NEW SOUTH WALES.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE GOVERNOR AND COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE COLONY OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

Presented to Parliament by Command.

INSTRUCTIONS to Our Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Our Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies, or, in his absence, to Our Lieutenant-Governor, or the Officer for the time being Administering the Government of Our said Colony and its Dependencies.

Given at Our Court at Windsor, this Twenty-ninth day of April, 1879, in the Forty-second year of Our Reign.

WHEREAS by certain Letters Patent, bearing even date herewith, We have constituted, ordered, and declared that there shall be a Governor and Commander-in-Chief (therein and hereinafter called the Governor) in and over Our Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies (which said Colony and its Dependencies are therein and hereinafter called the Colony): And whereas We have thereby authorized and commanded the Governor to do and execute all things that belong to his said office according to the tenor of Our said Letters Patent and of such Commission as may be issued to him under Our Sign Manual and Signet, and according to such Instructions as may from time to time be given to him, under Our Sign Manual and Signet, or by Our Order in Our Privy Council, or by Us through one of Our Principal Secretaries of State, and to such Laws as are now or shall hereafter be in force in the Colony: Now, therefore, We do, by these Our Instructions under Our Sign Manual and Signet, direct and enjoin and declare Our will and pleasure as follows:—

I. The Governor may, whenever he thinks fit, require any person in the Public Service to take the Oath of Allegiance, together with such other Oath or Oaths as may from time to time be prescribed by any Law in force in the Colony. The Governor is to administer such Oaths, or cause them to be administered by some Public Officer of the Colony.

II. The Governor shall forthwith communicate these Our Instructions to Our Executive Council for the Colony, and likewise all such others, from time to time, as he shall find convenient for Our service to impart to them.

III. The said Executive Council shall not proceed to the dispatch of business unless duly summoned by authority of the Governor, nor unless two Members at the least (exclusive of himself or of the Member presiding) be present and assisting throughout the whole of the meetings at which any such business shall be dispatched.

IV. The Governor shall attend and preside at the meetings of the Executive Council, unless prevented by some necessary or reasonable cause, and in his absence such Member as may be appointed by him in that behalf, or in the absence of such Member the senior Member of the Executive Council actually present shall preside; the seniority of the Members of the said Council being regulated according to the order of their respective appointments as Members thereof.

V. A full and exact journal or minute shall be kept of all the deliberations, acts, proceedings, votes, and resolutions of the Executive Council; and at each meeting of the said Council the Minutes of the last meeting shall be read over and confirmed or amended, as the case may require, before proceeding to the dispatch of any other business.

VI. In the execution of the powers and authorities granted to the Governor by Our said Letters Patent, he shall in all cases consult with the Executive Council, excepting only in cases which are of such a nature that, in his judgment, Our service would sustain material prejudice by consulting the said Council thereupon, or when the matters to be decided are too unimportant to require their advice, or too urgent to admit of their advice being given by the time within which it may be necessary for him to act in respect of any such matters. In all such urgent cases he shall at the earliest practicable period communicate to the said Council the measures which he may so have adopted, with the reasons thereof.

VII. The Governor may act in the exercise of the powers and authorities granted to him by Our said Letters Patent in opposition to the advice given to him by the Members of the Executive Council if he shall in any case deem it right to do so, but in any such case he shall fully report the matter to Us, by the first convenient opportunity, with the grounds and reasons of his action.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES AMENDMENT ACT.

(DESPATCH DISALLOWING.)

Presented to Parliament by Command.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor.

(No. 102.)

My Lord,

Downing-street, 25 June, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Sir H. Robinson's despatch (No. 20), of the 24th February last, transmitting to me a copy of the Bill which had again passed the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of New South Wales "to amend the law relating to Divorce and Matrimonial Causes," and which he had again reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure, in accordance with the provisions of his instructions as Governor of the Colony.

I have again given my best consideration to the question, and I cannot but express my regret that a measure of so much importance, and which is open to the grave objection pointed out in my despatch of the 15th July last year, and by Sir A. Stephen in his speeches in the Legislative Council, should apparently have received so little consideration in its passage through the Legislature.

In the absence of any sufficient evidence to satisfy me that the people of New South Wales are generally interested in the measure, or have clearly expressed any desire for such a change in the law, I feel that I should not be doing my duty if I were to advise Her Majesty to give her assent to a measure which would produce yet another local variation of an important branch of the law in which the common interest of all Her Majesty's subjects demands the nearest attainable approach to uniformity throughout her dominion.

I regret, therefore, that I am unable to submit the Bill for Her Majesty's assent.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

DESPATCH.

(MEASUREMENT OF GREEK SHIPS.)

Presented to Parliament by Command.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
4th December, 1879.

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication, for general information, of the following Circular Despatch from the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, transmitting copy of an Order of the Queen in Council of 14th August, 1879, with reference to the measurement of ships of the Kingdom of Greece.

JAMES WATSON.

(Circular)

Downing-street,
19th September, 1879.

Sir,

I have the honor to transmit to you, for information and publication in the Colony under your Government, a copy of an Order of the Queen in Council of the 14th of August last, exempting from re-measurement in this country ships of the Kingdom of Greece, the measurement whereof, after the 1st of July, 1878, has been ascertained and denoted in the Registers and other National papers of such ships.

I have, &amp;c.,

M. E. HICKS-BEACH.

The Officer Administering the Government of New South Wales.At the Court at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, the 14th day of August, 1879.Present:

The Queen's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by the "Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862," it is enacted that whenever it is made to appear to Her Majesty that the rules concerning the measurement of tonnage of merchant ships for the time being in force under the principal Act have been adopted by the Government of any foreign country, and are in force in that country, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by Order in Council, to direct that the ships of such foreign country shall be deemed to be of the tonnage denoted in their certificate of registry or other national papers, and thereupon it shall no longer be necessary for such ships to be re-measured in any port or place in Her Majesty's dominions; but such ships shall be deemed to be of the tonnage denoted in their certificates of registry or other papers in the same manner, to the same extent, and for the same purposes, in, to, and for which the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of British ships is to be deemed the tonnage of such ships:

And whereas it has been made to appear to Her Majesty that the rules concerning the measurement of tonnage of merchant ships now in force under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," have been adopted by the Government of His Majesty the King of Greece, with the exception of a difference in the mode in certain steamers of estimating the allowance for engine room, and such rules are now in force in that country, having come into operation on the 1st day of July, 1878, Her Majesty is hereby pleased, by and with the advice of Her Privy Council, to direct as follows:—

1. As regards sailing ships, that merchant sailing ships of the said Kingdom of Greece, the measurement whereof after the said 1st day of July, 1878, has been ascertained and denoted in the registers and other national papers of such sailing ships, testified by the date thereof, shall be deemed to be of the tonnage denoted in such registers and other national papers in the same manner, and to the same extent, and for the same purpose, in, to, and for which the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of British sailing ships is deemed to be the tonnage of such ships.
2. As regards steam ships, that merchant ships belonging to the said Kingdom of Greece, which are propelled by steam or any other power requiring engine room, the measurement whereof shall after the said 1st day of July, 1878, have been ascertained and denoted in the registers and other national papers of such steam ships, testified by the dates thereof, shall be deemed to be of the tonnage denoted in such registers or other national papers in the same manner and to the same extent, and for the same purpose, in, to, and for which the tonnage denoted in the certificate of registry of British ships is deemed to be the tonnage of such ships: Provided, nevertheless, that if the owner or master of any such Greek steamship desires the deduction for engine room in his ships to be estimated under the rules for engine room measurement and deduction applicable to British ships, instead of under the Greek rule, the engine room shall be measured and the deduction calculated according to the British rules.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

PARLIAMENTARY REPORTING STAFF.

(INSTRUCTIONS TO PRINCIPAL SHORTHAND WRITER.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 6 November, 1879.

The Under Secretary, Colonial Secretary's Department, to The Principal Shorthand Writer of the Parliamentary Reporting Staff.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 November, 1879.

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to transmit to you six copies of rules, which have received the approval of the Government, for your guidance in reporting the debates in Parliament.

I have, &amp;c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER.

[Enclosure.]

INSTRUCTIONS to the Principal Shorthand Writer of the Parliamentary Reporting Staff.

1. It will be the duty of the Parliamentary Reporting Staff to prepare accurate reports of the Debates of the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly. It is not the intention of the Government that a separate staff shall be employed for each House; and it will therefore be within your discretion to direct the employment of individual members of the Staff in the Gallery of either House in such manner as the importance and extent of the work to be done may, in your judgment, appear to be expedient.

2. You will report the decisions of the President of the Legislative Council and the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, and the Financial Statement of the Treasurer, in the first person. The speeches of Ministers in charge of important Bills, of the Leader of the Opposition, and of other Members, may also be transcribed in the first person, according to your own judgment in each case. In this matter no specific instruction can be given which would be applicable in all cases; but you will be guided as far as possible by the practice which prevails in reporting the debates of the Imperial Parliament as embodied in the volumes of "Hansard's Debates."

3. As the primary object aimed at in the appointment of the Parliamentary Reporting Staff is the preparation of an accurate and permanent record of the Debates in Parliament, it will not fall within the scope of your duty to report questions put to Ministers, and the answers given by them, excepting where such questions may be asked without notice, or may refer to subjects of great public importance, or to matters immediately connected with the business of Parliament. Questions asked after notice, and papers laid before Parliament, will, as heretofore, be recorded in the Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly respectively.

4. The revision of their speeches by honorable Members would be attended by many difficulties, and long delays in the publication of the reports would become inevitable. You will abstain in all cases, therefore, from supplying honorable Members with proofs of their speeches; but you will be held responsible for the accuracy of the reports. As an exception to this rule, however, the Financial Statement of the Treasurer may be submitted for verification of the figures before the publication of the report.

5. Where the principles of a Bill have been fully debated on the motion for the second reading, the report of the debates in committee should be, as a general rule, confined to the scope of the particular clause under discussion.

6. It will be necessary that the reports shall be completed in time to admit of their publication and delivery to honorable Members of each House on Tuesday morning of each week; and for this purpose you are placed in communication with the Government Printer, who will be responsible for all the mechanical details of the publication.

7. The Parliamentary Reporting Staff is placed under the Department of the Colonial Secretary; and communications from any member of the Staff must be submitted through the Principal Shorthand Writer.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AS AGENTS FOR CONTRACTORS.
(PETITION FROM PRESIDENT OF THE BUILDERS' AND CONTRACTORS' ASSOCIATION.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 3 June, 1880.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Builders' and Contractors' Association of New South Wales, at a duly constituted meeting, held June 1st, 1880,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH:—

That this Association views with anxiety and alarm the practice of Members of your Honorable House acting as agents for contractors in examining plans, &c., taking out quantities, and in general using their influence as Members for the benefit of their clients; that the members of this Association have often much trouble in getting access to plans, &c., so as to make up their tender accurately; but if Members of Parliament or their employés be requiring the plans, other contractors who do not employ them will have no chance until they be satisfied.

Also, this Association is afraid that Members of Parliament so employed might use undue influence in settling a contract in favour of their clients.

We therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will take into consideration the above premises.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Signed by me, on behalf of the Builders' and Contractors' Association, at their request,—

DAVID ELPHINSTONE,
President.

These expenses include purchase and replacement of horses, food, clothing, shoeing, veterinary charges, provision of appropriate appointments, grooms' wages, &c., which in point of fact reduce the amount of income. These remarks apply to all officers to whom forage allowance is granted.

EXPLANATORY Statement of the Public Accounts of New South Wales, as embodied in the Ways and Means for the Year 1880.

CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND.

SINCE the last Financial Statement was made, and before the close of last Session, many important additions, under Estimates and temporary Supply Bills subsequently introduced, were made to the expenditure originally proposed. These additional Estimates were as follows, viz. :—

Further Supplementary Estimates for 1878 and previous years, submitted on the 19th June, 1879 ... ..	£52,733 15 0
Additional Estimate for 1879, submitted on same date...	124,343 0 0
Further Estimate of Expenditure out of the Surplus Revenue Account, also submitted on same date ...	179,849 8 11
Two further Estimates of Expenditure out of that account, submitted 2nd and 3rd July, respectively amounting together to ... ..	109,000 0 0
And under temporary Supply Bills the following sums were appropriated—
Towards meeting the expenses connected with the International Exhibition ... ..	£50,000 0 0
For Tramway from Redfern to Hunter-street ...	14,000 0 0

The changes which these additional Estimates produced on the accounts submitted with the Ways and Means of 12th February last, will be fully explained as the accounts affected thereby are severally brought under review.

With the last Ways and Means four accounts were submitted, viz. :—

An Account of Revenue and Expenditure for 1877.

An Account of Revenue and Expenditure for 1878.

An Account of the estimated Surplus Revenue, 31st December, 1878, and of the proposed charges thereon.

An Account, showing the proposed expenditure in relation to the estimated income for the Year 1879.

In the present Ways and Means the two first-mentioned accounts are dropped, no material change having occurred with respect to their general results since last submitted. In fact these results are now embodied in the Surplus Revenue Account, which consequently renders their re-submission unnecessary. The following are now the statements submitted, explanatory of the present and prospective position of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, viz. :—

The Surplus Revenue Account.

An Account of Actual and Estimated Revenue and Expenditure for 1879.

An Account showing the proposed Expenditure in relation to the estimated Income for the year 1880.

These three accounts embrace all that is necessary to a clear understanding of the public financial condition of the Colony so far as that condition can be ascertained from the operations of the past and a forecast of the immediate future. The first Account to be explained is

THE SURPLUS REVENUE ACCOUNT.

This Account was submitted for the first time in February last, when it was divided into two parts. Part I showed the Assets and Liabilities as they existed on the 31st December, 1878; and Part II the amount of Expenditure for Public Works and other Services which it was then proposed should be defrayed from the estimated surplus on that date. The surplus at the close of 1878, as shown by that account, was estimated at ... .. £2,474,923 18 10

Against that sum it was proposed to charge the Services set forth in the Surplus Revenue Estimate of 12th February last, the amount of which was ... .. 1,210,000 0 0

This left an estimated Balance or Surplus of... .. £1,264,923 18 10

As already explained, however, three additional Surplus Revenue Estimates were subsequently submitted, under which further Appropriations were authorized to the extent of ... .. £284,338 4 5

To this has also to be added the two sums of £50,000 each taken in the temporary Supply Acts 42 Vic. Nos. 6 and 17, "Towards meeting the expenses connected with the International Exhibition," viz. : ... .. 100,000 0 0

And a Further Supplementary Estimate for 1878 and previous years, amounting to ... .. 52,733 15 0

These three sums making together a further charge of ... .. 437,071 19 5

Which deducted from the Surplus above stated leaves a balance of ... .. 827,851 19 5

This balance has, however, to be increased by the amount of an item in the first Supplementary Estimate for 1878 and previous years which was struck out of the Appropriation Bill in Committee of the Whole, viz. :— ... .. 330 10 1

Leaving the surplus at the close of the Session at ... .. £828,182 9 6

In

In the account now submitted the surplus is shown to be only... £618,053 10 5 being a reduction of £210,128 19d. 1s., which is thus accounted for—

1. Revenue of 1878 and previous years refunded during the present year between the 1st January and the 30th September ... ..	£111,873	7	7
2. Drawbacks and refund of duties of 1878 and previous years during the same period ... ..	15,833	6	8
3. Amount of the Surplus Revenue Estimate now before the Legislative Assembly ... ..	127,999	8	5
4. Amount of the Further Supplementary Estimate for 1878 and previous years, also now before the Assembly ... ..	20,695	5	1
5. Charges on Collection, 1878, further sum ... ..	3,164	8	10
6. Appropriations of 1877 and 1878 increased by repayments to credit of Votes in 1879 ... ..	8,818	11	2
In all ... ..	£288,384	7	9
Less —Further amounts written off the appropriations of 1877 as not likely to be required ... ..	78,255	8	8
Thus bringing out the difference stated, viz. ... ..	£210,128	19	1

ACCOUNT FOR 1879.

The account submitted for the year 1879 with the Ways and Means of 12th February last was entirely an estimated one, as no provision, beyond a temporary Supply Bill for January, had at that time been made for the expenditure of the year. The Revenue was then estimated at ... .. £5,096,155 0 0 and the expenditure at ... .. 4,969,893 11 2

thus leaving an estimated surplus of ... .. £126,261 8 10

Inasmuch, however, as the first vote of £50,000 on account of the International Exhibition, which was then made a charge against the revenue of the year 1879, has now been transferred to the Surplus Revenue Account, it is necessary to increase this sum of £126,261 8s. 10d. to the extent of that vote. The estimated balance on the 1879 account would therefore stand at ... .. £176,261 8 10

Before the close of the Session an additional Estimate was brought down for the present year, amounting to £124,343, and under the Temporary Supply Act (42 Vic. No. 24) for May last, a sum of £14,000 was appropriated for the Tramway from Redfern to Hunter-street. The expenditure authorized for 1879 by the Legislative Assembly under the Estimates-in-Chief and the additional Estimate referred to, added to the Tramway Vote and the Special Appropriations, amounted to £5,006,686 11s. 2d., which, deducted from the Revenue, as originally estimated left an estimated surplus of £89,468 8s. 10d. This would have been the state of the account for the year 1879 had it been resubmitted at the close of the Session, showing the alterations made in Committee of Supply.

The

The account for 1879, now submitted with the present Ways and Means, exhibits unfortunately a far less favourable result. The revenue, which was previously estimated to realize a sum of ... .. £5,096,155 0 0 is now expected to yield only ... .. 4,524,841 0 0 being a reduction of ... .. £571,314 0 0

The following tabulated Statement shows the sources of revenue which fall short or are in excess of the estimate made in February last. The items which are less than the estimate amount to ... .. £667,513 0 0 while those that are more to only ... .. 96,199 0 0

thus showing a net reduction of ... .. £571,314 0 0

ESTIMATED ACCOUNT FOR 1880.

The Revenue of 1880, inclusive of £358,500 of proposed new taxation, is estimated to realize	...	...	...	£5,120,375	0	0
While the expenditure proper to the year, as shown by the Estimates-in-Chief, is estimated at	...	...	...	4,984,183	17	10
Which it will be seen is in excess of the estimated charges thereon.	...	...	...	£136,191	2	2

It will be observed, from a comparison of the amounts voted and authorized for 1879 with those proposed for 1880, that the latter is not in excess of the former, notwithstanding that in 1880 there is an increased charge for interest on Loans of £130,000. During the last few years the expenditure for public works and buildings has greatly increased, in consequence of the large revenue that has, during the same period, been derived from the sale of Crown lands by auction. As these sales have, however, been checked, and are now less than one-half what they were in 1877, it has been found necessary to restrict expenditure of this nature to an amount proportionate to the reduced revenue. Even with this restriction the expenditure of 1880 is considerably in excess of the estimated ordinary income, and can only be equalized by additional taxation, which it will be seen by the Ways and Means, is proposed to the extent of £358,500 as above-mentioned.

LOANS

LOANS ACCOUNT.

In April last an Act of Parliament (42 Vic. No. 17) was passed authorizing the amalgamation of the nine Loan Funds which had been created since the year 1871. In conformity with that Act these Funds now form only one General Loan Account, which is found a much more convenient arrangement than the former. The balances on the Loans which were authorized prior to the year 1871, remain, as before, separate and distinct, under the title of the Old Loans Account. Instead, therefore, of the nine or ten Loan Fund Accounts, formerly submitted with the Ways and Means, there is now but one account, divided into two parts, namely, the Old Loans Account and the General Loan Account. Attached to that account will be found a statement, marked D, showing under the respective Loan Acts the several amounts appropriated for services of every description authorized to be provided for by Loans; the expenditure on account of such services up to the 30th September, 1879; and the balances written off, or retained on that date, for future expenditure.

Under the Old Loans Account the original appropriations
amounted to	... ..	£9,998,130	18 3
Of this sum there has been expended	£9,710,665	7	3
and written off	... ..	128,803	0 1
Deducting these sums, which together amount to	... ..	£9,839,468	7 4
from the appropriations there is left for future expenditure, if required, a balance of	... ..	£158,662	10 11
This balance was represented by cash in the Bank of New South Wales, Sydney (being part of the balance at the credit of the Public Account), to the amount of	... ..	£158,341	18 8 and advances to the Commissioner for Railways, not yet charged to appropriations, remaining unadjusted on the 30th September, 1879	... ..	320	12 3
Making together the amount above shown, viz. :—	... ..	£158,662	10 11

In the statement, marked D, already referred to will also be found particulars of all appropriations and expenditure for services authorized to be provided for by Loans from the year 1871 up to the 30th September last, which are now embraced in the General Loan Account. These appropriations amount in the aggregate to

of which there has been expended the sum of	... ..	6,263,687 4 7
Leaving for future expenditure	... ..	£8,941,816 15 5

This large sum consists principally of the appropriations of last Session for Railways, Water Supply, and Sewerage Works, which alone amounted to £7,352,768.

The funds at the credit of the General Loan Account on 30th September last were as follows, viz. :—

Bank of New South Wales—Working Account	... ..	£653,131	15 5
Special Deposits—
Bank of Australasia	... ..	£50,000	0 0
Mercantile Bank	... ..	25,000	0 0

TRUST FUND.

On the 30th September last the balance at the credit of this fund was £1,109,667 4s. 11d. At the close of 1878 it was only £990,284 2s. 11d.; consequently there has been an increase during the first nine months of the year of £119,383 2s. As the Trust Fund is composed of a great number of accounts that are constantly fluctuating, it would serve no useful purpose to show in what way this increase has occurred. It is highly gratifying, however, to find that, notwithstanding the general depression in business during the past year, and the consequent scarcity of money, the balance at the credit of depositors in the Government Savings Bank has increased from £478,436 9s. 6d., on the 31st December, 1878, to £505,872 4s. 11d., on 30th September, 1879. This increase of over £27,000 in nine months is a satisfactory proof of the provident habits of the industrious portion of the community. The amount on 30th September last at the credit of the Church and School Fund, being almost exclusively the proceeds of land sales, was £189,231 12s. 3d., of which £175,181 19s. 3d. is invested in Government securities. The investments of the present year, up to that date, on behalf of Trust Fund Accounts, have been as follows:—Church and School Fund in debentures, £22,000; Assurance Fund in debentures, £5,700; making together a sum of £27,700.

As already stated, the balance at the credit of the Trust Fund Accounts, as a whole, on the 30th September, 1879, was £1,109,667 4s. 4d., which was represented by—

Cash in the Bank	...	...	...	...	£504,966 12 4
And securities in the Treasury Chest	...	...	...	...	604,700 12 0
Together	...	...	...	...	£1,109,667 4 4

PUBLIC

PUBLIC DEBT.

During the present year the Public Debt has been increased by the loan of £3,249,500, so successfully negotiated in London in May last. The debt now stands at £14,937,519 9s. 2d., of which £14,407,330 is represented by Debentures and £530,189 9s. 2d. by Funded Stock. The usual detailed statements respecting the Public Debt will be found at pages 107-111 of the Ways and Means.

The following are the authorized Loans which have not yet been negotiated, viz. :—

NINTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE AUDITOR GENERAL

ON

THE TREASURER'S STATEMENT OF THE RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE OF THE CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND, AND OTHER MONEYS, FOR THE YEAR 1879.

(Under Act 33 Victoria No. 18.)

IN transmitting the Treasurer's Statements of Receipts and Expenditure for the year 1879, in accordance with the directions contained in the 38th section of the "Audit Act of 1870," I do myself the honor to accompany them with the following Report:—

2. The Statements were received on the 30th March and were returned to the Treasury on the 1st ultimo for the consideration of such amendments as the audit had shown to be required. They were returned to me with the necessary corrections or with satisfactory explanation on the 2nd instant.

3. Similar delay to that which has attended the passing of the Appropriation Act for several years past is observable in the appropriation for the year 1879.*

The exigencies of the Public Service were met by monthly Supply Bills up to the month of July, appropriating a total sum of £3,219,493, subject for the most part to any reduction that might be made in the votes under the annual Appropriation Act.

The inconveniences arising from the state of uncertainty in which this delay involves the public departments can only be adequately appreciated by those upon whose shoulders the onus of carrying on the administrative details of the government is placed. Nor does the evil end here, for the delay is productive of absolute loss. Increase in the expenditure is the natural result of hurried work, and contractors know well how to take advantage of the departments that are pushed to the very last extremity to get their invitations for tenders out and their contracts signed before the expiration of the limited time allowed to them by the Audit Act.

4. Were the determination come to, to provide for the wants of the Service before the close of the previous year, it seems to me that the "Advance" vote to the Treasurer, which has reached the large sum of £100,000, would no longer be required, for its employment is for the most part in the way of advances to meet claims that have received no Parliamentary sanction.

The advance in the first instance was the offspring of the delay in passing the Appropriation Act, and would naturally shrink to much smaller proportions, if it did not disappear altogether, upon a return to timely supply. 5.

* The Appropriation Act for the year 1875 was passed in August, 1875.
 " 1876 " August, 1876.
 " 1877 " October, 1877.
 " 1878 " May, 1878.
 " 1879 " July, 1879.

5. In 1877 the passing of the Appropriation Act for the services of that year having been delayed till near the middle of the month of October it was deemed necessary to make exceptional provision for prolonging the life of the votes beyond the time allowed by the Audit Act. The expedient was adopted of tacking a clause to the Appropriation Act which enacts that "No appropriation included in this Act shall lapse until the 31st day of December, 1878."

The 17th clause of the Audit Act was by this means defeated, and a similar course has been pursued with the appropriations of the two following years. I would very respectfully venture to suggest, for the consideration of your Honorable House, that whilst it may provide a remedy for some of the inconveniences consequent upon tardy supply its continuance as a fixed provision of the Appropriation Act is not unlikely to produce disturbance in the Public Accounts of a more serious nature than the inconvenience its presence is intended to remove. There will be delay instead of promptitude. The adjustment of advances will be prolonged and that prompt finality in the audit and rendering of the accounts of the expenditure of its votes to Parliament, which it is the object of the Audit Act to secure, will in a great measure be defeated.

6. Taking advantage of the authority given to me by the 39th section of the Audit Act, I would venture to submit the following suggestions for consideration, with a view to the simplification of the system hitherto pursued in dealing with the annual votes. The distinction maintained between payments for "Arrears" and "Current Services" appears to me to answer no good purpose, and should be abandoned. The votes should be taken to meet the probable actual payments within the financial year, irrespective of date of service, thus extending the principle already adopted in a few of the services—notably the Survey—to all the ordinary and regularly recurring departmental expenditure.

The adoption of an uniform system which treats the receipts and payments within the financial year as the basis of appropriations and of the accounts laid before Parliament, would greatly reduce the number of figures in the Annual Statements, and facilitate the record and audit of the Public Accounts. It would remove the difficulties which attend a strict interpretation of the 17th section of the Audit Act, and it would give freer scope to the application of unused balances under the 18th section of the same Act.

7. With regard to unused balances for Public Works, which are specially excepted from the operation of the 18th section, as well as for any special service of an occasional character, a plan could readily be devised in consonance with the principle advocated, whereby the life of the vote could be prolonged to any fixed time, when, if not operated upon, it would fall to be treated as Ways and Means, and the amount re-appropriated as Parliament might direct.

8. The Imperial practice agrees in principle with the plan I have sketched out. The 24th section of the "Exchequer and Audit Departments Act of 1866" is couched in the following terms, expressing clearly the course adopted in the Appropriation Accounts of the United Kingdom which is now advocated for this Colony :—

"An Appropriation Account of Supply Grants shall exhibit on the charge side thereof the sum or sums appropriated by Parliament for the service of the Financial Year to which the account relates, and on the discharge side thereof the sums which may have actually come in course of payment within the same period, and no imprest or advance, of the application of which an account may not have been rendered to and allowed by the Accounting Department, shall be included on the discharge side thereof."
and

9. A similar principle has been applied to the accounts of the Colony of Victoria for the last seven years. By an Act passed in the year 1872 (36 Vic. No. 425) it is provided that "From and after the thirty-first day of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two no sum or sums of money which is or shall be appropriated from the Consolidated Revenue for the service of any financial year shall be issued and applied except for such services and purposes as shall come in course of payment during the year for which such appropriation is or shall be made."

The financial year closes on the 30th of June in Victoria, and in their Report on the Accounts for the last year the Commissioners of Audit, when animadverting on the misuse of the Treasurer's advance, and the improper manipulation of the Treasury Balances, take occasion to say that, in their opinion, fifteen months would be the best limit to the life of a vote, thus agreeing with the term fixed by the Audit Act of New South Wales. They say that "the Revenue Accounts of each year should be closed at the 30th of June, and expenditure for the year should then cease to be incurred, but liabilities then actually outstanding might be paid during three months longer, when the votes and all warrants and orders depending upon them should finally lapse, and transfers and journal entries should cease."

It is understood that all accounts actually in course of payment, that is to say, which have been rendered to and allowed by the Accounting Departments, are included on the discharge side of the accounts, but not otherwise.

I may add that there is a Bill now before the Parliament of Victoria to carry out this view of the Audit Commissioners.

10. In my Report on the Accounts for 1878, clause 12, attention was drawn to an overcharge by the Bank of New South Wales for commission on certain payments made in London under the Banking Agreement of 1876. That agreement, clause 5, authorises a charge of one half per cent. on the half-yearly payment of interest on the Public Debt, and of one quarter per cent. on the principal sum of Debentures paid off, and also on all payments involving verification of accounts or the transmission to the Colony of documentary evidence or vouchers. The bank has persistently charged one-half per cent. on this latter class of payments and it will be seen by the statement given in the Appendix marked A, that the amount claimed from the bank, as in excess, up to the end of 1879 reached £3,504 5s. 3d. My last communication from the Treasury, under date 15th April, states that the Treasurer is in correspondence with the bank on the subject.

11. I have further to submit a statement of payments charged in the bank sheets of the London branch of the Bank of New South Wales which have not been adjusted in the Sydney Account at the Treasury for want of Parliamentary appropriation, or otherwise of funds to which they could be charged. The total sum is £12,567 3s. 2d., being interest on special advances made in London to 30th June, 1879. See Appendix B.

12. In the course of the examination of the accounts of the Council of Education it was found that there had been carried to the credit of the vote an amount allowed by the bank for interest on deposits. As it appeared to me that this properly belonged to the Consolidated Revenue, I took exception to it on the ground that the expenditure under the vote would thereby be in excess of the Parliamentary Parliamentary appropriation. The Colonial Treasurer and the Minister of Justice and Public Instruction concurring in my view, the sum of £1,423 2s. 3d. was recovered and paid into the Treasury.

13. It is necessary that I should report the passing under the authority of the Governor and Executive Council of the several payments without proper vouchers, which will be found in a schedule appended to this Report marked C. It needs not that these should be separately noticed here. In some of the cases it was found impossible to obtain written vouchers duly certified or acquitted owing to the death of the accounting officer, or the removal of the recipient, whilst in others the vouchers had been lost or destroyed, and it was found impossible to replace them.

The sanction, therefore, of the Governor and Executive Council, under the authority of the 31st section of the Audit Act, was sought in order that the accounts might be closed, it having been previously ascertained in each case, as far as it was possible, that the sums specified had been properly disbursed, and that the disallowance could not otherwise be removed.

14. The usual Schedule of Transfers of Surplus Balances of Grants under the authority of the 18th section of the Audit Act, which have from time to time been specially reported to your Honorable House will be found in the Appendix marked D.

15. Obstacles having arisen in many instances to the passing of vouchers through the absence of proper authority for the acquittances, I felt it to be my duty to seek the advice of the Attorney General on the question of the Auditor General's responsibility in connexion with accounts paid through banks or agents in cases unsupported by the authority of the principals. The opinion of Mr. Attorney-General Windeyer, which with copy of the case put is submitted in the Appendix marked E, quiets the doubts I had entertained on that score, and it is now deemed sufficient for the Examiners to be satisfied with evidence of the exhibition of the authority at the Treasury, unless the amount be very large, in which case the production of the authority is deemed advisable.

16. A question was referred to me by the Treasurer in connection with a claim of Mr. C. A. Thurlow, of the Lands Department, to a Pension under Schedule B of the Constitution Act. Mr. Thurlow entered the Service in the year 1857, and it had been held that Schedule B was closed to services rendered subsequent to the introduction of the Constitution Act. I therefore reported adversely to his claim. Upon reference, however, to the Attorney General, that officer combating the view which had previously obtained, declared in favour of Mr. Thurlow's claim. As this opinion opened the door to subsequent claimants whose period of service did not reach beyond or even up to the limits of Mr. Thurlow's, I have thought it right to point attention to it in this Report.

17. Mr. C. E. Phillips, also of the Lands Department, having been repaid the deductions from his salary under the Superannuation Act of 1864, claimed to have a Pension granted him under Schedule B of the Constitution Act. This also was referred for the opinion of Mr. Attorney-General Windeyer on the point whether the return of his contributions invalidated the claim. The opinion in this case was in favour of the applicant, who died, however, before he could take advantage of it. The wording of the proviso to section 9 of the Superannuation Repeal Act of 1873 had led to the supposition that the refund of deductions barred a claim to Pension.

Mr.

Mr. Attorney-General Windeyer, however, shows that whatever bar it might be to a claim under the Superannuation Act of 1864, it could be none whatever to a claim under the Imperial Act. The words of the statute are—"Provided always that no such deductions shall be refunded to any person to whom any pension, gratuity or payment shall have been or be granted or made under this or any Imperial or the said repealed Act and that no pension gratuity or payment under this Act shall be granted or made to any person to whom any such deductions shall have been or shall be refunded as aforesaid." Nevertheless, under this opinion the claims of the officers, who have retired upon the Schedule B Fund, to the return of the deductions made from their salaries under the Superannuation Act of 1864, have been admitted.

18. It is my duty to report under the directions contained in the 36th section of the Audit Act, the following instances of defalcation in the accounts of the officers named:—

Mr. W. Mayne, Acting Telegraph Station Master at Vegetable Creek, was found to have short remitted collections to the amount of £10 11s. 8d., and to have appropriated a sum of 18s. sent to him to pay an account, making £11 9s. 8d.

There were, however, vouchers in Mayne's favour to the value of £9 13s. 8d., reducing the deficiency to £1 16s.

J. Sheehan, Sheep Inspector at Gundagai, was proceeded against for the alleged embezzlement of certain fees under the Diseases in Sheep Amendment Act, but evidence to the satisfaction of the jury was not forthcoming to secure a conviction.

Deficiencies have lately been brought to light in the accounts of the Prisons Department, and Mr. W. G. Beverley, the late Deputy Controller, has pleaded guilty to the embezzlement of two sums of money, viz.:—£40 2s. 6d., paid to him by the Roads Department for prison labour, Goulburn Gaol, and £38 for salaries, Bathurst Gaol.

I am not yet informed to what further extent this officer's peculations have been brought to light.

19. In the Appendix will be found a Statement of Unadjusted Advances at Appendix F. the close of the year, exhibiting the amounts outstanding, and the names of the officers or Departments responsible for their adjustment; and in addition to this I append Statement of Surcharges recovered upon the Accounts of Expenditure by Vide Appendix G. Public Accountants, and upon the accounts of Collectors of Public Revenue.

The sums recovered are—

Upon Expenditure Accounts ... ..	£1,047 12 10
„ Revenue Accounts ... ..	1,053 11 4
Total ... ..	£2,101 4 2

The sum of £793 9s. 2d., shown as recovered upon Pre-emptive Lease rents of Crown Lands, is made up of a very large number of small sums, and has resulted from a most laborious investigation into the Lease Rental Accounts, which were found to have drifted into an almost hopeless state of confusion.

20. In connection with these statements I feel bound to bring under the notice of your Honorable House the impediments in the way of prompt audit, caused by the negligence and inattention of some of the Public Accountants and certifying officers.

It

It has been held that owing to a defect in the wording of clause 29 of the Audit Act it is not competent for the Auditor General to raise, nor for the Colonial Treasurer to enforce, a surcharge until after the Audit Office queries and observations have been answered and further accounts and explanations have been rendered. Under this ruling it is obvious that a negligent officer has only to lay the Audit Office queries and observations on one side to render this important clause of the Act, in such cases, inoperative. A notable instance of this kind may be adduced where, as I have been informed, a Treasury Inspector found seventy-two unopened queries in the office of a late Police Magistrate and Clerk of Petty Sessions.

Another instance may be cited of a Returning Officer in whose favour an advance was made by the Treasury in the year 1877 to defray election expenses. The usual reminders, that accounts in adjustment of this advance had not been received and were required, were forwarded to this officer from month to month without the smallest effect, and they have remained to this day utterly unnoticed.

These are not the only instances of the neglect I have adverted to, but they are sufficient to afford to your Honorable House an idea of the impediments met with in the audit of the Public Accounts, where the certifying officers are negligent, obstructive, or dishonest.

See Appendix
H.

21. I append a schedule of payments made without warrants and disallowed in the Treasurer's Accounts.

Certificates of Discharge have been issued to the Treasurer for each month of the year, excepting the month of October. In that month occur three payments out of the Treasurer's Advance Account, for which no vouchers have been as yet furnished.

The entries in the cash sheets show the payments charged to be

G. Wakeford .. .. .	£50 0 0
J. Young .. .. .	£247 14 10
Exhibition Commissioners .. .. .	£1,000 0 0

I have not yet been enabled to certify for the month of June, 1878, for the reason given in my Report on the accounts for that year. The necessary information is still wanting.

See Appendices I & J.

22. The usual statements of the receipt and expenditure under the Registration of Brands and Public Abattoirs Act, which are not separately shown in the Treasurer's Statements are given in the Appendix.

23. I have to report that the accounts of the Government Savings Bank for the past year have been examined and certified, and that the Bullion Accounts of the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint have undergone the usual examination.

24. A specification of the net liabilities of the Consolidated Revenue Fund proper for 1879, so far as appropriated to the end of the year, will be found under Appendix K, in continuation of similar Returns furnished with previous Reports.

25. Subject to the foregoing observations it only remains for me to certify that the Statements herewith forwarded are found to agree with the Accounts furnished to me under the provisions of the Audit Act.

Case for the opinion of the Honorable the Attorney General.

By section 14 of the Audit Act of 1870 the Treasurer is required to obtain from the persons to whom moneys are payable, acquittances "under their hands" or "those of their duly authorized agents or bankers."

By section 28 the Auditor General is directed to discharge the Treasurer "for all payments made * * * * accompanied by the receipts or acquittances of the respective persons to whom such payments have been so made."

In the examination of acquittances for payments by the Treasurer, with a view to the discharge prescribed by section 28, in cases where the acquittance of an agent or banker is proffered instead of that of the principal, is the Auditor General bound to satisfy himself that the payment to such agent or banker has been duly authorized?

I desire also to be advised whether the principle that may apply to direct payments by the Treasurer would be equally applicable to payments made by Public Officers as sub-agents of the Treasurer out of advances to them for the Public Service.

Department of Audit, 6th March, 1879.

C. ROLLESTON.

OPINION.

THE question submitted by the Auditor General's letter of 6/3/79 appears to be "what is the extent of his liability under the Audit Act in cases where he passes or rejects acquittances not signed by principals or authorised by them." But the case sent with the letter submits two questions. With reference to the first question "is the Auditor General bound to satisfy himself that payments mentioned in section 14 of the Audit Act are represented by acquittances of the duly authorized agents or bankers of the persons to whom the accounts in question were payable?" I am of opinion that the words "duly authorised" do not govern "bankers" but only "agents." The acquittance of a banker therefore with whom the account of the person in question was at the time of payment kept appears to be a sufficient exoneration of the Auditor General or Treasurer. Where however the acquittance is that of an agent such agents authority must in strictness be commensurate with the nature of the acquittance. A married woman may be her husband's agent in intendment of law for many purposes, but on the husband's death the relation of agent ceases with the coverture. In practice however probably no great danger would follow the acceptance of the widow's discharge for wages, &c., due to the deceased husband. Of course if the husband left a will the executor or executrix would be an ascertainable person. In this class of cases the discharge of the executor should be obtained.

In cases of intestacy no great danger need be apprehended where the amount to be paid is not large and it would obviously be very hard upon the widow to insist on her obtaining letters of administration before accepting her acquittance for the husband's wages or other sums due to him of a small amount.

If however the amount due to the deceased intestate is considerable (say over £50) I think the legal representative should be insisted on.

In answer to the second question I am of opinion that the Auditor General is not bound to satisfy himself that the payment has been made to the right banker or duly authorized agent; that responsibility must remain with the Treasury where letters of administration and other authorities to receive money may well be produced on payment which it would be impossible to retain and produce to the Auditor General.

I am further of opinion that the principle which should govern the discharge of payments made directly by the Treasurer should also apply to payments made by public officers as his sub-agents out of advances upon which they are authorised to draw.

I am directed by the Colonial Treasurer to request that the £750,000 appearing to the credit of the General Banking Account on the 15th July last, as a transfer from the London Banking Account, with one-quarter per cent. exchange premium thereon, may be credited as on the 9th of that month; and that the like sum of £750,000 be credited to the General Banking Account, as on the 9th August last, as a further transfer from London, together with one-quarter per cent. exchange premium on this sum.

In this case the Government agrees to leave the matter in dispute between the Treasury and the Bank, as to the interpretation of the 4th clause of the Bank Agreement under the head of "London Banking Account," to be determined by the gentlemen to whom both parties have consented to refer it, with the understanding that the Government and the Bank will be bound by their decision.

The Colonial Treasurer desires me to add that, on receiving an intimation from you that the credits have been made as required, he will be happy to afford you any information reasonably within his power, as to the probable course of the Government balances during the next six months.

STAMP DUTIES ACT OF 1880.

(REGULATIONS UNDER.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 44 Vict. No. 3, sec. 67.

The Treasury,

Sydney, 29th June, 1880.

REGULATIONS UNDER THE STAMP DUTIES ACT OF 1880.

HIS Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has been pleased to approve of the following Regulations, made in pursuance of the "Stamp Duties Act of 1880."

JAMES WATSON.

REGULATIONS.

1. The Stamp Office will be open to Licensed Distributors exclusively for the sale of stamps from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m., and to the Public generally for the issue of stamps from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. on every working day except Saturday, when the hours will be from 9 to 10 a.m., and from 10 a.m. to noon respectively.

2. All applications for stamps, excepting those from Clerks of Petty Sessions, Postmasters, and other Distributors of Stamps, must be made on the forms of Requisitions marked A, B, C, D, or E, appended hereto, and the stamps paid for in cash at the time of application; and a commission will be allowed at the time of payment at the rate of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. should any application amount to £50 and upwards.

3. Applications for Stamps amounting to less than Five Pounds from Distributors, and to less than Two Pounds from Postmasters and Clerks of Petty Sessions, will not be received. All such applications must be made on the special form hereto appended, and the stamps paid for in cash at the time of application, less  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. commission thereon.

4. No commission will be allowed on any stamp to be affixed or impressed on any executed instrument.

5. All persons requiring stamps impressed on paper or parchment must provide the paper or parchment, and distinctly mark such paper or parchment with the particular denomination of stamp they require, on or near the place they desire the same to be so impressed.

