*Government Resident's Office,
Brisbane, 7th July, 1858.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, and in reference to the third paragraph, on the subject of raising recruits for the Native Police Force, I beg to enclose copies of correspondence with the Commandant, to shew that, in consequence of the desertion of the troopers recruited in the Clarence Districts, that officer had suggested the propriety of a recruiting party to the south country, and which has only been waiting a satisfactory arrangement and distribution of the Force to be carried into effect.

2. I trust that you will exonerate Mr. Morisset from any blame in not having endeavoured to procure recruits from that part of the Colony, as the delay in doing so is solely in consequence of my disapproving of the arrangements proposed by him in the formation of a recruiting party, objections which appeared to me to be reasonable, when, considering the evident disposition shewn by the blacks to drive the white men from the northern parts of the country, aided, as they are, by the broken and almost impenetrable nature of a portion of the Leichhardt District, circumstances calling for the greatest exertions on the part of the Native Police officers, and involving duties which can only be carried out by men of energy and experience.

3. On receipt of the Commandant's letter of the 17th ultimo, (enclosed), in which are shewn his arrangements for the protection of the northern frontier, and which appear to me to be as complete as the present strength of the Force will admit, I have addressed a communication to him, requesting that he will, as soon as possible, take such steps as may appear appear to be the most desirable for the formation of a recruiting party to the Namoi District, where, as pointed out in your letter, there will be no difficulty in procuring the requisite number of recruits.

4. No doubt this service will be attended with considerable expense, but, from the tenor of your communication, I do not anticipate any objection on the part of the Government to make a reasonable allowance to the officers employed, and which, I think, can be met by the savings from the vote of the Assembly, in consequence of the incomplete state of the Force.

5. In the meantime I venture to suggest that the Magistrates in the Namoi District might be requested to aid the Native Police officers in accomplishing the service which they are sent to perform.

6. I have suggested to the Commandant that, in the event of his not being able to procure the requisite number of recruits in the Namoi District, he should use his own discretion in endeavouring to procure them elsewhere.

I have, &c.,

JNO. C. WICKHAM,

Government Resident.

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 2.]

Cooper's Plains, 14 May, 1858.

Sir,

I do myself the honor to report the desertion of twelve troopers from the Fitz Roy detachment, under the command of Second Lieutenant Wheeler; I have not yet received any official intimation of the fact from Lieutenant Murray, but from the source through which the intelligence reached me, I regret to say there cannot be a doubt as to its correctness.

These were some of the recruits lately brought by me from the Clarence, and being such a distance from their own country, I had hoped no such desertions would have occurred; but from this I am now convinced that it is almost useless attempting to re-organize this Force with any but men from the south country.

It is more than probable that when these men's comrades, who were enlisted at the same time, hear of their desertion, will follow their example. I therefore most respectfully and urgently recommend that I am allowed to proceed without delay to the south country, where, notwithstanding Mr. Commissioner Cole's unfavorable report as to the chance of obtaining men there, I believe, from information I have since received from gentlemen intimately acquainted with that part of the Colony, that I should be successful in getting the number required, of really good men.

Should this step be deemed advisable by the Government—and I think it is the only course that can be pursued—I should propose taking with me Lieutenant Bligh, a sergeant, and one of the Murray men, who has been with me now for nearly six years, and who, of course, can speak the language of the blacks there, and, having obtained the number required, return with them to this place by water.

I am also under the necessity of requesting that, whilst engaged on such service our expenses may be defrayed by Government; my salary, I beg leave to state, is totally inadequate to meet the expenses of travelling, and particularly on an expedition of the kind I now propose, when living at hotels will be for the most part necessary, and various other incidental expenses will arise, such as the purchase of horses, &c., which latter item even now exhausts the greater part of my income.

I beg leave to suggest that the expenses of the recruiting expedition might be defrayed from the unexpended balance of the amount voted for the Native Police for the year 1857, and there will be a further saving in this year's expenditure.

During my absence Lieutenant Murray would take command of the force stationed in the Northern Districts; I would place the few men left here, with Second Lieutenant Swete, under the direction and control of Mr. Commissioner Halloran, who has consented to act for me; and the Brisbane and Clarence and McLeay detachments might be under your own immediate supervision.

I do not think I could manage with a smaller party than that I propose taking with me, as we should very likely have to travel some distance inland, and at first have much trouble with so large a body of raw recruits.

I earnestly hope this proposition may be favorably received by the Government, for nothing gives the blacks in the Northern Districts greater confidence in themselves than witnessing the frequent desertions from our Force, which I am certain, will be prevented by obtaining men from the south country and bringing them here by water.

As I hope to receive a reply from you at your earliest convenience I shall not visit the Dawson as I had intended, but proceed to Port Curtis, where I believe Mr. Murray is, and having arranged matters with him, will (should my proposal be acceded to) start at once for Brisbane, where my plans can be finally determined on.

I have, &c.,

E. V. MORISSET,

Commndt. Native Police.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 2.]

Government Resident's Office,
Brisbane, 5 June, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th ultimo, on the subject of desertion from the Native Police Force, and recommending that you be authorized to proceed without delay to procure recruits in the south country.

2. I fully concur in your opinion, that it is next to useless to attempt to reorganize the Force with any but men from the southern part of the Colony, although I cannot quite agree with you in the arrangement you propose for recruiting.

3. The present very unsettled state of the Leichhardt District requires the presence of experienced officers in that locality, therefore I am of opinion that Mr. Bligh, for a time, should be stationed on the Upper Dawson, and that as many troopers as can be spared should be placed at his disposal. It appears to me that unless some decided check is given to the blacks in that vicinity, we may shortly expect to hear of fresh outrages.

4. I think that any officer might be better spared than Mr. Bligh at present, and I am also of opinion that it would not be prudent for you to undertake a service which would naturally take you away from the immediate field of your duties for so long a time.

5. Mr. Bligh, I should think, might safely be sent in charge of the recruiting service, with a junior officer and such others as you may think necessary, but even in that case it appears to me that you should be at hand to direct the movements of the Force, especially in the Leichhardt District.

6. I have not yet brought the subject of your letter before the consideration of the Government, but in the meantime I think that the sooner an officer can be despatched on recruiting service the better, and I will apply to the Government that all reasonable expenses should be allowed.

7. With reference to the 7th paragraph of your letter, I do not think that the arrangement therein suggested will be necessary; and, moreover, I see an objection to any others than the officers immediately connected with the Force having any control over any portion of it. As either arrangement will take Lieut. Bligh from Wide Bay, I would suggest the propriety of placing another officer in that district, as I do not think that Lieut. Swete should be in command of a division, especially as his appointment has not yet been confirmed by the Government.

8. I have offered the above suggestions for your consideration; at the same time I fully enter into your plan of procuring recruits from the south country, but see the great necessity which at present exists that the Force on the Upper Dawson should be made as efficient as possible, with a view to check the outrages which the blacks appear determined to continue, and which have the appearance of an organized system of exterminating the white population.

I have, &c.,

J. C. WICKHAM,
Government Resident.

The Commandant of Native Police.

Cooper's Plains, 17 June, 1858.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, and regret to find you do not coincide with the suggestions I offered for the consideration of the Government in my letters to you of the 16th ultimo, inasmuch as my opinion still is—

1st, That none but the south country men will be thoroughly efficient; 2nd, That only officers of experience should be sent to obtain such recruits; and, 3rdly, That no officers could be so well spared, at the present time, as myself and Mr. Bligh.

I will endeavour to point out to you more fully my reasons for arriving at the above conclusions, that the Government may have all the requisite information in deciding on the necessity for the expedition.

I observe by the second paragraph of your letter that you fully agree with me with regard to the necessity of obtaining recruits from the southern part of the Colony; but to procure a number of recruits, and to keep them together during the whole journey from the interior to Adelaide, and from thence to Sydney and Wide Bay, would be a hard task for even two officers of the greatest experience.

It is impossible to say how far they might have to go into the interior before getting any recruits, and after a sufficient number is procured the utmost despatch must be used in getting them down the country, to prevent desertion. Moreover, it would be requisite for one officer to be constantly with the men; and I beg to remind you that the country from whence the recruits are to be procured is wholly unknown to any of the officers, which will of course add to the difficulty of travelling, and will necessitate the exercise of considerable judgment and experience. Indeed I feel sure that it would be but a waste of time to send any of the newly appointed officers on such a duty.

I fully agree with you that the force on the Upper Dawson should be rendered as efficient as possible, and I have endeavoured to accomplish this object by concentrating in that locality every available officer and trooper in the force, consistently with the safety of the other districts; and I believe that Lieut. Murray is fully competent to direct the movements of the division during my absence.

Lieut.

NATIVE POLICE FORCE.

Lieut. Bligh has just returned from the Dawson, and were I to send him there again I have not any other officer whom I could place here in his stead. In either case I should be obliged to leave Second-Lieut. Swete in charge at this place, and he could also be under Lieut. Murray's orders, as there is an objection to the Commissioner's interference.

The present disposition of the force is as follows:—

PORT CURTIS AND LEICHHARDT.

Upper Dawson:—

Lieut. Murray, (Commanding); Second Lieut. Phibbs, with 6 troopers of the 2nd division; Second-Lieut. Morehead, with 8 troopers of the 3rd division; Second-Lieut. Murray, with 8 troopers of the 1st division.

Leichhardt:—

Second-Lieut. Carr, at Banana and Rannes, with 6 troopers of the 1st division; Second-Lieut. Wheeler, at the Fitz Roy, with 6 troopers of the 1st division.

Port Curtis:—

Second-Lieut. Powell, with 5 troopers of the 1st division.

MARANOA AND CONDAMINE.

Wandai Gumbal:—

Second-Lieut. Walker, with 7 troopers of the 3rd division.

Bulonne:—

Second-Lieut. Allman should be now in this locality with 3 or 4 of the troopers left at Wandai Gumbal.

CLARENCE AND M'LEAY.

Second-Lieut. Dempster, with 10 troopers.

BURNETT AND WIDE BAY.

Lieut. Bligh and Second-Lieut. Swete, with 10 troopers, (3 of whom accompany me to the Dawson.)

MORETON BAY.

Second-Lieut. Williams, with 7 troopers.

I think on perusing the foregoing statement you will perceive that no alteration could be made that would not prove prejudicial to the routine of duty, and that, after all, the arrangement I first proposed is the only one by which the desired object may be effected; for I know, by experience, that the troopers look up to, and have more respect for, the officer by whom they are taken from their own country than any other, and this is my reason for desiring to recruit them myself.

I beg respectfully to state, that knowing the great difficulties to be encountered in the satisfactory performance of this duty, I would decline the service without the assistance of an experienced officer.

I have the honor to inform you, that since my letter of the 16th ultimo, I have seen Lieut. Murray, and made all necessary arrangements with him for the management of his division; and I am now starting for the Upper Dawson, and shall probably be absent from this place four or five weeks.

I leave Lieut. Bligh in command here, and he will remain to receive any instructions which you may forward for his guidance.

I have no further suggestions to offer, but that should not the Government think fit to adopt my proposal, some arrangement might perhaps be made between the Government at Sydney and Melbourne, by which recruits could be forwarded here without taking any of the officers away from their duty.

I have, &c.,

The Government Resident,
Moreton Bay.

No. 3.

THE GOVERNMENT RESIDENT, MORETON BAY, to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Government Resident's Office,
Brisbane, 19 August, 1858.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to forward the enclosed copy of a report from the Commandant of the Native Police, detailing the proceedings of the Force in the Leichhardt District, and at the Dawson River.

2. It is satisfactory to observe in perusing the report that the steps which have been taken, and are still being carried out, have had the effect of restoring order in the different sections of the Force and offer a reasonable guarantee against the recurrence of such outrages as have lately taken place.

3. You will observe that in consequence of Mr. Morisset, having been employed in visiting the detachments in the Leichhardt District, he did not receive my letter on the subject of sending a recruiting party to the Namoi Country until the 25th of last month, when at the Upper Dawson; however, as I expect to see him in a day or two, no time shall be lost in despatching that party, and carrying out the instructions of the Government with regard to that subject.

4. I am happy to see that Mr. Morisset is in a position to contradict the reports which have been circulated with regard to desertions of the troopers, and to the want of discipline observed in the Force generally.

5. I have every reason to know that the efficiency of the Force has very much improved of late, and that the officers (generally) are actively and zealously performing their duty.

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

I have &c.,
J. C. WICKHAM,
Government Resident.

[Enclosure in No. 3.]

Native Police Camp, Wide Bay, 8th August, 1858.

Sir,

I do myself the honor to inform you that I returned to this place on the 5th instant, having visited all the detachments of Native Police stationed at the Leichhardt and on the Dawson River.

At the Banana, in the Leichhardt District, I determined on a site for the main Camp of the detachment allowed for the protection of that district and the Lower Dawson, and have made arrangements with Mr. Robinson, the proprietor of a neighbouring station, for the erection of huts, &c., for the accommodation of the officer and his men.

From the Banana, I crossed over to Palm Tree Creek, on the Dawson, taking with me Second Lieutenant Carr and his men, expecting to meet in some of the large scrubs, I knew lay between the Leichhardt and Dawson some of the aborigines connected with the late outrages in the latter district, having previously heard a large party of them had been driven that way. We were however unsuccessful in our search, and did not even see any tracks or traces of them.

On my arrival at Palm Tree Creek, I learnt that Mr. Gregory's station had been attacked in the night, about a fortnight previously, by a party of about fifty or sixty blacks, but on one of their number being shot, they retreated immediately, without doing any mischief; they were pursued by Second Lieutenant Phibbs and five troopers, accompanied by Mr. Gregory, who followed on their tracks for six days, through scrubs and over the most broken country, the blacks travelling about thirty miles a day; when two days and nights heavy rain quite obliterated the tracks, and being unprovided with rations, and several of the horses being knocked up, they were obliged to make their way back to the station.

Before leaving the Upper Dawson I organized a party to follow the blacks to their strongholds; consisting of Second Lieutenants Phibbs, Carr and G. Murray, with seventeen troopers, taking with them a month's rations, and accompanied by Mr. H. C. Gregory, whose knowledge of the country will be of great assistance to them; so I hardly fear that they will again return unsuccessful. I have instructed these officers to start from Mr. Gregory's station together, and to travel together, or separate, as they may afterwards deem advisable. I directed Second Lieutenant Morehead to continue patrolling with eight troopers round the out-stations, until the return of the above party.

On the 25th ultimo, on the Upper Dawson I received your communication, directing me to make arrangements, without delay, for procuring a number of recruits on the Namoi, so proceeded direct to this place, as there is much to be done before starting on an expedition of that sort, otherwise, I should have visited the third division at Wandai Gumbal.

You will observe in the enclosed report from Lieutenant Bligh that several of the ringleaders in the past outrages on the Upper Dawson were shot by his men in an encounter with them on the Auburn, and as their names were afterwards given by one of their own countrymen, staying at Mr. Pigott's station, there can be no doubt as to their identity. Some old gowns, and other articles of wearing apparel, were found in the camp, which also proves their participation in the late scenes of bloodshed and plunder.

Before leaving the Dawson I removed the Native Police camp from the "Dawson River" to the "Robinson," where there is an abundance of grass and water for the horses, and a much more eligible site than the former, being about equidistant from all the frontier stations, and in that part of the country which the blacks generally travelled to and from, the "broken country," when engaged in their murderous expeditions against the whites.

Mr. Gregory has agreed to put up buildings, for which he is to be remunerated when money is granted by the Government for that purpose, for the use of the officers and men, and has undertaken to supply them with rations.

I found on my return that Second Lieutenant Williams had arrived here with fifteen recruits, raised by Second Lieutenant Dempster, in the Clarence and New England Districts. I am much pleased with the men, and believe they will make good and efficient troopers; they will be drilled here until the arrival of Lieutenant Murray from the Fitz Roy, whom I have directed by letter to meet me at this place, and who will conduct them to their different stations in his division.

As I deem it advisable to wait on you without delay at Brisbane, I shall leave written instructions for Lieutenant Murray here.

Believing

Believing that the numerous letters which have lately appeared in the public journals may perhaps in some degree influence the opinion of the Government as to the state of the Force, I am induced to point out for their information, some of the many falsehoods contained in those letters, lest their remaining uncontradicted any longer should imply their truth. I think it necessary also to state that all the publications would have been contradicted long since, had I not waited until now in expectation that I should be called on to do so by the Government; some of the above mentioned letters reflecting on the discipline of the Force are utterly false; the troopers, I am glad to say, are under complete discipline, and are most orderly and well behaved. They are never allowed to have any communication with the blacks, consequently the statement of their letting murderers escape for the sake of their gins cannot be true; desertions are not frequent, as stated in more than one of these letters; the only men that have left since I found it necessary to dismiss those now annoying the regular Force on the Dawson under Mr. F. Walker, are twelve recruits from the Clarence, and I have since found out that the undue severity of their officer made them leave, and they would any of them willingly have returned to myself or the officer that recruited them. Another falsehood is published, viz., that blood money has been offered and received by the troopers; this is a most malicious untruth, not having the slightest foundation, and I trust the Government would never suppose that I could allow such a practice to be carried on. But the falsehoods in these letters are so numerous, that not having the letters themselves by me, I will not pursue the subject any further, but content myself with a general and distinct denial, and I challenge examination into any of them which the Government wish to have explained more fully.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

ERECTION OF A CHURCH AT ALBURY.

(CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 3 August, 1858.

The Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Members of the Church of England, resident in the District of Albury, in the Murrumbidgee Squatting District, in the Colony of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners purchased land, and made Albury their home, confidently expecting that the fostering hand of Government would be extended towards them in furthering the material and moral interests of the district, to the extent of the revenue derived from the sale of land, which, up to the present period, has realized the sum of (£40,000,) forty thousand pounds, exclusive of land purchased as pre-emptive rights.

That a sum of money is annually provided by Act of Council for the maintenance of Clergymen, and the erection of Churches within the Settled Districts, but that provision not extending to the Squatting Districts, your Petitioners have been left to their own resources, and have been compelled to maintain a Clergyman at their own cost and charge, otherwise the Ordinances of their Religion must have been in total abeyance—a state of things which, in a population of two thousand five hundred souls, would, your Petitioners humbly submit, be a stigma and reproach to the Colony.

That, from the large amount aforesaid, realized by the sales of land in Albury, your Petitioners consider they have not only a right to be placed on an equal footing with the Settled Districts, but humbly submit that, as a struggling young community, they have a preferential claim for aid, on account of their small and scattered population, and the manifold difficulties and hardships that a residence on this distant border entails.

That your Honorable House has always liberally voted money for the erection of benevolent, charitable, and literary institutions throughout the Colony, and your Petitioners venture to hope that the same philanthropic and noble principle will not be withheld from the erection of Churches in the Unsettled Districts, for without such buildings no community can be considered in a sound or healthy state.

That your Petitioners have recently subscribed the amount of seventeen hundred pounds towards the erection of a Church in the Town of Albury, and have accepted a contract for building the same for the sum of two thousand three hundred pounds.

Your Petitioners therefore respectfully, but confidently, hope that your Honorable House will take the premises into your consideration, and afford us such aid and relief as you deem just.

And your Petitioners will every pray, &c., &c.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

NEW MARINERS' CHURCH.

(PETITION FROM MARINERS IN SYDNEY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 1 September, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of the Parliament of New South Wales.
The Petition of the undersigned Master Mariners and Mariners,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That those of your Petitioners who are engaged in the commerce of the Port are called upon to pay taxes, in the shape of fees at the Shipping Office, to a larger amount than any other class of Her Majesty's subjects, and that the surplus of such imposts upon mariners, and others connected with shipping, is paid over to the Revenue of the Colony for general purposes.

That your Petitioners have been given to understand that large grants of land, and sums of money, have been given, from time to time, by the Government to four denominations of professing Christians, together with stipends for the support of the Ministers of the said denominations, and also a salary to the Jewish Minister; but that no grant, (save two grants of land for the site of a Mariners' Church), and no grant of money in the shape of stipend, or otherwise, has ever been made to minister to the spiritual wants of the maritime body, who are, from the necessity of their position, as much a distinct body of Christians as any of the denominations heretofore exclusively favored by Government.

That your Petitioners labor under a very great disadvantage in attending the worship of Almighty God, from the circumstance that most of the pews are let in all the places of Worship in Sydney by the year, and, therefore, whenever mariners attend Public Worship, they obtain seats only by sufferance.

That your Petitioners feel they ought to have as much claim upon your bounty, to the extent of their peculiar requirements, in regard to the Ordinances of Religion as landsmen, who are liberally provided with places of Worship, and stipends for their Ministers, out of the public funds.

That your Petitioners beg to state, that the charitable public have subscribed for the building of the new Mariners' Church, on a site granted by the Crown, at the Circular Quay, West, on which is erected a neat substantial stone building, at the estimated cost of six thousand pounds (£6,000), when complete, and that of this sum about four thousand six hundred pounds (£4,600) has been already paid—leaving (£1,400) one thousand four hundred pounds to be provided for on account of the building, but which balance, your Petitioners beg to represent, is not now likely to be made good from the same charitable sources, which, in the multitude of demands upon them, cannot be expected to flow otherwise than in a diminished stream to each of the increasing objects of its direction.

That your Petitioners, therefore, pray that your Honorable House will be pleased to consider the premises, and afford to your Petitioners such consideration therein as to your Honorable House shall seem just and reasonable.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

REV. J. D. LANG, D.D.

(PRAYING INQUIRY AND REDRESS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 1 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of John Dunmore Lang, Doctor of Divinity, Senior Minister of the Scots Church, Sydney,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

1. That towards the close of the year 1841 your Petitioner became convinced, from various facts and circumstances that had fallen under his own experience and observation, that the politico-ecclesiastical system of this Colony, under which all forms of Religion are supported indiscriminately from the Public Treasury, was unwarranted by the Word of God, inimical to the best interests of the Christian Church, and such as a Presbyterian Minister, occupying the influential position of your Petitioner, could no longer, with a safe conscience, continue to uphold.

2. That, under the influence of this conviction, your Petitioner delivered an Address to his Congregation on the sixth of February, 1842, in which, while desiring to maintain his connection with the Church of Scotland, he formally renounced all further connection with the Synod of Australia, of which he had previously been the Senior Minister, together with all his own right and title to a salary from the State; intending at the time to leave the Colony forthwith, and to proceed to New Zealand.

3. That the Congregation of your Petitioner, unwilling to be thus deprived of his services as their Pastor (which he had then been for nineteen years), immediately, on being apprised of his intentions, interposed to prevent his resigning his Pastoral charge, as Minister of the Scots Church, or leaving the Colony; and accordingly held a Public Meeting, on the 22nd of the same month, at which they all but unanimously expressed their cordial approval of the procedure of your Petitioner in resigning his Government Salary, and renouncing all further connection with the Synod of Australia, and voluntarily assumed the entire burden of supporting the Ordinances of Religion in the Scots Church (as they have done accordingly for the past sixteen years), from their own private resources, and without assistance of any kind from the State.

4. That certain Ministers of the Synod of Australia, actuated, as your Petitioner believes, and is fully warranted to believe from their own public acts and deeds, by the bitterest malice towards himself individually, as well as by an inordinate desire to become possessed, by whatever means, of certain valuable Church property which your Petitioner had created for his Congregation through the sacrifice of his own, wickedly conspired together to ruin and degrade your Petitioner in the estimation of the public, and to dispossess him of the property aforesaid under the desecrated forms of ecclesiastical law; instituting frivolous and unfounded charges against him, on the ground of words contained in his published address to his Congregation, (which they wrested for the purpose from their plain and obvious meaning,) and combining in their own persons, in order to secure a conviction on these charges, the utterly incompatible offices of accusers, judges and jury, contrary alike to the law and practice in all such cases in the Presbyterian Church.

5. That in all cases of charges against Ministers of Religion, the laws of the Presbyterian Church are well known, and its forms of procedure precisely and strictly defined, and that both the law and forms are characterized in an eminent degree by equity and justice; but that these salutary forms and laws were systematically set aside and openly violated in the case of your Petitioner, in order to achieve his degradation and ruin; the majority of the Synod of Australia, who had banded together in this unconstitutional manner, pretending, as the result of their sanctimonious mockery of a judicial investigation, to depose your Petitioner from the office of the Christian Ministry—a proceeding which implies the deepest degradation to which a Presbyterian Minister can possibly be subjected, and which is never resorted to in the Presbyterian Church, but in cases of gross heresy or of flagrant immorality.

6. That the constitution of the Presbyterian State Church of this Colony admitting, as it does, of no appeal from the decision of the Synod of Australia, such as there would unquestionably have been, in any similar proceeding, from any Presbytery or Synod in Scotland, your Petitioner (whose Congregation all the while regarded these entire proceedings with mingled feelings of indignation and contempt) had to appeal, in a somewhat indirect manner, (as to whether he had been guilty of anything unworthy either of a Minister of Religion or of a member of society), to the Colonial public generally; and the result of that virtual appeal was his election, on four different occasions, as a Member of the late Legislative Council of this Colony—first for the District of Port Phillip, now the Colony of Victoria; then twice successively for the City of Sydney; and afterwards for the County of Stanley, at Moreton Bay—a circumstance altogether unprecedented in the Colonial history of the British Empire.

7. That the late Reverend Dr. McGarvie, who became the Senior Minister of the Synod of Australia when your Petitioner withdrew from that body, being strongly opposed, in common with a minority of the Synod, to these outrageous proceedings of a majority of its Members, no attempt was made by that majority, for the long period of thirteen years, or during the life time of Dr. McGarvie, to take advantage of their own wrong doing by instituting law-proceedings for the possession of the Church property aforesaid; but no sooner had Dr. McGarvie died, and the flagrant character of the whole proceeding against your Petitioner been in some measure forgotten by the public through the lapse of time, than such proceedings were instituted, in the form of an Equity Suit, in the Supreme Court, and that Suit, which is still pending, had been in progress for upwards of three years past, subjecting your Petitioner, and his friends and supporters, to much personal annoyance as well as to serious expense.

8. That, although your Petitioner is under no apprehension as to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Equity Suit aforesaid, that decision will in no way affect the question really at issue between your Petitioner and the Synod of Australia, or serve in any way to heal the present divisions of the Presbyterian Church, which your Petitioner firmly believes are mainly, if not exclusively, owing to the discreditable proceedings of the said Synod in the case of your Petitioner in the year 1842.

9. That your Honorable House, as the grand inquest of the nation, is the only tribunal to which your Petitioner can possibly appeal for inquiry and redress under the serious wrong he has thus been sustaining for sixteen years past; and as that wrong was sustained by your Petitioner at the hands of men who were all at the time, and some of whom are still, receiving salaries from the State for very different purposes, while the Colonial public has, on four different occasions, given the highest testimonial to your Petitioner, as a member of society, by electing him as one of their representatives in the Colonial Legislature, your Petitioner humbly conceives that he has some claim on your Honorable House for such inquiry and redress.

10. That the question which your Petitioner would humbly submit for investigation to your Honorable House, although arising out of certain ecclesiastical proceedings, is in no respect a question of doctrine, discipline, or worship, but simply a question of fact, as to whether certain acts and deeds that have most injuriously affected the character and rights of your Petitioner, and destroyed the peace and harmony of the Presbyterian Communion in New South Wales, were or were not in accordance with the laws and forms of procedure in such cases made and provided.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to take the premises into your favorable consideration, by appointing a Select Committee of your Honorable House to inquire into the allegations of your Petitioner, in regard to the procedure of the Synod of Australia towards himself in the year 1842, and to report.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

REV. J. D. LANG, D.D.

(PETITION FROM MINISTERS OF THE SYNOD OF AUSTRALIA, IN REFERENCE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Ministers of the Synod of Australia,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners have observed with surprise that a Petition from Dr. John Dunmore Lang was presented to your Honorable House on the evening of Thursday last, praying that you would grant the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into and report upon the proceedings of the Synod of Australia in the year 1842, with respect to the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang.

That in the said year the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang was, after process, for grave ecclesiastical offences, deposed from the office of the Holy Ministry; an account of which deposition was officially transmitted to the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and to the Presbytery of Irvine, from which he received license and ordination.

That the said proceedings of the Synod of Australia against the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang received the sanction of, and were confirmed by, the Presbytery of Irvine in the first instance, and thereafter by the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, after the most patient and anxious investigation.

That the Ecclesiastical Courts of the Synod of Australia have a full and unrestricted power over their own members to deprive them of all the rights and privileges belonging thereto for offences committed against their laws, to which every member thereof has voluntarily made himself amenable; and that therefore any interference on the part of the Legislature, as sought by the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang, relative to the said proceedings of the Synod of Australia, would be unconstitutional and oppressive, as a direct encroachment upon the inherent rights and liberties of the said Synod; and as destructive of all proper discipline in the said Synod as an Ecclesiastical Court.

And that inasmuch as a case in Equity against the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang, for the recovery of Church property claimed by the said Synod of Australia, is at present pending in the Supreme Courts of Law in this Colony, involving the subject matter of the Petition of the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang, any expression of opinion from so high a quarter as your Honorable House would be calculated to exercise an undue influence on the usual administration of justice.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honorable House will take the premises into serious consideration, and refuse to grant the prayer of the petition of the said Dr. John Dunmore Lang.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

JNO. M'GIBBON,
Minister of Woolloomooloo.

JAS. MILNE,
Minister of Paddington.

JOHN DOUGALL,
Minister of St. Andrew's Scots Church, Sydney.

JAMES COUTTS,
Minister of Parramatta.

REV. J. D. LANG, D.D.

(PETITION FROM DR. FULLERTON IN REFERENCE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That Petitioner has heard with surprise that a Petition from Doctor John Dunmore Lang has been presented to your Assembly, praying that a Committee of your Honorable House may be appointed to consider and to report upon the proceedings of the Synod of Australia in the year 1842, in reference to the said Doctor John Dunmore Lang.

That in that year the said Doctor Lang was, for slander, contumacy, and schism, deposed from the office of the Christian Ministry by the Synod of Australia; and his deposition was officially reported to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and to the Presbytery of Irvine, that being the Presbytery by whom he was ordained.

That Doctor Lang, since he was deposed, resided for a length of time in Scotland; but never asked the Presbytery of Irvine, or the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, to review the decision of the Synod of Australia in reference to him.

That a Suit in Equity against Doctor Lang is now pending in the Supreme Court, at Sydney, for having misappropriated valuable Church property, belonging to the Synod of Australia, of which he became Trustee before his deposition.

That the appointment of a Committee in compliance with the wish of the said Petitioner would directly interfere with the regular administration of justice, and promote and encourage clerical delinquencies, as it would be impossible to maintain discipline amongst Clergymen if the decisions of Church Courts may be practically reversed by a Committee of Parliament.

Should the prayer of Doctor Lang be granted, every delinquent in Church Courts will protect himself by appealing to your Assembly: similar Petitions will be sent in by those who may be degraded in connexion with the Church of England, the Wesleyans, and the Church of Rome; and the upright and faithful members of these Communions will be deprived of their liberty and privileges in the management of the affairs of their respective Churches.

Your Petitioner prays, therefore, that your Honorable House will be graciously pleased to take the premises into your serious consideration, and that you will refuse to appoint any Committee to consider the proceedings of the Synod of Australia in 1842, in reference to Doctor Lang.

And your Petitioner will ever pray.

JAMES FULLERTON, LL.D.,
Minister.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

REV. J. D. LANG, D. D.
(PETITION RELATIVE TO, BY SYNOD OF AUSTRALIA IN 1842.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 22 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.
The Petition of the undersigned Elders and Members of the Committee of Management of the Congregation of the Scots Church, Sydney,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners have learned, with equal surprise and indignation, that the Reverend Doctor James Fullerton, on his own behalf, and certain other Ministers of the Synod of Australia, have petitioned your Honorable House not to grant a Committee of inquiry into certain proceedings of the said Synod towards their esteemed and venerated pastor the Reverend Doctor Lang in the year 1842.

2. That the proceedings of the Synod of Australia on that occasion, in pretending to depose the Reverend Doctor Lang from the office of the Christian Ministry, were, in the opinion of your Petitioners, a mere burlesque of a judicial investigation, and afforded the clearest proofs of a foul conspiracy on the part of certain unscrupulous members of the said Synod to degrade and ruin Doctor Lang in the estimation of the public, and to seize and appropriate, on false pretences, the property of the congregation of the Scots Church, of which that congregation has now been in uninterrupted possession for thirty-five years.

3. That the only offence which, in the opinion of your Petitioners, Doctor Lang committed on the occasion referred to, consisted in his nobly renouncing his own Government salary, and denouncing the anti-Christian system on which such salaries are still received by certain other Presbyterian Ministers in the Colony.

4. That the said Doctor Fullerton has a deep and personal interest in deprecating a Parliamentary inquiry into the nefarious proceedings referred to, as he was himself one of the principal offenders in the case, having been guilty—in order the more successfully to achieve the degradation and ruin of his own benefactor—of the serious offence of appearing successively in that case as accuser, judge, and jury, contrary to all law, whether civil or ecclesiastical.

5. That the other Ministers of the Synod of Australia who have also petitioned your Honorable House not to grant a Parliamentary inquiry in the case in question,—viz., the Reverend John McGibbon, James Milne, James Coutts, and John Dougal,—being all comparatively recent arrivals in New South Wales, their conduct in thus endeavouring to prevent an inquiry into the proceedings of a public body in a case of flagrant wrong which had occurred long before their own arrival in the Colony, is, in the estimation of your Petitioners, a violation of all propriety, as well as of the first principles of common justice and Christianity.

6. That the Synod of Australia being supported from the public Treasury the conduct of its Ministers is clearly amenable to inquiry on the part of their paymaster, the State, especially when they travel beyond their own proper functions as an Ecclesiastical body, and proceed, as in the present instance, and on the merest frivolous pretences, to inflict pains and penalties affecting either the character or the civil rights of unoffending citizens and subjects.

7. That as the unlawful and outrageous proceedings of the said Synod of Australia, on the occasion referred to, have broken up and destroyed the peace of the Presbyterian body in this Colony, and greatly promoted and fostered the present divisions, your Petitioners are convinced that peace can never be restored to their Communion, nor these divisions healed, till a searching inquiry is made into the proceedings referred to, that their true character may be exposed, and the enormous wrongs they have inflicted fully redressed.

8. That your Honorable House is the only tribunal to which your Petitioners can appeal, and the only competent authority in the case in question.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray, that your Honorable House will be pleased to grant the Select Committee prayed for by the Reverend Doctor Lang, to institute a searching inquiry into the proceedings of the said Synod of Australia in the year 1842, and to report.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY.

(REPORT FROM SENATE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 12 May, 1858.

REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY, FOR THE YEAR 1857.

IN accordance with the provisions of the 22nd clause of the Act of Incorporation, 14 Vict., No. 31, the Senate of the University of Sydney have the honor to submit, for the information of the Governor and Executive Council, the following Report of their proceedings during the year 1857.

1. The number of students admitted, after having passed the Matriculation Examination prescribed by the By-laws, was nineteen.

2. The following students having attended the University Lectures during the prescribed period of three years, and having passed the Statutory Examinations, and otherwise complied with the University Regulations, were admitted to the Degree of Bachelor of Arts, viz. :—

Walter Allen,
John Donovan,
James Johnson,
John Kinloch,
James Paterson,
Arthur Renwick,
George Salting,
William Salting,
John Stack.

Of these the undernamed were successful Candidates for Honors, and were placed in the Classes of Merit, as follows :—

Classics, Logic, and Greek Philosophy.			Mathematics and Natural Philosophy.
1st Class.	{	James Paterson. George Salting.	}	1st Class.	{ O }
2nd Class.		William Salting.		2nd Class.	James Paterson.

3. The Prizes awarded were the following :—

The Provost's Medal for the best composition in English Verse.

William Salting.

The University Medal given for Latin Hexameters.

George Salting.

The Medal given by the Vice-Provost for the best translation into Latin Elegiacs.

George Salting.

The Prize given by Professor Woolley, for the best Latin Essay.

George Salting.

4. Two vacancies in the Senate occurred during the past year.—The first was occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Broadhurst, on his departure for England. The second was caused by the resignation of Mr. W. C. Wentworth, who, in consequence of the uncertainty as to his early return to the Colony, declined to accept the extended leave of absence which, in consideration of his great services to the Institution, had been proffered by the Senate. These vacancies have been filled up by the election of the Honorable Sir Daniel Cooper, and of Mr. Alfred Denison, who had formerly been a Member of the Senate, but had resigned his seat on his departure for England, in 1853.

5. A Scholarship for proficiency in Classical Literature was founded with the munificent donation of £1,000, presented, for this object, by the Honorable Sir Daniel Cooper. This amount having been invested in Government Debentures, bearing 5 per cent. interest, the present value of the Scholarship is £50 per annum. It is tenable for one year, and open to Students of two years' standing in the same manner, and on the same terms, as the Barker and Deas Thomson Scholarships, founded for the encouragement of Mathematical and Physical Science.

6. The Senate also received the handsome donation of £100 from Mr. William Fanning, to be applied to such purpose as they may think fit. This sum has not as yet been appropriated.

7. The Senate were enabled to give up possession of the building in Hyde Park, so as to admit of the opening of the Grammar School on the 1st August last, and at the commencement of the Michaelmas Term the University building was sufficiently advanced to admit of its occupation.

8. Considerable progress was made in the building during the past year. The Great Hall was roofed in, and the internal fittings have now been so far completed that it can be used as soon as the stained glass windows, which are expected from England, can be put up. According to late advices these windows were rapidly approaching completion, and notice of the shipment of a portion of them may be received by the next mail. The internal fittings of the greater part of the compartment between the Hall and the Tower are finished, where accommodation is afforded for the Classical Lectures, the Library, the Registrar's Office, and Retiring Rooms for the Professors and Undergraduates. In the Laboratory Compartment, at the southern end of the building, all the rooms are finished, and afford the required accommodation for the Lectures of the Professors of Mathematics, and of Chemistry and Experimental Physics. Retiring Rooms, an Instrument Room, a Laboratory with dark rooms attached, are included in this compartment, and a tank under the roof, capable of holding 3,000 gallons, provides an ample supply of water. An apparatus for the manufacture of gas has also been formed, under the directions of the Professors of Chemistry, by which light and the heat required for experiments are supplied to the Laboratory. Thus the immediate requirements of the University are provided for, but it is to be borne in mind that, owing to the old Sydney College property having been handed over to the Trustees of the Grammar School at a less sum by at least £8,000 than it was originally estimated to be worth, the funds at the disposal of the Senate for the completion of the building will be insufficient.

9. The Nursery Garden, founded in 1856, has, by liberal contributions from private grounds, been stocked with a large number of young trees and shrubs, which will eventually cause a very great saving in the laying out of the University grounds. A plantation has been commenced along the side of the Parramatta Road, where a screen was most required. The further planting of the grounds, and the formation of the gardens, will be gradually proceeded with year by year as the means at the disposal of the Senate will allow.

10. The College of St. Paul, founded by members of the Church of England, under the Colleges Act of 1854, was opened in the past year, and several Students of the University are now in residence there. An Act of Incorporation was passed for the College of St. John, founded by the Members of the Roman Catholic Church, and vigorous movements have been made by the Presbyterians and the Wesleyan Methodists towards the establishment of Colleges within the University for the Members of their respective creeds. There seems therefore every reason to expect that within a short period the University will be supported by four Colleges of Residence, in which Students not living with their friends can receive moral training and religious teaching whilst attending the course of instruction supplied by the University in its Lay Faculties. With the prospect of these valuable adjuncts, and seeing the the increasing number of Scholars attending the higher class of Schools, the Senate confidently anticipate that within a shorter period than might have been expected, the number of Students in the University will be such as to yield a considerable addition to its annual income, and thus afford the means of enlarging the Professorial Staff.

11. The power of conferring Degrees having been granted by the Crown to the University of Sydney through Her Majesty's assent to an enactment of the local Legislature, the question arose whether the Degrees would be entitled to recognition beyond the limits of the Colony within which the provisions of the enactment have effect. The Provost, Sir Charles Nicholson, was accordingly requested to ascertain in England whether a further authority might not be granted by the Crown to secure for the Degrees of this University the general recognition which is accorded to those conferred by Universities established in Great Britain under Royal Charter or Acts of the Imperial Legislature. The Provost had a satisfactory interview on the subject with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and at his instance suggested to the Senate that application should be made for the authority required through the local Government. The annexed Petition was accordingly addressed to Her Majesty, and transmitted through His Excellency the Governor General, whose cordial support it received. The Provost was at the same time accredited as the agent of the University in the matter, and requested to furnish to the authorities in England all information which might be required. A favourable answer has been received from the Secretary of State, and the Provost has been actively engaged in communications with the Officers of Her Majesty's Government, and in the preparation of a Draft Charter, containing provisions similar to those of the Charter granted to the University of London. There seems no reason to doubt that Her Majesty will be advised to issue a Charter on these terms. The communications received from Sir Charles Nicholson on the subject are highly gratifying, as shewing the deep interest taken by Her Majesty's Government in the advancement and progress of this Institution.

13. Appended is the Auditor's Report of the Receipts and Expenditure of the University during the past year.

The foregoing Report was adopted at a meeting of the Senate held on the 21st April, 1858, and ordered to be transmitted to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary for presentation to the Governor and Executive Council and the Parliament, in pursuance of the 22nd Section of the Act of Incorporation, 14 Vic., No. 31.

APPENDIX I.

UNIVERSITY OF SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.

Petition of the Senate of the University of Sydney to Her Majesty the Queen, praying for the grant of the further authority required to render the Degrees thereof entitled to recognition in all parts of Her Majesty's Dominions.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

The humble Memorial of the Senate of the University of Sydney,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH TO YOUR MAJESTY :—

1. That, under an Act of the Legislature of the Colony of New South Wales, which received your Majesty's assent on the 9th December, 1851, a Senate, consisting of sixteen Fellows, was incorporated, under the name of the University of Sydney, and was empowered to grant, after examination, Degrees in the Faculties of Arts, Laws and Medicine.

2. That, under the said Act, the Governor of the Colony for the time being was appointed to be the Visitor of the said University, and the power of making Statutes or By-Laws touching discipline, examinations, and all other matters in general, regarding the said University, was granted to the Senate, subject to the condition that such Statutes or By-Laws shall not have legal effect until they shall have been submitted to the Governor and Executive Council, and shall have been approved of and countersigned by the Governor.

3. That, on the appointment of a Senate under the said Act, the selection of three gentlemen of high attainments to fill the Professorships of Classics, of Mathematics, and Natural Philosophy, and of Chemistry and Experimental Physics was confided by the said Senate to the undernamed eminent Scholars, viz. :—

Sir John Herschel, Bart.

Professor Airey, the Astronomer Royal.

Professor Malden.

Henry Denison, Esq.

4. That out of sixty-three candidates, of whom it was reported to the Senate by Sir John Herschel that "many, in each Department, produced Testimonials indicating qualifications of a very high order as to their proficiency in their several branches of knowledge, their College distinctions and their general character and competency from ascertained experience in the duties of instruction,"—the following gentlemen were selected, viz. :—

AS PROFESSOR OF CLASSICS.

The Rev. John Woolley, D.C.L., Oxford. First Class in Classics in 1836; late Fellow of University College, Oxford, and Head Master of King Edward VI. School, Norwich.

AS PROFESSOR OF MATHEMATICS.

Morris Birkbeck Pell, Esq., B.A., Cambridge. Fellow of St. John's College, and Senior Wrangler of 1849.

AS PROFESSOR OF CHEMISTRY.

John Smith, Esq., M.D., of Marischall College, Aberdeen, and Assistant Professor of Chemistry in that University.

5. That on the arrival of these gentlemen in the Colony in the year 1851, the Faculty of Arts was established in the University; and the admission, the instruction, and the examination of Students proceeding to Degrees in that Faculty are now regulated by the following By-Laws, viz. :—

ADMISSION.

- "No person shall be admitted as an Undergraduate of the University, except on certificate of having satisfactorily passed the examination for Matriculation.
- "The examination shall be conducted by means of written or printed papers; but the Examiners shall not be precluded from putting visd voce questions.
- "The examination for Matriculation shall be in the following subjects :—
 - "The Greek and Latin Languages.
 - "Arithmetic.
 - "Algebra, to simple equations, inclusive.
 - "Geometry, first book of Euclid.

LECTURES.

- "Lectures of an hour each shall be given, daily, by the Professors in Classics, Mathematics, Chemistry, and Experimental Physics, at such times and in such order as the Senate may from time to time direct.
- "Candidates for Degrees shall attend the University Lectures on the following subjects :—
 - "1. Greek.
 - "2. Latin.
 - "3. Ancient History.
 - "4. Mathematics.
 - "5. Natural Philosophy.
 - "6. Chemistry.
 - "7. Experimental Physics.
- "Certificates of having attended Lectures, and complied with the regulations of the University, shall be signed by the Dean of the Faculty of Arts, and by the Registrar, and granted to the Undergraduates on the completion of each Academical year.
- "No Certificate shall be given to any Undergraduate who may, without sufficient cause, have absented himself from Lecture more than six times in any one term, or who may not have passed the Yearly Examinations.

YEARLY EXAMINATIONS.

- "Examinations shall be held once a year during the last fortnight of Michaelmas Term, and no Undergraduate shall absent himself therefrom except under medical certificate.
- "The Undergraduates of each year shall be examined in the subjects of the Undergraduate course, upon which Lectures have been given during the year.
- "After examination, the names of the Undergraduates shall be arranged in classes, and in order of merit.
- "Books, stamped with the University Arms, shall be given to each member of the first class in each year.
- "Such Undergraduates as absent themselves from the examinations, except under medical certificate, or fail to pass them in a satisfactory manner, shall, at the discretion of the Examiners, be required to keep additional terms before proceeding to a B.A. Degree.

B.A. DEGREES.

- "The Degree of B.A. shall be conferred after examination, which shall take place once a-year, at the close of Michaelmas Term.
- "No candidate shall be admitted to this examination unless he produce a certificate from the Dean of the Faculty of Arts of having been a student during three years at the University, and of having complied with its Regulations: this certificate shall be transmitted to the Registrar before the day appointed for the commencement of the examination.
- "The examination shall be conducted, in the first instance, by means of printed papers, and, at the termination of such examination, each candidate shall undergo a visd voce examination, at the discretion of the Examiners.
- "To obtain the ordinary Degree of B.A., the candidate shall pass a satisfactory examination in Greek, Latin, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Experimental Physics, and Logic."

EXAMINATION FOR HONORS.

- "All persons who have passed the ordinary examination for Degrees are admissible as candidates for honors.
- "The examination for honors in Classics shall take place at the commencement of Lent Term.
- "The examination for honors in Mathematics shall commence within one week after the conclusion of the examination for honors in Classics."

M.A.

M.A. DEGREES.

- "The Degree of M.A. shall be granted to Bachelors of Arts after examination.
- "No candidate shall be admitted to the examination for the Degree of M.A. until after the expiration of two Academical years from the time of his obtaining the Degree of B.A.; during which period he must have kept his name on the books of the University. He will also be required to furnish evidence of having completed his twenty-first year.
- "Candidates for the Degree of M.A. shall elect to be examined in one or more of the following branches of knowledge:—
 - "1. Classical Philology and History.
 - "2. Mathematics and Natural Philosophy.
 - "3. Logic; Moral, Mental, and Political Philosophy.
 - "4. Chemistry, and Experimental Physics.

6. That the following By-Laws have been passed by the Senate in respect to the examination of candidates for Degrees in the Faculties of Laws and Medicine.

LAWS.

- "A Professor appointed by the Senate shall give Lectures in English Jurisprudence, attendance on which will be required from all candidates for the Degree of LL.B.
- "Until other Professorships are established, there shall be a Board of Examiners appointed by the Senate to test the qualifications of candidates desirous of obtaining a Degree in Laws. The examination for the Degree of LL.B. shall take place in Michaelmas Term, and the Degree shall be granted in Lent Term.
- "No candidate shall be admitted to the Degree of LL.B. until after the expiration of one Academic year from the time of his obtaining the Degree of B.A.
- "Candidates for the Degree of LL.B. shall produce certificates of having attended the Lectures of the University Professor of English Jurisprudence.
- "Candidates for the Degree of LL.B. shall be examined in the following subjects:—
 - "Civil and International Law.
 - "Constitutional History, and Constitutional Law of England.
 - "General Law of England.
- "The Degree of LL.D. shall be conferred at the expiration of two Academic years from the granting of the LL.B. Degree. The candidate shall be required to prepare and defend a Thesis on some subject selected by himself from the Pandects, or Institutes: such Thesis to be in the Latin language, and, if approved by the Board of Examiners, printed."

MEDICINE.

- "A Professor appointed by the Senate shall give Lectures in Chemistry.
- "Until other Professorships in the Faculty of Medicine be constituted in the University, there shall be a Board of Examiners, appointed by the Senate, to test the qualifications of candidates who may apply for Medical Degrees, to be granted in accordance with the provisions contained in the Act of Incorporation.
- "Such candidates must lodge with the Registrar of the University satisfactory certificates of having taken the Degree of B.A., or some equivalent Degree, in this or in some other University.
- "In the absence of such Degree, the candidate must submit to an examination similar to that prescribed for the B.A. Degree in this University.
- "The candidate must also furnish evidence of being twenty-one years of age, and of having diligently pursued a course of Medical Studies extending over a period of four years, at some regularly organized Medical School. His certificates must shew that he has attended the following eight classes each for a course of six months:—Anatomy, Practical Anatomy, Physiology, Chemistry, Materia Medica, Surgery, Practice of Medicine, Midwifery;—and the following five classes each for a course of three months: Botany, Practical Chemistry, Medical Jurisprudence, Clinical Medicine, and Clinical Surgery; also that he has attended for eighteen months the Medical and Surgical Practice of a Hospital containing not fewer than eighty beds; and that he has been engaged for six months in compounding and dispensing medicines.
- "Medical or Surgical Diplomas, from regularly constituted examining Boards in Europe or America, may, at the discretion of the Senate, be accepted as equivalent to the whole or part of the above-mentioned certificates.
- "As soon as the required documents have been declared satisfactory by the Senate, the Registrar shall notify to the candidate the day on which his examination will commence.
- "On such candidates as may pass the examination satisfactorily, the Senate shall confer the Degree of M.B., at a duly convened Meeting held in Lent Term.
- "The Degree of M.D. shall be conferred at the expiration of two Academical years from the granting of the M.B. Degree.
- "The candidate shall be required to prepare and defend a Thesis on some Medical subject, to be selected by himself; such Thesis shall be in the Latin or English language, and, if approved by the Board of Examiners, may be printed."

7. That in the Faculty of Laws, your memorialists have not as yet brought the foregoing By-Laws relating thereto into active operation, but in the Faculty of Medicine a Board of Examiners has been recently appointed, composed of the above-named Professor of Chemistry in the University, and of eight of the most distinguished Medical Practitioners in the City of Sydney; all of whom are holders of Diplomas or Degrees from the authorized Medical Bodies of the United Kingdom.

8. That your Memorialists humbly submit to your Majesty, that the foregoing statements shew that the standard of acquirements which must be attained by graduates in the University of Sydney is not below that prescribed by the most learned Universities of the United Kingdom,—that the direction of the studies in the University of Sydney has been committed to Professors who have highly distinguished themselves in British Universities,—that the rules, under which the present high standard in the University of Sydney has been fixed, cannot be altered without the assent and approval of your Majesty's Representative in the Colony,—and that your Majesty's Representative, as Visitor, has vested in him the power of interference, should the rules laid down be unduly relaxed in practice.

9. That your Memorialists therefore confidently hope and expect that the graduates of the University of Sydney will not be inferior in Scholastic acquirements to the majority of graduates of British Universities; and they feel in consequence less hesitation in applying to your Majesty for the concession of such further authority, as, for the reasons hereinafter stated, appears to them to be required to entitle the Degrees of the University of Sydney to general recognition throughout your Majesty's dominions.

10. That although the assent given by your Majesty to the Act of the Legislature of New South Wales, under which the University of Sydney is incorporated, fully satisfies the principle of law that the power of granting Degrees should flow from the Crown, yet, as that assent was conveyed through an Act which has effect only within the Territory of New South Wales, your Memorialists believe that Degrees granted by the University of Sydney under the authority of the said Act, are not legally entitled to recognition beyond the limits of New South Wales.

11. That your Memorialists are in consequence most desirous to obtain a grant from your Majesty of Letters Patent, requiring all your Majesty's subjects to recognise the Degrees given under the Act of the Local Legislature, in the same manner as if the said University of Sydney had been an University established within the United Kingdom under a Royal Charter or an Imperial Enactment.

12. Your Memorialists therefore most humbly pray that your Majesty will be pleased to take the premises into your gracious consideration, and grant to the University Letters Patent effective of the object therein set forth.

And your Memorialists will ever pray to your Majesty, &c.

In testimony whereof, the Common Seal of the said University has been affixed, this ninth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-seven.

By order of the Senate,

FRANCIS L. S. MEREWETHER,
Vice-Provost.

(L.S.)

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE ACT.

No. 1.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Government House,Sydney, 12 January, 1858.

SIR,

1. I have the honor to forward herewith an Act of the Legislature of New South Wales, intituled "An Act to Incorporate St. John's College as a College within the University of Sydney." In assenting to this Act, which I have done in the name and on the behalf of Her Majesty, I acted in the usual manner, by referring the enactment to the Law Officers for their report, whether there were any reasons which should induce me to refuse my assent or to reserve the Act for the notification of Her Majesty's pleasure. On their assurance that there were no reasons why the Act should not come into operation, I gave my assent to it.

2. I have since received from the Bishop of Sydney the enclosed letter: he objects to the use of the term "the Archdiocese of Sydney," and to the title "the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Sydney," in the fourth clause.

3. Lord Grey, in a Despatch No. 117, dated 13th July, 1849, referring to some correspondence on a similar subject, forwarded by Sir Charles Fitz Roy in his Despatch No. 27, dated 17th February, 1849, says, "I perceive with regret the intention which appears manifest from the correspondence on the part of the Prelates of the Roman Catholic Church to assume titles which it is out of the power of Her Majesty's Government to recognize." The Bishop of Sydney, therefore, is perhaps right in saying that "the title" assumed by the Archbishop "has been formally rejected by Her Majesty's Secretary of State," though the prefix of "Roman Catholic" might possibly be considered a sufficient mark of distinction between it and the titles granted to Prelates of the Church of England.

4. Having, however, submitted his Lordship's letter to the Attorney General for such remarks as he might think advisable to make, I have received from him the enclosed letter, explanatory of his views with relation to this subject; and I may also observe, with reference to what is stated therein, that had I received the Bishop's letter before I formally assented to the Act, I do not feel at all certain that I should have adopted the views which his Lordship has pressed upon me, or have reserved the enactment for Her Majesty's consideration. As it is, however, the only course now open to me is to submit the whole case for the decision of Her Majesty's Government.

5. Since writing the foregoing I received a letter addressed by the Bishop of Sydney to yourself, which I now beg to enclose.

I have &c.,

W. DENISON.

THE RIGHT HONORABLE

HENRY LABOUCHERE.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 1.]

Sydney, 15 December, 1857.

Sir,

I observe by the public papers that an Act has passed the Houses of Parliament, intituled "An Act to Incorporate St. John's College, as a College within the University of Sydney," in which the title "Archbishop of Sydney," and the territorial designation "Archdiocese of Sydney," are respectively employed in connexion with the temporal matters of the Roman Catholic Community therein particularized.

Considering that the appropriation of such terms in a public Act necessarily implies the admission of the title assumed by the chief dignitary of that communion in this Colony, and which I believe to be incompatible with the law affecting such titles, and in contravention of the rights and prerogatives of the Crown, I do myself the honor to draw the attention of your Excellency thereto.

I

I have no wish to revive the controversy which was formerly maintained by my venerable predecessor in defence of the rightful claims of the Metropolitan of the Church of England, in opposition to the assumption of titles by foreign authority; but on this occasion I deem it my duty, no less to your Excellency, as the Royal Representative, than to my own office, to protest against any legal recognition being given to titles and designations which appear to me unconstitutional, and which have already been discountenanced by the Imperial Government.

I submit to your Excellency that an "Archdiocese of Sydney" is as unknown to the law as an "Archbishop of Sydney." Her Majesty's Letters Patent, bearing date the twenty-fifth day of June, 1847, ordained and constituted certain portions of the Colony of New South Wales, including the City of Sydney, to be a Bishop's See and Diocese, "to be called the Bishopric of Sydney"; and by other Letters Patent, bearing date the 25th day of October, 1854, nominated and appointed us to be the Metropolitan Bishop thereof. I contend, therefore, that the assumption of the title of "Archbishop of Sydney," and the use of the territorial designation "Archdiocese of Sydney," by a Prelate of the Church of Rome, ought not to be recognized by the Colonial Parliament. The title has, your Excellency is aware, been formally rejected by Her Majesty's Secretary of State, and it appears to me necessarily to follow, that the equivalent designation "Archdiocese of Sydney" is to all intents as exceptionable.

Upon these grounds I most respectfully, but earnestly, present to your Excellency my remonstrance against the use and admission of the terms complained of in the before mentioned Act; and I humbly request that your Excellency will take the same into your serious consideration, when the said Act shall be submitted to your Excellency for Her Majesty's Assent.

To His Excellency
The Governor General.

I have, &c.,
F. SYDNEY.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 1.]

Attorney General's Office,
8 January, 1858.

Sir,

Herewith I return the letter addressed to your Excellency by the Bishop of Sydney, in which his Lordship remonstrates against the use by the New South Wales Parliament in the St. John's College Incorporating Act of the terms "Archbishop" and "Archdiocese of Sydney," in connexion with the temporal matters of the Roman Catholic community. When the St. John's College Bill was submitted to me by your Excellency, in the usual course, for the purpose of advising whether or not there existed any reasons for withholding from it the Assent of the Crown, my attention was not drawn to the terms now complained of, nor, so far as I am aware, was any reference made to those terms when the Bill was passing through the Legislative Council and the Assembly. Had my attention, however, been turned in that direction, I should not have considered it my duty to advise your Excellency to do otherwise than assent to the Bill in question.

I am unable to agree with the Bishop of Sydney in the view submitted in his Lordship's letter. In this Colony there is no Church established by law. The Crown has no authority, by parcelling out the Territory into Dioceses, and appointing Bishops, to invest those Bishops with any coercive powers whatever beyond those necessary for enforcing the internal discipline of the Church. Like Bishops of the Church of Rome, the Bishops of the Church of England in this Colony have jurisdiction in spiritual matters within their own Church, and no farther, and the erection of a Diocese in either case does no more than point out the Territorial limits within which that spiritual jurisdiction is to be exercised. In England the Bishop is the Ordinary, and he and the Clergymen under him are by law entitled to certain remuneration, to which all the lands within the Diocese are liable to contribute. It might therefore be regarded there as a matter of importance to protest against the assumption by a Roman Catholic Bishop—whose position as a Bishop is recognized by the Church of England—of a title already held by a Bishop of that Church. But here there is nothing territorial in the English sense in the terms "Bishop," "Diocese," or "Archdiocese." The Bishop of Sydney is the Metropolitan, so far as regards his own Church, within the limits designated by the Queen. The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Sydney is, so far as relates to the members of his Church, regarded by them as having jurisdiction within the limits which are comprised in his Archdiocese. In the point of view taken by me, I see no impropriety or inconsistency in the coexistence in this Colony of a Roman Catholic Bishop and a Bishop of the Church of England, with precisely the same designations, and exercising jurisdiction within exactly the same limits. I can see no difference between the case of a Roman Catholic Bishop exercising in this Colony jurisdiction over a "Diocese," and a Wesleyan Clergyman exercising in the same place jurisdiction over a "Circuit." So far as the general public are concerned the two things are precisely alike.

For these reasons I feel bound to state as my opinion that the Bishop of Sydney's remonstrance is one which in point of constitutional law cannot be upheld.

I have, &c.,
JAMES MARTIN,
Attorney General.

His Excellency
Sir W. T. Denison.

[Enclosure

[Enclosure 3 in No. 1.]

Sydney, 8 January, 1858.

Sir,

I do myself the honor to forward herewith copy of a letter by me to Sir W. Denison, remonstrating against the admission of certain titles and designations applied to the Roman Catholic Archbishop in this Colony into an Act of Incorporation of a Roman Catholic College, and requesting His Excellency's consideration of the subject before granting his assent to that Act on behalf of Her Majesty.

As, however, the Governor General had signified his assent to this Act, in the ordinary form, previous to my letter reaching Government House, I now beg leave respectfully to invite your attention to the subject, and to request that, should you see fit to approve of the representations I have felt it my duty to make, both with regard to the prerogatives of the Crown and the rightful claims of the Metropolitan Bishop of this Province, you will be pleased to advise Her Majesty in the exercise of Her constitutional power to disallow the said Act, so far as relates to the titles and designations therein contained.

I have, &c.,

The Right Honorable
Her Majesty's Secretary of State

No. 2.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE to THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Downing-street,

27 May, 1858.

SIR,

I have received your Despatch No. 10, of the 12th of January last, forwarding an authenticated copy of a Private Act passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of New South Wales, and assented to by yourself in Her Majesty's name, entitled, "An Act to Incorporate Saint John's College within the University of Sydney," together with a letter of remonstrance from the Bishop of Sydney.

The objections urged by the Bishop to this enactment have reference to the appellation "Roman Catholic Archbishop of Sydney," which has been employed in the body of the Act to designate the Roman Catholic Archbishop; and also to the locality in which the Sydney University has been founded, being described as the Archdiocese of Sydney, and not as the "City of Sydney" or "Colony of New South Wales."

Having considered the questions thus raised, and bearing in mind the previous Despatches which have passed upon the subject of the Roman Catholic Episcopate, I cannot but agree with the Bishop of Sydney that the Act requires amendment in the particulars to which he has called attention.

By the Imperial Statute 14 and 15 Vict., cap., 60, the assumption of Territorial Titles in this country is prohibited to Roman Catholic Bishops as an interference with the Royal Prerogative; and, although the operation of this Act does not extend to Her Majesty's Colonial Possessions, it is desirable, for the avoidance of disputes which might otherwise arise, that uniformity of practice should prevail throughout the Empire.

I have likewise to point out to you that the use of the term "Archdiocese of Sydney" is substantially in contravention of the instructions contained in Lord Grey's Circular Despatch of the 27th of December, 1848, which enjoins, when documents are in question, that the words "Roman Catholic" shall not be omitted where mention is made of a Bishop of that Church.

I should wish you therefore to propose to the local Legislature the amendment of the Act on the points to which I have adverted, and I shall in the meantime defer submitting it to the Queen.

I have, &c.,

STANLEY.

AFFILIATED COLLEGES PARTIAL ENDOWMENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.
(WARDEN AND FELLOWS OF ST. PAUL'S COLLEGE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the Warden and Fellows of St. Paul's College, within the University of Sydney,—

SHEWETH:—

1. That your Petitioners have heard, with great concern, that a Bill is before your Honorable House by which the 9th section of the Colleges' Endowment Act of 18 Victoria will be repealed.

2. That the said 9th section was founded upon and gave Legislative enactment to a Resolution or By-law of the Senate of the University, passed in the previous year at the instance of a large body of persons, being supporters of the then projected Church of England College, and that upon the faith of that Resolution or By-law, and in reliance on its permanency, many individuals became subscribers to the funds of the College, and the Act was solicited and obtained by which St. Paul's was incorporated.

3. Your Petitioners, therefore, have an interest in the continued existence of the enactment which is now sought to be repealed, and they submit to your Honorable House that under the circumstances the proposed repeal, without the consent of the Incorporated College, and without the substitution of any other enactment calculated to attain the same object, would not be just.

4. Your Petitioners beg further to represent, that whether in themselves desirable or not, the By-law and enactment in question are not opposed to the Act which created and endowed the University, since that Act expressly states that the University was established for the advancement of morality and religion, and the By-law and enactment excluding no denomination, and imposing no confession of any particular faith, seek only to prevent the conferring of Honors or Degrees on those whom the law deems so opposed to religion and morality that it will not even permit them to be witnesses in a Court of Justice.

5. Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that the Bill now before your Honorable House may not be passed.

The Warden and Fellows of St. Paul's College.

AFFILIATED COLLEGES PARTIAL ENDOWMENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.
(PROFESSORS OF THE FACULTY OF ARTS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the Professors of the Faculty of Arts, in the University of Sydney,—

SHWETH:—

1. That your Petitioners are the Professors of the Faculty of Arts in the University of Sydney.

2. That the Act of Incorporation declares, in its preamble, that the University of Sydney holds forth its encouragement for pursuing liberal learning to “all classes and denominations, without any distinction whatever,” and the twentieth clause of the same Act provides “That no religious test shall be administered to any person, in order to entitle him to be admitted as a Student of the said University, or to hold any office therein, or to partake of any advantage or privilege thereof.”

3. That the ninth clause of the Affiliated Colleges Partial Endowment Act is, in the opinion of your Petitioners, a violation of the fundamental principle of the University,—for, were there otherwise a possibility of doubt as to the fair interpretation of the above recited twentieth clause of the Act of Incorporation, its meaning is distinctly defined and restricted by the following provisions, which permits a solitary interference with the principle of the enactment,—“Provided always that this enactment shall not be deemed to prevent the making of regulations for securing the due attendance of the Students for Divine Worship at such Church or Chapel as shall be approved by their parents or guardians respectively.”

4. That the ninth clause of the Affiliated Colleges Act gives power, in some cases, to the heads of Colleges, in others, to the Senate of the University, of virtually depriving a candidate of well-earned honors; for, whilst it admits of being liberally administered, it is equally capable of being used as an instrument of capricious and irresponsible tyranny.

5. That the experience of ages shews that the imposition of religious tests is not conducive to religion and morality. Even in the ancient ecclesiastical foundations of the Mother Country they are now forbidden by statute.

6. That your Petitioners have heard, with great satisfaction, that a Bill for the repeal of the ninth clause of the Affiliated Colleges Act has been introduced into your Honorable House, and they would respectfully urge that the said Bill may be forthwith passed into law.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

AFFILIATED COLLEGES PARTIAL ENDOWMENT ACT.

(PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 18 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Professors, Graduates, and Undergraduates of the University of Sydney,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners, perceiving that a Member of your Honorable House has introduced a Bill for the amendment of the Affiliated Colleges Act, by repealing the 9th section thereof, are desirous of urging upon the attention of your Honorable House the propriety of adopting such amendment.

That your Petitioners unhesitatingly declare that, in their opinion, the resolution of the Senate of the University of Sydney, to which legal permanency was sought to be given by the said 9th section, was in direct violation of the 20th section of the Incorporation Act of the University.

That several of your Petitioners having left the Mother Country for the purpose of joining the said University, in the firm belief that the said 20th section of the Incorporation Act would remain inviolate, and others of your Petitioners having been induced to matriculate in the University upon the faith of the national character of the Institution, feel themselves aggrieved by the violation of the said 20th section of the Incorporation Act.

That your Petitioners would respectfully urge upon your Honorable House the danger of allowing the Senate to enforce any resolutions at variance with, and in their operation fatal to, the fundamental principles of the University Charter.

That your Petitioners would respectfully remind your Honorable House that in the ancient Universities of England the religious tests formerly enforced have been absolutely abolished by Act of Parliament, and that the Honors and Degrees conferred by those Universities may now be obtained by any of Her Majesty's subjects without the production of any certificate of religious attainments.

Your Petitioners, therefore, respectfully request your Honorable House to pass the said Bill for the amendment of the Affiliated Colleges Act into law.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

AFFILIATED COLLEGES PARTIAL ENDOWMENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

(PETITION OF PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE COMMITTEE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That Petitioners have heard with alarm and regret that it is proposed to expunge the words “systematic religious instruction” from the preamble of the Affiliated Colleges Amendment Bill.

That Petitioners, and others, are preparing to erect an Affiliated College in which “systematic religious instruction,” in accordance with the Westminster Standards, shall be given to all Presbyterians who may be pleased to attend.

That Petitioners would not think of subscribing towards the erection of a College to teach only Literature and Science ; the great object which they desire to secure is, “systematic religious instruction,” as in their opinion the domestic supervision of Students should always be combined with systematic religious instruction.

Petitioners respectfully pray, therefore, that the words “systematic religious instruction” may not be expunged ; and that your Honorable Assembly will not adopt any measure that can prevent, or be interpreted to prevent, the Members of the Presbyterian Church from receiving aid towards the erection of a College within the University in which systematic religious instruction, in accordance with the Westminster Standards, may be openly and honestly given.

Signed at Sydney, this eighteenth day of May, 1858, in the name and by authority of the Presbyterian College Committee,

THOS. BARKER,
Chairman.

(MINISTER, &c., OF PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION AT BALMAIN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned Minister and Office Bearers of the Congregation of Presbyterians at Balmain,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners being earnestly desirous that Presbyterians generally throughout the Colony may be enabled to co-operate for the establishment of a Presbyterian College in connexion with the University of Sydney, have observed with regret that this most desirable object is prevented by the occurrence of the words "Systematic Religious Instruction" in the third line of the preamble of the Affiliated Colleges Act, as these words sanction and establish the principle that it is the right and duty of the State to support religion, or to maintain religious bodies of the most opposite sentiments from the public Treasury,—a principle to which a large number of conscientious Presbyterians in the Colony strongly object.

That while these words exclude a very considerable portion of the Presbyterians of the Colony from the benefits of the Act—preventing them from co-operating with others in carrying out its provisions—they are of no real value or importance to any of the other religious denominations that have already established, or are now establishing, Colleges under the Act.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your Honorable House will be pleased to allow the words "Systematic Religious Instruction" to be omitted in the preamble of the amended Act.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

AFFILIATED COLLEGES PARTIAL ENDOWMENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.
(MEMBERS OF VARIOUS RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS, SYDNEY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned, Members of various Religious Denominations in the City of Sydney, in Public Meeting assembled,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That as it is declared in the Preamble of the Affiliated Colleges Act to be one of the objects of these Institutions to supply "Systematic Religious Instruction" to their students, and to do so at the public expense, the Act recognises and establishes the principle that it is the right and the duty of the State to support religion from the public Treasury.

That several entire denominations of Protestant Christians—in particular the Independents, the Baptists, and the United Presbyterians—repudiate and reject this principle, as unwarranted by the Word of God, and injurious to the best interests of the Christian Religion.

That so long as the words "Systematic Religious Instruction" are retained in the Preamble of the Act, all these denominations are virtually excluded from all participation in its benefits, and prevented from co-operating, as they would otherwise do, in the establishment of Colleges in connection with the University.

That the words in question are also a snare and a stumbling-block to many other conscientious Presbyterians, as they recognise and establish the principle of indiscriminate Religious Endowment, which they repudiate and reject.

That while the retention of these words in the Preamble of the Act operates as a serious grievance to certain classes of the community, and an Act of exclusion to others, their omission can in no way affect any of the Colleges already established, or about to be established, in connection with the University.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your Honorable House will expunge the words "Systematic Religious Instruction" from the Preamble of the Affiliated Colleges Act.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE IN CONNEXION WITH SYDNEY UNIVERSITY.

(PETITION RELATIVE TO ESTABLISHMENT OF, FROM REV. J. D. LANG, D.D.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 29 June, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of John Dunmore Lang, Doctor of Divinity, and Senior Minister of the Scots Church, Sydney,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner took a zealous and active part, as a Member of the late Legislative Council, in passing the Affiliated Colleges' Act, in the year 1854.

That it is, therefore, accordant with the personal knowledge of your Petitioner that the main object of the framers of that Act, as far as it referred to the Presbyterians of the Colony, was to render the boon which it held forth, in the shape of land and public money, for the erection of a college equally available for all Presbyterians whatsoever, without distinction of any kind.

That certain Presbyterian Ministers and Laymen have, nevertheless, been endeavouring for some time past to defeat this benevolent intention of the Legislature, and to restrict to a chosen few what was thus beneficently intended for all.

That with this view a series of preliminary meetings, to prepare a plan or prospectus for a Presbyterian College, and to draw up resolutions on the subject for a public meeting, was held from time to time in this city, in a private and underhand manner; from all of which preliminary meetings your Petitioner, although the senior Presbyterian Minister in the Colony, and the only one who had ever been publicly identified with the cause of education, was carefully excluded.

That a public meeting of the Presbyterians of the Colony was accordingly held, at the instance of these persons, in the City of Sydney, on the 5th of April last; at which a series of resolutions, embodying a plan or prospectus, and proposing a Committee of Management, was submitted to the meeting; but that, contrary to all established precedent in such cases, these resolutions had never been published beforehand, but were carefully concealed till the hour of meeting from the thirty thousand Presbyterians whom it concerned.

That your Petitioner being earnestly desirous that a Presbyterian College should be established on a broad and popular basis, in accordance with the spirit of the Colleges' Act, and with what he knew to be the intentions of its framers, attended the said public meeting, and offered to move an amendment, of which he had given previous notice in the Daily Papers, on the first of the said resolutions; but that, contrary to the rules and practice of all public meetings throughout the British Empire, he was authoritatively silenced by the Chairman, and no discussion of any kind was allowed; the resolutions, which had been concocted clandestinely, being thus publicly carried by a coup d'état.

That, at the instance of those Presbyterians who felt aggrieved at these anomalous proceedings, another public meeting of the Presbyterians of the Colony was held on the twelfth of April last, at which another series of resolutions was passed, in accordance with the spirit of the Colleges' Act, and another Committee appointed; and that both of these Committees are now appealing to the public, and raising funds for a Presbyterian College under that Act.

That the anomalous and unwarrantable proceedings above detailed have tended greatly to aggravate and perpetuate, instead of healing, the existing divisions of the Presbyterian Communion, as it was confidently expected that united action on the common ground of a Presbyterian College would otherwise have done; and that many zealous and influential friends of education, of the Presbyterian Communion, dissatisfied with this state of things, are standing aloof from the movement altogether, and refusing to contribute to either Committee.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will institute an inquiry into the truth of these allegations, and take such further steps in the matter as to your Honorable House shall seem fit.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

VOTES No. 57. TUESDAY, 13 JULY, 1858.

3. Proposed Presbyterian College:—Mr. Gordon moved, pursuant to notice,—
 (1.) That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the Statements and Allegations made in a Petition from the Reverend John Dunmore Lang, D.D., relative to the proposed Presbyterian College.
 (2.) That such Committee consist of Mr. Hay, Dr. Aldcorn, Mr. Jones, Mr. Buckley, Mr. Marks, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Forster, and the Mover.
 Debate ensued.
 And Mr. Smith having required that the proposed Committee, if granted, be appointed by Ballot,— Question,—That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the Statements and Allegations made in a Petition from the Reverend John Dunmore Lang, D.D., relative to the proposed Presbyterian College,—put and passed;—
 Whereupon the House proceeded to the Ballot;—
 And Mr. Macarthur tendering to the Clerk a List of Members for whom he desired to vote;—
 And the Clerk declining to receive the same, on the ground that Mr. Macarthur was not in the House when the Question was put for the appointment of the Committee,—
 And Mr. Macarthur requesting the Speaker's decision in the matter,—
 The Speaker ruled, that the objection taken by the Clerk was a valid one, on the parliamentary principle—that to be entitled to vote, a Member must be present when the Question is put;—
 Upon which Mr. Donaldson, declaring that he also was absent when the Question was put, withdrew the list he had given in to the Clerk;—
 And the Ballot being concluded, the Speaker declared the following Members to be, with the Mover, the Committee duly appointed, viz.:—Mr. Jones, Mr. Hay, Dr. Aldcorn, Mr. Forster, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Buckley, Mr. Robertson, and Mr. Marks.

PROPOSED PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE.

(PETITION FROM THE REV. JOHN DUNMORE LANG, D.D.)

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 13th of July, 1858,
"to inquire into and report upon the statements and allegations made in a Petition from the Revd. John Dunmore Lang, D.D., relative to the proposed Presbyterian College," have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee in the course of their inquiry have examined as witnesses the gentlemen named in the margin, whose evidence will be found appended hereto, and have had their attention directed to various documents having reference to the matter, and after the most careful consideration are of opinion that the statements and allegations of the petitioner are in the main satisfactorily proved.

Revd. J. D. Lang, D.D.
 Hon. F. L. S. Merewether,
 M. L. C.
 Revd. John Dougal.
 Revd. John McGibbon.
 Revd. Wm. Lumsdaine.
 N. D. Stenhouse, Esq.
 Revd. A. Salmon.
 Revd. Hugh Darling.
 R. O'Connor, Esq.

Your Committee have ascertained that the Affiliated Colleges Partial Endowment Act provides that the advantages it offers shall be open alike to all denominations of Religionists that may comply with the provisions thereof, and they conceive that the fact, that the Bill when first introduced into the late Legislative Council contained a clause restricting such advantages to the four denominations then receiving State support, and was there altered to the shape of the present Act, places it beyond doubt that the Law, as it now stands, was adopted advisedly.

Your Committee are, nevertheless, of opinion that the Legislature did not intend pledging the Government to assist more than one College for the Presbyterians, or for any other denomination of Religionists, and, therefore, that the constitution of a College for that denomination should, to accord with the spirit of the Act, be framed on a basis sufficiently wide to include every section of Presbyterians.

Your Committee regret that the procedure complained of by your petitioner, not only failed to provide that such should be the case, but was evidently intended directly to exclude the Presbyterians attached to the Synod of New South Wales. That such was the intention, is placed beyond doubt by the admitted facts:—

1st,—That while Ministers of the Synod of Australia, and of the Synod of Eastern Australia, and the only Minister of the United Presbyterian Church, as well as Ministers of the Congregational Denomination, were invited to co-operate in the preliminary arrangements for the Meeting which took place on the 5th of April last, for the purpose of taking measures for the establishment of a Presbyterian College,—not only were the Ministers of the Synod of New South Wales excluded from any such proper courtesy, but the petitioner, who is the senior Minister of the Presbyterian Church of the Colony, was actually prevented from taking part in the proceedings of that Meeting.

2nd,—That although the Committee appointed by the Public Meeting of the 12th and 19th April, to endeavour to obtain the united action of the Presbyterians of the Colony in support of a Presbyterian College, addressed on the 22nd April, to the Committee, that had been appointed on the 5th April, an application for a conference of the two Committees; and subsequently on the 12th May, in compliance with the request of that Committee, furnished their objections to the scheme propounded by the Committee of the 5th April, such conference was eventually refused.

In

In the course of their investigation your Committee have discovered with some surprise, that while all denominations were placed on precisely the same footing by the Affiliated Colleges Partial Endowment Act, passed on the 2nd December, 1854, a deed of grant, issued to the Senate of the University on the 18th January, 1855, intended to convey certain lands to that body for carrying out the objects of the University and Affiliated Colleges Partial Endowment Acts, purports to restrict the benefits of these Acts as regards the land proposed to be made available to merely four denominations, and among them to the Church of Scotland, thereby excluding a large majority of the Presbyterians of the Colony from all right and title to the said land. Your Committee cannot concur with Mr. Merewether that this restriction, which appears to them clearly illegal, was intentional on the part of the Government; they are rather of opinion, with the petitioner and Mr. Stenhouse, that it was a mere oversight of the draftsman who drew up the deed of grant. On the grounds, however, not only of its illegality, but because it seems to interfere with the establishment of a Presbyterian College on a broad and liberal basis in conformity with the Act, your Committee would recommend either that the deed of grant be revoked, or an Act of the Legislature passed to correct the mistake.

In conclusion, your Committee further recommend that the Legislature should refuse to pass any Act for the Incorporation of a Presbyterian College, as contemplated under the Affiliated Colleges Partial Endowment Act, until steps have been taken de novo by the parties concerned, and in particular until the above recommendation has been complied with, or fully considered by the Legislature.

ON

PROPOSED PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE.

(PETITION OF THE REVEREND JOHN DUNMORE LANG, D.D.)

FRIDAY, 23 JULY, 1858.

Present:—

MR. ALDCORN,
MR. BUCKLEY,
MR. GORDON,MR. MARKS,
MR. RICHARDSON,
MR. ROBERTSON.

SAMUEL DEANE GORDON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

The Reverend John Dunmore Lang, D.D., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Were you a Member of the Legislative Council when the Affiliated Colleges Act was passed? I was; in the year 1854.
2. Will you be good enough to inform the Committee, to the best of your recollection, what took place on that occasion, as far as the Presbyterians were concerned? The Affiliated Colleges Bill was introduced by the Government,—the Colonial Treasurer for the time being, Mr. Merewether, and the Solicitor General, Mr. Manning, having charge of it. Before it was brought to a first reading, a copy of it was laid on the Table of the House for the inspection of those Members who felt interested in the subject. I, naturally, looked into it, and found what I thought two very objectionable clauses in the Bill. This is a copy of the Bill as it was originally submitted to the Council, for the first reading, on the 2nd of November, 1854. Before this Bill, however, was submitted to the House for the first reading, I happened to spend an evening at the Speaker's (Sir Charles Nicholson); and, in the presence of Mr. Merewether (the officer having charge of the Bill on the part of the Government), and of the Reverend Dr. Woolley and Professor Smith, of the University, Sir Charles asked me what I thought of the Colleges Bill. I told him I approved of it generally, with one exception, viz., a clause which I found in the Preamble of the Bill, and repeated virtually in the first clause of it. I have marked the passages I objected to on this copy of the Bill, which I beg to hand in. (The Witness handed in the same.) The first is to the following effect:—"Whereas it is expedient to encourage and assist the establishment of Affiliated Colleges, within the University of Sydney, by the religious denominations now ordinarily receiving pecuniary aid from the Legislature, in which Colleges," &c. That is in the Preamble. Then again, in the first clause of the Bill, this is virtually repeated, in the following form:—"Whenever any College shall have been established, and incorporated by any Act of the Governor and Council, as a Church of England, or Roman Catholic, or Church of Scotland, or Wesleyan Methodist College," &c.; thereby virtually restricting the boon which the Bill was intended to afford to those denominations that received support from the State. I then stated, in the presence of the gentlemen I have named, that the presence or absence of this restricting clause would not in any way affect either the Church of England or the Roman Catholics, as those bodies were under a sort of monarchical government, the head of each being absolute, virtually; but that the Presbyterian ecclesiastical constitution being formed on a republican basis, and Presbyterians generally being very sensitive on the subject of the connection between Church and State, they were broken up, through that circumstance alone, into various distinct bodies, and the clause I objected to would only have the effect of aggravating and perpetuating the distinctions and alienations, and embittering the evil feeling that thus existed among them, instead of healing those divisions, which it was exceedingly desirable that the establishment of a Presbyterian College should do, and which, I thought, it was calculated to accomplish, if the matter were properly arranged; for, although the Presbyterians of the Colony were all united in opinion as to doctrine, discipline, and worship, the question of the connection of Church and State—so vital a question to Presbyterians generally—had divided the small number of Presbyterians in this Colony into three different sections, or denominations, and to these three a fourth has since been added. I added, that if this restricting clause were retained, it would only perpetuate and aggravate the feelings of alienation which this state of things had produced; and I should, therefore, hold it my duty to oppose the Bill in every stage of its progress; but if these clauses were struck out, so as to leave the establishment of a college equally open to all Presbyterians, I should give it my hearty support. There was no remark made on the occasion by any of the gentlemen present. They listened to me with great interest and attention, but said nothing. The circumstance I allude to took place on a Monday evening; and on the Wednesday following, before the Bill had been submitted to the House at all, Sir Charles Nicholson, when the House was in Committee, came over to the seat I occupied, and informed me that, on the intervening day, Tuesday, there had been a meeting of the Senate of the University, (of which he was Provost at the time), and he was happy to inform me that the Senate had agreed, at that meeting, to strike out the clauses to which I objected. After this the Bill was submitted for the first reading; but Mr. Merewether stated the substance of what I have mentioned in the preliminary remarks he made on the occasion, which I would beg to read. The first reading of the Bill took place on the 2nd November, 1854, and this is the report in the Herald of the following day. (The Witness here read the report of Mr. Merewether's speech from the SYDNEY MORNING HERALD of the 3rd November, 1854.) Then there were some remarks from myself, expressive of my approval of the object of the Bill. The Bill was then read a first time, with a Government pledge that these objectionable clauses should be struck out. There was a further objection that I made to the Bill in Committee. The third clause originally stood in this form:—"Every such Principal shall be a minister of the religious denomination in connection with which the College to which he belongs shall have been established"—and so on. I stated, in Committee, that this, as I conceived, would be an unnecessary restriction upon the Presbyterian community of this Colony; that in the ancient University of St. Andrew's,—the oldest in Scotland, which had originally three Colleges, two of which were subsequently united—Sir David Brewster, a layman, but a man of European fame, was Principal of one of these Colleges; and I thought it would be desirable for the Presbyterians of this Colony to have the power of placing at the head of their institution a man of so high a standing in the European world, although a layman. I did not make a formal amendment, however, but Mr. Martin immediately took up my idea, and proposed an amendment, to strike out that portion of the clause which I have quoted; but that amendment, which I seconded and spoke in favor of, was lost in Committee. However, after the Bill had passed the second reading, and the Committee, Mr. Martin brought forward a motion for its re-committal, on that ground alone, expecting that when the House should be more numerous than it had been when this amendment was lost he would be able to carry it, and it was re-committed accordingly, I think, on the 30th of November—having been read a second time on the 22nd. The amendment was then carried; so that in the Act, as passed by the Legislature, this restriction disappears. In proof of the truth of what I have stated, in regard to the concern of the Government with the alterations of the clauses that I objected to in the first instance, I beg to hand in a second edition of the Bill headed, "To be proposed by the Solicitor General in substitution for the First Bill." (The Witness handed in the same.) But as the Bill was too limited in this form to embody the different clauses required to be put into it, a third edition of it was prepared and substituted for the second, by the Solicitor General, before the second reading,—a copy of which I beg to hand in. (The Witness handed in the same.) In this edition the Principal is required, by the fifth clause, to be "a minister of the religious denomination in connection with which the College to which he belongs shall have been established;" for it was after the second reading that that restriction was thrown out. I stated in Committee, as the ground of my objection, that it was not at all necessary, as far as the Presbyterians were concerned, that the Principal of the College should be a Professor of Divinity; that it would be requisite that there should be a Theological Faculty for the training up of young men for the ministry, as part and parcel of the College; but that there was no reason at all why the Principal of the College—the person who was to take charge of the discipline of the institution, and to superintend the studies of the young men attending the University for general education—should be a Professor of Divinity. There was rather a reason why he should not; for, as my late brother-in-law, Mr. Baillie, had died very shortly before the Colleges Bill had been introduced, and had left the whole of his property, subject to the life-rent of his widow, for the endowment of two Professorships in a Presbyterian College in Sydney, it was evident, at that time, that the establishment of a Theological Faculty for the training up of candidates for the ministry would be quite practicable in any Presbyterian College, whether the Principal was a minister or not. It was with this understanding that the clause was re-considered, and that it was left open to the Presbyterians to elect as Principal for their College either a minister or a layman, as they might think proper. And as it was only the Presbyterians, in their divided state, that the original clauses I had objected to could affect in any way, it was entirely to suit their particular case that these alterations were made in the original Bill.

3. Are you aware that a grant of land has passed to the Senate of the University, for the purpose of establishing Affiliated Colleges? I am. I was not aware till very recently of the terms of that grant—

The Rev.
J. D. Lang,
D.D.

4. I was about to ask you if you are aware of the terms on which that grant was passed to the Senate of the University? I am. And it is very evident that the deed of grant was drawn up by some clerk who was not aware of what had taken place so shortly before, in connection with the Affiliated Colleges Act. The Deed of Grant appears to have been founded on the first edition of the Colleges Bill. The Colleges Act was passed on the second of December, 1854, with all the amendments I have enumerated, and the grant to the University, ignoring these amendments, was passed on the 23rd of January following. Now, it was not competent for the Governor of this Colony to pass a deed of grant to the University in the face of the Act of the Legislature to which he had himself given his assent six weeks before. That was ultra vires, on the part of the Governor; the grant being issued in the face of the Act of the Legislature previously passed and assented to by the Governor. This great blunder, in my opinion—and I offer it very humbly—would prove fatal to the legal character of the deed in any Law Court.

5. I was about to have put the question to you, how you reconcile the terms of this deed of grant with the statement you have previously made with regard to the striking out of these clauses from the original draft of the Bill? The only thing I can say on the subject is, that it was a great blunder committed by the Government, for which they are exclusively responsible. It is quite impossible to reconcile the two, and the deed of grant is virtually a nonentity.

6. I find this deed of grant is restricted to the four denominations receiving State aid, which restriction you have previously stated was struck out of the Bill? It is so. It is evident that the clerk, or other person, who drew up the deed of grant had only before him, or only consulted, the first edition of the Bill, which was rejected by the Government, the Senate of the University itself, and the Legislature. And I cannot conceive how the Senate of the University, and the Professors of that body, should have had a deed of grant in their possession for more than three years containing, and without discovering it, so great a blunder, that seems to be fatal to its legal value.

7. After the passing of the Affiliated Colleges' Act, did you take any steps for the establishment of a College in connection with it? I did not in the first instance, because I thought it was proper that the portion of the Presbyterian Church in connection with the State should initiate the measure, and I kept in abeyance till they should bring forward some measure of the kind, in order to hold them to the conditions of the Colleges Act, as passed by the Legislature; but when I found that nothing was done, after a number of private meetings, for nearly a twelve month, I did announce my intention of appealing to the public on the subject.

8. In your opinion, what ought to have been the course pursued, in accordance with Act of Council, for the establishment of a Presbyterian College? Nothing ought to have been done in the matter in secret or clandestinely. There ought to have been an intimation requesting the attendance of all, whether ministers or laymen, who were interested in the matter, to draw up resolutions in accordance with the Colleges Act. That, however, was not done. There were numerous meetings held, but they were confined to a chosen few—certain ministers and laymen, who were invited individually; and from all these meetings I, although the senior Presbyterian Minister in the Colony, and the one who had been all along most connected with academical education, was carefully excluded. At last a public meeting was called, and was held on the 5th of April last. I attended that meeting, and announced beforehand, in the Herald and Empire of that morning, an amendment which I meant to propose upon the first resolution to be submitted to the meeting, whatever it was. There were no proposed resolutions published before the meeting. I was totally in ignorance of what was to be done or proposed; but from the quarter from which the notice of meeting emanated, I suspected it was not intended to act in accordance with the principles of the Affiliated Colleges Act; and I, therefore, proposed an amendment, which was published in the Herald and Empire of that morning, and which, perhaps, the Committee would allow me to read.

9. Perhaps you will allow me to put another question previously:—how many bodies or classes is the Presbyterian denomination divided into in this Colony? At the time when the Affiliated Colleges Bill was passed, in 1854, there were three sections of the Presbyterian Church in this Colony, to which a fourth has since been added. They are, first, the Synod of Australia, comprising the ministers in connection with the State; second, the Synod of New South Wales—of which I am a member—which separated from the Synod of Australia in the year 1842; third, the Free Church, representing the famous disruption in Scotland in 1843; and, fourth, the United Presbyterians, together with a congregation in Balmain, not ostensibly connected with any of the four bodies, but holding the same principles as the United Presbyterians. These are the four sections of the Presbyterians of the Colony; and the only point which, in various ways, divides them from each other is the connection of Church and State. They are all agreed as to doctrine, discipline, and worship, and are all equally interested in the promotion of academical education.

10. Previously to this public meeting, of which you have already spoken, are you aware whether any means were taken by the parties establishing the College to get up an understanding among the different denominations, as to whether they would agree together in the establishment of this College or not? I do not know from my own personal knowledge what may have taken place in reference to others; but I know positively that there was no communication made either directly or indirectly to the body of Presbyterians with which I am myself connected. We were carefully excluded from all connection with the subject.

11. You mean the whole of the ministers of the Synod of New South Wales? The whole of the ministers of the Synod of New South Wales. We were at one time more than twelve in number;

The Rev.
J. D. Lang,

number; but, from death and disease, and removing from the Colony, we are at present reduced to seven.

12. If please, you can now read the amendment that you intended to propose at the public meeting held in Castlereagh-street? After the first resolution submitted to the public meeting on the 5th of April was moved and seconded, I offered to move the amendment which had been announced in the Herald and Empire of that morning, to the following effect:—

"1. That the object and design of a Presbyterian College, in connexion with the University of Sydney, is simply to provide a suitable domicile, and the requisite moral superintendence for the youth of the Presbyterian communion, from all parts of the Colony, while attending the classes of the said University.

"2. That the establishment of a Theological Faculty, for training up candidates for the Ministry in the Presbyterian Church, although highly desirable in itself, and to be looked forward to as an important appendage of the proposed College, is, therefore, by no means necessary to its existence, as part and parcel of the University system, and would obviously be impracticable at present in the divided condition of the Presbyterian Church.

"3. That as the Affiliated Colleges Act ensures the promoters of the proposed undertaking the sum of Ten thousand pounds from the Public Treasury, for the establishment of the College, on condition of a similar amount being first raised by themselves, it is of paramount importance for the welfare and prosperity of the Presbyterian College, that that amount shall be raised in such a way as to ensure and perpetuate a thoroughly popular character for the Institution, and thereby prevent its becoming a mere aristocratic concern, uncared for and unsupported by the great body of the Presbyterian people. To guard against so fatal a mistake, and to assimilate the proposed Presbyterian College to those noble, thoroughly popular, and essentially plebeian Academical Institutions, the Colleges and Universities of Scotland, that have mainly contributed, for three centuries past, to raise the Scottish people as a nation to the highest pitch of eminence among the nations of Europe, it is expedient and necessary that a large proportion—say three-fourths, or at least three-fifths—of the whole amount required in the first instance, to entitle the promoters of the undertaking to the bonus of Ten thousand pounds from the Public Treasury, should be raised in comparatively small sums, by the middle and industrious classes of the Presbyterian community throughout the territory; who will thus take a deep interest in the institution which they have themselves contributed to establish, and to which they will look forward as the means of raising not a few of their offspring to the highest places in the land.

"4. That, to ensure the accomplishment of this object of paramount importance, every subscriber of five pounds towards the College shall be deemed a proprietor of the Institution, and be entitled to one vote at all meetings of proprietors for the election of office-bearers, or for any other purpose whatsoever; every subscriber of ten pounds shall have two votes; every subscriber of twenty pounds shall have three votes; every subscriber of fifty pounds shall have four votes; and every subscriber of one hundred pounds or upwards shall have five votes, and no more; such votes, in the case of all proprietors not residing either in Sydney or within twenty miles of it, to be given by proxy (agreeably to a form to be prepared for the purpose), and to be transmissible by post.

"5. That one-fifth of the whole amount subscribed by any proprietor shall be payable on subscription, and the remaining four-fifths by equal annual instalments, at the end of one, two, three, and four years, respectively, from the date fixed for general subscription; for which deferred payments promissory notes shall be given by each subscriber, agreeably to a form to be prepared for the purpose.

"6. That, in order to carry out these arrangements, and to bring the proposed Presbyterian College into existence, in accordance with the liberal and enlightened principles of the Affiliated Colleges Act, a Provisional Committee shall be formed; to consist of one minister of religion, one member of either House of Parliament, and one other layman, on behalf of each distinct section of the Presbyterian Church."

13. You say you were not permitted to move that amendment at the meeting held on the 5th April? No. I rose to submit an amendment on the first resolution, and the Chairman refused to allow me to submit it. The account of it is given in the Herald and Empire of the 6th of April, the following day, to which I beg to refer.

14. Were any steps taken subsequently by you or other parties who felt aggrieved with the proceedings of that meeting of the 5th April? Being thus precluded from any connection with the Presbyterian College, and conceiving very strongly that very improper steps had been taken in the matter, our only resource was to call another public meeting of the Presbyterians of the Colony, which was done accordingly by advertisement, the meeting being held on the 12th April, and continued by adjournment to the 19th. At that meeting the amendment which was refused at the meeting of the 5th by the Chairman was passed unanimously, and another Committee was formed to carry out the objects implied in the series of resolutions I have just read. If the Committee will allow me to read the minutes of the proceedings of that Committee I will do so. As soon as the Committee appointed at the public meeting of the 12th and 19th were in operation, they held a meeting, and resolved, in the first instance, to hold a conference, if possible, with the other Committee.

"Sydney, 22nd April, 1858.

"The Provisional Committee having this day met: it was resolved unanimously,—

"That, in accordance with the recommendation of the adjourned public meeting of the 19th instant, and with a view to ensure the united action of the Presbyterians of the Colony generally, for the accomplishment of their common object, a conference should be requested with the Committee of Presbyterians appointed at the public meeting in the Infant School-room, Castlereagh-street, on Monday, the 5th instant."

Our

Our feeling on the occasion was, that it was indecent that there should be two Committees acting for the same object simultaneously, and professing to have the same views; and the proposal for a conference was made accordingly. A letter to the following effect was accordingly written, and signed by all the members of the Committee:—

The Rev.
J. D. Lang,
D.D.
23 July, 1858.

"Sydney, 22 April, 1858.

"To the Members of the Committee appointed at the Public Meeting of the 5th instant.

"GENTLEMEN,

"We, the undersigned, having been appointed to consider the best means for carrying out the views of various sections of the Presbyterian community, desirous of effecting the establishment of a Presbyterian College in connection with the University of Sydney, but holding conscientious objections to some of the principles embodied in the scheme adopted at the public meeting held in the Infant School-room, Castlereagh-street, on the 5th instant, for that object, have the honour to request a conference with the Committee then appointed; as being, in our opinion, the most advisable course for securing the united action of the whole Presbyterian people of the Colony in so desirable an undertaking.

"We have the honour, &c."

The next meeting was held on the 12th May, 1858, of which the following is a Minute:—

"Sydney, 12th May, 1858.

"The Provisional Committee having this day met, the following letter, addressed to the Honorable the Chairman, by Thomas Barker, Esq., on behalf of the other Committee, having been read, it was resolved to forward to that gentleman, for the information of the Committee with which he is acting, the subjoined reply.

"Sydney, 3rd May, 1858.

"To the Honorable John Robertson, Esq., and others

"GENTLEMEN,

"I have the honour to be deputed by the Committee of the Presbyterian College, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, addressed to the said Committee, and in reply to forward to you a copy of the minutes of this day's proceedings referring thereto.

"I am, Gentlemen,

"Your obedient Servant,

"(Signed) THOMAS BARKER, Chairman.

"Sydney, 3rd May, 1858.

"At St. Andrew's Church, which day the College Committee met and was constituted with prayer, when, inter alia, a letter was laid on the table from John Robertson, Esq., M.P., and other gentlemen, requesting a conference with the Committee, on matters respecting the principles on which it is proposed to establish a College. It was agreed that the letter be received, and that the Chairman be requested to communicate with Mr. Robertson, with a view to ascertain what are the conscientious objections to some of the principles embodied in the scheme adopted at a public meeting, held on the 5th ultimo, in the Infant School-room, Castlereagh-street, about which Mr. Robertson and the other gentlemen desire a conference."

Our reply was as follows:—

"Sydney, 12th May, 1858.

"To Thomas Barker, Esq., Chairman of the Committee of Presbyterians, formed at the Public Meeting of the 5th ultimo.

"Sir,

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant, in reply to the communication addressed to your Committee on the 22nd ultimo, by myself and others, requesting us to state our objections to your scheme. We do so accordingly in the accompanying Statement, signed on behalf of our Committee by our Honorary Secretary.

"I have the honour to be,

"Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

"(Signed) JOHN ROBERTSON, Chairman."

"STATEMENT of Objections to the Scheme propounded at the Public Meeting for the establishment of a Presbyterian College, held on the 5th ultimo.

"Our objections are twofold. We object, in the first place, to the scheme propounded in the series of Resolutions passed at the public meeting in question, as embodying in so far the principles of a constitution for the proposed College; and, secondly, to the nature and composition of the Committee created by that meeting, as professing to represent the Presbyterians of the Colony generally.

"Under the former of these heads we object particularly—

"1st. To the proposed establishment of a Theological Faculty in the Presbyterian College from its very commencement, as being not only unnecessary in the infancy of the institution, but utterly impracticable in the present divided state of the Presbyterian Church. For it would obviously be quite hopeless, under existing circumstances, to get
"the

The Rev. J. D. Lang, D.D.

"the different sections of the Church to create such a faculty in concert; and any such faculty as should emanate from any one section would, probably, for that reason alone, be opposed by the others.

"2nd. To the fixing of ten pounds as the lowest amount requisite to qualify a proprietor or shareholder of the College, as tending to exclude from its proprietary the very class—that of industrious persons of the working classes—which it is of the utmost importance to its best interests to conciliate and attract.

"3rd. To granting an additional vote for every fifty pounds subscribed for the College over and above the first fifty, as tending to creating a money power in the institution, of which the consequences to its best interests must be exceedingly disastrous.

"4th. To the proposed name of the College—St. Andrew's—as being not a general but a sectarian designation, and one which, in the estimation of Presbyterians generally, indicates exclusive connection with the Established Church of Scotland.

"Under the second of the heads above-mentioned, we object to the nature and position of the Committee created by the meeting of the 5th ultimo, for carrying out the scheme propounded in the resolutions passed at that meeting, inasmuch as it is not a fair representation of the different sections of the Presbyterian Church, which it ought unquestionably to have been. The Committee in question contains not fewer than four or five ministers of the Synod of Australia, without having even one to represent either the Synod of New South Wales or the United Presbyterians. We are decidedly of opinion that, in a properly constituted Committee for the establishment of a Presbyterian College, there should, in addition to a sufficient number of laymen, be one minister, and no more, to represent each section of the Presbyterian Church, and that that minister should be duly appointed by the body he represents.

"By order of the Committee,
 J. BLACK, Honorary Secretary.

"(Signed)

"Sydney, 12th May, 1858."

The only other meeting was held in Sydney, on the 4th June, 1858, of which the following is a Minute:—

"Sydney, 4th June, 1858.

"The Provisional Committee having this day met, the following letter from Thomas Barker, Esq., with its enclosure, was read:—

"Sydney, 1st June, 1858.

"THE HONORABLE JOHN ROBERTSON, ESQ.

"DEAR SIR,—I have the honor, in obedience to the request of the Committee of the Presbyterian College, to enclose a copy of the resolutions passed at their meeting yesterday.

"I beg also to enclose a printed copy of the prospectus approved of at the public meeting.—I have the honor to be, dear Sir, &c., &c.,

"(Signed) THOMAS BARKER, Chairman.

"St. Andrew's Church, 31 May, 1858.

"Which day the Presbyterian College Committee being met and constituted, inter alia, a letter from the Honorable John Robertson, Esq., transmitting a statement of objections to the scheme propounded at the public meeting for the establishment of a Presbyterian College, held on the 5th ultimo, having been read, the Committee declined a conference anent the objections embodied in this document, for the following reasons:—

"1st. That the primary object of the originators of this movement is the establishment of a Theological Chair in the College, rendered necessary in consequence of the peculiar constitution of the University, which makes no provision for religious teaching.

"2nd. That the prospectus has been approved by a public meeting, and a considerable amount of money has been already subscribed, in the expectation that the principles set forth therein will be carried out.

"It was agreed that an extract minute of the foregoing be transmitted to the Honorable J. Robertson, Esq., by Mr. Barker, as chairman of this meeting.

"Extracted from the minutes of the Presbyterian College Committee, by

"(Signed) WILLIAM LUMSDAINE,
 "One of the Secretaries."

15. Are you aware what further steps have been taken by the Committee appointed by the public meeting of the 5th April, towards the establishment of a Presbyterian College? I have merely heard from reports, both privately and through the public press, that they have been collecting money for carrying out their views, and that they had raised, by the last advertisement, nearly £7,000. But the Presbyterians of the Colony being now as nearly as possible about 35,000 in number, I find that the whole number of subscribers to the Presbyterian College, under the Committee appointed on the 5th April, amounts only to 92 or 93; and from looking at the list, I find that in several instances there is a whole list of children of the different families, some of them even at the breast, put down as subscribers to this amount. It is quite evident, therefore, that the subscription does not at all represent the Presbyterians of the Colony generally. It is quite evident that the scheme has got no hold of the Presbyterian population, for the College being intended chiefly to promote the interests of the middle and industrious classes, the small amount of comparatively small subscriptions from these classes sufficiently indicates their entire want of confidence in the movement.

16. Have any steps been taken by the Committee appointed at the subsequent meeting to which you have referred, in the way of raising subscriptions, or in any other way, towards the establishment establishment of a Presbyterian College? We were on the point of making an effort by appealing to the Presbyterians of the Colony generally, and had got from one friend a subscription to the extent of £500 to begin with, and other subscriptions of considerable amount; but we deemed it better to intermit all proceedings till we had submitted the whole case to the Legislature, as we conceived that we were suffering a great grievance, which the Legislature only could redress.

The Rev.
J. D. Lang,
D.D.

23 July, 1858.

17. Then the proceedings of the Committee which you are now referring to are at present in abeyance? They are; but we maintain that the allegation of the other Committee, that the money has been subscribed upon the basis of their prospectus, is altogether futile. It is accordant with the knowledge of almost all parties concerned that, with the exception of a mere handful, the Presbyterians who have subscribed the amounts alleged to be promised, have done so on the ground of assisting a Presbyterian College generally, taking it for granted it would be established on a proper footing, and in accordance with the law of the land. They do not inquire into the matter any further, and are in no way pledged to the prospectus.

18. Have you looked into the prospectus that has been issued by the Committee appointed at the public meeting of the 5th April? I have. The proposal to establish a Theological Faculty, in the first instance, according to that prospectus, is utterly impracticable, as we state in our list of objections, because it must necessarily be appointed by only one of the sections of the Presbyterian Church, and if appointed by any one under existing circumstances, that circumstance alone would withhold from it the confidence of the others. The thing is quite impracticable at present, and it is only as an institution for secular education that the College can be established in the first instance. I have every reason to believe that if it were established for that purpose, according to the Colleges Act, it would very soon lead to a better state of things, and render the establishment of a Theological Faculty quite practicable.

19. But if the establishment of a College is only for secular purposes, could not the education for secular purposes, that would be obtained there, be at present obtained either at the University, or at several of the public schools or seminaries? The only purpose for which the College can exist, in the first instance, is as a place of domicile for the moral superintendence of the youth attending the University, for by the Colleges Act all the students in the College must be students of the University. Now, all that the Act contemplates is, that these students should be under the moral superintendence of some person or persons in whom the Presbyterians generally have confidence. Systematic religious instruction—the phrase made use of in the Preamble of the Colleges Act—is a phrase that admits of two different significations. On the part of members of the Church of England it seems merely to signify having prayers regularly conducted in the institution, and the Scriptures read, for the benefit of the young men generally. I believe there would be no objection to that in any quarter among the Presbyterians. That amount of systematic religious instruction would be quite in accordance with the views of all; but we Presbyterians attach a different meaning to the phrase “systematic religious instruction.” It signifies the establishment of a Theological Faculty, in connection with the College, and part and parcel of it, as in the Scotch Universities. In all the Universities in Scotland there is, in addition to the provision for general education, a distinct Theological Faculty, for the training up of young men for the Ministry.

20. It appears to me, from what you have stated, that a College, established upon the principles which you have now enunciated, would be a mere boarding-house, under the superintendence of some principal, or person in whom the Presbyterian body had confidence? Quite so. That is precisely the idea attached to it by Mr. McIntyre, of Maitland, in a pamphlet he has published on the subject.

21. Are you aware of any Colleges, in any part of the world, established for that purpose upon these conditions or terms? That is the general principle on which Colleges generally were established.

22. I always understood that a College did mean, to a certain extent, that a Theological Faculty was established in most Colleges if not in all? It is not necessarily implied in the name at all that there should be a Theological Faculty. But, in advocating the establishment of the College as an institution for secular education exclusively, in the first instance, we do not do so absolutely. We look forward to the establishment of a Theological Faculty very speedily; but we only maintain that it is impracticable at the present moment, and in the first instance.

23. Looking at the differences of the different denominations? Quite so.

24. In the third paragraph of your Petition you state that “certain Presbyterian Ministers and laymen have, nevertheless, been endeavouring, for some time past, to defeat this benevolent intention of the Legislature, and to restrict to a chosen few what was thus beneficently intended for all”—will you be kind enough to explain to the Committee what you mean by that allegation? I infer that intention from their acts. If they had been disposed to carry out the views of the Legislature in extending the benefits of the Affiliated Colleges Act to all of their denomination, they would have given intimation to all the ministers and people when they set to work for the establishment of a College. But in carefully excluding myself, as the most prominent minister of the section I belong to, and all my brethren—although the congregation I minister to is, probably, the largest in the Colony of the Presbyterian denomination—in carefully excluding us, it was quite evident they intended to restrict to a few what the Legislature had meant for all.

25. You think that previously to this public meeting, or any public meeting, having been held for the purpose of establishing a Presbyterian College, representatives of all the sections of Presbyterians should have been invited to meet for the purpose of framing resolutions, that could have been agreed on by all to be submitted to a public meeting? Decidedly; for at such a meeting they would soon have discovered how far they could go together, and where

The Rev.
J. D. Lang,
D.D.

23 July, 1858.

where they disagreed — where, in short, it was impracticable to go any further in concert.

26. Are you aware that circulars were sent to different ministers and laymen, inviting their attendance at several of these meetings? I have heard that there were; but none of them ever reached me, or any of my brethren in connection with me.

27. Then is it your opinion that, unless united action can be induced, on the part of Presbyterians generally of the different denominations, a College, even if built and established, would be practically useless, because all Presbyterians would not send their children to be educated there, unless it were established on a broad basis? My opinion is, that a College established on the plan proposed will not only be useless, but worse than useless; because it will tend to embitter the feelings of alienation that already exist, and perpetuate distinctions which it is the interest of all to abolish.

28. By Mr. Richardson: You say you think it not necessary, nor even desirable, that the Principal of the College should be a minister of religion? Not at all necessary.

29. And in the event of his not being so, he could receive support from the Government? Quite so; and could also give such religious instruction as is requisite, in accordance with the Act. Many teachers of schools communicate religious instruction to the pupils under their charge, without being ministers of religion. I believe all the Presbyterians in the Colony would be anxious, if a layman in whom they had confidence, were at the head of the institution for general education, that he should do his best to conduct morning and evening prayers, and read the scriptures among the youth.

30. In the event of his being an ordained minister, is it your opinion that those who refuse to accept State aid would decline joining? Decidedly; if he was a Professor of Divinity, they must decline; and it was principally for that reason that I suggested the amendment which Mr. Martin adopted, and the Legislature sanctioned. It was to leave the College open to Presbyterians holding the voluntary principle; because, if the Theological Faculty were entirely supported by voluntary subscriptions, there could be no objection on their part to the Principal, as head of the College, to maintain discipline among the young men, receiving a Government salary; for such Presbyterians do not object to the support of education by the State; it is only to the support of religion.

31. How would you get over the difficulty which, as you say, has evidently crept into the grant by some mistake, the grant being only given to the Church of Scotland—do you not think that is a difficulty at present? No doubt, on the face of the grant there is a difficulty; but it is very evident the grant was passed either in ignorance or in the face of the previous Act of the Legislature that restricted the Governor. It was ultra vires on his part to assent to any such deed in the face of the Act of the Legislature.

32. Have you any reason to believe that any of those who have subscribed for this Affiliated College are ignorant of this clause of the deed of grant? I believe very few of them know any thing of it.

33. Have you reason to believe that those ministers of religion who have taken active steps in the matter are aware of it? I do not think they are. I was not myself aware of the terms of the deed till within the last few days; and I believe that is the case with most other ministers also. It is evident, however, that the Government cannot blow hot and cold at the same time. If the Governor did right in assenting to the Act of Council on the 2nd of December, 1854, he was decidedly wrong in assenting to such a deed as this on the 23rd of January, 1855; and it is for the Government to redress their own wrong, not for private individuals to put them right.

34. You stated that there were not far short of 35,000 Presbyterians in the Colony? Yes; I made the calculation from the Census of 1856.

35. And the number of subscribers to the proposed College amounts to about 90? To 92 or 93, including infants at the breast.

36. Why were the children included, do you suppose? To increase the number, to make the better show—to deceive the public, in fact.

37. Is it your opinion that 92 or 93 subscribers bear any proportion to the number of Presbyterians in the Colony? They bear no proportion either to the number of Presbyterians in the Colony or to the number of Presbyterians who would take an interest in this subject, if it were properly placed before them.

38. Is it your opinion that an Affiliated College established on the principles of the parties who held the first meeting would work well—do you think it would do good or harm? I think it would do a great deal of harm, in embittering the feelings of alienation that already exist; and I am persuaded it would sink into a condition of insignificance. It would, at all events, excite the hostility of the other portions of the Presbyterian communion.

39. By Mr. Aldcorn: Are you aware that the ministers and members of the Established Church have agreed to act, and have acted, with the ministers and members of the Free Church, regarding the Presbyterian College to be affiliated to the University? I am aware that there are members of the Free Church acting along with them.

40. That would seem to destroy the very condition on which they get the money—the very fact of their taking in other parties, other sections of the Presbyterian Church, to act with them would destroy the validity of the grant? It shows evidently, I submit, that both parties were equally ignorant of the terms of the grant.

41. Do you think it would be possible to establish a Theological Faculty, if this condition of the Principal being Professor of Divinity should be taken out of the way? It would be much easier to establish a Theological Faculty, either if the Principal were a layman, or if he were restricted to the exercise of discipline over the students generally, that is, if he were not a Professor of Divinity; but if he is to be a Professor of Divinity, then the objection of the voluntaries operates: they would say, this is religion supported by the State.

42. You are aware that the Principals in most of the Colleges in Scotland are ministers of the Established Church, and in almost every case Primaries Professors of Divinity, though they they do not in fact teach divinity? Yes; but Sir David Brewster, Principal of one of the Colleges in St. Andrew's, is a layman.

42. You are not aware of any Act forbidding a layman to become Principal of a College? There certainly is not one, otherwise Sir David Brewster never could have been elected to that office.

The Rev.
J. D. Lang,
D.D.
23 July, 1858.

43. Would you object to the tutorial system of education in the College? Decidedly not. And it would be the duty of the Principal to superintend that tutorial system—to have tutors under him, acting in accordance with him, over the young men receiving their education in the University, but residing in the College.

44. You would raise the education given in the College above that given in common schools, or even in a Grammar School, probably—that is, as relates to the sciences and the higher branches of mathematics, in the same way as at Oxford and Cambridge—you know that there the very highest branches almost are taught by tutors—would you think that desirable? Decidedly. But the Colleges Act provides that all students in any College shall be matriculated in the University. They must have the previous training that admission to the University prescribes. The College should serve two purposes,—on the one hand, the moral superintendence of the young men attending there for general education, with a tutorial system co-operating with the University; and, on the other hand, a Theological Faculty, totally distinct from the other portion of the machinery, for the training up of candidates for the ministry.

45. Then you do not object, in a Presbyterian College, to religious knowledge being communicated—such religious knowledge as can be imparted by parents or teachers below the rank of a Professor, whom in Scotland we understand to teach dogmatic theology, and theology in all its parts—you would not object to religious instruction being given to the young men attending the College, exclusive of a Theological Faculty? Decidedly not. In fact, we should consider that a sine quâ non in giving our vote for the appointment of any head of the Institution. We would consider it absolutely necessary that he should not only have the confidence of the Presbyterians generally, but that he should be both competent and willing to conduct the house on the same principle as a father of a family, pater familias.

46. Then you would consider a College more a place for the secular education of the young men attending it, their moral and religious wants being also attended to? Quite so; but as the University does not provide professional education for candidates for the ministry, the College must eventually supply education in those branches which the University does not contemplate. For example: Mr. Baillie has left an endowment for a Professorship of the Oriental and Polynesian languages—the Hebrew and the language of the South Seas. Now, this Professorship would come under the Divinity Faculty in the College; and the University, in all likelihood, would not have Professors for any such branches. Such a Professor would be required for the training up of missionaries to go forth to the South Seas, and of students acquainting themselves with the original Scriptures, as candidates for the ministry.

47. Then your objection to a Theological Faculty is not to a Theological Faculty absolutely, but to the time, in the present disunited state of the Presbyterian Church? Entirely to the time.

Present:—

MR. ALDCORN,
MR. GORDON,

MR. MARKS,
MR. RICHARDSON.

SAMUEL DEANE GORDON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Honorable Francis Lewis Shaw Merewether, Esq., M.L.C., examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Were you a Member of the late Legislative Council, in the year 1854, when the Affiliated Colleges Act passed? I was.

2. Were you also a Member of the Government at that time? I was.

3. And Vice-Provost of the University? Yes.

4. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee what Member of the Executive Government had charge of the Bill in its passage through the House? I had charge of the Bill.

The Hon.
F. L. S.
Merewether,
Esq., M.L.C.

5. Were there any important changes made in the Bill from its first introduction until it was passed? Yes, there were several important changes and additions made.

6. I would wish to draw your attention to a portion of the evidence given by the Rev. Dr. Lang before this Committee. (The Clerk of Committee read an extract from Dr. Lang's evidence, in answer to Q. 2.) Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee whether, to the best of your recollection, this conversation, in substance, did take place? I cannot state, from recollection, the substance of the conversation which took place upon the occasion referred to. I remember that there was a casual conversation upon the subject, in Sir Charles Nicholson's house, in which I felt interested, but I do not carry in my recollection what passed.

7. After this conversation considerable alterations did take place in the Bill in passing through the House? Yes—that is, the conversation took place before the Bill as proposed in Committee was finally settled.

8. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee, so far as you can judge, what was the intention of the Legislature in regard to the Act—whether it was intended to embrace the whole of the sects in the Colony, or to be restricted to certain sects? The act was modified in order that it might be open to any other sect sufficiently important to be able to raise the necessary necessary funds, and to obtain the sanction of the Legislature, to found a College in connection with the University.

The Hon.

Esq., M.L.C.

9. Was it not principally to enable the Presbyterian Church, in its divided state, to unite as one denomination, and to claim this support from the Government, that the alterations in the Bill were made? No. The Government did not propose the alterations referred to with that object. They were proposed upon a more comprehensive principle, and without reference to any particular denomination.

10. In the first draft of the Bill presented to the House only four denominations were mentioned? Yes.

11. Then, in fact, the Affiliated Colleges Act, as passed, was intended to apply to all denominations who were in a position to claim, at any future time, the assistance from Government for the purpose of establishing an Affiliated College? That was the object; and it appears to me to be clearly expressed in the wording of the Act.

12. Are you aware of a Deed of Grant having been issued by the late Sir Charles Fitz Roy to the Senate of the University of certain lands at Grose Farm, for the purpose of erecting Affiliated Colleges upon? I am.

13. Were you a Member of the Executive Government at the time that Deed of Grant was issued? I was.

14. Were you aware at the time it issued of the terms of that Deed of Grant, with regard to the different denominations it embraced? Yes; I saw the draft of the deed before it was issued.

15. The Deed of Grant, of course, was issued subsequently to the passing of the Affiliated Colleges Act? It was issued subsequently, but the promise of the grant was made a considerable time before the passing of the Act. The correspondence relating to that subject will be found among the printed documents of the Legislature of the day.

16. Are you aware that there are certain denominations mentioned in that Deed of Grant as being those to whom only it was intended to apply? Yes: the University received land, under that grant, for four Colleges only,—the Church of England, the Church of Scotland, the Church of Rome, and the Wesleyan Methodists. The deed imposes upon the University the obligation of granting certain quantities of land to Colleges in connection with those churches, if founded within five years from the date of the grant.

17. By "the Church of Scotland" are you aware whether the Presbyterian body generally was intended, or a section of the Presbyterian Church in connection with the Church of Scotland as established by law? The Presbyterians in connection with the Church of Scotland were those specifically referred to in the Deed of Grant; but it was the desire and hope of those interested in the measure that all the Presbyterians would join in the formation of a College. Still there were only four sub-grants to be made by the University out of the land granted to it, and the deed distinctly specified as the recipients of them the four denominations originally mentioned in the Bill.

18. How do you reconcile the terms of this grant, which mentions that four distinct denominations shall receive land for the purpose of building Affiliated Colleges, with the Act as passed by the Legislature, which, as you have told us, was intended to embrace all denominations that were in a position to claim such assistance from the Government under the terms of the Act? The Act did not apply to land at all, except in so far as it required that the University should have conveyed to it in trust the land upon which any College endowed under the Act might be built, whether such land were obtained by grant from the Government or otherwise. The provisions to which I refer will be found in the second clause of the Act.

19. I think that specifies that the prescribed amount of subscription "shall be devoted exclusively to the erection of College buildings on land granted for that purpose by Her Majesty to the University in trust for such College?" Yes, "if any shall be so granted; and if not, then upon land otherwise conveyed to and accepted by the University in such trust."

20. Then this clause does refer to land to be granted by the Government for the purpose of erecting Colleges upon? It refers to it incidentally.

21. Do you not rather think that the other part in the brackets is rather incidental? No; the clause has no reference to the acquisition of land. Its object is to provide that the land on which any College endowed under the Act may be built shall become the property of the University.

22. Does it not strike you that this second clause is framed entirely with regard to the provision by Government, both of money and lands, for the purpose of erecting these Colleges? Certainly not. The Act provides only for the money endowments, with which alone the Legislature of that date was competent to deal.

23. Then what can be the meaning of this language:—"No such College, although incorporated, shall be entitled to such endowments, unless and until the sum of £10,000 at the least shall have been subscribed by its founders, and of that sum £4,000 shall have been paid and invested in such manner as shall have been approved of by the Governor, and the residue shall have been to his satisfaction secured to be paid within three years next following; nor unless the whole of the said £10,000 shall be devoted exclusively to the erection of College buildings on land granted for that purpose by Her Majesty to the University in trust for such College?" "If any"—

24. Then in brackets it is stated—"if any shall be so granted, and if not, then upon land otherwise conveyed to and accepted by the University in such trust."? The object of this was merely to secure to the public represented by the University the absolute property in the land upon which the buildings to be erected, partly at the public expense, were to be placed—that no public money should be expended in the buildings until the land had been vested in the University.

25. By Mr. Aldcorn: That the University is to be the trustee for all land, whether it be private or public—the clause within brackets refers merely to that? Yes.
26. By the Chairman: You say there is no other land at present granted by the Government to the Senate for the purpose of building Affiliated Colleges upon except for the four denominations specified in this Deed of Grant? Yes.
27. Then, if the Congregational body were to subscribe the required sum, and were to apply to the Government for a grant of land, do I understand that there is no land to be given them for that purpose—is all the land now given away? The Government might make a further grant, but the University has no land at present available for such a purpose.
28. Then, in reality, the whole of this land at Grose Farm is granted to the Senate of the University, for the Church of England, the Church of Scotland, the Roman Catholic body, and the Wesleyans? Yes; that portion of the Grose Farm Estate which has been conveyed to the University for the sites of Colleges is appropriated to those bodies, if claimed within the prescribed time.
29. Is any portion of Grose Farm at present not dedicated by the Government to the University? Yes; there is a portion adjoining the University land which, when the University grant was made, the Government set apart as a recreation reserve, to be connected with the University land, and on the understanding that the Senate of the University should be represented on the trust, so that the grounds might be laid out in uniformity with those of the University, and also that the Senate might have a voice in the management of the reserve, so as to be able to check irregularities which might be prejudicial to the University discipline. There is also a portion of land on the other side of the Newtown Road which was not granted to the University.
30. There is no other land for the purpose of being granted to any other denomination who may apply for a College? None held by the University.
31. By Mr. Aldcorn: Has that recreation ground been conveyed to trustees for the purpose you have stated? No. I understand, from an answer recently given by the Solicitor General to a question put in the Legislative Council, that the intended public recreation grounds have not as yet been vested in trustees, because the Government is not legally empowered to issue the grants without a further Act of the Legislature.
32. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think when the Act was passed it was meant that all the Presbyterians of the Colony should be enabled to participate in the advantages to be derived from the Bill? I can scarcely say it was meant, but it certainly was the desire and wish of the individual members of the Government, and also of those who took an interest in the measure, that the Presbyterians should all combine in the foundation of a College.
33. When you said four different bodies were included, you mentioned the Church of Scotland—you are aware that the Church of Scotland in this Colony is divided into several sections, some of which receive and some refuse to take State aid? Yes.
34. By the term "Church of Scotland" were all Presbyterians meant, or only the Church of Scotland receiving State aid? I conceive, as I said before, that the body of Presbyterians in connection with the Established Church of Scotland is that to which the grant expressly applies. But I repeat, that it was desired, and indeed expected, that the other Presbyterians would join with them in the formation of a College—that there should be one College for the Presbyterians generally.
35. Did it not occur to you, or to any other Member of the House at the time, that there would be many difficulties in the way of those who refuse to receive State aid in joining with the other party, as those holding voluntary principles could hardly receive State aid for the purpose of paying the Principal of the College? These objections were not, I think, stated at the time—they certainly did not occur to me. I should not myself have considered that a grant for the purpose of imparting religious instruction in a College would come within the scruples of those to whom you refer.
36. Does it appear to you now that there are difficulties in the way, seeing that a very large portion of the Presbyterians throughout the Colony cannot participate in the aid—would you not think it a hardship that one section only should have the benefit of this College? I do not see how such a difficulty could be obviated, except by that section forming a College of their own without Government aid.
37. You say, when any section of the Presbyterian Church became of sufficient importance—do I understand you that if the Free Church of Scotland, or any other section of Presbyterians, were to raise £10,000, they would be able to derive the benefit of the Act? Yes.
38. If the Free Church, the Church connected with Dr. Lang—the Synod of New South Wales—or the United Presbyterian Church,—if these three bodies severally were to raise £10,000, do I understand your opinion to be that they would receive the aid? Yes, upon their complying with the terms of the Act, and becoming incorporated by the Legislature.
39. By Mr. Aldcorn: You interpret the Act that it admits all sects, and you say it was the desire and wish of the Government that all should participate in it—how do you reconcile that with the fact of their giving away the whole of the Government land to four particular sects? The Government may, on application, grant land to any other besides the four originally contemplated Colleges, should such be established; but, as I have before said, the Act provides for the money endowments only. The land is a separate and distinct matter; and at present the University has only received land for four Colleges, in addition to the quantity dedicated to its own purposes.
40. That is the whole of the land, with the exception of the recreation ground? Yes.
41. Did the Government advert to the Act at the time of the promulgation of the grant, at the time they handed over the grant to the University—the one is posterior to the other, you will observe? The grant of land was made independently of, and previously to, the addition of the money endowments granted by the Legislature; for, although the Deed of Grant was not actually issued until after the passing of the Act, it had been promised long before.

42. Yes, but still the grant was not issued till a month after the date of the Act? It was issued in fulfilment of a promise—a previous arrangement.
43. By the Chairman: Then, in fact, when the Deed of Grant was issued, the Government were aware of the terms of the Act, but in fulfilment of a promise to these four denominations they issued the grant? The Government issued the deed in fulfilment of a promise made previously to the passing of the Act, and independently of the Act, which related to money endowments only. The original Bill provided money endowments for four Colleges only. By the alteration made this restriction was removed, and it was left open to others than those four to seek an Act of Incorporation, and the attendant money grants. It is also open to them to apply for a grant of public land; but no addition was made to the University grant for the purpose of providing sites for such additional Colleges.
44. By Mr. Marks: You say it was the original intention of the Government that that portion of Grose Farm granted to the Senate of the University should be confined to the four different denominations mentioned in the grant? The Senate of the University received from the Government sufficient land for the purposes of the University, and for sites for Colleges for those four denominations. These were taken from the land at Grose Farm, the whole of which was then unappropriated.
45. Is it your opinion that that section of Presbyterians designated in the Deed of Grant as the Church of Scotland has alone a legal right to hold the land already granted, or held in trust by the Senate? Yes; I think no other body could establish a legal claim.
46. You also think that any other branch of the Presbyterian Church, by purchasing land, and obtaining the necessary amount, could call upon the Government to aid in establishing a College? Yes.
47. By Mr. Aldcorn: You say a promise was made to the Senate of the University: how was this Senate constituted at that time—by whose authority was the Senate constituted? It was constituted under the authority of the Act of Incorporation.
48. Were they specially named in the Act of Incorporation? No; it was originally intended that they should have been named in the Act of Incorporation, but some difficulty as to the selection arose in the Legislative Council, and power was given to the Governor, with the advice of the Executive Council, to appoint the first Senate.

The Reverend John Dougal called in and examined:—

The Rev.
John Dougal.

6 Aug., 1858

1. By the Chairman: You are one of the ministers in connection with the Synod of Australia? Yes.
2. In connection with the Church of Scotland? Yes.
3. Have you been co-operating or taking any part with your brethren in the way of establishing a Presbyterian College? To a certain extent.
4. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee what steps you have taken with respect to the formation of a College under the Affiliated Colleges Act? The steps our body has taken, or I in particular?
5. What you yourself have taken? I was appointed a member of the Committee of the Synod in October, 1856, when the matter was first initiated by our body. I remained a member of that Committee until the last meeting of the Synod, when I was re-appointed, and remained so until about a fortnight from the public meeting that was held. At the meeting of the Committees from the two Synods which took place to arrange the preliminaries for this public meeting, certain steps were taken which compelled me to retire from connection with those Committees.
6. I presume you refer to the public meeting held in Castlereagh-street, at which the Governor General presided? Yes.
7. Have you any objection to inform the Committee why you thought it desirable or prudent to withdraw from taking part in the formation of this College Committee? It seemed to my judgment that the steps taken there were inconsistent with the principle of church government belonging to our church, and even with the principles upon which the proceedings of any society or association are conducted, and they were also such as would not enable me to remain longer a member of the Committee, as I could not conceive that I was acting faithfully as a member of our Synod, or carrying out the purposes for which I was sent there as a member of the Committee. It would occupy some time to go into the details, but that is a general statement.
8. If you have no objection to enter into the particulars, the Committee will be glad to hear them, as it is their object to gain as much information upon the subject as they possibly can? I have no objection; and, in order that I may be fully understood, I must give a short abstract of the history of the circumstances. At a meeting of the Synod of Australia in October, 1856, it was determined, for the first time, to put ourselves in a position to accept the Government aid in reference to this matter. The intention then was to carry it out on behalf of our Synod; but it was afterwards thought desirable to make the thing as wide and liberal as possible, and to throw no obstacle that we could conscientiously avoid in the way of other parties co-operating with us. A committee was appointed at that meeting, of which I was one. We invited the co-operation of other parties. I believe there was a general advertisement put into the newspapers by the Secretary, inviting all parties willing to co-operate to attend a meeting in St. Andrew's Scots Church. After several meetings, it appeared that the only two parties likely to go on with matter were the Free Church and our own body, and, in order to have things done methodically, a conference was appointed at Dr. Mackay's house, at which several ministers of the Free Church and of our own body attended. The members of the Free Church conceived it proper that the matter should go on with authority, that is, that a pro re nata meeting should be called, in order that we might go forward in the work, not as individuals in an unauthorised way, but under the sanction sanction of the Synod. That pro re nata meeting was held, at which the Free Church determined to co-operate with us in carrying on the College. We found ourselves then in a peculiar position, as we were appointed a Committee of the Synod of Australia, with power to add to our number, and had no authority to merge ourselves into any other Committee. The Free Church representatives also being unwilling to lose their representative character by becoming part of the Synod of Australia's Committee, we were unable, in a constitutional manner, to do more than deliberate, draw up a constitution, and to make other arrangements, to be submitted for approval to our respective Synods. The thing went on in this way, and there were some proposals to have a public meeting even before the Synod could have been convened, which would have been utterly improper. However, it was finally determined that the public meeting should be delayed till both Synods should have met; that the matter should be referred back to our respective Synods; that each Committee should report what steps had been taken; that we should meet again previous to the public meeting with power from our Synods to represent them as delegates, or plenipotentiaries. At the meeting of their Synod, the Free Church party favorable to this movement did not carry the matter—the Free Church repudiating the thing by a majority. We carried the matter with our Synod, who approved generally of the prospectus that had been drawn up by the Committee, with some little differences. They claimed the right simply as a Synod to express their opinion upon it, and to give a deliverance. On these terms—and that being in effect an approval of the thing—we came forward as a Committee of the Synod of Australia; the Free Church brethren being expected to come forward in the same way—at least I understood it as such. They, however, would not receive us as a Committee from the Synod of Australia—that is, they would give no deliverance upon the terms proposed; they would not say that they accepted them, adopted them, approved of them; thereby giving no proper recognition of our Synod, which intrusted us with these terms as the only basis on which we could co-operate. The terms were simply laid aside. The view I took of the matter was this, that having been appointed as a member of the Committee of the Synod, I had no right to be there, except as a member of that Committee. I had no right, as an individual, apart from the authority derived from the Synod, to be longer with them. It appeared to me that the position into which we were brought was a false position, considering the contemplated College as an institution to provide teachers for our pulpits, and likely to decide what would be the Presbyterian standard hereafter in the Colony, it seemed to me a most improper proceeding for ministers to lose their authorised position, and sink into mere individuals, leaving the more important interests of the church to irresponsible parties, while the Synod, the real authorities, should, unless by the possible concession of the others, be without control in a matter so vital as the standards of their theology. In effect, that was the particular ground of my retiring from the Committee.

The Rev.
John Dougal.
6 Aug., 1858.

9. If a College were established under the Affiliated Colleges Act, do you consider it desirable that a Theological Faculty should be instituted in the College for training proposed candidates for the ministry, in the present divided state of Presbyterianism? I feel some difficulty in answering that question. I am known to hold peculiar views about this movement, and though I submitted my judgment to the Synod as far as my public acts were concerned, I had my private opinion: I did not think from the first there was a call for a Divinity Hall, on any pretext, considering the very limited state of our churches, to justify our developing Presbyterian benevolence for the training of students to fill our pulpits. The calculation I made was that we should not require more than two or three ministers per annum, according to the statistics of the churches at home, which are much larger, and that we would be scarcely able to maintain an efficient staff of Professors. That was a private opinion of my own then; but as regards the Government grant I have always held that it was clearly intended for a Theological Institution, and that no departure from this would meet the object of the Bill.

10. Supposing there were united action among the different sections of the Presbyterian Church at present to establish a College, would you think it at all desirable that a Theological Faculty should be established in that College, looking to the divisions that now exist? Setting aside private opinions, and regarding simply the institution of a College in terms of the Act, I think that, whatever difficulties may exist, no College would meet the provisions of the Bill that has not a theological aspect.

11. It is in regard to this Affiliated College the Committee are now inquiring? Unless it were a Theological Institution, I do not think the object of the Bill would be carried out.

12. You think it would be almost impossible to form such an institution in the present distracted state of the Presbyterian body? What led me to differ from my own body was, that they were not acting constitutionally according to what I conceived to be the laws of the Church. Any one who knows any thing of Presbyterianism must be aware that the principles of Presbyterians are not enunciated by a particular individual, but by ecclesiastical authority of the Synod. The view I had of co-operation, if other difficulties could be overcome, was, that all the sections of the Presbyterian Church willing to co-operate in this matter should, in the proper way, appoint delegates; that Dr. Lang's Synod, the United Presbyterian Church, the Free Church, and ourselves, should each appoint Committees, and that these should meet to draw up some system of theological training that all could agree upon, that they should throw over minor differences, and teach the broad principles of Presbyterianism. These would represent the four bodies; and, I think, this would be the only way to secure unity and harmony in the matter.

13. To carry out the views you have just now given expression to, would you think it absolutely necessary that the Principal of the College should be an ordained minister of any of these Presbyterian bodies? There is a peculiarity there: I have not paid sufficient attention to that to say what is absolutely necessary. Many things that might appear at first sight to be an absolute rule at home have arisen from practice. I do not know that it is the invariable law that the Principal of a University at home should be a minister; it may have arisen from custom. We know the time was when Professors of Logic, of Moral Philosophy, and of

The Rev. John Dougal. other branches were all taken from the church, and when there were particular ministers of the church who held professorships. This might have gone on for so long as to appear a law, while only practice. I am not aware, although generally ministers were placed as Principals at home, that it is essential. But, viewing the thing as an ecclesiastical institution here, and with the probability of having but a small number of pupils, we must make our Principal, paid by the Government, as useful as possible; and it is likely that he would have to teach theology—to be a compendium of two or three chairs—and it is not probable that we should obtain, nor would it be scarcely correct to have, a layman in that important position: it must be one under the government of the church, and properly qualified to teach theology.

6 Aug. 1858.

14. Are you aware of any Colleges in Scotland where the Principal is not an ordained minister of some one or other of the Presbyterian denominations? I cannot speak positively to their being all clergymen. Dr. Lang mentioned Sir David Brewster. I think Mr. Tulloch is at present in St. Andrew's. Rev. Dr. Barclay, late minister of Currie, is the present Principal of Glasgow College. Dr. Lee is in Edinburgh College; and I think the Principals in the two Colleges at Aberdeen are clergymen.

15. Do I understand you to be of opinion that if a College be established at all, there should be a Theological Faculty established in it under the provisions of this Affiliated Colleges Act? I think that the Act appears to regard the institution as generally a theological one.

16. Do you not think, if a College for secular education were established for the present, that would answer all the purposes that are necessary for some years to come, until perhaps a union of the Presbyterian bodies could be effected? I have a private opinion that had the money been taken to institute something strictly literary, it would have been much better. I think, moreover, that the mass of laymen throughout the country who have contributed to this fund did not anticipate the ecclesiastical aspect of it; they considered that they were to have something truly national—a Scottish College. The contemplated Affiliated Colleges, however, have nothing Scottish—are merely copies of certain semi-monastic peculiarities of the English Universities. They are merely boarding-houses, not like the Scottish Colleges, where sons of parents possessing little wealth can, for three to six guineas, attend certain classes, where, for a trifling sum, facilities are afforded for obtaining a first-class liberal education. Something of that sort would have been highly advantageous, whereas the present University is so constituted that none but a wealthy man could afford to send his son to it. In Scotland, any peasant's son can come up to a College for half the year, and teach during the other half. But the Act does not contemplate such a state of things as this. A College founded upon such a principle would enter into competition with the University; instead of being an Affiliated College, doing what was proper and filial, it would take pupils away from it.

17. By Mr. Richardson: You say you think all the Principals in Scotland at present are ordained ministers? I think so; I will not speak positively.

18. You are not aware whether Sir David Brewster is? I am not aware whether he is at present a Principal; I do not think so, for he belongs to the Free Church now.

19. You say it is not necessary that a Principal should be an ordained minister—you think it has arisen from custom? I do not say that it has; I think it may be so; I could not speak positively to the fact. I know the time was when a great many chairs were filled by ministers of the Church of Scotland.

20. Do you think the present Principals in Colleges in Scotland teach theology? Not necessarily.

21. Is not their occupation chiefly the management of the secular part of affairs? They have the general management over the whole institution.

22. Would not that lead you to suppose that any one, even if not ordained, might be qualified to be Principal of a College? I perfectly believe it. I think it is only the influence of old customs that retains that.

23. You have stated that, before the second committee meeting, notices were sent to parties in connection with the different sections of the Presbyterian Church—were they sent to all? They were not only sent to parties in connection with the Presbyterian Churches, but what I thought at the time was ridiculous, to the Independents, and I think one to a gentleman who was a Unitarian.

24. Were notices sent to ministers of the Free Church? I think so.

25. Was one sent to the minister in connection with the United Presbyterian Church? I have been told he was invited to co-operate.

26. Was a notice sent to Dr. Lang? I believe not.

27. Do you know why it was not? I could not say. I did not make myself intimately acquainted with each minute proceeding, and, being thought rather disaffected, I might not be in the way to be informed of each particular. I was supposed to be disaffected from considering our desire for a theological institution premature, seeing that at home the United Presbyterian Church, of 700 charges, do not aspire to the distinction of an imposing structure such as here contemplated, but had their students, till a few years since, convened in Dr. Brown's church, five of the most eminent ministers of the body being freed from their charges for two months while they instructed the students. I thought, while so large a body as that were doing without a formal Divinity Hall or grand institution, in a young Colony like this we might manage the training of ministers with less expensive machinery than that contemplated. I was, therefore, thought by our body as not warmly affected towards building a University, and through that I was not very intimate with all their proceedings; therefore, I could not say what letters were written and what were not.

28. Is it your general impression that members connected with your church are the only parties who have a legal claim to the land granted? I do not think they have that impression just now. Do you mean the laity or the clergy?

29. Either the laity or ministers? I think the laity wished to see it as liberal as possible. I do not think the laity wished to arrogate anything to the Church of Scotland.

30. You are aware that subscriptions were obtained to the amount of £7,000? Yes.
31. Do you think many in the Free Church, and in the other branches of the Presbyterian body, are cognizant of the fact that the Church of Scotland are the only parties who can claim the land? I think they do not. I drew the attention of one or two to something I saw in the Bill which struck me that the whole thing was made over to the Church of Scotland, or to the Synod here in connection with the Church of Scotland. I did not think they could understand that, and I thought it might have an influence upon the contributions if they found out afterwards that money contributed with the understanding that the institution should be free and unfettered might, by some change, be devoted to the exclusive purpose of the Church of Scotland.
32. Is it your opinion that the whole thing should be formed upon such a basis as that all Presbyterians could unite in it? I think so. I should like to see general harmony.
33. By Mr. Aldcorn: You state that it is your impression that it was altogether for a Theological Faculty that the College was to be instituted—that it did not contemplate secular education, because that could be obtained in the University? I have stated that the intention was, that it should have a theological aspect. The view I take of it is, that the Government, seeing that they had established a broad platform on which all sects might meet in the matter of simple literature, made arrangements to provide for religious claims where there could not be this agreement. I think it was intended to have a Theological Faculty, with, undoubtedly, a tutorial system in addition, for the superintendence of the young gentlemen in preparing their tasks for the College.
34. Would not that preclude all others but young men intended for the ministry from attending this College? No, I do not conceive that. The Act does not mention that it is simply an institution for candidates for the ministry; it merely mentions that there everything would have a religious aspect.
35. Does the Act say so? It seems to me to provide for handing over these young men to certain recognized parties to take care of them spiritually.
36. Do you not rather think it is to provide these young men with a home, in the first place, to be under the care of persons who would attend merely to their religious instruction, much in the same way as their parents would have done in the family? It mentions in the Act systematical religious instruction.
37. You state that you consider the Ministers in Synod, (supposing the grant to have been to all Presbyterians in the Colony,) were the parties to which the Government were to look for any authority, or as trustees to whom this money should be given—do you think it is merely the clergy who are meant in the Act? The way I look at the matter is this:—I take it for granted that it is a theological institution, and that it has to do with Presbyterians. It was the intention of the two Synods, in going on with the matter, to have a Hall of Divinity—a Theological Faculty there as a branch to provide for the future ministers of our pulpits. The view I take of it is, that anything so important should not, among Presbyterians, be decided by individuals as individuals, but by the churches as churches, where both elements are represented in Synod; and that for ministers to allow a system of training over which they had no control, would be for them to be unfaithful to their ordination vows, to watch over the spiritual interests of their people. If it be a literary institution simply, let ministers have no control over it; if partly literary and partly theological, let the church have a definite hold upon that part which affects its vital interests, and let the other part be left to other persons; but if it be entirely theological, let the church have that hold upon it which it is bound by its constitution to have.
38. Your reason, then, for leaving the Committee, was simply that you did not think they were going on in a constitutional way, or with proper authority? Certainly; that they were not going on with proper authority; that the only right I had to join in their deliberations was as a member of the Committee of the Synod; and as our terms were not accepted, I withdrew.
39. Were you aware of the terms of the grant at the time you acted upon the Committee? No, I was not; it was only within the last fortnight or three weeks that, looking in the University Almanac, I saw it more fully.
40. Had you known that would you have considered yourself warranted in acting with any other body of Presbyterians? I believe one reason why I was set down as hostile was, that on one or two occasions I drew attention to lurking difficulties that caused hinderance. I proposed the question, "Do you know you are members of the Synod of Australia's Committee?" As we had simply power to add to our number, I considered that I was bound in honor to tell those co-operating with us what their position was; so here I should certainly have considered myself under obligation.
41. Do you think, in the present divided state of parties, that even if a College could be established by one section of the Presbyterian Church, that would be likely to heal the divisions, or to promote union among the different parties? I think if a College were established in connection with one section, if that section maintained its title by apparently gaining a point over other parties, it might be a source of heart-burning rather than otherwise; but I think if all bodies could in some way bury their grievances, and unite upon an equal and honorable basis, it would be a material advantage.
42. By Mr. Marks: You are minister of a body of religionists known as the Church of Scotland? I have two positions; I am an ordained minister of the Church of Scotland, and a minister of the Synod of Australia, connected with the Church of Scotland.
43. Does that designation "The Church of Scotland," include all Presbyterians? I do not think so.
44. Are there any other bodies of Presbyterians quite distinct from the body to which you belong? There are three other bodies.
45. Has the Church of Scotland, in your opinion, taken constitutional steps to establish an

Affiliated

The Rev.
John Dougal.
6 Aug., 1858.

- The Rev. John Dougal. Affiliated College? I do not think any steps have been taken according to what I consider constitutional practice. That is the ground of my difference.
- 6 Aug., 1858. 46. You say steps were taken to secure the co-operation of other bodies of Presbyterians in the Colony? I do not know whether they have been carried out fully, but I know the co-operation of several other bodies has been invited.
47. Have you any reason to believe that the co-operation of all the other bodies of Presbyterians was not invited? As I have stated, my opinion is that Dr. Lang, personally, was not invited, but I am not aware—there was some little difficulty arose as to that—but I am not aware whether the co-operation of the Synod of New South Wales was invited.
48. Dr. Lang is connected with the body of Presbyterians known as the Synod of New South Wales? Yes.
49. Are there any ministers in connection with that body besides Dr. Lang? So I understand. I take my knowledge from the almanac, as a matter of general popular understanding.
50. Are you aware whether any letter or any request was sent to any other member of that particular body of Presbyterians? I am not aware. I believe there was an advertisement calling upon all members of the presbyterian bodies to unite. Several other persons were waited upon by deputation, but I believe Dr. Lang was not waited upon in that way.
51. You think others were? Yes.
52. Do you think all sections could conscientiously unite in establishing a College in accordance with the principles which you consider to be the principles of the Affiliated Colleges Act? It was stated that the Baptists in Melbourne, and that the United Presbyterians in Melbourne, had received Government aid—
53. Aid in land? Land can be converted into money. If Presbyterians found it according to their views and consciences to do so, I thought they might unite in that way; but with my present experience, I think they would not be likely to do so.
54. By the Chairman: Can you favor the Committee with any further suggestion?

FRIDAY, 13 AUGUST, 1858.

Present:—

MR. GORDON,
MR. RICHARDSON,

MR. MARKS,
MR. ALDCORN.

MR. BUCKLEY.

SAMUEL DEANE GORDON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Present in the room—The Rev. J. D. Lang, D.D., the Petitioner.

The Reverend John McGibbon called in and examined:—

- The Rev. J. McGibbon. 1. By the Chairman: You are a minister of the Synod of Australia in connection with the Established Church of Scotland? I am.
- 13 Aug., 1858. 2. You are also one of the secretaries of the Presbyterian College Committee, appointed at a public meeting held on the 5th April? I am.
3. At which certain resolutions were passed as the basis on which it was proposed that a Presbyterian College should be erected under the Affiliated Colleges Act? Yes. I may add that the resolutions were not the basis, but the prospectus was the basis.
4. Was the prospectus brought before the public meeting? It was.
5. It has been stated in evidence that there was a preliminary Committee to make arrangements for the establishment of a Presbyterian College—were you a member of that Committee? I was.
6. Will you be kind enough to state on what principle that Committee was formed, and what parties were invited to co-operate with it? A Committee was first appointed by the Synod of Australia, and that Committee appointed by the Synod of Australia sought intercourse with a Committee which had been appointed by the Synod of Eastern Australia; and in that way the movement commenced.
7. Were you specially delegated by the Synod of Australia to act on that Committee? I was.
8. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee what steps were taken by that Committee to ascertain the opinions of the Presbyterians of the Colony regarding the best means of erecting a College, previous to a public meeting being held? The instructions given to the Committee appointed by the Synod of Australia were, that the Committee should take such steps as they saw best, or most practicable, for the erection of a College; and the first step they took was to seek co-operation with the Committee which had been appointed by the Synod of Eastern Australia, or Free Church.
9. Was there a Committee appointed by the Synod of Eastern Australia for a similar purpose to the one you have referred to? There was.
10. Were any of the other bodies of Presbyterians invited to co-operate with the Committee appointed by the Synod of Australia, as well as the Free Church Synod? Yes.
11. Would you be kind enough to inform the Committee who were the parties invited to co-operate? The Rev. Mr. Darling, as minister and representative of the body known as the United Presbyterian body.

12. Was any minister of the Synod of New South Wales invited to co-operate? Not to my knowledge. The Rev. J. M'Gibbon.
13. Was the Rev. Dr. Lang invited to co-operate? Not that I am aware of.
14. Are you aware whether any other bodies or religious sects were invited to co-operate with the Committee? I am. At the suggestion, and upon the strong recommendation of some members of Committee, the Independent body was invited, by a communication addressed to the Independent Union. 13 Aug., 1858.
15. Did they decline co-operation? They did.
16. Did they assign any reason for doing so? They did. They assigned as their reason, their objection to the principles of the Affiliated Colleges Act in general, and to the establishment of a College under that Act in particular.
17. Have you examined into the construction and provisions of the different clauses of the Affiliated Colleges Act? I have.
18. What is your opinion with regard to the provisions of that Act, as far as the Presbyterians of the Colony are concerned, (as a whole I mean,) or with respect to the different sections of Presbyterians? My opinion is, that it does not take cognizance of any sect, nor does it provide for the union of sects.
19. You think that, under the provisions of that Act, any religious denomination or sect who will contribute the necessary amount may apply to the Government for the assistance which that Act proposes to give for the formation of Colleges in connexion with the University? There does not appear to be anything in the Act contrary to that view.
20. Are you aware of the terms of a deed of grant of certain lands that has been made by the Government to the Senate of the University? I am.
21. Do you know the different sects that are there enumerated? I do.
22. Are you aware that that deed specially provides for the four denominations only who are now recognized by the State? I am.
23. Were you aware of the terms of the deed containing this provision at the time the Committee was first formed for the establishment of a Presbyterian College? I was conversant with it generally, but I am not sure that I was aware of that clause specifically just then.
24. Has it been brought under your notice since that time? Yes.
25. Long subsequently, or recently? I think it must have been about the time of the beginning of the proceedings.
26. What proceedings do you refer to? The proceedings of the Committee.
27. Before the public meeting was called? Yes. I could not be positive, however.
28. Do you think the ministers of the Free Church who were co-operating with your Committee appointed by the Synod of Australia were aware of the provisions of that deed at the time? I am not aware.
29. Was the matter never brought under discussion in the Committee? Not that I am aware of.
30. Do you think the members of the Committee appointed by the Synod of Australia generally were aware of the provisions of that deed at that time? I could not say.
31. Were the resolutions or the prospectus adopted by the Committee submitted for public opinion, through the press, or in any other way, before they were brought before the public meeting in Castlereagh-street? It was not—that is to say, not through the press; it was pretty well known and circulated otherwise.
32. Were any steps taken by the Committee for getting the opinions of the Presbyterians of the Colony generally, as to that prospectus before it was submitted to the public meeting? Not in a public way.
33. Do you think it would not have been better to have made the resolutions and the prospectus public previous to their having been submitted to the public meeting and carried as they were? I do not think it would have made much difference, if any, because the resolutions then passed were more of a formal nature than any thing else. The resolutions upon which any thing of importance will depend will be passed at a meeting, called for that purpose, of those whom it concerns—of those who have taken a part in the establishment of the College.
34. But in a public matter of this kind, the establishment of a College for the benefit of a whole denomination, do you not think it likely you would have received more co-operation and sympathy from the denomination generally if they had been aware of the resolutions and prospectus that were to be submitted to the meeting? Well, I could not say; it might have been so, and it might not have been. I do not think it would have made much difference.
35. Are you aware that there is a large proportion of the Presbyterians of the Colony who do not intend co-operating with the present movement? I am not; but I know there is a small section.
36. A small section who do not intend to co-operate do you mean? Yes.
37. Are you aware of the number of Presbyterians in the Colony? I have a general knowledge.
38. About how many do you estimate? It is alleged that there are thirty thousand—men, women, and children.
39. And about how many out of those thirty thousand have you co-operating in this movement? Well, we cannot say how many we have got co-operating yet; the matter is only in process.
40. Of course I only wish to know the number within your own knowledge? Well, I could not tell.
41. How many members of the Synod of Australia are members of the Committee appointed at the public meeting? Do you mean ministers?
42. Ministers? I do not know exactly at present—four or five, I am not sure which; that is to say, of the Central Committee.
43. How many ministers of any other section of the Presbyterian Church? An equal number of the Synod of Eastern Australia.

- The Rev. J. M. Gibbon.
13 Aug., 1858.
44. Are you aware that there is another College Committee, which was appointed at another public meeting of Presbyterians held on the 12th April? It is reported so in the public newspapers; I have no knowledge of it, however, otherwise.
45. Was there not a proposal for a conference made to your Committee from another Committee appointed by that other public meeting to which I am referring? There was a document submitted, signed by certain gentlemen, who signed themselves as deputed by some Committee appointed at some public meeting.
46. What were the names of those gentlemen, do you recollect? The Honorable Mr. Robertson was one, J. Black another, Andrew Lang another, Dr. Lang another, and I think Mr. Richardson.
47. Were the whole of those names subscribed to that application for a conference? They were.
48. Was the proposal for a conference agreed to by your Committee? It was not.
49. Is this a correct report of what took place in your Committee upon that occasion (referring to an extract headed [ENCLOSURE], dated St. Andrew's Church, 31 May, 1858, and signed William Lumsdaine, one of the secretaries, quoted in the evidence of the Rev. Dr. Lang)? I believe this is a correct copy of what was done ultimately. There was a previous document however, which is at the top here.
50. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee what members of the College Committee were present when this resolution was agreed to? I do not remember.
51. Was this resolution carried unanimously, or was it by a majority, do you recollect? There were some who demurred to its being put, or something of the kind, but it was carried unanimously. There was no recorded dissentient; at first the thing was generally discussed, and several of us expressed our agreeableness to a conference, but it was ultimately agreed that it would be preferable to write, requesting a copy of the objections for the statement, or discussion of which the conference was asked, and that course was unanimously agreed to.
52. I see from this statement, dated St. Andrew's Church, 31st May, 1858, and signed by William Lumsdaine, one of the secretaries, that the first reason for declining a conference was, that the establishment of a Theological Chair was necessary in the proposed College—will you be kind enough to inform the Committee why you think a Theological Chair should be constituted, or how a Theological Chair could be constituted, in the present divided state of the Presbyterian Church, so as to prove satisfactory to all Presbyterians? I do not exactly understand the question.
53. You will see by that minute that your first reason for declining a conference was, that you consider the establishment of a Theological Chair necessary in the proposed College? Yes.
54. Now, my question is, can you show to this Committee how a Theological Chair can be constituted in the present divided state of the Presbyterian Church, so as to prove satisfactory to the general Presbyterian body? I think the divisions of the Presbyterian community lie back altogether from this College movement, and that even although a College were established, the divisions would subsist for some time at least, and either a Theological Chair would be established, notwithstanding the divisions, or it would never be established at all.
55. Well, by what party, or by what part of the Presbyterians, would this Theological Chair be established? That question was mooted in Committee, and it was agreed by the ministers of the Synod of Eastern Australia, and by the ministers of the Synod of Australia, that a Professor might be chosen either from the Free Church, or from the Church of Scotland, or that one might be chosen from America, who recognised neither sect; or, that Dr. Duff, of Calcutta, might be invited to the Chair.
56. Do you think it necessary that a Theological Chair should be established at present, seeing the divided state of the Presbyterians, and the very small number of students you are likely to have for a time? I think it highly necessary. An attempt was made to establish a Theological Institution some time ago by the petitioner himself; and certainly the Colony is not smaller now than it was then. An attempt is being made by dissentients of the Synod of Eastern Australia to establish a similar institution under their own immediate surveillance. I think it highly necessary that a Theological Chair should be established, and that the subsisting divisions ought not in any way to interfere with such an establishment. To wait for the removal of these divisions would be to wait for ever.
57. But do you not think that your own statement is a very good reason why a Theological Chair should not at first be established in this Colony, seeing that, as you have stated, the Free Church is at present trying to establish one for themselves, and that the petitioner some time ago did the same thing? I decidedly think it is no reason why it should not be established, but a very strong reason why it should.
58. By what body would it be established then, seeing that these two bodies of Presbyterians are providing for themselves—does it not follow that, under the circumstances, it would be a Theological Chair expressly for the Synod of Australia? It might, or it might not, just as the Committees should agree, or as the subscribers or founders of the College should agree. The person chosen might be a Free Church man, or he might not.
59. Do you think it likely that the body who had the greatest number of members in the Committee would be the most likely to establish a Theological Chair from their own part of the Presbyterian body? There is no one party in the Committee in excess of the other; they are both equal.
60. But then there are two other bodies of Presbyterians that are entirely excluded? They are not excluded, as I shall show immediately. If they withdraw or exclude themselves it is a different question.
61. Did the Rev. Mr. Darling decline to co-operate with you in the establishment of this College? He did.
62. And neither Dr. Lang nor any other minister of the Synod of New South Wales was invited to co-operate? Not that I am aware of.
63. I think you will see in the extract I pointed to before, that the second reason that you gave gave for declining a conference with the other Committee was, that the subscriptions you had received for the College were given in the expectation that the principles embodied in your prospectus would be carried out—is this the fact? As far as I am aware, it is. 64. Have you not received subscriptions from a large number of persons belonging to other Presbyterian bodies? The subscriptions have been exclusively obtained from the members of the body of the Synod of Australia and of the Synod of Eastern Australia—the two parties agreeing to the prospectus.

The Rev.
J. McGibbon.
13 Aug., 1858.

65. But when the Synod, or the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia, agreed to this co-operation, do you think they were aware of the terms of the deed of grant to the Senate of the University? I cannot say.

66. When they are made aware of them do you think it likely they will continue their subscriptions? That of course I cannot say; but during the last week one of the treasurers and myself called on several of the parties who had at first inserted their names and the amounts which they intended to give on the subscription list, with a view to collect the moneys and promissory notes, and in no instance were we denied—in no instance did the parties even hesitate to pay the subscriptions which they had promised, although they were perfectly aware of the efforts of petitioner and of the nature of the petition which he had presented to the Legislature. And further, although the petition has been published in the public prints, although the utmost publicity has been given to its several allegations, and although the precise terms of the grant of land are now pretty well known, near to a thousand pounds in ordinary subscriptions have been collected in town and country since the last publication of the subscription list.

67. But, seeing that this deed of grant is given expressly for the Church of Scotland, do you think it likely the subscribers from the Free Church will continue their subscriptions to found a Presbyterian College in connection with the Church of Scotland? I do not see why they should not continue them, if we agree and bind ourselves by the prospectus to admit them or any others to an equality of right and privilege in the matter. I do not see that the simple circumstance of the deed of grant being issued to one body should alter the case. Their rights and privileges would be equal notwithstanding.

68. But supposing the Synod of Australia in connection with the Church of Scotland at any time became dissatisfied with the other part of the Committee from the Synod of Eastern Australia, would it not be in their power to assume their right under the deed of grant? Decidedly not; because the Act of Incorporation, which would be drawn up on the terms and principles of the prospectus, would preclude for ever the Synod of Australia from stepping in to assert its right exclusively.

69. How would you prevent the Government from asserting its right to have that Presbyterian College established in connexion with the Church of Scotland? The Government could not interfere in the matter.

70. But they have already granted the land for that special purpose? Well, provided the Government grant me a certain portion of land for any purpose, and I am pleased to invite the co-operation of any other body in the carrying out of that object, would the Government interfere with that?

71. I should think they could interfere? They could, and might then do anything, at that rate.

72. If they should give you a grant of land, as a trustee, to employ it for any public purpose, do you think it would be in your power to give part of that away, or in any way alienate it from the purpose for which the Government intended it? We should neither give part of it away nor alienate it from the purpose for which it is granted; we should carry out that purpose in its integrity.

73. Are you aware that many of the subscribers to the present movement are mere children? I am aware; a circumstance of which I greatly approve, inasmuch as the children will have a more permanent interest in the College than the parents or adults can be supposed to have.

74. How are they to vote in case of a Theological Professor being appointed? I do not know I am sure; the matter has not been provided for specially; but I should imagine that the parents, who have inserted their names, should have a right to vote according to the amount they give—according to the amount the parents give, I mean.

75. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think that when the Affiliated Colleges Act was passed it was meant that all Presbyterians should participate in the benefits to be derived from such an institution? I do not think such an absurdity could be meant.

76. Then you think that only one section of the Presbyterian Church should participate? I do not mean that.

77. Then what portion of them do you suppose were to derive the benefit? Those who would accept it.

78. Do you think it is desirable that all the Presbyterians should be placed in such a position that they could all participate in the benefits of the institution? Unquestionably so.

79. Are there not some sections of the Presbyterian Church in this Colony who would refuse to take State support in any shape? Yes.

80. Do you think it is desirable the Principal of the College should be a minister of religion? I do.

81. Do you know of any cases in Scotland where the Principal is not a minister? Yes.

82. Will you be kind enough to state them? There was one—I believe Sir David Brewster was a Principal of a College, he was not a minister.

83. Would not that be a reason why a man may be efficient enough without being a minister of religion? He may be efficient enough without being a minister.

84. Is that the only case you know of in Scotland? It is at present.

85. Do you think the Principals in the Colleges in connection with University in Scotland teach religion? Yes.

86. Is that their chief occupation? I cannot say it is their chief occupation, but it is one of them.

- The Rev. J. M'Gibbon.
13 Aug., 1858.
87. Do you not think their business is more confined to the secular portion of the management of the Colleges? I do not see that this College in this Colony should be just a reflex of the Colleges at home.
88. I have understood that the functions of the Principals in the Colleges generally in Scotland are not confined to religious instruction, but that they give secular instruction—that being the case, do you not think that if the Principal here were not a minister, that might do away with the difficulty which stands in the way of other dissenting bodies joining this College? I cannot say that it would, but it might: I cannot say how.
89. You are aware that if the Principal were a minister of religion, and as such to receive State support, those sections of the Presbyterian Church professing the voluntary principle could not consistently join in this College? I do not see that they would refuse to join in the College simply because the Principal was a minister receiving State support.
90. Have you not heard that some of them have for that very reason declined doing so? I have not, on the ground that the Principal should receive State support.
91. How many sections does the Presbyterian Church consist of in this Colony? There are some who enumerate six, I believe.
92. Will you be kind enough to mention these? There are two of them of which I do not know the names.
93. Those within your own knowledge? There are four generally well enough known—the Synod of Australia, the Synod of Eastern Australia, the Synod of New South Wales, and the United Presbyterians.
94. You say that when you held your first meeting notices were sent to different ministers, or to some of the ministers in connection with the different sections of the Church? I did not say that. I said that when the Committee of the Synod of Australia were appointed they sought to open a communication with the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia, and the matter was then conducted by the two conjointly.
95. Did you send notices to the United Presbyterian body, or to any member of, or to the minister connected with, that body? He received notice.
96. I think you said he declined acting? He did.
97. What were his reasons—did he give any? His reasons were that he could not conscientiously co-operate in the matter.
98. Was that the only reason he gave? I believe I have it here—I cannot find it just at present; but it is generally that he could not conscientiously agree.
99. You think he did not state it more fully—that he did not state that if the Principal were a minister receiving State support he could not co-operate? Not to my knowledge.
100. Were any notices sent to the body in connection with the Rev. Dr. Lang, or to any other Minister of the Synod of New South Wales? Not to any of the ministers, as far as I am aware, but to some of the laymen.
101. I think you answered the question that when your first meeting was held you were not aware of the deed of grant having been made to the Established Church of Scotland? I am not aware at what time I became possessed of the knowledge. That was what I stated.
102. Is it not your opinion that those parties in connection with the Free Church, and in connection with other sections, when they become cognisant of that fact, will withdraw their subscriptions? I have answered already that I do not see why they should. They might, however.
103. By Mr. Aldcorn: You have stated that you think, notwithstanding the grant of land, that the Church of Scotland, to whom the grant is made, could assume any other portion of the Presbyterian Church, and, in fact, the inference must be, that they could assume any section, and still carry out the purposes of the grant—the purposes that the Government had in making the grant;—is that your opinion, distinctly, that they could still fulfil the purposes of the Government and alienate—for it is alienating—it from the purposes stated by the Government by taking in other parties to participate in the benefits of this grant? I do not see that it would be any alienation.
104. Supposing they were to take in Baptists or Methodists, or any other section? Of course such an extraordinary supposition as that might imply alienation; but nothing of that kind is contemplated. The taking in of any portion of the Presbyterian body that has essentially the same principles, the same doctrine, and the same discipline, and who are divided on only one question, is no alienation, as far as I can see. It is a mere opinion, however.
105. Are you aware that there are two different sections of the Presbyterian Church which hold voluntary principles? I am.
106. Then how could these parties agree to found a College, the head of which was to teach theology and to be endowed by the Government—how could they come to join you? I am quite sure I cannot speak for what they could do or what they would do.
107. How would you allow these bodies to come in to participate in the benefits of a College of this kind, if their principles were directly opposed to the proposed constitution of the College? They must answer for themselves; I have no knowledge as to how they could do it.
108. Do you think they could do it at all? I do not see how they could.
109. You have stated that you, when appointed as a Committee by the Synod of Australia, communicated with the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia, inviting them to co-operate with you in this intention of instituting a Presbyterian College—did that Committee meet you as a Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia? They did.
110. Did they continue to act in that capacity all along? Until the last meeting of their Synod they did.
111. Then in what capacity did they act afterwards? In their individual capacity.
112. Did you act all along as a Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia? We did.
113. Did any one of that Committee appointed by the Synod of Eastern Australia withdraw virtually from that Committee on certain grounds? I am not aware that any of the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia withdrew.

114. Has the Rev. Mr. Dougall attended your meetings regularly? He belongs to the Synod of Australia. The Rev.
J. M'Gibson.
13 Aug., 1868.
115. It was that I meant. Did any member of the Synod of Australia virtually withdraw on certain grounds? Mr. Dougall has ceased to co-operate with us.
116. Did he assign grounds for his withdrawing from you? He did not.
117. Did he not assign certain grounds to the effect that you were acting contrary to the spirit of your appointment? He has assigned that to individual members, but he has not assigned any such reason in the Committee.
118. Has he not assigned any reasons at all in Committee stating why he withdrew? He has not, so far as I know.
119. Will you state to the Committee what was your views as to what should be the curriculum of education at this College? Do you mean secular education?
120. I mean all together—the whole course? The curriculum, as far as secular education is concerned, is decided by the University; the details of the theological have not yet been agreed to.
121. How is it decided by the University? The curriculum of secular education is decided by the University. In the College there is merely assistance given to the course appointed by the University.
122. A tutorial system do you mean? Yes.
123. Then is the Theological Faculty not determined upon at all? The details are not.
124. But the institution of a Theological Faculty is determined upon? Yes.
125. Do you think it would be possible that the Principal should not teach theology at all, and that this might be a benefit to all parties who would co-operate in the institution of a College of this kind, or rather, I will ask you are you aware that the Principals in Scotland are generally appointed Primarius Professors of Divinity, and I suppose were so at first, and really taught Divinity, but that lately, with the exception of Dr. Lee at Edinburgh, none of them do teach theology at all? I do not think it is contemplated to make this College a reflex of the Colleges in Scotland, as they at present exist, at all; but to adapt it to our circumstances as nearly as possible.
126. Will you state the reasons which render it necessary that the Principal should teach theology in this Colony? It is a probable thing that for some time to come the number of students will be comparatively small, and to have a cumbrous machinery such as at home would be quite unnecessary at first.
127. Do you think that if the College was established by one section of the Presbyterian Church, as seems to have been contemplated by the Government in the deed of grant, this would conduce to or promote union among the different sections of the Presbyterian Church, or whether it would not in effect widen the differences—whether it would not be attended with the contrary effect? I am quite satisfied that when the College is established union will result from its establishment: union will be the result, not the means.
128. You think that is likely to be the result from one section of the Presbyterian Church being dominant in the College? It is not contemplated that one section should be dominant. All are eligible to the positions of the College. But as soon as the College is in operation, and students issue from it to the various pulpits in Australia, having come from the same quarter, without doubt, in due time, an union of all parties will ensue. But as to waiting until union is effected in order to the establishment of a College, would be to make the thing stand still for ever.
129. Do you think that if the College is chiefly under the ruling and direction of one section, the other sections will be likely to send their sons to that College? It is not intended that the College should be under the dominion of one section, as the prospectus plainly enough shows.
130. By Mr. Buckley: Have you found those Colleges in Scotland work well where the Principal has not been a clergyman? I know of only one: I do not know whether it works well.
131. When you say the Colonial College should not be a reflex of those at home, to what do you refer? I mean that we should not begin to establish the College just in imitation of the existing Colleges at home, by having so many Professors as they have. We must have certain Chairs; but the same Professor may occupy more Chairs than one, for some time to come.
132. Is it indispensable to have a Theological Faculty in the first instance? It is. I believe the Synod of Australia, and the members of the Synod of Eastern Australia, would not contemplate the erection of a College at all, were it not for that; that is to them the primary object.
133. Do any other divisions of the Presbyterians think it absolutely necessary to have a Theological Faculty? I do not know what they think.
134. Does the difficulty in the way of co-operation arise from one body receiving State aid and the others not? I should think that is the principal difficulty.
135. You say the grant has been issued in favor of the Church of Scotland—suppose in course of time the students from that particular church should be found sufficient to fill the College, what would be the position of the other churches if the parties to whom the grant was originally given thought proper to insist on their rights? I do not exactly see the question.
136. Supposing the Church of Scotland — ? We do not contemplate the Church of Scotland supplying any students to it at all.
137. Would they be in a position to assert their right to the exclusion of any other sect? Of course not, as I have already explained.
138. By Mr. Marks: You say you consider the establishment of a Theological Faculty essential in this proposed Presbyterian College? We do.
139. You do individually, and so does the body with which you are connected? Yes.

