ... 30 feet long.

The above lengths may vary very much, of course, according to circumstances, the bars used for deep oil wells being made up as much as 60 feet long and up to 4 inches diameter; those used for shallow holes need not exceed from $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches to 3 inches diameter.

The derrick is first set up true over the centre of the bore, and the casing sunk, say 8 feet, as before described, to start the hole fair; then the drills may be lowered into the bore and started. From the sketch given of the gearing it will be seen that the horse-power or engine may be kept constantly going, clutches being provided for throwing either of the barrels or the Pitman sheave into gear when required. When the clutch at b is put into gear the Pitman sheave is given an up and down motion, equal to twice the throw of the crank on the end of the shaft c. As the drills sink the rope is lowered out by applying a pinch-bar or feed-lever to the brake wheel e and bearing down on it till the pawl, in the wheel on the end of the cable drum d, can be released; then hold the brake and lower out as much cable as may be necessary, and when the tools reach the bottom again throw in the pawl. The lever marked f is for working the clutch g, which travels on a feather on the driving shaft and engages the cable drum for raising the tools. The lever h is for tightening the belt on the pulley on the driving shaft, and enabling it to drive the barrel i, which carries the sand pump line; this may be a light wire rope, to the end of which is attached the sand pump. It will thus be seen that the tools can be raised rapidly by the cable drum; when they are up and landed disengage clutch g, drop the sand pump into the bore, easing it down if necessary by pressing on the lever h; and when filled again press on lever h and the sand pump is rapidly wound up, the engine or horse-power being kept in motion all the time. Thus a very few minutes suffice for raising the tools, clearing out the hole, and lowering the tools down to work again; and the whole operation can be attended to and manipulated by one man, a second man only being necessary for driving the engine or horses; the assistance of the second man is also necessary when it comes to building, and driving or sinking the casing.

When the hole is first started the tools may be kept short by omitting the sinker bar and jars. Should the hole be dry, water must be poured in from time to time, and when the tools stick, draw them and clear out with the sand pump. As soon as rock is met with it is necessary to add on the jars and sinker bar, otherwise the tools may stick fast in the hole; the loose action of the jars enables an upward blow to be given, by shortening in the cable and continuing to work the Pitman sheave; when an upward hammering action is imparted to the tools this seldom fails to start them up. Should the tools be found to stick through the hole getting out of shape, one of the reamers, shown on plate V, figures 17, 18, 19, should be used to true up the hole before proceeding with the drilling.

The description above given more particularly refers to the Gillespie Tool Company's machine, but the same will almost exactly apply to the Pierce machine, plate VI. I saw both machines at work at different places, and, on the whole, would give the preference to the Gillespie apparatus, as being the more compact, but in actual work I doubt whether there is any practical difference between them, both being good and well designed machines, and, I believe, the best for the work to be found in the States.

PENNSYLVANIAN RIG.

As I have referred to the Pennsylvania oil rig, a brief mention of its principle may not be out of place here. This machine is specially arranged for deep sinking, when bores 1,500 to 2,000 feet or over are necessary. In this case the tools are made up exactly as before described, but larger and much heavier; tools 4 inches diameter and 55 to 60 feet long are generally used for deep 7 and 8 inch holes.

Over

Over the site fixed upon for the hole is constructed a derrick, as sketched on Plate No. VII. This derrick should be not less than 70 feet high, 20 feet square at the base, and 3' 6" at head. The corner timbers of the framing may be 6" x 6" pine, or 4" x 4" hardwood, well braced on all four sides, horizontally and diagonally. At one side is firmly set up a Sampson post, on the head of which is placed the walking beam. Under the outer end of the walking beam is placed a Bull wheel, carrying the cable, and on its end a crank, or what was before termed the Pitman, for imparting the reciprocating motion to the walking beam. The Bull wheel is driven by belting from a steam-engine, set up in a shed some 20 feet back. From the inner end of the walking beam is suspended a rod, with the temper screw (fig. 2) attached thereto. The bore is usually started by what is termed spudding—i.e., working the tools direct from the Bull wheel, lifting and dropping by slacking or surging the rope on the wheel; once they are their own depth below the surface the walking beam is brought into play. The rope is thrown off the Bull wheel, and the end caught by the temper screw; the drilling motion is then imparted to the tools, and, as they sink, the temper screw is slacked out, thus lowering the tools, at the same time turning them and preventing their striking twice in the same place. The nut of the temper screw is split and held by a clamping screw, so that the leading screw can be quickly shortened in by slacking the clamping screw; at the same time a corresponding length of rope must be given out, by releasing and re-clamping it in a fresh place. When the bore needs clearing out the rope is taken on to the Bull wheel, and the tools quickly run up; the sand pump, which is worked by a light line on a second reel, is lowered down and the hole cleaned out. In all operations of drilling too much care cannot be taken to ensure the bit or drill being kept up to proper gauge. For this purpose it is desirable to have a duplicate of each pattern of bit used, and with the help of a portable forge, which should always accompany a drilling outfit, the spare bit can be forged to gauge and got ready for work again without delaying the drilling. The club bit, with its hollow or grooved centre, is specially designed for conveniently forging to gauge.