6. All persons desiring the opinion of the Commissioner as to the proper amount of duty necessary to be placed on any instrument must submit therewith a full statement in writing of every fact and circumstance affecting the liability of such instrument to duty, or the amount of duty chargeable thereon, and must, if required by the Commissioner, verify such statement on oath before a Justice of the Peace or a Commissioner for Affidavits, whereupon the Commissioner may assess the duty payable, and the instrument shall not be stamped otherwise than in accordance with such assessment.

7. All persons bringing instruments to be stamped after they have been executed must leave them with the Commissioner (together with a short abstract of the particulars of such instruments, i. e., the date, parties' names, and consideration money paid), in order that the Commissioner may determine what amount of duty or deficiency of duty is payable, and the amount of fine chargeable thereon; and on the applicants paying the fine and the amount of duty or deficiency of duty payable thereon, such instrument will be stamped with the stamps denoting the payment of such duty or deficiency of duty, and also with stamps denoting that such fines have been paid.

8. The Commissioner will not be answerable for any loss by reason of the stamped parchment or paper being obtained by a person not legally entitled thereto.

SPOILED STAMPS.

9. All spoiled stamps brought to the Stamp Office for allowance must be accompanied with the parchment or paper on which such stamps are affixed or impressed, and with an affidavit duly sworn, according to the form marked F, for which a receipt will be given, in the form marked G.

10. All spoiled stamps (if allowed), together with the parchment or paper on which the same are affixed or impressed, will be retained by the Commissioner.

11. All spoiled stamps (if not allowed), together with the parchment or paper on which they are affixed or impressed, will be returned to the party who left them, but the receipt given at the time they were left for allowance must be handed back.

12. Every receipt for spoiled stamps must be exchanged at the Stamp Office for an allowance ticket, according to the form marked H, within one calendar month from the date thereof; or the stamps left for allowance will be forfeited. The party tendering such receipt must particularize on the back thereof the stamps left for allowance.

13. The holder of every allowance ticket will, on tendering the same at the Treasury after the expiration of one calendar month from the date thereof, receive the sum therein specified. The party tendering such allowance ticket must however particularize on the back thereof the stamps left for allowance at the Stamp Office.

DUTIES ON ESTATES OF DECEASED PERSONS.

14. Every application for probate of will or letters of administration relating to the estate of any deceased person must at the time of lodging the same with the Prothonotary of the Supreme Court of New South Wales be accompanied with an affidavit, duly sworn, according to the form marked I, and an Inventory setting forth, in the form attached to such affidavit, the full particulars of the estate and effects of the deceased person, and also the debts and liabilities due by such deceased person at the time of his or her death.

BANKING COMPANIES.

15. Every Banking Company, at the time of furnishing the quarterly returns, under the Act 4th Vict. No. 13, must tender to the Commissioner a declaration, duly made, of the correctness of such return, according to the form marked J, and at the same time pay the duty assessed on such return, or incur the penalties imposed by the Act.

16. Banking Companies may sell stamps to their constituents when required in the ordinary course of business without first obtaining a license for the sale of stamps.

TRANSFER OF RUNS.

17. Every person tendering a transfer of a station or run, or of any interest therein, to be stamped, must accompany the same with a declaration (according to the form marked K) duly made, declaring to the fair and reasonable market value of such station or run, or interest therein, and at the same time pay the duty imposed by the Act.

(PETITION AGAINST—MAYOR OF INVERELL.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 20 January, 1880.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the Inhabitants of Inverell and the surrounding District,—

RESPECTFULLY SHOWETH:—

That your Petitioners have heard with regret the proposal of the Colonial Treasurer to impose excise duties upon sugar, tobacco, beer, and wine.

That they attribute in a great measure the existing low financial condition of the Colony to the excessive drain upon its resources by the importation of commodities that might be profitably produced at home.

That your Petitioners believe that all home industries should be left unhampered by any excise restrictions whatever.

That they would respectfully ask of your Honorable House to disallow the proposed excise duties upon sugar, beer, wine, and tobacco.

That they are of opinion that the fiscal deficiencies of the Colony chiefly result from the inordinate and unproductive expenditure of revenue upon the city of Sydney and the Metropolitan area.

That in view of the low financial condition of the Colony alluded to your Petitioners would respectfully suggest a judicious policy of retrenchment in all the Government Departments, which would obviate the necessity of any addition to the already too heavy burden of the producers of the Colony.

That for the furtherance of necessary reproductive works your Petitioners are confident that a more economical adjustment of the law relating to the unalienated Crown lands of the Colony would materially add to the fiscal resources of the people and thereby lighten the burdens of the taxpayers.

Your Petitioners therefore respectfully pray that your Honorable House, taking these premises into your wise consideration, will refuse to assent to the imposition of any excise duties on Colonial industries.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

For and on behalf of the residents of the town and district of Inverell.

Mayor.

---

To the Honorable the Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

GENTLEMEN,

We, the Inhabitants of Wallsend and Plattsburg, of the Colony of New South Wales, in Public Meeting assembled, desire to humbly petition your Honorable House against the proposal of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer to impose a tax on all coal, shale, wool, and live stock exported out of the Colony.

Your Petitioners, whilst admitting the necessity of increased taxation, respectfully beg to submit that the proposed tax will place the principal staple commodities of the Colony at a great disadvantage in the foreign markets, upon which they are principally depending for their support and maintenance, and thus act prejudicially to the best interests of the Colonists.

Your Petitioners are further of the opinion that there are other sources of taxation that would act more equitably and general in their operations.

Your Petitioners have no desire to dictate to your Honorable House, but would respectfully suggest that, as the deficit in the Revenue is principally caused by a falling off in the proceeds from sale of Crown Lands, that a Land Tax might now be judiciously imposed, securing to the Colony a Revenue that would not be fictitious nor fluctuating, and more equitable and general in its operations.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that your Honorable House will comply with the prayer of their Petition, and that either the proposal of the Honorable the Colonial Treasurer will be withdrawn or negatived by your Honorable House.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Signed on behalf of the Inhabitants of Wallsend,—

JOSEPH P. TYLER, Mayor.

Signed on behalf of the Inhabitants of Plattsburg,—

JAMES RICHARDSON, Mayor.

(PETITION AGAINST—COLLIERY-OWNERS AND IRONMASTERS AT LITHGOW.)

Received by the Legislative Assembly, 29 June, 1880.

To the Honorable Sir George Wigram Allen, Knight, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, and to the Members of the said Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Colliery-owners, Ironmasters, and others engaged in kindred pursuits at Lithgow,—

HUMBLY SHOWETH :—

That your Petitioners view with serious alarm the proposed imposition of a royalty or tax of sixpence per ton upon all coal raised within the Colony.

That your Petitioners submit for your consideration that such a tax upon coal, while affecting every industrial pursuit in the Colony, will most seriously prejudice the enterprise of your Petitioners, who have for many years been struggling to establish industries the operations of which demand, more than any other, the consumption of large quantities of fuel.

That your Petitioners have expended large sums in the importation and erection of plant, machinery, and buildings of a costly nature, for which up to the present time they have had no return.

That your Petitioners have adopted every means which the strictest economy could devise to secure success in their undertakings in the smelting of iron and copper and the manufacture of pottery.

That your Petitioners humbly submit the industries above indicated are such as it is of great importance to endeavour to establish in the Colony; and your Petitioners have every reason to believe, though their adventures have not hitherto secured a profitable return, that they may yet, by perseverance and the employment of further capital, be brought to a successful result.

That your Petitioners beg to impress upon your Honorable House that the attempt to establish new industries in a young country is surrounded by difficulties that do not harass or endanger enterprise in older established communities; that adverse circumstances, which would be deemed of trivial moment in the latter, often assume more serious proportions, and produce discouraging and disastrous effects in the former.

That your Petitioners humbly beg to assure your Honorable House that the imposition of such a tax as is proposed on coal will most seriously embarrass their operations; that in the case of iron-smelting alone, which is not yet covering the expenses of manufacture, the cost of production to one firm alone will be increased by from £1,500 to £2,000 annually, which the enterprise is unable to bear; and the other avocations of your Petitioners, though not to so great a degree, will be similarly embarrassed.

That your Petitioners, with great respect, beg to deny, in so far as they are concerned, the allegations made in support of the proposed tax that owners of collieries are in the enjoyment of special facilities and advantages supplied by the Government, for which they pay nothing, and humbly desire to record their protest against such a statement, as no facility or advantage has ever been obtained by western coal-owners for which full payment has not been exacted.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will take the prayer of this Petition into favourable consideration.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

CUSTOMS REGULATION ACT OF 1879.

(RULES MADE BY BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS.)

Presented to Parliament, pursuant to Act 42 Vic. No. 19, sec. 27.

The Treasury, New South Wales,
25th October, 1879.

THE following Rules, made by the Board of Commissioners under the "Customs Regulation Act of 1879," for the general conduct of all business in relation to the matters submitted to them, having been approved by me, are now published for general information, in conformity with the 27th section of the said Act.

JAMES WATSON.

RULES for the General Conduct of Business by the Commissioners of Customs; to regulate the Procedure upon the hearing of Disputes, Inquiries, and all Matters submitted to them in pursuance of the provisions of the "Customs Regulation Act 1879."

As to place and time of Meeting, &c.

Day and place of Ordinary Meeting.

1. The Commissioners will meet at the Custom House, or other appointed place of meeting, at Sydney, on Thursday in each week, at the hour of 10 a.m., or on such other days and at such other hours as occasion may require, and as they may fix, for the purposes of hearing and determining any complaint or dispute, or making any inquiry, or disposing of any other matter as to which they have jurisdiction or power to decide or report, or otherwise deal with under the provisions of the "Customs Regulation Act 1879."

Extraordinary Meetings.

2. In emergent cases admitting of no delay the Colonial Treasurer may convene an extraordinary meeting of the Commissioners, to be held at their usual place of meeting, if he is of opinion that the reasons for requiring such extraordinary meeting are sufficient to authorize its convention.

When day of Meeting falls on public holiday.

3. If the ordinary day of meeting shall happen to fall upon a public or proclaimed holiday, the Commissioners will meet on the day following, which is not such a holiday, at the customary hour.

Adjournment when quorum not present.

4. If within fifteen minutes after the prescribed or appointed time of holding any meeting a quorum shall not be present, the Commissioner present, or if there be none present, the Secretary to the Commissioners, shall adjourn the meeting to the next ordinary meeting day, unless the power of appointing a temporary Commissioner under section 29 of the said Act shall be duly exercised, and such temporary Commissioner shall be present.

Minutes, &amp;c., to be kept.

5. A proper record and minutes of the proceedings of the Commissioners shall be kept by the Secretary; and the minutes of the last preceding meeting of the Commissioners shall be confirmed or corrected, if erroneous, at the next or earliest possible subsequent meeting.

Secretary's duties.

6. The Secretary shall conduct the correspondence of the Commissioners, prepare the business paper for each meeting, and summon the Commissioners to attend every meeting other than the ordinary one.

As to disputes between importers and Customs officers upon the proper rates of import duty payable in respect of goods.

Deposit of amount of duty and entry.

7. An importer desiring to submit any such dispute to the determination of the Commissioners must first deposit with the Collector the amount of duty demanded by him, pass the required entry for the goods in respect of which such dispute has arisen, and within thirty days from the date of such deposit submit his written statement of the matter in dispute.

Form of statement.

8. Such statement must be legibly written, and be arranged in paragraphs, numbered consecutively. It should contain a succinct and precise statement of facts, and each paragraph should, when practicable, be confined to one substantial allegation. At the foot of such statement the complainant must attach his signature and the place and date.

Certificate of Collector.

9. No such statement will be received or considered by the Commissioners unless accompanied or indorsed by a certificate, under the hand of the Collector or other authorized officer of Customs, to the effect that the duty or duties demanded have been deposited with the Collector, and the required entry passed, in pursuance of the "Customs Regulation Act of 1879."

Procedure thereon.

10. The procedure for the hearing and determination of such complaint shall be in accordance with the general procedure hereinafter prescribed, except that instead of making an order the Commissioners shall give a certificate under their hands, addressed to the Colonial Treasurer, stating the decision arrived at.

Disallowance by Governor.

11. Before any such certificate shall be finally acted upon in pursuance of the 21st section of the said Act it shall be competent for the Governor to exercise his power of disallowance during a period of fourteen days after the transmission of a duplicate of such certificate to the Colonial Treasurer; and such duplicate shall be in every respect a counterpart of the original. A copy shall in all cases be handed to the importer if he demand it.

Record by Secretary.

12. The Secretary shall keep a full record of the particulars of all such disputes and of all such decisions thereupon.

Reference to Crown Law Officers.

13. In the event of one or more points of law being raised in the course of any such inquiry, which in the opinion of a majority of the Commissioners is, or are, of sufficient importance to justify an application to the Crown Law Officers for their opinion thereupon, it shall be lawful for the Commissioners to adjourn the further hearing of the matter until such opinion shall be obtained through the Colonial Treasurer.

Disputes between masters or owners of ships, importers, or exporters of goods, or their agents, and any officer of Customs.

- (1) With reference to the seizure or detention of any ship or goods.
- (2) With reference to any breach of the laws or regulations relating to the Customs.
- (3) Disputes and matters submitted by the Treasurer, Collector of Customs, or other person, under section 23 of the "Customs Regulation Act 1879."

Disputes and complaints, &c., how submitted.

14. Any person (hereinafter termed a "complainant") entitled under the 22nd or 23rd section of the "Customs Regulation Act of 1879" to bring any dispute or submit any complaint or other matter to the determination of the Commissioners must lodge with the Commissioners a written statement (hereinafter termed a "complaint") in which the nature and facts of the complaint or matter in dispute, and the name and residence of the person or persons complained against, the name, description, and other particulars of any vessel, and the nature and value of any goods in connexion with which the complaint is preferred or the dispute has arisen, must be clearly set forth, together with any other particulars relevant to the matter of such complaint or dispute. The complaint must be arranged in numbered paragraphs, and be signed by the complainant or by both or all parties to the dispute if they agree to submit any matter of dispute by way of joint reference.

Dispute submitted by Colonial Treasurer.

15. Disputes or other matters submitted for the determination of the Commissioners by the Colonial Treasurer, under the authority of the said Act, may be so submitted by an indorsement under his hand on the documents referring to such dispute or matter addressed to the Commissioners.

When complaint, &c., determined without calling evidence.

16. If the complainant and the person complained against, or if both parties to any dispute so submitted, shall consent in writing under their respective hands that the dispute or matter in question shall be determined by the Commissioners without calling or hearing any evidence on either side, the Commissioners may thereupon proceed to the determination of such dispute or matter, without taking any evidence, if in their opinion the written statement of the case or the documents submitted to them shall be sufficient to enable them to form a decision as to the matter in question without taking evidence in respect thereto. But no such consent shall have any such operation in respect of disputes or other matters involving the payment of duties or moneys claimed to be due to Her Majesty, or involving forfeiture or penalty, under the said Act, unless such consent be ratified by the Colonial Treasurer by writing under his hand.

Summons when to be issued.

17. Upon the lodgment of any such complaint as aforesaid any Commissioner may issue a summons under his hand and seal directed to the person complained against; and such summons shall state shortly the matter of the complaint, and shall require the party to whom it is so directed to appear before the Commissioners at the time and place therein mentioned.

Service of summons.

18. Every summons shall be served within a reasonable time before the hearing thereof, by a constable or peace officer, or other person, upon the person to whom it is so directed, by delivering the same to the party personally, or by leaving the same with some person for him at his last or most usual place of abode; and the constable or peace officer, or other person, who shall have served the same in manner aforesaid shall attend at the time and place in the said summons mentioned, to depose, if necessary, to the service of such summons.

When ex parte proceeding after summons may be had.

19. Where a summons has been issued, and upon the day and at the place appointed thereby for the appearance of the party summoned, such party fails to appear accordingly, if it be proved upon oath to the Commissioners then present such summons was duly served upon such party a reasonable time before the time appointed for his appearance as aforesaid, such Commissioners may proceed ex parte to the hearing of such complaint, and may determine the same as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if such party had personally appeared before him or them in obedience to the said summons.

Technical defects not allowed.

20. No objection shall be taken or allowed to any complaint or summons for any defect therein in substance or in form, or for any variance between it and the evidence adduced on the part of the complainant before the Commissioners; but if any such variance appear to such Commissioners to be such that the party complained against has been thereby deceived or misled, such Commissioners, at the request of such party, may adjourn the hearing of the complaint to some future day, and in the meantime may admit any person brought before them under warrant to bail with or without sureties.

Witness may be summoned.

21. If it be made to appear to any Commissioner, by the oath of any credible person, that any person is likely to give material evidence on behalf of the complainant or person complained against, and will not voluntarily appear for the purpose of being examined as a witness at the time and place appointed for the hearing of the complaint, such Commissioner shall issue his summons to such person, requiring him to be and appear at a time and place mentioned in such summons before the Commissioners, to testify what he knows concerning the matter of the said complaint.

Secretary of Commissioners may in certain cases postpone hearing.

22. If on the return of any summons, or at any adjournment of the hearing, or at the time to which the same may be postponed, there be not present a quorum of the Commissioners, the Secretary to the Commissioners shall, at the request of the complainant, postpone the hearing until the next day at which a sitting of the Commissioners will be held at the place mentioned in such summons; and every such postponement shall be made by delivering to both parties, or such of them as shall be present, as well as to any witness named by such complainant, a memorandum to that effect.

Witness to attend at adjourned hearing.

23. Every witness to whom a copy of any such memorandum is delivered shall attend at the time and place therein mentioned, and shall be subject to the same obligations and liabilities as if such memorandum were a summons issued by a Justice requiring such person to testify what he knows concerning the matter of an information or complaint.

Hearing to be with open doors, and counsel or attorney may be heard.

24. The hearing of any such dispute, matter, or inquiry, shall be conducted in the room or place appointed in that behalf, with open doors, so that the public may have access thereto, so far as such room or place can conveniently contain them; and the party against whom such complaint is made shall be admitted to make his full answer thereto, and to have the witnesses examined and cross-examined by counsel or attorney on his behalf; and every complainant in any such case shall be at liberty to conduct such complaint and to have the witnesses examined and cross-examined by counsel.

Procedure where party complained against is not present at hearing.

25. Where at the day and place appointed in the summons for hearing and determining any complaint the party complained against does not appear when called, the constable or other person who served him with the summons in that behalf shall then declare upon oath in what manner he served the said summons; and if it appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioners that he duly served the said summons, such Commissioners may proceed to hear and determine the matter in the absence of such party.

Procedure where complainant is not present at time of hearing.

26. If upon the day and at the place so appointed the party complained against attends voluntarily in obedience to the summons served upon him, but the complainant does not appear, by himself, his counsel or attorney, the Commissioners shall dismiss such complaint, unless for some reason they think proper to adjourn the hearing of the same to some other day upon such terms as they think fit.

Where both parties are present case to be heard.

27. If both parties appear, either personally or by their respective counsel or attorneys, before the Commissioners, such Commissioners shall proceed to hear and determine the same.

Procedure at hearing when the facts are admitted.

28. Where the party complained against is present at the hearing the substance of the complaint shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he have any cause to show why an order should not be made against him; and if he thereupon admit the truth of such information or complaint, and show no cause, or no sufficient cause, or why an order should not be made against him, the Commissioners shall make such order against him as they may deem just.

Proceedings at hearing when the facts are not admitted.

29. If the party complained against do not admit the truth of such complaint, then the Commissioners shall proceed to hear the complainant and such witnesses as he may examine, and such other evidence as he may adduce in support of his complaint, and also to hear the party complained against, and such witnesses as he may examine, and such other evidence as he may adduce in his defence; and also to hear such witnesses as the complainant may examine in reply, if such party have examined any witnesses or given any evidence; but the complainant shall not be entitled to make any observations in reply upon the evidence given by the party complained against, nor shall such party be entitled to make any observations in reply upon the evidence given by the complainant in reply as aforesaid; and every witness at any such hearing shall be examined upon oath, and the said Commissioners having heard what each party has to say as aforesaid, and the witnesses and evidence so adduced, shall consider the whole matter and determine the same, and shall make such order against the party complained against, or dismiss the complaint, or make such other adjudication, or give such other decision as they may think just and the facts of the case may appear to them to warrant.

As to forms, &c.

30. Until special forms shall be framed by the Commissioners all summonses, affidavits, adjudications, orders, and any other proceedings and process required for the purposes of the "Customs Regulation Act 1879" or of these Rules, may be framed in accordance with the respective forms contained in the Schedule to the Act 11 & 12 Vic. cap. 43, as adopted by the 14 Vic. No. 43, as such forms were adopted and settled at the Quarter Sessions holden at Sydney on the 13th June, 1851. But all such forms may be adopted and modified to suit the respective purposes for which the same shall be required.

No. 1.

The Chief Secretary, South Australia, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Chief Secretary's Office, Adelaide, 17 July, 1879.

I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that the Customs Convention between New South Wales and South Australia expires at the end of the present year, and to state that this Government will be happy to receive and consider any proposal for a renewal of the arrangement which has so largely facilitated the free interchange of articles between the two Colonies.

Closely allied to this subject is that of a Customs Union, upon which we have exchanged views. Probably you may be able to deal with both questions at the same time.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM MORGAN.

Minute by the Colonial Secretary.

The Colonial Treasurer.—I shall be glad if Mr. Watson will give some consideration to the relations between this Colony and South Australia, as affected by the existing Convention, and confer with me on the subject, before I reply to this letter.—H.P., 25/7/79. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade, B.C., 25 July, 1879.—C.W.

No. 2.

Minute by The Colonial Treasurer.

The South Australian Border Duties Convention.

I SHALL be glad to have, with as little delay as possible, with a view to enable a decision to be arrived at, as to the amount which should be paid by the South Australian to this Government for goods crossing the Border or entering this Colony, a return showing the goods which have entered this Colony by the Murray or across the Border from South Australia, with the amount of duty which would have been levied on the same for the half-years from 1st January to 30th June, from 1st July to 31st December, 1878, and from 1st January to 30th June, 1879, separately; and also all goods (if any) which have entered South Australia from this Colony by the same means, with the amount of duty which would have been levied on the same; and at same time I shall be glad to have reports from the Officers stationed at the Border, whether there is likely to be an increase or decrease on the goods arriving in this Colony, or vice versa. As this information is urgently required, I should like to have the Officers directed by wire to prepare the return.

J.W.

The Collector of Customs.—G.E., 1/8/79, B.C., Urgent. Telegram to Wentworth, 2/8/79.—A.B.

No. 3.

The Collector of Customs, Sydney, to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade,

Sir,

Custom House, Sydney, 21 August, 1879.

I do myself the honor to forward herewith, returns called for in Treasury Minute No. 84 of 31st July last, relating to dutiable imports from and exports to South Australia via the River Murray or across the Border. Also, a report on the subject from Mr. D. J. M'Kenry, the Sub-Collector of Customs at Wentworth.

I have, &c.,

A. BERNEY,

Acting Collector of Customs.

Minute by the Colonial Treasurer.

The amount which this Colony would have received in the year 1878, had there been no Convention, was £65,391 4s. 9d., while for the first six months of the present year the amount which this Government should have received £19,253 14s. 10d., less a very small amount for exports of dutiable goods from this colony to South Australia. It will thus be seen that this colony has not received sufficient under the Convention to compensate for the loss to the revenue. Having in view the improved prospects of trade with South Australia, and the natural growth of the country, I think we should receive at least £45,000 for next year, and the agreement should not be made for longer than one year.—J.W., 3/11/79. The Under Secretary, Colonial Secretary's Department, B.C., G.E., 4/11/79.

The Sub-Collector of Customs, Wentworth, to The Collector of Customs, Sydney.

Sir, Customs, Wentworth, 9 August, 1879.
In accordance with instructions, as per telegram of the 2nd instant, I have the honor to transmit you the accompanying returns, which I trust will afford the required information regarding our South Australian trade via Wentworth and the Murray River.

Returns A and B give a detailed account of our dutiable imports for the first and second half years of 1878 respectively.

Return C, total duty value of our imports for 1878, equal £65,423 17s. 9d.

Return D, shows the duty value from the same source as above to equal £19,253 14s. 10d. for the half year ended 30th June last, 1879; and as orders for the second period in each year always exceed those introduced during the first period, I fully anticipate our total imports from South Australia in 1879 to be equal in duty value to between £40,000 and £45,000.

Regarding our exports to South Australia, the only articles liable to their tariff and introduced into that territory during 1878, and from the 1st January to 30th June, 1879, were those mentioned in Returns E and F respectively.

Excepting earthenware, the other articles mentioned in Returns E & F were only of recent introduction into this Colony when returned again into South Australia, whence they were originally exported.

With reference to the deficiency that no doubt will exist in this compared with last year's imports, I beg to submit the following explanation, which I have no doubt will fully account for and bear out the accuracy of my records:—

The Darling River in 1877 was unnavigable for fully ten months in that year, and, as a consequence, a great many orders for supplies remained unfulfilled.

In 1878 the Darling was navigable nearly the whole of the season. The unfulfilled orders for the previous year were promptly executed, and the general imports attained unprecedented proportions.

This year (1879) the Banks are not only pressing for payments but actually refuse further advances; hence the depression of trade and consequent deficiency in our imports this year compared with last year's returns.

The duty values of our imports from South Australia, in 1876, 1877, and 1878, were respectively £46,310, £30,000, and £65,423. Now the mean of the above amounts is equal to £47,244, equal yearly duty value of our imports from 1876 to 1878 inclusive.

Now, I beg to hand you another Return, marked G and H, which shows the gradual development of our South Australian River fleet and consequent increase of trade.

There is one matter, and a very serious one too, which I would respectfully beg to draw your attention to, and that is the reckless practice in operation in South Australia of shipping large consignments of goods to this Colony without being manifested, which, if not discovered, would tend to show that our imports were far below their real magnitude. I have been informed that the South Australian Customs seldom exercise any supervision of goods for Wentworth, excepting those ex "Warehouse under bond."

I have repeatedly complained of the above-mentioned irregularities to the South Australian Customs' authorities, and although amendments are promised the practice so justly complained of still remains in operation.

Conjoined with facts already mentioned, our population increasing, stores and other business premises multiplied, and others in course of erection, our trade must not only extend but advance far beyond its already important dimensions.

I beg to state that the information embodied in the accompanying returns has received my closest attention and consideration, and I can conscientiously vouch for its accuracy.

I have, &c.,
D. J. M'KENRY,
Sub-Collector.

Memorandum.

[AFTER the receipt at the Treasury of Mr. McKenry's letter, on the 22nd August, some little time elapsed without arriving at a decision upon the Custom House returns, transmitted to Sydney by that officer, as to the sum which would equitably represent the value of the Border duties in any new agreement. The returns showing £65,423 17s. 3d. for the year 1878, and £19,253 14s. 10d. for the first half-year of 1879, were felt to be, in some measure, perplexing. A letter, however, would have been addressed to the South Australian Government not later than October, embodying the results of the enquiry which had been made, and the views of the Government of New South Wales on the subject; but it became known that the Chief Secretary of South Australia was about to visit Sydney, and on the 6th November he arrived. Mr. Morgan had a hurried interview with the Colonial Secretary, but left on the following day for Noumea, and the business respecting the Border duties was postponed at his suggestion until his return. Mr. Morgan returned from Noumea on the 2nd December, and left Sydney on his return to Adelaide on the 4th. During his short stay in Sydney, it was submitted to him that the Government was prepared to execute a new agreement on the basis that the sum to be paid to New South Wales should be increased to £40,000 for the year 1880, but that the agreement could not be made for a longer period than one year. Throughout Sir Henry Parkes acted in consultation with Mr. Watson, and the two Ministers finally agreed in submitting these terms, as Mr. Morgan was at the time informed.]

Minute for the Colonial Treasurer,— Colonial Secretary's Office, 6 May, 1880.
I HAVE informed the Government of South Australia that on and after the 1st day of June proximo, this Government will collect the Border duties according to law. Mr. Watson will therefore be good enough to see that the necessary arrangements are made for their collection from that date.

It is possible, but I do not think it is probable, that some attempt may be made to pass large quantities of some dutiable article in anticipation of the law being again put in force. Every precaution will, of course, be taken to obtain a knowledge of, and frustrate any transaction of this character.

LETTER on subject of Border Duties posted this day.

No. 14.
The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, to The Chief Secretary, South Australia.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 6 May, 1880.

With reference to your interview with me at the beginning of the year, and to subsequent telegrams on the subject of a renewal of the Convention for the non-collection of the Border Duties, I have now the honor to inform you that this Government has finally decided to collect the duties, according to law, on and after the 1st day of June proximo.

2. I explained to you when you were in Sydney the basis upon which the Government of New South Wales was at that time prepared to make a new Convention; but I then understood you to say that you desired to consult your Treasurer before joining in the agreement, and I certainly expected an early communication from you, stating your concurrence in or your dissent from the terms I proposed. It did not appear to me that after our conversation it was necessary for me to submit any written proposal until I was definitely informed of your views.

3. The course of subsequent events has given rise to questions of policy, which render it inexpedient in the interests of this colony to make any new Convention at the present time. A long period has now elapsed since the first Convention was entered into with South Australia, and the progress of both Colonies in settlement and the material elements which contribute to revenue has since been considerable. It is felt that the data derived from the transactions of former years can no longer be relied upon, and that it is the duty of this Government to ascertain the value of its Border revenue, at least for a time, by actual collection. This course is rendered the more necessary by recent legislation, which increases the duties on articles largely imported overland from South Australia into New South Wales.

I have, &c.,

HENRY PARKES.

The Border Duties Convention with South Australia.

7 May, 1880.

THE Government having come to the determination to cancel the temporary Convention with the Government of South Australia for the non-collection of Border duties, and the necessary notice having been given to the South Australian Government that such Convention will terminate on and after the 1st day of June proximo, it will be necessary that the Collector of Customs should make the necessary arrangements for the collection of duties payable on all goods entering this Colony across the Border, or otherwise, from South Australia.

It is possible, but I do not think it probable, that an attempt may be made, in anticipation of the law being again put in force, to pass large quantities of dutiable articles across the Border, and the Collector of Customs should inform the officers of the Border to see that this is not done, and if any attempt is made to pass any large quantity of dutiable articles across before the 1st day of June, the officers should be directed to communicate with the Collector of Customs before admitting the goods, but unless the quantity is very much beyond the average I do not wish that unnecessary obstacles should be thrown in the way of trade.

It might be desirable to communicate the purport of this minute to the officers on the Border by telegram.

I HAVE received your letter of 6th May, and must express my great surprise that almost the first tangible reply received in this office to my numerous communications should convey the information that your Government intend not to carry out the agreement, even as to the terms of the Convention, which were definitely settled between us, the only question left open being as to whether the time should be one year or two. The Chief Secretary, South Australia, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Chief Secretary's Office, Adelaide, 14 May, 1880.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, stating that your Government has finally decided to collect the River Murray Duties according to law on and after the 1st proximo, which letter I have acknowledged by telegram this day, expressing my great surprise that almost the first tangible reply received to my numerous communications should convey the information that your Government intend not to carry out the agreement (even as to the terms of the Convention which were definitely settled between us), the only question left open being as to whether the time should be one year or two.

Before discussing the reasons assigned for the change in the views of your Government on this question, it may be convenient to bring to your recollection that on the 17th July last I invited your attention to the fact that the Customs Convention would expire on the 31st December following, and that this Government would be happy to receive and consider any proposal for a renewal of the arrangements which had so largely facilitated the free interchange of articles between the two colonies.

Not having received any reply to that communication, I telegraphed to you on the subject on the 30th August, requesting early consideration, and again on the 9th and 28th October.

Failing to receive any reply I was requested by my colleagues to confer with you during my visit to Sydney in December, and when in Melbourne, on my return, I telegraphed on the 10th December as follows to my colleague the Treasurer:—"The Colonial Secretary, Sydney, will write about the Border Treaty. Meantime he will give instructions that the present arrangement is to go on till a new one is made." And on my arrival in Adelaide I reported to my colleagues in writing the following terms, viz.: "When in Sydney the other day I saw Sir Henry Parkes, and after some conversation we agreed that the Convention should be renewed on payment by South Australia of £40,000 a year. A question then arose as to the time of the continuance of the new Convention. I suggested two or three years. Sir Henry Parkes said he was in favour of two years himself, but that the Treasurer, Mr. Watson, was of opinion that the renewal should only be for one year. Sir Henry Parkes said he would talk further with him, and write to this Government officially, and that till the question was settled the present arrangement could go on, and that the Customs authorities of New South Wales would be instructed accordingly."

Conformably with our arrangement the Convention which expired in December has been continued in its operation up to the present time with the exception of the increased duties under your new tariff.

On the 14th February last I reminded you by telegram that we were still without your "promised proposal."

We were informed on the 18th March that the Collector of Customs at Wentworth required the increased duties under your tariff to be paid, whereupon I telegraphed to you that such action was contrary to the arrangement made for the renewal of the Convention.

You replied on 19th March as follows:—"With reference to your Message of this date I must remind you that when I submitted terms to you in Sydney for a renewal of Convention, you replied that as I required to consult our Treasurer you must also consult your Treasurer, and that you would therefore send your final answer from Adelaide. Since you left Sydney I have received no communication from you on the subject, and we do not consider that our terms have been accepted. Letter by post."

On the next day I forwarded you following telegram:—"In reply to your telegram of yesterday, I have a distinct recollection that the only point open was that of the duration of the new Convention, and that you promised to write making proposition after consulting your Treasurer. Moreover, I reminded you in my telegram of 14th February, of which I have no acknowledgment, that we were still without proposition. It was unnecessary for me to consult my Treasurer, as Cabinet had placed the matter in my hands for settlement. I await your promised letter. Meanwhile, please instruct Wentworth Collector."

On the 8th of April I wired you that your promised letter had not reached me, neither any reply to my telegram of 20th March, and that differential duties were still being collected at Wentworth, and I again, on 3rd instant, telegraphed requesting as early a reply as possible.

It was only this day I received your communication now under acknowledgment, which was read with great surprise by myself and my colleagues, it being the first intimation of any change of views on the part of your Government with reference to the Convention.

It was not until the receipt of your telegram of 19th March that I was made acquainted you were expecting a proposal from this Government, and from the fact that I had asked you for your "promised proposal" five weeks previously, I remained under the impression that I should receive a proposition from you as regarded the "term" of the new Convention.

Although that telegram intimated that your Government did not consider that its terms had been accepted, it did not say what those terms were; neither does your letter since received; nor do you state whether your recollection of the basis of the agreement which at that time your Government were prepared to make is different from mine.

With regard to paragraph three of your letter, this Government regrets to learn "that the course of subsequent events in New South Wales has given rise to questions of policy which render it inexpedient in its interests to make any new Convention at the present time." They believe that a return to the old system of collection of duties at Wentworth will be exceedingly detrimental to both colonies by retarding settlement on the lines of water communication, and will be highly injurious to the great interests which are embarked in the river trade, now assuming very large dimensions.

This Government have always, and are still prepared to agree to such terms, and to make such arrangements as will obviate loss to the New South Wales revenue by the action of any Convention.

Reliable data is available here for ascertaining the value of your Border revenue, accurate records having been preserved by the Customs authorities, any suggestions for the improvement of which will be readily considered.

In conclusion, I have to express the earnest hope that your Government will reconsider their decision, and agree to a temporary continuation of the Convention until the close of the present year on payment of £40,000 per annum, by which time I trust a new Convention may be satisfactorily arranged.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM MORGAN.

As you were informed by my letter of 6th instant, we purpose collecting the Duties to-morrow, and all arrangements have been made to that end. Your letter of the 14th has been received, and reply will be forwarded in a day or two.

No. 20.

The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, to The Chief Secretary, South Australia.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 3 June, 1880.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 14th May.

2. In reply, I desire to say that your telegraphic messages* of the 17th July, and subsequent dates last year, referring to the expiration of the Convention between South Australia and this Colony on the 31st December following, did not appear to press for immediate attention. Even on the last of the dates given, namely, the 28th October, there was ample time for you to have explained the views of your Government by letter on a question so important as the renewal of the Convention, in which I think you will admit the interests of South Australia are much more largely concerned than the interests of New South Wales. The Customs returns of South Australia must have shown you that, if the duties had been collected in 1878, this Colony would have received £65,423 instead of £35,000. Under these circumstances it did not seem to be necessary that the first proposal for a new Convention should proceed from this Government.

3. When at a later period you visited Sydney and did me the honor of calling upon me, it was pointed out to you that the returns showed that this Colony was sustaining a loss by the terms of the Convention. With a view however to meet the wishes of South Australia, and in consideration that the returns for 1879 were not likely to range so high as those of the previous year, it was proposed on the part of this Government that the Convention should be renewed for one year, on the condition that the sum payable by South Australia should be increased to £40,000. A new Convention might have been made on the spot embodying this proposal, but this you certainly declined to do at that time. In our several conversations I had informed you that I was acting in consultation with the Colonial Treasurer, and your last remark to me on the proposal submitted was that, "As I had consulted my Treasurer you must consult your Treasurer also." I readily assented to this course being taken by you, as I felt that this Government was not the party to the arrangement most interested in its completion.

4. I consented, as you observe, that the Convention should be virtually continued until the matter was finally settled between the Colonies; but I heard nothing more from you until I received your telegraphic message in February last "reminding me," as you phrase it, "that you were still without proposition" from this Government, whereas I had definitely informed you several weeks before that we were prepared to execute a new Convention on the terms proposed.

5. I refrain from offering any remark on this message, which seemed to ignore all that had taken place between us in Sydney.

I have, &c.,
HENRY PARKES.

* The communication of the 17th July was a short letter, not a telegram.

No. 1.

The Chief Secretary, South Australia, to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

Chief Secretary's Office, Adelaide, 19 June, 1880.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 3rd instant, in reply to mine of the 14th ultimo, on the subject of our recent negotiations for a renewal of the River Murray Customs Convention.

With regard to paragraph 2 of your letter, permit me to point out that my communication to you of 17th July, 1879, was by letter and not by telegraph, as erroneously stated; whilst my subsequent telegrams asked for a reply to that letter, which solicited a "proposal" from you "for a renewal of the arrangement which had so largely facilitated the free interchange of articles between the two Colonies."

I will at once admit that the renewal of the Convention was important to South Australia, but probably it was even more important to the settlers in Riverina.

It is true that this Government did not make any detailed proposal, but it expressed its desire by letter to renew the Convention, and requested a proposition from your Government—a request which was repeated by three telegraphic messages prior to my interview with you in December last. Of those interviews I have a very distinct recollection, and at the risk of being tedious I will state the times of our interviews and the substance of what took place. I arrived in Sydney on Tuesday, 2nd December. On the following morning I called at your office, but I am not certain whether I saw you. It certainly was either on the Wednesday or Thursday following that we had our first interview, at which you discussed the matter in hand in what appeared to me a most friendly spirit. I explained that the South Australian Government did not want to make a profit out of the Convention, nor, on the other hand, did they think they should be called upon to lose money by paying an excessive amount. In answer to your question I stated that although, during some of the years embraced in previous Conventions, we had received more than the amount paid, yet there were signs of a great falling off in the trade, and that it was pretty well known the stocks on the river were very large. As the result of that meeting you promised to confer with your Treasurer, and requested me to call again, which I did on Friday morning. You then informed me you had talked the matter over with Mr. Watson, and that you were prepared to take £45,000 per annum. I replied that, considering all the circumstances, I thought that sum excessive, but that I would at once consent to the sum being fixed at £40,000. You almost immediately said, "I will take it," and you added, "And really I am a very easy man to deal with." The amount being thus settled I then asked for what period the Convention should be concluded, suggesting three years, but you replied you considered that too long, and that Mr. Watson was in favour of one year, although personally you yourself preferred two. I then suggested that you should confer with Mr. Watson again.

You at once acquiesced, saying you would see him in the course of the day, and it was arranged that I should call upon you again the next morning (Saturday). I did call, but you expressed your regret that you had been unable to confer with Mr. Watson, and as I had to leave Sydney that morning by the "Wotonga," you promised you would write me early on the point left open, viz., the term.

The telegram I forwarded to my colleague from Melbourne, the minute I penned on my arrival in Adelaide (when the matter was fresh in my memory), and my telegrams to you, of 14/2/80 and 18/3/80, all clearly show that this was the view I took of the arrangement. As I have already informed you, there was no necessity for me to consult my Treasurer, as Cabinet had placed the matter in my hands for settlement. As a matter of fact, however, when I was in Sydney, negotiations were going on in London for the issue of a large South Australian loan; my colleague telegraphed to me for my advice and opinion as to the terms on which the loan should be issued; and as those messages were passing to and fro, I incidentally asked his advice, and informed him of what I proposed to do in the matter of the Murray Convention, and asked if he concurred, which he did. Being invested with full authority in the matter, I was in a position to conclude an agreement on the spot, and the only barrier which existed was your disinclination to agree to the term without first consulting your Treasurer.

Reviewing the whole of the correspondence, it will be seen that a misunderstanding between us as to who should take the initiative in the negotiations as to the term of the new Convention—for as to the amount to be paid it is admitted we had agreed—has resulted in those negotiations failing to accomplish the object sought to be attained.

It is with much pleasure that this Government recall the friendliness and cordiality which has hitherto characterized negotiations between the two Governments, not only on this but on other subjects, and they exceedingly regret that after one of two points, and that the more important, had been mutually and satisfactorily settled, a mere misunderstanding as to which Colony should renew negotiations in the other point has led to the resumption of the old system of collecting duties on river-borne goods.

My recollection of our last interview induces me to believe that you will reciprocate the regret I have expressed, and to hope that your Government may yet see their way clear to renew the arrangement which has been in operation for some years past, and which has, without doubt, tended very largely to foster the development of the Riverina trade.

I repeat that there is no desire on the part of this Government to treat the question in a commercial spirit by endeavouring to secure terms that would deprive New South Wales of any portion of the revenue she would otherwise derive from a full collection of duties, and should you after the assurances and explanations which have now been given (especially in view of the fact that recent negotiations miscarried, owing to a simple misunderstanding) feel disposed to open up the question again, this Government will be happy to receive and discuss any proposition you may make, with a view to facilitate trade between the two Colonies by way of the River Murray and across the boundary.

Any information in the possession of this Government with regard to the past trade on the river will be cheerfully placed at your disposal.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM MORGAN.

The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales, to The Chief Secretary, South Australia.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 July, 1880.

In acknowledging the due receipt of your letter of the 19th June, in reference to the circumstances which have led to the collection of the Customs duties on the Border between this Colony and South Australia, I have the honor to inform you that I immediately placed your communication before the Colonial Treasurer, with a request that he would state how far his recollection agreed with mine of the negotiations in December last.

2. I regret that we cannot concur in the accuracy of your recollection of what took place in your interviews with me when you were in Sydney. All my definite communications to you had been previously agreed upon between Mr. Watson and myself, and it is scarcely possible that I could have advanced or admitted anything at variance with what we had agreed upon in this deliberate manner. I readily admit, however, that in some matters I am not free from blame, while I venture to think that you have fallen into some unintentional errors. The question of who is most in the right or the wrong in respect to these subordinate considerations is of little moment, and it would be of little profit to discuss it further. I regret with you that any misunderstanding should have arisen.

