Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Commission,—We are now, I am glad to think, approaching the end of this most painful and serious inquiry. I think everyone must admit that the consequences which may flow from the granting of this Royal Commission may be of great moment in the administration of justice. I do not say that in any way to prejudice the case against the prisoner, and I am certain you will not look at any matter which has appeared in the newspapers, whether for or against the accused. I cannot shut my eyes, of course, to the fact that a large body of persons, properly respected, have formed an opinion favourable to the prisoner; but I hope you will bear in mind, and if there are any of those gentlemen in this room I hope they will bear in mind, that you can come to no conclusions without materials. The opinion of any man from mere hearsay or from a general impression of a criminal charge is of no weight whatsoever. I feel assured that those members of the Committee who, no doubt, from disinterested motives and at great personal inconvenience, and probably at a loss larger than the expense, have interested themselves in this inquiry will not deny that if this man be guilty of the charge which has been made against him, and of which he has been found guilty, to allow him to escape would be something awful to contemplate. Now, whether he be guilty or not guilty cannot be determined in any way from the impressions of any number of people who have not seen the witnesses, heard their testimony, and mastered the nature of the charge and the evidence that supports it, and who further have not the duty cast upon them of coming to a conclusion as to what is the reasonable result of this inquiry in the light of the conviction which has been recorded against the prisoner. Of course I do not intend—unless anything that my learned friends may say should make it necessary—to examine minutely the evidence either for or against the prisoner. That, I submit, is a task that you gentlemen will necessarily have to undertake, and no one doubts that you will discharge it without fear or favour. As far as you are concerned I should be perfectly willing, as the Counsel for the Crown, to refrain from saying anything at all, but I frankly admit that I desire that those who have expressed opinions upon this matter, should be led by what I am going to point out to see that their views are erroneous. They must bear in mind that it is a matter of notoriety that in many criminal cases an opinion has been formed, and held by thousands of intelligent and impartial persons, that the verdict of guilty was an erroneous one. I will only refer to the notorious case of Tichborne. You must know well, and any man, if he will allow that his desire is only to ascertain the truth, will admit that with regard to that and many other cases, numerous bodies of people of different classes of society and of different positions in life were certain that Tichborne had been wrongly convicted, and the same is true with regard to the notorious poisoning case of Mrs. Maybrick. I suppose that you, gentlemen of the Commission, well know that England was agitated to a much larger extent than the general public here have been in connection with this case by those who, no doubt conscientiously, thought that that woman had been wrongly convicted; but, of course, the jury which convicted, and the Executive Government which had to consider the materials put before them with regard to whether she had been rightly convicted, were alone in a position to form an opinion which is of any value as to the guilt or the innocence of the person accused. It would be just as useless for me to say that I do not believe in some medical theory or that I do not yield my assent to matters in connection with science, or one branch of it, astronomy, because we know that appearances may be quite deceptive, and that the view I might hold upon such a matter no one who is competent to judge would listen to for a moment. You cannot be blind to this, because you are living in the world. To show the necessity for this warning, and that I am not singular in this position, it must have reached your ears as well as mine that there are numbers of persons in this city who are of opinion that Mrs. Dean was an habitual arsenic-eater. In fact, my learned friend, in the beginning of the case, was instructed to state a theory in regard to habitual arsenic-eating, and what the consequences of that would be to a person who suddenly abandoned it. There are persons in this city who have not read the matter through, and who, even if they had, have not the ability, nor the conditions, nor the duty cast upon them to form an opinion, who are yet under the impression that it has been conceded here that Mrs. Dean was an habitual arsenic-eater, and that by reason of her suddenly ceasing to take arsenic her illness arose. It is the same with regard to many other matters in this case. Therefore, let it be borne in mind that, though I admit it would be a dire wrong, and a great calamity if this man Dean, being innocent, were kept in gaol, yet no one can deny—at least, no one whose opinion is worth listening to, and whose judgment you would regard—that if he has been guilty of this crime, and he was set at liberty by reason of the agitation which has brought about this Commission, the administration of justice would be at an end. Now, gentlemen, let me recall a fact to your mind. I say this by way of parenthesis, because I do not intend it in any way as a reflection upon my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, or Dr. Todd, or those who are instructing them. Of course I admit my opinion, except so far as it is borne out by evidence, is itself to be utterly disregarded, just in the same way as the opinion of my learned friends on the other side would be, but I am appealing to two members of a learned profession who are past (if I may take the liberty of saying so) the prime of life, and the President who has had a great experience in human affairs, if it is not a fact that an enormous amount of the evidence which has been given in this case has plainly no bearing upon what you have to decide, but they foreseeing that unfortunately you would be compelled to come to the same conclusion that the jury came to, the great bulk of their evidence has been given in order that hereafter the Executive may be moved and public opinion influenced by it. I hope I shall be pardoned for saying that I hope your Report will take such a lucid, exhaustive, and demonstrative form as to quieten the public mind; because that mind has no materials except matters of impression from which to form any conclusion as to this inquiry. The prisoner was tried, I think, about ten weeks ago. Soon after his conviction an agitation sprung up, I admit, among reputable and thoughtful people, that he ought not to be held as a condemned criminal, upon two grounds: one ground being that there had been some irregularity in the trial; the other ground being that he, in fact, was innocent of this charge. I beg of you, Mr. President, and you, the other gentlemen of the Commission, to bear in mind that we have nothing whatever to do with the first alleged ground of dissatisfaction. My learned friend, Mr. Pilcher (I do not say it with any wrong intention), asked a question question as to something that took place at the trial, and I objected to that question, because that is not a matter within the terms of this Commission. I shall take an opportunity of pointing out, and respectfully submitting to you, that the matter which you have to decide—I hope I am not bold in saying it—is a small one—that is to say, it is one matter; and I respectfully submit, and I believe that I will satisfy any person who is in this room that the sad conclusion we are forced to come to is coincident with the one which the jury came to after, I think, more than ten hours of consideration. Of course I do not mean that I will be able to satisfy those who have entered upon this matter, having closed their minds to reason, because we all know that human reason is such that some persons are so constituted that, having once taken up a view and given great prominence to it, and in addition their own services in connection with those of a number of other people, a kind of esprit de corps arises, and no power on earth will alter their views; but I admit there are other persons in this city—perhaps those who most deeply have taken up the cause of this unfortunate man—who, I feel assured from what I am going to point out to you, and which they may perhaps hear, will be ready to say that the sad conclusion we are forced to is one coincident with that of the jury. I hope I have made it clear to the Commissioners that we have nothing to do here with any alleged irregularity at the trial, or with anything that took place outside the subject of this inquiry. An agitation arose, and, as my learned friend Mr. Pilcher, stated, and I have no reason to think he is incorrect, that when this matter was debated in the popular House of Representatives, the majority was big enough, if this Commission had been refused, to turn the Government out. I admit that the ardour of the senior member of the firm of solicitors that defended the prisoner was honorable to human nature, but, of course, that gentleman had himself no knowledge of the matter he was dealing with. He made statements which, as he, of course, would not deny, it was self-evident were merely the result of communications made to him, and I want to satisfy you beyond the slightest possibility of doubt that that gentleman, in taking this action to release a man whom he believed to be innocent, was himself deceived. I undertake to prove to any intelligent impartial mind not only that this man unfortunately has committed this crime, but that the thing is no more open to doubt than that we are in this room. I quite admit that, if the kind of evidence, the allegation of the existence of which led to this unfortunate precedent of an inquiry by a Royal Commission as to the crime for which this man had been regularly tried in the Court and convicted, had been forthcoming, the matter would assume an entirely different phase. I admit that. I submit that the Commissioners will be entitled to look around, and by looking at the reports of the public meetings, and of the debates in Parliament, ascertain what was the nature of the allegations which induced the Government to grant this Royal Commission; because I venture to say that if every word which has here been given utterance to had been printed and submitted to the Government, that Government would have been dishonored, if, from any possibility of their being thrown out of power, they had granted this Commission. But we find that a person of reputation in the Assembly, and who is the professional partner of the gentleman who defooded Dean (and no one has ever hinted for a moment that the gentleman who did defend Dean, and who has shown such marked ability in this inquiry, Mr. Meagher, did not defend him most ably, most conscientiously, and most earnestly), has made certain allegations. I say that, if the allegation of facts, of which Mr. Crick could know nothing, some of them implied, some of them hinted at, and minor ones expressed, which induced the Government to grant this Commission, had been proved here, I should have had a very simple and most agreeable task. But what has been done? I suppose it will at least be admitted that Dean knows himself whether he did attempt to poison his wife or not. It seems absurd to state it, but some persons require, as it were, self-evident tenets to be put before them. I am referring, of course, to persons who express an opinion upon a matter which they are not competent to decide, and to decide which they have not material sufficient to enable them to come to a judgment of any value. I suppose, however, they would not deny that this man, Dean, himself knows whether he did attempt to poison his wife. No one can deny that. A great many weeks, or a number of weeks, elapsed between the date of the trial and the commencement of this inquiry in this room, on the 13th May—now about a month ago. It is admitted (it is quite exceptional, but I do not regret it, quite the contrary) that Mr. Meagher, the solicitor, who defended Dean at the trial and at the Police Court, and who has been familiar with this matter from the very beginning, has had an opportunity without let or hindrance of communicating with the prisoner up to this very day, in order that he may not be prejudiced by the fact that he has been condemned. I want to point out this to the Commissioners first of all. Compare the statement that was put before you either on the second or the third day (it is not material which it is, but you yourselves will know it was early after this inquiry commenced), when it will be admitted I most reasonably asked, after pointing out the seriousness and the importance in every view of this inquiry, that, as this Royal Commission had been obtained upon statements which anyone—lawyer, layman, doctor, or artisan—would necessarily believe to be true statements, when evidence would be given in support of, first, the allegation of Mrs. Dean or Mrs. Seymour having purchased poison.

Mr. Pilcher: What statements?

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I am referring now to the fact that, on the second or third day (I don't remember which) I pointed out what had led the Government to grant this Commission, and the time that had elapsed since the conviction, and that as the Commission was then granted (whatever might have been said before the Commission was granted as to not disclosing anything to the Government), and I had been instructed by the Government, through the Crown Solicitor, to come here and act as Counsel for the Crown, it was reasonable that they should state what was the case that was going to be made under this Commission; because, bear in mind (forgive me for saying this to you, gentlemen), I have no responsibility whatsoever in this matter, nor has my learned friend. Let that be well understood and known. The whole responsibility will rest upon you, the Commissioners; because, as I knew well (which this Commission when it was read showed), that the Commission was granted, as you can see from the language in it, to which I shall ask you to refer before I close, upon the assumption that new light could be thrown upon the case, and then as the result of such further inquiries made by you, that you could report whether Dean ought to be set at liberty, or to remain a prisoner. You will have noticed, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Commission, that my learned friend and I have once or twice been of a different mind entirely as to one or two small matters in this case. Why I say that is because you must judge whether my learned friend is right, or I am right, in what I am going to point out, but I submit to you that what I am about to state is a most important matter; because I do not think it possible to exaggerate the seriousness of the inquiry we are engaged upon and which has taken so long. I submit to you that, whether it be said in loud language or low language, whether it be repeated twice or a hundred times, you must first of all be clear upon the point that this is not a prosecution of Dean for his offence. He was tried in the ordinary way according to law, and upon either the third or the fourth day the Jury, having considered this matter for I think over ten hours, found him guilty. I respectfully submit that with that as a trial you have nothing to do. Nothing. Our law knows of no trial by Royal Commission. A man must be tried by a jury of his Peers. He was tried by twelve men according to the course of common law, and was found guilty upon that charge. I hope the Commissioners will notice that I have faithfully adhered to the statement I made in the beginning that I, on behalf of the Crown, would not adduce any evidence whatever to confirm the finding of the jury. What I have done is this: Those who are defending Dean have called a mass of evidence, some of which to my mind has no bearing whatsoever upon this inquiry, and the greater part only the most remote bearing. But it is not the kind of evidence that the Commissioners can in any way regard, as I will point out before I conclude, because I admit my saying it is of no moment whatsoever unless I establish it to you. However, I suppose I will have your assent to this, in the face of the public agitation, that if I had taken an objection to their giving this evidence, it would have been said that the Counsel for the Crown, in fact, refused to allow them to give certain evidence, and then the unthinking or incompetent public, or those who express an opinion upon a serious matter of this kind which they have neither the training nor the intelligence to decide, would have said that the Commission had refused to do the thing which they ought to have done; therefore I saw that it would be better in the public interests to allow all the evidence which those who acted under the instructions of the Committee, or under the instructions of the solicitors for the prisoner, directly in the interests of the prisoner wished to give, to be put before you, in order that when you make your report you may annex this evidence to that Report so that those who are either members of the Committee, or belong to the general body of the public, who have formed an opinion upon this matter may, if they have a sense of the seriousness of what they are doing, and of the duties which fall upon them, although they have voluntarily undertaken these duties, compare your report with that evidence, and see whether there is anything in that evidence of the kind which it was indicated would be given if this Commission were granted. Forgive me asking one of the members of the Commission to take a note of this, because I do not intend to exhaust your patience, and as far as my personal convenience is concerned I would desire to be away from this room this moment, but I cannot shirk the duty that is upon me, and that duty my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher (I hope he will forgive me for saying so), has unconsciously—unintentionally, no doubt—misrepresented. I appeal to the Commissioners alone—not to my learned friend, nor to the reporters, nor to the public in any way whatsoever, for I do not desire in the least to be popular—to say whether I have said one word outside of what I am going to refer to now. I have come here to act as Counsel for the Crown on this Commission. It was reported that evidence could be given here which would make people's hair stand on end (I believe that was the expression used), and that the moment it was given this man would be set at liberty. Of course, in the face of that, I said distinctly that this not being a Court, and that although I appeared as Counsel for the Crown, I should not take up the position an advocate would in Court, that is to say, try to shut out evidence because it was technically not admissible according to the rules of law. In fact a great part of the evidence given on the part of Dean could not have been given in any Court of law. Although I might win the plaudits of the multitude, although possibly I might mount to the pinnacle of the highest popularity by sitting here and allowing you to form a conclusion without pointing out what I intend to point out, yet were I to refrain from doing so, I should sink certainly in my own self-esteem. Of course it must be borne in mind—forgive my repeating it—that this crime of poisoning is one easily perpetrated by a man within the precincts of his own friends or family. It is one most difficult and sometimes impossible to find out, and frequently to prove, but if it be that the Executive are of opinion that this man has cast no doubt upon this verdict, and that he is guilty of the offence which the jury have pronounced him guilty of, then no one can say that to allow him to regain his liberty would not be a most disastrous calamity in many points of view, because I regret to say there is no doubt whatsoever that most things in this Colony (I do not draw a distinction between this Colony and the other Colonies) are certainly going in a direction that the people must deplore, though hitherto the administration of justice has been free from reproach by anyone. Of course I am not saying for a moment, although he has been convicted, that if the kind of evidence that they foreshadowed could have been placed before us here, even at this late time, and after the trial was closed, and notwithstanding that it might affect the administration of justice, no matter what its consequence might be, that I should insist that he ought not to be set at liberty, because if he be innocent, no matter what the results might be to persons in the highest positions, or our most honored institutions, he ought not to be the victim of a mis-trial. But before you come to that conclusion you will examine the matter. What I want to point out is that the prisoner must know whether he is guilty or not. He must know whether his wife has been in the habit of using arsenic. Forgive me for drawing the attention of the two medical members of the Commission to this fact. I shall have to refer, I am sorry to say, though not in a minute way, to the evidence. I shall have to bring home to your minds beyond the possibility of doubt that some persons have been brought forward here whose evidence on the face of it is wickedly false. I do not mean erroneous or mistaken, but intentionally, wickedly, and treacherously false. Some of this evidence I shall point out. I suppose you all see that one of the great dangers of a Commission of this kind, where a man has been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for life, is unfortunately the low-level of life that pervades our Colony, and to find its equal we need not go to England or other countries. Looking at that fact, it must be seen that there is very great danger of evidence being fabricated. Now, what I appeal to the medical members of the Commission for is this: I am going to assume that, even if they had obtained people who were willing, like Mrs. Reynolds (I refer specially to her), to defy, as it were, the administration of justice altogether, and to invent falsehoods—I appeal to the medical members of the Commission, who have had the great advantage of the valuable aid of my distinguished friend, Dr. Todd, to say whether I am right in this—that supposing they had brought these persons to prove (that is to say, to state falsely) that Mrs. Dean was an eater of arsenic habitually, they could not have obtained any medical men of repute to say that even if a person were an eater habitually of arsenic, the cessation of that habit would cause the symptoms that have ensued in this case. I am assuming for a moment that Dean was innocent. I beg of you, gentlemen, to take no mere assertions of any kind from anybody. I do not mention this because it is a matter of any importance. I mention it because whatever theory is put forward now as to why that statement was made, the case would be that Mrs. Dean was an habitual eater of arsenic, and that on ceasing the large doses she had taken, the consequences would be the illness from which she suffered.

suffered. You know I stated that I had obtained those papers from up the country, but I am contradicted upon that; but you, Mr. President, and the other members of the Commission are here to judge. I submit to you that you must see that the professional defenders of the prisoner—I do not mean my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, but those who are instructing him—have resorted to extreme courses, and unfortunately they are justified by the words of one of the greatest lawyers who ever lived—Lord Brougham—which I humbly dissent from, as to what persons who are defending a prisoner may do. I admit, however, there is a great warrant for that position—that is to say, to hunt about in some way or another and to set up some theory which may enable a Commission to satisfy the agitation which has sprung up in regard to any particular case. Of course those who think, and no doubt there are many who do think, confound the statements of what Counsel is instructed to say he can prove with actual proof. There are many, no doubt, who are at this very moment of opinion that evidence has been given here to establish the fact that Mrs. Dean was an habitual arsenic-eater. You, Mr. President, and the other members of the Commission know that not one word of evidence has been given here with regard to that theory. It is useless, of course, talking about whether such things could happen. I admit frankly that if any man had come forward here and stated that was a fact I would have asked him to refer me to some medical authority, which, it may be, it would be impossible for him to do, but I need not have stopped to inquire into that, because, although the base of the theory that Mrs. Dean was an habitual eater of arsenic was alleged in the first instance as the ground for releasing this man from this sentence, no evidence of the kind has ever been given. Does anyone suppose that with unlimited and unwatched intercourse between this unfortunate man's advisers and himself they would without his assent have set up such a theory? That is, I submit, impossible. If the Commissioners have any doubt that from the time he has been convicted under the ordinance of justice (which has not been denied, I admit) his advisers have had uncontrolled and unwatched intercourse with him daily; they can inquire into it—so that I mean he has not only known all that has been done here, but naturally, as his liberty, not for a year, but for his life is in question (although we know he would not actually be kept there for his life, but practically for his life) no one would have dared for a moment under this Commission to have gone into this inquiry without consulting the man who alleged he was innocent. It is utterly impossible to suppose so unless you are to be treated as you could not treat the most simple jury that was ever empanelled in the smallest Court. You are not to listen to anything that anyone says. You will exercise your own judgment upon that. The Government have been induced to grant this Commission upon representations that are open to you to find out, and which appear from inference on the very Commission, that is to say, this Commission is granted under the assumption that the case which was made at the trial can be displaced. This, we know, has often been done. There is a case now pending in the Supreme Court here where a verdict was obtained, and the Supreme Court granted (it is not an uncommon case) a rule to have a new trial. It was argued on the basis that one of the documents put in, which proved the plaintiff's case, was written on paper which was not made in the year in which it was dated. That would displace the case entirely, because it would show that the document could not then have existed. Therefore, if any evidence could have been given in the present instance to prove that Mrs. Dean was an habitual arsenic-eater to commence with, it would have been a case that would never have gone before the Jury. If you read the whole of the evidence from beginning to end, either at the Police Court or before the Court at Darlinghurst, you will find that not only in the evidence, but nowhere else, is there a hint that a defence of that kind was stated. I quite admit that if before you here they had called evidence to prove that Mrs. Dean was, in fact, an habitual eater of arsenic, and they had gone on to give evidence as to what they speak of as a medical theory, you would have had to consider that most seriously. I do not say for a moment that you would believe it, nor do I say for a moment that it would displace the case, but I quite admit that I could not say it was irrelevant—it would be most pertinent to the matter. First of all that it had been kept from the Jury that she was in the habit of eating arsenic, and then as to what the inference to be drawn from that would be. You all know that no evidence of that kind was given. Fortunately for, I hope, the satisfaction of the public mind, as well as for the perfect result of this inquiry, a very learned gentleman, who, out of no desire to flatter him, I may speak of as a man of very great ability, as far as I, with my limited knowledge, am able to judge—a learned gentleman who was formerly a medical practitioner, and who for private reasons has gone to the bar—came into the aid of my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher. I refer to Dr. Todd. Dr. Todd, or those with him on behalf of the prisoner (of course we do not know who it was), took up days of time with another theory, which I quite admit, if I had had to decide the matter, would have puzzled me, and I perhaps might not have been able to answer his queries. However, my learned friend, Dr. Todd, with the aid of many books, and with the advantage of his own intimate knowledge of medicines and of diseases, submitted this new theory that peripheral neuritis having developed since the conviction it was due to the gastro-intestinal form of influenza. On the contrary, I say it was a confirmation of the verdict of the Jury. I suppose you all know, gentlemen of this Commission, that no evidence was given of that kind at the trial. That arose afterwards. That peripheral neuritis prima facie was very strong additional evidence against the prisoner. But my learned friends on the other side, particularly my learned friend, Dr. Todd (because I am certain Mr. Pilcher will not be in anyway offended at my saying that he knows no more about those matters than I do), started a theory, backed apparently by a body of medical authorities, that this was a case of peripheral neuritis following gastro-intestinal influenza. I want to be perfectly fair. I understood in the beginning that sporadic cholera and other diseases were referred to. Since then I have been corrected as to that. I think it is a mistake on the part of those who corrected me, but I want to be on the most absolute side, and whatever the weight of the duty is, I am certain that you, the Commissioners, will, before making your Report, read the whole of the evidence from beginning to end of this case, as well as the evidence given at the trial and at the Police Court, because the result of your inquiry may be most momentous in its consequences. I admit that I may have misunderstood the matter. My distinguished and learned friend, Dr. Todd, limited himself to influenza of the gastro-intestinal type (which, I believe, was the expression used), and said that that may have given rise to this peripheral neuritis. I want to convince the Commission, whatever assertions are made by anybody to the contrary, that it must have been seen that the Commissioners could not possibly, on the case made here, under this Commission, recommend that this man be set at liberty. Looking forward, however, to the fact that you are not the final judges, and that this matter must ultimately be decided by the Executive, I quite admit that if you were to recommend it he would be, properly and rightly, at once discharged; but, although you do not recommend it, the ultimate decision is with the Executive Council.

Mr.

Mr. Pilcher has said the Government would have been turned out if this Commission had not been granted, it will be seen that great influence may be brought to bear upon the Executive Council, either by this Government, or by some succeeding Government; therefore the records of this case have been laden (and as to this I appeal to the medical Members of the Board) with a mass of evidence which is without any relevance whatever to this matter, and is utterly and absolutely useless. I will point out why. I mentioned this matter in appealing successively to my learned friend (Dr. Todd). I am not complaining that they did not yield the point, and I am not complaining of their trying to build up a public opinion for the Executive Council, but I want to point out that, as regards this Commission, it was idle. First of all, suppose for a moment that these symptoms in connection with the peripheral neuritis in the case of Mrs. Dean might be the result of the gastro-intestinal type of influenza or any other type. I understood, as I pointed out, that the Government, seeing that there was a matter here of poisoning, and that it was an inquiry in which medical knowledge would be most valuable, had appointed two of the most distinguished members of the medical profession in the Colony, or perhaps in Australia, to sit with the President in this inquiry, so that if this theory in regard to peripheral neuritis following influenza of the gastro-intestinal type had been intended for this Commission, my learned friend (Dr. Todd) would, as I pointed out, have produced authorities, because there must be authorities upon this matter to support his theory. The opinion of no one would be of any value apart from either personal experience or printed authority. I pointed out that these books could be read and passages noted: that they could be reasoned upon, and that you could decide whether they had any value or force; but that was not yielded, and we sat here hour after hour when my learned friend (Dr. Todd) thought fit to have taken down here prolonged and minute inquiries as to these different diseases, and as to the action of these medicines. Of course I quite admit that if my learned friends had confined themselves to this inquiry, and had read books to you and argued upon them that would not have appeared in the evidence. I quite admit that it could not hereafter be used with any effect. Now, however, that it is taken down here I admit (I am indifferent to it) it can be used for any purpose they think fit. But I appeal to you, the President and the other members of the Commission, whether you have any more doubt than that you are now sitting on this inquiry, that the peripheral neuritis in this case was the result of acute arsenical poisoning, and that it has nothing to do with either influenza of the gastro-intestinal type or any of the other diseases that were mentioned in the course of this inquiry such as sporadic cholera, syphilis, lead poisoning, alcoholism, &c. They have no bearing of any kind upon it whatsoever. Therefore the influenza theory, I consider, has vanished entirely—absolutely.

Then another matter of medicine was set up, and never let this be forgotten, that when you have an inquiry like this, started after a man has been sentenced to imprisonment for life, you will always find plenty of persons in this community of both sexes, who either from an interested and substantial motive, or by reason of great intimacy and friendship, will come here and try to mislead you by giving false evidence. Take, for instance, that man Hans Bach, who was brought in here, apparently having no connection of any kind whatsoever with the prisoner, and who turns out to have been living with him at Mr. Konnecke's for some years. He comes here to try and puzzle us with this evidence, which I leave in the hands of the medical members of the Board. "Oh, this child was suckled by the mother." If the mother had taken this arsenic and this strychnine the child would itself have been affected by these two poisons. Then they try to puzzle us. I apologise for saying "us," because it seems to me it could not puzzle a child, the foundation upon which it is based being false. That is a pure invention of that man, which is now disproved absolutely by undoubted testimony—the pretence that he went into that room and saw the child in the bed with the mother, and that the mother was then giving it the breast. A very improbable thing. I shall point out other things with regard to him afterwards, but I am now at the theory which was set up about the child. I must rely upon the knowledge of Dr. Manning and Dr. Jones, on that matter, in connection with the evidence of Dr. Newmarch, and the other circumstances of the case. That is to say, it is plain that this child was fed from the bottle subsequently to this poisoning, and that there is no reason whatsoever from this case to infer that the child would be affected in the way you notice, by the mother having been poisoned. Forgive me for pointing out that all that evidence is on the assumption that she had not been poisoned by arsenic. I am not speaking now, for a moment, of who administered it to her. I am speaking of what produced the peripheral neuritis. I submit that no counsel that ever lived—though they had the legal knowledge of my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, and the medical knowledge of my learned friend (Dr. Todd)—could advance one step to prove to any reasonable man that this unfortunate Mrs. Dean has not been suffering from arsenical poisoning. Dr. Newmarch has stated that he has not the slightest doubt about it whatsoever. It must also be borne in mind that the doctors whom they have called, instead of aiding, have defeated them, because I asked Dr. Jenkins—and it applies to all whom they called—this question, that of course there are certain symptoms or results peculiar to peripheral neuritis when it is produced by arsenic, as compared with peripheral neuritis produced as the result of influenza—that is to say, the one is differentiated from the other. It is not denied that Dr. Rennie and the other doctors are absolutely correct; but you want no doctors, because you have got two medical gentlemen on the Board who know that when that disease arises from arsenical poisoning it is differentiated from peripheral neuritis which arises from influenza by the pigmentation of the skin, the falling out of the hair, the state of the nails, and other symptoms which I do not think it necessary, as there are medical men sitting on this Board, to refer to more in detail. Every doctor they have called, including Dr. Jenkins, who saw her, admits (although Dr. Knaggs and some of them have not seen her), that a doctor who saw her at an earlier period would be able to state what they could not state. Dr. Jenkins stated he could not say at the time he saw her what the peripheral neuritis arose from. You know, gentlemen, as I have pointed out, I have done nothing, and declined at any stage to do anything except to cross-examine their witnesses or to call witnesses to show that their statements were not true, not with a view of affecting your judgment, because it has no bearing on this Commission, but in order that when the evidence shall be printed the statements of the witnesses, who those witnesses are, and what they are, shall appear in the same print. Let me point out what I mean by that. A young woman was called here, who I admit frankly, won my absolute confidence, and I joined with my learned friend (Mr. Pilcher) in begging, as she seemed to be very much affected in the room and cried, that her name should be kept out of the papers altogether in order that no harm might be done to her through this inquiry. We, who represent the Crown, subsequently received information that she and her sister, and the husband, are persons of notoriously bad characters, and that they have been convicted before the Courts. In my view the whole of their evidence, except some of it in a remote degree, has no bearing upon the kind of evidence which it was understood would be given under this Commission. It must be plain to anyone that if that young woman's evidence (I am taking that as an example) were printed in your Report, which will no doubt be laid upon the Table in Parliament, it would be said, "Oh, there are A, B, C, and D; look at all those witnesses," and there they would stand untouched. In order that great wrong may not be done, and persons, either innocently or wickedly, be the means of misleading the public mind, I saw that although their evidence has no bearing upon the evidence which it was said could be adduced, it was necessary in the interests of truth, and in the interests of the safe conduct of public affairs, that in the same print it should appear what they are and who they are. You may remember also with regard to a number of other witnesses what those witnesses have turned out to be, so that if anyone should say "Look at what Yorkey says. Who is Yorkey? Look at what Asbury says. Who is Asbury? Look at what Mrs. Sexton says. Who is she?" and the same of nearly all their witnesses. Then in the same print you may turn to Mrs. Reynolds, or witnesses of that class, and say, "What reliance can be placed upon them?" My learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, will forgive me for saying, although it was cleverly but not pertinently put on his part, that his remark, "You do not expect us to go to Government House for our witnesses," is idle, irrelevant, and useless, and has no bearing upon this matter. It is a matter for your judgment whether I am right in saying, that expressions such as this used by Counsel are of no weight and of no value. I was about to refer to the kind of evidence that was indicated would be brought in this matter. It must be admitted that in regard to the theory of habitual arsenic-eating, no evidence of any kind has been given. As to the theory that this peripheral neuritis is the consequence of a peculiar type of influenza—first of all, she never had influenza; secondly, the doctors who saw her at the time, Dr. Rennie and Dr. Newmarch, and who had opportunities of judging, have sworn to you positively, and have given their reasons for so swearing, that this was a case of arsenical poisoning, and that the peripheral neuritis in this instance can be absolutely differentiated from any other kind of case that my learned friend (Dr. Todd), referred to.

Then the only other matter they set up has equally fallen—with regard to an inference to the health of the child—except what I am now going to refer to, as far as my memory allows me at the moment, because, through a discussion that took place about the documents and other matters, I was called upon without a moment's reflection to address you; therefore, if I am a little more desultory than I otherwise would have been, I must be pardoned. The only other matter is this, and it is the most absolute waste of time and insult to a man's intelligence that can be imagined, they have given evidence about the character of Mrs. Seymour, and they have attempted to give evidence touching the character of Mary Seymour, now Mrs. Dean. If the conclusion as to Mrs. Dean being poisoned by arsenic depended upon her mother's evidence, and her mother's character at the trial was taken as being an honest character, I quite admit there would be very great force in the argument which has been put forward by that evidence; but what I want to draw your attention to is that you are not here trying the prisoner. The evidence at the trial, as I shall point out, was clear that Mrs. Seymour was a woman of bad character. That fact was not denied to the jury, and it appears upon the statements before you. Therefore, to show that she was worse than she was thought to be, is an utter waste of time, because it must be borne in mind that you are not, under this Commission, in the position of a jury trying the prisoner originally. This Commission was granted, it is apparent, under the representation and on the assumption that the case made at the trial could be displaced—not that you could get stronger evidence as to the character of Mrs. Seymour, because (I hope I am speaking to men who will decide this matter with judicial judgment) you will see that Mrs. Seymour's evidence has nothing to do with this conviction—I mean necessarily; that is to say, you may imagine Mrs. Seymour's evidence torn out of it, you may imagine that Mrs. Seymour had not been alive at the trial, and yet the evidence on which he has been convicted would stand exactly in the position in which it does now, as I will point out. I do not, as you can well understand, for many reasons, admit for one moment that Mrs. Dean's character has been touched in any way whatsoever by any witness who is worthy of credence. In this connection I might not inappropriately use the words of the poet, "There's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will," because they themselves, in trying to deal a blow at Mrs. Dean, have given you the greatest aid possible in seeing that she is a young woman of irreproachable character. I will show you what I mean, because I am talking, not to a jury, but to three members of a Commission who are competent to judge of the matter to which I am referring. There appear to have been two young men, both living in the city now, one named Brereton and the other named Clements, both of whom it is not denied were on the most intimate terms with Miss Seymour. She appears to have thought that she was, as she admitted, in love with one of them; and I regret very much that her letters were not read before the Commission and published by the Press. My learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, admitted, and it was stated by the President, that there was nothing in any of those letters that was of an improper or indecent character. They were the kind of thoughtless, unfinished, and foolish epistles that would spring from a young woman in this position in life. She was then it appears about 17 years of age. Gentlemen, do you not see that this man Brereton and this man Clements are persons who have no very nice scruples. As I am not addressing a jury, I will not use any stronger words about them than what I have just said. They actually gave up those letters, written by this girl of 16 or 17 years of age in the confidence of an unsullied affection. They gave up those letters because it must be admitted by everybody that there never has been in the history of the world a trial in which there have been such a number of able, persistent, astute, and eager searchers after matter, as there have been in this trial, in order to throw light upon it—a large committee, numbers of competent solicitors or those in their service, and two distinguished members of the bar to put before you the materials placed at their disposal. Mr. President, and gentlemen, do you not see that those two young men are without any scruples. It is admitted they are in Sydney. Do you not see that if they could have proved on their oaths that this girl was ever known under any improper name, or had ever been guilty of any wrong act, or had any associates of an unchaste or disreputable nature, my learned friend on the other side would have called them, because they have shown themselves to be men of the most unscrupulous character in giving up letters to those persons to assist them in this inquiry. As I have pointed out they have not called either of these witnesses. I beg of you, the two medical gentlemen on this Commission and the learned President, to notice that there were materials to come to a conclusion at once as to whether this young woman was what some of their witnesses most wrongly, most unjustly, and most untruthfully asserted that this girl was a frequenter of that brothel. It was admitted, and has ever been admitted (because I am speaking not only to learned men but men of the world), that a woman like Mrs. Seymour, who had gone through such a dreadful career as she appears to have done, would not view, as you or I might, the fact of her sending her daughter for any purpose to a house of that kind, and carrying on that small business, she did no doubt send over the daughter with messages there. I will have to take a little time to prove to you in reference to those men who have come here in this dastardly manner in order to try and take this man out of gaol, and in that endeavour have tried to destroy the character of Mrs. Dean, that their own evidence has internal proof that it is not true. It is not denied that there have been a great crowd of attorneys, or clerks to attorneys, in this case. It cannot be controverted that Mr. Meagher is a man of great ability, who has given the whole, or substantially the whole, of his time to this matter; and further that he has the interests of the assertions, or misleading statements, made by his own partner, who is in the Legislative Assembly. They have the aid of one of the most experienced and able men at the bar, and in addition the aid of a medical gentleman now at the bar, Dr. Todd. Do you not see, therefore, that they must have inquired whether Brereton or Clements could say one word against this girl, because those men voluntarily stooped to give over these letters from this girl, who was only 16 or 17 years of age at the time she wrote them, and which of course, it must be plain, they had kept as a sort of mementoes of affection between themselves and this young woman. If there is one sign more than another of the degradation of this community, and of the kind of people who are living here, you have it in the fact that two men come in to this inquiry, not called upon, mark you, as we are called upon, to discharge a most painful, tiresome, and unpleasant duty, but in order to aid the other side to injure the character of a young woman whom they had known. They do not come forward here to state anything of any kind whatever, but they come forward to give up these letters of affection which she had written to them some years back.

President: I suppose these young men are in Sydney?

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I asked the question distinctly of Mrs. Dean. One is a cutter at a tailors, and the other is a confectioner.

Mr. Pilcher: I believe Clements is in Brisbane.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I leave it to you the Commissioners, who will have the evidence, to say whether I am perfectly right in stating that I asked this question about them. The very fact of their giving up those letters proves they are in Sydney. How could they give letters over to them here if they were not in Sydney?

President: It is absolutely immaterial whether they are in Brisbane or in Sydney.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I hope the President, who has an experience that the other members of the Commission have not, will inform his colleagues that he constantly sees people who will come forward like Hans Bach, or that night-watchman, whose name I don't remember, or even that ex-constable, when there is a great public movement, either to act in aid of the popular voice, or to tack themselves on to a case of this nature, and bring themselves into some notoriety. They will come forward here, and unless you have some materials by reason of knowing before-hand that they are going to be called, you cannot touch them in any way whatsoever. I asked in the beginning for their names, but these were refused to me. On this matter I hope that while the medical members of the Commission will give the advantage of their learning to the President, the President, on the other hand, will, if it is necessary, tell the other members of the Commission that it is a common thing, particularly when there has been a committee to hunt about to find persons who will come forward and destroy a woman's character. Everyone knows that in a prosecution for rape all the dastardly ruffians who can be got will come forward to say they have known the woman for years, although there may not be one word of truth in it; but I want this to be known, and the Committee to notice it (and it has probably struck some of the members of the Commission) that if Mrs. Seymour's evidence were taken out of the case altogether, if she were dead, and if Mrs. Dean was a woman of the vilest character possible, it would not touch this conviction. I will point out why: Here is a counsel of very great ability, my learned friend (Dr. Todd), who started this theory in regard to the poison being found in the excreta. I beg he will forgive me for saying that his learning there led him into a most ridiculous position. True that the poison was found in the excreta, true that it was found upon her night-dress, true that it was found in other ways; but my learned friend has a courage which shows that instead of being in either of these professions he ought to have been a soldier. He had the courage to start before sane men the absurd and ridiculous theory that this woman had in some way, either with a squirt, or a pipe, or a brush, taken poison and mixed it up herself with her own excrement. I admit frankly, without any qualification, that if you give the slightest credence to that theory I address you in vain. No word that I can say can carry weight, or is worthy of being listened to, if it is thought that my learned friend amongst his other theories arrives ultimately at the one that in this case Mrs. Dean, or her mother, or both of them, mixed the poison with the excreta and thereby gave rise to the existence of the traces of poison which have been found by Mr. Hamlet. My learned friend, Dr. Todd, must not take what I have said as being in any way personally disrespectful to him, because I am quite aware counsel for a prisoner have a great, almost unlimited, license. They are not only justified in relieving him, but they are bound in some way or another if they can to relieve him from the penalty of his crime. They have no responsibility. One or more of you, the Commissioners, are as familiar as I am, I admit, with the records of many trials for poisoning, from the time of Dr. Palmer down to Madeline Smith, and on to Mrs. Maybrick, and even down to more recent cases, and you must know that eminent men and chemists are called to try and put forward some theory reconcilable with the innocence of the prisoner, but they do not succeed, with rare exceptions. No one in this world, however, ever heard of the position which my learned friend, Dr. Todd, has taken—that the existence of the poison here can be accounted for by some mode of mixing the poison with the excrement. Of course, as Mr. Hamlet said, it is not impossible, but it would require a person of very great ability to do it,—in fact the thing cannot be reasoned upon. It is, further, utterly inconsistent with the other evidence. Therefore, however onerous and unpleasant the duty may be, I hope you will not think I am wrong in suggesting that before you decide against this prisoner you will go carefully through the whole at least of the medical evidence, because it is plain that on that evidence the theory I have just referred to, and the other theories, are absolutely impossible. In one sense it is not impossible, of course, because it is possible to some philosophical writers that we are under a delusion in thinking that we are in this room now; but we have to act on the assumption that we are here, otherwise we should be able to do nothing. In that sense I say that the theory is utterly impossible. You have the evidence in regard to the vomiting, also in regard to the purging; you have other evidence which I may think it necessary to refer to hereafter. I hope you, Mr. President, and the other gentlemen of the Commission, will consider that, up to this very moment, no evidence has been given to displace the evidence given at the trial with regard to the matter of Mrs. Seymour being worse than she was thought to be there, and I hope, bearing in mind that this is but

but my assertion, you will in the end look to the evidence, because it would be a great waste of time, and I understand Mr. Pilcher to take the same view, for us to go through as minutely as you would at a trial the whole of the evidence as it was given here and compare it. It would in fact be doing what you will probably do yourselves hereafter. I submit that you will see that the evidence which has been given at the trial has in no way been displaced by the case that has been made here—that is as to the fact that Mrs. Seymour was worse than she was said to be. The jury knew her character. Further, I appeal to you in this matter that if Mrs. Seymour were dead the conviction would still stand, and further, that much of her evidence cannot be shaken. For instance, I will take one part of it as a sample which comes to my mind at this moment. Although she is a person of bad character, although her life out of this Colony was as bad as in the beginning I admitted it to be, you must see clearly that she would not poison her daughter on that account, nor can you refuse to believe her when you find her evidence corroborated by other evidence of a similar character. Now bear in mind that the truth of it is proved not only by Dr. Newmarch but by Dean himself. I think he states that in the month of January Mrs. Seymour, as well as his wife, were suffering from this poisoned food. That, mark you, is proved, first of all inferentially by Dr. Newmarch, and then directly and absolutely by the prisoner himself, and I may be forgiven for saying that as some people do not seem to understand it—

President: I do not think they said that. How do you mean that it was proved by the prisoner himself?

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: The prisoner in his own evidence says that they had finished breakfast when he had got home; that his wife and mother both vomited. That was in January. I mean the allegation by the mother that she herself was vomiting after they had eaten these groats. Though the mother states it, it does not depend on her evidence alone. The prisoner himself confirms it and she herself states it. Another thing I want to say to those who have the responsibility of making the recommendation whether the prisoner shall be released or not is this: The assertion has been made (I believe there was some letter written), and misunderstood, that the strongest confirmation of the charge made against the prisoner is in his own evidence. I may point out why. Let me assume for a moment that the prisoner is innocent. If I were accused for instance of any crime of this nature, and it was stated, "It is a month ago. I remember that you held that plate, or that knife, or that instrument in a particular way. You held the cup by the bottom." (I am assuming I am innocent.) I would probably say, "I could not remember it," because I would have no reason to fix upon my mind how I held it. How could I say, for instance, how I held a plate, or a cup, or saucer at dinner yesterday. I could not state it. I should have no reason to remember it. But if I were concealing a poison from the person to whom I was giving the food, and that person gave evidence, then of course I would know how I did hold it. Now, you will notice in this case that Mrs. Dean swore that he held the glass in this way [indicating], so that the bottom of it was covered. You will find that this man in his evidence absolutely denied it. I want to point out that if he were innocent he would say, "Of course I am innocent of this; I do not know how I held it. I held it in the ordinary way." But if he were guilty he would say, "I held it this way." [Indicating.] How he held the glass is a very strong point against him. The consequence is that when he knows she has sworn he held it in a particular way, which she indicated with her hand—whether her hand was small or large I don't know—he swore, "I did not carry it as she swore," and he then shows how he carried it in the ordinary way with his finger and his thumb.

President: But you can hardly imagine a man who is going to poison a person holding the glass up so that the person could see it.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: But that was not her evidence. What I am going to state seems to have been overlooked by all the people who are subscribing and aiding to set this man at liberty, and, perhaps, may be overlooked by you. It is an accident that she is alive to prosecute him. It was almost a certainty that she would die, and, of course, if she had died, no one would ever have suspected Dean. He was a man, as far as the public know, of high and unimpeached character, and some people even think he is so at the present day. It was a million to one she would die. Numbers of people, no doubt, have been poisoned, and the persons who poisoned them have not been punished. It is a crime easy of perpetration. Of course, it was almost a certainty that these two poisons—arsenic and strychnine—would kill her. In giving the poisons in the way it is stated he did, I will point out what she says in her evidence. There is no impracticability of any kind in it. She treated the matter in the same way as Dr. Newmarch said he did. He said he scouted the idea when Gail came to him in a suspicious manner, and that he was in a rage with him for daring to think of such a thing. The wife acted in the same way. It was only when it was apparently brought home to her mind that she made a charge against her husband of having attempted to poison her. It must be borne in mind—I wish it to be noted, and I point it out in order that my learned friend may deal with it if he likes—that either he was innocent or he was guilty. If he were innocent it would be impossible for him to remember that he held the glass in the ordinary way between his finger and thumb. It would be impossible. He would not attach any importance to it. But if he had attempted to poison her, he would remember it, and he, therefore, went into the witness-box and contradicted the statement.

President: He appears to have thrown out that porter on the Sunday morning.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I understand you are referring to this. She says, "I raised myself up in the bed, and noticed something white in the bottom of the tumbler." Of course he would not have known she was going to raise herself up in bed, and when she raised herself up in bed she says she noticed something white in the bottom of the tumbler, and that it looked like a powder. "The tumbler had nothing in it but the powder. He then turned his back to me and poured some porter into the tumbler. The bottle of porter was on the floor when he went out of the room, with the tumbler. He took the tumbler from the room into the bath-room. I heard the tap turn, and thought he was washing the tumbler," &c. "He then brought it back again. I had not put any powder into the tumbler. He then put the tumbler of porter to his nose, and he said it was sour. Prisoner had brought the bottle of porter into the room on Saturday night. It was then opened for me and I had some of it, and it did me no harm. He then threw it over the balcony." That is to say, if she had been lying down she would never have noticed anything of any kind whatsoever; but she, having raised herself up in bed, she noticed it, and then he threw it away. Let me make a remark here, which I think will have the sanction of every thoughtful person. If you were to try—being ignorant, mark you, of the peculiar idiosyncrasy of the person who was speaking, and who was attempted to be poisoned—to reconcile every fact in a case of poisoning with the preconceived ideas of what people would do, no man ever would be convicted. To try a case of this kind, you have got to take the salient important points and look at them.

I want to show, and I do that now in order that my learned friend may deal with it if he thinks fit, that the case is now ten times stronger than it was at the trial; because I quite admit that the learned advocate, Mr. Meagher, has properly and strongly dealt with the subject at the trial—that is to say, this strychnine is not a matter like arsenic. Where could he get arsenic? There is no proof that he ever had arsenic in his possession in his life. There is no proof that there is anywhere where he could get arsenic. There is no proof that it was even possible for him to obtain it. It has, however, been proved where he got the strychnine, and I intend to refer to it. I am going to satisfy, not my learned friend, but any impartial tribunal, that the strongest evidence in the case, apart from the evidence of the finding of the arsenic in the excrement, and apart from the medical evidence and Mrs. Dean's own evidence is the evidence of the Weyntons in regard to the strychnine having been buried in the ground. That evidence was not given at the trial. No person can now take up the position Mr. Meagher then did so strongly and say "How did he get it"? because the Weyntons know absolutely he had it and that he got it there. It is the same kind of strychnine as (Mr. Hamlet proved) is in the strychnine crystals which have been produced here. Secondly, at the trial it was argued with regard to the illness that peripheral neuritis had not developed. Since the trial she has developed peripheral neuritis, and now for the first time it is shown that that peripheral neuritis is accompanied by pigmentation of the skin, falling out of the hair, changes in the nails, and other symptoms, which prove absolutely that the poisoning in this case is arsenical poisoning. Thirdly, another ground which was taken up as bearing on the trial, and I admit it was a strong ground (though it seems to me, speaking frankly, it was not as strong as it was thought to be by the advocate for the prisoner), was—"What motive would he have for this"? No one can say that I have done anything with any pleasure in this case. No one can doubt that I have never seen this man in my life, and that we have been, as regards minor matters, to which I shall refer hereafter, at an enormous disadvantage—a most startling disadvantage—whereas on their side, even when they have been examining and re-examining their own witnesses, they have been able to communicate with the prisoner himself. I am not complaining. The Crown were prevented from holding any communication even with Mrs. Dean, which has, however, been of very great use to us, because she has been produced here after a most serious and painful illness, still not absolutely recovered, and gave her evidence in such a way, I submit, as must commend itself to the approval of everyone. However, what I particularly wish to refer to before we adjourn is that it is plain that Mr. Westgarth was not a voluntary witness. He stated that he came here under a subpoena, because this, I would point out, is a most material fact in the case, and I will direct your attention to other things in connection with it. I have pointed out about the strychnine in Weynton's evidence. I have also pointed out about the peripheral neuritis. Now it has fortunately come to the knowledge of the Crown that he had personally consulted a solicitor of high repute, on whose testimony no one would cast a doubt—in fact, the learned advocate, Mr. Meagher, when Mr. Westgarth gave his evidence said, "I will not ask you about it." No doubt Mr. Meagher has seen Dean since then. What I want to emphasize particularly is, that Mr. Westgarth's evidence must be taken as unimpeached and unimpeachable, and he states that on two occasions the prisoner spoke to him about whether he could obtain a divorce from his wife. Does not that prove absolutely that he wished to get rid of her? Does not Mr. Westgarth's testimony, that on two occasions the prisoner spoke to him in reference to getting a divorce by mutual consent, show to any fair-minded man that such is the case. In this connection I wish to point out that these two conversations took place either at the end of last year, or the beginning of this year, and that the poisoning took place in the month of March. I hope you will remember that that matter about the groats was in the month of January. Mr. Westgarth says that this man consulted him twice at night-time, mark you, on the boat, when of course there would be nobody to hear what he was talking about. I will admit it was only by accident it was known. Now we bring a person here of undoubted integrity, and who is an unwilling witness in the sense that he does not wish to do any harm to the prisoner if he can avoid it—we subpoena him, bring him here, swear him, and compel him to tell all he knows, and he then has to admit that Dean spoke to him twice with regard to this divorce which, of course, conclusively proves that the man desired to be free from his wife, and that he was not happy with her. There are other things in the evidence which show it. In one part the prisoner says she accused him of having illegitimate children, and in another part she says he accused her of having children not by him. That kind of happy home in which the husband and wife charge each other with having illegitimate children is a very peculiar form of happiness.

THURSDAY, 13 JUNE, 1895.

[The Commission met in the Board Room, Chief Secretary's Office, at 10 a.m.]

Present:—

FRANCIS EDWARD ROGERS, Esq., Q.C. (PRESIDENT).

PHILIP SYDNEY JONES, Esq., M.D. | FREDERIC NORTON MANNING, Esq., M.D.

The Hon. Sir Julian Salomons, Kt., Q.C., M.L.C., and Mr. C. G. Wade appeared on behalf of the Crown; and the Hon. Chas. Edward Pilcher, Q.C., M.L.C., and Dr. R. H. Todd, instructed by Messrs. Crick and Meagher, appeared for George Dean.

For a moment yesterday, when dealing with the evidence adduced by my learned friend, by putting in those letters written by this then young girl, I was a little warm, and naturally indignant at the idea that there could be two persons who would hand over those letters. I admit that, for a moment, my emotions overcame my strong desire to deal with this matter in a most calm and dispassionate way, because there is no doubt that that is the only safe mode of arriving at a sound conclusion. I must again, I do not say ask you, but warn anyone who wishes to form a judgment in this matter from being in the least influenced by things that are said in the streets or in the newspapers. I have noticed, for instance, that in this morning's edition of one of the daily papers, the grave mistake has been made of printing communications from an adjoining Colony, one from a medical man who is named, and another from a medical man who gives no name, as if we had not, in this Colony, a body of skilled medical men without the aid of the opinions of persons outside the Colony, who may be strong partisans, and who may have formed opinions from false statements that have been published, and have no materials whatsoever.

President: You need not trouble yourself about that, because I speak for my colleagues as well as myself, when I say that we pay no heed to anything that appears in the papers, neither do we pay any heed to medical opinions that appear in the papers. I think the medical Members of the Commission have pretty well made up their minds as to the medical aspect of the question.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I hope, both on personal and professional grounds, that I may be pardoned for pointing out what I openly confessed yesterday, that nearly all I have said, and nearly all I can say is, in my view, unnecessary with regard to the Commissioners. I see clearly, however, that I have a further and a higher duty to perform, which is to prevent the possibility, when the evidence is reported, and a further agitation is got up by unscrupulous or misguided persons of their insisting that certain things were known at the time of the Commission, and that they were in no way denied or referred to. I mentioned yesterday that, from my point of view, the whole of the evidence, if it were not touched, of such persons as Mrs. Sexton and her sisters, and of the night-watchman, and others tending in the same direction, is useless, and has no bearing whatsoever upon this case, when you once establish the fact that the woman was suffering from arsenical poisoning. Once commence with that, and then all that evidence is worthless; but the majority of people out of doors (I am not speaking of persons of no character, nor of those who have a motive to thwart the ends of justice, but of persons of high respectability), and particularly those who have already, to use a common expression well understood, "given themselves away," or thoughtlessly, recklessly, and without any sense of responsibility or knowledge, given expression to strong opinions, and who, having no interest in the result of this inquiry, have committed themselves to a position to their families and friends in private and in public, cannot be expected, whatever you may report, to admit that they have been wrong. I am only occupying your time on this subject to prevent the possibility of persons who have an interest in obtaining the release of this man, and who may hereafter start a fresh agitation—which I have no doubt they will do—insisting, if these things are not pointed out, that they were admitted here. My original intention was to have spoken about fifty words, but thanks to the able aid which, in consultation, I have received from my learned friend, Mr. Wade, I admit that that course on my part would have been a grave error, and I further see now that it would not have been fair to the other side if I had reserved anything that I knew until the reply.

Mr. Pilcher: But I have not admitted your right to reply.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I intend, if possible, to refrain from exercising my right of reply, but why I wish to reserve this right is self-evident. Numerous theories have been started here, every one of which has burst, but it is quite possible that my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, might, in his address, put forward some other theory which I could easily put my finger through. Let me take an example of what I mean, which perhaps none of the Commissioners have noticed. My learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, said yesterday, no doubt in the best of faith, but carried away altogether by the desire to release this man if it is possible, that the jury, in drawing attention to a small discrepancy in the evidence, stated that it was on this evidence the prisoner was convicted. I quite admit it is not my discovery that he was making a mistake. One of the members of the Commission pointed out that that was evidence given at the Police Court, which was therefore not before the jury, and through that remark my attention was drawn to the evidence given at the trial, and instead of its being as represented, though it was of no moment, it appeared that Mrs. Dean had stated that this night-dress was taken off on a day different from the day stated now. Why I say of no moment is because, thanks to a most potent question (which I ought to have asked, but which I admit I did not think of asking) which was put by one member of the Commission to Dr. Newmarch, the information was elicited from him. It was on Dr. Newmarch's own uninfluenced suggestion that the search was made for the night-dress at all, and it was he alone who, without any action or word on the part of Mrs. Dean or Mrs. Seymour, picked out this night-dress from the heap of soiled linen that was turned out of the clothes-basket. Although that is so, to show how careful we have to be even as to a small matter in ascertaining the truth, I will point out as a fact, first of all, that when Dr. Newmarch stated in his evidence at the trial that it was on a Thursday, my learned friend did not notice, or certainly did not point out, and I admit I did not notice, that that gentleman said it was on the 10th. He was under the impression that the 10th was on a Thursday. He said it was on the 10th. However, that is not what I am most desirous now of directing your attention to. It is that I find Mrs. Dean in her evidence says:—"The doctor took the night-gown away on the following Sunday, the 10th." That was the evidence given before the jury. The evidence given at the Police Court was not before the jury. I merely point this out now while the matter is fresh in my mind. Is not this case disposed of absolutely by this reasoning? I must be forgiven for again stating what I know is self-evident—that the prisoner knows whether he intended to cause the death of his wife by poison. At the trial the prisoner's advocate properly and most ably insisted that strychnine was a poison which could not be easily obtained like arsenic, because we know that arsenic is used in regard to boats in many ways. No one will deny that arsenic is as easily procurable as oatmeal. I admit in regard to strychnine that is not so. Therefore it was properly and wisely insisted upon that there was no ground for believing that it was possible even for the prisoner to have obtained strychnine, and as strychnine was one of the poisons here, and it was seen that the person who had administered the arsenic administered the strychnine, and the presumption was that Dean could not possibly have got strychnine without it being known, the fair inference was that he had not administered these poisons at all. Let it never be forgotten, and that is why I mentioned this self-evident fact, that Dean himself must know whether he is innocent or whether he is guilty; and never let it be forgotten either that the prisoner's legal advisers have had unlimited, unrestricted, and daily intercourse with the accused without any of the ordinary supervision that is necessarily used in the case of persons under sentence. The object I have in insisting upon that is that the able advocate (and no one has ever said that he was not most able, energetic, and efficient as far as man's efforts will go) who defended Dean, admitted at the trial that the woman had been poisoned by arsenic. I am coming in a moment to what my learned friend has stated about the position now. He admitted that the only potent question which arose then was whether arsenic had been administered by the prisoner. The theory set up was that it was administered by the mother or by the wife, or by both conjointly, or by both with the aid of a man named Gail. Now those who put forward that theory must have lost all power of reasoning, because, if you were to assume that Mrs. Dean was as bad in life as her mother, which would be altogether untrue, what evidence, what suggestion, suggestion, what possibility can anyone put forward of why the mother should poison her only daughter, or why the woman should poison herself? What for? The absurd remark has been made in various places, "Oh, they did not intend to kill her, but they intended to poison her to such an extent that he would be imprisoned." There are some positions which cannot be treated seriously, and I admit that the man, whoever he may be, who is capable of listening to such a gross absurdity as that by reason of the husband objecting to the mother-in-law living there, or any other reason that can be pointed out, the mother and daughter should attempt to poison her, is capable of listening to anything. If the charge were poisoning him, I admit all these arguments would be most potent. Then, of course, I can see the bearing upon it, but that the mother would poison her own daughter is quite absurd. As to her care, as to her nurture, as to her education, and as to her clothing and bringing up, the evidence is conclusive. I am not speaking now from a moral point of view. That the mother's heart was wrapped up in this girl is beyond doubt. Is it supposed that she would, unknown to the daughter, administer these two poisons, or is it supposed that the daughter would join with the mother in poisoning herself? Further, let me beg of the Commissioners to bear in mind (and I am glad that my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, is present to hear me state it) that if this man is innocent, the crime that the wife has committed, and the crime that the mother has committed makes the charge against him sink into comparative insignificance, that is to say, that the daughter who is only married a year—a young woman—should have joined with her mother in attempting to commit such a terrible crime. In this connection I quite admit that your judgment has been better than mine in calling Mrs. Dean and seeing her, because from her manner, and the way in which she gave many matters in favour of her husband, and admitted things against herself which no one in the world could prove, she must have satisfied you that she is a person who, within the bounds of her memory, after this long illness is speaking the truth. She has been forced into one of the most awful positions that can ever fall to the lot of a human being—to charge her husband, the father of her child, with having attempted to destroy her by poison. If you reject that charge and say it is untrue, you must necessarily adopt the position that the learned advocate, Mr. Meagher, took up at the trial, that the wife alone, or the mother, or the two conjointly, have poisoned the daughter, and it is childish to talk about having poisoned her up to a certain point. You might as well talk about taking a person's head off up to a certain point with doses of that kind. It has no bearing upon this. I appeal to the medical members of the Commission if I am not right in stating that it is a wonderful thing that she was not actually destroyed—that she did not die. Then suppose that this mother has poisoned her own daughter, or that the daughter has poisoned herself, in order to do what? In order to make this charge against this man. Why, of course, if they had done that, their conduct from beginning to end would have been the very opposite to what it was, and none of the small difficulties that existed at the commencement would have existed at all. They would have made the charge to Dr. Newmarch against him in the beginning, instead of which it is plain that Mrs. Dean, like Dr. Newmarch, though suspecting, puzzled and perplexed by what was taking place, naturally was unwilling to take to her mind as an absolute thought her husband's trying to take her life by poison, bearing in mind also that the wife knew nothing whatsoever to touch her husband's character. It is not only horrible but senseless to believe that they would take poison themselves, or rather that poison would be taken by Mrs. Dean, and administered by her mother. In order to do what? To make the charge against him. Why, if they were willing to commit an impossible crime of that nature, would not they have poisoned him? I apologise to men for suggesting this, because it is an insult to their lowest intelligence to contemplate or reason upon such a thing, but I mention it as it was put forward, and may be put forward again, by those who are in dire distress to find some point to cast a doubt upon his guilt. If they did that, they must have had the strychnine and the arsenic. If so, would not they have preferred to have administered them to him, and have thus got rid of him? No one would have suspected the wife. Is it possible that the mother would at least jeopardise the life and health of her daughter, and cause her to pass through the agonies and the unknown illnesses that might spring from the taking of these two poisons? I want you to understand that I am not in any way reflecting upon the admission that Mr. Meagher, made at the trial. From no improper motive I state that even if the most skilled counsel that the bar of England ever knew had been employed for the prisoner I do not see how it would have been possible on the evidence to resist the conclusion that Mrs. Dean was in fact poisoned by arsenic, although, of course, it was denied that the prisoner did it. It is impossible to resist that conclusion. My learned friend was asked the following question by one or more members of the Commission, to which it seems there can be only one answer, "Do you admit that Mrs. Dean in fact was poisoned by arsenic, strychnine, or by one of those two medicines?" to which he replied, "Oh, we do not admit that"; and with regard to the admission made at the trial, my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, said that they were not bound by it, and that they were entitled to either repudiate it or to add to it something that would destroy it. As to that, I must leave the matter to the members of the Commission, because no doubt my learned friends will and are bound to do all they possibly can to obtain this man's release. I do say, however, as I am entitled to say, that I cannot reason upon that matter. Whatever persons of no authority and who have no responsibility may insinuate in the newspapers, be they small or great, the Commissioners must know that it is useless inquiring into any matter, because the human mind is an instrument of no value, and reason must be discarded if you can have the slightest doubt that this woman was in fact poisoned by arsenic. I would like to mention something with regard to a remark that was made about the notes. I will say this more to the President himself, who is an experienced lawyer. It may not have been noticed but probably it has been. At the trial, the admission being made that the woman was in fact poisoned by the administration of arsenic, it became quite immaterial whether it was on a Thursday or on a Sunday that the night-dress was taken away by Dr. Newmarch, or whether it was worn inside out or how. Those matters are only material when you uselessly raise the question of whether she was poisoned by arsenic, or whether the peripheral neuritis arose from influenza, or some other illness outside of poisoning by arsenic; therefore I draw the attention of the President to the fact (because it is a matter of which he would have more knowledge than either of the other members of the Commission) that when you make the admission that she was in fact poisoned by arsenic, these details as to whether the night-dress was worn inside out, or how she wore it, or when it was taken away, are minor matters, which are unnecessary. I ask you to notice that. Now, I am not in any way, either in fact or in form, complaining that my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher, being in this difficulty, wishes now to reargue the matter. I hope the Commissioners will understand that I am not going to object to it, nor will I object to it, I admit frankly. You would not allow me to object to it, because my learned friend is entitled to use his knowledge, his rhetoric, and any material at his disposal to remove the difficulty if he can. It is absolutely demonstrated that this woman was suffering from acute arsenical poisoning. I ask your attention, Mr. President, to this important matter. One of the most experienced members at the bar, both in regard to time and knowledge, is now, with the aid of an able medical man who has honoured the bar by recently joining it, conducting the case here for the prisoner. I put myself in the position of my learned friend. Do you not see that if you once come to the conclusion that Mrs. Dean was poisoned by arsenic all these other matters are of no importance. I want to point out why my learned friend is wise in not making that admission, because I quite admit that no one can doubt it must be made, I do not mean as an admission, but that no man who has read this evidence, and knows the uncontradicted facts on the prisoner's own testimony, on the evidence of Dr. Rennie, on the evidence of Dr. Newmarch, and on the evidence of their own doctors—no one who has to pronounce a decision can doubt that the only rational conclusion is the one that was admitted at the trial, that she was suffering from arsenical poisoning. But my learned friend sees, which I as counsel also see, that if you once come to the conclusion that this woman has been suffering from arsenical poisoning, the case is at an end; because you have only to look at the prisoner's own evidence, and you will see that it was only possible that this poison could have been administered by three persons—the prisoner, the mother, or the victim. I decline for the present, with the greatest respect for my learned friend, till I hear him, to reason on that impossible position—a position which would make out that the prisoner's wife was a criminal of such a dye as to comparatively make the husband, even if he were guilty, a small criminal. That the mother would kill the daughter, or risk killing her, is absurd, because she could not possibly weigh and measure the poison as you would sugar, nor would she know the effect of it, as we know the effect of it. The doses were strong enough to kill, probably by the combination or rather by the quantity, but the result was that the purging and vomiting took place, which prima facie it was improbable would occur. If you were to assume that the mother has risked poisoning her own daughter, and has done it with the demoniacal view of getting the husband either hanged or imprisoned for a very long period, do you not see that you would have to find her guilty of committing a crime without rhyme or reason, before which his falls into comparative insignificance. I will not, however, pursue that any further. We all know that counsel cannot create the circumstances, and that counsel are compelled sometimes to reason upon and press a position to which the listeners would give no weight, because it is one which will not admit for a moment of being entertained or supported by those who have got to decide it. Why I am dwelling upon that at this moment is this: My learned friends have wisely decided not to make an admission now. They cannot be supposed to take up any other position than that the man they are defending is innocent, and they, with their extensive knowledge, must know, as the Commissioners must know, that if you once come to the conclusion that this peripheral neuritis did arise from arsenical poisoning there is an end of the case. I want to refer for a moment to something I said yesterday. At the trial there was no doubt great difficulty as to the strychnine. There was no evidence whatsoever from which it could be inferred where he got it. There was further, at that time, no development of that disease, with its accompanying symptoms, which is characteristic of arsenical poisoning, peripheral neuritis, nor was there evidence of any motive which could reasonably be assigned in the face of his statements. But now, apart altogether from her evidence here, I suppose I may safely assume that no one will have the folly to say that this woman was familiar with peripheral neuritis, and that she has deliberately set about to cause those symptoms. That would be as ludicrous as the other position. Therefore you see that, in the course of an illness of a painful and agonizing nature, these poisons have developed that disease in a form, and with accompanying results, which demonstrate the poisoning as due to the administration of one or more doses of arsenic. Then, in addition to that, there is what I mentioned about the strychnine, which I shall have to refer to more in detail directly. Then you have the peripheral neuritis in the form in which it has appeared, which is a conclusive proof that the admission Mr. Meagher made at the trial he could not help making, and now it is proved as strongly and as clearly as any fact of that nature can ever be proved. Of course it is not mathematically proved, which never can be the case in a criminal trial. With regard to whether he committed the crime, the position at the trial was that he could not commit it, because he could not get strychnine. I shall show before I conclude that that position is no longer tenable, and that all things point irresistibly to the conclusion that the Weyntons know as well as they know how to spell their names that this man did obtain this strychnine from them—I admit, not with any knowledge on their part that he was about to use it for a wrong purpose, but that on the morning following the day on which they hear of the suspicion that Dean's wife has been poisoned, they both (the father and mother), as it is admitted by the son, unknown to the family, get up at 6, as they said originally, or quarter to 7, as they say now (the contradiction is of no moment), and secretly bury that strychnine in the ground, and when the police come to make an inquiry about it they do two things, one of which demonstrates that they are strong friends of Dean and desire to save him, and the other of which demonstrates that that poison was used for that purpose. Not only do they bury it, but they tell the police they know nothing of poison. They say, "We have no poison in the house." I forced them to admit that they thought they would save their oaths, as it were, by putting it in that form, which is the most rascally and the most wicked form of lying possible—that is to say, if you have poison in the house, and know the police are coming, you take it and bury it in the garden, and tell the police you have none in the house, knowing all the time that you have got it in the garden, and that you took it out of the house. That is a form of lying which characterises the person using it as being of the greatest turpitude. Further than that, to show that they are perjurers, and that they knew this man did use this poison, or at least had possession of it, they then find out to their great horror that the woman is being poisoned, and they afterwards learn that she is being poisoned by arsenic and strychnine, the poison they had buried being strychnine. My learned friend's point as to the rosaniline has fallen to the winds, because it has been proved that the colour would have been discharged by the acid in the lemon-syrup and would disappear. The Weyntons then tried to frighten Mrs. Dean from going on with the matter. I admit that Mrs. Weynton and her son, taking a large view of human affairs and human nature, are no doubt entitled to great pity. The first step, often a venial one, in a wrong direction may force an honest person into a position that never in their lives will they be able to regret enough. I hope that you, the Commissioners, noticed Mrs. Weynton when she was giving her evidence. You remember that she was very much affected, and that she cried. Did you also notice that her son was in a state of great agony when he was giving that evidence. Let me venture, without any strong words, to indicate to you why. Dean, it is admitted, used to play cricket with their boys. I admit that they knew nothing that would ever lead them to suppose that Dean would commit this crime any more than would the

the highest person in the land. I submit to you that you must see from their evidence that the only explanation of it—with all my learned friend, Mr. Pilcher's, ability in stating another—is that they know, as their original statements admitted, that this strychnine was in an open wash-house for many months; and it is shown that it was there in the month of January, at the time that Dean was living next door. I will go to their alteration of the date hereafter. On the Monday night, as Mrs. Weynton admitted, they heard about this suspicion of poisoning by strychnine. I do not know whether it was known to be by strychnine at that moment—merely poison. Of course, if they previously had that bottle of strychnine which they had obtained for a perfectly innocent purpose, they would draw no inference or have no supposition of Dean not wishing to use it for some similar purpose. It appears Weynton got it to kill a dog, and he poisoned the dog on the very night of the day on which he received it, so that if Dean had said to Weynton, "I am troubled with this, that, or the other," Weynton would have let him have some of the strychnine; because we know, for instance, a man named Johnson was given some of this poison for the purpose of finding out the person who was stealing his vegetables—a most dangerous mode of making the discovery. As far as the Weyntons were concerned they would, of course, be innocent of any idea or thought that Dean was going to use it for an improper purpose. Johnson having returned the poison to them, they hear on the Monday night, as they admit, of the poisoning, and the next morning they secretly, and at an unusual hour, either 6, as they originally stated, or at a quarter to 7, as they now state, take that poison, and bury it in the yard. Let it be borne in mind that these persons who have spoken these falsehoods, are the only persons who say it was ever in the house at all. The probability is that this poison had been left in the wash-house, though it is immaterial whether it was left there or not, because it is admitted that at that unusual hour in the morning, unknown to the sons who are grown up, unknown to the son who procured it, and unknown to the family, the wife and husband came down together and buried this poison. They afterwards not only conceal the fact, but state falsely to the police that they have no poison. The husband denied to me, which I submit to you on the evidence is perfectly true, that he pointed out to Mrs. Dean what an awful sentence she might meet if she went on with the charge, but he admitted more than I required, because he admitted that he did tell her she might get herself into trouble. He spoke afterwards about some talk he heard, which fell to the ground, because he had admitted, on cross-examination, that he told her what might happen to her. Therefore, you will have no doubt whatever that Weynton—about whom I say nothing, because I can say nothing in his favour—tried to frighten Mrs. Dean from going on with the matter. He knew that poison had been kept in the wash-house for months. The inference to be drawn from the secretness of it, and from the falsehoods told about it, is that he, having heard of the poisoning, knew well that Dean had possession of the strychnine. With reference to what I was saying a few moments ago, you will remember that only a few months since, people here—respectable people, I admit—acting from no improper motive, asserted over and over again, that that man Archer, who protested his innocence on the scaffold, was innocent and wrongly convicted, and petitions and meetings were got up and held in regard to him. However, when the watch and chain which belonged to that woman were found, it conclusively proved that Archer was guilty of the crime. You gentlemen, who have read of trials that are notorious within the last thirty or forty years, must know that in many cases assertions have been made of the strongest nature in regard to the innocence of the prisoners. Take, for instance, the agitation in reference to Mrs. Maybrick, which is a matter of common knowledge. In that instance, even the Government of the United States were influenced to take the view from the President that Mrs. Maybrick was innocent; but the English Government have held that woman a prisoner to this day, because the only people who can judge of a crime are those who conduct the trial. To take the fact that a prisoner is outside the criminal classes, and the additional fact that you like that person, or that he is a person who is a public character, and whom it never entered your mind would commit a crime, is entirely useless. I wish to point out, in order that it may be known that I have done so (I admit it is not necessary to do so for the Commissioners, but it is necessary that it should be pointed out, and that my learned friends should know it was pointed out) that the reason, I submit, why Mrs. Weynton was in that mental torture which I so regretted she had to go through, was because she is plainly a respectable woman, of honorable motives, and with a respectable family, and I have no doubt similar language would apply to her son. I submit to you that the reason why she was in this dreadful agony (and one day you will find, when I am dead, this woman will admit it), is because by these small steps Mrs. Weynton and her son have been compelled to add to their former falsehoods—that is to say, they have, with the husband, having originally stated that this poison was there in the month of January, knowing that the Deans did not come to that house till the month of August, they now make a last effort to save him, and untrue state that that strychnine was obtained from Elliott Brothers prior to Dean's occupation of the house. Let me point out to the Commissioners a most important matter. It is plain here that a combined effort by a number of people, many of them skilled, has been made to go through any channel, however slight or however remote, to try and touch even the characters of the witnesses in this case. I think I am correct in saying, because I heard the President state it, and it is self-evident, that they even obtained an order to be allowed to search, or cause to be searched, the telegrams that passed over all this period to either Mrs. Seymour or Mrs. Dean, because they say, and I admit their great thought and ability in seeing it, that if the daughter were the character that one or two of their witnesses stated her to be, there would be numbers of telegrams passing to her of assignments with her. That is plain. Do you, gentlemen of the Commission, not see that why I am repeating this is that, as they have developed (I am not in any way whatsoever making a point of their having done so) such extraordinary thought and ability, even to the fact of going into this wretched matter about the fortune-teller, or this word "Rita" (I hope I won't forget to refer to and dispose of both of them); but as they have done this, do you not see that a most important matter arises? Is it not true that Mrs. Weynton originally stated, or her husband stated, or the son stated (you have got the statement put in) that this strychnine was in that wash-house during the period the Deans were next door, because you must see that if it were, it is an open wash-house, and the strychnine would be there, a coloured thing, with the label of poison on it. Unfortunately it is a fact that human nature is so weak, and the circumstances surrounding a man's life and real character so unknown to the outside world, that probably the very sight of this means of committing a crime may have been the first step in this awful tragedy—that that strychnine, being in that open wash-house with the word "poison" printed upon it, that unhappy man, finding he could not get a divorce, then wickedly began to ponder what use he might make of it. Do you, the Commissioners, not see that if that poison were obtained, as it is now pretended at the eleventh hour it was—contrary to the original statements of Mrs. Weynton, her husband, and the young man—from Elliott Bros., at a time when the Deans were not living there, that this man who gave it being in Tasmania is simply an insult to ones thought? I hope you will see that. Is it not a most extraordinary coincidence that when we came up to that point about whether that new statement of theirs is true, then the man who was in Elliott Bros., and who gave that strychnine to young Weynton, goes away to Tasmania, and is not in the Colony?

President: It was stated that his wife died.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: He only went away on Monday. Mrs. Weynton had been called long before that. I beg your attention to this. Do you not remember that the son stated that on the very evening of the day on which he made his statement they found out at a meeting of the family that the statement was not correct? Months ago they found out that that statement was not right. That, I am sorry to submit to you, was the first step in falsehood, though perhaps taken with the best of motives. Once commence, although with the best of motives, to state falsehoods in order to throw the police off the track, and shield a prisoner, and you may be compelled in your own self-defence to go further, because you see if the Weyntons knew that this man had possession of this strychnine, though for a perfectly innocent purpose, and they found out afterwards that this woman had been poisoned by arsenic and strychnine, without speaking of law, it would not be denied that they committed a most grave wrong in not aiding the course of justice by stating that they had buried that strychnine. Directly they heard of it they buried the poison and told the police falsehoods. With regard to their statements that they found out that evening that there was a mistake made as to the date—seeing that it was admitted here, both by Mrs. Weynton and her son, that the police were in the house at the very time—I assume you know what persons under similar circumstances would do. They would immediately have told the police, “Oh, that is quite a mistake about the date we have given; this was before the Deans came to the house at all.” They not only never said such a thing, but their statements are the very opposite. What I was upon, which I do not think I have yet carried to the minds of all the members of the Commission is, that as they have given so much industry and so much ingenuity, misapplied, to go into matters, though they may touch the character of the mother, or even of the daughter. (I will show, however, they do not touch the character of the daughter as a matter of duty apart from this case), the most important matter is, “Was that strychnine in the possession of the Weyntons after Dean occupied that house, or was it before?” because if it was before he occupied the house, it would sweep away the whole matter entirely of this strychnine being in that wash-house or out of it, or have a great bent in that direction at least—that is to say, it would remove a great deal of the force of what I am now insisting upon. With reference to the man who gave young Weynton the poison, you must see, Mr. President, as clearly as that you are President here, that my learned friend could have examined him, that he could have applied to him at once, and not have to wait until he came back, or he could have got a Commission to examine him in Tasmania, or have taken some step in that direction if he thought it advisable to do so. They have not, however, taken any step of any kind. What I am insisting upon is that the reason Mrs. Weynton and her son were in the state in which you saw them here was that they have unfortunately got themselves into this position—a more painful one none of us can imagine—that the mother now unfortunately to the knowledge of the son, and the son to the knowledge of the mother, must go on through life knowing that each of them has committed perjury in order to save this man. I submit that this unfortunate lady broke down with great emotion in this room, and you yourself saw the state in which the young man was. As to Mr. Weynton, you remember his evidence and his manner of giving it. I submit that everything he has said, and everything he has done in the matter, not only disentitles him to any credit, but shows that he is keeping back from us a knowledge that he has. Do you remember, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Commission, that it has been stated here by my learned friend, that this man Weynton implored the Crown not to call him or his wife? Why did he do that? Here is a woman, mark you, of whose character he knows nothing,—neither does he know anything of the character of Mrs. Seymour—here is a woman, though humble, in respectable life, who has been in mortal danger from a mode of killing most insidious and most difficult to trace, and the most easy to perpetrate. They live next door. They know that that strychnine has been in that wash-house. It was not denied, because if it had been denied I should have asked you to go over and see the place. The poison was there in that wash-house, and it was admitted that there was a gate to the yard, so that any person playing cricket could go in there. It might be that the prisoner might go in with the idea of borrowing a bottle or to get a piece of wood, or anything else. He might then see that strychnine. It would be quite a waste of time to speculate upon that if the fact were not that this woman has been poisoned by strychnine, and that the evidence, apart from this, shows that Dean was the man who did it. Then, as you see, it is demonstrated that she was poisoned by arsenic also, and the evidence points to her husband now ten times as strongly as it did at the time of the trial, by reason of the development of that illness peculiar to arsenical poisoning, and also by reason of the motive which has been shown by Mr. Westgarth. Then you naturally begin to ask yourselves, cannot you answer the question which the jury were puzzled with at the trial by the learned advocate for the prisoner—“Where could he get the strychnine?” Remember that at the time of the trial the Weyntons knew they had buried that strychnine in the garden. Apart from the evidence of the doctors, and apart from the peripheral neuritis itself, this matter as to the strychnine being buried, and the Weyntons conduct in connection with it, is, in my humble view, perhaps the most important element in the present inquiry, because it cannot be denied that at the time the trial took place the Crown knew nothing whatsoever, and had no suspicion in the world that in the garden attached to Weynton’s house there was then lying buried a bottle containing the very kind of poison, the crystals of which had been found in the bottle of lemon-syrup. The Crown did not know of its being buried there. No one but the Weyntons knew it. It is probable the son did not know it. But Mr. and Mrs. Weynton knew it, and they also knew, as they have admitted, that he made these threats against Mrs. Dean if she went on with the matter. Do you not see from the fact of their begging that they should not be called, that they knew that if they were called the Attorney-General might force them (this is one of the drawbacks of this mode of inquiry for which no one is responsible) in that open Court, with the solemnity and sanctity of its surroundings, and with no Committee to draw attention to what I might call the “fringe” of the inquiry, to admit in the witness-box that Weynton had possession of the strychnine. But he was not called. Mrs. Weynton was called, and she denied that there was any poison in the house. Then you notice the police were put on the scent, and they examined the young man in the morning, when he was at business, before he communicated with his family, family, and he said what I have drawn your attention to, as to when and where he got the poison. The police then immediately went further and dug up, in their presence, the very poison which it was so difficult to procure, which had been found in the lemon-syrup, and which constituted one of the most important elements in the charge against Dean. Therefore, I wish to impress upon this Commission the fact that, although at the trial the jury gave, and rightly gave, great consideration to the argument of Mr. Meagher (you may say, probably, that that was one of the matters which led them to stay out for nearly ten hours); there are three decisive circumstances which have arisen since that trial, the peculiar form of peripheral neuritis, the strychnine matter which was not known at the trial, and the motive which was proved by Mr. Westgarth, the solicitor. It will be noticed that if you take the dates out of either young Weynton's or Mrs. Weynton's evidence of when they got the strychnine, when they had it, and when it was moved inside, it will be found that these dates coincide with the time that Dean was living there. I admit that, what I suppose they saw was the truth, cannot be proved without their stating it, or Dean hereafter, under remorse, confessing it. That word reminds me of a matter which might mislead the Commissioners absolutely upon a vital point. I do not mean to say that the President is more competent to deal with what I am going to point out than the other members of the Commission, because the other members of the Commission may be familiar with trials for poisoning. It is this: This prisoner had, no doubt, entered upon, and was in, an honest and respectable position; I mean, he was not a person of the criminal classes. I am too sensible of the weakness of every man, and of the danger which the life of a late eminent Judge in England showed to boast of what may happen to-morrow. I am too sensible of that to do more here than my duty forces me to do in the face of this charge, and it was therefore perfectly possible that Dean, seeing his wife in this dreadful state, and being afflicted with remorse at what he had done, fell into tears and was deeply affected, and would probably have given his two arms if he could have undone what, unfortunately, he had done. But I must appeal to the President, if the other members of this Commission do not know it, if it is not notorious that in this very Colony trials for poisoning have taken place where—in one case an old man was poisoned by a woman, who after two trials ultimately died upon the scaffold—it has been proved that the person who has done a deed of this kind will first of all fondle and do every act from which you would infer that their whole life was bound up in the salvation of the life they were trying to take. This is a matter known in many countries, such as England, France, and Australia. It is a matter that must be known to the President himself, that there was a case tried here not very many years ago when the woman tore her own undergarments to pieces to use them in aid of the man, the poisoning of whom she was convicted of. It was mentioned in the case of Louisa Collins that she was stroking the head of the man and piteously crying and whining over him, and as far as you could see you would pledge your life that the very man she was destroying she was trying to save. Notwithstanding that those persons were convicted on the evidence, and some of them at least met with the penalty of death, and others with a term of life-long imprisonment. What I mean is this: That it is a matter that depends upon the organisation of the person who is charged. There is no ground for supposing that Dean was a drunkard, but it appears from a question which my learned friend asked in the course of the evidence, that he is not a person of absolute unbroken sobriety. I am not imputing in any way that he was a drunkard, but it may be that in some fit of depression, which no doubt is the truth and the key to the whole of this matter, this man, as he even now admits that he did not know the character of the mother, might reasonably have been led to believe that the woman he had married was no better than the mother. We know that he consulted Mr. Westgarth twice about getting a divorce, and remembering that he himself states that this so-called happy home was made unhappy by altercations in which the wife accused him, according to his own evidence, of having illegitimate children, and of taking the money which ought to have gone to her and the child to keep those illegitimate children, and on the other hand that she states he accused her of having an illegitimate child that was not his, do you not see that the key to the whole matter is in that, and that no doubt in some moments he may have given credence to these rumours about his wife. He may have come to the conclusion that he had bound himself to a body of crime as it were by this marriage, and coming in sight of the bottle of strychnine there—because arsenic can be used in any number of circumstances in connection with the boats in the harbour—he may have in a moment of depravity, or in what is termed a bad state of mind, first have contemplated the possibility of perpetrating this act. Everybody must know that arsenic is as easily got as oatmeal, but strychnine I admit offers a difficulty. Then we have got the evidence about the strychnine. Is not that the explanation of the whole affair? Here it is demonstrated that she has been poisoned by arsenic, and strychnine is found in the lemon syrup, the circumstances with regard to the strychnine pointing to the ease with which he could get it—that is, next door to the place in which he lived. He shows that he is of opinion that his wife has a child of which he is not the father. The evidence now here shows that he may easily have been told things which would lead him to believe that the daughter was no better than the mother, and it would have to be admitted, of course, that the mother was a person of bad character. It is plain that he was desirous of getting a divorce. That motive, of course, was not known at the trial. Then, unfortunately, he sees these means, and makes use of them, as we know numbers of persons who have suffered under similar circumstances have done in order to free themselves. My learned friend, in discharge of his, I admit, equally painful duty, submitted to you many possible theories. I would like my learned friends to listen to what I am going to say. There are certain matters which I see I ought now to draw your attention to, because I want if possible to avoid exercising any right of reply, but, of course, my learned friend (I do not say intentionally) in the heat of argument, or in the thoughtlessness of the moment, may put forth a statement which I can show to be erroneous, or he may start other theories with which I have had no opportunity of dealing. Apart, however, from mis-statements of that kind, or a new suggestion of how it happened, I think I ought to do what I frankly admit I did not intend to do—that is to say, to point out now one or two salient matters instead of stating them when my learned friend has stated all he can say.

Mr. Pilcher: I do not admit your right to reply.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I stated long ago that were it not for what took place here my learned friend would have had to commence. As far as I am personally concerned, I shall be delighted to be relieved from the duty of replying. But forgive me for again stating that it is almost impossible to exaggerate the importance, not only of your decision, but of what may spring from it, and on that account, however unpleasant and inconvenient it may be to me, I see that I must ask, not only as a right, but as a matter of fairness, that, as my learned friend has never to this moment stated any theory except those those with which I have dealt, I must be allowed the right to reply. He has stated the theory about the habitual arsenic eating, the one about the influenza, with its surroundings mentioned by both of my learned friends, whether including or excluding sporadic cholera or these other possible diseases, and another theory which I am going to refer to in a moment, because I do not know whether my learned friend has abandoned it. I do not want him to commit himself to anything in a serious matter of this kind. I do not ask him to make any admission, but I am going to deal in a moment with a matter which I understood was absolutely abandoned—that is another theory which was set up. If it were true, it would be of great importance; but not only is it inconsistent with the whole of the evidence, but it has practically been abandoned, and has not the slightest basis of fact to go upon. I mean the pretence by that man Hall in the beginning, which, I submit, he went away from entirely, and which we have disproved absolutely by the evidence of Constable Sutherland, that Mrs. Seymour, the mother, had tried to buy arsenic at his shop. I have not yet dealt with it, but I will in a moment. That is abandoned, that is ludicrous; but why I am mentioning it now is that there are certain particulars which, I think, as I notice them, I ought to point out, in order that my learned friend may or may not deal with them. The reason I am insisting that the Crown must have the right of reply is because my learned friend might now, with the aid of the able and scientific junior that he has with him in this case (Dr. Todd), start some new theory. When I asked, "What is the case you are going to make?" it was stated that this matter about the habitual arsenic eating would be set up, and the evidence that could be given by the medical men as to the consequences of it. Do you not see that that has not the slightest basis of any kind. Although there are thoughtless persons who do not distinguish between the statements of counsel and actual proof, we know here that not one word has been given of any kind as to this medical theory, or a fact to support it, that Mrs. Dean ever took the arsenic in her life. The same with regard to the influenza theory and other theories. Therefore, if my learned friend should start another theory, I should have no opportunity whatever to deal with it; but I quite admit that if you were to say you would yourselves deal with it, I would be glad to be relieved of that duty. Let it be understood, however, as I mentioned some time back, that I am not imputing any want of faith on the part of my learned friends, or on the part of those who have instructed them, or on the part of the Committee, or anyone who has made statements in Parliament or out of it. I am not doing so, because no knowledge could be possessed by those persons of the thing itself. It could only be from information they had received, or from things they had read. I think every one who has the interests of justice at heart will regret that the kind of evidence which should be given under a Commission of this nature, or which every one would assume would be given if it were possible to give it, to displace the Crown case at the trial, has not been adduced.

Mr. Pilcher: You have more than once said that the undertaking was to displace the Crown case. The Commission was granted on the statement of Mr. Goddard. I can tell you that you are entirely in error in what you say.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: That is your opinion.

Mr. Pilcher: That is what was announced by the Premier.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I do not care what was announced.

Mr. Pilcher: I am speaking about what Mr. Reid said was the reason for granting the Commission.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: You, the Commissioners, before you make your report in this matter, are entitled to find out whether my learned friend is right, or I am right. I must implore that you, the Commissioners, will give attention to what I did state, and am now stating. I hope that you will ascertain what were the grounds which were put forward by Mr. Crick, a prominent member of the firm of solicitors which defended this man—Messrs. Crick and Meagher. I submit that if you wish to put beyond the possibility of doubt whether my learned friend is right, or I am right, as to the kind of evidence upon which this Commission was obtained, you should ascertain the facts yourselves. I am not speaking about what the Premier or Mr. Goddard said, and I do not mean to throw the slightest doubt upon Mr. Goddard's high character, respectability, and veracity. All I say is that what Mr. Goddard says has no bearing upon what I have been speaking about. I am not complaining of my learned friend's interruption, because if you show me at this moment any evidence of this nature, that evidence would be most cogent and weighty in this inquiry. If, Mr. President and gentlemen, you look at the terms of this Commission, which you will do, and also to the newspapers—as my learned friend has done;—if you also look at the records of the debates in Parliament, which will be the best guide, and the able speeches of Mr. Crick; and you can have no greater authority than one of the solicitors for the prisoner, who is a Member of Parliament, and whose speeches were made no doubt under the honest impression that they were perfectly true, you will be satisfied that the Commission was granted upon the supposition that evidence would be adduced, which would displace the case at the trial. I will show in a moment, as my learned friend has made the statement, that the Commission shows internally, and the facts are common knowledge to everybody, that it was contemplated that under this Commission the case made by the Crown would be displaced. I will give as an instance, the evidence of the witness Hall, who is a chemist carrying on a business which belongs to some one of the name of Swindale. I quite admit that had that evidence proved of any value, although it might not have demonstrated the innocence of Dean, it might have led you to say, "If you can show that Mrs. Dean or Mrs. Seymour have been buying poison, although it may not be possible to reconcile his evidence before the Commission with that fact, it is a kind of evidence which we consider justifies us in saying that the case which the Crown made at the trial is displaced, that is, that the plea of guilty ought to be taken off, and the prisoner ought to be held not guilty, because we do not know in this country or in England the sentence "Not proven." I wish to refer now to a matter which I had entirely forgotten. Do you remember that early in this inquiry I was compelled to occupy a large part of your time in dealing with the evidence of three women named Cook, which had been printed in the public papers (no doubt this is how the public mind has been affected), and I took up an hour or two with Mr. Konnecke to prove what were the circumstances under which that evidence was obtained. You remember I traced out Konnecke's acquaintance with some member of the Committee with whom he went to the North Shore to one Mrs. Cook, then to a second Mrs. Cook, and finally to a third Mrs. Cook. Then you will remember that it was anticipated that Mrs. Seymour had gone up to one of those persons to get her as a witness to a purchase of poison. Why I took up so much time in the matter was to show you what was done with those Cooks, and I admit frankly, we had their names and were prepared to show what they were if they were called. Do you not see how the public mind is affected by things of that nature, in the same way as it is by what appeared in this morning's paper, which I have already referred to. If you read what my learned friend invites

invites you to do in the newspapers published before this Commission was granted, you will find a number of statements made which, I admit, if proved, would at least show that you could not rely upon the verdict of the jury, and that you ought to allow the prisoner to be acquitted or set at liberty. If you were shown on the evidence of persons of reputable character—the evidence of known criminals would be utterly useless—that Mrs. Dean or Mrs. Seymour had been about trying to get poison, but that they could not get it because it was not to be obtained without a witness, then, in that case no doubt a very large step would have been made towards proving what the other side undertook to prove. You will notice, Mr. President, and gentlemen of the Commission, that this (referring to terms of the Commission) particularly shuts out anything about the verdict of the jury. I only referred to one matter before, but that my learned friend may not say that I have only touched on that matter, I will read every word in this Commission that bears upon the point of what the Commission was granted for.

President: We have read it very carefully.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: It is necessary, however, I see, to read it (reading from Commission): "And to report whether, in your opinion, as the result of such further inquiries made by you"—that is to say, hear, or make further inquiries; that if on those further inquiries you could find out, for instance, as was alleged, that there were numbers of people—these three Mrs. Cooks, for instance—who could prove that Mrs. Seymour had purchased poison, or if the evidence of the witness Hall was absolutely proved, then no doubt my learned friends would not only have complied with the promise made—I mean the inference properly drawn from what they said—but also with the terms of this Commission. I do not know whether, Mr. President, you have noticed this with regard to the additional evidence with reference to Mrs. Seymour's character, or even with reference to the evidence that was before the jury. I want to satisfy the Commission here beyond all question that no evidence has been given of any kind which would permit of anyone exercising judicial functions (I am not referring to counsel)—that is to say, that what has been done here has not displaced the verdict of the jury, or cast any doubt on it whatsoever, because it must be borne in mind that all the theories put forward by my learned friend, Mr. Pileher, or by my learned friend, Dr. Todd, apart altogether from the admissions made, have fallen to the ground. The question was put to my learned friends whether this was not a case of arsenical poisoning, but, as they were not in your position, they would not admit any such thing. When you see, therefore, that counsel are in such a position that they will not admit this, you must see it is possible that they may, in reply, set up some theory of which I have no notice whatsoever. In the beginning, when my learned friend said he would adduce that kind of evidence, it struck me that I would be perfectly justified in cross-examining upon it and commenting upon it. Supposing they had called these Cooks, or that that evidence had been supported. It was reasonable, of course, that they should put forth that evidence as to the purchase of poison by Mrs. Seymour, as they are trying to have Dean acquitted on the ground that there is evidence which will displace the case made by the Crown, or cast a doubt upon it. Then I said, which I would always say under such circumstances, "If you have that kind of evidence we can reply to it." I do not want to refer to any matter which would create the slightest acrimony between the counsel on the other side and the counsel on behalf of the Crown, but you know how it was that those depositions were brought from Narrandera, and you remember how my learned friend contradicted me on that matter. I was perfectly sure one way, and my learned friend was equally sure the other way. I saw clearly then that I must ask you if my learned friend should go into any matter which I have not dealt with to allow me to reply. But to avoid the necessity of doing so, I am going to refer to a few salient points in order that your attention may be drawn to them, and that I may not intentionally, if I reply reserve anything which I should now state. Apart altogether from the probabilities, apart from those circumstances which point and force you only to one conclusion, I want to point out one or two matters arising from the evidence. It will be noticed that Mrs. Dean, in connection with the matter of these groats, says "that about 13th January she and the mother had some groats at 9 in the morning; that both vomited and purged all day after it; that the prisoner was in the house at the time; that she had a pain in her head and stomach and cramps in her feet." Bear in mind that for the moment I am reading the doctor's evidence. You will see that the prisoner, in his own evidence, states, that "they had finished breakfast when he got home; that his wife and her mother both vomited and said they had eaten groats for breakfast; it is true what they say, except that I was not there at dinner." Do you not see, therefore, that there is the prisoner's own statement, on oath, because, of course, he had not the ingenuity or the skill of my learned friends, who now are attempting to put a complexion upon this case that it is impossible it can fairly bear. There, you see, the prisoner himself admits that there was vomiting and purging, both by Mrs. Dean and by her mother. I ask that a note be taken of what I have here pointed out. Then as to the beef-tea. Mrs. Dean, it will be noticed, says that on 12th January her mother brought her beef-tea, and that the prisoner was at home. She says, "It was bitter; I would not take it; my mother tasted it and took it away." The mother says, "About five days after that I prepared some beef-tea for Mrs. Dean; I put it on the stove early in the morning (8:30), and I seasoned it, and left it on the hob to cool till about 12; I seasoned it and tasted it, and it was what beef-tea ought to be; a little time after I strained it in a colander and put it in a basin, and when it was cool I took it up to my daughter; when it was cooling it was on the kitchen table; the prisoner was in the house that morning and about the house. I was ironing in a different room; in the dining-room. I took it up to her. She tasted it and could not drink it. Prisoner was sitting on the foot of the bed. She said she could not drink it; it was very bitter, and told me to taste it, and I did, and it was very bitter. I said it was not like that when I tasted it in the kitchen. My daughter asked prisoner to taste it. He took the spoon and put it to his lips, but I could not say whether he tasted it or not. He said it was all right." The prisoner says himself that the wife tasted the beef-tea and said it was bitter. He also says that he tasted it at Mrs. Seymour's request, and found it was all right, but a little salty, and that he asked Mrs. Seymour to keep it for his supper, but that she threw it away. As to the lemon-syrup, Mrs. Dean says, "On 25th February, I bought a bottle of lemon-syrup from Mrs. Adye," and that it was good then. I am not saying, for a moment, that this is absolutely for the Commission, but I think my learned friend should know that I am insisting upon this matter, so that if I reply I may not have to repeat it then. Mrs. Dean says, "I bought it from Mrs. Adye on 25th February," and that it was good then. Miss Adye says, "I tasted it on the evening of the 25th; it was quite right." Mrs. Dean says, "On 1st March last we had words about the baby." The prisoner admits this. Mrs. Dean says that "on 2nd March she took a few mouthfuls, and was sick after breakfast, that the syrup tasted bitter, and that she took it to Mrs. Adye at 2:30. Mrs. Walke also tasted it, putting putting the bottle to her lips. I left the bottle there, and went for my baby, and returned and got the bottle again, and took it to Mr. Smith, the chemist, and then to Mrs. Gail, a neighbour. Smith tasted it. I went to Dr. Newmarch with the bottle. He was not in, and I left the bottle with Mrs. Gail. It was just as I took it off the mantelpiece. I went home, and went to bed about 7:30, feeling ill, with terrible pain in my head." Mrs. Abye, at page 7, and Mrs. Walke, at page 8, say that they both tasted it on 2nd March, and that it had a bitter taste then. A very plausible witness was brought here, who told you he could not read or write. I believe he is either a Norwegian or a Dane. His evidence is proved by a number of circumstances to be a pure invention on the material points. Let it be borne in mind that these persons are brought forward, like that man, as perfectly impartial witnesses. In his case, of course, it turned out that he is a most intimate friend of Dean's, with whom he was living at Konnecke's for years and years, and, if I am not mistaken, he admitted that he had been up to the gaol to see him. I wish to point out that the prisoner contradicts him absolutely as to his statements. It is perfectly plain, on his evidence, that Mrs. Dean's evidence is true that she washed the baby in the room, whereas he (Hans Bach) swore he washed it; but now, in order to have a reason you see there is a pretence that the cocoa did not come until a late hour. Of course I frankly admit that when you have cogent unanswerable evidence upon the main matters of the case, the conclusion from which can only be the certain conclusion of a man's guilt, the fact that they can point out, "Oh, he was washing the baby," because they want to make out that at that time the child was still being suckled, goes for little. It is a matter of common knowledge that when you are investigating a matter of this kind, apart altogether from the people being partisans, or persons who would tell things which are not true, you do not always find, perhaps by reason of the weakness of the memory, and the non-existence of any cause for taking notice of any of these trifles, such things as whether a man brought cocoa at a certain hour, or whether he washed up a cup, or whether there were two chops; but that man had the wickedness to swear that those two chops came down with only two bits of meat on them, and that there was only a small bit of bread on the plate, as if there were any reason in the world for a man noticing anything of that kind. Could any man tell what he himself left upon a plate last Thursday, much less this man, who had no reason to notice such a thing. They wanted him to prove that he was in this woman's bedroom, and saw her suckling the child in bed, and you heard the statement he made about his washing the baby. Mrs. Dean swore that the baby was washed in the bedroom, and, fortunately for the ends of justice, the prisoner himself at the trial made the same statement. Of course, unless you can suppose they were passing the whole of the morning in washing and rewashing the baby, you will give no credence to Hans Bach's statements, and I certainly give no heed to my learned friend's doing so. I shall not fatigue you by going through the notes as to the different dates and the different statements, and how they bear upon the matter, because I have already submitted to you the statement that when you once get to the position that the learned advocate, Mr. Meagher, had to admit—that the woman was poisoned by arsenic—you are in a position to ask "Who did it?" "Did the mother poison the daughter, or did the daughter poison herself?" The thing is not likely. I admit, then, all these details are useless. I should not like, whatever my learned friend might say in a heated moment, anyone to think that I would make any statement to this Commission were I consciously aware of its inaccuracy. I stated to this Commission yesterday that one of the great dangers of what I may call an irregular inquiry of this nature, after a man has been tried in the ordinary way—because it is not pretended that the jury had any prejudice against him, or that there were any enemies of his upon the jury—and is found guilty, is, as is self-evident, looking at the kind of people into whose lives and dealings we are inquiring, that there is a great risk of evidence being fabricated absolutely, which has not the slightest foundation of any kind whatsoever. Of course I admit that there are other people who, in a state of doubt as to some matter, and swayed by sympathy with the prisoner, without any corrupt motive, ultimately satisfy themselves that a certain thing took place, and come and state it here; but that you may know well that I have not made that statement, apart from your own experience, without good grounds, let me point out to you one or two proofs of it in this case. If you find that here is a man who knows whether he is innocent or guilty, who has competent, skilful, and numerous advisers, and that the persons who are giving information to the professional advisers of this man, and coming forward as witnesses, are only desirous of releasing the prisoner, it is then similar to a case that occurred some time since in India, where a Judge, through the interpreter, said to the witness who was prevaricating and stating things which were false, "Do you know what will happen if things go on this way?" to which the witness replied, through the interpreter, "I know what will happen, my lord; our side will win." There are persons like this who are absolutely indifferent to truth, and I want the Commissioners to see that, although the other side would not give us a list of their witnesses, and that possibly with regard to that night watchman, and one or two other witnesses, I may not be able to put before you evidence to show that they are worthless persons, yet if you see that there has been any possibility of this being done, you will look, as I will invite you to look, at the evidence given by those persons, and compare it with the evidence which no one can doubt about Mrs. Dean, and you will see that it is a wicked invention. I will take as a test of this matter this: A lady came forward, well and respectably dressed, not a young woman, but the mother of a family, the wife of a person who has either a hotel or a public-house, not far from where this house of assignation is, apparently a respectable person—I refer to Mrs. Reynolds. If it is necessary to argue that that woman had deliberately come here to mislead you and to pervert the course of justice, and to state things which she knows to be false as well as she knows her own name, I admit I needlessly address you, because it is evident on the face of it that her statement from beginning to end is a wicked fabrication. It is not like a statement in which she could make a mistake. They call before you, as I say, a woman outwardly respectable, occupying a respectable station in life, and she tells you that Mrs. Dean came to her house, where there are several servants, her married daughter, her husband, and other people. When? Not in the night, but at about 10 or 11 in the day. She says it was Mrs. Dean. It is not like as if she looked at her and said, "I think that is the person." Then you might say, "She is quite mistaken;" but there is not outlet on that ground, because the photograph was put before her, and it had Mrs. Dean's name upon it; but I am not insisting upon that, because I quite admit that if the matter had stood there you might say, "The woman is a stupid woman, and is mistaken," but she swore to you, which makes it clear she was wilfully perjuring herself, that this woman who came in told her she was the wife of a captain of a North Shore steamer, and that he was away at night. I submit to you that you must see from what I am now going to point to you that every word she swore is a wicked invention.

President: It is not necessary.

Sir

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I was only going to pick out two or three persons. I want to show you that there are persons—of course I do not refer to any member of the Committee, or anyone who is in this room—who started this matter about Mrs. Seymour buying poison, persons who got up this pretence about poison being bought from Hall, which turned out to be absolutely false. These persons are confronting you with witnesses, the character of any one of whom you cannot touch without seeing the person before you, but you saw persons like Mrs. Sexton, who came in here well-dressed and apparently respectable, and her sister, who afterwards turned out to be persons who had been convicted of criminal offences. I am not alluding to their moral characters, against which, in fact, there appears to be nothing.

Mr. Pilcher: There was no conviction against her.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: There was a charge against her and her husband—stolen goods were traced to her possession.

President: You need not elaborate; we have heard them.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: Why I am referring to this at all is because I want you to see that when you have an inquiry of this kind you will get a number of persons who will try to aid in the release of the prisoner, not, I mean, by evidence, because I am not saying for a moment that people like Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, or other witness, would wilfully come here to state what is untrue. They may make a mistake, as the best of people often do; but I want to say that there is a large body of evidence given here by people of the criminal classes, and by people who are not of the criminal classes, like Mrs. Reynolds, who have set their minds to work to get this man out of this difficulty. What is the conclusion you would draw from that? Would an innocent man, or those in daily contact with him, bring this woman, Mrs. Reynolds, here to state things about his own wife, which, when you come to look at the dates and the circumstances, show that they are a wicked fabrication? The reason I am more particularly referring to it is because I admit that, with regard to one or two matters as to the character of Mrs. Dean, I have not the materials to absolutely prove the untruthfulness of their witnesses, but I can come very near to doing it. I hope you gentlemen of the Commission see that unless I point these things out and they are reported it will be inferred that these statements could not be truthfully made. I want them made in order that my learned friend can deal with them in his speech if he thinks fit. I hope the Commissioners see, no matter what the character of Mrs. Seymour is, and even if her daughter is as bad as it is falsely pretended she is, that would not touch the case in any way whatever, because if the daughter was ever so bad that is no reason why the mother should poison her, or she poison herself. Let my learned friend point out on what hypothesis it can be relevant to this matter. Even supposing it was right that Mrs. Dean did go to this assignation house, which we absolutely controvert, that would not help the matter. Once for all, let me deal with the matter of Mrs. Dean's character, and with my learned friend's assertion that Mrs. Seymour's house was a blind for a house of ill-fame. First of all, let me point out to you that we have called the clergyman who married Mrs. Dean, and you will remember the time that his evidence spread over, and the character which he gave of this girl. I went out of my way also to call the teacher of the school. I went out of my way to call men from the markets to show you that Mrs. Seymour, whoever may state to the contrary, had been carrying on a bona-fide business since she came to Riley-street, and that this tale about the house being a blind, as I pointed out a moment ago, is utterly false, and still more false and malicious is the pretence of that night watchman who pretended that he had actually seen that girl over and over again—I think he said a dozen of times—going into this brothel, and once, I think, he said she drove up to the door in a cab. You know I have called before you Mr. Withers, the landlord, who has been through the place any number of times. I have called before you neighbours, and further, their own witnesses, whom they called on other matters, to whom I put the question, "Will you not admit frankly that you do not know of, and have not heard anything against the character of this young woman, Miss Seymour?" and they admitted that they did not. It is useless my learned friend saying anything about a person stating what he did not see. That is false argument. If you have a great number of persons testifying, some of them must know something about this girl if her character was not good. You know, fortunately, the want of charity that exists in many people, particularly with regard to faults in women's characters; so that if there were any grounds at all for believing that a girl were of an improper character, or given to a loose life, they could prove it up to the hilt, and the fact, which has to be admitted, that they have caused the Telegraph Department to be ransacked over all this period, proves that if Mrs. Dean was what they assert, they could have found any number of telegrams to establish their assertions. It is admitted that Madam Rose's house is an assignation house, not a house in which women of ill-fame live. They saw that that being so, there would be numbers of telegrams declaring that she had appointments to meet gentlemen there, but they could not find one single telegram bearing on the subject. They only found one telegram, which I put in, dated the 6th March. It was sent by Mrs. Seymour to Mrs. Johnson, saying that her daughter was very ill. I shall yield to the suggestion that has been made by you, Mr. President, in this regard, and ask the Commissioners to look at the man, and the number of witnesses, and further, to look at Mrs. Dean herself. I do not know whether you have noticed the fact that if she were a perjurer, still more if she were the vile criminal they want to make her out, she never would have made the statements which she made in his favour in this very room, and she might have invented any number of things to clinch the matter. However, she did no such thing. My learned friend, whom I think you will admit is as perfect and as skilled in the art of cross-examination as any man at any bar, examined her, and she was further examined by the different members of the Commission, who saw her manner and demeanour here after she had been brought from the hospital. They asked even that Mrs. Seymour should not be allowed to communicate with her without a nurse being present, and that no one else on our side should be permitted to communicate with her. You must have seen from her manner and from her evidence while she was here that the mother has brought that girl up respectably, and that she has cared for her, and tended her with love and affection, and any one who thinks that because women lead an unchaste life, or are persons who have been guilty of shop-lifting, or of pick-pocketing, that they would take the lives of their own family, or even of any one, is utterly unfit to reason with. Therefore, as I am not going into it in detail, I shall beg of you before you frame your report in this matter to say if I am not correct in stating that it is absolutely impossible that it can be true that any of these accusations which have been made against this girl's character have the slightest foundation. I think I am right in saying that that man Hodgson (I think his name is), the night watchman, altogether overdid it when he stated he had actually seen Mrs. Dean go to Madame Rose's house dozens of times between the hours of 10 at night and 2 in the morning. I hope you will forgive me for pointing out,

Mr.

Mr. President, that at this very time the prisoner was paying his addresses to Mrs. Dean. The question was asked Mrs. Dean, the object of which she could not have known any more about than of pigmentation, as to when he used to go there to see her, and she said he used to go at all hours in the day, and even late at night. You will notice that was the very time he was paying her his addresses, and yet this night-watchman dares to swear that this woman, between the hours of 10 at night and 2 in the morning, frequently went to this house of assignation—that is to say, that she would run the risk of the man who was paying his addresses to her, and was about to marry her, coming there and finding her at a house of assignation. The husband himself admits that he knew nothing against her character. Do you not see that if this house was a resort of thieves, or if there was any truth in the statement that it was a blind, or anything of that nature, that this man Dean, who went there for over eight months, must have seen it, because he was paying his addresses to this girl whom he was going to make his wife, and was admitted to the house under all circumstances, and at any hour, and, therefore, would have been certain to meet the people there. I want you to see clearly, from the evidence of the old woman going down to the markets at 5 or 6 in the morning, either twice or three times a week, and taking these things to the shop, and from the number of people we have called who say they dealt with her, that she was earning an honest living. It may be that she had been moved with remorse at the life she had been living, and for the sake of the daughter had determined to lead a new life. This woman had gone through a course of life which would no doubt be incompatible altogether with the standard we would conceive in an ordinary home. I admit that it is quite incompatible with our standard of respectability for a woman to send her daughter even with a message to a house of assignation, or to allow girls from that house to come where her daughter is; but you must remember the kind of woman she is, and the standard she would fix. She would think nothing of going over or sending her daughter there with messages, in all probability, nor would she think anything of the girls coming over to her place and buying things in the shop (she kept sweets and other things of that kind in the shop); but to infer from that that the mother was giving her own daughter over to pollution would be a conclusion not only horrible, but that not a word worthy of credence in this case would justify anyone believing. If you look at the evidence of these witnesses who have pretended that her house was either a brothel or a resort of criminals, I submit there is nothing to satisfy you on either point; and as to the character of Mrs. Dean, I submit that it is shown to be the character of a respectable, well-behaved, and properly brought up young woman, shielded from wrong so far as a woman of the low standard of Mrs. Seymour would think it necessary to shield her. I do not wish to weary you by going through the evidence of the numerous witnesses who have been called to testify on this subject, particularly as if there was a word of truth in it Dean must have known it, and the two men who gave up her letters would also know it. No matter what the mother may be, no matter what the daughter may be, the poisoning by arsenic and strychnine is proved by the evidence of Mr. Hamlet, by the evidence of Dr. Newmarch, and by the evidence of Dr. Rennie, quite independently of their characters—that is to say, if this man Dean had known (I apologize to Mrs. Dean for ever mentioning such a thing) that she was a well-known prostitute, and had been the associate of her mother in her criminal life, and he had chosen to marry her, that would not have touched this matter of the poisoning at all. It would only throw a thoughtless man off the scent. It was well known that the Attorney-General opened the case too strongly against both the mother and daughter in ignorance. My learned friend read two reports here, Nos. 6 and 7, and you will see that No. 8, the one qualifying the matter, which my learned friend did not read, is after the trial; so that the only information the Attorney-General had then is the information in reports Nos. 6 and 7, and I submit to you there has been nothing given in this case that is credible, that is stronger, than the statements there. I am not saying the Attorney-General or Mr. Wade read these reports at all. I was saying there was information given to the Attorney-General before the trial, which shows why he opened the case too strongly against both of them, not knowing the details of the matter. To show that the jury knew that Mrs. Seymour was a woman of bad character, and that anything she said would require confirmation from a purer source, you will find that she says on page 10 of her cross-examination, "I was convicted and served a sentence in Melbourne thirty years ago. I never kept an improper house. I once took charge of the house (that is Madame Rose's), and there was nobody there. I have taken notes, but did not know whom they were to. I took them to the lady of the house." I quite admit, of course, that the extent of her conviction was not known then, but that is of no consequence. It is not a matter of degree at all. It shows she was of the criminal classes. It was shown that she knew Madame Rose and her house, and had taken charge of it, and had taken things over there. That was known at the trial as well as it is known here, except in regard to the extent of her convictions. I now want to say one word about the fortune telling. I suppose I will have my learned friend's assent, when I say that as to what Madame Von states took place, you will not believe a word of it, because it has been shown that she herself is a person so notorious that it would be useless to speak about her. I was going to ask about her being known to the police, and I was stopped by somebody. She is a person who is as notorious as any person in the country. Mr. Tindall was asked whether she was known to the police, and he said she was. If the Commissioners desire to do so at any time, they can make whatever inquiries they like about her. There are some persons so notorious that no evidence about them is required. I quite admit that my learned friend is entitled to say what he has said, although it has no bearing upon the question of whether Dean poisoned his wife, but I admit that there is the fact of her going to a fortune-teller. As to that, you must remember that unfortunately these advertisements appear in numbers in the most respectable daily papers. You see them day after day. Ignorant people, of the class of Mrs. Dean, do not know that these persons are not what they represent themselves to be. Madame Von, she advertised herself as, whereas she says her name is Mrs. Parker. Mrs. Dean told you that before she was married she had visited other fortune tellers. These people would not pay their money for advertisements if they were not successful, which you can see they are from the number of advertisements which appear in the papers. Do you not remember a trial, which I am certain my learned friend will not object to my referring to, where one of those fortune tellers who was carrying on a most flourishing business said she was a palmist. She was then asked, "What is a palmist?" to which she replied, "A palmist is a palmist." The question "What is a palmist?" was then repeated, and she answered, "A palmist is a phrenologist." Then the question was put to her, "What is a phrenologist?" her answer to which was, "I do not know what a phrenologist is." There are numbers of people of this class. Mrs. Parker said herself in this room that there is some man in the "Australia" carrying on the same business. You can see from her letters that Mrs. Dean was of a poetic strain, and even writes poetry. She says that before she was married she had seen

these advertisements, and had gone to fortune-tellers. On the occasion on which she saw Mrs. Parker she was passing by and saw some card in the window and went in. I admit that from our point of view, or from the point of view of any sensible or sane person, anyone who goes into a place to try and obtain from such a person a knowledge which even science itself cannot give must be very weak-minded. But what bearing has this upon this matter? If you have got a mountain of proof that the woman was poisoned, and that she was poisoned in the way stated, what bearing has that upon the case? You might say, "It is a curious thing that she should go there at all; why did she go?" It must be remembered that none of us are putting her forward as a Joan of Arc, or as a person of an unsophisticated character, or of absolutely unblemished descent. You see what her mother is. Mrs. Dean admits that she has been often before to fortune-tellers. Under these circumstances she goes to the fortune-teller, and she says positively that the woman also came to her house. She says that the statements which appeared in Truth were absolutely false, and that the woman admitted that they were, and said that she had never made such statements at all. Mrs. Dean admits that she went to the fortune-teller, and she told you what she asked her, and that she came to the conclusion that it was useless, and went away. My learned friend reminds me that of course if she were the awful criminal they have tried to make her out to be, she would have been anxious to go to the fortune-teller. That is absurd. It is only one of the consequences of the kind of education that young people receive in this Colony, under the dangerous and false system of secular education in vogue, that we have young people growing up without any curb upon them of any kind whatsoever, who instead of going to people who might guide them and give them good advice, see these advertisements that Madame So-and-so, the well-known phrenologist, or the renowned clairvoyant, who has appeared before this great person or that crowned head, is now in Sydney, and will tell you what happened, is going to happen, or ought to happen (as if they had control over the whole universe), and as a result they go to see them. They are generally silly people who go to fortune-tellers; some people, however, go to be amused, or because they have the money to spend. The business must pay, therefore there must be thousands of people, whose characters no one could lay a finger on, who go stupidly to these supposed distinguished persons to find out what the cards will tell them. They go to these supposed distinguished persons, some of whom, as in the present case, it afterwards turns out are illiterate and of the vilest character. The only thing that can be said about Mrs. Dean having visited this woman is that she was silly and weak in doing so. She was told by people, "These fortune-tellers have prophesied certain things," and she believed it, and went to see this woman, and had this conversation with her, which has been admitted; but its bearing upon this matter is entirely beyond my comprehension. I wish now to say a few words with regard to the name "Rita." I desire to point out something which has not been noticed. I want to show you how you may be utterly misled. Do you, gentlemen, remember, that when Mrs. Dean came here she came straight from the hospital? I now appeal to the members of the Commission. I make no assertion, because I do not know. I only assume it is possible that after having gone through a most critical, lengthy, and serious illness, like that through which she has passed, and having gone through the ordeal of having to appear against her husband at the Police Court, and at the Darlinghurst Court, and having been interviewed by numbers of people, and examined by doctors, and then brought here from the hospital, that if she had used the word "Rita," which, perhaps, some of you members of the Commission know, is a well-known name—being that of a fiction writer—she would not remember allowing herself to be called "Rita," or that she had anything to do with this "Rita," who some washerwoman says used to be in the house.

President: It bears upon Mrs. Thompson's evidence. Mrs. Thompson says she did washing for a woman whose clothing was marked "Rita," and that she was a beautiful creature. The question is whether or not she was telling the truth.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: Not even to please anyone will I state that I have any reason to cast an imputation of any kind upon that woman's testimony. I have not one reason to justify my saying one word against Mrs. Thompson, even though she is in a humble position in life. But what I want to draw your attention to is that you are being hoodwinked by that man who came here yesterday. I admit from her manner that Mrs. Thompson believed what she stated to be true. It is quite different with that dentist who came here yesterday, and made a statement that an occurrence took place three years ago, and, mark you, he said that before he had come here he had seen his book. You know that he had in his pocket an extract from his book, and it was only on my saying, "Where is your book? Go and fetch it," that he said he had an extract in his pocket. He stated to you it took place three years ago. This turned out afterwards to be utterly false, because it was five and a half years ago that it took place.