This class of drilling has been carried on to such a vast extent through the oil regions that the men engaged in the work have become remarkably expert, so much so, indeed, that a bore 1,200 feet deep can often be put down in about twenty-five days, and at a total cost of about $2,000 (say £400). I visited the Bradford, Pennsylvania, district early in June, 1883, and saw from local statistics that during the month of May 226 bores had been completed, and on the 1st June that year 384 bores were in progress in the neighbourhood.

Upon completion of the bore, and if oil has been struck, the derrick, together with the walking beam, engine, &c., is usually left in place; for although the hole may spout oil at first it will most probably cease to flow after a time, and then pumping must be resorted to. A pump barrel, with the necessary foot-valves, &c., is then let down the bore and there fixed and worked by long sucker rods, the upper ends of which are attached to the walking beam, which, as before described, is set in motion by the engines and the oil thus pumped to the surface; but should the bore prove a failure and miss the oil, then the rig is usually removed, but in some parts, where timber is plentiful and cheap, it hardly pays to dismantle and remove the derrick. Throughout the oil regions the hill-sides and valleys may be seen thickly dotted over with derricks in all directions close together.

Although I have described the Pennsylvanian rig at some length I hardly think it will be necessary to introduce it into this Colony for the purpose of searching for water.

CASING.

Hitherto I have referred to casing in connection with the bores, but without describing it. A few words as to the various kinds of casing, their manufacture and mode of sinking, are here necessary.

The class of casing I saw almost wholly used in California was what is termed riveted sheet-iron casing, as shown on plate No. VIII, fig. 1. It is usually made from No. 14 B. W. gauge sheet-iron, in 2 feet lengths, double thickness; at the bottom is a forged steel shoe (see fig. 2), turned with a cutting edge, and bored internally for the reception of a short length (about 14 inches) of inner casing, to which it is riveted; outside this comes a 2-foot length of the outer casing, which then stands 1 foot above the inner length. The tube is then built up of alternate lengths, each each 2 feet, of inner and outer casing, thus breaking the joints 12 inches. The casings are made an accurate fit for one another, well tarred before driving together, and two or three rivets put in to secure them. The apparatus used for punching them on the ground, when building over the bore, is shown at figure 3. In country where saline waters are met with it is doubtful whether it would be wise to use this sheet-iron casing, there being so many surfaces exposed to corroding action that probably the iron would not last long; in most cases, therefore, it will be found cheaper in the long run to use the more expensive screwed tubes hereafter described.

The boring or drilling tools, having to work within the casing, necessarily leave a considerable amount of the surrounding soil to be cut away by the cutting edge as the casing is forced down; this is found a desirable arrangement as it ensures a close fit which cuts off surface or bad water contained in the upper measures from the pure artesian water reached at lower depths.

Should a hard vein of indurated sand, or soft rock, be passed through by the drill it may be found almost impossible to force the casing through it; in this case the side must be reamed out by an expanding reamer, such as that shown on plate II, fig. 5, thus enlarging the bore to the outside diameter of the casing.

The most usual method I found practised of sinking casing was with a lever, as shown at plate VIII, fig. 6; some planks are buried in the ground, or otherwise suitably loaded to secure the fixed end of the lever to, and then the other end of the lever which rests upon the casing is weighed down, either by the weight of the men, or by applying a purchase tackle to it. A suitable cast-iron cap, fig. 7, must be placed over the head of the casing for the lever to rest upon during the operation of sinking to prevent its being crushed or injured.

In some ground the casing sinks very freely. I saw some sinking by its own weight when at a considerable depth (over 150 feet) below the surface; it very frequently happens however that the surrounding friction becomes too great to admit of the first or 7-inch casing being sunk over 200 feet; when this happens a 6-inch casing must be lowered down inside till it reaches the bottom (the tool shown at plate V, fig. 14, being suitable for this purpose), the boring may then proceed as before, but of course with a smaller bit; the weight of the free length of the 6-inch casing helps very materially in the sinking, it will occasionally follow the auger for as much as 70 feet below the 7-inch casing before any forcing down becomes necessary. As soon as water is reached and the boring is stopped, the 6-inch casing can be cut off about 8 or 10 feet above the bottom of the 7-inch casing by the tool shown at plate II, fig. 6, or a tool somewhat similar to the reamer shown at fig. 5, and the upper portion drawn out, taken apart, and used again in another hole; the same tool, plate V, fig. 14, used for lowering the casing can be used again for drawing it up.