3. It is with pleasure that I reciprocate your expressions of friendly feeling, and I assure you that this Government has no desire inconsistent with the maintenance of the most cordial relations between the two Colonies. While feeling bound to use every care and precaution to secure to New South Wales the full amount of revenue which accrues to her under the operation of our revenue laws, we have no wish to obtain the slightest undue advantage in our relations with any of the neighbouring Colonies of Australia.

4. I accept your assurances and explanations in the spirit in which they are offered, and I feel satisfied that the termination of the Customs agreement between the two Colonies is attributable in part simply to a misunderstanding. At the same time I cannot conceal from you, what is a well-informed conviction of this Government, that the circumstances of New South Wales as affecting the condition of the Border districts are rapidly changing, and that the extension of railway communication will largely influence the course of trade, and lead to the growth of new interests in the settlement of distant parts of the Colony. In view of these changes it seems no more than prudent and just to ascertain by the only means which can be conclusive and satisfactory, the value and extent of our Border traffic; and, as we have now returned to the collection of the Customs duties, I cannot see, however I may regret it, that this Government can with propriety open fresh negotiations for the cessation of the system of collection at the present time.

I have, &c.,

HENRY PARKES.

 Adverting to my letter No. 339-77 of the 18th October, 1877, relative to the duty on Australian wines, I have now the honor to submit herewith a copy of a further letter, dated 25th instant, which I have addressed to the Secretary of State for the Colonies on this subject. Downing-street, 12 May, 1879.

I have the honor to transmit to you, for the information of your Government, a copy of a letter which I have caused to be addressed to the Agent General, requesting him to take steps for the representation of the interests of the producers of wine in New South Wales before the Select Committee which has been appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into the question of the wine duties in this country.

I also enclose a copy of the reply I have received from Mr. Forster, together with a copy of my answer thereto.

The Colonial Office to The Agent General for New South Wales.

Sir,

Downing-street, 25 April, 1879.

I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to acquaint you that a Committee has been appointed by the House of Commons "to inquire into the system under which Customs duties are now levied in this country on wine, and into its bearing on the fiscal and commercial interests of the country," and that at the instance of Her Majesty's Government the Committee will consider the question in relation to Colonial as well as Foreign wines.

Sir M. Hicks-Beach is not aware whether you have such instructions from your Government as would enable you to make arrangements for the representation of the interests of the producers of wines in New South Wales before the Committee, and if you are not fully authorized you may think it proper to communicate with the Government of the Colony by telegraph to ascertain their wishes in the matter. In the event of your being in a position to do so it will be advisable for you to communicate with the Committee Clerk at the House of Commons.

I am to add, that a similar letter has been addressed to the Agent General for South Australia and also to Mr. Graham Berry.

I have, &amp;c.,

R. H. MEADE.

The Agent General to The Colonial Office.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 5 May, 1879.

In reply to the Honorable Robert Meade's letter of the 25th ultimo, informing me that the Committee of the House of Commons, appointed to inquire into the system under which Customs duties are now levied on wine, will consider the question in relation to Colonial as well as Foreign wines, and asking me whether I have such instructions from my Government as would enable me to make arrangements for the representation, before the Committee, of the interests of the producers in New South Wales,—I have the honor to state that, although I am obliged by your suggestions of communicating with the Government of New South Wales by telegraph, it yet does not appear to me necessary to act upon it, because I feel myself quite as fully authorized as I could possibly be by any further communication from the Colony, and I am quite prepared to appear on behalf of New South Wales, and to place before the Committee all the information, which is in possession either of myself or of the Government of New South Wales, on the subject. I shall therefore communicate with the Committee Clerk of the House of Commons as you advised.

I have the honor further to call your attention to the suggestion in my letter of 25th March last, that the correspondence on this subject should be laid before the Committee.

I have, &amp;c.,

WILLIAM FORSTER.

The Colonial Office to The Agent General.

In reply to your letter of the 5th instant, I am directed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to inform you that all the correspondence which has passed with this department upon the subject of the incidence of the wine duties upon wines produced in the Australian Colonies is already in the possession of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and that the Select Committee which has been appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into the subject of the wine duties is in communication with their Lordships as to the production of such papers upon the subject as the Committee may think necessary.

The Agent General to The Colonial Secretary, New South Wales.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 22 May, 1879.

I have the honor to inform you that having ascertained that a Select Committee of the House of Commons had been appointed to inquire into the system under which Customs duties are now levied in this country on wine, and its bearing on the fiscal and commercial interests of the country, I thought it my duty to communicate with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and afterwards, under his direction, with the said Committee, with the object of having the interests of New South Wales in the question of wine duties, duly represented before the Select Committee. I took this course partly upon general grounds and partly with special reference to my previous correspondence and action in the matter of these duties. I have the honor to enclose herewith the correspondence which ensued, and to report that on the 16th instant I was examined before the Committee. The report of my evidence, and of whatever steps the Committee may have taken or may take in the matter, I shall of course do myself the honor to forward with the least possible delay whenever they can be obtained.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

The Colonial Treasurer.—H.P., 9/7/79. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.—C.W., B.C., 9 July, /79. I have laid your letter of May 5 to Mr. Eales before the Select Committee on wine duties.

They have not decided whether it will be necessary or desirable to examine more than two witnesses whom they have summoned for their information on Colonial wine duties at their next meeting on Friday, namely, Sir William Milne and Sir Arthur Blyth. If your evidence, or that of the gentlemen whom you mention in your letter, should be required, I will not fail to give you full notice of the time for your attendance.

The Agent General to The Clerk of Committees.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, S.W., 9 May, 1879.

I have the honor to express my regret at observing in Mr. Stone's communication of the 7th instant that it is doubtful whether any witnesses from, or interested in, the Australian Colonies will be examined before the Select Committee on wine duties other than Sir William Milne and Sir Arthur Blyth, which will in fact amount to a practical refusal, on the part of the Committee, to hear evidence from, or to permit the claims and interests of, other Australian Colonies than those of South Australia to be represented before them in a matter which the Committee has been specially appointed to consider, and in which all the other Australian Colonies are more or less deeply interested, and are subject to, what they regard as, a grievous injustice from the effects of Imperial legislation.

The Committee do not seem to be aware, and accordingly I have the honor to submit for their information copy of a Colonial Office letter, showing that I have been authorized and urged to move in this matter by the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies. 25th April, 1879.

Upon merely personal grounds I shall be glad to be relieved of the duty of attendance upon the Committee, but I have the honor to submit my claims and those of other competent witnesses to be heard on behalf of the Colony which I have the honor to represent in England, and I shall regret to be obliged to report to my Government that these claims have been treated with neglect or indifference by an Imperial authority duly constituted to take them into consideration.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

Mr. G. J. Stone to The Agent General.

Sir,

House of Commons, 10 May, 1879.

I will not fail to submit your letter of the 9th instant to the Select Committee on wine duties at the next meeting of the Committee on Tuesday next.

I have no reason to suppose, neither did I intend to imply in my letter of the 7th, that the Committee would hear no evidence but that of Sir William Milne and Sir Arthur Blyth.

I have every reason to suppose that they will carry out their intention of considering the question of Colonial wine duties, as suggested in Mr. Meade's letter of the 16th of April.

In compliance with the request contained in your letter of yesterday, I have the honor to forward the "heads of evidence" I propose to give before the Committee to-morrow in regard to the natural wines of New South Wales.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

Ever since the Tariff of 1860 was adopted by Great Britain, dissatisfaction has been felt in the Colony with its operation on Colonial wines. No doubt this tariff, in principle, does not favour one nation or community in preference to any other. But inasmuch as it admits wines containing 26 per cent. of alcohol at 1s. per gallon, while on those above this standard is imposed a duty of 2s. 6d., its practical effect is to favour French wines, which are mainly under, or not above, the lower standard, and to exclude the bulk of Australian wines, of which the strength is above the lower standard; and thus virtually to establish differential differential duties, as between France and Australia. This feeling of dissatisfaction of course increases with the growing importance of the wine trade and manufacture, and the difference is obviously further aggravated by the distance between the Australian Colonies and Great Britain as compared with the contiguity of France. The lighter Australian wines will not generally bear exportation. In order to disprove the prevailing false impression that wines cannot be made containing natural alcohol, so to speak, of a strength above 26 or 27 per cent., an official examination of the manufacture of Australian wines was made when I was Treasurer in New South Wales in 1875. This examination of samples collected at vineyards in Albury and the adjacent district under the personal supervision of Mr. Henry Lumsdaine, the Chief Inspector of Distilleries, &c., proved that wine could be and was made to contain 32.4 per cent. of natural proof spirit.

The papers authenticating this process and its results can be laid before the Committee. Correspondence has since taken place between my office and the Colonial Office, in order to urge upon the Imperial Government an alteration of the tariff. These efforts have been hitherto unsuccessful. Of course the Colonies would desire a complete modification of the tariff, so as to more fully encourage the exportation to England of Australian wines, but for the present the Governments would probably be satisfied if the standard were raised 2 per cent., say from 26 to 28. This alteration, it is thought, would admit the bulk of Australian wines, but it would not admit all, as some of them range so high as 32 or 33 per cent. of natural alcohol.

MEMORANDUM

MEMORANDUM—How the present scale of Wine duties in Great Britain came to be established; and the bearing on it of the Commercial Treaty of January 23, 1860, with France.

[As laid before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Wine duties, April 1879.]

It may be useful at the present time, when the question of the wine duties is about to come under consideration, to explain how the scale now in force came to be established; and to give an account of communications which passed on the subject, in connection with the stipulations of the Treaty of 1860, between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of France.

The instructions* to Lord Cowley and Mr. Cobden in the negotiation of the French Treaty of 1860 with regard to wine were as follows:—

"On the article of wine the Government of Her Majesty will propose to Parliament to levy no duties on wines of French growth from and after the adoption of the Resolution by Parliament higher than 3s. per gallon: thus at once diminishing by nearly one-half the present charge of 5s. 6d., together with 5 per cent. thereon. They would also propose that on and after the 1st April, 1861, the duty should be further reduced as follows, in degrees varying according to the quantity of proof spirit which may be contained in the wine.

"The main regulations would be as follows:—

"1. As is now the case, no liquors might be entered as wine if containing 40 per cent. of proof spirit or upwards.

"2. Wine containing 26 per cent. and upwards of proof spirit, but under 40 per cent., to pay a duty not exceeding 2s. per gallon.

"3. Wine containing 12 per cent. and upwards, but under 26 per cent., to pay a duty not exceeding 1s. 6d. per gallon.

"4. Wine containing under 12 per cent. to pay a duty not exceeding 1s. per gallon.

"5. Wines which are brought over sea in bottles to pay a duty not exceeding 2s. per gallon. These wines are commonly of high price, and hence it is important to diminish as far as possible the necessity of testing them by the process of distillation, as it spoils, whenever applied, one of the bottles.

"6. Wines imported at any other port other than such ports as shall be designated for the purpose from time to time by Her Majesty, to pay a duty not exceeding 2s. per gallon.

"Her Majesty's Government in adopting this arrangement have had the following objects in view: They wish effectually to open the British market to cheap wines of a sound character, to maintain some degree of relation between the rates of duty on various classes of wine and their values, and to preclude the inducement, which an uniform duty of very low amount might offer, to the introduction of spirits in the form of wine, and to avoid the serious injury to an important and primary branch of the British revenue which would be the consequence thereof.

"A scale thus adjusted would, it is hardly needful to observe, be conveniently favourable to the introduction of wine from France, as the lower wines from that country would enter at the duty of 1s. The regulation that wine in bottle should pay 2s. would enable Her Majesty's Government to accede much more readily to the plan, as it would obviate the very serious objection that would be felt in many quarters to any scheme which would admit at 1s. 6d. the high-priced clarets and champagnes which are consumed exclusively by the rich, and should impose the higher charge of 2s. on the port, sherry, and marsala of the Peninsula and of Sicily, which are, even under the present system, known to and relished by the middle classes of the community."

There does not appear to be any record of what passed on this point in the course of the formal negotiation. But the terms of the Treaty of the 23rd January, 1860, with regard to the wine duties to be levied in the United Kingdom, differed to some extent from the instructions to the British Plenipotentiaries as above quoted. Its stipulations are as follows:—

"ARTICLE VI.

Her Britannic Majesty engages also to propose to Parliament that the duties on the importation of French wine be at once reduced to a rate not exceeding 3s. a gallon, and that from the 1st April, 1861, the duties on importation shall be regulated as follows:—

"1. On wine containing less than 15 degrees of proof spirit verified by Sykes' hydrometer, the duty shall not exceed 1s. a gallon.

"2. On wine containing from 15 to 26 degrees the duty shall not exceed 1s. 6d. a gallon.

"3. On wine containing from 26 to 40 degrees the duty shall not exceed 2s. a gallon.

"4. On wine in bottles the duty shall not exceed 2s. a gallon.

"5. Wine shall not be imported at any other ports than those which shall be named for that purpose before the present Treaty shall come into force, Her Britannic Majesty reserving to herself the right of substituting other ports for those which shall have been originally named, or of increasing the number of them.

"The duty fixed upon the importation of wine at ports other than those named shall be 2s. a gallon.

6. Her Britannic Majesty reserves to herself the power, notwithstanding the provisions of this Article, to fix the maximum amount of proof spirit which may be contained in liquor declared as wine, without, however, the maximum being lower than 37 degrees."

It will be observed that the limit of the lowest class of wines was raised from 12 degrees, the limit stated in the instructions to the British Plenipotentiaries to 15 degrees; and that a reservation was made to enable the maximum amount of proof spirit which may be contained in liquors declared as wine to be fixed lower than 40 degrees, but not lower, however, than 37 degrees.

Resolutions to sanction the reduction of the wine duties were introduced into the House of Commons on the 27th February, 1860. After the first resolution, providing for the immediate reduction of the duty from 5s. 10d. to 3s., had been carried, the Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Gladstone) proposed that the final reduction of the duties should take place on the 1st January instead of the 1st April, 1861, and that the limit of the lowest class should be raised from 15 degrees to 18 degrees. Convenience was in both respects the principal reason alleged for the change. Mr. Gladstone said, "The line at 15 degrees was inconvenient, because it would tend to press down the clarets now introduced to bring them down to that strength." On *To Earl Cowley and Mr. Cobden, No. 1, January 17, 1860.

On the 5th August, 1860, Mr. Gladstone introduced a fresh resolution relative to the wine duties. It is described as "a resolution of adjustment, and provided for a relative increase of the duties on the stronger kinds of wine, in consequence of the increase on spirits."* The resolution was as follows:—

Wine containing less than undermentioned degrees of proof spirit to pay—

28.	26.	40.	45.	If imported in bottles and containing less than 40 degrees.
s. d. 1 0	s. d. 1 9	s. d. 2 5	s. d. 2 11	s. d. 2 5

This resolution was embodied in the Act 23 and 24 Vict., cap. 110.

No official correspondence appears to have passed with respect to these alterations of duty at the time when they were made.

Towards the end of the sittings of the mixed Commission under the Treaty of 1860, on the 7th November of that year, M. Rouher called attention to the stipulations of the Treaty in regard to French wines. Quoting the scale of the English duties established by the Treaty, he said the evident intention was to facilitate and to increase by means of duties reduced as low in amount as possible, the importation into the United Kingdom of wines of an ordinary quality, suitable for general consumption; and, further, to impose the higher duties on wines of a superior quality, destined for the use of the richer classes. Experience, however, showed that all the superior Bordeaux wines entered under the 1s. 6d. duty, while the heavier ordinary wines of the south of France, which all exceeded 15 degrees, could not profit by the 1s. rate, or even by the 1s. 6d. rate of duty. Thus, M. Rouher said, the intentions of the negotiators of the Treaty were not realized, and French commerce had been disappointed. The Imperial Government had thought of asking that a modification of the scale of wine duties should be included in the Convention just settled (the Second Supplementary Convention signed on the 16th November, 1860), but they had preferred to leave to the British Ministry the adoption of Legislative measures to provide for the admission of all wines up to 35 degrees Sykes, that is to say, up to 20 degrees centesimal, the limit which in France separates wine from spirit, without distinction of quality or price, at the uniform duty of 1s. per gallon.

Mr. Cobden accepted fully the principle of this representation, and said that in his first communications with the Emperor on the subject of the Treaty he had always admitted as one of the essential bases the lowering of duty to 1s. per gallon on all French wines which entered into general consumption. He agreed in the conclusions stated by M. Rouher, and said that he considered himself morally bound to neglect no means of inducing the British Government to give full satisfaction to the wine trade, and to adopt the principles advocated by the French Plenipotentiaries.

Mr. Cobden† called the earnest attention of Her Majesty's Government to this representation on the part of the French Government. He stated that in the first unofficial communications which took place between him and the French Government on the subject of the proposed Commercial Treaty, the bases of agreement had been, as regards France, duties on our manufactures, ranging between a certain specified maximum and minimum rate; on the British side, amongst other tariff alterations, admission of "wines of the ordinary qualities at a duty of 1s. a gallon." In the progress of the negotiation it had been thought advisable to omit the mention of the French minimum rate of duty, and by the letter of the Treaty the French Government was simply bound by a stipulation that the maximum rate should not exceed 30 per cent. when the Treaty came into operation, and, further, to reduce this maximum to 25 per cent. in 1864. He pointed out and laid stress on the fact that the duties in the French tariff, as settled in the mixed Commission at Paris, since the signature of the Treaty, had been so reduced that on the average they would not be more than 15 per cent. Under these circumstances Mr. Cobden said that he felt most anxious that the obligations implied on his side should be recognized with at least an equal liberality. He mentioned that the Chancellor of the Exchequer in arranging the new tariff of wines adopted a graduated scale of duties in proportion to their alcoholic strength. And he observed that this test afforded no criterion of value, and that its effect had been to impose on the common qualities of French wines, the produce of Burgundy and of the south of France, a higher rate of duty than that payable on the most expensive clarets. He did not seek to give his proposals the force of an international agreement; but, considering the effect given by the French Plenipotentiaries to the stipulations between them, he felt bound in good faith to represent the unsatisfied moral claim which he thought the French Government possessed, and to press this claim. Mr. Cobden pointed out the hardship of the operation of the 1s. 9d. rate on the common wines, and he proposed the admission of "all wines of a less strength than 30 degrees of proof spirit (Sykes), at a uniform rate of 1s. duty per gallon."

Mr. Cobden was informed, in reply,‡ that Lord John Russell considered that this question too deeply involved financial considerations to allow him to give an opinion upon it, and that the matter had been referred to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Gladstone§ said the proposal was of a most grave character in its bearing on the revenues of the country, not merely the revenue from wine, to which it might possibly be even beneficial, but in connection with the vast sums derived from other strong drinks; and that it amounted to a proposal that a gallon of proof spirit, if contained in 3½ gallons of wine, should be admitted at a duty of 3s. 4d., whereas, if the wine were distilled abroad, and the spirit imported here as an extract of the same bulk and strength, the duty upon it would be 10s. 5d. Mr. Gladstone did not think it safe to anticipate with confidence any state of things in which such a relative scale of duties could be maintained. He regarded an equilibrium by means of a reduction of the spirit duties as out of the question. He observed that the scale of duties upon wine, charged according to strength, was not yet in operation; that it was an experiment involving many points affecting the trade and consumption of the country; and that experience might or might not show that the scale of duties adopted by Parliament might admit of amendment in detail. But while desirous both to extend our commercial relations with France, and to mark in every safe and prudent way the sense entertained entertained by Her Majesty's Government of the spirit in which the French Government had given effect to the general stipulations of the Commercial Treaty, he could not, as the person specially responsible for the security of the revenue, hold out a hope that the desire of the French Government in this matter could be complied with. He pointed out that even the French Government could not at that time form any certain judgment of the working of the new scale of wine duties, and that its effects would be better seen after a short experience.

Lord Russell* informed Mr. Cobden, who was then at Algiers, that the reasons given by Mr. Gladstone against acceding to his views seemed to him to be conclusive; and that a copy of Mr. Gladstone's letter had been sent to Lord Cowley, who would show it to him when he reached Paris.

On the 15th March, 1861, the subject of the wine duties was brought before the House of Commons by Mr. Crawford, who urged that difficulties and inconveniences had been found in the application of the alcoholic scale with its different classes; and, after setting forth the complaints of the trade, he suggested the adoption of an uniform duty of 1s. 6d. or 2s. per gallon. Mr. Gladstone said, in reply, that the instances of erroneous classification of wines and the charge of wrong rates of duty were few and such as might be expected at the change of systems; that the importation of wine had largely increased; and that the complaints referred to arose from changes in the course of business. He said, in conclusion, that the Government did not intend to propose an uniform duty, but would adhere to the principle of classification by means of the alcoholic test, and that fuller experience of the system should be obtained before the question of modification was considered. Alluding to a report that negotiations on the subject were pending with the French Government, he said that this was not the case. Observations to the same effect were made in the course of the Financial Statement on the 15th April, 1861.

After the discussion in the House of Commons, raised by Mr. Crawford, Count Flahault, then French Ambassador in London, wrote† to call attention to the subject of the wine duties. He quoted the reply of Mr. Cobden in the 50th sitting of the Mixed Commission (above referred to), to the representations of the French Plenipotentiaries, and called attention to the contradiction between Mr. Cobden's statement and that of Mr. Gladstone.

In a subsequent note,‡ Count Flahault made known the wishes of the French Government in the matter. They did not ask for an uniform rate of duty; but they did ask that the provisions of Article VI of the Treaty of the 23rd January, 1860, which had in practice been found onerous to trade, should be modified. The French Government recognized the justice of the complaints made by the wine trade; and they considered that the difficulties which had arisen owed their origin to the 1s. limit being fixed too low. It was proposed that the first class should be raised from 15 to 20 degrees, and the second from 20 to 26 degrees, instead of from 15 to 26 degrees.

It will be noticed that this proposal of the French Government dealt with the limit between the first and second classes of wines as settled by the Treaty of the 23rd January, 1860, and overlooked the fact that the limit of 15 degrees had been raised to 18 degrees by the Act 23 and 24 Vict., cap. 110, which received the Royal Assent on the 28th August, 1860.

After communication with the Chancellor of the Exchequer the following reply was sent to these notes:—

"That the statement made in the House of Commons was to the effect that the alcoholic scale, taken generally, had thus far, beyond all doubt, succeeded; that the errors were comparatively few and small, and were in course of correction and reduction; that the scale itself might indeed be susceptible of some amendment, but that as, on the one hand, the defects were by no means such as to mar the generally beneficial effect, and, on the other hand, the experimental information respecting the wines of the exporting countries of the world and their probable entry into the British market was still defective, it would not be wise to attempt to make any change at the present time, the prospect of change being in itself a great evil, and the obvious course pointed out by prudence being that such change should be made after sufficient experience." And it was stated that this intimation could not be considered to convey any intimation hostile to the just expectations of France. With regard to Mr. Cobden's language, it was said that he "was not authorized to pledge Her Majesty's Government, either actually or prospectively, with respect to the duties on wine, to any concessions beyond the terms of the Treaty."

After a statement of the alteration in the rates of duties on wines, and the limit of degrees, which had been made in the Act of the 28th August, 1860, Count Flahault was informed that—

"Her Majesty's Government are very far from desiring to take advantage of the terms of a Commercial Treaty when reason and justice permit the enlargement of those terms, and they think it not improbable that, at a future period, modifications favourable to the admission of wine, and in particular to a considerable part of the wines of French growth, may be introduced into the British Tariff; but for the present, they consider that the general character of the alcoholic scale is established and approved, and that any attempt to change it during the actual Session of Parliament would be premature, and could not properly be made."

In conclusion, Count Flahault was informed that while Her Majesty's Government fully acknowledged the enlightened liberality and justice with which the Government of France had, in the Supplementary Conventions, given effect to the terms and to the spirit of the Treaty of 1860, they thought that the fact that the provisions of the treaty in favour of French Commerce had been mainly brought into full operation in this country, while they had only been partially carried into effect in France as regards British commerce, afforded "some compensation to France for the delay which, for the reasons stated, must intervene before Her Majesty's Government can properly obtain the modifications of the rates of the wine duties to which it was the object of your Excellency's communication to induce them to assent."

A further note on the subject was received from Count Flahault in August 1861.§ He said now, after fresh study of the question, and on advice given by the wine trade, the French Government had considered that the best system would be to abolish distinction of classes, and to establish an uniform duty on all wines not exceeding 21 degrees of the French scale (about 40 degrees Sykes). In support of this application, the inconveniences of a Tariff classification varying according to degrees was pointed out. It was urged that it is difficult, with certainty, to bring wine within classes regulated according to degrees of alcoholic strength; that the testing instruments require in their use time which cannot always be given, and precautions precautions which cannot always be taken; that the Customs Officers had reported quantities of the same wine to be of different strengths, these discrepancies arising either from more or less care having been given to the testing on different occasions, or from a difference in the quality of the liquid itself, according to the portion of the cask from whence the sample tested was drawn. These considerations, Count Flahault said, induced the Government of the Emperor, contrary to the opinion which they had before expressed, to ask that a uniform duty should be charged on wines, and that the limit of 40 degrees (Sykes) should be fixed as the limit between wine and spirit.

This note was referred to Mr. Gladstone, who replied* that he was then wholly unable to perceive in what manner such substitution of an uniform duty upon wine for the scale in force could be made without the most injurious consequences either to revenue or else to trade. He thought it best, however, that inquiry should be made as to the precise sense to be attached to the French proposal; that is, "whether by an uniform duty it is to be understood an uniform duty of 1s. per gallon, for which (up to a lower point of strength) the Government of France has hitherto expressed its desire; or whether that Government attaches so much value to the principle of uniformity that it would desire the adoption of that principle even on the condition of altering the Treaty, and submitting the light wines of France to a duty of probably not less than 2s. 6d. a gallon."

A note making this inquiry in these terms was addressed to Count Flahault † But before he replied to it, a further letter was received from Mr. Gladstone. ‡ He advised, in the first place, that, at the time, it would not be expedient to carry on any negotiation, or even any prolonged or formal correspondence on the subject, with the French Government, and that an answer should be returned to Count Flahault in very general terms. These terms, as subsequently embodied in a note to him, will be quoted later in this Memorandum. Mr. Gladstone then proceeded to state at length the answer which might have been given to an application, such as that made on the part of the French Government, in a free communication without consideration for the consequences which might attend a full statement in diplomatic correspondence. Mr. Gladstone said: "I should not hesitate to state that the alcoholic test, so far as is known to Her Majesty's Government, may be reasonably affirmed to have succeeded, and that its maintenance is the only method of at the same time securing our vast revenue from spirits and allowing of the introduction of the lighter and unbranded wines (as they may be termed with substantial though not literal accuracy) at a low rate of duty, viz., 1s. per gallon. Neither of these objects can be considered secondary, and the first is absolutely vital."

Admitting that instances had occurred of wines of the same parcel having been placed in two different categories for duty, Mr. Gladstone observed that in the first six months of the operation of the alcoholic test, complaint as to its working had been made in less than 1 in 300 of the instances in which it had been applied. He pointed out an analogy between wine duties based on classification with different rates of duty, and the scale of sugar duties then in force, and that in the case of the latter this mode of assessment had not proved to be inconvenient so as to prevent the doubling of consumption and a great increase to revenue. Mr. Gladstone went on to say: "With respect to the necessity of the alcoholic test, it is not absolutely necessary for the safety of the revenue from spirits, for that revenue would be no less secure than it now is if, complying with the literal request of the French Government for a uniform duty, we were to fix that duty (which would require an alteration of the Treaty of Commerce with France) at about 2s. 6d. per gallon. But it would surprise me to learn that France is prepared to consent to such a change, and I may add that I should regard it as highly objectionable in its bearing on the interests of the British consumer, though I believe it would be more or less agreeable to a large number, probably the majority, of our wine merchants." Mr. Gladstone observed that if the French proposal was that all wine up to 40 degrees should be admitted at the uniform duty of 1s. per gallon, it could hardly be regarded as a selfish request, inasmuch as the change would be especially beneficial to the highly-branded wines of the Peninsula in their competition with the lighter growths. In this case, however, we must look to the condition in which it would place the revenue derived from spirits. "That revenue is obtained by taxing the alcohol in spirits represented by 100 degrees proof at from 10s. to 10s. 5d. per gallon. It is proposed that we should admit the alcohol in wine at 1s. per 40 degrees proof, equal to 2s. 6d. per 100 degrees proof. But how, if we admit alcohol in wine at 2s. 6d. per gallon, are we to obtain £12,000,000 sterling from the same strength of alcohol at 10s. and 10s. 5d. per gallon? A tax so much lower on the alcohol in wine would in all likelihood paralyze this important arm of our revenue.

"Practically, British spirits are believed to be consumed at a strength of about 66 degrees proof. That is to say, the consumer is charged on the article as he drinks it with duty of about 6s. 8d. per gallon. But if wine is introduced at 40 degrees, having paid 1s. per gallon, an infusion of 26 degrees of spirit, representing about 2s. 7d. in duty, will raise the wine to the strength at which spirit is commonly drunk. Thus the wine charged with spirit up to 66 degrees will have paid 3s. 7d. per gallon." With this article in the market, Mr. Gladstone did not see how the existing revenues from spirits could be raised, nor how the Government could venture on so great a hazard as a measure of this kind would entail. And he was not without fear that the arrangements which had then recently been made would entail some fiscal risk, though, as compared with that which would result from the new French proposal, it would be trifling, and might be encountered for the sake of the important purposes in view.

In conclusion, Mr. Gladstone suggested that in the event of diplomatic correspondence with the French Government, the discrepancy between their different proposals should be pointed out, the first of which urged that the tax based on the alcoholic test should be maintained, and asked only a very slight modification in the figures of the scale. While he regarded the test as sound in principle and fully sustained by experience, he did not despair of improving its details, and thought it would be practicable so to simplify the scale and to mitigate the application of the duty in some parts of it as to diminish greatly, if not to remove entirely, the inconveniences of which complaint had been made by the French growers of wine. He was collecting information with the view to framing any practicable amendments. It was very desirable, however, for many reasons, to avoid any formal discussion on the subject, or that any communications other than of a confidential character should take place with regard to it.

Lord Russell decided to defer action on this letter until Count Flahault's answer to the note of the 13th September was received. The

The French reply* was to the effect that the rate of the uniform duty advocated by the Emperor's Government was 1s. per gallon on all wines not exceeding 21 degrees centesimal, which is nearly equivalent to 40 degrees Sykes. It went on to say that it would be impossible for them to accept an uniform duty of 2s. 6d., which would affect injuriously all French wines, and would be higher than the existing maximum duty according to different categories. Such an alteration would, in fact, amount to a considerable increase in the rate, instead of the reduction which the Government of the Emperor thought they could rightly ask for; and it would not be productive of advantage to the English Treasury.

It was further stated that experience had shown that many inconveniences arose from the system of classification adopted in the VIth Article of the Treaty of 1860, and that, in the opinion of the French Government, the discussion on the modifications to be made in it should not turn on the amount of the uniform duty, but exclusively on the degree of strength which should be established as the line of separation between wines and spirits, and which might well be fixed, as was done in France, at 40 degrees Sykes.

This note was at once referred to Mr. Gladstone†. He was informed that no action had yet been taken on his letter of the 4th October. And, in asking whether he had any further suggestions to make, it was said that Lord Russell fully concurred in his views as to the importance of this matter as concerns the safety of the revenue, but that he considered that, in regard to commerce with France it was not advisable to raise the shilling duty to any higher sum. In reply Mr. Gladstone‡ said: "This, I think, is the reply that was to be expected, and I am entirely of opinion that the shilling duty ought not to be augmented with respect to those wines to which it is now applicable, but should be extended to any others which can be brought within its range, not endangering the great revenue derived from spirits." He considered that the whole of his letter of the 4th October was applicable to the French application as now put, namely, that a uniform duty of 1s. per gallon should be levied on all wines under 40 degrees, that is, in substance, to all wines properly so called, subject to the suggestion which he had made as to the character of any communications to be held with the French Government on the question.

Count Flahault was therefore informed,§ in reply to his communications, that "under the fiscal system of this country the wine duties are nearly related to other much larger, indeed capital and vital branches of the revenue, and that the further proceedings of Her Majesty's Government in regard to those duties must therefore in the main be governed by fiscal considerations. Within the limits, however, of this principle, Her Majesty's Government will be sincerely desirous to extend so important a branch of our commercial relations with France as the trade in wine, and they will be prepared to pay to all the information which they may receive from the French Government on the subject the most friendly and respectful attention."

Here the correspondence ceases. No further communications appear to have been received from, or to have been made to, the French Government in the matter. Nor does Mr. Cobden seem to have written again. Some communication, however, passed between him and Mr. Gladstone, for Mr. Gladstone stated|| that Mr. Cobden had informed him "of his intention to act in his place as a Member of Parliament for the purpose of giving effect to his opinion in fulfilment of what he looks upon as his personal pledges to the Government of France. "But," Mr. Gladstone goes on to say, "Mr. Cobden is not responsible, as Her Majesty's Government are, for the safety of the vast revenue which this country draws from the duties upon spirits, and which the present alcoholic scale has been constructed to defend."

In the autumn of 1861 Officers of the Customs were sent to the principal wine-growing countries of Europe to report on the strength of wines. Mr. Ogilvie was sent to France and Switzerland; Mr. Douglas to the Rhine Provinces, Bavaria, Austria, and Hungary; Mr. Bernard to Spain and Portugal; Mr. Davies to Italy and Sicily.

In the Financial Statement, on the 3rd April, 1862, Mr. Gladstone defended the alcoholic test, and said that it would continue to be a permanent and satisfactory basis for the administration of our system of wine duties. He stated that in the preceding year, under the new system of duties, the wine trade had increased about 50 per cent. Referring to the inquiries which had been made in the wine-growing countries of Europe, he said that the object in view had been to ascertain, as far as possible, the most material facts as regards the natural strength of wine in those countries where it is produced at its greatest natural strength; wine, that is, with only so much spirit added as is necessary to make it a merchantable commodity for the general markets of the world; and the distinction which he drew between that and another class—a brandied wine—is, that in the latter class considerable quantities of spirits are added to certain wine for the purpose of adapting it to the English market. After quoting the results of these inquiries, as above stated, Mr. Gladstone gave statistics of the importation of wine at different strengths since the new scale of duties had been established, and said that it appeared that 26 degrees of alcoholic strength is the point which marks out the limit where, upon the whole, we may safely distinguish between the two classes of wines; and that by taking the division of duty at 26 degrees of alcoholic strength almost everything which can be properly called natural wine would be admitted at 1s., and in a very large number of instances the practical application of tests in regard to strength of wine could be dispensed with. He accordingly proposed to reduce the then existing graduated scale of four rates of duty to two, namely, to carry the duty 1s. duty up to 26 degrees, and to fix the rate between 26 and 42 degrees at 2s. 6d. The then existing maximum of 2s. 5d. was raised to 2s. 6d. to cover the estimated loss of revenue on extending the 1s. duty up to 26 degrees. All wines in bottle were to pay the same rate of duty as wines between 26 and 42 degrees of alcoholic strength. No comment appears to have been made on this part of the Financial Statement in the debate which ensued. The resolution to give effect to it was passed the same night without a division, and this change of duties formed part of the "Customs Act" of 1862, 25 and 26 Vic., cap. 22.

The final arrangement in regard to our wine duties was thus made by Act of Parliament, apart from, and in some details at variance with, the Treaty engagements with France on the subject. It was not even made known to the French Government, at least not in any letter recorded officially; and, as before observed, no correspondence appears to have passed between the two Governments subsequent to that above referred to in November, 1861.

It should be mentioned that by an Act of Parliament passed in 1866, 29 Vic., c. 36, the duty on wine in bottle and wine in wood was equalized, in order to give effect to Article 4 of the Final Protocol annexed to the Commercial Treaty of the 16th December, 1865, between Great Britain and Austria. This Treaty lapsed at the end of 1876 in consequence of its denunciation by the Austro-Hungarian Government, and, therefore, the Treaty stipulation with that Government above referred to no longer exists.

The representations respecting the wine duties as now levied, which have been made by foreign Governments, will form the subject of a further memorandum.

In conclusion, I would beg to submit the following remarks:—

It appears from Mr. Gladstone's speech on the 27th February, 1860, that, previous to 1860, fermented liquor containing a greater amount of alcohol than 40 degrees was not admitted into this country as wine, and that at that time there were no official data on which to estimate the ordinary strength of wines, except for those on the border-line of what was treated as wine and what was not so treated. There is nothing in the Foreign Office correspondence or the statements in Parliament to show on what grounds the degrees of alcoholic strength fixed upon as the limit of the classes in the several graduated scales adopted in 1860 were selected as their limit; nor are any details to be found as to the complaints made with regard to the operation of the scales of duties adopted in 1860. These complaints appear, however, all to have come from France. No representations seem to have been made at the time by other Powers. The complaints subsequently made by these Powers are that the limit of the 1s. duty favours French wines, and that the rate of 2s. 6d. charged on wines between 26 and 42 degrees is excessive in amount. It may be well to mention that Mr. Gladstone expressed as follows, in his speech on the 27th February, 1860, his views as to the operation of the first classification of wines, adopted in 1861, and the different rates of duty charged on them:—

"A portion of the lighter wines of France and of the Rhine will be admitted at a duty of 1s. per gallon. The remainder of the light wines of France and of the Rhine will be admitted at a duty of 1s. 6d. per gallon. A portion of the lighter wines of Portugal, Spain, and the Mediterranean will also be admitted at a duty of 1s. 6d. per gallon; while the greater portion of the Spanish, as well as the great bulk of the Portuguese, and a considerable amount of the Sicilian, together with the wines of the south of France, will have to pay a duty of 2s."

The point of the objection alleged in 1861 to a low uniform duty was that, under it, by mixing wine at its maximum strength with actual spirit, a liquid possessing the strength at which spirit is usually drunk could be introduced into consumption charged with a much lower rate of duty than spirit properly so called; and that the revenue derived from spirits would thus be endangered.

Lastly, it is to be borne in mind that, although not expressly stipulated in any international agreement, the final arrangement with respect to the wine duties was made in return for Tariff arrangements, beyond the strict terms of the Treaty of the 23rd January, 1860, agreed to by the French Government in the negotiations of the two Conventions of the 12th October and the 16th November, 1860, supplementary to that Treaty.

MEMORANDUM.—Representations of foreign Governments on the subject of the wine duties.

[As laid before the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Wine Duties, April, 1879.]

In the preceding memorandum of the 25th March, 1879, it is explained how the scale of wine duties in Great Britain came to be established, and an account is given of communications on the subject which passed at that time between the British and French Governments.

It may also be useful to state succinctly the representations which have been received latterly from foreign Governments with respect to these duties. It seems unnecessary to make an abstract of the whole correspondence when it has extended over several years, because, for practical purposes, this information is best conveyed by means of the latest statements which have been put forward by the foreign Governments concerned. For convenience of reference these representations, and the answers returned in each case, are given in an Appendix.

Representations have been made directly by the Portuguese and Spanish Governments, and, in a less formal manner, by the French and Italian Governments.

1. Portugal.

The Portuguese Government did not make, in their last communication, any explicit proposal. In 1867, Her Majesty's Government expressed their willingness to reduce the 2s. 6d. rate to 2s., but the Portuguese Government wanted an immediate reduction to 1s. 8d., with an agreement for a further reduction to 1s. at a subsequent period. In consequence of this divergence of views the negotiations were broken off.* In the later communication above referred to, the more immediate object of the application was to obtain the appointment of a Committee of Inquiry into the system of import duties in Great Britain on wine. It is indicated that a uniform duty is wished for, and, by the reference made in this note to the provisions of Treaties of Commerce which had then been recently concluded by Portugal with Holland and Belgium respectively, the limit of 37 degrees Sykes seems to be suggested for the maximum range of the uniform duty.†

2. Spain.

The Spanish Government now urge that if, as maintained on the part of this country, it does not appear right that the additional 15 degrees of alcohol in wine (that is, the number of degrees beyond 26 comprised in the range of the 2s. 6d. scale of duty) should pay less than would be paid by the same degrees of spirit, neither can it be considered equitable that all wine that exceeds however little 26 degrees should pay the duty of 2s. 6d. per gallon, just as if it contained 41 degrees. Accordingly the Spanish Government offered to agree to 26 degrees as the limit of the 1s. rate of duty, and proposed that 6d. additional should be charged for every succeeding 5 degrees of alcoholic strength. The scale of duties so suggested would therefore be:—

For wine not exceeding 26 degrees	...	...	1	0
" " 31 "	...	...	1	6
" " 41 "	...	...	2	6

The last correspondence is contained in the "Correspondence respecting the Commercial Relations between Great Britain and Spain: Commercial, No. 22, 1878," and is given in the Appendix B.*

3. France.

At the sitting of the Anglo-French Commission, on the 24th April, 1877, the French Commissioner asked that the duty on importation into the United Kingdom upon French wines under 26 degrees in strength, and of a value not exceeding 125 fr. per hectolitre, should be reduced two-thirds; that is to say, that on French wines not exceeding 26 degrees in strength, and not exceeding in value 4s. 6d. per gallon, the duty should be reduced from 1s. to 4d. per gallon. The sittings of the Commission have not been resumed since that date in consequence of the suspension of commercial negotiations at the desire of the French Government, and the subject has not been discussed.

4. Italy.

M. Luzzatti, who was sent to London by the Italian Government in November, 1875, to give information respecting changes in the Italian Tariff, proposed that the limit of the 1s. rate of duty on wines imported into the United Kingdom should be raised from 26 degrees to between 36 and 38 degrees. The memorandum in which this application was made, and the answer returned to it, are annexed.†

No. 7.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to The Governor, New South Wales.

My Lord,

Downing-street, 24 July, 1879.

With reference to previous correspondence, I have the honor to transmit to you, for the information of your Government, a copy of the Report from the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Wine Duties with the proceedings of the Committee.

I have, &c.,

M. E. HICKS-BEACH.

The Colonial Treasurer.—H.P., 19/9/79. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.—C.W. B.C., 20 Sept., 1879. I have read the report of the Select Committee, which bears so directly on the wines of this Colony, and is of so much importance to the wine-producing interest, that all the papers should be laid before Parliament.—J.W., 24/9/79. Mr. Ross.—G.E., 25/9/79.

[Enclosure.]

REPORT.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the system under which Customs duties are now levied in this country on wine, and into its bearing on the fiscal and commercial interests of the country, have considered the matters referred to them, and have agreed to the following report:—

Your Committee have had the advantage of hearing the opinions of experienced officers of the Customs and Inland Revenue, of Sir L. Mallet, who, during his official connection with the Board of Trade, and subsequently, has devoted much attention to the direct and indirect bearings of the wine duties; of numerous witnesses largely interested, partly in the wine and spirit trade, partly in the export trade, with wine-producing countries; and of several foreign and colonial gentlemen, as representing various wine-growing interests. Your Committee are also indebted to the Foreign Office for consideration of a memorandum as to "how the present scale of wine duties in Great Britain came to be established."

See Appendix.

Your Committee have been mindful of the fact that the object contemplated by the framers of the present duties was to devise a system of duties that would facilitate the consumption in this country of genuine wine, under provisions ensuring the necessary safeguard against importation of spirit under the disguise of wine, to the detriment of the revenue derived from spirits. The basis of the existing system was described as that of "a very approximate relation to the spirit duty, which would be defended by a wine duty containing that relation, but would be ruined or seriously damaged if it were out of relation to the spirit duty."