The Rev.
J. McGibbon.
13 Aug., 1858.

140. Would you co-operate in the establishment of a Presbyterian College with any body who do not consider the establishment of a Theological Faculty necessary? We would not, as far as I know; we consider the establishment of a Theological Chair the primary object.
141. Then you would not yourself be inclined to co-operate with any body who do not think that a primary object? I would not.
142. And you think that is the opinion of the body with which you are connected? Yes. There may be some members who hold other views, but that is the opinion of the body.
143. By the Chairman: Are you aware that a large number of members belonging to the Synod of Eastern Australia hold an opposite opinion? They do.
144. You stated that the Committee of the Synod of Australia were acting under the instructions of the Synod in co-operation with the present members from the Synod of Eastern Australia? Yes.
145. Are you still acting as a Committee authorised by that Synod, in co-operation with individual members of the Synod of Eastern Australia, who are not authorised by their Synod? The Synod has not met since this occurred.
146. By Mr. Aldcorn: Your own Synod? Our own Synod.
147. By the Chairman: Since which occurred? Since the dissolution of the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia.
148. Has the Committee met since? Which Committee?
149. The College Committee? Yes.
150. And you act as a Committee of the Synod of Australia? We do.
151. And individual members of the Synod of Eastern Australia act, not as a Committee, but in their individual capacity? Yes; they form with us a joint Committee.
152. By Mr. Richardson: Then, so far as I can gather from what you have said, there is not much likelihood of the two bodies co-operating? There is a party in that body who decline co-operating for certain reasons; but there is a party who do co-operate with us.
153. Could you go on as you are at present, unless the other sections of the Free Church fall in—are you likely to go on, do you think? I do not see that there is any difficulty.
154. You think not? I think not.
155. Do you yourself not think it would be desirable to form the whole thing on a wider basis, so that all sections could co-operate? It is formed, in my estimation, on the widest possible basis, as the prospectus shows. It would not be practicable, in my estimation, to form it on a wider basis.
156. By Mr. Aldcorn: You say that it is formed on the widest possible basis—I would ask you the question, how you reconcile that statement with the fact, of which you are also cognizant, that two sections of the Presbyterian Church here object to the very first principles on which you go, that is, that the Principal should teach theology, and should be an endowed functionary? I do not say that the two bodies or sections you refer to object to unite and co-operate with us on the ground of our proposal that the Principal should teach theology: they object to the thing altogether on the principles of the Colleges Act. I do not say that it was in consequence of the Principal receiving aid or teaching theology.
157. Are you not aware that that is one of the grounds of objection? I am not aware.
158. By Mr. Richardson: Do you not think it is likely, from what you know of the principles of the voluntaries, that they would object to that? As far as I know their principles they would not object to our scheme from the simple circumstance that the Principal would teach theology, but they object to the Colleges Act in toto.
159. They might not object to the Principal teaching theology if he were not paid by the Government; but do you not think the voluntaries would object to the Principal receiving State aid if he were a minister of religion? They object to all ministers receiving State aid.
160. Do you not think that would be a barrier to the two parties professing voluntary principles? It would be equally a barrier if the Professor were a layman.
161. Do you think if he were merely a layman the voluntaries would object to his receiving State support? It is impossible for me to say; but as far as I know their principles, they would object to the thing in toto on the principles of the Colleges Act.
162. Whether the Principal was a layman or a minister? Whether a layman or a minister.
163. By Mr. Aldcorn: On what part of the Affiliated Colleges Act do you suppose they would object to—the whole thing? Inasmuch as it is to be a College in which “systematic religious instruction” is to be taught, they can take no part in its erection. So the thing is interpreted by Mr. Darling, and such I know is the principle of the body with which he is connected; they can take no part in any thing having a religious aspect which is aided by the State.
164. That was one reason he assigned—inasmuch as you would receive money for the land and for the building? Inasmuch as we would receive land and money for the building, it being a College in which “systematic religious instruction” was to be taught.
165. By the Chairman: Is there any other information you wish to give the Committee?

MEMO: The witness then made a Statement, which is omitted here by order of the Committee. (Vide Minutes of Proceedings on 27 August, 1858.)

Clerk of Select Committees.

APPENDIX A.

PROSPECTUS of a Presbyterian College in connexion with the Sydney University.

The Rev.
J. M'Gibbon.
13 Aug., 1858.

It is proposed to establish, in terms of the Colonial Act, 18 Vic, 37, a Presbyterian College within the University of Sydney, to be named St. Andrew's College.

In this College students may reside while attending the University, and may there enjoy the advantages of domestic supervision, systematic religious instruction, and tutorial superintendence in their studies. In this College there will be an opportunity of supplementing the curriculum of the University, at present confessedly incomplete, and so of providing a scheme of academic training similar to that enjoyed in Scotland.

As a distinct department in the College, there will be a Theological Faculty, and an efficient staff of teachers, whereby young men may be prepared for the Christian ministry.

All Presbyterians are entreated to unite cordially and zealously in prosecuting this great and important object. The purity, the stability, and the extension of Presbyterianism in New South Wales, and the moral and spiritual interests of generations to come, are involved in it. In drawing up the constitution of this College, and in establishing the same, every possible guarantee shall be provided that the doctrines taught from the Theological Chair or Chairs in the said Presbyterian College shall, in all time coming, be in full conformity with the Westminster standards.

The following suggestions are respectfully offered, to be considered by a public meeting open to all Presbyterians favorable to this object:—

1. That the College Buildings shall be erected on a portion of the University Reserve, set apart for that purpose by the Government. The said buildings shall consist of classrooms, public hall, library, apartments for students, and residences for the Principal and such other officers of the College as may be afterwards determined.

2. That it will be a special duty of the Principal, and of such Professors and Tutors as may be fixed upon to form the effective staff of the said College, to superintend the studies of the students resident within it, having full and thorough oversight of their moral and religious training and culture; but the benefits and privileges of the College shall be in no way restricted to such as may avail themselves of residence in it, but shall be equally accessible to all who seek them, whether residing in the College or elsewhere.

3. That the government of the College shall be vested in a Council, to consist of the Principal of the College for the time being, and of not fewer than eighteen, nor more than twenty-four elective members, one-third of whom shall be ordained Presbyterian ministers, holding and signing the Westminster standards.

4. That the Principal shall be an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church, holding and signing the Westminster standards in their integrity.

5. That there shall be a Board of Visitors, to consist of two Members from each Synod now existing in New South Wales, or that may be hereafter constituted: provided that every such Synod hold the Westminster standards, and require subscription thereto. The Visitors shall be annually chosen by their respective Synods; and their duties shall be set forth in the Constitution to be framed for the said College.

6. That the elective Members of the Council of the College shall be chosen, in the first instance, by the subscribers to the College. Vacancies that occur among the elective Members of the Council, during the first three years of its existence, shall be filled up by the remaining Members. At the end of three years, and every year thereafter, one-third of the elective Members shall retire, and their successors shall be chosen by the surviving subscribers, in conjunction with graduates of the University, who are Members of the College. Retiring Members of the Council shall not be eligible for re-election till after the lapse of one year. Subscribers shall be entitled to vote according to the following scale, viz:—Subscribers of £10 to have one vote; subscribers of £25 to have two votes; subscribers of £50 to have three votes; and every additional subscription of £50 shall entitle to an additional vote.

TUESDAY, 17 AUGUST, 1858.

Present:—

Mr. DICKSON,
Mr. MARKS,
Mr. GORDON,

Dr. ALDCORN,
Mr. RICHARDSON,
Mr. BUCKLEY.

SAMUEL DEANE GORDON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. William Lumsdaine called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are one of the ministers of the Free Church? Well, of the Synod of Eastern Australia.
2. You are also one of the secretaries of the proposed Presbyterian College appointed in April last? I was acting in that capacity since April, but I have lately resigned.
3. Have you had any particular reason for resigning the position of joint secretary? It is not from any reason arising out of the College matter. There are other reasons, which I am not in a position to state to the Committee: they are not connected with the College movement in any way whatever.
4. It has been stated in evidence before this Committee that there was a preliminary committee meeting previous to the public meeting of April: Were you a member of that Committee? Yes.

The Rev. W.
Lumsdaine.
17 Aug., 1858.

The Rev. W.
Lumsdaine.
17 Aug., 1858.

5. Were you specially appointed to represent the Free Church in that Committee, or were you merely there as an individual member of the Synod of Eastern Australia? In the first instance by appointment of the Synod of Eastern Australia, but when they discharged that Committee my appearance at all subsequent meetings was on my own personal responsibility, and not by the authority of the Synod of Eastern Australia. That was understood at the time.

6. Had the Committee appointed by the Synod of Eastern Australia been dismissed before this public meeting of the 5th April took place? They were dismissed by a vote of the Synod in November last, cancelling the resolutions of the former meeting.

7. Will you be kind enough to inform the Committee on what principle this joint Committee was formed, that you speak of as the preliminary Committee? In the month of July, 1857, a communication was received by the Reverend Dr. Mackay, who was Moderator for that year of our Synod, from the Moderator of the Synod of Australia, inviting co-operation in endeavouring to erect this College within the Sydney University, and on receipt of that communication from the Synod of Australia Dr. Mackay, after consulting with the brethren with whom he had access, convened a meeting, which the Synod held in August, for the purpose of considering whether they could co-operate in respect to this overture of the Synod of Australia for this purpose. The result of this meeting in August was the appointment of the Committee, of which I was a member, to take joint action with the Committee previously appointed by the Synod of Australia to co-operate with us. We had several meetings of the Committee up to the first of November, and during all these meetings, up to that time, I was acting as representative of the Synod of Eastern Australia, and as member of the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia. I was also appointed one of the sub-committee to prepare a prospectus, which was to form the basis of the proposed College, and embody the principles on which it should be built; and that prospectus, which was prepared by the sub-committee, was brought up, and, after some discussion, was approved of by the general Committee.

8. Previous to this prospectus being prepared, will you inform the Committee what parties were invited together for that purpose; was it merely the Committee of the Synod of Australia and the Committee of the Synod of Eastern Australia, or were other Presbyterian bodies invited to co-operate, or did they co-operate? I did not form one of the deputation. I know a deputation was appointed, and I think the Rev. Mr. Milne was one to wait upon the Rev. Mr. Darling, of the United Presbyterian Church, to invite and secure his co-operation in the College undertaking. The Rev. Mr. Darling declined having anything to do with the business—his objection being founded on his holding the voluntary principle. Professor Smith, while attending the ministry of a clergyman in connection with the Synod of Eastern Australia, is, I believe, a United Presbyterian, and he was in communication with Dr. Mackay and myself, and took part in preparing that prospectus.

9. Were the ministers or members of any other denomination invited to co-operate? We of the Synod of Eastern Australia were anxious, even in initiating the proceedings, that every Presbyterian minister in the Colony should be invited.

10. Whom do you mean by "we" as consenting to this proposal? All the ministers who represented the Synod of Eastern Australia, and several other gentlemen besides.

11. Was there any objection taken by the ministers of the Synod of Australia to that proposal? They said, as far as they were concerned they could not ecclesiastically meet the Rev. Dr. Lang, and in the preliminary proceedings in the matter we felt an objection on that score.

12. You were aware, I presume, that there is a portion of the Presbyterians represented in the Synod of New South Wales? We were perfectly willing that they should be represented, and that any minister of that Synod should be invited to co-operate. No person seemed to demur in the first instance. I will come by and by to the prospectus, which we had the principal shaping of. At another part of the proceeding they did express that difficulty.

13. I will come to that question presently. I wish to have an answer at present as to whether the Synod of Australia did object to this proposal? They expressed a difficulty on that point.

14. If you look at the second paragraph of the petition which was presented to the Legislative Assembly, and signed by the Rev. Dr. Lang, you will find that he there complains that certain ministers and Presbyterians were excluded from initiating these proceedings, and it is with regard to that I am now asking you these questions? It was through the difficulty which presented itself to the mind of the Synod of Australia that alone prevented any overture being made to the Rev. Dr. Lang and the Synod of New South Wales. There was no difficulty in connection with our Synod in acceding to it.

15. It is a fact that a discussion took place in this Committee with respect to the admission of the Rev. Dr. Lang and other members of the different sections of Presbyterians? I must confess it was more especially with reference to Dr. Lang. Of course those objecting assigned their reasons.

16. Do I understand that objections were principally taken by ministers representing the Synod of Australia, or the Established Church of Scotland? Yes, while there was none on our side: our object was to make it as general as possible.

17. Have you examined into the construction and provisions of the different clauses of the Affiliated Colleges Act? Not very closely; I have looked into them but not very narrowly: I am aware of the principal features of the Act.

18. Are you aware whether that Act excludes any denomination of Christians that puts itself in a position to claim support from Government, either with reference to the obtaining a grant of land or a sum of money that that Act provides, provided that denomination in the first instance subscribes the requisite sum? There is a restriction—I was lately told of it; I was not aware of it before—that confines the land—

19. I am speaking of the Affiliated Colleges Act—whether by the Act itself are you aware whether whether it excludes any section or denomination? I am not; I have not been able to discover any clause. I have not examined the clauses closely.

The Rev. W.
Lumsdaine.

20. Are you of opinion that the Act was intended for the benefit of all denominations who chose to avail themselves of it? Yes, that is my opinion with respect to the Affiliated Colleges Act.

17 Aug., 1858.

21. Are you aware of the terms of the deed of grant made in 1855, conveying lands to the Senate of the University? That is the point to which I allude. I believe it is restricted to four denominations. I only heard of lately; I have not seen it.

22. What have you heard lately with respect to it? That mention is made particularly of the Church of Scotland in that deed of grant. It has not been shown to me.

23. At the time you were co-operating with the Committee of the Synod of Australia you were not aware that this deed of grant conveyed the land exclusively for the benefit of that portion of the Presbyterian body? I only knew within the last fortnight of that point.

24. If you and the other ministers representing the Synod of Eastern Australia had been aware of that fact, do you think it likely they would have given the same cordial support that they have done? Whether they would have given the same cordial support I will not say; but it would not have precluded co-operation, because we should have hoped that an alteration might be made.

25. In what way would you alter it? By some other Act being passed through the House of Assembly, and of the deed of grant being altered by special Act to alter the particular clause. Other portions of the Act have been altered.

26. I am speaking of the deed of grant, not of any portion of the Act? I know there would be a difficulty in altering any deed of grant. It might be my ignorance of the law, but I thought it might be altered if brought before the Legislature, on its being shewn that it was not as intended for the benefit of all Presbyterians.

27. Do you think the ministers of the Synod of Australia when they were co-operating with you were aware of the provisions of the deed of grant being made in their favor? I am not able to answer that question; but my impression is that they were not. I heard them say nothing about it till very recently.

28. Was the constitution or prospectus adopted at the preliminary Committee meeting made public before it was adopted by the public meeting of the 5th April? No, it was not.

29. Are you aware whether any steps were taken by the Committee to give the Presbyterian body an opportunity of knowing what the prospectus was to be? There were not, before submitting it to the public meeting, at least not through advertisements.

30. You were present, I presume, at the public meeting? Yes.

31. Was there any amendment proposed to be submitted upon the first resolution there? Yes, there was an amendment proposed by the Rev. Dr. Lang.

32. Was he permitted to move his amendment? The Governor General took the sense of the meeting, it occurred to me, whether he should make it or not.

33. Is it not usual at public meetings called for public purposes that amendments should be permitted to be submitted to the meeting? Yes, it is usual; it is a general rule.

34. Then on this occasion there was an exception to the general rule? Decidedly.

35. Did you approve of the exception made on that occasion? No; I think the amendment should have been put.

36. Have you heard of another public meeting being subsequently held on the 12th April, for the purpose of establishing another College, for the purpose of passing resolutions for the establishment of a College? I saw the report of the meeting.

37. Are you aware of any proposal for a conference by the Committee to your Committee? Yes; I was on the meeting when the requisition was sent to us.

38. What was the answer to that application? The first answer was, to be informed what points they wished to have a conference on, and to state their objections to the particular features of the prospectus assented to by the public meeting. If my memory serves me, I think that was the first answer.

39. Was the Committee unanimous in declining the proposal for the conference, or was it carried by a majority of the Committee? It was not in the first instance declining the conference—it was to ascertain from them what the points they objected to were. When the second requisition was sent to us, then the conference was declined, in consequence of the nature of the objections.

40. On declining the conference, you stated as the first reason that the preliminary object was, that as a distinct department in the College there should be a Theological Faculty, and an efficient staff of teachers, whereby young men might be prepared for the Christian ministry? That was the first.

41. Now, do you think it absolutely necessary that a Theological Faculty should be established in the College established under the Affiliated Colleges Act? I do think so; I would have nothing to do with a College where that was not a sine qua non.

42. Are you not aware that in Scotland there are Colleges where the Principals are not ministers, and where there are not Theological Faculties? It is so, but it does not follow that the Principal should be a minister of religion, but one of the Professors might be promoted to the Theological Chair.

43. Your second proposal is, in drawing up the constitution of this College, and in establishing the same, every possible guarantee shall be provided, that the doctrines taught from the Theological Chair or Chairs in the said Presbyterian College shall in all time coming be in full conformity with the Westminster standards? Yes.

44. Now, do you think that persons belonging to the Free Church would have subscribed to the erection of this College if they were aware at the time that the deed of grant was made out exclusively in favor of those in connection with the Established Church of Scotland? I do not think they would.

45. Do you think if they were aware they would be likely to have subscribed their money,

The Rev. W.
Lumsdaine.

17 Aug., 1853.

or would now continue to give their subscriptions upon these terms. I would like to know how that operates on their minds? They might, in the hope of getting it altered, still give their money.

46. But if they were not aware of this land being granted exclusively to the Church of Scotland at that time, it would be no breach of faith with them that the principles set forth in the prospectus should not be carried out? I must be allowed a little circumlocution in answering this question. They paid their money believing the principles embodied in the prospectus would in their integrity be carried out, and the leading feature in the prospectus was that the College should be open to all Presbyterians, and all such holding and signing the Westminster Standards in their integrity should be eligible to be elected one of the Senatus or Council, and also that the board of visitors of the College should consist of two members from each Synod now in existence in New South Wales, or that might hereafter be constituted, provided that every such Synod holds the Westminster Standards, and requires subscription thereto. There is also this feature in the third paragraph, that as a distinct department in the College there shall be a Theological Faculty, and an efficient staff of teachers, whereby young men may be prepared and instructed for the Christian ministry. It is on the faith of that being carried out that they paid their money—the institution being catholic, and as comprehensive as it is possible to make it, and which, I believe, the prospectus makes it.

47. Supposing that at any time a disagreement took place between the members of the Free Church and the members of the Synod of Australia with reference to the appointment of the Principal, or any other matter, under the present deed of grant don't you think it quite possible that the Synod of Australia could assume their sole right to that deed of grant? Very possibly they might do so.

48. Supposing that to be the case, do you not imagine it would be a breach of faith to those who subscribed belonging to the Free Church and who expected the principle of that prospectus to be carried out? Yes. I know all in connection with our Synod who had any thing to do with the matter did it on the faith of the College being open to all Presbyterians and excluding none; these two paragraphs were inserted for that very purpose.

49. I think in answer to a question I put previously to you with respect a Theological Faculty being established in the College, you stated you did not think it necessary that the Principal should be an ordained minister? I do not think it essentially necessary that he should be an ordained minister. It is desirable he should be.

50. Is it not one of the clauses in the prospectus that he should be an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church? Yes, I think so.

51. By Mr. Richardson: I think you said about the month of November a vote was passed by the Synod of Eastern Australia dissolving our Committee which was co-operating with a Committee of the Synod of Australia? In November last they cancelled the resolutions of the August meeting, and discharged the Committee.

52. What was their reason for doing so? Their reason for doing so was, because the Principal or any of the Professors might come from the Established Church of Scotland.

53. Was it under the supposition that they could not co-operate with the other bodies? They would not consent to any co-operation, but would have a College exclusively connected with the Synod of Eastern Australia.

54. By the Chairman: You are speaking of a majority of the Synod? I am talking of the act of the Synod—they rule by majorities.

55. By Mr. Richardson: I think you said that two bodies—the Synod of Australia and the Synod of Eastern Australia—while they were co-operating, I think you said that an intimation or notice was sent to the different ministers in connexion with the different bodies and sections of the Presbyterian Church? I said a deputation waited on Mr. Darling and others.

56. Are we to understand that a deputation waited on some of the ministers connected with the different sections of the Presbyterian Church? Decidedly; our great desire was to have the co-operation of every Presbyterian minister.

57. I think you stated no notice was sent to the Revd. Dr. Lang that he should be present? Yes.

58. Was any notice sent to any of his brother ministers? No; I am not aware of any.

59. Don't you think it would have been as well to have done so? I remember one time I was not able to attend the meeting of the Committee, and I wrote my views, which were read to the Committee by the Rev. Dr. Mackay, that there should be no exclusion, and that Dr. Lang's co-operation should be sought; that was my view.

60. And the parties who objected to this were those in connection with the Synod of Australia? Yes; they gave their reasons for their objections, which precluded them from co-operating ecclesiastically with Dr. Lang.

61. By Dr. Aldcorn: You say you were not aware of the nature of the terms of the deed of grant at all? Not till recently. About two or three weeks ago I was merely told of it.

62. Do you think that the College such as is represented in your prospectus could be constituted legally, seeing that by the deed of grant the land is given exclusively to one sect, while your prospectus invites all sections of the Presbyterian Church? It could not—I think it could not—I cannot speak positively in the matter.

63. You are not aware whether the ministers of the Synod of Australia knew about the grant of land—what the terms of it were when they held their conference? I am not aware they knew of it; they never spoke a word to me about it; in fact, the first intimation I received was from one of the Committee on that point.

64. By the Chairman: One of the members of the Free Church? I think it was from yourself I heard it: I think you told me.

65. By Mr. Richardson: I think you stated that when the Rev. Dr. Lang moved his amendment the chairman put it to the meeting? I think he put it whether they would hear the amendment.

66. Did not the chairman give his opinion? I do not think he refused to put it.
67. Did he not first give his opinion before putting it to the meeting? He certainly did not seem favorable to putting it to the meeting. I think he evidently wished to get the sense of the meeting whether he would put it or not.
68. He gave his opinion first, did he not? You may put that construction on it. I thought he was anxious to know the mind of the meeting.
69. By Dr. Aldcorn: Do you know whether any ministers of any other sects besides those you mentioned were invited to co-operate—the one you mentioned was the Rev. Mr. Darling: do you know whether any other besides the Free Church were invited to co-operate? I think some of the Independent ministers were asked. I was not appointed to wait upon them.
70. Any others? I am not aware of any others. In respect to this matter of the Principal, when the Chairman asked me the question I was under the impression that all that was necessary was that a Theological Chair should be established, and one of the Professors might fill it; but I see now by the prospectus that the Principal must be an ordained minister.
71. By Mr. Marks: You say you assisted in getting up this prospectus? I was one of the sub-committee appointed to prepare it, along with Dr. Mackay and others.
72. It was not made public before the 5th April? No; it was not published.
73. Do you know any reason why? I cannot assign a reason.
74. Is it not the general course to make it public? I am not aware of it, not having much to do with the preparation of these things.
75. At first you co-operated, on the part of the Synod of Eastern Australia, with the Synod of Australia? That Committee was discharged, and I afterwards acted upon my own responsibility.
76. It appears that the majority of the Synod of Eastern Australia were unfavorable to co-operation? Yes.
77. How was the Committee appointed in the first instance—was it appointed by the Synod? Yes; in August, 1857.
78. You are of opinion that the majority of the ministers of the Synod of Eastern Australia were unfavorable to co-operation? That was their last vote in November.
79. What do you think is the opinion of the congregations on this point? I think they are in favor of the cordial co-operation of all Presbyterians.
80. By the Chairman: You are speaking with regard to a College properly constituted and open to all? I am speaking of a College that carries out these two things, which I was a particular party in having inserted in paragraphs 3 and 5, and which makes it as catholic and comprehensive as possible.
81. By Mr. Marks: You think it is indispensable that there should be a Theological Chair? Yes; I would have nothing to do with it without.
82. It is not necessary for the Principal to fill the Chair? It appears from the prospectus, to which the Chairman called my attention, that the Principal should be an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church.
83. Do you think it necessary that theology should be taught? Decidedly; by the Principal or Professors.
84. By one of the Professors? Yes.
85. By the Chairman: How do you think the Principal could be elected if there was a Theological Chair established—could he be elected so as to give satisfaction to the different denominations of Presbyterians? If you allow me a little latitude I will answer the question. At a meeting of our Synod in August we appointed a Committee to co-operate with a Committee of the Synod of Australia, and in the instructions given to our Committee there was a distinct proviso to this effect—that any Principal, or Professor of Theology appointed (whether belonging to the Free Church or Established Church), should ipso facto cease to have any ecclesiastical connection with, or to be in any way subject to the jurisdiction of any church beyond the bounds of this Colony. He was merely to be subject to the local Synod here; that is, if the Principal, or any Professor, belonged to the Established Church of Scotland, he should cease to have any further connection with, or be subject to the jurisdiction of the Church of Scotland. If that had not been distinctly provided for I should not have been one to have co-operated.
86. Who was he to be subject to? To the local Synod in the country; it might be to ours, or the Synod of Australia, or the Synod in connexion with the Rev. Dr. Lang. He should not be subject to any church beyond the seas.
87. Who was to determine it? He would join himself to some Synod here. If he came from the Free Church of Scotland I suppose he would join our Synod.
88. Do you think the ministers and people belonging to the Synod of Australia would be satisfied with that? That was to form a part of the basis of action.
89. Don't you think it would be objectionable to the Free Church people to have a Professor of Theology belonging to the Established Church of Scotland? I should make no objection, since he would cease to be ecclesiastically connected with or subject to the Established Church.
90. If he ceased to have connexion with the Established Church of Scotland, but was subject to the jurisdiction of the Synod of Australia which is in connexion with the Church of Scotland, would he not in effect be subject to the Church of Scotland? I do not think so. Here it is provided that the Senatus, or governing body, should have power over the Principal and Professors, and that all Presbyterian bodies are to be represented in this Senatus. All the Synods would be equally represented.
91. Do you think they would likely join in opinion those senators who represent the different bodies? Difficulties might arise that might cause disagreements; but if the different bodies were represented, according to the prospectus, these ministers of the Synod of Australia that were elected would not have it all their own way.

- The Rev. W. Lumsdaine.
17 Aug., 1858.
92. By Mr. Dickson: I think I understood you to say that you were not aware of the nature of the deed of grant? Not till lately.
93. If you were aware that it was only in favor of the Established Church, would you have joined in the movement to establish this College? Before I should have refused I would have ascertained if there was a possibility to get any alteration made in the deed.
94. You would not have taken any steps before you got it altered? No.
95. Are you aware whether any ministers were aware of the nature of the deed? I don't think so.
96. Or the elders in connection with the Synod of Australia? No.
97. Do you think if the laity were aware of it that they would not have joined in the attempt to erect a Presbyterian College? No, not unless they saw some way of getting the deed altered. It would appear to defeat the intention of the Legislature which was to make it open to all Presbyterians.
98. By Mr. Richardson: Have you met many of those who subscribed to the College since you became aware of the nature of the deed? No.
99. By Mr. Dickson: The subscriptions to the College, are they generally or to a considerable amount among the laity belonging to the Synod of Eastern Australia? Well, I think some large subscriptions were given by some persons.
100. The subscriptions were not numerous? No.
101. Do you think the ministers who have hitherto co-operated in the attempt to erect a College in the Synod of Eastern Australia still desire to continue the co-operation? I can hardly speak for others. I have resigned myself the office of joint secretary to the College.
102. In consequence of that? No; on other grounds. I have also withdrawn from the Committee.
103. Would you have continued after you understood that the deed of grant was, as it is, to act in co-operation with the other Synods for the erection of this College? Well, I would not have withdrawn on that ground. I should first have ascertained if there was any probability of getting the deed of grant altered. I was not actuated in resigning by any thing in connection with that.
104. By Mr. Richardson: You think if the deed of grant was not altered you would have withdrawn? Yes, it is possible; but I have not done so upon that ground.
105. By the Chairman: Do you think the number of subscribers is a fair representation of the Presbyterians generally? Not looking at the number of persons giving money. All these institutions are supported in the first instance by few subscribers.
106. Do you not think if it was more general—if the subscriptions were of a small amount, and scattered more largely over the whole population belonging to the Presbyterian communion—that the College would be more likely to succeed than if it is got up by a mere handful of subscribers? If the minimum was £5 instead of £10 I think we should have more subscribers—if these who subscribed that sum were entitled to vote.
107. Are you aware that a number of subscribers are mere children? No; this is the first time I have heard of it.
108. Are you not aware that some persons subscribing put down themselves and put down all their children? I know in the case of Mr. Bowman, where the family are grown up: they are not what I call children; I suppose some of them are of the age of 21, and expect property.
109. It has been stated in evidence that even children at the breast were put down as subscribers? This is a thing I never heard of before; it is quite new to me.
110. Did I understand you to say that if the subscriptions which entitled a person to vote was £5, a larger amount than £7,000 would have been collected? No; I said there would have been more subscribers.
111. Do you think a fair proportion of those Presbyterians who can afford to pay £10 have subscribed? Well, considering the few subscribers the Church of England had to the College of St. Paul's, I do not think more subscribers of £10 could be obtained. I would sooner see small sums and a larger number of names of subscribers.
112. Do you think there are many Presbyterians in a position to subscribe £10? In the first instance, they only pay £2 10s. and give their promissory notes for the remainder. I do not think this an insuperable objection. I think you would have got a larger number of subscribers if the minimum had been £5.
113. By Dr. Alcorn: Did you discuss at any time at your meetings what was to be the curriculum of teaching in the College—there is no specific mention of this in the prospectus? No; we did not go into details on that point.
114. Was the idea at all prevalent in the Committee that there should be a Theological Faculty alone? No; only as a branch of instruction.
115. There were to be other branches of instruction—did the curriculum include the usual branches of education, literature, and scientific subjects? In the first instance they felt a difficulty arise from the want of funds for more than one Professor. If there were several Professors instruction would be given in the different branches in addition to Systematic Theology. We never discussed the details.
116. All those branches taught in the University: Did it not occur to you something like the system adopted by the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge should be adopted—the tutorial—a system by which young men would be more properly prepared to attend the classes in the University? That is a part of the prospectus, that the tutors should superintend the studies of the students attending lectures in the different branches they were pursuing.
117. By the Chairman: Have you anything else to communicate to the Committee? In reference to the prospectus, I would say that the third and fifth paragraphs were inserted in order to make it open to all Presbyterians, and the Synod of Australia Committee consented that it should be open to all Presbyterians, not excluding any minister of any Synod in the Colony.

118. By Dr. Aldcorn: In the original instructions from the Synod of Australia did the Committee propose to confine it to the Free Church, or the Synod of Eastern Australia: did the United Presbyterians refuse to come in? They made overtures to us and Mr. Darling. They were disposed not to extend it further.

The Rev. W.
Lumsdaine.

17 Aug., 1858.

119. It is so given in evidence? It was insisted, on the part of the Synod of Eastern Australia, that the College should be as open as possible, excluding not a single Presbyterian minister in New South Wales; and therefore these two paragraphs were put in the prospectus.

120. The third and fifth? Yes. The Synod of Australia consented to that, and it was adopted by the whole Committee, and sanctioned by the public meeting; thus making the College as general as possible.

Nicol Drysdale Stenhouse, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a solicitor, in extensive practice in this city? Considerable practice.

N. D.
Stenhouse,
Esq.

17 Aug., 1858.

2. Do you belong to the Presbyterian Church? When I came to this Colony I was in full communion with the Church of Scotland, and I have never formally withdrawn from it. At present I belong to a congregation of Presbyterians in Balmain; they have not connected themselves with any of the other religious denominations in the Colony, but they hold the principles of the Westminster Confession of Faith.

3. Are you acquainted personally with the constitution and working of the Colleges and Universities of Scotland? I have had ample opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of the constitution and working of the Scotch Universities.

4. You have, in fact, been a student there? I attended the lectures and scientific classes of the University of Edinburgh for six years.

5. You attended the lectures, and went through the curriculum required for a degree of Arts? Yes. I also attended the law classes three years. I took my degree of M. A. about the end of 1825, when I was nineteen years of age. I believe I was the youngest but one that graduated in my time.

6. Have you at all examined into the Affiliated Colleges Act with regard to its provisions? I have looked at the Act very minutely, principally with reference to the preamble.

7. What is your opinion with regard to the preamble, speaking as regards "systematic religious instruction"? I think the framer of it could scarcely have selected a more unfortunate expression: it is vague, without being comprehensive.

8. What meaning do you attach to that phrase? It cannot, I think, be held to mean that extensive course of theological training through which candidates for the ministry in the various sections of the Presbyterian Church are required to pass. The systematic religious instruction spoken of seems to be designed for all students equally, professional or non-professional. I cannot, therefore, think it was intended, or if so, I cannot think it necessary that lay-students should receive such instruction in the various branches of a theological education as it is the object of a Theological Faculty to impart; that they should go through all the length and breadth of exegetical theology, historical theology, dogmatic theology, &c.

9. In your opinion, is a Theological Faculty essential to the being of a College? I do not consider it essential, nor, as I have said, do I believe that the erection of a Theological Faculty was contemplated by the Act, though, as a secondary measure, it may, perhaps, be warrantable. According to my view, the preamble merely imports that the students of the various Colleges are to receive regular instruction in all the capital doctrines of Christianity, as understood and maintained by the churches, or the main sections of the churches, to which they respectively belong; in fact, that in addition to a vigilant superintendence over their moral conduct, such a religious training is to be secured for them as may protect them from any influence, direct or indirect, exerted by teachers or companions of different tenets, to lead them away from the faith in which they have been reared. That seems to me to be the main object of the "systematic religious instruction" referred to. If it had been intended by this Act that a Theological Faculty should be established, it would have been easy for the framer of it to have said so.

10. Do you think it would be desirable and practicable, in the present divided state of the Presbyterian Church, to have a Theological Chair? It does not appear to me to be practicable. Even in Scotland every section of the Presbyterian Church has, I believe, its own Professor of Theology. It would be considered as almost tantamount to heresy for the students of the dissenting bodies to attend the classes of the Theological Faculty in the University of Edinburgh, which is in connection with the Established Church. Each section of the Presbyterian Church regards form as so closely connected with substance, purity of discipline as so conducive to purity of doctrine, that it will not allow its theological students to attend any Professor except its own. They are permitted, however, to receive instruction at the University in every branch of education, except theology, in its various subdivisions.

11. Do you think the establishment of a College—of a secular institution—in the first instance, would be preferable? I do. It would tend to what is much wished for—the final union of all sections of the Presbyterian body—and provide the students belonging to it with the means of acquiring, without danger to their religious principles, a thorough knowledge of the higher branches of education usually taught in Colleges and Universities.

12. Afterwards, looking to the establishment of a Theological Faculty? Yes: it would be most desirable, if the concurrence of all parties could be obtained; but such a consummation is, I fear, very remote.

13. Will you look to the date of the passing of that Act? I observe that the Colleges Act was passed in December, 1854.

14. If you go a little further on in the pamphlet you will find a deed of grant made by the Governor to the Senate of the University for certain purposes? That I have never seen.

N. D.
Stenhouse,
Esq.
17 Aug., 1858.

15. Will you look at the deed of grant? This is dated 18th of January, 1855.
16. That is subsequent to the passing of the Affiliated Colleges Act? Yes.
17. If you look to a certain clause of that deed, you will find it stated that the deed is granted for four denominations, who are specifically named? Yes; I see the Church of England and Ireland, the Church of Rome, the Church of Scotland, and the Wesleyan Methodists, are the four denominations mentioned.
18. You will observe that the deed of grant conveys the land to these four denominations? I observe.
19. How do you reconcile that deed with the Affiliated Colleges Act, or have you any remark or suggestion to make with reference to it? I do not believe there is any process of logic by which the grant can be reconciled with the Act. Such discrepancies, however, arise occasionally from the carelessness of draughtsmen.
20. There is a great discrepancy between the Act and the deed? Yes. The latter completely neutralizes the former. I have noticed similar or striking variances between other grants and Acts. For instance, there are such inconsistencies between the Act and the grant relating to the property formerly belonging to the Australian Library, that under some peculiar circumstances I found great difficulty for years in recommending the title to purchasers. The variance now in question must have arisen from an oversight of the conveyancer. It is a serious defect. I am not prepared to say that the grant is a nullity; but it should have been drawn in strict conformity with the terms of the Act. That is the rule.
21. Could you offer any suggestion, or give the Committee any information, how this mistake could be corrected, and the wrong created redressed? From what I have heard, I believe that the grant embodies what was originally the spirit of the Act, until it was amended, at Dr. Lang's suggestion; and as the variance may have arisen from some confusion in the mind of the draughtsmen as to the full import of the alteration, and can, at all events, be regarded only as a mistake, I cannot doubt that the defect may be remedied, and it certainly ought.
22. You are now referring to the first copy of the Act or Bill which the Legislature amended? Yes; it was in the amended form of the Act that the large clause admitting all Presbyterians was substituted for the original restricting clause. The blunder, as I have said, is not without precedent.
23. In establishing a Presbyterian College do you think it desirable to have the co-operation of all the different bodies of Presbyterians? Most decidedly. It is a matter of much regret to every well-disposed Presbyterian that greater unanimity has not been secured.
24. Was your co-operation individually requested upon this preliminary Committee, previously to the public meeting of the 5th of April? It was not. I suppose I was considered too obscure a person to merit that honor.
25. Were you present at the public meeting held on the 5th April, in Castlereagh-street? Yes.
26. Is it a fact, as publicly stated by a preceding witness, that the Rev. Dr. Lang proposed to move an amendment on the first resolution, but was prevented, by the Chairman, from doing so? It is a fact that he was prevented, much, I think, to the regret of many who feel a deep interest in the cause of Christianity.
27. Do you think it would be desirable, referring to the prospectus for establishing a Presbyterian College, that votes should be given to subscribers for as low a sum as possible, say £2 to £5? I can scarcely determine what should be the minimum.
28. But you think it should be low? The College should be impressed, as far as possible, with a popular character, so as to harmonize with the great academical institutions of Scotland.
29. To make it useful as far as possible? Yes, it would be well to make it as useful and accessible as possible to all classes of Presbyterians.
30. What is your opinion with regard to what should be done by the Government in the present state of the Presbyterian College affair? I think that, to rectify the discrepancy, a new Act should be passed. It would, I suppose, be easily obtained.
31. Do you think it necessary to have an Act passed to correct the mistake made in the deed of grant? It seems to me that there is no other course for curing the defect.
32. Do you think application should be made to the Government, on the part of the Presbyterians, to introduce such an Act? Yes, I do. The present state of the matter is most unsatisfactory; if allowed to continue it would not be creditable to those who are interested in a subject of such importance. The Legislature will at once perceive that more care should have been taken in framing the grant.
33. You think the duty of bringing in that Act, and passing it through, should devolve on the Government, as the error was made by them? I do. I think the Government is the source from which any attempt to rectify this error should proceed.
34. Would you recommend that application should be made by the Presbyterians generally—I mean those that are discontented and not satisfied with the present state of the College question? Yes; I think the Government may very properly be put in motion by such a proceeding.
35. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think that if other parties, not in connection with the Synod of Australia, knew that the deed of grant was in existence it was likely they would have subscribed as they have done? Do you suppose now that these parties would have subscribed—parties in connection with the Synod of Eastern Australia and other sections of the Presbyterian Church—had they known the existence of the deed of grant;—do you think they would have come forward as they have? I don't know who the subscribers are; but I think it probable that many of them would on that ground have declined to subscribe, as I presume that many of them do not belong to the Established Church of Scotland.
36. Suppose they co-operated under the present arrangements, could not the Synod of Australia displace them according to the Act? I should think they could; but I do not believe the Synod of Australia was aware of the discrepancy. If they had been so, they would not have invited members of other persuasions to co-operate.
37. I think you said you were conversant with the working of the different Colleges in Scotland: are you aware of what the duty of the Principals of the Colleges was? I can speak only only of the University of Edinburgh, and not distinctly of the duties of the Principals. The Principal in my time was Dr. Baird and after him Dr. John Lee—they were Doctors of Divinity. I believe the Principals were understood to be more closely connected with the Theological than with any other Faculty in the University.

N. D.
Stenhouse,
Esq.

17 Aug., 1858.

38. Not confined to the secular management? Certainly not. But I cannot well define what their duties were.

39. Then it is not necessary that the Principal in this College should be an ordained minister? I think it is not necessary that he should; and, to avoid all appearance of exclusiveness, it might be as well that he should not.

40. By Dr. Aldcorn: Is not the Principal considered Primarius Professor of Divinity, although he never teaches divinity? I believe he is present at the opening of the Hall, and offers up a prayer.

41. Do you think a College could be legally constituted under that grant, while the party to whom the grant was made did not consent; or, assuming the various different sects—the Free Church and other bodies—co-operated, do you think they could legally constitute a College and assume the government of that College? I think they could not.

42. Do you think, seeing the condition of the English Universities, where there is, in fact, no Theological Faculty in either of the great Universities, that the Presbyterians by that Act must have a Theological Faculty? Certainly not.

43. By Mr. Marks: Do you think it desirable that a Theological Chair should be established? I think the time may arrive when it will be desirable to establish one; when all sects of Presbyterians will be united more closely in support of the cardinal principles of the Presbyterian faith.

44. In the present age? I cannot say when. Even in Scotland, as I have already mentioned, each of the principal sections of the Presbyterian College insists that its theological students shall attend its own Theological Professor.

45. By Dr. Aldcorn: Suppose a Theological Faculty were established in this College, does it follow as a matter of course that the Principal should be connected with or fill the Theological Chair? No, I think not.

46. It is not essential that the Principal should fill the Theological Chair? Not according to the language of the Act.

47. Have you taken any part in the effort to establish a Presbyterian College? No. But I had the honor to be elected a member of the Rev. Dr. Lang's Committee.

48. Are you acquainted with the prospectus which originated at the meeting of the 5th of April? I have looked at it.

49. Do you think in the basis proposed in that prospectus, the several bodies of the Presbyterian Church could unite, and would unite in establishing a College? I did not study it with care; but I should say they would not.

50. What course should be adopted, under existing circumstances, for the establishment of a Presbyterian College: Assuming there would be some enactment passed by which this deed of grant is reconciled with the Act—supposing all the difficulty to be cleared away, arising from the difference between the Act and the grant—I suppose it is a discrepancy that can be reconciled under the circumstances: As matters now stand, what course should be adopted? I think I partly answered that question in reply to questions of other gentlemen. In the first place, I think it would be well for the Presbyterians interested to make application to the Government to have an Act passed to reconcile the discrepancy between the Act and the deed.

51. Granted. Supposing that were accomplished? If that were accomplished, it would be proper to call a public meeting, which all Presbyterians should be invited to attend. Some measure should then be proposed, with the view of inducing all parties to co-operate in establishing the proposed College.

52. What should that measure be—what should be the constitution of the College? I am not prepared to say. I think however that the management of the College should not be confined to clergymen; I believe there are many laymen as earnest as the clergy in the cause of Christianity. My profession gives me ample opportunities for testing that fact.

53. By the Chairman: Don't you think laymen agree on general principles better than clergymen? Yes.

54. I think you were elected a member of the Committee at the general meeting held on the 5th of April? I heard my name mentioned.

55. Were you ever consulted about it? Never.

56. Did you ever act? Never.

57. Had you any reasons for declining? I did not approve of the proceedings of the meeting.

58. By Mr. Dickson: Have you been long aware of the discrepancy between the Act and the deed of grant? Only recently.

59. I think I understood you to say it was most important that the Presbyterians should be unanimous? Yes; very important.

60. You think the Act has a tendency to prevent that unanimity which ought to exist? The deed in its present form would, I think, be a serious bar to unanimity.

61. Do you think in altering the Act it ought to refer exclusively to Presbyterians, or any party occupying the same position? I think it ought to apply to Presbyterians exclusively.

62. Have you any method of forming an opinion whether or not the two Synods would have united had they been acquainted with the present nature of the deed? I think a member of the Church of Scotland should have no reason for excluding any member of a different section.

63. What I am desirous of knowing is, whether if the members of the Established Church of Scotland and the Free Church knew the nature of the deed—whether they would have united in getting up this College which was attempted to be got up? No, I don't think they would—certainly not. I misunderstood your previous question.

64. By the Chairman: Have you any other suggestion to make to the Committee? I have no other suggestion to make.

FRIDAY, 27 AUGUST, 1858.

Present:—

MR. MARKS,
MR. ALDCORN,MR. GORDON,
MR. JONES.

SAMUEL DEANE GORDON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

The Rev. Alexander Salmon called in and examined:—

- The Rev. A. Salmon. 1. By the Chairman: You are a Minister of the Free Church of Scotland? Of the Free Church.
- 27 Aug., 1858. 2. In connexion with the Synod of Eastern Australia? Yes.
3. Are you acquainted personally with the working of Colleges and Universities in Scotland? I may say so; I was educated in one, and I have often visited others, and know something of the procedure that goes on in them.
4. Would you be kind enough to inform the Committee what your own observation was with regard to the supervision exercised in the Colleges in Scotland? The supervision, Sir? I am not quite sure what is the meaning of that.
5. With regard to systematic religious instruction—whether all students are subjected to attend the Theological Faculty? Oh! no, they are not; they are not at all, so far as my experience and knowledge goes. The fact is, that in what are called the gown classes in Glasgow, where I attended, all the religion that is there is this—and I think it was a very good thing—the Professor opened the classes, whether Latin, Greek, logic, moral philosophy, or natural philosophy, with prayer; but until you entered into the Divinity Hall there was no direct interference with regard to religion at all.
6. Have you looked carefully into the Affiliated Colleges Act, in connexion with the University of Sydney? Yes, Sir, I may venture to say I have looked very carefully into it; at the time that it was passed, and for the four years since, I have been considering it from time to time, and earnestly considering it.
7. What meaning do you attach to the phrase “systematic religious instruction,” in the preamble of that Bill? I can hardly conceive of two meanings being taken out of it, or founded on it. I understand that systematic religious instruction is doctrinal instruction according to the tenets of the particular sect, whatever that might be, and of course it is unlimited. Systematic religious instruction in a Church of England College I would understand to be the teaching of the Thirty-nine Articles and her episcopal form of government, and everything else that is distinctive of the Church of England; and the same in regard to Presbyterianism—the Confession of Faith, the Catechisms, Larger and Shorter, and all connected with the Presbyterian form of church government; and of course Congregationalism the same, and Mormonism the same. Systematic religious instruction is the doctrine taught by that particular section of the church and all connected with it, and all arising out of it—precepts and procedure of every kind.
8. Do you think it desirable in a Presbyterian College affiliated to the University of Sydney that there should be a Theological Faculty for training up candidates for the ministry in the first instance? I am very strongly inclined to think that we are not in a position to have that at present, however desirable it might be.
9. By Mr. Aldcorn: On other grounds? I do not see that it is practicable to have a rightly constituted Divinity Hall in the present state of Presbyterian parties in this Colony.
10. By the Chairman: You think it impracticable, from the differences which at present exist amongst the Presbyterian community: is that what I understand you to mean? Yes, Sir. I would object on other grounds still, but I think you will not misunderstand me; your question is merely now as to what Presbyterians would do, or desire, if the general Act did not encourage indiscriminate religious endowment. You are merely asking me now about what would be desirable for Presbyterians if they were united. Although they were united I have still the same objection to that Act—still the same objection, because it places religious error and religious truth on the same foundation, and makes provision for teaching both equally. Although the Presbyterians were united to-morrow I should have that objection to it.
11. By Dr. Aldcorn: Besides the indiscriminate endowments, you would consider that the present divided state of the Presbyterian Church would be a reason for not having a Theological Faculty in the first instance? Yes, in the first instance.
12. Is it necessary that the Principal should be an ordained minister if the College was established under this Affiliated Colleges Act? So far as I understand the Act, it is not limited to that, and, therefore, it appears to me that the parties raising the College could take their own way in regard to that matter. So far as I understand the Act, they are not restricted to appoint as Principal, or Warden, or whatever name he has given to him, an ordained minister of religion, and there being no legislation in the Act for it, then the parties raising the College, I think, are left to their own discretion.
13. Have you ever seen, or are you aware of the terms of the deed of grant conveying the land to the Senate of the University by the Government? No, Sir, I am sorry to say that I have not.
14. To the Senate of the University—the deed conveying the ground from the Government to the Senate of the University for college purposes? No, that has escaped me; I was not aware until now that there was such a deed.
15. You are not aware then that the whole of the land has been granted for the exclusive use of the four denominations receiving state aid from the Government? I am not aware of any such thing, and I think from the Act that that is impossible.
16. You think if such a deed of grant does exist that it is not in accordance with the Affiliated Colleges Act? I think clearly not; and although I have not, as I have said to you, attended attended to that deed, I remember historically that objections were made in the Council to the passing of this Act, when it contained such a restriction; and I must be greatly mistaken if that restriction was not struck out of the Affiliated Colleges Act in consequence of the resistance made to it, and then it was thoroughly understood throughout the whole Colony that that restriction was set aside by this Act.

The Rev.
A. Salmon.
27 Aug., 1858.

17. According to the best of your recollection then, when the first draft of the Bill was introduced to the Legislature, these four denominations were mentioned in it, but were afterwards struck out? That is my strong conviction.

18. Leaving it open to any denomination who might subscribe the required sum according to the Act, and otherwise place themselves in a position to demand from the Government both the deed of grant and the same State aid under that Act? Yes, Sir, that is my strong impression; and were I not just directly examined by the Committee of Parliament, I would state it more strongly still.

19. By Dr. Aldcorn: That is the fact? That is the strong impression in my mind, because it was a matter that I felt deeply interested in, and paid attention to every stage of the proceedings in regard to it.

20. By the Chairman: If you will refer to that part of the deed of grant, which is a subsequent deed to the passing of the Act, I think you will observe that the land is granted to the four denominations at present receiving State aid? Well, Sir, I am very sorry that I never saw that Act before; I never heard a word of it being in existence.

21. The deed? The deed; but I think I cannot doubt, from even now reading it hurriedly, as I have done, that it confines actually the land to the four salaried denominations.

22. Do you think that any of the ministers of the Synod of Eastern Australia, that is, the Free Church Synod, were aware of such a deed being in existence at the time they gave their co-operation for the establishment of this Presbyterian College? I could not answer that question. I think it is not likely that any of them knew; still I cannot answer for any but myself; but I am very sure they did not know, because they must have seen that the deed of grant excludes the Free Church, and we could only participate in its supposed benefits as a part of, or in connexion with, the Established Church of Scotland.

23. But you were not aware that there was any such deed in existence at the time that the Committee was appointed by the Synod of Eastern Australia to take up the College question? I never imagined, never conceived that there was such a settlement or deed of grant as that.

24. By Mr. Aldcorn: Have you thought of what should be the curriculum of education in such a College, taking the whole present circumstances of the Presbyterian body into account;—supposing that the College was instituted, have you thought what should be the curriculum of education, and what the whole system of the University ought to be, taking into account the divided state of the Presbyterian body at present, and the various views with regard to State endowment? Well, Sir, to do anything like justice to myself and my own views upon that subject, it would require a good deal of explanation; but I think that this examination is confined to the provisions of this existing Colleges Act.

25. By the Chairman: I should like to have your opinion—you have the privilege of appending anything to your evidence? I did intend just to have made a very short statement in writing of my objections to this Colleges Act, and put it in whether it was taken or not, but I have not had time. I think I can state them very shortly: I first of all object to this Act—the Affiliated Colleges Act—on the ground of indiscriminate religious endowment—that it makes provision compulsorily for teaching religious error as well as religious truth, and places them both on the same footing. That is my first objection to the Act—that it places both of them on the same footing. Secondly I object to this Colleges' Act because the curricula of study in the University, and in the College, run pari passu, that “whenever,” as it is said here, “whenever a student enrolls in the College he must enrol in the University “at the same time,”—to my mind rendering one or other of these institutions comparatively useless. If a student must attend four hours the lectures in the University, and prepare for his examinations the following day, and just carrying out the whole business of study with these four hours of lectures, I would like to know what time he has for taking advantage of a College in the same day, and in the same week. I venture to say to this Committee that anybody who knows what college education is, will say that four hours attending lectures will require the whole of the hours of that day to prepare in connection with those lectures; and if that is done in the University, then what is the use of the College? How is it possible, physically, that a young man can take advantage of the College? That is a very strong objection to it, in my opinion. In short, it is just a perfect waste of money to lay out £20,000 for an institution of that kind, that can really be of no service, excepting through tutorial assistance, and you can do all that without a College. This is not our idea in Scotland of a College, by any means.

26. Do you think a College of this kind might not be rendered useful as a place to receive young men whose parents were living at a distance, where they would have boarding and tutorial education? I do think so. But let it get its proper name: do not let us deceive ourselves with a College, but call it a boarding-house; and all the advantages that could be derived from these so-called, but mis-named, Colleges would, and ought to be obtained at a twentieth of the expense.

27. With tutorial education? With tutorial aid. Let it get its proper name, and then cut out this systematic religious instruction. Every one could do what they liked in that case.

28. Are you aware that the Colleges in the Universities of England are, to a certain degree, of that character—they, no doubt, receive a large portion of the education in the tutorial form, and almost entirely in the Colleges as distinct from the University? Yes, Sir, I am quite aware of that; and I am aware at the same time that Sir William Hamilton has demolished the whole system, denounced it, and exposed it to such an extent, that I believe improvements are making, and have been made, by the Parliament of Great Britain.

29. By Mr. Aldcorn: The Commissioners, you know, have overturned it of late? Yes; then,

The Rev.
A. Salmon.
27 Aug., 1858.

then, why the Parliament of New South Wales should begin to reinstate an exploded system—why in a new country we should begin to reorganise and establish an exploded system in Britain—that is what I cannot understand.

30. Do you think that Episcopalians here, and especially Episcopalian ministers, would understand from the term “systematic religious instruction” a course of divinity or theology? I think if they understood the Act they would understand it in that sense. I do not see what systematic religious instruction means but doctrinal, and everything connected with the sect to which they belong. I quite grant you that all Scotchmen will understand it so.

31. But what I want to bring out is, whether if you ask an Episcopalian minister here what he means by systematic religious instruction, he would understand it so? It would be quite impossible to answer that question how an English minister would understand it. I never had any doubt about the meaning of the phrase used in the Act.

32. By Mr. Marks: Are you aware whether the Presbyterians of the Colony have taken any steps to establish a College in connexion with the University? Yes; I am aware that movements have been made in that direction.

33. Did the body that you are connected with take any steps towards establishing this College? We first of all had negotiations with the other Synod in regard to the matter.

34. Was the matter initiated by your body, or by the other Synod? If I do not mistake, it was initiated by laymen belonging to both sides. I do not know much about it, but that is my impression—that certain laymen of both Synods met together, and thought it would be a right thing to do, and that then there was a Committee appointed by the one Synod, and a Committee appointed by the other.

35. To co-operate? To co-operate.

36. And did they act jointly towards carrying out the object in any way? That I can hardly say of my own personal knowledge, because I declined to have anything to do with it, on several grounds. I heard, of course, from brethren what was going on, but I am not entitled to speak of my own knowledge beyond that previous part.

37. From what you know do you think proper steps were taken to secure the co-operation of all the sections of the Presbyterian Church in the Colony? No; that I have a strong opinion upon.

38. That proper steps were not taken? Yes, were not taken; but I may venture to go a little further, and say, I fear that, even if steps were not taken, that the procedure was adopted which would have the effect to exclude.

39. You are of opinion that procedure was adopted calculated to exclude sections of the Presbyterian Church? Certain sections of the Presbyterian Church.

40. And do you think that manner of procedure was designedly taken in order to have that effect? It is always dangerous, and generally wrong to impute motives; but I can hardly think otherwise than that there was a design. I do not say so; but the whole observed procedure appears to me to justify that conclusion.

41. What sections of the Presbyterian Church do you think this procedure was calculated to exclude, or intended to exclude? I am quite willing to give all the information to the Committee that may be useful; but I do not wish to be more minute than is needful. However, I frankly say my conviction was that it was designed to exclude Dr. Lang and his Synod—that is my impression and my conviction.

42. The object of this Committee is to inquire into certain allegations made by Dr. Lang on behalf of the body with which he is connected, and, of course, that is a most material part of the evidence? I was not aware of that; but it makes no difference.

43. You see the petition before you, and your evidence should properly bear upon that petition? I did not see it, except in a newspaper. That conviction, I may say, was so strong in my mind that that was one of the reasons, along with the others that I have given, why I declined to co-operate.

44. The body with which you are connected are not aiding as a body in establishing this College—as a Synod? No.

45. But are there any of the ministers in connection with that Synod assisting in this movement? That, of my own personal knowledge, I do not know; but there are several who expressed to me their entire approval of the movement. I do not know what they are doing.

46. But are you not aware that there are some ministers of the Synod with which you are connected aiding in this matter? As to actual aiding I do not know, but they speak to me individually as entirely approving of co-operation with the other Synod in the College matter.

47. And you are not assisting in any way the movement that is at present going on? In no way.

48. You object to the principle upon which the College is based, and you have objections on account of the mode of procedure taken in the first instance to establish the College? Yes.

49. By not taking proper steps to secure the co-operation of all the sections of the Presbyterian Church? Yes, Sir, distinctly.

50. By Mr. Marks: Do you think it desirable a Presbyterian College should be established, under the present circumstances? Of course, I would like to see the very highest education given to our Presbyterian youth; but my own conviction is that we have not the number of young men that would justify so large an expenditure at present as £20,000, and the keeping up of classes; because this Act makes provision only for a Principal or Warden. Now, for many years to come I suspect there would be no need for anybody else but that one; but if it is to be a College we would need at least three Professors beside the Principal, and even that would be a narrow equipment for an effective Presbyterian College. And, so far as I can see, (I know that I am liable to the objection of narrowness in the expenditure of money for education,) there is no such necessity. I would rejoice to see money expended in the fullest way on education; but still I would like to get money's worth; and if you lay out £20,000 just now on a Presbyterian College and all the rest of the annual equipment, and you have ten or twelve or fourteen students only, the cost will be enormous, and the advantage not at all equal to the expenditure. That is one view I take of it.

51. You think, then, there would be no commensurate benefit for the outlay? I do think so.

52. And it is your opinion that the establishment of a College is not desirable under present circumstances? Taking all into account I wish to guard myself there, not that I would not desire to see a College established, and a full equipment, and at the earliest possible moment, but at present I do not see that the return would justify the expenditure under this Act—that is, the mere money ground of it. Then would the Committee just allow me to put before them this other view of it: that if the ultimate object, as it ought to be of University and Collegiate education, is to raise the standard very high of classical and scientific learning, the Colleges ought to be an intermediate step between the grammar schools and the Universities. That is my impression of what a College ought to be. Get the best grammar schools in this Colony you can get, raise up the students to a far higher platform than they are now when they enter the University, send them into the College, and give them three years there under proper masters, and then let them enter the University from a far higher platform than they can ever do by the proposed method.

53. Supposing the large majority of Presbyterians in this Colony thought it desirable to establish a College at present, what course do you think would be the best for them to take? Well, it is a little difficult with my views of co-operation with any Synod here in direct connexion with the Established Church of Scotland. If that connexion were broken off voluntarily and publicly, then I would say a meeting of all the sections of the Presbyterian Church should be convened, and not set up a Theological Faculty, but set up a College in the style I have attempted to indicate.

54. Would you, on account of conscientious scruples, object to receive money for secular education? I have great doubts about that; but I confess that, for a year past, I have been coming gradually to the conclusion, that in a country like this I would prefer the National System of education, and let every religious sect make its own provision for the religious element. I am shut up to that.

55. Would not your objections, then, to union with the Synod of Australia—a body in connexion with the Church of Scotland—be removed if the Principal of this College was a layman and no Theological Faculty established in it? Of course it would. I am sure I do not like to talk very much to the Committee; but one great objection I would have to a Theological Faculty in connection with that College is this—that we might have men from the Established Church of Scotland preparing our young men for the ministry; and we hold that they are not sound teachers in theology in some important respects. We object to their teaching and to their practical expounding of the Confession of Faith.

56. You think, then, that the sections of the Presbyterian Church might, under present circumstances, unite in establishing the College if it were not necessary that the Principal should be an ordained minister, and that no Theological Faculty should be established within the College? Not a College ruled by this Act.

57. Not a College ruled by this Act? No.

58. Do you think that Act renders it necessary that the Principal should be an ordained minister? No; but that systematic religious instruction shall be conveyed there of all kinds.

59. And these words you think render the establishment of a Theological Chair necessary, in accordance with the terms of the Act? I think that the Colleges would be left to do very much as they inclined; but I must be guided by the terms of the Act, which make provision for the inculcation of religious error as well as truth.

60. If the Legislature should strike out these words would your objection then be removed? Largely, when you tell me the 9th clause has been removed; and if these words were removed I do not see any great objection to the Act. And then I observe that even these words, to which I still strongly object, being in the preamble, and not in an enacting clause, do not present so strong an objection as they would otherwise do. My objection would still remain to the curricula of study in the University and the Colleges running pari passu, rendering one or other of the institutions comparatively useless, and that at such an enormous cost.

61. By Mr. Aldcorn: If I understand you aright, in the statement you made your view then of a College would be an intermediate establishment between the Grammar School and the University? Yes, Sir.

62. Then you would contemplate that a high classical education should be conducted there? Yes.

63. And the elements of science taught? Yes. That is the only meaning of a College that I know (the University takes the highest point, and gives honors)—by every process to raise the scale of education before the students come to the point of taking honors.

64. And especially that the students should be very fully prepared for the University, because that has been the error in the Scotch Universities? Yes, to some extent; but I do not mean to affirm general defectiveness in the preparation in Scotland by any means. My answer is, that the Colleges should be employed to prepare as fully as possible students for the University.

The Rev. Hugh Darling called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a minister of the United Church of Scotland? Yes.
2. Are you aware that some steps have been taken to establish a Presbyterian College in connection with the University of Sydney? Yes.

3. Has your co-operation been asked with reference to this intended College? Yes.
4. Did you decline to give any co-operation with the other ministers and laymen who are taking active steps to establish a College? Yes, at once.

5. Perhaps you have no objection to state to the Committee your reasons for declining? None whatever. The party that first waited on me was the Reverend Mr. Milne, of Paddington,

The Rev.
A. Salmon.

as a deputation from the Committee met at the time. I asked him upon what principle this College was to be established. "Oh!" he said, "it was to be endowed for theological purposes." "Then I can have nothing to do with it" I said.

6. Have you looked into the Affiliated Colleges Act at all? Yes, I have read it carefully.

7. What meaning do you attach to the phrase in the Preamble of the Bill "systematic religious instruction"? Well, the meaning I would understand by that is, that the Principal, who is to receive £500 a-year out of the State Exchequer, is to be an instructor of systematic religious instruction. That is the meaning I attach to these words.

8. If a Presbyterian College was established at present in the Colony, do you think it necessary that this Principal should be an ordained minister of religion? No, not necessarily.

9. Do you think it either necessary or desirable, in the present divided state of the Presbyterian body, that a Theological Faculty should be established in the College? In the divided state of the Presbyterian body in Sydney at the present day, it is neither desirable, nor could it be accomplished, unless the Government says, "We establish this College, and if others will not agree, we will make each one pay for it."

10. You think it would be almost impossible to establish a Theological Faculty that would be satisfactory to the general body of Presbyterians in the Colony? Altogether impossible, if the Principal is to be paid out of the State funds—that is to say, to have all the Presbyterians in this Colony united.

11. Do I understand you that your chief objection would be removed if the Principal of the College was not receiving Government pay, and that he was not teaching theology? The Principal not endowed for the purpose of teaching theology or systematic religious instruction—remove that and I am satisfied. I will meet any party on as broad a basis as any one.

12. Are you acquainted personally with the working of the Colleges or Universities in Scotland? Well, I attended one.

13. You have been a student? Yes, in the Edinburg College.

14. Can you inform the Committee what sort of supervision was exercised in the College of Edinburgh with reference to the students? There was the Principal (Lee), he was a Minister of the Gospel at one time. The first day on which the Students assembled we all met in one of the class rooms, and he delivered a lecture to us about diligence, the importance of classical education, logic, philosophy, mathematics, and natural philosophy. He afterwards finished his address with inculcating above all things the principle and the practise of religion. That was the first beginning which he did every year. Then the different Professors appointed the days on which they would receive the students, and we went and joined them, and attended their classes. We did not see the Principal again at all until the end of the season, when he attended at the distribution of the prizes in each class on different days. Over and above the classical and philosophical classes there was a Theological Faculty in connection with the Church of Scotland in the said College—the College of Edinburgh—supported out of the State funds.

15. But only those students who were connected with the Established Church of Scotland attended that theological teaching? Yes; they judged for themselves. Of course it depended much on the Professors whether a student of another denomination attended to hear his lectures. I attended some time Dr. Chalmers; but I never joined myself as a student. It is understood when a student joins himself to a Professor that he is in connection with the Church of Scotland. He may attend any class that pleases him, but he is to state to the Professor whether he is studying for that church or not.

16. Have you ever seen, or looked into the deed of grant conveying to the Senate of the University, from the Government, certain lands for the erection of a College in connection with the University of Sydney? That is the £10,000 on condition that £10,000 more are raised.

17. No, that is part of the Act. I am speaking of the deed of grant which has been made by the Government, conveying certain lands to certain denominations to erect Colleges upon in connection with the University—have you ever seen that deed of grant? No.

18. You are not aware of the terms of it? I am not aware of its terms.

19. What do you understand from that Affiliated Colleges Act, with reference to the Government giving land for the purpose of building Colleges—I mean, to assist in the erection of these Colleges—what do you understand with reference to that Act—is it intended for only certain denominations, or is it your opinion that it is intended for any denomination who may claim under it? I consider that it is the duty of Government to erect Colleges, Universities, and Schools, and to endow Professors for the teaching of all secular knowledge; but I consider the Government has no right to go beyond that. When you come to the province of religion—that is between God and a man's own conscience.

20. Yes; but I think you scarcely understood my question: it was; whether, under this Affiliated Colleges Act, any denomination could claim land to erect a College and assistance from Government, if it complied with the terms of that Act—whether you understand the Act in that way or not? Yes, in that way, as long as that phrase "systematic religious instruction" is in the Act. That is the reason that other bodies with their consciences cannot agree or act along with those parties that can take State aid for the endowment of Theological Professors.

21. But if there is a deed of grant giving the four denominations now receiving State aid, which is subsequent to the passing of that Act, do you think it is in conformity with the provisions of that Act? No.

22. You think that any denomination may claim to have lands granted, and an equal amount from the Government to the subscription provided, to the amount of £10,000? Yes.

23. By Mr. Aldcorn: What would be your views of the curriculum of education to be given in this College, supposing it was established by the consent of all Presbyterians—what would be the forms in the University? I would consider the College, in the first place, was for the young young men there to be taken care of instead of going into lodgings—for obtaining a dwelling, and other necessities of life, and then all those young men attending that College, whether they belonged to the State Church, or to the Free Church, or to the Synod of New South Wales, or to the United Presbyterian Church, that they would be under the supervision of the Principal of the College, but that every student would be on equal terms there. If they wished for theological training they would go to the minister of their own body that appointed and supported the Professor of Theology. That is my idea of it. As for the curriculum—we attended five years at the Hall. In our body the curriculum of the Church of Scotland has four years, but you can miss one year. I do not know exactly the curriculum of the Free Church, because I never had an opportunity of attending.

The Rev.
H. Darling.

27 Aug., 1853.

24. Do you suppose that in the present state with reference to the divisions in the Presbyterian body that it would be desirable at all to have a Theological Faculty? Not just now; not till there is union amongst the Presbyterians of New South Wales. I think, it ought to be ignored because it would only cause the body that had the largest number of votes to be the body that would put in their Professor.

25. Seeing that you think disunion among the Presbyterians is one great cause why a Theological Faculty should not be established—what do you think it is that stands most in the way of a union being formed? I think it is State aid given to some in one way, and the opinion of others that State aid ought to be given in their way, and the opinion of others that the State has nothing to do in giving aid to the support of religion at all. There is nothing with respect to doctrines, government, or discipline.

26. By Mr. Marks: You said you had been invited to co-operate in the establishment of a Presbyterian College? Yes.

27. And you objected to the principle on which the College was based? Yes.

28. That is, to the principle of the Act and the principle of the prospectus? The principle of the Act is, as I stated with reference to systematic religious instruction, being endowed by the State.

29. Do you think a Presbyterian College necessary at present? Not in the present state of the Presbyterian Church.

30. But provided the co-operation of all the distinct bodies of Presbyterians could be secured, do you think it necessary? I think it would be most desirable for the benefit of the youths of the Colony.

31. Do you think the terms of the Affiliated Colleges Act render it necessary that the Principal should be an ordained minister of religion? I do not think it necessary.

32. The terms of the Act do not render it necessary? No.

33. And you think it is not necessary? I think it is not necessary.

34. And do you think it necessary that a Theological Faculty should be established within the College? Not just now—it is not necessary at all just now.

35. Well, if these two points were settled, supposing that the College was based on the principle that the Principal of the College should not be an ordained minister of religion, and that there should be no Theological Faculty established, your objection to co-operation with other bodies of Presbyterians would then be removed? So far, I would say, that if the College was on such a basis that a Theological Faculty could be appointed with the consent of all the Presbyterians, it would be most desirable at once to have theological Professors; for here would be a number of youths met together, and they would have no spiritual instructor to superintend them. But I cannot see how it is possible that such an one could be appointed just now in the divided state of the Presbyterians.

36. You then would find no difficulty in co-operation if the College was based on the principle I have just stated; that is, that the Principal should not be an ordained minister of religion, and that no Theological Faculty should be established? In the meantime.

37. You could co-operate? I could co-operate, though difficulties might arise in discussion. It is not necessary that the Principal be a minister of the Gospel; but to this I would not object if he (whether minister or layman) were qualified for the duties of the office.

38. Is there any other observation you wish to make, or evidence you desire to offer to the Committee? Well, I think it is desirable there should be a union among the Presbyterians. In so far as I am concerned, I am on friendly terms with all of them. If there was only a broad basis on which we could meet on the same platform on equal terms, I would have no objection to a union among us to-morrow if State aid was done away with.

Richard O'Connor, Esq., Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, called in and examined:—

R. O'Connor,
Esq.

1. By the Chairman: In the course of examination of one of the witnesses by this Committee, after he had closed his evidence he was requested in the usual way to say if he had any suggestions to make to the Committee, or any further evidence to give. He then said that he had a written paper which he wished to read to the Committee, and desired that they should accept it as part of the evidence. He was requested by the Chairman to hand in the written paper to the short-hand writer in order that it might be attached as an Appendix to his evidence. This he declined to do, and insisted upon reading it, and that it should form part of his evidence. He was permitted to read it, which occupied considerable time. What the Committee now wish to know from you is, whether it is in accordance with Parliamentary practice that written statements should be read and taken as part of the evidence of a witness, or whether they should be attached as Appendices, or whether they should be appended to the evidence at all? The evidence of a witness personally present before a Committee should in all cases be orally given. It enables the Committee to question the witness upon any statement he may make; it divests the statement a witness may make before a Committee of the appearance and the effect of an ex parte statement; that is to say,—it does not allow the witness unchallenged to make statements which, perhaps, by a little investigation and cross-examination, might be found otherwise than as might unquestioned be made in a written document.

document. It is against all Parliamentary practice undoubtedly that any witness should read and hand in a written statement to a Committee and insist that that written statement should be taken as part of an evidence which ought only to be oral. If a witness hand in a written statement, it is in the option of the Committee to receive it or not; and, if the Committee do receive it, it should be as an ordinary Appendix, and the short-hand writer should state that the witness handed in a written statement, and then make reference to it as an Appendix—say Appendix A, or Appendix B. By confining a witness to oral statements, a Committee never loses control over him, in so far as its power extends to investigate closely every statement he makes. If a written statement be handed in, in this way, it is placed as an Appendix, and goes simply for what it is worth as a statement, unquestioned, handed in by the witness. But, if it were allowed to form part of the evidence, it would have the effect of an oral statement which the Committee had allowed to pass unquestioned. It would have, therefore, more effect than was due to it, and it would be divesting the Committee of proper power and control—in fact, the Committee, if it allowed this, would be relinquishing its own proper and true function of sifting to the bottom every statement made by a witness. When a witness hands in a written statement it is, if the Committee agree to receive it, appended to his evidence, and goes for what it is worth as a simple ex parte statement made without question or challenge of any kind.

2, By Mr. Jones: Evidence, in fact, is taken under the same general rules as evidence in a court of law? Precisely. I would wish to say further in reference to this matter, that if this were allowed, it would be in the power of any witness to make use of a Committee as a privileged, far-reaching, and economical conduit for accusations, founded or unfounded, against any individual in the world. The Committee might cross-examine the witness afterwards; but the written statement being continuous, close, and connected, notwithstanding any subsequent desultory cross-examination of the witness, would have undue effect; whereas where a witness is confined to verbal statements, point by point, they are sifted by the Committee; and where a statement is challenged the witness is stopped. This is clearly the Parliamentary course of examination. If any other were allowed, Committees would find themselves involved very often in the investigation of matters wholly away from the true subject of their inquiry, and much time would be wasted, and much injury might be done to parties as defenceless as they might be blameless.

SYDNEY GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

(THIRD REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 24 June, 1858.

THE HON. SECRETARY OF THE SYDNEY GRAMMAR SCHOOL to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Sydney Grammar School,
24 February, 1859.*

SIR,

By direction of the Trustees of the Sydney Grammar School, I have the honor to transmit to you the Third Report of their proceedings, and of the condition of the School, for the year 1857, to be laid before His Excellency the Governor General and the Executive Council, in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

The School was opened on the 3rd of August, 1857. Its progress has been thus far as satisfactory as could be desired. The number of pupils has steadily increased. At the commencement there were 110; in the October quarter 120; since the re-assembling after the Christmas holidays, the roll has amounted to 180.

To meet the augmented numbers, the Trustees have been compelled to appoint two additional Classical or ordinary Masters. The following gentlemen have received these appointments:—W. Heaven, Esq., B.A., of Trinity College, Oxford; and Edward Blackmore, Esq., B.A., of Exeter College, Oxford.

In connexion with these arrangements, the classes of German, Geography, and Modern History, have been entrusted to one of the Masters who came out from England; a gentleman highly distinguished at home for his attainments in these departments of literature.

After the present quarter, and for some time to come, it is reasonable to expect a constant accession to our numbers. But this prosperity imposes upon the Trustees a corresponding obligation, which, without further assistance from the Government, they are totally unable to meet. The limits of accommodation for the pupils have been already reached. For, although perhaps 20 new boys might find sitting in the large School-room, yet considerable inconvenience has already been experienced from the want of those facilities for classification and separation which the extended character of the school course imperatively demands.

The attention of the Trustees was drawn to this subject before their last Report was submitted to the Government, and a plan was prepared at their request by Mr. Blacket, for the remedy of their most urgent wants. In the preparation of this design the strictest attention has been paid to economy: no details of ornament or luxury have been admitted; the only claims allowed have been those founded upon necessity or practical usefulness. But the execution, even the commencement of these additions, will be utterly impossible with the funds which the Trustees have at present at their disposal. From the annexed returns it will appear that the present Building Fund is exhausted by the contracts for the northern and southern wings, with their outbuildings; little or no margin is left for those contingencies to which every contract is liable. The revenue arising from the Fee Fund, together with the Annual Endowment, is not more than sufficient to defray the ordinary expenses. And a very slight increase of numbers next quarter will be attended with considerable difficulty. Indeed it is doubtful whether with the accommodation furnished by the present buildings applications can be entertained for a number exceeding 200 scholars.

From the report of the Architect, which the Trustees have the honor to append, it will be seen that the additions to which the Trustees have confined themselves will cost not less than £12,000. Of this sum, not less than £5,000 will be required for the building of an additional wing for class-rooms, now urgently needed, and for the completion of the out-buildings. Without these additions, the effectiveness of the institution, even in its present state, will be seriously compromised, and the sphere of its operations contracted to a limit which was certainly not contemplated by the Legislature at its foundation. The Trustees, therefore, have perfect confidence in requesting that the Government will cause to be added to the Estimates for the year 1858 at least the smaller of the two sums indicated above, (£5,000), in order that the Trustees may possess the material means of conducting to a successful issue an undertaking so auspiciously commenced.

No. 1.

MR. J. B. M'GUIGAN to THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S PRIVATE SECRETARY.

Willow Lodge, Bathurst,
2 February, 1857.

SIR,

I have the distinguished honor to forward to you, per this night's mail, a Petition of the Inhabitants of Bathurst, addressed to His Excellency the Governor General, (which, you will perceive, is signed by all the leading characters, Magistrates, &c., of this District,) praying that His Excellency the Governor General may be graciously pleased to cause to be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the year 1857 a sum of money sufficient for the foundation and endowment of a Grammar School in the Town of Bathurst; and I beg to express the hope that it may meet and receive from His Excellency a favorable reception on its merits.

I have, &c.,
J. B. M'GUIGAN.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,
Sydney.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

To His Excellency Sir William Thomas Denison, Knight, &c., Governor General in and over all Her Majesty's Colonies of New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia, and Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Territory of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.

The humble Petition of the undersigned members of the community of Bathurst, for themselves and on behalf of the Inhabitants of the Western Districts,—

MOST RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

That, amongst the many requirements of this District, and of its Inhabitants, there is not one which calls more eloquently, and pleads more urgently upon and for the Government for aid than the foundation and endowment of a superior Educational Establishment, or Grammar School, in the Town of Bathurst, for the benefit of the rising generation.

That your Petitioners beg leave to represent to your Excellency, that persons of limited means residing here cannot afford to send their children to Sydney for Education; and that, so far as concerns them, the University Colleges and Grammar Schools of that City are not of the least advantage.

That your Petitioners perceive, on looking over the Estimates for 1857, that an enormous proportion of the whole revenue is allotted for expenditure in Sydney, but cannot see that there is any sum whatever set down for the Public Works of this important District, or other expenditure, save only for payment of salaries to those Stipendiaries whose services are indispensable.

That your Petitioners respectfully submit that the mental training of the rising generation of this District is of far more importance, and more deserving of a Government expenditure, or vote of the public money, than the promotion of public works of Sydney, in this proportion, viz., that "mind is superior to matter."

That your Petitioners are aware that it would be superfluous to attempt an exposition of the advantages resulting from the establishment in this town of a Grammar School, feeling assured that in your Excellency's enlightened mind the education of the people holds the first place; and although many of your Excellency's friends say that the progress of our Railways is the object of your Excellency's deepest solicitude, yet your Petitioners beg to express the hope that the future generations of Australia may be enabled to say that the foundation and endowment of Grammar Schools in every district of the Colony was "the glory of your reign."

Wherefore, your Petitioners, for themselves, for the members of this community, and on behalf of the rising generation, most respectfully pray that your Excellency may be graciously pleased to place on the Supplementary Estimates for the year 1857 a sum of money sufficient for the purpose of founding and endowing a Grammar School in the Town of Bathurst.

And your Excellency's most humble Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c., &c.

Reference is hereby respectfully submitted to be made to the printed Estimates of the probable Expenditure of the Government for the year 1857.

No. 2.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to MR. J. B. M'GUIGAN.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 24 February, 1857.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd instant, forwarding a Petition from certain members of the community at Bathurst, on behalf of themselves and the inhabitants of the Western Districts, requesting that a sum may be placed on the Supplementary Estimates for 1857 sufficient for the purpose of founding and endowing a Grammar School in the Town of Bathurst.

2. In reply, I am desired to inform you, that by the Act of Council 18 Victoria, intituled, "An Act to incorporate and partially endow the Sydney Grammar School," provision is made for conferring on all classes and denominations of Her Majesty's subjects, resident in the Colony, the advantages of a regular and liberal course of education, and that for the carrying of this object into effect the sum of £20,000 is authorised to be issued out of the Public Treasury for the erection of suitable buildings, and an annual sum of £1,500 by way of permanent endowment for the Grammar School at Sydney.

It being thus contemplated that the establishment on a liberal and comprehensive scale of a Central Grammar School in Sydney, wherein provision is made for scholarships in the University, should be regarded, at any rate for the present, as an institution available for the whole Colony, it scarcely seems possible, under these circumstances, and with reference to the general financial arrangements for the promotion of education, to comply with the application transmitted, for a sum to be at this time placed on the Estimates for the establishment of a Grammar School at Bathurst.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

TENTH REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF NATIONAL EDUCATION IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

REPORT for the Year 1857.

To His Excellency SIR WILLIAM THOMAS DENISON, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Governor General in and over all Her Majesty's Colonies of New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia, and Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Territory of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

We, the Commissioners of National Education in New South Wales, beg to submit to your Excellency this our Tenth Report.

1.—NUMBER OF SCHOOLS IN OPERATION.

It will be seen by a Return, hereunto appended, that during the year we had sixty-two Schools in operation, attended in the aggregate by 5,976 children. Of the Schools mentioned in our last Report, one (Bathurst) was not in operation during 1857. One old School (Black Creek) was resumed, and seven new Schools were opened, viz., Cundletown, Carcoar, Eden, Major's Creek, Parading Ground, near Raymond Terrace, Purfleet, and Rylstone. Appendix A.

2.—GRANTS OF MONEY IN AID OF BUILDINGS.

The aggregate amount paid for the erection of school buildings, and for repairs, rent, and furniture, for 1857, was £4,433 9s. 3d.; and at the close of the year, the Board had pledged sums for similar purposes, amounting to £6,675, to meet £3,255, promised as local contributions. Appendix C.

The number of Schools for which aid was sought during 1857, was twenty-three; and at the close of the year, there were six new school buildings in course of erection. Appendix B.

3.—SALARIES.

The salaries and allowances paid to teachers, officers, and servants of the Corporation during 1857, amounted to £12,892 2s. 10d., of which sum, £10,834 8s. 6d. were paid to teachers; and £2,057 14s. 4d. were paid to other officers—Secretary, Inspector, Organizing Master, Accountant, Architect, and Messengers.

The gross amount of fees paid by the children during 1857, was £5,391 13s. 10d.

4.—INSPECTION OF SCHOOLS.

The following Reports from our Inspector, Mr. Wilkins, furnish a summary of the state of the Model National Schools in Sydney, for the year 1857; and also a general summary of the condition of the National Schools throughout the Colony, for the same period.

No. 1.

REPORT upon the Model National Schools, for the year 1857.

1. The following Table will show the condition of these Schools during the past year, as regards the attendance of pupils and the amount of their payments:—

NAME OF SCHOOL.	NO. ON THE ROLLS.	AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE.	AMOUNT OF FEES PAID.
Fort-street School	1,107	791	1,371 14 9
William-street School	993	632	829 19 2
Cleveland-street School	339	264	393 9 1
Paddington School	273	187	318 12 0
Total	2,712	1,874	2,913 15 0
Total for 1856	2,251	1,426	2,287 16 10
Increase	461	448	£625 18 2

From

From this Return it appears that during the year the number of children on the rolls of these Schools increased 20 per cent., the average daily attendance 31 per cent., and the amount of fees 27 per cent. It may be fairly inferred from these statistics that the National Schools in Sydney have advanced in public confidence. The prevalence of wet weather during the greater part of the year seriously affected the attendance in some of the Schools, and thus diminished the daily average.

2. No changes of importance have occurred in the management of the Sydney Schools since the date of my last Report. The attention of the teachers has principally been confined to the practical working out of the views therein stated; and, notwithstanding many difficulties, they have attained very considerable success. Strenuous exertions will still be made for the improvement of the methods of instruction and raising the character of the education imparted in National Schools. The cordiality with which the different teachers co-operate for this purpose affords strong ground for anticipating a large measure of success.

3. The Training Department has been carried on in accordance with the programme furnished in my last year's Report. The lectures have been attended by the junior teachers, and by the candidates for situations under the Board. Twenty-one candidates entered the Model School in the course of the year, twelve being males, and nine females. Of these, eleven males and six females obtained appointments; the remainder, being unable to pass the necessary examinations, were not employed.

4. The arrangements for the present year simply provide for the extension of the plans already in operation. The course of lectures in the Normal School will include the additional subjects of History, Zoology, and popular Astronomy, but no important change is contemplated at present.

W. WILKINS.

Inspector and Superintendent.

No. 2.

REPORT upon the condition of National Schools during the year 1857.

1. The number of Schools inspected during the year 1857, exclusive of the Sydney Schools, was twenty. My visits were confined to this small number, first, on account of the lateness of the period when I received my instructions; and, secondly, because of the Secretary's illness, which rendered my presence in Sydney necessary for five months.

2. The past year was one of great trial to National Schools. It was generally expected that Parliament would give its sanction to some new scheme of public education. The agitation existing in the public mind on this subject was further increased by the efforts of the opponents of the National System. At no previous period since its first establishment in the Colony had they exerted themselves so strenuously to lower the National System in public esteem. It is, therefore, gratifying to find, that not only did the system maintain its ground, but it made rapid progress.

3. The disastrous floods which devastated a portion of the Colony injured some of the school buildings, and in other cases completely deprived the people of the means of proceeding with the erection of schoolhouses. Great numbers of children were also for many months prevented from attending School, communication being stopped by the floods.

4. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, I am enabled to report in decidedly favorable terms respecting ten of the Schools visited in 1857. Of two others, I was compelled to speak with marked dissatisfaction; while the remaining eight were found to be in varying grades of efficiency, but each exhibiting some promising indication of future improvement. As far as my observations extended, I saw reason to believe that the measures referred to in my Report for the year 1856 were producing considerable effect in improving the character of the Schools.

5. The services of the Organizing Master have proved very useful in disseminating information among the teachers on subjects connected with school management, and thereby enabled them to increase the efficiency of their Schools. His labors have further had the effect of bringing all the National Schools into closer relation with each other and with the central authority; of producing, to some extent, unity of purpose in the exertions of the teachers; and of raising the moral and intellectual character of the Schools.

W. WILKINS,

Inspector and Superintendent.

5.—FINANCE.

For information on this head we beg to refer to the annexed Balance Sheet.

Appendix C.

6.—NON-VESTED SCHOOLS.

We now address ourselves to a subject which has given rise to a controversy unhappily resulting in the loss of Mr. Plunkett's services as the President of our Board; and we feel it our duty to lay before your Excellency a statement of the facts and motives which led us to issue the new Rules regarding non-vested Schools, published in the Government Gazette of 5th January, 1858, and printed in the Appendix hereto.

Appendix D.

In October last a letter was addressed to us by our Inspector, which is of so much value and importance in illustration of this matter that we here transcribe it in full.

*" National Education Office,

" GENTLEMEN,

" I do myself the honor to submit, for your consideration, the following suggestions in reference to the establishment of non-vested Schools under the Board's supervision.

" 2. The National Board in Ireland have, for many years, recognised the advantages to be derived from the establishment of non-vested Schools, and, at the present time, more than one-half of the Schools under their superintendence are of that kind.

" 3. In the neighbouring Colony of Victoria, the experiment seems to have been tried with satisfactory results. The Victorian Board state, in their fourth Report, that at the end of the year 1856, they had twenty-eight non-vested Schools in operation, with 1,771 children on the roll. The Chief Inspector, reporting upon such Schools, observes,—' Our non-vested Schools have advantages over vested Schools. All our non-vested Schools are private Schools, the head masters of which are either proprietors or tenants of the premises. The masters not being liable to dismissal, feel themselves more independent than those of vested Schools, and are more anxious, in every way, to improve their Schools; and, instead of making unsatisfactory, or perhaps unavailing exertions for subscriptions, they supply the necessary pecuniary funds out of their own resources. The zeal and energy of an individual for his own private benefit produce greater results than those of public bodies in the case of our Schools. The greater personal interest in the success of these (non-vested) Schools is also, probably, the reason why, as a general rule, the non-vested teachers evince a greater willingness to have defects pointed out, and greater anxiety to improve.'

" 4. The success of the system in Victoria, even making allowance for the different state of society in that Colony, encourages the belief that non-vested Schools would prove eminently useful in New South Wales. In addition to the benefits which would accrue to the country from such an extension of the means of Education, the introduction of non-vested Schools would tend to remove the great disparity between the National and Denominational Systems, as regards facilities for establishing Schools. I submit, therefore, that it is expedient to adopt some regulations by which Schools of this class may be instituted under the Board's control.

" 5. The following seem to me to be the more important conditions on which such Schools might be received into connection with the Board. Non-vested Schools might be established, or, if already in existence, might be adopted by the Board in localities where the population is too small to raise the necessary proportion of funds for building purposes, and in places where other Schools, not National, do not meet the educational wants of the district. They might also be instituted temporarily in places where a vested School is in course of erection, but requiring time for its completion. In all such cases the proposed teachers should provide—free of expense to the Board—suitable school buildings, furniture, and apparatus, regard being had only to the requirements of the locality in which the Schools are situated.

" 6. The qualifications of teachers should be tested in the usual manner, and payment made in accordance with their classification. It might, however, be expedient in the case of very poor districts to accept the services of teachers whose attainments were not sufficiently good to entitle them to a certificate of merit. Such teachers should be paid on a lower scale, and they would hold the same position in reference to the ordinary teachers that registered teachers in England bear to those who have obtained certificates. The registered teachers in " England are men whose technical acquirements fall below the standard demanded for a certificate of merit, but who having spent most of their lives in teaching, are competent to give instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic, to the children attending small country Schools. Teachers of this description form a numerous class in the Colony, and by taking advantage of their services, the rudiments of education may be extended to places which otherwise must remain entirely destitute.

" 7. All the Regulations promulgated by the Board should be scrupulously enforced in non-vested Schools. I am aware that considerable latitude is permitted both in Ireland and in Victoria in reference to the giving of religious instruction by the teacher; but, in the present state of the education question in this Colony, I am of opinion that much danger would arise from following these precedents. The opponents of the National System would regard such a course as a virtual abandonment by the Board of their fundamental principle, and as an assertion of the propriety and necessity of making the schoolmaster, as such, a teacher of religion.

" 8. At the same time it would be unnecessary to inquire too minutely into the proceedings of a non-vested teacher out of school hours, provided his duty was satisfactorily performed, and the Board's Regulations carefully observed. The teacher's own interest would then restrain him from doing anything likely to give offence to the parents of any of his pupils.

" 9. It would, of course, be requisite that Local Patrons should be appointed to the non-vested Schools, and on this head some difficulty may be anticipated. The Local Patrons would, in a majority of cases, be personal friends of the teacher, and they may be disposed to exhibit more leniency in their construction of the manner in which he discharges his duties than is desirable. This defect could only be obviated by frequent inspection; and if a large increase in the number of National Schools took place in consequence of the admission of non-vested Schools, a corresponding increase in the means of inspection would thereby be necessitated and justified.

" I have, &c.,

" W. WILKINS.

" THE BOARD OF NATIONAL EDUCATION,
" Sydney."

Having carefully deliberated on the statements submitted to us in the preceding letter, and having satisfied ourselves, by reference to the Reports of the Irish Education Board, that the change required to meet our Inspector's recommendation, instead of being any innovation, would only render the administration of the Schools confided to our management more in accordance with that prescribed as our model, by our Act of Incorporation, we resolved upon offering aid to non-vested Schools on the plan suggested, and upon supplementing our existing Rules by such additions, founded on those promulgated in Ireland, as should answer the proposed end. We had, at first, some thought of deferring this measure until we had invited public discussion; but several considerations influenced us in avoiding this delay. In the first place, more than one application had been already made on behalf of Schools that could only be aided on the new system, and the parties interested were anxiously awaiting our decision. More applications of like nature were expected, and they have since accumulated to a considerable number; and although this extension of our operations might somewhat cripple our pecuniary resources, it was evident that this newly adopted branch of expenditure would, if viewed in reference to its influence in extending the field of National Education, be far the most economical, involving only the payment of teachers' salaries, and supply of books, without the serious expense of building. We are indeed well aware that the large ratio of building expenses in our previous operations has at all times given a plausible colour to hostile and exaggerated representations of the relative cost of education as administered under our system.

We were also greatly influenced by the consideration that no coercion or dictation of any kind was involved in our proposed change, aid being merely extended to those voluntarily seeking it, upon terms not inconsistent with our own principles, although conceding somewhat more latitude than our previous Rules had done, to the wishes and consciences of those who had hitherto stood aloof from us. The test of its attracting less or more spontaneous spontaneous applications appeared to us a desirable one to apply to the new scheme, before we brought it forward in any importunate manner; well knowing that our claim on the liberality of Parliament for any scheme, however excellent in theory, must eventually depend on the degree of its success in meeting the actual wants and wishes of the community. So far as our plan should succeed, in this silent manner, it would manifestly operate as a self-adjusting reconciliation of the two existing systems. Nor did it appear to us possible, in the nature of things, that the advocates of either system could object to our plan on any ground, except that of its being too great a concession to the other; an objection clearly entitled to no weight in the scale of public policy, so long as the Legislature is content to meet the views of both parties by endowing both systems.

Such were the views which actuated us in framing our new Rules, and, on the 18th December last, they were forwarded to the Colonial Secretary's Office, accompanied by the following letter:—

“ National Education Office,

“ Sydney, 18th December, 1857.

“ 57-1433.

“ SIR,

“ On behalf of the Board of National Education, incorporated by Act of Council, 11 Vict., No. 48, I have the honor to transmit, herewith, some additional Rules made by them, under the power conferred by that Act, and to request that the same may be published in the Government Gazette, and laid before the Legislature in the manner thereby prescribed.

“ 2. It will be perceived that these Rules have reference to the proposed extension of aid to Schools which, in their origin, may be other than National, and of which the property may not be vested in the Board; upon condition, nevertheless, that instruction of the same efficient and unsectarian character as that required in Schools purely National be therein given, without distinction of sects, during an adequate number of hours in each day (exclusive of Sunday), and that any sectarian religious instruction be given either before or after the ordinary school business, and to those children only whose parents approve of their receiving it.

“ 3. The Board has been induced to initiate these Regulations, partly in compliance with applications of a pressing nature from conductors of Schools—excluded from assistance by the previous Rules, but willing to accept aid on the terms now proposed—partly from a public avowal, of those promoting Denominational Schools, of a principle quite in accordance with the system proposed, although wanting, in their hands, the sanction of uniform and binding regulation; but chiefly by finding in the Reports of the Commissioners for National Education in Ireland evidence of the extensive prevalence and great success of a similar plan there in operation.

“ 4. It is at the same time evident, that in order to enable this Board effectually to carry out their proposal, it will be requisite that additional funds be placed at their disposal by the Legislature. The application of the new Rules will open out a new field of operations, and of consequent expenditure, whilst their existing means are barely adequate to the building and maintenance of Schools strictly their own.

“ 5. It will, however, be manifest, that exactly in the proportion in which non-vested Schools may conform to these new Rules, and thus obtain aid through the Board, the requirements of those who seek aid in a character avowedly Denominational will be reduced. And, as our plan merely substitutes positive regulation for individual caprice, in a matter affecting the public expenditure, and really exacts nothing more from Denominational Schools than the more enlightened and liberal of their conductors already profess to concede in practice, we venture to hope that the operation of these new Rules will tend to reconcile the conflicting wants and difficulties which have hitherto occasioned so large an expenditure of public money in maintaining two systems, and pave the way for a simpler organisation, comprising the advantages of both.

“ I have &c.,

“ JOHN H. PLUNKETT,

“ Chairman.”

“ THE HONORABLE

“ THE PRINCIPAL SECRETARY,

“ &c., &c., &c.”

At

At this time, two applications for non-vested Schools were waiting our decision; and our Secretary had been instructed to give answers, and to refer the applicants to the new Rules, as soon as they should appear in the Gazette. This circumstance led us, at each of our meetings to inquire about their publication; and various applications were made personally by our Chairman at the Colonial Secretary's Office to ascertain the cause of delay; none of which, however, elicited, until the month prescribed by law for the publication of the Rules was approaching expiration, any hint of an objection to the Rules themselves. We were especially solicitous to avoid their lapsing for want of due publication, in consequence of the departure for New Zealand of one of our Members, and the consequent impossibility of obtaining, without long further delay, his signature to any formal instrument which might be required to give them a renewed effect. Repeated and urgent applications at length elicited the letter of the Colonial Secretary of 4th January, 1858, crossing our previously written letter of the same date, and then apprising us, for the first time, of an objection to their publication.

As we have the misfortune to differ from your Excellency's advisers with regard to the relative powers and functions of ourselves and of the Executive Government in framing and promulgating these Rules, we find it difficult to render this topic the subject of an official report addressed to your Excellency,—especially as we have never yet been favored with any explanation of the grounds on which our legal power to frame these new Rules has been questioned. It now, however, becomes necessary for us to state the reasons which justified, to our own minds, the exercise of the power we thus assumed.

The Act (11 Victoria, No. 48,) originally incorporating the Board whose functions we exercise, declares it to have been formed for the management of Schools to be conducted under "Lord Stanley's National System of Education," and confers upon its members, in their corporate capacity, power to make Rules "touching all matters which should appear to them fit and expedient for the effectual attainment of the objects of "the Corporation", with power to alter and amend them, from time to time, at the like discretion. It then prescribes that such Rules shall be published within one month in the Government Gazette, and requires that they be also laid before the Legislature. No direction whatever is given as to the approval of the Executive Government for the time being. The only question which, as it seemed to us, could affect our legal authority, was, whether the Schools we now intended to assist were comprised within "Lord Stanley's "National System of Education." This question will bear the test of the most rigid examination. It might, we think, have been sufficient, if these non-vested Schools had been, in the year 1848, and from thence to the present time, in actual operation, under the Irish Board, created by Lord Stanley in 1832, and this, even though this class of Schools had formed no portion of his Lordship's original scheme, but had been subsequently engrafted on it. We cannot doubt that by Lord Stanley's System the Colonial Legislature of 1848 simply meant the system then in actual operation in Ireland; and we are entitled to infer, that the powers of local regulation were intended to give a latitude to the Colonial Board to meet from time to time their own views of local circumstances in any way compatible with the general principles of that system.

But it is not necessary for us to take shelter under this wide interpretation; the fact being, that these non-vested Schools were aided by Lord Stanley's Board in Ireland from the very origin of his system, and that with his own express sanction. This will clearly appear by referring to the Report of the Irish Board for 1836, which contains the following paragraph, commenting on the contents of an acrimonious pamphlet then recently published against the system. "The pamphlet (say the Commissioners, page 45,) objects to our giving aid to Schools in connection with nunneries, monasteries, or other religious bodies. Upon this point we had a communication with Lord Stanley, when he was Chief Secretary for Ireland. He thought it desirable, as we did, that such Schools should be brought under our superintendence, and, therefore, that we should grant aid to them. We have accordingly done so."

Appended to the Report of the Irish Board of 1841 is an explanatory paper, emanating from Lord Stanley himself, addressed to a deputation of the Synod of Ulster, in which he draws a distinction between "school hours," as appointed by Local Patrons and managers, and "ordinary school hours," during which the safeguards against proselytism peculiar peculiar to the National System are enforced, clearly indicating his own recognition of the special rule applied to the Schools afterwards familiarly distinguished as non-vested.

And, in an explanatory document, issued under the express sanction of Government by the Commissioners themselves, and appended to the same Report, they state as follows:—

"The Board understand that they require a permanent submission to its regulations only in those cases in which grants have been made towards the erection of school-houses, to be vested in trustees according to the direction of Government; and that in Schools receiving occasional or annual grants, such as salaries for the teachers, &c., they are to require submission to their regulations only during the period for which such grants were made."

They add, in conclusion, that "they do not regard these observations as altering or modifying in any degree the original instructions communicated to them of October, 1831; they offer them as containing views which they have always entertained of their instructions, and upon which they have uniformly acted since the commencement of their labors."

On further examining, with a view to our own guidance, the course of the Irish Board, we have found that the non-vested Schools, under their guidance, have far exceeded in number those which have been vested. For example, in the Appendix to the Report of 1854, we found the total of vested Schools given as one thousand six hundred and twenty-one, and those of non-vested as three thousand six hundred and four.

To this evidence of the actual comprehension of non-vested Schools, within Lord Stanley's System, as administered in Ireland, we are enabled to add equally conclusive evidence that the same comprehensiveness was intended by those who introduced the system in this Colony. The Select Committee on Education, in compliance with whose Report Lord Stanley's System was adopted, specially recommended "that the Board should be invested with a very wide discretion as to the arrangements necessary for carrying the system into effect," [See Report 28th August, 1844,] and the Chairman of that Committee, Mr. Robert Lowe, thus expresses, in the same year, his own views of the system which it recommends, and of the prospective operations of the Colonial Board.

We extract the following from a speech at a public meeting in the School of Arts, published in a pamphlet then extensively circulated. As this pamphlet contained a reprint of the Report of the Select Committee, and various other important papers, it was, in fact, the Text Book of the day in reference to this subject, and evidence, therefore, not only of the views of the promoters of the system, but of the general popular understanding regarding it:—

"The Report," (Mr. Lowe says) "recommends the National System introduced into Ireland by Lord Stanley." He then goes on to say that, "as to separate religious instruction, a wide discretion had been claimed by the Irish Board, and may be profitably exerted here;" that "nothing would be lost to the present Denominational Schools by placing themselves in connection with the Board; all the sacrifice required of them being that they should do what ought to be done in every well regulated School—set aside certain hours for certain studies."

It is thus evident that in now extending aid to Schools of this class we are merely following up and completing the scheme of Education contemplated by the authority under which we hold our appointments. In the earlier stages of our operations the prejudices against our system which pervaded the conductors of all Schools already existing rendered it hopeless to expect them to submit to our conditions, and futile, therefore, to promulgate Rules regarding them. Ten years experience of the beneficial operation of our system has at length induced a different feeling among such of our opponents as are open to conviction; and it now only rests with those who have the control of the requisite funds to decide whether disadvantage shall be taken of this happy result.

Our new Rules are now called for by spontaneous applications, increasing since their publication to such a number as will now justify our urging an application to Parliament so to enlarge our resources as sufficiently to meet the demand. We have already stated why we deemed it right thus to ascertain, in some degree, the disposition of the public to accept aid under our new Rules, before strongly pressing this application, and for resisting, therefore, the attempted interference with their immediate publication.

Having, we believe, now clearly shewn that these Rules departed in no degree from the principles of Lord Stanley's System, whether as originated under his own sanction in Ireland, or, as intended by the Legislature introducing it in this Colony, we cannot even imagine any further objection to our authority in this matter, unless, in spite of the literal construction of the Act conferring our power, it be contended that the Legislature of 1848 never could really have meant to render us so far independent of the Executive Government. If a particle of doubt could have been entertained on this point, we assure your Excellency that nothing could have induced us to rely on a rigid verbal construction, or inadvertent omission in the Act, in order to assume an improper authority.

We have, however, to make an explanation very conclusive in this matter. It would, indeed, more naturally have been given by Mr. Plunkett himself; yet, as no opportunity for such explanation was afforded him before his removal from office, it ought not now to be withheld by us. Mr. Plunkett informs us that he, for some time, declined to yield to the wishes of the late Governor, Sir Charles Fitz Roy, by becoming Chairman of the Board, through apprehension that his efforts fully to carry out the proposed system would be liable to be at any moment defeated by the interference of some future Government of adverse views; and he at length was induced to consent to assume the office only on its being conceded that the power of making Rules without the intervention or control of the Executive for the time being should be a feature in the Act of Incorporation: Whereupon, he himself drafted the Act, as it now stands, with this express object.

It was after bestowing the labors of ten years on the business of the Board, under this compact, that it appeared to him to be for the first time abruptly interfered with, and this in a letter written by direction—as the now head of the Executive—of the only dissentient member of the Select Committee under whose recommendation the Act of 1848 was framed.

We think it a bare act of justice to Mr. Plunkett to refer to the circumstance, as illustrating his own view of the provocation which led to the correspondence bringing him into collision with the Government.

We abstain from making this Report the vehicle of any controversy regarding the propriety of the particular language used by Mr. Plunkett in protesting against what we believe we have thus clearly shewn to be an unauthorised interference.

Regarding, however, the loss of Mr. Plunkett's services, we feel bound to submit to your Excellency our conviction that an enemy to the cause of education in this Colony could scarcely desire to inflict upon it a greater injury than will be accomplished by permanently withdrawing Mr. Plunkett from this sphere of his long continued and useful exertions.

Although his services at this Board, since its formation in the year 1848, are generally well known, those only can fully appreciate them who have had our own peculiar opportunities of witnessing, as his coadjutors, the untiring zeal and assiduity with which he has sacrificed, year after year, the scanty leisure of a laborious public life to this self-imposed and gratuitous labor of love. We feel, indeed, entitled to assert that any minister of public instruction who had done as much in fulfilment of the duties of a well paid office, might justly claim the title of a public benefactor.

After making this declaration, we will only respectfully submit whether a few hasty expressions, however passing the usual limits of official etiquette, which were at least prompted, if not justified, by the self-same zeal in the cause of education to which we are indebted for the valuable services of many years, can make it necessary to ignore the merit of all those services in the past, and deprive the public of all their benefits in the future.

We, at all events, should not fulfil our duty if, apart from any personal regard for Mr. Plunkett, we did not, on the ground of the public interests at stake, earnestly press for the restoration of his services to their wonted channel, provided he can now be induced, upon any admissible terms, to resume them.

Our business, although gratuitously performed, is rapidly acquiring the dimensions of a public department; and if we, the present Members of the Board, are to remain deprived of the peculiar facilities afforded by the experience and unremitting attention of Mr. Plunkett, as our Chairman, and which have hitherto materially lightened the individual labor labor and responsibility of each of us, we seriously apprehend that our duties will be found more onerous than we can, without undue sacrifice of other imperative obligations, continue to fulfil.

We submit this our Report for the year ending 31st December, 1857; and in testimony thereof we have caused our Corporate Seal to be hereunto affixed, this sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight.

Although, for the reason I subjoin, I abstain from signing the Report, I deem it right to signify my general concurrence in its views and statements.

From inability, on account of my judicial duties, to attend at the Board, I have not taken part for some time back in its proceedings. This inability I communicated to Mr. Plunkett; and I intimated to him, as Chairman, my wish and intention to resign, which I only postponed at his suggestion,—that as the four principal religious denominations were adequately and efficiently represented, each by one Commissioner, and my attendance was not required, it would be advisable for me to postpone my retirement from the Board, at least until Sir Charles Nicholson's return, when probably my place might be supplied in a way to preserve to the Board the character of a mixed and impartial commission, duly representing each religious section of the community. It is therefore that I have taken no part in the proceedings which resulted in Mr. Plunkett's removal, an event which, with my colleagues, I deem disastrous alike to the general interests of education, and to the successful working of Lord Stanley's system.

In the merited testimony which the Report bears to his untiring zeal, his unselfish devotion, his energy and his success, I fully concur; and I feel that, at this exigent moment, the loss of a man so fitted, in every respect, to be at the head of the Board, cannot easily, if indeed it can at all, be supplied. From the confidence which his presence there inspired, I share the opinion (I believe in common with the religious denomination of which he is a member,) that whilst he presided at the Board our interests and fair claims to consideration would not be disregarded.

On another point—the legality of the regulations for the establishment and conduct of non-vested National Schools, though not an original party to their framing, I consider it due to my colleagues, with deference to the opinions of those who may differ from us, to express my own earnest opinion that it was legally competent for the Board to frame those resolutions. It is an error to suppose that under the National System, schools must contain scholars of different religious denominations. That they should be of different denominations is an accidental part, not an essential element of the system. That which is its essential and leading principle is to afford the same facilities for education to all classes, without any attempt to interfere with the religious opinions of any, and to exclude none on account of such difference of opinion.

From an attentive perusal of the regulations framed by the Board, I can discover in them no departure from this fundamental principle. Not only are they compatible with it, but, in my opinion, calculated, in an eminent degree, to disseminate, promote, and extend its usefulness.

It is a matter of history, attested by the Reports of the Irish Commissioners, that non-vested Schools, under similar regulations to those approved of by the Board in this Colony, had been pre-established in Ireland, not only long before the adoption of the system in this Colony, but their origin dates from the very commencement of its establishment.

REGULATIONS for the Establishment and Conduct of Non-Vested National Schools in New South Wales.

To extend the benefits of National Education in the Colony, on a plan similar to that so successfully pursued in Ireland, the Commissioners of National Education will give assistance to Schools which in origin and ownership may be other than National—subject only to conditions making their conductors responsible to the Board, (1) For adequate instruction of the same nature as that prescribed for Schools purely National, open on equal terms to all; and (2) For the strict limitation of special religious instruction to those whose parents approve of it.

The following are the conditions on which aid will be afforded to Schools not vested in the Commissioners:—

1. The aid to such Schools will be limited to Salary and Books.

2. Before aid can be granted, the Commissioners must be satisfied that the case is deserving of assistance; that there is reason to expect that the School will be efficiently and permanently supported; that the School-house is sufficient for the purpose, and suitably furnished; and that a competent Teacher has been or will be appointed.

3. To entitle a School to a continuance of aid, the House and Furniture must be kept in good repair by means of local contributions; the School conducted in all respects in a satisfactory manner, and in accordance with the regulations of the Commissioners, and the instructions of their Inspectors; and there must be an average daily attendance of at least thirty Children.

NOTE—The Commissioners reserve to themselves the right of giving aid in special cases to Schools where the average daily attendance may be temporarily below thirty.

4. While the appointment and removal of Teachers in non-vested Schools will rest with the Local Patrons or Managers, the Commissioners will require to be satisfied with the character and competency of the Teacher so appointed, as a condition to the payment and continuance of Salary.

5. A Time Table, sanctioned by the Commissioners, must be kept constantly hung up in a conspicuous part of the School Room.

6. During the hours appropriated in the Time Table to the ordinary instruction of the pupils, the usual routine of a National School must be observed in non-vested Schools; but the Commissioners will not exercise any control over the use of the School at any other time.

NOTE—Any religious exercise or instruction peculiar to the private character of the School must, therefore, occupy some time before or after the hours fixed for the ordinary duties, so as to admit of the convenient absence of any children whose parents object to their attendance.

7. No Books shall be used for ordinary instruction under the preceding Rule but such as are sanctioned by the Commissioners.

8. Registers shall be kept in each School, and Returns forwarded to the Commissioners, according to forms that will be supplied by them.

9. The Commissioners and their Officers are to be allowed to visit and examine the Schools whenever they think fit. Those deputed to visit by the Commissioners will be furnished with credentials.

10. The public generally must have free access to every School during the stated school hours, not to take part in the business or to interrupt it, but, as visitors to observe how it is conducted.

11. The Commissioners reserve to themselves the power of altering or revoking any of the foregoing regulations as, from time to time, it shall seem to them to be expedient.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

NATIONAL EDUCATION BOARD.

(LETTER FROM, ON THE SUBJECT OF NON-VESTED SCHOOLS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 17 June, 1858.

THE NATIONAL EDUCATION BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*National Education Office,
Sydney, 3 June, 1858.*

SIR,

In the letter of the Chairman of this Board, dated 18th December last, transmitting additional Rules for the extension of the aid of the Board to non-vested schools, the Government was apprised that the application of the new Rules would open out a new field of operation, and consequent expenditure, whilst the existing means of the Board were barely adequate to the building and maintenance of vested schools.

2. This intimation was not given with any expectation of its eliciting, at that time, from the Government any pledge of additional assistance. We must, on the contrary, admit that we acted under the conviction that it was our duty, in the exercise of the powers entrusted to us by the Legislature, even with the inadequate resources at our command, and at the expense of restricting our building grants, at least to initiate an experiment which should manifest, if successful, (as we ourselves believed it would be), the adaptation of our new plan to the wishes and exigencies of the community, before we importuned the Government and the Legislature for the means of fully carrying out our views. These motives have already been acknowledged as actuating us in this matter in our annual Report; and we have now to congratulate ourselves and the public on the proof already received, in the numerous applications which have reached us for non-vested schools, of its adaptation to the social condition of this Colony.

3. It is now our duty to report to the Government, that since the promulgation of the new Rules thirty-seven applications for non-vested schools have been received,—of which eighteen have been considered as deserving of aid; two have been rejected, as not meeting the required conditions; two have been deferred for the present, and fifteen are under investigation. Applications are at present continued from week to week; and it will, we think, be an estimate within the limits of probability, that we ought to endeavor to provide for compliance with a total of at least eighty such applications within the current year.

4. If additional funds be withheld, this Board will be constrained to determine for themselves the question, how far it is desirable, in the exercise of their important public trust, to continue the experiment of non-vested schools, at the expense of restricting contributions which would otherwise be available for the building of vested schools. We are, of course, anxious to avoid this dilemma, both from its tendency to render the experiment imperfect, through the injudicious economy it will impose, and from the disappointment it may occasion to some persons anxious to build vested schools.

It will be in that case impossible for the Board to do more than accept a few of the most pressing applications for non-vested schools, rejecting, on the other hand, a few of the least urgent building applications; while to the extent of those rejected in each class, for want of means, a public want (which it is, of all others, the highest interest of the community to satisfy,) will remain unprovided for.

5. We submit that all applications made to us for schools are to be taken as applications for aid in qualifying the rising generation of the Colony to fulfil the duties which the popular institutions, now about to be established on the widest foundation, will impose; and that money voted for such a purpose is to be regarded, not so much as ordinary expenditure, but rather as an investment of the most profitable kind, not only in a moral, but even in a material point of view.

6. The New York Board of Education, in their Report for 1856, refer, with a pardonable pride, to evidence taken before the English House of Commons, in proof that the superior education afforded in America to the particular class of persons who constitute the masters and crews of vessels trading across the Atlantic, had led to a very great advance in the relative proportion of American tonnage; and they point to the fertile invention applied to implements of practical use characteristic of Americans, as augmenting, in many ways, the fruits of agricultural and manufacturing industry, and refunding, even in hard dollars, the cost of public education. Regarding the question in a still higher point of view, the New York Board cite Jefferson, as saying—"If a nation expects to be ignorant and free, in a state of civilisation, it expects what never was, and never will be." They also cite Daniel Webster, as authority for the assertion that popular institutions cannot possibly be preserved "if early education be not freely furnished by public law, in such forms that all shall gladly avail themselves of it." If there be any hesitation in providing, by annual vote, for at least as liberal a plan of popular education as that of America, may we not venture to hope that the Legislature of this Colony may be induced to follow the example of America, by appropriating a share of public lands, in every county and town, to the support of common schools?

7. The Board have prepared a careful estimate of their liabilities from 1st May to 31st December, of the present year, of which the following is a summary:—

Pledged for building and repairs of vested schools	£7,647 14 2
Salaries, travelling expenses, and other charges	9,000 0 0
Total for vested schools	16,647 14 2
Salaries and books for 80 non-vested schools	3,000 0 0
Total estimated expenditure from 1st May to 31st December, 1858	19,647 14 2
Accruing to the Board from the sum at present on the Estimates	15,000 0 0
Leaving a deficiency of	4,647 14 2

without making any provision for the contingency of new applications for building vested schools during the remainder of the current year. In regard to these, however, it is not likely that the proportion of actual outlay required during the year will be considerable; and whatever it may be, it will probably be met by that proportion of the funds already pledged for building, which, by means of accidents and delays, may fail to be required during the same interval.

8. In the case of non-vested schools, the fact that the buildings are provided by the applicants will, of course, render the relative efficiency of the public expenditure, in regard to numbers educated, far greater than in those hitherto founded and supported by the Board.

9. It is true that, by this extension, the total cost of the National System of public Education will be augmented; but the education itself will be augmented in a much greater ratio; and by the extension of the present Normal Schools and system of Inspectorship, so as to meet the increasing demands of the Colony, the blessings of a good education may be secured throughout the length and breadth of the land, under systematic supervision and control, with the organization which, while it facilitates central improvement, helps to diffuse the improvements of the centre to the remotest circumference.

10. We have now the honor to submit, with a confidence we did not venture to express in our letter of the 18th December last, our application for an additional grant, to enable us to meet the applications for non-vested schools without detracting from other resources. The sum required for this purpose will appear, from the statement made in a preceding paragraph of this letter, to be about five thousand pounds.

11. In conclusion, we respectfully request that this letter may be laid before the Legislature, as supplementary to our last annual Report.

NATIONAL EDUCATION BOARD.

No. 1.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE PRINCIPAL SECRETARY.

*National Education Office,
Sydney, 18 December, 1857.*

SIR,

On behalf of the Board of National Education, incorporated by Act of Council, 11 Vict., No. 48, I have the honor to transmit herewith some additional Rules made by them, under the power conferred by that Act, and to request that the same may be published in the Government Gazette, and laid before the Legislature, in manner thereby prescribed.

2. It will be perceived that these Rules have reference to the proposed extension of aid to Schools which, in their origin, may be other than National, and of which the property may not be vested in the Board, upon condition, nevertheless, that instruction of the same efficient and unsectarian character as that required in Schools purely National be therein given, without distinction of sects, during an adequate number of hours in each day (exclusive of Sunday), and that any sectarian religious exercises or instruction be given either before or after the ordinary school business, and to those children only whose parents approve of their receiving it.

3. The Board has been induced to initiate these Regulations, partly in compliance with applications of a pressing nature from conductors of Schools excluded from assistance by the previous Rules, but willing to accept aid on the terms now proposed; partly from a public avowal by those promoting Denominational Schools of a principle quite in accordance with the system proposed, although wanting, in their hands, the sanction of uniform and binding regulation; but chiefly by finding in the Reports of the Commissioners for National Education in Ireland evidence of the extensive prevalence and great success of a similar plan there in operation.

4. It is at the same time evident, that, in order to enable this Board effectually to carry out their proposal, it will be requisite that additional funds be placed at their disposal by the Legislature. The application of the new Rules will open out a new field of operations, and of consequent expenditure, while their existing means are barely adequate to the building and maintenance of Schools strictly their own.

5. It will, however, be manifest, that exactly in the proportion in which non-vested Schools may conform to these new Rules, and thus obtain aid through this Board, the requirements of those who seek aid in a character avowedly Denominational will be reduced; and, as our plan merely substitutes positive regulation for individual caprice, in a matter affecting the public expenditure, and really exacts nothing more from Denominational Schools than the more enlightened and liberal of their conductors already profess to concede in practice, we venture to hope that the operation of these new Rules will tend to reconcile the conflicting wants and difficulties which have hitherto occasioned so large an expenditure of the public money in maintaining two systems, and pave the way for a simpler organization, comprising the advantages of both.

I have, &c.,

JOHN H. PLUNKETT,
Chairman.

THE HONORABLE
THE PRINCIPAL SECRETARY,

&c., &c., &c.

(Enclosure)

(Enclosure in No. 1.)

REGULATIONS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT AND CONDUCT OF NON-VESTED NATIONAL SCHOOLS IN NEW SOUTH WALES.

To extend the benefits of National Education in the Colony, on a plan similar to that so successfully pursued in Ireland, the Commissioners of National Education will give assistance to Schools which in origin and ownership may be other than National—subject only to the conditions making their conductors responsible to the Board,—(1) For adequate instruction of the same nature as that prescribed for Schools purely National, open on equal terms to all; and (2) For the strict limitation of special religious instruction to those whose parents approve of it.

The following are the conditions on which aid will be afforded to Schools not vested in the Commissioners:—

1. The aid to such Schools will be limited to Salary and Books.
2. Before aid can be granted the Commissioners must be satisfied that the case is deserving of assistance; that there is reason to expect that the School will be efficiently and permanently supported; that the School-house is sufficient for the purpose, and suitably furnished; and that a competent teacher has been, or will be appointed.
3. To entitle a School to a continuance of aid, the house and furniture must be kept in good repair by means of local contributions; the School conducted in all respects in a satisfactory manner, and in accordance with the regulations of the Commissioners, and the instructions of their Inspectors; and there must be an average daily attendance of at least thirty children.

NOTE.—The Commissioners reserve to themselves the right of giving aid in special cases to Schools where the average daily attendance may be temporarily below thirty.

4. While the appointment and removal of teachers in non-vested Schools will rest with the local patrons or managers, the Commissioners will require to be satisfied with the character and competency of the teacher so appointed, as a condition to the payment and continuance of salary.

5. A time-table, sanctioned by the Commissioners, must be kept constantly hung up in a conspicuous part of the School-room.

6. During the hours appropriated in the time-table to the ordinary instruction of the pupils, the usual routine of a National School must be observed in non-vested Schools; but the Commissioners will not exercise any control over the use of the School at any other time.

NOTE.—Any religious exercise or instruction peculiar to the private character of the School must, therefore, occupy some time before or after the hours fixed for the ordinary duties, so as to admit of the convenient absence of any children whose parents object to their attendance.

7. No books shall be used for ordinary instruction under the preceding Rule but such as are sanctioned by the Commissioners.

8. Registers shall be kept in each School, and returns forwarded to the Commissioners, according to forms that will be supplied by them.

9. The Commissioners and their officers are to be allowed to visit and examine the Schools whenever they think fit. Those deputed to visit by the Commissioners will be furnished with credentials.

10. The public generally must have free access to every School during the stated school hours, not to take part in the business or to interrupt it, but as visitors to observe how it is conducted.

11. The Commissioners reserve to themselves the power of altering or revoking any of the foregoing regulations as, from time to time, it shall seem to them to be expedient.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 4 January, 1858.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th ultimo, forwarding, with a request that they may be published in the Government Gazette, and laid before the Legislature, certain additional Rules framed by your Board, having reference to a proposed extension of aid to Schools which, in their origin, may be other than National, and of which the property may not be vested in the Board, and to observe, that as it is stated in the fourth paragraph of your communication, that, in order to enable the Board effectually to carry out their views, it will be requisite that additional funds should be placed at their disposal, it seems to the Colonial Secretary desirable that the Rules alluded to should not be published by the Government until an opinion shall have been elicited from Parliament whether or not the class of Schools alluded to, aided as they are proposed to be from the Public Revenue, would receive the approval of the Legislature.

Rules

2. The Colonial Secretary desires me to add, that the Rules transmitted in your letter do not appear to the Government to be of the character contemplated by the third clause of the Act incorporating the Board of Commissioners of National Education.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

THE HONORABLE

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE PRINCIPAL SECRETARY.

National Education Office,

Sydney, 4 January, 1858.

SIR,

Together with our letter of the 18th December, 1857, I transmitted to you certain Rules framed by the Board of National Education, under authority of the Act of Council, 11th Victoria, No. 48, with a view to a compliance with the law as thereby enacted, requiring that such Rules shall, within one month from the date thereof, be published in the Government Gazette.

As these Rules have not hitherto appeared in the Government Gazette, I have the honor to recal your attention to the subject; and if you should, for any reason unknown to the Board, consider that they have been mistaken in regarding you as the proper channel for carrying out their intention to obey the law, we have the honor to request you to direct the printer of the Gazette to obey such instructions as the Board may give to him in this matter.

I have, &c.,

Chairman of the Board of National Education.

Colonial Secretary's Office,

Sydney, 5 January, 1858.

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to refer you to my communication of yesterday's date, on the subject of the Regulations transmitted in your letter of the 18th ultimo, having reference to a proposed extension of aid to Schools which, in their origin, may be other than National, and of which the property may not be vested in the Board.

2. The copy of the Rules which appear to have been sent by the Board to the Government Printer will be inserted by him in the Gazette, as a publication by the Commissioners.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

THE HONORABLE

J. H. PLUNKETT, Esq.,

No. 5.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

National Education Office,Sydney, 5 January, 1858.

SIR,

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, in reply to mine of the 18th ultimo, I have the honor to observe that the Board of National Education do not perceive in its contents anything which could justify them in withholding the request contained in my letter to you of the same (yesterday's) date, and which had been dispatched before receipt of that now under reply.

That request simply consists of an intimation of the wish of the Board to obey the directions of the Act by which they have been incorporated, "by publishing in the Government Gazette within one month," Rules framed by them under the powers confided to them, and considering that those powers are vested in them for the express purpose of carrying out "Lord Stanley's System of Education," they are at a loss to imagine on what ground the doubt of their authority, conveyed in the last paragraph of your letter, can rest, inasmuch as the new Rules are in exact accordance with the system of Lord Stanley, as administered under the sanction of the British Legislature.

The members of the Board are perfectly aware of their being amenable to Parliament this matter, as well as dependent upon its continued bounty for funds to continue their labors for the public welfare, either under their present or any improved Regulations; but, in the meantime, it is impossible they can be guided by the individual opinion of the Colonial Secretary in the exercise of their duty, whether in framing those Rules or in giving them publicity, (as far as they have the power), in the mode required by the Act.

If the publication in the Government Gazette be withheld, this breach of the law will not rest with them.

In order to expedite the publication of the Rules "within a month," (which will expire on the 14th instant), I have sent a copy to the printer of the Government Gazette, and the members of the Board expect that no obstacle will be placed in the way of their insertion.

I have, &c.,

Colonial Secretary's Office,Sydney, 7 January, 1858.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, in reply to your letter of the 5th instant, that it is the deliberate opinion of the Government that the Commissioners for National Education have no authority, under their Act of Incorporation, to make such Rules and Regulations as those transmitted in your letter of the 18th ultimo, and that, in this respect, they have exceeded their power.

2. The Government, I am instructed to add, desires it to be distinctly understood, that it is in no way pledged to provide funds for the class of Schools proposed to be established, without the express sanction of Parliament, to which the subject will be submitted as early as possible after its assembling.

3. The copy of the Regulations alluded to in the second paragraph of my letter of the 5th instant, forwarded to the Government Printer by the Board, has, you will observe, been inserted in the Gazette as a publication by the Commissioners.

I have, &c.,

W. ELYARD.

JOHN H. PLUNKETT, Esq.,

Chairman of the National Education Board.

No. 7.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE UNDER SECRETARY.

*National Education Office,
Sydney, 8 January, 1858.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, stating that you are directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform me, in reply to my letter of the 5th instant, that it is the deliberate opinion of the Government that the Commissioners for National Education have no authority, under their Act of Incorporation, to make such Rules and Regulations as those transmitted in their letter of the 18th ultimo; and that, in this respect, they have exceeded their powers; and further stating that the Government desires it to be distinctly understood, that it is in no way pledged to provide funds for the class of schools proposed to be established, without the express sanction of Parliament, to which the subject will be submitted as early as possible after its assembling.

2. In reply, I have the honor to state, that I am in doubt as to what individuals are included in the word "Government," as it is generally understood the office of Secretary for Lands and Public Works is still vacant, and the office of Finance Minister was vacant until Monday last, and I have been informed that the Attorney General has been out of town some days, preparing for his election; therefore, under such circumstances, I may be pardoned for not attaching much weight to the "deliberate opinion of the Government" on the Rules in question, more particularly when I recollect the hostility which the present Colonial Secretary has uniformly evinced towards the system of education which the Legislature has entrusted to the Board.

3. The names of the members of the National Board are appended to the new Rules; and it is scarcely necessary for me to say, that each and all of those members entertain an equally "deliberate opinion" as to their powers to frame those Rules, as well as the expediency of promulgating them; and they do not think they lay themselves open to any charge of vanity in asserting for their conjoint opinion an equal weight with that which you have announced.

4. I have already intimated, in my letter of the 5th instant, "that the members of the Board are perfectly aware of their being amenable to Parliament in this matter, as well as dependent on its continued bounty for funds, to continue their labors for the public welfare, either under their present or any improved Regulations." They are therefore quite prepared, and perfectly willing to abide by the decision of the new Parliament, in the full confidence that the representatives of the country will not take the same narrow minded view of so all important a subject as that which you assert is taken by the present Government.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY to THE HON. JOHN HUBERT PLUNKETT, Esq.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 5 February, 1858.*

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you, that, upon the receipt of your letter of the 8th ultimo, I considered it my duty to bring it under the special consideration of the Government, and to draw attention to its contents, and to the fact of its having been published by you in the newspapers almost immediately after the time that it was dispatched to my office. The whole of the correspondence, of which that letter forms a part, having, in consequence, been brought before the Governor General and Executive Council, I have now to acquaint you with the decision which has been arrived at by the Government in reference to the course which you have adopted in this matter.

2. Upon a perusal of the correspondence, the Council regret to observe that you should have not only thought fit to address the Chief Secretary of the Government in terms so highly improper as those in which your letters of the 5th and 8th of last month are couched, but you should also have been induced to resort to the irregular and unseemly step of publishing your letters in one of the public newspapers while the correspondence was yet going on with the Government.

3. The course thus adopted by you the Council cannot but consider as unjustifiable in every respect, and, after a calm and deliberate consideration of all the bearings of the case, they are reluctantly forced to the conclusion that it is the duty of the Government, under the circumstances, to dispense with your further services as a Commissioner of the Board of National Education; and, with the advice of the Council, His Excellency the Governor General, by virtue of the powers conferred by the 2nd section of the Act incorporating the Commissioners, has removed you from the said office accordingly.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date intimating to me that, for the reasons therein alleged, His Excellency the Governor General, with the advice of the Executive Council, by virtue of the powers conferred by the second section of the Act incorporating the Board of National Education, has removed me from the office of Commissioner.

I shall abstain from offering any comment on the arbitrary and despotic character of this proceeding, but as I have not either been called on to explain, or afforded the opportunity of defending, the conduct which has induced the Government to adopt this course towards me, I must beg leave to submit that the decision conveyed by your letter is premature. I am prepared to defend that conduct, and also to maintain what appears to me a valid objection to the jurisdiction of the Executive Council as at present constituted and summoned.

In the well-known case of Mr. Justice Willis, his removal from office was decided by the Privy Council to have been premature and illegal, and I submit that the present decision will be found, on consideration, to be equally premature and far less justifiable.

I have held the office in question (that of Chairman of the Board of National Education) since the first formation of the Board in January, 1848. Although a mere honorary office, I have discharged its duties as diligently as if I was in receipt of a salary for their performance.

I valued the office as a means of usefulness to the present and to future generations; and I do respectfully, but firmly, protest against my removal from it by a fraction of the Executive Council, the majority of that body (as I have reason to believe) not having been summoned, or not being present to take part in its deliberations and decision.

SIR,

Your Excellency was pleased, about twelve months ago, to confer on me, under the authority vested by the Constitution Act in the Governor General, the high office of President of the Legislative Council.

It has now been intimated to me, by a letter from the Chief Secretary of the Government, that your Excellency has been pleased, by the advice of your Executive Council, to remove me from another office which I have held for a much longer period, as member of the Board of National Education. The circumstances are such as to impress me with the conviction that I cannot, consistently with self respect or public advantage, hold the office of President of the Council; for, I cannot be free from the apprehension that, on grounds as insufficient, and, in my opinion, unjustifiable, I may be removed from the office of President by the same authority that has sanctioned my removal from the office of Chairman of the Board of National Education.

The very peculiar constitution of this Government renders it impossible for me to form a satisfactory opinion how far your Excellency, under whom, as Governor General, I hold the Presidency of the Legislative Council, is identified with the act of the Executive above referred to; I have, therefore, no alternative but to tender my resignation of the office of President, which I do accordingly.

SIR,

I am directed by His Excellency the Governor General to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this day's date, tendering the resignation of your office of President of the Legislative Council. His Excellency cannot but express his regret that you should have felt called upon to resign this high office, as it appears to him that the grounds stated in your letter, namely, your removal by the Executive from your seat as a member of the Board of National Education, are not sufficient to justify the apprehensions you appear to entertain. As, however, you say that you cannot, consistently with self-respect or public advantage, retain your office of President of the Legislative Council, His Excellency has no alternative but to accept your resignation, though he does so with extreme regret.

(Enclosure in No. 14.)

EXTRACT from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Board of National Education, dated 15 February, 1858.

RESOLVED,—

1. That the Commissioners of National Education feel themselves compelled, under a deep sense of their responsibility in the conduct of the important department they are appointed to administer, unanimously to represent their conviction that the loss of the services of Mr. Plunkett at their Board will be so grievous an injury that they earnestly trust a regard to the welfare of the Colony will, even yet, induce those who have the power to use the means to avert it.

2. That they lament the admixture of any personal or political controversy with a question demanding such calm and serious consideration as that which the Board has, by its new Rules, laid before the public and the Parliament. They, therefore, refrain from any comment on the correspondence which has placed Mr. Plunkett at issue with the Executive, beyond submitting their simple declaration that these Rules were framed by the Board under suggestions made to them by their Inspector, after most carefully considering their Act of Incorporation and the Reports of the First Board of Education respecting the system which the Board was appointed to carry out; that they acted under a full persuasion of their lawful authority—and in the absence of any explained ground of objection, they have hitherto been at a loss to imagine any.

G. K. HOLDEN, ESQ., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 6 February, 1858.

SIR,

Having been informed by Mr. Plunkett that you have intimated to him his removal from office as a member of the Board of National Education, in consequence of the course he deemed it right to pursue in regard to the new Regulations lately issued by the Board, and to a correspondence with you, remonstrating against your objection to carry out the law by their publication in the Government Gazette,—I deem it incumbent on myself, as a member of the Board by whom part of that correspondence was drafted, and the whole agreed to, distinctly to avow this my participation therein; and, moreover, to declare my acquiescence in the propriety of its cotemporary publication in the newspapers,—considering that the usual Parliamentary channel of information was then shut up, and this at the very time when the public were especially concerned to know and to judge of such questions as this correspondence involved.

Whether this avowal be or be not considered a ground for my own removal, it will at all events relieve me from any consciousness or suspicion of retaining even an unpaid office through disingenuous concealment.

I will not deny that I value the office as a means of enduring usefulness, far beyond others of more conventional importance, and for this reason alone I abstain, under the circumstances, from voluntarily terminating, by resignation, those labors which, as regards the public, I am willing cheerfully to continue as long as I have the power to bestow them.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY to G. K. HOLDEN, ESQ.

Colonial Secretary's Office,

Sydney, 17 February, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, in reference to the correspondence which has passed with respect to the establishment of non-vested Schools by the Board of National Education, and the consequent removal of Mr. Plunkett from the office of Chairman of the Board.

2. In this letter you state that, "you deem it incumbent upon yourself, as a member of the Board by whom part of the correspondence was drafted, and the whole agreed to, distinctly to avow this your participation therein; and, moreover, to declare your acquiescence in the propriety of its cotemporary publication,"—but you intimate at the same time, that although this avowal may be considered a ground for your own removal, you abstain, for reasons therein stated, from voluntarily resigning your seat at the Board.

3. The Government do not clearly understand whether by these expressions you intend to avow your entire concurrence in the propriety of the language adopted by Mr. Plunkett in reference to the Government in his letter of the 8th January, and your approval of the act of its publication in the Empire newspaper. Before therefore arriving at any decision in the matter, and with a view of removing any ambiguity as to your meaning, I have the honor to request that you will have the goodness to state explicitly whether you desire the Government to understand that you deliberately adopt the language of Mr. Plunkett's letters, and also approve of their cotemporaneous publication in the newspapers.

G. K. HOLDEN, ESQ., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 18 February, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th, in which, referring to mine of the 6th instant, you request me to state explicitly whether I desire the Government to understand "that I deliberately adopt the language of Mr. Plunkett's letters, "and also approve of their publication in the newspapers."

I beg, first, to observe, that I consider the position of Mr. Plunkett entitled him to express, with far less restraint than would have been becoming in myself individually, his indignation at what he, in connexion with every member of the Board of National Education, regarded as an unwarrantable interference with their functions; furthermore, that, on the spur of the moment, language might be venial, if not justifiable, which would be otherwise if deliberately adopted without renewed provocation after a considerable lapse of time.

Bearing these considerations in mind, and, therefore, without implying any judgment of mine upon the act of Mr. Plunkett or its results, I answer that I do not myself deliberately adopt the language of his letters.

As to the question of publication, I have already stated that I acquiesced in it, under a conviction that it was peculiarly important the public should become acquainted, at that juncture, with the merits of this question, through the only available channel. So far as the correspondence contains matters of offence separable from those merits, I certainly now regret that it should have been published, or even written. But, if the publication of the whole be considered an unpardonable act, admitting neither of retractions nor apology, I cannot shrink from taking my share of the blame, at the same time that I express a regret, which I have no doubt Mr. Plunkett would equally have himself expressed, had he been allowed a like opportunity.

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners have, during a long series of years, witnessed with admiration and gratitude the laborious and successful exertions of Mr. Plunkett as Chairman of the Board of National Education.

That your Petitioners cannot conceive it possible that your Excellency's Constitutional advisers will desire to persist in inflicting on the public the permanent loss of Mr. Plunkett's services, by his removal from that office, for the mere act of using strong language towards themselves, while maintaining the rights of the Board,—at all events, without affording him opportunity for vindication or explanation of the act complained of.

Your Petitioners, therefore, pray that your Excellency will be pleased to take some effectual steps for the retention or restoration of Mr. Plunkett's inestimable services as Chairman of the Board of National Education.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

NATIONAL EDUCATION BOARD.

(PROPOSED REINSTATEMENT OF J. H. PLUNKETT, Esq., AS CHAIRMAN OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 April, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the Board of National Education,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners are incorporated under the Act of the Legislature of this Colony, 11th Victoria, No. 48, and by virtue thereof are intrusted with the duty of "Superintending the formation and management of Schools to be conducted under Lord Stanley's National System of Education," and of making Rules touching all matters which may, from time to time, appear to your Petitioners "fit and expedient for the effectual attainment of the objects of the Corporation."

That this Act was passed in pursuance of the recommendation of the Report of a Select Committee of the Legislative Council on Education, appointed in the year 1844, consisting of Messieurs Lowe, Cowper, Windeyer, E. Deas Thomson, Plunkett, Nicholson, Robinson, Mr. Justice Therry, Dr. Lang, and Sir Thomas Mitchell; which Report, besides expressing an opinion that the Board should be incorporated, recommends "that it should be invested with a very wide discretion."

That Mr. Plunkett, who has acted as Chairman of the Board from its first institution, until recently removed therefrom, accepted the office, as we are assured by him, on the express condition that the discretion of the Board in framing its Rules should be so guarded by Legislative enactment as to render it independent of the interference of the Executive Government, and the Act was framed and passed in such terms accordingly.

That, on the 11th December last, the Board passed, under their Common Seal, pursuant to this Act, certain Rules, calculated to render their administration of Lord Stanley's System in this Colony more conformable than it has hitherto been with the course pursued ever since its commencement, in 1831, by the Board in Ireland.

That, with a view to comply with a provision in the Act which prescribes publication, within one month, of all such Rules in the Government Gazette, the Board transmitted these Rules to the Colonial Secretary, requesting that they might be so published.

That, although the Colonial Secretary so far yielded, after some objection, as to permit this publication, he caused the Board to be at the same time informed, through their Chairman, that it was "the deliberate opinion of the Government that they had exceeded their powers;" and their Chairman has since been removed from office, by the Executive Government, in consequence of the course taken by him in protesting against this hitherto unexplained imputation.

That the Board, believing they have herein lawfully and rightly exercised an authority in regard to which they are amenable to Parliament alone, now humbly submit the whole subject thereto, inclusive of your Honorable House, as one branch thereof; and, in order to prevent useless repetition and expense in printing, they beg leave to refer your Honorable House for further explanation of the matters herein mentioned to their ordinary Report for the past year, when it shall be submitted to your Honorable House, in the usual course.

Your Petitioners, in conclusion, represent to your Honorable House, that the sudden removal of Mr. Plunkett from their Board has greatly embarrassed their operations, to the great detriment of the public service, and that they conceive it impossible, under existing circumstances, adequately to supply the loss by the appointment of any successor; since, however otherwise qualified, no successor can possess that special aptitude and influence which have been acquired by Mr. Plunkett as the fruits of a matured experience in the business of the Board.

Your Petitioners, therefore, deem it their imperative duty to the public and to the cause of Education, irrespectively of any consideration of justice to Mr. Plunkett, or of gratitude for his past services, to entreat your Honorable House to exert its influence in promoting his reinstatement.

And, as in duty bound, your Petitioners will ever pray.

(PROCEEDINGS OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL WITH RESPECT TO THE REMOVAL OF MR. PLUNKETT FROM.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 22 April, 1858.Return to an Address, dated 20 April, 1858. MR. FAUCETT.PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council with respect to the removal of Mr. Plunkett from the Board of National Education.

(Extract from Minute No. 56-6, dated 27th January, 1858.)

PRESENT :

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Honorable CHARLES COWPER, Esquire, Vice-President of the Council.

The Honorable JAMES MARTIN, Esquire, Attorney General.

The Honorable ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esquire, Colonial Treasurer.

The Honorable ALFRED P. LUTWYCHE, Esquire, Solicitor General.

His Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a correspondence which has passed between the Honorable the Colonial Secretary and Mr. Plunkett, the Chairman of the Board of National Education, relative to the publication, in the Government Gazette, of certain additional Regulations framed by the Board, and having for their object the extension of aid to non-vested Schools.

Therewith His Excellency also lays before the Council a Minute by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, drawing attention to the tone of the Chairman's letters, and to other circumstances connected with the matter, of a nature so unusual as to appear to him to call for some notice on the part of the Government.

2. Upon a perusal of the correspondence, and a Minute of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, the Council regret to observe that Mr. Plunkett should have not only thought fit to address the Chief Secretary of the Government in terms so highly improper as those in which his letters of the 5th and 8th instant are couched, but that he should also have been induced to resort to the irregular and unseemly step of publishing his letters in one of the public newspapers while the correspondence was yet going on with the Government.

3. The course thus adopted by Mr. Plunkett the Council cannot but consider as unjustifiable in every respect, and after a calm and deliberate consideration of all the bearings of the case, they are reluctantly forced to the conclusion, that it is the duty of the Government, under the circumstances, to dispense with his further services as a Commissioner of the Board of National Education; and they accordingly advise that His Excellency the Governor General should, under the powers conferred by the 2nd Section of the Act incorporating the Commissioners, remove Mr. Plunkett from the said office.

EDWARD C. MEREWETHER,

Clerk of the Council.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council with respect to a letter from Mr. G. K. Holden, relating to certain correspondence about new Regulations framed by the Board of National Education.

(Extract from Minute No. 58-9, dated 15th February, 1858.)

PRESENT :

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Honorable CHARLES COWPER, Esquire, Vice-President of the Council.

The Honorable JAMES MARTIN, Esquire, Attorney General.

The Honorable ROBERT CAMPBELL, Esquire, Colonial Treasurer.

The Honorable JOHN ROBERTSON, Esquire, Secretary for Lands and Public Works.

HIS Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a letter from G. K. Holden, Esq., in reference to the correspondence which has passed with respect to the establishment of non-vested Schools by the Board of National Education, and the consequent removal of Mr. Plunkett from the office of Chairman of the Board. In this letter Mr. Holden states, that " he deems it incumbent upon himself, as a member of the " Board by whom part of the correspondence was drafted, and the whole agreed to, distinctly " to avow this, his participation therein, and moreover to declare his acquiescence in the " propriety of its contemporary publication"; but he intimates at the same time that, although this avowal may be considered a ground for his own removal, he abstains, for reasons therein stated, from voluntarily resigning his seat at the Board.

2. His Excellency accordingly invites from the Council an expression of opinion as to the course which it would be proper for the Government to pursue under the circumstances.

3. Having carefully considered the expressions used by Mr. Holden in his letter, the Council do not clearly understand whether he intends to avow his entire concurrence in the propriety of the language adopted by Mr. Plunkett, in reference to the Government, in his letter of the 8th January, and his approval of the act of its publication in the Empire newspaper.

Before therefore arriving at any decision in the matter, and with the view of removing any ambiguity as to his meaning, the Council advise that the Honorable the Colonial Secretary should request Mr. Holden to state explicitly whether he desires the Government to understand that he deliberately adopts the language of Mr. Plunkett's letters, and also approves of their contemporaneous publication in the newspapers.

Clerk of the Council.

(APPENDIX TO THE REPORT OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD FOR 1856.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 28 May, 1858.

THE SECRETARY TO THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Denominational School Board Office,
Sydney, 16 April, 1858.*

SIR,

I have the honor, by direction of the Denominational School Board, to forward the accompanying copies of communications which have been received from the various heads of the respective Denominations in connection with the Board, and to request that the same may form an Appendix to the Report of the Denominational Board for the year 1856.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE

C. E. ROBINSON.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

No. 1.

THE LORD BISHOP OF SYDNEY to THE CHAIRMAN OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Sydney, 4 May, 1857.

SIR,

Herewith I have the honor to transmit the Estimate for the expenditure of schools in connexion with the Church of England for the year 1858.

That estimate is based upon a greatly improved and extended system of school management.

I desire, particularly, to call the attention of the Board to the proposed examination and classification of teachers, with reference to their salaries, and also to the employment and examination of pupil-teachers.

It is also proposed to remodel the school in connexion with St. James' parish, so as to make it a school for the purpose of training teachers.

An additional Inspector, who will also act as Organizing Master of Schools throughout the diocese, will be required. To give a proper annual examination to each school, to examine and classify the teachers and pupil-teachers, and to overlook the Model School and provide for the instruction of teachers in training, will require the services of two well qualified persons.

I have reason to expect one from England; and, with the assistance of the present Inspector, the various duties belonging to the office, and to inspection, may be successfully carried out.

At present this is impossible; and the schools can never be kept in a state of efficiency without such examinations, &c., as I have the honor now to propose to the Board.

I earnestly hope that you will kindly sustain this application for increased funds by your representations to the Government.

I have, &c.,

It is proposed to invite the teachers of all existing Church of England Schools in this diocese to pass through an examination, to be held at some convenient place at Xmas, 1857; the result of which will be made known, and the class of certificate to which each teacher is entitled will be published. Those who do not come forward will remain in their present positions, with the title of Registered Teachers, and will receive the lowest rate of remuneration; those who obtain a certificate will claim a salary corresponding to the class they have obtained.

The necessity for providing additional assistance to the masters of existing schools suggests the propriety of introducing pupil-teachers, to be apprenticed to the Local School Boards for three years, and during that period to be paid at the rate of £15 the first year, £20 the second, and £30 the third; at the same time to secure for them not less than six hours private instruction, per week, from the master, who will be entitled to the sum of £10 (ten pounds) upon his pupil passing each annual examination.

It is further proposed to reorganize the Model Schools,—a matter of great importance, when it is considered that a large proportion of the future teachers of Church of England Schools will be trained in that institution. The pressing calls for assistance to rising schools and destitute localities, which have been received from every quarter of the diocese, have prevented such an appropriation of the Government Grant to this school as could have been desired. This is a matter of extreme regret, and can only be accounted for by the fact, that with a constantly increasing Church of England population, the amount voted for the support of Denominational Schools has not been increased; at the same time a feeling of insecurity was thrown over the whole by a threatened reduction, or even entire withdrawal, of the aid so much needed.

These three schools, although here spoken of separately, do not entail £750 extra expenditure, as they have been deducted from the list at page 3 of the estimate, at the same time that the item for "Teachers in Training" would have necessarily been introduced into the estimate, had no reorganization been proposed.

No. 2.

THE BISHOP OF NEWCASTLE to THE CHAIRMAN OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Morpeth, 30 April, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to request that you will lay before the Denominational Board the following Statement of additional aid required for Church of England Schools in the Diocese of Newcastle, so that the Board may incorporate as much of it as they may deem expedient in the proposed Estimate of Expenditure for Denominational School purposes for the year 1858, which they are about to furnish to the Government.

I. Masters' Stipends are urgently required for the following Schools:—

1. Blandford, near Murrurundi	£40	0	0
2. Grafton, Clarence River	40	0	0
3. Richmond River	40	0	0
4. Borrel, Port Stephens	40	0	0
5. Morpeth, Infant School	30	0	0

£230.

II. The following schools are now building, and must either remain unfinished, or be encumbered with heavy debt, unless Government aid be granted. In each case I mention, the the estimated cost of the buildings, of which I engage to provide one-half, and would trust that the other moiety be provided from Government funds.

1. Newcastle, St. John's	£1,100	0	0
2. Tamworth	600	0	0
3. Drayton Swamp	300	0	0
4. South Brisbane	400	0	0
5. Brisbane, Fortitude Valley	600	0	0
6. North Brisbane, Master's House	300	0	0
7. Maryborough	400	0	0
8. Gresford	300	0	0
9. Blandford	200	0	0
	£4,200	0	0

All these school buildings are in process of erection; and it might reasonably be expected that the Government would furnish one-half of the expense of the school buildings, as two-thirds of the expense of school buildings is the proportion provided for schools in connexion with the National Board.

The half expense of these sums would be £2,100. £2,100.

III. The following school buildings are urgently required, and the half of the contemplated cost has been contributed. The buildings, however, are delayed; because it is deemed desirable not to expend the present contributions in erecting inferior buildings, but rather to wait until the Government may be persuaded to render to the Denominational Schools the same support which it renders to National Schools; in which case excellent efficient buildings could be erected according to the following estimate:—

1. Newcastle, Christchurch	£400	0	0
2. Morpeth, Infant School	350	0	0
3. West Maitland, Master's House	400	0	0
4. Singleton, New School... ..	500	0	0
5. Raymond Terrace... ..	300	0	0
6. Port Macquarie, Master's House	250	0	0
7. Richmond River	400	0	0
8. Cassilis	300	0	0

Of this sum the moiety would be £1,450. £1,450.

IV. The following school-rooms are in urgent need of repairs; the contemplated cost of which would be the sums set opposite their respective names, and the half of this cost would be at once cheerfully contributed:—

1. Hexham	£60	0	0
2. Miller's Forest	60	0	0
3. Morpeth	50	0	0
4. Paterson	50	0	0
5.	60	0	0
6. Jerry's Plains	80	0	0
	£360	0	0

Of this sum the moiety would be £180. £180.

Trusting that your Board may be able to obtain from the Government such an additional grant for 1858 as will enable you to render the required assistance in very many of these cases,

I remain, &c.,

W. NEWCASTLE.

DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

No. 3.

THE MODERATOR OF THE SYNOD OF AUSTRALIA to THE SECRETARY OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Paddington, 28 May, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to state, that on the receipt of your letter,—requesting me to furnish the Denominational School Board a list of the localities where it was considered Presbyterian Schools should be established, and also a Statement of the probable amount necessary towards the building and fitting up of each of the said schools,—I immediately communicated on the subject with the various Clergymen belonging to the Synod of Australia, and am now enabled, from their replies, to report for the information of the Board as under:—

Schools required at—	Probable Expense of Building, &c.
1. East Maitland	£200
2. West Maitland	100
3. Parramatta	600

No. 4.

THE REV. S. RABONE to THE SECRETARY OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Parramatta, 5 May, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge a communication from you, stating that Estimates for Schools, &c., for the year 1858, were about being sent in to Government, and requesting a list of those localities in which it might be deemed desirable new Wesleyan Schools should be established, &c., &c.

I

I regret that time is insufficient to admit of my collecting all the information I could wish on this important subject.

The accompanying list will show, however, what I think we are prepared to do at once, in accordance with the terms stated in your communication:

I beg, therefore, that the respective amounts in the accompanying list may be regarded as the Estimate for the Wesleyan Church for school purposes for the year 1858.

I have, &c.,

S. RABONE.

THE SECRETARY OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Localities in which we consider new Wesleyan Schools should be established.	Localities in which there are Wesleyan Schools, but in which aid is needed towards buildings for Schools.	Amount required.	REMARKS.
Sussex-street, Sydney.....	£ 500	This sum is required towards the purchase of a building, which will cost, including land, upwards of £2,000.
	Chippendale, Sydney.....	250	This sum is required to meet £250, which will be subscribed towards a new school-room.
	Surry Hills, Sydney.....	500	Required to meet £500, which can be raised from other sources in order to the erection of a new school-room.
Waverley.....	250	Required towards the erection of a new school-room, which will cost £500.
Ashfield.....	At Ashfield we have a building, and a good school might be established if aid can be afforded in respect to the master's salary.
	Windsor.....	200	This sum is required towards the erection of a school-house, which will cost £400. The present school-room is too small.
Kurrajong.....	In these places good Wesleyan Schools could be established, if aid can be granted towards the salaries of the teachers.
Portland Head.....
Greens, 30 miles } from Windsor }
Bathurst.....	A Wesleyan School is very much needed in Bathurst. We have a school-room.
Orange.....	200	This sum is required towards the erection of a school-room, which will cost £400.
Molong.....	100	Required towards the erection of a school-room, which will cost £200.

Boggy Flat, near Singleton.....	100

No. 5.

THE REV. J. M'ENCROE to THE CHAIRMAN OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

Sydney, 30 April, 1857.

SIR

In reply to your letter of the 23rd, regarding the proposed Estimate of Expenditure for Denominational School purposes, for the year 1858, I have the honor, by direction of His Grace the Archbishop, to submit to the Board the enclosed list of places where school-houses, or a residence for teachers, are much required. No school-house of any suitable dimensions can be erected under a cost of £200, or a teacher's residence for less than £100. Should the Council vote a certain sum for this laudable purpose, we shall guarantee that a sum equal in amount shall be subscribed in the several localities where this sum may be expended for school purposes.

The number of places requiring school-houses is twelve, and the number for a residence for teachers ten. The sum, then, which I have the honor to solicit the Board to recommend to be placed on the Estimates for the year 1858, towards building Roman Catholic school-houses, £1,200, and for teachers residences £500, in all £1,700.

I have the honor further to state, that new schools are required in the "eight" places named in the list, at the minimum salary to teachers of £52 10s., which would be in all £420.

I have, &c.,

J. M'ENCROE.

P. S.

Under the new arrangement made by the Denominational School Board for the purchase of books, a large supply has lately been received from Great Britain, and distributed among the several Roman Catholic Schools.

Fourteen school houses, and teachers' residences have been built, and others in course of erection at the following places, viz:—

Kent-street, South,	Miller's Forest,
Kent-street, North,	Newcastle,
Queanbeyan,	Broulee,
Mudgee,	Raymond Terrace,
West Maitland,	Prospect,
Sussex-street,	Sutton Forest,
Singleton,	Goulburn.

at a cost of £4,560, of which £3,752 10s. has been contributed by subscriptions and donations, and £807 10s. by the Denominational School Board.

I have, &c.,

J. M'ENCROE.

THE HONORABLE GEORGE ALLEN, M.L.C.,

Chairman of the Denominational School Board.

P.S. Several applications have been made from various parts of the Colony for new schools in connexion with the Denominational School Board.

I hope the Legislative Assembly will increase the vote for Denominational Schools, so as to meet the pressing wants of a system of primary education based upon religious instruction.

FEEs FROM PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

The amount received under this head, during the year 1857, was £12,826 0s. 11d.

NUMBER OF SCHOOLS.

The number of schools under the Board on the 31st December, 1857, was 215, of which 15 were temporarily vacant.

NUMBER OF CHILDREN.

The number of children on the rolls on the 31st December, 1857, was 14,967, being 46 less than that shewn for the previous year.

The average number in daily attendance was 10,788, or more than 1,000 less than the number given in the Board's Report for 1856. The great falling off in this particular is attributed, in the periodical returns furnished to the Board, to the flooded state of the country districts during a considerable part of the year; it is, however, gratifying to observe, that, although the children were thus from time to time prevented from attending school, their names appear to have remained upon the books, and that the fees paid by their parents have amounted to a larger sum than has ever been realized from this source in previous years.

INSPECTION OF SCHOOLS.

With the exception of Church of England Schools in the Sydney Diocese, the inspection of which is (as shewn in the Report for 1856) specially provided for, the Board are unable to report that any progress has been made in this important feature in school management. The amount hitherto placed by the Legislature at the disposal of the Board has been barely sufficient to meet the many urgent demands made upon them for the payment of teachers' salaries and for the purchase of books.

SALARIES.

The Board have thought it desirable to raise the minimum annual salary allowed by them to teachers of Denominational Schools. The rule under the head "Salaries" now runs as follows:—"Instead of the minimum annual salary allowed by the Board being, as heretofore, £30, such annual salary shall be £50 for a Primary School, and for an Infant School "£40." This rule to take effect after the 1st July, 1858.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The monitorial system of instruction is that encouraged by the Denominational School Board, and generally adopted throughout their Schools. Annual Examinations are held during the December quarter; and a statement of the qualifications of the children, the number present at the last examination, and of other matters, is furnished by the Local Board of each school in the usual periodical return for the December quarter.

A statistical form is now in course of preparation, giving a tabular view of each Denominational School in the Colony, in which the progress made by the children, the state of the school buildings, and other particulars will be detailed. The completion of this document will occupy further time; in the meanwhile the Board do not consider it necessary on that account to delay sending in their Report; the table referred to will, however, be forwarded to the Government as early as possible, with a view to its forming an Appendix to this Report.

The Board herewith forward a Report which has been received from the Inspector of Church of England Schools, of schools visited by him.

Sydney, 1 May, 1858.

DIOCESAN INSPECTOR'S REPORT ON CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCHOOLS FOR THE DIOCESE OF SYDNEY.

TO THE HONORABLE THE CHAIRMAN OF THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

SIR,

I have the honor, by the direction of the Lord Bishop of Sydney, to lay before you the second Report of the Church of England Schools inspected by me in the Diocese of Sydney, N. S. W., extending from 1st October, 1857, to 26th April, 1858.

This Report contains the details of the inspection of seventeen country and three Sydney and suburban schools; making a total of twenty schools visited and examined by your Inspector during that period.

In nearly every case the Clergy cordially welcomed my visit, appeared glad to receive any suggestions respecting the improvement of their schools, and expressed a hope that the schools under their superintendence might be subject to regular inspection.

I much regret that, with the exception of two instances, I had not the pleasure of meeting any of the Local Boards.

In judging of the condition of a school from the present Report, it should be borne in mind that, at the period of my visit, the greater part of them were but imperfectly supplied with books, very few had appropriate or sufficient desking, most of them were without black boards, clocks, and many other little etc., which tend so much to facilitate the instructions of the schoolmaster. In some cases the buildings were in a dilapidated condition, and either totally without, or inadequately furnished with, out-buildings. In three instances, which might be named, the dreadfully crowded state of that which per favor was designated a school-room, was such that the health of the teachers materially suffered; in one case rendering him increasingly unfit for the duties of his office, and in another causing such a deterioration of health as to compel him to relinquish his duties altogether.

Of the twenty schools visited, six were found to be in a healthy and vigorous condition, viz.: St. James, Glebe, Pitt Town, Richmond, Cook's River and Pennant Hills; four were decidedly in an unsatisfactory state, so much so as to warrant my calling the special notice of the Lord Bishop of Sydney to them, viz.: Burwood, Enfield, South Kurrajong, and Emu Plains, (the teacher of the last school has since resigned); the remaining ten were being conducted with more or less efficiency, the teachers being generally desirous of adopting any measures of improvement pointed out to them.

The system of quarterly or half-yearly inspection by the Local Boards themselves, have, when carried out, a marked effect upon the general proficiency of the children and the interest and activity of the teacher.

Since I last had the honor of addressing the Board, the first Voluntary Examination of Church of England Teachers has been held, under a Board of Examiners appointed by the Lord Bishop of Sydney. The following gentlemen compose the Board:—Rev. Canon Allwood, B.A.; Rev. H. Hose, M.A., Warden of St. Paul's College; Rev. W. Hodgson, M.A., Principal of Moore College; The Diocesan Inspector of Church of England Schools. To this examination eight candidates presented themselves; of this number five were awarded a Registered Teacher's Certificate, two withdrew, and one failed. The next examination is fixed for the 1st July, 1858.

The new school at Waverley has been opened, under the charge of Miss Hartley, one of the successful candidates at the Xmas Examination.

At St. Paul's, Chippendale, a new Infant School-room has been erected, to accommodate the large number of infants heretofore attending the Primary School, and only provided with tent accommodation.

St. Philip's School has been refitted on the tripartite system, with parallel rows of desking in three tiers.

For the more minute details of each school I have the honor to refer you to the special Report thereon which accompanies this statement.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

W. J. CUTHBERT,
Diocesan Inspector and Secretary.

{ Revd. Mr. Elder undertook these subjects—and the answers were intelligently given; the letter of Catechism was well known.

5 children read fairly in this class.

14 children read indifferently and spelt imperfectly.

12 children read fairly in the New, and 16 in the Old Testament.

The children wrote fairly.

16 wrote words of two syllables well.

{ The majority of the children work sums in these Rules moderately well.

20 could work these Rules fairly.

A few of the upper children had a fair knowledge of these Rules.

The answers were confined to a few on this subject. The same.

Of the whole school good.

A large proportion of the school wrote carefully.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

(FURTHER APPENDIX TO REPORT FOR 1857.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 August, 1858.

C. E. ROBINSON, ESQ. to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Denominational School Board Office,
Sydney, 22 July, 1858.*

SIR,

Referring to the Report of the Denominational School Board for the year 1857, I have now the honor, by direction of the Board, to forward the accompanying Statistical Documents, relative to the attainment of the Children attending the Schools under the Board, together with other matters of detail connected with the Schools. The Board directs me to say that this Return would have been forwarded at an earlier period, only that some of the documents from which the information has been collected were found to have been imperfectly filled in by the Teachers, and had to be returned for correction; this fact will also account for a slight difference appearing between the list of the number of Children on the Rolls now sent and that given in the Report for 1857.

I have, &c.,

C. E. ROBINSON.

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

MR. R. V. GALE.

(TEACHER OF THE PRESBYTERIAN SCHOOL, PITT STREET.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 7 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of Robert Vining Gale, teacher, of Redfern, in the Colony of
New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner was employed as the recognised Government Teacher of the Presbyterian School, Pitt-street South, Sydney, from January, 1851, to August, 1857, a period of nearly seven years, during which time your Petitioner believes that he discharged his duties as Teacher to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

That your Petitioner, on the 9th July, 1857, without any previous intimation that any change in the management of the School was contemplated, received a notice, dated 30th June, 1857, signed James Fullerton and William McClelland, stating that it was intended that the School should be conducted according to certain newly-framed resolutions, a copy of which was sent for the first time with the notice, and that your Petitioner's services as Teacher of that School would not be required after the last day of August, 1857.

That your Petitioner, wishing to obtain from the Local Board the cause of such a peremptory notice, immediately wrote to the Chairman, requesting an explanation of the charges preferred against him, if any, to warrant such a notice; and that your Petitioner received an answer stating that he (the Chairman) was not aware of any charges having been preferred against your Petitioner, and further adding, that if your Petitioner wished to conduct the School under the new regulations, he could make application.

That your Petitioner therefore considered, as the Local Board had dismissed him without any sufficient cause being assigned, it would not only be fruitless, but mean and contemptible, both in himself and to the profession generally, to make application under such circumstances, and could not but consider the offer more as an insult than otherwise.

That your Petitioner, in order to sustain his position and justify his character, appealed to the Denominational School Board to make such inquiries as seemed to them necessary, when, after a lapse of three months, your Petitioner received the following reply, viz.:—

“ The Board have applied for a copy of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Local Board at the meeting at which the subject was decided upon by them, but have not yet succeeded in procuring this information; they are therefore unable to proceed with the subject.”

That during the delay, forcible possession had been taken of the School-room; and the Member of the Local Board (Mr. McClelland) who had signed the notice of dismissal had been appointed Teacher. Your Petitioner was therefore prevented from prosecuting the duties of the School, and thus was suddenly deprived of his situation and also his living.

As your Petitioner had been previously informed by the Chairman of the Local Board that it was his opinion it would be quite competent to conduct the School on other premises, and still receive the Government allowance, your Petitioner conducted the School on other premises, at considerable expense and inconvenience; but, as your Petitioner could not get his Monthly Abstract signed by a Member of the Local Board, no salary would be allowed him.

That your Petitioner laid his case before the Members of the United Association of Teachers, who, after giving it their consideration, requested permission to publish it in one of the Newspapers; and accordingly a great part of the Correspondence was inserted in the Empire of Friday, November 27th, 1857.

Your Petitioner having, in his opinion, taken all legitimate means in vindication of his character and position, without effect, has been reluctantly compelled to refer the matter to your Honorable House; and therefore prays that your Honorable House will take the matter into your consideration, and afford such relief to your Petitioner as the extreme hardship of the case may seem to require.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

ROBERT VINING GALE.

INTRODUCTION OF TEACHERS UNDER IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS.

No. 1.

THE SECRETARY TO THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Denominational School Board Office,
Sydney, 19 November, 1856.*

SIR,

I have the honor, by direction of the Denominational School Board, to forward the accompanying copy of a letter, dated 28th October, from the Venerable Archdeacon M'Encroe, relative to the introduction to this Colony of School Teachers, through the assistance of the Immigration Department. The Board strongly recommend that the suggestions conveyed in the Archdeacon's letter may be complied with; and I am directed to say that it is their intention to forward to the Government any applications of a similar nature which may be received from other religious bodies.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

CHAS. E. ROBINSON,
Secretary.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

Sydney, 28 October, 1856.

SIR,

In consequence of the scarcity of well-trained teachers in the Colony, I have the honor, by direction of His Grace the Archbishop, to suggest to the Board the propriety of making application to the Government to provide a free passage for five or six teachers, together with their families, from England or Ireland, for Roman Catholic Schools, in connection with your Board.

It appears to me that there was an oversight, while providing passages at the expense of the land fund for some 80 or 90,000 emigrants to this Colony, in not making any provision whatever for bringing a few teachers to conduct the education of the children of this very large body of emigrants. I have no doubt, however, but the Government will see and rectify this mistake, by sanctioning an allowance for the passage money of a few Roman Catholic teachers, as above suggested, in accordance with the regulations for the selection of emigrants, lately published.

I have the honor to suggest that such teachers as may be recommended by the Most Reverend Archbishop Cullen, of Dublin, or the Very Reverend Bartholomew Woodcock, President of Allhallows's College, near Dublin, may be approved of by the Commissioners of Emigration at Home, for the free passage for themselves and families to Sydney. I am inclined to think that, as the Government have already sanctioned free passages for teachers in connection with the Board of National Education, that a similar consideration will be extended to a small number of teachers to be employed under your Board.

I have, &c.,

C. COWPER, Esq., M.L.A.,
Chairman of the Denominational School Board.

J. M'ENCROE.

No. 2.

THE AGENT FOR IMMIGRATION to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Government Immigration Office,
Sydney, 6 December, 1856.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to return to you herewith the letter from the Secretary to the Denominational School Board, enclosing one from the Venerable Archdeacon M'Encroe, suggesting, by direction of His Grace Archbishop Polding, the propriety of granting free passages for five or six teachers, together with their families, from England or Ireland, (in ships chartered by the Commissioners for the conveyance of Emigrants) for the Denominational Schools, which was referred to me under your blank cover of the 25th ultimo,—and in reply to inform you, that I can have no objection to the plan proposed in Archdeacon M'Encroe's communication.

2. The greatest difficulty is frequently found by the Commissioners to obtain suitable persons to act in the capacity of schoolmasters on board emigrant ships; and I need hardly remark, that great benefits are derived by the emigrants on a long passage by having the assistance of an efficient schoolmaster on board.

3. I would therefore beg to recommend that the Commissioners be instructed to grant free passages to a Roman Catholic schoolmaster in any of their vessels in which there may be a preponderance of emigrants belonging to that religion, and the same advantage might be extended to Protestant schoolmasters on board of vessels in which the larger portion of the emigrants are of that persuasion.

I have, &c.,

H. H. BROWNE.

SIR,

I have the honor to transmit the enclosed copy of a letter from the Venerable Archdeacon M'Encroe, respecting the introduction to this Colony of School Teachers, in Emigrant ships, free of expense for passage, and to recommend that, should the Emigration Commissioners see no objection, a free passage be granted to a Roman Catholic schoolmaster in any of their vessels in which there may be a preponderance of emigrants belonging to that religion, and that the same advantage might be extended to Protestant schoolmasters on board of vessels in which the larger portion of the emigrants may be of that persuasion.

SIR,

With reference to your letter of the 19th ultimo, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Venerable Archdeacon M'Encroe, relative to the introduction to this Colony of School Teachers, through the assistance of the Immigration Department, I am directed to inform you that, the subject having been reported upon by the Immigration Agent, the suggestions therein contained have been recommended to the favorable consideration of Her Majesty's Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

I have, &c.,

THE SECRETARY TO THE DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Denominational School Board Office,

29 December, 1856.

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, informing the Denominational School Board, in reply to their communication of the 19th November, that the application of Archbishop Polding that passages to this Colony for certain Roman Catholic Schoolmasters be provided in Immigration Ships through the Immigration Department, had been recommended by the Local Government to the favorable consideration of the Land and Immigration Commissioners in London.

The

UNDER IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS.

The Board beg respectfully to express their regret that the answer to their communication should have been conveyed in such indefinite terms, and they hope that, with a view to encourage the efforts for improving the character of the schoolmasters of the Colony, the Government will be prepared to assure those who have to make the necessary arrangements that passages, as requested, will positively be granted by the Immigration Commissioners.

The Board also direct me to forward, for the consideration of the Government, an application from the Lord Bishop of Sydney, similar, in effect, to that made by Archbishop Polding; and they beg strongly to recommend that free passages in the immigration ships be granted to such schoolmasters as may be engaged for the Church of England Schools.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

C. E. ROBINSON,

Secretary.

[Enclosure in No. 5.]

Sydney, 26 November, 1856.

Dear Sir,

Since my appointment to the office I have the honor to hold I have introduced into the Colony six (6) trained teachers—three of them married men—and one Inspector—the late W. B. Goodman, Esq.,—at a cost to my friends at home of not less than £360, besides free passages given by one firm—the “White Star.”