Mr. Pilcher: What he said was, "I have a copy of an extract in reference to 'Rita,' and that on the face of it is 1890."

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I abandon the case if you believe that. Whatever time you take it I will prove there is not a word of truth in that statement. I appeal to the Commissioners as to whether I am right in this matter. He was examined, and the evidence will show that he stated this took place three years ago. I then asked him about his book. I want the Commissioners to assent to this matter about Miss Seymour—that when this man's book was referred to it turned out that the visit was made with a Mr. Wright. I appeal to every one of you, no matter what may be said by anybody, to recall the matter to your minds, and look at the notes of the evidence in order to satisfy yourselves as to the lengths they will go to try and get this man out of gaol. They go and hunt up this dentist, and he came here and stated that it was about three years ago that this woman "Rita" came there—not that I attach any importance to it. I wish, however, to satisfy your minds that I have not thoughtlessly spoken about the inconsiderate way witnesses will come here and make statements. This man then said his pocket-book was not here. Then he said he had this extract. The only entry, as one may see, referring to it was the entry about this Miss Rita. Then I admit he produced that extract. When I got that extract I pointed out that it was more than five years and five months ago that this took place. It was in February, 1890, nearly five and a half years ago, according to that entry. Then his book was produced, and in his book there was exactly the same as that. Then someone asked him—whom I do not remember—if he had any entry about Miss Seymour, and he then turned to an entry from which it appeared that it was not on the same occasion; it was about a week before, and it was an entry of what she admitted before he was called. I want to prove the truthfulness of Mrs. Dean wherever it can be tested. It is proved not only by her husband's own evidence but by that of Dr. Newmarch. It is quite natural that she should forget for a moment about the name of "Rita." She said in giving her evidence, before this dentist was called, called, that she had been there, and that she went there with Mr. Wright, and it turned out that the entry of the week or so before was the entry where it said "to the care of Mr. Wright." I want to show you that it is nearly five and a half years ago. She then would be, as a number of witnesses have shown, a most simple child, of about 14 or 15 years of age, not even up to the level of the knowledge or intelligence of children of her age. He wanted to make it three years ago, whereas it was five years and five months ago. I am only pointing out that when she came here and said that she did not know this name "Rita," and that she had never used it, she forgot about it for the moment.

President: There is nothing in that.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: With regard to the matter of "Rita" being a person who lived in Mrs. Seymour's house. This is incorrect. Let me put the question: Suppose there was an actress living in the house, or any person of that character (there might have been, we do not know whether there was or not), would not those two young men who have been alluded to, or the man who was paying his addresses to Miss Seymour, have known it? It appears to me it is evident on the face of it that Vera Reece was the person who went to the dentist. She may have been playing under the name of "Rita." When she was there you will notice the name was not "Rita," but Miss Rita, and it may be that that actress was staying in this house for a day or a month—we do not know how long—but this girl would not know her character. How would she know it? This actress might have been on a visit. This girl has never said that no person stayed in the house. Supposing that the mother had allowed some actress of easy virtue, who came from Melbourne to stay there (which I admit is not improbable), how can you infer from that that the girl would know her character? When Mrs. Dean came from the hospital to this room she said the moment she saw those two letters, "Yes; I did write them." One of them, you will remember, was a poem. Is it not reasonable—when any man reflects that that girl is not like a trained lawyer—to suppose that she would have forgotten altogether about this word "Rita," because in that very letter in which she used the word "Rita" she signed "May Seymour." Let me take the bull by the horns. Supposing, for a moment, that she had remembered about "Rita," and for some reason denied it and told you an untruth about it (I will give the other side the benefit of the supposition, which, however, I do not admit), and that "Rita" was an actress of loose character who stayed in the house, and supposing that Mr. Wright was having illicit connection with her, will anybody who is quite sane tell me what bearing this would have on the case. I quite admit that it would have a bearing if there was no proof outside that this arsenic had passed through the kidneys (to use Mr. Hamlet's expression), and supposing there was no trace of arsenic found anywhere, and you had merely her word that sometime ago her mother had told her there was arsenic found; do you not see that whether she told an untruth or not the fact of the existence of the arsenic is proved by the analytical chemist, Mr. Hamlet? The disease she has been suffering from since is peripheral neuritis—paralysis of the hands and feet. Nobody will suppose for a moment that she brought that on purposely. No one will doubt that this matter about "Rita" is utterly irrelevant to the inquiry. I will put it to anybody in this room that if you have a great number of people engaged ferreting out the history of a person from early childhood is it not always possible to find out something, especially if it is not an educated person, which will, no doubt, be outside our experience or the experience of any respectable people;—that is to say, for instance, about her going to a fortune-teller, or using the word "Rita." I will ask the doctors on the Commission to consider whether I am not right in supposing that it is quite possible that after a very long lapse of time Mrs. Dean's memory about things of this kind may have passed away for a moment;—you must remember, of course, what she has gone through; the state in which she was brought here, and the numerous examinations to which she has been subjected. She is shown this letter, and she forgets it for a moment, and then says afterwards "I did write that piece of poetry," and so on. With reference to her not having at once charged her husband with trying to poison her, you will recollect that a most experienced doctor who heard these statements, and who saw her symptoms of vomiting and purging, had never for a moment thought it was a case of poisoning. Do you not, therefore, see that although the thought might go through the mind of this young wife, and although she might be suspicious, she would be most unwilling to come to the conclusion that this man was, in fact, trying to poison her? If you will look through her evidence you will see nothing that would justify anybody in saying that she knew her husband was poisoning her, and she still went on taking what he was giving her. You can see from her evidence, and from all of her statements, that she was perplexed at what was taking place, but that she could not believe it possible that he was attempting to poison her. The doctor never told her that it was poison at all. I will make the admission that, of course, if the existence of arsenic in her system depended upon her evidence alone, the fact that she did not charge her husband would be most potent, but when you have the evidence here of doctors and others outside her evidence altogether, absolutely demonstrative of arsenical poisoning, all these matters of how she should have acted, or whether she ought not to have done this or that, are utterly irrelevant. This is the point: Has she taken arsenic? You have that proved outside of her evidence altogether by most undeniable testimony, and that she was suffering from acute arsenical poisoning. Whether she did what she ought to do, or whether she went to the police or not, is of no consequence if you come to the conclusion that it was a case of arsenical poisoning. I think the words she used were that she thought things were wrong, but that she could not bring herself to believe he would do it. Then, unfortunately, it turns out on undeniable evidence that this man was properly put on his trial, and that a jury, against whom there is no imputation at all, found him guilty. A Royal Commission has now been appointed, and from the facts my learned friend stated he was going to give, and from the promises he made, it was thought that a kind of evidence would be adduced that would make your hair stand on your head, and that the moment it was given Dean would be released. I want it to be known that I do not take the view in any sense whatever that the evidence of his having, when he was 13 or 14 years of age, been sent to Wagga Gaol for three months, or the fact of this unfortunate matter about the man who was, or ought to have been his step-father, or the fact that his brother was on the "Vernon," carries you one inch towards the conclusion that he had anything to do with this poisoning. Why I wish to have that known is because this agitation arose under the impression that he was a man of absolutely untarnished life and of the purest character. That was what was put forward. Now, as that was not true, it seemed to the Crown desirable, although it was not known at the trial, that you should know what the facts are in reference to that, though we admit that this is not proof in any way whatsoever of his having administered this poison. There is one little matter which may have been overlooked that I want to insist upon. I, therefore, ask the Commissioners' attention to it before I leave this subject. It is this: You must know of a very horrible crime which has lately been committed in England, and on which a conviction has followed. You must know that when you come to try a man for an offence which is proved by the evidence, the fact that he has been living apparently respectably, and that there has been nothing previously known against him, together with your favourable impression as to his character are utterly useless, because you do not know until he is convicted what his real character is. Nobody in the world ever suspected or dreamt, for instance, that this notorious criminal, who is now suffering imprisonment for his unnatural offences in England, had been leading that life.

the

Mr. Pilcher: A good many did.

President: It has been suspected for years.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: You must know, Mr. President, of innumerable cases outside that in which men were convicted, against whose characters nothing had ever been shown except the particular charges made against them.

President: I think Eugene Aram is the best instance.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: Yes. I do not know whether any of the Commissioners noticed this, or whether my learned friend was here when this took place. Do you remember one of the gentlemen who came forward conscientiously to give Dean a high character stating that he said to Dean in his admiration for him, "Go on like that." And he spoke in his favour and mentioned what he referred to. He said that this Dean, who is now convicted of this offence, told him that he had sent up the insurance premium to his mother, but that it had not reached her in time and the place was burned down; that his mother was living in a tent, and that he was then taking steps to put up a place for her to live in. There you have got a key to that man's character. There is not one word of truth in what he said to that gentleman. I have shown you from Mr. Konnecke's evidence that at that time he was living with him. He is living there with a respectable man, with a respectable and attractive family—living with Mr. Konnecke as a son, and they admitted to me that they never heard one word in their lives of his mother's place being burnt down; that they never heard one word in their lives about the insurance premium; and that they never heard one word in their lives of his mother living in a tent. Do you not see, therefore, that the statement which was made to that gentleman was false. I pointed it out at the time I examined Mr. Konnecke. That you must see is a pure invention. It is only when a man is being tried for a particular offence that you want to consider his character so very carefully. That was the reason I examined Mr. Konnecke. Dean was living with them as a son for years, and they admit they never heard a word of it. Miss Konnecke spoke about the child being in such perfect health and strength. You have heard the evidence since then of the doctor, who told us what state the child was in, and that it was emaciated. I regret to have taken up your time, gentlemen, so long, but am sorry that within the limited scope of my ability I have not found it possible to curtail my remarks any more than I have done. Before concluding I would like to point out, which I hope you will not think it impertinent on my part to do, that there are two modes of dealing with this Commission—that is to say, you may report merely what your opinion is, and annex the evidence; or you may take the course, which I respectfully admit without anticipating the result you will do, of stating whether she was poisoned by arsenic, which they deny—

President: I think it will be better to let us exercise our own judgment as to the Report.

SIR JULIAN SALOMONS: I beg your pardon. I will not say another word on the subject. I only hope that my learned friend will not from any reason whatsoever refrain from pointing out everything which I may have overlooked, or which I may not have referred to, that he thinks he ought to bring before the Commission. I further hope that my learned friend's speech may be taken down in shorthand, and that you may have a copy of it, in order that at your leisure you may see what are the grounds upon which my learned friend bases his case. I now leave the matter with perfect confidence in the hands of the Commissioners.

THURSDAY, 13 JUNE, 1895.

[The Commission met in the Board Room, Chief Secretary's Office, at 2:30 p.m.]

Present:—

FRANCIS EDWARD ROGERS, Esq., Q.C. (PRESIDENT).

PHILIP SYDNEY JONES, Esq., M.D. | FREDERIC NORTON MANNING, Esq., M.D.

The Hon. Sir Julian Salomons, Kt., Q.C., M.L.C., and Mr. C. G. Wadd appeared on behalf of the Crown; and the Hon. Charles Edward Pilcher, Q.C., M.L.C., and Dr. R. H. Todd, instructed by Messrs. Crick and Meagher, appeared for George Dean.

MR. PILCHER'S ADDRESS.

MR. President and Gentlemen of the Commission,—I have listened with very great care and attention to the very long and exhaustive address of my learned friend which occupied him four and a half hours. Of course it may be that I am prejudiced, because I am here to attempt to show that this man should be released from imprisonment, or it may be my want of appreciation, or my want of capacity to understand him; but I fail to see one single reason adduced by my learned friend why this man Dean should be detained in gaol. I will deal presently with Sir Julian Salomon's reasons. He made what I conceived to be a most impassioned speech in appealing to report that Dean ought to be detained in prison. In the early part of my learned friend's remarks—I have to allude to this, because it becomes important in other matters I will mention presently—he spoke rather sarcastically, as I thought, of the public, I do not know with what object, and even further than that he tried to make out that the Commission came into existence from several different causes, which he mentioned. It appears to me, however, that the Commission came into existence upon the demand of the public, and that that demand arose from a feeling which, it is strange to say, distinguishes the British race from every other race in the whole world. The British race, wherever they are in all parts of the world, follow with the greatest care the administration of all public departments, including that of the Department of Justice, and have insisted, at all hazards, hazards, that paramount above all other considerations is the liberty of the subject. The public have taken the view, rightly or wrongly, that in this case, for some reason or other, either because in their opinion the jury made a mistake or perhaps because a verdict was given which was not satisfactory to them, that justice has not been done, and they have adopted a course almost unprecedented in the annals of the administration of justice in Her Majesty's dominions, and compelled the Government to grant a Royal Commission. To their eternal credit be it said, that the public of Sydney took that stand, rightly or wrongly. This is not the mere ebullition of feeling which we sometimes see, and what I take the liberty of calling spurious sympathy with crime, that perhaps honest, well-disposed people sometimes give utterance to when a person is condemned to death. It is not that kind of feeling at all. This is a feeling that has emanated from a very large section of the community, perhaps an overwhelming majority; a feeling that has been actuated, rightly or wrongly, by a belief that justice has not been, and that feeling, to their eternal credit be it said, has resulted in their compelling the Government to have a calm, deliberate, and dispassionate inquiry into this case. I admit the Government, so far as the Commission is concerned, have done a very wise and sensible thing in some respects. They have given you powers which appear to me, as the President contended, to be unlimited. I do not wish in any way to draw your attention to what you know full well. They have given you power to take evidence which in any way may throw light, or which may vary, explain, or bear upon the evidence given in the case, and upon that evidence they have authorised you to report whether, in your opinion, Dean is to be further imprisoned or not. I admit that as far as the Commission is concerned, a larger, more comprehensive, or more full Commission probably could not have been issued, and in that respect I have no cause to complain. It may be—possibly it is so—that in the interests of the administration of justice this Commission ought never to have sat. It may be that the Government ought to have adopted a different course, that there was certain evidence then present to their minds, and that they ought to have said that, considering certain circumstances connected with the trial, it was in the interests of the public, and in the interests of the administration of justice, that whether the man be guilty or not, he should not suffer the penalty. It may be that they would have adopted a wiser course, had they remembered what we were taught in our infancy, that the administration of justice must be beyond question, and that it is of the utmost importance—never to be lost sight of—in the interests of the public that nine guilty men should escape rather than that one innocent man should suffer. It may be that, if the Government had acted on this principle, and had taken into consideration certain circumstances, public feeling would have been allayed, and real substantial justice done, and the administration of justice never have been sullied or interfered with. However, they have not only not done that, they have referred the matter to you, to state whether in your opinion the prisoner should not be detained in prison or set at liberty. I wish to say a few words to you before coming to the case, with reference to a remark that I made during the course of the inquiry. I am sure, gentlemen, you remember it. I referred to the public, and it is impressed upon my mind because you, Mr. President, I thought from your manner at the time, conceived that I was saying something offensive. I never had anything further from my mind in my life than being offensive to the Commission. What struck me was this, and it strikes me now, and I am perfectly certain I am stating it on sure grounds—that your Report must go to the Government; that the Government must adopt it or reject it, whether you report in favour of Dean or against him, and that act of the Government, like every other act of theirs, will be not only open to criticism, but the severest criticism, by the people, and may be an act for which they will be turned out of office, just as they might have been turned out of office if they had not granted the Commission. It is one of those public acts for which they are amenable to the public, and for that act they can say to the Government, and will say probably, "We either approve of your endorsing the decision of the Commission or disapprove of it;" and in order to show the importance of my reference to the Government in the matter, they may call the Government to account to the extent of saying, "We have nothing to do with the Commission, but you, the Government, are responsible for adopting that decision whatever it is. If we do not approve of it we can table a vote of censure against you, and you must go out of office." Therefore the matter I refer to is of the utmost importance. That was the train of thought that was passing through my mind, and it occurred to me to be a matter of paramount importance—it is a position that cannot be gainsaid. I explain this now, because I do not want to have it supposed that, in the slightest degree, I was attempting to make any reflection upon or to say anything disrespectful of the Commission. My learned friend in dealing with this case seems to me, in the heat of the moment, to have forgotten what I remember to have learned when I was studying the A B C of law. He has pointedly used an argument which cannot be denied, because my learned friend used it in this connection. He said, "Even supposing that Mrs. Seymour is as bad as my learned friend paints her to be;—even supposing that Mary Seymour is as bad as my learned friend represents her to be,—how does that affect the case, if you think the woman was suffering from arsenical poisoning?" And my learned friend over and over again impressed it upon you and said, "If you think the woman was suffering from arsenical poisoning that is an end of the case." My early recollection seems to bring back to my mind—perhaps I am so old I have forgotten—that in a criminal case, a rather material thing to prove is that the prisoner committed the crime alleged to be committed. You may prove the commission of the crime, but that is nothing. You may prove that a criminal offence has been committed—that is nothing. You must connect the prisoner with it, otherwise the case absolutely fails, and that is where my learned friend lost sight of what the bulk of our evidence is directed to. I am sure that matter must be quite clear to the Commission. It only requires to be stated, to be established that it is not sufficient to prove that the girl was suffering from arsenical poisoning. You must go further, and prove that the prisoner was the person who administered it; otherwise, if it was proved one hundred times over that she was suffering from arsenical poisoning, it proves no guilt on his part. Taking the case as it appeared at the trial, my learned friend over and over again admitted—though at one time he tried to draw a distinction between the trial and the Commission—that she had taken arsenical poison, and he complimented my friend, Mr. Meagher, for making the admission. It was admitted at the trial, he said, that she had taken arsenical poison. Then, at another time, he tried to make out that there was a difference between the trial and the Commission here, because, he said, "We have proved absolutely here that he had or could get poison," and then he referred to this matter of the Weyntous, to which I will come presently. Further than that, my learned friend said—I invite your attention, gentlemen, particularly to this—"If it were established here that the girl Mary, or the mother, Mrs. Seymour, had bought poison, I admit that the case for the Crown is displaced."

Sir Julian Solomon: I never said that.

Mr.

Mr. PILCHER: My note exactly of your words is this: "If you show that Mrs. Dean or Mrs. Seymour had been buying poison, then I admit that you ought to find that the case made out at the trial is displaced." My learned friend is far too good a lawyer not to know that the very strong part of a case of poisoning is to prove the possession of poison, in some way or other, by the person accused. My learned friend admits it by saying, "If in point of fact you can prove that Mary Dean bought the poison, or that Mrs. Seymour bought the poison, then I admit that you ought to find that the case made at the trial is displaced." The inference, from what he says, is that they are guilty. Why? Because they bought the poison. I retort upon my learned friend, "Is the prisoner to be convicted without evidence that he bought or used the poison, or without evidence that he ever had poison in his possession?" I retort that on my learned friend, and he admits—and the reasonable inference from his admission is—that if it were proved that Mary Dean bought poison, or that Mrs. Seymour bought poison, then he would admit that Dean ought not to be held guilty, and one or other of these women ought to be. I retort that, and I say that is all very well for Mrs. Dean and Mrs. Seymour, and I may tell my friend that I admit that his law is right; but how is Dean to be convicted without any evidence that he had poison, or bought poison, or that one atom of poison was ever found in his possession? On this point I may take the liberty of drawing your attention to a matter which I think strongly corroborates my learned friend's opinion in this matter of Mrs. Dean and Mrs. Seymour. I daresay you will remember the Makin case. In that particular case evidence was admitted of other acts committed by Mrs. Makin which the Court afterwards held on a reserved case were rightly admitted. In that case one of the presiding Judges, who has gained a high reputation as a criminal lawyer, Mr. Justice Windeyer, communicated with one of the greatest living criminal authorities in the world, Mr. Justice Hawkins, and that gentleman wrote a letter to Mr. Justice Windeyer in reply. Any lawyer who reads that letter will appreciate it at once. It is held to be a good, sound statement of law. It has been considered to be so important that it has been bound up in our Law Reports, in the Appendix to the Makin case. It is not a very long letter, and I will take the liberty of drawing your attention to it, and its importance, for the reason which will appear when I read it:—

Dear Mr. Justice Windeyer,

5, Tilney-street, Park Lane, London, W., 25th May, 1893.

I have read with great care and interest your judgment and that of your colleagues in the case of the Makins, for murder. Of the soundness of the decision it would be impossible for a lawyer to entertain a shadow of a doubt. So far as there is a difference of opinion as to when or under what circumstances it is permissible on a criminal trial to give evidence of other transactions, or of crimes committed by the accused person similar to that under investigation, I entirely concur in the opinion expressed by you. The admissibility of such evidence must of necessity depend upon its relevancy to the issue before the jury, and this relevancy must necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. I have often heard this class of evidence described as an exception to the well-established rule that the evidence must be confined to the issue. I cannot look upon it as an exception at all, my own opinion being that such evidence, in strict accordance with this rule, is never admissible unless it be relevant to the issue, and is always admissible if it be so relevant. When I speak of evidence relevant to the issue, I mean that which, if believed by the jury, of itself establishes or forms a material element or link in the chain of evidence upon which they are to arrive at their conclusion of guilt or innocence. I illustrate this by supposing an indictment for murder, with a plea of not guilty. On this pleading, the sole issue raised on the record is whether the accused murdered the person alleged to have been slain. To support that issue three main facts must be established:—(1) That the alleged deceased was slain (2) by the accused (3) feloniously. And these essential elements in a charge of murder are, in most cases, established by an infinite variety of other facts which may be proved either by direct or circumstantial evidence. Evidence materially tending to the proof of any of such facts seems to me to be relevant to the issue.

To state a golden rule, which would infallibly define in every case, no matter how complicated, what evidence should be admitted as relevant and what rejected as not being so, is beyond the power of any human being. With the guiding principle, however, that, unless the evidence be material and relevant to the proof of some fact forming part of the chain of evidence, it cannot legally be admitted; it must be left to the intelligence, good sense, and legal acumen of the Judge trying the case to determine—as it is his province to do—whether the evidence does or does not fall within the principle. Of course no sensible person would contend that an accused person could be prejudiced on his trial by mere proof that he had been previously guilty of one or more crimes of a similar nature. The proof of his previous convictions could not per se be received as evidence against him. They would prove no facts which could assist in fixing him with the guilt of any crime other than those stated in the convictions. But many cases have occurred in which the facts and circumstances attending the commission by accused persons of other crimes have afforded very cogent evidence in support of subsequent charges. It would be idle in such circumstances to object to the admissibility of the evidence upon the ground that it might have a tendency to prove previous guilt. I dissent from the suggestion that such evidence of prior transactions involving criminality for other offences can only be admitted in corroboration of a prima facie case, which a Judge would be justified in leaving to a jury if it stood alone. The admissibility of evidence in itself material and relevant to the inquiry can never be dependent upon whether it is used to corroborate evidence already given or is offered as an independent piece of evidence.

Suppose a case in which A was charged with the murder of B by strychnine, in which the evidence adduced raised a very strong suspicion that A was guilty, but not such a case as ought to be or could be properly submitted to a jury for want of proof of the possession of strychnine by the prisoner. Would it not be irresistible evidence to prove such possession if it could be shown that about the time of the death of B the prisoner had administered a drug similar in appearance to strychnine to two or three other persons who had died immediately afterwards under undoubted and unquestioned symptoms of death by that poison. Could anybody reasonably doubt that this would be evidence of a very cogent character and very relevant to the issue? And could anybody be found to contend that it ought, nevertheless, to be rejected until the missing link had been supplied from other sources?

I do not know what I am reported to have said in Neill Cream's case, nor can I be held responsible for the language assigned to me in a report which was not submitted to me. In any view the evidence was undoubtedly admissible, and I never heard any lawyer dissent from the view I took. I delivered no judgment beyond announcing my decision for a reason appreciated by the prisoner's very able and learned counsel, Mr. Geoghegan and Mr. Warburton, viz., that if I had commented upon the facts for the purpose of pointing out its relevancy my comments would have been calculated seriously to prejudice the prisoner. My reasons I could give you if you desire them, but I should have first to refer to my notes of the trial. As to the period in the trial at which the evidence becomes admissible, I can only say it seems to me to be the moment its relevancy is apparent to the Judge. Several curious cases have been tried before me in which such evidence has been admitted, and one in which I rejected it. In a case of R. v. Wheeler, tried before me at Chelmsford in 1880, the prisoner was charged with the murder of the deceased by shooting him in the head with a gun. The prisoner was in the act of committing a burglary in the house of the deceased, a farmer, near St. Albans, Herts. The deceased, from his bedroom, looked out of the window, was fired at, and fell dead. The gun with which he was shot was found in a shrubbery close by. The gun had been stolen from a neighbouring farm-house, which had been burglariously entered a short time previously. In each of the houses so broken into was found an iron implement which had been used to force an entrance. These two implements had been stolen at a still earlier period from a blacksmith's shop, and that robbery was proved to have been committed by the accused man. Through the medium of these two latter robberies evidence was afforded, by the finding of one of the implements in the house from whence the gun had been stolen, which justified the jury in thinking that the prisoner stole the gun, and the presence of the other of the implements in the house of the deceased afforded evidence that it was the prisoner who was committing the burglary, and used the gun when the deceased was shot. The accused was found guilty and hanged. Without the evidence of the two previous crimes the gun could never have been traced to the prisoner's possession. Who could be found to say this evidence was not relevant to the issue, or that it ought not to have been received until other evidence had established a prima facie case of murder.

In another case of murder by a woman named Berry of her daughter, tried before me at Liverpool, five or six years ago, it was proposed to prove that the prisoner had caused the death of her mother shortly before, also by poison, but a different poison from that with which the daughter's life was destroyed. I rejected the evidence, because none of the circumstances attendant upon the mother's death had the least connection with the death of the daughter. The poisons were different, the prisoner's action was different, and therefore I thought the circumstances of the mother's death were not relevant evidence to prove the murder of the daughter. Other evidence, however, satisfied the jury of the guilt of the accused, and she was executed.

But I must not weary you by writing more on the subject. Relevancy to the issue is, in my opinion, all that is required to make evidence—not otherwise objectionable—admissible.

Doubts will, of course, occasionally arise in considering questions of relevancy, but these are only difficulties which constantly require solution in the course of a trial involving the consideration of complicated facts, but such solution will become easy under a steady, practical application of the cardinal principle in the law of evidence, which I have, I am afraid, at too great length discussed. For this I must pray you to forgive me.

I am here in Paris spending my Whitsun vacation without a book or a note to refer to. I will not, therefore, attempt to discuss in detail the authorities to which the judgments refer.

Believe me, dear Mr. Justice Windeyer, most truly and faithfully yours,

H. HAWKINS.

I invite your particular attention, gentlemen, to this:—"Suppose a case in which A was charged with the murder of B by strychnine, in which the evidence adduced raised a very strong suspicion that A was guilty, but not such a case as ought to be or could be properly submitted to a jury for want of proof of the possession of strychnine by the prisoner." There is a statement coming from a gentleman who, I say advisedly, is perhaps the greatest criminal lawyer in the world. I ask you, Mr. President, as a gentleman who has had experience in criminal cases, to read it carefully. I will undertake to say that this letter from the beginning to the end bears the impress of what we might expect, on the face of it, from such a man. It is not written haphazard, but with a full knowledge of what he is talking about. He says:—

Would it not be irresistible evidence to prove such possession if it could be shown that about the time of the death of B the prisoner had administered a drug similar in appearance to strychnine to two or three other persons who had died immediately afterwards under undoubted and unquestioned symptoms of death by that poison. Could anybody reasonably doubt that this would be evidence of a very cogent character, and very relevant to the issue; and could anybody be found to contend that it ought nevertheless to be rejected until the missing link had been supplied from other sources.

Then he says, "I do not know what I may be reported to have said in Neill Cream's case." The Neill Cream case was the poisoning case analogous to Jack the Ripper's case. Jack the Ripper, as you know, was the man who conceived the idea of cutting up all the abandoned women, and Neill Cream poisoned them. The course adopted was to sleep with a woman one night, to make some remark about her skin, meet her next day and give her poisoned pills, that would kill her. This led to great excitement. At last one of the girls he slept with appointed to meet him on the embankment at the bottom of Northumberland Avenue. She took the precaution of taking a male friend with her. She met Cream under the lamp. He gave her the pills, she pretended to swallow them, but threw them behind her. Cream was arrested, and evidence was given by this girl in proof of the charge made against him of killing the girl he did previous to meeting this girl, and when he was arrested in his possession was found a large number of pills that would have caused death if administered. That is the Neill Cream case, and that is the case which Mr. Justice Hawkins refers to here. Mr. Justice Hawkins then says: "Nor can I be held responsible for the language assigned to me in a report which was not submitted to me. In any view the evidence was undoubtedly admissible, and I never heard any lawyer dissent from the view I took." In one of those cases the fact that the man attempted to murder this girl, coupled with the fact that he had the pills in his possession, was strong evidence that he murdered the particular woman he was accused of murdering. Then Mr. Justice Hawkins refers to the counsel who conducted the case. Then he refers to another case, R. v. Wheeler. That was a case of burglary resulting in murder, in which the man was found on the premises, and the burglarious instruments were also found on the premises. It was proved that the prisoner had stolen the gun from another house in the neighbourhood; it was further proved he had stolen the jemmy from a blacksmith's shop, and these two pieces of evidence were brought to show that he was the man who fired the gun and shot this man, and he was hung upon it. It seems to me that case thore of Mr. Justice Hawkins—"Suppose a case in which A was charged with the murder of B by strychnine, in which the evidence adduced raised a very strong suspicion that A was guilty, but not such a case as ought to be or could be properly submitted to a jury for want of proof of the possession of strychnine by the prisoner"—is a distinct, clear, and unmistakable enunciation of the law in a matter in which that eminent judge had his attention particularly directed to the question of the admissibility of certain evidence, in a case which was not sub judice, but which the Court had then decided, not by counsel but by a judge holding a high position in this Colony. At all events it was a case upon which Judge Windeyer wished to confer, with reference to the admissibility of certain evidence as to certain poisons, with as high an authority as he could find, and he chose Mr. Justice Hawkins, because he is admitted, and fairly admitted, to be the most able criminal lawyer in England.

President: That is put as a supposititious case. It says, "Suppose he was convicted."

Mr. PILCHER: I beg your pardon. It says, "Suppose a case in which A was charged with the murder of B by strychnine."

President: That is in this particular case. Take this case:—Supposing a person was absolutely paralysed, and could not get himself anything, and that I am attending on that person and giving him food and drink, and that that person was found to be suffering from strychnine poison, do you mean to say then that although you cannot prove the possession of the strychnine there would be no case?

Mr. PILCHER: I say unless you find that the person who is supposed to give it had possession of it, or bought it from other people.

President: I am putting the case. Supposing a person is paralysed and cannot attend to himself, and that that person dies from strychnine poisoning, do you mean to say there is no case against the only person in the house?

Mr. PILCHER: Extreme cases make bad law.

President: I do not want it to go forward to the public that in all cases of poisoning you have to prove the possession of the poison in the alleged murderer.

Mr. PILCHER: Nobody knows better than you that extreme cases make bad law. There are exceptions, of course, to every rule. There may be cases so cogent and impossible to explain in any other way that they would without evidence be sufficient; but certainly on that statement, even the case you put would.

would not be a case to go to a jury. In the case of the cripple you mention, he must be a man locked up in a room so that nobody could get at him but the prisoner. You must exclude the bare possibility of anyone else being able to get at him. If you put that case that would be an extreme case.

President: Supposing that under the circumstances I have mentioned I have a patient, and it is impossible for him to feed himself, or do anything, and that I supply him with all food and drink, and that that man afterwards is found to be poisoned with strychnine?

Mr. PILCHER: All of us know perfectly well of cases of poisoning that occur on stations in this country, where by accident a quantity of strychnine gets into the flour bags. Supposing I am on a station, and I have a person in my charge who is an imbecile. I have him in a room locked up, and have his food and feed him with the flour, and he dies. There you see at once you must exclude the possibility of the arsenic or the strychnine being put in intentionally. Does not that show cogently the force of what Mr. Justice Hawkins says here? We know that on stations in this country there have been wholesale poisonings by pure accident, where there was not a shadow of doubt that there was no criminality. I am not now dealing with extreme cases. Of course, when I express the opinion about extreme cases, I do not care whether I am right or wrong. It is sufficient for me to apply it to this case. In the case which was tried here, of which you have the whole of the evidence before you, the criminality of the prisoner depended on the evidence of Mary Dean and Mrs. Seymour. I am assuming now that she had poison, because every day there were other people who could have given it to her. She was a free agent. She could get it from other people, who might either accidentally or intentionally give it to her. Whether she got it out of that bottle at all, or whether it was Dean who put it there, or somebody else, or whether she got it out of that bottle by accident, are all possible cases. In the case that was tried at Darlinghurst I submit that that remark of Mr. Justice Hawkins applies exactly; because there are one hundred different possibilities which are not answered, explained, or negatived, which would account for Mrs. Dean having had the poison without Dean giving it to her. Therefore I say that the case I have just cited as applied to this case is good law; and we have his authority for it. We may fairly assume that, when Mr. Justice Windeyer, who is considered a very eminent lawyer, allows a private letter to him to be published in the Law Reports, he has a very high opinion of it. Any lawyer would say that that letter of Mr. Justice Hawkins is a clear, distinct, and marked enunciation of the law. If that is so, it would apply to the case at Darlinghurst. It may be that the Judge's attention was not drawn to it, and that, had this dictum of such an authority as Mr. Justice Hawkins been before him, he might have held that there was no case to go to the Jury. You know, Mr. President, that I can speak to you on this subject, because you have had an unusual experience in prosecutions. You know cases have occurred in which, if the Judge's attention had been drawn to certain matters, the case would not have gone to the Jury at all. How often has it happened in your own personal experience that, if the defence had been conducted on other lines, it would have led to different results? That being so, I apply that to what my learned friend said in reference to these two women. He said distinctly, "If you prove that Mrs. Dean or Mrs. Seymour had bought any of this poison, I admit that you ought to find the case made at the trial was displaced." Then I show that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If it required that evidence to show Mrs. Seymour poisoned her daughter, if it required that evidence to show that Mrs. Dean took the poison intentionally, if it required that evidence to show that somebody administered the poison, then, I say, it requires the same evidence to show that Dean did it. Then my learned friend says, in order to get out of the difficulty, "Now we have got the evidence." To show the difficult position my learned friend is placed in in this appeal to you to keep Dean in prison, he does not seem to think one atom about other peoples' characters. The main object of the Crown seems to be to keep Dean in prison at all hazards. Anybody who ventures to come forward and say anything inconsistent with that theory is a perjurer, liar, and a disreputable character of the deepest dye. I will take his treatment of Mr. and Mrs. Weynton. He says, "Now we have the missing link; now we have got evidence that Dean had the poison." To begin with, I will point out that the evidence shows he could not have got it there at any rate. I will further show that if Dean could have got it, Mrs. Seymour could have got it, and Mary Dean or anybody could have got it. Then I will show that the poison which was in that bottle was pink; and the only evidence of anything that was seen by Mary Dean was that it was supposed to have been white. Now, what becomes of these double-dyed perjurers—the Weynton's?

President: The poison that was buried by the Weyntons, and that had been in their shed, was strychnine. That was pink, you must remember, in the powder. As to the evidence of poisoning by strychnine, that is very faint indeed.

Mr. PILCHER: I am dealing with my learned friend's arguments. He said this morning, "Now we are in a different position to that in which we were at the trial, because now we can show either that Dean got it, or the possibility of his getting it." He went the length of saying that these Weyntons knew he got it, and that he got it from them or from their bottle. He also took the liberty of saying that the Weyntons were not only perjurers, but perjurers of the deepest dye; and he gave his reason for it. I make this comment because, I say, my learned friend seems to think that this man Dean, at all hazards, must be kept in gaol, and that anybody who dares to say he should not be kept in gaol is a perjurer and a villain of the deepest dye. That is neither reason, common sense, nor truth. I will establish to demonstration that it is not truth to begin with. What is the evidence? It is all very well for counsel to come here and use all sorts of arguments not supported by evidence, and invite the Commission, or any other tribunal, to adopt a certain course upon their arguments. I am perfectly certain no such attempt will succeed here. I am certain that when an argument is used by any counsel the Commission will say, "Where is the evidence? That is what we are here to act upon. We are not a Commission here to form our opinions upon counsels' speeches, but upon evidence adduced." I may be prejudiced, but Mrs. Weynton appeared to me to be a most respectable lady. Mr. Weynton appeared to me to be an irritable man, but I could not see anything in his demeanour to indicate, in any shape or form, that he was lying. I admit that they did at the time a stupid thing in burying the poison, and they have admitted it. Nervous people like these, when they get wind that a charge of poisoning is to be brought against a person living in the next house, naturally think to themselves, "We don't want to be dragged into this." What they have done was a foolish thing to do, and they have admitted it. But beyond that, can any reasonable man, or any person who has any sense of justice about him at all, say that there was anything in Mr. or Mrs. Weynton's conduct, or the evidence they gave, to indicate that they were not telling the truth? Yet my learned friend chooses, for the purpose of keeping Dean in gaol, to stamp them as double-dyed double-dyed perjurers—not single-dyed, but double-dyed perjurers—worse than ordinary perjurers. Then actually my learned friend thought fit this morning to comment upon Mrs. Weynton's crime. What does Mrs. Weynton say? Mrs. Weynton, who gave her evidence in the most clear and distinct way, says this:—"The strychnine was obtained from Elliott Brothers in February, 1894. It was used for the dog the same night. Sent Johnson (that is the bridge man) some strychnine in the end of May, 1894." The name was given and the date was given. Why did not the Crown, if they doubted that, call Johnson? Do you suppose for one moment that every witness that was mentioned, and every little detail that was given here, has not been followed by the police—by the bloodhounds of the law—and that they do not know that it is true? How dare my learned friend, then, make an attack like this upon respectable people, when he does not take the trouble to call Johnson? That was in May. Then she says, "The strychnine was removed from the shelf in the yard to the wardrobe in the bedroom at the end of June, 1894, and not touched again until 5th March. The Deans did not come until August." There is the distinct, clear, sworn evidence. What my learned friend, who is not upon his oath, chooses to suggest, surmise, or ask you to act upon is not evidence.

Sir Julian Salomons: I put in Mrs. Weynton's statements, and her son's evidence is in.

President: We cannot see anything in the Weynton matter.

Mr. PILCHER: My contention is that my learned friend made this one of the critical points in his address to you—that the inquiry before you had not the defects, in this respect, that were present in the case before the Judge. He said, "Now we have the missing link. These Weynton's knew that Dean had obtained it from their bottle, and that is why they are double-dyed perjurers." My learned friend made that argument to-day. I say that if I am right, as demonstrably I am right (and now the President intimates that that matter of the Weynton's does not weigh with the Commission), then his point fails that they have established anything in this Commission upon that point, which is a material one, with reference to the possession of poison. I admit, for instance, as a lawyer, that if my learned friend had shown here, in this Commission, that Dean did obtain that poison.

President: I say the evidence of the Weyntons has no weight in this way—that the strychnine was in the shed outside, and anybody could have got it there—not only the prisoner but other people, therefore it is a sort of thing that does not help us in any way.

Mr. PILCHER: I go further than that. It was sworn by those people that some of that stuff was sent to Johnson; that it was removed to her bedroom in June; and that Dean did not come there till August. I had your sanction for saying that the Crown has got to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, every material fact in the case. That being so, who on this evidence can say where he got it? Where is there a tittle of evidence to show he got it there? Every other point my learned friend makes about this fails. I say no more on the subject.

President: There is no evidence that Dean got it more than anybody else.

Mr. PILCHER: I say there is no evidence that Dean got it. I might have gone and got it, it is perfectly true; and, if I had happened to give her a cup of tea, and she was poisoned with arsenical poison, you might just as well say I was as guilty as he. Any one of you gentlemen might have got it. But the point I make (I want to impress this upon the Court) is—that every material matter must be established by the Crown beyond reasonable doubt; and if they do not establish that Dean in fact got poison, it is not sufficient to say he might have got it; because I admit he might have got it at Elliott's or any chemist's, just as I might have got it. But Mrs. Seymour, Mrs. Dean, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Gail, or any one of those people who gave her food, might have got it at the chemist's; but did they get it? You see, therefore, the importance of that question: "Did they get it?" Where is the evidence of it? They have to establish it, but they have signally failed. It is for that reason that I have adopted my learned friend's words with reference to the mother and the daughter, and I admit that, when he gave utterance to them, he stated what is true law—that that evidence would at once tell against Mrs. Seymour if it was brought home to her; or, if it was brought home to Mary Dean, it would convict her of the crime of trying to take her own life. If it had been proved against Dean it would have made a very strong case—just as strong as against the mother; but it was not proved against him at all, or against any of them. My learned friend made some reference to what he said was the case that it was understood was to be made. I do not know what he understood; I know what I understood. I know how the Commission was granted. I know the gentleman upon whose statement it was granted, and I know what the statement was; but I think that is immaterial. I am quite willing that the Commission should inquire exactly what Mr. Goddard stated to Mr. Reid, upon which he granted the Commission. You can see it in the Hansard reports. It appears to me that all this matter which my learned friend took fully an hour to discuss is entirely immaterial. It is utterly immaterial how the Commission came about, or what representations were made. I have already pointed out the very large powers the Government have given you, and directed your attention to what they want you to inquire into. My learned friend says that he understood me to make some reference at the commencement of the inquiry as to what we contemplated proving. I distinctly stated what I contemplated proving. I state, as I have already said over and over again, that my honest individual view of the case is that the strongest factor in bringing about this Commission was the statement that evidence would be brought before it which was not adduced at the trial as to the character of the persons upon whose evidence the guilt or otherwise of the prisoner depended. I also said it might be that we would give evidence of arsenic-eating. You know perfectly well that in cases of this sort some statements turn out to be unreliable, and that you cannot get evidence to support them. That information in reference to the arsenic eating did not come from Dean at all, as my learned friend thought, nor did it come from Crick and Meagher. It came from the Committee; therefore, any argument founded upon what Dean knows, or must have known, falls to the ground, because the information did not come to me in that shape or form. First of all, I invite your attention to a contrast between the evidence given at the trial about these two women, and the evidence given now. In the evidence at the trial there was not a word disparaging to Mary Dean. The evidence at the trial was (I think I may say it without contradiction) that Mrs. Seymour had been convicted thirty years ago, and served a sentence, with reference to some jacket that she would not say where she got it; and further than that she had been on some messages for Madame Rose, and had taken charge of that establishment when no one was there and it was an empty house. That is the whole of the evidence against her at the trial. I can quite understand that, under these circumstances, if any comment were made by counsel to the jury upon the character of a woman like Mrs. Seymour, the Judge would naturally say, "It seems hard to rake up against this woman a conviction of thirty years ago. It might have been a mistake. It might have been that she was improperly convicted."

convicted about some jacket, because she would not tell who gave it to her. As she said, "She took the blame upon herself." That is her explanation at the trial. I can quite understand a Judge commenting severely upon the views of any counsel who ventured to say anything against the character of the woman in the way of seriously criticising her. I can quite understand any Judge saying—and probably the jury would agree with him—that this evidence would not throw any discredit in any way whatever upon this woman. The jury would probably think that it was a matter which they ought not to take into consideration, and, if they did not take it into consideration, nobody could find fault with them. Any of you gentlemen might take the same view. If you had to prove the reliability of the evidence of anybody who had been convicted thirty years ago, and against whom there was nothing else, and who apparently had been living a respectable life since, you might say, "I will not allow that to weigh against her character, because she has been living respectably since. It may have been a slip in her life, and I will discard this evidence against her character altogether, and accept her evidence as that of a reliable woman." And in doing that anybody would say you were right. But now what is the evidence? First of all I take Mrs. Seymour. It is important to take Mrs. Seymour, not because of Mrs. Seymour, but because of Mary; and in order that I may enlist your attention to this matter, I want to show you what I am going to demonstrate. I am going to make out that that woman, Mrs. Seymour, was as bad as bad could be from the time she landed in Hobart as a convict; that she was as bad as bad could be in Melbourne; that she was as bad as bad could be in Sydney; and that this little child who, according to the certificate put in, is the offspring of two convicts (not that she is responsible for that, nor is she responsible for the fact that her father and mother were not married), and from the time of her birth up to womanhood was reared in an atmosphere of infamy of the deepest dye. I will demonstrate if that be so. It is only for that reason I will bother with Mrs. Seymour. If that be so, I have no hesitation in saying that the miracles mentioned in the Bible are nothing if she has turned out to be the character she is painted to be. The Crown calls her an unimpeachable witness of the highest character. If she has come through that ordeal, educated or not, and is worthy of the character that my learned friend gave her yesterday, then she is the biggest living marvel the world has ever seen since Adam. You know I am right in what I have said. I will demonstrate it. I won't bother about Melbourne, because that is all admitted. The little girl was there. She commenced her younger days with Mrs. Seymour, who was admittedly living a most wicked criminal life, consorting with thieves, rogues, and vagabonds of every description. Is it possible that even that little girl in her youngest infancy would have failed to receive some impressions from her low surroundings? It is impossible. I do not rest my arguments upon that, because it would have been all changed if she had been caught at that age and disciplined; but where there are people around her of that low type of humanity, what can you expect? She came here about six or seven years ago. What was the evidence as to the character of the house kept by Mrs. Seymour? We have the evidence of two people living in Sydney whose characters are unassailed—Kneen and Edgar—who spoke of the house as a place frequented by girls of improper habits. They speak of Mrs. Seymour and Mary. They speak of the house in which the girl has been reared as a disreputable place, and the resort of women of bad character. We had detectives in the Police Force of New South Wales who have been called here, and who swore that they have watched Mrs. Seymour's house for Melbourne criminals, for whom it was a resort, and they gave the names of a number. They further swore that one woman, who was unmarried, was confined in her house. They further swore that there was one man out on bail who was wanted by the police, and that they went there to arrest him, but he was too ill, and he died there. Can there be a doubt, on the evidence of those detectives, that characters of that class lived there. Now we go to old Jones, who was dug up from the asylum. Jones admits that there were three immoral girls living there. It is true that he speaks of the shop as being quite right, and gives Mrs. Seymour a very good character, and states that she was a highly respectable woman. I am much obliged to him for the information. He then says, however, "There were three immoral girls living there while I was there." He further said, although Mrs. Seymour was very respectable, that she was living with Millet. Then I put to him a question which I dare say you will recall. You will remember that I drew the distinction in examining him between living and lodging there; and I said, "Was Millet living with Mrs. Seymour—I do not mean lodging?" And he said, "Yes." Then I asked him if he was not living with Mrs. Seymour; and he said, "No; I was lodging with her." So he quite understood the distinction, and he said that this highly respectable woman was living with this man Millet, who was a criminal, and, if my memory serves me right, he was the very man who was out on bail and died in her house. Here is a criminal living in the house, with whom she was living. It may be said that Jones is a disreputable man—so are many of the witnesses that have been called here; but we did not call Jones. He was called at the instigation of the Crown, I think, by the Commission. I won't be certain of that; at any rate he was examined by the Commission first. It may be said that Jones is a disreputable man; he probably is. No doubt he is. There are many others whom we have had to call who are disreputable. But the Commission must remember that the class of people we have to call to speak about Mrs. Seymour must of necessity be disreputable. Those are the people with whom she associated. You cannot, for instance, prove that evidence by calling respectable people. You cannot prove that a brothel is a brothel without calling upon the whores who go there—unless you hit upon the men who go there—and possibly they would not care for the exposure. Necessarily this is the class of witnesses that has been called. I will give you a list now of the persons we have called who have proved up to the hilt that this woman's premises in Riley-street were nothing more nor less than a resort of thieves and a brothel: that was the house this little girl was reared in. Bolton, Edgar, Mrs. Fairweather, Mrs. Hughes, Hodgson, Jones, Kneen, Detective Roche, Saville, Sunners, Mrs. Esther Thompson, ex-Detective Williams, Mary Burns, and Mrs. Sexton, all give evidence on this point. If some of them had stood alone and were not corroborated, I admit you might say, "I do not care to act upon their evidence." I admit that; but, on the other hand, I think you know that people of most disreputable character may and do often speak the truth; and when you have to determine whether you must accept their evidence or not, you will look to find whether it is corroborated. And if you do, you will see that the same story is told by people to whom we can give credence. I admit you are right at first in saying, "I am not going to accept your evidence"; but, when you find that evidence built up by persons of known reputation who give a similar story, you will say, "Why should we discredit their evidence?" Bear in mind, too, that the difficulty in this case is to get respectable witnesses, because Mrs. Seymour did not consort with respectable people; or, if she did, she was far too cunning to give herself away. She was not a woman to go into the street and make a common bawd of herself, or make herself indecent or low in the streets, or do things that some women would would do. She would never drive her business if she did that. She would never have been allowed in such a highly respectable place as Madame Rose's if she did that. Therefore, people meeting her out of doors or in the streets would say she was a highly respectable woman, and that they never saw anything wrong with her. My learned friend might call everybody in the room to give a similar account, and they would say they never saw anything wrong with her. He might call you, gentlemen of the Commission, and your evidence would be just as cogent evidence as that of the witnesses he did call. Respectable people, when they came in contact with her, did not see anything wrong. How often have you come across women of the utmost respectability in appearance, most respectable in their demeanour, conduct, and all that, not only in Sydney, but in other cities of the world. Take Piccadilly—some of us have been there. Walk along Piccadilly in the evening, and you will see ladies dressed in perfect taste, whose manners and everything about them are perfect. You could not tell them from the most virtuous women in the land, and yet you know what they are. If I asked you if you had seen anything wrong about one of those women, you would say, "I have seen her in Piccadilly hundreds of times." "Anything wrong with her?" "No." Therefore evidence of that kind is absolutely valueless. Take the evidence of that old woman Esther Thompson. I may take the liberty of saying she is a woman quite above the ordinary stamp of witnesses of her class. She is a very intelligent woman, and, apparently, a very respectable woman, and she gave her evidence of the character of this house, and said that, amongst other things, this little girl Mary, on one occasion when somebody came over from Madame Rose's for Rita (this little girl was not a little girl then, she was a good big girl), called to Rita up the stairs, and Rita came down and went over. That is very important evidence as to another part of the case which I am coming to by-and-bye. Is Mrs. Esther Thompson telling the truth? Is she a witness of truth? If she is, how can it be accounted for in any way whatever that this matter has entirely gone out of this girl's memory? Although she was living in her mother's house she does not know about it. Mrs. Thompson swears she called her Rita. That is the beautiful girl she saw behind the counter on one occasion. Then there is Mrs. Fairweather's evidence. Mrs. Fairweather says that Mary went round for girls for Madame Rose's. You will remember the evidence of an old gentleman who lived next door to Madame Rose's in Riley-street, who told you about this little girl—quite a little thing; probably she would not know anything wrong; perhaps not, or, if she did, at any rate one would not like to stretch a point against her; but I will prove the life she led, and that, when she got older, she must have known, seen, and appreciated what was going on. I admit that when she was a little thing playing with this little girl she was probably a well-conducted child. No doubt at that time, whatever the evidence may be, she was a pure girl. What did he say? He said that she was complaining about being called to be sent round to Crown-street for some girl. Mr. Heath, a wood and coal merchant, was called as a witness. He was asked, "Q. Do you remember when she was playing in your yard that she was called to go to Madame Rose's?"—A. Yes; she has been called several times. There was a window in Madame Rose's house from which they used to call her. Q. Do you remember, on any of those occasions, Mary making any reply?—A. No, I do not remember. Q. Never at "Pine Cottage"?—A. No, I do not remember. Q. Do you remember her saying anything, at any time, what she was wanted for, or having to go anywhere?—A. Yes; on one occasion she said that she supposed she would have to go round to "Pine Cottage", or 'It is a message for 'Pine Cottage.'" The two 'Pine Cottages' have been proved to be brothels, and she is called from Madame Rose's—one brothel—and sent with a message to another brothel. "Q. Cannot you remember what else she said?"—A. No, I do not. Q. Did he say anything about gentlemen then?—A. No. Q. Or about someone having come?—A. No." What I said was—and I am speaking from memory—that she complained about being sent these messages for girls. It turned out, in point of fact, that she was called from a brothel—Madame Rose's—and sent to a brothel—"Pine Cottage." That is what she said, and my recollection is that she did not like to be taken from her play for that purpose; and that it was to fetch girls round is a very reasonable inference.

President: It may be a reasonable inference, but I do not think there is any need to go into these details.

Mr. PILCHER: I quite admit at once that it is unreasonable to go into too much detail. What I want to really show you is the scheme of my argument, so that, when you are reading the evidence, you will see that I am right; because, remember, I have said I will show to demonstration that this house kept by Mrs. Seymour, in Riley-street, was a brothel and a resort of thieves and criminals of different classes. There is that very significant thing about old Mrs. Thompson when she saw those men coming in very late at night (she depends for her living upon washing). I will give you a list of the witnesses who can prove that. I admit some of them are more respectable than others. In regard to some of them I admit that if they stood alone you would rightly say, "I will not accept their evidence"; but when you get reliable evidence of the same character, and you have the history of the woman, is it not an irresistible conclusion that the house she kept in Sydney was what these witnesses describe it to have been? We have evidence further that people used to take girls there. We have also evidence that for some time men kept girls in this small house of four or five rooms. In addition we have evidence from another witness—Mrs. Fairweather—that Mary used to be sent round for girls, and that Mary said so. I think she says that Mary said she went round for girls when cabs came to Madame Rose's. Then there is the general evidence of the character of Mrs. Seymour's house. I am assuming that I am right in saying that that was the character of the class of people that I have described, and the evidence proves it to demonstration, bearing in mind the woman's previous character. She was a criminal of the deepest dye from the time she left England, and the police report from Melbourne about her described her character. Can there be any doubt that those people are speaking the truth when they say that that is the kind of house she kept? Take the night-watchman. His evidence is exactly the same. You may depend upon it that the police have done all that lay in their power to unearth that night-watchman's history, and prove that he was a bad character. You may depend upon it that if they could have found the smallest speck upon his character they would have laid it bare here. I am not alluding to Mrs. Seymour, because her character is as black as black can be. What other evidence is there about Mary, bearing in mind that Mary was reared in this hot-bed of iniquity? I appeal to you. Suppose I came to one of you to-day, and said, "Here is a little girl about 17 years of age—a nice little girl—and I want you to get her a situation. She is above the position of a servant. She can sing and play on the piano, and so on, and has some education." Would you think of taking her as a nursery governess? You would naturally ask, "Where has she been?" and I would tell you exactly the kind of house she was reared in. I say, would one of you dare to put that girl girl to nurse your children? Why not? Because you would not believe that miracles happen in these days. If I told you she was a girl of whom the clergyman gave a good character; that she was a Sunday-school girl, that she was French educated, and could read and write and play on the piano, and that she had all the qualifications for a nursery governess to look after young children, would any of you dare to let loose that character with your children, when I told you her history from the time she was born until she came to the house? You would say, "No, Mr. Pilcher." Am I romancing? Would any of you dare to let a girl like that loose in your nursery, though you knew nothing wrong about her, and all I tell you is in her favour, except in regard to the mother and the house she lived in up to the time she came to your house? Can you doubt, unless the days of miracles have gone by, that that girl must have acquired the qualifications that are necessary for such a disreputable, wretched habitation as that in which she was reared? If I establish that, what follows? Several witnesses have given evidence as to her character—some respectable—some, I admit, not so respectable; and I admit that if they stood alone, you would say, "I should prefer to have your evidence corroborated." But it is corroborated. A number of these witnesses proved this girl's character. Again, of course, I point out to you the difficulty there is in a case of this sort in getting evidence of a high class. You cannot have it. I admit there is a difficulty. I admit that to that extent my evidence is entitled to be severely considered; and it is for that reason that I am taking the trouble to point out to you the atmosphere she was reared in; and, when you find persons coming forward then to say, "I saw that girl in Madame Rose's," like the night-watchman, for instance, against whom nothing can be said.

Sir Julian Salomons: I beg your pardon. I have said a great deal against him.

Mr. PILCHER: You have romanced—no more; but immediately I tackled you on your romancing there is not a word in the evidence to support you. I pointed out before that this Commission, as I read it, is for the purpose of receiving additional evidence. Upon that the Commissioners are to report, not upon the statements of counsel, which may be absolutely unfounded. I admit the truth of my friend's reference to me, that if I say anything unfounded it should be disregarded, and properly so; on the other hand, I fairly claim that, when you come to look at the evidence and report upon it, what I say must have due weight given to it. My learned friend fought to keep Dean in gaol; and with all the vigilance and ability of a counsel in a civil case. Now I take the night-watchman, because he gives a circumstantial reason why he remembers what he says. His evidence is: "Many times when I went for pay, one of my employers being Mrs. Seymour, I was referred, by girls at Mrs. Seymour's, over to Madame Rose's." And he said that, on some occasions (I forget how often—it is immaterial, because Mary says she was never inside) she has taken messages there. He says: "I have gone to the door, and Mary has opened it, and Mary has called her mother, and her mother has paid me." If that is true, Mary is not telling the truth when she says she was never there; because she says, "I have been on messages there, but have never gone in." If that is true, then, I say, it is exactly what you would expect to find from her training; and you must remember that it is not necessary for you to show that Mary was immoral in the sense of having gone with men, or anything of that sort. It is not necessary to say that; but I do say this, without fear of contradiction, that a woman who has been reared in an atmosphere of crime, and who has resorted to a notorious house of prostitution, either for business or pleasure, even though she be a virgin the day she is married, is a woman whose statements ought to be received with the greatest care and caution. I say advisedly that it would be doing the greatest violence to the administration of justice if any man were to be deprived of his liberty on evidence such as that, corroborated, too, by her mother, who lived in a sink of iniquity from the time she came here—some forty years ago or so—a sink of iniquity, reeking with every kind of criminality that is known to the law. However, this night-watchman is not the only witness as to Mrs. Dean's character. There are a number of other witnesses. There are Edgar, Florrie Clifford (I believe she is a lady whose evidence, perhaps, standing alone, one would expect some corroboration of), Mrs. Fairweather, Mrs. Hughes, Hodgson, Jones, Kneen, Konnecke, Palmer, Sunners, Thompson, Newcombe, and Waddoubs. Madame Von I leave for the present. I will just mention Mr. Newcombe, a clerk in the employ of the Asylums Branch of the Government service. There is nothing against him. The question was asked him: "Q. Do you remember ever seeing her on any occasion leaving Madame Rose's house?—A. Yes, once. Q. How long ago would that be?—A. Either the latter end of 1893 or 1894—I could not say which. Q. What circumstances impressed it on your memory—what time was it you saw her coming out?—A. It was 7 o'clock in the morning. Q. What day of the week?—A. Sunday. Q. Did she come out of the entrance that is opposite your place? A. There are two entrances—the door and the gate. Q. Which entrance did she come out of?—A. Out of the door. Q. (Sir Julian Salomons.) In what street?—A. Collins-street." That is Mr. Newcombe's evidence. He is a respectable witness. I will not mention the details. There are Mr. Kneen, the tailor, and several other respectable witnesses; but what I say is that if you find the evidence of persons of whom you would say, "I do not like their characters," corroborated by the evidence of persons whose story you ought to believe, then it follows that the persons who, apart from the corroboration, you would not believe, you do believe; and, that being so, I say there is abundant evidence made out here that Mary is not the paragon of perfection she is painted to be by my learned friend, or that she professes to be. But, when we find that this young girl is born in a hothouse of crime; that she is the result of crime, and is reared in crime; that her associates are criminals—not only criminals but prostitutes; that her mother is a prostitute, in the sense that she lives with a man to whom she is not married, although she may not be a prostitute in the ordinary sense. When you find that this girl is reared in that state of life, is it a monstrous thing, or a strange thing, to suppose that this girl, who knows that her mother is a habitué of that house of prostitution—Madame Rose's—that she goes there and takes care of it, and that she assists in the management of it both when people are there and when people are not there, I say,—is it a strange thing to suppose that this young girl, when she knows all that, would naturally think that a line of life that was not too bad for her mother was not too bad for her? If ever there was conduct on the part of a woman that would conduce to the degradation or the destruction of the morals of any young girl under her control or charge, then, I say, that Mrs. Seymour, although she is a clever woman, and appreciates the advantages of education, and most probably gave them to her daughter, if she had laid herself out studiously to demoralise that little girl, and bring her up to nothing more than a prostitute and a degraded creature, could not have conducted herself in a manner or led a life more conducive to that end. Just fancy a mother who is wrapt up in her daughter, as we are told Mrs. Seymour is—whose whole soul is wrapt up in her child, living on one side of the street with this virtuous little girl, and going and taking the management of this house of prostitutes! Are we mad? Have we lost our senses? Are we drivelling idiots that an argument of that kind can be used to us? That is what Mrs. Seymour did.

That

That is what we are told, and yet we are actually asked to believe that this woman is wrapt up in the character of her child. If she had been wrapt up in her she could have cut adrift from her criminal pursuits, and she could have cut adrift from her criminal friends. She might, years and years ago, when this girl was a little child, have made up her mind to lead a virtuous and respectable life for the future for the sake of her child, and all to her credit it would have been; but the life she did lead, and persisted in leading, was, that although she was on one side of the street with her little daughter, she was an habitual attendant in a house of prostitution over the road, when people were there, and when people were not there. How can it be said, any argument to the contrary, that that is not trifling with one's intelligence and ordinary common sense? Why, even the brute creation would resent such a suggestion as that, let alone intelligent men. One witness here speaks of Mrs. Seymour as suggesting to Mrs. Hughes—which exactly tallies with the evidence of Mrs. Seymour herself—that if she could only get a few girls to run in the same way she could make a good thing out of it. This is the amiable mother who brings up this virtuous girl. I say that the evidence proves to demonstration, first of all that the mother is bad; and next, that the girl is not quite so bad, because she is younger. She may never be so bad; let us hope she will not be. The evidence proves, however, that she has been brought up in an atmosphere that must demand of anyone who has to consider whether her evidence is reliable that it be received with great caution. As I stated in the commencement of this case, it appears to me that the strongest matter for consideration is the evidence as to the characters of these two women, because whether or not that girl was poisoned with arsenic the question remains, who administered it? Now I contrast the characters of these two women with that of Dean. A charge is made by two people against one; they allege it; he denies it. I say to you, "What is the character of these two people?" You say, "I admit they are very questionable characters." "What is the character of this man who is charged with this crime?" "As far as I can tell he is a man who has got a reputation that anybody might be proud of." Does anyone mean to say that that is not a consideration that is given full effect to every day in the courts of justice? Does anyone doubt that if this evidence which was given here during the sittings of this Commission about these two women had been given to the jury in that case at Darlinghurst that they would have hesitated or even have left the box without acquitting him on that issue alone? My learned friend referred over and over again to the jurymen having consulted together for ten hours. I wonder how that consultation was cut short at the tenth hour? Perhaps it is not material to consider that now. Perhaps too much must not be said about the ten hours consultation. Contrast their characters with the character of Dean. My learned friend properly admits now (I admit also that he did so before) that this matter of the conviction when Dean was a little boy of 11 or 13 years of age should not weigh against him, considering the age he is now and the life he has led since then. As to the matter of his stepfather living with a woman who was not his wife, he is a man about whom we know nothing except what my learned friend suggested. Assuming that my learned friend's suggestion is right, he seemed to me to be awfully outraged by the fact that Dean's father lived with a woman whom he did not marry. Yet we have it from the evidence of many of the witnesses that they do not think much of living with other people's wives, or other people's women, but when it comes to the case of a witness for Dean, then of course, it is a very improper thing. When anybody else does it, it is a peccadillo or something that happened incidentally in their lives. How this matter about the stepfather could affect Dean's character I do not know; or how the fact of his brother being a "Vernon" boy could affect his character I do not know. I do not see how that could affect Dean. It is suggested that Dean came down and was living with his stepfather, who is not altogether a respectable man. We have it in the evidence that Dean cuts the connection; he launches out for himself; he goes and works for his own living; he is at different trades; but he leaves his stepfather and works out his own career; and the strongest evidence to my mind of Dean's character is that of a very respectable man—Mr. Konnecke, a butcher—who has a family. One of his young girls, who was called here, is evidently well brought up, and a modest, retiring, nice girl. They all speak well of this young man Dean, who had been an inmate of their house for four years. I do not think any greater test of a man's real character can be given than the fact of a man living as a member of a family for four years. If he has any weak points they are then sure to come out. They all speak of him in the fondest and most affectionate terms, including the old man; because the strongest evidence of his opinion of him is that he takes this young man Dean into his family, where he has six girls, if I remember right, and treats him as a member of the family. I cannot imagine stronger evidence. I do not know anyone who would not be proud to have it said of him by a respectable citizen, whether a butcher or anything else—I do not care what his position may be—"I knew this young man. I looked upon him as a highly respectable man. He lived in my house for four years as a member of my family; and not only I but my family can tell you they found him a nice, honest, respectable young fellow." I cannot imagine anything stronger; and he is the man whose statements are confronted by the statements of Mrs. Dean and Mrs. Seymour. I do not want, gentlemen, to go into the details of this evidence. You know there is a lot of evidence about Dean. I do not think it was my learned friend's duty to rake up an old conviction against a child. Therefore we have here on this question of whether Dean is guilty or not the evidence of two women whose characters I have dealt with. I have adopted your suggestion, Mr. President, and I know that in doing so I do not prejudice Dean's position in any way at all, because I am addressing gentlemen who will take the trouble to look through the evidence. If you do that, and bear in mind the form of it, and find that I am borne out in my arguments, I only ask that you give effect to them in the way I have suggested. If this is done, I feel convinced you will arrive at the conclusion that, at the time of the trial, although the Attorney-General opened it by mentioning that the two women did not bear the best of characters, it was not evidence. The only evidence was what was given.

President: Opened what?

MR. PILCHER: Opened the case by stating that both these women were bad characters. There is no evidence of it—not a word—although the Crown at that time had evidence in their possession (whether the Attorney-General or Mr. Wade had seen it or not, I do not know) to prove to the jury that these women were of that character. They did not, however, give it to the jury. If you want to see the impression made upon the Judge by the evidence which was given, you will read the Judge's summing up, and what he said to the jury about Mrs. Seymour. There was not a word about Mary Seymour at all. You will remember I put it hypothetically to you. Contrast that with the state of things now. Here we have the characters of these two women and Dean's character. The two say, "You did it," and one says, "I did not."

President:

President: It is evident the woman was poisoned. Is that admitted?

Mr. PILCHER: We will assume that she was. I do not say it is admitted.

President: The question is—who poisoned her?

Mr. PILCHER: Exactly.

President: Do you think it is likely she would poison herself?

Mr. PILCHER: I do not know at all. That is no part of my case. My case is that the Crown has to establish that Dean did it. It is not part of my case that Mrs. Dean did it, or that Mrs. Seymour did it. How can I take the responsibility of proving who did it? It is not exactly what Mr. Justice Hawkins says about where there are several people who might have done it. It is all very well to ask why should Mrs. Seymour do it? Then I say, why should not Mrs. Dean do it?

President: There is no evidence of Mrs. Seymour doing it.

Mr. PILCHER: How do we know that if she gave her syrup on Sunday night she did not give her syrup on other nights? What I want to point out is this: we are not called upon to prove who did it. I say advisedly it would be a barbarous thing if any such doctrine as that were laid down. We are not called upon to prove it. All we are called upon to prove by the evidence as it now stands (I do not want to lose sight of this, because it may be that this will be the material matter of the whole case) is that these two women are bad characters, and I will appeal to the evidence on every point that I state. They make the charge. Without that charge there is nothing to connect Dean with it. Dean says—"That is not true; I did not do it." Then, I say, what are the characters of these two women, and what is his character? I contrast them. Then, I say, under these circumstances it makes it all the more important what Mr. Justice Hawkins lays down here. He puts the case of where there is a strong suspicion; but where the suspicion is diminished by the characters of the persons making the charge, then it makes it all the more important to bring home to him that he administered the poison to the person taking the poison, or that he administered it to some other person at the same time. I find here, at page 79 of the evidence, that Mrs. Thompson speaks of another surreptitious visit in February. Mr. Thompson says the same on page 96. It was only by the purest accident that we knew about these visits. If it had not been for the Thompsons that would not have been known. This is the woman (Mrs. Seymour) who is denied access to the Deans' house, and who surreptitiously visits it at night while he is away at work on the steamer. According to the evidence of Mrs. Thompson these were surreptitious visits, connived at by somebody inside the house, because there was a light out as a signal in the window, and there was only Mrs. Dean in the house, and she was there conniving at these surreptitious visits. You will find all that on page 96—that the light was the signal that when the light was either put there or removed this woman went in; and if she visited the house twice surreptitiously, why not more frequently? A very remarkable thing occurred to my mind (I do not know whether it struck you in any way at all) quite apart from matters that have been commented on, about the conduct of this Mary Dean. What occurred to me is this—what the explanation is I do not know: On the Saturday she takes some syrup, and on the same day she goes to the chemist to get it analysed, and he wants 10s., which she will not pay. She takes it to Gail, and asks him to take it to the doctor. That is on the Saturday. On Sunday she suspects her husband. You would naturally suppose that a woman with no idea at all of getting rid of her husband, or doing him an injury, would say to him, "George, have you, by mistake, put anything into this stuff I have taken?" To my mind she would naturally say, "George, have you done anything with the syrup; I took some to-day, and it made me vomit?" Take your own household, for example. Suppose a member of your family took some syrup and it made them vomit, would not the very first thing they would say be, "Have you been doing anything with this bottle? I took some out of it an hour ago, and it was all right; and I took some out of it now and it made me sick." Why should she at once suspect that he was the guilty party, and rush off to the chemist and show the syrup to him? Why should not she say to him at once, "Have you by accident put anything into it. It is like poison. It made me vomit and purge, &c." The next day she suspects her husband. On Sunday she would be called upon to adopt some means for the protection of her life, because judging from her subsequent conduct one may fairly assume that Mrs. Mary Dean has far too keen an appreciation of her own life to lose it for the sake of her husband. If she suspected her husband of trying to poison her you would naturally suppose she would take steps to protect herself, and that she would say to herself, "I will take no more medicine from George." She has some friends coming to the house to whom she does not mention anything she had taken. On the Sunday when he brings her tea she does not like it—it is bitter; why did not she then say, "What have you been putting into it?" She sees white powder, but does not say, "What have you been putting into it?" She does not do that; but what does she do? she sends him away to get rid of him, and slips some of the tea into a tumbler and puts it away, and when he comes back tells him a lie—that she had taken it. Why does she do this? She admits that from the first she deliberately laid her plans to catch her husband and to convict him and let nobody into her confidence. Is that the kind of thing that should happen—that you would expect between man and wife? I can imagine an affectionate wife, if she thought her husband was base enough to do that, saying to him, "You gave me tea that I believe to be poisoned; I will go away and have nothing more to do with you; I will go to my friends, my mother, Mrs. Adye, or Mrs. Gail." If she had gone to a woman on the North Shore and had said, "I am afraid my husband is trying to poison me; will you take me and the baby in?" I believe there is not a woman who would not have done so; but she does not do that; she lays her plans to catch her husband. At whose instigation is that? Is that the virtuous modest little girl, or is it the old criminal, Mrs. Seymour, who puts that into her head—this girl of unimpeachable character—this girl whose character cannot be assailed in any shape or form? Is that the act of this virtuous young damsel, just married, who has not a single wicked thought, or is it more like the act of the old convict, Mrs. Seymour? And if Mrs. Seymour, why is she doing this? Why should not Mrs. Seymour, if it is she, be the person who does the whole thing? Why should not they poison Dean? For this reason: they could not poison Dean because he was not in the plot; if they poisoned Dean it would hang them. Their ignorance might lead them to give him more than they intended; but what strikes me as so peculiar that I cannot explain it in any way is this: Why should that woman, whose character my friend depicts, at once, after this having taken syrup, go away quietly without saying a word to her husband and get it analysed? Why, the next day after she had seen this white powder, should she not have remarked about it to her husband—at any rate after she conceived the idea that he was attempting to poison her? Instead of that she hid it away. She could not explain explain it. It is too palpable. From the very moment she said she tasted it, and that it had this bitter taste, she conceived the idea (and who prompted her I do not know—it might have been Mrs. Seymour) of building up a case against her husband, and on that same morning she says this, "He brought some porter." That is Sunday. He brings the empty glass; she is lying on her back or sitting on the bed. She sees him bring a tumbler with his hand round it like that, and she sees a powder in the bottom of it; she suspects him of trying to poison her. She says that when he spoke of it being flat she said, "Put some sugar in it and liven it up." Then she says "He threw it away." He says he drank it—probably for the reason that not being a particularly rich man he would not have a stock of porter in the house, and would not allow a glass of porter because it was a little flat to go over the railing. By the way, I am reminded that she said to Dr. Manning, with reference to the bottle of syrup, that on the Saturday she thought it was her husband who had put the powder in, because there was nobody else in the house. What next takes place? On Sunday she has visitors there; she has Mrs. Adye and Mrs. Gail there, and I think that surprise party were there on the same day, or the party that was at the surprise party; she does not say a word to them or to her husband.

Mr. Wade: She does tell Mrs. Adye.

Mr. PILCHER: She made some comment to Mrs. Adye about the tea, and Mrs. Adye tasted it and said, "It is all right." That is what Mrs. Adye states she told at the Court. Now we have Mrs. Dean corroborating Mrs. Adye as to what she said at the time, and practically I think that was all that took place on Sunday. On the Monday morning she had some cocoa, which she says she had for breakfast; she said there was none in the house before this was bought, so there is no doubt whatever that what she got she got out of the tin that was bought. Mrs. Reay remembers that it was bought about 12 o'clock. Are Mrs. Reay and Mr. Kirk telling the truth? There is no doubt about the shop. It was the corner shop, and this shop is kept by the Reays. James Kirk says he saw her about half past 12 or a quarter to 1; she swears she had it for breakfast, and that there was none in the house before it was bought.

President: She also says her husband went out to get some at the corner shop.

Mr. PILCHER: Yes; there she is contradicted by Mr. Kirk. I forgot to mention one thing—that on the Saturday afternoon when she was on her way to leave this bottle of syrup she calls at the Adyes with her baby; she leaves the baby there, and she goes back at 4 or 5. This is in Mrs. Adye's evidence. When she came back Mrs. Adye swears she suckled the baby; she swears she did not. Mrs. Adye, Miss Adye, and Mrs. Walke all say she suckled the baby between 4 and 5 o'clock, when she came back from Gail's on Saturday afternoon. I will pass over Sunday and come to Monday. On the Monday morning Dean is there. He gives an account of what took place. It is said that because Dean gives a different account about washing the baby from that of Hans Bach that Hans Bach must be lying. With great respect, I do not see that at all. Of course it is a possible case that the baby was washed twice, but I do not know that it was; it is not necessary to establish that. It is much more likely that Dean and his wife, in giving an account of the baby being washed on any particular day, would be mixed as to a particular day than the man who was there for one day only. He says he got some hot water and a basin to wash it. What I want to point out is this: I do not know, of course, whether the baby was washed twice; but the question is—it is said that Hans Bach must be lying, because Dean and his wife say it was washed upstairs, and he says it was washed downstairs. My answer is that Dean and his wife, in speaking of the times and places where the baby was washed, would be much more likely to be mixed than Hans Bach, who was there for one day only and took part in the washing. Take the case of any mother or father who is at home: the baby is washed every day. I will undertake to say that unless the mother had one place in which she washed it every day, and you said, "Where did you wash the baby on the 7th June?" she could not tell where. She could only say she washed it because she washed it every day. On the other hand, Hans Bach was there only one day, and he takes part in the washing; he is much more likely to be right than they are. The fact of where it was washed is immaterial, except in so far as they rely upon it to discredit Hans Bach's evidence. Hans Bach says he was upstairs in the morning in the bedroom and saw Mrs. Dean suckling her child. If she suckled it on Saturday evening (she says she did not, three people say she did), is it a monstrous thing to say she suckled it on Monday morning, when one person says she did and she says she did not? She is contradicted by three witnesses on one occasion, therefore why should not Hans Bach be speaking the truth when he says he went upstairs with Dean? He is of the working class. Dean's wife being ill, and he knowing her, he went up to see her and to ask her how she was. There is no suggestion of anything wrong in any shape or form. People of that class we know do not, perhaps, recognise the distinctions other people do. He says she was suckling the baby; then he gives an account of the occurrences of that day. On the Monday evening another very significant thing happens. She admits that on the Saturday her husband asked her to get a doctor, she admits that on the Sunday he asked her to have a doctor, and that on Monday night he said, "I will stand no more of this nonsense; I will go for the doctor." At the trial before the Judge she said in her evidence, and this went to the jury, that although she was terribly ill on the Saturday vomiting and purging, that he either did not or would not do anything for her, and never gave her anything—I forget the exact expression. She says, "Prisoner came in while I was getting breakfast. We had breakfast together; after breakfast I started vomiting; I continued to vomit very hard and was very bad. The prisoner did not give me anything." Her account is now that the prisoner did not know she was ill—that she did not tell him until that night at half-past 7. She told him then. The account she gave at the trial was that he came in while she was getting breakfast, and they breakfasted together. "After breakfast I started vomiting; I continued to vomit very hard, and was very bad. The prisoner did not give me anything." I think those words would convey to your mind or to anybody's mind that he was a callous, cruel, unfeeling wretch, who did not pay the slightest attention to his wife being severely ill, and a matter of that kind being put to the jury had its effect, of course. Now, however, it turns out, as a matter of fact, that she did not tell him, and that he did not know—more than that, that he did not know until that night—more than that, it turns out that that very day he asked her to have a doctor, and she would not have one. On Sunday he asked her to have a doctor, and she would have not have one, and on Monday he said, "I will stand no more of this; I will go and fetch a doctor." I will put this to the Commission on the question of whether Dean is guilty or not. There is the total absence of evidence as to his having any poison, the total absence of evidence as to his having been seen with any poison, and the total absence of evidence as to his buying any or being connected with it in any shape or form. Suppose for a moment that he had committed this crime, do you believe it possible that a man who is trying to poison his wife would not only only ask her once to have a doctor, but twice to have a doctor, and at last insist upon it and say, "I will stand this no longer, but will have a doctor," if the inevitable result of bringing a doctor on the scene would be to detect this poisoning? Yet he is the man who is supposed to have administered it. I say it is unfair, unjust, and un-Englishlike, to build up against a man possible suspicions, and not give him the credit of the actual and reasonable result of what he did and what he said. If, on the one hand, he had said to the woman, "I will have no doctor in this house," it would have been relied upon as strong evidence of his guilt. Why, therefore, when he has urged her to have a doctor, and insisted upon her getting a doctor, and finally got a doctor himself, should he not have the credit of it? I say it would be barbarous in the extreme if any inference was allowed to be drawn against what is the fair, plain, and unmistakable conclusion that should be drawn from evidence of that sort, when it is known that bringing a doctor on the scene was suicidal to the very project he was attempting to carry out. Immediately the doctor came—sooner or later—it must be found out. Exactly the same deception went on on the part of this woman at the trial with reference to that Monday. She says:—"I felt severe pains in my head, and a very heavy pain in the stomach—a burning pain—and a burning in the throat. I had no such symptoms before he gave me this food. I was feeling much better up till the time he gave it to me. No one else was in the house but us two. I lay down on the bed, feeling very ill. He was lying on the bed with me. I was dressed. The symptoms went on all through the day." She never said a word there about having gone out to Mrs. Adye's in the morning.

President: She not only never said a word about it, but evidently the idea of Sir Julian Salomons was that it was not true that she ever went to Mrs. Adye's that morning, because he cross-examined Mrs. Adye very severely about it.

Sir Julian Salomons: We were not allowed to communicate about it, and that is the reason why you sent for her. There is another difficulty, Mr. Pilcher—an argument somewhat in your favour, perhaps—that if she was purging and vomiting on this Monday morning so badly that she was unable to wash the baby, she was able to go down the street to Mrs. Adye's, but when she got there she laid down. She went there to get some soda-water, I understand.

Mr. PILCHER: A curious thing strikes me in reference to this German, Hans Bach. Hans Bach's account of it is, that Dean went up for a sleep after his breakfast; then he came down, and went out to get a feeding-bottle. While he was out Mrs. Dean came down, and went out to Mrs. Adye's; then Mrs. Dean came back, and he saw her going upstairs, and then after that a little girl came with some soda-water, which Hans Bach took upstairs, and said "Where shall I put it?" to which she replied, "Put it in here," and he shoved it inside the door. Then he says that he (Hans Bach) was present when the breakfast was cooked, and also when the dinner was cooked, so that this man Dean was actually poisoning his wife's food in the presence of a man who would have given him away if he had seen him doing any such thing; and, more than that, Hans Bach and Dean drank tea out of the same tea-pot that made the tea that went up to Mrs. Dean.

President: The difficulty is, where does the poison come from?

Mr. PILCHER: I admit that. Then I say what any lawyer must say, that the Crown has to make out their case, and remember the Executive have got to consider it now. You are now doing something for the assistance of the Executive, and the decision of the Executive is subject to public criticism just as much as any other decisions. They have got to consider it, and will not the Executive take this view? "The girl was poisoned (assuming she was). We cannot trace any poison to Dean, and we cannot trace any poison to Mrs. Seymour. We cannot trace any poison to Mrs. Dean. That she was poisoned is quite clear; we, the Crown, have got to prove that." The Executive, in the absence of that evidence, say: "If that man is guilty, we cannot say; he may be or he may not be." I say, advisedly, from that it would be the grossest farce in existence if the Executive were to hold that a man ought to serve a sentence in the absence of such cogent and necessary evidence as that. Whichever way you report, gentlemen, I have no doubt you will report what you think to be right, and I have no doubt that in determining the question you will give fair consideration both to my arguments and to those of my learned friend. When you do report, the Executive have either to say they will adopt or reject your Report. Take it that they do not adopt it; it is their act, not yours. The public cannot hold you responsible; they can the Executive.

Sir Julian Salomons: We have got nothing to do with the Executive Council here in any way.

Mr. PILCHER: I am pointing out that the same difficulty which you pointed out a moment ago the Executive will have; in other words, they must see the difficulty you see, that is, that although the girl was poisoned, who poisoned her? That is the question, because it is not enough to say she was poisoned. That proves no guilt; you must prove who did it, otherwise you cannot convict or keep anybody in gaol. I do not think I need say more than that to have the sanction of any person in the profession. It is not enough to prove—as my learned friend said over and over again—that it is a case of arsenical poisoning.

President: Of course you believe the girl did it.

Mr. PILCHER: That is another matter. That is why the evidence I have tried to give about the old woman and her daughter is such cogent evidence in this case. This is why I said at the outset it is a very rare case indeed in which lawyers believe a charge made by two people against a third, who denies it. I say you cannot accept it without evidence; and in a case of this sort I adopt Mr. Justice Hawkins' language exactly, "that it ought not to be, and could not be, left to the jury." That is a matter of law.

President: If you believe her evidence it is enough.

Mr. PILCHER: But she does not say what it was.

President: You know afterwards what it was.

Mr. PILCHER: We have no evidence that it was poison. The poison that was in it may have been in solution at the time at the bottom of the cup. The only evidence of powders in the house has entirely failed. Powders are found and then turn out to be perfectly innocent powders. If for instance, in looking for powders they had found poison similar in appearance to what was in the tumbler, then, with great respect what you say would be right. That would be evidence; but they looked for poison and they found nothing but innocent powders. Talking of the powders, does it not strike you as a very remarkable thing that when the question of the powder arises before doctor comes on the scene, their story is that the girl said to her mother, "Oh, there is some powder going into that medicine." They looked about and could not find these powders. Why did not they ask Dean what he had done with the powders then? Why did not they say to him, "What did you do with the powders for the medicine?" But they did not ask him till Wednesday. Assuming then that it was an innocent innocent thing why did not they ask him for the powders? Why did not she say, "My mother and I are looking for the powders that the doctor said were to go into the medicine." Not a word was said to him about it. Therefore their conduct is unintelligible; you cannot appreciate their evidence. How can you get over the fact that this woman, who says that she suspected him on Saturday, on Sunday goes on taking her food from him, and does not say a word to her female friends? The doctor comes on Tuesday, and she does not say a word to him; but on the Wednesday she points out the glass to her mother under the chest of drawers. I say her conduct is very doubtful, and it is opposed to what one would expect under such circumstances. It is inconsistent. What strikes me so forcibly is that immediately she begins to feel any symptoms of anything being wrong on Saturday morning, without at once, as you would expect, saying to her husband, "Did you put anything in that bottle to make me ill?" she goes off to have it analysed for poison. On Monday morning, when she takes the stuff again, it makes her ill. Does she accuse Dean? No; but she quietly slips the cup under the chest of drawers, and tells him a lie. Why does she do that? Who puts that into this innocent girl's mind? It is perfectly clear that she is calmly and deliberately accusing him. Is that the evidence of a respectable wife? Calmly and deliberately, from the very outset, she is building up a case against her husband, and her charming old mother surreptitiously visits her while this is going on. On Sunday night she visits her surreptitiously. She may have been there on Saturday night, and every night, for all we know. She was there on Monday night surreptitiously.

President: She was sent for on Monday.

Mr. PILCHER: She was sent for, and waited until Dean went away, and then entered the house by a signal light.

Sir Julian Salomons: You are making a mistake—you are doing yourself an injustice. Mrs. Weynton told her to go in on Monday night. Dr. Todd will tell you so.

Mr. PILCHER: This is in evidence. On the Monday night she came after Dean went out, and she went away the next day.

President: There was nothing surreptitious in that.

Mr. PILCHER: Why didn't she stop?

President: She wanted to get back to her service; then she came back on Tuesday about 5 o'clock.

Mr. PILCHER: Then she stayed after that.

President: There is nothing surreptitious, so far as I can judge, about that.

Mr. PILCHER: She went to her work at "Brunswick Cottage."

President: But I do not think there was anything surreptitious then.

Mr. PILCHER: At any rate, as far as the evidence goes she came after he went to his work and went away before he came back. She then goes away as is said to her work at Mrs. Lee's at "Brunswick Cottage." She comes back afterwards and stays. I will admit there was nothing surreptitious then. Then it is said on both sides, what motive could either of them have? We have the evidence against Mrs. Seymour.

President: Do you mean where she said to somebody, "If he gets a term of imprisonment we will get her back again, and we will be able to get a divorce"?

Mr. PILCHER: Yes; that is what Mrs. Seymour said to Mrs. Hughes. There is the evidence of another person as to what Mary Dean said. She said, "He is an ignorant fellow;" and another expression she used was, "I wish I had been struck dead the day I married him."

President: That was when Miss Konnecke was staying there. She said he was an ignorant, stupid fellow.

Mr. PILCHER: No; that is another piece of evidence. The evidence I am referring to is where she said she wished she had been struck dead when she married him, and that he had £3 a week. It was Mrs. Hughes' evidence. Then it is said as against Dean that he showed a motive by asking Mr. Westgarth this question about getting a divorce by mutual consent. I was not here when Mr. Westgarth gave his evidence. My learned friend put it that he consulted Mr. Westgarth as to how he could obtain a divorce; that is not correct at all. He asked whether a divorce could be obtained by mutual consent. That is what Mr. Westgarth said. That is not consulting him in any shape or form. If there is the slightest doubt about it, I ask the Commission to recall Mr. Westgarth. It is just what happens to any lawyer who is knocking about in different places. People come up to him and put abstract propositions of law. It has happened to me hundreds of times. What I conclude was that there was some discussion going on in which the question arose, and seeing Mr. Westgarth there he might have asked him. I propose that the Commission should ask Mr. Westgarth about it.

Dr. Manning: Mr. Westgarth said distinctly in his evidence that he asked him twice.

Mr. PILCHER: That may be, but I happen to know that the complexion put upon it by my learned friend is entirely unfounded as to Mr. Westgarth's evidence—absolutely unfounded. If there is any doubt about it I ask the Commission to recall Mr. Westgarth. Then it is said because this man asked counsel in that way of a lawyer going over in the boat, that therefore it proves a motive, when there is nothing further to corroborate it. Is there any evidence that he ever suggested to his wife that there should be a divorce by consent, or that his wife ever suggested it to him, or that they ever talked about it? If there had been such a talk then importance might be attached to Mr. Westgarth's evidence; but it does strike one as remarkable that my learned friend should have wasted so much of the time of the Commission by saying, "Q. Were you in Sydney?—A. Yes. Q. Did you read the papers in this case?—A. Yes. Q. Did you attend at Darlinghurst?—A. Yes. Q. Did you give any information to the Crown to give effect to this evidence?—A. No. Q. Then you turned up at Messrs. Crick and Meagher's office?—A. Yes. Q. And you made a statement?—A. Yes. Q. And you came here?—A. Yes." For that reason my learned friend has tried to discredit these witnesses. Most of these are uneducated witnesses, who would not see the responsibility of coming forward to assist in the administration of justice. If that applies to them then if Mr. Westgarth's evidence is of any importance at all does not it apply with more force to an educated gentleman and a lawyer? Why did not he come forward at the trial? I am not saying that he should have come forward at the trial.

President: Because he said he looked upon the thing as nothing, and let it pass out of his mind.

Mr. PILCHER: And thought nothing of the case. He thought his evidence would not be of any assistance to anyone, and then the Crown bring him up and parade his evidence to supply a motive for keeping Dean in gaol. If that is the sort of evidence a man is to be kept in gaol on, God help us all.

[The Commission met in the Board Room, Chief Secretary's Office, at 2:30 p.m.]

Present:—

FRANCIS EDWARD ROGERS, Esq., Q.C. (PRESIDENT).

PHILIP SYDNEY JONES, Esq., M.D. | FREDERIC NORTON MANNING, Esq., M.D.

The Hon. Sir Julian Salomons, Kt., Q.C., M.L.C., and Mr. C. G. Wade appeared on behalf of the Crown; and the Hon. Charles Edward Pilcher, Q.C., M.L.C., and Dr. R. H. Todd, instructed by Messrs. Crick and Meagher, appeared for George Dean.

MR. PILCHER'S ADDRESS—continued.

MR. PILCHER: The Weyntons made prior statements with different dates, and when they gave evidence before the Commission they said they were mistakes, and gave distinct evidence of statements, and said that they had given to Johnson some of the stuff in May. Mrs. Weynton said that in June the poison was taken into her room and remained there after that. In addition to that I pointed out that the colour of this stuff was pink, and the stuff that Mrs. Dean said she saw was white. I have also pointed out that it was strychnine and not arsenic. Arsenical poisoning is the charge that is made, and the arsenic charge is the one upon which my learned friend relies. He does not rely upon the strychnine charge. It is the arsenic charge he relies upon. In the first place, there is no evidence of strychnine poisoning at all; none whatever, except that there was strychnine in the syrup. There is no evidence of strychnine poisoning, and my learned friend over and over again said what I pointed out to you yesterday, that if you thought that the woman was suffering from arsenical poisoning there was an end to the case. I pointed out to you that in that he was entirely in error, because he would not only have to prove that she was suffering from arsenical poisoning, but that Dean administered it, and that is the material point of the case—who administered it? When I referred to the Weyntons I said that it appeared to me from their appearance here in this room, the way in which they gave their evidence, and their talk generally, especially Mrs. Weynton, that they were speaking the truth. I admit Weynton is an irritable man, and seemed to resent any question being put to him, and to lose his temper over it, but Mrs. Weynton's evidence was given in a calm, dignified, and cool way, and she was the person who spoke of the dates, and whom Weynton said knew the dates. He said he did not. I mean the dates of the removal of the strychnine—most important dates. She spoke of those dates clearly, distinctly, and certainly in a way to impress upon one's mind that they, the Weyntons, were speaking the truth, although they acted foolishly, although in a moment of fright they thought this charge of poisoning, arising next door, might implicate them in some way and drag them into it, although in a foolish moment they buried this poison which they admitted was a foolish thing to do, because they well knew, in their own minds, that the poison had nothing to do with this case, and if it has nothing to do with the case, and if in point of fact that was not the poison that caused this illness, why should they trouble themselves about it? We all admit the Weyntons acted foolishly, and they admitted it themselves. They see now that what they did was foolish. But there is a vast difference between persons who are over anxious about their own reputations doing a foolish idiotic thing, and being perjurers, because it is charged against them that they knew that Dean had got this poison; I say there is not a scintilla of evidence in that.

President: I have a letter from Messrs. Elliott, Bros., in reference to this matter. In fact one of the firm called on me this morning, and made certain statements, which I said had better be put in writing, and he has sent me this letter. He stated that they were very much annoyed at something which Sir Julian Salomons had said.

Sir Julian Salomons: I never said a word against that firm.

President: They are very anxious that the letter should be made public, because they think that what has been stated by Sir Julian Salomons may injure their business. I will read the letter.

O'Connell-street, 14 June, 1895.

The President, Dean Commission, Macquarie-street,—

Sir,

Having reference to the evidence given before the Dean Commission by the youth Oswin Weynton, who was recently in our employ, in which he stated that the strychnine was given to him by another of our assistants (Mr. Butchart), we have to bring the following facts before your notice: When the question of strychnine first arose two detectives called at our office and interviewed Weynton, but notwithstanding that every opportunity was given him to say from whom the poison was obtained, he distinctly stated that he was quite unable to recollect. It was not until Mr. Butchart had left for Launceston to attend the funeral of his wife that Weynton decided to say that the strychnine was given him by Butchart, but from many years experience of the latter we feel quite confident that the statement is a pure fabrication. We need scarcely remind you that Sir Julian Salomons' remarks, having reference to Mr. Butchart's departure for Launceston, are calculated to seriously injure the latter, and in justice to him we shall esteem it a favour if you will kindly bring these facts before the Commission. We may mention that Mr. Butchart will be back in Sydney in the course of a few days when he will be pleased to wait upon you.

Trusting you will accept our assurance that no efforts have been spared on our part to ascertain how the strychnine came into Weynton's possession, and regretting that we are unable to throw any light upon the matter.

We are, &c.,

ELLIOTT BROS.

Sir Julian Salomons: I only, of course, referred on his statements to Mr. Butchart. I believed him. Now they say that is wrong.

President: We shall think it necessary to see Mr. Butchart when he returns.

MR. PILCHER: I would like to be present, because I may have some questions to ask. All that does not appear to me—taking the worst view of it—to affect anybody's evidence but the boy's. My remarks remain the same with reference to what I said about the Weyntons and the strychnine—that the only evidence of strychnine was in connection with this syrup. It is not a case of strychnine poisoning. It is a case of arsenical poisoning. This is a material part. Suppose that is all true, what help is it to us, even supposing it was important to show he got the strychnine? It is quite as consistent that Mrs. Seymour got it, or Mary got it, or anybody else. What I pointed out yesterday, and insisted upon most prominently, was that in a case of this sort, with these very facts, you must have evidence that the person accused—if does not matter about anyone else—obtained the poison which caused the illness, the subject of the charge. It would not be sufficient, if you were to indict a person for poisoning by arsenic, to prove that he obtained strychnine, even supposing he had.

Sir

Sir Julian Salomons : That has been decided by the jury.

Mr. PILCHER : I have nothing to do with the jury, except that I think they made a great mistake. You will remember that yesterday I pointed out that one thing which struck me very forcibly was—and I admit I can see no answer to it—why did Mrs. Dean immediately begin to build up a case against her husband after she had taken the syrup? Now, it does strike one as being altogether peculiar. Why is it that two poisons were administered? Suppose a man were going to kill his wife, and wanted to get rid of her, you would naturally think that one poison would be sufficient. If, on the other hand, the object was not to kill, but to make her ill for some reason or other, it may be that the person who administered the poison would have sufficient knowledge to know that administering the two poisons would not kill, but that if they gave the same quantity of one kind it would. Why were the two administered? That is very significant. If a person intends to kill another person they give them one kind of poison, not two. Why were the two administered—not in trifling quantities, but in large quantities. Doesn't it look as if the person who administered them (if they did administer them) had some previous experience of poison, and that they wanted to make the person to whom they administered them seriously ill, but not to kill? Was there such a person in the neighbourhood? According to her husband's (Asbury) evidence, Mrs. Seymour has had a similar experience before of this character. They question Asbury's character. According to the evidence of Yorkey, who corroborates Asbury, this woman said to him that she intended to "put the b——y old dog away." He says further that it was the girl who gave the information on which the old man was arrested, and that he got three years, and that afterwards she said "she was quite happy in her mind that she had put the b——y old dog away." It may be said, can you accept evidence of the class of Yorkey's? I say you can. It is true that it comes from a man who is tainted, but it is spoken of a woman who is also tainted, and for that reason it is a thousand pities that the Crown saw fit to object to that report from the Superintendent of Police in Melbourne, which might possibly have thrown a great deal of light on that question—not from hearsay, but actual observation, and it might have gone to show that this statement of Yorkey's is absolutely true, and that Mrs. Seymour was putting away her husband. So that we have it from Asbury that he suspected at any rate, whether rightly or wrongly, that she was mixed up in an attempt to poison him. He has no doubt, according to what Yorkey says, that it was true that she did say she would put "the b——y old dog away," and afterwards she did put him away, and was glad of it. We have that same woman, who would stop at no crime—nothing, no matter how criminal it was that it was necessary to do, would stop her at that time—in the neighbourhood. We have a woman who was capable, I won't say of entering into a conspiracy, but of concocting a scheme for doing an injury to Dean, and it strikes me, as a layman, as very peculiar (I know I am addressing medical men, who understand the matter better than I do) that a person who wanted to poison another, and kill him, should give strychnine and arsenic in the way in which they were given in that syrup, because if I wanted to kill a man I would give him something that would kill him, and not mix two poisons up. We are told, however, by the medical men called by the other side, that they are antidotes, not in the way of destroying each other's effects, but by reason of the strychnine causing vomiting, and so relieving the stomach of the amount of poison that would otherwise kill. I believe I am giving, in effect, what the medical evidence was upon that point. That is what I understood. I do not know whether I am talking nonsense or not. I am simply repeating what I heard a medical man saying. That seems to me, therefore, to be another fact about this inexplicable case. I admit it is inexplicable. I admit that no one could put his hand upon the person who administered that poison. You cannot. I cannot. No one can. Except the guilty persons themselves, there is no person in the world who can say who did it. We may have our suspicions. We may think Dean did it. We may think Mrs. Seymour did it. We may suspect this person, or that person, but we cannot put our hands on the criminal. Why? Simply because of the lack of that piece of evidence which to any reasonable mind would have been conclusive to prove the case. Simply because we do not know of any person who had in their possession at the time the particular class of poison which was used for the purpose of injuring or destroying that girl. My learned friend referred to those two boys, and commented on the fact of my not calling them.

Sir Julian Salomons : What boys?

Mr. PILCHER : George Brereton and the other.

Sir Julian Salomons : There is no use calling them boys.

Mr. PILCHER : They were boys. I happen to know they were boys. I repeat it that they were two boys to whom these letters were written. They were boys then. What they are now I don't know. What actually was proved by them had been admitted. Can anybody suggest what they could have proved. I defy anyone to say what they could have proved except what I admitted with reference to their letters. I admitted the letters contained nothing of an immoral or improper character. If these young fellows had been called, it is probable they would have told us very much what the letters told us. What else? She appears to have been either in love, or fancied herself in love, with one of them, as young girls sometimes do, and she writes to the other evidently in the hope that he might use his influence to make this young gentleman pay her a little more attention. I am not going to take exception to that, because we know girls do foolish things sometimes. I would not rely upon anything of that sort against the girl. So far as these letters between this girl and these two young fellows are concerned I admitted at the time that I saw nothing in them, and certainly I knew of nothing, or any communication or transactions between them, that would give the slightest information to the Commission. For that reason I certainly did not think it necessary to call the boys, and in point of fact I may tell you that they never occurred to my mind. I would just as soon have thought of calling the old woman who sweeps out the Bank Court chambers. She would come here and tell all she knew exactly as these boys would have told you, except as far as the letters tell you; yet my learned friend saw fit to refer to them. I referred yesterday, if you remember, to Mrs. Seymour. It is a curious thing that the groats and the beef tea in January were prepared by her. Hers were the hands that did it. The other side rely upon the fact that Dean's were the hands that supplied some other stuff to Mrs. Dean which caused her to be ill; therefore I say I rely upon the fact that Mrs. Seymour might also have supplied stuff to her which made her ill. There again you have a striking fact coming into the case which I admit creates more than confusion; it creates doubts which prevent one from saying this person did it, or the other person did it. That is quite apart from the question of having poison in her possession. Now, passing on from what Mrs. Dean's conduct was in deliberately making a case against her husband, we have that contrasted with the fact that he was a good husband, which is proved by undoubted, reliable, and respectable witnesses. It is stated by Miss

Konnecke

Konnecke that he was a kind father. It is stated by another witness that when he was at home he was always doing something for his wife, making some little fancy carpentry, or something of that sort; that he was most regular in his attendance to his work. She stated that he supplied her with two-thirds of his small wages, and was keeping the rest to make a home for his wife and child. All this is on undoubted evidence. You have it that during her sickness on Saturday night—which I commented upon yesterday—he asked her to have a doctor; on the Sunday night he asked her to have a doctor; and on the Monday night he insisted upon her having a doctor. During all the time that follows upon that, he attends to and does all he can for her. Of course, a man worn out and enfeebled as he was by night-work, had to take his sleep in the day. We find, according to Mrs. Thompson's evidence, that he was lying on the bed crying, on the Tuesday night. We find that on the same day independent witnesses saw him on the way to the chemist, and that he was greatly excited and disturbed in mind; they asked him what was the matter, and he told them about his wife's illness. All these respectable, independent witnesses deposed to a state of things which go to show, mark you, that Dean was an affectionate husband; that he was a good father, although, of course, he may have had tiffs with his wife, which is quite possible and quite reasonable; but, contrast that with the case of a woman but newly married to her husband, the father of her only child, who, within twelve months of her marriage, immediately she gets this poison in her stomach, deliberately sets herself to work, quietly, to build up a case against him. Contrast these two characters. I say advisedly—even supposing Dean were guilty, which is putting the most violent supposition I can—that Mrs. Dean's conduct shows she was absolutely devoid of all those qualities that go to adorn women and make them dear to us. The first thing that happens she jumps at the conclusion that he is the guilty man. She does not go to him and charge him or seek the protection of her friends. She does not go to her female friends and ask them to protect her, but she remains in the house and allows him to go on feeding her for the purpose of quietly building up a case against him. There is an amount of treachery almost damnable in her character. If she believed that he was trying to poison her, why did she not accuse him of it? Why did she not go away to one of her friends or her mother, and take the baby with her, if she believed it? Of course, we have only her word for it, and it might not be true; but assuming it is true, her conduct is reprehensible in the highest degree—just the kind of conduct we would expect from a girl reared and brought up in such an atmosphere as she was. What do we find after that? We find that she is the principal witness against her own husband, the father of her child (not old married people, but newly-married people) at the very time when you would expect all the affection that might be in their dispositions to be exhibited—at the very time when, if ever they were fond of each other, that affection would be strengthened and cemented by the young life which had come into the world, even if there had been an estrangement before. We find, however, that she is the principal witness to prove his guilt. We find that, actually, when she is at the Police Court, she laughs immoderately, as the Police Magistrate states, because the solicitor who is conducting the defence has some peculiar way of pronouncing the word "arsenic"—a word that is highly suggestive of a very low, obscene, and beastly thought. This is the nice young lady. She not only laughs casually, but when she is in the position of prosecuting her own husband, and is the principal witness against him, she laughs immoderately. That is not all. Immediately she has got him safe in gaol, away goes the furniture. I admit that may be explained upon the assumption that she went to live with her mother, but it strikes me that, if she were going to live with her mother, one house would suit her just as well as another; however, I won't press that too hardly against her, because there may be reasons for it. The fact remains, however, that having got Dean safely in gaol away went all his portables. Next what do we find her doing? She tries to get all the money he has in the world—the money of this husband, mark you, who poisoned her, this husband whom she suspected, and was prepared to swear had poisoned her; this husband who had perpetrated such a gross outrage upon her, his own wife, as to try and take her life. This woman is not too high-minded, not too moral, to take money from the very man, who, of all others in the world, she should scorn and despise, and whose filthy lucre she should refuse to take. No; she actually gets an order from him, and goes to the Police Station, and gets his watch and chain and £3 15s. She also tries to get the money he had in the Savings Bank, but somebody, who it was we do not know, stopped her there. That is the class of woman she is.

Sir Julian Salomons: You know it has been sworn that the order was signed by Dean, and that the watch and chain were given over to his solicitors.

Mr. PILCHER: I am perfectly aware of that. The order was signed by Dean, but Mrs. Dean wrote for it. I am not complaining of Dean. He acted the part of a husband, and would probably have given her an order to get the money out of the bank too if he had not been stopped. I am contrasting his character with hers. He was conscious of his innocence; he knew he was in the right; he is a man who was fond of his wife and child, and although his wife had acted a brutal part to him he would not see them starve, as far as he could help it. But what do you think of the woman who, knowing she was to be the principal witness against him—who, knowing that if he was convicted and sentenced to be hanged it would be upon her evidence, actually goes and tries to obtain not only his portables in the shape of furniture—I do not press that,—but also all the money she can get out of him? I say that the woman who would do that is no woman—she is a disgrace to her sex. I make no mistake about this girl, and I use no meanly-mouthed language in speaking of her. If she is speaking the truth in stating what she did, I say she has degraded herself and the sex to which she belongs. You cannot find me a decent, respectable woman, with any sense of decency, who would take a shilling from the man who had outraged her, as she says Dean did. A woman who would do this is not a moral woman—she is a degraded beast. That is not all. She went to a fortune-teller. She admitted she had been to fortune-tellers before she was married. Did she think she was single again? Did it occur to her mind that now that she had got him pretty well tied up she would go to the fortune-teller to learn what she could? I gave her every opportunity to tell us why she went there. Of course fortune-tellers cannot tell you why you go to them; they may tell you other rubbish, and if they do, it is only what the people deserve who go to them. However I am not concerned now with Madam Von. My question is, why did she go there? You have the fact that she went to fortune-tellers before she was married. She says so herself. But she only went once afterwards, and that was on this occasion when she went to Madam Von. Why did she go? I gave her every opportunity to explain why she went. Of course we can easily surmise what weak-minded women do go for. They want to get some information, although everybody knows it is rubbish. They think they can get some information about some person of whom they may be fond. But what made her go to Madam Von? If she had asked about her husband, we could understand it.

A weak-minded girl might think that this woman could give her some information which was unknown to other people as to the future. If she had asked some question about her husband it would have done her credit, but she does not pretend she did that. She was asked here, "What did you go to the fortune-teller for?" She could not answer that question, nor could anybody else. What took her there? She declined to give a motive. That points most strongly to the conclusion, and, further, it supports the suggestion, that I have made, that her visit to Madam Von was not made in consequence of any solicitude for her husband's welfare, but was prompted by an entirely different motive. I admit that I cannot point to the poisoner, nor can my learned friend or anybody else. You may suspect or think anything you like, but you cannot say so-and-so did it. All the evidence strongly points to the suggestion that this old woman, well versed in crime of this particular class, and experienced in putting people away if it suited her purpose—this old woman who was the first person to administer things, which were prepared by her own hands, that produced vomiting and purging—that this old woman, who, if the suggestion be correct, administered two poisons which would not kill, but which would probably make the person taking them very ill, was the person who worked on this girl to carry out this scheme to the prejudice of Dean. Then we find the girl taking up the running, having, I admit, suffered severely. Immediately following that she gets all his portables, and all the money she can from him, and positively laughs at a time when he is under committal on a charge of poisoning her. To laugh alone without that word "arsenic" is bad enough.

Sir Julian Salomons: It is denied.

Mr. PILCHER: I know it is denied, but that is a matter for the Commission to consider. The Commission may think the constable who denied it was not telling the truth. The laughing is bad enough of itself, but when she laughs for the reason that is manifestly suggested and shown, of course it makes it very much worse. Then she follows that up with the different acts I have pointed out. I am sure, gentlemen, I shall have your sanction when I say that the strength of my argument from the beginning to the end has been that we have by the evidence called before you, whether this girl had arsenic or not, or assuming she had arsenic, made a case on which if it was submitted to any jury in the world they would not hesitate to return a verdict of acquittal. No one can say who committed this offence, if in point of fact it was not done accidentally. Assuming, however, it was done intentionally, no one can say who committed it. No one can say whether Dean committed it, or Mrs. Seymour, or the girl, or anybody else. They may suspect, they may think, they may believe, but that is nothing. Before you can fix a crime upon any particular individual that person's connection with it must be established beyond all reasonable doubt. It must be established so that your belief or suspicion becomes conviction. In this case I submit to you that where you have to report as to whether or not, in your opinion, Dean ought to remain in prison, and serve the rest of this sentence, you cannot, on the evidence, as it now stands before you, come to any other conclusion than that there is not sufficient evidence to show that Dean administered the poison. You are not called upon to say who did. You are not called upon to say whether Dean did it or whether Mrs. Seymour did it. If you could find the evidence here that in law would establish that any particular person did it, then, of course, I admit it would be a great public good, but there is no such evidence here. I submit it is inevitable, upon the evidence as it stands here—no matter what suspicions there may be, no matter what more or less properly-informed people may think—that you must come to the conclusion there is not sufficient evidence to show that Dean administered the poison which was administered to Mary Dean. That is a finding which I submit is the right one; that is a finding which I submit is the proper one; that is a finding which I submit will vindicate the law, and will be consistent with those great principles upon which British justice is administered, especially where the liberty of the subject is concerned. When a person is on trial for an offence which involves the question of his liberty the law demands that every material part of the allegation shall be established beyond all reasonable doubt. I mentioned to you yesterday, on the authority of perhaps the greatest criminal lawyer of the present day, that in his opinion one of the essential parts of a charge of poisoning, or attempting to poison, is the finding of the poison on the person of the prisoner, and that where that is absent (to use that learned Judge's own language) it is a case which ought not or could not be properly submitted to a jury. I do not care to go the length of saying, nor is it necessary for me to consider, whether that passage would refer to the extreme cases put by the President, but it certainly is good law when applied to ordinary cases. I submit, gentlemen, with the greatest confidence, that in this case your finding will be—whatever may be your suspicions, whatever may be your thoughts, or those of other people—that there is clearly not sufficient evidence to say whether Dean committed the offence charged against him. It was stated at the trial that Dean was not in the house on Tuesday, and I believe that had a great effect upon the jury. The doctor was called back and swore that Dean was not in the house on that Tuesday when he was there. It appears from Mrs. Thompson's evidence now that he was. I cannot refer to all these details of the evidence. As I stated to you yesterday I would do, I have pointed out the scheme of my argument. I know I am addressing gentlemen who will read, weigh, and consider the evidence, and who, as they may consider my arguments reasonable and fair upon the evidence, will give them due weight. I ask no more. My learned friend pointed out to me this morning that I was reported to have said that he acted the part of a "tiger" in this case. I never used the word "tiger." My learned friend will bear me out that what I did say was that I thought he had conducted the case as strongly as he could.

Sir Julian Salomons: I hope the Commissioners will say in their Report whether I said anything in my arguments to entitle this to be said against me. I want to point out that Mr. Justice Hawkins' letter does not support what my learned friend said it did support, but actually disproves what my learned friend has stated. Let me say, by way of parenthesis, that I am not likely to go out of my way to speak against a member of the Supreme Court of England, but there is not a word that my learned friend has stated with regard to the reputation of that Judge that he deserves. He is not known in any way as an eminent lawyer. He has been a great number of years on the Bench as Mr. Justice Hawkins, and he is only Mr. Justice Hawkins to-day. He has another epithet which I am not going to use. That does not prove he has any knowledge of law whatever.

Mr. PILCHER: I do not agree with you at all. He is considered the greatest criminal lawyer in England.

Sir Julian Salomons: I am going to show he is no lawyer. He does not give the slightest prominence to what my learned friend has stated. The thing on the face of it would be ridiculous. If he supported the position my learned friend took up he is unfit to be a Judge of any Court in the world. He does not do it. I admit he is a Judge of the greatest ability in criminal matters. There is the case. What does my learned friend say that the Judge would tell the jury? Do not listen to such a thing. I am going to comment upon the position my learned friend submitted to you, that if you were the Judges you would have to tell the jury, "Gentlemen, you cannot convict the prisoner unless there is evidence that he has had the poison in his possession." I shall beg of those members of the Commission, who are not lawyers—the two learned doctors—to read this case, which shows the very opposite of what my learned friend stated until I was tired of listening to him. No person could ever suppose that the law is that, unless you were to show that the accused person had the poison in his possession he could not be convicted. If that were so the consequence would be that no one ever would be convicted. To such an absurd position does he give sanction. It is a most improper thing to pretend that a gentleman of such eminence as Mr. Justice Hawkins, a great criminal lawyer in England, should have said it. As there is a distinguished lawyer on this Commission, I do not think it is necessary to say but a few words more. I mention the matter, however, because I do not want anybody outside of this room to think there is the slightest foundation for this statement. This learned Judge's letter was with reference to the case of the Makins, and the point was whether evidence of other crimes, with which the prisoner was not then charged, could be given against him in support of the indictment upon which he was tried. The learned Judge, in dealing with that says:—"I illustrate this by supposing an indictment for murder with a plea of not guilty. On this pleading the sole issue raised on the record is whether the accused murdered the person alleged to have been slain." To support that issue three main facts must be established. What my learned friend wants you to think, (I hope for his own reputation he does not think so himself) is that these facts have to be established by direct evidence. The facts are: "(1) That the alleged deceased was slain; (2) by the accused; (3) feloniously; and these are essential elements in a charge of murder." What? "Are in most cases established by an infinite variety of other facts, which may be proved either by direct or circumstantial evidence"; because, take one of them—"feloniously"—how in the world could you prove that by direct evidence? How is it possible? That is an inference from the fact, and so it is with regard to whether the act was done by the accused. The Judge then said, "It would be idle in such circumstances to object to the admissibility of the evidence upon the ground that it might have a tendency to prove previous guilt." My learned friend picked out those three lines, but did not read what follows. It is like the man, in the Bible, who says, "There is no God," but before that it says, "The fool hath said in his heart." If you leave that out it makes all the difference. The learned Judge says, "Suppose a case in which 'A' was charged with the murder of 'B' by strychnine, in which the evidence adduced raised"—what? "a very strong suspicion"; mark you only, "that 'A' was guilty, but not such a case as ought to be, or could be properly submitted to a jury." You cannot submit a case to a jury on mere suspicion,—"for want of proof." Of what? "Of the possession of strychnine by the prisoner. Would it not be irresistible evidence to prove such possession." What does he say will prove it? "If it could be shown that about the time of the death of B, the prisoner had administered a drug similar in appearance to strychnine to two or three other persons who had died immediately afterwards, under undoubted and unquestioned symptoms of death by that poison. Could anybody reasonably doubt that this would be evidence of a very cogent character, and very relevant to the issue, and could anybody be found to contend that it ought nevertheless to be rejected?" which is the point of the case "until the missing link had been supplied from other sources." That is to say, at the time he committed the crime no one in the world could show he had any strychnine, but if it could be shown that years before persons whom he had been attending had been poisoned by strychnine, and that strychnine was found in their bodies, then it might be inferred that those persons on whom he had been bestowing his care had been poisoned by him, like the late case in Brussels and numerous other cases. If, as in those cases, the strychnine was found in the bodies of other people who had been poisoned, and whom he had been attending, the inference would be that he administered the strychnine. To say that because he administered it he must have it in his possession is absurd. I apologise to the distinguished Queen's Counsel who is President of this Commission, for referring to it. I admit frankly that it is not my intention to convince Mr. Rogers. These things, however, go forward in the papers to the public, and people will get the idea that unless you can show that the man charged was in possession of strychnine, he must be acquitted. If so I had better leave the country.

President: We now have all the evidence before us, but before we can come to any decision we must consider it very carefully. The public sometimes are very anxious for a report on such a matter as this, but we shall not, in the interests of all parties concerned, hurry ourselves.

Sir Julian Salomons: I would like it to go forward that when I commented upon the extraordinary event of Mr. Butchart having left the Colony I believed what Weynton said. This letter from Messrs. Elliott Bros. states,—“It was not until Mr. Butchart left for Launceston to attend the funeral of his wife that Weynton decided to say that the strychnine was given to him by Butchart, but from many years experience of the latter we feel quite confident that the statement is a pure fabrication.” Under these circumstances I submit that you will do what you said you would do—as it is a matter to which I attach the greatest importance—wait until this gentleman comes back from Launceston. “We may mention that Mr. Butchart will be back in Sydney in the course of a few days, when he will be pleased to wait upon you.” Therefore I suggest that some notice be given to Mr. Pilcher and myself to attend some morning. It is a matter that cannot take more than 5 or 10 minutes. We only have to ask him whether that is true or not. Of course, it is to be understood, that no one on either side will interview Mr. Butchart before he comes before this Commission. We will not interview him in any way, and I hope no one on the other side will.

Dr. Todd: Do Elliott Bros. say they consulted Mr. Butchart about this statement?

Sir Julian Salomons: They say they feel confident that it is incorrect.

President: It is said now that Mr. Moodie had seen Mr. Butchart, and that he stated he had given the poison to young Weynton.

Sir Julian Salomons: If Mr. Butchart comes forward and says “I did give it to this young man,” then the matter will remain exactly as it did when I argued it; if, on the other hand, Mr. Butchart says he did not give it to this young man, then you can consider that. My argument, however, does not depend upon whether Mr. Butchart gave it to him or not, nevertheless, I think it is better that Mr. Butchart should have an opportunity of stating here whether he gave it to him or not, particularly as Mr. Moodie states he told him he did.

President: I have asked the Secretaries to request Messrs. Elliott Bros. to let the Commission know when Mr. Butchart returns to Sydney.

ROYAL COMMISSION—REGINA v. DEAN.

APPENDIX.

An experimental inquiry upon animals to determine—

- I. Does the simultaneous or previous administration of arsenic interfere with the operation of strychnia?
- II. Has strychnia any action to prevent or diminish the depressing influence of arsenic on the circulatory mechanism?

The animals chosen for the experiments were rabbits. These animals are of suitable size, and present a greater degree of similarity one with another than cats or dogs, so that the error duo to idiosyncrasy is minimised.