Another method of sinking casing is by using hydraulic pulling jacks (see plate III, fig. 6). A suitable cast-iron head, fig. 5, which carries a hook at each side to attach the pulling chains to, is fixed over the pipe; two 4 or 5 ton pulling jacks are buried in the ground, one at either side, their lower ends being securely fastened to a framing, which must be previously buried in the ground some 8 feet deep round the casing, the jacks are run out full length and the long linked chains upon being drawn up tight are attached to the hooks in the casing cap, the jacks are then pumped down, drawing the casing with them; of course when steam is used this is a simple process, still it is effectively, although at a much slower rate, done by hand. This method has the advantage that one man can be pumping or forcing down the casing at the same time that the other men are carrying on the boring.

A third method of sinking casing is by driving it; this is very simply done when a drilling machine such as the Gillespie Company's is used, for by taking a bolt out of the Pitman crank, *a*¹ (see plate IV, fig. 2), a peculiar drop action is given the Pitman sheave; it is then only necessary to detach the drills from the end of the cable, hang on the driving weight (plate VIII, fig. 8), place a good block of wood over the head of the casing, with a hole through it to guide the pin shown to project from the weight, then start the machine and a series of rapid blows can be given to the casing sufficient to drive it down.

Cost of Casing.

The cost of the 7-inch riveted casing, double thickness, delivered on the ground in California, I found averaged 75 cents. (say 3s. per foot), and the 6" similar casing cost 60 cents. (say 2s. 5d. per foot); this is based on sheet iron costing 3d. per lb., = 28s. per cwt., delivered on the ground. One

One great advantage in the use of riveted casing is that the sheets can all be cut and punched true to gauge for inner and outer lengths at the factory, and a number of plates can be safely packed together and conveniently sent up the country, where a very simple curving machine can be at hand to bend them; they are then riveted with cold rivets. There is nothing in the whole process that any handy man could not learn to do in a very short time, with the very simplest appliances.

A more permanent class of casing is made from lap welded tubes, which can be procured in lengths up to 18 or 20 feet, turned and machine screwed at the ends as shown at plate VIII, fig. 4. As this class of joint cannot be made on pipes less than about $\frac{5}{16}$ inch in thickness the cost of such casing is considerably greater than the riveted, but it would certainly be found more durable and safer to use in sinking. The cost of such casing properly screwed, landed in Sydney, would be about 7s. per foot for 7-inch, and 5s. per foot for 6-inch, assuming it to be obtained in fair quantities. There are various ways of making the screwed joints, two of which are shown on figs. 4 and 5. The latter is the cheaper, but that shown at fig. 4 is the better, being the only one that secures a flush surface inside and outside the pipe, which is a most important matter.

A cheap casing is sometimes used in America, made in lengths of 14-gauge sheet-iron wound spirally and riveted along the edge (see plate II, fig. 4). I do not think this can be recommended, except in very soft ground, for it is not strong enough to stand the end crushing strain necessary to be applied when pushing it down the bore.

Stopping back Impure Water.

When practicable it is desirable to use casing all the way to the bottom of the bore, but this is really only possible when the boring is through soft measures free from rock; when rock is met with the hole ought to be reamed a little, and the casing let as far as possible into it to cut off the downward flow of impure water, but should this not prove effectual to stop back the impure water some device such as that used in the oil wells for stopping the water back from the oil must be adopted. The method for doing this, which I heard was most approved of in the oil regions, where it has been applied to nearly every bore to keep the oil free from water, is by the use of what is known as a "cap packer." This is a rubber block, 8 inches or 10 inches long, made almost the neat diameter of the bore, and lowered down on the end of an inner tube. (See plate IX, figs. 2, 3, and 5.) a is the rubber block; b the inner tube, which of course must be carried up to the top of the bore; c is the lower tube resting on the bottom of the bore, which in the case of pumping wells acts as the pump barrel when fitted with a foot-valve, the upper valves being attached to the sucker rods; on top of the lower tube, c, is screwed a funnel-shaped piece of pipe, d, which widens out nearly to the diameter of the bore, and is turned with a seat on its upper rim to receive a ferrule, e, which slides on pipe b, and acts as a seat for the rubber block; pipe b has a stop ring, f, screwed at its lower end, to prevent the block sliding off when being lowered down, and another ring, g, at the top end to catch under a malleable iron ring fixed into the rubber block for the purpose of drawing it from the well when required; there is another collar, *g*¹, screwed on, which fits the upper end of the rubber block and bears down on it; this also acts as a joint collar for the pipe. The action is therefore as follows: the lower end of the block rests on the head of the lower pipe, and the whole weight of the upper pipes rests upon the top edge of the block, thus compressing and expanding it against the wall of the bore, and effectively stopping the downward passage of impure water.

In the case of artesian flowing wells, the lower pipe, which is not necessary, can be dispensed with by using the same apparatus, but by inserting a cross-bar, h, fig. 2, and attaching to it a $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch rod of iron, which should be in long lengths screwed at the ends and coupled together and led up to the top of the bore; the inner pipe, carrying the packer at the bottom, must then be suspended from the surface and the $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch rod screwed hard up to bring an upward pressure against the rubber block and thus expand it.