I beg leave, through you, to make application for a sum of money to be granted to the Denominational School Board for the purpose of defraying the cost of introducing qualified teachers into this Colony, and also that the Emigration Commissioners in England may be instructed to grant free passages to such teachers as may be recommended to them by my Commissioners.

I have, &c.,

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, on the subject of the application made by Archbishop Polding, that passages to this Colony should be provided for Roman Catholic schoolmasters in emigration ships, and to inform you, that although the desire of this Government that such passages shall be granted was expressed to the Commissioners in the form of a recommendation, such recommendation is considered equivalent to the instructions which the Board wish to be sent to them.

2. I am directed to add, with reference to the last paragraph of your letter, relating to a similar application from the Bishop of Sydney, that the Commissioners have been already requested to extend the same advantage to Protestant schoolmasters on board of vessels in which the larger portion of the emigrants are of that persuasion.

SIR,

I am directed by the Emigration Commissioners to acknowledge your letter of the 10th January last, transmitting for their information the copy of a letter addressed to the Secretary to the Denominational School Board, giving an assurance that passages should be provided for Roman Catholic schoolmasters in Government emigrant vessels.

In reply, I am to state, that whenever suitable candidates apply the Commissioners will be happy to give effect to the recommendation of the Colonial Government now conveyed to them.

I am, however, to mention, that they do not find that any similar recommendation has before reached this Office.

18 May, 1857.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Emigration Commissioners to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th of December last, which I am to state had not reached the Commissioners when their reply to your letter of the 10th of January, on the same subject, was forwarded to the Colony.

I am directed to state that the Emigration Commissioners would always have been prepared to appoint a Roman Catholic schoolmaster, or Roman Catholic clergyman, to a ship in which the bulk of the emigrants were of that persuasion, if any candidate for such an appointment had offered himself. They will do so in any future ship so situated, whenever a suitable candidate may apply. The same principle will also be observed by appointing a Protestant schoolmaster when a majority of the emigrants are Protestants.

In Archdeacon M'Enroe's letter a suggestion is made that the teachers' families, as well as the teachers themselves, should receive a free passage. I am, however, to mention, that for the families of the teachers above the class of common emigrants free passages have never yet been provided at the expense of Colonial funds. In Mr. Parker's letter transmitting Archdeacon M'Enroe's communication this point is not noticed, and the Commissioners propose, under the circumstances, to continue to abide by their existing practice, unless instructions to the contrary should be received from the Colonial Government.

I have, &c.,

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 5th and 18th of May last, in reply to my communications of the 12th of December and 10th of January, respecting passages of schoolmasters being allowed in emigrant ships, and to request that you will have the goodness to state to the Commissioners that, as one of the objects of the arrangements was to introduce into the Colony properly qualified teachers, free passages should also be provided for the families of such as may be recommended in the manner pointed out in Archdeacon M'Encroe's letter, or by the Commissioners of the Bishop of Sydney.

GENTLEMEN,

With reference to my letters of the 12th December and 10th January last, I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that communications have been received from the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, stating that they would always have been prepared to appoint a Roman Catholic schoolmaster, or Roman Catholic clergyman, to a ship in which the bulk of the emigrants were of that persuasion, if any candidate for such an appointment had offered himself. They add that they will do so in any future ship so situated, whenever a suitable candidate may apply, and that the same principle will also be observed by appointing a Protestant schoolmaster when a majority of the emigrants are Protestants.

2. The Commissioners having, however, stated that for the families of the teachers above the class of common emigrants free passages have never been provided at the expense of Colonial funds, and that they propose continuing to act upon the existing practice, unless instructed to the contrary, I am directed further to inform you that the Colonial Secretary has apprised them that, as one of the objects of the arrangement is to introduce into the Colony properly qualified teachers, free passages should also be provided for the families of such as may be recommended in the manner pointed out in Archdeacon M'Encroe's letter, or by the Commissioners of the Bishop of Sydney.

SIR,

I am directed by the Emigration Commissioners to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th of September last, stating that it was the wish of the Colonial Government to introduce into the Colony properly qualified teachers, and requesting that, with this view, passages for the families of teachers in the Government emigrant ships should should be provided; if they, the teachers, were recommended in the manner pointed out by Archdeacon M'Encroe, or by the Commissioners of the Bishop of Sydney.

The Emigration Commissioners desire me, in reply, to state that they will be happy to give effect to the wish of the Colonial Government in this matter.

SIR,

With reference to my letter of the 5th September last, on the subject of the passages of the families of schoolmasters in the Government immigrant ships, I am directed to annex the copy of a communication from the Secretary to the Emigration Commissioners in England, stating that passages for such families will be provided in the above vessels should the teachers be recommended in the manner pointed out by Archdeacon M'Encroe, or by the Commissioners of the Bishop of Sydney.

No. 14

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.
*National Education Office,
Sydney 10 June, 1854.*

SIR,

We do ourselves the honor to acquaint you that, in consequence of the difficulties we experience in procuring teachers for conducting the National Schools in the Colony, we have resolved to apply for teachers from the Mother Country.

2. For this purpose we propose to request the Lords the Committee of Council on Education in England, and the Honorable the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, each Board to select eight married couples, (that is, sixteen in all,) who shall possess certificates, duly accredited by their respective secretaries, of having been placed upon examination not lower than on the second division of the second class. Their wives to be competent to instruct female children in plain and fancy needle-work.

3. To married couples, duly qualified as above, this Board purposes to offer a joint salary ranging from the rate of one hundred and eight to one hundred and forty-four pounds per annum, exclusive of the sums derivable from the children attending the schools, in the way of school fees, and of house rent.

4. It appears to us desirable that among the immigrants brought out in each ship to this Colony one or two schoolmasters and their families should be included, until the number above-mentioned is completed. The schoolmasters could be employed in the instruction of the immigrants during the voyage, and receive a free passage for themselves and their families as an equivalent for their services. We consider that no class of persons would be of more benefit to the Colony, and none therefore more deserving the consideration and support of the Government.

5. Under these circumstances we have the honor to request that His Excellency the Governor General will be pleased to forward the accompanying letters addressed to the Lords the Committee of Council on Education in England, and to the Honorable the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, on the subject; we would also respectfully request His Excellency to strongly recommend the Emigration Commissioners in England to grant free passages to such teachers (and their families) as may be selected for conducting the National Schools of the Colony.

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

We have, &c.,
J. H. PLUNKETT,
Chairman.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to THE CHAIRMAN OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL BOARD.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 14 July, 1854.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th ulto., in which you notify your intention of requesting the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education in England, and the Honorable the Committee of National Education in Ireland, each to select eight married couples for schoolmasters and mistresses, who will receive in this Colony a joint salary at the rate of from £108 to £144 per annum exclusive of sums derivable from the children &c., and you also suggested that free passages be granted to the parties selected in emigrant ships as an equivalent for their services on the voyage.

2. As there does not appear to the Governor General to be any objection to complying with your desire, a copy of your communication has been forwarded, together with the letters enclosed in it, to the Secretary of State, with a Despatch which His Excellency has addressed to His Grace on the subject; and the Emigration Commissioners in England have been requested to grant free passages to such teachers (and their families) as may be selected under your application for the National Schools of this Colony, on the condition proposed by you, if authorised to do so by the Duke of Newcastle.

I have &c.,

W. ELYARD.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to transmit the copy of a letter from the Board of National Education in Sydney, stating it to be their intention to procure, through the assistance of the Committee of Council on Education in England, and the Honorable the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, sixteen married couples as teachers for conducting the National Schools in the Colony; and I am directed by His Excellency the Governor General to request that, should the Emigration Commissioners see no objection, they will, under the sanction of the Secretary of State, provide passages to the Colony in the ships chartered by them for those persons who may be selected.

2. It will be observed that it is proposed that the schoolmasters should be employed in the instruction of the immigrants during the voyage, receiving free passages for themselves and families as an equivalent for their services, to which arrangement His Excellency does not see any objection.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

EDUCATIONAL GRANTS.

(PETITION FROM ST. JOHN'S, GLEBE.)

(Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 April, 1858.)

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned Members of the United Church of England and Ireland, in the Parish of St. John, the Glebe, in the Colony of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners are deeply impressed with the importance of the Education of the children of the Colony, and are earnestly desirous of seeing it greatly extended and improved.

That your Petitioners have already given proof of this earnestness, by erecting, at a cost of more than £1,500, a School House for the accommodation of 200 children, which is attended by about 140 at the present time, while the numbers are steadily increasing.

That no assistance whatever towards this building has been contributed by the Government. That your Petitioners felt it to be a great hardship, when engaged in this erection, that they could obtain no such assistance, except by applying to the National Board, and submitting to conditions with which they could not have complied.

That your Petitioners are hindered in further educational efforts, which they are desirous of making, by the present educational arrangements of the Government and the want of funds at the disposal of the Denominational Board.

That your Petitioners cannot but deem it most inequitable that while the National School Board receives a vote of the Legislature of £20,000 to provide for the education of less than 5,000 children, (the number stated by the Commissioners in their Report for 1855 being 4,752,) the Denominational Board is allowed but £14,666 for the education of 14,489 children, the number officially reported in the same year as under instruction in the Schools of that Board.

That the natural tendency of this arrangement is to depress the Denominational Schools, and to damp the zeal of many of the most zealous friends of education, and to restrain their efforts in the cause.

That your Petitioners are of opinion that it would be but fair and reasonable to divide the sum annually voted by the Legislature for Primary Education between the National and Denominational Boards, in proportion to the number of children who can be shewn to be under instruction in their Schools, and that such an arrangement would give a great impulse to educational efforts in all parts of the Colony.

Your Petitioners, therefore, pray your Honorable House to take the premises into your consideration and to adopt such measures with reference thereto as shall tend to the advancement of the intellectual, moral, and religious welfare of the Colony.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 9 April, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of Dunmore, District of Maitland,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners are aware that a Petition has been presented to your Honorable House, praying that the Public Grant for Educational Purposes may be divided between the Denominational and National Boards of Education, in proportion to the number of Children which are at present attending the Schools of the respective Boards.

That your Petitioners consider such a proceeding would be most unjust, and fraught with ruinous consequences to the cause of Education in this Colony.

That your Petitioners, therefore, pray, that no change may be made in the mode of distributing State Grants for Educational Purposes until a general system be established.

And your Petitioners will humbly pray.

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners are aware that a Petition has been presented to your Honorable House, praying that the Public Grant for Educational Purposes may be divided between the Denominational and National Boards of Education, in proportion to the number of children which are at present attending the Schools of the respective Boards.

That your Petitioners consider such a proceeding would be most unjust, and fraught with ruinous consequences to the cause of Education in this Colony.

EDUCATIONAL GRANTS.

(PETITION FROM MEMBERS OF CHURCH OF ENGLAND, ARALUEN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 April, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.
The Petition of the Members of the United Church of England and Ireland, in the Gold District of Araluen, New South Wales.

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners are most anxious that the Education of the children of the Colony should be as general and efficient as possible.

That more than 40 new Denominational Schools in connexion with the Church of England are, at the present time, urgently demanded in the various parts of the Dioceses of Sydney and Newcastle.

That the existing Denominational Schools are not in the efficient state in which they should, or might be, from want of funds to improve School Buildings, to provide School Apparatus, to support Pupil Teachers, and to encourage deserving Masters.

That all these advantages might be obtained for Denominational Schools as effectually as for National Schools, if public funds were available for Denominational Schools in the same proportion to the number of children educated as such funds are available for National Schools.

That the number of children in the schools of the Denominational Board was, according to the last Report for 1855, 14,489, while the children in the schools of the National Board were, according to their Report for 1855, 4,752; while the amount of the public grants available for National Schools for 1855 (£20,000) greatly exceeded the amount available for the Denominational Schools—£14,666.

That for the same year, 1855, the amount expended by the National Board in school buildings was £4,282, while extensive school buildings were then going on, which would require the additional outlay of £6,148, making altogether an amount of £10,430; the whole amount available for the Denominational Board, during the same year, for improving school buildings, was only £74.

That this amount of support given to Denominational Schools, so disproportionate to the number of children educated in them, places those schools in a most disadvantageous position, and inflicts a serious injury on three-fourths of the children educated in the primary schools of this Colony.

That your Petitioners would rejoice to see larger grants of public money appropriated to render all the primary schools of the Colony as efficient as possible, but, leaving such increase of the public grant for Educational purposes to the wisdom of Parliament, would earnestly desire that the present disproportionate appropriation of the Educational Grant may be at once rectified, by that grant, whatever may be its amount, being divided between the Denominational and National Boards of Education, in proportion to the number of children which are at present attending the schools of the respective Boards.

And your Petitioners will humbly pray.

AUSTRALIAN MUSEUM.

(REPORT FROM TRUSTEES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 5 May, 1858.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE AUSTRALIAN MUSEUM, FOR THE YEAR ENDING 31 DECEMBER, 1857.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,
&c., &c., &c.

1. The Trustees of the Australian Museum have the honor to submit to your Excellency this their fourth Annual Report.

2. Owing to the liberality of the Legislature in granting the sum of two thousand pounds (£2,000,) towards the completion of the Museum, the Contract entered into at the close of last year to provide additional rooms for the accommodation of the officers of the Institution; to erect staircases to the gallery; to ventilate the building; to drain and flag the basement; and, in other respects, to improve and complete the present building,—was carried out as speedily as possible, at an expenditure of one thousand six hundred and fifty pounds (£1,650.)

3. The Collections of Specimens in the various branches of Natural History having been arranged, as far as was practicable at the moment, the Museum was thrown open for public inspection on the 24th May, 1857, and upwards of ten thousand persons availed themselves of the opportunity offered of visiting the Museum during the first week of its opening.

4. The Trustees have much pleasure in stating that during the past year the Collections have been still further enriched by numerous donations, not only from persons resident in the Colony, but also from individuals in various parts of the Globe. Amongst the most important of these may be recorded,—1st. A skull and other bones of a new fossil marsupial animal called Zygomaturus trilobus, which were discovered at the Darling Downs, and presented to the Museum by F. N. Isaacs, Esq., of Gowrie. 2ndly.: A valuable Collection of Crustaceæ, &c., from the Feejees and other of the Pacific Islands, presented by Dr. Rayner, and Assistant-Surgeon Macdonald, of H. M. S. "Herald"; and, 3rdly.: An important series of casts of fossil animals from the Museum of Natural History of Paris, for the possession of which the Trustees are indebted to the exertions of Sir William Macarthur.

5. The Trustees have also the honor to inform your Excellency, that plans and estimates for the proposed extension of the Museum building have been prepared by the Colonial Architect, and have met with the approval of the Board. These plans have been submitted to the Government, with a request that they will cause a sum of money to be placed on the Estimates to enable the Trustees to carry out, if not the whole, at least a portion of the proposed additions, which, owing to the very limited accommodation of the present building have become absolutely necessary.

6. The space as yet allotted for the display of the Natural History collections is already far too limited for their proper arrangement; whilst the casts from the antique statues, and many other works of Art, are still unavailable to the public from the want of a suitable gallery for their reception.

7. The Trustees would beg respectfully to call the attention of your Excellency to the importance of providing a Library for the reception of the scientific works and drawings belonging to the Museum.

8. The necessity for laying on water for the use of the Institution has also become most urgent.

9. In Appendix No. 1 will be found an account of the Expenditure by the Trustees of the sum voted by the Legislature towards the completion of the present wing of the building.

10. Appendix No. 2 contains the Expenditure of the Annual Endowment of One thousand pounds (£1,000) for the current expenses of the Museum.

11. Appendix No. 3 shews that the 4th By-Law of the Museum has been repealed, and contains a copy of the By-Law substituted in its stead.

12. The Board have the honor to submit this as their Report for the year 1857, and in testimony thereof have caused their Corporate Seal to be hereto affixed, this 23rd day of March, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight.

W. MACLEAY.

By order of the Trustees,

GEORGE FRENCH ANGAS,

(L. S.)

Secretary.

BOTANIC GARDENS.

(REPORT FROM DIRECTOR FOR 1857.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 July, 1858.

THE DIRECTOR OF THE BOTANIC GARDENS to THE HONORABLE THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS, reporting on the Department of the Botanic Gardens and Domains.

Botanic Gardens,

6 July, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to transmit, for the information of the Government, a brief report of this establishment, as well as of my proceedings during the past year. A portion of the Upper Garden heretofore occupied by vines has been cleared, and the soil sifted through a fine screen, with the object of getting rid of the greatest pest with which any garden can be infested, viz., a small sedge (Cyperus Hydra), but better known as the bulb or water grass. But, notwithstanding the time and labor bestowed on this work, the advantages sought for have been only partially obtained; the ground is, however, sufficiently clean to enable me to illustrate the very interesting family of Leguminosæ, the members of which are now scattered all over the Gardens.

2. Some slight alterations have also been effected in the walks on the western side of the Upper Garden, by trenching the ground, removing the ironstone gravel, or clay, which forms a subsoil, and supplying its place with good earth, obtained from various quarters.

3. In consequence of the Garden being still crowded in many parts with uninteresting plants, I steadily continue to clear away the useless trees, whether indigenous or exotic, which have been allowed hitherto to encumber the ground, as it is only by pursuing this course that the number of genera and species can be materially increased, and a proper botanical arrangement carried out.

4. One of the many difficulties experienced from time to time in endeavouring to increase and keep together the new and rare plants as they arrive has been the want of a secure enclosure suitable for a nursery and propagating ground; hitherto as these plants were received many of them were, from want of space in the frame-yard, necessarily planted out in the open ground, where, from various causes, some were entirely lost. His Excellency the Governor General, on being informed of this difficulty, most kindly authorized a portion of the Kitchen Garden attached to Government House to be fenced off and appropriated for the purpose referred to, and as this enclosure is contiguous to my residence, and the soil rich and of considerable depth, the new and valuable exotic plants which are constantly received in exchange for those of this Colony will now be secured from injury, and easily propagated for distribution.

5. During the past season many important additions have been made to the collection of plants in this Garden from various parts of the world: these consist of both ornamental and useful kinds, and I would particularly draw attention to two species of the latter character, viz., of the genus Rhamnus, utilis and hirsutus, both of which are said to yield the most valuable green dye. From the information which I have been able to obtain concerning these plants, they appear to have been long held in high estimation in China for dyeing purposes, and at one time formed an article of considerable export. A writer in a recent paper observes, with regard to the former of these, that "it is a shrub from 6 to 8 feet high. The dye is obtained by stripping off the bark and macerating it in water for several weeks, and treating it in a manner somewhat similar to the process of making indigo.

"It dyes silk of a beautiful light brilliant green, which presents the same color by candle or gas light as by day: this dye was highly valued in France, where it has been sold for £20 per lb. The French Government offered a premium of £150 for the discovery of a substitute, that might cost from 19s. to 21s. per lb., but without result. It appears to cost the manufacturers a good deal either in material or in labor, as it cannot be procured in China under 5 guineas per lb." From this account there is every reason to hope that by an improved method of extracting this valuable dye, which the discoveries of the present day would render probable, these plants may become a source of great value to this Colony. Another dye plant, lately received both from England and from Java, is a soft wooded free growing plant, belonging to the family of Scrophularinaceæ; but beyond the statement contained in my correspondence, viz., that it produces in India (where it is indigenous) one of the best known blue dyes, I am no further acquainted with its qualities. A small kind of palm (Livistonia humilis), from China, where the fibre is much used, has been introduced, but, unlike the Grass Cloth Plant, a native of the same country, to which reference was made of its luxuriant growth in my last general report, this grows but very slowly, and I fear will scarcely ever become, in this Colony, of more interest than its appearance may demand.

6. From these plants, of perhaps great ultimate value to the Colony, I would now draw attention to other plants more recently introduced, which will be of a certain and immediate benefit to the Colonists; of these the Zulu Kaffir Imphée, and a small kind of yam (Dioscorea Batatas) may be more particularly mentioned. The Imphée was obtained from the Cape of Good Hope, by W. Archer Esq., Deputy Registrar General at Melbourne, from whom I believe it was procured by the Honorable E. D. Thomson, Esq., and introduced by that gentleman into this Colony. It is a species of Sorghum or Millet, and, in my opinion, the strongest and best kind yet in cultivation here. In habit it is not unlike the now well known Sugar Millet, but presents to the eye even of a common observer a very distinct difference, being of a much more robust growth, and larger in all its parts, having more compact and somewhat erect panicles of flowers, and seeds of a glossy brown, instead of a glossy black color, which latter character will always serve to distinguish the Sugar Millet from all others. There can be no doubt but that this will form a very valuable possession to the stockholders in this Colony, as well as to those who may hereafter turn their attention to the manufacture of sugar. From my knowledge of the nature of this plant, I am enabled to state that it will produce two or three crops of seeds from the same stem in the same season, the stem still being perfectly green and fresh; and at no stage of its growth does the saccharine principle, which is largely contained in the stem, appear to be so great as when the second crop of seed is ripe. Either boiled or raw the seed is greedily eaten by horses, pigs, and fowls, and I may add that, whether for feeding purposes or for the extraction of the saccharine principle, the wider apart the plants are grown the greater will be the result. The Dioscorea is not of such recent introduction, but is scarcely yet known in New South Wales. By the residents in those parts of the Colony where the potatoe cannot be successfully cultivated, it will be much and justly appreciated.

7. With the view of rendering the Public Herbarium of indigenous plants as complete as possible, I obtained permission to visit the Blue Mountain District during the past summer season, at a time hitherto devoted to other purposes. From Hartley, to which place I at once proceeded, the country on both sides of the main road back to within a few miles of Lapstone Hill was partially investigated; and thence I proceeded across the line of range to the Curragong, and on to Bell's Line of Road as far as Mount Thomar, where I remained some days, and then returned to Sydney. During the progress of this very interesting journey I was enabled to obtain flowering specimens and seeds of many plants new to the collection, and also of some previously not known. By this means the Herbarium has been greatly enriched, the collection of plants is increased, and the exchanges with other countries effected with more satisfaction and liberality.

8. I cannot conclude this Report without expressing my thanks to those of my correspondents who continue to contribute plants and seeds to the Garden; a few of whom have neither received nor solicited anything in return, whilst others have received some equivalent in kind. Among the former I might venture to name Captain Loring, of H. M. S.

Iris," Captain Denham and the Officers of H. M. S. "Herald," Commandant Le Brys and Captain Richard Foy, of H. I. M. S. "La Bayonnaise" and "Herault," passing to and from Sydney

REPORT FROM THE DIRECTOR OF THE BOTANIC GARDENS. 3

Sydney and the parts of New Caledonia, and to M. Pancher, the Government Botanist on that island. Of the latter, Mr. Veitch, nurseryman, King's Road, London, demands more than usual thanks: this gentleman scarcely ever allows one of Messrs. Green's vessels to leave London without shipping for this establishment one or more cases of the choicest and most valuable plants in his collection, which is one of the most extensive and varied in England. My best thanks are also due to those commanders of vessels who have conveyed the cases to this Colony, and who have invariably done so with the greatest possible care, and without any charge whatever.

9. I may now briefly refer to the Domains, in which some improvements have been recently made. Towards Macquarie Fort, in the Outer Domain, a great part of the brushwood growing on the western side has been cleared away, and such trees only left as were at all ornamental; much more work of this description will be required to be done before the appearance of this part of the Domain can be much improved, and some desirable police arrangements carried out.

10. In the Inner Domain, on the side facing the Botanic Garden, a considerable space has been cleared of tea-tree scrub, and small portions of the ground in many places, here and elsewhere, fenced in, trenched, and planted with suitable trees. To replace those indigenous and other kind of trees which are now on the ground, but from the poor nature of the soil are fast dying off, I trust that means may be supplied to enable me to continue this work, which will be of so much future advantage to the public, both in the Inner and in the Outer Domain.

11. As usual, a detailed account of the Expenditure of the Department, as well as of the plants sent away and received during the past year, is herewith appended.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES MOORE,

Director.

TO THE HONORABLE THE SECRETARY FOR LAND AND PUBLIC WORKS.

NOTE:—A small quantity of the seed of the Imphee Millet has been saved, and will be distributed according to priority of application.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF DR. LEICHHARDT.

(REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 1 September, 1858.

and party.*

HAVING received instructions from the Honorable the Secretary for Land and Public Works to organize an expedition for the purpose of searching for traces of Dr. Leichhardt and party, who left New South Wales in 1848 with the intention of proceeding overland to Western Australia, I proceeded to Moreton Bay with such portions of the equipment as had been prepared in Sydney.

1857.
8th December.

1858.
11th January.

On reaching Ipswich forty horses were purchased, and having dispatched the stores to Mr. Royd's station, on the Dawson River, by drays, the party were collected at that place; but, owing to unforeseen delays in the transport of the stores, the equipment and organization of the expedition was not complete till the latter part of March.

The following list of the party, horses, stores, &c., will shew the principal arrangements.

The party consisted of nine persons, viz. :—

Commander	A. C. Gregory,
Assistant Commander	C. F. Gregory,
Assistant	S. Burgoyne,
Overscer	G. Phibbs,
Stockman, &c.	R. Bowman,
"	W. Selby,
"	T. Dunn,
"	W. von Wedel,
"	D. Worrell.

The stock consisted of horses alone, comprizing thirty-one pack and nine saddle horses, completely equipped.

Provisions comprised the dried meat of two bullocks and four sheep, weighing, as butcher's meat, 16 cwt., but when dried and the bones removed, reduced to 300 lbs.—in addition to this, 500 lbs. bacon, 1,600 lbs. flour, 100 lbs. rice, 350 lbs. sugar, 60 lbs. tea, 40 lbs. tobacco, and some minor articles.

The arms and ammunition were—one minie rifle, eight double-barrel guns, nine revolver pistols, 25 lbs. gunpowder, 150 lbs. shot and balls, percussion caps, &c.

For the conveyance of water two leather water-bags were provided, each holding five gallons, besides which each of the party was furnished with a water-bag of India rubber holding three pints.

The tents were made of calico, each suited for the accommodation of two persons, and the several articles of camp equipage were of the lightest construction consistent with the service required.

The instruments employed were an eight-inch sextant, box-sextant, prismatic compasses, pocket compasses, double axis compass, aneroid barometers, thermometers, and artificial horizon, &c.

Including forty sets of horseshoes, farrier's and carpenter's tools, together with sundry material for repairs, &c.; the total weight of the equipment was about 4,000lbs., exclusive of the saddles and harness, which gave an average load of 150lbs. as the net load carried by each pack-horse.

27th March.

These arrangements being complete the expedition left "Juanda," and proceeded by the road to Mr. Cardew's station at "Euroomba," from which, under the guidance of Mr. Bolton—whose local knowledge was of material service—we made our way through the dense scrubs and broken country to the west, for about thirty miles, to the head of "Scott's Creek," a small tributary of the Dawson River.

29th March.

The general course was now W.N.W. through a country with rich grassy valleys and dense scrubs of "brigalow" acacia on the higher ground. Green grass was abundant at this time; but I fear that in seasons of drought few of the water-holes are permanent. The timber consists of iron-bark, box, and a few other species of eucalyptus—the brigalow acacia attaining the height of thirty feet. Soft brown sandstones of the coal measures are the prevailing rock, forming hills with table summits.

2nd April.

With some difficulty, owing to the dense scrubs, we crossed the basaltic ridge which divides the eastern waters flowing to the Dawson River from those trending to the west into the basin of the Maranoa River, a tributary of which—probably the Merivale River—was followed westward. The country became more sandy, timbered with iron-bark, cypress, &c. The whole was, however, well grassed, and suited for grazing if not too heavily stocked.

5th April.

Reaching the Maranoa River in about latitude $25^{\circ} 45'$, water was scarcely procurable in the sandy bed, and we had to dig wells to obtain a supply.

7th April.

Warned by the fact that Messrs. H. Gregory and Haly had been unable to penetrate the country to the west from scarcity of water, even three months earlier in the season, we followed up the Maranoa to "Mount Owen," and having found a sufficient supply of water and grass for a few days halt, I proceeded to reconnoitre the country to the west, and at length found a practicable route to the tributaries of the "Warrego" River, to which the party was advanced.

12th April.

A heavy shower of rain had filled the gullies in this locality, and green grass clothed the country, forming a striking contrast to the dry and waterless valley of the Maranoa.

15th April.

Fine openly timbered valleys well suited for pasture, alternated with ridges of scrub of brigalow acacia till we reached "Mount Playfair," a basaltic hill on the sandstone ridge which separates the Warrego Valley from that of the "Nive," a small branch of which was followed down to its junction with the main channel in latitude $25^{\circ} 6'$.

16th April.

The soil in the valley of the Nive is sandy, thinly grassed, and openly timbered with iron-bark, spotted gum, &c.; the back country rising into low sandstone ridges, covered with dense scrub of brigalow acacia. Some pools of permanent water containing small fish were passed, on the bank of which the remains of numerous native camps were seen.

17th April.

From the Nive River a N.N.W. course was pursued through a nearly level sandy country, covered with a scrub of acacia, eucalypti, bottle-tree, &c., which offered great impediments to our progress, till within six miles of the "Victoria River," when we suddenly emerged from the scrub on to open downs of rich clay soil; but the drought had been of such a long continuance that the whole of the vegetation had been destroyed and swept away by the wind, leaving the country to all appearance an absolute desert.

The bed of the Victoria was scarcely 10 yards wide, and perfectly dry, so that it was only after a prolonged search along its course that a small puddle of water was found in a hollow of the clay flat, and near it, fortunately for our horses, a little grass growing in widely scattered tufts.

Being now on the line of route which Dr. Leichhardt had stated his intention of following, the party was divided, so that both sides of the river were examined in all probable positions positions in which his camps might have been situated; but as the high floods appeared to have inundated the country for nearly a mile on each bank last year, all tracks of previous explorers were necessarily obliterated, and it was only by marked trees, or the bones of cattle, that we could hope to discover any trace.

During the first two days journey down the river only a few small pools of water were seen, and these not of a permanent character, while the rich vegetation on the open downs, which had excited the admiration of Sir T. Mitchell on his discovery of the country in a favorable season, had wholly passed away, leaving little but a bare surface of clay, the deep fissures in its surface giving evidence of long continued drought.

In latitude $24^{\circ} 37'$, longitude $146^{\circ} 18'$, a small sandy creek, of equal size with the 20th April. Victoria, joined from the east, and just below the first permanent pool of water was found. There was a slight improvement in the grass, but dense scrubs prevailed in the back country, and even approached the river at intervals.

While collecting the horses near this pool of water I detected a party of armed natives watching one of the stockmen, evidently, from their position in the scrub and general movements, inclined to hostilities, and I imagine that it was a knowledge that we were aware of their intentions which prevented my being able to establish any communication with them. I may here remark that this party, which numbered about eight, were the first natives seen during the journey.

Continuing our route along the river we discovered a "Moreton Bay Ash," (Eucalyptus sp.), about two feet diameter, marked with the letter L on the east side, cut through the bark, about four feet from the ground, and near it the stumps of some small trees which had been cut with a sharp axe, also a deep notch cut in the side of a sloping tree, apparently to support the ridge pole of a tent, or some similar purpose; all indicating that a camp had been established here by Leichhardt's party. The tree was near the bank of a small reach of water, which is noted on Sir T. Mitchell's map: this, together with its actual and relative position as regards other features of the country, prove it not to have been either one of Sir T. Mitchell's or Mr. Kennedy's camps, as neither encamped within several miles of the spot, besides which, the letter could not have been marked by either of them to designate the number of the camp, as the former had long passed his 50th camp, and the latter had not reached that number on the outward route, and numbered his camps from the farthest point attained on his return journey.

Notwithstanding a careful search, no traces of stock could be found. This is however easily accounted for, as the country had been inundated last season, though the current had not been sufficiently strong to remove some emu bones and mussel shells which lay round a native camping place within a few yards of the spot.

No other indications having been found, we continued the search down the river, examining every likely spot for marked trees, but without success.

The general aspect of the country was extremely level, and even the few distant ridges which were visible had but small elevation above the plain, the highest apparently not exceeding 200 or 300 feet. Timber was wholly confined to the bank of the river, and though open plains existed, acacia scrubs were the principal feature.

Water became very scarce in the channels of the river, and we were principally dependent on small puddles of rain-water from a recent thunder shower, but as we approached the northern bend some fine reaches of water were passed.

In latitude $26^{\circ} 2'$ we observed a small dry creek joining from the N. E. This I traced upwards for a few miles; but as its relative position with regard to the adjacent country, as well as the latitude, did not correspond with that of the Alice River on the chart, we continued our route: finding, however, that the general course of the river changed to S. W., I left the party at a small lagoon and rode up the river again, making a second search, more especially at the junction of the small dry creek, which proved to be identical with the Alice River, though more than five miles to the south, as the Victoria River never reaches the parallel of 24° .

Our position was now becoming very critical, as a long continuance of drought had not only dried up all the water, except in the deepest hollows in the channel of the main river, river, but the smaller vegetation, and even the trees on the back country were annihilated, rendering the country almost impracticable from the quantity of fallen dead branches, and even in the bed of the river where the inundation derived from heavy rain near the sources of the river last year had somewhat refreshed the grass, it was scarcely possible to find subsistence for the horses. Under existing circumstances, it would have been certain destruction to attempt a north-west route from this point; and the only course that appeared open to us was to follow down the main river to the junction of the Thompson River, and ascend that watercourse so as to intersect Leichhardt's probable line of route, had he penetrated in that direction, favored by a better season. At the same time, it was probable that, like ourselves, he had been repulsed, and would then follow down the river, and search for a more favorable point from which to commence his north-west course, in order to round the desert interior on its northern side; and we therefore continued our search down towards the Thompson River.

29th April.

The country was perfectly flat on both sides of the river, and shewed traces of tremendous floods. The soil near the river was often deeply-cracked mud, water very scarce, and grass seldom seen. The back country was covered with scrubs of dead acacia, the soil a red sand or gravel; and such was the unpromising appearance, that I began to fear our horses would soon fail for want of food and water; but having camped at a water-hole during Sunday, to rest the party, heavy rain commenced, and though the greater portion of the water was absorbed by the dry soil, some of the channels of the river filled and commenced to flow. This relieved us from much difficulty as regarded the want of water, and enabled us to seek for grass in positions which were otherwise inaccessible.

2nd May.

3rd May.

Just as we were leaving our camp a party of seven natives made their appearance; but though they came up to us, and talked much, I could get no useful information from them. As the party moved on they followed us, and, thinking they were not observed, made an attempt to throw a spear at one of the men; but Mr. C. Gregory, wheeling his horse quickly and presenting a revolver at the intending aggressors, they ran away, and left us to pursue our journey in peace.

4th May.

6th May.

The abundance of water was not without its inconveniences, and had the rain continued the party would have been annihilated, as our camp was between the deep channels which intersected the plain; and in attempting to extricate ourselves from the plains subject to inundation, found ourselves so completely entangled among the numerous deep channels and boggy gullies, in some of which the horses narrowly escaped suffocation in the soft mud, that after having forded one branch of the river, carrying the whole equipment across on our own backs, constructing a bridge over a second for the transport of the stores, and dragging the horses through as we best could with ropes, after three days of severe toil we had scarcely accomplished a direct distance of five miles.

The dry weather which followed rapidly hardened the surface of the clay plains, and I attempted to steer due west to the Thompson, but found the country so destitute of feed, and covered with dense acacia scrub, that we were compelled to return to the plains on the bank of the river.

8th May

The valley of the river trending west was somewhat contracted, and did not exceed five or six miles in breadth; the plains were firmer, salt-bush and grass more abundant, and the horses recovered slightly from the effects of the barren country.

Keeping back from the right bank of the main channel, we passed some ridges of drift sand, and came on a fine lagoon nearly a mile in length. Here we surprised a party of natives, who decamped on our approach, leaving a net, fish, &c., which we of course left untouched, and camped at a spot lower down the lagoon.

9th May

The next day, being Sunday, we remained at our camp, and the party of natives, consisting of seven or eight men, three or four women, and some children, approached us, and remained the greater part of the day near the tents. They were very anxious to enter the camp, but this was not permitted.

By signs they expressed that they had observed we had not taken away any of their property the evening before, when they ran away and left their nets, and were therefore satisfied our intentions were friendly; but we could not procure any information relative to the objects of our journey or the character of the country before us.

At 4 p.m. they informed us they were going to sleep at the most distant part of the lagoon, and would return next morning at sunrise, and then departed.

After

After dark, however, the natives were detected attempting to crawl into the camp through the bushes, and though we called to them in an unmistakeable tone to retire, they would not withdraw. 1858.
9th May.

As the position they had taken up was such as to command our camp, and render it unsafe in the event of an attack, it was necessary to dislodge them. I therefore fired a pistol over them, but was answered by a shout of derision, which no doubt would have been soon followed by a shower of spears had we not compelled them to retreat by a discharge of small shot directed into the scrub, after which we were not further molested.

We were now approaching the junction of the Thompson River, but the country became worse as we advanced, and the last five miles of the plain were absolutely devoid of vegetation. Our hopes were, however, raised on finding that the late rain had caused the Thompson to flow, though the current was not strong; we had, however, to travel upwards of twelve miles up its course before any grass could be found for the horses. 10th May.

Continuing our route up the Thompson, nothing could be more desolate than the aspect of the country; except the few trees which grew on the immediate bank of the river there was scarcely a tree left alive, while the plains were quite bare of vegetation, except a few salsolaceous bushes. At the distance of five miles low ridges of red drift sand shewed the desert character of all around; even the lower surfaces of the clouds assumed a lurid tinge from the reflection of the bare surface of red sand. 11th May.

In latitude $24^{\circ} 40'$ low sandstone hills, or rather table land, approached both banks of the river, and the gullies which intersected them had supplied the water lower down, as the channel was dry above. We, however, succeeded in reaching latitude $23^{\circ} 47'$, when the absence of water and grass—the rain not having extended so far north, and the channels of the river separating into small gullies and spreading on the wide plains—precluded our progressing further to the north or west; and the only prospect of saving our horses was to return south as quickly as possible. 12th May.
15th May.

This was a more severe disappointment, as we had just reached the part of the country through which Leichhardt most probably travelled, if the season was sufficiently wet to render it practicable.

Thus compelled to abandon the principal object of the expedition, only two courses remained open—either to return to the head of the Victoria River and attempt a northern course by the valley of the "Belyando," or to follow down the river and ascertain whether it flowed into "Cooper's Creek" or the Darling. The latter course appeared most desirable, as it was just possible that Leichhardt, under similar circumstances, had been driven to the S. W.

In order to ascertain whether any large watercourses came from the west, the return route was along the right bank of the Thompson, but only one small creek and some considerable gullies joined on that side; nor was the country of a better character than on the left bank—consisting of barren plains, subject to inundation, low rocky ridges covered with dense scrub, and sandy ridges producing triodia.

We had nearly reached the Victoria River, when, in crossing a gully, Worrell's horse fell and hurt him so severely that we had to halt for some time before he could be placed on his horse again, and it was therefore fortunate that a small patch of dry grass was found on the bank of the river, which enabled us to halt the next day, which was Sunday. 22nd May.
23rd May.

Travelling down the right bank of the river the principal channels were full of water, but the clay plains between were quite dry, the rain which had caused the river to flow not having extended so far south; nothing could well be more desolate than the unbounded level of these vast plains, which, destitute of vegetation, extended to the horizon. Our horses were reduced to feeding on the decayed weeds, and even these were so scarce that they eagerly devoured the thatch of some old native huts.

We had nearly reached the furthest point attained by Mr. Kennedy when the horses shewed signs of failing strength, and the channels on the east side of the plain being dry, I conceived it prudent to cross to the western side again. 27th May.

The dry mud was so deeply cracked that the horses were continually falling, and one horse was so completely exhausted that we had to abandon him.

6 EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF DR. LEICHHARDT AND PARTY.

28th May.

Steering a westerly, and then a north course, we reached the small water-hole at Mr. Kennedy's second camp on the return route; there was just sufficient water to supply the party for one night, and a few scattered tufts of grass near it, but quite insufficient for the supply of so large a number of horses.

Close to the water-hole we found Mr. Kennedy's marked tree; it was a large box-tree, marked on the north side thus:—

The cuts of the axe and chisel were still quite clear, though twelve years had elapsed; but the slow growth and decay of trees in the interior may be attributed to the dryness of the climate.

29th May.

Steering north-west, after toiling nearly thirty miles across this fearful waste of dry mud, we at length reached a small patch of grass on a sandy hummock, but only just in time to save the horses, as many could scarcely keep on their legs, and we had to remove their loads to those which were less exhausted.

30th May.

Long before the next morning our hungry animals had consumed every blade of grass, and the small patch round the camp was reduced to the same barren appearance as the surrounding plain. We therefore started in search of food for them, and were fortunate in finding a second patch of grass, about three miles to the south, and halted for the remainder of the day, which was Sunday, thankful that Providence had enabled us to make it a day of rest.

31st May.

Lat. 26° 2'

The running channel of the river being still to the west of our position, we steered south-west, over barren clay plains, to some low ridges of drift sand, beyond which we found the channel full of water, with a slight current; but it terminated in a large reach of water which had not yet filled, and the channel lower down was dry.

Low ridges of red drift sand were now frequent on the plain, and appeared to be the higher points of the former sandy desert, the clay plains resulting from the deposition of mud in the hollows between which had in course of time filled it to one uniform level.

1st June.

The channels on the western side of the plain were very irregular, sometimes completely lost on the level surface, and again collecting into large hollows, with box trees on the banks, in which fine sheets of water still remained, some 100 yards wide and more than a mile in length. We therefore did not experience so much inconvenience with regard to the supply of this necessary element as from the absence of sufficient grass, and the all but impracticable nature of the mud plains.

4th June.

In latitude 27° low sandstone table land approached the west side of the river, and we attempted to travel along the slope between it and the mud plains, but found it so stony that the horses' hoofs were soon worn to the quick, as we had been compelled to remove their shoes to enable them to traverse the mud plains.

Had it not been for green bushes of salsolae, and some similar plants which had sprung up since the rain, this tract of country exactly resembled the stony desert described by Capt. Sturt as existing 200 miles to the westward. These remarkable features forming the declivities of the sandstone table land through which "Cooper's Creek" forces its way, and by confining the waters to a narrower space during floods, causes the fine deep reaches of water which characterize it.

8th June.

By following the western limits of the plains we reached latitude 27° 30', when the sandstone table land receded, and a boundless expanse of mud plain was before us; the lines of box trees which had hitherto marked the channels nearly ceased, polygonum and atriplex constituting the main feature of the vegetation.

9th June.

After toiling S.W. a day and a half over this level surface to latitude 27° 50', we approached some low ridges, at the foot of which there was a lagoon 100 yards wide, exhibiting signs of a current during flood to the N.W.; and as there was an evident westerly trend in all the smaller channels previously crossed, it was evident they would soon merge in Cooper's Creek.

Steering W.N.W. the several channels collected together, and soon formed a deep watercourse, with fine reaches of water.

The

The sandstone table land closed in on both sides; the soil of the intervening plain^{1858. 9th June.} was much firmer, but shewed by the vegetation that saline nature which so often attends the development of the upper sandstones in Australia. Grass was abundant, and it was surprising with what rapidity the horses recovered their strength.

Approaching the 141st meridian, which is the boundary of the province of South^{12th June.} Australia, stony ridges closed in on both banks of Cooper's Creek, forming almost a natural division, across which we followed a well-beaten native path; and here I observed the only instance which has come under my observation where the aborigines have taken the trouble to remove natural obstacles from their paths. The loose stones had been cleared from the track, and in some places piled in large heaps.

After passing the stony ridge the valley became wider, the hills receding suddenly, in^{14th June.} longitude 140° 30', both to the north and south; and the whole country to the west seemed to consist of a succession of low ridges of red sand and level plains of dry mud, subject to inundation.

Shortly before reaching the branch of Cooper's Creek named by Captain Sturt "Streletzki" Creek, we observed the tracks of two horses, one apparently a cart-horse, and the other a well bred animal, but as none of their tracks were within the last month, the rain had obliterated them to such an extent that they could not be traced up, as they had left the bank of the creek on the first fall of rain, as is the usual habit of horses whose wanderings are uncontrolled.

There can be little doubt that these horses belonged to Captain Sturt, who left one in an exhausted state near this locality, and also lost a second horse, whose tracks were followed many miles in the direction of this part of Cooper's Creek.

"Streletzki Creek," which separates nearly at a right angle from the main channel, appears to convey about one-third of the waters of Cooper's Creek nearly south, and, as we afterwards ascertained, connects it with Lake Torrens. We, however, continued to follow the channels which trended west for 30 miles, but large branches continually broke off to the south and west, and at length the whole was lost on the wide plains of dry mud between the sand ridges; and, as there was no prospect of either water or grass to the west, I steered south^{16th June.} and S. E. for fifty miles over a succession of ridges of red drift sand, ten to fifty feet high, running parallel to each other, and in a nearly N. and S. direction. Between these ridges we occasionally found shallow puddles of rain-water, or rather mud, as it was so thick with clay as to be scarcely fluid. Fortunately, a great quantity of green weeds had grown up since the rain, and the horses improved in condition, and did not require much water.

In latitude 28° 24' we again came on Streletzki Creek, and then followed it nearly^{21st June.} S. S. W. between sandy ridges to latitude 29° 25', when it turned to the west and entered^{25th} Lake Torrens. No permanent water was seen in the bed of the creek, though there are many deep hollows which when once filled retain water for several months, and this, combined with the existence of a fine reach of water in Cooper's Creek immediately above the point where Streletzki Creek branches off, renders it far the best line of route into the interior which has yet been discovered.

Passing between the eastern point of Lake Torrens and what has hitherto been considered the eastern arm, but now ascertained to be an independent lake, the space between (about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile) was level sandy ground, covered with salicornia, without any apparent connecting channel. The course was continued S.S.W. towards Mount Hopeless, at the northern extreme of the high ranges of South Australia, which had been visible across the level country at a distance of 60 miles.

As we approached the range of hills tracks of cattle and horses were observed, and 8^{26th June.} miles beyond Mount Hopeless came to a cattle station which had been lately established by Mr. Baker.

As the nature of the country we had traversed was such as not to admit of any useful deviations from it if we returned to New South Wales by land, I deemed it advisable to proceed forthwith to Adelaide, and, disposing of the horses and equipment, return with the party by sea to Sydney.

We therefore proceeded by easy stages towards Adelaide, experiencing the greatest^{31st July.} hospitality at the stations on our route, while our reception in the city was of the most flattering nature.

His

His Excellency Sir Richard Macdonald kindly gave me the use of an extensive paddock for the horses, and provided quarters for the men during the period which necessarily elapsed before the sale of the equipment of the expedition was effected. I have also to express my acknowledgments of the kind assistance rendered by the Honorable the Commissioner of Crown Lands, to the Surveyor General, and the Superintendent of Telegraphs, for valuable data connected with the construction of the map of the route, as well as to many other gentlemen whose cordial co-operation greatly facilitated my arrangements.

It is extremely gratifying to record my appreciation of the untiring zeal and energy which distinguished every individual composing the expedition; and it is to the unvarying and cheerful alacrity with which each, and all, performed their respective duties, that, under Providence, the rapidity and success of the journey is to be mainly attributed.

With reference to the probable fate of Dr. Leichhardt, it is evident, from the existence of the marked camp, nearly 80 miles beyond those seen by Mr. Hely, that the account given to that gentleman by the natives of the murder of the party was untrue; and I am inclined to think only a revival of the report current during Leichhardt's first journey to Port Essington. Nor is it probable that they were destroyed until they had left the Victoria, as, if killed by the natives, the scattered bones of the horses and cattle would have been observed during our search.

I am therefore of opinion that they left the river at the junction of the Alice, and, favored by thunder showers, penetrated the level desert country to the N. W.: in which case, on the cessation of the rain, the party would not only be deprived of a supply of water for the onward journey, but unable to retreat, as the shallow deposits of rain-water would evaporate in a few days, and it is not likely that they would commence a retrograde movement until the strength of the party had been severely taxed in the attempt to advance.

The character of the country traversed, from the out-stations on the Dawson River to the head of the Warrego River, was generally that of a grassy forest, with ridges of dense brigalow scrub. A great portion is available for pastoral purposes, but not well watered; and the soil being sandy, the grass would soon be destroyed if too heavily stocked.

As we advanced into the interior it became more barren, and, except along the banks of the larger watercourses, destitute of timber, and the character of the vegetation indicated excessive droughts.

North of lat. 26° dense scrubs of acacia prevailed on the level country beyond the influence of the inundations, but to the southward, sandy and stony deserts, with low shrubby vegetation, were the characteristic feature.

West of longitude 147° , nearly to the boundary of South Australia, in 141° , the country is unfit for occupation, for, though in favorable seasons there might in some few localities be abundance of feed for stock, the uncertainty of rain and frequent recurrence of drought renders it untenable, the grasses and herbage being principally annuals, which not only die but are swept away by the hot summer winds, leaving the surface of the soil completely bare.

On Cooper's Creek, near the boundary, there is a small tract of second-rate country, which, being abundantly supplied with water, may eventually be occupied. The best part is, however, within the Province of South Australia.

Between Cooper's Creek and Lake Torrens about 120 miles of sandy country intervenes. This tract is destitute of surface water, but as it is probable that it could be obtained by sinking wells of moderate depth, I think it might be occupied to advantage during the cool season, and thus relieve the stations which are now established within Lake Torrens, though I fear that the summer heat would be too great to admit of permanent occupation.

The geological character of the country is remarkably uniform. Carboniferous sandstones and shales, containing occasional beds of coal, with superincumbent hills and ridges of basalt, extend from Darling Downs to the 146^{th} meridian, where these rocks are covered by horizontal sandstones with beds of chert and water-worn quartz pebbles. This latter formation extends as far as Mount Hopeless, where the slate ranges of South Australia rise abruptly from the plain.

The sandy deserts and mud plains are only superficial deposits, as the sandstones are often exposed where the upper formation is intersected by gullies.

The

The direction of the parallel ridges of drift sand appear to be the result of the prevailing winds, and not the action of water, it being sufficient to visit them on a windy day to be convinced that it is unnecessary to seek for a more remote and obscure cause than that which is in present operation.

It is, perhaps, with reference to the physical geography of Australia that the results of the expedition are most important; as, by connecting successively the explorations of Sir T. Mitchell, Mr. Kennedy, Capt. Sturt, and Mr. Eyre, the waters of the tropical interior of the eastern portion of the continent are proved to flow towards Spencer's Gulf, if not actually into it, the barometrical observations shewing that Lake Torrens, the lowest part of the interior, is decidedly above the sea level.

Although only about one-third of the waters of Cooper's Creek flow into Lake Torrens by the channel of Streletzki Creek, there is strong evidence that the remaining channels, after spreading their waters on the vast plains which occupy the country between them and Sturt's Stony Desert, finally drain to the south, augmented probably by the waters of "Eyre's Creek," the "Stony Desert," and perhaps some other watercourses of a similar character coming from the westward.

This peculiar structure of the interior renders it improbable that any considerable inland lakes should exist in connection with the known system of waters; for, as Lake Torrens is decidedly only an expanded continuation of Cooper's Creek, and therefore the culminating point of this vast system of drainage, if there was sufficient average fall of rain in the interior to balance the effects of evaporation from the surface of an extensive sheet of water, the "Torrens Basin," instead of being occupied by salt marshes, in which the existence of anything beyond shallow lagoons of salt water is yet problematical, would be maintained as a permanent lake.

Therefore, if the waters flowing from so large a tract of country are insufficient to meet the evaporation from the surface of Lake Torrens, there is even less probability of the waters of the western interior forming an inland lake of any magnitude, even should there be so anomalous a feature as a depression of the surface in which it could be collected, especially as our knowledge of its limits indicate a much drier climate and less favorable conformation of surface than in the eastern division of the continent.

The undulations of the surface of the country are nearly parallel to the meridian, gradually decreasing in height from the dividing range between the eastern and western waters till, instead of the waters of the rivers being confined to valleys, they occupy plains formed by a slight flattening of the curvature of the sphere. Thus the sides of the plain through which the river ran before it turned west to Cooper's Creek were 150 feet below the tangential level of the centre channels, and even the summit of the sandstone table land which rose beyond was below the visible horizon.

It is this peculiar conformation which causes the stream beds to spread so widely when following the course of the valleys from north to south, and it is only where they break through the intervening ridges that the water is confined sufficiently to form well defined channels.

The existence of these extensive valleys trending north and south over so large a tract of country render it by no means unlikely that they continue far beyond the limits of present explorations, and it is not unreasonable to infer that the great depression which has been traced nearly five hundred miles north from Spencer's Gulf through Lake Torrens to the stony desert of Sturt (or rather the mud plains contiguous to its western limit), may be continuous for an equal distance beyond to the low land at the head of the Gulf of Carpentaria; a theory also supported by the fact, that the rivers flowing into the Gulf either come from the east or west, apparently from higher land in those directions, while there is not a single watercourse from the south, or any indication of elevated country in that direction.

Captain Wickham having named an important river discovered by him in H. M. S. Beagle on the N.W. coast the "Victoria," several years prior to Sir T. Mitchell having attached that name to the upper portion of Cooper's Creek, which had also been previously discovered and named by Captain Sturt, I would suggest that the term River Cooper be adopted for the whole of the main channel from its sources, discovered by Sir T. Mitchell, to its termination in Lake Torrens; as, while it does not interfere with the rule that the name given by the first discoverer should be retained, will prevent the recurrence of the misapprehension hension and inconvenience of having two important rivers with the same designation on the maps of Australia.

With regard to the number and habits of the aborigines, I could collect little information, as only a collective number of about one hundred men, a few women and children, were seen, in small scattered parties; but, judging from the number of encampments seen, at least a thousand must visit the banks of the river; and it is probable that the whole of the inhabitants for at least a hundred miles on each side are dependent on it for water during the dry season.

Neither sex wear any clothing. Their weapons and utensils are similar to those used on the eastern coast; nor was there any characteristic by which they could be observed to differ from the aborigines of other portions of Australia.

Fish, rats, grass seeds, and a few roots, constitute their chief food.

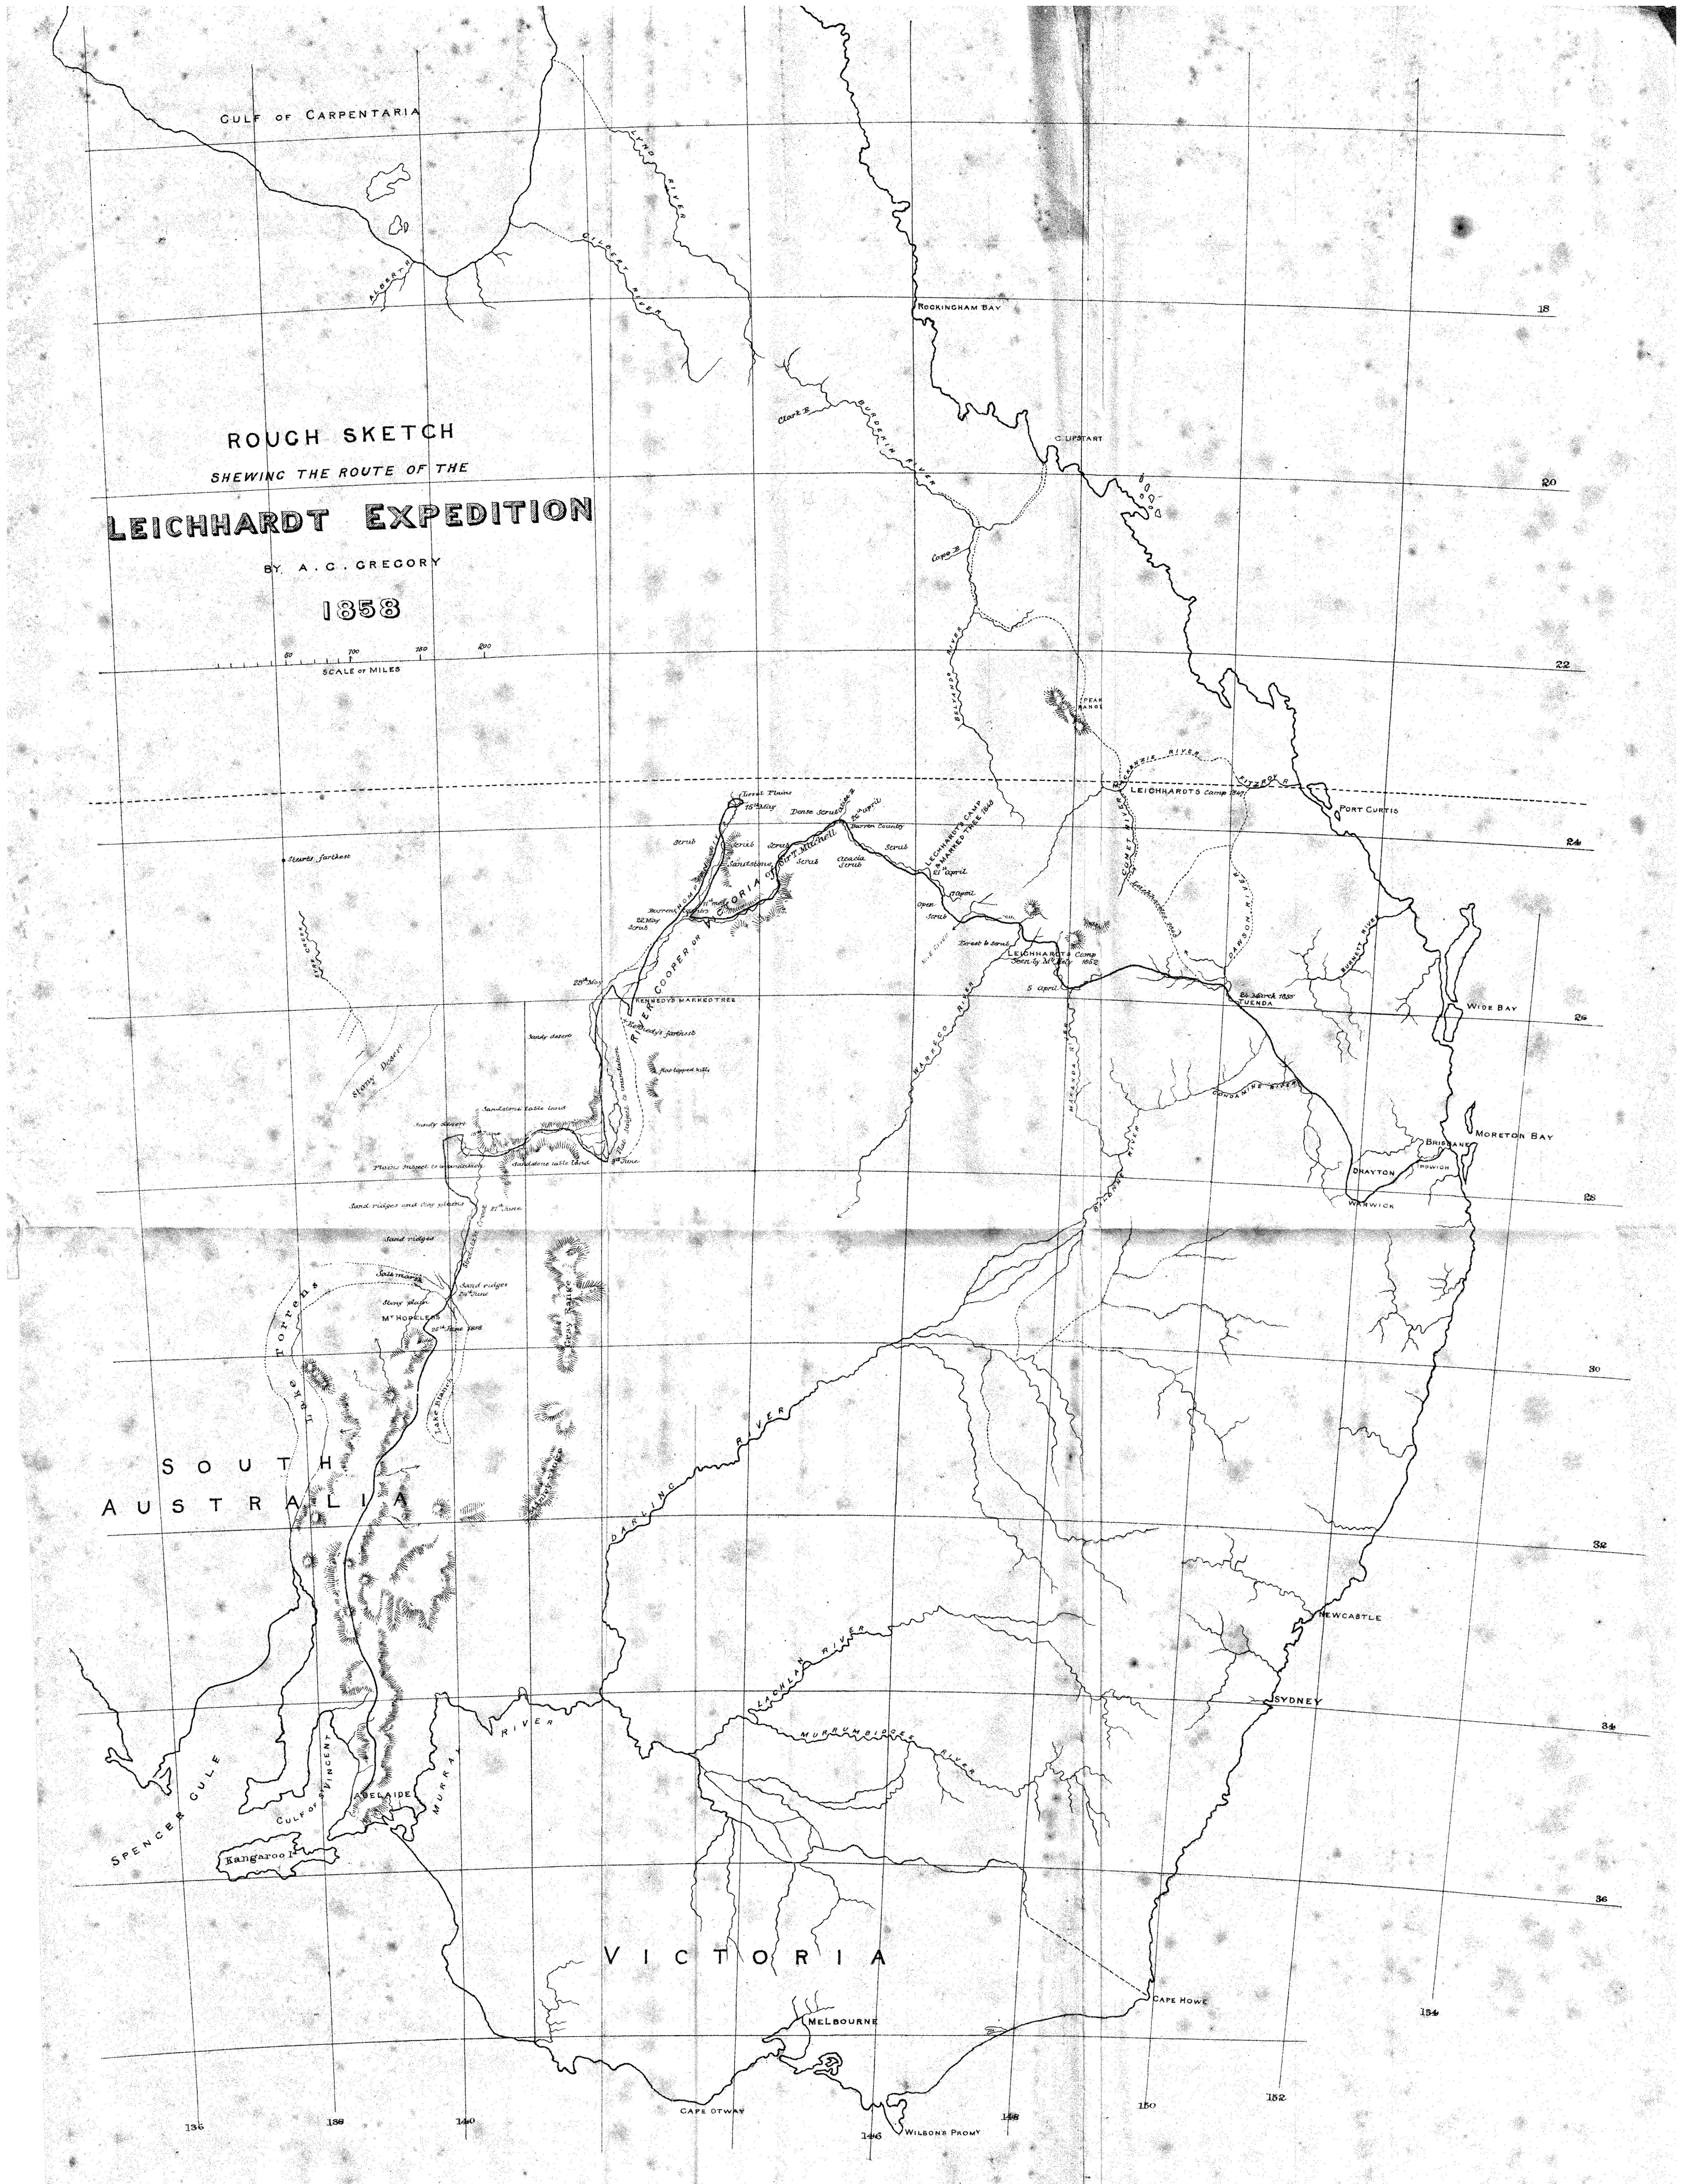

On the upper part of the river they bury their dead, piling wood on the grave; near the junction of the Thompson they suspend the bodies in nets, and afterwards remove the bones; while on Cooper's Creek the graves are mounds of earth three to four feet high, apparently without any excavation, and surmounted by a pile of dead wood. In the last-named locality the number of burial mounds which had been constructed about two years ago greatly exceeded the proportion of deaths which could have possibly occurred in any ordinary season of mortality, even assuming the densest population known in any other part of Australia; and it is not improbable that the seasons of drought which proved so destructive to the tree vegetation higher up the river may have been equally disastrous in its effects on the aboriginal inhabitants of this portion of the interior.

EXPEDITION IN SEARCH OF DR. LEICHHARDT.

(COMMUNICATION FROM A. C. GREGORY, ESQ., UPON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 9 September, 1858.

A. C. GREGORY, ESQ., to THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Sydney, 27 August, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that on the arrival of the Leichhardt Expedition in Adelaide, I made arrangements for the sale of the horses and equipment of the party, and they were accordingly sold at public auction, on the 6th August—the horses realizing the gross sum of £1,169 5s., and the equipment £164 7s. 6d.; deducting the usual commission leaves the net sum of £1,171 19s., which will be duly paid into the Colonial Treasury.

The large amount which has been thus realized is owing to the few casualties among the horses, as, of the 40 originally purchased only one was abandoned on the journey, and one killed by falling over a steep bank in the police paddock in Adelaide.

The Government of South Australia having purchased several of the horses for the purpose of reinforcing Mr. Babbage's party, who were exploring the country to the west of Lake Torrens, were desirous that Mr. C. Gregory should proceed with them to Mr. Babbage's camp, as it would afford a good opportunity of communicating the details of the character of the country to the north-east of his proposed route.

I therefore gave leave to Mr. C. Gregory, Overseer Phibbs, and R. Bowman, to proceed on this service; and it was arranged that they were to be paid by the South Australian Government during the period they were thus detained—by which no expense would be incurred beyond what would have resulted had they returned direct to Sydney.

As the services of the rest of the exploring party were not further required, I discharged them on reaching Sydney; as some, however, were engaged at Moreton Bay, I consider that they are entitled to their passage back to the place of engagement at the expense of the Expedition.

As the documents relative to my accounts, and the proceedings of the Expedition prior to leaving the Settled Districts, were unavoidably left at Mr. Boyd's station, on the Dawson River, together with sundry stores for the supply of the party in returning through the settled country to Moreton Bay, as at that time I did not contemplate proceeding to South Australia, I purpose starting by the next steamer for Moreton Bay, and disposing of such stores as are not required for future service, return with the papers to Sydney, in order to prepare the maps of the route, and close the accounts of the Expedition.

A. C. GREGORY, ESQ., to THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Sydney, 27 August, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to transmit a Report* of the proceedings of the Expedition in search of Dr. Leichhardt, who started with a party to explore the country between Moreton Bay and Western Australia, in 1848.

As the detail maps of the country traversed will occupy some time in compilation, I append an outline sketch of the route of the Expedition.

Dr. Müller, Government Botanist in Victoria, having kindly consented to arrange and ascertain the names of the botanical specimens collected during the journey, I have left them with him in Melbourne, for a short period, for that purpose, and on their arrival in Sydney shall transmit them to such department as may be directed, together with the geological specimens, &c.

The meteorological observations I have not forwarded with this Report, being desirous of tabulating them with simultaneous observations at Moreton Bay and Adelaide, the whole of the data of which is not yet in my possession.

I have, &c.,

LAYING OUT TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

(INSTRUCTIONS TO SURVEYORS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 12 May, 1858.

RETURN to an Address of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, dated 27 April, 1858, praying that His Excellency the Governor General would be pleased to cause to be laid upon the Table of that House :—

“ A Copy of the General Instructions (if any) given by “ the Government, or the Surveyor General, to the Sur“ veyors employed in laying out Towns and Villages
 “ throughout the Colony.”

LAYING OUT TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

Surveyor General's Office,
Sydney, 185 .

It having been determined that a _____ shall be laid out at _____ I have to request that you will _____ proceed to the locality and make the necessary preliminary survey.

2. Having selected the precise spot which may seem to you to be the best adapted for the _____ site, you will proceed with its survey, which should embrace every physical feature having elevation or depression sufficient to form an obstruction to carrying out a street, and also all existing tracks and improvements (if any) within the site.

3. You will also ascertain (with the Theodolite) the general level of one or more of the streets of the design hereafter alluded to.

4. You will plot your plan to a scale of 8 chains to one inch, and will represent the features thereon with the greatest practicable accuracy, carefully preserving the relative heights in your hill shading; and will note fully on the plan the character of the land throughout, and shew on it the levels alluded to in the previous paragraph.

5. You will then prepare a design for the _____, in which, so far as the ground will admit of the arrangement, streets 150 links in width should be provided, at distances of 5 chains 30 links apart, in the direction of the principal traffic, and cross streets, at right angles, at distances of 10 chains apart. These distances may be modified to suit the natural features within extremes of 400 and 600 links, and 6 and 12 chains respectively. The building allotments within the sections formed by the streets will be, where the regulated distances are preserved, of 2 chains frontage by 250 links depth, and with a back lane entrance, parallel with the longitudinal streets, of 30 links in width; and where the streets may be placed at other distances than the above, the allotments will be as nearly of that area and form as may be practicable.

6. Your design should be drawn on a separate skeleton tracing, which may be applied to the plan, and on which may be shewn the sites which you would recommend for public buildings, such as Court House, Markets, Churches, and Schools, &c.; and also open squares, reservations for public recreation, access to water, &c.

7. Beyond the proposed building allotments, the main road should be surveyed for a distance on either side of one or two miles, and portions should be designed fronting, or having access to it, increasing in area with their distance from the _____; and the design for allotments fronting the main road should be such, that, by the reservation in places where the natural surface is not calculated to resist the action of traffic, of those upon one side, until such period as the road may be artificially constructed; a sufficient space will be left for divergence from the track in use, as it may from time to time become much impaired.

8. Your Report should embrace a recommendation of boundaries for the Town Reserve, as distinguished from the Agricultural or General Reserve; full information as to the character of the land, and its suitability to building and agricultural purposes; the supply of water and reservations essential to the preservation of its purity and sufficiency; the liability of any portion of the reserve to inundation; the probable ultimate arrangements for sewerage, with their possible effect on the water supply; and a suggestion of suitable sites for a General Cemetery, and a Town Pasturage Reserve.

9. In conclusion, I have to urge upon your attention the important influence which the exercise of care and judgment on your part in the conduct of this duty may have on the comfort, convenience, and health of the future occupants of this _____; and to request that, therefore, you will give every care and consideration to the subject.

I have, &c.,

NOTE.—Copy of instructions for Survey for a Design of a Town enclosed. In special cases further particulars are added, in a Postscript. Designs are prepared at Head Quarters for approval; and the survey and measurement of lands in the Towns follow as demands arise.

(AMENDED INSTRUCTIONS FOR MARKING ALLOTMENTS, &c.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 17 August, 1858.

(Circular.)

Surveyor General's Office,

21 July, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to enclose herewith directions for marking boundary lines of allotments and portions of Land, which may be measured by surveyors of this Department; and I have to request that you will, in future Surveys, adhere strictly to these directions, which will supersede the instructions contained in the Circular Letter of 8th July, 1853.

2. I beg that you will inform me as soon as you have provided yourself with the branding iron to be used in marking Town Allotments, and with such tools as may be necessary to mark the numbers on trees.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BARNEY.

Directions to be observed in marking Building and Suburban Allotments within Town Boundaries :—

1. The building lines of streets, and the side lines of back entrances, are, where the land is not naturally clear, to be cleared to a width of not less than 4 feet, by the removal of all scrub and trees of a less diameter than 10 inches.

2. Should large trees stand in a building line, the usual horse-shoe Surveyor's mark is to be cut upon the opposite sides of the tree, in the direction of the building line, and the precise position of that line is to be indicated by a cut not less than 9 inches long, in each horse-shoe mark.

3. Should a tree stand at the intersection of two building lines, the horse-shoe marks, instead of being opposite, will of course be at right angles with each other, or in any other angle which the building lines may form, and the number of the section is to be cut or branded in the horse-shoe, as hereafter directed with reference to marks on stakes.

Town Sections Lockspitted

4. The corners of sections, and of allotments, are to be lockspitted to a depth of 6 inches, and for 18 inches from the corner, and should rocks occupy the position of corners, lines of equal length with the lockspits, and numbers, as hereafter directed, are to be cut with a pick.

5. At each section corner, excepting, of course, those which are marked by trees, a stake not less than 2 feet 6 inches long is to be driven 18 inches into the ground (where practicable), and on the flat surface of the stake the number of the section is to be branded in Roman figures of 4 inches in height.

Stake at corner of Section

6. At each allotment corner, stakes, not less than 18 inches long, are to be driven one foot into the ground, and on those on the street frontages the numbers of allotments are to be branded in Roman figures of 2 inches in height.

Stakes at Corners of Sections & Allotments

7. The branding of both section and allotment stakes is to be done with a single branding iron, having a face 2 inches in length by one quarter of an inch wide.

8. In marking the first surveys in any new Town, in addition to the above marking, which will obviously disappear with the occupation of the allotments, two strong posts, not less than 6 inches square and 6 feet in height, are to be set 2 feet in the ground, in the kerb line, (12 feet from the building line) of a principal street of the Town, at a distance of not less than 10 chains apart, and so placed that their outside faces will be precisely in the kerb lines of that street, and of two intersecting streets. These posts are to be cut flat on the top, and to have a large broad arrow cut on them, and they are intended to form a basis with which future surveys in the Town may be connected.

Alignment Posts

Directions to be observed in marking Boundaries of Land measured beyond the limits of Towns :—

1. All boundary lines, where the country is not naturally clear, are to be cleared to a width of not less than four feet, by the removal of all scrub and trees of a less diameter than 6 inches.

2. All trees upon boundary lines, or within two paces in thickly wooded country, and 4 paces in open forest country, are to be marked with the horse-shoe mark, (which is to be cut into the wood of the tree) on the opposite sides, in the direction of the boundary line; and those trees which are actually in the line, are to be marked, in addition, with smaller horse-shoe marks above the others.

3. The corners of portions are, where a tree may stand on the corner, to be marked by four horse-shoe marks, in the lines of the boundaries and their continuations; and broad arrows, not less than six inches long, are to be cut deep in the marks, on two sides where the boundaries of one portion only may meet the tree, on three sides where the boundaries of two portions may meet the tree, and on four sides where the boundaries of three or four portions may meet the tree. The horse-shoe marks are invariably to face the directions in which the boundary lines run.

4. Should there be no tree at a corner, the nearest large tree is to be marked with the horse-shoe mark on four sides, and a single broad arrow is to be cut in one of these marks, exactly facing the corner. At the corner, triangular trenches are to be cut with a spade or pick, a foot in depth, and not less than 3 feet in length, and at the apex of the triangle, which indicates the corner, a stake not less than 2 feet 6 inches long is to be driven eighteen inches into the ground. The general direction of the boundary will be indicated by the position of the triangle, which should be such that the angle at the apex, and of course the base of the triangle, will be bisected by the boundary line.

5. In very open forest country or plain, the boundaries are to be marked by deep lockspits or trenches, of 40 or 50 links in length, at distances of 5 chains apart, and with a picket or short stake in the centre of each; and the corners with triangular trenches as above directed, but with a larger stake cut flat on the top, and having a broad arrow cut on it.

6. Rocks which may be upon a boundary line are, in every instance, to be marked with a pick line; and where at a corner of a portion, with a broad arrow.

7. Where portions being measured form part of any regular series, for which numbers can be used, as portions of a Parish, the numbers of the portion or portions on or near the corners of which a tree may stand, are to be cut in the horse-shoe marks facing the boundary lines of the portions or facing the corner.

8. Where measurements are made in isolated localities where no parish boundaries have been proposed, and no perfect series of numbers can be adopted, or used in descriptions for deeds, it is still necessary to the recognition of the lands by purchasers, or by intending purchasers, that the boundary marks of different portions should be distinguished by numbers, which may be introduced in the Sale Proclamation of the lands. With this object, the corners of portions in each separate locality, or on any particular creek on which surveys may be made, are to be numbered in a series, which will extend to all measurements made in that locality in each year; and to these numbers the unit number of the year is to be prefixed, as per diagram, the numbers appearing, of course, at all the corners of the portions which they represent. It is of the greatest importance that no confusion should occur in this numbering, and surveyors will therefore exercise the greatest care and discretion in determining the boundaries for each series.

MR. HENRY SANDERSON.

(PRAYING REDRESS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 31 August, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of Licensed Surveyor Henry Sanderson, late Assistant Surveyor, Moreton Bay District,—

SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner humbly submits his case for the consideration of your Parliament.

That your Petitioner was appointed a Surveyor of the Colony of New South Wales, at Cannon Row, in the City of Westminster, by the Imperial Government, on the 7th day of July, 1855.

That your Petitioner arrived in this Colony on or about the 20th November, 1855, as such appointed Surveyor.

That your Petitioner was sent to Moreton Bay and the Northern Districts, as an Assistant Surveyor, to explore the country and make surveys for railway purposes.

That your Petitioner filled that appointment to the best of his ability, until 1st May, 1857, when he was suspended by the Surveyor General on that date, and finally removed from the public service on or about the 31st July, 1857.

That your Petitioner, believing that he has been too severely punished, in being dismissed the public service and deprived of his salary, (the only means of supporting his family,) made application several times to your Honorable House's present Government, also to His Excellency the Governor General, by petition and otherwise, to be restored to employment in the public service.

That at the instance of His Excellency the Governor General, whom your Petitioner memorialized on the 22nd July last past, your Petitioner was reappointed to the public service as a Licensed Surveyor, on the 9th day of the present month.

That your Petitioner, on being gazetted, made respectful application to your Honorable House's Surveyor General for employment as a Licensed Surveyor.

That your Petitioner has received official notice from the Surveyor General that your Petitioner cannot have employment as a Licensed Surveyor.

That your Petitioner respectfully refers your Honorable House to a communication from the Surveyor General, of the 19th instant, addressed to your Petitioner, and which he can at any time produce in confirmation of that fact.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will order your Petitioner's case to be referred to your Honorable House's Select Committee to inquire into the "Management of the Survey Department" now sitting, in order that your humble Petitioner's case may be thoroughly investigated, and that your humble Petitioner may have redress.

And your Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

MR. WILLIAM W. DARKE.

(PRAYING REDRESS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 31 August, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of William Wedge Darke, Assistant Surveyor, in the Surveyor General's Department,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner is, and has been, a subordinate officer of the Survey Department from September, 1834, to the present time, a period of nearly twenty-four (24) years, during the greater part of which your Petitioner has not only been exposed, in the performance of his duties, to the greatest hardships, under exposure night and day, in all seasons and climates, frequently without food or any shelter, with a sacrifice of every consideration, not only of health but of domestic comfort and happiness, but has (as in duty bound) exercised under such circumstances the various branches of his profession in such a manner as to lead to many expressions of approval from his superior officers.

That twenty years since your Petitioner was offered an appointment in the Bank of Australasia, which he declined, at the request of the Acting Surveyor General, on receiving a promise of promotion both immediate and prospective.

That your Petitioner has nearly ever since been employed, either as a volunteer or by command, in the performance of duties which have either been declined, abandoned as impracticable, or erroneously performed by other officers.

That, in addition to the above-mentioned general promise, a distinct promise of promotion was made, under the authority of the Governor General, by the Colonial Secretary's letter of the 17th November, No. 47-446, provided your Petitioner, among other officers, performed his allotted share of the duty which the department was pledged to perform by the end of the following year, 1848; and that having not only performed his allotted share of the promised duty, but an equal amount of that which had been entrusted to others, your Petitioner has seen nearly every junior officer promoted above him, as well as strangers recently appointed to grades superior to his own.

That, in consequence of this latter distinct promise not having been carried into effect, your Petitioner has suffered not only loss and injury, but physically, from having had an unfair and very severe amount of exposure and hardship, as compared with other officers, and mentally, from a sense of cruel injustice and indignity—from seeing the rewards for which the prime of life, with home, social and parental duties and enjoyments, have been sacrificed; the promised rewards given to those his juniors whose duty your Petitioner has performed.

That, during the long period your Petitioner has served the Government as a Surveyor, not one of his surveys have ever been the subject of litigation or impeachment for inaccuracy.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to take the premises, and your Petitioner's case into your most gracious consideration, and that such redress may be afforded to your Petitioner as to your Honorable House may seem meet, and as the circumstances of your Petitioner's case may appear in justice to require.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

CROWN LANDS LEASES.

No. 1.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council with respect to the issue of Leases of Crown Lands.

Extract from MINUTE, No. 51-30, dated 17 June, 1851.

Present :—

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.
THE HONORABLE THE COMMANDER OF THE FORCES.
THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.
THE HONORABLE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.
THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

HIS Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a letter from the Chief Commissioner of Crown Lands, dated 23rd May, 1851, in which, with reference to the proposed issue of leases of Crown Lands in the Intermediate and Unsettled Districts, under Her Majesty's Order in Council of 9th March, 1847, he solicits instructions on the following points, viz :—

- (1.) At what period shall the duration of the leases commence—whether from the date of their actual issue, or from any prior date ?
- (2.) Shall a particular day be fixed for the annual payment of the rents to be reserved in the leases throughout the Colony, as a day is now fixed on or before which the fees for depasturing licenses must be paid ; or will it be more expedient to adopt some other arrangement ?

In respect to the first of these questions, the Chief Commissioner states that it is generally understood amongst the claimants of leases that their runs will be demised to them for the full term of 14 years or 8 years, computed from the issue of the leases ; and he is disposed to think that they are, to a certain extent, justified in that view of the subject, in the absence of any direct intimation to the contrary. The Chief Commissioner further states his opinion that it may be fairly argued that to curtail the privilege which the possession of leases for the full term authorised by the Order in Council would bestow upon the licensed occupants, would hardly be just on the part of the Government, when the delay in the issue of the leases forming the ground for such curtailment may in part, at least, be attributed to the Government itself.

The Council state their opinion that the licensed occupants of Crown Lands beyond the Settled Districts have practically been in the enjoyment of all the privileges which the leases are intended to confer from the date when it was notified to them that they were at liberty to exercise, before the issue of the leases, their pre-emptive right in respect of such portions of their runs as they might choose to purchase, and as that intimation was published on the 28th June, 1850, the leases might properly be made to bear date from the 1st July following.

Before, however, making any distinct recommendation to that effect, the Council advise that the following question, raised by the Attorney General, be referred to the Crown Law Officers, that is to say :—Whether the maximum terms of eight years and fourteen years respectively may legally be made to commence from the actual issue of the leases, or whether their duration must be computed from the period when the claimants were legally in a position to demand leases, that is to say, at the expiration of six months from the promulgation in the Colony of Her Majesty's Order in Council of 9th March, 1847, as provided by the 11th section of chapter II of that Order ?

The answer to the Chief Commissioner's second inquiry is implied in the foregoing recommendation, as the date of payment will be regulated by the date of the leases, which, according to the view above stated, will be a fixed period for all.

MICHAEL FITZPATRICK,
Clerk of the Council.

THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

REFERRING to the proceedings on the 17th ultimo, with respect to the issue of leases of Crown Lands in the Intermediate and Unsettled Districts, under Her Majesty's Order in Council of 9th March, 1847, His Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a letter from the Crown Law Officers, in which, in reply to the reference made to them, as advised by the Council on the above date, they state their opinion that it is competent to His Excellency the Governor General, if he shall so think fit, to make the maximum terms of eight and fourteen years respectively commence from the actual issue of the leases.

As, therefore, there is no legal necessity, as had been previously suggested, for computing the maximum terms of the leases from the date when the licensed occupants were first in a position to demand leases, the Council advise that, for the reasons assigned in their previous Minute, the maximum terms of eight years and fourteen years for leases of runs in the Intermediate and Unsettled Districts respectively, should be computed from the 1st July, 1850, in all cases where the right of leases accrued by virtue of previous authorized occupation, under the 11th section of cap. II. of the Order in Council of 9th March, 1847.

In those cases where the right of lease has been acquired by tender, under sections 12 and 13 of that Order, the term of the lease should be made to commence from the date of the acceptance of the tender.

MICHAEL FITZPATRICK,

Clerk of the Council.

No. 3.

EXTRACT from MINUTE No. 51-47, dated 23 September, 1851.

Present:—

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

THE HONORABLE THE COMMANDER OF THE FORCES.

THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

THE HONORABLE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER.

REFERRING to the proceedings on the 29th July last, with respect to the issue of leases of Crown Lands in the Intermediate and Unsettled Districts, on which occasion the Council advised that the maximum terms of eight years and fourteen years respectively should be computed from the 1st July, 1850, in all cases where the right of lease accrued by reason of previous authorized occupation, under the 11th section of cap. II. of the Order in Council of 9th March, 1847, and that in those cases where the right of lease had been acquired by tender under sections 12 and 13 of that Order, the term of the lease should be made to commence from the date of the acceptance of the tender,—His Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a letter from Messrs. M. H. Marsh, Alfred Denison, John Dobie, and Francis Taaffe, in which they solicit a re-consideration of the decision arrived at by the Council on this head.

In this letter it is urged, that in consequence of the delay in the issue of the leases, the licensed occupants of Crown Lands have not hitherto been in the enjoyment of all the advantages which would have accrued to them from the possession of such leases; and it is represented, moreover, that in the full conviction that the terms of the leases would be computed from the date of issue, many persons have disposed of their interest in pastoral runs, subject to that condition, and if that expectation be not now realised much litigation and inconvenience must ensue.

After a careful review of the various considerations affecting this question, the Council are disposed to recommend that, in regard to all leases to be issued, both for lands held under licensed occupation previously to the promulgation of Her Majesty's Order in Council,

Council, and for runs hitherto acquired by tender, the maximum terms of eight and fourteen years, as the case may be, should commence from a future certain day—say 1st January, 1852; but that with respect to all runs to be hereafter taken up by tenders, the duration of the leases should be computed from the date of the first payment of rent under the accepted tender, instead of the date of such acceptance, as previously advised.

MICHAEL FITZPATRICK,

Clerk of the Council.

No. 4.

VICTORIA, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith.

To Our trusty and well-beloved Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, Knight,—

GREETING :—

Whereas We did, by certain Letters Patent under the Great Seal of Our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, bearing date at Westminster, the twentieth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, in the ninth year of Our Reign, constitute and appoint you to be, during Our pleasure, Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over the Territory called New South Wales, and all Islands and Territories comprising, save and except as hereinafter excepted, all that portion of Our Territory of Australia, or New Holland, lying between the one hundred and twenty-ninth and one hundred and fifty-fourth degrees of east longitude, and between the twenty-sixth and fortieth degrees of south latitude, including all the Islands adjacent in the Pacific Ocean within the latitudes aforesaid, and of all Forts and Garrisons erected and established, or which should be erected and established within the said Territory of New South Wales, or within any of the said Islands, save and except that part of Our said Territory thereinbefore described, which was called and known by the name of the Province of South Australia: And whereas by other Letters Patent under the Great Seal of Our said United Kingdom, bearing date at Westminster, the third day of April, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, in the eleventh year of Our Reign, We did, in exercise of the power vested in Us by an Act made and passed in the sixth year of Our Reign, intituled "An Act for the government of New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land," declare and ordain that the Territory or Colony of New South Wales should, in addition to all the Territory-defined and comprised in our said recited Letters Patent, comprehend all Our Territory lying northward to the twenty-sixth degree of south latitude, with all the Islands adjacent in the Pacific Ocean, as by the said recited Letters Patent relation being thereunto had will more fully and at large appear: And whereas by an Act made and passed in the fourteenth year of Our Reign, intituled "An Act for the better government of Her Majesty's Australian Colonies," it is amongst other things enacted, that, after certain provisions as therein mentioned shall have been made by the Governor and Council of New South Wales for the establishment of a Legislative Council in the Territories now comprised within the District of Port Phillip, including the City of Melbourne, and bounded on the north and north-east by a straight line drawn from Cape Howe to the nearest source of the River Murray; and thence by the course of that river to the eastern boundary of the Colony of South Australia, the said Territories shall be separated from the Colony of New South Wales, and shall cease to return Members to the Legislative Council of such Colony, and shall be erected into and thenceforth form a separate Colony, to be known and designated as the Colony of Victoria: Now know you, that We have revoked and determined, and by these Presents do revoke and determine the said recited Letters Patent, and every clause, article, and thing therein contained; and further know you, that We, reposing especial trust and confidence in the prudence, courage, and loyalty of you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, of Our especial grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, have thought fit to re-constitute and re-appoint, and by these Presents do constitute and re-appoint you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, to be Our Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over Our Territory called New South Wales, comprising, save and except as hereinafter excepted, all that portion of Our Territory of Australia or New Holland lying between the one hundred and twenty-ninth and one hundred and fifty-fourth degrees of east longitude, and northward of the fortieth degree of south latitude, including all the Islands adjacent in the Pacific Ocean within the latitudes aforesaid, and of all Forts and Garrisons erected and established, or which shall be erected or established, within the the said Colony of New South Wales, or within any of the said Islands, save and except that part of Our Territory hereinbefore described, which is called and known by the name of the Province of South Australia; and also save and except the Territories hereinbefore described and called by the name of the Colony of Victoria; and We do hereby authorise, empower, require and command you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, in due manner to do and execute all things that shall belong to your said command, and the trust We have reposed in you according to the several powers, provisions, and directions granted or appointed you by virtue of this present Commission, and of a certain Act made and passed in the sixth year of Our reign, intituled, "An Act for the government of New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land," as explained and amended by an Act made and passed in the eighth year of Our reign, intituled, "An Act to explain and amend the Act for the government of New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land," and by virtue of the said recited Act, intituled, "An Act for the better government of Her Majesty's Australian Colonies," and according to such instructions as are herewith given to you, or which may from time to time hereafter be given to you under Our Sign Manual and Signet, or by Our Order in Our Privy Council, or by Us through one of Our Principal Secretaries of State, and according to such laws and ordinances as are or shall hereafter be in force in Our Territory of New South Wales and its Dependencies aforesaid; and whereas it hath been appointed by Parliament that there shall be within Our said Territory of New South Wales a Legislative Council to be constituted in the manner mentioned in the said recited Act of the fourteenth year of Our reign, with whose advice and consent you are empowered and authorised to make laws and ordinances for the peace, welfare and good government of Our said Territory and its Dependencies, We do, by virtue of the powers in us vested, hereby require and command that you do take especial care that in making and passing such Laws and Ordinances, the provisions, regulations, restrictions, and directions contained in the said Acts of Parliament, and also in the Instructions given to you herewith, or in such further Instructions as shall at any time hereafter be issued to you under Our Royal Sign Manual and Signet in that behalf, be strictly complied with: And whereas it is expedient that an Executive Council should be appointed to advise and assist you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, in the administration of the Government of Our said Territory, We do, therefore, hereby require you to summon, as an Executive Council, such persons as may from time to time be named or designated by Us for that purpose by any Instruction or Instructions, or Warrant or Warrants, to be by Us issued under Our Sign Manual and Signet, and with the advice of our Privy Council, or as shall be provisionally appointed by you, all which Councillors shall hold their places in the said Council at Our pleasure: And We do hereby accordingly authorise and empower you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, from time to time to appoint such and so many persons as may appear to you requisite to be Members of the said Executive Council, subject to the signification of Our pleasure thereupon: Provided, nevertheless, and We do hereby declare Our pleasure to be, that the total number of the Members for the time being of Our said Executive Council, resident within Our said Territory, shall not at any time by any such provisional appointments be raised to a greater number in the whole than four: And We do hereby authorise and empower you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, to keep and use the Public Seal of Our said Territory for sealing all things whatsoever that shall pass the Public Seal of Our said Territory: And We do hereby give and grant to you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, full power and authority, with the advice and consent of Our said Executive Council, to issue a Proclamation, or Proclamations, dividing Our said Territory into Districts, Counties, Hundreds, Towns, Townships, and Parishes, and to appoint the limits thereof respectively: And We do hereby give and grant to you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, full power and authority, by and with the advice of Our said Executive Council, but subject, nevertheless, to such regulations and directions as are in that respect contained in an Act of Parliament made and passed in the sixth year of Our Reign, intituled, "An Act for regulating the sale of Waste Lands belonging to the Crown in the Australian Colonies," as amended by an Act of Parliament made and passed in the tenth year of Our Reign, entitled, "An Act to amend an Act for regulating the sale of Waste Lands belonging to the Crown in the Australian Colonies, and to make further provision for the management thereof," or as may be contained in any Instructions which may from time to time be addressed to you by Us for that purpose to make and execute in Our name and on Our behalf, under the Public Seal of our said Territory, grants of Waste Lands to Us belonging within the same to private persons for their own use and benefit, or to any persons, bodies politic or corporate, in trust for the public uses of Our subjects there resident or any of them: And We do hereby authorise and empower you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, to constitute and appoint Judges, and, in cases requisite, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, Justices of the Peace, and other necessary Officers and Ministers in Our said Territory, for the due and impartial administration of justice, and for putting the laws into execution, and to administer, or cause to be administered, unto them such oath or oaths as are usually given for the due execution and performance of their offices and places and for the clearing of truth in judicial matters: And We do hereby give and grant unto you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, full power and authority, as you shall see occasion, in Our name and on Our behalf, to remit any fines, penalties, or forfeitures which may accrue or become payable to Us, provided the same do not exceed the sum of fifty pounds sterling in any one case, and to respite and suspend the payment of any such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, exceeding the said sum of fifty pounds, until Our pleasure thereon shall be made known and signified to you: And We do hereby give and grant unto you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, full power and authority, as you shall see occasion, in Our name and on Our behalf, to grant to any offender convicted of any crime in any Court or before any Judge, Justice, or Magistrate within Our said Territory, a free and unconditional pardon, or a pardon subject to such conditions as by any law or ordinance hereafter to be in force in our said Territory may be thereunto annexed, or any respite of the execution of the sentence of any such offender for such period as to you may seem fit: And We do hereby give and grant unto you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, full power and authority, upon sufficient cause to you appearing, to suspend from the exercise of his office within Our said Territory any person exercising any office or place under or by virtue of any Commission or Warrant granted or which may be granted by Us or in Our name or under Our authority, which suspension shall continue and have effect only until Our pleasure therein shall be made known and signified to you: And We do hereby strictly require and enjoin you, in proceeding to any such suspension, to observe the directions in that behalf given to you by Our instructions under Our Signet and Sign Manual accompanying this Our Commission to you: And in the event of the death or absence of you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, out of Our said Territory of New South Wales, We do hereby provide and declare Our pleasure to be, that all and every the powers and authorities herein granted to you shall be and the same are hereby vested in such person as may be appointed by Us by Warrant under Our Signet and Sign Manual to be the Lieutenant Governor of Our said Territory, or in the event of there being no person within Our said Territory commissioned and appointed by Us to be Lieutenant Governor thereof, then Our pleasure is, and we do hereby provide and declare, that in any such contingency all the powers and authorities herein granted to you shall be, and the same are hereby granted to the Senior Military Officer in command of Our Forces within Our said Territory for the time being, and such Lieutenant Governor, or such Senior Military Officer, as the case may be, shall exercise all and every the powers and authorities herein granted until Our further pleasure shall be signified therein: And We do hereby require and command all Our Officers and Ministers, Civil and Military, and all others the inhabitants of Our said Territory of New South Wales to be obedient, aiding, and assisting you the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, or in the event of your death or absence to such person as may, under the provisions of this Our Commission, assume and exercise the functions of Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of Our said Territory: And We do hereby declare, ordain, and appoint, that you, the said Sir Charles Augustus Fitz Roy, shall and may hold, execute, and enjoy the office and place of Our Captain General and Governor-in-Chief in and over Our said Territory and its dependencies, together with all and singular the powers and authorities hereby granted unto you for and during Our will and pleasure.

In witness whereof We have caused these Our Letters to be made patent. Witness Ourselves at Westminster, the thirty-first day of December, in the fourteenth year of Our Reign.

MR. MORIARTY'S CASE.

No. 1.

MR. COMMISSIONER MORIARTY to CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

Bendemeer,

13 December, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to request that you will be pleased to recommend, for the favorable consideration of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, my application to be allowed one month's leave of absence after the close of the year, to enable me to visit Sydney on private affairs.

With the exception of the time spent in coming to take charge of this district in February last, I have not had leave of absence since the month of April, 1856, and I propose that my request should be conceded only conditionally on my making a satisfactory arrangement for the discharge of my duties during my absence.

CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS to UNDER-SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Crown Lands Office,

Sydney, 24 December, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to submit herewith an application from Mr. Moriarty, dated 13th instant, for leave of absence for one month. I beg to observe, that the New England District is one of those recommended to be discontinued, and that consequently Mr. Moriarty will of necessity vacate his office as soon as a decision has been come to as regards the Commissioners.

Under these circumstances, it will be for the Secretary for Lands and Public Works to decide whether or not leave of absence should be granted.

Crown Lands Office,

Sydney, 4 January, 1858.

SIR,

Having submitted for the consideration of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works your application of the 13th ultimo, for leave of absence for one month, it has been intimated to me that it is considered that the application had better stand over. The Honorable Secretary has no wish to refuse the leave, but pending a decision respecting the Crown Land Commissioners, who are likely to be discontinued, they had better remain at their posts, in his opinion.

SIR,

In further reference to your application of the 13 December last, for leave of absence for one month, and to my reply thereto, dated 4th instant, I have now the honor to inform you that, on re-consideration of the matter, the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works has been pleased to comply with your application, and that it is now only necessary that you should name a substitute, and avail yourself of leave.

SIR,

In reply to your letter of the 4th January, apprising me that it was considered that, as the holder of an office likely to be discontinued, I had better remain at my post, and that my application for one month's leave of absence had better stand over,—I have now the honor to inform you that it is of extreme importance to me to be able to visit Sydney, for however short a period, during the ensuing three weeks; and, without entering into the question referred to in my separate communication of this date, I should be glad to have the permission of the Honorable the Secretary for doing so. I shall, of course, be happy to return, and remain at my post for as long as the Government may require my services.

A. ORPEN MORIARTY.

I should not require to be in Sydney for more than a week.

*Commissioner's Quarters,
Armidale, 26 January, 1858.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to state to you, for the information of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, that having perceived that the Estimates of the late, as well as the present Government, contained no provision for the continuance of the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands for these Districts, I had been for some time previously in anticipation of receiving from you the intelligence conveyed to me by your letter of the 4th instant—that the abolition of my office had been decided upon. Under these circumstances it has seemed to me that in acceding to a request embodying, as I have reason to believe, the desire of the majority of the electors of this constituency that I should place my services at their disposal, I shall only be discharging my obvious duty to the public, whose servant I have been for many years; I therefore feel justified in respectfully requesting that the Government will be pleased to order the arrangement upon which they have decided to take effect at as early a date as may be convenient, and that I may receive the compensation promised to the ex-holders of abolished offices by the Resolutions passed on the subject by the Legislative Assembly.

Although, should I have the honor of being elected, I shall not, of course, continue to draw any emolument from my present office, I shall be happy to discharge its duties gratuitously, until it may suit the convenience of the Government to carry out the arrangement which was to have taken effect from the 31st ultimo.

SIR,

I have the honor to enclose, for the information of the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, a letter from Mr. Commissioner Moriarty, dated 26th ultimo, received yesterday, requesting to be relieved from office.

2. Mr. Moriarty refers to a letter from me dated 4th ultimo, and states that he had been for some time previously in anticipation of receiving from me a letter informing him that the abolition of his office had been decided upon. Referring to my letter alluded to, I beg to submit a copy of it, from which it will be seen that it was simply a reply to his application for leave of absence, conveying the opinion of the Secretary for Lands and Public Works that, pending "a decision respecting the Commissioners who are to be reduced, they "had better remain at their posts, in his opinion." This is the only communication made by me on the subject of the probable abolition of his office.

3. I have now received instructions to inform Mr. Moriarty that he is to be removed to the Maranoa District, of which he will be informed this day.

4. As Mr. Moriarty was informed, under date 25th January, that leave of absence had been granted to him, his arrival in Sydney may be shortly expected, when he may be called upon for any desired explanation of the circumstances connected with his letter of the 26th.

A. ORPEN MORIARTY, ESQ., to SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

*Australian Club,
Sydney, 12 March, 1858.*

SIR,

Adverting to the correspondence which has passed on the subject of my retirement from the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands for the Districts of New England and Macleay, I have now the honor to submit to the Government, that as the abolition of that office has been decided upon to take effect from the 31st instant, and as I had, previously to accepting the requisition from the electors of the district, which I have now the honor of representing, been apprised officially that it was likely that my office would be abolished, and therefore placed my services at the disposal of my constituency, under the belief that they were required no longer in the position which I had previously held,—I am now justified in claiming at the hands of the Government that consideration of my past services to which I should have been entitled had I, in common with the other officers of the same department, whose offices are to be discontinued, retained office with its emoluments for two months longer.

The Government had, it is true, been pleased to make me the offer of being appointed to another position on the abolition of my own, and for this I beg to express to you my best thanks; but as circumstances have rendered my acceptance of another appointment under the Government impossible, and, were it not so, by accepting it I must have displaced another officer with corresponding claims for compensation for his removal,—I must observe that the fact of my individual services having been considered worthy of being retained by the Government cannot be regarded as a fair reason for subjecting me to a serious pecuniary loss in addition to that to which I have voluntarily subjected myself by resigning my salary for the past two months.

With regard to the mode of my retirement from office, I would submit, that although the Government have decided upon finally relieving me from the date of my letter resigning the profits of my late office, it has been my wish to discharge its duties without emolument up to the date appointed by the Government for its abolition, and that, therefore, I am not chargeable with having, by my resignation, subjected the service of the public to any inconvenience.

UNDER-SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS to A. O. MORIARTY, ESQ., M. P.

*Department of Lands and Public Works,
Sydney, 12 April, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed to inform you that your letter of the 12th ultimo, applying for compensation for loss of office as Commissioner of Crown Lands for the Districts of New England and Macleay, has been laid before the Executive Council, together with a Minute thereon of the Secretary for Lands and Public Works.

2. The Council having carefully considered your application, and the grounds upon which it is supported, have expressed their regret that they cannot feel justified in advising that it be complied with, inasmuch as at the time that you were officially apprised that the one office was to be abolished you were offered another similar appointment of equal value. Your retirement was therefore, in the opinion of the Council, your own act; and, under the circumstances, the Council do not consider that you are entitled to compensation by the rules and precedents of the service.

3. The Council, however, at the same time, desire to evince their full appreciation of your past services, to which high testimony is borne in the Minute of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works; and they have accordingly caused it to be recorded in their proceedings that, in their opinion, you have, by the zeal and efficiency with which you have discharged the duties imposed upon you during a service of thirteen years, acquired a very strong claim upon the consideration of the Government of this Colony for re-employment, in the event of your being desirous at any future time to re-enter the public service.

UNDER-SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS to CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

*Department of Lands and Public Works,
Sydney, 5 February, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Secretary for Lands and Public Works to enclose to you a copy of a Minute of the Executive Council with respect to the reduction in the number of Commissioners of Crown Lands, and to request that you will immediately make the necessary communication to the officers interested.

I have, &c.,

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER
OF CROWN LANDS.

MICHL. FITZPATRICK.

Minute No. 58-6.—Confirmed, 1st February, 1858.

His Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a Minute by the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, recommending the abolition of the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands in six of the older pastoral districts, and the adoption of certain other arrangements and alterations by which the number of those officers will be still further reduced, and the services of eight Commissioners will be dispensed with.

2. Having carefully considered this Minute, the Council advise that the reductions and alterations therein recommended be approved and carried into effect on the 1st of April next.

3. By this arrangement the undermentioned Commissioners will be retained in the Districts set opposite their respective names, viz. :—

A. H. Halloran,	in the District of Burnett and Wide Bay.
S. Cole,	in the District of Lower Darling.
C. G. N. Lockhart,	in the United Districts of Murrumbidgee and Lachlan.
E. Beckham,	in the United Districts of Wellington and Bligh.
Thomas Perry,	in the District of Albert.
A. O. Moriarty,	in the District of Maranoa.
M. C. O'Connell,	in the District of Port Curtis.
W. H. Wiseman,	in the District of Leichhardt.

And the following Commissioners will be displaced from the districts mentioned in connexion with their respective names :—

R. Bligh,	from the District of Clarence.
H. H. Massie	„ Maneroo.
J. H. Scott Durbin	„ Liverpool Plains.
Arthur Manning	„ Darling Downs.
H. Whitty	„ Wellington.
Henry Boyle	„ Maranoa.
A. G. D. Huthwaite	„ Gwydir.
John Jardine	„ Bligh.

4. The Council further advise that these latter gentlemen be informed that their services will be dispensed with on the 31st March, and that their claims for re-employment or compensation will receive due attention.

5. The consideration of the best mode of satisfying those claims, and of providing for the transaction of the duties hitherto performed by those gentlemen, the Council defer until a future day.

CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS to UNDER-SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

*Crown Lands Office,
Sydney, 25 February, 1858.*

SIR,

In carrying into effect the instructions conveyed by your letter of 5th instant, for the abolition of certain districts hitherto under the control of Commissioners of Crown Lands, it is evident that some measures must be taken with a view to conducting certain required duties hitherto performed by Commissioners.

1st. The more important duty of reporting upon such new tenders as may be brought forward, as well as the assessment of the capabilities of new runs and the valuation of land, I propose to cast upon the Survey Department.

2nd. That the Statistical Returns for Blue Book, &c., hitherto supplied by the Commissioners of Crown Lands, should be prepared by the Clerks of Petty Sessions, and by constabulary, as is done in the Settled Districts; in fact, abolishing all distinctions in this respect between the Settled and Unsettled Districts.

3rd. Referring to the issue of licenses for cutting timber, brickmaking, quarrying, and others of that nature,—that this should, I think, rest with the Clerks of Benches, and that the chief, or other constables, should be authorised to prosecute for any infringement of the timber regulations. This arrangement would, I am of opinion, be the means of realizing a considerable annual sum beyond that at present collected.

4th. Transfers of runs now required to be approved by the Crown Land Commissioners. I consider this, as I have already represented, unnecessary, as sufficient information as to the holders of licenses must be in possession of the department at head quarters. This course would effect a considerable saving of time, and is a matter of great moment to the parties concerned in the transfer; and this, I trust, will be provided for as soon after the assembling of Parliament as practicable. In like manner, I propose that the annual list of the holders of runs recommended for depasturing licenses should be prepared at head quarters.

5th. As the duties of the combined districts of Murrumbidgee and Lachlan, and Wellington and Bligh, will extend over a very large extent of country, and as the due performance performance of the duties will no doubt occupy the whole time of the Commissioners, I am of opinion that they should be released from the duty of Police Magistrates. With reference also to the extent of the districts, and the great amount of travelling necessarily to be performed, I would strongly urge that an extra allowance of £100 per annum should be granted to cover travelling charges. For similar reasons, it appears to me that two orderlies for each Commissioner should be allowed.

6th. New head quarters must be established for the districts alluded to; and I have already instructed the Commissioners to report as to the best sites for such purposes. An expenditure will have to be incurred in buildings, fencing, &c.; in the meantime the usual sums of £75 per annum should be granted as a lodging allowance.

7th. It will, I apprehend, be necessary to appoint the Surveyors who will have the functions of Commissioners to exercise formally as Commissioners also.

UNDER-SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS to CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

*Department of Lands and Public Works,
Sydney, 10 March, 1858.*

SIR,

Referring to my letter of the 5th ultimo, with respect to the abolition of the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands in certain pastoral districts, and the arrangement proposed in connexion therewith, I am now directed to inform you, that His Excellency the Governor General has laid before the Executive Council a Minute by the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, drawing attention to the necessity which has arisen, in consequence of the retirement of Mr. A. O. Moriarty from the public service, for the revision of that portion of the arrangements therein alluded to, which provided for the appointment of that gentleman to be the Crown Commissioner for the District of Maranoa, upon the abolition of the like office in the district of New England and Macleay.

The Council, I am to state, have advised that Mr. Boyle, who has been Commissioner for the Maranoa District during the last three years, and whose services could have been dispensed with under the above arrangements, should now be continued in his office.

I am therefore to request that you will immediately make the necessary communication to the officer interested.

I have, &c.,

MICHL. FITZPATRICK.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER

OF CROWN LANDS.

No. 4.

UNDER SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS to CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

*Department of Lands and Public Works,
Sydney, 23 March, 1858.*

SIR,

Referring to your letter of the 25th ultimo, No. 58-86, I am directed to inform you that the Secretary for Lands and Public Works has approved of the following arrangements with respect to districts (beyond the Settled Districts) in which the office of Commissioners for Crown Lands is to be abolished, for the performance of certain duties hitherto discharged by the Commissioners, namely:—

- (1.) The duties of reporting upon new tenders, and of assessing the capabilities of runs and the valuation of land, will in future devolve upon the Surveyor acting for the district, who (as under the present Orders in Council these assessments can only be made by the Commissioner of Crown Lands, or some person appointed by him,) will be appointed the Commissioner of Crown Lands for that district.

- (2.) The Statistical Returns for the Blue Book, &c., hitherto supplied by the Commissioner, will be prepared by the Clerks of Petty Sessions, and by the constabulary, as within the Settled Districts.
- (3.) The issue of licenses for timber cutting, brickmaking, quarrying, and others of that nature, will rest with the Clerks of Benches, and the chief, or other constables, will be authorised to prosecute for any infringement of the timber regulations.
- (4.) Transfers of runs, which according to law, require to be approved by the Crown Land Commissioners, will be subject to the approval of the officer holding the appointments of Surveyor and Commissioner of Crown Lands for the district, until the time arrives when a Land Bill shall have come into operation, and the more convenient mode of effecting transfers wholly through the medium of your office (where sufficient information as to the holders of licenses is supposed to exist,) can be determined on.
- (5.) The preparation of the annual list of the holders of runs recommended for depasturing licenses will be prepared in your office.

2. In reference to the suggestions contained in your letter under reply,—that as the duties of the Commissioners of the combined Districts of Murrumbidgee and Lachlan, and Wellington and Bligh, will extend over a large tract of country, and as the due performance of the duty will probably occupy the whole time of the Commissioners, they should be released from the duties of Police Magistrate,—I am to inform you that it seems only necessary to instruct the Commissioners that it is now by no means a duty of primary importance that they should act as Police Magistrates, and that they need act in that capacity only in their spare time.

3. I am further to state, that Mr. Secretary Robertson cannot consent either to the allowance proposed by you for travelling expenses, or to the extra orderly, in either of the cases above-mentioned.

4. Mr. Secretary Robertson is, I am to add, of opinion that it is better to allow £75 per annum to the Commissioners for lodging allowance, than to enter upon buildings for Commissioners' Quarters, that would probably only be required for a short time.

5. In conclusion, I am to request that you will be good enough to furnish to this department the names of the Surveyors who, under the decision conveyed in the first sub-paragraph of this communication, will be likewise Commissioners of Crown Lands.

I have, &c.,

SIR,

I am directed to request that you will have the goodness to move the Honorable the Principal Secretary to authorize the necessary steps to be taken, as far as his department is concerned, to give effect to the following arrangements, should he see no objection thereto, with a view to the performance, by the Clerks of Petty Sessions and the constabulary, of certain duties hitherto discharged by the Commissioners of certain districts, whose offices are to be abolished:—

1. The Statistical Returns for the Blue Book, hitherto supplied by the Commissioners, to be prepared by the Clerks of Petty Sessions and by the constabulary, as within the Settled Districts.

2. The issue of licenses for timber cutting, brickmaking, quarrying, and others of that nature, to rest with the Clerks of Benches, and the chief or other constables to prosecute for any infringement of the timber regulations.

MR. J. A. ROBERTSON, LATE COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

(JUDGMENT ON APPEAL TO PRIVY COUNCIL IN THE MATTER OF HIS REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 October, 1858.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

No. 7.

Downing-street,
5 July, 1858.

SIR,

With reference to your Despatch, No. 28, of 3rd February last, and to the documents which accompanied it in the case of Mr. J. A. Robertson's appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of your Government removing him from the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands, I now transmit for your information the copy of a letter from the Council Office, with the printed copy of a Judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upon the petition of yourself and your Executive Council to rescind the Order of Her Majesty in Council granting leave to Mr. Robertson to make the appeal in question.

I have, &c.,

E. B. LYTTON.

GOVERNOR

SIR WILLIAM DENISON, K. C. B.,
New South Wales.

Council Office, Whitehall,
23 June, 1858.

Sir,

I am directed by the Lord President of the Council to transmit to you, for the information of the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, ten copies of a Judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the petition of the Governor and Council in New South Wales to rescind an Order in Council of Her Majesty granting leave to Mr. J. A. Robertson to appeal from an order removing him from the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands in that Colony.

It will be in your recollection that the right of appeal to the Queen in Council from orders removing public officers in the Colonies, under the Act 22nd Geo. III., cap. 75, has more than once been brought under the consideration of the Colonial Office and this Department.

A judicial construction having now been placed on the statute in the case of Mr. Robertson, it appears to the Lord President desirable that it should be made known to the Colonial authorities, who may be affected by it. If a larger number of copies of this Judgment is required, they can be at once supplied.

I have, &c.,

HENRY REEVE,
Reg. P. C.

H. Merivale, Esq.,

JUDGMENT of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the Petition of the Governor and Council of New South Wales to rescind an Order of Her Majesty in Council granting leave to appeal to J. A. Robertson; delivered June 14, 1858.

Present:

LORD PRESIDENT.
JUDGE OF THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.
LORD JUSTICE KNIGHT BRUCE.
CHANCELLOR OF THE DUCHY OF CORNWALL.
LORD JUSTICE TURNER.
SIR JOHN TAYLOR COLERIDGE.

Their Lordships, after deliberating, pronounced the following judgment:—

The question for the consideration of their Lordships is, whether the order which was made on the 10th July, 1857, ex parte, giving Mr. Robertson leave to appeal against his dismissal from the office which he held in New South Wales, shall or shall not be discharged.

An appearance has now been given on the part of the Governor and Council, and, for the reasons stated in these proceedings, they are contending that that order ought to be rescinded.

The facts of the case seem to be as follows:—

Mr. Robertson held an office called a "Commissioner of Crown Lands," in the Colony of New South Wales, which office was created under an Act of the Colonial Legislature of New South Wales, in the year 1833; and by the provisions of that Act "a Commissioner" is to continue in his office, as such, "during the pleasure of the said Governor."

We must presume that all the proceedings in New South Wales were intended to be in conformity with the powers conferred by that Statute, and it will be advisable to have reference to them, and to the appointment itself.

It has been contended that the appointment (which is to be found in folio 8, No. 8), confers a patent right on Mr. Robertson, and that it is important for their Lordships to bear in mind, in deciding this case, that he holds as a patentee.

The patent states, "We do give unto you, either alone or in conjunction with one or more other Commissioners of such Crown Lands, full power to do and perform, during your continuance in such office, by and under the direction of the Governor for the time being of the said Colony,"—and so on.

It appears, then, according to the statement made by the Lord Advocate, to have been enrolled in the office where other patents were enrolled.

Now, in the opinion of their Lordships, it is not a matter of great importance whether this office may be said to be held by patent or not; but the question is, what were the terms on which the office was held with reference to its continuance and duration.

We must of necessity presume that, in granting this patent, it was intended to act in strict conformity with the statute, and therefore, that this appointment which contained no express terms to the contrary, conferred the office on Mr. Robertson merely during the pleasure of the Governor.

Then, if this be an office held during the pleasure of the Crown, two questions immediately arise: first, whether it can be considered as comprised in the terms of the statute of the 22nd Geo. III, cap. 75, or, if not comprised within the terms of that statute, whether removal from such an office is an appealable grievance according to the practice of their Lordships in this Court.

Now, we are all of opinion that the office being held merely durante bene placito, it cannot be considered as coming within the terms of the Act of Parliament. That Act of Parliament has been read, and we think it is not necessary we should occupy time by repeating it. We think it applies only to offices held by patent, and to offices held for life or for a certain term.

Then, if this office be not within the terms of the statute 22 Geo. III, cap. 75, the next question is, whether the dismissal is an appealable grievance by itself.

Their Lordships are all of opinion that the practice of this Court is not to enter into the consideration of such a dismissal unless by the express command of Her Majesty. They do not enter into the consideration of such acts as are done by the Governor and Council of a Colony in the exercise of the power and authority committed to them, whereby they dismiss persons from holding situations in that Colony, they holding them not by any patent right, but simply and only during the pleasure of the Governor himself.

Therefore, upon that ground we are of opinion that the original petition cannot be sustained.

Then it has been contended before their Lordships that this is a great grievance, because the Governor and Council entered into a sort of judicial investigation of all those facts, and therefore the dismissal by the Governor and Council did, at the same time, raise such an implication of the conduct of Mr. Robertson, and such a declaration with reference to that conduct, as seriously to affect his prospects in life.

But their Lordships cannot help thinking that Mr. Robertson, though he may have reason to complain of the ultimate judgment, can have no reason to complain that he has been heard. It is impossible to put forward in the case, as a grievance, that instead of being dismissed without a hearing, he had an opportunity of justifying himself, if, in the judgment of the Governor and Council, he could do so.

For all these reasons, their Lordships are of opinion that we should advise Her Majesty that the leave to appeal should be rescinded; and, upon the whole, we do not think it necessary to accompany it with any recommendation as to costs.

4 LAND MEASURED AND SOLD IN THE DISTRICT OF ORANGE.

No. 1.

THE CROWN LANDS AGENT, ORANGE, to THE SURVEYOR GENERAL.

*Land Office, Orange,
11 February, 1858.*

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that frequent application is made to me, by the persons interested, to ascertain when the various lots of land that have been measured for several months past, and situate in different parts of the District of Orange, will be brought forward for sale.

I may mention, that some inquiries have been made about Wellington; several lots on Molong Creek, near the lots offered for sale on the 7th December; several lots on Curragurra Creek, north-east of O. Bloxsome's 697 acres. Bathurst: Several lots to the south of Orange, near Gosling Creek. Several lots in the parishes of Shadforth and Huntley.

I take the opportunity to state, that the non-sale of the lots lately offered for sale at Orange is no criterion as to the demand for land for agricultural purposes; but the fact is, that very many of those lots are totally unfit for arable operations, and never should have been measured, inasmuch that the time spent in their measurement might, and ought, to have been devoted to measuring such portions as had been applied for, and that would no doubt have been sold as offered for sale.

SIR,

Referring to the list of lands open to selection in your district, I have to inform you that, in addition to those stated therein, the following lots should be added:—Lots 47 and 50 of the sale of 15th March, 1854; 24, 26, 29, and 31, of 8th May, 1854. The area of lot 7 of July, 1855, is 320 acres and 20 perches; of lot 20 of 5th March, 1856, 53 acres 2 roods 32 perches; of lot 8 of 29th June, 1857, 34 acres; and of lot 15 of 7th December, 1857, 65 acres.

*Land Office, Orange,

SIR,

I have the honor to state, for your information, that private land in the immediate neighbourhood of Orange is now being measured into small farms, and to be offered for sale here, and it appears to me, from the character of the soil and its proximity to the Township of Orange, that it is likely to swallow up the funds that have been waiting for investment in the purchase of Crown Lands, by persons of the humbler class, were suitable lots of the latter kind offered for sale by the Government. In the approaching sale to be held at Orange on the 22nd proximo, the lots from one to 17, inclusive, are the only ones at all likely to meet with purchasers, the remaining lots, 18 to 37 inclusive, having been already frequently offered for sale.

3. I avail myself of this communication to reiterate my statement, as given in my letter to you dated the 11th instant, since which time further applications have been made to me on the same subject.

SIR,

Encl. 1 & 2.

I have the honor, with the advice of my Executive Council, to transmit herewith, for your favorable consideration, copies of Addresses from the Legislative Council and the Assembly of this Province, requesting me to take such measures as I may deem best calculated to obtain the addition to this Colony of the portion of New Holland lying between its western boundary and the eastern boundary of Western Australia, and between the 26th degree of south latitude and the southern coast.

2. This subject is one which I brought under consideration of my Executive Council more than fifteen months back, and which, I think, ought to be early settled before further lapse of time complicates it. I enclose a tracing of the southern portion of this continent, with the several boundaries of the four Colonies into which it is divided. You will perceive that the tract of country lying between this Colony and the eastern boundary of Western Australia may be regarded as wholly inaccessible from either Western Australia or New South Wales, of which latter it is, nevertheless, strictly speaking, a portion.

The only available harbours on the southern shore for nearly 800 miles west of Spencer's Gulf are harbours belonging to this Colony, viz.:—Fowler's Bay, Streaky Bay (an admirable harbour,) Venus Bay, &c., &c.—consequently, the only ports of shipment for produce, whether pastoral or agricultural, raised in the district, between this Province and Western Australia are ports within this Colony.

30 Nov., 1857.

4. Not only from Mr. Hack's discoveries, reported in my Despatch No. 203, but from subsequent information, there is strong reason to suppose that the country in question cannot long remain unsettled, as, though not of the best description, the greater portion of it is, no doubt, suitable for pastoral purposes. Already the protection of the police is extended as far as Streaky Bay, and from the enclosed map you will perceive how much country in the west portion of this Province has been surveyed—all included within the dotted lines, nearly 4,000 square miles, is now surveyed and open to occupation, except 600 miles, which have already been taken up.

5. Explorations, however, have been conducted far beyond Streaky Bay, and, on the whole, with satisfactory results. The Government schooner, the "Yatala," is also about to sail to the westward, with the Harbour Master on board, to complete the survey of the coast and harbours; so that I think there can be little doubt, when the present monetary crisis shall have passed, that all the available country to the westward will be more or less occupied by pastoral settlers.

6. The question, therefore, naturally occurs, on which of these Colonies is to devolve the duty of extending protection of life and property over the district which the Legislature here is desirous of annexing to this Colony? If there be any chance of such protection being given, either by Western Australia or by New South Wales, the case might present some difficulty. As it is, I regard it merely as a question of how Her Majesty's Government can most effectually assist the settlement of the continent by enabling capitalists to occupy available country, with a guarantee of adequate security for their property and business from the only Colony whence they can draw their supplies or ship their produce.

7. It further appears desirable, for obvious reasons, to extend the boundary of South Australia, without delay—if at all—with a view to effectually encouraging the spirit of further exploration and settlement. It is difficult to see what can be gained by delay, though much may be lost. Should Her Majesty's Government, therefore, incline to give effect to the wishes of the Legislature, I presume the easiest mode of doing so would be by a short Imperial Act, as an Order in Council might not be applicable to a separation from New South Wales of any still unsettled portion of that Province.

I have, &c.,
RICHARD GRAVES MACDONNELL,
 Governor.

Address No. 7.

To His Excellency SIR RICHARD GRAVES MACDONNELL, Knight Companion of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Her Majesty's Province of South Australia, &c., &c., &c.

May it please your Excellency,

The humble Address of the Legislative Council of South Australia,—

SHREWETH :—

That at a Meeting of the said Council, holden on the 1st day of December, 1857, it was Resolved,—

That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, requesting him to take such measures as he may deem best calculated to obtain the addition to this Colony of that portion of New Holland lying between its western boundary and the eastern boundary of Western Australia, and between the 26th degree of south latitude and the southern coast.

LORD STANLEY to GOVERNOR SIR R. G. MACDONNELL.

Downing-street,
 May, 1858.

SIR,

I have to acknowledge your Despatch, No. 227, of the 11th of March last, transmitting Addresses from the Legislative Council and Assembly of South Australia to yourself, requesting you to take measures for the addition to that Colony of the tract bounded north by the parallel of lat. 26° south, and lying between South Australia and Western Australia.

You judged very properly in bringing this matter under the notice of your Executive Council, regarding it as one of considerable prospective importance, and to which the attention of Her Majesty's Government should be early directed. They are of opinion that the tract in question should form part of South Australia, being altogether unconnected, geographically, with New South Wales, and being likely to receive its population from South rather than Western Australia. It would, however, require an Act of Parliament to effect this purpose, and I do not think that it ought to be executed without previous consultation with the Government of New South Wales, of which, as you correctly observe, the tract in question seems to be legally a portion.

I shall therefore lose no time in sending a copy of this correspondence to Sir William Denison, and hope to be prepared to introduce a measure into Parliament early next session.

I have, &c.,

SIR,

I transmit, for your information, copy of a correspondence between this department and the Governor of South Australia, respecting the contemplated annexation to the latter Colony of a portion of territory adjacent to it, but which (if belonging in strictness to either of the Australian Colonies) appears to be part of New South Wales, and shall be glad to receive any observations you may have to make, with the advice of your Executive Council.

No. 4.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council on the 6th September, 1858, with respect to Annexation of a portion of New South Wales to South Australia.

Minute No. 58-36. Confirmed 16 September, 1858.

His Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council a Despatch from the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, enclosing a correspondence that has passed between the Colonial Office and the Governor of South Australia respecting the annexation to that Colony of a portion of country at present included within the boundaries of New South Wales, and expressing a wish to be favored with any observations which His Excellency, after consultation with his Executive Council, may desire to offer upon the subject.

2. His Excellency at the same time lays before the Council a map prepared by the Surveyor General to illustrate the position and extent of the portion of country referred to, which lies between the western boundary of South Australia and the eastern boundary of Western Australia.

3. Upon an examination of this map the Council are unable to perceive any serious objection to the annexation to South Australia of the portion of territory in question, which it appears is completely separated from the settled portions of New South Wales by the desert lying to the north and east of South Australia, and is, in fact, inaccessible by land from New South Wales; as, however, the question involves a modification of the boundaries of the Colony, they feel that they would not be justified in recommending that the measure be assented to, or indeed that any decisive action should be taken in the matter, until the Legislature have had an opportunity of expressing an opinion on the subject; and they accordingly advise that, with the view of eliciting this, copies of the Despatch of the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with its enclosures, and also copies of this Minute, be forthwith laid before the Houses of Parliament.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MR. FRANCIS O'MEARA.
(CLAIM TO ALLOTMENT OF LAND.)Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 31 March, 1858.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.
The humble Petition of Francis O'Meara, of Bathurst-street, in the City of Sydney, in the said Colony of New South Wales,—

SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner, in the year 1827 or 1828, was Conductor of the Police Force in this Colony, and in that capacity apprehended Thomas Mustin and Daniel Watkins, two desperate bushrangers, at their camp between Liverpool and Parramatta.

That the apprehension took place shortly after the said Thomas Mustin and Daniel Watkins made an attack on the house of Doctor Dulhunty, at Burwood, and when taken were armed.

That the said Thomas Mustin and Daniel Watkins were tried by the late Chief Justice Forbes—were found guilty of felony, and executed.

That your Petitioner was, for such apprehension, and for his zeal and ability generally as Constable, recommended to the then Governor, Sir Ralph Darling, by His Honor the late Chief Justice Forbes, His Honor the late Chief Justice Stephen, Captain Rossi, Superintendent of the Police Force in Sydney aforesaid, and several Magistrates for the said Colony, for reward for his services as such Constable as aforesaid.

That the said Captain Rossi applied to Alexander Macleay, Esq., the then Colonial Secretary, on your Petitioner's behalf, and was informed that allotment number 73, on the Map of the Township of Parramatta, and situate at the corner of Windsor Road and Board-street, would be granted to your Petitioner as a reward for his said services.

That your Petitioner, in the month of July last, searched the books and chart of Parramatta in the Surveyor General's Office, and found that his name was entered for a grant of the said allotment in the Township of Parramatta aforesaid, but your Petitioner's name has since been erased from the said chart.

That the said allotment is still vacant.

That some time after the application made by the said Captain Rossi, your Petitioner applied to the Surveyor General, and was informed that the grant could not be made to him, as the Governor had left the Colony without having signed the said Deed of Grant.

That on the arrival of Sir Richard Bourke, who succeeded the said Sir Ralph Darling as Governor of the said Colony, your Petitioner again applied for a grant of the said Allotment of Land, but was refused on the same grounds, namely, that the said Sir Ralph Darling had left the Colony without signing the said Deed of Grant.

That

That, in the month of July last, your Petitioner applied, by letter, to the Secretary of Lands and Works on the subject of the grant of said Allotment of Land, and calling his attention to the circumstances under which the same was promised him, and requesting that he would cause a grant from the Crown to him of the said allotment to be prepared, or inform him what steps to take for the purpose of getting such grant.

That your Petitioner, in reply to such last mentioned letter, on the 23rd of the said month of July received a communication from the Office of Land and Public Works to the effect that your Petitioner's letter had been referred to the Surveyor General, and that when the necessary information had been obtained a further communication would be made to your Petitioner.

That, on the 19th day of November last, your Petitioner received a further communication from the Department of Land and Public Works, referring to the last mentioned letter of your Petitioner of the 23rd of July, on the subject of the Deed of Grant of the said Allotment of Land, and also stating that, from the correspondence that had taken place in respect thereof, it appeared that on the 18th day of January, 1836, your Petitioner was apprised by the then Colonial Secretary that he possessed no claim to the land in question, and that, under the circumstances of the case, the Secretary for Lands and Public Works could see no reason to alter that decision.

That your Petitioner never has been apprised that he had no claim to the said Allotment of Land, as stated in the said last mentioned letter, but that your Petitioner was informed that the Governor, Sir Ralph Darling, had left the Colony without signing a Deed of Grant of the said land.

That your Petitioner served eighteen years in the Police Force, ten of which both as Conductor both in Sydney and the Interior, and has received no compensation whatever for such long service, except the promise of a grant of said Allotment of Land.

That your Petitioner is now fifty-eight years of age, and has a family of nine children to support.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays your Honorable House to take into consideration the promise made to him by His Excellency Governor Sir Ralph Darling of a grant of the said Allotment of Land situate in the Township of Parramatta, and that your Petitioner may have a grant thereof made to him of the said land.

And your Petitioner will ever pray.

E. J. H. KNAPP, SURVEYOR.
(CLAIM TO GRANT OF LAND.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 4 June, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of Edward James Howes Knapp, of the City of Sydney, in the Colony of New South Wales, Surveyor,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH, AS FOLLOWS:—

1. Your Petitioner arrived in this Colony, by the ship "Sesostrix," in March, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-six; Dr. Dulhunty being the Surgeon Superintendent of that ship.
2. Your Petitioner was induced to emigrate here upon the express assurance given to him at the Colonial Office, Downing-street, London, that Dr. Dulhunty was the bearer of a letter from R. W. Hay, Esq., the then Under-Secretary, to Lord Bathurst, (who was the then Secretary of State for the Colonies), and which letter was addressed to His Excellency Governor Darling, authorizing the then usual grant of Land to your Petitioner.
3. The letter from Mr. R. W. Hay, in favor of your Petitioner, was either mislaid or suppressed by Dr. Dulhunty, and was only discovered in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, and some years after Dr. Dulhunty's death, by a son of his, by whom it was forwarded to your Petitioner. Your Petitioner at once transmitted it to the Colonial Secretary of this Colony, with a letter.
4. Dr. Dulhunty, upon a similar letter, in his lifetime applied for, and obtained, a maximum grant of two thousand five hundred and sixty acres.
5. The letter above referred to having been thus mislaid, or suppressed, by Dr. Dulhunty, your Petitioner, six months after his arrival here, was appointed an assistant in the Surveyor General's Department of this Colony, and your Petitioner continued in such department about four years; and your Petitioner has also since that period, and until the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-six, been constantly employed by the Colonial Government as a licensed and contract surveyor.
6. The late Sir Thomas Mitchell, who arrived in the Colony shortly after your Petitioner, obtained, upon a similar letter, a maximum grant of land of two thousand five hundred and sixty acres; Messrs. Dangar, Hoddle, Finch, Richards, and White, also surveyors, all arrived with similar letters, and shortly before your Petitioner. They each of them obtained grants of land, and each of these gentlemen were, like your Petitioner, attached to the Survey Department.
7. Your Petitioner was precluded from making an earlier application than in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven for the promised grant, by reason of the loss or suppression of the said letter as aforesaid. But when your Petitioner applied by letter, dated February sixth, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, your Petitioner was informed, that so long a period had elapsed since your Petitioner's arrival that the application of your Petitioner could not be entertained.

8. Your Petitioner humbly submits that his case is one of extreme hardship, inasmuch as your Petitioner had not the possession of, or any control over, Mr. R. W. Hay's letter, until after Dr. Dulhunty's death; and could not, therefore, before one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, have preferred his application.

9. Your Petitioner has served the Government, as a surveyor, for nearly thirty years; and not one of your Petitioner's surveys have ever been the subject of litigation, or impeached for inaccuracy.

10. Your Petitioner further humbly submits, that your Petitioner did this Colony some humble service, in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty, by his exertions in assisting the capture of the notorious band of bushrangers who were executed in Bathurst in that year. Your Petitioner, at the request of George Rankin, Esq., J. P., and of the late J. Walker, Esq., J. P., in their capacities as magistrates, was induced to join a party in pursuit of them. Your Petitioner, with this party, continued in pursuit of them for one month; and your Petitioner and the said party at last succeeded in capturing and bringing to justice the whole gang. The above-named magistrates thanked your Petitioner for his conduct on the occasion, and wrote him the letter dated twelfth January, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, recommending such his conduct to the consideration of the Colonial Government.

11. If these facts should fail to influence your Honorable House; if the carelessness or cruelty of Dr. Dulhunty should still be permitted to prejudice and punish your Petitioner,—your Petitioner would nevertheless further humbly submit to your Honorable House, that as the duties of a Sovereign and subject are mutual and reciprocal, and as upon the great legal principle that the Sovereign is incapable of doing wrong, the law pronounces that in the Sovereign there can be no negligence or laches, (hence the maxim, nullum tempus occurrit regi,—no delay in resorting to a remedy can bar the Sovereign his right,) so your Petitioner humbly submits that your Petitioner's delay, or laches (if any,) which he denies, in resorting to a remedy should not bar your Petitioner from obtaining from the Crown redress for your Petitioner's wrong.

12. Your Petitioner, lastly, most humbly submits, that if the statute of limitations be held a bar in his case, that it should run only from the time of the discovery by him in the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, of the letter of the twentieth of November, one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five; and as a plea to the statute, your Petitioner would humbly submit that he made his application on the sixth of February, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, and that the application was refused on the twenty-second April, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, and your Petitioner could now only, therefore, under a constitutional and responsible Government, venture most humbly to appeal from the decision thus pronounced by an irresponsible Government to your Honorable and constitutionally created House, and that there has consequently been no delay or laches.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to take the premises and your Petitioner's case into your most gracious consideration, and that such redress may be afforded to your Petitioner as to your Honorable House shall seem meet, and as the circumstances of your Petitioner's case may appear to require.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c., &c.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

MR. WILLIAM SIMS BELL.

(PRAYING REDRESS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 31 August, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of William Sims Bell, of Liverpool Plains, in the Territory of New South Wales,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioner's father, Mr. Archibald Bell, deceased, in the year 1809 obtained from Colonel Patterson, then Lieutenant-Governor of this Colony, a grant of forty and one-half (40½) rods of land in Macquarie-street, on which the present Parliament Buildings are erected.

That this grant was given to your Petitioner's father as an equivalent for a prior grant of land in George-street, from Governor Bligh,—this latter land being required by the Government for a site for the Military Barracks, and was, in consideration of the grant from Colonel Patterson, relinquished to the Government by your Petitioner's father.

That Major Goulburn, Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, requested your Petitioner's father to allow him to examine the grant from Colonel Patterson, which was accordingly delivered to him, but was not returned.

That the said grant is duly registered in the records of the Colonial Secretary's Office, and in the margin of such record the following memorandum is written, signed with the initials of Major Goulburn, viz.:—"Destroyed, the Fifth September, 1825. F. G."

That your Petitioner's father did not receive any other compensation for the land relinquished by him to the Government for the purposes before-mentioned than the forty and a half rods in Macquarie-street, of which he was so deprived.

That your Petitioner as heir-at-law of the said Archibald Bell, deceased, has made several applications to the Government for a compensation for such land, similar to that granted to other persons under somewhat analogous circumstances, but without success.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will be pleased to take his case into favorable consideration, and adopt such measures as may do your Petitioner equity and justice.

And your Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

TIMBER OF NEW SOUTH WALES.

(ITS ELASTICITY AND STRENGTH.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 3 August, 1858.

THE DEPUTY MASTER OF THE MINT to THE SECRETARY FOR LAND AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Royal Mint,Sydney, 27 April, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to forward a Report of results obtained from experiments on the elasticity and strength of timber of New South Wales, procured through the Chief Commissioner for Railways, and tested at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint in the month of March, 1858.

I have been endeavouring for some time to obtain specimens of Colonial timber in order to extend these experimental inquiries. As yet, however, I have not succeeded in obtaining more than a very limited number.

I enclose a list of those I have selected from the catalogue of New South Wales woods exhibited lately in Paris. The whole of the woods contained in this list appear, from the description of their qualities given in the catalogue, to be more or less suitable for building purposes.

Should the Government consider an inquiry into their strength and elasticity desirable, I would suggest that Government surveyors, or other officers in their respective districts, be instructed to procure of each kind four specimens, not less than four feet six inches long and two and a-quarter inches square, and forward them to me for trial,—of which I would make a Report to the Government.

I have, &c.,

E. W. WARD,

Deputy Master.

THE SECRETARY

FOR LAND AND PUBLIC WORKS.

REPORT of results obtained from Experiments on the Elasticity and Strength of Timber of New South Wales, procured through the Chief Commissioner for Railways, and tested at the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint in the month of March, 1858.

The specimens tried were fresh cut, taken from trees in the neighbourhood of Belford, which lies 18 miles from Maitland and 10 miles from Singleton, on the Great Northern Road.

The experiments were conducted as follows:—The distance between the supports was 4 feet, the beam rested on iron trestle-heads firmly fixed, and prevented from collapsing by stays—the ends left free; the weights were applied in the centre, and increased by $\frac{1}{2}$ cwts. at a time, at intervals of half-an-hour, till the elasticity was evidently destroyed, when the interval between each addition was prolonged to an hour. At the end of each interval the beam was relieved of its weight.

This was effected by means of a screw-jack, which raised the scale on which the weights rested; thus the beam was always relieved from pressure, and subjected to it, without jerk.

The specific gravities were obtained with great care, by means of a delicate balance in the Mint.

The timber was obtained by Captain Martindale, R.E., Chief Commissioner of Railways, through Mr. Collett, an officer of his department.

The experiments were conducted in the Sydney Branch of the Royal Mint, under the superintendence of Mr. Trickett, Superintendent of the Coining Department of the Mint.

In order that a comparison may be instituted between the woods of this Colony and others, I append the values of E. and S. of some well known, ascertained at Woolwich dockyard by P. Barlow, Esquire, F.R.S.

	E.	S.
Teak	603600	2462
English Oak	362800	1672
Canadian ditto	536200	1766
Ash	411200	2026
Beech	338400	1556
Pitch Pine	306400	1632

It may be as well to explain the use of the results exhibited in these tables to those not conversant with their practical bearing.

Problem 1.—To determine the strength of a rectangular beam of timber when it is supported at the ends and loaded in the middle, multiply value of S. in the table by 4 times the depth in inches, and by the area of the section in inches, and divide the product by the distance between the supports in inches. The quotient will be the greatest weight the beam will bear in lbs. One-fourth the weight found by the rule should be the greatest weight upon a beam in practice.

Example 1.—Required the weight a beam of iron-bark 1 foot square would sustain in the middle, its length being 20 feet.

The tabular value of S being 2288, the depth 12 inches, the area 144 inches, the length 240 inches, consequently $\frac{2288 \times 4 \times 12 \times 144}{240} = 65,644$ lbs., and the beam may be loaded in practice with $\frac{65644}{4} = 16,411$ lbs., without injuring its texture.

From the equation $S = \frac{l.w.}{4ad^2}$ where l = length

 a = breadth
 d = depth } in inches, and w the breaking weight in lbs., any three of the four quantities l, a, d, w , being given, the other may be determined.

Example 2.—Let it be required to determine the size of a girder of iron-bark for a warehouse where the distance between the points of support is 20 feet, and the greatest possible stress in the middle, including the weight of the floor, is 30 tons = 67,200. Let us assume that the greatest depth that we can obtain this timber is 20 inches, then, in practice,

$$a \text{ must} = \frac{4lw}{4Sd^2} = \frac{4 \times 240 \times 67200}{4 \times 2288 \times 20 \times 20} = 17.62 \text{ inches.}$$

Thus, two girders of 20 inches depth, and nine inches breadth, resting on the same sustaining piece, would be sufficient to support the weight of 30 tons.

If the 30 tons are to be uniformly distributed over the surface of the floor, one girder of 20" × 9" wide would be sufficient.

Problem 2.—To determine the strength of a rectangular piece of timber, fixed at one end and loaded at the other. Multiply the value of S by the area and depth of the section, in inches, and divide that product by the leverage in length, without support, in inches,—the quotient will be the weight required.

In this case the formula is,—

In practice the load ought not to exceed one-fourth of the weight found by this rule.

If the weight be distributed uniformly over the piece, the distance of the centre of gravity from the point of support must be taken for the length or leverage of the piece.

Example 1.—For iron-bark the breaking weight of a piece having a leverage of 5 feet, area 6" × 4", and depth 6", would be the load it would bear without injury.

$$\frac{2288 \times 6 \times 4 \times 6}{60} = 5491.2; \text{ and } \frac{5491.2}{4} = 1,373 \text{ lbs.}$$

Example 2.—A balcony, to bear one ton, is to be supported by two cantilevers; the projection of the balcony to be 4 feet.

Assuming the cantilevers to be iron-bark, that the weight will be uniformly distributed over the whole length, and that the depth of the cantilevers shall be 4 inches; the distance of the centre of gravity from the wall will be two feet, and S being = 2288 as before, it will be found by the formula that the breadth of each cantilever must be 2.35 inches to bear the weight required without injury.

The

The value of E in the table is essential for the determination of the dimensions of a beam capable of supporting a given weight, with a given degree of deflection, when fixed at one end or when supported at both ends.

When the beam is supported at one end, the rule is as follows:—Divide the weight in lbs. by $\frac{E}{1728}$ and by the breadth and deflection, both in inches, the cube root of the quotient, multiplied by the length in feet, will be depth required in inches. The formula being,— l , a , and d representing the same as before, w the greatest weight, the deflection while elasticity remained perfect.

$$E = \frac{l^3 w}{a d^3 \delta}$$

Any one of the quantities, the others being given, may be found by the reversion of the formula. If the beam be loaded uniformly throughout

$$E = \frac{3}{8} \frac{l^3 w}{a d^3 \delta}$$

When the beam is supported at both ends, multiply the weight to be supported in lbs. by the cube of the length in feet; divide the product by 16 times $\frac{E}{1728}$ multiplied into the given deflection in inches, and the quotient is the breadth multiplied by the cube of the depth in inches.

The formula for this is,—

$$E = \frac{l^3 w}{16 a d^3 \delta}$$

if the beam be uniformly loaded throughout the formula is,—

$$E = \frac{3}{8} \frac{l^3 w}{16 a d^3 \delta}$$

It is unnecessary to extend the explanation of the use of these values by working out examples. Any one desirous of further information on the subject may obtain it by consulting "Barlow on Materials and on Construction," from which these rules have been taken.

ALLUVIAL LANDS OF THE HUNTER.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 16th April last, "to inquire into and report upon the best means of improving the Alluvial Lands of the Hunter by a system of Drainage, and the legal provisions under which such a system may be carried out;" and to whom were referred at the same time, "all Proceedings of the Select Committee of last Session;" and on the 20th April last, "the Report on Drainage by Mr. Surveyor Adams, and the Hunter River Flood Map, ordered to be Printed on the 9th December, 1857,"—have agreed to the following Report:—

In the course of their inquiry into the important matters referred for their consideration, your Committee have taken the evidence of the several gentlemen in the Hunter River District whose names are shewn in the margin.

Your Committee originally purposed to recommend for the consideration of your Honorable House certain provisions under which a system of Drainage of the Alluvial Lands might, by the joint action of the neighbouring proprietors and occupants, have been effectually carried out, but being of opinion that the present advanced period of the Session would render the completion of a measure embodying such provisions altogether impracticable, they deem it advisable to submit the evidence taken during this and the previous Session to your Honorable House, as data for the guidance of the new Parliament in legislating upon this important subject.

ON

ALLUVIAL LANDS OF THE HUNTER.

TUESDAY, 17 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Present :—

Mr. ARNOLD,
Mr. FLOOD,
Mr. PIDDINGTON,

Mr. ROBERTSON,
Mr. SCOTT,
Mr. WEEKES.

J. ROBERTSON, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

• Joseph Chambers, Esquire, Solicitor, of East Maitland, called in and examined :—

1. By the Chairman : The Committee understand you have given some considerable attention to the question of draining the alluvial lands of the Hunter? I have. J. Chambers,
Esq.
2. You have, I believe, drawn up a paper on that subject? I did, last evening.
3. You reside in Maitland, I believe, and have been there some years? For the last fifteen or sixteen years. 17 Nov., 1857.
4. Have you had much opportunity of knowing the wishes of the people? I fancy I have upon this point. I believe I was the first person who, by correspondence in the local newspapers, drew attention to the matter.
5. Will you be kind enough to let the Committee have the benefit of the paper you have drawn up? [The witness read the same, as follows :—]

“ For many years the want of an authorized system of drainage has been felt by the land proprietors of the District of the Lower Hunter; from time to time efforts have been made to carry out local drainage works, but they have been rendered abortive because there has not been unanimity of co-operation, and of late all attempts at drainage appear to have been abandoned as being, for the cause aforesaid, beyond realization.

“ During the last fifteen years drainage operations have been extensively proceeded with in Great Britain, and I should imagine no better foundation could be desired for colonial legislation on the subject than that afforded by the English Statutes.

“ I estimate that in the district before referred to (the Lower Hunter) there are not less than 150,000 acres of land liable to injury by occasional flood, of which upwards of 50,000 acres are undrained swamp lands. It is chiefly in regard to the latter description of land that legislation is now sought by the gentlemen identifying themselves with the floods and drainage movement,—though, as regards the former, much good, it is hoped, may at the same time be achieved, as the drainage of different localities must, more or less, improve the natural course of drainage of the whole district. I would illustrate this by stating that there is no portion of the valley of the Hunter more liable to flood than certain lands on the bank of Wallis Creek; that creek enters the river at an acute angle against the stream, hence, when the river is swollen, even by ordinary rains, the water is driven up the creek and forced over on the low lands. Scientific survey might prove, that by slightly diverting the course of this creek, assisting the escape of its waters, and resisting the ingress of the river, several thousands of acres of the richest lands might be effectually drained and secured from ordinary flood.

“ The persons to whom, in these matters, authority is to be delegated should have a wide field of operation, as it is evident works constructed in one section of the district might affect, beneficially or injuriously, remote lands in another. To justify this view I would remark that in several places the owners of lands have heretofore cut drains from back swamps to the river, and have partially succeeded in draining off the water; but not having provided the mouths of such drains with floodgates, or other means of stopping the influx of the river, these drains become channels for the river, when raised above its level, through which it rushes and inundates the back lands for many miles. In all the late floods the open drains at Albion Farm, on the Paterson River, received the waters which flowing up through them spread over and devastated the estates of Clifden, Woodville, Wollolong, Bowthorne, &c., &c., and eventually burst a passage into the Hunter River, at Osterley. As any merely local plans of drainage may thus be destroyed, or rendered useless by far distant causes, it appears to me advisable that the drainage of the whole basin of the Hunter should be under one authority; but that authority, from the nature of its operations, would have the assistance of the residents of each locality in which any work was to be accomplished.

"The Committee may not, however, be aware that in this matter there is some division, though no dissension, among the inhabitants of the Hunter River District. The late severe floods invaded the town of West Maitland so seriously that a number of gentlemen, believing that those identifying themselves with the present subject did not profess to adopt means to prevent damages by extraordinary flood, formed a body for that purpose. When, therefore, I state that the drainage of the entire district should be under one authority, I refer only to the operations now under consideration, and to the purposes for which this Committee was appointed, and I possess no authority to express any opinion respecting the wishes or intentions of the gentlemen referred to.

"This authority might consist of Commissioners appointed by the Executive; their numbers, powers, and remuneration, &c., are matters of detail, on which, perhaps, I am not asked to express an opinion. I may, however, be permitted to say, that I believe a small number, say three or five, with slight remuneration, will be found to work far better than would a large number, either with or without remuneration.

"The modus operandi, I conceive, would be somewhat as follows:—

"When the landholders, or occupiers, of any locality desired to improve their land, by any system of drainage, they would memorialize the Commissioners, shewing the particulars of the lands to be drained, their interest in them, the manner proposed for effecting the work, the estimated expense, the estimated increase of value to the lands, &c., &c., &c., and requesting the Commissioners to investigate their proposal, giving security for the costs of such investigation.

"On the receipt of such memorial the Commissioners would give it publicity, and call for any objections, and would, on an appointed day, hear all parties interested, and determine whether the memorial could be complied with, and to what extent, or under what conditions; and their report, with plans and specifications, approved of by their own Surveyor, and an estimate of the cost, should then be sent in for the sanction of the Government.

"Then, as to the mode of obtaining the requisite funds, the report would sufficiently inform the Government of the amount required, of the amount of annual rent charge proposed to be levied on the lands benefited by the works, and of the entire value of the lands to be charged as security; and power might be conceded to the Government, on their approval of the plan, to issue debentures to the amount required. I think such debentures would command a sale in the district they were issued for, and that a plan might be advantageously arranged for paying a very considerable portion of the outlay in debentures.

"To provide for the eventual payment of these debentures, the improved lands would be assessed by the Commissioners, and a rent charge collected therefrom and paid into the Treasury. In order to ensure equality in payment the Commissioners should have power to graduate the rent charge in proportion to the benefit obtained by the rent-payer; and, also, to vary, if necessary, the whole amount of assessment, so as to provide, as nearly as possible, for the payment of the exact sum due on the debentures.

"If this course were followed, it appears to me the measure would have a fair and gradual trial without involving the Government in much responsibility. If the earlier operations of the Commissioners were found to be safe and successful, then further encouragement could be given; if, on the other hand, the scheme did not meet the success anticipated, the Government could limit their liability by withholding further advances.

"There would, of course, be an immense mass of detail to be worked up by the parties entrusted with the preparation of the Bill; but, I presume, the present business of the Committee does not lead them to consider it."

6. It appears, from the very able paper you have read, that the difficulty you have found in this matter of the drainage of land has arisen from the want of means of enforcing unanimity of operations; and I think, in the latter part of your paper, you recommend one general scheme for a certain district on the Hunter. Will you be kind enough to say whether, in your opinion, it would be better to have separate Commissions for each bank of the river. It appears to me that on each bank of the river—assuming that the water overflows at any given point on the one bank of the river—it would run down many miles behind the banks, as it were, on the level land. This I may look upon as one basin; so, also, on the other side of the river? I think if there be any division of authority there must be a clashing of interests, for this reason: If, for instance, the first locality which I indicated, if the mouth of Wallis Creek, which now receives the waters of the Hunter and carries them into the back lands, were in any way stopped, no doubt the water on the opposite side of the river would be raised up some few feet, or inches, as the case might be; and then you would have the drainage authorities on the left bank of the river opposing those on the right. It strikes me that the only effectual way of procedure would be to have one Commission for the management of the whole basin of the Hunter, who would do the "greatest good to the greatest number," without being influenced by mere local interests.

7. You say the main object of the movement is the reclaiming of some 50,000 acres of what you call swamp-land—do I understand you to mean, when you speak of swamp-land, land that has never been under cultivation? Yes; or which has been abandoned as impracticable to cultivate. I may mention the farm of Mr. Jones Smith; he has some two or three hundred acres of land which are flooded two or three times a year; and there are many others in the same condition. J. Chambers,
Esq.
17 Nov., 1857.
8. You do not consider it desirable, then, to take a section which has been for many years under cultivation—say South Park? I think, in such a case as that of South Park, the Commissioners should have authority to put floodgates at Wallis Creek, if deemed to be advisable; but I think what we know as South Park—which was formerly known as Lachlan Swamp—has been so far secured by ordinary drainage that crops are seldom lost upon it.
9. In drawing a distinction between the 100,000 acres and the 150,000 acres do you wish it to be understood that the object of the movement was not to withdraw from liability to injury from flood the lands that may be under water after a great fresh—do you mean that this land should not come under the operation of the measures to be taken, but only hopeless swamps? In my opinion the drainage of several localities must effect a great improvement upon the whole natural system of drainage of the Hunter. The persons with whom I act do not profess to save the country from extraordinary floods, but merely to drain such lands as are now uncultivated in consequence of water lying on them; at the same time, no doubt their operations will save many farms which, though now looked upon as comparatively safe, are sometimes flooded.
10. You have spoken of Wallis Creek—if the mouth of that were dammed up, would it not endanger West Maitland? I think not; and when I said that it should be dammed across, I also said there should be floodgates, so as to cause the back-water to flow out. I say, “scientific survey might prove that by slightly diverting the course of this creek, assisting the escape of its waters, and resisting the ingress of the river, several thousands of acres of the richest land might be effectually drained and secured from ordinary flood.” What the Committee want is authority to have scientific surveys, and to do such work in such manner as scientific authorities might pronounce to be necessary.
11. If I understood you rightly, you contemplate that the debentures you speak of should be secured upon the public revenue—do you think the public revenue can properly be used for that purpose? I imagine that the first operations of the Commissioners, which would test the practicability of this undertaking, would be really so small that there would be no great responsibility. In England, for many years, the Government have raised large sums for the purpose of drainage, and, therefore, I do not see any great impropriety in asking the Colonial Government to assist in a trifling degree in the same direction.
12. Is there any considerable portion of these swamps still remaining in the hands of the Government? No, I think not; but part of the reserved land of the town is now a useless swamp—I should say nearly 200 acres. There may be difficulties arise, but of course they will be matter of detail. With respect to the Church and School Lands, for instance, they are alienated for many years—the leases having some twenty years to run—and of course it would be hard to make the Church and School authorities pay for the improvement of their land, the benefit from which they would not derive until the end of those leases; in such a case they should have the power either to raise the rent or enforce payment of the assessment, or a due proportion thereof, from the tenant.
13. Is there any considerable portion of the 50,000 acres Church and School Lands? I should say out of the 50,000 two or three thousand are liable to flood.
14. By Mr. Scott: I think you have stated that there are about 150,000 acres either in cultivation or fit to be cultivated? Yes, liable to extraordinary floods—I mean, that during the late severe floods there were upwards of 150,000 acres covered with water.
15. 50,000 of which you consider generally unfit for cultivation, from its low situation? Yes.
16. 100,000 generally in cultivation, but subject to injury from extraordinary floods? Yes.
17. Do you know the fall of the Hunter? No, I do not.
18. From West Maitland to Newcastle? I have been told that the height of water at West Maitland, compared with the height of water at Newcastle, in the ordinary condition of the river, does not exceed four or five feet.
19. Can you state from the flood-mark at West Maitland, how many feet the water rose there at the highest point of the flood? No.
20. Are you able to state the height at Morpeth, Hexham, or Newcastle? No; those were statistics which did not necessarily interest the Committee in their present movements, and as I was not aware that I should be required to give evidence upon these points, I have not provided myself with information.
21. Will you state what Committee you refer to? The Floods and Drainage Committee, to which I am Acting Secretary.
22. In your opinion, would one large main drain below Morpeth, or entering the river at the Paterson, be preferable to having smaller ones leading into the river? I am unable to give an opinion—it would be a mere opinion of no value; but I imagine that, by straightening the course of the river by large drains, the liability to flood would be considerably lessened.
23. Do you not think, since these floods have occurred, that it would be better if possible for the Committee to devise some plans to prevent the ravage of these immense floods, as well as to benefit these particular lands? That question involves a very nice one as to how far it would be necessary for the drainage of these estates to secure, in the first instance, the main drainage. I imagine that no system of drainage that could be adopted by the Floods and Drainage Committee could protect the country from the enormous floods that have lately swept through the valley of the Hunter. I think an entire system, and no doubt a very expensive system, of drainage, must be entered into before the valley of the Hunter could be protected from such enormous floods.

- J. Chambers, Esq.
17 Nov., 1857.
24. You are perhaps aware that the fall of the river is about a foot in a mile? I know there is a considerable fall.
25. The highest mark at Maitland was twenty-six or twenty-seven feet above the bed of the river? Somewhere about that. At Hexham it rose, as I can inform the Committee, about four feet nine inches, and at Newcastle it did not rise above six inches. I take it that arises from the immense body of water forced down, and the circuitous course of the river; because I know Mr. Adams took the height of the river at the commencement of a wide bend, and then crossed and took the height on the other returning side of the bend, and found six or seven feet difference in the height of the water within a distance of two or three miles.
26. With that important fact before you, do you not think it would be desirable to straighten the channel by means of one straight drain? I think that is the only way by which an extraordinary flood would be carried off.
27. An extraordinary flood would have nearly the same action as an ordinary flood? Ordinary floods with us are rather frequent, and it is these that prevent these 50,000 acres of land being brought into cultivation.
28. By straightening the river you would prevent that rise? Very probably the straightening the course of the river would have that effect; but that is a question rather for a professional engineer than for me to hazard an opinion upon.
29. You have never taken into your consideration what would be the effect upon the lands above and below if all these large drains were completed? No; but I should not imagine it would increase their liability to flood. I think the water falling from the Lower Hunter would be cleared away before that from the Upper Hunter would come down. I should imagine that by facilitating the drainage of the river, there would be no liability to inundate the lower parts of the river.
30. I presume, then, that your opinion is that this larger or main drain, with branch drains into that, or into the river, would be preferable to the plan first proposed, if it could be carried out at a reasonable cost? We propose no plan; we simply seek authority to have scientific surveys of lands lying waste from liability to ordinary floods. The plan you suggest might be a plan which persons of science might say was a feasible one; I propose no system of drainage.
31. As to embanking the river? I believe that is given up by all reasonable persons.
32. By Mr. Weekes: This scheme you have propounded aims at something more than mere protection from floods? Yes; it is for the purpose of bringing into cultivation, and securing from floods, lands which now lie unproductive, on account of their liability to common floods.
33. Does it also contemplate a system by which lands now lying in a state of swamp may be reclaimed and brought into use? It would be impossible to carry out the one object without in some way effecting the other. I fancy that the operations of the Committee in draining small sections of land must materially effect the drainage of the whole course of the Hunter, and must improve these lands. It would be useless to have this drainage into the Hunter, which is, of course, the common drain of the whole district, if that main drain were not, in a measure, secured from bursting up into the made drains.
34. You think the operation of this Committee should embrace not only the securing lands which, in ordinary times, are safe from the operation of floods, but the reclaiming of lands constantly in a state of marsh? Yes.
35. Would you make the rate or contribution compulsory? Yes, I would. Directly a certain number of landholders—and the Committee or the Legislature should fix the number—joined in a memorial to the Commissioners, I would take it that a certain majority, to be named, should govern the minority; it is in this that the difficulty has hitherto existed. A number of persons have been desirous to join in a system for the drainage of their estates, but, because one person has chosen to hold out, the whole affair has necessarily been abandoned. What is needed is the power to drain through the lands of persons who are unwilling where the majority of the landholders in the locality deem it necessary.
36. Do you not think it possible, in carrying out this mode of drainage, that although it might preserve and improve large portions of land, it might also deteriorate other lands, by a system of drainage which might relieve some lands of an excess of moisture, might not adjoining lands having only a sufficient quantity of moisture be injured? No, I think not; I think you could not injure other lands.
37. How would you propose it should operate;—take the case of Maitland, where it would benefit the town as well as the adjoining country—would you make the taxation fall upon the town's people in any shape? Yes. I should imagine that the operations of this body should be such that if the majority of the inhabitants of any district considered, (and their opinion were supported by scientific survey), that a system of drainage would benefit their lands, they should have the benefit to come within the operations of the Commissioners.
38. Do you not think that, although you might have the means of levying a rate upon agricultural lands, it would be a very difficult task to regulate the proportion due from towns? I think it would be very difficult, but I apprehend that the Commissioners would not be called upon to enter upon such large matters as that until the thing were fairly tried. If it were found that their operations were successful, I do not see why they should hesitate to go into these large affairs, such as the protection of the town from floods. Certainly I should not advise them to commence their career by so large an undertaking as that of attempting to save the town of West Maitland from flood.
39. The damage done by a flood in a town like West Maitland is very arbitrary; it may overwhelm one house and not affect another? That would have to be determined by the authorities. I think the same operations would answer for towns as for country.
40. Do you think any mode could be devised by which the lands themselves that were brought under the operation of this project could be made security for the debentures? Yes.
41. Do you think debentures on that security would be current? I think so; but I do not think the Government ought to shrink from also securing them to the public, to a small amount,

42. As in municipal loans, they are supposed to be secured by the entire value of the property of the city? I take it that it would be something upon the principle of the Commissioners of Roads or other public works, who have the right to borrow to the amount of double or three times the value of the annual tolls collected. Now, I imagine, that upon something of the same principle the Commissioners could pledge to the Government their tolls, assessment, or rent charges to be collected.

J. Chambers,
Esq.

17 Nov., 1857.

43. Do you think it would be a fair proposition that the lands brought under the operation of this project should be pledged for the money raised to improve them? I think it would be fair; but, at the same time, I think it would be very likely to deter persons from encouraging the operation.

44. Would not that then be asking the Government to undertake what the persons most interested would shrink from? I do not say they would shrink from it, but I think a man would hesitate to charge his estate with £1,000 as a primary claim upon it, although he would not hesitate to make it a rent charge, because in the one case he would only be pledged to a certain annual payment, but in the other he might be suddenly called upon to pay a large sum which he could not meet.

45. Do you think debentures, secured upon the land in the way I have suggested, would be taken readily by parties in the district, knowing the security? Yes, I think they would.

46. Do you contemplate any system of irrigation as well as of drainage? I think it would be advisable.

47. By Mr. Arnold: Do you think that a sufficient encouragement would not be given to the formation of an extensive system of drainage without the advance of money from the Government, or the lending of their credit in order to obtain the advance? I think that the large fund required for the purpose would be too much to ask the people to advance. A very simple course of drainage would, no doubt, cost five or six hundred, or perhaps a thousand pounds. To raise that amount of actual cash among the inhabitants would require perhaps a great effort, whereas by means of debentures, which I think would be current in the neighbourhood, Government would not be called upon to pay cash, and the inhabitants would be called upon to pay only the annual rent charge, which they would never feel. A tenant who has been distressed for years by losing his crops would not be in a position to subscribe £40 or £50 to secure a system of drainage which he might not himself approve, or not have the knowledge to understand.

48. Would not the main object of the interference of the Legislature be to compel contributions towards any particular work in proportion to the benefit conferred upon particular lands? Yes, an annual or half-yearly contribution, in proportion to the benefit received; those lands entirely saved from the floods would be assessed by the Commissioners at a higher rate than those partially relieved.

49. Does not the great hinderance to drainage works being carried out by private individuals arise from the inability to compel contributions from parties who derive advantage from the works? Yes; and also from the inability to keep open drains upon other persons lands. It is the want of unanimity and co-operation that prevents any system being carried out.

50. Have not many large drainage works been constructed by private individuals, for the benefit of their own properties? Yes. There may be swamps through which a drain may be cut to the river, which may be a benefit to the swamp, but none to the adjoining lands; indeed, in case of floods these become dangerous, by the water rushing up and inundating the adjoining lands. The law should enable the Commissioners to make the parties secure these drains.

51. Does not one great difficulty in constructing the drainage works by private individuals arise from those persons not having any power to construct their drains through other lands than their own? Yes. In many cases the natural drainage passes along land in the occupation of other persons, and those who are the greatest sufferers have no means of relieving themselves.

52. One of the provisions of the Act you would propose, would be to enable any proprietor to have the means of draining through the lands of other persons? Yes.

53. Do you not think the end you have in view would be sufficiently attained if means were provided to enable private individuals constructing drains for the protection of their own lands to enforce a contribution rateably from all others who might be benefited by those drains, and to construct these drains through any land which would offer the greatest facility for their construction? I think it would; but I think it would be dangerous to make these private acts; because a wealthy proprietor might insist upon a course of drainage which would be ruinous to a poorer one.

54. Might not the works be done by means of Commissioners? That is almost the system I propose.

55. Excepting this—that it would not involve the necessity of a grant of public money? I think even without the public money we might do it; of course it would then be the fault of the Legislature if it were inoperative. I think in a trifling operation, say of £5,000 or £6,000, there would be no harm in granting authority to issue debentures to that amount, which would test the matter. The principle, I think, cannot be wrong, when we find that from the 5th Victoria to the present time—now fifteen years—the English Parliament have constantly made grants to Commissioners for drainage.

56. I suppose, however, you would not make all the grants made in England precedents for us? No.

57. Do you not think there would be a willingness on the part of private proprietors to undertake the work of drainage, and to depend for payment of the outlay upon the amount of benefit they would derive from it—do you not think that would be the best guarantee for the carrying out of this work? I think it would come within the terms of this plan, that where no private persons could be found to subscribe the necessary money Government might step in; but I would give the Commissioners power to deal with private acts of drainage.

J. Chambers, Esq.
17 Nov., 1857.

drainage. One or two clauses in the Bill might provide, that where private persons, without borrowing money of the Government, were willing to subscribe sufficient to effect any certain work, the Commissioners might receive the amount, have the work performed, and repay the subscribers from the assessment collected.

58. In the case of a private proprietor undertaking a work in the way suggested, he would then depend entirely upon the work effecting the purpose for which he constructed it; and if it failed, he would then have spent his money for no purpose; but in the case of Government advancing the money and the work failing, who would then bear the loss? In such a case, all would depend upon the science, skill, and ability brought to bear upon the subject. If the Government or individuals take the best means at command to ascertain the most efficient mode of carrying out an object, they are not to be blamed if they fail. I think the individuals should pay, whether it were a failure or not.

59. Even those who have protested against the scheme? Yes, provided they were the minority; I think the minority should give way to the majority.

60. In the case of a private proprietor paying for the work, you would make his re-payment depend upon the success of his work? Not if he acts through the Commissioners.

61. Then, in fact, you would not make the payment of the proprietor depend upon the amount of benefit derived? No; but upon the amount of benefit previously estimated; for, if we could fancy that nothing but good would result from the operations of the Commissioners, then I apprehend the Government would not hesitate to advance the necessary funds.

62. How would you recommend that the Commissioners should determine whether a work should be undertaken or not? Firstly,—a large majority of all the parties interested should express a desire that the work should be done, and should place before the Commissioners surveys made by competent persons; secondly,—these surveys should be tested and approved by the Surveyor to the Commissioners; thirdly,—the Commissioners themselves should hear all pros and cons, and should approve the plan; and, fourthly,—this plan should be submitted for the sanction of Government; and I think these four judgments of the reasonableness of it would be sufficient to justify the Commissioners in believing that they were taking all the necessary precautions.

63. Then you think it objectionable to make the success of a work the test of its merit? Yes, provided all reasonable means had been taken before for endeavouring to ascertain the results.

64. Would not the result be this, that where a work failed in the first place, an adjoining proprietor might have his lands ruined by the operation of a system which he himself disapproved, and afterwards be called upon to contribute towards the amount expended in ruining him? In all great good there must be some cases of individual evil, and while the world stands it will be impossible to avoid that.

65. If you made the success of the work the condition of requiring the contributions of persons, they would then pay only for the benefit they actually received? You must throw the loss upon some one.

66. I would throw it upon the person undertaking it; he should do it at his own risk? If it were done by the Commissioners, at the request of the parties, and after all deliberation, they would do it for the public good, and, in my opinion, ought not to suffer.

67. Do you not think if the power to compel contributions were made dependent upon success, it would make people cautious how they undertook works of that kind? It would make them more fearful, perhaps, than cautious, in attempting to improve their own estates, and it would create, perhaps, an evil desire in some to deprecate really useful-works, in order that they might avoid the payment of their proportion of the cost.

68. Do you not know that one of the practical evils of allowing persons to construct drains without legislative interference has been that those drains have often led to the flooding of land instead of its drainage, in consequence of their having no flood gates? Yes; and also by cutting through the high land, which, generally, in this country, you find on the banks of the rivers. Many of the floods in the Paterson would not have gone on the back lands but for this mischievous system of drainage.