A 1 % solution of arsenite of soda and a .05 % solution of chloride of strychnia were employed. When the solutions were to be introduced directly into the circulation, they were made up with .75 % sodium chloride solution instead of distilled water.

As a preliminary step, the minimal lethal doses of the two poisons, when administered

- * (a) by the mouth,
(b) by injection into a vein,

were determined.

Seventeen experiments were performed with this object, from which I conclude that the minimal lethal doses for a rabbit of three pounds in weight are—

A. For Arsenite of Soda (in solution.)

By the mouth015 gramme.
Injected into a vein006 gramme.

B. For Hydrochloride of Strychnia (in solution.)

By the mouth007-.008 gramme.
Injected into a vein0007 gramme.

NOTES of Preliminary Experiments to ascertain the minimal lethal doses of Strychnia Chloride and Arsenite of Soda when administered—(a) By the Mouth; (b) Intravenously injected.

I.—STRYCHNIA CHLORIDE BY THE MOUTH.

Experiment I.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 2 oz.

Time.
3 15 p.m.001 gramme strychnia, per os in 1 c.c. of water. No symptoms.

Experiment II.—Rabbit; weight, 2 lb. 14 oz.

Time.
3 20 p.m.003 gramme strychnia in 1 c.c. of water, per os.
5 0 p.m.	Reflex response exaggerated.
6 0 p.m.	Do do

Experiment III.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb.

Time.
3 25 p.m.005 gramme strychnia in 1 c.c. water, per os.
5 0 p.m.	Reflexes exaggerated and prolonged.
6 0 p.m.	Slight rigidity in hind legs when running.

Experiment IV.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 2 oz.

Time.
3 30 p.m.006 grammes strychnia in 1 c.c. water per os.
5 0 p.m.	On removing from cage tetanus, which soon passed off on leaving the animal quiet.
6 0 p.m.	Rigidity in hind legs and back on trying to run.
Next morning	Well.

Experiment V.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 4 oz.

Time.
3 30 p.m.008 grammes strychnia in 1 c.c. water per os.
5 0 p.m.	Immediately on touching the animal tetanus occurred. The first attack was recovered from, but on placing the animal back in its cage five minutes later, a second tetanus occurred which was fatal.

II.—STRYCHNIA CHLORIDE BY INJECTION INTO A VEIN (JUGULAR).

Experiment VI.—Rabbit; weight, 2 lb. 11 oz.

Time.
11 27 a.m.000125 gramme strychnia in .25 cub. centimeters of salt solution (.75%). injected.
10 30 a.m.	No obvious effect.
1 2 p.m.	Well.

Experiment

* The stomach always contained a considerable amount of food. Rabbits retain food in their stomachs, even when starved, for forty-eight hours; accordingly the attempt to administer the arsenic always on an empty stomach was abandoned.

Experiment VII.—Rabbit; weight, 2 lb. 14 oz.

Time.
11 40 a.m.	...	00025 gramme strychnia injected.
11 45 a.m.	...	Increased reflex response.
1 0 p.m.	...	Well.

Experiment VIII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 10 oz.

Time.
12 15 p.m.	...	00075 gramme strychnia injected.
12 16 p.m.	...	Slight convulsions.
12 17 p.m.	...	do do
12 20 p.m.	...	Tetanus on stimulation (handling).
12 22 p.m.	...	Dead.

Experiment IX.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 8 oz.

Time.
12 0	...	0005 gramme strychnia injected.
12 5 p.m.	...	Increased reflex response.
1 0 p.m.	...	do do
2 0 p.m.	...	do do
3 0 p.m.	...	Well.

Experiment X.—Rabbit; weight, 2 lb. 10 oz.

Time.
12 40 p.m.	...	00065 gramme strychnia injected.
12 46 p.m.	...	Tetanus on stimulation.
12 50 p.m.	...	do do
12 52 p.m.	...	Dead.

III.—ARSENITE OF SODA BY THE MOUTH.

Experiment XI.—Rabbit; weight, 2 lb. 14 oz.

Time.
June 5—10 0 a.m.	...	02 gramme arsenite of soda in 2 c.c. water per os; rectal temperature = 101.8° F.
6 0 p.m.	...	Very quiet; still can run; refuses food; rectal temp. = 99.5.
June 6—9 30 a.m.	...	Found dead; warm; rigor commencing.

P.M.—Slight injection of cardiac end of stomach. Slight injection of duodenum.

Experiment XII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 6 oz.

Time.
June 5—11 10 p.m.	...	02 gramme arsenite of soda by mouth; rectal temp. = 101.6° F.
6 0 p.m.	...	Quiet; rectal temp. = 100.5° F.
June 6—10 0 a.m.	...	Very ill; tremor; temp. = 98.5° F.
3 0 p.m.	...	Very ill; incoordinate; temp. = 96° F.; passed some blood-stained fluid with hard feces.
3 15 p.m.	...	Convulsions.
3 17 p.m.	...	Dead; temp. = 94° F.

P.M.—Small scattered hemorrhages in mucous membrane of cardiac end of stomach. Two large hemorrhages in mucous membrane of pyloric end; rest of mucous membrane of a dirty sodden appearance. Mucous membrane of duodenum injected.

Experiment XIII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 6 oz.

Time.
June 11—2 45 p.m.	...	02 gramme arsenite of soda, by mouth; rectal temp. = 101.5° F.
6 0 p.m.	...	Quiet; refuses food; temp. = 100° F.
June 12—10 0 a.m.	...	Ill; tremor after movement; rectal temp. = 100.2° F.
3 0 p.m.	...	Very weak; temp. = 100.2° F.
6 0 p.m.	...	do temp. = 98.6° F.
June 13—9 0 a.m.	...	Died during night; cold and stiff.

P.M.—Mucous membrane of stomach softened and echymosed all over, and shed in parts. Mucous membrane of duodenum injected.

Experiment XIV.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 7 oz.

Time.
June 11—2 45 p.m.	...	015 gramme arsenite of soda, by mouth; temp. = 101.6° F.
6 0 p.m.	...	Very quiet; temp. = 101° F.
June 12—9 0 a.m.	...	Very ill; has not eaten; temp. = 100° F.
1 0 p.m.	...	do do temp. = 100.5° F.
6 0 p.m.	...	do do temp. = 100.5° F.
June 13—9 0 a.m.	...	More lively; eaten food; temp. = 101° F.

This animal recovered from the immediate effects, but became emaciated, and died four days later.

IV.—ARSENITE OF SODA INJECTED INTO A VEIN.

Experiment XV.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 2 oz.

Time.
June 7—10 0 a.m.	...	02 gramme arsenite of soda injected.
11 0 a.m.	...	Very seedy.
12 30 p.m.	...	Incoordinate.
1 0 p.m.	...	Dead.

P.M.—Mucous membrane of stomach injected.

Experiment XVI.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 4 oz.

Time.
10 0 a.m.	...	01 gramme arsenite of soda injected.
11 0 a.m.	...	Appears ill.
12 0	...	Fairly lively; runs well.
6 0 p.m.	...	Dead.

P.M.—Mucous membrane of stomach injected.

Experiment XVII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 7 oz.

Time.
June 7—10 30 a.m.	...	0075 gramme arsenite of soda injected; rectal temp. = 101.4° F.
11 0 a.m.	...	Very quiet.
12 0	...	More lively.
6 0 p.m.	...	Ill; rectal temp. = 100° F.
June 8—10 0 a.m.	...	Lively; has eaten food.
June 9—	...	Appeared quite well, but became emaciated, and died four days after.

1. I endeavoured to answer question 1 in two ways.

(a) By administering by the mouth to rabbits of nearly equal weight, a lethal dose of arsenic, together with in one case a lethal dose of strychnia, and in another case a just sub-lethal dose of strychnia. At the same time two control rabbits received, one the lethal, and the other the sublethal dose of the strychnia without the arsenic.

Rabbit (α), weight, 3 lb. 4 oz., received 0·006 gramme strychnia, and 0·02 gramme arsenite of soda.
 Rabbit (β), weight, 3 lb. 7 oz., received 0·008 gramme strychnia, and 0·02 gramme arsenite of soda.
 Rabbit (γ), weight, 3 lb. 2 oz., received 0·006 gramme strychnia.
 Rabbit (δ), weight, 3 lb. received 0·008 gramme strychnia.

All four rabbits showed symptoms of strychnia poisoning when examined two hours later. They had slight tetanic convulsions on cutaneous stimulation, and rigid extension of the hind legs when they attempted to run. In the case of rabbits (α) and (γ), which had received a sub-lethal dose of strychnia these symptoms passed off in a few hours. Rabbits (β) and (δ), which had received a lethal dose of strychnia, both died from tetanus within three hours. Rabbit (α) which survived the sublethal dose of strychnia succumbed to the arsenic thirty-seven hours after its administration.

In these four experiments the arsenic did not interfere with the usual manifestations of the strychnia, and that animal which had received arsenic together with a just sub-minimal dose of strychnia succumbed to the former in just such time, and presented the same series of phenomena, as far as could be observed, as animals which had received the arsenic alone.

I next ascertained whether, when the depression due to arsenic was well pronounced, the poisonous effects of strychnia were interfered with. Three experiments were made with this object, and the experimental arrangements were such that a continuous record of the arterial blood-pressure and of the respiratory movements was obtained. In two of the experiments the arsenite of soda was introduced into a vein. In one experiment it was given by mouth. When the records above-mentioned indicated very marked depression both of the circulatory and respiratory mechanisms, strychnia was introduced into a vein. In every case a minimal lethal dose or less than that quantity occasioned death from tetanus.

An account of individual experiments (XXII, XXIII, and XXIV) is appended.

Experiment XXII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb.

Time.
10 0 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure in carotid artery equal to 90 millimetres of mercury-pressure.
10 2 a.m.	...	0·02 gramme arsenite of soda in 2 cub. centimetres of 75 per cent. salt solution injected into jugular vein.
10 11 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure in artery = 43 m.m. mercury pressure.
10 12 a.m.	...	0·00375 gramme strychnia in 75 cub. centimetres of 75 per cent. salt solution injected into jugular vein.
10 13 a.m.	...	Tetanus.
10 14 a.m.	...	Dead.

Experiment XXIII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 8 oz.

Time.
10 20 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure in carotid artery equal to 116 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
10 21 a.m.	...	0·25 gramme of arsenite of soda in the salt solution injected into jugular vein.
12 35 p.m.	...	Corneal-reflex absent. Blood-pressure equal to 13 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
12 36 p.m.	...	0·00375 gramme of strychnia in solution injected into jugular vein.
12 37 p.m.	...	Tetanus.
12 38 p.m.	...	Dead.

Experiment XXIV.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 10 oz.

Time.
12 40 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure in carotid artery equal to 90 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
12 50 p.m.	...	0·4 gramme of arsenite of soda in solution administered per os .
2 0 o'clock	...	Blood-pressure equal to 64 m.m. mercury-pressure.
2 5 o'clock	...	0·0075 gramme of strychnia in solution injected into femoral vein.
2 5½ o'clock	...	Tetanus.
2 7 o'clock	...	Dead.

From the above experiments it is seen that arsenic is quite unable to mask the poisonous action of strychnia, either when they are both administered together by the mouth or when the strychnia is introduced directly into the circulation of an animal already suffering from the effects of arsenic.

On the contrary, it would appear that those animals which are already poisoned by arsenic succumb more readily to strychnia than normal animals.

2. In answering the second question, I have taken the arterial blood-pressure as an indication of circulatory efficiency. After ascertaining the effect upon the arterial blood-pressure both of the direct introduction of arsenite of soda into a vein, and the slower method of giving a solution of arsenite of soda by the mouth, I determined that the latter method of administration of the poison was the more convenient for the present purpose.

The experiments were arranged so as to obtain a record of the arterial blood-pressure and of the respiration. The arsenite of soda was then administered by being passed to the back of the throat. The animal always swallowed the whole dose. 0·4 grammes of the arsenite of soda was given in every case, dissolved in 4 cub. centimetres of water. The depression of the circulation commenced about 45 minutes after the administration of the dose.

The solution of strychnia was introduced directly into a vein from a small burette, so that the quantity could be accurately graduated. The amount of strychnia injected varied in different experiments, and was introduced at different stages of the arsenical poisoning.

Notes of these experiments (XIV, XXV, XXVII) are appended. They show that when the strychnia is introduced before any decided depression has been produced by the arsenic it occasions (as is the case in a normal animal) a small increase in the original blood-pressure; but that once the depression due to the arsenic is at all pronounced, strychnia is quite unable to counteract this depression; and if the injection of the strychnia be continued, it causes tetanus and the death of the animal when or before an amount sufficient to kill a normal rabbit of the same weight has been introduced.

Experiment

Experiment XXV.—Rabbit; 3 lb. 10 oz. in weight.

Time.
12 25 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure in the carotid artery, equal to 86 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
12 30 p.m.	...	·04 gramme arsenite of soda administered per os .
12 45 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 85 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
12 50 p.m.	...	·00025 gramme strychnia in solution injected into femoral vein.
1 0 o'clock p.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 92 m.m. mercury.
1 5 p.m.	...	" " 96 m.m. "
2 0 o'clock p.m.	...	" " 70 m.m. "
2 5 p.m.	...	·00025 gramme strychnia injected into femoral vein.
2 10 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 68 m.m. mercury.
2 30 p.m.	...	" " 66 m.m. "
2 31 p.m.	...	·00025 gramme strychnia injected into femoral vein.
2 31½ p.m.	...	Tetanus.
2 33 p.m.	...	Dead.

The first dose of strychnia was injected before any decided depression had been caused by the arsenic. It produced a temporary rise in blood-pressure. The second dose, which was given after the arsenic had depressed the circulation was without effect.

Experiment XXVI.—Rabbit; weight, 4 lb. 4 oz.

Time.
10 0 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure in carotid artery equal to 110 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
10 1 a.m.	...	·04 gramme arsenite of soda in solution administered per os .
10 45 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 100 m.m. mercury; ·000125 gramme of strychnia in solution injected into femoral vein.
10 46 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 98 m.m. mercury.
11 15 a.m.	...	" " 74 m.m. " ·000375 gramme strychnia injected in femoral vein.
11 17 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 74 m.m. mercury.
12 0 o'clock.	...	" " 56 m.m. " ·00025 gramme strychnia injected into femoral vein.
12 1 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal 54 m.m. mercury.
12 35 p.m.	...	" " 26 m.m. " ·00025 gramme strychnia injected in femoral vein.
12 37 p.m.	...	Tetanus.
12 39 p.m.	...	Dead.

This animal received strychnia at four periods during the arsenical poisoning. It had absolutely no effect on the blood-pressure, and when a minimal fatal dose had been introduced the animal died of strychnia poisoning.

Experiment XXVII.—Rabbit; weight, 3 lb. 7 oz.

Time.
11 0 a.m.	...	Blood-pressure in carotid artery equal to 138 m.m. of mercury-pressure.
11 2 a.m.	...	·04 gramme arsenite of soda administered per os .
12 15 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 112 m.m. mercury. ·00025 gramme strychnia injected in femoral vein.
12 30 p.m.	...	Blood-pressure equal to 108 m.m. mercury.
12 45 p.m.	...	" " 80 "
12 46 p.m.	...	·0005 gramme strychnia injected into femoral vein.
12 47 p.m.	...	Tetanus.
12 48 p.m.	...	Dead.

In this experiment also the strychnia failed to improve the circulation after it was affected by arsenic, and when it was pushed to the extent of a minimal fatal dose, it occasioned tetanus and death.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

CASE OF GEORGE DEAN.

(PETITION FROM GEORGE DEAN, PRAYING FOR PARTICULARS WITH REFERENCE TO AN ANSWER GIVEN BY A MINISTER OF THE CROWN, RELATIVE TO HIS CASE.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 24 September, 1895.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned, George Dean,—

SHOWETH:—

1. That he was convicted at the Central Criminal Court, at Darlinghurst, on the 6th day of April last past, of having administered poison to his wife, Mary Dean, with intent to kill, and was sentenced to death, which sentence was afterwards commuted to penal servitude for life.

2. That a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the case, and to call evidence to throw light upon or vary the evidence given at the before-mentioned trial.

3. That after hearing the evidence adduced before such Royal Commission a majority of the Commissioners found as follows:—

“After bestowing on the case much anxious thought, and viewing it in every conceivable aspect, not forgetting the bearing of the evidence given by Mr. Westgarth, we have grave doubts if George Dean committed the offence with which he was charged, and of which he was found guilty, and we therefore recommend that he be released from further imprisonment.”

4. That in accordance with the finding of such Royal Commission, His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor directed the release of your Petitioner, and a free pardon was granted and issued to your Petitioner.

5. That the Honorable the Attorney-General in the Legislative Council, on September the 19th instant, when asked, by the Honorable Henry Edward Kater, the following questions:—

“1. Is there any foundation for the rumour that he has received a communication respecting an admission of guilt alleged to have been made by George Dean, lately convicted of administering poison with intent to murder?”

“2. Does he believe in the truth of the communication, and if so will he give the House particulars of it?”

Answered as follows:—

“Whatever communications have been made to me were of a confidential character, and I cannot, therefore, give any information or particulars. I must courteously decline to answer the second question.”

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that he may be furnished with such particulars as to the author of such statement, and the evidence upon which it was made, as will enable your Petitioner to clear his character from the undeserved stigma which such a statement by a Minister of the Crown has cast upon him.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Sydney, 24th September, 1895.

GEORGE DEAN.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

(PARTICULARS RESPECTING THE CHARGE OF CONSPIRACY AGAINST DANIEL GREEN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 13 November, 1895.

Question.

5. CHARGE OF CONSPIRACY AGAINST DANIEL GREEN:—MR. HENRY CLARKE asked THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE,—

- (1.) Is it a fact that a warrant was issued for one Daniel Green in connection with the charge brought by the Crown against Mr. Crick, M.P., and others, and on that charge was he remanded on bail to the extent of £3,000?
- (2.) Was he then, and while under such heavy bail, charged, on 15th October last, with conspiracy in a matter known as Mrs. "H's" case?
- (3.) Was he remanded from 15th October to 22nd October, on further bail of £2,000, in Mrs. "H's" case?
- (4.) Did he appear to his bail on 22nd October, and was not the case further adjourned on the application of the Crown, to 25th of same month, and was not this application opposed by Mr. Green, who desired the charge to be proceeded with at once?
- (5.) Did Mr. Green appear on 25th October, and on application made on behalf of the Crown again remanded to 29th October, Mr. Green opposing the application, and again insisting that the Crown should go on with the case?
- (6.) Did Mr. Green again appear on 29th October, and the case further postponed to 5th November on an application on behalf of the Crown, and again opposed by Mr. Green, who insisted that the case be proceeded with if the Crown had any evidence to offer?
- (7.) Did Mr. Green again appear on 5th November, and was the case again postponed to 12th November on the application of the Crown, and did not Mr. Green again oppose such postponement?
- (8.) Is it not a fact that Mr. Green appeared on 12th November, and was not the charge against him withdrawn by the Crown, no reason whatever being given for such a course?
- (9.) Did the Crown have sufficient evidence to justify it in issuing a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Green, and, if so, why was not such evidence offered at the Police Court, and why was the case withdrawn without any evidence being given to show any justification for the arrest and the numerous adjournments before referred to?
- (10.) Who advised that the charge be withdrawn, who advised the issue of the warrant, and who advised the numerous adjournments, and did the Crown in the first instance oppose bail being granted to Mr. Green?

Answer.

Mr. Gould answered,—I will presently reply to the longer Question by laying a return upon the Table.

(1. to 8.) Yes. The adjournments were made in consequence of another case in which Green was involved being then under investigation.

(9.) Yes, there was ample evidence to justify the issue of a warrant for the arrest of Green, as will be shown by the following statement of one Timothy Hill, the principal witness in the "Mrs. H" case. This was signed by Hill, and is as follows:—

Central Police Station, Sydney, 25 September, 1895.
 I, TIMOTHY HILL, make the following statement voluntary.—I went to Brisbane by train, which I took from the Hawkesbury; I went from Sydney by boat to Kyde, where I got a train to the Hawkesbury; I was in Brisbane about five days, and returned to Sydney by the steamer "Aramac" on 23rd inst.; I got the trousers and vest I'm wearing from Dan Green; I don't know why Dan Green gave the articles to me; after Mrs. Heaven's committal I heard Green was looking for me; I saw him one night in Power's hotel, King-street; he spoke first and, in the course of conversation, said he wanted me to go away, and that he would give me a "tenner" (£10) if I went; he made an appointment to meet him near Power's hotel some days afterwards; I met him, and he gave me £10 in notes and the price of my fare by train to Brisbane; he said said the money was for to not give evidence against Mrs. Heaven; he asked me where I was going to, I said, Brisbane, and he said the best way to get away was to take the boat to Ryde, and take the train from there to the Hawkesbury River, where I could catch the Brisbane train; I know Green is in the employment of Messrs. Crick and Meagher; I also know that Mr. Meagher defended Mrs. Heaven in the abortion case at the Central Police Court; the day I left Sydney, Green and I had several drinks together in different hotels in Sydney; previous to seeing Green in Power's I had heard that he was inquiring for me about Erskineville; there was no person present when Green gave me the money.

TIMOTHY HILL.

This was corroborated by two other respectable witnesses. This written statement was partially confirmed by Timothy Hill when giving evidence in the "Mrs. H" case at Darlinghurst, such evidence being as follows:—

On the Jury retiring in the case against Myra Heaven, Mr. Wade asked that the witness Timothy Hill should be again called and placed in the witness box. This was done, when the following examination took place:—

Mr. Wade: You told me before Hill that you were bound over in this case against the defendant? Yes.

And you were bound to appear at the Central Criminal Court on the 30th of September? Yes.

Do you know a man named Dan Green? Yes, I know him.

Mr. Edmunds, who had been appearing for the defence in the case against Heaven, asked whether this examination should be proceeded with in the absence of the parties who might be affected by it.

His Honor: You can suggest anything you want to ask. Until there is something affecting you, I don't think you need trouble about it. The Crown suspects that there has been some attempt to do something. I need not say what it was, and they are perfectly right to call my attention to it. That clearly comes within my jurisdiction.

Mr. Wade: Do you know in whose employ that man is? I believe he is in Crick and Meagher's.

Have you not heard it from his own mouth?

Mr. Edmunds: Would a proceeding of this kind, taken behind the backs of the people who might be implicated?

His Honor: As to his statement implicating other people, certainly there was a man named Dan Green quite independently of the statement that he was employed at Crick and Meagher's.

Mr. Wade: Did you see him towards the end of September? No.

In the middle of September, if you like;—did you see him during September? I spoke to him.

Did he give you anything on that occasion? No.

Where did you meet him on that occasion? In King-street.

Where about? Near Castlereagh-street, I think.

In the street or the hotel? In the hotel.

Was it by appointment? I don't know.

Did you receive a certain message? I don't know.

His Honor: Without hearing anything about it at all? Yes.

Mr. Wade: You say without hearing about it? Yes.

Had you not heard that the Crown was looking for you; just think before you answer? I don't know whether it was before I met him or after.

Did you make a statement after your arrest? Yes.

Is it true? No.

What is not true? [No answer.] You had a conversation with Green that day didn't you? That part is true.

Listen to my question; did you have a conversation that day? Yes.

Did you see Green again a short time after that? Yes, I think I did.

Where did you meet him that day? I don't know where I met him.

It is not so long ago; was it not ——— hotel? Yes.

That is at the corner of King-street and Castlereagh-street? Yes.

Did you see him inside the hotel? Yes.

I want to know what he told you? I don't know what he told me; I don't recollect.

Didn't he say this—that he wanted you to go away? He said something to that effect.

Are not those the very words? I don't recollect what he said.

Did he also say that he would give you a "tenner" if you went away? I made that statement to Detective West when he arrested me.

You made a deliberate statement? Yes; because I told him the truth at first and he would not believe it.

Didn't Green actually give you ten pounds? No.

You will swear that? I will swear that on my oath.

You will admit that you told West that Green gave you ten pounds? Yes.

That he gave you the ten pounds in notes? Yes.

And the price of your fare by train to Brisbane? Yes.

His Honor: Is that untrue? Yes.

Mr. Wade: Did you not also say this to West,—that the money was for you not to give evidence against Mrs. Heaven? Yes; I told him that.

Did you invent that? Yes; because I thought I was not going to be arrested. I thought that when I made that statement he would not arrest me.

Were you under any charge? Yes; I was charged, but thought he would let me go, as there was no charge against me.

Did you not say this to West,—that Green asked where you were going to, and you said Brisbane? Yes, I said that.

And that the best way to get away was to take the boat to Ryde, and go in the train from there to the Hawkesbury? Yes.

Where you would get the Brisbane train? I don't know.

Did you not go to Brisbane? Yes.

Did you not go to Ryde first of all? Yes.

Did you not catch the slow train at the Hawkesbury;—did you not change your train and get the mail train to Brisbane? Yes.

Was not that the very same day that you had seen Green? I had seen him that morning.

It was true that you told West that you would go by way of Ryde? Yes.

Where did you find the money;—did Green find it? I decline to answer that; it is my business.

I want you to answer, unless you admit that you got it by a crime? I don't wish to answer it.

Did you steal it? I don't wish to answer.

If you told me you committed a crime in getting it I would not ask you? I did not get it honestly.

What was the crime;—conspiring to defeat the ends of justice? I won't say.

His Honor: You have been told that no proceedings will be taken against you for any part you might have had in defeating the ends of justice. If it is only in that way that it is a crime you are bound to answer? It was not in that way.

Mr. Wade: Was it outside of Green altogether? Yes; it had nothing to do with Green whatever.

How long were you in Brisbane? A few days.

Where is all your money;—have you spent it all? Yes.

Did you not come back to Sydney for more money? No.

What brought you back? I had to be here by the 30th.

Tell me why you went to Brisbane? Because I wanted to go to Brisbane.

On what business? I want to look for work.

How long were you away—a week? Yes.

What class did you travel—first or second? Second.

What was the fare by train;—was it not £7, or something like that? Three guineas.

You know what the fare by steamer is—£1? Yes.

Why not go the cheap way when looking for work? Because I wanted to go by train.

Why did you not start from Sydney? I don't know.

What

What reason had you for going to Ryde by boat and then on by train? Because I wanted to go that way.

What were your special reasons? I won't tell.

His Honor: Had it any connection with this other matter? Yes.

Mr. Wade: Were you going away to avoid the police? I decline to answer that.

His Honor: He says that it was in regard to another crime of which we know nothing. As far as I can see I have no reason to doubt his bonâ fides.

Mr. Wade: That is your signature is it not? Yes.

His Honor: Mark that document one.

Mr. Wade: That is the statement you made to West and signed? Yes.

When West first questioned you did you not say that you had not been away at all? I don't know what I said when I was arrested.

Do you recollect saying that? I don't recollect what I said.

You had been in the cells all night? Yes.

You were sober next morning? I was not sober.

Had you been remanded by the Magistrate? Yes.

Didn't Mr. Meagher come to see you in the gaol? Yes.

Did you in any way send for him? I did not send for him.

Mr. Edmunds: Ought not such things to be said in the presence of the third parties if it is for the guidance of the Court in dealing with the matter. Of course I am not instructed, and I shall have to collapse if objection is taken to my appearing.

His Honor: It is simply this, if the Crown thinks there has been some attempt to interfere with the proper administration of justice that is a matter I am bound to inquire into, not that I am to deal with it at once myself, but to refer it to another court.

Mr. Edmunds: My friend ought to refrain from asking questions which reflect on another person without that person being before the Court.

Mr. Wade: If there is anything to answer, no doubt your Honor will give Mr. Meagher an opportunity of replying.

His Honor: I will give Mr. Meagher an opportunity.

Mr. Wade (to witness): You had no money to pay for your own defence? No.

So far as you are concerned you had not engaged him? No.

At that time when Mr. Meagher came first to see you did you not know Mrs. Heaven had been arrested? No.

Had you not heard it? No.

Did not Mr. Meagher tell you? Yes; I did not know before that.

Did he not offer to defend you then? He said he was going to defend us.

Both you and Mrs. Parkes? Yes.

You knew you could give evidence against Mrs. Heaven? Yes.

Were you not taken to the Police Court a few days after that? Yes.

Did you not then decline to give evidence? Yes.

Was not that a suggestion of Mr. Meagher? No, it was not.

Whose idea was it? My own.

Did you tell him you were going to do that? No; I did not tell anyone. I told him I did not want any defence, I could defend myself.

Are you aware that he went and saw Mrs. Parkes after that? No.

How long was Mr. Meagher with you? About ten minutes.

Now, was it not half an hour, and did he not go through all your papers with you? He went through all my papers, but did not take long.

Now this is the only thing I have to ask you;—where did you get that trousers and waistcoat from? [No answer.]

Who gave them to you—come, it is an easy question, who gave them to you? Green gave them to me.

How long before you went to Brisbane;—how many days? About seven.

They were new then? Yes.

He gave them to you as a present? He bought them.

You had no money then? No.

Come, did you pay for these trousers? No.

Did not Green give them to you the same time as he asked you to go away? No, he did not ask me to go away then.

Are you sure? I would not be sure.

How came you to meet Green when you got the trousers? I just dropped across him.

How did you come to get them;—did you go to the shop with him? No.

Come, tell me, I want to know how you came to get the trousers and vest from Green? [No answer.]

His Honor: There is nothing dishonest as far as I can see. Did he give you the trousers and vest, or did he give you the money to buy them? He bought them.

Mr. Wade: Did you ask him? Yes.

What reason did you give Green when you asked him to buy them? Because I did not want to go into the street myself and buy them.

Where did you see him, and where did the conversation take place about the trousers? In the street.

What street? I don't know the name of the street.

It was in the street, then? Yes, in the evening time.

Why did you not buy the trousers yourself? Because I did not want to.

You were out in the street, why could you not have gone into Oxford-street? Because I did not want to go into Oxford-street.

His Honor: If you have any explanation or answer I will hear it, Mr. Edmunds.

The case against Green was withdrawn, as Green was already committed for conspiracy on another serious charge, and because the witness Hill refused to give the evidence to support his original statement, and without this principal witness it was deemed unwise to proceed further at that time. The Crown Law Officers then advised that the case should be withdrawn.

(10.) The Clerk of the Peace who had charge of Mrs. H's case advised the issue of a warrant for Green in consequence of Hill's written statement, and the evidence corroborating witnesses as to Green's guilt. The Crown Law Officers advised the adjournment, and opposed bail because Green had admitted that he had for some weeks been in hiding to evade the warrant that was issued for him.

Memorandum from The Medical Superintendent, Prince Alfred Hospital, to The City Coroner.

Dear Sir,

Sydney, 1 December, 1891.

I have to report to you the death of John Copp, who was brought to the hospital this morning, at 6.30 a.m., by the police, in an unconscious condition. A post-mortem examination will be necessary.

Awaiting your instructions.

I remain, &c.,

CECIL PURSER.

Prince Alfred Hospital, 2 December, 1891.

WE certify that the dead body examined at the dead-house of Prince Alfred Hospital, and identified by us as that of the late John Copp, chemist, Darlington, exhibits no marks of violence, and from our previous knowledge of deceased (medically) we are of the opinion that his death was due to natural causes.

WILLIAM JOHN MUNRO, M.B., C.M., &c.

ROBERT HUNTER, L.R.C.P. & S.

Redfern Station, 1 December, 1891.

SENIOR-CONSTABLE SHAW begs to report for the information of the City Coroner:—

That about 8.30 a.m. this date John Copp, age — years, a chemist, a native of ———, and residing with his family at Darlington Road, Darlington, died at Prince Alfred Hospital, Camperdown.

It appears deceased, about 1 p.m. 30th ultimo, called at Thornton's "Half-way House Hotel," Botany Road, Botany, where he was served with liquor by James Thornton, the licensee; then complained of feeling queer, and laid down on a couch in the parlour till 7, and left the hotel at 9.30 p.m.

Nothing further is known of him until 5 a.m. this date, when he was found by Sydney Braun and Robert Spence, in an unconscious state, in a paddock off Botany Road, Alexandria. Braun informed Constable Emanuel, who conveyed him to the Prince Alfred Hospital, where he died as above stated.

J. C. Woore, Esquire,

WM. DAVID SHAW,

City Coroner.

Senior-constable.

After making inquiries of Constable Emanuel, hearing the statements of the deceased's wife and Thomas R. Butler, his assistant, and reading the certificate signed by Dr. Munro and Dr. Hunter, appended hereto, I am of the opinion that an inquest is unnecessary, and, therefore, dispense with it.—

Anonymous Letter to The Inspector-General of Police.

Inspector of Police,

Singleton, April.

You have heard so much about Deeming killing women, why do you not see about the men? Copp, the chemist, of Darlington, near Sydney, dropped dead coming from Botany a few months ago. A boy also died in his shop. Copp was buried without examination. A week after, his museum was for sale. Try Butler, who has been living there with Copp's wife, and is carrying on the business. Have Copp's body taken up and examined, and see was poison the cause of his death. Something wrong, we are sure.

Yours,

ONE WHO DOES NOT WISH TO GO TO COURT.

To Inspector of Police, Sydney. Urgent.

Re the late John Copp, referred to in attached Letter.

No. 2 Police Station, Sydney, 26 April, 1892.

DETECTIVE WEST reports that he has made inquiry re attached letter referring to the late John Copp. It appears he was brought to Prince Alfred Hospital on 1st December last by the police (vide police report to Coroner attached*) in a state of coma, and never recovered, until death ensued. An inquiry was held in the case by J. C. Woore, Esq., City Coroner (no jury being empanelled), and on Drs. Munro and Hunter stating, after having viewed the body, that "they believed that death was due to natural causes," the Coroner gave an order for the burial of the body. The doctors are unable to state from what natural cause the deceased died, but come to the above conclusion from their knowledge of deceased having suffered from fits of epilepsy for years, which they state must end in insanity or death. Dr. Purser (Medical Superintendent, Prince Alfred Hospital) refused to certify to the cause of death without holding a post-mortem examination, but it appears Mrs. Copp was very much averse to it being held, consequently the other doctors were called in. Drs. Munro and Hunter state that they could not certify to the cause of death without first holding a post-mortem examination, but that they have no moral doubt but deceased died from the effects of the disease from which he suffered, and Dr. Service, who also knew deceased, states that he would not be surprised at having heard of Copp's death, as he was liable to die at any time from a fit of epilepsy. Some people in the locality of Copp's late place of business, and which his wife is now carrying on, assisted by Butler, Copp's late assistant, believe that an inquest should have been held, which feeling no doubt is prompted by the rumoured intimacy of Mrs. Copp with her assistant, Butler. As far as can be ascertained, no person saw Copp from the time he left the "Half-way House Hotel" until he was found by the persons named in the attached report. The boy referred to in attached letter died from the effects of a severe cold a considerable time previous to Copp.

W. J. WEST,

Detective.

Forwarded to the Inspector-General.—G. READ, 27/4/92. Referred for the City Coroner's perusal and information.—EDMUND FORBERRY, I.G.P., B.C., 27/4/92.

On making inquiries of Detective West and interviewing Dr. Munro, Dr. Hunter, and Dr. Service, I am confirmed in my opinion that an inquest was quite unnecessary, and therefore do not intend to take any further action in this matter.—J. C. WOORE, C.E., B.C., 30/4/92. The Inspector-General of Police.

THE JOHNSON PERJURY CASE.

No. 1.

Minute of Minister of Justice.

Subject:—Regina v. Johnson—Perjury.

IN view of the important revelations made upon the trial of the case Regina v. Peake, Davis, and Butler, conspiracy, I shall be much obliged if your Honor will favour me with a full report of the case tried before you, in which prisoner Johnson was convicted of perjury alleged to have been committed in the divorce case of Butler v. Butler.

The Honorable The Chief Justice.

E. J. B. Macarthur, Esq., Clerk Associate to the Honorable the Chief Justice.—T.E.M'N. (for U.S.), B.C., 14/8/95. Report and notes sent forward previously.—FRANK M. DARLEY, C.J., 20/8/95.

No. 1A.

Mrs. Butler to The Minister of Justice.

65, Church-street, Newtown, 13 August, 1895.

THE Petition of Mary Jane Butler for the release of her brother, John Foster Johnson, convicted of perjury at Sydney, about 13th December, 1894.

To the Honorable Albert John Gould, Esquire, Minister of Justice,—

I, Mary Jane Butler, humbly petition and beg that you will be pleased to cause a full and searching inquiry to be made into the credibility of the witnesses who gave such evidence at the divorce matter in which I was respondent, and my husband, Thomas Richard Butler (now a prisoner in Darlinghurst Gaol for conspiracy in connection with the said divorce), the petitioner, and on whose statements my brother was mainly convicted, and that you will cause such other inquiry to be made as may show additional evidence, if obtainable, in my brother's behalf. I humbly draw your attention to the late conspiracy case tried before Mr. Justice Simpson, and the affidavits filed in Divorce Jurisdiction.

Firmly convinced of my brother's innocence, I trust in your assistance to obtain for my brother the same justice I have lately obtained, and that his character may be vindicated as mine has been; and your petitioner will ever pray.

MARY JANE BUTLER.

Forwarded for the information of His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor. The Private Secretary.—T.E.M'N. (for U.S.), B.C., 13/8/95. The Minister of Justice.—FRANK M. DARLEY, Lieutenant-Governor, 13/8/95.

The Under Secretary of Justice to Mrs. Butler.

Madam,

Department of Justice, Sydney, 15 August, 1895.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your petition praying for an inquiry into the case of your brother, John Foster Johnson, and to inform you that the same will receive due consideration.

I have, &c.,

ARCH. C. FRASER,

Under Secretary.

No. 3.

Mr. B. Cooke to The Minister of Justice.

Re John F. Johnson.—“Perjury Release Petition.”

Sir,

126, Phillip-street, Sydney, 23 August, 1895.

Having made inquiries on behalf of the prisoner John F. Johnson, now undergoing a sentence of three years' imprisonment for perjury, and gathered together the evidence contained in the seven statutory declarations herewith attached, I now beg to submit the same, hoping that the new additional facts may be sufficient to obtain the prayer of Mrs. Butler's petition. I may say that writing for myself and the six witnesses whose statements follow, all concerned have worked in this matter without any remuneration whatever, and at great personal inconvenience and expense to assist the course of true justice.

I beg leave to draw attention to the special points of new evidence—

1. The night of occurrences forming the subject of the perjury prosecution is fixed as the 27th June, 1890—twenty-two days after Mrs. Butler went to the hospital, and fourteen days before her return from it. These dates are proved by Butler's own entries in shop books.

2. Six witnesses, none of whom gave evidence at the perjury trial, prove Johnson's version to be the true one.

3. Four of these prove Butler had a horse months before the 13th of September, 1890.

4. Mrs. Greenfield proves it was in Butler's yard in the month of June, as Johnson swore it was. Mrs. Butler proves the horse had arrived there before the 11th of July, the date of her return home after five weeks in the hospital.

5. Mr. and Mrs. Trethewey corroborate Mrs. Greenfield and Mrs. Butler, as they both declare Butler had a horse and cart, and drove his wife to their place just after she came out of the hospital. Mr. Trethewey further proving that Butler told him that he had a horse on hire, the date being fixed by Butler's own entries of the rubber stamps orders.

6. Butler's version that "No horse was at King-street, Newtown, until the 13th September, therefore Johnson was guilty of perjury," is positively contradicted by four new witnesses.

7. Butler's version that Johnson's evidence relating to Butler's conduct with the unknown woman in the shop at midnight was a concoction got together to assist Mrs. Butler at the Divorce Court, is disproved by the evidence of two independent and respectable citizens—Mr. F. Jones and Mr. F. Hillier—strangers to each other, who show that, Johnson in relating his sister's troubles with Butler, told them nearly a year before the divorce cropped up of Butler's misconduct with this woman.

8. The two witnesses who swore at Johnson's trial they saw Butler using a horse during his wife's illness in the hospital—which Butler denied—are supported by four new witnesses to the same effect.

9. All doubt as to the correct dates of these occurrences is dispelled by the fact that we have the entries made by Butler's own hand in the shop books of the year 1890 to refer to.

10. The evidence of Mrs. Butler was, of course, available at the perjury trial, but her brother's lawyers—wisely perhaps, in view of the discrediting of her version just before in the Divorce Court, and the serious trouble Johnson had got himself into by swearing to certain facts on her behalf—did not deem it prudent to call her on his behalf.

11. Hillier might have also been called, but I understand that however convincing his evidence may be as a matter of justice, that as a matter of law at the trial for perjury it was deemed inadmissible, and in addition was unsupported, as Mr. Jones, not knowing anything of the precise words on which Johnson was indicted, was unaware of the value of his statement to the prisoner.

12. The length of time that elapsed between the occurrences on which the perjury charge was based and the trial of Johnson—namely, four and a half years—taken together with his limited means, and the short time to prepare his defence, no doubt prevented him from securing the evidence now adduced.

13. As Butler led the Court and the jury to believe he had never even used a horse at King-street, Newtown, in the year 1890, until he purchased one on the 13th of September of that year, and he produced the payment receipt of the horse as the first he ever had there, the whole case seems to have turned on the possession of a horse by him at that time. If he had one before September, 1890, he must have perjured himself, and Johnson is innocent, and he wilfully misled the Court and jury against Johnson as he did against his wife.

14. In conclusion, I beg to state Mrs. Butler is at present dependent on the kindness of a few friends for her maintenance, and otherwise I should not be writing this to assist a man whom I firmly believe to be innocent, as had she been able to employ skilled legal assistance my services would have been unnecessary.

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, MARY JANE BUTLER, of 65, Church-street, Newtown, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. I am the sister of John Foster Johnson, now in goal under sentence for perjury.
2. In the year 1890, with my husband and brother, I went to live at 105, King-street, Newtown.
3. On the 5th June, 1890, I was taken to Prince Alfred Hospital, and remained there until the 11th of July next, evening.
4. When I went to the hospital there was no horse at our place.
5. When I returned my husband had a horse and cart. This horse was kept in a shed in the yard—the cart on the green at the rear.
6. Immediately after my return from the hospital my husband drove me to Mr. Trethewey's, to Lady Robinson's Beach, and other places in this cart.
7. Shortly after my return home from the hospital a girl named Alice was doing the housework, as I was too ill. This girl complained of the horse dirtying the washing on the line.
8. Alice left our service on the 4th of August, 1890.
9. I always understood from the conversation of my husband that his brother did not come to our house from the ship "Pifeshire" until the day my husband bought books for him, viz., 30th June, 1890.
10. The books now in the custody of Mr. B. Cooke, of 126, Phillip-street, are the books relating to the business at 105, King-street, Newtown, in the year 1890. The entries in these books are all entries made at that time.
11. Mrs. Peter Greenfield, now of Summer Hill, lived in the adjoining shop, No. 103, King-street, Newtown, in June, 1890. She had, from the closely-built situation of the premises, and the fact of her attending me in my own house when ill in June of that year, and having charge of my child Nita, the best of opportunities of seeing the horse referred to by my brother in his evidence as being there at that time.
12. The whole of the evidence now adduced on my brother's behalf has been collected free of charge, and the makers of all the statutory declarations have, at personal inconvenience, and at their own expense, assisted solely in the interests of justice to my innocent brother.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations, taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, MARY ANN GREENFIELD, wife of Peter Greenfield, of Grosvenor Crescent, Summer Hill, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. In the year 1890 I resided with my husband and family at 103, King-street, Newtown, where we kept the shop adjoining that occupied by the Butlers and Johnson.
2. The kitchens and outhouses of both places were so built that they looked directly into each other.
3. I saw Mrs. Butler taken very ill in the yard about June, 1890. I went into Butler's place, and gave her assistance, and closed the place until Butler came home.
4. Mrs. Butler was shortly afterwards taken to the hospital, and during her absence Butler placed his child, "Nita," with me, and paid me weekly for her.

5. During the time Mrs. Butler was at the hospital Butler brought a horse and cart there. The horse was kept in a shed in his yard, only a few feet away from our kitchen—both yards were very small. The cart was left on the green at our back gate. When Mrs. Butler came out of the hospital I saw her get into this cart, and when Butler started to drive off she nearly fell backwards, as there was no back to the seat of the cart, and would have done so had not her brother, Johnson, who was in the back of the cart, caught her. I think they went to Lady Robinson's Beach. I saw them drive out on other occasions.
6. There was a servant named Alice there, and I heard her telling Johnson one day if he did not keep the horse from dirtying the clothes she had on the line she would not wash his shirts. This horse also chewed our clothes on the line over the fence during the time Mrs. Butler was in the hospital.
7. I introduced the girl Alice to Mrs. Butler's service.
8. I remember Butlers having three horses at 105, King-street, Newtown.
9. There was a woman with a boy working at Butler's during the time Mrs. Butler was at the hospital, when the horse used to chew our washing.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, HENRY TRETHERWEY, of 184, George-street West, Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, rubber stamp maker, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. I know the man John F. Johnson, now in gaol under sentence for perjury. I first saw him at Butler's shop, 105, King-street, Newtown, in the year 1890.
2. About the month of June or July, 1890, Butler asked me to join him in making rubber stamps, for which he was to collect orders and I was to manufacture.
3. I remember Mrs. Butler being very ill in the hospital, and a few days after her return I was called on by Butler, who drove up to my house in a cart, having his wife and children in the vehicle standing outside while he came in and spoke to me. My wife also saw the horse and cart, and remarked how ill Mrs. Butler looked. This visit was between the first and second stamps Butler had made by me.
4. Butler told me he had a horse on hire about this time, and I knew him to have different horses.
5. I am positive beyond a doubt that Butler had a horse a long time before the month of September, 1890. I also saw him riding on a horse.
6. My wife, Louisa Emma Tretthewey, also clearly remembers so. She informs me that Butler drove his wife to our house when I commenced making the stamps first for him.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, LOUISA EMMA TRETHERWEY, of 184, George-street West, Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. I am the wife of Henry Tretthewey, rubber stamp manufacturer.
2. I remember the man Butler driving his wife in a cart to our house in the year 1890. They were then living at 105, King-street, Newtown. Mrs. Butler was then just out of the hospital and appeared ill.
3. This occurrence took place at the time my husband was commencing to make rubber stamps to Butler's orders.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, BENJAMIN COOKE, of 126, Phillip-street, Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. I have made a search in the Sydney Morning Herald newspaper for the month of June, 1890. In the issue of the 28th day of June, 1890, there appears an account showing the smoke concert referred to by John F. Johnson as having been attended by Butler and he on the night of the date in June he swore he was attending to a horse at King-street, Newtown, took place at Oddfellows' Hall, Elizabeth-street, Sydney, on the night of the 27th of June, 1890, and was given by the East Sydney Football Club to the Carlton and North Melbourne team of footballers then visiting Sydney.
2. That in the same issue of that newspaper, in the shipping intelligence, there is a notification of the "Fifeshire" (s.), 3,720 tons, Captain W. A. Millar, having arrived in Sydney Harbour on the 27th of June, 1890, this being the ship on which a boy named Edward Butler, a witness against Johnson, arrived by.
3. That I have searched the entries in the books of the "Butler" business, at 105, King-street, Newtown, for the year 1890, and find the pair of boots (referred to by Mary Jane Butler) entered as having been bought for Ted Butler on the 30th of June, 1890.
4. That there is an entry, "Hospital and cab," 17s., for Mrs. Butler, 5th of June, 1890.
5. There is also an entry, cab for M. J. (Mrs. Butler's return), 11th of July, 1890.
6. That entries show that the girl "Alice" entered Butler's service about the 20th of July, and left about the 11th August, 1890.
7. That entries also show that rubber stamps payments (referred to by the Trettheweys) commenced on 29th of July, the second on the 1st of August, then on the 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, 9th, and 11th of August, 1890.
8. That the last tram would arrive at the part of King-street, Newtown, where Butlers live, about 11:40 or 11:45 p.m.
9. That, according to the meteorological report of the above newspaper of the above date, the moon did not set for two hours after the arrival of the last tram at Newtown, and was within five days of reaching "full moon" period.
10. That, according to usual practice, the street lamps would be also alight on the 27th of June, 1890.
11. That having visited the shop then occupied by the Butlers, and having stood where Johnson must have stood, and having in view the conditions of the night, I am of opinion, with the light in the background, and standing as he did in the dark, and as there does not appear to be any shutters to the shop window, that he could distinguish what was taking place in the shop about midnight on that night.

12. That the yards of the old residence shops of Butler and Greenfield are very small, and looking from the kitchens and sheds directly face each other, and the buildings are only about 8 feet apart.
13. That entries in Butler's books show the child "Nih" to have been with Mrs. Greenfield in June, 1890.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, FREDERICK WILLIAM JONES, of 37, Watkin-street, Newtown, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. I am a commercial traveller for H. Johnston, of Alexandria, boot manufacturer.
2. I know the man, John F. Johnson, now undergoing sentence for perjury.
3. In the year 1893 I resided at 79, Church-street, Newtown. The prisoner then resided at No. 77 of the same street.
4. I often took a walk with him after tea of an evening.
5. On or about the New Year's Eve, 1893-4, I was walking with him past 105, King-street, Newtown. He then said to me, "We used to live there one time with Butler. On one night, after being out with Butler, I came home and we found a woman standing in the doorway. I left Butler with her and went round to the back to feed the horse. When I came into the house again I found Butler with the woman." (Johnson then described in his own language to the effect Butler was having connection with the woman when he returned.) He further said they put the woman out after a lot of trouble, as she wanted to stay. When she got outside she made a row and threatened to break the windows. A cab then came along; she got in. She came back again and wanted the cab fare or some money, but after some talk she cleared out.
6. I often talked in a confidential way with Johnson, and it was during one of these chats this conversation took place.
7. This occurred nearly a year before the perjury trial, and had I known the nature of the case I could and would have given this statement on oath.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, FRANK HILLIER, of Railway-street, Petersham, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—

1. I have known John F. Johnson, brother of Mrs. Butler, for about four years. I first met him in Melbourne, in connection with an invention in which as a brass finisher he assisted me.
2. In the year 1893 I had frequent conversations with him in reference to his sister's troubles with her husband. He often confided in me, and asked for my advice.
3. In the month of December, 1893, he was at my cordial factory, Newtown. In the course of relation of some of the "Butler family" troubles at that time, he told me that on one occasion he came home with Butler from a social, and he (Johnson) went to the back of the shop in King-street, Newtown, to attend to a horse, and that on coming through to the front he caught Butler having connection with a woman.
4. He told me Butler manufactured pessaries at the King-street shop. He also told me they (Butler and he) killed a snake and brought it from the bush to the shop, and it was to be exhibited as having been killed in the shop yard as an advertisement.
5. He also told me he on one occasion had a bit of a fight with Butler in consequence of Butler's treatment of his sister.
6. It was nearly a year before the divorce proceedings in Butler v. Butler that Johnson made the statement to me regarding Butler's conduct with the woman at the shop.
7. I was subpoenaed and attended at the trial for perjury of John Johnson, and was ready to prove the above statement, but I was not called as a witness to that effect.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

No. 2 Police Station, Sydney, 30th August, 1895.—Detective West reports that he has seen all the persons whose names are subscribed to attached declarations, and as far as the detective can ascertain they are respectable, hard-working people. Mrs. Greenfield left Newtown about four years ago. Peter Greenfield, husband of Mary Ann Greenfield, and at present residing at 47, Grosvenor Crescent, Summer Hill, states that he was living at 103, King-street, Newtown, in 1890, next door to Butler's. When in bed one night between 11 and 12 o'clock he heard loud voices in front of the house, and got up and looked out of the window, and saw a cab turning round from the front of Butler's shop, and heard a woman talking very loudly, and saw the cab drive away. This occurred during the time Mrs. Butler was in the hospital.—W. J. WEST, Det. Geo. Read, Esquire, Superintendent.

By His Excellency the Honorable Sir FREDERICK MATTHEW DARLEY, Knt., Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies.

To His Honor ALFRED PAXTON BACKHOUSE, District Court Judge, and a Justice of the Peace of the Colony of New South Wales,—

GREETING:—

WHEREAS by an Act of the Legislature of New South Wales passed in the forty-sixth year of the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," it was, by the 383rd section of the said Act, amongst other things, enacted that whenever after the conviction of a prisoner any doubt or question arises as to his guilt, it shall be lawful for any Justice, by direction of the Governor, on the petition of the prisoner or some person on his behalf representing such doubt or question, to summon and examine on oath all persons likely to give material information on the matter suggested: Now, therefore, I, the Lieutenant-Governor of the said Colony of New South Wales, with the advice of the Executive Council, under and in pursuance of the provisions of the said Act, do hereby direct and appoint His Honor Alfred Paxton Backhouse, a Justice of the Peace of the said Colony, to make a full, diligent, and searching inquiry into the allegations contained in a certain petition presented on behalf of the prisoner therein named, John Foster Johnson, representing a doubt as to the guilt of the said prisoner, who was lately convicted under the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883" (46 Victoria No. 17), upon a charge of perjury, with power to summon to Sydney, before him, His Honor Alfred Paxton Backhouse, and to examine upon oath, the following persons, for the purpose of the said inquiry, namely:—Mary Jane Butler, Mary Ann Greenfield, Henry Trethewey, Louisa Emma Trethewey, Benjamin Cooke, Frederick William Jones, Frederick Hillier, John Foster Johnson, and such other persons as in the discretion of His Honor Alfred Paxton Backhouse may, or are likely to, give material information, or by whom he may be better informed of the truth in these matters, and to inquire of the truth of the premises by all lawful ways and means: And I further direct that His Honor Alfred Paxton Backhouse, after due examination of the aforesaid persons, do transmit to the Lieutenant-Governor, through the Minister of Justice, every deposition taken by him, as soon as shall be practicable after the date of this Commission.

Given under my hand and seal of the Colony, at Government House, Sydney, in New South Wales aforesaid, this 2nd day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, and in the fifty-ninth year of Her Majesty's Reign.

FREDK. M. DARLEY,
Lieutenant-Governor.

By His Excellency's Command,—
ALBERT J. GOULD.

Entered on record by me, in Register of Patents No. 17, page 84, this 2nd day of September, 1895.
For the Colonial Secretary and Registrar of Records,
GREGGORY WALKER,
Principal Under Secretary.

No. 14.

The Under Secretary of Justice to The Clerk Associate to Mr. Justice Simpson.

Sir,

Department of Justice, Sydney, 29 August, 1895.

I am directed by the Minister of Justice to state, for the information of the Hon. Mr. Justice Simpson, that His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has approved of an inquiry, under the 383rd section of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," being held by His Honor Judge Backhouse at Darlinghurst Court-house on Thursday next, the 5th proximo, into the case of prisoner John Foster Johnson, who was convicted of perjury at the Central Criminal Court, in December last, and sentenced to three years' penal servitude; and I am to ask you, therefore, to invite Mr. Justice Simpson to be good enough to cause a copy of his notes in the recent conspiracy cases (which arose out of the case in Divorce, Butler v. Butler) to be furnished to this Department for use in connection with such inquiry.

I am to add that, as the matter is one of urgency, the Minister would be glad if the copy of the notes in question could be furnished as early as possible.

I have, &c.,

ARCH. C. FRASER,
Under Secretary.

Notes of Evidence (in part) of Mr. Justice Windeyer.

Supreme Court of New South Wales, 13th November, 1894.—Cor. Windeyer, J.

In Divorce.—Butler v. Butler; George Williams, co-respondent; Caroline Copp, intervener.

Mr. Rofe for petitioner; Mr. Ralston, instructed by Mr. Rofe, for intervener; Mr. Dwyer, instructed by Mr. Osborne, for respondent.

Issues:—1, marriage, 3rd September, 1885; 2, adultery with George Williams. Cross Issues:—1, petitioner's adultery with an unknown woman about June, 1890; 2, adultery with Caroline Copp between January, 1891, and August, 1891; 3, collusion between co-respondent and petitioner to accuse respondent of adultery with co-respondent.

John Johnson, brother of respondent, a brass-finisher:—When petitioner went to England respondent was dependent on me and her father; in 1890, I went to a social at the Oddfellows Hall, in June; I returned with petitioner from that party at 12.30 a.m.; a woman was in the doorway; she said she was waiting for an answer; I went off to the horse, and was away quarter of an hour; on returning to the shop I found petitioner having connection with her on the counter; I was walking from the back of the shop; it was against the counter; she was partly on the counter; she was partly sitting on the counter, her feet were off the ground; I had words with him about it; I put her outside; she caused a bit of a disturbance in the street; she went off in a hansom cab, and came back and struck him in the eye, and asked would he (the petitioner) pay the cab; my sister was then, I think, in the Prince Alfred Hospital; after that he went out of the business and went over to Melbourne; the housekeeper and her child were at the shop on the night I spoke of, upstairs in bed; petitioner was living at the shop at the time; he had a bedroom there; his brother was not staying there that night; he did not let us in that night; we had the key; he did not make a cup of coffee for us that night; she was a short stout woman, with long hair, 5 feet 2 or 3 inches; she was slightly intoxicated; I did not notice that her dress presented the appearance of having been lying in the mud; she bruised my shoulder as I was putting her out; next morning I did not show it to the petitioner and his brother; the young man now in court was not in the shop on the night in question; only the housekeeper and her child were there; this was the first horse that we bought, I think; I fed it and prepared its bed; the woman was at the counter, a few inches from the door, when he was having connection with her; I was coming into the shop from the back when I first saw him; they were in the act of connection; I went through the house to the back yard to the horse; you can see right through when the doors are open; there was no light in the shop; there was no light on the ground floor of the house; it was a clear starlight night; the counter was not fixed to the floor, and in the morning it was 18 inches out of its position; it was about 12 feet long; I did not tell the petitioner about it; I never mentioned it in any of the Police Office evidence or sworn to it before; petitioner asked me to say nothing about it, and I thought for my sister's sake I would say nothing about it.

Thomas Richard Butler:—I heard Johnson's evidence about the alleged adultery at the shop; I bought the horse from Horatio Jones, and it was the first of the two horses I bought; I bought it on 13th September, 1890; in June, 1890, Johnson and my brother were living at the house, and a woman and her child; on the night of the entertainment I returned to the shop with Johnson; it was a drizzly night; on getting to the shop a woman was standing in the doorway, apparently seeking shelter; she was intoxicated, and leaning against the wall; her dress was all wet; I rang the bell and had to move her, saying, "Pardon me," to get to the bell; my brother opened the door; whilst the door was being opened she asked could we give her a drink of water; I said to Johnson, "I want to go down the yard; give her the water, but don't let her into the shop"; my brother had turned to go to the kitchen; I said, pushing past him, "Let's go quick, I am bursting"; I pushed past him; there was no light in the shop or dining-room, but the kitchen was lighted, and the kitchen stove was alight; my brother had been making some coffee for us; when I returned from the back I found Johnson had not entered the kitchen, and was still in the shop; I looked into the shop; the door was ajar; when I got into the shop I found the woman sitting near the back counter; I asked him, very angrily, why he allowed her to enter the shop; he said, "She rushed me"; I said, "What nonsense, that you should allow the woman to rush you"; he said, "She hit me"; I said, "All right; now get her out"; we both had a great deal of trouble to get her out; she refused refused to go, and said she was going to stay all night, like a drunken woman; I said I would not allow her, and she had better go; I said, "Anyhow, let us get up to the door; there we can talk better," and after a deal of persuasion we got her that far, both of us supporting her, one on each side; my brother came to the shop when I spoke angrily to Johnson; I stood at the shop door till she went away; she stopped a cab, and asked me to pay the cab fare; I said, "I shall certainly do no such thing"; she then made some arrangement with the cabman, and I came in and shut the door; I complained to Johnson again that he allowed her to come into the shop, all three of us sitting in the kitchen, complaining how it would look us having a drunken woman about the door at that time of night; his story of my having connection with her is quite untrue, and if the woman were here anyone would see it was unnecessary to ask such a question.

Edward Butler:—Am working on a station at Young, and brother of petitioner; I came here on the 27th of June from England; I went to stay at my brother's, at 105, King-street, Newtown; it was a shop; I and my brother and Johnson lived there, and a woman servant (Mrs. Bates) was there; I remember about the woman being there one night; it might have been a week after my arrival; one night after my brother and Johnson went out, and about ten minutes before they returned, I heard a noise at the door, and I went and saw a woman having a row with a cabman; she wanted to take it, but would not, as she could not pay her fare; seeing what it was, I went back and shut the door and made some coffee; about five minutes after petitioner and Johnson came; I opened the door to let them in; when I opened the door I went back to the kitchen to the coffee; I was half-way down the passage when my brother ran down the passage, saying, "Look out, I am bursting"; I went into the kitchen, and my brother returned from the yard and said, "Where is Johnson"? I said he had not returned from the shop; the stove was alight, and there was gas in the kitchen; my brother went into the shop, and was there about three minutes, and I heard him kicking up a row; I went up the passage as far as the door of the dining room of the shop; I heard my brother getting on to Johnson, and scolding him; the woman was there, standing in the shop, and they were all talking together; as far as I could see, Johnson and my brother, after a bit of a struggle, got the woman out; from what I could see, she was a low sort of woman, and was drunk; I went back to the kitchen and poured the coffee out; after three minutes, my brother came in and got at me for letting the coffee get cold; next morning my brother at breakfast got on to Johnson for letting the woman in the shop, and from what I understood, she rushed him; after a few more words, Johnson opened his singlet and showed him where the woman had marked him; there was no horse on the premises at that time.

Cross-examined: I came here as a stowaway, and went to my brother's the day I arrived; the incident about the woman did not occur the night I arrived.

Notes of Evidence (balance) of Mr. Justice Windeyer.

Supreme Court of New South Wales, 1st November, 1894.—Coram. Windeyer, J.

In Divorce.—Thomas Richard Butler v. Mary Jane Butler and George Williams, co-respondent.

Mr. Rolfe for petitioner; Mr. Ralston for Caroline Copp (respondent), intervener; Mr. Dwyer for Mrs. Butler.

Issues:—1, marriage, 3rd September, 1885; 2, adultery with George Williams. Cross Issues:—1, petitioner's adultery with unknown woman about January, 1890; 2, adultery with Caroline Copp between January, 1891, and 6th August, 1894; 3, collusion between co-respondent to accuse respondent with adultery with co-respondent.

Dwyer asks that the issue may be amended by adding a prayer for divorce. I grant his request.

12 November.

Thomas Richard Butler:—I am the petitioner, a chemist; married 3rd September, 1885, at Carlton, Victoria; marriage admitted by Dwyer; we lived together five years, then as we had been disagreeing so much we arranged that on my giving her all the property I possessed there that we should live apart, she agreeing not to molest me [copy deed of separation put in 17th January, 1891]; the agreement was drawn up by John Copp [husband of intervener], a chemist at Darlington, a shop with a going business; about the same time that we agreed to separate I had [my agreement produced] apprenticed myself to John Copp, to learn a chemist business [articles put in]; I went to live at Copp's, and my wife came there to see me after our separation; on friendly terms to see me; Copp was living with his wife at the time; Copp died in December, 1891; Mrs. Copp continued me on as an apprentice, she being an expert dispensing chemist, and I remained then in the shop; about two or three months after Copp's death, in February, 1892, respondent took proceedings against me for desertion in the Police Court; I appeared, but had no solicitor; I asked for an adjournment, but it was opposed, and the case went on, and I had an order made against me; I paid her 15s. a week for a year under it; next year I applied, and again relied on the separation deed, but the J.P. said there was no desertion, but persuaded me to consent to a small order of 8s. a week; in 1893 the respondent tried to get the order increased, but failed; she then abducted the children; desertion order was made against me, and it was put aside on application; I fell ill of influenza; Mrs. Copp's sister arranged that my wife and I should renew cohabitation, and my wife took a house at the Glebe, and we lived together again; it is a cottage in Glebe; to the back lane is a two-storied house; you go down stairs to the dining-room, and turn to the right to enter the kitchen; the house is on a hill; we lived there a month, the two children with us; I continued to go to the shop, leaving home at 8.30, and returning at 10.30, or 11 o'clock; the shop was at Darlington; on the night of 30th July I returned home to tea at 5 p.m.; I left again at 5.40, and returned to the shop, and got there about 6; I then went to Dr. West with the analysis of some wine he had left; on my way on the Glebe-road I met Mr. Goodyear, and he went with me home to get a book I was to lend him; when near 7 p.m. on getting to the house it was all in darkness; I had left my wife at home; she saying she thought of going to her brother's, and had refused to give me the key (which I usually took with me); for this reason I pulled the bell; got no reply; looked through the keyhole; saw no light; thought she had gone; went round to the back; the gate gate was fastened in unusual way; had some difficulty in getting in; then saw the glimmer of a light; I burst the back kitchen door open; there was a candle burning on the table in the dining-room, and I saw my wife and a man spring off the sofa; she rushed towards the stair, and took the candle; I caught her three steps up, and brought her down; I then could not see the man; I said to Goodyear, in respondent's hearing, "Where is the man"? I then saw him under the table; they sprang off the sofa not as if from a sitting position; the man went to run away; I rushed at him to strike him; Goodyear interfered; I did not know the man at the time, but have since found his name was George Williams; I had run him into the corner; I said to him, "You scoundrel, what have you been here for"? he made no answer, but said to respondent, "Come along with me; I'll keep you better than he can"; she said, "Oh, what will become of the children; I said was it because she wanted to have this man in that she would not let me have the key; she made no reply; instead of giving me the man's name, she rushed at Mr. Goodyear, fell on her knees, and said, "Oh, Mr. Goodyear, haven't you got any pity for me; what will I do"? he said, "Well, I know what I should do if I came home and caught my wife in the position I found you—I'd choke her"; she got up off her knees, and said, "Give them your name, George," I having said I would not let them go till he had; he then said, "Oh, my name is Williams"; "What is your other name"? he said, "George"; I noticed he had been trying to button up his trousers; I then said, "Now, you, both of you, get out of here at once"; respondent started to scream; it roused the children, and they screamed; I sent the man and her out; they started to go; I went to the bedroom to quieten the children; respondent caught the first off the bed, and ran out; I ran after her; a crowd collected, but let her go as the crowd collected; on returning to the house I found a piece of paper on the floor of the bedroom; I then searched, and found some soluble pessaries in a box; I did not know she was using such things; they were to prevent conception; I also found a knitting-needle tipped with sealing-wax; I also found some pills; I looked for the slippers mentioned in the letter, but could not find them, but I found two pairs of boots; she only had two pairs; next day I was arrested for wife desertion, at the instance of respondent, and locked up all night, 31st July, Glebe lockup; next day, after 9.30, when I got out, I found the key of my house had been given to my wife, and the house had been cleared of everything, and some letters that I had left in a bag, which I found in the house, were gone; I have not seen Williams since.

Cross-examined by Dwyer: I went to England, with my wife's consent, in 1889; she saw me off; was away nine months; she had the rights coming from a patent I had in Victoria, and a house of my own to live in; if you sell one of the rights a week, it brought £8; they cost 25s. to make; on my return I came here, and she joined me here; in 1890 I went to a social with my wife's brother; I remember once meeting a woman; I did not invite her into the shop; I deny most emphatically having connection with her; I did not cohabit with my wife when we lived together again after our separation; I had been away from her four years, and I felt estranged from her and was reluctant; after the 4th July, I believe Mrs. Copp's sister, acting under the advice of my solicitor, acted as mediator, as he thought it better that I should live with her than waste my time in Police Office proceedings; I gave my wife £2 8s. 6d. during the fortnight we lived together before the 30th July; she did not show me the pessaries.

Herbert Goodyear:—I am an engineer, Member of the University Examination Board; I know petitioner and respondent since 1890; Copp introduced him to me; on evening of 30th July, I met petitioner; he had promised to lend me a book; he was going to Dr. West's, and he said, "I could have it, and went to his house with him; he rang the bell twice, getting no answer; we went to the back and found the gate fast; we got in with difficulty after taking out something which secured the gate; a piece of pipe and a piece of wood in the catch; found the back door fast, pushed it in; on entering the room, respondent and a man jumped from the sofa; an altercation took place between petitioner and respondent; she took the candle and attempted to rush away; petitioner upbraided her with having a man in the house; she said she was innocent; petitioner asked who the man was; neither of them would give the name, but after a little while the name was given; petitioner asked repeatedly where the man was; I said he was under the table; petitioner tried to get him out, and he came out, and they had a scuffle; she ran upstairs; I said it was no use your running away; why don't you tell Mr. Butler who the man is, and what he wants here; she went upstairs, and the man and petitioner and I after; she got the child out of the bed, and ran out screaming, petitioner following; I noticed the man fastening up the front of his trousers, after the altercation with respondent; he repeatedly urged Mrs. Butler to go away with him, and said he would do better for her than petitioner; she kept saying "what will become of my children; I am done, I am done"; when protesting her innocence she went on her knees to me, and asked me if I had any sympathy with her; I said I had, previous to seeing what I had seen, but that if it had been my wife, I would have strangled her without doubt; after petitioner's return to the house he sat down and was very much excited; his excitement appeared to me genuine; anger and distress both combined; after sitting a few minutes, he proceeded to search the house; he picked up a letter [produced] at the foot of the bed; I read it; this is it; petitioner was very much excited; he opened a box and found a knitting needle, and some pessaries in a box; two pessaries were out of the box and some pill boxes; he found two pairs of boots and no slippers; he was arrested on 31st July; on his release, I went to his house, and found the house cleared out except his clothes.

DEFENCE.

Mary Jane Butler, respondent—wife of petitioner:—He went away with my consent to England; on his return he lost everything in the land boom; I discontinued the summons for maintenance that I took out on 4th July, Mrs. Copp's sister came to me saying that Mr. Butler was crying, and wanted to live with me again, and I went to live with him at the Glebe, fourteen days before the 30th July, and did not get on well at all; I waited up till 11 o'clock the first night; we went to the house on the Monday; he gave me no money till Tuesday; from the first he brought up the old cruel matters; I said, but those were to be bygones; he said "No, as long as I have your d---d face in front of me I'll never forget; I am going to give you three years torture for the three years you have given me, and to go and take it out with Delohery and Mr. Abigail, as that was the way I paid them for getting my orders"; I remember Williams coming to my house; he came first on the Wednesday in the second week; I had never seen him before then; this was not the night Mr. Goodyear came there; it was about 11 a.m.; he said, "Excuse me Madame, there was a lady knocking at your door and she said she would come back in an hour; I saw you go across the street, and I knew you had not gone far because you had got your apron on"; I told petitioner this at dinner time; he said it was no woman for me; I could not go out without Williams coming coming to talk to me; on Saturday morning petitioner was talking to me about Mrs. Copp; I said I need your protection and sympathy in reference to a man, he wanted me to go out with him, and that he knew Butler wanted to get a divorce; he said, don't tell me that any man is after you d——d bitch, after you are old and withered and dried up; I went to Mr. Rofe and said, I want to write a letter to the man Williams in front of my husband and for my husband to meet him with me; Mr. Rofe said, the man means no good, Mrs. Butler, and told me not to mention about the man to my husband, but I had told petitioner before that, and told Mr. Rofe what my husband's answer was; I wrote a note to the man on Saturday evening, and told him not to molest me, that I and my husband were going to get on all right; I sent my little boy with it, and I went to a friend as I was afraid the man would come to the house; Williams had a room across the road; I wrote to the man about 6 p.m.; at 4 p.m. he had come to the back door, and sent the child to say he wanted me; I sent word back by the child that mamma did not want to see him, or have anything to do with him; he then walked into the dining-room, and said, I want to see you a minute; I came down to the kitchen; he wanted me to go out with him, and offered to buy me clothes, and I could say my brother bought them; I refused; he sat on the dresser and said he would not stir until Butler came, and would tell him he loved me and wanted to marry me as he knew Butler wanted to get a divorce; I went out in the yard; he said will you send me a note; I said "Yes"; I was to say whether I would go out on Saturday night with him; my husband gave me 1s. 6d. on Saturday morning; he came home to dinner at 1 o'clock, and said he would not have come only he thought he would be able to give me some money; he was very nice Saturday afternoon; we were up in the back room looking over private matters; I showed him the box of pessaries, and said, "Tom, you read the French on it whilst I read the English; he read it; I was going to sell them, and he knew who I was selling them for; I told him who I was selling them for; he put the labels in his pocket; I said, "Don't do that, because the lady might be here for them"; the lady I was going to sell the box to; he said, "I will give it to you back again"; I asked him again for them on Monday; he refused to give it to me, and said he had not got it; on Saturday night he brought some pigeons for the children but no food; he said it was more than I could do for him, and said, "Go to Delohery and Abigail, and take it out of them," and called me bad names, and that his sister and brother were coming to live there, and I was to be their slave, and that his sister was to take me across her knee and give me a thrashing, and he would fold his arms and only laugh at it; on Saturday he said he would be back to dinner, but he did not return till 11, and we only had dry bread; on Monday morning he left home, taking the key with him; returned to dinner and tea, and when leaving said he would not be home till late, and wanted to take the key; I said, "No, I am going to my brother's, and I am going to leave the key with a lady next door, as she could look after the children if they cried, but I won't be away more than an hour"; he left about 6.30; I had got the children to bed and I just washed myself when Williams came to the back gate; I said, "Who is there?" he said, "It is me"; I asked him what he wanted; he said, "I am going to your brother's with you"; he would come in and stand in the kitchen; I went upstairs; I came down dressed; Williams had taken the light out of the kitchen and gone into the dining-room; he had the album on the table; he said, "Who is this?" I said, "My grandfather and grandmother"; nothing more was said; the door was burst open; I screamed; I tried to get out of the dining-room door; Butler said, "What is this—where is the man?" and said, "Look! there he is under the table," and lifted up the tablecloth; he pretended to fight the man; Goodyear went to interfere, and said, "Don't take the law into your own hands"; I went to take the candle out of Goodyear's hands as he went to separate them, but Goodyear would not let me; the man stood near the dining-room door; petitioner said, "What is his name?" I said, "Ask him yourself"; he said his name was George Williams; petitioner said, "This is the game you have been carrying on for three years"; I did go on my knees to my husband, but not to Mr. Goodyear, and I said, "Before God and you I am innocent of what you accuse me of; this is what you brought me here for; it is a put-up job with you"; Goodyear said, "If you were my wife I would strangle you"; I went upstairs to the bedroom and took my child and went to the police station; my husband told me to leave the house else he would kick me out; I afterwards went to Dr. Kingsbury, who examined me at 9 p.m. on the 30th; the furniture I took was mine; I gave one of the pessaries away, and one my husband wanted for testing; the needle was not used for any illegal purpose; Mr. Delaney, of King-street, gave me the pills; I got them from him because my husband is a bad medical man that I would not take anything from him, and would not think twice of poisoning me; they were strengthening pills; I did not commit adultery with Williams; to my knowledge he never had his trousers open, and had not tried to say a wrong word to me; nor did I on any other day; I don't know how the letter got into my bedroom, unless my husband brought it there; I think it is in my husband's hand; I recognise the words "I will find that" as his handwriting on the fourth page; all through my married life I have had to go to my father for support, not my brother, but he has helped me the last year.

Cross-examined: Mrs. Copp has repeatedly given me medicine for nothing; Mr. Copp told me he never dispensed my medicine for me; Mr. Butler's brother stayed with us in 1890 at Newtown; I was in the hospital for typhoid, and a premature birth at six months and a fortnight; it was during the time I was in the hospital that I had the premature birth; I was there between 5th June and 11th July, 1890; petitioner came from England first week in January; my brother never mentioned the charge of adultery with a woman till now; he never stated he knew of such a thing in any of the police proceedings; Mrs. Copp advised me to sign the deed; I did not say, "I'll sign it, but he will have to keep me when I go through his property"; I have had three miscarriages—two in Melbourne, and one in November, 1890. Before 24th March and April, 1891, I don't know what I was in Prince Alfred Hospital for; it was for a womb trouble; the doctors said it was brought on by the miscarriage in 1890; I never accused Mrs. Copp of adultery with my husband in any of the Police Court proceedings; I did not make the charge at Redfern Court in your presence; the grounds for my believing that Mrs. Copp has committed adultery with my husband is that my child has blue eyes, and Mrs. Copp's has, and that I have seen Mrs. Copp walking in the street with my husband; they are alike as to mouth and nose besides the eyes; I never examined the children, and did not say to Mrs. Copp that I could see no similarity between them; I did not tell you in your office that I had examined the children, or that Mrs. Copp had given me every opportunity for examining them, and I could trace no likeness between them; the first photograph is Mrs. Copp's Lucy; I do not know who the other is; "G" is Mr. and Mrs. Copp; "H" is my child; I knew one Barker, now dead, only to speak to; I did not know that I know of, tell Mrs. Copp anything about him; he is 18; I asked his mother to let him come and sleep at the house as I was alone; I know

Mrs.

Mrs. Jones ; I did not tell her that Barker was terribly struck on me, and that he wanted to marry me ; I don't know one Ross ; I never was offered £1 by a man ; I have been offered money by men, but have refused ; they were men I knew ever since I have been in Sydney ; I will not tell his name ; I do not know a woman at 59, Regent-street, and have not frequently visited her ; I was not with one Ross the night I met my brother, and I did not tell Mrs. Jones that I had been to a newly furnished house with one Ross, and that he had given me 10s., and that he had had connection with me, and had used a French letter, and that on the second occasion I had used a syringe ; I might have told Mrs. Jones about a man on the 15th August last ; I told Mrs. Jones I was offered 10s., and did not take it ; she has been very kind to me ; I did not say, "Blast it ; I will go and earn the 10s. to-night" ; on the 5th July I went to your office with Mrs. Copp, and I told you we had agreed to live together again ; I got a bottle of medicine from Mrs. Jones to bring on the menstrual period ; Bellamy recommended the pills [produced] to strengthen me ; I did not tear the labels off ; I believe the child did ; there was only a label on one side ; I tore a bit of it off ; I'll say I did, to oblige you ; I gave the one pessary to Mrs. Morgan ; I know one Jansen ; he lived at my place for a few weeks ; I did not tell Mrs. Barker if he came to her not to believe what he said ; he threatened to tell my husband of me then ; he was a bad wicked man ; I have known Williams since petitioner brought him to the house ; I say he is colluding with him ; I don't remember swearing that I first knew his name on the night of the 30th ; Williams has never come in by the front way ; the children went to bed between 7 and 8 ; Williams from the first was repeatedly giving the children money—pennies and half-pennies ; on the Thursday he bought a kite and some lollies at the corner shop ; he gave them money four or five times ; I told my husband that he had given them a penny and a half-penny ; I did not tell Lionel he must not tell father a man came ; on the night of the 26th I went to my brother's, down Glebe-road up Newtown-road ; I did not go through the park that evening ; Williams was with me going to my brother's ; he met me as I was going there ; I did not go through the park with Williams ; I reached my brother's at 7.25 ; I left home at 7.10 ; he met me again as I returned ; I did not return through the park ; I returned as I went ; I was not in St. John's-road on that evening ; I did not embrace him there—I hated him too much ; I got home at 8 ; I did not leave home at 6.30 ; Williams did not see me again that night ; he did not give the children the money that night for the lollies and buttons ; on the 27th July (Friday) Williams did not see me again ; no man came to my house that night ; the man locked the back gate ; I did not, nor did I put the earthenware pipe against it ; the man must have locked the back door, I did not ; I did not hear the bell ring ; it never rang ; if it did I would have heard it ; I was about half way from the Bench to the clock in the Court when he shut the gate ; I did not see a pair of slippers in the house that night ; I left in a pair of boots ; I left a pair of boots and a pair of rugs ; I don't know whether I swore, at the Glebe, that I saw a pair of slippers on the table, but I saw the slippers on the dresser in the kitchen ; he said to me, "Have you got your slippers?" that is how I know they were slippers ; they were in a parcel ; I never answered him ; he said, "Have you got your slippers?" when Goodyear and Butler were there they heard it ; he said, "Come along with me ; I'll treat you better than he does ; have you got your slippers?" I said I would not go with him ; the parcel was then on the dresser in the kitchen ; he said to me, when he came, "Here is a parcel for you," and I took notice he did not tell me what was in the parcel, and he had no reason to suppose that I knew what was in the parcel ; I did not look at the parcel whilst the man was there ; he said, "Have you got the slippers that I brought?" I last saw them on the kitchen dresser ; I swear I did not wear them when I went out ; I went out in the only pair of boots I had fit to go out in ; I only had two pairs of boots—one I went out in, the other was not fit to go out in ; I left no boots in my bedroom of any kind, and left the old pair in the cupboard down stairs in the kitchen ; the lace-up boots were not left in the dining-room ; I went out in them ; I did not leave my new pair of lace-up boots in the dining-room by the fire-place ; a baker's cart called at my house on the morning of the 30th ; he saw me speak to Williams. [The witness had just before said, in answer to me, that she last saw Williams on the Saturday.] he was speaking to me in the street ; I told him I was going to leave my husband ; this was the morning of the day when Goodyear came ; Williams was in the house on the afternoon of the 30th July ; my brother asked him in ; my brother did not know him ; I introduced him to my brother ; all that I remember he said was that he knew Butler wanted a divorce, and he wanted to marry me, and that he would pay all expenses of a divorce ; my brother told him to go to Mr. Abigail (13th November) ; at the Glebe Police Court I swore I saw a pair of slippers on the parlour table ; I don't remember what I said ; I don't know who left them there ; if I swore I fastened the back gate it was a mistake ; I was examined there three days after the occurrence ; I never wrote a letter to the man ; I never did ; I wrote a note ; I never denied writing a note to the man ; I said at the Police Office that I had mentioned to petitioner about this man ; I did not expect my husband home that night ; I had no idea he was coming back ; he told me it would be a busy night, and that he would not be back till late ; I introduced Williams to my brother after the 30th ; they did not shake hands ; he was not going that night with me and my brother to Abigail's ; I did not make that arrangement that afternoon ; there was no arrangement for Williams to go to Abigail's ; my brother was going ; I said, finding that the man said he loved me, and if I got a divorce he would marry me ; Williams did not know my brother was going to Abigail's ; he knew I was going to my brother's ; if I swore I was going to Abigail's that night with my brother it is not true ; he was going alone ; the man was in the house about quarter of an hour altogether before my husband came ; Dr. Scott-Skirving treated me in the Prince Alfred Hospital in June, 1890 ; I was ill for three weeks before I went to the hospital ; I had a pain in my head and side, no appetite, great thirst ; I had no discharge ; I was alone in the hospital between March and April, 1886 ; I was suffering from the way the petitioner kicked me in the side on the stairs ; I believe that was the cause of my illness ; I don't remember that I said I had a kick three months before March, 1886 ; I did not tell the authorities there of petitioner's ill-treatment of me ; I was living at 105, King-street, Newtown—my own home ; I told the hospital authorities that I had had four children—one 7 months, and one in hospital ; I gave the paper [I], which is in my hand-writing, to my husband in July or August, 1890 ; I gave him that paper, because he turned me out of the house, and I went to Newcastle ; I gave it to him before he turned me out ; he thrashed me with a stick, because I gave his brother meals ; I can't explain why I did it ; I can't say why ; in August, 1890, petitioner's brother was staying in our house ; after coming out of the hospital my husband did carry me upstairs to bed night after night, and my brother also when my husband was not there ; he would not call in a doctor at first, but when he did no man could be kinder to me, and he did not change his clothes the whole time I was sick ; at night-time he waited on me so constantly ; I have have had three miscarriages in addition to the four children mentioned in "I"; I don't count the child born in the hospital as one of the miscarriages; Dr. Foreman treated me at the hospital, both 11th June, 1893, and 25th June, 1893—no, I think it was Dr. Skirving; it was some uterine trouble; I was back in the hospital in February for the same trouble.

Cross-examined: In the first week in June, 1891, petitioner kicked me in the ribs; I suffered great pain, and my arm was black and blue—parts between elbow to shoulder; he has assaulted me many times before that at Melbourne and here; he has blackened my eyes; during the Queen's Jubilee I had a pair of black eyes; he assaulted me before the birth of the last living child; he kicked me between the legs in bed.

Examined by Ralston for Mrs. Copp: The paper No. 1 is in my hand; it was written when we made it up before he came to live with me; this was written in my house in Cleveland-street; Mrs. Copp was not in the house when it was written; I sent it up to her; I had been in her bedroom to see her husband; I said to her, "I blame you; you keep him here; you bring the best of everything, and only give him 10s. a week"; she then ordered me out of her bedroom (she did not order Butler out as she should have done); I left her house, and went home; next day he called me names and I thought he was angry because I spoke to her as I did, and as I wished to live on the best of terms with my husband, I wrote the note, and I am sorry I did; I wrote No. 2; it was written on 28th July; the petitioner said to me, "Mrs. Copp has sent a note saying she was sick, and asking him to come and work that day." [He had thrown up his job through the week, and was only going to work when he liked.] He said at breakfast that I ought to send an apology to Mrs. Copp—that she deserved it; that if I sent it up it would do him a lot of good, and me also, as she could do a lot of business; you can see there is no likeness in the children; I said Mrs. Copp's sister told me that she saw a likeness; I consulted Mr. Rofe after this, and mentioned the matter to him; he dictated the letter for me, and I wrote it; he said he thought Mrs. Copp did deserve an apology, and I said, "I will do anything to live happily with the petitioner; I did it for his sake, not for mine"; I believe petitioner went to Mrs. Copp's on Saturday morning; I sent my letter on the night of Saturday, 28th July.

Examined by Rofe: On or about the 10th July I got the letter (J) from petitioner; I had a photograph of petitioner; I stuck the eyes out of it and scratched the face, and gave it to Mrs. Copp, but did not say to her, "Tell him I wish it was him I did it to." [The witness here says, in a violent way, she wished she had done all sorts of things to him.]

James Kingsbury, duly qualified medical practitioner:—I know Mrs. Butler; she came to me on 30th July, at 9 p.m. (objected to); her brother was there with her; I examined her; the result of the examination was entirely negative; I could discover no evidence of a recent connection; I cannot say one had not taken place; I can pronounce no opinion whether connection had taken place or not—absolutely none.

Cross-examined: She had a pair of loose slippers on; I have treated her for pelvic cellulitis; it may proceed from miscarriage, attempt to procure abortion, and other quite innocent causes. [I stop Dwyer examining, saying I attach no importance to the evidence.]

Goodyear, recalled by me: We found a pair of new laced-up boots, very slightly worn, in the place of the dining-room floor where the sofa was; we then found an old pair, considerably worn, I think, in the kitchen in the back; they both appeared to be jumping off the sofa as we got in; the sofa was too far from the table to be used by people sitting at the table and looking at anything on it; I can only say they were on the sofa, but whether lying or sitting I cannot say, as they were in the act of getting up when I got sight of them; the bell-handle was pulled twice, and I heard the ringing twice; the house was in darkness in front.

Cross-examined: I don't know where the bell was; it sounded in the distance from the back part of the house; I noticed nothing on her head; I don't think she had anything on her head; the dog barked when we were in the yard.

Re-examined: I saw no parcel on the dresser; there was no album on the table—only the cover; the blind was close to the frame of the window, and was dark, and I could not see in—only the light through the blind.

John Johnson: [NOTE.—The first part of this witness' evidence is already in the possession of the Crown.—A.J.G.] After that he went out of the business, and went over to Melbourne; on 4th July petitioner said he was quite willing to live with Mrs. Butler for the children's sake, and also was I willing; I said, "No"; I would not agree to her going back to him, unless an agreement was witnessed before a Police Magistrate; petitioner agreed to that, but on the Thursday backed out of it, and would not sign it; she then took a house, and I gave them all my furniture; on the Wednesday she complained of not having sufficient food; I gave her 2s. 6d.; I know Williams; respondent complained to me on the Saturday evening of him; I first met him on the Monday afternoon (30th), about 4 p.m.; I met him first in the front of petitioner's house; I beckoned him to come to me; I asked him inside; I asked him his business; he said, "I am quite agreeable to marry Mrs. Butler and pay for a divorce"; and then he asked me to go and see Butler and ask him whether he agreed to a divorce; I did not answer him; I asked him did he know anything about a divorce or about Mr. Butler; he said he was certain that Butler would agree to a divorce—he was certain of it—and he arranged to meet me at 8:30 at my place to go and see Butler; in the meantime I went and asked Abigail's advice about it, as I thought petitioner and he were acting together; I saw the man once since in George-street; I can't tell the date, but it was on the same day as the Police Court proceedings after respondent left petitioner; I jumped off a bus and went after him; he saw me; he got into a public house—Carter's Hotel, corner of Park and George Streets; he avoided me, and I have never seen him since; I have seen petitioner ill-treat respondent frequently; he has blacked her arms; she applied to me half a dozen times here; in Melbourne he was always ill-treating her; last December, on New Year's Eve, I went to petitioner, and asked him to supply medicine, as the boy was ill; he did so; I asked him why he had not supplied his children; he said he would not; that he would clear out and leave them without a penny when he finished his studies at the University; I had nothing to do with moving the furniture; I drove with my sister to the doctor on the night of the 30th July; she had lace-up boots on; I know it, because I unlaced them at Mr. Abigail's before she went to the doctor's, as she was in a faint; I did not take them off—only cased them—and she went straight from Abigail's to the doctor in the same boots; she had her boots on all the time; they could not, by any mistake, be mistaken for slippers.

Cross-examined:

Cross-examined: The social was one in connection with the football club and the Carlton Club; the plan (T.) shows the shop; she was on the counter close to the door; Butler had only one horse at this time; the horse cost more than £5; the cheque-book produced; the horse was bought in September; the housekeeper, &c. [already in possession of Crown—see No. 17]; I know nothing of the authorship of the anonymous letter charging Mrs. Copp with Deeming's kind of crime; I was not here when Copp died; I only returned from Melbourne in September, 1893; I went to Melbourne in November, 1891, or the end of October.

Sophia Barker, married woman:—I know Mrs. Butler; I remember being asked by her to allow my son to stay in the house at night.

Julia Hughes:—I lived next door to petitioner at Glebe-street; she complained, about 28th July, of a man trying to get into the house; she complained, on the morning of the 28th—a Saturday—of his being over at the house; he cautioned her against the person he had taken a room off on the other side of the street—not to have anything to do with her, as she was a mischief-making old woman; I told her not to have to do with her, as I considered he was watching her; she complained of his watching her—he watching her movements in an unfriendly, hostile way; she described his manner to her as hostile; she took refuge in my house from the man; she described him as spying on her on the night of the 30th; I had a conversation with petitioner—not before that; he said he had put a detective and a female relative to watch his wife; that he had been watching for her some time, and he asked me if I could swear to the man, and whether I saw him come out; I said I had not seen him come out but I have seen him go in, and I could not swear to him; he went in at the back door; the gate was barricaded to keep dogs out; she went up to the gate; I think she thought it was her brother, as she expected him that evening; she asked me in the morning to take charge of the key.

Cross-examined: She came to my house on Saturday, between 11 and 12, to take refuge from the man.

Ellen Stephens:—I know respondent; I never had any transaction in pills with her; in the latter part (November) of 1893, Mrs. Butler had a box of pessaries from me on commission; she only got one box from me.

Ellen M'Dougal:—I know petitioner and the respondent since July last; on the night of the 30th petitioner said he had two men watching her, and he came home immediately to her and found a man in the place with her, that he had a suspicion on her for some time previous to that.

Ellen Dufaur:—I lived opposite respondent at the Glebe; I had no man living in my house; knew Williams; he took a room off me in July; I think he was only ten days there; it was a furnished room; he did not stay at night in it; he was there some hours during the day; he said he was from New Zealand, and was going to work at the Kauri Timber Works when the boat was in; he did nothing but sit on the verandah reading a book; on the tenth night there was a noise over the way.

Richard Thomas Bellamy, a chemist, member of the Pharmaceutical Society:—I know respondent; I have supplied her with medicine five or six months ago—Lund's pills, used as a tonic and prescribed by every medical man; she was suffering from anæmia.

INTERVIEWER'S CASE.

Caroline Copp, widow of John Copp:—We lived together till he died, 1st December, 1891; I think it was in November, 1890, he took Butler as an apprentice; at the time of my husband's death he was at the shop under the indenture, and he remained helping me in the shop after his death; I was pregnant at the time of his death, and three or four months after my second child was born; it is by my own wish I have been made a party to this suit; there is no foundation whatever for the charge made against me by Mr. Butler in her answer; there has not been the slightest intimacy between us; I would have at once dismissed him if he had annoyed me in any way.

IN REPLY.

Thomas Ernest Rafe, solicitor in the Supreme Court, and for the petitioner:—On the 30th of June last I was instructed to appear at the Central Police Office to defend petitioner on a charge of deserting his wife; I went on the 4th July; the case was postponed, as my client was laid up with influenza; I advised Mrs. Copp, who brought me the medical certificate of illness, that as either party would be ruined by the litigation that the best thing she could do would be to bring petitioner and respondent together; on the 1st July, in the afternoon, respondent and Mrs. Copp came to my office; I at once said to Mrs. Butler, as I was acting for Mr. Butler, I had no right to see her, "You have your own attorney, Mr. Abigail"; she replied, "It is alright, Mr. Rafe, the matter has been arranged between my husband and myself," and she asked me almost in the same breath whether her husband suspected her; I said, "What do you mean, Mrs. Butler"; she replied, "Oh, it is alright," and added, "I will require a letter signed by petitioner to the effect that he agrees to live together with me, and that letter I want approved by Mr. Abigail"; I drew the letter and sent her with it to Mr. Abigail, to which he replied, sending me her draft, which I had sent to get signed; she said she was going to a chemist to get a bottle of medicine at Soul's; on the 18th I saw her again; she complained that petitioner had not provided her with sufficient money; she said that he had given her 8s.—that it was too small; I asked his wages; she said £1 1s. a week; I found he paid her more than he got; I said I would write, asking him to give her more cash if he could; she asked me not to do so, saying she would go back and see how he treated her; on the 28th July (Saturday) about 12 she came again; I said, "How has your husband been treating you?"; she said he had not given her more cash, but complained that he did not sleep in the same room with her, that she would like him to take a larger house, so that she might take in lodgers; that a Mr. Milner, and her brother, and a man named Williams and two others were prepared to come to the house as boarders; I said I would object to boarders, and I suppose petitioner does; she then asked me whether I knew petitioner had been discharged from Mrs. Copp's, but I should not be surprised to hear that he was, "You place yourself in her position, and Mrs. Copp in yours; Mrs. Copp makes a charge against you of adultery, and you know the charge to be false, what would be your duty as a woman to another woman? however, you had opportunities of satisfying yourself whether the children by your husband and Mr. Copp's are any way alike"; she distinctly said that Mrs. Copp in her shop had said, "Here are my children; examine them to your heart's content, and see if there is any similarity between them"; I said, "What is the result of your examination?" she said, "I can find no trace of any likeness between my child and hers";

I said, "Do you, or do you not, believe the charge against her"; she said, "I do not, Mr. Rofe"; I said "Your duty to Mrs. Copp, as a woman to another woman, is to apologise for what you have said"; she said, "Will you draft a letter"; she said, "I have already apologised"; I said, "In what way"; she said, "I have told her I don't believe that she has been living in adultery with my husband; don't you think that sufficient?" I said, "I would not think that sufficient; would you?" she said, "No"; I said, "Suppose she is visiting friends, and the charge is made by a visitor in the house, and Mrs. Copp says, 'Oh, but Mrs. Butler has withdrawn the charge,' and the visitor says, 'That is your statement; I should like to hear Mrs. Butler's'; she said, "What would you advise?" I said, "Your duty is, if you believe the charge to be untrue, to write to Mrs. Copp, saying so"; she asked me to write the letter; I then wrote a copy of the letter "F" which she took away; she did not copy it in the office [called for and produced]; she said she would copy it and send it; I said the effect of the letter may be to reinstate your husband at Mrs. Copp's; she stamped her foot and said, "If this is to get my husband into Mrs. Copp's shop I will not write it"; I said, "Your duty, Mrs. Butler, is to lay aside all consideration like that when you know the charge is false"; she then said that there was some person who wanted her to get a divorce, and if she did he would marry her; I said, "Mrs. Butler, I am surprised to hear a married woman talking like that; the sooner you have nothing more to do with that man the better for yourself and your husband; you had better take the earliest opportunity of writing to the man and telling him you will have nothing further to do with him"; she said she would do so, but you know, Mr. Rofe, I can earn a pound or two when I like, and that several men had offered her much more; I said, "If you talk like that, Mrs. Butler, I will very probably tell your husband what you say, and if you continue talking like that the sooner you leave my office the better"; she then left. [Witness here ejaculates "You have spoken most falsely in that box."] I, immediately she left, took notes of what she said.

Richard Butler:—I did not ever employ Williams directly or indirectly; Williams was not got to my house that night; my going back to my house that night was purely accidental in consequence of my meeting Goodyear when on my way to Dr. West's; there is no truth in respondent's statement that I kicked her or punched her; once in bed I pushed her with my knee in Melbourne; her arms were never black as she described; I never gave her a black eye; I heard Johnson's evidence. [The portion of witness' evidence following here is already in possession of the Crown.] I never was in the Artillery; I was in the Volunteer Engineers in Melbourne; it is not true that I used to kiss the caovassers.

Examined by me: I rang the bell; I heard it sound twice; the bell hangs in the kitchen; respondent did not tell me she would leave the key with a neighbour; my habit coming home late was to ring the bell.

Cross-examined: My brother came to my house on June the 27th, 1890; I don't know how long he was there before the incident about the woman.

Re-examined: The brother never spoke to me about a divorce; I would have thrashed him if he had; I struck her once when she threw a cup in my face; I slapped her face.

Edward Butler: [The evidence of this witness is all in possession of the Crown, except what follows.]

Cross-examined: I came here as a stowaway, and went to my brother's the day I arrived; I knew of no quarrel between petitioner and his wife because she gave me food; I swear there was no quarrel on that account.

[Deposition of respondent, dated 2nd August, 1894, put in.]

Dwyer says he leaves the case to me.

Ralston applies to dismiss intervenor Copp from the suit, and asks for her costs against respondent; Dwyer says "respondent is suing as a pauper, and that he had abandoned her case against Mrs. Copp"; I dismiss Mrs. Copp from the suit, there not being a tittle of evidence against her; I say she is entitled to her costs, but as it is useless making an order for costs, do not make one; I find the petitioner's issues of adultery with Williams proved, and I find the charge against petitioner not proved, and I grant a decree nisi with costs against Williams, with custody of children; I commit John Johnson to take his trial for perjury at the sittings of the Central Criminal.

No. 19.

Notes of Evidence of The Chief Justice.

Thursday, 13th December, 1894.

THE QUEEN v. JOHN JOHNSON.

DID on 13th November commit perjury before Mr. Justice Windeyer—1st. "I went through the house to bed, and feed the horse, and when I returned I saw the petitioner (meaning one T. R. Butler) having connection with the woman on the counter in the shop."

Plea:—Not guilty.

Mr. Teecs and Mr. Jamieson for accused.

Mr. Wade opens case.

Certificate of Prothonotary of suit. [Exhibit A.]

Arthur Paton, examined by Mr. Wade:—I produce papers in suit Butler v. Butler and Williams; I produce petition, answer, and issues in suit. [Put in, Exhibit B; suit was in forma pauperis.]

Mr. Teecs does not raise any question as to the direction to prosecute by the Judge or of any certificate.

Oscar Hughan, examined by Mr. Wade:—I was acting as usherman in the Divorce Court; I administered the usual oath to the accused in the suit of Butler v. Butler and Williams before His Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer; I afterwards heard him give evidence in the case.

Thomas Ernest Rofe, examined by Mr. Wade:—I am a solicitor of the Supreme Court; I know Thomas Richard Butler; I acted for him in a Divorce suit brought by him against his wife, and I appeared for him before Mr. Justice Windeyer on the 1st, 12th, 13th, and 14th November; the signature attached to petition is that of Thomas Richard Butler; the answer of respondent, Mary Jane Butler, is dated 6th September, 1894, and bears her signature; there are the issues tried before His Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer; there is an issue on behalf of respondent "whether the petitioner committed adultery with a woman unknown to respondent about the month of June, 1890"; I heard all the evidence in the case; before before the above issue the accused gave evidence; I took notes of the examination in chief, and I cross-examined him afterwards; I saw him sworn; he said he was living at 105, King-street, Newtown, during month of June, 1890; that on a night in June, 1890, he and Thos. R. Butler had been to a smoke entertainment at the Oddfellows' Hall; they reached home at 12:30; he (Johnson) opened the door, and outside the door they met a woman who said she was waiting for a hansom; Thos. R. Butler and the accused went into the shop; accused said he immediately went out at the back and fed and bedded a horse which was in the backyard, and returned into the shop about ten minutes afterwards; His Honor here asked him if it took him ten minutes to feed and bed a horse; the accused replied, "No, a quarter of an hour"; just as he got to the shop, he saw the same woman he had seen outside, and Thos. R. Butler, the woman being on the counter, while Thos. R. Butler was having connection with her; His Honor said, "what?" accused said she was not on the counter, she was leaning against the counter while Thos. R. Butler was having connection with her; His Honor again said "what," and the accused said she was not leaning against the counter, she was supported on the ledge of the counter by Thos. R. Butler, while Thos. R. Butler was having connection with her; he then said he reprimanded (or used an equivalent word to reprimanded) Butler, and turned the woman out of the shop; I asked the accused who were on the premises on this particular night; he replied, a servant who was sleeping upstairs, a little child also sleeping upstairs with servant, himself, and Butler; I then asked accused whether young Mr. Butler was not on the premises on this particular night; the accused replied he was not; I had young Mr. Butler brought into Court, and I asked accused whether that young man was not on the premises on the night referred to; the accused replied he was not; I then asked accused whether young Mr. Butler did not actually let him in at the front door on that particular night; the accused said he did not; I then asked accused whether young Mr. Butler was not engaged in making him and T. R. Butler a cup of coffee in the kitchen; the accused replied he was not; I asked him was there a light in back kitchen; he said there was no light in back kitchen, the whole of the ground floor was in darkness; I then got accused to identify a plan [this is it]; I asked the accused to work on the plan where he was standing at the time he said he caught T. R. Butler having connection with this woman; he marked where he was standing with a X, and also put a X near counter where Butler and woman were. [Plan put in marked "C."] The accused said Mrs. Butler was at time in Prince Alfred Hospital suffering from typhoid fever; I asked him how many horses T. R. Butler had at the time he was at the Newtown shop; accused said two; I asked him if both were there at one time; he said, "No"; I asked him if he knew what first horse cost; he said, "With first horse we bought a cart and horse, and cost £8"; I asked him if he knew from whom horse and cart were bought; he said it was bought from a person living at Erskineville; I asked him if he was certain it cost £8; he said, "Yes"; I then asked accused what second horse cost; he said, "about £5"; I then on four different times asked the accused whether he would swear that that horse and cart was on the premises in June, 1890, or for three months after, and I warned the accused each time; he said he would swear it was on premises in June, 1890; I then showed the accused the butt of that cheque, dated 13th September, 1890; he read it, and I asked him again if he would swear that the horse and cart were there in June; he said he would. [Butt of cheque put in, Exhibit "D."] I then handed butt back to accused, and said to him, "Look at the date on that butt, and now will you swear that that horse and cart were on the premises in June, 1890?" he said, "It was on the premises in June, 1890"; I then asked him whether this horse and cart was not bought from a man named Horatio Jones; he said he did not know, but it was bought from a man at Erskineville; to make sure of it, I asked him if there was any doubt as to which horse was bought by Butler first; he said, "No, the £8 horse and cart was bought first"; he said that night they had been at an entertainment held in the honor of the Carlton and South Melbourne football team.

Cross-examined by Mr. Tcece: I have acted for Butler on several occasions; there have been several maintenance orders; I was engaged in all, and succeeded on appeal; I asked Butler how long he had the horse; he said about a month—he bought it in September and sold it in October; he did not say he had the horse two or three months; the accused, in answer to his Honor, said that Butler had the horse nearly six months, and that he could produce a receipt showing when the horse was bought; I then said to accused, "Leave that box, and search through the papers, and if you have that receipt show it to the Court"; the accused did not do so, and again, before His Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer committed the accused, I asked His Honor not to commit him before giving him an opportunity of searching amongst the papers, and if he had receipt, producing it to His Honor; His Honor asked him if he had the receipt; he said he had not, but had a receipt showing when it was sold; mentioning 12th October, 1890; he did not state that he had given the receipt to his solicitor; he said his solicitor had all the papers.

Thomas Richard Butler, examined by Mr. Wade: I am a chemist's assistant, now living at Darlington Road, Darlington; in 1890 I was living at 105, King-street, Newtown; I was married then; my wife's name was Mary Jane; I lately obtained a divorce from her; this was in November last; accused is a brother of my late wife; he gave evidence in the divorce suit; he said on the 27th June, 1890, he and I were returning from a concert, and on arriving home he opened the door with a latch-key; he said there was a woman at the door; he said he went straight through the house to the back, and fed a horse and made its bed; in reply to the Judge he said there was no light about the place, but that the night was a bright night, and he did not need a light; when he came back, he came into the shop, and saw me on the counter on top of a woman having connection with her; the Judge asked him, was I at the beginning, or end, or middle; he said that I was in the middle; this was false; there was no horse on the premises in June, 1890; I bought a horse that year, and gave a cheque for it; I bought it from a man living in Erskineville called Horatio Jones; the man brought the horse in the afternoon, and I gave cheque same day; I paid £8 for horse and cart; this is it. [Mr. Tcece has no objection, put in Exhibit "E."] I got a receipt from the man I bought the horse from; that was the first horse I bought; I bought another some little time after that; I do not know the month; I gave a cheque for it, £4 18s.; this is the cheque, 20th October, 1890. [Put in—Exhibit "F."] I sold the first horse before I bought the second; there was a woman there one night; I do not know the date; Johnson was with me; it was probably about 11 o'clock; when I got to the door I found a woman standing in angle; I asked her to stand aside till I could ring bell; she appeared like a woman who goes about the street; she was half tight; it was then raining; I rang the bell, and my brother, Edward Butler, opened the door; he walked away from door; I followed, and went down the yard; I think I said to accused, "I am going to the back"; the woman asked if we would give her a drink; I told Johnson to give her a drink at door;

Johnson was at door; we were manufacturing a new stove polish at this time; I was outside perhaps three minutes; I came back into kitchen; my brother was then making coffee; there was a light there; accused was not there; I looked up shop, and saw woman sitting on a pile of something; I saw accused, and said, "What did you let the woman into shop for; I told you not to let her in"; he said, "She rushed me"; I said, "That's nonsense"; I said to woman that she must go out, and she replied she was going to stay there all night; both of us then put her out; I waited for a little while till she went away; she hired a hansom, and went away in it; I complained next morning about his allowing the woman in; he then showed me a bite on his chest; this was at breakfast time in morning; my wife was then in Prince Alfred Hospital; I recollect the Judge committing him for trial; he said he was sure it was 27th June, because it was on the day my brother arrived from England.

Cross-examined by Mr. Teece: I am 31 years of age; I have two children, youngest 7 years of age; two maintenance orders obtained after this; there was a separation deed drawn up between me and my wife; my brother arrived here on 27th June, 1890; I said I was almost certain that it was not the 27th that the woman was there, because it was not likely that my brother would be making coffee for us on the night of his arrival; I cannot fix the date of the woman being at the house, nor of the social; I went with Johnson to one social in June; I sent my brother to see my wife; my wife went to hospital on 5th June, 1890, and was discharged 11th July; I do not remember seeing Miss Ducker on night of football social; I think the night I saw woman outside shop we had been to Mr. John Copp; Johnson said he was bitten by the woman in Divorce Court.

Thomas E. Rofe, recalled: When accused committed for trial he told His Honor that he had since ascertained that the concert was held on same night that T. R. Butler's brother arrived in Sydney.

Edward Butler (examined by Mr. Wade): I am a brother of T. R. Butler; I came out from England some years ago; I know accused; I came here in the s.s. "Fifeshire," and arrived on 27th June, 1890; I recollect house in Newtown, where my brother lived; I recollect an occurrence about a woman; this was two or three days or a week after my arrival; I was in the house by myself, with a nurse and a child, in the early part of the evening; I heard a row between a woman and a cabman outside about a fare, close to the house; I then went back into the kitchen; I was making coffee; I recollect my brother coming home; this was about ten minutes after I saw woman and cabman; my brother came to the door; the bell was ringing; I opened the door, and saw my brother and Johnson; I opened the door and walked away; I was half-way down passage when my brother passed and went out in the yard; I went to kitchen; my brother went through kitchen to go out; did not see Johnson there; my brother came back from yard and went into shop; I heard Johnson and my brother quarrelling; when my brother went back I went into door of dining-room; I saw my brother talking to Johnson—getting on to him; I saw a woman; she was standing in shop; the woman was talking too; accused and my brother put the woman out; that is the last I saw of her; we all went to kitchen, and I got the coffee ready; all I recollect about the conversation was that my brother asked what accused meant by letting woman into shop; Johnson said she rushed him; I could not state what condition woman was in; I know she was intoxicated; the next day the same subject came up and Johnson opened his shirt and said "She rushed me, and there is where she bit me."

Cross-examined by Mr. Jamieson: When I landed from the ship I walked away up George-street with my brother; it was about dinner-time when I left ship; my brother got me a fit out at the tailors; I think they did not go out that evening; I can swear they did not go to an entertainment that night; I do not remember them going to a smoke concert; I cannot tell where they had been; the night woman was there; I think they came back at 10:30 or 10:45; there was no horse on the premises; the night-woman was there; the woman may have been there two or three days after, or a week after I landed, but I am not certain; the Wednesday after 27th June I went to hospital to see Mrs. Butler; it was said at breakfast next morning that the woman rushed him and bit him; I think the servant's name was Gosnell; I am not sure; I know a Miss Pugh; I have spoken to her outside the Court; I did not say to her not to give evidence which might put Tom in gaol; I know Miss Ducker; I said to Miss Pugh, "What are you coming up against Tom for?" she said she did not know what she was subpoenaed for, she would not do Tom any harm; I did not say that if accused was acquitted at the trial Tom would have to take his place.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wade: When I was speaking to woman accused came up and said, "Better come away and not be talking to him"; Mr. Rofe was not there at the time; I was talking to them a little way down roadway towards gate; I may have been a month at my brother's place after I came out; there was no cart or horse there all that month; first horse and cart I saw there was on Eight Hour Day; I am not certain.

Horatio Jones, examined by Mr. Wade: I am a dealer, living in Erskineville; was there in 1890; I had a transaction with Butler over four years ago—a horse, spring cart, and harness, the amount was £8, paid by a cheque; I got the cheque on a Saturday afternoon; I delivered the horse and cart same day I got cheque; I left cheque with Radford; I got cheque on 13th September, 1890.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jamieson: He might have had horse two months after I sold it.

To me: I wrote "H. Jones" on the cheque; that is my writing; I wrote that day I got cheque.

George Radford, examined by Mr. Wade: I am a grocer, carrying on business at Newtown; I know Jones; his mother-in-law dealt with me; I received a cheque for £8 from him; this is the cheque; I endorsed it; that is my name on back; I paid cheque to my account.

Grantley Sheridan, examined by Mr. Wade: Clerk in the Bank of New South Wales; I produce two cheques; £8, that was received on 15th September, 1890; the £4 16s. cheque was received and paid on 22nd October, 1890.

Herbert Hewlett, examined by Mr. Wade: Clerk in English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered Bank; the £4 16s. cheque passed through our bank on 22nd October, 1890.

George Radford, recalled: I paid in cheque shortly after I received it.

Alfred Ernest Withey, examined by Mr. Wade: I am a clerk in Crown Solicitor's Office; I have made inquiries and cannot find payee of £4 16s. cheque.

Case for the Crown closed.

DEFENCE.

John Johnson, examined by Mr. Jamieson: I am the accused; I was a witness in Divorce Court in Butler v. Butler; it was on 27th June, 1890; on the evening of that night Butler and I were at a smoke social in Oddfellows' Hall, Elizabeth-street, given by East Sydney Football Club; after it was over we crossed over to the waiting-room at corner of Elizabeth-street and Liverpool-street; there was a friend of ours in tram called Miss Ducker; we were speaking to her on way home; she got out near Blind Asylum; we got out at Essington Road, Newtown; on arriving home we found a woman in doorway, standing in doorway; the door was a bit back from footpath; I inquired how it was she was there at that time of night; I opened the door with a key and walked through to the back; I left Butler at the door; went out to the back; went to a water-closet, and bedded and fed the horse; I came again into the kitchen and walked straight through into the shop; I was away ten minutes or a quarter of an hour; the kitchen and shop and all downstairs in darkness; I went into shop; on arriving there I saw Thomas Butler having connection with this woman; I knew by her appearance that it was the same woman; it was pretty light in front of the shop; the door was shut; the woman was leaning against the counter [describes it], and Butler was standing up supporting her in that position; he had his arms round her standing in front of her; her clothes were up about her middle; I was quite positive that he was having connection with her, and remonstrated about his disgraceful conduct; I said his conduct was simply disgraceful; as soon as they heard me in the shop they separated; I then caught hold of the woman and put my arm round her, and in doing so she bit me on the arm—not the chest; I opened the door and put her out; she stayed out there, using very filthy language; after that a cab passed and stopped; a cab passed, and I am not sure if it was stopped by Butler or myself; then the woman asked Butler to pay the cab fare; he refused to do so; the woman entered the cab, and Butler spoke to cabman; cab drove on 40 or 50 yards; I went into shop; the woman came back again without cab; Butler standing in the doorway; he called out to me, "Here she is coming back"; I went out of door, and she came up and asked Butler, using very filthy language, how it was he did not pay the cab fare; in coming up to Butler she struck him in the eye with her fist closed; she was using bad language and calling Butler very bad names, and after abusing him for a while she went back to cab again and drove off; we went inside, and I spoke to Butler again about his conduct; he said, "Oh, there is no use in making a fuss about it," and after that we went upstairs to bed; the front door is three parts glass; no one else present except ourselves and this woman; housekeeper and her child upstairs; Edward Butler was not there; I recollect his coming to the house; I think it was on Monday he first arrived; I had never seen Edward Butler before that date; I was professional umpire to New South Wales football during that time; I was goal umpire at the football match next day; I do not remember having supper that night, and had no coffee; no fire in kitchen that night; we had a light after woman had gone; as to horse, the colour of horse was either a light bay or a chestnut; this was a horse that was up in a raffle held by a man named Pierce, and Butler had the loan of that horse for a while; he was in the raffle; I think this was the horse that was there that night; Butler purchased two horses while at Newtown; the first horse he bought was purchased from Jones; the second horse was purchased from a man named Goldberg; he also had this borrowed horse, one that was raffled; I could not say how long he had it, whether a week or a fortnight or what time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wade: This woman was using disgusting language; I put the woman out; I stood in the doorway; she appeared to have been drinking, and I would take her to be one of the ordinary street women; I gave evidence on behalf of my sister at Divorce suit, and I have no respect for a man who would break his marriage vows; I would not countenance this; I was a witness on behalf of my sister in Police Court; I thought a great wrong was done my sister; I recollect speaking to a friend of mine before last Christmas, 1893; I was asked this question in the Divorce Court, and said I had never mentioned it to a single soul; I think all maintenance cases since the beginning of the year; I was in Police Court in a case last year also; I said in Divorce Court we got home about 12 or 12:30; it would not be what you would call a dark night; no moon; the tram is 30 or 40 yards from house; the concert was a smoke concert, beginning at 8 o'clock; I think we caught last tram home; these two people were having connection; they were 15, or 16, or 18 feet away; I did not slip along on all-fours; they had not stopped when I paused; I then walked on again, and they separated; I spoke to them as I walked on; I did not admit that the young Butler was in the Colony the day after the occasion; I knew what evidence I was going to give in Divorce Court; I had seen it written down and read; examined and cross-examined for some time before lunch hour; I said I could find the receipt for the sale of the horse, not the purchase; I swore that this horse and cart (H. Jones') were on the premises in June; I was asked a good many questions about the horse; I did not breathe one word throughout about the raffled horse; I did not breathe one word about the horse and cart; I mean the horse and cart belonging to Pearce; Pearce kept a crockery shop; I do not know who won the horse; I do not know where Pearce is now; the cart was kept on a vacant piece of ground at the back; there was a blind in front window; this may have been there in June; glass on door was painted blue; and window painted blue on top; highest part of blind was as high as me; lowest part of window covered with blind; part of the woman's body was resting on the counter; her behind was on edge of counter; I believe her feet were off the ground; the woman was of medium height; the shop was in the name of Butler; we had business between us; I left business end of October same year; since I have been in Sydney I have lived a good deal with my sister; she was in Sydney after petition served, and I saw her daily; I knew I would be required as a witness after 6th September.

Re-examined by Mr. Jamieson: I knew I would be required as a witness before my sister filed her answer; when I gave evidence in Divorce Court I admit I made a false statement about the horse; I now recollect Butler using a horse before 15th September; I attended to the horse; I also stated at Divorce Court that I had not stated this matter before to anyone; that is also not true; I now recollect speaking to a man named Hillier.

To me: We had Pearce's horse and cart and harness for about two or three weeks, and I do not recollect his paying anything for it; he did not buy the horse.

Henry Headley, examined by Mr. Jamieson: I am a basket-maker, and manager of the Blind Asylum, Boomerang-street; I take part in football sports; I played the game for some years; I knew accused for last three years; he was professional umpire for New South Wales; I knew him as an umpire; so far as I know, he bears a good character; do not know anything to the contrary; I recollect a concert being given on 27th June, 1890; I believe accused was there, but I would not be sure; could not swear it; never saw Butler to my knowledge.

Cross-

Cross-examined by Mr. Wade : Would meet him at football matches once a fortnight ; I belong to East Sydney.