There is another simple way to make a watertight joint as shown at figs. 1 and 4. This consists of an iron tube, a, say 4 inches diameter with a flange, b, screwed on at lower end, against which are bolted two rubber rings, one, c, about 2 inches larger diameter than the bore, the second, c', placed underneath a tight fit for the bore; these are nipped up against the flange with a ring washer, e, and screw bolts. A calico bag about 2 feet long and made the diameter of the bore is secured at its lower end between the flange, b, and the rubber ring, c. This bag, which encloses an annular space round the tube, is filled with a mixture of half Portland cement and half clean sand just moistened and made into a stiff mortar; the mouth of this bag is loosely closed round the pipe, which is then pushed down the bore till the bottom reaches sound rock, at a point below the strata containing the salt or impure water, the cement may then be tamped firm home by a piece of heavy tubing, or annular cast iron weight suspended by a rope as shewn on sketch. The cement will soon set hard and make a secure and tight joint.

Cost of Machines and Tools.

The cost of the Gillespie or Pierce Machines shewn on plates Nos. IV and VI including an outfit of one rope socket, one auger stem, sinker bars and jars, two bits, two winches, sand pump and 500 feet sand line, 500 feet of drilling cable, and a horse-power, the whole suitable for drilling 500 feet deep, would be about £200, delivered in Sydney, to which might be added about £30, for extra fishing tools, pipe riveters, lifters, stubs, &c., making an outfit in all cost about £230; but even this would have to be exceeded in the first instance by anyone commencing to bore, as it would be necessary to provide a portable forge, some blacksmiths' tools, spare iron, &c. For going 600 feet somewhat heavier tools would be necessary, but with the same machine the cost would be about £240; by purchasing a supply of spare box and pin stubs, a great many of the special tools shewn on the drawings could be made by any ordinary blacksmith and the stubs closed on.

The boring machine outfit would not cost over £80 complete. Excepting the horse-power and crab winch with connecting gear and the screwed ends for the wooden and iron pipe rods, there is no part that could not be made up the country by any carpenter and blacksmith. Most of the machines of this class which I saw at work were evidently constructed by the owners, who, in most cases I found had been mechanics, blacksmiths, or general handy-men, well able to make all their own tools, as well as the numerous special tools that are found necessary from time to time during practical working.

In situations where many bores may have to be put down, and where water and fuel can be conveniently obtained, I would certainly recommend the use of steam instead of horse-power, for expediting the work, and thereby lessening the cost of labour. Almost any make of portable engine can be adapted for the purpose. To run a 600 feet drilling apparatus an engine of about 5-horse power would be ample.

For the generality of work, however, I believe the ordinary horse-power machine will be found sufficient, though of course slower, both horses and horse-keep being cheap and always available throughout the country.

It is unnecessary here to refer to the cost of steam-engines, as full information can always be obtained from any Sydney importer.

American well-drilling tool catalogues quote prices for engines, but English-made engines can be landed in Sydney much cheaper.

Cost of Boring or Drilling.

As regards the cost of boring or drilling, I found nearly the one price ruled all through the country; no matter what kind of apparatus was used a set contract price seems to have become established. What the net cost was I could not well find out, but of course it would vary a little in every case, but seeing the eagerness with which contractors sought for and took orders, it is evident the contract rate quoted below pays well.

The

The rates are as follows:—

	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
0 to 100 feet = 100 feet @ 2 0 per foot	2	0	10	0	0
200 to 300 „ = 100 „ 3 0 „	3	0	15	0	0
300 to 400 „ = 100 „ 4 0 „	4	0	20	0	0
400 to 500 „ = 100 „ 5 0 „	5	0	25	0	0
500 to 550 „ = 50 „ 6 0 „	6	0	15	0	0
550 to 600 „ = 50 „ 7 0 „	7	0	17	10	0
Cost for boring hole 600 feet deep			102	10	0
To this must be added cost of casing, which, as before mentioned, cost when riveted, 3s. per foot.
600 feet 7-inch casing, at 3s.			90	0	0
Add to this the cost of boarding the contractor and his two men, as I found it was the practice for the farmers for whom the work was being done to keep them while at work, say, 3 men for 6 weeks = 1 man for 126 days at 2s.			12	12	0
Total cost for a 600-foot hole			204	2	0

Say 6s. 10d. per lineal foot.

If a length of 6-inch casing had to be used the cost would be reduced a little. I have allowed six weeks for the boring; this is the outside time a 600-foot hole would occupy, unless some serious mishap occurred to delay the work. I have already mentioned a case where with the hydraulic boring apparatus a hole had been sunk over 500 feet in $11\frac{3}{4}$ working days. It must be borne in mind, however, that in this case a steam engine was used, and when an allowance is made for procuring water, fuel, stores, &c., the cost of the work will nearly mount up to as much as the slower horse-power machine.