Mr. Seldon, 506.

With that view 26 degrees was fixed as the limit of the alcoholic strength in wines called natural, and defined as wine "with only so much spirit added as is necessary to make it a merchantable commodity for the general markets of the world." All wine below this standard became admissible at the rate of 1s. duty per gallon, while a duty of 2s. 6d. per gallon was imposed on all wines of higher strength up to 42 degrees, on the assumption that the spirit in excess of 26 degrees must be due to an artificial alcoholisation, partaking of the character of adulteration, inasmuch as it was held to have been introduced not for making the wine a merchantable commodity for the general markets of the world, but "for the purpose of adapting it to the English market."

Your Committee are of opinion it has been conclusively shown that this assumption was erroneous. Witnesses, official and unofficial, have spoken to the existence of wines which, without the addition of extraneous spirits, have obtained a strength over 26 degrees. It has also been shown that there are many wines which cannot acquire a merchantable character for the general markets of the world without alcoholisation. The term natural wine in connection with a standard of 26 degrees, supposed to mark off two specifically distinct categories of liquid, appears to have been a misleading definition, due solely to the limited practical knowledge as to the nature and character of wine which prevailed in this country at the time when the present duties were being framed. Your Committee fully recognise that the wish to give preferential advantage to the wine products of any particular country in no manner entered into the motives for a scale of duties subjecting wines of a certain class to disproportionately higher charges. It is sufficient, in refutation of such a supposition, to point to the fact that the same scale of duties applies to our own Colonies.

Mr. Keene, 777.
Mr. Hunt, 17-24.
Mr. Baker, 343-6

The attention of your Committee has been directed to the question, whether there are grounds for apprehending that the admission of wines at a material reduction in duty would be attended with the danger of leading to illicit distillation, to the detriment of the revenue. The witnesses from the Customs dismissed, as unreal, the idea that any active illicit distillation was likely to be practised from wine, if it could be introduced more cheaply. The Inland Revenue witnesses, however, were not willing to concur explicitly in this opinion. They pointed to the increased profit to be gained by illicit operations on a cheaper article as a possible inducement to serious renewal of a now virtually obsolete fraud on the revenue, upon a scale which they were not prepared to say the Excise could successfully repress with the means now at its disposal. After careful consideration of all the evidence bearing upon this point, your Committee are of opinion that the danger of illicit distillation, consequent on a material reduction of the wine duties, is not considerable, and is capable of being efficiently guarded against.

Mr. Young, 935-950.

Mr. Baker, 328-32.
Mr. Keene, 710.
Col. Romilly, 5931.

Mr. Young, 873, 1124-30.

Your Committee have heard numerous gentlemen connected with the wine trade in its various branches, in reference to their experience as to the operation of the duties on wine now in force. The capital points on which their evidence converged are—

1. That the existing mode and scale of duties, though they stimulated a larger consumption of wine than had existed previously, have yet not been calculated to promote that consumption which there would be reason to anticipate under a less onerous rate of duty.
2. That the existing system operates disadvantageously to the consuming public, inasmuch as it is so framed as (practically) to hold out an inducement for the manufacture of certain inferior wines.

In regard to the first point, one experienced official from the Customs expressed his strong dissent. Mr. Seldon held firmly that no reduction of duty would lead to increased consumption of wine, Spanish or French. Against this view is to be set the expressed opinion to the contrary of every witness having practical knowledge of the wine trade in this country. Mr. Gilbey, who has unusual means for studying the consuming powers and tastes of the public, said that the wine trade was a very limited one, and that a reduction of duty would increase it immensely. Mr. Willis, whose business brings him into connection with retail dealers and publicans, was confident that a reduction would lead to a rapid increase in the consumption of Spanish and Portuguese wines by his special class of customers. Messrs. Sandeman and Feuerheerd, both Oporto merchants, were no less positive in their anticipations, which were concurred in by two shippers from Xerez—Messrs. Houldsworth and Cosens. These witnesses did not reckon merely on an increased importation of wines already well-known in this country; they believed in the supply of large quantities of wine, in character acceptable to the tastes of those classes in this country that now either do not partake of wines at all or but in very limited degree, and they held that these wines are now excluded from importation by the heavy incidence of the duties on their value. This view was strongly shared by several representatives of French wine-producing interests. Your Committee attach, however, most importance to the opinion expressed by persons of long practical experience with the trade and the taste of the country; and in connection with this portion of the inquiry they would draw attention to the fact that wine does not contain more than about 3 per cent. of the amount of proof spirit annually consumed on an average in this country.

As regards the second point, namely, that the existing duties have tended to deterioration in the manufacture of some wines, evidence has been given by Mr. Gordon Clark, a leading commission wine agent. He said the present system "has induced people engaged in the trade abroad to send us over wines that are not perfectly matured," the fermentation having been stopped by the "addition of a large amount of spirits which has been just sufficient to bring them over here." Corroboration of this opinion, that a better matured, healthier, and less alcoholised article could be introduced from Spain and Portugal than the sherries and ports now generally manufactured, if the incentive to alcoholisation were removed which is offered by the existing scale of duty, will be found in the evidence given by Mr. Haurrie and by Mr. Feuerheerd.

Mr. G. Clark, 4400-1.

Your Committee have deemed it an important portion of its task to inquire into the bearings of the wine duties on the general commercial interests of the country. The allegation that these duties have constituted a subject of complaint on the part of foreign countries, notably such as largely produce wines over 26 degrees, has been fully confirmed. No witness with personal knowledge of Spain and Portugal has failed to testify to the strong dissatisfaction in those countries at our system of wine duties as operating prejudicially to their staple export. Your Committee reiterate their conviction that the charge freely made as to these duties having been conceived with the intention to favour France at the expense of other countries, is without foundation. The fact, however, is indisputable that this erroneous impression prevails in Spain and Portugal, and that tariff regulations are in force in both countries which are injurious to British commerce. In Spain, goods of British origin have been rendered liable to heavy differential duties since 1877. These duties are avowed to be in retaliation for what the Spanish Government persist in considering to be the unfair treatment to which the bulk of Spanish wine is subject in this country through our duties. Much evidence of an important character has been given as to the effect on British commerce of these differential duties by gentlemen who have had great experience in our export trade to Spain. Your Committee would draw attention to the facts spoken to by Mr. Johnson, Mr. Kell, Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Schwann, and Mr. Imhoff. Not only has British trade to Spain materially declined, but it would appear that the full adverse effect of the differential duties is in course of development. Still more serious is the possible permanent transfer of branches of trade from this country to the manufacturers of other countries countries under the protection of commercial treaties which secure to the goods of these countries admission to Spain under conventional duties. The witnesses who have appeared before your Committee have dwelt on the difficulty of recovering their former position in the Spanish market if the present displacement of business consequent on the operation of differential duties should continue for any length of time. Your Committee have, however, been repeatedly assured that there is reason to assume that an adjustment of our wine duties could be made the means for relieving British goods from the onerous tariff regulations at present in force. Similar evidence was given with regard to Portugal, where, though there are no differential duties upon our commerce, yet the tariff is excessively high, and in many items practically prohibitory.

Your Committee have considered if some modification of the duties were advisable, what mode of duty would be satisfactory to the trade, and in harmony with the fiscal interests of the country. The first point to be considered was whether the duty on wine should be regulated by an alcoholic test, and if so, then in what manner that test should be applied. By the existing system the test operates as a gauge, roughly dividing all wines into two categories, one being charged with a duty of 150 per cent. in excess of the other, the intention being thereby to assess wine, as Mr. Seldon said, "in a very approximate relation to the spirit duty." As a practical manner of assessing wine to duty, this method has been much taken exception to, especially by some witnesses connected with the wine trade. The objection raised is that wine is a specific article, and should therefore be assessed as such, and not in reference to an ingredient "entering into its composition and chemically combined with it." This view was endorsed by a concurrence of wine representatives—by Mr. Feuerheed and Mr. Sandeman, by Mr. Houldsworth and Mr. Cosens, by M. Teissonnière, and by M. Raoul Duval. The opinion that wine should be assessed to duty as a specific article, apart from the degree of alcohol contained in it, was also strongly maintained by Sir L. Mallet. On the other hand, the propriety of such an assessment was combated by Mr. Young, who stated that, as representative of the "views entertained by the Board of the Inland Revenue on the wine duties," he framed his opinions exclusively in reference to the spirit duties. The gentlemen connected with the distillery interests, Mr. Currie, Mr. Graham Menzies, and Mr. Jamieson, have also given expression to the reasons which make them deprecate the application to wine of duty not regulated in reference to its alcoholic contents. Experts in such matters say that there is no test which they can apply whereby they can discern the degree to which any wine owes its strength to vinous fermentation only, or to superadded spirit.

Your Committee have considered whether an ad valorem scale of duties might not be applied to all wines. All witnesses, official and technical, have concurred in pronouncing such duties impracticable, and calculated directly to invite fraud; in this opinion your Committee concur.

After full consideration of the evidence, your Committee have arrived at the conclusion that in any alteration of the wine duties the alcoholic test should be maintained.

A Return from the Customs shows that out of 18,429,305 gallons, the total importations of wine into the United Kingdom in 1875, only 2,183,655 gallons were over 38 degrees, and only 784,659 were over 39 degrees. Witnesses dealing largely in Portuguese and Spanish wines to countries where 37 degrees is the Custom-house limit of strength, have stated that they do not experience difficulty in introducing their goods at that standard.

The settlement which your Committee believe would be satisfactory is the imposition of 1s. duty per gallon on wine up to a fixed limit of strength, higher than 26 degrees, to be fixed by the Executive, with a charge for every degree in excess of this limit, that shall bear approximate relation to the duty per degree paid by spirits. Your Committee therefore recommend a duty of 1s., with a limit of strength to be determined by the Executive, as a duty sound in principle, and not in conflict with the fiscal interests of this country.

A suggestion of very great importance has been made during the course of this inquiry, which, in the opinion of your Committee, deserves consideration. Sir L. Mallet, speaking with the advantage of special knowledge on this particular point, stated that, in his opinion, it would be in the public interest to admit wines of low price and strength at a lower duty than 1s., under a double test of fixed strength and fixed money value. The evidence of M. Raoul Duval bears upon this subject. According to his evidence, the class of wine that would benefit by such duty is now never imported; and it would therefore be a new article added to the trade with this country. Your Committee would observe that some witnesses connected with the wine trade of Spain and Portugal have also expressed themselves in favour of the proposal as advocated by Sir L. Mallet.

Your Committee have not omitted to consider the fiscal results that may be consequent on the material reduction of the wine duties.

The consumption of wine is very far below what the country is capable of absorbing if the reduction of duties were such as to bring it within the reach of the masses. Your Committee are prepared to anticipate a sensible loss of revenue in the event of a considerable reduction in the duties; the opinion has however been expressed by Sir Louis Mallet and some other witnesses that no sufficient ground exists for apprehending that the permanent fiscal interests of the country must suffer from a lowering of the wine duties.

In considering the possible fiscal results of reduced duties, your Committee have not overlooked the possibility of wines of high strength displacing the use of spirits to some extent, and thereby affecting that important branch of revenue. Apprehension of such displacement has been expressed by the officers of the Inland Revenue, and by all the witnesses representing distilling interests. Mr. Young held strongly that the cheapness of alcoholised wines would ensure for them preference over spirits. Mr. Haig gave it as his decided opinion that alcoholised wines had already displaced and were displacing spirits; and Mr. Currie, speaking in behalf of the distillers of England, and Mr. Graham Menzies and Mr. Jameson for Ireland and Scotland, testified in the same sense. Your Committee have been unable to satisfy themselves that there is evidence as to the use of wine and spirits interfering with each other, or that the former has really displaced the latter.

Your Committee would suggest that a loss on the revenue from wine, if it were not too important in amount, might be more than counterbalanced by the advantage to the general commercial interests of the kingdom, from an increased trade with the wine-growing countries; and the consideration of the wine duties may therefore properly be included in negotiations affecting our commercial relations with those countries.

EXTRACTS from the Times of 19th March, 1879, referred to on p. 1.

THE WINE DUTIES.

THE Government agreed last night to a concession which, though its meaning may be misinterpreted, and though it is so far to be regretted, has for some time past been plainly inevitable. Mr. Cartwright moved the resolution, which in former years he has unsuccessfully urged upon the House of Commons, for an inquiry into the incidence of the wine duties, and Mr. Bourke, while combating the arguments by which the resolution was supported, consented to the appointment of a select committee. There can be little doubt that in Spain and other countries in which the British tariff is assailed and retaliatory duties are threatened or actually imposed, the assent of the Government to Mr. Cartwright's demand for an inquiry will be regarded as an avowed surrender. The mischievous effect of such an impression is evident from the promptitude with which Mr. MacIver, the spokesman of the Reciprocity party in Parliament, caught at the occasion for insisting that the inquiry contemplated ought to include, not the question of the wine duties only, but the whole of our fiscal system. Mr. MacIver confidently assumed, from some casual expressions in the speech of the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, that a "reversal" of the free trade policy of the last quarter of a century was in view, and it is somewhat humiliating to reflect that Mr. Forster and the Chancellor of the Exchequer were compelled to repudiate this construction of the concession made to Mr. Cartwright. Nothing, Sir Stafford Northcote emphatically stated, could be more unwise or disadvantageous than any departure from the established principles of our fiscal system; "it was said that they were going to take a leaf out of the book of Spain; if they were, he hoped it was only for the purpose of tearing that leaf up." Yet, in spite of these assurances, and in spite also of the strictest limitation of the reference to the committee, it will be difficult to dispel the belief that the reconsideration of the wine duties has been extorted by the aggressive acts of the late Spanish Ministry. This victory is not likely to encourage the free trade party on the Continent. With us "reciprocity," as the system of menace and extortion has been absurdly named, is only a fancy; in other countries it is a policy, and one which, not less than the spirit of unmitigated protectionism, impedes the progress of commerce and industry. Sir Stafford Northcote last night hinted that when the claims of Spain and Portugal were settled another concession would possibly have to be made to France, in which country the wine-growing interest has been crying out for a reduction of the duty on cheap wines from one shilling to sixpence a gallon. That is a change in favour of which many arguments may be advanced both on fiscal and other grounds, though the time chosen for carrying it into effect is unluckily distinguished by the activity of the Protectionists in France as well as other Continental countries.

But, while it is no doubt to be regretted that protectionist and reciprocitarian heresies may receive encouragement from a misapprehension of our conduct, we cannot fail to recognize the fact that the Government had to choose between one of two evils, and in consenting to an inquiry into the wine duties chose decidedly the lesser of the two. Probably their decision will be regarded as a victory of an aggressive and retaliatory policy in Spain, but their rejection of Mr. Cartwright's proposal would have had an equally injurious influence on public opinion in foreign countries, and in a more mischievous way. The Spaniards, when we protest against their ill-treatment of British commerce, and when we attempt to convert them to sound economical views, meet us with the charge that we are ourselves false to free trade principles, since we maintain a differential duty against Spanish wines. Portugal and other wine growing countries make similar protests, and even France, though the Spaniards complain that she is unfairly favoured, is not contented. The Government have, indeed, proved in many despatches that the wine duties were not imposed with any purpose of differentiating in favour of the growths of some countries against those of others; but the Spaniards, the Portuguese, and, indeed, the wine-growers of some of our own colonies, remain unconvinced. Whatever may have been the original object of those duties, it is said they do in fact operate as differential duties, and until the British tariff has been altered in this respect, British free trade will be condemned as incomplete and inconsistent. It will be the duty of the committee to the appointment of which the Chancellor of the Exchequer willingly assented last night to investigate the working of the system established by Mr. Gladstone some nineteen years ago, and then confidently believed to be at once liberal and just. The experts of the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments furnished Mr. Gladstone with the calculations upon which the scale of the wine duties was settled, but we now find that every one of their inferences and many of their statements as to matters of fact are challenged, not only by foreign wine-growers but by competent persons in this country. Sir Stafford Northcote admitted last night that the Revenue Departments "were supposed to be always more or less prejudiced in such matters;" and it is at any rate permissible to say that there is a certain official conservatism in those departments, as in others, which causes them to be not altogether trustworthy judges of large schemes of reform. It is desirable that the arguments of the revenue departments, and the facts on which they found them, should be fairly discussed, as Sir Stafford Northcote says, "before a committee at which persons holding different views might be able to put them forward." It is possible that such a committee might come to the conclusion that the imposition of the two-and-sixpenny duty upon wines of more than 26 degrees of alcoholic strength does in fact exclude, as the Spanish Government contends, large quantities of natural or unfortified Peninsular vintages. It may also be shown that the admission of fortified wines under a certain strength would not be open to the objections hitherto accepted as, for instance, that they would subject the British manufacturers of spirits to unfair competition or would impair the home revenue from the spirit duties. It is by no means clear that even very strong and heavy foreign wines would become so popular with the British consumer as to diminish the consumption of gin and whisky, while the employment of such wines in illicit distillation on any considerable scale is declared by many experts in opposition to the official theory, to be unremunerative and impracticable. There are other questions of policy and of fact which the committee will be competent to decide, and which cannot be debated with advantage in the House of Commons. The substitution of a sliding scale for two fixed rates of duty, divided by a hard and fast line arbitrarily drawn has been hitherto opposed by the Treasury and the Customs on the ground that the revenue would be seriously impaired by the change. This view, however, has been energetically contested. It may be that its opponents will be able to convince the committee that the consumption of wine and the revenue obtained from it would be largely increased by a system which would graduate the duty according to a scale marking every five degrees of alcoholic strength.

We do not venture to anticipate the conclusions at which the committee may arrive, but it is evident that the questions which will be submitted to it are all open questions, and that there must be a vast body of evidence forthcoming—as, indeed, the correspondence we have published on the subject from time to time has shown—which ought to be weighed against the arguments of the revenue officials. If a case should be established against the existing duties, we must not be deterred from taking a course which sound economical doctrine, international equity, and fiscal expediency recommend, by the fear that our change of policy may be misconstrued by foolish people at home or abroad. We must be content to hope that by and by the Spaniards and the Portuguese, and other nations which now complain of our tariff, will recognize the sincerity with which we have all along endeavoured to carry out free trade, and to which whatever fiscal reforms we may now adopt will bear testimony once more. Nor is it of any use to show impatience at the perversity of foreigners in refusing to follow our example in fiscal legislation. Almost all European countries are passing through an economical crisis, and the wine-growing lands have special trials and temptations of their own. We print in another column a letter from our Special Correspondent which gives a startling account of the ravages of the phylloxera in the vineyards of Portugal, and of the warfare against a pest that threatens the very existence of port. There was a time when such a tale would have been received in this country with greater horror than the history of a sanguinary revolution in the Peninsular. Though port is no longer the favourite wine of Englishmen, it is still too valuable a commodity to be abandoned without a struggle, and even the apathetic Portuguese are making a stand against the insect enemy. But these difficulties, with which all the wine-growing countries of Europe have had one after another to contend, make the producers more and more keen in their rivalry. The duty of this country is to hold the balance even between all the competitors, and so far as we can do so without diminishing the Customs revenue, to encourage the importation of all sorts of wines and their general consumption in England. The more wine we buy from the Spaniards, the Portuguese, the French, and the Germans, the more British manufactures will those nations be able to use and to purchase.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE WINE DUTIES.

MR. CARTWRIGHT, who had given notice of a motion relating to the wine duties, said he had already twice called the attention of the House to the subject, and he had framed the resolution with which he would conclude so as to meet some of the objections which had formerly been urged against it. When he first submitted a motion on the subject, it was said to be an indictment against the system under which the wine duties had hitherto been levied in this country, and that a committee should be appointed to investigate it. He had also been obliged, with the view of making his case intelligible, to make use of many technical terms which he was glad to say could now be spared. The question had made progress, in proof of which he could quote official testimony. When last he had the honor of submitting the question to the opinion of the House they had the then recent despatch of Lord Derby in relation to the wine duties, which stated that he could not admit any argument drawn from the tariff system of other countries. He referred especially to the data furnished by experts in 1861, which had subsequently been confirmed by other investigations, as a sufficient warrant for saying that this country would not entertain proposals against the present system. That position, he was happy to say, the Government had now receded from. There had recently been issued a Blue-book containing the correspondence between this country and Spain, and, in a closing despatch, Lord Salisbury did not discourage the idea of inquiry and investigation with a view to a revision of the wine duties in detail. This motion offered the Government the opportunity of which Lord Salisbury held out the hope that they might avail themselves when it occurred. There were reports from our representatives in foreign countries, and they showed that in six out of fifteen States there was no alcoholic test, but the duty was levied at a uniform rate. Italy, Greece, Austria (including Hungary), Germany, and Switzerland were wine-producing countries, which might be supposed to have an interest in protecting themselves against the importation of foreign wines; and in these countries there was no alcoholic test, but there were high excise duties upon spirits. Not one of the countries that had an alcoholic test had fixed the standard so low as 26deg. Five of them admitted wine as a merchantable article up to a strength of 37deg., and one of them as high as 42deg. This last was the United States, which might be considered to some extent a wine-producing country, and which certainly had not a liberal tariff. Russia had a uniform duty of 2s. per gallon, and an excise duty upon spirits which amounted to 12s. 4d. per gallon. From the facts the inference was deducible that our system differed from the system of any other country, and, therefore, might be regarded as an anomalous one. It dated from the time of the Anglo-French Treaty, and it was designed to facilitate the introduction of "natural" wines, containing only that admixture of brandy which was necessary to make them a merchantable article. The intention of the framers of that system had been defeated, and the reason was that at that time each party used language which the other did not understand in reference to the strength of wine to be admitted at a particular duty. The standard of 26 degrees was a purely haphazard one, and it had been admitted by the Inland Revenue and the Customs and by the Government itself that its maintenance was not essential to the safe-guarding of the revenue. The Government, indeed, had gone further, and admitted that the present system not only could, but ought to be modified. It was feared that the raising of the standard would open the door to illicit distillation, but the danger he believed was altogether imaginary. If illicit distillation was likely to be resorted to, it would go on now, because the materials for it could be brought into this country more easily under other forms than that of high-class wines. In France the Customs duty on wines was 3d. per gallon and on spirits 6s. 8d. per gallon, yet he was informed on the best authority that illicit distillation in France practically did not exist. He attached very little faith to the reports of experts in regard to the strength of wines. In 1869 a certain quantity of Portuguese wine was imported into this country and reported to be just under 26 degrees of strength, but after being some time in bond it was examined and found to be of 30 degrees of strength. One great evil of the present system was that it was prejudicial to the growth of natural wines. There was no incentive to growers to give themselves the trouble to produce and send us the higher class of wines, the addition to which of spirits insured their conservation. The subject had an intimate bearing upon our commercial relations with Spain. He was not about to defend the fiscal system of Spain, and would allude only to facts which were well established. The facts to which he referred were recorded in the Blue-book, and showed that British goods entering Spain were subject to differential duties in comparison with similar goods of other countries amounting to from 13 to 58 per cent. against British goods. He did not exaggerate when he said that because of that fact several branches of industry in this country were very materially affected. Hon.

members would find the reasons for and against the placing of our trade at that disadvantage stated in the Blue-book by the Spanish agent and the British agent, the reason stated in support of it being that Spanish wine exported to this country was so heavily handicapped that the trade could not be developed. He trusted the House would be told by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the promise contained in Lord Salisbury's despatch would be speedily carried out, with a view that the Spanish Government might be moved to relieve our trade with Spain from the disadvantage under which it now laboured. It would be seen that the Spanish Government repeatedly complained of the existing duties, and had asked repeatedly that they might be revised, but that a deaf ear had always been turned to them. The resolution he was about to submit to the House would give Her Majesty's Government an opportunity of saying that the promise or declaration contained in the despatch of Lord Salisbury would be acted upon, and that on the first favourable opportunity they would take into consideration the duties at present assessed with a view to their revision. He had been told in former years that the inquiry for which he asked was not necessary, but he hoped the same answer would not now be given. He did not ask for a one-sided inquiry, but for a full investigation of the subject, with a view especially to its bearing upon the general fiscal system of this country. There were many grounds for investigation, and the system at present existing was a haphazard and illogical one. To refuse the appointment of a committee would be hardly to act up to the declaration made in Lord Salisbury's despatch. He asked whether it would not be right and fair to submit the question, which largely affected our trading relations with other countries, to an investigation which should not be a departmental investigation. If the question were submitted, it should not be inquired into by men who, however competent, however conversant with what the public interest demanded, yet were still necessarily biased with what he might call official superstition, but should be submitted to the fair and sifting inquiry of a committee of the House of Commons. The hon. member concluded by moving, "That in the opinion of this House, it is desirable that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the system under which Customs duties are now levied in this country on wine, and into its results, fiscal and commercial."

Mr. COBBOLD, who seconded the motion, observed that it contained a request which had been asked for not by those whose views might naturally be thought to be interested, but by foreign countries with whom it must be our object and, he trusted, our desire to be on the most friendly footing in all commercial matters. In The Times of Saturday there had appeared a leading article on the subject before the House, which the severest critic would allow was written very properly and carefully. He should be sorry if the House were led to believe that in the "battle of the tariffs" we were at the outset to be met by an unfriendly spirit on the part of other countries. No greater proof that this would not be the case could be given than by a speech delivered ten days ago in the Chamber of Deputies at Lisbon by a supporter of the Government, and which was to the effect that they should not suspect the good intentions of England in respect of their African colonies, but should co-operate with her in extending civilization. It should not be forgotten that as iron ore, coal, and lead formed the staple of the products of this country, so was the vine the staple property of the Peninsula. In conclusion the hon. gentleman said he hoped he had adduced sufficient reasons to induce the House to assent to the motion. The appointment of a committee could not fail to have an important influence on our commercial relations with other lands.

Mr. BOURKE thought it would be convenient if he stated at that early stage of the debate what was the opinion of the Government on the motion submitted to the House by the hon. member for Oxfordshire (Mr. Cartwright). The question was not a very novel one, and had received the attention of various Governments and Parliaments; but he was willing to admit that there were circumstances connected with foreign tariffs existing at the present time which rendered the subject well worthy of renewed consideration. The question of the wine duties was, no doubt, a complicated, and, at the same time, in some aspects a technical one, and before giving an opinion upon it, one should have a clear idea of the principles upon which the duties were at present imposed. It should be, in the first place, recollected that an excise duty of 10s. per gallon was levied upon spirits, and that a similar import duty was also levied. The revenue derived from these duties amounted to 20 millions, so that our fiscal system depended in a great measure upon their maintenance. It should also be borne in mind that in justice to our home distillers it would be unfair to impose a much less duty upon spirits that were mixed with wine. There were but three ways in which the duty upon wine could be assessed—first by specific duties, secondly by ad valorem duties, and thirdly by duties calculated according to an alcoholic scale. He was aware that many commercial authorities, both within that House and out of doors, were enamoured of the ad valorem duties. No doubt in many branches of trade, where there was no difficulty in ascertaining the precise value of the goods on which a duty was to be raised, those duties worked excellently; but that was not the case in others, where the value of goods was governed by the fluctuations in trade, in the cost of production of the raw material, of labour, by supply and demand, by fashion and by taste. In the latter cases to attempt to impose ad valorem duties would lead to great inconvenience and injustice; and indeed in this country they had been practically abandoned. It was very difficult to apply the principle of ad valorem duties to wines, chiefly because, from the vast number of classifications among the different kinds of wine, it would be impossible to give satisfaction to the trade. Thus the price of claret ranged from £6 to £65, of port from £20 to £90, and of sherry from £14 to £180 per hogshead. In these circumstances, whatever value might be fixed upon a particular kind of wine by the Government officer, it would probably be immediately challenged by the trade. The right hon. gentleman, the member for Greenwich, before bringing in his Bill dealing with wines and spirits in 1860, had been in favour of applying the principle of ad valorem duties to the former, but he found from the evidence which was taken by the committee which had sat to consider the subject that it would be impracticable to apply it to them. In looking at this subject it must not be forgotten that these duties were to be imposed for revenue purposes only; that goods of the same kind, whether coming from the colonies or from foreign nations, were to be subject to the same duties; that where an excise tax was levied at home it was permitted by common consent to levy a corresponding duty upon similar goods coming from abroad; and that for many years we had adhered to the principle of taxing the necessaries of life on a low scale. It was in accordance with those principles that the right hon. member for Greenwich had laid a high tax upon spirits, and had adopted an alcoholic scale with regard to wines, for the double purpose of maintaining the revenue and of giving encouragement to the introduction of cheap wines. He could not concur with the hon. member for Oxfordshire that the right hon. member for Greenwich had adopted the principle of an alcoholic scale on the result of haphazard experiments, because those experiments had been most carefully made at the Custom-house in London, according to the same system of measurement, and therefore there was no reason to believe that they were untrustworthy. He was quite prepared to admit that the system based on 4 degrees of scale fixed by the right hon. gentleman was altered two years afterwards to one based on 2 degrees of scale, which was found to be more convenient. From experiments conducted all over Europe, it had been ascertained that the natural alcoholic strength of wine was 26 degrees. In 1874, of 488 samples of wine tested, 282 were found to have an alcoholic strength of under 24 degrees, while that of the remaining 206 fortified wines was over 32 degrees; and of 500 samples of Catalonian wines it was found that the majority could be introduced into this country with an alcoholic strength of 26 degrees. It was upon that scale that the wine duties had been fixed. The hon. member for Oxfordshire had asserted that other countries had not followed our example in this matter, but he did not proceed to show that the principle they adopted was the right one. But even if foreign countries were correct in the principle they had adopted, he contended that no analogy could be drawn between the principle that should govern the wine duties in this country and that which governed those duties in other countries. The hon. gentleman had mentioned certain countries where the alcoholic scale was totally disregarded; but he could not quite understand what deduction he drew from this. There could be no doubt that the wine duties were much higher relatively to the spirit duties in foreign countries than they were in this country. For instance, in Denmark the duty per gallon upon wine was 1s. and upon spirit 1s. 6d.; whereas our highest duty upon wine was 2s. 6d. and our duty upon spirit was 10s. The country which in this respect most nearly resembled our own was the United States, and there the duty upon wine was 1s. 8d. and upon spirit 9s. 6d. But in France the duty upon wine was 5d. and upon spirits 6s. 8d. This showed a very great difference as compared with England. He doubted the statement that the consumption would be increased by lowering the tariff. With regard to the low-priced wines this was no doubt true, for experience showed that since the right hon. gentleman the member for Greenwich had altered the scale low-priced wines had come into this country in great quantities, and there had also been a great increase in the consumption of natural wines from Spain. But it was not clear that an alteration in the duty of the highly alcoholized wines would have the same effect, for these strong wines were not drunk as a beverage. He believed that even if the duty were very much lowered their consumption would not be greatly increased. Spain had put forward her case with great persistency, but we had told her over and over again she was wrong in saying that we imposed any differential duties upon her wines as compared with those of France. What we said to her was this,—“If you choose to send your natural wines into England, they are received exactly on the same scale as French wines; but if you mix your wine with spirit, it has no claim to be taxed in the same way as the natural wine of France.” The importation of natural wines from Spain had increased very much during the last few months. The increase this year of Spanish wine under the degree of 26 was 36,994 gallons. This gave us ground to believe that if Spain really made an effort to introduce natural wines into this country, their consumption would largely increase. It was no doubt true that the exports of certain commodities from England to Spain had fallen off, but it must be borne in mind that the exports to all foreign countries from this country had fallen off very much. There was no proof whatever that in the case of Spain the falling off was altogether due to the unfair treatment we had received in the matter of the tariffs. Our exports to France had fallen off this year about two millions, our exports to Germany about £500,000, to Italy about one million, and to Spain about £800,000. If we considered the condition of Spain in regard to the wine duties, we could not say that she had fared badly under the alteration made in 1860. Since that date the amount of wine imported from Spain had increased more than 80 per cent. If any alteration in the wine duties were to be made the basis for future commercial treaties, it ought to be clearly understood that other countries as well as Spain had to be considered. (Hear.) Those persons who would reduce the duty upon French wines from 1s. a gallon to 6d. should bear in mind what Spain would say to that, for the highly-fortified wines of Spain ought not to be introduced at the same rate, and, therefore, what Spain called the differential rate would have to remain the same. Although we should lose a large amount of revenue, he thought certain modifications in the wine duties might be made which would prove advantageous to British commerce, but it ought to be well understood that these should lead not only to a modification of foreign tariffs, but also to the removal of many other impediments to British commerce, such as delays and defective administration which existed in foreign countries. (Hear, hear.) Of these impediments they were hearing every day. If we looked favourably upon any change with respect to our wine duties, he thought we had a right to demand of Spain or other countries a great deal more than to be put upon the “most favoured nation” footing, for we had a claim to that already. We must remind them at any rate that our revenue had to be considered, and that it would be very much endangered by any disturbance in the spirit trade. The House would naturally desire to know what the Government proposed to do with regard to the resolution which was before it. (Hear.) He regretted that the hon. gentleman had not told them what was the opinion of the trade upon this subject. But they had reason to believe that the granting of a committee to consider the whole subject would have a good effect upon foreign Governments (hear) as showing the general opinion of the House. In these circumstances the Government were disposed to grant the committee proposed by the hon. member for Oxfordshire. (Hear.) With regard to the motion, it would be more convenient if the hon. member would withdraw it and confer with his right hon. friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in order to settle what the order of reference should be.

Mr. BAXTER expressed great gratification at the course the Government had taken. Last year the opinion of the House had shown itself to be entirely in favour of an investigation of the subject. The case was overwhelmingly in favour of the proposal of the hon. member for Oxfordshire. He thought there were some points in the speech of the hon. gentleman opposite which it would be very easy to answer; but as the Government had acceded to the proposal of his hon. friend he would not enter upon a consideration of them now.

Mr. SAMUELSON said that at the present moment, by the action of the French Government, we had been placed in a position to make considerable changes in the duties on wines. Considering that there had been an extraordinary falling off in our exports to France, that that country was specially favoured by the mode in which our import duties were levied, and that an opportunity had been afforded for revising the duty on one of our principal imports, he thought that the whole subject of our commercial relations with France should receive close attention. With regard to Spain, our chief endeavour ought to be to allay the irritation that had been caused by the illicit trade from Gibraltar and to prevent the Rock from being in future the haunt and refuge of smugglers. It was to be hoped that the Spanish people would soon perceive our sincerity in wishing for more amicable relations with them, and he desired to impress upon the Government the necessity of doing their utmost for the attainment of that object. (Hear.) Mr.

Mr. RITCHIE commended the Government for assenting to the motion, as the question was one that had for a long time demanded a settlement. The appointment of a committee would be beneficial, though he was not sure that it was the simplest or most practical arrangement that might be arrived at. The Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs had said that it was not necessary for Spain to export her wine at 26 per cent. of spirit, but that was the very point the Spaniards denied, and they said distinctly that they could not export any large quantity below that strength. If further facilities were given for the export of the natural wines of Spain, he did not believe that our own distillers would be prejudiced. Nor was it necessary to make any such arrangement as had been proposed by his hon. friend; there might be a sliding scale, so that wine might come in at a duty somewhere between 1s. and 2s. 6d. The hon. gentleman had said that Spain had no cause of complaint, because she received the same treatment as other countries; but as a matter of fact, if she could not send her natural wines at a strength below 26 per cent., while other countries could do so, she was nominally on an equality, but actually at a disadvantage. (Hear.) The hon. gentleman who had introduced the motion had argued that Spain, in putting on English goods a differential duty, had done an unjustifiable thing; but for his own part he thought that the course taken by the Spanish Government might be defended on many grounds. Spain saw that she was placed at a great disadvantage as compared with other wine-growing countries, and she therefore felt justified in imposing heavier duties on English commodities. He hoped the Government would take a leaf out of her book, and, while modifying the duties on Spanish wine, would insist that she should take off the differential duties she had placed on English goods.

Sir J. M'KENNA hoped the Government would make the inquiry sufficiently wide to include the consideration of the duties levied on pure alcohol.

Mr. MACIVER thought the terms of reference ought to be so drawn up as to embrace the questions relating to the whole of the fiscal arrangements between one country and another. He was glad, he might add, to feel justified in inferring from what had fallen from the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs that there was likely to be a reversal of the policy of the last twenty-three years, with regard at least to the negotiation of treaties of commerce, and that we were about to come back to taking a businesslike view of that which we got and that which we undertook to give.

Mr. W. E. FORSTER was very glad that the committee was about to be granted, but could not regard the concession as meaning a reversal of the commercial policy which we had of late years pursued. As to the terms of reference, he hoped they would include all questions which could be fairly raised in connection with the wine duties, but they ought not, in his opinion, to embrace any other subject. Such an inquiry he looked upon as being entirely consistent with Free-trade measures, and not at all in accordance with those principles which were in some quarters advocated under the name of reciprocity. The claim of the Spanish Government practically was that we had set up a differential duty as against them, and it would be for the committee to examine into the grounds on which that statement was made. For his own part, although he did not mean to enter into the question on the present occasion, there was, he thought, much ground for it, and if we established a differential duty against Spain or any other country we adopted that course in opposition to our avowed policy. As to France, he most earnestly desired to see her lower her tariff, but it must at the same time be borne in mind that there was in the case of France, as in that of Spain, a differential duty levied against us by the French Government. He was not surprised that the Government had not pledged themselves to the exact terms of the motion, but when those terms came to be looked at he did not think it would very easy to improve them. At any rate he was very anxious that the last few words of the motion should be adhered to—that was to say, that the reference should include an inquiry “into the system under which Customs duties are now levied in this country on wine, and into its results, fiscal and commercial.”

Mr. WHITWELL said the present system of our levying duty on wine was injurious to our colonies as well as to Spain.

Mr. NORWOOD hoped the inquiry would be limited to the question whether our mode of levying duty on wine was an equitable one. (Hear.)

Mr. S. LLOYD was glad that the Government had granted this committee. France imposed taxes on two or three articles which were vexatious to commerce and a little inconsistent with that friendly spirit which ought to exist between France and this country in commercial matters. He hoped that the Government would direct their attention to that matter when the treaty with France was negotiated.

Mr. JACOB BRIGHT trusted that the speech of the Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs did not represent the feeling of the Government on this question. That speech was the only drawback to the satisfaction caused by the Government granting this inquiry.

After a few words from Mr. YEAMAN and Mr. BIGGAR, the latter thinking that the duties on wine ought to be increased rather than decreased,—

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said he was gratified to find that the course which the Government had taken in assenting to the appointment of the committee had commanded such general assent on the part of the House. He wished at the same time to say that, agreeing with the right hon. gentleman the member for Bradford, he entirely repudiated any idea that they were about, in taking this step, to initiate anything in the nature of a reversal of the established commercial policy of the country. It was said just now that they were going to take a leaf out of the book of Spain. If they were, he hoped it was only for the purpose of tearing that leaf up, because there could be nothing more unwise or disadvantageous than for this country to undertake a reversal of that policy. But there were some reasons, both fiscal and commercial, why they might expect benefit from an inquiry of this kind, and he wished to say, specially with regard to the commercial reasons, that while he disclaimed the purpose of using the wine duties as retaliatory duties on Spain or any other country, he thought it was desirable that they should get rid of the difficulty which they found in their way when attempts were made to enter into commercial negotiations with any of those countries. We go to Spain, Portugal, and other countries, and we begin to discuss commercial questions, and we meet with this argument,—“Oh, you have established a differential rate of duty in the matter of wine.” He denied that, and we proved in a conclusive manner that this duty was not put on for differential purposes and could not fairly be so described. However well that doctrine might be put forward, there could be no doubt that practically it was the impression in many countries that the scale of duty was of a differential character; and not only was that the impression in some foreign countries, but it was an impression which derived strength its from being entertained by a great many persons at home.

home. But they must search the whole question to the bottom and have it, not only on the authority of the Revenue Department, who were supposed to be always more or less prejudiced in the matter, but fairly discussed before a committee at which persons holding different views might be able to put forward the views they hold, and let the House see what amount of truth there was in this allegation. One thing was perfectly clear, the duty was not originally introduced with any such purpose—the quarter from which it came was sufficient proof of that. He did not say it might not be proved in the working to have an effect not contemplated at the time it was framed. There was another point adverted to in the course of that discussion—with regard to French wines and the duties upon them. It had been truly said, and suggestions had been made in the course of communications between the persons who had taken an interest in extending our commercial relations with France, that there were large quantities of French wines which cannot come in at the shilling duty, and it had been put before them whether they would consider the introduction of wines of a low class at a lower duty. He did not express any opinion on the proposal on its merits, but they were utterly precluded from considering such a question as long as there was this grievance on the part of Spain and Portugal, which would be greatly increased by something of that sort. There were many matters of detail into which he would not go ; and he should be glad to consult with the hon. gentleman and others outside before the terms of the reference were absolutely settled. He would not be disposed to quarrel with the terms suggested, but he agreed with the right hon. gentleman that the reference ought to be in terms which, while fairly covering the wine duties, would not extend to questions of a wider character.

The motion was then, by leave, withdrawn.

AND
(CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING.)

Presented to Parliament by Command.

Cabinet Minute.

MINUTE for His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor.

Your Excellency's Advisers are desirous of obtaining from Her Majesty's Imperial Government the latest and fullest information on the two following subjects :—

- 1st. Copies of any resolutions passed, or submitted and not passed, and of any new rules introduced during the last three or four years for modifying the practice of the House of Commons either when the Speaker is in the Chair or when the House is in Committee, and especially with reference to abuses of privilege by motions of adjournment and motions that the Chairman leave the Chair in Committee. Also, a reference to speeches in the printed debates, or published in other form, on the subject.
- 2nd. Copies of all regulations affecting different branches of the Civil Service, and of any special orders or instructions as to Civil Servants acting as Directors of Banks or private Companies, taking part in Parliamentary elections, or writing in political newspapers. Also, copies of any law or regulation defining the position of any class of the Civil Servants in relation to the right of voting for Members of Parliament.

Your Excellency will much oblige by transmitting this minute to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies by the mail leaving to-day.
Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 22 May, 1879.

HENRY PARKES.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies to The Governor of New South Wales.

My Lord,

Downing-street, 9 August, 1879.

In reply to the Lieutenant-Governor's despatch, No. 35, of the 22nd of May, asking for information as to certain rules of the House of Commons, and also as to the official regulations which relate to the conduct of Civil Officers in this Country,—I have the honor to transmit to you, for the information of your Government, the accompanying copy of a letter written by the direction of the Speaker of the House of Commons, and also copy of one from the Treasury, which communications have been received in reply to references made on the points in question.

I enclose the Report of the Civil Service Commissioners referred to in the Treasury letter.

I have, &c.,

M. E. HICKS BEACH.

[Enclosures.]

The Treasury to The Colonial Office.

Sir,

Treasury Chambers, 5 August, 1879.

I am directed, by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 19th ultimo, wherein, by direction of the Secretary of State, you inform my Lords that an application has been received from the Governor of New South Wales for the supply of any official regulations which may exist relating to the conduct of Civil Officers in this Country, and particularly for the supply of copies of all regulations affecting different branches of the Civil Service, and of any special orders or instructions as to Civil Servants acting as Directors of Banks or private Companies, taking part in Parliamentary elections, or writing in political newspapers, and also with copies of any law or regulation defining the position of any class of the Civil Servants in relation to the right of voting for Members of Parliament, and wherein you go on to request that Sir Michael Hicks Beach may be supplied with such information as may be in the possession of my Lords on these points, for transmission to the Governor of New South Wales.