Sarah Gosnell, examined by Mr. Jamieson : I am a dressmaker ; I know accused and Butler ; I was in Butler's employ at one time, over four years ago ; I was in his employ in 1890 ; I recollect Mrs. Butler being in hospital ; I was in his employ then ; I was some months in his employ before Mrs. Butler went to hospital, not long afterwards ; I was canvassing for electric stove polish ; Butler and the accused lived over the shop ; I was daily in and about shop ; did not live there ; I used to have a cup of tea there occasionally ; sometimes I would have it by myself and sometimes with others ; I was on friendly terms with all there ; I recollect a horse being there ; could not say if it was bought or not ; I saw it in yard, and Butler riding it on one or two occasions, and laughed when I saw it ; can't fix when I saw a horse there ; I saw a horse there when Mrs. Butler was in hospital ; I recollect a smoke concert being held ; I recollect hearing of this from Butler next day ; it was part of Johnson's work to attend to horse ; I think I left employ at end of July or August, and I have seen Johnson before that attending to some horse on premises ; I recollect Edward Butler coming to him ; could not say when he arrived ; he was there during portion of time I was there ; I was then married to my present husband, but passed under the name of Miss Pugh ; I have been at Court since Monday, and I have seen Edward Butler about Court ; I have spoken to him and he to me ; this was on Monday last ; Edward Butler came up to me and said, "I want to speak to you a moment ; you are not going to say anything against Tom, are you, for if you do he might get clear, and Tom might get into it."

Cross-examined by Mr. Wade : I spoke to him in passage ; I said I was here to tell what I knew about a horse ; I may have said, "I do not know what I am here for" ; I said, "I am here to say all I know about a horse" ; I said I did not wish to do any person any harm ; so far as I know he is a respectable man ; I have been in Mrs. Butler's company every day the last three weeks ; I have not been in hotels with Mrs. Butler ; I have not seen Gosnell for a year ; he has been travelling ; I took my maiden name ; out of respect to my husband's family I took my maiden name and I left my wedding ring off ; Mrs. Butler hunted me up only since divorce proceedings ; I was working for tailoring in 1892 ; I was frequently at the house after Mrs. Butler came out of hospital ; I never saw horse in cart ; I saw Mr. Butler riding it ; I would not swear it was a horse or a pony, but it was a chestnut ; I laughed at him when I saw him riding ; I sent a girl called Annie Johnston, who I knew represented herself as my sister, or called herself Annie Pugh—I sent her to Butler to borrow £5 ; she came back and said he could not lend the money, as he had no spare cash, as he had just bought a horse ; I had seen a horse with him before I got that message ; he never told me whether he bought a saddle or not ; I may have said I did not know what I was there for ; if I said it I was not speaking the truth ; Mrs. Butler is with me here now, and Miss Ducker also.

Elizabeth Ducker, examined by Mr. Jamieson : I am a nurse ; I know Butler and Johnson ; I knew Butler four years ago ; I have attended Mrs. Butler ; I knew Butler in 1890 ; I helped to take Mrs. Butler to hospital ; I was in Butler's house when Mrs. Butler was in hospital ; I was there, it might have been, six or seven times ; if disengaged, I would walk up to see him ; I stayed five days with Mrs. Butler till I got her to hospital ; Butler had a horse which he drove down to my place, and asked me what I thought of it ; he said he had bought it ; I think it was a light sort of horse—chestnut ; it looked very small in harness ; I met Johnson and Butler one evening in Elizabeth-street, corner of Liverpool-street ; they got into tram with me, and said they had been at a smoke concert ; could not be certain of the date.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wade : I was visiting at Mrs. Butler's in 1890, and frequently at Butler's house after she came out of hospital—the same house ; I do not know that she was in hospital in April, 1891 ; I was in Darlington in 1890, moved to Moore Park in 1891 ; I went to England in 1891 ; I now say he did not drive to my place, he rode to my place ; the horse was not in harness, but had a saddle on ; I have never seen Mrs. Butler since she came out of hospital till now, when I came to speak for her ; I do not know where she lives now ; I know she lives in Pine-street ; I have been speaking to Mrs. Butler about the matter ; I saw the case in the papers ; did not think Mrs. Butler deserved what she got, and now I have come here to give this evidence.

Frank Hillier, examined by Mr. Jamieson : I am a cordial-maker at Newtown ; I know Johnson, accused, for about four years ; I have known him intimately for two years of that time ; I have a high opinion of his character ; proved him to be an upright, honorable man.

Alexander Martin Milne, examined by Mr. Jamieson : Member of firm of Milne Bros., brass founders ; I know Johnson ; he was in my employ as a brass finisher some months ago ; in my employ for seven or eight months ; I saw him every day ; he was a first-class workman, and a decent sort of man, and truthful in what I had to do with him.

Case for the defence closed.

Butler, re-called, examined by Mr. Wade : I have not had the loan of a horse, cart, and harness from Pearce ; I had no saddle in June and July ; I bought a saddle on 29th September, 1890 ; I gave for saddle and bridle, £2 2s. 6d. ; it is not true that the woman struck me in the eyes ; there is no stable where Mrs. Gosnell says ; there is a w.c. ; Mrs. Gosnell said she did not know what she was brought here for.

Cross-examined by Mr. Jamieson : She said nothing about coming to give evidence about a horse ; I never borrowed a horse in my life till six months ago ; I had a horse lent to me six months ago, but never before that.

T. E. Rofe, re-called, examined by Mr. Wade : Mrs. Gosnell said nothing about a horse, or coming to give evidence about a horse, in my presence.

Case in reply closed.

Mr. Jamieson addresses jury.

Mr. Wade replies.

I sum up.

Jury retire at 8:43.

Glebe, to wit. }

BE it remembered that on this 17th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Glebe, in the Colony of New South Wales, Mary Jane Butler, 57, Church-street, Newtown, in the Metropolitan Police District, appears before me, the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices duly assigned to keep the peace of our Lady the Queen in and for the Colony of New South Wales, and on oath informs me that within divers days and times during the year of our Lord 1894, at the Metropolitan Police District, in the aforesaid Colony, one George Williams and a woman named Mrs. Peake or Davis did amongst themselves conspire together to defeat the course of justice, contrary to the Act in such case made and provided; whereupon the said Mary Jane Butler prays that I, the said Justice, will proceed in the premises according to law and issue my warrant for the arrest of the two accused before named. If this course of action is not adopted the ends of justice may be defeated.

Sworn at Glebe, in the said Colony, on the } day first above written, before me, — }
GEO. A. LLOYD, JUNR., Justice of the Peace.

M. J. BUTLER.

WARRANT TO APPREHEND A PERSON CHARGED WITH AN INDICTABLE OFFENCE.

To the Superintendent and a Constable in the Police Force for the Colony of New South Wales, and to all other Constables in said Force.

WHEREAS George Williams and Mrs. Peake or Davis, of Metropolitan Police District, in the said Colony, hath this day been charged upon oath before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said Colony of New South Wales, for that within divers days and times during the year 1894, at the said district in the aforesaid Colony, they did amongst themselves conspire together to defeat the course of justice.

These are, therefore, to command you, in Her Majesty's name, forthwith to apprehend the said George Williams and Mrs. Peake or Davis, and to bring them before me or some other of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said Colony, to answer unto the said charge, and to be further dealt with according to law.

Given under my hand and seal, this 17th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Glebe, in the Colony aforesaid.

GEO. A. LLOYD, JUNR.,

Justice of the Peace

CHARLES

CHARLES DAVIS ALIAS WILLIAMS (45), AND ELIZABETH SUSANNAH PEAKE, ALIAS DAVIS.

Within divers days and times during the year 1894, at the Metropolitan Police District, in the Colony of New South Wales, did amongst themselves, and with divers persons unknown, conspire together to defeat the course of justice.

Mr. Sullivan appears for the prosecution; Mr. M. Williamson appears for the defence.

Detective Officer James Draper, on his oath, saith:—On Friday night last, the 17th instant, in company with Constable Allanson, I went to a house No. 156, Riley-street; I saw accused Davis, and asked him if his wife was in; he said, "Yes, she's upstairs"; I asked him if he would tell her that I wanted to see her; he said, "She's upstairs"; he led the way; I followed him upstairs, and in a bedroom he showed me the accused, Mrs. Peake, as his wife; we all came downstairs to a room and I read the warrant produced to both of them; neither of them made any reply; out on the street, a few minutes afterwards, Davis went back to put a collar on, and Allanson went with him; Mrs. Peake said to me, "When was this information laid"; I said, "I think it was laid to-day"; I said, "Did you expect it?" she said, "No, the unexpected always comes first"; she said, "Whatever they can do to him they can do nothing to me"; I said, "How long have you been living with Davis as his wife?" she replied, "About five years"; I then brought them to the Central Police Station, and charged them by virtue of the warrant produced; I searched the premises and I found the letters produced (Exhibits "A") in the bedroom occupied by the accused.

Taken and sworn at the Police Office, Glebe, on the }
23rd day of May, 1895, before me,—

JAMES DRAPER.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

This deponent, William Smith Arnott, on his oath, saith:—I am the acting postmaster at the Park-street Post-office; I reside at Manly Beach; I know Davis; he has been coming to the post-office to receive letters addressed "C. X. Davis," and also for letters addressed "3A"; he does not get letters in the name of Sinclair; I can't swear if accused received the letters produced (Exhibit "A"); I am positive he receives letters marked "C. X. Davis"; I have seen accused in company with Mrs. Peake.

Taken and sworn at the Police Office, Glebe, on the }
23rd day of May, 1895, before me,—

WM. S. ARNOTT.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

This deponent, Isabella Davis, on her oath, saith:—I am wife of accused Davis; I reside at 15, Bunn-street, Pyrmont; I was married to accused in Auckland, New Zealand, in the year 1883; I have three children; I have been residing in Bunn-street seven and a half years; accused's name is Charles Davis; I can't swear if my husband has spoken to me about a case Butler v. Butler; my husband has spoken to me about money he had received in the Butler case; I cannot remember the exact words; accused said he "had received about £1 or £2 in the Butler divorce case"; I can't swear what occupation he has been following; when he was living with me he was following the occupation of a photographer.

23rd day of May, 1895, before me,—

ISABELLA DAVIS.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

This deponent, Minnie Fowler, on her oath, saith:—I am a single woman, residing at No. 5, Pitt-street, Redfern; I was a servant to Mr. Rofe, solicitor, at Redfern last year; I have seen the accused Davis come to Mr. Rofe's house.

MINNIE FOWLER.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

This deponent, Walter Webb, on his oath, saith:—I am a plasterer, residing No. 2, Ross-street, Forest Lodge; last year I was working on a building at Church-street, Newtown, for a Mr. Jansen; it was about the 26th or 27th day of July, 1894; I remember accused coming to me; he called round two or three times; he wanted to see Mr. Jansen; accused said to Mr. Jansen, "Do you know Mrs. Butler?" Mr. Jansen said, "If you want to say anything say it before all those that's here"; he wanted to speak to Mr. Jansen in private; Jansen walked away and accused followed him.

By Mr. Williamson: I am no relation of Mrs. Butler; I am no friend of Mrs. Butler; I knew Mrs. Butler, because I worked on the job three days; I spoke to Mrs. Butler after the divorce proceedings were over.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the }
23rd day of May, 1895, before me,—

WALTER WEBB.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

This deponent, Mary Poole, on her oath, saith:—I am a married woman residing with my husband, William Henry Poole, at 19, Walter-street, Paddington; I know the female accused three years back last March; she worked with me at business; I know Mrs. Butler for a good number of years; I know the female accused as Miss Warren; the male accused used to meet her coming home from business; I can't recollect the name she called him; I lost a child, and the female accused called on me; I addressed her as Miss Warren; she said, "I am not Miss Warren, I am Mrs. Peake"; I asked her about the accused; she said, "He was a married man with a wife and children"; she said her husband was doing seven years in Hobart; she said he was doing the seven years for a rape on a child; she said, "I'm not doing anything in the tailoring now, that she was selling pills, and that her address was 3A, Park-street Post Office"; she said that Williams had to do with her in the selling of the pills; I saw Mrs. Butler after this conversation, and I again saw Mrs. Peake afterwards; I said, "Are you in any divorce cases, or are you ever mixed up in any?" she replied, "I have not, but a man named Butler came to her, and offered her £20 if she would go and prove that she had sold white pills to Mrs. Butler"; she did not tell me what the pills were for; from what accused told me I believe the pills were for procuring abortion; I asked who Mrs. Butler was, and she said, "A Mary Jane Johnson, of Carlton, Melbourne"; I said, "I know a Mary Jane Johnson, of North Melbourne, that married a Mr. Butler," and she said, "That's the same party, it was my mistake, she lived in North Melbourne"; I saw the accused Peake again last Friday; she came to my place; there was a friend of mine, Mrs. Brown, came in; I brought up the Butler divorce case, and she denied about the £20 in the Butler divorce case; she said, "I sold the pills to Mrs. Butler, but I don't say that they were for Mrs. Butler herself."

By Mr. Williamson: It is about two months ago since I had the conversation with Mrs. Butler about the £20; I knew the rule nisi had been granted in the Butler divorce case.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the }
23rd day of May, 1895, before me,—

MARY POOLE.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

THIS deponent, Nicholas Dufour, on his oath, saith :—I am a van proprietor, residing at 124, Glebe-street, Glebe ; I know the male accused ; he rented a room off my wife, with whom I live ; the house is right opposite where Mrs. Butler resided ; he came to my place soon after Mrs. Butler resided opposite me ; accused disappeared ten days after he came, and the day on which the disturbance took place at Butler's ; accused rented a bedroom ; I saw him at my place during the day-time ; accused did not have a key of the room ; accused sat on the verandah reading a book ; accused did not sleep at my place at night-time.

By Mr. Williamson : I was living in the house with my wife at the time the divorce proceedings were taken ; my wife was a witness.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the 23rd day of May, 1895, before me,—

A. MONEY FISHER, S.M.

THIS deponent, Hans Jansen, on his oath, saith :—I am a builder and contractor, residing at Laurence-street, Alexandria ; I was building a couple of cottages in Newtown, next to the residence of Mrs. Butler, in July last year ; Webb, the plasterer, was working for me ; accused called to see me one day ; he wanted to speak to me privately ; he wanted to speak to me in the lane ; I asked accused to speak to me publicly, that I was frightened ; he asked me, " Did I see anyone knocking at Mrs. Butler's door ? " ; I told him I took no notice who knocked at the door ; I don't remember accused saying anything about me doing him a good turn ; I don't remember anything else accused said to me.

By Mr. Williamson : I spoke to accused in the building ; men present could not hear me, because the carpenters were making such a noise.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the 28th day of May, 1895, before me,—

HANS JANSEN.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

THIS deponent, George Alfred Lloyd, junior, on his oath, saith :—I am Clerk of Petty Sessions at the Glebe Police Court, residing 33, Glenview-street, Paddington ; I know Mrs. Butler ; Mrs. Butler called on me on the 30th July, 1894, and made a complaint to me ; this took place during office hours ; in consequence of the complaint I made certain inquiries ; I sent a message to Mr. Maxted and to Mr. Abigail.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the 28th day of May, 1895, before me,—

GEORGE A. LLOYD, JUNR.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

THIS deponent, John Howarth, on his oath, saith :—I am a solicitor of the Supreme Court ; I reside at Church-street, Randwick ; I was the solicitor for the petitioner in the case Brady versus Brady ; in that case there were two affidavits made by one Charles Davis ; one was dated 27th June, 1894, and the other the 27th July, 1894 ; accused Davis was the person who signed those affidavits ; I saw the accused sign the affidavit dated 27th day of June, 1894 ; I saw accused sign the other affidavit, and my clerk took it to be sworn.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the 28th day of May, 1895, before me,—

JOHN HOWARTH.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

Affidavit signed by Davis marked
"D," Exhibit
"B."

THIS deponent, Eliza Dufour, on her oath, saith :—I am the wife of Nicholas Dufour, and reside at 124, Glebe-street, Glebe ; I have resided at 124, Glebe-street, for two years ; I let one of my rooms, in July last year there was a cottage opposite mine empty ; I remember the Butler family moving into it about July last year ; I remember the accused Davis coming to me ; I had a card on the wall intimating that I had a room to let ; when he came he said, " Have you a room to let ? " I replied, " Yes," and Davis engaged it ; he said he came from New Zealand, and he was waiting to work at the Kauri boats when they came in ; he said he had a sister, and that she was travelling, and he would bring her, that she was then residing at Surry Hills ; the same evening accused Davis brought a woman to my place ; I believe the female accused is the woman ; the following Tuesday Davis came to my place and stayed a few hours in the morning and a few hours after dinner ; this took place every day while accused Davis had the room ; accused did not sleep at my place ; Davis did not bring any luggage or clothing with him ; he had no key of the house ; he could not sleep at my house without I knew it ; he stayed at my place ten days altogether ; I did not see Davis on the evening of the row at Mrs. Butler's ; that was the last I saw of Davis.

By Mr. Williamson : I gave evidence in the case of Butler versus Butler in the Divorce Court ; I gave evidence for Mrs. Butler.

Taken and sworn, at the Police Office, Glebe, on the 28th day of May, 1895, before me,—

ELIZA DUFOUR.

A. MONEY FISHER, Stipendiary Magistrate.

THIS deponent, Mary Jane Butler, on her oath, saith : I am the wife of Thomas Richard Butler ; I reside apart from my husband at Church-street, Newtown ; I went to live in Glebe about 16th July, 1894 ; that's when I first knew accused Davis ; I saw Davis first when he came to my back gate and sent my little boy in for me ; I went outside ; he said, " Good morning, madam " ; I said " Good morning " ; he said, " Excuse me, but there was a lady knocking at the door ; I called out and told her that you were not in " ; he said, " I told her that you hadn't gone far as I (meaning me) had my apron on " ; he told me the woman said she would call back in two hours ; he said, " Excuse me for coming in the back way " ; he said something about the people opposite where he was staying ; I had not seen the accused Davis before ; two days later my children were kite flying ; I went out to clean the verandah ; I saw accused Davis sitting on Dufour's verandah, and when he saw me he jumped off ; my little girl came over to me, and the accused Davis also came over to me ; Davis remarked what beautiful eyes and hair my little girl had ; he said my child's hair would turn the same colour as mine ; he asked me why did I coil my hair so tight ; I went inside ; I did not speak to him ; he was paying attentions to me ; I saw my husband next day ; I went out that evening, the evening I saw my husband ; a minute or two after I got out I met Davis ; he said, " Going out " ; I said, " Yes, to my brother's in Cleveland-street " ; Davis replied, " I am going in the same direction, I'm going to Darlington Road " ; we walked along together ; in the course of a conversation he said he was working at the Kauri Timber Company—that he was doing detective work ; accused walked with me as far as Cleveland-street ; accused was calling me " Dear," and said he had fallen in love with me ; he said he had fallen in love at first sight ; I went on to my brother's ; I did not stay long at my brother's ; I met accused when I left my brother's, and he walked back with me ; he asked me to go out with him, and I refused ; accused left me near my place ; accused wanted to come in and sit with me ; I had previously told accused my husband had gone out ; he again wanted to come in and sit with me, and I refused to let him ; he did not come in and sit with me ; in consequence of this man's conduct, I went and saw Mr. Delohery, Stipendiary Magistrate, at the Water Police Court ; I complained of Butler's conduct, and the accused Davis' conduct ; on the same day I came to this office and saw Mr. Blackmore, clerk in this office, and I made a complaint about the man Davis' conduct ; the next day, Saturday morning, I complained of Davis' conduct to my husband ; in the afternoon accused Davis paid me another visit ; I saw Davis in my dining-room ; Davis had walked into my dining-room while I was upstairs ; accused called out to me, " I want to speak to you a minute " ; I came down stairs and walked into the kitchen ; accused followed me, and wanted to know if I was going out with him that night ; I said " No " ; accused said " I want to buy you some clothes " ; I said, " No " ; accused said, " You can say your brother bought them " ; I said to accused, " If you don't go out I will get some one to put you out," and he went and sat on the dresser and said he would wait till Butler came and tell him he (accused) wanted to marry me, that he loved me ; I walked into the yard ; he said, " Will you write a note and let me know if you will go out with me " ; I said, " Yes," to get rid of him ; I got upon the fence and told Mrs. Hughes something ; I saw accused again the following Monday at 11 o'clock p.m. ; I was coming coming from this Court to my own place, when I met accused Davis; I told Davis that my brother was going to see him; accused left me at my place; about 3 o'clock p.m. the same day I met my brother, and he went down to my house with me; Davis was sitting on Dufour's verandah; in consequence of what my brother told me, I called accused over to my place; we all went inside; I was acting under the advice of Mr. Abigail, my solicitor; when we got inside, Davis said, "I want to marry you"; he said, "I don't mind being a co-respondent; I know Butler wants to get a divorce"; my brother wanted accused to go and see Mr. Abigail, and he (Davis) did not want to go till Wednesday; my brother asked Davis to meet him at his house, Cleveland-street, that evening; my brother asked accused not to molest me, and he promised to leave me alone; after accused left me, myself and brother came up and told Mr. Lloyd something about the man Davis; my brother went to work, and I went back home; Butler usually came home between 5 and 6 o'clock p.m.; on the Monday Butler came home about quarter-past 6 o'clock p.m., had a cup of tea; he remained about quarter of an hour and went away; about 7 o'clock p.m. I heard some one at the back gate; I called out, "Who's there?" accused said, "Me"; I knew accused's voice; he said, "I am going with you to your brother's"; I reminded accused of his promise; I went upstairs to get my bat, and when I came down accused had taken the light from the kitchen into the dining-room; he was looking at my photographic album, and asked some questions about them; he said, "You haven't been long dressing"; there was a rush through the kitchen into the dining-room; it was my husband; he said, "What's this? where's the man?" Butler said, "What's this?" and looked behind the door, and lifted up the table-cover, and said, "There's the man"; Butler said something to accused Davis, and they pretended to be fighting; accused laid back on the floor as if wounded; Goodyear came in, and tried to separate them, and said to Butler, "Don't take the law into your own hands"; Davis' clothes were not disarranged; Davis did not have connection with me; I heard my husband swear Davis' clothes were disarranged; if his clothes were disarranged, they were done so while he was under the table; accused said, "Come with me, I'll treat you better than he will"; I refused to go with him; afterwards my husband ordered me out of the house; I did not lock the kitchen door, the man Davis must have locked it; I saw the accused Peake while I was packing my things in Cleveland-street; she called on me, and said she was selling pills for females at 1s. 6d. a box; I said, "I don't want any, thank you," and then shut the door; I again saw her on the Thursday before the Monday at my place in Glebe-street; she called on me selling pills; she said the pills were 5s. a box; she also said she had an instrument for bringing on an abortion; I did not buy any pills; I told her I did not want any; she again called on Saturday, and said, "Is your friend O.K.?" I had previously sent her to a friend; I said, "Excuse me asking you to go out the back way, as there is a man opposite who molests me"; she turned round and looked out the window, and said, "I know George Williams; many a fine pound he put into my pocket to get girls out of trouble; all girls fall in love with him"; I said, "I'd be long sorry to fall in love with him"; she then went away; I went on my knees, and declared before God and my husband that I had not done wrong.

By Mr. Williamson: I won't swear that the evidence I gave to-day is the same as I gave in the case of Butler versus Butler; I did not think at the time that the woman Peake was connected with Davis; at the time I gave my evidence in the Divorce Court, I told the Judge in the Court that I went on my knees before my God and husband, and declared that I had not done wrong; I am taking these proceedings to prove my innocence; I have had to sell my bed to buy the clothes I am wearing; I have never asked the proprietors of any newspapers to open a column in their papers for me, so as I could obtain money to prosecute the two accused; I never received slippers from accused Davis; I went from my home when I was ordered out by my husband to Cleveland-street; I did not change my clothes at my brother's; I went from my brother's to Dr. Kingsbury's, and submitted myself for examination; I did not take any slippers from my husband's house; I did not destroy any slippers.

ISABELLA DAVIS.

This deponent, James William Abigail, on his oath, saith:—I am a solicitor of the Supreme Court, residing at Stammore; I was solicitor for Mrs. Butler in maintenance proceedings and an appeal and a second maintenance proceedings; Mr. Thomas Rofe, junior, acted for the defendant in all those proceedings; Mrs. Butler called on me on a Tuesday evening in July, 1894; prior to that she had called to my office and made certain statements; in consequence of the statements I gave her certain advice, which she did not take.

By Mr. Williamson: I was acting in July last for Mrs. Butler; I gave Mrs. Butler certain advice to bring Williams up to me to test his sincerity, I telling her that it was a trap, and further, that she had one or two things to do—to either leave Williams alone, have nothing to do with him, or to connect her husband with what he was doing, and to lay an information against them for conspiracy; it was either in June or July, 1894, I gave Mrs. Butler the advice; it was certainly prior to the divorce proceedings; divorce proceedings at that time had not been initiated; Mrs. Butler had not spoken to me about divorce proceedings; I told Mrs. Butler, as she had gone back to her husband, and I doubted his sincerity in getting her back, I told her not to trouble me any more; after living with her husband for two or three days she called on me; I acted for Mrs. Butler in a case afterwards, and the case was withdrawn.

By Mr. Sullivan: On the 30th July, 1894, when Mrs. Butler called on me, and she took a fit in my house, to the best of my belief Mrs. Butler had boots on.

J. W. ABIGAIL.

This deponent, Mary Jane Butler, recalled, on her oath, saith:—

By Mr. Williamson: As far as I remember, Judge Windeyer said I hadn't committed adultery; the man was there for that purpose; I was served with a rue nisi; I did not read it; I also alleged that my husband had committed adultery with a woman named Copp; I believe his Honor decreed against me, and left Mrs. Copp to come in and get costs against me; I did not lock the kitchen door before I went upstairs on the 30th July, 1894; I did not pull the blinds down; the blinds were down before; I swear the street bell did not ring; I was standing by the dining-room door when my husband came in; I screamed when my husband rushed in; there was no letter on the table; I did not receive a letter about some slippers; I saw the accused Davis put a parcel on the dresser; he said, "There's a parcel for you"; I believe they were slippers; I remember in my evidence in the maintenance proceedings in August last; I don't remember saying that I didn't know who put the slippers on the dresser; I did not tell my husband that I had met Davis on the morning of the 30th July, 1894; I never complained to my husband that Davis wanted to come in and have supper with me; I never complained to my husband that Davis wanted to buy me clothes; I never told my husband that Davis had walked from Glebe-street to Cleveland-street; I told my husband I was molested by a man; I did not walk to my brother's or from my brother's through Victoria Park; I went through Newtown Road; on the 30th July, 1894, I would not give my husband the key; I told him, "I wanted to give it to a neighbour, so as she could look after my children"; on the 30th July, 1894, I was going to my brother's; I did not promise to go with Davis; I can't say why I remained in the house; I did not call out for assistance when Davis was in the house; I did not lock the back gate; I don't remember saying I did lock the back gate; as far as I remember, I did not lock the back gate on the night of the 30th July, 1894; I told my husband to ask the man his name himself; I did know his name; when I met Davis on the morning of the 30th July, 1894, it was not for the purpose of making an appointment with him; I had a good memory last November; I can't swear if the evidence I gave to-day is the same as I gave in the Divorce Court; pessaries and pills were found on a box in my bed-room; I told my my husband I got the pessaries for a lady ; I never used any of the pessaries ; I did not use the pessaries, neither did my lady friend ; I had a knitting-needle that was broken in two, and it was fastened with sealing-wax ; I told the female accused I did not require the pills, as I was living apart from my husband, and subsequently I recommended her to a lady friend of mine ; I never wrote a letter to accused (Davis) ; I wrote a note to accused (Davis), telling him not to molest me ; I sent the note by my little boy ; Davis had come once that day ; Davis was never unkind to me ; Dr. Kingsbury attended to me prior to going into the Prince Alfred Hospital ; neither of the accused ever gave evidence against me in any Court ; on the 30th July, 1894, I told my husband I was going out ; I told him I wouldn't be an hour.

JAMES DRAPER.

THIS deponent, Robert Bear, on his oath, saith : I am a bookseller, residing Arthur-street, North Sydney, and carrying on business at 18, Park-street, Sydney ; I had a suit in the Divorce Court this year ; I had dealings with accused (Davis) prior to those proceedings ; accused acted as a detective for me, for which I paid him £3 ; he said "he had some women in his employ," and he said "he could do the case well" ; he said "he had a wife who was smarter than he was."

By Mr. Williamson : Accused's evidence did not help me in getting my divorce ; I knew accused was telling me lies, and I stopped paying accused ; he had told me my wife had been drinking, and I knew it wasn't true.

MAY NEWMAN.

THIS deponent, Alfred Edwards, on his oath, saith : I am a lamplighter, residing at 103, Glebe-street, Glebe ; I light the lamps in Glebe-street ; I know the accused Peaks ; I know her by sight ; between the 25th and 30th July, 1894, I saw her at the corner of Norton-street and Broughton-lane standing close up to a fence ; I have seen her standing there on three or four occasions ; Mrs. Butler's back gate could be seen from that place ; she wore a similar hat to the one produced.

By Mr. Williamson : I was subpoenaed here ; I never saw the hat since I saw it on the female accused ; I recognise the hat by the colour and shape.

STATEMENT OF THE ACCUSED.

CHARLES DAVIS, alias WILLIAMS, stands charged before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the Colony aforesaid, this 30th day of May, in the year of Our Lord 1895, for that he, the said Charles Davis, alias Williams, within divers days and times during the year 1894, at Metropolitan Police District, in the said Colony, he did conspire with Elizabeth Susannah Peake, alias Davis, and with divers other persons unknown, to defeat the course of justice ; and the examinations of all the witnesses on the part of the prosecution having been completed, and the depositions taken against the accused having been caused to be read to him by me, the said Justice (by or) before whom such examination has been so completed ; and I, the said Justice, having also stated to the accused and given him clearly to understand that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been held out to him to induce him to make any admission or confession of his guilt, but that whatever he shall say may be given in evidence against him upon his trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat ; and the said charge being read to the said Charles Davis, alias Williams, and the witnesses for the prosecution, James Draper, John George Leary, William Smith Arnott, Isabella Davis, Minnie Fowler, Walter Webb, Mary Poole, Nicholas Dufour, Hans Jansen, George Alfred Lloyd, junior, John Howarth, Eliza Dufour, Mary Jane Butler, James William Abigail, Robert Bear, Mary Newman, Alfred Edwards, James Allanson, being severally examined in his presence, the said Charles Davis, alias Williams, is now addressed by me as follows :—"Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge ? You are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so ; but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial ;" whereupon the said Charles Davis, alias Williams, saith as follows :—"I reserve my defence."

Taken before me, at Glebe, in the said Colony, the day and year first above mentioned,—

G. Bird, Esq., J.P., Victoria, to The Minister of Justice, Sydney.

Sir,

Court-house, Richmond, Victoria, 28 August, 1895.
 Referring to my letter to the Inspector-General of Police, Sydney, about six months ago, relative to what I then believed to be a "put-up job," the famous Butler case of conspiracy, and in my second communication on the same subject to that gentleman. The last paragraph of my letter was as follows:—"When you have perused this correspondence, I request you will be good enough to forward it at once to the Hon. the Minister of Justice in Sydney, in order that that gentleman may take such steps as he may deem necessary in the interests of justice."

Subsequent events have shown that you have directed that the necessary steps have been taken, with the happy results that justice has been vindicated, that the conspirators have been convicted, and the honor and integrity of an innocent, but grossly maligned, woman (Mrs. Butler), vindicated.

Under the circumstances above narrated, I believe that her brother, John Johnson (the son of the late Geo. Johnson, of this city, a man of rare integrity, an honest man—the noblest work of God), who was sentenced to three years' imprisonment for alleged perjury when giving evidence on behalf of his innocent sister, would, as a matter of course, be at once liberated from gaol. In this morning's issue of the Argus, as per clipping in the margin, I regret to find that the course of justice in Sydney is slow, or as Shakespeare so tersely and graphically terms it, "the law's delay." Now, I respectfully and earnestly request that you may be good enough to mount and stand firmly on the platform of justice, and direct that the innocent prisoner, Johnson, shall be at once liberated. As an innocent man, he has suffered much; the verdict of the jury which exonerated his sister should, as a sequence, be all sufficient to exonerate Johnson from guilt.

THE SYDNEY CONSPIRACY—INQUIRY INTO JOHNSON'S CASE.
 Sydney, Tuesday.
 THE Executive Council yesterday decided to hold an inquiry, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, with regard to the man Johnson, brother of Mrs. Butler, who was found guilty of perjury in making certain allegations against Mrs. Copp during the hearing of the divorce case, Butler v. Butler. The inquiry will probably be conducted by Judge Backhouse.

His Honor Judge Backhouse to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Sir,

District Court, Judges' Chambers, Sydney, 9 September, 1895.

I have the honor to forward, for transmission to His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, the depositions taken at the inquiry in the case of John Foster Johnson, together with the original papers sent to me.

The inquiry was held on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the 5th, 6th, and 7th instant.

It will be seen that, in addition to the persons named in the Commission, William John West, detective; George Long, printer; Kate Page and Harriett Jeffries, married women; S. Blackmore Banfield, solicitor; William James Skoman, computer; and Thomas Richard Butler;—were examined.

The girl referred to in the declaration as Alice—now Alice Gribble, married woman—a doctor's certificate, which is annexed to the papers, showed to be too ill to be able to attend. From what was told me I gather that if she had been called she could have given very little information.

As to the man Pierce—a most important witness if there is such a person—I had as diligent a search made for him as the short time at my disposal allowed, but he could not be found.

The information given is so vague, and the lapse of time so great, that there is considerable difficulty in tracing him, or proving his non-existence.

The document referred to by Jones as a duplicate receipt, and by Butler as a statement of Jones' evidence could not be found. The exhibits in the perjury case have been mislaid during the late moving of the Crown Solicitor's Office, and it may have disappeared in the same way.

I allowed Thomas Richard Butler to be present at the inquiry, and to suggest to me any questions he wished the witnesses asked. This will account for the depositions showing at times answers to me having very little bearing on the matters inquired into.

Edward Butler's whereabouts I only discovered on Thursday morning last. I did not think it desirable to wait for his attendance, the brother being able to give me all the information Edward could.

In some cases I have admitted evidence not strictly admissible, thinking that a slight relaxation of the rules of evidence is often advisable in inquiries under the Act of 1883.

It was suggested that Thomas Rofe should be called to show that Jones was not an entirely disinterested witness, but considering that he has lately been committed for trial, I thought he ought not to be examined.

Depositions of Witnesses taken in the Inquiry as to the guilt of a Prisoner named John Johnson, lately convicted of perjury.

COURT-HOUSE, DARLINGHURST, 5th, 6th, and 7th SEPTEMBER, 1895.

New South Wales,)
to wit.)

The deposition of Benjamin Cooke, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of Our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:—I am an inquiry agent, carrying on business in Phillip-street, Sydney; I produce a copy (No. 1) of the Sydney Morning Herald of the 28th June, 1890; on page 7 there is a reference to a smoke concert at the Oddfellows' Hall in Elizabeth-street; on page 11 there is a notification of the arrival of the steamship "Fifeshire" from London; I produce a book marked on the outside "General and various accounts" (book marked 2); on the 5th

June

June there is an entry "Hospital and cab, 17s.;" on the 30th June there is an entry "Boots—Ted, 5s. 6d.;" on 11th July there is an entry "Cab for M.J., 1s. 6d.;" on the 23rd July an entry showing the payment of the first week's wages to a girl named Alice; I also produce a cash-book (marked 3); on 5th June there is an entry "Hospital and cab, 17s.;" that is in a different handwriting from that in the other book produced (marked 2); these books were handed to me by Mrs. Butler; I also produce account of sales book (marked 4); on 29th July there is an entry, "One rubber stamp, 3s. 6d.;" that is the first entry of a rubber stamp; the next is August 1st, then August 1st, the 2nd, 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th—rubber stamps; these entries all refer to August, 1890; the book is stamped inside "Household Novelty Company King-street, Newtown"; I have made inquiries as to what time the last tram from Sydney to Newtown would arrive at the stopping-place nearest to 105, King-street, Newtown; it would be about a quarter to 12 o'clock at night; according to the newspaper produced (marked 1) the moon set on the 28th June, 1890, between 1 and 2 o'clock; it rose at 1:45 p.m., and set at 1:41 a.m.; I have visited the shop occupied by Butler on the Newtown Road.

By Bench: It had a shop window at the side of the door, and also a window facing the street running along the front; the door is glass down to about 2 feet 6 inches of the ground; the door at present is frosted over; there is no casing whatever inside the shop window at present.

By Mr. Sullivan: Having read Johnson's evidence as an expert, I stood in the position he stated he stood in; standing in the dark in the room behind the shop, and looking out towards the street where the light was, I should say he could see the figures in the shop thrown out in relief against the light.

By Bench: I have not made that test at night-time; the door between the shop and room behind has also a glass panel in it; you pass from that room to another before gaining the yard; the yard is a very small one, and very close to the adjoining shop formerly occupied by Greenfield.

By Mr. Sullivan: The space between Butler's back premises and the adjoining premises is about 8 feet at the outside; the kitchens of the two premises face each other; on the 7th and 11th July, 1890, in the book produced and (marked 2), and also on the 28th June in the same year, there are entries referring to the child Nita, "Care of child," showing the payment of 5s. on each occasion.

By Mr. Wade: I have read the notes of counsel taken at the trial of Johnson; I did not see in them that Johnson swore that Ted Butler was not present; I do not know that Johnson swore that Butler and himself were the only persons present; I have never heard that it was contended by Johnson that Ted Butler had not arrived in Sydney then; I heard from Mrs. Butler that such was the case; I heard from her about that some months ago; it was in consequence of what she told me that I inserted in my affidavit the entry as to boots being bought on the 30th June, 1890; I know that there is an entry on the 27th June, showing that Butler had purchased clothes for his brother; the red pencil marks in the book are mine; the horizontal marks in it refer to Ted, and the cross to a servant; I know that there is an entry on the 27th June, showing the purchase of clothes for Ted, £1 7s. 6d.; I have heard that Butler said Ted was present on the night of the alleged adultery; I did not insert that in my affidavit, because it had nothing to do with Mrs. Butler's evidence; I knew from her affidavit that she understood that the boy did not appear till 30th June; I was aware of that when I made my declaration; I have not suppressed it, but marked it in red in the book I have produced; I did not send any books to the Minister of Justice in reference to this inquiry; there are references to servants named Alice and Harriett in the book; I have found out who Harriett is; she is Harriett Jeffreys; I did not see her before I made my declaration; I have seen her since and obtained a verbal communication from her; her address is 330, Crown Road, Ultimo; I have been looking for her for the last two months—since I got the books; she was the servant supposed to be at Butler's while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital; she recollects Butler having a cart, and thinks he went out with it with goods; I do not know that Johnson swore that it was a moonlight night; I do not know that he swore it was a starlight night; I do not know that Butler swore it was a wet night; I understood it rained in the afternoon, then cleared off for some hours, and then began to rain very heavily at 4 o'clock in the morning of the 29th June and rained very heavily till about 2 p.m. on the 30th; when I saw the shop the upper part of the window was painted while the lower part was unpainted; if the lower part had been covered with a blind that would further help to exclude the light; the counter now runs up the middle of the shop; I stood about 4 or 5 feet inside the door of the room behind the shop; if there were no light in the street, nor in the kitchen behind the room, it would be very difficult to see any figures in the shop; it never struck me to look where the nearest lamp was when I was at the shop; I thought of that afterwards; I knew that the adultery was supposed to have taken place at night—nearly midnight; I had not time to go and look for the nearest lamp when I thought of it; I never sent any of my officers to look where the nearest lamp is; the space between the two kitchens of the two houses is about 8 feet; there is no space between the two houses in the front; there is paling fence between the back part of the two premises; it is about 6 feet high; I saw the witnesses in this inquiry since the conviction of Davis and Butler; the name of Greenfield had been mentioned to me before that; I made no effort to find these people before the conviction of Butler and Davis; I was not specially engaged to find these witnesses; I did nothing in this matter before the conviction of Butler and Davis; the books produced were given to me after the conviction of Butler; I never saw them before his conviction; Mrs. Butler brought them to me at my office about a fortnight after his conviction; I asked the witnesses I saw to give me nothing but the absolute truth—that I did not want anything else; Mrs. Butler suggested to me to make inquiries about her brother in April last; I would not have anything to do with it then.

By Bench: I was not engaged on behalf of Butler at the same time as I was making inquiries for Mrs. Butler; ten months before Mrs. Butler came to me, Butler came to me, and I was engaged making inquiries for him for a fortnight; I was never engaged on behalf of the two at the same time; very little light could come from the kitchen into the shop if the gas were burning in the kitchen.

By Mr. Wade: There is a shed in the yard; it is about 3 or 4 feet from the kitchen door, and about 20 feet from the room behind the shop; I do not know, from what I have read of the notes of the trial, that Butler's contention was that this alleged adultery took place not on the 28th June, but some nights after.

By Bench: I have made great efforts to find the man Pearce mentioned in the trial, and advertised for him; I did not see Mrs. Jeffreys till two days ago; I have been unable to find the man Pearce.

THE deposition of Benjamin Cooke, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 6th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1893," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent, on oath, states:—I have been through the books produced; I look at the sales-book produced; there is an entry dated 15th October, "Horse and cart, £10 10s."; there is an entry in the cash-book on the debit side of "horse, £5," on the 12th January, 1891; on the 13th September, 1890, there is an entry in the cash-book of a cheque for £8; on 20th October there is an entry showing a cheque for £4; there is no other entry of any sale or purchase of a horse or cart in any of the books except those two; I said yesterday that Mrs. Jeffreys had told me that to the best of her recollection Butler used a cart while she was there, and that it stood on the green at the back; I can find no entries in any of the books showing the purchase of any horse-feed; I have searched carefully for such an entry.

THE deposition of Benjamin Cooke, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath, this 7th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1893," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent, on oath, states:—I produce a plan (marked 6) of the premises at what was originally 105, King-street, Newtown; there are measurements on the plan; the plan represents the premises as they are now; I heard Butler give evidence yesterday that there was a curtain of Turkey twill in the window, and that it was very impervious to light; I produce a piece of Turkey twill (marked 7); I have made inquiries of several drapers, and they say that width of the piece produced is the only width it is made; the width of the twill is 1 ft. 9 in.; there would have to be a hem for a string to run through in the curtain; there is a permanent bed or bottom of wood to the window 18 inches deep; that would make the top of the curtain 3 ft. 3 in. from the floor; to the underside of the roof of the awning in front of the shop is 12 ft. 6 in. in height next to the shop, and 11 ft. 2 in. at the kerb; the burner in the nearest lamp is 12 feet from the footpath, so that the light from it would come under the roof of the awning in front of the shop; there is another lamp 60 yards from the shop door on the opposite side of the street.

By Bench: A piece of wood might have been put across the window, and the curtain tacked to it.

THE deposition of Frederick William Jones, of Newtown, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1893," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent, on oath, states:—I am a commercial traveller, residing in Watkin-street, Newtown; I know the man Johnson; in the year 1893 I lived in Church-street, Newtown; that is about five minutes' walk from 105, King-street, Newtown; while I lived in Church-street Johnson lived next door to me; I was on very friendly terms with him, and intimate with him; I remember going for a walk with him about the end of the year 1893; we had often taken walks together at night; I remember on one occasion going along King-street, Newtown, with him; I remember something being said to me about a shop in King-street, Newtown; it was either at the end of December, 1893, or the beginning of January, 1894; I fancy it was New Year's eve; I had never known Cooke before this inquiry was begun; on the particular night referred to Johnson and I were walking along King-street, Newtown; we passed a shop at No. 105, King-street, Newtown; when we got opposite to it Johnson said to me, pointing to the shop, "On one occasion, when Butler and I came home we saw a woman standing at the shop door; I went round to the back to feed a horse; when I came in again from the back I found Butler and the woman inside; he said Butler had connection with the woman; I cannot recollect his exact words, but they meant that; he also said that they turned the woman out, and she made a bit of a row outside; that a cab came along and they put her in the cab and sent her away; that a little later she came back in the cab and threatened to break the windows if they did not pay her or give her some money; I cannot recollect whether he said she went away or whether they paid anything; I knew Johnson was being tried for perjury, but did not know the nature of it; I only knew from the newspaper reports that he was being tried; I had not seen Johnson for some considerable time before the divorce case; I did not know that the perjury had reference to the woman being caught in the shop; had I known that I should have come forth in his behalf.

By Mr. Wade: I cannot say which it was—the Herald or the Evening News that I read the report of his trial for perjury; I was living in George-street West at the time; I left Church-street in February, 1894;

1894; Mrs. Butler and Johnson were living there at that time; I remember we were talking about football the same night as Johnson told me about Butler and the woman; I had thought of the conversation several times since Johnson told me of what had occurred; Johnson did not tell me that they were lying down having connection; he did not fix any year; he said that it was when they had the shop there; the statement was made to me in ordinary conversation—he did not appear to give any great heed to it; he spoke of it in just the same way as the football; I knew that Butler and his wife were living apart at the time; I knew it because Johnson and Mrs. Butler were living next door to me; one of them told me—I cannot say which; I made no comment when he told me of the affair in the shop; I took little notice of it at the time; I had been down King-street many times before that with Johnson; Church-street is down near the Railway Bridge at Newtown, and the shop, at 105, King-street, is down near the Deaf and Dumb Asylum; I was first asked to make a declaration in this matter after the conspiracy case; I saw Cooke; Mrs. Butler asked me to call at his office; I had only seen Mrs. Butler a couple of times this year; I did not hear from Johnson that the horse was one he had bought from a man named Jones; I know nothing about the horse; he did not say the woman was standing there out of the rain; he merely said she was standing in the doorway.

By Bench: I can remember doing nothing during the divorce proceedings; I made a statement to Mr. Rofe on the understanding that neither myself nor my wife was to give evidence; Mrs. Jones was subpoenaed to give evidence at the conspiracy trial, but was too unwell to appear; I did not speak of Mrs. Butler's moral character when I made the statement to Mr. Rofe; I said nothing against her character; I only spoke of her as a neighbour; Butler told my wife that he was going to make me the co-respondent in the divorce suit and that I had better go down to him at Copp's to meet Rofe; I then went to Copp's, but cannot say what statement I made to Rofe; I heard after Johnson's trial, from my wife, that Butler had told her about Johnson and the perjury case; I believe she said that Butler told her that after Johnson's trial.

By Mr. Wade: I know nothing against Mrs. Butler's moral character; all I could say against her was that she talked too much; in 1893 I had been told that Butler had ill-used her; I cannot say whether I told Butler or Rofe about this alleged adultery Johnson had told me of; my wife was not present at the divorce case; I was not there; I saw Rofe twice; I never went to his office; I saw him at Copp's shop once and once at my own house; I saw him at my place before the divorce case; he came to see my wife then, and got a statement from her; I saw the account of the divorce case; I believe I read it; I read the account of the Judge's finding, granting the decree; I saw that Johnson had been committed for perjury; I saw that Mrs. Butler charged Butler with committing adultery with an unknown woman; I also saw that Johnson was called by her to prove the adultery; I saw that he was committed for perjury on account of the evidence he had given; I did not go and see Mrs. Butler then.

By Bench: The conversation about the woman and Butler arose in this way; we were passing the shop, and Johnson pointed it out to me and said they used to have a shop there at one time; he then proceeded to tell me about Butler and the woman.

By Mr. Sullivan: I often spoke with Johnson about his sister's domestic affairs; I had his confidence; I suppose I remember the conversation because I took an interest in the affairs of Johnson; I heard quite recently that the perjury he was alleged to have committed was in connection with the adultery with the woman by Butler.

By Mr. Wade: When I was charged with adultery by Butler, and threatened to be made the co-respondent, I did not make a charge of adultery against him.

By Bench: Butler did not say that I had been seen in the University paddock with his wife, and that if I did not explain matters he would take proceedings against me; when Butler came and saw my wife, and told her I had better go and see him I went down and saw Butler; he said I had been seen on the University paddock with his wife; I laughed at him, because at the time he alleged I had been seen with his wife I was looking at a football match, and Mrs. Butler came over and spoke to me for about a half minute; my employer is H. Johnson, boot manufacturer, Waterloo.

THE deposition of Frederick William Jones, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 7th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:— My wife was not present with me when Mr. Rofe interviewed me; he took my statement down then and there; I saw him write it down; I said in that statement that soon after Mrs. Butler came to live next door to us she began to tell me about her troubles; I also said that Mrs. Jones took very ill, and Mrs. Butler looked after her very kindly; I do not remember Mrs. Butler saying that she had told my wife she knew Bellemy, and that he had told her she need never want a few shillings; I did not tell Rofe that Mrs. Butler had told my wife that she stayed in a nicely furnished house with Bellemy, and he had given her 10s; I never told Rofe that Mrs. Butler had told my wife that she had had connection with Bellemy; I did not say that Mrs. Butler had told my wife that Bellemy had offered her 10s. another time, but she had not time to stay; I did not tell Rofe that Mrs. Butler had told me that when she went to live at the Glebe, the man Williams went to live opposite to her; I said that a man named Taylor used to call at Mrs. Butler's house in Church-street; I do not remember saying anything to the effect that Mrs. Butler said she was going to Summer Hill, and while in the railway car a gentleman offered her £1; I did not say that Mrs. Butler had given my wife a bottle of medicine to procure abortion; Mrs. Butler did give my wife a bottle of medicine, but not for that purpose; as far as I know those statements are without foundation.

THE deposition of Frank Hillier, of Petersham, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:—I am a cordial manufacturer residing in Railway-street, Petersham; I have known Johnson about four years; I first met him in Melbourne, where he assisted me in connection with an invention I had in hand at the time; I saw Johnson in 1893 frequently; during that year I had conversations with him about his sister's affairs; in December, 1893, he was at my factory frequently; I was then carrying on business in Richard-street, Newtown; he used to visit me there; we were then on very friendly terms; I remember his having a conversation with me about his sister's affairs about December, 1893; he said that at one time he and his brother-in-law had been out to a social, and on returning late at night he (Johnson) went round to the back to feed the horse, and on coming back through the shop he saw his brother-in-law having connection with another woman; he told me that he had had a difference once or twice with his brother-in-law; I was subpoenaed to attend the trial of Johnson for perjury; I attended; I was prepared to give the same evidence then as I have given now; I was called by Johnson's counsel to give evidence as to character; that was before the verdict was given; I was about to be asked a question by Johnson's counsel, but it was objected to and disallowed; I was about to be asked a question as to what Johnson had told me when it was disallowed; I have frequently seen the witness Jones previous to the conviction of Johnson; I have never spoken to him about what evidence I could give nor he to me about what evidence he could give; I do not know that Jones knew of the statement I have made.

By Mr. Wade: I have known Jones about twelve or eighteen months; I have no recollection of knowing him before the conversation I have spoken of took place; I have never told Cooke that Jones and I were absolute strangers; I saw Jones outside the Court at Johnson's trial; he was standing about; I believe he was there to give evidence; I am not certain it was at the criminal trial that I saw Jones outside the Court; I do not remember having a conversation with Jones between the divorce and the trial; I have seen Jones several times since the conviction, and have had conversations with him; he may have asked me of what Johnson was convicted; he did not tell me that he knew of what he was convicted; I suppose the conversation with Johnson arose through his telling me about his family troubles; I cannot recollect him saying anything more than what I have stated; I made no comment and asked no questions when he told me; it was first brought back to my memory when he came out and told me he had been committed for trial for perjury; he told me he had had a fight with Butler in consequence of his behaviour to his wife; in December, 1893, he did not tell me, as far as I can remember, that Butler had made charges of infidelity against his wife; there was nothing said about a divorce case at that time; I knew that Mrs. Butler was suing her husband for maintenance, and that it was causing Johnson a lot of trouble; Johnson did not say what kind of weather it was when this alleged adultery took place; he told me something with reference to young Butler having just landed, but I cannot remember what it was.

THE deposition of Henry Trethewey, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner as to his guilt. And this deponent, on oath, states:—I am a rubber stamp-maker, carrying on business at 184, George-street West; I knew the man Johnson; I have seen him in Butler's shop; the shop was situated at 105, King-street, Newtown; that was in the year 1890; I know Butler; I called on him canvassing for an order for rubber stamps; I took an order from him; that was before the 16th June, 1890, either in June or May, but before the 16th June, 1890; I fix the time through living at No. 5, Francis-street, Enmore, and on the 16th June removed to No. 8 in the same street; the order was taken before I removed; I delivered the rubber stamp afterwards, and was paid for it; I cannot tell how many stamps I made; the first was a business one for himself, but I afterwards got a number of orders through him, he getting the orders and I making the stamps; between the time I made the first stamp for himself and my making stamps for the trade he came to my place several times; he came both to the old and new houses several times alone; he was riding when he came alone; he came afterwards with his wife and children to the new house; he was riding a horse before the 16th June, 1890; he was driving when he came with his wife and children; I noticed Mrs. Butler and the children sitting in the cart; that was before I started making stamps for the trade; I am positive as to that; I think it would be in July; Mrs. Butler looked very ill at the time; I know that she had just come out of the hospital; Butler asked me the value of a horse on one occasion; it was a bay horse, very thin; the horse was outside his shop at the time; it was either in June or July; it was before I made stamps for the trade; the horse was standing tied up to a post at the time; I told him that in Queensland the horse would be simply worth his hide, and he laughed; he said something about sending the horse back again; I asked him would the man take it back again, and he said he would be glad to get it back if he could get nothing else; he asked me was it worth £7 10s.; Butler about this time had another horse which was very low in the back; I cannot swear as to the date of that; he had three horses to my knowledge—the bay, the low-backed one, and the pony; it was before he had the pony that he had the low-backed one; between the time I began to make the rubber stamps and September, 1890, Butler had two horses to my knowledge; I saw him at my place with them, and also saw them at his shop.

By Mr. Wade: I could not say whether the bay horse was a gelding or a mare; I do not remember it having any white on its face; it might have had a star; I do not remember whether the pony had a blaze in the face; I cannot tell the sex of either the pony or the bay nor of the low-backed horse; the vehicle was an old gig, with some yellow streaks about it; it was a spring gig; I cannot say whether it was painted green, with yellow lines on it; he had another cart when the pony was bought; I cannot remember the colour of the cart; I have no means of fixing the date he had the pony; I dare say I saw Butler 100 times between the time I first took up the rubber-stamp making and December; I saw him frequently every week; I saw Mrs. Butler after she came back from the hospital several times; she came to my place with orders; she came there up to the end of the year; she was in delicate health up to the end of the year; she was always in delicate health; the first order I got from Butler was for himself; that was before the 16th June; making stamps for the trade meant that I made them on his orders, and he sold them to people again; when I first got the order for the stamp Butler told me his wife was in the hospital; the bay horse was that which was all hide and framework; Butler did not say he had bought it; he asked me was it worth £7 10s.; that was before the 16th June; I think there was a sack on the horse when I saw it; I cannot remember whether he said he had only just got possession of it; I believe it was tied up with a bridle; I cannot say whether he mentioned the name of the man from whom he had got it; I fix the dates by the fact of my removing on the 16th June; I went to work at the carpentry some time in July; I was working for a builder, and making stamps for Butler at night; I do not remember Butler saying he had a horse on hire; he gave me to understand he had the first one on hire; he did not say so, but said he would send it back, and the man would be glad to get it back again; I am not prepared to swear anything at all about the saddle; when I first saw him riding he had a sack, and not a saddle, on the horse; that was before I removed from Enmore; I have no documents by which I can fix the dates I have spoken of; the facts were brought back to my memory after my return to Australia, about two months ago, when I met Mrs. Butler in a tramcar, and she told me it was a pity I was not in Australia, as I could have saved her brother; I had been away from Australia three years; I gave a statement to Cooke, and it was afterwards brought out to me by a Magistrate, and another gentleman read it out to me and I signed it; Cooke did not show me any books when I made the statement to him; he did not show any papers to me either; the last time I saw Butler was in Copp's shop; I cannot say in what year that was; I did not remember the year I was connected with him till I had seen my landlord, and ascertained from him when I removed; I have seen a horse in Butler's back yard; it was loose; it was before I began the carpentry, and that was in July; I think that was the dark bay horse, with the black points—the thin one; I do not know a man named Pearce keeping a crockery shop in Newtown; I never heard of him: when Butler drove to my place with his wife and children the children stayed in the cart; they were in the front of the vehicle; there was no back seat to the vehicle; I cannot say whether the seat had a back to it.

By Bench: I cannot fix the interval between the time I made the stamp for Butler himself and the first I made for the trade; it was about two months, I think; I cannot remember the class of stamp I first made for the trade; one stamp I made was for the servant girl for Butler; the agreement was that I should receive a certain amount for each stamp, and Butler was to advertise them and pay all expenses in disposing of them; the advertisement was to send twelve 1d. stamps for a rubber stamp; I was making stamps for a considerable time before the advertisement appeared, and before the circulars were put out; the orders came in before the advertisement appeared, through a large card displayed in Butler's window; the first cart I saw Butler with was when he came to my house with his wife and children.

By Mr. Sullivan: That was the only occasion on which Butler drove his wife and children to my place; that was within a few days after Mrs. Butler had left the hospital.

By Bench: Butler came to my place usually on horseback; he hardly ever walked; I remember on one occasion he had a hole in the seat of his trousers, and there was some remark made about it.

The deposition of Louisa Emma Tretthewey, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent, on oath, states:—I am the wife of the last witness; I know Butler; I do not know that I have ever seen Johnson; I may have, but do not recollect it; I do not remember anything about dates; my husband left the Colony about two and a half or three years ago; I remember just when Mrs. Butler came to our place, shortly after she had left the hospital; she came to our house in a trap with Butler; we were living then in Francis-street, Enmore; there was a horse in the trap; Mrs. Butler looked very ill; I remarked to my husband how ill she looked, and he said she had just come out of the hospital; my husband was making rubber stamps for Butler at the time; that was what brought Butler to our house; I do not remember how long my husband continued to make stamps for Butler after Butler had called at our house; I think he was making stamps at the same time as he was employed at the carpentry.

By Mr. Wade: I cannot fix the time he went to work at the carpentry by the hot weather; I have never seen Mrs. Butler before she called on this occasion; I saw her several times after that at her own house; she only came to my place once in the cart; it was a brown or bay horse in the cart; I cannot say whether it had a white face or not; I know that Mrs. Butler was in the hospital more than once; I cannot say whether I saw Mrs. Butler after being in the hospital the second time.

By Bench: I cannot say whether it was after the first time she had been in the hospital that she came to our house the first time.

By

By Mr. Wade: I cannot say whether I saw her in the beginning of the year 1891; I am not at all certain about any dates; we had been in our new house a month or six weeks when Mrs. Butler came there in a cart; I cannot say whether my husband was working at the carpentry at the time she called; Butler was continually coming to our house; I never saw him driving except on the one occasion; he used to come on horseback.

By Bench: I cannot say whether Butler used a saddle or not; I may have seen Mrs. Butler before she drove there with Butler and the children; I was present in the evening, when arrangements were made between Butler and my husband; I believe I had coffee and biscuits at Butler's shop; I think Mrs. Butler prepared the refreshments; the arrangement about the rubber stamps was made while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital; our visit to Butler's may have been in connection with stamps; I cannot say; our visit must have been after Mrs. Butler had called at our house in the cart.

THE deposition of Mary Ann Greenfield, of the district of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1885," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:— I reside with my husband, Peter Greenfield, a labourer, at Summer Hill; in the year 1890 I lived at 103, King-street, Newtown, where I kept a fruit and vegetable shop; that was next door to Butler's; I remember Johnson living there; I remember Mrs. Butler being taken ill one morning; I asked her what was the matter with her, and she told me she was ill; I went into her house and put her to bed; I attended to her till her husband came home at night; I locked up the house; she went to the hospital, I think, on the 5th June, 1890; that was about four days after she had been taken ill; while she was in the hospital I looked after the child Nita, and he paid me for keeping it; in the beginning of June a horse and vehicle were brought to Butler's; the horse was kept on the premises, and the vehicle on a green near; the horse was kept a few feet from my premises; Mrs. Butler was in the hospital, I think, six weeks; I remember the day she came home; I could not say what the day of the month was; I cannot say how she was brought home from the hospital; one Sunday after she had left the hospital I saw her, Butler, her brother, and the two children go out in the vehicle; someone in the cart gave the horse a lash, and Mrs. Butler nearly fell out of the cart, but was caught by her brother; I cannot say how long she had been out of the hospital then; I fancy it was more than a couple of days; it was less than a month after; the horse I saw in the trap was the same as had been kept in the yard; I did not see Butler or his family using that horse after that occasion; I remember Butler having a servant girl; her name was Alice Leinster; I have heard her say that she was annoyed with the horse, because he used to dirty the clothes; that was while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital; the horse was removed afterwards into another yard; on one occasion the horse tore up a pillow-case of mine, and very often he used to dirty the clothes when they blew over the fence; I know Butler made an exchange in horses, but cannot remember what kind of horses they were; I think there were three horses, but am not quite sure; I have never given evidence before in any Court.

By Mr. Wade: I have no idea when Johnson left the house; it was in the year 1890, but have no idea what the month was; I cannot remember the month we went to live there, nor what month we left; we left when the year was up; there was another little girl there after Alice; I cannot say what her name was; I saw Mrs. Jeffreys there, but had no conversation with her; it was not after she left that the horse and cart arrived there; I never saw more than the one cart there; I do not know what colour it was; it was a very dirty old cart; it was a spring cart; up to Christmas, 1890, I always saw the one cart there; there was no exchange of carts that I know of; it was kept at the green at the back; the horse was fed in the yard; I do not know on what they used to feed him; it was a dark bay horse; I do not remember any of the other horses except that one; I should not have noticed that one, I suppose, if it had not dirtied the clothes; the girl was kept at the house because Mrs. Butler could not do the work; Mrs. Butler was ill and not strong enough to do the work; I never had any conversation with Butler about the horse; I was living where I am now when Mrs. Butler's case was being heard; I saw her just after the divorce case was over; I saw in the paper that her brother had been committed for trial for perjury; I did not ask Mrs. Butler what the perjury was; she did not tell me; Mrs. Butler and I have often spoken about the horse when we have met since the divorce case; I saw Mrs. Butler between the divorce case and the trial of her brother; I think the reason she did not call me was because she thought she would have no trouble; I have told Mrs. Butler that I could prove there was a horse there; I cannot say whether it was before Johnson's trial or not; I was never asked by her to come and give evidence on Johnson's trial; Johnson came out and saw me, and asked me to give evidence before his trial; he spoke to me about this horse also on that occasion; that was after the divorce case; it was when he was out on bail that he came to me; I do not think he asked me anything about the cart; he only asked me did I remember the horse being there while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital, and I said I did; I know Mrs. Butler was in hospital more than once; I never knew a man named Pearce living in Newtown; I cannot say how long Butler had the first horse before he changed it; I do not remember what kind of horse came in its place.

By Mr. Sullivan: I did not pay extra attention to the cart, and it may have been changed without my knowledge; I cannot say whether Butler and his wife were living together when she went to the hospital the second time; Butler had left the shop next to me before I left, and left Mrs. Butler behind him.

By

By Bench: I did not know when Johnson's trial was coming on; I got no subpoena to attend, and did not know when the case was on until I saw the result of it in the paper.

By Mr. Wade: The horse was a very poor one; I cannot say whether it had a long coat or not.

THE deposition of George Long, of the district of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:—I am a printer, residing in Abercrombie-street, Redfern; in 1890 I was carrying on business as a printer; I was doing business with Butler in King-street, Newtown; in consequence of something that happened there, my wife took care of a little boy from there; Mrs. Butler was going to the hospital, and wanted someone to look after her children; I then took the little boy; I understood that Mrs. Butler had gone to the hospital then; while she was in the hospital I had occasion to visit Butler at his shop in King-street, Newtown; he also called on me at my place of business in Market-street; he generally came to my place either in a cart or on horseback; he asked me what I thought of the horse; Mrs. Butler was in the hospital at that time; I am certain Mrs. Butler was in the hospital while he used to come to my place on horseback or on the cart; he drove the same horse in the cart as he rode; I do not think he told me what he had paid for the horse; I often saw him riding about on horseback while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital.

By Mr. Wade: I often went to his house; Butler had a horse before Mrs. Butler went to the hospital; he had it a full month, if not more, before she went there; nobody has told me the date she went to the hospital; I do not recollect the date—it was some time in June; it was a poor kind of horse—in poor condition; he had a horse in May, before she went to the hospital; they were both had conditioned horses, as far as I can remember; it was a spring cart he had; it was a dark blue or green cart; I do not remember any yellow stripes or strokes on it; I always saw him with the same cart; I do not recollect ever seeing him with a different cart; we kept Butler's boy about a week I think; his name is Lionel; I remember Mrs. Butler going to the hospital again; I have no idea when that was; I saw Butler then; he was always riding or driving whenever he came to my place; I cannot give any opinion as to how he came to my place when she was in the hospital on the second occasion, whether riding, driving, or on foot; Butler was living in King-street, Newtown, in January, 1890; he had a cart then; he exchanged the horse about May, 1890, I think; I have no entry or memorandum to show what kind of a horse he came to my place on; the entries in my book show that I was doing work for Butler; I was printing for him from the year 1887, I think; I was first spoken to about this matter by Cooke last week; he came to my residence; I knew that an inquiry about Johnson's case was being talked of; I knew that Johnson had been convicted of perjury; the conspiracy case brought back these facts to my mind; Johnson's trial also brought it back to my memory; I know that Johnson was convicted of perjury; I knew that Butler swore he had no horse at that particular time; I heard that after the conspiracy case; I was told that by somebody; Butler may have told me where he had got these two horses, but I cannot remember; I never saw him with more than two horses all the time I had transactions with him; he used to ride on a saddle in coming to my place; he first had a horse and saddle, then a horse and cart, and then the horse was changed for another horse; I do not think I ever saw Mrs. Butler come to my place with him on those occasions; I have seen her at home; I saw the horse at Butler's before June, 1890; it was in the yard; I cannot say whether Mrs. Butler was at home when I saw the horse in the yard; as far as I could see the horse was kept there; Butler never mentioned the name of Jones as the person from whom he had bought the horse; he may have mentioned the price to me, but I cannot recollect; I think I saw Mrs. Butler at the end of July, 1890, after she came out of the hospital; I have no reason for fixing that date any more than the end of August or September, 1890; I would not swear it was not at the end of August or September that I saw her after coming out of the hospital; I cannot swear that it was not at the end of September that Butler used this horse.

By Bench: I am certain he was using the horse before she went to the hospital; I do not think there was a stable in the yard; there seemed to be a temporary shed there; I did not see the cart there that night; it was about the middle of 1889, I think, that Butler first came to me with an order; he had not a horse then; I think he first came there on horseback about December, 1889; I did not notice the colour of the saddle; Butler had stirrups; one day it was raining Butler had leggings on; it was a poor horse—a dark bay or brown one; it used to rear when Butler got on its back.

By

By Mr. Sullivan: I know the time Mrs. Butler was in the hospital; I had charge of her child, and it was while she was there that Butler had the horse; for all I know Butler may have had three or four horses and vehicles.

By Mr. Wade: It seemed to be the same trap he came to my place in always; I never knew him to have more than two horses.

THE deposition of Mary Jane Butler, of the district of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 883 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:—I am a sister of Johnson; in the month of November, 1894, a decree was granted against me at the instance of my husband; in the year 1890 I was living with my husband and brother in King-street, Newtown; I was not called as a witness on the trial of my brother for perjury; while I was living with my husband and brother in King-street I was taken ill; Mrs. Greenfield attended to me on that occasion; I went to the hospital on 5th June, 1890; I was taken there in a cab; when I left for the hospital there was not a horse or trap at our place; I had two children then, Lionel and Nita; Lionel stayed at home, and Nita was taken care of by Mrs. Greenfield; I returned home some time in July; I returned in a cab; on my return from the hospital there was a horse and cart on the premises; the cart was kept on a green at the back, and the horse in a shed in the yard; at times the horse was kept in a yard with a stable in it about two doors from our house; the yard was opposite the green where the cart was kept; I do not know the name of the man who occupied the premises where the horse was kept at times; after my return from the hospital my husband drove me about in a cart; I do not know where he got the cart from; he used to take it off the green; he drove me to Trethewey's shortly after I returned from the hospital; it was more than a week after I had left the hospital; I think it was less than a month after I had left the hospital; it was the first time I had been out in the cart; we went there about rubber stamps; I remained in the cart with the children while Butler went inside; a girl named Alice was working for me after my return from the hospital; Butler's brother, as far as I can remember, came to see me at the hospital on the Wednesday after he had arrived; Butler told me that his brother had come out as a stowaway, and that he had some trouble in getting him off the boat; Butler's brother expected to find Butler in Melbourne; I believe Butler did not say anything about the captain to me; he said something about the steward coming to tell him his brother was there; that he had to go and buy everything for his brother, and he took him to have a bath; I do not remember anything being said directly as to when the brother left the ship; I do not remember whether he said the captain wanted to keep him on the ship to work out his passage or not; I have been through the three books produced (marked 2, 3, and 4), since the entries have been marked; the entry on the 5th June, in exhibit No. 2 is in Johnson's handwriting; on the 27th June, is in Butler's handwriting; the entry of the 28th is in his also; that of the 30th June is also in his writing; that of the 7th July is in his writing also; that on the 4th July is in Butler's also; that on the 28th July is in my handwriting; the "M.J." mentioned thereto refers to myself; the entry in exhibit No. 3 of 5th June is in Butler's writing; the entry of 27th June, "House, £1 8s. 4½d." is in Butler's handwriting; the entry of 29th July in exhibit No. 4, referring to rubber stamp, is in my writing; that of the 1st August is Butler's; that of the 2nd his; that of the 4th, mine; that of the 6th, mine; that of the 7th, Butler's; those of the 8th, 9th, and 11th August are all his; I produce a "rubber stamp book" (marked 5); on the 28th July and 29th July there are entries in Butler's handwriting; in August there is an entry by him also; there are eight entries in his writing about rubber stamps in August; Mr. Greenfield lived next door to me in King-street, Newtown.

By Bench: I do not remember the agreement between Butler and Trethewey; I have not seen it among Butler's papers; some stamps were made by Trethewey for Butler while I was in the hospital; I know there was some agreement between them, but cannot say what it was; Trethewey came to our house at night to see Butler about the stamps; Mrs. Trethewey came with him sometimes; I remember them having coffee on one occasion at our house; I went to Trethewey for stamps after Butler had left me; he left me on the 7th or 9th January, 1891; It was after that I went to Trethewey's by myself for the stamps; I never saw Mrs. Trethewey before I drove there with Butler in the cart; I had not seen her at our house before that; it was after I had been to Trethewey's house in the cart that they came to our place in the evenings; I had seen Mr. Trethewey at our house before I went to the hospital; he was making stamps for Butler himself then, I think; when I came out of the hospital Butler was taking orders for Trethewey, and some time after that advertisements were inserted in the papers about the rubber stamps; I have been present when Butler and Trethewey were talking about the rubber-stamp business; I cannot describe the horse that was in the yard when I returned from the hospital; I do not know what was paid for it; I do not know whether it was paid for by cheque or cash; I do not remember the colour of the horse; I know the cart was a ricketty one; it had no seat; a piece of wood was put across the cart for a seat; I do not know anything about any trouble Butler had in getting a seat for the cart.

By Mr. Wade: I do not know where he got the seat; I think Butler had two carts; I remember him painting a cart; I do not remember what colour the cart was; I have no idea what the horse was like; it was a dark horse, but I cannot say what colour; I do not remember any mark about it; I remember Butler having three horses altogether; one horse that I used to look after and feed was there when Butler left me; it was a wild horse; I can only recollect that about it; I never saw a horse or cart on the premises before I went to the hospital; my little boy came to me in the hospital and said, "We have have a horse and cart, we can wheel it into the ward and take you home; it is not such a nice horse and cart as we had in Melbourne"; there was nobody living on the premises two doors from us, where the horse was kept at times; it was only a stable; the horse was not always kept in that stable but in our yard; there was a complaint made about our having the horse in our yard, and we used to keep it in the stable; it was kept both in the yard and in the stable; there was a stable in our yard; there was a large shed for keeping a horse in in our yard; it was open on one side; I cannot say how long we kept the horse in the stable two doors off; I believe there was a notice in the window of our shop about the rubber stamps when I came out of the hospital; there was a large card with a written notice upon it; I saw Mrs. Greenfield before my brother's trial; the four books produced (marked 2, 3, 4, 5), have been in my possession since my husband left me; I gave them to Cooke last week; I never showed them to him before then; I had not shown Cooke the books before I made my declaration on the 21st August last; I cannot remember whether I had or not; I do not remember when I took those books to him; I have heard of a man named Pearce, who, I always understood, lived at Waverley; I did not know of a man named Pearce living at King-street Newtown; as far as I know he lived at Waverley; there was no complaints about the horse before I came back from the hospital; it was Mrs. Page who made the complaints; she lived on the other side of us to Mrs. Greenfield; I believe she is now living in Enmore; she was living next door to me for a long time, until after Butler left me; I know the witness Jones who has given evidence to-day; I have seen him since he lived in Church-street mostly this year; I did not see him between the divorce case and the trial of Johnson; I have not seen his wife; she was not present at the divorce case; Mrs. Jeffrey's left our place the day after I went back home; I saw her yesterday at her residence at Ultimo; I first knew her address yesterday, when Cooke gave it to me; my brother never told me what he said he saw take place in the shop between Butler and the woman; he never gave evidence for me in any of my maintenance cases; I think he did give evidence on my behalf in one case, but am not sure about it; Butler had never charged me with anything improper before the year 1894; I have no recollection of having any conversation with Butler about buying the horses; I never asked him why he got the horses; he got them for the purposes of his business—for carrying stove polish; I do not remember whether the cart had any yellow lines or strokes on it.

By Bench: It was not the landlord who made the complaint about the horse being on the premises; I remember no sale of any horse except that I made myself after Butler had left me in January, 1891; I do not remember Butler having a horse not broken to harness at all; as far as I know there was never any horse on the premises unbroken to harness; I remember his having a horse and no cart at one time; that horse may not have been broken to harness; I know he had a frisky horse which used to jump about when he got on it; I cannot say whether it used to rear when he used to get on it; I do not remember my brother going into the yard one night with a man to examine it and selling it for £10; the horse I sold I sold to Mr. Duval; it was not the saddle I sold; I remember Butler serving a notice on me dispensing with service on the co-respondent; I was at Jones' house at the time in the dining-room; Mrs. Jones admitted Butler; I cannot say whether my brother gave evidence in the appeal case in the maintenance matter at the Quarter Sessions.

By Mr. Wade: The frisky horse was that which I sold to Mr. Duval.

By Mr. Sullivan: I know that a man named Pearce was trying to raffle a horse.

By Bench: I have not been able to trace Pearce; I was never certain where he lived at any time.

By Mr. Sullivan: I fancy I gave some books to Cooke on the morning of the 30th ultimo; I heard Butler swear at the Divorce Court that he would not have left his brother to go to a smoke concert if his brother had arrived that same day.

By Mr. Wade: I do not know that Butler and his brother swore that this occurrence took place two or three nights after his brother's arrival.

THE deposition of William John West, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 5th day of September, in the year of Our Lord, 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt; and this deponent on oath states:—I am a detective officer; I have made inquiry and have found that in 1890 the lamps were not lit in Newtown on the nights of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, the 29th and 30th June in that year; the lamps have not been moved either, but the number of the shop has been increased from 105 to 115; the nearest lamp is about eighteen paces from the shop on the western side of the shop; the next is about 50 yards from the shop on the the opposite side of the street; the former lamp is fixed in the outer edge of the kerbstone; there is a verandah over the three shops, of which Butler's is the centre; between them and the lamp there is no verandah; the glass in the window fronting the road is clear and not frosted.

By Mr. Wade: The verandahs of the three shops run out to the edge of the kerb; the verandah would offer no obstruction, or very little, to the light from the lamp; the light from the lamp would shine obliquely on the window of the shop.

THE deposition of Horatio Jones, of the district of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 6th day of September, in the year of Our Lord, 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt; and this deponent on oath states:—I am a dealer, residing in Erskineville; I remember selling a horse and cart to Butler, but cannot remember the date; I believe the cart was painted green with yellow lines on it, and had the name of H. Jones painted on it; it was a chestnut horse with a white blaze.

By Mr. Sullivan: I have known Butler from the time I sold him the horse and cart; I remember the time Johnson was under committal for trial for perjury; Butler came down to my house then two or three times looking for me, but I happened to be out; when he saw me he said to me "You are the very man I want;" I said, "Yes;" he said "Yes; don't you know me?" I said, "No," and he replied, "I am Mr. Butler; I bought a horse and cart from you; I want you to come down home with me;" I went home with him, and he then asked me would I give him another receipt for the horse and cart; I said to him, "I can't write," but he wrote out one himself, and asked me to sign my name to it; I did so; he read it out to me, but I could not say whether he read out to me what he had written.

By Bench: I could not recollect the date the receipt bore; it was mentioned at the trial but not produced.

By Mr. Sullivan: I saw that receipt in the possession of some one for the Crown Solicitor; Butler told me he wanted the receipt on account of a falling out between him and his brother-in-law; he told me if ever I wanted a favour done to go to him, and he left me his card with his business address on it; I never wanted a turn done, and never went to him; I only went past there selling fruit; he did not want to buy anything from me at that time; his brother wanted to buy the pony I was riding at the time, and asked me what I wanted for it; his brother was with him at that time; he did not mention any woman to me; I believe he told me something about a divorce case he was having, and that his brother-in-law had sworn something against him; I had not known Butler any length of time; I advertised the horse and cart for sale; I did not recognise him when I met him in the street.

By Bench: My mother-in-law gave Butler the first receipt; she wrote it out, and I signed it; there was a stamp on it; there was no stamp on the second document; Butler's brother was present when I signed the second receipt.

By Mr. Wade: Butler asked me questions before he asked me to sign the paper; after he had read it over to me and I had signed it he went away.

By Bench: I am perfectly certain Butler asked me for another receipt when he came to me; he did not ask me anything else before he wrote out anything; the piece of paper was like a piece of note-paper.

By Mr. Wade: I gave the cheque to Mr. Radford, the grocer, either the same day Butler paid it to me or the day after.

By Bench: Mr. Johnson came and saw me after Butler had seen me and asked me did I remember selling Butler a horse and cart; I told him yes, and that he had been down after me; he asked me what for, and I said for a receipt for the horse and cart; Johnson said he would subpoena me; on the same day as he told me that a constable came to my place and told me to go down to the Crown Solicitor's Office as soon as ever I could; he told me to take a cab and go down; I took a cab and went down; when I went down I received a subpoena; I saw Johnson again and told him I had got a subpoena; when I went to the Crown Solicitor's Office I asked was the subpoena for Johnson's case, and they told me no, that it was for the Crown; when I saw Johnson I told him that, and he said, "Oh, it is just the same."

By Bench: Nobody but those two came to me and asked me any questions about the horse and cart.

ALF. P. BACKHOUSE, J.P.

THE deposition of Thomas Richard Butler, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 6th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner as to his guilt. And this deponent on oath states:—I went and saw the last witness Jones after Johnson had been committed for trial; I went down there to find his place, and after some difficulty in finding it, I afterwards met him in the street on horseback, and asked him to go down to his house; I told him who I was; I went to the house with him, and he invited me and my brother inside; I asked him did he recollect selling me a horse and cart; he said, "Yes"; I then asked him did he accept payment on delivery, or did he give credit; he replied, "Oh, no fear; I can't afford to give credit; I only gave credit once, and the bloke would not pay me, and I had to take the horse back"; I explained to him that it was of importance for him to recollect whether he had accepted cash on delivery or not; I then asked him if he had any objection to giving me a written statement to that effect, just to say that he had accepted cash on delivery"; he replied, "Oh, no, as I do not give credit I don't mind"; as he said that I wrote it down, he signed the paper; I afterwards gave that paper to my solicitor; I had gone to Jones, and obtained that statement from him on the advice of my solicitor; my brother did not write to me announcing his arrival in the "Pifeshire"; one of my sisters wrote to me from England, telling me my brother was a stowaway on the "Pifeshire"; my brother came came to my place on the 27th June, 1890; I had no difficulty in getting him off the steamer; he was acting as servant or something to the cook; I took him on shore, and not liking the clothes he was wearing, took him into a shop, and told the man to give him a fit out; he got to my place before dinner; I am not certain whether I went to the social or not on that night; I could not fix any date for the woman being there; I had nothing to fix it by, except by what Johnson said; my brother let me into the house when I went home; I cannot fix the date when I first knew the Copps; I am perfectly certain it was before Mrs. Butler went to the hospital the first time—the 5th June; Copp's prescription book will show when the first prescription was made up for her; I first met Copp through going to his shop to buy a box of pills for myself; I have an idea that the night the woman was there was one night I was returning from Copp's place; there was no horse at my place before the horse I bought from Jones; there was none there between the 5th June and 11th July; Trethewey had been to my place before Mrs. Butler went to the hospital; I do not recollect going to his place with Mrs. Butler at all; Trethewey had seen Mrs. Butler before she went to the hospital; I cannot say whether he had spoken to her; I am quite positive that Mrs. Butler and Trethewey first met at my house; I have heard Johnson's description of the window of the shop; the frosting came down level with the curtain; the curtain was made of red Turkey-twill, very impervious to light; it can be used for photography on that account.

By Mr. Sullivan: Johnson was committed for perjury at the instigation of His Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer; the case was then in the hands of the Crown; I collected evidence of Jones in the matter on the instructions of my solicitor, Mr. Thomas Ernest Rofe; an affidavit by wife was served upon me in which my wife said that I employed a man named Davis; I recollect she said in that affidavit, she said that I employed a man named Davis, or that someone in my behalf did so; I swore an affidavit in reply to that that I never employed the man Williams or Davis, nor did I know that any friend of mine had employed him for the purpose of watching, &c.; I went to the shipping office about the "Eifeshire" before the perjury trial; I went there in order to fix the date she arrived here; I went there because I did not think my brother was here in June, 1890, and told him so; he said he was present on the night when the alleged adultery took place; I told him I did not think he was here then, and he said he was; the "Eifeshire" was lying at the western end of the Circular Quay; I brought my brother ashore, took him along George-street to the clothier's, and got him a suit of clothes; I cannot remember when I bought the boots; I did not buy them when I bought the clothes; I do not know the name of the shop I bought the clothes at; it was on the left hand of George-street going from Circular Quay, and between the Quay and Post Office; I left the old clothes at the shop; we did not go back to get them; my brother wanted to go back for them, but I told him not to trouble; he said he had come away and left his knife in his pocket; when I first bought the horse, I got a receipt the same day; it described all the marks on the horse; I left the receipt at my shop; I do not think I swore at the divorce case that I went to a social in June with Johnson; I will not swear now that I did not go to this football social with Johnson; I was not in the habit of going to these different socials; I used to go out at night; I was not in the habit of going out to smoke concerts; I was in the habit of going out to suppers; it was an unusual occurrence for me to go to a football concert; although I remember about my brother in the early part of the day, I cannot remember whether I went to the smoke concert in the night; I have told you how I found out about my brother; the reading of the paragraph in the paper produced (marked No. 1) does not refresh my memory at all in the matter; I made the acquaintance of Copp through talking about a skeleton; he afterwards lent me a book; I was going to lend my witness, Goodyear, in the divorce case, a book on the night he came to my house; I cannot fix any date when the drunken woman was at my shop; I do not know a man named Pearce to my knowledge; I do not think that a man of that name came to my shop at Newtown in the year 1890; he did not come to me to let me know he was Pearce; I do not remember whether a man having a horse to raffle came to my shop in 1890; I think I can swear no such man came to my shop for such purpose; I cannot remember that any such man came there for such a purpose; therefore I do not think he did; about six months ago a man came to me and sold me a ticket for a raffle for a cab and horse; that is the only raffle of a horse that I remember; I never used a horse before I bought the horse from Jones, except trying Jones' horse before purchase, and within half an hour of it; notwithstanding what all the witnesses have sworn in this inquiry I still swear that I had no horse before that I bought from Jones; I never had a horse at all before that; the butt of my cheque showing the payment of the cheque to Jones shows the purchase of the first horse I had in New South Wales; I do not remember my brother swearing either at the trial or the Divorce Court that he did not go straight to my place from the steamer; I cannot tell the date of the complaint of my neighbour about the horse; I do not know where I was coming from on the night I found the woman standing outside my door; I cannot fix the time I saw the woman; it was near midnight after the shops were shut; it was while my wife was in the hospital; I was on friendly terms with Copp while my wife was in the hospital; I was friendly with Copp from the time he spoke to me about the skeleton till his death; it is more than probable that I would stay at Copp's till a late hour, although I had known him only a short time.

By Mr. Wade: I met Jones about the horse through an advertisement; I was getting the medicine for my wife from a chemist opposite before going to Copp's; the entry in the rubber stamp book mentioning Copp's name refers to John Copp; I had known him a good bit before that.

By Mr. Sullivan: I delivered the stove polish in a bag before I got the horse and cart; I did not sell large quantities; I used to carry about two or three dozen packets of it at a time in the bag; they would weigh about 3 lb.; I never carried as much as fifteen dozen of the polish at once; there was no one sale for that quantity; the entries in the book produced (marked 4) of the 20th and 27th June show the total sales for the day in the shop, and by the canvassers; I have carried as much as eight dozen under my arm on horseback; my brother-in-law and myself were going out with it as well as the sales in the shop.

By Mr. Wade: I would not in selling in large quantities split a dozen and sell one as shown in the entry of the 27th June.

By Bench: I did not land in Sydney from England till after the 7th January, 1890.

THE deposition of John Johnson, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, taken on oath this 6th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1895, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, under section 383 of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883," before the undersigned, one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Colony, in reference to the case of the prisoner named John Foster Johnson, lately convicted of perjury, and in pursuance of a direction by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, dated the 27th day of August, 1895, to the said Justice to summon and examine, on oath, all persons likely to give material information, arising on certain petitions in favour of the said prisoner, as to his guilt. And this deponent, on oath, states:—As far as I can recollect I said, in the divorce case, that I thought it was a clear night—the 28th June; if I remember rightly, I think I said I thought it was a starlight night; as I passed out to the back place was in darkness; I cannot remember whether I lit the gas in the kitchen on returning to the house; supposing the light in the kitchen were burning, and all the doors between the kitchen and the shop open, the light from the kitchen would be a very small one; there was some blue frosting on the door, and a blind on the window; the blind was about as high as my neck; the blind was back from the window; I could look over it into the street; the glass in the window went to within about 18 inches of the floor, and the blind started at the window-sill; the glass in the window was about 9 feet high; the frosting on the window was about 3 feet deep; the blind would cover about 3 feet in depth of the window; the clear space of glass between the frosting and the blind is about 3 feet; the shop is about 14 feet wide; I could see the figures of both Butler and the woman quite clearly; I said at the trial that the horse had been bought from a man named Jones; I can explain that by the fact of being a great deal upset about three or four days before the divorce case through my father's death; I was also upset on account of the slander hanging over my sister's name; the horse was to be raffled, and Butler got it off Pearce; I was not at home when Butler got it; I know nothing of the arrangement between Pearce and Butler as to the horse; we kept the horse till it was raffled; I believe Butler had a ticket in the raffle; I had none; I do not know whether the raffle took place; I was frequently away in the country travelling about that time, and the raffle may have taken place while I was away; all I know of Pearce was that he kept a crockery shop in Newtown, about two blocks from Butler's shop in King-street; I do not think I ever spoke to Pearce; I do not think we were acquainted with the Cops at the time of the alleged adultery; to the best of my recollection, I do not think we knew them till just before I went to Melbourne; I cannot say with any certainty; I became acquainted with John Copp about the time I went to Bulli with Butler; we went to Bulli together, in the cart we bought from Jones; I cannot say how long before we bought the cart from Jones I met him; three weeks before we bought the cart was the earliest we could have known the Cops; on the 29th June—a Sunday—the steward or cook from the "Fifeshire" came to Butler's place, and told Butler that if he went down to the ship on the following day he would most likely be able to get his brother off the ship on the following day, the 30th June; the steward of the "Fifeshire" had written to Butler saying that Edward Butler had no clothes, and Butler bought a suit of clothes, and took them down to the boat; Butler told me that when I went home to the shop in the evening; I think Edward Butler did not come to the shop till the Monday, the 30th June.

By Bench: I did not go to Copp's before my sister went to the hospital; I did not get a book from Copp; I believe the clothes for Edward Butler were bought at Mark Poy's, in Oxford-street; I only know that from what Butler told me; I met Butler at the end of 1889, or the beginning of 1890, on the day he landed in Pitt-street; I was not asked in a general way whether I had mentioned the fact of what I had seen in the shop till after I had been committed for perjury; it was not until after Butler had instituted proceedings in divorce against my sister that I mentioned the matter to any one; I do not remember swearing at the Divorce Court that Butler had only two horses in New South Wales; the horse that Butler had in June had to be fed by Butler; I generally fed the horse; Butler had to provide the feed; when I was called upon before sentence I said, "I am innocent of this charge; I thought too much of the honor"; at that moment I was interrupted by the Judge, who said, "I am surprised at a man of your character saying such a thing"; I never finished the speech; before we had the horse we carried out the stove polish in hand-bags and a box and parcels.

By Mr. Wade: The light from the nearest lamp would be shining obliquely on to the large pane of the window; the light would strike the window and not the door; the counter was away from the door nearest the wall.

By Bench: The rough sketch I produce (marked 8) is one of the shop, and rooms on the ground floor.

By Mr. Wade: I said at the trial that I did not remember it raining that night; it was not raining when we got out of the tram nor when the woman got into the cab; I could not see the feet of either Butler or the woman; I cannot say that I saw the woman's feet off the ground; I said at the criminal trial that her feet were off the ground; that I inferred from other things; the top of the blind on the window did not join on to the blue paint on the window.

By Bench: The blind was some feet back from the front of the window.

By Mr. Wade: I had just come in the back door of the shop when I saw Butler and the woman having connection; I had walked in through the back room from the yard; they were in the act of connection when I saw them; I had my boots on; Mr. Rofs asked me a number of questions about the horse in the divorce case; Rofs repeated the same question over to me two or three times, and I answered the same way every time—that the horse was the horse that was bought from Jones; Rofs showed me a butt of a cheque, showing that it could not have been the horse bought from Jones; I did not change my story then; I could not say that I knew Pearce at all; I never remember speaking to him; I saw him once or twice; he was going to raffle a horse, cart, and harness; I believe he had been travelling in the country for some time with the horse and cart; I do not know how Butler met Pearce; I met Copp through our going to his shop one Sunday night to buy some medicine; I do not remember Butler selling him some rubber stamps; in a letter which I gave my sister I told Mr. Delohery, the attorney, about the alleged adultery with the woman; that was after the commencement of the divorce proceedings; I know what evidence I was to give before I went into the box in the divorce trial; I had thought over my evidence before I went into the box; I had written it down; I had not thought about the horse particularly; I remember my sister saying yesterday that on one occasion when she was going out for a drive she fell back when the horse started, and I caught her; I do not remember her falling in that way; I never drove with my sister to Trethewey's.

By

By Bench: I believe Butler applied to Mr. Banfield, my sister's solicitor, for particulars of the alleged adultery, which were supplied to his solicitor, Mr. Rofe.

By Mr. Sullivan: Over four years elapsed between the time we had the horse in King-street and my examination in the Divorce Court; I answered the questions then to the best of my belief.

And this deponent, on oath, states:—I am a computer at the Sydney Observatory; the day begins for making observations with regard to the rainfall at 9 o'clock in the morning, and ends at 9 o'clock the next morning; I produce a record showing the total rainfall between 9 o'clock a.m. on the 27th June, 1890, and 9 a.m. on the 28th June, 1890; it commenced very lightly at 5:15 p.m. on the 27th June; it commenced to rain heavier at 8:25 p.m.; from 8:25 p.m. till 8:45 a.m. it was heavy rain in showers; there was a very heavy shower at 10:45 p.m., then light rain, then another heavy shower at 12:15 a.m.; between those showers there was a drizzling rain; at 9 p.m. on the 27th June the sky was completely overcast with rain clouds; we do not take cloud observations during the night, but at 9 a.m. on the 28th the sky was completely overcast with clouds.

By Mr. Sullivan: The record I have is the record taken at the Sydney Observatory; I cannot swear it was raining at King-street, Newtown, within 15 minutes of 12 o'clock on the night of the 27th June.

By Mr. Wade: It is probable that if it were raining at the Observatory heavily it would be raining at King-street, Newtown.

By Mr. Sullivan: The moon often shines through heavy clouds.

By Bench: The moon set at 1:43 a.m. on the 28th June; it was within four or five days of full moon.

And this deponent on oath states:—I am a married woman, residing at Enmore; I remember living in King-street, Newtown; we lived there about two years, from 1890 to 1892; we lived next door to Butler, on the opposite side to Mrs. Greenfield; I know there was a horse at Butler's; I think Butler had a horse at his place while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital the first time; I believe he had a horse there at that time, but have no distinct recollection; that was in 1890, as far as I can remember; I have no recollection of 1891; I recollect Mrs. Butler being in the hospital in 1891; I saw Detective West last night; I told him I could not recollect the time the horse was there, nor the date.

By Mr. Sullivan: To the best of my recollection, it was while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital the first time.

By Bench: I think the horse had been there a few weeks when my husband made a complaint about it; I am not at all certain about the time; I remember Butler going to my husband and asking him why he did not complain to him and not to the landlord.

And this deponent, on oath, states:—I am a married woman; my maiden name was Harriett Page; I was in the employ of Butler for about a fortnight, in the year 1890; Mrs. Butler was at the hospital when I went to his service; that was the only time I was in Butler's service; I do not remember seeing a horse while I was in Butler's service in Butler's yard; there was no horse kept in the stable while I was there; I am quite sure about that.

By

By Mr. Sullivan: I never saw a cart there; I never saw Butler using a cart; I do not remember seeing a cart on the green at the back; I never saw a horse there the whole time I was there; I went to Butler's house once or twice after I had left; I cannot say how long after I had left there that was; I have not a very good memory; I cannot remember at all how long after I had left it was that I called there again; I went there to make a friendly call on Mrs. Butler.

By Mr. Wade: When I paid this visit I went into the house and think I remained in the house the whole time I was there; I saw Cooke one day last week, and made the same statement to him then as I have now, as far as I can recollect.

And this deponent, on oath, states:— I am a solicitor of the Supreme Court of New South Wales; I acted for Johnson in the perjury case; I think a subpoena was issued for Mrs. Greenfield, on behalf of Johnson, but afterwards I did not think her evidence would materially affect the case; I know her name was among the list of names of witnesses.

By Mr. Wade: It was after due consideration that the subpoena was not issued, and not because it was overlooked.

By Mr. Sullivan: I supplied Mr. Rofe, Butler's solicitor, with particulars as to the alleged adultery at 105, King-street, Newtown; I produce a letter which I sent to Mr. Rofe. [Copy put in, and marked 9.] I instructed Mr. Teece in the perjury case; he appeared till the Court adjourned for lunch, after which Mr. Jamieson appeared; Mr. Teece did not appear at all after lunch; Mr. Jamieson had been instructed the day before.

By Bench: There was nothing about a horse in the particulars I sent to Mr. Rofe; I think it was two days before the case that I instructed Mr. Jamieson.

Copp's prescription book is produced, and shows that the first prescription made up for Mrs. Butler by Copp is entered under date 1st June, 1890.

The indictment for perjury against John Johnson is also put in evidence. [Marked 10.]

A newspaper report of the rider of the jury in the case against Butler and others charged with conspiracy is put in by Mr. Sullivan. [Marked 11.]

Copies of affidavits produced in evidence in the same case are also put in evidence. [Marked 12.]

Mr. Sullivan asked to have noted the entry of the 15th October in Copp's prescription book. Sydney, 7 September, 1895.

The Daily Telegraph, Saturday, 10 August, 1895.

THE BUTLER DIVORCE CASE.—THE JUDGE'S SUMMING UP.—THE THREE ACCUSED FOUND GUILTY.—LONG TERMS OF IMPRISONMENT.

THE charge of conspiracy arising out of the Butler divorce suit was continued at the Central Criminal Court yesterday, before Mr. Justice Simpson and a jury. The three accused were found guilty, and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment.

The indictment charged that, on 30th July, 1894, Elizabeth Susannah Peake, Charles Davis, and Thomas Richard Butler did conspire together to prevent the true course of justice; (2) that they conspired together to do certain acts whereby Mary Jane Butler might be falsely suspected of committing adultery with Charles Davis; (3) that they conspired together to do certain acts which might be given in evidence against Mary Jane Butler of having committed adultery with Charles Davis, in the course of a divorce suit; (4) that they conspired together to procure Mary Jane Butler to do certain acts which might also be given in evidence against her, of having committed adultery with Charles Davis, in the course of the divorce suit; and (5) that they conspired together to procure Mary Jane Butler to have illicit carnal intercourse with Charles Davis. The accused pleaded not guilty.

Mr. C. G. Wade prosecuted on behalf of the Crown; Mr. Mason (instructed by Messrs. A. Rofe and Sons) appeared for Butler, and Mr. Mark Williamson for Peake and Davis.

His Honor summed up. The prisoners were charged, he said, on five counts, with doing certain things. It was a matter for regret that there were so many counts. The first count charged conspiracy to prevent the due course of justice. The next three counts seemed to be practically the same—to show that accused had conspired together to bring about a certain state of things which might be given in evidence in the course of the divorce suit of Butler against his wife, in order to induce the Judge to come to the conclusion that adultery had been committed. If the jury were satisfied that those three people, or two of them, had conspired together to prevent the due course of justice in the way mentioned—to bring about a state of facts, circumstances, and position in which Mrs. Butler might be found which might be given in evidence in the course of a divorce suit, and which would, of course, affect the mind of the Judge or the jury against her, then there would be conspiracy to prevent the due course of justice, and the accused were guilty. Such a conspiracy was as atrocious as could well be imagined. Everything depended on the due and proper administration of justice. In thinking the case over, he could hardly realise any worse crime amongst these people, the husband of the woman being one, to bring about a state of things and deliberately put them before the Judge to induce him to grant a divorce. If they came to the conclusion that the Crown case had been made out, not only had there been a conspiracy to defeat the ends of justice, but the ends of justice had been actually defeated. Butler had obtained a decree nisi, but it had not been made absolute. Mr. Rofe, the attorney for Butler, did not dare to attempt to have it made absolute when certain facts were brought to light. He had not the slightest doubt, and he was sure the jury had not, that the Judge of the Divorce Court had been imposed upon, and that, so far as he was concerned, justice was defeated by the way in which the case had been conducted. On the evidence before him, the Judge could have come to no other conclusion than he did. The jury had heard Mr. Rofe's evidence, his cross-examination, and his explanation, and the fact was staring them in the face—although it was competent for Mr. Rofe to call it what he liked—that the facts in regard to the private detective were not brought to the knowledge of the Judge. The fact that a private detective had been employed by Butler to watch his wife was suppressed from the Judge. Had the Judge known that—known that the private detective had been employed—he would probably have more closely scrutinised the circumstances of the case. Mrs. Butler seemed to have said from the beginning that the man Williams, the co-respondent, was the man who had been watching her. She had asserted, as Mr.

Rofe

Rofe himself said, that there was collusion from start to finish. Detective Cooke had said that Butler had offered him £20 if he could get evidence against his wife, and had said that the money was safe in his attorney's hands. That, however, must not be taken as evidence against Mr. Rofe, who had solemnly and sincerely sworn that he knew nothing whatever about a conspiracy, or anything in connection with the conspiracy. His Honor had been very glad to hear him say so. He thought there was little evidence to support the fifth count, but the jury must judge of that themselves. Having briefly stated the law in regard to conspiracy, His Honor said to pervert the ends of justice was bad enough, but if this man had conspired to bring about the debauchery of his own wife, they could hardly imagine how really bad he must be. It was almost impossible to prove conspiracy directly, but the jury, looking at all the circumstances, must say whether they believed the accused, or any two of them, had conspired to defeat the ends of justice. If so, they would find them guilty. If they had a reasonable doubt, they would give the accused the benefit of it. Had the Crown proved their case to the satisfaction of the jury? Passing on, His Honor clearly and concisely set out the evidence, dwelling on the material points. Cooke, they would remember, had wanted his money in advance; Davis, until the catastrophe (as he would call it) occurred, received nothing. Mr. Rofe knew that Butler had had Cooke in his employ, but had said that he did not know that Davis was employed until after 30th July. They had heard what had been said about the woman, about her being in the locality, and other things. If they thought she was aiding and abetting the others, then, if they were guilty, she, too, was guilty. Dealing with Mr. Rofe's examination of Mrs. Butler, on the report, His Honor asked, did he say to the Judge he handed him a report from the private detective, and His Honor could look at it. Of course not. He asked her about the dogs barking and other things, he supposed. Then there was a letter said to be found in Mrs. Butler's bedroom. If deliberately placed there to be used against her, was it not part and parcel of a conspiracy to defeat the ends of justice? Fortunately, if no adultery had been committed, there had been an intervention of Providence, as it were, to shield the woman from any further injustice being done her. Then there was the important point—did Butler know on that night that the man was his own detective? Their knowledge of human nature and the world must guide them in answering that. He had been associated with Butler for some time, had seen him, and conversed with him for some twenty minutes in a strong gas light, and had seen him on other occasions. Yet he did not know him on that particular night. Davis had never told Butler how he came to know all that was contained in the last paragraph of the report, things which could not have been known unless a man was actually peeping through the key-hole, or been somewhere where he could have seen. "She was on her knees, and calling Goodyear, Ross." If so, why was not the detective subpoenaed to prove those things before the Judge? His Honor complimented Mr. Williamson on his able conduct of the defence, and Mr. R. H. Sullivan on the way he had assisted Mrs. Butler, saying that if the thing was a conspiracy, a great deal of the result would be due to energies displayed by Mr. Sullivan. They would remember that the husband allowed the man to escape. If there was not, as the Crown charged, a conspiracy, would Butler have allowed the man to escape whilst he looked after his wife, whom he could get at at any time? It was for the jury to say whether they thought so or not. After placing clearly before the jury what he considered the indiscreet parts of Mrs. Butler's conduct throughout the matter, His Honor again directed the jury as to what was necessary before they could convict, and impressed upon them the necessity of giving the accused the benefit of any reasonable doubt.

The jury retired at 1:20, but were recalled into Court shortly after 2 o'clock, at Mr. Mason's request, in order that His Honor might clearly direct them in regard to certain points in Butler's favour. The final retirement was at 2:20.

At 5:10 they returned into Court, saying they found the three accused guilty on the first four counts in the indictment. They added the following rider:—"We find that Mrs. Mary Jane Butler is not guilty of committing adultery or agreeing to commit adultery with Charles Davis at any time. In reference to the conduct of Mr. Rofe, solicitor in the divorce suit Butler against Butler, the jury are of opinion that his conduct in the suppression of important evidence from the judge on that occasion was iniquitous and severely censurable."

Prisoners were then called upon in the usual way previous to the passing of the sentence. Peake said, "I am innocent"; Davis, "I am the only guilty party—no one else knew anything of the occurrence from first to last"; and Butler made a somewhat lengthy statement, in which he said the Crown had suppressed certain facts which would have told in his favour.

Mr. Williamson asked His Honor to reserve the point that the indictment was bad, inasmuch as there were inserted therein more than three counts against each individual accused.

His Honor: That is a point which should have been taken long ago, if there is anything in it.

Mr. Mason took the same point on behalf of Butler.

His Honor, in passing sentence, said:—"Prisoner Butler, you have been convicted by the jury, after a most careful hearing, and it is my duty to pass sentence upon you. The offence of which you have been convicted is as gross a one as possibly could be committed by any man. You have been convicted of conspiracy to pervert the ends of justice, and of the other offences mentioned in the three succeeding counts of the indictment. You stand in a worse position, if possible, than that of your fellow-conspirators. The sentence of the Court is that you be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for a period of seven years. The sentence upon you, Davis, is that you also be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for seven years. Peake, as far as you are concerned, I am inclined to take a more lenient view of your case. It may be that, although you have been convicted, that you were induced to enter into this conspiracy by Davis. The sentence of the Court is that you be imprisoned in Darlinghurst Gaol for four years with hard labour."

His Honor, addressing Mr. Williamson, said he would consider the point of law, and, as he was bound to do, reserve it. He hoped, however, he and Mr. Mason would consider whether they thought it was a point worth being reserved. If they made up their minds, after due consideration, and, perhaps, after consultation, they would probably inform him, in order to save him the trouble of reserving it or the Court considering it. If they thought there was anything in it he would, of course, reserve it as asked.

EXHIBIT No. 12.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF NEW SOUTH WALES—IN DIVORCE.

In re Thomas Richard Butler, of Darlington Road, Darlington, in the Colony of New South Wales, chemist, petitioner; Mary Jane Butler (formerly Mary Jane Johnson), his wife, respondent; and Geo. Williams, co-respondent.

On this 10th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1895, Mary Jane Butler, of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, the above-named respondent, being duly sworn, maketh oath, and saith as follows:—

1. That in the month of July, 1894, respondent having applied for a maintenance order against petitioner, the petitioner induced respondent to go and live with him at a house he had rented at No. 115, Glebe-street, Glebe, and opposite the house of the Du Four family, who had a room to let. The petitioner did not furnish the house, and the respondent removed her brother's furniture to it.

2. That petitioner resided in the house with the respondent under the pretence of living with her as his wife, but refused to cohabit with her there.

3. That shortly after removing to Butler's house, Glebe-street, the respondent noticed a man frequently sitting on the verandah of Du Four's cottage opposite, and he appeared to be watching.

4. That the said man, who has since given various names, including Williams and Davis, never lodged in the house of Mrs. Du Four, where he paid for a room for fourteen days, but I am informed, and verily believe, came there solely to watch Butler's house, arriving at Du Four's at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and leaving again before tea-time, and was in the pay of Butler or some friend of his. And the said man introduced a woman to Mrs. Du Four as his sister, who afterwards came to Mrs. Butler offering medicines to her of a compromising nature, and alleged she knew Williams well.

5. That subsequently to this, in the street and at her house, the man Williams forced his presence upon respondent in such a peculiar manner she could not, at the time, suggest a motive for.

6. In consequence of this behaviour the respondent went, on Friday, the 28th July, 1894, and complained to Mr. C. Delohery, Stipendiary Magistrate, who had previously advised her to return and live with her husband, and in consequence of the man Williams' conduct on Saturday, the 29th July, 1894, the respondent went to G. A. Lloyd, Esq., Clerk of Petty Sessions, Glebe Police Court, on Monday, 31st July, 1894, and laid a complaint against Williams. In consequence, Mr. Lloyd telephoned to her then solicitor, Mr. Abigail, who sent her brother to see the man.

7. That the man George Williams, alias Davis, was employed by the petitioner, or some person authorised by him, in his (Butler's) interest, to watch respondent, and failing to detect any improper conduct on her part, he himself forced his company upon the respondent, and on the night that Butler found him in the house he had forced his way in by the back entrance with the assistance and knowledge of the petitioner, or some person authorised by him, and that the petitioner, having been advised of what was proceeding, then rushed in.

8. That the man Williams or Davis, in addition to acting as a spy for Butler on the house in Glebe-street, and before he forced his way into the house as alleged, also went, about the 26th of July, 1894, to a builder at Church-street, Newtown, who had some time previously been engaged building a house adjoining where Mrs. Butler and her brother then lived in Horder-street, Newtown, and had lodged with them, and there interviewed, in the presence of witnesses, the said builder, one Jansen, and said that if he, Jansen, would tell anything against Mrs. Butler's character, he would be doing him (Williams) a good turn, and would also be doing Butler a good turn.

9. That this visit was before the man Williams was found under compromising circumstances in the house in Glebe-street, but about the same time; and he (Williams) must have been instructed to make such inquiries by Butler or some person in his interests, otherwise he could have had no interest in doing so, and could not have known where the Butler family lived, or who was working near their old residence except by information supplied by Butler.

10. That immediately after the night when the man Williams was found in the house, Glebe-street, he kept out of the way until the rude nisi was granted against Mrs. Butler.

11. That shortly after that he was seen by Mrs. Butler in Sydney, who immediately spoke to him, but he denied his identity, and assaulted her to force her off; she, however, followed him until she fainted from exhaustion; and that she then subsequently obtained a summons against him for such assault, but as he had given a fictitious name she had to obtain another summons, to which he attended at the Police Court under the name of George Williams, alias Holahan.

12. That he was there defended by the petitioner's solicitor, a Mr. Rufe, who seldom appears in Police Court cases.

13. That he there admitted he was the co-respondent in the case Butler v. Butler and Williams, and said his real name was George Davis.

14. That the said Williams or Davis is a man of bad repute, and has been for a length of time conducting a class of betting known as a "tote" under the name of "Highborn" on the footway in King-street, Sydney, and has been repeatedly under the notice of the police; and at the present time there is a summons against him for loitering.

15. That the said Williams or Davis is and has been living with the woman who was alleged to be his sister; when introduced to Mrs. Du Four, of Glebe-street, Glebe, and that he has been living with the said woman as his wife for three years past, and was so doing at the time he was engaged watching Mrs. Butler; that the said woman came to try and sell "abortion medicines" to Mrs. Butler, and tried to prepossess Mrs. Butler in favour of the man she had been, and was then, and since is, living with.

16. That this woman is the wife of a criminal now in gaol, and gets her living through the work of the man Williams, and by selling medicines.

17. That the respondent has numerous witnesses who can testify to the truth of the statements contained in this affidavit, and expects to produce more direct evidence of collusion and connivance of Butler and Williams.

18. That the compromising position in which the respondent was found by petitioner was a pre-arranged affair between Williams and Butler, or some friend acting for him.

19. That the respondent did not at any time commit adultery with the co-respondent George Williams.

M. J. BUTLER.

Sworn by the deponent on the day and year first above written, at Sydney, before me,—

FRED CHAPMAN,

A Commissioner for Affidavits.

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF NEW SOUTH WALES.—IN DIVORCE.

Between Thomas Richard Butler, petitioner; Mary Jane Butler, respondent; George Williams, co-respondent.

On this 22nd day of May, in the year of Our Lord 1895, Thomas Richard Butler, of Darlington Road, Darlington, in the Colony of New South Wales, chemist's assistant, being duly sworn maketh oath, and saith as follows:—

1. I have read the affidavit of Mary Jane Butler, sworn and filed herein on the 16th day of May instant.

2. Referring to the first paragraph of such affidavit, I say that a Mrs. Banks, of Newtown, during the beginning of July last year arranged the settlement of all differences between myself and my wife—it was not until this had taken place that I saw my wife. I was for some time previous to such date opposed to such settlement, the first suggestion of a settlement coming from the said Mrs. Banks, and not from me.

3. Referring to the said first paragraph, the house referred to therein, was taken by the respondent and not by me, she having refused to live in a house on which I had paid a deposit, whereupon I told her to find a suitable house, which she did, choosing the said house in Glebe-street.

4. Referring to the said paragraph, I have seen a copy of the evidence sworn by the said respondent at the Glebe Police Court, on the 2nd day of August last year, the original depositions being put in as an exhibit in the divorce proceedings, wherein the respondent swore as follows:—"I (meaning the respondent), then took a house and put my furniture in it." The respondent also swore at the Divorce Court, in the said divorce proceedings, as follows:—"The furniture was mine (meaning the respondent), the furniture always was mine—my money bought the furniture"; but her brother swore that the furniture was his.

5. Referring to the said first paragraph, I say that I verily believe that the furniture referred to is the same furniture I gave the said respondent on the 17th day of January, 1891, when she executed a deed of settlement.

6. The whole of the matters raised by the first paragraph of the said affidavit, were very fully gone into at the Divorce Court in the said divorce proceedings.

7. Referring to paragraph 2 of the said affidavit, I say that when I and the respondent went to live together at Glebe-street aforesaid, I treated her in every respect as my wife, with the exception of having some reluctance in cohabiting with her. The whole of the evidence respecting this was also gone into very fully in the said divorce proceedings.

8. I am unable to admit or deny the truth of the statements contained in paragraph 3 of the said affidavit. I never at any time saw the man referred to on the verandah of the said cottage of Mr. Du Four.

9. Referring to paragraphs 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 15 of the said affidavit, I absolutely and unequivocally deny that the man referred to was in my pay, or in the pay of any friend of mine for the purpose of concocting a charge of adultery against the respondent, nor did I know that any man was paid by anyone for such a purpose, and I verily believe no one was so paid, nor did I know that any woman had been introduced to Mrs. Du Four, or that such woman had been or was offering such medicines as alleged. I further say that the respondent went very fully into the evidence of the man's doings and the matters herein alleged, and called the following witnesses:—Eliza MacDougall, Eliza Du Four, and Mrs. Hughes, relating to the questions raised in such paragraph.

10. I am unable to admit or deny the statements contained in paragraph 6 of the said affidavit, respecting Mr. Delohery, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Abigail therein referred to, but I say that the 26th day of July was not a Friday as stated therein, nor was the 29th day of July a Saturday as therein sworn.

11. In further answer to the said paragraph 6, although I have searched the evidence given by the respondent at the Glebe Police Court and at the Divorce Court, I cannot find that she said anything about the said Mr. Delohery, Mr. Lloyd, or Mr. Abigail as she in such paragraph now swears.

12. Referring to the 7th and 8th paragraphs of the said affidavit, I absolutely and unequivocally deny that the man George Williams alias Davis alias Holahan alias Highborn was employed by me, or by any person authorised by me, or in my interest to watch the respondent for the purpose of concocting a charge of adultery against the respondent, or that he forced his way, as alleged, either with my assistance or knowledge, or of any person authorised by me, or that I was advised of what was proceeding, or that anyone advised me that the co-respondent was in the house with my wife as alleged.

13. Referring to the said paragraphs 7 and 8 of the said affidavit, in which the respondent swears that the person named George Williams alias Davis forced his way in the back entrance on the night I discovered the respondent engaged in an adulterous connection with the co-respondent. I respectfully refer this Honorable Court to the evidence of the respondent, taken at the said divorce proceedings, wherein the respondent admits that she allowed the co-respondent to come in at the back entrance on the night referred to, and also to the evidence of one of the witnesses called by the respondent, who swore that she saw respondent let the man in, describing the letting in as follows:—"The gate was barricaded up, and Mrs. Butler went up and pushed the pipe aside and let the man in, and then Mrs. Butler put the pipe up against the gate again." The respondent also swore at the Glebe Police Court on the 2nd day of August last year, "A man named Williams walked into my house at 7 o'clock, and said, 'Going to your brother's?'" The respondent also swore that the co-respondent, while in the dining-room, was being shown by her through an album which she said was lying on the table, and that she informed him that the photos he was looking at were her grandfather and grandmother.

14. Referring to the said paragraph 7, it was proved conclusively at the Divorce Court by the respondent's own evidence that she not only let the man in by the back gate, but also let him in by the back door. It was also proved at the Divorce Court by the evidence of the respondent, myself, and Herbert Goodere that the back gate was barricaded up with a large earthenware pipe, also by means of a stick, and that the back door was securely locked and the windows securely fastened by means of locks and darkened by dark blinds tacked down.

15. Referring to the said paragraph 7, I crave leave to refer to the evidence of myself, Herbert Goodere, and the respondent as to what took place on the evening I caught my wife in an adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent.

16. Referring to paragraphs 8 and 9 of the said affidavit, I deny that the man Williams or Davis was authorised by me, or by anyone with my consent, to see the person Jansen referred to therein. If the said Williams or Davis did see the person Jansen, it must have been on the respondent's behalf, as the respondent swore that the man Williams or Davis wanted her to marry him if she would get divorced. The first time I heard of the man Williams or Davis having seen the said Jansen was on perusing the affidavit of the said respondent.

17. Referring to paragraph 9 of the said affidavit, I had no recollection that the said respondent was living in Hordern-street until some time after the petition was filed herein.

18. Referring to paragraph 10 of the said affidavit, I say that the respondent swore at the said Divorce Court that she saw the man Williams while the hearing was proceeding, and also swore that she had seen the man Williams repeatedly since the petition was filed, and an application was made by the learned counsel for the respondent to postpone the hearing to enable the co-respondent to be subpoenaed.

19. I am unable of my own knowledge to admit or deny the statements in paragraphs 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16 of the said affidavit.

20. Referring to paragraphs 11 and 12 of the said affidavit, the first I heard of the said Police Court proceedings was on perusing the said affidavit.

21. Referring to paragraph 17 of the said affidavit, I say that the respondent at the divorce proceedings went very fully into nearly all, if not all, the matters referred to in her affidavit, and also attempted to prove that I had acted in collusion with the co-respondent, which I absolutely and unequivocally denied in my reply, as also in my petition, as also in my evidence, and I do so again in this my affidavit, and this Honorable Court, after hearing the evidence of the respondent and her witnesses, entirely disbelieved them.

22. The divorce proceedings lasted four days or thereabouts, the respondent being represented by two learned counsel, who examined, cross-examined, and re-examined witnesses at great length, as also did my solicitor, Thomas Ernest Rofe, and in consequence of the numerous times she contradicted statements made within the previous half hours in the course of the lengthy cross-examination of the respondent, brought forth the following remarks from the very learned Judge trying the case, viz. :—"She (meaning the respondent) did not appear to recollect statements she made in the witness-box after the lapse of half an hour."

23. The respondent, in her statement of defence filed herein, swore that I committed adultery with a woman unknown, calling as evidence in support thereof her brother, John Johnson, who committed deliberate and wilful perjury, for which he was convicted and is at present serving his sentence.

24. The respondent also, in her said statement of defence, swore that I had committed adultery with my employer, Caroline Copp, but which charge she practically abandoned at the trial and had to admit was not true.

25. The respondent in her examination said that she did not receive from the co-respondent a pair of slippers, and that she was not wearing them when she visited Dr. Kingsbury on the evening of the day on which she was caught in an adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent, and whom she said examined her that evening. The said Dr. Kingsbury was called as a witness for the respondent and swore that "the evening she visited him she was wearing a pair of loose house slippers, and not laced-up boots as the respondent had sworn." Dr. Kingsbury has since said that the reason he was so positive that the respondent was wearing the said slippers was that the respondent "apologised for coming in slippers, as she had to leave her house in a hurry."

26. I crave leave to refer to all the papers, petition, statement of defence, exhibits, documents filed, and evidence given and decrees made in the said divorce proceedings.

27. If any person had suggested to me that they would concoct evidence to procure me a divorce from the respondent I would have immediately knocked that person down whether he were a man or a woman.

28. I absolutely and unequivocally deny any collusion or connivance with any person, man, woman, or child, to bring about a divorce from the respondent, or to bring about the adultery with which the respondent has been found guilty, or to concoct evidence for such a purpose.