69. With regard to any drainage which affected the value of town property, might not the difficulty suggested by Mr. Weekes be got rid of if the cost of it were made a charge upon a municipal body? It might be got rid of by an assessment upon the entire property, instead of upon individuals, and the municipal authorities might afterwards arrange, in their own own departments, how the assessment should be proportioned.

70. By Mr. Piddington: I think your proposal contemplates some description of incorporated body, or an organised body appointed by Government? Yes.

71. I think you state that, in your opinion, some 50,000 acres of swamp land are usually under water, or exposed to water to such an extent that they are not capable of being cultivated? I believe upwards of 50,000.

72. I wish to know, distinctly, whether these 50,000 acres are the property of one individual or of a considerable number of proprietors? Of a considerable number.

73. Then your plan contemplates a general assessment upon this considerable number of proprietors of these 50,000 acres? Yes.

74. Would it not increase the expense of engineering and scientific assistance very much if the area or extent of land which you propose to reclaim were limited very considerably in the quantity you name as the gross amount? I think not. The Commissioners would, of course, be bound to make different systems of drainage. The drainage of some estates would not cost more than £20, £30, or £40.

75. I do not think you understand my question: my question is directed to the preferable economy of a larger quantity of land being placed under the control of officers, some one of whom should be a scientific man, to setting up a number of separate incorporated bodies for the management of smaller quantities? I fancy there should be but one authority.

76. One advantage of that would be the more economical working of the system? Yes, most assuredly; and I think while I am on that point, though perhaps I have no right to offer the suggestion, there are gentlemen living in the locality who would act as Commissioners without any wish of large remuneration; and I can venture to say that they could have clerical assistance without any desire for remuneration. J. Chambers,
Esq.
17 Nov., 1857.
77. Although you have alluded to the fact that 150,000 acres have been covered with water during the late floods, neither your scheme nor the object of the Committee, points to any way of protecting the low lands of the Hunter from extraordinary floods? We look upon it as almost impracticable. The works that would be necessary for that purpose would be so enormous, that without Government aid it would be impossible to carry them out. It did not seem desirable to the Floods and Drainage Committee to apply to the Government for that larger amount, or for any amount which it did not propose to repay.
78. The impediments in the way of the adoption of such a plan as that proposed by the Committee, are not merely the want of co-operation as respects the power of compelling persons to contribute, but also the amount of money to be raised in the first instance. My question refers to this:—your scheme implies the necessity of raising a large sum of money, which you do not propose to raise in lump sums of the individual proprietors, but in their names? I propose that for each work there should be an authority from the Executive Government to issue the estimated amount in debentures; by an order of the Legislature, there should be a general authority to issue, say £5,000 or £6,000 in debentures; then, whenever a scheme was approved by the Commissioners and the Government, the Treasury might have the authority to issue debentures to the amount estimated for the works. But when the amount limited by the Legislature was expended, then before any further sum could be paid the matter should come before the Legislature for new discussion, and if the operations of the Commissioners were not found to answer, no further assistance should be granted.
79. There are different portions of land belonging to different proprietors? Yes.
80. To reclaim that land would cost a considerable sum? Yes.
81. Do you propose to raise that sum by making parties contribute lump sums of money, sufficient for the purpose, or to raise it by loan, by aid of the credit of the Corporation, or of that credit guaranteed by Government, or do you mean to defray it by assessment? I propose to raise the amount originally by loan from the Government, by debentures, to be paid off in a series of years. I think those who suffer most from the floods are the poorest, and that it would be impossible for them to raise any large amount of money. Those whose lands are the most liable to flood are in a great measure impoverished, and, therefore, this, owing to the recent floods, would be the worst possible time to ask them for a contribution; but the best possible time to move the Government to a consideration of this subject.
82. Supposing the Commissioners of Drainage were appointed, I presume your scheme contemplates that they should have the control of a considerable portion of low land? Yes.
83. It will be for them to determine, after scientific investigation, the amount of money that would be necessary to reclaim that land? Yes.
84. And for them to determine the detail of payments to be made by individual proprietors? Yes.
85. They will also have authority to assess the land? Yes.
86. Can you see any objection to these Commissioners asking the Government to guarantee any loan that may be necessary, providing the Government are satisfied of the security of the assessment and of the means afforded by the Commissioners of repayment to the Government of the loan they borrow? I see no objection; and, moreover, I think the English Government have given precedents in the same way during the last fifteen years.
87. Are there not many precedents to be found in the British Statute-book where the British Government have guaranteed the repayment of loans in a similar manner? Yes, some fifteen or sixteen.
88. Do you not think if the Commissioners, or such organized body as you might suggest, were successful in obtaining a Government guarantee, the loan required to be raised would be very much less burdensome, with the interest to be paid upon it, than if they had to borrow upon their own credit? Yes, much less.
89. To the extent of that relief, would it not be a great assistance to the inhabitants of the district? Yes; I think it would be a very great pecuniary assistance to the inhabitants of the district. Of course the farmers would do a great deal of the work themselves, for which they would receive payment, their land would be greatly improved, and the small annual charge would be cheerfully paid.
90. Suppose the Commissioners required to raise, for the purposes of drainage, £30,000, what, in your opinion, would be the amount of interest they would have to pay, provided they had no Government guarantee to offer? That would be more a question for a bank director; but I should imagine eight per cent.
91. And, at the present time, Government can borrow money for a little more than five per cent.? Yes; but I imagine the Commissioners would have to pay a much higher per centage if the Government did not aid them.
92. You think, as I understand, that the difference between the interest an incorporated body would have to pay, with and without a Government guarantee, would be about three per cent.? Yes.
93. Do you think it possible, if Government debentures were issued, that parties in the neighbourhood of these improvements would take them as an investment, considering that they would bear interest? Yes; I think landlords who would wish their estates to be drained would cheerfully take them from the Commissioners as investments; and if issued for small sums, say, £10, would obtain a large circulation.
94. By the Chairman: In answering a question of Mr. Weekes' you made some statement of this kind,—that the inhabitants of a town should have the same rates as those of a district,—but I presume you mean not the inhabitants but the landed proprietary? Yes; the landed proprietors, or occupiers—those interested. 95.

- J. Chambers, Esq.
17 Nov., 1857.
95. In answer to a question of Mr. Arnold's, where he raised a doubt as to whether it would be right of the Government to raise money for this purpose from the public revenue, you said £5,000 or £6,000 would be a small matter, and would not be very objectionable, and might stop there—I would ask whether that might not create great dissatisfaction, and give rise to a suspicion of favouritism, as some might get a greater share of the £5,000, and the others be dissatisfied? I think not; I think the Commissioners would begin their operations with some small work which they would be satisfied would have a beneficial result, and which might be very inexpensive. There are many localities where, by a very simple course of drainage, the lands might be saved from inundation; and I have no doubt the early operations of the Commissioners would be confined to those localities.
96. I presume, although you recommend there being one authority for the whole district, you contemplate that the money intended to be raised for any specific work should be raised from the proprietors of land in that district? Yes.
97. By Mr. Scott: In reply to a question from Mr. Weekes, you stated that one of the objects of your Committee was the drainage of swamps, to bring them into cultivation? Yes, the swamp lands.
98. You surely do not mean to suggest that all swamp lands should be subject to that operation, provided those lands were wide apart and did not interfere with any neighbouring lands? If the proprietors desired it, and were prepared to pledge their lands for the assessment.
99. Take, for example, Ash Island, which belongs to myself—would you suggest any plan by which I should be compelled to drain that land? No, certainly not, it could only be on your own application.
100. You merely refer to such places as Miller's Forest, where, if one person refuses to have his lands drained, it may injure his neighbour's property? Yes, Miller's Forest is all in cultivation; but I imagine that it would also extend to such a place as Wentworth's Swamp, near Hexham, where there are a number of grantees and occupants, but no cultivation, from the undrained condition of the land.
101. But supposing Wentworth's Swamp belonged to any one proprietor, the public would have no right to say to him, "you shall have your lands drained"? Certainly not—unless perhaps he had leased it for a long term; but it should be a matter for the Commissioners to adjust the rights of the occupiers, and those of the proprietors, for, under the Church and School leases, the occupiers are largely interested, although the land belongs to one proprietor, and they should be entitled to relief.
102. I believe you stated before that the two schemes now proposed, that of the minor drainage, and of the other, could be dove-tailed? I think they do of necessity dove-tail. I think if they could both be carried on under one authority it would be best; but yet they are distinct: the one meditates the drainage of localities and reimbursement to the Government of all grants in aid, the other implies a great public work at the public cost; they dove-tail only, inasmuch as the completion of the former must tend to render the latter more practicable,—but one commission could very properly attend to both.
103. You think the expenses of the minor drainage the proprietors could pay? Yes.
104. But you think the Government ought to bear the expense of the heavier one? I do not think the people would be so immediately interested in that, and the expense would be so very great.
105. By Mr. Arnold: You propose that Commissioners should be appointed, who should have the power of determining with regard to any proposed drainage, in the first place, whether the work were a desirable one to undertake? Yes.
106. They should have the power to determine the direction of the drain? Yes. I submit, first of all, that the parties who apply for any system of drainage, shall lay the fullest information before the Commissioners, setting out the plans and the proposed cost, then that the Commissioners shall call for objections; that there shall be a public meeting, and the matters be argued, and that then the plans shall be submitted again for the approval of the Commissioners' officer, and then, before it be finally confirmed, it shall go before the Government.
107. They should have the direction of floodgates, culverts, bridges, and everything of that sort connected with the drains, and also the power of determining the contributions to be made by the different individuals affected by the drains? Yes.
108. This, I suppose, it will be admitted would be a very arbitrary power? Yes, but it would be sanctioned of course by the large majority of the parties interested, before it was called into action.
109. Would you propose that there should be any appeal from the decision of the Commissioners? I think, seeing that the Commissioners could only move under authority of a majority, and would be compelled, after approving of any scheme, to get the sanction of the Government, the power would not be so arbitrary as it seems; but I think there might be an appeal to the Government.
110. Do you think an appeal to a local jury would be desirable, such jury to be summonable by the Commissioners themselves? That is certainly a new feature.
111. Supposing any parties were dissatisfied with the decision of the Commissioners, they should have the right to appeal to a local jury, to be summoned by the Commissioners? I think there would be no objection to that. I think the Commissioners should be placed in such a position as that none of their acts should be looked upon as arbitrary; the people should have every opportunity of bringing all the pros and cons before them, and they should not act until every precaution had been taken, that no injustice should be done, and then only under the wishes of those interested.
112. You arrive at the conclusion, that it would be better to call upon the landholder to contribute according to the benefit expected, rather than to that derived? Yes.
113. You propose that the Government in advancing money should take the lands affected by the drainage as security for the advance? Yes.
- 114.

114. That would place the Government in the position of a mortgagee? Somewhat; but I J. Chambers, Esq.
 115. That is supposing Government could borrow money upon interminable debentures? They would not be interminable debentures; the rent charge would be levied with the view of meeting the debentures by the time required: for instance, the rent charge of seven per cent. would, at compound interest, pay off the debt in about ten years. I think without such interest eleven or twelve per cent. might be necessary, but much would depend on the costs of the establishment, &c.
 116. By the way of terminable annuities? Yes.
 117. I suppose you will admit that there is an objection to Government becoming the mortgagee of private lands? Yes, but the Government would no more be mortgagees than under the former quit-rent system. The proprietor's title to the land would be in no manner interfered with.
 118. The ground, however, upon which you would justify the Government in advancing money for the purposes of drainage is, that it would improve the land? Yes.
 119. Would you think the Government were justified in obtaining a loan for the improvement of land in any other way than by drainage,—for instance, by irrigation or clearing? I fancy they might, if they thought they would be secure. It is done constantly in opening up roads, by which the adjoining lands are improved, and in a variety of other ways. I see no difference in principle in cutting a road over a mountain, to get to cultivation land, or draining off water to get to it.

Present:—

Mr. ROBERTSON,
Mr. HAY,

Mr. WEEKES,
Mr. JONES.

JOHN ROBERTSON, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Edward Charles Close, Esq., called in and examined.

1. By the Chairman: You have, I believe, been many years in the Colony? Forty years. E. C. Close, Esq.
 2. A great portion of that time you have resided at Morpeth? Thirty-six years.
 3. During that period you have possessed a large quantity of land in that neighbourhood? I have had it granted to me in portions, at different times, amounting altogether to 2,640 acres. 25 Nov., 1857.
 4. A considerable portion of that land is subject to flood? About five hundred acres.
 5. Hence it has been, to some extent, a kind of necessity with you, for years past, to consider the matter of drainage? I have often had the subject forced on my attention.
 6. Has much injury accrued to your property from want of drainage? A great deal.
 7. You heard the evidence of Mr. Chambers, at our last meeting, and you also heard that gentleman read a paper on the subject of draining the swampy lands along the banks of the Hunter,—do you agree, generally, with Mr. Chambers' views? I think he is very sanguine on the matter. He was the originator, so far as I am aware, of the movement which has taken place on the subject.
 8. Having upon your mind Mr. Chambers' evidence, could you state to the Committee wherein you disagree with that evidence? Certainly. I am not so sanguine as he is, by any means. I was led into his views on the first broaching of the question; but after the floods came I abandoned all idea of the thing, because I thought the damage done by these floods, whenever they came, would completely derange any system of drainage that we can adopt.
 9. Your views are much changed as to the advantages to be derived from the adoption of any plan of draining these swamps? Quite. I thought at first it was much easier than it is likely to be.
 10. Do you think your present view of the matter has become widely spread among proprietors of land? I do not know. There is another thing which has operated in my mind against the thing, namely, the very low situations of these swamps; the generality of them are below low-water level, so that it would take a very expensive process to empty them. It would all have to be done by pumping, and that, when these places are fed from the adjoining hills, and so forth, would almost insure its being carried away every time there was a flood, because the pressure of water would be so great on the outlets that it would carry everything before it, I think.
 11. Then you are of opinion that it is scarcely desirable to take any action in the matter? I think it could not be done without a very expensive process, and the result would be very questionable.
 12. Your son, Mr. Edward Close, junior, has paid some attention to this subject? Yes; he is more sanguine—more of Mr. Chambers' way of thinking—than I am.
 13. He has had considerable experience of these swamps? Yes; he has been in the district all his life.
 14. I presume he has thought much on the question? He has thought a great deal upon it.
 15. I understand you have a paper, drawn up by your son, which would make the Committee acquainted with his views? I have. (The Witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix.)
 16. You disagree with your son on the matter? I do not go the whole length with him. He speaks of three kinds of drainage—one of which is by floodgates. I cannot see how floodgates would answer at all; because, if it were worked in that way, an immense amount of

- E. C. Close, Esq.
25 Nov., 1857.
- of drift would be sent out into the river by these outlets that would choke the navigation of the river. I think if these lands are to be drained at all it must be by pumping, and then nothing but pure water would be thrown into the river.
17. It appears to me that your difference with your son and Mr. Chambers is not a matter of degree; you believe that it cannot be done without pumping, and that the pumping would fail in times of flood, and hence that it would be wrong to make any effort in the matter—they they think otherwise? They think otherwise.
18. By Mr. Weekes: When you say the last flood satisfied you that a system of drainage was not practicable, did you state that with reference to your own particular property, or generally with regard to all flooded lands? Generally, I should say. Supposing all the settlers from Morpeth to Ash Island have these drains cut, and the whole machinery is in motion, one of these floods comes and washes all the drains away and everything before it. The land is not merely flooded with its own water, which it could carry off gradually, but when these superincumbent waters come they carry everything before them; so that all the work would have to be done afresh.
19. Do you think any system could be devised by which the floods could be in a measure controlled? That I think is entirely out of our power. Straightening the rivers, or opening an immense space to let the flood water run into the sea, are out of the question, I think.
20. Then you think, from the overpowering character of the floods to which the Hunter River District is liable, that no system of drainage would be effective? I think not. In some places—South Park for instance—it could be done well enough; because, if a flood-gate were carried away it would only fill up a small portion of the creek, but would not affect the navigation of the river; but where all the outlets are to be into the river it would be a very serious business. Where all these places burst they would form sand banks.
21. Have you tried any system of drainage for your own submerged land? I have had the levels tried by Mr. Maitland, and I think he found that two feet nine inches above high water mark is the present level of Mr. Eales' and my swamp, and that it would take about three-quarters of a mile of drainage to get to the river. But, if I got to the river and created one of these sand banks, I might be liable to prosecution.
22. By Mr. Hay: Where is that swamp? It is below Morpeth. It would have to have a ditch of considerable depth in the first instance, and that would throw it completely below the level of the water.
23. Of what extent is your swamp? About five hundred acres, I think.
24. And Mr. Eales'? Two or three hundred acres. He lets out the water from his by what they call Duck Creek, and I understood he was going to attempt a system of drainage by making it with an immense surface, so that the same quantity of water might pass over a greater space without requiring depth. He talked about forty feet of width; but the expense of such a thing as that would be very great.
25. Would Duck Creek be equally available for your portion of the swamp? Yes.
26. Where does it join the Hunter? Between Berry Park and Mr. Eales' new house.
27. How far is that from the swamp? About a quarter of a mile.
28. But the floodgates would not clear the water from the swamp? He has made some experiment and failed, I believe.
29. If it is below low water-mark, floodgates would be unavailable? It would require machinery for pumping; pumping is the only way the river could be relieved of the flow of sand that would inevitably follow any other process.
30. Do you think there would be a very large quantity of sand brought down from these swamps, if drained by means of floodgates? When the ground is newly cut it makes a great difference in the quantity of sand. When once the ground is disturbed it would be very apt to break away and get to the bottom of the drain; and it would require an immense amount of capital to keep it in repair.
31. There would be no great current in these drains? Only in the gushes of water in the first instance, produced by accumulation above.
32. There would be no great current of water through a long drain, being at such a low level? There would be but a narrow surface for the outlet, and the swamp would be supplied with water by a variety of gullies, so that the outlet would not be at all in proportion to the supply from the hills. I am very much afraid it would break away everything before it.
33. By Mr. Jones: What is the character of the land in the swamp? I have no very great opinion of my own swamp, though many persons have endeavored to induce me to drain it, and wondered why I did not do it; and so on. I think it has a quantity of alum in it. I judge from having at one time let it on clearing leases to several men, who took it up readily; but nearly all the crops they ever attempted at the edge of the swamp, failed. Therefore, I think, if cultivated it would require an immense amount of manuring and scientific treatment to bring it into use.
34. By Mr. Hay: It is a very stiff clay? No, alluvial soil, containing a considerable quantity of burnt reeds, and such stuff.
35. Do you think, if reclaimed, it would be very valuable as grass land? Yes; I think it would do for grass land.
36. Lucerne, perhaps? I think it is too wet for lucerne.
37. By Mr. Jones: In your own particular case you doubt whether there is any advantage equal to the cost to be derived from any system of drainage? I do.
38. By Mr. Hay: Would it be capable of irrigation—of being flooded as a meadow? It could be done by no other process than by the water we should try to drain off.
39. Is there a continual supply of water running into the swamp? It remains on it a great length of time; it is very level and keeps about a foot of water a very long time.
40. Is the supply continuous throughout the summer? Whenever there is rain there is some. In dry seasons it remains for months without any water at all.

41. Without any accession of water? Without any accession of water or any water at all. E. C. Close, Esq.
42. By Mr. Jones: Do you think any injury would be likely to arise if persons were empowered to arrange between themselves for cutting drains, or if, when a certain portion of the residents were agreed, they could take compulsory measures for carrying out drainage? 25 Nov., 1857.
- I do not see any objection to that. People change their views on this matter. Mr. Eales wanted a bonus of £500 at one time for allowing me to find my way to the river through his land, but since then he has changed his mind and wants me to enter upon the work, because it would be beneficial to us both. These observations are from what I have heard. I have had no communication with Mr. Eales on the subject.
43. By Mr. Hay: Have you ever carried out any drainage operations? No.
44. Therefore you have had no experience of the matter? None.
45. Do you not think a good deal of the danger, as far as the navigation is concerned, might be avoided by making the floodgate some distance from the river, communicating with back water from the river—if necessary, artificial—so that the silt would be deposited in this back water before reaching the river? I am not engineer enough to be able to answer that question. I should think it is practicable, however, provided elevated land could be found for the purpose—for the site of these floodgates—as all the land inclines downwards from the immediate banks of the river.
46. For instance, supposing the channel by Duck Creek, from the swamp you speak of to the river, to be half-a-mile in length, could not the floodgate be placed near the swamp? Whatever Mr. Eales has been doing has not been at the mouth of Duck Creek at all; it is more inland altogether.
47. What is the height of the greatest floods opposite this swamp above low water mark—to what height does the river rise above the ordinary low water mark? It is a difficult thing to say. When I first went up to Morpeth—I speak from memory—the debris of the floods were upon the swamp oaks in the swamp, from twelve to fifteen feet.
48. By the Chairman: That was higher than the last flood? Yes, considerably higher than the last flood. That must have been from the floods of 1818 or 1819, I think.
49. By Mr. Hay: How much higher do you suppose that flood had been than the last great flood? It must have been ten or twelve feet higher.
50. Did the back water from the river flow into this swamp during the floods of last winter? Until the water that comes along the swamp meets the water that comes from the river they keep rising together. This, however, cannot be called back water, as it proceeds from the natural flow of water down the Hunter.
51. How high do you suppose the water was in your swamp during the flood last winter? I do not know what depth it was; it might have been seven or eight feet, I suppose.
52. Did the waters of the swamp and the river communicate over a considerable extent of surface or by a narrow channel? The bank of the river from Hinton is pretty high all along to Berry Park; therefore it must have entered just above Hinton Ferry, gone along Mr. Christian's land, and come into the swamp and joined it there.
53. There would require to be a dike there then to prevent the waters from floods from entering into the swamp? A flood is an unmanageable sort of thing.
54. You do not believe there is any possibility of keeping the floods out of these low lands? No.

APPENDIX.

STATEMENT in writing submitted by Mr. E. C. Close, junr., to the Committee, on the subject of Drainage.

From the fact that large tracts of land in the Hunter River District, estimated to contain about 70,000 acres, are rendered useless by their frequent liability to become inundated by ordinary floods, which lands are either occupied by private individuals or still remain the property of the Government,—

A number of gentlemen, therefore, formed a body, called "The Flood and Drainage Committee," (with which I am associated), to discover some means whereby the said lands might be made available; feeling that, if a judicious system of drainage could be organized, adopted, and carried out, a great benefit would result to the Colony at large, by rendering so vast an area of land, now unfit for cultivation, capable of producing grain approximate in quantity to the increasing wants of the community, and obviating, in a measure, the necessity for foreign cereal importations.

The Committee having considered it necessary, owing to the want of unanimity so very apparent, that compulsory measures were requisite to coerce the holders of swamp-lands (now of little service) to improve them, suggested to the Legislative Assembly the propriety of not only forcing the above, but also aiding in a pecuniary way the carrying out of the object aimed at. I am of opinion that the indifference displayed on the part of the owners of swamp-lands as to the benefits to be derived from proper drainage results more from want of means, and from the knowledge that they cannot compel co-operation, than a conviction of the inutility of such an effort on their part.

I feel it necessary to point out that, in my opinion, three systems of drainage will be requisite to cope with the requirements of this district, viz.:—1.—Drainage with Flood-gates: 2.—Drainage with Machinery: 3.—Drainage with Machinery and Diking.

No. 1 Has reference to the system which I am of opinion will have to be resorted to in swamps which are above the level of low-water mark.

No. 2 Has reference to swamps which are below low-water mark, which yet, from circumstances, are not influenced by the tides.

No. 3 Has reference to such salt-water marshes as are influenced by the tides and require diking to render them available.

E. C. Close,
Esq.
25 Nov., 1857.

I believe in Lincolnshire, where much machinery is made use of for draining purposes, that all machines so used are rendered self-supporting by having a flour-mill attached to the machinery that works the pumping apparatus, which, when not working the pumps, is employed in grinding the grain grown in the fens, &c. These machines are supported by the owners of the lands improved, who are compelled by law to use none other for grinding, &c.

I would suggest, for lands inundated by ordinary floods, the propriety of causing an Act to be passed rendering compulsory the co-operation of all holders in common of swamp-lands to carry out a proper system of drainage on a call of the majority of the joint proprietors of such lands. I would further suggest, that where the Government has a joint interest in lands requiring drainage it should not be exempt from its full and just share of the expense incurred.

It has been proposed by the Committee that the Government advance money, either in shape of debentures or specific grant, for the carrying out of the required drainage, taking security on the property improved till the principal and interest involved in the undertaking be repaid by the proprietors.

I would suggest that the carrying out of the Drainage Act be entrusted to a local Commission appointed by the Government, the members of which should receive some remuneration, together with an allowance for travelling expenses, while employed in carrying out the provisions of such Act as may be passed.

I would propose that such persons as may, from time to time, require drainage to be effected should submit to the Commissioners plans of their respective requirements, framed and certified by qualified Surveyors, embracing the extent of the swamp, with levels, &c., so that the Commissioners may be in a position to judge as to the propriety of acting on or setting aside such plans.

I would also propose that all drainage be done by contract, and according to plan and specification; that the contractors be sufficiently bound in case of non-fulfilment; and that all work be done subject to the approval of such officer as may be appointed either by the Government or the local Commission to inspect the same.

I am of opinion that in the valuation of the drainage effected, or to be effected, the Commissioners, or other parties empowered, should assess the improvements on a graduated scale at so much per acre, taking into consideration the amount of water of which such lands as are drained may be relieved, and charging in proportion on the sum total expended. Thus, land relieved from three feet of water should be charged more than that relieved from one foot, on account of the extra drainage required to render it available. I would further suggest, that as there may be certain portions of swamps drained which, notwithstanding, have not been benefited, that they be not charged for in the general assessment.

I would further propose that, in the event of the required drainage being carried out, a rateable sum per acre be levied annually from all proprietors in common whose lands have been improved for the cleansing, upholding, and keeping in order of all drains, machines, and dikes, as the case may be, which have been found necessary for the improvement of such lands.

There has been a movement on foot in this district with which the Flood and Drainage Committee have taken no part, viz.,—that of trying to protect land not inundated by ordinary floods from the effects of those of greater magnitude. I have had some little experience as to the volume and force of the late floods, being constantly occupied on the water during their prevalence. I am of opinion that nothing can be done to free the district from the effects of floods. The Government may expend large sums of money, but I feel assured that no human power can effect any decided amelioration of the effects of such floods as the last which devastated the Hunter District.

E. C. CLOSE, JUNR.

TUESDAY, 1 DECEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

MR. ROBERTSON, | MR. WEEKES,
MR. PIDDINGTON.

JOHN ROBERTSON, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Edward Charles Close, Junior, Esq., called in and examined:—

E. C. Close,
Junr., Esq.
1 Dec., 1857.

1. By the Chairman: You have been a long time residing on the Lower Hunter? I have. I was born there, and have never left the district.
2. During your residence there, the question of draining some of the alluvial lands which are liable to be overflowed has frequently been brought under your notice? Yes.
3. You forwarded to the Committee, through your father, Mr. E. C. Close, senior, a paper in which you intimated your views upon this question? I did.
4. You speak there of seventy thousand acres of land which you think could be improved by drainage, and you say that those seventy thousand acres are partly the property of the public, and partly the property of individuals—what proportion of these lands belong to the Crown? I think the greater amount belongs to the public, but I am not sure.
5. You recommend that some compulsory course should be taken for the purpose of obtaining the drainage of these lands—now, when you speak of levying an assessment, and thus raising means for draining these lands compulsorily, do you mean that that assessment should apply to the whole district, or that a separate assessment should be made to apply to land in the several water basins? I think the owners of each swamp should be assessed in common for that particular swamp, when the majority require it.

6. Then you would have several associations, not one for the whole district? For the district I would have one association to carry out these matters—one set of Commissioners.
7. But a separate assessment for each swamp? Yes. And I think that in cases where the Government own portions of swamps they should pay their portion of the expense of drainage, in the same way as private proprietors.
8. You have also recommended that parties whose land is deepest under water should pay the most towards the expense of drainage? Yes; I think that is equitable.
9. You think it is equitable, inasmuch as land which is only a foot under water would, in a dry season, be of some use; whereas land that has three feet of water upon it would scarcely ever be of any use, besides being more expensive to drain? No doubt. But I think in providing the means of keeping the drains and floodgates in repair, it would be more equitable to charge only on the area of the land improved; not so much per acre per foot drained off; because the deeper the drainage the more beneficial it is to those whose lands have been drained of shallower water.
10. You think the advantages to the land should be taken into consideration, and each portion should be assessed accordingly? Precisely so.
11. You speak in your paper of three systems of drainage, one of which is by floodgates;—now your father, who has evidently given the matter much consideration, seemed, when giving his evidence, to be of opinion, that if you drained these large swamps by that means, silt and rubbish would be swept out into the river, and, by forming sandbanks, would impede the navigation—what is your opinion on that point? I have given that matter consideration before, and I think, with very little trouble, all the accumulation of silt in the river might be obviated. I look upon it, that if cesspools were dug some distance inland from the mouth of the drain, and cleaned out after every fresh, these cesspools would intercept all the silt that would otherwise run into the river; and in that way no injury would be done to the navigation.
12. Would they not require to be very extensive, and consequently expensive? I do not think so. It would not cost much to dig them in the first instance, nor to keep them clean afterwards.
13. One part of your recommendation is that assistance should be given from the public revenue towards the carrying out of these objects? I have merely thrown it out as a suggestion which might be taken into consideration by the Committee.
14. Would the Government be justified in using the public funds or the public credit for the purpose of draining swamps into possession of which the owners have come, it may be presumed, at a very low price, on account of their being swamps, when there are no public lands remaining in them? This proposition was made by the members of our Committee at Maitland, and I have advanced it merely for that reason. I leave the case in the hands of the Legislature. But there is one point to which I would call attention, to show that the matter is one of public concern. I am told that vast sums of money—to the extent of about a million annually, Mr. John Campbell tells me—are sent out of the Colony to pay for cereal produce. Now, I think that if the Government would only take some steps to extend the area of land in cultivation throughout the Colony, a great portion of these large sums expended in foreign countries for breadstuffs might still remain in the Colony; and it is for the Legislature to determine whether, by assisting this movement to some extent by means of public funds or public credit, one step towards that object would not be gained. I consider that it would be a great public benefit to render those lands available for agriculture.
15. Is it your own opinion that the Government should afford this assistance? I give no opinion with regard to it; I leave it in the hands of the Committee.
16. You recommended that the local Commissioners should be paid? Yes, I think they should.
17. In what way would you pay them? I would pay them in the same way as any private Commissioners are paid—just in the same way as they pay the Directors of Banks or Steam Companies. I would pay them for their attendance, and also pay their travelling expenses when necessary.
18. By Mr. Weekes: If I understand you correctly, you do not contemplate protecting these alluvial lands from the effects of very severe floods? No, I do not; though I am of opinion that the drainage of lands subject to ordinary floods is the only thing that can be done to ameliorate the effect of floods. These swamps, in wet weather, when floods come, hold large bodies of water; but if they were drained they would form basins which would receive the flood waters, and in that way diminish their volume.
19. The main object you have in view is to drain those portions of these alluvial lands that are subject to floods very frequently? Yes, those portions that are subject to inundation in ordinary floods or freshes.
20. When you speak of swamps, do you mean swamps that are overflowed by the rising of the tide? No, I call those marshes. There are two descriptions of swamp lands; those that are affected by the rise and fall of the tide, and those which, being above high water mark, are not so influenced.
21. Then you contemplate reclaiming what you call marsh lands, and also draining swamps that are not affected by the rise and fall of the tide, but are flooded from local circumstances? Exactly.
22. You say you would require that there should be a majority in any one locality requiring drainage before any Act that may be passed should be brought into operation there—would you make that majority consist of individual owners, or should it be a majority of acres? I have not taken that into consideration before; but, I think, the majority of acres should govern the matter, because the large owners are most interested.
23. Does it not strike you that, in that case, any very large landowner who might, for various reasons, be indisposed to take any step for the improvement of his property, would have the means of overpowering the wishes of a large number of neighbouring proprietors by the extent of his acres? There may be something in that. However, as I have not considered the matter I can hardly give a decided opinion at this moment.

E. C. Close,
Junn., Esq.
1 Dec., 1857.

- E. C. Close, Junr., Esq.
1 Dec., 1857.
24. You say you would rate all lands requiring to be drained at the same sum per acre? No, the same sum per acre per foot of water.
25. To what class of lands would that apply? To all lands. There are deeper portions in the same swamp, and those portions would require more drainage, and would have to pay more.
26. Do you not think that would involve considerable difficulty in the adjustment? Not if parties were empowered by the Government to assess these lands, and their acts were legalised.
27. You have stated, that in the operation of this proposed Act some parties might not be benefited, and therefore you consider it only just that they should be exempt from taxation? Exactly so.
28. Who is to be the judge of the benefit? I think it would be apparent. Those lands rendered fit for cultivation would soon be seen; but those that were not would be left much as they were before.
29. Do you think that if draining one particular spot does not benefit an immediately adjoining portion, it can escape injuring it? It cannot possibly injure it, I think.
30. What I mean is this;—you think it likely some lands adjoining those drained will receive no benefit, and, therefore, they should be exempt from taxation—do you not think it would be difficult to draw the line where benefit ceases and injury commences? You may draw the line by saying that any land drained of water should be, at least, nine inches above water before it should be taxed. Land requires to be that height above water before it can be cultivated.
31. Do you think that draining land upon which there is an excess of water would not be liable to injure the adjoining land, which is only sufficiently moist for ordinary cultivation, but which, when deprived of moisture by draining the neighbouring swamp, might become too dry? I do not think it would injure it.
32. In the same way as digging a well alongside another well will sometimes drain it, would not draining these swamps tend to make the hill sides drier? They might be made drier, but not to such an extent that it could be looked upon as an evil. They would be much in the same position as other lands in the same altitude would be in.
33. The Commissioners would be called upon to decide whether a man's land was benefited before he should be made to contribute? Yes.
34. Do you not think that would be rather a difficult point? I think if any land is not left at least nine inches above the level of the water, after the drainage has been effected, that land should not be charged with any share of the expense. Nine inches gives room, I am told, for the land to sweeten, so as to become productive.
35. Does irrigation come within the scope of your contemplated operations? I should think not. I think irrigation in this country must be done by raising water from a river. All these swamps are within the influence of the salt water during dry seasons; and, therefore, irrigation could be of little service.
36. Are the whole 70,000 acres of swampy lands of which you speak within the influence of the salt water? A great proportion of them are more or less so.
37. In making your calculation of the number of acres, how high up the river have you gone? Not further than West Maitland, where there are some swamps, I am informed, which are not sufficiently drained, for want of co-operation among the parties interested, although drains have been made and floodgates constructed in many of them. The drains, however, through neglect, have become choked. What is everybody's business is done by nobody; and, when a flood comes, and they begin to think of clearing the drains and floodgates, they are in such a position that nothing can be done. The case requires that some compulsory measure should be adopted whereby owners of property should be coerced to keep the drains clear and everything in order.
38. Do you think it would be possible to raise debentures for carrying out these objects, as it is proposed to authorise municipal bodies to do, on the security of the properties, or of rates to be imposed upon them? That is a matter I have never taken into consideration. Some members of our Committee at Maitland suggested the matter, and that is why I mentioned it. I wish to give no opinion with regard to it. I may say that I think these swamps can be quite as easily drained as any portions of land in the Mother Country similarly situated, and could be made proportionately as valuable as any of those lands, let the means come from where they may.
39. Since giving your answer to my question as to whether the majority to be required to cause any work of this kind to be undertaken should be a majority of acres or of individual owners, have you given that subject any consideration? In either case, I think, these swamps are of so little service now, that if people could be compelled in any way to improve them it would be for the benefit of the community. I do not own any swamp lands myself, but I have always considered that they might be made available. On the whole I think it might be better that the acreage should govern the matter.
40. Supposing that in one swamp there were ten men, each owning farms of 100 acres, all of them desirous of having it drained, and one man, owning himself 1,200 acres, unwilling to go to the expense;—now, if the majority of acres were to determine the matter, that one man might prevent the wish of the other ten from being carried out; would you not, therefore, rather think it desirable to allow these matters to be decided by simple majorities of individuals? Well, perhaps, that system might answer better. It might give too much power to one man to leave it to a majority of acres. Feeling the force of your observation, I think I should be rather in favour of allowing the matter to be decided by the number of individuals instead of the number of acres.
41. By the Chairman: Do you not think there should be some limit even upon that method, because a person owning 100 acres might easily place himself in possession of eight or nine votes by a temporary subdivision? I have not given the matter consideration. On re-consideration, I am of opinion, that either two-thirds of the acreage should regulate the matter, or

or the majority of proprietors. I would propose that both be adopted, and that the first application, either by acreage or by the majority of proprietors, as the case may be, govern the matter.

E. C. Close,
Junnr., Esq.

1 Dec., 1857.

41. With respect to the management of this drainage when undertaken, seeing that you are of opinion that each separate swamp should be rated under a separate assessment, would it not be better to get rid of the roundabout system of having Commissioners at all, and merely empower a majority of proprietors in any given swamp to incorporate themselves, and raise an assessment among themselves—in fact, to leave the drainage of each swamp in the hands of its own proprietors? I do not think that would answer. It would not give satisfaction. One would be cavilling at the doings of the others. Therefore, I think persons wholly independent of any feeling or interest in the matter are the men who would be the best employed.

42. You have spoken of floodgates getting out of order from no one having charge of them; but if the people interested in their maintenance were to be assessed with that object, they would surely have an interest then in looking after them? I look upon it as necessary that they should be compelled, after any improvement has been made, to keep the drains and dikes in repair. Without compulsion there will be no unanimity. I would not leave it to the people themselves; I would appoint an officer to see it done, and assess the individuals whose lands might be benefited.

43. After the work was done, would it not be necessary for the Commissioners to make some rules or regulations for the management of the floodgates; and for that purpose might they not be placed in the hands of the proprietary? Perhaps it might be well that some members of the proprietary should see that the drains and other portions of the works were kept in proper repair after the job was done. As I have before stated, I am averse to this system.

44. When we examined Mr. Close, senior, that gentleman gave it as his opinion that an immense proportion of the land under water would not be worth draining, and that it is poor, wretched, miserable land? I have heard that a great portion of the swamps about Hexham and Newcastle were of a clayey nature, and it was his opinion that they were not valuable lands. My father is also of opinion that part of the Morpeth swamps is not valuable; and I think the reason of that is, that coal mines being in the vicinity there is a great deal of sulphate of iron spread about. In cleaning the coals they put heaps of this stuff together, and I have seen it cast off just the same sort of crystals that are cast up in the swamps in dry seasons. It is this which makes some parts of the swamps sour. The water draining into these swamps from the hills is all mixed with these crystals, and the land is damaged by the effect of this sulphate of iron. The only means of making that land good is by burning it. I find that our tenants used to burn the land, and make it good for some time, till the flood came again. But the middle portions of our swamp are perfectly free from anything of that kind. It is merely around the margin where this stuff shed from the coal seams exists.

45. Mr. Close, senior, said that some tenants had taken clearing leases of this land from him, but, after giving it a trial, had deserted it? That is true; but they never tried any but the extreme margin of the swamp; and that is the very place where this chalybeate, if I may call it so, affects the ground. Where the swamp is fresh there has never been a plough.

46. You are of opinion that that is good land? I think the middle portions of our swamp are as good land as any in the Colony.

47. Have you taken any steps to prove that? No; but I have seen the growth of grass on it. Where the sulphate of iron exists the grass turns red, and does not grow well; but in the middle portions of the swamp, in summer time, the grass grows luxuriantly. In some parts the grass grows where there is eighteen inches of water. In some years we have got as many as seventy head of fat cattle off our portion of the swamp, besides horses, &c., off a space containing about 600 acres; but when wet weather comes, in winter, the whole of it becomes immersed in water, and the cattle pine and get poverty stricken, and if not removed would die.

48. Do you think, if this land were thoroughly drained and the water kept off it, cattle would fatten on it as they do on fattening runs? No, I do not think they would while the natural grasses remain; if other grasses were cultivated the case would be altered. At present cattle, generally, do not thrive, and though cows fatten in suitable seasons bullocks seldom do. The Government have a large piece of land similarly influenced, subject to being flooded, to the east of our swamps, towards East Maitland.

49. In any system of draining any of these swamps where the Government hold land you think it would be equitable for the Government to pay its share of the assessment? I do.

50. Would you give the Government any representation in the decision of the various matters that would have to be decided by the proprietors; or would you give the private proprietors alone the power of determining whether these swamps should be drained? The Government might be asked to co-operate; and I dare say, as the Government land would be improved, there would be no objection.

51. Do you not think that at first, in order to give the people of the neighbourhood an opportunity of experiencing the advantages of draining, and becoming well acquainted with the subject, it would be better to adopt, instead of the more extensive plan you have described as desirable, some simple system, which would give to the majority of proprietors of any swamp legal power to assess themselves for the drainage of that particular swamp, and to compel the minority of dissentients to come in and join them in carrying out the work, after having made application to the Government to bring them within the operation of an Act to be passed for this purpose;—the proprietors of each swamp so brought under the operation of the Act to form a separate association, and to determine, by their votes, the amount of assessment, the mode of procedure, and whether the work should be carried out by contract, or under the supervision of a sub-committee of their own body? I have no doubt something of that sort would be very beneficial. The chief things we want is power to compel co-operation

E. C. Close, Junr., Esq.
 1 Dec., 1857. co-operation on the part of proprietors, and the means of obtaining access to deep water, sufficient for drainage purposes, through the lands of parties who, if not compelled, would not allow drains to be taken through their ground.

52. If it were found necessary to go through any lands for the purpose of carrying drains to deep water, I presume the law should allow the proprietors of such lands to demand that valuers should be appointed, in some equitable manner, to determine the amount of compensation? That, I think, would be reasonable in the case of lands thus cut through, though not requiring drainage; but if the drain passing through any land should render available that which was not so before the drainage commenced, I do not think compensation should be given.

Walter Scott, Esquire, called in and examined:—

Walter Scott, Esq.
 1 Dec., 1857. 1. By the Chairman: You have been a long time residing in that part of the Hunter River District which is subject to floods? I have been about seventeen years in the Hunter District, that is, on the Paterson and William, which are included.

2. You have carried on extensive drainage operations on your own property? We have attempted it.

3. Has it answered well? It has failed, principally, in fact solely, from want of co-operation.

4. Did you find the lands you drained while you were able to keep the water off to be rich land? Yes, the very best.

5. You have heard Mr. Close's evidence, and perhaps it would simplify our proceedings if you were to say whether or not you generally agree with him? I think these swamp lands would be vastly improved by drainage, and would produce superior grasses. The soil in the swamps up the river is naturally extremely rich; but, I cannot say whether it is quite the same as you get nearer Newcastle; there they may be poorer.

6. Do you concur in Mr. Close's views about appointing a Commission for the purpose of superintending the management of these swamps when undergoing the operation of drainage? Yes; I think the Commission should be entirely independent of the proprietors.

7. How would you have the Commission appointed—would you have it elected by the proprietors of these swamps, or nominated by the Government? I should say the nomination by Government would be the best. The only difficulty with regard to that is that appointments by the Government are usually so expensive. But I think it would be better out of the hands of the proprietors.

8. You would make it a paid appointment? Yes.

9. I suppose the payment would come out of the assessment in some shape? Yes.

10. Have you considered in what way the assessment should be carried out. Supposing there were several swamps requiring drainage, how would you assess each, so as to make it bear its fair proportion of the expense of the Commission? I should say it should be made according to the area of land; those proprietors who possess the largest area paying the most.

11. Would you approve of an assessment on all swamp lands in the district to form a general fund; or would you desire that the funds derivable from each swamp should be kept separate and expended in that particular swamp? I think the funds should be kept separate. For instance, there is a portion from Seaham to Nelson's Plains, on the Hunter River, a distance of five or six miles probably, which might be drained the whole way from Seaham downwards by one drain. That would include a nice little district of itself, without coming into collision with any other. In several places on the Hunter and Paterson it would be the same I suspect; and these lands would be drained at much less expense than those further down the Hunter, which would be another reason for having them assessed separately.

12. Then, in fact, you would have a separate assessment, and a separate appropriation of the money raised by that assessment, for every separate water basin or swamp? Yes; and to maintain the central authority, they could all pay a proper proportion towards the expense.

13. With regard to determining whether or not a swamp should be subjected to this process of drainage, would you leave that to be decided by the number of acres, or the votes of individual proprietors? I would give the decision to the majority of individuals.

14. Do you concur with Mr. Close as to the necessity of adopting three modes of drainage—one by floodgates, a second by machinery, and a third by diking? I think machinery will be necessary for the lower lands.

15. Would not that be very expensive? It would be very expensive, and I doubt whether it would pay.

16. For the drainage of salt water marshes would you approve of diking? I think it would not pay to undertake the drainage of those marshes at present.

17. Do you approve of making the amount of assessment depend upon the acreage and the depth of water removed, both combined? I think it should depend upon the acreage, not the depth of water at all.

18. Suppose the case of a swamp in which the land of one person might have one foot of water upon it, whereas the land of another would have three feet—we know that the land covered only to the depth of one foot would not, in moderate seasons, require any drainage, while the other would scarcely ever be of use without it; would it not, therefore, be fair and equitable to put a higher assessment for the greater depth of water, seeing that the land would receive greater benefit, and that the drainage of it would cost much more? A great deal would depend upon the mode of drainage adopted. Supposing the drain to run parallel with the river for several miles, to get to the lower lands, the portions higher up would have the advantage of all that fall, and the land would be sooner and better drained; and for that reason I do not think it would be fair to charge the lower proprietor more.

19. I presume you are aware that within the last five years, which have been uncommonly moist ones, lands that had been cultivated for ten or fifteen years before are under water? Yes.

20. Those lands would not benefit so much by drainage as swamps that have been, during the whole fifteen years, too much flooded to be cultivated; and, therefore, it appears to me it would be only reasonable to insist that those who obtained the greatest advantage at the greatest expense should pay the greatest amount? Yes; if it took the greatest amount of money to drain their land of course they should pay more for it. Walter Scott,
Esq.
1 Dec., 1857.
21. To drain off three feet of water would take more than to drain off one foot, surely? Yes, perhaps it would in a limited area; but supposing the drain to be five or six miles in extent, the depth of the lower drain would give the upper proprietors a decided advantage.
22. Then you think all this should be taken into consideration in making the assessment—the Commissioners should consider really what has been the advantage to the proprietary, and assess them according to that advantage? Yes, I think that would be the most equitable mode.
23. Not relying wholly on the acreage? Perhaps not.
24. Have you thought of any mode that would be most suitable for compelling proprietors of flooded lands to co-operate? Nothing but passing a compulsory Act. I see no other mode.
25. By Mr. Weekes: Under any system I suppose the expense of these works will be very considerable? Where it is necessary to use machinery the expense would be great; but there is a great proportion of the land which it would not be so very expensive to drain. For instance, the portion I have already alluded to from Seaham down to Raymond Terrace might be drained simply by cutting a main drain the whole way, and intercepting the creeks that run into the river. The upper land would then have the advantage of six miles of fall, and even the lower land would have the advantage of the water being taken off much quicker.
26. Do you intend that drain to relieve the alluvial lands from the effects of floods? No; simply from the water falling on them and draining into them from the hills. The floods have seldom risen above the banks there, except during this last season; and I do not think anything could prevent the mischief arising from the last flood.
27. You despair of any work, however great, controlling the floods? I do—floods like the last. But these drains would be very beneficial in ameliorating the effects of floods because, instead of the water remaining for three months on the land, as it does now, it might be carried off in three weeks, or a less period of time than even that. The waters would fall into the natural outlets simply by cutting drains into them and putting on flood-gates, which I do not think would be very expensive, while it would reclaim a vast quantity of the very best land. That mode of draining is applicable to a large proportion of the land in the neighbourhood I speak of.
28. How would you propose that the money should be raised? I should say many of the proprietors would only be too glad to do it; but there are others to whom it would be an advantage if the Government could assist them. The Government might have security upon the land, which is undoubted. I have no doubt a large proportion would be only too glad to be at the expense themselves, provided an Act be passed to enable them to do it effectually.
29. Have you ever made an estimate of the expense per acre? I have not.
30. Therefore you cannot tell the amount of assessment per acre that would be required? No; but I do not think it would come to a large sum. Perhaps it might amount to £1 or £2 an acre, to begin with. That estimate will only apply to the easiest mode of draining by floodgates. I think £2 an acre would be sufficient to construct the drain in the beginning.
31. You think there should be a contribution to that extent from the proprietors? Yes.
32. Do you think there are any means of raising that sum from the proprietors, or from any other source but the Government—do you think the security offered on these lands would be sufficient to induce capitalists, for instance, to take up debentures to any extent? I have no doubt some monied people would do so. We have not a great number of monied men among us; but they would have no doubt of the security; they could feel certain of that.
33. Have you any doubt that the improvement effected on the lands, under the operation of such an Act as you suggest, would enable owners to redeem the debentures when they fall due, and in what period? I think it would; in from three to five years.
34. You think five years would enable the owners to extinguish the debt? Yes, five years would be ample in those districts I speak of; because, I think, the expense would not be so great there.
35. Do you think that in the appointment of Commissioners to superintend the draining of these swamps the same mode of election as that carried out in respect to municipal councils and road trusts might not be desirable? No, I think not.
36. Why not? There is generally such a want of unanimity that it would be best out of the hands of the local inhabitants and in the hands of those who could compel the proper course to be pursued.
37. Do you think taking the control out of their hands would disincline parties to contribute? I think not.
38. You do not think it would indispose them to form themselves into the necessary associations? I do not see that it would. That is my own opinion; others may think differently. I merely judge from the fact, that when anything is required to be done for the good of the district, it is so difficult to find unanimity and co-operation.
39. Do you agree with Mr. Close in his estimate of 70,000 acres, as the number requiring to be drained? I think that estimate includes a large proportion of land that I do not think it would pay to drain at the present time for cultivation.
40. Would it be worth while to go to the expense of drainage in the case of lands that would not become fit for cultivation when drained? They would be improved by it no doubt; but the expense would be too great for other than agricultural purposes.
41. What proportion of these 70,000 acres do you think are agricultural lands? There may be 70,000 acres that could be made fit for agricultural purposes, but I do not think it would be

- Walter Scott, Esq.
1 Dec., 1857.
- be advisable to bring into cultivation at the present time all that quantity. I should say 50,000 acres could be profitably drained.
42. By the Chairman: I presume the proprietary, whose business it would be to take the necessary steps to bring their land under the operation of the law, would be the proper persons to determine whether it would be likely to pay? Yes; it would depend altogether on their own consideration of the matter.
43. You spoke of making a drain several miles long, but I do not think we quite understand what you mean when you say that that drain, from its length, would be of more use to the farms higher up, and less and less so as you come to the lower ground; do you contemplate that that drain should run parallel with the river? I do, and also to shut up all the previous openings that have been made, because it is there the injury arises. There are so many of them, and they are so badly attended to, that when a fresh takes place in the river the water rushes in through these openings and inundates the back lands.
44. You think these openings ought not to be permitted? I think proper ones under efficient control should be substituted for them.
45. You would not have floodgates discharging into the river at every quarter or half mile? No; I would continue the drain parallel with the river for the distance I have said; and, as there are all along the bank of the river natural out-falls, at the distance of miles apart, I would make use of one of these as the mouth of the drain.
46. What is your opinion as to the silt from these drains running into the river—do you think it would be likely to impede the navigation? I think not much. The fall is not sufficient generally to carry away much silt.
47. And if you take a natural outlet as the mouth of each drain it would not be likely to carry down much silt, although you may send more water through it? No.
48. After the Commissioners had arranged the assessment in each swamp, would you still leave to them the charge of carrying on the works? Yes.
49. While the works are going on, would you empower them to expend the money under the supervision of overseers appointed by themselves, or in what other way? I believe in cases of this kind at home they estimate the price and offer the contract to the proprietors through whose lands they go.
50. Would you have it done by contract? All by contract.
51. Would one Commissioner be sufficient, do you think, to undertake all these matters? I should say one Commissioner ought to be able to go over the whole Hunter River District we have been speaking of.
52. In that case he would require to be a gentleman possessing engineering skill, and it would be necessary to pay him a very high salary—I am afraid no gentleman receiving the pay of a Bank Director would undertake it? No doubt it would require a person of scientific attainments to undertake these drains.
53. Then I fancy you would abandon your former view of the matter, and, instead of paying him in the same way as Bank Directors are paid, pay him a salary as a public officer? I should say he would require to be paid a salary; the pay of a Bank Director would not be sufficient.
54. Supposing we were to have some gentleman possessing engineering skill, he would be most likely a new arrival in the Colony; and have you not observed that these gentlemen have strange views, when they first come here, of extravagant expenditure. Whenever we have a new arrival as a road surveyor, for instance, has he not generally been almost useless for the first few years, in fact, injurious? Yes, I quite agree with you there; but I think men might be found amongst those who have had experience in the Colony.
55. You would prefer having the matter placed in the hands of some gentleman well acquainted with the country? Yes, I would most certainly; such a man as Mr. White, for instance.
56. By Mr. Weekes: Is it the general wish of the owners of properties affected by floods to have a measure of the kind we have been speaking of passed? I think it is. The petition we got up had the signatures of nearly the whole of the landed proprietors; at least such was the case in the district in which I undertook to collect signatures. They appear to be very unanimous that something should be done to have the lands drained. I think we might consider the propriety of adopting the Drainage Acts of England or Ireland, if it should be found that they could be applied to these lands.
57. By the Chairman: What would you think of a plan of this kind: If a law were passed which would empower the proprietary of any piece of swamp land to assess themselves by a majority, and to raise sufficient money for the purpose of draining the swamp, and then to appoint some person to carry out the work, or to advertise for and accept contracts, each association employing its own surveyor? There is no doubt that would and ought to answer; but the great difficulty is the want of unanimity and co-operation among the proprietors.
58. Would not that be a simpler plan than appointing Commissioners to superintend the drainage of all the swamps in the district? Perhaps that might be the best mode after all to begin with; but it would be necessary that the Act should give authority to parties wishing to drain their land in this way to take possession of any land through which it might be necessary the drains should pass, upon paying reasonable compensation to the owner. If this were done, it might answer all the purposes required.

WEDNESDAY, 9 DECEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

MR. HAY,
MR. ROBERTSON,MR. SCOTT,
MR. WEEKES.

JOHN ROBERTSON, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Jones Agnew Smith, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You reside on the Lower Hunter, I believe? On the Paterson?
2. You have a considerable amount of agricultural land there, I believe? Yes.
3. And have been engaged for several years in draining your land to some extent? Yes; about thirteen years ago I commenced the drainage.
4. Have you considered the question as to whether the Legislature should take any steps to facilitate the co-operation of adjoining proprietors in the work of draining their land to their mutual advantage? Yes; I have felt very strongly upon that subject, as I am peculiarly situated. I have three neighbours, not one of whom seems inclined to bear a proportion of the expense of draining—two of whom, from the nature of their tenures, are not likely to incur much expense. The flat upon which a portion of my property is situated has about 1,500 acres liable to inundation from a flood such as the last; of this land 500 acres belong to myself, 500 to a neighbour, and 500 is in the hands of the holder of a lease from the Church and School Lands.
5. You say you have given the question some consideration as to whether or not the Legislature should interfere? I have no doubt there may be many other instances in the Colony similar to mine, and I think it desirable that parties benefited should be obliged to pay a portion of the expense—that an assessment should be levied.
6. Would you recommend a general system in a district—that a Commissioner should be appointed, having power to levy this assessment, or would you recommend merely that each separate proprietary of a given water basin or swamp should be empowered to form themselves into an association to drain that particular swamp? I should recommend that a Government engineer and a Board should be appointed, and that where the proprietary cannot agree the majority should decide. Of course, if the proprietors of land in a locality like mine chose to manage among themselves, there is no necessity to go for assistance to the Government, but, where that cannot be done, they should have power to make it compulsory upon the minority to have a survey by a proper engineer, to ascertain the most economical and effectual mode of draining. And, to meet the expense, an assessment should be put upon the properties benefited by it.
7. The question upon which I am desirous of having your opinion is this: in reference to the particular swamp you have just spoken of, would you have the proprietary of that swamp associated for the purpose of draining that particular swamp, or would you have one Commission to manage the whole district? No, I would confine it to the particular locality.
8. Then, would it not be desirable for these proprietors, by some process of law, to be enabled to convene a meeting, elect their Chairman or President, and then to determine, by a majority of votes, whether or not they would attempt to drain their swamp, and, if so, whether they would advertise for contracts, or appoint a sub-committee of their body to employ labor for the purpose—in fact, to take the whole matter into their hands? I should prefer that if it could be done.
9. They would require power to enable them to make drains through the lands of persons who might not be benefited by those drains: For instance, you are aware that the banks of the Hunter are, in many places, much higher than the back lands, hence the proprietors of the former would be in no way benefited by a drain,—would you then give power to these associations to make drains through lands that are not benefited, and to give the parties injuriously affected some compensation? I think there might be some who would receive injury from this drainage. I am not a very old agriculturist, and, therefore, my opinion may not be of much value, but I think lands on the border of the river, having swamps at their back, are very productive, and if the swamps were drained these might not be so in a very dry season.
10. So that instead of these lands being benefited they might be injured, and, therefore, on a general principle, you would give the owners of these high lands some compensation? Yes.
11. You have spoken of Commissioners and Surveyors—would you not be alarmed at the expense of such an establishment? No; I think the immense quantity of land up the valley of the Hunter that would be benefited would be ample to meet the expense.
12. Would you recommend that Commissioners should be appointed and paid? I do not know how the Act at home is framed, but I understand it has worked very well.
13. Does it not at once strike you that there would be a great deal of expense in employing these people, and that there might not be sufficient occupation for them—do you not think it would be better if we were to legislate in the matter that we should merely empower these associations to raise the money for these purposes, leaving the proprietors of a given swamp to employ whatever surveyor they pleased? That, I think, would meet my views, if power could be given to form a Local Board in a particular place.
14. In any other way there would be difficulty, would there not, in raising money, and, I presume, you would scarcely recommend that public funds should be appropriated to this purpose? No, except for the immediate wants of drainage; large sums would begin to flow in at once.
15. By Mr. Weekes: Have you formed any idea of the extent of country which would come under the provisions of an Act of this kind—of the number of acres in that part of the country? I think it was calculated at the meeting that was held that it was nearly 100,000 acres;

J. A. Smith,
Esq.

9 Dec., 1857.

J. A. Smith,
Esq.

9 Dec., 1857.

acres; that was the calculation of Mr. Chambers, the Secretary, but the last flood spread over an immense tract of country not anticipated then.

16. Then you contemplate a work of this kind to prevent or to restrict the effects of flood? Yes, to restrict the effects of flood and to protect the lands from injury.

17. How would you suggest that that should be done—by a series of embankments? No; I think by excavating drains and making floodgates. The river banks in my neighbourhood are twelve or fifteen feet higher than the bed of the river, and so, unless it were a very large flood, similar to the last, it would not overflow the banks.

18. Then it is rather to relieve the land from the water that comes down from the back than to prevent the water going on from the river? These swamps are generally not supplied from the river, but from the creeks that come down from the ranges. These creeks discharge, not into the river, but into the swamps, which remain in a stagnant state until the land is wanted for cultivation—if not removed by drainage. When these swamps are drained, and the drains are open, the consequences of a flood are more disastrous than they were when these swamps were supplied simply by creeks, because the whole body of the river rushes up these drains, and I would therefore recommend that these drains should answer a double purpose,—that they should allow the water to flow into the river, and when the river rises too high, the floodgates or sluices should be closed, to prevent the water flowing up; in this way land such as Mr. Lang's, Mr. Walter Scott's, Mr. Smith's, and Mrs. John Galt Smith's might be drained.

19. Would what you contemplate be an expensive work? I do not think it would; it would, of course, depend very much upon the particular place; the drains through the swamps are done at a very little expense, but it is extremely expensive to cut through the bank of the river.

20. Part of your object is to cut through the bank of the river? Yes; that might be done by the tenantry.

21. How do you suggest that the funds should be raised? By the proprietary, and if the proprietary are not in a position to do it, it should be done by the Government, and an assessment should be put upon the land until the amount be repaid.

22. Do you think the class of small proprietors who would be materially affected are in a position at once to advance the sums that would be necessary to carry out this work? No, I do not think they are at present.

23. Then that would involve some other mode of raising the money? Yes.

24. What would you propose to do where the proprietors in a district were unable to raise the necessary funds? I propose that the Government should advance the money.

25. You have said that the drainage might possibly cause injury to some parties? Yes, it may to those who are on the high grounds.

26. Would you propose to give parties so injured compensation? Yes, if it could be proved that they had really received an injury.

27. Do you think it at all likely that in dry seasons this system of drainage would prove an evil? I do; I think it would injure strips of land along the banks of the river, but they would be very small portions comparatively. Now, on my own farm, there may be fifty acres of land perfectly secure from floods; these might be injured, but there are nearly seven hundred acres of reclaimed swamp behind that would be benefited.

28. How would you suggest that the operations of this Act should be commenced. Supposing a certain section of land were swamp, and in the hands of various proprietors, how would you have it determined whether or not it should be drained—by the number of votes or by the number of acres? By the number of acres.

29. Supposing there were a tract of country to be drained, and that there were ten proprietors of one hundred acres each, all desirous of bringing this Act into operation, and there was one proprietor of two thousand acres opposed to it, would you let it be in the power of the one proprietor to prevent the Act being carried into effect, or would you give the power to the majority of proprietors? That is a very extreme case.

30. I want to know whether you would give the power to the number of acres or to the number of proprietors. One large proprietor might be unwilling to have his land drained, and might thus shut out the smaller proprietors from the benefit of this Act by the mere weight of his acres—do you think that desirable? No. I think it would be an act of injustice to give one proprietor the power to compel ten others to do a thing they do not require.

31. You reverse the case I put to you—I say when ten proprietors are desirous it should be done, and one large proprietor does not want his land disturbed, do you think the one proprietor should have the power to frustrate the purpose of the Act? No; I think the ten proprietors should have the power to carry the Act into effect.

32. Then, in fact, your opinion is simply this,—that you would give power to the majority of the proprietors and not to the majority of acres? Not to the amount of acres. I do not know whether some equitable mode might not be devised.

33. Do you think it can be decided in any other way than either by the number of proprietors or by the number of acres? I have not given the matter consideration.

34. By Mr. Hay: I did not clearly understand from your answers to Mr. Weekes' question, the extent to which you proposed it should be attempted to prevent the injury caused by the floods—are we to understand, from what you say of these particular localities, that in their natural state they would not be subject to injury from ordinary floods, but by the process of draining they become subject to that? I think, in many cases, ordinary floods would not injure the lands.

35. In so far, then, in ordinary floods, the protection from injury would become necessary from the attempt to drain? Yes.

36. So far as these floods are concerned, we should attempt to remedy that which our attempt to drain would cause? Yes, I think, from my experience in the generality of floods, the natural natural embankment, the natural protection of the banks of the river, is sufficient to protect the greater portion; but that no possible human labor, no amount of wealth that could have been commanded, would have prevented the results of the last flood.

J. A. Smith,
Esq.

9 Dec., 1857.

37. You consider that any attempt to prevent the recurrence of such a calamity would be chimerical? Yes. I believe there has not been such a flood since 1832.

38. In order to drain these lands, and to prevent ordinary floods, which the inlet of your drains would occasion, would it not be necessary to have rather expensive works? Yes.

39. Am I to understand that the lands you have particularly in view require drainage from water that flows upon them from the surrounding ranges, and not from the river? Yes.

40. In answer to a question from the Chairman, you appeared to adopt the plan he stated of accomplishing the drainage of these lands through the powers given to the proprietary of lands without the intervention, as I understood him and you, of any Government authority, of any commissioner or scientific person employed by Government? Yes; in fact these are points to which I have never given much consideration, but, as it appears that it would involve a very large expenditure, I think it would be desirable if an Act could be passed to enable proprietors to form themselves into Local Boards. I should be quite satisfied with such an arrangement, and, perhaps, it would be more effectual than any other mode.

41. I understood from your first answer that you contemplated the appointment of a Commissioner by Government to whom all questions connected with these matters should be referred? Yes.

42. With regard to that point, supposing the proprietary were endowed with the powers necessary to carry out the drainage of these lands, do you not think it might become necessary to have a qualified referee to decide upon different points connected with it, a man of engineering skill, or would you depend upon the proprietor? I should prefer that there should be some one to whom reference could be made.

43. You have said that, in some cases, these operations would be attended not only with no benefit, but with positive injury to some of the proprietors? I think they possibly might.

44. I think you also said that the different proprietors would be benefited in very different degrees? Yes.

45. Is it not possible that there might be some injury to the navigation of the river from this drainage? I think not.

46. You think the benefit to the proprietors would be in different degrees, and that some might be injured? Yes, it is possible although hardly likely, for most of the farms that come to the river run back to the swamps.

47. Supposing that in a similar case to that stated by Mr. Weekes, one or two proprietors held the larger proportion of land, and a number of proprietors held the smaller proportion, and by giving their votes the majority were to decide upon an expensive plan of drainage, the greater portion of the expense of which would necessarily have to be paid by the larger proprietors, do you not think it would be attended with great injustice if there were not some means of ascertaining, apart from the judgment of this small proprietary, that the whole plan was founded upon proper scientific principles? I think that question might be put to the Commissioner, and that he should have power to decide what portion should be borne by each.

48. To decide all these points it would be necessary to have a qualified engineer upon whom the Government might depend for giving a reliable opinion as to the sufficiency of the plan for the purposes intended, and likewise as to the injury or benefit it would cause to different proprietors? Yes, I think so, for several reasons. In many properties similar to my own there are village reserves, and there should be a representative of Government as well as of other proprietors. The public interest should not be lost sight of, and these lands would, many of them, be much benefited by drainage; some of it might sell for twenty pounds per acre, whereas before draining it would not be worth one shilling. I think it desirable that the referee should be not only a good engineer but a good agriculturist.

49. Do you think the advantages likely to be obtained from the drainage of lands on the Hunter would be sufficient to enable the proprietors to pay any expense that might attend the employment of such a person? If it were not worth their while they would not appoint him. I think the advantage of having such a person to appeal to would of itself be very considerable, besides settling these questions.

50. By Mr. Scott: You recommended, I think, that the public funds should be employed to a certain extent? Yes, to be refunded by assessment upon the lands benefited.

51. Do you recommend merely local drainage, or any general measure for remedying the effect of very heavy floods? I think this local drainage would, to a certain extent, prevent such disasters as those from which we have lately suffered, and if every facility were given for the discharge of the water into the river it would prevent such disastrous floods.

52. What I presume you mean, is this, that if there were eight or ten days heavy rain it would take nearly eight days before the water in the river at Muswellbrook would reach Morpeth? I do not think it would take so long as that, for the water from my swamp will discharge itself in eight hours.

53. Still I must call your attention to the fact you have stated, that no human labor could prevent damage from such a flood as that with which we have lately been visited? No human labor would entirely prevent it, still, the amount of damage might be very considerably lessened.

54. What effect would the system you propose have in the event of such a flood? I do not think we should have had the water from the Paterson overflowing the lands between that and the Hunter.

55. All our swamps were full of water? Yes.

56. Had they not been full of water would the same result have followed? The Hunter would have risen, no doubt, and so would the Paterson, but still the damage would have been less disastrous in all probability.

- J. A. Smith, Esq.
9 Dec., 1857.
57. If one drain were insufficient would you not enlarge that, or make a second? Yes.
58. Then if the river were not sufficient to carry off these heavy floods, would not a second channel have the effect of lessening the quantity of water which would otherwise overflow the land? Yes, it would facilitate the discharge of water.
59. Supposing there were no great difference in the cost to the Government or the people, would you not prefer some general system of drainage to this partial and local system of drainage which you have recommended? Yes, but the Chairman suggested that the expense would be enormous; if it could be done I should prefer it.
60. What do you think would be the effect upon adjacent lands if a large and permanent drain were made to lead the water from Morpeth and Maitland direct to the sea? I think we should still be obliged to have recourse to local drainage for the benefit of our lands.
61. Do you not think Maitland would have suffered in the same way? I do not know. I never saw Maitland under a flood.
62. You do not know the fall of water per mile from Maitland to the sea? I do not.
63. By the Chairman: Mr. Hay asked you whether it would not be desirable to have a properly qualified engineer or scientific person engaged upon this work—would you desire that the Government should have the appointment of that person, or would you entrust the proprietary, who would be called upon to raise the money to pay him, with the choice of the party? I would prefer trusting to the Government, because the proprietors, generally, are not capable of forming an opinion as to his qualifications.
64. By Mr. Weekes: You stated that you thought the benefit would be very unequal—that some proprietors would be benefited more than others? Yes.
65. Then you would not, I suppose, contemplate levying an equal amount of assessment upon all proprietors, without reference to the degree of benefit they would receive? No; I have said that point should be left to the decision of the referee or Commissioner; he should decide the amount to be borne by each proprietor.
66. Do you not think it would be a very difficult process to decide upon the amount of benefit received? I do not think so.
67. What would be a fair test—the next year's crop? I think an average of five years might be taken.
68. But the assessment would have to be decided at once—how would you arrive at the benefit received by any particular individual, for the purpose of immediate assessment? I think the produce of the land could be taken for a certain number of years, and the injury that might be received in dry spots could be deducted, and upon this the assessment could be based.

Andrew Lang, Esq., called in and examined:—

- A. Lang, Esq.
9 Dec., 1857.
1. By the Chairman: You have considerable agricultural property near Maitland? Yes; but I have not attended many of the meetings held at Maitland. I am a disinterested witness in the matter of drainage; no one can do me any harm, and no one can do me any good; I have to make all my drains myself. In my opinion, nothing can prevent the effects of such a flood as we had last time; it is perfectly ridiculous to attempt it. Maitland might be protected by a cut commencing at the swamp above Bolwarra House, to the north-east corner of the Bolwarra property, where it would re-enter the river; but there is a fall of about twenty from Morpeth to Bolwarra, and it might sweep away the houses opposite Morpeth altogether.
2. Then you are not recommending this course? No; it would save Maitland, but might injure Morpeth.
3. Our present inquiry has reference not to Maitland, but to agricultural lands—will you be kind enough to give us your opinion as to whether it would be the better course to have a staff of Government officials under an engineer, or whether you would recommend, in the event of any legislation in this matter, that the proprietary of any swamp should have the right to form themselves into an association, and assess such property as might be benefited by drainage? I think in the first place they should form themselves into a kind of association, and have power to borrow the money they might require.
4. They should borrow money on the security of their own debentures? Yes.
5. On the security of the land that would be benefited? Yes.
6. How would you regulate the amount of the assessment, as some lands might be deeper under water than others; some might be three feet, and others eight or nine? In some places the land is twelve or fifteen feet under water.
7. Would you put a higher assessment upon that than upon other land nearer the surface of the water? I do not know; that would be very difficult to determine. It would be necessary that there should be a meeting of the proprietors of the different swamps, and they should determine among themselves. Some parties might object to the draining altogether, as it would injure their lands; and I may mention, in reference to that point, that one of my own tenants who rents the lands where the water runs out complained to me that it injured him, and I was obliged to lower his rent in consequence. No doubt the drainage would be a benefit upon the whole, but it would be attended with injury to some.
8. Then do I understand you to say that you would not have any general system of drainage, or any officer of Government empowered to levy an assessment, but a law that would empower proprietors of land in a flooded locality to meet together and co-operate? Yes; and to take advantage of any Act that might be passed to compel those who refused to co-operate; but at first I think they should meet among themselves.
9. You mean, that before the Act was brought into operation in reference to any particular swamp, that the people in the district should act somewhat in this way:—that they should convene a meeting, under some form which should be in the provisions of the Act, and determine

- determine whether they should apply to Government for power to reclaim that swamp under the provisions of the Act? Yes, I think so.
10. By Mr. Weekes: How would you propose that the matter should be managed—by the votes of the proprietary in that particular locality? No, I think by the acres.
11. Without reference to the number of acres possessed by them? That might be a great evil, because two or three small proprietors might try to upset a person who had nine-tenths of the land.
12. Then you do not think it ought to be left to the number of proprietors? I think it might be arbitrary in some cases if the number of persons were to decide the matter without reference to the acreage of the land to be benefited.
13. How would you propose to arrange the matter? I have not taken that point into consideration.
14. Does not that strike you as a very important point? It does, because two or three proprietors might band together, and even divide their properties, to accomplish their purpose, if numbers would carry the point instead of acres.
15. Do you think there would be any disposition in the public, generally, to lend money upon the security of debentures issued upon these small tracts of country? Yes, I think the security would be good. It would be just like forming themselves into a kind of company, and applying to the Government for the means of carrying out its objects.
16. But in other companies matters are decided by the majority of votes? It is a very difficult question, and one I cannot give an answer to; but it might be decided by the number of acres.
17. By Mr. Hay: I presume you see that the real difficulty is, the extent of power to be given to the proprietors to deal with this question? Yes.
18. Might it not be met in some degree by requiring, before any alterations are commenced, the consent of proprietors representing a certain proportion of acres? Yes; they would have first of all to meet among themselves, and apply to the Government to send some person to survey the land.
19. The question is in reality the extent of powers you would invest this body with; and, in order to avoid the difficulty which Mr. Weekes has indicated, and those difficulties which my questions to Mr. Smith pointed out, it would appear to be necessary to have some reliable reference as to the degree of benefit or injury that might be caused, and the amount of compensation that might be necessary to some parties, and, on the other hand, the amount of contribution which each party benefited should make—and as to whether upon the whole, the work was desirable or not, and if desirable, whether there would be sufficient funds to pay for it,—do you not think it would be necessary to limit the power so given to the proprietary, to prevent the great injustice that Mr. Weekes refers to? Yes.
20. Do you not think if the preliminary consent of the proprietary of the whole acreage affected were required, that would prevent the risk of such injustice? Yes, and also of persons objecting afterwards.
21. That would require a sort of Commission or Board to investigate into these questions? Yes.
22. The great danger appears to be, that of an improper interference with the rights of property? Yes; people who had nothing to lose might be desirous of running into these things.
23. Men having but small stakes in the matter might compel those who had large stakes to enter into a speculation, which might be attended with great advantage, but which might be utterly useless? Yes.
24. The large proprietor would suffer considerably more than the other? Yes. I am not prepared to enter into that.
25. You have not directed your attention particularly to that, and are not prepared to offer such suggestion as might enable the Committee to overcome the difficulty? No.
26. By Mr. Scott: Do you object then to the general principle of the drainage? No, I do not; I am carrying it out myself.
27. I mean for the whole Hunter; I do not mean the local and partial drainage of your own estate. Would you desire to have a general system of drainage, with a staff of officers, for the whole of the Hunter? That might be too expensive.
28. Provided it could be done at a moderate expense, would you approve of a general system of drainage? Certainly.
29. A system under which the whole of the alluvial lands of the Hunter should be drained in such a way as greatly to lessen the risk of injury from floods? Yes.
30. Round Miller's Forest, is there any particular difficulty in draining that? I think not.
31. By Mr. Weekes: You imagine that no system of drainage could be carried out without inflicting a considerable amount of damage upon some parties? I do not say considerable, but I say some. The injury will be small as compared with the advantage, but some will suffer injury to a small extent. I have three drains from my property, and a large creek that empties itself into the river from the swamp, all of which I intend to shut up, leaving a floodgate.
32. By Mr. Hay: Have you had your land drained for a considerable time, and have you tested the effect of this drainage? I have, but I have deepened the drains this year, which takes the water sooner off.
33. Have you derived much benefit from the drainage you have effected? Much greater than the expense.
34. Have you brought land into cultivation which otherwise would not have been cultivable? Yes; if the drains had not been made we should have had upon land which is now dry water for the next twelve months. I have three or four hundred acres in cultivation which would not have been available but for this drainage.

WEDNESDAY, 16 DECEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

Mr. ROBERTSON,
Mr. PIDDINGTON,

Mr. GORDON.

Mr. SCOTT,
Mr. WEEKES,

JOHN ROBERTSON, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Archibald Windeyer, Esquire, J. P., called in and examined:—

- A. Windeyer,
Esq., J. P.
16 Dec., 1857.
1. By the Chairman: You have resided many years on the Lower Hunter? About seventeen years.
 2. And, I believe, you are the proprietor of lands near Raymond Terrace that suffer from the water lying upon them? Yes, to a certain extent.
 3. Have you found much difficulty in the management of your land from the necessity of drainage? Up to a recent period we had not, because the whole of the swamp was in the possession of myself and my nephew, the late Richard Windeyer; but since his death and insolvency his part of the estate has been a good deal cut up, and has fallen into the hands of various proprietors; and, therefore, we now find a difficulty in proceeding with the drainage, from the number of interests involved.
 4. Do you think that in the districts where swampy lands are situated any considerable difficulty exists from the different proprietors declining to take part in the drainage of the land? Yes; different views naturally arise where a number of different parties are concerned.
 5. Are you of opinion that the Legislature should take any action for the purpose of empowering the proprietary of these swamp lands to drain them, by some compulsory course whereby they might mutually assist in the matter? I am. I think it impossible anything can be done without Legislative action, except in a few isolated cases where the parties interested can agree, because adverse opinions are always to be found amongst any number of persons, from interested motives or want of funds; or even an absentee proprietor may put a stop to the drainage of the lands either above or below his own.
 6. Have you thought over any plan of legislation which, in your opinion, would answer the purpose you have in view? I have never considered any other plan than one which came under my own observation in England, and which I have thought might be applicable to this Colony with certain modifications. I think it would be a good basis to go upon.
 7. Will you briefly state your views as to the best course the Legislature can adopt in this matter? In England a Commission is constituted, at the head of which is the Marsh Bailiff, who takes a certain district under his care. Under him there are inferior Marsh Bailiffs, who, subject to the approbation of the senior, summon juries of indifferent parties to decide all matters relative to the drainage of their districts, and levy a certain rate—it may be two-pence, three-pence, or a shilling an acre—to pay the expenses of carrying on the works. How far such a system as this may be applicable to a new country is a question; but, I think, it may be taken as a basis.
 8. Would it not be an expensive arrangement to have a Marsh Bailiff and his deputies, all requiring to be paid? It is not so there.
 9. Are they all honorary appointments? All honorary appointments.
 10. From what class of persons are the jurors taken—are they selected from those interested in drainage? Every man that is summoned on the jury is, of course, interested more or less; but the usual practice is that those interested in lands in one locality sit as jurors on other lands.
 11. Then the jurors are not necessarily the proprietors of the land that may be the subject of consideration. No. Most of the jury are, generally speaking, respectable tenant farmers.
 12. They are not interested in the particular swamp to be drained? From the largeness of the estates they are not often able to get a jury without taking men that are interested. I think that would be one of the things we should have to avoid, that the jury should not be all biassed one way. I should much fear the larger landlords here would sway the opinions of their tenantry, and perhaps carry a point against a poorer proprietor to his detriment.
 13. Has it never struck you that a law might be passed under which a majority of the proprietors of any swamp or water basin might claim that the whole body of proprietors of that particular swamp should be formed into an association to effect its drainage,—they being permitted, at a properly notified meeting, to elect their Chairman, and from time to time to decide whether or not the swamp should be drained, in what way the money should be raised, how it should be expended—whether by employing overseers and day laborers, or by contract—and also how the drains, when completed, should be kept up;—Would anything of that kind meet the difficulty you have stated to exist from want of co-operation? I think it would. When it comes into operation there might be certain points requiring to be adjusted; but on a general view I think it would answer well.
 14. I believe it is the case in many instances, that the banks of the river are higher than the back lands, and hence the proprietor of land on the bank might not be interested at all in the drainage of the swamp, though it might be necessary that the drain should pass through his land; do you not think he would therefore be entitled to some compensation, to be determined according to some equitable mode? The water at all times must have had a natural outlet, and the drain would most probably follow that; or if it were not adopted, and another had to be devised, the natural outlet would then fall into the hands of the proprietor whose land would be taken, so that it would be merely a system of give and take.
 15. But it might be otherwise? It might, certainly.
 16. And in that case you would give compensation? Yes; if any harm were done to any person's property compensation should be given.
 17. What do you think would be the best method of raising money to carry out these somewhat what expensive works? I cannot think of any better way than an assessment on the proprietors of the land benefited.

18. Do you think all the proprietors are in a position to advance the money? That is the difficulty.

A. Windeyer,
Esq., J.P.
16 Dec., 1857.

19. Then would it not be necessary to empower the issue of debentures of some sort, or advances from the public funds? Where you have to deal with men without means, of course it is necessary to devise some mode of giving them relief.

20. If debentures, secured on the land to be drained, were issued, do you think the richer proprietors in the neighbourhood would be disposed to purchase them? If the operations undertaken were really to the advantage of the district, they ought to be the first to take them up, and their doing so would be a confirmation of the thing being good.

21. Do you think the parties interested would be justified in expecting any assistance from the Government in that way? I should much fear that if we do not succeed in getting the money without the aid of the Government we shall never get it at all. I think if we could do without Government aid it would be better.

22. Are you of opinion that in making these drains any considerable amount of injury might arise to the river from the formation of sand banks;—if you cut a new watercourse into the river, through which a large quantity of water would pass, would it not be possible that a sand bank might be thrown up which would impede the navigation? I should hardly think that, though it is impossible to answer for the action of water.

23. Then, I presume, you would recommend, in all cases where it is possible, that the natural outlet should be taken? Unquestionably, even for that reason alone.

24. Is there a large quantity of land requiring drainage in your district? I think in one spot near my estate there cannot be less than ten thousand acres.

25. Is that good land? A large portion of it is good land.

26. I believe the late Mr. Richard Windeyer and yourself drained a large quantity of land? We did, in conjunction.

27. I think his land turned out very badly after it had been drained—it was not very valuable? A great portion of it is valuable, but much of it is valueless. We are obliged to drain bad as well as good together.

28. What is the proportion of good land? About one-third is good, and two-thirds objectionable.

29. What is the character of the land which you call objectionable; does not the soil below consist of rich land, covered with some rubbish? No, it is sandy generally.

30. I was under the impression that there was some accumulation of weeds upon it? That is generally the case on the surface.

31. Will not this rubbish burn off and make the land good? It will burn off, but it leaves nothing of any value; the fire leaves the surface quite destitute of any vegetable matter, except a small quantity of ashes.

32. Would you recommend a system which should confine the drainage of particular swamps in the hands of the proprietors of them, or a system which would give the control of the whole drainage of the district to one Commissioner, or other constituted authority, who should have power to levy an assessment to provide for the drainage of all the swamps in the district? I think it would be better that the proprietors of each individual swamp should undertake the drainage of their own land.

33. By Mr. Weekes: I suppose you do not contemplate any works which would protect the country from the effects of floods of any magnitude, such as the late flood for instance? It would be perfectly impossible to guard against such floods. For instance, during the last flood the water rose on my ground nine feet above the ordinary spring tides, now what could protect us from that?

34. Then this is simply a question of drainage? Yes.

35. Do you contemplate its application to marsh lands, that is, lands overflowed by the daily tide, or do you intend it to extend only to swamps occasioned by the flow of water from the adjoining country? I think I would confine it entirely to swamp lands. The reclamation of what you call marsh lands would involve sea walling to shut the water out.

36. Is there any large extent of country, coming under the denomination of marsh lands, which could be reclaimed? Yes. I have perhaps two thousand acres in my own hands, a good portion of which I am led to expect would be good land.

37. Do you think operations of the kind necessary to reclaim such lands could be undertaken by individuals, or would co-operation be required? It would, in certain cases, or each party undertaking it would have to make cross walls, to embrace his own land; whereas if all the proprietors of such a tract of land would combine, one sea wall would be sufficient for them all.

38. Would land of this kind be very valuable if reclaimed? I hardly know the quality of any but my own.

39. Supposing an Act were passed compelling co-operation in drainage works, how would you suggest that questions arising among the proprietors with reference to these works should be decided—by the votes of the majority of proprietors, without regard to the quantity of land owned by each, or would you give them votes in proportion to the number of acres in which they were interested? That is a very delicate point, because of the danger of forcing a man without means to go into a large expenditure.

40. I am aware that it is a very delicate point, but it is also a very important one? It is.

41. If decisions should go by acres, a number of small proprietors may be outvoted in an essential point by one large proprietor? Yes; and in the other case it might be vice versa.

42. Which do you imagine is the more just view? I think it ought to be by acreage; that is, that a man having one thousand acres ought to have as many votes as ten men who have one hundred acres each.

43. One of the features of the system you referred to as being in operation in England was the

A. Windeyer, the summoning of a jury by the Marsh Bailiff; how would you bring that to bear here—by summoning a body of proprietors? Either proprietors or tenantry—the respectable and intelligent tenantry.

16 Dec., 1857. 44. Then, of course, whenever they might meet to carry out the Act, would come into operation the question I proposed,—whether the votes should be given according to the number of acres, or the number of proprietors only. I think you said at home the juries consisted principally of the tenantry? We did not exclude proprietors, but they were principally the tenantry.

45. But, at all events, before any step could be taken, it would be indispensably necessary to settle this point,—whether the votes should be by the number of acres or the number of proprietors? It is a very difficult question to answer, because, if you give the votes according to acres you may put the poor man quite at the mercy of the rich man, who might force him to come into a measure that might be ruinous to him. If you peremptorily force a man to lay out four or five hundred pounds on his estate, you may cripple his means to such an extent that he would be unable to recover himself. It might lead to petty tyranny.

46. And it might cut the other way, if the contrary view were adopted—a body of small holders might force very expensive works on a large proprietor? Yes.

47. In the drainage of such lands as we have been speaking of, would there not be a great difference in the amount of benefit received by individual proprietors, according to the position of their land? Very great.

48. It would, therefore, be only fair to exact from each an amount of contribution having some reference to the benefit derived? No doubt that should be the basis on which to arrange the contributions of the respective parties.

49. Does it strike you as a question presenting many difficulties, to ascertain the amount of benefit or amount of injury any man has sustained by a system of drainage? I think it could be ascertained, without much difficulty, by a jury of intelligent farmers.

50. Do you think it would be fair to come to a determination on these points after a short interval of, say, one year, without taking an average of seasons; does it not strike you that, on an early investigation, some benefit may be supposed to have resulted to any particular piece of land, which the experience of succeeding years, when the drainage has been fully carried out, might prove to be an injury instead of a benefit? I do not know any injury that could be done, provided they did not let the water in upon the land. To all these outlets there must be a sluice.

51. We know that digging a well in a town deeper than any other wells near it will drain them dry. I mean that injury might be done something in that way, so that land bordering on a swamp which before was only moderately damp might, by draining and bringing the swamp into cultivation, be rendered injuriously dry? There might be such instances, but only to a very small amount.

52. Have you ever turned your attention to the amount of assessment which it would be necessary to levy to carry out the works which you think would be sufficient? Never; it is such a wide question. Some of the proprietors that I have conversed with have been quite willing to subscribe as much as ten shillings an acre. For my own part, I think one shilling, or one shilling and sixpence, would be sufficient for a beginning.

53. I suppose all that is necessary in many localities is some simple Act to render it compulsory on all parties interested to co-operate with machinery, as light and simple as possible? Just so. It becomes a grievance when one man, perhaps the party in possession of the outlet of the swamp, acts as an obstructionist. It is to remove that difficulty that we have moved in the matter. I think, however, there should be some provision for an appeal where any party was dissatisfied, to guard against any arbitrary conduct on the part of the majority. I think as much should be done as possible to guard the poorer man; the rich man is able to protect himself.

54. Do you think there would be any disposition on the part of capitalists to lend money on debentures secured on the lands affected by drainage? I do not know; I can hardly conceive there would. The probability is that, if a number of us were interested in the drainage of a swamp, of which one or two men of lesser means held portions, the amount of their contribution would be raised among us on the security of the land. In that way we should provide for our own individual drainage; but I can hardly conceive that we should be able to raise money from other parties not interested in the particular locality. The difficulty is to assist our poorer neighbours; and if it is to our advantage to have these lands drained we must meet that difficulty ourselves.

55. I suppose you would suggest that security should be taken by way of mortgage? Yes, I think that the better way. The thing is fraught with a vast deal of difficulty. Still, I think that something should be done.

56. By Mr. Piddington: What extent of land in your neighbourhood would be necessary to form one drainage district, with reference to the efficient drainage of such district? If I confine myself to the Police District of Raymond Terrace, I dare say it would embrace thirty thousand acres.

57. In what way do you think the funds necessary to drain such an extent of alluvial lands could be raised? In no other way than that I have proposed,—that the individuals interested in each particular spot should raise their own funds.

58. But if thirty thousand acres form a drainage district in your neighbourhood, how could a sufficient sum be raised upon the individual efforts of the persons interested? It could only be by a local rate—an acreage rate.

59. A rate implies something like an annual instalment, but to drain thirty thousand acres you would require to raise a large sum at once? It could not be all done at once; we should not have the means.

60. Then, in what way do you propose to carry it out at all? Those parties who were anxious to drain any portion of land might raise the funds amongst themselves. Taking my own own case as an instance, I believe the parties engaged with me would be disposed to take that course. A. Windeyer, Esq., J.P.

61. You speak of an extent of thirty thousand acres as requiring to be drained? I mean that the whole of that land might be legislated for in that one Police District; but I never contemplated that the whole of it should be drained at once. 16 Dec., 1857.

62. Do you believe that if the districts proposed to be drained are left entirely to the unassisted efforts of the local proprietors, it would be possible to raise a sufficient sum of money effectually to drain a considerable area of country? I do not think it would by loan.

63. Are you of opinion that if the Government guaranteed a loan to a district, secured on the drainage rates, any risk of ultimate repayment would follow? I should have great fear of that. The constant changes in the ownership of property would involve the matter in a variety of difficulties; and I should much fear the Government would ultimately be losers.

64. How would you be enabled to raise a sufficient sum of money to drain a district without borrowing? We have not contemplated anything so extensive as the draining of a whole district. We only wish that parties interested in particular swamps should be empowered to drain them in conjunction with their neighbours. Let the proprietors of each swamp provide for their own drainage.

65. If you are obliged to borrow money to drain a district without the advantage of a Government guarantee for the loan, what rate of interest do you conceive you would have to pay for borrowed money? I think money might be raised at seven or eight per cent., but I think to go into the measure so generally as that question includes would upset the whole thing, and undercut the prospect of anything whatever being done. I think the better plan would be to begin in a very small way.

66. If the Government could be persuaded to afford a guarantee to drainage districts, do you not think you could borrow any sum you might require at a comparatively low rate of interest? I do not. People only look at the interest and the security on the land.

67. Do I understand you to say that the aid of a Government guarantee would not tend to lower the rate of interest? The aid of a guarantee would naturally render it easier to raise the money.

68. With reference to what you have said about juries, could not a jury of parties interested in the drainage of a district be relied upon to decide upon the quota to be paid by each individual owner of swamp land? They did so at home, and I therefore think it would be quite practicable here.

69. The system of leaving it to a jury of parties interested to assess the individual liabilities of persons benefited by drainage is not open to any objection, in your opinion? I think not.

70. I think you stated that you were in favor of allowing some appeal from the decisions of such a jury? Yes, merely for the protection of the poorer landholders.

71. To what court or authority would you appeal from the decision of a jury of drainage occupiers or proprietors? Perhaps an appeal might be made to the Assembly.

72. But the Assembly is not a judicial body? Then it could be only to the courts, I suppose.

73. You do not intend that the jury should give their votes with any reference to the quantity of land each of them might hold? No.

74. Then if each member has only a single vote in the ultimate decision, would not the poorer man be as much protected as the rich—always premising the jury be taken fairly? Still I think the door might be open for the rich man to sway a number of his tenants who might be on the jury.

75. I presume the jury would be impanelled upon oath? Yes.

76. Have you any reason to doubt that they would faithfully discharge their oath? Nothing more than the general failing of human nature.

77. By Mr. Scott: I think you rather recommended walled embankments to keep out the water from lands overflowed by the tide? I fear those would be works far too large to be undertaken at present; but I certainly think it would be beneficial if people would go into the matter, both for the proprietors and the public generally.

78. Have you ever made any estimate of the cost per yard of such walling? No; it could not be much, because the rise of water on the land overflowed is so trifling in height; but we might have to go a considerable depth to insure the wall being water-tight—we might have to sink two or three feet.

79. Have you any idea of the price per ton of ballast? No; but it would have to be earth-work to make it strictly water-tight.

80. I think you mentioned that during the late heavy flood the water rose nine feet over your land? Nine feet higher than the usual spring tides; about six feet over the land.

81. You likewise stated that it was quite hopeless to anticipate that any system of drainage would prevent the damage arising from these very heavy floods? I think it is almost hopeless, because the rise and fall of the river is so inconsiderable, the outlet so small, and the different feeders so numerous, that the accumulation of water becomes very vast before it can discharge itself.

82. Can you state the fall of the river? I cannot, but I have been told it is not more than ten feet from Raymond Terrace to the Flats.

83. Can you mention the height to which the recent heavy flood rose at Raymond Terrace? About nine feet above the usual high spring tides.

84. Can you state what was the rise at Newcastle? No; but I know that at Tomago it did not rise more than a foot and a half.

85. That, I presume, would cause a considerable additional rapidity of the current? It increased the current a little. It is amazing how slow the water went off, notwithstanding the great rise; it never ran past my house more than two miles and a half in the hour.

- A. Windeyer, Esq., J.P.
15 Dec., 1857.
86. Your house is in an eddy, is it not? I speak of the main channel. It never ran more than two miles and a half in the highest of the flood.
87. What is the distance from your place to Tomago, as the bird flies? It is not four miles from house to house.
88. What is it by the river? I think we generally estimate it at ten miles.
89. Has the distance by the river anything to do with the difference of rise between the two places? I think the cause of the difference is that they are nearer the outlet, and the greater space in which the river expands there absorbs the water.
90. Did you hear what was the rise at Morpeth? I think it could not have risen at Morpeth less than fifteen feet higher than ordinary spring tides; and eighteen inches at Tomago.
91. If the river were perfectly straight from Morpeth to Tomago, do you think there would have been that difference of rise? By having it straight you unquestionably would acquire greater velocity.
92. You are aware that the Government have given £1,000 for surveys to be made to ascertain whether it is possible to reduce the violence of any future flood? Yes.
93. Do you think it at all possible that by adding another channel to the river, as it were, the effects of floods might be mitigated? No, I can hardly see that they would.
94. If one gutter, so to speak, is not sufficient to carry off the water, two gutters might be? You cannot alter the grand outlet between Nobby's and the North Shore. My own rough calculation is that the capacity of the different rivers that must pass Nobby's is nearly double the capacity of that channel itself; and, therefore, the making of any additional watercourses would not mend the matter.
95. Are you acquainted with the country along the banks of the river? Tolerably well.
96. Does it consist of hills or dead flats? The greater portion of it of flats. The parts overflowed must be flats. Of course there are variations of a few feet in the levels.
97. It would not require a heavy amount of earthwork to be removed to construct a blind drain to carry off surplus water during floods? No.
98. Would not such a drain, if constructed, carry off the waters from the creeks adjoining before the great mass of waters could arrive from the country higher up the river? No doubt, if this drain began to act at once, there would be less accumulation when the main body of water came down.
99. And, consequently, it would have an effect in preventing the great rise of water at Maitland, for instance? It might, in a certain degree; but I think you can hardly do anything to give the relief you contemplate. The great difficulty is that the country is almost level with a very trifling fall from Maitland to Nobby's; and, also, that the area of country drained by the Hunter is so very extensive, and it has such vast tributaries.

Present:—

MR. HAY,
MR. JONES,MR. SCOTT,
MR. PIDDINGTON,

A. W. SCOTT, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Edward Sparke, junr., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a resident at Hexham? Yes.
2. Have you been long there? Yes; I have been there twenty-seven years.
3. I presume, therefore, you know that locality well—Miller's Forest, and the low lands thereabout? I have been over the whole of these low lands, but I do not know them so intimately as my own district, of course.
4. When you say your own district, what do you mean? I mean the district of Hexham. I know Woodford as well as our own place; I cross it almost every day. The Big Swamp I have been over almost all my life.
5. That is the swamp across which the Minmi Railway runs? Yes.
6. What is the area of the low lands of the district you are acquainted with? I should say about 12,000 acres.
7. Of low lands? Not all low lands. I should say 8,000 acres of low land where the water comes over at times.
8. I allude to those lands which are subject to injury from ordinary floods—from rains that are not extraordinary? About 8,000 acres, I should say, that suffer from heavy rains.
9. Do you think any system of drainage could be adopted with benefit to these 8,000 acres? Yes; I think the whole of these 8,000 might be drained.
10. Would the system you would recommend be expensive, or inexpensive? It would be rather expensive now, as during the last few years the banks have washed away so much. Lands that I can remember some ten or twelve years ago were perfectly dry, are useless now.
11. By Mr. Jones: By the breaking away of the banks? Yes; from the wash caused by the steamers. Where the drays used to go formerly, the spring tide now washes over the land. I am alluding to the Big Swamp. When I was a boy, I used to go with my brothers and race over it every evening—my meaning is, the swamp was sufficiently dry and hard for us to race over on any evening we went out—now the cattle cannot cross it. Every year the salt water increases upon the land. At spring tides the water goes up the creek to Minmi; four or five years ago it did not go within two miles and a half of it.
12. By the Chairman: You do not allude in any way to Miller's Forest and Lydney Park? I do to Lydney Park; Cocodingy Creek runs through it, and Mr. Hickey opened a drain at his own expense, from the creek to the swamp, and since that time the water has been carried off quickly from Woodford seaward. There may be two feet or two feet six inches of water there to-day and in a week it will be almost dry. If flood-gates were put at the mouth of that creek, the whole of the land after an ordinary rain would be dry in a few days—of course drains would have to be cut into the creek.
13. Are the people inhabiting these low lands willing to carry on a general system of drainage? I do not imagine the settlers themselves are inclined to do very much, for they have no tenure of lease; they are principally yearly tenants.
14. You are speaking of Mr. Hickey's land? Yes, and of the land around our own. The tenants say they do not care whether they stay there or not, and that as soon as they can leave they will do so, for they are so subject to being flooded that they get disheartened.
15. Have you ever given any serious consideration to the subject of the extraordinary floods to which the banks of the Hunter are subject? I have often thought of the necessity of something being done to drain the lands in our neighbourhood, especially where I am more interested myself.
16. Speaking generally of the low lands of the district, can you suggest any plan which you think could be carried out for the drainage of those lands? If you were to begin at Lydney Park, I think if flood-gates were put at Cocodingy Creek of sufficient dimensions to allow the back water to escape, and to prevent the tide from rising, the fresh water would run out and the salt water be prevented from coming in, therefore one portion would be entirely drained by that.
17. By Mr. Jones: That is Lydney Park and the country adjacent? Yes, from Woodford, part of Berry Park, and our own land. There is a tract of high land that divides the Cocodingy Swamps from the Woodlands Swamps; but at John Hannell's there is another creek, a natural outlet, where my grandfather put a flood-gate, and drained the whole of the land; and his land—the Woodlands Estate—where you may now take a boat, you could, after he had thus drained it, have driven a horse and cart. When Mr. Hannell came there he pulled up the flood-gate, and the land is now suffering from its removal. I imagine that it would be necessary to form an embankment along the river side for some distance, to prevent the high tides flowing over in two or three places where the banks have been washed away. If a bank of sufficient strength to resist the force of the tide were thrown up, a flood-gate were placed at the creek, the fresh water would escape from a large portion of the land, and the salt water would not return. My father had a surveyor—Captain Peters—to take the level for the purpose of draining his portion of the Big Swamp, and he recommended him to dam up the first creek—there are three creeks there, as the Honorable Chairman is well aware—to have the second open, and the Ironbark Creek, with flood-gates, and he said then the whole of that land would be drained, as there was three feet fall.

18. By the Chairman: Who occupied the land besides your father? Mr. Wentworth.

19. And Mr. John Terry Hughes? No; my father had his portion—680 acres.

20. By Mr. Hay: You refer to the Big Swamp? Yes.

21. Then the Big Swamp would be best drained through the Ironbark Creek? No; at the middle creek there would be the greatest fall of water.

22. Where is that? Between Ironbark Creek and Hexham.

23. By the Chairman: You think if the whole of the proprietors were unanimous, the land you allude to could be easily drained? Yes.

24. Without any great expense? The expense in some places would be great, for the banks are gone in many places, and a very strong embankment would be required in those places.

25. If these banks were formed, some 8,000 acres of land would be made valuable that are now useless? Yes.

26. By Mr. Jones: Would the expense be great in proportion to the value of the land? I imagine the land would amply pay for the outlay. At the present time they are utterly useless for grazing, from the salt water.

27. By Mr. Hay: In fact they are a sort of salt marshes? It is now: it used to be splendid grazing ground.

28. By Mr. Piddington: What length of embankment do you think would be necessary for the purpose of protecting the Big Swamp from inundations from the river? About 300 yards at the present time, but it is to be recollected that it is getting worse every week. A few years hence the other portions will be as bad as these are now.

29. Three hundred yards is now absolutely necessary? Yes, to keep the salt water off.

30. What length of present embankment is liable to be destroyed unless further means are taken? The banks in some places would require to be heightened, or preserved, to prevent the water coming in.

31. By the Chairman: Do you think the drainage you suggest would be sufficient to preserve the crops from injury? No, I do not think it would preserve the wheat crops, more especially after a great flood, as the water would not escape quickly enough. The last time of the flood the water was off the land in three days—that is, the cultivation land.

32. I am speaking of ordinary floods? If these natural creeks were opened these lands never would be flooded by ordinary rains, because the creeks that run through these swamps would take off the water as fast as it came, if the salt water did not interfere.

33. That is, in spring tides you mean? Yes.

34. By Mr. Jones: So that by the system you spoke of, lands in ordinary rains would be kept dry by the action of these creeks? Yes. Each proprietor would have to expend something in opening these natural outlets—these small creeks—because they are trodden down so, and have been for a number of years. The rain on the low lands would not flood; it is the water from the Paterson and the Williams that causes the great floods.

35. You are now speaking of very high floods, similar to what occurred last year? Yes. If it rained nearly all the year on the lands round Hexham it would not flood the land to anything like the extent we have had, for the creeks would take off the water to a certain level.

36. Can you form any idea of the amount it would be necessary to expend in order to reclaim these swamps? No, I cannot.

37. Can you give any rough approximation to the probable expenditure? No; I have never made any calculation.

38. Supposing the 8,000 acres you speak of were drained, what would be the value per acre of the land,—what do you think it would fetch in the market if it were in convenient sized lots? I would not estimate it at more than £12 an acre.

39. Do you think it would be likely to realise that price? Yes, I think it would be worth that. The land would, of course, vary in value. I have some land which, if it were drained, would be worth £50 an acre to me; indeed, I would not take £100 an acre for it.

40. Is it now subject to these continual floods? Yes; it is a lagoon now, and retains water longer than any portion of the swamp, and when it is dry it is almost all manure.

41. What is the difficulty in the way of draining that land? It is very simple. There is a small bank between it and Cocodingy Creek, and for £50, if Cocodingy Creek had a sluice in it, I could drain that piece.

42. And what would that land then be worth? I would not take less than £50 an acre for it.

43. What is its extent? About 20 acres—that is the lagoon—but I should say there are some fifty or sixty acres altogether.

44. Would you, as the proprietor of that land, object to be rated, at any reasonable amount, to carry out a general system of drainage, which would enable you to drain that land? No, I would not.

45. Do you think there would be a willingness on the part of your neighbours to pay a certain rate to carry on improvements of this kind? I cannot say, for I never spoke to the proprietors of the adjoining properties on the subject. Mr. Wentworth is the largest proprietor of swamp land, and many years ago he was very anxious to have his land drained, and was thinking of commencing operations. I have never spoken to Mr. Eales or Mr. Hickey on the subject; but without them the settlers could not undertake it.

46. When you speak of the settlers you mean the tenants? Yes, the tenants; there are scarcely any freeholders there.

47. Is the land you have spoken of in the neighborhood of Hexam owned in small or large blocks? All large blocks.
48. Do you think it expedient to pass a law whereby some three or four proprietors in such a neighbourhood could compel proprietors of lands adjacent, similarly situated, to carry out a system of drainage? I think it would be extremely beneficial to the whole district.
49. Have any cases come under your knowledge where persons having lands such as you have described have been prevented carrying out drainage works from the refusal of neighbouring proprietors to co-operate? The only case I know of was the one to which I have already referred. Some time ago my grandfather went to the expense of draining his lands, and the adjoining proprietor pulled up the flood-gates to the creek, and so destroyed his work, and ruined the estate, or a great portion of it.
50. Do you think there would be any injustice in passing such a law as I have referred to? No.
51. Under which persons could be compelled to contribute rateably for the common improvement of their own and the adjoining lands? I think it would be very just.
52. Can you suggest to the Committee any scheme by which such an object can be carried out? I am not prepared to suggest any. All our landowners are non-residents. Messrs. Christie, Wentworth, and Greenaway, are in England.
53. Do you think there are sufficient resident proprietors in the locality you have been describing to take charge of any works that may be authorised to be carried out by law? No; I do not think there are sufficient to undertake the management.
54. What is the extent of this country in which you say there are some twelve thousand acres of land completely useless from the want of some system of drainage: Does it extend from a little below Morpeth to Ironbark Creek, near Hexham? No; I do not allude to lands near Morpeth, but to Lydney Park, part of Berry Park, part of Woodford, the whole of Flood's farm, Greenaway's eight hundred acres, Christie's three thousand nine hundred and twenty acres, six hundred and eighty acres marked Hughes and Hosking, and Wentworth's.
55. And in these estates you describe there are about twelve thousand acres which are now completely useless for agriculture for want of some system of drainage? Yes.
56. Do you believe if proper drainage arrangements were carried out the value of these lands might be estimated at something like £12 an acre? Yes.
57. Would these lands be available for cultivation purposes? Not for a time; they would have to lie idle for a few years, to get the salt out. A few years ago the Wentworth swamp was splendid grazing ground, now it would scarcely keep a beast at all.
58. After the land had had time to sweeten, would it be suitable for pastoral purposes? Yes. When Mr. Eales commenced his tramway, he ploughed completely across the soil, and it was splendid.
59. By Mr. Hay: To what height did the great flood last year rise at Hexham? About five feet. I think the great flood was over the cultivation ground.
60. Do you propose to raise embankments higher than the level of the cultivation land? No, not higher than the natural banks of the river.
61. You do not intend to attempt to guard against these great inundations? No; by raising the banks you would do greater injury, as it would prevent the water going off. It is about six or seven miles above Hexham that the danger from flood arises, opposite the Williams River.
62. You do not contemplate any operations for the purpose of preventing the land being flooded on such occasions as these? No.
63. By Mr. Jones: I understand you to say you would not raise the banks in the immediate neighbourhood of Hexham, with the view of keeping out these great floods? No.
64. For, by so doing you would keep in the water when it had once come upon the land from above? Yes.
65. Do you think it would be useful to form an embankment where the water now comes in above? No. I doubt if it could be done—if an embankment could be made of sufficient strength to resist the combined forces of the three rivers.
66. At what part does the water first break in? Below Morpeth, where the Paterson joins the Hunter; it would come through Berry Park, Duckinfield, I think it is called, and on to Mr. Hickey's estate, and Miller's Forest.
67. So that any measures to prevent damage to the land from high floods must be taken at some distance higher up the river? Yes.
68. By Mr. Hay: I understood you to say that the greatest height of water at Hexham during the late flood was some five or six feet above the cultivation land? Yes.
69. Was the water extended at this level over the whole of the swamp? Yes.
70. And over the whole of the low lands about Hexham, to which you have alluded? About Miller's Forest it was about the same; I saw the marks on the trees. On the very banks of the river it rose higher than far in.
71. If you were to endeavour to provide a sufficient outlet for the water within the usual bounds of the river, and by embankments to keep it from spreading upon these low lands, the water in the river would, I presume, rise to a great height? To a fearful height; the sheet of water, five feet deep, was in some places many miles broad.
72. Therefore, I presume, you do not suppose that that would be practicable? I do not say that it would not be practicable, but it would be an enormous expense.
73. The embankments, of course, would require to be raised very much higher than five feet, for, the water being confined in a small space would be raised much higher? Yes.
74. With reference to the embankments that would be necessary to carry out the works you do contemplate: these embankments, I presume, require to be more substantial than otherwise they would be required to be, in consequence of the liability to be injured by these great floods: occasionally, when the river broke over, would it not injure these banks, unless they were substantial? Certainly, the floods would endanger them, but not so much as might be

- be expected; for I was in a boat at the time of the flood, and I found that the current was not so strong immediately on the banks of the river, as between the high lands and banks.
75. Do you not think if these particular places where the banks are now broken away, and where you would require to raise artificial embankments, the current would be very much stronger, in consequence of the more rapid slope of those embankments? Yes; they would have to be protected, more especially at the upper end. On Greenaway's land, a great deal would be required to be done to keep out the flood, for in ordinary freshes it comes down some of the creeks; it only affects his land and a portion of Woodlands Estate.
76. By Mr. Jones: How often do floods such as that we had last year occur? I have heard from my father that it is twenty-five years since we had a flood of the same height.
77. Within your recollection, did you ever see Hexham flooded? No; I never saw it covered so much as it was in the July flood, and that was, comparatively speaking, nothing at all.
78. By Mr. Hay: How often was the cultivation land at Hexham flooded last year? Three times, but not entirely. The second flood only went over a portion, and directly the river fell it went off.
79. Have you ever seen any portion of the cultivation lands of Hexham flooded, previous to that? Yes, a very small portion of it; but that was during very heavy rains.
80. Did you ever see the river break into these flats before? Not to the same extent, but I have seen them flowed over by the high spring tides.
81. By Mr. Piddington: You never saw a flood previous to this arising from the same cause? No.
82. By the Chairman: I think you said your grandfather had effectually drained some low land? Yes.
83. And that Mr. John Hannell, by pulling down the flood-gates, had ruined these lands? Yes; ten times the quantity of land is now destroyed in consequence.
84. Do you think the proprietors of land generally would be in favor of adopting a general system of drainage? Yes, I think the majority would be in favor of it.
85. Supposing one individual to object, he would overthrow all the plans of the rest? I think there are people who would object to any general system, and who would throw all the difficulty they could do in the way.
86. Do you think then that some law ought to be passed to compel every proprietor to co-operate in a general system of drainage? Yes.
87. Do you think the matter should be managed by a Committee, or Board chosen by the proprietors themselves, or would you trust the whole thing to the Executive Government? I should prefer to have the Board appointed by the proprietors; I think they would probably carry out the arrangements more effectually than the Government; and as they would have to pay the money, if they had to expend it I think they would do so more beneficially.
88. Would you have the members of such Board paid, or unpaid? I should prefer to have them unpaid. I should be very glad to give my time to such an object, as it would tend to the improvement of my own property.
89. You would have Local Boards, and not a General Board, for the drainage of the whole district? Local Boards.
90. By Mr. Jones: These Local Boards to be elected or appointed by the proprietors or tenants who would have to bear the expenditure? Yes. Mr. Bradley could give the Committee some information respecting the drainage of Mr. Christie's property; he had plans drawn of the estate, and had nearly completed his arrangements for draining the estate, at a cost of £1200, when he had some falling out with the contractor.
91. What prevented his commencing it? He had some falling out with the party who undertook it.
92. It had nothing to do with the proprietor of the adjoining estate? No.
93. By Mr. Piddington: The total quantity of land in the Big Swamp, you said, was about 8,000 acres? Not in the Big Swamp, but in the low land to be drained.
94. You stated that the total quantity was 12,000 acres——? I spoke of the district then; I did not say that was all low land.
95. How much of that 8,000 acres belongs to non-resident proprietors? More than three-fourths.
96. You have alluded to Cocodingy Creek—does not that run through Lydney Park? Yes.
97. That is already a natural drain? Yes; but the high spring tides come up it.
98. Cocodingy Creek drains Lydney Park, in the first instance? Yes.
99. And Lydney Park belongs to one proprietor? Yes.
100. I think you stated that some of Mr. Hickey's tenants did not care about remaining on his land in consequence of their liability to floods? Yes.
101. Is the Lydney Park Estate in such a condition that it might be drained by the proprietor without interfering with other proprietors in the same neighbourhood? No; if Lydney Park were drained, Mr. Eales' land would also be drained, as Mr. Eales has a section of land at the mouth of Cocodingy Creek.
102. It would be comparatively inexpensive to place flood-gates at the mouth of Cocodingy Creek, and deepen the creek, would it not? Yes.
103. And Cocodingy Creek is filling up, as other creeks fill up, is it not, for want of cleansing? Yes; the timber is falling into it and choking it.
104. Is the entire level of the great swamp equally liable to inundation—one acre with another? The difference is very slight.
105. Then, it would cost about an equal sum to drain the land belonging to one proprietor as it would be necessary to expend to drain the land belonging to an adjoining proprietor? No; it would take more, for instance, to drain Mr. Wentworth's land than it would to drain Mr. Christie's, because the latter has some high land along the banks of the river, which the other has not, and it would be necessary to cut a drain from Mr. Wentworth's land through the land of Mr. Christie.

106. If it would cost much more to drain Mr. Wentworth's land than Mr. Christie's, or Mr. Christie's than Mr. Wentworth's, how would you apportion a rateable assessment between the two? I should first ascertain what would be the expense of doing the cheapest first, and then I would calculate the more expensive. For instance, if I had ten acres nearer the river, and it would cost me a hundred pounds to drain it, you might have ten acres behind me, and the cost of that might be £150—I do not know how to arrange it.
107. Where there are numerous proprietors on a piece of low land, such as Miller's Forest, it would be necessary to go into some calculation? I could not go into that question.
108. Where is the spot opposite the Paterson or Williams River over which the water breaks in time of these great floods? It breaks over for a great distance after passing Morpeth—the whole land on the south bank of the river.
109. In the case of the floods of last year, did the Hunter River overflow its banks for any distance continuously? Yes, for several miles.
110. By the Chairman: Supposing many of these creeks we have been alluding to were properly deepened, and proper flood-gates were placed in them, would they supply the residents in the neighbourhood with fresh water? No, I think not for a very long time, for the nature of the ground gives the water a peculiar taste.
111. Ultimately? Ultimately it might be useful, but not for a very long time.
112. Would it do for cattle? Yes, I think so.

MEMO:—In speaking of Mr. Hickey's tenants leaving, I do not wish to be understood to speak disparagingly of his lands or in any way to injure him.

Mr. Joshua Anderson called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are resident, I think, about Oakhampton? I have land at Oakhampton; I reside at Maitland.
2. There are a great number of proprietors there? Yes.
3. Is that land low, and liable to be injured by heavy rains? A portion of it; it forms a kind of basin, which is generally flooded from the adjacent lands with ordinary rains.
4. What is the extent of land there liable to be flooded, supposing heavy rains to have occurred? I should think in heavy floods about a hundred acres.
5. Not more? Not more, in ordinary floods. There is another portion, called McCann's Paddock, which belongs to Mr. Eales.
6. Is there any extent of land injured by the want of good drainage? There is much in the vicinity of West Maitland.
7. To what extent should you suppose? I could refer to three or four particular places—Oakhampton, McCann's Paddock, Dagworth, Ravensfield, and Hungerford Swamps.
8. What may be the area of these various lands? They are very extensive; I could not rightly give an accurate account of the number of acres, but it must amount to several thousands.
9. These several thousand acres would be benefited by a judicious system of drainage? Very much indeed.
10. If such a system were proposed by a number of proprietors, do you think it could be carried out, or do you think it probable that some individual having intervening land might object to it? In very few instances they would, for I have been conversing with many who are favorable to a general system of drainage. This land is mostly in the hands of proprietors who have purchased small farms, and I find them almost unanimous; they have suffered so much from recent floods that they cannot reclaim their land, and if matters go on as they have done they will soon be beggared.
11. If they are unanimous, why have they not adopted measures to drain their land? I may state what happened to myself. I was instrumental in draining a portion of the Oakhampton Estate, and while I was in the midst of it, one of the parties whose land had been drained refused to make compensation, or to allow the work to go on through his land; so that, after being at half the cost, my land remains undrained. And so it might happen in future, that a party who might agree to a system of drainage in the first instance, would, from ignorance or other cause, prevent its being carried on when it came to his own ground.
12. In the instance to which you have referred, one individual rendered abortive your attempts at drainage? Yes.
13. Then you are of opinion that some enactment should be passed to render compliance with a general scheme of drainage compulsory? I am; and if the district of Maitland is inclined to prosper, and to hold the position it should do in the country, this must be done.
14. Would you have the management placed in the hands of a Committee chosen by the proprietors? Yes, by the proprietors themselves, and they should be competent to assess to the value parties might derive from the drainage, and the rate they should pay according to the advantage they might derive. In some cases parties might be losers by this drainage; for instance, there might be a lagoon intercepted from the river by elevated land, this land would have to be cut through, in order to drain off the water from the lagoon. If the intermediate land were possessed by a person to whom the swamp did not belong, he would sustain an injury by having his land cut through for the purpose of drainage. In such a case the valuers should assess the damage done, and compensation should be made.
15. That compensation to be made from the assessment upon the adjoining proprietors? Yes, by competent assessors or valuers, who should be paid for their trouble in assessing.
16. You allude, of course, to surface drainage more than to extraordinary flood? I can allude to both. I think for ordinary floods it would be of the greatest advantage, and the least cost; but I think I could see a plan that would be instrumental in preventing heavy floods.
17. Can you state that plan? If a drain were cut from Bolwarra to Largs, about three-quarters of a mile —

Mr. Joshua
Anderson.

22 June, 1858.

18. What would be the effect of this drainage? It would be that, when the Hunter began to rise, it would be led by a short passage to Newcastle, and thence to the sea, instead of going round these serpentine windings of the river, where it accumulates, as it were, in a great heap, and spreads all over the country. The drain might be taken from Bolwarra to the River Paterson, or the Hunter, at Phoenix Park.
19. This drain, you think, would allow the water to pass on so freely as to prevent Maitland being flooded? Yes; because at present the stream is so retarded by the serpentine windings of the river, that it accumulates in a heap, and retards the progress. If it had a shorter course it would pass on quicker; if, instead of journeying twenty-five miles, it had to go but three-quarters of a mile, it would get to sea quicker.
20. What would be the effect of this canal upon the lands below it? As to that, I believe the course of the river would have to be straightened in many places—many points would have to be cut off the river.
21. What would be the cost of these particular cuttings you allude to? I could not rightly calculate upon that, but it would cost a deal of money.
22. That is to be borne by Government, I presume? I do not think it would be right to require the Government to bear that; I think the proprietors of the land ought to be assessed.
23. You think those whose lands were preserved from flooding should be assessed? Yes; and that they should have time given them to pay it up gradually, in instalments. I myself would be willing to have my property mortgaged in this way for its improvement.
24. By Mr. Jones: You think it would be better to pay £10 in the shape of assessment for the improvement of your property, than to have property to the value of £100 destroyed? I do.
25. By the Chairman: Then this partial system of drainage would relieve the lower lands from injury from heavy rains—would this case off these various swamps? No.
26. By Mr. Jones: You believe these two systems to be quite distinct—this canal would not afford any relief to the lands ordinarily submerged by rains? No.
27. By the Chairman: In your opinion, do the crops of the country suffer most from droughts or rains? They suffer from both; but, I believe, during the thirteen years I have been resident in Maitland it has suffered most from floods.
28. If the lower available lands were sufficiently drained to enable them to be brought into cultivation, would their drainage injure the higher lands, by making them more dry? It would not in the least.
29. In your opinion, the vast majority of people resident about Maitland and Oakhampton would be favorable to an enactment of the kind? Yes; for, having suffered so much from the floods, they would be glad to do anything to avoid them for the future. People of indolent habits might object, but more than two-thirds would be in favor of this system.
30. During these last rains have any crops been injured? Yes, very much; by the Railway Commissioners or Government having taken four or five feet off the level of Wallis' Creek, together with Fisher's Creek. I believe it would take £2,000 to compensate parties for the damage done at Ravensfield, Louth Park, Dagworth, and Brooks' Flat.
31. Do you attribute this loss of £2,000 entirely to the embankment made by the Railway Commissioners? Yes, I do. I believe had the banks been left as they originally stood, there would have been no damage done. I know, from a person who has been resident at Dagworth five years, that in previous similar rains no damage has been done; but the creek is now stopped up by the railway, and the Commissioners, or Surveyor, did not take the original level, but left four or five feet remaining on the banks, so that the water rushes over. One poor man who lives at Dagworth, and has a team of horses, had seven or eight acres of fine grass land (from which he expected a fine crop for his horses) all destroyed—it was all one sheet of water. This was caused by the wrong level being taken by the Commissioners of the Railway.
32. By Mr. Hay: Are you aware that the object of the Railway Commissioners in leaving the embankment was to provide water for the people of East Maitland? Yes, and it is of no importance at all to them; for I believe, since that they have not taken a gallon of water out of that same place.
33. Do you know there was a petition sent in respecting that? I am aware of that; but if the Surveyor had acted judiciously he would have found that what he was going to do would be to the injury of others.
34. By Mr. Jones: You are, I think, a proprietor of part of the Oakhampton Estate? Yes.
35. Have you been long a proprietor? I have, for eight or nine years.
36. Have you, either personally or in conjunction with others, attempted to drain any portion of that estate? Yes.
37. How long was that ago? I think about six years.
38. How many persons were joined with you in that operation? Mr. Scobie, Mr. Bertram, Mr. Pearce, and some others who were tenants. These were the chief parties, with Mr. Kelly. We did not join in partnership, but agreed to make a drain between Kelly's ground and mine. Kelly agreed to give us £20, and to let the drain go through a part of his land, which was on a bit of an eminence; and when his own land was drained he would neither do the one nor the other. I had to bring an action against him in the Supreme Court, and my land remains undrained. There is some of the land that was then drained, belonging to Mr. Scobie, worth £150 an acre.
39. Were all the parties consenting parties to the drainage arrangements when you began? Yes.
40. And on that common consent you began these drainage operations, and carried them through? Yes.
41. After incurring all the expense, you found that one person who had benefited considerably by this arrangement refused to bear his proportion of the expense? Yes.

42. How did Mr. Kelly back out of the arrangement—did he refuse to allow the drain to be carried through his land? He would not agree to the original plan.
43. Having had his own land drained, he would not allow such a drain to be made through his land as would drain yours? Yes.
44. And thus violated the agreement under which you had undertaken the expenditure? Yes.
45. Up to this time have you had your land drained? Not a bit of it, and I was at half the cost; he would not allow me to tunnel through his land.
46. Did he refuse to bear any portion of the expense to which he had originally agreed? Yes, he did.
47. Did you take any steps to compel him to carry out his portion of the agreement? I brought an action against him in the Supreme Court, and the result was that I got £200 damages.
48. Does that case appear to you to be a proof of the necessity of having some legislative provision under which drainage operations can be carried out? Yes; it went to confirm my mind that nothing else would do.
49. So that those whose lands would be benefited by such operations should be compelled to join in some common measure for drainage? Yes, in some common just measure.
50. By Mr. Hay: In order to ascertain who would really benefit by any particular scheme of drainage, I suppose it would be necessary to have an accurate survey of the land in the first instance? Yes.
51. To ascertain the amount of land requiring drainage? Yes; and it should afterwards be valued by a competent valuator.
52. It would also be necessary to ascertain the damage which particular individuals might suffer from carrying out this scheme? Yes; to make some compensation to those who might be losers for benefiting others, and those who were benefited should pay in proportion to the benefit derived from the system of drainage.
53. You are not aware, with regard to this new cutting at East Maitland, whether the bottom of the water-course there is left at a higher level than the spring tides? It is considerably higher than the spring tides. I believe it would be a benefit, provided it were brought to the original level of the creek, and had flood-gates. For instance, when the river rises at the Falls, it breaks away to Wallis' Creek. If there were sufficient flood-gates of proper dimensions it would be a benefit, for it would prevent Dagworth, and away to Ravensworth, being flooded.
54. Would the spring tides go up there? No.
55. Then, of course, it would be no advantage to the people of East Maitland for the purpose of supplying them with water? They might have fresh water at some low spot where there might be a reservoir of easy access for horses. Now, where the high embankment is they cannot get access to the water, unless by throwing down a bucket.
56. Do you know that a resolution was passed by the Assembly approving of a dam being made at Wallis' Creek? Yes.
57. You do not think your friends did you any good there? I am sure they (i. e., our East Maitland friends,) by their petition, did a great deal of evil.
58. By Mr. Jones: Do you know exactly the nature of the resolution passed at the Assembly? Yes: I could not help laughing at it at the time.
59. What was the nature of the resolution respecting the Falls and Wallis' Creek? To make a dam at the Falls, and something similar at Wallis' Creek.
60. Did you ever hear the resolution, or have you a clear recollection of the exact terms of it? No; my memory is defective.
61. You are not aware that the resolution simply pressed upon the Government the necessity of making a survey to ascertain the practicability and the cost? Now you have reminded me, I do.
62. Do you think that has been at all properly carried out? I am sure it has not.
63. Do you think if a proper survey had been made the Commissioners would have adopted an arrangement which practically resulted in injuring many acres of land—in destroying some £2,000 or £3,000 worth of property within the last few months? I do not think if they had taken proper steps they would have done so.
64. If they had made such survey as they ought before undertaking such a work as this, the evils that have resulted would have been obviated? Yes.
65. You are aware that the resolution of the Assembly did not commit the Commissioners, or the Government, to the placing a dam across Wallis' Creek without first ascertaining the probable consequence? Yes.
66. By Mr. Hay: Are you clear about that? Yes, I think so.
67. Do you think the dam, if sufficiently high to exclude the spring tides, would provide fresh water for the people of Maitland? It might, to the injury of others.
68. A dam not sufficiently high to exclude spring tides would not prevent the water from becoming brackish? I believe it is not brackish at the junction where it goes into the river, unless in very dry seasons.
69. Do you know if there was any allusion made to the flooding of this land in the resolution, or in the course of the arguments upon it? Yes. Mr. Robertson made some allusion to it, and I quite agreed with him at the time.
70. That the dam would have that effect? Yes; especially at Wallis' Creek and East Maitland, and I quite acquiesced in his remarks.
71. That any dam would necessarily have that effect? Yes.
72. Your idea is, that the flooding has been caused by attempting to do with a dam what should have been done by flood-gates? Yes, just so.
73. By the Chairman: If the level of this were made lower, and a flood-gate were placed, would it affect the fresh water at Wallis' Creek? It would not.
74. Would it not leave the water in Wallis' Creek very much reduced in depth? Yes; but there would be still sufficient for domestic purposes.

Mr. Joshua
Anderson.

22 June, 1853.

Mr. Joshua
Anderson.

22 June, 1858.

75. In dry seasons? Yes. Even provided that were carried into effect there might be a reservoir in some low land where horses and carts might have access to it.
76. By Mr. Piddington: Is there any place at Wallis' Creek to which horses and carts now go? No; there is not since the Victoria Bridge was erected.
77. By Mr. Hay: Do you think by cutting a canal from Bolwarra to Largs, which is about two miles, I think, instead of three-quarters —? (The witness referred to a map, and admitted that the distance exceeded two miles.)*
78. Do you think there would be no danger, if you were to open this new channel for the river, of increasing the liability to flood of the country below? The probability of that has been discussed; but I think improvements might be made in the river, so as to give it a straighter passage. The river now works itself to force its course in a straight direction, by working into the banks where there is a bend in the river.
79. Is not the tendency also to increase the bends by depositing sand on the points? Yes, it has that tendency.
80. Do you not conceive that if the river were driven with this great celerity through this short cut that it would increase—unless some provision were made through the rest of the course of the river to the sea—the liability to flood the country below? It might, but it would not do so much harm as at present, as the waters are now accumulated in a heap in these serpentine reaches. The water would then pass on with great rapidity, and discharge itself at Newcastle, and thence into the sea.
81. When it is detained in these long reaches it cannot reach Hinton with the same velocity as it would if it went through the short channel you propose to cut there? I think it is worse as it is now, because it accumulates in a heap, whereas if there were a short cut, it would be rapidly discharged.
82. How far up the river is the effect of the tide felt? It is reflected back a little piece past Maitland.
83. At Maitland how high does the spring tide rise? It may rise a foot or a foot and a half.
84. When you speak of the water being discharged into the sea, do you take into account that the sea is backed up by tides right to Maitland? Yes; but of course the storm water is higher a deal than the level of the tide; the water would work its own level, but the height of the tide is the height of the sea.
85. Do you not think that the effect of the tide and of the flood meeting is to raise the water higher? I think, unless there were a hurricane, or something of that kind, to affect the sea, it would not be so.
86. Do you not think that the backing up of the water by the tide in time of flood must, so to speak, heap up the water and raise it higher? It would retard the course of it if there were a storm, but not if it were calm: it would depend upon the weather; if the wind was southward it would raise the water higher.
87. By Mr. Piddington: If a canal were cut from Bolwarra House to Largs, what would be the saving of distance, taking all the windings of the present course of the river? About eighteen miles.
88. The distance by the proposed canal you speak of would be about two miles and a half? So Mr. Hay says.
89. What reason have you to suppose that if such a canal were cut that the property on both banks of the river below Largs would be more liable to flood than at present? I think it would not come on it with such force, because it would come more gradually.
90. A straight canal at the place you speak of would carry down the water caused by rain during floods more quickly into the sea than the circuitous course through which it flows at present? Yes.
91. Are there any impediments to the course of the river below Largs, from bends in the river? Yes. I think many bends could be taken off. There are two or three—one opposite Morpeth.
92. These curves in the river are by no means so numerous below Largs as above it, between Largs and Bolwarra? No.
93. With respect to Oakhampton Estate, how many proprietors do you think are interested in that part of the estate liable to floods? About four.
94. Is there any communication between Oakhampton Estate and any other low land in the neighbourhood of Maitland? There is a part, which is only connected in times of high floods, what is called Mr. Cann's Paddock; there is a large lagoon. There is a party between that and the river who will not be benefited (Mr. Hall); he will have to be compensated.
95. How much land is there in the Oakhampton Estate not secured from flood? I think about fifty or sixty acres.
96. The expense of draining the Oakhampton Estate would not then be a very heavy charge? No; it could have been done at first for £200, provided the plans had been carried into effect, and there had been no dissenting party.
97. That is not connected with other extensive swamp land liable to injury from ordinary floods? No.
98. The parties interested would be quite capable, if there were some law authorising a joint contribution, to drain their lands? In Oakhampton they would.
99. You have no experience of other tracts of swamp land on the lower part of the Hunter River, at Miller's Forest? No, I have not.
100. In any case where a considerable quantity of land, such as that required to be drained, belonging to different proprietors, could you suggest any mode by which it could be effectually done?

* I adhere to my former statement—from $\frac{3}{4}$ to one mile. I must have been mistaken to have supposed such a thing as two miles.

- done? I see distinctly how it could be drained, in a variety of ways—either by draining it into dry creeks, or by tunnels under ground.
101. I do not refer to mechanical means, but to the method of raising the money? I have referred to that before; it is a very plain thing. I would have Commissioners, or valuers, competent to do justice between man and man. The lands that would be reclaimed would far more than pay the cost. There are some lands for which £100 an acre would be no value, if they were drained, that are now lying barren and useless.
102. Would you propose to raise funds by a contribution of the entire amount in one year? No, I would not at all agree to that; it would be no matter to those who had money lying idle by them whether it were paid in one year or in ten, but there are many who would require time to pay it in.
103. The money that would be necessary to drain a large acreage, such as I speak of, would be required immediately, would it not? It might not be required immediately if the Government would lend, and charge a reasonable per centage, the principal to be repaid in a certain number of years.
104. It would be requisite in such cases to raise the money by loan, would it not? Yes.
105. In cases of the kind where, as you describe it, the land is of considerable improvable value, do you think the land would be a sufficient guarantee to the Government for the amount expended in the making of such improvement? Yes, I think so.

Mr. Joshua
Anderson.

22 June, 1858.

WEDNESDAY, 30 JUNE, 1858.

Present:—

MR. SCOTT.
MR. WEEKES,

MR. JONES,
MR. GORDON.

A. W. SCOTT, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. Joseph Neville called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Where do you reside, Mr. Neville? At Miller's Forest.
2. That is in the Lower Hunter, opposite Raymond Terrace? Yes.
3. Do you occupy a farm there? Yes.
4. Is it your own land? Yes.
5. Are there many people occupying their own lands about you? Yes, a good many.
6. And the whole of the lands are low? Yes, all low lands.
7. A good deal subject to be injured by rainy weather? Yes; very much so.
8. Would these lands be improved by the adoption of any system of drainage? Yes; I think it would be of the greatest benefit to them.
9. Have you adopted drainage yourself? Yes.
10. Will you state to the Committee whether the drains that you have constructed have been beneficial to yourself, and to what extent? My land would be useless if I had not drained it.
11. A portion of it? Yes. When I purchased my farm it was considered as wet as any, now it can grow crops as good as any around.
12. Your land was wet when you purchased it? Yes. Mr. Jacobs purchased land aside of me, and is letting his land at £2 per acre. Mr. R. Jacobs offered me the same price for mine. I purchased mine at £13 and £15 per acre less than Mr. Jacobs did, and mine is now as valuable as his.
13. Your land was previous to the drainage of less value than Mr. Jacobs', but owing to your draining it is now of equal value? Yes.
14. By Mr. Jones: What price per acre did you pay for your farm? £30.
15. What price did Mr. Jacobs pay? He paid £13 per acre for one lot, and for another contiguous he paid £45 per acre.
16. Owing to the arrangements made for draining your land, you can get as much per acre for your land as Mr. Jacobs can for his? Yes. Mr. R. Jacobs purchased another lot side of me, for which he gave £37.
17. So that, I suppose, you infer by the arrangements you have adopted for draining your land you have added £7 to £8 per acre on its value? Yes.
18. Judging from the rental offered, as compared with the rental of the higher purchases made there? Yes.
19. By the Chairman: How much land is there like yours—low lands—improved about Miller's Forest? I could hardly give a rough guess. There is a deal of land.
20. The whole of which might be improved? Yes; after you leave the river's banks.
21. The whole is very low land? Yes.
22. And which, by a system of drainage, might be brought into use and cultivation? Yes, it might, certainly—it could.
23. However, if it is of advantage to people to drain, why is it they do not drain? It is expensive—draining; besides, one would hinder another—another person would not admit the other to carry the water through his premises. In fact, there have been law suits respecting the same thing.
24. You say one would prevent another from draining, and there have been law suits in consequence? Yes, there have.
25. Do you think it desirable that some kind of law should be made to compel people to drain the lands? Yes, I do. I think without that it could never be done.
26. Have you thought of any system that you would recommend to be adopted by the Government?

Mr. J. Neville.

30 June, 1858.

- Mr. J. Neville. Government? I have thought of different ways. I consider if they put an assessment on it according to the improvement the land derived from draining, it would be beneficial.
- 30 June, 1858. 27. And who would have the disposal of the money raised by assessment—who ought to have it? There ought to be a sort of committee in the neighbourhood.
28. A local committee? Yes, who should have the management of it.
29. You think that would be a better system than trusting the Government entirely with it? It might save expense, because sometimes the committee in the neighbourhood would see where the drains were needed more than the Government could. I think the residents would know more about it than the Government.
30. At any rate, it would be more satisfactory to yourselves? Yes.
31. The drainage, I presume, would be of no use unless you had some authority to keep those drains continually open? No, they would be of no use unless they were kept open, and made to be cleaned out once a-year or so.
32. Have you directed your attention to flood-gates on low lands? I never use them, but I intend to as soon as my means will allow me.
33. Do you think the adoption of flood-gates for draining Miller's Forest would be of advantage? Yes. They would keep the tide from running in, and the main drains would be docked down to something like low-water mark. If the flood-gate kept the tide from going in, the drains would be dry and healthy, except at flood times.
34. Is there any creek—of course I allude to Miller's Forest—that has a natural tendency to drain the whole land? Yes, there are two creeks; there is one on Hickey's Farm, and one on Miller's Forest.
35. There is one on Miller's Forest? Yes.
36. If these two creeks were kept open, with flood-gates attached, would that be sufficient effectually to drain a large portion of Miller's Forest, so as to keep it in cultivation? I don't know what to say. To keep them clean would be more expense and trouble than to dig new drains, and have straight courses with them.
37. Are you acquainted with the wishes of any other district but your own, and whether a system of drainage would be useful? I have heard some neighbours say they would like to carry out the drainage, but there are some who are more convenient to the river, and whose land is lower, who do not wish it to run through their land. I am, so far, safe myself; I have a good river frontage, and can drain my own land at little expense, and had no other to consult with.
38. Would the drainage of this land do any injury to the higher portion of the agricultural lands, or make them drier in summer? No, I think not.
39. By Mr. Weekes: Is not that a natural tendency of draining from a lower level to make the higher lands drier? Yes; but it would not make them useless; the land does not run so high.
40. Would it injure them at all? No, I think not.
41. Is your land swampy or marshy from fresh or salt water? From fresh water.
42. In the plan you suggested of draining, are you keeping in view a due regard to the floods, or was it simply the drainage of land from the natural wet? The drainage of land from surplus water is what I am alluding to; it is no use when heavy floods come—a general deluge like last August.
43. Is the district you live in of that character to enable it to be formed in separate draining local sections? Yes, I think so.
44. You think all should pay an equal rateable amount? According as they derive the benefit from the drainage. Some do not need draining as much as others; it is not right to tax them, except in proportion to the benefit they receive.
45. What mode would you devise for ascertaining the amount of injury sustained or benefit derived? That ought to be decided by a competent surveyor examining the land before draining, and proving the value of it afterwards.
46. Have you made any estimate of what amount per acre you conceive sufficient to carry out and maintain a thorough system of drainage for the district you reside in? No.
47. Can you form any approximation? Not at present; I might if I had a little time.
48. Do I understand you to say you would have this vested in a kind of corporation or body of some kind to dispense the funds? Yes.
49. How would you have that body elected: would you have it simply a representation of the residents, or would it be a representation of acres,—that is, would you give the same influence or votes to a man farming 20 acres as you would to a man who had a farm of 1,000 acres? No.
50. Then, you would give a man with a larger portion—a larger extent of land—a greater influence than the small one? Yes.
51. Then it would be the influence of per acre instead of per man? Yes, per acre.
52. Is it not in that case likely that some large landed proprietors might entirely swamp the influences of the smaller ones in any works that might be carrying out? It might be so; very likely it would.
53. And therefore it would be the means of the works being carried out more for the benefit of the large proprietors than for the benefit of the small proprietors in the district, if the influence or votes were according to the number of acres? It would be carried out like that if we go by the number of acres.
54. That is your suggestion? Yes.
55. Then don't you see some objection to it? Yes, there might be this objection,—that small proprietors would be over-borne by large proprietors. You see where there is a freehold property there is a difference there. In Miller's Forest there are 2,000 acres with some 50 or 60 proprietors. When you come to Hickey's or Eales' land, it would be no use to have the mechanics' opinion there, because they would rule the tenants.

56. The landlord rules his tenants? I mean by ruling their tenants, that they could make them do as they thought proper if it came in their way. Mr. J. Neville.
57. Do you think, as a general rule, that the landlords have influence over their tenantry— 30 June, 1858.
are their leases so short as to give them that power? They are yearly tenants, and do not take so much interest in the land.
58. Are the leases for one year's term? Yes, they are lately, on Mr. Hickey's side.
59. Do you know whether that is the practice on the Hunter generally? No.
60. Is it possible for a tenant to undertake any work of improvement on a lease for a year? No. I think the leases of Mr. Hickey's were for four years.
61. And then for four years afterwards? They stop as yearly tenants afterwards.
62. Does it not strike you there would be some difficulty about the assessment of the respective benefit or injury that might accrue to the different farms from this drainage? I cannot see what injury it would do.
63. I understood you to say the benefit derived might not be equal? Some would not benefit so much as others.
64. Then it would not be fair to call on them for the same amount of contribution as those who benefited very largely? Of course I should not think it fair to subscribe the same amount of contribution as those did who were benefited more than me.
65. A man in the district might require no drainage of any kind, but in the district where the assessment was levied he would have to pay his quota: is it not difficult to ascertain his proportion—you would estimate it from what—on what grounds could it be estimated? I could hardly estimate such a thing as that without consideration.
66. Should a man that derives no benefit pay anything? There are no such cases. There would not be one of that sort, that would not derive any benefit. Some would derive more benefit than others; to some it would be almost useless.
67. Your farm is on the bank of the river? Yes.
68. Was this drainage of your farm a simple work? Yes, very simple.
69. The drainage you carry on in your farm is enough for all your purposes and to make it all you wish? Yes.
70. Then, for you, the other system of drainage would be unnecessary? It would be no use to me.
71. You would be an instance in your own person of its unfairness—because if a rate were levied for the whole, although you were not benefiting by it, you would have to contribute to it? Yes.
72. How would you suggest the funds collected for this purpose should be expended—under what control—a body appointed by the contributors? Yes, I should say so.
73. By election? Yes.
74. And, in that election, I think you said you would give an influence to the number of acres rather than to the tenantry or men? Yes. There is a different thing to be considered: a number of large landed proprietors might overwhelm the small ones, but it would only be but fair that the amount of acres should carry the majority. But if drainage is an improvement, he would have the improvement on a large number of acres in the same proportion as the small proprietors. The improvement per acre would be the same for a farm of 1,000 acres as it was for a farm of 100 acres.
75. But the large proprietors would have greater influence in the disposal of the funds, or any other money that might arise? You generally see they want to take that influence in most cases.
76. They want to take it? Yes, you generally find it so.
77. In starting a practice of that kind, do you think that each man should have one vote? I am hardly competent to give that opinion.
78. Would you like, you having a vote, to be overruled by a man who had double the land you have yourself? No, Sir, I should not.
79. By Mr. Jones: What is the extent of the Miller's Forest Estate? I believe somewhere about 2,000 acres.
80. That estate you said is cut up amongst some fifty or sixty proprietors? Yes.
81. How much of this estate is subject to be swamped from ordinary rains? I should say about 700 or 800 acres.
82. Out of the 2,000 acres? Yes.
83. Are these 700 or 800 acres which are pretty generally under water of good quality? First rate quality.
84. Some of the best land? Yes, if drained—if it is not under water. It is useless for cultivation if there are no drains.
85. It is so thoroughly under water that cultivation is impossible? Yes.
86. What additional value would be given to the land by this system of drainage? Some would be worth as much again as it is at present.
87. But we want to know what as much again would come to: say the present value is £10 or £12 per acre, what would land under water worth £10 or £12 per acre be worth if it were drained? I should say it would be worth £20 per acre.
88. It would double its value? Yes, it would.
89. Do you think it would be expedient to pass a law that some kind of compulsion should be exercised to neighbouring proprietors to carry out drainage on land contiguous to each other? I don't think it could be done without.
90. Under what circumstances would it be right to exercise such compulsion—would you require a majority of persons agreeing to drain? Yes, a majority agreeing to drain.
91. You conceive that if the majority of the proprietors are in favor of a certain system of drainage—if they come to the conclusion that the land should be drained—that the minority should be compelled to fall in with the views of the majority? Yes.
92. Having arrived at that point, some arrangement should be made under which a competent surveyor

Mr. J. Neville. surveyor should be appointed to value or estimate the additional value given to the lands of the respective parties by this system of drainage? Yes.

80 June, 1858. 93. Then that each party should be assessed according to the additional value given to his land? Yes; I think that would be fair.

94. I understood you to say, in reply to a question from Mr. Weekes, that you thought persons who had a large quantity of land should be compelled to pay a larger amount of assessment and have more votes than the smaller owners of lands who are assessed at smaller rates? Yes.

95. Would you carry this increased power of voting to an indefinite extent, or adopt the system of Joint Stock Companies, giving the holder of shares a proportionate number of votes up to a certain point? I would limit it to a certain point.

96. Suppose a man held 100 acres, and paid 5 per cent. on the value of these acres, you would give him one vote, and an additional vote for 150 acres, and so on, up to a certain number, and then stop, no matter how large the quantity of land one person might hold—you would not give him one vote for every additional number of acres, but you would stop at a certain number of votes; and, by this arrangement, you would prevent two large proprietors swamping a number of small proprietors, and so check any abuse in carrying out the drainage by one or two individuals? Yes.

97. I suppose that, without any drainage, the higher land is drained practically by the lower land? Yes.

98. Suppose they made artificial drains, I suppose the higher lands would not be much more drained than they are now? No.

99. And would not be likely to sustain any injury from the system of drainage? No.

100. Do you believe it would be much cheaper to drain a tract of country, say 1,000 or 2,000 acres, by a number of persons joining together than if each person drained his own land? Yes.

101. What do you estimate the saving to be? I could not estimate it; it would make so much difference.

102. As a rule, do you think it would not cost a man one-third as much if he joined with others as if he drained himself? Not more than one-third.

103. In some cases it would not equal that? No; not more than a quarter.

104. In Miller's Forest Estate is it so placed that one drain would be effectual for draining the great bulk of the estate—is it all in one watershed? No.

105. Is it so placed that one main drain would do for the whole estate? No. There are intervening ridges which would prevent it: the banks of the river would prevent it.

106. Could the whole of the proprietors of Miller's Forest be associated as a company for the purpose of draining Miller's Forest, or would you require three or four bodies? A company of one body would be the best.

107. Do you think it is for the common interest that the whole of the proprietors should be associated for the purpose of draining Miller's Forest, and that one assessment should be levied according to the benefit each proprietor receives? Yes.

108. I suppose there would be no practical difficulty in determining the benefit each person receives from drainage, and so determining the amount to be paid? No difficulty for a competent person.

109. Do you think he could ascertain it satisfactorily to the great body of those interested? It would require more than one to please all—I should say the majority of two out of three.

110. Your view is, that altogether you would employ one surveyor to make the plan, and estimate how much the land was benefited by the drainage carried on, but you would prefer having three valuers to determine the rate per man at which the parties should be assessed? Yes.

111. By the Chairman: I wish to know, from your own personal knowledge of your own district, what injury did you receive from those extremely heavy floods that we had last year—what amount of injury has it done—did it destroy all your crops, or only partially? It destroyed the whole of the crops.

112. How often have these floods occurred? I never knew but that one.

113. In how long? In fourteen years.

114. In fourteen years? Yes.

115. In that time you had the whole of your crops destroyed? Yes.

116. By Mr. Jones: Had you before any considerable portion of your crops destroyed? I have had portions destroyed.

117. By the Chairman: With respect to ordinary floods, what injury have you received? I have received injury at different times from the water lying there, and the water being stagnated, and there being no drains to drain it away.

118. I mean if the drains were carried out, I suppose the crops would be destroyed from the floods? No, I think not. I never saw crops destroyed where the land was drained until the last flood.

119. By Mr. Jones: I suppose the distinction you draw in what you speak of is between the heavy flood of last year and ordinary floods—the heavy flood breaks over the banks of the river and covers your ground, and the ordinary flood is the drainage from the watershed from the high land? Yes.

120. That is the destruction you suffered from ordinary and heavy floods? Yes.

121. And you said that once in fourteen years was the only time the water broke over your property? Yes.

122. By the Chairman: What proportion of your crops were destroyed by the ordinary floods? I can hardly say.

123. Can you guess—did it destroy one-quarter, or one-half? I might lose one-eighth, sometimes one-quarter.

124. And how often do these ordinary floods occur? I have known one about seven years ago; then we had no flood again until last year.

125. One in seven years? Yes.
126. Now, taking these heavy rains—the continual rains—that happen every year, do you receive any injury from them? Yes, a great deal of injury.
127. What proportion of your crops are destroyed by them? Sometimes one-eighth, or one-quarter, of the crops are destroyed through these rains.
128. How often do these rains occur? We may get it two years following, and then we may not get it for two or three years. It comes at different intervals of three or four years.
129. Then the greatest damage you receive is from ordinary rains? Yes.
130. I think you stated, if you had proper drainage from flood-gates you would receive no injury from floods, ordinary floods, or continual rains? No, very little, except in very heavy floods.
131. Now, of your own knowledge, with respect to Miller's Forest, are there any large proprietors of land? Not very large; nothing larger than 50 or 60 acres.
132. These are small farms? Yes.
133. Then, if the assessment were per acre, the large proprietors would not be able to overbear the small proprietors? No. The farms are pretty equally divided; one would have as much influence as the other.
134. I think you stated your own drains are sufficient for your own farm: you would, therefore, not receive so much benefit by this system of drainage as others? No, not by this system of drainage—I would not receive so much benefit.
135. If a proper system of drainage were adopted, would you not receive benefit by the drains being kept open and cleaned out annually? I would receive benefit for what I paid for.
136. For keeping in repair these drains for you and others? Yes.
137. And for keeping in order any flood-gates that might be damaged, would you not necessarily receive benefit? I should receive my share of benefit, in one way or the other.
138. You would not grudge paying any fair share of the assessment that might be made? No.
139. Have you any further suggestions to make on matters which we have omitted to ask any questions? I think, if the system of main drains were carried out—if there were flood-gates put in the mouths that go into the river—then you see the landed proprietors could make drains round about the boundaries, to empty into the big ones, at their own expense. If this system of drainage were carried out, it would be fair for every one to make a sort of ditch-drain to empty into the by-ones.
140. Supposing one person's farm intervened between the big drains, how could you make him put your ditch-drains? All should be included.
141. By Mr. Jones: This system of drainage would be determined by the particular features of the country? Yes. If a man's drain came here, and I had a farm here, and he wanted a drain between me, it would not be right for him to run a drain all alongside of me; he should run a part on my side, then a part on his side, so that each party should bear a portion of the other man's drain.
142. That could only be determined by a surveyor, who would determine on what plan the tract of country should be drained—all that would have to be determined by a competent man? Yes.

Mr. J. Neville.
30 June, 1858.

Mr. Henry Macnamara called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Where do you reside, Mr. Macnamara? In Miller's Forest.
2. How much land do you occupy there? A trifle short of forty acres.
3. Are you a tenant, or is the land your own? I am a freeholder.
4. Is your land low or high? It is swampy land. There is a part high and a part bad. Part is high land—sound land.
5. Are you injured at all by water lying on that farm? There are about five acres of it I do not cultivate in consequence.
6. Subject to the flood and wet? I cultivate the remainder, and receive no injury by the wet, that public drainage would benefit.
7. Would these five acres, or one-eighth of your farm, be improved by any drains—could you then bring it into cultivation? Yes.
8. What is the value of that land? The five acres?
9. Yes—if brought into cultivation? I purchased the whole block at £31 per acre; I got the five acres included. Heaslip bought his for £6. I consider mine, that is the five acres, of no more value than his. There is a little ridge in the centre which is not wet. It is the same as Heaslip purchased at £6; I don't think he would sell it for more in the state that it is in.
10. By Mr. Jones: You could not sell it for more than £6? Yes.
11. What would be the additional value above £6 if the land were properly drained? At the present time it is not worth much. It would not let. I think, if drained, it would let for 20s. to 25s. per acre annually. I could not say the value; I think that is what it would be worth annually. There is more land let than sold. It is easier to determine the annual value than the market value.
12. Do you know Heaslip's land? Yes.
13. How much land has he? Mr. Heaslip has got 55 acres, of which about 40 acres are useless for cultivation at present. In a dry season he might be able to grow a crop of wheat on it.
14. It is useless, from its being liable to be flooded? It is not safe for cultivation.
15. From that cause would it be generally saturated when heavy rains occur? It is sometimes too dry; when dry it takes twice the quantity of rain to saturate it that the land does at the river bank.

Mr. Henry
Macnamara.
30 June, 1858.

Mr. Henry
Macnamara.
30 June, 1858.

16. By the Chairman: Would that land of Heaslip's be improved by drainage? Certainly it would; we ran a bit of a drain of eight feet wide into Nally's Creek.
17. What was the result of it? We did not finish it; we only did it in part; we ran it up to Heaslip's Lagoon, and the result was a sinking of nearly eight inches of deep water in about twenty-eight or thirty hours.
18. That caused the water to sink one foot deep—what would be the result if the drain were done properly? No more than it would drain the lagoon.
19. By Mr. Jones: That is, it would drain the 40 acres of Heaslip's land? That is only a portion of his land.
20. It would drain the 40 acres? It would drain the bulk of it.
21. By the Chairman: How much land is there in the lagoon? I think there are about two hundred acres.
22. Would that lagoon be benefited by drainage? No doubt about it.
23. What is the value, undrained, of that land? It would be let at 5s. an acre. I don't think, for the 40 acres, he would let it for much more. There are 15 acres of middling land. I think he would scarcely get £20 a year for the whole farm.
24. By Mr. Jones: Suppose the lagoon of 200 acres belonged to one person, and he wished to let it at the present time in its present condition, what rental would he get for it? I think it was let for £3 previous to the sale of the forest.
25. The whole lagoon? Yes.
26. Suppose it belonged to one proprietor, what rent would he get a year for the whole of it? I think, as a yearly tenement it would not fetch above £10.
27. One shilling per acre? Very little more. The wet portion a man would not think fit to cultivate.
28. Suppose these 200 acres were made fit for cultivation by drainage, what would they be worth then? If it were fit for cultivation, from being drained, I think there would be no difficulty of letting it at 25s. an acre.
29. So that the rent of 1s. per acre would be increased, from drainage, 24s. an acre? Yes, certainly.
30. By the Chairman: Has Mr. Heaslip, or any person, any objection about drainage? No; he would be very glad to see his farm so much benefited by drainage. You will excuse me if I give my view on the subject. I have got a copy of what I think a good system of managing the thing.
31. You approve of a system of drainage? Yes, under particular circumstances.
32. Will you give us your opinion how that system ought to be carried out? (Witness handed in and read the following statement.) Sir,—In the first place, it is my opinion, that the farmers in the locality where I reside are not at present in a position to make sufficient permanent drains and flood-gates for to drain the lands. Secondly, in my opinion the Legislature should authorize the appointment of a Local Board in Committee in each district, whose duty it would be to approve of any proposed drain, before such drain would be opened; also that such Local Board should be empowered by the Government to assess such lands as shall be benefited by such drains, for the making and keeping of such drains in repair, and only such lands as are benefited by the public drains; also, that there should be no person eligible as a member of such Board or Committee but a freeholder residing in the district, or a leaseholder with not less than five years of his lease to expire, and residing in the district. In my opinion the said Board should be elected, and that no person should have a vote in the election but a person holding the qualification of a member.
33. You state that you would have the Government to appoint this Local Board? No; I should have it elective. The Board I meant should be elected.
34. Your idea is, that the Board amongst yourselves should be elected? Yes.
35. By Mr. Jones: You mean, that under an Act passed by the Legislature people might incorporate themselves under a Board, and making the Board to be elected by those contributing to the assessment? Yes.
36. By the Chairman: Would there be much opposition in your own neighbourhood? There would be no opposition, in my opinion, to such a thing as that; or, at least, not very much.
37. You are very badly off for fresh water to drink? Yes; when there comes a lengthened drought we are. The means of getting fresh water should be improved.
38. Do you think if the system of drainage was improved you would be able to get fresh water? No; it is only the higher portions of the land in which we get fresh water.
39. By wells? No, by reservoirs; digging holes until you get a good clay bottom, which holds the rain water and keeps it fresh.
40. You, for one, would be willing to contribute your portion of the assessment for the purpose of an equitable drainage? Yes. I would be satisfied so far as the thing was equitable.
41. And received, as well as others, a benefit? I would be as willing to contribute for the benefit I received as any man, but not more.
42. By Mr. Jones: Who do you think should elect this Board to which you would confide the management of this system of drainage? The Board, in my opinion, should be elected either by freeholders or leaseholders, who have an interest in the place.
43. You mean by that, that the landowners who were benefited by the drains should be assessed to bear the expenses? There are very few who are not interested in the matter. No Board would think of putting an assessment on the persons who derived no benefit from it. It would not stand to either sense, justice, or reason.
44. You would not let any person be elected to the Board who had not land to be drained by the system of drainage, or who did not contribute to the same? I don't see what they would want to be elected for.
45. All persons who had leases for five years and had got land to drain, and contributed to the assessment, you would let be elected? Yes.

46. Would you give a person holding a larger quantity of land than others more votes—would you give them votes according to the proportion of land they held, or the amount of assessment levied? No, I would not give them any more votes.

Mr. Henry
Macnamara.

47. Supposing a person had five hundred acres, and that he contributed £500 towards the expense of drainage, would you only give him the same amount of influence in an election as a person who had fifty acres, and who only contributed £50? I would only give him a vote, for I don't think such a case would apply to my neighbourhood.

30 June, 1858.

48. You are applying your remarks to Miller's Forest, where the farms are about fifty or sixty acres? Yes.

49. In that locality this state of things does not exist—there are no very large proprietors?
No.

50. By the Government appointing this Board, I understand you to mean—you think an Act ought to be passed to enable the persons residing in Miller's Forest, who have land, to join together to carry out the system of drainage? Yes. There is no use in the Board framing rules unless they have some power or authority from the Government to take and pass the drains along.

51. You don't mean by that, that the Government should directly interfere with the arrangements? I think not, further than to make a law giving power to the Local Board.

52. All you want is Legislative sanction for the persons you appoint to carry out drainage arrangements? I don't know what the people want—that is what I think ought to be done.

53. You don't approve of the Government interfering with surveyors? No. I would not give three pins for the opinions of the surveyor, merely. There is not a farmer who does not know what is required. What would pay the surveyor would pay a lot of navvies to do half the work.

54. You would leave it then in the hands of those who are interested? Yes, I think so. So far as the drainage of the land goes, I don't see any instructions are required. Any old farmer knows how to drain the land. If there was a large drain run up the centre of Heaslip's Lagoon—it is the lowest ground in the Forest—if this were drained, the result would be to drain all the higher grounds. There would also be two or three small drains required.

55. By Mr. Gordon: In your opinion, Heaslip's Lagoon is the only portion of the Forest that requires draining? I think if it is properly drained all the rest would be benefited. When that lagoon fills up it spreads and rises until it covers the good land.

56. Don't you think the system of drainage in the dry seasons injurious to the high land? No; from experience I think it would not.

57. By the Chairman: Have you anything to suggest about which we have not asked you any questions? No, I don't think I have; without it be whether the Government should not grant us some assistance in making these drains—in the shape of a loan.

58. And the interest to be paid by the assessment? I think so; but it would be better if we got the money without interest, rather than pay it.

TUESDAY, 6 JULY, 1858.

Present :—

MR. JONES:

MR. PIDDINGTON.

MR. SCOTT.

A. W. SCOTT, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Mr. George Weakley called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: Where do you reside? At Hexham.

2. Have you lands of your own there, or are you a tenant? I am a tenant of Mr. Flood, and have lands of my own besides.

Mr. George Weakley.

3. Where are those lands situated? Some in Alnwick, and some in Miller's Forest.

6 July, 1858.

4. Have you been long in the district? About seventeen years.

5. Are your lands high or low, or both? Principally low.

6. Cultivation lands? Yes

7. Subject to floods? In a great measure. The whole is subject to flood when there is an extraordinary flood in the Hunter.

8. Are they injured at all by ordinary floods? About a fourth of the low lands are injured by ordinary floods.

9. Do you suffer much injury from continual rain without there being so much as to cause an ordinary flood? I do not, a great deal; but there is a great deal of land flooded by rain from the want of flood-gates and proper drains to take it away from the swampy land.

10. What is your opinion with respect to the drainage, as to its effect on the adjoining lands, suppose a general system of drainage were carried on? It would do a great deal of good to have a system of drainage—flood-gates, and large drains for taking off the water quickly. It would not then do nearly so much damage.

11. Of the land belonging to yourself, and that tenanted by you from Mr. Flood, how many acres would be benefited by drainage—how many would be brought into more permanent cultivation? About a hundred or a hundred and fifty acres.

12. That are now useless? That are now useless for cultivation.

13. What is the value of these low cultivation lands per acre, either to purchase or in the shape of rent? In their present state they are not worth more than five shillings an acre rent.

14. What would be their value if an efficient system of drainage were adopted? I suppose about £1 an acre rent.

Mr. George Weakley.

6 July, 1858.

15. It would increase their value about four-fold? Yes.
16. Would the drainage in your own neighbourhood be expensive, or otherwise? It would be expensive.
17. How much an acre do you think it would cost: you say about a hundred acres would be rendered available by this drainage—what would the drainage cost in proportion to the value? A mere trifle for the value of the land.
18. What do you think would be the expense? That would require some consideration.
19. It would be trifling, compared with the increased value of the land? Yes.
20. Would you recommend that there should be a general system of drainage adopted? Yes. I think it would be very beneficial to most part of the inhabitants.
21. How would you propose that the expense should be met? I should think myself that the proprietors of the land would do their best to see to it: that there should be Local Boards, and the proprietors of lands benefited should bear the expense.
22. You would have a kind of assessment upon the lands? If one party were agreeable to drain and another were not, a law would be required to compel the parties who were not agreeable.
23. Supposing such a law to be passed, you would have a Local Board appointed? Yes.
24. And this Local Board should have power to assess the land? Yes.
25. How would you have that Board appointed—by the Government or by the proprietors of the district? The Board should be appointed from among the inhabitants of the place where the drainage was required.
26. You would not have a general system, so that one Board should manage all the various places, but would have Local Boards for each spot requiring drainage? Yes.
27. Have you spoken upon the subject with any of your neighbours? No, not a great deal; I have spoken to Mr. Bradley respecting the drainage of Mr. Christie's estate.
28. You mean Mr. Barton Bradley, the solicitor? Yes; he is the agent of Mr. Christie, who has something like 800 acres of swamp land which is of no value in its present state, and it might be drained for something like £600 or £700.
29. By Mr. Jones: What rent is he now receiving for these 800 acres? Not two shillings and sixpence an acre, I suppose.
30. What rent do you suppose he would be able to get for this land if it were thoroughly drained? £1 an acre.
31. By the Chairman: But Mr. Bradley has no small proprietor to interfere with him at all? No.
32. By Mr. Jones: Are you acquainted with Ash Island? Yes.
33. Is any of the land there subject to be swamped and flooded from heavy rains? Yes.
34. What quantity do you suppose is liable to be swamped? It is liable to be swamped by spring tides as much as by rains.
35. What quantity of land is liable to be flooded by these causes? About two-thirds of the land—nearly two thousand acres.
36. Is the land liable to be flooded of good quality for cultivation purposes? I believe it would be of good quality provided the water were kept off; but the water lying on it, the land becomes sour and salt.
37. Would it be very costly to drain the portion that is liable to be flooded? Not expensive in proportion to the value of the land.
38. What do you suppose to be the annual value of the land in its present condition? In its present condition a great portion is not worth two shillings and sixpence an acre per annum—I am alluding to the swamps.
39. What do you suppose would be the value if it were drained? From £8 to £10 per acre.
40. What annual rental do you suppose it would bring in? Putting it at the lowest, £1 an acre.
41. What do you suppose the cost of draining this estate would be? Something like £600, I should think.
42. That, of course, is more favorably placed for draining purposes than the ordinary lands on the Hunter liable to be swamped? It could be effected more easily, because there are no mountain creeks on Ash Island.
43. It therefore can be drained more cheaply than the ordinary lands? Yes.
44. Do you know whether, apart from the lands with which you are immediately connected, whether there is any great quantity of land on the Hunter and its tributary rivers—the Paterson and the Williams—liable to be flooded by heavy rains? Yes, an immense quantity; on one side there is Mr. Windeyer's swamp at Tomago, and on the Williams River there is a very extensive swamp, adjoining Mr. Mossman's.
45. On the eastern bank of the Williams, the right bank going from the mouth of the river? That is in Gloucester. On the Paterson there is not any swamp that I am aware of. On the south-west side of the Hunter from Newcastle the first is Wentworth's Swamp, or Hexham Swamp, which is very extensive; the next is Hickey's—part Hickey's and Eales'—and Mr. Flood's, and Christie's.
46. Are there any on the Durham side of the Hunter behind Nelson's Plains, between the Hunter and the Williams? Barty's Swamp lies between the two rivers.
47. Can you form any rough estimate of the total quantity of land subject to being flooded by ordinary rains, and which is capable of being drained, on the Lower Hunter, from Maitland downwards? Taking the south-west side of the Hunter, from Maitland to Newcastle, I should think there are 20,000 acres.
48. That is only on the Northumberland bank of the Hunter? Yes.
49. If that land were drained would it generally be of good quality? Yes.
50. What would it produce chiefly? Maize. I do not consider that wheat would be safe, as the land there will always be subject to floods for a short time, even if it were drained, on account of the mountain creeks.

51. The mountain creeks bring down more water than the outlet of the narrow channel would let off, and it would flow on to the land? Yes.
52. By the Chairman: Drainage would improve the grass for the cattle? Yes.
53. By Mr. Jones: Would the land produce potatoes and other vegetables? Yes, great portions of it. Mr. George Weakley.
6 July, 1868.
54. These lands are favorably situated for the conveyance of produce to market? Yes, either by the river or by railway.
55. Produce could be sent with very great facility to Sydney? Yes.
56. You are aware that there is a great quantity of land on the Durham and Gloucester bank of the river liable to swamp from the same causes? There is more on the northern than on the southern bank.
57. Are you aware whether these lands would be of good quality, supposing they were drained? I believe they would be of good quality, after two or three years, when they had been sweetened by the rains.
58. They are also almost equally favorably placed for the produce being shipped to Sydney and other markets? Yes, the whole of them.
59. So that if these lands were thoroughly drained and brought into cultivation they would add very largely to the annual produce of the district? Yes.
60. And in a corresponding degree would add to the supply sent to Sydney and elsewhere? Yes.
61. Which would be a great advantage to the district itself and also to the metropolis, by giving larger quantities of supplies to the latter, and benefiting the tenants and owners of the land? Yes.
62. By Mr. Piddington: Have you any idea of the comparative quality of the land on these swamps—do you think, for instance, the land on Wentworth's Swamp is equally as good as the land on Barty's Swamp? I think it is nearly of one quality.
63. As you approach the sea, do you think the character of the swamp land either deteriorates or improves? No, it is all alike, I think.
64. With respect to Mr. Flood's land, which you have spoken of, you say about a hundred acres are reclaimable? Yes.
65. Is not Mr. Flood in a position to drain that land now if he chooses? No; he would be obliged to drain Mr. Hickey's and Mr. Eales' land, as well as that of other parties.
66. Messrs. Eales and Hickey are owners of large portions of land,—are you not of opinion, if a law were passed enabling these large proprietors to drain the land, the expense should be borne by the various landowners concerned? Yes.
67. By the Chairman: You could not drain Mr. Flood's land, or Woodford, without passing through the land of other proprietors? No.
68. To get that outlet through whose lands do you pass? Mr. Eales' and Mr. Hickey's.
69. Do you think Mr. Eales, Mr. Hickey, or others, would agree to have their land drained unless there were some proper system enacted by Government? They would refuse: they would make some objection; and, I believe, that would be the case wherever there were a number of small proprietors.
70. You think one obstinate person might injure a number of neighbouring proprietors by refusing to drain, unless it were made compulsory? Yes; one might injure ten or dozen.
71. By Mr. Piddington: I think you said you are not acquainted with any swamp at the back of the Paterson? No, I am not acquainted with the Paterson at all.
72. By the Chairman: Have you anything further to suggest to the Committee on the subject of drainage? There is one point to which I have not referred, namely, the outlets for the water connected with the mountain creeks. These would require to have very large flood-gates to give the water vent. The water comes from an immense distance back from the mountain lands, and unless there are ample outlets it overflows the land.

ASSESSMENT ON STOCK.

(CERTAIN INHABITANTS OF THE DISTRICT OF NEW ENGLAND.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 22 June, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Agriculturists, Gold Miners, Town Residents, and other Inhabitants of the District of New England,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners are of opinion that any Assessment on Stock Bill that may be passed by the Legislative Assembly should have a retrospective aspect, beginning from the date at which the assessment formerly levied expired, viz, the 31st December, 1857.

That your Petitioners are also of opinion, that in consequence of several months having elapsed during which no assessment whatever on stock has been levied, the late period of the Session, and the deficiency in the revenue to meet the estimated expenditure, a uniform rate of £7 10s. per 1,000 sheep, or an equivalent in cattle, for the year 1858 only, would not be too high a rate to be levied during that period.

That your Petitioners would likewise humbly suggest for consideration by your Honorable House, with reference to any measure that may be introduced for the purpose of fixing the rate of assessment from the termination of 1858 to the expiration of the existing leases in the unsettled districts, the propriety of classifying districts according to their relative pastoral capabilities; and they also feel justified in advocating the principle of dividing the runs in each district into distinct classes, through the agency of sworn assessors appointed by the Government; and that the said runs, after being so classed, should be valued according to their district class and area, by the Government, in conformity with the rate or rates of assessment authorized by the Parliament.

That your Petitioners having the interests of the Colonists generally at heart, humbly suggest that the views which they have advanced may meet with favorable consideration at the hands of your Honorable House.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

ASSESSMENT ON STOCK.

(PETITION FROM NEW ENGLAND AND MACLEAY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 30 June, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Graziers, holding Squatting Licenses in the Districts of New England and the Macleay, and other Residents therein,—

SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners have heard with alarm, that it is proposed to levy an assessment of £7 10s. per 1,000 sheep, or 160 head of cattle, upon all stock depastured in the Squatting Districts, in addition to the license fee, making a total of nearly 2½d. per head upon sheep, and 15 pence upon cattle per annum.