ARRANGEMENT ADOPTED IN CALIFORNIA FOR IRRIGATING FROM AN ARTESIAN WELL.

Upon the completion of a bore if it prove a flowing well, the casing is left standing from 4 to 5 feet above the surface; an area of about an acre is then enclosed to form a reservoir around the well, by raising a mound of earth say 5 feet high; the land around is cut up into about 5-acre paddocks, termed "checks," and properly levelled off for irrigation; four main feeders, termed "ditches," are constructed from the central reservoir along the boundaries between the checks, the bottom of the ditches being kept a little above the surface of the check; very simply constructed wooden gates are placed at the opening to each ditch, by raising any one of which the water can be led along the ditch and again let out through side gates over any one of the surrounding checks needing irrigation. It will thus be seen that the storage reservoir which holds about one and a half million gallons is filled by the well, and emptied daily, or as the land needs it, by running the water off through the various ditches. I was informed that the farmers generally considered a good well sufficient for irrigating from 160 to 200 acres of tilled land. An arrangement of dams, ditches, and checks, such as above described, is shown on Plate X.

I experienced great difficulty in obtaining information as to the quantity of water discharged from any of the wells; the amount of course varies considerably. Only in one or two instances could I get near the tube to measure the height the water rose over the lip of the pipe, for, as already mentioned, they invariably stood out in the centre of a round reservoir some 4 feet or so deep.

I measured a few that I gained access to, and in these instances I found the water rose from 2 to 3 inches over the lip of the pipe, the local practice being to speak of the well as an inch, 2-inch, or 3-inch flowing well, as the case might be. I only saw a few 3-inch wells, and they were considered amongst the best. I estimate the discharge from a 3-inch well would be about 550,000 gallons per twenty-four hours, and from a 2-inch well about 350,000 gallons per twenty-four hours. Of course there are cases where the artesian water rises under very heavy pressure. When such are found, pipes can be connected with the casing-tube, and the water led away for supplying buildings.

A portion of the town of Honolulu, in the Sandwich Islands, is supplied from an artesian well in this way. I there saw some wells discharging under very heavy pressure. One was throwing water through a 5-inch pipe to a height of at least 25 feet into the air; but in California I did not see or hear of any such wells.

TORPEDOING

TORPEDOING WELLS.

The system adopted in Pennsylvania known as "torpedoing," for increasing the flow of oil wells when first bored, might perhaps be found of use in artesian wells.

When the oil-bearing strata is reached, and the boring is considered deep enough, a heavy charge of dynamite, with a fuse attached to it, is let down to the bottom of the well—or, better still, the dynamite charge may be lowered down with insulated wires attached, and when on the bottom fired by a portable battery on the surface. The explosion shatters the surrounding rock, opening the joints, and allows a free escape of the oil to the bore. Although this method is almost universally adopted in oil wells, I never heard of its being tried in a water-bore, but I think the experiment would be worth trying with a light charge in a case where water may be met with on strong ground.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO IMPORTING APPARATUS.

I have not had an opportunity of making myself acquainted with the nature of the apparatus that has been tried or now is being used in this Colony for drilling or boring for artesian wells. I am aware the diamond drill is being largely used for boring to test for minerals, but for the purpose of obtaining a water supply such drills are quite useless owing to the small bore. Diamond drills can, of course, be made for all sizes up to 20 or 24 inches diameter, of which latter size I have seen one, but when the ordinary small bore is exceeded the cost increases rapidly. Should the Government not have already imported any machine such as I have described in my report, I would recommend that an order be sent to either the Gillespie Tool Company or the Pierce Well Excavator Company—or, perhaps, to both—to send out a machine and complete outfit suitable for drilling 500 to 600 feet deep; also, that they be requested to send out an experienced man with their machine to work it here upon arrival. I am sure either of the manufacturers would for their own sake select a skilful and trustworthy man, who would soon train others here into the work. Should the Department in charge of the water-augers once show that boring can be done expeditiously and at a reasonable expense, I am persuaded that private enterprise will not be slow in coming forward to import the appliances found most suitable, and that in a few years' time the Government will be entirely relieved of the trouble of carrying on this work, except through the medium of contractors.

In the event of anyone having read the foregoing notes wishing to write to America for further information about the various machines referred to, I give the addresses of the makers whose names I have mentioned.

Appended will be found two important reports and a map of the colony indicating the prospects of obtaining an artesian supply of water in various parts of the colony; they directly bear on this subject and may be studied to great advantage in connection with the foregoing notes.

The first is by C. S. Wilkinson, Esq., Geological Surveyor-in-charge, pointing out the most likely geological formations from which fresh water may be obtained over the colony; the second, by H. C. Russell, Esq., B.A., F.R.A.S., Government Astronomer, on the discharge of the river Darling, and showing the vast quantity of water that passes subterraneously down the valley.