The Honorable George Bowen Simpson, Her Majesty's Attorney-General for the Colony of New South Wales, who prosecutes for Her Majesty in this behalf, being present in the Supreme Court at Sydney, on the 26th day of November, in the year 1894, charges that John Johnson, on the 13th day of November, in the year 1894, at Sydney, in the Colony aforesaid, before His Honor Sir William Windeyer, did wilfully falsely swear in substance as follows, that is to say, I (meaning the said John Johnson) went through the house to bed and feed the horse, and when I returned I saw the petitioner (meaning thereby one Thomas Richard Butler) having connection with the woman on the counter in the shop.

And the Attorney-General aforesaid charges that what the said John Johnson then so swore was on an occasion when the truth of the same was material, and that the said John Johnson did not go through the house to bed and feed the horse, and did not see the said Thomas Richard Butler having connection with any woman, as the said John Johnson well knew.

Butler v. Butler, Williams, co-respondent.

Dear Sir,

No. 8, Deanman-street, Glebe, Sydney, 7 September, 1894.

In answer to your letter of the 5th instant, which I did not receive till this afternoon, I may state that the locus of the adultery referred to by you in your letter is No. 105, King-street, Newtown, Sydney, and that it happened soon after the return of the petitioner and his brother-in-law (Johnson) to that address after a smoke entertainment held in honor of the Carlton and South Melbourne football teams.

No. 31.

Mr. B. Cooke to The Minister of Justice.

Dear Sir,

18 September, 1895.

I beg to submit herewith the statutory declaration of Clara Gosnell in support of the petition for the release of John Foster Johnson, now under consideration.

Clara Gosnell was a witness at the perjury trial, but although she commenced to give this evidence it was objected to by the prosecution. She subsequently made the statement to Mr. Banfield, solicitor, and to two police officers who called on her. As her statement in a measure corroborates Johnson and two of his witnesses, and also negatives Butler's version, I deem it only fair in Johnson's interest and the interests of justice to bring it under your notice.

I am, &c.,

B. COOKE.

[Enclosure.]

STATUTORY DECLARATION.

I, Clara Gosnell, wife of George Gosnell, engineer, of 50, Macquarie-street South, Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby solemnly and sincerely declare as follows:—In the year 1890 in consequence of the great strike, my husband was out of work, I was compelled to do some work to assist in maintaining our family; about the month of March, 1890, I saw a notice in the window of Mr. Butler's shop, 105, King-street, Newtown; I made certain arrangements with Butler, and entered on work as a canvasser for orders; in the month of June, 1890, while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital, and the day following a smoke concert, I was in Butler's shop; Butler said to me in conversation, "I thought we were going to have a row here last night, I was afraid 'Harriett' would hear it; when Jack and I came from the social, there was a woman standing in the doorway, and as I opened the door she went into the shop, and she would insist on showing me her beautiful shaped legs; she was a dirty faggot—she wore no underclothing; we put her into a cab, and she drove away down the street, but came back again and used some very bad language, and told me to pay her cab fare, and said I know where you live you b — take-down, this is not the last you'll hear of me." I said, "Mr. Butler, I wish you would treat me with a little more respect, I don't like such talk"; he said "Oh, you need not be offended."

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of, the provisions of an Act made and passed in the ninth year of the reign of Her present Majesty, intitled "An Act for the more effectual abolition of Oaths and Affirmations taken and made in various Departments of the Government of New South Wales, and to substitute Declarations in lieu thereof, and for the suppression of voluntary and extra-judicial Oaths and Affidavits."

Subscribed and declared at Sydney, this 18th day of September, 1895, before me,—

Regina v. Johnson.

20 September, 1890.

THIS prisoner was tried before the Chief Justice, on the 13th December last, on a charge of perjury, alleged to have been committed in the case of "Butler v. Butler," a suit for divorce brought by husband against wife, on the ground of alleged adultery. The wife, whilst denying the adultery on her part, made a counter-charge of adultery with a person unknown against her husband, who was the petitioner. The issues settled on the part of the respondent being whether the petitioner Butler had, with a woman unknown to the respondent, about the month of June, 1890, committed adultery. The prisoner Johnson, who was called in support of the allegation of adultery on the part of Butler, stated that on the evening of the 27th June, on coming home at 12.30 a.m. from a concert which he and Butler had been present they found a woman under the influence of drink standing in the doorway, that when the door was opened he went through the shop, which was all in darkness, out into the yard, and bedded down and fed a horse, and that on coming back in ten or fifteen minutes afterwards, the shop being still in darkness, he found Butler having connection with this woman.

He stated that Butler's brother had arrived that day from England, but was not at the shop.

Butler stated that he had been at a concert; that on his return home they found a drunken woman in the doorway who asked for a drink of water; that he told prisoner to give her some water, and went through to the yard to ease himself; that on coming back he found the prisoner had let the woman into the shop; that he was much annoyed at this, and that he had difficulty in getting her to leave; Butler further stated that this did not occur on the 27th June, but two or three days afterwards; that his brother, who had arrived from England on the 27th June, came to stay with him at the shop on that or the next day; and that his brother was there when the woman came. In this he was fully corroborated by the brother.

So far it is the prisoner against Butler and his brother. Johnson stated with reference to the feeding and bedding down of the horse, when giving evidence before Mr. Justice Windeyer, in the divorce proceedings, that this was the first horse that Butler had bought. It was then proved by independent testimony that the first horse was bought from a man named Jones in the month of September following; that a horse, cart, and harness were bought at the same time; the cheque paid for the horse, dated in September, was produced, and Jones proved the sale to have taken place in that month. The prisoner Johnson upon his trial for perjury altered his story, and said that the horse in question was not the one bought from Jones, but was borrowed from a man named Pearce, who had put his horse and cart in a raffle, and that whilst this raffle was proceeding, Butler had the use of the horse and cart, but whether Butler had the horse for a week or a fortnight or for what time he could not say. He further stated that he had never mentioned anything about this borrowed horse until he gave evidence upon his trial for perjury; that he believed Pearce kept a crockery shop, but he could not tell where he was, or anything about the man. When asked how he was able to see all he did in the shop on the 27th of June without there being any light in the place he could make no explanation.

Shortly after Mrs. Butler left the hospital, she and her husband quarrelled, and she on two or three several occasions, took proceedings against him in the Police Office, yet the prisoner swore before Mr. Justice Windeyer, that he never told his sister or anybody else about the matter, nor alluded to it in any of the proceedings in the Police Court. When giving his evidence, however, upon the trial for perjury he admitted this was not true, and said he had told a man named Hillyer. Johnson called two women as witnesses respecting the horse. One, a Mrs. Gosnell, alias Pugh, who spoke to a horse being there whilst Mrs. Butler was in the hospital, and spoke to Butler riding the horse, and her laughing at him. It was proved, however, that Butler did not purchase any saddle or bridle till September, and for that he paid in that month £2 2s. 6d. This witness also stated the horse was a chestnut. The horse purchased in September, 1890, was a chestnut with a white blaze. The other witness, a Miss Ducker, spoke of seeing Butler riding a horse, but could not fix the time. Both these women were friends of Mrs. Butler's, Johnson's sister. Mrs. Butler was living with her brother.

It will thus be seen that the case against Johnson did not depend solely upon the evidence of Butler and his brother, but it being necessary that Johnson should be out of the way for a short time, he made a statement with regard to the horse, which was clearly shown to have been palpably and demonstrably wrong. The jury returned a verdict against Johnson, after a retirement of seven minutes.

Since this trial Butler himself has been tried and convicted on a charge of conspiracy to bring about adultery on the part of his wife, and it has therefore been urged that the evidence of Butler should not be relied upon. Apart from this evidence, however, was the further statement with regard to the horse made by Johnson in support of his allegation of the adultery of Butler, which was shown by testimony apart from Butler's to be entirely false. Mrs. Butler, however, who had naturally taken a good deal of interest in her brother's case, petitioned for an inquiry, and in consequence of certain declarations substantially alleging that there was a horse at Butler's place during the month of June, it was deemed advisable to have an inquiry under the 383rd section of the "Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1883." This inquiry was held before Mr. District-Court Judge Backhouse, who examined a number of witnesses. Amongst others was Private-detective Cooke, but as his statements had no direct bearing, either upon the question of the alleged adultery of Butler or the possession of a horse in the month of June, beyond repeating certain alleged statements made to him by a Mrs. Jeffreys, which, however, was contradicted by this lady when examined, his evidence may be placed on one side.

There was also the evidence of Mr. Hillyer and Mr. Jones, both of whom alleged that, in conversation with Johnson about the end of 1893 or beginning of 1894, Johnson had substantially related to them the circumstances of the alleged adultery on the 27th June, 1890. This evidence would have clearly been inadmissible on the trial.

During the Divorce Court proceedings, Johnson distinctly swore that he had never mentioned the circumstance to anyone, and, furthermore, had never mentioned it in any of the Police Court proceedings or to his sister. While he was upon his trial for perjury Hillyer was the only man whose name was mentioned by Johnson as to whom he had made any communication, and Jones appears to have been somewhat mixed up with the divorce proceedings, though he denies statements he is alleged to have made to Mr. Rafe, solicitor, detrimental to Mrs. Butler's character.

A Mr. Trothewey, who had been absent from the Colony for some years, and his wife, were examined as to the possession by Butler of horses during the months of June and July. Trothewey speaks of Butler having three horses and says the vehicle was an old gig with yellow streaks. He further said that Butler came to his place on horseback. It would appear quite possible that what these witnesses say took place in June or July took place in September or October, or possibly after Mrs. Butler's return from the hospital the second time.

A Mrs. Greenfield was also examined. She states that in the beginning of June a horse and vehicle were brought to the Butler's place. The horse was kept on the premises and the vehicle on the green, and one Sunday, after Mrs. Butler returned from the hospital, she saw her with Butler, Johnson, and two children go out in the vehicle, and that the horse was the same as had been kept in the yard. She further states that the horse and cart were there while a Mrs. Jeffreys was in service with Butler. She further states that Johnson saw her and asked her to give evidence before his trial, and that he then spoke to her about this horse. A subpoena was issued for Mrs. Greenfield on behalf of Johnson when being tried for perjury, but Mr. Banfield, solicitor, who appears to have been acting at this time on behalf of Johnson, states that he did not think her evidence could materially affect the case, and that after due consideration the subpoena was not issued, and there was nothing about a horse in the papers he sent to Mr. Rofe, who subsequently acted for Johnson. It will thus be seen that there are very grave reasons to doubt the correctness of this witness's evidence.

Another witness—George Long—states that Butler had a horse in January, 1890, and exchanged it in May, 1890, and says that he is certain Butler was using the horse before Mrs. Butler went to the hospital. It has not been alleged at any time, either by Johnson, Butler, or any other witness other than Long, that Butler possessed or used a horse prior to Mrs. Butler going into the hospital. It may, however, be that Long is confusing dates, and is speaking of the possession of a horse prior to Mrs. Butler going to the hospital a second time.

Mrs. Butler, who gave evidence on the inquiry, supports the statement as to the possession of a horse by her husband at the time she was discharged from the hospital, but states clearly there was no horse prior to her going to that institution. If Mrs. Butler's evidence be correct, it is a matter for remark that when she must have known that the crucial test of her brother's evidence was the possession of a horse whilst she was in the hospital, she upon both occasions during the divorce proceedings, and again upon her brother's trial for perjury, abstained from giving evidence. If Mrs. Greenfield's evidence be correct, Mrs. Butler and she had often spoken about the horse when they had met in the divorce case, and that she had seen Mrs. Butler during the divorce case and the trial of her brother. Yet neither of them were called upon the trial.

Among the other witnesses examined by Judge Backhouse was Mrs. Jeffries, who was in service in Butler's house in June and July, 1890, while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital, and until the day after Mrs. Butler's return from the hospital. She says, "There was no horse kept in the stable while I was there; I am quite sure of that; I never saw a cart there; I never saw Butler using a cart; I do not remember seeing a cart on the green at the back; I never saw a horse there the whole time I was there; I saw Cooke last week, and made the same statement to him then as I have now, as far as I can recollect."

Since the date of the inquiry a declaration of Mrs. Gosnell has been forwarded by Mr. Cooke, in which she states that in the month of June, 1890, while Mrs. Butler was in the hospital, and the day following a smoke concert, she was in Butler's shop, when he said to her in conversation, "I thought we were going to have a row last night. I was afraid Harriet (now Mrs. Jeffries) would hear it. When Jack and I came home from the social there was a woman standing in the doorway, and as I opened the door she entered the shop, and would insist on showing me her beautiful shaped legs. She was a dirty faggot. She wore no underclothing." Mrs. Gosnell, when examined upon the trial of Johnson for perjury, made no allusion whatever to this alleged conversation. With regard to the statement that the horse obtained in June belonged to a man named Pearce, although diligent search has been made for such a man, both at Newtown and Waverley, it has been found impossible to obtain any information whatever as to the existence of such a person, nor does the prisoner Johnson or his friends appear to have been more successful.

It may here be remarked that the vehicle spoken of by Trothewey is described by him as an old gig, with "yellow streaks," that spoken of by Long is described by him as being a "dark-blue or green cart," the vehicle sold by Jones to Butler in September was described by Jones as "green, with yellow lines."

Certain books of account kept by Butler were produced at the inquiry, although not at that trial, and in these books during the months of June, July, and August, appear accurate daily accounts of the family expenditure down to the smallest items, but during the whole of this period when this accuracy prevailed, there is no single item paid for horse feed, nor has any evidence at all been tendered to show the purchase of horse feed during this time. After the return of Mrs. Butler from the hospital, in July, the book appears to have been kept by her, but not with the same accuracy that it was kept before.

It does not appear, after a very careful consideration of the facts as adduced both at the trial for perjury and at the subsequent inquiry, that any such doubt or question exists as to the guilt of the prisoner, or as to any mitigating circumstances in his case which will justify the discharge of Johnson from custody.

It must be borne in mind, as clearly shown by the reports of the learned Chief Justice (herewith), who presided at Johnson's trial, that the alleged perjury was in no wise connected with, nor did it in any way form part of the charge of conspiracy in respect of which Butler was convicted.

In submitting this minute for the consideration of my colleagues, I would also direct their attention to the very strong report of the Chief Justice, which was forwarded to me prior to the inquiry before Judge Backhouse, and to his additional and still stronger report forwarded after the evidence taken at that inquiry had been submitted for his consideration.

I should further like to direct the attention of the Cabinet to the evidence of Johnson upon his trial for perjury, in which he says, in addition to the statements I have already alluded to, "I swore that this horse and cart, H. Jones', were on the premises in June. I was asked a good many questions. I did not breathe one word throughout about the raffled horse. I did not breathe one word about the horse and cart. I mean the horse and cart belonging to Pearce. When I gave evidence in the Divorce Court, I admit I made a false statement about the horse. I now recollect Butler using the horse before 15th September. I also said at Divorce Court that I did not state this matter before to anyone. This also is not not true. I now recollect speaking to a man named Hillyer." From this it will be seen that until Johnson discovered that the horse and cart purchased from Jones could not have been on the premises before September, not one word was uttered, as suggested by Johnson, as to any horse and cart having been in the possession of Butler other than two which were shown to have been purchased by him in September and October, 1890.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

(REPORT OF THE INSPECTOR-GENERAL OF THE INSANE UPON SEPARATE TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 22 October, 1895.

The Inspector-General of the Insane to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir, Lunacy Department, Inspector-General's Office, Gladesville, 9 September, 1895.

Owing to certain statements made in the public Press by Francis Abigail, lately a prisoner in H.M. Gaol at Parramatta, with regard to the treatment of prisoners, especially with regard—1st, to the effect of separate or cellular treatment on their mental condition; and 2nd, as to insane prisoners being retained in gaol,—I think it necessary to place the following facts before you for the information of the Chief Secretary, and, should he deem it advisable, for the information of the Minister of Justice:—

1st. As to the treatment of prisoners in gaols conducing to insanity.

It appears from returns kindly furnished, at my request, by the Comptroller-General of Prisons, from the various gaols, that 373 prisoners were in separate or cellular treatment (A Division) during the year 1894, and that 211 entered upon this treatment during that year.

These numbers, it appears, vary but little from year to year, and may be taken as about the average undergoing separate or cellular treatment (A Division) for several years past. The separate or cellular treatment is continued for nine months in the case of all prisoners serving sentences of three years and upwards, but it appears from the returns that a number of prisoners whose sentence includes the separate or cellular treatment for nine months are exempted from the whole or a part of it by the Visiting Surgeons, owing to special reasons, of which the condition of bodily health, epilepsy, evident mental weakness, or instability are the most usual.

On turning to the observation wards at Parramatta and Darlinghurst, it appears that on the 1st of August, 1895, there were 19 prisoners in these, taken together, and that their status was as follows:—

(a.) Under remand from Police Court	2
(b.) Awaiting trial	2
(c.) Detained during the Governor's pleasure	1
(d.) Serving sentence of from 3 months to 2 years and 9 months (all under 3 years)	7
(e.) Serving sentences of 3 years and upwards	7

Of the total number, only 7 were liable to separate or cellular treatment, and of these, only 3 had passed through the nine months—1 in 1882, 1 in 1891, and 1 in 1894—whilst 1 had passed through six months in 1894. The others had been exempted for special reasons.

At the same date, 1st August, 1895, there were 52 patients in the Hospital for Criminal Insane at Parramatta, whose status was as follows:—

(a.) Awaiting trial for murder or other serious offence against the person	9
(b.) Found insane on arraignment for murder or other serious offence against the person	5
(c.) Acquitted on ground of insanity and detained during the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor	27
(d.) Serving sentence in all cases for life for murder or rape	11

52

Of the total number, only 11 could have been subjected to separate treatment under their sentences, but not one of them was so. In every case they had been sentenced to death, and this sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life, owing to their mental condition, so that they were exempted from separate treatment, and in most instances were only a short time in gaol before being sent to the Hospital for the Criminal Insane.

We have, therefore, at the present moment, only 4 prisoners who have undergone separate treatment—3 for nine and 1 for six months—under observation, and of these only 3 can be certified as insane, 1 of these having served his cellular treatment in 1882, 1 in 1891, and 2 in 1894, although an average of something like 370 prisoners undergo separate treatment annually, and have done so for some years past.

I have repeatedly examined these 4 prisoners, and am unable to say that the separate or cellular treatment is directly responsible for the present mental condition in either of them. One of the prisoners is a Chinaman, and I think it probable that his mental peculiarities would have been discovered before the separate treatment was commenced if he had been able to speak English more fluently. Two of them are more or less congenitally defective, and the remaining one led before admission to gaol a very dissipated life. All three of the Europeans are serving sentences for sexual offences.

These facts, I think, sufficiently disprove the somewhat random statements as to the causation of insanity by the separate or cellular treatment which have recently been made.

The separate or cellular treatment is no doubt severe, and is made so with a definite object. Looked at from an outside point of view, it might be supposed to have a tendency to produce insanity, but such has not been shown to be the case either in England or in other countries where a similar system is carried out, or in this Colony. Much, however, must depend on this system being carried out under the safeguards of efficient medical supervision, exercised both in excusing manifestly unfit subjects altogether and watching the effect on those undergoing it. I find on examining the records of the Department of Prisons that a number of prisoners whose sentence carries with it separate or cellular treatment are exempted altogether by the Visiting Surgeons, whilst others are exempted by the gaol regulations as being over 60 years of age.

The removals from separate treatment, when once commenced, on account of symptoms indicating insanity are few, but after its termination the prisoners are sometimes found to be dull and lethargic, a condition which passes off in a short time, and which is apparently due rather to a return to the use of tobacco (which is chewed) and tea, which are given under the prison regulations on the cessation of the separate treatment, and are sometimes taken in excessive quantity, the craving for them being great, and other prisoners giving up some part of their allowance to those newly released from separate treatment.

That occasional cases of insanity occur during, and apparently by reason of, the separate treatment is not to be wondered at, but when the close alliance, hereditary and otherwise, of some forms of insanity and crime, and the number of people who are on the borderland are considered—when it is clearly shown that a number of prisoners are insane at the time they committed offences, though this insanity is not apparent till a subsequent date, and when the very irregular lives led by a number of prisoners before committal is taken account of—the wonder is that the number of persons found to be insane in prison is not larger than it is.

2nd. As to insane prisoners being retained in gaols:—The places where insane prisoners are kept in gaols are the observation wards at Darlinghurst and Parramatta.

These wards are proclaimed under the provisions of section 67 of the Lunacy Act and section 4 of the Lunacy Act Amendment Act, which are as follows:—

Section 67, Lunacy Act.

The Governor in Council may, by notification published in the Gazette, set apart a ward, cell, or cells in any gaol or penal establishment for the detention of any prisoner who may be supposed to be insane, or who, from mental imbecility, may be supposed to be unfit for penal discipline, in order that he may be there placed under observation until it be certified by two medical practitioners, one of whom shall be either the Inspector-General or the Superintendent or Medical Officer of an Hospital for the Insane, that he is of sound mind, or is insane and a fit subject for detention in an Hospital for the Criminal Insane.

Section 4, Lunacy Act Amendment Act.

If any person whilst imprisoned in any gaol, prison, or penal establishment, under any sentence of hard labour or imprisonment imposed otherwise than on the conviction by order of Justices, shall appear to be insane, the Comptroller-General of Prisons shall direct that such prisoner be placed under observation, as in section 67 of the Principal Act, and the Colonial Secretary may, on receipt of certificates from two medical practitioners in the form of Schedule two of the said Act, direct, by order under his hand, that such person be removed to and kept in an Hospital for the Criminal Insane, &c.

It will be seen that the provision is for temporary observation and treatment only, with a view to gauge the mental condition of the prisoners and to defeat malingering, which before the establishment of these wards was very common.

The observation wards have served the purpose for which they were intended in an admirable manner. They are under my inspection, and I have reported year after year as to the satisfactory manner in which they have been managed. As trained and experienced warders with considerable practical knowledge of insanity are placed in charge of them, as gaol discipline in them is somewhat relaxed, and as they are made as comfortable as circumstances will permit, they have been used under departmental arrangements and instructions from the Prisons Department, and with the full consent and co-operation of the Visiting Surgeons, for the detention, care, and observation of prisoners who exhibit symptoms of insanity whilst under remand or awaiting trial, and I am unable to see any objection to this course, especially as the observation by trained warders enables the Visiting Surgeons to acquaint themselves with the mental condition of these persons more fully than they would otherwise be able to do, and to give evidence of value as to their mental condition when they are brought again before Justices or at their trial at the superior courts, and at the same time places those prisoners whose sanity is doubtful in a better position for their recovery and less under the severities of ordinary prison discipline than they would otherwise be.

Lately, however, the observation wards have been used for prisoners who, after full observation, are shown to be undoubtedly insane, and in whose cases medical certificates could and should be signed. This is owing to the fact that the Hospital for the Criminal Insane is quite full, that the buildings cannot be extended on the present site, and that any vacancies which occur are filled by admitting patients acquitted at their trial on the ground of insanity and those who are found insane on arraignment or awaiting trial.

The number of such prisoners is now 8, and it has at times, within the past two or three years, somewhat exceeded this.

In my report for 1887 I placed before the Chief Secretary my views on this matter, and, as an Appendix to this report, attached a memorandum from the Director of Convict Prisons in England bearing on this subject. Copies of these I now forward.

My

My proposal, in short, was to retain the present Hospital for the Criminal Insane for persons acquitted on the ground of insanity, and those found insane on arraignment or whilst awaiting trial, in all of whom the insanity probably preceded the crime, and who belong to a special class, and build a new ward in connection with the Gaol at Parramatta, but outside its present boundaries, and more on asylum than prison lines, in which those prisoners who had a criminal history, and were criminals first and insane subsequently, and were all still serving sentence, might be treated according to asylum methods, as was done at Woking in England. [See Memo.]

To meet this view, the sum of £6,000 was placed on the Loan Estimates and voted, and I believe is now available to carry out plans which the Government Architect has drawn.

It is quite clear that prisoners serving sentence who can, after observation, be certified as insane should no longer be kept in the observation wards or in the ordinary prison wards. In the former they serve as patterns for the malingerer, in the latter they do not get the special surroundings and general treatment which their malady demands, and in either or both they are a danger and trouble to the management.

It appears to me very advisable that steps should be taken to provide special accommodation for this class which now, including those already in the Hospital for the Criminal Insane, numbers some twenty persons.

I have, &c.,
F. NORTON MANNING.

Hospital for the Criminal Insane, Parramatta.

On 31st December, 1886, there were 56 patients (48 males and 8 females) in this Hospital. During the year 1887, 19 were admitted (16 males and 3 females), making a total number under care of 75. Of these, 3 recovered, 10 were transferred to other hospitals on expiry of sentence or other termination of criminal disability, and 62 (53 males and 9 females) remained at the close of the year. The average daily number resident was 58. The percentage of recoveries was 15·78, being much lower than during preceding years. There were no deaths, and the only serious accident was an attempt at suicide; a very melancholic patient, who had attempted murder, having made serious wounds in his throat and abdomen by means of a piece of sharpened iron hoop.

The following table shows the classification of the patients remaining in Hospital on 31st December, 1887:—

The Statistics of the Hospital will be found with the Report of the Medical Superintendent (Appendix D).

The Hospital was visited for the purposes of inspection on January 20th, June 8th, August and November 12th, and November 25th, and the following are copies of my entries in the Inspector's book on the two last of these occasions:—

November 12th.—I have to-day visited this Institution, accompanied by the Medical Superintendent and Assistant Medical Officer. The number of patients on the register is 62 (53 males and 9 females). I saw and spoke to all the males, those in the ward and those employed in the wood-yard, tailor's shop, &c., under charge of attendants, and marked off all the names in my list. On my next visit I shall collect and see all the women.

I found two patients in restraint for reasons which, on inquiry, seemed to me good and sufficient. The patients were remarkably free from excitement, and no complaints of any kind were made, although several were as usual urgent in their requests for discharge. From the returns it appears that 36 (29 males and 7 females) are usefully employed. The majority of the males employed are engaged in sawing and chopping wood in the yard specially set apart for the employment of this class of patients, and considering their history I think that special and stringent rules should be drafted and given to the attendants in charge of them. A large portion of this yard has now been trenched and manured, and a quantity of vegetables are being grown. I found the corridors, all three stories of which I visited, clean, free from offensive smell, and in good order, and the ventilating openings to all the rooms which have recently been cut, add very much to the healthiness and ventilation. The new bath-room and day-room are said to answer well and to be a great improvement. The latter is bare and dreary looking, and will be much improved by painting in light colours and by the supply of pictures. The airing courts are very neatly kept.

November 25th.—I saw the whole of the female patients under criminal disability, and checked off the names on my list. They are eight in number, and none of them are in a condition in which their discharge can be recommended or their transfer to the free division made.

I consulted with the Medical Superintendent as to the criminal patients awaiting trial, and in one case, an imbecile boy, we agreed that the Attorney-General should be recommended not to take further proceedings.

I saw and signed the statutory books for this division, and saw the orders for the reception of the only two patients received since the last official visit.

The Medical Journal for this Hospital has not been written up since the end of October, but the admission and discharge registers are in order.

This Hospital has been visited about once a month by the official visitors, but there is nothing in their reports to call for special remark. It will be seen from the figures above given that the number of patients is slowly increasing, there being an addition of six during the year. The existing accommodation, very limited in extent, is now fully occupied, and there is no reason to think that the number of admissions will in any degree diminish. The patients belong to a somewhat incurable class, and on reviewing the cases now in the Hospital it appears that the majority of the "Governor's pleasure" cases have committed such serious offences, or are so incurably insane, that they are likely to be inmates all the remainder of their lives, whilst of those serving sentence some are committed for life, and a number of the others for long periods, so that there is not likely to be any great diminution in numbers by discharge on expiry of criminal disability. We are met therefore by the necessity of providing additional accommodation, and it becomes a question whether this accommodation should be provided in connection with the Hospitals for the Insane, or whether the class of patients who become insane whilst undergoing sentence in gaol might not be more fitly provided for in a special wing in one of the prisons, as has been done in England during the last eleven years in connection with the prison at Woking.

In Appendix E to this report will be found a Memorandum from the Medical Inspector, Dr. R. M. Gover, on the lunatic division of the Woking Prison, which shows that this arrangement has much to recommend it, and that it is on the whole more satisfactory than the system of transferring these prisoners from the Penal to the Lunacy Department.

When prisoners undergoing sentence suffer from bodily ailments they are treated in hospitals in the prison, and there appear to be no valid reasons why arrangements should not be made for treating those suffering from mental diseases also. It should be borne in mind that prisoners becoming insane whilst undergoing sentence belong to a special class; they are prisoners first and insane afterwards, and differ altogether from those who are insane first, and who commit crime by reason of their insanity. These latter, for the most part acquitted on the ground of insanity, and detained during the Governor's pleasure, are, without doubt, fit cases for special asylum care and treatment, but it is in many cases a hardship to them that the convict class should be associated with them, and the presence of this class by reason of the retention of prison habits and propensities, and by constant attempts at escape, renders the whole asylum in which they are placed more repressive and prison-like than it might, and in justice to the other inmates, should be.

The number of patients now under sentence in the Hospital for the Criminal Insane, Parramatta, is 25, and the removal of these would afford room for the Governor's pleasure class for some time to come, and render it possible to effect changes in the arrangements of the Hospital, which are highly desirable.

REPORT of Directors of Convict Prisons for 1885-6.—Lunatic Division of Woking Prison.

Memorandum by the Medical Inspector.

7 July, 1886.

As the convict lunatics now in the lunatic wing of Woking Prison are no longer to be under the management of the Directors of Convict Prisons, a short account of the circumstances that led to the opening of this wing for the reception of lunatics of the convict class, together with a statement of the results of the system pursued in dealing with them, may perhaps not be out of place. I therefore submit the following remarks in the hope that they may be of interest, and possibly of service.

In setting apart a wing of the convict prison at Woking for the reception of convicts becoming insane while undergoing sentences of penal servitude, the Directors of Convict Prisons were aware that they undertook an onerous duty, and one which would entail upon them and their staff much labour and responsibility. The reasons that induced the Secretary of State to accept the proposals of the Directors that they should charge themselves with this new duty may be found in the published annual reports of the Superintendent of the Criminal Lunatic Asylum at Broadmoor, prior to the year 1875, and in the annual reports of the Commissioners of Lunacy.

Up to 1874 Broadmoor received for treatment two very distinct classes of criminal lunatics, who differed from each other, not only in respect of the sentences passed upon each, but in many other particulars. The two classes are very clearly defined in the report of the Superintendent of Broadmoor for the year 1872. "One class," he says, "consists of those who, having been charged with the commission of some criminal act, have, either whilst awaiting trial, or when arraigned, or when tried, been found to be insane, and have in consequence been ordered to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure. The other class consists of those who have been removed on the ground of insanity to Broadmoor from convict prisons whilst undergoing various terms of penal servitude." The Superintendent goes on to state that the former class consists mainly of persons whose offences have been isolated criminal acts, the direct results of their insane state, and who, up to the time of the outbreak of their insanity, have in many cases led honest and industrious lives. They are criminals as regards the particular act which brought them into confinement, but they are not of criminal disposition, and the description of treatment which they require is similar, in most respects, to that approved in the case of other insane patients. On the other hand, the patients of the convict class consist chiefly of those whose offences against law and order are part of their every-day life. Many of them have led a life of crime; they have acquired "habits of lawless violence, of antagonism to order, of contempt for honest work"; they use language of the foulest description, and their management, where they are aggregated in considerable numbers, presents special difficulties not encountered in dealing with other patients. The Superintendent does not raise the slightest doubt that the convicts sent to Broadmoor as insane were unfit subjects for penal discipline, but he considers it "open to question whether it is either just or expedient to permit these other inmates, whose lives have not previously exposed them to such evil influences, to be contaminated by the degraded habits and conversation of the convict class, or to cause those belonging to one class to suffer from restrictions which are only necessary for the other class, and yet this is what at present happens in consequence of the intermingling of the two classes." In

In his report for 1872, the Superintendent states that the assaults committed by male patients upon their custodians, calculated upon the average number of each class resident, were in the proportion of 17·85 per cent. for the convicts, as compared with 3·32 per cent. for patients of the other class, that is to say, those found insane on arraignment or acquitted on the ground of insanity. There is also a remarkable difference between the two classes with regard to the proportional number of attempts at escape. The Superintendent reports that of the fourteen persons who up to that date had effected their escape, and had not been recovered on the same day, "twelve belonged to the convict class, and only two belonged to the class detained during Her Majesty's pleasure, those not retaken having all been persons under sentences of penal servitude. As the convict inmates form only one-third of the total population, it thus appears that in proportion to numbers the instances of escape have been twelve times as frequent from the convict class as from the other."

Without entering into further detail it may be stated that it appeared abundantly clear that the state of things so forcibly described by the Superintendent was not such as to conduce either to the interests of the public on the one hand or to the welfare of the patients on the other, inasmuch as two classes of persons who, by reason of their great difference of origin, habits, and character, required different modes of treatment, and who should be kept separate, were mingled together under one roof, were necessarily subjected to the same system of treatment, and by frequent contact reacted unfavourably the one on the other. An important consideration to bear in mind was that convicts are sentenced to definite terms of imprisonment, and that the provisions necessary for their safe custody must be such as it would not be usual to meet with in an establishment of the type of a public asylum.

The Secretary of State having carefully considered the strong representations made by the Superintendent of Broadmoor and the Commissioners in Lunacy, and the Directors of Convict Prisons having expressed their readiness to give any assistance in their power to meet the difficulties referred to, it was determined in 1873 to make provision in one of the convict prisons for the accommodation of convicts becoming insane during a sentence of penal servitude. The removal of such patients to Broadmoor was accordingly stopped. After much inquiry and consideration it was found that the requisite provision could be best made by giving up a wing of the invalid prison at Woking for use as a "Lunatic Division." The invalid convicts occupying this wing were accordingly removed to other prisons, and steps were taken in 1874 to render the wing fit for the reception of persons who were at once convicts and lunatics. Those preparations consisted mainly in making provision for out-door and in-door employment, and for rational amusement; as well as for that classification of cases which is necessary in order to deal successfully with criminal lunatics, especially those of the convict class. As the buildings were originally constructed for the accommodation of invalid prisoners, but little structural alteration was necessary.

As already stated, it had been determined in 1873 to send no more insane convicts to Broadmoor; and, inasmuch as no permanent arrangement had then been made for their reception into any convict prison, or elsewhere, they were allowed to accumulate at Millbank Prison (which had for some time been used as a place of observation of convicts suspected to be insane), where they were temporarily accommodated until the requisite arrangements were complete at Woking. The first batch of patients, numbering thirteen, was received into the Lunatic Division at Woking, in April, 1875, and after that date all convicts becoming insane while undergoing a sentence of penal servitude were removed to Woking instead of to Broadmoor, though convict lunatics already at Broadmoor were not transferred to Woking. With increase of numbers there was development of organization of the establishment, and the management of the division finally approximated, so far as was desirable, to that of an ordinary public asylum.

The proper employment of those patients who are fit for labour is one of the points to which special attention is paid in every well-managed asylum; and its importance was not overlooked at Woking. Many patients were employed upon the prison farm and in the laundry, while others were occupied in a variety of ways in and about the prison buildings. It may be mentioned that the laundry work of the whole prison, with a population of nearly 600, was done in a very satisfactory manner by the inmates of the Lunatic Division. Soon after the division was opened a spacious and cheerful day-room, commanding a fine view, was provided for all but violent lunatics. This room was comfortably furnished, and was supplied with interesting books, with the means of playing quiet games, with pictures and other decorations, and with all that could be required to afford mental occupation to patients admitted into the division.

It may be interesting to mention that the mark system, which has been found so efficacious in maintaining order in the prisons of this country and in promoting the reformation of their inmates, was introduced into the Lunatic Division with good results. The object of the mark system, as carried out in an ordinary prison, is to stimulate the prisoners to obtain certain advantages by the exercise of self-control, by industry, by the formation of orderly habits, and, in a word, by general good conduct. It was considered that the effect of such a system, so modified as to be of suitable application to convicts of unsound mind, could not be otherwise than beneficial and even curative in a certain degree and in certain cases. The following order was therefore issued on the 17th January, 1882:—

"Standing Order No. 444.

"Convict Prison Department, Home Office, Whitehall, 17 January, 1882.

"Advanced Class of Convicts in Lunatic Division of Woking Prison.

"1. In order to encourage industry and good conduct among the convicts in the Lunatic Division of Woking Prison, it is decided that marks shall be given to such of them as perform useful labour of any kind.

"2. The marks will be carefully apportioned by, or under the direction of, the medical officer, with some reference to the patient's capacity for labour, and to the regulations of that part of the prison in which he is placed, and when such convicts earned the marks assigned to their respective sentences for remission, they will be granted certain privileges and indulgences.

"3. If the medical officer should have reason to believe that the loss of marks, prior to any convict's admission into the Lunatic Division, resulted from disease, he will, when the period arrives at which the prisoner could, but for such loss, have earned his full marks, report his opinion to the directors for decision as to the granting of part or all of the marks not gained.

" 4. The privileges and indulgences referred to are :—

- (1.) To wear special clothing.
- (2.) To take meals in a separate room.
- (3.) An improved diet.

" 5. If any prisoner fails in good conduct and industry while in this class, the medical officer may, with the concurrence of the governor, stop any or all of the abovenamed privileges and indulgences; and any prisoner is also liable to be removed from the advanced class if it should be shown to the satisfaction of the directors that he so conducts himself as to prove that the above privileges cannot appropriately be continued in his case.

" E. F. DU CANE."

The success or otherwise of such a system as that pursued in the Lunatic Division at Woking must, of course, be judged by results, and these it may be well now to state very briefly.

Firstly, as regards the mutual relationship of officers (acting as attendants) and patients, and as to attempts at escape, the results, considering the character of the patients, will probably be deemed to be not otherwise than satisfactory. Four officers have been seriously assaulted, but no patients have been injured since the opening of the division eleven years ago, although many of the patients have been violent and have required manual restraint. The training received by a prison warder, especially in a convict prison, and the experience acquired in the performance of his ordinary duties are such as to confer upon him special qualifications for dealing with convict lunatics; he learns to exercise patience and self-control, and to maintain order among those whose tendency is to be disorderly by the power of command acquired by the enforcement, under the eye of superior officers, of a strict though beneficial system of discipline.

There have been no successful attempts at escape, and no patient has ever transgressed beyond the bounds of the prison. This speaks well for the security of the establishment for patients of this class, and it is matter of interest and importance to the public.*

Secondly, as to cures: Of 422† patients admitted from the date at which the lunatic wing was set apart for convicts of unsound mind up to the 21st June, 1886, as many as 105 recovered and were returned as cured to the prisons from which they were received. In the great majority of cases they have proved the genuineness of the cure by the self-restraint implied by good conduct, and by a rational fulfilment of their duties, no doubt irksome duties, many of them, as convicts sentenced to penal servitude. A better result than this has never yet been attained, and probably never will be, whatever system may be pursued in dealing with patients of this class.

When an insane convict is removed to an asylum conducted after the manner of a county asylum, and then recovers, it is to his interest not to allow his recovery to be evident, but to appear still to be a lunatic in order that he may remain in the asylum until the expiration of his term of penal servitude. He does not wish the Superintendent of the Asylum to see too much improvement in his condition lest he should be discharged as cured, and exchange the comparatively luxurious life of the asylum for the hard labour, hard bed, and hard fare of a prison. Not that the labour, bed, and fare of a convict prison are severely penal, but they are distinctly less enjoyable than the otium cum dignitate of an asylum. He therefore conceals his improvement, and remains in the asylum, if he can, till near the end of his sentence, when a motive to recovery begins to appear, and his symptoms of unsoundness are gradually thrown aside unless he has brought about a genuine relapse by persistent imposture. In the Lunatic Division at Woking, though provided with everything calculated to promote his recovery, the insane convict is in a prison, and the contrast between his condition as a lunatic and his condition as a convict in an ordinary prison is not such as to suggest to him the desirability of postponing his recovery until near the termination of his sentence. On the contrary, inasmuch as he is unable, while an inmate of the lunatic division, to earn that amount of remission of sentence which is accorded to convicts who are industrious and well conducted in prison, he is at a disadvantage in that respect as compared with his fellow prisoners, and it is to his interest that any improvement in his mental condition should be patent to all with whom he has to do. The following remarks by Dr. Orange, in his report for 1873, put in a clear and forcible manner the consequences which, according to his experience, result from treating insane convicts in an asylum conducted after the manner of an ordinary public asylum:—

" Persons belonging to the latter class" (i.e., convict lunatics) " who recover before the expiration of the term of their sentence are liable, in the ordinary course, to be returned to a convict prison to complete the term, so that instead of having the bright prospect of release to promote recovery, recovery becomes to them a thing scarcely to be desired, inasmuch as it would be attended with penal consequences; and, lest the exercise of self-control and orderly behaviour might, when the more acute stage of insanity had passed, be interpreted as indicating recovery, interest as well as inclination appear to lead towards an opposite line of conduct, and thus disorderly habits are apt to become more and more strongly confirmed, and, for the safe custody of such inmates, arrangements such as those of an ordinary asylum do not suffice."

The history of the Lunatic Division at Woking warrants me in stating that the objects which were in view when it was set apart for the reception of insane convicts have been fully attained, and that the evils arising from intermingling different classes of lunatics, and from treating convict lunatics in an asylum of the type of an ordinary public asylum, have been entirely avoided. The period, now drawing to a close, during which these patients have been under the charge of the Directors of Convict Prisons is one which they will be able to look back upon as a period during which they and their staff made great efforts to discharge an important and difficult duty, and were rewarded with what they may be justified in regarding as a substantial and gratifying degree of success.

Colonel Sir Edmund F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E., &c., &c., &c.

* It may be added that only two patients have committed suicide, and that only one has died in an epileptic fit during the eleven years that the wing has been open for lunatics. In these respects the lunatic wing compares favourably with most asylums.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
NEW SOUTH WALES.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

(MINUTES, REPORTS, AND CIRCULARS RESPECTING THE TREATMENT OF SEVENTH-CLASS PRISONERS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 24 October, 1895.

The Governor of Darlinghurst Gaol to The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Sir,

H. M. Gaol, Darlinghurst, 7 June, 1895.

Referring to certain allegations made by ex-prisoner Abigail and the Visiting Surgeon to the Parramatta Gaol, in connection with the treatment of prisoners of the seventh-class, I have the honor to report, from my experience of the working of this system since its inception, I have no hesitation in stating that the ex-prisoner's assertions are totally misleading, and the Visiting Surgeon of Parramatta Gaol would appear to have lost sight of the object the Honorable R. E. O'Connor had in view in framing the Seventh-class Regulations, viz., that they should be sufficiently severe to act as a deterrent to young offenders, and prevent their contamination by association with confirmed criminals, and to tend to prevent them from coming within the operation of the Seventh-class Regulations again.

The object contemplated by Mr. O'Connor when framing these Regulations has been to a large extent obtained without any undue hardship, and certainly nothing about the treatment of the seventh-class prisoners calls for such a term as "cruel," "inhuman," or "stupid."

The beneficial effect of the treatment is disclosed by the fact that the reconvictions of youths coming within the scope of the seventh-class have fallen from 201 to 122 (79) from the starting of its operation to the end of the year 1894.

With regard to the alleged insufficient dietary, I am in a position to assert that, while on the one hand it has a deterrent action by reason of its low scale, yet, on the other hand, there is ample evidence to show that prisoners do not deteriorate physically or mentally while under its operation; on the contrary, from a careful analysis which has been made of all prisoners serving three months and upwards in the seventh class, the result is that there is an average gain in weight of 1·2 lb. per man; and how can a dietary that produces such a result be productive of the physical and mental degeneration spoken of by Dr. Violette?

To quote one instance, which may serve to illustrate the effect of this particular diet for a lengthened period, I invite attention to the case of a prisoner named W.H.H., who served twelve months in the seventh class. This prisoner weighed on reception 130 lb., and on discharge 143 lb.; increase, 13 lb.

Again, with regard to the alleged inhumanity or cruelty in the treatment of seventh-class prisoners, I must distinctly deny there being any real ground for such an assertion. Of course if such an amount of severity in their treatment as will lead to a dread of prison life, and an earnest desire to follow some honest calling, be termed cruelty or inhumanity, what term would apply if such young offenders were freed from the seventh class, and placed in association with the more confirmed class of criminals, and in other ways treated with such leniency as would tend to lead to their further contamination, and to lose all dread of prison life?

The prisoners are seen daily by the Visiting Surgeon and myself, as well as by several other officers, and any necessity which may arise for the modification of the treatment in any particular case it is at once adopted.

There is no case on record of a seventh-class prisoner having been carried on a stretcher from his cell to the hospital at any time in consequence of the effect of the treatment.

In the cases of the few seventh-class prisoners subject to epileptic fits, the Regulations are relaxed to meet the exigency of their case; they are employed during the day in a cell with the door left wide open, and by night placed in charge of keepers in the epileptic ward; and in other cases calling for more attention, prisoners so afflicted are exempted altogether from the operation of the seventh class.

I have, &c.,

P. HERBERT,

Governor, Darlinghurst Gaol.

For the Minister's information.—G.M., 11/6/95. The Under Secretary of Justice, B.C.

Minute by The Minister of Justice.

Subject :—Seventh-class Prisoners.

Department of Justice, Sydney, 13 June, 1895.

I HAVE read Mr. Herbert's report upon the working of the Regulations for the treatment of seventh-class prisoners with much interest, and I shall be glad if the Comptroller-General will obtain reports upon this subject from the Governors of the other principal gaols of the Colony. The system has now been in vogue for more than two years, and a fair opportunity now exists, in view of the experience thereby gained, to say how far it has operated as a deterrent to crime, and whether any changes or modifications appear advisable.

A.J.G.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.—T.E.M.N. (for U.S.), B.C., 14/6/95.

Reports from the Governors of the gaols at Darlinghurst, Bathurst, Goulburn, Maitland, and Parramatta are forwarded herewith. No report has been obtained from Berrima, owing to the very small number of seventh-class prisoners who have been confined there.—G.M., B.C., 1/7/95. The Under Secretary of Justice.

[Enclosures.]

H. M. Gaol, Darlinghurst, 18 June, 1895.

In compliance with your circular memo. of 15th instant, regarding the treatment of seventh-class prisoners, I have the honor to report that on the 7th instant a complete and comprehensive report on this subject was forwarded, and from which it may be gathered that the assertions made by the Visiting Surgeon of Parramatta Gaol and Mr. Abigail are without foundation, the convictions being considerably less than prior to the initiation of the Seventh-class Regulations, dated 17th April, 1893; and it may also be noted that the assertions as to the effect of the dietary are not borne out by facts, the average gain in weight of prisoners under the seventh-class treatment, serving three months and upwards, being 12 lb. per man.

As to whether any change or modifications appears advisable, perhaps I may suggest the desirability of magistrates being requested, when passing sentences on youths under 15 years of age, to distinctly specify (in open Court) the nature of the punishment to be awarded—as, for instance, "fourteen days bread and water with plank bed, under the Seventh-class Gaol Regulations,"—the object being to bring fully before the minds of the adjudicating magistrates, when considering the duration of the punishment to be inflicted, its special severity.

I have, &c.,

P. HERBERT,

Governor, Darlinghurst Gaol.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

(B.)

Parramatta Gaol, 14 June, 1895.

Sir,

With reference to certain letters that have recently appeared in the Press from Francis Abigail, discharged a few days ago from this gaol under a remitted five-years' sentence, and bearing on the treatment of juvenile offenders classified in the Gaol Regulations as seventh-class, and which statements are said by the Press to be borne out by the Visiting Surgeon of this gaol, I beg to state that, having had many years' experience of prisoners, and this class in particular, that these statements are quite unwarranted and untrue.

The object of this treatment was to redeem, if possible, these boys, and to save them from a life of crime; and while the prison authorities had no desire to be cruel to them, their object was to make prison life so deterrent as to preclude these boys seeking it, or at least not fearing it, and not as a place in which to while away their time.

I am thoroughly conversant with the system, and in fact, I think I may say without egotism that the idea of this treatment emanated from Parramatta Gaol. When I took charge of the gaol in September, 1886, I found that this class of prisoner, more particularly known as the "Flying Gang," or North-end larrikins (in the neighbourhood of the gaol) simply had control of that end of the town (Church-street North), and no female, child, or Chinaman dare pass that quarter after dark for fear of molestation or insult. This class of prisoner was repeatedly convicted for such offences as obscene language, assaults, and drunkenness, and were sent here. To obviate this state of things, I asked the Comptroller General of Prisons, the late Mr. Harold McLean, to allow me on each case, on conviction, to place them in modified separate treatment, which was approved of, and hence, I believe, emanated this classification as a rule.

The treatment in itself I consider most judicious, as at the time I speak of these prisoners (youths) were herded with the older criminals, and desirous reformation was quite useless.

From my observation of this reformatory system, this gang most particularly known to me has become entirely broken up. While on this particular question, I will instance one case that occurs to me—that of a C. M.O. He had been convicted many times among this Flying Gang, and while serving his last sentence in the modified separate treatment, I advised him as to what the probable result of his mispent life would happen, and he stated that if he could get away he would gladly quit them. He had served his apprenticeship as a carpenter to Messrs. _____, carpenters and builders in this town, and asked me to help him by getting a pass to Bourke, where he was informed work at his trade could be easily procured. This I obtained for him, taking the precaution that he should not trade with his pass, and sent a warder in plain clothing to hand him the railway ticket two days after his discharge (allowing him time to collect his tools of trade and take leave of his family), so that no deceit should be practised. He got employment there (Bourke) shortly after his arrival, and continued in honest employment there till his death from typhoid fever some time afterwards. These statements can be verified by his father, a pensioner from the Hospital for the Insane, or his mother, if either are living.

While the prisoners complain of the treatment being severe, I would beg to say that it is the intention of the Regulations to make them feel that they are sent to gaol as a punishment. They are visited daily by the surgeon, who has, at times, increased their rations, &c., or even recommended their release entirely from this treatment, and in all these circumstances I see no reason for any alteration of the existing rules, more particularly as it was only arrived at after most mature consideration by eminently qualified medical officers of the prisons, and approved of by the Executive and the then Minister of the day, Mr. R. E. O'Connor (always credited as being kindhearted), and adopted with success by yourself.

I have, &c.,

THOS. BARNETT,

Governor.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Sir,

Parramatta Gaol, 25 June, 1895.

In reply to your circular memo. of the 15th instant, I have the honor to report that the system of treatment of seventh-class prisoners is, in my opinion, most judicious, and has certainly acted as a deterrent to this class of prisoner returning to gaol, as each year in this gaol there has been a falling off of this class of prisoners.

Prisoners are not likely to suffer either mentally or physically, as they are visited daily by the Visiting Surgeon, who has often increased their rations and has recommended their release from the treatment, and are seen each day at different times by myself and the Deputy Governor, and can make any representations they wish regarding their treatment.

I see no necessity for any modification in this treatment, and would most strongly advocate its continuance.

I have, &c.,

THOS. BARNETT,

Governor.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Sir,

H.M. Gaol, Goulburn, 17 June, 1895.

I have the honor to report that, after over two years working of the present system of seventh-class treatment, I beg to state that the system is a good one, and that it does, as a rule, deter youths from returning to prison.

A change in the system is, in my opinion, not necessary.

I have carefully watched the prisoners under this system, and have not found any of them losing their health under it. There were ordinary cases of illness, which were immediately reported to the doctor, and were treated by him. Some of these cases were of prisoners received into gaol in bad health.

The system, as carried out at this gaol, is almost perfect in its working.

These prisoners have a wing to themselves. They are kept apart from old and vicious criminals, and have no way of conversing or communicating with old offenders. They are kindly and firmly treated. They are taught to be industrious, and are instructed by the school-master, and are advised in every way to reform. They are frequently visited by the Chaplains, who do all they can to improve them.

They have never complained of their treatment.

The food is good, and sufficient to retain them in good health.

The attached list of weights, which are taken on admission and discharge, and in sentences of longer periods than six months, when they have completed six months of their sentence, show that more of them lose weight than those who gain. This is not caused by the want of food, but by being kept under proper restraint. When at their liberty they are not used to restraint, but are allowed about where they choose and how they please.

In gaol they have not that liberty and they feel it.

I am glad to say that under the present system most youths will and do reform. Some of them, from their very nature, will never reform, having been brought up under surroundings, and who are naturally bad.

During 1893, from the date of present system, sixty-three of this class were received—twenty-two of them were local. Of these two were returned twice, and six returned once. Their offences were for misconduct as apprentices and running away from their work, and not the usual street larkins.

During 1894, eighty-seven were received; eighteen of them were local. Of these one returned once, and two returned twice.

During 1895, up to the present date, thirty-four were received; seven of these were local. None returned.

In conclusion, I may add that many of the seventh-class, especially those from Sydney, are very troublesome and badly behaved, and require the strictest treatment to master them. Any alteration in the system of treatment in their favour would only add to the trouble in the gaol.

I have, &c.,

JOHN PATON, V.C.,

Governor.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

(D.)

Sir,

H.M. Gaol, Maitland, 18 June, 1895.

I have the honor to report, re the working of the Regulations for the treatment of seventh-class prisoners, that since the system has been in vogue 282 prisoners have been received in this gaol.

Under the old system, when they received a meat ration daily, there was a considerable amount of trouble with them, the punishments then being frequent; now there are scarcely any.

The new treatment has, no doubt, acted as a deterrent to crime with this class of offenders. I submit a table showing the reconvictions since its operation.

	First Conviction.	Second Conviction.	Third Conviction.	Fourth Conviction.
1893	73	2	1
1894	129	12	1	1
1895	57	6	1	1
Totals.....	259	20	3	2

I would respectfully suggest that there be a minimum age, as sometimes very young boys have been sent to gaol.

I have, &c.,

CHAS. GRAHAM,

Governor.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

All these cases when brought under notice, in terms of G.O. 163, would be considered. The surgeon has discretionary power.—G.M., 21/6/95.

(E.)

Sir,

H.M. Gaol, Bathurst, 21 June, 1895.

In reply to your circular memo. of 15th instant, asking for a report on the working of the regulation of the seventh-class treatment, I have the honor to state that the number of lads who have been received into this, their first gaol of entry after conviction between the 17th April, 1893, and this date is fifty-one. Of these, two have been twice re-convicted, and one has been once re-convicted under this treatment. I am of opinion that while the treatment is severe (to some, of course, more so than to others, which cannot be helped) it is decidedly a step in the right direction. Hereafter, with prisoners of the first, second, and third classes, sentences may be shortened, the yard system done away with, and separation during non-working hours may be adopted.

The lads on the whole do not seem depressed under the treatment, while they considerably dislike it; the general effect must be good.

I would respectfully suggest:—

- (1) That all judges and magistrates should be informed of the nature of the treatment so that they shall know, previous to passing sentence, the features of the course. This information may already have been circulated.
- (2) That the prisoners may be permitted to attend school during bread and water week.
- (3) That lights be allowed in their cells for one hour in summer, and two hours during winter months.*
- (4) That there may be a specially selected library for this class of prisoners—apart from the general gaol library.

I have the honor to enclose the Visiting Surgeon's report. You will perhaps notice the small number of prisoners whose rations have been changed from No. 5 to No. 9—only 7 out of 116.

I have, &c.,

G. H. STACE,

Governor.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Minute by the Minister of Justice.

Subject:—Seventh-class Prisoners' Dietary, &c.

Department of Justice, Sydney, 13 June, 1895.

In view of certain statements recently made as to the insufficiency of the dietary scale for seventh-class prisoners, the Comptroller-General will please obtain from the surgeon of the principal gaols (other than that of Parramatta) full reports upon the system now in operation more than two years, and whether, in their opinion, and as the result of observation, any reasonable grounds exist—(a) to modify or to amend the system; and, if so, in what direction; or (b) to regard the system as inimical to present or future health.

health or strength of prisoners, and especially in the case of growing prisoners, to the development of bone, muscle, or brain; and to submit tables showing the alterations in weight between date of reception and discharge of prisoners; when discharged not later than at the expiration of six months, or where prisoners are discharged from gaol at a later period; when they have served six months under separate treatment.

A.J.G., 12/6/95.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.—T.E.M'N. (for U.S.), B.C., 14/6/95.

Reports from the Visiting Surgeons to the gaols at Darlinghurst, Bathurst, Goulburn, and Maitland are forwarded herewith. No report has been obtained from Berrima owing to the very small number of seventh-class prisoners who have been confined there.—G.M.

The Under Secretary of Justice, B.C., 1/7/95.

[Enclosures.]

Darlinghurst Gaol, 25 June, 1895.

WITH reference to an extract from the Minister of Justice, dated 15 June, 1895, I have the honor to report that, in my opinion, the seventh-class system of treating juvenile offenders might advantageously be amended by defining the minimum age of the prisoner. I consider that boys of very tender years might be dealt with more satisfactorily under the provisions of the Reformatory Act.

The system so far has not proved inimical to the present health of the prisoners incarcerated in this gaol under the "seventh-class" regime, as the accompanying table of loss of weight will show. As far as the remote effect upon the health of such prisoners is concerned regarding growth and development of bone, muscle, or brain, it depends upon the respective age of the prisoner, but I consider No. 9 dietary scale sufficient for all requirements. Out of the 354 persons undergoing imprisonment from April, 1893, to April, 1895, I found it necessary in only fifteen cases to alter the dietary scale as provided for in the Regulations. As I have said before, the minimum age ought to be accurately defined, and as I do not think it conducive to future reformation or the well-being of the boy to be incarcerated in a solitary cell, which in many cases would lead to the formation of a sullen, morbid habit of mind, the consequence of which might later on lead to very serious consequences. Again, in relation to sleeping accommodation. Sleep, as is well known, has as strong a relation to perfect health as sufficient food, and, in my opinion, it is quite impossible to obtain sound and refreshing sleep lying on a hard plank, especially in the case of children and youths of tender years. I think, too, that the period allotted for exercise might with great advantage be extended. An extra hour or so in the sun and air would be very little out of the twenty-four.

MAURICE J. O'CONNOR,

Visiting Surgeon.

The Governor, Sydney Gaol.

Forwarded to the Comptroller-General of Prisons.—P. HERBERT, Governor, Darlinghurst Gaol, 26/6/95.

Bathurst Gaol, 21 June, 1895.

IN compliance with the circular memo. dated 15th June, 1895, I have the honor to state, in respect to the dietary scale for seventh-class prisoners, having in view the latitude allowed the Visiting Surgeon to modify the ration should the condition of a prisoner, in the surgeon's opinion, demand such modification, that I do not consider that the system calls for modification or amendment. Neither do I consider, from any facts observed by me, that any reasonable grounds exist to regard the system as calculated permanently to injure the health or strength of prisoners by arrest of development of bone, muscle, or brain.

As no change in the amount of food is made for age or size, the youngest growing prisoners receive, as a rule, proportionately, a more liberal allowance than older prisoners more nearly approaching full development and adults' age.

Although in my experience I have not hitherto met with such, it is quite conceivable that cases may occur, from early age or otherwise, unfit to undergo the seventh-class treatment, whether reference be had to the dietary or the solitary portion of the sentence; but, should such present themselves, it would be the duty of the Visiting Surgeon to bring them under the notice of the authorities, with the view to securing a remission of such part of their sentence. As among other prisoners, irrespective of class, an occasional case of sporadic disease has presented itself among the seventh-class prisoners requiring hospital treatment. These cases, amounting in all to seven, were treated as ordinary patients in hospital. Excepting these, with respect to the proportionate number of seventh-class prisoners, whose condition, in my opinion, called for interference, the number amounted to twenty-three out of a total of 115. Of the twenty-three sixteen received a small temporary increase of bread. In the case of seven the periodical weekly alteration from bread and water to No. 9 ration was anticipated by a few days, bread and water being resumed when such ration would have fallen due had no interference on my part been called for. Attached are tables showing the alterations in weight between date of reception and discharge and of the seventh-class prisoners.

W. T. BASSETT,

Visiting Surgeon.

(C.)

Sir,

H. M. Gaol, Goulburn, 18 June, 1895.

In reply to your circular re the dietary of seventh-class prisoners, I have the honor to report that I have witnessed its effect ever since its introduction, and I know of no reasonable grounds why there should be any alteration. I have never, so far, seen any injurious consequences resulting from it, and in no case did I deem it necessary to alter the dietary scale. Most prisoners find the pound of bread quite sufficient, or, at any rate, never complain; but an odd one may ask for more. If I thought the health suffered I certainly would allow more, but on careful observation I have never come to that conclusion. No doubt some feel the want more than others, and may experience to a certain extent the pangs of hunger occasionally; but, to my mind, this has a very beneficial effect, and acts as a deterrent, and discourages them from again placing themselves in the hands of the law. On looking over the tables of weights on admission and discharge of seventh-class prisoners, I found, out of 126 prisoners, eighty-one lost weight, but many only a few pounds. Some who lost most weight were those who were punished by being placed in a dark cell, and others who lived a fast and intemperate life outside, and were suddenly pulled up. The temperament of a prisoner has a good deal to do with the gain or loss. Some chafe and fret under discipline and are always discontented and unruly, and others are quite content to take things as they find them. As a rule, seventh-class prisoners, having served their six months, soon put on flesh and make up rapidly for the temporary loss of food. As these prisoners are not allowed to mix with old criminals, or even talk to each other, I see no possible way their morals can be contaminated. Doubtless there is a degradation in being sent to a gaol, but that cannot be avoided until there is an Industrial School for criminals of that class. I cannot suggest any better system than the present except the establishment of a reformatory, or school of that kind, where young lads could be sent; but, even then, I question very much whether their minds would not stand a greater chance of being corrupted by association with worse characters than themselves. I consider prisoners have a sufficient safeguard that their health will not be seriously interfered with in the visits of the surgeon, who cannot have any object in allowing them to receive more punishment than they can bear safely. In conclusion, I may say that in all probability prisoners on No. 5 diet are not so strong at the time, but I do not consider their treatment inimical to present health or future health and strength, and does not prejudicially interfere with the development of bone, muscle, and brain.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT M'KILLIOP,

Visiting Surgeon.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Sir,

(D.)

Maitland Gaol, 18 June, 1895.

In answer to your circular memo. of 16th June, 1895, I beg to report that of thirteen prisoners* doing seventh-class treatment who have served a sentence of six months or over, I have found it necessary to relax the treatment in three cases, and in nearly all to carefully watch the prisoners' condition.

With the exception of three, all have had a considerable loss in weight, while of these three one was allowed No. 9 ration during the last fourteen days.

From my observation, I am led to believe that No. 5 ration is insufficient, and that in the case of growing prisoners the treatment may prove inimical to the development of bone, muscle, and brain.

I have, &c.

ROBERT GEO. ALCORN,
Visiting Surgeon.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

They were probably youths who had been in the habit of drinking either malt or spirituous liquors when at large.—

Minute from The Comptroller-General of Prisons to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Subject :—Seventh-class Prisoners—Reports of Governors and Visiting Surgeons of the principal Gaols where prisoners of this class are confined.

Department of Prisons, Comptroller-General's Office, Sydney.

I BEG leave to make the following remarks as to the disciplinary and deterrent effects of the existing system of treating seventh-class prisoners, as introduced in April, 1893, after careful consideration by the then Minister of Justice (Mr. E. E. O'Connor).

With regard to the medical aspect of the case, as disclosed in the surgeons' reports, I presume the Minister will further consult the Medical Adviser.

I submit that the tenor of the reports of the Governors of the gaols is strongly in favour of a continuance of the present system.

It is most essential to preserve uniformity of treatment according to classification; therefore, all youthful offenders committed to gaol for periods not exceeding twelve months should be subjected to the same regulations, so long as proper safeguards (such as those that are now in existence) are provided against injury to health, by the powers given to surgeons as to exemptions in cases of physical or mental inability to stand the full treatment, and as to alteration of diet in cases where a surgeon might deem it necessary to order such a change.

Of course, the length of the sentence, according to the gravity of the offence, is a matter which is dependent upon the good judgment and common sense of the different magistrates who preside at the courts, to each of whom a circular, fully explaining the stringent conditions of the treatment of seventh-class prisoners, was sent at the time the Regulations were gazetted. The age of the offenders should weigh greatly with those magistrates in determining the length of sentence to be awarded.

Officers in charge of gaols are required by General Order 163 to report the cases of all youths under 16 years of age received into their gaols, and to furnish particulars of the same. If any of these reports disclose what may appear to be a hard case, it is forwarded by me to the Minister for his consideration.

I consider it to be most necessary that very disorderly, mischievous, or criminally-disposed youths and boys should know that certain and severe punishment will be inflicted upon them if they persist in their lawlessness. The deterrent effect of the penal discipline to be enforced upon such offenders against law and order must not be lost sight of, for, in the case of this class of offenders, when they are sent to a gaol, we must look to deterrence more than to reformation in their treatment. As far as practicable reformatory measures are adopted, but it is hopeless to attempt to carry out full reformatory treatment in a gaol. Careful separation must be maintained so as to prevent contamination, and the treatment should be of such a character as to make the youthful offenders dread a repetition of it. This is the object of the Regulations now in force. If the gaol treatment be made in any way comfortable and attractive, the effect of the imprisonment will be much worse than useless. To anyone who has carefully studied the subject, this should be apparent. The punishment must be a genuine one. This is effected by the plank-bed and low diet.

I am dealing with this matter as one who is responsible for the prison treatment of boys whom the Courts may sentence and commit to the custody of this Department, not as the manager of a fully organised reformatory with ample land space, where no offenders of any other class are confined. In such an institution, under long sentences, a much milder discipline could be carried out on a progressive principle of relaxation according to the conduct and general bearing of each inmate.

When a reformatory of this kind has been established in the Colony for the treatment of boys of criminal instincts, and those who have been corrupted by evil association in free life, I trust that the Prisons Department will be relieved by the Magistrates who deal with the cases from a large number of those who are now sent to gaol as seventh-class prisoners.

Comptroller-General.

[Enclosure.]

Memorandum to The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Department of Prisons, N.S.W., Comptroller-General's Office, Sydney, 27 April, 1895.

Mr. SCRRA and myself have carefully scrutinised the annual returns for 1894 of seventh-class prisoners, furnished from all the gaols in the Colony, with the following results:—

The total number of prisoners who came under the treatment during 1894 was 1,367. Of this number, 164 have been subjected to the treatment twice, and 111 more than twice.

Two

Two hundred and thirty-four of the prisoners had convictions recorded against them prior to the date when the Seventh-class Regulations came into force, and of this number 112 have been convicted more than once since the date of the Regulations.

Six hundred and seventy-two prisoners came under the short and sharp treatment specified in Regulation 21, and of these 101 were again convicted during the year.

From the above figures it will be seen that the principal part of those who have been subjected to the treatment more than once, are prisoners who possessed criminal tendencies prior to the inception of the present Seventh-class Regulations. In other words, one out of every two, who had convictions prior to the Regulations in question, has returned to gaol, whereas only one in every seven, who had no convictions prior to the present treatment, has been reconvicted.

F. J. WILLIARD.

Professor Anderson-Stuart to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Offices, 127, Macquarie-street, Sydney, 29 July, 1895.

THE evidence of these papers is, on the whole, in favour of the system as at present in force for seventh-class prisoners, so that, in my opinion, there is certainly no immediate need for any alteration. The provision that the Gaol Surgeon can in any case alter or suspend the treatment is amply sufficient as a safeguard against possible harshness in particular cases, but, in order to set the matter at rest, I would suggest that during the next six months all prisoners undergoing their punishment be weighed, and their weights recorded—first, on the day before their bread, &c., treatment, and on the last day of that treatment in each case. Then, if the Minister would submit the data so procured to me, I would go into the matter and be able to give a definite opinion. In the meantime, all that I care to say as regards the treatment is that I see no sufficient reason to consider it as injurious to the health and development of the prisoners.

Gentlemen,

Department of Justice, Sydney, 23 July, 1895.

Referring to circular letter of 10th April, 1895, from this Department, relative to cases under the Industrial Schools Act, 30 Vic. No. 2, and the Reformatory Schools Act, 30 Vic. No. 4, I am directed by the Minister of Justice to inform you that a Reformatory School for Boys has been established under the name of "The Carpentarian Reformatory School for Boys," and is now available for the purposes of the Reformatory Schools Act.

I am at the same time desired to invite your attention to section 4 of that Act, the provisions of which are that, "Whenever any person whose age shall, in the opinion of the Court, or Justices, by or before whom such person shall be convicted, as hereinafter mentioned, be under sixteen years, shall be convicted of any offence punishable by law, either upon information before a jury, or on summary conviction by imprisonment for the period of fourteen days, or any longer period, such Court or Justices may, in addition to the sentence which may be then and there passed as a punishment for such offence, direct such offender to be sent at the expiration of such sentence, or instead of passing upon such person the sentence prescribed by law for such offence, direct such offender to be sent forthwith to some one of the aforesaid reformatory schools, to be there detained for a period of not less than one year, and not exceeding five years, &c., &c."

I am further directed to bring under your notice the necessity of exercising the same care in dealing with cases under the Reformatory Schools Act as in cases under the Industrial Schools Act, as explained in circular letter of 18th August, 1890.

Gentlemen,

Department of Justice, Sydney, 30 September, 1895.

Referring to circular letter from this Department, dated 23rd July last, intimating that a reformatory school for boys has been established under the name of "The Carpentarian Reformatory School for Boys," and is now available for the purposes of the Reformatory Schools Act, 30 Vic. No. 4, and inviting your attention to the provisions of section 4 of that Act, I am directed by the Minister of Justice to state that, in his opinion, it is undesirable that young boys should be sent to gaol in cases where such course can be avoided, more especially as the reformatory system is now available, and at the same time to invite your attention to the fact that in cases where it is thought inexpedient to retain boys for the minimum term of twelve months, as provided in the section referred to, His Excellency the Governor can at any time approve of their discharge.

You will be good enough to acknowledge the receipt of this circular.

IDENTIFICATION AND REGISTRATION OF HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

No. 1.

The Inspector-General of Police to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir, Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, Sydney, 26 December, 1888.

In submitting the enclosed pamphlet and appendix, for the information of the Colonial Secretary, I have the honor to report, that having in view the extreme difficulty which is invariably experienced in the Australian Colonies in identifying offenders by their photographs and ordinary personal descriptions, I inquired in the course of my investigation in Paris into the means employed by the authorities there of determining the identity of their offenders, whose recorded number now amounts to about 70,000.

Their system, as shown in the pamphlet and appendix, was fully explained to me by its author, and tested practically by an offender received into gaol at the moment, who asseverated that he had never been previously in the custody of the Police. His measurement and description were taken on the spot, and in a few moments I was enabled to select without difficulty the corresponding description (with photograph) from a large range of tabulated pigeon-holes.

The system is so simple that I suggest it should be adopted by the prison authorities here, to whom I request that this report may be submitted through the ordinary official channel.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

The Minister of Justice.—H.P., 4/1/89. The Under Secretary of Justice.—C.W., P.U.S., B.C., 7/1/89. Submitted. Might be referred to the Comptroller-General of Prisons for the favour of any observations he may wish to offer hereon.—A.C.F., 8/1/89. Comptroller-General of Prisons.—W.C., B.C., 10/1/89. A.C.F.

I have given this subject attentive consideration, and am persuaded that the Inspector-General of Police has not overrated the advantages that would accrue by the adoption of the system; neither do I see any unsurmountable difficulty in carrying it into operation. I think, moreover, with M. Bertillon (see page 26 of the pamphlet), that those advantages would be minimised by the introduction of the system separately, and with varied modifications, by one or each among neighbouring executives, and that the aim should be a simultaneous introduction into all the Australasian Colonies. To this end I would suggest that this correspondence, with the pamphlets (which contain full information), be forwarded in the first instance to the Government of Victoria, with a view to their being passed on in circulation through the other Australasian Governments, who might be invited to communicate their views to this Government, the papers and pamphlets (of which other copies are not available) being returned by that last receiving them.—HAROLD MACLEAN, Comptroller-General of Prisons for New South Wales.

B.C., 25/7/89. Under Secretary of Justice. Submitted with reference to the minute of the Comptroller-General of Prisons of 25th instant.—A.C.F., 26/7/89. I approve the suggestion of the Comptroller-General.—A.J.G., 27/7/89. Forwarded to the Principal Under Secretary, with a view to the necessary action being taken.—A.C.F., B.C., 30/7/89.

It is suggested by the Comptroller-General of Prisons that this pamphlet should be sent to the Government of Victoria, with a view to its being passed on in circulation to the other Australian Governments.—C.W., 5/8/89.

Mr. Justice Windeyer to The Minister of Justice.

Dear Mr. Slattery, Judge's Chambers, Supreme Court, Sydney, 5 March 1894.

Before your predecessor in the office of Minister of Justice, Mr. O'Connor, resigned, I was in communication with him on the subject of introducing the metrical mode of identifying prisoners in the management of our gaols. Mr. O'Connor expressed himself as very favourable to the idea and promised to communicate with me on the subject. His sudden resignation, however, put an end to the project as far as he was concerned, but I would strongly urge it upon your attention.

The present system of photographing criminals is of little use unless the man is remembered, as it is impossible to hunt over three or four thousand photos. every time you require an identification.

Only the other day the importance of this matter was forced upon my attention by a mistaken identification of a prisoner who was sworn to by a warder as having been twice convicted before, whereas he was not. If you will instruct the Comptroller-General of Prisons to introduce the system I shall be very happy to give him information on the subject.

Yours faithfully,

WILLM. WINDEYER.

Please see paper herewith—borrowed from Colonial Secretary's Department, 9/3/94. Submitted. These papers will show how this matter stands.—A.C.F., 10.

Inquiry might be at once made as to what England and other countries have done in this matter, and the Chief Secretary might be requested to have carried out the recommendation of the Principal Under-Secretary of 5/8/89.—T.M.S., Department of Justice, Sydney, 20 March, 1894.

No. 3.

Memo. from The Under Secretary of Justice to The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

[Urgent.]

Department of Justice, Sydney, 21 March, 1894.

THE within papers are forwarded for the perusal of the Comptroller-General of Prisons, who may perhaps be in a position to state from his own knowledge what has been done in England and other countries in the matter referred to.

A.C.F., B.C.

I cannot say with certainty whether the Bertillon system of determining the identity of criminals by anthropometrical descriptions has been brought into full operation in any other country in Europe than France, where a central "Bureau of Identification" has been established at Paris, and where the necessary instruments are manufactured under the special personal superintendence of M. Bertillon himself. I have no reports to show that the system has yet been adopted by the British Prisons' Department, but I assume it is not in operation there yet, because in a work which has just been published by Major Griffiths (one of H. M. Inspectors of Prisons), the following passage occurs:—"It would not be possible with us to subject an accused, and in the eyes of the law still innocent person, to the long minute physical measurements of the Bertillon method of identification, and this has prevented our adoption of the no doubt useful anthropometric system now largely used abroad. But on the Continent, justice usually proceeds from a different starting point, and holds an arrested person guilty until he can prove his innocence." Nor can I discover that the system has yet been actually introduced into America, although from a report of the proceedings of the Mutual Prison Association of the United States, at the Annual Congress held in November, 1889, the system appears to have been carefully considered, and its advantages recognised. To make it effective, the different states would have to adopt a uniform method. I frequently send photos. and descriptions of prisoners to one or other of the Australian Colonies with a view to identification, as criminals frequently migrate from one Colony to another. If a modification of the Bertillon method were introduced in the Australian Colonies, it would of course be very desirable and necessary that all the Colonies should adopt a uniform system of identification, with a view to assisting each other.—GEORGE MILLER, Comptroller-General, B.C., 31/3/94. The Under Secretary of Justice.

Department of Justice, Sydney, 10 April, 1894.

SUBMITTED in reference to Minister's minute of 20th ultimo. From the within report of the Comptroller-General of Prisons, it would appear that the Bertillon system of anthropometrical identification is not in operation in England, and it is doubtful whether it has been adopted in America or in any European country other than France.

Personal inquiry has been made of the Inspector-General of Police, who stated that the system is well known and spoken of everywhere, but he could not say positively whether it has been adopted in any country but France, and from the descriptions of criminals received by him, is of opinion that it is not in operation at any rate in the principal countries of Europe (France excepted), or in America.

Mr. Fosbery suggested that a trial of the system on a modified scale might perhaps be made by the Prisons Department here, and a report obtained at the end of a few months as to its success.

The Minister will perhaps say whether further inquiry is desired before the instructions contained in the last paragraph of his minute of 20th ultimo are carried out.

The Inspector-General of Police to The Principal Under Secretary.

Identification (or Recognition) of Criminals.

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, 4 May, 1894.

THE accompanying Report of a Committee appointed by the Secretary of State to inquire into the best means available for identifying habitual criminals is a valuable and interesting document, and is, I think, deserving of consideration by the Prisons Department if the Chief Secretary sees fit to refer it to the Minister of Justice.

When in Paris in 1888 I carefully inquired into the Bertillon system, and transmitted a pamphlet, &c., explaining the same to the Comptroller-General of Prisons, but no action has been taken since that time in relation thereto. Sir William Windeyer recently wrote to the Minister of Justice on the subject.

Drawing special attention to the recommendations of the Committee, it would, in my opinion, be desirable to amend the present system in force here at least in some respects,—

- (1) By photographing offender's side face. (See page 31)
- (2) By adding to the personal description the five measurements on Bertillon's principle.
- (3) In cases of criminals charged with serious offences, to take the finger prints also on the description.

Probably it will be found advisable before long to establish a special bureau in connection with this Department for the registration and arrangement of such records as a centre for general reference.

[Enclosure.]

SCHEDULE of information desired from the Inspector-General of Police.

1. Whether personal recognition by police or prison officers is not the basis of identification of habitual criminals?
2. Whether the scope of identification is extended by means of photographs?
3. Whether the system in vogue in this Colony for identifying such criminals is directed from a central agency?
4. What method is actually employed by members of the Police Force for identifying persons in their custody who are not personally known to them, but who are suspected of being old offenders?
5. What means are adopted for ascertaining from other colonies whether identity of a suspected criminal can be established?
6. Whether a register is kept of the names of all criminals?
7. Whether a register is kept of distinctive marks?
8. Whether a register is kept of habitual criminals?
9. Whether an alphabetical register is kept of tattoo initials and names?
10. What registers are found to be the most useful for tracing the antecedents of criminals?
11. Whether photographs are found to be of great service in establishing the identity of old offenders?
12. Whether photographs are taken of accused persons before trial?
13. If not, whether it would materially assist in the identification of suspected old offenders, if photographs of such persons were taken after their arrest?
14. Whether photographs of all criminals are kept in the Police Department?
15. If so, what mode of classification is adopted, and how many photographs would it be necessary for a searcher to look at in ordinary cases before he could be satisfied that that of a person suspected of being an old offender was not in the collection?
16. If photographs are not kept in the Police Department, what facilities have the police for seeing photographs of criminals, for the purpose of establishing the identity of a person suspected to be an old offender?
17. Whether an estimate can be given of the average time occupied in making a thorough search for this purpose?
18. Whether an estimate can be given of the number of searches made annually?
19. Whether an estimate can be given of the number of unsuccessful searches made annually?
20. Whether an estimate can be given of the annual number of suspected habitual offenders who are not identified, and who are in consequence dealt with as being first offenders?
21. Whether an estimate can be given of the proportion of serious crimes committed by local criminals and by criminals who come from other colonies or countries?
22. (a) Whether an estimate can be given of the annual number of persons arrested for serious offences; (b) the number suspected to be old offenders; (c) the number identified as such before conviction; (d) and after conviction?
23. What facilities are afforded the police of personally identifying suspected old offenders awaiting trial, or of identifying or becoming acquainted with criminals after they have been convicted?
24. Whether it is not possible that under the present system a prisoner may suffer undeservedly through a mistake of identification?
25. Whether it is not probable that a considerable proportion of old offenders are successful in concealing their identity when arrested for a fresh breach of the law?
26. Whether the process of identification is not somewhat slow and cumbersome?
27. Whether any cases have been known during the past few years of mis-identification?
28. Whether the present system of identifying criminals will satisfactorily answer all the requirements of an increasing criminal population, combined with the present facilities for travelling from one locality to another?

The Comptroller-General of Prisons to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Department of Prisons, N.S.W., Comptroller-General's Office,

Sydney, 18 May, 1894.

Sir,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter, dated 15th instant, I have the honor to state, for the information of the Minister of Justice, that I have already taken steps to improve the system by which criminals are identified in this Department, and that answers to the questions which accompanied your communication will be sent with as little delay as possible. Received yesterday.

I should be glad to be afforded an opportunity of perusing a report which the Inspector-General of Police has informed me he has recently made on the subject, and which, I understand, is in the Department of Justice.

I have, &c.,

REPLIES to questions.

1. Yes; aided by photographs and personal descriptions.
2. Yes; fifteen copies of each photo. are sent to the Inspector-General of Police for distribution to police districts.
3. There is no "central agency," but Darlinghurst Gaol is the place where the negatives and copies of all photos. are kept. Copies, with descriptions attached, are also kept in guard books in the Comptroller-General's office, with indexes, and, as before stated, fifteen copies of each photo. are sent to the Inspector-General of Police for distribution. The negatives are lent to the Police Department as required. Photos. and descriptions sent to other colonies are covered by a letter from the Comptroller-General.
4. Entrance book, description book, and photographic register.
5. Yes; entrance and description books.
6. Yes; this information is contained in the description book and the photographic register.
7. Yes.
8. No.
9. The description book and the photographic register, and the "black book" for prisoners from the higher Courts. A "black book" is also kept by the police.
10. Yes. It was upon a photograph taken in Darlinghurst Gaol in 1832 that the police were able to identify Deeming in Western Australia ten years afterwards.
11. No. Prisoners from the higher Courts only are photographed, and many prisoners awaiting trial to assist in the administration of justice.
12. Hitherto the photographs of full faces only have been taken, but on 30th April last, I gave instructions that two photos. of each prisoner, should be taken, showing respectively full face and side face.
13. All negatives are kept in alphabetical order and an index thereto is also kept. I have recently approved of a new method of classifying the photos. which will be a very great improvement on the old method.
14. Searches are made almost daily. No record is kept, but several searches have frequently to be made in the one day.
15. I am not in a position to say.
16. In the case of a prisoner being quite unknown, under the old system probably some hundreds of photographs would need to be examined, but the improved system now in use will reduce such searches by at least 90 per cent.
17. About 99 per cent. are successful.
18. No, not frequently.
19. Yes. An annual return could be given showing the number of prisoners convicted of serious offences, &c.
20. Owing to the vast area of the Colony and the necessity for keeping up gaol establishments at great distances from each other, it is not possible to send warders from gaol to gaol for the identification of prisoners, on account of the inconvenience and expense; but a general order is in existence which directs warders to communicate with gaolers any former convictions against a prisoner which may not be known in the gaol office.
21. It is possible but not probable. One case of mistaken identification has been reported to me, but the mistake was found out before the sentence was passed. Even if a mistake were made and the prisoner sentenced under the belief that he was a previously convicted man, he would have an opportunity of writing at once, or at any other time, to me, and in such a case I would send the matter on for full inquiry; so that if it were afterwards found out that a mistake had been made, the case could be sent to the Judge with a view to reduction of sentence.
22. It is not probable, although upon first entering prison numbers of old offenders deny having been previously convicted. In almost all cases of this kind, the previous convictions have been established. I frequently, in suspected cases, send photos. and descriptions to other Colonies, with inquiries. Of course, before the prisoner is brought before a court for trial, the police have instituted searching inquiry, so that, before he reaches the hands of the prison authorities, his identity is looked into by the police.
23. Yes, under the old system, but under the new one recently approved of by me, it should be quick and easy.
24. I can remember one only (see reply to question 21).
25. The old system was not satisfactory, but it was retained on ground of economy. I anticipate that the new system for taking photographs, which embodies both full and side face, classification as to nationality, colour, and special classification as to height measurements, will be a very great improvement, but I cannot say positively whether it will answer all requirements. The circumstances of the Colony render a perfect system a matter of very great difficulty, if not an impossibility. Much will depend upon the improved system which may be adopted by the other Colonies, as habitual criminals frequently migrate from one Colony to another.

Referring to your letters of the 18th ultimo and 12th instant, in which you ask that you may be afforded an opportunity of perusing a report recently made by the Inspector-General of Police upon the subject of the identification of criminals, I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of the report referred to for your information.

I have, &c.,

ARCH. C. FRASER,

No. 14.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Sir,

Department of Prisons, N.S.W., Comptroller-General's Office,
Sydney, 12 June, 1894.

Referring to your letter of the 28th ultimo, I have the honor to inform you that the new method which has recently been introduced for facilitating the identification of criminals consists of a classification and subdivision of photos., with descriptions attached, as shown hereunder.

The photos. are classified in four series, viz. :—

- 1st. English-speaking races.
- 2nd. Known foreigners.
- 3rd. Females.
- 4th. Coloured races.

The first series, which comprises by far the largest number of criminals convicted in the Colony, is also subdivided into four sets according to height of prisoners, as under :—

- 1st. 5 ft. 5 in. and under.
- 2nd. 5 ft. 5 in. to 5 ft. 7 in.
- 3rd. 5 ft. 7 in. to 5 ft. 9 in.
- 4th. All over 5 ft. 9 in.

Under the old method there was no classification of photos. with descriptions, and the full face only was taken. Under the new method, both the full face and profile are taken. I attach sample copies of two photos. This improved system will, of course, greatly increase the work of the photographer, who had but one assistant (a warder), and, in order that the duties of printing, classifying, registering, and indexing the photographs may be properly and effectively performed in future, I have appointed another man, who is an experienced photographer to Darlinghurst Gaol, with the status of a warder and subject as such to the regulations, but his duties will be confined to assisting the Acting Photographer (Mr. Howden), who ranks as a senior warder.

Mr. Howden will in future visit periodically the following gaols, for the purpose of taking photos. of such prisoners as fall within the class to be photographed, viz. :—Albury, Armidale, Bathurst, Berrima, Dubbo, Goulburn, Maitland, Parramatta, Tamworth, Young.

Hitherto Armidale, Tamworth, and Young have not been visited by him.

Under the Act just brought into operation for the treatment of certain first offenders, it will be necessary occasionally to employ local photographers to obtain likenesses of the prisoners who may be discharged on probation, in order that proper and complete descriptions may be furnished to the Police.

The Return as to (a) the annual number of persons convicted of serious offences, (b) the number suspected of being old offenders, (c) the number identified as such before conviction, (d) and after conviction, will be furnished at an early date. The delay is caused by the necessity of careful checking.

No. 15.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons to The Under Secretary of Justice.

Sir,

Department of Prisons, N.S.W., Comptroller-General's Office,
Sydney, 20 June, 1894.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the copy of the report made by the Inspector-General of Police to the Chief Secretary on the 4th May ultimo, upon the subject of the identification of criminals, forwarded to me with your letter of the 15th instant.

I

I now desire to make the following observations on that report for Mr. Slatbery's information.

As regards Mr. Fosbery's suggested amendments, I may say that, prior to his making his report to the Colonial Secretary, I had issued instructions to the officer in charge of the photography at Darlinghurst Gaol that in future all prisoners should be photographed so as to show both full face and side face. This is now being done. I had also already approved of an improved system of classifying the photographs with descriptions of prisoners, which will make it an easy and simple matter to search for a suspected criminal. This system is described in my letter to you of the 12th instant.

I venture to suggest that it would be advisable to await the action of the Secretary of State and the Prisons Department in England in order to see what improved means of identification will be finally adopted before taking steps to introduce the measurements of M. Bertillon and the finger prints of Mr. Galton into the prison system of this Colony. If these methods of identification be added to the present system they will form a compound method which will not only largely increase the work but also the expenses of this Department. The services of experts will have to be obtained, as the success of these new methods depends entirely on the exactness with which they are carried out. The taking of nicely exact measurements could hardly be entrusted to ordinary prison officers, who would further be expected to decipher the papillary ridges which cover the tips of the human fingers if the Galton method be also introduced. That system would require experts to discriminate between the various types of "arches," "loops," "radial loops," "ulnar loops," or "whorls."

These methods are certainly not so simple in their effective adoption as Mr. Fosbery seems to think. No doubt the application of the Bertillon method seemed to be an easy matter when seen by him in Paris under the immediate personal management and direction of the inventor himself (M. Bertillon), but the widely scattered positions of our courts and gaols would, I think, make it a very troublesome and expensive matter to effectively carry out the method here with a central "bureau of identification."

As I have previously pointed out, it is most desirable that the Australian Colonies should adopt a uniform system of identification, in order to assist each other.

GEORGE MILLER,
 Comptroller-General.

No. 17.

The Governor of Darlinghurst Gaol to The Comptroller-General of Prisons.

Sir,

H.M. Gaol, Darlinghurst, 25 June, 1894.

Being aware that it is your wish to inspect, with the Under Secretary of Justice, the new system of photographing prisoners and the taking of their descriptions, I beg to report that from inquiries made I find that the books in which the photographs are to be placed will not be ready for delivery by the Government Printer before Thursday next, and after that it will be some days before the photos. are arranged in the books and ready for inspection. I would therefore respectfully suggest that your visit may be deferred until the arrangements are complete, when I shall report.

I have, &c.,

P. HERBERT,

Governor, Darlinghurst Gaol.

For Mr. Fraser's information.—G.M., 26/9/94. The Under Secretary of Justice.

PROOF NO. 46. QUESTION NO. 2. TUESDAY, 6TH DECEMBER, 1894.

(2.) SYSTEM OF IDENTIFICATION OF CRIMINALS:—Dr. Graham asked the Minister of Justice,—Have the prison authorities considered the advisability of introducing into the prison system of this country, for the more accurate identification of criminals, a scientific system of measurements, such as the "Bertillon system," that has worked so successfully in France, and is now being introduced into the prison system of Great Britain?

Mr. Brunner answered,—The whole question as to the identification of criminals by the "Bertillon and Galton systems" has for some time been receiving careful consideration in the Department of Justice. Improvements have recently been made by the Prisons Department in the system prevailing in New South Wales for securing the identification of prisoners; but it is thought that before adopting either system in its entirety, or in a modified form, or a combination of these systems, the other colonies should be consulted, with a view to the establishment of an improved and uniform system upon the lines of that recently adopted in England.

No. 19.

Minute of The Under Secretary of Justice.

Subject:—The registration and identification of habitual criminals.

THE late Minister, Mr. Slattery, verbally requested me to report fully upon the method in force in this Colony of registering and identifying habitual criminals, and the advisability of adopting an improved system.

The question of introducing the anthropometric system of classified registration and identification as used in France under the direction of M. Bertillon was first brought under notice by the Inspector-General of Police, who, when in Paris in 1888, had an opportunity of personally inquiring into M. Bertillon's method, and subsequently recommended its adoption here.

The then Comptroller-General of Prisons, the late Mr. M'Lean, recognised the advantages that would accrue from the adoption of such a system, and considered that there would be no insurmountable difficulty in carrying it into operation, but suggested, as the advantages of its introduction would be greatly increased if the same system were adopted simultaneously by all the Australian colonies, and would be minimised by its introduction separately, and with varied modification, by one or each of the neighbouring colonies, that the papers should be forwarded to the other Australian Governments for the purpose of ascertaining their views on the subject, and with the idea that concerted action, if any, should be taken in the matter.

This suggestion was approved by the Minister of Justice, Mr. Gould, when formerly in office, and the papers were forwarded on the 30th July, 1889, to the Chief Secretary's Department for necessary action to be taken, but no effort appears to have been made by that Department to carry out the suggestion, and the matter remained in abeyance until March last, when the question of introducing the anthropometric system was brought under the notice of Mr. Slattery by the Honorable Mr. Justice Windeyer.

Inquiries were then made for the purpose of ascertaining whether the system of M. Bertillon was used in any European countries other than France, but in the meantime, namely on the 30th April last, there came under the notice of the Department a copy of a report furnished to the Home Secretary by a Committee appointed in England to inquire into the best means available for identifying habitual criminals. In this report the whole question has been exhaustively dealt with, and special consideration given to the anthropometric system of M. Bertillon, and the finger-print system of Mr. Galton, and the introduction into England of M. Bertillon's system somewhat modified, with a final classification and check upon identification by means of finger-prints taken under Mr. Galton's method, is recommended by the Committee.

On the 14th May, a further communication from the Inspector-General of Police, together with a copy of the same report was received in the Department, with a recommendation by Mr. Fosbery that the system in force in this Colony should be amended in the following respects—(1) by photographing offenders side face as well as full face; (2) by adding to the personal description the five measurements—length and breadth of head, length of left middle finger; length of the left forearm, and the length of the left foot—according to the method of M. Bertillon; and (3) by taking the finger-prints of criminals charged with serious offences.

With the view of ascertaining definitely what our present system is of registering and identifying habitual criminals, and to what extent that system may be considered to answer its purpose, reference has been made to the Police and the Prisons Departments. From the information thus obtained, it is understood that the basis of identification is personal recognition by police or prison officers aided by photographs and personal descriptions. In the Police Department, a register is kept of the names of all persons convicted of serious offences, and a book containing their photographs and personal descriptions. Police Gazettes are also filed, which contain the descriptions of persons wanted; and in the event of anyone being arrested who is supposed to be an old offender, but is unknown, search is made in the above-mentioned records, and, if necessary, inquiry is made at the Prisons Department.

No classification is made of the photographs, which, prior to May last, were full face only, but an alphabetical index of names is kept. Thus, should a name be given by a prisoner which cannot be found in the index, general search amongst the photographs must be made in an endeavor to trace his identity as an old offender. If inquiries are considered advisable in another Colony, a minute description with photo., when obtainable, is forwarded to the police of that Colony.

The only facilities the police have of personally identifying or becoming acquainted with criminals while in custody are those afforded at the lockups and Courts during the time of their arrest and trial.

In the Prisons Department photographs are taken of all prisoners convicted at the higher Courts, and frequently of persons awaiting trial, in order to assist in the administration of justice, fifteen copies of each photograph being supplied to the Police Department.

It was the practice, prior to May last, to take such photographs full face only, and to place them without classification in books together with personal descriptions of the prisoners, and to keep an alphabetical index of the names; but on the 30th April last, the Comptroller-General of Prisons gave instructions for the introduction of a new system, under which the photographs are to be taken profile as well as full face, and are to be classified in books under the following definitions, namely:—(1) English speaking races, (2) known foreigners, (3) females, (4) coloured races, a sub-division of those included in the English speaking races being made into four classes arranged according to the height of the prisoners.

Under this arrangement, by far the largest number of criminals will be included in the class of English-speaking races, and it is probable that their subclassification according to height will not be found to give entirely satisfactory results by reason of the unreliability of height measurements. (See evidence of Chief Inspector Neame, of the London Police, and Dr. Clarke, Medical Officer of Wakefield Prison, pp. 38 and 40 of Report to Home Secretary.)

The system is, however, one that has been used by the London Police, and is, perhaps, the best that could have been adopted by the Prisons Department under our present conditions.

In addition to this classification of the photographs, corresponding photographic indexes, containing on each page the photographs of six persons, have been prepared as an easy means of reference when making searches.

Under the old system it must be apparent that identifications have frequently been established only by the expenditure of much labour, and many fruitless searches have doubtless been made, involving considerable loss of time; but under the recently-introduced arrangement of classified photographs, which I have had an opportunity of inspecting, the work of searching has been very much reduced; and this system would be capable of further extension as the number of photographs increases by subdivision according to age.

It would appear, therefore, that without effecting a radical change in our present system, the Comptroller-General of Prisons has added to it such practical and useful improvements as are suggested by the Committee in their report to the Home Secretary in respect of photographic application in identifying criminals. It is understood, also, that more particular attention is being paid to the recording of personal marks and descriptions.

It is, of course, recognised that identification by photographs is not entirely satisfactory, as by reason of similarities of appearance or facial changes, cases of misidentification might occur, and failures to recognise are frequent. The misidentification of criminals is undoubtedly a matter of considerable importance, inasmuch as a person represented to be an old offender would under ordinary circumstances receive a heavier sentence than if treated as a first offender; but it may be stated in this respect that no cases appear to have arisen in this Colony in which a prisoner has actually suffered additional imprisonment through a former conviction having been erroneously imputed to him, although instances of mistaken identity have occurred, as witness the case referred to by the Honorable Mr. Justice Windoyer in his letter of 5th March last. One case is, however, mentioned in the Committee's report to the Home Secretary, in which a man was wrongly convicted of being an incorrigible rogue through his identity being mistaken; and other cases are referred to in which errors have been made but discovered in time to prevent injustice being done to the prisoners. Cases have also occurred in which a criminal has acquiesced in an erroneous identification, knowing his own record to be worse than that of the person for whom he has been mistaken.

From information supplied by the Prisons Department it will be seen that last year 856 persons were convicted of serious offences, of whom 293 were identified as old offenders before conviction, thirteen after conviction, and thirty-five (about 4 per cent. of the number), though suspected of being old offenders, could not be identified. It is probable that the number of failures to identify is in excess of that stated, and that a fair proportion of old criminals annually escape recognition when arrested for fresh offences. This is perhaps the chief defect in a system that depends upon photographs as the channel through which identity is to be established. Another defect is the loss of time and labour involved in making searches, the means of classifying photographs being limited, and quite inadequate when applied to a large number.

With a denser population, and a corresponding increase in the number of criminals, a larger proportion of old offenders would no doubt escape recognition under our present system, the ineffectiveness of which would then become more apparent; but with our comparatively small criminal population it may not be unreasonable to conclude that all necessary requirements will for the present be sufficiently met by the improved system now in operation.

The Comptroller-General of Prisons, when reporting upon the recommendations of the Inspector-General of Police, pointed out that he had already given instructions for photographs to be taken profile as well as full face, and had approved of the new system of classifying them. He suggested that it would be advisable to await further developments in England before taking any decisive action in the matter here, and urge the desirableness, should a change be made, of all the Australian Colonies adopting a uniform system of identification in order to assist each other.

Mr.

Mr. Miller also expressed the opinion that if a combination of the Bertillon and Galton systems were introduced, it would entail much labour and expenditure by the Department, as it would be necessary to obtain the services of experts, as the taking of exact measurements, upon which the success of the Bertillon system depends, could not be entrusted to ordinary prison officers, who would be further expected to decipher the finger prints, and he stated also that owing to the widely scattered positions of our courts and gaols it would be very troublesome and costly to effectively carry out such a system in this Colony, with a central bureau of identification. The Comptroller-General has, I think, somewhat overrated the difficulties in this matter. Although inexperienced persons could not be trusted to take the necessary measurements with accuracy, there appears to be no reason why prison warders of ordinary intelligence should not, after a little training and practice, perform the duties satisfactorily. The Committee of Inquiry in England were thoroughly satisfied on that point, after seeing the process in operation in France, and hearing the opinions of those who have had practical experience in such matters.

Beyond the initial expense of procuring a trained warder from England, or sending an officer there to learn the system, as was done in Ceylon, and of purchasing instruments for use in the various gaols and of subsequently bringing warders for a few weeks to Sydney to learn the methods of measurement, the operation of the Bertillon system, if introduced, would be inexpensive. The duties of the warders in the country gaols would merely be to take the measurements and forward them to the central office, where they would be properly classified.

The cost of the necessary instruments may be estimated at about £6 per set.

It is understood that the Home Secretary has recently given instructions for the introduction of the Bertillon system into England, and after reading the Committee's report and the evidence given before them, also several articles published in magazines, and other works bearing on the subject, I am quite satisfied as to the advantages of such a system and the benefits that would result from its adoption into these colonies.

It should perhaps, be stated that the Bertillon system has been for some years in force in France, the Argentine Republic, and Japan, and has been adopted in Ceylon, India (Province of Bengal), Russia (St. Petersburg and Moscow), Roumania, Norway, Switzerland (Berne, Zurich, and Geneva), Paraguay, and several other countries and places.

The advantages of such a system are that it is easily understood and simple in its application, and while it is capable of being administered inexpensively it would be accurate and effective in establishing the identity of previous offenders, so that many intercolonial, foreign, and travelling criminals, who now escape recognition, would speedily be identified, while it would be practically impossible for a case of misidentification to arise, but in considering the question of its introduction into this Colony it is to be borne in mind that if applied to all persons convicted of serious offences the number would not exceed 1,000 per annum, while if applied to those only who are convicted a second time of such an offence, the number would not be more than 400 per annum.

Viewing our probable requirements in the near future, and the recent improvements that have been made in our system by the Prisons Department, which could with advantage be extended to the Police Department, I do not think the necessity exists for any immediate change to be made of a radical nature without the co-operation of the other Colonies.

The adoption moreover of the Bertillon or any similar system by any one Colony, independently of the other Colonies, might possibly prejudice the chances of joint action being taken, and I am firmly impressed with the desirableness of a uniform system, somewhat on the lines of that of M. Bertillon, being established throughout these Colonies.

The necessity for some such action being taken will be apparent to those who have observed the facilities existing for foreign criminals to come to Australia, and for all persons of that class to travel between the various Colonies.

The matter appears to be one in which federal interests being involved, united action might well be taken; and I would therefore suggest, if any action of a federal nature is thought to be desirable, that steps be at once taken, through the Chief Secretary's Department, to approach the other Australian Governments, with a view to the establishment of an improved and uniform system upon the lines of that recently adopted in England.

THE minute-paper of Mr. A. C. Fraser, Department of Justice, Sydney, dealing with the subject of the registration and identification of habitual criminals, having been referred by the Honorable the Attorney-General to the Commissioner of Police for his observations, that officer points out that in tying up the type-written sheets of the paper, the last sheet but one has apparently been omitted. The sheets are not numbered. The last line and first line respectively of the two concluding sheets as the paper reached this office are as follows:—Concluding line of last sheet but one: "Bertillon being established throughout these Colonies." The first line of the last page: "for foreign criminals to come to Australia and for all per."

Minute by the Inspector of Prisons.

Subject.—The registration and identification of habitual criminals.

Department of Prisons, Wellington, New Zealand, 27 May, 1895.

WITH reference to circular 95/6528, dated Chief Secretary's Office, Sydney, 6th May, 1895, referring to a new and improved uniform system for the registration and identification of habitual criminals, I have the honor to point out that the system in force in this Colony is, that when the Police Department require a prisoner photographed they make application to the Prisons Department who have the likenesses at once taken, with a full face view, showing both hands spread out across the chest, and these, with a carefully prepared descriptive return, showing when and where tried, offence, sentence, where born, trade, year of birth, height, complexion, hair, eyes, nose, where photographed, and date, and any marks or scars, and carefully filed in both the Prisons and Chief Police Station of the District, and for future reference are known by a number which corresponds to the photograph. I am now also having these likenesses taken profile as well as full face. I may state that up to the present time, this means of identification has proved ample for the requirements of this Colony, where there are so few criminals; but in view of a considerable increase of population before many more years, and therefore a corresponding increase in criminals, it is thought that the time has now arrived when Mons. Alphonse Bertillon's system of taking descriptions of the identification of criminals and others, by means of anthropometric indications might be adopted in the Australasian Colonies with great advantage, as it appears vastly superior to anything yet suggested or attempted in this direction, and as the question appears to me to be one of so grave importance, it is suggested that a conference of the Departmental Heads of the Police and Prisons of the various Colonies should be assembled at some convenient place and time to consider and report upon Mons. Bertillon's system, and to quote from that gentleman's own words, "I beg of the Police and Prison authorities of other countries who are disposed to adopt the anthropometric system, not to introduce special modifications of their own, which would tend to destroy the uniformity of the system, when it is an easy matter for all to act in concert as regards the different measurements to be taken, the choice of instruments, and the modus operandi." I may add that I, like Mr. Maclean, can see no insurmountable difficulty in carrying it into operation, as also the finger-print system of Mr. Galton. I am not inclined to agree with Mr. Miller in his opinion that if a combination of the Bertillon and Galton systems were introduced it would entail much labour and expenditure by the Department, as it would be necessary to obtain the services of experts; but it appears to me that if there were one, or at most two, officers in either of the Colonies who thoroughly understood the working of these systems, any intelligent prison officer could very soon be initiated into and made to comprehend the duties and satisfactorily carry them out under a short tuition by such experts, and this appears to be the conclusion arrived at by the Committee of Inquiry in England after seeing the process in operation in France, and hearing the opinions of those who have had practical experience in such matters.

In conclusion, I may state that I too am firmly impressed with the desirableness of a uniform system on the lines of Mons. Bertillon and Mr. Galton being established throughout the Australasian Colonies.

With reference to your letter of the 6th May, relative to the proposed adoption, by the several Australasian Colonies of an improved and uniform system for the registration and identification of habitual criminals, I have the honor to inform you that the matter has received careful consideration, and I now forward herewith a copy of a report on the subject which I have received from the Honorable the Chief Secretary, and which is, as you will observe, to the effect that it is not considered necessary at present to adopt the Bertillon system.

I would add, however, that if the Governments of the other Australasian Colonies are favourable to the proposal contained in your letter, this Government would have no objection to join in a conference of the Heads of Police and Penal Establishments to consider the whole question.

[Enclosure.]

Chief Secretary's Office, Melbourne, 19 July, 1895.

The question of adopting the Bertillon system of identifying prisoners was brought under the consideration of the Inspector-General of Penal Establishments, and of the Chief Commissioner of Police last year, and they considered that the system at present practised in Victoria of taking photographs (full and side face), and measures of height, &c., with descriptions of appearance and particular marks, was sufficient to meet present requirements, and that there was not justification for incurring the expenditure necessary to carry out the Bertillon and Galton methods with efficiency. The question has again been referred to these gentlemen for consideration, and they are still of the same opinion; their views indeed seem to be similar to those held by the Comptroller-General of Prisons, New South Wales, as stated in the minute of the Under Secretary of Justice.

The Chief Commissioner points out that so far as the search for, and arrest of criminals is concerned, the Bertillon system is of no advantage, as, of course, the tests for identification cannot be applied until after an offender is in custody. He also observes that "the introduction of, and carrying out of this system, would cause much trouble and some expense, and that if the measurements, &c., were not taken by experts, and most accurately, they would often be used to prove that the prisoner was not the man wanted." This seems a very important consideration.

Mr. Chomley admits that there are, however, occasions when the photos and description leave the identification doubtful, and then, no doubt, the system would be found useful, and he concludes his minute: "Shortly, my opinion is that if the system was perfectly carried out it would occasionally be useful, but if imperfectly carried out it would not only be useless but dangerous."

The Inspector-General of Penal Establishment reports: "Whilst I have little doubt as to the greater facilities and reliability afforded under the Bertillon and Galton systems, still, I think the methods now in vogue here of relying on photographs, personal descriptions, marks on body, &c., are for all practical purposes sufficient."

He also calls attention to the following passages in the report of the Commission appointed by the Secretary of State:—"It is essential to the complete success of the registry to secure the services of an expert practised in the methods of scientific anthropometry"; again, "Unless perfect accuracy be observed, the system would be only a snare, and lack of care or intelligence is an ever present danger—if the task be committed, as it sometimes must be, to warders and police of perhaps doubtful zeal, or who have no experience. Then a prolonged search, and with dubious results, would be rendered necessary when measurements were on or near the margin of primary divisions."

Captain Evans proceeds: "To carry out the system would involve additional expense—certainly the pay of one officer. Again, to work it effectively persons specially instructed, and records would have to be available at the several prisons throughout the Colony. I do not think the time has yet come for justifying such expenditure, nor has the necessity for it manifested itself."

He further states that experiments are now being made with mirrors to obtain photographs of the face of various definite angles.

In view of the opinions expressed by the officers having the largest experience in connection with this subject, and most deeply interested in adopting all necessary means for securing the identification of offenders, the Government does not consider it necessary, at present, to adopt the system of measurement of criminals introduced by M. Bertillon. Approved.—A.J.P., 3/9/95

Sir,

Attorney-General's Office, Hobart, 11 September, 1895.

With reference to the request of the Hon. the Chief Secretary of New South Wales to be forwarded with an expression of the views of this Government upon the question of the expediency of concerted action being taken by the several Australasian Colonies, with a view to the adoption of an improved and uniform system for the registration and identification of habitual criminals, I have the honor to say that I caused the minute upon the subject, transmitted with Mr. Brunker's letter, to be submitted to the Commissioner of Police for his observations, and I am now in receipt of a report by that officer, in which he says that the introduction into Tasmania of any other system than that at present in force, and which he describes, is neither necessary or desirable, inasmuch as it would be of no practical utility either within the colony or beyond its boundaries.

Mr.

Mr. Shaw points out that the insular position of this Colony, and the limited field it affords for the operation of criminals of the worst kind, renders Tasmania almost, if not quite, free from the presence of that class of habitual criminals who move from place to place, and who seek scope for the exercise of their talents in communities where they are not known, with the result that the number of persons to whom the several more or less complete systems of registration and identification detailed in the correspondence could with any advantage be applied, is so small as to render the adoption of any one, even in a modified form, unnecessary.

I am compelled to express my concurrence with these views, especially as the only two habitual criminals of the most confirmed type in the colony are both serving long sentences—in one case the imprisonment being for life.

I return all the papers, and I also forward the report of the Commissioner of Police.

The Prime Minister of South Australia to The Chief Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Premier's Office, Adelaide, 28 September, 1895.

Referring to your letters of 6th May and 19th August, on the subject of an improved and uniform system for the registration and identification of habitual criminals, I have the honor to inform you that after careful consideration of the question, this Government has concluded that our existing system is sufficient for present purposes, and that the additional trouble and expense involved in the carrying out of the suggestion would not be altogether commensurate with the resulting advantage to this province.

Permit me to express my regret that your communication was not replied to earlier, and also allow me to thank you for the very interesting minute on the subject by your Minister of Justice.

I enclose copy of a memorandum on the subject received from our Commissioner of Police.

I have, &c.,

Submitted in connection with previous papers.—A.C.F., 15/10/95. Might await consideration until a reply is received from Western Australia, which is the only Colony that has not yet furnished a report in regard to this matter.—A.C.F. Approved.—A.J.G., 18/10/95.

[Enclosure.]

MEMORANDUM from the Commissioner of Police.

The system in vogue here has been found equal to present requirements. Criminals' photos, full and side face, upon forms giving minute description and impression of both thumbs, are periodically exchanged between this and other Australian Colonies, bound in book-form and indexed, thus forming easy modes of reference.

This method may not be quite infallible, but with good photos and minute descriptions very little difficulty has been experienced here hitherto.

Doubtless the anthropometrical system is more reliable, and is found of great value in Europe, where large centres of population exist, and where criminals can more easily escape recognition when photos alone form the only means of identification. This difficulty does not exist here, owing to the sparseness of the population. These forms are furnished by the gaul authorities in some of the other Colonies, but here this work is performed by the police, and every care taken to make descriptions and records as complete as possible.

The Judges in this Colony do not allow previous criminal history out of South Australia to make any difference in a prisoner's sentence. He is treated as a first offender, and the value of a more elaborate system of identification is lost.

A system so elaborate as that mentioned above must entail considerable additional labour, and naturally expense.

Commissioner of Police.

Minute of The Under Secretary of Justice.

Subject:—The registration and identification of habitual criminals.

25 September, 1895.

REFERRING to the enclosed replies received from the Governments of New Zealand, Queensland, and Victoria, it will be seen that the Government of New Zealand is favourable to the adoption of an improved system of identifying criminals, on the lines proposed in my minute of 14/11/94, and suggests that a conference of the heads of the Police and Prisons Departments of each Colony might be held at a convenient time and place to consider and report upon the whole matter, and the Government of Queensland is prepared to join this Colony in adopting the proposed new system, while the Government of Victoria, though considering the adoption of the Bertillon system at present unnecessary, would be willing, if the other Colonies are favourable to concerted action in the matter being taken, to join in a conference of the heads of police and penal establishments to consider the whole question.

No reply has yet been received from the Governments of South Australia, Tasmania, or Western Australia.

It would no doubt be necessary, before the adoption of a uniform system throughout the Colonies, to hold a conference of police and prison authorities, and in the meantime it would appear to be desirable to obtain the latest possible information respecting action taken in other countries; and I would therefore suggest that the Chief Secretary be asked to obtain from the Agent-General a detailed report of what has been done in England and a few copies of such pamphlets and reports as are procurable, having reference to the Bertillon system and its adoption in British dominions and in other countries, and the results arising therefrom.

(DESPATCH RESPECTING).

Presented to Parliament by Command.

Department of Justice, Sydney, 20 November, 1895.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor directs the publication, for general information, of the following despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 11th September, 1895.

ALBERT J. GOULD.

[Circular.]

Sir,

Downing-street, 11 September, 1895.

I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of an Act passed in the late Parliament (58 and 59 Vic., cap. 44), intitled "An Act to amend the Law relating to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council."

This Act, by providing for the inclusion in the Tribunal of Ultimate Appeal from the decisions of Colonial Courts of Judges or former Judges of those Courts, meets a wish which has been frequently expressed, and is, I believe, generally entertained in the Colony, and I trust that its enactment will tend to preserve and strengthen the bond of union between all parts of the Empire.

CHAPTER 44.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council. 6th July, 1895.

BE it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Provision as to persons being or having been Colonial Chief Justices or Judges.

1. (1) If any person being or having been Chief Justice or a Judge of the Supreme Court of the Dominion of Canada, or of a Superior Court in any province of Canada, of any of the Australasian Colonies mentioned in the schedule to this Act, or of either of the South African colonies mentioned in the said schedule, or of any other Superior Court in Her Majesty's Dominions named in that behalf by Her Majesty in Council, is a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council, he shall be a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

(2) The number of persons being members of the Judicial Committee by reason of this Act shall not exceed five at any one time.

(3) The provisions of this Act shall be in addition to, and shall not affect, any other enactment for the appointment of or relating to members of the Judicial Committee.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
NEW SOUTH WALES.

SENIOR-SERGEANT VAUGHAN.

(RETURN RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 21 August, 1895.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 4th September, 1894, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“Copies of all papers, reports, and other correspondence relating to the “reduction and removal from Narrandera of Senior-sergeant Vaughan, in “June, 1888.”

(Mr. Chanter.)

The Municipal Council of Narrandera to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Narrandera, 9 June, 1887.

I have been instructed by the Narrandera Borough Council to bring before your notice the necessity of an additional police constable for night duty in this town.

For some considerable time, and during the small hours of the night, numerous robberies and other offences have been committed, and being no police protection after a certain hour, this practice is carried on with impunity, and to such an extent that has caused the townspeople to solicit the custody of their property.

The Council, therefore, beg to make the foregoing application, and trust that it will receive a favourable consideration at the hands of your Department, as the complaint is certainly one that should be attended to.

Yours, &c.,

P. HIGGINS,

Council Clerk.

Referred to Superintendent Battye, Albury, for report.—EDMUND FOSBERY, Inspector-General of Police, 11/6/87.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 15 June, 1887.

FORWARDED to Inspector Harrison to report on. The numerous robberies and other offences alluded to have not been reported by Senior-sergeant Vaughan.

E. M. BATTYE,

Superintendent.

Mr. Inspector Harrison to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Wagga Wagga, 20 June, 1887.

I HAVE the honor to report, vs the attached letter from the Municipal Council, Narrandera, that I have seen the aldermen and other residents of the town, and find that the robberies referred to are fowl-stealing and petty larcenies, together with a burglary at Mr. Smith's store, and an attempt at the same the same night (the burglary was reported at the time). The applicants for extra police protection allege that the police go off duty at 11 p.m., and are not about any more till after breakfast the following day; that some of the public-houses sell nearly all night, entailing any amount of drunkenness and rowdyism, which the police make no apparent effort to check, as also the sale of liquor on a Sunday to both whites and blacks. I regret to say that I believe there is a great deal of truth in these complaints, and that Senior-sergeant Vaughan has not had the duties at this station performed in a satisfactory manner. I have on more than one occasion had to call Vaughan's attention to irregularities at his station. As regards the public-houses selling after hours and on Sundays, he (the senior-sergeant) pleads ignorance. I may mention that the lockup-keeper performs no town duty, even though the lockup may be free from prisoners for more than a week at a time. As Senior-sergeant Vaughan informed me the duty performed was by order from the Superintendent (in circular), which he could not find, I made no change. As to an additional constable being required, I do not consider that at the present time there is full employment for the men that are there. The fault lies in the way the duty has been performed, and I fear it will not improve under Senior-sergeant Vaughan's control.

The reverse.—
E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

C. E. HARRISON,
Inspector.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 22 June, 1887.

FORWARDED for Senior-sergeant Vaughan to reply. No such circular was ever issued by me re lockup-keeper; quite the reverse is the custom here when there are no prisoners; even warders at police gaols are, and can be, called upon when necessary (vide circular, Prisons Department, 18th December, 1883).

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent

Senior-sergeant Vaughan for report.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, 23/6/87.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Police Station, Narrandera, 4 July, 1887.

WITH reference to the application of the Narrandera Municipal Council for extra police protection, and Mr. Inspector Harrison's report thereon, Senior-sergeant Vaughan begs leave to report that the reports of robberies and larcenies undetected are entirely exaggerated. The only cases reported to the police being the burglary at Smith's store, and an attempt at Hodge's store the same night, and some time afterwards a blanket stolen from Gough's hotel. There were one or two cases of fowl-stealing, but they were not reported promptly. In the case of the burglary, the police acted promptly, searching camps of suspected persons, watched departure of trains, arrested six men as suspected persons, and convicted one man for vagrancy. Although the suspects were not convicted, it had the effect of clearing the town of a gang of suspected persons and thieves. Although the duty of the town duty-man is to 11 p.m. (making eight hours), his instructions always were to remain on the town until the public-houses were closed. Senior-sergeant Vaughan often patrolled the town after 11 p.m., and the state of things reported by Mr. Harrison never came under his notice. With regard to drunkenness and rowdiness, Narrandera can compare favourably with any town in the Colony in this respect, and as to the sale of liquors to whites and blacks on Sunday, it is very much exaggerated. With fourteen public-houses and the town so scattered, with the best police supervision some of these irregularities must occur; and although a good many blacks come into Narrandera from time to time, cases of drunkenness among them are not frequent. If Mr. Harrison thinks there is any truth in the complaints he mentions, in justice to the senior-sergeant they ought to be proven. Senior-sergeant Vaughan does not remember Mr. Harrison calling his attention to any irregularities in the performance of the duties on the station; he did with reference to correspondence and accounts, altering the practice which the senior-sergeant followed for years.

