LECTURE 10
MAY 19, 1999

1. The first part of the lecture is devoted to a review of the material covered in the previous lecture. We begin by discussing the concept of a vector field and its relationship to the gradient of a scalar field.

2. We then consider the concept of a line integral and its application to the calculation of the work done by a force field. We discuss the relationship between the line integral and the potential energy function.

3. The second part of the lecture is devoted to a discussion of the concept of a surface integral and its application to the calculation of the flux of a vector field through a surface. We discuss the relationship between the surface integral and the divergence theorem.

4. We then consider the concept of a volume integral and its application to the calculation of the total flux of a vector field through a volume. We discuss the relationship between the volume integral and Gauss's theorem.

5. The final part of the lecture is devoted to a discussion of the concept of a vector potential and its relationship to the curl of a vector field. We discuss the relationship between the vector potential and the magnetic field.

6. We conclude the lecture by discussing the relationship between the vector potential and the magnetic field. We discuss the relationship between the vector potential and the magnetic field.

7. We conclude the lecture by discussing the relationship between the vector potential and the magnetic field. We discuss the relationship between the vector potential and the magnetic field.