As the Secretary of State is no doubt aware, there does not exist any general code of regulations for the Civil Service as a body, the practice having been to leave to the several Ministers or other authorities at the head of the Executive Departments great freedom as to the regulations which they think fit to prescribe for the government of their officers, all of whom, without distinction of rank, hold their offices at the pleasure of these same several authorities.

As regards the conduct of Civil Officers generally, it is hardly necessary to say that their character for the time being depends upon tradition and example far more than upon any artificial regulations, however skilfully they may be framed. No doubt, however, the practical independence of their tenure of office in the United Kingdom, combined with their legal tenure of it at pleasure only, is well calculated to create in them a spirit of self-respect and of obedience, which are among the most valuable features of a Public Service, and could not possibly exist in the same degree in such a Service, if its personnel changed with the Parliamentary Government of the day, or if promotion within its ranks were determined in any serious degree by considerations of party. The Service being that of the Crown, is less affected, in its collective interest, by a change of Ministry than many, perhaps than most other classes of society.

Another powerful element in determining the character of the Service is, by the system of superannuation, whereby the Civil Servant may be said to give bail for diligence and fidelity, at least to this extent,—that his obtaining a pension at the end of his service depends upon his producing a certificate from the Head of his Department that he has been diligent and faithful in the discharge of his duty. Fixed statutory conditions and scales of pension (which can only be increased for special service, or diminished for special demerit, and which are hardly ever raised in either direction) tend further, by the exclusion of favouritism and caprice, to impress the Civil Service with a respectable and stable character.

So far as conduct generally goes, my Lords are of opinion that a permanent and pensionable Civil Service offers the best guarantees for good behaviour; and they think that the attention of the Colonial Government may be usefully drawn to the permanent character of the Imperial Civil Service, and to the Superannuation Acts of 1834 and 1859, the last (17th) section of which connects pensions with the certificates of the Civil Service Commissioners.

The constitution of this Commission—an independent body, not changing with the Ministry of the day, and watching over the observance of the rules laid down for admission into the Civil Service—has a powerful effect in determining and maintaining its character. The last (22nd) Report of the Civil Service Commissioners contains, inter alia, copies of the more material of the orders in Council bearing on this part of the subject. The orders dated 4th June, 1870, and 12th February, 1876, are principally deserving of attention.

As regards the particular points on which the Colonial Government desires information, I am to transmit to you herewith copies of the documents specified in the margin.

As regards trading by Civil Servants, a Select Committee of the House of Commons is now sitting on the question, and it is possible that further regulations may be founded upon its Report.

I am to add that no disability from voting in Parliamentary elections is now imposed on persons in the immediate service of the Crown in Great Britain; those which formerly existed having been removed by the Acts 31-2 Vic. 73 and 37-8 Vic. c. 22.

One exception must be made to this last statement in respect of the Royal Irish Constabulary, which, although in the direct service of the Crown, is disqualified from voting for Members of Parliament in Ireland.

The County Constabulary and the Borough Police, in Great Britain, are not in the direct service of the Crown, but the members of it are disqualified from voting for Members of Parliament in the Counties or Boroughs where they are employed.

I am, &c.,

R. R. W. LINGEN.

The Secretary to the Speaker of the House of Commons to Sir M. Hicks Beach.

Sir,

House of Commons, 24 July, 1879.

I am directed by the Speaker to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 19th instant, in which you inform him that you have received a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of New South Wales, containing an application from the Colonial Government requesting that they may be furnished with copies of any resolutions passed, or submitted and not passed, and of any new rules introduced during the last few years, for modifying the practice of the House of Commons either when the Speaker is in the Chair or when the House is in Committee, and especially with reference to abuses of privilege by motions of adjournment and motions that the Chairman leave the Chair in Committee, and they also ask to be furnished with a "reference to speeches in the printed debates, or published in other form on the subject."

In reply, I have to state that all the information upon this subject is to be found in the Journals of the House, and other Papers printed by order of the House, with copies of which the Government of New South Wales is already supplied under the Speaker's authority.

There is no Parliamentary Paper containing any such summary or analysis of the proceedings of the House in regard to this question as the despatch of the Lieutenant-Governor would seem to indicate, and it is therefore not in the Speaker's power to supply the Colonial Government with any further information upon it.

I have, &c.,

C. W. CAMPION.

Treasury Minute, dated November 30, 1868.

THE attention of this Board has been frequently given to cases of bankruptcy and insolvency on the part of persons holding offices in the Public Service, and likewise to a practice which has been found to prevail, to some extent, amongst clerks and others, of putting their names on what are called accommodation bills, and then getting themselves involved in the pecuniary difficulties of others.

My Lords have reason to believe that there are persons, discounters of bills, who, taking advantage of the inexperience of young men usually when they first enter into the Public Service, and inducing them to put their names on bills, supply them with money at exorbitant rates of interest, in the expectation that by threats of the exposure and consequent dismissal of these young men, their parents or other relatives may be induced to discharge these exorbitant demands.

It has been the anxious desire of every Department in the State of late years, and Parliament has liberally co-operated, to raise the Civil Servants of the Crown in efficiency and general estimation; but it is obvious that all efforts on the part of Government or the Heads of Departments to raise the standard of the Civil Service, must be to a great extent unsuccessful so long as members of the Service thus allow themselves to be involved in pecuniary difficulties, and to become the victims of usurious money-lenders.

It is unnecessary for my Lords to point out that this pernicious practice must be destructive of those feelings of honor and independence which my Lords are happy to state are, and their Lordships trust will be always, characteristic of all classes of Her Majesty's Civil Servants. The young man who puts his name upon a bill for a sum of money, suffering a discount which sometimes amounts, as my Lords are informed, to 50 or even 60 per cent. must necessarily lose all feelings of independence and self-respect; he becomes the miserable dependant of the usurer who has ministered to his extravagance; his course must be downwards, and he too frequently resorts to the meanness of an untruth, in the hope of concealing his indiscretion or extravagance.

Very painful instances have occurred, in which, from these causes, my Lords have been obliged to dismiss from the Civil Service of Her Majesty gentlemen whose abilities and attainments might have raised them to high positions.

But the practices referred to lead to further and serious public inconvenience: not only does the general character of the Service suffer materially, but the value of the individual officer is necessarily deteriorated by the position in which he is placed in consequence of such improvident habits. As observed in a minute of the Board of Stamps and Taxes, dated the 23rd of June, 1862, "an efficient performance of his official duty is not to be expected from any person involved in pecuniary difficulties, as the time and thoughts of such a person, instead of being engaged in his official business, must necessarily be occupied in constant efforts to meet the exigencies of the day; and further, it is highly inexpedient that any officer in such circumstances should be placed in a position of trust."

Not unfrequently the pecuniary embarrassment of an employé in the Public Service is the cause of absence from his duties, either with the view of avoiding the importunity of his creditors or of obtaining protection under the Bankruptcy Act. And where such protection is accorded, independently of the inconvenience and discredit to the Service, as is well observed in a minute of the Board of Customs of 9th April, 1866, "the officer is placed by this course in a very difficult position, as it generally happens that upon the final discharge of the party, the Court orders a portion of his salary to be appropriated to the liquidation of his debts, varying in amount according to the circumstances of each case. By this course the Public Service is damaged. The officer upon his return to duty is called upon to act, very probably in a responsible situation, with diminished salary, disproportional to the value of the service required of him, and with a character in some manner impaired."

It is the firm determination of the Board of Treasury to adopt every means within their Lordships' power for correcting such evils as these in the Public Service; and with this object my Lords have caused to be prepared, for the guidance of the Departments subordinate to this Board, the accompanying Rules, founded upon those which have been long in existence in the Revenue Establishments, and in the Audit Department. Their Lordships desire that these Rules may be transmitted to all public departments, in the hope that by a uniform course of action in such cases by the Heads of Offices an effectual check may be placed upon the practices referred to.

My Lords, however, appeal with confidence not only to the Heads of Departments and gentlemen of experience and position in the Civil Service, but to the junior members of the Service themselves, to co-operate with them in repressing the evils to which they have referred.

Appointments in the Civil Service, at the very outset, are now made the reward of merit. Promotion by merit is the established rule in the Service, and to every young man who becomes the servant of the Crown in the Civil Service a way is open to independence and even eminence.

But my Lords are desirous of impressing upon the members of the Civil Service that in proportion as these advantages are increased, in the same degree does it become imperative as a duty, and one which my Lords on their parts are, to the utmost of their power, resolved to discharge, to maintain rigidly the moral standard of the Service and the independent position of its members.

My Lords are fully aware that there are cases in which pecuniary embarrassments are the result of causes beyond control. A gentleman in the Civil Service with a small salary may unavoidably fall into difficulties from sickness in his family, or from other similar causes; there can be no discredit in such cases, and there will be found no indisposition to treat them with the consideration they deserve.

The rules which my Lords would enforce and recommend for general observance are as follows:—

1. That it is to be understood that serious pecuniary embarrassment, from whatever cause, must be regarded as a circumstance which necessarily has the effect of impairing the efficiency of a public servant, and of rendering him less valuable than he would otherwise be.
2. That such embarrassment, if occasioned by imprudence or other reprehensible cause, will be held to be an offence, as affecting the respectability of the Service and the trustworthiness of the individual; any person who has so thus conducted himself will be considered to have forfeited that honorable position in the Service which is necessary to give him a claim to promotion or increase of salary from length of service; and these benefits will not be permitted to accrue to him again until he shall have relieved himself from the discredit of such a position. Aggravated cases of this description will be noticed whenever they become known; and such measures will be taken, either in the manner above adverted to, or in a manner more summary and severe, as the circumstances may appear to deserve.
3. That the mere fact, under whatever plea, of becoming a party to accommodation bills, whether for his own purposes or for another person, and whether resulting in pecuniary embarrassment or not, will subject a Civil Servant to the consequences described in the preceding paragraph.
4. That in the event of any Civil Servant being arrested, or being adjudicated a bankrupt, or entering into a composition with his creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, he will, on the fact being known, be suspended from duty and salary, and will not be reinstated unless, after examination of the facts and of the schedule prepared by the Court, it shall appear that his difficulties have been occasioned by unavoidable misfortune and not by extravagance or culpable improvidence, or unless the case shall be characterized by previous circumstances of extenuation.
5. That any person who shall not immediately, on his being arrested, or proceedings being taken with a view to bankruptcy, inform the Head of his Department of the fact, shall, upon its becoming known, be removed from the Service without any expectation of being reinstated.

Treasury Minute, dated 3rd November, 1871.

THE Lords of the Treasury refer to their Minute dated 1st March, 1865; to the Private Act 22 Vict., cap. 25, of the European Assurance Society; to the Public Act, 30-1 Vict., cap. 108 (the "Guarantee by Companies Act, 1867"); to their Certificate granted under this last-mentioned Act to the Provident Clerks and General Guarantee Association, Limited (which Certificate was published in the "London Gazette" of 18th of February, 1868); to the Petition now before the Court of Chancery for winding up the said European Society; and to their Lordships' Circulars to the Public Departments of March (1578) and May (8160) last.

Their Lordships notice the objections which are inseparable from the arrangements in force under the above recited Minute and Acts, partly because, having for their object to protect the Government against the acceptance of insufficient security for the honesty of its servants, they, in fact, commit it to warranting the solvency of certain commercial partnerships, and still more because they exhibit peculation under the aspect, not of crime, but of loss.

My Lords come to the conclusion that, as long as security is retained, the preferable forms of it are bonds by sureties, or deposits of stock. They do not, however, feel at liberty, after the legislation (although permissive only) which has passed, and after the practice which has grown up under it, to direct the Heads of the Public Departments to accept only these two forms of security. At the same time, my Lords consider it advisable to discontinue all action of their own in granting further Certificates to Guarantee Societies under the Act of 1867, and they leave it open to the Heads of Departments to determine, on their own judgment and responsibility, from which of such Societies, if from any, and whether certified or not under the Act of 1867, they will accept security for the honesty of those among their officers who are required to give it.

Although my Lords decided in the earlier part of this year, as they announced by their Circular (8160) of May last, not to proceed with the legislation which would be necessary before the taking of security for public officers could be abolished altogether, yet they became strongly persuaded, in the course of their inquiries, that the exposure and prosecution of defaulters, without exception and under all circumstances, offer in the long run a much more efficacious guarantee against the dishonesty of public servants than any pecuniary indemnity which it is possible to exact from them. My Lords, therefore, do not regard the existence of any such indemnity as affording a reason why exposure and prosecution should not severally be enforced to the full against each individual defaulter; and my Lords desire that every such case be reported to them, whether or not the amount be recovered.

While my Lords look to a gradual restriction of the number of cases in which security will continue to be required, according to the principles stated in their said Circular (8160) of May last, they contemplate, at the same time, measures which will ensure more effectually than at present that the attention of Parliament be directed to the name and to the Department of each defaulter.

ADVERTING to the Circular (8466), of which a copy is annexed hereto (over), addressed to you on the 3rd of June, 1873, respecting the unauthorized communication to the public Press of information derived from official sources, I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to forward to you for your information the enclosed copy of a Minute of this Board, which my Lords regret to have felt the necessity of adopting, upon the same subject.

I have, &c.

Treasury Chambers, 3rd June, 1873.

I AM directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to state for that their attention has been called to certain cases which have recently occurred in which information derived from official sources has been communicated without authority to the public Press, apparently by members of the Civil Service.

My Lords have entire confidence that this irregular conveyance of information is a practice to which the great body of the Civil Service would not stoop. But however few may be the officers in fault, their acts cause extensive mischief by sowing suspicion and by discrediting the Service.

My Lords are of opinion that such breaches of official confidence are offences of the very gravest character which a public officer can commit; and they will not hesitate, in any case where they themselves possess the power of dismissal, to visit such an offence with this extreme penalty.

My Lords, in communicating their views upon this subject to the Heads of Departments, do so in full confidence that they are representing the public opinion of the Service itself, which may be trusted to check practices injurious to its character for fidelity and honor, as soon as attention has been called to their existence.

I am, &c.,

R. R. W. LINGEN.

Treasury Chambers, Whitehall, February, 1875.

THE First Lord and the Chancellor of the Exchequer state to the Board that the attention of Her Majesty's Government has recently been directed to a number of instances in which information, obviously derived from official sources, has been communicated to the newspapers and other periodicals without the sanction of the Heads of the Offices from which the information has come.

They further call the attention of the Board to the fact that several members of the Civil Service have openly connected themselves with the public Press, either as editors or members of the staffs of newspapers, or as Directors of a Company which has undertaken the publication of a periodical much engaged in the discussion of matters relating to the Civil Service.

They bring to the notice of the Board the rule of the Service that no official information may be communicated to the public journals without the sanction of the responsible Heads of Departments, and that any gentleman infringing this regulation renders himself liable to instant dismissal.

My Lords are strongly convinced of the necessity of enforcing the observance of this rule, and desire that notice may be given throughout the various offices under the authority of the Treasury that it will in future be strictly acted upon.

A caution should at the same time be given to gentlemen who have connected themselves with the Press in the manner above noticed.

The inconvenience which may arise from such connection is obvious. Gentlemen taking upon them editorial duties can hardly fail to place themselves in a false position, and to expose themselves to suspicions and misrepresentations which, however unmerited they may be, must disturb the confidence which ought to subsist between them and their official superiors.

It should be intimated to these gentlemen that they must in future be held personally responsible for any breach of official confidence committed by the writers or correspondents of the periodicals with which they are connected.

My Lords desire that a copy of this minute be sent to all the Departments of State, and that they be invited to co-operate with my Lords in their endeavours to enforce this important regulation.

Correspondence between the Home Office and the Treasury respecting Local Offices held by Officers in Government employ.

I.—Letter from Home Office, dated 8th May, 1877.

Sir,

Home Office, Whitehall, 8 May, 1877.

A question having arisen as to whether it is proper to allow officers in the Convict Service to accept nomination to local offices, such as those of Waywardens, members of School Boards, &c., I am directed by Mr. Secretary Cross to request you to move the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury to be pleased to inform him whether any regulations have been issued by their Lordships with reference to the acceptance of such offices by persons in the permanent employment of the Government; and if not, whether they think the practice is one which may be permitted consistently with the interests of the Public Service, or whether it should be discouraged or altogether forbidden.

I have, &c.,

A. F. O. LIDDELL.

The Secretary of the Treasury.

II.—Reply from Treasury, dated 6th April, 1878.

Sir,

Treasury Chambers, 6 April, 1878.

In reply to your letter of the 8th of May last, inquiring whether any regulations have been issued by this Board with reference to the acceptance of local offices by persons in the permanent employment of the Government, and if not, whether they think the practice is one which may be permitted consistently with the interests of the Public Service, or whether it should be discouraged or altogether forbidden, I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to state, for the information of Mr. Secretary Cross, that the only instructions bearing upon the subject which have been issued by my Lords are such as refer to the directorships of public Companies or similar employments which may require attendance during the same hours as the Public Service.

All such questions turn upon the compatibility of a second office or employment with a public one for which the holder's whole time professes to be given.

The mention of whole time, however, involves a definition of office hours, which of course this extra sort of service tends to limit to the extremest point.

My Lords have laid down the rule, without exception, that no extra employment ought to be permitted in respect of which the officer is liable to be called away during office hours.

Further than this my Lords can hardly be said to have gone, but their own strong opinion is that such extra employment is generally prejudicial to the Public Service, because no one can serve two masters. In private service it is believed to be universally forbidden. My Lords, in Departments under their own control, would be disposed to forbid it, or to regard it as prima facie disqualifying for promotion.

The difficulty of laying down any very precise rules upon the subject is that, without an undesirable amount of inquiry into personal details, it is difficult to ascertain the facts to which such rules would have to be applied. But the acceptance of a specific office is in this respect distinguishable from any kind of merely private and casual occupation, although for profit.

As regards local offices, if they are offices of profit, all the above considerations apply; if they are not offices of profit, the question becomes one of compatibility of functions in respect of character and of time, and this my Lords apprehend must be left to the chief of each Department to decide.

I have, &c.,

R. R. W. LINGEN.

The Hon. A. F. O. Liddell, Q.C., Home Office.

III.—Extract from Treasury Minute of 27th March, 1849, referred to in II.

My Lords agree with the Committee in considering that the public is entitled to the whole time of its servants, and that officers holding situations which require daily attendance should not be allowed to accept employment as Directors of Companies of various descriptions requiring their personal attendance elsewhere during office hours.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent General.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 9 May, 1879.

I have to ask your attention to the circumstances attending the Loan recently placed on the London money market by this Government, and to the fact that up to the present date the Government has not received any official (telegraphic) communication on the result of the tenders.

2. The 2nd of May was fixed for the opening of tenders for the Loan; and the first intelligence that reached Sydney (a message to the Herald newspaper) was received at 1:20 a.m. on Sunday, the 4th. The Government has had to depend for information entirely upon the messages to the public Press and the messages to the Bank of New South Wales.

3. I feel assured that the omission on your part to inform the Government of the result of a transaction of so much interest to the Colony must be attributable to some misapprehension of circumstances; but you will, I think, see that our representative in London is looked to for the earliest and most authentic information on all matters of first importance.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

ADJOURNMENT—STATE OF THE LABOUR MARKET.

Mr. CAMERON wished to take this opportunity of bringing under the notice of the House and the Government, with the view of eliciting from the Government a promise that something would be done in the matter, a subject that seemed to him to be of the greatest importance to the people of this Country. It was in connection with the state of the labour market in this Country at the present time. It was well known to Hon. Members that he had, at all times, whenever he had the opportunity, directed attention to the manner in which the vote for Immigration purposes had been expended. In the course of the remarks he had now to make, it was not his intention to enter into a discussion as to the propriety or non-propriety of voting money from the public funds for immigration purposes. This certainly would not be the time to do anything of the sort, but he wished to direct public attention, in as pointed a manner as he possibly could, to the manner in which the vote was carried out, and, if the statements which had reached his ears were true, it seemed to him that the Government ought, without loss of time, to take such action as would remedy the state of affairs existing. Statements had been made which, if true, showed that the money had been expended in a most immoral manner, that a traffic in human beings had been going on in a style that reflected discredit on this Country and the authorities who expended the money. And he would ask the Colonial Secretary, the Minister in whose department this vote lay, to a letter published in the Press on Friday last, and signed "John Williams." There were statements in that letter which, if true, called for immediate inquiry; and other circumstances which had come to his knowledge, on authority which he could hardly doubt, led him to the conclusion that many of the statements given expression to in that letter were such as bore the impress of truth. He had at all times stated that very great discrimination was required to be shown in the selection of the class of people whom we brought out to this Country under particular circumstances. He might illustrate his meaning in this way: for instance, if the building trade of the Colony happened to be very fully employed, it would be a sin, it seemed to him, to hold out special inducements at that time for members of the building trades in the Mother Country to come here, for they must undergo very great hardships in finding a living. And the same with regard to the iron or any other trades. There were times when these trades fluctuated, and when it might be desirable to obtain an accession to our population of a particular class of people. But while he admitted the argument that it was absolutely necessary to plant population upon the lands of this Country—while it must be absolutely necessary for the squatter and the free selector to have additional labour, in order to develop the Country—he maintained that it was a great sin that we should be spending the money of the Country, no matter from what source arising, for the purpose of bringing a large population here whose previous avocations fitted them only for metropolitan life; in other words that we should bring here people who,

who, if you put them into the bush could do nothing else but starve. The case to which he would direct attention, as stated by John Williams, was as follows: This man said that he was misled by statements which appeared in an English newspaper called the Ironworkers' Journal, in which he was told that numerous and extensive ironworks had been established in New South Wales, some at a cost of £100,000, but were standing idle for want of men. Now, any man who knew anything of the facts of the case, or the state of the iron trades here during the last three or four years, must know that this was an absolute untruth. There were no iron-works in this country, nor had there been for years past, which stood idle for want of men. While we required agricultural labourers and domestic servants, we had been spending the public money in deluding the poor people at home into coming here and enduring untold hardships, as the sequel would show. The letter went on to say:—

“I now recollect that he appeared to have taken good care not to mention the name of these works, excepting in one instance, and that was the Eskbank Iron-works, Lithgow Valley. He, in the letter, went on to state that each of these works would employ about 1,000 hands or more, having large contracts for the supply of iron used for the new railway being laid up the country; that employers would gladly pay the following rates of wages:—Engine-drivers, 12s. to 14s. per day; blacksmiths, 12s. to 14s. per day; iron-workers, 15s. to 16s. per day; labourers, 7s. to 9s. per day.”

In every item here mentioned there was the grossest exaggeration, and the statement that any iron-works in this country, or the whole of them together, could employ 1,000 men, was an absolute falsehood. Let us see what his experience here was:—

“When I arrived by the ‘Pericles,’ Mr. Wise, on board of that vessel, asked me among many others what was my trade. I told him I was an iron-worker, having worked in one of the largest iron-works in South Staffordshire for over fifteen years. Mr. Wise replied, ‘You must go up to Lithgow Valley,’ and that he had just received a letter from Mr. Hughes, the manager, asking him to send up fifty; also, that he wanted a lot of miners for the coal-pits there. On the following day twenty-five to thirty immigrants got free railway passes, and left the Redfern Railway Station on the same evening, arriving at Lithgow about 12 o’clock at night. It was a tiresome ride, for we were packed in the carriage like herrings, and treated contemptuously when we asked a question. On arriving we had no place to go to, and had, during the remainder of that night, to lie under a shed or in one of the trucks on the Eskbank platform. At daylight we went in search of the works, and after some time found them in a state of idleness. From the men on the works we ascertained that they had not had any work for the previous three weeks, and before that only a few days now and again. They had no money for lodging, and the boarding-house keeper was then keeping their effects till such time as they could get money to pay for what they had already had. We began to think that matters were not so bright as we had been led to anticipate. We, however, thought we would inspect the machinery we had read so much about, and in this we again found cause for disappointment. There was not £5,000 of machinery to be found, much less £100,000. About 9 or 10 o’clock the manager put in an appearance, and was promptly asked if it were true that he wanted some iron-workers, engine-drivers, and labourers. ‘No,’ said he, ‘I can’t find work for those that are here. Who sent you up here?’ ‘Mr. Wise,’ was the reply. ‘Well,’ said the manager, ‘the sooner he takes you back the better it will be for you, unless you can live on grass, for there is nothing doing in the Valley at all; the collieries, brickmakers, and smelting works are all standing idle.’ He told us that the iron-works had been started five years or more, and had not turned in a penny, simply because they could not get a single order for the iron, not being able to compete with the home prices. I naturally asked him how were we to get back to Sydney, in answer to which he said he did not care whether we got back or not, and that he was sure we would wish ourselves back in England again very soon; he then left us. We walked all over the place for miles to find work, but in vain. Some paid their fares back; some went one way, and some another. I had a few pounds with me, so I thought I would try to get work at the coal-pits or anywhere else till the iron-works resumed operations. I did not succeed, but fortunately the works started on the following week, and I with the other hands made two and a half days during the first week. Then we played for two weeks, then came four days’ work, succeeded by a month’s idleness. This was the way things went on for the seven months I was there, and when I came away the place had stopped for another month, to allow the shareholders to consider whether it should be stopped altogether or to determine what should be done. When I cleared out I was £5 worse off than when I went there.”

Now if the statements contained in that letter were true, and he thought they bore the impress of truth on their face, a scandalous wrong was being done by the Government of the Country to the people they brought here, and not only to them but to the people of the Country who were in the same employments and who could not get enough to do to keep body and soul together. He did not know whether the statement might be a startling one or not, but he could vouch for its truth, that the number of unemployed men in and around the city of Sydney at the present time was absolutely worse than anything we had seen for the last ten years; and, had it not been for the impetus given to the building trade by the Exhibition building, heaven only knew what we should have done with our surplus mechanical population, and he did not see how they were to be employed when the present spurt came to an end. It was only a few weeks ago that Mr. Young, the contractor, or clerk of works—or whatever position he occupied—for the Exhibition building, told him that he had 900 unskilled labourers employed, and that if he wished to duplicate them he could put on as many more the next day. He did not know whether Hon. Members ever took the trouble to find out the state of the labour market for themselves, but it was an absolute fact that at the present time, men in the building and iron trades—good mechanics,—men to whom it would be an insult of the deepest dye to say that they were anything but frugal and industrious, and willing to work if they could get work,—had paraded the streets of Sydney for months past, and were hardly able to get enough to maintain their families. He was not now arguing the question whether it was right to expend public money on immigration or not. As he had said, this was not the time for that, but it was the time for him, as one of the representatives of the city and as a Member of the House, to bring under the notice of the Government the necessity that existed for at once giving instructions to those who did their work in the Mother Country, that certain classes of the population are overstocked here and cannot find employment. The person who wrote the letter had, in his opinion, told a tale that could have been told by hundreds during the last twelve months, and he was credibly.

credibly informed that only a few weeks back a number of these poor immigrants, with hardly a shilling in their pockets, were compelled to come back to Sydney from the country, not having been able to find a hand's-turn to do; and the charitably-disposed ladies at the Sydney railway platform emptied their pockets to relieve the distress of the poor creatures. If that was a fact, and he had no reason to doubt it, from the authority who gave him the information, it was enough to make the whole people of this Country demand with one voice that more care should be exercised in spending the money in immigration. Let us see how the immigration agents performed their work. He might first mention "the men that came down from Lithgow Valley went to the Immigration Agent again, and informed him how things were. He said that he would write and inquire, but put them off by saying, 'I will tell you where to go. There is Glue, a labour agent, in Pitt-street, I think he wants some men for the country—you go and see him.' They went, and this agent wanted 5s. before he would give the address of the man that wanted two farm labourers at the munificent sum of 12s. a week and rations. In the event of a man not possessing the necessary 5s., although willing to work, I suppose he has no alternative but to go and lie down in the bush to die." Then he found, by this man's account, that several others were sent into the mining districts—to Waratah, Wallsend, Tighe's Hill, and other places—and he stated in his letter that the men there, instead of being fully employed, had been making a day and a half, two days, and two days and a half, and for many weeks nothing at all by which to keep their families. There was one remarkable part of the letter which he hoped the Colonial Secretary would listen to. The writer said:—

"There is another agent in England at a place called Brieley Hill, near Birmingham, named Daniel Bent. He will supply you with printed forms, on which it states that farming men get from £80 to £100 a year with double rations, and receive much liberty and consideration from their masters. I don't see any liberty when a man has to work from 4 in the morning till 10 and 11 o'clock at night, and subsist on salt meat and damper; nor yet much consideration in reducing your wages from 14s. to 12s. a week as soon as another lot of new chums arrive. This Mr. Bent, of Brieley Hill, when you go to interview him, will ask you what you are. If you say you are an engine-driver, or fitter, or blacksmith, instead of informing you that there are hundreds here already unable to find employment at their trades, he will tell you there is a great demand for such men, who can earn £3 10s. to £4, and, if good hands, £5 a week. A man who will make such misrepresentations is worthy of severe punishment. Nor is this all about him. If you are a fitter or engine-driver, having to pay £5 for your assisted passage, although fully aware that the Colony is not in want of such tradesmen, he will keep this knowledge from you, and will say, 'Now I will tell you what to do! Say that you are a farm labourer, and then I can get your pass for £2, and that will save you £3, then you can give me £1 or 10s., whichever you can afford, but don't tell any one anything about it, or it will stop you and get me into trouble.' And another thing is, suppose a married man, with wife and children, went to this same man and said, 'I want a pass for Sydney, N.S.W.,' he would reply, 'Oh, don't have a pass, I will tell you the best thing you can do both for yourself and me. You can emigrate out for £2 each, and £1 for the children over 12 years; that will save you £14 each for yourself and wife. That is a lot of money you can save, and if you will tip me £5 I will do that for you.' 'All right,' says the man, 'it will suit me.' 'Now don't say a word,' says the agent, 'or you will get yourself into prison and me too.'"

If there was any truth in this statement—and whether there was or was not, the statement having been made demanded inquiry—this was as pure a system of kidnapping as ever went on in the world. Any man, or class of men, who were a party to bringing out to this Country at the present time mechanics in the iron trades or the building trades were doing not only a wrong to the people they were bringing here, but were guilty of a crime towards this Country. They were doing more to present the Country in an unfavourable light in the eyes of the world than anything that could be done; because these people would write home to their friends of the manner in which they had been duped by the Government agents. If we wanted immigration with Government aid, we wanted people who would settle on the waste lands of the Colony, who would become tillers of the soil; and before any inducements in the way of assisted passages were offered, our abominable land law should be altered, so that large estates should not go to a few people, and these immigrants be prevented from going upon the land. But it was a farce to bring out such people as were brought out to go upon the land, and it was because a few capitalists in Sydney would like to see a glut in the market in order to obtain their labour cheaply, that this matter has been allowed to go on unchecked. If you would assist immigrants to come here in order to hold up to the world how you stick to the mighty principles of free trade, was it asking too much that some care should be exercised in order to see that a proper class of people were brought here, and that there should be some system about the importation of the people. So long as the Immigration Agent could ship twenty up north, thirty up west, and fifty south, and so long as you could get the newspapers to put in a paragraph next day, saying that all the immigrants per such ship had been absorbed—when possibly they were wandering about the country and could not get a bite to eat—this system would go on. It was the duty of the Government to exercise a care over these people for some time after they came here. It was as cruel a shame as ever South Sea Island kidnapping was, this trading in human souls and bodies, this trading upon all that was near and dear to men who broke up their homes and were brought to a strange land and plunged into difficulties. In other Countries the Government had paid some attention to the manner in which the immigrants were dealt with, but here we brought them to the Colony, and when they left the ship, a day or two after arrival, they were allowed to go where they liked, and might starve, or anything else. He was not now discussing the policy of bringing immigrants to this Country. Say that you would bring immigrants here, he had a right to ask the Government to see that the class of people brought here were such as the requirements of the Country would accommodate. At the present time people living around Sydney, in the best places for the mechanic, were at the present time in great danger of suffering positive hardship on account of a want of employment; and we had a right to call upon the Government to take some steps in the matter, and see that if statements like those in the letter he had referred to went to the Home Country, some assurance that steps had been taken in regard to the state of affairs there represented should go Home also. He moved the adjournment of the House.

IMMIGRATION, IMMIGRATION AGENTS, AND THE LABOUR MARKET.

To the Editor.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to make a few remarks on the above subject, respecting which I have many times noticed in the colonial papers, more especially in the summaries, glowing and greatly exaggerated accounts.

Just before I left England, some nineteen months ago, I with pleasure perused a letter in the Ironworkers' Journal, from an immigration agent for this Colony, who I suppose gets 2s. or 3s. per head for those he cunningly entices out here. The letter stated that numerous and extensive ironworks had been established in New South Wales, some at a cost of £100,000, but were standing idle for want of men; and further, that men could not be obtained for love nor money. I now recollect that he appeared to have taken good care not to mention the names of these works, excepting in one instance, and that was the Eskbank Ironworks, Lithgow Valley. He, in the letter, went on to state that each of these works would employ about 1,000 hands or more, having large contracts for the supply of iron used for the new railways being laid up the country; that employers would gladly pay the following rates of wages:—Engine-drivers, 12s. to 14s. per day; blacksmiths, 12s. to 14s. per day; iron-workers, 15s. to 16s. per day; labourers, 7s. to 9s. per day. At these rates he positively affirmed that men could not be procured.

Now, sir, I think it a scandalous shame that agents should be allowed to publish and thereby promulgate such knowing falsehoods amongst people who are unable to test their truthfulness till they arrive here, when they at once discover that they have been deluded.

As one that has been so deluded, I will let you know a little about the Lithgow Valley Ironworks, of which with others yet to me unheard of he spoke so highly, having since my arrival in Sydney worked at these ironworks.

When I arrived by the "Pericles," Mr. Wise, on board of that vessel, asked me among many others what was my trade. I told him I was an ironworker, having worked in one of the largest ironworks in South Staffordshire for over fifteen years. Mr. Wise replied, "You must go up to Lithgow Valley," and that he had just received a letter from Mr. Hughes, the manager, asking him to send up fifty; also that he wanted a lot of miners for the coal-pits there. On the following day twenty-five to thirty immigrants got free railway passes, and left the Redfern railway Station on the same evening, arriving at Lithgow about 12 o'clock at night. It was a tiresome ride, for we were packed in the carriages like herrings, and treated contemptuously when we asked a question. On arriving we had no place to go to, and had, during the remainder of that night to lie under a shed, or in one of the boxes on the Eskbank platform. At daylight we went in search of the works, and after some time found them in a state of idleness. From the men on the works we ascertained that they had not had any work for the previous three weeks, and before that only a few days now and again. They had no money for lodging, and the boarding-house keeper was then keeping their effects till such time as they could get money to pay for what they had already had. We began to think that matters were not so bright as we had been led to anticipate. We, however, thought we would inspect the machinery we had read so much about, and in this we again found cause for disappointment. There was not £5,000 of machinery to be found, much less £100,000. About 9 or 10 o'clock the manager put in an appearance, and was promptly asked if it were true that he wanted some ironworkers, engine-drivers, and labourers. "No," said he, "I can't find work for those that are here. Who sent you up here?" "Mr. Wise," was the reply. "Well," said the manager, "the sooner he takes you back the better it will be for you, unless you can live on grass, for there is nothing doing in the Valley at all; the collieries, brickmakers, and smelting works are all standing idle." He told us that the ironworks had been started five years or more, and had not turned in a penny, simply because they could not get a single order for the iron, not being able to compete with the Home prices. I naturally asked him how we were to get back to Sydney, in answer to which he said he did not care whether we got back or not, and that he was sure we would wish ourselves back in England again very soon; he then left us. We walked all over the place for miles to find work, but in vain. Some paid their fares back; some went one way, and some another. I had a few pounds with me, so I thought I would try to get work at the coal-pits or anywhere else till the ironworks resumed operations. I did not succeed, but fortunately the works started on the following week, and I, with the other hands, made two and a half days during the first week. Then we played for two weeks, then came four days' work, succeeded by a month's idleness. This was the way things went on for the seven months I was there, and when I came away the place had stopped for another month, to allow the shareholders to consider whether it should be stopped altogether or to determine what should be done. When I cleared out I was £5 worse off than when I went there.

I would ask any reasonable man if this is the way to receive people after coming so far, and breaking up comfortable homes and selling all our possessions at a sacrifice for the purpose; I do contend, sir, that it is high time these things were seen into.

The men that came down from Lithgow Valley went to the Immigration Agent again and informed him how things were. He said that he would write and inquire, but put them off by saying "I will tell you where to go. There is Glue, a labour agent, in Pitt-street; I think he wants some men for the country—you go and see him." They went, and this agent wanted 5s. before he would give the address of the man that wanted two farm labourers at the munificent sum of 12s. a week and rations. In the event of a man not possessing the necessary 5s., although willing to work, I suppose he has no alternative but to go and lie down in the bush to die.

The agents in Sydney sent a lot of our fellow-immigrants to Newcastle, on the plea that miners were in great demand. At the same time the men in the Newcastle, Lambton, Tighe's Hill, and Wallsend Collieries were not averaging 1½ day per week for twelve months round. I think that if these agents could see the quantity of men that are idle and almost starving in these districts, they would be ashamed of themselves, if they possess such an attribute as shame.

After clearing them out—thirty immigrants to one place and twenty to another, and so on—then the Immigration Agent furnishes the journals with information to the effect that all the immigrants by the "Pericles" were "absorbed," and that many employers had to go away disappointed. I am sure that that it is not necessary for masters to go after men either on immigrant vessels or at the hiring-room, because the men are soon after the masters at their different works. And they get some sharp answers, I can tell you, such as "No, we cannot find work for the men we have got, let alone for a lot of new chums. Whatever possessed you to come out? There is no work here; and if there are a few locomotives to be made, the Government always get them made in another country. And yet they bring you out here to starve you." This is very encouraging, I am sure, for new chums, as we are called.

Sir, I think I could easily get 1,000 men for Mr. Young at the Exhibition Building if he should want them. I must say that Sydney is a progressing city, but at the same time it is guilty of effecting serious wrongs on the sons of Britain. I think, sir, that immigration has been stopped in Queensland, and rightly too, as the railway contractors not long ago were asking through the papers if the Government wanted to make a poor-house of the place where a few men were working.

I also observe in the labour summary that labourers in the iron foundries are paid at the rate of 10d. per hour. Allow me to contradict such a false assertion. There is not a place in Sydney where they pay that much. The wages given are 5s., 5s. 6d., to 5s. 8d. for 10 to 11 hours' work. These are the sums paid at the Pymont works, and many have to pay a shilling a week out of that to cross over the bridge, and many others go over four and six mornings a week for two days' work.

There is another agent in England at a place called Brieley Hill, near Birmingham, named Daniel Bent. He will supply you with printed forms, on which it states that farming men get from £80 to £100 a year with double rations, and receive much liberty and consideration from their masters. I don't see any liberty when a man has to work from 4 in the morning till 10 and 11 o'clock at night, and subsist on salt meat and damper; nor yet much consideration in reducing your wages from 14s. to 12s. a week as soon as another lot of new chums arrive. This Mr. Bent, of Brieley Hill, when you go to interview him, will ask you what you are. If you say you are an engine-driver, or fitter, or blacksmith, instead of informing you that there are hundreds here already unable to find employment at their trades, he will tell you that there is a great demand for such men, who can earn £3 10s. to £4 and, if good hands, £5 per week. A man who will make such misrepresentations is worthy of severe punishment. Nor is this all about him. If you are a fitter or engine-driver, having to pay £5 for your assisted passage, although fully aware that the Colony is not in want of such tradesmen, he will keep this knowledge from you, and will say, "Now I will tell you what to do. Say that you are a farm-labourer, and then I can get your pass for £2, and that will save you £3, then you can give me £1 or 10s., whichever you can afford, but don't tell any one anything about it, or it will stop you and get me into trouble." And another thing is: Suppose a married man with wife and children went to this same man and said, "I want a pass for Sydney, N.S.W.," he would reply: "Oh, don't have a pass; I will tell you the best thing you can do both for yourself and me. You can emigrate out for £2 each, and £1 for the children over 12 years; and that will save you £14 each for yourself and wife. That is a lot of money you can save, and if you will tip me £5 I will do that for you." "All right," says the man, "it will suit me." "Now don't say a word," says the agent, "or you will get yourself into prison and me too." Now, sir, what can you or the public at large think of a kidnapper like this? But this is only what is done by one half of these agents. If there are hundreds of men both in this Colony and in Queensland that cannot obtain employment of any kind, I say shame on immigration and those who frame its laws. Can we wonder at the suicidal mania so frequently among our fellows? A ganger on the Government works told me that during this week more than 100 men applied for work, and also that they had been shortening hands for weeks past. Yet, withal, Parliament is likely to vote £75,000 for immigration this year. Shame, I say again. Can we wonder at our prisons and poorhouses being filled with inmates? In justice to our fellow-men such misrepresentations should cease, else what will become of our city, so full of vainglory. The laurels it bears are hanging on the top of the tree; but, alas! supported by a false, vain, and uncharitable apparition, luring honest souls from comfortable homes to poverty, starvation, and crime.

Trusting you will pardon me for taking so much of your valuable space,—

I am,

JOSEPH WILLIAMS,
Surry Hills.

April 29th, 1879.

No. 3.

The Agent General to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, S.W., 17 July, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of May 21st, No. 217, transmitting newspaper extract, containing report of a speech made by Mr. Angus Cameron, M.P., the day before publication, on a motion of adjournment in the Legislative Assembly, and therewith also a copy of Mr. Joseph Williams' letter therein cited, "concerning alleged misconduct of persons both in the Colony and in England, and other allegations of mismanagement in connection with immigration," and requesting that I "will inquire and report upon the allegations made of misconduct of Emigration Agents in England."

After careful perusal of the newspaper extract and letter in question, I am unable to discover in either any such "alleged misconduct of persons both in the Colony and England," or allegations of mismanagement in connection with immigration, or "allegations made of misconduct of Emigration Agents in England" as to furnish me with any distinct or tangible basis for inquiry or report, or even for satisfactory explanation.

From beginning to end of the documents to which I am referred, there is no precise mention made of any person, or of any circumstance connected with this office, about whom or which either I myself or any one in it could be reasonably expected to have any personal or official knowledge, or required to furnish any official information.

There is but one paragraph which, by the very widest possible interpretation or by extreme violence of inference or implication, can be supposed to bear a remote allusion to this office. This paragraph is as follows:—"These people would write home to their friends of the manner in which they had been duped by the Government Agents." But it is clear that in the absence of further explanation and in particular of special information of the person or persons referred to, this allusion, if it be meant as an accusation against any any agent of the Government of New South Wales in England, must remain what it is in its present form, no better than a random, and so far even an impertinent and cowardly, insinuation. All the rest of the reported speech and letter are still more deficient in any positive clue to what is intended by their authors, so far as this office is concerned; and failing any such clue from Mr. Cameron, or the writer of the letter, it seems to me, with all respect, greatly to be regretted that one was not furnished by yourself in your letter, by way of guide or suggestion, to enable me to understand what the Government themselves considered important or specially applicable to me or others in our capacities of Emigration Agents, or in any way requiring or suggesting such information or explanation as I might be able to give.