With regard to the lockup-keeper doing no town duty, Senior-sergeant Vaughan acted on circular from Superintendent's Office, dated 8th April, 1883, which the senior-sergeant could not then lay his hands on, and not having seen it for some time, was under the impression that it contained what he stated to Mr. Harrison. However, with the exception of one week, ending 14th May last, there were prisoners constantly in the lock-up, and the lockup-keeper's time fully occupied serving summonses, attending court, post, emergency duty, &c., which could not be detailed in the duty-book. A glance at the criminal returns from Narrandera station for the last three years will show the importance of the station compared with other stations with a larger staff, showing many important cases successfully dealt with. During Senior-sergeant Vaughan's first year at Narrandera £430 was paid in fines for sly grog-selling alone, besides others convicted, who went to prison—completely putting a stop to that offence at the Chinese camp and other places—also important convictions for robbery at the Chinese camp, which had the effect of placing the inhabitants of the Chinese camp completely under the control of the police. The duty is now being performed as arranged by Captain Battye, which, no doubt, will give increased satisfaction.

In conclusion, Senior-sergeant Vaughan is satisfied that he has the confidence of the Bench of Magistrates and the public of Narrandera and district, as he has had at all other stations that he had charge of.

P. L. VAUGHAN,
Senior-sergeant.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to The Inspector-General of Police.

Albury, 9 July, 1887.

WITH reference to the Borough Council's letter from Narrandera, asking for additional police, I beg to inform the Inspector-General that Inspector Harrison visited that station on the 19th ultimo (whose report and that of Senior-sergeant Vaughan is attached). I also inspected station on the 25th of same month, and find that an additional constable is not required if the duties are properly performed by Senior-sergeant Vaughan, who, I regret to say, has been extremely lax and inattentive in the performance of his duties, which the various documents attached will show—so much so that I recommend his removal from that station to some other district, and trust the Inspector-General will send me some smart, strictly steady, and intelligent sergeant to relieve him, as I have not one, out of the four I have, to spare.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

Quite the reverse, vide circular 7th April, 1883, attached.—E. M. BATTYE, Superintendent.

Telegram from Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

WHEN at Narrandera recently, I issued written orders, re duty, to be copied by Sergeant Vaughan, and forwarded to you; that document I now require.

Superintendent.

Forwarded in accordance with Captain Battye's telegram. It was only received here 5th instant.—
C. E. HARRISON, Inspector.

Memo. by Mr. Superintendent Battye.

I FIND on looking through the weekly duties that the lockup-keeper never appears to have performed any town duty, even when robberies and burglaries have been reported, and also I find that the constables have knocked off duty every night after 11. For the future, the mounted men will assist in town duty when at the station by attending the arrival and departure of passenger trains (mounted), and perform foot town patrol from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. The lockup-keeper will invariably and daily take his share of town duty when he has no notorious or violent prisoner in the cell. The night duty will continue up to 2 a.m., and even later, should the senior-sergeant consider it necessary, but one constable must invariably be at the Barracks. Every instance of an offence reported to police must briefly be entered in the duty book and weekly returns.

Narrandera, 25 June, 1887.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

When copied to be sent to Inspector Harrison, Wagga Wagga.—E. M. BATTYE.

The Inspector-General of Police to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

THERE are few non-commissioned officers who are so well qualified to perform police duties as Sergeant Vaughan. If Captain Battye thinks, however, that a change is desirable, he must consider what change would be most advantageous for the Service. I cannot find a station in another district. Sergeant Vaughan should be informed in what respect he has been neglectful, and warned that he cannot expect to retain his position in the force if he does not evince greater attention and energy.

Sydney, 11 July, 1887.

EDMUND FOSBERY,
Inspector-General of Police.

The Inspector-General of Police to The Mayor of Narrandera.

Sir,

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, 11 July, 1887.

With reference to your letter dated the 9th ultimo, drawing attention to the necessity for an additional constable for night duty in Narrandera, I have the honor to inform you that I regret I am not in a position to increase the strength of the force at that place, but I have given instructions which will, I trust, have the effect of causing the police there to show greater energy in the performance of their duties in future.

Yours, &c.,

EDMUND FOSBERY.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 17 July, 1887.

THESE papers are sent to Inspector Harrison for him to read Inspector-General's remarks, then they will be returned to me. On receiving Senior-sergeant Vaughan's explanation to mine of this date, and whatever remarks Inspector Harrison may have to make on senior-sergeant's explanation or any other matter regarding him, I will communicate again with the Inspector-General and make some suggestion.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Senior-sergeant Vaughan (through Inspector Harrison).

Albury, 17 July, 1887.

I REQUIRE at once, from Senior-sergeant Vaughan, a full explanation for the following neglect and delay in transmitting returns and replying to queries sent him, viz. :—

- (1.) The doctor's certificate asked for twice as to senior-sergeant's illness—not yet received.
- (2.) The Aboriginal's Jubilee Accounts—not yet received.
- (3.) The Quarterly Accounts ending 30th June—not yet received.
- (4.) Why senior-sergeant returned to Inspector Harrison Constables Ray and Davison's travelling allowance claims to 30th June, without replying to the queries of that officer when they were returned to him for explanation.
- (5.) Why the Narrandera weekly returns to 2nd July were not despatched by senior-sergeant so as to reach Wagga before the 10th of that month.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan's weekly returns, 2nd July, only received last night; he has sent no medical certificate, called for by telegram on the 4th instant, as ordered by Captain Battye.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, Wagga Wagga, 11/7/87. Superintendent Battye, Albury.

Medical certificate required re your illness.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, 4/7/87. Senior-sergeant Vaughan, Narrandera. Superintendent

Superintendent Battye on copy of foregoing telegram, notes that the object of receiving the medical certificate was to see if Senior-sergeant Vaughan could carry on duties, or whether necessary to send another sergeant to perform them.—E. M. BATTYE.

Medical certificates herewith.—P. L. VAUGHAN, Narrandera, 15/7/87. Inspector Harrison, Wagga Wagga. Forwarded.—CHAS. E. HARRISON, Inspector. Superintendent E. M. Battye, Albury. I hereby certify that Mr. P. L. Vaughan has been suffering from a severe cold since 25th June, and unable to attend to his duty.—JAMES MITCHELL, M.R.C.S.E., Narrandera, 28/6/87.

I hereby certify that Mr. P. L. Vaughan was ill from 29th June to 2nd July, owing to relapse of previous illness, being on duty during wet weather attending inquest at Colombo.—JAMES MITCHELL, M.R.C.S.E., Narrandera, 13/7/87.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Narrandera, 21 July, 1887.

SENIOR-SERGEANT VAUGHAN begs to explain with reference to Captain Battye's minute, the doctor's certificate was delayed owing to the fact that, although the senior-sergeant resumed duty on the 29th ultimo, he had to lay up again through getting wet attending an inquest at Colombo, and after two days resumed duty again, but was so unwell that he delayed getting a second certificate fearing he would have to lay up again—certificates were forwarded on the 15th instant. The Jubilee accounts were delayed through not being able to get the account from Ferrier & Co. for some time after the completion of the order, and when received, the other Aboriginal accounts were mixed up with it. The account which was sent back is not yet rectified, although pressing for it on several occasions; clear instructions were given them when giving the orders. The quarterly accounts are delayed through the above cause.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan did not notice Mr. Harrison's queries in the night-allowance claims when first returned—only observing one mark against the totals, which was rectified. The duty returns were delayed through being unwell, and very busy during race week—a good deal of Court and other duty having to be attended to. As Senior-sergeant Vaughan is now almost quite well again, he hopes in a few days to be able to finish up all arrears of work, and that then he will be no cause of complaint in future.

Were it not for the state of the senior-sergeant's health, the irregularities would not have occurred.

P. L. VAUGHAN,

Senior-sergeant.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 27 June, 1887.

I OBSERVE from the weekly duty returns that Senior-sergeant Vaughan does not insert the hours that he performs any town duty. This will be done for the future, and, moreover, he will be instructed then to appear in uniform, and upon all occasions when out on duty.

E. M. BATTYE,

Superintendent.

To be noted by Senior-sergeant Vaughan and returned.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, 28/6/87. Noted and returned.—P. L. VAUGHAN, Senior-sergeant, 4/7/87. Returned herewith.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, 6/7/87. Captain Battye.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 2 July, 1887.

WILL Mr. Harrison be good enough to expedite the accounts from Narrandera in connection with the recent special relief to Aborigines Jubilee Celebration. Also the return to this office of paid accounts from the same station, forwarded to Senior-sergeant Vaughan for payment on the 29th May last.

E. M. BATTYE.

Telegram from Mr. Inspector Harrison to Senior-sergeant Vaughan.

Wagga Wagga, 6 July.

No weekly duty returns have been received here since 11th June from Narrandera. Senior-sergeant Vaughan will report cause of delay at once.

C. E. HARRISON,

Inspector.

Extra Jubilee rations.—Aborigines accounts re the above have not yet been received from Narrandera, although telegraphed for on the 30th ultimo. No weekly duty returns received since 11th ultimo.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, Wagga Wagga, 6/7/87. Captain Battye, Albury.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan had not time to attend to the duty returns during Jubilee week, and the delay since then was caused through the senior-sergeant's illness.—P. L. VAUGHAN, Senior-sergeant, Narrandera, 6/7/87. Inspector Harrison, Wagga Wagga.

Forwarded for Captain Battye's information; Jubilee week did not commence till the 20th. The return for week ending the 2nd instant has not yet been received. The return for week ending 18th I have had to send back, being full of omissions. For Friday and Saturday, the 17th and 18th, no duty whatever for men and horses was entered or number of rations issued to horses.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, Narrandera, 7/7/87. Superintendent Battye, Albury.

Forwarded by to-day's post all accounts for quarter ending the 30th June. I have kept them back two posts waiting for those from Narrandera, which have not yet arrived. Senior-sergeant Vaughan pays not the least attention to my complaints on this subject, and as I generally have to send them back to him for completion, I am compelled to call Captain Battye's attention to it.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, Wagga Wagga, 8/7/87. Superintendent Battye, Albury.

Mr.

Every other Station Accounts (quarterly) received and posted to Sydney.—E. M. BATTYE, 25 July, 1887.

They have occurred since the 1st January.—E. M. BATTYE

Mr. Superintendent Battye to The Inspector-General of Police.

Albury, 25 July, 1887.

I AM still without the Narrandera quarterly accounts or the Aboriginal Jubilee accounts from Senior-sergeant Vaughan, and the only explanation given is a severe cold since the 25th June, the very day I visited the station, when he was perfectly well. On the 4th instant I called for a medical certificate; not receiving it, I telegraphed a second time; it took the senior-sergeant eleven days before he sent it, and then he sent two. Had I truly known he was unfit to perform his duties I should have caused an efficient senior-constable to have been sent there, but I looked upon it as a trumpety excuse for not having up to then forwarded his quarterly accounts and other accounts. In fact, Inspector-General will see by Inspector Harrison's return attached that the senior-sergeant has been most careless and inattentive to all duties since first of the year—so much so that I deem his removal and disrating necessary as early as possible, to carry out which I would suggest his removal to Corowa, and Sergeant Jones from there to Narrandera.

Sergeant Jones is a strictly steady man, and one I can thoroughly depend upon. To satisfy him on removal from so comfortable a station as Corowa, with his large family, I would strongly recommend him to be made senior-sergeant, which rank Vaughan should lose for his neglect.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

The Inspector-General of Police to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Sydney, 26 July, 1887.

I CANNOT deal so severely with an old officer, who has borne a high character, without some more specific charge proved against him. Senior-sergeant Vaughan should be called upon for his defence. What he has said at present is not unreasonable.

Corowa is almost as important a station as Narrandera, and more distant from observation. Sergeant Jones has twenty-six seniors on the list—some with far stronger claims to promotion. If Captain Battye thinks that Vaughan should be removed I will approve of it, but I have my doubts about Corowa being the best station for him. I should suggest Junee, which is an important place now, and close to Wagga Wagga.

Senior-sergeant

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Narrandera, 21 July, 1887.

SENIOR-SERGEANT did not report Crisp's case, as he did not think it of any importance, and it not being a police prosecution.

P. L. VAUGHAN,
Senior-sergeant.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Narrandera, 6 August, 1887.

SENIOR-SERGEANT VAUGHAN has read these papers, and begs leave to state that he has very little to add in defence to his two reports already attached, which are true.

A series of omissions and neglects are attached by Mr. Inspector Harrison, most of them frivolous and previously explained by the senior-sergeant, which explanations might also be attached. These neglects in almost every case were due to local duty interfering, which could not be neglected; and Senior-sergeant Vaughan would again repeat that very few stations of the strength of Narrandera could show better results, and where the public are better satisfied. Senior-sergeant Vaughan regrets that Captain Battye, for whom the senior-sergeant has the highest regard as a superintendent and a gentleman should doubt the fact of senior-sergeant's illness. The truth is that the sergeant resumed duty before fit for it, and the pressing duty during the month of July, and the worry of memos. re returns and accounts which could not possibly be completed (vide previous report), further delayed matters.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan hopes that the Inspector-General, in making any change, will bear in mind the senior-sergeant's long service, all in Riverina, a very warm climate and expensive to live in, performing important duties, for which he was often complimented by judges, magistrates, and the public, and see fit, if a change desirable, that it should be to an important station, where there would be plenty police duty and court work, the latter being what the senior-sergeant is best fitted for.

P. L. VAUGHAN,
Senior-sergeant.

Mr. Inspector Harrison to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Wagga Wagga, 9 August, 1887.

I HAVE the honor to forward the papers re Senior-sergeant Vaughan, which have come to hand from Narrandera this day.

The removal of Senior-sergeant Vaughan from Narrandera will, I think, be for his own good as well as the district.

C. E. HARRISON,
Inspector.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to The Inspector-General of Police.

Albury, 11 August, 1887.

RATHER than recommend the exchange of stations between Senior-sergeant Vaughan and Senior-constable Johnston of Junee, I would prefer leaving them as they are for the present, trusting that the senior-sergeant will pay more attention to his duties, and show greater dispatch in completing and forwarding all returns and replies to queries. Moreover, Senior-constable Johnston, who has a large family, has only recently moved to, and settled himself at, Junee at great expense, where he has four rooms, whereas at Narrandera there are but two (until new quarters are built) occupied by Senior-sergeant Vaughan, who has no child.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

This may be allowed to stand over for greater convenience.—EDMUND FOSBERY, Inspector-General of Police, Sydney, 12/8/87. Superintendent Battye, Albury.

Mr. Inspector Harrison to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Wagga Wagga, 22 April, 1888.

I AM compelled to again call Captain Battye's attention to the disgraceful laxness of police duties at the Narrandera Station. Up to the present time no quarterly accounts or returns have been received, and it is quite useless my issuing instructions, as Senior-sergeant Vaughan pays not the slightest attention to any censure or admonition, either from the Inspector-General or yourself; mine he has long since disregarded. It is a well-known fact that the best part of his time is passed in public-houses, and that he is more or less constantly in a muddled state. When in the witness-box giving evidence on Friday it was apparent and was noticed by the Crown Prosecutor and others; he also stunk abominably of stale grog. I do not say he was drunk, but his appearance indicated a man who drank heavily and was in a half stupid state.

There is another very serious matter, reflecting on the senior-sergeant and Constable Davison, in a case of rape tried at the late Wagga Assizes, and to which both the Chief Justice and Crown Prosecutor called my attention, the Chief Justice expressing his approval of further inquiry being made at Narrandera at once; so I intend leaving for there in the morning.

The report of the case cannot reach you till Tuesday morning.

C. E. HARRISON,
Inspector.
Mr.

Mr. Inspector Harrison to Captain Battye.

Wagga Wagga, 22 April, 1888.

I HAVE the honor to bring under Captain Battye's notice the following facts connected with a case tried at the Circuit Court here on the 20th instant. James Drewitt (aboriginal) was charged with committing a rape on a child three years old, at Narrandera, on the 1st October last. The prisoner, Drewitt, was arrested by Charles Middleton and Joseph Ross and handed over to Constable Davison, who locked him up. Previous to the arrest Ross caught the prisoner in his tent with only his shirt on, and had a struggle with him and cut him under the right eye, which cut Ross states the prisoner had when in Court the following day; the fact of the cut also appeared on the depositions, but at the trial neither Senior-sergeant Vaughan nor Constable Davison could remember anything about the cut being on the prisoner's face, although both in Court, senior-sergeant conducting the examination. In answer to the Chief Justice Senior-sergeant Vaughan said he could not remember, and Constable Davison said he thought there was a cut but he was not sure. Joseph Ross swore that the prisoner when in his tent was in his shirt only; that he made him dress himself in coat, trousers, and boots—he had no hat. The prisoner afterwards escaped from Ross and was re-arrested by Ross and Middleton, and handed over to Constable Davison, but in answer to the Crown Prosecutor Davison could not remember how the prisoner was dressed, or whether he had anything on other than a shirt and trousers. He stated the prisoner was bareheaded, and on being questioned by the Crown Prosecutor about the prisoner's hat he said the prisoner had lost it up the road in the struggle. Now as the defence set up by the counsel for the prisoner was mistaken identity, the corroboration of Ross's evidence by the police was of vital importance, and the Chief Justice commented on this strange loss of memory in his address to the jury. Directly after the trial I questioned Joseph Ross in the presence of Senior-sergeant Vaughan and Constable Davison; Ross there informed me he had found a strange felt hat the morning after the rape under the bed where the child was sleeping, and he gave it to Constable Davison the same day, telling him the particulars. In reply to my question on this subject Constable Davison admitted its truth, and that he had taken the hat to the prisoner in the yard of the lockup and given it to him. The prisoner said, "I've got a better one and don't want it," and threw it away. He, Constable Davison, did not know where the hat was now, nor did he or any other constable make any inquiry as to the ownership of the hat. He could not say what hat the prisoner wore down to Wagga; and on inquiry at the gaol here I found it was an old one, which had been thrown away the morning after the prisoner's arrival, and of which the gaol officials could give no description. On my questioning Senior-sergeant Vaughan on the subject of the hat, he said, "This is the first I have heard of it. It was not my case." It is meant from the above that neither Senior-sergeant Vaughan nor Constable Davison troubled themselves the least in seeking for evidence to prove the guilt or innocence of the accused; they simply took the man into custody when arrested by Ross and Middleton, and had the child examined by a medical man; and had it not been for the blood on the lower part of the blackfellow's shirt, I am sure the jury would have given him the benefit of the doubt as to identification, and so prove the remissness or incapacity of the police in charge of the case. A terrible crime would have gone unpunished; and even now the prisoner, though guilty, may escape hanging through this culpable conduct of the police. The hat found in Ross' tent belonged, no doubt, to the offending blackfellow, if not the prisoner some other, and every effort ought to have been made to trace the owner. In a conversation with the Chief Justice, after the trial, he expressed himself strongly in the case, and concurred in my going to Narrandera and making further inquiry. The Crown Prosecutor directed me to bring the matter under Captain Battye's notice.

C. E. HARRISON,

Inspector.

Mr. Inspector Harrison to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Wagga Wagga, 30 April, 1888.

I HAVE the honor to forward herewith several statements made re the prisoner James Drewitt, now under sentence of death for a rape on Louisa Ross, a child of 3 years old, at Narrandera, on the 1st October, 1887.

In consequence of remarks made by his Honor the Chief Justice and the Crown Prosecutor, I proceeded to Narrandera, on the 24th instant, to inquire into the action taken by the police in connection with this case, and I find that the want of energy and positive neglect in Senior-sergeant Vaughan and Constable Davison, in not procuring the evidence to bring the charge home to the offender, is most disgraceful.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan evidently never troubled himself about the matter re my former statement—"That it was not his case"—and Constable Davison actually kept back evidence (the finding of the hat) of the greatest importance; and, further, if the statement of Ross and the woman Roberts are to be believed, he has lied about it on every occasion when questioned since.

Then, as regards the cut on Drewitt's cheek, Constable Bell, who was lockup-keeper at the time, and who is a sober constable, saw the cut at the time, and denies Constable Davison's statement about the hat in toto. The gin, Queanbeyan Nellie, left in charge of the child by the mother on the night of the outrage, was never spoken to by the police, and she was about Narrandera for months afterwards, but is now somewhere near Queanbeyan. There is one significant fact, that the first place the man Ross goes to, to look for a constable, when he has Drewitt in custody, is a public-house, and he there finds the police-tracker.

Not only on account of this case, but from the many matters I have brought under Captain Battye's notice re this station, I do again most urgently recommend the removal of Senior-sergeant Vaughan, for in his constantly muddled state he is quite unfit to have charge of a station.

C. E. HARRISON,

Inspector.

[Enclosures.]

REPORT.

28 April, 1888.

CONSTABLE BELL begs to report for the information of Inspector Harrison, re the attached, that when Constable Davison brought Drewitt to the lockup on the night in question Drewitt had neither hat or boots, and the constable did notice a slight cut or scratch on Drewitt's right cheek, about midway between the cheek-bone and ear, which appears to have been bleeding slightly, but the constable does not remember Constable Davison bringing a hat of any description and giving it to Drewitt, nor did Drewitt ever throw a hat away while at the lockup. The constable also begs to state that when Drewitt was taken before the Court on the Monday following he was still without hat or boots.

BELL,

Constable (1st Class).

STATEMENTS.

STATEMENTS.

CONSTABLE JAMES F. DAVISON states:—That the hat Ross gave me he said he found in his tent on the Sunday; I took it to the lockup and said to Constable Bell, "Here's a hat found there I believe belongs to the prisoner"; I can't say whether the prisoner was in the cell or the exercise yard at the time I gave the hat to the prisoner; I cannot recollect what the prisoner said in reply, or what he did with the hat; I never saw the hat to my knowledge afterwards; on the Sunday morning I went to Roberts' tent as I was going to the train, and told him and his wife to bring the child to the Police Court on Monday morning; I also told Middleton (who was there); I went to them on my own account; I was not sent; I saw Queanbeyan Nellie in town under the influence of liquor twice on the Saturday night, and I ordered her off to the camp; I think she was camped near and on the other side of the show-ground; I don't know where Drewitt was camped; I cannot say when Drewitt was given into my custody by Roberts whether he had boots on, or how he was dressed; he had on some kind of trousers and shirt; I think he had a coat on and no boots; he struggled all the way to the lockup; I handed him over to Constable Bell a few minutes before midnight; when I spoke about the hat in Court I meant the prisoner must have lost it up the road in the struggle, as he had none on when I arrested him; I made no inquiry as to who the hat belonged to found in Roberts' tent; I only asked the prisoner; I cannot now recollect what the prisoner said; what I told you in Wagga about the conversation I had with the prisoner about the hat was incorrect; I cannot remember anything about it, or what became of it; he may have worn it when removed to Wagga Gaol; I escorted the prisoner to Wagga; Queanbeyan Nellie was about the town till a few weeks ago; I was told by Mrs. Roberts the child was left in Nellie's care (the next morning); I don't remember speaking to her (Nellie) about it; I don't know whether any other constables spoke to Nellie about it; Nellie was not a witness; I don't know of any other making inquiry into the evidence in the case; I cannot recollect whether the prisoner claimed the hat or did not claim the hat when I took it to the lockup.

25th April, 1888.

JAMES F. DAVISON.

TRACKER DICK WESTON states:—On the night of the assault there were three camps of blacks, about sixty in all, within half a mile of Roberts' tent; they had met to hold a corroboree; Drewitt belonged to the camp of Singleton and Narrabri blacks; I saw Drewitt the same evening before the assault; he was dressed in dirty moleskin trousers, a bluish kind of coat, old boots, and a brown felt hat (old); I never saw that hat afterwards; the hat the prisoner Drewitt went to Wagga Gaol in was an old black shell hat; the night (Saturday) of the outrage, between 8 and 9 o'clock, I met Ross in town; he asked me if I could take a man in charge; I said, "No"; he did not say what for; I never heard of Drewitt's case till after it was over in the Police Court; I never was told to make any inquiry about the case; I believe I could have got evidence if I had been told to do so; I was on intimate terms with all the blacks camped here; the mob Drewitt came with left about a fortnight afterwards.

25th April, 1888.

RICHARD WESTON.

GEORGE ALLAN (Aboriginal) states:—I belong to Narrabri, and have camped here about six months; our camp is over by the show-ground; on Saturday, the 1st October, Drewitt and I knocked off work, chopping wood, and came into town; as we passed Roberts' tent (at the back), and when about 100 yards away, Mrs. Roberts whistled and beckoned to Drewitt, who turned back and went to her; he did not go into the tent; he stopped about ten minutes; as I was coming back from purchasing tucker I gave him (Drewitt) a shilling, and cautioned him not to go back to Mrs. Roberts, as he might get into trouble; I said this, as Drewitt told me what she wanted; I did not see him go back to the tent; I did not see him afterwards; I was looking for him all the night; I heard of his arrest the same night; he wore on that night dirty moleskin trousers, blue coat, boots, and hat; I would know the hat if I saw it; the police have never asked me anything about Drewitt or the case; I have not heard of them asking any of the blacks; Queanbeyan Nellie camped with us near the show-ground and on the other side; Nellie did not come back to our camp at all that night—she was away drinking; our camp numbered about a dozen; the other blacks were camped on the flat; I don't associate with them, as I don't drink; my children are at the Mission; my wife and I camp here; I can earn 8s. a day chopping wood; I cannot write.

25th April, 1888.

GEORGE ALLAN.

JOSEPH ROSS states:—On the night of Saturday, the 1st October, 1887, I was knocking off work (wood-cutting); went home to my tent, which was used by Mrs. Roberts and the child; when about 100 yards from the tent I heard the child screaming and calling "dada"; I dropped what I had in my hand (rations) and ran over to the tent and said, "Who is here?" when half in and half out of the tent I struck a match, but, before I could see who it was, someone dashed at my throat; I drew back and struck him on the face with my fist; he tumbled over a box on the ground; I then struck another match, and by its light I saw the man was a blackfellow; I made him dress himself; he was in his shirt only, and said he was doing nothing; I kept on striking matches till he had put on his clothes; his clothes consisted of trousers and coat; I can't say whether he had boots; he had no hat; not knowing that anything had happened to the child I was about letting him go, when he said, "I'll fetch the tribu down and give you a hiding"; I said, "What?" and closed with him, intending to take him to the lockup; we fought for about five minutes; finding I could not take him I asked him to come to Foley's public-house and have a drink (Foley's was in the direction of the barracks); when we got to within a few yards of Foley's he stopped and refused to go any further, and haunted off and hit me, knocking me down, and then ran away; I ran round another road to try and meet him, but failed to do so, so I went back to the tent and found the child sleeping and quiet, so I left again and went and sat on the fence; a few minutes afterwards Middleton came up and told me about the child screaming before, and having seen a blackfellow on the bed with the child; I then for the first time thought something might have happened the child, and we started to look for him, and we met him coming from the town and going in the direction of his camp; he was dressed the same; I cannot say whether he had boots on, but he had no hat; I cannot possibly be mistaken in the identity of the man, as, while he was dressing himself in the tent, I noticed an old scar on the left cheek-bone under the eye; he also had the cut on the right cheek, close under the eye, which I gave him in the tent; there was blood on it; when Middleton and I met him, we collared him and took him towards the lockup; he struggled to get away; we met Constable Davison on the road, and I gave the prisoner in charge for being in my tent undressed and alongside of the child; neither Middleton or I went into the lockup, but after the prisoner was locked up, Constable Davison told me to go back and see if the child had been interfered with; Constable Davison did not go with me; when I got to the tent I found the mother, Kate Roberts, sitting in the tent, crying; she told me about the child being injured, and I examined the child; I then started back for the lockup, and met Senior-sergeant Vaughan in the street; I told him about it, and he said to fetch the child up to the chemist; I did so, but the chemist was closed; I then went and fetched the sergeant again, and he returned with me and knocked the chemist up (Daval); the only question Senior-sergeant Vaughan asked me about the case, or anyone in my hearing, was who was the father of the child, and who was with her in charge, at the time of the occurrence, while I and the mother was away, and I told him Black Nellie; I did not see the sergeant again till he came to the tent with the doctor (Mitchell) about 8 o'clock on the next night; Constable Davison called at the tent on the Sunday, and told Mrs. Roberts and me to be at the Police Court the next morning, and take the child with us; neither the senior-sergeant nor any other constable asked me any particulars about the case, and the first account of it I gave was my evidence before the Court on the Monday.

By Inspector:—The case was heard with closed doors; Senior-sergeant Vaughan conducted the examination; I cannot say what other constable was present in Court; when asked how I identified the prisoner, I said by the cut under his eye; I meant the scar under the left eye, but he also had the cut on the right cheek, which showed quite fresh in Court; I had never seen the prisoner to my knowledge before the Saturday night; it was while going to Foley's with the prisoner that, in passing another public-house, I asked the landlord if any of the police were there; he said the tracker was, and he called him out; I asked the tracker to lock the prisoner up; he said he could not, and advised Drewitt to go home; I found a brown felt hat and part of a bottle of beer in our tent on the Sunday morning; Kate Roberts was present; the same day I showed Davison the hat and bottle, and offered them to him at the tent; he did not take them; he said something, I don't recollect what; some days afterwards I noticed tracks of a horse up to the tent, and Kate told me Constable Davison had been for the blackfellow's hat; I was not asked any questions about the hat in Court, and I gave no evidence about it.

28th April, 1888.

JOSEPH ROSS.

CHARLES

CHARLES MIDDLETON states:—It was about 10 o'clock on the night of the Saturday, the 1st October, 1887, I think, that I heard Roberts' child crying; I was in the paddock looking for my horse; I went over to the tent and saw and heard what I have stated before the two Courts; the night was showery, but the moon shone out bright at times; it did so when I was at the opening of the tent, and I had a good opportunity to see the man when he rushed at me with the bottle; the man was the prisoner Drewitt; I am positive of that; Drewitt had his clothes on—trousers and coat; he was dressed the same when Ross and I arrested him; the prisoner had no hat on in the tent or when we arrested him; I cannot say positively whether Drewitt had boots on in the tent or when we arrested him and handed him over to Constable Davison; I noticed a fresh cut on the prisoner's cheek, it was bleeding slightly; I noticed the same cut on prisoner's cheek in Court the Monday following; I do not know anything about a hat or a bottle of beer being found in Roberts' tent the next day; when I left the tent the blackfellow was still there; I went to look for Ross to tell him what had occurred, and on returning towards the tent I saw Ross sitting on the fence of Ferniers' paddock; I told him, and we proceeded to look for the blackfellow, and found him coming along the Wagga Road from the direction of the town; Ross and I collared the prisoner; I said to Ross, "This is the man I caught in your tent, and I believe he has committed a rape on your child"; the prisoner replied, "Well, I don't know, I was drunk"; the prisoner tried violently to escape; Constable Davison came up and asked what the row was about; Ross said, "This man was in my tent stripped, with a child, and I give him in charge"; on the road to the lockup Drewitt kept repeating, "You can't charge me"; Ross told me afterwards the child had been left in charge of Black Nellie; I saw Black Nellie about town that night drunk; I don't think I ever saw Drewitt before that night; I am not in the habit of drinking; I was perfectly sober; no questions were asked me by any of the police about the case at any time; when the blackfellow was locked up I told Constable Bell and Davison about hearing the child cry in the tent; they told me to go back and see if anything was the matter with the child; we (Ross and I) did so, and he found Mrs. Roberts sitting in the tent crying; she said, "Oh, Joe, look at Louie" (the child); Ross and I then made back for the lockup, and on the road saw Senior-sergeant Vaughan in the street, and we told him about it; he said we were to take the child to the chemist; we fetched the child there, and soon afterwards Senior-sergeant Vaughan came up, and knocked the chemist up, who examined the child; while in the chemist's shop I told Senior-sergeant Vaughan all I knew of the case, and he told all of us to come down on the Monday morning to Court, and bring the child with us; in cross-examination Drewitt asked me, "Did not you ask me to go down to the public-house and you'd shout for me?" I replied, "No, I never shouted for a blackfellow in my life"; I believe this is in the depositions.

C. D. MIDDLETON.

3rd May, 1888.

KATE ROBERTS states:—I was camped at Narrandera in a tent on the 1st October, 1887; the tent was occupied by me, Ross, and the child; Ross had not come home when I left the tent at 8 o'clock that night; I left Queanbeyan Nellie in the tent with the child; the child was in bed; the tent was 10 feet by 12 feet, and the bed was made of boxes, and stood on the right-hand side of the door; the head was farthest from the door; I had known Nellie about a week; she came about 6 o'clock, and asked me to let her leave some Government rations she had received, as it was raining, and she had tea, and stopped till I went out at 8 o'clock; I gave her half-a-crown, and told her to stop till I came back; I have never spoken to her since; she was about the Court when the blackfellow was committed for trial; I did not get back to the tent on the Saturday night till after 11 o'clock; there was only the child there; she was sitting up in bed crying; I went up to her; she speaks very imperfectly; she lifted her chemise and put her hand on her stomach; I saw it was all over blood; Ross came in directly afterwards, and I told him, and we took her to the chemist (Duval), and he examined her; Senior-sergeant Vaughan was present, and asked me who was in charge of the child; I told him Nellie; he asked me if I encouraged the blacks; I told him no; Senior-sergeant Vaughan came to the tent the next night with the Dr. (Mitchell), and examined the child; neither the senior-sergeant or any other constable made any inquiry of me about the particulars of the case, or what I knew about it; on the Sunday morning Constable Davison rode up to the tent, and told Ross and I to be at the Court the next morning; on the morning after the prisoner was arrested Ross and I found a dark felt hat under the bed, and part of (a brandy bottle) a bottle of beer in the tent; they did not belong to us; I on the same day, when Constable Davison called to tell us to go to Court, showed him the hat and beer, and told him where I found them; he (Davison) said, "Let them stop till another time"; the day the prisoner left Narrandera for Wagga Gaol, Constable Davison came to the tent and asked me for the blackfellow's hat; I gave it to him; it was before the train left for Wagga; it was from 2 to half-past 2 in the afternoon; I don't recollect speaking to the prisoner as he passed my tent on the Saturday afternoon; to the best of my belief I never saw him before; the doctor told me to remove the chemise from the child on the Saturday night; I did so, and gave it to Senior-sergeant Vaughan; I want to correct the first part; Ross and I left the tent together at 8 o'clock.

KATE ROBERTS.

Wagga Wagga, 29th April, 1888.

WARDER DAVID OLIVER, Wagga Wagga Gaol:—Prisoner James Drewitt was received from the Narrandera police on the 6th October, 1887; he was wearing an old, torn, brown felt hat, to the best of my belief; he wore the hat for a considerable time after he had been received; it was thrown into the rubbish can as being useless, and supplied from gaol store with a gaol hat.

I would have called for this before, only I expected further report from Inspector Harrison.—
E.M.B.

As I have posted to-day the further report of this case, I return these papers to Captain Battye, instead of sending them on to Senior-sergeant Vaughan.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, Wagga Wagga, 30 April, 1888. Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 30 April, 1888.

FORWARDED to Senior-sergeant Vaughan for explanation, reminding him of the Inspector-General's remarks dated 11th July last, wherein he states:—"Sergeant Vaughan should be informed in what respect he has been neglectful, and warned that he cannot expect to retain his position in the Force if he does not evince greater attention and energy." This was read to Senior-sergeant Vaughan by Mr. Harrison, and returned to me on 22nd July.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

Forwarded to Senior-sergeant Vaughan, Narrandera.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, 1 May, 1888.

Mr.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Senior-sergeant Vaughan.

Albury, 2 May, 1888.

As it appears that no statement of Senior-sergeant Vaughan's was taken on this inquiry, or that he was present during the same, I forward the entire papers for his perusal, and require an immediate answer, and whatever explanation he may have to offer for the gross dereliction of duty therein described, before I forward them to Acting Inspector-General for his information and that of His Honor the Chief Justice.

E. M. BATTYE,
Superintendent.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Police Station, Wagga Wagga, 4 May, 1888.

SENIOR-SERGEANT VAUGHAN begs to report in reply to Mr. Inspector Harrison's report of the 22nd April last—

(1.) With reference to the cut on prisoner's face, it must have been a very small scar when the doctor who examined him could not notice it, and Constable Bell, who was the closest, says it was a slight cut or scratch which would not be very noticeable; the following day, however, Ross identified him from the mark, and that was sufficient.

(2.) Mr. Harrison makes a mistake as to what Senior-sergeant Vaughan stated about the hat. This is the first we have heard of it—it was not mentioned in the case. Senior-sergeant Vaughan considered every case is his when he conducts the prosecution.

(3.) As to what was done to obtain evidence, now what was done as soon as Senior-sergeant Vaughan heard of the case he directed the child to be brought to Duval's chemist shop to be examined by Mr. Duval in the absence of the doctor, the senior-sergeant being present, and on arrival of the doctor took him to examine the child again, and procured the chemise worn by the child, which was produced in evidence, then took him to examine the prisoner, and procured the shirt which prisoner wore, which was the strongest corroborative evidence for the prosecution, and which secured his conviction. It is unfortunate that Constable Davison did not secure the hat and mention the matter to the senior-sergeant, when all the necessary inquiry would have been made, but the constable was inexperienced, not being long in the Service.

(4.) Now, as to Senior-sergeant Vaughan not troubling himself about the matter, what are the facts—Middleton states, while in the chemist's I told the senior-sergeant all I knew about the case, and he told us all to be down to the Court on Monday morning; Senior-sergeant Vaughan made note of all the particulars from Middleton, Ross, and the woman Roberts, which Mr. Duval, the chemist, can prove. The statement of the latter two witnesses is not correct in this respect. Senior-sergeant Vaughan also saw Nellie, the black gin, and asked her why she left the child alone in the tent; she merely said she was lonely and could not stay—she could not give any evidence bearing on the case.

A statement of the tracker and Allen, the aboriginal, could not bear on the case unless the hat was introduced into it; had it, the senior-sergeant would have made every inquiry in that direction; the witnesses Ross and Roberts were to blame not mentioning the finding of the hat to Senior-sergeant Vaughan, as they could see he was trying to find out all the particulars of the case.

In conclusion, Senior-sergeant Vaughan most respectfully submits that he has done all he could in connection with the case, and that he is free from all blame in the matter.

P. L. VAUGHAN,
Senior-sergeant.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Wagga Wagga, 4 May, 1888.

SENIOR-SERGEANT VAUGHAN begs to report with reference to Mr. Inspector Harrison's report, of the 30th ultimo, that he went through all the statements in the correspondence attached, and fails to find in it any want of energy or any neglect which is not explained fully in first report of this date.

As to what the senior-sergeant done is also explained, and nothing more could be done unless the hat mentioned was produced to the senior-sergeant. He could not anticipate a hat to be in existence unless it was shown to him. Senior-sergeant Vaughan did not say it was not his case. What he said was the hat was not in the case. Of course, the hat would be a strong ingredient in the case.

Re the gin, Nellie, see first report. As to where Ross went to ask for the police, that is his business. If he went to the barracks he could have found them. He found one afterwards in his proper place.

As to the senior-sergeant being constantly in a muddled state, that he most emphatically denies. And as to being not able to take charge of a station, the senior-sergeant has done so for many years, and with as good results as any man of his rank in the Colony.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan hopes Captain Battye will carefully consider the whole matter, and fairly lay it before the Inspector-General.

P. L. VAUGHAN,
Senior-sergeant.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to The Acting Inspector-General of Police.

Wagga Wagga, 4 May, 1888.

I HEREWITH transmit to Acting Inspector-General Inspector Harrison's reports and proceedings of inquiry made by him relative to the charge of rape versus Aboriginal Drewitt, tried at Wagga on Friday, April 20, also Senior-sergeant Vaughan's explanation to each of those reports, as called for by me on 2nd instant. My opinion is, that I consider great blame is attributable to the careless and indifferent way in which Senior-sergeant Vaughan got up the case, in not sifting the most important evidence of identification, or exerting himself in any way to obtain it prior to committal, apparently because offender was arrested by civilians, hence he stated to Inspector Harrison, "It was not my case." A senior-sergeant who thus acts is, in my opinion, totally unfit to have charge of a station, nor can one expect him to instruct or set a proper example to young constables, but rather to ruin smart and intelligent ones desirous of performing their duties.

The

The Acting Inspector-General is aware that this senior-sergeant has had previous warnings from the Inspector-General regarding neglect of duty, and I have moreover officially and privately cautioned him what the result of such neglect must inevitably be.

Up to this moment I have not received the Narrandera March quarter accounts; all from the other stations long since received, examined, and posted to Sydney on the 20th ultimo.

Sydney, 5 May, 1888.

Re Drewitt, rape.—Yourself and the constable, or constables (it said two constables), are required in Sydney early Tuesday morning next, to appear before the Executive Council, with reference to Drewitt's identity. A report of all the facts tending to establish identity will also be required; this should reach me on Monday. I am informed a second constable can afford some information on the matter. Reply whether yourself and constables can be here.

Mr. Superintendent Battye to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Albury, 5 May, 1888.

ON arrival here, received following from Acting Inspector-General:—"Have received reports re Drewitt. They relate mainly to misconduct of police. Executive desire to be certain with regard to offender's identity. What is wanted is brief report of evidence on this point; if there be any circumstances tending to disprove identity they should be noticed. No reference need be made to police negligence, which can be dealt with separately." I have informed him that a witness accompanies you who corroborates witness Ross, and who was not examined on point at trial. That you will explain all on Monday morning.

The Acting Inspector-General of Police to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Sydney, 5 May, 1888.

Reports to Colonial Secretary for information of the Executive Council re Drewitt's identity on 7th May, 1888.

HAVE received reports re Drewitt. They relate mainly to misconduct on part of police. The Executive Council desire to be certain with regard to offender's identity. What is wanted is a brief report of the evidence on this point. If there be any circumstances tending to disprove identity, they should be noticed. No reference need be made in this report to police negligence, which can be dealt with separately.

GEO. READ,
Acting Inspector-General of Police.

Mr. Inspector Harrison to The Acting Inspector-General of Police.

Wagga Wagga, 5 May, 1888.

I HAVE the honor to report, for the information of the Acting Inspector-General of Police, re Drewitt, aboriginal, now under sentence of death for rape, that I proceeded to Narrandera, where the offence was committed, on the 23rd ultimo, and made every inquiry, but failed to obtain any information as to the probability of some other blackfellow being the offender. On the contrary, the further evidence is strongly against the prisoner.

George Allan (a most intelligent aboriginal) warned the prisoner the same evening not to go to the woman Roberts' tent.

Charles Middleton, who first heard the child cry, could have confirmed the evidence of Joseph Ross as to the cut on the prisoner's face (given by Ross in the tent) being visible when he was arrested, and when appearing in Court on the Monday following.

Constable Bell, who was lock-up keeper at Narrandera at the time, also confirms the statement of the cut. Both Bell and Middleton have furnished statements, and they are also ordered to Sydney in case they should be required. I may mention that a hat and a pale-brandy bottle containing beer was found by Ross and the woman Roberts in the tent the morning after the outrage. These were handed to the police, but were not put in evidence, although the hat, a brown felt one, answered the description of the one the prisoner was in the habit of wearing and had on the same evening.

The gin, Queanbeyan Nellie, had left Narrandera before my arrival for her own district (Queanbeyan), so I was unable to question her as to the prisoner coming to the tent before she left it. Roberts and Ross state they left the child in her charge when they left the tent at 8 o'clock that night.

C. E. HARRISON,
Inspector.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan to Mr. Inspector Harrison.

Narrandera, 15 May, 1888.

SENIOR-SERGEANT Vaughan begs leave to report, re Mr. Inspector Harrison's report of the 22nd ultimo, that the delay in forwarding accounts and returns was caused (as already explained) by the difficulty in getting medical and aboriginal accounts, and other claimants being absent from home, thereby delaying the completion of the accounts.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan pays every attention to the orders and instructions received from his superior officers, but some cannot have immediate attention for many reasons—the inability to complete inquiry necessary for report, &c.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan denies being a frequenter of public houses and constantly in a muddled state, and that his general appearance does not bear out any such assertion.

As to the time the Senior-sergeant gave evidence at the Wagga Circuit Court, the Senior-sergeant denies in toto Mr. Harrison's accusation, as he, the Senior-sergeant, had not tasted grog of any kind that day. There were several well-known respectable people in the Court, and on the jury, who can state impartially the Senior-sergeant's general appearance and demeanour.

As to the Crown Prosecutor making any remarks, the Senior-sergeant would have grave doubts about it if not supported by word of mouth in the Senior-sergeant's hearing, or in writing from himself. During the sitting of the Court, the Senior-sergeant had constant communication with the Crown Prosecutor, who at all times was courteous.

The other part of Mr. Harrison's report is already dealt with in Senior-sergeant Vaughan's previous report, re Drewitt case. This report was delayed to enable Senior-sergeant Vaughan to get an expression of opinion from some persons on the jury and in the Court at the time Mr. Harrison makes this gross charge.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan would respectfully beg of Captain Battye that in submitting this correspondence to the Acting Inspector-General, with the Inspector-General's minute of 11th July last, that he would also request him to read previous and subsequent complaints by Mr. Harrison, Senior-sergeant Vaughan's replies, and the Inspector-General's decisions thereon.

P. L. VAUGHAN,
Senior-sergeant.

Forwarded. This explanation, called for by Captain Battye, has been sixteen days reaching this Station.—C. E. HARRISON, Inspector, Wagga Wagga, 17/5/88.

Forwarded to the Acting Inspector-General of Police, vide previous papers. My full impression is that it would be very much better if Senior-sergeant Vaughan was removed to some other district, vide Defaulters' Sheet.—E. M. BATTYE, Superintendent. Albury, 18/5/88. The Acting Inspector-General of Police.

I see no reason for altering my decision with regard to Sergeant Vaughan. These papers to be placed with others.—GEO. READ, Acting Inspector-General of Police, 19/5/88. To Captain Battye, Albury.

Captain and Superintendent.

The Acting Inspector-General of Police to Mr. Superintendent Battye.

Sydney, 17 May, 1888.

No case has ever come under my notice in which neglect, mismanagement, and want of energy were so conspicuous as in this instance. The moment Senior-sergeant Vaughan became aware that a crime of such exceptional atrocity had been committed, he should either have taken charge of the case himself or carefully instructed Constable Davison with regard to procuring evidence, &c.; but he manifested so little interest in his duty that he did not even trouble himself to accompany the man, Ross, to bring the child to the chemist to ascertain the extent of the injury it had sustained. Every witness (including Constable Davison) in so important a matter should have been carefully examined before going into court, not only for the purpose of ascertaining what they were prepared to prove, but also to discover whether there was any defect in the evidence which required to be supplied. Had this been done, information of the hat having been found in the tent would in all probability have been elicited.

The apathy and indifference shown after the Police Court investigations appear to me to be quite as inexcusable as that manifested previously, as the necessity for every legitimate means to strengthen the evidence of identification could not fail to be apparent to any person of ordinary intelligence. The fact of the offender being without a hat should of itself have suggested the probability of its having been left in the tent or lost in the scuffle, and have led to careful inquiry and search by the police, but no steps appear to have been taken to obtain additional evidence.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan's conduct in the matter from beginning to end certainly goes far to support Mr. Harrison's statement that his mind is in such a condition as to prevent him performing his duty efficiently. Any trouble and anxiety the Executive Government may have experienced in coming to a decision in the case, and the expense of bringing four witnesses to Sydney, is attributable to the negligence of the police, for which Senior-sergeant Vaughan is mainly responsible. When matters of such vital importance are neglected, it is not surprising that his officers have to complain of his inattention to the ordinary duties of his station, and that they express the opinion that he is entirely unfit to continue in his present position.

With

With regard to Constable Davison, although his gross negligence has some excuse in his not having been properly instructed, I have some doubt whether he is mentally fit for the Police Service. His want of ordinary observation in failing to notice how or to what extent the offender was dressed, and his forgetfulness of important matters connected with the case when giving evidence at the trial, together with his admission that a statement he made to his Inspector was entirely incorrect, indicate an amount of inattention and indifference that are without example in my experience. The exercise of the most ordinary common sense in collecting the evidence would have prevented many of the mistakes. In December last Senior-sergeant Vaughan was admonished by the Inspector-General, and informed that if again reported for neglect, he would not be retained in his present position. He is reduced to the rank of 2nd class sergeant, and will be at once removed to another station, where he can be more frequently visited by an officer than he has been of late.

Constable Davison is fined £2 for his gross misconduct in connection with the case, and will be removed. He should, if practicable, be brought to Wagga Wagga, and if, after a few months, he does not show a marked improvement in aptitude for his work, he will have to be discharged.

Captain Battye will select a thoroughly trustworthy man for Narrandera. It is, I think, immaterial whether he is a sergeant or senior-constable, if he possess the necessary qualifications.

D. Turner, Esq., to G. R. Dibbs, Esq., M.P.

Dear Mr. Dibbs,

Narrandera, 22 May, 1888.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan, who is in charge of this town, called on me to-day, and represented the great injustice that has been administered to him by the report of some of his superior officers, in connection with the framing and accumulating evidence of the aboriginal Drewitt's case, who is now under sentence of death, the report being of such a nature to cause his immediate removal, also to be disgraced in rank. All Mr. Vaughan asks is that he may have an opportunity to reply to numerous condemning paragraphs in such report, also to bring evidence. He is then perfectly willing that the case be dealt with fairly and impartially.

It is a great blow to such an old public servant as Vaughan, who has been twenty-five years in the police. He has always been known here as a most diligent and conscientious officer. A general feeling of regret prevails at his misfortune, and am sure he would come out of an investigation perfectly clear, as several of our most prominent townsmen were got by the sergeant in properly working the case up.

I would deem it a particular favour if you would kindly mention this to the Minister of Justice, and get him to reopen the case with the object of enabling Vaughan to defend himself.

Apologising for troubling you.

I am, &c.,

D. TURNER.

The

The Acting Inspector-General of Police to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sydney, 30 May, 1888.

SENIOR-SERGEANT Vaughan's conduct has been very unsatisfactory for a long time past, and he was informed by the Inspector-General, only a few months ago, that if he was again complained of he would not be permitted to retain his rank. His gross neglect of duty in connection with the case of the aboriginal Drewitt, in failing to obtain and submit to the magistrates material evidence which was available for the prosecution, necessitated the bringing of four persons to Sydney, to be examined by the Executive, before the case of the offender could be satisfactorily disposed of.

Superintendent Battye and Inspector Harrison have repeatedly complained of his gross negligence and inattention, and represented him to be in a constant state of muddle. In his own interests and those of the public and the Department alike, I considered it necessary to remove him from Narrandera and reduce him to the rank of an ordinary sergeant. He has been afforded ample opportunity of replying to all these complaints made against him.

Sir,

Narrandera, 28 May, 1888.

We, the undersigned residents of Narrandera and district, have the honor to bring under your notice the following facts, and ask you to kindly give the same your favourable consideration:—

- (1.) Senior-sergeant Vaughan has been in charge of Narrandera station for the past five years, and as far as we are aware has satisfactorily carried out the duties of his office.
- (2.) We hear with great regret that he is under orders for transfer, and it comes on us as a surprise to hear that he is not only to be removed but also reduced in grade.
- (3.) We venture to think if Senior-sergeant Vaughan is afforded the opportunity, he can satisfactorily account for any apparent laches of duty.
- (4.) While not presuming to interfere with departmental regulations, we desire to place upon record our esteem and appreciation of Senior-sergeant Vaughan's services.

Respectfully soliciting your kind reconsideration of the matter.

In acknowledging the receipt of your petition of the 28th instant, I beg to inform you that Sergeant Vaughan's removal from Narrandera has been decided upon after very mature consideration, and is deemed necessary in his own interests and those of the public and the Department alike. He has been afforded ample opportunity of replying to the complaint made against him. I regret, therefore, that I cannot reconsider my decision.

The Acting Inspector-General of Police to G. R. Dibbs, Esq., M.P.

Sir,

Sydney, 31 May, 1888.

With reference to the letter addressed to you by Mr. R. H. Ferrier, of Narrandera, respecting the transfer of Sergeant Vaughan from that place, I beg to state that the sergeant's removal has been decided upon after careful consideration, alike in his own interest and that of the public and the Department. He is being sent to a better station, but does not appear to understand that the change will be to his advantage.

I have, &c.,
GEO. READ,
Acting Inspector-General of Police.

6th May, 1888.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 11 September, 1893.

I beg you will pardon me for again addressing you with reference to my case, and beg to repeat a statement in my letter of the 18th January last, the unjust treatment I received at the hands of Captain Battye and the late Mr. Inspector Harrison, at Narrandera, in May, 1888, ruined my prospects in the service, and the worry and annoyance caused thereby entirely undermined my health, which caused all my subsequent troubles, and would have driven many a man into a lunatic asylum.

At that time I had twenty-three years' service, and a career of usefulness and efficiency which few men of my rank in the service had.

The three addresses (copies attached) are sufficient proof from the public, and they can be borne out by ex-Superintendent Brown the present Superintendent Brennan, and Sub-Inspector Baker, now of Kempsey. One or other of them were close observers of my conduct in the service for over twenty years previously.

At the time I speak of, Narrandera was very busy, I had only three constables and a lock-up-keeper all inexperienced, one of whom caused all the trouble that was charged to me, and which the best officer in the service placed in my position could not avert, and I was cunningly kept from coming to Sydney when I could have successfully justified myself before the Executive Council, and was refused an impartial inquiry which I strenuously tried to obtain, see Exhibits (A, B, C, and E attached), I was only refused leave of absence which I was entitled to (see Exhibit D), by which I lost household property which I could have saved, value £500, together with the terrible pecuniary loss my reduction and removal entailed, my application for leave of absence is amongst the records of your office.

About that time I applied for a foot senior-constable at Narrandera, which was badly required, but was refused, being objected to by Mr. Harrison, but strange to say there is one stationed there now, and for some time past when the work is considerably less which the criminal returns can show. During all the time I was in the Murray District, neither Mr. Harrison nor Captain Battye made an adverse entry in my books on their inspections, but what do we find after I left Germanton, Captain Battye takes his clerk to Germanton to examine my Clerk of Petty Session books.

The idea of Captain Battye thinking he could find out any dishonesty in my accounts, who could produce living evidence of my honesty from infancy. See what the Treasury Inspector says of my public accounts (copy attached), and Mr. T. A. Brown, Police Magistrate, who are infinitely better judges than Captain Battye.

This visit to Germanton was, no doubt, intended, and did cause some scare as to the state of my public accounts. Why not do this while I was on the scene, to explain if necessary? No. Captain Battye did all he could to get me away before I had time to complete my accounts. See the papers in the case where he imperatively ordered me away on a certain date, although I urged reasons why I should remain to complete my quarterly accounts, &c.

I am entirely dependent on my wife's friends for support, all my means having dwindled away by reasons already explained, and not having an opportunity, as other men in the force had, of investing earnings in profitable speculations, being all my time in the service constantly and busily engaged in police duty, and in parts of the country where living was expensive.

I find also that the ordinary avenues of employment open to retired policemen are closed against me, not having a discharge.

I have not sought press or political influence, but I rely entirely on redress from the Service; and I depend on the fairness which you are reputed to be even yet do me some justice for the way I have been treated after my long service, and which, I feel certain, could not have occurred had you been at the head of affairs in May, 1888, when the Narrandera affair occurred.

I beg you will take the trouble to read this correspondence.

I have, &c.,
P. L. VAUGHAN.

Dear Sir,

We cannot permit you to leave Narrandera without expressing our consciousness of your many sterling qualities. During your residence here you have discharged the difficult duties of your position with impartiality, ability, and wise discretion, and you have formed friendships both true and lasting. Your assiduous efforts in the establishment and promotion of various local institutions have contributed in no small measure to the success which has resulted, notably the Hospital and Mechanics Institute. Permit us, in conclusion, to beg Mrs. Vaughan's acceptance of the accompanying testimonial. Wishing yourself and Mrs. Vaughan many years of uninterrupted happiness.

To Senior-sergeant P. L. Vaughan.

Dear Sir,

Your many friends in this district, whilst deeply regretting your removal from our midst to Narrandera, have sought this opportunity of presenting you with this address and accompanying purse as a mark of esteem, and expressing their approval of the efficient and courteous manner in which you have discharged the duties appertaining to your office.

They would bear testimony to the judgment and tact displayed by you in the execution of your police court duties.

As a friend and townsman they feel they will lose in you one who has responded cheerfully both socially and charitably to the claims upon your time and purse.

We sincerely trust that, entering upon your new sphere of duty, you will meet with all the success possible; that your relations with men, as a citizen, may obtain the approbation of all who you may come in contact with, so that they can assent, as we have the pleasure of doing now (after an acquaintance of nearly eighteen years), to your urbane and gentlemanly demeanour, and that their acquaintance with you may be equally as cordial and pleasant as it has been with us.

Accept this as our assurance of good-will, together with best wishes for your future, and health to enjoy it.

[E.]

Dear Sir,

Mr. Lakeman and myself called on the Acting Inspector-General of Police this morning. He stated he would not agree to an inquiry before Captain Battye, and that he considered it would be to your advantage to be removed to Gundagai. After the decided statements made we felt that it would be useless to urge the matter further, but we testified that from our knowledge you had acted as an efficient officer in the discharge of your duties.

Senior-sergeant Vaughan, Narrandera.

Yours, &c.,

JAMES GORMLY, M.L.A.

Police Office, Germanton, 16 October, 1893.

I HAVE this day completed my inspection of the accounts of Senior-constable Vaughan, acting in the capacity of Clerk of Petty Sessions at Germanton, and have much pleasure in stating that I found the books neatly kept, and in every way satisfactory.

E. H. REILLY,

Acting Treasury Inspector.

"Petty's Hotel," Sydney, 7 January, 1893.

MR. P. L. VAUGHAN, ex-Sergeant of police in the Albury district, has been known to me as being in charge at Germanton and Bowna. Personally I have found him highly capable in the discharge of his duties, and I am aware that his departure from the district was generally regretted.

T. A. BROWNE, P.M., Albury.

The Inspector-General of Police to Captain Battye, late Superintendent of Police, Albury.

Sydney, 11 September, 1893.

BEFORE replying to this application I think it proper to transmit it to Captain Battye for his perusal, and for the favour of any observations he may think fit to make.

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

Captain Battye to The Inspector-General of Police.

12 September, 1893.

IN returning these papers to Inspector-General, connected with ex-Sergeant Vaughan's reduction and final dismissal, I beg to state I have no observations to make, beyond referring Inspector-General to ex-Sergeant Vaughan's defaulter's sheet, and the various reports against him which caused those reductions, and his ultimate removal from the Service.

I know of no man in the Service who had greater consideration shown him, or greater chances of recovering his lost position, after his removal from Narrandera, where up to a certain date I held a high opinion of his steadiness and ability, but he gradually became worse, and not to be trusted in charge of a station.

I may say he was never in charge of Bowna; his family resided a few days there. From Germanton he was ordered by me into Albury to explain matters, and to complete his missing quarterly accounts at my office, which he was incompetent to do.

E. M. BATTYE,

Captain.

The Inspector-General of Police to ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan.

Sydney, 13 September, 1893.

THE Inspector-General of Police regrets to inform ex-Constable Vaughan, in reply to his letter of the 11th instant, that the case cannot be re-opened; the ex-constable was treated with exceptional leniency and consideration owing to his former good conduct and efficiency.

Captain Battye reports that he knows of no man in the Service who had greater consideration shown to him or greater chances of recovering his lost position as had the ex-constable.

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 27 September, 1893.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, and must take it as a final decision of the department not to further consider my case.

With reference to your statement that I have been treated with exceptional leniency, I beg again to state that for twenty-three years I did not require any leniency. All that time I was actively engaged fighting hard for the department, and always treated with justice by yourself and your predecessor, and it scarcely bears the stamp of common sense that after that length of time, and having your own promise of speedy promotion, and even Captain Battye's recommendation, that I should so suddenly change front to what I was painted by Mr. Harrison and Captain Battye, and at a time, too, when you were absent from the Colony. I think I can yet prove to the country that it was Captain Battye who changed front, for which he is noted, and that it was my consistent honesty and boldness to attempt to differ from Mr. Harrison in police duty and law that caused my downfall. A mere reprimand at that time would equal a fine of £100 to me, as it would materially delay my promotion.

I cannot pass over the part of your letter referring to Captain Battye's report that he "knew no man in the Service who had more consideration shown to him," without remarking that his memory must be very defective if he now thinks so.

I would mention some names that he could not help remembering, and also the reasons for dealing with their cases differently to mine, which are facts, and his own statement; and some of those men never earned their salt for the Service.

I am sorry Captain Battye's report compelled me to make the above statement, as the treatment other men in the Service have received is no business of mine.

I beg most respectfully to apply for copies of all papers in connection with my reduction and transfer from Narrandera in May, 1888, including my applications for an inquiry into the case, and my applications for leave of absence and replies thereto.

Apologising for troubling you so much, which I would not do only my reputation of twenty-seven years is involved.

I have, &c.,

P. L. VAUGHAN.

The Inspector-General of Police to ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan.

Sydney, 28 September, 1893.

The Inspector-General of Police begs to inform ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan, in reply to his letter of the 27th instant, that it is contrary to established rule to furnish copies of official documents, but the ex-constable may be allowed to see the papers if he apply to the Secretary.

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 6 October, 1893.

In reply to your letter of the 28th ultimo, I beg to thank you for your courtesy in allowing me access to papers in my case of May, 1888, which I saw at your office on the 3rd instant, but there was not attached to the papers my telegrams and applications for an investigation into my case before leaving Narrandera, nor my application for leave of absence with Captain Battye's remarks and replies thereto, which I beg to request you will now cause to be attached, and also my application for a rehearing after your return to the Colony and resuming control of the department, and also all applications for redress from the time of my discharge to the present time.

On a perusal of the papers I fail to find anything to prove neglect of duty on my part, except the statement of the unfortunate woman Roberts and the man Ross, which do not correspond with their sworn testimony in the case nor borne out by witness Middleton, who goes as near as he was permitted to the truth.

As a sample of how these statements were taken by Mr. Harrison, I will quote one. The tracker, Weston, was made to say, "I think I could find or get further evidence if asked to." Would any sane man believe such a thing? And again the man Middleton told me at Wagga that Mr. Harrison tried in taking his statement to make him say things that were not true, to implicate me. Why did not Mr. Harrison take the statement of Mr. Duval, the chemist, Dr. Mitchell, the Police Magistrate who tried the case, and others (which he refused to do), who could prove beyond doubt that I had done all I possibly could to obtain all the evidence possible in the case, taking carefully the statements of the woman Roberts, the man Ross, and the other man, Middleton, at Mr. Duval's chemist's shop, on the night of the occurrence, where I had the child taken for examination, in Dr. Mitchell's absence? I then closely questioned them, and they never mentioned anything about a hat, nor subsequently at the Police Court hearing. There was nothing strange in an aboriginal appearing without hat or boots. Such a gross case of convicting a man behind his back on doubtful and unsupported statements I never heard of before, and the wonder is that Mr. Read, at my persistent request, and that of the Narrandera public, who were incensed at the treatment I received, did not grant a proper inquiry into the case at the time, which would set everything at rest, and save me the terrible loss of position and pay, and exposing me to the persecutions which followed, causing terrible mental worry, which almost broke down my health, and caused my ultimate removal from the Service.

No wonder Captain Battye safely guarded the papers from my perusal, instructing Mr. Harrison to come on to Narrandera, and read to me the Acting Inspector-General's decision. He did not then allow me to see his own remarks, nor Mr. Harrison's grossly incorrect statements in the case, which, had I been known, I would rather take my dismissal than leave Narrandera without proper inquiry.

The commonest soldier in the ranks would be allowed the benefit of a court-martial, but I, a man of twenty-three years' faithful service, was refused a proper inquiry.

I beg to refer to petition from the residents of Narrandera in my case, presented by Sir George Dibbs, and Mr. Read's reply, "That it would be to my advantage to be removed from Narrandera, and that I had ample opportunity to answer the charges." Now, is that statement correct? The actual pecuniary loss I explained in my application to you soon after your return and resuming duty, I cannot remember the date; and how I was treated at Gundagai, although there were sergeant's quarters I was not allowed to occupy them, as I expected (they being occupied by a constable); before I could get any place to live in I had to put up at an hotel for a month, at considerable expense, for which I was not recouped, and when I did succeed in getting a cottage I had to pay 4s. per week in excess of my lodging allowance, and the place being at an inconvenient distance from the police station. As to whether I had an opportunity of answering the charges, the papers abundantly prove the contrary.

Reference was made by Mr. Harrison to the remarks of the Chief Justice and the Crown Prosecutor. It can be proved by dozens of witnesses, besides the Jury in the case, that neither the Judge nor Crown Prosecutor said one adverse word to me during the hearing and my examination in the case.

Would the Chief Justice spare me in open court if he thought I was guilty of any neglect? Most certainly not. See Mr. Moran's letter attached to my application, which I mentioned after your return and resuming control of the department.

Again thanking you and apologising for again having to trouble you.

I have, &c.,

P. L. VAUGHAN.

Are

Are there any other papers at Albury relating to Vaughan's case, if so, please forward them?—
EDMUND FOSBERY, Sydney, 6th October, 1893. Superintendent Creaghe.

Herewith I forward all the papers which can be found in my office relating to ex-Sergeant Vaughan, whose reputation in this district is that of a confirmed drunkard.—RICHARD CREAGHE, Superintendent, Albury, 10th October, 1893. The Inspector-General of Police.

The Inspector-General of Police to ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan.

Sir,

Sydney, 13 October, 1893.

With reference to your letter of the 6th instant, I have the honor to inform you that some papers having reference to your case, which were filed in the Superintendent's office at Albury, have now been returned here, and you are at liberty to peruse them should you call.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND FOSBERY.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 17 October, 1893.

In reply to your letter of the 13th instant, I beg to inform you that I called at your office yesterday, and saw the papers in my case, recently returned from Albury, which thanks to you are now complete.

I would not again require to address you on the subject were it not for the grossly false statement contained in Mr. Creaghe's memo. forwarding the papers.

It is to refute such insinuations that I endeavoured, without success, both in and out of the Service, to have a proper inquiry into my case, which I soon hope to get, when I can prove to the world the falsity of Mr. Creaghe's cruel unasked for libel, and other several charges contained in the papers. Mr. Creaghe's remarks calls to my mind one of many incidents which happened me at Narrandera.

A constable applied for a station which was about to be formed, and he being a deserving man, I recommended his application. To Mr. Harrison's remarks he said, "I cannot recommend this application, as Constable Ray is a confirmed tippler." In due course I got back the application with a severe snub from Captain Buttye for making such a recommendation. I simply replied that wherever Mr. Harrison got his information from it was not correct. Mr. Harrison did not dare to follow up and prove his statement. The constable's application was granted, and he is now a trusted and efficient officer. That man's reputation would be blasted had I not the courage to protect him. But I was paid off for it by the numerous false accusations from time to time made against me, not attempted to be proven, and which I was not allowed to disprove.

These are facts on record and not idle, false insinuations.

Apologising for having again to trouble you.

I have, &c.,

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 11 December, 1893.

Mr Chanter, who is interesting himself in my case, has informed me that you would approve of me making a specific application; but I was not able to gather from him the idea you had in view. He advised me to see you, but I decided to write you instead, not wishing to trouble you when perhaps busy.

I would like to meet your views if possible, and would beg a suggestion from you in the matter.

Apologising for addressing you privately.

I have, &c.,

The Inspector-General of Police to ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan.

Sydney, 11 December, 1893.

The Inspector-General of Police informs Mr. P. L. Vaughan, in reply to his letter of the 10th instant, that if he make application for any employment for which he would be suitable, the Inspector-General of Police should be glad to assist him in obtaining it.

EDMUND FOSBERY.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 18 December, 1893.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, and referred it to Mr. Chanter; but, after carefully considering the whole thing, I feel I would not be doing justice to my conscience and reputation if I did anything else than forward the accompanying specific application.

Therefore, under the circumstances, it would be hypocritical of me to at present accept your kind offer of assistance, which I consider valuable.

Owing to the present political crisis, I might have some delay in obtaining redress, and, while the grass is growing the horse might starve, but if I do 'perish I will do so in the cause of justice and truth.

Thanking you for your personal courtesy and kindness to me on all occasions.

I have, &c.,

P. L. VAUGHAN.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Inspector-General of Police.

Sir,

Sydney, 18 December, 1893.

I have the honor to make an application for re-instatement in my rank in the Police Force, which I lost at Narrandera in May, 1888, through no fault of mine, but on false statements and assertions, which I was not allowed to disprove, although making repeated applications to do so, and which I can even now disprove by numerous respectable witnesses.

This application, if granted, will only slightly recompense me for the pecuniary loss and mental wrong which I have suffered since the time referred to, not to mention the other persecutions which followed.

I have, &c.,

Mr. P. L. VAUGHAN is informed, in reply to his letter dated the 15th instant, that the Inspector-General of Police is unable to accede to his application for re-instatement in the Police Force.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

SENIOR-SERGEANT VAUGHAN.

(FURTHER RETURN RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 22 October, 1895.

FURTHER RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 4th September, 1894, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“Copies of all papers, reports, and other correspondence relating to the “reduction and removal from Narrandera of Senior-Sergeant Vaughan, in “June, 1888.”

(Mr. Chanter.)

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan to The Chief Secretary.

Honorable Sir,

43, Oxford-street, Paddington, 19 March, 1894.

It is with great reluctance I write to request a favour of you, and would not do so only that necessity compels me, as the redress I am seeking may be somewhat delayed owing to the state of political matters at the present time.

In order to make you conversant with the matter it will be necessary to state my case briefly.

I am after serving a time of twenty-seven years in the Police Force of this Colony, and advanced as rapidly as I could expect, until when senior-sergeant in charge at Narrandera I came in contact with a Mr. Harrison, Inspector, of Wagga, who had charge of that district.

For some reason or other he took a personal dislike to me, and imported it into his official capacity, annoying me in every way he could, and I, being of a sensitive temperament, naturally resented his interference, having a good knowledge of my duty.

In 1888, when the Inspector-General was absent from the Colony on leave of absence, and Superintendent Read Acting Inspector-General, Mr. Harrison brought a charge against me of neglect of duty in connection with a case that I had no control over, the result being that I was disgraced and transferred to Gundagai, at a time, too, when I was entitled to promotion to sub-inspector. I tried every means in my power to have an investigation into the case, as I could completely prove my innocence, but was refused. The people of Narrandera seeing how I was treated prepared a petition, numerous signed, and forwarded it to you for presentation by Mr. R. H. Ferrier, which you did. But Mr. Read refused to entertain it, so I was not allowed to disprove the false charge brought against me, which would not be refused to the greatest criminal in the country, but denied to me, who held the rank of senior-sergeant, with twenty-two years' service and not a scratch of a pen against me; but on the contrary, having the approbation of the public, judges, benches of magistrates, and all with whom I came in contact. Please see copies of testimonials attached.*

The wrong treatment I received naturally embittered my mind, causing great mental worry; and one thing after another followed, until I was discharged from the Service, about twenty months ago, without one penny compensation or pension, after paying into the Police Reward Fund for twenty-seven years.

On the Inspector-General's return I applied for reinstatement in my rank, setting forth the details; but he refused to reopen a case dealt with by Mr. Read while Acting Inspector-General.

After my discharge, also, I had some correspondence with the Inspector-General, with a hope of redress; but he declined to reopen the case, on the grounds above stated, although I may state that in the correspondence and on all previous occasions the Inspector-General treated me with the greatest courtesy; and I am sure, had he been in the Colony at the time, I would be allowed to defend my character against false accusations, and be now enjoying the position of sub-inspector, which I had earned by hard work.

When

* See pages 18 and 19 of former correspondence, ordered to be printed on the 21st August, 1895.

When all appeals to the Inspector-General had failed I saw Mr. Chanter, M.L.A., who knows me for many years, and he consented to take up my case and get a Select Committee to inquire into the case; but you will see by his letter (attached) that in the existence of the present Parliament there would not be sufficient time to obtain a Select Committee to finally deal with the case.

These are the reasons which compel me to apply to you for something to do, while waiting till after the elections and meeting of the next Parliament, when I have not the slightest fear but I will be able to justify myself before a Committee of the House, and obtain the redress which I am entitled to.

I would not trouble you, only my means are exhausted. Being all my time in the Service in a hot and trying climate, and being actively engaged in police duties, I had not an opportunity, as other members of the Force have had, of turning my earnings to profitable account; and I have a wife and grown-up girls to maintain.

I would be of use in the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, having been an expert, collecting and compiling the electoral lists for over twenty-five years, or railway or post office detective, or some such employment.

Hoping you will do me the favour of placing me in some position where I would be usefully employed while waiting.

I have, &c.,
PATRICK LAURENCE VAUGHAN.

P.S.—Mr. Chanter has the correspondence with the Inspector-General. The other papers re Narrandera case are at the Inspector-General's office, where I was allowed to see them.—P.L.V.

Forwarded to the Inspector-General of Police.—21/3/94. H.T.D. (pro Sec.).

[Enclosure.]

Dear Sir,

Legislative Assembly, N.S.W., Sydney, 1 February, 1894.
Yours to hand. I am sorry to hear of your illness, and hope you will soon recover. In reference to your case, the time this Parliament lasts will be too short to obtain a Select Committee to deal with your case, as it will be at least a month or six weeks before I would have a chance of reaching a motion.

Therefore the only thing that can be done is to let the matter remain until after the election, and then, if I am returned, I will give notice of motion for a Select Committee, and have your case fully inquired into.

Ex-Constable P. L. Vaughan.

Yours truly,
J. M. CHANTER.

Minute of the Inspector-General of Police.

[Confidential.]

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office,
Sydney, 20 March, 1894.

UNTIL the time that Vaughan obtained the rank of sergeant he was a most efficient officer. Had he continued to behave well he probably would have been made an officer; but, unfortunately, he gave way to intemperate habits, and, in spite of repeated warnings, he got worse instead of better, and it became impossible to retain him in the Service. The charge dealt with by my locum tenens did not affect his position so as to cause his discharge; but he was repeatedly reported for misconduct subsequently, and was twice reduced in rank by me and cautioned. A copy of defaulter's sheet is attached.* He was treated with every consideration.

I should be glad, however, to assist him to obtain suitable employment, on account of his former good service, if he could be trusted to continue temperate in his habits. He appears to be reclaimed now. His education is above the average. He would make an intelligent messenger.

EDM. FOSBERY.

DISMISSAL OF CONSTABLE EASTERBROOK.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on 17th September, 1895, "to inquire into and report upon the charges made against, and the dismissal of, Constable Easterbrook,"—have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee having examined the witnesses named in the list* (whose *See List, p. 5. evidence will be found appended hereto), find as follows:—

1. That Nathaniel Easterbrook and another Constable were dismissed from the Police Force on the reports of Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken, for having, while on duty, misconducted themselves with two women, named respectively "Burns" and Gale.
2. That Easterbrook denied having been found under the conditions reported by Skinner and Aitken.
3. That both Skinner and Aitken give the girl "Burns," with whom Easterbrook was alleged to have misconducted himself, a bad character.
4. That other witnesses, including Senior-constable Meehan, in whose service the girl "Burns" had been employed, deny the statements of Skinner and Aitken as to her personal character and identity.
5. That Easterbrook, previous to the charge being brought against him, was considered a sober, truthful, and efficient officer, and that Police-superintendent Larkins states that he would be prepared to recommend Easterbrook's reinstatement.

Your Committee consider that Easterbrook's case should be reopened, and beg to recommend it to the favourable consideration of the Government.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON

DISMISSAL OF CONSTABLE EASTERBROOK.

TUESDAY, 8 OCTOBER, 1895.

Present:—

MR. FEGAN,

MR. RUSSELL JONES,

MR. CARROLL.

JOHN LIONEL FEGAN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Senior-constable William Skinner called in, sworn, and examined:—

1. Chairman.] You are a senior-constable, stationed at Petersham? Yes.
2. You were senior-constable, I believe, when Easterbrook was there? Yes.
3. What was Easterbrook in the Force? He was an ordinary constable.
4. Do you remember anything as to his character, his efficiency, and so forth? It was the very best.
5. He was truthful? Yes.
6. Honest? Yes.
7. Attentive? Yes.
8. Do you remember anything to his detriment which occurred while he was in the Force? Just on one occasion.
9. What was that? Being found lying down with a woman.
10. Do you remember the date when that occurred? It was on New Year's morning, 1892.
11. At what time in the morning? As near as I can recollect, from 1'45 to 2 o'clock.
12. He was supposed to be on duty at the time? Yes.
13. Did you see him that night whilst he was on duty prior to the occurrence to which you have just referred? No.
14. What were his hours on duty? From 9 to 6 that night, I think. They came out at 9 o'clock, it being New Year's eve.
15. He had been on duty five hours when you saw him in this position? Yes.
16. Mr. Russell Jones.] I suppose he was sober? Yes.
17. Did you charge him straight away? Yes.
18. Did he make any denial? He made no reply.
19. Do you know the name of the woman he was with? She gave the name of Burns.
20. Did you see her? Yes.
21. Did you know her? Yes.
22. Chairman.] Did you know anything to her detriment? Yes; she would always be about the streets.
23. Mr. Russell Jones.] Was she a prostitute? Yes.
24. Had she ever been convicted? Yes; they were both loose girls.
25. You say that the woman Easterbrook was with was a prostitute? She was a woman I look at as of loose character. I am not aware that she has ever been convicted. She is a larrikiness, as we term them.
26. What grounds have you for saying that she was a loose character, if she was never convicted? There are any amount of them loose that have never been convicted.

Senior-
constable
W. Skinner,
8 Oct., 1895.

Senior-
constable
W. Skinner.
8 Oct., 1895.

27. Chairman.] I suppose it is your duty when you find such characters to summon or arrest them? They should certainly have been arrested that night. They were both under the influence of liquor.
28. It is your duty as a constable and an officer to arrest such people? We do when we are in a position to get evidence against them.
29. You are supposed to arrest them if you know them? It often takes some time before you can get evidence against them, even though you see them about the streets.
30. Cannot a woman go about the streets without being a loose character? Most decidedly.
31. Mr. Russell Jones.] How long did you know this woman? She gave the name of Burns. I had seen her about for some time—her and this girl Gale. They were both together on this night, and for some time afterwards. I see Gale about still.
32. Where did Burns live? She gave her address as Westborne-street; but I do not think she lived there.
33. Did you know her previously? I had seen her before.
34. Did you know whose servant she was? No.
35. Did Constable Mehon ever tell you that she was his servant? No; he never spoke to me about the matter.
36. Do you know that she was in Constable Mehon's service for some time previously? No.
37. Do you know her people in Westborne-street? No.
38. Where did the alleged offence occur? Just off Crystal-street.
39. At the corner of Westborne-street? Just at the back of Mr. Bodford's fence.
40. That would be just where she lives? Gale lived in Westborne-street.
41. But you said that Burns lived in Westborne-street? I do not know whether she lived there or not.
42. You did not know where she lived? No.
43. Did she live in Leichhardt? I know a family of Burns of which I believe she is one. Sometimes she lived in Leichhardt—sometimes in other places.
44. She was never convicted at any time? Not that I am aware of.
45. What age was she at the time we are speaking of, do you think? She looked to be a woman. She was lying on her back, and I put my foot against her and pulled her over.
46. To know that the woman is a prostitute you must see her several times and know the company she keeps;—had you seen Burns several times? Yes.
47. Then what age should you think she was? From 18 to 20 I should say.
48. You do not think she was nearer 15? She did not look like that.
49. She looked older than 15? She did.
50. How would you describe her if you wished to lead to her identification? She looked to me to be of dark complexion.
51. With what coloured hair? It is very hard to be asked what coloured hair a woman has four years after the offence occurred.
52. Well, you do not recollect? I do not recollect.
53. Chairman.] If the woman were here could you identify her? I doubt if I could.
54. Mr. Russell Jones.] In your report you said that you were very close to them? Not very far away.
55. Chairman.] You said just now that you touched her with your foot? That was in lifting her off the ground.
56. Mr. Russell Jones.] You saw her on her back and you saw Easterbrook having connection with her? I did not.
57. You did not see Easterbrook committing any offence with her? I did not.
58. Where was he when you saw them? Sitting on the ground.
59. By the side of her? Yes. Of course when I observed them first I did not know that it was Constable Easterbrook.
60. You stated in your report that you were 20 yards away when you saw them lying down? I do not remember every word that I wrote in my report. I was not far off.
61. As far as this woman is concerned you never knew of her being prosecuted? No.
62. Had you seen her about with other girls besides Gale? Not that I am aware of.
63. Gale was her companion? About that time she was.
64. Had you ever seen the girl committing an offence like this at any other time? No.
65. This is the only time that you saw Burns guilty of improper conduct? I do not see that there was much that was improper about it.
66. You do not see anything improper about it? What I mean is this. She was sitting down and I did not see Constable Easterbrook having hold of her in any way. They appeared to be sitting together.
67. The serious part of your statement is that this woman was a prostitute. If you have never seen her behave in an indecent manner, how do you know that she is a prostitute? Because I have seen her about the roads, and followed about by larrikins, both before this time and soon after.
68. But you have never been able to catch her? She was never convicted.
69. You never saw anything wrong about her? I never had her convicted.
70. Constable Aitken was with you? He was.
71. How many reports have you made against constables since you have been at Petersham? Take Constable Easterbrook first. How many have I made against him? I am not aware of any other; I never reported Easterbrook before. Constable Easterbrook did his duty most satisfactorily.
72. Have you reported many other constables at Petersham who have got off? If you will state their names, I will reply.
73. I want to know the number of times, if any, that you have reported constables, besides Constable Easterbrook and Constable Stanton? What are the constables' names?
74. Have you made any other charges against constables in the Force since you have been at Petersham? Yes.
75. Will you give me their names? Bentmore.
76. What was he reported for? For being found loitering in the Lewisham railway-station.
77. Was he suspended? No.
78. Was he reprimanded? No.
79. He got off? On one occasion, and he was fined on another occasion.
80. You laid two charges against him? Yes, during four years service.

constable
W. Skinner,
8 Oct., 1895.

81. Were both charges for loitering? No; one was for being off his beat for three or four hours.
82. Were there any other constables against whom you made charges? I might say that Benmore has been fined on three occasions since he left Petersham.
83. Against how many other constables have you laid charges or complaints? Four, or it might be more. I may have reported one man more than once.
84. Were charges preferred against six constables besides Stanton and Easterbrook, and the men exonerated? No; they were not let off.
85. Do you recollect the case of Constables Jarvis and McRae? Yes; but that was not while I was at Petersham. That was in Newtown, eight years ago.
86. Did you lodge a charge against Jarvis and McRae? Yes; eight years ago.
87. For what? For being found in a gambling saloon.
88. Were they both exonerated? I do not know what was done with them.
89. Did you lay any charge against Constable Freeman? Yes.
90. What for? One was for being in his quarters when he should have been on duty.
91. What was done to him? I think he was fined a half day's pay.
92. Did he get off any of the charges? No.
93. He was convicted on every one of them? Yes.
94. Did you lay a charge against Mannell? He was simply charged with sending in a communication to the Superintendent by a 'bus-driver without it being covered in an envelope.
95. Did he get off? I think so.
96. The case was not proved? I do not know about the proving of it, but the charge was a very frivolous one, and he did not get anything for it.
97. The inspector did not believe in it? There was nothing done to the man.
98. Was there a charge made against Spencer? Yes.
99. What for? Sitting down on his beat.
100. Was he exonerated? He pleaded guilty and was fined.
101. Constable Aitkin was always with you? No.
102. On two or three occasions he has supported you when you have preferred these charges? No; he was not with me in connection with these charges.
103. Did he make a report similar to yours against Constable Benmore, of Newtown? He was not in company with me then.
104. Did he assist you in making the report? Yes; and there were other men doing the same thing.
105. And your superiors did not believe the other men or you? Yes, they did; Benmore was convicted.
106. Reports have been made against you? Yes.
107. I suppose you got out of some of them? There were not many.
108. Was a report made against you by Constable Spencer? Yes; for walking to and from Canterbury races, and charging 4d. for the fare. I was entitled to the 4d.
109. What was done with that charge? It is still undecided.
110. Was it made lately? Three years ago.
111. Chairman.] That means that it is dead? No; I do not think so.
112. Mr. Russell Jones.] Easterbrook states that he was not doing anything indecent to these girls;—would you not believe that he had not connection with them? If I were to give my own opinion I would say that he had not.
113. All you know is that you saw him sitting down with the girl? Yes.
114. You did not see anything else? Afterwards I saw her lying down.
115. Then, when you charged the constables "for behaving in an indecent manner with two prostitutes," you did not mean that they were having connection with the girls? Stanton was having connection.
116. But Staaton was some distance away? Yes.
117. Then that part of the charge did not refer to Easterbrook? It did.
118. But you did not see him doing anything? I did not see him having connection.
119. You did not see him behaving in an indecent manner? Having hold of her, and sitting close by her.
120. The indecency complained of in regard to Easterbrook was that he was with another constable who was behaving in an indecent manner, and was sitting down with the girl? Yes.
121. You had nothing to say against Easterbrook for behaving in an indecent manner with this other girl? Not to my knowledge.
122. I believe that Stanton resigned at once? He was dismissed.
123. He acknowledged his fault? Yes.
124. Did Easterbrook say anything to you when you asked him, "Who is it you have been lying with?" I do not think he made any reply.
125. Chairman.] You said, I believe, that Easterbrook was a good all-round man? He was; I was very sorry to see him leave the Service.
126. I suppose you think he is fit and capable for further service? He looks all right, at all events.
127. How many years have you been in the Force? Thirteen years in New South Wales; and I was four years in the English police.
128. Of those charges that you made, some were proved, but others were dismissed, I suppose, as frivolous? It often happens that when a man is reported that he is not fined, but simply admonished or cautioned.
129. I suppose you make these charges as part of your duty? Yes.
130. If you did not lay these charges you would be complained of by your next superior officer for not informing him? If he saw anything wrong, the matter would be brought under my notice.
131. If you did not report a thing, and it got to the ears of your superior officer, he would want to know why you did not report to him? Most decidedly.
132. You look upon this as part of your duty? Yes.
133. Have you ever asked for promotion? Never since the day I joined the Service, sixteen years ago.
134. You did not ask for promotion two years since? Never. That can be proved by my superior officers.
135. You believe that your officers know when a man should be promoted? That is my belief.
136. Do you remember another constable being reported for being with this woman? I believe that it was her then.

constable
W. Skinner.
8 Oct., 1895.

137. Having seen this woman so often and so long you would know her if she was brought face to face with you? I doubt whether I would know her or not.
138. A constable is looked upon as a smart man when he has a good knowledge of faces? Yes.
139. That is really one claim to promotion in the Service? I do not know whether it is or not.
140. When a murder or robbery takes place a description of the supposed criminal is sent round? Yes.
141. Have you ever made arrests from such descriptions? I have arrested men of whom a description has been given.
142. Is it not a good thing for you to be able to identify a character whom you have often seen and occasionally spoken to? Within a reasonable time.
143. Then you would call a detective exceedingly smart if he could remember a person for four years? A young person, if you do not see her for two or three years, will grow out of your knowledge.
144. Do you remember a paper in England called the Hue-and-Cry? I do.
145. That paper gives descriptions of criminals, stating the colour of their hair, of their eyes, and so forth? Yes.
146. Some of the police have made clever captures acting upon the descriptions given in the paper? Yes.
147. Six, seven, and eight years have sometimes elapsed between the date of the publication of the description and the arrest of the offender? Yes; I believe that men have been arrested in that way by men engaged in that special line of duty.
148. Do you not think that it is far easier to arrest a person whom you have seen and spoken to than to arrest a person on a description? Yes.
149. It is only reasonable that we should ask if you would be able to identify this woman if she were brought before you? I might know her or I might not.
150. You said that she had a dark complexion and that she was supposed to be a prostitute, and that you knew her character because she went about Petersham with larrikins every night? About that time—her and Gale. I knew Gale better than her. Gale is still in Petersham.
151. Gale is a prostitute? I do not know if she has been convicted for prostitution.
152. If you were put to it, I suppose you could prove that she is? I would prove that I have seen her continually with larrikins.
153. You have never reported her? She was sent to some Government asylum for some years after the occurrence I have referred to—at least, so I was informed. She was away from Petersham for two or three years.
154. She is now back at her old trade again? She is back about the roads, and has had a child since.
155. You could not say anything about this woman Burns, except in relation to this occurrence? And what I had seen before and after. Both women were continually about the streets about that time.
156. And you have had occasion to come to the conclusion that Burns was a prostitute? I see her about the streets in company with larrikins, and about the paddocks.
157. Do you never see decent respectable women about the streets? Yes.
158. You never see other young ladies about the streets? Yes.
159. You would not consider them anything but virtuous, I suppose;—you would not like to interfere with them? No.
160. For the simple reason that you know nothing wrong about them? No.
161. Then, how can you come to the conclusion that this woman is a prostitute, seeing that there has not been a case brought against her during the seven years that you have been in Petersham? She has not been there all the time; but I have never made a charge against her.
162. And no other constable has done so? Not that I am aware of.
163. You do not really know that she is a prostitute? I do. She was loose then.
164. The only reason you have for saying so is that she was sitting on the grass with Constable Easterbrook? At first when I saw her, and she was lying down afterwards.
165. After Constable Easterbrook left her? Yes.
166. And it was too early in the morning to be picnicking; but is it not a usual thing for respectable people to be out at that time on New Year's morning? Yes, they might be. I have seen them out at that time.
167. She was out with others? She was out with another woman.
168. She was, perhaps, like others, keeping the New Year? She was there at all events.
169. How far is the paddock from the road? It adjoins the road.
170. There were more convenient places, if Easterbrook wanted to have anything with the woman than the place that was chosen, that he could have taken her to? Yes; I should say so.
171. It is not unusual for one constable to go off his beat to assist another? No.
172. You have a whistle to signal for assistance? Yes.
173. You have heard whistles similar to your own which were not constables' whistles? Yes.
174. So that Easterbrook could very well have put it that he had gone off his beat to give assistance, having heard a whistle in a certain direction, supposing he had wanted to have had anything to do with this woman? Yes; he might have done so.
175. You say that Easterbrook's word is to be relied upon? I always relied upon his word.
176. Would it be discreet for a man in his position to have anything to do with the girl near the roadway? No; he could have found a more suitable place.
177. I suppose you have always found Easterbrook level-headed? Yes.
178. When you sent him on special duty he was able to mind himself? Yes.
179. Do you think that his conduct in committing an offence like this, within 2 or 3 yards of the road, is the conduct of a level-headed man? Well, there had been nothing before against the other man Stanton either.
180. We are only dealing with Easterbrook now;—would you not have thought that he would have been sufficiently discreet to go beyond the reach of detection? Well, I would have done it.
181. If you had been given to conduct of that kind, you would have had a clear track before committing such an offence? I do not know.

WEDNESDAY, 9 OCTOBER, 1895.

Present:—

Mr. AFFLECK,
Mr. ANDERSON,Mr. CARROLL,
Mr. TRAVERS JONES.

JOHN LIONEL FEGAN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Nathaniel Easterbrook appeared in person, on his own behalf.

George Read, Esq., called in, sworn, and examined:—

182. Chairman.] You are a Superintendent of Police? Yes; I am the Superintendent of Police in charge of the Metropolitan District. Superintendent Read.
183. I suppose that the charges laid against Constable Easterbrook by Senior-constable Skinner came under your notice? Yes. 9 Oct., 1895.
184. Do you remember anything about that case? I remember perusing the reports, and writing a minute on the subject, and forwarding them to the Inspector-General.
185. I suppose that Easterbrook never came under your notice previous to that? Not very much. He was stationed in the suburbs.
186. Nothing to his discredit at any time? Nothing whatever. I and all the officers had a very good opinion of his character and efficiency.
187. At no time, with the exception of the occasion when the charge was made by Senior-constable Skinner against him, was any complaint made against Easterbrook? No complaint whatever, with that exception.
188. How long have you been in the Police Force? About forty-five years altogether. I have been forty years in the Police Force in Sydney, and previous to coming here I was an officer of the London Force.
189. That makes you a good judge of the men whom you think fit to be in the Force? I should be a fairly good judge, after that long experience.
190. And, with this exception, there was nothing whatever against Constable Easterbrook? Nothing.
191. I supposed you were surprised when you heard of this charge? I was surprised. He being a married man, and being considered a well-conducted promising constable, I was very much surprised.
192. And it was just on the evidence of Senior-constable Skinner that this man was removed from the Force? Yes; in conjunction with that of Constable Aitken.
193. I suppose you are aware that several charges have been made against constables by Senior-constable Skinner? Yes; I am aware of that fact, but that is a common occurrence.
194. And I suppose it is a common occurrence for some of the charges to be treated by you as frivolous charges? Yes. I probably deal with about 200 breaches of discipline of all descriptions in a year. Some, of course, are trivial, and others are more important. I may say that this case is to me a perfectly unique one.
195. Do you remember the name of the woman with whom Easterbrook was charged with having misconducted himself? I think her name was Burns.
196. Have you any recollection of this same woman being charged with anything? It was represented to me that she was identical with the woman who some time previously brought a charge against another member of the Force.
197. For what? I think for taking indecent liberties with her. To the best of my recollection this was the charge.
198. Do you remember that constable's name? His name was Senior-constable Wright. He has since left the Force.
199. Was he dismissed from the Force on account of that? I think he was either dismissed or discharged—I am not quite sure which.*
200. How many years do you think that is ago? I think eight or nine years ago, probably.
201. You have not seen the woman, I suppose? No.
202. Mr. Carroll.] Was that constable's name George Wright? No; Elias J. Wright.
203. Chairman.] What age was she supposed to be then? She must have been quite a young person—I think about 16 years of age. I did not see her.
204. But if it were reported to you that one of your officers had had connection with a girl, seeing the charge is such a serious one, is it not a fact that the first thing that you would ask is, "What is her age"? I might do so. It would all depend upon the nature of the reports. In reading the reports sometimes it is apparent that the person is a woman.
205. And the report satisfied you on this occasion that she must be a woman? I thought she was a woman, or pretty nearly so.
206. This is the point to which I wish to draw attention;—as one of the most efficient officers in the service, which you have the name of being, you would consider it your duty to ascertain the age of the person if a criminal assault was committed upon her? I have no doubt that her age was ascertained; but it is a long time ago, and I cannot recall the fact. No doubt the papers would afford all necessary information.
207. You never saw this woman? No.
208. Therefore, you could not identify her? No.
209. What would you think of an officer of yours who could not identify a woman after a lapse of four or five years—five years at the most? It would depend very much on circumstances. If she was a growing person, her appearance would have materially altered in the course of four or five years.
210. But if she were a grown up woman, what then? It would entirely depend upon circumstances. Sometimes the lives persons lead effect a very great change in their appearance in a very short period.
211. But if he saw this woman regularly, say, for six months, and spoke to her, and heard the tone of her voice, and saw the company she kept, and so forth, you would think that your officer ought to be able to identify her? Yes.
212. And if he were not able to identify a character like that, he would not be of much service in the Force? I should form an unfavourable opinion of his efficiency.

213.

NOTE (on revision):—This answer is erroneous. The charge was not considered proved, and the senior-constable was simply transferred to another station and subsequently called upon to resign for other misconduct.

Superintendent Read.

9 Oct., 1935.

213. You first sent the charge, I believe, to Inspector Larkins to report to you upon it? The papers would come to me from Inspector Larkins. He was in charge of that division, and the reports in the first instance would be made to him, and he would forward them to me with any remarks he thought fit to make.
214. In reading this report did it ever strike you that Easterbrook displayed a want of knowledge and foresight in taking this woman such a short distance from a principal street? No; because at that hour of the morning—between 1 and 2 o'clock, I think it was—a policeman in the suburbs, if he purposed committing an improper act, would think himself pretty secure from observation.
215. There are not many people about at that hour? There would not be about 1 and 2 o'clock in the morning.
216. Is it not a fact that a large number of people were out on this particular morning? On New Year's morning there is usually a large number of people out—not so many, of course, in the suburbs as in the city.
217. But there is a large number out that morning compared to any other morning in the year? Generally.
218. And, on those grounds, you would think that an officer of the standing that Easterbrook occupied up to a certain time, would be more mindful of publicity? If he purposed to commit an act of that kind, he would probably give some thought to getting away from public observation.
219. I suppose that when any disturbance takes place in one part of a town or a district, the usual way of calling assistance is by means of a whistle with which you provide your constables? Usually, yes.
220. And I supposed you have noticed that whistles, which do not belong to constables, make a similar noise to whistles which constables have? Yes; there is a similarity in the sound of whistles sometimes.
221. So that if Easterbrook wished to get to a secluded place away from publicity, he might make the excuse that he heard a whistle, and went in that direction in order to give assistance to a brother officer? If it occurred to him he might; but being on the beat, he was at liberty to go anywhere he thought fit. He was responsible for the beat.
222. So that really there was no need for Easterbrook to get just down by the roadside? No; I understood that he was some distance from the road.
223. Can you tell me what the distance was? I could not be sure. It was some distance. I think that the two officers, Skinner and Aitken, walked some distance across the vacant piece of ground before they came to them, so they must have been some considerable distance away from the footpath.
224. And did Skinner, to your knowledge, swear that he found Easterbrook committing any offence? No, he did not swear it—he reported it.
225. Did he report that he found Easterbrook committing an offence? He did.
226. On this piece of vacant ground with a woman? Yes.
227. Would it surprise you for me to tell you that Skinner has sworn before this Committee that he never saw any indecency on the part of Constable Easterbrook towards this woman? Any indecency?
228. Yes, or any offence committed? As far as I can remember, his report was to the effect that he saw Easterbrook getting up from the woman. Dealing with so many cases, and so many reports, I could not remember precisely the wording of that report, which I think you have.
229. Do you remember the defence set up by Easterbrook? I could not repeat it.
230. But it is a fact that he had nothing whatever to do with her? I know he denied it.
231. He denied the charge in toto? Yes.
232. And it is a fact, on the other hand, that the constable that was with him gave into the charge made against him at once? He admitted it at once.
233. And denied that Easterbrook had anything to do with the woman? Yes.
234. He denied that Easterbrook had anything to do with the woman? Yes.
235. And said that he was the only guilty party? He said so.
236. Going back to Burns, I take it for granted that, as far as your memory will allow you at the present time, you say that she was a grown-up woman at the time the assault was committed by Senior-constable Wright? Well, I think she was described as a girl, but it is so long ago that I could not remember. Complaints against constables pass through my hands every day, and I could not recall every circumstance.
237. Would it not be a peculiar thing if the papers brought to light the fact that a constable in the position of Senior-constable Wright had committed an offence upon a girl of 13 or 14 years of age, and the police authorities overlooked it, and only dismissed him from the Force? It would all depend upon the circumstances. There might be a complaint of that kind, but there might not be sufficient evidence to warrant a prosecution.
238. And yet sufficient evidence to justify a dismissal? Yes; to justify the head of the Department in either discharging or dismissing him from the Service.
239. And you believe that if the papers are looked up they will be found to give the age of the girl? I think there will be something about her age.
240. I think you will admit, as an experienced man, that if the age of the girl Burns, with whom Easterbrook is alleged to have misconducted himself, and the age of the girl with whom Constable Wright had something to do, do not agree, it looks like a trumped-up charge? I do not know. They might be mistaken in regard to her age. They might accept her own statement with regard to her age, without testing it.
241. They might be mistaken with regard to the age, but not with regard to the person? It often happens that the age of a person is entered in our records as, perhaps, 15, when it is pretty nearly 20, or perhaps as 15, when it is only 13. Mistakes with regard to age are of very common occurrence.
242. The dismissal of Easterbrook, and the dishonor attached to him as a married man, rest on the evidence of those two men as against the other two men? Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken.
243. Against these two men? Yes; against the two men, Stanton and Easterbrook. Of course, Stanton admitted that he had grossly committed himself, and Easterbrook, according to the statement of Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken, was particeps criminis.
244. You would not refuse to take him back again? I would not have anything to say in the matter. If the Inspector-General appoints a man to the Force, it is my duty to make the best I can of him.
245. And you would not be afraid to make the best you could of Easterbrook as an efficient officer? As regards his efficiency, I should not.
246. Did you ever find Easterbrook to be untruthful? No. There was no complaint whatever made against him until this charge was preferred.
247. When this charge was preferred against him, had he the right to face those other two men, or was it simply done by writing? If he had requested that he might be confronted with them in the presence of

of his superior officer, his request would have been complied with; but when a man is reported, the usual course is to call upon him for his defence in writing.

248. Can he see every item of the charges made against him? The report made against him is read to him.

249. Not given to him? If he wants to refer to it he can do so. If he is in doubt, for instance, after having it read to him, about any part of it, he can request to have it read again, and his request would be complied with.

250. But it would not be placed in his hands? Sometimes that course is adopted, and sometimes reports are simply read to the person complained of.

251. At the commencement, I think it was pointed out that Senior-constable Skinner has made various charges on several occasions against men under his control? He has reported several men. But that is common to a large number of non-commissioned officers. That would not be at all exceptional.

252. Did it ever strike you the similarity of the charge made by Skinner and Aitken? No.

253. If they came from them together very often it would strike you? I do not think they were ever before associated in making any charges against members of the Force.

254. You would not swear that? No; but as far as my memory serves me they were not associated together before in making any charge, unless it may have been a very trifling matter.

255. Since Easterbrook was dismissed from the Force has Senior-constable Skinner ever asked you for promotion? Not to my recollection; but applications for promotion are very numerous, and I may, possibly, have forgotten.

256. Depending on your knowledge, without reference to papers, you do not think so? I do not remember that he ever did.

257. Mr. Travers Jones.] It is more than three years since this offence happened? Yes.

258. And your memory is quite fresh as to the reports and the evidence given? Fairly so.

259. Is it a breach of discipline in the Force for constables to commit this offence? Most certainly—a most serious breach of discipline. I might add that constables have important duties to perform in relation to these women, and the last thing that would be permitted would be to allow them to place themselves in their power.

260. It is a serious breach of discipline in the Force? Yes.

261. What was done with Constable Stanton? He was dismissed.

262. Do you look upon Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken as reliable and truthful witnesses in this case? I cannot help regarding them as such, because neither of them, as far as I am aware, ever led me astray; therefore, I was morally compelled to believe their statements.

263. Are you aware of any previous ill-feeling existing between these constables who gave the information and Constable Easterbrook? No; it was never alleged that there was any ill-feeling existing between them.

264. They would have no object in trumping up this charge? I could not discover any. If I had discovered any motive for their acting corruptly I would have hesitated to express the opinion I did when forwarding the papers to the Inspector-General.

265. I suppose you are aware that it would be a very difficult thing to prove that this man actually had connection with the woman? I suppose it would be; under the circumstances, no doubt it would.

266. If the men swore so, or reported so to you, would you believe them? I believe they spoke to the best of their belief. For instance, it is alleged in one of the reports that one of the men (Stanton) was actually seen lying on one of the women; and with regard to the second woman—the woman with whom Easterbrook was alleged to have miscondacted himself—that when the constable went up to her, her clothing was lifted up above her knees as she lay on the grass.

267. It is not a criminal offence to have connection with a woman of mature age? Well, it would be a rape if she did not consent.

268. But in this case there is nothing to show that the women did not give their consent? I presume they did. The only offence they could be punished for is indecency—that is, indecently exposing themselves in view of the public. It would not matter whether the public saw them or not. If they were in view of a public highway, where they could be seen by any passer-by, they would be committing an offence for which they would be liable to a penalty.

269. Were they within view? It was admitted so.

270. According to the reports? Yes.

271. Have those two Constables, Easterbrook and Stanton, denied the charge made against them by Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken? Constable Stanton frankly admitted it; Easterbrook emphatically denied it.

272. The weight of evidence was against Easterbrook on the reports of Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken? Yes.

273. And Constable Easterbrook was discharged upon the reports of those two officers? He was.

274. Mr. Carroll.] I remember your saying that Senior-constable Skinner never to your knowledge asked you for promotion? I do not remember that he did; he may have done so.

275. Did he put in a written application? I do not remember; he may have done so. We have a great many applications for promotion.

276. Chairman.] How do you come to the conclusion that a woman is a prostitute? Generally from seeing her compassioning with a considerable number of different men, and visiting houses reputed to be common brothels; but of course a woman might be assumed to be a common prostitute for other reasons.

277. Men being seen with her and so forth? Men coming and informing us, possibly, as low-class men do sometimes, saying "You know so-and-so; she is a common prostitute. I have had her, and Jones and Thompson have had her."

278. The reason I asked you that was because you said that your officers have special duties towards these women? Yes.

279. What duties are those? They frequently arrest them for using indecent language in public highways when soliciting men to accompany them to brothels—that is, to use them for a price. If that solicitation is made in indecent language, they are liable under the Vagrant Act, and they are frequently committed under that Act for indecency committed under such circumstances.

280. Is it not a fact that if you know they have asked men, whether in indecent language or not, that comes under the category of soliciting? The Magistrates generally would not regard solicitation, if made in ordinarily decent language, as an offence against the law.

Superintendent
Read.

9 Oct., 1895.

Superintendent Rosit.
9 Oct., 1895.

281. But you, as one of the heads of the Police Department, would do so? I think it should be so regarded, but the Magistrates do not think so. We have brought scores of persons before the courts. When people loudly complain of being annoyed in the public thoroughfares, of course these women get to know it, and they are circumspect in the way they make their solicitations, and we have brought them before the courts simply for soliciting, saying "I shall be glad of your company for the night," or something of that kind, and the Magistrates have said that it was not indecency, and they have frequently dismissed the case.

282. Another important consideration in coming to the conclusion that a woman up before the Court for using indecent language is a prostitute, is the fact of her having been seen with men, and in brothels, and so forth—that is the principal consideration? Not always. There are some women who are very quiet prostitutes. They do not drink to excess, and conduct themselves quietly, and they are very rarely before the court; still we know that they are prostitutes. There is a considerable number of what we term clandestine prostitutes about Sydney. They go about at night and get men, but they do not fall into our hands; and if told that they were prostitutes they would very likely complain.

283. And they might have an action against you at law? Yes.

284. They could do so if they liked? Yes.

285. How did you come to the conclusion that you should call Burns a prostitute? That would depend upon the knowledge of her general conduct possessed by the constable who represented her to me as a prostitute.

286. But have you not seen young women who are more like big boys, with no wickedness in any sense about them, but who jump and romp about like big boys;—would you call such a girl a prostitute? Certainly not, unless we could adduce some evidence that she was going about at unseasonable hours of the night. Sometimes it cannot be proved that a woman is cohabiting with different men, but she is seen about at 12 or 1 o'clock at night with, perhaps, a dozen different men. It often happens that a woman may be seen going about the centre of the town with half a dozen different men in the course of a few hours.

287. And with the same men? That may happen sometimes if they get hold of the right sort, as they term it, with money to spend.

288. It is a fact that the theatres let the people out at a late hour at night? Yes; about 11 o'clock on the average.

289. And if any people were to walk to Petersham or Lewisham, or any part of the suburbs that distance, it would be after 12 o'clock before they got there? It would be, no doubt.

290. And you would not put a girl down as a prostitute for that? Certainly not. There would be nothing against her character.

291. Could you give us any evidence against Burns as a prostitute? I could not personally, but I have no doubt that some of the police in the district where she plies her calling if they were examined on the subject could give very material and conclusive evidence as to her character.

292. In the absence of such information, then, this woman's word ought to be taken—in the absence of information to prove that she is a character that cannot be trusted? If any woman is being referred to, and one of my officers says, "She is a loose woman," I accept that statement. He is a responsible officer, and I assume that he can adduce evidence to substantiate his statement.

293. Have you never found out that your officers have misled you? Never in a single instance.

294. By the prints, have you not found out that officers have misled their chiefs? I have seen matters of the kind mentioned in some of the English papers; but after my long experience I accept what the newspapers say about these matters with a very great deal of caution.

295. Mr. Travers Jones.] I see by the reports that these women were reported to have been drunk, and it was not Easterbrook who was pulled off the woman? No; it was Stanton. It was represented, I think, that Easterbrook got up, and when he was spoken to he was standing, I think, some yards from the woman.

296. Is it not possible that these women, in cases of drunkenness, might expose themselves, and this woman might have stripped herself above the knees? It is possible, of course.

297. And is it not possible that Easterbrook may have gone to this woman to lift her up and move her on, as the saying is? If he had made that defence I should have thought that it might deserve consideration, but he made no such defence.

298. Mr. Easterbrook.] When Mr. Larkins forwarded the report to you, you forwarded it to the Inspector-General, and put this memo. upon it: "Burns is the girl who some years ago complained of ex-Senior-constable Wright"? I may have done so.

299. I should like to ask why you put that memo. there? I put it there, because I was so informed by the officer.

300. Would you mind telling me which officer informed you? I think it was Mr. Larkins.

301. Would you be surprised to hear that it is not the same girl at all? I should not be very much surprised. I should think it is possible that a mistake may have been made. He may have made the report to me possibly from something that was said to him by some member of the Force who might not have been fully informed about the matter.

302. Do you remember my asking you to allow the girl's evidence to be taken when I was in your office? No; I do not.

303. Will you swear that I did not ask that? No, I will not; it is a long time ago.

Nicholas Larkins, Esq., called in, sworn and examined:—

Superintendent Larkins.
9 Oct., 1895.

304. Chairman.] You are a Superintendent of Police? Yes.

305. How long have you been in the Force? Thirty-two years.

306. You were inspector when the case of Nathaniel Easterbrook and Henry Stanton, constables, came before you? Yes.

307. Since then you have been promoted to be Superintendent? Yes.

308. And left that portion of the district? I went to Deniliquin.

309. Where are you now? I am in charge of the detectives in Sydney at present.

310. Do you know Mr. Easterbrook? Yes.

311. Is that the gentleman sitting at the end of this table? Yes.

312. You were inspector of the district where he was constable at that time? Yes; he was doing duty immediately under me at that time.

313. Do you know how long he was under you? As far as I can recollect he joined the Force about the middle of the year 1890. He continued in it until he was reported on this charge.

314. From the time he joined the Force to the time when this charge was laid against him, had you any occasion ever to find fault with him? No, I think not—not to my knowledge; on the contrary, I had a very good opinion of him.

315. You thought he was in his right place? He appeared to me to be an efficient, well-conducted man.

316. You were sorry, of course, when this charge was laid against one of your men? Yes; I was sorry for various reasons. In the first place, because he was an efficient and well-conducted man as far as I knew; and secondly, because he was a married man. I regretted very much, for the sake of the Service, and for himself, that such a charge was made against him.

317. You, as an officer, wished to have the best-conducted men in the Service? Yes.

318. A charge was laid against Easterbrook? Yes.

319. By whom? He was reported by Senior-constable Skinner.

320. How long had Senior-constable Skinner been under you? I could not say exactly from memory, but a considerable time. I think that Senior-constable Skinner was under me from the time he joined the Service.

321. Long enough for you to have every confidence in him? Certainly; he was promoted to the rank of senior-constable on my recommendation.

322. You have had to deal with some reports made against other constables, I suppose, by this same senior-constable? Yes.

323. I suppose you had to deal with a charge laid against Senior-sergeant Macnamara? I cannot call it to mind.

324. Can you call to mind any charges made by Senior-constable Skinner against men in the Force? I know that he repeatedly reported men, subordinate members of the Force, for breaches of discipline; but I could not call to mind the particular charges, except I were reminded.

325. Have any men been dismissed on his reports? I could not say without looking at the records.

326. But I suppose that in a short time you could get the records? Yes.

327. And ascertain the charges made by him against those men? Yes; it would take me a very long time to ascertain all the charges he ever made against various members of the Force.

328. You had no reason to suspect Easterbrook of being other than a truthful person? No.

329. A sober person? I think if I can recollect properly that that was the first time that he was brought under my notice for any breach of discipline, and though he was only young in the Service, he appeared to me very energetic in bringing offenders to justice.

330. Do you remember the name of the woman with whom Easterbrook was charged with having had connection? I think her name was Burns. It is such a long time ago, and so many things come under my notice, that the matter has pretty well gone from my memory, I having been removed from the district.

331. Did you know anything in connection with Senior-constable Wright at any time? I did; he also was under me.

332. A similar charge to that against Easterbrook, was it not? Not exactly similar.

333. Will you tell me the difference? It was a similar charge, but the offence was said to have been committed in a house.

334. In Senior-constable Wright's case, the woman was the person who charged him? Yes.

335. And charged with indecent assault? Yes.

336. What would be the first thing that you would think of when a charge of that kind was made? I would not think anything at all about it until there were explanations from both sides.

337. Is it not a fact that you would think of the age of the girl first? Decidedly. If it were a girl who was under age, I should, of course, take steps to have the doctor to examine her. It would all depend on the circumstances.

338. Then it appears that the first thing which you, as an officer in the position you hold, would think of is, "what is the age of the girl who has been assaulted?" If she were a girl under 16 years of age, of course, it would make all the difference.

339. Say that a charge was laid to-night against any individual of criminally assaulting a girl, the first thing a man trained in your profession would ask would be, "What is the age of the girl?" Of course, that would be one of the first things I should ask.

340. Because if she were under a certain age it would be a criminal assault? If she were under a certain age it would not matter whether she was a consenting party or not. In that case the matter would be very different. If she were over 16 years of age, and the woman was a consenting party, the individual charged could not be punished legally.

341. But naturally a woman will not lay a complaint if she has been a consenting party? No.

342. So it appears that you ascertained the age of this woman Burns when this charge was made? I do not know that I did. I hardly think so. Presuming that the report laid before me was true—that they were people of not very good character—and taking the hour of the morning into consideration, and the place where the occurrence was alleged to have taken place, I should presume that the senior-constable's statement was true.

343. I am not dealing with that now—what I want to find out, as far as your knowledge will guide you, is when this woman reported that Senior-constable Wright had criminally assaulted her; first of all there must be some report of the case in your department? Yes.

344. And the age of the woman taken down? Yes.

345. Because dismissal from the Force would not amply repay the woman for a serious assault being committed upon her? Of course it would not. If a serious assault were committed against the woman's will the man would be prosecuted.

346. By your department? Yes, certainly. He would not be allowed to get off with only a dismissal from the Service.

347. So that from his being merely dismissed from the Service you suppose that this woman Burns was more than a girl at that time? I could not tell you. I should have to look up the papers. As far as my memory serves me the assault by Senior-constable Wright was alleged to have taken place, I think, in the watch-house—that is as far as I can recollect now, and I think there were some other reports of some other other women, who made some complaint at about the same time; but I am not sure, and unless I look up the papers and refresh my memory, I could not state positively, neither do I know whether there was any assault at all proved on that occasion.

348. Easterbrook is charged with being with this self-same woman Burns? I was not aware of that.

349. You will find at the end of the first report mentioned in these papers laid on the Table of the House, these words, "Forwarded to the Superintendent.—N. Larkins, Inspector, 2/1/92. G. Read, Esq. Supt. memo.—Burns is the girl who some years ago complained of ex-S.-c. Wright.—G.R.";—that is your own minute? I have been very busy the last few days, and I have not had time to look up the papers. I should be glad if you would give me an opportunity of looking up the papers, and I should be able to give my evidence better. I never saw the girl Burns, and therefore would write that, of course, from information received from my officers.

350. I suppose that you have known your officers to make an arrest after seeing the person ten or fifteen years previously? Yes.

351. You would not think much of an officer who three years ago saw a woman almost every day in the week for five or six months, and then after the lapse of three years could not identify that same person? I should say not.

352. You would not think much of an officer of that description? If he saw her frequently during the five or six months, I should think he would know her for the rest of her lifetime.

353. And he having heard the tone of her voice? Yes.

James Aitken called in, sworn, and examined:—

Constable
J. Aitken,
9 Oct., 1895.

354. Chairman.] You are a constable? Yes.

355. Stationed at Petersham? Yes.

356. How long have you been stationed there? A little over five years.

357. How long have you been in the Force? About five years and three months.

358. Therefore, almost ever since you entered the Force you have been stationed at Petersham? I have.

359. You know Senior-constable Skinner? Yes.

360. Superintendent Read? Yes.

361. Superintendent Larkins? Yes.

362. Nathaniel Easterbrook? Yes.

363. Stanton? Yes.

364. Constable McRae? Yes.

365. Were you at the same dépôt as Easterbrook was stationed at? At Petersham.

366. Under the same officer? Yes.

367. Do you know anything to Easterbrook's discredit? This matter under notice now.

368. What matter is that? Being found lying down with a woman.

369. What position did he occupy? He was on the ground.

370. Had he hold of this woman? He had.

371. Where had he hold of her? I saw them first sitting on the ground. They were pulling one another backwards and forwards, then sideways, and then they were lying down on the ground.

372. You were by yourself at that time? I was with Senior-constable Skinner.

373. But you were the first on the scene? I saw them first.

374. You were with Senior-constable Skinner, but you saw them first? Yes; I saw them first; I drew his attention to the man and woman lying on the ground.

375. Straightaway? Yes; as soon as I could speak.

376. As soon as you saw them you said, "Look here"? Yes.

377. He saw the place where they were wrestling? They were wrestling.

378. And he must have been blind if he could not see them as well as you? If he saw them at the same time.

379. Senior-constable Skinner would see them doing just what you saw them doing? If he looked at the same time as I did.

380. And he looked at the same time as you did? A second or two after I did.

381. As soon as you saw them you spoke to Senior-constable Skinner? I did.

382. And he looked in the direction you pointed? Well, I suppose he did.

383. How far were you from those two who were wrestling? About 12 yards.

384. You were in the street at that time? I was in the street; I do not remember whether I was on the road or on the footpath.

385. So far as you can judge, you were about 12 yards from Easterbrook and this woman? About that.

386. And you could plainly see them wrestling? I could.

387. And a man must be blind if he looked in the same direction and did not see this? If he looked at the same time.

388. If he looked while they were wrestling, he must have seen them, or be blind? Yes; if he looked while they were wrestling.

389. How long, to the best of your knowledge, were they wrestling? I simply saw them go backwards and forwards two or three times, and then sideways, and then lie down on the ground.

390. And that would occupy? Only a second or two—barely a minute.

391. Senior-constable Skinner saw just what you saw? Well, I do not know.

392. He made that charge, did he not? I did not hear the charge he made read over.

393. Well, you made a charge? I was asked to report what I knew in the matter.

394. And your report and the report of Senior-constable Skinner were one and the same almost—from two different men, of course;—Skinner made his report, and you made yours, and the two came to the same conclusion? Well, it was on the same matter. I simply reported what I saw that night. I did not know what Skinner saw or reported.