A study of the above-mentioned reports may warn many people in time before they incur fruitless expense in sinking bores in non-water-bearing formation; on the other hand, residents within or near the limits indicated as probably water-bearing, will be fully warranted in incurring every reasonable expense in prosecuting a search for water.

REPORT (with Geological Map) on the prospects of obtaining fresh water below the surface, in the districts between the rivers Lachlan and Darling, and beyond the river Darling.

THERE are five geological formations which may be regarded as sources of underground water supply: 1. Recent; 2. Pleistocene and Pliocene; 3. Miocene; 4. Cretaceous; 5. Palæozoic formations.

The following sketch section will serve to show the relative positions of these formations:—

No. 1.—The recent deposits form the sandy and gravelly beds of watercourses, the alluvial flats bordering them, and the muddy accumulations in progress in swampy hollows. Good water is generally found in them at various depths, rarely over 40 feet, especially in the alluvial flats near the larger rivers and creeks, but seldom near the heads of the creeks. Therefore, in the latter localities, where water is most required, owing to the rapid disappearance of surface water, they are of but little importance as sources of supply.

No. 2 are older alluvial deposits, of much greater thickness, being sometimes 300 feet thick, and more widely spread than those just mentioned. They compose those clayey and loamy plains which, commencing in the larger valleys, gradually spread out and form extensive areas of level country, such as we see throughout a very large portion of the districts under consideration. When we consider that these deposits, which consist of the disintegrated rock material swept down by floods from the higher lands, have filled up valleys and hollows in the old land surface, we can readily conceive that they absorb an enormous amount of the rainfall which becomes stored in the sand and gravels lying in the old hollows. As the existing surface features show little or no indications of the buried hollows, it is sometimes only by repeated boring or sinking that the water-bearing drifts may be discovered. The rain-water soaking into these deposits is, at uncertain depths, arrested by beds or layers of impervious clay. Where the water passes freely over these to lower levels it is generally of fresh or drinkable quality, but where it does not circulate freely but is retained for a long time in saucer-like depressions formed by the clay-beds, it dissolves much of the mineral matter of the strata and thus becomes brackish. In some respects, therefore, these underground stores of water resemble many surface lakes—the water in those having no outlet being often salt, while in those which have an outflow it is fresh. As these retaining clay-beds do not usually extend far in any direction it often happens that fresh water may be found in one well only a short distance from another yielding highly saline water; and after passing through a salt water bed the next water struck may be fresh. These varying conditions are but what we might expect in strata which have been deposited in such an irregular manner. The practical results then of our observations are, that water is likely to be found in these deposits at different depths to 300 feet, and that if salt water be struck it may be only patchy or local, and that fresh water may occur near or below the salt; and further, that the water being fresh is evidence of its having free circulation, and thus is capable of being traced for considerable distances.

No. 3 Miocene.—This formation is only seen on the banks of the Lower Darling; but there is little doubt that it extends under the No. 2 deposits, which form the level country south of a line drawn from Booligal on the Lachlan to Menindie on the Darling, thence west to the South Australian Border. One or two bores in this district would prove the existence or otherwise of this marine formation; and where it occurs I believe that abundance of fresh water will be found in it.* The probable depth of sinking will be from 200 to 500 feet, and though the water may rise to a higher level than when at first struck, it is only when the water-bearing strata are covered by impermeable beds that it is likely to rise to the surface; and as the overlying deposits of No. 2 are generally of a porous character, the occurrence of artesian water in the Miocene beds will be exceptional.

No. 4 Cretaceous.—If a line be drawn from the north-west corner of the Colony to where the 31st parallel crosses the Darling River, thence following up the Darling until it crosses the Queensland Border, thence along that Border back to the north-west corner, it will approximately include the area occupied by this formation. In nearly the whole of this large extent of naturally dry country it is probable that a permanent supply of good water will be obtained by bores or wells sunk to various depths within 700 feet from the surface, and that the water may be expected in many instances to rise to the surface. The numerous "mud springs" occurring in this area may be regarded as natural artesian wells, the water being forced up through fissures in the Cretaceous strata, and thus affording evidence of the great store of underground water which may readily be made available by tube bores of large diameter. At Wee Watta, on the Kallara Run, Mr. David Brown bored with a 4-inch tube into some mud springs, and at a depth of 144 feet obtained water, which flowed from the tube at a height of 26 feet above the surface, at the rate of 60,000 gallons per diem; but this quantity gradually diminished, owing to the tubes becoming filled with sand. The same gentleman was also successful in obtaining artesian water at the Mullyeo mud-springs. On the Dunlop run Mr. James Wilson struck a good supply of water in the Cretaceous beds in the Mount Wilson well, at a depth of 488 feet, which rose to within 90 feet from the surface. In the No. 2 Kapiti well, 20 miles west from the Mount Wilson well, a splendid supply of water was met with at a depth of 572 feet, the water rising to within 10 feet from the surface. In another well at View Point Mr. Wilson obtained good water at 536 feet deep; this rose to within 40 feet from the surface. In sinking these wells salt water was passed through in the Pleistocene deposits, which are here about 100 feet thick, overlying the Cretaceous formation.