That your Petitioners would beg to bring under the notice of your Honorable House, that both from their distance from Sydney and the nature of their climate and soil, they are unable to fatten stock fit for slaughter, and are therefore compelled to sell them as store stock for Port Phillip, or other districts where they can be fattened, and obtaining an average price of 30s. per head for cattle and 7s. 6d. for sheep, when four years old,—an amount which will not enable your Petitioners to pay the proposed assessment.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that such an assessment may not be imposed upon these districts, but such smaller amount as to your Honorable House may seem fair and just, and which your Petitioners will cheerfully pay.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

PASTORAL LANDS ASSESSMENT AND RENT ACT.

(PETITION FROM MR. F. GARDINER.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.
The Petition of the undersigned Squatter and Sheepholder in the Darling Downs District,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner for the last five years has been in possession of country on the Mooney River, in the Darling Downs District, and estimated to depasture twenty thousand sheep; but, during that period, from the nature of the country, he has been unable to keep half that number.

That, during the early part of that period of five years he suffered much from drought, and, eventually, from floods, which carried off a large number of sheep.

That great scarcity of labor, high wages, and carriage of produce, have barely permitted Petitioner to meet expenses at the year's end under the old Assessment Act.

That the nature of the country on that part of the Mooney where Petitioner resides, and for some considerable extent beyond, will never allow sheep to be depastured to the same extent—by one-half, or one-third—that can be done on the richer and more open parts of the Darling Downs District.

That your Petitioner is aware during his three years residence on the Mooney, and travels and observations on the surrounding country, that many stations in the Darling Downs District are capable of, and have, and do depasture one-third and one-half more in number of sheep than the run has been estimated for.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays that your Honorable House will take into your serious consideration that clause which imposes an uniform rate of Assessment, detrimental to the small squatter and legitimate occupier, but which the large squatter may consider a boon.

That, although the increased Assessment and Rent Act for 1858 has now passed your Honorable House, Petitioner prays that a clause may be introduced for the re-assessment or adjustment of such lands as he now holds, or so modify the present Act that it may not prove ruinous to him.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

ASSESSMENT ON RUNS.

No. 1.

THE PRIVATE SECRETARY to THE CROWN LAW OFFICERS.

Government House,Sydney, 9 October, 1858.

GENTLEMEN,

I have the honor, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, to transmit to you the accompanying copy of a Bill, passed by the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly, and presented to His Excellency for the Royal Assent, intituled, "A Bill to impose an Assessment on Runs in the Unsettled and Intermediate Districts, and to increase the Rent of Lands leased for pastoral purposes within the Settled Districts of New South Wales." Also—
 "A Bill to authorise additional works by the Pyrmont Bridge Company, and to amend their Act of Incorporation."

2. The Governor General requests that you will carefully peruse these Bills, with the view of ascertaining whether, in your opinion, there is any objection to His Excellency giving his assent thereto, or whether he is required, under the provisions of the Constitution or any other Acts, or the Royal Instructions, to withhold his assent to them, or to reserve them for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE

ALFRED DENISON,

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL and Private Secretary.

THE SOLICITOR GENERAL.

No. 2.

Minute on the "Increased Assessment and Rent Act of 1858."

The Law Officers having been called upon, in the ordinary course of their duty, to report to His Excellency the Governor General whether there is any objection, in their opinion, to His Excellency giving his assent to the "Increased Assessment and Rent Act of 1858," or whether he is required, under the provisions of the Constitution or any other Acts, or the Royal Instructions, to withhold his assent to it, or to reserve it for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure,—it seems desirable, having regard to a protest signed by six Members of the Legislative Council, to place upon record the grounds which have induced the Attorney General and Solicitor General to recommend His Excellency to give his assent to the Bill, notwithstanding the protest in question.

2. That protest is couched in the following terms:—

"Protest against the passing of the Pastoral Lands Assessment and Rent Bill.

"Dissentient:—

"Because, although it be admitted that such an administration of Crown Lands is "desirable as would tend to restrain the abuse commonly known as 'Run hunting,'
 "and although it be also admitted that the mode of assessment contemplated
 "by this Bill is adapted to this purpose, no such Bill can be passed in respect
 "of Runs already taken up, without involving a breach of contract, and that of "a contract excluded from the interference of this Legislature by the terms
 "of its own Constitution, inasmuch as,—

"(1.) The Runs held in respect of Leases within the Unsettled and Intermediate "Districts are so held by virtue of Her Majesty's Order in Council of 9th
 "March, 1847, Chap. II, under a rent thereby fixed for the full term of lease;
 "and although such rent is by the same Order declared to be without prejudice
 "to assessments of the Colonial Legislature, these are manifestly limited by the "context

" context to assessments on actual sheep and cattle of like nature with the " assessment which then subsisted ; or at all events to assessments which can be " distinguished, in something beyond the mere name, from a direct increase of " rent."

" (2.) This view of the case is rendered conclusive by the established rules of legal
 " interpretation, which require that the language of a Lease shall be construed
 " favorably to the Lessee, and against the Lessor ; and that an exception shall " be construed in its most limited sense, so as to give the fullest effect to " the affirmative part of the instrument.

" (3) The Colonial Act 17 Victoria, No. 41, under which, as ratified by the " Imperial Statute 18 and 19 Victoria, cap. 54, the powers of this Legislature " alone subsist, excludes in express terms from its interference the rights of " Licensed Occupants or Lessees of Crown Lands under the then subsisting
 " Crown Lands Act, or Her Majesty's Orders in Council, and the same
 " restriction on the power of this Legislature is imposed by the Imperial Act
 " 18 and 19 Vict., c. 56, transferring thereto, in other respects, the control " of the Colonial Crown Lands.

" E. DEAS THOMSON.

" G. K. HOLDEN.

" FRANCIS L. S. MEREWETHER.

" JAMES MITCHELL.

" J. NORTON.

" ARTHUR M. A'BECKETT."

3. The Law Officers are of opinion that the Bill can be passed in respect of runs already taken up, without either involving any breach of contract on the part of the Crown or any extra constitutional assumption of power by the Legislature. They think that the language of the Orders in Council of 9th March, 1847, Chap. II, s. 4, plainly shows that an assessment on runs was contemplated by those Orders as well as on sheep and cattle. If the framers of those orders had had nothing but sheep and cattle in view as subject matters for assessment, they would have stopped short at the end of the 4th line of the section, or, at all events at the word " assessments," in the 6th line of it. " Such assessments " might then have been construed " such assessments as aforesaid," that is to say, " the existing or any " future assessments of taxes or rates on sheep and cattle." But when the Orders in Council, after providing not only for existing but future assessments on sheep and cattle, go on to say that the payment of rent shall in no way interfere with the right of the Colonial Legislature to impose from time to time such assessment as may be deemed advisable, it is evident that a power was reserved to the Colonial Legislature to assess something more than sheep and cattle, namely, the runs on which those sheep and cattle were depastured.

ALFRED P. LUTWYCHE,

Solicitor General.

Crown Law Offices,
 Sydney, 18 October, 1858.

No. 3.

I am unable to agree in the above opinion of the Solicitor General. It appears to me to be quite clear that the 58th section of the Constitution Act prohibits the Parliament of New South Wales from passing an Act to levy on runs taken up at the time of the passing of that Act any assessment different in character from the assessments then existing.

SCAB AND CATARRH IN SHEEP.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on 27th ultimo "to inquire into and report upon the working of the Act 19 Vict., No. 27, and to prepare a Bill for the prevention of the disease called Scab in Sheep," and to whom were referred "all proceedings of the Select Committee of last Session;"—have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee having carefully considered the evidence of various sheep farmers and other persons examined before the Committee of last Session, and having deliberated on the Scab in Sheep Act, 19 Vict., No. 27, have prepared a Bill for the better prevention of Scab in Sheep, which they now beg leave to submit for the consideration of your Honorable House.

Your Committee have considered it unnecessary to include "Catarrh" in this Bill, believing that the interests of the Colony would be best consulted by the introduction of a Bill, the provisions of which should be exclusively confined to this disease. They are, however, of opinion, that the enactments still in force relative thereto are for the present amply sufficient to meet all probable requirements.

It has been proved to the satisfaction of your Committee that the late Act was based upon sound principles, and has most effectually tended to eradicate a disease which at one time threatened to overrun the whole Colony, and involve in its progress the decrease of sheep, and deterioration of the fleece.

After a careful consideration of the evidence, and all the facts brought under the notice of your Committee, the following alterations in the Act 19 Victoriae, No. 27, have suggested themselves:—

- (1.) That the compulsory destruction of sheep infected with "scab" be extended from 14 to 28 days, and that sheep thus infected may be boiled down, shorn, or skins felled upon the station of their owners, or securely packed in bales, and forwarded to the port of destination; but under such circumstances the proprietors of the diseased sheep will not be entitled to any compensation.
- (2.) That the penalty for driving sheep unbranded be reduced from "not exceeding two shillings" to "not exceeding sixpence."
- (3.) That the penalty for removal of imported sheep from any seaport in the Colony without the certificate of an Inspector be increased from £20 to £30 per head; and that such imported sheep, although infected with scab, (so long as they are kept in a secure stable or shed approved by such Inspector), shall not be liable to be destroyed until the expiration of three months subsequent to their importation.
- (4.) That your Committee are unanimously of opinion that the appointment of Inspectors in the Country Districts has not been found to work satisfactorily, whilst, at the same time, this system involved a very considerable outlay of the funds assessed under the late Act; and they therefore recommend that any read by the Clerk.

Committee deliberated as to their course of proceeding.

Motion made and Question—"That Henry Lane, Esquire, Secretary to the Treasury, be summoned before this Committee, as a witness, for Thursday next, to be then examined with respect to the contradictions appearing in these documents"—agreed to.

[Adjourned till Thursday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 5 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

Gideon Scott Lang, Esquire, in the Chair.

Mr. Cox,

Mr. Hargrave,

Mr. Suttor,

Mr. G. Macleay,

Mr. Lee,

Mr. Robertson.

By direction of the Chairman, Resolutions of the House referring to the Committee on 3rd instant,—

"1. Two Petitions from Messrs. John Giblett and William Bowman, respectively, relative to the destruction of their sheep under the Scab Act, ordered to be printed on the 9th and 23rd January last.

"2. Diseases in Sheep Laws Consolidation Bill,"

read by the Clerk.

Committee considered the papers referred to them under the Resolution of the House, dated the 30th ultimo, in which certain contradictions apparently existed.

Mr. Henry Lane, Secretary to the Treasury, examined.

Motion made, and Question—"That Thomas Lang, Esquire, be summoned before this Committee, as a witness, for Wednesday next, to be then examined in reference to the discrepancies in these papers"—agreed to.

Committee then proceeded to consider the Petition of Mr. John Giblett.

Petition read.

The Chairman having brought under the notice of the Committee that by the last paragraph of a Report of the Select Committee of the late Legislature on the "Scab in Sheep Act of 1854," it would appear that Petitioner's case had been previously adjudicated on, read the evidence given by Mr. Giblett before said Committee. (Vide Minutes of Evidence taken before Select Committee on Scab in Sheep Act of 1854, page 33.)

Committee deliberated thereon.

Motion made (Mr. G. Macleay) and Question—"That E. Cox, Esquire, J.P., be summoned before this Committee, as a witness on this Petition, for Wednesday next"—agreed to.

Committee then deliberated on the principles of the Act, 19 Vict., No. 27.

The names of several persons whose evidence, it was stated, would be found very serviceable in furthering this inquiry, more particularly as regards the working of the present Act, having been submitted by various members of the Committee then present, the Chairman instructed the Clerk to make a list of such names, as a datum to guide the Committee in the future selection of witnesses; and

The Clerk having taken such list accordingly,—

Motion made (Mr. Hargrave) and Question—"That M. Goggs, Esquire, be summoned before this Committee, as a witness, for Wednesday next"—agreed to.

[Adjourned till Wednesday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

WEDNESDAY,

WEDNESDAY, 11 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Lee,Mr. Hargrave,
Mr. Cox.

Mr. Suttor, in the absence of the Chairman, was called to the Chair.

By direction of the Chairman, Resolution of the House referring to the Committee, on 6th instant,—“The Petition of Mr. Arthur Charles Bartlett, praying compensation for “Sheep destroyed under the provisions of the Scab Act, 18 Victoria, No. 26, and ordered to “be printed on the 23rd October, 1857”—read by the Clerk.

Petition then read.

Committee deliberated, and determined to take the evidence of the witnesses then in attendance.

Whereupon,—

Mr. T. Lang examined, with reference to the discrepancies in the papers referred to the Committee on 30th ultimo, and the working of the existing Scab Act.

Mr. M. Goggs examined, with reference to the working of the existing Scab Act.

Mr. A. C. Bartlett examined, with reference to his Petition.

Mr. E. Cox, summoned under a Resolution agreed to by the Committee on 5th instant, was not in attendance.

[Adjourned till Friday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

FRIDAY, 13 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—Mr. G. Macleay,
Mr. Hargrave,
Mr. Robertson,

Mr. Lee.

Mr. Cox,
Mr. Flood,
Mr. Suttor,

Mr. G. Macleay, in the absence of the Chairman, was called to the Chair.

Committee proceeded to consider the principles of the Scab in Sheep Act, 19 Vic., No. 27, with a view to repeal the same, and frame a new Bill in lieu thereof.

The Chairman, however, pointed out, that the tenor of the Resolution of the House appointing the Committee gave them no power to frame a new Bill, but restricted them to an inquiry into, and Report upon, the working of the existing Acts of Council referring to Scab and Catarrh in Sheep.

Whereupon Committee deliberated, and it was Resolved:—

“That application be made to the House for such extension of the powers of the Committee as will admit of the preparation of a Bill to alter and amend the Laws relating to Scab and Catarrh in Sheep, provided that it shall eventually seem to them expedient to prepare such Bill.”

The Chairman then, at the request of the Clerk, brought under the notice of the Committee the extensive marginal corrections made by Mr. Henry Lane on the manuscript of the evidence given by him before them on the 5th instant, which, however, were in the wording, and not in the substance thereof, and desired the opinion of the Committee as to whether it would be the more expedient course to print the evidence shewing the corrections, or as in the original Manuscript.

Committee deliberated; and it was Resolved:—

“That as the corrections made by Mr. Lane, though considerable, are made with a view to elucidate his evidence, and are not in contravention to the substance of what he stated during his examination before the Committee, his evidence be printed, showing those alterations.”

A letter from Mr. T. G. Rusden, M. P., to the Chairman, recommending that the Committee should either examine, or make written application to certain scientific gentlemen, whose names were set forth in his communication, and suggesting certain Queries for such purpose; together with a copy of a letter addressed by Mr. Holthorne to the Editor of the Lancet, on the 11th July, 1857, on the “Existence of the ova of the Acarus Scabici in Itch,”—read by the Clerk.

Committee deliberated on the expediency of complying with the recommendation made in Mr. Rusden's letter; and it was Resolved:—

“1. That as the Committee conceive that little practical good will result from the examination of these gentlemen, or from written application to them, and much time would be necessarily occupied in such inquiry, to the exclusion of more serviceable evidence, they deem it inexpedient to accede to the request made in Mr. Rusden's communication.”

“2. That Mr. Rusden be informed of the tenor of this Resolution.”

A further letter from Mr. T. G. Rusden, M. P., to the Chairman, suggesting the advisability of examining or making written application to Mr. Thomas Rutledge, of Carwoola, Bungendore, for his opinion relative to the existing laws relating to Scab and Catarrh in Sheep, as a person eminently qualified, by experience, to give valuable information on the subject,—read by the Clerk.

Motion made (Mr. Robertson) and Question—“That Thomas Rutledge, Esquire, be summoned before this Committee, as a witness, for Thursday next”—agreed to.

Committee then proceeded to consider the “Diseases in Sheep Laws Consolidation Bill,” referred to them under a Resolution of the House, dated 3rd instant.

Motion

Motion made (Mr. Flood) and Question—

- "1. That it is expedient to examine the framer of this Bill prior to agreeing to any course of proceeding with respect thereto.
- "2. That T. G. Rusden, Esquire, M. P., be consequently requested to attend before the Committee, as a witness, on Thursday next."

Agreed to.

Committee further considered the Petition of John Giblett.

Motion made (Mr. Cox) and Question—"That as it appears that Mr. E. Cox will be prevented from attending to give his evidence before the Committee; a communication be forthwith addressed to that gentleman, requesting him to furnish a written statement of the circumstances attending the refusal of a certificate to Petitioner for the destruction of the sheep specified in his Petition,"—agreed to.

Committee then further deliberated on the principles of the present Scab in Sheep Act.
[Adjourned till Thursday next, at Ten o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 19 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

Mr. G. Macleay,	Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Donaldson,	Mr. Cox,
Mr. Lee,	Mr. Hargrave.

Mr. G. Macleay, in the absence of the Chairman, was called to the Chair.

Mr. T. G. Rusden, M. P., and Mr. W. Busby, examined.

The Chairman, at the request of the Clerk, informed the Committee that Mr. Rutledge had left Sydney, and consequently had not been able to be served with a summons, under the Resolution agreed to by the Committee on 13th instant.

Mr. G. Macleay then withdrawing, Mr. Suttor was called to the Chair.

Committee considered the Petition of Mr. William Bowman.

Mr. W. Bowman, M. P., the Petitioner, examined.

Committee then further deliberated on the Petition of Mr. John Giblett.

By direction of the Chairman, a Statement from Edward Cox, Esquire, J. P., in reply to a letter addressed to him, in accordance with a Resolution agreed to by the Committee on the 13th instant,—read by the Clerk.

Motion made (Mr. Cox) and Question—"That this communication, together with its appendices, be printed in the Appendix to such Report, as the Committee may hereafter think fit to make,"—agreed to. (Vide separate Appendix A.)

[Adjourned till to-morrow, at Ten o'clock.]

FRIDAY, 20 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

Mr. Suttor,	Mr. Robertson,
Mr. Donaldson,	Mr. Hargrave,
Mr. Lee,	Mr. Cox.

Mr. Suttor, in the absence of the Chairman, was called to the Chair.

Mr. H. Dangar, Dr. Jenkins, and Mr. William Clements, Scab Inspector in Sydney, examined.

Committee further deliberated on the Petition of Mr. William Bowman.

A letter—from Mr. William Bowman to the Chairman, dated 20th instant, relative to his Petition—read. (Vide separate Appendix B.)

[Adjourned till Tuesday next, at Ten o'clock.]

TUESDAY, 24 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

Mr. Suttor,	Mr. Donaldson,
Mr. Hargrave,	Mr. Cox,
Mr. Osborne,	Mr. Lee.

Mr. Suttor, in the absence of the Chairman, was called to the Chair.

Committee further deliberated on the principles of the Act, 19 Vic., No. 27.

[Adjourned till Friday next, at Ten o'clock.]

FRIDAY, 27 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

Mr. Suttor,	Mr. Lee,
Mr. Hargrave,	Mr. Cox,
Mr. Donaldson,	Mr. Robertson.

Mr. Suttor, in the absence of the Chairman, was called to the Chair.

Mr. W. Bowman, M. P., further examined, with reference to his Petition.

Witness then withdrew.

In the course of his examination witness having handed in copies of certain depositions taken before the Bench of Magistrates at Cassilis, on the 30 June, 12 September, and 10 October, 1855, relative to the destruction of his sheep, the Chairman read the same.

Committee deliberated.

Motion made (Mr. Robertson) and Question proposed—"That the Petitioner having satisfactorily proved that he took all reasonable means in his power to comply bonâ fide with the law, in the matter of the destruction of his sheep—not, however, to the number of 3,400, as set forth in one of the allegations of his Petition, but to that of 3,279 as adduced by the evidence given before them—the Committee recommend that compensation for that number, amounting to £655 16s., be awarded to Mr. Bowman."

Amendment proposed (Mr. Cox)—"That this Question be amended, by the omission of all the words after the word 'That,' at the commencement, with a view to add the words 'compensation only to the amount of £409 8s. be awarded to Mr. Bowman, this being the entire sum to which he is justly entitled, he having failed to make good his claim for the additional amount of £246 8s., proposed to be paid in compensation for the destruction of his first flock, consisting of 1,232 sheep, owing to such destruction not having taken place until five weeks after their infection with scab was known to his overseer.'"

Committee deliberated.

Question put—"That the words proposed to be omitted stand part of the Question."

Committee divided.

Ayes, 2.

No, 1.

Mr. Lee,
Mr. Robertson.

Mr. Cox.

Whereupon Original Question put, and agreed to.

Motion made (Mr. Robertson) and Question—"That the purport of this Resolution be embodied in the Report"—agreed to.

The Chairman, at the request of the Clerk, informed the Committee that Mr. John Giblett was not in attendance, in compliance with the summons addressed to him, neither had any reply as yet been received thereto.

Mr. Robertson, a Member of the Committee, desired permission to put in a certain Statement from Mr. Meston, with reference to Scab and Catarrh in Sheep.

Motion made (Mr. Lee) and Question—"That this Statement be received and printed in the Appendix to the Report of the Committee"—agreed to. (Vide separate Appendix C.)

Committee further deliberated on the papers referred for their consideration on the 30th ultimo; and it was Resolved:—

"1. That in the opinion of the Committee, the discrepancies apparently existing in these documents are satisfactorily explained by the evidence of Mr. Henry Lane on the 5th, and Mr. Thomas Lang on the 11th instant."

"2. That the purport of this Resolution be embodied in the Report."

Committee then further considered the "Diseases in Sheep Laws Consolidation Bill"; and it was Resolved:—

"1. That as the main principles of this Bill differ so essentially from the opinions entertained by the majority of the Committee, it is advisable, so as to avoid any unnecessary waste of time, to at once decide on its rejection."

"2. That the purport of this Resolution be embodied in the Report."

Committee then deliberated on the expediency of referring the framing of certain Resolutions to form the basis of their recommendations with respect to the proposed alterations in the existing Laws relating to Scab and Catarrh in Sheep to a Sub-Committee.

[Adjourned till Wednesday, 9th proximo, at Ten o'clock.]

WEDNESDAY, 9 DECEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

Mr. G. Macleay,
Mr. Cox,

Mr. Hargrave.

Mr. Robertson,
Mr. Suttor,

Mr. G. Macleay having informed the Committee that, owing to continued severe indisposition, Mr. Lang would be unable to resume his duties as Chairman,—

Mr. Robertson was called to the Chair.

By direction of the Chairman, Resolution of the House referring to Committee on 1st instant,—"Two Petitions from Mr. T. G. Rusden, M.P., and Mr. A. B. Lawson, respectively, relative to the destruction of Sheep under the Scab in Sheep Act,"—read by the Clerk.

Petitions then read.

Committee deliberated thereupon; and it was Resolved:—

"1. That the Committee are unable to entertain favorably the prayers of these Petitions, in consequence of their being contrary to the provisions of the Scab in Sheep Act."

"2. That the purport of this Resolution be embodied in the Report."

The Chairman laid before the Committee an analysis of "An Act for preventing and getting rid of Scab and Catarrh in Sheep."

Committee deliberated.

Motion made (Mr. Suttor) and Question—"That twenty proof copies of this Analysis be printed as speedily as possible for the information of Members of the Committee"—agreed to.

Committee further considered the Petition of John Giblett.

Motion

Motion made and Question—"That a summons be again addressed to Mr. Giblett, directing him to appear before the Committee in support of his Petition on Thursday, the 17th instant"—agreed to.

Committee further considered the Petition of A. C. Bartlett.

Motion made and Question,—

"1. That the Committee, in the absence of the Certificate with which Mr. Bartlett was directed to furnish them, are unable to arrive at any definite decision with reference to his Petition, though from the facts respecting it, which have come under their knowledge, they feel disposed favorably to regard its prayer."

"2. That the purport of this Resolution be embodied in the Report."—agreed to.

Committee then deliberated on heads of Report.

Motion made (Mr. Hargrave) and Question—"That the Chairman be now requested to prepare a draft Report for the consideration of the Committee, in accordance with the Resolutions agreed to by them"—agreed to.

[Adjourned till to-morrow, at Ten o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 10 DECEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

J. Robertson, Esquire, in the Chair.

Mr. G. Macleay,
Mr. Hargrave,

Mr. Flood.

Mr. Lee,
Mr. Suttor,

Mr. J. Butchart examined.

Committee deliberated.

[Adjourned till Thursday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 17 DECEMBER, 1857.

Members Present:—

J. Robertson, Esquire, in the Chair.

Mr. G. Macleay,
Mr. Lee,

Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Cox.

The Chairman stated that he had called a meeting of the Committee this day, for the purpose of laying before them, for their consideration, a certificate in the case of Mr. A. C. Bartlett, received since their last meeting from the Bench of Magistrates at Wee Waa, which was to the effect that, on the day upon which Mr. Bartlett applied to the Bench at that place for compensation for 1,927 sheep destroyed under the Scab Act, no Magistrates were present.

Certificate then read.

Committee deliberated.

Motion made (Mr. G. Macleay) and Question—"That, as the Certificate of Mr. Bartlett is now in the hands of the Committee, it is expedient to re-consider the Resolution agreed to by them on the 9th instant, with reference to his Petition"—agreed to.

Committee then further considered the Petition of Mr. Bartlett.

Motion made (Mr. G. Macleay) and Question—

"1. That in the opinion of this Committee the allegations contained in the Petition of Mr. A. C. Bartlett are now fully substantiated, and the Petitioner is therefore clearly entitled to compensation for the 1,927 sheep, destroyed under the Scab Act of 1854."

"2. That the purport of this Resolution be embodied in the Report."

Agreed to.

Whereupon Motion made (Mr. Cox) and Question—"That the Certificate furnished by the Bench of Magistrates at Wee Waa, with reference to this Petition, be printed in the Appendix to the Report of the Committee"—agreed to. (Vide Appendix D, 1 and 2.)

The Chairman then laid before the Committee proof copies of the "Analysis of an Act for preventing and getting rid of Scab and Catarrh in Sheep," ordered to be struck off under a Resolution agreed to by the Committee on the 9th instant.

Motion made and Question—"That this Analysis be printed in the Appendix to the Report of the Committee"—agreed to. (Vide Appendix E.)

The Chairman then informed the Committee that Mr. J. Giblett had been again summoned to be examined with reference to his Petition, but that he was neither in attendance nor had he made any reply to the summons thus addressed to him.

Committee deliberated.

Motion made and Question—"That as the Petitioner has not appeared in answer to the two summonses addressed to him, nor stated any reasons for his not appearing, no further steps can be taken by the Committee with reference to his Petition"—agreed to.

[Adjourned.]

[Further Proceedings stopped by Prorogation.]

1858.

THURSDAY, 29 APRIL, 1858.

Members Present:—

Mr. Hodgson,
Mr. G. Macleay,
Mr. Cox.

Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Taylor,
Mr. Lloyd.

Mr. Hodgson was called to the Chair.

By direction of the Chairman, Resolution of the House appointing the Committee, and the Minutes of Proceedings taken at the Meetings of the Committee held during last Session, read by the Clerk.

Motion made (Mr. Cox) and Question—"That these Proceedings be now adopted by this Committee"—agreed to.

Committee deliberated.

Motion made and Question—"That the Evidence taken before the Committee during the last Session is sufficient for the purposes of this inquiry"—agreed to.

Committee then considered the expediency of forthwith proceeding to the preparation of a new Bill, and were of opinion, that it would be advisable to defer entering upon its preparation until certain Members of the Committee who were not on the Committee of last Session had had an opportunity afforded them of perusing the Minutes of Evidence.

[Adjourned till Wednesday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

WEDNESDAY 5 MAY, 1858.

Members Present:—

A. Hodgson, Esquire, in the Chair—

Mr. Donaldson,
Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Taylor,

Mr. Cox,
Mr. Robertson,
Mr. Lee.

Committee deliberated relative to the principles of the Bill to be prepared by them.

Motion made (Mr. Suttor) and Question proposed—"That this Committee do now consider the Scab in Sheep Act, 19 Victoria, No. 27, with a view to determine what portions thereof may be advantageously retained in the Bill to be prepared by them; and that for this purpose the Committee do at once proceed through the said Act Clause by Clause, and make such amendments therein as they may deem desirable."

Committee deliberated.

Question put and agreed to.

Committee then further deliberated, and it was Resolved :—

"That any alterations or amendments made in the Act 19 Victoria, No. 27, though intended as the groundwork for such future Scab in Sheep Bill, as the Committee may eventually think fit to frame, shall nevertheless not be considered as categorically defining the wording of such Bill."

Committee thereupon proceeded to consider the Scab in Sheep Act of 1855; commencing with Clause II thereof.

Clause II read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. Cox) and Question—"That this Clause be amended in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee by the insertion after the words 'shall be' in line 1 thereof, of the words 'boiled down or'; and in lines 2 and 6 thereof, by the omission of the words 'fourteen days,' and the insertion of the words 'one month' in lieu thereof"—agreed to.

Motion made (Mr. Suttor) and Question—"That there be inserted in this Clause, in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, a proviso enacting 'That all sheep thus infected with scab may be shorn, or skins fellmongered on the stations of their owners, or skins securely packed in bags or bales, and, thus packed but not otherwise, forwarded to their destination for sale or exportation'"—agreed to.

Clause III read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. Donaldson) and Question proposed—"That under this Clause in any Bill prepared by the Committee, no compensation for sheep destroyed under the provisions of the preceding Clause be awarded those persons availing themselves of the power now proposed to be given to them by the Committee of boiling down their sheep, or saving the skins and wool thereof."

Committee deliberated.

Question put.

Committee divided.

Ayes, 3.

Noes, 2.

Mr. Donaldson,
Mr. Cox,
Mr. Taylor.

Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Lee.

Whereupon further Motion made (Mr. Donaldson) and Question proposed—"That the compensation to be awarded to those persons destroying their sheep when infected with scab,

"scab, and not availing themselves of the power to be given to them of boiling them down, or preserving their skins and wool, be fixed at 'four shillings' per head."

Amendment proposed (Mr. Suttor)—"That such compensation be fixed at 'five shillings' per head."

Question put—"That such compensation be fixed at 'four shillings' per head."

Committee divided.

Ayes, 3.

Mr. Donaldson,
Mr. Lee,
Mr. Taylor.

No, 2.

Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Cox.

Words 'four shillings' to remain.

Clauses IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, and XII then read by the Chairman and considered; and it was agreed to embody the same in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, with any verbal amendments which may be necessary.

Clause XIII read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. Donaldson) and Question proposed—"That in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, the penalty under this Clause for not branding travelling sheep shall not exceed 'one shilling' per head, instead of 'two shillings,' as under this Act."

Amendment proposed (Mr. Cox)—"That such penalty shall not exceed 'sixpence.'"

Committee deliberated.

Question put—"That such penalty shall not exceed 'sixpence.'"

Committee divided.

Ayes, 4.

Mr. Cox,
Mr. Lee,
Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Taylor.

No, 1.

Mr. Donaldson.

Word 'sixpence' inserted.

Clause XIV read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. Cox) and Question proposed—"That in the Bill to be framed by the Committee, a proviso be added to this Clause, enacting 'That in no case shall it be compulsory to destroy imported sheep infected with scab.'"

Committee deliberated.

Question put.

Committee divided.

Ayes, 4.

Mr. Cox,
Mr. Lee,
Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Taylor.

No, 1.

Mr. Donaldson.

Whereupon Motion made and Question—"That the penalty for removing imported sheep, without such certificate from the Inspector as is required in this Clause, be fixed in the Bill to be framed by the Committee at a sum not exceeding one hundred pounds, instead of twenty pounds per head, as herein provided"—agreed to.

Clause XV read by the Chairman and considered; and it was agreed to embody the same in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, with any verbal amendments which may be necessary.

Clause XVI read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. Suttor) and Question proposed—"That this Clause be omitted in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee."

Committee deliberated.

Question put.

Committee divided.

Ayes, 3.

Mr. Suttor,
Mr. Lee,
Mr. Cox.

Noes, 2

Mr. Donaldson,
Mr. Taylor.

Clause XVII read by the Chairman.

Committee deliberated.

Motion made and Question—"That this Clause be amended in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, by the insertion after the word 'seaports,' in line 2 thereof, of the word 'and'; and by the omission after the word 'towns,' in the same line, of the words 'districts, or other places'; and by further enacting at the end thereof, that 'It shall be lawful for any Bench of Magistrates, duly summoned, to appoint such fit and proper person in the Country District, within their special jurisdiction, as they may think expedient, to be Inspector for the purpose of examining sheep, and assisting generally in carrying the provisions of this Act into effect; and such Inspector shall be paid at the rate of one pound per diem, and such reasonable travelling expenses as the Bench may determine'"—agreed to.

Clauses XVIII, XIX, and XX read by the Chairman and considered; and it was agreed to embody the same in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, with any verbal amendments which may be necessary.

Clause XXI read by the Chairman.

Committee deliberated, and it was Resolved :—

- " 1. That in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, the yearly assessment to be levied on sheep shall be fixed not to exceed 'one pound' for every thousand sheep, instead of 'two pounds,' as enacted in this Act."
- " 2. That such assessment shall not, however, be levied, unless actually required for the purposes of this Act."

After further deliberation ;—

Motion made and Question—"That the consideration of the remaining Clauses of this Act be postponed till Friday next"—agreed to.

[Adjourned till Friday next, at Even o'clock.]

FRIDAY, 7 MAY, 1858.

Members Present :—

A. Hodgson, Esquire, in the Chair.

Mr. Lee, | Mr. Lloyd.

Committee deliberated, and it was Resolved :—"That as the Committee are desirous of having a full meeting for the purpose of determining the final principles of the Bill to be prepared by them, it is inexpedient to proceed to business this day."

[Adjourned till Wednesday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

WEDNESDAY, 12 MAY, 1858.

Members Present :—

A. Hodgson, Esquire, in the Chair.

Mr. Donaldson, | Mr. G. Macleay,
Mr. Robertson, | Mr. Lee,

Mr. Lloyd.

Committee deliberated as to the expediency of introducing into the Bill in course of preparation certain Clauses relative to catarrh in sheep, and were of opinion that it was unnecessary to legislate further on this head, as the existing enactments relating thereto were amply sufficient to meet all probable requirements.

The Chairman then read the amendments made by the Committee in the Act 19 Vic., No. 27, on the 5th instant.

Committee considered the same.

Motion made (Mr. Donaldson) and Question proposed—"That inasmuch as certain Members of the Committee, constituting the actual majority thereof, were prevented from being present on the 5th instant, when these Resolutions were agreed to, it is expedient to convene a full meeting of the Committee for their reconsideration, and that such meeting be accordingly called for Friday next."

Committee deliberated.

Question put and agreed to.

Committee then proceeded to the consideration of the remaining Clauses of the Act 19 Vic., No. 27, commencing with Clause XXII.

Clause XXII read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. George Macleay) and Question—"That the consideration of this Clause and of Clauses XXIII, XXIV, XXV, XXVI, XXVII, and XXVIII, be postponed till Friday next"—agreed to.

Clauses XXX and XXXII read by the Chairman, and considered ; and it was agreed to embody the same in the Bill to be prepared by the Committee, with any verbal amendments which may be necessary.

Clauses XXXI and XXXIII read by the Chairman, considered, and postponed.

Schedules A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and H, then respectively read by the Chairman.

Motion made (Mr. George Macleay) and Question—"That Schedules A, B, C, D, and E, be adopted by the Committee ; and that the consideration of the remaining Schedules be postponed till Friday next"—agreed to.

[Adjourned till Friday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

FRIDAY, 14 MAY, 1858.

Members Present :—

A. Hodgson, Esquire, in the Chair :—

Mr. G. Macleay, | Mr. Donaldson,
Mr. Taylor, | Mr. Lloyd,
Mr. Flood, | Mr. Lee,
Mr. Robertson, | Mr. Cox.

Mr. C. K. Murray, Parliamentary Draftsman, present, at the request of the Committee.

Committee met, pursuant to a Resolution agreed to at their last meeting, for the reconsideration of certain Resolutions adopted on 5th instant ; and

The Chairman having informed the Committee that in summoning the Members thereof due notice had been given of the intention to reconsider these Resolutions.

Resolutions, relating to Clause XIV, read,—

Motion made (Mr. George Macleay) and Question proposed—"That the Resolution agreed to by the Committee, on motion of Mr. Cox, on the 5th instant, relative to the non-destruction of Imported Sheep, be amended, by the omission of all the words after the word

" word

"word 'That,' at the commencement, with a view to add the words 'all such imported 'sheep, as may be kept in a secure stable or shed, even though infected with scab, shall 'not be liable to destruction for the space of three calendar months.'"

Committee deliberated.

Question put—"That the words proposed to be omitted remain part of the Resolution,"—and negatived.

Further Question put—"That the words proposed to be added to the Resolution in 'place of the words omitted, be so added"—and agreed to.

Original Question then put and agreed to;—and Words added accordingly.

Motion made (Mr. Robertson) and Question proposed—"That the further Resolution, relating to this Clause, agreed to by the Committee on the 5th instant, providing 'That 'the penalty for removing imported sheep without such certificate from the Inspector, as 'is required in this Clause, be fixed in the Bill to be framed by the Committee at a sum 'not exceeding one hundred pounds' instead of 'twenty pounds per head,' as herein provided, ought to be retained."

Amendment proposed (Mr. Flood)—"That all the words after the word 'exceeding' in such Resolution be omitted, with a view to the addition of the words 'thirty pounds per 'head' in lieu thereof."

Deliberation continued.

Question put—"That the words proposed to be omitted remain part of the Resolution."

Committee divided.

Ayes, 4.

Mr. Robertson,

Mr. Lloyd,

Mr. Cox,

Mr. Lee.

Noes, 4.

Mr. Donaldson,

- "1. That the Clerk of Committees do forthwith transmit a copy of this Act, with the amendments made by the Committee duly noted thereon, to Mr. C. K. Murray, Parliamentary Draftsman, intimating to him at the same time the desire of the Committee that he should draw up a Bill for their consideration, introducing the said amendments therein in any form he may consider most desirable, provided he strictly adheres to their actual purport."
- "2. That the Committee meet for the adoption of the Draft Bill on Wednesday next."
- "3. That the Chairman be requested to prepare a Draft Report for their consideration on the same day."

[Adjourned till Wednesday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

WEDNESDAY, 19 MAY, 1858.

By direction of the Chairman, the meeting of the Committee convened for this day, [Postponed till to-morrow, at Eleven o'clock.]

THURSDAY, 20 MAY, 1858.

Members Present:—

Mr. Hodgson. | Mr. Taylor.

A Quorum of the Committee not being present,

[Adjourned till Tuesday next, at Eleven o'clock.]

TUESDAY, 25 MAY, 1858.

Members Present:—

A. Hodgson, Esquire, in the Chair.

Mr. Lee, | Mr. G. Macleay,

Mr. Suttor, | Mr. Cox,

Mr. Lloyd.

The Chairman informed the Committee that he had on the 14th instant communicated with the Parliamentary Draftsman, in accordance with the Resolution agreed to at their last meeting, transmitting to him at the same time a copy of the Act 19 Vic., No. 27, having the amendments made by the Committee noted thereon by the Clerk of Select Committees; and that Mr. Murray had in reply thereto forwarded on the 17th instant a Draft Bill framed by him, embodying such amendments, which he now laid before them.

Committee thereupon considered the same.

Motion made (Mr. George Macleay) and Question—"That Clause XVIII of the Draft Bill stand Clause 5 thereof, and be amended by the omission in the third line of the words 'suspected to possess,' and by the insertion of the word 'owning' in lieu thereof;—by the omission at the commencement of the fourth line of the words 'infected with the scab' and by the insertion of the words 'arrested under this Act' in lieu thereof;—by the omission in the tenth line, after the words 'mentioned to,' of the words 'such Inspector,' and by the insertion of the words 'Inspectors appointed under this and the preceding Clause' in lieu thereof, and at the end of the same line by the substitution of the word 'their' for 'his';—in the eleventh line by the substitution of the word 'orders' for 'order,' and of the word 'their' for 'his';—and in the twelfth line by the substitution of the word 'certificates' for 'certificate'"—agreed to.

Further motion made (Mr. George Macleay) and Question—"That Clause XIX of the Draft Bill be amended in the first line by the substitution of the word 'such' for 'any'"—agreed to.

Committee agreed to the other Clauses of the Draft Bill without amendment.

The Chairman then informed the Committee that the usual number (200 copies) of the Bill had been already struck off for circulation, as they determined at their last meeting to adopt the same without entering upon any further deliberation as to its principles, and desired the opinion of the Committee as to the advisability of avoiding the expense of a re-print thereof, by deferring the introduction of these amendments thereunto until it was under the consideration of the Committee of the whole House.

Committee deliberated, and it was Resolved :—

- "That as the amendments just made by the Committee are of such a nature as to alter the entire construction of the Bill, a Report thereof is absolutely necessary, prior to its consideration by the House."

After further deliberation;—

Motion made and Question,—"That the Draft Bill, as now amended, be adopted, as the Bill 'framed and agreed to by the Committee,' and as such be reported to the House,"—agreed to.

The Chairman then brought up and laid before the Committee a Draft Report.

Motion made and Question,—"That the Draft Report proposed by the Chairman be now read 1st"—agreed to.

Draft Report read 1st accordingly, and certain amendments made therein.

Draft Report then read 2^d.

Whereupon motion made and Question,—"That this Draft Report, as amended, be the Report of the Committee"—agreed to.

Chairman requested to Report to the House.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON

SCAB AND CATARRH IN SHEEP.

THURSDAY, 5 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

MR. HARGRAVE,
MR. LEE,
MR. G. MACLEAY,MR. ROBERTSON,
MR. SUTTON,
MR. COX.

GIDEON SCOTT LANG, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Henry Lane, Esquire, Secretary to the Treasury, called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: We wish to learn from you how the account stands between the Scab Assessment and the Treasury. The last account we have is dated 19th January, 1857, showing at that time that £2,793 3s. 3d. had been advanced from the Consolidated Revenue to meet the claims in excess of the amount of assessment received in 1856? I have continued the account up to the 31st of October, 1857; this extended account shows a balance to credit, on 31st October, of £10,752 16s. 10d. I submit the account to the Committee. (The Witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.)
2. By Mr. Cox: Are you aware of any claims for compensation now standing over under the present Act? I understand that some have been submitted to the House of Assembly, and are now under consideration; these claims have not been presented at the Treasury for payment.
3. By Mr. G. Macleay: Will you state what applications have been made since the commencement of the year 1857, with the names of the Benchers which have given certificates? Two applications have been made since 1st of January last, viz.:—

Mrs. Lucy Howell	£894 16 0
Mr. George Sykes	288 0 0

- I submit copies of the vouchers for the payment of these sums. (Vide Appendices B and C.)
4. By the Chairman: Can you explain the discrepancies that appear in the Returns; there is a difference in the number returned under the Scab Act and the Annual Returns? The Returns you refer to are those ordered to be printed on the 11th and the 13th of March last?

- Henry Lane, Esq.
5 Nov., 1857.
5. Yes; there is a difference, as it appears, of 29,000? The number of sheep in the Murrumbidgee District in 1855, as shewn in the Return of 11th March, is 664,191; the number in same district, same year, is stated in the Return of 13th March, to have been 693,191. I can explain this discrepancy. Commissioners furnish to the Treasury, in January of each year, Returns of the numbers of sheep in their respective Districts; omissions are sometimes made in these Returns, and Commissioners supply such omissions by sending supplementary Returns. Mr. Lockhart, Commissioner for the Murrumbidgee District, forwarded his January Return in due course, but, finding that he had omitted the name of Mr. Henry Osborne, the owner of 29,000 sheep in the District, he sent to the Treasury a supplementary list of this additional number. The printed Returns of the 11th and 13th March were prepared by the Auditor General; the first shows the amount of assessment received, and amount of compensation paid in each district, as well as the number of sheep in each; the second exhibits the number of sheep in the Murrumbidgee District only. The first (11th March) being regarded as a cash account, was compiled in the Audit Office without reference to the Treasury, and was at once placed before the Assembly; the second (13th March) being a numerical Return relating to a particular district (Murrumbidgee) was, for accuracy sake, compared by Audit Office with the Treasury Records previously to its publication. Hence the 29,000 sheep, of which the supplementary list had been received in the Treasury, but not in the Audit Office, were included in the second Return (13th March), and omitted from the first (11th March.)
6. Then there is a mistake to the amount of £58 in the return of the money? No; the amount is correct; it is that actually received.
7. By Mr. G. Macleay: Does the money assessment tally exactly with that number? No; the number and amount rarely agree; the amount stated in the printed Return is that received in the year; the number given by the Commissioner will not, if computed at the rate fixed by law, make up the amount, inasmuch as fines and arrears are included in the latter. For instance, in 1857, we will get sums that properly belong to 1856, being the proceeds of warrants issued in the last-named year.
8. The fines are added to the assessment? Yes, when enforced.
9. By Mr. G. Macleay: Is there anything in arrear to be added to this sum? Yes; the warrants issued in 1855 are satisfied. For 1856, there are six warrants outstanding in the Bathurst District; and for 1857, there are three due for Bathurst, one for Mudgee, and one for Murrumbidgee. The correctness of the receipts, as stated in the printed Return of 11th March, 1857, can be tested in this way, viz. :—

Take the debit side of the printed annual statement for 1855, dated 13th February, 1856.....	16,771	2	5
And same of the statement for 1856, dated 19th January, 1857	17,439	19	1
	<hr/>
The Amount corresponds	£34,211	1	6
<hr/>
Next, as to the payments :—
Compensation in 1855, as per annual statement	32,893	0	0
In 1856, as per ditto.....	1,579	16	0

Warrant No. 234 of 1857.

Department of Land and Public Works,
Sydney, 20 April, 1857.

SIR,

I am directed to inform you, that the case of Mrs. Lucy Howell, who petitioned the Legislative Assembly for redress for loss of sheep destroyed under the Scab Act, having been brought under the consideration of the Executive Council, the Council have approved of Mrs. Howell being compensated for the destruction of the sheep in question, and of a Special Warrant being issued for the payment of the amount, namely, £894 16s., which is to be met out of the Ordinary Revenue, but debited to the Assessment for 1857.

2. I have, therefore, to request, that you will cause the necessary Warrant to be prepared in Mrs. Howell's favour for that sum, being the compensation for 4,474 sheep.

I have, &c.,

Warrant No. 488 of 1857.

Goulburn,
31 August, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to request you will pay to Messrs. Ietton & Pownall, of Sydney, Solicitors, the amount to which I am entitled by virtue of a certificate under the hands of four of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, dated at Goulburn 31st August, 1857.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL TREASURER,
Sydney.

GEORGE SYKES.

CERTIFICATE OF DESTRUCTION OF SHEEP.

We, the undersigned, Patrick Plunkett, Edward Maitland, Francis Robert Lewis Rossi, and Andrew Gibson, Esquires, four of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the Colony of New South Wales, do hereby certify, that it has been duly proved before us that one thousand four hundred and forty sheep, above the age of six months, the property of George Sykes, lately depasturing at Spring Valley, in the District of Goulburn, were, on the tenth day of August instant, duly destroyed; and we further certify, that it was further proved, to our satisfaction, that such sheep were, at the time of their destruction, infected to* the disease called the Scab, and that previous to their destruction the notices required by law were duly served.

Dated at the Police Office, Goulburn, in the Colony of New South Wales, this 31st day of August, A.D., 1857.

WEDNESDAY, 11 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

MR. COX,
MR. LEE,MR. HARGRAVE,
MR. SUTTOR.

W. H. SUTTOR, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Thos. Lang,
Esq.

Thomas Lang, Esq., called in and examined:—

11 Nov., 1857.

1. By the Chairman: You reside in the Murrumbidgee District? Yes.
2. Will you look at the "Return of the total number of Sheep in the Murrumbidgee District in 1853, 1854, 1855, and 1856." (The witness examined the return.) Can you account for the great decrease in the number from 1854 to 1855? During the seasons of 1853 and 1854 there were a great many store sheep brought to the district.
3. Then you account for the difference in the numbers from the number of store sheep taken from this side of the country for the purpose of fattening? Yes.
4. They had been sold off before 1855? Yes, before 1855; on the Billybong especially.
5. By Mr. Cox: You do not think that the lesser number, as shewn by this return for 1855, was occasioned by the people not wishing to comply with the Act now in force? No, I do not. There were some stations before that time—two at least I know—from which the sheep were off altogether. They fatten in the winter there, and all that had been bought as store in 1853–54, and all station sheep of age, had been sold off fat about the shearing of 1854, and were not replaced when the returns were made, early in 1855.
6. By the Chairman: Do you know that in 1856 there was a still further decrease? Yes; from our own station they were all off, and on several others they were very much reduced, if not altogether removed.
7. How do you account for that—by the great number of sheep sent into Victoria? Yes; and the fear of scab from over the Murray, and scarcity of labour to cure it.
8. By Mr. Cox: What is the feeling in the Murrumbidgee District with regard to the present Act—is it favourable? It is favourable, because it is considered to have stopped the disease altogether. All down in the lower part, near the Victoria boundary, are very favourable to it.
9. By the Chairman: Do you know of any case of diseased sheep in your part of the country? There was one case on one of the stations, before this Act came into operation, where all the sheep were killed.
10. Do you know of any now? No, I have not heard of any.
11. By Mr. Cox: Should you conceive that, if the present Act were repealed, there would be danger of again having the scab brought into your district from the Victoria country? Yes, I think there would, because some diseased sheep were brought, even under this Act, from the Victoria country, just about the commencement, I think, of 1854 or 1855.
12. You believe the repeal of the present Act would be attended with great danger, especially to the border districts of New South Wales and Victoria? Yes; there was a flock taken from the Yanco Creek to the north side of the Murray which turned out to be scabby.
13. When was that? Not long ago; somewhere within twelve months.
14. Are you a sheep owner now in that district? No.
15. Have you had considerable experience in sheep farming? Yes, from 1840 until 1855, when we put them all off our station, from fear of the scab from sheep travelling down to and from Victoria.
16. What number of sheep had you in the year 1855? Between 11,000 and 12,000.
17. In 1855 you had disposed of them all? We stored them—they were all off.
18. You believe that many others did the same, and that that would account for the discrepancy in this return? Yes.
19. By the Chairman: Many people disposed of their sheep and stocked their runs with cattle? Yes.
20. You have done so yourself? Yes.
21. Have you had any experience of sheep diseased with scab, and of the treatment of them? Yes, in early times.
22. Do you think it advisable to continue that part of the Act which makes it imperative on the part of the owner to destroy the sheep if diseased? I think that is the safest part of the Act, and particularly applicable when only a station here and there is affected.
23. By Mr. Lee: Do you not think it possible to cure the sheep? It is possible, if promptly attended to.
24. By Mr. Cox: But attended with danger? Attended with danger.
25. By Mr. Hargrave: Do you think it possible to cure sheep at a cost that will repay the owner, looking to the present rate of labour in the Colony? I think they do so at Port Phillip, with the means they take—they dip them, and put thousands through in a day.
26. By Mr. Lee: Do they hire people to cure them at so much per head, and find their own medicine? I am not aware, but rather think they have their own men, as almost every station there now has a regular establishment for the purpose of dipping sheep.
27. Do people go about to cure the sheep, or is it done by the men on the station? It is done by the men on the station, I believe.
28. Are there not persons who go about and cure sheep at so much per head? I think there are, but I do not know for certain.
29. Did you ever hear what they get per head for curing sheep? No; I have not been much on the Port Phillip side lately.
30. What have you given in New South Wales? I never had to do with it in New South Wales.
31. By the Chairman: Have sheep increased very much in value since the Act passed in 1854? Yes, they have.

32. So that if in former years four shillings a head would compensate a party for the loss of his sheep, it would not do so now? No.
33. What would you recommend with regard to compensation; do you think parties destroying their sheep should have compensation, and, if so, that they should have a fairer compensation than at present? I think they should have compensation.
34. By Mr. Cox: Do you think, taking a broad view of the subject, that people who are sufficiently careful to keep their own sheep free from scab should be compelled to pay assessment for the loss incurred by the negligence of their neighbours? It is very hard that it should be so, but it is safer I think that they should do so than run the risk of having the scab amongst them.
35. By the Chairman: Do you think an Act could be made sufficiently stringent to compel persons to cure their sheep in a given time? Yes, I think perhaps it might; but it has never been done yet.
36. By Mr. Hargrave: You think it possible to cure sheep in a given time, say three months? Yes; I think in Port Phillip they cure within that time.
37. Do you think it could be done at such an expense, including the loss of life, as would pay the owners? I consider that if it pays in Victoria, where labour is still higher than here, it ought to pay here.
38. By Mr. Lee: What do you think it would cost per head to cure sheep? I am sure I could not say. I have had nothing to do with curing them since very early times, and then it was the constant attention and hard work to comparatively small numbers did so.
39. By Mr. Hargrave: Do you think it is possible, after sheep have been declared infected, to secure sheep and boil them down within fourteen or twenty-eight days in such a way as to incur no risk of giving the disease to other sheep? I think it might be done. It would all depend upon having a very careful shepherd. I do not think there would be any difficulty in doing it unless you had a neighbour very close at hand. I have had my sheep scabbed by my neighbour's without being aware that his sheep had been near them, until I discovered it accidentally.
40. By the Chairman: Are you aware how these returns were taken in those years when there was no assessment—if I recollect rightly, there was no assessment in 1854? I think they were taken under no assessment Act; they made returns or not, as they pleased.
41. Might not that account for some of the discrepancies? Very probably. I got no notice, and was travelling to town when I was told I had to give these returns.

Thos. Lang,
Esq.
11 Nov., 1857.

Matthew Goggs, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You have had considerable experience in sheep farming in the Northern District, I believe? Yes.
2. In what part? In the Darling Downs District.
3. Have you had an opportunity of seeing the working of the present Scab Act in your district; do you know of any cases of diseased sheep there? None in our district that I know of.
4. By Mr. Cox: Do you approve of the general principles of the Act now in force? With some modifications.
5. Will you state your chief objections to the present Act? In clause 2, I think the time allowed, fourteen days, is too short a period.
6. Are you in favor of having the sheep destroyed? I am.
7. By the Chairman: You would not give the proprietor of the sheep a chance of curing them, if he were disposed to do so, within a certain time? From my experience I have found it very difficult to cure a sheep, and from my observation I have seldom known them cured.
8. By Mr. Lee: How long have you been engaged in sheep farming? Twenty-two years.
9. And you never knew sheep cured? Seldom.
10. By the Chairman: Why would you prolong the time? Because fourteen days is not sufficient for a party living 250 miles away from water carriage; he may not have pots to boil them down at the time.
11. You would recommend, then, that the proprietor should have the option of boiling them down? Yes, if he pleases.
12. By Mr. Cox: With regard to compensation, what is your opinion? If he boils them down he should have three shillings for the sheep, and not to exceed a shilling for lambs until six months old.
13. How would you raise the amount to pay the compensation—by an assessment upon the whole of the sheep throughout the country? I look at the Scab Act as an insurance company among the proprietors of sheep—each insures the other.
14. But it is a compulsory insurance? Yes.
15. By Mr. Lee: Would you give the party who boils down his sheep three shillings a head? I would.
16. And at present he only gets four shillings a head without boiling them down? I would allow him the option of boiling down.
17. By the Chairman: Do you not think there is a great decrease in the number of sheep in the Colony within the last four or five years? There has been a large decrease, from wet seasons.
18. In the Northern District? I speak of my own district.
19. By Mr. Cox: Has the sale of store stock been greater than the increase, or as great as the increase besides the losses that have occurred from wet weather—do you think the increase makes up for the number sold as store stock for the last year or two? The increase in Darling Downs is more than the decrease; the sheep are more now than they were this time twelve months.

M. Goggs,
Esq.
13 Nov., 1857.

- J. Goggs, Esq.*
11 Nov., 1857.
20. By the Chairman: What time would you allow parties to boil down their sheep? Sixty days the minimum, and ninety days the maximum.
21. To commence within sixty days? To commence within sixty days.
22. By Mr. Hargrave: Do you not think it would be a great risk to allow sheep known to be infected with scab to remain sixty days before being destroyed? I presume the owner would be compelled to keep them on his own run, and not to allow them to go over his boundary.
23. Of course he would be supposed to do so, but do you not think it would be running a very serious risk of the disease spreading in such a length of time? There is a risk, but with care that risk might be obviated.
24. By the Chairman: Would you continue the present rate of assessment? No, I would not.
25. What rate of assessment would you recommend? I presume there is a balance in hand. I would use that up in paying inspectors, and claimants under the Scab Act for compensation; when that was used up, I would put on one pound per thousand per annum instead of two pounds.
26. One-half the present assessment? Yes.
27. The amount of assessment not to exceed the amount actually paid in the way of compensation and expenses;—you would not collect the assessment unless it were actually required? Certainly not.
28. By Mr. Cox: Have you any other objections to the present Act? Yes; in clause 13 of the present Act—"Sheep unbranded"—penalty may be enforced to the amount of two shillings each sheep; I think if the whole penalty were enforced it would be excessive.
29. Would you strike the clause out altogether;—do you think it is an useful clause? I think it is useful.
30. You will see it is discretionary with the Magistrate? I think it is leaving too great a power with him. My suggestion would be that it should not exceed sixpence.
31. By the Chairman: Is there any other part of the Act in which you would suggest any alteration? In clause 6—"Justice to give certificate of costs of destroying sheep." If they are destroyed, I think the owner of the sheep ought to be paid the expense of destroying them, because it is at his option whether he will boil them down or destroy them.
32. You recommend he should have that option? Yes.
33. By Mr. Cox: The person destroying them should be paid the expense of the destruction? Yes; he might not consider his sheep to be of sufficient value to boil them down.
34. By Mr. Hargrave: Do you think there would be any risk of allowing the skins, after being taken off the sheep, to be packed in bales and sent to Sydney; or would you compel the owner to fellmonger on his station? I would compel the owner to fellmonger the skins on his own station and at his risk.
35. By Mr. Lee: Do you think there is any danger in the skins being taken away in bales? Yes; the animalculæ remain in the skins for a very long period, and if they come in contact with the live animal give him the scab.
36. By the Chairman: What do you think of the 14th clause? I would make the 14th clause more stringent.
37. What amendment do you propose? I think the sheep ought to be dressed when they are landed.
38. Under the present Act it is imperative upon owners of sheep to destroy any imported sheep affected by scab; supposing a party to import a valuable ram, for breeding purposes, worth a hundred guineas, do you think it desirable it should be destroyed under such circumstances? I would modify that with regard to imported sheep. I would have them kept and dressed. I would not destroy them, because it is a great loss to the country.
39. Then you would make an alteration in the 2nd clause excepting sheep imported for stud purposes? Yes; those of pure breed to improve the blood for stud purposes, because sheep might be imported from Victoria.
40. By Mr. Cox: Do you think the branding of sheep is effectual with respect to the working of this Act; you observe that sheep are to be branded with the initial letter—what guard is that as to whether sheep are diseased or not? I presume it is only to distinguish those which are travelling along the road, so that if they mix with other sheep they can be easily picked out. I do not think it can refer to the scab at all.
41. Is it not usual to mark sheep? Many do not.
42. By Mr. Lee: Do they not either mark them or put a flesh brand on them? I have not put a flesh brand on mine for many years.
43. Do you think it desirable that sheep should be branded, in order that a party having sheep on the road may know at once if any sheep that may have been dropped have strayed into his flock? Yes.

A. C. Bartlett, Esq.
11 Nov., 1857.

Arthur Charles Bartlett, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: A petition from you to the Legislative Assembly, praying for compensation for the destruction of 1,927 sheep, under the Scab Act, has been referred to this Committee,—you state in the petition that you complied with the requirements of the Act in every respect? In every respect. There were not two Magistrates, and I could not get a certificate.
2. Were there no Magistrates in the neighbourhood at the time? No; the only Magistrate there said it was of no use his going, as the Act required two Magistrates, and that if I could get another Magistrate he would willingly sit.
3. Who was the Magistrate? Mr. Doyle.
4. He made no demur as to your receiving a certificate? No; he said he could not sign it, as

as the Act required two Magistrates, and it was of no use his going alone. Mr. Lloyd was the only other Magistrate I could have got at all, and he was at the Peel; the river was rough and I could not get across. I had only a few days left, and by the time I did see him the period was expired.

A. C. Bartlett,
Esq.
11 Nov., 1857.

5. Did you call upon parties to examine them in the neighbourhood? I did; I gave notice, and did everything else according to the Act.

6. By Mr. Cox: You state that your sheep were destroyed in February? Yes.

7. And the application made by you before the Magistrates was on the 4th day of May, I think that perhaps would have put you out of Court, for the Act only gives one month to make an application—that is under the 3rd section? That is not the Act under which my application was made. I applied under the Act of 1854, the fourth clause of which gives three months to make application to the Bench. I rode five hundred miles to get two Magistrates, but could not.

7. By the Chairman: Can you furnish the Committee with any other evidence to shew that you made this application? It is registered in the Court at Wee Waa.

8. Did you make any application at a subsequent time? Not to that Bench. I applied to the Executive, and wrote to the Governor about it, and he said if I had complied with the Act that was all that was required. I saw Mr. Frank Rusden, and he said it was of no use my applying to the Bench again, that the time was up, and I must petition the Legislative Assembly.

9. By Mr. Cox: When you made an application to the Bench at Wee Waa, was there but one Magistrate in the neighbourhood? Yes; that was all.

10. Were you told that it was impossible there would be another Magistrate there within a week? I was not told so, but I tried for ten days and more to get two together.

11. Was there a Clerk of the Bench there? Yes; Mr. Fitzsimmons.

12. Did he register the application? Yes.

13. Are you a squatter and sheepowner now? Yes.

14. Have you examined the Scab Act at present in force? No; I never looked at it.

15. Would you advise that in future sheep infected with the scab should be destroyed? I certainly would not.

16. You would allow the proprietor the option of curing them? Yes; I would have them destroyed, if not cured or disposed of within a certain time.

17. What time would you give the proprietor for curing them? Six months either to cure or boil down.

18. And if not cured within that time you would recommend that they should be destroyed? Yes; without compensation.

19. Then you would not recommend the continuance of the assessment on stock? No; I would not.

20. Have you had any experience of curing sheep with scab? I do not say that I could cure them myself.

21. Have you known sheep cured? Yes. I have, unfortunately, had scabby sheep for some years, though I have none now. The first I bought were scabby; they were dressed and were all right until some others got in among them. I then had them boiled down, and they paid me much better than they would have done otherwise.

22. Are not sheep increasing in value? Yes. Scabby sheep in our neighbourhood get very fat.

23. Do you know of any scabby sheep in your neighbourhood? There are none at all now.

24. By Mr. Lee: You have known sheep to be cured that have been dressed for scab? Yes, plenty of them; but a great deal depends upon the management of them after they have been dressed.

25. By the Chairman: You would recommend that sheep should not be destroyed until the parties had a reasonable time to cure them? Yes, to cure or to boil them down.

26. Supposing they did not cure them, you would allow them to boil them down? Yes. I think at the end of three months every one ought to know whether his sheep were cured or not, and if they were not cured they should be boiled down.

27. By Mr. Hargrave: Do you think, in the present state of the labor market to the northward, that it would pay people to cure sheep? No; I think it is much better for the Colony that they should kill them right off—four shillings, in my opinion, is quite sufficient to pay a person who has such sheep; but if he were allowed to boil them down, that, I think, would be better than taxing the Colony four shillings a head for their destruction.

28. By Mr. Lee: What do you think it would cost per head to cure sheep? Eighteen-pence a head.

29. At the present price of labor? Yes.

30. By the Chairman: Supposing the whole of the sheep in your district took the scab, do you think it would be advisable to kill them all? No, I do not; on so large a scale as that would hurt the Colony, by reducing the export of wool, and I believe that has been the effect of the Scab Act during the last few years.

31. On that account you think it desirable that parties should have time to cure them? Yes; but I think if there were only one or two flocks of diseased sheep in the Colony it would be best to kill them.

32. By Mr. Lee: Do you think it is fair that people who take pains to keep their sheep clean should have to pay for the loss occasioned by the carelessness of those who allow their sheep to become dirty? I do not think any pains will prevent the scab. They are as liable to the scab as to the influenza; it is indigenous, as I may term it, to the sheep, and comes from we do not know what.

33. You believe it is not a contagious disease? It is not a contagious disease.

34. Do you believe that it has been brought here, or that it is a native of the Colony? No doubt it has been brought here, but I think a clean sheep may get it without contact.

THURSDAY, 19 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

MR. COX,
MR. DONALDSON,
MR. HARGRAVE,

MR. LEE,
MR. G. MACLEAY,
MR. SUTTON.

GEORGE MACLEAY, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Thomas George Rusden, Esq., M.P., examined:—

- T. G. Rusden, Esq., M.P.
19 Nov., 1857.
1. By the Chairman: You are, or were, a large flock-holder in the Northern District? I never was a large flock-holder myself, but I have had a great deal to do with a great number of sheep.
 2. You have had sheep, I believe, diseased with scab? Yes; I have been acquainted with the disease for the last twenty-three years.
 3. Not throughout the whole of that time? I have seen a great deal of it throughout the whole of that period.
 4. Were any sheep in which you were interested destroyed under the provisions of either the present Scab Act or the one immediately preceding it? Yes; there were sheep destroyed that were my property, as I was informed by the person in whose charge they were.
 5. Were they destroyed under an order of a Bench of Magistrates? I have no personal knowledge on the subject at all.
 6. You know they were destroyed? I am told by the person that had them in charge that I have no sheep now.
 7. How long ago is it since you heard that fact? Twelve months ago. The sheep had been destroyed months before I heard of it—I think it was in 1855; and the letter that apprized me of it stated that the parties had not informed me before because they had hoped to have given me better news.
 8. Although the owner of the sheep you remained ignorant of the fact that they had been destroyed? I did not know anything about it. I am told I have no sheep now.
 9. By Mr. Donaldson: Did you get paid for the sheep at the price named in the Act? I got paid for four-fifths of them at four shillings a head.
 10. Why were you paid only for four-fifths? Because they said the others were lambs.
 11. By the Chairman: The existing Act makes provision for payment for lambs, I believe? No; the existing Act does not allow payment for lambs, although the lambs are taxed. Lambs pay the premium for insurance, but do not receive the object of the insurance.
 12. By Mr. Sutton: The Act says the owner shall receive compensation for rams, ewes, wethers, and lambs? The Act is contradictory in many respects. The Schedule would seem to admit of payment for lambs, but the third clause says—"Provided that no payment shall be made for lambs under the age of six months."
 13. By Mr. Donaldson: When they were weaned they would be paid for? They would be weaned before six months old, in a general way.
 14. Were your lambs that were destroyed under six months old? I do not know whether my lambs were under three months or twelve months old.
 15. By the Chairman: What, at that time, was supposed to be the value of a mixed flock of sheep in the part of the country in which yours were depasturing? I suppose they were worth twelve shillings a head, at least.
 16. All round? Yes. Sheep removed on to high open country, where there is plenty of room, are worth much more than they are in a located country, where they cannot possibly increase.
 17. Did you ever hear of any sales in that part of the country? I do not know the place—I was never there.
 18. In what part of the country were these sheep? On the outskirts of the Settled Districts—on the Burnett.
 19. Did you ever hear of any sales there at any time? I have heard of the sale of stations.
 20. With the land given in, did you ever hear of so high a price as twelve shillings a head? I do not know enough of the country to be able to give evidence upon the subject.
 21. Do you think diseased sheep are worth anything at all? Yes. I would be very glad to buy diseased sheep if I had a run to keep them on.
 22. At what price? I would get them as cheap as I could, of course.
 23. Would they not be dear at four shillings? No man would like to pay so much cash as four shillings for them; but if he paid six shillings, and were successful, they would remunerate him.
 24. If he had the advantage of plenty of servants, abundance of run, and other things he might wish for under the circumstances? He would require to have plenty of ground, but he would have to do the work himself, as a man will always have to do if he wants to succeed with sheep.
 25. Personal superintendence you look upon as actually requisite? Yes, unless you can get men quite as good as yourself.
 26. That ought to have some effect on the price, for nothing can be more disagreeable than personal superintendence during the dressing, for months together, of diseased sheep? If a man dresses his sheep properly he will not be months doing it.
 27. Do you think it possible to cure sheep by one dressing? I am quite certain it is; I have known it done repeatedly.
 28. Would you not rather have one thousand sheep clean than three thousand scabby? It depends upon the locality entirely.
 29. Take any part of the Colony—do you not think flock owners in the Colony generally would prefer to have one thousand sheep clean than three thousand in a state of disease? Most likely. They ought to prefer one thousand clean.

30. So that when you were paid four shillings a head for your diseased sheep that were slaughtered you received their full value, inasmuch as you received one-third of the value of clean sheep? I believe my sheep were clean when they were slaughtered. I never heard of any sheep being destroyed where there was any proof of their being diseased. T. G. Rusden, Esq., M.P.
19 Nov., 1857.
31. Supposing your sheep were in truth diseased, would you not, upon receipt of four shillings a head, feel yourself in a better position than if you had been allowed to keep them? Decidedly not.
32. That seems rather inconsistent with what you have said? It does seem like a distortion of my meaning.
33. How do you mean that it is a distortion of your meaning? I would state that, in a distant part of the country, it would be far better for a man to have three thousand scabby sheep than one thousand clean sheep.
34. I have put the question in another way—I have asked you what is your opinion of a similar possession in the Colony at large? It depends entirely upon the locality.
35. But you admit that in some localities it might be better for a man to have one thousand clean than three thousand diseased sheep? Far better, in most localities that were populous.
36. You say you believe your sheep were clean? I never heard of any sheep being destroyed where there was any proof of their being diseased.
37. Of course you have inquired into the matter? Yes. I have known thousands and thousands of sheep destroyed, both before this Act was law and afterwards.
38. And the result of your inquiries has been, that the sheep so destroyed were clean? There was no proof of their being diseased, I say.
39. By Mr. Cox: Are you aware that diseased sheep were in that district—New England—in particular? The question asked me did not refer to New England, therefore, if I were to answer the question it would not be understandable. The Chairman was asking me about the Moreton Bay District.
40. By the Chairman: By your last remark you confine yourself to the Northern District? All your questions seemed to refer to my particular sheep that were destroyed. My answers had not the least reference to them.
41. I understood you to say that you had never known any sheep that were destroyed proved to be diseased—I understood your remarks to refer to sheep destroyed under the provisions of this Act generally? My answers referred to my own sheep; in which case I know, from the statement of the party in charge, that they destroyed and killed clean sheep. I spoke to them afterwards, and they told me that it was a singular thing that they had had to destroy a quantity of lambs, and that they could keep the mothers; and they said those ewes were now one of the best flocks in the district, and that they had never been scabby.
42. Then this was the fault of the inspector, I presume? I do not know whether they had an inspector. I know nothing about that.
43. Did you not question them about the circumstances after they had made known that extraordinary fact? It was in consequence of my getting into conversation with the parties that I learned the ewes are now alive, and sound, and healthy.
44. Without being dressed at all? Yes.
45. You never made any further inquiry into such an extraordinary circumstance? It was not possible to make any inquiry, because the sheep were not in existence.
46. You never applied for the proceedings taken before the Bench? No; I applied to them for the money which the parties offered me, and which they had received from the Government. Therefore I suppose the Act was so far carried out.
47. That does not appear to be any fault in the Act? The fault in the Act is, that it opens the door to all these abuses.
48. Not necessarily—everything is liable to abuse? There are thousands and thousands of sheep—and some belonging to Mr. Marsh—in New England have been destroyed, and I believe more than three-fourths of them were killed because people were afraid they had scab, not because they were scabby.
49. Were Mr. Marsh's sheep killed under the orders of the inspectors? Yes.
50. Did the parties in charge of them remonstrate? I believe they were afraid, and killed them from fear, without knowing whether they were diseased or not.
51. By Mr. Cox: Are you aware whether there is any scab now in the districts you are acquainted with? No, I do not know of any scabby sheep; but there might be thousands without my seeing them.
52. By the Chairman: From what you have heard, do you believe scab is to be found in any part of the country? Decidedly. I do not believe it is eradicated.
53. Where do you think it is to be found? It is impossible for me to state where it is not to be found.
54. Where do you think it is to be found? It is impossible for me to say where it is to be found.
55. What are your grounds for supposing it is not eradicated? Because I have heard persons state that it was eradicated, and I have seen it since.
56. Where? At Maitland, among sheep intended for New Zealand.
57. How long ago? Proceedings were taken before the Bench—that would fix the date.
58. Was it within the last year or the last two years? Another occasion was about twelve months ago.
59. When were these scabby sheep shipped for New Zealand—two years ago? About two years ago, I think.
60. You have heard of another case which occurred about one year ago? There was another case, in which the Bench of Magistrates sent to me to request me to assist them in carrying out the Act, and, in consequence, I got a warrant to inspect the sheep—we inspected two different butchers' shops at Morpeth. These sheep were purchased at public auction from the sale yards of Mr. Dodds, and had come down the country. They were destroyed, under the

T. G. Rusden,
Esq., M.P.

19 Nov., 1857.

the provisions of the Act of 1853. The Bench of Magistrates requested me to assist them in carrying out the Act, and in getting rid of the sheep; and, after looking into the matter, I chose to proceed by summons under the clause of the Act of 1853, as being the only conclusive one under which we could get rid of the sheep. To a certainty the sheep were destroyed; but the Act was not carried out, because they did not burn the house and the shed and yard by which the sheep were kept in confinement.

61. By Mr. Cox: Was that necessary under the Act of 1853? The eleventh clause of the Act of 1853 says they shall be destroyed in such manner as the Justices shall see fit.

62. By the Chairman: Does it say they shall give authority to burn the yard? No; that was why I chose the Act of 1853 to proceed on.

63. Have you known or heard of any other case of scab since that time? These were the only two cases I have seen.

64. Have you heard of any other upon any good authority? I have heard of them, but these were the only cases that came under my own personal knowledge. I have had sheep alongside of mine for years and years—for more than ten years—which all the people in the district said were scabby sheep, but the Bench of Magistrates refused a warrant to examine them.

65. That was before the stringent Acts you have referred to came into force? Before the Act of 1854.

66. Do you not think that if, under present circumstances, the disease were found to exist in any part of the country, it would become publicly spoken of, and if it were in your part of the country you would have heard of it? Not if it had been in my part of the country, for I have been so little there.

67. You do not know of the existence of any disease of that kind? Yes, I do; I know of two other instances; one, which was mentioned in the Assembly, of some sheep not far from Sydney; and the other was mentioned to me by Mr. Suttor, of some sheep of his own that were imported. It was reported that they were scabby. I believe his sheep were all clean, but Mr. Suttor could tell best about that himself. There was a report about their not being clean, and when Mr. Suttor found they were going to be dressed with some poisonous stuff, by a person who knew nothing about it, I believe he said he would not allow the inspector to carry out such a wretched Act as that, and took his sheep away.

68. These sheep were imported from England, were they not? So I believe.

69. So that, if diseased, they must have brought the scab with them? I do not know that that is a sequitur at all.

70. Could they have caught it in course of being landed? Perhaps there is no place in the world more likely to cause disease than shipboard.

71. I understood you to say that that was a case of scab you heard of? It was a case I heard of, of the working of the Act. I never saw the sheep, and therefore could not possibly say whether they were scabby or not. There was a report that they were, and the sheep were inspected.

72. You are aware that, under the provisions of this Act, all sheep imported are inspected, or ought to be so, whether diseased or not? There are many clauses in the Act never enforced.

73. I presume that is the fault of the persons appointed under it, not of the Act itself. May I ask you whether the three last cases you have mentioned, with the exception of Mr. Suttor's—for I do not think that is to be taken into account at all—are not cases which occurred in butchers' yards in towns? Decidedly not; you could no more breed scab in a butcher's yard than in any other place.

74. Were not these cases in towns, not in country districts? They were in towns when I saw them, but the disease did not originate in the towns. One flock of scabby sheep were sold by public auction.

75. Was this the case that occurred a year or two years ago? That was the last case. I cannot speak positively as to the time, but the time can be fixed by reference to the proceedings before the Bench. It was more than a year ago.

76. Were any proceedings taken against the flock from which these sheep were brought? None at all that I am aware of.

77. Your opinion, I may gather on the whole, is not in favor of the working of the Act of 1854? No, I am not in favor of the Acts of 1854 or 1855, because I consider each of them equal to Lynch law; and I am certain they cannot eradicate the scab.

78. By Mr. Cox: Do you think no law could be enforced which would eradicate the scab? None at all, because it can arise as it first arose.

79. Spontaneously? Not exactly spontaneously, because there is always a cause for every effect.

80. By the Chairman: Have you ever heard of scab arising spontaneously? I make no doubt it is frequently bred on board ship. Nothing is more likely to bring it on than misery and bad treatment.

81. But scab is by no means an uncommon thing among sheep in Great Britain? It is very common there, and they cure it very commonly.

82. Is it not more likely that the sheep came on board diseased, than that the disease should be bred on board? I think one is as likely as the other.

83. Have you ever known any case where the disease has arisen in any isolated part of the country by itself? It would be impossible to prove that it originated by itself, although it would be very easy to prove that it could do it.

84. Whatever theories may exist on the causes of the disease, do you believe it has ever arisen spontaneously in this country? I dare say it might have.

85. Do you believe it has? It is impossible to answer such a question.

86. You must know your own belief? I am quite certain it could arise spontaneously, or, more strictly speaking, without any contagion.

87. Do you believe it has done so? I do not believe it would, where the sheep were not ill-used. T. G. Rusden, Esq., M.P. 19 Nov., 1857.
88. You have known sheep very badly used and very badly looked after? I state that on shipboard it is very likely to arise, because confinement is direct ill-usage, and that particular kind of ill-usage which tends to breed all sorts of vermin in all animals, men included.
89. In fact you do believe in spontaneous generation? I do not call it spontaneous generation; but if the greatest dandy were put into a small cage and debarred the use of water and the means of cleanliness, he would soon become covered with vermin.
90. Do you not think the probability is that the vermin would be in the cage, and would merely fix upon the dandy when brought within their reach? I would allow you to have the cage cleaned out and French polished, but if debarred the use of water, he would be covered with vermin in a very short time.
91. However badly sheep may have been looked after at one time in various parts of the country, they are now, I believe, owing to their increased value, well tended and kept in good order? I think it is quite the contrary; sheep are more neglected in the present day than they have been at any time previously.
92. Then you think there is great chance of the disease being originated in some flocks by carelessness in looking after them? No, I do not believe that kind of bad treatment will generate scab.
93. What kind of treatment? Being badly shepherded by boys.
94. They become poor and in bad condition? No, it does not follow.
95. Do you believe poverty of condition will tend to produce scab? I believe misery of any description will tend to produce vermin, because the parasites belonging to individual species will breed.
96. You think there is greater danger of the disease breaking out now than at any previous period? No, I think the danger is always equal.
97. But in spite of this danger you have never known a case of this disease breaking out spontaneously? No; it would be impossible for any man to say it was spontaneous in any particular case.
98. My remark was, that you have never known of any case? No man could possibly know of any case.

William Busby, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a large sheep owner in the Cassilis District? Yes; I have a considerable number. Wm. Busby, Esq., J.P. 19 Nov., 1857.
2. By Mr. Cox: Has the disease called scab ever shown itself in that district within the last few years? In the district within twenty miles of us there was a case where a number were destroyed, under the last Act or the previous Act of 1854. That is the only instance of scab I have known for sixteen or eighteen years.
3. Had these sheep been recently introduced into the neighbourhood? Yes.
4. To whom did they belong? Mr. Bowman. They were destroyed under the Act.
5. Had they not been brought up from Richmond a short time before? I believe they had.
6. That was understood and known to be the fact? Yes; I think so.
7. Mr. Bowman sold the sheep he originally had, and brought up fresh sheep? Yes.
8. How long had they been in the district before they were reported to be scabby? A very short time, perhaps three or four months; I do not think it was more than three months before the scab made its appearance.
9. You were one of the Magistrates that adjudicated in that case? Yes.
10. From the evidence brought before you there was no doubt of their having been diseased? None whatever.
11. Was a certificate given to Mr. Bowman to enable him to receive compensation? No.
12. On what grounds was it refused? Because the sheep were destroyed under an order of the Bench.
13. He did not comply with the provisions of the Act? No.
14. Do you consider the inspector of the district a fit and proper person for that office? We thought so, and he was assisted by others who were also acquainted with the disease.
15. Had you evidence of the fact of their being diseased from other parties? Yes.
16. No doubt was left on the minds of the Bench that the sheep were diseased? None whatever.
17. Were they in a very bad state? They were very bad. I did not see them myself; but the evidence went to that effect.
18. What is your opinion of the working of the two Acts of 1853 and 1854,—have they been beneficial, or otherwise, to the interest of sheep farmers? I believe in our particular district we have been saved by them. I believe there would not have been a sound sheep in the district but for these Acts, from these very sheep having been brought into it.
19. That stringent Act only could have prevented the spread of the disease in the district? Yes; I mean making the destruction of the sheep compulsory. And I would add that, from all I can hear, it has had the effect of preventing the spread of the disease throughout the country generally, for it had newly made its appearance in several districts.
20. Under the operation of the old Act the disease was spreading throughout the whole country? No doubt; the admitted insufficiency of the old Act led to the enactment of the late more stringent law.
21. Is there any in your own district at all? Certainly not now.
22. Have you heard of the existence of the disease in other parts of the Colony? No.
23. What is your general belief—that it is eradicated, or that it is still lingering? I think it is eradicated.

- Wm. Busby, Esq., J.P.
19 Nov., 1857.
24. From what you have heard among sheep-owners generally, do you think this Act is looked upon as a valuable one—are the same views entertained by sheep-farmers generally as those just expressed by yourself? Yes; I think so.
25. Have you heard it objected to? I have heard it objected to; but I think not so much with a view to the good of the Colony as from a feeling for individuals. I think the objection is to the supposed severity with which it bears upon individuals; but I myself think it is the kindest thing possible to an individual to destroy scabby sheep for him.
26. Provided compensation be given? Yes.
27. By Mr. Cox: Do you not believe that the scab can be cured? Yes; I think it can by energy on the part of the owner, and using the proper means; but without a fresh run it cannot be cured.
28. So that in thickly located districts to eradicate the disease is almost impossible? I think it is quite impossible.
29. By the Chairman: Even were it possible, do you not think a diseased sheep is sold very dearly at four shillings—that the proprietor of diseased sheep may consider himself exceedingly well off if he gets four shillings each for them? Yes, I do; because I think that with the small chance that remains of curing scabby sheep a proprietor would be benefited by submitting to the first loss, even if a total one; therefore, I think, if he gets even four shillings he is a gainer by that amount.
30. By Mr. Cox: Would you give the privilege of boiling down sheep? I would do nothing to prevent their immediate destruction and the destruction of everything belonging to them.
31. By the Chairman: You think the more stringent the Act the better? Yes; and now I would make it even more so, because I think so much has been done by the Act that we should not give the disease the least chance of getting head again.
32. You think that if these Acts were repealed, and an Act similar to the old one passed in their place, we would then revert to the old state of things? Yes, and I think more quickly too, for the country is more thickly stocked.
33. In that case, all the sheep destroyed, and all the money given in compensation, would be lost? It would be thrown away. I say if it has been sound policy to destroy all these sheep, in order to arrive at a healthy state of things, it would be madness not to keep up the means of meeting the recurrence of the disease, should it show itself.
34. Are there any clauses in this Act which you think might be modified, or that it would be desirable to repeal? I have looked over the Act, and I think it is wanting in not saying what should be considered scab.
35. That is stated in the former Act? Then I am under a mistake. There is another clause to which I have given some thought—with reference to the dressing of sheep imported into Sydney. There were some sheep some time since imported, and I believe the inspector wanted them to be shorn and dressed in Sydney, when it was the intention of the importer merely to tranship them into another vessel for Moreton Bay. If these words were introduced, "except by ship to some other sea port," the difficulty would be got rid of.
36. Do you not think there is some danger of introducing the disease from Europe, even if the sheep were dressed as well as they could be dressed? I think they might be dressed; but it would be obviously impossible if the sheep were shorn in Sydney that they could be shorn again at Moreton Bay, so that the clause could not be complied with.
37. You think upon the whole it would be best to dress the sheep upon their arrival? Yes, certainly.
38. By Mr. Cox: Whether scabby or not? Scab may exist without its being very apparent.
39. By Mr. Suttor: Would you place them in quarantine for some time? There would be very great difficulty in getting a place of quarantine—any ground that would be safe; you would want fresh ground for every lot of sheep.
40. They might be placed in a stable in Sydney? They might be, but I should be much afraid of doing so. I would think it desirable to have them removed immediately after dressing, as far as possible from the neighbourhood of Sydney, and kept in quarantine sufficiently long to leave no doubt of their being sound. The quarantine selected should be subject to the approval of the inspector.
41. Under this clause, the inspector may destroy any sheep that are imported in a diseased state; now, suppose you imported a few valuable rams, and they were to show scab when they came here, would you have them destroyed? No doubt it would be a great sacrifice to destroy such sheep. You might keep a few sheep secure; but there would be a difficulty with sheep that had to travel.
42. By the Chairman: But as rams are not imported in large numbers, you think some modification might take place? It would be very desirable, if it could be done with safety. I do not think there could be anything like paddock quarantine in the immediate neighbourhood of Sydney. I think in the case of sheep from Europe, some modification might be allowed, but not from New Zealand or other places, whence they could be brought in thousands.
43. You are aware that very stringent Acts exist in England with reference to the introduction of the disease by foreign sheep? I was not aware of it.
44. By Mr. Lee: Did you ever know sheep to be destroyed in any other part of the world but New South Wales? No, I am not aware that I have read of any; but I think the circumstances of New South Wales are very different from those of most other countries—I mean as to the quality of labor—the kind of people we can get to do the work in all such matters. Besides, in older settled countries there are facilities for curing sheep in the use of paddocks, &c., which we cannot hope for, and I believe in no other country would a flock of scabby sheep be left by a careless shepherd to be scattered through the neighbouring flocks, as I have known to be the case here.
45. What do you think it costs per head to cure sheep? I think it would be quite impossible impossible to say, because it would altogether depend upon a great many circumstances; in the first place, upon the skill of the operator, and the state of the run—whether fresh runs could be got for the sheep.

46. Do you not think they could be cured on the same run? No, I think not.

47. Suppose a sheep doctor were to come to you, and offer to cure your sheep upon the principle of "no cure, no pay," what do you think it would cost? I do not know what sheep doctors would take it in hand to cure sheep for.

48. They have done so in hundreds of cases? Yes, but I think the circumstances of New South Wales are changed since those days.

49. By the Chairman: You are aware that the total number of sheep in the country has decreased very much in the last two years? Yes.

50. Do you think that has been owing to the stringent provisions of the Act, except so far as the special number destroyed goes? I think several causes have been in operation; the seasons have not been generally favorable. I have been told that the total loss of the last spring increase was almost general in the Northern Districts—and many thousands have been driven to Victoria. I do not think the decrease can be attributed to the stringent provisions of the Act, except so far as the special number destroyed goes; but a very great number have been destroyed under the action of this law.

51. By Mr. Cox: Do you think the disease called the Cumberland disease has had any effect in reducing the numbers? Certainly it has. In the Western District many more have died from the Cumberland disease than have been destroyed under the Scab Acts in those districts. I believe the losses from the Cumberland disease have been very considerable on the Castlereagh River and the country about it.

52. By the Chairman: In a district where scab existed in past times, sheep did not increase, because people did not breed from them? No; I think all heart in sheep farming was lost.

53. The ewes were not put to the rams in many instances? I am not able to speak of that myself.

54. The runs in a neighbourhood belonging to proprietors of diseased sheep were vacated, in order to prevent infection? Yes; we have moved our sheep from the neighbourhood of scabby sheep.

55. So that they could not keep so many sheep as others would have done? That would be the effect.

56. So that the tendency was to decrease? Yes. There is another clause which I would suggest should be reconsidered, that under which a shepherd has to give notice to the proprietors through whose runs he intends to pass. It is evaded, and I do not think it answers the purpose.

57. Is it not desirable that notice should be given? The manner of giving notice has been by advertisement in the papers; people advertise in the papers that they are going to send sheep along such a line of road.

58. That is not in accordance with the provisions of this Act? Then, I think, the difficulty and expense of carrying out the provisions of the clause would be greater than the benefit derived from it.

59. You think the individual driving the sheep would suffer more than the persons on whose land they were driven would benefit? Yes; I think so.

60. Are there not other evils resulting from shepherds passing through runs without giving notice to the proprietors—have you not known of flocks mixing, and the proprietors of sheep whose lands have been passed through losing sheep in consequence on their separation of the parties taking more than their due share? Yes. No doubt there are great evils resulting from carelessness in the drovers. At this moment I remember one instance in our own case where the shepherds in charge of a large flock of sheep travelling to market, having remained at a public house, the flock joined a flock of ewes on the eve of lambing, and the whole had to be driven to drafting yards, and separated by hand. Still, I doubt whether giving notice would prevent these inconveniences.

61. Sheep are seldom sent through the country with only one man? There are generally two or more.

62. Why could not one go on before and give notice? I doubt whether it could be done. For instance, if a man camps ten miles from the beginning of a run, the station would probably be ten miles from the boundary, so that he would have twenty miles to come in order to give notice, and back the same evening ten miles more to where his flock would probably camp, and he could not do this in the case of every run he would have to pass through.

63. You say one of the reasons for giving up this clause is that scab can no longer be looked upon as an existing disease; but are there not other infectious diseases which it is desirable to provide against in every possible way—such as catarrh, foot-rot, and the Cumberland disease? No doubt where catarrh may exist. I have not understood that foot-rot or the Cumberland disease is contagious.

64. By Mr. Cox: With regard to the thirtieth clause, which relates to branding sheep, do you not think that is rather arbitrary? I think that is a good provision.

65. Have you not stations more than forty miles from the home station? No, I have not.

66. Do you not think it rather arbitrary to compel those people who have to brand their sheep merely to bring them fifty miles for the purpose of drafting and sending them back again? From run to run I think it would be objectionable, but I think it is not when the sheep cross other men's runs; it is well there should be such a mark upon them that they should be known. I think, if they are travelling wholly on the owner's own country, it is quite unnecessary.

67. The penalty is two shillings a-head—do you not think that excessive? I would make the penalty sufficiently high to carry out the object of the Act.

68. You do not think two shillings is excessive? Not if the clause is necessary; I should say what is necessary to make it effective ought to be imposed. It is not a difficult task; any man can mark sheep.

69.

Wm. Busby,
Esq., J.P.

19 Nov., 1857.

latter end of May—the 28th or 29th May—I examined, in company with my overseer, Mr. W. Bowman, Wood, the whole of these sheep, and my opinion was that they were perfectly free from any disease. There was a flock of wethers particularly that we examined, and we could not perceive the least symptoms of disease upon them; but about a fortnight afterwards I received a note in Sydney to say that the flock of wethers had shown some breaking of the wool on their backs and rumps. Although I did not believe this could have been the scab, as they had not been in contact with any other sheep, I directed my overseer to write to Cassilis and to ask an inspector to be sent over to examine the sheep; the answer he received was that he must just look over the Act and follow the Act. Shortly after an inspector was sent, and two other persons, who came down, examined the sheep, and gave a certificate that, in their opinion, it was the scab, whereupon my overseer gave the notice, and they were destroyed within fourteen days.

4. By Mr. Cox: By whom? By myself, at my own expense. I sent out nine men, with a team of horses. They were all killed and burned.

5. You were not present at their destruction? I was not; I had previously sent to say the sheep were to be boiled down, and a few had been picked out and the boiling down had commenced when the inspector came down.

6. Do you believe them to have been scabby? I do not.

7. You said you minutely examined them before coming to Sydney—why did you examine them; do you usually examine your sheep whether you have any idea of the scab or not? There was so much scab about, and, having had some destroyed at my other station, I was determined to be very cautious. I had sent out my rams, but my sheep were full of ticks, and there were some sixteen of them whose wool had given way; and when they were thrown upon the fire there were myriads of ticks crawled out of them.

8. Were these a portion of the wethers for which you claim compensation? No.

9. Did you comply with the Act by giving notice? Yes; when they were reported by the inspector as being scabby, we did the same day.

10. Did you send to the adjoining station? Yes, to Mr. Fitzgerald's, eight miles distant, which was the only sheep station within twenty miles.

11. By the Chairman: Did you make application to the Bench afterwards for a certificate? Yes, at Cassilis.

12. What were the grounds of their refusal to grant it? They did not state any grounds; they proposed to refer the matter to the Attorney General, and I received a note from the Clerk of the Bench that the Attorney General was of opinion I was not entitled to compensation.

13. Did you ever inquire upon what grounds compensation was refused? I have not ascertained upon what ground; I suppose it was upon the ground that the Scab Inspector, Mr. Stanway, swore that they had had the scab a considerable period before.

14. By Mr. Cox: I understood you to say that you had had some sheep destroyed at Mudgee? Yes; they had nothing to do with that. I had a certificate from the Mudgee Bench.

15. By Mr. Lee: Is the inspector who inspected your sheep a judge of sheep? I suppose he ought to have been; he swore he was.

16. By Mr. Cox: You admit yourself that one flock were scabby? I ordered them to be destroyed.

17. By Mr. Lee: Was that the flock which had so many ticks in? Yes.

18. By Mr. Suttor: You saw some of these sheep destroyed? Yes, that last flock.

19. You give the necessary notice in that case? Yes; and I know my overseer gave the other notice.

20. By Mr. Cox: Were none of your sheep destroyed compulsorily by order of the Bench? No. The moment they were pronounced to be scabby, we gave notice.

21. So that no sheep were destroyed upon your run except what you destroyed yourself? No. I sent nine men and a team of horses to burn them.

22. By Mr. Suttor: Had not the Bench issued their warrant to destroy the sheep? No; only a notice.

23. By Mr. Cox: You are quite sure no warrant was issued? I think, but am not sure, that no warrant was issued. I disputed the last notice, but when Dr. Harris, who, together with Mr. McDonald, saw the sheep, said he thought there might be something, I ordered them to be destroyed.

24. By Mr. Lee: Were these on an adjoining run? They might have crossed the same run; they were about five miles asunder. The others were older sheep; these were young sheep, and had just lambed, about five hundred of them; they were splendid sheep, and a butcher had offered me a pound a-head for them, if I would send them down in August.

25. By Mr. Suttor: Did the Bench ever inquire into the destruction of these sheep after they were destroyed? I made application, and they refused my certificate. Stanway swore, on the first application, that he saw the sheep unconsumed on the fourteenth day. I visited the place myself on the fifteenth day, and saw nothing but a mass of burnt material; and I know the sheep were killed on the eleventh day.

26. Can you say whether these sheep of yours ever communicated the scab to your nearest neighbours? They did not. Mr. Fitzgerald's were the nearest; and one thing that convinced me that the wethers had no scab was that they mixed with a large flock of Mr. Robert Lowe; they were the whole day with them, and none of them were affected in the least; they were grazing on my own purchased land.

27. By Mr. Cox: No person inspected your sheep until yourself requested that an inspector might be sent over? No. Mr. Wood wrote, by my orders, to Cassilis, to have an inspector sent, and they did not send one for ten days; and then, within the time prescribed by the Act, we destroyed them on the eleventh day from the time that the inspector gave his opinion that they were scabbed.

28. How do you account for these sheep becoming scabby? My belief is that they had not the

W. Bowman, the scab. The wool was coming off some of them; and they had what I believed to be the marks of the dogs on their shoulders; but I have some of that flock still remaining, which are entirely free from the scab.

19 Nov., 1857. 29. Why did you yourself kill these sheep? There was something upon them, and as they were pronounced scabby by the inspector, it being a matter of opinion, I thought it best to destroy them.

30. Did you destroy this first flock of ewes previous to the inspector declaring them to be scabby? No, I did not.

31. I thought you said you picked out seventeen or eighteen? That was a flock of wethers we picked out to boil down, not supposing them to be scabby; but when the inspector pronounced them to be scabby, we destroyed them.

32. What disease did you suppose these sheep which you destroyed to be infected with? I have had sheep in a similar condition before, where the whole of the wool has come off, and they have been afterwards perfectly healthy. I have at present a number at Richmond, perfectly healthy, whose wool came off in the same way.

33. By Mr. Suttor: Are you acquainted with a disease in sheep called among shepherds "wild-fire"? I do not know it by that name; but I have known instances of the whole fleece coming off.

34. By Mr. Lee: In such cases have not the heads of the sheep been very much swollen? No.

35. By Mr. Cox: Have you any doubt as to the sheep at Mudgee which were destroyed having been scabby? I had doubts; but I sent to the Bench at Mudgee, and an old man was sent over to examine them, and upon his report I killed them.

36. Where did these sheep come from that were destroyed at Mudgee? They came from Richmond.

37. They were not your own breeding? No; they were purchased at Richmond.

38. Could they not have had the disease at Richmond at the time you purchased them? I do not think they had.

39. They might have had? The party gave me a guarantee. I bought them in August, and did not kill them till April.

40. You did not think they were scabby? I did not think so; but the inspector pronounced them so. I discovered afterwards that a flock from New England had passed along, but I never could find out whose they were; whether it was possible for them to have mixed I could not say; there were some stray sheep about the Big Hill.

41. What appearance had these sheep at Mudgee—what was the appearance of the disease? It broke out very rapidly; the wool came off, but not in the same way as in the cases of scab I had some years ago, in 1828 or 1829. The disease then broke out in little blue spots; but these had not the blue spots; the wool came completely off; it was more like surfeit than anything else.

42. Would you know the scab now if you saw it? I think I should.

43. If you saw sheep infected with scab, could you, without having any doubt in your own mind, distinctly state that they had the scab? I think I could; the cases of scab I have met with have had some peculiar characteristics which would enable any one to recognise the disease.

44. With regard to the Act now in force, 19th Victoria, No. 27, what is your opinion of the second clause, which gives fourteen days for the destruction of sheep infected? I think it too short a time.

45. Do you think where sheep are infected they ought to be destroyed? Yes; but I think there can be no objection to saving the wool and tallow.

46. You think it would be better to kill than to attempt to cure them? I think, under all the circumstances, it would be better to kill them, but the wool and tallow might be saved. If there were a sufficient run, and they were not allowed to stray so as to injure neighbouring flocks, I think they might be successfully cured if they were treated in the spring. I have myself completely cured sheep with two dressings—that was in 1829.

47. By Mr. Lee: Have you not had plenty of sheep cured of the scab? Yes; I had at the time I speak of 6,000 sheep; 2,000 of these were scabbed, and I completely cured the whole of them.

48. By Mr. Cox: Do you think sheep can be cured without changing the run? I do, if the yards are changed, and they are under careful shepherds who will keep them in a fresh part of the run. I do not think it absolutely necessary to send them away from a run, but no doubt it would promote the health of the sheep to send them where they had not been previously running.

49. By Mr. Lee: Did you ever know sheep cured of the scab who have not had their yards shifted? I think not; I tried that a good while and did not succeed. I then washed them thoroughly, put them in a clean yard, and in about a fortnight washed them again.

50. By Mr. Hargrave: Have you known sheep cured of scab within the last few years prior to this Act? Yes.

51. Have you known any since? I cannot state any particular instance, but I have heard of their being cured since, although I cannot state anything positively to the Committee.

52. By Mr. Cox: You are in favor of the present Bill, I think, with some modifications? I think, in the first place, the time is too short; and I think it more desirable to destroy sheep infected than to run the risk of spreading the disease to neighbouring flocks.

53. By Mr. Lee: Did you ever know sheep to be destroyed in any part of the world but New South Wales? I never heard of such a thing.

54. By Mr. Cox: Are you in favor of compensation being continued, supposing the present Act to remain in force? Where there is an assessment made to raise a fund for the purpose, I think it would be very oppressive to destroy the sheep without compensation.

55. In the event of the owner boiling them down and saving their skins and tallow, would you you give him compensation? I think not; I think every one ought to be accountable for his own negligence, and have the benefit of his own care; but where the sheep are compulsorily destroyed in this way, I think the owner should be compensated.

W. Bowman,
Esq., M.P.

19 Nov., 1857.

56. Do you know any of the clauses of the Bill that press particularly arbitrarily upon sheep-owners—the 14th clause for instance, do you think that ought to be modified? I think this clause of the Act oppressive. I have imported sheep from England on two occasions, and took no such precautions, and they were perfectly clean.

57. You would have thought it very harsh if those sheep had had disease to have had their throats cut? Yes; or to have had them sheared at a bad time of the year. It would have done them no harm to have washed them, or to have sheared them if it had been a proper time of year, but it might have injured them very much if the season had been unfavorable. I think the clause is highly oppressive, that it is injurious to the sheep, and not at all necessary.

58. With regard to the 16th clause, do you think that is necessary—"Shepherds travelling with sheep to give notice of their approach to owners of runs"? I do not think it is necessary. I think, with ordinary care, no danger would be incurred. If parties were aware of, or suspected, the existence of disease, that would alter the case, but I do not see the necessity of giving notice in any other case.

59. With regard to the yearly assessment, you think if people had the privilege of boiling down their sheep and of saving the wool and skins, there would be no necessity to levy an assessment? I do not. I think it oppressive upon those who are careful to pay for the negligence of others; I do not think any man should be made liable for the accidents of others, unless those accidents are attributable to him.

60. Are you aware of any other clauses that required amendment? I never went very much into the Act. In fact I became so much disgusted with the matter that I scarcely looked at it.

61. What is your opinion of the thirteenth clause—"Travelling sheep to be branded"? It is no great deal of trouble, and no injury to the sheep; that clause can do no harm.

62. Are your stations beyond forty miles apart? No.

63. If they were beyond forty miles apart, would you find it oppressive to be obliged to brand them whenever you had them in to draft;—supposing your stations were fifty miles away from your head station, and your sheep were coming in to lamb, would you think it advisable, or would it not harm them to brand them? I think it would be hurtful to do so; the less they are pulled about at that time the better; but I think it would be no harm to mark them with a conspicuous brand shortly after shearing.

64. By Mr. Lee: With what would you brand them? With oil or tallow, and a small portion of coloring matter—ruddle or pitch—something that would not injure the wool.

65. Do you not think it would injure the wool, if the sheep were branded with tallow or pitch before shearing? It would not do it any good; it would slightly deteriorate the part that was marked; it would act as a safeguard in case of mixing.

66. Did you ever know any sheep that were not either ear-marked or flesh branded? I never had any but were ear marked or flesh branded.

67. By Mr. Suttor: Parties that are travelling a distance generally brand their sheep, for their own protection? Yes; and for that reason I do not think a compulsory clause is necessary.

68. The penalty for non-compliance is two shillings—do you think that excessive? Yes, I do.

69. Would you do away with the assessment altogether? Yes, I would, if parties were allowed to make the best use they could of their sheep, and were at liberty to cure them, using all necessary precautions to guard against injuring their neighbours.

70. By Mr. Hargrave: Would you have inspectors, to declare when sheep were scabby? I think great caution should be used in the appointment of these inspectors; as so much is placed in their power, they should be men of great intelligence and experience.

71. You would not leave it to the proprietor of the sheep to say whether the sheep were infected or not? No.

72. How would you pay the inspectors? I think they should be paid by fees from the parties whose sheep were infected; and if upon inspection the sheep were found not to be infected, the fee should be paid by the party who gave the information, or who desired the sheep to be inspected.

73. So that under any circumstances the inspector should get his fee? Yes, a reasonable fee, to induce him to do his duty, and to get a good, upright man, in whom confidence could be placed.

74. By Mr. Hargrave: From your knowledge of the country, do you think it advisable to allow sheep to be cured within three months, rather than to make it compulsory upon the owners to kill them? Yes, I think it more desirable to allow them to attempt to cure them within three months; if they could not be cured within that time they should be killed.

75. By Mr. Cox: Do you not think it would be attended with some risk to neighbours to keep them three months? There might be some risk; I think in shearing time they might be cured in less time; I would not allow longer.

76. By Mr. Lee: Do you believe sheep catch the scab by going over ground that has been travelled over by infected sheep? I think it possible; but if they are yarded in the same yard they are very liable to do so.

Mr. William Clements, called in and examined :—

- Mr. William Clements.
19 Nov., 1857.
1. By the Chairman : You are the Sheep Inspector in Sydney ? I am.
 2. You are also a veterinary surgeon ? Yes.
 3. Have you had many cases of diseased sheep under your notice since the Act came into operation ? No, only two.
 4. What were they ? They came from New Zealand.
 5. You have had no cases of diseased sheep coming from the interior ? I have nothing to do with sheep from the interior ; only imported sheep.
 6. Is there another inspector for butchers' sheep ? I believe there is ; but I believe sheep coming from the interior are not inspected at all, or sheep coming from Maitland.
 7. Have you your appointment here ? No. The clause of the Act under which I work (the 14th) is perfectly useless. That is a letter I received in reply to a number of queries I placed before the Government. [The witness handed in a letter from the Colonial Secretary's Office, dated 14 February, 1856. Vide Appendix A.] In accordance with that, I seized upon some sheep coming from Maitland. I went to the Magistrate to obtain a summons, and he refused to grant it me until I had obtained the opinion of the Solicitor General. I went to him and obtained this, which I now beg to hand in. [The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix B.]
 8. Have you confined your attention to sheep that have been imported ? Yes.
 9. Whether coastwise or otherwise ? Yes. With regard to this Maitland case—I went down to the steamer one night, though no report had been sent to me of the arrival of sheep, and said to the owner he must comply with the Act, which required the sheep to be sheared and dressed, or I should be obliged to take proceedings against him. There were about 300, and the owner said he wanted the sheep for slaughtering, and if they were to be sheared and dressed he might as well cut their throats at once, and throw them into the water. The Steam Company said they would not have the sheep on their wharf, and he removed them. I then went to Mr. Dowling for a summons ; he said he would not grant one, as he did not conceive this to be within the meaning of the Act. I afterwards obtained the opinion from Mr. Manning I have handed in, so that I could do nothing with the Maitland sheep.
 10. Were these sheep dressed ? No ; but according to the Act they should have been shorn and dressed.
 11. If they had been dressed with such dressing as that usually applied, the sheep would not have been fit for slaughtering ? Certainly not ; and the owner said he had nowhere to feed the sheep.
 12. You would have some alteration made in that clause ? Yes ; I would have a very great alteration.
 13. Would you not rather have it in this way—that sheep coming coastwise should not be landed without a certificate from the inspector ? Yes. I would make it imperative that no party should be allowed to take sheep out of Sydney without a certificate from the inspector that they were clean.
 14. In the case of sheep coming from Maitland, or coastwise, if they were shipped clean they would not be liable to contract the disease on board ? I do not know—some of these steamers are liable to communicate the contagion ; but they should have a certificate which should be shewn to the Inspector of Slaughter Houses.
 15. Would you draw a distinction between sheep coming coastwise and those coming from Europe, or other foreign countries ? I think it would be foolish to dress any sheep coming for the purpose of food ; but I would recommend that any sheep going up the country for the purpose of raising stock should be dressed.
 16. I understood you to recommend that any sheep coming coastwise should, after a certificate had been given that they were clean, be at liberty to land ? Yes.
 17. Would you make any difference between them and sheep coming from foreign parts ? Yes. I think there should be a kind of depôt in Sydney, where sheep should be landed. For instance, rams brought from Europe should be examined, sheared, and dressed, and at the expiration of a certain time the inspector should give a certificate, and let them go.
 18. Do you think it would be necessary to shear and dress them—for instance, if they arrived in the winter months, and were going up the country, might it not endanger their lives ? If I did not shear I would dress them.
 19. You would make it compulsory to dress sheep imported for stud purposes ? Yes.
 20. If such sheep were kept in this depôt for a month, under your eye, would not that be sufficient to satisfy you whether they had or had not the disease ? Yes.
 21. Then there would be no necessity to dress them ? No, there would not ; but still I think dressing would be a greater safeguard, and would not injure the sheep.
 22. The shearing might injure them ? Yes, but dressing would not.
 23. You would recommend that sheep coming from any foreign country should be placed in quarantine ? Yes.
 24. And be there kept until the inspector was satisfied they were clean ? Yes ; scattered about in different directions, as they are at present, it is impossible for the inspector to see them dressed, or to keep charge of them.
 25. You would not recommend that sheep coming from England, although they might have the disease, should be destroyed ? No ; I think it is a disease easily cured, especially where there are only two or three rams.
 26. Refer to the second clause of the Act,—“Sheep infected with the disease to be destroyed within fourteen days”—would you recommend the continuance of that clause ? No ; I never did recommend the destruction of sheep infected with scab ; I consider it a great loss to the country.
 27. Do you recommend any amendment of this clause ? I think a certain time might be given to parties, that they might attempt to cure them, and if they did not succeed within that time, then they should be required to kill them.

28. What time would you give—six months? That I suppose would depend a great deal upon the labor to be obtained. Mr. William Clements.
29. You are quite satisfied that sheep can be cured? Yes. 19 Nov., 1857.
30. Supposing large numbers to be infected upon a station, do you still consider that it would be practicable to cure them? Yes, I do; it only requires extra labor.
31. In the two cases you have referred to of sheep coming from New Zealand, what was done with them? They were killed and eaten.
32. This stringent clause has not always been acted upon? It was the election time, and I seized upon the sheep, and proposed to take them to the Police Office till I got a warrant for their destruction. When I got there I could not obtain a warrant, as the Magistrates were all engaged in electioneering. When I found the man out, he said he had seen some other butcher, who had told him they were all right, and had been killed and eaten, and that the people had felt no ill effects from them. These were some sheep that had been sent from here as store sheep; they were brought back, and had got the scab on board.
33. The scab being a cutaneous disease, would not affect the meat? No, not in the first stages.
34. In case of the compulsory destruction of the sheep, would you allow the owner of the sheep to save the wool and tallow? They might save the tallow, but not the wool, unless it passed through some process which would kill the acari.
35. Suppose under some regulation it was not to be removed from the spot, or until it had been scoured? I would not allow it to be saved, unless it could be put under some process that would kill the parasite and its eggs.
36. How long do you think the insect would exist after being removed from the animal? I should say about three weeks or a month; I believe it has been known to exist longer.
37. You would not allow the wool to be saved, unless great care were taken? No; the tallow might.
38. If the wool were dipped in boiling water? Then it might be saved.
39. By Mr. Robertson: Will you be kind enough to say how long you have been Inspector? My appointment commenced on 4th January, 1856,—about a year and nine months.
40. What remuneration have you received from the Office? Sixpence for every sheep I have inspected.
41. You have had no salary? No salary whatever.
42. You have not found it a very profitable employment? Very unprofitable.
43. How many sheep have you inspected as an authorized officer? I have inspected about 280.
44. Then you have in fact received only about £7? Yes.
45. Do you think that a sufficient sum to induce a person to take much trouble? No.
46. Then I suppose, unless you did it from patriotic motives, you had no inducement? Having undertaken it, I said I would carry it out, especially as I had taken an interest in it from the commencement.
47. Will you be kind enough to tell us what experience you have had in sheep farming, or what means you have had of becoming acquainted with the disease called scab? I have become acquainted with the disease from having made it my study, and from a variety of experiments.
48. Where? Some in Sydney and some at home.
49. How many experiments have you made? Some fifteen or sixteen, at different periods.
50. Have you seen fifteen or sixteen lots of scabby sheep? I have seen more than that; but I have made experiments upon that number.
51. In Sydney? Yes.
52. I understood that you had inspected only two? That is since my appointment.
53. These experiments extend over a considerable period of time? No; I made them previous to the Act passing.
54. At what period? The commencement of 1855.
55. Were there so many scabby sheep at that time? No; these were sound sheep that I infected with scab.
56. How did you manage that? By taking the insect from the scabby sheep and placing them upon sound sheep. I had two scabby sheep given to me, and I tried a variety of experiments upon them. After they had been cured for some time I put a number of sound sheep with them.
57. How long after the insect was placed upon the sound sheep did the disease become apparent? Sometimes it may be seen in eight days.
58. So as to become quite apparent? Yes, by parting the wool and examining the sheep.
59. In cases where the disease appeared, did you dress the sheep immediately? No; I allowed the disease to take its course for a week or so, and then I dressed it.
60. What do you dress it with? Oil and kreasote—one dressing.
61. What would be the expense of a dressing of that kind? It is rather expensive; I suppose to dress a sheep three times would cost two or three shillings.
62. In what period would that make a complete cure? In about a fortnight or three weeks.
63. How many men do you think it would take to dress five hundred sheep sufficiently in one day? Three men could dress five hundred.
64. You have spoken of some sheep that were brought up from New Zealand? Yes.
65. You say they were exported from this port, returned, and had scab when they returned? Yes.
66. How do you account for their having scab when they returned? I cannot tell you; they had been sent to New Zealand some time previously, in a vessel which had taken sheep before, and the butcher who sent them said they were sound when they went away.
67. Were they scabby when they got to New Zealand? That I cannot say.
68. You say they were afterwards killed and eaten in the city? Yes.

- Mr. William Clements.
19 Nov., 1857.
69. What means did you take to ascertain whether they were killed, beyond questioning the party? I got a summons for the party and brought him to the Police Office, and he there admitted that he had killed the sheep and sold them. He brought some man who said the sheep were sound. He was committed to take his trial at the Quarter Sessions, and had, I believe, fourteen days imprisonment.
70. Then it was proved that they were actually killed? Yes.
71. You have said you do not consider it your duty to examine any sheep but those which are imported? No, I do not say that; I consider it ought to be my duty.
72. Do you consider that it is your duty? Yes; but, after I had Mr. Manning's opinion, Mr. Dowling said it was of no use my taking out any more summonses, and that if I did he should dismiss the parties.
73. Suppose you were to ascertain that any party had a score of scabby sheep coming from Parramatta, would you consider it your duty to examine those sheep? Undoubtedly.
74. Then your statement that it was your duty to examine only imported sheep was made under a misapprehension? Yes; it is my duty to examine them wherever I hear of them.
75. Do you think you have a right to examine any scabby sheep without an order from a Magistrate? Yes, I believe I have.
76. Can you tell me how it happens that inspectors in country districts have an annual salary, independently of the sixpence a-head you speak of, while you have none? No, I cannot.
77. In your evidence in chief you stated, although you somewhat modified the statement afterwards, that you would not allow the wool of scabby sheep to be saved. Now, supposing sheep were boiled down, would it not, for all practical purposes, be safe enough if this wool were packed in wool bales after drying the skins in some place where there would be no danger of sheep approaching? If you could do it in some place where you would be certain there were no means of spreading the contagion.
78. Seeing that you have given evidence in favor of boiling down, you must contemplate some place where the sheep can be kept apart from others. If you boil the sheep down in some such place you can pack the skins in the same place,—do you think that would be sufficient? I think it would, providing you could make certain no other sheep would come upon the same ground.
79. Would it be necessary to whitewash the bales with lime, for the purpose of letting parties through whose property they might pass know the nature of their contents, as well as to prevent the insect from coming out? I do not think it would have that effect.
80. Do you not think or believe that lime would cure this disease? I think not.
81. Does it not happen to be within your knowledge that some gentleman in South Australia published a plan for curing scab by means of whitewash—the paper was published in the Sydney newspapers, and occupied a considerable amount of attention? No, I am not aware of it.
82. I suppose you are aware that very few insects like lime? Yes; by limewashing the bales you might entangle, and by that means imprison, the insect.
83. Is that the only way in which it would affect them? I think so, for I know that in South Australia, where there are lime floors, there are a great number of fleas.
84. Would not frequent limewashing check that? Yes; but I do not think that would arise from any destructive quality in the lime itself.
85. You do not think any benefit would arise from washing the bales with lime? Except that it would entangle the insect.
86. You, who have made so many experiments, must know that insects will not live in lime? They cannot in burning lime.
87. Is it within your knowledge that sheep may be cured of scab with hot water alone? No.
88. You are aware that the scab is an insect? Yes.
89. You are aware that it is a very small insect, and that a small amount of heat in the water, which would possibly kill the insect, would not injure the larger animal, the sheep? No; I am not aware of that; inasmuch as the insect burrows in the skin and lays its eggs beneath the surface, where they remain until they are hatched, and then it comes forth with the young insect on its belly. You might, perhaps, destroy those which were outside the skin, but the others would escape.
90. Would your medicine follow it into the skin? It would not follow it into the skin, but as fast as the insects came out it would kill them. If you dressed them and kept them until the ova were hatched you would destroy them all.
91. Then, if it were ascertained how long the insect remained in the skin, and submitted the sheep to this hot water process a second time, when the insects re-appeared on the skin would not that destroy them? No, I think not.
92. By Mr. Lee: How long do you suppose the insect will live after the skin is dried? As long as the skin retains a certain amount of its original properties the insect will live.
93. Then when that period has elapsed, there is no danger in moving the skin? There are the ova and the acari which may be upon the wool; I think the dead skin may be the vehicle by which it may be carried.
94. Then I suppose the egg may fall into a living sheep, and there be hatched? Yes.
95. By the Chairman: You see no objection to saving the skin and wool, if proper precautions be taken to cleanse them? No.
96. By Mr. Hargrave: Do you not think fellmongering the skins upon the station would be the safest way? Yes. I am of opinion that no wool should be allowed to be saved, unless the skins had been fellmongered, or passed through boiling water. This I should make imperative.

APPENDIX A.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 14th February, 1856.

Mr. William
Clements.

19 Nov., 1857.

SIR,

In reply to certain questions contained in your communication of the 28th ultimo, I am directed by His Excellency the Governor General to inform you, that the wording of the Scab Act appears too plain to admit of a doubt that Sheep arriving in the Port of Sydney from Maitland, Moreton Bay, Twofold Bay, &c. &c., come within the meaning of the 14th clause of that Act.

2. With regard to the second paragraph of your letter, I have to refer you to the 13th section of the Act, from which you will perceive that all travelling sheep are to be branded, under a penalty not exceeding 2s. for each unbranded animal.

3. I am further directed to inform you, that there is nothing in the Scab in Sheep Act requiring Scab Inspectors to examine sheep intended for slaughter. The Inspector of Slaughter Houses is the proper person to perform this duty.

4. In answer to your inquiry, whether you have power to act beyond the City of Sydney and Hamlets, I have to state that your duties as Inspector, under the before mentioned Act, are confined to sheep imported into Sydney.

5. I have also to add, for your information, that the lands near Sydney are not exempted from the provisions of the Act in question.

I am, &c.,

W. ELYARD,
(For the Colonial Secretary.)

APPENDIX B.

It appears to me that, under the 14th section of the "Scab in Sheep Act," all persons importing sheep coastwise, such as those brought from Maitland, are legally bound to report the fact to the Inspector; but I think that if they are bona fide for slaughter in Sydney, they need not be examined, shorn, or dressed. They would not be within the spirit and intention of the Act, nor do I think that a removal to places in or about Sydney for slaughter would be a "removal from the seaport," within the true meaning of the words of this section.

W. M. MANNING,
S. G.

July 18th, 1856.

FRIDAY, 20 NOVEMBER, 1857.

Present:—

MR. COX,
MR. DONALDSON,
MR. HARGRAVE,

MR. LEE,
MR. ROBERTSON,
MR. SUTTOR.

W. H. SUTTOR, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

Henry Dangar, Esquire, J.P., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You have been many years in the Colony? I have; about thirty-six or thirty-seven years.
2. You have been a long time possessed of extensive property as a sheep farmer? Yes, I have pretty large flocks.
3. And have had considerable experience in sheep? Yes, I have.
4. Are you acquainted with the disease called scab? Yes; at one period I suffered from having the disease in my flocks.
5. Are you acquainted with the working of the present Act at all? I am, a little; but I have been a good deal absent from the Colony, in England, during the principal part of the period of its working, and I therefore am not particularly familiar with it.
6. If you look at the 2nd clause, you will see that sheep infected are to be destroyed within fourteen days? Yes.
7. Do you think the present law should be continued? Not in its present shape; but with pretty large alterations and modifications.
8. What alterations would you propose? I would propose a less Algerine law, less affecting the interests of sheep owners, and lessening the sums to be paid should the disease occur again. I think it should be made less stringent than at present.
9. Do I understand that you would allow parties time to cure their sheep? Yes, that is one of the alterations I would suggest. I am of opinion that there should be reasonable time allowed for curing, and an extended period of time before such a law as this should take effect. I think some line should be drawn between parties whose sheep were running on their own land and those whose sheep were upon leasehold land. It seems to me to be an outrageous kind of law to put a man under penalties and to fine him for having diseased sheep on his own freehold. If he chooses to keep them for a limited time on his own land before he considers it necessary to exterminate them, I do not see why he should not do so. I would also recommend an extension of time to parties who stabled diseased sheep both day and night, which would be far less destructive than slaughter and burning. Sheep farming is very successfully and extensively practised in Germany, where the sheep are wholly stabled, and disease from scab never occurs. I think the practise and law of burning the carcasses most vicious.

H. Dangar,
Esq., J.P.
20 Nov., 1857.

H. Dangar,
Esq., J.P.

20 Nov., 1857.

10. Then you would make the present law less stringent with regard to persons having sheep on their private property? Yes; I think some distinction might be drawn between persons having sheep on their own land and those having them upon land of which they were merely leaseholders, or entitled to run on sufferance.

11. By Mr. Lee: I understand you to say that you have had scabby sheep? Yes.

12. Did you cure them, or were they destroyed? I cured them, and saved the flock, and without cost to the public.

13. Then it is, of course, your opinion that they can be cured? Decidedly.

14. By the Chairman: You have no doubt of it? I have no doubt of it. In many incipient cases especially, where the disease has not established itself virulently and permanently, I do not see why the opportunity should not be given the unfortunate proprietor to attempt to cure them before submitting to such a ruinous loss.

15. By Mr. Lee: Did you ever hear of an Act of this kind in any part of the world but New South Wales? Never; it always appeared to me to be un-English-like and unjust. I do not deny that large good has been done to the country, but a large loss has also been incurred. I am happy to find that all hands have been willing to unite in stopping the disease. The amount of good effected is judged worthy of the great sacrifices made; but as now that scab is reduced to a mere cipher, it will be impolitic, in my opinion, to place such a power in the hands of inspectors, and to place such restraints on the travelling over the high and public roads of the Colony, and more especially after all the good is almost done.

16. By the Chairman: If I understand you rightly, you would not, under any circumstances, allow sheep to be destroyed until the proprietor had had a fair opportunity of curing them? I would not.

17. From your long experience you are quite satisfied that sheep may be cured of scab if proper care be taken? Yes, they were cured in my own case. It happened to my flocks in 1846 and 1847. I certainly did not cure them the first summer, but the second year the disease disappeared, and I have heard nothing of it since.

18. You consider it too great a sacrifice of property to destroy sheep without endeavouring to cure them? Yes, without giving the owner an opportunity to use his skill; but that should be more particularly applicable to sheep running on the owner's own land.

19. Will you now go to clause 3,—according to your evidence this would be altogether unnecessary? In severe cases my experience would still lead me to recommend the destruction of sheep. And in any such severe case, upon the oath of any party, before two Justices, it might be made competent to set the inspecting law in motion, but only to the extent of curing and stabling—not the destruction at first.

20. In that case would you allow the parties compensation? I would.

21. To what extent would you give compensation—it is now four shillings a head? I think that hardly enough.

22. Seeing that sheep have so much increased in value? Yes, I would be guided by that in some measure; instead of four I would give six shillings.

23. By Mr. Lee: Do you not think that might lead to something unfair; if a man had a bad, unhealthy flock, might he not try to give those sheep the scab, in order to get a higher price for them than they were really worth? I cannot imagine that, because it is notorious that the price within the last three or four years has immensely increased, and I do not see why that should not accompany this in some measure. Even putting it at six shillings, that is a very low figure indeed.

24. Do you believe that all sheep are worth six shillings a head? Scarcely; not the average of flocks, perhaps.

25. Are you not aware that in some parts of the Colony, such as New England, where the disease has not been, that sheep are not worth more than six shillings? No.

26. By the Chairman: With regard to the 13th clause, which requires all sheep travelling beyond forty miles to be branded—do you think it necessary that they should be branded? There would be no great harm in requiring them to be branded; it would be for the owners' own protection against robbery also to brand them; and this is done, without the interference of law, by sheep proprietors on the commons (equal to our runs) of Cornwall, Devonshire, and Wiltshire, with very beneficial effects.

27. By Mr. Lee: What is your opinion with regard to putting a brand upon sheep coming in to be sheared—would it do any injury to the wool? It would be slightly injurious to the wool, certainly.

28. Did you ever know any sheep near you to be unbranded, or without ear-marks? I have known them without ear-marks; but there is a sort of branding tar being generally used.

29. By the Chairman: The 16th clause requires "shepherds travelling with sheep to give notice of their approach to owners of runs"? I dare say there are a great many ridiculous things in this Act, and this is one of them. It is quite unnecessary, and almost always evaded and avoided.

30. You have stated that you would allow parties time for curing sheep, and that in the event of their not curing them you would have them destroyed; what time would you allow on a squatting station? I would allow fifteen months, to include almost the whole of the second summer.

31. Would you allow them to boil down the sheep and save the wool? Yes; they should have the option of doing so within a prescribed time, but on the spot.

32. With regard to the assessment, a less amount would be required if parties had the option of curing their sheep in six months? Yes.

33. Have you any idea what amount of assessment would be required? I have not.

34. Do you know of any cases of scab existing at the present time? No.

35. By Mr. Robertson: You have said you would allow the proprietor of scabby sheep the opportunity of curing them? Yes.

36. And you have also said that when you had scab among your sheep some years ago, it took took two years to cure them? It did; but had I to do the same thing again, it would be under an improved system of sheep doctoring.

37. As you had then a smaller number of sheep, and greater facilities for obtaining labor, may it not be that you had a better opportunity then than you would have now? Yes, rather so, in that point of view, but not much.

38. However, you say you think the proprietor ought to be allowed fifteen months to cure them? That is a short period enough. I would be inclined to name it as a maximum period.

39. Would it not be very probable, if parties were allowed to keep their scabby sheep so long, that they would stray into neighbouring flocks, and give them the scab? It is a contingency that might happen; and in such a case I should say that the proprietor should, by another law, be made answerable.

40. But the proprietor might have no means of making compensation—might he not say, "I cannot pay," or go into the Insolvent Court? It would be in his power. Any diseased sheep, the property of any insolvent person, should be seized and at once sold by the Government, and not be allowed to be removed. The value would create a fund sufficient (by immediate boiling) to pay compensation above four shillings each.

41. Then, would it not be better for the whole sheep proprietary of the country, and especially when there are so few scabby sheep, and when, if the disease were again to appear it would necessarily be only to a small extent, to destroy the sheep; and to pay, by means of assessment, the proprietors for their loss? It is a difficult matter, perhaps, to give an opinion upon that. It might certainly be done, but it should be accompanied by some well known laws and rules.

42. Do you think, under any restrictions, the principle of the present law providing for the compulsory destruction of the sheep, and the compensation of their owners, is a just principle? I think it is not just; it is largely objectionable, and should undergo some revision.

43. The principle you object to, in any shape? Yes; the rigid destruction. It would be far more tolerable if owners were obliged by law within three months of any information of scab, on oath, to give the owner the option of boiling his diseased, or suspected diseased sheep, and not be allowed to remove them to any new run; and, in such case, he should not be able to claim compensation.

44. By Mr. Donaldson: Have you ever known scab exist to any extent in New England? Not to any extent; but I have known it prevail there slightly.

45. How long ago? Two years ago.

46. For the last few years have you known it at all? I have heard that it has been among some of my neighbour's flocks—Mr. Marsh's.

47. Do you not conceive, from your own experience of the working of the present law, that the people who are paying assessment there are, in fact, paying a bonus to the south country, and, in that point of view, it is unjust to the clean districts of the country? Yes; for in New England it has not prevailed to any injurious extent; it has prevailed in some individual cases where the parties have not managed the sheep properly.

48. Do you know, in round numbers, how many sheep there are in the Northern District that which you believe generally have not been infected with scab? I do not.

49. From three to four millions, including Moreton Bay, Clarence River, and Darling Downs? Any opinion I could give would be a mere guess.

50. In all these districts scab is very little known? Yes, very little.

51. And yet two pounds a thousand is paid for the sheep, and this amount goes to the south country? Yes. It is particularly hard upon the non-infected. But it is a tax, and a contingency in doing a great public good by the few for the good of the majority, and wherein it is impossible to make the tax bear equally towards those who are careless, or who commit the deed.

52. Has it ever occurred to you that the taxing of all sheep in this way, for the purpose of compensating those whose sheep may be infected and destroyed, is in fact a premium for bad management? Yes; it is attributable to the management. I think almost the whole of scab, in the event of its prevailing again, can be eradicated by obliging the owners to boil them on the spot within a period of three months, on any information, on oath, before any two Justices. It might be a question whether the Legislature would give the opportunity of curing or not. In this case no compensation at all would be required.

53. So that if you manage your sheep extremely well, and employ a good superintendent, in order to avoid this infectious disease, you have to pay a tax, which is given as a bonus to those who neglect their sheep, and from which you derive no benefit? Yes.

54. Is not this manifestly unjust? It is manifestly unjust.

55. If the stoppage of a disease, arising in a great measure from bad management, become the duty of the state, would it not be fair to make those whose sheep were thus infected bear the penalty, rather than that the good sheep-owner, who took every means in his power to avoid the disease, should pay for their neglect? If it were possible to introduce such a law, it would be desirable.

56. You think the present law unjust? Yes. In the event of an alteration of the law, I would recommend that rather a different set of men should be appointed as inspectors. And as a mark upon all clean runs—as a brand—they might be noticed by some abatement in the yearly assessment, which those who had continuously had only clean-runs for the past seven years would be entitled to.

57. What class of men would you recommend? It is a very important matter, and I would recommend that there should be local provincial inspectors, who should be assisted by a jury of two sheep proprietors, to be taken from the owners in the neighbourhood, they not being interested.

58. By Mr. Hargrave: Would you require the Legislature to compel any two persons to inspect them, because it would be a very unthankful task? Yes; I would leave the Magistrates

- H. Dangar, Esq., J.P.
20 Nov., 1857.
- trates to say what two persons should go and assist, and they should be paid for their attendance.
59. You think the principle of giving compensation is, in effect, a good manager paying for the losses caused by a bad one? Yes, it has that effect.
60. Do you think bad management was the cause of the disease breaking out in New England? I would not say that it was the cause, but that it was one of the causes.
61. Are you aware what was the cause of its breaking out in New England? I have heard that the disease was brought by some imported rams, and a predisposition in the blood, or causes rising out of poverty of run, and consequently more susceptibility of attack, are amongst the causes. I certainly think the compensation system should be continued to be provided for, but only so far as its yearly wants require. If the sheep intended to be boiled under this Act are to be paid for at the rate they now are, there will be an uncertainty whether the value will leave a deficiency.

Richard Lewis Jenkins, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

- R. L. Jenkins, Esq., J.P.
20 Nov., 1857.
1. By the Chairman: You are a sheep farmer, I believe? I have been for the last fifteen years, but am not at present.
2. In what part of the Colony? In the District of Liverpool Plains.
3. You have had some considerable experience in the management of sheep? I have; not only on my own stations, but I have been in the habit of visiting and noticing the management of sheep on adjoining runs.
4. Are you acquainted with the disease called scab? I am.
5. Have you ever had any diseased sheep yourself? Never; but I have been called upon to inspect diseased sheep of other settlers, both in the Liverpool Plains District and on the Hunter River.
6. Have you had any experience of the treatment of the disease? I have had no personal experience, but I have seen the disease treated at Captain Dumaresq's, on the Hunter, at Segenhoe, and at other places.
7. Were those sheep cured that you saw treated for the disease? I cannot say from my personal knowledge, but I have been told so.
8. Are you acquainted with the Act at present in force? I hold it now in my hand.
9. From your experience of sheep farming, and of the disease called scab, would you recommend that the present Act be continued, or that portion of it that relates to the destruction of sheep? I would. If this question had been put to me previous to the operation of the present Act I should have modified my reply; but, looking to the freedom of the country at the present time from the disease, I think it would be inexpedient to abolish it, inasmuch as I believe the disease will only be produced in this country again by imported contagion. I do not believe the disease will be generated in the Colony. Looking, therefore, to the very little destruction of life we may anticipate, if stringent measures are at once applied, and again to the great difficulty, when the disease does break out, of curing the sheep on over-crowded runs, as well as the ignorance of the people who are generally employed for the curing of the disease, I think it would be very improper, and neutralising the good which has been produced by the destruction of life hitherto, if it were not at once met by some stringent measure.
10. Would you confine the compensation for sheep destroyed to the amount provided in the third clause—the present compensation is four shillings a head? Yes.
11. Do you think that is sufficient? I think fully sufficient.
12. Would you include lambs in that compensation? Not small lambs.
13. Of what age? Not unweaned lambs.
14. Would you allow parties destroying their sheep to save the wool and tallow? I think, under the present Act, there has been a great waste of property from the destruction of wool, and from the parties not having been allowed to boil down their sheep, and I do not think—the disease depending as it does upon a living insect, a parasite—there would be any danger in saving the wool, provided it were kept a certain time and were not allowed to be spread about the station.
15. You would leave it optional with the parties to burn the sheep with their wool, or to boil them down and save their wool and tallow, under certain regulations? Under certain regulations. If they had full fleeces I would compel them to shear them and boil them down, and in such cases I would not give the parties compensation. I think the Act has been very hard upon persons living in healthy districts, as in the district where I have resided.
16. That is to say you think careful persons have had to pay for the negligence of others? Not in all cases, but in most cases for the negligence of others.
17. Then you would only give compensation where the parties were not likely to get four shillings, after paying expenses, from the tallow and wool? Yes.
18. Have you had sufficient experience of this disease to be able to say whether you consider it can be easily cured or not? I have had sufficient experience to warrant me in saying it is a disease that can be cured, provided the runs are not over-crowded. It is necessary to place the sheep on a clean country immediately after being dressed, but in most cases I do not think this would be practicable.
19. As the disease is a parasitical insect, would it be likely that for a considerable period after treating the sheep the disease would be likely to appear again? Not if they were properly dressed, but the danger arises from so few persons who undertake to dress them possessing the requisite amount of knowledge for their treatment.
20. Do you know any instances of scab existing at present? Not one.
21. And you do not think it likely the disease will appear again, except from imported sheep? Yes.

22. What is your opinion of the 13th clause, which requires all sheep travelling to be branded? I think that a very proper provision, apart from this Act altogether.
23. Would not people naturally brand their sheep for their own protection? It would be natural, one would think, that they should do so, but it has not been customary.
24. Would not the brand be injurious to the wool, for instance, if sheep were about to be sheared? In some instances I found it inconvenient, where they were just travelling to the shed; but I think some provision might be made in the clause that it should apply only to sheep driven to market, and not to those driven to the shearing shed.
25. The 16th clause requires that parties travelling sheep shall give notice? I found that to be almost impracticable; in fact it has never been carried out. People endeavour to evade it by giving a general notice in the papers.
26. You think that clause has been evaded? Yes. I would propose that the next clause with regard to inspectors, as it at present stands, should be entirely done away with. I would have a proper inspector, who should be a veterinary surgeon, at the seaport, and one or more at the boundary between us and Victoria—the two points whence we are likely to receive imported contagion. In other places I do not think inspectors necessary; the settlers themselves, as they would be the most interested, would be the first to hear of the disease, and would take care to protect themselves. I would provide, however, for power to be given the Benches of Magistrates to compel persons, by summons, to go and inspect sheep reported to be diseased. The inspectors who have been appointed have for the most part been useless, without the requisite knowledge; and in all the cases I have known the office has been a perfect sinecure.
27. You would recommend that a thoroughly competent person, such as a veterinary surgeon, should be appointed at each port? Yes; he should be a sort of sheep health officer, to examine all imported sheep.
28. With regard to the 14th clause,—suppose an imported valuable ram, worth a hundred guineas, had a spot of scab on, the inspector would be compelled to have him killed? I think an exception should be made in such cases, but I would not allow such rams to go among my flocks till they had served a good quarantine.
29. Could they not be placed in quarantine in a stable? Yes. I would extend the time in cases of that kind to two years, so as to make thoroughly sure that they were clean. One dressing might kill the parasite, but not the eggs of the insect, which, in the course of time, may renew the disease.
30. If a competent veterinary surgeon were appointed, he ought to be able to ascertain when a sheep was cured? It ought to be left to a competent inspector, who should not release them from quarantine until they were quite clean.
31. By Mr. Robertson: Are you aware that there is at present a surplus of £11,000 in the Treasury arising from the assessment of sheep, beyond what has been paid for compensation and for inspectors? Yes.
32. That being the case, would you not desire that in any new law for the purpose, the provision for assessment should remain in abeyance until this £11,000 was expended? Yes; I think it would be most unjust to apply it to any other purpose than that for which it was raised, and I do not myself anticipate that there will be any necessity at all for a new assessment. I consider that if this stringent clause be followed out in its integrity, as there are only two sources whence we may expect to get the disease among us again, very little money will be required, so that the sum at present in hand will be more than ample for the salaries of inspectors for years to come.
33. Then you recognise the justice and expediency of discontinuing the assessment clauses at any time until this £11,000 surplus shall have been expended? Yes.
34. Are you of opinion that the class of inspectors has been sufficiently intelligent? They have been about the worst class that could have been appointed; men who knew nothing at all of sheep. I know that was the case at Wee Waa, where the inspector scarcely knew a sheep from a goat.
35. And at Tamworth? At Tamworth the party states he has had knowledge of sheep, but I do not know that he has ever had, from my knowledge of him.
36. You have said that you would, where the wool and tallow would amount to four shillings, give the party no compensation; now, I would ask, would that be judicious or wise—would the party be disposed to make the authorities acquainted with the fact that his sheep were diseased, if he were to get only the skins and tallow? On reconsideration of the matter, I think there should be some inducement held out to the owners to boil down and make the best of their stock.
37. Suppose two shillings a head were given for the sheep boiled down, beyond the price of the wool and tallow, would that be a good plan? I do not think the settlers should require more than a small inducement; I think one shilling should be sufficient.
38. Would you draw any line of distinction between sheep running on freehold land and those running on leased land? I would not; I would place all alike.
39. By Mr. Lee: You say it is not impossible to cure sheep? It is not.
40. Did you ever know sheep to be destroyed in any other part of the world besides New South Wales? No; my experience does not extend beyond New South Wales.
41. Have you ever heard of such a thing in any other part of the world? No, I have not.
42. By the Chairman: Sheep have been subject to many other diseases besides scab? Yes, to catarrh, and lately to the Cumberland disease.
43. Has not that been as destructive as scab? It is very destructive; much more than scab.
44. By Mr. Lee: Do you believe it is contagious? I imagine it to be both endemic and contagious.
45. By the Chairman: In that case it is as dangerous, or more so, than the scab? I should say not with regard to spreading; but I think it would be wise, in any laws which may be made

R. L. Jenkins,
Esq., J.P.

20 Nov., 1857.

R. L. Jenkins, Esq., J.P., made for consolidating the diseases of sheep, that provision should be made that any sheep affected by the Cumberland disease should not be allowed to travel off their station; as by travelling they might spread the disease through the country.

20 Nov., 1857.

46. You would not have them destroyed? No.

47. Has it not been found that the only cure for the Cumberland disease is removing them to a fresh station? It may be so. I think I have heard of persons travelling over to Port Philip; but I think there is danger of spreading the disease. It is at present extending northward, and a considerable destruction of sheep has taken place on Castlereagh River.

48. By Mr. Hargrave: You state that if sheep were boiled down, and the skins were sold, you would allow little or no compensation—do you not think the assessment was paid with the expectation of getting four shillings a sheep for any that might be destroyed, and do you not think it would be unjust to the parties to deprive them of it? I do not think the parties ought to get four shillings in addition to the wool and tallow.

49. By Mr. Robertson: Otherwise it would be a temptation to persons having fat sheep to get the full price for their wool and tallow, and the four shillings besides? Yes; fat sheep will get the scab as well as others.

WILLIAM HENRY SUTTON, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

William Bowman, Esq., M.P., called in and further examined:—

W. Bowman, Esq., M.P.

27 Nov., 1857.

1. By the Chairman: Do you put in copies of the depositions made before the Cassilis Bench of Magistrates in the case of your sheep destroyed by order of that Bench? I do.

2. By Mr. Cox: Was any notice sent to the neighbours, stating the day on which the sheep were to be killed, and the number of them—I do not see the notice appended to these depositions? A notice was sent.

3. Will you state the numbers of the flocks that were destroyed? Speaking from memory, just now, I think the wethers were 1,232; a mixed flock, under the Chinaman's charge, were 1,118; these two flocks were the first that were killed in July. Besides these, a flock of 734 ewes were killed in September, and with them were 125 rams.

4. What age were the lambs that were with the second flock? I have not claimed for them at all. They were just dropping their lambs—some were six weeks old and some only dropped that day. There were 503 lambs.

5. At what date were these sheep killed? Two flocks were killed at one date, and the remainder at another.

6. Did the notice you say was sent to the neighbours include both the flocks that were killed at the same time? Yes. Wood, my overseer, sent that notice; but, for the sheep that were afterwards killed, I wrote the notices myself, and a boy I had there copied them. Wood had then left me.

7. I notice that Stanway stated in his deposition that 224 of the sheep had been boiled down? That was not the truth; there were not 100 boiled down. We had been killing sheep for rations, and some of them had died, and all their skins were on the fence; these were the skins that Stanway saw.

8. You declare that none of the sheep for which you now claim compensation were included in the number boiled down? I do not think they were; the deduction was made.

9. Stanway states in his evidence that, believing the sheep had not been destroyed, he went to Merothra, after having obtained a warrant from the Bench to destroy them, and when he got there he found they had been destroyed, but he found a quantity of tallow lying there? I do not believe any tallow was taken out of the sheep I claim for. A few were boiled down before the scab had broken out; and what tallow there was came from them. They were not claimed for.

10. I see that, under the 5th clause of the Act, after sheep have been certified to be infected with scab, it is open to the owner to dispute that certificate within fourteen days—did you dispute the certificate of Stanway with regard to the last two flocks? I did.

11. Did you do so in writing to the Cassilis Bench? Yes; I sent a lawyer all the way up, and delivered the notice at the Magistrate's house. It cost me fifty guineas for the lawyer to do that.

12. What time did the Bench give you to examine witnesses, and to destroy the sheep that were then stated to be scabbed? They gave a certain time, which I availed myself of. I saved one flock, but the others were destroyed.

13. By Mr. Robertson: It appears to me that we should have some explanation as to the alleged boiling down of some of your sheep? I have explained that, not supposing the sheep to be scabby, I had ordered my overseer to pick out all that had commenced breaking wool, and to boil them down; and he did do so.

14. Were those sheep boiled down before you had reason to know from the inspector that they were scabby? They were.

15. After you had reason to know they were scabbed you ceased to boil them down? There was not one boiled afterwards.

16. And you commenced to destroy them immediately? Yes, immediately they were declared to be diseased.

17. It is in evidence in these depositions that you did not, after they were discovered to be scabbed, kill them as quickly as the Act required, by a few days; and it is also in evidence, on your behalf, that you killed them as quickly as you could, and that you hired what men you could get, and gave them every encouragement to kill them within the specified time? I have every reason to believe that they were all killed by ten o'clock on the 11th of July. They examined the sheep on the 27th June, and sent back the notice on the 28th; and we considered the time ran from that day.
18. Then in the whole matter you acted bonâ fide, from a desire to carry out the law, and if any error of judgment occurred it was on the part of your superintendent? Yes, if there was any error; but he worked day and night to get them destroyed within the time. When I went up, on the 14th or 15th of July, there was nothing remaining but the embers.
19. By Mr. Cox: In looking over these depositions, I see you state here that you received a letter from Mr. Dickenson stating that the sheep were scabby, and Wood also states that he had sent you word that the sheep were scabby? He did not state it positively; and I had seen them so recently, on the 28th and 29th May, that I thought it utterly impossible.
20. From what appears in these depositions, it would seem that after you knew the sheep were infected they were being boiled down, until the beginning of July? I did not believe it to be scab. I had written to Wood to pick out those of the sheep there were any appearances upon, and he wrote me that some twenty had broken wool on the rumps. There were no blue blotches. I know what scab is, and I do not believe it was scab.
21. By Mr. Robertson: But you state that after the sheep were pronounced to be scabbed, you lost no time in destroying them; that your overseer hired all the men he could get and tempted them by high wages and every inducement to kill the sheep as soon as possible? Yes; they were assisted by neighbours also. Greater exertion could not have been made. Wood was laid up afterwards, very ill, from the exertions he made.

APPENDIX A.

Police Office, Cassilis,
30 June, 1855.

Present:

ROWLAND J. TRAILL, ESQ., J.P.
WILLIAM BUSBY, ESQ., J.P.

Robert Wood, overseer to William Bowman, Esq., being summoned to appear here this day, for a breach of the Scab Act,—upon being called upon answers to his name.

William Stanway, overseer to Mr. Fitzgerald, being duly sworn, says:—The statement I have just heard read, being the information laid by me on the 27th of June, is correct, with the exception of the distance from the Upper Kemble Station sheep-yards to the road, being 350 yards instead of 250. I swear, positively, that the sheep in question have the disease called scab. I am thoroughly acquainted with the disease, having treated it formerly. The sheep, on the 11th of June, were in the yards at that station, ordered to be left there by Mr. Dickenson for my inspection. I saw them on the run yesterday. I saw them on the 26th of June on the same run, in the yards. I ascertained the distance of the sheep-yards from the main road by measurement. This main road has two tracks. One of these tracks passes within twenty yards of the hut. There is only one flock of sheep at this station, to the best of my knowledge. At another station of Mr. Bowman's, called Jones' Station, there is another flock of scabby sheep. This station is within 200 yards of the same main road to the Castlereagh River. There is considerable traffic on this road, both as regards stock and travellers. I have no further statement to make.

Cross-examined by Robert Wood:—They (the sheep) cannot, to my knowledge, water without crossing the road. To the best of my opinion they are the sheep that watered at the creek, there being no other sheep within three miles.

Robert Wood, in defence, says:—I am Overseer to Mr. Bowman, of Merothra. On or about the 6th of the present month I ascertained that the flock of wethers at Kemble Creek were infected with the scab, and on the 7th I addressed a letter to the Bench at Cassilis, stating that the scab had broken out, and to forward an inspector to inspect the sheep. I received a note, signed by Dr. Traill, answering my letter, stating it was not necessary to write to the Bench, but referring me to the Act. And as there was no inspector sent from Cassilis, and as Mr. Bowman had some difficulty in obtaining compensation from the Mudgee Bench, in consequence of killing his sheep without their having been seen by an Inspector, I thought it best to keep the sheep until Mr. Bowman arrived, which he did in a few days, viz., on the 22nd instant. When Mr. Bowman arrived he immediately took means to get proper assistance to destroy the sheep, and desired me to commence killing immediately, which I have done. I have no further defence.

R. V. WOOD.

Charge proved.

Sentence.—To pay a fine of £50, including costs, 4s. 6d. Twelve days to be given to pay the above fine, otherwise, in default of sufficient distress, to be imprisoned for three months, unless sooner paid.

Present:

ROWLAND J. TRAILL, ESQ., J.P.

Robert Wood, overseer to Mr. Bowman, appears on a summons to answer a charge of William Stanway for a breach of the 12th section, 18 Victoria, No. 26.

William Stanway, being duly sworn, says:—The information I have just heard read is correct.

Cross-examined by Robert Wood:—I saw one notice about scabby sheep about half a mile from Kemble Creek, in the heart of the scabby run. I saw another notice near Jones' Station, in the heart of the scabby run. The distance from Kemble Creek Station to where the second notice was posted is about four miles. To the best of my opinion, it is less than a mile from where this notice is posted to Jones' Station. I have seen scabby sheep beyond that notice, viz., at Merothera. When I saw the sheep at Merothera, you told me you were going to kill them. I saw no other notice than the two I have mentioned. The distance from Kemble Creek Station to where you said you posted a notice, is about one mile and a half.

By the Court:—I know the boundary well between Tongay and Mr. Bowman's run. I know the point where the main road to the Castlereagh River enters Mr. Bowman's run. The notice I did see was somewhere about half a mile from Upper Kemble Creek Station, where the diseased sheep are. I read that notice; it was to the effect that the scab was on the run; it had no signature. It was dated 8th June. The handwriting was nearly an inch, and a legible notice.

ROWLAND J. TRAILL, J.P.

William Bowman, Esq., of Merothera, presented an application for compensation for sheep destroyed under the provisions of the Act of Council 18 Victoria, No. 26.

William Bowman, being sworn, says:—The last time I saw the sheep alluded to was about the latter end of May, and I then believed them to be perfectly healthy. My overseer, Wood, had previously sent me word they were healthy. I was anxious about these sheep, as I had previously some diseased sheep in the Mudgee District. I received a letter from Mr. Dickenson, dated from Cassilis, I think, on the 8th of June, stating that some slight symptoms of scab had appeared in the wether flock. I also received a letter from my overseer, Wood, to the same effect. Mr. Dickenson was staying at Merothera, with a view to become manager of the property. I came up as quickly as possible; it was about the 20th June when I arrived at Merothera. I apprehended then that they had the scab, and ordered preparations to be made for their destruction. I now speak of the flock of 1,250 wethers. I did not believe the other flock was diseased, and ordered them to be removed to a fresh run. These flocks were subsequently condemned by the inspector. They did not commence to destroy the sheep until the 2nd July, to the best of my belief. They were all killed, according to the report of my overseer, Wood, upon the 9th July, and I myself saw the fires that were consuming them burning on the 14th. I used every exertion to get them destroyed in the period allowed by the Act. I believe my overseer exerted himself to the best of his ability, and encouraged the men in every way. My late overseer, Wood, has left my service; it is not possible he can be here to-day. My overseer told me, in a general way, that he had sent the notices required to the neighbouring runs. I sent for Wood on Friday last.

William Stanway being duly sworn, and examined by Mr. Bowman, says:—I examined the sheep, by request of Mr. Dickenson, on or about the 11th June, and on the 26th of the same month under a warrant from the Bench. I saw them again about the 4th or 5th July; they were were then being boiled down; it was a portion of the wether flock. Constable Knight, who accompanied me, reported there were the skins of 224 sheep boiled down. These skins were on the fence of Merothera, to which place they had been removed from the place they were boiled at. I saw them again on the 12th or 13th; they were then killed, and the remainder of them were on the fires burning. I went on the 11th June, at the request of Mr. Dickenson, to examine the sheep. I examined them on the following morning. There were about 50 or 60 in the flock that you could tell were diseased without getting off your horse to examine them. I handled and examined several of these sheep. On the sheep I examined the matter had formed, and the fleece had fallen off. I am familiar with the disease called scab. I consider the disease was in the sheep for some time previous to its breaking out in the stage in which I found it. I received a warrant from the Bench on the 13th July to destroy the sheep. When I went to execute the warrant, I found the sheep destroyed, and a quantity of tallow and remnants of sheep lying about. The warrant to examine was on the 27th June. I saw them boiling down a portion of these sheep about the 4th or 5th July, and when I went there on the 13th or 14th, I saw some sheep on the fires unconsumed, but the fires were burning. I received a notice, in writing, from Wood, that they were going to destroy the sheep in a few days. I do not know the date of his notice. It was from the 7th to the 9th July, I think. I saw three fires.

James Devoy, being sworn, says:—I am a neighbour of Mr. Bowman's. Mr. Bowman's overseer asked me if I would assist him to destroy the sheep, as he only had a certain time to do it in; I did so. I do not recollect the day of the month on which the killing of the sheep was finished. It was on a Wednesday or Thursday, about 10 or 11 o'clock. I was there three or four days. I do not recollect how many days I was there. The fires were placed in such a way as would cause the speedy destruction of the sheep. There was as much wood as was necessary. The men were exerting themselves properly. There were three fires.

Present:

WILLIAM BUSBY, J. P.

ROWLAND J. TRAILL, J. P.

William Bowman, Esq., appeared this day to appeal against the information of his sheep being diseased.

William Stanway, being duly sworn, says:—The certificate I have just heard read is correct with the number of sheep said to be diseased, viz., one hundred and twenty rams near Merothera; seven hundred and thirty-two mixed sheep, Bald Hill Station; and nine hundred mixed sheep, Moreton Bay Station.

Mr. Bowman here withdrew his appeal against the above-mentioned sheep being diseased, except those nine hundred, or thereabouts, depastured at Moreton Bay Station.

William Stanway, on oath, says:—I found symptoms of disease on two sheep in the Moreton Bay flock; there was a kind of blue spot, callous; there was a scab on the shoulder of one as big as a half-crown; and upon the other several blue spots on the point of the shoulder and spine of the back. I have had twenty years experience of scab. I caught other sheep, three or four; they showed every indication of being unhealthy, but not sufficiently diseased to enable me to say they had the scab. I examined them on the 15th July, about three miles east of Merothera. I thought then they were seasoning. From my knowledge of scab, if sheep are seasoning on the 15th July, they might not have broken out more than these did on the 8th September. I consider that if there had been wet weather the disease would have been more visible sooner. The shoulder of the sheep that showed the spot about the size of a half-crown was bare. I have no doubt, and positively swear, it was the scab; I have cured scab in all its stages. I do not consider there is any other disease with which these symptoms can be confounded; it is not the effect of grass seed. If they had

W. Bowman, Esq., M.P. had not been spotted, or the infected sheep taken out, it is likely they would have shown symptoms of the disease by the 8th October; I mean the two infected sheep particularly; the whole flock might or might not have shown the disease. The symptoms from grass seed are generally loss of wool under the belly; there would have been a growth of wool underneath and the skin would have been red and healthy. The appearance of the skin in sheep that have lost their wool from scab is thick and callous, white and scaly, and you can cut a good depth before you can obtain blood, and the wool is not reproduced. The scar from the bite of a dog would not produce the same appearance—the same appearance is not produced by tick. I have seen sheep low in condition, and the appearances described are not the same as in these sheep infected with scab.

Richard Harris, being duly sworn, says:—I am a Surgeon, and a Magistrate of the Territory. I have been a sheep owner fifteen years. During my residence at O'Connell Plains I had scabby sheep for the period of five years—from three to six thousand at one time. I know a flock of sheep of Mr. Bowman's, running at Moreton Bay Station, Merothera; I saw them on Wednesday, 26th September, and on Monday, October 8th; I then examined them carefully, and found them clean; I could not detect the slightest indication of scab in any one sheep. If two sheep on the 8th September could be pronounced scabby, any person acquainted with scab could detect scab in the flock on the 8th October. The scab first appears in a pale violet-colored pimple; a watery liquid exudes from it, and scab then forms, which spreads; and while the larger scab continues increasing, you can generally perceive the smaller spots coming out in the sheep at the same time; the scab forms an incrustation of a yellow brown color; the skin becomes thickened and hardened; a scratch will make it bleed; a cut an eighth of an inch deep will make it bleed; I have seen my own sheep bleed profusely, from being rubbed down with a curry comb. Two or three sheep with such symptoms as I heard described could not have been missed by me, on my examination on the 26th September, and I think not on the 8th October. I did not examine them then so carefully, not thinking it necessary. The thickening and hardening of the skin does not appear before the violet-colored pimple; it is a secondary consequence, the result of the first. The incrustation takes place before the hardening of the skin.

Cross-examined by Mr. Stanway:—I will swear that if there had been scabby sheep in a flock on the 8th September, and if the scabby sheep had been picked out, the rest of the flock, or a portion of them, would show the scab by the 8th October. I never did use a knife upon the scab; I have seen blood produced by one rubbing of the curry comb on the scab. I have known individual sheep to be in a flock for twelve months. If there is no appearance of scab in an infected flock, if rain comes on it can be easily discovered in one week. When I first examined them, on the 20th of September, I then examined them very carefully, and my examination on the 8th October was quite sufficient to enable me to declare they had not the scab.

Andrew Brown, of Bowenfels, being sworn, says:—I am a large sheep-owner, and a Magistrate of the Territory. I have had a great deal of experience in the scab. I have suffered myself from it. I have had it for years, at different periods. On the 25th September I examined a flock of sheep at Mr. Bowman's station called Moreton Bay Merothera—a breeding flock; they were then perfectly clean. I spent two hours and upwards in examining these sheep. I examined them quite sufficiently, to satisfy myself there was no disease in the flock. If there had been two or three diseased sheep on the 7th September in this flock, more or less of the whole flock would have shown the disease on the 25th. The first sign of scab is small pimples on the skin, which spread. I saw a sheep in this flock that had been bitten by a native dog. A person who knows the scab cannot be mistaken.

Samuel Ayres, being duly sworn, says:—I am Inspector of Scab for the District of Mudgee. I have had charge of sheep for the period of fourteen years; during that time I had eight thousand scabby sheep and the superintendence of curing them. I examined a flock of sheep belonging to Mr. Bowman, Moreton Bay Station, Merothera, on Sunday, October 7th, and on Monday, the 8th; I found them perfectly clean and no symptoms of scab whatever upon them. If two sheep belonging to a flock are diseased and then removed, I am positive that a portion of the flock would show symptoms of the scab within a month. Moreton Bay is five miles distant from Merothera.

Cross-

Cross-examined by Mr. Stanway:—If two diseased sheep, not belonging to this flock, were picked up by chance, and removed in two or three days, I will not swear the disease would show itself in the flock in the course of a month, though the probability is that it would. I have seen scab show itself in the skin being very hard. I might obtain blood if I cut this skin at about the depth of the eighth of an inch. W. Bowman,
Esq., M.P.
27 Nov., 1857.

By the Bench:—A hard substance would have to be cut through before the blood would come. The sheep must be infected three or four months before this hard callous substance is produced.

Michael Rushby, being duly sworn, says:—I am a settler residing at Cloudy Bay, Mudgee District. I have had colonial experience with sheep, and am acquainted with scab. I knew the disease at home. I examined, on the 8th October, a flock of sheep belonging to Mr. Bowman, at Moreton Bay Station, Merothera. I examined them very closely, and found them perfectly clean, and no indication of scab among them. Their skins were quite sound, with the exception of two or three that were bitten by native dogs. Had there been scabby sheep on the 8th of September, a portion of the flock must have been diseased on 8th October had those sheep remained in for that length of time.

Cross-examined by Mr. Stanway:—I am not certain that Mr. Bowman had any scabby sheep when I went to him. I have not had charge of scabby sheep, but have seen plenty in all the stages of scab.

By Mr. Bowman:—I have left Mr. Bowman's service since 1845.

William Bowman, on oath, says:—I have not since I received the notice caused any sheep to be removed from the flock, or previously to receiving the notice. I only caused one sheep to be killed for rations, which was on the 28th September, and I am sure that no sheep have been removed. The rams were taken out of the flock in April last. I do not believe any other sheep have been mixed with this flock. On the 6th of September Mr. Stanway told me the sheep at Moreton Bay were perfectly clean, upon my asking him. I went immediately and made a careful examination, and I have seen the sheep at least once a-week since, and have found them clean.

By Mr. Stanway:—The sheep have not been within a mile of Merothera, to my knowledge. The rams were alive on the 2nd of September. They were not folded or feeding on the same run where scabby sheep had been killed. I am not quite sure. I was at Merothera on the 2nd of September. They had been about a week at the Bungebbar station in the month of May. I do not know whether there was a flock of sheep running there at that time. I never intended two flocks to be kept there. No sheep have been added to the flock since they were at Bungebbar, in the month of May, to my knowledge.

Thomas Bottrell, being duly sworn, says:—I was at Merothera on the Sunday previous to my seeing Mr. Stanway. It was on the 2nd of September. I saw sheep when I was returning from Merothera. The sheep were going to Merothera on the road. The Chinaman told me they came from Moreton Bay. They consisted, I think, of ewes and some lambs, mixed. A flock of sheep had been burnt down about half a mile from where I saw these sheep. The rams were living when I saw this flock. I do not know where the rams were. I saw the rams about a week previous, at the spot where the sheep were burnt down. I did not assist to make a yard.

By Mr. Bowman:—The wethers were burnt in the latter part of June, or beginning of July. When I saw the flock of rams I did not see any wethers among them, but there might have been wethers without my knowledge.

I saw two flocks of mixed sheep at Bungebbar about the 6th or 7th of June last. I went to the station because I heard there were scabby sheep there. One flock, at this time, had broken out with scab; the other flock had not visibly broken out, but they were at the same station, a few boughs dividing them from the diseased flock. To the best of my opinion, they are the same flock I saw yesterday at Moreton Bay, but I cannot positively swear to it. Mr. ROBERTSON.

GEORGE MACLEAY, ESQUIRE, IN THE CHAIR.

James Butchart, Esq., called in and examined:—

J. Butchart,
Esq.

10 Dec., 1857.

1. By the Chairman: You are a Commission Agent on a very large scale in Melbourne? Yes.
2. You sell very large quantities of sheep annually? Yes, I have, large quantities for the last four years and a-half.
3. Do large quantities of sheep from New South Wales come into your hands for sale? Yes.
4. These sheep are invariably free from the disease called scab, I believe? Always when they leave New South Wales, but they sometimes catch it coming over the plains within the Colony of Victoria; when they reach us they have always to be dipped.
5. It is apparent, I suppose, that it is not caught in New South Wales, from the recent symptoms of the disease? Yes; there are no scabby sheep from New South Wales.
6. Do you believe that the knowledge of that fact on the part of the purchaser enhances the value of sheep considerably? Yes.
7. And in the aggregate must make a very great difference in the receipts of sheep farmers in the course of years? In the course of years no doubt it amounts to a very large sum. In fact we would not purchase sheep at all if they were not clean, because they could not be driven.
8. It is not in your power, I suppose, to form any idea of the amount received by New South Wales for sheep sold at Melbourne? Three-fourths of the sheep sold at Melbourne are either those which fatten on the banks of the Murrumbidgee and other parts of New South Wales, and are brought direct from thence, or those which come indirectly and fatten on the plains of Victoria.
9. The sheep in the Colony of Victoria—those I mean that are bred and exclusively belong to the Colony of Victoria—are unfortunately for the most part diseased? Yes, a great portion of them are diseased; but we are cleaning them very fast now.
10. That fact has tended to diminish the profits of sheep farmers? Immensely; the Colony has this year lost immensely by it.

11. Have you ever heard any opinion expressed among the sheep farmers of Victoria upon the policy of our Act? No, not particularly upon your Act; we have an Act of our own; but it is quite inoperative, seeing that the whole Colony has the scab. J. Butchart,
Esq.
12. It does not contain clauses so stringent as ours? The clauses were very stringent, but they could not be carried out—if they had been they would have ruined a great proportion of the farmers of the Colony, from the disease having spread so extensively. I was in the Colony when the disease broke out in a large district of Victoria, and it spread with the rapidity of wild-fire. The destruction of one single flock at that time would have saved £100,000 to the Colony in wool alone this year. 10 Dec., 1857.
13. You are acquainted with the general provisions of the Act in force in New South Wales? Yes.
14. Had such an Act been in existence in Victoria the disease might have been nipped in the bud, and that enormous loss have been avoided? Yes; if one single flock had then been destroyed it would have been avoided.
15. Where did that disease come from? It came from Van Diemen's Land; a few imported rams brought it up to Gibson's station, and from that it spread like wild-fire.
16. You never heard of scab breaking out in isolated places? No, never.
17. You have been a sheep farmer, I believe? Yes; I have been sixteen years among sheep, and I am now a sheep farmer in New South Wales.
18. You do not believe, from your knowledge of sheep farming, that that disease would arise spontaneously? I have never seen an instance. I have seen sheep very badly treated, but I never saw scab break out without actual contact, or crossing a scabby run.
19. If disease existed in the Colony of New South Wales to any extent, the market of Victoria would be closed? It would be closed completely.
20. Can you form any idea of the amount derived by this Colony from the sale of sheep alone—in round numbers? I myself sell 200,000 from New South Wales in the year, at prices varying from 12s. to 24s., or, to take a low average, say at 15s. each; and I think the other agents altogether not less than 400,000—that is during the last two years.
21. By Mr. Suttor: That is in Melbourne? And in the country around; they do not sell them alone in Melbourne, but at the different stations.
22. That market would be entirely closed if the sheep were diseased? If they were diseased we could not sell one in Victoria.
23. By the Chairman: What has been the decrease of sheep in Victoria in the last three years? That I could not say; but the returns appear, to all of us who are acquainted with the subject practically, to be quite erroneous; they make the decrease something like a million, but we consider it to be two millions.
24. Is that decrease attributable to this disease? Almost entirely; in fact a great many settlers had to get rid of their sheep and to put cattle on the runs.
25. You say that the owners of scabby sheep are rapidly getting rid of the disease? Yes.
26. By what process? Dipping them in tobacco water and sulphur; but we do not consider the disease eradicated; they could not travel from the Murrumbidgee, but they can go the short distance they have to travel with us, without shewing the disease.
27. Then this system of dipping merely keeps the disease in abeyance? It would cure the disease altogether, but the sheep that have been dipped come in contact with others that are still diseased, and that brings it out again.
28. It is practically inoperative, in consequence of their coming in contact with sheep that have not been treated in the same way? It would be inoperative if they had to travel a long distance, but it is practically effectual with us.
29. Do you believe that these sheep, if they were left for twelve months without further dressing, would be cured? Yes, if they were properly done. I have seen instances.
30. How was it that sheep owners had not recourse to the same practice when the disease was spreading so rapidly? Labor was scarce at the time, and the dipping system was not so well understood.
31. Sheep were not so abundant at that time, and could have been removed, I presume? No, they could not have been removed.
32. What is the expense of this treatment? Two-pence a sheep every time; one dipping is not often effectual.
33. What is the cost of effecting a cure? About sixpence a sheep; but there is great risk; some are clean at once, and some are not clean for years and years.
34. Would you think it wiser in us, if the disease were to break out here again, to have recourse to that system, or to follow out the provisions of our Act? I should say most decidedly destroy them; if you once get the disease here you will never eradicate it.
35. Do you, from your sixteen years experience as a sheep farmer, think it wiser to have recourse to such an Act as that at present in existence than to attempt to cure diseased sheep? Decidedly, to check the disease in the bud.
36. By Mr. Robertson: Are you of opinion that if we were to make our Scab Act less stringent, by repealing the clauses empowering the destruction of sheep, that would injure the market value of our sheep in Victoria? Not if the sheep did not catch the disease.
37. You do not think the mere fact of our having this stringent Act gives our sheep a better character in Victoria? It does near us; for, from the distance sheep would have to travel from Liverpool Plains or New England to us, it would be impossible for them to come such a distance if they were diseased without its being noticed, and they cannot travel in Victoria. The Act is more stringent there than here, for if they are found to be diseased a Magistrate gives an order and they are at once destroyed. It is a cruel Act, for at one time many were burned alive.
38. Then you are of opinion that the mere fact of the existence of an Act of this kind gives people confidence in the purchase of our sheep, and thence increases their value? Yes; if asked whether the sheep are scabby the answer is that no scabby sheep are allowed to live in New South Wales.
- 39.

- J. Butchart, Esq. 39. You have spoken of the disease spreading like wildfire in Victoria—is it not the fact that the runs are more thickly stocked there than here? Yes; one acre there is equal to three or four in New South Wales
- 10 Dec., 1857. 40. The runs are closer together on that account? Yes. On the other hand, as far as the Victoria market is concerned, there is one important thing to be kept in sight,—all the sheep have to follow the same route along the banks of the Murrumbidgee, the Edward, and the Lachlan, where sheep are feeding.
41. By Mr. Lee: You do believe that scabby sheep can be cured? Yes.
42. Did you ever know or hear of an Act similar to this in any other part of the world? We have one very much like it in Victoria; we destroy the sheep, but the proprietors do not get anything for them.
43. That is to say, you make the owner destroy his sheep, and give him nothing for them if he do not cure them? They are not destroyed when they are on the owner's run; but if they are found travelling they can be seized, and, upon an order of a Magistrate, can be burned there and then. On his own run he is at liberty to cure them. It was talked of that the owner should be compelled to cure them within a certain time, but the sheep were generally in such a state of disease that it was found to be impracticable.
44. By Mr. Robertson: Is the disease you have in Victoria precisely the same as the scab we have here? The very same.

STATEMENT made by Edward Cox, Esq., J.P., in answer to a communication addressed to him by the Committee, requesting him to furnish them with any information in his power with reference to the Petition of John Giblett.

Penrith, 16 November, 1857.

Sir,

I have the honor, as requested, to enclose memo. that would be the substance of my evidence before the Committee in case of John Giblett's Petition.

I am,

Your obedient Servant,

The Clerk of the Legislative Assembly.

The evidence of Messrs. George Cox and Edward Cox was taken on 30 July; case remanded; on 6 August Mr. Giblett's statement is made; no other witnesses called, and the decision as under:—

"We decide that the notices produced by Mr. Giblett as served upon Mr. Edward Cox and Mr. Hibberson are not as required by the Act, as they do not state the hour the sheep are to be destroyed. The application is therefore dismissed.

"I, Timothy Gearn, on 22 May, 1855, went by order of a Magistrate to count the sheep—Mr. John Giblett had given notice that he was about to destroy, according to Act 18 Vic., 26; and I then saw some of the sheep alive and very scabby, and at the time a man was slaughtering, skinning, and saving the fat of part of the same flock, and from a dozen to twenty skins hanging on the fence; this was in the presence of Mr. Giblett. On the week following I went, by order of the Bench, and saw where a great many sheep had been burned. Committed to writing this 16th November, 1857.

B.

The Honorable Chairman of Committee on the Scab and Catarrh.

20 November, 1857.

Sir,

Referring to my Petition, now before you, I would respectfully call attention to the fact, that William Stanaway, in his evidence against Wood, at Cassilis, on the 29th June, swore that he examined my sheep on the 11th June. Wood was fined £50, and Stanaway received one-half (£25), and was afterwards appointed Inspector.

He, Stanaway, visited Merothery on the 11th June with Mr. Dickinson, and brought a quantity of spirits; became drunk and riotous, and was ordered off by Wood. They quarrelled, and he afterwards obtained a warrant to examine my sheep, which he did on the 27th, and they were all destroyed by the 11th July. I have no hesitation in stating that Stanaway did not swear the truth.