I am accordingly quite at a loss to understand what it is—that is to say, what particular circumstance or circumstances, what particular case or cases, I am required or expected by the Government to inquire into and report upon.

However as the report of Mr. Cameron's speech is from a paper of the unveracious character, of whose reports and statements, in my own case, and in matters connected with my present position and capacity, I have had constant experience, I take it to be possible that Mr. Cameron may have said something, or that something may have occurred in course of the debate, which is, not, or is wrongly or inadequately represented in the report. Nevertheless, under all the circumstances, as the impression seems to have been, and still to remain in the mind of the Government, that the character or conduct of an important department, and of officials of the Government of New South Wales in England, were in some way or other affected, I am surprised that Mr. Angus Cameron was not brought more closely to the point, and the obviously just condition insisted on to justify inquiry or official notice from me of his desultory allegations that they should be more definite and explicit, which might easily have been done by definite and explicit interrogation. In that case Mr. Cameron would probably, as I gather from the report, whatever it may be worth, have taken one or other of two courses. He would have either disclaimed all intention to implicate me or any of the officers of this department in the alleged misconduct, or in any of the circumstances referred to, of which, so far as I can make out from the mass of vague and desultory statements before me, I have no official or personal knowledge; or otherwise perhaps however little Mr. Cameron may have intended to be definite, or however inconvenient it might have proved for him at the time, he would have been compelled to point his allegations with some degree of precision, by naming some person or circumstances over whom or which my official or personal cognizance properly extended, and to whom or which accordingly some official reference might have been made. Probably the whole affair might thus have been brought to an end in a few minutes after Mr. Cameron had satisfied his sense of duty by making a speech, or at any rate, the means of defending myself or some person or persons now understood to be thus vaguely and absurdly accused, might have been afforded; while what appears to me a most unnecessary, and which may turn out to be a long and unsatisfactory correspondence, so far as this department is concerned, might have been avoided.

And now in making an attempt to examine details, I confess that in the absence of such light as I think I was entitled to obtain from either Mr. Cameron or the Government, I find very great difficulty in making my way to any solid point properly calling for or suggesting explanation or elucidation from me, unless indeed I am to be held accountable for every statement made in any newspaper or by any person who calls himself an emigration agent in England, whether or not for the Government of New South Wales, or for every delusion which, whether reasonable or not, enters the brain of an Australian emigrant.

I am surely not expected to point against myself or the other officers of this department, or to invest with a significance or authenticity which they do not intrinsically possess, any of the irrelevancies and inconsequences with which both Mr. Cameron's speech and the quoted letter seem to me to abound. And it is only because of such significance being, as I cannot but think, unfortunately attached to these deliverances by the Government that I feel it at all incumbent upon me to dignify them with official notice. Of course I make no reference here to any reflections or accusations made in the transmitted documents against the Immigration Department in Sydney, since these it is obvious can be best dealt with on the spot, and are otherwise quite beyond any notice or explanation of mine.

It seems to me I might almost dispose of the whole case, so far as I or my department is concerned, by reminding the Government of a fact which seems most unaccountably to have been overlooked by them, as well as by every one else who took upon himself to pronounce an opinion upon or meddle in this matter at all, viz., that, unless I myself, the Secretary, and clerks in my office, be so styled, there is no local Emigration Agent for the Government of New South Wales at all in England, inasmuch as these officers were all dismissed in a body in September, 1878, and have not since been replaced, nor is it intended to replace them. Our emigrant ships are filled with quite sufficient rapidity by spontaneous influx at the docks, assisted no doubt and perhaps a little stimulated by such general inducements and information as are held out by advertisements and the issue of official and other documents from this office, all of which however are under my immediate control and supervision. But I take it that by Emigration Agents for New South Wales Mr. Cameron does not mean myself, Mr. Phillips, or other clerks in the office; at any rate I fail to perceive how any of the statements or allusions in Mr. Cameron's speech, or the quoted letter, can in the remotest degree be taken to refer to any of these officers. I repeat therefore that I am quite at a loss to know what I am expected to explain or elucidate, inquire, or report upon.

Can it be possible that the Government or Parliament of New South Wales require or expect me to take official action merely because Mr. Williams states "that he was misled by statements which appeared in an English newspaper called the Ironworkers' Journal," a paper I had never heard of before, and which is not and has never been even employed by this office as an advertising medium? I have occasionally passed over without notice mistakes made about the Colony in the Times and other leading English journals, because the matters referred to were not strictly within my province, and because I never thought it one of my essential duties as Agent General to correct all errors of the Press in England or elsewhere. And it is evident that a task of this sort once begun, it would be difficult to know where to stop. I suppose I am scarcely expected to concern myself with the sayings or doings of "Glue," a labour agent in Pitt-street; but great stress is apparently laid by Mr. Cameron, or his referee, on the information that "there is another agent in England, at a place called Brierly Hill, near Birmingham, named 'Daniel Bent,' who we are informed further on 'will supply you with printed forms,' who asks intending emigrants impertinent or inconvenient questions, and who is substantially accused of giving false information, and with having charged a considerable fee for the same. I have the honor to ask respectfully what have I, as Agent General for New South Wales—what have, or had, the Government and Parliament of New South Wales—

Wales—to do with Mr. D. Bent? And I have the honor further respectfully to submit, that surely it would not have been inappropriate to the occasion, or derogatory to the dignity of the parties engaged in so momentous a discussion, if Mr. Cameron had been asked to clear up this point. But as no such question was asked, I presume it becomes my official duty to inform the Government, for the benefit of Mr. Cameron and the Legislative Assembly generally, that as has already above been partly suggested, Mr. D. Bent is not and never was one of our Emigration Agents, and that he has not and never had any authority whatever to represent or supply information for the Government of New South Wales, in the matter of emigration or any other matter. Mr. Daniel Bent was quite unknown to this office, or any one in it, even by name, until, as shown in the annexed statements by our Emigration Agent in this office (Mr. Phillips), this D. Bent once wrote, asking for special information on a particular subject. Whether this constitutes him an Emigration Agent for the Government of New South Wales I have the honor to respectfully submit as a question for the Government and Mr. Cameron to settle between them.

Mr. Cameron's speech, as reported, no doubt abounds in wise and profound reflections for the conduct and management of emigration, the relevancy of which are not however very perceptible by the light of any information supplied by or in the papers before me. But I contend that the principles laid down by Mr. Cameron are precisely those on which the Government have always required me to act, and on which I have always acted to the best of my ability, in the management of emigration here; nor does any single fact adduced, or statement made by Mr. Cameron prove, or even tend to prove, the contrary. The Government must be well aware that special care is always taken in our Emigration Office here to warn or to reject emigrants of certain classes of whose superabundance in the Colony intelligence has been previously received. This rule has of late been particularly observed in the case of miners and ironworkers of every description, who are never admitted as such. But of course where an emigrant, after being warned, insists on still availing himself of the advantages offered by the Government, and professes his willingness to take his chance at any occupation, the circumstances of his professional skill in one or other occupation is not treated as a disability.

But now, having shown that not one direct or tangible charge does Mr. Cameron in all his long and no doubt eloquent harangue bring against the Government, or against this department, I have the honor respectfully to ask whether the following paragraphs, which I have selected as making the nearest approximation to distinct charges, but which are plainly no more than random insinuations in their present form, are the "allegations" into which I am required to inquire and to report upon. If so I think I am entitled to insist that the charges shall be more definite and explicit.

No. 1. "He wished to direct public attention in as pointed a manner as he possibly could to the manner to which the vote was carried out; and if the statements which had reached his ears were true, it seemed to him that the Government ought without loss of time to take such action as would remedy the state of affairs existing."

No. 2. "But it was the time for him, as one of the representatives of the city, and as a Member of the House, to bring under the notice of the Government the necessity that existed for at once giving instructions to those who did their work in the Mother Country that certain classes of the population are overstocked here, and cannot find employment."

No. 3. "If that was a fact, and he had no reason to doubt it, from the authority who gave him the information, it was enough to make the whole people of this Country demand with one voice that more care should be exercised in spending the money in immigration."

No. 4. "These people would write home to their friends of the manner in which they had been duped by the Government Agents."

No. 5. "Was it asking too much that some care should be exercised in order to see that a proper class of people were brought here, and that there should be some system about the importation of the people."

No. 6. "He had a right to ask the Government to see that the class of people brought here were such as the requirements of the Country would accommodate."

With all due respect to Mr. Cameron, I confess myself quite at issue with him upon the point whether he has yet, so far as appears by the documents before me, made out such a case as to render it incumbent upon "the Government without loss of time to take such action as would remedy the state of affairs existing." Even were Mr. Cameron's facts proved—and as yet they rest upon very slender evidence—how does he or how do the Government connect them with this office? How are his conclusions from these facts, or rather his insinuations of want of care and of mismanagement in the Government or their duly authorized agents, justified, unless he establishes, which as an honest man he is surely bound to establish, some proof of connection or complicity between the cases of imposition upon or unfitness in the emigrants sent, and some more distinctly authenticated cases or specimens of Government supervision, interference, or intervention, than the "Ironworkers' Journal," or "Mr. Daniel Bent, of Brierly Hill, Birmingham."

In conclusion, I have the honor to express my hope that the above explanation, which can scarcely be considered entitled to the name of either inquiry or report, but which, I trust, will be perceived to be the nearest approximation thereto in my power to afford, will be considered by the Government as satisfactory as under the circumstances it was possible for an explanation of the sort to be, as well as for the time being even by Mr. Cameron himself, whom I am far from accusing of any intention to commit or sanction deliberate injustice or slander.

But I think it greatly to be regretted that apparently for want of more close attention on the part of those whose attention was specially called to the matter, and of more definite inquiry and understanding on the spot, of the points really in issue, so much undue importance should have been attached to a few loose and trivial statements, derived from and supported by very questionable authority, and that the already heavy and increasing business of this office should have been thus swelled by unnecessary correspondence. Having hitherto failed to obtain the sanction of either Government or Parliament for what seemed to me under all the circumstances a very modest request for additional office expenses, I feel the more acutely the difficulty of keeping the expenditure within the narrow limits laid down by previous annual grants for the purpose, when the work imposed upon the office is liable to be thus unnecessarily, and as it seems to me even wantonly, supplemented from the very sources to which I have appealed in vain for additional assistance.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

MEMORANDUM

MEMORANDUM from the Agent General for New South Wales, 3, Westminster Chambers, S.W.

Will Mr. Phillips be good enough to answer the understated questions:—

1. Have we ever advertised Emigration, or at all, in the Iron-workers' Journal? No.
2. Have we ever employed as Agent or otherwise, Daniel Bent, of Brierly Hill? if so, state particulars. Has only corresponded with office in regard to the case of a woman and her children, named Shakespeare, nominated by her husband in the Colony. The first application was made 31st October, 1877; the family however defaulted on three occasions, but ultimately sailed in the "Earl Dalhousie," 11th April, 1878.
3. Have we any Emigration Agents in our employ? No.
4. When did we abolish Emigration Agencies? September 10th, 1878.

The Agent General to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 17 July, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 9th May last, in which you ask my attention to "the circumstances attending the loan recently placed on the London money market," and to the fact that up to the date of your despatch the Government had not received any official (telegraphic) communication on the result of tenders.

You describe the circumstances as follows:—"The 2nd of May was fixed for the opening of tenders for the loan, and the first intelligence that reached Sydney (a message to the Herald newspaper) was received at 1:20 a.m. on Sunday the 4th. The Government has had to depend for information entirely upon the messages to the public press and the messages to the Bank of New South Wales," and you conclude by stating that you "feel assured that the omission on my part to inform the Government of the result of a transaction of so much interest to the Colony must be attributable to some misapprehension of circumstances, and that you think I will see that your representative in London is looked to for the earliest and most authentic information on all matters of first importance."

2. I do not see how I can rightly avail myself of the excuse of "misapprehension of circumstances," kindly suggested by you, so long as I believe that I was, and was bound to be, better informed of the circumstances than the Government, of which perhaps no stronger proof could be adduced than the fact that in concert with, and by advice of, the Board, I took upon myself to deviate from the instructions of the Government upon a very important point, namely, the date of the debentures, and that this deviation has, I understand, been held to be justified by the result. And I hope to be able to show that not only has the omission referred to—such as it is—been judged by the Government themselves under a somewhat exaggerated light, that is under some "misapprehension of circumstances," which was obviously quite natural and almost inevitable, in the absence of information which has been since, or is now being supplied, but that the circumstances were really not so important or deserving of notice as they appeared to the Government.

3. I willingly accept the general maxim laid down; "that your representative in London is looked to for the earliest and most authentic information on all matters of first importance," but I have never thought it my duty, nor understood that it was required or expected of me, to endeavour to anticipate the rapid conveyance of intelligence of any sort by the Press, which is one of its special functions, and for the performance of which it is necessarily provided with special means and machinery, such as are obviously beyond the reach or command of any Government department, much less such a department as that of the Agent General, limited as it is to certain instructions and authority by the very nature of things, as well as by its remoteness from the supreme head or centre.

In the case before me I did omit to advise you of the day fixed for the opening of tenders for the loan, not from carelessness or inadvertence, but because I did not consider the mere time a matter of any importance to the Government at that distance, or one by the knowledge of which they could profit or be guided in any of their measures, inasmuch as they were then fully aware that the loan would be proceeded with in a very short time—nay on the very earliest day possible. It seemed to me better therefore to wait for a few days, when a full account of the whole transaction and its results could be communicated simultaneously. When the result was known, I was of course fully alive to the necessity of making such communication to the Government with the least possible delay; but even then I did not apprehend any necessity for making the communication twice over, or by duplicate telegrams, believing it better to save the expense, so far as it could be done consistently with the speedy transmission of the intelligence. Accordingly, having ascertained from Mr. Larnach, as I expected would be the case, that the bank would forthwith despatch a telegram to Sydney, communicating all the details, and having been assured by Mr. Larnach that he would instruct the bank in Sydney to make the Government immediately acquainted with its contents, I conceived that I had done—and it is evident that so far as the mere transmission was concerned I had done—all that was incumbent upon me to assure the Government of early intelligence.

As it appears however from your letter that the motives upon which I acted in not despatching a duplicate telegram, which were simply the economical motives of endeavouring to avoid unnecessary expenditure, where the object sought could be practically attained otherwise, are considered by the Government as in some way or other inconsistent with my duties and position as your Representative in London, I shall endeavour in future to accommodate myself better to what I now understand to be the policy and instructions of the Government in the communication of the earliest and most authentic information on all matters of first importance, by transmitting telegrams independently of all other means or sources of information, and without reference to the additional expense, which will doubtless be considered immaterial in proportion to the importance of the business or interests involved.

I append copies of the telegrams despatched by the bank immediately after the business of the Loan had been completed.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

HAVE no intention, and shall have no occasion, to raise Loan for some time to come. Surprised your intention made public.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent General.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 10 September, 1879.

I enclose copy of a telegram (No. 1) received from you on the 6th instant, and of a telegram (No. 2) which appeared in the Evening News of the 8th instant, and of a telegram (No. 3), in reference to these which I sent to you in the forenoon of to-day. I also enclose copy of the "Loan Act" of last Session.

2. You will observe by the terms of the telegram published in the Evening News that the sender appears to have been informed in London of your intention to communicate with the Government on the uneasy feeling represented to have been produced in the market for Colonial securities by the announcement of the passing of the recent "Loan Act." Whoever the correspondent of the Evening News may be, it is unpleasant that he should be so accurately informed of your intention in a matter of so much delicacy, and so wholly confidential. You will probably be able to explain how this information was obtained.

3. With regard to the course which the Government will probably take in exercising the borrowing powers recently granted by Parliament, I may mention that the powers possessed under Acts of previous Sessions were not exhausted by the loan negotiated in May, but left over a million sterling to be yet raised. The Loan Act 43 Vic. No. 11, passed in July last, provides for the construction of railways (680 miles of new lines), and for water and sewerage works for the City of Sydney; but it is not at all probable that the Government will be disposed, or have any necessity, to place any further debentures in the market for a considerable period.

4. You are at liberty of course to make use of this information in any way you may consider in the exercise of your discretion beneficial for the Colony; but this Government is desirous of avoiding any appearance of anxiety to defend its financial position, being fully prepared to rest the preservation of its credit on the course of events.

I have, &c.,

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent General.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 11 September, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your two letters, dated the 17th of July, referring respectively to my letters of the 9th and the 21st of May, respecting the negotiation of the Government Loan, and some statements made in the Legislative Assembly and in the public Press of this Colony on the conduct of the business of immigration.

2. These two letters appeared to me to be of a character so extraordinary, as coming from the Agent General, that I submitted them for the consideration of Ministers in Cabinet Council, and the opinion expressed upon them was that the Government could hardly take any other course than recall you from the office you at present hold, in the face of documents showing such an entire forgetfulness of your position and its obligations. I am however extremely reluctant to take this step, but I regret that I am bound to convey to you in unqualified terms that both the language and tone of this correspondence are such as cannot be passed over without intimating to you that on any repetition of conduct so offensive the Government must of necessity dispense with your services.

3. In my letter of the 9th May I represented to you that the Government felt surprised and dissatisfied that the Representative of the Colony in England had not supplied any information of a transaction so important to the Colony as the negotiation of a Loan of over three millions sterling, but I made this representation to you in respectful and courteous terms. What was expected from you, and the absence of which was complained of, was simply a message informing the Government of the result of the opening of the tenders. In your reply your remarks that "you had never thought it your duty, nor understood that it was required or expected of you, to endeavour to anticipate the rapid conveyance of intelligence of any sort by the Press, &c.," have no pertinency to the matter in hand, as no part of my letter could be interpreted to imply that any expectation of the kind as to your duties was entertained by the Government. Again, your volunteered explanation of why you did not advise the Government of the day fixed for the opening of the tenders is an explanation of what you were never asked to explain, and of what formed no part of my letter.

4. All that was expected of you, as my letter expressed with sufficient clearness, was that you should inform the Government of "the result of the tenders," and not leave this important information to be obtained here from private sources.

5. In my letter of the 21st May your attention was called to statements made in the Legislative Assembly and in the public Press reflecting upon the manner in which the business of immigration was being carried on, with a request that you would make inquiries and report upon these statements or allegations, so far as they related to the business in England. Your lengthy letter in reference to this communication is for the most part a captious criticism on the matters brought under your notice, without affording any information of the slightest use to the Government in dealing with the subject. Your censorious observations on what you consider Ministers ought to have done, in catechizing Mr. Cameron in the Legislative Assembly, and the undisguised insolence you indulge in towards the Government in other parts of your letter, are passed over as unworthy of further notice. The gentleman filling the office of Agent General is a servant of the Government, though he should be one entitled to entire confidence and esteem; and he cannot be released from the obligation to treat the Government he serves with becoming respect, and to do his best to carry out their instructions.

6. I have only to add that, if the Agent General can find leisure for so unnecessary and unprofitable a correspondence as the present, I have not at my disposal any time for a labour so purely irksome.

I have, &amp;c.,

LARNACH advises your statement about time of launching next Loan too indefinite, and that to uphold debentures you should authorize me to announce publicly earliest possible time. Instruct whether or not. You inform me Evening News of eighth has London telegram to effect of mine, mentioning my intention to communicate with my Government, and you express yourself surprised my intention made public. Better ask Evening News their authority. I did not make my intention public, or authorize its publication in any form. I did not communicate my intention by telegram or otherwise to Evening News. I did not authorize nor was I aware of such communication being made. I did not make known my intention to anybody. Larnach told Bank broker he would ask me to apply for authority to announce publicly that the Loans just authorized would not be floated for some years. Larnach thinks the publication of my intention would quiet the public mind, as great indignation exists on Stock Exchange at seven millions having been authorized in July before second instalment of last loan was paid up. I have no power to prevent Larnach communications to any body, nor are they accountable to Government for making them.

The Colonial Secretary to The Agent General.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 October, 1879.

I received on the 24th ultimo your telegram of the 17th of same month, copy of which is annexed.

2. No reply has been sent to your message, because the Government have still under consideration the extraordinary terms in which you appear deliberately to have framed your late communications, as if your only purpose were to insult the Government you have undertaken to serve. The telegram sent to you on the 10th September was unanimously adopted by Ministers in Cabinet, and was expressed in language which it was considered would convey to you in the briefest and mildest form the surprise of the Government that your intended action in London, in a matter of so much delicacy, should be simultaneously made known to the agents of a Sydney newspaper. Your only substantive reply to this is contained in the words towards the end of your long message of the 17th September, in which you inform the Government that Mr. Larnach had told a Bank broker that he would ask you to apply for authority to announce that the newly authorized Loan would not be floated for some years. This reply might have been condensed for the purposes of information into about twenty-five words. But you incur a wasteful expenditure of £90 by your message of 225 words, simply to enable you for the most part to indulge in reiterating the expression of your splenetic feeling, in such forms as the following:—"I did not make my intention public, or authorize its publication in any form. I did not communicate my intention by telegram or otherwise to the Evening News. I did not authorize, nor was I aware of such communication being made. I did not make known my intention to anybody."

3. I may call to your recollection that the principal reason assigned by you for not sending by early and direct message the important intelligence of the result of the tenders for the Loan in May was your desire for economy in telegraphic expenditure. Yet now you put the Colony to the enormous cost of £90 for a message which is merely a string of redundant words without affording any information whatever of the slightest value to the Government, unless it be indeed what Mr. Larnach told the bank broker.

4. My colleagues have placed on record, in view of your late telegram, that it is next to impossible to continue to carry on the business of the Government with a gentleman acting as Agent General who holds such strange views of his position and its duties as you appear to hold. Some decision in the matter will be arrived at in a day or two.

I have, &amp;c.,

Minute Paper for the Executive Council.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 7 October, 1879.

Case of the Agent General.

IN view of recent proceedings disclosed in the accompanying papers, and in pursuance of the decision of His Excellency's advisers in Cabinet consultation, I have to submit for the consideration of the Governor in Council the case of the Agent General. The office of Agent for the Colony in England was formerly a mere commercial agency, the duties of which were confined to purchasing and shipping material required for the purposes of the Government, and carrying out occasional instructions on matters of special interest; but about ten years ago the sphere of duties was much extended, and a new class of business, understood to be of a semi-diplomatic nature, though never expressly defined, was by general consent assigned to the office, and the more comprehensive name of Agent General was given to it, with a larger salary and an increased official expenditure. From the date of that important change, down to the present time, the Agent General has necessarily and very properly been allowed to exercise a wide discretion in the performance of his duties. The highest interests of the Colony frequently depend in a large measure upon his tact, discernment, and conciliatory spirit in dealing with circumstances which cannot be provided for or foreseen by the Government in Sydney.

It is obvious that, in these greatly altered relations of the office, the Agent General should endeavour to establish and maintain the most intimate and confidential communication with his own Government, while his intercourse with the Imperial authorities, with the representatives of other Colonies, and with all parties in England, should be uniformly courteous and considerate, even when pressing the claims or defending the interests of the Colony. The present Agent General has not however made any extra-official communication to the Minister charged with the business of the Agent General's Office, or afforded information in any form whatever outside his official letters, during the period of more than nine months since the assumption of the duties of administration by His Excellency's present advisers. The inconvenience and frequent public injury arising from this entire absence of intimate and confidential communication between the Government and the Representative of the Colony in England can scarcely be over-estimated, as matters are constantly presenting themselves for consideration, for suggestion, and even for instruction, which cannot with propriety be made the subject of official correspondence. But latterly the Agent General has ceased to be courteous in his official communications with the Government, and has not abstained even from language wanting in ordinary respect; and it is these instances of extraordinary conduct, rendering the transaction of business with Mr. Forster no longer possible for the Minister, which I desire to submit for the consideration of His Excellency and the Executive Council.

On the 2nd May tenders were opened for the New South Wales Loan of £3,249,500,—an event which deeply interested the whole Colony, and a matter on which immediate information was required and anxiously expected by the Government. The result of the tenders was not reported by the Agent General at all, and Ministers had to obtain the intelligence as they best could from private sources. On the 9th May a letter was sent to Mr. Forster explaining that up to that time no message had been received from him, and pointing out that the Agent General was looked to for the earliest and most authentic information on matters of first importance. To this letter a reply was received from Mr. Forster, dated 17th July, offering an explanation where no explanation was required, but affording no satisfactory explanation of his omission to inform his Government of the important transaction to which his attention had been called, and indulging in frivolous comments expressed in offensive language.

Statements were made in Parliament and in the public Press casting reflections on the management of immigration, and copies of these statements were forwarded to the Agent General by the Government, with a request that he would be good enough to inquire into and report upon the allegations of mismanagement in England. Mr. Forster's reply, dated also the 17th July, was simply a censure upon the Government for referring the matters to him, and for not having paid "more close attention" to them on the spot, and for "attaching undue importance" to what he characterized as "a few loose and trivial statements, derived from and supported by very questionable authority." In one of the newspaper extracts referred to the Agent General, a Mr. D. Bent was mentioned as an emigration agent. Mr. Forster remarked on this in the following language:—"This D. Bent once wrote asking for special information on a particular subject. Whether this constitutes him an emigration agent for the Government of New South Wales I have the honor to respectfully submit as a question for the Government and Mr. Cameron to settle between them."

These two communications were submitted for the consideration of Ministers in Cabinet, and the decision arrived at was that it was hardly possible to conduct business with an officer of the Government who addressed the Government in such terms. Finally, a letter dated the 11th September was sent to Mr. Forster censuring the course he had adopted, and informing him that any repetition of conduct so offensive would lead to his recall. But in the meantime the Agent General despatched his telegram of the 4th, asking for instructions in respect to the Loan authorized by the Act of July. On the 8th a London telegram appeared in the Evening News announcing the intention of the Agent General to communicate with his Government on the subject. On the 10th a message was sent to Mr. Forster in reply, giving him an instruction, and at the same time expressing surprise that his intention to communicate with his Government had been made public. This called forth from Mr. Forster a cable message of two hundred and twenty-five words, a great part of which was taken up with repeating several times that he did not authorize the publication complained of, and in which he told the Government with a sneer that they "had better ask the Evening News for its authority."

On the receipt of this message (which put the Country to great cost for no useful purpose) the conduct of the Agent General was again considered by the Cabinet, and it was decided that it was quite impossible to continue to transact business with a gentleman holding that office who habitually failed in the ordinary forms of respect in communicating with his Government.

I therefore recommend that Mr. Forster be recalled from the office of Agent General; but in order that the Colony may not suffer, and that Mr. Forster himself may not be put to inconvenience by any sudden change, I further recommend that the recall take effect finally on the 31st of December next, and that Mr. Forster be informed that his successor will take over the business of the office on that day.

MR. FORSTER, LATE AGENT GENERAL FOR THE COLONY.

No. 1.

W. Forster, Esq., to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 6 November, 1879.

In acknowledging the receipt of the two telegrams—Nos. 1 and 3—and informing you of the transmission of the telegram No. 2, of all which copies are hereto appended, I have the honor respectfully to take exception to your telegram No. 3, which appears to me, with all deference, to betray a misconception of my position, and of the relations subsisting, or which ought to subsist, between the Agent General and the Executive Government. Your telegram informs me that I am not authorized to expend public money upon a telegram of the character of telegram No. 2; but I have the honor respectfully to submit that the authority which I hold as Agent General, whether for despatch of telegrams or for other public purposes, is derived, not from the Colonial Secretary, but from the Governor and Executive Council, and consequently your telegram No. 2, in substance, amounts to no more than a mere expression of opinion, which, however entitled to respect and weight for personal or official reasons, I am justified and even bound to disregard, even at my own peril, from any possible considerations of public duty or interest. It is evident that anyone in the responsible position of Agent General must be frequently compelled to deviate from or disregard the apparent letter of instructions communicated through your office, more especially through the obscure medium of a telegram, and you must yourself be aware that I have frequently been compelled to take such a course, under circumstances which I have not afterwards been called upon to account for or explain, and which accordingly do not seem to have elicited the disapproval of the Government.

2. I must confess myself at a loss to perceive any broad difference in principle between a telegram which communicated a certain course of action and a telegram which protests against it. Accordingly my telegram appears to me not properly open to objection, but to be simply such a protest or remonstrance against the course taken by the Government, as was, upon purely public grounds, perfectly appropriate and justifiable under all the circumstances of the case.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

SECRETARY.

No. 2.

W. Forster, Esq., to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 21 November, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 11, in which, with special reference to my two letters, dated July 17, you charge me with exhibiting in those letters "an entire forgetfulness of my position and its obligations," and further inform me "that both the language and tone of this correspondence are such as cannot be passed over without intimating to me that on any repetition of conduct so offensive, the Government must of necessity dispense with my services."

2. As this letter purports to pronounce official censure, and conveys a threat of recall—since carried into effect by telegram, for reasons of which I have not yet been informed—in language so unmistakable that it would be impossible for me, after its receipt, to continue in my present position, it amounts practically to dismissal. And the conclusive character of the proceeding is confirmed by the closing paragraph of your letter, which informs me in substance that any continuance of the correspondence on my part will be "irksome" to yourself, and consequently any attempt at explanation or defence of no effect. To answer your letter would therefore seem to be almost a work of supererogation. But lest my silence should be construed as a tacit admission that your letter was unanswerable, I prefer for the sake of other interests than my own to place my answer on record, which I will endeavour to make as brief and as little "irksome" as possible, though of course without the least wish or intention in any way to affect the decision of the Government.

3. Accordingly I have the honor to protest most emphatically against such decision, involving what is of course meant for severe censure, and practical dismissal of myself, or any other public officer, without cause or reason assigned, or opportunity of explanation or defence. Whatever cause or reasons may have been since, or may be in future, discovered or assigned, there is no escaping from the fact that in this case judgment has been given, and censure or penalty awarded upon merely ex parte, or absolutely without any inquiry, and without any possibility of explanation or defence. The precedent is now accordingly established that the Agent General can be summarily dismissed at the mere will and pleasure of the Government. This is, in fact, to make the office political, and the holder liable to retire with a change of Ministry. No injustice can be done by the future enforcement of such a rule. In my case there is an obvious difference. I was entitled to be placed in one category or other, and either to have had notice that the office when I accepted it was political, or otherwise to have had the grounds of my removal or dismissal made known to me beforehand. I have already made, and now make this protest, upon public grounds, and of course with a thorough conviction of its being utterly ineffectual so far as my own case is concerned.

4. I have further the honor to express my regret that the decision of the Government, so far as it is indicated by your letter, should not have been conveyed in language less open to exception, both upon grounds of official propriety as well as of justice. My experience of official practice, and especially of that of the Imperial Government in analogous cases, leads me to conclude that in a letter purporting to communicate grave grounds of censure and threatening any sort of penalty against an important public officer, and especially one in the comparatively defenceless position of the Agent General, the decision of the Government and the reasons for it ought to be couched in clear and intelligible language, and, above all, the grounds of offence, whether by word or deed, set forth and distinctly specified by exact reference to and description of the proceedings or of the words which are the subject of complaint. Irrespective even of considerations of official dignity and propriety, it is manifestly just that the official censured or accused or threatened with penalty should have the fullest opportunity of explaining or defending his conduct or his language. It is equally manifest that the utmost innocence or absence of offensive intention could not escape the possibility of censure nor any defence or explanation be certain of effect if the complaint or accusation be framed in descriptive terms, which not only assert but prejudice the character of the offence. But in your letter the alleged grounds of censure or complaint against me or against the language and tone of my letters above referred to are stated in a species of rhetorical invective, and in descriptive epithets so personally insulting and offensive, as I have the honor to submit, are not only quite unprecedented in official correspondence, but some of which would be scarcely tolerated in the heat of Parliamentary debate. You describe certain portions of the two letters of mine to which you generally refer as "captious criticism," "censorious observations," "undisguised insolence," "unworthy of further notice." The portions of my letter thus described are not quoted or distinctly specified in any part of your letter. It is quite possible that differences of opinion might arise upon the question whether any words of mine in the letters referred to are properly so described. I have the honor to insist upon my right to hold an opinion upon this question contrary to yours. And I confess that I entirely fail to discover in my letters any language answering your description. Nor can I have any hesitation in affirming that in writing those letters I had no intention whatever of expressing myself in a manner insolent or offensive to the Government or to yourself; and to describe their language in such terms as you have employed is plainly not only a judgment but a condemnation which argues and exhibits an obvious foregone conclusion, and is only too consistent with the remainder of your letter as well as with the course which the Government have taken since.

5. I have the honor further to submit that it is still more extraordinary and unprecedented, and equally unjust to me as the party principally concerned, to characterize any portion of my letter as "censorious observations" and "undisguised insolence" which are passed over as "unworthy of further notice." Any language of mine capable of being so characterized ought not to be passed over, nor can I accept or esteem it as a favour that it should. But it is obviously not passed over, nor can any one be deceived by the pretence that it is. Otherwise why is it mentioned at all? Having been mentioned, and come under the notice of the Government, whether rightly or wrongly, it cannot but have affected their action and decision. Clearly then the very words should have been quoted or exactly specified; and as this is not done, the notice taken of them is only another instance of foregone conclusion as well as of ex parte judgment and censure.

6. But it is in those portions of your letter of September 11th in which you resort to quotation, and in which an apparent intention is shown to specify with some degree of exactness instances of impropriety in the language and substance of my two letters; that I find the greatest difficulty in understanding or discovering any reasonable justification for the language you have used, or any other than the most trivial for the censure you convey. It is possible that in the correspondence of which my two letters form a part, I may have misunderstood your meaning, and it is evident to me that you have misunderstood mine. Of this misunderstanding any mutual explanation has now of course become impossible. In that portion of your letter having reference to my letter upon the subject of the loan, you state that "what was expected from me, and the absence of which was complained of, was simply a message informing the Government of the result of the opening of the tenders," and you point out that "in my reply my remarks that I had never thought it my duty, nor understood that it was required or expected of me, to endeavour to anticipate the rapid conveyance of intelligence of any sort by the Press, has no pertinency to the matter in hand." But it seems to have escaped your notice that in your letter of May 9th you informed me that "the 2nd of May was fixed for the opening of tenders for the loan, and the first intelligence that reached Sydney (a message to the Herald newspaper) was received at 12 a.m. on Sunday the 4th. As in this paragraph the substance of the message to the Herald is not precisely stated, I conceived from the context, whether rightly or wrongly, the impression that your meaning was to express the disappointment of the Government that the intelligence of the day fixed for the opening of the tenders reached you through the Press and not through the Agent General. This impression of mine explains the pertinency of my remark about the Press. Again, in your letter of September 11th, now under consideration, referring to your letter of May 9th, when you state "that you represented that the Government felt surprised and dissatisfied that the representative of the Colony in England had not supplied information so important to the Colony as the negotiation of a loan of over three millions sterling," and that "what was expected from me, and the absence of which was complained of, was simply a message informing informing the Government of the result of the opening of the tenders," you seem to me to impute a neglect or omission on my part inconsistent with the fact, which I afterwards duly communicated to the Government by letter, together with other matters connected with the loan, that I actually arranged, as soon as the result was known, with the Manager of the Bank of New South Wales, who was himself formally associated with me in the negotiation of the loan, for the immediate transmission of the intelligence in question to the Government through the Bank, which is itself an accredited agent of the Government. And I have the honor to submit that intelligence so communicated cannot be described with correctness as "obtained from private sources." Again, in that portion of your letter of September 11th relating to mine of July 17th, on the subject of emigration, you express yourself to the effect that my "lengthy" letter, in reference to that communication, "is for the most part a captious criticism on the matter brought under my notice, without affording any information of the slightest use to the Government in dealing with the matter." And you further remark on my "ensorious observations," on what I consider Ministers ought to have done in catechising Mr. Cameron in the Legislative Assembly, and undisguised insolence I indulged in towards the Government." I am not aware that I suggested that Mr. Cameron should be catechised, but I thought, and still think, that I was entitled to expect that Ministers should have required or requested Mr. Cameron to make his complaints if intended to apply to me or my office more definite and explicit, as otherwise it was obviously impossible for me, as I afterwards pointed out in my letter upon the subject, to find any tangible ground or circumstance to inquire into and report upon as I was instructed. I thought too that I was entitled to expect from Ministers some protection from vague or unintelligible complaints or charges against me, but above all that they should have taken the obvious means to satisfy the Assembly by supplying the information which was within their knowledge, and which there can be no doubt would have not only have put an end to the debate but have prevented "lengthy" correspondence afterwards. The Government were fully aware that I had no local agents here, that I had discontinued them long before, that emigrants were only selected on presenting themselves, and consequently that the complaints or charges of Mr. Cameron, so far as I myself or my office were concerned, were founded upon erroneous impressions, and had no foundation or application to the conduct or business of emigration in England. Some explanation of this sort I intended to convey in my letter on the subject, but certainly was far from intending to be captious, censorious, or insolent, nor can I perceive upon reflection that any language of mine is fairly open to that interpretation.

7. Upon the whole I find it difficult to conceive that such a letter as yours of September 11th could have been written with any other purpose than to bring about my immediate resignation, or to furnish the Government with additional reasons for the course they appeared to contemplate and which they have since taken, by a telegram, which, as it simply communicated the fact of my recall without assigning causes or reasons for the same, appears to me only the necessary sequel and corollary of your letter. Nevertheless I cannot avoid regretting that for whatever reasons the Government felt themselves compelled to take such a course, they did not communicate it to me in a manner and in language more suitable to our respective positions, and less inconsistent with official dignity.

8. It remains for me only, and yet it seems almost superfluous, to point out how entirely characteristic of the rest of your letter is its extraordinary conclusion. You intimate that "if the Agent General can find leisure for so unnecessary and unprofitable correspondence as the present you have not at your disposal any time for a labour so purely irksome." But you seem to forget, and accordingly I do myself the honor to remind you, that neither the present nor any other such correspondence is of my seeking or choosing, and that the present correspondence has been forced upon me, and most unnecessarily complicated and extended, by mistaken impressions into which you had yourself fallen, or had allowed others to fall, by unfair and unfounded imputations against my diligence or discretion, and by extraordinary and unnecessary references to me for inquiry and information, of matters upon which no inquiry or information was possible from me, or upon which the Government themselves were better, or as fully, informed. But the extraordinary suggestion that any further correspondence would be "irksome" to yourself could have, and could be intended to have, no other effect than to prevent reply, and thus preclude me from explanation or defence. A more significant proof, or admission of foregone conclusion, and of utter impenetrability to reason or justice, can scarcely be conceived. Nor can any one wonder that for a Minister or a Government, who had determined upon or found themselves committed to an unwise or improper course of action or policy from which it was inconvenient or difficult to withdraw, it should appear "irksome" to be set right or to be convinced of their error or un wisdom. However, in accordance with your suggestion I willingly undertake to close the present correspondence with this letter, unless indeed, as is most probable, it should be followed and supplemented by another letter of the same character, purporting to give reasons for the subsequent consummation in my recall by telegram, of the proceedings of which your letter now before me forms an important stage. In that case I shall probably be compelled, however irksome it may be for both of us, to make for my own defence and justification a final reply, which I trust may be the last I shall have the honor of addressing to you in my capacity of Agent General.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM FORSTER.

No. 3.

W. Forster, Esq., to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 21 November, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 1st, in which, with reference to my telegram of September 17th, you intimate that "no reply had been sent to my message because the Government have still under consideration the extraordinary terms in which I appear to have framed my late communications, as if my only purpose were to insult the Government I have undertaken to serve."

2. Your objection to my telegram, so far as it is explicit, chiefly consists in its too great length and unnecessary particularity, and the "wasteful expenditure" thereby incurred. But I have the honor to remind you that my telegram was in reply to your previous one of September 10th, in which, without the slightest foundation, so far as I am aware, you had taken upon yourself to impute to me the gross official impropriety of divulging to a newspaper my confidential business and relations with the Government. As I entirely fail to perceive what right you had to make such an imputation against me in such a manner, I have the honor to submit that the blame of the long telegram and wasteful expenditure should properly fall, not upon me, but upon the party or parties who did not scruple to use their official position and the machinery of a public telegram to utter this slander, and who thus compelled me, in my own defence, to enter into particulars which would have been otherwise unnecessary. And I have further the honor to point out that the same slander is practically repeated in your letter of October 1st, since in your comments upon my telegram and complaints of its want of relevancy you evidently take no account whatever of my emphatic and reiterated denial.

3. Before receiving your letter of October 1st I had already replied to your previous letter of September 11th, which appears to me, in a similar strain of ex parte judgment and vague invective, to have adopted the same foregone conclusion, and which, at any rate, pronounces the same threat of recall on equally indefinite grounds as are exhibited and conveyed in your letter of October 1st, now before me.

4. As it is probable by the phrase "late communications" you intend some reference to certain letters of mine with which yours of September 11th purported to deal, I have the honor to refer you to that correspondence as stating in substance much of what I might now find it necessary to say, but which it is not necessary to repeat. And as your threat of recall has been since carried into effect, and as I now find that even my positive denial of the fact in which your late continual complaints against me mainly originated is not only treated as of no account but even converted into fresh matter for official censure, I see no advantage in attempting any further explanations.

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

No. 4.

W. Forster, Esq., to The Colonial Secretary.

Sir,

3, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, S.W., 4 December, 1879.

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 8th, apparently the last of a series of letters and telegrams of the same character, and tending evidently to the same conclusion, in which you enclose copy of a minute of the Governor and Executive Council, purporting to give reasons for my recall, which however, previous to my receipt of the letter, had been summarily decided on, and communicated to me six weeks ago by your telegram of October 7th, copy of which you also enclose without any reasons therein assigned or in the least alluded to.

2. There is obviously no escaping from the fact that the Agent General has been dismissed by the Government without cause or reason to him previously shown or assigned.

3. As it is obvious that all of any importance involved in your letter and minute has been sufficiently dealt with in my two late letters of November 24th, to which I have the honor to refer you, it appears to me idle to continue the correspondence. Accordingly,

I have, &c.,
WILLIAM FORSTER.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

AGENT GENERAL FOR THE COLONY.

(CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO APPOINTING SIR JOHN ROBERTSON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 27 February, 1880.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 5th February, 1880, That there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“Copies of all Correspondence in reference to the offer of the office of Agent General to Sir John Robertson.”

(Mr. Burns.)

[The following notes were not regarded as official, or as possessing any public interest, inasmuch as they had no result of a public nature. No copy of the first note was preserved. Sir John Robertson, having no objection to their production, has furnished both copies.—H.P., 11/2/80.]

Sir Henry Parkes to Sir John Robertson.

My dear Robertson, Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 20 October, 1879.
The Government must soon appoint some gentleman to the office of Agent General. There are many of the best reasons why I and your colleagues should think of you as our next representative in England. The office is of all others the one which should be filled by a man who has had a large experience in the public affairs of the Colony, and who has proved himself capable of dealing with national interests and with men; and certainly it is an office which ought to be held as one of our highest posts of honor.

I am well aware that your retirement from the Ministry would be a heavy loss to us, and would probably be followed at once by loss of support in Parliament; but if you could see your way to accept the office now vacant, I feel convinced that the Colony would be more ably represented than it is likely to be by any other appointment. Your large and intimate knowledge of the country and its capabilities, your experience in the affairs of Government, and your many high personal qualities, so fully qualify you for the office that I am sure your appointment to it would afford satisfaction to all classes.