The importance of the information afforded by these discoveries and by the wells of the Mount Poole District cannot be over estimated; for, taken in connection with the geological evidence, it assures us of the almost certainty of obtaining an abundant water supply from the Cretaceous formation, which here occupies an area of about 40,000 square miles, though covered in places by alluvial deposits.

No. 5 Palæozoic Formations.—These include the Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous sedimentary formations, consisting of slates, limestone, sandstone, and conglomerates, together with granitic and trappean rocks. These rocks appear at the surface and form the hilly country between the Upper Bogan River and the Lachlan, and with the exception of several irregular intervals of low-lying country, extend in a direction west-north-west right across the centre of the Colony, embracing an area of about 22,000 square miles. As a rule, these formations are of an impermeable character, and constitute the bed-rocks upon which the Cretaceous and newer sedimentary formations have been deposited; therefore, in sinking through the latter, when the former have been reached, it is almost useless going deeper with the hope of of finding a good supply of water. There are, however, exceptions, for sometimes the older rocks are intercepted by quartz and other veins and joint fissures, which, acting as drainage channels, afford a supply of water generally of a brackish quality but suitable for stock; nevertheless the chances of meeting with such water-bearing fissures in sinking or boring is very uncertain.

The areas where these old formations come to the surface must therefore depend for supply upon the rainfall conserved in tanks and dams; and fortunately the hilly or undulating features which are generally characteristic of such formations present most suitable sites for reservoirs and form good collecting grounds. Such country then is not without its advantages for obtaining a storage supply of water, and though dependent upon the intermittent rainfall, yet, from Mr. Russell's valuable maps, it would appear that this is sufficient to supply properly constructed reservoirs capable of holding out through ordinary seasons of drought.

From the foregoing observations it will be seen that there are five principal formations in which fresh water may be obtained:—

- 1st—In the recent alluvium, chiefly along the main rivers and creeks.
- 2nd—In the older alluvial deposits which form the vast plains of the low-lying portions of the Darling and Lachlan Districts. In these, however, salt water is of frequent occurrence. Area, 118,000 square miles.
- 3rd—In the Miocene Marine beds. I am not aware if any wells have yet been sunk in these beds; but from their lithological character I believe that they will yield abundance of fresh water. Area, 22,000 square miles, underlies No. 2.
- 4th.—In the Cretaceous formation. This is a most important source of supply, and one which will probably yield artesian water. Area, about 40,000 square miles.
- 5th—In the Palæozoic rocks, but the occurrence of a large supply of water of good quality in these is exceptional. Area, about 22,000 square miles.

The above-mentioned areas can of course be only approximately stated until the extent of each formation has been ascertained by survey.

I have not referred to the natural springs which occur in many localities: for though they have underground sources they may be more properly included with ordinary surface supplies such as are found in rivers and creeks.

Some remarkable instances of springs and wells are given by Mr. T. K. Abbott, P.M., of Gunnedah, in a paper "On Wells in Liverpool Plains," read before the Royal Society of New South Wales in 1880. This paper affords much valuable information regarding the existence of fresh water beneath the surface.

The area of the whole district under consideration, viz., that extending from the Lachlan River below Forbes to the northern and western boundaries of the Colony—comprises about 172,000 square miles; and the number of sheep within it, according to the report for 1881 by Mr. Bruce, Chief Inspector of Stock, is 16,428,000. Deducting from this 9,900,000 sheep as being depastured at the rate of one sheep to 3 acres on the country within 8 miles from the permanently watered rivers and creeks, there remain 6,528,000 sheep on the country not naturally watered, viz., 126,000 square miles, from which may be excluded 9,000 square miles for useless scrub lands.

Assuming, then, that this dry country has already been improved by means of tanks, dams, and wells to two-thirds of its pastoral capabilities between the Lachlan and Darling Rivers, and to about one-eighth on the north and west of the Darling, and allowing one sheep to 5 acres as its capability when permanently watered, it should carry 2,652,000 sheep in the former district, and 5,830,000 in the latter, or together one-half the number of sheep more than it does at present.

Of the above-mentioned 117,000 square miles of unwatered country, 22,000 should be deducted for the area occupied by the Palæozoic formations, which necessitates a superficial storage of water. We have thus 95,000 square miles which may be supplied from under-ground sources, and 40,000 square miles of this area lie to the north and west of the Darling, in more than half of which artesian water is likely to be obtained. As we have seen that the present pastoral capabilities of this dry country may be increased eight-fold when it has been sufficiently watered, an approximate estimate may be arrived at of the value of the land in this portion of the Colony.

The soil in many localities is suitable for agriculture, but on account of the aridity of the climate and the irregular periods when rain falls cereals cannot be produced with any certainty.