395. You do not know? I do not know the words he put in his report.

396. And you never saw it? I never saw it. Mr. Larkins called me in his office a night or two afterwards, and asked me what I knew of the case. I told him, and he told me to put it in writing.

397. On your oath, you never saw printed copies of the report taken down? I saw a printed copy of the report.

398. You saw the report then that Skinner sent in? I saw it afterwards.

399.

Constable
J. Aicken,
9 Oct., 1895.

399. I asked you that, and you said, "No"? At the time I did not see it.
400. I did not mention any time at all;—what was the name of the woman that Easterbrook was with? She gave the name of Burns.
401. Did you know this woman? I knew her by sight—I had seen her before.
402. How many times? Two or three times.
403. And sometimes you saw her two or three times a day? No, I have not.
404. So if you were put on your oath you could not call that woman a prostitute? Well, she never has been convicted, to my knowledge, of being a prostitute.
405. If you were put on your oath you could not call this woman a prostitute from your own knowledge? I have seen her about the street with larrikins, and in company with girls of bad repute.
406. How often? I have seen her four or five times, if not more.
407. You saw her with larrikins? I have.
408. With prostitutes? With girls of bad repute.
409. And of course you call them prostitutes, do you not? I do not say they have been convicted of prostitution, but they are about the streets with larrikins.
410. What are your instructions with reference to such characters? In what way?
411. In carrying out your duties? Simply to take notice of the girls and their habits.
412. And what then? If there is a case, take proceedings.
413. How do you mean, "If there is a case"? If you think there is a case for the Police Court, to take proceedings against them.
414. What would constitute a case against such characters? To catch them in the act of prostitution.
415. Did you catch Easterbrook in the act? No.
416. Did you catch Stanton in the act? Yes.
417. Who was the woman you caught Stanton with? A girl named Gale.
418. Did you charge her with prostitution? I did not.
419. Then you did not do your duty, it appears, from the instructions you have received? The senior-constable was there.
420. Did he charge the woman? He did not.
421. He has similar instructions to yours, has he not? There is no doubt.
422. The same orders are given to you? I believe so.
423. Then it appears that you found a woman in the very act of prostitution and did not lay a charge against her? I did not lay a charge against her.
424. But you found her in the very act? Yes.
425. So that was a breach of your duty, I suppose? The senior-constable was there, and when the senior-constable is there with a constable, the senior-constable generally prefers a charge against any one.
426. Then, if the senior-constable is with you, it is in his hands to commence a prosecution? He generally does.
427. What was the name of the woman who was with Stanton? A girl named Gale.
428. Her name is Mary Gale, I suppose? Yes, Mary Gale.
429. What kind of character was she looked upon as having? A very loose character. She has had two children to my knowledge.
430. What do you mean by saying she has had two children—I know some women who have ten—she was not married, I suppose? Not that I know of. She was always about the street with larrikins, and I believe that she was confined in some institution and gave birth to a child.
431. Was that prior to, or since this charge? Well, she was pregnant at the time Stanton was with her. Since she came out of the school she has been about the street with larrikins. She gave birth to a child two months ago, and is now carrying it about the street.
432. Did it ever come under your notice that Burns, with whom Easterbrook is alleged to have been, was the same identical person who made a charge against a policeman some years since;—I suppose you know nothing about that? I do not.
433. You know nothing about that? Simply what I have seen in the printed report.
434. From that time up to the present, have you taken notice to this woman's behaviour? I have seen her since in company with other girls and with larrikins.
435. Lately? No, not lately—not for some years.
436. How old would you take this woman to be? I should take her to be a girl about 20 in 1892.
437. What was the appearance of this woman? She was inclined to be dark.
438. Good looking? I could not say.
439. Was there anything that would draw your attention to her—make her conspicuous? I never took particular notice of her.
440. Did you ever see her in the daylight? No, I have not. I have seen her in the evening and night-time.
441. You saw her only in the dark? I never saw her in the daylight.
442. And you saw her four or five times with larrikins? Yes; four or five times altogether.
443. It is not possible to make a mistake in regard to the woman;—you knew her character? I had seen her four or five times before.
444. In your report you said that Easterbrook was with a woman called Burns? She gave the name of Burns. I did not know her name.
445. You only knew her by appearance? I simply saw her about the street before.
446. If she were brought here you could swear to her? I would not say that I could swear to her.
447. Do you think that if you saw Easterbrook ten years hence you would know him? Yes; because I am acquainted with him, and came in contact constantly with him during the time that he was in Petersham and since.
448. Then I take it for granted that you would not know this woman? I do not say I would.
449. And you do not say you would not? I do not say I would not identify the girl.
450. But you say, as far as you can judge, that at that time she was about 20 years of age? Yes; as far as I could judge she looked a girl about 20.
451. Would you swear she was not younger than that? She might have been a year younger.
452. If she gave her age as 18, would you swear she was more than 18? No, I would not.
453. After the wrestling had ceased, can you swear that Easterbrook was having connection with this woman? No, I would not.

Constable
J. Attkin.
9 Oct., 1895.

454. Have you ever asked for promotion since that report was written? I have never asked for promotion in my life.
455. Of course you do not know whether Senior-constable Skinner has asked for promotion or not? I do not know.
456. Mr. Travers Jones.] In your report here, you say that you saw a man and a woman lying on a vacant piece of ground, and about 12 yards off—which of the constables does that refer to? The first man and woman I saw were Constable Easterbrook and the girl Burns.
457. Your report goes on to say, "The constable watched them for some time as they were hugging and pulling one another about"—was that Constable Easterbrook? Yes.
458. "The constable then noticed another man and woman lying close to the fence on the same piece of ground, and about 10 yards off the footpath"—that was Constable Stanton? Yes.
459. "The constable went over to Easterbrook, and then to the woman (a prostitute named Burns)";—do you know her to be a prostitute by repute? I know her to be always about the street with larrikins, and with girls of bad repute.
460. In your experience as a constable, have you ever seen drunken women lying about and exposing themselves, their clothes being up? I have.
461. Would it be your duty to put such a girl's clothes down and remove her? If she were on the street or in a public place.
462. You would simply put her clothes down and remove her? Yes.
463. That is part of your duty? Yes.
464. Would it be the duty of Constable Easterbrook to do the same, if he saw a girl lying within 10 yards of the footpath with her clothes up and exposing herself;—would it be his duty to lift her up and remove her? If she was in a public place it would.
465. Was this a public place? No, it was not; it was a vacant allotment of ground.
466. I think you say in the report that it was within 10 yards of a footpath? Yes; it was within 10 yards of a footpath.
467. Was there a fence between where they were and the footpath? There was not.
468. She had her clothes up, and was exposing herself? Her clothes were disarranged.
469. Would it be your duty to put that woman's clothes down, and remove her from the public gaze? If she was actually exposed it would.
470. Well, was she exposed? Her clothes were disarranged up to her knee.
471. That is exposing herself—a modest woman would not lie down there with her clothes up and exposed to her knee;—is it possible that Constable Easterbrook, in the execution of his duty, went and was wrestling with this woman to get her up when you saw him? He was sitting with her on the ground when I saw him first.
472. Drunken women, you must know, resist? Yes, they do.
473. Easterbrook, when you saw him, was not in the position of lifting her up in the execution of his duty? He was sitting on the ground.
474. With the object of having connection with her? That I do not know. They lay down afterwards.
475. You are not in a position to say whether he was actually doing his duty as a constable, and raising this woman up, to remove her from the public gaze, or whether his object was to have connection with her? Well, from the position he was in, it did not look as if he was trying to get her off the ground, to raise her up, because he was sitting on the ground himself, and then he lay down.
476. And the conclusion you came to was that he was about to act immorally with the woman? I will not say he was.
477. You must have come to some conclusion when you reported the man? I did not report him. I was called upon for a report.
478. Well, in giving that report, were you of opinion that this constable, instead of doing his duty and removing the woman, was about to commit an assault upon her? I would not say he was doing his duty—I could not say that.
479. So your report carries no weight whatever as to this man committing this offence? I stated that he was lying on the ground with this woman.
480. With what object you cannot say? I cannot say.
481. Mr. Carroll.] Was it a moonlight night? It was not—it was not a dark night.
482. Were there any lamps near? Yes; and I believe they were lighted, but I will not swear.
483. Mr. Affleck.] How far was Constable Stanton away from Constable Easterbrook? I reckon about 15 or 20 yards. I believe that Stanton was nearer to us than Easterbrook was when I saw them first.
484. You say Stanton was nearer than Easterbrook? Yes; perhaps a yard or so.
485. Was Stanton further to the north or the south? A little towards the north.
486. How far? About 15 yards.
487. You were about 12 yards from Easterbrook, and he and Stanton were about 15 yards from each other as far as you can judge? Yes; as far as I can judge. I did not measure the distance.
488. You could see Easterbrook easier than Stanton? I would not say easier, but I saw Easterbrook first, and when the senior-constable and I were in the act of going to Easterbrook, we noticed Stanton lying alongside the fence, and the senior-constable went to Stanton first.
489. I think that one of the reports says that Stanton was found on the top of a woman? Yes; Stanton was.
490. And you only saw Easterbrook lying alongside of the other woman? Yes; sitting down first, and then lying down.
491. You cannot say whether they had any connection at all? I cannot say that.
492. What is the rule in the Force about laying charges where two constables are together? I cannot say.
493. You must have rules or regulations, surely, in the Force as to that. Supposing that Skinner is a senior-constable, and you are an ordinary constable, and supposing you two are together and you see something take place for which there ought to be a prosecution—surely there is a rule in the department in connection with that;—is it the duty of the senior-constable to lay the charge? Yes, it is; unless he gives instructions to the constable to do it.
494. Well, if senior-constable fails to do so, is it the duty of the ordinary constable to take action? Generally the senior-constable does take action.

495. But in this case he did not; he did not prosecute Stanton in connection with this prostitution—at least, we have no evidence that he did; and if a prosecution for prostitution should take place, why was there no prosecution in this case? I do not know.
496. Seeing that Skinner failed to do his duty, was it not your duty to make a charge? It is simply left to the senior-constable, and if he does not do it the constable does not.
497. Then you do not know what the rules of the Force are in that respect? We have no rules to compel us to do that. It is always left to the senior-constable to prefer the charge if two constables are together. The senior-constable institutes a prosecution, or orders the constable to do so.
498. But failing his doing his duty, would it not be your duty to lay the charge? I have never seen a case where it was done.
499. When you got up to Easterbrook he was away from the woman? Yes.
500. How far? Two or three yards away from her.
501. You saw him getting away from her? I saw him get up and walk away.
502. Mr. Anderson.] Did you see Constable Easterbrook commit any offence with the woman? I did not.
503. Had you any reason to believe that he was about to commit an offence? Well, from the position he was in, it seemed so.
504. How long was it from the time you first saw Easterbrook to the time you spoke to him, and went up to him with the senior-constable? We went up to Stanton first.
505. How long afterwards was it that you went to Easterbrook? It would only be about a couple of minutes, I suppose.
506. How long was it from the time you first saw them that you went up to him? Only about a couple or three minutes. We went to Stanton, and he got up off the woman, and then Skinner walked across to Easterbrook.
507. I think I have heard it said that Stanton was on the top of the woman? He was.
508. Would you not consider it your duty, or would not the senior-constable consider it his duty, if you thought either of those persons was about to commit an offence, to endeavour to prevent it? Well, Stanton had committed the offence before we got up to him, and Easterbrook rose up and walked away from the woman he was with.
509. But there was nothing to lead you to believe that Easterbrook was about to commit an offence? Only the position he was in. As I have already stated, he was lying down with her. They were sitting down in the first instance, and pulling each other about, and afterwards he was lying down with her.
510. Did the position he was in justify you in coming to the conclusion that he was endeavouring to cover her nakedness? I could not say that, because he was sitting down with her, and then lying down with her.
511. You never knew anything against Easterbrook's character that would justify you in believing that he would commit such an offence? No, I have not.

Constable
J. Aitken.
9 Oct., 1895.

THURSDAY, 10 OCTOBER, 1895.

Present:—

MR. AFFLECK,		MR. CARROLL,
MR. ANDERSON,		MR. TRAVERS JONES.
JOHN LIONEL FEGAN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Nathaniel Easterbrook appeared in person on his own behalf.

James Aitken recalled and further examined:—

512. Mr. Travers Jones.] You have no doubt that Constable Stanton was guilty of the charge made against him? He was.
513. Have you any doubt about Constable Easterbrook being guilty? He was guilty of lying down with the woman.
514. Not as serious a charge as the other one? That is all I saw him doing—sitting down and lying down.
515. You cannot say he was having connection with the woman? No; I cannot.
516. Chairman.] I think I asked you a question yesterday in reference to the identification of the woman;—do you think you could identify her? I do not say I would.
517. But you do not say you would not, I suppose? No.

Constable
J. Aitken.
10 Oct., 1895.

[Emma Louise Ashton called into the room.]

518. Have you ever seen this woman before to your knowledge? No, I have not.
519. You have not seen this woman before to your knowledge? No, I have not.
520. What would you say if it was said that this was the woman you made this charge against? I do not believe it is.
521. Have you ever made any serious charges against constables for neglect of duty, and so forth? No, sir.
522. Mr. Easterbrook.] Will you swear that this is not the woman that you accused me with being with that night? I do not believe it is the woman.
523. You will not swear it is not? I said, "I do not believe it is the woman."
524. Did you report Constable Murray at one time? I did.
525. Was it a serious charge? No.
526. What was the outcome of it? I do not know.
527. You do not know the decision? I do not know—on my report.
528. Is it settled yet? I do not know, but no doubt it is. Murray is not in the Force now.
529. Was it not for that that he got dismissed from the Force? I believe not.
530. Do you remember Constable Skinner reporting Constable Plunkett at one time at Canterbury? I do not remember at the present moment.
531. You assisted him, and were asked for a report on the matter? I do not remember at the present moment. If you recall the circumstances to my memory, I will see.
532. It was a case of neglect. Constable Skinner reported Constable Plunkett for neglect, and you were referred to on the matter? In what way?

533.

Constable
J. Aitken.
10 Oct., 1895.

533. To report on the matter—perhaps in the same way you have reported on my case? If you tell me the circumstances of the case I may be in a position to answer you.
534. You will not say that you did not? I will not say that I did not. Since you have mentioned this matter, I may explain, for the information of the Committee, the constable on the top end next Canterbury always meets the Canterbury man at 9 o'clock at night to receive the routes and the orders coming from Newtown. One night—no doubt it is the same that Easterbrook speaks of—the Canterbury man, Plunkett, was not there. When I went off duty, at 10 o'clock, I gave in the orders that I had to take back. I was called for a report as to why I took the orders back, and I explained that Plunkett was not there to receive them.
535. You can remember all about the case now? I do remember it now.
536. Did you assist Constable Skinner at any time when he reported Constable Benmore? I do not know.
537. You know that Constable Skinner has reported Benmore at different times? I believe he has.
538. Did you never assist him, or report on the matter? I was once called upon for a report on the matter. I will explain this matter. I was working one beat, and Benmore was working the beat next me. Crystal-street, Petersham, divided the two beats. I was always at the top of Crystal-street at 4 o'clock in the morning—this was night duty—and when I paraded Crystal-street towards the Parramatta Road I sometimes saw the man on the next beat on the Parramatta Road. One morning Senior-constable Skinner asked me if I had seen Benmore. I replied that I had not. He asked me for a report on the matter. Benmore also stated that he had not seen me or anyone else.
539. Do you know what was the outcome of that case? I do not.
540. You will not swear that Benmore did not get out of it? I do not know what was done in the matter.
541. You have been at Petersham about five years? Over five years.
542. During that time, how long have you been on Senior-constable Skinner's relief? I could not say. I have been sometimes on Skinner's relief, and sometimes on Senior-constable Meehan's relief.
543. You have been on Senior-constable Skinner's relief more than half the time, have you not? Well, Senior-constable Meehan has not been there all the time.
544. If he was not there, there was Senior-constable Orr, and out of the whole of the time you have been at Petersham you have been more than half of that time on Senior-constable Skinner's relief? I cannot say. That could be ascertained from the records in the police station.
545. Will you swear that you have not? I could not say.
546. Have you yourself been reported many a time? I have.
547. Have you been reported for indecent assault? I will explain this matter if I am allowed. Something over four years ago an anonymous letter was sent to my officer. In this letter there were several charges made by several persons against me.
548. Chairman.] Nobody directly charged you? Not in this letter.
549. Mr. Affleck.] What do you mean by several persons making several charges? This letter represented that several persons might be in a position to make charges against me.
550. The letter said that? Yes; the one letter—it was an anonymous letter. Upon the receipt of this letter inquiries were made by my officer.
551. Who was the officer? Inspector Larkins was in charge then. I may state that the alleged occurrences were supposed to have taken place six or seven months previous to this letter being written. Inquiries were made, and, as far as I am aware, nothing further came out of the matter.
552. Mr. Easterbrook.] You were also reported for neglect at one time? I was reported by Senior-constable Meehan.
553. And reprimanded? I was not. It was for not reporting "all right" in the ordinary way of police duty. I was told that in this matter I was quite right, because Senior-constable Meehan was in company with civilians at the time.
554. Was a report sent to your officer at one time that you were living at lodgings where the people were of bad repute? This anonymous letter drew reference to that also.
555. Were you ordered to change your lodgings? I changed my lodgings.
556. Were you ordered to change them? I was not.
557. Did that landlady or her daughter ever give you a letter stating that they would institute an action against you for a breach of promise? Never.
558. I should like you to tell me in what particular part of Crystal-street you were when you first saw me that morning? Well, the vacant allotment of ground was between Westbourne-street and Douglas-street.
559. Were you between Roberts-street and Norwood-street? No. We were between Westbourne-street and Douglas-street when we saw you first.
560. Chairman.] That is when you saw the wrestling taking place? Yes.
561. Mr. Easterbrook.] How far were you away from me and Stanton? As far as I could judge, about 12 yards from you.
562. Did you know that we were police? I did not know that you were police.
563. Was the girl, Mary Gale, ever convicted of anything before that night? Not that I know of.
564. Did you summon her whilst our case was pending? I do not remember summoning Mary Gale.
565. You have never had occasion to summon her? I do not remember ever summoning her.
566. Chairman.] You would not swear that you did not? I do not believe I did. I will almost swear I did not.
567. Mr. Easterbrook.] Did any other policeman ever have her up for anything? I could not say.
568. Chairman.] Did you, with any other constable, bring a charge against Mary Gale while this case was pending? No; I do not believe I did.
569. Mr. Easterbrook.] Did you ever know this girl Burns to be up at the Police Court? No.
570. Do you know where she was employed at that time? No.
571. Do you know where she lived at that time? I do not know for certain.
572. Would you mind describing the girl? I described her yesterday as plainly as I could.
573. Would you mind doing it again? I can simply describe the girl as being of dark complexion and of medium height, and as far as I could judge about 20 years of age at the time this affair occurred.
574. What colour was her hair? I cannot say.
575. You had seen her before that time? Yes.
576. Sufficiently to class her as a prostitute? From the company I had seen her in.
577. Yet you cannot describe the woman? I never saw her in the daylight to have a proper look at her. I have seen her at night, and knew her to be the same girl I had seen before in company with other girls.

Constable
J. Aitken,
10 Oct., 1895.

578. When you wrote your report—I think on the 3rd January—where did you write it? I do not remember. It may have been at home, or it may have been in the Stanmore Police Station.
579. Was Senior-constable Skinner present when you wrote it? I do not believe he was; if it was written at home, he was not.
580. Will you swear he was not present? I say that if I wrote my report at home he was not present, and if I did it in the Stanmore Police Station he may have been present.
581. You are not sure where you wrote it? I am not.
582. And you are not sure whether Senior-constable Skinner was there or not? I say that if I did it in the Stanmore Police Station he may have been there. Previous to writing my report, I explained to Mr. Larkins, my officer, the whole circumstances of the case as far as I knew, and he told me to put it on paper, and let him have it in the form of a report.
583. You said that you saw me sitting down alongside this woman, hugging and pulling her about? I have already said so.
584. And then that I lay down? Yes.
585. Did I hug and pull her about after I lay down? Not that I saw.
586. And you state in your report that you saw a man and woman lying on a vacant piece of ground—lying, mind you? Yes.
587. And that the constable was hugging and pulling her about? Yes.
588. Lying down? Sitting down first, and then lying down.
589. You said just now that I was not pulling her about when I was lying down? I say so still.
590. Is it not possible that you made a mistake, and that I was not at all near the girl? I saw you with my own eyes.
591. And you say I walked away a few yards? About 2 or 3 yards.
592. When you came to me, where was I? You were standing about 2 or 3 yards away from this girl.
593. Was it on the vacant ground, or in Crystal-street? You were on the vacant piece of ground.
594. Mr. Affleck.] You say that when you went across there, Easterbrook was 2 or 3 yards away from the girl? Yes.
595. You could not be mistaken in thinking that it was he? I could not be mistaken.
596. Did you go over to the woman then? I did.
597. Was she lying on the ground? She was lying on the ground on her back.
598. Were her clothes up? Her clothes were disarranged, and her knees were exposed.
599. Had you ever any feeling against Easterbrook? Not in the slightest. We were the best of friends.
600. That is, at the time this took place? Up to this time.
601. At the time this affair took place? Yes.
602. You say that this girl or woman, who was called in here just now, is, to the best of your knowledge, not the girl? I do not believe she is the girl.
603. Do you know the girl Gale? Yes.
604. Is that the girl Gale? No. The girl Gale is about the Parramatta Road still, and I see her there night and day.
605. You are sure this is not the girl Gale? This is not the girl Gale.
606. Nor is she, to the best of your belief, the girl Burns? I do not believe she is the girl Burns. I do not believe she is the girl I saw with Easterbrook that night.
607. Chairman.] Whom you reported as being the girl Burns? She gave the name Burns.
608. Mr. Easterbrook.] Then you do not know who this woman is at all? I do not know.
609. Mr. Affleck.] Have you ever seen her before? I do not believe I have. I do not recognise her.
610. Mr. Anderson.] Will you swear that she is not the woman? Well, I do not believe she is the woman.
611. You have no knowledge of these women being prostitutes further than the company that they were keeping? That is all.
612. You are speaking from the fact of the company they were keeping and not from anything you saw personally? That is it.
613. They have been the associates of loose characters, but you have not seen them commit themselves in such a manner that you could charge them with being prostitutes? No, I have not. I judge them simply from the company they keep.
614. Were you present at the time when Senior-constable Skinner said to Easterbrook, "There is nothing against you, Easterbrook"? No, I was not.
615. Did you hear him say that? No.
616. Could he have said that without your hearing it? He could not—not at the time I was with him.
617. But you were not with him all the time? We went off duty. Not as long as I was with him did I hear him say so.
618. He would have an opportunity of saying so to Easterbrook without your hearing? When we had parted.
619. Mr. Easterbrook.] Did you hear Senior-constable Skinner charge me with anything? I did.
620. What did he charge me with? When he went over to you he said, "Who is this you have been lying with here?" After he lifted the woman off the ground, or pulled her off the ground, he asked her what her name was. Stanton came up then, and Skinner said, "I am surprised at your conduct."
621. Are you sure he did not say, "I am ashamed of you, Stanton?" He did not use those words. He addressed you both.
622. Are you sure? I am quite sure.
623. Mr. Affleck.] Which woman did he pull off the ground—the woman with Easterbrook or the other? The girl Easterbrook was with—Burns.
624. Chairman.] When he was charged, what did Easterbrook say? He made no reply; he never said a word.
625. He did not say that it was not true? He did not.

Emma Louise Ashton called in, sworn, and examined:—

626. Chairman.] Where do you live? I am living at 454, Pitt-street, Sydney.
627. Did you ever live at Darlington? Yes; I lived at Mr. Gordon's.
628. In what street? Abercrombie-street.

Emma Louise
Ashton,
10 Oct., 1895.

- Emma Louise Ashton. 629. Any other street—Codrington-street or Darlington-street? Yes; I was at service in Codrington-street.
- 10 Oct., 1895. 630. You know that gentleman sitting at the end of the table (Mr. Easterbrook)? Yes.
631. Did you know him as a constable at any time, or in any other position? He was a constable when I first knew him.
632. Have you any recollection of anything occurring during your knowledge of Easterbrook? No; only on New Year's night I was out with Mary Gale. It was the first night I knew Mary Gale. I left her, but I did not go home, and Mr. Easterbrook advised me to go home, and asked me what I was doing out. That is the first time I ever saw Mr. Easterbrook.
633. Did you see any other constables that night? Yes,—Mr. Meehan. He told me it was time to go home.
634. Were you housekeeping for him at that time? No; I was not at service; I was at home.
635. Did you see any other policemen that evening? I saw two, I think; but I do not remember anything in particular in connection with them.
636. Did you ever assume, or did anyone call you by, the name of Burns? No.
637. You never gave the policemen your name as Burns? Yes, I did; because it was so late for me to be out. The policeman asked me what my name was, and I said, "Burns," so that it should not be known that I was found out so late.
638. Were you in Easterbrook's company during that evening? No; he just told me to go home, and then left me and walked away.
639. Can you remember the street he told you to go home in? Westbourne-street.
640. You were standing in Westbourne-street? At the corner of Westbourne-street and Crystal-street.
641. Was any other policeman with Easterbrook at that time? Yes.
642. Did you know him? No, I did not.
643. Were you in company with Easterbrook? No; he only just told me to go home.
644. Were you under the influence of drink that night? No; I never touch drink.
645. Mr. Affleck.] Where does the girl Gale live? I do not know where she lives at present. I have had nothing to do with her since that night.
646. I mean where did she live then? She was living in Westbourne-street then.
647. You say that Easterbrook advised you to go home;—did he advise the girl Gale to go home, too? Yes; we were together.
648. Did you go home together? No; the girl left me and crossed the green, and the other constable went after her and told her to go home, and then Mr. Easterbrook left him and walked up to Douglas-street, and I walked up and said, "Where is that young friend of mine gone?" He said, "She has gone home." I went after her, and then the other two policemen came.
649. You left Easterbrook then? Yes.
650. Did you see this other girl go with the other constable anywhere? No; not that I know of.
651. You did not see the other constable and the girl Gale go away anywhere? No.
652. And you are sure that you and Easterbrook did not go anywhere? Yes.
653. You are positive of that? Yes, I am positive.
654. What time would that be? It was pretty late; it must have been about 1 o'clock or half-past.
655. In the morning? Yes.
656. That was not a very reasonable hour to be out? It was New Year's night.
657. You say that you did not go with Easterbrook anywhere? No.
658. Where had you come from when Easterbrook met you? We were coming from the Parramatta Road, up Crystal-street.
659. What was the whole extent of the conversation that you had with Easterbrook? I had no conversation at all; he simply told me to go home.
660. Why would he do that;—why would he interfere with you if you were going along the street? We were standing at the corner of Westbourne-street, and he told us to move on or go home, and asked us what we were doing out at that time of the night. I was only 14 at that time.
661. And you went home then? No, I did not; I walked on, and this girl walked with me. I was frightened to go home, because I had been out so late with this girl, and I was frightened my mother would scold me.
662. You lived with your mother? Yes.
663. You say you left him immediately he told you to go home? Yes; and I went after Gale to see where she went.
664. What happened then? I did not find her, and I came back. The two constables asked me what I was doing out at that time of night, and I said that I was waiting for a girl.
665. You met the two constables after you had been looking for the girl Gale? Yes.
666. As you were going back? Yes.
667. The two constables were together? Yes.
668. Do you know the name of the constable? Constable Skinner, I think.
669. And the other was the one you saw here—Aitken? I do not remember seeing him.
670. They met you when you were going back? Yes.
671. How long before that had you seen Easterbrook? It was not very long. I cannot well recollect; it is such a long time ago.
672. You say, then, that you came along the Parramatta Road and met Easterbrook, and he asked you what you were doing there? No; I met Mr. Meehan at the corner of the Parramatta Road. I had been at service at his house, and he knew me. He said, "What are you doing out at this time of the night?" I said, "I am just going home." We walked up Crystal-street, and we stood at the corner of Westbourne-street, and the two constables came along.
673. Which two constables? Mr. Easterbrook and the other constable. I was standing there, but left Mary Gale to go home. She was going to Westbourne-street, and I was going to Burns-street, off Brighton-street. We were standing there talking when the constables came up and said that we had better go home; what business had we out. We walked on up to Douglas-street.
674. Chairman.] These constables were Easterbrook and another? We walked up to Douglas-street and stood there, and during that time these constables followed us and asked us if we hadn't gone home yet, and we said "No, but we're going." Mary Gale left me and crossed the paddock, and then Mr. Easterbrook said that I had better go home, and I said, "No, I would go and see where Gale went to"; and I left.

675. You went after the girl Gale? I went to look to see where she went, and when I could not find her I went home and the other two constables came across the green.
676. Chairman.] Which two? Skinner and another, and I went home.
677. Mr. Affleck.] You never saw Easterbrook and the other constable at all after you left them to see if you could overtake the girl Gale? No; I never saw them after that.
678. You were in their company, standing and speaking to them, for how long—two or three minutes? About five minutes.
679. You just stood and spoke to them? Yes. They advised us to go home. Mary Gale was much older than I.
680. Mr. Carroll.] Were you on the vacant piece of land, with Constable Easterbrook sitting down or lying down with you? No.
681. Did he pull you about? No; he never put his hand on me.
682. Were Mary Gale and the other policeman lying down on that vacant piece of land near you? No. Mary Gale left me, and I went across the green to look for her, and I could not find her and I came away and went home.
683. You have already stated that you had had no drink? No; I never touch drink.
684. Did Constable Skinner pull you up off the ground or lift you up off the ground? No; he never touched me; never put his hand on me.
685. If Constables Skinner and Aitken swore that they saw Constable Easterbrook pulling you about, and also lying down with you on this vacant piece of ground, and that your clothes were disarranged, is that true or false? It is false.
686. Mr. Anderson.] During the time that you were in the company of Constable Easterbrook and the other constable, and whilst Senior-constable Skinner was present with another constable, did anything occur that would lead them to believe that Constable Easterbrook had handled you or was in any way associated with you? No.
687. Nothing? No. I was by myself, and the two constables came to me and asked what I was doing there. I said I was looking for my mate. Then they said I had better go home. I crossed over and went home. I did not see Constable Easterbrook after I left him at Douglas-street.
688. Chairman.] What age were you then? I was about 14½.
689. What age are you now? I am 18; I shall be 19 on the 31st of next March.
690. Did you ever make a charge against any policeman for anything improper? In what way?
691. Did you ever lay a charge against any policeman for insulting you? No, never.
692. How long did you live at Petersham? About two years.

Mr. Michael Meehan called in, sworn, and examined:—

693. Chairman.] Do you know this young lady (Emma Louise Ashton)? Yes.
694. What do you know about her? I came to Petersham in February, 1891, and the following April or May, my wife not being very well, she was at our place for a week as a nurse-girl.
695. Had you any fault to find with her whilst she was at your place? No. She was not at our place very long. Mrs. Meehan got all right and let her go.
696. Have you ever heard of any case in connection with this young woman and Easterbrook? Yes. I was on duty the night the occurrence is alleged to have taken place.
697. Will you tell us what you know about it? About 1 o'clock I was in company with Constable Devlin. We were told off to work in pairs, it being New Year's night. About 1 o'clock on New Year's morning I saw "Mary Burns," the name I knew this young woman by.
698. Mr. Affleck.] She came to you as "Mary Burns" when you employed her? Yes. When she was at our place that is the name I knew her by. I was in company with Constable Devlin, and seeing the two girls on the road I went and spoke to them—this young woman and Mary Gale. When I got up to them I recognised this girl, and I knew the other also. I said, "It is rather late to be out. You must have had a fair innings all night, and you had better go home." They said "All right," and went away up Crystal-street.
699. Did you hear anything else? Not that night.
700. "Mary Burns" was not in your service then? No; six months previous to that. Constables Easterbrook and Stanton were doing duty together. This happened at 1 o'clock. At 3 o'clock the man that was with me went off duty—that is Devlin—and Stanton, who was with Easterbrook, went off duty, and I took Easterbrook with me. The other two were on day duty on 2nd January. We did not change until the night of the 2nd, and they were told off for different places, and they went off at 3 o'clock. I took Easterbrook with me, and kept him until 6 o'clock in the morning, when both of us went off duty.
701. Did Easterbrook mention anything to you? No; he never said a word to me about the charge Senior-constable Skinner accused him of.
702. Neither about one policeman nor another? No; he never mentioned it.
703. I suppose you have seen this young woman since she was in your service? Yes; I have known her ever since. She has been working in the district ever since. The last place I saw her at was in Camperdown, about six months ago.
704. What sort of a character does this girl bear? I never knew anything against her character.
705. As a policeman doing duty in that centre of population, and knowing the girl you have just seen, and whom you knew as "Mary Burns," you cannot say anything against her character? No. I took particular notice of her after that, on account of this particular occurrence.
706. Do you know she is charged with being a prostitute? Yes; when I came on duty on the night of the 1st, I saw the report.
707. You know this woman has been styled a prostitute? Yes.
708. How long have you been in Petersham? Ever since I was transferred there, in January, 1891.
709. Have you had occasion to see this young woman? Yes; I have seen her dozens of times since.
710. Anything improper about her? Not the slightest.
711. Did she behave properly during the short time she was at your house? Yes.
712. Had your wife any occasion to find fault with her? Not that I am aware of.
713. You told us that next morning you saw the charge-sheet? On the night of the 1st, at half-past 9 when I came to the station for duty, Senior-constable Ford showed me the reports against Easterbrook and

Emma Louise

and Stanton. They were on the desk. I was surprised when I heard they were reported, on account of my having heard nothing about it the night before, and Easterbrook being with me from 3 a.m. to 6 a.m. I said, "What are you giving us?" I did not believe it. Ford said, "It is all right. It is not a very nice thing to be charged with." The papers were sent to Newtown that night, and that is all I knew about it.

714. Did you know Easterbrook well? Yes; he did duty with me at Petersham. He was there before I came and until he left.

715. Did you know him to take drink at any time? No; he was a very sober man.

716. Could you rely upon his word if he gave it to you? Yes; because I had a chance of seeing him during the Broken Hill strike, and he was the only constable left on my relief.

717. Were you senior-constable then? Yes; and have been for the last ten years.

718. What do you think about Easterbrook's ability? When at Petersham he distinguished himself more than any other man at the station.

719. Were you surprised to hear of this charge against Easterbrook? Yes; I was very much surprised.

720. Were you surprised to hear of the charge against "Burns"? Well, I did not know altogether about "Burns." I just read over the reports, and they were put together and sent away.

721. Did you believe the charge to be right? I have never seen her with Gale since. Gale has not a good character; but I have watched this girl, Burns, particularly, on account of this occurrence; and I have met her, knowing her to be working about the district; but I have never known anything against her since.

722. The girl has given her age as 18; do you think that is about the right age of that girl? Yes; she was only 14 or 15 when she was with us.

723. You saw this girl called "Mary Burns," called in before this Committee? Yes.

724. Do you know when a person is drunk? Well, I have had sixteen years' experience in watching drunks.

725. Did you notice any sign of drink on this girl that night? No, she was perfectly sober.

726. That was, at what time? At 1 o'clock in the morning.

727. What about Mary Gale? Well, Mary Gale appeared to me to have had some drink.

728. But "Burns," you will take your oath, was not drunk? Yes; I took particular notice of her. I was rather surprised to see her when I struck a match and had a look at her, and found it was her, and I told her so.

729. Mr. Anderson.] Where was it you saw her then? On the Parramatta-road.

730. You will swear she had had no drink? She was sober, and she tried to hide herself behind Gale, so that I should not see her; and that is how I came to take particular notice of her.

731. And there was therefore a little shame about her for keeping out so late at night? She knew that I knew her, and she did not want me to see her.

732. You are positive she was not drunk? Yes; as positive as I am that I am sitting here.

733. You are friendly with Constable Skinner? Yes; we have been working the same ground.

734. And it is not very pleasant to be unfriendly with each other? No; it is not.

735. Friendly with Constable Aitken? Yes.

736. Friendly with Constable Easterbrook? Yes, we never had any differences.

737. You never had any fault to find with Easterbrook? No, I did not.

738. Do you know that Senior-constable Skinner has made many charges against members of the Force? I know he has made some.

739. Have they all been proper charges? I could not say. I am not qualified to judge.

740. You have been eleven years in the police force? About sixteen years.

741. Are you senior officer to Senior-constable Skinner? Yes, in service and promotion.

742. When this case came under your notice, did you hear anything else—you were not asked to give evidence as to the character of these girls? No; I was never referred to in any way.

743. You could have given evidence as to the sobriety and good conduct of this girl if you had been asked? Yes.

744. But you were not asked? No.

745. Did Easterbrook ever appeal? He made some further explanations afterwards.

746. Mr. Travers Jones.] You say you saw the girls about 1 o'clock? Yes.

747. Did you see the two constables the charge was laid against—Stanton and Easterbrook? I saw them a short time before that.

748. Did you meet or see Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken? Yes. I met both of them on the Parramatta-road.

749. Was that before or after you met the girls? A short time after I met the girls.

750. Between your seeing the girls, and seeing Constables Skinner and Aitken, was it possible for the girls to get the worse for drink? Well, after they went up Crystal-street, I did not see them any more that night.

751. Easterbrook and Stanton were doing duty under you that night? Yes, they were.

752. And if they came across two women lying on this ground with their clothes disarranged, would you expect them to lift them up and take them in charge? If it could be seen from the street it would be an act of indecency.

753. You would expect them to remove the women? I would expect them to do something with them.

754. Put them out of the public gaze? There was a great crowd out that night, there was a band playing a short distance away, and bands of lacrikins all over the place; therefore, the constables were pretty busy shifting one and the other.

755. Mr. Anderson.] And I presume there were also respectable people about? Yes, up to that time.

756. Mr. Travers Jones.] It being New Year's morning people were seeing the old year out and the new year in, and you were not astonished to see the girls at that hour on that occasion? I was surprised to see "Burns."

757. You knowing her to be a respectable girl? Yes.

758. Mr. Anderson.] Did you know any other respectable girls out at that time? After that the crowds disappeared, with the exception of some parties that were singing and the band that was playing. That was about all that were out at that part of Petersham.

759. Mr. Travers Jones.] What time elapsed between your seeing the girls, and when they were accused of being on this vacant allotment with these constables? About an hour.

Mr.
M. Meehan,
10 Oct., 1895.

760. Mr. Affleck.] Was that before or after? That was after. I saw them about 1, and this alleged occurrence is supposed to have taken place at about 2.
761. Then you saw the girls before the alleged offence was said to have been committed? Yes.
762. Supposing that you were standing in Crystal-street, do you think that, in the light that there was then, you could see a man and woman sitting on the ground, pulling each other about 12 yards away? If I had any idea that there was somebody there and were looking in that particular direction, I might see something on the ground.
763. You never know this girl by any other name except "Mary Burns." That is the only name I ever knew her by.
764. You said, "You must have had a fair innings to-night"? Yes.
765. What did you mean by that? I thought that they were out quite long enough.
766. Was there anything at the bottom of the statement, or was there no meaning in it? Seeing them out at that time, I only thought it was nearly time they went home.
767. Did you see Skinner and Aitken that morning? Yes; and spoke to them.
768. Was that before or after you saw the girls? It was after the girls went away that I saw Skinner and spoke to him—about two minutes, I suppose—and I saw him go up Petersham-street, in the direction where these were reported for being afterwards.
769. What direction were the girls going when you met them? They were standing in the street.
770. What direction were the constables coming from when you met them? On the Parramatta-road going towards Sydney. I was standing on the Parramatta-road, and they came down and spoke to each other as to how things went that night.
771. Mr. Carroll.] Prior to this New Year's morning, from the first time that you know this "Mary Burns," did you ever know her to be an associate of bad characters? No; I knew her nine months previously.
772. And she has not been an associate of bad characters since? No.
773. You have never seen her parading the streets with girls of light repute? No.
774. Of course, you would not have taken her into your service if you had not had every confidence in her? That was about six months before.
775. Mr. Anderson.] During the time that you have known this girl, has anything occurred which would justify you in classing her as a prostitute? No; she has worked for a living ever since I knew her.
776. From what you have known of this girl, you would consider it a hardship to class her as a prostitute? I would not so class her.
777. From your own experience of what you have seen of her, you would consider that it would be doing the girl an injustice to class her as a prostitute? Yes.
778. And if she is stated in the report to be a prostitute you believe it to be wrong? Yes; I knew her nine months previously, and I have known her ever since, and on account of this occurrence I have taken particular notice of her—more than I would have done if nothing had occurred. The last time I spoke to her was about six months ago. She was then in a situation in a hotel, in Camperdown. I was looking for a man I wanted. I did not know she was there till I went in to inquire about the man. I saw her, and I think she told me she had been there six months.
779. Chairman.] What about her conduct up to that? I could not find any fault with her.
780. How old was she when she was a nurse girl in your service? Only 14 or 15 years of age, I should take her to have been. She was only a slight girl.
781. That was in April or May, and on the first of the following January this charge was laid against Easterbrook of being with this girl? Yes.
782. The age of consent would not have been reached by her then? Yes: the age of consent is 14.
783. Are there not circumstances where it is 16? Only under the Public Instruction Act. Teachers are liable under New Criminal Law.
784. Did you hear of any unsatisfactory relations between Easterbrook and Constables Skinner and Aitken, prior to this? I could not say of my own knowledge.
785. Were there any rumours to that effect? I heard about a case where Easterbrook was looking for a fellow for stealing something, and he had a row with Skinner about it; but that is only rumour.
786. Mr. Anderson.] So far as you know? Yes.
787. Chairman.] But it was talked of in the station? It was talked of by the constables at the station.
788. What are you supposed to do with prostitutes when you find them in the act of committing an offence? If you find a prostitute in the act of committing an offence in a public place she is liable to arrest.
789. Not summoned? A constable can use his own discretion as to whether he arrests or summons her.
790. But generally you arrest prostitutes? Yes; if found committing an indecency in a public place.
791. Have you seen in this report that Constables Skinner and Aitken caught Stanton right in the act? Yes.
792. Did it ever strike you as strange that a summons was not issued, or an arrest made in connection with that? Well, he could not very well arrest them. The only thing he could do was to report the matter to his Inspector, who then could take what action he thought fit.
793. Mr. Affleck.] Is that the rule of the Department? Yes; as far as I know.
794. Chairman.] Do you mean to say that if you see one of these unfortunates in the act of committing an indecency you cannot arrest her, but that it must be reported? I was referring to the police.
795. But Mary Gale is not a policeman? But the man charged with the offence was a policeman.
796. But what about the woman? The place where the occurrence took place has been pointed out to me since, and it is not a public place but a vacant allotment.
797. Mr. Affleck.] What do you call a public place? A place to which the public have free access on payment of money or otherwise.
798. The law defines a public place as being within hearing—12 yards away is within hearing? As regards the definition of a public place, the Vagrant Act provides that if bad language can be heard in any street or public place it is an offence, even if it is used in a private place; but if the place is private and a man commits an act of indecency there it must be seen from a public place or it is no offence.
799. I asked you if you thought that you could see a man and a woman shaking each other 12 yards away, and you said "Yes," and evidence has been given that that was seen, and that would make it a public place? You might see a man and a woman, but not be able to see any act of indecency, the night being very dark.

- Mr. Meehan.
10 Oct., 1895.
800. Chairman. Did I not understand you to say that you struck a match in order to see why this girl was standing behind Mary Gale? Yes.
801. If it were necessary for you to strike a match to see a girl a foot or two away from you, do you not think it was impossible to see people 12 yards off? What I mean is you could see something on the grass, but could not recognise what it was until you went right up to it.
802. Was it a dark night? I think it was dark.
803. Were there lamps very near to the place? There is a lamp a little way up the street on the other side.
804. Could you see plainly, from the light of that lamp, people moving or sitting down on this allotment? I have seen the place since, and I say that you could see something if a man or woman were lying or sitting down, but you would not know whether it was a stump or something else until you went close up to it.
805. A man standing 12 yards from the place could not see two people wrestling? He could not, wrestling on the ground.
806. Mr. Affleck.] It was not a moonlight night was it? To the best of my knowledge it was dark—the lamps were lighted. It was not a moonlight night.
807. You say that 12 yards away you could see something, but you would not be able tell whether it was a man and a woman or a stump? Yes.
808. If two constables have sworn positively that they could identify a man and a woman at that distance, they have, in your opinion, sworn falsely? They might, by seeing them before, and seeing them go there, be able to swear to it. But if you came along the street, and had not known anybody was there, I do not think you could.
809. If they came along the road without seeing them then, and if they have sworn that they could identify what they saw as a man and a woman, they have, in your opinion, sworn what is not correct? I would not say.
810. Chairman.] Supposing you were coming along Crystal-street, and were not cognizant of anything taking place 12 yards away from you, and if you looked there, could you swear that it was a man and a woman wrestling or sitting on the ground? No.
811. You would not like to swear that? No.
812. And you have as good eyesight as the majority of men? Yes.
813. You do not wear spectacles? No.
814. Mr. Affleck.] You do not think that a constable could swear that it was a man or a woman, and nothing else? Not at first sight. Unless he went over and investigated it, I do not think he could distinguish them.
815. Mr. Anderson.] Had this allotment any fence to it? There is a fence on the left hand side, as you look towards the allotment, and then this vacant piece of ground, running to the right, and which I take to be about an acre.
816. Chairman.] But is there any fence between the street and the place where these people were supposed to be sitting? No, there is no fence between.
817. Mr. Travers Jones.] If any persons were walking on the road or footpath, could they see them? They might see something on the grass, but to recognise what it was I do not think would be possible, as the night was very dark.

TUESDAY, 15 OCTOBER, 1895.

Present:—

MR. AFLECK,	MR. CARROLL,
MR. BARNES,	MR. TRAVERS JONES.
JOHN LIONEL FEGAN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Nathaniel Easterbrook appeared in person on his own behalf.

Mr. Joseph Devlin called in, sworn, and examined:—

- Mr. J. Devlin.
15 Oct., 1895.
818. Chairman.] You are a constable? Yes.
819. Where are you stationed? At Petersham.
820. Do you know Senior-constable Meehan? Yes.
821. Have you ever been on the same beat with Senior-constable Meehan? Yes.
822. Do you remember the morning of the 1st January, 1892? Yes.
823. Can you tell us what happened, so far as this case is concerned, on that morning? I was on duty that morning in company with Senior-constable Meehan. During the night of December 31, I saw the girl Gale and another girl with her, and I afterwards saw them between 1 and half past 1 o'clock, on the morning of the 1st January. I did not know the girl that was with Gale at the time. Senior-constable Meehan told me that her name was Burns when we met them in the street, and both of us went over to look at them. The girl Burns went behind Gale, and Senior-constable Meehan struck a match, and had a look at her. I said "I have seen that girl before," and asked him her name, and he said that her name was Burns. He made the remark to them "You have been out long enough, and it is time to get home," or words to that effect.
824. You saw the two women? Yes.
825. You were close to them? Yes.
826. Was Burns drunk? No.
827. Was she perfectly sober, to the best of your knowledge? Yes, to the best of my knowledge. But Gale was under the influence of drink.
828. You are perfectly satisfied that Burns was sober then? Perfectly satisfied.
829. How long have you been stationed at Petersham? Since September, 1891.
830. Have you seen this girl, Mary Burns, about the streets of Petersham? Yes, on a few occasions before that and since.
831. But not in a disorderly way? Never.

Mr.
J. Devlin,
15 Oct., 1895.

832. What sort of a girl do you look upon her as being? I look upon her as being a respectable girl.
833. Not such a character that the word "prostitute" should be applied to her? No.
834. Did Senior-constable Meehan ever say that this girl, Burns, had been at his place? Yes.
835. In what capacity? As a nurse-girl.
836. Did you ever at any time have occasion to speak to her about her disorderly conduct in any shape or form? Never.
837. During the time you were at Petersham, if she had been one of those unfortunates on the street, you would very soon have known about it? Yes.
838. Mr. Affleck.] You say that the second time you saw them was between 1 o'clock and half-past? Yes, as well as I can recollect.
839. At what hour did you see them first? I saw them early during the night—between 11 and 12.
840. Where were they between 11 and 12? On the Parramatta-road.
841. Were they on the Parramatta-road also between 1 and half-past? About the same place.
842. Was anybody with them the first time you saw them? There were a great many people there at the time.
843. Were there two girls? Yes.
844. What were their names? I know the girl Gale; but I did not know that the other girl's name was Burns until Meehan told me.
845. They were both together again between 1 and half-past? Yes.
846. Was anybody in their company? No.
847. Neither time? I cannot say as to the first time, they were amongst the crowds in the street.
848. Did you at any time that night see them on a vacant allotment off the street? No.
849. Did you see them at any time in company with Constable Easterbrook? No.
850. I think you said, in reply to the Chairman, that you have always found this girl, Burns, to be a respectable girl? I knew nothing against her.
851. What is the character of the girl, Gale? I did not look upon her as a respectable girl.
852. Did you look upon her as a prostitute? I could not say, as a prostitute. I have seen her in the company of larrikins.
853. Did you think she was fit for the company of a decent respectable girl? No; I do not think she would be.
854. You would think that if Burns wanted to be thought respectable she would not be in that girl's company? Yes.
855. You did not see them in company with any man that night? No.
856. Neither of them? No.
857. Mr. Travers Jones.] I suppose that the girls were like the rest of the crowd, seeing the old year out and the new year in? Yes.
858. There were some music and rejoicing? Yes.
859. You did not think it anything unusual to see the girls out then? No.
860. Chairman.] I suppose you have been out at all hours of the night on duty? Yes.
861. To your recollection, did you ever see this girl Burns out at such a late hour, either since or before that occasion? No.
862. But it was nothing unusual for the most respectable girls to be out at that time that night? No.
863. How long have you been in this country? About four and a half years, and I have been in the police force the same time.
864. In other parts of the world where you have been it is the usual custom, I suppose, for people to be out on New Year's night? Yes.
865. Bidding good bye to the old year, and welcoming the new year—nothing unusual? Nothing unusual.
866. You would not, as a constable doing your duty, think it right to interfere with any girl out at that hour on that particular morning? No.
867. At other times it would look rather suspicious? Yes.
868. You never saw this girl, Burns, out, either before or since, at that hour of the morning? No.
869. Do you know Senior-constable Skinoer? Yes.
870. Do you know that he made a charge against Easterbrook? Yes.
871. You know Easterbrook? Yes.
872. Have you ever been on duty with him? Yes.
873. Was he such an officer that you think would do such a thing as that now charged against him? No.
874. You do not think he would be guilty of such an action? No; I do not.
875. What was the age of the girl, Burns? She appeared to me to be between 15 and 16.
876. That is rather a young girl to be on the streets, I suppose? Yes.
877. And rather young for people to call her a prostitute? Yes.
878. Do you know anything that happened after the charge was made? No.
879. Do you know that Easterbrook was asked to retire from the force? I am aware that he was dismissed from the force.
880. A man sending in his resignation really means dismissal? I understood that he did not send in his resignation, but was dismissed.
881. I suppose that his brother officers were surprised that such a charge should be brought against him? Yes.
882. Did you find Constable Easterbrook sober, steady, and truthful? Yes.
883. A reliable comrade? Yes.
884. I suppose it has not come to your knowledge that this girl's name has been connected with that of Senior-constable Wright, at any time. No; it has not come to my knowledge.
885. Have you read the printed papers in connection with Easterbrook's case? Yes; I have seen them.

Mr. John Ford called in, sworn, and examined:—

Mr.
J. Ford.
15 Oct., 1895.

886. Chairman.] You are a constable? A senior-constable.
 887. Where stationed now? I am lockup-keeper at Stanmore.
 888. Did you know Easterbrook when he was in the police force? Yes.
 889. Were you senior-constable at that time? Yes.
 890. Where were you stationed then? At the same place.
 891. What had you to do with Easterbrook, you being at Stanmore, and he being at Petersham? They are in the same police district. The watch-house does for Stanmore and Petersham.
 892. What sort of man was Easterbrook under you? A very good man.
 893. A truthful man? Yes.
 894. Reliable? Yes; and a sober man.
 895. Do you know why he was discharged from the police force? Yes.
 896. Would you tell us why? He was reported for immoral conduct with a prostitute by Senior-constable Skinner.
 897. Who was the person? A girl named Burns.
 898. What time of the year was it? New Year's morning, 1892.
 899. Did you see Easterbrook during that night? I think I did see him about 12 o'clock. He came round to the station once, and went away again.
 900. I understand that you have special arrangements for special occasions? Yes; the men are told off by the officer in charge of the district.
 901. You say that you saw Easterbrook about 12 o'clock? Yes.
 902. Was he sober at that time? Yes.
 903. Was he in company with any other constable? Yes, Constable Stanton.
 904. They came in to report, I suppose? Yes, they called at the station.
 905. I suppose that is the usual thing for constables to do? Yes; at this particular time they were told off to do a certain beat, and they called at the station to report themselves.
 906. Was Stanton perfectly sober that night? I did not see anything wrong with him at that time.
 907. And you are sure about Easterbrook? Yes; I am sure he was sober.
 908. Do you know this girl Burns? No.
 909. You never saw her? No; nor heard tell of her.
 910. I suppose, from your position as senior-constable, you were familiar with some of the worst characters in the town? I know the majority of them.
 911. Do you remember the name of this girl Burns ever coming before you before that time? I never heard the slightest thing of that girl before. A girl named Burnus, eleven years ago, was in some trouble with a constable named Wright.
 912. And this is not that girl? No; that girl would be, I suppose, a woman of 35 now.
 913. The person that Easterbrook is charged with having to do with is not the person that Senior-constable Wright had something to do with? No, she could not be. That was eleven years ago, and this girl Burns is only a young girl.
 914. Do you know that that charge was brought against her? Not against this young girl, because that girl was over 20 then.
 915. Would you be surprised if there is a report that this girl is the same girl that charged Senior-constable Wright with a criminal assault? I have heard since that it was stated that she was the same girl—I heard that a few days ago.
 916. But you know it is not so? I know it is not the same girl.
 917. I suppose you know that this girl has been called a prostitute? Yes.
 918. If that were so you would have opportunities of seeing her? If that were so I would know something concerning it.
 919. And you do not know anything about it? I never heard tell of it before.
 920. Do you know Mary Gale? Yes. She has been at the station once or twice. She charged some larrikins with committing a rape upon her about five years ago—before this affair. That is how I first heard tell of her.
 921. So you know the girl Gale? Yes.
 922. And even if she had not been to the station you would have had opportunities of seeing her? I would have heard of her.
 923. And yet you never heard of this girl Burnus till this case came on? No.
 924. It is a fact that when a character of this sort is represented to you you keep a sharp look out for her? If there is a girl found to be a prostitute on the street constables notice her and she is pointed out by one to another.
 925. She becomes a sort of marked character? Yes.
 926. From the time this case cropped up about Easterbrook you have not seen this girl parading the streets? No; I never heard tell of her since.
 927. Do you know that Senior-constable Skinner has ever laid charges against other constables? Yes, he has reported a good number.
 928. Has he reported more than you have? Yes.
 929. How long have you been in the service? Thirteen years in this country and six in the old country, at Aldershot.
 930. And there is no doubt that Senior-constable Skinner has made more charges against constables than you have? Yes, he has.
 931. I suppose that you have made some charges against constables? Well, you cannot get out of it sometimes.
 932. But if it is possible to get a fellow right without charging him you generally do it? Yes. Every man commits himself in some way, and if you can possibly get a man through it is all the better.
 933. Better for the Force and everybody else, too? Yes.
 934. You believe that treating men as men is better than tyrannising over them? Yes.
 935. They will do more work? Yes.
 936. And do it more willingly? Yes.
 937. Therefore a man, having a number of men under his control, by treating them kindly and as men, can get more work done, and more willingly? Yes, I think so.

938. So you do not think that it is a good trait in a man's character to be always complaining about the men under him? No, I do not.
939. Mr. Affleck.] Do you know Skinner? Yes.
940. What sort of a character does he bear among his superior officers? I would rather you should ask that question of the senior-sergeant. Skinner and I are in the same rank.
941. What is your own opinion about him? We have always got on very well together.
942. You did not, on the night in question, see any of the people alluded to? Not the girls.
943. Did you see the constables? Yes.
944. Where they under the influence of liquor—either of the constables? No.
945. What constable was with Skinner? Constable Aitken.
946. What sort of a character does Aitken bear in your estimation? Aitken bears a very good character, excepting that he has been reported a few times. I think Senior-sergeant Stanwix has reported him on his conduct once or twice.
947. You do not go on the beat, do you? No.
948. You are always in the station? Yes.
949. Chairman.] But you go in the streets some times? Yes. I know the majority of the people in Petersham.
950. Mr. Easterbrook.] You read the report to me and Stanton? Yes, when you were coming on duty at 10 o'clock, the following night.
951. Did we sit down at once and reply to that? Yes. I supplied you with paper.
952. You were there the whole of the time? Yes.
953. About how much time did we have to make that reply in? I think you arrived at the station about 9 o'clock. I sent a man down to your house, as far as I remember, and I think you arrived about 9 o'clock.
954. Would the other man come at half-past 9 to go on duty at 10 o'clock? Yes.

Mr. J. Ford,
15 Oct., 1895.

Mr. Thomas Stanwix called in, sworn, and examined:—

955. Chairman.] You are a senior-sergeant? Yes.
956. Where are you stationed? At Marrickville at present.
957. Have you ever been stationed at Petersham? At Leichhardt.
958. Has that anything to do with Petersham? I am in charge at the present time of St. Peters, Marrickville, and Petersham.
959. Do you know Easterbrook? Yes, well.
960. Did you know him when he was in the police force at Petersham? Yes, I did.
961. I suppose he was under you? He was not under me at that time. I was on station duty at Newtown at that time and Easterbrook was at Petersham.
962. Do you know Senior-constable Skinner? Yes.
963. Is he under you? Yes.
964. Was he under you then? No, not then.
965. I suppose you have a knowledge of the charges he has brought against constables from time to time? I have.
966. Can you relate to us any of the charges brought, whether founded or unfounded—first deal with Easterbrook's case? I think he brought a charge against Constable Easterbrook and Constable Stanton on New Year's Eve—I forget the year. He also brought a charge against Constable Freeman.
967. What was the charge against Easterbrook? I did not have anything to do with the charge, but as far as I can recollect it was for having some intercourse with some girl.
968. What was the charge against Freeman? I think it was for wearing a pair of gloves on night duty.
969. Any others? I cannot think of any others.
970. Did you have to deal with any charges as his superior officer? No, none. I simply saw the papers going through the office. I had temporary charge of most of the papers that went through the office when I was on duty at the station, but I cannot bring my memory to them at the present time—there were a good many of them. Nearly all the papers in the division went through my hands.
971. That is what we want to get at—the papers that passed through your hands in reference to these charges; I suppose that a constable does not know much about charges made against his brother officers? No.
972. Generally, the men who have to deal with the papers? Yes. There are a good number of papers which inspectors do not think proper to go through sergeants' hands, and I do not think that Easterbrook's papers went through my hands.
973. To whom did they go? The Inspector. I am not sure; but I think they were treated as confidential. They went through Mr. Larkins' hands.
974. How is it that they were treated as confidential? They did not go through the sergeant's hands.
975. Well, what constitutes a confidential case? I do not mean exactly confidential; but kept out of the charge-room, so that everybody does not know what is going on at the time.
976. What is the reason for that? Simply, I suppose, that the men should not know what is going on.
977. On the more serious charges, I suppose? Yes; more serious charges which the Inspector keeps under his own observation.
978. Was Easterbrook directly under you? Not directly under me; but I knew him. Pretty well all his business used to go through Newtown.
979. Mr. Affleck.] Did you say that Senior-constable Skinner is under you? Yes, at the present time.
980. What sort of a character does he bear? I cannot say anything against him.
981. Is he given to making reports on frivolous matters—is it a sort of rule that he does that sort of thing? I cannot say it is a rule with him.
982. Does he often make charges on frivolous matters? Not that I am aware of. Since Senior-constable Skinner has been directly under me there have been very few reports from him. When he had charge of Petersham I was at Newtown, and since I have had charge of St. Peters, Marrickville, and Petersham, there have been very few reports from Senior-constable Skinner.
983. As his superior officer, what do you say is his character? I cannot say anything against his character.
984. You know Aitken, I suppose? Yes.

Mr.
T. Stanwix,
15 Oct., 1895.

- Mr. T. Stanwix.
15 Oct., 1895.
985. What sort of a character does he bear? He is a sober, respectable man; but, a few years ago I had to make some inquiry about Aitken.
986. Is he given to making frivolous charges? I could not say they were frivolous.
987. Has he made any charges to you against anyone? He has made no charges to me at all.
988. Not since he has been under you? No; I have had no charges laid by him.
989. How long have Skinner and Aitken been under you? About two years.
990. Do you, of your own personal knowledge, know anything about the girls now in question? I do not know the girls referred to at all.
991. You do not know them by name? Yes; I know them by name.
992. You would not know them to be the particular girls—for instance, if Gale or Burns were brought in here you would not know her? There were two girls named Burns, in Petersham, I believe—one with whom Senior-constable Wright had something to do; but that Burns was a one-armed girl. There was another girl whom Wright had something to do with—a girl named Paramount.
993. Have you ever seen Skinner or Aitken under the influence of liquor? Never.
994. Have you ever seen Easterbrook under the influence of liquor? Never.
995. You do not, of your own knowledge, know anything of this case against Easterbrook? I do not.
996. Chairman.] Nor the girls? Nor the girls.
997. Are you sure, from your own knowledge, that there were two girls of the name of Burns, in Petersham? The only Burns I know has only one arm. The other Burns talked about I do not know, and never saw her to my knowledge.
998. What sort of a character was the girl Burns, who has only one arm? Not very good.
999. How old was she? I suppose she is now about 35 years of age—over 30, any way. She used to go by the name of "Wingy" Burns, she having only one arm.
1000. You remember the time that Easterbrook was charged with this affair? Yes.
1001. Were you surprised that he was charged? I was. He was one of the best men in the division—there is no doubt about that—the man who got more felony cases in that district than any other constable.
1002. Then he was a good officer? Yes; very good.
1003. And you, as a man well-up in the service, could trust him now, even although this charge is hanging over him? I would trust him anywhere.
1004. Even now? Yes; even now.
1005. Mr. Easterbrook.] You stated just now, in reply to Mr. Affleck, that there was some trouble Aitken was in, and which you investigated? Yes.
1006. Would you mind telling the committee what that was? I could not be exactly sure without seeing the papers and refreshing my memory, but I think that it was an attempted rape, or something of that kind on a girl. It was something to do with a young girl. I had a long inquiry to make over the matter.
1007. Mr. Affleck.] Does that often happen with constables? No.
1008. Mr. Easterbrook.] Was there only one girl in that affair? No, two or three—I think there was a married woman as well as a girl.
1009. One of those girls was taken to the Ashfield lock-up to be questioned on the matter? Yes, I took her to the Ashfield lock-up.
1010. While there did she maintain that Aitken had assaulted her? Yes.
1011. Although she was afraid that she was going to be locked up she still maintained that Aitken had assaulted her? Yes.
1012. There was another charge upon which Aitken was reported—I think for living in lodgings of ill repute? It was all in one charge. He was ordered to leave those lodgings, which were kept by a Mrs. Miller.
1013. Are Skinner and Aitken great friends? There is no doubt about their being friends.
1014. They are more together than any two men, in Petersham? Well, not so much as they used to be. As they used to perform temporary plain clothes duty together.
1015. Since you have had charge, they are not so much together as they were before? No, they are not.
1016. When Skinner used to report a man was it not noticeable that he had Aitken at his back more than any other man? Yes, I think it was.
1017. Did Skinner assist in getting Aitken out of that trouble at the time he was reported for assaulting those females? Not to my knowledge, he did not.
1018. Did you ever hear it mentioned amongst the police at Newtown, that I had been victimised in this matter? I think it was thought in all parts of the division.
1019. You are sure about Aitken being ordered to leave those lodgings at that time? I am pretty confident. He did leave them anyway.
1020. Chairman.] What was the reason why he was ordered to leave? The inquiry I had to make was about the boarding-house keeper and her daughter not being of good character, and it was thought that he had been having intercourse with them.
1021. There was so much evidence that you thought it better for him to remove? He was instructed to leave the lodgings.
1022. How old was the girl upon whom Aitken was alleged to have committed the rape? I do not think she was more than 15 or 16.
1023. Did a medical examination take place? I do not think so; it was too long after.
1024. That was the reason assigned? I cannot say that that was the reason, but there was no medical examination. Some time elapsed before we got any of the facts to work upon.
1025. But a medical examination is the usual thing if a girl charges a man with rape? Yes.
1026. How is it that a medical examination was not made in that case? I could not tell you, unless I were to refer to the papers to refresh my memory. I am not clear as to what the charge was.
1027. The lapse of time between the event and the report was too long? I think so.
1028. Mr. Affleck.] What was the result of the inquiry? I do not know the result. I did not give the man the result; it was given to him by his superior officer.
1029. Did you make any recommendation? No; I simply took the statements and made my report.
1030. And you do not know what the result was? No, I do not.
1031. Chairman.] And you do not know what you thought? No, I do not know what I thought. I could not tell without refreshing my memory by reference to the papers. I have so many inquiries that I cannot keep them all in my mind.

1032. Mr. Easterbrook.] Do you recollect a rumour that Senior-constable Skinner was in a paddock with a girl named "Moll" Crick? Yes; she was a prostitute. T. Stanwix.
15 Oct., 1896.
1033. Did you ever hear that Skinner was drunk at one time at Camperdown Town Hall and that the larrikins were kicking his helmet about the street? Yes, I did. At the opening of the Town Hall, I think it was.
1034. Do you know if there was any truth in that statement? I could not say that.
1035. Chairman.] No inquiry ever made? No inquiry was ever made to my knowledge.
1036. No charge ever made? No charge was ever made to my knowledge.
1037. Who was the officer in charge of the district then? Mr. Larkins. I do not know if Mr. Larkins ever heard of it. It was just mooted amongst the men.
1038. Well, there must have been a grain of truth about it? I should think there was some truth in it, or they would not have talked about it.

Lavington Roope Orr called in, sworn, and examined:—

1039. Chairman.] You are a sergeant in the Police Force? Yes. L. R. Orr.
15 Oct., 1896.
1040. And you are stationed at Leichhardt? Yes.
1041. How long have you been in the Police Force? Fourteen and a half years.
1042. At one time were you in charge of Petersham? Occasionally, I was.
1043. Were you ever in charge while Easterbrook was there? I was.
1044. And Easterbrook was under you? Yes.
1045. What sort of an officer did you find Easterbrook? He was a steady, energetic officer, who appeared to take great interest in his duties.
1046. Do you remember any charge being brought against Easterbrook? Yes.
1047. What charge was it? A charge of adultery with a girl named Burns.
1048. Do you know that Burns has been styled a prostitute? Yes, I heard so.
1049. To your knowledge, or rather as far as your duties permit you to see, do you think that that is correct? No.
1050. Did you know this Burns? No.
1051. If she had been a bad character parading the streets of Petersham, I suppose you would have seen her? Yes, and known her.
1052. Do you know Mary Gale? Yes.
1053. You have seen her often, I suppose? Yes.
1054. Do you remember the particular time when Easterbrook was charged with this misconduct? I think it was 1st January, 1892.
1055. The morning or the night of the 1st January? I think it would be in the early morning, as far as I can recollect.
1056. Of course, you know the custom of the people of this country on New Year's morning? Yes.
1057. You expect a big crowd out on that occasion, do you not? Yes. All the police are out on special duty that morning.
1058. On account of the big crowds out? Yes.
1059. On account of the people being out so late at night, or rather so early in the morning, and the larrikins pulling the gates, and so forth? Yes.
1060. So that you are never surprised to see a larger crowd out that morning, perhaps than even in the daytime? No; there frequently is.
1061. Were you surprised when you heard the charge against Easterbrook? I was.
1062. Did you credit it? Well, I was very much astonished.
1063. Sometimes you are ready to believe a charge straight away, because you know the man, and sometimes you are doubtful;—how did you feel in Easterbrook's case? Well, I was very much surprised.
1064. Have you ever seen this girl, Burns? Not to my knowledge.
1065. I suppose you always found Easterbrook truthful? Very.
1066. Sober? Yes.
1067. Has he ever been charged with any other offence? Not to my knowledge.
1068. So that it came as a complete surprise that he was charged with this misconduct? Yes.
1069. Do you know Senior-constable Skinner? Yes.
1070. I suppose he is a favourite in the Force? Well, I cannot say.
1071. Have you ever had to deal with charges brought by Senior-constable Skinner against any other constables? No.
1072. That is not within your province, I suppose? No, it is not.
1073. Mr. Affleck.] I suppose you knew nothing of your own knowledge about this case at the time? No.
1074. You did not see either the men or the women alluded to on that occasion? I saw two girls. I saw the girl, Gale, but who the other girl was I could not say.
1075. Where? At the corner of Crystal-street and Parramatta Road.
1076. About what time would that be? About 1 o'clock on New Year's morning, or possibly shortly before.
1077. Were they by themselves? Yes; I knew Gale, but I did not know the girl who was with her. She appeared to be a young girl.
1078. Did you see either Easterbrook or Stanton? I saw them on the road.
1079. Near the girls? No; I could not say they were near. They were on the Parramatta Road, passing down. A number of constables were there that night.
1080. Do you know the vacant allotment referred to in this case? Yes.
1081. Did you see that allotment that morning? No; I did not.
1082. You were not there? No.
1083. Mr. Barnes.] How far is that allotment from where you saw the girls at 1 o'clock? Fully half a mile.
1084. Mr. Easterbrook.] Did you ever hear it rumoured among the police that I had been victimised in this matter? I have heard the police express doubts as to your having committed this offence. 1085.

- L. B. Orr. 1085. Did you ever hear that Senior-constable Skinner had been in a paddock with a girl named "Moll" Crick? There were rumours to that effect.
 15 Oct., 1895. 1086. Did you ever hear that Skinner was drunk at the opening of the Camperdown Town Hall, and that the larrikins were kicking his helmet about the road? Yes; I heard that, too.
 1087. Mr. Affleck.] Do you know it of your own knowledge? No.
 1088. Chairman.] You said that you saw these two girls at 1 o'clock, or a little before 1 o'clock in the morning? I saw the girl Gale and another girl.
 1089. Was Gale sober then? Apparently. I was not very near her.
 1090. Was the other girl sober? I think so, as far as I could see. I was standing in the middle of the road, and they were standing a short distance above a lamp.
 1091. On the footpath? Yes.

George Hezlett called in, sworn, and examined.

- G. Hazlett, 1092. Chairman.] You are a constable in the Police Force? Yes.
 15 Oct., 1895. 1093. Where are you stationed now? Leichhardt.
 1094. Were you ever in Petersham? No.
 1095. Do you remember the morning of the 1st January, 1892? Yes, I remember—four years next January.
 1096. Did you know Easterbrook when he was in the Force? Yes.
 1097. I suppose you were never on the same beat with him? No; but I met him almost daily.
 1098. Did you know him as a drunken man, or as a sober man? A sober man.
 1099. Was he fairly well thought of by his brother officers? Yes, very well.
 1100. Do you remember anything in connection with that morning? No.
 1101. Mr. Affleck.] Do you, of your own personal knowledge, know anything about the case now before this Committee? No; I was not present when the affair took place.
 1102. You never saw the woman, nor the man, in connection with it, whose names have been raked up in this matter? Not on that occasion.
 1103. You actually know nothing at all about this case—only what you have read? That is all.
 1104. Mr. Easterbrook.] Could you say that this girl Burns, whom Senior-constable Skinner accuses me of being with, was a prostitute? I do not know the girl.
 1105. If she were a prostitute knocking about the Parramatta Road, you would be sure to have seen her? Yes.
 1106. You have been there a good many years? Over eight years.
 1107. And you know pretty well every girl that is termed a prostitute about Petersham and Leichhardt? Yes.
 1108. And this one never came under your notice? I never saw her that I know of.

WEDNESDAY, 16 OCTOBER, 1895.

Present:—

MR. AFFLECK,
MR. ANDERSON,

MR. GILLIES.

MR. BARNES,
MR. CARROLL,

J. L. FEGAN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Nathaniel Easterbrook appeared in person on his own behalf.

Mr. Nicholas Larkins recalled and further examined:—

- Mr. N. Larkins. 1109. Chairman.] I think that when you were before us on a previous occasion you said you would have to refresh your memory by referring to the papers, because you had come unprepared in reference to the case? Yes.
 16 Oct., 1895. 1110. Have you those papers with you now? I have some papers. I have refreshed my memory on some points. I received a circular this morning from the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly asking me to produce certain papers. There was no time for me to do that. It would take some time for any one to go back and get papers referring to occurrences thirteen or fourteen years ago.
 1111. Have you papers in reference to charges made by Spencer? I have.
 1112. Against whom? Against Senior-constable Skinner.
 1113. What were the charges? I have not read the papers, but as far as I can understand it is alleged that Senior-constable Skinner received a railway requisition to travel from Petersham to Ashfield for the purpose of going to the Canterbury races, and that Skinner afterwards obtained the value of that ticket from the Railway Department.
 1114. You are not acquainted with the papers? No; I am not.
 1115. Were these charges made during your stay at Petersham? No; they were made in December, 1892.
 1116. Was any charge made against Senior-constable Skinner of being found in a paddock with a woman? Not that I am aware of.
 1117. You never heard any rumour to that effect? No.
 1118. Of course you would take Skinner to be a truthful, upright officer? Yes; I always looked upon him as such.
 1119. Did Skinner ever admit having made a mistake in Easterbrook's case in reference to the identity of the men or the women? Not to me. I am not aware that he ever made an admission to that effect; but I have ascertained since I was before this Committee that there was a mistake as to the identity of the girl Burns. I have not that information from Skinner himself, but from inquiries I have made since I was before the Committee last, and I believe it to be correct.
 1120. Do you know that when Skinner was before this Committee he swore that he did not make a mistake? I do not know what he swore; I did not hear anything about what he swore before the Committee.

Mr.
N. Larkins.
16 Oct., 1895.

1121. You never saw his evidence? I never saw his evidence.
1122. Whilst you were inspector of that district was a charge ever made against Aitken? Yes.
1123. Was it a charge of criminal assault? I have the papers in that case here.
1124. You remember the time, I suppose, when that charge was made against Constable Aitken? Yes.
1125. An inquiry was held? Yes.
1126. How old was the girl? I could not tell you. An anonymous letter was sent to me with reference to the constable's conduct in the house where he was boarding.
1127. No other charge at any time? Not that I know of.
1128. This young woman charged him straight out? No woman made any complaint at all to us. We were put in motion by an anonymous letter, and in consequence of that anonymous letter I had inquiries made to ascertain if there was any truth in it, and the papers in connection with that I have here now.
1129. Was Aitken ever informed that he was to leave his lodgings? Yes.
1130. The woman did make an appearance? After we had commenced the inquiry.
1131. You actually found the woman? The police found a woman. We were put in motion by an anonymous letter. We made inquiries, and obtained statements from anyone we could who were able to throw any light on the matter, and in reading this report I come to the conclusion that the writer of the anonymous letter was supposed to be a Mrs. Scarlett, and the charge was that Constable Aitken was living, I think, as far as I can understand, and carrying on with a girl in a Mrs. Müller's house.
1132. That was the first charge made against Aitken? Yes.
1133. You instituted inquiries in consequence of receiving that anonymous letter? Yes.
1134. What came out of that? The result of that was this minute by Superintendent Read—"I judge (to say the least) that Police-constable Aitken has been indiscreet. He certainly should find other lodgings." In forwarding that to the Inspector-General of Police, Superintendent Read put this minute upon it:—"Constable Aitken has probably been indiscreet, but nothing appears to me to have been discovered that would warrant any action being taken against him by his officers, especially as the persons whom it is alleged he assaulted made no complaint at the time, nor would they have probably done so now had they not been requested. I think, however, it would be in his own interests to leave the house of the woman Scarlett, and I have so informed him."
1135. In your evidence just now you said that no woman turned up? I mean that no woman on her own account came forward to make any complaint against the constable.
1136. The complaint was an anonymous one? Yes.
1137. But there was so much in it that Aitken was told to leave his lodgings, and to find lodgings elsewhere? Yes, through our inquiries on the receipt of the anonymous letter. Of course, the anonymous letter itself went for nothing.
1138. I suppose you do not know yourself that Aitken swore that he never was asked to leave his lodgings? I do not know anything at all about it.
1139. Would it be strange if he swore such a thing? Yes; it would, because here is his own report—"Constable James Aiken, No. 6004, respectfully begs to inform his officer that he has left Mrs. Scarlett's (as requested). The constable is now lodging with a Mrs. Hewitt, Palace-street, Petersham." That letter was forwarded by me to the Superintendent with this memo. upon it: "I read the attached minute to the constable." I have already read that minute to the Committee—the minute to the effect that he was ordered to leave.
1140. Was any other charge brought against Aitken? Not that I am aware of.
1141. You would not say that there was not? No; I could not. There may have been since or before. I was going to say to the Committee that Superintendent Read holds all the records in this matter, and he did not know what papers were wanted this morning until I spoke to him through the telephone, on receipt of the circular from the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly asking me to bring "all papers in connection with reports made by Senior-constable Skinner, since attached to Newtown, against other constables; also papers in connection with the report made by Spencer against Senior-constable Skinner; also all papers in respect to any reports against Constable Aitken since he has been stationed at Petersham." Superintendent Read would be able to furnish everything with regard to every report both against Aitken and Skinner.
1142. What papers have you with you? The papers in Aitken's case, a report against Senior-constable Skinner, and reports against constables, and also papers in reference to a report which was made by Skinner against constables Jarvis and M'Crae.
1143. Was that a serious charge? It was a serious charge.
1144. Were those charges upheld by your department? With regard to their being upheld, what do you mean by that? Do you mean, was the senior-constable discredited on account of them?
1145. No; I mean, whether the senior-constable proved the charges or not? He was not in a position to prove them, except from circumstances—that is, he was not an eye-witness. He was detailed to watch a gambling-house, or keep it under observation. The house was built on piles, and he was underneath it, and he alleged that he heard and recognised the voices of Jarvis and M'Crae in the house, but the evidence was not considered sufficient to justify the charges against those constables; there was a doubt about it.
1146. Do you think that a man could have any doubt about another man's voice if he heard it every day of the week, as the senior-constable would do? He could not have much doubt about it, and I suppose he had no doubt; but I meant that the charge was denied by the two constables.
1147. And they were able to bring evidence to prove that they were not in the house? I could not say that, but perhaps I could tell you by reference to the papers. I know that there was a denial on the part by Jarvis, and that he was not in any way injured by the report.
1148. In defending themselves the constables would make some statement as to where they were that night? Yes.
1149. Perhaps you will give us that? Constable Jarvis reported that he had never gambled or been in Mr. Baker's shop, and that "some weeks ago, in company with Senior-constable Larkinson, he visited the shop three or four different times, owing to some rumours that gambling was carried on there." Constable M'Crae denied being at George Baker's on the nights in question.
1150. What did Sergeant Lee and the other men who had to do with the case say? Sergeant Lee reported as follows:—"The sergeant finds from the boarding-house keepers where the constables lodge that Constable Jarvis was not out of his lodgings on the nights of the 25th and 27th August last, but on the 23rd he went out after tea, and returned shortly after 11 p.m. and went to bed. Constable M'Crae was out either on the 22nd or 23rd, but the boarding-house keeper cannot recollect which of the nights.

Mr.
N. Larkins.
16 Oct., 1895.

1151. At what time did Senior-constable Skinner say that those two men were in that gambling-house? Skinner reported "that he, in company with Constable Stokes, had the above-named premises under observation every night from the 22nd to the 27th instant, both nights inclusive. During that period the games of poker, euchre, and nap were played every night, with the exception of Sunday night, between the hours of 9 at night and 3 in the morning. The shop in question is a small weatherboard structure, containing two rooms, and erected on piles. Consequently, the senior-constable and constable were in a position to hear all that transpired from their place of concealment under the floor. Money was staked on all occasions, and the shopkeeper deducted an allowance every pool as soon as the game was over. On the night of Wednesday he went there about 11 p.m., and shortly after entering he recognised Constable M'Crae's voice amongst the players. On the 23rd instant the senior-constable recognised the voices of Constables M'Crae and Jarvis. On the 25th instant he recognised the voice of Jarvis, and on the 27th also. The constables appeared to be taking an active part in the game."

1152. But he does not mention any hour there? No; but in the previous part of his report he mentions the time as being from 9 at night to 3 in the morning.

1153. But he does not say that he went there regularly at 9 o'clock? I will see what Stokes says on the matter.

1154. What you have just read to us is that Senior-constable Skinner was the sole witness on those charges? No, I should say not; but Skinner and Stokes. One man would never be sent to a place like that. In reading Skinner's report it does appear so; but I think that is not quite correct.

1155. But there are the papers? There is no doubt that Skinner says that "on the night of Wednesday he went there about 11 p.m., and shortly after entering he recognised Constable M'Crae's voice." He only speaks of himself there, but I am satisfied Stokes was with him.

1156. Now give us what Stokes says? Stokes reported "that he, in company with Senior-constable Skinner, had a tobacconist's shop, situate in King-street, Newtown, under observation from the 22nd to the 27th instant, both nights inclusive. The constable was concealed under the floor of the building, and heard all that transpired. He could hear money being staked and paid over at the termination of every game of cards. On the night of Wednesday, the 22nd instant, the constable went there in company with Senior-constable Skinner, at about 11 o'clock, and shortly after entering he recognised the voice of Constable M'Crae. On the night of Thursday, the 23rd instant, the constable recognised the voices of Constables M'Crae and Jarvis, who appeared to be taking an active part in the game. On the night of Saturday, the 25th instant, and on the night of Monday, the 27th instant, he recognised the voice of Constable Jarvis."

1157. Those things are mentioned in the reports of both men; but is it not a fact that it was ascertained from the boarding-house keeper, with whom those two men lodged, that the latest hour at which they came in was 11 o'clock, and that they then went to bed? Sergeant Lee reported: "The sergeant finds from the boarding-house keepers, where the constables lodged, that Constable Jarvis was not out of his lodgings on the nights of the 25th and 27th August last, but on the 23rd he went out after tea, and returned shortly after 11 p.m. and went to bed. Constable M'Crae was out either on the 22nd or 23rd, but the boarding-house keeper cannot recollect which of the nights."

1158. He was out on only one of the nights? Yes.

1159. On the report that was given to you, and on your inquiries, what report did you make? Constables Jarvis and M'Crae were under the impression that they were censured, and they made an application—a sort of appeal. This is my report:—"I herewith forward a report or appeal from Constable Jarvis re Senior-constable Skinner's report re gambling on 23rd, 25th, and 27th of last month. In that appeal the constable is not quite correct in stating that Mr. Anderson and I were morally satisfied about his guilt. When I told the constable Mr. Inspector Anderson did not think the proof sufficient to warrant him in sending the papers to the Acting Inspector-General, the constable appeared dissatisfied that the slightest suspicion should be attached to him; in fact, he appeared to think that Senior-constable Skinner should be told that he had no right to make such a groundless report. In reply to some observations of the above character, I said Mr. Anderson could hardly do otherwise under the circumstances. At the same time I was strongly impressed with the senior-constable's recognition of the voices in the gambling-room on the nights in question, and I was sure Mr. Anderson or any other person who read the papers would agree with me in that respect—that is to say, I had no moral doubt in my mind."

1160. Mr. Gillies.] Is it a fact that you bore out pretty well what Skinner had done? Yes; it would be almost impossible for Skinner to make a mistake about their voices—except he went and trumped the matter up altogether from first to last—if he heard the voice of a person he was acquainted with and came in contact with every day.

1161. According to the papers Constable Stokes was only twice with Senior-constable Skinner under this house in a place of concealment to catch the gamblers? Yes.

1162. And Senior-constable Skinner makes charges against those men in reference to something that occurred on a night when he was by himself? Though that appears so from the papers, it would hardly be correct, I think.

1163. That is what appears from the papers on which you charged those men? Yes.

1164. Those are really the charge-sheets? If it was proved that they were there any night out of the lot mentioned, they would be punished.

1165. So it was not proved? It was not proved to the satisfaction of anyone. We had to give them the benefit of the doubt. If there was a doubt in the matter, of course the accused person would be entitled to the benefit of it. It was not that we discredited the senior-constable.

1166. But there was a charge made? Yes.

1167. And that charge was not substantiated? No; not to our satisfaction. In reality there was nothing at all against the two men when the case was over, any more than there was when it was commenced.

1168. A great deal depends on the veracity of the men in question? Decidedly.

1169. A charge was made against two constables against whom there was nothing before, and the charge was such that you did not uphold it, and you did not punish the men who were charged; is that it? That is it.

1170. Since then Constable M'Crae has left the Force? Yes.

1171. Do you remember his leaving the Force? I do.

1172. Did you give him a bad character on his leaving the Force? I do not think so.

1173.

Mr.
N. Larkins.
16 Oct., 1895.

1173. Did you give him a good character? As far as my memory serves me he was a very efficient man; I could not say there was anything against him. A man being a bad character in the Force and his being a bad character out of it, would be two different things, because a man might be reported simply for loitering on his beat.

1174. He might be a bad man in the Force, and a good man out of it? Certainly. That would not affect his character generally.

1175. But, as a rule, a man who is known to be a bad man in the Service is not appointed a night-watchman elsewhere? No; he would not.

1176. Do you know that ex-Constable M'Crae is now a watchman at Petersham or Stanmore? Yes. Since I returned to Sydney I read in the papers that he was engaged as a night-watchman at Petersham.

1177. Have you no further charges made against constables by Senior-constable Skinner? I have only three sets of papers, but I have also a short summary of the number of charges laid by Senior-constable Skinner.

1178. Would you mind telling us the number of charges that he made, and the number that have been upheld by your department? I produce this the same as I received it from the office. I think it is correct. It is, I think, a correct statement from the books, but there may be a few more or less for aught I know.

1179. This list shows that Senior-constable Skinner made twenty-eight charges? Yes.

1180. Twenty-eight cases were heard, and none of them were found to be frivolous—all the constables charged were either fined, discharged, or reprimanded? Yes.

1181. What about the charges against Constables Jarvis and M'Crae? Are they not mentioned on that paper?

1182. This list extends from 1887 to 1893, but those charges are not amongst the number given? No; they do not appear to be on this list, but I have another list here which I received about five or six minutes ago as I was coming into Parliament House. Perhaps this is rather more full than the other. Superintendent Read could produce every paper. The first list I produced was only prepared roughly, the same as this one. You cannot go over papers for fourteen or fifteen years in a few minutes. The second list was got out this morning; I asked for it by telephone.

1183. You will find that M'Crae's name is not even on that? The only way I can account for the omission is the hurried manner in which the papers were obtained. The three sets of papers that I have already mentioned are the only ones that I could put my hand on.

1184. Is it not a fact that Constable Skinner has made a charge against a constable for wearing his gloves at night? I am not aware that he ever made such a charge against any constable.

1185. You would be surprised if he did make such a charge? I would.

1186. You would call it too frivolous—beneath notice? Certainly.

1187. Neither is it against discipline? Well, if a man paraded with gloves between 6 o'clock and 10 o'clock at night his attention would be called to it, as gloves are not supposed to be worn.

1188. Even if his hands were cold? Yes.

1189. If he had chilblains on his hands you would not allow him to have any covering for them? That would be a different matter. Men wear gloves from 10 o'clock at night until 6 o'clock in the morning—that is the eight-hour shift. But a man wearing gloves from 6 o'clock to 10 o'clock at night would certainly be called to order, though, I must say, it would be a very fine-drawn offence.

1190. You would really call it frivolous to report it? Yes; it would be sufficient to call his attention to it, and it would be discontinued.

1191. Do you call the papers you have given us an accurate report of the charges made by Skinner? No; you could not get an accurate report except by giving Superintendent Read time to obtain the whole of the papers.

1192. You do not call this an accurate report? No; I simply thought I should be able to afford more information to the Committee than I could on the last occasion by obtaining the papers now before this inquiry.

1193. You would not put those papers in as an accurate report? No.

1194. Mr. Affleck.] Would you put them in as accurate as far as they go? When I was here the last time I was granted permission to refresh my memory more particularly about the age of the girl Burns, who was connected with Wright's case, and I got these papers so that I should be able to speak generally, more especially with regard to the girl Burns.

1195. Chairman.] Do you know the age of the girl Burns? Yes, but only in a general way. The matter in connection with Wright was reported in June, 1893, and the girl was at that time alleged to be 17 years of age. She would, therefore, be 27 now. However, I have also ascertained in a general way, that Skinner now says that the girl Burns, in the Wright case, is not identical with the girl Burns in the Easterbrook case. I want to put myself right on this point. I wrote a memo. saying, "Burns is the girl who, some years ago, complained of Senior-constable Wright." Of course that was written from information, and not from my own knowledge. I understand, and I believe, that I received that information from Skinner himself.

1196. How long since? 2nd of January, 1892, and, as I have said, I have made some inquiries on that point since, and I understand that Skinner now says that this girl Burns, in the Easterbrook case, is not identical with the girl Burns in the Wright case.

1197. When did he say that? He never said it to me, for I have not seen him at all on the matter.

1198. When did you hear he said so? A day or two ago.

1199. Since this case commenced? Since I was here before.

1200. Mr. Anderson.] You believed at the time that when Easterbrook and the other constable were reported a breach of discipline had been committed? Yes.

1201. Constable Easterbrook through that was dismissed? Yes, or discharged—I do not know which.

1202. You believed, from your knowledge of Easterbrook, that he was an efficient man and well conducted previous to that? I believed so.

1203. And has been well conducted since, to your knowledge? Not to my knowledge. I have reason to believe, from papers I have seen, that he was well conducted.

1204. Considering the manner in which he conducted himself during the time he was in the Police Force, and bearing in mind the fact that he has been severely punished, would you feel justified or deem it advisable to recommend him for reinstatement? With regard to my recommendation, of course, I do not know how far that would go. I would not have power to reinstate him, but as far as I can see, that being being his only offence, I would not have any hesitation, if it was on my own account, in taking him back into the Service and giving him another chance to get along. Of course, it would be another thing as regards the Inspector-General; I am merely speaking for myself personally.

1205. You would not be afraid to take him under you? No. I think that he has been sufficiently punished; and if it was a matter of taking him back into the Service I do not see anything that should debar that.

1206. Mr. Affleck.] Are those charges in that list against Skinner? No; charges made by him. It may appear that Skinner was rather officious, but it is not so. Those charges extended from 1887 to 1893.

1207. Chairman.] But you admitted that there were charges which might be termed frivolous and could not be proved? I did not admit it in that sense. The case that I was speaking about in regard to Jarvis and M'Crae I do not consider by any means frivolous. I think that the senior-constable was doing his duty to the best of his ability at the time. But we were not satisfied, or, in other words, the men could not be punished, because there was a doubt about it.

1208. And evidence the other way? A man for preferring a frivolous charge could be punished. If a constable reported a man for preferring a frivolous charge against him, and it was found to be so, the man who preferred it would be punished; but a man doing as Skinner did in that instance—informing me that two of our men were in a gambling-house—was only his duty.

1209. Mr. Affleck.] The charges mentioned on that paper are against constables? Yes; against various constables.

1210. And this is the same? Yes; but there are a few more cases mentioned on that paper than on this.

1211. When two or more constables are together and are asked to send in reports, is it the rule that they shall report in the singular or in the plural number? In the plural.

1212. One of these reports is written in the singular? The Police Regulations provide for the use of the plural number, but, of course, that rule is not strictly preserved.

1213. What is your general impression as to the character of Skinner and Aitken? My opinion was always that Skinner was a thoroughly trustworthy man. That was up to the time I left Petersham, and up to the time of the charge about the ticket. I did not like that. I do not like it now, but still, of course, it was not a punishable offence. That is what was decided. But I would not like a man who told anything in the shape of a lie under any circumstances.

1214. Chairman.] And he did in that case? He did in that case, evidently.

1215. Mr. Affleck.] What is your opinion with regard to Aitken's character? I do not know much about Aitken. He was a young constable, and did not come much under my notice, but more under the notice of the non-commissioned officers. He was brought under my notice in reference to the matter in connection with the house, and if I had remained in the division I should always have looked upon him afterwards—at all events for some time to come, until I came to know him very well—with a certain amount of suspicion. I might also say that, in this particular case, the senior-constable had no ill-feeling against Easterbrook before. There was nothing before that which would cause him to feel any spite or jealousy or anything of that description.

1216. Chairman.] You think that a little rivalry would not do that? There could not be any rivalry, for Easterbrook was not on an equal footing with Skinner in any shape or form. Easterbrook was only an ordinary constable.

1217. But there is a certain amount of rivalry if you think that a man is going to get above you, for you do not like it? There would be no possible chance of that. Excepting Easterbrook had done something uncommonly smart he could not obtain Skinner's rank for some years. Easterbrook was only an ordinary constable at that time—not even a first-class constable. Skinner was two grades above him.

1218. Mr. Affleck.] You mean to say that that report was sent in by Skinner as a matter of duty, and without any feeling? Certainly; there is nothing in the shape of feeling in it. There was nothing in the papers to show me that, nor in anything I knew outside the papers.

1219. Mr. Barnes.] Although these reports are written in the singular number, in a case like that you never send a man alone, but have two together—when they have to watch a gambling-house, or anything of that sort? Yes; always. I admit you might infer from Skinner's report that he was there alone.

1220. But you believe otherwise? Yes. If the second man was absent he would be guilty of neglect of duty. Some non-commissioned officers are more efficient than others.

1221. Mr. Easterbrook.] You say that in Jarvis and M'Crae's case, when the matter was decided there was a doubt left? Yes.

1222. And Jarvis appealed? Yes.

1223. Have you Jarvis's appeal with you? Yes.

1224. Would you mind reading it? "Constable Charles H. Jarvis respectfully appeals to the Acting Inspector-General to revise the decision given re the above. The constable contends that he should be exonerated absolutely as he has explained his whereabouts, and given the names of persons who can furnish conclusive proof, so that had a thorough investigation been made he would have been exonerated, he being innocent of the report made against him. He begs to draw the Acting Inspector-General's attention to the fact that there is not an individual in Newtown that can prove the constable was ever in the room referred to. Inspector Larkins informed the constable that neither Inspector Anderson or he had any moral doubt—they believed him guilty—which is very hurtful to the constable's feelings to think that he should be so unjustly dealt with. The constable begs to state that from experience in company with Senior-constable Parkinson (having had the place under observation some few weeks ago), it is impossible for any person to recognise any voice (without it is a very peculiar voice indeed) from under the room; consequently Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Stokes were mistaken. The constable also wishes to point out the infeasibility of any man with any common sense, knowing the police have the place under observation, and actually doing duty there himself, would be stupid enough to go there and gamble. Should the Acting Inspector-General accede to the request, the constable will feel grateful, as it is very disheartening to a man to be accused wrongfully, and as long as a doubt remains it must act to the constable's detriment."

1225. Did he get any reply to that? Yes. That appeal was forwarded to the Acting Inspector-General of Police by Inspector Anderson with this memo; "It will be seen by my minute of the 5th instant that I gave no decision in the case, and gave no expression of opinion as to the guilt or otherwise of Constables Jarvis and M'Crae."

1226. Chairman.] What did Mr. Read, the Acting Inspector-General, say on that appeal? Inspector Anderson

Anderson said: "I do not consider the proof against Constables M'Crae and Jarvis sufficiently strong to justify me in bringing the case under the notice of the Inspector-General." That is what Mr. Anderson said, and, therefore, the Acting Inspector-General gave no decision in the matter.

1227. So it was not permitted to go to headquarters as the constable's appeal? Yes; he forwarded it. In both cases there was, as I said, no decision given owing to the doubt that existed.

1228. But when a constable makes an appeal, does not that appeal go to headquarters? Yes; it went to headquarters.

1229. And have you had no return from headquarters in answer to that? Yes; this is what Mr. Read said: "I have looked through these reports, and can discover no decision to oppose yours. Any expression of opinion on my part would not alter the belief of the senior-constable, and the constable who reported on the matter." In that case Jarvis assumes that Mr. Anderson and myself came to the conclusion that he was morally guilty, but there is nothing on these papers to show we did.

1230. There is nothing there to show that Mr. Read came to that conclusion? No; there is not. It was an assumption. We would not put what we believed on paper except there were facts to support that belief.

1231. Mr. Easterbrook.] Is Constable Jarvis still labouring under that doubt in the case? I do not know. How could I say that?

1232. Was not Jarvis called into Newtown, and told that he was completely exonerated in the matter? I daresay he was. Of course he must know that the fact of his not being punished in any way exonerated him.

1233. He was told there was a doubt, and, after he appealed, was he not told that he was completely exonerated in the matter? That is not stated by the papers.

1234. But was he told verbally? He may have been told verbally.

1235. Jarvis and Parkinson had had the gambling-house under observation previously? I think so.

1236. If Senior-constable Skinner was under the shop so often, and heard those men's voices in there so often, do you not think he should have endeavoured to see the men either in the place, or when they were coming out, to be sure of their identification? He was not there for that particular purpose. They did not go there to see if the police went there, but to get evidence against the people that kept the gambling-house.

1237. Is the constable who was with Skinner at that time—Stokes—still in the Police Force? I could not say.

1238. Do you remember Stokes? I do, well.

1239. Do you remember his disappearing suddenly some time ago? I remember someone disappearing, and, now you remind me, I believe it was Stokes, but I forget the surroundings in connection with the matter.

1240. Aitken was lodging at Mrs. Scarlett's at the time you referred to in connection with his case? Yes.

1241. Was there never any other charge against Constable Aitken for assaulting females in any way? I am not aware of it.

1242. And Senior-sergeant Stanwix made the inquiries? Yes. I have all the papers in connection with that, but I have not read them. The greatest care is exercised as far as the police authorities are concerned in dealing with or punishing members of the Force. This is never done without making inquiry in order to satisfy themselves after looking at all the surroundings of the case. Of course, sometimes people may be mistaken. In the case in which Skinner was under the building it is possible that he was mistaken; but in this case of Easterbrook I do not see how there could be a mistake. It would have to be a direct put-up matter. I do not think he could make a mistake. It is very different from Wright's case or the other cases we have been investigating.

1243. Chairman.] I think there is a similarity between them? No; there is no similarity between Wright's case and this case.

1244. Could you tell a girl of 14 from a woman of 68—there would not be much trouble in seeing the difference? But the girl in Wright's case was a girl named Burns.

1245. And in Easterbrook's case too? Yes; in that case it was alleged that Wright assaulted a girl in a cell in the watchhouse. The girl said nothing about it until some days afterwards. She did not complain to the constable's wife, nor to the constable who had charge of the station; consequently, that threw a certain amount of discredit upon what she said; but in this case you must either come to the conclusion that Skinner and Aitken made a direct charge which they knew to be false, or that they did not.

1246. Still, is there not a great difference between a girl of 14 or 15 and a woman of 40? Yes.

1247. Is there not a great deal of difference between a woman with one arm and a woman with two arms? Yes.

1248. Therefore, that difference ought to have been discernible when the constable was near her? Certainly.

1249. And if I were to tell you that your officers and everybody else concerned, with the exception of the two who made the report, said that one of these girls—Burns—was entirely sober that night, you would think it strange, would you not? It was not part of my inquiry to find that out; but if Skinner and Aitken alleged that she was drunk, and all the other people said that she was sober, I should think it was strange.

1250. Mr. Easterbrook.] If Senior-constable Skinner wilfully states that this girl Burns is a prostitute, well known to the police, and mistakes her, although she has two arms, for a girl who has only one arm, and whom he knows has been a bad character, and if Constable Aitken also kept to the same case, does it not look as if it were a put-up job? Of course it would throw a lot of doubt on the matter. If a man would tell a lie on one thing, you might reasonably conclude that he might tell a lie on another thing.

1251. If they made those statements, and there being so much difference between the two girls, they would be liable to make other mistakes? Supposing I were there myself, and I saw two constables in the position it was alleged you and Stanton were in, I might not know either of the girls, and they might go away without my being able to identify them again, inasmuch as my attention would be more likely to be directed to the constables who would be the principals.

1252. Chairman.] But if you looked at the women's faces, and saw their clothes higher than their knees, and went and picked one of them up? Of course, if I picked them up and asked their names it would be another matter altogether. It would all depend on the surroundings. One man's attention might be directed one way and another man's another way.

1253. Mr. Easterbrook.] Do you remember the time when the men in Petersham informed you that Senior-constable Skinner was persecuting them by making them work long beats and not giving them sufficient time to do it in? I have some recollection of the constables complaining of Skinner being too exacting; but that was not persecution.

- Mr. N. Larkins.
15 Oct., 1895.
1254. You, yourself, came out and investigated the matter? I, myself, came out and went round the beats to see if the men could actually do it in the time.
1255. And the result was that you allowed the men more time to do their beats? Yes.
1256. Did not Senior-constable Skinner say that he and Constable Aitken had walked those beats and considered that they were reasonable beats? I do not know what they said, but I walked the beats with them. I could walk the beats in the time specified, but I could not do them justice, and consequently I extended the time.
1257. Chairman.] The point is, did not those two men represent that there was no hardship in doing that—those two men against the others? I do not know that I ever heard Aitken on the matter. I would not be likely to do so. He might have been one of the parties complaining, for aught I knew. There was some complaint from the men, and I went out to see whether they were overworked, as was represented.
1258. Mr. Easterbrook.] When a man is reported, and civilians are connected with the case, is it usual to make inquiries of those civilians in connection with the matter? Supposing a sergeant reports a constable—is that what you mean—is it usual for a sergeant to bring civilians to report him?
1259. If a sergeant reports a man, and civilians are connected with the case in any way, is it not usual to inquire of those civilians in connection with the matter? It would all depend on circumstances. For instance, in trivial matters, such as loitering on the beats, civilians are sometimes called in, but not generally.
1260. Well, in a serious case similar to mine, which affects a man's whole life? If it was pointed out that a civilian could throw any light on the matter, most decidedly in that case he would be interviewed.
1261. Well, these women who were there that night are, of course, civilians? Of course they were civilians; but then they would be accomplices.
1262. And they were not asked to give an opinion about the matter at all? No; I do not think they were.
1263. I asked for them to be examined in the matter? Yes.
1264. And it was not allowed on account of their character? So far as I would be concerned, I would ignore their character. Whether prostitutes or anything else, I would give them as much fair play as anybody; but they could not be respectable women if what was alleged was correct.
1265. But I want to prove that it is not correct? If what was alleged was correct, and even if it was only their first act, I should say they were not respectable.
1266. If Senior-constable Skinner had not informed you that this girl Burns was a bad character it would not have put such a black complexion on the case? In what way?
1267. The fact of his saying they were prostitutes, well known to the police? It had not the slightest effect with me one way or the other. I do not think I ever considered whether they were prostitutes or not. I consider, whoever the women were, that if constables so far forgot themselves as to place themselves in the position which it is alleged you and the other constable were seen in, you would be unfit for the Service.
1268. But until that was proved this girl Burns would be respectable? But the fact of her being respectable would not make any difference if found in that position.
1269. But the girl Burns was not found in that position? I do not care what girl it was. It did not matter to me which girl it was. The offence, in my opinion, against the public and the Service would be as great as regards the constable who committed it, even if the woman were said to be respectable all her lifetime previously, just as much as if she were a prostitute.
1270. Mr. Gillies.] If policemen are charged with making a false charge against some of their subordinates, do you not find that, having made it, they adhere to it rigidly; is not that the custom of the police? In my experience I have found very few cases where non-commissioned officers have made a false statement against a constable, and I have had a great deal of experience. Of course, if they make a statement, it is natural that they should stick to it; but I am not aware of a false statement being made. If I made a statement, and put it on paper, I should be in a position to support it, and it is only natural that I would stick to it.
1271. Do you not think that at a quarter past 1 o'clock in the morning, 15 or 20 yards was too great a distance for Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken to observe anything very bad? Whether the distance were 15, 20, or 25 yards, it would all depend on the surroundings—what sort of light there was—whether it was moonlight, or whether there was a lamp near, or anything of that kind. I daresay it would be very difficult to say that a man was exposing his person 25 yards away, but if a man were having connection with a woman I do not think there would be any difficulty in seeing it if there were a reasonable light. With regard to time, distance, and description there is always a difference of opinion. What one man will call 10 yards another man will, perhaps, call 20.
1272. A senior-sergeant, who is able to show that he carries out his duty by bringing and proving charges against his subordinates is thought more of in the Force than if he makes no charges against his subordinates, is he not? I daresay he would be. I daresay that a man who made no charge at all would not be doing his duty, but would be a perfect sluggard, and quite useless.
1273. He would not be thought much of? It would be impossible in the Metropolitan Force, where there are 600 or 700 men, to find that the whole of them were so perfect that there was no cause to speak against any of them.
1274. I did not say that, but that the more charges he made the better he would be thought of? Well, if a man makes a well-founded charge he is doing his duty. If you had an overseer watching the actions of twenty or fifty men you would not be at all pleased if he were to overlook his duty by allowing people to idle away their time, and a constable knows what his duty is.
1275. Mr. Easterbrook.] As a matter of fact, you believed me guilty on Skinner's and Aitken's statement, without looking more into the matter? Yes, on Skinner's and Aitken's statement.
1276. You did not consider Stanton's and mine in any light at all? It is always natural for a man to defend himself. We assumed that Skinner and Aitken were not concerned—they had no conspiracy against you to put you out of the Service, or anything of that description. Consequently, from what we knew of them before, we should look upon them as truthful men. In my experience, I have found very few men, if any, who would go so far as to trump up charges against other men unless there were some reason.
1277. Did Stanton deny the charge? No, he did not.

Henry Stanton called in, sworn, and examined:—

1278. Chairman.] You are an ex-constable? Yes.
1279. You were charged with indecency in conjunction with ex-Constable Easterbrook? Yes, I was.
1280. You know what the charges came to? Yes.
1281. Was Easterbrook guilty or not of what he was charged with? Not guilty.
1282. Did you know the girl Burns? Not personally, but just by sight.
1283. Did you see her that night? Yes.
1284. Was she drunk? No.
1285. Perfectly sober? Yes.
1286. Was Easterbrook sober? Yes, perfectly sober.
1287. Were you sober that night? Yes, perfectly.
1288. So you know Senior-constable Skinner? Yes.
1289. Do you remember the day the charge was laid? The 1st of January.
1290. Was Easterbrook on the vacant allotment that night? No, he was not.
1291. Therefore the charge that is laid against Easterbrook is not truthful? Not truthful at all.
1292. How old do you think this girl Burns was? She was about 15 years of age.
1293. And she was perfectly sober? Perfectly sober.
1294. You and Easterbrook were on duty together? Yes.
1295. Mr. Carroll.] The girl Burns was with a girl called Mary Gale? Yes.
1296. Was the girl Gale under the influence of drink? No; she was perfectly sober.
1297. You are sure of that? Yes.
1298. At about half-past 1 in the morning? Yes.
1299. Is there any truth in the statement that these two girls were on a vacant allotment of land with both yourself and Easterbrook? The girl Gale went on to the vacant allotment and I followed her. The other girl did not go on the vacant allotment.
1300. The girls separated? Yes; they separated near there.
1301. And there is no truth in the statement that Easterbrook was pulling this girl Burns about and sitting down with her on that allotment of ground? There is no truth in that.
1302. Mr. Easterbrook.] You are very clear on the matter, are you? Yes, perfectly clear.
1303. What did Senior-constable Skinner say when we met him later on, at 3 o'clock, when I said, "There is nothing against me"? He said, "No; there is nothing against you, Easterbrook."
1304. You are perfectly clear about that? Yes; those are the words he used.
1305. When we were at the corner of Westbourne-street and saw the girls, did I ask you to come away and leave them? Yes; you asked me to come on. You said, "Come on, Harry."
1306. Then I went away by myself? Yes.
1307. And when I got further away did I turn round and tell you again to come, and that there was a band playing down the street? Yes; in the direction of Charles-street, I think.
1308. Chairman.] You have been on duty with Easterbrook many times, I suppose? Yes.
1309. What sort of a man did you find him—truthful? Yes.
1310. Attentive to his duties? Yes; he was always.
1311. Courteous to his comrades? Yes; he did not seem to have any ill-feeling towards anyone.
1312. How was he liked by the others? He seemed to be liked very well.
1313. How was Skinner liked by men in the Force who were in the same district or depôt with him? He was not liked, I think, at all, except I think by one man.
1314. Who was that one man? Constable Aitken.
1315. Skinner and Aitken were at loggerheads, were they not? Not to my knowledge.
1316. Were they like brothers? Yes; they were very thick.
1317. You would not go so far as to say that what one would say the other would swear to? Yes, I would; what Skinner would say Aitken would swear to, and what Aitken would say Skinner would swear to.
1318. Can you give us any reason why this charge was brought against you and Easterbrook? I think it was because Skinner had a bit of a "set" on us.
1319. For any reason that you know? Yes; because Easterbrook and I said something about the beats, and interviewed Mr. Larkins, and Skinner would not give in to us.
1320. What did you inform Mr. Larkins about? Because Skinner wanted us to do the beats in one and a half hours, which meant a quick walk, and not taking notice of anything. It was just like a man walking round a block.
1321. Just like a machine, I suppose? Yes; some part of the beat we never touched. We told Mr. Larkins this. He said, "That is no good; that is not doing your duty." We said we could not do it, and asked him to give us an extra half-hour. I believe that Mr. Larkins saw Senior-constable Meehan, and tried to arrange it with Skinner, but Skinner would not give in until Mr. Larkins came out himself.
1322. What happened then? Mr. Larkins granted us more time. Previously to that I wrote out a kind of application, and got all the constables to sign it, from the oldest member of the Force in Petersham down to the youngest. I sent that in, and Mr. Larkins said there was only one mistake, and that was that each man ought to have made his own grievance known, and not to have had a petition like that signed by the men as a body. At any rate he granted us the extra half-hour we asked for.
1323. The representations which you and the other men made to Inspector Larkins were thought so much of that he took your representations instead of Skinner's advice? Yes.
1324. After that, was there any difference in the conduct of Skinner towards you? Yes; he used to be continually "dogging" us when we were on night duty.
1325. What do you mean by "dogging" you? Instead of walking straight out to meet a man on his beat he used to dodge behind the trees on the footpath, and keep himself in the dark, and watch him, and see if he could come upon him having a smoke, or doing anything else. He also wanted me to go to cases where he had not evidence. He wanted me to go at one time into a lottery. He said that a man was carrying on a lottery, and he wanted me to go there and summon the man. I told him that if it were such a good case as he represented he had better summon the man himself. I was sure he would not give a certain case away.
1326. Was not that insubordination? He did not say anything to me.
1327. It seemed to you to be a "have"? Yes, it did.

Mr.
H. Stanton.

- Mr. H. Stanton.
16 Oct., 1895.
1328. If there was anything in it he would do it himself? Yes; I think if it was a case where it would have been worth while to take up, he would not have told me; but if I, being young in the Force, had made a mistake he would have got on to me, and very likely I would have lost my billet then.
1329. From the time of the sending in of that petition until you were charged, his conduct had entirely changed for the worse towards you and Easterbrook? Yes.
1330. Why should Easterbrook be brought into this? I do not know.
1331. Were you and Easterbrook always together? Yes.
1332. He looked upon you as being on friendly terms? Yes; as we used to visit each other.
1333. And Easterbrook would not do any of the sneaking work? I never knew him do anything of that sort; he certainly would not do it.
1334. And, knowing the character of the man, Skinner thought that he would not be very useful to him? Yes; we were always on the alert in regard to him.
1335. What made you forget yourself that night? I am sure I could not tell you. Senior-constable Skinner's report about the occurrence was never shown to me.
1336. As a constable you never saw Skinner's report? No.
1337. Did you see it in the watch-house the following night? No; I never saw it at all. It was read to me. I went on duty that night at 9 o'clock. I was on until between 4 and 5 on the 1st January. I went away on duty at 8 o'clock, and I finished at 6 o'clock at night. I never had any sleep—that is, for nearly twenty-four hours. I was at Mortlake. There was nothing there, and I stood about all day with very little to eat, and was sleepy when I came home; and when I went to the watch-house to make my report, Skinner's report was read to me, and in my hurry I wrote my report. Senior-constable Ford said, "If you were speaking to the girl, admit it." I wrote, admitting that I was on the vacant allotment with the girl. That is what I meant by my report. I wrote it in a hurry, and when I said that I felt my position very keenly, I meant in being found talking to girls of that repute.
1338. The charge that was laid against you, you say you did not see, but only heard read? That is all.
1339. And you took it for granted that you were found with this woman, not in any way having connection with her, but talking to her? Just talking to her.
1340. You only pleaded guilty to being found in that woman's company? That is all.
1341. Not having anything criminal to do with her? That is what I intended by my report.
1342. If you were charged with being found having connection with this woman, what would you say? I should say it was a false charge. If the report had been shown to me for me to read it, I would not have admitted such a charge.
1343. You came to the watch-house to report yourself before going on duty? Yes.
1344. When did you write your report? Constable Baker woke me up, and it was about twenty-five minutes past 9 on the 1st January, 1892, when I arrived at the watch-house, and I had about a quarter of an hour to make the report out. Ford read the report and asked me if I was talking to the girl, and I said "Yes," and he said, "You had better admit it."
1345. It was twenty-five minutes past 9 when you got to the watch-house? Yes.
1346. At what time did you have to go on your beat? If I had been going on my duty that night I should have had to go on at 10 o'clock, but I did not go on.
1347. Had Easterbrook to go on his beat that night? Yes; I believe he had.
1348. How long did it take you to write that report? I was there about a quarter of an hour.
1349. You thought that the report against you was to the effect that you were guilty of being found speaking to this woman? Yes.
1350. Mr. Barnes.] Did you know Constables Jarvis and M'Crae? No. I was only a little over sixteen months in the Police Force.
1351. Did they sign that petition? No.
1352. Mr. Gillies.] Did M'Crae and Jarvis complain about the beat, along with you? No; they were not stationed at Petersham.
1353. Mr. Carroll.] Where did you two men meet the two girls first? At the corner of Crystal-street and Westbourne-street.
1354. You walked down the street with them? Yes.
1355. To the vacant allotment? Yes.
1356. And you left the footpath and went on to the allotment with one of the girls? I did not leave the footpath at the time the girl went over, but I followed her. I went to see what she was going to do.
1357. The other girl did not leave the footpath and go on the vacant allotment? No; she went straight down Crystal-street to Douglas-street.
1358. Mr. Easterbrook.] Did I leave you at the corner of Crystal-street and Westbourne-street or did I walk with you and the girl? You left me at the corner of Crystal-street and Westbourne-street.

THURSDAY, 17 OCTOBER, 1895.

Present:—

Mr. ANDERSON, | Mr. BARNES,
Mr. CARROLL,

JOHN LIONEL FEGAN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Nathaniel Easterbrook appeared in person on his own behalf.

Nathaniel Easterbrook sworn and examined:—

- Mr. N. Easterbrook.
17 Oct., 1895.
1359. Chairman.] Have you ever been a constable? Yes.
1360. Where were you stationed? Petersham.
1361. Why did you leave the Force? I was dismissed on a false charge.
1362. What charge was it? I was charged with lying down on the green with a prostitute.
1363. Do you remember the circumstance? I denied the charge at the time.
1364. When was it? On the 1st January, 1892.

1365. Have you any statement to make in reply to the charge? Yes. I still adhere to the statement I made then, which was that Constable Stanton and myself met two girls at the corner of Crystal-street and Westbourne-street, and I ordered them to go home, as it was getting late. Constable Stanton started skylarking with one of the girls named Gale. I then asked him to come away, and leave the girls alone, and they would go home. They lived in that very street—Westbourne-street—at that time. I then walked on by myself, naturally expecting that Constable Stanton would follow me. I kept walking on, and when I was 50 yards away I turned round to see if he was coming, and called out to him again to come. I still kept walking on, expecting that he would follow me. I heard footsteps behind me, which I thought were Constable Stanton's, but on looking round I saw the girl Burns. I again ordered her to go home, and she went away towards her home. I still went walking on, naturally expecting that Stanton would come. Not knowing exactly where he was, and turning round to look again, I saw two constables coming. I then walked back to meet those two constables, and found that they were Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken. They asked me, "Who is that woman over there?" I said, "I do not know." Senior-constable Skinner said, "Come and we will see." I then went with Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken over to where the woman was. That was the first time that I went on that green that night. Senior-constable Skinner asked the girl where she was going. She said she was going home. He asked her where she lived. She said, "Westbourne-street." At that time she was going towards Westbourne-street. He then asked her her name. She said, "Burns." Constable Stanton then came up and Senior-constable Skinner turned round to Stanton and said, "Stanton, I am ashamed of you." Senior-constable Skinner then told Stanton and me to go down on the Parramatta Road. When we left Senior-constable Skinner to go down to the Parramatta Road, I asked Stanton what did Senior-constable Skinner mean by saying, "I am ashamed of you, Stanton." Stanton then told me the circumstances of the case—what he had been doing—much to my surprise, as I never expected such a thing would happen, he being only a newly-married man—I think about eighteen months—at that time. If I had had any idea that Stanton would have been found in company with such a character misconducting himself, I would never have left him. Constable Stanton, of course, knew or expected that Senior-constable Skinner would report him for the occurrence, so he asked me to go up towards the Stanmore Road, and he would see Senior-constable Skinner to see if he would let him down in any way. We met Senior-constable Skinner on the Stanmore Road, and Stanton spoke to him about his case, and asked him to let him down in some way. Skinner replied that he would let him down as lightly as he possibly could. I then said to the Senior-constable, "There is nothing against me, senior?" He replied, "No; there is nothing against you, Easterbrook." On the night of the 1st of January, some time after 9 o'clock, Constable Baker came to my house and informed me that I was wanted at the police station. At that time I was getting my tea, as I had to go on duty at 10 o'clock that night. I said to my wife, "I had better put on my clothes, and go up to the station in uniform." When I got to the station, Senior-constable Ford read out the charge preferred against me, and remarked, "The papers have to go in to Newtown to-night, so you had better make out a reply at once, and get it done before the other men come to go on duty." Constable Stanton had also been told to come to the station that night, and we both sat down and wrote our replies. Of course, I denied the charge, being innocent. We had only about twenty minutes to write those replies. Next morning, I wrote a further reply, which, in regard to the facts, tallied exactly with my previous reply. I told the truth in the two replies; therefore, they could not vary very much, and I still maintain that what I then wrote is the truth.