Faithfully yours,
HENRY PARKES.

Sir John Robertson to Sir Henry Parkes.

My dear Parkes, Clovelly, 22 October, 1879.
In acknowledging the receipt of your note of yesterday's date (received but now), written as it conveys, as well on your own behalf as on that of our colleagues, offering me in terms very gratifying the position of Agent General, I have to offer my most sincere thanks.

No one can estimate at a higher rate the position of Agent General for New South Wales than I do, and few I think see in the immediate future as clearly the extent to which its importance is likely to grow; yet I have determined to decline the offer.

I confess I do not recognize in myself any special qualification for business of the kind usually performed by our Agent General, while I am egotistic enough to believe there are questions of the greatest moment to the welfare of the Colony to which I may fairly claim to have given more than ordinary consideration, and, may I add, for which I think I have some special aptitude.

Holding myself, as I have ever done, to be a faithful and unselfseeking servant of our Country, I think I may rightly claim to judge how I can best serve it; and I do not think that would be by departing for Europe at this juncture for new fields of labour, however pleasant such employment and its dignity might in itself be to me.

Doubtless my years and comparatively long services might tend to justify the delightfully pleasant change on a visit to the Mother Country in high position, but I cannot shield myself by the assertion of failing health or failing energy, as is usually put forth in defence of leaving the Colony. Only this morning I returned from a journey of 600 miles to the north-west and back, more than 80 miles of which was made on horseback, the whole performed since Friday last at 11 o'clock p.m., and concluded this (Tuesday) morning at 5 a.m. without physical inconvenience; and the offer of the position of Agent General from yourself and my other colleagues, all gentlemen of ability who know me well, assures me that before the Country I am believed to be mentally capable of doing the duty fairly well.

On the whole (and while again expressing my gratification and thankfulness for the terms of your note), it appears to me to be my duty to you, my other colleagues, the Parliament and the Country, to remain here and continue to exercise any experience and ability you are good enough to attribute to me in our joint efforts to deal satisfactorily with public affairs here, and more especially with the great question now agitating the public mind.

I am yours very sincerely,

JOHN ROBERTSON.

AGENT GENERAL FOR THE COLONY.

No. 1.

The Colonial Secretary to Mr. Alexander Stuart.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 November, 1879.

My dear Sir,
In reference to my conversation with you some days ago respecting the office of Agent General, I now place under offer to you the appointment to that office. Your intimate knowledge of the Colony, and the influential part you have taken in public affairs, together with your high personal qualifications for efficiently conducting the business of the office, have led my colleagues and myself to think of you as the person most likely to perform the duties of Agent General with the largest amount of satisfaction to the Colony.

I need hardly say that your acceptance of the appointment would necessarily involve your retirement from business, but I think you will not lightly consider the career of honorable service to the Country which it would open to you as a compensation for any sacrifice of the kind.

As the Government are desirous of making the appointment at an early date, I hope you will be able to give me an answer in the course of a few days.

Yours, &c.,
HENRY PARKES.

Mr. Alexander Stuart to The Colonial Secretary.

Sydney, 19 November, 1879.

My dear Sir Henry,
In acknowledging your letter of the 1st instant, offering me the important and honorable post of Agent General of the Colony in London, I feel that I owe you and your colleagues an apology for the long time which I have held you in suspense; but the important issues involved in the relinquishment of life-long engagements in business in the Colony required much anxious consideration at my hands; for I fully agree with you, that the Agent General should not be engaged in active mercantile business which might bring him into conflicting interests with those which devolve upon him in connection with the Government.

In now expressing my willingness to accept the appointment, I must state that it will scarcely be possible to bring my affairs into a condition that will enable me to leave the Colony in a less period than three months; at the same time I will use every endeavour to be ready at the earliest possible period to proceed to my new sphere of labour.

I desire also to state that I could only accept it on the understanding that the salary should be £2,500 a year. I am quite aware that you cannot fix it at that, but that the ultimate decision must rest with Parliament. I will be satisfied with your cordial recommendation and support, only that I shall be free to act as may appear right to me if Parliament decline to agree to your recommendation.

I feel that I could not undertake the work for the sum at present attached to the office, with the somewhat costly position which I would be called on to occupy; and moreover, I feel that it is not due remuneration for the onerous and responsible duties which are and which ought to be still further attached to the office.

In conclusion, I desire to express my thanks to you and your colleagues for the way in which you have made me the offer, and for the complimentary terms in which you have spoken of my fitness for the same.

I remain, &c.,
ALEX. STUART.

The Colonial Secretary to Mr. Alexander Stuart.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 21 November, 1879.

My dear Mr. Stuart,

I am in receipt of your letter of the 19th, accepting the office of Agent General in London, on the condition that three months be allowed for you to wind up your business in Australia, and that Parliament be invited, with the cordial support of the Government, to increase the salary to £2,500.

After consultation with my colleagues, I am prepared to submit to Parliament a salary of £2,000, which I believe will be voted; and believing, as I do, that the Agent General of the Colony should incur expenses outside, and in excess of those consequent upon, his ordinary official duties, in entertaining within moderate limits influential colonists and other public personages, I am prepared to submit a vote for 1880 (say) of £250 for this purpose, in addition to the salary.

If you finally accept the appointment, one of your first duties after making yourself acquainted with the business in London, will be to re-organize, and possibly in some measure to extend the duties of the office, with the view of rendering it more effective in promoting the progress and general interest of the Colony. It will be desirable to have many consultations with you on the subject before you leave, and very probably your reports during next year of the changes you propose will fully justify in the public interest a larger incidental vote being submitted for 1881.

I am quite willing that the date of your departure for the sphere of your new duties shall be fixed three months forward from the present date, your salary to commence from the date of your departure. It will be best, however, for the appointment to be made at once, to free the matter from embarrassment and in order that you may begin to prepare for assuming the office.

You will oblige by giving me a final answer this evening.

I have, &c.,
HENRY PARKES.

Mr. Alexander Stuart to The Colonial Secretary.

My dear Sir Henry,

Sydney, 21 November, 1879.

I have to acknowledge your letter of this date, and in reply beg to state that I accept the appointment on the terms therein stated, viz., £2,000 a year salary, and a sum in addition thereto (which for the year 1880 may be stated at £250) towards meeting those expenses to which I may be put in that intercourse and hospitality which it is desirable should be maintained between the Agent General and those colonists and other persons with whom he may officially be brought in contact.

It will afford me much pleasure at all times to co-operate in any plan which may tend to render the office more effective in promoting the progress and general interests of the Colony.

I remain,
Yours, &c.,

ALEX. STUART.

Minute of the Executive Council.

Appointment of Agent General.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 25 November, 1879.

I RECOMMEND that Alexander Stuart, Esquire, be appointed Agent General of New South Wales, resident in London, in the room of William Forster, Esquire, whose recall takes effect on the 31st of December next, and that Parliament be invited to increase the salary of the office to £2,000 a year; and as Mr. Stuart has represented to the Government that he requires three months to enable him to arrange for his retirement from business in Australia, I further recommend that his appointment take effect three months after the present date when Mr. Stuart will be prepared to proceed to England.

HENRY PARKES.

At Government House, Sydney, 25 November, 1879.

PRESENT:—

His Excellency the Governor;
The Honorable the Vice-President;
The Honorable the Colonial Secretary;
The Honorable the Colonial Treasurer;
The Honorable the Secretary for Lands;
The Honorable the Secretary for Works;
The Honorable the Postmaster General;
The Honorable the Minister of Justice and Public Instruction;
The Honorable the Secretary for Mines; and The Honorable the Attorney General.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Council a Minute-paper by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, recommending that Alexander Stuart, Esquire, be appointed Agent General of New South Wales, resident in London, in the room of William Forster, Esquire, whose recall takes effect on the 31st proximo; and that Parliament be invited to increase the salary of the office to £2,000 a year.

The Honorable the Colonial Secretary also recommends, in consequence of representations made by Mr. Stuart, that his private affairs will require his attention for three months,—that the appointment take effect three months after the present date.

The Council advise that Alexander Stuart, Esquire, be appointed Agent General for the Colony, resident in London, in the room of William Forster, Esquire, from the date and upon the terms specified.

ALEX. C. BUDGE,
Clerk of the Council.

No. 6.

The Colonial Secretary to Mr. Alexander Stuart.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 26 November, 1879.

I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has appointed you to the office of Agent General of New South Wales, resident in London, and that, in accordance with the minute recommending your appointment to the Council, the Government will ask Parliament to increase the salary of your office to £2,000 a year.

2. To meet your convenience in making your arrangements to retire from business, it has been determined that your appointment shall take effect at the expiration of three months from the present date, when I hope you will be fully prepared to leave Sydney for England. As Mr. Forster's period of service will terminate on the 31st of December next, it will be necessary to arrange with some gentleman connected with the Colony in London to perform the duties of the office from the 1st of January until your arrival, and for this reason it is desirable that your departure should not be delayed.

3. Your remaining in Sydney during the next three months will not be without advantage, as it will enable you to obtain information on special subjects, and to consult with Members of the Government and with private persons, in order to make the representation of the Colony in England more practically conducive to its general interests.

I have, &c.,
HENRY PARKES.

No. 7.

The Colonial Secretary to Sir Daniel Cooper, Bart.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 26 November, 1879.

By the accompanying copy of printed correspondence you will see that William Forster, Esquire, has been recalled from the office of Agent General in London; and I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, has appointed Alexander Stuart, Esquire, late Colonial Treasurer, to that office.

2. Mr. Stuart has stipulated for three months, to enable him to complete his arrangements for retiring from business; and as the Government has acceded to this request, he will not leave Sydney until the end of February. He cannot, therefore, reach London before the latter end of April.

3. It will oblige me much, and will be accepted by the Government as a valuable service, if you will take charge of the office of Agent General from the first of January until Mr. Stuart's arrival. Parliament will be invited to increase the salary to £2,000 a year, which I do not doubt will be done. This salary must of course be paid to Mr. Stuart from the date of his departure from Sydney; but it will afford me pleasure to place at your disposal the proportion of the salary from the 1st of January to that date—probably a period of two months. I am well aware that you do not desire payment for any service you can render to the Colony; but it seems to me only proper that this part of the salary should be paid to you if you accept the temporary office.

4. In case of your acceptance, this letter will be your authority for taking possession of the office and entering upon the discharge of its duties.

I have, &c.,

CIVIL SERVICE.

No. 1.

The Auditor General to The Under Secretary, Colonial Secretary's Department.

Sir,

30 October, 1879.

I have the honor to transmit for the consideration of the Colonial Secretary, an application from Mr. R. T. Hall, for the repayment to him of his contributions to the Civil Service Superannuation Fund, to which refund he considers himself entitled, under the recent opinion of Mr. Windeyer when Attorney General.

I have, &c.,

C. ROLLESTON,

Auditor General.

Mr. R. T. Hall, who has just retired upon a pension under Schedule B, applies for a refund of deductions made from his salary under the Superannuation Act of 1864. The application should perhaps be referred to the Treasury.—19/1/80. Colonial Treasurer, for perusal.—H.P., 20/1/80. The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.—C.W., B.C., 20/1/80.

A.

Mr. R. T. Hall to The Auditor General.

Sir,

30 October, 1879.

The Government having granted me a pension out of Schedule B, to take effect from the date of my retirement, I desire to ascertain whether the contributions that I made to the Civil Service Superannuation Fund (authorized to be refunded, but which I have not drawn) can now be repaid to me, without prejudice to my pension.

I am advised, and it is my own opinion, that under the decision of the late Attorney General, Mr. Windeyer, in the case of Mr. C. G. Phillips (copy of which decision I enclose), the said contributions are legally repayable to me, without affecting the payment of my pension in any way.

I therefore have the honor to request that you will be good enough to forward to the Colonial Secretary this my claim for the refund of my said contributions, supported by the enclosed official certificate of the sum due to me for his authority for the payment thereof, provided that such payment shall not in anywise jeopardize the payment of my pension.

I have, &c.,

R. T. HALL.

OPINION.

The Crown Law Offices, Sydney, 12 July, 1879.

Claim of Mr. C. E. Phillips to a pension under Schedule B of the Constitution Act.

I AM of opinion that if Mr. Phillips is allowed to retire from the Service, he may be paid a pension out of Schedule B to the Constitution Act, though he has received the deductions from his salary towards the Superannuation Fund.

The only enactment upon which any argument could be founded in opposition to this view is the "Superannuation Act Repeal Act of 1873." But I am of opinion that neither the provisions of the 9th nor those of the 13th section of that Act can invalidate his claim.

The proviso to the 9th section simply refers to pensions granted or paid under the provisions of that Act, whereas the pension which it is proposed to give to Mr. Phillips is not to be paid under the provisions of that Act, but under those of the Constitution Act.

The 13th section of the Superannuation Act Repeal Act expressly provides that nothing in the Act shall alter or affect the Constitution Act, consequently the power to grant pensions under the provisions of that Act remains intact. What the intentions of the Legislature may have been in adding that nothing in the Act should prejudice the rights of any members of the Civil Service who should not have received any refund of deductions under the 9th section to any pension to which they may claim to be entitled by virtue of any Imperial Act, is not very clear. But it is sufficient to say that the pension proposed to be paid to Mr. Phillips is not claimed under the provisions of any Imperial Act, nor do I see what provisions there are in the Superannuation Act Repeal Act which deprive Mr. Phillips or any other member of the Civil Service of his right to receive a pension under the provisions of the Constitution Act, whether he has received any refund of the deductions of his salary or not.

Moreover, I cannot see any reason why the receipt of such deductions should affect the claim of any officer who did not receive a pension under the express provisions of the Superannuation Act Repeal Act. Those deductions were made under an Act which provided for the payment of pensions out of a fund to be supplemented and supported by such deductions. On the failure of the scheme and the passing of a Superannuation Act Repeal Act, the deductions were repaid to those officers who did not and could not possibly receive any benefit from the Act and from the deductions made from their salaries. I have already pointed out in the case of Mr. Thurlow, that Schedule B of the Constitution Act is a perpetual fund (until abolished by Act of Parliament), out of which pensions may be paid not only to officers who were members of the Civil Service at the time of the passing of the Constitution Act, but to those who have entered the Service since that date. Such being the state of the law, it would manifestly be unjust to refuse pensions to officers who were in the Service when the Superannuation Act Repeal Act was passed, because they received a refund of deductions from their salaries, and to allow them to officers who have come into the Service since that time, and from whom no deductions have ever been required. The Legislature manifestly can never have intended that the old officers of the Service should be placed without reason in so exceptionally a disadvantageous position.

W. C. WINDEYER, A.G.,

No. 2.

Edward A. Rennie, Esq., to The Under Secretary, Colonial Secretary's Department.

Sir,

Department of Audit, 10 January, 1880.

I shall feel obliged if you will have the goodness to submit for the favourable consideration of the Colonial Secretary that I be authorized to obtain from the Treasury a refund of the deductions made from my salary under the Superannuation Act of 1864, without prejudice to any claim which I may have to make hereafter for a pension.

I have hitherto, in common with many other officers in the Service, refrained from applying for repayment of those deductions, as the terms of the Act of 1873 were supposed to bar pension under any circumstances to an officer who should so be repaid. But under the opinion of the late Attorney General, Mr. Windeyer, which I am aware has already been brought under notice in other communications, it would appear that there is no legal obstacle to my being repaid the sum (£230 17s. 3d.) deducted from my salary (for an object which has not been and cannot now be carried out), without my being thereby deprived of a pension under any existing or future law or regulation.

for reference.

The fact that Mr. Halloran has been repaid the deductions from his salary, notwithstanding that he has been placed on the Pension List, is confirmatory of what I suppose is my right to have the same privilege and without prejudice.

I shall be glad to be favoured with a reply at as early a date as convenient.

I have, &amp;c.,

EDWARD A. RENNIE.

No. 3.

W. Newcombe, Esq., to The Under Secretary for Finance and Trade.

Sir,

The Treasury, 19 January, 1880.

I have the honor to enclose the certificate of the Auditor General, dated 10th January, 1880, showing that the deductions made from my salary under the Superannuation Act of 1864, with interest added thereto, to be (£203 7s. 10d.) two hundred and three pounds seven shillings and ten pence.

This money I have left in the hands of the Government, without any interest accruing thereon, since 31st May, 1873, now nearly seven years, under the impression which I had, that by receiving back such deductions I should prejudice my right to a pension. I am now given to understand that, according to the opinion of Mr. Attorney General Windeyer, given in the case of the late Mr. Phillips, of the Lands Department, on the 11th day of July last, I should, notwithstanding my acceptance of such deductions, be still eligible for a pension under Schedule B to the Constitution Act; and, under that opinion, deductions have been refunded to officers to whom pensions have been granted under said Schedule B. If this be my position, I have the honor to request that you will be pleased to obtain the approval of the Hon. the Treasurer to the amount referred to in the certificate being placed to my credit in the Oriental Bank, Sydney.

I have, &amp;c.,

W. NEWCOMBE.

(CIRCULAR RESPECTING EMPLOYMENT OF MEMBERS OF, AS DIRECTORS OR AUDITORS OF BANKS OR COMPANIES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be printed, 10 December, 1879.

Sir,

Colonial Secretary's Office, Sydney, 1 December, 1879.

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary, on the part of his Colleagues as well as for himself, to bring under your notice two Resolutions lately passed by the Legislative Assembly, and also copy of a Minute issued in England by the Lords of the Treasury last year. For more convenient reference these several documents are reproduced on printed enclosure, numbered 1 to 3.

2. It will be seen that the Resolutions of the Assembly, read together, distinctly affirm that no person employed in the Civil Service shall be allowed to act as Director or Auditor of any Bank or Company, except in the cases of the Civil Service Co-operative Society and the Civil Service Building Society.

3. In the Minute of the Lords of the Treasury, so late as the 6th April, 1878, the incompatibility of any such holding of office with efficient service in employment under Government is strongly enforced, and the Government of this Colony fully adopt the views of my Lords.

4. It is hoped that no further step will be necessary to carry out the decision arrived at, but I am to state that the continuance of any officer of this Government in a position directly forbidden by the Legislative Assembly will be held to be a disobedience of instructions, and as such will render him liable to be visited by suspension from duty without any other intimation being made to him.

I have, &amp;c.,

CRITCHETT WALKER,
Principal Under Secretary.

[Enclosure.]

Resolution of the Legislative Assembly passed on the 17th June, 1879.

(1.) That, in the opinion of this House, no person employed in the Civil Service should be allowed to act as a Director or Auditor of any Bank or Company except the Civil Service Co-operative Society.

Resolution of the Legislative Assembly passed on the 3rd July, 1879.

That, in the opinion of this House, the Resolution passed on the 17th June last, "That, in the opinion of this House, no person employed in the Civil Service should be allowed to act as a Director or Auditor of any Bank or Company, except the Civil Service Co-operative Society," be rescinded so far as it affects the Civil Service Building Society.

3.

Minute of the Lords of the Treasury relating to the Imperial Civil Service.

Sir,

Treasury Chambers, 6 April, 1878.

In reply to your letter of the 8th of May last, inquiring whether any regulations have been issued by this Board with reference to the acceptance of local offices by persons in the permanent employment of the Government, and if not, whether they think the practice is one which may be permitted consistently with the interests of the Public Service, or whether it should be discouraged or altogether forbidden, I am directed by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to state, for the information of Mr. Secretary Cross, that the only instructions bearing upon the subject which have been issued by my Lords are such as refer to the directorships of public companies or similar employments which may require attendance during the same hours as the Public Service.

All

All such questions turn upon the compatibility of a second office or employment with a public one for which the holder's whole time professes to be given.

The mention of whole time, however, involves a definition of office hours, which of course this extra sort of service tends to limit to the extremest point.

My Lords have laid down the rule, without exception, that no extra employment ought to be permitted in respect of which the officer is liable to be called away during office hours.

Further than this my Lords can hardly be said to have gone, but their own strong opinion is that such extra employment is generally prejudicial to the Public Service, because no one can serve two masters. In private service it is believed to be universally forbidden. My Lords, in Departments under their own control, would be disposed to forbid it, or to regard it as primâ facie disqualifying for promotion.

The difficulty of laying down any very precise rules upon the subject is that, without an undesirable amount of inquiry into personal details, it is difficult to ascertain the facts to which such rules would have to be applied. But the acceptance of a specific office is in this respect distinguishable from any kind of merely private and casual occupation, although for profit.

As regards local offices, if they are offices of profit, all the above considerations apply; if they are not offices of profit, the question becomes one of compatibility of functions in respect of character and of time, and this my Lords apprehend must be left to the chief of each Department to decide.

The Hon. A. F. O. Liddell, Q.C., Home Office.

I have, &c.,

R. R. W. LINGEN.

Extract from Treasury Minute of 27th March, 1849.

My Lords agree with the Committee in considering that the public is entitled to the whole time of its servants, and that officers holding situations which require daily attendance should not be allowed to accept employment as Directors of Companies of various descriptions requiring their personal attendance elsewhere during office hours.

PART II.

ORDERED BY THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY TO BE PRINTED,
28 October, 1879.

SYDNEY: THOMAS RICHARDS, GOVERNMENT PRINTER.

1879.

The Chairman of the Board to The Honorable the Colonial Treasurer.

Sir,

The Treasury, New South Wales, Sydney, 22 October, 1879.

I have the honor, by desire of the Board, to hand you herewith the second and concluding part of their Report (with the Minutes of Evidence attached) upon the matters referred to them for inquiry under your minute of 4th March last.

I have, &c.,

G. EAGAR,

Chairman of the Board.

REPORT OF THE BOARD appointed to inquire into charges preferred against the GOVERNMENT STORES DEPARTMENT by Mr. J. F. Nash, and other matters.

---

PART THE SECOND.

IN the Report which the Board had the honor to present to the Colonial Treasurer, on the 12th June last,—the first portion of the enquiry entrusted to them was disposed of,—and it then remained for the Board to take further evidence and make special inquiry, as instructed by Treasury Minute of 4th March last, in reference “to the general management of the Department,—the system of tendering, the quantities of goods likely to be required, the receipt and delivery of goods,—and generally such matters as may seem to suggest anything to the Board during the progress of the inquiry with a view to improvement, if found necessary.” On this comprehensive instruction the Board have acted,—and have now to present the result of their labours in this the second and concluding portion of their Report.

2. Dealing first with the question of “general management,” it may be said that so far as the accounts of the Department are concerned, the system introduced by Mr. James Thomson, the Consulting Accountant to the Treasury, on 1st July, 1877, works satisfactorily, and no improvement under this head can be suggested. But with respect to that part of the business (certainly a very large part) which relates to the ordering of goods from contractors, and their rapid distribution among the various branches of the Public Service requiring those goods—the management has been weak and ineffective. It may also be said that the contract business—that is to say, the preparation of the statements of probable quantities for the year’s supply—the detailed schedules furnished to contractors for the purpose of tendering, and the mode of supply under those tenders—has not been generally carried out with adequate care and judgment. These deficiencies in good management may be accounted for by the fact that the Department, which was started upon its present basis in 1864, has greatly outgrown its original proportions,—its duties have become more varied and complicated,—and the capacity of the staff, as a rule, has not kept pace with the increasing urgency of the demand upon their ability and competency. It will be the duty of the Board, before closing this Report, to submit recommendations which, if carried out, will have the effect of transferring the more difficult and responsible portion of the business to the Treasury, and of placing the Store Department upon a smaller basis, which may be worked with a reduced staff, and consequently at less expense.

3. Perhaps the most important matter which has been referred to the consideration of the Board, is that which concerns the system of obtaining supplies for the Government by means of "public tender" and "annual contract." These supplies are of two kinds—

- 1st. Provisions and forage—which are taken for Gaols, Lunatic and Charitable Asylums, Orphanages, Industrial Establishments and Reformatories, the Military Force, and the Training Ship "Vernon," and forage for the Police—town and country.
- 2nd. General supplies of all descriptions of goods and merchandise, which are requisitioned for, as needed, by every branch of the Public Service.

The contract business under the first head is managed by the Treasury—under the second head by the Stores Department.

4. With respect to the first-named kind of supply—provisions and forage—the contractors are called upon, in the cases of the Gaol at Darlinghurst, Country Gaols, and the Nautical Training Ship "Vernon," to tender for a "ration" composed of certain articles at a stated price per head. These rations constitute the bulk of the tender, and amount, in the majority of the cases, to nearly three-fourths of the total. Outside these rations, contractors are called upon to supply, as extras, flour, meat, tobacco, groceries, wines, beer, and spirits, &c., as required. Experience has shown that, so long as the contract is based upon a "ration" price, no wrong can be done in accepting the lowest tender. The ration comprehends defined quantities of bread, meat, vegetables, &c., for a given sum per ration, and it is the duty of the establishment concerned to see that the supply is of good quality. It is not therefore considered necessary to recommend a change in this direction. But as regards the "extra" supplies before alluded to, it is quite true, as shown in the evidence of Mr. William Davies, M.P., that an anomalous state of things has prevailed of this kind—that when the contracts for the Metropolitan District have been in the hands of one person, the prices of certain articles tendered for have varied in the case of each establishment. For example, dealing with the contracts of 1878–1879, the same contractor supplies lime-juice to Darlinghurst Gaol at sixpence per gallon—to the Asylums at Callan Park and Gladesville at one shilling per gallon—and to the Industrial School at Biloela at one penny per gallon. He supplies flour—first, second, and third quality—to Darlinghurst Gaol at one farthing per pound without distinction of quality; to Biloela the first quality at one penny half-penny, and the second and third qualities at one penny per pound; to Parramatta Gaol the first quality at one penny per pound, the second and third qualities at one half-penny. In Mr. Davies' evidence will be found numerous instances of discrepancies of this character; but when it was disclosed by the enquiry that the "ration" price was the governing item in these contracts,—that the extras were comparatively limited in amount,—and that these rations were at a fixed price per ration,—it then became apparent that the discrepancies which are shown in the published returns of these contracts do not seem to be important, or indeed to materially affect the cost of the contract. The Board, however, are of opinion that such discrepancies should be avoided, and recommend that for the establishments in the Metropolitan District one general contract should, in future, be taken for these extras.

5. With respect to the second class of supplies—that is, of all descriptions of goods and merchandise—the contract business in relation to which is managed at the the Stores Department—difficulties have arisen and now exist which, in the opinion of the Board, require to be remedied. These supplies consist chiefly of blankets, stationery, boots and shoes, clothing for the Permanent and Volunteer Forces and for attendants in Public Institutions, grindery, ironmongery, linendrapery, printing materials, writing and printing papers, saddlery, harness, general ship-chandlery, and other smaller lines.

The chief defects in the present system are found to be as follows, viz. :—

- 1st. Unreliable computation of “probable quantities.”
- 2nd. Imperfect schedules of articles to be tendered for.
- 3rd. The determination of tenders by computation of prices as a whole, and
- 4th. The introduction and use of fictitious or merely nominal prices as a means of unduly affecting such determination.

6. Apart from the question of the unreliability of “probable quantities,” an examination of the evidence given on this point leads the Board to the conclusion that such a calculation—i.e. of probable quantities—is not necessary to an efficient system of contract. In their consideration of the whole question, they have been aided by valuable information obtained from gentlemen whose evidence appears in the Appendix; and the chief impression produced upon the mind of the Board is that a uniform system of tender for general stores cannot be adopted, but that having regard to the great variety of goods required for the Public Service, they should be classed in several large groups, and each be dealt with in a way best suited for securing the public interest.

The following is the classification recommended by the Board :—

- (1.) Articles, the requirement of which is peculiar to the Government, and which are imported or manufactured here for Government use alone, such as blankets for the Aborigines, stationery, uniform clothing, material for use in prisons, lunatic asylums, &c.
- (2.) Articles which, though in general use, are not usually in sufficient stock in the Colony, and for which the contractor requires to prepare by importation.
- (3.) Articles which are of the character of specialities, such as some of the supplies required by the Government Printing Office, and which it is desirable the Government should procure through its own Agency from the manufacturers abroad.
- (4.) Articles of which a supply is generally to be had in the Colonial market.
- (5.) Articles of a miscellaneous and inconsiderable character—the demand for which is uncertain, but which are readily procurable.

7. In view of this classification, the uncertain element of “probable quantities” need no longer prevail. Under classes 1 and 2,—the quantities, carefully ascertained in the first instance, would be fixed, and the Government would be bound to take those quantities. Under class 3—the articles required would be occasional only and of a special character, and would be procured by the Government itself. Under class 4—no quantities would be stated, the contractor being held liable to supply to the extent of the Government demand—whatever that might be. And under class 5—the articles referred to might be scheduled and withdrawn from general tender, and be purchased in the open market in some approved way.

8. To give effect to this proposed classification, the Board consider it to be absolutely necessary that a new series of schedules be prepared, with technical assistance, of articles to be tendered for, and that the determination of tenders by computation of prices as a whole be discontinued, except in cases, hereafter to be specified, where, under altered conditions, the defects of this practice (otherwise found to work conveniently), may be avoided.

9. It may fairly be concluded, having regard to the respective obligations of the contractor, on the one hand,—and of the public, as represented by the Government, on the other hand,—that what is mainly desired in a system of public tender is, that a good and substantial article shall be supplied for the Public Service at a fair market price. These objects have not been generally accomplished under the present system, which has tended rather to encourage inequality of price and an inferior standard of supply. It appears to the Board however, that those objects can be attained, by the adoption of two modes of tender, in substitution of the existing mode,—applying each mode to the class of merchandise where suitable, say,—in the majority of articles, by a schedule of prices, carefully arrived at by technical assistance, where the tenderer would offer to supply at a percentage on or off those prices as a whole; and next, by retaining the present system, in reference to a special class of supplies, but reserving to the Government the right to treat each line of the tender as a separate offer. In the first case, the fixed schedule price would be varied by competition, manifestly to the advantage of the Government, in the proportion that such competition is encouraged by the existence of accurate and comprehensive schedules and by reasonable conditions of contract; in the other case, an effectual check would be imposed upon the objectionable practice of tendering at fictitious or nominal prices.

10. For convenience sake, the offer of the intending public contractor under the first mode indicated may be termed the “schedule price,”—under the other mode, the “tender price.” At “schedule price,” the Board recommend that contracts should be taken for the following goods, say :—

Blankets, &c., book-binding materials, earthen, glass, and crockery ware, grindery, ironmongery, linen-drapery, medicines, instruments, &c., printing materials, teal oil, general ship chandlery, &c., stationery, surveyors' materials, weights and measures.

At “tender price,” the Board recommend that contracts should be taken for the following goods, say :—

Boots and shoes, brushware, and brush-making materials, clothing, &c., for Permanent Military Force; clothing, &c., for the Volunteer Force; clothing, &c., for attendants in Public Institutions; kerosene oil; Post Office mail-bags, printing and writing papers, saddlery, harness, &c., tinware, tweeds in piece.

In all cases, the lowest tender to be accepted.

11. An important feature connected with the tender system is the duration of contracts. Under the existing system contracts are taken for a year, and where “probable quantities” are stated (often erroneously), the contractor has been left at the year's end with a large stock on hand—and in those cases where the goods are for the special requirements of the Government, such stock remains almost a dead loss to the contractor,—or becomes, by purchase, a burden upon the Stores Department.

12. This state of things will be remedied by the abolition of "probable quantities"—and to obviate other inconveniences which experience has disclosed, the Board, after much consideration, recommend that for articles classed as No. 1 (page 3) the contract shall be taken for three years; that for articles under Class 2, the contracts shall be for two years and under Class 4, for one year.

The improvements recommended by the Board may thus be summarized:—

1. Re-classification of stores.
2. Abolition of "probable quantities."
3. Preparation of accurate and comprehensive schedules.
4. Introduction of modes of tender suited to the character of the supply;
  - (a) by schedule of fixed prices—on which the tenderer offers at a per centage on, or a reduction from, the prices named.
  - (b) by computation, as a whole, of prices stated by the tenderer himself—but with the right reserved to the Government to treat each line as a separate offer.
5. Enlargement, in certain cases, of the duration of contracts.

In addition to these improvements the Board recommend that, wherever it can be done, the contractor shall be bound to supply according to an approved sample.

13. It has already been stated, that some re-organization of the Stores Department is considered to be necessary. It appears to the Board that this department should be limited to the duty which its name would seem to imply, that is to say—should receive and deliver the goods supplied by the contractors, keep the contractors' accounts, and render the same to the Treasury for payment, keep the stock and all necessary books in connection therewith, and this should be performed by a staff not larger than that of a mercantile firm doing a business corresponding with that done, in the aggregate amount, by the Stores Department. On the other hand, the Board are of opinion that the whole of the contract business might with advantage be transferred to the Treasury, where it would probably occupy the time of one additional clerk, and thus permit of a large reduction in the Stores' clerical staff. Under this arrangement the expenses of the Department might be much reduced, without neglecting proper provision for its efficiency.

14. The Board would finally observe, that the evidence contains valuable suggestions in respect of the constitution of the Tender Board,—the facilities to be afforded to its operations by the employment of experts,—the expediting the receipt and distribution of goods in detail, and other matters, which they have not considered it necessary to introduce into their Report, but which will no doubt engage the consideration of the Treasury, and might with advantage be embodied in regulations for the future conduct of the contract business.

INQUIRY INTO THE GOVERNMENT STORES DEPARTMENT.
(Second Part.)

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

THURSDAY, 26 JUNE, 1879.

Present:—

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR, | CAPT. HIXSON, R.N.,
HAROLD MACLEAN, Esq.

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR IN THE CHAIR.

L. I. Brennand, Esq., was called in and examined:—

1. Chairman.] Your name? Lancelot Iredale Brennand.
2. How long have you been Superintendent of Stores? Since the 1st of July, 1864.
3. I presume the business of the Stores Department has increased considerably in the interval from that date to the present time? Very much indeed.
4. Can you give the Board some idea of the general course of business as it now proceeds—what, in fact, the business of your department comprehends? The main object of the Stores Department is to procure, in the first instance, and then to distribute under the authority of the Colonial Treasurer, supplies to the whole of the public departments throughout the Colony.
5. I presume you refer to general stores, and not to provision supplies? I do. The tenders for provisions have always been called for at the Treasury, which department attends to that part of the public supplies.
6. Your supervision then is confined to general stores? To general stores and stationery.
7. And if I understand rightly, you have not alone the duty of distributing under authority, but you have had cast upon you the duty of preparing the schedules under which tenders are called for? Yes.
8. Can you give the Board a general idea of the management of your department? We start in the first instance with our stock in hand, which is increased during the year by those supplies which are obtained by contract. Our first dealing with goods is by requisitions sent in from the heads of the various departments, which are examined by me, and any unusual demand, or any demand in excess of what I think the requirements should be, is altered or reduced. The requisitions are then submitted to the Under Secretary for Finance and Trade for approval. After approval they are handed to the order clerk, and the order is forwarded to the contractors. The goods for the town services are delivered direct to the departments; those for the country services are received into store, and examined by the foreman or myself, and if found up to sample are sent on to their several destinations.
9. How do you ascertain that these goods have been correctly distributed? Each delivery is accompanied by an invoice, with a certificate at the bottom requiring the recipient to acknowledge the receipt of the goods. After what is considered a sufficient lapse of time has taken place, the receipt, if not returned, is called for. To this acknowledgment of the receipt of the goods a voucher is attached, and they are forwarded to the Treasury, certified by me for payment in due course.
10. You are now speaking of supplies to the country districts? Yes.
11. Will you now tell us what takes place with deliveries in town? As I have already observed, the goods for town service are delivered direct from the contractors to the departments requiring them. The contractors furnish an invoice similar to that forwarded by me with goods for country service; and at the end of the month a statement is furnished to me by the contractors, supported by these receipts, which is then attached to a voucher and forwarded to the Treasury for payment.
12. Do you find as a general rule that the contractors are quick in their delivery of goods? As a general rule they are.
13. This business of receiving and delivering goods comprehends the bulk of your duty? —
14. Will you please state what you do in reference to contracts? At the beginning of the year the schedules of probable quantities are prepared, but before having them finally printed or approved they are sent round to the departments requiring the bulk of the goods enumerated in them, for the purpose of ascertaining if any alteration in the quantities or the articles is desirable. As soon as a report has been received they are submitted for approval to the Treasurer; then they are printed and distributed after the notice calling for tenders has been published.
15. I suppose it is part of your duty to keep the Treasury informed as to the proper periods at which to invite tenders, and as to the articles for which tenders are required to be called? Yes.
16. The tenders are opened by a Board at the Treasury, are they not? They are.
17. And after acceptance are sent to you to be dealt with? Yes.
18. It is also part of your duty to make up the annual catalogue or price list? Yes, at the end of each year, and the list is published for general information.
19. You have had experience of this system of calling for tenders since you became Superintendent of Stores? Yes.
20. Will you tell the Board what occurs to you as defective in the system—that is, if in your judgment there be any defects, and make any suggestions which occur to you for beneficial reforms? One great objection

L. I.
Brennand,
Esq.

J. I.
Brennand,
Esq.

objection to the present system of calling for tenders is the insertion in the schedule of the probable quantities. Some of the articles are not fully expended during the year, while, with regard to other articles, a much larger supply has been required than was estimated in the first instance. It is utterly impossible to give the exact quantities, or even to state them approximately, twelve months in advance. Much trouble has been experienced in some cases where the contractors have refused to supply beyond the quantities contracted for, but the Treasurer has recently altered the conditions to meet cases of this kind. There is another system of tendering in existence at the Railway Department, in which no probable quantities are given. The tenderer there gives his price for each line, so much per cent. off or on.

21. Mr. Maclean.] What kind of supplies are obtained under that system? All the railway material. They get their paints for their own service.

22. Captain Hixson.] In regard to these probable quantities, are there not some articles which are not in the market, and in regard to which a contractor is really obliged to know something like the quantity which will probably be required, to enable him to ensure a supply if his tender be accepted? Nearly all the articles we have named in our contracts are in the market. I do not know of any article which is not procurable in town.

23. Take teal oil for example? That is obtained under a special contract.

24. Mr. Maclean.] Do you not think that a statement of probable quantities, without a limitation made as to the exact supply, would be of great assistance to persons tendering? There is no doubt of it.

25. Then, I presume, you would not advise an alteration in that part of the system? No; I would not advise an alteration in the practice of stating the probable quantities.

26. Chairman.] You have reason to be satisfied with the existing system, as regards probable quantities? I have.

27. Captain Hixson.] Do you think the contractors look for some such guide when they are tendering? No doubt they do. Persons who had not obtained a contract before would be all in the dark in tendering; and a man who had had the contract for three or four years would be placed at a great advantage.

28. Mr. Maclean.] Do you obtain information from the departments requiring the bulk of the goods named in the schedule, to enable you to prepare your statement of probable quantities? Yes. I will take a case which would fall within your own department. Take the grindery schedule: I send that to Mr. Read and ask him to state if the probable quantities are reasonable, and to make any additions he thinks proper; I also send it on to the Gaoler at Parramatta for the same information; and as those two establishments require the bulk of the goods, I think the information I get from them a sufficient guide. I send the linendrapery schedule to Dr. Manning.

29. Do you find the statements you get from these establishments fairly correct? Yes, as far as you could expect them to be.

30. Sufficiently so for the purpose? Yes.

31. As to the schedules, is it not the fact that notwithstanding the careful preparation of these schedules that there are articles which the Government require but which are omitted? Very few; there are some.

32. There are some which cannot be anticipated? Yes; from year to year there are fresh articles cropping up.

33. But you say there has been no material quantity of articles omitted? No; all the principal articles are included.

34. In cases where articles are found not to be in contract, is it the custom to obtain the supply from the contractor who has to furnish similar articles? It depends upon the amount. If the value of the articles were £5 or £6 it would hardly be worth while calling for tenders for them.

35. You say you would obtain articles up to £5 or £6 without tender; would you obtain them at the contractor's own price? I would in a case of that kind test the town. We have a regular circular—a little note, which we send out for the purpose.

36. Then you would not leave the person from whom you obtain the goods to fix his own price? No.

37. The goods would be supplied at a price of which you had approved? Yes.

38. But I suppose that, as a matter of convenience, you would give the preference to a regular contractor, presuming his price to be satisfactory? Yes.

39. And if a larger expenditure than £5 or £6 had to be made, you would call for tenders? If it were likely to be above £25 we should call for tenders through the Gazette. If the amount were about £10 we should not call for tenders through the Gazette. In such a case as that, I have a book of forms, and I send round to a number of persons in town and take the lowest offer.

40. You do not think, however, that there has been heretofore a very material quantity of articles out of contract? I do not think so.

41. How are they paid for—if they are out of contract does the Auditor General take no exception to them? He did in 1876. He took exception to some of the articles; but since then he has not. He has had very little occasion lately. I put everything into the contract I possibly can.

42. Captain Hixson.] If it has been stated that the Government have lost very largely in consequence of their procuring goods that are not in contract, would such a statement correctly represent the facts or not? It is not the fact.

43. I think you have given the Board to understand that where articles are not in contract you do the best you can for the Government under the circumstances? Most certainly.

44. You act in the same way that you would if you were purchasing for your own private requirements? Certainly.

45. Mr. Maclean.] As a matter of fact you do, I suppose, frequently receive representations from the heads of departments about delays which have occurred in supplying articles asked for? Yes.

46. Can you inform the Board what reason should exist for these delays. We will suppose for example, that a requisition for leather or grindery arrives in your office on the first of the month,—why should not the goods asked for be supplied within seven or fourteen days? I do not know why delivery should be delayed, that is town delivery; but in the country delays may arise which cannot be foreseen.

47. Most of the important places to which supplies are sent are on the lines of railway? Some time ago there were some complaints about the delay in the supply of leather to Darlinghurst Gaol.

48. I am asking you generally with a view to improvement. How long after a requisition has reached your office should elapse before it is satisfied? Fourteen days at the very outside.

49. Then some person would be in fault if there were a longer delay? Yes.

INQUIRY INTO THE GOVERNMENT STORES DEPARTMENT—MINUTES OF EVIDENCE.