I would here point out that the Palæozoic areas (No. 5) may be regarded as comprising mineral lands. Gold is at Mount Brown; copper at Cobar, Nymagee, and Mount Hope; coal near Dubbo; galena, &c., have been found thereon, and further discoveries will probably lead to the settlement of a considerable mining population.

The accompanying geological map shows the position of the formations referred to.

I have not considered it necessary for the purpose of this report to enter into further detail regarding each formation. Such information will be found in the report by Mr. H. Y. L. Brown, geological surveyor, on the Geology and Artesian wells of the Albert Gold-field, Warrego, &c., published 4th November, 1881.

In the annual report of the Inspector of Stock, 1880, I reported conjointly with Messrs. Bruce and Gilliat upon the subject of water supply for the stock routes through the north-western portion of the colony.

I append an important paper by Mr. H. C. Russell, B.A., Government Astronomer, on "The River Darling—the water which should pass through it," read before the Royal Society in 1879; and from this paper some idea may be formed of the sources of the underground supply.

Mr. W. E. Abbott, of Wingen, gives much interesting information regarding the natural features and water resources of part of the Darling District, in a paper entitled "Notes of a Journey on the Darling," read before the Royal Society of New South Wales in 1881.

Professor W. J. Stephens, M.A., has contributed to the Sydney University Review, July, 1882, an able article in a general manner with the subject of Artesian prospects in New South-Wales.

The River Darling—the water which should pass through it.

By H. C. RUSSELL, B.A., F.R.A.S., Government Astronomer.

[Read before the Astronomical Section, 1 August, 1879.]

SOME considerations respecting the rainfall upon the basin of the river Darling led me to make a few figures in order to test an opinion I had formed some time since, to the effect that but a small part of the rainfall, after making every allowance, passes down the river. I was not however prepared for the result which I obtained, and as it throws some light upon our river system, I thought it would be interesting to the members of section A.

The basin of the Darling is considerably more than 200,000 square miles, but for my present purposes I have assumed that it is only 200,000 square miles. A great part of this consists of the western slopes of the Great Dividing Range, extending from Orange northwards into Queensland, and upon this part of it the rainfall in an average year ranges from 20 to 40 inches; in the more western districts drained by the Darling the average is from 10 to 20 inches. I have taken 16 inches as the average fall all over it, and this is beyond question under the true amount. Now, upon the best part of the drainage, i.e., the western slopes, it may safely be assumed that one-third of the rainfall, averaging there about 30 inches, gets into the rivers; upon the flatter portions this proportion would be less, but in order to make allowance for this, and for the effects of evaporation and be quite within the quantity of water which must run off the land, I have assumed that only part of the rainfall reaches the river.

At Bourke the Darling is said to be 60 yards wide. I have assumed it to be 200 feet, and that instead of the contraction in its channel below the water surface, it has a rectangular section. Its velocity when in flood, 32 feet above summer level, has been carefully measured, and was only two-thirds of a mile per hour, though it has been said that in contracted parts of the river lower down it sometimes flows $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile per hour. I believe the smaller measured velocity to be the more correct, but in order here again to make full allowance I have assumed the velocity to be 1 mile per hour. And I find that after making these allowances, in which you will observe that I have assumed the current to be more rapid and the river considerably more capacious than it really is, while at the same time I have taken the available rainfall at only 2 inches, I find that in order to carry off this small rain fall the river would have to be 100 feet deep; that is, that it would, in order to carry off the rainfall, have to flow as a solid stream of water 100 feet deep and 200 feet wide, at the rate of 1 mile per hour, without any cessation throughout the year. Now, we all know that the Darling not only does not flow in such volume even in the wettest season, but that in a year of average rainfall, such as I have assumed, it is not navigable for more than about six months, and even then does not carry one-third of the water shown above, and that in summer it is very low, and perhaps stops running. What then becomes of the rain-water? A large part of it must do, as it is known the waters of the Barcoo and other rivers do, viz., sink into the ground, to flow at some lower level.

These considerations point to an inexhaustible supply of water from wells, and we cannot be surprised that so many wells have been made and found to confirm the ideas here presented, and there can be no doubt that beneath the surface of our flat country there is an unlimited supply of good water.

It may be objected to the foregoing statement that one-half of the Darling watershed is so flat, that very little, if any, water runs to the rivers, and therefore it is not fair to include it in the estimate. But even if this were true, and I do not think it can be proven, yet it must be admitted that it is over this flat country that so little rain falls; and if the drainage be confined, for the sake of argument, to the western slopes, where the land has a considerable fall, it will be necessary also to take the rainfall of this district, which at least is double of that assumed for the whole basin, and the area of these western slopes amounts to fully 100,000 square miles, so that the water estimated would come to the same. It should be remembered that the rainfall I have used is not that of what may be called a wet year, but simply an average year. What then must be the quantity of water in a wet season which finds its way underground to some outlet?