1366. Were you brought down to the Superintendent's office? After my asking, we were.

1367. Did you make an appeal first against the charge preferred against you? In my report I asked that before the charge was finally decided I might be brought to the Superintendent's office with Constables Stanton, Skinner, and Aitken, with the object of cross-questioning them, so as to clear myself. When we got to the Superintendent's office, we were, all four of us, taken in at once, and I was not allowed to cross-question them, although we were all in the room at the same time. Whilst at the office, I asked to be allowed to bring the girls there to question them. Superintendent Read replied, "What is the use of their evidence? Look at their characters." And when I asked Senior-constable Skinner a question of any sort, Constable Aitken hearing his reply, the Superintendent would turn to Constable Aitken and say, "Is that so?" Constable Aitken would, of course, reply "Yes," or would give whatever answer the senior-constable made. Therefore, there was no cross-questioning about it. I wanted to confuse them, which, I am confident, I could have done. We were then told that that would do, and we went back to our duty. On or about the night of the 6th January, Senior-constable Meehan met me on the Parramatta Road, whilst I was on duty, and told me that I had been dismissed, and to bring my clothes into Newtown.

1368. Mr. Barnes.] The first place you saw Skinner was in Crystal-street? Yes.

1369. Mr. Carroll.] You say that Stanton asked Skinner to let him down as easily as he could,—that was an acknowledgment on the part of Stanton that he had misbehaved himself? Yes.

1370. And you said, "There is nothing against me"? Yes.

1371. What made you pass that remark to Skinner if there was nothing against you? On account of being on duty with Constable Stanton. Properly speaking I had no right to leave him, and should have remained in his company the whole of the night; and I could have been reported for neglect of duty for leaving Stanton. That is what I meant; and knowing what sort of a man Skinner was, I thought I should be reported for something of that sort, as he had ill-will towards me. I can show he had ill-will on different occasions.

1372. Mr. Anderson.] You had no reason whatever to believe that Mr. Read had any desire to prevent you from giving any explanation to justify yourself? I do not think he would have any such desire; but before I came before him he naturally concluded, from the statements made to him, that I was guilty. I do not blame Mr. Read in any way, but I believe he thought, before I came there, from statements made to him, that I was guilty of the charge, and therefore he treated me as a guilty man.

1373. But you have known Superintendent Read to act justly to men brought under his notice according to the evidence brought before him? I believe so, according to the evidence brought before him. Of course, that is what he is guided by, and he, of course, relies upon the word of his officers to a great extent, which naturally influences his decisions.

1374. Chairman.] I suppose if he did not believe his officers it would be no good his having them there? I should not think so.

1375. Mr. Carroll.] Did you go on to the vacant ground at all with this girl Burns? Not with the girl Burns.

Mr. N.
Easterbrook.
17 Oct., 1895.

- Mr. N. 1376. You were not on the vacant plot at all? Not until I went with Senior-constable Skinner.
 Rastebrook. 1377. You have heard the evidence given by Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken,—is the 17 Oct., 1895. evidence they gave true? No; it is not.
 1378. It is false? Yes.
 1379. There is no truth in their evidence? No truth whatever.
 1380. Chairman.] You mean as regards you? Yes; as regards me.
 1381. Mr. Carroll.] You were not lying down with the girl nor pulling her about? No.
 1382. I think you said you were speaking to her? Yes; that was at the corner of Westbourne-street, and I told her to go home.
 1383. Did it not strike you as being very strange that these girls should separate at such an hour of the morning, especially when one was so much younger than the other? I do not know their idea, I am sure, but one of them did come along the street behind me, and when I heard her footsteps I thought they were Stanton's, and I immediately sent her home.
 1384. Chairman.] Were you one of those who signed that petition in reference to the beat? Yes.
 1385. Was their any difference in the demeanour of Senior-constable Skinner towards you after the signing of that petition? Yes.
 1386. When did you notice a difference in his demeanour towards you? When I was first attached to Petersham I was new from the country. I was only one day in the depôt, and was then sent out to Petersham. Most of the men in the Police Force at that time were on duty about the wharves in connection with the maritime strike in Sydney, and I was put out in the streets on duty by myself. I did not even know that the two stripes on a policeman's coat denoted that he was a senior-constable. I knew he was something above an ordinary constable, but what it was I really did not know. Therefore, I used to address Senior-constable Skinner as "Sir." He allowed me to do so for about a week. One night he rounded on me for calling him "Sir," and wanted to know where I learnt it. I had made the remark that night, "All quiet, Sir," and he rounded on me for saying "Sir." That passed off. About a week afterwards he rounded on me for saying "All quiet," and wanted to know where I got that expression. I said, "I do not know exactly where I got it, but it seems to me very appropriate for the occasion." It was then about half-past 1 o'clock in the morning. He said, "Well, it is not right." I said, "If you will kindly tell me what is right, I will endeavour to please you." He said, "Say 'all right,' or 'all correct.'" I was so much upset at the way he spoke to me that night that when I went home I told my wife that I should resign; that I would not put up with such a thing. One night I came along the street, and had one arm behind my back. Senior-constable Skinner said, "Is that the right way for a policeman to walk?" I did not know what he meant. I suppose I looked a bit silly, not knowing what he meant. He repeated the expression, "Is that the right way for a policeman to walk?"
 1387. In a kindly way he repeated the expression? No; very gruffly, as if he were talking to a dog. I said, "What is wrong with it—I do not see anything wrong?" He said, "Look at the way you are carrying your hand." I immediately dropped my hand to my side. If at any time he saw the bar of your watch-chain through the button of your coat, or one button undone, or a glove off, or any trivial occurrence of that sort, he would scold you for it in a very gruff, unmannerly way. At one time there was a theft committed at a new building in Stanmore. I found out the place where the goods were sold, and I also found out from the man who bought the things whom he got them from, and where the man lived, with the intention, of course, of going and arresting the man. I met Senior-constable Skinner just afterwards, and asked him to allow me to go off my beat to arrest that man. He refused to do so. He said that there was no need for me to go, as the man lived in Leichhardt, and the Leichhardt police could get him by someone simply telephoning to them. When I went off duty at 2 o'clock in the afternoon I spoke to a constable named Benmore, and told him about the occurrence, and asked him to go with me, and we would arrest the man. Constable Benmore came with me. When we arrived at the man's house, we found Senior-constable Skinner and Constable Aitken at the place. I said to Senior-constable Skinner, "How is it you are not allowing the Leichhardt men to arrest this man?" Senior-constable Skinner replied, "He is not at home, anyhow." He pointed out a man who was chopping a stump, and told me that that man had just seen the man we were looking for going across the paddock, and that if I went in that direction I would probably get him. (I was not on duty then.) Instead of doing what Senior-constable Skinner said, I went over to the man who was chopping the stump, and asked him if he had seen the man I was looking for. He said, "No." I said, "Senior-constable Skinner tells me you told him you saw him." He said, "If he says that, he is telling you a lie." I then went home. When I came on duty in the afternoon Senior-constable Skinner accused me of calling him all sorts of nasty names to this man, and threatened to report me. I told Senior-constable Skinner to report me; that I could get the man, and the man could prove that I did not do any such thing. When I went home that night I sat down to report Senior-constable Skinner. My wife asked me what I was doing. I told her that I was reporting Senior-constable Skinner. She said to me, "Well, if he knows he deserves reporting, and you do not report him, you may get on better with him after." She advised me not to report him. I am sorry now to say that I took her advice. Ever after that, Senior-constable Skinner tried to do his best to catch me in some way, to report me, but never had an opportunity. Knowing that he was so anxious to report me, I always took specially good care not to give him a chance to do so, and the only thing I can see in his reporting me this time is the fact of two women being there, and the surroundings of the case were so good that he trumped up this charge against me.
 1388. What about the theft—did the man get clear? No. Senior-constable Orr, the Leichhardt man, got him afterwards.
 1389. Mr. Carroll.] On whose recommendation did you get into the Force? On the recommendation of Mr. A. J. Gould, the present Minister of Justice, Mr. Dudding, of Singleton, and Mr. Hugh Munro, Mayor of Singleton.
 1390. Chairman.] That appears from the papers, which I asked to be laid on the table of the House? Yes; it is stated in one of my reports.
 1391. Mr. Carroll.] Mr. Gould was the only Member of Parliament who recommended you? Yes.
 1392. Chairman.] I suppose you know other men who have got into the Police Force through Members of Parliament recommending them? Yes.
 1393. It is nothing unusual for a good man to be recommended to the Police Force by a Member of Parliament? No, it is not. I might also state that on another occasion Senior-constable Skinner and I had a difference. I had arrested a person for stealing a copper. Senior-constable Skinner met me about 20 yards away from the Stanmore lock-up, and came with me and the prisoner into the lock-up. He wanted to take the case. I told him that if he wanted to take case he would have to prove it. As I had arrested the man, and knew all about it, he could not prove it, and of course, therefore, he allowed me to take the case.

1394. In reference to the stealing case, why did Skinner remonstrate with you? He simply looked at me in a derogatory kind of manner, and did not say anything just then.

1395. Why should he do such a thing as that? Well, stealing cases are reckoned good cases.

1396. And are like choice bones for the seniors? Yes, or any other policeman. They are the best of cases.

1397. But these choice bones are left to those who have control, if possible? If they can get hold of them. If Skinner brought a "drunk" in he would cheerfully hand the case over to another constable, and think he was doing him a great favour. I will now hand in copies of some references. The first is from Captain Langwill, officer commanding "C" Company, 4th Regiment of Infantry. (Appendix A.)

1398. How many years have you been in the Volunteer Force? Two years this time. Previously I was in the Orange Volunteer Band for some time. The next reference is from Mr. A. C. Robinson, Mayor of Singleton. (Appendix B.) The next is from Mr. E. B. Cragg, of Lonsdale, Singleton. (Appendix C.) He is a school-teacher at the present time, and taught me when I was a lad in the Denominational School; now he is in the Public School. The next reference is from Mr. F. A. King, builder, Singleton. (Appendix D.) I am now employed by Mr. King. The next reference is from Mr. Joseph Naylor, Inspector of Nuisances, Petersham. (Appendix E.) The next reference is from Mr. A. J. Gould, the present Minister of Justice. (Appendix F.) The next reference is from Mr. Hugh Munro, Mayor of Singleton, in 1890. (Appendix G.) The next reference is from Mr. Dudding. (Appendix H.); and the next is another reference from Mr. E. B. Cragg. (Appendix I.)

1399. Do you know any prominent citizen in Petersham? Yes.

1400. Whom? Dr. Clune.

1401. I believe that he has volunteered to come here as a witness, to bear testimony to your character? Yes.

Mr. N.
Easterbrook.

CASE OF CONSTABLE EASTERBROOK.

APPENDIX.

A.

Orderly Room, "C" Company, 4th Infantry Regt., Singleton, 1 October, 1895
From Officer Commanding "C" Company, 4th Infantry Regt., Singleton.
To whom it may concern,—

I have pleasure in certifying that Nathaniel Easterbrook joined the Infantry Company under my command as a private about two years ago, and by reason of his careful attention to his duties, sobriety, and general reliability of character, rapidly advanced his position to that of corporal, in which capacity he is giving every satisfaction.

I have every confidence in recommending his services to anyone requiring a good man.

I may say also that he has proved himself an excellent rifle shot, having won the marksman's badge on every occasion of his having gone through the musketry course.

A. LANGWILL, Captain,
Commanding "C" Company, 4th Infantry Regt.

B.

Singleton, 30 September, 1895.

THIS is to certify that I have known Mr. N. Easterbrook all his life, and can testify to his character as being a sober, honest, and trustworthy young man, and of good moral character.

I have also known all his family connections, who all bear the same good character.

ARTHUR C. ROBINSON,
Mayor.

C.

Singleton, 29 September, 1895.

I HAVE known Nathaniel Easterbrook since his childhood. As a boy he was very intelligent and obedient. I have had dealings with him during the last two and a half years, and I have found him of good moral character, industrious, sober, honest and reliable.

EDWARD B. CRAGG,
"Lonadale," Singleton.

D.

Gunnedah, 20 September, 1895.

MR. NAT. EASTERBROOK I have known for the last eighteen years, and has been in my employment during the last three years, and is now desirous of leaving of his own free will and accord. It gives me pleasure in testifying to his morality. He is sober, honest, and every way trustworthy. During the whole time he has been with me and ever since I have known him I have never known him to misbehave himself in any way. I am satisfied that he will prove a capable man in any position he may occupy.

F. A. KING.

E.

20 June, 1892.

THIS is to certify that I have known Mr. N. Easterbrook during the last two (2) years, and during that time I have had good opportunities of judging as to general character and conduct, and I have much pleasure in stating that his conduct has been such that I can recommend with every confidence to any person or persons as a man who will do his utmost to give satisfaction in any capacity in which he may be employed.

JOSEPH NAYLOR,
Inspector of Nuisances, Borough of Petersham.

F.

Sydney, 15 July, 1890.

I HAVE pleasure in recommending the bearer, Nathaniel Easterbrook, who is, I understand, desirous of joining the Police Force, to the favourable consideration of the Inspector-General as a steady and deserving young man.

ALBERT J. GOULD.

G.

Singleton, 29 August, 1890.

I BEG to say that I have known Mr. Nathaniel Easterbrook since his boyhood, and have always found him an honest, sober, and industrious young man.

HUGH MUNRO.

H.

Singleton, 29 August, 1890.

I CERTIFY that I have known Mr. Nathaniel Easterbrook from fifteen to twenty years, and have always considered him as very honest, sober, persevering, and industrious.

WM. DUDDING.

I.

To Messrs. Roberts, Robinson, and Rae.
Gentlemen,—

I have much pleasure in recommending the bearer, Mr. Nath. Easterbrook, as a first-class builder. He is a civil and respectable young man. He completed a house for Mrs. Cragg in a highly satisfactory manner, and you would find him a skilled, quick, and obliging workman.

Singleton, 6 January, 1894.

I am, &c.,
EDWARD B. CRAGG.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

DISMISSAL OF CONSTABLE EASTERBROOK.

(PETITION FROM NATHANIEL EASTERBROOK, OF SINGLETON, TO BE REPRESENTED BY COUNSEL OR ATTORNEY BEFORE SELECT COMMITTEE SITTING ON CASE OF.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 8 October, 1895.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Nathaniel Easterbrook, of Singleton, in the Colony of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

1. That on the seventeenth day of September, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five, your Honorable House appointed a Select Committee to inquire into and report upon the charges made against, and the dismissal from the Police Force of, your Petitioner.

2. That your Petitioner humbly prays that he may be represented by counsel or attorney, or in person, before the Select Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the said matter, with the right to call witnesses and adduce evidence, and to examine and cross-examine such witnesses as may give evidence before the said Committee.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

NATHANIEL EASTERBROOK.

1895.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
NEW SOUTH WALES.

CASE OF CONSTABLE ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, OF GOULBURN.
(RETURN RESPECTING.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 22 October, 1895.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 25th September, 1895, That there be laid upon the Table of this House:—

“Copies of all papers dealing with the case of Constable Alexander Mackenzie, of Goulburn, who has been called on to resign his position in the Service.”

(Dr. Graham.)

The Inspector-General of the Insane to The Inspector-General of Police.

Lunacy Department, Inspector-General's Office,

Dear Sir,

Gladesville, 29 September, 1894.

I beg to forward for your information a copy of an anonymous communication headed “Information for H. Geary,” which reached me some time since from the Chief Secretary's Office, and was sent with other papers by Geary to Professor Anderson Stuart. From the character of the communication it is evident that it was written by a late attendant at Cook's River Asylum, and the attached papers from Dr. Vause leave no doubt but that the writer is Alexander Mackenzie, who was dismissed from his employment at Cook's River, and is, I understand, now in the Police Force.

A very libellous and improper circular letter, of which I also forward a copy, has recently been sent to all Members of the Legislative Assembly, and from the similarity of the type-writing, the paper, ink, &c., in the originals now in my office, and also from certain information in my possession, I have little doubt but that this also emanated from Geary, who appears to be assisted in his attacks on Dr. Vause and others by Mackenzie.

I have thought it right to bring the matter under your notice, and am, Dear Sir,

Very faithfully yours,

F. NORTON MANNING.

This is a very serious matter. Mr. Grainger should send for Police-Constable Mackenzie, and interrogate him on the subject, allowing him to make a written statement. One thing is clear—he obtained admission into the Force by a false representation, as he produced a certificate from Dr. Sinclair concealing the fact that he was dismissed from the Asylum.—E.F., 1/10/94. Superintendent Grainger, Goulburn.

[Enclosures.]

INFORMATION FOR A. GEARY.

ABOUT General Richardson, I know this much, that he has been kept in that room where you found him that morning every night from the 13th day of November, 1893, till the 1st day of March, 1894, to my knowledge, without any exception. The fact is, about him plastering himself with his own dirt, is that he had no other place to do it in, only on the floor. Then what could you expect of a man who was in the state he was in but to roll and ramble about all over the place; in fact, the most careful man would be apt to come in contact with anything like that in a place like that. To my knowledge the General was assensible as you could wish any man to be some nights he was put in there. In fact, I could prove he has been there for the last twelve months, as I know two or three of the men that has been there for twelve months or more

There

There was something in Dr. Vause's report about an attendant visiting the General's room every two hours. That is false, as I never heard, nor know, of it being done, and also that these rooms were supplied with india-rubber utensils; the General never had one. If you knew the state of affairs as well as I do, and to read Dr. Vause's report, you would think he was one of the biggest liars on the face of the earth. He must have a terrible hard neck on him to dare to send such a report into Parliament, knowing very well that there is people all through the country who knows as well as he does himself the way things were carried on in his place. There were a dozen attendants and nurses discharged from there; they all know how things were carried on—in fact, better so than I do. I would like very well to have a talk with Dr. Vause on certain matters. I would soon shut him up. There were weeks that the General never dirtied his room, and Dr. Vause never offered to put him anywhere else—in fact, he never bothered himself; he knew what state his room was in to my knowledge. I suppose as long as he got his £300 a year he did not care. I suppose thought roughery would last for ever; but this time Dr. Vause has put his foot in it at last. To know that General Richardson has got justice and proper treatment is far sweeter to me than revenge, for I care nothing for Dr. Vause. There would be no danger for an attendant to sleep with General Richardson all night—some nights he might not be able to sleep, but then he would sleep through the day; but of course that would be more expense to Dr. Vause. The General has been, to my knowledge, violent on very rare occasions, but even then only for an hour or two at a time; it was always through where he was kept and the way he was treated. The General, as a rule, used to be in splendid form of mind through the day; he would make anyone laugh if they were half dead. At times he liked to be outside on fine days.

AN ANONYMOUS LETTER.

To the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales,—

Bayview Asylum, Cook's River Road.

Gentlemen,
 Owing to influential friends, * * * has been removed from this hell upon earth.
 Fifty Government patients are half starved and nearly naked, being only clothed properly when it is known that the Government Inspector, Dr. Manning, is coming.
 Men and women are placed in solitary confinement without light, bedding, or clothing.
 Paralysed patients are eaten alive by rats.
 Women batter their heads and die in dark cells.
 Women are dragged by the hair of their heads and placed in dark solitary confinement.
 Women die without any inquiry being made.
 Men likewise.
 A hell upon earth is the only name for this institution, which is presided over by Dr. A. J. Vause.
 A drunken Dr. Vause.
 Why did Dibbs suppress the papers and the honest report of Dr. Anderson Stuart?
 Because Copeland (his mate) was a shareholder in this impious concern.
 Why is Alfred Bennett, of the Evening News, silent?
 Because he is well tipped.
 The other dailies have been squared by Edward Greville, another shareholder.
 Members, do not let this evil spot remain in your midst.
 Greville, Copeland, Vause, Guanou, & Co., must not be allowed to illtreat with impunity the poor and insane, from whom they are netting £6,000 per annum.
 Yet the late Government and the present also wish to hush up the matter, so that Greville, Copeland, & Co., can still go in for their daily spoil of flesh and blood.
 Members, how long is this to be carried on?
 Will no one take the matter up and demand a searching inquiry?

ARISTIDES.

Constable Mackenzie to Superintendent Grainger.

Police Station, Goulburn, 3 October, 1894.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE, No. 6,689, reports that he has supplied H. Geary with certain information about the case of General Richardson, all of which he is prepared to substantiate on oath if necessary. The statement headed "Information for H. Geary" was supplied by him. The constable supplied the information to enable Geary to inquire into the matter, and because he was of opinion that the treatment which General Richardson was receiving was most inhuman, and was likely to ruin him completely—bodily as well as mentally.

When joining the police, the constable believes he stated in the application form that he was last employed at Bayview Asylum, and produced a reference from Dr. Sinclair, of Newtown, who was acting during Dr. Vause's illness. He was not asked how he came to leave. Had he been asked, he would have stated the whole circumstance, and he does not consider now that he was properly treated.

With the anonymous letter sent to Members of Parliament the constable had nothing to do.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,

Constable.

For the Inspector-General's information. Constable Mackenzie at once admitted to me that he had given the information to H. Geary. The constable states he was not asked under what circumstances he left the Asylum. Sub-Inspector Fenton informs me that Mackenzie is a steady man.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 3/10/94. The Inspector-General of Police, Sydney.

Forwarded for Dr. Manning's information and observations. I will defer action.—EDMUND FOSBERY, 4/10/94.

The Inspector-General of the Insane to The Inspector-General of Police.

Lunacy Department, Inspector-General's Office,

Gladesville, 1 July, 1895.

My Dear Fosbery,
 I must apologise to you for keeping the accompanying papers for such a length of time. I intended returning them as soon as the Royal Commission on the Bayview Asylum sent in its report, but have since been much occupied.

The views held by the Commission as to Mackenzie's conduct and evidence are sufficiently indicated in the report.

Yours, &c.,

F. NORTON MANNING.

Papers again forwarded to Superintendent Grainger. Police-Constable Mackenzie ought to see them, as he may desire to make some observations. The tenor of his evidence and the report thereon are not of a character to inspire confidence in the constable, and apart from that, as I have before pointed out, he obtained admission into the Force by what was clearly a false representation. I do not consider such a man fit for the service.—E. F., 3/7/95. Superintendent Grainger, Goulburn.

MEMO.—Sergeant M'Hardy will show these papers to Constable Mackenzie, as he may desire to make observations thereon.

The sergeant will also report upon the constable's general conduct and efficiency since he has been stationed at Wyalong.

E. GRAINGER,
Superintendent.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 11 July, 1895.

Re the attached papers.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE, No. 6,689, begs to report that he has nothing to say in regard to the evidence given by him before the Bayview Asylum Royal Commission, only that he is satisfied in his own mind that he has told the truth, and nothing else. The constable has done all in the interest of General Richardson, and not for the sake of having revenge on Dr. Vause, for simply dismissing him, as he is not the least ashamed of being dismissed from such an institution, and for such a trifling cause. Mrs. Gilchrist was not known as the lady-superintendent when Mackenzie was employed there, but as Dr. Vause's house-keeper, nor was she known to have anything to do with the male attendants. Constable Mackenzie always expected to be dismissed from Bayview Asylum, as he always expressed his intention to the other attendants of exposing the manner in which General Richardson was treated while he was there. The constable this day, when examining the attached papers for the first time, realised the mistake he had made in answer to the fifth question on the application form: instead of testimonials from last place of employment, he put down in a mistake testimonials from last employer and others. The constable had simply done this in a mistake, and not with any intention of telling a lie about it. The constable, in helping to bring such treatment to light as General Richardson was subject to at Bayview Asylum, was under the impression that he was doing his duty in every way, and is still under the same impression.

Sergeant M'Hardy, Wyalong.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,
Constable.

Forwarded.—C. M'HARDY, Sergeant, 11/7/95. The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 11 July, 1895.

Re General conduct and efficiency of Constable Mackenzie.

SERGEANT M'HARDY begs to report that during the four months Constable Mackenzie has been stationed at West Wyalong he has been almost constantly under the notice of the Sergeant, and during that time his general conduct has been excellent, and he has performed his duties in a thoroughly efficient manner. The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

CHARLES M'HARDY,
Sergeant.

Police Department, Goulburn, 16 July, 1895.

Re Constable Mackenzie referred to in attached.

I BEG to report that Constable Mackenzie served under me at this station for nearly twelve months, and during that period I found him steady and attentive to his police duties.

E. Grainger, Esq., Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

R. FENTON,
Sub-Inspector.

Police Department, Superintendent's Office, Southern District, Goulburn, 17 July, 1895.

MEMO.—I herewith return all papers re Constable Mackenzie, together with a report by the constable in reference to the evidence, &c., given by him before the Royal Commission re management of the Licensed House for Insane at Cook's River; also reports from Sub-Inspector Fenton and Sergeant M'Hardy as to the constable's conduct, &c., since his arrival in the Southern District. The Inspector-General of Police.

E. GRAINGER,
Superintendent, Southern District.

If Mr. Grainger has (as I have) carefully read the report and evidence as affecting Constable Mackenzie, he will see that they reflect very seriously upon him; that his statements are discredited; that he was actuated by improper motives, such as revenge. A man so untruthful and untrustworthy, and who, moreover, made a false statement when joining the police, cannot be considered fit for the Service. He must address himself to these points in his defence if he have any cause to show why he should not be removed from the Force.—E.F., 18/7/95. Superintendent Grainger, Goulburn.

These papers are returned for the purpose of Constable Mackenzie making any report he may think fit on the matters referred to in the Inspector-General's minute of 18th instant.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 19/7/95. Sergeant M'Hardy, West Wyalong.

Re the attached papers and the Inspector-General's minute of the 18th instant.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 25 July, 1895.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE, No. 6,689, most respectfully begs that the Inspector-General of Police may take a more lenient view of the error the constable made when he joined the Police Force, and that the constable may be allowed to correct his mistake, as the constable simply made the mistake for the want of thinking what he was doing, and not with the least intention of misleading anyone. The constable begs to further report that no improper motives, or any love for revenge, had ever entered his mind against Dr. Vause, or any other one connected with the asylum, and, if necessary, the constable can produce letters he sent to Mr. Geary, which will show it was not for revenge on Dr. Vause, but in justice to the patient. The constable humbly begs that due consideration will be given to his previous good character, also his general conduct and attention to his police duties, as reported by his superior officers, for the last sixteen months. The constable, so far in life, has always proved himself both truthful and trustworthy, and if the truth was known to others as it is to himself in connection with Bayview Asylum, and his evidence before the Royal Commission, there would be no grounds for charging him with being untruthful or untrustworthy. The constable begs to further report that if his statements were discredited by part of the Commission, they were credited by the other, and that the Commissioners were not unanimous in their decision.

Sergeant M'Hardy, Wyalong.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,
Constable.

Forwarded.—C. M'HARDY, Sergeant, 25/7/95. The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

Police

Police Department, Superintendent's Office,

Southern District, Goulburn, 27 July, 1895.

MEMO.—I have read the report and evidence, and given careful attention to the portions affecting Constable Mackenzie. They certainly reflect, to a very serious degree, upon the constable. A man, actuated by motives of revenge in the performance of a public duty, cannot be considered a proper person to hold the position of a constable. I should have liked to have received the constable's resignation, but he has not thought fit to resign, but has made another report, which I attach.

E. GRAINGER,

The Inspector-General of Police.

Superintendent, Southern District.

The Inspector-General of Police to The Principal Under Secretary.

Sir,

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, Sydney, 30 July, 1895.

I have the honor to report, for the information of the Chief Secretary, that Alexander Mackenzie, who is now a police constable, and formerly an attendant at Bayview House Lunatic Asylum, from which service he was dismissed—a fact he concealed when applying for admission to the Police Service—gave evidence before the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the conduct and management of the Asylum referred to.

The Commissioners stated in their report (Sec. 11) that they had to contend with unusual difficulties in the evidence laid before them as to the general management of Bayview House, inasmuch as in the main the testimony in support of the various accusations had been given by discharged servants, and consequently implied an unworthy motive on Constable Mackenzie's part.

In Section 63 the Commissioners have no hesitation in stating that the evidence given by the attendant Mackenzie is a gross perversion of the circumstances of the case, based on an erroneous presumption.

Section 265. That it had been proved to the Commissioners that the statements made by servants previously employed at Bayview House were either gross exaggerations or utterly at variance with truth.

As the case of Mackenzie in this matter is one to some extent outside the ordinary category of misconduct by a police constable, with which it is my duty to deal, I beg to recommend that the Chief Secretary may be pleased to refer the papers to the Honorable Sir Arthur Renwick, President of the Royal Commission, for the favor of his observations regarding the evidence given by the witness Mackenzie, that I may be better able to judge how far it affects his fitness for the appointment he holds.

I enclose herewith Mackenzie's reports and other papers bearing on the case.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

The papers might be referred to Sir Arthur Renwick, as herein suggested by Mr. Fosbery, for his observations.—C.W., 2/8/95. Approved.—J.N.B., 2/8/95.

The Principal Under Secretary to The Honorable Sir Arthur Renwick.

Sir,

Chief Secretary's Office, Sydney, 5 August, 1895.

In transmitting for your perusal the accompanying correspondence, relative to the case of one Alexander Mackenzie, who gave evidence before the Royal Commission which recently held an inquiry touching the conduct and management of the Bayview House Lunatic Asylum, I am directed by the Chief Secretary to request that you will be kind enough to favour me with your observations in regard to the evidence of this witness, in order that the Inspector-General of Police may be in a better position to judge to what extent it affects his fitness for the appointment he at present holds. It will be seen that Mackenzie, who was dismissed from the institution in question, where he was employed as an attendant, concealed this fact when applying for admission to the Police Force.

2. I am at the same time to ask that the documents accompanying this communication may be returned.

I have, &c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,

Principal Under Secretary.

The evidence given by the witness Mackenzie before the Bayview Royal Commission has been submitted for the information of the Government, and in the Report of the Commission reference is on several points made to the value of this evidence. I cannot understand the nature of the further observations on the subject requested by the Honorable the Chief Secretary. As regards the fitness of the witness for service in the Police Force of the Colony, I am sure there cannot be a more competent judge of the matter than the Inspector-General.—A.R., 6/8/95.

May be referred to the Inspector-General of Police.—C.W., 8/8/95. Considering that I have not made any observation, I am in a similar difficulty to that experienced by Dr. Renwick. Return the papers to the Inspector-General of Police.—J.N.B., 8/8/95. The Inspector-General of Police.—C.W., P.U.S., B.C., 8/8/95.

The Inspector-General of Police to The Principal Under Secretary.

Police Department, Inspector-General's Office, Sydney, 9 August, 1895.

The misconduct attributed to Police-Constable Mackenzie was not committed by him as a member of the Police Force, though it affected his fitness for that position. I did not think it an unfitting course to adopt to ask the President of the Royal Commission, who heard the evidence given, and who was the best judge of its character, to favor me with his opinion of the conclusions he arrived at regarding it and the witness. However, he apparently declines to do so, and I have therefore acted upon the facts before me, and given Mackenzie notice that his services will be dispensed with.

EDMUND FOSBERY,

Inspector-General of Police.

Submitted.—15/8/95. Approved.—J.N.B., 15/8/95. The Inspector-General of Police.—C.W., P.U.S., B.C., 15/8/95. Noted and returned.—E.F. The Principal Under Secretary, 16/8/95.

After further consideration I see no reason to vary the opinion I expressed in my minute attached, dated the 18th ultimo, and I accordingly direct that Police-Constable Mackenzie receive three months' notice that his services will be dispensed with, for the reasons I have stated.—E.F. Superintendent Grainger, Goulburn, 9/8/95.

The Inspector-General directs that Constable Mackenzie receive three months' notice that his services will be dispensed with, for the reasons expressed in his minute (attached) dated 18th ultimo. I therefore send a written notice, which Sergeant M'Hardy will hand to the constable, and inform me of date on which he does so.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 12/8/95. Sergeant M'Hardy, West Wyalong.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 13 August, 1895.

Re Constable Mackenzie and Bayview Asylum.

SERGEANT M'HARDY begs to return papers in this matter in connection with another report against Constable Mackenzie, which is herewith forwarded. Notice to Constable Mackenzie retained by Sergeant M'Hardy pending further instructions.

CHARLES M'HARDY,

The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

Sergeant.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 13 August, 1895.

Alleged misconduct of Constable Mackenzie.

SERGEANT M'HARDY begs to forward herewith a statement made, on 12th instant, to him by Mrs. Walsh, West Wyalong. Mrs. Walsh is a respectable woman, and Sergeant M'Hardy is of opinion that her statement is perfectly true.

Under the circumstances Sergeant M'Hardy has taken the liberty of retaining for the present a notice which has just been received re three months' notice of dismissal to Constable Mackenzie, in case it may be considered advisable to alter said notice.

Of course Constable Mackenzie has not had an opportunity of replying to Mrs. Walsh's statement, but the alleged misconduct has now attained such publicity here that, whether said misconduct is conclusively proved or not, it would be extremely inadvisable to allow Constable Mackenzie to remain longer on this station.

CHARLES M'HARDY,

The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

Sergeant.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 12 August, 1895.

Statement made by Emily Mary Walsh to Sergeant M'Hardy, West Wyalong, on 12th August, 1895.

I AM a married woman, residing in a tent at West Wyalong. About 12 o'clock last night I was in bed in my tent. Constable Mackenzie, in uniform, came to the tent and said, "Is anybody there with you?" I said, "No." He said, "Where is your husband?" I said, "He went away." Mackenzie said, "Can I come in?" I said, "No; if you come in you will be sorry for it." He said, "Don't defy me; my clothes are sufficient to admit me anywhere if I think there is anything wrong." Mackenzie then came into the tent and sat down on the edge of the bed, and told me not to be afraid—that he would not commit rape. I told him that I would get him into trouble for coming into my tent. He then put his hand on me and tried to get into bed with me. I said, "I'll scream," and I did scream. He got up and went outside, and said, "You bloody bitch, I'll be even with you yet." He then went away, and I got up and went to a neighbouring tent for protection. A boy, named M. M'Mullen, was at the next tent, and I told him all about it. Constable Mackenzie had previously insulted me on two or three occasions. I am making no mistake about the man or his name.

EMILY MARY WALSH.

Police Department, Superintendent's Office, Southern District, Goulburn, 15 August, 1895.

MEMO.—This report and statement against Constable Mackenzie are forwarded to the Superintendent at Braidwood. A wire has been sent to Sergeant M'Hardy to serve the notice on Constable Mackenzie, and to obtain his explanation in reply to present charge.

Telegram from Goulburn Station, addressed to Sergeant M'Hardy.

SERVE notice on Mackenzie, and obtain his explanation in reply to Walsh charge.

W. CAMPBELL,

Senior-Sergeant, in absence of Superintendent.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 15 August, 1895.

MRS. WALSH, West Wyalong, reports to Sergeant M'Hardy that about 12 o'clock (midnight) on 11th instant Constable Mackenzie, in uniform, entered her tent against her will, and, in the absence of her husband, sat down on the edge of her bed, put his hand on her, and attempted to get into bed with her, whereupon she screamed, and Constable Mackenzie left, saying, "You bloody bitch, I'll be even with you yet for this." Mrs. Walsh states she then sought protection in a neighbouring house.

The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

CHARLES M'HARDY,

Sergeant.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 15 August, 1895.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE, No. 6,689, begs to report that he was on duty in West Wyalong on the night of the 11th instant.

About 11:30 p.m. he was standing opposite Mrs. Walsh's tent. He saw a man coming out of the tent and walking away. The constable walked after the man, to see who he was. When passing the door of the tent Mrs. Walsh called out, "Constable Mackenzie, you have no right here. I know what you are after. I have a husband of my own, and that is enough for me." The woman seemed excited, and furious with rage. The constable, thinking that she was wrong in her mind, walked to the door of the tent, and asked if Jack, her husband, was in. She said, "No; he is many miles from here, and well you know it, Constable Mackenzie. It was through you threatening to lock him up if he did not get work he had to go away. You are the cause of me being so lonely, and now I will make you pay for it. I will get you into trouble." She then screamed. The constable, thinking that the woman was in a fit, parted the door of the tent and looked in, and saw Mrs. Walsh sitting in her bed. She struck a match. The constable then walked away, saying, "You may be bad enough to say anything." She called out after him, "I will be bad enough to get your coat off." The

The constable did not go within 6 or 7 feet of Mrs. Walsh; he did not call her a bitch. The constable on several occasions told both Mrs. Walsh and her husband to look for work. About a fortnight ago the constable went to their tent, and asked Mrs. Walsh if her husband, who was absent at the time, was working. She said he was doing nothing yet. The constable told her if they did not get something to do within a week they would both have to go somewhere else. It is in consequence of this that she has laid this serious and unfounded charge against the constable. This woman is well known to every constable on this station as a suspicious character. Her husband is a reputed thief, and has done a sentence of three months in Cooramundra Gaol; also a fortnight in the lockup at Wyalong. The constable has watched their tent carefully for some time, as he was determined to find out how they got a living. According to her own statements to other people, she has simply laid this charge against the constable so as her husband would think more of her, as she said Constable Mackenzie always had a down on Jack.

Sergeant M'Hardy, Wyalong.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,

Constable.

The Superintendent of Police. Forwarded, 15/8/95.—C. M'HARDY, Sergeant.

Sergeant M'Hardy should see Mrs. Walsh, and get her to take proceedings at the Police Court at once against Constable Mackenzie; and assist her in every way he can as to conduct of the prosecution.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 10/8/95. Sergeant M'Hardy, Wyalong.

West Wyalong, 20 August, 1895.

I DECLINE to prosecute Constable Mackenzie in the Police Court, by desire that he be punished as severely as possible by the Police Department.

EMILY MARY WALSH.

MEMO.—Re attached papers and Superintendent's memo.

SERGEANT M'HARDY desired Mrs. Walsh to prosecute, but, after consulting her friends, she handed the above statement to the sergeant.

CHARLES M'HARDY.

The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

Sergeant

I FORWARD these reports for the Inspector-General's information. As the woman declines to take action at Police Court, I do not see that I can do anything in the matter. Constable Mackenzie has been served with a notice that his services will be dispensed with at the end of three months.

E. GRAINGER,

The Inspector-General of Police, Sydney.

Superintendent of Police,

26/8/95.

Can any corroboration be obtained of the woman's statement from the boy or other neighbour? Judging from Sergeant M'Hardy's report, I should think it well for Mackenzie to resign at once.—E.P. Superintendent Grainger, 27/8/95.

Referred to Sergeant M'Hardy for attention and report. The sergeant will read the latter part of the Inspector-General's minute to Constable Mackenzie.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 28/8/95.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 1 September, 1895.

Re Mrs. Walsh's complaint against Constable Mackenzie.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE, No. 6,689, begs to report that the Inspector-General's minute was read to him by Sergeant M'Hardy.

As the constable fails to see why he should resign at once, and would ask to be allowed to serve the three months' notice.

It is evident Mrs. Walsh has no case against Constable Mackenzie, as it is believed she was led to take action, and not till after the advice of a solicitor did she abandon the idea of proceeding in the Police Court.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,

Sergeant M'Hardy, Wyalong.

Constable.

Police Station, West Wyalong, 1 September, 1895.

Re Mrs. Walsh's complaint against Constable Mackenzie.

SERGEANT M'HARDY begs to report that the only additional evidence obtainable is that of M. J. M'Mullen, whose statement is herewith attached; also a further statement by Mrs. Walsh, and a further report by Constable Mackenzie.

CHARLES M'HARDY,

Sergeant.

Re alleged misconduct of Constable Mackenzie, at West Wyalong, on 11th August, 1895.

Statement of Michael J. M'Mullen.

On the night of Sunday, 11th August, 1895, a little after twenty minutes to 12 o'clock, Mrs. Walsh came to my tent at West Wyalong, which is about 200 yards from her tent. She said that Mackenzie, the policeman, came to her tent a few minutes before; came into her tent against her will; sat down on the edge of the bed in which she was; caught hold of her two hands; then got up to look outside to see if anyone was coming; came back again, and she screamed, whereupon Mackenzie went away, saying, "I'll have you yet, you bitch." Mrs. Walsh, when she came to me, was partly undressed. I am 15 years of age. I thought I heard a scream just before Mrs. Walsh came to me, but did not know it was Mrs. Walsh until she came over.

Cross-examined by Constable Mackenzie: Mrs. Walsh told me all this at the hour and date I have already mentioned. Mrs. Walsh did not tell me to say anything to-day. She told me nothing to-day or since the above-mentioned occurrence, except that Sergeant M'Hardy wanted to see me, and that was what brought me here.

When she first complained to me about the matter I was not properly awake, and did not thoroughly understand her, but I went down to her tent and stayed with her, as she requested me to do. I slept in her bed with her. I am over 15 years of age,—I will be 16 on the 12th January next. I have slept with her every night since then. My cousin was in the tent with me on the night complained of when Mrs. Walsh came to it. His name is Bernard M'Mullen. He is about 20 years old. Mrs. Walsh did not ask him to go to her tent.

I took particular notice of the date, as Mrs. Walsh told me at the time that she would bring the matter into court.

M. J. M'MULLEN.

Further

Further Statement by Mrs. Walsh, made 30th August, 1895.

On the Tuesday before the occurrence I have already complained of Constable Mackenzie came into my tent, about 7 o'clock at night, caught hold of my hand, tried to draw me to him; but I pulled away from him, whereupon he said, "You won't, won't you," and went away. He asked me on that occasion when my husband was going away, and said if he did not soon go he would be made to go. I said he was going shearing at the Burrawang shed.

Cross-examined by Mackenzie: You told me if my husband could not support himself he could not support me. You told him we would be both taken up on the vag, if we didn't get work. You asked me on one occasion to go for a walk with you up the bush, and took hold of my hand. I did not go for a walk with you.

I was married to my husband on 15th July last.

I have been in different situations since I came to the field. I was employed by Mrs. Greatrex, Mrs. Housenen, and Mrs. Ward. I also got money from my brother near Tumut.

MRS. E. M. WALSH.

No other evidence can be obtained either for or against the accused.—C. M'Hardy, Sergeant, The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

For the Inspector-General's information. After reading the reports, I do not see any use in taking action before the Police Court, as I think no bench would convict. Constable Mackenzie declines to resign, and requests to be allowed to serve until the end of the three months' notice. I think he should be transferred to another station. I could send him to Cootamundra, where there will be a vacancy in a few days, if approved of.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent of Police, 3/9/95. The Inspector-General of Police.

I cannot discharge Mackenzie without more proof of the charge against him, but he cannot remain at Wyalong. He must be transferred to Goulburn, or he may be paid to the end of the month if he prefer to go at once.—E.F. Superintendent Grainger, 4/9/95.

Mackenzie declines to go at once. I have ordered his transfer to Goulburn.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 9/9/95. The Inspector-General of Police.

Telegram from Charles M'Hardy, Sergeant of Police, West Wyalong, to The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE desires to see Lunacy Complaint papers again.—7/9/95.

Submitted. Will there be any objection to showing Mackenzie the papers on his return to Goulburn? (The papers are at Goulburn).—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 9/9/95. The Inspector-General of Police.

He should see them in the office.—E. F., 10/9/95. Superintendent Grainger, Goulburn. Papers shown to Constable Mackenzie, 18/9/95.

Police Station, Goulburn, 18 September, 1895.

CONSTABLE MACKENZIE, No. 6,689, begs to report that, having received notice that his services would be dispensed with for the reasons set forth in a minute of the Inspector-General of Police, he has now been informed of the substance of this minute, and would respectfully ask for further consideration of the matter. It would appear that the principal reason for his discharge is alleged untrustworthiness of his evidence in connection with the Bayview Asylum, and being actuated by improper motives, &c. The evidence given at the inquiry was mostly one word against another, but in the only instance in which an independent test was made by a surprise visit early in the morning, the constable's allegations were fully borne out, and General Richardson hastily removed from the premises. Further on this matter: when an attempt was made to prove that General Richardson's seclusion was no worse than other similar rooms in Government Asylums, Dr. Anderson Stuart declared that he would not believe it if they brought a cloud of angels from heaven to prove it. Judging from the report of the Commission, it would appear that Mr. M'Gowen at least had a very strong belief in the constable's statements, and it seems very hard that the constable's character should be taken away in this manner, when the conclusions arrived at are open to dispute.

The constable maintains that he had no fraudulent intention when filling up his application form. Sub-Inspector Fenton, Goulburn.

ALEXANDER MACKENZIE,

Constable.

Submitted.—R. FERRON, Sub-Inspector, 19/9/95. The Superintendent of Police, Goulburn.

Submitted. All papers in connection with the complaint against Constable Mackenzie herewith. The three months' notice expires on 27th November.—E. GRAINGER, Superintendent, 19/9/95. The Inspector-General of Police.

I see no reason to alter my decision. Mackenzie would certainly not have been appointed had he not concealed the fact that he had been dismissed from the asylum. His conduct lately has been very unsatisfactory, as reported by Sergeant M'Hardy.—E.F., 20/9/95. Superintendent Grainger, Goulburn.

Dr. A. J. Vause to The Inspector-General of the Insane.

Dear Dr. Manning,

"Bayview," Tempe, 20 August, 1894.

In reply to your letter of the 18th inst., I am sending the following answers:—

1. Name.—Alexander Mackenzie.
2. Date of entry upon service.—13th November, 1893.
" leaving " 1st March, 1894.
3. Conduct apparently good until he became impertinent to Mrs. Gilchrist. He left on this account.
4. Former employment.—That of a farmer. The names and addresses of the people who signed his references I have not noted, but they were apparently satisfactory at the time, as I have noted them as being good.
5. I did not give him a reference when he left.

The enclosed form I have extracted from my book. It was filled in at the time of engagement, except date of entry upon service and cause of leaving, which I have added just now.

I remain, &c.,

A. J. VAUSE.

Name—

Name—Alexander Mackenzie; age—27; religion—Presbyterian Free Church; nationality—Scotch; occupation—farmer; residence —; length of time in the Colony—three years; references—good; previous experience—nil; occupation and addresses of relatives in the Colony, particularly about Sydney—no; single; date of entry upon service—13th November, 1893; cause of leaving—insolence to Mrs. Gilchrist; said he would thank her to mind her own business, and that he would pass through the office with his hat on as often as he liked; character and disposition —.

Newtown, 3 March, 1894.

THE bearer, Alexander Mackenzie, has been acting as an attendant for the past four months at the Private Lunatic Asylum at Tempe, and during the five weeks which I was acting for Dr. Vause there I found him very attentive to his duties, and can confidently recommend him to be worthy of a similar situation in one of the Government Asylums.

E. P. SINCLAIR, M.B., C.M.

S.S. "Jelunga," 29 March, 1891.

THIS is to certify that Alexander Mackenzie acted as constable during the voyage from England to Queensland. It gives me great pleasure to state that he always carried out his orders and did his duty in a most satisfactory way. He was always anxious to oblige, and keep good order and discipline amongst the men. I can strongly recommend him as an honest hard-working man.

E. W. GOODRIDGE,

Surgeon Superintendent, s.s. "Jelunga."

Manse of Stoer, Lochinver, Sutherlandshire, 7 May, 1889.

I HEREBY certify that Alexander Mackenzie, who is a native of this parish, is a respectable young man. He is frank and obliging, as well as honest and trustworthy. He is an able and active workman. His moral character is irreproachable.

ALEXANDER GRANTS,

Minister of the Parish of Stour.

Culkin School, Lochinver, 7 May, 1889.

THIS is to certify that I have known the bearer, Alexander Mackenzie, since his childhood; that as a pupil he was well-behaved, civil, and obliging; that since arriving at manhood his conduct has been correct and becoming; and that I believe him to be thoroughly reliable and trustworthy.

NEIL M'IVER,

Teacher.

Townsville, 6 October, 1893.

THE bearer, Alexander Mackenzie, has been in the employ of the Townsville Gas and Coke Company, Ltd., as stoker, for the past eighteen months, and during that time he has proved himself to be a good freeman and an efficient workman, and has a fair knowledge of gas works.

WILLIAM MARSHALL,

Manager.

I hereby certify that Alexander Mackenzie is a steady, industrious man, and of good character.

E. J. B. WAREHAM,

Secretary.

1895.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
NEW SOUTH WALES.

PRISONS.
(REGULATIONS FOR THE MANAGEMENT OF GAOLS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 27 August, 1895.

Department of Justice,
Sydney, 20th August, 1895.

GAOL REGULATIONS.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased, under the Acts 4 Victoria No. 29 and 37 Victoria No. 14, to make the following Regulations for the good management of the Gaols of New South Wales, being a codification, with a few verbal additions and alterations, of those published on 19th February, 1867, and subsequently at various dates up to the 30th day of June, 1894; the object being to have a compact compilation of the original regulations and the amendments made therein and additions thereto.

ALBERT J. GOULD.

GENERAL RULES FOR GAOLS.

Repeal of existing Regulations.

1. All Gaol Regulations in force up to 30th June, 1894, are hereby repealed, and the following are established in lieu thereof.

If inapplicable to certain Gaols.

2. If, either by reason of the limited extent of any Gaol or other cause, the entire provisions of these regulations may not be applicable to that Gaol, the officer in charge thereof shall represent such cause to the Comptroller-General, who may thereupon, with the sanction of the Minister of Justice, authorise the modifications that may appear to be necessary.

Order Book.

3. There shall be kept in each Gaol an "Order Book," in which shall be set forth all rules and instructions that may from time to time be made or authorised by the Comptroller-General, providing in detail and in minor matters for the duties of the Officers and the management of the Gaol. And once in each month the contents of any additions to the "Order Book" shall be read to the Officers, and in like manner, so far as they may be affected thereby, to the prisoners.

OFFICERS.

4. It will be the first duty of all Officers to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with these Regulations, and with the Rules laid down in the "Order Book," and for each, in his degree, to endeavour, by zeal, attention, and care, to promote their exact and successful working.

(1.) Each Officer will constantly bear in mind that discipline is the purpose of the Gaol and of his employment therein. He will study, according to his grade, not only to enforce, but himself to observe it in the smallest detail. While he will understand that by failing to compel submission to the authority with which he is entrusted he will show himself to be incompetent for his duty, he will carry out the exercise of that authority with firmness, accompanied by good temper and humanity. Although determination and force may be at times necessary, violence or harshness must never be resorted to. He will render, in his turn, with promptitude and cheerfulness, the same implicit obedience that he is required to exact. He will not question the order of a superior, but will obey first, and, if he think himself warranted in so doing, remonstrate afterwards. He will treat his superior Officers with deference and respect, and his subordinates with courtesy.

- (2.) All prison Officers are placed in a position of special trust; and not only a faithful discharge of the duties laid down, but an intelligent readiness, promptitude, and discretion in unforeseen circumstances, will be expected from them. While they will maintain a complete control over the prisoners in their charge, they will avoid any course likely to aggravate or excite them.
- (3.) Sobriety being an essential in prison discipline, no failings in that respect, whatever may be the degree, will be tolerated; neither will improper language nor other analogous misconduct be overlooked.
- (4.) Trafficking with prisoners, or obtaining their work or services in any way not authorised, is strictly forbidden; and no Officer will make use for his own purposes of any Government property or material, however trifling in value the same may be.
- (5.) Servants will be allowed to the resident Officers; but their number and description must be sanctioned, in each case, by the Comptroller-General.
- (6.) Officers while on duty will wear the uniforms allotted to their respective grades. Officers of superior rank will carefully keep up the position, upon which the good exercise of their authority depends, by their own conduct and example, avoiding undue familiarity with their subordinates.
- (7.) Proficiency in their drill and shooting exercises will be expected from the Officers.
- (8.) It will be understood that, either in the charge of a Gaol or of a particular post or body of Officers, the command, unless otherwise directed, devolves upon the superior or senior Officer present, who will be held responsible.
- (9.) No Officer will be permitted, either directly or indirectly, to carry on any trade or business.
- (10.) Officers are required, without as well as within the Gaol, to conduct themselves in a decorous manner, so as to maintain a general respect both for themselves and for the establishments to which they belong.
- (11.) Officers will not communicate beyond the prison occurrences which may take place therein.

- (12.) It is the duty of each Officer to report any breach of the Regulations, or other irregularity that may occur. Such reports, whether containing a charge against other Officers or not, must be made in writing, and within twenty-four hours after the alleged occurrence. All communications or complaints so made must be submitted through the immediate superior of the Officer complaining, who will, unless the matter be within his own authority to deal with, be responsible for immediately forwarding the same to the proper quarter.
- (13.) Officers are warned against making frivolous or vexatious complaints, or allowing private differences to interfere with the working of the establishment. An Officer will be held strictly responsible for establishing any charge that he may prefer.
- (14.) Any proceeding on the part of the Officers in the nature of or leading to a combination for any object connected with their duties, position, or charges against a superior, taken without the knowledge and sanction of the Officer in charge, is strictly prohibited. But the Officer in charge will forward any representation made in writing, and duly signed by the Officers, or any of them, respecting their duties or position, to the Head of his Department. Officers permitting their official conduct to be influenced by sectarian feelings will be removed from the service.
- (15.) No Officer will address the Head of his Department excepting through the Officer in charge of his Gaol.
- (16.) Members of the families of Officers will not have access to the Officers while on duty.

The Gaoler.

5. The Gaoler is charged, under the supervision and direction of the Comptroller-General, with the control and management of the Gaol, and with the order, discipline, and regularity of the establishment, and the safe custody of the prisoners. He will be held responsible for the strict carrying out of the provisions of the Act, the Regulations, and all orders and instructions that may be issued for his guidance.

- (1.) He will reside in the Gaol, and will not absent himself therefrom for a night without the sanction of the Comptroller-General or the Visiting Justice.
- (2.) He will each day visit every cell and apartment in the Gaol, and see every prisoner therein.
- (3.) He will keep, or cause to be kept, the following books, viz.:—
- “Journal”—In which he must enter the number of prisoners daily received and discharged, and the total number sleeping in the prison each night. He must also record therein any unusual occurrence, and any departure from the Rules and Regulations, the particulars and cause thereof.
- “Entrance Book”—In which shall be entered the names and particulars of conviction of all prisoners received.
- “Description Book”—Containing personal description, religion, and all other prescribed information of all prisoners received, in the same order as in the Entrance Book.
- “Index” to Entrance and Description Books.
- “Discharge Book”—Showing the names and particulars of conviction of all prisoners discharged daily.
- “Muster Book”—Containing the names of every prisoner in Gaol.
- “Misconduct Book”—In which shall be entered the name of every prisoner locked up for bad conduct, and showing how the charge has been disposed of.
- “Punishment Book”—In which shall be entered the name and offence of every prisoner taken before the Visiting Justice, who shall therein sign his decision on each case.
- “Prisoners’ Property Book”—In which shall be entered all clothing and other property, except money, taken from prisoners; and showing how it is disposed of, and receipts therefor.
- “Prisoners’ Cash Book”—Similar to Property Book, but giving an account of all money received from or on account of prisoners, and how it is disposed of, with receipts therefor.
- “Conduct Register, Monthly”—Showing, according to established form, the daily conduct of every prisoner whose sentence exceeds twelve months.
- “Conduct Register, Half-yearly”—The monthly reports brought forward, and the totals shown, every six months.

- “Prisoners’ Letters Received”—In which the name of every prisoner receiving a letter is to be entered, with the name and relationship of the writer to the prisoner.
- “Prisoners’ Letters Despatched”—Showing the name of every prisoner allowed to write, together with the date of writing, and the person to whom the letter may be addressed.
- “Postage Book”—In which shall be entered the address of every letter upon which postage stamps are used.
- “Letter Book,” with Index—Containing copies of all official letters despatched.
- “Register of Correspondence,” with Index—In which shall be entered particulars of all letters received, and showing what has been done with them.
- “Ration Book”—Giving daily number of rations drawn, their cost, and copies of contractors’ accounts for rations.
- “Requisition Book”—Copies of all requisitions for stores, clothing, stationery, &c., sent in.
- “Ledger”—For the entry of all work done by prisoners, and money received on account thereof, with the names of the persons from whom such money is received.
- “Cash Book”—In which shall be entered all moneys received on account of the Public Service, and all money paid away for gratuities or otherwise.
- “Court Book,” with Index—Where Courts of Quarter Sessions or Circuits are held, the names and particulars of all prisoners tried at those Courts must be entered.
- “Lunatics Book”—Containing names and particulars of all prisoners certified to be insane.
- “Diary of Discharges”—In which shall be entered, under the date of expiration of sentence, the name of every prisoner to be discharged during the year.
- “Salary Book”—Containing copies of Salary Abstracts.
- “Visitor’s Book”—In which every visitor to the Gaol shall write his name.
- “Chief Warder’s Journal”—In which the Chief Warder must enter the number of rations received daily, all orders he may receive from the Gaoler, any breach of Regulations or unusual occurrence, or any matter he may wish to bring under notice.
- “Store Book”—To be kept by the Officer in charge of Stores, who will enter therein all Stores received and issued, and the Stock on hand the last day of each quarter.

- (4.) He will, where there may be no Chief Warder, conduct the musters, and if there be a Chief Warder, he will as a rule be present thereat.
- (5.) He will see that his Officers always present a smart and cleanly appearance, and that the arms are properly kept and ready for immediate and effective use. He will see that the drill and practice are well attended to.
- (6.) All prisoners must have a ready access to him. He will hear their cases or complaints with patience. While he is required at all times to maintain an absolute control over the prisoners, and to permit no disobedience, he is expected so to comport himself as to obtain an influence over them, which, whenever occasion may require, he will exert by his personal presence.
- (7.) He will especially see that all prisoners are treated with strict impartiality.
- (8.) He will see that all persons visiting the Gaol are treated with civility.
- (9.) He will personally inspect the different posts, wards, &c., at uncertain times, during both day and night.
- (10.) He is empowered to suspend any non-visiting Officer; but he will only do so where the offence charged is likely to be followed by dismissal, and will, if practicable, obtain the sanction of the Visiting Justice to such suspension.
- (11.) He will carefully study economy, and propose any saving or reduction in expenditure which he may see to be practicable.

The Deputy Governor, Chief Warder, or Officer next in rank to Gaoler.

6. The Deputy Governor, Chief Warder, or Officer next in rank to the Gaoler will, in the absence of the Gaoler, have the charge of the Gaol, and be responsible in like manner as the Gaoler.

- (1.) He will reside in the Gaol, and be specially charged with the carrying out of the rules and instructions in the “Order Book.”

- (2) He will be present at the opening and closing of the Gaol, and conduct the musters.
- (3) He will superintend the arrival and departure of prisoners, and will see that the searching duty is properly performed, and all matters relating to them duly regulated.
- (4) He will exercise, under the direction of the Gaoler, a general supervision of the Gaol, and see that the subordinate Officers perform their respective duties. He will visit frequently all parts of the Gaol without notice, and see that the prisoners are orderly and industrious.
- (5) He will give his constant attention to the security of the Gaol.
- (6) He will be specially looked to for the smartness and cleanliness of the subordinate Officers, and for the good condition and readiness of the arms.
- (7) He will parade the Warders each day previous to placing them on their several posts, and before dismissing them from their duty; and he will explain to any Officer placed for the first time upon any post the exact duties of such post.

The Senior Warden.

7. The Senior Warden will take a general charge next after the Chief Warden. He will, unless other arrangements be made, have the care of the prison stores, and will perform such other duties as may be assigned to him.

The Warders.

8. The Warders will observe the strictest punctuality in their hours of attendance, and will hold themselves always in readiness for any extra or special duty that may be required of them.

- (1) No Warden will absent himself without permission; and if he be absent from illness, a certificate from the Medical Officer of the Gaol must be produced.
- (2) A Warden will not be entitled to his pay during absence from illness, unless it be specially allowed by the Comptroller-General.
- (3) No Warden will be entitled to pay for any time during which he may have been under suspension, whether such suspension terminates in dismissal or reinstatement.
- (4) Warders will reside as near as possible to the Gaol, and will obtain the sanction of the Gaoler to their place of abode. They must be prepared to reside in a Gaol if required.
- (5) A Warden will be subject to dismissal for unfitness, disobedience, failure in duty, neglect, breach, by himself or by his permission, of Regulation or Rules, or for any other sufficient misconduct. A fine, in the form of deduction from his pay, or a reprimand, may be substituted for dismissal by the authority of the Comptroller-General.
- (6) For each Warden there shall be a "Defaulter Sheet," on which shall be recorded all instances wherein he may have been punished or reprimanded for misconduct.
- (7) A Warden leaving the Service under circumstances other than dismissal can obtain a certificate of his services, cause of retirement, and character, from the Comptroller-General.
- (8) Each Warden will understand that his appointment is not to a particular Gaol, but to the Gaol Service generally, and that he is always liable to removal from one establishment to another.
- (9) While on duty, no Warden will read or otherwise employ himself so as to distract his attention; nor will he smoke within the walls of the Gaol.
- (10) No Warden will leave his post until duly relieved, or by permission.
- (11) All Warders will exercise the utmost vigilance in the custody and surveillance of the prisoners under their charge; and no Warden will part with the custody of a prisoner, unless by disposing of him according to orders or handing him over to another Officer.
- (12) Warders on armed duty will at all times preserve an attitude of attention. While they will abstain from using their arms without sufficient occasion, they will understand it to be their duty to prevent a-cape, either by individual attempts of prisoners, or by general riot leading to such attempts, and to protect the unarmed Officers. They must be guided by their own judgment and intelligence; but any default in seeing their proper course of duty, or in acting with effect when needful, will be regarded as incompetency, and the Officer will, apart from any legal penalties incurred, be dismissed.
- (13) The Warders will keep the prisoners who may be engaged in labour diligently at work, and will be specially careful in keeping their daily record sheets of conduct.
- (14) It will be the duty of Warders to see that no tools, iron, or implements are secreted. They will seize all forbidden articles.

- (15) The Warden upon gate duty is never to open the gate until he shall have ascertained who the person seeking admission may be. He will admit no person who is not properly authorised, unless by the direction of the Gaoler. He will not pass out of the Gaol any Subordinate Officer who has entered upon duty, without the sanction of the Gaoler or Chief Warden. He will keep a record daily of all persons, other than the Officers of the Establishment, who may pass through the gate.
- (16) Warders will hold no conversation with prisoners, excepting as may be required by their duty.
- (17) It is the duty of a Warden firmly, but temperately, to maintain his authority. He is empowered and required to lock up any prisoner guilty of disorderly conduct, disobedience, or disrespect.
- (18) Warders will not frequent nor loiter about public-houses, nor will they have intercourse of any kind with connections of prisoners or with discharged prisoners.
- (19) The Warders will report upon their "Daily Occurrence Sheets" any irregularity or unusual occurrence that may have come under their notice, and they will respectfully call the attention of their Superior Officer to any apparent defect in the security of the Prison.

The Matron.

9. The Matron is charged, under the general authority of the Gaoler, with the entire control of the female prisoners, and the compartments in the prison occupied by them. The Female Warders and Nurses are placed under her orders. She will permit no Male Officer to enter the Female Division, except in company with herself or one of her Warders. Her duties in other respects will in their degree be analogous to those of the Gaoler.

Female Warders.

10. In like manner, the duties of Female Warders will be, so far as they may be applicable, according to the preceding Regulations concerning Male Warders.

Overseers and Foremen.

11. The Overseers and Foremen are, in like manner as the Warders, Officers of the Prison, and, subject to any instructions in the "Order Book," have the like powers and responsibility as to safe custody and maintaining discipline. It will be their special duty to see that the prisoners are diligent in their work, and to keep accurately the prescribed daily records of industry or idleness. They will carefully instruct the prisoners in the works or trades under their charge, and they will be expected to suggest any improvements or alterations that may tend to promote the industries under their respective directions. They will encourage the individual zeal and ingenuity of prisoners.

The Schoolmaster.

12. The duties of the Schoolmaster will consist in carrying out with care and attention the Regulations herein comprised concerning schools. He will bear in mind that the test of his faithful performance of his duties will be found in the success of the School Establishment, and that such success is best to be obtained by earning the respect and regard of the prisoners, while he maintains a complete authority over them, and compels their due exertion in their tasks.

VISITING OFFICERS.

Visiting Justice.

13. The duties of the Visiting Justice will be in their nature partly judicial and partly ministerial.

- (1) He will visit the Gaol once in each week, and also whenever applied to by the Gaoler, to hear and determine all cases awaiting adjudication; and where the character of any reported offence may involve punishment beyond his power to inflict, he will apply for the assistance of another Justice or other Justices.
- (2) He will permit no publicity to be given to cases adjudicated upon within the Gaol.
- (3) He will be charged with a general responsibility, without in that respect relieving the Comptroller-General or the Gaoler, for the condition of the Gaol; and will therefore be empowered to inquire into all matters concerning the management, and to direct, and, if needful, reprimand the Officers. He will also be empowered, either upon his own view of the necessity, or at the instance of the Comptroller-General, to hold an inquiry in writing into the conduct of any Officer, and to transmit the proceedings of such inquiry to the Comptroller-General, with his opinion or recommendation thereupon.
- (4) He will see that all Regulations and Orders are duly carried out; and, for this purpose, will visit the Gaol frequently, and at uncertain times.
- (5) While he will see that discipline is strictly enforced, and will support the Officers in the exercise of their authority, he will take care that the prisoners are not subjected to any partial, harsh, and tyrannical treatment.

- (6.) In case of any riot or other emergency, he will afford the Gaoler the support of his presence, and will be authorised to direct or sanction the course to be pursued.
- (7.) He will not be empowered to order the release from Gaol of any prisoner; but he will satisfy himself at every visit that no persons are improperly confined, and will report every such case, or supposed case, to the Minister of Justice. He will see that no prisoners are detained after the expiration of their sentences, by negligence or oversight.
- (8.) All correspondence of the Gaol, excepting such as may relate to mere routine, will be laid before him by the Gaoler for his information, and he will notify his opinion upon any proposal or recommendation of the Gaoler. Accounts and requisitions will be submitted for his approval and signature. He will point out wherever he may see the means of effecting any economy.
- (9.) He will, on the first day of each month, make a report in writing to the Minister of Justice, in which he will specify the general state of the Gaol, and how far the Regulations have been attended to and the business of the Gaol properly conducted; and he will accompany his report with a return of all punishments inflicted in the Gaol, and unusual instances of coercion resorted to by the Gaoler.
- (10.) He will also report to the Minister of Justice any occurrence of an extraordinary nature at the time of its happening, or anything that may seem to him proper to be brought under the immediate notice of the Government.

14. The foregoing or other Regulations concerning the Visiting Justice shall not be taken to apply to the Gaol at Darlinghurst, excepting in so far as the duties prescribed are strictly of a judicial character.

The Visiting Surgeon.

15. The Visiting Surgeon will attend to the Gaol daily, and more frequently if necessary, and will be required to conform to the disciplinary rules of the Gaol as indicated in other portions of these Regulations.

- (1.) He is specially charged with the sanitary condition of the Gaol, and will bring under the notice of the Comptroller-General any cause by which it may be endangered.
- (2.) He will at all times evince care and kindness for the prisoners under his charge, while he is expected also to exercise much firmness and vigilance, to see that he is not imposed upon, and prisoners kept upon his hospital or exempt list without sufficient cause.
- (3.) In case of sickness, he will attend Officers of the Gaol free of charge.
- (4.) He will keep the following books as a record of his duties, and the cases under his care or disposed of, viz. :—
 "Journal"—In which must be entered the name of every prisoner coming before him, together with their diseases and treatment.
 "Prescription Book"—For copies of all prescriptions.
 "Hospital Register"—Showing names and particulars of all prisoners admitted into Hospital, with dates of admission and discharge.
 "Lunatics' Book"—For names, particulars, and treatment of all lunatics.
 "Warders' Sick Reports"—In which are to be entered the names and particulars of all Warders treated by Visiting Surgeon.
- (5.) He will attach to the papers of any prisoner in bad health, transferred from the Gaol, a memorandum of the particulars of the case.

Chaplains.

16. The Chaplains will have the spiritual care of the prisoners in their respective denominations.

- (1.) They will attend at the Gaol, and hold Divine Service once in each week, and more frequently if required.
- (2.) They will also be expected to enter, so far as may be practicable, into communication with the prisoners, especially with those of the worst character, and to exercise that softening and reforming influence appertaining to their sacred offices towards the maintenance of discipline and order.
- (3.) They will be required to conform to the disciplinary rules of the Gaol, as indicated in other portions of these Regulations.
- (4.) Each Chaplain will studiously abstain from interfering or communicating with prisoners not under his charge.
- (5.) He will make requisitions for such religious books as he may require for the use of prisoners.
- (6.) He will visit at least once in each week prisoners under separate treatment.

TREATMENT AND CONDUCT OF PRISONERS.

Reception and disposal of Property.

17. All prisoners, upon their reception in Gaol, shall be duly searched, and all property taken from them, and into the charge of the Gaoler. All such property shall be entered into a book to be kept for the purpose, and retained for the prisoner upon discharge, and, in the event of the removal of the prisoner, invariably transferred with him, together with a list thereof. If there be no property, a "nil" list is to be forwarded. Any case of the non-receipt of a list is to be immediately reported to the Comptroller-General.

Prisoners to be cleansed.

18. All prisoners shall, upon their admission, be inspected by the Surgeon, and be thoroughly washed and cleansed previous to being placed with other prisoners.

Wearing apparel.

19. The wearing apparel of any prisoner shall, unless in use as hereinafter provided, be entered, apart from all other property, in a separate book, under a number, and shall, after purification, if necessary, be placed in a bag having a corresponding number. The bags shall frequently be examined, and means taken for preserving the contents. They shall, in like manner as other property, be transferred with the prisoners from place to place.

Clothing.

20. No prisoner, before trial, shall be compelled to wear a prison dress, unless his clothing may be insufficient, or improper to be kept, from dirt, or other cause, or necessary to be preserved for the purposes of justice. Prisoners, except as hereinafter provided, shall be dressed in prison clothing immediately after conviction.

Haircutting, Shaving.

21. (1.) All male convicted prisoners shall have their hair cut upon admission, and afterwards monthly, in a manner not to disfigure them; and, except in the case of prisoners serving sentences not exceeding three months, shall be shaved once a week. If thought necessary on the ground of health or cleanliness, any convicted prisoner may be shaved, no matter what the term of his sentence may be. Prisoners under committal shall not have their hair cut or be shaved, save so far as may be necessary to preserve their appearance as at the period of their examination.
- (2.) Prisoners who, under this Regulation, are shaved, may be permitted to grow their hair and beard as they may desire for three months, before the expiration of their sentences, or of the time when, according to their conduct under the Remission Regulations, they may be eligible for discharge. Under very special circumstances, the shaving may be dispensed with at any time by the Gaoler, who will report the facts to the Comptroller-General.

Washing.

22. Prisoners shall, when practicable, bathe once a week. They shall wash each morning, and (if there be no means of bathing) their feet every Saturday.

Air and Exercise.

23. All prisoners shall be allowed as much air and exercise as may be deemed necessary for the preservation of health, consistently with security.

Divine Service.

24. (1.) All prisoners will, on admission into prison, be entered for the services of the denomination which they may respectively select, and will be required to attend the services of such denomination.
- (2.) The denominations recognized shall be the Church of England, Church of Rome, Presbyterian, Wesleyan, and Hebrew, and also any duly authorised alien missions in connection therewith.
- (3.) In the case of prisoners objecting to be entered for any one of the denominations named, and to attend the services thereof, such prisoners shall not be required to attend, but shall remain in their cells during the time of service, if there be one service only on any one day, or if there be more services during the period of the first service taking place. But any prisoner who may have so objected will be permitted at his own desire, subsequently, to attend any service that he may select.
- (4.) No sectarian influence shall be brought to bear upon any prisoner. If a prisoner duly entered for a denomination shall desire a change to another, he may make application to the Gaoler, who will call upon him to state whether he is impelled by conscientious conviction, or is moved by any other motive. The Gaoler shall then notify to the Chaplain of the denomination from which the prisoner desires to secede the fact of the application, and forward to the Comptroller-General therewith any remarks that the Chaplain may desire to offer, together with his own report thereon.

- (5.) If it be made to appear to the Comptroller-General that the motive of the prisoner is obviously other than the impulse of conscientious conviction, he may refuse to accede to the application, otherwise he will notify his approval to the Chaplains respectively concerned.
- (6.) Any prisoner after having been entered for any one denomination, and refused permission to pass to another, will only be exempted from attendance at the service of the denomination from which he has seceded on the like condition as in the case of prisoners exempted as above provided of remaining in their cells during Divine Service.

Classification.

25. Prisoners shall be classified as below stated; and the several classes shall, so far as the construction of the building and the necessities of the works and trades will admit, be kept apart. But any prisoner may, for special reasons, to be reported in each case to the Comptroller-General, be associated with a class other than his own:—

- 1st.—Prisoners under sentences to penal servitude or to imprisonment with hard labour of five years and upwards.
- 2nd.—Prisoners convicted of felony or misdemeanour, and sentenced for lesser periods than five years, either to penal servitude or to imprisonment with hard labour.
- 3rd.—Prisoners under sentence of imprisonment only, and persons detained during Her Majesty's pleasure.
- 4th.—Prisoners awaiting trial, or under examination.
- 5th.—Lunatics, comprising persons supposed to be of unsound mind.
- 6th.—Debtors, comprising persons confined for contempt upon civil process.
- 7th.—Prisoners under 25 years of age, undergoing sentences not exceeding twelve months imprisonment, with or without hard labour.

26. Prisoners of the 1st Class shall consist of three Divisions—A, B, and C.

- (1.) Each prisoner shall serve the first nine months of his sentence, commencing upon his conviction, in the A Division. Thence he shall, unless he be further detained by reason of misconduct, be promoted to the B Division wherein he shall serve one-half of the remaining period of his term of sentence; and thence (unless in like manner retarded for misconduct) to the C Division for the remaining period of his sentence. The prisoner may at any time for either general or specific misconduct be thrown back into either of the previous divisions, and be detained therein as long as may be thought necessary.
- (2.) Prisoners in the A Division will be placed in "Separate Treatment." They will not be permitted to hold any communication, excepting with the Prison Officers, and will neither send nor receive letters.
- (3.) Each prisoner will occupy a separate cell, and will be employed upon such suitable work as may be furnished to him.
- (4.) He will be allowed exercise for one hour each day during the first six months, and two hours daily after that term. If thought necessary by the Surgeon a longer period at exercise will be allowed.
- (5.) He will, if coming under the provisions of Regulations as to eligibility for School, be allowed one hour daily for performing tasks to be set for him by the Schoolmaster, and one hour for reading such instructive and reforming books as may be selected for him by the Chaplain. He shall, at all times, be provided with a Bible.
- (6.) He will not, upon any pretence, attempt to communicate with another prisoner. He must neither read aloud, sing, whistle, dance, nor make any noise in his cell, exercise-yard, in the corridor, or chapel.
- (7.) He will rise immediately upon the first bell being rung, wash his hands and face, and make up his bedding neatly in such form as may be directed.
- (8.) He will keep his person, cell, and the furniture therein, in the highest state of cleanliness.
- (9.) He will wash his feet twice in Summer and once in Winter weekly, and will bathe once a week.
- (10.) He is not allowed to alter his clothing, and will keep it clean and in proper repair.
- (11.) He will, on hearing his cell-door opening, at once, if not in bed, stand up in the centre of his cell, facing the door, with his hands by his side, and his heels close together.
- (12.) In marching or returning to or from the exercise yards or chapel, he will keep five yards distant from any other prisoner. He will, if required, wear a mask whenever out of his cell or exercise yard.
- (13.) Any prisoner requiring assistance or instruction, or having anything to communicate, may ring his bell for the Officer on duty; but all conversation not strictly necessary is to be avoided, and on no account is the bell to be rung without sufficient reason.
- (14.) If it be found necessary for a prisoner when out of his cell to permit another prisoner to pass him, he will immediately face and stand opposite to the nearest wall until the other shall have passed by him.

- (15.) In proceeding to the exercise-yard, the prisoner will move out of his cell so soon as the door is opened. He will then march as directed by the Officer, and, on entering the yard, will stand with his face to the wall, and so remain until the Officer calls "walk about." While at exercise, he will walk briskly, and never loiter or lean against the walls. In wet days, or if very hot, with the permission of the Officer, he may remain under shelter.
- (16.) He will be very respectful to all Officers of the Government, and will never pass a superior Officer of the Prison without touching his hat.
- (17.) When visited in his exercise-yard by any Officer, he will stand at attention facing the Officer.
- (18.) He will observe the strictest silence in the exercise-yard, and will not attempt scratching or writing in any part thereof.
- (19.) Immediately after the commencement of each month, the Gaoler will furnish to the Comptroller-General a report of each man in separate treatment, setting forth his time of service therein, his conduct for the past month, any alteration in his weight, and the Surgeon's report on his state of health.

27. Prisoners upon entering the B Division will be placed in associated labour.

- (1.) They will be kept, unless there be special reason to the contrary, in separate cells.
- (2.) They will be employed on the hardest description of labour available; and will not, unless for medical or other special reasons, be permitted to work at tailoring, shoemaking, or other comparatively light work.
- (3.) They will not be eligible to hold any billet, except by special permission from the Comptroller-General.
- (4.) They will not be allowed to write letters more than once in four months, nor to receive letters more than once in two months.
- (5.) They will wear a badge of a red letter B on their left arms as a distinguishing mark.
- (6.) They will be locked up in their cells after labour and meals on Sundays, Saturdays, and holidays, when not employed in labour or at Divine Service.
- (7.) In other respects, their treatment will be similar to that of the prisoners of the C Division.

28. Prisoners in the C Division will come under the general regulations, rules, and orders for the management of the gaols and for the treatment and conduct of such prisoners of the 2nd class as are not undergoing separate treatment.

Prisoners of 2nd Class.

29. Prisoners of the 2nd Class who are serving sentences of not less than three years will, during the first nine months of their sentences, be placed in separate treatment and be subject to the provisions of regulation 26—paragraphs 2 to 19 inclusive. Upon completion of their term in separate treatment, they will be placed in the C Division.

All prisoners of the 2nd Class will, if practicable, be confined in separate cells at night. They will not be eligible, unless by special sanction, for billet employment, until after they shall have served at least one-half of their period of sentence in hard labour.

Prisoners of 3rd Class.

30. Prisoners of the 3rd Class are, by nature of their sentences, in a position different to any other convicted prisoners.

- (1.) They shall be kept, if practicable, apart from other prisoners.
- (2.) They may wear their own clothes if the same be sufficient and decent.
- (3.) They shall not be subject to be shaved, unless by their own desire, or if needful for purposes of cleanliness.
- (4.) They shall be permitted to procure for themselves, and to receive at proper hours, food and clothing, subject to strict inspection by the Gaoler, in order to prevent extravagance, undue indulgence, or the introduction of spirituous and fermented liquors, or other prohibited articles.
- (5.) They shall be permitted to write letters once in each month, and to receive letters once in each fortnight.
- (6.) They shall, if they entirely maintain themselves, be exempted from any work, excepting such as they may voluntarily perform; otherwise they will be liable to contribute to their own support, by performing such labour, not being severe in its nature, as may be provided for them.
- (7.) But if they do not entirely maintain and clothe themselves, they shall not be permitted to do so in part, and will in that case be treated, excepting as regards labour and writing and receiving letters, in the same manner as prisoners of the 2nd Class, who are not undergoing separate treatment.

Prisoners of the 4th Class.

31. Prisoners awaiting trial shall have the privileges above defined for prisoners of the 3rd Class:—

- (1.) They shall be permitted, at all reasonable times, to see their legal adviser, being a certified attorney or solicitor, or his clerk, authorised in writing, as also any relations or friends requiring to see them in reference to their trial. They may see other relations and friends twice in each week, or more frequently if there be special reason.
- (2.) They will be allowed sufficient air and exercise consistently with safe custody.
- (3.) Prisoners under examination will be allowed no communication in the prison, nor with any persons except their legal advisers, unless specially sanctioned by the Justice conducting the examination.
- (4.) The Gaoler will exercise a discretion to prevent any communication by prisoners under committal, whereby the ends of justice may be frustrated; but he will, at the same time, see that such prisoners are not deprived of the fair and proper means of organizing their defence.

Lunatics.

32. Prisoners of the 5th Class shall be kept in a separate ward under the general supervision of the Surgeon, and under the immediate care of a warder, assisted by such prison-keepers, carefully selected, as may be necessary. The diet for each such prisoner shall be carefully regulated by the Surgeon, who will make a written prescription of diet daily in every case.

Debtors.

33. Debtors shall be kept in a separate ward, and have the like privileges as prisoners of the 3rd Class. They shall not, in any case, be required to wear prison clothing, nor to perform work. Otherwise they shall be treated according to such Rules as may be laid down by their Honors the Judges of the Supreme Court.

Prisoners of the 7th Class.

34. Prisoners of the 7th Class shall be treated during their sentences under the following conditions of separate treatment:—

- (1.) Each prisoner shall occupy a separate cell, and shall be employed upon such suitable work as may be furnished to him.
- (2.) He may be allowed exercise for one hour each day, and a longer period if thought necessary by the Surgeon. After a service of six months, he may be allowed two hours' exercise daily.
- (3.) He may, if coming under the Regulations as to eligibility for school, be allowed one hour daily for performing tasks to be set for him by the Schoolmaster, and one hour for reading such instructive and reforming books as may be selected for him by the Chaplain. He shall at all times be provided with a Bible.
- (4.) He shall not, under any pretence, attempt to communicate with another prisoner. He must neither read aloud, sing, whistle, dance, nor make any noise in his cell, exercise ground, in the corridor, or chapel.
- (5.) He shall rise immediately upon the first bell being rung, wash his hands and face, and make up his bedding neatly in such form as may be directed.
- (6.) He shall keep his person, cell, and the furniture therein in the highest state of cleanliness.
- (7.) He shall wash his feet twice in summer, and once in winter, weekly, and shall bathe once a week.
- (8.) He shall not be allowed to alter his clothing, and shall keep it clean, and in proper repair.
- (9.) He shall, on hearing his cell door open, at once, if not in bed, stand up in the centre of his cell, facing the door, with his hands by his side, and his heels close together.
- (10.) In marching to or returning from the exercise grounds or chapel, he shall keep five yards distant from any other prisoner.
- (11.) Any prisoner requiring assistance or instruction, or having anything to communicate, may ring his gong for the Officer on duty; but all conversation not strictly necessary is to be avoided, and on no account is the gong to be rung without sufficient reason.
- (12.) At the order "Prepare for exercise," the prisoner shall, as soon as the door is opened, move out of his cell to the exercise circle, and take up the position assigned to him by the Officer; at the word "One," he shall stoop down, and take hold of the rope handle attached to the marching chain; at the word "Two," he shall at once assume an erect position, retaining hold of the marching chain, and so remain at attention until the Officer calls "Walk round." During wet or very hot days he may (by permission of the officer) remain in his cell, or take such exercise as may be practicable and directed, in the corridor.
- (13.) He shall be very respectful to all Officers of the Government, and shall never pass a superior Officer of the prison without touching his hat.

- (14.) The scale of dietary will be—16 oz. bread; 8 oz. meal; 8 oz. meat; 8 oz. potatoes; 1 oz. sugar; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. soap; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. salt.
- (15.) The Surgeon shall visit daily each prisoner of the seventh class in his prison.
- (16.) Each prisoner shall be weighed monthly, and reports of weight shall be laid before the Surgeon at the commencement of each month.
- (17.) The prisoners shall be allowed the usual monthly visits, but in each case the Gaoler must be satisfied that the visitor is a person to whom it is desirable to permit the privilege.
- (18.) Correspondence will be permitted in terms of Regulation No. 30.
- (19.) Each prisoner of the seventh class shall be provided with a plank bed, which shall be used without a mattress or substitute therefor for a period of six months. A coir pillow of $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter will be allowed.
- (20.) After a period of six months a coir mattress will be allowed; but, in case of misconduct, the Visiting Justice may direct the prisoner, apart from any cell or other punishment, to be deprived of his mattress for a period not to exceed fourteen days.
- (21.) In cases of short sentences not exceeding fourteen days the dietary scale shall be limited to bread and water (Prison ration No. 5). Each prisoner so treated shall not be subject to the conditions prescribed in Articles 2, 10, 12, and 14 of this Regulation. He shall, however, be required to conform to Articles 1, 3 (except as regards school), 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, and 13. He shall not be allowed to receive visits, nor to write letters.
- (22.) In cases where the sentence is for more than fourteen days but not exceeding six months, and for the first six months of sentences exceeding that period, each prisoner shall be placed on bread and water diet (Prison ration No. 5) during the first week of his sentence; during the second week he shall receive the ration prescribed in Article 14 (Prison ration No. 9), and so on throughout the period of six months No. 5 ration shall alternate weekly with No. 9. In other respects he shall be subject to the conditions of all the above Articles excepting 21, while in receipt of No. 9 ration, and to the conditions prescribed in Article 21 only while in receipt of No. 5 ration; but the Gaoler may allow such exercise as he may deem necessary, on the advice of the Visiting Surgeon, for any prisoner on the reduced ration No. 5.
- (23.) In cases where the sentence exceeds six months each prisoner shall, during the last fourteen days of his sentence, be treated in the manner prescribed in Article 21.

General Rules for Conduct.

35. Prisoners will strictly observe the following rules of conduct:—

- (1.) They are required promptly to obey all orders they may receive from their Officers. Though they should consider themselves aggrieved by such orders, they must nevertheless obey, but may afterwards complain to the Gaoler or the Comptroller-General. No complaint on any matter will be taken notice of unless made within one week after the occurrence to which it has reference.
- (2.) Profane swearing, indecent conversation, gambling, trafficking, damaging or defacing the walls, cells, or furniture of the prison, sharpening the spoons as knives, and cutting on the tables, are strictly prohibited, and offenders will be punished for any such offence. No scratching or marking, however slight, on the walls or furniture, will be overlooked.
- (3.) Prisoners are never to light pieces of paper, rags, or other articles, either in their cells, airing yards, or any other part of the prison; and they are strictly prohibited from having in their possession tobacco, money, sharp instruments, or any other article not issued to them by the prison authorities.
- (4.) Prisoners are not allowed to alter their clothing. They are held responsible for its being kept in repair, properly marked, and clean. They are not to leave any article of their clothing on the works.
- (5.) Should any prisoner be dissatisfied with the quantity or quality of his rations, he must state his complaint as soon as the meal has been given to him. No complaint respecting quantity will be attended to afterwards. No rations are to be taken out of the messroom. Refuse food is not to be thrown or be left on the table or floors, but is to be put into an empty plate or dish, which is to be placed in the centre of the table. No defect in the rations, either as to quantity or quality, will justify prisoners in refusing to go to their work, or in any other act of disobedience.
- (6.) Prisoners are not to leave School or Divine Service before being regularly dismissed, nor are they to leave the ranks at muster, nor their places of work during labour hours, without permission of the Officer in whose charge they may be at the time.

- (7.) At all musters, prisoners are required to be in their places in the ranks immediately after the bell rings.
- (8.) Prisoners will preserve strict silence at all musters, at meals, in the dormitories and cells at night, while undergoing solitary confinement and while marching to and from their places of labour, which they will do in regular and orderly manner.
- (9.) Prisoners will invariably touch their hats when passing or addressing an Officer, and will always stand up (except when at meals) when any of the principal Officers or Visitors enter the messrooms or yards.
- (10.) Prisoners are to be attentive and diligent in performing whatever description of labour may be assigned to them. They are on no account to be idle during the authorised hours of labour, but must continue to devote themselves actively to the work during the day. They will, when requisite, apply to the Overseer for instruction as to the manner of performing their work. Any wilful or negligent mismanagement of work will subject the offender to punishment.
- (11.) Prisoners desirous of seeing the Comptroller-General or Visiting Justice must apply to the Officer under whose charge they may be to have their names placed on a list to be kept for the purpose. The same rule will apply in the case of visits of Ministers of the Crown, or other gentlemen in a public position, visiting the Gaol. Prisoners are warned against making frivolous or groundless complaints. For making such complaints they are liable to be punished.
- (12.) No prisoner shall, on any pretence, leave his work or allotted place of labour, without the permission of the Officer.
- (13.) All games, jumping, wrestling, singing, or conduct of a like description, are strictly prohibited.
- (14.) Prisoners are prohibited from lounging on their beds, unless by permission, which will only be given in case of illness.

Prisoners under Sentence of Death.

36. Prisoners condemned to suffer death shall be kept in irons, in the condemned cells, until the sentence be executed or commuted. Their friends or relatives shall have access to them at all reasonable hours, at the discretion of the Gaoler, unless countermanded by the Sheriff; but no other visitors, unless by special order of the Colonial Secretary, Minister of Justice, or Sheriff, will be admitted to them, except the Clergyman of the Church to which the original professed to belong, and any other persons whom such Clergyman may desire to assist him in his ministrations. Their diet shall be the prison allowance only, and they shall be allowed to walk a short time every day, under sufficient guard, in one of the Gaol yards.

GENERAL REGULATIONS.

Female Wards.

37. In each Gaol there shall, where practicable, be set a part for female prisoners separate Wards, in which the foregoing classification shall, so far as it may be applicable, be carried out.

38. For such Wards there shall be separate keys; and neither the Gaoler nor any of the male Officers shall enter such Wards, except in company with the Matron or one of her female Warders.

Hours of Opening and Closing.

39. The hour for unlocking the Gaol shall be 6 15 o'clock a.m. in summer and 6 30 in winter months; and the hour of locking-up shall be 5 30 o'clock p.m. in summer and 5 in winter.

Bell-ringing.

40. The first bell shall be rung at 5 45 o'clock a.m.

Rising and preparing for Work.

41. Immediately upon the ringing of the bell the prisoners shall rise and place their cells in order. They shall then be mustered into their respective yards, wash their hands and faces as directed, and prepare for work.

Proceeding to Work.

42. Unless specially authorised to the contrary, the bell for commencing work shall ring at 7 o'clock, and the prisoners shall immediately proceed to the work of the day.

Hours for Meals.

43. Unless specially authorised to the contrary, the hour of breakfast shall be 8 o'clock a.m., dinner at 12 o'clock, and supper at 4 o'clock.

Time for Meals.

44. Forty-five minutes will be allowed for breakfast, sixty minutes for dinner, and thirty for supper.

No two prisoners in one Cell.

45. Two male prisoners shall never be confined in the same cell, nor shall that number be suffered to be at one time in the same closet.

Muster and Searching.

46. The evening muster shall be held immediately previous to the locking-up; and the time for commencing such muster shall be 4 45 o'clock p.m. in winter, and 5 o'clock in summer. Each prisoner, when he shall have answered to his name, shall proceed to his cell. When the prisoners are in their cells, the doors shall be placed in the bolt. The Searching Officers shall search the prisoners, their cells, and finally lock them up, when they will retire to bed.

Final examination and custody of Keys.

47. After locking up, the Chief Warder will make a careful examination of the prison, and hand over the keys to the Gaoler, with his report. The Gaoler will retain the keys in his personal charge until the time for again opening the prison. No Officer entrusted with a key will lend it to any other Officer, or otherwise dispose of it than according to his instructions.

Correspondence.

48. The official correspondence of the Gaol shall pass through the Gaol Office; but the Surgeons and Chaplains may address the Comptroller-General direct in special cases.

Cleanliness.

49. The walls and cells shall be swept and cleaned daily, and the sweepings carried outside the Gaol walls. The floors shall be frequently washed, and the walls lime-washed.

50. The beds and bedding will be aired not less frequently than twice a week in summer and weekly in winter.

51. The night-pails will be kept carefully clean, and their contents disposed of according to orders. When earth-closets are provided, the Gaoler will specially see that they are used according to instructions.

52. No filth or offensive matter must be suffered to remain in the yards or work-shops; and the chippings, shavings, and rubbish not required for use in the Gaol must be taken outside the Gaol walls at least once a week.

53. No pigs, poultry, rabbits, goats, or any other animals shall be kept in any Gaol without the special sanction of the Comptroller-General.

Prohibited Articles.

54. The introduction of spirits or fermented liquors into any Gaol is strictly prohibited; and any person introducing such liquors will be liable to prosecution.

55. In order to more effectively prevent the introduction of prohibited articles into Gaols, and the passing of unauthorised correspondence, all persons entering or departing from a Gaol shall be liable to be searched, with the following exceptions:—

- (1.) The Visiting Officers.
- (2.) Public Officers, medical and other gentlemen, visiting the Gaol upon business connected therewith.
- (3.) Visitors to the Gaol, in terms of Regulation 60, exclusive of persons hearing orders to visit individual prisoners.

Indulgences.

56. No indulgences, beyond the authorised allowances, shall be given to any prisoner; and in all instances of idleness, negligence, or other misconduct, the Gaoler will cause all indulgence to be withdrawn.

Orders of Surgeon.

57. Any order made by the Surgeon, for the special dieting of any prisoner, shall be given in writing, and strictly attended to.

Applications to Surgeon.

58. Prisoners desiring to see the Surgeon will give in their names in the morning, immediately after unlocking; but in cases of sudden illness they may apply to see him at any time. Such application will be made known to the Chief Warder, who, before sending for the Surgeon, will himself see the prisoner, who will be responsible for not making a needless application.

Exercise in Solitary Confinement.

59. The Surgeon will visit daily each prisoner in solitary confinement, and will, when necessary, order him such amount of exercise in the open air as he may see fit.

Visitors to Gaol.

60. No persons shall visit the Gaols without an order from the Minister of Justice, the Comptroller-General, or the Visiting Justice, except the Ministers of the Crown, the Judges and Magistrates of the Colony, all of whom may personally introduce visitors.

Visits to Prisoners.

61. Visitors to prisoners, excepting as in these Regulations otherwise specially provided for, shall be allowed to see them upon the following conditions:—

- (1.) Immediately after conviction.
- (2.) At intervals of one month, it being understood that each prisoner can only be visited, by whatever the number of visitors, on one day, and after the lapse of a month from any previous visit.

- (3.) The time for a visit shall be twenty minutes, but may be extended by the Gaoler.
- (4.) An Officer shall be present at every visit, and observe all that may pass.
- (5.) Persons who have served sentences in Gaol, and others of known bad character, shall not be eligible as visitors, unless from the nature of their business with the prisoner the Gaoler may consider it desirable to admit them.

62. Special permission may at any time be given by the Comptroller-General or Visiting Justice to visit a prisoner. But if the Gaoler be aware of any reason against the person permitted being allowed to visit the prisoner, he will defer acting upon the permission until he shall have reported the objection for the consideration of the Comptroller-General or Visiting Justice.

63. Unless for exceptional reasons, no visits will be permitted on Sundays.

Prisoners' Complaints.

64. Any prisoner will be permitted, if he desire, to complain of the treatment to which he is subjected, or to address the Comptroller-General or the Minister of Justice in writing; but such complaints should be made promptly, and must be of a specific character. They shall forthwith be forwarded by the Gaoler, with his report thereupon, to the Comptroller-General.

Prisoners' Correspondence.

65. No prisoner in any Gaol, unless confined for debt or for contempt under civil process, shall be permitted to send or to receive any letter or parcel of any description whatever, excepting through the hands of the Gaoler; and the Gaoler is hereby empowered to open and examine any such letter or parcel, and to take possession of any such letter or parcel, being conveyed from or to a prisoner contrary to this Regulation; and the Gaoler is further required to detain any such letter or parcel which may appear to him to affect the discipline or security of the Gaol, and to lay the same before the Comptroller-General or the Visiting Justice, who shall be empowered to retain the same, and to take such action concerning it as to him may seem fit.

66. Prisoners in one Gaol will not be allowed to communicate in writing with prisoners in another Gaol, unless by special permission of the Comptroller-General.

67. Prisoners will be allowed (unless otherwise provided as regards their class in these Regulations) to communicate in writing with their relatives and friends, under the following conditions, viz. :—

- (1.) To write one letter every three months, and to receive such letters as may have been sent for them once in six weeks.
- (2.) In cases of near relations—husbands and wives, or parents and children—the time required to elapse as above will be reduced (both as to sending or receiving) to one-half.
- (3.) All letters to and from prisoners will be inspected by the Gaoler or Chief Warder, and none shall be delivered or forwarded unless they conform to these Regulations.
- (4.) The subjects of the letters must be confined to matters personally concerning the prisoners and their relatives and friends, and must contain no general information, or news of the day, or reference to petitions, or matters respecting the prisoner's conviction. The letters from the prisoners will be on a prescribed form.
- (5.) The Gaoler may, under special circumstances, allow letters to be forwarded or received at any time.

Relaxation in Case of Debtors.

68. In the case of prisoners for debt, or for contempt under civil process, the Gaoler may, with the sanction of the Sheriff or the Visiting Justice, relax the application of the general Regulations of the Gaol in any particular, so far as such relaxation may seem to be quite consistent with order and security.

Gaoler to deal with certain cases.

69. The Gaoler is empowered to cause any prisoner guilty of any breach of the Regulations or other disorderly conduct to be kept in close confinement and upon half rations for any time not exceeding seven days, or until the arrival of the Visiting Justice, to whom the circumstances of the case shall be reported, and who will, if he see fit, require the prisoner to be brought before him for discharge or further punishment. The Gaoler may place a refractory prisoner in irons; but he will not continue the use of irons for longer than forty-eight hours without the permission of the Comptroller-General of Prisons or of the Visiting Justice; and he will report in writing to the Comptroller-General of Prisons, as well as to the Visiting Justice, the circumstances of every case wherein he may have found it necessary to resort to any such measure of coercion as above specified.

Prisoners to be discharged.

70. Prisoners will be discharged, as having completed their sentences, upon the following rule, viz. :—
In sentences exceeding three days, at 6:30 o'clock a.m. Days of admission and discharge each counting as one day,

In sentences of three days, at 5 o'clock p.m. on third day. When the sentence expires on a Sunday, the prisoner will be discharged, if his sentence exceed seven days, on the Saturday previous.

In the lesser sentences, he will be detained until the Sunday.

The Gaoler may, in his discretion, permit any prisoner, at his own desire, to remain in the Gaol over the night, or until he shall have had his breakfast, or in case of sickness, and by his own wish, until he can be disposed of.

Stores.

71. The stores, as regards reception, charge, and issue, will be managed in each Gaol according to rules approved by the Comptroller-General, and inserted in the "Order Book."

SCHOOLS.

Purpose of Schools.

72. Prison Schools are established with a view to affording to well-disposed prisoners an opportunity of supplying the wants of elementary education, which, for the purposes of these Regulations, will be taken to consist of the power to read and write with fair accuracy, and a knowledge of arithmetic up to and including the rule of Practice.

Prisoners eligible.

73. Well-conducted prisoners who shall not, upon examination, prove to be already possessed of the knowledge desired to be imparted, shall be eligible to attend school, subject to and in accordance with the rules and orders that may be laid down for its management; and any prisoner, after he shall have advanced, in the opinion of the Schoolmaster, to the required point, shall be discharged from further attendance. But the Schoolmaster shall note when it will be desirable for such prisoner again to attend for a time, according to his length of sentence, in order that he may not lose, before leaving prison, the knowledge that he may have gained.

Library.

74. The duties of Librarian will also be performed by the Schoolmaster, and the Comptroller-General will issue rules for the management, in detail, of the schools and libraries.

ESCORTS.

Escort Duties.

75. Occasionally Prison Officers may be required to perform Escort Duty. In escorting females, lunatics, and prisoners under trifling charges, firearms will not, unless an attempt at rescue be anticipated, be necessary.

76. In dispatching Officers upon escort, the Gaoler will decide whether they are to be armed, and be responsible that the arms when carried are in proper condition. Prisoners to be escorted by Prison Officers will, unless the Gaoler shall see any special reason to the contrary, be searched and ironed in like manner as when given into charge of the police.

77. Officers on escort will not permit their prisoners to communicate with the public. They will neither themselves drink intoxicating liquors nor permit their prisoners to do so; and they will not enter public-houses unless upon strong necessity.

78. In escorting lunatics, the greatest care and kindness are to be observed.

79. A Female Warder will accompany all escorts of female prisoners.

REMISSION OF SENTENCES.

80. Prisoners will, by continuous good conduct and industry, become eligible to a remission of sentence in proportion to the term served by them in accordance with the subjoined scale. In cases of cumulative sentences, the united period shall be deemed the term of sentence out any sentence that may be imposed upon a prisoner for escaping or attempting to escape from lawful custody, or from any prison or place of detention, shall not be included in the period upon which the remission is to be calculated, but shall be added to the term a prisoner is required to serve under this regulation.

Scale.

- (1.) Sentences exceeding twelve months, but not exceeding five years, a service of five-sixths.
- Sentences beyond five, but not exceeding ten years, a service of four-fifths.
- Sentences of more than ten years, a service of three-fourths of the term. But this Regulation shall not be applied to sentences commuted from capital convictions. Prisoners under such sentences shall not, however, be debarred from having the circumstances of their case taken into consideration. This Regulation also shall not be applicable to prisoners serving sentences not exceeding twelve months,

- (2.) By good conduct is meant not merely the prisoner's obedience to all prison and penal rules, but a readiness to assist in maintaining order, and a willingness, as well as steady industry, in every employment of work which may be required of him.
- (3.) Any prisoner who may be placed in the cells as a punishment for misbehaviour shall forfeit from his prescribed period of remission three days for each day he is in such punishment. For each disorderly mark recorded against him he will lose two days from his remission, and one day will be deducted from his remission for each idle mark recorded against him.
- (4.) Before the tenth day of each month, the Gaoler will forward to the Comptroller-General, in a form prescribed, a return of all prisoners in his custody becoming eligible by servitude for remission during the following month, with the necessary information in each case, for decision by the Governor; and such information shall include the returns of orderly and industrious or idle and disorderly marks, as the case may be, earned or incurred by the prisoner, as also of his punishments and general conduct.
- (5.) In dealing with the cases sent in for remission, when the conduct of the prisoner is returned as "good," and he has earned the whole number of orderly and industrious marks obtainable, the full remission will be recommended.
- (6.) Any prisoner will be allowed, at the commencement of each week, to be informed as to the marks allotted to him for the week preceding; and the Gaoler will investigate any complaint that the prisoner may make upon the subject.

Petitions of prisoners for remission.

81. Nothing in these Regulations shall prevent leave being given to a prisoner, under very special circumstances, to petition the Governor in respect of such prisoner's conviction or sentence, or (where his conduct under punishment has been strikingly meritorious) for a remission, notwithstanding the non-expiration of his appointed period of service; but in all such cases inquiry into the facts must first be made, and the sanction of the Comptroller-General obtained.

Dietary.

82. For the purposes of diet, prisoners shall be classed according to the length of their sentences and the labour performed by them. For each class the diet allowed shall be as in Schedule A hereto annexed.

SCHEDULE A.

NOTE.—The officer in charge may, in relation to any particular work not above specified, place any prisoner on the ordinary or harder labour diet, and will report any such case to the Comptroller-General.

EMPLOYMENT AT TRIAL BAY PRISON.

83. (1.) Male prisoners under sentences to penal servitude, or to hard labour on the roads and public works, or to imprisonment with hard labour, will become eligible for employment upon the public works at Trial Bay Prison under the following conditions, viz.—Prisoners under sentences from three to five years, and who are favourably recommended by the Gaolers, at a period twelve months before they would become eligible for discharge under the ordinary remission regulations and in anticipation of such discharge; in sentences of five to ten years similarly at a period of eighteen months anterior to discharge; in sentences of ten years and upwards at a period of two years anterior to discharge.

(2.) The Governor may, under exceptional circumstances, direct the employment at the prison of any offender at any period of his sentence, and for such period as the Governor may fix.

(3.) The authority for the granting of the privilege of the modified servitude at the prison will be issued by the Governor, and the privilege may be withdrawn by the Governor at discretion. Any prisoner who through misconduct may have rendered it desirable that he be returned to an ordinary Gaol, shall have the cost of his transfer deducted from the monetary reward which he may have earned during his servitude at the prison, and shall not be eligible to receive any additional remission under clause 8 of this regulation.

(4.) The prisoners shall occupy such quarters as may be assigned to them, and shall be liable to ordinary prison punishment for any offences or disorder in like manner as in other prisons, and shall be subject to all the rules laid down for their treatment by the Comptroller-General of Prisons, authorised by the Minister of Justice.

(5.) The prisoners shall be supplied with rations according to the scale subjoined, and with clothing other than the prison pattern.

(6.) They will further be allowed reward in money on accomplishment of specified tasks, or on the recommendation of officers directing their work, according to the authorised scale. The money so allowed will be credited to them from time to time until their discharge; but they will be allowed, at the discretion of the Superintendent, a certain proportion, not to exceed one-third, for the purchase of extra articles of consumption. Those who may wish to do so may also remit money, subject to the approval of the Superintendent, to any immediate relatives who are in destitute circumstances; but such remittance must not exceed one-third of the total amount earned. Those who may avail themselves of this concession will still be permitted to spend the proportion allowed for extra articles of consumption.

(7.) All prisoners to be eligible for the prison will have to be passed as physically fit for quarrying, or such other labour, by the Surgeons of the prisons, and the favourable recommendation of the Gaolers must express a belief that the prisoner will conduct himself properly, and not abuse the privilege.

(8.) In cases of prisoners who may not be eligible, either from physical or other causes, and therefore have to serve their sentence in ordinary prisons, the consideration will be allowed of an additional remission period beyond that specified in the Prison Regulations, on the following scale:—

In sentences of from 3 to 5 years—2 months.

" " 5 to 10 years—4 months.

" " 10 years and upwards—6 months.

(9.) Prisoners serving sentences under convictions for unnatural offences shall not be eligible for the privileges of the prison, unless under very exceptional circumstances; but they shall be entitled to receive the additional remission provided for under condition 8.

Daily Ration referred to in Clause 5.

- 1½ lb. bread of fine wheaten and maize flour, in the proportion of $\frac{1}{2}$ of the latter; or,
- 1½ lb. bread of wheaten flour.
- 1½ lb. fresh meat.
- 1 lb. vegetables.
- $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. salt.
- 6 oz. maize meal.
- $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. soap.
- 1 oz. rice.
- 1½ oz. sugar.
- $\frac{1}{4}$ oz. tea.
- $\frac{1}{3}$ oz. coffee.
- 2 oz. tobacco weekly.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

SYDNEY GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

(REPORT FOR 1894.)

Presented to Parliament pursuant to Sydney Grammar School Act of 1854, secs. 10 and 16.

The Chairman of Board of Trustees to The Minister of Public Instruction.

Sir,

Sydney Grammar School, 10 August, 1895.

I have the honor to submit this Report of the proceedings of the Trustees and the progress of the School during the year 1894, in order that the same may be laid before His Excellency the Governor and the Executive Council, in accordance with the provisions of "The Sydney Grammar School Act."

The office of Chairman was held by me during the year, Mr. E. W. Knox having acted as Vice-Chairman.

A comparison of the accompanying returns with those submitted for the year 1893 shows a falling off in the number of boys attending the School, the average attendance throughout the year being 379 as against an attendance of 397 in the previous year. The Trustees, however, believe that this reduction was only temporary, and arises from causes mentioned in the last Report, and in no way indicates a decrease in the popularity of the institution as the Metropolitan Grammar School.

During the absence on leave of Mr. Weigall, Mr. Geo. E. Blanch, as acting Head Master, ably performed his duties, and the Trustees desire to record their appreciation of the zealous efforts of the whole of the teaching staff to maintain that high tone and standard of excellence which the School has achieved under Mr. Weigall's Head Mastership, and to which its popularity amongst all classes and denominations in the Colony is mainly attributable.

No changes or additions to the teaching staff became necessary, except such as were of a temporary nature and to meet a particular exigency.

The successful results of the teaching during the year is evidenced, as well by the Examination Reports hereto appended as by the high positions on the University Examination Lists gained by so many of the boys who had been educated at the School.

It may be added that the Trustees have every reason to believe that the School during its existence, extending over a period of thirty-seven years, has exercised a wide and useful influence throughout the Colony in furthering the cause and upholding the standard of education, acknowledgments of benefits derived from numerous persons who have been educated at the School affording the best testimony that the objects of its foundation is "conferring on all classes and denominations the advantage of a regular and liberal course of education" have been attained.

The Salting Exhibition was awarded to Mr. Herbert E. Whitfeld.

The statement of the Income and Expenditure of the School for the past year is submitted herewith.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM C. WINDEYER,

Chairman, Sydney Grammar School Trustees.

SYDNEY GRAMMAR SCHOOL, DECEMBER, 1894.

Report of Examinations presented to the Trustees.

UPPER SCHOOL I.—CLASSICAL SIDE.

A.—CLASSICS.—Owing to the reclassification of the Upper School in October, necessitated by the alteration of time for the Junior Examination, to be held in 1895, the teaching period of the year has been reduced practically from twelve to nine months. This will account for the want of finish in the work of some of the Forms in Latin. With one or two exceptions, the results evinced sound and careful teaching, though in some cases a further revision of the more elementary constructions in the language would have led to improved results. It is impossible to criticise the work of the Sixth Form as a whole, owing to the fact that it was broken up into three distinct divisions. Pilcher's work, in Latin, attained to a high level of merit throughout. The results obtained by the Fifth Form were highly satisfactory in every way. Both in Latin composition and unseen work the Form reached a higher standard than has been known for several years past.

The Greek throughout the Upper School is in a thoroughly healthy state. Although the highest division was not quite up to the exceptionally high standard of 1893, the general efficiency of the others is on a higher level, and in a sounder and more advanced condition than it ever has been before.

B.—MODERN LANGUAGES.—French.—Forms VI and V have maintained the high standard of the last two years; the composition showed accuracy and style, and there was a distinct advance in vocabulary. Of the lower divisions the knowledge of grammar in Divisions III and VI was more sound, and the teaching appears to have been more systematic than in the other divisions; with one or two exceptions the composition in these divisions displayed a tolerable familiarity with the more elementary constructions of the language.

German.—In the unprepared translation the best boys of Division I possessed a good grasp of the language, and the composition was good and accurate throughout. In Division II the unprepared translation was good, and the composition ranged from good to fair.

In Divisions III and IV, owing to reclassification in June, the work was less thorough than in the upper divisions, though the material is not without promise for the future.

The Commercial Forms have this year been included in the French work of the Upper School; this has led to an increase in the number of divisions, which should eventually improve the general classification.

C.—ENGLISH.—The English subjects read in the Upper School this year were, in VI Form, Bacon's Essays; in V and Upper IV and Com. I, Milton (selections from Books V and VI, Par. Lost) and in L. IV and Remove, selections from the "Spectator." Form VI displayed an admirable acquaintance with the text of the essays, and a good critical analysis in the case of the better boys. The general essays were marked by a fair breadth of knowledge, and by a nervous and perspicuous style.

In the Milton the results were very satisfactory both in knowledge of subject matter, context, and allusions; but in paraphrasing, the pregnant sentences so characteristic of this poet were inadequately expanded, and the spirit of a passage was in many cases missed.

In the "Spectator" the analysis of the sentences and the composition were generally good, but the knowledge of the subject matter, allusions, &c., was vague, while the parsing and grammar were not so satisfactory as they should have been.

D.—MATHEMATICS.—In mathematics the nine divisions of the Upper School have been examined in arithmetic, algebra and geometry, and the two upper divisions in trigonometry also. Papers in higher algebra, mechanics, statics, and geometrical conic sections were taken by Division I.

Whilst the general result of the examinations was distinctly satisfactory, there was a noticeable lack of mathematical power in Divisions I, C. II and III; in these divisions, however, the papers showed that the want of success was not due to any lack of teaching.

The best results were obtained in geometry, last year's high standard in the solution of deductions being fully maintained. The defects in arithmetic pointed out last year received immediate attention, and the alterations made in consequence have already produced marked improvement.

The papers in higher mathematics showed that Division I had added to their previous wide range of work without in any way impairing their efficiency.

E.—NATURAL SCIENCE.—Some branch of natural science has, as usual, been studied in every Form in the Upper School and in three Forms of the Lower School. Opportunity has been found to make the work of a very practical kind in four of the classes. The results in Form V and Middle IV were very good indeed.

II.—COMMERCIAL SIDE.

The examinations in English language and literature and in history show that good progress has been made during the year. This is especially noticeable in Commercial I. The essays sent in were fair to good, the writing good. The boys who have recently entered Commercial I sent in papers which were markedly below the general average. There has been a distinct improvement in shorthand, and several of the more advanced boys have a thorough knowledge of Pittman's system.

LOWER SCHOOL.

The number of new boys admitted during the year, by increasing the difficulties of classification, has thrown a considerable strain on the teaching power of the masters, who have had in every case to take a new and higher range of work with boys of junior standing to those usually received by them. The results show that the forms have been handled with much judgment, the standard in every subject having been successfully raised. This success has been most marked in Latin composition and in French, the two weak subjects of last year, while the standard in English has been more than maintained. Special effort has been made with geography. The results have been very satisfactory this year, and should be more so next year. The first steps have also been taken for a strenuous effort to improve the handwriting by graduating and systematizing the daily exercises.

In mathematics there has been distinct improvement in euclid and algebra, the work of Division I in deductions being especially good; the work in arithmetic is however capable of improvement.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

EDUCATION.
(BY-LAWS OF THE FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY, BOTANY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 10 October, 1895.

Department of Public Instruction,
Sydney, 24th September, 1895.

The following By-laws for the Regulation of the Free Public Library at Botany, which have been made by the Borough Council of Botany and confirmed by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, are published in accordance with the Municipalities Act of 1867.

J. GARRARD.

BY-LAWS FOR THE REGULATION OF THE BOTANY FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

1. The Library shall be known as the Botany Free Public Library. It shall be under the immediate control and management of the Borough Council for the time being.

2. The Library and Reading Room shall be open to the public every Monday, from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m.; every alternate Tuesday, 7 to 9 p. m.; Wednesday, from 7 to 9 p. m.; Thursday, from 10 to 12 a. m.; Friday, from 7 to 8 p. m.; and Saturday, from 10 to 12 a. m., with such alterations as may be required from time to time, and as the Council may determine.

3. Every person entering the Library, whether for the purpose of inspection or otherwise, shall immediately write his or her name in a book, to be called the "Visitor's Book" and which it shall be the duty of the Librarian to have conveniently placed for the purpose; and no person shall be allowed to inspect or use the said Library without having first complied with this rule.

4. Any person who shall enter the Library in a state of intoxication, or who shall use unbecoming language, or indulge in improper behaviour therein, or who, by loud talking or unseemly conduct of any kind, shall disturb or annoy those using the said Library, shall be liable to be forcibly ejected therefrom, and it shall be the duty of the Librarian, or any member of the Committee who may be cognizant of such conduct, to deliver him into the custody of a police officer, to be taken before a Bench of Magistrates to be dealt with, and such offender shall upon conviction of such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds nor less than ten shillings.

5. Any person who shall, without larcenous intent, remove or attempt to remove from the said Library any book or other property whatsoever belonging to the said Institution, or in use therein, may be summarily proceeded against, and upon conviction shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds nor less than ten shillings.

6. Persons visiting the Library for the purposes of study or reference to any works, charts, globes, apparatus, models, specimens, &c., shall in no case be allowed to help themselves, but will be required to make direct application to the Librarian, or his assistant, to have their wants supplied. Any persons offending against this rule will subject themselves to immediate expulsion.

7. In all cases where books or other subject matters of reference shall be in use by any person or persons, and shall have been applied for by others, it shall be the duty of the Librarian to make an entry of such applications as they occur, and to supply the applicants in accordance with the order of such entry, but no person shall be subject to importunate solicitations for the purpose of unduly hurrying him or her in the prosecution of any study or reference in order merely that others may be accommodated.

8. Every person who may have received from the Librarian or his assistant any book or any other subject of reference whatsoever, shall immediately, on the completion of his or her study, examination, or pursuit thereof, return the same to the officer from whom it was received, and shall not, under any circumstances, hand it for further use to another.

9. Any person desirous of promoting the objects for which the Free Library has been established may, with the consent of the Committee for the time being, deposit with the Librarian, for public use, reference, or inspection, any book or other publication, chart, apparatus, model, specimen, &c., subject always to such special rules and restrictions as such persons shall dictate in writing, and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Librarian, his assistant, and the Committee of the said Library to respect such dictation faithfully in all its terms and conditions, and to impose the necessity of a strict observance thereof upon all persons visiting the Institution.

10. With the consent of the Committee for the time being, classes for mutual improvement or instruction may be formed in connection with the Free Library, and members of such classes may hold their meetings, and carry on their studies and experiments therein, provided always that the general free access to, and use of the said Library be not in the slightest degree thereby interfered with, and provided further that any and all rules formed by mutual improvement classes for their own guidance and direction shall in every case be submitted to and approved by the Municipal Council of Botany, before any such rule or rules shall have any practical operation.

11. Any person who shall wilfully damage any visitor's book, catalogue, copy of By-laws, or other book or record, kept at such Library or Reading Room for the general use thereof, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not less than ten shillings, without prejudice to the liability of such person to be proceeded against in respect of damage done.

12. The Council shall have the power at all times to make and amend such regulations for the internal management of the Library and guidance of the Committee and Librarian as circumstances may render necessary or desirable, and the Committee and Librarian shall be governed thereby accordingly.

13. It shall not be in the power of the Librarian, except by special permission of the Council, to remove or permit the removal of any book, chart, apparatus, model, or any article or thing whatsoever in use in or connected with the said Library, and any of such persons as aforesaid so offending will be subject to the proceedings and penalties as provided in section 5 of these By-laws.

14. Any donation of money or otherwise made to or for the use of the Library may be handed to the Librarian, to members of the Committee, or to the Council, and shall in case of a money donation be forthwith paid to the credit of the Free Library Account, at the Australian Joint Stock Bank, or such other Bank as the Council may do its business with.

15. A copy of these By-laws and all regulations framed or to be framed thereon, shall be constantly suspended conspicuously in the Library for the direction and information of the public, and copies shall be printed for distribution generally.

(L.S.) J. J. MACFADYEN, J.P.,
Mayor.

B. RADFORD, Council Clerk,
Council Chambers, Botany,
1st July, 1895.