L. I.
Brennand,
Esq.

26 June, 1879.

50. Have these delays chiefly arisen through the contractors neglecting to make the supplies that you have ordered from them? Certainly; the delay has not arisen in sending the orders, but in the contractors neglecting to supply the goods.
51. What pressure is brought to bear upon contractors to compel them to supply? As soon as it is brought under my notice that goods ordered have not been supplied, I write an official letter to the contractor directing him to supply at once.
52. Sometimes the contractor may not act upon your letter? Yes.
53. They may not have the articles in stock? That is frequently the case.
54. And they are not very anxious to put themselves about to get them? Yes.
55. Is there any constraint put upon a contractor in a case of that kind? Yes, by clause V.
56. That is, you can buy at their risk? Yes.
57. Is that promptly done? As soon as it comes under my notice. It has been done in many cases.
58. Do you not think that for compelling promptitude on the part of contractors, something could not be done beyond what is provided for in the existing conditions—by imposing a fine for delay? A fine would have a very wholesome effect—there can be no doubt about that.
59. Could you not have in your office a weekly list of unspecified requisitions upon which you could act upon contractors promptly, and in a regular way? I could do that as far as the Stores are concerned, but I should have to send round to all the departments to ask if the goods had been supplied.
60. Captain Hixson.] Could not an officer be sent to the contractors to ascertain what had been supplied? Yes.
61. Mr. Maclean.] Could not the town part of the business be arranged by requiring that whenever goods were sent to a department the contractor should furnish you with a duplicate? Yes; or if the contractors furnished a statement every Monday morning, we could check that off with our order book.
62. You do not know now, as a matter of fact, that goods have not been supplied to any particular establishment until a complaint comes to you about it? I do not.
63. Would there be any difficulty in your ascertaining whether the goods had been supplied or not? I do not think so.
64. Do you refer complaints to contractors for their explanation? I generally send some one up with them.
65. Do you not think it would be a desirable thing to have an officer whose sole duty it would be to ensure prompt despatch of goods ordered on requisition? An Inspector of Stores?
66. I mean an officer to do nothing else? Most decidedly, if the Government would get one.
67. By an arrangement with the Prisons Department that has been partly acted upon by one of the prison officers? Yes.
68. It has been found very advantageous? Yes.
69. But not sufficiently complete? No.
70. Captain Hixson.] Is the delay sometimes occasioned by people obtaining contracts out of their particular line of business? Yes, that has very frequently been the case.
71. Do you think it is desirable to give people contracts for goods other than those they are in the habit of supplying? It is not desirable.
72. Mr. Maclean.] If there were more stringent provision about delays, by fine or otherwise, would not that prevent people from tendering for contracts outside of their particular business as they do now? Yes, I think it would.
73. Do you think that more than a week, except under very exceptional circumstances, should be allowed to contractors to meet a demand for a supply? I do not.
74. You would draw the line of undue delay at the end of a week? I would.
75. Would a week be too long? I would draw the line of excusable delay at the end of a week.
76. Captain Hixson.] That is, a week from the time the storekeeper gets the order? Yes.
77. Mr. Maclean.] That is, you would allow a week for the despatch of the goods? Yes.
78. And after that you think the contractor should be subjected to a fine? I think so.
79. Unless the other course is taken of buying at his risk? Yes; it ought to be worked both ways.
80. If you had an officer engaged to see simply to the despatch of the goods, he could inform you every week of all delays, could he not, of all orders not acted upon? Yes, for country goods.
81. And for town also? If we had an officer specially appointed for the purpose; but the performance of the duty would occupy the whole of his time.
82. Could you not appropriate one of your officers to do that? I could not very well spare a man to do that. If it be decided to do it, of course it must be done.
83. Captain Hixson.] What is the total number of contractors (about) with whom you have to deal for the whole Government supply? About twenty-seven or twenty-eight.
84. Mr. Maclean.] Could you not fine these contractors for delays under the present conditions? Certainly; under clause V.
85. That does not authorize a fine being imposed? No; it empowers us to buy at their risk; there is no fine.
86. There is no power to fine under the Store contracts? No; I think not; but if they fail to fulfil their contract you can come down on their bondsmen.
87. As to Boards on disputed articles, what opinion have you formed of their working? Hitherto the Boards held upon disputed articles have consisted generally of officers of the Government, assisted by experts from the gaols and the police depôt; and they have not worked satisfactorily.
88. You are speaking of Boards which pass a general supply? Yes; and disputed supplies too.
89. Have there not been cases of disputed supply where persons who are not Government officers are brought in? Yes.
90. On the nomination of some of the contractors? Not recently.
91. Who appoints the Boards? The Treasurer appoints one member and the contractor another.
92. And they choose an umpire? Yes; if they disagree.
93. That is for cases where the quality of an article is in dispute—how does that arrangement act? Pretty well.
94. Have not the decisions always gone against the Government? The decisions have generally been adverse to the Government. Recently, however, the present Treasurer has appointed on several occasions experts for the examination of goods received into the Stores.

- L. I. Brennan, Esq.
26 June, 1879.
95. Without any representation of the contractor? Without any representation on the part of the contractor.
96. Which plan do you think works the best? I think the present system works better.
97. Are the contractors entitled by the conditions of their contract to representation? No, not at all.
98. Are they not in some other branches of the Service? They are not in the Stores.
99. You do not think it is desirable that they should be represented? I do not.
100. Captain Hixson.] What is the amount of money expended upon the supply of stores by your department? The amount on the Estimates for Stores alone this year is, I think, £75,000; but what with the "Vernon," Biloela, and other departments which have separate funds, the expenditure of the Government upon Stores comes to over £100,000.

FRIDAY, 27 JUNE, 1879.

Present:—

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR, | CAPT. HIXSON, R.N.,
HAROLD MACLEAN, Esq.

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR IN THE CHAIR.

William Davies, Esq., M.P., was called in and examined:—

- W. Davies, Esq., M.P.
27 June, 1879.
101. Chairman.] Your name, if you please, Mr. Davies? William Davies.
102. You are a Member of Parliament for Argyle? Yes.
103. I am aware that you have paid considerable attention to the present mode of calling for supplies for the Public Service? Yes.
104. The Board would be glad if you would favour them with any information you possess upon the subject? The returns I called for last Session have not been published, but I have seen them as far as you have had them prepared; and I intimated that, as the Government intended to initiate some reforms in the Stores Department, I would not press the Government to continue the returns, lest the Country should be put to needless expense. I should like to have had more time before I proceeded to give evidence, but I have got as much information as the limited time at my disposal has enabled me to procure, and it may perhaps be sufficient to indicate what appears to me to be a looseness in the system, an error in fact, and the natural results of the system of tendering cannot, I should think, be very satisfactory to the Government. I have already, with respect to certain returns, called attention in Parliament to the circumstance that they exhibited, that the three tenders of Mr. Kidman accepted by the Government on the same day for three separate departments, contained three widely different prices for one and the same article.
105. Perhaps you will point out some instances? From the printed copies of Mr. Kidman's tenders which are now before me, I direct your attention to the fact that lime-juice was put in his tender for the supplies to be delivered to Darlinghurst Gaol at 6d. per gallon, while in his tender for the Industrial School at Biloela it was entered at 1d. per gallon; and the same article was put down in his tender for Callan Park and Gladesville at 1s. per gallon. You will observe that all these tenders were accepted on the same day, and were for the service of the year 1878. I call your attention to flour. First, second, and third quality of flour to Darlinghurst Gaol was put down at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. without distinction of quality. The first quality of flour supplied to Biloela was  $1\frac{1}{2}$ d., the second and third 1d. At the Parramatta Gaol the same tenderer contracted to supply flour of the first quality at 1d. per lb., and of the second and third at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Fresh beef, salt beef, and salt pork supplied to the Darlinghurst Gaol at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb.
106. All round? Yes; fresh beef, salt beef, and salt pork at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. For the troops beef and mutton and salt beef were quoted at  $4\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. For Biloela fresh beef was  $4\frac{1}{2}$ d., salt beef 1d., salt pork 1d., and fresh mutton  $4\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. That will show discrepancies enough—a range of from  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. to  $4\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. The "Vernon" supplies are, I am informed, included in the same contract as the Gaols.
107. Mr. Maclean.] And therefore the rate for meat supplied to the "Vernon" would be  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb.? Yes; while for the girls at Biloela, who occupy a somewhat similar position, a very much larger sum has to be paid. Now I will take the article of bread. To Darlinghurst Gaol the first quality is supplied at  $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., the second and third at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. For the troops bread of the first quality is supplied at  $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. To Biloela the first quality is 2d., the second and third qualities 1d. Now, take the article of mustard, which, to the Gaol is charged 1d. per lb., to the troops 1s. 6d. per lb., and to Callan Park it is 9d. per lb.
108. All the tenders you are quoting from are Mr. Kidman's? All Mr. Kidman's contracts. Mustard to the Lunatic Asylum at Parramatta was 6d. per lb.; so that you have it at 1d., 6d., 9d., and 1s. 6d. on the same day and by the same man. Rum was supplied to Darlinghurst Gaol at 7s. per gallon (which was 3s. less than the duty), to Biloela at 10s. per gallon, to Gladesville and Callan Park at 17s. per gallon, the last-named stated to be proof. That is the only place in which it is said to be proof, and in that case it is as much too high as the other was too low. The price of rum to the Parramatta Lunatic Asylum was 15s. per gallon.
109. Captain Hixson.] There is a duty of 10s. per gallon on rum, is there not? Yes. Then brandy was supplied to Darlinghurst Gaol at 21s., to the troops at 16s. (said to be the best), and to Biloela at 10s. per gallon. Now take the article of treacle, which shows considerable discrepancies, if I mistake not. To Darlinghurst Gaol it is  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., to Biloela 1d. per lb., to Gladesville 3d. per lb. I will next take the article of butter. To Darlinghurst Gaol, salt butter is 3d.; to the troops, the best butter is 1s. 9d.; to Biloela, salt butter is 1d.; to Gladesville, fresh butter is 1s. 6d. Take this matter of eggs,—to Darlinghurst Gaol, fresh eggs are 6d. per dozen; to the troops, eggs (new laid) are 1s. 6d.; to Biloela, eggs (fresh) are 6d.; to Gladesville, eggs (fresh) are 1s. per dozen. Unless you think of any other line that is worth noticing, perhaps I need not go on with any other items.
110. Chairman.] Tea and sugar are articles of large consumption; how will they come out? I think you will find very great discrepancies, but they are articles in regard to which very much depends upon quality. We will take tea. To Darlinghurst Gaol green tea was 6d. and black 1s. 2d. per lb.; to the Military Forces, black tea was 1s. 3d.; to Biloela, green tea was 6d. and black 1s. 3d. per lb.; to Gladesville, tea was 1s. 6d. and 1s.  $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., it does not say green or black. Sugar is an article which altogether depends upon quality. To the Gaol, ration sugar was  $2\frac{1}{2}$ d., and soft white was 4d. per lb. He calls it first quality—he does not say white—to the Military Forces. White sugar appears to be 4d. all round.

Esq., M.P.

round. For any quality of sugar they are likely to supply to these institutions I should say that that was a high price, but I could not tell you unless I saw the sugar itself. I could point out a good many things which are manifestly below the market prices, but it was the discrepancies in the prices of various lines to which I wished more particularly to call your attention—articles, as I have said before, from the same tenderer on the same day to the different departments. Of the tobacco supplied to Darlinghurst Gaol—American was 2s. 3d., and Colonial was 1s. 9d. per lb.; to Gladesville—American was 2s. 9d., and Colonial was 1s. 9d. per lb.; and to the Lunatic Asylum at Parramatta—American tobacco is put down at 2s. 3d., and Colonial 1s. 6d. per lb.

111. Having pointed out these discrepancies, would you kindly favour us with your opinion as to what they would indicate on the part of the contractor, or what your impression would be as to the nature of the contracts? My impression would be that in those tenders, where the price was very low, it was ascertained beforehand that there would be very little wanted; and where the prices were moderately near the value, or above it, I should expect that that was a contract upon which the contractor would anticipate being called on to supply the articles in considerable quantity. But I am utterly at a loss to understand, with my knowledge of the prices of beef, wholesale and retail, during 1878, how beef of any description at all could be supplied at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. Sixteen pounds of beef for a penny! Why the thing is preposterous, and has only to be named for it to appear so. I am satisfied that during that period, when cattle were very dear, that the retail price of beef was not less than from 4d. to 6d. per lb., if not higher for some qualities.

112. It would be a fair presumption then that the prices of meat supplied to the "Vernon," were not based bonâ fide upon the market rates, but were quoted by the contractor with a view to gain an undue advantage? They were certainly not bonâ fide prices; and the only inference which I can draw would be that they were put in for some purpose which was not consistent with a good and fair price for other articles in the contract, taking them all round.

113. Mr. Maclean.] Are you aware that in the prisons of the Colony the supplies of provisions are in a whole ration consisting of beef, bread, and everything else, and that they are tendered for at per ration? Yes; I am aware of that.

114. Then following up that fact, would you not perceive that the bulk of the meat which is drawn at Darlinghurst—excepting that which is required for medical purposes,—would come under the ration contract? I was not aware of that.

115. That being the case, would you not perceive that  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. would be for an infinitesimal part of the total supply to Darlinghurst Gaol, which is the largest of all the Sydney establishments? That appears very likely to be the case.

116. You would also observe that the same thing would apply to flour? I do not know how the rations are made up.

117. They are all included, there being a certain weight of each article? Yes; but I should assume that the Tender Board would calculate that a ration would consist of so much beef, flour, and whatever else might be required, and then calculate it on the basis of these prices.

118. That is not the case with regard to the prisons, which are the chief establishments supplied. A ration consists of a certain quantity of so many articles, and the contractor tenders at so much per ration, and these rations include almost all the beef, flour, &c., which is consumed in the Gaols. Can you tell me what a ration consists of?

119. I do not remember the figures exactly now, but everything is included in the price per ration; and any beef which might be supplied to the Gaol apart from the ration contract would be a mere fraction, so small as not to be worth mentioning? Then with respect to that, I would remark that there would be a great fault in passing a ration at 5d. which contained (say) a pound and a half of beef at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. and a pound of bread at 1d.

120. But the two tenders are separate and distinct. The contractor tenders at per ration? But seeing that beef is put down at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb., and bread at 1d., you have only to add them together to get the price of the ration. If the contractor can supply you at the prices he has put down here, why should you pay him so much more—(say) 4d. or 5d. per ration.

121. I think you argue in this way—that if the contractor can supply beef at  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. per lb. and bread at 1d. per lb., the ration ought to be so much less than they are? Yes.

122. Then we say whatever his price for casual supplies in other tenders, he is lowest on the ration tender, which is the governing item, for it is the number of thousands of rations which determines chiefly the contract? But with all respect there are some of these contracts in which there are no rations at all.

123. The Gaol contracts have rations, the military contracts none? I have pointed out discrepancies in contracts in which there are no rations.

124. Chairman.] I invite your attention to the computations of prices under which the provision tenders for 1878 were accepted? Yes; I have examined them. As I find that the bulk of the supplies are for rations at a fixed price per ration, the discrepancies which appear in the published returns of these contracts do not seem to be so important, or indeed to materially affect the cost of the contract.

125. Would you have the goodness to state the discrepancies which you have observed in the contracts for the general stores? I have not had time to go through these papers as I should like to have done, so as to have collated the prices under the contracts for different years, say 1877, 1878, and 1879, to which my attention has been chiefly directed, but I can call your attention to some very glaring features in them. I will begin with testing and stamping instruments. The contract in 1877 for these instruments did not in any case exceed 1s., and several of them were at 1d. for each instrument. In 1879 the prices for the same articles varied from 1s. to £4 8s.

126. For testing instruments? Instruments for testing and stamping. An article which was tendered for at 1s. in 1877 was tendered for at £4 8s. in 1879. In the ironmongery contract for 1877 there are marching chains for six men put down at 1d. each, and there are chisels at 1d., which are worth from 1s. 6d. to 2s. each. There are frying pans at 1d., which are worth 2s. each. There are washing crystals at 1d. per gross, which are worth 6s. per gross. There are butchers' cleavers at 2s. 6d., worth 10s. There are sledge hammers at 6d., which are worth 4s.; rivet hammers at 2d., worth 1s. 6d.; ditto., large, at 2d., worth 2s.; shoeing hammers at 2d., worth 1s. 6d.; drawback locks at 3d., worth 4s.; ditto., 10-inch, at 3d., worth 4s. 6d., Rangoon oil at 1s., worth 5s.; large pokers at 1d., worth 1s., tailors' shears at 1s. per pair, which are worth from 20s. to 45s. Then, as a sort of per contra, we have iron screws down at 4s. per lb., which are worth 5d.; brass screws at 4s. per lb., which are worth 2s.

W. Davies,
Esq., M.P.
27 June, 1879.

127. Are these items all in one contract? Yes; in Mr. Cohen's contract for 1877. Now here are weights and measures—solid brass weights, 56 lbs. down to 1 drachm complete, at 3s., which are worth £5. Then there are solid brass weights, from 6 lbs. to 1 grain, at 3s., worth at the very least £5. Then there are the weighing-machines, average 5 cwt., down at 10s., when they are worth £6, and 10 cwt. down at 15s., when they are worth from £9 to £10. The testing instruments are in the same contract. Ewbank's nails are down at £1 per cwt., but I will show you a contract further on where they are 5s. per cwt., which is very much below their value. Wire nails are down at £1 8s. per cwt., when they are only worth 17s., the wire nails being those which carpenters will always send in their requisition for, because there is no boring required. They charge you too much for what will be wanted, and too little for what will not be wanted. On drapery I can say very little, because everything depends upon the quality of the article, but there is a line of rack-combs which I noticed somewhere down at 5s. The most expensive tortoise-shell would not come to nearly the money, while the combs such as would, I suppose, be wanted, would be worth about 5s. per dozen, not 5s. each. Then there is a ship chandlery contract here of John Keep's. Marling-spikes are put in at 1d. each, and iron-rowlocks at 1d. per pair; black varnish, 1s. per gallon; water-casks at 1d. per gallon. Fancy an 80-gallon cask for 6s. 8d! Washing-tubs at 1d. per gallon—a 12-gallon washing-tub for 1s.; rope-yarn, 5s. per cwt. These are absurdly-priced things. They are all in the 1877 contract. I will call your attention to Sands' stationery contract for 1877. There are two lines of paper of precisely the same description in point of quality—demy B W, 24 lbs. per ream, at £1 4s. 2d.—and exactly the same line underneath at £1 3s. 1d. I will go out of the usual course to compare these with the contract price for 1878 for precisely the same things. The contract price was 1s. a ream in each case, and in 1879 the contract price is 1s. 1d. per ream. It is quite clear that if they could be supplied at 1s. they were charged at an enormously high price in 1877. But they could not be supplied at 1s. I will draw your attention to envelopes in the same contract. In 1877, envelopes, post B.W., 5½ x 3½ inch, gum with cameo, No. 6, were put down at 1s. per 1,000, while envelopes, post cream-laid, 5½ x 3½ inch, gummed, with cameo, No. 6, 10s. 3d. The only difference between these two lines is that one is blue-weave and the other cream-laid. It must be expected that the 10s. 3d. article will be always selected. In the tinware contract of 1877 I find that the 9-inch tin dishes are put down at 1d. each, and corn measures at 6d. each; it does not say what size. In 1878, under the head of grindery, there are two cutting machines and hydraulic machines at £25 each, and rollers at £20 each, whereas in 1879 the same tenderer, Mr. Tebbutt, put them down at £1 each. In Tebbutt's grindery contract for 1879 there are French awl blades at 1d. per gross, and youths' and women's lasts at 1d. each. There are many other little items illustrating the same sort of things, but perhaps it is not worth while mentioning them. I am not sure whether I pointed out that Ewbank's nails were in contract in one place at 20s. They were in another contract for the year, 1879, at 5s. In this same contract I see the reproduction of these wire nails at 32s. 8d., whereas the fair price for wholesale quantities would be 17s. or thereabouts; and tacks are charged at nearly double their value, 1s. to 1s. 6d., while the retail price would be from 6d. to 1s.

128. Mr. Maclean.] Is that for 1879? Yes. Then as to the drapery contract I cannot say very much about it without the samples, and yet I see a line here that is worth mentioning. Coloured cotton reels are put down at 2d. per dozen, they are worth 2s. I have not had time to look into the drugs, although I know the prices of many of them. There is an extra line of candles mixed up with printing materials and general stationery. In the tender for stationery for 1879, I notice another line which is absurdly priced—foolscap brief 16 lbs. at 1s. 1d. per ream; and you will observe that below it there is Saunder's hand-made cream-weave foolscap 18 lbs. at £1 9s. 9d. The envelopes again show a greater discrepancy, that was noticed before. They were 1s. and 10s. 9d.; but here we have exactly the same description, one being blue-weave and the other cream-laid, that is the only difference, and yet the blue-weave is in at 1d. per thousand with the cameo on them, while the cream-laid are 13s. 11d. I made a memorandum with respect to the weights and measures, which had some ridiculously low prices attached to them, in 1877. The same tenderer, I think, Mr. Sidney Cohen, or Harrison and Cohen, as I see it is now, contracts for these things at 3s. in 1877; but in 1879 he puts them down at £8 10s., and the next line, which was at 3s., is now quoted at £1 15s. Avery's weighing machines which in 1877 were 10s. and 15s., are in 1879 £6 and £10. In Alderson's contract for 1878 there are men's laced, nailed, or bradded, Colonial shoes at 2s. per pair; women's strong double-soled, numbers 3 to 8, Colonial, 1s. per pair; men's ditto, 1s. per pair; and girls, from Nos. 10 to 13, all Colonial made, 6d. per pair. Now, it is clear that the contractor cannot by any possibility supply them at that rate. I know a respectable boot manufacturer who told me that he had been requested by the police and others to tender for boots, because his were so good. He told me that he did tender as low as he could, but it was of no use, for boots were tendered for as low as 9d. per pair; but here I see they are tendered for at 6d. per pair. My view is that these absurdly low prices are merely put in for the purpose of reducing the computation on which the tenders would be accepted. Many items are put down at a price much above their value, and my object in calling attention to these discrepancies has been to show that there was a system of tendering which requires to be altered, and I have one or two suggestions to make in reference to these matters. It appears to me that there should be much greater care in preparing the requisitions in the departments, and it is evident that there are many things down on these lists which are not wanted, or people would not tender for them at the prices. I think that the tenders should be for the articles irrespective of the department or the institution for which they may be required. As some institutions are farther away than others, the contractor should be allowed to state some additional price for goods which he delivers to a particular locality. Thus a contractor would probably want more for goods delivered at Gladesville than he would for the same articles delivered at Darlinghurst; but in such a case as that I think a reasonable charge for carriage should be made, and specified in the tender. The charge for carriage might be a mileage rate, according to distance. I consider it important that the tender should be to the Government for all the articles they might require, and not separate tenders for the requirements of each institution. As I have referred to lime-juice, I may take that as an illustration. I would have it tendered for on behalf of the Government quite irrespective of whether it might have to be supplied to Biloela, the Vernon, or Darlinghurst, the price being one and the same.

129. Captain Hixson.] Would there be any difficulty in getting tenderers to tender on those terms? Certainly not, at a fair price.

130. Chairman.] Is it your idea that we should take separate contracts for each of the leading articles of supply? Why not? In this general contract you do. You do not say in this general contract for what institution the goods are.

131. The general contract is one contract for the whole supplies of the service; do you think that in place of that we should call for tenders in every article in that list, and so have from eighty to one hundred tenders? No; I don't mean that. You adopt a plan of tendering for rations which is applicable to all the institutions in Sydney. It makes no matter whether the rations are supplied to Darlinghurst or the "Vernon." They are all included in the same contract. If you had twenty gaols in the Sydney district, this ration contract would serve them all. But in regard to other establishments you have half a dozen contracts, say one for each. We will say that each of these establishments use lime-juice, and why should it not be all included in one contract instead of having lime-juice supplied at three or four different prices.
132. You would have the number of articles in the tender? Yes.
133. Grouping the whole as applicable to a certain district? Yes.
134. Mr. Maclean.] Excepting the rations? I do not propose that you should disturb the rations.
135. Chairman.] How would you deal with the ironmongery and linen drapery contracts? As you do now in these tenders, for what we may call groceries. Why not take one tender for all the articles, and have them supplied where you like?
136. That is, instead of separate tenders for each department? Yes; I would include all the Government institutions in the metropolitan district in the same tender.
137. Would you have the grocery portion of the supplies made a separate tender? I would rather call them all provisions, and have them dealt with exactly as ironmongery is dealt with.
138. So that there could be no variation in a man's tender as now for the different establishments? Yes; so that lime-juice, as I have mentioned that article, should be supplied to all the establishments at the same price.
139. As regards general stores supplied, would you leave them as they are? Yes.
140. Using some other precautions to get rid of trickery in particular items? Yes; using greater care in preparing the items. There must be many things here which are not wanted, or they would not be tendered for at these prices.
141. Captain Hixson.] I understand there have been great outcries about the Government not having articles in contracts when wanted. In dealing with the first part of our report, we became aware of great complaints because certain goods were not in contract, and it was said that on that account the Government had been charged very much higher for certain things than they ought to have been? I am aware that advantage is generally taken of the Government by persons who have to supply goods on the spur of the moment; but it would be very easy for an officer of the Government to ascertain the prices of goods required—to get a sort of off hand contract from persons who are in the habit of tendering. I think a considerable reform in this matter might be effected by having persons at the opening and decision upon tenders, who have a general knowledge of the value of goods. I suppose it is not at all disrespectful to you to say that you do not know the prices which rule in the markets for these things. Almost any gentleman having a general knowledge of trade who might be asked would be willing to come in and assist the Government by giving his opinion as to whether or not the prices were fair and reasonable.
142. Do you think that the difficulty might be met in this way: Suppose it were made a public announcement that the Government would not accept general tenders as a whole, but reserved the right to accept tenders for specific items, would not that prevent persons from tendering at fictitiously low prices? It would prevent that, but I am not sure that it would lead to economy. A man might see that upon a range of things he could get a profit; but if his tender were to be confined to some particular items, it would involve him in loss. He might have some goods in stock which he had bought very low. In my tenders I have always said, the whole or none. There are some things in groceries, sugars for instance, upon which we should never dream of getting a profit. If a contract were given for sugar, and all the rest of the things struck out of the contract, you would never get anyone to tender. The great thing is to know what articles you require, and that the prices named for them are moderately fair, according to the wholesale prices ruling at the time.
143. Mr. Maclean.] If a schedule of nominal prices were made, and persons were asked to tender so much over or under them, how do you think such a system as that would answer? A schedule of prices?
144. A schedule of prices prepared by an expert, giving the ordinary prices, and leaving it to the tenderer to tender at so much per cent. over or under the schedule prices? Do you mean upon the whole?
145. No; upon each article. Each article has got a price attached to it, and the tenderer puts in at so much over or under each article;—he could tender upon each article or upon the whole? I do not think that plan would be so simple as leaving it to the tenderers to put whatever price they chose against each article in the tender. The Government could have an expert to say whether the prices were fair or not.
146. Captain Hixson.] It is almost impossible to tell exactly what the Government will want twelve months beforehand, and hence these tricks we have detected. If a thing is not in contract there is an outcry because it is not in contract, and if it be included and not wanted, there is room for people to offer to supply it at a less price than it is worth? I admit there is that difficulty, but it is a difficulty which every tradesman has to battle with. I have, when ordering goods, to look ahead at my requirements eight or ten months, and I form an opinion of what I can reasonably expect to want within that period.
147. Mr. Maclean.] That is in the course of your regular business; but how would that operate under Government? Well, the storekeeper should know.
148. Captain Hixson.] I suppose that even in your business you sometimes make mistakes? Very often, undoubtedly.
149. Chairman.] Having called in an expert, and found two or three tenders with prices evidently fictitious, would you lay them aside, or deal with them by computation? As a private individual I should put them in the fire.
150. But we could not discriminate—we could not say arbitrarily of any tender that we would not consider it? I cannot help thinking that the tenderers, some of them, have had facilities for knowing what would be wanted, and what would not be wanted. A man who has tendered from year to year may have acquired that knowledge honestly from legitimate competition, but they do certainly seem to have gained it. If a man has tendered from year to year for hydraulic machines, and knows that the Government have never dreamed of buying one, he makes capital out of the carelessness of your storeman, or the person who furnishes the probable quantities required.
151. Captain Hixson.] Do you think that people would tender rightly if we were to omit the item of probable quantities altogether? Yes, I think they would. If it were an honest tender they would do so, provided provided that if a very large quantity were required by the Government of any article, time should be given to supply it. A man might have a certain quantity of goods in his stores, and might expect some more in the course of six months. If he tendered to the Government, they ought not to rush him for the twelve months supply the next day. But I suppose contractors never are rushed in that way; and that if probable quantities are stated, the contractor is not expected to supply them off hand. No matter how strict the provisions of a tender are, provided they are fair, honest tenderers would not object to them. I suppose it is always understood that there is some stock in hand; and that the Government does not expect contractors to do unreasonable things.

MONDAY, 30 JUNE, 1879.

Present:—

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR, | CAPT. HIXSON, R.N.,
HAROLD MACLEAN, Esq.

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR IN THE CHAIR.

John Davies, Esq., M.P., was called in and examined:—

J. Davies,
Esq., M.P.
30 June, 1879.

152. Chairman.] Your name, Mr. Davies? John Davies.

153. You are one of the Members of Parliament for East Sydney? Yes.

154. The object which the Board have in view is to ascertain the best means of improving our present system of contracts. You are doubtless aware that in the contracts for general stores there has existed on the part of the contractors a system of quoting certain articles at fictitious prices; the consequence of which has been that, on a computation of the whole, persons have obtained a particular tender in virtue of these fictitious prices, when, perhaps, in articles likely to be called for, their prices have been higher, relatively, than those of other tenderers? I am aware of that.

155. Could you from your experience suggest to the Board any mode by which this state of things could be got rid of? I think one of the best ways to alter the present system would be to issue new regulations and conditions for tendering, so as to make the system similar to that which is in operation in connection with the Municipal Council of Sydney. I think that Government ought to take the power to accept a part or the whole of any tender. I think you would find that that would do away with the dishonest practices which appear to have been adopted in past years in tendering for supplies to the Government. I have noticed in the copies of the contracts taken during past years a large number of articles set down at a price at which the material could not be purchased for, that is, quite irrespective of the labour which has been expended upon it. The intention of this has evidently been to place the bond fide tenderer at a disadvantage, and also to place the cost of articles in general consumption at a higher rate to the public than would be the case of an honest tender from which dummy items were excluded. The arrangement of the tenders might, I think, be altered with advantage, the raw material being placed in a separate contract from that of manufactured articles. The tenders, apart from ration supplies, might be so arranged that all supplies of oilmen's stores, groceries, &c., should be called for under a separate contract. I would recommend that supplies of beef and mutton, apart from gaol ration supplies, should be obtained by separate contract.

156. From your experience in the Municipal Council, have you found that the plan suggested by you works well—have you found that persons tender willingly on those terms? We have never had any difficulty on that score; indeed several of those who are Government contractors are also contractors to the City Council, to whom they tender on the principle I have indicated.

157. That principle being that any line, or any portion of their tender, may be taken at the option of the Council? Yes; and it has increased competition.

158. You have not only found the system practicable, but you think it has increased competition? Yes, I think so; I think it has enabled persons having small means to come in and compete with those who have large capital.

159. Mr. Maclean.] Do you think that that would be a better system to work upon than tendering by a price list,—the tenderer giving in his price at so much per cent. over or under? I think it would be very much better; and that there would be no possibility of wrong-doing such as appears to have existed during past years. I think one cause of the difficulty which has arisen in connection with the Stores tenders springs from the practice of stating approximately the quantities required. In many instances very few only of the large numbers of items in the published list are required at all—in fact I should suppose that most of them have not been required and have not been supplied.

160. Chairman.] Would you recommend that probable quantities should be stated, or fixed quantities? I would recommend probable quantities approximating very closely to the quantities supplied during the previous year. I think you will find that a very large proportion of the items found in the contract prices of previous years have never been required or supplied.

161. You think that the contract for general stores requires thorough revision under the advice of a practical business man? Yes.

162. Mr. Maclean.] Would you bind the Government down to the probable quantities, or only give them as an indication for information? That is all. That is one of the conditions of our tenders at the Town Hall—probable quantities—more or less, at so much per cwt. or per ton, &c.

163. I suppose you deal with a much more limited variety of articles in the Municipal Council? We use a much more limited quantity.

164. But how as to variety? We should not require any drapery, but oilmen's stores, ironmongery, brush-ware,—for all goods of that class there is a large demand. All descriptions of oil for street lamps and general purposes, leather for hose, ironmongery supplies, bricks, and drain-pipes of every sort, are in constant demand.

165. Chairman.] And you think that if the Government decided to adopt the same system of tendering for general stores, that after the promulgation of timely notice, the Government would receive tenders with prices very different from some of those which we now receive? I am quite sure of it, and there would be a much larger amount of competition.

166. You would reserve the right to take either the whole or part of the tender? Yes, I think that should be made a condition.

167. Mr. Maclean.] As a matter of practical experience do you find that tenders for particular lines have often been accepted? No, we do not find any difficulty. Frequently after the tenders have been computed there is very little difference between them.

168. And you have not frequently had to select lines? No.

169. Chairman.] The system has had the effect of compelling contractors to tender at fair prices? Yes; if they tendered at any fictitiously low price they would know that we might accept that line only.

J. Davies,
Esq., M.P.

30 June, 1879.

L. I. Brennand, Esq., was called in and further examined:—

170. Chairman.] When you were last here, I asked you to be prepared with a list of your staff and a statement of the duties of each individual? Yes.

171. The number of employées, excluding yourself, appears to be twenty-four? Yes.

172. Will you be good enough to tell us the names of each, and to state their duties? I may say the department is divided into three branches—the clerical branch, the account branch, and the labour branch. Mr. George O'Donnell is the first clerk at the head of the clerical branch. His duties are to deal with the correspondence, to make a monthly examination of the stock, to prepare schedules of tenders, to attend on the public during my absence, and to perform other miscellaneous duties. Mr. J. R. Evans is record clerk. His duty is to keep a register of all letters received, and of accounts forwarded to the Treasury for payment. Mr. T. E. Boland is the stock book-keeper. He enters all stock stores and stationery received and issued, and marks off all requisitions whether to be ordered from the contractors or issued from stock.

173. Are they all the clerical branch? Yes. In the account branch are the following officers:—Mr. William Hemming, whose duty it is to keep the query book, to enter requisitions in the requisition register, to mark off supplies by contractors, and to keep the journals and the principal ledger, with the assistance of Mr. Joseph Cohen and Mr. Louis Saclier. Mr. Hemming also exercises a general supervision over the account branch. Mr. E. A. Hill is the book-keeper and shipping clerk. He keeps the miscellaneous ledger, registers accounts, keeps the stationery received day book, and attends to the Custom House entries. Mr. M. Thomson is the book-keeper who enters all stores into the stores received day book. He has the custody of all invoices, completes contractors' statements by attaching and examining the necessary invoices. Mr. E. Tunks is the book-keeper who enters all stores and stationery into the issued-out day book, and he assists Mr. Thomson. Mr. D. M'Lachlan is the invoice clerk. He makes out all duplicate invoices, price lists, &c., where requisite, informs all country services, and generally assists in the correspondence. Mr. E. Scanlan checks all invoices against contract lists, and assists Mr. Thomson, the book-keeper. Mr. C. Streat is the order clerk, who makes out all orders on contractors, and generally assists in the correspondence of the office relating to indents, &c. Mr. Joseph Cohen generally assists the accountant by extracting from the day books, entering such extracts into the journals, and he makes out lists of requisitions, &c., to be submitted to the Treasury. Mr. Louis Saclier generally assists the accountant by entering all query papers from the Audit Office, posting up the ledger, and making out the necessary balance sheets. The labour branch consists of Mr. H. Daniels, foreman, who assists in the issue of stationery, and has charge of the store samples. Mr. M. J. Ryan, stationer, first receives and checks all stationery from the contractor, and he issues stationery generally. Mr. James Adams is the acting foreman of stores; and he has the checking of the receipt and issue of all stores delivered by the contractors for country services. In addition to these, there are two carters, one messenger, and six labourers.

174. What is the cost of this staff per annum, yourself inclusive? The cost of the Store Department fluctuates, because some months we employ temporary hands. The average annual cost would be about £3,400.

175. Do you consider that all this staff is necessary, and that the persons are fully employed? They are fully employed. I may say that Mr. Thomson and Mr. M'Lachlan are frequently at work until 9 o'clock at night; and Mr. Hemming is frequently at work until half-past 5 or 6 o'clock.

176. With all this extra work and diligence are your books kept up to a recent date? They are.

177. Up to what date is Mr. Hemming's ledger posted, up to what date is the stock ledger posted, and up to what date is your register of letters written? —

178. Mr. Maclean.] You have said that your staff is fully occupied, and that they are all necessary to keep up with the work? Yes.

179. Are you satisfied with the personal efficiency of your staff? I must express my dissatisfaction with the efficiency of several of the officers, inasmuch as they are men untrained to the business which they have to perform; and whilst they have endeavoured to carry out my instructions, I have noticed their inability to do so.

180. Chairman.] Then, we may infer that if your hands were more efficient you could do with a smaller number? Most decidedly.

181. Mr. Maclean.] And the work would be more effectively done? No doubt.

182. Do you now refer to the clerical or the labouring staff? To both.

183. I suppose the labouring staff are men employed from day to day? Two of them are, and may be dismissed at any time.

184. And the others? They are old permanent servants.

185. Chairman.] Can you suggest any mode of increasing the efficiency of the department? The only way would be to remove one or two of the men, and to place more efficient men in their room.

186. Do you consider that your arrangements for the delivery of goods are at all perfect? I think they are as perfect as they could be made.

187. Mr. Maclean.] Can you explain the mode that was followed in computing these general store tenders, ironmongery and the like? By ourselves or by the contractors?

188. I suppose you are aware that many articles have appeared in the contract lists at very extraordinary prices, both high and low? Yes.

189. These tenders have been dealt with by computation? Yes.

L. I.
Brennand,
Esq.

30 June, 1879.

L. I.
Brénnand,
Esq.
30 June, 1879.

190. Can you inform the Board of the mode of computation? The probable quantities are given on the left-hand side, and the rates on the right-hand side, and there is a special column for the total.

191. By whom have these computations been made? Until recently they have been made at the Stores.

192. Chairman.] And latterly at the Treasury? Yes.

193. Mr. Maclean.] Although the prices were utterly inconsistent with the value of the articles, still might it not be that the Government have accepted the tenders which serve them best? It is so.

194. You say there has been no material loss to the Government by reason of these tricky contractor's prices being put in? As a general rule, I do not think that much loss has been sustained.

195. Chairman.] I would like to call your attention to the contract for grindery, leather, &c., for the current year. In this instance the total contract including all articles is, in round numbers, £4,600, of which the leather alone amounts to £3,776, leaving for general items a sum under £900. Now, the various tender prices are as follows:—Leather (kip): Tebbatt, 1s. 9d.; Alderson, 1s. 7½d.; Beg, 1s. 7½d.; Eady, 1s. 8d.; Eady (second tender), 1s. 8d.; Farley, Matthews, & Co., 1s. 8d. Tebbatt was the successful tenderer. In this case there must evidently be a loss to the Government? Yes.

196. The manipulation of Mr. Tebbatt's tender appears to be this, that he puts down the hydraulic cutting press and the hydraulic rollers, of which there are two of each, at 20/- each, while the other tenderers put them down at £14 and £25 each. Manipulated in this way the difference in the total computations throw the balance into Tebbatt's favour? The purchase of the two lines of leather at Tebbatt's price would no doubt of itself involve loss to the Government; but if these lines which are quoted at a nominal price—take for instance the hydraulic press and rollers—were purchased, and the delivery insisted upon by the Government, the loss would be obviated.

197. Was there ever a case in your knowledge where the whole of the items were taken by the Government? Only in the case of stationery, and the cloth and dowlas contracts.

198. Mr. Maclean.] The advantage gained by Tebbatt then in getting the contract arises from circumstance that the hydraulic machines were set down as required, whereas they were not required? Precisely.

199. How did they come to be put down in the schedule if they were not required? In this instance the grindery schedule was forwarded to the principal gaoler, who inserted the articles because they had been in demand the previous year.

200. Captain Hixson.] Do you think it is possible to prepare a correct list of probable quantities? It is utterly impossible.

201. Chairman.] Is it possible to prepare a list of articles such as are actually required by the Public Service? The requirements fluctuate so much from year to year that you cannot foresee what articles will be required. The only way I can see is to give actual issues in one column and probable quantities in another.

202. Do you think it is a good thing to give probable quantities at all in the principal schedule? I cannot see how you would do without them. Business people would not tender so readily unless the probable requirements were given, and persons who tendered for the first time especially would be embarrassed for want of the information.

203. Did you at any time within the last three years suggest to the Treasury any modification of the existing system? I did—in 1877.

204. Have you got the paper? Yes; this is it.

205. Captain Hixson.] Have complaints been made to you because articles which are required by the Government are not in contract? Yes, frequently.

206. Chairman.] It appears from the paper you have just handed to me that in July, 1877, you made some representation to the then Minister in reference to altering the system which then obtained of calling for tenders. Is this the paper, dated the 14th July, 1877? Yes; I then wrote, "Sir, I do myself the honor to point out, for the information of the Honorable the Treasurer, that there are a number of contracts for the supplies of the year 1878 yet to be taken, and that considerable inconvenience will be experienced in that year by the late delivery of materials for clothing, &c., if much further delay occurs in calling for tenders. No provision has yet been made for the cloth which will be required for making clothing for the police, warders, prisoners, volunteers, and others. The delay in inviting tenders arose, as you will perhaps remember, from the desire of the Treasurer to adopt some more satisfactory system of tender than that now in use. Two modes of tendering have been suggested, namely, one to consist of a schedule or tender form, containing a list of the articles required under each head of service, with probable quantities given, and that opposite each article in such list there shall be inserted its then current or trade price. Tenderers will then be required to state at what percentage on or off price they will be prepared to supply the articles required, the lowest tender upon the whole to be recommended by the Tender Board for the acceptance of the Treasurer. The other suggestion is that a similar schedule be prepared, except that no prices are to be inserted; that the tenderer will be required to state opposite each line the rate at which he will be prepared to supply any one or any number of the articles included in his tender, the lowest tender for each line being recommended for acceptance. I may here state that I am inclined to favour the latter proposal for the following reasons, first, it presents fewer difficulties in the preparation of tenders by those desirous of obtaining contracts. It will not create nearly such an amount of clerical work in this department as that which would be entailed upon it by the adoption of the other system. In the second place it will induce some of the respectable firms in Sydney to compete for Government contracts which the present system I understand now shuts out. In the third place it will enable the smaller dealers to tender for certain lines which they might supply at lower rates than others, although they might not be in a position to tender for all the articles required in their particular line of business, and lastly as in charging for the stores issued under the first system there would be required to be added to or deducted from the fixed price the percentage rate of premium or discount thereon. This operation carried on under fifteen or eighteen contracts would I fear be not only attended with considerable amount of labour, but productive of errors and omissions."

207. You are aware that it was not then considered desirable to give effect to these representations? Yes.

Present:—

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR, | CAPT. HIXSON; R.N.,
HAROLD MACLEAN, Esq.

THE HON. GEOFFREY EAGAR IN THE CHAIR.

John Cecil Read, Esq., was called in and examined:—

208. Chairman.] Your name? John Cecil Read.
209. You are the Governor of Darlinghurst Gaol? Yes.
210. You are aware generally of the nature of this inquiry—to examine into the system of public contracts? I think I am.
211. Mr. Maclean.] Being in charge of Darlinghurst Gaol, you have occasion to obtain a great many supplies from the Stores? Yes.
212. You obtain them by requisition? Yes.
213. In the first place, do you find that there is great delay in the fulfilment of your requisitions or not? I have had some delays about them.
214. Is it the fact that large numbers of workmen have been idle by reason of the non-supply of material? They have been.
215. More so formerly than now? Yes, a year or two ago more than lately.
216. Do you find now that articles are supplied to your satisfaction, that is, articles of the kind you desire to get? I do.