He afterwards condemned a flock of about nine hundred, which he swore he had carefully examined several times. I proved, by the evidence of three Magistrates and two other parties, that those sheep were perfectly clean. The Bench granted a certificate; and I have them still on the same run.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,
GEO. BOWMAN.

C.

Mr. Meston's Statement on New Scab and Catarrh Act.

Repeal all the three Acts, each of which is now partially in force, and sadly perplexing to Country Benches to find what is law and what not law, by their complexity.

Embody the last Scab Act in a new form, but include Catarrh, the worst disease of the two, under the same category, with the following emendations, viz:—

Define the malady of Scab, and the disease known by the name of Catarrh, whether in its mild or malignant types, for the correct guidance of Magistrates and the community generally, as not one in a hundred, certainly, are capable of discriminating Scab from other cutaneous eruptions, and far fewer are competent to positively detect Catarrh.

Exclude the word influenza, as common colds are neither contagious nor infectious, serving only to perplex and confound by insertion.

The indiscriminate system of destruction may admit of modification. In all cases the skins may with safety be saved, except, perhaps, in the Catarrh.

It is well ascertained that the itch mite will not survive more than 36 hours on a dried skin, and by packing in canvas bags, all possibility of dropping ova will be effectually prevented.

But in the malignant Catarrh every method of quick despatch is imperative. In the milder type, time may be safely allowed to take the skins, and to convert the carcases into tallow. The important question arises, whether it will be considered compatible with public safety thus to give discretionary power to District Inspectors.

No Inspector to be appointed who cannot pass examination, and prove his competency for the very responsible duties he may be called on to perform.

I rather fear that the usual way of nominating Inspectors smacks too much of farce, considering that on the decisions of these men may depend the welfare or ruin not only of one flock-owner, but involving the bane or prosperity of a whole district, to no small extent at any rate.

To avoid unnecessary waste, it is proposed to put a nest of malleable iron pots under the charge of every Inspector, who shall reside as centrally as possible in his own district, which pots can be conveyed at short notice to the places where diseased flocks are folded, and as near as possible to that fold the sheep are to be melted into tallow; the proceeds, after deducting necessary expenses, belonging, of course, to the owner or owners of said flock or flocks.

As the theory of Scab and premonitory symptoms of Catarrh are very ill understood, a plain but well written paper on those subjects, under the approval of the Committee, would prove of great value to flock-owners and their servants, by elucidating and simplifying the whole; for all kinds of vague and undefinable ideas are entertained regarding their causes, treatment, and operation.

I cannot comprehend from what conclusions the space of six months vacancy to any infected run has been adopted as a period of purgation; under certain ascertained atmospheric conditions, a run may be clean in six weeks, and inversely, not safe in twelve months.

I regret that notes of some importance on these subjects are far distant at my own home. I had submitted a draft of a new Bill to some of the most practical flock-owners of the north, who, with one modification, fully approved of every clause. Should this or any other required information be deemed of any service to the Committee, I will be most willing to forward replies or communications as early as possible through the Tenterfield post office.

Thus far it is my duty to state, that three-fourths of the northern flock-owners are in favor of continuing the latest Act, with the specific condition that Catarrh is included in as full an extent as the Scab itself.

JOHN GIBLETT.(PETITION RELATIVE TO DESTRUCTION OF DISEASED SHEEP.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 23 July, 1858.

To the Honorable the House of Parliament, assembled.

The Humble Petition of John Giblett,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner was possessed of 1,242 sheep, which he depastured on his farm at the South Creek, in the Penrith District.

That in May 1855, the said sheep became infected with Scab,—that your Petitioner complied with the form of the Scab Act in all particulars, with the exception that in his notices to the neighbours he omitted to state the precise hour of the day at which he intended to commence the destruction of such sheep,—that in consequence of such omission the Penrith Magistrates refused to give the usual certificate.

Your Petitioner therefore prays your Honorable House will afford him such relief as it may see fit.

Your Petitioner would have attended former meetings of Committees, but that all letters or notices have arrived too late to meet those Committees.

Your Petitioner therefore prays that he may be allowed to be heard at such meetings as your Honorable House may appoint.

SCAB IN SHEEP PREVENTION ACT.

(PETITION FROM CERTAIN COLONISTS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 17 August, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Colonists, interested in Pastoral pursuits,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners have viewed with great satisfaction the good effect of the “Scab Act” (passed by the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales) for the prevention of Scab and Catarrh, and which Act has recently expired.

That your Memorialists feel convinced that the re-enactment of the said Act is indispensable, not only to prevent the passage of sheep infected with Scab and Catarrh from one portion of the Colony to the other, but also from Victoria into New South Wales.

Your Memorialists therefore pray that the said Act may be re-enacted without delay, or that your Honorable House will pass a new measure for preventing the spreading of Scab and Catarrh.

And your Memorialists will ever pray, &c.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

DRIVING CATTLE THROUGH MAITLAND.

(PETITION RELATIVE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 1 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Inhabitants of East and West Maitland,—

SHEWETH :—

That by an Act made and passed by the Governor and Legislative Council of New South Wales, 15th Victoria, No. 9, intituled, "An Act to prevent Cattle being driven through the Towns of East and West Maitland, except at certain hours"—it was thereby enacted, inter alia, "That no cattle shall be driven into or through any part of the Towns of East or West Maitland, except between the hours of six of the clock in the afternoon and eight of the clock in the morning."

Your Petitioners beg leave respectfully to bring under the notice of this Honorable Assembly, that the hours mentioned in the said Act have been found too limited for the driving of cattle intended for sale or shipment through the said Towns of East and West Maitland, without first entailing considerable additional expense, both on the vendors and purchasers of such cattle, and secondly danger to the public in general.

Your Petitioners respectfully beg leave further to observe, that as regards the public, persons will be exposed to less dangers which may be likely to occur by the driving of cattle through the aforesaid towns if the hours now limited for such driving were altered from the hours of six of the clock in the afternoon and eight of the clock in the morning, to the hours of four of the clock in the afternoon to the hour of eight of the clock in the morning.

Your Petitioners also beg leave to represent that the cattle for sale or exportation as aforesaid have, especially at this season of the year, to be driven through the said towns after dark in the evening, thereby much increasing the chances of any casualty occurring to the inhabitants and others of the Townships of East Maitland and West Maitland.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Honorable Assembly will be pleased to take their Petition into your favorable consideration, and to grant your Petitioners such relief in the premises as your Honorable Assembly may deem meet.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

IMPOUNDING BILL.

(PETITION FROM ISAAC SHEPHERD.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 July, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly.

The respectful Petition of Isaac Shepherd,—

SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioner is a freeholder of lands, and also a licensed occupier of Crown Lands in the Pastoral District of the Lower Darling.

That your Petitioner having observed the 34th clause in the Impounding Bill now under discussion in your Honorable House, respectfully begs leave to state,—

That your Petitioner's licensed runs are bounded on the Lachlan River, and extending from that river back, and that, generally, your Petitioner's cattle on those runs are compelled to come to that river for water.

That, from your Petitioner's personal knowledge, the line of road generally travelled over by persons travelling with stock, runs nearly parallel with the rivers, and that they frequently allow their stock to trace the river round, to the great detriment and injury of your Petitioner, and many others.

That your Petitioner fears that unless a stringent clause be inserted as a substitute for clause No. 34, in the Impounding Bill, limiting drovers travelling with stock to a reasonable distance,—not more than one-eighth of a mile on each side of the road,—Petitioner's runs, with many others, will be considerably deteriorated in value, and that your Petitioner will sustain great loss and damage.

And your Petitioner further begs leave to express, that he considers it would be an act of injustice towards the owners or occupiers of land, to sanction the appropriation of lands to the use of others that they are paying for, without first affording compensation for any loss that may be sustained.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays, that your Honorable House will not pass the Impounding Bill, especially clause 34, as proposed, nor sanction any clause in violation of private rights, unless first fully affording compensation for such violation.

And your Petitioner will ever pray, &c.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

IMPOUNDING BILL.

(PETITION FROM IPSWICH AND ITS VICINITY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 25 August, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of your Petitioners, residents of Ipswich and its vicinity,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That by the last Census the Police District of Ipswich contained 4,558 inhabitants, residing chiefly in the Town of Ipswich and its immediate vicinity, since which period it has been steadily and rapidly increasing.

That in these districts, to supply this growing population with dairy produce, a large number of cattle are necessarily required.

That a large extent of the surrounding suburban and country lands have been alienated from the Crown, and much of it at rates exceedingly in advance of the upset price.

That the freeholders and occupiers of these farms belong chiefly to the laboring classes.

That, owing to their limited capital, they can only very partially cultivate the lands they hold or rent; and, consequently, that to obtain a livelihood they have to employ their teams as carriers, a part of the year, or, in other cases, conjointly with agriculture, to turn their attention to dairy pursuits.

That there are in this neighbourhood three boiling or steaming establishments, at which large quantities of stock from the interior are boiled down.

That for the carriage of goods to and from the interior a very great number of working bullocks are required.

That from these causes, as well as from the grazing of the milking herds, the pasturage in the neighbourhood of Ipswich is greatly fed down; that, owing to this scarcity of feed, the young stock and dry cattle necessarily stray on to the adjacent runs in search of more abundant food.

That, with a trifling exception, no dairy produce is brought to market from any of these adjacent runs, which are simply occupied as breeding and fattening stations.

That on some of these runs sites of towns have not only been fixed upon, but the plan of them actually laid down, and published.

That from several of these runs stock are being continually impounded, and in one or more instances from portions of them surveyed for sale.

That great injury is hereby done to the stock, in consequence of the overdriving, crowding in stock yards, and the insufficiency of food or water they are subjected to before leaving the stations whence they are impounded.

That, recently, eight head of horses out of a lot of less than forty died from these causes. That the Police Magistrate refused, not only to interfere in this case himself, but also to let the Chief Constable do so; and that afterwards, when a verdict was obtained under the Prevention of Cruelty Act, in each of the three informations filed by a private individual against the defendant in the above case, the Bench refused to grant professional costs, thereby plainly shewing their determination to discountenance as much as possible all similar prosecutions for the future.

That it will be for the social advantage and commercial benefit of the population generally of all the country towns in these districts and their suburbs to abolish the present system of impounding, for its continuance will shortly deprive them of milk and butter, by compelling the small owners of stock to get rid of their cattle, as they will be unable much longer to sustain the heavy pressure which is now brought to bear upon them by the large squatters.

That the small stockholders would gladly pay to Government a capitation tax for the right to graze their stock on Crown Lands, or purchase at Government sales leases of sections, but that under the existing land regulations no provision is made for the former, and that the latter are at present unattainable, from their being so rarely offered for sale, and in such limited quantities.

That a memorial, very numerously signed by the inhabitants of Ipswich and the neighbourhood, chiefly freeholders, in which the evils resulting from the present regulations relating to the leasing of Crown Lands in the Settled Districts were shewn, and praying for a revision of them, was presented to the Governor in Council, in November, 1856, and that an Address was subsequently carried, praying His Excellency to lay a copy of the said memorial on the Table of your Honorable House, and that no relief in reference to those regulations has yet been granted.

Having heard that an Impounding Bill is at present before Parliament, your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that until the Land Regulations have been revised, your Honorable House will be pleased to insert a clause to abolish the right to impound from Crown Lands in the Settled Districts, or at any rate so to modify it that its present unlimited exercise, and the excessive expenses for driving and trespass shall be greatly curtailed, and that the lessees of Crown Lands shall be altogether prohibited from confining in their yards, without the consent of the owners, any description of stock before they are impounded.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

(STOCK SOLD OUT OF SINCE 1852.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 20 April, 1858.

RETURN to an Order made by the Honorable the Legislative Assembly, dated 3 December, 1857, that there be laid upon the Table of this House,—

“ A Return of all Horses and other Stock sold out of the “ Sofala Pound since the year 1852, with a Statement of “ amounts realized in each case, and how appropriated.”

MEMO :—Application for this Return was made to the Bench of Magistrates at Sofala, who report, that “ the Clerk of Petty Sessions is unable to furnish the required information, “ prior to the period of his assuming his present duties, in the month of July, 1856, as “ he cannot trace any records connected with the Pound, left by his predecessor; and “ that it is found, upon inquiry, that the Books of the former Poundkeeper, Joseph “ Shaw, who held the office during the greater part of the period mentioned, and who “ has since left the District, are not forthcoming, and are stated to have been accidentally “ burnt.”

The Return was therefore prepared in the Treasury, but may probably not contain all the Stock sold out of the Sofala Pound since the year 1852.

EXTRACTS FROM THE VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

VOTES, No. 44. TUESDAY, 15 JUNE, 1858.

7. Murders by the Aborigines on the Dawson River:—Mr. Hodgson moved, pursuant to amended notice,—

(1.) That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the murders which have recently taken place on the "Dawson River," with a view to render the working of the Native Police Force more efficient, and with power to send for persons and papers.

(2.) That such Committee consist of Mr. Buckley, Mr. Cribb, Mr. Donaldson, Mr. Forster, Mr. Jones, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Smith, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Robertson, and the Mover.

Debate ensued.

Mr. Parkes moved, That the Question be amended, by the omission of all the words thereof following the words "Dawson River," in section (1), with a view to the insertion in their place of the words "and generally on the state of outrage between the white population and the Aborigines in the Northern Districts."

"(2) That such Committee consist of Mr. Cribb, Mr. Dalley, Mr. Dickson, Mr. Donaldson, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Jones, Mr. Murray, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Hodgson."

Debate continued,—

And the proposed Amendment being, by consent, amended, by adding at the end of the words proposed to be inserted in lieu of the words proposed to be omitted from section (1) the words "with a view to providing for the better protection of life and property."

Debate continued,—

And Mr. Hodgson having required, in event of the Amendment being carried, that the Committee be appointed by ballot,—

Question,—That the words proposed to be omitted stand part of the Question,—put and negatived.

Question,—That in place of the words omitted there be inserted the words "and generally on the state of outrage between the white population and the Aborigines in the Northern Districts, with a view to providing for the better protection of life and property,"—put and passed.

Question,—That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the murders which have recently taken place on the Dawson River, and generally on the state of outrage between the white population and the Aborigines in the Northern Districts, with a view to providing for the better protection of life and property,—put and passed;—

Whereupon the House proceeded to the Ballot, and the Speaker declared the following Members to be, with the Mover, the Committee duly appointed, viz.:—Mr. Cribb, Mr. Donaldson, Mr. Jones, Mr. Cowper, Mr. Buckley, Mr. Forster, Mr. Richardson, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Taylor.

MURDERS BY THE ABORIGINES ON THE DAWSON RIVER.

REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on the 15th June last "to inquire into and report upon the Murders which have recently taken place on the Dawson River, and generally on the state of outrage between the white population and the aborigines in the Northern Districts, with a view to providing for the better protection of life and property"; and to whom were referred, on the 13th ultimo, a "Letter from the Government Resident at Brisbane, Moreton Bay, dated 8th July, 1858, enclosing Returns of the expense, strength, and distribution of the Native Police"; on the 15th ultimo, a "Return to Order in reference to the dismissal of Mr. Ross, Second Lieutenant of Native Police"; and, on the 27th ultimo, a further "communication from Captain Wickham, Government Resident at Moreton Bay, dated 21st July, 1858, in reference to the Native Police";—have agreed to the following Report:—

Your Committee are convinced, by the evidence of the various witnesses examined, that the murders which have been committed on the Northern Frontier of this Colony may be attributed to those inevitable collisions which take place more or less between the blacks and whites in opening out a new tract of country, aggravated in a great measure by the inefficiency of the Native Police Force, and the mountainous and scrubby nature of the district.

It will further appear that the sudden disbandment of a large portion of the Native Police was a most untoward event, as there is too much reason to believe that the disbanded troopers have been leaders in most of the murderous attacks upon the whites, and to this cause the inefficiency of the Native Police Force, as at present constituted, may be undoubtedly traced. It appears also that the troopers who did such good service from 1848 to 1852, under their late Commandant, Mr. Walker, on the M'Intyre, and other places, were brought from the Murrumbidgee, Murray, and Edward Rivers; and it is conclusive that the conduct of these men was the cause of the force enjoying that high character which it is deeply to be regretted it no longer possesses.

After a careful consideration of the evidence taken, your Committee would submit the following recommendations for the favorable consideration of your Honorable House:—

- (1.) That the Native Police Force, properly organized and well officered, is the force best capable of protecting life and property in the outlying districts; and an attempt to amalgamate white troopers with such a force would probably be futile, as in almost every instance the natives, after perpetrating an outrage, take refuge in the scrubs, which are inaccessible to horses, and where, except in certain instances, none but native troopers could follow and overtake them. To discipline a mixed force of this kind would, moreover, be a difficult task, as considerable jealousy would undoubtedly arise, and would generally result in the white troopers compelling the native troopers to act as their servants, and do all the more menial work.
- (2.) Your Committee would, however, recommend that ten mounted troopers should be immediately forwarded, by steamer, to Brisbane or Maryborough, and there placed under the orders of the Commandant, with instructions to that officer that these men are not to be amalgamated with the Native Police Force, Force, but are to patrol the districts in two or more parties, more especially in the open country, where they could, from time to time, render good service ; as they are of opinion that the existence of such a force would soon be known, and would act as a salutary check.

- (3.) Your Committee forbear to recommend the supplementing of the present Native Police Force by a Militia of Border Settlers, but would suggest that two sections for the present should be permanently stationed on the frontier, in the neighbourhood of Taroom, under the command of two experienced officers, fully authorised to enter into such offensive or defensive operations as they may consider necessary.
- (4.) Your Committee are of opinion that the system of recruiting in the Northern Districts is most pernicious, and has led, and will continue to lead, to the most mischievous results—wholesale desertion having, in consequence, taken place. All the witnesses agree that troopers should be raised from distant parts of the Colony, not less than 500 or 600 miles away from the district in which they are to act ; and one highly intelligent witness recommends that the troopers should be placed under military law, so that it might be possible in future to keep them under better subordination—a proposal in which your Committee fully concur.
- (5.) Your Committee would further recommend that instructions be immediately forwarded to the Commandant to send a party to the Lower Darling, Edward, and Murray Rivers, with horses and clothing, with the view of recruiting for the completion of the Force without delay.
- (6.) Your Committee are of opinion that the present Commandant should be allowed the opportunity of carrying out the work which, under many disadvantages, he appears to have so well commenced. That the process of reorganization must require time ; for, although much has already been done, a considerable period must necessarily elapse before the Force assumes its proper and most useful element—that of a preventive character—sufficiently numerous and active to check and overawe the blacks in their aggressions upon the settlers.
- (7.) No evidence has been adduced to lead your Committee to the conclusion that the Native Police Force cannot be restored to that state of efficiency to which it at one time attained ; and from a perusal of the two letters from the Government Resident at Brisbane, referred for their consideration on the 20th and 27th ultimo, it would appear that the Force has now been increased to the number of 92, and that, consequently, some efforts are being made to revive the corps.
- (8.) By certain returns transmitted in the communication of the Government Resident of the 20th ultimo, the present number of officers, including the Commandant, is shewn to amount to 16, some of whom are apparently useless ; and the services of these should be immediately dispensed with, and the number of officers might thus be reduced to 13.
- (9.) All the evidence taken tends to affirm the fact, that many persons have been injudiciously placed in the force as Lieutenants, by the Government, totally incompetent, from various causes, to render any service ; your Committee would therefore strongly urge that the recommendations of the Select Committee of 1856-7 should be carried out with regard to the appointment and dismissal by the Commandant of all his subordinate officers, and that the Government should interfere as little as possible in such appointments.
- (10.) Your Committee have had under their careful consideration the evidence of the Commissioner of Crown Lands at Port Curtis, more particularly as to the future site of the head quarters of the Native Police Force, but are of opinion that his suggestion cannot be carried out, not only on the ground of expense, but because as the country becomes occupied and the settlers push out, the head-quarters should be moved to the most central place, and ought, therefore, to be only temporary.

- (11.) Your Committee are of opinion that the head-quarters of the Commandant of the Native Police should for the present be fixed about 100 miles north-west of Gayndah, on account of its central position as regards the distribution of the Force. The presence of the Commandant at Brisbane appears, however, to be altogether unnecessary; but they consider that the Secretary ought to be stationed there, through whom the correspondence and payments could then be transacted, subject, as at present, to the control and supervision of the Government Resident, who fills the important offices of Treasurer and Paymaster. The greater facilities of communication with Sydney and the Dawson, and the absence of any Banking Establishment at Wide Bay or Port Curtis, induce your Committee to recommend Brisbane as the residence of the Secretary and Accountant.
- (12.) As it is clearly shewn by the evidence that the Native Police Force is no longer required in the Clarence River District, your Committee would recommend the immediate withdrawal of Lieutenant Dempster and his troopers therefrom.
- (13.) Your Committee consider that the pay of the Native Troopers should be increased from 5d. to 8d. per diem; the additional expense to be met by the contemplated reduction of three officers.
- (14.) After carefully perusing the papers connected with the dismissal of Lieutenant Ross from the Native Police, referred for their consideration, your Committee can see no reason to disturb the opinion which has been arrived at by the Executive Government in the matter.

In bringing their labors to a close, your Committee desire to state that they feel satisfied that the efforts now being made are well calculated to allay those feelings of alarm and apprehension which have been so long prevalent in the unhappy district of the Leichhardt; and whilst they repudiate, in the strongest terms, any attempt to wage a war of extermination against the Aborigines, they are satisfied that there is no alternative but to carry matters through with a strong hand, and punish with necessary severity all future outrages upon life and property, in order that the sanguinary conflicts between the native blacks and the settlers may for the future be avoided.

ARTHUR HODGSON,
Chairman.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

MURDERS BY THE ABORIGINES ON THE DAWSON RIVER.

THURSDAY, 17 JUNE, 1858.

Present:—

MR. HODGSON,
MR. TAYLOR,
MR. COWPER,
MR. JONES,

MR. RICHARDSON,
MR. CRIBB,
MR. BUCKLEY,
MR. DONALDSON.

ARTHUR HODGSON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Maurice Charles O'Connell, called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are Commissioner of Crown Lands for the District of Port Curtis? Yes. Capt. M. C. O'Connell.
2. You have been there some time? Rather more than four years.
3. You resided previously in the Barnett District? Yes; for five or six years. It is ten years altogether since I first was stationed frontier of occupation. 17 June, 1858.
4. You have had many opportunities of seeing the working of the Native Police Force? Yes.
5. Under Mr. Walker? Under Mr. Walker, and since his removal from the command.
6. By Mr. Cowper: In fact, Port Curtis was the head-quarters of the force? No; it never was head-quarters. I had control, when I first went up there, of the detachment that belonged to the Port Curtis District.
7. By the Chairman: Do you consider the Native Police Force, as at present constituted, efficient? Certainly not, at the present moment. It is very inefficient. It seems to have broken down from a want of any proper system of organization. When I first saw the Native Police, as originally raised by Mr. Walker, it struck me that he had worked a change and improvement in the aborigines I was hardly prepared to think they were capable of; he had got them into very creditable order; but since his removal from the command, as far as my observation goes, the men are not kept together under proper discipline, or with sufficient obedience to their officers, or even sufficient regard for them. At present it seems almost impossible to keep the newly raised recruits attached to the corps. I believe, in several instances, they have been deserting in considerable numbers.
8. Can you inform the Committee where the recruits come from? I cannot. I know nothing on that point, except from hearsay.
9. Do you think they come from the neighbouring districts, or from remote districts of the Colony? I have understood that some who have been brought to the Port Curtis district were recruited in the Wide Bay district, which is the adjoining one, and these men, very shortly after their arrival on the Fitz Roy, deserted.
10. Do you not think that would be a very probable consequence of their being employed so near their own district? I think it is very difficult to keep aborigines in the neighbourhood of their own tribes.
11. By Mr. Richardson: You think recruits should not be obtained from the neighbouring tribes? I do.

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.

17 June, 1858.

12. Do you think it would be desirable to get them from distant districts, such as the Murrumbidgee and Murray? Yes, or from the Namoi or Gwydir, or other distant districts.
13. Do you think the body can be rendered efficient at all on the present system? I do not think they can, without a considerable change of system.
14. By the Chairman: Would you be kind enough to favor the Committee with your ideas as to what is necessary for the reformation of the present system? It appears to me that the great want of the present system is a proper organization. Neither men nor officers are trained to their duty, so as to understand what they have to do when called upon to perform it. The officers have not that control over the men which they ought to have; and there is no esprit de corps. The duty is a particularly harassing and unpleasant one, and there is nothing to induce to the zealous performance of it beyond the bare fact of its being a duty.
15. Could you propose any remedy? The only plan which has occurred to me, as one which would be at all likely to be effectual, is that of raising a force under a law which, somewhat on the example of the Mutiny Act, shall compel a due observance of discipline, and prevent desertion. I think, under such a law, there ought to be a number of white troopers enlisted, in the proportion of one white man to two blacks; and in that way an efficient working corps would be created. I do not think the expense would be much greater than it is at present; and a body of men could be thus raised and disciplined who would really be useful.
16. Would you not prefer that the white troopers should preponderate? I would, provided the expense was not considered too great; but I think a force composed of one-third whites to two-thirds natives would be efficient, and, at the same time, much less expensive than a larger proportion of white men.
17. You recommend these proportions solely on the ground of expense? Solely on the ground of expense. In some parts of the country the native troopers are much more efficient than white men would be in following up and punishing the blacks for outrages committed, because they can follow them into the scrubs with greater facility—for instance, the scrubs of the Mackenzie and Upper Dawson; but, in all ordinary cases, I think a corps of white men with black trackers would be the most efficient.
18. By Mr. Cowper: In these scrubs you speak of, do you contemplate the Native Police being allowed to penetrate and murder the blacks, apart from their officers? No; I think such a system would be very objectionable. It is frequently the habit of the blacks, when they have committed an outrage or murder, to seek shelter on the border of a large scrub; and when they find themselves attacked they immediately disappear in the interior of the scrub; they have then to be followed, and in the pursuit the natives will, in all probability, get in advance of any white men who may be with them, though I have heard of cases where white men—Mr. Walker, for instance—managed to keep up with them all through the scrub.
19. By the Chairman: There are open spots frequently in these scrubs? Yes, often. The Native Police are in the habit of throwing off their clothes and entering the scrub with nothing but their accoutrements—their ammunition and carbine. They have a quicker eye, and they follow the blacks with greater certainty; they pick up a track with a sort of instinct, which guides them unerringly, from early habit, and which the white man does not possess.
20. By Mr. Cowper: You have a division of the Native Police at Gladstone, under Lieutenant Murray? Yes.
21. Were they often called out? Not when we first went there. I can tell you what happened when I first went up there, or very soon after Mr. Walker's removal took place. Mr. Murray reported to me that his men were all going away; that they had stated to him their intention of going to see Mr. Walker, and that they were, in point of fact, going to desert.
22. By Mr. Jones: Was any cause assigned? They said it was on account of Mr. Walker's removal from the command.
23. By Mr. Cowper: On account of their personal attachment to him? Yes; he having raised them. I asked Mr. Murray if he thought there would be any use in my speaking to the men. He said he thought it might have some effect; and I directed him to have his men paraded. I then put on my uniform, and rode out to endeavor to induce them to remain—because it was a matter of serious importance to us at that time, as we were then on an unoccupied part of the coast, surrounded by wild tribes, with a large extent of vacant country intervening between us and the nearest settlements; and had they left us, we should have found it very difficult to communicate with the settled portion of the country. On speaking to the men, I found they stated very reasonably their causes for dissatisfaction. They said they had been promised by Mr. Walker that after a certain time they should be taken back to their own country again to see their friends and relatives, and that they had now been five years in the force, and they were determined to go in. I could not prevail on them to change their intention, until I remarked to them that the country they were serving—it was the time the Russian war had just broken out—was then at war with other white people, and that it was a disgraceful thing on their parts to desert us at such a time. I pointed out that we were then on the coast where our white enemies might attack us, and we might suffer from the want of their aid; and they took the idea immediately, and declared that under the circumstance they would remain, and they even followed me into Gladstone, to express more strongly their determination to do so. I mention this, as I think it a strong proof that these aborigines are capable of generous impulses; and they did remain until about two years afterwards. The force was in the meantime removed from my control; and I may here say, that I think these men were subsequently very unjustly discharged. On the occasion I speak of, I promised them that the Government would find them the means of getting back to their own districts on horseback. I reported this to Sir Charles Fitz Roy, and received a confirmation of my pledge, and yet afterwards that pledge was broken, and the men were discharged to find their way on foot to their own country. I believe they committed many depredations on the road.

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.

17 June, 1858.

24. By Mr. Jones: These men did not desert? No; they were discharged.
25. The Government actually broke faith with them twice, Mr. Walker having, previously to your promise to them, undertaken on the part of the Government to return them to their own country—you have no reason to doubt that statement? No; but I do not think there was any time fixed by Mr. Walker, so that we cannot say it was a breach of faith.
26. Did you ever ascertain from Mr. Walker at what time he had undertaken to return them? No.
27. You yourself, however, gave them a distinct promise, and that promise was never fulfilled? Yes; that pledge was broken. I reported the circumstances to Mr. Parker, who was Colonial Secretary, I think, at the time; but we were so distant, and the correspondence was so long on the road, that it was too late to do anything in the way of remedy by the time it came to a conclusion.
28. By Mr. Cowper: Do you know what became of these men? I wrote to the officer at the Condamine, to beg that he would find means of support for them to the extent of £20, pending my reference of the matter to the Government in Sydney, and I would be answerable for that amount myself; but he wrote back to me to say that they had been about his place, and had been committing depredations—that they had fired at a woman, and had been stealing ammunition at the huts; some of them, he said, had joined his force, but had behaved very badly after joining, and he did not know where the others were gone.
29. By the Chairman: Do you know whether any personal attachment exists between the present Commandant and his troopers? I have no means of forming an opinion on this point.
30. Do you know the feeling amongst the squatters in the northern districts with regard to the Native Police Force? From expressions I have heard, I believe the squatters, generally, are not satisfied with the working of the corps. I presume they cannot be, for in my part of the country there are no men—or at least not sufficient to be of service.
31. By Mr. Cowper: Has Mr. Murray no men with him? I am not sure of the strength of his detachment at the present moment, but for the last two years it has been considerably under its proper number. When I left Port Curtis, twelve men lately recruited had just gone to the Fitz Roy, and I have since heard they have deserted.
32. By Mr. Jones: What was the strength of Mr. Murray's force at the time you left? He has had very few men for the last year and a half. I do not think there are more than four or five men at Gladstone now.
33. By Mr. Richardson: Have the settlers themselves proposed any plan for the reorganization of the Native Police? I have heard so many different opinions, that I could not say what is the general opinion among the squatters.
34. By Mr. Cowper: Have you ever sustained any attacks on the part of the blacks yourself? Never.
35. Have there been any attacks within your district? Within fourteen miles of Gladstone, at Mr. Young's station, they killed everybody on the place except a black boy; and within the last year they killed three men on Mr. Tolson's station, and wounded him.
36. By the Chairman: Have you understood that the squatters are not disposed to co-operate with the Native Police? I have never observed anything of the sort myself.
37. Are you personally aware how Mr. Walker is employed at the present time? I am not.
38. By Mr. Cowper: Have you considered this matter sufficiently to enable you to make any suggestions to the Committee, which you think would advance the reconstruction of the Native Police Force, or the construction of a force in lieu of it? I do not think it possible to reconstruct the Native Police Force on the present system. I think any such attempt would be likely to end in mischief, from the mixture of the old material with the new. I think, to do anything effectual you must originate a new system; and until the new one can be put in operation, it should be kept entirely separate from the old. To lay down what I believe desirable for a new system, would perhaps require longer time than the Committee are now inclined to afford me; but I may state that I propose to lay before the Committee, at another opportunity, a paper containing a design of that which I suppose to be the best mode of forming another corps. (Vide Appendix A.)
39. By the Chairman: Leaving expense out of the question, what number of white men would you employ in conjunction with the Native Police, in order to make the force as efficient as possible? Supposing the force to consist altogether of one hundred and twenty men—a number which the last Committee presumed to be sufficient—I should say there should be forty white troopers and eighty aboriginal troopers, independently of staff sergeants, and a number of bat men.
40. You think a force of whites and natives combined in those proportions would work efficiently? I think so; but it must first be properly organized before it is put to work. The great fault of the present system seems to me to be that there is no organization. The men are taken from the bush, and the officers are selected from other walks in life, and the two are put together and told to perform certain duties for which they have had no previous training, and they feel that awkwardness which all men naturally feel who do not understand their duty.
41. By Mr. Cowper: Is not the proportion you name, of eighty blacks to forty whites, rather at variance with the idea of using the blacks merely as trackers? I only propose these proportions for the sake of economy; but still I think the intelligence of the whites, combined with the physical force which such a number of natives would give, would make it work as an effective force, and they would be able to accomplish many duties they cannot perform now, such as the execution of warrants, &c. An intelligent white sergeant, with two aboriginal native troopers with him, could perform many duties that half-a-dozen native troopers alone could not perform, and many services which one white constable would not be able by himself to accomplish.
42. By Mr. Richardson: Keeping expense out of the question, would it not be as well to have

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.

17 June, 1858.

have two white men to one black? I think it would be better. If expense is not an object, I think the larger proportion of whites would make it a more effective force.

43. By the Chairman: Are you at all aware of the number of the force at present? No, I am not.

44. Are you at all aware of the difficulty the present Commandant has in increasing the force? I am not; but I presume there must be great difficulty in recruiting, from the native troopers being so scarce in the Port Curtis District. In order to induce the men to remain in the service, I think it would be a great advantage to give a band at head-quarters, and all the paraphernalia of a regiment to this corps. Where it is all hard work and no play, you must do something to induce the men to join. It would tend to induce an esprit de corps.

45. You have not yourself been resident in any districts where the blacks have been committing outrages? Yes; in the Burnett.

46. Were they very mischievous there at the time of your residence? They killed a number of men in different parts of the district. I think some twenty were killed in the space of five years.

47. By the Chairman: Could you give the Committee any idea of the extent of country in length over which you consider a protective force necessary? If I had one of the maps showing the Electoral Districts as proposed, I think I could explain to the Committee what I think are the best positions in which to locate detachments of the force. (A map being produced, the witness proceeded to point out the various positions which, in his opinion, the force should occupy.) The country to be protected would be about four hundred miles in length, by about 150 or 200 in breadth. I think there is a very good position for a central depot on the Calliope, where Mr. Walker himself once fixed on a spot for head-quarters. The situation is one from which most of the different districts, now that occupation has progressed to the north, could be relieved periodically with the greatest ease. There might, I think, be out-stations at Taroom, Rannock, the Fitz Roy, Maryborough, Brisbane, Nanango, and at the Condamine—in all seven stations, independently of the central one. The object of the central dépôt is to have some place where the force could be organized—where the recruits could be trained, and from whence relief might be sent to the out-stations as required. It is absolutely necessary, in my opinion, to bring in the men from the out-lying stations to head-quarters at certain intervals, in order that they may have their horses, clothing, saddlery, arms, and so on looked to, and that they may have a certain period of rest. I think also that there should be a system of constant patrolling kept up by all the different sections, so that the blacks in the intermediate country might be kept in awe. That would be likely to prevent a good deal of mischief. I am convinced an efficient system of patrol is the only way to work the force in a proper manner.

48. By Mr. Couper: Is it not the fact that these outbreaks are chiefly confined to one district at any one time. For instance, it now appears that the Upper Dawson is the district in which the blacks are most threatening—would it not therefore be better to concentrate in that particular district a powerful force, rather than to have a number of stations scattered over a wide extent of country? The object of a dépôt would be, that you might at once mass a large force on any given point. I propose that there should always be a considerable number—say thirty men—at head-quarters, and in the event of outbreaks similar to that on the Upper Dawson, the whole of these men could be moved to the spot at once, and other parties might likewise be moved towards the same point. In this way a large amount of force could be brought to bear on any disturbed district, until the outrages had been put an end to.

49. By the Chairman: Your plan would involve the erection of barracks? At the head-quarters, certainly.

50. Not at the out-lying stations? I am not prepared to say that. I think the officers ought to have quarters; it is hard work for Europeans to compel them to sleep out every night, year after year.

51. Are they not well received at the different stations? Yes, I believe they are; but I think it would be as well they should stop with their men.

52. Do you think the amalgamation of white and native troopers would bring about much jealousy on the part of the latter? I think not.

53. Not even though the white men should be made sergeants and leading men in each division? I think not. They would, of course, require selection. It would be necessary to make a selection of those who were best adapted by nature to govern and lead the blacks. It is not every man who is fitted by disposition and intelligence to command the respect and attention of the blacks.

54. Do you consider the number of officers now employed—seventeen—excessive or not? They would be decidedly too many under the system I recommend. But I recollect now that most of the officers at present are merely substitutes for sergeants. The men formerly employed as sergeants were found to be of such bad character that it was difficult to keep them in order, as they were not enlisted under any law; and one of the Commandants—I think Mr. Marshall—fancied it would be better to get young men of education, who should be called officers, but do the duty of sergeants. Under that view there are not too many.

55. Can you tell the Committee whether that idea of Mr. Marshall's has been carried out with any effect? I think not. I do not think it has answered the purpose.

56. By Mr. Jones: Have you ever been concerned with black troopers in any engagement with the aborigines? No.

57. Have you ever heard any statement, on authority on which you can rely, as to the general conduct of the black troopers when they have been engaged with blacks who have committed depredations—I mean as to whether they exhibit undue ferocity? I do not believe they are at all imbued with any feeling of humanity, as far as consideration for human life is concerned.

58. You do not believe they would act with the same circumspection in a case of that kind that that the white troopers would? No; I believe they are quite beyond the control of their officers when once let loose.

59. You think in engagements of this kind the black troopers would take life more recklessly than white troopers would do? I think so.

60. Do you think they would exercise any discrimination between the males and women of the tribes on whom they make attacks in these cases? I cannot give an answer on that point from any personal observation. I do not know whether they would themselves have any hesitation in sacrificing the lives of females; but I incline to think they would avoid doing so.

61. By the Chairman: Do you not know that in the skirmishes which do take place the black women are invariably saved—that they are not killed except by accident? I believe that where it is possible the women are saved; but in an indiscriminate attack they may accidentally get shot.

62. By Mr. Jones: Do you think the native troopers would, as white men would do, avoid destroying the women in such a case? I think they would. I do not think they would voluntarily shoot the women.

63. But you believe that, as compared with white men, they would be reckless in taking the lives of the male blacks? Quite so. I do not think they ought to be trusted by themselves.

64. You think it would not be safe to employ them, unless in conjunction with a sufficient number of white men to keep them in check? Just so.

65. By Mr. Richardson: You think it undesirable that the blacks should preponderate so much as they do? Decidedly.

66. By Mr. Jones: What is the ordinary conduct and demeanor of the native troopers towards the neighbouring tribes when not actively engaged against them? I think, whilst under control, their conduct is very good; but if not restrained, I believe they would seize upon the women of the neighbouring tribes, and would in a very short time become exceedingly troublesome in consequence. I had an instance of the sort myself; but I put a stop to it at once. When I first allowed the wild blacks to come into my camp at Port Curtis they soon complained that the Native Police had taken one of their women. It caused great excitement amongst them, and I immediately rode out to the police camp, and requested Mr. Murray to parade his men. When that was done I told them the woman must be returned by sundown. Mr. Murray's men indignantly denied that they had had anything to do with it, but said the woman had been taken by a trooper who had come down on escort from Rannes; and they promised they would have the woman returned, which they did.

67. Do you think that, with regard to the women, there would be any material difference between the conduct of the black troopers and of the white troopers—that the conduct of the blacks would be worse than that of the whites under the like circumstances? I think so, decidedly. It would be more easy to keep white men under control in that matter.

68. Taking into consideration the average character of the officers whose services we may expect to secure, do you think it possible to ensure a proper state of discipline where the force consists exclusively of native troopers? I should say it is very difficult to do so; there are few men I should consider competent to control such a force.

69. It would, I apprehend, be much easier to insure a proper state of discipline in a force composed mainly of whites, than in one consisting entirely of blacks? Of course; but there must be a stringent law to govern even the whites.

70. With or without such a law it would, as a rule, be easier for the officers to manage whites than to manage blacks? That would depend a good deal on the temptation to which they are subject. I think a number of white men collected together under circumstances of temptation, without a law to govern them, subject merely to their own ideas of right and wrong, with no penalty but dismissal, would be rather more difficult to retain under any strict discipline than a similar number of blacks.

71. But, under such a law as you speak of, you think there would be comparatively little difficulty in managing a force of white men? Quite so.

72. While the management of the blacks would depend on the tact and skill of their officer? Entirely on his personal character.

73. What do you regard as the relative value of white and black troopers in a case of this kind:—Say it requires a force of one hundred blacks for the protection of a certain district, what number of white men would you consider equal to the same amount of duty? I do not think any great difference could be made in the numbers, because having in all these cases a large tract of country to cover, you would, I think, require nearly the same number of one description as the other.

74. In the event of disturbances leading to engagements with the wild tribes, would you not consider a force of ten white men equal to the work of twice that number of blacks? You mean blacks by themselves?

75. Blacks, with one white officer to lead them. Would not an officer go into an engagement with ten white men with the same confidence as with double the number of blacks? I think not in these peculiar districts. I think an officer accustomed to the blacks would feel himself quite as confident as if he had an equal number of whites.

76. Then, if the character of the force be changed by the introduction of a larger proportion of whites, you do not think it would be wise to diminish the total number of the force on that account? I think not. The amount of physical force required to bring an engagement to a successful issue would be much the same, whether whites or blacks be employed; but the introduction of a larger number of whites into the force would make it more efficient by increasing its moral power; because the whites could perform many duties which require a certain amount of intelligence and education, but to which blacks alone would be quite incompetent. For instance, one white man and two blacks would make an efficient patrolling party; but you could hardly trust three ordinary black troopers by themselves as a detachment for a similar purpose.

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.
17 June, 1858.

77. By Mr. Cribb: Do you not think a force of eight white troopers, with two blacks as trackers, would be more efficient than an ordinary troop of twelve black troopers with one officer to lead them? They would be more efficient for many purposes, but for the purpose of following up and punishing blacks who had committed outrage, I do not think they would.
78. Would they not be more under control? If you are talking of the force as it at present exists, I grant that the whites would be more efficient; but if the black troopers were under a proper system, and as well disciplined as they should be, and certainly were under Mr. Walker, I think twelve of these would be as efficient for that particular purpose as eight whites and two black trackers.
79. Taking the force as it at present exists, would not eight whites and two blacks be more efficient than twelve blacks under their present officers? Decidedly more efficient than the present force.
80. By Mr. Jones: Do you not think the black tribes would stand more in awe of a force composed mainly of white men? No; they are desperately afraid of the Native Police.
81. By Mr. Buckley: Do you think white troopers would be able to follow the blacks through scrubs of the same density as black troopers would get through after them? No; I say they would not in that peculiar country.
82. In attacking the blacks, it frequently happens that the Native Police are obliged to penetrate dense scrubs, for which purpose they strip themselves of everything, merely taking with them their arms and ammunition—would white troopers be in a position to follow the blacks with the same facility through these scrubs? I do not think they could get so rapidly through the scrubs.
83. Could they get through at all? Yes, with black troopers with them, as I propose.
84. By Mr. Jones: What is the state of feeling among the blacks, are you aware, as compared with what it was a few years ago—are they less afraid of the whites than they were prior to the disorganization of the Native Police Force taking place? Judging from the frequency of outrages and murders on the Dawson, I should be inclined to believe they are less afraid of the whites than they were, and less under awe of punishment than they used to be.
85. Do you think that feeling is an increasing one at the present time? I have no grounds upon which to offer an opinion on that point.
86. I presume the blacks are still very numerous in the Northern Districts? Yes.
87. Supposing this feeling of boldness were to grow on them, and lead to its natural consequences, do you not think it would require considerable expenditure of life and money to restore the state of things that now exists in those districts? Yes; I have no doubt of it.
88. Then you think it better to take effective measures at once, to convince the blacks that any country the white people once take up they will keep? Yes; no doubt of it. The wisest and most humane system is at once to cause prompt punishment to follow all outrages.
89. Do you think it possible that result can be arrived at, with the Native Police Force as at present organized? I think not.
90. Then you believe it is absolutely necessary to reorganize this force without delay? Yes.
91. By Mr. Donaldson: Public attention has been lately drawn to some very remarkable circumstances, namely, that the blacks in the Northern Districts, especially those about the Dawson, not only travel by night, and fight by night, but that the men separate from the women; and that tribes supposed to be hostile combine their fighting men for the purposes of aggression—have you in any way noticed these peculiarities? The combination of the tribes is new to me, and if it be true, it is a very dangerous feature in their character.
92. You do not know that it is so? I do not.
93. With regard to leaving their women? That I have seen—at least I know they do it when going to their own robberies.
94. Do you know anything about their attacking at night? That they do.
95. That is a new feature, and a very dangerous one? It is. Formerly it was understood that superstition prevented them from attacking at night; and they must either have outgrown that superstition, or these must be tribes that are not subject to it.
96. By the Chairman: Can you tell the Committee the amount of pay received by the Native Troopers? I think it is eighteen-pence a day, to cover their feeding and clothing.
97. Should you recommend a difference of pay between the white and native troopers, on the new system you propose? Decidedly. I assume that the native trooper should get his eighteen-pence a day, as at present, and that the white trooper should get three shillings and sixpence a day, and rations.
98. Do you anticipate that any feeling of jealousy would exist on account of the difference of wages? I think not at all.
99. Would you recommend, as an immediate remedy, to prevent any more murders on the Dawson River, that a body of white troopers should be sent up, if possible, from Sydney? Doubtless that would be the best mode of providing for the present emergency that could be adopted, if they were men fitted for the bush.
100. By Mr. Richardson: Would it not be desirable that they should be men accustomed to the bush? Decidedly it would be an advantage; but under the plan I was sketching an idea of, they would all undergo a training at head-quarters before being put to active service in the different districts.
101. Supposing a number of Captain McLerie's men were sent, do you think they would be efficient at first? They would soon get into working order, if well commanded.
102. By Mr. Buckley: From your own knowledge of the disposition of the aborigines, should you imagine that these murders on the Dawson have been committed in consequence of too much freedom having been permitted with the blacks? I have never seen the blacks do mischief without some previous injury being inflicted on them by the whites.
103. Are you aware whether there was any thing of the kind in these cases? No.
104. But, from what you know of the blacks, you do not think they are likely to do it wantonly? As far as I have any knowledge of them, I should think not.

105. By Mr. Tuglor: Do you think the Commandant should habitually reside at the dépôt? After he has once formed his corps he would be at liberty to move about, and should do so occasionally; but at the commencement I think his presence would be absolutely necessary at the head-quarters, as he himself would be the very soul of the system to be established.
106. By Mr. Buckley: I think you stated that Maryborough would be a good station for a detachment of this force—do you not think Gayndah would be better? No; the blacks are more troublesome, and very numerous, at Maryborough. At Gayndah they have never been troublesome.

APPENDIX A.

Remarks on the formation of a Corps of Mounted Police for service on the Frontier Districts of New South Wales.

1. There can be no doubt of the vast importance to the Northern Districts of this Colony, and to its pastoral interests generally, for the disposal of whose surplus stock these districts now form the chief outlet, of devising and carrying into execution, with as little delay as possible, some more efficient system for the protection of life and property against aboriginal outrage than any which is now in operation.
2. I have therefore much pleasure in laying before the Committee on Aboriginal Outrages on the Dawson River, in accordance with the promise I made when under examination, a carefully-prepared memorandum of what appears to me the best mode of providing a force adequate to the task of affording police protection to the frontier and disturbed districts.
3. I believe the fundamental error in the constitution of the Native Police Force as it now exists, and the cause of its consequent inefficiency, to be the want of primary organization—that is to say, the institution of the corps without any organized and arranged system for its government and discipline, as well as the absence of any method in the drill and training of the officers and men who compose it.
4. The mere clothing and arming a certain number of undisciplined men, be they either whites or blacks, is not a sufficient preliminary precaution before you call upon them to perform duties which, alike important and arduous in their nature, require also skill and intelligence in their execution. It appears to me that all who, either as leaders or followers, are liable to be placed in such a position ought undoubtedly to be thoroughly grounded in a knowledge of the work they have to perform; and that such has not been the case with the Native Police, is in my eyes quite a sufficient reason to account for the failure of that experiment, notwithstanding the undoubted zeal and desire to succeed of many of the gentlemen appointed as officers.
5. The great objects to be held in view in the organization of a body of armed men intended to act in concert for the accomplishment of any particular purposes are, in the first instance, to render each individual member of the force as expert in the use of the weapons entrusted to him as he is capable of becoming, and then, by establishing a system of united action, to give to the whole body a cohesion which shall make its operations the result of regulated efforts and not of occasional and isolated impulses—in fact, to establish individual efficiency and combined discipline.
6. But to accomplish these ends it is absolutely necessary men should be brought under some more stringent laws than those which enforce the fulfilment of civil contracts; and as a preliminary measure to the organization of any armed force, laws should be passed authorizing enlistment, constituting tribunals for the trial of offences, and enacting summary punishments for infractions of discipline, and crimes which are more dangerous to the community when liable to be committed by men with arms in their hands, and assembled together in large numbers, than when springing from the actions of isolated individuals amongst the masses of society.
7. For the particular purposes under the consideration of the Committee also, there ought to be a law empowering the Executive Government to proclaim any particular district in which frequent outrages occur as a “disturbed district,” and to institute therein some more summary process for the trial and punishment of crimes of violence than a resort to the ordinary tribunals of the country will allow.
8. With these protections from the Legislature—and I confess I think them very necessary ones—I apprehend there would be little difficulty in organizing an efficient force for the purposes contemplated by the Committee—the said force to consist of an admixture of Europeans and Aborigines, in such proportions as may be determined on.
9. In accordance with this view of the nature of the Force to be instituted, I have drawn out and append a detailed and numerical return of its strength and organization, and I add estimates of the probable amount of expenditure.
10. I have already stated that I believe the great cause of the inefficiency of the Native Police, as now constituted, to be its want of organization and training; and I would here impress upon the consideration of the Committee the absolute necessity of giving to any body of men raised either to supplement or supersede that Force, time and opportunity to be brought together, trained, and organized, before being called on to enter on their duties; and I should say, considering the small numbers to be drilled and disciplined, six months from the time the recruits are brought together might be the period allowed for this purpose.
11. A primary consideration, also, with reference to the future efficiency of this Force, will be the choice of the localities in which recruiting for aboriginal troopers is to take place; and I would recommend recourse should be had to districts as far removed as possible from those in which the men are to be called upon to serve. I believe the Namoi, Gwydir, and older settled western country generally, would afford the best description of recruits.

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.
17 June, 1858.

12. With regard to the European troopers, they must of course be, in the first instance, obtained in Sydney; and so soon as a sufficient number are engaged, I would recommend their being despatched by sea to the spot which may be determined on as the central depôt for the corps; and I would suggest for this purpose the neighbourhood of Port Curtis, on the banks of the Calliope River, as strategically the best point to select, and as affording many facilities for the transport of supplies; it being quite possible to choose a spot having, with every other advantage of soil and situation, water carriage to the very depôt itself.

13. The place having been decided on, no time ought to be lost in commencing the erection of the necessary buildings, and fencing in about 2,000 acres of land.

14. This being the central depôt of the corps, all horses purchased will have to be brought there in the first instance, to be broken in and trained; all horses sick or disabled will be left there for treatment or recovery; and detached sections will occasionally be brought in to recruit the condition of horses overworked and requiring rest. For these purposes, and to prevent the straying of horses to be an impediment to operations when a party happens to be suddenly called on for duty, I think the provision of a few good paddocks absolutely essential, and I propose 2000 acres as affording pasturage for about 200 horses.

The buildings which would be required would, I presume, be nearly as under:—

One Commandant's quarters.

Six Officers' quarters, with mess-room and kitchen.

Barrack accommodation for about 60 men, with hospital.

Stabling for, say 30 horses; and

A guard-house and cells.

But as these needs only be constructed of cheap materials (slabs and shingles) I have no doubt the entire expense of buildings and fencing would not exceed £5,000.

15. Whilst these buildings are in course of construction, the organization and training of such men as had been engaged could be going on—they being under temporary huts in the meanwhile; and as successive drafts of aboriginal recruits could be obtained, I would propose they likewise should be forwarded via Sydney to their destination by sea.

16. The Committee will perceive I have included in my estimate an expenditure on account of a band for this force; and I will explain why I consider this necessary.

17. It must be recollected that the duty on which these men are to be engaged is of the most monotonous description, entailing much fatigue, discomfort, and privation; that a great deal of that duty, and a very important portion of it, viz., the patrols, has to be performed by small sections of the corps, released from all observation of their superiors; and that it is of the highest importance, to ensure the diligent performance of its duties, to create in this body of men an esprit de corps. In fact, to lead each individual member of it to feel and act as belonging to a body whose general character he knows to be affected by his conduct.

18. Now, to create this feeling, and train it to its best uses in incitement to a zealous discharge of duty in support of the character of the corps with which the individual is connected, it is necessary to give him some pride in the connection itself—some idea he belongs to a body whose services are important to the public; and with a corps such as that I am now contemplating the formation of, I know of no measure I could suggest as more calculated to produce the desired effect than that of attaching a band to its head-quarters.

19. The depressing influence of a monotonous routine of duties carried on from year's end to year's end, in the most desolate and thinly peopled portions of the country, ought likewise to be taken into consideration, as the most energetic individual organization is liable to become broken down and stale under such a pressure. I believe the stimulus given to the spirits of the men by marching out a section to its bush duties, or marching one in for occasional rest or relaxation, with a band of music at its head, would do more good in the maintenance of discipline and zeal than would a whole volume of written commendation, or an hour's verbal praise.

20. I think also a band would have a great attraction for the blacks, and render recruiting much more successful. But although I look upon the expense as not to be weighed in the balance with the good which may be anticipated from this measure as a means to an end, this item can be struck out of the estimate, without directly affecting the other portions of it, if the Committee see fit so to do.

21. I must remark, likewise, that I have provided, on "the establishment of the corps," for fifteen supernumeraries (dismounted)—whom I mean as "men in training to supply vacancies," "Officers servants," and generally to perform any services which might otherwise withdraw effectives from field duties.

22. The total annual expense, therefore, of this Force, according to my estimate, would be about £16,446 7s 6d., irrespective of the pay of the Commandant, which I have not included, as its amount would have to be decided on by Government, under many considerations I am unable to take into account; but whatever this item may be fixed at, it is evident that even with an improved constitution of the Force, by the reversal of the proportion I have taken of Aborigines to Europeans, and employing eighty of the latter to forty of the former, the annual expenditure may yet be kept a good deal within £20,000, and the Colony be provided with a body of men in every way adequate to the performance of their duties, and who would form a nucleus for extension in the event of any sudden emergency requiring us to arm hastily for defence against hostile attack from without.

23. I have added, also, an estimate of the preliminary expenses which will unavoidably have to be incurred ere the Force can be brought into working order; and it only remains for me to point out that, in the event of any such plan as that I have suggested being adopted, it would be necessary to make provision for the gradual absorption of the officers and men of the present Native Police into the new corps.

Under ordinary circumstances, each detachment would be four months at Head Quarters, and eight months at out-stations, during the year.

FRIDAY, 18 JUNE, 1858.

Present:—

Mr. HODGSON,
Mr. JONES,
Mr. TAYLOR,

Mr. FORSTER.

Mr. RICHARDSON,
Mr. CRIBB,
Mr. BUCKLEY,

ARTHUR HODGSON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

William Forster, Esq., M.P., a Member of the Committee, examined in his place:—

- Wm. Forster, Esq., M.P.
18 June, 1858.
1. By the Chairman: I believe you were resident for some time in the Northern Districts? I was a resident in the Northern Districts for thirteen or fourteen years—about eight years on the Clarence, and five or six at Wide Bay.
 2. During that time, I presume, you had many opportunities of knowing the manners and customs of the aborigines? Yes; not only from my residence there, but through my intercourse with the natives in other parts of the Colony, I have a tolerable knowledge of their manners and customs.
 3. You have heard of the murders that have recently been committed in the Northern Districts? Yes; I may say they are notorious. I have learnt them from the newspapers, and also from conversation with gentlemen from that quarter.
 4. To what cause do you attribute those murders? I should say murders of that kind must always be expected on the frontier of a Colony like this, more or less. The great number of murders committed recently may be owing to peculiar causes; but that murders must occur in taking up new country, by collisions between the whites and the aborigines, is a necessity almost of that sort of colonization.
 5. Do you not attribute these numerous murders to the inefficient state of the Native Police? I should not be inclined to come to that conclusion without being on the spot, to feel certain of their being caused by the inefficiency of the Native Police; because I am satisfied that, no matter how you organize any force on the border, enterprising men, induced by the large profit, or appearance of profit, held out in undertakings of the kind, will always go beyond any protection the Government can give them; and, in that case, murders will be committed by the natives, and upon the natives, in spite of any force you can organize. It appears to me, however, that the number of murders that have recently occurred on the Upper Dawson are rather more than we should be warranted in expecting under the circumstances; and I should be inclined to draw the conclusion from that, either that there is some want of efficient protection, or that the squatters have been led to rely on the Native Police more than they ought to do. But it is difficult for any one at this distance to come to the conclusion that the inefficiency of the force is the actual cause of the murders, without knowing more of the circumstances. It seems to me, that the circumstance to be taken into consideration, is the relative proportion of these murders to what we may expect. I believe some murders must occur; but there seems to have been a large number of murders lately, and certainly a larger number than generally occur in other places.
 6. Were the Native Police in the Northern Districts when you were residing there? Yes.
 7. Who was the Commandant then? Mr. Walker.
 8. Was it an efficient force at that time? I should say it was certainly not an efficient force, in this sense, that it did not seem to me to do all the good that might have been done with it; but I should be sorry to say it did not do some good, for I believe almost the most inefficient force that you can have will to a certain extent control the outrages of the natives. But I believe that force has never been, properly speaking, efficient; I believe it has never done as much as might reasonably have been expected from the amount of money expended upon it.
 9. Could you suggest any improvement in the formation of the force? I consider that one of the most difficult questions we have to deal with is, the mode of rendering a force of that sort efficient. I believe one reason of its inefficiency is, in some degree, (I may say this is a conclusion at which I have arrived on reflection,) attributable to the peculiar character of the first Commandant, and the difficulty of supplying his place with another man of his peculiar characteristics. He was, I believe, a man of some natural ability, but I think his talent in dealing with these blacks has been somewhat overrated; because it appeared to me that his control over them was owing rather to his having lived on familiar terms with a large number of the men under his command in other districts before they were enlisted in the Native Police.
 10. To what part of the Colony do you allude when you say Mr. Walker lived with these men on familiar terms? He was resident in the south-western districts—in the districts, I believe about the Edward River; and there he had the means, for a long time before he was appointed to the office of Commandant, of becoming very familiar with the particular individuals who were appointed to his force. I do not want to deny his talent; but I think his influence over the men composing the Native Police Force arose a good deal from his previous acquaintance with the individuals who were then appointed to his force. They, no question, had acquired a certain respect for his character, and received commands from him which were carried out without any derogation from his authority, notwithstanding the familiar terms on which he lived with them. From what I have gathered of his dealing with these natives, it would appear that Mr. Walker was extraordinarily familiar with them. He was more familiar than we should consider it right to be with servants, for instance—he treated them almost as friends; and thus, when he was removed from the force, there arose a peculiar difficulty in supplying his place. He was dismissed, no doubt, quite rightly by the Government; for, notwithstanding his abilities, his conduct was such that no Government could have retained him in office with any propriety. My belief indeed is, that they grossly neglected neglected their duty in not having dismissed him three years before. For the reasons I have stated, I infer that the terms on which he lived with these natives placed a peculiar difficulty on the officers who came into the command afterwards. They found themselves unable to enforce their authority over men with whom they were unacquainted individually. They had been accustomed to notice the familiar terms on which Mr. Walker lived with the men, and they, in most cases, fell in to the error of carrying on the same familiar intercourse; but, owing to their being deficient in those peculiar qualities which Mr. Walker possessed, it resulted in making them objects of contempt to their men. I believe that was the case with a great number of the young officers who had charge of the men afterwards. The consequence was, that the force became disorganized, and the men came to obey or not to obey orders according to their own will and pleasure. Every man must see that under such a state of things nothing could result but complete disorganization; and the evils thus produced were not remedied by the measures taken by the Police authorities. They attempted then to organize a force out of the natives who were close at hand. They could not go back to the Edward River—probably they had not time; and if they had they would only have enlisted a number of new men not acquainted with the officers, and who would probably not have obeyed them much better. But they fell into the worse error of employing a number of men in the districts close at hand, and that completed the disorganization, and led to consequences that were very injurious; because these men carried on an intercourse with the tribes from which they were taken, and used their police authority to exercise a kind of tyranny over the tribes, without, at the same time, rendering much assistance to the squatters. Another circumstance that tended to the disorganization of the force was, that there was a sort of trade in the women of the different tribes by these Native Police. Wherever they came into a new district a number of young women of the tribes were brought forward and placed at their disposal—at least they lived in their camps. Wherever they went they were always surrounded by a number of these women, who always act as emissaries between the wild tribes and those with whom they want to deal. The consequence of all these things was, that the Native Police enforced their authority only at their own option. The officers had hardly any power over them, and whatever good they did was greatly curtailed. I will not say that even under these circumstances they did not effect some good; but still the inefficiency of the force was greatly increased, and its disorganization completed; for it has, up to the present time, been in a thorough state of disorganization.

11. Could you state to the Committee any views you may entertain as to the best means of ameliorating the present condition of the force? Having stated what appear to me to have been the peculiar causes of its disorganization, I may say that the subject is an exceedingly difficult one, and that any suggestions I make I offer with great diffidence. I have thought, that, in order to enable the officers to obtain any authority over these blacks, they must always have a certain number of white men acting with them; and it appears to me that they might be associated in the proportion of, say, half white troopers, or two white troopers to three natives. I state this proportion with the greatest diffidence, because it is a mere matter of detail; but, having stated that a great part of the disorganization of the present force arises from the absence of authority on the part of the officers over their men, it appears to me that there must be some white men in the force in order to give them confidence. I think that young men placed in the circumstances that the officers of the Native Police now are, would be very likely to feel themselves in a great degree at the mercy of their men; and placing a certain number of white men among the blacks—perhaps in some position of authority over them—would go far to the root of that portion of the evil that we are at present considering. The proportion is a difficult point, however. I should be inclined to make it such as would give the officers full confidence in dealing with their men, but not so great as entirely to get rid of these blacks as an essential part of the force. I have heard it suggested that they should only be retained as trackers; but I think they should be retained as troopers, not altogether on account of the good they do, but because I think the idea of a Native Police Force is likely to be beneficial to the blacks themselves. It has done good, and, if the force could have been kept under control, would have done more good. Its effect upon the men enlisted, I think, has been beneficial. They seem to be a better race than the wild men they were taken from. The vanity of each individual is affected by having an uniform, and being made a soldier of, and an esprit de corps is formed among them. Besides all this, I think they are able to act against the blacks in the scrubs better than white men would. The pursuit in a scrub is a very difficult matter. No white man with his clothes on, or even without them, could get through the scrubs with anything like a chance of overtaking the blacks; but the Native Police throw their clothes off, and very often come up with them. The pursuit of certain of the wild tribes—when pursuit is necessary—cannot well be effected without a certain proportion of these black troopers, because in the country to the northward these scrubs are frequent, and therefore I should be sorry to see them done away with altogether.

12. By Mr. Richardson: You seem to think a great deal of the disorganization of the Native Police has arisen from the connection of the black troopers with the women of the tribes? Yes; I believe that has been carried on to a great extent.

13. Do you think the same would be the case with white men? I have not the slightest doubt intercourse of the same kind would occur, but not to the same extent; at all events, not to the same dangerous extent. I cannot believe white men would be influenced in the discharge of their duty in the same way as the blacks are. In most cases these men are dealing with their own tribes, or allies of their own tribes, for there are alliances between these tribes extending over large tracts of country.

14. By Mr. Jones: Where the troopers were white men, the women could not act as emissaries? No.

15. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think a lieutenant in command of a division would have much power over the white men under him? He would not feel the fear that an inexperienced young man must feel when placed among a number of armed savages.

Esq., M.P.

Wm. Forster,
Esq., M.P.

18 June, 1858.

16. By the Chairman: Would you have any special law put in force for the control of the kind of force you propose? It has been suggested by a very intelligent gentleman, Mr. William Archer—whose evidence would be of great use to the Committee—and I think the suggestion is a very excellent one:—that if we employ black troopers, there should be a law passed to subject them to some kind of military authority, in the same way as the Sepoys in India, and the Kaffirs at the Cape. As I have said, I believe this experiment of a Native Police is useful to the natives themselves; and I think the advantages derived from it may be greatly increased by making it a legal body. At present it is my opinion that giving arms to the blacks is a direct violation of the law as it stands.

17. In the event of the proposal to associate some white troopers with the blacks being carried out, in the proportion of two whites to three blacks, do you think it would be advisable to discharge the black troopers at present employed? Of course their first enlistment ought to be voluntary; and to carry out that principle it would not be right to retain their services, unless they were willing to remain under the new system. If they were willing to remain, I would let them do so. But I would in no case employ native troopers in the districts from which they came. It is not enough to go over a range or river and take them from a different tribe, because, from my knowledge of the blacks in the Northern Districts, I believe I may say that alliances between the tribes extend in some cases along extensive tracts of the country, whereas a single range will sometimes disconnect them altogether. I believe a dialect that is common to a great number of tribes extends all the way along the coast from Clarence River to Wide Bay; but when you go inland you meet with a totally different dialect. Wherever these common words occur, common intercourse and alliances take place. I know this to be a fact, that young men from the tribes will go from one tribe to another, until they reach tribes whose language they scarcely know; and they get wives from these tribes, and go back afterwards. I think it ought to be a rule never to employ any natives who may be enlisted in the force within reach of their own tribes, or those with whom they may be in alliance.

18. Where would you propose getting them from? I have no doubt plenty of blacks could be got from the Murrumbidgee and the adjacent districts. Nor do I see any great danger in getting them from the Clarence; for, although certain Clarence River words are known to the blacks at Wide Bay, I do not thence infer any great connection between the tribes. These words are probably carried from tribe to tribe by young men wandering, as I have just stated. Still, a certain degree of connection and alliance is thus kept up.

19. By Mr. Jones: Have you any knowledge of the conduct of the black troopers in engagements with the wild tribes? I have no personal knowledge, but my impression is, that it is impossible to restrain them when once an affray takes place, and particularly when a single young officer is placed at the head of a large number of these troopers. Any one may see at once that it is quite impossible for him to have his orders executed when a melée takes place. No doubt in many cases the discretion of the officer regulates the period of attack; but after the affray commences, you cannot blame him if he cannot restrain his men. I think the circumstance of having a number of white troopers, even if they were not able in certain cases to follow the wild tribes, would still have the effect of controlling the native troopers.

20. I gather from what you say, that in consequence of the employment of these black troopers, when an affray takes place there is greater sacrifice of human life than there would be if white men were employed, from the impossibility of restraining the black troopers? I think so. I think the presence of white troopers would enable the officer in command to do just what he wanted to do, and no more. We know that it is hardly possible to restrain even civilized soldiers when they are excited. In the siege of a town, for instance, no commanding officer can prevent his men from carrying on slaughter after the necessity for it has ceased.

21. The white troopers would be more able to answer signals? Yes; they would be more under control, for two reasons;—because, in the first place, they understand that there is a possibility of their being called to account afterwards; and also because, being human beings of a superior order, they are less impulsive than the blacks, and more able to keep their passions under control.

22. Do you believe it is at all possible to insure, as a rule, any proper degree of discipline and control amongst a force composed entirely of natives? I think it is exceedingly difficult. I believe it was done by Mr. Walker, in the way I have stated,—that he had an individual knowledge of these men which gave him a control over them that it would be almost impossible for another officer to acquire.

23. Taking the average class of officers, do you believe they would be able to obtain an effective control over their troopers, and get them into a proper state of discipline, if there were none but blacks in the force? I believe men generally would not do it.

24. It would only be in special cases, where men like Mr. Walker happened to be in command, that such a body could be retained in a state of discipline? If Mr. Walker himself had engaged a number of new troopers, unless he had retained a good many of the old ones, I doubt whether he could have done what he did with them; because he would not have had the same individual familiarity with them that he had with those who first joined him.

25. Do you believe that a smaller white force would be as effective in repressing and preventing outrage as a larger force of black troopers? I think that would depend on the management.

26. Supposing them to be equally well managed? A white force do you mean, without any blacks?

27. Either a wholly white force, or a force in which the whites were sufficiently predominating to give the officers effective control. I think a force of that kind would be more effective, for the reason I have stated,—that there would be a superior control over it in the hands of the officers. I believe the efficiency of a force like the present depends a great deal on the humour and caprice of these blacks. The officer in command cannot control them unless they happen happen to be in a good temper. Many cases have been stated to me in which the officer could not do with his men as he liked.

28. Then you believe a white force, or a force composed to a considerable extent of whites, would be much more effective in proportion to its numbers than a black force? I believe it would. Wm. Forster,
Esq., M.P.
18 June, 1858.

29. Do you think the fact of the employment of a considerable number of white men as a frontier force would have a moral effect in restraining the wild tribes from aggression? I think it would, because it would make the force more efficient, and the efficiency of the force is of a great consequence in producing a moral effect.

30. The blacks would be more apprehensive, if white men were employed against them, that they would be followed up more systematically? They would be followed up more systematically in all cases; and I believe the punishment is more effective where it is certain. It is an old maxim, that it is not the severity, but the certainty of punishment that deters.

31. Then you believe, I presume, that if a considerable proportion of whites be infused into the frontier force, a less number of men than are now employed would be able to do the work more efficiently? That is, supposing the present number is a sufficient number, or ought to be sufficient if they were effective. I have heard it said that the present number is not sufficient; but I believe, whatever may be the number, there will always be some murders by the blacks, because enterprising men will always go beyond any protection that can be afforded them.

32. By the Chairman: Do you think any jealousy would be caused among the black troopers by this amalgamation of white men with them? Possibly there might be some jealousy among those formerly employed; but, I presume, that if any difficulty should arise from that cause, it might be remedied by getting rid of all the individuals at present employed, and introducing others, with whom there would be no difficulty of that kind, because from the first they would be placed in subordination to the white men.

33. Would you recommend that the Commandant should have the sole appointment of officers, or that it should rest with the Government, as at present? I consider it a dangerous power to give to any officer in command of a force at a long distance. Take the example of Mr. Walker: Supposing he had had the appointment of his officers, I think the evils which were caused by his conduct would only have been enhanced. It was his virtual irresponsibility that made him so bad an officer. I believe if he had felt himself fully responsible, and had been made so by the Government, he would not have committed the excesses he did. But his want of responsibility made him, in fact, entirely regardless of opinion—of what was said or done respecting him; and I think if he had had greater power, in the way you speak of, it would only have increased the evils complained of. I will not say, that if you once get a good Commandant you might not give him that power; but I would always leave a veto in the hands of the Government.

34. By Mr. Jones: Would you make him like the heads of other departments are now in this respect—giving him the privilege of recommending his officers, but leaving the actual appointment in the hands of the Government? I think he should have the same power over his officers out there as the commanding officer of a body of troops has; but I would not give him the final power.

35. By Mr. Richardson: You are aware that the present Commandant, Captain Morissett, urges as one reason why he cannot get on, his not having the power to choose his own officers? I have heard that that is the case.

36. Do you think it would be desirable to choose men who had been accustomed to a bush life? I would not carry out a rule of that kind rigidly. I have great faith in the appointment of young men—if you select them well, they can be trained to do anything. Men who have been squatters, although very expert bushmen, might be unfit for the office in many ways; and there are others who would make very good officers. I would not follow any rule of that kind. I would give the Commandant great liberty in appointing and suspending his officers, but I would not give him any final power.

37. By Mr. Jones: Do you think troopers, whether white or black, or officers, are fit to undertake the duties devolving on a frontier force without some previous teaching and training? Generally speaking, I should say not; because, if discipline be necessary in an army, I do not see why it should not be necessary also in a force of this kind. As a general rule, some degree of training is necessary for every occupation.

38. Do you not think it quite as necessary to train and discipline these men as ordinary military bodies? I think they could not be well managed without some training. But in cases of emergency we have young recruits enlisted and sent out, and they get trained on the spot. Perhaps the best training is actual service.

39. Even these young troops undergo some preliminary training? I think that so far as preliminary training is necessary in military matters; it would be so in this.

40. Do you think it desirable, with a view to the efficiency of this force, that there should be some kind of central depôt established, to which the officers as well as the men should be sent to acquire the necessary training to make them effective? I think that is a matter of detail; but I see many advantages that might be derived from such a central depôt, though I am afraid it would be found very expensive. If a thing of the kind be determined upon, it should be on the frontier, not in the neighbourhood of Maryborough or Brisbane, or any such places. I think a plan of that kind would be reasonable under certain limits.

41. Do you not think an officer should be stationed at this depôt, whose duty, like that of an adjutant, should be to discipline and teach the raw recruits sent to the depôt? I think so.

42. By Mr. Cribb: Do you happen to know, from circumstances within your own knowledge, whether any of these murders and outrages have been committed by any disbanded troopers or deserters? I have no knowledge of that; I am inclined to doubt whether it is so.

43. By the Chairman: From your knowledge of the Northern Districts, could you point out to the Committee the spot where you think such a depôt as that you have just spoken of could

Wm. Forster, could be best placed? It should be always on the frontier. As the Colony is now situated, Esq., M.P. I think it should be on the Fitz Roy River. I should put a depôt of that kind in the very middle of the districts requiring protection. If any good effect is to be produced by the employment of the force, a portion of that effect would be derived from the circumstance of the depôt being placed there.

18 June, 1858.

44. The head-quarters would naturally be at the depôt? I think the head-quarters ought to be moved, like any other portion of the force, from time to time.

45. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think the blacks who have deserted have taken their fire-arms with them? I have understood that some of them have run away with their arms from Wide Bay; but guns would never be much use to them, particularly after their ammunition was spent; they would not keep them clean.

46. By the Chairman: What immediate remedy would you suggest to stay these outrages in the Dawson District? I can think of nothing, excepting making the force efficient. If that cannot be done immediately, I can propose nothing.

47. And you think the way to make the force efficient would be to amalgamate it with a white force? That is the only suggestion I can make. I made a suggestion to the former Committee, to the effect that a power of reporting, without interfering with the operations of the police, ought to be vested in the Benches of Magistrates. I think the Government would be able to place reliance on their reports.

48. By Mr. Jones: Do you think it desirable that any white force should be immediately despatched from Sydney to the districts where the murders have recently taken place, without waiting for the reorganization of the Native Police—for instance, do you think it might be advisable to send a picked detachment of some dozen or twenty of the Sydney Police, taking care to select men to some extent accustomed to the bush, to co-operate with the Native Police in putting down these disturbances? I think a dozen or twenty would be too many, almost. I think if you send five or six good troopers it would have a good effect.

49. To act in conjunction with the black troopers? Yes.

50. By Mr. Taylor: The presence of these men would give the officers more confidence? Yes. I mean it as an immediate measure.

51. By Mr. Jones: Do you think half-a-dozen well armed and mounted white men would hesitate in facing any number of the wild blacks? In my opinion, four well armed men might go from Wide Bay to Port Essington, and be in no danger from the blacks.

52. By Mr. Cribb: Do you think half-a-dozen white men, with a few blacks as scouts, would be more efficient than a detachment of twelve of the present Native Police? I think every white man should be attached to two blacks, and that the operations of a force of that kind would be greatly assisted by an arrangement of that sort; because a division often takes place when the force is actively employed. No troop of this kind acts in a body. It is not like a phalanx or a legion. I would give the white men a sort of authority over the blacks; and in certain extreme cases, where a blackfellow had been a long time in the force, and his character was well known, it might exercise a good effect if you gave him promotion. We know black men are often placed in the same positions of confidence as white men, where we know them well; and I think in some cases, a very well known individual might be rewarded by giving him the same authority as you would give to one of the white troopers over the blacks. It would have a good effect, as holding out something to these men to look forward to.

Present:—

MR. FORSTER,
MR. HODGSON,
MR. TAYLOR,

MR. RICHARDSON,
MR. DONALDSON,
MR. COWPER.

ARTHUR HODGSON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

William Archer, Esq., called in and examined:—

W. Archer,
Esq.

22 June, 1858.

1. By the Chairman: You are a resident in the Northern Districts? Yes, at Tracemere, on the Fitz Roy River.

2. How far is that from Rockhampton? Five miles.

3. And from Gladstone? About seventy.

4. You have had great experience in forming stations in new districts? Yes, I have had some experience. I have been at the forming of four stations.

5. In what districts? In the districts of Moreton Bay, Burnett, and Port Curtis.

6. Is not your station on the Fitz Roy the farthest out at present? No; there are two others beyond us.

7. You have had many opportunities of becoming acquainted with the habits of the native blacks? Yes.

8. Can you draw any distinction between the blacks to the northward and the blacks in the Burnett District? No, not a decided distinction; but I can draw a very decided distinction between the blacks to the westward of Sydney, on Liverpool Plains for instance, and those on the Fitz Roy. I think the blacks on the Fitz Roy are a much lower caste—a more savage and a more treacherous race of people than those to the westward of Sydney. I may mention that I have also had great experience in the districts to the westward of Sydney, having resided there for ten years, and formed stations there.

9. Are the blacks on the Fitz Roy a stronger race of men? I do not think they are physically stronger; but they are more treacherous, and less to be depended upon. It is more difficult to attach them in any way.

10. Do you believe they are very numerous in the Northern Districts? They are exceedingly numerous in the neighbourhood of our station, and I think I may say generally along the coast to the northward.

11. Had you any serious difficulties with the natives in forming your last station? There was a difficulty, not with ourselves, but with a Mr. Elliot, who was located on the run for some time: he was attacked by the blacks; one of his men was killed, and he was himself speared in several places, and otherwise injured very considerably. That was the only collision that has happened on our run that I am aware of.

12. What is the nature of the country to the northward? A very large portion of it is covered with briclow and vine scrub, particularly the valley of the Mackenzie. The open country consists of undulating ridges, timbered with box and silver-leaved iron-bark.

13. Can the natives easily escape from pursuit, after committing murder or outrage, in consequence of the scrubby nature of the country? They have very great facilities of escaping, owing to the mountainous nature of some parts of the country, and the exceeding density of the scrubs. It is with great difficulty, in some districts, that the blacks can be followed.

14. You are aware that several murders have been committed on the Dawson River by the blacks? Yes.

15. Have you ever been there? No.

16. Can you suggest any reason to the Committee for the numerous murders that have been committed? The only reason I can give is, that the blacks are fond of getting sheep and cattle. When gathered together, as they sometimes are, in exceedingly large numbers, their food frequently becomes scarce, from their being in the same neighbourhood for a great length of time; they see quantities of sheep and cattle roaming about, and they prefer them to the difficulty of getting food for themselves according to their usual methods; they therefore attack and kill the shepherds for the sake of getting the sheep. Then there is retaliation, and thus the thing goes on.

17. Do you consider that the blacks have been emboldened by success? I have not had much opportunity of knowing, for there have been no depredations committed in the immediate neighbourhood of our stations. I have not come in contact with the tribes that have been committing violence.

18. They are to the west and south-west of you? Yes. There is no doubt, as a general rule, that the blacks become emboldened by success. If they commit a murder, and are not severely punished for it, they become emboldened.

19. Have you had any opportunities of noticing how the Native Police Force has been constituted of late? Yes; I have had considerable means of seeing a good deal of the working of them, having had head-quarters on two of our stations.

20. Will you state to the Committee your opinion of the present state of that force? To do that, it is almost necessary to go back for some time. I believe that the force under Mr. Frederick Walker was originally very effective; but, from certain reasons in his own conduct, I believe the force was afterwards considerably reduced in efficiency. Subsequently, when the force was under the management of Mr. Marshall, I have reason to believe that his hands were very much tied by the Government, by the reduction of the force, and in a great many different ways; he could not act independently, and the force became very much reduced both in numbers and efficiency. Since the appointment of Mr. Morrisett, I think he has not yet had time to organize the force. I think, from what I have heard him state myself, that he would, in time, take the proper steps to do so; which, I may mention to the Committee, I think to be, that troopers should be raised from very distant parts of the country—not less than five or six hundred miles away from the districts in which they are to be employed—and that they should be put under some kind of military law, so that it would be possible to keep them under some kind of subordination, as they are very apt to run away from their officers.

21. You mention the efficiency of Mr. Walker's police —? Yes, in the beginning, when he first brought them up there.

22. To what cause do you attribute that efficiency? He had a peculiar tact, I think, with the blacks.

23. Are you aware where these troopers came from in the first instance? I was told they came from the neighbourhood of the Edward River.

24. Are you aware that many of them were personally known to Mr. Walker before he took them to the north? I have reason to believe they were.

25. Would not that previous knowledge materially assist Mr. Walker in the conduct of his force? No doubt of it.

26. From your observation, would you say the troopers were attached to Mr. Walker? I should say so, decidedly, when he first came up there.

27. And his removal from the command would naturally cause desertion on the part of many of his troopers? Yes, I should say it would, as no person was found immediately to take his place who had the same influence or opportunities of getting men previously attached to him.

28. You mention that it would be desirable to enlist troopers at a distance of five or six hundred miles—do you think that practicable? Decidedly. I have not the slightest doubt it is practicable.

29. How would you proceed? By sending a person into the districts —

30. Will you mention the districts in which you would select the men? The district of the Lower Namoi (I would begin there if I went on such a duty,) the Castlereagh, the Macquarie, and down towards the Darling. I think in those districts a sufficient number might be found in a very short time by a person who had an adaptation for that sort of work. I could do it myself, I am sure.

31. Will you state how you would go about it? I know a little of their language, and I would go about talking to them, taking an interest in their manners and customs; and at

W. Archer,
Esq.

Esq.

a convenient time I would propose to them what they were required for, and the country to which I wished them to go. I would take the jackets and trousers with red stripes, to show them, and put them in uniform.

32. Would you take horses with you? Decidedly; I would take horses, and mount them at once.

33. By Mr. Richardson: You say the blacks were attached to Mr. Walker at first? Yes.

34. Did that attachment fall off? Yes; from the capricious way in which he treated them.

35. You think Mr. Walker's force was very efficient at first? Yes.

36. Do you think it possible for any one else to have managed them as well? Under the same circumstances I have no doubt it might be done. In time I have no doubt Mr. Morissett might attach a body of men to himself in the same way.

37. Supposing Mr. Walker had remained in the force and had got his troopers from the neighbouring tribes, do you think he could have managed them as well as he did? No, decidedly not. No person could have managed them as well taken from the neighbouring tribes.

38. Do you approve of having so many native troopers as at present? I do, decidedly.

39. You would disapprove of having a larger infusion of whites? I would decidedly disapprove of any large infusion of white men into the force.

40. You would object to anything like half? Certainly. I think there should, at most, not be more than one white man to three blacks, and that only to strengthen the hands of the officer in command, the troopers at the same time being under some discipline—some military law.

41. You would think white men in the proportion of two to three would be too many? Yes; I would not have so many, because I consider them to be inefficient; when after the blacks they are perfectly useless.

42. Have you any reason to believe that when they encounter blacks who have committed depredations, the Native Police would take life wantonly? I have no reason to suppose so; nor have I reason to suppose they kill women and children, as has been stated.

43. Do you think they are sufficiently under the control of their officers to obey them? I cannot say. I do not know all the officers.

44. Supposing the officers to be efficient men? Then I have no doubt they could be kept under very effective control.

45. By Mr. Taylor: You think it would be an improvement to have a certain number of white men in the force—that it would then be more effective than if it consisted entirely of blacks? Yes; with first rate officers, not more than one white man would be required in each section; but with the choice we have of officers, I think it would be better to have their hands strengthened by having one white trooper to three blacks.

46. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think, if some of Captain M'Leir's men were sent up from Sydney—taking care to select men accustomed to the bush—that they would be useful? I think they would be useful, if three or four of them were stationed at each station to protect it; but in case of outrage being committed they could not follow up the blacks; they could not go through the country; they never would see a blackfellow.

47. From what you have said, of course we infer that you would not use the blacks only as trackers? No; they must be employed as troopers. They would track for themselves of course.

48. By the Chairman: Can you mention the name of any one in particular who would satisfactorily perform the duty of selecting natives as troopers in the distant districts in which you have suggested they should be raised? The best person I can think of, on the spur of the moment, is Mr. John Murray, who is now, I think, second in command of the Native Police.

49. Do you know where he is now? The last time I heard from him, which was a few days ago, he was on the Dawson.

50. By Mr. Cowper: You think he would be able to perform this duty with some hope of the recruits remaining in the force when once enlisted? Yes, if they were engaged at a sufficient distance from the districts where they are to be employed.

51. You are aware that some recruits have been taken from the Clarence River? Yes; and I am aware that twelve of them ran away from one of our stations in one night. I heard it by a letter from my brother.

52. Can you tell why the effort has not been made to get recruits from the Namoi? I think Mr. Morissett's exigencies have been so great that he has not had time to organize the body sufficiently for that purpose. I know it was in contemplation to have sent Mr. Murray to the country I have mentioned for the purpose of raising troopers there; but there have been so many murders that Mr. Morissett has been glad to get police troopers from any part of the country.

53. He has not been very successful in getting them, has he? I believe he has got them in sufficient numbers, but they are always apt to run away.

54. By Mr. Richardson: Supposing he could get troopers, as you suggest, at a distance of five or six hundred miles, would you discharge the present force? No? I would make a selection of the best of them—those that are faithful. I believe a great many of them run away under intimidation; perhaps the majority wish to go, and they coerce the remainder to go with them.

55. By the Chairman: Would not the amalgamation of whites with the blacks materially prevent such desertion? I do not see what effect it would have, except they were under military discipline, and liable to be shot if they deserted. In that case I think they would not desert so frequently.

56. You believe that is necessary? I believe it is necessary to put them under some kind of military discipline. They will not endure a great deal of discipline, but there is a certain amount of it which suits them very well.

57. Do you think there is any esprit de corps amongst the present troopers? Not a great deal.

W. Archer,
Esq.

22 June, 1858.

58. Do you think there was amongst those formerly employed? Yes.
59. That has disappeared? Yes, in a great measure.
60. By Mr. Couper: You think Mr. Walker at first brought his force into a state of discipline by means of his personal influence? I think so; he possessed peculiar tact in dealing with them.
61. The personal influence that the officer in command should exercise over them seems to enter into your idea of discipline? A great deal would depend on that; but he must be supported by certain regulations and laws, so that when his commands are not carried out, he may enforce them.
62. What is the mode of punishing them? There is none now. Under Mr. Walker they used to be flogged, with great efficacy.
63. You mean to say he assumed a power of summary punishment? I have not seen it myself.
64. But you have understood that he flogged them? Yes—a regular scourging—the fellow being tied up and flogged by one of his mates.
65. By the Chairman: And that had a beneficial effect? Decidedly; it is an excellent way of appealing to the feelings of a black trooper.
66. By Mr. Couper: The men did not abscond in consequence? No; I never heard of the men absconding in Mr. Walker's time; he could flog them, and the next moment be friendly with them.
67. Who inflicted the punishment? One of themselves. He had corporals and sergeants among them.
68. Do you know whether any form of trial was observed? Yes; he used to call them all up and tell them—"this fellow has been doing so and so—isn't he a great rascal—hadn't we 'better flog him'"; and then he would have him tied up and flogged. My brother has seen it.
69. I think I understood you to say you objected to a white force, because it could not follow the blacks—could not come into contact with them? Yes. I think white men would have great difficulty in doing so.
70. Are you aware that the Native Police themselves, under the command of their officers, have lately made two or three very extensive journeys, and have totally failed in coming in contact with the blacks? I have not heard of it lately, but I have known frequent instances of it.
71. After the blacks have committed aggressions they retire back for a time? Yes, away into the most inaccessible parts of the country; nothing but a blackfellow has any chance of getting near them.
72. By the Chairman: What immediate remedy would you suggest to put a stop to the outrages on the Dawson? There are only two things I could suggest;—either to send a body of white troopers in the first instance, to overawe the blacks —
73. How many do you think would be sufficient? I cannot say. I do not know how they could work, except by stationing a few at every station in the disturbed parts. I suppose there are from fifteen to twenty stations.
74. Would twenty or twenty-five be beneficial? Yes, I should think so. I cannot propose anything better.
75. You mentioned two;—what other course would you propose? Or allow the people in the country to embody themselves into some kind of militia, for a time, with strong powers.
76. Do you believe that would work? It used to work in the olden times, without any powers.
77. Would you make the militia force compulsory? I think I would, under a disturbed state of the country.
78. You think it would work? I have my doubts about the working of it, but it would be worth trying.
79. Are you aware that the blacks are let in to some stations and kept out at others? I am. I think it a most unjust thing to keep the blacks out from the stations. They must exist somewhere; they cannot be driven from the face of the earth altogether. If they were allowed in they would have less temptation to commit aggressions.
80. By Mr. Couper: Does not the keeping of them out arise from apprehension of attack from their treachery? Yes. Our plan has always been, to allow the first tribe we find, on the station, when we occupy it, to remain on it; and we get information from them as to the movements of the tribes outside.
81. You do not drive them off their own territory? No, we do not.
82. Suppose a family going down into that country and dealing with the blacks on this principle, and some of the servants of the establishment getting into a quarrel with them, from causes we may easily imagine; may not the family then be sacrificed, owing to the misconduct of the servants? I grant you they may. The blacks like to have revenge in some shape, and they are not particular upon whom they get it.
83. They might revenge the offence of a servant upon the family? Yes.
84. By the Chairman: You are aware they have done it? Yes.
85. By Mr. Couper: There is, therefore, considerable risk in allowing the blacks to remain upon a station? If every person would do it, the risk would be less. The blacks must live somewhere; and they can only remain on their own ground. If every person on a station, where the country is taken up, would allow them to locate themselves on it, there would be less danger. We know every person on our station, and give him a name; in fact there is a record kept on the station. If every person did the same, and they were allowed to live on the face of the country, they would not be so much disposed to commit aggression.
86. By Mr. Taylor: In that case, they would not collect in such large numbers? They would, at certain periods of the year; and this I would prohibit. Two or three tribes, for certain religious purposes of their own, meet at particular places; and then is the time at which the great mischief is done. These gatherings I would discountenance where white people

W. Archer,
Esq.

22 June, 1858.

people are; for, where such large numbers of blacks are located for any length of time, their food gets scarce, and then they attack and kill the shepherds in order to get at the sheep.

87. By the Chairman: Do you know the present number of the Native Police Force? No.

88. To what number would you raise the Police Force, with a view of defending the whole of the country out there? I have not studied the matter; but I should think one hundred and twenty men altogether would be sufficient.

89. Ninety black troopers to thirty white men? Yes.

90. Where would you make the head-quarters? I would make it at our station on the Fitz Roy River for the present, on account of the water carriage. It appears rather invidious to name my own station, but I do not do so because I require more than ordinary protection; I can always protect myself. If there is a station formed beyond us in Broad Sound, I would recommend the head-quarters to be there.

91. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think that would be sufficiently central? Yes; I think so. You should have the head-quarters near the centre of the country that requires protection.

92. By Mr. Couper: What is your idea of the use of head-quarters? I think it should be a dépôt where the police would get their clothing, and to which they could come down once a-year to have a yarn with their mates. All the stores should be kept at head-quarters.

93. By the Chairman: An accountant is necessary at head-quarters? Yes, I think so, decidedly.

94. Would you suggest that the accountant should act as adjutant, and drill the recruits at head-quarters? I think a man's time might be very profitably employed in drilling young recruits without having anything else to do.

95. How are provisions obtained for the Native Police? They are generally supplied wherever the troopers are at the time, for they are continually going about, at a price agreed on with the officer.

96. Varying, I suppose, according to the distance from water carriage? Yes.

97. Therefore, the head-quarters being at a distance from water carriage would make their supply more expensive? Decidedly.

98. By Mr. Couper: I think I understood, from your evidence, that you think that if proper steps were taken to secure recruits they could be obtained from the districts to which you have alluded? Yes.

99. Then you do not look on the attempt as a failure, but you think it has not been made in a proper direction? It has not yet been made in a proper direction.

100. By Mr. Taylor: I think you said that Mr. Morissett has not had time to make the trial, but that he intends to do so? Yes. Mr. Murray told me he was to be sent down, but then these murders began, and he could not get away. They are glad now to get recruits anywhere.

101. By Mr. Richardson: How many divisions would you make of the hundred and twenty men you think necessary for the whole force? About twelve men in a body are quite enough to face any number of blacks. A section of twelve men with an officer would be quite sufficient for any purpose to be together at any one time.

102. Three whites and nine blacks, with an officer? Yes.

103. You could then have them stationed in about eight different places? Yes.

104. You think it necessary these blacks should undergo a kind of military training at head-quarters? Yes; more for the sake of discipline than anything else.

105. You say the head-quarters are now on your station? Yes; they were forming there.

106. Have they any barracks there? They had just contracted for a barrack.

107. Would you recommend barracks at the out-stations of the Native Police? No; they would be perfectly useless.

108. Only one central barrack? Yes. The officers should have good tents to live in.

109. Can you inform the Committee what is the probable distance of your head station from the scene of the late murders? About one hundred and fifty miles.

110. In what direction? About south-west, or west south-west.

111. Are the squatters extending in that direction, or further to the northward? Further to the northward and north-west.

112. What is the name of the district? It is the Leichhardt beyond us.

113. What is the name of the river where these stations are forming? There are only small creeks. There are but two stations beyond us yet; but they are extending in that direction.

114. Then you imagine that in course of time your head station will become more central than it is at present? No, I think not, because as people go beyond us I expect our station will become quiet. As stations are formed to the northward it will become less central; it is now central in the disturbed districts.

115. I thought you said there were only two stations formed beyond you, and you mentioned fifteen or twenty in the neighbourhood of these murders? Yes.

116. Therefore it would appear to be an outside point of the district, and one hundred and fifty miles from the scene of the murders? But the whole country is disturbed. There was an attack made upon the Barnard station—our neighbouring station—the other day. I look upon the whole country as disturbed country, although the actual murders have taken place lately at the Dawson, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles from us.

117. By the Chairman: I would ask you, from your knowledge of Brisbane, whether you would recommend that the drilling should take place there? Not at all.

118. Why not? Because it is not so near the disturbed districts.

119. Do you not think there are too many public houses at Brisbane? Yes; that is a very serious objection. There is a public house at Rockhampton; but that could be kept under control.

120. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think the native troopers have been in the habit of getting drunk at stations? Not at stations, but at public houses. I have often seen them drunk about Brisbane and about Gayndah; and I dare say they get drunk at other places.

121. Do you not think they should be prevented from getting spirits? I certainly think it would be a very good rule if you could carry it out. I think it would be very much better if the whole thing was put on a legal footing—making their embodiment, and giving them fire-arms, legal.

W. Archer,
Esq.
22 June, 1853.

122. By Mr. Forster: In speaking of the efficiency of the Native Police under Mr. Walker, are you of opinion that they were more efficient than they have ever been since? When Mr. Walker first came up they were.

123. But their efficiency declined under Mr. Walker himself, before his dismissal? Decidedly.

124. Do you not think a great deal of his influence was owing to his previous individual acquaintance with a great many of his troopers? I think it was.

125. And the circumstance of their not been individually known to the other officers in the same way as they were to Mr. Walker placed those officers under peculiar difficulties? It would place them at a disadvantage.

126. Do you think Mr. Marshall would have brought the force into a state of efficiency if he had remained? I think he would.

127. Are you of opinion that any portion of the present inefficiency of the force is owing to the recent appointments as officers having been of improper persons? I do not know anything about them of my own knowledge.

128. Are you aware whether general intercourse is carried on between the black women of the tribes in the neighbourhood wherever the Native Police are situated? Yes.

129. Are there not always a number of the women of the tribes in the camps of the Native Police? There are generally a few; perhaps two or three attached to every section.

130. Do these women travel about with them? Yes.

131. Have you ever seen them riding on the police horses? Yes, frequently.

132. Are you aware whether that has been with the sanction of the officer in command, or of the Government? It must have been with the sanction of the officer, because I have seen the officer travelling with them. I do not see the slightest objection to it.

133. Are you not aware that these black women act as emissaries of the tribes? No.

134. Is not that a general impression? No, I think not.

135. If these black women live continually in the camps of the Native Police, might they not acquire information which they might distribute afterwards to the people of their own tribes? The women I have known to be in their camps generally came from a distance; they did not belong to the tribes in the immediate neighbourhood.

136. Was there not a general impression that the native troopers made use of their authority, and the terror they create among the blacks, to compel them to supply them with women? I have not heard of it. I think it is a thing they are likely to do; but I do not know that they have done it.

137. May not a good deal of the inefficiency of that force arise from the want of authority in the officers themselves over their men? A good deal, I think.

138. I think you stated that the employment of a certain proportion of white troopers would give the officers a greater feeling of security in dealing with the blacks, and that to that extent you thought it would be beneficial? Yes.

139. There might be many cases, also, where white men would be able to act as troopers with some degree of success? Yes, generally they might; but not in pursuing the blacks into heavy country after a murder, or anything of that kind.

140. Do you think the circumstance of having white troopers acting with them would in any way create a feeling of esprit de corps among the black troopers themselves? I think it would rather have that effect, if there were a good selection of white troopers; a great deal would depend on that.

141. The example of the white men would have a good effect on the black troopers? Yes; but it would altogether depend on the class of white troopers appointed, I think.

142. Supposing the Native Police were altogether suppressed, what do you think would be the result—do you think it would lead to the country not being occupied at all? I do not think it would. As an individual, I think it probable I would leave the country; but I do not think it would be left by others.

143. You think the squatters would take the law into their own hands? Yes; and they would very soon exterminate the blacks. It would be a war of extermination.

144. Then your opinion is, that if the Native Police were withdrawn, it would lead to a more rapid extermination of the blacks? Yes, no doubt of it.

145. Then you consider the existence of the Native Police is merciful to the blacks themselves? Yes.

146. Do not your remarks lead to this conclusion, that it is better the punishment, which must be necessary in certain cases, should be inflicted by authority, rather than by the squatters themselves? Decidedly. I have always thought so.

147. You are very well acquainted with the character of the country in the Northern Districts? Yes; I have seen a large portion of it.

148. Do you not consider that the squatters are placed in greater difficulty in taking up new runs there than they are in the country to the south, owing to the large scrubs? We had a great many scrubs in the Moreton Bay country; but I do not know that we have had more difficulty on that account.

149. Do you not find the scrubby country increase as you go north? No. The valley of the Mackenzie is full of scrub; but as a general rule the scrub does not increase as you go northward on the coast.

150. Is the country close to the coast pastoral country? Yes.

151. There is an absence of scrub there? Yes; that is a peculiarity of the country. On stations now being formed to the northward of us, there is little or no scrub, I am told.

152. That will render it more easily maintained? Yes.

153. Have you ever heard a suggestion that reports on the state of the Native Police should be

- W. Archer, Esq.

- be made to the Government by the Benches of Magistrates in whose neighbourhood they might happen to be? No.
154. What do you think of such a suggestion—I mean merely reports of the state of the force, without interference with their management, made by the Benches, irrespective of the officers of the Native Police, in order that the Government might have a kind of check upon them? I do not see any objection to that.
155. By the Chairman: Would it not give the Government more certain information? Yes; having reports both from the Benches and from the officers of the Police, I think the Government would have a better chance of obtaining correct information.
156. By Mr Forster: Did not the force get into a state of great disorganization about the time of Mr. Walker's dismissal, and the Government, though informed of it, did not interfere? I do not remember the circumstances.
157. Were not complaints made by squatters in the Wide Bay and Burnett Districts which were not attended to? I have heard of complaints, but I do not know whether they were attended to or not.
158. By Mr. Cowper: Do you consider that the magistrates of these districts would have sufficient information to enable them to make reports of the proceedings of the Native Police? No; they would only be able to report as to the state of discipline, or anything of that kind, from what they may observe when the police are encamped on their stations. They would see then what they are doing, and whether there is any esprit de corps among them.
159. As a magistrate, or one of a Bench, would you not consider that you would always have authority to report to the Government any matter connected with the Native Police which might call for notice? Yes; if I were a magistrate I would consider it my duty to do so.

Edmund Molyneux Royds, Esq., J. P., called in and examined:—

- E. M. Royds, Esq., J. P.
22 June, 1858.
1. By the Chairman: You are a magistrate of the territory? Yes.
2. Where do you reside? At Juandah Station, on the Upper Dawson.
3. Did you form that station? No; it had been formed three or four years when I got it.
4. How long have you been resident there? Since 1852.
5. Have you had many opportunities of making yourself acquainted with the native blacks? Yes.
6. Have you suffered much from their attacks? One person was murdered at my station; that is the only case in which they have done me harm.
7. By Mr. Cowper: When was that? I forget whether it was two or three years ago.
8. Nothing of the sort has happened on your station recently? No.
9. Is your station situated among those that have been attacked? It is about thirty-five or forty miles in a direct line from Hornet Bank.
10. By the Chairman: Do you allow the blacks in at your station? Not now, since the murders recently.
11. Had you done so previously? Yes, for years.
12. Why did you discontinue it? It was thought better to keep them out, because they distribute intelligence among the neighbouring tribes.
13. Is that plan generally adopted now? Yes. No blacks were allowed at any of the stations on the Dawson at the time I left.
14. By Mr. Cowper: How did you communicate to them that they were not to come on to the station? I did not communicate it to them, but it was communicated in a very strong way.
15. Was that considered matter of offence by the blacks? I must say I had some doubts about the safety of some of my own out-stations after it had taken place.
16. By Mr. Richardson: Do you not think that if you allowed the blacks to come about the stations, and were to be friendly with them, you would learn a great deal of what was going on amongst them? No.
17. You think it desirable to keep them away? Yes, under present circumstances. The blacks are different there from what they are in other parts of the country. The tribes seem to mix up together more than others do. Our own blacks have travelled right into the middle of the Downs.
18. By the Chairman: What distance may that be? Upwards of two hundred miles.
19. Is that usual with the blacks? It is not usual in other parts of the country. I have reason to believe the interior blacks come in to us. I am certain the tribes that have been committing the recent murders have often been at our stations.
20. What is your opinion of the present system on which the Native Police is constituted? I approve of the Native Police; but there are a great many improvements that might be made.
21. Will you state what those improvements are? To increase the force, for one thing.
22. Would you mix any white troopers with the native troopers? I do not know that I would; I might put a sergeant with each section, to assist the officer.
23. What would you call a section? Each officer has six or eight men at present, when he has his full number.
24. Are you aware that blacks have been recruited within a very short distance of where these murders have been committed? Yes; some were recruited on my own stations.
25. Out of the tribe that has committed the murders? That is not the same tribe; but still, I suppose, they are connected with them to a certain extent.
26. Where are these recruits employed? I believe they were sent to Wide Bay and Moreton Bay.
27. What would you suggest as a sufficient number for the Native Police Force? I can hardly say without putting it down on paper. I do not know how many the other districts require.

28. By Mr. Cowper: You spoke of sections of six—do you think that is a sufficient number to attack a party of blacks with? Yes, I think it is.
29. One officer, a sergeant, and six troopers, you think sufficient for each section? Yes; it is very seldom the blacks stand against them even for a moment.
30. By Mr. Richardson: Where would you get the troopers from? I think the further away you get them the better.
31. How far do you think? Four or five hundred miles, I should say.
32. You think it very undesirable to have them from the neighbouring tribes? I think so, if they can be got elsewhere.
33. You do not think it would be desirable to have a larger infusion of white men? No; they would only be an incumbrance.
34. By the Chairman: Have you considered the subject well, with regard to the amalgamation of a white force with the native troopers? Yes; I think I have.
35. You have, probably, often heard it mentioned and discussed? Yes. I think, generally speaking, it is thought that they would not act well together.
36. For what reason? I think the whites would interfere with the working of the troopers—be in their way, in fact, in following the blacks up.
37. That would be in a scrubby, mountainous country? Yes.
38. But not in open country? In open country white troopers might be of as much service as black.
39. Do you think there would be any jealousy on account of the amalgamation? There might be on the part of the whites, but not on the part of the blacks.
40. Where would you suggest that the head-quarters of the Native Police should be? It depends on what is to be done at head-quarters. If it is to be a depôt for all the stores and everything required by the force, you want it at some place where there would be easy communication with the different stations.
41. What place would you suggest for that purpose? I think the present place, Wide Bay, is a very good place.
42. You are not aware there are no head-quarters there now? I was not aware of that.
43. You would suggest Wide Bay on account of its central position? Yes.
44. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think any number of men sent from Sydney would be of service in putting down outrages? They would be of no use in the world until they had had some training in the bush.
45. If they were smart young men, who had had some experience in the bush, might they not soon pick up a knowledge of the mode of warfare? They might.
46. Do not many men who have not been much in the bush soon become good bushmen, from natural talent? Yes.
47. By the Chairman: What remedy would you suggest to stay the outrages on the Dawson? I really cannot say, except increasing the Native Police Force.
48. Without a mixture of whites? Without any more whites than I have mentioned—not very many more at any rate. The only use of a force of white men going up would be that the blacks hearing of it might be frightened.
49. By Mr. Richardson: Had you many opportunities of seeing the Native Police when Mr. Walker first took charge of them? No.
50. You did not come in contact with them then? I did a little, but not much. When I first knew the force it was going to the dogs, under Mr. Walker.
51. By the Chairman: Are you aware that the blacks have become bold in consequence of their successes? Yes; I have not the slightest doubt of it.
52. Are they superstitious to any extent? Yes; in some ways.
53. Are you aware that they have attacked stations at night? Yes.
54. Is not that unusual? I have heard of other cases besides that of Hornet Bank.
55. You are aware it has hitherto been unusual for the blacks to attack at night? It is unusual; but I have heard of their attacking parties in camp at night; for instance, on the very night the Hornet Bank murders took place, Mr. Walker and another person were attacked.
56. Are all these cases of night attack confined to the same neighbourhood? I have heard it spoken of as having taken place at the Big River.
57. By Mr. Taylor: Even hostile tribes have joined to attack the Europeans, have they not? I cannot say about that.
58. Do you think the Commandant of the force should be stationed at the depôt, or that he should travel about? He should travel, most decidedly. Of course a good many of his duties might keep him at the central depôt for a time.
59. Do you not think it would be a more effective force if he were chiefly at head-quarters? Without he travelled he would hardly be able to know how the different sections of the force were managed. It would be mere matter of hearsay with him.
60. By the Chairman: You know the late Commandant of the Native Police—Mr. Walker? Yes.
61. Where is he now? He has a small Native Force of his own about Euroombah and Hornet Bank.
62. Who employs him? I believe some of the neighbouring squatters keep him to patrol about their stations.
63. Has he many troopers? Eight or ten, I think; I do not know exactly.
64. By Mr. Richardson: Are they in any way efficient, do you know? They do not seem to protect the place much, because two men were killed on the station he is chiefly employed on.
65. Do you think his force has met the expectations of the parties who employ him? Hardly, I think, as they have interfered with the working of the Native Police.
66. By the Chairman: If a party of Native Police came to your station, and the officer in command invited you to assist them, would you join them? If he told me he thought I should be of service, I would.

- E. M. Royds, Esq., J.P.
22 June, 1858.
67. Are they generally well received at the stations? Very well indeed, as far as my experience goes.
68. When co-operation is requested, is it afforded? I do not think it is ever requested; I never heard of it.
69. By Mr. Richardson: Have you gathered, through the medium of the press, that there has been any unwillingness on the part of the settlers to assist the Native Police? I do not remember having noticed it.
70. By the Chairman: But you think that, generally speaking, there is a strong desire to co-operate with them, and render them every assistance? Decidedly. There are men, I have no doubt, who have a great dislike to the force.
71. Which is the nearest Police Court to your station? The Police Court at Taroom, about twenty-five miles.
72. How far is Taroom from Hornet Bank? About thirty-five miles.
73. Would you suggest that there should be any permanent police-station at Taroom? Not exactly at Taroom, but in the neighbourhood. I believe they have barracks on the Dawson.
74. Do you know the name of the place? No; but it lies between Euroombah and Kinnoull, the station of Miller and Turnbull.
75. Are the squatters always ready to give supplies to the Native Police on application? I think so. I never heard of their being refused.
76. Is the nature of the payment for these supplies well understood? Yes; the quarter's accounts are always given in to the officer in command—in fact the chief officer of the district always gives a cheque for them. Sometimes there has been a little delay for a few months, but people do not care about that. There has been no difficulty about it since Mr. Walker left.
77. By Mr. Forster: How long have you been acquainted with the Native Police? Five or six years.
78. Do you consider it an efficient force? They are efficient as far as they go, but there are so few of them.
79. Have you ever known them to be an efficient force? Yes; I have known many cases in which they have done a great deal of service.
80. No doubt they do some good, but are they as efficient as they ought to be, considering the money expended upon them? I cannot say about that.
81. You seem to think that the sole cause of their inefficiency is the want of numbers? Yes.
82. Do you think if they were increased in number they would be fully efficient? I think so, if they were under good officers. Everything depends on the officers.
83. Would you recommend that the Commandant should have the appointment of his own officers exclusively? I do not know about that. He has so few opportunities in the bush of meeting with a sufficient number of fit men. I think it is a great mistake to send men out of Sydney, who have only been accustomed to a town life.
84. Do you think the inefficiency of the force has at all arisen from improper appointments? I have not the slightest doubt about it.
85. You think with good officers the force might be made efficient? I think so, certainly.
86. By the Chairman: Do you know, from your own knowledge, that some of the officers are inefficient? Yes; I have known some officers that are not of the slightest use.
87. Are they still in the force? I am not aware. There have been a good many changes lately.
88. By Mr. Forster: Supposing the Native Police Force were altogether abolished, what do you think would be the consequence? The squatters would have to fight for themselves.
89. You think they would still keep the country? I am certain they would.
90. Then you think the maintenance of a Native Police Force is merciful both to blacks and whites? Yes. I do not think the squatters would be beaten out of the country for want of the Native Police Force.
91. Does that not rather contradict what you were saying about the uselessness of white troopers, because, if the squatters were to maintain the country in the absence of a Native Police Force, it would have to be done by white men? It would be done by white men; but the squatters, having their interests at stake, would do what paid men never would do.
92. Do you not think that if white troopers were employed in the proportion of one to three or one to two, they would do good? That is nearly what I said—an officer and sergeant, or a corporal, to each half dozen native troopers.
93. Do you not think four well armed men might go from one end of the country to the other without fear of the blacks? Yes. No doubt they might travel across the whole continent without the slightest fear; but they would not easily find the blacks if they were looking for them.
94. Is it the habit of the Native Police to take native women about with them? Yes, I believe it is; but not when after blacks.
95. Do you know a camp of Native Police where there are not a lot of these women? Some officers will not allow them to have them.
96. Do you think the presence of these native women is prejudicial or otherwise? It is one way of keeping the troopers quiet.
97. Do you not think it has a bad effect in keeping up intelligence between the tribes and the Native Police? I think it has a bad effect in that way.

WEDNESDAY, 23 JUNE, 1858.

Present:—

MR. HODGSON,
MR. TAYLOR,MR. FORSTER,
MR. BUCKLEY.

ARTHUR HODGSON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

James Blain Reid, Esq., called in and examined:—

J. B. Reid,
Esq.

23 June, 1858.

1. By the Chairman: You are a squatter on the Burnett? I am.
2. How many years have you been there? Nearly ten years.
3. Did you form your station yourself? I did.
4. Were there many squatters out there when you first formed your station? Very few.
5. In the formation of that station did you come in contact with the natives? Several times.
6. Did they harass you at first? On several occasions they have done so.
7. Have you ever lost any men? I never had a man killed; but they have left them for dead on two occasions, though the men recovered.
8. Are the blacks in your district more quiet than they were when you first formed your station? In my immediate neighbourhood they are quiet; that is to say, life is perfectly safe, but they are given to sheep stealing.
9. Do you admit them on your station? Yes.
10. Is that the general practice in your district? I fancy it is the case all over the Burnett district. I do not refer to the Dawson country.
11. Do you approve of that? I do.
12. You are aware that many murders have been committed in the Dawson district? I have heard so.
13. To what cause do you attribute those murders? I suppose they must either be a more determined race of blacks there; or, in many cases, from what I hear, it has been traced to aggression on the part of the whites, such as firing salt at them at night. That was the case in poor Treverthan's murder.
14. What would be the effect of firing salt at them? It would cut the skin and irritate them—make the blacks mad almost.
15. From what you have heard do you imagine that the blacks on the Dawson River are a more treacherous and more powerful race of men than the blacks on the Burnett? From what I have heard I would suppose so. I do not know the men who have been dealing with them though.
16. Do you know anything of the Native Police Force? I did formerly. I used to see them frequently in Commandant Walker's time.
17. What did you think of the force at that time? Before he forgot himself it was better than it ever has been since; that is, the men were kept in proper discipline, and you never heard of them running away, as they do now.
18. What is your opinion of the force as it is now constituted? It is anything but what it might be if proper measures were adopted.
19. What remedy would you suggest for its improvement? That the troopers should be recruited from the Southern Districts; they are a superior race of blacks there; and of course they would not be so liable to abscond. I would also suggest that they ought to have a greater number of horses, say three horses to every two men. At present there is only one horse to each trooper; and when one of the officers returns with his troopers to barracks, after being away some time, their horses are knocked up and have sore backs; news may then come of depredations committed probably a hundred and fifty miles off, and there are only these same horses to go away.
20. Would two horses to each trooper be sufficient? That would be ample.
21. Would you recommend any mixture of white troopers with the natives? I would recommend that there should be one man to each section to look after the saddles, because none of these native troopers know how to saddle a horse, and that is the reason why they get knocked up so soon. It is very difficult to teach a blackfellow that. But I would not recommend a mixture of white troopers with the natives, for this reason, that the principal work they have to do is in the scrubs, and white men cannot come up to the natives there.
22. One white man to each section, to look after the saddles, is all you would recommend? Yes; besides the officer in charge. I believe a section consists of twelve men; but there is generally one deficient.
23. You would not recommend a white sergeant? No.
24. What reasons do you give for not approving the mixture of white troopers with the natives? Because white troopers would be of no use now. Whenever they come up to the blacks it is generally at the edge of a scrub; the wild blacks run into this, and the black troopers can follow them as quickly, but you or I could not keep up to them.
25. Do you believe the native troopers, when they are in hot pursuit in these scrubs, effectually come in contact with the natives? I do. I think the present men are probably not so good as those formerly recruited on the Murray, because on several occasions they have been taken out against their own relatives.
26. Do you know that to be a fact, that recruiting has gone on in the districts where murders have been committed? Yes.
27. Do you not consider that highly objectionable? Decidedly.
28. When you mention the Southern Districts, to what districts do you particularly allude? I think you should get men from the Barwan and Lower Namoi, and down towards Fort Bourke.
29. Do you think there would be much difficulty in recruiting in those districts? No, I do not think there would.

J. B. Reid,
Esq.

23 June, 1853.

30. What means would you take to recruit there, in the first instance? I would send one of the officers, accompanied by one of the present troopers who can speak the kamilaroi language, used down there, and I have no doubt he would be able to procure men.
31. Would you send horses for them? I would either send horses or buy them there.
32. Are you aware of the present number of the Native Police? No.
33. Of what number would you recommend the Native Police Force to consist? I am not well aware how many are needed; but I fancy seven sections would be sufficient.
34. Could you suggest to the Committee the proper site for the head-quarters of this force? I think the head quarters ought to be temporary, because as stations push out they ought to move to the most central place.
35. Would you not suggest that there should be head-quarters where the arms and stores should be kept? Yes.
36. Do you not think this ought to be a permanent station? Do you mean the residence of the Commandant?
37. The residence of the accountant more particularly? All that had better be done at Brisbane, where there are the greatest facilities for communicating with Sydney.
38. You would not recommend any port further to the north? Certainly, at Wide Bay you would be nearer to where the different sections are, but then again you are further removed from those on the Clarence.
39. If a Native Police Force were not considered necessary on the Clarence, would you recommend Wide Bay in preference to Brisbane? Yes; it is nearer to the unsettled parts of the country. As to the Dawson country, I not think there are many miles of difference from the Dawson to Brisbane, and from the Dawson to Wide Bay; but taking the country further north, Wide Bay would be much nearer.
40. By Mr. Forster: You alluded to aggressions by the whites as one of the causes of the great number of murders that have taken place? Yes; I refer to Treverthan's case.
41. That occurred, how long ago? I should think six years ago.
42. You alluded to that case particularly? That is the only instance I know of.
43. Then you do not mention aggression by the whites as the rule? No; but in this case I believe Treverthan fired salt at them during the night.
44. Did you ever hear of firing salt at them in any other case? No.
45. Then I presume you do not mean to infer that the murders committed by the blacks are in general caused by aggression from the whites? No, I should say not.
46. Does not your experience lead to the contrary impression,—that in general aggression is first committed by the blacks? Yes; for instance, Humphreys and Herbert were not forty-eight hours on the run before a man was killed.
47. Do you not think the most conciliatory measures have failed? I do not think conciliatory measures are adopted by the men.
48. But by the squatters—is it not their general desire, and also their interest, to conciliate the blacks? Of course it is.
49. Do you not think they would always endeavor to be on good terms with them? Of course. In that unfortunate affair of Wilkins, the man who was killed fired at two blacks the day before he was killed.
50. May it not have been caused by some aggression of theirs previously—you are not aware to the contrary? No.
51. Are you not of opinion that, whatever means of protection the Government may give, and however efficient a border police there may be, some murders will occur. There always will be occasional murders.
52. Do you not think that, however well a district may be protected, enterprising men will go beyond protection, induced by the profit derived, or supposed to be derived, from such adventure? It has always been the case in my experience.
53. I think you have come to the conclusion that, in the cases we are considering now, the murders are more than might have been expected from the circumstances? Yes; they are more than when the Burnett District was first settled.
54. You stated that you considered the Native Police Force was efficient under Mr. Walker? Yes, up to a certain time.
55. Did you consider it even then as efficient as it might have been? No, I do not think it was, because he kept far too many men together.
56. Do you not think a great part of the time of the men was taken up uselessly in travelling along lines of road, and going to stations where they were not required, even in his time? I never saw anything of that. On one occasion I saw him at Barber's station, where he had about fifty men together.
57. Where the force was not required? He had been to the Bunya, where the blacks were, to disperse them.
58. Do you think that in his time the force was kept as near the frontiers as it ought to be? I should say not, when the head-quarters were at Callandoon.
59. You have never known the force in an efficient state since? The men have never been in the same order as when Mr. Walker had charge of them.
60. Do you think a good deal of the discipline he maintained may not have been owing to the individual knowledge which Mr. Walker had of these blacks, he having lived with them before they joined the force? I think that had a great deal to do with it. He was very severe, more so than any other person has been since.
61. Are you at all acquainted with the force said to have been organized by Mr. Walker since his removal? Merely by rumour. I have not seen him for years.
62. Can you give the Committee any idea whether that force is useful or efficient? No, I cannot.
63. Has it ever come to your knowledge that constant intercourse is kept up between the native troopers and the women of the wild tribes in the neighbourhood where they are stationed? I have heard so; but I cannot speak from experience.

J. B. Reid,
Esq.

23 June, 1858.

64. You have been in the camps of the Native Police? Yes.
65. Have you not always seen these native women there? I have frequently; but whether they were living with the troopers I cannot say.
66. Were these women the wives of the troopers—had they come from the same part of the country, do you suppose? I think, when Mr. Walker was in command, there were two girls from the south country with the Native Police.
67. Did you ever see a camp of the Native Police without a quantity of women about it? Yes.
68. A camp where they had been stationed some time; I do not mean where they had camped for the night only? The only station I was ever at is Wallah, Mr. Thompson's station; I have been there several times, and I always saw women.
69. You are aware, at all events, that there is an impression that they are always supplied with women by the tribes, wherever they go? So it is said.
70. Supposing that to be the case, do you think it would tend to injure the efficiency of the force, and render it less useful? I think it does. For instance, they were attacked at Rannes; and from what we hear, it was because the Native Police had taken a number of girls away. That is the story; and it is very probable, I think.
71. You are not favorable, I think you said, to the employment of white troopers? No; only one to each section.
72. One white trooper to two blacks, or one to three, you would not approve of? No, that would be too many.
73. In what sense too many? I think the less military the more useful the force will be. I would make them throw away their heavy swords, for instance; they do not know how to use them. The carbine is all they want.
74. Are you aware of any instances in which the Native Police have been employed as constables, to take up white men? I once saw Mr. Walker at Gayndah order his men to put a drunken man in the lock-up, who was very violent.
75. Do you approve of the native troopers being employed in any case of the kind? No. I do not see how they can do it; they cannot take the oath; but if the officer was with them all the time, I would see no objection.
76. An officer being with them, of course they could be legally employed, because any peace officer may call on any of Her Majesty's subjects to assist him, and I presume they might act in that case, whether they were constables or not? Yes.
77. By Mr. Taylor: Do you not think the presence of a few white men in the force would increase the authority of the Commandant? No, I do not see how it would.
78. Do you think it safe for any one white man to be surrounded by these men alone, without any protection from his own race? Quite safe. I do not think there is any danger from them.
79. It would be merely as a kind of servant that you would recommend a white man with each section? Yes. Mr. Marshall when he was First Lieutenant, used to saddle all his troopers horses himself; he would take his coat off and set to work to put all the saddles on; and consequently his horses were in better condition than the rest. You have no idea how careless these black troopers are.
80. By the Chairman: Could you suggest any immediate remedy to stay the murders on the Dawson? No, I do not know of any. There are plenty of troopers up there at present.
81. Sufficient to protect life and property? I believe so. I have heard of two sections being in that part of the country. Some of the natives of the Dawson have come in as far as Gayndah; I have seen several of them there; they are afraid to go out, I believe, on account of the Native Police. I dare say they have been pursued by the police, and have come in to the settled parts for protection. I saw a Dawson black at my own station a few days before I came away, who was wounded both in the face and in the thigh.
82. Are you aware that the natives on the Dawson have become very bold? So I hear.
83. To what do you attribute this boldness? I fancy they are very numerous; and probably the people there are very much afraid of them.
84. The squatters you mean? Yes. That station where so many people were murdered is a very unprotected place to have so many females at. It was rash to have them there.
85. Are you aware that the natives on the Dawson have been murdering people at night? I have heard so.
86. Is not that unusual? Very.
87. Have you ever heard a similar case? I have never known it in the south country. The blacks on the Burnett go about at night; in fact, it is at night they steal the sheep, principally.
88. Are they very superstitious in the northern districts? They are.
89. Do you not think their continued success in their attacks—these murders being so frequently committed, and no punishment following—has tended to do away with that superstition? I know of one instance in which the fact of a blackfellow's being shot has made him bolder. He was shot through the nose, another ball passed through his throat, and a third along the front of his body, without killing him; and he believes now that no ball can kill him.
90. Are the horses used by the native troopers generally useful animals? Yes, I think they are very fair. In summer one horse to each man would do the work very well; but in winter there is very little feed, and one horse will not then stand riding every day.
91. Do the native troopers generally take care of their horses? No; I do not think they do.
92. Nor of their saddles? Nor of their saddles, nor of their arms.
93. Under these circumstances do you not think it would be better to have a white sergeant attached to each section? Probably it would, to see after the arms. If he were a saddler as well it would be of great use; or, probably, there should be a sergeant and a saddler also. There is tremendous wear and tear of saddles and accoutrements. For instance, if they stop for a short time they will take the bridles off their horses, leave the carbine in the saddle, and probably the brute rolls, and breaks one or both.

- J. B. Reid, Esq.
23 June, 1858.
94. Would you propose that there should be barracks at any other point than the head-quarters? Yes; I think it would be prudent to have barracks more in the interior—probably two besides the head-quarters.
 95. You think that would be sufficient? Yes; one in the southern and the other in the northern part of the district.
 96. Have you ever been at Rockhampton? Never.
 97. You know where it is? Yes.
 98. Do you think that would be a proper site for the head-quarters of the Native Police? Yes. It is not a great way from the Dawson country; in fact, in a straight line it is nearer than Brisbane.
 99. You are well acquainted with Brisbane? I am.
 100. Do you not think there are too many public-houses in Brisbane to make the head-quarters of the Native Police there? Yes; there are a great many public-houses there.
 101. Do you not think that a serious objection when you come to think over it? I have never seen any of the troopers intoxicated, but I have never seen them at a place where they could get drink, except at Gayndah, and they had no money there.
 102. Do you think it possible to prevent the native troopers from getting drunk when it is within their reach? Nearly all of them will take it, if they can get it; but I have never heard that any of them were guilty of drunkenness.
 103. Would you suggest that the native troopers should be under any strict military discipline? Decidedly.
 104. Would you appoint any punishment in case of desertion? I think if it were possible to have them flogged and returned to their duty, it would be the best punishment for them.
 105. Are you aware that they ever were flogged? I have heard that Mr. Walker used to make a black sergeant flog any black trooper who misbehaved; but I have never heard of such a thing since his time.
 106. Would you invest the Commandant with the power of appointing all his subordinate officers? It would certainly be a great power to invest in one individual.
 107. Are you aware whether the officers, generally speaking, are efficient? Some of them are said not to be efficient.

William Butler Tooth, Esq., M. P., examined:—

- W. B. Tooth, Esq., M. P.
23 June, 1858.
1. By the Chairman: You are a Member of the Legislative Assembly, for the Pastoral Districts of Moreton, Wide Bay, Burnett, Maranoa, Port Curtis, and Leichhardt? Yes.
 2. I believe you are generally connected with squatting pursuits in those districts? Yes.
 3. Have you formed any stations yourself? Yes, in the Wide Bay District.
 4. Were you the original discoverer of those stations? I was the original occupant. Other people had seen them before, but I took them up.
 5. You have had opportunities of knowing something of the natives in that part of the country? Yes; in consequence of taking up these stations particularly.
 6. Have you suffered in property or in the lives of your shepherds from the natives? I have never had a man killed.
 7. Have you had sheep taken away? I never had sheep taken away, but I have had plenty of cattle killed. The stations I formed were for cattle. Stockmen are not so liable to be killed as shepherds.
 8. Are the natives allowed in upon your stations? We kept them out at first, but they are now allowed in. I approve of the principle when all can pull together; but for one squatter to allow them in and others to keep them out is wrong.
 9. Are they generally allowed in, in your district? Yes, now they are. As soon as Mr. Walker came down with a company of police, we agreed together to let them in, but before that we dared not do it.
 10. Then the presence of a section of Mr. Walker's Native Police tended to protect your property? Decidedly.
 11. As well as the lives of the native blacks? Yes.
 12. Then you consider that the employment of the Native Police is merciful, both to the squatters and the natives? An effective force would be so. I will point to the case of the very first company or section of native troopers that Mr. Walker brought from the southward to Callandoon. That was the first scene of his operations. I bought a large cattle station there, from Mr. Larnach, just before the troopers came up. The blacks before that had been so very troublesome that he could not get a purchaser for it, and he had to sell it at a sacrifice, in fact. You could scarcely get a man to go into that district for double the wages paid anywhere else, and no woman would go near it at all. The hut-keepers would not venture to go down to the water-hole without being armed with gun or pistol. But in less than three months after the Native Police came up, that district was so quiet that a man could walk about anywhere. Mr. Walker met the blacks killing cattle close to my camp, and they had a stand up fight for it. The blacks were so completely put down on that occasion, and terrified at the power of the police, that they never committed any more depredations near there. The place was quiet at once, and property became fifty per cent. more valuable.
 13. Then the Native Police Force under Mr. Walker was efficient? That section was more efficient than they have ever been since; because, when he got more to do he had to trust to others. To increase the force, he had to go away a second time to the Murrumbidgee and Lachlan, and those places. Mr. Walker had several advantages: he was a superintendent in these Southern Districts, and knew a great deal of the country, and the blacks there individually, and that enabled him to recruit successfully. I do not think a stranger going there would find it such an easy matter; and I could tell him, whoever he might be, that the squatters squatters would not at all like his presence to take their black servants; because it is not wild men we want for troopers, but men broken in by the squatters; and they do not like these men to leave their service to join the police. I remember there was a great deal of dissatisfaction about it.

W. B. Tooth,
Esq., M.P.

23 June, 1868.

14. In what district? When they tried to get men in the neighbourhood of Callandoon to send out to Wide Bay. I believe a letter was written to the Colonial Secretary on the subject, and a correspondence took place between Mr. Walker and the Government.

15. Are you at all aware of the state of the Native Police Force at present? It is in a wretched state.

16. How do you account for that? In this way: that the Native Police Force having been disbanded, it has required more time than there has been to re-organize it as it ought to be done. For instance, there has not been time for the Commandant to go away to get troopers; he has had to get them in the district where they do duty. Even now, I understand, he is only going as far as Callandoon and the Clarence. I think he will have a great deal of difficulty in doing it. I think if anything could be done temporarily to give better protection for a short time, an attempt ought to be made to get troopers from the Lower Darling.

17. What temporary measure would you suggest? I should say protection might be afforded by supplementing the force with about one-third European troopers. I do not see any other way of doing it.

18. You think that should take place immediately? Yes; and then if they should seem to work well together the arrangement could be continued, and if not, other troopers could be got in the meantime. They will always be wanted as long as we want a border police force at all; and it would be far better to get them by degrees—ten or twenty at a time, than fifty at once—and much easier to do it.

19. If it were possible to send twenty white troopers at once from Sydney to the scene of these murders, do you think it would be desirable? I do, decidedly. I think it ought to be tried. It is worth trying. There is no other way that I see.

20. If this could be done, the Commandant of the Native Police would have an opportunity of seeing how the amalgamation of white and black troopers would work? Yes. I think I would give him power to distribute the white troopers as he pleased. I would not order him to put any particular number of whites with blacks. There may be one or two companies of native troopers who are quite efficient by themselves; for instance, the section under Mr. Murray's command. The Commandant might think it inadvisable to disturb that section. I would therefore give him power to mix the Europeans with the natives as he might think best.

21. Mr. Murray bears the name of a very efficient officer? Yes, he does.

22. Do you think if Murray were sent to the Namoi and the adjoining districts, he would be able to recruit native troopers there? I do not think he could on the Namoi; the time has gone by. When I was sending some cattle from there, we could scarcely get a black boy to go with the stockmen. I believe the best place is near the junction of the Darling with the Murray.

23. Do you think that the best place on account of the number of natives there? Not only on account of their numbers, but because they are a superior class of blacks, and are more to be depended upon, than in the northern districts—they are more skilful in warfare, and are a finer race of men.

24. Suppose it were possible to send up twenty troopers from Sydney, would you send horses with them? No; I would rather buy horses that have been bred in the districts, because they do better, and are acclimatised.

25. Are horses easily obtainable in the district? I should say so. I noticed that at a large sale of horses the other day at Brisbane, from Mr. Leslie's stud, the average was only £9 a head.

26. Where would you suggest that these white troopers should be landed in the first instance? That would depend on circumstances, and where the Commandant was. If the Commandant were at Wide Bay, I would land them there, but if at Brisbane, then I would send them there. I should send them wherever the Commandant might be.

27. Where would you suggest that the head-quarters of the Native Police should be? I think Maryborough would be most central. There is not much need of the Native Police on the Clarence, I should think; and the Commandant has very little to look after there. If he were at Brisbane his work would be nearly all to the north.

28. You are in favor of having head-quarters? Not of having any great quantity of police at head-quarters, but of head-quarters for the accounts and stores.

29. And for drilling? That is quite another thing. But after they were drilled and formed into sections, I do not see any necessity for them to go to head-quarters any more.

30. Would you suggest barracks at head-quarters? I would not have barrack accommodation for more than twenty men.

31. Are there barracks now erected at Maryborough? I do not know; I believe the station is at Tyro Lagoon, about sixteen miles up the river.

32. You are not aware whether there are any buildings erected, or not? No; but the settlers, if they regarded their own interest, would build barracks for the troopers on their stations. I did it; I built a large place for the troopers, where they could come and stop a day or two, and then go on. They must be moving about to be effective. They will not sleep in a hut, if you build the barracks, they will put their saddles inside, and sleep out.

33. You would surely suggest buildings at head-quarters? Yes, at head-quarters; but not for more than fifteen or twenty men. I do not see the necessity of going to any great expense about it either.

34. By Mr. Forster: Would not a large tent or tarpaulin, or several such things, be found useful in place of barracks? They would soon wear out. If heavy, the objection would be to the load for the horses to carry; and if light, the friction would soon wear them out.

35.

- W. B. Tooth, Esq., M.P.
23 June, 1858.
35. Do you think the expense would be greater, on the whole, than that of putting up huts? I think it would; if they were rolled up damp, and allowed to remain so for a short time, they would be spoiled. These men are so careless, that anything that can spoil will spoil in their hands.
36. The officer in command is supposed to look after their accoutrements? No doubt he ought to do it, and perhaps does do it; but fancy having to look after the saddling up of all his troopers. There is inevitably great wear and tear.
37. Do you not think the force might be less expensively managed than it is at present? I can hardly say, unless you can put some particular point of expense to me.
38. I will put the case of their carrying heavy swords, which they never use? They are not required at all, and are a very great incumbrance.
39. Is it not the great object in fitting out a native policeman to put a light weight on his horse? Yes.
40. These swords add a great deal to the weight? A great deal.
41. Are there not other things they carry which are unnecessary—they have different uniforms, for instance? They may have them, but I never saw them—there is no necessity for them.
42. Have you not seen a very heavy kind of military saddle supplied to them, instead of which a much lighter saddle would be better? Yes. A common stockman's saddle would be much better than any other saddle, and more easily kept in order.
43. And last better? Yes.
44. By the Chairman: Could they fix holsters on saddles of that description? Yes; stockmen go about with pistols and holsters on their saddles. There is no doubt that European troopers are not able to follow the blacks in these scrubs. Mr. Walker's troopers (I do not know what they do now) used to strip and go in after them naked, because the scrubs are of such a kind that their clothes become entangled. You would not get an European to do the same; in fact he would not be able to do it.
45. By Mr. Forster: Have you noticed the kind of intercourse that exists between any of the recently appointed officers and their men? No, I have not.
46. You are not acquainted with any of the new officers, perhaps? I am not, except the Commandant; I have known Mr. Murray for many years.
47. Do you think the officers generally have sufficient authority over the men? They had at one time.
48. That was in Mr. Walker's time? Yes.
49. Do you think they have not since? I think Mr. Murray and Mr. Bligh have, and so had Mr. Marshall, and several other old officers.
50. Did you ever know the force to be in an efficient state since the time you speak of under Mr. Walker? Never since it was disbanded.
51. Was it not inefficient under him latterly? It was not so efficient as it was at first. The section at Callandoon was the perfection of a protective force when it first came up; but it gradually got worse and worse under Mr. Walker himself.
52. Since that time the force has never recovered? It has not began to recover. One-half the troopers are next to no good at all, except to ride about and show themselves.
53. Do you think the troopers, from the way they are selected, are capable of being made useful at all? They can never be efficient while they are selected from the districts where they are employed.
54. Do you not think the squatters would be better without such troopers? Anything is better than nothing.
55. Do you not think a force of white men would be better than troopers selected in that way? Yes, but for the scrubs.
56. Supposing the white troopers cannot pursue the blacks at all in the scrubs, do you not think that the injury that is done by selecting black troopers from the immediate neighbourhood is greater than any good derived from it? I do not think any injury would be done if the men would not abscond.
57. But they do abscond? I have heard they do.
58. Do you not think they would carry on intercourse with their own tribes? That would depend a good deal on circumstances. If you can get men that the tribes have a down upon they will be true, because they know that if they leave you the tribes will kill them; but you do not know when you have actually got these men.
59. All depends on the selection of individuals? Yes.
60. And that again depends on having a good Commandant, in fact? Yes.
61. By Mr. Taylor: Do you not think the body would be better organized if there were one main head-quarters stationary, and the whole force divided into different sections with settled stations? The disturbed district is about three hundred miles long and very wide; and I think there would be no necessity for any of the sections ever to come to head-quarters.
62. Still, things might occur at some of these out stations which would require correspondence with the Commandant? The Commandant ought, of course, to have some place where he can be corresponded with, but not a barracks for the main body of the force to come to.
63. Would he not be more useful if he were almost stationary at head-quarters—going out at times, of course, but remaining chiefly at head-quarters? I do not think so; because I think he ought to have power to employ his subordinate officers, and that he ought to be moving about to judge for himself whether the officers were doing their duty. I would make him the responsible man, and expect him to find officers to do the duty. Until that is done you will never get efficient officers. I would give him full power to appoint his own officers, just the same as I would give to the head superintendent of a number of stations power to appoint his own overseers at the different stations, and I would hold him responsible for the efficiency of the corps, in the same way as I would hold the superintendent for the good management of the stations.
64. You would give him the sole power, without referring to the Government at all, to appoint whatever officers he pleases? I would.

Henry

Henry Midland Pearse, Esq., called in and examined:—

H. M. Pearse,
Esq.

23 June, 1858.

1. By the Chairman: What is your occupation? I have been managing for Mr. Holt in the Dawson District lately, at Bungaban.
2. How far is that from Gayndah? One hundred and ten miles.
3. In what direction? About west of Gayndah.
4. How far from Hornet Bank? I believe it is about forty-five miles, but I never was there.
5. Were you there when the station at Bungaban was first formed? No.
6. How long have you been there? Since the middle of January, 1857.
7. I presume you have had many opportunities of knowing the manners and customs of the blacks in that part of the country? Only since the time I mention.
8. Do you allow them in upon your station? Yes; they were there till last shearing time.
9. Did they go away then? Yes.
10. Under what circumstances? They went of their own accord.
11. You did not send them away? No.
12. Have you ever sent them away? No, I never did.
13. Have they not returned since? Not up to the time I left the station.
14. To what cause do you attribute their absence? I suppose they were frightened, having heard the news that the police were about after them.
15. Have they ever done any injury on the station under your charge? None whatever. We lost a few wedders at head station, supposed to have been taken by strange blacks.
16. Have they speared no cattle? No; they have never done us any injury whatever.
17. Have they committed depredations and murders in the neighbourhood? Yes, on the next station.
18. Which is the nearest station to you? Mr. Yaldwin's, at Taroom.
19. How long ago? The latter end of 1857.
20. Did they commit murders there? Yes; two men were reported to be killed on Mr. Yaldwin's station.
21. Were they shepherds? I believe they were; it was reported so.
22. How far distant from your station where the murders committed? About twenty-five miles, I believe; I have never been at the place.
23. As long as you have been in the district, the blacks have never injured the property you had in charge? Never.
24. Could you give the Committee your ideas of the reasons for their behaving so well on your station? I imagine we are an inside station, and the stations where the murders have been committed are on the frontier, and surrounded by scrubby and broken country.
25. If the blacks had come in to your station again after they had left, would you have admitted them? Yes; I promised them I would take care of them if they did come in.
26. Have you had opportunities of observing the Native Police Force? I have seen it passing and re-passing at different times.
27. What is your opinion of that force? I have said from the beginning that if there never had been any Native Police Force these murders would not have been committed to such an extent, because the people would have protected themselves.
28. By that remark, I suppose you wish to impress the Committee with the idea that the squatters were hanging to the Native Police for protection? In some measure I should imagine so.
29. By Mr. Forster: You say they could have protected themselves without the Native Police? I think they could, because I have been in other parts of the country where we had no Native Police, and we never required them.
30. By the Chairman: What I understand from you is that the squatters have not taken any trouble to protect themselves, owing to the presence of the Native Police? I do not know what they have done on the Dawson. I know very few parties out there. I imagine they looked entirely to the Native Police for protection.
31. You imagine that if there had been no Police Force the squatters would have combined and defended themselves with greater advantage? Yes; I think so.
32. In what other parts of the Colony have you been previously? On the Lower Macquarie, and all those western waters down the Barwan and Darling.
33. In these districts you were enabled sufficiently to protect yourselves? Yes. In fact I have never had any trouble with the blacks wherever I have been.
34. Are you aware whether the present Native Police Force is efficient or not? Some of them may be; some are very good men.
35. Could you suggest to the Committee any immediate remedy to stop the outrages? It is really a very difficult thing to suggest. It is difficult even for those people who live in the immediate neighbourhood to do so.
36. Would you approve of white troopers being sent from Sydney? I cannot see what use they would be, unless they were led by men who knew the country.
37. Suppose they were led by the officers of the Native Police and accompanied by the native troopers? If the officers were good bushmen, and were accompanied by blacks who could track, then they might be of some service.
38. Would they not materially strengthen the force? That would depend upon the management of them upon the ground.
39. What is the nature of the country in the Dawson River District? It is scrubby. All the hills, whether high or low, are covered with dense briclow scrub, which it is difficult to get through even on foot.
40. Do the blacks get into these scrubs after they have committed murders? I believe so.
41. Have you ever been out after the blacks? Never.
42. You have never had any occasion? No.
43. Is the country where you have been living open? Tolerably open, with the exception of the tops of the hills.

- H. M. Pearse, Esq.
23 June, 1858.
44. On what water is the station? On a tributary of the Dawson River.
45. Are the Native Police generally well received at the different squatting stations when they come up? I imagine so. They have been always well received at our place.
46. Have you heard anything to the contrary? I cannot say I have.
47. Do you not imagine there is a general feeling of co-operation between the squatters and the native troopers? In some instances there may be. Others speak against them sometimes. Perhaps it is merely because they cannot always get them just when they want them. No doubt the Native Police would be very efficient if they were led by officers that were good bushmen.
48. Is not that the case? I cannot say they are not good bushmen, all of them; but I should think men sent out of the towns cannot be much good in the country.
49. Is that the case with many of the officers? I understand so, in more than one instance.
50. That you think is bad? Decidedly.
51. Are the Native Police troopers generally well horsed? Yes.
52. Do they seem to take care of their horses? I should say they do; but they all require looking after.
53. Have you noticed their saddles? I have.
54. Do you approve of them? I have not made any observation with regard to them. It seems to me almost necessary for them to have the saddles they use, on account of the heavy weight they carry, carbines and cloaks, and such things.
55. It is necessary they should be large? Of course a large saddle is decidedly preferable to a small one in any case for a man to ride on.
56. Could you suggest to the Committee where the head-quarters of the Native Police Force might be? It is difficult to do so. At Maryborough the blacks are sometimes more troublesome than they are any where else.
57. You could not suggest where the head-quarters might be? No.
58. By Mr. Taylor: Do you not think the presence of a certain number of white troopers in the district would tend to frighten the blacks, and to prevent these outrages, even though they could not follow them into the scrubs? I do not think so. I think one good man on a station would be worth all that could be sent from Sydney—one good bushman I mean.
59. By Mr. Buckley: If you could get desirable men, bushmen, in Sydney to send up to the force, would they not be of use? I do not think much of the Sydney men at all to send into the bush.
60. If good bushmen could be picked up in Sydney and sent up there, would they not be of good service? If they are good bushmen, no matter where they come from, that seems to me to be the principal thing. They must be men who would not be running about on the tracks of roads. Any one can do that.
61. Such an addition to the force you think would be of some service? I think so.
62. By the Chairman: Have you felt perfectly secure in your station ever since you have been there? Quite so.
63. Do you imagine that the natives might leave your station, go to those outlying stations, commit murder, and return in again to you? I am very doubtful about that. It is generally supposed that they know of all these things before they are committed—I merely speak from supposition—but still we never can get it out of them. I mean that before a murder is committed, the blacks for hundreds of miles round know that such a thing is going to take place, as far as I can find out from having spoken to the blacks after the event. But such is the combination that you cannot get them to speak out. I have heard of it when they have been talking of the event afterwards.
64. Do you happen to know whether the blacks are admitted on the squatting stations outlying beyond you? No, I believe not. The blacks were admitted at Mr. Yaldwin's place some time after they had left our place; but they were not the same blacks that had left our place; as far as I heard they went in a different direction.
65. Is it not generally known that Mr. Yaldwin has treated the blacks with great kindness? Report has said so.
66. And yet he has lost two men? And yet he has lost two men.
67. Therefore, admitting the blacks on the stations gives no security to the proprietor as to life and property? That depends on the way you treat them in great measure.
68. How would you treat them? I keep them at a proper distance, and if I employ them I give them what I promise, and send them to their camps.
69. Have you employed them? Yes, in many ways,—sheep washing, drafting sheep, cutting bark, and so on. I had them all last winter. I paid them for what they did, and I found them very useful, and always willing to stop with me. They would come back, only that they are frightened now.
70. Have you found the blacks to be a superior race to those you have come in contact with on the Darling? No, I think they are inferior.
71. Are they larger? I do not see any difference with regard to size; if anything, I should say they are smaller.
72. You do not approve of the present Native Police Force? I have said so, and I have heard other people join with me; because, in other parts of the Colony that I have been in, if the blacks committed any depredations the whites always protected themselves.
73. Do you not imagine that the blacks in the districts where these murders have been committed have been greatly assisted by the scrubby and mountainous nature of the country? Yes. And very probably some of the deserters or disbanded Native Police have been the principal leaders.
74. Is not the country on the Dawson more scrubby and mountainous than any other district in the Colony that you have been in? Yes, where the frontier stations are, I think it is. I have never seen it myself; I only speak from hearsay. It is described to me as a broken country extending for hundreds of miles.

75. Do you form your idea of it from your own station? Our country is not much broken. H. M. Pearce, Esq.
We are on the south side of the Dawson; I am speaking of the north-west side.
76. Do you in any way attribute the murders which have been committed by the blacks to the harsh manner in which they have been treated by the squatters? I have often heard of instances of that kind where the blacks have been badly treated or badly used, and that they have retaliated in some way or other. It may be so; I do not say it is in this case. 23 June, 1858.
77. You are speaking generally? Yes.
78. Can you give the Committee any further suggestions? I think the native troopers should be brought up from other parts of the country. It is no use to have men picked up in the neighbourhood, or within a hundred or a hundred and fifty miles, because they are apt to bolt, particularly if there is any mismanagement on the part of the officer. If they were treated as well as blacks should be about a station, I think they would stick to their officers just the same as they would stick to us at a station.
79. Do you know the Commandant of the Native Police, Mr. Morissett? Yes.
80. Would you vest him with the appointment of his subordinate officers? Most assuredly I would.
81. Do you think he is fully capable of carrying out the duties of Commandant? I think it would be difficult to get a better man.
82. Is he a good bushman? I should imagine he is, because he is here and there in every direction across the country.
83. He is an active man? Very much so.
84. Do you think if sufficient time were given him he would be able to reorganize the force? It is very possible he may.
85. From what you have seen of him, do you think it is likely he will do so? I should say if any one can he ought to be able to do it.
86. Have you frequently had opportunities of seeing him? Very frequently. I was not acquainted with him much before he became Commandant; but I have met him since frequently.
87. Have you ever met Mr. Murray? Yes.
88. Is he an efficient officer? Very much so, I think. I speak from general report. Mr. Bligh is also a good officer, I know, and also another officer, Mr. Powell, whom I have seen frequently.
89. Are you aware of the number of officers attached to the Native Police Force? No, I cannot say I am.

THURSDAY, 15 JULY, 1858.

Present:—

MR. BUCKLEY,
MR. CRIBB,
MR. FORSTER,

MR. HODGSON,
MR. JONES,
MR. RICHARDSON,

MR. TAYLOR.

ARTHUR HODGSON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Alfred Brown, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a resident in the Wide Bay District? Yes.
2. In what part? Gingin is the name of my station.
3. What is the distance from Maryborough? About seventy miles.
4. And from Port Curtis? About a hundred miles.
5. Have you been long there? Four or five years.
6. Did you form the station yourself? No; it was formed by Mr. Forster.
7. Have you had many opportunities of noticing the conduct of the Native Police? I think I have had every opportunity.
8. Do you consider them an efficient corps? I do not.
9. Did you ever consider them efficient? They were at one time—at the commencement.
10. Who was Commandant then? Mr. Frederick Walker.
11. Their efficiency has ceased since Mr. Walker was superseded? Yes.
12. Will you be good enough to state some of your reasons for drawing that conclusion? I think the principal reason of their inefficiency is that they have inefficient officers. Some of the officers appointed are not at all adapted to the command of the force.
13. Are you speaking generally? It is so in many cases, or I might say in most cases.
14. Do you include the present Commandant? I do not think he is an efficient officer; I do not think he understands his business. I have seen personally very little of him; but, if I may judge from the officers, and the way in which the force is conducted, I think he is to blame in some points.
15. Will you be good enough to state to the Committee any instances of inefficiency in the officers that have come under your notice, not mentioning names? I consider that one essential object of the employment of the force is that they should be continuously patrolling the country, which they do not do. I consider they adhere too much to the roads, instead of following the blacks and patrolling through the bush. I consider also, that the officers do not keep up that degree of discipline amongst the troopers that certainly was maintained by Mr. Walker, and to which I attribute his efficiency. I have frequently seen officers entirely led by their troopers; and I consider that the troopers ought not to know in which direction they are going out, for this reason, that at the stations they they make acquaintance with the blacks, principally through the women, and I believe they give them information which they ought not to possess, as to where the next movement of the force will be. That is one reason of their inefficiency, and I think the principal one.

16. Could you make any suggestions to the Committee, with the view of making the force more efficient? It struck me that the addition of a white force with them would be beneficial.

17. In what proportion? I think the same proportion would not be applicable to all districts. From what I know and have heard of portions of the Leichhardt District, where scrub so much abounds, I scarcely think a white force there would act well; but I would suggest that in my own neighbourhood, which I consider moderately quiet now, there should be a force of, say four white men and two blacks; as trackers, besides the officer. Such a force would be sufficient in moderately quiet neighbourhoods; but in outlying districts where scrub is so very general, through which it is exceedingly difficult, or I might say impossible for white men to follow the natives with sufficient rapidity, I would have a body of Native Police, or two, at disposal, so that in case of necessity they could follow the blacks through the scrubs.

18. You would vary the number of white men according to the nature of the country? Yes.

19. By Mr. Jones: In some districts you would have a force consisting chiefly of whites, and in others, a force consisting chiefly of blacks? Yes.

20. By the Chairman: You would place the whole force under one Commandant? Yes. My view is that the present disorganization of the force is owing principally to its being very badly officered.

21. From what cause? Because the officers have been appointed by persons from Sydney who know nothing about the force. I consider that the Commandant ought to have the entire appointment of his officers. If you wanted officers for a force consisting entirely of blacks, for the remote districts, you might then make a selection of officers for that purpose from the whole. I could go now and select perhaps six good officers; their sections are moderately efficient; whereas some of them are worse than useless.

22. That you should say from your own observation? Yes.

23. If it were possible to send up twenty troopers from Sydney, would you not place them immediately under the control of the Commandant, and allow him to dispose of them as he thought proper? Yes. I think everything should be left to the direction of the Commandant. I do not know what powers are vested in the Government Resident at Moreton Bay; but he appears to have the control of this force in some way. I do not think he ought to have anything to do with it. Brisbane is quite out of the way of its operations.

24. Where would you suggest that the head-quarters of the Native Police should be? The head-quarters should be as nearly central as possible. If otherwise, I would have it more to the northward, where the force is more wanted.

25. Where would that be? I think the Burnett would be as good a place as any; that is where it was in Mr. Walker's time; but now the squatters have gone out further to the north than they were then.

26. Would you approve of Maryborough? No; the only advantage would be, that it would be economical for the supply of the force; but that gain would be very inconsiderable. I think Gayndah a good place.

27. There would then be inland carriage? Yes, eighty miles, from Maryborough. The Native Police generally get their rations at stations, so that there would be very little carriage.

28. Do they get rations at stations without any difficulty? They have not latterly; many persons have objected to supply them on account of their inefficiency; and not only that, but the difficulty of getting the rations paid for under Mr. Walker's management.

29. The difficulty of getting paid has ceased, has it not? For supplying the present force we have always been paid. I allude to money that has been due.

30. By Mr. Richardson: In the districts you have spoken of, where the scrubs are dense, would you have any proportion of whites at all in the Police Force? No; what I meant was, to have no whites at all in such districts, where you can get efficient native troopers. I have known white men to attempt to follow the blacks in the scrubs, but it is almost impossible to do so. They are obliged to strip off their clothing, in order to get through rapidly.

31. You stated that, in your opinion, the present Commandant was not an efficient man? Yes.

32. Supposing any number of white troopers were sent up from Sydney to the scene of the recent outrages, do you think he could manage them? He would not control them as well as a better man. I consider that a man peculiarly adapted for the post may be one in five hundred.

33. Do you think the Commandant is likely to improve—he has not been long there? I believe he does his best. Perhaps he is above the average.

34. Do you think it necessary for the native troopers, when first enlisted, to undergo any training at head-quarters? No; I do not think there could be any benefit from that. I think a few recruits should be put with a force that is in training, and be sent out at once on an expedition. They could have no better training.

35. As I understand you, you do not think the present system a good one, where the scrubs are not so dense as to render it necessary that native troopers should be employed to pursue them? No; I suggest that there should be some white troopers in such cases. If a black force were well officered, I dare say it would do, and it would be economical; but the wild tribes require to be followed and a constant system of patrolling to be kept up, and, as a general rule, the black troopers are not suited to these duties in open country so well as white men. Their habits and dispositions are the reverse of energetic; and it is only under excitement that they work well. I consider that a white force would be much more diligent, and always willing to do some work.

36. You said that one reason of the inefficiency of the present force is, that the native troopers tell the blacks where they are going? That is one element of inefficiency.
37. That could be easily obviated? If you had proper officers it could; but that is the difficulty. Some of the officers of the force are intemperate in their habits.
38. By the Chairman: That is generally known to be the case, is it not? Yes, that some of them are intemperate.
39. By Mr. Richardson: Would you enlist blacks as troopers at a distance from where they are to be employed? Decidedly.
40. Where do you think would be the best place to enlist them? I should think somewhere about the Murray. You could not have a better class of men than those Mr. Walker brought from that part of the country.
41. Do you attribute the circumstance of Mr. Walker having got good blacks to his good management? Perhaps so. That was partly the reason of his efficiency. I think he had tact in the management of the force.
42. Which you think the present Commandant does not possess? I have not seen so much of the present Commandant as I did of Mr. Walker; but from what I can gather, I think he has not as much tact.
43. By Mr. Forster: Do you consider that the presence of the Native Police Force, in its present condition, is useful or mischievous? I think it is mischievous.
44. Do you attribute the occurrence of a larger number of murders than usual to the inefficiency of the force? Yes.
45. Do you think that if there had been no force at all so many murders would have occurred? I do not think they would.
46. In speaking of the inefficiency of the force since Mr. Walker's dismissal, do you mean to infer that it was never inefficient under Mr. Walker himself? No, I do not say that; it was inefficient at times.
47. Do you not consider that it was in a very inefficient state long before his dismissal? Yes, decidedly.
48. Do you consider that his dismissal was a necessary act? Yes, an act of justice; because he was so intemperate.
49. May it not be, then, that the inefficiency to which Mr. Walker reduced the force has remained from that day to the present—that in some degree he was the cause of its present inefficiency? Yes, but from a different reason,—it was from his intemperate habits that his inefficiency arose.
50. You consider that his intemperance led to his becoming unfit for his post? Yes.
51. In what respect do you consider him to have been so far superior to other men in managing this force—was it from a natural power of command, or from his long familiarity with the natives? I cannot describe it better than by saying that he had more tact.
52. You mean that he understood the natives? He understood the native character, and what was necessary to make them act as a force.
53. I think you said a man of that kind it is very difficult to obtain? I think so.
54. Then, in fact, the inefficiency of the force, if it arises from a want of that kind, is exceedingly difficult to remedy? Yes; you not only require the Commandant to be good, but you require his subordinates to be so also.
55. Do you attribute any of the present inefficiency of the Native Police to the circumstance that the troopers have been selected from districts too near the scene of their employment? Yes; they have selected men where they ought not; they have taken them from the neighbourhoods where they are to act. I have stated that the force, in its present state, is worse than useless, and that is one reason. These men, being near their own tribes, are constantly running away, and are now amongst the blacks, who, through them, are acquainted with many of our tactics.
56. Amongst the secondary causes of inefficiency, you place the selection of troopers from tribes in the neighbourhood? Yes.
57. Do you not consider also, that another of the secondary causes is the constant intercourse carried on by the black troopers with the women of the tribes in the neighbourhood? I do not think that would be of much consequence if the officer did not tell his troopers where he was going.
58. You are aware that wherever the Native Police encamp they are always attended by a large number of the women of the tribes? They are in some instances; but I do not think it is general.
59. Where it does occur does it not inevitably lead to the dissemination of the intended movements of the force among the blacks? Yes. The troopers themselves should not know what was going to occur.
60. Then you think that if the officer in command exercised a proper discretion in keeping silence as to his intentions, no harm would result otherwise from this intercourse? Not so much harm.
61. Do you think the presence of these native women, and the intercourse thus going on, might not lead the troopers, in some cases, to neglect their duty—to show, in fact, a sort of favoritism to one tribe more than to another, when they were required to act? Yes, I think it would.
62. In that way it would act prejudicially? It does now, because the troopers are chosen from the immediate neighbourhood. If they were selected from the Murray, or any distant district, I do not think it would have so much effect. Again, if they were constantly on the move, as they should be in patrolling, they could have very little connection with the women of any particular tribe.
63. Do not the gins travel with them? They do; but they are said to belong to each trooper.
64. They are their wives, in a certain way? Yes. Each trooper is supposed to have a spare

A. Brown,
Esq.

15 July, 1858.

spare horse, and I have repeatedly seen the gins riding these spare horses. That is a thing the officers are to blame for.

65. Do you think it is for the public benefit that the wives of the troopers should accompany them in that way? I should imagine not.

66. It would be impossible, I presume, to prevent the troopers from having access to the native women? I think it would.

67. Have you observed at all that the officers since Mr. Walker's time have in their demeanour and in their intercourse with their men shown an improper familiarity—that they have treated them in a way that has led to their entertaining rather a feeling of contempt for their officers? I think they have.

68. Have you observed that very often to prevail amongst the young officers? I cannot say very often; instances have come under my notice.

69. It leads to insubordination among the troopers? Unquestionably.

70. In many cases, do you not think the troopers have had the management of their own movements—that they could do as they liked, because the officer felt himself unable to control them? In some cases that has been so. That arises from officers being sent up who know nothing of what should be done; and when once they have yielded themselves to be guided by their troopers, they cannot well regain their authority.

71. Do you not think that young men might be selected who would get over that first incapacity? I have seen instances of it.

72. Have not the cases you allude to been those, not of young men, but of men with regard to whom there is good reason to suspect that they were previously of intemperate habits—habits which, in fact, unfitted them for other offices, but which were overlooked when they were transferred to these remote localities? Yes.

73. So that the objection does not lie so much against young men, if properly selected, as against men who have been found unfit in other places, and have been put into these offices for which they are also unfit? The objection is against men that should not have been appointed—that I would not myself have appointed—from the evident failing they had.

74. You do not approve of the combination of blacks with whites, in general, as troopers? I think there should be rather more white troopers than blacks, in ordinary cases.

75. Do you not think a proportion of one white trooper to two blacks would be sufficient? I think a larger proportion of white men would be better.

76. The presence of white men would give the officer in command of each section greater confidence in doing his duty, and in controlling his force? I think it would, in a general way.

77. May not the want of control that you speak of on the part of young officers have arisen very often from a feeling of insecurity and a want of confidence in themselves, which would have some chance of being removed by the presence of white troopers? Exactly so. For that reason I recommend an almost entirely white force, where the country is tolerably quiet.

78. Has it come under your notice that a proposal was made some time ago that the Benches of Magistrates should have power to report as to the condition and proceedings of the Native Police, without any power of interference with them? I am aware the proposal was made.

79. Do you approve of it? I do.

80. You think it would have a beneficial effect? I do.

81. You would not give the magistrates any power of active interference? No; I think the direction of all active matters should be left entirely to the Commandant. If you have not confidence in him you can dismiss him.

82. Would you give the absolute appointment of his officers to the Commandant, or would you allow the Government to exercise a veto after he had appointed? He ought not to be swayed in any way by the Government.

83. Might not the entrusting this power solely to the Commandant lead to something like the same state of affairs as that which existed in Mr. Walker's time, so that serious dissatisfaction might arise long before a remedy could be applied? Of course there must be some resource in cases of that kind.

84. How would you propose to check the exercise of this extraordinary power on the part of the Commandant? In any case, it would not be until after the appointment was made that any officer would be found to be unfit. If the appointment were left in the hands of the Government, and the Commandant were to recommend an unfit man to the Government for appointment, the Government would of course, in blindness, approve of it—not being able to tell whether he were fit or unfit.

85. Have you not been aware that several appointments have been made of men who, from the very first, were obviously unfit for the office? Yes.

86. Such a thing might occur again, even under the Commandant, if he were a bad officer—he might appoint unfit men. Might not, in that case, a state of things arise that would lead to serious mischief before a remedy could be applied? Perhaps it would be wise to leave some power with the Government; but I would interfere as little as possible with the Commandant.

87. By Mr. Buckley: What course is adopted in the event of the troopers being obliged to pursue the blacks into the scrubs—are white men found to be of any service? They are not generally found serviceable; they are not quick enough.

88. How do the officers manage when the blacks are pursued into the scrub by the native troopers? They generally stay outside.

89. Would not that be the case with white troopers? I think they would get over it. I do not imagine they would ever be as well able to get through the scrub as blacks; but they would acquire a degree of celerity by practice.

90. If there were a very strong party of blacks to drive out of a scrub, what would be their position if the number of native troopers in each division were not sufficient to drive them out?

out? A few troopers could drive out almost any number. I should not be at all afraid of eight men attempting to drive out a hundred blacks.

91. Have you never heard of two or three hundred being in a scrub? There are seldom more than two hundred fighting men together.

92. Do you think eight men would be sufficient to drive out that number? Quite.

93. By Mr. Jones: Are black troopers difficult to manage, in your opinion, generally? No, I think not, provided they are managed judiciously from the commencement.

94. What is necessary to their judicious management? They never should be allowed to be idle for any time together. A degree of discipline should also be insisted on—particularly with regard to cleanliness, and the proper condition of their arms and accoutrements.

95. You think it is difficult to get officers to manage the blacks properly? That is one of the difficulties. You require sixteen or eighteen officers, and out of these you might get six or eight good ones.

96. From your knowledge and experience of the Native Police Force, you think it is difficult to obtain the services of men who are competent, and have a natural aptitude for managing blacks? I judge that it is difficult from the late appointments.

97. In the majority of cases you think the persons appointed are not well qualified? That is my impression.

98. And in consequence of that the force has been inefficient, and, in some cases, actually mischievous? Yes.

99. Looking at the difficulty of getting competent men, as proved by the selections already made, do you not think some change in the composition of the force is shown to be necessary? I do.

100. Do you believe that white men are more easily managed, by the average class of officers, than black troopers? I think they are.

101. You think there are special requisites, not often found in men, to enable them to command black troopers? Yes.

102. It is only such men as Mr. Walker, men of the same stamp, that are likely to be successful in their management? Do you allude to the Commandant—I thought you were also speaking of the junior officers?

103. I speak of the officers generally,—are you not led, by the experience you have acquired of the management of the Native Police, to believe that it is very difficult to find men with these special requisites? I think it is quite possible to find them if you pay them well enough.

104. Can you account for the circumstance that they have not been found up to this time? I do not think the Government have taken sufficient trouble in selecting proper men.

105. Do you think any guarantee can be taken that the Government will act differently in future—that what has been is not likely to be again? I think it is very likely to again occur. I have no confidence in the appointments by the Government.

106. Do you believe that if the character of the force were changed to a certain extent,—that is to say, if a certain proportion of white men were combined with it,—it would be more easy of management than it is as a purely native force? I have expressed my opinions before on that subject,—that in some districts an entirely native force would be advisable, and in quieter districts, where a patrol only would be possibly necessary, that nearly all white men should be employed.

107. But the point on which I wish your opinion is, whether, if a change were made in the composition of the force—if there were an infusion, more or less, of white men—it would be likely to be better managed than a purely native force? It would.

108. Do you not think that even in the more remote districts, where the scrub abounds, it would exercise a beneficial influence on the character and usefulness of the force if there were a small proportion of white men, so as to make the force more manageable, and to give the officer more confidence in acting? In places where they are likely to be required, I would suggest that the force should be composed entirely of blacks, good officers being appointed to command them, for the sole purpose of pursuing the natives through the scrubs; and where scrubs do not abound, I would have a chiefly white force, because I consider white men would display more enterprise. One of the objections I have is, that some of the officers permit what are called corroborries—the gathering together of blacks from all directions, north, south, east and west, to one spot. That has a very baneful effect. The blacks whom we employ as shepherds and stockmen, and who are very useful to us and very beneficial to the country, are obliged to attend these meetings, on pain of excommunication, or something of the kind. I have known many blacks who did not wish to go, but they have told me they were obliged to do so. These corroborries I have frequently wished the officer of Native Police to disperse; but he would merely ride among them and send them away a few miles, without seeing that every tribe went to its own neighbourhood. I attribute many murders and outrages to these corroborries.

109. You do not think any good would arise by sending any white force to the frontier scrub districts? I would have one or two sections of a purely native force at the disposal of the Commandant; but in some districts, within a few miles, there might be a station where a combination of white men and black would be judicious.

110. I understood you that you would keep a sort of special corps for scrub service? Exactly. I would place both white and black men at the disposal of the Commandant, and allow him to distribute them.

111. With regard to those divisions intended for scrub country, you would make it a sine qua non that the officer in charge of each should be really a competent man? Yes; not because it is scrub country, but because it is a force of blacks.

112. Have you had any opportunity of observing the conduct of the black troopers in their encounters with the native tribes, as to whether they needlessly destroy life? I think not. My experience is that they do not.

A. Brown,
Esq.
15 July, 1858.

A. Brown,
Esq.
15 July, 1858.

113. Do you think they are under the control of their officers in these encounters? Yes, moderately so. There are some instances in which they are not; but that I attribute to the inefficiency of the officers. I think if they are well officered, and the officer acts as he should, they would be under control.

114. Do you think they are likely to be as much under control when actually engaged in encounters as a white force would? Not quite.

115. And, therefore, there is more risk of their taking life unnecessarily than there would be with a white force, or a force containing a large proportion of white men? Yes, I think there is.

116. By Mr. Taylor: If there were more white men than there are at present, would they require the same number of officers? Yes, I think so, for this reason, that there must be an officer to each section. The sections are small. With regard to the selection of officers, I would suggest that you would be more likely to find the description of officers you require in the way of sergeants—in that rank in life.

117. By the Chairman: Would you approve of a white trooper being attached to a body of native troopers to look after the saddlery; are you aware that the saddlery is very much neglected? I think very likely it is.

118. Do you think one white man to each section of black troopers would be sufficient to look after the saddlery? I think one white man to twenty blacks ought to be sufficient for that purpose, or he might look after forty.

119. I mean that this man should be a trooper, but that he should also see that the native troopers take care of their saddlery? Unless that saddler were a good trooper, I would rather pay a saddler to attend to the whole force.

120. You do not approve of Brisbane as head-quarters? I do not.

121. On account of its not being central? On account of its not being central.

122. Are you prepared to point out to the Committee what would be the best spot? If Brisbane does not require protection from the force still, I would have it even more north than Gayndah. I think if you have a seaport town, Gladstone would be the best place.

123. Is not Gladstone central? It is very central now. There are always teams going in and out thence in every direction.

124. Under all the circumstances within your knowledge, would you consider that sending up from twenty to twenty-five troopers from Sydney to the scene of the murders would be beneficial? Yes.

125. Is that your decided opinion? It is.

126. Have you allowed the blacks in at your station? Yes.

127. Always? Always.

128. Have you suffered from them? I have had no person killed on my station, but I have had them injured.

129. Are the blacks generally allowed in, in your part of the country? Yes. There is scarcely any station in my neighbourhood where they are not allowed in. I speak of the station where we are living; but I am forming a station where I would never think of allowing them in.

130. By Mr. Richardson: Do you think it desirable they should be allowed in? I think so, where they are quiet.

131. Can you gather anything of what is going on amongst the tribes, or of their intentions, from the blacks who come into the stations? Very rarely.

132. How would you enlist the troopers? I think it most essential that some power of control should be possessed by the officer over the men, and in the enlistment of the natives I would advise the adoption of regulations very similar to martial law. At present the troopers leave with impunity. We appear to have no power of punishing. In the case of European troopers also, a desertion by them I would treat, or rather have the power of treating, with severe punishment.

W. B. Plunkett, Esq., Secretary to the Crown Law Officers, called in and examined:—

W. B. Plunkett
Esq.
15 July, 1858.

1. By the Chairman: Do you produce some papers sent to the Attorney General by Mr. Commissioner Wiseman, relative to the Murders on the Dawson by the Aborigines? I do. There are some other papers I have brought also, as likely to afford the Committee information. There is a Report from the Government Resident at Brisbane, forwarding a communication from Mr. Commissioner Wiseman. There are also some letters from Mr. Frederick Walker, the late Commandant of the Native Police, complaining of the murder of an aboriginal named Tahiti; and also some papers relating to the murder of the Frazer family at Hornet Bank. I have brought the whole of the papers relative to the murders in the Northern Districts. [The witness produced the papers referred to.]

William Henry Gaden, Esq., called in and examined:—

W. H. Gaden,
Esq.
15 July, 1858.

1. By the Chairman: You are a squatter? I am.
2. Where do you live? On the Fitz Roy River.
3. How far from Rockhampton? Twenty-five miles.
4. Did you form your station yourself? No; I bought it from Mr. Elliott last year.
5. How long have you been there? Since January last.
6. Have you had many opportunities of seeing the blacks in that part of the country? Not a great deal there, but I have seen something of them in other parts.
7. Where? In the Burnett and Wide Bay districts, and out further to the north.
8. How long have you been in the Northern Districts? Three or four years.

9. During that time have you seen much of the working of the Native Police? Yes. I have W. H. Gaden, Esq. been out with them sometimes, when I have had occasion to call for their assistance.
10. What is your opinion of the force at the present time? It is not an efficient force. In many cases the officers are not efficient, and a great number of the men are selected from the country in the immediate neighbourhood, and therefore they have every facility of leaving the force, and going to their own tribes again on the slightest provocation. 15 July, 1858.
11. What remedy would you propose? To get blacks from the southward.
12. You think that practicable? Yes.
13. In what way would you carry it out? I would send one of the experienced officers with means for getting them. He would require to take horses, probably, and military uniforms. I think an experienced man, who knows the ways of the blacks, would get any number.
14. To what district would you send him? About the lower part of the Murray and Murrumbidgee. The men who came from there originally were the best men they have had. There are a few of them in the force now, and they are very good men.
15. Did you know the force under Mr. Walker? No, I did not.
16. Mr. Walker had been superseded previous to your arrival in the Northern Districts? Yes.
17. Do you think it advisable to introduce any white troopers amongst the native troopers? I do not think so.
18. Under no circumstances? Under no circumstances whatever. I think they would be quite useless; the sergeant they have with them is quite sufficient.
19. What sergeant? At each police station there is one white sergeant, merely to look after the saddlery, and see that they keep their accoutrements in order.
20. Is that the case now? Yes; there is a white sergeant attached to each police camp.
21. How many men does a camp consist of? The men are not stationed at the camp, but the sergeant is resident there; and the different sections of the police are backward and forward—it is always a calling place.
22. Are you aware how many camps there are? I am not, for the police have been moved about so much lately, on account of the Dawson murders.
23. Under no circumstances do you think it advisable to introduce white troopers? Decidedly not.
24. Not even in the open country? Not even in the open country. I think black troopers, properly disciplined, are far preferable.
25. Do you think any jealousy would exist on the part of the black troopers if white men were joined with them? I do not think they would get on together at all; and, moreover, the white men could not follow the blacks; and I do not think the men themselves would agree: constantly knocking about in all weathers, they would get tired of it, and would always be quarrelling among themselves.
26. Could you suggest to the Committee the best site for the head-quarters of the Native Police? I do not think I could exactly, for I have been in the outside districts lately, and I do not know the nature of the country about Brisbane and Wide Bay.
27. Do you allow the blacks in at your station? I do not.
28. Are they allowed upon any of the neighbouring stations? Mr. Archer allows them in; he is the only one.
29. Do you think it objectionable? I do; I should never allow them in. Where we are now is a new station, and it is only within the last few months that there have been any stations outside of us.
30. What are your reasons for not allowing the blacks in? They are constantly backwards and forwards about the run; they collect in numbers, and we require to keep a strict watch, to know whether they will be up to mischief or not. They might take us by surprise at any time.
31. Do you think the present Native Police Force a mischievous force? No.
32. Do you think it tends to the protection of life and property? Yes, it does.
33. Have you confidence in the present police force? I have; but I think it might be more efficiently managed.
34. Do you know the present Commandant? Yes.
35. Do you think him an efficient Commandant? I do not think he has had a fair trial yet; nor has he had a fair trial with the men, having been obliged to get recruits from the immediate neighbourhood where the blacks are troublesome.
36. Do you know the officers? I know some of them.
37. What do you think of the officers generally? Most of them are very inefficient.
38. From what cause? From not having any idea of the bush, or of the management of blacks. A great number of them had not been in the bush before their appointment.
39. They are what we vulgarly call "new chums"? Yes.
40. Would you recommend that the Commandant should have the sole power of appointing his officers? Yes; and in that case he would be answerable for their conduct. He has better opportunities than any one else of selecting men who would be efficient, travelling so much about the country as he does.
41. You think he would be more apt to select good officers for his own credit? Yes. Most of them he would know before he gave them appointments; he would know their characters and abilities.
42. By Mr. Richardson: Where would you select the officers from? From different parts of the country. There are great numbers of persons who are, or have been, in situations as superintendents or managers of stations, possessing the necessary experience, who would join the force if they had the opportunity.
43. Do you think that men from Sydney, properly disciplined, would be useful in the northern districts? I do not think they would in the outside districts. They have no idea of the bush, and do not know how to manage the blacks.
44. They might be men naturally adapted for the bush, who would soon acquire that? You might

W. H. Gaden, Esq., might get one or two out of half a dozen who would, but the others would not. If you put an officer over the native troopers who is not efficient they soon find that out, and they have not the same respect for him as for another.

15 July, 1853. 45. By Mr. Cribb: Do you think that, acting under officers of that description, they would be more likely to have less regard for the lives of the wild blacks when engaged against them? No; but, under efficient officers, they would know their duty better; they would patrol more; and then the police would be in much better discipline, and, consequently, they would prevent murders and robberies.

46. You do not consider the present Native Police in an efficient state—they are disorganized, to a certain extent? Yes. They have been moved about very much lately, and they are constantly bolting, and men who have deserted have been taken up again in case of necessity.

47. Do you think officers from the interior, acquainted with the bush, would be able to make these same troopers efficient? I think they will require fresh troopers. Those taken from districts so near where they are to do their work will be constantly running away.

48. Supposing that an efficient corps of Native Police could be obtained ultimately, do you not think it would be best to send a body of white troopers from Sydney at once to meet the present emergency? No; if you have white troopers at all, I think more murders would be committed. When they have committed murders the blacks keep close to the scrubs, and, if once they get into them, the white troopers would never see them again. If they caught them on the open country, or plains, they might do something; but it is not often the blacks are to be caught so.

49. What steps would you propose to take now to render the Native Police efficient? By changing a number of the officers, and giving the Commandant full power to appoint his officers.

50. By Mr. Jones: Have you ever known the Native Police to be in an efficient state? I did not know Mr. Walker; but I believe they were, under him, a most efficient force.

51. Within your own experience, have you known any of them to be in an efficient state? Yes. I was at Mr. Bligh's station three years ago, and he had a section of men from the Murrumbidgee and Murray, who were quite efficient. The different sections of men who came from the southward are, I believe, efficient now.

52. These men you speak of were good men, and Mr. Bligh, being a competent officer, kept them in a good state of discipline? Yes; he was as good an officer as I have seen.

53. Have you known any other sections to be in an efficient state besides Mr. Bligh's? No, none excepting that.

54. How many sections of Native Police have you been acquainted with, or come in contact with, during your experience in the Northern Districts at different times? Eight or nine, or perhaps ten.

55. Out of that number you have only found this one section which you would consider in an efficient state? Yes.

56. To what do you attribute the inefficiency of the other sections? To different reasons. In some, the officers are not efficient, and in others the men are not. The greater number of the men are from the Burnett and Wide Bay Districts—quite new men—and they never can keep them long enough to become efficient troopers.

57. Supposing we had men from more remote districts, such as the Murray and Murrumbidgee, and the men so obtained were placed under the charge of the officers you have seen in command of other sections, do you think they would be maintained in good discipline? In some cases they would.

58. Of the officers you have known, what proportion do you think were men qualified to command black troopers? About one-half, I think.

59. You do not think it would be very difficult to obtain men qualified to command black troopers? No. If the Commandant had power to appoint, he would get efficient men. There are a great number of men in the bush who are acquainted with the customs of the blacks, and with bush life, and those are the principal qualifications required.

60. Then, you think that if the troopers were obtained from remote districts, and efficient officers were appointed to command them by the Commandant, a black force would be more efficient than a white force, owing to the greater facility with which they could follow the natives after they had committed outrages? Yes.

61. Do you not think that a mixture of white men, in the proportion of one white to two black, or one to three, would give the officers more control over their sections? I do not think it would. I think the black troopers require to be kept distinct.

62. You would not advise or recommend any admixture of whites with blacks? None whatever, excepting the camp sergeant.

63. By Mr. Buckley: Would the admixture of whites be likely to create discontent among the black troopers? I think it would. They would not agree at all. When black men and white are brought together they never do agree, even on station work.

64. It would do more harm than good, you think? I think it would. I would rather be without them.

65. Would a few white troopers be of any use in the scrub? None whatever.

66. Do the officers accompany the black troopers on these occasions? I do not think they enter the scrub. The blacks are so quick that it is quite impossible for white men to follow them.

67. Who takes care of the horses when the troopers are in pursuit in the scrubs? Very often the officer and one of the troopers.

68. By Mr. Forster: You seem to think it essential that the officers should have previous acquaintance with the bush—do you mean by that that they should be squatters? They should be men who have been employed in the bush, and have a good idea of it.

69. Are there many men of that class to be got? I think so.

70. Are not the best men of that class generally found at some occupation more profitable than an appointment in the Native Police? I do not think so. I have known several who would have given up situations to have gone into the police. W. H. Gaden,
Esq.
71. Persons employed by squatters? Yes. When I have been speaking to them they have expressed a wish to get into the force. 15 July, 1858.
72. How do these gentlemen you speak of manage when they first go into the bush—they have to learn? Yes; but they are not then placed in the same position as an officer of Native Police.
73. Do you think there is anything in the duties of the Native Police that may not be acquired in a few months by a young man who is determined to do his duty? No; but when he is first put in command of a section of Native Police, if he has not a proper method of managing them, the men do not respect him; and it is with difficulty, if at all, that he can afterwards regain his authority.
74. Admitting that it is desirable that men of the kind you speak of should be appointed, do you think it possible to fill all the offices with them? I think so, from different parts of the country.
75. By Mr. Richardson: Do you not think that some men would become as good bushmen in a few months as others in as many years? Decidedly.
76. Would not that be good reason for not confining the choice of officers to bushmen? If you were to send young men into the bush for some months before putting them in command of sections, they might then be qualified.
77. Have you not known some men who have lived for years in the bush who never became good bushmen? Yes; but they would get into the way of bush life.
78. What style of men would those be that you recommend—educated men? Yes; superintendents, and young men who go into the bush merely for colonial experience, getting small salaries from the squatters who employ them.
79. You think many of these persons are inclined to go into the Native Police? I think so.
80. By the Chairman: Are the Native Police force generally well received at the different stations? Generally they are.
81. Have they any difficulty in obtaining rations? At some of the stations they have. A short time back they had great difficulty, on account of the debts not paid by Mr. Walker.
82. Is that difficulty removed now? Yes, I think it is.
83. But at some of the stations you say they are still not well received? Yes.
84. Why is that? It is hard to be accounted for; but at all stations where there is any need for them they are well received. At some stations, where they are not required—where the country is tolerably quiet—they are thought to be an annoyance, knocking about the place; and some object to them from a spirit of opposition.
85. Are you aware whether the troopers are under any agreement when enlisted in the Native Police Force? Those from the southward were.
86. But they are not at present? Not at present. Those they have enlisted lately have not been under agreement, for they have been obliged to get recruits wherever they could; they were very short-handed on the Dawson.
87. Are you aware whether the native troopers are in the habit of absconding in a body? In some instances they have done so.
88. Could you suggest any remedy for that? No, I think not, excepting getting them from the southward, or at too great distance for them to go back; and any that did abscond I should treat as deserters, and shoot them.
89. Do you think, if an officer going from the northward to the southward, for the purpose of enlisting troopers, were to mention that to the natives there, that they would, under those circumstances, enlist—if told they would be shot? I do not think they would. The idea of being shot would frighten them. They would not have sufficient sense to understand the meaning of it, and would suppose it would be done for some trivial offence, or that you wanted to get them away for the purpose of shooting them. I think they should be enlisted for a certain number of years; and perhaps there would be some intelligent men found who could explain to the others that it was for a certain period, and that then, if they wished, they were to be carried back to their own country.
90. You think that could be effectually carried out under agreement? Yes.
91. Are the Native Police horses generally in good condition—serviceable? I do not think they have enough horses.
92. Do you know how many horses they have—has each trooper a spare horse? No.
93. Have you ever seen gins riding on the horses, in company with the troopers? I have.
94. Is that usual? It is generally the case when the section is moving some distance. Most of the troopers now have gins of their own; and if they are moving from the Burnett to the Dawson, for instance, they take their gins with them; but if they are going out on duty they do not, generally.
95. To whom do the horses they ride on belong? I believe they are the police horses.

FRIDAY, 16 JULY, 1858.

Present:—

Mr. HODGSON,
Mr. CRIBB,Mr. BUCKLEY,
Mr. TAYLOR.

ARTHUR HODGSON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Daniel Connor, Esq., examined:—

- D. Connor, Esq.
16 July, 1858.
1. By the Chairman: You reside in the Northern Districts? Yes.
 2. In what part? On the Fitz Roy River.
 3. What is the name of your station? Princhester.
 4. Which is the nearest seaport town? Rockhampton.
 5. Rockhampton is your shipping port? Yes.
 6. Did you form that station yourself? Yes.
 7. How long ago? About eight months ago.
 8. Have you been long resident in the Northern Districts? Yes, I have been out four years.
 9. In what other district? The Dawson.
 10. I suppose you have had constant opportunities of noticing the conduct of the Native Police Force? Yes.
 11. What is your opinion of that force? I think at present it is inefficient.
 12. From what cause? There are not sufficient men, and most of those raw recruits.
 13. Are you aware of the number of men the force is at present composed of? About forty.
 14. Are there only forty troopers at the present time? That is about the number.
 15. Do you know why the numbers are so few? On account of desertions—owing, in a great measure, to the men having been enlisted from the neighbouring districts. A section deserted a very short time ago, from the Fitz Roy River, under Mr. Wheeler.
 16. He is a Lieutenant of Native Police? Yes.
 17. Do you know where they were enlisted? On the Clarence.
 18. Do you know the cause of their desertion? No.
 19. Have any of them been taken? I think not.
 20. Where do you imagine they have gone to? Back to the Clarence.
 21. Did they take their arms and accoutrements? No.
 22. Nor their clothing? Nothing.
 23. Could you offer any suggestion to the Committee as to the best mode of increasing the numbers of the Native Police Force, and rendering it more efficient? I think an efficient officer should be sent down to the southward to enrol men for the Native Police. That would be the best place for recruiting.
 24. Do you think he would experience any difficulty in enlisting them? I think not.
 25. Would you recommend that horses should be sent? Decidedly, and clothes. On the Lower Balonne, also, I think you might get men, and on the Macintyre.
 26. Do you know any officer of Native Police who would be better fitted for such an expedition than the rest? Yes; I think Mr. Murray is best suited for it, or Mr. Bligh.
 27. Do you know the present Commandant? Very slightly.
 28. Do you know whether he is an efficient officer, fit to undertake the duties of Commandant? I cannot say. I have not seen much of him. I should think he is. He is a very active. He has had great difficulties to encounter since he has been in command of the force. It was very inefficient when he took the command, and he has been laboring under great difficulties ever since: he has not had a fair chance.
 29. Do you think that if he has a fair chance he is likely to perform the duties satisfactorily? I do.
 30. Would you recommend any mixture of white men with the native force? I should not, indeed.
 31. For what reasons? Because the natives will not work with Europeans.
 32. From a feeling of jealousy? Yes.
 33. Do you know the wages paid to the black troopers? Five-pence a day.
 34. Do you think that sufficient? No, I do not.
 35. What amount would you think sufficient? I should think about a shilling a day.
 36. Do you not imagine that the low wage paid to the troopers tends materially to their deserting? No, I think not.
 37. Do they care for their wages? Yes, they do.
 38. Upon what grounds should you recommend an increase of wages? I think they would be more satisfied if they could get what they wanted in the shape of extra clothes, or anything else which one shilling a day would give them: five-pence a day is not sufficient to keep them in clothing. I have known the officers to be obliged to pay a great deal for them out of their own pockets.
 39. Do you imagine that raising the wages of the troopers would make the force more efficient? I think so, decidedly.
 40. You are decidedly opposed to any admixture of white troopers? Yes.
 41. Not even one or two to each section? Certainly not.
 42. Are you aware whether any white troopers are now attached to the Native Police? None.
 43. No white sergeants? There are white sergeants.
 44. How many do you think? There is one wherever there is a force stationed.
 45. Do you not approve of that? Yes. A person is required to take charge of the barracks in the officer's absence.
 46. Even in the open country, would you not approve of white police? Where is there any open country? It is all cut up with scrub to the northward.
 47. You are aware of the murders on the Dawson lately? Yes.

48. Could you suggest to the Committee any means of putting a stop to these murders? Only by raising a more efficient force of native troopers. D. Connor,
Esq.
16 July, 1888.
49. Increasing the force? Increasing the force, and increasing the number of horses as well. I think one horse to each man is not sufficient to do the work.
50. Do you think every trooper ought to have a spare horse? I think so.
51. Do you think that the Native Police, if fully reorganized, are calculated to protect life and property in the northern districts? Yes, I think so.
52. You still think that? Yes.
53. In spite of their inefficiency? In spite of their inefficiency at present.
54. I mean, is the force in its present state calculated to protect life and property? No, I think it is not, at present.
55. Do you consider the present force a mischievous force? Yes, rather.
56. That is to say, from its inefficiency you consider the present force mischievous? Yes. All the men have been recruited from the neighbouring districts, which is a great disadvantage. That is the reason there have been so many desertions.
57. Even the distance of the Clarence River is not found to act as a preventive to desertion? No.
58. If the Native Police Force could be made efficient would you consider it a measure of humanity? I do think so.
59. That it would suppress outrages, both on the part of the blacks and whites? Yes.
60. Could you suggest to the Committee the best place for the head-quarters of the Native Police—the most central position? On the borders of the Dawson and Burnett districts, I should think, would be the most convenient spot.
61. Could you mention the name of the place? Somewhere on the Auburn. Mr. Pigott's station is a very central position.
62. How far is that from water carriage? About a hundred and eighty miles, I think; I am not quite certain of the distance.
63. Would not that be a great drawback to head-quarters? I do not see that it would.
64. Do you allow the blacks in at your station? No.
65. Have you ever done so? Yes.
66. Why did you put a stop to it? Because they killed a black boy of mine.
67. Are they allowed in, in your neighbourhood? Yes, at Mr. Archer's run.
68. On grounds of insecurity you do not allow the blacks in now? Yes.
69. But Mr. Archer allows them in, and does not suffer inconvenience? He suffers a little. They steal sheep, and kill cattle sometimes; but they have not committed any murders there.
70. Are the Native Police well received at the different stations? Very well on the Fitz Roy; they have not been well received on the Dawson, I understand.
71. Do they experience any difficulty in getting rations? None whatever.
72. Have the settlers any difficulty in getting paid for these rations? No; with the exception of the former accounts due by Mr. Walker.
73. Did you know the force under Mr. Walker? Yes.
74. Did you consider it then efficient? Yes, very efficient.
75. How do you account for the change? Through Mr. Walker's misconduct he was dismissed. Then Mr. Marshall took the command. He had not the command very long before the Government disbanded most of the troopers; and I think that was the cause of the inefficiency of the Native Police Force.
76. Mr. Marshall does not now belong to the force? No. I do not think there could have been a more efficient force than it was under Mr. Walker.
77. Do the troopers get well fed? Yes—that is, the quality of the rations is good.
78. The rations are sufficient? Hardly sufficient.
79. Do you know what the ration for each man is? Yes,—1lb. of flour, 2lbs. meat, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. tea, $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. sugar, half a fig of tobacco, and $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. soap, a day.
80. They obtain clothing from the Government? Yes.
81. When you spoke of their pay not being sufficient to provide them with clothing, to what clothing did you allude? Blankets and shirts.
82. Are not those provided by the Government? I think not. The clothing they get I do not think is sufficient.
83. By Mr. Cribb: Have you any grounds for supposing troopers could be obtained from the south? I think Mr. Walker had no difficulty in enlisting men when he brought them out first.
84. Supposing they could not be obtained from the south, would you recommend then a mixture of white and black men? No, I should not. I do not think Europeans would work at all with the natives. I should either have a white force entirely, or a Native Police Force.
85. A white Police Force with one or two blacks as trackers? Yes. At the same time I do not think they would be of any use in keeping the blacks in check.
86. In case of outrage now, the whites frequently meet together and give chase to the blacks, do they not? I do not know that they do, I am sure. It is a well known fact that the whites have never been able to follow the blacks through the scrubs. Even the officers of the Native Police, when out with their men, always stop outside, or in the vicinity.
87. If blacks could not be obtained for the police from the southward, to what other quarter would you go for them? They might be recruited on the Macintyre, the Balonne, the Barwan, and other rivers in that locality.
88. Would there not be the same objection to them as to those from the Clarence? No. I have never heard an instance of any of them from that quarter bolting yet. There were some very fine men disbanded when Mr. Marshall had command, obtained from the Macintyre and Balonne, some of the best men in the force.
89. You say you do not allow the blacks to come on your station—what steps do you take to prevent them? I go out after them.

- D. Connor, Esq.
16 July, 1858.
90. If you see a number of blacks coming on the station you immediately drive them off?
Yes.
91. By Mr. Buckley: What became of all these men that were disbanded? They went back to their own country on the Macintyre and Balonne.
92. Did any of them go to the Murrumbidgee? Some of them were Murrumbidgee blacks, and worked their way back to that district.
93. Are there any Murrumbidgee blacks on the Macintyre? I do not know; I think they have all worked down.
94. By Mr. Taylor: You think all that is required to make the Native Police efficient is merely to supply more troopers and more horses? I think so.
95. Do you think black troopers are likely to commit more murders than are necessary when they come in contact with the wild blacks? I am not aware that they do.
96. Do you not think they would be checked in their disposition to destroy life if there were a few Europeans with them? No, I do not think they would; because they would never see the whites when once they got into the scrub.
97. By Mr. Buckley: Have you ever been in company with the Native Police when in pursuit of wild blacks? Yes; on several occasions.
98. Are the wild blacks generally very frightened of them? Yes; but they show fight very often.
99. Generally speaking, so far as your observation went, were the men under pretty good command? Yes, very good. Still, I think they should be amenable to some military law. I think they should be punished for disobedience, by flogging, or something of that kind.
100. Is any punishment now inflicted for desertion? No; I have never heard of it.
101. There is no summary mode of punishing them on the spot? I think not.
102. By Mr. Taylor: Would not the Commandant require some white force to enable him to carry out any system of punishment: do you think the black troopers themselves would carry it out under his orders? Yes; they always used to do it under Mr. Walker. He used to flog them when he was Commandant, and I do not think there could have been a more efficient force than they were under Mr. Walker.
103. By the Chairman: Do you think the wild blacks have the same fear of the Native Police Force now as they had when it was under Mr. Walker? Yes, I think so.
104. Still the same fear exists? Still the same fear exists.
105. Do you know many of the officers? Yes, I know several.
106. Are they generally efficient? There are some that are not efficient.
107. From what cause? Inexperience in the bush, and in the management of the blacks.
108. Would you recommend that the Commandant should have the sole power of appointing his subordinate officers? I think he should.
109. You think that would work well? I think it would work much better than the Government appointing men from Sydney who are not adapted for the situation.
110. Is it not the fact that many "new chums" are sent to the northern districts to undertake the duties of the Native Police? Yes; there are several.
111. Are those the appointments to which you particularly allude as being inefficient? Yes.
112. Do you think it possible the Commandant might select his officers in the northern districts? I think so.
113. Are you aware what is the pay of an officer of Native Police? £220 a-year, I believe.
114. Do you consider that sufficient? No, I should think it is not, not to get good men—men who are adapted for the work, in the way before described. Good men could do much better, I think, selected.
115. Do the Government find them horses? No, I think not.
116. Nor rations? I believe they get rations.
117. Could you suggest any steps to be immediately taken with regard to these Dawson murders? I do not see what immediate steps could be taken very well.
118. Would you approve of twenty white troopers being sent up immediately, to be placed at the disposal of the Commandant? I suppose there would be no harm in trying them.
119. But you evidently do not approve of it? I do not approve of white men being employed there at all.
120. Are there not parts of the country free from scrub in the northern districts? Yes; but the blacks always make to the scrubs. You never find them in the open country.
121. Do they never commit depredations in the open country? Yes; but they are off again to the scrub before anybody knows anything about it—perhaps forty or fifty miles away.
122. Do you not think a constant patrol would tend to decrease these outrages? Yes, I think so.
123. Might not that patrol be carried on by white troopers? Yes, it might.
124. Have you ever given the subject your serious consideration, as to the mixture of white men with the Native Force? No, I have not.
125. But you are prejudiced against their employment? Yes. I have seen white people go out, and know what they are. Whites never could quell the disturbances on the Dawson.
126. What white men do you allude to? Stockmen and others.
127. Do you not think that if twenty white troopers were sent up from Sydney to the headquarters of the Commandant, they might at the present time materially tend to decrease the number of outrages in the Northern Districts? I think they might.
128. By Mr. Taylor: The very presence of a force of twenty men would tend to awe these wild blacks? No, I think not. The Dawson country is very difficult to travel over; it is cut up with scrubs in every direction; the stations are surrounded by scrubs; the blacks may commit a murder, go into the scrub, and be off some hundreds of miles, scarcely coming out into the open country at all.
129. By the Chairman: Have you any suggestion to make as to the saddles used by the Native

- Native Police? I do not think they are large enough, in the first place, and they are too narrow in the tree; that is the reason the horses always get sore backs. D. Connor, Esq.
130. Are sore backs very general among the police horses? Yes, very. There is not a horse in the police that has not a sore back; it is owing to bad saddles, and their not being properly stuffed; the men are not able to stuff them. 16 July, 1858.
131. Are there no saddles attached to the force? No.
132. By Mr. Cribb: Have they regular stockmen's saddles? No; a sort of military saddle, very badly made, and very narrow in the tree.
133. By the Chairman: Saddles with wings behind? No; some of them have not that.
134. You think an improvement might be made in the saddles provided for the Native Police? Yes, a great improvement; I do not think they could have worse saddles than they are supplied with at present.
135. Are the saddles generally taken care of? No, they are not; it is impossible to get black boys to keep saddles in order.
136. Upon these grounds would you not think it necessary that a white sergeant should be appointed to each section? I think it necessary one white sergeant should be appointed to every section.
137. By Mr. Cribb: Besides the Commanding Officer? Yes.
138. By Mr. Taylor: I think you have said already that there was one white sergeant to each section? Yes.
139. By the Chairman: Have you any other suggestions to offer to the Committee? I beg to call the attention of the Committee to the state of the M'Intyre Districts some years ago, which have been rendered peaceable by the efficiency of the Native Police Force under Mr. Walker, and the whole of the northern frontier could be made equally so if an efficient officer was selected to proceed to the southward to obtain recruits, taking horses and clothing with him. By adopting this course the whole of the blacks could be brought into subjection, and few, if any, lives sacrificed. No time should be lost, as the aborigines are becoming more bold every day, and the occupation of the country more difficult to retain.

John Miller, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: I believe you have prepared a written statement of your views respecting the Native Police, for the information of this Committee? Yes: it contains my opinion; but with respect to the calculations at the end, as they were done hastily, I cannot vouch for their strict correctness. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.) John Miller, Esq. 16 July, 1858.
2. You consider the present Native Police Force inefficient? I do.
3. Have you had many opportunities of seeing the force? Yes, both at Weranga and Dulacca.
4. Where is Dulacca? Adjoining Mr. Ferrett's station, Waltami, and Gordon and Coxen's.
5. In what district? Darling Downs. It is on a creek running into the Dogwood.
6. Have the blacks annoyed you at all? Never. They have never molested me in any way. There were a number of the Dawson blacks, I am led to believe, on my station when I came away. They can come from the Dawson to Dulacca in about fifty or sixty miles.
7. Do you know the present Commandant of the Native Police? I am not particularly acquainted with him. He stopped a couple of nights at Weranga, when he came up first, but he was not Commandant then: that is the only acquaintance I have of him.
8. Do you know whether he is an efficient officer? I could not say. The station at Wandai Gumbal, under Mr. Francis Nicol, was only eighteen miles from Dulacca, so that I had a good opportunity of knowing the Native Police.
9. Did you know the Native Police when under Mr. Walker? Yes; they used to stop always at Weranga.
10. Were they then efficient? Yes, very efficient.
11. To what cause do you attribute their present inefficiency? Various causes. In the first place, most of the old Murray blacks were disbanded, and therefore they have had to recruit out of the blacks surrounding the very places where the murders have been committed. That is one reason.
12. Do you imagine that a fresh force might be enlisted to a large extent in remote districts—down the Darling, for instance? Well, I do not know really whether the blacks are numerous there or not. If they could be got from there I consider they would be just as efficient as those that Mr. Walker had, if they were equally well managed.
13. Can you suggest to the Committee any reason for the numerous murders that have taken place in the Dawson River District? It is a very difficult question. You see the great thing a squatter has to do is to be at peace with the blacks, and not commit the first aggression: that is what I have always studied. For instance, it has been known that squatters have gone out with the police, and certainly they have punished the blacks when they could get at them; but if a relative of a black who happens to be killed is left, of course he takes revenge. The great thing is, not to be the first aggressor. Punish them, but do not shoot them for the first offence.
14. Have you been in the habit of allowing the blacks in upon your station? Yes.
15. With impunity? They never did any harm.
16. Do you think the squatters, generally, unnecessarily molest the blacks? I am not aware of any having done so. I was told that at Hornet Bank station—but I could not vouch for it—they destroyed some of their dogs. I have done the same to the blacks at Dulacca.
17. How did you destroy them? With poison, when they came and molested the sheep at night. They never resented it. I told them the cause.
18. Have you heard that the destruction of those dogs at Hornet Bank was the cause of the murders

- John Miller, Esq.
16 July, 1858.
- murders there? I have heard that the blacks were very much offended at their killing a lot of their dogs; but whether that was the cause is a question.
19. Do you know the Dawson River District personally? I have never been at Hornet Bank; but I have been further out. I have been at Scott and Thompson's station on Palm-tree Creek, and at Kinnoul, Miller and Turubull's, and several other places.
20. You would approve of a white police force being mixed with the Native Police? Yes. If there were six white men in a section, and two trackers for every six men, it would, I think, work very well.
21. How would you get over the difficulty of scrub fighting? If there were two trackers they could divide, three in each wing, with a tracker to each. Then they would do very well. Certainly they are not so quick in sight as blackfellows; but the trackers could point out the others when they saw them planted.
22. By Mr. Cribb: Planted in the scrub? Yes.
23. Not in clear spaces in the scrub? No. These blacks are very difficult to see; and a white man has not the sharpness of sight necessary to see them. Without trackers they would be very little good, except in the open country.
24. By the Chairman: Where would you suggest that the head-quarters of the Native Police should be? That is a thing I never gave any thought to.
25. Have the Native Police been always well received at the stations, as far as you know? As far as I know they have. I know that always when they came to Dulacca I received them well for my part; and I believe they have generally.
26. Are you aware of the daily pay the native troopers receive from the Government? I am told it is five-pence a day.
27. Do you consider that sufficient? They get rations and clothing as well. Really I am not prepared to say. I should think it is too small.
28. Would you consider that a larger sum would assist to render the force more efficient? I think it would.
29. Are you aware that many desertions now take place among the Native Police? I have known two or three cases where they have deserted.
30. By Mr. Taylor: You think a white force would be more effective than this force of Native Police? On the whole, I do, with the assistance of blacks.
31. A proportion of two trackers to six white men would change the nature of the force completely? Yes.
32. If you put one white man to two blacks, would not that be a more effective force in a scrub? The larger number ought to be white men, if you have white men among them at all.
33. You do not think they would work well together? No.
34. Do you think the present Native Police Force can be made effective? I do not think they can, without getting white men amongst them.
35. By the Chairman: Have you any further suggestions to offer? There is one observation which I wish to make. There is very bad and broken country at the back of Kinnoul, Hornet Bank, and Mr. Cardew's station, and the blacks get there, and there are such precipices and ravines that they cannot be followed. What I would take the liberty of suggesting would be, to put up some barracks on that frontier, and then the blacks would be checked from coming in. Now, they come in and murder the shepherds, and before they can be followed they are away into this broken country. There might be two stations of police there.
36. Where would you place them? Somewhere about the centre of that country, where they go back. They would be frightened then to come past these stations.

APPENDIX A.

Sydney, 6 July, 1858.

To the Chairman and Select Committee of the Legislative Assembly, appointed to inquire into the Native Police, and Murders lately committed on the Dawson.

As I have been for many years on the outer stations on the Darling Downs, with your permission I offer the following observations as to the Native Police and its general management.

I would, upon consideration, recommend a corps of white men. If the present force is continued, the first difficulty to be overcome is that of recruiting. As long as the troopers are raised from among the tribes they are supposed to quell, they never will be effective, not even if they are taken 100 miles from their actual nativity.

Mr. F. Walker succeeded in making troopers enlisted in the Northern Districts highly serviceable, because they were kept in check by the original men brought from the Murray.

Troopers intended for service in the Leichhardt ought not to be taken from any place nearer than the Barwan or Severn Rivers.

I still believe a body of Native Police, well organized under a competent Commandant, and officers of energy, and brought from a distance of 200 miles, would in many respects be superior to a body of whites. Every man would be a tracker in scrub fighting; they would be better able to cope with the savage, from their natural sagacity in tracking and the quickness of their eye, and not afraid of losing each other, as whites would be; they act more independently while in scrub,—this is a great advantage, as they can spread over more country.

But, taking the Native Police as they at present exist, a corps of whites would be more efficient. I may observe, that within the last twelve months the depredations of the blacks have been excessive, simply for the reason that they are very seldom punished for what they do. The fact is, that the present force are not able to cope with the blacks on the Dawson.

Dawson. I don't think that in the whole of Her Majesty's service there is a lot more ill-used horses. I will briefly give my reasons for supposing that white men, with one or more trackers, in the ratio of two blacks to every six whites.

They would take better care of their material and horses, and the question relative to gins would be got over; and I still further think that whites, after some practice, might so far improve in bush tactics as to be able to equal black policemen, and they would be less expensive. I shall, to the best of my belief, give the necessary numerical scale.

Black Police, according to Estimates, 120 men and 20 officers, besides sergeants, £16,000, viz. :—

Leichhardt District	18	white, and 6 trackers.
Port Curtis	6	" 2 "
Wide Bay and Burnett	12	" 4 "
Maranoa	6	" 2 "
Moreton Bay ..	6	" 2 "
Clarence River	6	" 2 "

White men:..... 54 18 Blacks.

One officer to every six men, exclusive of the two blacks.

I think a most efficient force could be kept for £12,000 per annum.

I have, &c.,
JOHN MILLER.

A larger number of men may be required in the Port Curtis country, more so as it is opened up.

WEDNESDAY, 21 JULY, 1858.

Present :—

MR. HODGSON,
MR. FORSTER,

MR. TAYLOR,
MR. BUCKLEY,

MR. RICHARDSON.

ARTHUR HODGSON, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

William Small, Esq., called in and examined :—

1. By Mr. Forster: You are a resident on the Clarence River? Yes.
2. How long have you been there? About sixteen years.
3. Residing there, backwards and forwards? Yes.
4. I suppose you are pretty well acquainted with the habits of the aborigines? Yes.
5. And you are also acquainted with the state, condition, and management of the Native Police, while they have been on the Clarence? Yes.
6. What is your opinion of that force at present, from what you have seen of it—do you think it efficient? I do not.
7. Do you think it very inefficient? Yes.
8. As the force at present exists, do you think it rather mischievous than otherwise? I should say it is.
9. Do you think the blacks would be managed better if there were no Native Police Force? I do; if there were Europeans instead.
10. Will you state to the Committee in what way the present Native Police Force on the Clarence renders the blacks more troublesome? They are allowed to keep gins belonging to the other blacks; and whenever they are ordered to go out, the gins know from the police the direction they are going in, and away they start and give the blacks information; and when the police come to the camp the blacks are all gone.
11. How do they get these gins—do they take them by force, or threaten the blacks, to induce them to give them up? I think they threaten the gins to make them go with them.
12. Do the blacks of the tribes generally acquiesce, or do they allow them to remain from fear? I think it is from fear.
13. Then you think the Native Police use their authority as police to compel the wild tribes to give their women up to them? I do.
14. Is it the common practice of the Native Police to take these gins about with them? No; they leave them at the police station.
15. Then I suppose you have not seen the gins travelling about on the police horses? Never.
16. Are we to infer that at every new place they come to they have a supply of gins belonging to the place? Yes.
17. What is the nature of the outrages generally committed by the blacks on the Clarence? There has only been one for some time.
18. Do they commit murder generally, or confine themselves to killing cattle? Killing cattle, and petty thefts.
19. Have any outrages on women been committed by the blacks? Yes; there was one a short time ago.
20. Is not the Clarence rather remarkable for outrages on women by the blacks? Yes; there have been three within my knowledge.
21. Have the perpetrators of these outrages ever been dealt with? Only one, who was taken by the blacks of his own tribe.
22. What was done with him? He is now in Darlinghurst Gaol waiting his trial.

23.

Wm. Small,
Esq.

21 July, 1858.

- Wm. Small, Esq.
21 July, 1858.
23. Are the perpetrators of the other outrages, who were not dealt with, still at large in the District? No; I think they are dead.
 24. Is there a general feeling of dissatisfaction with the Native Police, or otherwise, among the settlers on the Clarence? There is dissatisfaction.
 25. Do you think the settlers would rather be without them, than with them as they are now? They would, if there were two or three Europeans instead. I think they would be satisfied if there were two or three Europeans joined to the ordinary police force there, with a native for a tracker.
 26. Could you give any reason to the Committee for the force being so inefficient as it is—do you think it is owing to the bad management, or the bad character, of the officers? No, I think it is the natives. When Mr. Morrisett was there first he had natives from other parts of the country, whereas they have at present taken them from the tribes close at hand.
 27. Whose fault is that? I suppose that of the parties authorised to get recruits.
 28. Do you think the officers who command the force in general are good officers? Yes, as far as I know them.
 29. You do not attribute the inefficient state of the Native Police to the officers? No.
 30. You think it is owing to the bad system of employing blacks from the neighbourhood? Yes.
 31. Do you think if the troopers were obtained from distant places it would be a good force? Yes.
 32. Do you think the settlers would rather have it then than be without it? Yes.
 33. From what you say, the cattle-holders on the Clarence would seem to be the principal sufferers from the blacks. Yes. A short time ago I had occasion to go to the outside of the run mustering—Mr. Dempster, the lieutenant in charge of the Native Police, was away at New England, and on the main camp I found two gins and one of the police hunting for game, and, of course, when we brought the cattle there, they went away in every direction.
 34. Have you any reason to believe that the Native Police join in hunting your cattle, or spearing them? No; I never saw them.
 35. Do you think that when sent after the blacks, to punish them for any depredation that has been committed, they do their duty properly, or show any favoritism to one tribe more than another? I cannot say.
 36. I think you have suggested that the employment of white troopers in conjunction with the blacks would be a good step? Yes.
 37. What proportion would you suggest? I should say three whites and one black, for a tracker would be quite sufficient for the district.
 38. Do you think white police would be able to follow the blacks? Yes, I am sure of it.
 39. To follow them through the scrubs on the Clarence? Yes.
 40. Are the scrubs on the Clarence as bad as in other parts of the country? No, I do not think so.
 41. Are there not what are called coast scrubs? I have been a good deal on the coast, and I never saw any scrubs there.
 42. Are there not scrubs on the banks of the river? Yes.
 43. Would it be easy for white police to follow the blacks through those scrubs? I think it would.
 44. Do you think the officers of the Native Police have a proper control over the men they command? No, I think not; for, if they speak sharp to them they abscond.
 45. Then the officers are afraid to give them orders for fear they would run away? I think so.
 46. Do you think they are personally afraid of them—of their violence? No.
 47. Would you approve of an alteration in the law to make the Native Police a military force, and to authorise the Government to shoot them in extreme cases? I do not think they would join if that was explained to them.
 48. Do you think the Native Police are actually required on the Clarence? I do not.
 49. You think it would be better to have a certain number of white police? White police altogether, with one native for a tracker.
 50. Then, in fact, your suggestion amounts to abolishing the Native Police altogether on the Clarence, and substituting white troopers? Yes.
 51. You consider the Clarence District has arrived at that stage when it does not require black police? Yes. The natives have been very quiet lately. There has been only one depredation for some time.
 52. You do not mean to say black police are not required in other districts? No.
 53. An extension of the common police would be sufficient for what is wanted down there? Yes.
 54. Do you think that is the feeling of the inhabitants generally? Yes. The only thing I have known the black police to do for the last twelve months was to go to New England for recruits; and those they brought down were mere boys, who would not be fit for service for two or three years.
 55. Do they travel about a good deal? Not a great deal.
 56. Do they keep to the high roads when travelling? Yes.
 57. Do they remain long at one place without moving? No. They have not been through the district as far as Mr. —'s station since they returned from the Macleay, except to get recruits.
 58. By Mr. Richardson: Would you have the proportion of one black to three whites apply to all parts of the Colony? No, only to the Clarence.
 59. What proportion of blacks would you have in places where the scrub is very dense? I should say two natives to one white.
 60. You think the native police, as at present constituted, inefficient? Yes.

Wm. Small,
Esq.

21 July, 1858.

61. And you think it necessary a thorough change should be made? Yes.
62. By the Chairman: We may understand that your information applies entirely to the Clarence? Yes. I do not know anything of any other district. I have never been in any other, except the Murrumbidgee some years ago.
63. Do you know the number of the Native Police on the Clarence? Eight, under two officers—Lieutenant Dempster and the camp sergeant.
64. Are you aware of any blacks having been recently enlisted on the Clarence, and sent to the north? Yes.
65. Do you know under what circumstances that enlistment took place? I do not.
66. Do you know the blacks that were sent? No; they were brought from about sixty miles from Grafton.
67. Do you know what has become of those troopers? They started for the north just before I left Grafton.
68. You are not aware they have absconded? No. One, I know, absconded as soon as he came down to Grafton.
69. Have the blacks diminished in numbers on the Clarence? Yes, very much.
70. From what causes? Deaths, from different diseases. The measles took off a great many.
71. Do you attribute the number of deaths among them to their association with the whites? In great measure.
72. From drink, and so on? Yes. A short time ago there were one or two murdered through drink. It is a thing they have got very fond of.
73. Have you ever been acquainted with Mr. Morrisset, the Commandant of the Native Police? Yes.
74. Do you think him an active and efficient officer? Yes.
75. Do you think he is well acquainted with the manners and customs of the blacks? Yes. The blacks behaved very well under him.
76. Would you recommend that the appointment of the subordinate officers should be vested in the Commandant? I should think so; he should know those that would suit him better than others.
77. Are you aware of the amount of pay the troopers of the Native Police receive? Six-pence or eight-pence a day, I believe.
78. It is five-pence—do you consider that sufficient? No, I do not.
79. Why not? They are people who are fond of buying things when they come to Grafton, and if they are not humoured in their fancy they are very soon dissatisfied.
80. Do you think increased pay would make the force more efficient? No; I think the more they get the more they look for.
81. You are against giving them increased pay? Yes.
82. You do not consider that the Native Police Force is necessary on the Clarence? I do not: I think two or three mounted constables would be sufficient in that district, with a tracker.
83. Where is the Native Police camp at present? About ten miles from Grafton.
84. Are there barracks there? There is a place for the lieutenant and for the camp sergeant. The natives put up a place for themselves, and keep shifting it about almost every week, the same as the natives generally do.
85. Are the horses of the Native Police in good order? Some of them are, but generally speaking they are not. The blacks are worse on horses than white men, a great deal.
86. By Mr. Buckley: Is the whole of the Clarence District settled? Yes. A great deal of the scrub on the bank of the river has been taken up lately by the Hunter River settlers.
87. As the district is now, is there much covert for the blacks? Nothing like as much as there was in former years.
88. Do you think it is necessary to have a force of any kind to repress the depredations of the blacks? I should say it is. If the blacks found there was no force they would commence to play their tricks again.
89. Are they still in great numbers on the Clarence? Nothing like what they were. One time you could see them going about in large tribes; now it is very seldom you will see them.
90. Is it a common practice with the blacks to commit depredations on the Clarence and then go over the range to New England? No, never.
91. Or vice versa? No. The blacks at the Bellinger, whenever they commit any depredations there, come over to our side.
92. You think it quite possible for a white man to follow the blacks through such scrubs as you have on the Clarence? Yes. I think a blackfellow could get away from one of the native troopers quite as easily as from a white man. The only advantage in having black troopers is for tracking.
93. If the scrubs were very dense, do you think it would be possible for a white man to pursue a fugitive with the same facility as a black? No, I think not.
94. Then your remarks do not apply to other parts of the country where dense scrubs prevail? No.
95. You mentioned Lieutenant Dempster—was he at one time a sergeant in the force? He was.
96. Do you know by whom he was promoted? I am not aware.
97. Is he a good officer? Yes, as far as I have known him.
98. Did you know much of him during the time he was a sergeant in the police? He has been backwards and forwards to my station several times, and I have seen him about Grafton; but as regards his public duties I cannot say much. At the time the blackfellow who is now awaiting his trial committed the assault on the woman, he came out to my station and

- said it was a bad job, but there was no more notice taken of it. It was close to my station that the assault was committed. Two blacks of the same tribe made the blackfellow drunk and took him.
99. Was that the last outrage? Yes.
100. Was the blackfellow committed from the Grafton Bench? Yes.
101. If the country is so open as you say, do you think it necessary to have a black with the white police as a tracker? I do.
102. You think the Commandant should have the nomination of his own officers? Yes.
103. Do you think there are any young gentlemen in the bush who would be willing to undertake the duties of the Native Police, if they had the opportunity? I do not think there are in the Clarence District.
104. By Mr. Richardson: Where would you recommend that officers should be obtained for the Native Police? I should think those that are under Mr. Morrisset now would be the most fit.
105. In making other appointments, do you think he should confine himself to the bush? I think persons acquainted with the bush would be the most suitable.
106. Do you know most of the present officers of the force? I know Mr. Bligh, Mr. Dempster, and Mr. Morrisset.
107. Are they generally efficient? Yes.
108. Is that the feeling in your district? Yes. I never heard a complaint otherwise.
109. What pay would you give the native troopers? They would not be satisfied, whatever you gave them.
110. If we gave them more would they do any good with it? No; if you gave them more they would drink.
111. The present pay is sufficient, you think? Yes; although they do not think so.
112. Is drinking practised to a large extent amongst the blacks? Yes; not among the troopers; I never saw any of them drunk.
113. You said the native troopers are hard on the horses—from what cause? The slovenly way in which they ride. Their horses are always poor.
114. Do you attribute that to their being heavier on the horses, or to their not seeing them fed? I should say it is from the awkward manner in which they sit on their horses.
115. By Mr. Buckley: Generally speaking, they do not weigh so heavy as white men? No.
116. What weight do they ride with their accoutrements? Perhaps twelve stone.
117. By Mr. Richardson: I asked you if the officers you knew were generally efficient, and you said they were—is there not a general feeling that in other parts of the Colony the officers are inefficient? I have heard so.

FRIDAY, 23 JULY, 1858.

Present:—

MR. HODGSON, | MR. BUCKLEY,
MR. TAYLOR.

ARTHUR HODGSON, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Captain Maurice Charles O'Connell, called in and further examined:—

- Capt. M. C. O'Connell.
23 July, 1858.
1. By the Chairman: In your evidence you recommend the neighbourhood of Port Curtis as the best point for the head-quarters of the Native Police? Yes, I think so—that is my opinion.
2. Do not you think a more central spot would be found north-west of Gayndah? I think not, not with all the advantages which the spot I have named has attached to it. You must recollect occupation is progressing to the northward. We have new stations one hundred miles north of Gladstone. The distance westward of occupation is not much more than 150 miles; and the distance to the southward, towards which the operations of this corps have to be conducted, is between 200 and 300 miles; therefore, looking to the gradual progress of occupation towards the north, I think there cannot be a more convenient and central spot than the one I have indicated.
3. In the event of the Government consenting to send up white troopers from Sydney, where would you recommend them to be landed? At Gladstone.
4. Would you recommend that they should take their horses with them? I suspect they ought to do so. It would be better they should.
5. Would horses be easily procurable in the neighbourhood of Gladstone? Not to the extent required, I think.
6. Suppose the troopers were landed at Maryborough, would not the journey from Gladstone to Maryborough be an easy one? By no means difficult; it is 160 miles.
7. As there is no steam communication to Gladstone, would it not be more convenient to send them by steamer to Maryborough than by sailing vessels to Gladstone? It seems to me it would save trouble if they were landed at the place they were to remain at.
8. You are aware that horses by the steamer might be forwarded to Maryborough? Yes.
9. And by sailing vessels it would be, to a certain extent, impracticable? I don't know that it would be impracticable; it depends on the kind of ship. A large vessel would take up the whole force in five or six days, and perhaps do it as cheaply as a small steamer.
10. Do you consider that the buildings to which you have alluded in your printed report are absolutely necessary? I think so, if you wish to carry out the system efficiently and to do the thing properly.
- 11.

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.

23 July, 1868.

11. Would there be much difficulty in getting these buildings erected? I think not.
12. Do you think the cost would not exceed £5,000? That was but a rough calculation of mine, not having sufficient data to go by. I fancy it would not cost more, presuming the buildings were to be constructed of mere slab and shingles. I think this would be sufficient, supposing that in the course of time the position of the head-quarters of the corps would have to be moved as occupation extended further north, and that the districts which are now disturbed became settled.
13. You have doubtless given the subject much consideration—would you be good enough to state to the Committee what steps you would recommend to be taken immediately with regard to the suppression of the murders in the Dawson River District? If the object to be attained is the immediate suppression of the outrages, and present security to the districts disturbed, I apprehend the most effective mode of giving relief would be by raising or obtaining a number of tolerably qualified men, and dispatching them at once to the scene of the disturbances.
14. What number would you suggest? I have prepared a statement of what I thought might be the expense of the measure, which, however, can only be considered as an alternative one, and more of a temporary nature than the one I previously proposed. It is only a rough estimate, but it will give you a notion of the force required. (Witness handed in a statement of expenditure for Mounted Police Force for the Port Curtis and Leichhardt Districts. Vide Appendix A.)
15. Many witnesses have recommended that a certain number of white troopers should be forwarded to the Northern Districts, not to be amalgamated with the native troopers, but to patrol in parties of six or eight, principally in the open country,—what is your idea of that? I think a great deal will depend on the description of men you obtain, and upon the manner in which they are governed; and I think it is an experiment liable to very great risk of failure, judging from the style of men I have seen sent up as sergeants formerly.
16. Do you think the fact of the Government sending up twenty mounted troopers from Sydney to the Northern Districts would be circulated widely amongst the natives? Their presence ought to be made known by their appearance on the spot. I think it would have a good effect if you were enabled to obtain good men.
17. You think the very appearance of these men would have a beneficial effect? Yes, I think so.
18. Do you think further, that the fact of their continually appearing in the public thoroughfares in bodies of six would be beneficial? I think so, decidedly. As I stated before, the patrolling system is one of the most likely to be beneficial in its effects. I adopted that course myself when the districts immediately in the neighbourhood of Port Curtis became disturbed: I directed the ordinary constabulary to patrol one week, and the Native Police the alternate week, throughout the disturbed districts, and during the continuance of this arrangement no outrage occurred. The Native Police, however, being taken away from me, it fell on the constabulary alone, and I was obliged to discontinue it.
19. By Mr. Buckley: You say you propose Gladstone for the head-quarters? The neighbourhood of Gladstone, on the Calliope River.
20. How far is that from the districts which are disturbed? 150 miles.
21. Would not that be an immense distance to have to communicate with a force like this in case of an outbreak? I think not. I propose the force should be distributed all over the disturbed districts at out-stations:—one station at Taroom, another at Rannes, on the Fitz Roy, at Maryborough and Brisbane, and two intermediate stations. The out-stations are so placed that they could easily communicate with each other, and reinforcements could be sent by the head-quarters to supply these places as the men there moved on to the disturbed places.
22. Would you not imagine a party of five white troopers equal to ten or twelve aboriginal troopers? It depends on the leader of the aboriginals. The aboriginals are certainly equal to the whites; but I don't believe that five whites are equal to ten blacks, properly led.
23. You know a good deal of the blacks—do not you suppose if the whites and blacks were mixed together, and any differences arising between them—the whites wishing to have their own way—it would cause the blacks to be dissatisfied? The management of the blacks is a very difficult matter. I said so in my evidence before. I should select those to lead them who have most tact; and I believe the blacks are capable of forming great attachment to white men—to those they like, and whom they feel confidence in. It is necessary to select those whom the blacks have confidence in, and they are the men only qualified for that duty.
24. Do not you think it desirable to have a given point at which the main force is to be stationed, in a central part, in order that they may disperse on either side—would it not be more desirable to have a central point rather than a seaport for the head-quarters? I think not. My object is to select a central point—such a point in the circle as to make the radius nearly equal to any point of the surrounding country.
25. From that position the country is affected north and south, but how would it affect the western portion? Equally. I believe it would be equally as advantageous for the protection of the western country as for the north and south.
26. You propose to erect buildings—how much will they cost? £5,000, fencing and building.
27. If this force is required to be moved, does not that expenditure appear almost unnecessary? I calculate that it will not be necessary to remove the force from that spot for ten years. Supposing the buildings were constructed of slabs and shingles, they would not be expensive, and they would be available for sale, so that there would be a return of some of the money expended: I don't see how the organization of the force could be carried out without.
28. You propose that £5,000 should be expended in buildings for the whole force of blacks and whites? Not the whole force—for such a number as are at head-quarters, where the organization

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.

23 July, 1858.

organization is to take place: the want of space in the first instance could be relieved by having the men under canvas.

29. How many men do you propose this building should accommodate? 60 men; the total number is 120.

30. By Mr. Taylor: If, then, white troopers were sent out, do you think it better to let the Commandant have the whole charge, and distribute them as he might think fit, and would you give the Commandant charge of both? Whoever is responsible ought to have sole charge.

31. And either distribute them among the blacks or otherwise? Whoever is responsible for the district must have the whole force under his charge, and do as he pleases.

32. It was suggested that they should not be mixed in any way? You must give the officer in charge full power to do what he likes.

33. By the Chairman: Do you happen to know the present rate of pay for Native Police? I understand that it is 1s. 6d. per diem, to cover the expense of rations and everything else.

34. At the present time it is only five-pence a day, with clothing and rations? I was not aware of it. I did not know that any sums of money were distributed among the black troopers.

35. Do you consider that sufficient? I apprehend that money given to the black troopers is thrown away; I do not see that it is of any use to them.

36. You would not recommend an increase in their pay? Decidedly not.

37. Rather a reduction? No, I recommend no reduction; but I think the 1s. 6d. a day given is sufficient to provide for their cost of living and provisions, and such luxuries as they require—tobacco and pipes, &c.

38. Do you not think that the white troopers could be enlisted at a less amount of pay than that mentioned in your printed evidence? I have taken the amount of pay from that given to the constabulary, and I presume you cannot get a man for a lower amount for this service than the pay for ordinary service.

39. Do not you think the system would work better if Government found the rations? I am hardly prepared to say. The provision of rations requires a great deal of account work. There might be some person charged with commissariat supplies and commissariat rations accounts. I have found in the bush, with my own orderlies, there is comparatively little difficulty in their providing themselves; they take their small quantities of supplies. I apprehend each man could regulate his own accounts, and supply himself.

40. Do you not think that the Secretary attached to the Native Police Force could carry out the duties of a commissariat officer, that is, at the head-quarters? It depends on the number of vouchers required by the Commissariat and Audit Office. If vouchers are multiplied—the duties of the force extending over such a tract of country, in which communication is unfrequent—trifling items would entail the necessity of complicated accounts, and be difficult of arrangement.

41. As Commissioner of Crown Lands, did you find any difficulty in getting your ration accounts made up? My troopers find themselves.

42. In the Burnett? Yes, unless for their private convenience, their supplies were provided for them sometimes.

43. You would not recommend the transport of any white troopers, unless previously drilled and organized in Sydney, under Captain McLerie? I think, most decidedly, they should be organized and drilled in Sydney before being sent up.

44. You imagine there would not be much difficulty in procuring these men, discharged out of the regiments previously quartered here? I think a number of men, who had previously had training, would not require to remain a long time under Captain McLerie's superintendence.

45. Would you prefer old soldiers, if physically capable and of good character? It would be desirable to take those who have been discharged, if physically capable. I have seen a great many here with good characters, and quite competent for these duties when they get some acquaintance with the bush.

46. By Mr. Buckley: You lived in the Burnett District some time? Yes.

47. Do you think it at all likely that there are parties (young gentlemen, for instance,) who go into the country to obtain colonial experience, who would volunteer to go into the service—regular competent men? I doubt it very much.

48. Do you recollect any volunteering during the time you were in the Burnett District? The Native Police only came two or three years before I left the Burnett District.

49. You recollect no gentlemen volunteering? I recollect no instance of a person volunteering.

50. And you are not aware of any person joining the Native Police? Yes, I am aware of Mr. Murray, in the Wide Bay District, joining the Native Police.

51. Do you recollect any others? I do not recollect any others.

52. By Mr. Taylor: Do not you think these troopers have considerable difficulty in getting rations at the different stations: when they have no money in their pocket do the storekeepers give them rations on their responsibility? I think travellers obtain rations without any difficulty in that way. These men are constantly travelling as a moving body. If one man is responsible for the whole company, the settlers have no objection in giving them what is required. I should have no hesitation myself in trying it without any provision of rations from the Government. I believe it would work well, from what I have seen in the bush. I know, with the ordinary constabulary and Commissioners' orderlies there is no difficulty; I have heard there has been great complication of accounts, arising from the difficulties of communication. If rations are issued by the Government, the Government require, very naturally and properly, a strict account of the number to whom rations are issued daily. There must be a sort of form filled up by the Commanding Officer of the names and rank of each person receiving rations. This account, kept in a particular form for several days, is

is then forwarded to the officer in charge of the section, and then forwarded to the head-quarters, or Auditor General's Office. So many transmissions causes a difficulty, and I think great complication of accounts would arise by this plan. At the same time I acknowledge it is a question open to a difference of opinion.

Capt. M. C.
O'Connell.

	7,380	0	0

Say £8,000.

E. B. Uhr, Esq., J.P., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You are a magistrate of the territory, I believe? I am.
2. You reside at Maryborough? Yes.
3. How long have you resided there? For the last nine years.
4. You have been constantly resident in the Northern Districts? I have, for the last fifteen or sixteen years; fifteen years, I think.
5. Have not the head-quarters of the Native Police Force been stationed at Maryborough? About eight miles from Maryborough, on the south side of the river.
6. How long have the head-quarters been there? I cannot say the year; from Mr. Morissett's arrival at Maryborough, I think it was some three or four years back.
7. Was that Mr. Morissett the officer stationed at Maryborough? He was the officer in command—the first lieutenant.
8. Under whom? There was no Commandant of the Force. I think the time the force was stationed there he was Commander of the Force.
9. Are you inclined to think him an efficient officer? I am hardly able to speak of that. I think he is as competent as any person I know, and he has had a good deal of experience.
10. Is he active? He appears to be active and energetic, and does all he can with the force under his control; but he has had many difficulties to contend with.
11. Are these difficulties at an end? No, certainly not.
12. From what cause? From the inefficiency of the natives, and the difficulty of getting proper men.
13. Do you remember the force under Captain Walker? Yes; I remember when he first came to Maryborough. That was eight or nine years back.
14. Was the force then efficient? I considered it most efficient, and I considered him (Captain Walker) a most efficient officer. The men were well disciplined, and there was every energy used to suppress the aggressions of the blacks at that time.
15. And did the force deteriorate? It did not on account of the force itself, but in consequence of the discrepancies of the Commandant, and he himself fell off in his management.
16. You are aware he was dismissed? I am.
17. You are also aware of the alleged cause of his dismissal? The alleged cause was drunkenness.
18. Have you, during your residence in Maryborough, had many opportunities of becoming acquainted with the officers of the Native Police Force? Yes, I have frequently seen them.
19. Do you think them efficient? Yes, I think so, if they had proper men to control. The efficiency is void by their not having proper troopers.
20. Without particularising names, are you not aware some are notorious drunkards? Yes, it is so reported. One, I believe—with regard to one I have every reason to believe such is the fact.

E. B. Uhr,
Esq., J.P.

23 July, 1868.

E. B. Uhr,
Esq., J.P.

23 July, 1858.

21. Then your knowledge only extends to one? Yes, only one. I have heard reports and observations from parties that he is rendered unfit for his duties on account of his love of drink.
22. What is the nature of the building near Maryborough? I have never been up to the police camp. The troopers' buildings are made of bark and slabs of the rudest description.
23. Are they still in use? Yes, they are; and as parties of Native Police come to Maryborough the buildings are used as head-quarters.
24. When you left Maryborough was the Native Police Force there at the camp? There were officers and two sergeants, but very few of the Native Police there. I believe there are very few of the Native Police in the force.
25. Can you give the Committee any idea of the present number of the officers of the force? I cannot, except from rumour—that it consists of 18 or 20.
26. Can you give any idea of the number of troopers? That I can only do by hearsay. I am told there are 30 or 40—there may not be so many. I am of opinion there are not so many; that is the rumoured number.
27. If your information is correct, do not you consider the number of officers is far in excess? Yes, I do. I consider it a great drag and expense to the Colony in the present state of the Native Police Force. I have considered it so for a long time.
28. From your knowledge of the Native Police Force, how many officers should be appointed to a section of troopers? I think every 12 troopers would require one officer at least.
29. If the number of troopers amounted to 120, how many officers would you recommend should be appointed to the force? At the rate of one to 12, and the Commandant.
30. Of course, exclusive of the Commanding Officer? Yes.
31. Are you aware that the native troopers have been recruited in the immediate neighbourhood of these murders? I don't know that they have been recruited from the immediate neighbourhood of the murders, but in Maryborough. Many who have joined the force find their way back into the town after joining the force.
32. Would you suggest any remedy to prevent such an evil? The remedy I should suggest would be either to have a white force or get the natives further south of Moreton Bay. They never will make efficient troopers from any that can be got in the district. They may join the force for the novelty, and for a time, but they abandon it at their earliest leisure.
33. If enlisted from a distance the blacks so enlisted would be afraid of absenting themselves? Yes; on account of the strange tribes they would have to pass through—so they would become good soldiers. It was that which made Mr. Walker's force so efficient in the first instance.
34. Would you recommend an amalgamation of white troopers with native troopers? Certainly not. I would recommend a white force, similar to those we used to have under Sergeant Temple, in the old convict time, and black trackers when necessary to go after the blacks; these may be got in the immediate neighbourhood.
35. Do you not think the force might be made efficient by sections of black troopers being employed in the most scrubby part of the country, leaving the white force to be employed in the open country? I think the white force generally as good as the blacks; they are more persevering. I don't think there is much perseverance in the blacks; they may take a camp, but they don't follow it up like the whites. I think a white force with trackers would have more stability, and be more beneficial in the end.
36. Do you not think the white troopers would find the impenetrable scrubs in the Northern Districts great obstacles to their being useful? Certainly, in the scrubs they would have a good deal of hardship and difficulty to contend with; but we have had the experience of gentlemen, going out and protecting their stations, going into the scrubs and successfully protecting themselves against the murders and outrages of the blacks. Now, if gentlemen could do this, I think paid men ought to be able to do it with blacks as trackers.
37. Is it not a matter of notoriety that black troopers on entering the scrub take off their clothes? Yes; I always understood that to be the case when they are going to surprise a camp, but the white troopers would have the benefit in having a couple of trackers.
38. Could you suggest to the Committee the best site for the head-quarters of the Native Police Force? My experience is hardly sufficient; I think somewhere in the centre of the frontier districts—somewhere in the neighbourhood of the Dawson; that is the position I should suggest for the head-quarters, so that they immediately could be distributed in the disturbed districts whenever disturbances took place. At Wide Bay, I apprehend, the natives will yet be very troublesome. Civilization always seems to make these fellows more troublesome than when in their wild state; they come to know their power, and, consequently, there is a good deal more trouble to contend with them. At Maryborough we have frequently robberies on sawyers knocked down, and besides, they rob people of money. In Maryborough, if they see a drunken man they rob him, and knock him down. There was a case the other day, brought before the magistrate sitting, against a man named Darby, who knocked down a sawyer, and robbed him.
39. You would rather have the spot nearer to Gayndah than Port Curtis? The only advantage to Port Curtis is the communication with head-quarters sooner. I think I would have the site nearer the frontier.
40. Is there not a steamer constantly plying between Wide Bay and Sydney? Yes, monthly; it used to come fortnightly.
41. How many horses could it convey? I think fifteen is the number it is chartered for; it can carry twelve.
42. Suppose the Government sent up some twenty troopers from Sydney to the Northern Districts, would you recommend the horses being sent with them, or should the horses be got there? I think the horses should be sent, certainly.
43. You think it would be less expensive? Yes. There is not a sufficient number of horses equal to that demand, if they were to be got at Maryborough.
44. You have had an opportunity of observing the native troopers of late? I have.

45. Are they clean and orderly, or do they impress you with an idea that they are not sufficiently looked after? Well, some of them look rather smart, others look like hogs in armour. Their clothes sit uncomfortably on them. I suppose they make themselves as decent as their nature will allow them. Some are smart, and take pride in their dress, others are not so. It is very difficult to make the blacks look well in their dress. The old troopers, those under Commandant Walker, were very natty in their dress.
46. Are you aware how the rations are given to the force at present? I believe they are allowed so much a day, and that they are procured by the Commandant, or officer in command, as required. That system seems to work very well.
47. You think that system is preferable to any other? Yes, to any other that could be adopted. Contracts might be issued. It would be difficult to get a contractor to furnish rations at the different stations. I think the present system is the only one that could be adopted.
48. Are you aware what the native troopers receive? Only from hearsay. Altogether, or rations?
49. Altogether? I have heard they get the sum of 4d. or 5d. as a money payment; and their rations consist of 2 lbs. of meat, 1½ lbs. of flour, with a small quantity of tea, sugar, tobacco, and soap, also salt, per day. The quantity of meat is larger than usually allowed by the Government.
50. Are you personally acquainted with Lieutenant Murray? Yes.
51. Do you consider him an efficient officer? Yes, a most active officer, and a man of great experience.
52. Are you acquainted with Lieutenant Bligh? I do know him.
53. Could you mention the names of two officers whom you would select in preference for sending them to the Southern Districts for the purpose of enlisting troopers? Yes. I think the two gentlemen you named are most suited to the purpose; yet I would hardly recommend their being taken out of the district at the present time, their services are so useful. They are the best, and only two, I would recommend for such an undertaking.
54. If their services could be dispensed with, they are the best men to select? Yes.
55. Are you aware that the Government sent Lieutenant Allman on such an expedition some few months since? I am not; this is the first I have heard of it. I heard Lieutenant Allman was in Sydney on leave of absence; I was not aware of it; afterwards I heard he was not in the force.
56. Do you know where Lieutenant Allman is now? He was some two or three months since in Maryborough.
57. Would you suggest that the appointment of the subordinate officers should rest with the Commandant? Yes, most certainly.
58. Without the Government veto? I think he should be held responsible for the appointments, and if he made an improper one, it would be for the Government to mark their sense of it.
59. Are you aware that young men have been forwarded from Sydney to join the Native Police as officers, who afterwards were found thoroughly incompetent? I have been so informed. All the Native Police officers ought to have a knowledge of the bush and the native character before they can make efficient officers for such a corps.
60. By Mr. Buckley: You say there should be one officer to twelve troopers, would that be sufficient? That is my opinion.
61. What would you style him? Lieutenant.
62. In the event of any accident occurring to him, or sickness, what would be the position of the division? If the officer were taken sick it would be necessary, of course, to have some one to relieve him.
63. Would you not then recommend the continuance of sub-lieutenants? I would have a few supernumerary officers in case of accident. I would not recommend more than one officer to twelve troopers, excepting two or three sub-lieutenants, in case of sickness or accident of any description. That may not happen once in seven years, or it may occur every day.
64. According to your statement, that would be one officer to eight troopers, including supernumeraries? That would require calculation.
65. The troopers are in sections of 12? I would have three or four supernumeraries, in case of their being required. One of the sergeants might take charge of the corps in the absence of the officer from sickness.
66. What is your opinion of the estimation in which sub-officers were held by native troopers in former times—were they ever fond of sergeants? I believe they were. There was Sergeant Dowling, under Commandant Walker, they were very fond of him.
67. Has it not been remarked that they do not pay attention to officers, except the Commandant? I never heard that before I came to Sydney.
68. Are you aware that the scrub is as dense in Wide Bay as it is in the districts further north? Yes, I think so.
69. You think, of your own knowledge, that the district is intersected by the scrub as much as those further north? Yes, from my knowledge.
70. And affords a considerable cover for the blacks? Yes.
71. In that case, with a body of white troopers and two trackers, what would be the position of these men if they found that only the trackers could penetrate the scrub? I do not think the scrubs so dense that a white man could not follow the trackers. A white man might not be able to go as fast as the blacks can, but I know gentlemen who have done it.
72. If these men were not efficient enough to drive the blacks out they would be, of course, useless—I mean the white troopers? I should suppose that eight troopers would be always sufficient when they came up to the blacks to drive them out, or, at all events, to disturb their camp. The black trackers—I should also make use of them in case of attack.
73. Are they very careful of their horses? Yes, very. That is another reason why I recommend

- mend white troopers. The horses are more taken care of, and fit for service when required.
74. Do the blacks abuse their saddles, harness, and their garments? No doubt, if not looked after.
75. You invariably see their horses with sore backs? Yes; they are bad horse masters.
76. Is it from hard riding, or the severe pace they go at? I may say from their severity in galloping horses. The black troopers when they have no head with them will go as hard as they can pelt.
77. By Mr. Taylor: Do you think it better to have appointed a greater number of whites or blacks? If you get the blacks from the south, and such a force as originally was under the charge of Commandant Walker, I think we should be equally well protected.
78. Do you think it better to have all white troopers? Or those I am speaking of.
79. Would you have more white troopers than blacks? I would say have black troopers, if they were as efficient as those under Commandant Walker. I would sooner see no Native Police than as it is at present.
80. Then you think the present force does more harm than good? They certainly are not doing much good, and they tend to do much harm; the natives having got a contempt for them. If you get good troopers—the natives of the south—they will not amalgamate with the natives of the north, and will cause more dread, and keep them in better check.
81. If twenty white troopers were sent in the meanwhile, it would have a good effect on the district? That is difficult to say. If you got a good force, as under Sergeant Temple in the convict times, this white force would be superior. The difficulty of organizing such a force would be very great and very expensive. I certainly think the way the Native Police Force is at present constituted is not at all effective. I don't consider that this ineffectiveness is attachable to the Commandant. The expense is going on without any benefit being derived from it.

1. By the Chairman: Do you think it possible to send up from ten to twelve mounted troopers to act in the Northern Districts, to be attached to the Commandant of the Native Police? Do I understand you to mean men of the mounted force now existing?
2. Yes? No, not at all.
3. For what reason? The necessities of the service in Sydney and the Sydney District, in the first place.
4. Do you think there would be any difficulty in enlisting that number? I do not think there would, if the terms offered were commensurate with the price of labor in the Colony.
5. How long do you think it would take to enlist from ten to twelve troopers? I am aware that there are a number of young men in Melbourne waiting for police employment, who have recently arrived from Ireland. The Irish Revenue Police have recently been amalgamated with the general constabulary of Ireland, and these men have been thus thrown out of employment, and have emigrated in consequence. I have taken three of them within the last few days—very intelligent, well drilled men. I think, by communicating with the police authorities in Melbourne, I could raise, and drill sufficiently for service on the borders, any moderate number of men that may be required.
6. What pay per diem would you suggest should be given them? I do not think, having in view the present wages of labor in the Colony, that you could offer them less than five shillings a day, and rations.
7. With clothing? With clothing, of course.
8. You think with that pay there would be no difficulty in raising a body of men for the purpose? I do not anticipate any difficulty. I think I would be able to raise a sufficient number of men for the purposes required on the borders in a month, and instruct them in Sydney under my own officers.
9. You think such a force would be useful in the bush? I do, if amalgamated with the native troopers, and divided into parties of six white and four native troopers. I think in that proportion they would tend to the suppression of the outrages that have been taking place for some time in the Northern Colony. I think, in my evidence before a Committee of the House some time ago, I suggested that the parties should consist of ten men each. Small parties, with ready means of concentration, in case of necessity for an increased force, are a more effectual means of repressing crime than large bodies confined to certain districts. I think it is necessary to join native troopers with the white men; for, I served myself against the natives in New Zealand with troops, and I know the services of the troops would have been a perfect nullity without the assistance of natives. I presume that the denseness of the scrubs in the Northern Districts prevents the ready action of Europeans.
10. You are aware that there are large tracts of open country in the Northern Districts where Europeans would be useful without native blacks? I am aware that during the existence of the old Mounted Police they never went into the bush without trackers; in fact, trackers were regularly paid for the purpose—each party had a tracker attached to it.
11. By Mr. Richardson: You say there should be a proportion of six white men to four blacks? Yes.

12. Would you apply that to all parts of the country where they were required—where the scrubs are more dense, for instance? Of course, if the scrubs were dense, and the number of aboriginals assembled for hostile purposes were great, it would require a concentration of parties. Instead of one party with six whites and four blacks, you would have two with twelve and eight, or three with eighteen and twelve. John M'Leerie,
Esq.
29 July, 1858.

13. You think the sending up of some Mounted Police from here would be a decided improvement on the present force? I do. I have no official knowledge of what is going on on the borders.

14. But you know something of the working of the Native Police, having had them under your control for a short time? Yes.

15. Has it been your impression for some time that a larger infusion of white men would be beneficial to the corps? It has.

*Camboom, Leichhardt,
April 29, 1858.*

Sir,

I do myself the honor to transmit to you herewith depositions concerning the murder of four white men.

2. At the same time I take the liberty, which I hope your courtesy will consider pardonable, of trespassing on your valuable time, by claiming your sympathy and assistance, as a member of His Excellency's Government, for the stockholders and their men in this exposed district. The unfortunate shepherds, I think, more particularly require consideration, for their lives can always be taken, the more so as the aborigines seem to have some settled plan to murder as many as they can. On this occasion, the natives who committed this murder did not take any sheep, but only a carbine, powder and balls, and some axes. On the second day after the murder Lieut. Murray was on their trail, and he has not since been seen. Sub-Lieut Powell and two troopers also went after Mr. Murray. The murderers proceeded to the Banana, about 45 miles north from here, a station of Messrs. Hay and Holt, where they attacked a sheep station, at which there were three men. These white men, being alarmed, offered the aborigines everything they possessed, but the latter said that they would have only their lives; and "that they would take the lives of all the b——y white men in the country;" thus shewing their malice, and that amongst them were blacks who had long been living with the whites. The blacks then showered their spears and waddies. The whites were all wounded, but fortunately they defended themselves, and killed one black and wounded others, when the rest fled. In the first week of this month a white man was found lying near the road, about thirteen miles from here. He was shot through the ear; he was lying on his back, with a pistol lying on his breast, but close to, yet not grasped in his hand; there were bruises on his neck and back. He was not robbed, but his dog was missing. He was a travelling shepherd on foot, and his dog had been seen at the Banana. Shepherds with £30 in cheques do not commit suicide, even though they may have been tired and half dead with thirst; indeed, hard working laboring men seldom take their own lives. I believe that he was murdered by two blacks who had lately absconded from the Banana. On the 16th instant, or thereabouts, two shepherds were murdered at the now ill-fated Eurombah, Mr. Cardew's station, Upper Dawson, now so fully protected by Mr. Frederick Walker, ex-Commandant, Native Police, and ten ex-troopers, as also by the proximity of the Police Camp, not twenty miles distant. But there are bold men with the blacks, and experienced; on this occasion, as the door was found fastened, the blacks entered by the chimney during a dark night. The sheep station huts on Cracow Creek, by which I came here yesterday, had been robbed, and the shepherds threatened.

3. The Native Police do not, and cannot, afford the protection contemplated by the Government. The officers are active, and are now constantly on the patrol, as I know; but the recruits are not sufficient as yet to supply the number of troopers allotted for the Leichhardt, and many of these desert. Sub-Lieutenant Wheeler lost ten troopers, who all absconded at once. But even fifty men is but little to look after the now numerous inimical blacks which line the Dawson and Fitz Roy, on a frontier of more than three hundred miles. The scrubs and broken impracticable country occupy, perhaps, one-third of this district so continuously that the aborigines can travel, perhaps, from one end to the other under shelter. Nor do the new officers and recruits as yet know the bush, so as to be able to surprise the natives at their scrub-surrounded lagoons.

4. The remedy of high wages securing the services of men for shepherds whose courage will intimidate the blacks will be ruinous to the capitalist, and would ultimately cause the desertion of the district; and this will, I feel, never be permitted by His Excellency's Government. The substitution of Hottentots as troopers might succeed. The interest of the stockholders and their perplexity will, I trust, be my excuse with you for venturing these remarks on this occasion, when I cannot help giving some expression of the feelings of the persons amongst whom I live to one who is very capable of rendering them assistance.

EMIGRANT SHIP "STEBONHEATH."

(PROGRESS REPORT OF IMMIGRATION BOARD UPON CONDUCT OF SURGEON.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 20 April, 1858.

THE IMMIGRATION BOARD to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

SIR,

*Government Immigration Office,
Sydney, 12 March, 1858.*

We have the honor to report, for your information, that, in consequence of statements having been made to us at the usual inspection of the Immigrants on board the "Stebonheath" that irregularities had occurred on board that vessel, and that acts of cruelty had been committed by the Surgeon-Superintendent on some of the single Female Immigrants, an investigation has been held at this Office, and has up to the present time occupied the attendance of the Board for a period of six days.

2. Although much evidence has been taken, a great many more witnesses still remain to be examined; but sufficient has been elicited to satisfy the Board that two of the single females, names Ellen Loughborough and Henrietta Jackson, have been imprisoned in a cell erected by direction of the Surgeon-Superintendent for the purpose of punishment, and that they have also been treated with much cruelty, by having been handcuffed and kept under this painful restraint for a period of three days.

3. Nothing having transpired during the inquiry to justify such a proceeding on the part of the Surgeon, we beg to recommend that the Criminal Crown Solicitor be authorized to take such proceedings in the matter as the statements made by these girls will justify for punishing the Surgeon for the acts of impropriety and cruelty he appears to have been guilty of.

4. Other matters of grave importance, affecting the discipline of the ship, conduct of the Officers, and characters of some of the Female Immigrants, are still under inquiry, and as soon as the evidence is in a complete state a full report will be made, for the information of the Government, by the Board.

We have, &c.,

THE UNDER SECRETARY to THE AGENT FOR IMMIGRATION.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 12 March, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that, in compliance with the suggestion contained in a letter from the Immigration Board of this date, application has been made to the Crown Law Officers, with a view to such steps as may be necessary being taken by the Criminal Crown Solicitor against the Surgeon of the "Stebonheath" for his treatment of two Female Emigrants, in confining them in a cell, and placing them in handcuffs; and to request that you will therefore place yourself in communication with the Crown Solicitor, to afford him any further information which may be requisite.

I have, &c.,

THE AGENT FOR IMMIGRATION.

EMIGRANT SHIP "STEBONHEATH."

(REPORT OF BOARD UPON CONDUCT OF SURGEON, MATRON, AND OFFICERS OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 April, 1858.

REPORT of the Immigration Board on the Irregularities which occurred on board the Ship "Stebonheath," and the conduct of the Surgeon-Superintendent, Matron, and Officers of the vessel connected therewith.

IN drawing attention to their Progress Report of the 12th ultimo, relative to the inquiry then being carried on by them in reference to the ship "Stebonheath," in which they recommended that immediate steps should be adopted for the purpose of legal proceedings being taken by the Government against the Surgeon-Superintendent, for his ill-treatment on the voyage to the single females named in the margin,—the Board have now the honor to submit, for the consideration of the Government, the Minutes of Evidence taken by them, and the following Report, based on that evidence, at which they have arrived, after mature consideration.

*Ellen Loughborough.
Henrietta Jackson.*

2. The evidence, it will be observed, is very voluminous; but not more so, perhaps, than may have been expected from the result of an inquiry of such grave importance as that which could not fail to be attached to the case of the ship "Stebonheath," as brought under the notice of the Agent for Immigration, and by him submitted for the Board's consideration.

3. The ship "Stebonheath" sailed from Plymouth with Emigrants destined for this Colony, on the 30th September last, under the command of Captain Connell, and the Medical superintendence of Mr. Rowland.

4. Amongst the Emigrants despatched by this vessel were about one hundred and fifty single females, who were entrusted during the voyage to the custody of Miss Jane Chase, who was appointed to that charge by the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners.

5. The Ship had not been many days at sea when she encountered a frightful gale of wind, which so completely disabled her that she was obliged to bear up for Pauillac, a small seaport town on the coast of France, about 30 miles distant from Bordeaux, where she was re-fitted and re-provisioned, and from whence she sailed on the 1st November last, for this Port, which she reached on the 27th February, after a protracted voyage of upwards of five months.

6. On her arrival in this Port she appeared to be in good order, and at the ordinary inspection by the Immigration Board the only complaints made were as follows:—

- (1.) A man, named M'Donald, complained that he had been taken by the collar, and turned on deck by the Surgeon-Superintendent; and,
- (2.) Two constables, named Bergin, informed the Board that they had been displaced from their offices, the cause for which they requested might be inquired into.

7. The Surgeon-Superintendent at the same time made several grave charges against the Master and Officers of the vessel; and added, in his conversation with the Agent for Immigration, that, in consequence of the marked insubordinate conduct of some of the single female Immigrants under his care, he had been obliged to confine some of them in a prison which he had necessarily constructed for the purpose, and that, on two occasions, he had to place the offenders in handcuffs.

8. It having appeared to the Board that the punishment inflicted on the females referred to above was of an excessively arbitrary character, they felt that no other course was open to them than to adjourn the further inquiry into the circumstances of the case, with a view to afford the parties implicated an opportunity of justifying the line of conduct pursued by them.

9. Previously to the Board leaving the vessel, a letter was handed to them, a copy of which will be found in the Appendix, page 3, signed T. G. Kemp, which contained a distinct charge against the Surgeon-Superintendent of imprisoning, and otherwise ill-treating, two of the unmarried Immigrant girls, named Loughborough and Jackson.

10. Mr. Kemp was informed that the Board would meet on the following day, and that he should then have a full opportunity of preferring his complaint. In consequence, however, of the rather unexpected death of one of the single females, named Ann Cox, which necessitated the holding of an inquest on the body, the Board were obliged to postpone the initiation of the inquiry to the 5th ultimo.

11. As a consequence to be expected, the Surgeon-Superintendent, Dr. Rowland, was officially informed by this department that an inquiry would be held by the Immigration Board into the irregularities which occurred on board the ship "Stebonheath," and that, pending such inquiry, none of the gratuities payable to himself, the officers, or subordinates would be discharged until the decision of the Government had been obtained thereon.

12. Previously to a meeting of the Board, a statement was made by one of the single females, named Ellen Loughborough, to the Reverend Dean O'Connell, of the ill-treatment which she had received during the passage at the hands of the Surgeon-Superintendent; and that statement, as reduced to writing, will be found in the Minutes of the first day.

13. That statement, as well as other facts brought under the notice of the Board, induced them to afford every means in their power to all parties interested in the inquiry to produce such evidence before them as was calculated to elucidate the facts connected with the occurrences during the passage of the "Stebonheath" to this port; and although, for obvious reasons, it has not been customary to admit at such inquiries the presence of persons whose interests are not indentified therewith, an exception was made in this case by the Board, and they therefore felt themselves justified in departing from the ordinary course, by inviting the attendance at their proceedings of the Reverend Mr. Agnew, the Church of England Chaplain attached to the department, and also that of the Very Reverend Dean O'Connell, who ministered to the requirements of the Roman Catholic females who arrived by the vessel.

14. Both these gentlemen kindly attended during the inquiry, and interrogated many of the witnesses on points which elicited from them much information that might probably have otherwise escaped the attention of the Board.

15. The first complaint entertained by the Board was that made by the Surgeon-Superintendent, to the effect that some of the medical comforts—such as porter, milk, sago, mutton broth, lime juice, wine, &c.—were deficient in quantity, and that the Master and Officers of the vessel maintained little or no control over the crew, whose general conduct was of a most insubordinate character; the result of which was, that all his endeavors to uphold the Commissioners' Regulations for the prevention of intimacy between them and the single females was rendered nugatory, not only by the want of firmness on the part of the Master, but also by the bad example shewn by the 2nd and 3rd Mates in violating those Regulations, and associating on terms of equality with the seamen of the vessel.

16. On behalf of the owners, the agent of the vessel, Mr. Ford, attended in reference to the alleged deficiency in the medical comforts; and although he admitted that he could not correctly account for the disposal of some of the articles which were represented to be deficient, he nevertheless assured the Board that all the requirements of the Charter Party had been strictly complied with previously to the vessel leaving England, and that the owners sent their ship's husband to Pauillac to supply any deficiencies which may have been occasioned by reason of the disastrous circumstances attendant on her encounter with the heavy gale which she had the misfortune to fall in with shortly after her departure from England, and that all the articles, the short supply of which was complained of, were made good from the Captain's private stores, so long as he had any remaining on hand, after due allowance being made for the injury done to them by the influence of the weather, or the pillage of the crew during the storm.

17. Of the conduct of the Master and Officers, the evidence goes clearly to prove that the Master, Mr. Connell, was a good tempered person, but that when his interference was sought for, he afforded it with apparent reluctance, although he could not have been unaware of the fact that his crew were, as a body, most insubordinate in their general conduct.

18. The Chief Officer, Mr. Dray, deserves considerable credit for the firmness which he displayed during the voyage; as, although during the greater part of it he suffered seriously from the effects of an injury which he received in the gale already referred to, he nevertheless adopted every means within his power to prevent the formation of intimacies between the crew and the female Emigrants; the consequence of which was, that he became so obnoxious as to render it necessary that, during his watch, he was obliged to carry a pistol about his person for self-preservation.

19. The Second Officer, although not chargeable with having in any way mixed himself up with the single females, nevertheless set so bad an example, by walking the deck and smoking with the boatswain and carpenter, as to put it completely out of his power to suppress the outrages committed on the Matron, which usually occurred during his watch, and when she had pieces of rope or spunyarn thrown from aloft at her, and on some occasions tobacco juice discharged on her.

20. The Third Mate's conduct is deserving of the most extreme censure, for he appears to have sought every opportunity of violating the conditions of the Charter Party, which forbids intercourse of any kind between the officers and crew and the female passengers; and it has been proved that he was prevented, on one occasion, from having sexual intercourse with a girl named Elizabeth Bullin, by the presence of a sick girl in the female apartment, whom he had not observed at the time, but who made an immediate report of the occurrence to the Matron, which led to the removal of the offending girl.

21. Of the crew, the conduct of many was very bad, some having taken opportunities during the gale of intruding themselves into the single women's apartment; one (the Captain's cook) having gone so far as to get into bed with one of the girls, and to lay his hand on her person, and another, named Sullivan, to get behind the bed places for the purpose of communicating with a girl with whom he was known to have kept up a previous correspondence. Others of them have frequently visited the married people's apartment, for the purpose of speaking to the girls through the louver partition, and a correspondence between them and the single females was detected to have existed to such an extent as to lead to the supposition that the bulkhead was often removed, and the zinc on the skylights and water-closets destroyed, for the purpose of furthering their evil designs.

22. From the evidence adduced, it appears that in consequence of misconduct on the part of several of the single females, the Surgeon-Superintendent caused a prison to be erected in the female hospital, for the purpose of confining any of the female Immigrants who might become refractory. The prison represented, as nearly as possible, two upright boxes or cells, of not more than two feet square, with holes at the top for ventilation, but was unprovided with seats or any other means to enable the parties confined in them to take rest. In this prison, it has been proved that no less than nine single females were confined at various periods during the voyage, and also one single man. The term for imprisonment appeared to vary from two hours to four days; and in the cases of the girls Loughborough and Jackson, and the single man named Albert Thomas, the use of handcuffs was had recourse to.

23. The imprisonment of Loughborough and Jackson was accompanied by acts of extreme cruelty, their hands having been handcuffed behind their backs until they became swollen, and the girls themselves reduced to a very exhausted state.

24. The evidence, it appears to the Board, goes to prove that there may have been necessity for the infliction of some punishment on certain of the single females during the passage, passage, as in the case of one girl who was confined for striking her companion, and in that of another for threatening the lives of some of the young women, and using a knife on the occasion referred to; but it does not appear to them that there was any justification for the extreme cruelty exercised in most of the cases, particularly those of Loughborough and Jackson, whose refusal to perform a task set by the Matron cannot in any way be held to warrant their incarceration, and the other ill-treatment to which they had been subjected.

25. Mr. Rowland, the Surgeon-Superintendent of the "Stebonheath," had previously made six voyages to the Colonies in charge of Emigrants despatched by the Commissioners; and as they were usually characterized by successful results, it is the more to be regretted that on this, his seventh voyage, he should so far have forgotten himself, as he has undoubtedly done.

26. From the statement made by him before the Board, it will be seen that from the commencement of the voyage he had much to contend with, owing to the advantages taken of him by the crew during the gale, as well as by their subsequent misconduct whilst at Pauillac, and during the remainder of the passage. It is quite clear, however, that during the voyage, on three occasions at least, Mr. Rowland appeared to have been under the influence of liquor, and that whilst so he forgot the position which he ought to have maintained on board. The instances to which they refer are:—

(1st.) When he turned out the single men from their berths on the port side in the night to trim the ventilator.

(2nd.) When he fell into the water at Pauillac; and (3rd.) When he most injudiciously interfered on one occasion whilst the provisions were being served out in the hold.

27. There can be little doubt that most of these errors have been brought about by the erroneous opinion which he entertained of his own importance, and of the authority with which he considered himself invested by the Commissioners' Regulations, as well as by the instructions contained in the Queen's Order in Council in reference to passenger ships.

28. Dr. Rowland has been proved on all occasions, where the rights of the Emigrants were concerned, to have acted with the greatest propriety, and to have checked all acts of insubordination, or attempts to indulgence, on the part of the Emigrants in the use of profane language. In the discharge of his Medical duties there does not appear to be any ground for complaint, if the Board except the cases of Macdonnell's wife and the young woman Ann Cox; and it is, therefore, to be regretted that his absence from the Board meetings, at the close of their inquiry, should have obliged them to deal with these, as well as the other cases of complaint against him, without his being afforded an opportunity of explaining his conduct in respect to them, which his sudden disappearance has prevented the Board from granting to him.

29. The sudden removal of the man Macdonnell from the 'tween decks is reprehensible, as a less arbitrary course might have been adopted to induce him to remain on deck until the 'tween decks had been properly cleaned. The Board are also of opinion that his dismissal of two of his constables was not justified by the offence which they had committed.

30. In respect to the Matron, Miss Chase, it appears to the Board that from the very time of her appointment to the "Stebonheath" she entered upon her duties with fear and trembling, owing to the conduct of some of the single females during their conveyance by rail from London to Plymouth, which caused her to be suspicious as to what might be the result of such conduct when subjected to the temptations of a sea voyage. These anticipated results became apparent in the early part of the voyage, and were, doubtless, accelerated by the advantages which the disorder consequent on the gale, as well as the absence of all exertion on the part of the Master to control his crew, afforded to the ill-disposed on board.

31. In dealing with the Matron's case, it must be borne in mind that the punishment of imprisonment inflicted on the girls by the Surgeon-Superintendent was, in most cases, caused by a disobedience on their part to carry out the instructions issued to them by the Matron, and this fact, coupled with the unguarded testimony given by her at the inquest on the girl Cox, has, as may have been supposed likely to occur, caused much ill-feeling towards her; and statements have been made which, if at all borne out, would tend to exhibit her conduct in a most unsatisfactory light.

32. The evidence taken by the Board entirely removes this impression from their minds; and, although she may, in cases of excitement when meeting with much opposition to her orders, have spoken harshly to the girls, she does not, in the opinion of the Board, appear to have been guilty of indulging in the use of insulting epithets, or of making allusions of a coarse or improper character. The strongest evidence in the Matron's favor on these points will be found in the statements to the Board by several of the girls who had been imprisoned in consequence of disobedience to her orders, and who speak of her not only in the kindest manner, but express contrition for the conduct of which they were guilty, and for making groundless charges against her.

33. After a careful perusal of the evidence given against the Matron before the Board, it will be seen that it should be received with great caution, as, in most instances, it was put forth by Immigrants, each of whom considered, however erroneously, that she had just grounds for complaining of the Matron's conduct towards her; for instance, a Mrs. Bailey believed that as she had paid a portion of her passage money she ought to be exempt from the duties of cleaning or the necessity for attending muster. Ellen Loughborough considered herself unjustly treated in being called upon to perform some task for taking the part of her friend Ann Jackson; and Mrs. Lewis felt aggrieved because she had been removed from the office of nurse, and was on her arrival reported by the Matron to have obtained a passage to the Colony under false certificates, in which she and her daughter were represented to be single women and sisters, whilst the fact is, that she was coming to the Colony accompanied by her daughter, for the purpose of joining her husband, who had a short time previously arrived in this Port by another vessel in the capacity of a sailor. It will thus be seen that whilst those persons abstain from awarding her any credit at all, those who had, in some instances suffered punishment from her ideas of discipline, nevertheless give her credit for the course she adopted, and for the example she set to uphold morality amongst them, and, as far as possible to restrain the erring portion of her charge from the temptations to which they were exposed.

34. In so far, therefore, the Board consider the conduct of the Matron to have been most exemplary; but they are, nevertheless, constrained to think that, notwithstanding the intercession she appears to have made to induce the Surgeon to release from confinement the girls who were placed in the cells, she ought to have gone still farther, by giving up immediate charge as Matron rather than to have tacitly sanctioned the perpetration by the Surgeon-Superintendent of acts of cruelty towards any of the females under her charge. In not adopting such a course she appears to us to have assented (although, according to her own views, innocently,) to the course of punishment adopted by Dr. Rowland.

35. With the exception of about one hundred single females, the Emigrants consisted of persons who had obtained passages to the Colony under the Remittance Regulations; and, as far as the Board have been able to judge, they appeared a respectable class of persons. They made no complaints at the time of the Board's inspection of them as to any misconduct on the part of the Surgeon or Officers of the vessel towards them; and it is clear that they did not intend doing so, until the publication of the evidence taken at the inquest on Ann Cox, which informed the public of the irregularities which had occurred on board the "Stebonheath," and they naturally felt that their characters were thereby compromised, not only on account of the scenes of immorality brought to light, but also for withholding from the authorities here information of the serious outrages that had been committed on some of the single females. They were still further annoyed because it was asserted that they assisted the sailors of the vessel in having access to the single females through their apartment.

36. For concealing from the Board in their first examination of them the ill-treatment which some of the Immigrants received, much blame must still attach to them, but in respect to the charge, that they were instrumental in assisting the sailors in their communications with the single females, the Board consider the charge to be entirely refuted by the evidence. In recording this acquittal, the Board feel it right to observe, that they are far from satisfied that the Immigrants referred to took any steps to send the sailors out of their apartment; but this may have been caused by a fear, on their part, of annoyance from an insubordinate crew, with whom they were naturally undesirous of bringing themselves into collision.

37. Of the single females who formed a very large proportion of the Immigrants by the "Stebonheath," a considerable number obtained passages under the Remittance Regulations. These were mostly from Ireland, and their conduct, it has been clearly proved, was most tractable and orderly during the voyage, the Matron herself having stated to the Board that she received no trouble at their hands. It would be subject of gratification to the Board if they could say the same of the females selected through the Commissioners' Agents; but they regret that it has been proved that the conduct of a portion of these girls was characterized by a levity of manner, as well as a spirit of insubordination, most detrimental to them; and the Board consider that in controlling these females the Matron and Surgeon are alike entitled to credit for their firmness, which, if at all relaxed, could scarcely have failed to bring about the most disastrous results.

38. As almost all the single females by this vessel have either been handed over to their friends or provided with situations, the Board consider it undesirable to particularize by name any of those who may have exhibited levity of conduct, trusting, as they do, that such may not be attributable to previous habits of dissipation, but rather to mistaken ideas of their position on board. It may be right to add, that these observations are intended to apply to a small portion only of the single females, and that they are not therefore to be taken as a justification for the very wholesale condemnation which has been so undeservedly cast upon them all alike.

39. The Board consider this a fitting place in their Report to record their opinion that the two girls Loughborough and Jackson, who had been imprisoned for so lengthy a period, were not punished for any act of immorality or attempt on their part to associate with the crew of the vessel,—the act for which Jackson was punished having been a simple breach of manners on her part towards the Matron, and that of Loughborough being an attempt on her part to shield her friend, Jackson, from punishment.

40. It is not attempted to be shown that the conduct of either of these girls was at any time improper, but, on the contrary, they are spoken of in terms of praise; and it will be seen from a perusal of the evidence that the girl Jackson acted as servant to the Matron, and that she evinces a very kind spirit towards those persons by whom she was so seriously ill-treated.

41. The Board have devoted considerable attention to discover, as far as possible, the circumstances connected with the death of Ann Cox; and they regret to be obliged to report that the case appears to them to be surrounded with a great amount of mystery. They feel themselves justified in recording their opinion that not only was there an amount of professional ignorance manifested by the Surgeon in reference to this case, but that there was also most culpable neglect on his part, as well as that of the Matron, in not more closely watching the cause of the disease; and, considering the delicate state of health in which Ann Cox was admitted to be on the arrival of the vessel, and removal of the single females therefrom to the Institution at Hyde Park Barracks, an amount of forgetfulness, as well as carelessness, in respect to this girl has been proved, which is in no way justified by any extent of confusion or excitement consequent on such removal.

42. Perhaps the most lamentable part of this girl's case is the stigma which has been attached to her memory in consequence of the testimony of Dr. Macfarlane at the inquest—that she was at the time of her death in an incipient state of pregnancy.

43. In deference to the opinion expressed by so experienced a practitioner as Dr. Macfarlane, the Board have not thought it advisable to invite any further medical evidence on this point, but they think it due to the girl to record their opinion that, with the exception of a breach of the regulations committed by her in the early part of the voyage, by going into the apartment of the single men, there is nothing to justify the belief that she was other than a person of virtuous habits. And, bearing in mind the extreme watchfulness of the Matron in respect to communications between the single females and the male passengers or crew of the vessel, the Board can hardly believe that any opportunity for the commission of the offence imputed to her had existed, unless it was when she was left in her own apartment the day prior to her death; and it is, therefore, in their opinion, scarcely to be presumed that had such an act as that referred to been then committed, sufficient traces of conception would have been observable to justify a distinct opinion that such had been the case.

44. Having now commented on all the important circumstances involved in this case, the Board proceed to submit the following recommendations in reference to the claims of the various parties implicated to payment of their gratuities, &c.

45. In respect to the fulfilment of the Charter Party, the Board are of opinion that the owners are in no way blameable for the deficiencies which occurred in the provisions, medical comforts, and other stores, as they appear not only to have provided the vessel amply with them before she left Plymouth, but also to have sent their ship's husband to France to supply her with such additional stores as appeared to be requisite to make up deficiencies.

46. The Board, therefore, beg to recommend the issue of a certificate of the fulfilment of the Charter Party, in the usual form, to secure the payment to the owners of the second moiety of the passage money.

47. In respect to the gratuity which the Master of the vessel would be entitled to receive had his conduct been satisfactory to this Government, it appears to the Board that, although he has not by any direct act committed a breach of the regulations, or connived at the ill-conduct of his crew, he has exhibited a want of firmness and decision in the control of his crew and his officers which has added much to the difficulties of the voyage. The Board do not, therefore, feel themselves justified in recommending that he should receive payment of his gratuity.

48. The conduct of the Third Officer clearly disqualifies him for any claim to his gratuity; and he should, in their opinion, be reported to the Commissioners as a person who ought not again to be employed in the service.

49. Of the Chief Officer, Mr. Dray, the Board are glad to be able to speak most favorably. He was, it would appear, severely injured during the gale, from the effects of which it was evident he was suffering whilst under examination by the Board; to whom his conduct, in his continued exertions to perform his duty and prevent intimacies between the sailors and the females, appears most creditable. By the good example he set, and authority he exercised during his watch, a bad feeling was engendered by the crew towards him; and he therefore stood almost alone as the preserver of order amongst the Officers. The Board have, therefore, much pleasure in recommending that he should receive payment of his gratuity.

50. It is much to be regretted that a person possessed of the experience which Dr. Rowland undoubtedly obtained in the service, should have allowed himself to have been the originator of such a series of cruelties towards persons placed under his protection as this investigation discloses.

51. It is clear that, although he may have had much to contend with in the management of the Emigrants, when unsupported by the Officers of a vessel manned by a mutinous crew, nothing has transpired to justify the course he adopted, in enforcing obedience by a system of imprisonment and accompanying cruelty, which appears to have been inflicted on some of the best conducted girls, and in no instance on those who were discovered in the fore-castle, or in the commission of other acts of serious impropriety.

52. Although not forgetful of his previous good qualities, in the discharge of his duties as Surgeon-Superintendent, the Board have no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that his conduct on this occasion leaves them no other course than to recommend that, in addition to any prosecution to which he may have laid himself open, he should be deprived of his gratuity, of his allowance of his return passage to England, and be reported to the Commissioners as a person who should not be employed again in their service.

53. Of the Matron's conduct, and her participation in the course pursued by the Surgeon, the Board now proceed to submit their opinion; and they regret that they cannot, after a careful consideration of her case, acquit her of blame. She, probably, may have erred from a wish not to interfere with the Surgeon's authority; but she has not identified herself with any remonstrance, however simple, which would tend to prove that the course of punishment adopted by the Surgeon did not meet with her approval. Miss Chase had doubtless an important and onerous duty to perform; and, feeling the extent of her responsibility, and the danger that some of the girls were exposed to, she properly adopted a system of discipline for the prevention of irregularities; and had this discipline been unattended with the severe tasks imposed on the girls, or had these tasks been imposed after a careful consideration of the circumstances connected with the cases to which they referred, her conduct would have been been irreproachable; but it is evident to the Board, that too great severity was exercised by her in some cases, and a degree of partiality exhibited in others, which resulted in the formation of jealousies and bad feelings, on the part of several of the girls, towards herself.

54. Although not unmindful of the good example set by her to the females under her charge, and the anxiety she evinced in providing for their comfort, and for their moral and religious instruction, without reference to creed, the Board feel that they cannot, after what has occurred, recommend her for future employment; but they consider themselves justified in recommending that she should receive payment of her gratuity, and be allowed the means of reaching England to join her friends.

55. In reference to the minor officers, who acted in the capacity of schoolmaster, constables, &c., the Board are of opinion that, bearing in mind the fact of their being almost all married men, and that they have only now come forward with their testimony, in consequence of their own characters being assailed, they ought to be deprived of their gratuities for making deliberate false statements, in withholding the information in their possession in respect to the arbitrary conduct of the Surgeon Superintendent.

56. In concluding this Report, the Board desire to state that, after they communicated to the Surgeon that they had recommended to the Government that he should be prosecuted criminally for the assault committed by him on the girls Loughborough and Jackson, he never again appeared before them, and, it is presumed, therefore, that he has absconded, to evade the penalty for his offence. Of this circumstance the Board cannot but express their regret, as the course they adopted may be naturally urged to have afforded the Surgeon the opportunity for his escape; but feeling, as they did, that not only was the future welfare of the Immigrants by this vessel, but also the interests of the Colony, they deem it unadvisable to delay this inquiry, as little or none of the information which they have obtained could have been taken at a trial for the assault,—to the circumstances connected with which the evidence would necessarily have been confined,—and so the case would have been still left in the same unsatisfactory state as that which resulted from the inquiry at the inquest on the death of Ann Cox.

DISPATCH OF IMMIGRANTS TO COUNTRY DISTRICTS.
(CORRESPONDENCE AND REPORT RELATIVE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 9 November, 1858.

THE AGENT FOR IMMIGRATION to THE PRINCIPAL UNDER SECRETARY.

*Government Immigration Office,
Sydney, 3 November, 1858.*

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th August ultimo, drawing my attention to the resolution passed by the Legislative Assembly on the 20th July, recommending that immigrants should be forwarded to the Country Districts, and requesting me to report what steps I would recommend should be taken (if any) to carry into effect the expressed wish of the Assembly.

In reply thereto, I have now the honor to state, that having considered it desirable before reporting on the subject to place myself in communication with the three principal Police Magistrates to the north, south, and west, I am now enabled to submit the replies I have received from those officers.

The depôts at Maitland and Bathurst not having been discontinued many years, the buildings before occupied might still be made available without much expense. At Goulburn, however, there is no building available, neither does it appear that there is any present demand for labor.

Under all the circumstances, I do not consider that it is necessary at present to open any of the Depôts; but I would recommend that the sum of £500 be placed on the Estimates for 1859, with a view of forwarding to the Country Districts such persons as may from time to time be most in demand, and for whom there may not be, on the arrival of a vessel, an immediate opportunity for obtaining employment.

I have, &c.,

THE PRINCIPAL
UNDER SECRETARY,
&c., &c., &c.

H. H. BROWNE,
Agent for Immigration.

This Report has been delayed, in consequence of no reply having been received from the Police Magistrate, Goulburn, until 1st instant.

[Enclosure No. 1.]

Police Office, Bathurst, 9 September, 1858.

Sir,

I do myself the honor to inform you, that having laid your letter of the 30th ultimo—on the subject of the demand for labor in this district, and the cost likely to be incurred before the engagement of immigrants who might be forwarded hither from Sydney—before the Bench of Magistrates at a special general meeting, it is their opinion that almost every description of labor likely to be available in a country district would meet with ready employment here.

The only expenses which I am aware would be likely to be necessarily incurred would be those of transit hither, and the rations of the immigrants until they might be hired, as the Immigrants' Quarters here might very readily be rendered available for use without (unless a very trifling) expenditure.

I have, &c.,

The Agent for Immigration,
Sydney.

W. HALL PALMER,
P. M.

[Enclosure No. 2.]

*Court House, Maitland,
20 September, 1858.*

Sir,

In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo, I beg to state that accommodation for from forty to fifty immigrants, or families containing about that number of individuals, is ready here in the old stockade without any expense beyond a few panes of glass or so; but cooking utensils and bedding, to some extent, if the immigrants cannot bring their own bedding with them from the ship, would be required.

The expense of rationing these people here would, I presume, be the same as in Sydney, or nearly so; but, probably, the cartage of their luggage would be a little higher than in Sydney, as the distance is somewhat greater.

The wages of the matron, the general superintendence, the issuing of rations, and filling up of agreements were all provided for by the Police Magistrate, who was allowed for these purposes £100 a-year. This arrangement, I presume, would be still desirable, and would also, I consider, be beneficial to the Government.

By keeping constantly here the number of immigrants I have named, and by giving the superintendent power to discharge from the dépôt any person who refused to accept reasonable wages, I consider that a very large number of immigrants would be required, and the Government would be relieved from a very heavy expense.

But I beg to add, that it would be most desirable that the immigrants should be sent direct from their ships.

I have &c.,

The Agent for Immigration,
Sydney.

EDWARD D. DAY, J. P.
Police Magistrate.

[Enclosure No. 3.]

*Police Office, Goulburn,
28 October, 1858.*

Sir,

In reply to your letter of the 30th August last, requesting information as to the probable expense that would be incurred before immigrants forwarded to this district could be disposed of, and as to the probability that exists therein for the employment of agricultural laborers and their families, I have the honor to inform you that, after due consideration, and having made all necessary inquiries, I am of opinion that the opening of an Immigration Dépôt at Goulburn would entail an expense of at least from £300 to £400 per annum; and I would further state, that at present there does not appear to be a demand for labor of any kind in this district.

I have, &c.,

The Agent for Immigration,
Sydney.

EMIGRATION FROM ENGLAND.

(BRISTOL A PORT OF EMBARKATION FOR EMIGRANTS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 12 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of the Bristol (England) Chamber of Commerce,—

SHWETH:—

That your Petitioners have learnt that a measure is under the consideration of your Honorable Council, the object of which is to vest the management of the Emigration carried on with the funds derived from your Colony in the hands of officials appointed by, and responsible to, the Colonial authorities, instead of allowing those funds to be under the control of the Commissioners appointed by the Home Government.

Your Petitioners beg leave most respectfully to direct the attention of your Honorable Council to the eligibility of the Port of Bristol as one of the ports of departure for Emigrants dispatched from the Mother Country at the expense of your Colony.

Bristol is situate in the midst of a large population of agriculturists, artizans, and miners, which are the classes best adapted for Emigration, and the district for which it is the natural port of arrival and departure for ships engaged in the Colonial and Foreign trade, comprises a considerable part of the Midland and South Western counties (including Birmingham), also Monmouthshire and South Wales, and embraces a population of between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000, comprising—

Gloucester, which has a population of...	458,805
Worcester " " " " "	276,926
Hereford " " " " "	115,489
Monmouth " " " " "	157,418
Radnor " " " " "	24,716
Brecknock " " " " "	61,474
Carmarthen " " " " "	110,632
Glamorgan " " " " "	231,849
Pembroke " " " " "	94,140
The greater part of Somersetshire, which has a population of	443,916
And of Wilts 	254,251
And for some portion of the following counties, Bristol would fairly compete with Liverpool—
Salop, which has a population of	229,341
Stafford " " " " "	608,716
And for the following, with London—
Berks, which has a population of	170,065
Warwick " " " " "	475,013
Oxford " " " " "	170,439
Being a total of	3,883,190

That the Port of Bristol is convenient and easy of access and egress, and is now one of the cheapest ports in the United Kingdom. There are no outward local charges for dock or town purposes at it, either on ships or goods.

That it is also so large a market for goods of all kinds that Emigrants can supply themselves on the spot, immediately before departure, with every thing they require, which saves them the risk and cost of carriage, and an earlier outlay of their capital.

That, since the reduction in its port charges, the trade of Bristol has greatly increased. A regular line of first class vessels for passengers, both outward and homeward, is now established, by the eminent firm of Messrs. Mileses and Kington, between Bristol and Australia, besides transient ships, and a considerable amount of Emigration from Bristol to North America is also carried on; but your Petitioners complain that the main stream of Emigration from their district is diverted from its natural channel, to the great inconvenience and heavy additional expense of the Assisted Emigrants, by the non-appointment of Bristol as one of the Emigration Ports.

That, in confirmation of the statement that the neighbourhood of Bristol abounds with a population the best adapted for Emigration, your Petitioners would refer to the Report of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, dated the 13th January, 1855, in which they state that "the proportion of Emigrants drawn from the Counties of Gloucester, Hereford, Somerset, and Wilts, during the seven years, from 1846 to 1852 inclusive, was nearly double the proportion of the population of those Counties to the whole population of England and Wales."

That your Petitioners have repeatedly brought under the notice of the Colonial Office these and other facts; but hitherto their request for the appointment of Bristol as a Government Dépôt and port of departure for Emigrants has been refused, on various pretexts, to which your Petitioners have replied on the last occasion of their appearing before the Colonial Authorities, viz., on the 5th of August last, as follows:—

"That, with regard to the objections raised in that Report to the appointment of Bristol as an Emigration Port, the deputation would state, that, in making a comparison between Bristol, London, and Liverpool, as regards the number of ships of large tonnage trading with them, the Emigration Commissioners omitted all reference to the neighbouring ports of Newport, Cardiff, and Swansea.

"That it appears from the Custom House Returns of those ports, and of the Port of Bristol, the aggregate number of ships of 400 tons and upwards which sailed from those four ports in the Bristol Channel in the year 1852-3, was 952, and of vessels over 800 tons, 129.

"That, with reference to the question of the willingness of ship-owners and ship-brokers to charter ships from the Port of Bristol, the deputation would advert to the declaration which was signed by fifty-four ship-owners and ship-brokers, and transmitted to the Colonial Office in May, 1854,—to the effect that they would pledge themselves that if Bristol was named for the purpose of Emigration by the Colonial authorities, ships could be chartered from it, on equal if not better terms than from any other Emigration Port.

"That with regard to a Home for the Emigrants, the deputation would undertake to say it should be provided.

"And, with regard to the view which the late Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies (Mr. Peel) took of the proper expenditure of the fund furnished for the purpose of assisting Emigration, the deputation would respectfully submit, that the object should be, the dispatch of the greatest possible number of persons acceptable and useful to the Colonists which that fund will permit, and not its distribution in equitable relief of pauperism in England. Mr. Peel seemed to apprehend, that if the assisted Emigrants were allowed to select Bristol as their port of departure, too large a proportion of the population of the district would emigrate from it, which is not a fair objection to the eligibility of the port; neither is it fair to throw it out as a reflection on its advantages or safety, as the Commissioners in their Report do,—that after the Emigrants whose passage is paid by the Commissioners have been drained off to other ports, only a comparatively small number of persons emigrate from Bristol. It is the poorer classes who constitute the bulk of the Emigrants."

Your

Your Petitioners would also, in confirmation of their statements, refer to the following remarks relating to their last application to the Colonial Secretary, extracted from the Shipping Gazette of the 17th August last, and which must be considered a competent and impartial authority:—

“ A deputation from Bristol has waited upon Mr. Labouchere, on the subject of the claims of Bristol to be made a Government Depôt and port of departure for Emigrants. We have examined carefully the statements of the deputation, and the replies of the Colonial Secretary; and we do not hesitate to say, that neither the Colonial Secretary nor the Emigration Commissioners have opposed anything in the shape of argument worth five minutes' consideration to the fair demands of the deputation. To us it has always appeared that Bristol is by its position peculiarly adapted for an Emigration Port. It is situated in the centre of a vast population of agriculturists, miners, and artizans, and these it is obvious are the classes most inclined to emigrate, and most needed in the Colonies and in other countries. Bristol, in fact, is the natural port of fourteen or fifteen counties, with a population of three and a half millions; and we have it upon the authority of the Emigration Commissioners themselves that the four adjoining counties of Gloucester, Hereford, Somerset, and Wilts, furnished in the seven years from 1846 to 1852 inclusive, nearly double the proportion of Emigrants, according to the population, of the whole of England and Wales put together. But Bristol has other claims as a port of departure for Emigrants—it is easy of ingress and of egress. The channel at the head of which it is situated opens, we may say, right into the Atlantic; there are no port charges outward for dock or town purposes; and the market for those articles required by intending Emigrants is extensive and well supplied. A line of first-class passenger ships had been recently established between Bristol and Australia, besides the emigration between Bristol and North America, which is constantly increasing. The ship-owners of Bristol complain justly, therefore, that the main stream of Emigration from their district is diverted from its natural channel, to the great inconvenience and heavy additional expense of the assisted Emigrants, by the non-appointment of Bristol as one of the Government Emigration Ports.

“ With these admitted facts in favour of making Bristol an Emigration Port, one would suppose that the Government would be prepared with some very strong reasons for their persistent refusal to recognise them. Mr. Labouchere heard the deputation out, and found nothing to oppose to the arguments adduced, except some commonplaces about economy, and about the great difficulties in the way. If the difficulties are so great, Mr. Labouchere could surely have named them, and we have no doubt the Colonial Secretary would have done so if they really existed; hence he found it necessary to put forward Mr. Murdoch, in order to give, if possible, on the part of the Emigration Commissioners, what the head of the Colonial Office was unable to give, namely, a sufficient reason for the continued rejection of the claims of Bristol as an Emigration Port. Mr. Murdoch did not, at all events, improve matters. That gentleman's reasoning amounts to this,—that because the tonnage in London and Liverpool is greater than in Bristol, Bristol could not possibly supply ships for Emigration purposes as cheaply as the two former ports, and that the effect of establishing an Emigrants' Home at Bristol would be to raise the prices at the depôts of Liverpool, Plymouth, and Southampton. This sort of logic may do for the Emigration Commissioners, or even for the Colonial Office, but it will not go down with any rational and well-informed man, and we venture to say it will not impose upon our ship-owners anywhere. Mr. Murdoch knows, or he ought to know, that in comparing the tonnage of Bristol available for the transport of Emigrants with that of London or Liverpool, the tonnage of Newport, Cardiff, and Swansea, should have been included, and for this reason that a class of vessels resort to the latter port for coal and iron, which would assuredly go up to Bristol for Emigrants if the opportunity for obtaining a cargo were afforded, a contingency which seems to be fully guaranteed by the declaration of ship-owners and ship-brokers, transmitted to the Colonial Office three years since, and referred to by the deputation. As to Mr. Murdoch's notion, that the establishment of an Emigrants' Home at Bristol would raise the tariff at Liverpool and elsewhere, we have only to say that he appears to hold an opinion at variance, not only with the first principles of economic science, but with all experience. Perhaps, however, Mr. Murdoch made as good a case as the materials admit of. The truth is, the Government have nothing to say against

" against the very reasonable demand of the Bristol deputation, and therefore their continued " opposition is what the lawyers call frivolous and vexatious. Bristol is every way better
" qualified for an Emigration Port than the three ports at present sanctioned by the " Government. The navigation by which it is approached is more open; its proximity to " those districts which supply the best class of Emigrants is greater; no difficulty would be " experienced in providing a sufficient supply of tonnage, for no ship owner would object to
" send his ship to so good a port on so good an errand; and, lastly, the Australian Colonists
" have long looked to Bristol, and the counties of which it is the natural outlet, for a supply
" of skilled and other labor, such as they require. If the Government refuse to listen to " rational representations on the subject, these Colonists have expressed a determination to " take the matter into their own hands."

On the occasion to which the above remarks refer, the deputation from Bristol had the honor of being accompanied by several gentlemen, Members of the General Association for the Australian Colonies, viz.: Mr. Edward Stephens, Member of the Colonial Legislature, South Australia, Dr. Pugh, of Tasmania, and Mr. Youl, Honorary Secretary to the Association, who confirmed very strongly the representations of the deputation from Bristol, and expressed very decided opinions in favor of the appointment prayed for, and they also stated that many other gentlemen, influentially connected with the Australian Colonies, held the same opinion on the subject, and would have been present on the occasion, had a more lengthened notice been given.

Your Petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that your Honorable Council, taking the premises into your favorable consideration, will be pleased to include the Port of Bristol as one of the ports of departure for Emigrants, in any arrangements which you may make for the better administration of the colonial funds appropriated to Emigration purposes.

Signed on behalf of the Bristol Chamber of Commerce.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

GERMAN EMIGRATION.,

(PETITION FROM RESIDENTS OF SYDNEY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 23 April, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, now in Sydney assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned German residents in Sydney and environs,—

MOST RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

1. That during the last three years the Emigration of the German population is greatly increasing; the Emigrants—for the most part practical vine dressers and agriculturists—being engaged to squatters and land proprietors of the largest extent.

2. That nearly all such German Emigrants are sent over by ship-owners, charterers, or agents, who provide their passage; that is to say—import them in the view to get their passage money repaid by the employers who hire them, and obtain payment thereof by an advance on account of wages.

3. That the agents, charterers, ship-owners, or assigns, treat such Emigrants only as “Live Stock,” out of which their only object is to make as much money as possible; in consequence whereof the Emigrant vessels are commonly overcrowded with passengers,—no separation of the sexes being made, the provisions sometimes damaged and very bad, and particularly deficient in quantity, and frequently only half allowances are distributed to the Emigrants which they are entitled to have according to the agreement made on shore between the ship-owner, charterer, or agent of the vessel on the one part, and the Emigrant on the other part.

4. That in many of the German ports there is no sufficient superintendence of the Emigration vessels, nor inquiry made whether they are sufficiently provided according to the number of the passengers, and that very often Emigrants are conveyed by a steamer to the Emigration vessel after the same has left the harbour.

5. That when arrived in the Colony, such Emigrants who have relations in Sydney are not allowed to go on shore, but very often are either sent to Moreton Bay, or anywhere else, as shepherds, &c., instead of giving them an opportunity to try to find for themselves employers, or get the passage money from their relations; and also that lately, just on the contrary, such Emigrants who had made agreements with the agents to work two years at their trade have been refused permission to remain either on board the vessel, or to get board and lodging for themselves, unless they will go as shepherds, instead of working in their trades, as per agreement.

6. That none of such Emigrants on their arrival can talk English, therefore it is impossible for them to make complaints to Government Emigration authorities who come on board the vessel.

7. That, particularly in the last two years, many complaints have been made by the Emigrants as to the scanty nature of the provisions, as well as to the indecency produced by non-separation of the sexes, and of ill-treatment on the part of the Captain and the crew.

8. That, although many Emigrants who are encouraged here by the prospect of high wages, as mechanics, stonemasons, &c., as represented to them by the public Colonial newspapers, yet find on arrival that no employer will make them any advance on account of wages for payment of passage money. Many, if not all of the skilled artisans, are compelled to sign agreements with squatters and large landowners as shepherds and labourers only—the squatters and rich landowners being in fact the only persons who make an advance of the wages in payment of the passage money.

9. That your Petitioners are confident that if proper regulations should be made, a very large increase of emigration of respectable industrious individuals would arrive, who are now deterred from embarking in the present ill-regulated state the vessels now arrive.

Your Petitioners, therefore, most humbly and respectfully pray that your Honorable House may be pleased to pass an Act that all the German Emigration vessels coming to New South Wales shall be under the same, or, as far as possible or practicable, similar Rules, Regulations, and superintendence as the British Emigration vessels now are; and that a Committee, consisting of four disinterested respectable Germans, (to be appointed either by the Government or elected by the German population), may be empowered to go with the Government authorities on board of every German Emigrant vessel, in order to inquire whether there exist reasonable complaints, and to report the same to the Government authorities.

That every Emigration vessel, or the Captain, or the owner thereof, may be fined in case the said vessel has no partition in order to separate the sexes, and that a Matron has superintendence of the female department, and only the Physician be allowed to enter the same.

That on every Emigration vessel a legally qualified Physician (not a barber, as now in most cases,) shall be engaged, and that the same, together with the Matron, should have superintendence over the Emigrants during the passage, in the same manner as it is on board British Emigration vessels.

That the vessel Captain or owners shall be punished or fined in case of any breach of such Regulations.

That such Emigrants who have not made a specified agreement in Germany may have the option to try and find out (within a reasonable time after their arrival in port,) an employer who is willing to pay or give security for the passage money.

That no agent, ship-owner, or charterer, or any person, can compel any Emigrant to enter an engagement of any other nature otherwise than that made in Germany; that is to say, that cannot compel him to turn shepherding when he was engaged as a tradesman.

That your Petitioners may have such other relief as to your Honorable House seems fit. And your Petitioners will ever pray.

IRISH FEMALE IMMIGRATION.

(PETITION FROM CELTIC ASSOCIATION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Citizens of Sydney and Members of the Australian Celtic Association,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That the Immigration Agent has, in the opinion of your Petitioners, misrepresented Irish Female Immigrants “ as being most unsuitable to the requirements of the Colony, and at the same time distasteful to the majority of the people.”

That he has thereby misinformed His Excellency the Governor General, and thus attempted to over-rule the instructions sent by this Government to the Emigration Commissioners at home, “ to apportion the Emigration from the different divisions of the United Kingdom to the population of each.”

That, to your Petitioners’ apprehension, the Legislature is alone competent to determine the description of Emigrants, as well as their relative proportion from each Country to the population of the United Kingdom, that should be brought out at the expense of the land fund of the Colony.

That your Petitioners humbly request that a Committee of your Honorable House be appointed to inquire into the conduct of H. H. Browne, Esquire, Immigration Agent, regarding his communications to the Colonial Secretary, marked Nos. 1 and 12, referred to by His Excellency the Governor General in his Despatch to Sir George Grey, dated Sydney, 2 March, 1855; and that the proposed Committee should also take into consideration what further steps ought to be taken to render the Immigration Department in Sydney more efficient in supplying the inhabitants of the interior with female servants than it is found at present to be.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 24 June, 1858.

RETURN to an Address of the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, dated 2 June, 1858, praying that His Excellency the Governor General would be pleased to cause to be laid upon the Table of this House,—

Report from the Immigration Board, Sydney, dated 5th February, 1855

N.B.—There is no Despatch from the Emigration Commissioners of date the 5th February, 1855.

IRISH FEMALE IMMIGRATION.

REPORT of the Immigration Board on the Evidence taken before them, in respect to the irregularities alleged to have occurred on board the Immigrant Ship "Lady Kennaway."

The Board having met in pursuance to summons, for the purpose of considering the complaints made against the Surgeon-Superintendent and Master of the Immigrant Ship "Lady Kennaway," by the Rev. Mr. Parker, the religious instructor on board that vessel, proceeded in their presence to examine Mr. Parker, and several of the female immigrants, in support of the charges he had brought against them.

2. The Board having heard the evidence adduced by Mr. Parker, called on the Master for his explanation, who, in reply, handed in a written statement, in which he denied the accuracy of the complaints, and introduced several of the married immigrants who had acted as constables on the voyage to support his case. The Surgeon preferred making a verbal statement, which forms a portion of the evidence attached hereto, and declined calling any additional evidence to that which was adduced by Captain Young.

3. As in most cases of this nature which the Board are called upon to investigate, a considerable measure of ill-feeling appeared to have been generated, and the statements of the witnesses are consequently very frequently highly coloured, thereby attaching a degree of importance to them to which they are not really entitled.

4. In the particular instance under consideration, it was natural to expect that, in consequence of the previous connexion that had existed between the Rev. Mr. Parker and the female immigrants by the "Lady Kennaway," in the Union Workhouse at Cork, wherein he had filled the office of Chaplain for a period of four years, he should have been able to exercise a much greater control over these girls than had he been a perfect stranger to them upon receiving his appointment on board the vessel; and seeing, moreover, as they did, that no cordiality of feeling existed between him and the Surgeon, they very naturally supported their own priest, and took every opportunity of annoying the Surgeon, and showing him that they had no esteem for his person, or respect for his authority.

5. The Board consider this state of things to have been attributable principally to the conduct of the Surgeon himself, as, had he joined with Mr. Parker in the first instance in rigidly upholding the regulations of the Commissioners, and paid more attention than he did to his own conduct, the girls would never have ventured to insult him, or to refuse submission to his authority.

6. The charge of inebriety preferred against him has been proved to the perfect satisfaction of the Board; his frequent indulgencies in that respect were spoken of by most of the witnesses called by the complainant, and also by two of those who were examined for the defence. It is not even distinctly denied in his own explanation to the Board.

7. Under these circumstances, the Board are of opinion that the Surgeon is guilty of having entirely neglected his duty, and that, moreover, he is not free from blame in regard to his treatment of the two girls who died of consumption. They are further of opinion, that for whatever irregularities which may have occurred on board he is chiefly answerable, and that he is therefore evidently a very unfit man to be again employed in the service of the Commissioners. They consider that he has, by his neglectful conduct, disentitled himself to any claim for his gratuity; but they recommend that, in consideration of the helpless position in which he would be placed in a strange land, if left wholly without means, that one-half only should be forfeited.

8. The charge made against Captain Young of taking liberties with the single females, by pulling off their blankets while in bed, the Board do not consider to be proved; neither do they feel that he in any way countenanced the intimacy that took place between his son (the chief officer) and the matron. The Board feel that in consequence of the want of management on the part of the Surgeon, many of the girls remained in their beds until a late hour of the day, and that the disagreeable duty of turning them on deck—which was absolutely requisite to promote health—devolved upon the Captain, so that thereby a bad feeling was created amongst the girls towards him.

9. The charge of intimacy on the part of the first and second mates with the matron and sub-matron is, to a certain extent, proved; but the Board do not consider, nor does any supposition exist in Mr. Parker's mind, that it was of an improper nature. It appears also that when the subject was brought under Captain Young's notice, he immediately remonstrated with his son; and there is no evidence to show that the intimacy was again renewed. The bad example, however, set by a person in Mr. Young's position, the Board consider should not be overlooked; and they are therefore of opinion that he ought to be deprived of his gratuity.

10. The Board also consider that the second officer ought to be reprimanded and cautioned as to his future conduct when holding an official appointment on board an Emigrant Ship.

11. Great importance has been attached by Mr. Parker to a scene that occurred on the 27th November last, upon which occasion he states that the girls were afraid to go below at their usual time, in consequence of some apprehension that an attack on the part of the crew was contemplated upon him. It appears to the Board that the alarm was quite unfounded, and that the arming of Mr. Parker and one of the emigrants was a foolish step, and one the necessity of which could not have existed had any unanimity of feeling existed between Mr. Parker and his flock, and the other authorities of the vessel.

12. In conclusion, the Board would observe that the manner in which some of the single females conducted themselves towards the Surgeon and the Captain was highly reprehensible; and that although Mr. Parker selected such as he considered at the time to be the best of those who were inmates of the Workhouse, he had reason to alter his opinion respecting several of them before the termination of the voyage.

13. Orphan Immigration having been so distasteful to the inhabitants of this Colony, the Board did not contemplate the arrival of any fresh drafts of that class of immigrants. This feeling against them still exists; and the Board feel that they should ill perform their duty were they not to bring this fact pointedly under the notice of His Excellency the Governor General, with a recommendation that instructions be given to the Commissioners not to continue this description of emigration, it being most unsuitable to the requirements of the Colony, and at the same time distasteful to the majority of the people.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

(PETITION FROM J. SMITH, SYDNEY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 28 May, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned, John Smith, of Sydney, Merchant,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH:—

That by a Bill to regulate Chinese Immigration now before your Honorable House, it is provided that the Owners, Charterers, or Masters of Ships shall become liable to certain penalties in the event of any infringement by them of certain clauses therein, and that the Act shall come into operation immediately after the passing thereof.

That your Petitioner is the Agent of Merchants and others in China, who are Owners and Charterers of Vessels which have sailed for Sydney, and from whom advices have been received that a number of Chinese immigrants are on board.

That, by the agreements entered into with such immigrants, the Owners, Charterers, or Masters of the several Vessels are bound to land them in this Colony free from all expense.

That, should the said Bill become law, and the Act come into operation immediately after the passing thereof, total ruin would ensue, not only to the Owners or Charterers of the Vessels consigned to your Petitioner's house, but also, in all probability, to the Owners or Charterers of all Vessels which may have sailed from China for this Port before notice of such Act shall be received by them.

Your Petitioner, therefore, humbly prays your Honorable House that a reasonable time may be allowed to elapse before the said Act shall come into operation after the passing thereof, and that your Petitioner may be heard, by his Counsel, at the Bar of your Honorable House, against the last clause of the said Bill.

And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

(MESSRS. MERRILL & LEAVITT, MERCHANTS, SYDNEY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 1 June, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales.

The Petition of Robert Dodge Merrill and Thomas Roger Leavitt, Merchants, of and residing in Sydney, and trading under the name and firm of "Merrill & Leavitt,"—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That your Petitioners respectfully represent to your Honorable House that the immediate operation of the "Chinese Immigration Bill" will be unjust to them as Agents and Consignees of ships already freighted and on their passage from ports in China to Sydney.

That unless reasonable time after passing such Bill should be allowed, before its enforcement, for communication to be made to our correspondents in China of such Act on part of the Government of New South Wales, serious injury will accrue to us and our friends in China in default of such information.

The immediate enforcement of any Act like that of the Chinese Immigration Bill, unless in case of extreme emergency, which does not exist, would be arbitrary in itself, and unjust to the representatives of constituents who have embarked largely in Chinese Emigration.

Therefore we, your Petitioners, do humbly pray that your Honorable House will not permit the Bill referred to, to pass the House without such amendments or modifications as will meet the injury that the immediate operation of the Bill would cause.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

(PETITION FROM CITIZENS OF SYDNEY.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 24 June, 1858.

Unto the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Citizens in the City of Sydney,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH,—

That Petitioners view with feelings of anxiety and concern the immigration into this country of such large numbers of the Chinese people as have within the last few months landed upon our shores.

That your Petitioners are deeply convinced that such immigration imperatively demands the earnest and immediate attention of the Legislature, with the view of either entirely prohibiting, or at all events duly regulating, the introduction of the Chinese into this country.

That, without presuming to dictate to your Honorable House, your Petitioners conceive that the adoption of a law in New South Wales similar to that which already exists in the sister Colony of Victoria, and imposing a poll-tax of £10 on the Chinese, would have the desired effect of so far limiting the immigration in question as to remove all present ground of apprehension for the public welfare.

Your Petitioners therefore pray your Honorable House would be pleased to take the premises into your early and favorable consideration.

And, as in duty bound, your Petitioners will ever pray.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

(MINERS AT MEROO GOLD FIELDS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 2 July, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of W. S. Willmott, Chairman of a Public Meeting of Miners at the Meroo,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That we, the undersigned, Miners on the Meroo Gold Fields, in the vicinity of Long Creek, humbly beg to call the attention of your Honorable House to the evils resulting from the large number of Chinese who are now stripping these Gold Fields of their wealth, to the injury of the Colonists; and to the consequent necessity of speedy legislation to prevent the Chinese from working on the Gold Fields, by refusing to grant them Miners' Rights, for the following reasons, namely :—

1st. That the Chinese in vast numbers, increasing by frequent arrivals, are taking from these fields the gold which would furnish a livelihood to the Colonists for many years to come.

2nd. That the Chinese export their gold to China, to the manifest injury not only of this Colony, but of all other countries from which we derive the articles necessary for our use.

3rd. That, in case these evils be permitted to continue much longer, serious hostile collisions between the Chinese and the Colonists will certainly take place, the awful consequences of which no one can foresee, and as to the means of suppressing hostilities, we fear the Government is at present unprovided.

4th. That, in order to preserve the peace between such hostile parties, a large expense will be entailed upon the Colony in providing the necessary military or police force.

5th. That your Petitioners can see no reason for tolerating the presence of the Chinese, as it is manifestly clear that their intention is not to colonize, but to take all they possibly can of their wealth out of this country.

6th. That your Petitioners have also to urge their objections to the taxing in any form whatever of the Chinese for their admission into this country, as that would be raising revenue by unjustifiable means, for it would, in effect, be granting a license to commit an injury upon the Colonists.

7th. That the evils here enumerated have produced in England and elsewhere an injurious effect against this Colony, by turning the attention of emigrants to other countries where such evils do not exist.

8th. And, lastly, that the injuries already mentioned being so keenly felt by the mining colonists, and as each has some special cause for ill-feeling towards the Chinese, the individual reasons for urging their expulsion are too numerous for insertion in this Petition.

Therefore, we earnestly pray that your Honorable House will initiate such measures as will effectually eradicate the evils which we have respectfully pointed out.

And your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

(PETITION OF MINERS, &c., ROCKY RIVER.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 13 August, 1858.

To the Honorable the Members of the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned Miners and other Residents of the Rocky River
Gold Fields, in Public Meeting assembled,—

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :—

That your Petitioners duly appreciate the Act lately passed by your Honorable House imposing a tax of ten pounds on each Chinese Immigrant as an important step in the right direction, but are fully persuaded that such a measure will be totally inoperative, either in preventing the immigration of the Chinese, or in benefiting the financial resources of the Colony.

That Petitioners having better means of knowing the evils arising from an overwhelming immigration of Chinese than your Honorable House can possibly have, are fully persuaded that it will further the best interests of the Colony to put a complete stop to their immigration to Australia; and we shall never rest satisfied until such measures be adopted as shall totally prevent their further introduction to the Colony.

That Petitioners would strongly urge on your Honorable House the expediency of the "Chinese Immigration Bill" coming into operation at once, as before the first of January, 1859, (when it is proposed the Act shall come into force,) 20,000 Chinese will certainly be added to the population of this country; but should your Honorable House not agree to the above suggestion, then Petitioners most respectfully request that a sufficient police force shall be appointed on the Gold Fields for the protection of life and property, so that in the event of a collision between the Chinese and the Christian population, your Petitioners may not be subjected to loss of time in the support of law and order.

That your Petitioners solemnly declare that should your Honorable House either not put a stop to the further immigration of Chinese, or grant them the protection they have a right to expect, then they shall arm themselves for their own defence, and establish a Committee of Vigilance in aid of the civil power, as they are determined that the atrocities committed at Sarawak shall not be repeated in this Colony.

That Petitioners would deeply regret being compelled to adopt this extreme course, but believe they have no other alternative, as they are determined, at all hazards, to maintain British Supremacy in this Colony, and keep the Mongolians within proper bounds.

That Petitioners regard with apprehension and alarm the daily arrival on the Australian shores of hundreds of Chinese, who immediately repair to the Gold Fields, and whose mode of working is most injurious to Petitioners, as well as destructive to the production of the auriferous deposits, by their careless and reckless mode of operation, which in some instances, by filling shafts with water and tailings, prevent large portions of ground from being properly worked, and in other cases they frequently monopolize the whole ground to themselves.

That Petitioners consider the Chinese a very ineligible class of immigrants, and not peaceably disposed, as has been represented, many cases having occurred on this and other Gold Fields requiring the police authorities to disarm them, to prevent further bloodshed.

Also, that their general filthy habits are repulsive to the feelings of the Christian population.

Further, they, as heathens, systematically desecrate the Sabbath Day, not only by purchasing their weekly supplies, but also by gambling, which is carried on by them to a great extent.

That already on the Rocky River the Chinese outnumber the Christian population by a very large majority, and their numbers are increasing by new arrivals every day, and at the present rate of progression, Petitioners believe in less than one month the relative numbers of Chinese to whites will be in proportion of six to one. In several instances of late they have exhibited unmistakeable symptoms of hostility towards your Petitioners, and it is presumed that as their strength and numbers so will their hostile feelings increase.

Your Petitioners therefore pray that your Honorable House will take these premises into your most serious consideration, and put a stop, as soon as practicable, to all Chinese immigration, and in the meantime grant us such an adequate police force as will obviate the necessity of our arming ourselves for the support of law and order.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

SIR,

At an adjourned Meeting of the unemployed, held on the Racecourse on Monday evening, the 22nd instant, the following Resolution was adopted:—

“ That a deputation be appointed to wait on the Colonial Secretary, to lay “ before him the circumstances of the Working Classes, with the view “ of inducing him to commence some public works, on which they “ may obtain employment for the present; and, also, to request him
“ to adopt some policy by which steady employment may be secured;
“ and that the Meeting stand adjourned to a future day, to hear the “ result of the interview.”

MR. W. B. ALLEN to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney, 26 March, 1858.

SIR,

I met the deputation last night. We talked over the business of the unemployed, but could not come to any definite proposition, to submit you this morning, further than the matter lay altogether in the hands of the Government, as to what works could be set on, or in what way the urgency of the present distress could be alleviated.

They were unanimous in opinion, that anything that can be done would only be of a temporary nature, and that any permanent improvement in their condition must be looked for in a new tariff measure; but it was resolved, that nothing should be said at the interview this morning about it, lest you should think it a mere protection movement, which it is really not.

Yours very respectfully,

WM. B. ALLEN.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL THE MAYOR.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 6 April, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you that a deputation from the "unemployed" in Sydney waited upon him a few days since, when he requested that they would obtain and furnish to him some definite information as to the number of persons in distress, owing to their being unable to obtain engagements, and that the enclosed lists have in consequence been this day placed in his hands by Messrs. W. B. Allen, J. G. White, J. P. Arkins, and other persons, who stated that the names of about seven hundred individuals were recorded, but that double that number were out of employment; that there were many of them at least unemployed from no fault of their own; and that actual destitution existed amongst the mechanics and laborers in Sydney to a serious extent.

2. In communicating to you these particulars, the Colonial Secretary desires me to state that he will be obliged if you will institute, in conjunction with the Inspector General of Police, such inquiry as may be necessary to enable you to place the Government in possession of such information on this subject as can be relied upon. Whilst the Government is not prepared to give encouragement to those who are unwilling to earn an honest livelihood, should it be made clear that a state of things does exist, such as is alleged, some steps must be taken to meet the exigency.

3. At the same time, it is to be observed that the complaint has long been general, that public and private improvements have been delayed owing to the high rates of wages, and the difficulty of getting work performed, whether mechanical or otherwise.

4. I am directed to add, that the Inspector General of Police has been instructed to place himself in communication with you without delay, and to co-operate with you in making this inquiry.

I have, &c.,

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that it is his desire that, in conjunction with the Right Worshipful the Mayor, you should make such inquiry into the extent of destitution alleged to exist amongst the mechanics and laborers in Sydney, arising from their being unable to obtain employment, as may enable you to place the Government in possession of such information on the subject as can be relied on, and to request that you will communicate with His Worship accordingly without delay.

2. Lists of persons unemployed have been forwarded to the Mayor, who has also been apprised of the statements which have been made to the Colonial Secretary in reference to them by a deputation which waited upon him to-day.

THE MAYOR AND THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Town Hall,

Sydney, 19 April, 1858.

SIR,

We have the honor to inform you that, in compliance with the request contained in your communication of the 6th April instant, we have caused inquiry to be made as to the number of persons in distress, owing to their being unable to obtain employment in Sydney, and as the result of such inquiry, we beg to state that we find,—

1st—That, at the present time, a large number of mechanics and laborers in Sydney are out of employment, from no fault of their own, but in consequence of there being an excess of labor over the means of employment in the City.

2nd—That within the last month applications have been made, from time to time, at the Town Hall, for employment, by laborers and others, to the number of between 300 and 400 in excess of the number the Corporation have been enabled to employ; and that the great majority of applicants appeared to be quite capable of doing a good day's work.

3rd—That the number of building notices received at the Town Hall, from 1st to 19th April, 1856, was thirty-five; from 1st to 19th April, 1857, twenty-two; from 1st to 19th April, 1858, eighteen.

That the number of buildings in progress in the City is daily decreasing; and we have every reason to believe that the number of unemployed will, during the winter months, be very much increased.

As an instance, the Municipal Council have in their employment at the present time about 180 men, out of which number about 130 will be discharged within two months from this date, on account of the works on which they are engaged being completed.

A large proportion of the unemployed are men with large families, and without the means of seeking for employment at any distance from the City or in its neighbourhood and it will become, we think, necessary to devise means for obtaining them employment during the forthcoming winter.

Enclosed, we beg to forward the result of the inquiry made by Captain M'Levie as to the signatures attached to the Petition, although we do not consider it can be taken to be correct, in consequence of the numbers being omitted in the addresses given by many of the parties signing.

We have, &c.,

JOHN WILLIAMS,

Mayor.

JOHN M'LERIE,

Inspector General of Police.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL THE MAYOR.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 1 May, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to inform you, that the Report made by yourself and the Inspector General of Police of the result of the inquiry instituted at the instance of the Government, in consequence of the representations which were made, that there were many persons in Sydney in a state of distress owing to their being unable to obtain employment, has been brought under the consideration of the Legislative Assembly, and that the House having, by a resolution, expressed its willingness to vote such sum as may be necessary to defray the charge of removing such persons to those parts of the country where they can obtain employment, the Government is desirous of adopting measures for this purpose with as little delay as possible.

2. It appears to the Colonial Secretary that if your Worship will have the goodness to afford your assistance, the object in view may best be carried out by a Committee, consisting of yourself, the Inspector General of Police, the Agent for Immigration, and the Colonial Architect; and instructions have accordingly been given to those officers to place themselves in communication with you on the subject immediately. It is also suggested that, if there be no objection, the City Engineer should be a member of the Committee.

3. It is desirable that notice, as early as possible, be given in the newspapers, that the Committee will be ready to receive applications from persons who allege that they are unable to obtain employment.

4. The Committee should also place themselves in communication with the Wardens, Road Committees, and Commissioners of Road Trusts, who have funds at their disposal for the repair of roads, or the execution of other public works, in some of the principal places or districts in the Colony, such as Bathurst, Maitland, Goulburn, Port Macquarie, Wide Bay, &c., in order to ascertain what number of persons they would be prepared to employ.

5. The Committee might also address a circular to the Magistrates at those and other places where labor is likely to be required, requesting to be furnished with such particulars as may enable them to judge how far it would be expedient to send any, and what number of persons to their districts to obtain engagements in private service.

6. The Committee will observe that the object of the Government is to enable those persons who cannot procure employment in Sydney, and are without the means of removing to the country, to reach a field where there is a demand for their services.

7. Advances to enable the Committee to carry their arrangements into effect will be authorised from time to time, on application being made to this office; but it will be necessary that an account should be kept of the expenditure, to be furnished to the Auditor General.

THE RIGHT WORSHIPFUL
THE MAYOR.

I have, &c.,
W. ELYARD.

P.S.—I am further directed to state, that the Colonial Secretary will be glad to be apprised of the steps which may be taken by the Committee in this matter, and to receive a full report on the subject, for the information of the Government, on the termination of their proceedings.

No. 2.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY GOVERNMENT FOR THE RELIEF OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

*Town Hall,
Sydney, 11 June, 1858.*

THE Committee have the honor to report that, acting under the instructions of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, contained in his letter of the 1st of May, they commenced collecting, on the 6th of May, a list of the laborers, mechanics, and others, who state themselves to be out of employment, and unable to procure it in Sydney. In this list have been registered, up to the 10th of June, the names of 500 applicants, with their trades or callings, the time each had remained unemployed, whether married or single, number of children, ages of children, age of applicant, and place of abode, with remarks in any cases calling for particular notice.

Of this number there are 235 single men, and 265 married, with 563 children, giving an average to each married of two and one-eighth; and the average time each has remained unemployed, according to the statements made by the applicants, is six weeks. Of the total number of 500 applicants, 285 cases have been inquired into, of whom 56 had obtained employment in Sydney, 20 had left Sydney to seek for employment in the country, and 36 could not be found at the addresses given.

2. The Committee also report that they have addressed a circular to the Benches of Magistrates of the various Police Districts, to the Commissioners of Road Trusts, and to the Government Road Surveyors, from most of whom replies have been received, stating, in general terms, whether or not any demand for labor exists in the district, but, in no instance, offering employment for any number of laborers, either on the roads, or in connection with any other public works.

3. The Committee have therefore adopted the only course open to them,—that of offering free passages, with one week's rations after arrival, to those districts in which the Committee are informed employment could be readily obtained; but, from the difficulty of procuring conveyances into the interior—the Committee having advertised for contracts without success—they have up to the present time only forwarded laborers and others to those districts upon the coast which are accessible by steamers.

To these districts—Braidwood and Moreton Bay—a large number of the applicants have been forwarded. To Braidwood, 63 men, 13 women, and 25 children; to Moreton Bay, 39 men, 8 women and 19 children; to the Hunter River, 10 men, 1 woman, and 3 children; making a total number of 112 men, 22 women, and 47 children, removed from Sydney by the Committee.

The

The Committee also report that they have placed themselves in communication with Mail Contractors on the Northern and Southern Roads, to endeavour to make arrangements to forward others of the unemployed into the interior.

4. The Committee also beg to remark that they consider the measures already taken have, to some extent, tended to relieve the pressure upon the unemployed working classes, and that the applications for employment are not so numerous as when the list was first opened.

The Committee have also the honor to forward an Appendix, containing a summary of the replies received in answer to the inquiries made by the Committee respecting the demand for labor in the country districts.

JOHN WILLIAMS,

Chairman.

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

APPENDIX TO FIRST REPORT.

*Town Hall,
Sydney, June, 1858.*

The Committee are informed from

ALBURY, by the Bench: That there are no public works, and that the supply meets the demand for labor, from the number of unsuccessful gold diggers always moving about this border locale.

From

BERRIMA, by the Government Surveyor of the Southern Road, that their funds do not admit of any increase in the number of laborers, and that the supply of labor is quite equal to the demand.

From

BERRIMA, by the Bench: That the Fitzroy Iron Mining Company are in want of hands, and give a high rate of wages to good men, and that a carpenter and a few general laborers would find private employment in Berrima and the neighbourhood.

From

BOWENFELS, by the Government Surveyor of the Western Road: That there are no public works, and that there is an abundant supply of labor, derived partly from a resident population, and partly from returned diggers and other wayfarers.

From

BRAIDWOOD, by the Bench: That carpenters and joiners are in demand at from 10s. to 12s. per diem; masons, bricklayers, and plasterers, at from 10s. to 14s. a day; common laborers at from 15s. to 20s. a week with board and lodging, and man and wife as general servants at £60 per annum. That though there are no public works, there are many private buildings in course of erection; that flour is £20 a ton, butcher's meat 4d. per lb, and other articles at equally low rates.

From

BATHURST, by the Bench: That several public works are in course of construction, consisting chiefly of Schools and places of Worship; that the contractors decline to give any guarantee that they would engage workmen who might be forwarded; but that competent bricklayers and carpenters would readily obtain employment. The ordinary rate of wages are, for bricklayers 7s. to 9s. per diem, carpenters 7s. to 9s., laborers 5s. to 6s. per diem. Farm laborers and shepherds are in great request, but the Bench are unable to state what number would find employment.

From

BRISBANE, by the Police Magistrate: That there are no public works, and that the supply of labor in the township is fully equal to the demand, but that any number of single men would find employment in the bush, at wages ranging from £28 to £35 per annum, with the usual rations.

From

CAMPBELLTOWN, by the Commissioners of the Road Trust: That since the completion of the railroad, they have had numerous applications for employment from the workmen lately in its construction, that there are no public works, and that the Commissioners have not funds to employ additional laborers.

From

CASSILIS, by the Bench: That there are no public works, that laborers would find constant employment as shepherds, at from £25 to £30 per annum, mechanics at from 20s. to 25s. per week, general laborers at from £35 to £40 per annum, in each case with rations; but that the Bench are unable to state the number required.

From

From

COOMA, by the Bench: That there are no public works, and that at present there is no employment for any additional number of laborers.

From

CASINO, by the Bench: That labor is not required in the district, and that there are no public works at present.

From

DUNGOG, by the Bench: that there are no public works, but that farm laborers are very scarce, and would meet with ready employment, more especially ploughmen and bullock drivers, at wages ranging from £25 to £35 per annum, with rations.

From

GUNDAGAI, by the Police Magistrate: That there are no public works, but that from eighteen to twenty laborers could readily find employment in private service. That mechanics demand from 10s. to 12s. per diem, and that general laborers are paid wages averaging from 15s. to 25s. per week.

From

GRAFTON, by the Bench: That there are no public works in progress, but that there is a considerable want of farm laborers and rough carpenters, at wages from 5s. to 6s. per diem, and at £35 to £50 per annum, with rations, and that from twenty to twenty-five would find employment in a week, and double that number in a month or six weeks.

From

GOULBURN, by the Bench: That there are no public works, and that the demand for labor in private service is altogether limited.

From

MAITLAND, by the Commissioners of Road Trust: That the only public work is the railroad, and that, though many private buildings are being erected, there does not appear to be a demand for labor which cannot be supplied in the locality.

From

MUSWELLBROOK: That there are no public works, but that sawyers would find employment there.

From

MORUYA, by the Bench: That the demand for labor in that district is too limited and irregular to justify them in holding out hopes that the object of the Committee could be promoted in that locality.

From

MUDGE, by the Police Magistrate: That there are no public works, and that the supply of labor is fully equal to the demand, though respectable female servants would meet with employment at good wages.

From

MURRURUNDI, by the Bench: That there is a great scarcity of laborers and mechanics, that the rate of wages could not be estimated, as from the few hands to be had, particularly tradespeople, they ask and get what they please to demand, and that the Magistrates feel assured that, though there are no public works, that about sixty-three laborers and mechanics would find immediate employment in the town and district, namely—four sawyers, two tailors, two shoemakers, two bricklayers, four stonemasons, two quarrymen, one cabinet-maker, two house carpenters, six fencers, two wheelwrights, twelve farm laborers, twenty shepherds, and four gardeners.

From

NARELLAN, by the Commissioners of Road Trust: That there are no public works; that their funds are too small to enable them to employ more laborers at present, and that the district appears fully supplied with laborers, though a few bricklayers, carpenters, and fencers, might find employment amongst the farmers.

From

NEWCASTLE: That agricultural laborers are in demand, but that there are no public works in course of construction.

From

PATERSON, by the Bench: That there are no public works, but that good agricultural laborers are in demand, at the rate of £25 per annum, with rations.

From

PENRITH: That the only public work is the Victoria Bridge, over the Nepean, and the Committee are referred to the architect, Edward Moriarty, Civil Engineer, of Sydney, for information as to whether any laborers could be employed in connection with it; but that the general demand for labor in the district, from its vicinity to Sydney, is not in excess of the supply.

From

PORT MACQUARIE, by the Bench: That there are no public works, and no field for the employment of any portion of those who are out of work in Sydney.

From

From
PARRAMATTA: That there is no want of laborers, and no public works other than the roads.

From
QUEANBEYAN, by the Bench: That the erection of a court house, lock-up, hospital, and church, is contemplated, and that were workmen on the spot one or more of such buildings would be at once proceeded with. That employment would be found by bricklayers, carpenters, stonemasons, and brickmakers, in satisfying the demand for private dwellings, and that no doubt about eighty laborers would find employment in the district, at wages of from 15s. to 20s. per week.

From
RYLSTONE: That there are no public works; that eight or ten single men could find employment as farm laborers or shepherds, at wages at about 12s. per week, but no employment for married men, except as shepherds or hut-keepers.

From
RAYMOND TERRACE: That there are no public works, and no greater demand for labor than the local supply is sufficient for.

From
SCONE, by the Bench: That a limited number of laborers and tradesmen might find employment in private service, at a fair rate of wages; and that, should the Government decide upon sending any of the unemployed of Sydney to Scone, the Bench would be most happy to render any assistance in their power in finding employment for such as may be disposed to settle in the district. There are no public works but those under the charge of Mr. R. M. Collett, the Government Road Surveyor.

From
SINGLETON, by Mr. R. M. Collett, the Government Road Surveyor: That first-rate carpenters would be certain to find employment at 10s. per diem, and bricklayers at 10s. per diem, but not at any higher rate, and that fencers and rough carpenters could also meet with employment at 6s. 8d. per diem, but of common laborers there is an abundance, and they find difficulty in earning 5s. per diem. That the only large work along the Northern Road is the Falbrook causeway, which, if granted, would give employment to eight quarrymen and four masons through the winter, at 10s. per diem.

From
TUMUT, by the Bench: That though there are no public buildings in course of erection, that there is a great demand for laborers in fields and orchards, and for rough carpenters, fencers, &c, but at lower wages than the rates now ruling, which are from £3 to £5 per week. At wages from £50 to £60 per annum, with rations, for skilled men, and for £25 to £30 per annum, with rations, for mere laborers, any number can find employment.

From
TWOFOLD BAY: That the demand for labor is very limited, and that the public works in course of construction are nearly completed.

From
WELLINGTON, by the Bench: That there are no public works, but that the present rate of wages is as follows:—For mechanics, 17s. 6d. per diem; farm laborers, £40 per annum; shepherds, £30 per annum; hutkeepers, £25 per annum; general laborers, £78 per annum; house servants (married couples) £80 per annum; female house servants, £27 per annum; grooms, £52 per annum; storekeepers, £40 per annum,—in each case with rations.

From
WINDSOR, by the Commissioners of the Road Trust: That there are no public works, and that there is no demand for labor in that district.

From
WOLLOMBI: That there are no public works and the demand for either laborers or mechanics very limited.

From
WARRIALDA, by the Bench: That though the demand for labor is not so urgent as heretofore, some of the unemployed of Sydney, especially the mechanics, would readily obtain employment at remunerative wages, but that there are no public works in course of construction.

From
WOLLONGONG, by the Bench: That there are no public works, and that the Magistrates are not in a position to say that any laborers would be sure of finding employment.

From
YASS, by the Bench: That there are no public works, but that there is a good field for industrious willing men as farm laborers and general servants, at wages from £30 to £35 per annum, with the usual rations, and that married couples with sons growing up, capable of taking charge of an out-station, would also find employment. That good female servants would find employment at wages ranging from 8s. to 10s. a week, and the Bench therefore recommend that about fifty of each class be forwarded to Yass.

No. 3.

SECOND REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY GOVERNMENT FOR THE RELIEF
OF THE UNEMPLOYED OF SYDNEY.Town Hall,Sydney, 30 July, 1858.

THE Committee have the honor to report to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, that the total number of applicants for employment, from the 6th day of May to the 30th day of July—a period of twelve weeks—is 840, of whom 418 are single men, and 422 married, with 923 children, giving an average of two and one-fifth to each family, and numbering in all 2,185 souls. The time they have remained out of work, or only partially employed, is, according to the statements made by the applicants, 5,086 weeks, giving an average of six weeks to each applicant.

Of the whole number of applicants 594 cases have been inquired into, of whom 78 had obtained work in Sydney, and 21 had left Sydney to seek employment, while 60—or about one-tenth—could not be found, or were not known at the addresses given; this, in many cases, was the result of the incorrect manner in which the place of abode was first stated, some of the number having since applied and given fresh addresses.

The total number removed from Sydney by the Committee, as per annexed statement, is 290 men, 63 women, and 138 children, making in all 490 souls. Most of the men sent to the different localities the Committee believe, from information since received, to have readily obtained employment at remunerative wages, and in only one instance has there been any necessity for issuing a second week's rations for the maintenance of a family, and this was in consequence of illness more than from a difficulty in obtaining employment.

The Committee herewith forward a statement—as requested in the letter of date 22nd July—of the receipts and expenditure up to the 30th of July inclusive, excepting the accounts of rations issued at Braidwood, Grafton, Moreton Bay, and Wide Bay, by the Benevolent Asylum, and by the Sydney Government Contractor, and of 22½ steerage passengers to Grafton, of which the Company cannot furnish an account till the steamer returns to Sydney.

The Committee have also the honor to forward an Appendix, containing a précis of the replies received by the Committee since the 10th of June, in answer to the inquiries made respecting the demand for labor and rate of wages in the country districts.

The number of applicants whose names remain upon the list at this date—30th of July—is 400, of whom 252 cases have been inquired into and reported upon, leaving 148 still to be inquired after, of whom about one-third have probably found employment or left Sydney, leaving 350 as the number of men still out of work in Sydney, of whom a large proportion are mechanics—principally carpenters, masons, and quarrymen—many of whom are in great distress, having large families dependant upon them, and who have been compelled, in some instances, to sell their furniture and pawn their tools, to provide the means of subsistence for themselves and families. Of those whose names still remain upon the list, 182 are single men, and 218 married, with 327 children dependant upon them, and numbering in all 945 souls.

The Committee are of opinion that the measures already taken have reduced the amount of distress and destitution existing in Sydney; some of those forwarded by the Committee having already found means to send for their wives and families, while others—having settled down in the country—have had their families forwarded to them by the Committee; thus reducing the number of souls dependant upon those out of employment, from over two thousand to rather less than one thousand; and the Committee beg to suggest that this system should be carried out as long as any of those out of employment are willing to avail themselves of the facilities thus afforded of finding a market for their labor.

The Committee, therefore, have the honor to request that they may be informed whether they are to continue sending applicants for employment to those localities where labor is required, and whether it is intended to give employment upon public works in Sydney to those who are still unemployed, who are unable or unwilling to leave the city, and who—from the present state of trade—are not likely, at present, to succeed in procuring a livelihood without assistance from the Government.

JOHN WILLIAMS.

APPENDIX TO SECOND REPORT.

The Committee are informed,

From

BOMBALA, by the Bench: That employment could be readily found in the repairs of roads, &c., if the local Magistracy had sufficient funds at their disposal for such improvements.

From

COWRA, by the Bench, and other employers of labor at Cowra: That 100 laborers and artisans would meet with immediate employment at Cowra, or within a circuit of 30 miles, at reasonable wages. They therefore hope the Committee will forward a number of such to Carcoar or Cowra, that the present want of labor might be supplied.

From

From

DENILQUIN, by the Bench : That carpenters, brickmakers, able bodied laborers, and domestic servants, are in constant demand, the present supply being wholly inadequate to the requirements of the district. That skilled laborers can easily obtain from 13s. to 16s. per diem ; laborers from 20s. to 30s. a week, with rations ; and general servants (female) £35 to £40 per annum, with rations. The public buildings about to be erected immediately, and for which labor is earnestly required, are the Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches, a Bank, a Telegraphic Terminus, a Masonic Lodge, and several private dwellings, which the paucity of skilled labor alone has delayed to the present time. The Bench, therefore, recommend and urge the Committee to forward from 30 to 50 of the trades referred to, who would meet with immediate employment, at good wages.

From

DRAYTON, by the Bench : That there are no public works in course of construction, but that there is a general demand for labor in the district, and a high rate of wages ; shepherds, hutkeepers, and laborers obtain from £28 to £40 per annum, skilled laborers such as blacksmiths, shoemakers, carpenters, &c, proportionably higher wages. The Bench are of opinion that 100 of the unemployed of Sydney might find immediate and profitable employment in this district.

From

DALBY, by the Bench : That there are no public works, but the demand for labor of all kinds very great indeed : carpenters and sawyers, &c., can readily obtain remunerative employment at from £3 to £5 per week ; shepherds at from £30 to £35 per annum ; hutkeepers at from £25 to £28 per annum ; bullock drivers 25s. to 30s. a week, in each case with rations.

From

GAYNDAH, by the Bench : That there are no public works in course of construction, but that a new court house and watch house will shortly be erected in Gayndah. The following description of labor is in great request :—Shepherds, at from £30 to £35 per annum ; shepherds and hutkeepers, £55 to £60 ; bullock drivers, £50 to £70 ; station servants, married couples from £60 ; bush carpenters and house carpenters, bricklayers and masons, none in the district. One or two laundresses would find employment in Gayndah.

From

IPSWICH, by the Bench : That though a large number of immigrants have arrived at Moreton Bay, a limited number of the unemployed of Sydney might obtain work in this district. Rate of wages,—stonemasons, 14s. per diem ; carpenters and joiners, 11s. 8d. per diem ; bricklayers, 12s. 6d. per diem ; wheelwrights, 10s. 6d. per diem ; blacksmiths, 10s. 6d. per diem ; plasterers, 20s. per diem ; quarrymen work by the piece, and make from 18s. to 20s. per diem ; but the Bench recommend that only a limited number of each be sent, as the demand is limited. Laborers rule about 36s. per week ; in the country the wages are from £35 to £40 per annum, with rations. Female servants are in demand, at from £17 to £25 per annum ; cooks, at from £27 to £30 per annum.

From

MARYBOROUGH, WIDE BAY, by the Bench : That from 40 to 50 men would find employment as shepherds, hutkeepers, &c., the public works in course of construction, are the court house and lock-up, a road from Maryborough to Brisbane direct, and the buoying of the ship channel from Wide Bay to Queen's Wharf ; all in the hands of different contractors, that letters would be addressed to the employers of labor in the Wide Bay and Burnett Districts, and that on their replies being received, further communications would be addressed to the Committee.

From

MOLONG, by the Bench : That there are no public works offering scope for labor, but the pastoral interests of the neighbourhood always supply employment for good laborers and strong able bodied mechanics at standard wages.

From

SINGLETON, by the Bench : That there are no public works, but the Bench are of opinion that bricklayers, carpenters, shoemakers, and tailors, to the number of five of each trade would find employment at 10s. per diem, and that common laborers to the number of 50 would get employment at the rate of 5s. per diem.

From

TENTERFIELD, by the Bench : That there is a great demand for laborers and mechanics, and that the following persons would find employment at good wages, namely, six sawyers, 12 splitters and fencers, two blacksmiths, six house carpenters, four shoemakers, four stonemasons, four brickmakers, four bricklayers, two wheelwrights, 12 farm laborers, and 20 shepherds.

From

WAGGA WAGGA, by the Bench : That though there are no public works in course of construction, yet that the demand for laborers by private individuals is very great indeed, and that the Bench are of opinion that if 100 laborers and mechanics were sent they would find regular employment at remunerative wages.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

UNEMPLOYED LABORERS.

(FINAL REPORT OF COMMITTEE FOR THE RELIEF OF.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 19 October, 1858.Town Hall, Sydney, 12 October, 1858.

THIRD and FINAL REPORT of the Committee appointed by Government for the relief of the Unemployed of Sydney, with a statement of the Receipts and Expenditure to the termination of the Commission.

The Committee have the honor to report to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary:—

1. That the total number of men who have applied for removal into country districts, or who have reported themselves as out of employment, from the 6th of May to the 15th of September, when the list was finally closed, a period of twenty weeks, is 1,154, or about 58 per week, during the time the list remained open. Of these 592 are single, and 562 married, with 1,226 children, and numbering in all 2,942 souls.

2. From the 2nd of August to the 15th of September 314 applications have been received for removal into the country, of which number it is believed about 100 have been caused by the discovery of gold on the Fitz Roy River.

To Gladstone, Port Curtis, a limited number of the most necessitous were sent before it was known that emigration would be likely to set in that direction, and the persons sent were chiefly married men, with families dependant upon them, and were selected out of more than 150 applicants.

The Committee believe that the emigration to the Fitz Roy River has had the effect of removing from Sydney much of the surplus labor, and must eventually raise the rate of wages, and enable laborers and mechanics remaining in Sydney to obtain permanent and remunerative employment.

3. Since our last Report—that is, from the 2nd of August to the 15th of September—104 men, 44 women, and 83 children, have been sent into the country; making the number of men removed from Sydney 394, of women 107, and of children 220; or in all 721 souls.

4. Of the 1,154 applicants, 860 cases have been inquired into, of whom only 80 were in work at the time inquiries were made, and 64 (chiefly single men) could not be found, or were not known at the addresses given.

Of the 314 applications made from the 2nd of August to the 15th September, 236 cases were inquired into, and were found to be principally mechanics; many of whom, though with large families and in great distress, had deferred their applications till their resources were utterly exhausted, from unwillingness to leave Sydney, and the hope of obtaining employment.

Of the 1,154 applicants, 474 are laborers, 105 farm laborers and bushmen, 72 carpenters, 40 masons, 37 quarrymen, 29 blacksmiths, 20 gardeners, 18 bakers, 18 rough carpenters, 16 clerks and storekeepers, 16 butchers, 15 painters, 15 tailors, 14 shoemakers, 12 plasterers, 12 bricklayers, 10 engineers, 10 cooks and servants, 8 miners, and 7 shepherds. There are also applicants of almost every trade and calling, comprising coopers, wheelwrights, cabinet-makers, fencers, wool-sorters, sheep-shearers, harness-makers, bookbinders, printers, millers, French polishers, millstone builders, cigar-manufacturers, soap and candle makers, gilders, coach-builders and coach-trimmers, vine-dressers, curriers, iron-founders, brickmakers and sailors, musicians, surgeons, and schoolmasters.

Of those removed from Sydney, there are 144 laborers, 78 farm laborers, 29 carpenters, 16 masons, 11 quarrymen, 11 bakers, 11 rough carpenters, 9 cooks and servants, 9 blacksmiths, 7 shoemakers, 7 bricklayers, 5 painters, 5 tailors, 5 butchers, 5 stockmen, 4 clerks or storekeepers, 3 wheelwrights, 3 brickmakers, 2 coach-builders, 2 engineers, 2 miners, 2 cabinet-makers, 1 miller, 1 printer, 1 candle-maker, and 1 bookbinder.

5. Of the 394 men removed from Sydney, 230 are single, and 164 married, with 360 children. Of the 164 married men, about 100 have been accompanied by their wives and families, the wives of the others having consented to their husbands leaving Sydney in search of employment, as many of them had been compelled to maintain their husbands out of their own and their children's earnings. Of the applicants to the Committee, 9 men, 2 women, and 10 children were in a state of utter destitution, and were either receiving relief from the Benevolent Asylum, or were sent to the Asylum by the Committee till they could be removed from Sydney.

6. The Committee have also the honor to report that 721 souls have been removed from Sydney, and rations supplied to each for one week, at an expense to the community of about £1,700, or £2 7s. 6d. per head.

7. It is the opinion of the Committee that a large number of men have been placed in a position to earn a livelihood for themselves and families, the Committee being informed from Braidwood, Grafton, and Moreton Bay, (to which places a large proportion of those removed from Sydney have been sent), that those forwarded readily found employment at the current rate of wages.

It is also considered that the operations of the Committee have much alleviated and lessened the pressure upon the working classes, which has been severely felt by many, from the long continued want of employment in Sydney.

GOLD FIELDS' REGULATIONS.

(PROMULGATED UNDER 20 VICT., No. 29.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 5 August, 1858.Department of Land and Public Works, Sydney, 5th August, 1858.

GOLD FIELDS' REGULATIONS.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL, with the advice of the EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, has been pleased to establish the following Regulations, under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 20 Victoria, No. 29, for the Management of the Gold Fields of this Colony.

JOHN ROBERTSON.

GENERAL REGULATIONS.

I. All regulations hitherto in force for the management of the Gold Fields of New South Wales are hereby repealed, and the following are substituted in lieu thereof. Former regulations repealed.

II. Wherever the term "Commissioner in charge of the District" is used in these Regulations, it shall be understood to mean the Commissioner entrusted with the general superintendence of one of the three Gold Districts of the Colony, viz., the Northern, Southern, or Western District; and the term "Commissioner" shall mean a Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, or Sub-Commissioner, in charge of any particular portion of a Gold Field. Explanation of term Commissioner.

III. The term "claim" shall be taken to apply to any authorised holding whatever, unless otherwise specified. Explanation of term claim.

IV. As a reward for the discovery of gold in any new locality, the Commissioner may, in his discretion, allot to any miner or party of miners discovering the same in addition to the claim which each individual would otherwise be entitled to, any number of claims not exceeding ten, if the discovery be within the limits of a known Gold Field, and not exceeding twenty, if at a distance of three miles or upwards from the limits of any known Gold Field; such claims to be in conjunction, and, if practicable, to be measured in a rectangular block, as hereinafter provided. For the purpose of this regulation a new locality shall be taken to mean ground previously unworked, and capable of affording employment to not less than fifty miners. Prospecting.

V. Claims may be transferred to any authorized person; but such transfer shall not be recognized until it has been registered in the office of the Commissioner. Any miner who shall, from illness, be unable to work, or who shall be in attendance at any Court of Justice, or whose absence from his claim is rendered necessary by some urgent business, the proof of which shall lie with him, shall, on application to the Commissioner, be entitled to a written registry to the effect that such claim is held in reserve for him, and a copy of such registry shall be posted by the miner on every claim so reserved. Any claim remaining unworked and unregistered for three clear days shall be liable to be forfeited. Transfer. Registration. Unworked claims.

Commissioner empowered to make temporary rules.

VI. The Commissioner may at any time make such temporary rules or orders not inconsistent with the Act 20 Victoria, No. 29, or with these regulations, as he may consider necessary for regulating the mode of washing at any stream or waterhole, for the prevention of injury of a public nature, by the deposit of tailings, or refuse from any cradle, tom, or sluice.

Commissioner empowered to decide disputes.

VII. The Commissioner shall have power to decide upon, and make any necessary order in, any dispute that may arise upon any matter connected with the Gold Fields' management, and not herein provided for; but no such decision or order shall be inconsistent with the Act of Parliament 20 Victoria, No. 29, or with these regulations.

Claims to be properly pegged.

VIII. The holder of any claim on auriferous land of any description, except reefs or veins of quartz, shall, on pain of forfeiture, mark the boundaries of such claim by driving in at each corner a substantial peg, to stand at least one foot above the ground, which shall be kept at all times clear of rubbish or soil; and no person shall remove, injure, destroy, or cover any such peg.

Claims to be worked within 48 hours.

IX. All claims must be worked within forty-eight hours after the boundaries have been marked out.

Mining allotment.

X. Each person holding a Miner's Right will be permitted to occupy and enclose for the purpose of residence, so much land, as may be determined by the Commissioner, not exceeding eight hundred square yards.

Business allotment.

XI. Each person holding a Business License shall be permitted to occupy for purposes other than gold digging, land not exceeding in dimension sixty feet by one hundred and twenty feet. The Commissioner may further allot to the same party, on payment of an additional license fee, additional land to an equal extent; and when such land is situated in a position detached from any tents or buildings, and away from any main road or line of stores or shops, the Commissioner may permit the same person to occupy, under each license, an area not exceeding three times the above-named extent, and may also depart from the form of measurement.

Transfer of Business License.

XII. A Business License may be transferred to any authorised person, and shall be available on any Gold Field to which the licensee may remove; provided it be endorsed by the Commissioner.

Inadmissible claims

XIII. No claim will be allowed in any position where, by its interference with the supply of water requisite for the public, by undermining or digging up of roads, or by obstructing public thoroughfares, the general interests will be injured.

Land enclosed or occupied not to be worked without authority.

XIV. No miner shall dig upon or undermine any land enclosed by any authorized occupant, or which is occupied by any building, or with machinery in connexion with mining operations, or used as a garden, or as a Government camp, police station, or for any public purpose.

No sludge hole to be cut to the damage of other miners.

XV. No person shall dig into, cut away, or undermine the bank of any excavation or hole containing sludge or water, in such a manner as to cause damage to any claim, waterhole, dam-bank, drain, roadway, engine, mill, machine, or any substance containing gold, the property of any other miner or miners.

Commissioner may allow new roads to be made.

XVI. Upon any four or more persons applying for a road or crossing-place over any gully, creek, quartz reef, or other obstruction, and guaranteeing that they will make the same if sanctioned, the Commissioner shall determine whether or not such road or crossing-place is necessary, and shall make such order relative thereto as he may deem requisite; and no person shall in any way resist the making of any such road or crossing-place after its formation shall have been authorised by the Commissioner.

Holes sunk near roads to be fenced.

XVII. Any miner having a shaft or hole within the distance of ten feet from any road, foot-path, or crossing-place in ordinary use, and not completely enclosed by the framework of the windlass, shall erect around such shaft or hole a substantial two-railed fence, the upper rail of which shall be at least three feet and a-half above the surface of the ground; and shall also, on leaving such shaft or hole either temporarily or otherwise, cover it with logs not less than six inches in diameter.

Fences not to be removed.

XVIII. No person shall remove, cast down, or destroy any timber or fence placed for the purpose mentioned in the foregoing clause.

Water privilege.

XIX. A water privilege shall be taken to mean the right to convey, by means of a race, a specified quantity of water to any locality. Such water shall be measured by a plank sluice sluice head, having a sectional area of twelve inches by one, with a fall of one in twenty-four. Ground sluice heads shall have twice that sectional area. The water privilege will be considered distinct from the ground claim, and with the Commissioner's consent, may be held in connexion with fresh claims. All water privileges not used and upheld for a period of fourteen days in the case of alluvial working, and of one week in the case of river working, shall be held to be forfeited, unless such abandonment be explained to the satisfaction of the Commissioner.

XX. Applications for water privileges, or for permission to cut races for sluice ^{Races.} washing, and other purposes, must be made in writing to the Commissioner, who will not grant such privileges or permission if, in his opinion, the public interests would be injuriously affected by a compliance with such applications; and in cases where any such water privilege has been granted, the water must be allowed to return to the ordinary channel whenever the Commissioner shall so direct. Persons wishing to divert water from races for the purpose of tomming or sluicing, may be permitted by the Commissioner to use the surplus water, on payment to the proprietors of the race of such sum as may be determined by the Commissioner, in conjunction with assessors appointed in the manner prescribed in the 14th clause of the Act 20 Vict., No. 29. Surplus water shall be taken to mean all water in excess of the extent of water privilege.

XXI. Persons desirous of constructing dams or reservoirs for washing Gold, may ^{Dams, Reservoirs, or Wells.} apply in writing to the Commissioner, who will, if the same be unobjectionable, grant the requisite permission. The water contained in such reservoirs or dams, or in any wells sunk for domestic purposes with the consent of the Commissioner, shall be reserved for the exclusive use of the holders. When, however, any dam or reservoir interferes with the working of the bed of a river or creek, or obstructs the supply of water for domestic purposes, such dam or reservoir, if the Commissioner shall so direct, shall be temporarily lowered by the holder.

XXII. No machinery of any description, beyond the appliances for ordinary gold ^{Machinery.} washing, shall be erected on any Gold Field without the sanction of the Commissioner. Applications for permission to erect any machine used for gold washing must be made in writing to the Commissioner. Sanction will in no case be given until it has been shewn to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that a notice of the intended application has been posted for four clear days on the spot on which it is proposed to erect such machine, and also at the Commissioner's Office. To prevent any injurious deposit of sludge from any machine, a condition will be attached to the sanction for its erection that the owner shall, at any time, on pain of suspension of operations, dispose of the sludge in such manner as the Commissioner shall direct.

ALLUVIAL CLAIMS OTHER THAN RIVER CLAIMS.

XXIII. Each authorised miner shall be entitled to hold under his Miner's Right ^{Ex ent.} four hundred square feet of alluvial ground, and such claim shall be marked off in the form of a square, each side of which shall be twenty feet in length; and when there shall be two or more persons in any party, the claim shall be marked off in a rectangular form, the sides of which shall be in proportion to the number of such party, and shall be in length as follows, that is to say,—for two miners forty by twenty feet; for three miners forty by thirty feet; for four miners forty by forty feet; and when from any cause it shall be impracticable to take the claim in the form above-mentioned, the Commissioner may sanction a departure from that form, and allow such quantity of ground as will give to each miner four hundred superficial square feet, provided that in no case shall any such claim exceed in length twice its breadth, nor shall any such claim be taken up lengthwise on the line of any known lead, but always across such lead, and the same extent of claim may be held on any kind of alluvial ground without regard to the depth of sinking.

No more than four contiguous alluvial claims will be granted to any one party.

RIVER CLAIMS.

XXIV. Twenty feet frontage for each miner will be allowed in the beds of rivers or ^{Extent.} main creeks, running across the whole bed, unless the Commissioner deem the river or creek of such a breadth as to render a division desirable, in which case he will determine the division. When, from a superabundance of water, or other cause, such claims cannot be worked, they may be registered, but will be liable to forfeiture if the occupation is not resumed as soon as practicable.

XXV.

Commissioner to make rules.

XXV. The Commissioner may make such orders, not inconsistent with the Act 20 Vict., No. 29, or with these Regulations, relative to the proper working of River Claims as to him shall appear expedient, which orders shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the Commissioner, and shall be duly served on the owner of any claim to which they may apply; and any owner who shall neglect to obey any such order shall be deemed to have committed a breach of these regulations, and shall, unless good reason be shewn to the satisfaction of the Commissioner for such neglect, forfeit his claim.

Persons benefiting by race to share expense.

When any race or tunnel shall be cut, or other operation performed, rendering such claim workable, any person benefiting thereby shall, before working such claim, on penalty of forfeiture, pay such share of the expense of such operation as may be assessed by the Commissioner and two assessors appointed in the manner prescribed in the 14th clause of the Act 20 Vict., No. 29.

The number of claims of this description to be granted to any one party will not be restricted, provided that the same be taken in conjunction.

QUARTZ CLAIMS.

Definition of the words
"Reef" and "Vein."

XXVI. The word "Reef" shall be taken to mean any seam of quartz the average thickness of which, measured in different places actually exposed to view, shall exceed six feet. All other seams of quartz shall, for the purpose of these regulations, be deemed to be Veins only.

Extent.

Party.

XXVII. The claim allowed to each miner on the line of any quartz vein or reef shall be twenty feet in the direction of the vein or reef, and the total number of claims to be allowed for any one party of miners actually employed shall not exceed six: Provided that in all cases where any party of miners is only sinking or driving in search of gold, and shall not have found it in such quantity as to have induced them to extract it from the substance in which it is embedded, only one-half the number of men in proportion to the extent of claim shall be required to be employed on it.

Quartz claims to be marked by posts.

XXVIII. Any miner or party of miners who may be in authorised possession of any quartz claim shall, for the information of all other persons, mark the boundaries of such claim by the erection of posts at each end of it, to be at least three inches square, standing two feet above the ground, and kept at all times clear of rubbish, or anything which may tend to conceal them from view. And no person shall, on any pretence whatever, remove, destroy, or deface any such posts, nor shall any person erect any such posts with the view of inducing other persons to suppose that such ground is lawfully taken up and occupied.

Wall between quartz claims to be allowed.

XXIX. Between adjoining quartz claims a wall of three feet shall be preserved, and whenever any miner, in marking off a new claim, shall have neglected to leave the proper space for the wall, the Commissioner may deduct the necessary length from the claim last marked off, and assign it as a wall between such claim and the adjoining claim first marked. And, in like manner, when any miner or miners shall have marked off more than the proper width for a wall, the Commissioner may curtail such excess, and assign it to the holders of the claim first marked; or, if he deems it advisable, may order the boundary posts of the claim last marked to be removed to their proper position.

Extent of Veins.

XXX. When, in sinking for quartz, any party of miners shall strike a number of veins, none of which shall be a reef within the meaning of these regulations, they shall be entitled to hold and work such number thereof, exclusive of any cross course, as shall not exceed twenty feet in the mean thickness, to be ascertained by measurement in different parts, and they shall be entitled to follow such veins downwards, as hereinafter provided, unless it be shewn that from the union of two or more of them, or increasing thickness, the united veins have become a reef within the meaning of these regulations. In such case the Commissioner may allot any of the remaining veins, but in all cases the original holder or holders shall be entitled to select the veins adjoining each other, which they will hold and work: Provided such veins lie within a breadth of thirty yards, and do not exceed in total thickness the quantity specified in this regulation.

True position of reefs being uncertain, how dealt with.

XXXI. No person shall sink within fifty yards of any unabandoned shaft sunk on the supposed line of a reef or vein, until it has been proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that two or more nearly parallel reefs or veins do really exist in that particular site, in which case the miners first sinking shall be entitled to select which reef or veins they they will hold; and the Commissioner may allot the others: but if any miners shall sink at a distance of not less than fifty yards from the line of shafts sunk on a supposed line, and find any reef or vein, then in such case the reef or vein struck at such distance shall be adjudged to them, and not to those who first sank on the supposed line.

XXXII. The holder of any quartz claim shall be entitled to occupy, where practicable, a surface area of thirty feet on each side of his shaft, throughout the length of the claim, for the purpose of depositing rubbish and stone, raised from the claim: Provided that when any such claim shall run through or under any alluvial or surface soil supposed to contain gold, it shall be lawful for any authorised person to take away or work any such earth or soil; and such person shall remove the same from within the boundaries of the surface area attached to the quartz claim, within a reasonable time, to be determined by the Commissioner.

XXXIII. No person shall sink or drive within fifteen feet of the centre of any shaft.

XXXIV. Miners occupying any portion of a quartz reef or vein, shall be entitled to follow and work it in any direction that such reef or vein may take: Provided they do not trespass upon the claim of any other miner on the same line, or upon ground which may properly belong to the claim of such miner, or upon any part of the wall separating the claims: Provided also, that when any reef, vein, or bed of quartz shall lie nearly horizontally, or at a less angle with the horizon than twenty degrees, the holders of any claim shall be only entitled to follow such reef, vein, or bed of quartz in the direction of the dip, for a distance not exceeding fifty yards from the point where they commenced to sink in search of any such reef, vein, or bed of quartz.

XXXV. When any quartz reef, or a portion thereof, shall exceed in thickness thirty feet, the Commissioner may, on the application of any miner, reduce the length of any claim where it shall exceed the above mentioned thickness, in such proportion as will leave each original holder an extent of fifty square yards, to be measured on the horizontal section of the reef, as nearly as the angle at which the reef stands will permit; but in all cases the original holder shall be allowed to retain the whole, provided he employ upon the reef a number of men proportionate to the area.

XXXVI. When any miner shall make a drive or adit into any unoccupied hill or range in search of any quartz reef or vein, he may take up and hold any reef or vein that he may select, and with it such reasonable amount of wall as shall be necessary for its preservation; and no miner working in any adjoining claim shall in any way interfere with it, or with the wall attached to it.

XXXVII. When any two or more nearly parallel reefs or veins of quartz, occupied and worked near the surface by different parties, shall be found in their descent to unite, the united reef or vein shall be deemed to belong to the party who first opened and worked one of such reefs or veins, or to any person or persons to whom they may have transferred their claim: Provided that if it be shewn that the claim first opened has not been worked in a bona fide manner throughout, or that the reefs or veins were commenced to be worked simultaneously, the Commissioner may make such division of that portion of the united reef or vein as shall appear to him to be just.

XXXVIII. When any reef or vein of quartz, shall be found in its descent to divide into two or more distinct veins, any one of which shall be a reef within the meaning of these regulations, the Commissioner may call upon the holder of the claim first opened and worked to elect which reef or vein he will hold, and to allot the others: Provided that in all cases the original holder shall be allowed to work both veins until the miner to whom the Commissioner may have allotted the other vein shall have struck it, and shall be allowed the use also of any shaft or drive which he may have sunk or driven.

XXXIX. When, in order to determine any dispute, it shall be found necessary to lay down the boundary of a quartz reef claim, the general plane of which reef descends at an angle with the horizon of less than ninety degrees, or when the plane of the reef is not perpendicular, the boundary line shall, in all cases, be a line laid off at a right angle with another another line passing through the surface peg, marking the boundary of the claim at the end in dispute, and another point visible, and as distant as possible on the known line of the reef; and, in all cases where the general direction of the reef is not known with certainty, it shall be competent for the Commissioner, previously to any measurement made below, to fix upon some distant point which shall be taken to mark the direction of the reef for the purpose of deciding the particular dispute then before him.

Persons to stack quartz properly.

XL. Any person who wishes to retain possession of any quartz-stone, casing, or other substance containing gold, the product of a quartz claim, may do so for any period of time not exceeding one year, although the claim from which it was taken has been relinquished: Provided that he stack such stone, casing, or other substance, in a proper manner upon ground not supposed to be workable, and erect close to such stack a post with his name, address, and date of stacking legibly painted thereon; and no person shall remove, deface, or damage, any such post so erected, or remove any quartz-stone, casing, or other substance, so stacked. Any stone, casing, or other substance taken from a claim, and not so stacked, shall be deemed to be abandoned and forfeited.

EXTENDED CLAIMS.

Extent.

XLI. Where the expense attending the erection of mining machinery or works is likely to be great, or where the poverty of the ground will warrant it, the Commissioner may on application, allot to each miner proposed to be employed on such work an extended claim, not to exceed in area four ordinary claims: Provided that each miner so to be employed be placed to work on the claim within a time to be fixed by the Commissioner, and be actually kept employed during the holding of such claim, unless it be shewn to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the working thereof is necessarily suspended. Every such extended claim shall be laid out in one block, and shall not exceed in area twenty ordinary claims. Four clear days notice of the intention to apply to the Commissioner for an extended claim must be posted on the ground by the applicant. This regulation shall apply to all extended claims whether Matrix Quartz, Alluvial, or River; and in the event of any of the conditions not being fulfilled the Commissioner may direct the forfeiture, or such diminution of the claim as may meet the justice of the case.

Extended claims already sanctioned.

LXII. Nothing in the foregoing regulations shall be taken to prejudice the right to occupation of any extended claim sanctioned by the Commissioner previously to the publication of these regulations, so long as the conditions attending such sanction be fulfilled.

AURIFEROUS TRACTS.

Leases.

XLIII. Two Classes of Leases of auriferous tracts and quartz reefs will be granted.

1st.—Leases of eight acres of alluvial land, five hundred yards of a river bed, or four hundred yards on the line of a quartz vein, will be granted for a period limited to two years, at an annual rent of £5 per acre, £5 per hundred yards of River bed, or £5 per hundred yards of Quartz Vein respectively.

2nd.—Leases for a longer period, and for greater extent of land will be granted, at a Royalty, on the gross produce of gold.

Leases of two years' duration.

XLIV. Persons desirous of obtaining leases of the First Class may make application in writing to the Commissioner, who will submit the same to the Government through the Commissioner in charge of the District, who will issue the lease, if the application be approved.

(1.) Each such application must set forth the machinery to be used, and describe the proposed method of working the claim, the extent and nature of preparatory work to be done, the number of men whom the applicant undertakes to employ within a stated period, the constitution of the Company, the number of shares and the names of the shareholders.

(2.) The rent for each year must be paid in advance, and the application for the lease must be accompanied by the sum of £5, as a deposit, to be forfeited should the lease, when approved, not be taken out.

(3.) Pending the decision of the Government, the Commissioner in charge of the District may authorize the party applying for a lease temporarily to occupy, at his own risk, the ground ground sought to be leased: Provided that a notice, in the form A hereto appended, signed by the applicant, shall have been posted for six clear days on a conspicuous part of the claim, and also at the Commissioner's Office, and that no objection has been taken to the granting of the lease; and further, provided that during the said period, the claim shall have been marked out at each corner with posts not less than three feet in height.

(4) The Commissioner in charge of the District may likewise sanction the cutting of any race or the performance of any other operation necessary for the profitable working of any claim under lease, although such race or other operation may not be on the ground actually leased, provided that such sanction be not prejudicial to the public interests.

(5.) No such lease as aforesaid shall interfere with the right to any claim or claims held prior to the date of the application for such lease.

(6) Where, from floods or other unavoidable causes, the ground shall, in the opinion of the Commissioner, be unworkable, the lessee shall not be required to continue the employment of the stipulated amount of labour.

XLV. Applications for leases of the Second Class must be addressed to the Commissioner and be accompanied by a deposit of £50 to meet expenses which may be incurred in deciding upon the application, and also by the following information:—

1. A description of the land required for lease, and a plan shewing the extent of the auriferous portion, as well as of that required for setting up machinery, erecting dwellings or offices, or for other purposes.
2. The term or period for which the ground is required.
3. The consideration, in the shape of Royalty, on the gross produce which it is proposed to pay for the privilege of mining on it, being not less than one per cent.
4. The proposed plan of working it, stating the kind and power of machinery to be used.
5. The minimum number of men whom it is proposed to employ.
6. The time after approval of the application which will be allowed to elapse before the work will be commenced.
7. The time which will elapse, and the work to be done, before the number of men so stated will be employed.
8. The constitution of the Association or Company by which the ground will be worked, the proposed distribution of shares, and the amount of capital subscribed.

XLVI. The Commissioner in charge of the District shall forward to the Government every such application, with his report thereon. He will also cause the applicant to distinguish, by proper posts, the land for which he has applied, and to set up as well thereon, as at the Commissioner's Office, a notice in the form A hereto appended, defining the nature of the application. If at the end of fourteen days after such notice has been duly posted, no objection be preferred to the Commissioner in charge, respecting the lease of such land, he will be empowered to grant leave for the immediate occupation of it, at the risk of the applicant, and subject to the decision of the Government as to the terms on which the lease will be granted.

XLVII. The Government will entertain applications for leases under these regulations for periods not exceeding twenty-one years, subject to the following conditions, and any others which, from the special nature of the application, it may be desirable to add:—

1. That the ground applied for has been abandoned or is unoccupied.
2. That a right of entry at all times for the purpose of examining works, books, and accounts be reserved to the Government, or to those whom they may appoint.
3. That such books be kept in a form to satisfy the Government as to the quantity of material operated on, and the gold obtained.

GOLD FIELDS' REGULATIONS.

4. That accurate plans and sections, shewing the mining operations, be kept by the Association or Company, and that copies of these, shewing the progress made, be forwarded half-yearly to the Government through the Commissioner in charge of the District.
 5. That the gross produce of gold be forwarded by escort to the Mint at Sydney, for valuation by assay.
 6. That one-third the subscribed capital has been paid up.

XLVIII. The infraction of any of the conditions of a lease will involve the forfeiture thereof.

FORM OF NOTICE A.

I (or we) hereby give notice that I (or we) have this day made application for a lease (here state the term) of the ground within the surrounding marks, measuring by _____ Date.

GOLD FIELDS' COMMISSIONERS.

(LETTER OF INSTRUCTIONS TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 5 August, 1858.

(CIRCULAR.)

*Department of Land and Public Works,
Sydney, 5th August, 1858.*

SIR,

I have much satisfaction in being at length enabled to forward to you a few copies of the Government Gazette Extraordinary of this date, containing the Code of Regulations for the management of the Gold Fields of the Colony, established by His Excellency the Governor General, with advice of the Executive Council, under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, 20 Vict., No. 29.

2. I sincerely trust that these Regulations, in the framing of which much anxious attention has been bestowed, will be found to work advantageously for the general interests of the mining population.

3. It is not my present intention, nor indeed does it appear to be necessary, to attempt any précis of the contents of this code. But I desire to invite the attention of yourself, and of those acting under you, to the very large powers vested by these Regulations in you, such powers being given, not because it was thought that the mining population required to be repressed or controlled by any unusual authority, but because it was felt that to limit too much the discretion of Officers far removed from the seat of Government, and who would frequently be called upon to act under circumstances which it was wholly impossible to foresee, would, in effect, be to retard the development of the Gold Fields.

4. I wish, therefore, to impress upon you the paramount necessity of using these large powers, not arbitrarily or capriciously, but with firmness on the one hand, and with fairness and moderation on the other.

5. Whenever you may hesitate as to your proper line of duty in any case, I beg of you to bear in mind, that you will best interpret the intentions of the Government by acting towards the mining population in a spirit of conciliation.

6. You will be particular to make known to all those acting under you the purport of this communication.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient Servant,

JOHN ROBERTSON.

GOLD FIELDS.

(REPORT FROM COMMISSIONER IN CHARGE OF WESTERN.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 3 August, 1858.

HALF-YEARLY REPORT.

THE COMMISSIONER IN CHARGE OF THE WESTERN GOLD FIELDS to THE SECRETARY
FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.Western Gold Fields' Office, Sofala, 20 July, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to submit my Report on the Western Gold Fields for the half-year ended on the 30th of June, which has been deferred in consequence of my absence in Sydney and the pressure of business since my return.

THE TURON.

This field extends in the course of the river, running from north to south, a distance of about 40 miles, commencing about 10 miles below the source and terminating at a place known as the "Golden Ridge," below which, for a distance of from 12 to 15 miles, to its junction with the Macquarie, the river is, for greater convenience of jurisdiction, comprised within the Tambaroora District. The field extends westward over a table-land, the level of which is distant from the river an average of 4 miles, and in extent is some 5 miles by 7. Over all this field miners are dispersed, in many parts thinly scattered and in other localities collected together, their residences occasionally forming small hamlets. The population of this gold field was estimated, in a Return prepared by me in the month of May last, at 4,500: since that period about 600 Chinese have been added to the number. The production of gold since the date of my last Report has continued to increase—the weekly average of quantity at the present time despatched by Escort to the Mint being not less than 850 ozs.

At about the central portion of that part of the river forming the gold field is situated the flourishing Township of Sofala, containing from 600 to 800 inhabitants. Sofala, at the present time, is marked by an appearance of great activity and prosperity. The former buildings, of bark and slabs, are rapidly giving way to improved structures of weather-boards, with shingled roofs; and I am assured that the contemplated sale of the land to the present occupants is likely to lead, at no distant period, to the erection of brick buildings.

At Sofala there are three churches,—Church of England, Roman Catholic, and Wesleyan. There are also in the district four schools. The Church of England Denominational School at Sofala numbers 150 scholars.

Within the district there are 34 licensed public-houses, and a large number of stores and other places of business, inclusive of many conducted by Chinese.

On this, more than on any other of the Western Gold Fields, the tendency to supersede, by machinery and a combined system of labor, the more simple methods of working is observable. The river portion of the field affords great facilities for enterprises in which the main agency will be supplies of running water, and for embarking in which the new Regulations about to be issued will afford a more liberal scope and a greater security. The quartz vein resources of the district are again attracting attention, and I hope at no distant time to be able to report favorably as to its prospects in that respect.

The staff on this field consists of the Commissioner in charge of the Western Fields, having the immediate management of the Turon Field and acting as Police Magistrate; a Sub-Commissioner, acting as Clerk of Petty Sessions and also performing the clerical duties of the office of the Commissioner, with a Police Force numbering nine.

TAMBAROORA.

This field, although comparatively limited in extent, has perhaps outstripped any other of the Western Fields in its progress during the last six months. It is situated on a table-land immediately overhanging the junction of the Turon and Macquarie Rivers, the lower portion of the former river being, as before remarked, comprised within that district. The table-land in extent does not exceed 3 miles by an average breadth of half-a-mile, although, as in the case of the Turon, there are workable creeks leading both into that river and into the Macquarie. There is what may be termed a township at Tambaroora, but on a far smaller scale, and evidencing a much more tardy progress than Sofala. Tambaroora is distant 24 miles from Sofala, the road lying for 8 miles along the river, and then over, for the most part, a most rugged country. The great drawback to Tambaroora—that is, the table-land portion as a gold field—is the want of a sufficient supply of water, which in any quantity has to be preserved in dams or reservoirs. A running stream it is impossible by any labor to obtain, otherwise the soil is so generally impregnated with gold that an immense yield would be procured. The great recent attraction on this field has been a vein of a most peculiar character, and of considerable richness. Between two walls of solid rock there is a kind of fissure of a softer rock, about six feet in width. After penetrating a depth varying from 8 to 60 feet, a small seam of decomposed quartz is met with. This seam is of great richness, having yielded, it is asserted, in some claims many hundreds of pounds. It has invariably, when reached, produced a large quantity of gold. The fissure has been traced for upwards of a mile, and the termination has not yet been ascertained. So great, however, is the labor of sinking to this seam of quartz, where the depth is great, that numbers of the miners have been compelled to abandon their claims from want of means to pursue the sinking. The population of Tambaroora was estimated, in my Return above referred to as prepared in May last, at 2,000, to which may now be added about 300 additional Chinese. The weekly average of gold now forwarded by Escort from that place amounts to about 500 ozs.

There are at Tambaroora two churches,—one of the Church of England, and one Roman Catholic.

The staff on that gold field consists of a Sub-Commissioner, acting as Clerk of Petty Sessions, and a Police Force to the number of five. The district is under the charge of the Assistant Commissioner for the Meroo, who is Police Magistrate for, and visits, Tambaroora. In the district are twenty-five public houses, and numerous stores and other places of business.

THE MEROO, (INCLUDING LOUISA CREEK.)

Some 20 miles distant from Tambaroora, and lying about the same distance on that side from Mudgee is Louisa Creek, the site of the Assistant Commissioner's camp. Louisa Creek runs on an elevated piece of land, and ultimately falls into the Meroo, of which it is a tributary. The Assistant Commissioner's camp is situated on this creek, about 3 miles from the river, and 4 miles from Avisford, formerly the site of the camp. It is advantageously situated as occupying a central position for jurisdiction over the extensive Meroo field. The field known as the Meroo comprises the Upper and Lower Meroo and numerous important tributaries, including Louisa Creek. In extent, from end to end, it is not less than 70 miles, and in many places of considerable width, especially on the the upper portion, where the country is comparatively level; and workings have been carried along the banks of the river, and main creeks, and back for distances of from a quarter to half a mile in some localities. There is nothing of the nature of a table-land gold field in the Meroo District, unless at a place known as the Pyramul—being the head of a creek of that name—and at Louisa Creek, the former site of the Colonial Gold Company's operations, and of the present Government camp. The miners of the Meroo District, occupying so vast an extent of country, are necessarily more scattered than on any of the other fields, and yet collected together in some of the favorite localities. Richardson's Point, on the Centre Meroo, and distant some 7 miles from the Government camp, is the settlement of most permanent character in this district. It is in contemplation, as in the case of Sofala, to dispose of the land now occupied at this place, and to lay out a township.

The Oriental Bank are now erecting a building at Richardson's Point; and I have recently removed the Police Station, composed of a corporal and two troopers, from Avisford to that place.

In the district are four churches,—two of the Church of England, one Presbyterian, and one Roman Catholic. There is also a school at Louisa Creek, under the denominational system, attached to the Church of England. There are in the district thirty public-houses, and numerous stores.

The Meroo field has been long worked, but along the course of the river, and in some of the principal creeks, are afforded facilities, second only to the Turon, for extensive operations by means of water, the supply of which is considerable.

The population of the field in May last I returned at 6,200, to which may now be added 700 Chinese, since arrived.

The production of gold has continued steadily to increase, the quantity now sent weekly by Escort averaging 900 ozs.; this is inclusive of that sent from Mudgee, which is obtained on the Meroo.

The staff for this district consists of an Assistant Commissioner, acting as Police Magistrate, and having also the charge of Tambaroora; a Sub-Commissioner, acting as Clerk of Petty Sessions, and a Police Force numbering eight.

STONEY CREEK, (INCLUDING MERINDEE.)

Stoney Creek, although the most recently opened field of any consequence, yet is at the present time considerably behind the other fields both as to population and produce. The main workings of this field are comprised on a level summit of the range dividing the waters falling into the Macquarie and the Bell Rivers, some 15 miles from the junction, and distant about 3 miles from either. From this vicinity the Muckerawa Creek, an old and almost worked out field, falls into the Macquarie. The workings on the higher lands, or main workings, may be said to extend about three miles by one. There have been considerable, and are now some workings, on the creeks comprised within this district, inclusive of "Stoney Creek," which gives the name to the district. The great drawback to the progress of this district is the want of a sufficient supply of water, which has, as in the case of Tambaroora, to be preserved in dams and reservoirs. The field also, as regards alluvial working, has not proved to be of equal richness with any of those before named. On the other hand, there is a greater promise of extensive and payable quartz workings, and there is good reason to expect that its resources in that respect will be tested so soon as the new Regulations are issued.

Within the jurisdiction of this district are the lesser gold fields of Ophir, Burrendong, and Merindee. The latter field, although situated on the Lower Meroo, I have recently detached from the charge of the Assistant Commissioner at Louisa Creek to that of the Assistant Commissioner at Stoney Creek, with a view more to equalize the duties of those officers.

Ophir may be said to be almost abandoned, there being but about 60 miners engaged on the old workings.

Seven miles below the junction of the Muckerawa Creek with the Macquarie, and from 1 to 2 miles back from that river, near to its junction with the Cudgegong, is the "Burrendong Gold Field." This is a small and long-worked field. It has produced considerable quantities of gold. There have been many cases of wonderful individual success, the gold being much scattered, and in large pieces; but as a general working, it is the most precarious of the Western Fields. It numbers at the present time some 300 inhabitants. Burrendong is attached to the district of Stoney Creek, the Assistant Commissioner from which holds a Court of Petty Sessions therein every alternate week, and which Court likewise adjudicates for Merindee.
the

Merindee is situated on the Lower Meroo, close to the junction with the Cudgegong. It is distant 16 miles from Burrendong. The gold field is very limited in extent, being merely a flat of about a mile in length by half-a-mile in breadth, lying along the bank of the river. It has only been known as a place of any note for about twelve months. A considerable quantity of gold was procured about that period, but the success was most unequal, the workings being of the same character as those at Burrendong. The present population is about 400.

The population comprised within the jurisdiction of the Stoney Creek Assistant Commissioner, by my estimate in May last, was returned at 1,400, to which may be added now 400 Chinese.

The quantity of gold forwarded weekly from Stoney Creek is, at an average, 180 ozs. The Merindee gold, however, finds its way to Mudgee or Louisa Creek.

The staff for this district consists of an Assistant Commissioner, acting as Police Magistrate, a Sub-Commissioner, acting as Clerk of Petty Sessions, and a Police Force numbering six. The district contains 26 public-houses, and numerous stores.

I enclose herewith the Reports of the Assistant Commissioners having the management of the fields of the Meroo and Tambaroora, and Stoney Creek.

There are in the western country many gold workings in localities distant from the places named, none of which have, however, attained sufficient importance to be considered as gold fields. I may instance the Cudgegong River; Pipe-clay Creek, 20 miles beyond Mudgee, on the other side from the Meroo; Winburndale Creek, lying between Bathurst and Sofala, towards the latter place; King's Plains, in the direction of Carcoar, distant from Stoney Creek and Sofala respectively about 70 miles; also "Fitzgerald's Swamp" and "Campbell's River," in the Bathurst country. The three last-named places have recently been mentioned to me as likely to become permanent workings: they are of late discovery. The urgent requirements of the established fields have not admitted as yet of these places being visited by myself, or an Assistant Commissioner; but it is my intention that they shall shortly be visited and reported on. The fact of their existence as gold workings evidences the extent over which gold is distributed in the western country.

On reviewing the progress of the Western Fields for the past half-year, I feel justified in offering to you my congratulations on their steady advancement and future prospects. The yield for that period, as delivered by Escort at the Royal Mint, has been 63,032 ozs. 8 dwts. 3 grs., as compared with 47,334 ozs. 12 dwts. 17 grs. for the same period of 1857.

The population, as returned in my estimate prepared in May, was then computed at 14,156, since which time it has been augmented by about 2,000 Chinese, making at the present moment a total number of 16,156, or, in round numbers, 16,000. Of these the total European male adult population is estimated at 4,756; women and children, 5,000; Chinese, 6,400. The number of persons occupying premises for business purposes may be taken at 350, and these may be estimated as one-fourth of the number employed in, and supported by, the trade and other avocations, apart from mining, on these fields.

The number of Miners' Rights issued up to the 30th of June, during 1858, is 6,498, and the number of Business Licenses for the same period, 240. It must, however, be borne in mind that these figures do not represent the numbers of persons actually holding rights and licenses, as all those taken out after the 30th June, 1857, had not fallen due at the same period of 1858. Many have been taken out in the course of the present month, and a considerable number have failed to renew the Miners' Rights expired on the 30th of June. The greater urgency for obtaining the fees from large bodies of Chinese, coupled with our limited means, has up to this time utterly precluded the adoption by the Commissioners of coercive measures with respect to that section of the European miners who have proved themselves indisposed voluntarily to comply with the Act. In any case, however, the tedious course prescribed by the Act of procedure by summons would render the attempt at coercion practically abortive. In respect to the Chinese the Commissioners have been compelled to anticipate the introduction of the contemplated amending Act with regard to summary arrest, rather than permit the alternative of large bodies of these people being in unauthorised occupation of the gold fields.

In the natural course of things, as localities yielding a return by working small quantities in the ordinary method are becoming more rare, these gold fields are now passing through the change from the former system to that, the principle of which is the working by combined labor and machinery large quantities at a small per centage of profit, but which experience has proved to produce, in the aggregate, greater returns, and a more even and certain result to mining operations. A great impetus to this change will be afforded by the new Regulations now about to be issued; and under their provisions there is every prospect that the problem as to whether the numerous quartz reefs that intersperse all our fields are to afford an extensive field for operations and permanent gold workings will, before the expiration of another twelve months, be fully solved.

The Chinese immigration has of course been the most prominent feature in connection with these fields during the last half-year, and although I have on several occasions fully reported on the subject, it may be proper here briefly to allude to it. There is undoubtedly a strong feeling against these people on the part of the miners, but I am disposed to the opinion that this feeling, which met the commencement of the influx, has not increased with their augmented numbers and a further experience. A considerable section of the mining community carry their prejudice to an extent dangerous to the public peace, but the severity with which any movements having such a tendency have been at all times met by the officers on the Gold Fields, has given a wholesome check to any proceedings of the character referred to. In localities where there is a scarcity of water the European miners have undoubtedly had cause of complaint against the Chinese. This evil has, however, been to a great extent remedied by the diversion, as far as possible, of the Chinese from such localities, and regulations made for their management. I cannot see that in any other way the Chinese immigration has been of any real injury to the miners. As a rule, although impatient and irascible, they are peaceably disposed and inclined to be governed by the laws, so far as understood by them. Any designed or unprovoked offensive measures on their part against the Europeans there is no probability of. They are very industrious, earning apparently a good livelihood from the poorest ground. They work for the most part in bodies of from 20 to 40 on their first arrival, but decrease those numbers after a time. They are becoming good customers to the trading community, other than the publicans. There is, however, I must add, great difficulty in obtaining from them payment of the Miners' Right fee. It is probably the custom in their country to evade taxes, as they appear to be punctual and regular in their business engagements.

At the present time, when the gold fields of New South Wales are attracting more general attention, and being more recognized as an important branch of Colonial industry than at any period since the reaction from the interest of the first discovery, I have thought it right, even at the risk of overstepping the boundaries of my usual Half-yearly Report, to offer to the Government the fullest information in my power as to the position, extent, present condition, and future prospects of those fields entrusted to my charge.

I have, &c.,

HAROLD MACLEAN,

Commissioner in charge of the Western Gold Fields.

THE HONORABLE
THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
Stoney Creek, 1 July, 1858.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to submit my Half-yearly Report on the District under my charge.

2. During the past month I have visited the gold fields at Ophir, Burrendong, Merindee, and the Lower Meroo, for the purpose of issuing Miners' Rights and Business Licenses. At the first named locality there are about 60 miners working in the bed of the Summerhill and Ophir Creeks, many of whom during the late dry weather were well repaid for their labor. Some parties are now engaged in testing, by deep sinking, the surrounding ranges. At Burrendong there are about 200 miners, the majority of whom are engaged on a quartz vein lately opened in that neighbourhood. A few only have been successful; for this branch of gold mining is too laborious, and requires an amount of capital which the ordinary digger is unable to command.

Merindee and the Lower Meroo, lately attached to this district, contain a population of about 400 miners, of whom one-third are Chinese; most of them are at present opening up new ground on the Meroo—with what degree of success I have been unable as yet to ascertain.

The Iron-ark and Stoney Creek are still, as stated in my last Report, principally occupied by Chinese. They have erected three stores, and obtained large supplies from Sydney, from which I think it probable that a considerable addition to their number may shortly be expected. No difficulty has as yet arisen between them and the European miners, although in some instances complaints have been made of their tendency to waste water. Their general conduct has been remarkably peaceable and orderly. At the Quartz Reef several parties are still sinking, with every prospect of success; and I have already received five applications for leases of 100 yards of this and other veins in the vicinity.

3. I estimate the mining and business population of this district at about 1,200, of whom 400 are Chinese. There have been issued since the 1st January, 491 Miners' Rights, and 43 Business Licenses; the disparity of these numbers with that of the estimated population is accounted for by the fact that nearly all the Chinese having passed through other gold fields were provided with Miners' Rights on their arrival here, and that many of the Licenses of the European population will not be due until later in the year. The amount of gold forwarded by Escort during the half-year was 4,127 ozs. 13 dwts. 7 grs.; the small quantity sent is chiefly attributable to the very dry weather during the summer, which prevented a large portion of this gold field from being profitably worked; and also from the fact, that the gold obtained at Ophir, Merindee, and the Lower Meroo, does not pass through the Stoney Creek Escort—the former being sent to Orange, and the latter to Louisa Creek.

I have, &c.,
WHITTINGDALE JOHNSON,
Acting Assistant Gold Commissioner.

The Commissioner in charge of the Western Gold Fields, Sofala.

*Louisa Creek,
3 July, 1858.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report on the Meroo and Tambaroora Gold Fields, for the past quarter.

I have issued, for the three months ending the 30th of June,—Miners' Rights, 2397; Traders' Licenses, 89.

The amount of gold transmitted by Escort during the same period was 19,209 ozs. 15 dwts. 5 grs., to which may be added the amount left at this station by the Mudgee Escort, viz., 3,465 ozs. 7 dwts. 3 grs., all of which is the produce of this district; making a total of 22,675 ozs. 2 dwts. 8 grs.

By the above returns it will be seen that these gold fields still continue in a very flourishing condition, and from their permanent character and extent, there can be little doubt that they will continue so.

The Chinese population continue quiet, and, with the exception of giving great trouble in the collection of their License Fees, are well conducted.

The European miners are generally contented, and doing well. They bear very little good-will towards the Chinese, but I apprehend no serious disturbance among them at present.

The men under my command, with one exception, have been steady and well-behaved.

The horses, though poor, are still healthy, and, barring one, sound.

SIR,

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the information of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, a communication from Mr. Sub-Gold Commissioner 5 Oct., 1858. Johnson, reporting the opening of a quartz reef at Burrendong, attended by instances of very great individual success, and also of other quartz reefs in this district.

2. It will be observed, the likelihood of the reef at Burrendong proving to be a permanent working of a rich character has not yet been fully tested.

3. I propose myself shortly to visit Burrendong, when the necessity, or otherwise, of establishing a Sub-Police Station at that place will be more apparent.

[Enclosure.]

*Gold Commissioner's Office,
Stoney Creek, 5 October, 1858.*

Sir,

I do myself the honor to report on the recent success and important discoveries of the miners in this district.

2. Some time since, as stated in my last half-yearly Report, an auriferous quartz vein was opened at the head of Spring Creek, Burrendong, from which, however, at that period, no great quantity of gold had been obtained. In the latter end of August a large nugget, weighing upwards of 142 ozs., was discovered near the surface of a reef by a man named Thomas Harvey, whose success attracted a considerable body of miners to the spot, and in a short time active operations were commenced on the supposed line of the reef. During the ensuing fortnight a further amount of about 275 ozs. was procured by Harvey and his party, making a total of 421 ozs. as the result of their labor for little more than two weeks. In the adjoining claim no less than 446 ozs. were obtained from three buckets of decomposed quartz, and during the past month upwards of 100 ozs. from other parts of the reef, making in all about 821 ozs. as the known produce of the reef during the past month. All of this gold, with the exception of about 200 ozs. remaining in my hands for safe custody, has been sent to the Mint for coinage.

3. The gold was found embedded in small quartz veins, or leader, dipping into a very steep hill at an angle of 45° . It is the opinion of competent judges, that when the main reef, which must be at a considerable depth, is reached, a very heavy deposit of gold will be obtained. About 150 miners are employed on the reef, and I have every reason to believe that extensive and permanent workings will be carried on in this locality.

4. Considerable success has also attended the deep sinking operations in Burrendong Flat—as much as 36 ozs. having been procured in one week from a single shaft, and many other claims have been proportionably remunerative. There are at present 300 miners at Burrendong; but, as the recent successes will doubtless draw a considerable population to this spot, I consider it necessary, for the preservation of order, that a detachment of the Gold Police should be stationed there—to accomplish which it will be requisite that authority be given for the removal of the old police station from its present site to Spring Creek, which could, I think, be effected at an expense of not more than £30.

5. I may also mention that several discoveries of quartz reefs have been made in the vicinity of the Iron Bark and Stoney Creek, which doubtless will eventually prove highly remunerative when skill and capital are brought to bear upon them. One steam crushing machine has already commenced operations, and another is in course of erection, so that the auriferous capabilities of the reef in this neighbourhood will shortly be tested.

SIR,

I have the honor to forward herewith a specimen of Gold found in the M'Intyre Brook, in the Darling Downs District, and forwarded to this office by Mr. Surveyor Wood, with the following remarks:—"Gold certainly does exist in the M'Intyre, and, from what I had an opportunity of seeing, I should say in sufficient quantities to pay. Enclosed I send a specimen taken from the M'Intyre Brook by Mr. Brown, about one mile below his Inn. I might here remark, that, from the character of the country, there can be no doubt that gold exists in Canning Creek, Musquito Creek, Bodumbah Creek, and the heads of the M'Intyre; also in Canal Creek, Reedy Creek, and Thane's Creek. Towards the heads of these creeks the appearances are stronger than lower down, and, in many parts, I consider the indications so strong that I believe they would pay for working."

DISCOVERY OF GOLD AT PORT CURTIS.

(CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 5 August, 1858.

M. C. O'CONNELL, Esq., C.C.L., to THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

Gladstone, 25 November, 1857.

SIR,

As it is possible some exaggerated accounts of the recent discovery of a promising gold field made by me in this district may reach Sydney, I deem it a duty I individually owe to my country, although one no longer within the sphere of my official responsibility, to lay before you, for the information of the Government, an account of what has actually taken place here, with reference to this matter, up to the present moment.

2. Having occasion, in the prosecution of my duties as Crown Land Commissioner, to leave Gladstone on the 11th of last month, on an extended tour to the northern portion of my district, and having long felt convinced that some part of the country I was about to travel over was auriferous, I adopted, at my own private expense, on a small scale, a measure which I should long ago (had I remained Government Resident) have recommended on a more extended one, as a public expenditure.

3. I took with me a very competent practical miner, and on arriving at the outside limit of present occupation on the northern frontier of the Colony,—that is, on the very last station,—on Saturday, the 17th November, I caused some pans of earth to be washed, and discovered, both in the beds of creeks and on the surface soil of the surrounding country, very promising prospects of gold; and then extending my researches over some four or five miles of ground adjoining, in almost every instance found spangles, or, as it is technically termed, "the colour of the precious metal."

4. I afterwards had some holes dug to a depth of seven or eight feet, to what appeared to be the bed rock, but without reaching any more promising washing stuff than was found on the surface; and eventually, after passing one day's journey beyond all occupation, and devoting six to the development of this very important question, I succeeded in obtaining (as a specimen only) about half a pennyweight of fine gold.

5. But a report of this discovery had already brought up from Gladstone another party of four, to continue the prosecution of the research, and they, although not well provided, and eventually disturbed by the aborigines, returned with some gold of a much heavier description than any I had found, and, moreover, obtained at another and more southern locality than the one I had tried.

6. In consequence of these discoveries, the inhabitants of Gladstone have provided rations and equipment for a party of twelve persons, who leave this on Monday, under an engagement to prosecute the research for gold for a period of six weeks.

7. I am fully persuaded—and all those practical miners who have had opportunities of examining the ground are of the same opinion—that there is a rich and extensive gold field in this neighbourhood, and the existence of gold in the soil has been verified over a distance, in a straight line, of some sixty or seventy miles; that is to say, it has been found at different points within these limits.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD AT PORT CURTIS.

8. The geological features of the country, taken in conjunction with the fact of gold being actually found, are quite sufficient, I think, in the eyes of all who have some knowledge of the affinities of rocks and minerals in other localities, to warrant the belief that this is a metalliferous country.

9. The principal rocks on the north bank of the Fitz Roy—and the same formation appears again on the Calliope—are serpentine, of many very beautiful varieties, and in large masses, with considerable veins of metal, bearing quartz in close connexion with calcareous spar and white limestone, and in addition to these, I have observed clay slate, porphyry, and many pebbles of jasper, chalcedony, and ironstone.

10. I am not yet in a position to address you officially with a request to have a gold field proclaimed, and merely forward this communication as much excitement has been caused here, and inquiries may be addressed to the Government on this subject.

I have, &c.,

M. C. O'CONNELL, C.C.L.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS;
Sydney.

The foregoing submitted for the information of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works.

GEO. BARNEY.

18 December, 1857.

M. C. O'CONNELL, Esq., C.C.L., to THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

Sydney, 29 July, 1858.

SIR,

In reference to a communication I addressed to you towards the conclusion of last year, reporting, for the information of Government, the discovery I had made of what appeared to me to be a promising gold field on the north bank of the Fitz Roy River, I have now the honor to draw your attention to the results of the measures I initiated for the purpose of giving development to these important resources of the District of Port Curtis.

2. The daily press will have already made you acquainted with the fact of public attention having been attracted by the accounts published of the quantity of gold obtained by the party working at my instigation for this purpose, and I am enabled to add, although my letters containing the detailed statements of what has been effected have not yet reached me, that I can assert, from private sources of information, an easily accessible and remunerating gold field has been discovered.

3. As one of the consequences of this discovery is that a considerable increase to the population of the District of Port Curtis may be anticipated, and as I have already been applied to by several persons who are about to remove thither, I consider it my duty to request you to be good enough to lay this matter before the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, and to urge upon him the necessity of taking some immediate steps for affording adequate protection to life and property on these new gold fields.

4. My reason for feeling somewhat anxious on this point is, that I know the locality about to be taken up to be on the very outskirts of occupation, and in the immediate neighbourhood of very numerous tribes of wild blacks, some of whom have already evinced a hostile feeling, by a night attack (about two years ago) on Mr. Elliot's station, when they killed one man, and severely wounded Mr. Elliot himself.

5. This fact, taken in connection with an anticipated collection of persons from all parts of the Colony, most of them unaccustomed to such close contact with wild aborigines, makes it seem to me advisable that I should be furnished with authority to take up with me from Sydney a few men, (say a sergeant and three troopers,) to be stationed on the Fitz Roy; and I would request your concurrence in an application to the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works to sanction this expenditure.

6. I beg to add, that no matter how great the emergency, it will be impossible to obtain any men on the spot; and that a reference to Sydney, after I once get back to Port Curtis, will, in all probability, involve a delay of about three months.

I have, &c.,

M. C. O'CONNELL, C.C.L.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

Forwarded to the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, with reference to Capt. O'Connell's former communication, submitted on the 18th December last, and in full confidence that he will cause such steps to be taken as he may consider necessary for good order, and the protection of life, on the opening of the probable gold fields by diggers and others.

GEO. BARNEY.

30 July, 1858.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS to THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

*Department of Land and Public Works,
Sydney, 3 August, 1858.*

Sir,

Referring to the letter from the Commissioner of Crown Lands for the Port Curtis District, respecting the discovery of a gold field on the Fitz Roy River, which was forwarded by you under blank cover on the 30th ultimo, I am directed to apprise you that the Secretary for Lands and Public Works does not think it necessary to authorise (at any rate until further information is received) so large a force of additional police as a sergeant and three troopers, as proposed by the Commissioner.

2. It appears, however, that by some mistake the troopers for the Port Curtis Commissioner were put upon the Estimates one less than was intended. Mr. Secretary Robertson thinks, that being the case, and the increased requirements of the district from the gold discovery also being considered, it will be proper to place at the disposal of Captain O'Connell two additional troopers to be employed temporarily, until more reliable information is received.

3. I am to state, that on account of the urgency of the case, this decision was communicated to Captain O'Connell at a personal interview which he had on the 31st ultimo with Mr. Secretary Robertson, with a verbal authority to proceed accordingly.

4. I am to request that you will instruct Captain O'Connell, if still in town, to lose no time in proceeding to his district, and when there, to report upon the prospects and requirements of the new gold field.

I have, &c.,

MICL. FITZ PATRICK.

THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS.

GOLD FIELDS.

(CANOONA, PORT CURTIS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 14 October, 1858.

M. C. O'CONNELL, ESQ., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Canoona Gold Fields,3 October, 1858.

SIR,

As I have no doubt the Government of New South Wales must be anxious for information from this spot, I have determined upon sending in to-morrow morning by Mr. Inspector Harrison of the Detective Police, who has offered to go into Rockhampton for this purpose, an account of what have been the occurrences of the last week in this place, in order that the same may be laid before His Excellency the Governor General for his consideration.

2. As, however, I am writing at night in my tent, with a very indifferent light, and without even the convenience of a table to write upon, I must beg you to accept this as an apology for the hurried nature of my communication.

3. The extraordinary influx of population which has taken place here within the last few days from Sydney, and its subsequent quite as extraordinary reflux, has been a spectacle which has occasioned me—as, doubtless, the knowledge of the first part of this movement being in progress has occasioned to the Government—a feeling of very considerable anxiety for the preservation of the public peace and the maintenance of good order in this locality.

4. It is now scarcely a week since the arrival of steamers and other vessels with large numbers of passengers took place at Rockhampton, and yet already by far the greater number of persons who came up by these opportunities have returned, or are anxious to return, to the places from whence they came.

5. There has evidently been great disappointment amongst these persons in the hopes they entertained as to the benefits which were to ensue to them from their visits to these Gold Fields; and I fear there will be much consequent distress, and in many instances want and privation.

6. I have caused, yesterday and to-day, a computation to be made, by the Police, of the numbers now present on these diggings, and I find from the return to me, made by Mr. Inspector Read, that there are about 1,200 persons located here—a considerable number of whom, however, I fancy to be still unsettled in their determination of remaining.

7. It is evident that a complete panic has taken possession of the minds of all those who have hurriedly quitted other occupations in Sydney to hasten hither, tempted by the accounts of the quantities of gold obtained by the first diggers at Canoona; and this feeling of alarm at finding themselves so far from their homes, without the facility of picking up gold immediately on their arrival, has proceeded to such an extent that the stream of immigration has almost entirely ceased, as between Rockhampton and this place.

8. I am aware also, that many persons have turned back on the road, discouraged by the accounts they received, and that they have disposed of their little property in tools and conveniences at a ruinous sacrifice—or have even thrown it away to be picked up by whoever might choose to appropriate it.

9. There is therefore at Rockhampton, I fear, a stagnation in the tide of population, which may work into very considerable evil if measures be not taken to arrest it; and I write by this same opportunity to Mr. Hutchinson, the Clerk of Petty Sessions, pointing out the steps I wish to be taken to provide for the immediate maintenance of the absolutely destitute; and I have requested him to forward you a copy of my letter, in order that you may be aware of what I have done in this matter.

10. But I am given to understand that many other vessels may be expected to arrive, and I feel that whatever palliatives may be adopted to soften the distress which must be expected to ensue from the concourse of such large numbers of a disappointed people, the only remedy consists in pushing, as rapidly as possible, the search for some extension of the deposit of gold, which has hitherto occupied and rewarded the labor of those engaged in its research.

11. I consider it my duty, therefore, for the present to station myself here, and urge this matter as one of most vital importance, with all the dispatch attainable; but I feel that I am placed in very extraordinary circumstances, and I trust the Government will extend to me full powers to act in accordance with my judgment and the exigencies which surround me.

12. It is unavoidable but that some expenditure must be incurred, and as it is impossible I can communicate with the Government, and obtain its sanction to the adoption of measures which may be of immediate necessity, I hope I may be relieved from that uneasiness of feeling which necessarily attaches to having to act entirely on my own responsibility, without any authority whatever for so doing.

13. I am at the present moment adopting measures to provide for the maintenance of the entirely destitute at Rockhampton, and I must also incur some expense here in pushing the prospecting of the country, more in anticipation of an expected influx of arrivals than for the immediate wants of those who are employed on the spot—and yet absolutely essential as both these matters are, they are, strictly speaking, no portion of my duties, and I find that I am incurring a larger amount of responsibility than I feel comfortable under.

14. I must now briefly advert to what seem to me the causes of the disappointment and panic which has so rapidly succeeded to the elation of hope, which led so many persons to forsake their homes and their business in Sydney for this distant place.

15. It appears that the 500 or 600 persons who were here previously had fully occupied the portion of ground upon which gold has been as yet found, and not having felt any necessity for pushing out further, no attempt had been made to prospect or develop the further lead of the gold. The new arrivals, finding they could not profitably establish themselves where the old diggers were employed, became almost immediately discouraged, and many obstacles presenting themselves to their search for new ground in the want of water, owing to the dry season, and in the impossibility of obtaining horses or carts to carry their washing stuff to water when they could obtain it, they, with very few exceptions, after one or two days residence, returned to Rockhampton to seek a passage back to Sydney.

16. It will be evident to the Government, from the rapidity with which this tide of population made its flow and ebb, very little attempt can have been made by its labor to develop what may be the resources of this district as a gold producing country, and I am not as yet prepared, by any means, to state it as my opinion that these Diggings are a failure. On the contrary, I have seen many persons who are doing well, and I believe the greater numbers of those now present will remain.

17. I am, however, too short a time here to speak authoritatively on this subject, having only arrived on Friday evening; but, during the ensuing week, I hope to be able to communicate to you some authentic information.

18. I beg to state in conclusion, that, as far as I can learn, none of the accounts sent down from hence of the produce of gold which caused so much excitement in Sydney, and created such a rush, have been exaggerated. The gold was actually obtained, and with great facility, but the space occupied is now nearly exhausted, and no new ground has as yet been discovered.

I have, &c.,

M. C. O'CONNELL.

*Police Court, Rockhampton,
6 October, 1858.*

SIR,

I do myself the honor, by the direction of Captain O'Connell, to transmit the enclosed copy of a letter addressed by him to me, under date 3rd instant. Not being under instructions to report officially, I have selected the medium of a private letter to do so, in order to supply you with such information as I can afford touching the existing state of affairs here.

Since Captain O'Connell's departure for the diggings on 29th ultimo, the resident management of the Police and Camp has devolved on me. This afternoon, however, I propose to transfer it to Mr. Cloete, who, I am informed arrived in Keppel Bay yesterday.

I have endeavoured to make the presence of a Police Force rather heard of than seen, as well with a view to avoid collision with the people as to conceal its weakness—(3 constables, the remainder of the Constabulary, being with Captain O'Connell at the diggings.) From the state of excitable discontent which prevailed amongst the many who, during the past week returned disappointed, on two occasions I had special reasons to anticipate disturbance; but I am happy to say that up to the present time peace and good order have been maintained.

Fearing that the congregation of a destitute and discontented population would lead to injurious results, and materially embarrass the local authorities, I have taken upon myself, in the absence of Captain O'Connell, to consent to an infringement of the Passenger Act, by clearing several vessels, although aware that they were intended to convey a greater number of passengers than by law allowed. The urgency of the case will, I trust, be accepted as sufficient excuse; indeed, had I not done so, I should have been compelled to anticipate the authority contained in the enclosure of this letter. As it is, I have been able to refrain from incurring so great an expense, and hope to continue to do so until his return. It may be well for me here to mention that, at the ship's cost, I have taken every possible precaution that a sufficiency of water and provisions had been provided for the number of passengers actually intended to be conveyed.

The present aspect of affairs here is very unpromising. Crowds of people continue to arrive, of whom the greater number seem utterly unprovided with money or provisions; and, consequently, failing to find gold in abundance on the surface of the ground, are compelled by necessity, or impelled by fear, to endeavour to return. As, however, Captain O'Connell has reported on this head, further comment from me is unnecessary.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE

WM. HUTCHINSON.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

P.S.—During the day the "Eagle" and several other vessels have arrived. Passengers no sooner land than they are eager to return. The greater number of those who are now leaving for Sydney have not passed this station, and of such as have proceeded to the diggings only a small fractional part have put a spade in the ground. Judging from the most reliable information and concurrent testimony, the gold hitherto procured has been raised from one tract or patch of ground, beyond the limits of which it has not yet been obtained in paying quantities. Prospecting parties are now, I believe, out in several directions to find the lead, or break new ground. The success they may meet with remains to be seen. Many parties who ought to be competent judges still entertain strong favorable anticipations; but in the absence of personal inspection of the field I do not venture to offer any opinion of my own. Not only are the people returning, but the greater bulk of the goods consigned to this market will be returned. The A. S. N. Company have reduced return-fares to £3 10s., and sailing vessels are taking passengers for £3. Very many, however, are unable to raise even such small amounts. I write in the midst of great confusion and frequent interruptions.

[Enclosure to the foregoing.]

Canoona Gold Field,
3 October, 1858.

SIR,

As from the great number of persons who have gone down from hence to Rockhampton, many, I fear, in a state of complete destitution, it is possible some serious distress may exist, and be the cause of great public inconvenience, I have to request you, as the only officer of the Government on the spot, to cause notices to be posted calling on persons willing to offer to send in to you tenders for the rates at which they will supply meat, flour, tea and sugar for rations as the Government may require the same; and I authorise you to accept the lowest tender, and apprise the tenderer that as his accounts fall due monthly they will be paid by my orders upon the Government in Sydney.

2. Having secured the means of providing rations, I beg you to invite the co-operation of Mr. Commissioner Wiseman and Mr. William Archer, in aiding you to form a Committee amongst the many persons of respectability who are now at Rockhampton, for the purpose of deciding on the claims of the really destitute to Government support.

3. Such persons as the Committee may recommend as being unable to maintain themselves I authorise you to place upon the Government list, and to have rations issued to, upon the condition—which should be strictly enforced—that they form a distinct encampment at some distance from the township, near the lagoon at which I myself was encamped before leaving Rockhampton.

4. You will be good enough, with the aid of the Committee, to form such a scale of rations as they may determine on, taking 10 lbs. flour, 10 lbs. meat, $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. tea, and 2 lbs. of sugar as the maximum for the adult male.

5. I request you will also forward a copy of this letter by the earliest opportunity to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary in Sydney.

Wm. Hutchinson, Esq.,
Rockhampton.

I am, &c.,
M. C. O'CONNELL,
C. C. L.

INSPECTOR READ to THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

Fitz Roy Gold Fields,
3 October, 1858.

SIR,

I trust that you will not think me dilatory in communicating with you, but the fact of my not having anything of consequence to report—being very much put about, and even now having to write on the lid of a box, under a tree—I hope will plead sufficiently for the delay.

The whole party enjoy good health.

The "City of Sydney" arrived in Keppel Bay on the Friday after our departure. The "Samson" came alongside and took half the passengers to convey them to Rockhampton, a distance between forty and fifty miles. I went with the first party for the purpose of communicating with Captain O'Connell, or other persons in authority there. The FitzRoy River is very difficult, and we went up a wrong channel for some hours, and had to return to Keppel Bay in the evening, where, to our great surprise, we saw a large steam vessel coming down the channel which we had just left, and, on inquiry, found it to be the "Yarra Yarra," who had made a similar mistake, and being navigating it for two days before they discovered their mistake. By good luck next morning we fell in with the mate of the "Pirate" (which had run aground, as well as many other vessels which are now lying high and dry there), the mate piloted us to Rockhampton, and on Saturday evening I succeeded in seeing Captain O'Connell, but he had not received any official communication from Government, and, therefore, could not give me any instructions, so I returned as quickly as possible to the "City of Sydney," which I reached on Sunday evening, and on Monday morning got my men and horses on board the "Samson," which brought us to Rockhampton by the evening. We pitched our tent, and had to remain until Wednesday morning, as I could not get a conveyance for our goods, which I found to be two dray loads. I also had to purchase flour and other articles to take to the diggings, having been informed that great destitution prevailed. I agreed to give £25 each for the drays, and £3 10s. besides for moving the goods at Rockhampton, making a total of £53 10s. (fifty-three pounds ten shillings). The second dray only arrived here this morning, in charge of constable Clarke, who endured great fatigue and privations, as well as the rest of us. In consequence of the state of the roads, in several places the goods had to be unloaded and carried on the men's shoulders.

I arrived here on the morning of the 1st instant, having pushed on with the troopers. We were two days performing the journey, and bivouacked the first night on the banks of the Twenty-five Mile Creek: anything but a pleasant position, as the place is infested with alligators, to the great terror of parties camping in the neighbourhood—(the night previous, one, some thirteen feet long, was seen within a few feet of my tent at Rockhampton.) On the march I was obliged to dispense with a tent, and sleep with the troopers—our saddles for pillows, and cloaks our only covering. We met numbers of the diggers returning in a wretched plight, giving a most unfavorable account of the diggings; amongst whom were several respectable persons from Sydney, but so altered in appearance and dress that I scarcely knew them.
the

Notwithstanding this there are many here doing well, particularly those of the first "rush," amongst whom are many of the unemployed who were sent at the expense of the Government.

I have seen large quantities of gold, and several nuggets,—one $3\frac{1}{2}$ ounces,—dug since I have been here.

Capt. O'Connell arrived here yesterday, and has pitched his tent near us. Our present Camp is not a permanent one, as the diggings will shortly be moved; and he has not as yet issued any orders for the regulation of the Gold Fields, but is about to do so. I have not as yet received any rations from him, although I have spoken several times upon the subject, and I asked him last night to make arrangements with some storekeepers for a supply, as the mode in which I have been purchasing will come very expensive.

There are several parties out prospecting, and I am in hopes to have better news in my next.

The intense heat causes great suffering, although there is little or no illness. The water is very bad.

The horseshoes, as ordered, have not been sent, and the Police tents are all small ones.

I saw the two Correspondents of the Herald returning yesterday, as discomfited as the rest. I shall communicate the earliest further intelligence.

I have, &c.,

W. R. READ,

Inspector in Charge of Detachment.

THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

P.S.—Inspector Harrison arrived last night, having come up the river in a waterman's skiff. He has got Constable Koy specially employed, and Constable Musgrove remains for the present at Rockhampton.

INSPECTOR HARRISON to THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF POLICE.

Rockhampton, 6 October, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to forward for your information the following particulars relative to this district. Mr. Read and the troopers left here on Wednesday, the 29th ult., the constables followed the day after, with the exception of Musgrove, who is here with the Clerk of Petty Sessions; the force here now consists of four men. On Tuesday, the 28th, I started, accompanied by Captain Hunter, of the mail steamer "Adelaide," Constable Kaes and another, for the diggings in a small skiff. We arrived within ten miles of the diggings in the boat, and performed the rest of the journey on foot. The diggers were far more orderly than I expected to find them from the reports that had reached Rockhampton; indeed there were very few disorderly characters there. The number of tents on Sunday were 268, and about 1,200 diggers. There is but one sly grog-shop, which is kept by * * * * *, but up to the present time I have not heard of a single robbery or act of violence. I rode down from the diggings yesterday, bringing despatches from Captain O'Connell for Sydney. Rockhampton is in a very unsettled state, so much so that both yesterday and to-day mobs were assembled at different places, and I am satisfied that it would have taken a very slight spark to have broken down the barrier of order and have caused an open riot. Stump orators of course were not wanting, one of whom did the utmost in his power to excite the mob, and even proposed seizing the vessels for the purpose of returning to Sydney. Although the man made himself remarkably conspicuous I could not possibly get a slant at him; as it would probably have brought about the very disorder we are striving to avoid. The individual in question left to-day by the "Wonga Wonga" on his return home. Although there have been a great many threats thrown out against the storekeepers, I know of no instance in which any depredation has been committed; and as Captain Moody this afternoon has lowered the fares of the Company's boats from £6 to £3 10s., and a heavy rain having set in, will in a great measure reduce the place to order. I, myself, from what I have seen at the diggings, feel very sanguine that an extensive gold field will be discovered in a very short time; and the fact of these parties returning is no criterion wherefrom to judge; as, at the outside, not more than one in twenty ever put a spade in the ground—and at least one-half of the arrivals never visit the diggings at all.

The storekeepers are naturally very anxious about their property, but I believe, should a disturbance take place, there are quite sufficient well-disposed persons here to protect themselves and property, as, on the first day of our arrival, Captain Moody, Mr. David Moody, Captain Hunter, and Mr. Lloyd, were all-sworn in as special constables, and there are plenty more volunteers.

The weather is not nearly so hot as I expected to find it, and there is absolutely no sickness at all. Mr. Cloete and the constables arrived to-day, by the "Wonga Wonga," but they have not yet landed.

(REPORT OF W. H. WISEMAN, C. C. L., ON PORT CURTIS DIGGINGS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 10 September, 1858.

THE LEICHHARDT COMMISSIONER to THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS, concerning Concoona Gold Diggings.

Crown Lands' Office,
26 August, 1858.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report to you, for the information of the Government of His Excellency the Governor General, that I returned yesterday from my visit to the scene of the Gold Diggings on the Fitz Roy River.

2. I found about 200 persons collected there; all were finding gold in satisfactory quantity. Five separate companies of diggers, whom I questioned, informed me that they were realizing thirty shillings per diem per man. I saw one nugget over three ounces, and many varying from one to two ounces. One party which I was watching washed out near three ounces whilst I was there. The gold is now found away from the bed of the small watercourse, which can scarcely be called a creek, about five miles from the river. They sink wells for water in the said watercourse, with which the stuff is washed. They have to carry it a quarter of a mile on their own or on horses backs—a great impediment. The gold is chiefly nuggety, or granular, with much oxide of iron on it, found within a foot of the surface. They refuse £3 10s. per ounce, but that might be more than its value. Two parties had dug holes thirty feet deep in search of gold on the bed rock: they had sunk thirty feet, throwing out serpentine and quantities of white clay, which the miners call burnt quartz. Some experienced American miners just arrived—men of some means—seemed to think well of the diggings, and of the general appearance of the ranges. Of course they advised the parties above-named to dig down deeper. Every one is anxious on this subject, as it will decide the permanency of the diggings.

3. From what I have now seen of the exact appearance of the ground where the gold is found, I can certify that there are numerous tracts, or rather patches, of two to three or to four miles square, amongst the mountain ranges, between all the creeks running into the Fitz Roy from the north and north-west. I myself have seen several; of course, many more not seen exist; I could not mistake the ground when once seen. The loose stones on the surface and the vegetation is quite peculiar, and almost confined to these places. The variety of coarse grass growing there indeed I have not observed elsewhere. The bed rocks are of granite, porphyry, sienite, serpentine, and argillaceous schists. Along the range called by me Parnassus and Polygon, lying between the Fitz Roy River and Shoalwater Bay, as shewn in the small pencil sketch I forwarded to you, such tracts may be found, and on Princhester and Marlborough Creeks several. Between those two creeks is a high serrated range, originally called by me Sierra Rubra, from the very red appearance its rocks tinged with oxide of iron present under the setting sun, which has on its flanks numerous such spots. They are also to found on the base of the range which lies between Broad Sound and the waters of the Mackenzie and Isaac. If gold is found in deep diggings where the miners are now at working, I think it may safely be predicted that there are valuable gold fields on the Fitz Roy.

4. Considerable changes may be expected. Gladstone is now nearly deserted. All produce required at the diggings will be landed at Rockhampton, from which to the diggings the road on the north bank would not be more than twenty miles. I intend soon to go down the Fitz Roy with Mr. Clarke, the surveyor, to have his opinion of a spot between the mouths of the Fitz Roy and of Casuarina Creek, which I have heard from Mr. Colin Archer may be suitable for a seaport town. The water in Casuarina Creek is deeper than in the Fitz Roy, and there is no bar. Should such be the case, Keppel Bay may become a shipping place of importance.

5. I am aware that I need not allude to the necessity of official supervision at the diggings, but I would desire to call attention to the necessity for the presence of a Chief and other constables at Rockhampton. Complaints are frequently made to me about the dangers arising from men roaming about in uncontrolled drunkenness. Also, there is already a great increase of complaints from masters about the absconding of their men.

I have the honor to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

W. H. WISEMAN,

(LETTER FROM CAPTAIN O'CONNELL RESPECTING CANOONA.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 30 September, 1858.

M. C. O'CONNELL, ESQ., C.C.L., to THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

*Crown Lands' Office,
Gladstone, 20 September, 1858.*

SIR,

When addressing you on the 7th instant on the subject of the prospects and progress of the Canoona Gold Fields, I had hoped to be enabled to forward an additional communication by the overland mail, which closed on that evening; but having to attend the Police Court on that day I was unable to do so.

2. Since then no opportunity of writing to Sydney has presented itself, except by the "Albion," a vessel I understood to be bound for the Fitz Roy River until she was underway, and it was too late to overtake her; but as the "Eagle" steamer had left this on the 10th instant for Rockhampton, and was expected back on the 13th, I did not deem the delay of much consequence.

3. The "Eagle," however, only returned this evening, having grounded on some of the shoals in the Fitz Roy, and having been detained in consequence nearly a week beyond her anticipated time.

4. I may mention here that I sent my coxswain, who had a good knowledge of the intricacies of the river, to act as pilot on board the "Eagle," but as it was his first trip with a vessel drawing so much water, it is not surprising, in an unsurveyed channel, such a detention should have occurred.

5. I am now enabled to add to my former report, that the progressive increase of the yield of gold on the Canoona Gold Fields is said to meet the most sanguine anticipations.

6. About 350 ounces have now been sent to Sydney; but the principal portion of the gold obtained is still in possession of the diggers.

7. The "Eagle" reports having sighted four vessels this morning going into Keppel Bay without calling at this port; and the "Jeannette," a cutter which came in here last night from Sydney, brings accounts of a large number of vessels being laid on for this place or the Fitz Roy.

8. There are also numerous arrivals by all the overland routes from the interior, and the number of persons on the diggings are computed at from five to six hundred.

9. Having been delayed here since the 5th instant, by the necessity of obtaining fresh horses, and of completing the business which awaited me, I now purpose proceeding to-morrow to the Gold Fields, and trust to have the honor of addressing you a further-report on my return.

10. I enclose, for the information of the Honorable the Secretary for Lands and Public Works, a sketch of this locality, taken from the maps prepared for the illustration of the divisions of the Electoral Bill, in which I have indicated the approximate position of the Canoona Gold Fields.

11. From this sketch it will be perceived that the Canoona Gold Fields are distant from this about 100 miles.

12. I would impress upon the attention of the Government that all this country, which now seems to be becoming the attraction to a considerable population, of whose advent moreover I have no warning previous to their arrival, is entirely on the outskirts of occupation, and that much disorder may be anticipated from the sudden admixture of white people with the wild aborigines of the interior.

13. I beg also to bring under your notice the fact that, from the departure of the greater number of the male population from hence, many women and children are left in Gladstone, in worse danger from risk of aboriginal outrage than I should like to subject them to had I any responsibility in this matter.

14. It happens that at the present moment, out of the five constables stationed here, two are absent on escort duty to Brisbane for indefinite periods, so that when I leave, taking my three orderlies with me for the Gold Fields, the Chief Constable can with certainty depend only upon himself and three men to protect a town scattered over about two miles and a half of ground, with the families of the absent diggers to be cared for.

15. I am happy to say that as yet I have heard no complaints, or even anticipation of outrage, but at this distance from all other resource, with the influx of white population to the diggings on the one hand, and the temporary abandonment of families in the midst of the aboriginal population on the other, I should recommend a Police Force of at least one sergeant and ten men to be added, for the purposes of escort, and for the repression of riot and disorder on the Gold Fields, to the present available strength of police in this district.

16. I presume, also, the Government will think it necessary soon to appoint a Resident Commissioner to the Canoona Gold Fields, and that I shall be authorised in the meantime to issue Miners Rights to those who may apply for them.

I have, &c.,

(CANOONA, PORT CURTIS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 7 October, 1858.

M. C. O'CONNELL, ESQ., C.C.L., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Rockhampton,

27 September, 1858.

SIR,

I have received, this day Mr. Elyard's letter of the 18th instant, (No. 58-435,) intimating to me, as well as to the Bench of Magistrates at Rockhampton, that it had been considered expedient, in consequence of the numbers of persons now proceeding to the Fitz Roy Gold Diggings, at once to proclaim this place as one for holding Petty Sessions; and that a Clerk of Petty Sessions, who was also a Gold Receiver, and who held a deputation from the Customs, had likewise been appointed.

2. I was also informed that a mounted inspector, 3 mounted troopers, with 1 sergeant, 4 foot police, and 1 detective, had, under instructions to the Inspector General of Police, been ordered to proceed to this district.

3. I have now to apprise the Government of the arrival this afternoon of Mr. Maxwell Hutchinson and the detachment of police above-mentioned at their destination; and I have to express my thanks for the aid which has been provided for this district under the trying circumstances under which it now is placed.

4. Within the last few days there have arrived here, by eleven vessels—five of which were steamers—about 1,043 persons (according to the best information I can obtain), and I understand about 700 of these have already proceeded to the Canoona Diggings—distant thirty-five miles from hence.

5. In addition to the numbers I have given, there may be computed about 300 as arrivals overland, who are also at the diggings; and the distribution of the population in this neighbourhood may be said, at the present moment, to be situated thus, viz.:—1,000 at the diggings, and between three or four hundred at Rockhampton.

6. I must remark, however, that of the 1,000 persons supposed to be at the diggings, 700 are about arriving, or have been there only for one or two days.

7. But I am given to understand that some thousands of persons are already on their voyage hence from Sydney, and that considerable numbers may be expected from Melbourne and other ports.

8. This is an announcement which, I confess, causes me considerable anxiety for the peace and good order of the district, as the pressure of such a vast increase of population on its means of subsistence must, inevitably, in the first place cause much inconvenience, and, no doubt, much individual distress.

9. I am also bound to take into consideration the fact, which is notorious, that many have come up into this newly located country with but trifling means of support, under a vague hope that gold is to be obtained without that expenditure of time and labor which its very value ought to teach them is necessary to its production.

10. There has yet to be solved also the problem whether the Gold Field which has been productive to the few who as yet have been working it, will prove equally profitable to the much larger numbers who now appear inclined to look to it for a means of livelihood, and this is a question, momentous as it is, which nothing but experience can resolve.

11. There are elements of disorder here which induce me to ask you for an increased force of police, of 1 serjeant and 6 men mounted, and 4 dismounted men.

12. I propose to station the Inspector and all the mounted men together, with three dismounted men, on the diggings, the remainder of the dismounted men being at Rockhampton.

13. I am happy to be enabled to state, that up to the present moment I have received no information of any outrage having been committed, either here or at Canoona, beyond an assault which occurred on board one of the vessels in the river this morning, and which I have to inquire into to-morrow.

14. The cause from which I apprehend most discontent at the present moment is from a possible scarcity of flour, through the difficulty of obtaining a sufficiency of carriage for goods from hence to the Gold Fields; but as I trust, from the best inquiries I can make, there is a sufficiency of this necessary article here, or on board the vessels in the river, I hope some means will be devised of transporting it, either by land or by water, to some point within reach of the consumers.

15. I add a few memoranda on a separate paper upon some points which appear to me worthy of immediate consideration, should the present influx of population to this district continue. And I beg to assure you that no effort on my part shall be wanting to secure, as far as practicable, the peace and good order of this district.

*I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,
Sydney.

M. C. O'CONNELL,
C. C. L.

MEMORANDA upon some points which appear to me worthy of consideration, if the present influx of population to Port Curtis should continue.

A Harbour Master ought to be appointed, with jurisdiction extending from Port Curtis to the head of navigation on the Fitz Roy. He would require a crew, with a decked boat of twelve or fifteen tons, as well as a whaleboat.

A Custom House should be established at Gladstone, to compel all foreign vessels to call in there. Vessels of large tonnage, or drawing more than nine feet six of water, cannot easily navigate the Fitz Roy; and for foreign vessels to unload in Keppel Bay, where there is no settlement, nor much probability of one for some years to come, would, it appears to me, open the door to many frauds upon the revenue. Moreover, there are several dangers about the entrance into Keppel Bay, and large vessels with passengers would lose very little in time, and gain much in comfort to their people, by transshipping them in the harbour of Port Curtis, instead of in Keppel Bay. I fear there will be some sad loss of life if passenger vessels continue to use the entrance by Keppel Bay in bad weather.

There ought to be a lighthouse erected—I think on Gatcombe Head.

The Fitz Roy River and the inner passage between Keppel Bay and Port Curtis ought to be surveyed and buoyed off.

Two different townships on the river might be laid out and sold at once, in addition to Rockhampton, which, as it is surveyed, ought to be offered for sale as soon as possible.

The townships I allude to would be one at the crossing-place of the river nearest to Canoona, and the other on the north bank of the Fitz Roy, some eight or ten miles below Rockhampton—at least this latter place is worth examining, to discover whether it offers any advantages over Rockhampton itself.

(CANOONA, PORT CURTIS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 7 October, 1858.

M. C. O'CONNELL, Esq., C. C. L., to THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Rockhampton,
27 September, 1858.

SIR,

Having learnt by the Government Gazette of the 17th instant my appointment to act, under the provisions of the Act of Council 20 Vict., No. 29, as a Commissioner on the Gold Fields, I presume it is my duty to address to you, direct, my reports on matters connected with this service.

2. I have the honor, therefore, to inform you that I have been delayed here on my way to the Gold Fields at Canoona by the arrival of the "City of Sydney" in Keppel Bay, and to await the transport hither of the Police and other Officers of the Government Establishment who were on board of her.

3. These, and also the Police horses, were landed this afternoon, and after to-morrow's rest to refresh the animals, whose legs are somewhat cramped from the voyage, the Police Force, under Inspector Read, will proceed on to the diggings.

4. I am myself likewise detained to-morrow by the necessity of holding a Police Court, to take evidence in an aggravated case of assault.

5. As the mail by the "City of Sydney," however, leaves in the morning, I avail myself of the opportunity to communicate to you such information as I have been enabled to collect on the present state and prospects of the Gold Fields in this neighbourhood.

6. There have landed here within the last few days upwards of 1,000 people, and of these 700 have gone to the diggings, making, with those who were previously there, about 1,000 persons of all descriptions at Canoona.

7. It must be remembered, however, that the greater number of the above have only just reached the ground, and cannot yet be said to be at work.

8. The quantity of gold, therefore, which has as yet been sent down to Sydney can have been produced only by the labor of the first 60 or 100 diggers; and this quantity, as nearly as I can learn it, is about 400 ounces.

9. Until within the last two days all the reports I have received, both of individual and aggregate success on these diggings, have been most favorable; and all the original diggers who left their employment in Gladstone to seek for gold at Canoona have remained steadily at work, taking, many of them, their families up to reside with them.

10. It is now said, however, that the last comers have found all the as yet discovered available ground pre-occupied, and, as it is asserted, worked out; nor are they inclined to push out, and prospect on that which has not as yet been tried.

11. I have no doubt the continued dry weather has something to do with this, apparently, depreciated estimate of these diggings; but, occurring unfortunately just when new arrivals are flocking in, it has created, at any rate for the time, a want of confidence amongst the latter, which will most probably cause many to return.

12. I look with some alarm at the vast numbers who are said to be now on their way hither, as I fear there will be much disappointment and individual distress, more particularly to those who come unprepared to submit to several weeks of delay before the search for gold becomes profitable.

13. Hitherto the price of provisions has been very moderate, both at Canoona and Rockhampton, but the pressure of so large an increase of population in a new district has already raised the price of meat to 6d. and 8d. per lb., and I fear that the high price of carriage (25s. per cwt.) will have the effect of equally raising the cost of all other articles of subsistence at the diggings.

14. I am writing this letter hurriedly, after a fatiguing day, under a hot sun, in observation on, and attendance at, the debarkation of the arrivals by the "City of Sydney" and the "Boomerang," so that I must plead this as an excuse if I have not entered into all the points upon which you may desire information, but I thought it better to write even hurriedly by the "City of Sydney," sailing to-morrow morning, than to lose the opportunity.

15. I must mention, in conclusion, that I am very anxious to receive as soon as possible the necessary books and documents to enable me to register claims and issue Miners' Rights.

THE HONORABLE

(LETTERS FROM CAPT. O'CONNELL RELATIVE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 26 October, 1858.

M. C. O'CONNELL, ESQ., C.C.L., to THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Canoona Gold Fields,

13 October, 1858.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th September, intimating to me the appointment of Mr. Assistant Commissioner Cloete to take charge of the Gold Diggings in my district, and requesting me to hand over to him the Miners' Rights and Business Licenses which have been forwarded to me.

2. Mr. Cloete has not yet arrived here, being impeded on his route, I make no doubt, by the rise of the Fitz Roy River; an obstacle which prevents likewise, for the present, any movement on my part towards Rockhampton.

3. The Miners' Rights and Business Licenses alluded to by you have not yet reached me, but shall be handed over, so soon as I am in receipt of them, to Mr. Cloete, as Mr. Secretary Robertson requests.

4. Not having received these documents, I have not, of course, as yet issued either Rights or Licenses, so that Mr. Cloete will enter upon his duties untrammelled by any acts of mine in this respect; and I beg to assure Mr. Secretary Robertson that in the distribution of the Police force placed at my disposal I shall not fail, in accordance with his views, to hand over to Mr. Cloete as large a number as the exigencies of the public service at Rockhampton will allow me to do.

5. I may mention, in conclusion, that I am not yet in possession of the letter you mention as having been written to me on the 17th September, but I received one of the 18th, from the Colonial Secretary's Office, which I presume to be to a similar purport with that you allude to.

I have, &c.,

M. C. O'CONNELL, C.C.L.

THE UNDER SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS,
Sydney.

M. C. O'CONNELL, ESQ., C.C.L., to THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

Canoona Gold Fields,
16 October, 1858.

SIR,

I had the honor on the 4th and 6th instant to address to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary Reports on the progress of events at these Gold Fields; and I now beg to send you an account of what has transpired since I last wrote.

2. I was not in receipt of any letters from your office until Sunday evening last, on my return to this camp, when I received that of the 30th September, acquainting me with Mr. Cloete's appointment; and having very little convenience for carrying on my correspondence (generally writing under what shade I can obtain from a tree), I addressed to the Government such communications only as would serve to keep it acquainted with what was passing at this place.

3. As I intimated to the Colonial Secretary in my letter of the 6th instant was my intention, I struck my tents, on that morning, and proceeded with six men who had volunteered for the purpose, on being provided with rations, to prospect a creek about seven miles from hence, and then to pass on to Mr. Connor's station, where gold had been said to have been found.

4. We missed the creek I was looking for on our way out, but reached Mr. Connor's on the 8th, trying the country at every opportunity where water offered itself; on the 9th we tried a creek running into that Mr. Connor's station is upon, as far as the range dividing Fitz Roy from Broad Sound waters; and on the 10th we carried our prospecting down Mr. Connor's creek to the river, visiting the creek I was first looking for, and returning to camp on the evening of the 11th (Sunday).

5. I regret to say that during the five working days we were thus out we came across no portion of country giving sufficient indication, by washing, of the presence of gold in the soil to induce us to remain and more thoroughly prospect it; but throughout the tract we passed over, about eighteen miles west from hence, the geological formation continues very similar to what it is here, and it is possible some persons who have gone out in the same direction may be more successful than we were, as I have since met with people who state they obtained gold in a creek in that vicinity.

6. On the Monday after my return to camp the party of men who had been out with me proceeded to prospect another locality, about two miles distant—I having myself to attend an inquiry on the body of a man found drowned; and on Tuesday and Wednesday prospecting was also carried on, and with more promising results than previously.

7. In consequence however of receiving the notification of Mr. Cloete's appointment, I have discontinued all further attempts to urge on the search for gold, on the expiration of the first week for which the men (10) were rationed; as I thought it better he should not be embarrassed by finding in operation measures I had adopted on my own responsibility, and which were in excess of the duties of his office.

8. Having given the above detail of my own proceedings, I will turn to the results of my observation during the fortnight I have been upon this ground; and I may now venture to report to you, for the information of Government, as facts closely approximating to the true state of the case:—

That there are about one thousand persons congregated on these diggings.

That there are many daily going and coming; but that for the last week these have been in pretty equal proportions, so as not materially to affect the aggregate number here present.

That as to the yield of gold either past or present, it is very difficult to form any reliable opinion from want of data to form it upon—the gold passing always by private hand, and generally in small quantities, from hence to Sydney; but I should say from what information has reached me, that not much over a thousand ounces has been as yet produced, including that now in the hands of the diggers. The largest individual gain acknowledged to me by the persons realizing it has been £12 per week each to a party of four.

That

That at the present moment the majority of persons here are not successful.

That the portion of ground originally worked and found to be so rich in its yield of gold, is now fully occupied, and in some parts said to be worked out; but that a considerable number of persons, perhaps from 400 to 500, are carrying on labor upon it, and many of them profitably.

That no extension of this auriferous patch has as yet been discovered of sufficient importance to give employment to any large number of men—but that detached parties are now scattered over the country, at distances varying from two to four, and seven miles, and that gold has been found in several places in the neighbourhood, indicating its continuance somewhere in the formation.

That the labor hitherto employed in searching for an extension bears no proportion to that which might have been expected from the numbers who have come here and passed away again—many having been discouraged by bad reports on the road up, and more after a day, or perhaps less, spent in looking about them, having despaired of eventual from not meeting with immediate success.

That the means of the great majority of persons who have come up here do not admit of their giving adequate time to any protracted search, and that the unoccupied state of the country beyond this station opposes likewise considerable difficulty in the way.

That from the causes mentioned in the two last paragraphs it is very difficult at present to form any reliable opinion as to the eventual extension of the Gold Fields opened in this district, but that there is much to encourage a favorable opinion on this subject in the continuance of similar geological formations over a considerable tract of country, and in the fact that gold has been found at Gracemere, Rannes, and Port Curtis, distances varying from thirty to sixty, and one hundred miles from hence.

9. From what I have stated above it will be evident to the Government that matters here are passing through a crisis, whose issue mainly is in the hands of Providence.

10. If there is no more gold than what has already been obtained neither human labor nor human enterprise will produce it; but if, as from previous experience in this country we may be, I think, fairly led to expect more gold does exist, I doubt not there is energy and perseverance enough amongst the population now assembled here shortly to develop it.

11. I have, in conclusion, much satisfaction in reporting that, as far as the general peace is concerned, all is remarkably quiet and orderly on these diggings.

I have, &c.,

M. C. O'CONNELL,

(SHIPMENT OF BUILDINGS, &c., TO PORT CURTIS.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 1 October, 1858.

THE COLONIAL ARCHITECT to THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS, reporting
Shipment of Buildings, &c., to Port Curtis.

Colonial Architect's Office,
Sydney, 1 October, 1858.

SIR,

I do myself the honor to report that, in obedience to your Minute of 27th ultimo, herewith returned, and to subsequent verbal instructions, I caused to be shipped by the "Wonga Wonga" steamer, which left yesterday for Keppel Bay, the following Buildings, &c., for the Gold Fields at Port Curtis:—

The iron building, removed from Fort Phillip.
 One wooden building, 24 ft. by 12 ft., containing 2 rooms, for Customs' Officers.
 One do. 20 ft. square and 12 ft. high, for Male Hospital.
 One do. 12 ft. square, for Females' Hospital.
 One do. 12 ft. square, for Medical Officer's Dispensary.

With bricks, lime, and other necessary materials.

I also forwarded 4 large and 2 small Tents, 1 Iron Safe, and provisions for the workmen in case of emergency.

To put up these buildings, and perform any other works in connection therewith that might be found necessary on the spot, I despatched, under charge of Mr. Jas. Moore, Clerk of Works, 6 carpenters and 1 laborer, all men accustomed to such work.

A statement of the expenditure incurred will be submitted as soon as it can be ascertained.

I have, &c.,

ALEXR. DAWSON,
 Colonial Architect.

COUNTRY POSTMASTERS.
(RETURN RELATIVE TO SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 7 May, 1858.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL to THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY, transmitting a Return of the Country Postmasters.

General Post Office,
Sydney, 23 April, 1858.

SIR,

In compliance with the instructions contained in your letter of the 10th instant, No. 47, I have the honor to forward a Return of the Country Postmasters, and their Salaries and Allowances.

The Postmasters have no perquisites whatever, and in no case do I consider the salary remuneration for office accommodation, or for any service beyond that of the Postal duty.

I have, &c.,

W. H. CHRISTIE,
Postmaster General.

THE HONORABLE
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

N. B.—This Return is the Return of present Salaries of Country Postmasters; but a careful revision for 1858 is now being made, and will be brought under notice in due course.

Legislative Assembly.
NEW SOUTH WALES.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION BETWEEN SYDNEY AND MACDONALD RIVER.
(PETITION FROM INHABITANTS OF ST. ALBAN'S.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 27 October, 1858.

To the Honorable the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales, in Parliament assembled.

We, the undersigned, on behalf of the Inhabitants of the Macdonald River, most respectfully beg to lay before you the following Memorial, agreed to be forwarded to your Honorable House, at a Public Meeting held at the Court House, St. Alban's, Wednesday, October 20th, 1858 :—

That your Memorialists having felt the urgent necessity of having Postal Communication between Sydney and Macdonald River twice a-week instead of once, which is the present arrangement, in or about August, 1857, sent a Petition to W. H. Christie, Esq., Postmaster General, stating our requirements, and received in answer, on September 4th, 1857, intimation—"that advertisements calling for tenders for ensuing year are already published; and I fear that there is little chance of a surplus of vote after the postal lines already sanctioned and provided for; but should there be such surplus, the requests of the Memorialists shall meet with every consideration." Accordingly the post continued the same for that year; but in February, 1858, called Postmaster General's attention to promise for year 1859; and on April 24th, 1858, received letter to annexed purport :—"I beg to inform you that I will call for tenders for 1859 once or twice a-week, &c."—which was done; and naturally considered that we should have Postal Communication twice a-week, more particularly as Mr. David Cross, of Macdonald River, tendered for twice a-week; therefore were much surprised at receiving notice from Postmaster General, "that in consequence of tender for twice a-week being too dear, that the communication would still be once a-week." Immediately a Public Meeting of Inhabitants was convened, with a view to petitioning your Honorable House to grant our earnest and much wanted request. We may mention that the post arrives here at St. Alban's on Sunday evening, at 5 o'clock, a short time before church afternoon service is over, and leaves again the same evening at six o'clock. Thus the post is entirely useless to any one, save he resides within a few minutes ride of post office; and when you are informed that the number of inhabitants exceeds six hundred, and take into consideration the importance of this district, as regards commercial communication with Sydney markets, you can easily perceive the great inconvenience the inhabitants are put to by such an arrangement. Repeatedly we are obliged to go to Sydney, in the event of legal documents being forwarded which require immediate attention, as a fortnight would elapse before an answer could be received, unless we happened to be at post office at the very time the post arrived, and then what time have we to answer?—One hour. And as regards Police communication with Wollombi, of which Police District we form a part, the constables are constantly going backwards and forward, in consequence of there being no second communication to Sydney, through which office our letters to and from Wollombi pass; and the same applies to our remittances to Mangrove, &c.

Under these circumstances, most earnestly pray that your Honorable House, taking into deliberation our present annoyances through the post only being once a-week, that you will be pleased to grant our prayer, in the manner to which it may appear most beneficial.

And, as in duty bound, your Petitioners will ever pray, &c.

STEAM POSTAL COMMUNICATION.

No. 1.

CHAMPION WETTON ESQ., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Royal Mail Company,
Sydney, 19 January, 1858.*

SIR,

With reference to my negotiations on the part of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company with the Government of New South Wales, for the establishment of Steam Communication between England and Australia via Panama, I am desired to acquaint you, that as the Company have received an intimation that Her Majesty's Government are not at present prepared to sanction the scheme, the Directors are not at liberty to recommend to the Proprietary the ratification of my provisional agreement with His Excellency's Government.

But, as we are informed that Her Majesty's Government have in contemplation to contract with the Company for the establishment of a fortnightly Steam Service between England and Australia, immediately the present line via Suez is brought into a state of thorough efficiency and regularity, the Directors will be prepared to convey the fortnightly Mail alternately via Suez and via Panama, if such be the mutual wish of the Imperial and Colonial Governments.

I have, &c,

THE HONORABLE

CHAMPION WETTON.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to C. WETTON, ESQ.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 6 February, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th ultimo, stating,—with reference to your negotiations for the establishment, by the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, of Steam Communication between England and Australia, via Panama and New Zealand, that as the Company have received an intimation that Her Majesty's Government are not at present prepared to sanction the scheme, the Directors are not at liberty to recommend to the Proprietary the ratification of the provisional agreement made with this Government; but, that being informed that the Home Government have it in contemplation to contract with the Company for the establishment of a fortnightly Steam Service between England and Australia, immediately the present line via Suez is brought into a state of thorough efficiency and regularity,—the Directors will be prepared to convey the fortnightly Mail alternately via Suez and via Panama, if such be the mutual wish of the Imperial and Colonial Governments.

2. I am further directed to inform you, that your letter has been laid before the Governor General and the Executive Council; and that the Council can only express their regret that the Company represented by you should not have seen fit to complete an arrangement which originated with their own accredited Agent.

3. With regard to a fortnightly Steam Service, I am desired to state, that this Government have received no official intimation that Her Majesty's Government contemplate any such arrangement as that to which you refer; and that they are not, therefore, in a position to treat with you upon the subject.

I have, &c.,

C. WETTON, ESQ.,

W. ELYARD.

&c., &c.

THE SECRETARY TO THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Chamber of Commerce,
Sydney, 27 January, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Committee of this Chamber respectfully to request that you will inform them what progress has been made for carrying out the provisional arrangement entered into with this Government by Mr. Champion Wetton, on behalf of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, for the Postal Service via Panama.

I have, &c.,

ALEX. THOMSON,

Secretary.

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,

&c., &c., &c.

No. 4.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to THE SECRETARY TO THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

*Colonial Secretary's Office,
Sydney, 6 February, 1858.*

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo, expressing the desire of the Chamber of Commerce to obtain information of the progress which has been made for carrying out the provisional arrangement entered into with this Government by Mr. Champion Wetton, on behalf of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, for the establishment of a Steam Postal Service between England and Australia via Panama and New Zealand.

2. In reply, I am desired to inform you, that the Addresses of the Legislature on the subject were duly forwarded by the Governor General to the Imperial Government, with His Excellency's recommendation that the arrangement should be carried into effect with as little delay as possible, but that no answer has as yet been received to his Despatch. The only information of which the Colonial Government is in possession relating to this matter, is contained in a letter which has been addressed to the Colonial Secretary by Mr. Wetton, who states, that, as the Company have received an intimation that Her Majesty's Government are not at present prepared to sanction the scheme, the Directors are not at liberty to recommend to the proprietary the ratification of the provisional agreement made with this Government.

SIR,

With reference to former correspondence on the subject of a contract for the conveyance of Mails between England and Australia by way of Panama and New Zealand, I have the honor to transmit to you, for the information of the Government of New South Wales, a copy of a letter received from Mr. Wetton, and of one which has been addressed, by my direction, to that gentleman, in reply.

SIR,

For the information of the Government of New Zealand, I beg to hand you, under cover hereof, a copy of my communication of yesterday's date to the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, in reference to my late negotiations, on the part of the Royal Mail Company, with that Government, and with the Government of New Zealand, for the establishment of Steam Communication between England and Australia via Panama.

I have, &c.,

[Enclosure 2 in No. 5.]

Colonial Secretary's Office,
Auckland, 23 February, 1858.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th ultimo, transmitting a copy of your communication of the 19th of the same month to the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, with reference to your late negotiation, on the part of the Royal Mail Company, with the Governments of New South Wales and New Zealand, for the establishment of Steam Communication between England and Australia via Panama.

In that communication you state that, as the Company have received an intimation that Her Majesty's Government are not at present prepared to sanction the scheme, the Directors are not at liberty to recommend to the Proprietary the ratification of your provisional agreement.

In reply, I am to state, that as Mr. Stafford is unaware that the sanction of the Imperial Government was in any way requisite to the ratification of the agreement, he cannot admit the withholding of that sanction as any justification of the course taken by the Directors. That agreement was entered into by the Governments of New South Wales and New Zealand as principals, and without any reference to the views or opinions of the Imperial Government, to whom only the preparation of the details of the contract was referred; nor was the necessity of such reference ever required by you during the progress of the negotiations.

The Government of New Zealand being, however, now released from any engagement with the Royal Mail Company, in respect of the subject of the negotiations, will be prepared to make such arrangements as it may deem suitable with any parties desirous of establishing the service in question.

I have, &c.,

W. GISBORNE,
Under Secretary.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

The Sydney Chamber of Commerce having taken into consideration the subject of the provisional Contract made in the month of June, last year, between your Excellency's Government and Mr. Champion Wetton, the accredited Agent of the Royal Mail Company, for the establishment of a monthly Steam Communication between Sydney and Southampton via Panama; and having carefully and dispassionately weighed the facts and inferences deducible from the correspondence which passed between Mr. Wetton and the Governments of this Colony and New Zealand, having regard also to the fact that, in every particular, the stipulated conditions were faithfully carried out by this Colony, even to the voting of the required subsidy of £35,000; and that on the part of the Company no action appears to have been taken to fulfil the obligations of their authorised Agent,—are of opinion that it is neither proper nor desirable that a compact solemnly entered into with the Government of this Colony should be thus disrespectfully evaded by any body of Directors, whatever their position or influence may be; and, therefore, venture respectfully to request that your Excellency will be pleased to cause such measures to be adopted as will compel the Directors of the Royal Mail Company to carry out, in its integrity, the agreement concluded, in their behalf, by Mr. Champion Wetton.

SIR,

By desire of the Colonial Secretary, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, and to inform you that the communication from the Chamber of Commerce therein enclosed, in which they request that measures may be taken by the Governor General to compel the Directors of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company to carry out, in its integrity, the agreement concluded, on their behalf, with Mr. Wetton, for the establishment of a Steam Postal Service between Southampton and Sydney via Panama and New Zealand, has been laid before His Excellency.

2. The arrangement made with Mr. Wetton was, as will be observed by the letter addressed to you from this Department on the 27th of June last, a provisional one, subject to the approval on the one part of the local Parliament, and on the other to ratification by the Shareholders of the Company in England; and, although it is much to be regretted that the Directors have as yet taken no steps to fulfil the arrangement which originated with their own accredited agent, it does not appear that the Government has any power to compel them to do so.

3. I am, however, directed to add, with reference to my letter of the 6th of February last, that no reply has been received to the Governor General's Despatch, in which His Excellency forwarded to the Imperial Government the Addresses of the local Legislature on the subject, with a recommendation that the Contract provisionally made with Mr. Wetton should be completed with as little delay as possible.

[Enclosure in No. 2.]

At a meeting of the Sydney Chamber of Commerce, held the 12th November, 1857.

It was resolved—

"1. That this Chamber has noticed with much gratification the Resolutions recently adopted by both Houses of Parliament expressive of the extreme dissatisfaction entertained as to the mode in which the Contract of the European and Australian Royal Mail Steam Company has been hitherto performed.

"2. That it appears desirable that an expression of opinion upon the same important subject should also emanate from the Sydney Chamber of Commerce, more especially as, since the present Time Table only allows two days for replies to their correspondents, the merchants and traders of this City have been most seriously inconvenienced by the past irregularities of the service.

"3. That this Chamber is of opinion that, if the Directors of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company do not satisfy the Imperial Government that they are making effectual provision for proper performance of the service in future, the Contract ought to be annulled."

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 7th and 13th of this month, respecting the Contract with the European and Australian Royal Mail Steam Company for the conveyance of the Mails between Australia and the United Kingdom, and to state that the Government is glad to observe, by the Resolution

Resolution enclosed in the last mentioned letter, that the view taken by the Chamber of Commerce on this subject is in accordance with the opinion expressed by the Legislature of this Colony, which will, of course, be communicated to the Home Government.

2. At the same time, I am desired to point out that the Resolutions enclosed in your communication are not in the proper form for transmission to the Secretary of State; but, if the Chamber of Commerce will submit a Petition embodying the representation which they may desire to make on the subject, it will be duly forwarded to the Imperial Government.

Sir,

I do myself the honor, by direction of the Committee of this Chamber, to wait upon you with the accompanying Petition to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that a series of Resolutions in reference to the existing Steam Postal Contract, adopted by the Chamber at its last sitting, and set forth in the Petition, may be transmitted to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

I have, &c.,

ALEXR. THOMSON.

THE HONORABLE,
THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

[Enclosure in No. 5.]

To His Excellency Sir William Thomas Denison, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Governor General in and over all Her Majesty's Colonies of New South Wales, Tasmania, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia, and Captain General and Governor-in-Chief of the Territory of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c., &c.,

The Petition of the Sydney Chamber of Commerce,—

HUMBLY SHEWETH:—

That at a General Meeting of the Members of the Chamber, held on the 5th day of March, 1858, it was resolved:—

1. That in the opinion of this Chamber the Time Table adopted by the European and Australian Royal Mail Company would be very inconvenient to the Colonists of New South Wales, even if it were maintained with punctuality.
2. That the inconvenience to which the Colonists would even then be subjected has been most seriously aggravated by the inefficient performance of the Contract.
3. That so long as the present Time Table is retained, the inhabitants of this Colony will, it is feared, be constantly subject to repetitions of the inconvenience to which they have been on several occasions exposed by the non-arrival in Sydney of the overland Mail prior to the departure of the steamer with the homeward Mail.
4. That such a re-arrangement of the Time Table as will render the recurrence of past irregularities less probable is due to the Colonists of New South Wales, considering the extent of their commerce, and the amount contributed by them to the subsidy paid to the European and Australian Royal Mail Company.
5. That it is the more incumbent upon the Company to accede to their just demand in this particular as a diminution in the number of days now permitted between the arrival and departure of the Mails at and from London would permit of the desired re-arrangement of the Time Table.
6. That if so reasonable a request be not promptly granted, it will, undoubtedly, become a matter for grave consideration with the Colonists of New South Wales whether it will be politic for them to continue their contribution to a service from which they have derived little benefit, and which, in consequence of its irregularity, has caused them most serious inconvenience.
7. And further, this Chamber desires to reiterate the opinion expressed in their Petition of 10th December last,—that if the Directors of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company do not satisfy the Imperial Government that they are making effectual provision for the proper performance of the service in future, the Contract ought to be annulled.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray that your Excellency may be pleased to transmit the foregoing Resolutions to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies.

C. WETTON, Esq., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

European and Australian Royal Mail Steam Company, Sydney, 24 February, 1858.

SIR,

As the representative in Australia of the Royal Mail and of the European and Australian Royal Mail Companies, I have the honor to address you in reference to the Mail Service between England and the Colonies.

From many causes, now unnecessary to advert to, partly accidental, partly arising from the natural difficulties of the route, and partly from inexperience, the Mails have not generally been delivered at either terminus with regularity, or within the Contract time; nor has the service been carried on in a manner satisfactory to any of the parties interested in the Contract, at Home or in the Colonies, to Her Majesty's Government or to the Company themselves. This is acknowledged and regretted by the Company; and this is now in course of remedy, by new arrangements made under the sanction and full approval of Her Majesty's Government.

With the view of reorganizing the Service on a new and better footing, the assistance of an experienced and powerful Company has been obtained, in the amalgamation of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company with the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, under an agreement which now only waits the legalization of an Act of the Imperial Parliament. Anticipating the assent of the Legislature, the new management are already taking active measures to organize a more efficient staff ashore and afloat, and to place on the line a sufficient number of powerful vessels, with a spare ship at either terminus of the outside service; by which means, it is to be hoped, better time will be kept in future, and as near an approach will be made to regularity as is possible under the existing terms of the Contract. All that long experience and ample means can do will now be done to carry out this Service in a manner worthy of the great interests involved. And the Company, thus newly and more rigorously constituted, with so great an outlay already incurred, has a right to ask of the public and of the Governments of these Colonies a fresh and a fair trial, and some forbearance, pending the reorganization of the Service.

I have, &c.,

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, in which, adverting to the irregularities which have occurred in the performance of the Contract for the conveyance of the Mails between England and these Colonies,

Colonies, you state that they are now in the course of remedy by new arrangements, and, in consequence, urge that the Company you represent should have a fresh and fair trial, and some forbearance, pending the reorganization of the Service.

2. In reply, I am desired to inform you that the Government of this Colony feels that it has good reason to be very much dissatisfied with the mode in which the Mail Service has been conducted. Strong remonstrances have already been made to the Imperial Government, pointing out the numerous failures which have taken place, and which can only be attributed to the neglect of the Company, and its utter disregard of the conditions of the Contract, and the vague statements of the measures contemplated by the Company for the improvement of the Service, which are contained in your communication, are not considered by the Government sufficient to justify it in withholding the further remonstrance which it is intended to make, or in agreeing to a further trial of a Company which has so utterly failed in performing its engagements.

I have, &c.,

C. WETTON, Esq.,
&c., &c., &c.

W. ELYARD.

No. 9.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY to THE CHIEF SECRETARY, VICTORIA.

New South Wales,

Colonial Secretary's Office,

Sydney, 27 February, 1858.

SIR,

You are no doubt aware that the irregular manner in which the Mail Service between England and the Australian Colonies, by the European and Australian Royal Mail Steam Company, has been performed has been the subject of much complaint in New South Wales, and this has been felt so seriously that representations have been made, from time to time, to the Home Government, pointing out the inconvenience which has resulted from the failure of the Company to observe the conditions of the Contract.

2. Mr. Wetton, who has recently been appointed Superintendent of the Company, has addressed to me a letter, stating that these irregularities are in course of remedy by new arrangements, and bespeaking for the Company a fresh trial and forbearance, pending the reorganization of the Service. It does not appear, however, to this Government that anything has been advanced by Mr. Wetton which should induce it either to withhold the additional remonstrance, which is about to be made to the Imperial Government on the subject, or to signify its willingness to be a party to any arrangement for extending a further trial to a company which has so completely failed in its engagements; and, as there seems to be a possibility that Mr. Wetton has made a similar communication to the adjoining Colonies, I have the honor to transmit, for your information, a copy of the reply which has been addressed to him in answer to his letter to me.

3. I take this opportunity of stating that the subject of the Steam Postal Service between the United Kingdom and New South Wales is now engaging the serious consideration of this Government, with a view to the proposal of some plan by which a speedy and regular communication may be secured.

4. I shall be happy to enter into any correspondence with you upon this subject, or to receive from you any suggestions with which you may be disposed to favor me, in order that this Colony may be prepared to act in concert with the neighbouring Colonies; and I beg to assure you of our readiness to meet in a friendly spirit the wishes of our fellow Colonists upon this most important subject, and to co-operate with them in a united endeavour to obtain such a measure as shall be of mutual advantage to the Australian Colonies.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 24th ultimo, wherein, as the representative in Australia of the European and Australian Royal Mail Companies, you address me in reference to the Mail Service between England and the Colonies.

In this communication you state that, from many causes, partly accidental, partly resulting from the novelty of the undertaking, the Mails have not been delivered at either terminus with regularity or within the contract, nor has the Service been carried on in a manner satisfactory to any of the parties interested in the contract; and you intimate that, with a view to reorganizing the Service on a better footing, arrangements are in progress by which it is hoped that better time will be kept in future, and an approach made to regularity; and you ask of the Government of this, as of the other Colonies, a fresh and a fair trial, and some forbearance, pending the reorganization of the Service.

The Government of this Colony is not insensible to the risks which attended the adoption of a new mode of Postal Communication between Europe and the Australian Colonies, and has not been disposed, therefore, on slight grounds to complain of those irregularities which have taken place, and which you are constrained yourself, as the Agent of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, to admit. It is gratified also to learn, that by new arrangements it is hoped that those irregularities will be obviated in future; but I am not warranted by the indefinite assurances in your letter, and by past experience of the management of the Company you represent, to commit this Government further than by this general acknowledgment of your communication.

STEAM SHIP "CITY OF SYDNEY."

No. 1.

H. LARMOUR, Esq., to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*European and Australian Royal Mail Company,
Sydney, 2 November, 1857.*

SIR,

In consequence of the crank shaft of the S. S. "European" having proved defective, and it being impossible to provide a new one in time to despatch that vessel with the Mails of the 11th November, to meet the requirements of the service, I have chartered, at a heavy outlay, the only vessel available for the service in the Colonies, viz., the "City of Sydney."

As Captain Reid, the Admiralty Agent of the "European," has communicated to me his refusal to embark the Mails on board the "City of Sydney," (copy of which communication I enclose,) I will thank you to inform me whether the Government of New South Wales will object to the despatch of the Mails per "City of Sydney," under the contract. It will only be a temporary arrangement for this voyage, and the ship not to be continued in the service.

I have, &c.,

H. LARMOUR,

Manager.

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

[Enclosure in No. 1.]

*R. M. S. S. "European,"
Sydney, 31 October, 1857.*

SIR,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th instant, informing me that the crank shaft of the "European" had proved defective, and that it is impossible to provide another in time to despatch that vessel with H. M. Mails on 11th proximo, but in lieu of the "European" that you had chartered the "City of Sydney," steamer, for the service.

I have to call your attention to the articles of agreement between my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and the Directors,—that in every case of a ship becoming disabled the Company will "replace the same by good and efficient vessels of similar tonnage."

On inspecting the steamer "City of Sydney," I find her not in accordance with the terms of Contract, and therefore decline embarking with H. M. Mails in her, on the 11th proximo.

I have, &c.,

Commander R. N.,
Admiralty Agent.

Manager of the European and Australian
Royal Mail Company, Sydney.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

General Post Office,Sydney, 4 November, 1857.

SIR,

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a communication addressed to you by the Manager of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, together with an enclosure, addressed to Mr. Larmour, by Captain Reid, R.N., the Admiralty Agent on board the "European," and beg to report thereon, in pursuance of your instructions under blank cover of yesterday's date.

2. I am of opinion that, under the present circumstances, the despatch of the usual Monthly Mail is highly expedient, and will be of great benefit to the public; and that, as the "European" cannot convey the November Mails, and there is an uncertainty as to the "Columbian" being able to do so, the chartering of the "City of Sydney" is likely to prove advantageous to the public interests.

3. I understand the Admiralty Agent's letter as protesting against the "City of Sydney" as not being the class of vessel contracted for by the Home Government, and as giving his decision not to accompany her, but to remain for the "European," whose Mail he will take charge of in due course.

4. In a personal communication with Captain Reid, he confirmed this view, and added the word "with" in his original letter, which addition to some extent modifies his former communication.

5. I purpose, with the approval of the Government, shipping the usual Monthly Mail by the "City of Sydney," and would respectfully recommend that the Manager of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company be informed of this decision; as also that the Colonial Government can in no way enter on the general question of the Contract, or its non-performance; and that their acquiescence in the present arrangements must in no way be considered as interfering with any fines or penalties that the Home Government may think proper to inflict.

I have, &c.,

W. H. CHRISTIE,

Postmaster General.

THE UNDER SECRETARY to H. LARMOUR, ESQ.

Colonial Secretary's Office,Sydney, 6 November, 1857.

SIR,

I am directed by the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd. instant, stating that, in consequence of the crank shaft of the steam ship "European" having proved defective, and the impossibility of providing a new one in time to despatch that vessel with the Mails of the 11th of this month, you have chartered the "City of Sydney," as the only vessel available for the service in the Colonies, and inquiring whether this Government will object to the despatch of the Mails for the present month by the latter steamer, under the Contract.

2. In reply, I am directed to inform you, that, in order to prevent the great inconvenience to the community which would be occasioned by the usual Monthly Mail not being despatched at the appointed time, the Postmaster General will be authorised to ship them on board the "City of Sydney," as you desire; but it is to be distinctly understood, that the course course adopted by the Colonial Government is not to be considered as interfering with the obligation of the Company you represent duly to perform their Contract, or with any fines or penalties to which they may become liable in consequence of the breach of any of the provisions of it.

Downing-street,

13 March, 1858.

SIR,

As some dissatisfaction has been felt in the Australian Colonies at the manner in which the conveyance of Mails between this Country and Australia has been executed by the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, I think it right to transmit to you, for your information, a copy of a letter which has been received at this Department from the Treasury, in answer to a representation on the subject which was made by the Government of Victoria; and I trust that the further arrangements referred to in Mr. Wilson's letter will have the effect of ensuring a greater degree of punctuality in the performance of this service.

I have, &c.,

JAMES WILSON, ESQ., to H. MERIVALE, ESQ.

Treasury Chambers,

27 February, 1858.

SIR,

With reference to your letter of the 20th instant, transmitting copy of a Despatch from the Governor of Victoria, with a memorandum which has been drawn up by the Postmaster General, as to the unsatisfactory manner in which the European and Australian Royal Mail Company have hitherto carried out their Contract, and requesting to be informed of the views of this Board upon this subject,—I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you, for the information of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, that my Lords concur very much in the views taken by Sir H. Barkly as to this service, and they are of opinion that it would be a good means of securing greater regularity if the voyage between Suez and Melbourne were divided by a change of vessel at Point de Galle.

My Lords have perused the representations of the Chamber of Commerce at Melbourne, and join with them in deprecating the extreme irregularity of the service. My Lords have, however, taken every means in their power, short of terminating the Contract, to induce the Company to perform the service with greater regularity. The heavy fines provided for by the Contract have been enforced to the full extent to which My Lords considered them as due.

The subject of proceeding to more serious measures has engaged the attention of this Board; but My Lords have been deterred from taking any further steps up to this time, on several considerations.

First,—Experience has shown the Home Government that all the extensive and heavy services are performed, in the first instance, in a manner which has never been satisfactory to the Government or to the public; and my Lords felt that it was better to put up with a less perfect service for a time, in the hope that, as the arrangements of the Company became more perfect, it would improve, and rather than hazard a new Contract with a new Company, which would again unsettle everything, and expose the service to all the risks of forming new arrangements; and, next, the European and Australian Company has recently effected arrangements with the West India Royal Mail Company to assist them in the performance of the service; from this arrangement, which will bring both ships and experience in management to the service of the European and Australian Company, My Lords are led to hope for an improved service.

In the meantime every motive will be given to urge the Company in that direction, by the infliction of the penalties which become payable.

My Lords, however, see, with much regret, that the Postmaster General of Victoria is the first to suggest a repudiation of the obligations of the Contract on the part of that Colony.

The Contract was made, at the direct wish of the Colonies, by Her Majesty's Government, and every security for its performance was taken by the Home Government. The irregularities which have occurred are as much a matter of regret, concern, and inconvenience to those who in this country are connected with the Colonies, and the public in general who have correspondence with them, as they can be to the Colonies themselves.

And my Lords feel assured that the Colonies, sensible of the efforts on the part of the Home Government to make arrangements, and to carry them into effect so as to meet the mutual wants of both parties interested in the fulfilment of the Contract, will, on their part, continue faithfully to fulfil their obligations, until it shall be thought fit on both sides to discontinue the arrangements.

I am, &c.,

JAMES WILSON.

The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury have directed me to acquaint you, for the information of Lord Stanley, with reference to your letter of 20th ultimo, that my Lords have been informed by the Board of Admiralty that, having communicated with the European and Australian Steam Packet Company relative to the complaints preferred against them by the Chamber of Commerce at Melbourne, &c., with respect to the manner in which the Mail Service has been performed, the Board have received an admission from the Company of the necessity of keeping (6) six vessels on the Suez and Sydney Line.

I am at the same time to state, that the Company have at present that number of vessels on the line, and though two of these are not of the proper size, they will be replaced shortly by two of the proper dimensions, and that the Board will take measures for maintaining that number of vessels on the line for the future.

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence, I transmit to you, herewith, for your information, a copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Treasury, announcing the 16 June, 1858. necessary dissolution of the present Contract with the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, and reporting the temporary arrangement which it is proposed to make for conducting the Mail Service with Australia, until some new Contract can be entered into of a more permanent nature.

GOVERNOR

SIR WM. DENISON, K.C.B.,
New South Wales.

I have, &c.,
E. B. LYTTON.

MR. HAMILTON to MR. MERIVALE.

Treasury Chambers,
16 June, 1858.

SIR,

I am desired by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you, for the information of Secretary Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, with reference to the correspondence which has already taken place on the subject of the irregularities in the Mail Service between this Country and the Australian Colonies, that their Lordships were in negotiation with the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, with a view to place the service on a more satisfactory and efficient footing, and that Mr. Cunard was willing to have connected himself with the service, provided certain modifications in the contract could be made.

Their Lordships, attaching great value to the connexion of a gentleman with the character and experience of Mr. Cunard, and believing that in him would be found the best guarantee of the punctual and satisfactory performance of the service, were disposed to assent to considerable modifications in the contract, as the condition of Mr. Cunard's undertaking the service in connexion with the present contractors—contingent, however, upon the consent of the Colonies.

But their Lordships' attention having been called to resolutions adopted at a meeting of the shareholders of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, of which a copy is herewith transmitted, and by which it appears that the shareholders had agreed to dissolve and wind up the Company, and likewise to a balance sheet, signed by the Auditors of the Company, exhibiting losses to a very large amount, they have not deemed it right to continue negotiations.

I am to state that, although it is necessary to proceed carefully under the present circumstances, their Lordships see no alternative but that of either accepting from the European and Australian Royal Mail Company a surrender of the contract, or taking steps to annul it.

It is obvious that the contractors, from the losses they have already sustained, are unable to carry on the contract; and although, as has been already stated, their Lordships would have been disposed to have consented to considerable modifications in an existing contract with a solvent Company, in order to strengthen them, and enable them to carry on the service, yet their Lordships are of opinion that it would not be expedient to modify the terms of the contract with the Company under the circumstances of its insolvency being declared by its own shareholders, and steps being taken for liquidation and winding up.

Such modification and arrangement, under such circumstances, would be virtually a new contract with new parties, and ought to be offered to public competition.

Their Lordships therefore propose, when the existing contract shall be either surrendered or cancelled, to invite tenders, without delay, for a new service, modifying the terms in such particulars as experience may have shewn to be necessary, and they have every hope that they will thus be able to place the service in all respects on a satisfactory footing.

I am to state that, to obviate the inconvenience which would otherwise be occasioned by the sudden removal of the present line of steamers, it is the intention of their Lordships to take immediate steps for entering into a temporary arrangement with the Royal Mail Steam Company, or some other Company, for the service, during the period that must elapse between the termination of the present contract and the commencement of the new one.

In conclusion, I am to request that you will move Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton to communicate with the Governors of the several Colonies by the Mail, which has been detained until to-morrow.

I am, &c.,

GEO. A. HAMILTON.

[Enclosure referred to.]

At an adjourned special extraordinary general meeting of the Shareholders of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company (limited), held at Glasgow, on Wednesday, the 2nd June, 1858,—

It was Resolved:—

1. That the affairs of the European and Australian Royal Mail Company (limited) be voluntarily wound up, under and in accordance with the provisions applicable to the voluntary winding up of a Company contained in the Joint Stock Company's Act, 1856.

2. That the Directors of the Company be as they are hereby authorised to cause notice to be given in the Edinburgh Gazette of such resolution to wind up the Company voluntarily, in conformity with the provisions of the said Statute.

3. That Walter Mackenzie, accountant in Glasgow, be as he is hereby nominated and appointed Liquidator, for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the said Company, and distributing the property in accordance with the provisions contained in the said Joint Stock Companies' Act, 1856, with all the powers, rights and privileges conferred upon Liquidators by Statute, or pertaining to the office by law or otherwise in relation to the voluntary winding up of a Company; and that the remuneration to be paid to the said Liquidator shall be at the rate of five hundred pounds sterling per annum for the first year, and in the event of the affairs of the Company not being wound up before the expiry of one year from this date, the rate of remuneration shall be as may be fixed by a general meeting of the Company, to be then called.

4. That the conditional or provisional agreement referred to in the supplementary Report of the Directors, in so far as it makes provision for the disposal of the three ships and plant and others therein mentioned, be and the same is hereby approved of, subject to the rights and approval of the mortgagees or others interested therein; and

5. That the Directors of the Company be as they are hereby authorised and empowered in the interim, and until the foregoing resolutions, or such of them as may require confirmation, shall have been confirmed by a subsequent meeting, to be called for the purpose, in terms of the said Joint Stock Companies' Act, 1856, in concert with the said Liquidator, to adopt such measures, and to enter into and complete and carry through, such arrangements or agreements, (including the conditional or provisional agreement before referred to,) as they and he may consider expedient, and for the interest of the Company; either with the view of having the working agreement, which had been entered into with the Royal Mail Company on the faith of an amalgamation, terminated or cancelled, or for having its terms enforced, or for preserving, recovering, chartering, or otherwise disposing of and realizing, all or any portion of the Company's property or assets, subject to the rights and approval of the mortgagees of the Company's ships, so far as said mortgagees or any of them are interested, with a view to or towards the winding up of its affairs; and generally to do whatever they and the said Liquidator may consider proper or expedient for protecting or promoting the interests of the Company, or for the purpose of carrying out or giving force and effect to all or any of these Resolutions.

STEAM POSTAL COMMUNICATION.

(LETTER FROM W. C. WENTWORTH, ESQ., AS CHAIRMAN OF AUSTRALIAN ASSOCIATION.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 20 April, 1858.

LETTER from W. C. WENTWORTH, ESQ., Chairman of the General Association for the Australian Colonies, in London, to the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, respecting a proposal for the extension of the existing contract for the Mail Service between England and the Australian Colonies.

*General Association for the Australian Colonies, Committee Rooms, London Tavern,
January 14, 1858.*

SIR,

The Association, on the occasion of the Government entering into a contract for the Mail Service with the European and Australian Steam Company, were induced to point out to Her Majesty's Ministers the unsatisfactory character of the arrangements, and the inadequacy of the means provided for carrying out that service, in the number and power of the vessels employed, and in the neglect of any proper tests for determining their speed prior to leaving England.

The unfavourable anticipations which the Association formed as to the working of the European and Australian Steam Company have unfortunately been realised in a very marked degree; and had the contract continued in the same hands, the Association are of opinion that the several Colonies would have been justified in withholding their confidence in its future operations. A junction has, however, been formed between the European and Australian Company and the Royal Mail Company, which, if carried out upon the terms proposed, affords a well-grounded hope that the service will hereafter be performed with speed and punctuality, and in a manner satisfactory to the Colonists. It is one of the conditions of the proposed union, that not less than six vessels, of adequate size and power, should be provided for the service between the Colonies and Suez,—an arrangement which will permit one spare vessel always to be available in the Red Sea, and another in Sydney, in the event of any one of the vessels being disabled at either end of the line.

In the interview which the Committee of the Association have recently had with the Provisional Committee of the amalgamated Companies, the Chairman of the latter body, C. Mangles, Esq., gave the most positive assurances of their desire to give every satisfaction henceforth to the Colonies in the performance of the contract. He fully admitted the irregularities that have characterised the service as hitherto performed, and the well-grounded character of the complaints that have been made respecting it. An addition will have to be made to their Capital, of £250,000, which has already been subscribed for. To effect the junction proposed, an Act of Parliament will be required, all the preliminary steps necessary for which have already been taken.

In order, however, to complete the proposed union of the two Companies, Mr. Mangles stated that it would be an essential condition that their contracts should be prolonged for two years beyond the term for which they are at present taken. The Imperial Government, it is understood, are favourable to such an extension, and it only rests with the several Colonies to determine whether the proposal shall be acceded to. The Committee of the Association, having taken into their deliberate consideration all the circumstances of the case, are of opinion that it will be for the interest of the Colonies that the proposed extension of the contract should be conceded. If the present European and Australian Steam Company break down, as it inevitably will if it fail to effect a union with the Royal Mail Company, the communication by steam with the Colonies will be interrupted for an indefinite period, and the Colonies placed in the hands of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, who, by virtue of their monopoly, will be able to exact whatever terms they choose from the Colonies, and perform the service in whatever mode they like. Indeed it is somewhat doubtful whether, with the present exigencies of the Indian service, the Peninsular and Oriental Company would be able to undertake an Australian line. All that they could possibly effect would merely be the establishment of a branch line from Ceylon to Australia, making the interests and convenience of the Colonial passengers and mails entirely subordinate to those of India.

The Committee of the Australian Association, therefore, strongly advise the several Governments of the Australian provinces promptly to consider the proposal of granting an extension of the contract to the amalgamated Company upon the terms suggested, persuaded as they are that upon the concessions sought for depends the continuance of steam communication between the Colonies and England, or, at all events, the avoidance of a serious interruption that must otherwise inevitably arise. It must also be obvious, that the required extension of the contract will be to the manifest advantage of the Colonies, if it be carried out in future, as your Committee believe it will be, in its integrity.

I have, &c.,

W. C. WENTWORTH,

Chairman.

STEAM POSTAL COMMUNICATION WITH ENGLAND.

(MINUTES AND PROCEEDINGS OF EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 27 August, 1858.

W. DENISON,

Message No. 26.

Governor General.

With reference to the Address of the Legislative Assembly on the 6th of this month respecting Steam Postal Communication with England, and the Governor General's reply thereto of the 10th instant, His Excellency now transmits, for the information of the Assembly, Copies of the Minutes of Proceedings of the Executive Council upon the subject.

2. In accordance with the opinion expressed by the Council, the Governor General invites the Legislative Assembly to appropriate any sum not exceeding £50,000 a year, for a period of either seven or ten years, for the establishment of a Steam Postal Communication with England by way of Panama.

Government House,

Sydney, 27 August, 1858.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council with respect to an Address from the Legislative Assembly relative to Steam Postal Communication with England.

Extract from Minute No. 58-32, dated 9th August, 1858.

Present:—

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,
THE HONORABLE THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL,
THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER,
THE HONORABLE THE SOLICITOR GENERAL,
THE HONORABLE THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

HIS Excellency the Governor General lays before the Council an Address which has been presented to him by the Honorable the Speaker, embodying certain Resolutions adopted by the Legislative Assembly, on the 6th instant, with reference to the existing Steam Postal Communication with England via India, and a proposed communication via Panama; and, in deference to the wish expressed in the concluding paragraph of this Address, His Excellency now submits the subject for the consideration of the Council.

2. The Council accordingly proceed to consider the several matters touched upon in the Address, a copy of which is hereto annexed; and, after a lengthened deliberation, advise that His Excellency should, by the Mail which will leave Sydney on the 11th instant, forward a copy of the Resolutions to the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies

Colonies, and especially urge upon the attention of Her Majesty's Government the principle affirmed in the 6th Resolution, viz., "That in any future contract for the Mail Service, it is not for the interests of New South Wales that the Imperial Government should make any arrangement binding on this Colony without previous reference thereto."

3. Having further deliberated, the Council defer their decision as to what other steps it would be expedient to adopt in the matter until their next meeting.

EDWARD C. MEREWETHER,
Clerk of the Council.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council with respect to Steam Postal Communication with England.

Extract from Minute No. 58-33, dated 16th August, 1858.

Present :—

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,
THE HONORABLE THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL,
THE HONORABLE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER,
THE HONORABLE THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

UPON the invitation of His Excellency the Governor General, the Council resume the consideration of the question of Steam Postal Communication with India, submitted to them at their last meeting, and then only partially proceeded with.

2. On the present occasion the Council have before them, in addition to the Resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly on the 6th instant, a Minute in which His Excellency explains his own views upon the subject; and having again given to the consideration of the question that full and earnest attention which its importance demands, the Council desire that the result of their deliberations be recorded as follows :—

1st. They are clearly of opinion that the Steam Postal Communication with England and India has been conducted under the existing contract with the European and Australian Steam Navigation Company in a most unsatisfactory manner. But, in dealing with the question with reference to the future, it is proper to consider whether the conditions of that contract were such as could be fulfilled with any degree of regularity. It may be urged, it is true, that the practicability of the undertaking was a matter for the consideration of the parties who engaged to perform it, and they, it may fairly be presumed, proportioned the amount of their demand upon the Government to the character of the work they had to do; but in such a wide scheme as that which was grafted upon the original proposition, it is evident that there were many risks to be run, upon which it was difficult, if not impossible, to calculate.

2nd. The Government of New South Wales never contemplated the establishment of a separate and distinct line all the way from England to Australia; all the calculations were based upon the assumption that advantage would be taken of the existing line to India, so far as that could be made available, and the difficulties which have been encountered are due, in great measure, to the attempt which has been made to establish with insufficient means an independent line from Australia to Suez. The Council believe that the experience of the working of this line for the last 18 months has shewn that it is too long to admit of being worked with any probability of regularity by vessels sailing from Sydney making the voyage to Suez and returning at once. Such a voyage would take 89 days, and no time would be given for such ordinary repairs to machinery as must always be required from time to time.

3rd. It is by no means certain that the work could be done with regularity were the vessels to sail from Suez and Sydney independently of each other; the voyage of each would still be from 44 to 46 days, and this is no longer than a steamer can be fairly expected to work without a thorough inspection of her machinery. The Council are therefore of opinion that it would very much conduce to the regularity of the Mail Service to and from England, if the different stages or portions of the voyage were shortened, as might be done were Ceylon made the termination of the direct voyage from the Colonies, instead of Suez.

4th. Should the Company who at present hold the contract altogether fail either to carry on the Mail Service, or to induce other parties to undertake it, or, should Her Majesty's Government determine the contract, the whole question will then be open for reconsideration, and it will be in the power of the Australian Colonies to propose new arrangements. It is desirable, therefore, that some determination should be arrived at by this Colony as to what those arrangements should be.

5th. In dealing with the question, the Council assume that the advantage of a rapid, frequent, and regular Steam Communication with Europe, Asia, and America, are great enough to justify the Colony in paying to persons who will undertake to provide the necessary means for this, a much larger sum than can be possibly received by the Government in the shape of postage.

6th. It may also be laid down as an axiom, or, at all events, as a fact deduced from experience, that it does not conduce to the satisfactory working of a contract to have too many persons or bodies parties to it; and that if the parties interested in the due performance of the work are, as is the case with the present Mail Contract, at the two extremities of a line of some 12,000 miles in length, differences of opinion and heart-burnings are nearly certain to occur.

7th. The object of a frequent and regular communication with all the civilized parts of the globe would, it appears to the Council, be best attained by maintaining a line to Ceylon, and from thence to England and India, on the one hand, and another to Panama, and from thence to England and North and South America, on the other; and should it be found, after a fair estimate of the cost of these lines, that it would be advisable to carry them out by entering into contracts for their execution, it would be as well to avoid, as much as possible, the multiplication of parties to the contracts. This result, it appears to the Council, might be secured by the following arrangement:—

The Imperial Government, in consideration of the receipt of the postage paid in England, would engage to deliver the Australian letters at Point de Galle on the first line, and at Panama on the second line. This would add in a very trifling degree to the amount of the subsidies already paid by the Home Government to the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and the Royal West Indian Mail Company, and would be productive, on the other hand, of a saving of the share of the subsidy now paid to the English and Australian Mail Company. In consideration, however, of the greater distance and cost of the conveyance of the Mail between Panama and Sydney, a proportion of the subsidy to be paid to the Company, or individuals working this line, might fairly be chargeable to the Home Government: this, however, would be a matter for future consideration.

8th. The Australian Colonies would, on their part, undertake to convey the Mails between Australia and Point de Galle and Panama, each Colony receiving, as at present, the postage charged upon its letters, and contributing to the expense of the undertaking in proportion to the number of letters sent from each.

9th. In order, however, to avoid the difficulties arising, or likely to arise, from having too many parties to these contracts, it would be advisable that the contract for the line via Ceylon should be made by the Government of Victoria, and that for the Panama line by the Government of New South Wales; the cost of the two lines being divided between the Australian Colonies, as before stated, in proportion to the number of letters dispatched from each.

10th. A special agreement should also be entered into with the Colony of New Zealand with reference to the amount of its contribution towards the Panama line.

11th. In conclusion, the Council consider it desirable that these views should be communicated to the Governments of the adjacent Colonies, and their concurrence therein invited; and advise accordingly that the Honorable the Colonial Secretary should adopt this step without delay.

EDWARD C. MEREWETHER,
Clerk of the Council.

MINUTE OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Resolutions adopted by the Legislative Assembly, on the 6th August, relative to the Steam Postal Communication with England, open up a very wide question, and one which is deserving of the most serious consideration of the Government.

The mode in which the Steam Postal Communication has been conducted, under the present contract with the English and Australian Steam Navigation Company, has been most unsatisfactory there is no doubt; but, in considering the question with reference to the future, and not to the past, it behoves the Government to consider whether the conditions of the contract were such as could be fulfilled with any degree of regularity. It may be said, it is true, that the practicability of the undertaking was a matter for the consideration of the parties who undertook to perform it, and who, it is to be supposed, proportioned the amount of their claim upon the Government to the character of the work they had to do: but in such a wide scheme as was grafted upon the original proposition it is evident that there were many risks to be run, upon which it was difficult, if not impossible, to calculate. The Government of New South Wales never contemplated the establishment of a separate and distinct line all the way from England to Australia. All the calculations were based upon the assumption that advantage would be taken of the existing line so far as that could be made available; and the difficulties which have been encountered are due, in great measure, to the attempt which has been made to establish an independent line from Australia to Suez with insufficient means.

I believe that the experience of the working of this line for the last 18 months, has shown that it is too long to admit of being worked with any probability of regularity by vessels sailing from Sydney making the voyage to Suez and returning at once. Such a voyage would take 89 days, and no time would be given for such ordinary repairs to machinery as must always be required from time to time. I am by no means certain that the work could be done with regularity were the vessels to sail from Suez and Sydney independently of each other—the voyage of each would then be from 44 to 46 days, and this is longer than a steamer can be fairly expected to work without a thorough inspection of her machinery. My opinion, therefore, is, that it would very much conduce to the regularity of the Mail Service to and from England and these Colonies, if the different stages or portions of the voyage were shortened, as might be done were Ceylon made the termination of the direct voyage from these Colonies, instead of Suez. Looking to the difficulties which the Company has had to encounter, I do not think it would be fair or reasonable to deal hardly with it, or to press for greater punctuality than is fairly attainable. The Colonies, however, have a right to demand that vessels in good order, and competent, under ordinary circumstances, to perform their work, should be alone employed, and I decidedly object to the employment of the "Victoria," which it is evident is not capable, looking to her power and to the state of her machinery, to make the voyage in any reasonable time.

Should, then, the present Company propose to continue its contract, or should it, as it has power to do with the assent of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, transfer the contract to any other Company, I should be disposed to recommend such reasonable concessions as would ensure regularity. Should, however, the Company fail altogether either in carrying on the Mail Service itself, or inducing other parties to undertake it, the whole question will then be open for consideration, and I will now proceed to consider the mode in which it would be desirable to deal with it.

I may premise that the advantages of a rapid, frequent, and regular steam communication with Europe, Asia, and America, are great enough to justify the payment, by the Colony, to persons who will undertake to provide the necessary means for this, of a much larger sum than can be possibly received by the Government in the shape of postage. I may also, I think, lay down as an axiom, or, at all events, as a fact deduced from experience, that it does not conduce to the satisfactory working of a contract to have too many persons or bodies parties to it; and that if the parties interested in the due performance of the work are, as is the case with the present Mail contract, at the two extremities of a line of some 12,000 miles in length, differences of opinion and heart-burnings are nearly certain to occur. The object of a frequent and regular communication with all the civilized parts of the globe would, as it seems to me, be best attained by maintaining a line to Ceylon, and from thence to England and India, on the one hand, and another to Panama, and from thence to England and North and South America, on the other; and should it be found, after a fair estimate of the cost of these lines, that that it would be advisable to carry them out by entering into contracts for their execution, it would be as well to avoid as much as possible the multiplication of parties to the contracts, and this it appears to me might be secured by the following arrangement:—The Imperial Government, in consideration of the receipt of the postage paid in England, would engage to deliver the Australian letters at Point de Galle on the first line, and at Panama on the second line. This would add in a very trifling degree to the amount of the subsidies already paid by the Home Government to the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and the Royal West Indian Mail Company, and would be productive, on the other hand, of a saving of the share of the subsidy now paid to the English and Australian Mail Company. In consideration, however, of the greater distance and cost of conveyance of the Mail between Panama and Sydney, a proportion of the subsidy to be paid to the Company, or individuals working this line, might fairly be chargeable to the Home Government: this, however, would be a matter for future consideration.

The Australian Colonies would on their part undertake to convey the Mails between Australia and Point de Galle and Panama, each Colony receiving, as at present, the postage charged upon its letters, and contributions to the expense of the undertaking in proportion to the number of letters sent from each.

In order, however, to avoid the difficulties arising, or likely to arise, from having too many parties to these contracts, it would be advisable that the contract for the line via Ceylon should be made by the Government of Victoria, and that for the Panama line by the Government of New South Wales; the cost of the two lines being divided between the Australian Colonies, as before stated, in proportion to the number of letters dispatched from each.

A special agreement should be entered into with the Colony of New Zealand with reference to the amount of its contribution towards the Panama line. Should these views coincide with those of the Members of the Executive Council, it would be desirable that a special reference should be made to the Governments of the adjacent Colonies, and their concurrence requested. Should they express their willingness to adopt the scheme thus sketched out, I shall then be in a position to communicate on the subject with the Secretary of State, and to seek the concurrence of the Imperial Government.

W. DENISON.

PROCEEDINGS of the Executive Council with respect to Steam Postal Communication with England.

Extract from Minute No. 58-34, dated 23rd August, 1858.

Present:—

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL,
THE HONORABLE THE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL,
THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL TREASURER,
THE HONORABLE THE SECRETARY FOR LANDS AND PUBLIC WORKS.

IN reference to the Proceedings of the Council at their two last meetings on the subject of Steam Postal Communication with England, His Excellency the Governor General now lays before the Council a Despatch which he has received by the "European" from the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, transmitting the copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Treasury, announcing the dissolution of the present contract with the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, and reporting the temporary arrangement which it is proposed to make for carrying on the Mail Service with Australia, until a new contract can be entered into of a more permanent character.

2. His Excellency at the same time lays before the Council a letter from Champion Wetton, Esquire, the Agent of the said Company, to a somewhat similar effect, but stating that an arrangement actually been entered into with the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company to carry on the service for six months, from the 1st July last.

3. In their previous deliberations upon this question, the possibility of a dissolution of the contract was not unforeseen by the Council; and the practical effect of the present communication is simply to place them in a position to take more decided action towards carrying out the views recorded at their last meeting, which were in fact based upon, and intended to meet, such a contingency as that which has now arisen.

4. There is one point, however, yet untouched by the Council, upon which it appears to the Governor General very desirable that some determination should be arrived at without delay, viz.,—whether the Government in making a contract for the conveyance of the Mails is bound, or indeed entitled, to mix up this question with that of the conveyance of passengers and goods; and in a Minute reviewing the whole subject, His Excellency now submits this point for the consideration of the Council, and also suggests, that in lieu of communicating the result of their deliberations to the adjacent Colonies in writing, as previously recommended, a special envoy should be accredited for the purpose, and dispatched to Melbourne with full instructions as to the course which he is to adopt, should the views of the Government of Victoria coincide with those of the Government of New South Wales, or be such as can be acceded to.

5. With regard to the first matter, the Council concur with His Excellency in thinking that all that the Government are called upon to consider is, how to get the Mails conveyed in the most rapid and effective manner, consistent with a proper economy; and they therefore record their deliberate opinion that in any new contract or contracts for the conveyance of the Mails, either by Suez or Panama, a Postal Service only should be provided for, as it would not, they believe, be wise on the part of the Government to make any stipulation as to the size of the vessels or the amount of accommodation. These are points for the determination of the contractors, who will, if they consider the passenger and goods traffic likely to prove remunerative, make the necessary arrangements for its accommodation.

6. With regard to the second matter referred to in His Excellency's Minute, the Council are disposed to adhere to their former recommendation,—that the general views of this Government upon the whole subject should be communicated to the adjacent Colonies by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary; and as the provisional arrangement for the conveyance of the Mails is to cease in six months from the 1st July, they are of opinion that no time should be lost in adopting this step, and such other decided measures for the establishment of a Postal Communication by Panama as may be deemed expedient.

What those measures should be the Council now proceed to consider.

7. In the first place, it is absolutely necessary that the Government should be in a position to carry out the specific arrangement for this line, recommended at their last meeting; and with this view they advise that His Excellency the Governor General should at once submit to the Legislature the whole of the propositions then agreed to, and invite the Assembly to appropriate, by an Act, any sum not exceeding £50,000 a year, for seven or ten years, for the purpose of initiating the said line.

8. In the next place, it is also necessary that the co-operation of the Imperial Government should be secured to the scheme; and the Council accordingly recommend that His Excellency should transmit to the Secretary of State, by next Mail, a Despatch fully explaining the views of the Government of this Colony upon the whole subject, and the steps already taken to carry out those views, which Despatch should be accompanied by a copy of the Bill above referred to, either as submitted to, or passed by the Assembly, as the state of the case will allow.

9. Finally, it appears to the Council very desirable that some steps should also be taken to ascertain on what terms contracts for the establishment of the line by Panama would be entered into; and to this end they advise that an advertisement be prepared inviting negotiation, and even calling for tenders for the performance of the service.

This advertisement should be forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with a request that if Her Majesty's Government are prepared to co-operate in the matter with the Government of this Colony, that the same may be extensively published in England and America.

EDWARD C. MEREWETHER,

Clerk of the Council.

MINUTE OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The termination of the contract with the European and Australian Mail Company places the Australian Colonies in a different position altogether from that in which they were last week, when I wrote my former Minute on the subject of Steam Postal Communication. It is now no longer a question of the maintenance, or non-maintenance, of a particular contract, but the whole question of the best mode of communicating with different parts of the world is virtually thrown open, and it will be for the Australian Colonies to consider whether, without sacrificing any of the advantages which they at present possess, or, at all events, any of those advantages for which the whole community should be called upon to pay, they might not secure for themselves a far more frequent communication with England and other parts of the world, at a cost but little greater than that which they have hitherto had to pay for a Monthly Mail.

In order to facilitate the consideration of this important subject, it would be as well to determine at once whether the Government in making a contract for the conveyance of the Mails is bound, or indeed entitled, to mix up this question with that of the conveyance of passengers and goods.

In my opinion, all that the Government is called upon to consider is, how to get the Mails conveyed in the most rapid and effective manner, consistent, of course, with a proper economy. I do not think that it would be wise on the part of the Government to make any stipulations as to the size of the vessels, the amount of accommodation, &c., &c.; these are points for the consideration of the contractors, who will, if they consider the passengers and goods traffic likely to prove remunerative, make the necessary arrangements for its accommodation. I have laid much stress upon the preliminary consideration of this question, for upon the view taken by the Governments of the different Australian Colonies with relation to it must depend very much the amount of expense which will be incurred, and the character of the contract or contracts which will have to be entered into. Should it be thought advisable to consider the comfort and convenience of passengers, then it may be necessary to maintain a distinct and separate line, at all events to Suez if not to England; but should the conveyance of the Mails be the sole matter for consideration, then all that we should have to determine would be, the speediest and best mode of conveying the Mails to and from such points as have, by existing arrangements, the benefit of steam communication directly with England. Upon the latter supposition, it appears to me that there are three courses open for adoption:—

1st. To combine, as at present, with the Imperial Government, leaving the arrangements to be made and the contracts entered into by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, as heretofore, under some distinct stipulations as to the amount of payment to be made by the Colonies, and the facilities to be given to their correspondence.

2nd. That the Colonies should submit to the Imperial Government a proposal that the Mail should be carried between England and Ceylon under existing arrangements with the Peninsular and Oriental Company, or under such agreement as may be made by the Postmaster General in England—while the Australian Colonies, either jointly or by some special arrangement among themselves, should contract for the conveyance of the Mails between Australia and Ceylon.

3rd. That provision should be made for a Monthly Mail viâ Panama as well as viâ Suez, an interval of fourteen days elapsing between the starting of these Mails.

The third scheme may be considered under two points of view.

It may be carried out by the Australian Colonies jointly, forming a part of one great scheme of Postal Communication with all parts of the world, or it may be a separate undertaking on the part of the Government of New South Wales; in either case the Imperial Government must be a party to the scheme, as the conveyance of the Mails to Suez and Panama, respectively, must be provided for under existing arrangements, or under other contracts entered into by the Postmaster General in England.

Should the whole of the Colonies agree to combine for the purpose of carrying out the scheme of a double communication with England, monthly, the expense will be a joint charge upon the revenue of the different Colonies, towards which each will contribute, according to the aggregate of letters dispatched annually by both routes. Should the Colony of New South Wales undertake to carry out the Panama line separately, on the refusal of

of the other Colonies to engage in the scheme, then it will be for the Government to charge upon the correspondence of the other Colonies a fair amount of postage, to cover the expense to which it would be subjected in maintaining the line. In order to avoid the difficulties which would be certain to arise were the several Governments to be parties to one contract, it would be as well, perhaps, that the Victoria Government should make the contract for the Ceylon line, and that of New South Wales for the Panama line. As the provisional arrangement for the conveyance of the Mails is to cease in six months from the 1st July, no time should be lost in communicating with the Governments of the other Australian Colonies, as soon as the Government of New South Wales has decided upon its course of action ; and the best course to adopt would probably be that of dispatching a special envoy to Melbourne, with instructions to communicate with the Government there ; and should their views coincide with those of the Government of New South Wales, or be such as can be acceded to, the envoy can then proceed to Tasmania, while the Government of Victoria can send one to South Australia, for the purpose of seeking the concurrence of those Colonies, to the Governors of whom I can, in the meantime, address Despatches, embodying the propositions which, after a careful consideration, we may here determine upon.

STEAM POSTAL COMMUNICATION.

(DESPATCHES RELATIVE TO.)

Ordered by the Legislative Assembly to be Printed, 21 October, 1858.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

No. 12.

Downing-street,

16 July, 1858.

SIR,

With reference to my Circular Despatch of the 16th ultimo, and to yours of the 1st of March last, (No. 58) relative to the conduct of Steam Communication with the Australian Colonies, I transmit herewith for your information the copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, which will place you in possession of the measures which have been taken by their Lordships for securing the regular continuance of the Mail Service pending the negotiations which are about to be entered on for effecting a contract with a new Company in place of the European and Australian Mail Company, the affairs of which are about to be wound up.

I have, &c.,

E. B. LYTTON.

GOVERNOR SIR W. DENISON, K. C. B.,

[Enclosure.]

Treasury Chambers,

23 June, 1858.

Sir,

I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to transmit herewith copy of their Lordships' Minute of the 23rd instant, and to request that you will move Sir Edward B. Lytton to cause the necessary communication to be made thereon to the Australian Colonies.

I am to state that, looking to the very pressing nature of the case, and to the vast importance of providing for the uninterrupted continuance of the Postal Communication with the Australian Colonies, their Lordships have not hesitated to conclude an arrangement which appeared to them, after the most earnest and careful deliberation, to be the best adapted to meet the peculiar exigency, and to carry out the spirit and intentions of the Treasury Minute of 27th of November, 1855, and their Lordships rely upon the readiness of the different Colonies interested to acquiesce in the arrangement.

I am, &c.,

G. A. HAMILTON.

Herman Merivale, Esq.,

&c., &c., &c.

Copy of Treasury Minute, dated 23 June, 1858.

My Lords have under their consideration a letter from the Colonial Office, of 28th May, transmitting copy of a Despatch from Sir W. Denison, the Governor of New South Wales, reporting another delay in the arrival of the English mail at Sydney, and commenting on the continued failure of the European and Australian Mail Company to perform their contract; also a copy of a resolution recently adopted at a meeting of the shareholders of the Company, appointing a liquidator for winding up the affairs of the Company; and the balance-sheet, signed by the auditor of the Company.

My Lords have also read the report of their solicitor, to whom the foregoing papers have been referred, together with a copy of the contract entered into between the Government and the Company, for the purpose of advising my Lords whether there were grounds for declaring the contract void, in case that course should be considered proper.

My Lords refer to the correspondence which has recently passed, relative to a proposal to modify to some extent the terms of the contract, with a view to enabling the Company to avail themselves of the valuable assistance of Mr. Cunard in carrying on the service.

However desirous my Lords might have been, by any reasonable modification of the terms and conditions of the present contract, to have assisted the Company in their endeavours to provide for the punctual and efficient performance of the service for the future, and thereby to remove the causes of dissatisfaction which exist in the Australian Colonies, yet, considering the present position of the Company, which has so materially changed since the negotiations above referred to were set on foot, my Lords are of opinion that they should not be justified in agreeing to any modification or extension of the contract with the Company.

My Lords have been most reluctant to adopt any course which might aggravate the difficulties of the Company, whose losses appear already to be so large; nevertheless, seeing that the Company is now, by the resolution of its shareholders, actually in course of liquidation and winding up, it appears to my Lords that the only course now open to them is to take immediate steps for determining the existing contract, and to call for public tenders for the establishment of an entirely new service.

As, however, a considerable time must elapse before a new postal service could be entered upon, and it is of the utmost importance that no interruption should take place in the monthly communication with the Australian Colonies, it is absolutely necessary that immediate measures should be adopted for securing the performance of this service provisionally, until permanent arrangements can be concluded.

My Lords have before them a proposal from the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company to work the Australian Mail Service for a period of six months, on the following conditions, viz. :—

The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company undertake to work the service for six months, from 1st July next, or for such longer period as shall be necessary to enable the ships to complete the voyages then actually commenced, on the conditions of the existing contract, subject to the following modifications, viz. :—

- 1st. Her Majesty's Government shall, in addition to the present amount of subsidy, guarantee the Company against loss during the working to an extent not exceeding £6000 per month. The amount of loss to be ascertained from the Company's books and accounts by persons appointed by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.
- 2nd. The amount which the European and Australian Company are liable to have deducted from the subsidy payable on the 30th June, 1858, under the articles of agreement, dated 30th November, 1857, in respect to the six voyages therein mentioned, only shall be retained by Her Majesty's Government.
- 3rd. In addition to the vessels now employed, and which are to be retained as long as required for the said service, the "Tasmanian" shall be sent out to assist on the line between Suez and Sydney.
- 4th. The penalties for over-time shall be at the rate of £100 per day, but shall not be enforced in any case where the delay has arisen from circumstances over which the Company had not and could not have any control.

My Lords are of opinion that no better means are at their disposal for accomplishing the very important object which they have in view, and they are, therefore, prepared to accept the offer of the Royal Mail Steam Company.

Transmit copy of the report of the solicitor, and of this Minute to the Secretary of the Admiralty, and request that he will lay the same before the Lords of the Admiralty, and move their Lordships to cause the necessary steps to be taken for determining forthwith the existing contract with the European and Australian Royal Mail Company, and for completing a proper agreement with the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company on the terms above stated.

State further that my Lords propose that public tenders shall be advertised for, at as early a period as possible, for the performance of a monthly communication with Australia for a period of five years. But before this step be taken my Lords would be glad to be favored with the views of the Board of Admiralty on the subject of the system of penalties which it is desirable should be laid down, and generally upon any points connected with the subject on which their Lordships may feel disposed to offer suggestions.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES to THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

(Circular.)

Downing-street,
16 August, 1858.

SIR,

With reference to my Despatch No. 12, of the 16th ultimo, relative to the conduct of the Postal Service with the Australian Colonies, I transmit for your information the copy of a further letter from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, from which you will perceive that the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company will be unable to continue the present temporary service beyond the six months for which their agreement was made, and stating that their Lordships are in communication with the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and other parties, to continue the temporary service for six months from the 1st of December next.

I have, &c.,

Treasury Chambers,
11 August, 1858.

Sir,

With reference to the letter of this Board of the 23rd June last, I am commanded by the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to acquaint you, for the information of Sir Edward B. Lytton, that their Lordships have received a notification from the Directors of the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company that it will not be in their power to continue the present temporary service for the Australian Mails beyond the six months for which their agreement was made, and that the period will expire, as regards the steam vessel to be sent from Sydney, on the 12th of November.

I am to state that their Lordships, in consequence of this intimation, are already in communication with the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Packet Company, and other parties, to take up the service for six months, from the 1st of December, before the expiration of which time their Lordships hope that the new contract for which they are about to instruct the Admiralty to invite tenders will have commenced.

I am to request that you will move the Secretary of State to cause a communication to the above effect to be made to Sir W. Denison, by the mail which leaves to-morrow, and informing him that by the next mail further particulars will be sent to him.

SIR,

With reference to previous correspondence, I have to acquaint you that the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury have intimated to me that the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company have undertaken to continue the Australian Mail Service for two months beyond the period specified in their first agreement; and that under this arrangement the last vessel will leave Sydney on the 12th of January next.

I have to add that the whole question of the Australian Mail Service is under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and that I hope that before long I may be able to announce the settlement of some fresh arrangements to secure an efficient postal communication between Australia and this country.

N.B.—When any sum has been secured both by a Lien on the Wool and by a Mortgage of the Sheep, the amount is included under the head of Mortgages only.

CHRISTOPHER ROLLESTON,
Registrar General.

Registrar General's Office,
Sydney, 30th January, 1857.

SIR, In transmitting to you the Returns required by your Circular of the 2nd November last, I do myself the honor to observe, that in the Return of the Number of Sheep and Amount of Money advanced under the Lien Act, it would appear as if an additional sum was advanced each subsequent year upon that mentioned to have been advanced the year previous. It must, however, be borne in mind, that as the Lien Act only authorises an advance to be made on the ensuing clip of Wool, the Liens are renewable every year, and that, consequently, the same Sheep and Money may be included in one year as that mentioned for the previous year. The same remark may also apply to the Mortgages of Sheep, Cattle, and Horses, as the Mortgages are generally made redeemable a twelvemonth from the date thereof.

In the Return of the Amount secured by Mortgages of real Estate, however, the repayment of the amount is, upon an average, required to be made every three or four years, and that, consequently, in the Return under this head, the same money may have been re-lent, and re-secured, three times during the period (ten years) included in this Return. Under these circumstances, I have not given a General Total of the Amount, as it might lead to a false conclusion.

In other respects, I beg to observe, the accompanying Returns are correct.

I have the honor to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,
WILLIAM CARTER,
Registrar General.

THE HONORABLE THE COLONIAL SECRETARY,
&c., &c., &c.

Sydney, 16 August, 1858.

SIR,

In presenting my second Annual Report on the progress of the system of Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, established in 1856, under the provisions of the Act of Council 19th Victoria, No. 34, I have great satisfaction in noticing the success which has attended its operation during the past year, affording, as it does, the strongest evidence of the favor with which the public are beginning to regard the measure, and of the growing appreciation of the advantages, social, political, legal, statistical, and sanitary, which have been found to attend the collection of vital statistics in every civilized country.

2. As a necessary branch of vital statistics, the importance of a Civil Registry of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, is every day becoming more apparent; indeed, the pursuit of statistical inquiries into every subject affecting human interests, whether individually or in a state of society, seems almost to have become a necessity of the age in which we live;—errors as to facts are thus daily exploded, and more just data are supplied for the judgment of the legislator, and for the right comprehension of the principles which should guide the proceedings of governments and societies, to the promotion of the physical and moral improvement of the people; and, besides this, the importance of having legal records easily accessible, to give security to the principles of inheritance, and to the legal succession to property, is very generally felt and acknowledged.

3. In illustration of the value of these statistics, and of the errors as to facts which their collection is calculated to remove, I may instance the fact that the Mortality Returns for the City of Sydney, enjoying, as it is believed, a most salubrious climate, and, as it is certain, one of the finest sanitary positions in the world, exhibited in the first year's registration a higher death rate than was found to prevail in London in a year of cholera. Is not this an important fact for us to know, and does it not demand the earnest attention of the philanthropist? How long might we have remained in ignorance of this sacrifice of human life, had not its existence been brought home to us with all the authority of stubborn facts? We are thus furnished with unimpeachable evidence of the existence of certain social evils amongst us, calling for remedy; and we are made to learn that, with all our advantages of climate and position, we cannot with impunity neglect those sanitary precautions which have been found to exercise so beneficial an influence on the public health in all populous cities. With these introductory remarks I will now proceed to make such comments on the Tables appended to this Report as may seem necessary for their elucidation.

4. For the sake of comparison, and for other useful objects, I have distributed the Registry Districts into ten divisions:—

- 1st. The "Northern," comprising the ten Registry Districts that will eventually form the new northern Colony.
- 2nd. The "North-eastern," embracing the fifteen Districts bordering the Coast from Point Danger to the Hunter.
- 3rd. The "North Midland," embracing the three Districts forming the table land of New England.
- 4th. The "North-western," embracing six Registry Districts, exclusively pastoral.

Appendix B.

- 5th. The "Metropolitan," embracing the City of Sydney and the seven Registry Districts within the limits of the Metropolitan Police District.
- 6th. The "East Midland," comprehending the thirteen extra Metropolitan Districts, from the Hunter southerly to Camden and Picton.
- 7th. The "West Midland," embracing nine Districts, (principally pastoral and mining), bearing westerly from the Blue Mountains.
- 8th. The "South-eastern," including the seven Districts bordering the Coast from Wollongong to Eden.
- 9th. The "South Midland," embracing ten Districts of considerable elevation, and enjoying a somewhat European climate, (partly pastoral and partly agricultural.)
- 10th. The "South-western," comprehending five Registry Districts, in the plain country, (entirely pastoral), extending to the extreme westerly confines of the Colony.

By this arrangement I have endeavored to secure a classification having reference to elevation and similarity of climate, as well as to similarity of pursuit. The relative healthfulness of the population in different parts of the Colony will thus be brought out, and the knowledge of diseases incident to locality, or to occupation, will be very largely promoted.

General results of Registration for the year.
Appendix A.

5. It will be seen that the total registrations in the year were—

12,503 Births,
2,902 Marriages,
4,846 Deaths.

The * Table at foot shows the rate per cent. which these figures bear to the population by the last Census in the different divisions of the Colony described in the last paragraph.—The increase of the population by the excess of births over deaths thus accounted for was 7,657, being at the rate of 2.636 per cent. on the estimated population at the beginning of the year. This is rather more than double the natural increase of the population exhibited by the Registration Returns for England and Wales. In 1855, the rate was 1.121 per cent., which is stated to have been greater than the annual increase of the two previous years. In the ten years, however, from 1831 to 1841, the rate of increase of the population was calculated at 1.551 per cent. annually.

Population of the Colony on 1st January,
1857.

6. In the postscript to my report on the Census of 1856, I estimated the population on the 1st of January, 1857, at 290,406; if we add to this the increase by Births over Deaths, 7,657, and further the net increase by Immigration during the year 10,959, we shall find that on the 1st January, 1858, the total population of the Colony should have been 309,022, that is an increase of 18,616 souls, or 6.410 per cent. in the year, viz. :—

On 1st January, 1857	290,406
Net Immigration	10,959
Excess of Births over Deaths	7,657
				309,022

The overland migration between this Colony and Victoria may affect this calculation materially, but to what extent, and whether by increasing or decreasing the numbers, there is no present means of ascertaining.

* The Registrations made in March, 1856, being few in number, are thrown into the next Quarter.

The development of the system of Registration is thus clearly exhibited; and it is a satisfaction to find that its introduction into this Colony has met with fewer obstructions, and consequently exhibits a much greater measure of success than was found to attend the operation of the law in the same period of time in the sister Colony of Victoria.

8. In accordance with the universal law of population, the births of males are found to preponderate slightly over the births of females. In both the years 1856 and 1857 the proportion was 100 males to 98 females; in Victoria, according to the last report of the Registrar General, the proportion for the year 1856-7 was 103 boys to 100 girls, whilst in England in 1855, the proportion was 104 boys to 100 girls.

Proportion of males to females.

9. In the Table at foot is exhibited the number of children born out of wedlock, the number of triplets, and the number of twins, registered.

Illegitimate births, twins and triplets.

The illegitimate children are as 2.335 per cent. to the total births;—this is very much below the average of England and Wales, but higher than is exhibited in the returns of Victoria.

In England and Wales the proportion varies very considerably from 1 per cent. in certain districts up to as high as 17 per cent. in others—the average being from 6 to 7 per cent. In Victoria the numbers registered bear a smaller proportion. In the years 1856-7 out of 15,937 births registered, 249 are recorded as being out of wedlock; that is 1·562 per cent.; but it is more than probable that neither in Sydney nor in Melbourne are the true number of illegitimate births arrived at.

Triplets,

Triplets are recorded in only two instances, one in Sydney of 3 male children, and one in the country of two boys and one girl.

Twins,

Twins are recorded in 113 instances,—100 being males and 125 females; 1 unrecorded, having been still-born.

Sec. XXII.

The effect of that provision of the Registration Act which requires a solemn declaration to be made by the parent or by some person present at the birth previous to registration, has been rather to obstruct than to facilitate the working of the system. If the object was to incite to a more exact observance of the time prescribed by the preceding section of the Act, it has altogether failed. To be effectual, the privilege should be attended with a small fine, say 5s., payable to the Registrar, as may be seen prescribed in the Registration Act of South Australia. As the law stands at present, double trouble is imposed upon the Registrar, whilst the neglect of the parent goes scotfree. Whenever the law is amended, I would strongly urge the adoption of the South Australian principle.

MARRIAGES.

11. The number of Marriages celebrated during the year was 2,902; of this number 94 were celebrated before the Registrars, namely,—4 in Sydney, 7 in the Hamlets, and 83 in the Country Districts. These figures prove, beyond a doubt, that the privilege conceded by the Marriage Act is very sparingly exercised where the church is in a position to offer her services; and there is no reason to suppose that in any single instance has the provision of the law which authorizes the celebration of marriages before the Registrar encouraged or been accessory to a clandestine marriage.

The numbers signing the Marriage Register a test of education.

12. In the Mother Country the number of persons signing the Marriage Registers with marks, as compared with those signing their names in full, is taken as a tolerably accurate test of the state of education; and the results of this test have been fully borne out by data obtained by means of the Census and other modes of information. The Registrar General of England observes in his last report, "there can be no doubt that the analysis of the relative numbers that sign the Marriage Registers with marks and that write their names in the National Returns throws more light on the permanent results of elementary education than any other test that has yet been devised." He further states: "It is consolatory to find that within the fifteen years 1841 to 1855, the proportion of men who write their names has increased from 67·3 to 70·5, and the proportion of women has increased to a still greater extent, namely, from 51·2 to 58·8 in 100." As compared with this statement the following Table bears favorable evidence as to the degree of elementary education amongst our up-grown population. It will be seen that the proportion signing their names in the Registers is 9 per cent. greater amongst the males, and 7 per cent. greater amongst the females in favor of New South Wales.

Proportion per cent. of Males and Females who signed the Marriage Register with marks, and who wrote their names during 1857.

13. As I stated in my first annual report the imperfect form of Certificate prescribed by the Marriage Act, precludes the possibility of making any further analysis of the Marriage Returns. In England many useful and interesting inquiries relative to the ages, social condition, &c., of the people are entered into, which the defective information conveyed in the Marriage certificate forbids me to attempt. The Marriage Registers are there regarded as a barometer of the social state and prospects of the people as the funds are of their financial state and prospects.

Imperfection of Form of Marriage Certificate.

14. There are two very glaring defects in the Marriage Law productive of great evils, to which it is my duty to direct attention,—the one is the absence of any sufficient check upon improper persons claiming to be placed on the Register as Ministers of Religion authorized to celebrate marriages; the other is, the absence of any proper check upon the celebration of irregular marriages. With regard to the first, some evidence of the applicant's being an ordinarily officiating Minister of Religion would be desirable; and, with regard to the second, it is absolutely essential that the Marriage Certificate should convey clear evidence on the face of it of either of the parties being under age.

Insufficiency of the law to check irregular marriages, &c.

Two or three instances of marriages irregularly celebrated in this respect have been brought under your notice, and I have reason to believe that the provision of the law which requires the written consent of the parent or guardian is not duly regarded. The evils incident to this neglect call for some prompt remedy, for there is no knowing what social derangements, and what unhappiness in families may be the result. The endorsement of consent on the certificate required by section 12 of the Act, has been found altogether useless as a check against the celebration of clandestine marriages, the mere neglect of the endorsement being sufficient to conceal the offence. In the appendix will be found a form of certificate which I would strongly recommend as a substitute for that which experience has proved to be so defective; this form is somewhat similar to that in use in the adjoining Colony, and is framed not only to meet the objection raised above, but to supply all the statistical information required to satisfy the form of register which has been adopted.

DEATHS.

15. The nosology, or classification of diseases adopted in the Mortality Tables, appended to this Report, is identical with that employed in the Mother Country, and in the Colony of Victoria. As a nosologist, Dr. Farr's reputation is not confined to England. The European celebrity he has attained in this branch of science would have rendered any departure from the system he has laid down, except upon the most conclusive evidence of its inapplicability to these Colonies, a most rash and presumptuous step. It is, moreover, of very great importance that the systems obtaining in the Australian Colonies should assimilate in every respect. It may be that diseases will be found in this country similar in their effects upon the human frame, but traceable to predisposing causes of a widely different character from those to which they owe their origin in European climates; but this hypothesis can only be satisfactorily proved by the carefully recorded observations of a long period of time; and one of the most important results to be obtained from registration is, the collection of facts leading to a more perfect knowledge of the predisposing causes, the proper treatment, and the relative fatality of diseases, from which may eventually be deduced by the scientific inquirer principles that will have a most important effect upon Medical Science in these Colonies, and tend to the diminution of human suffering throughout the world.

Reasons for adopting the nosology employed in the Tables.

16. It is with the view set forth in the last paragraph that I have sought the co-operation of the members of the Medical Profession, so that the facts recorded relating to the "causes of death" may command perfect confidence. Unprofessional testimony, upon which more than half the causes of death have hitherto been recorded, is obviously unsatisfactory. I therefore, in the latter part of last year, addressed a letter to the President of the Medical Board, a copy of which will be found in the Appendix, soliciting the intervention of the Board with a view to obtain a more general appreciation by the Profession of the object sought to be attained. Unfortunately, I failed to secure the assistance I asked from the Board, on the grounds that any action unconnected with its immediate functions might be misinterpreted.

Steps taken to secure reliable data as to "cause of death"

Marked N

In the Act for Registering Births, Deaths, and Marriages in South Australia, provision is made to secure a reliable record of the "cause of death." The clause runs as follows, viz.:—"Every Medical Practitioner who shall have been in attendance upon any person deceased, or who shall have examined the body, shall deliver to the nearest of Medical Practitioner to certify cause of death.

"kin,

"kin, occupier, or other person required by this Act to give information of the death to the District Registrar, a certificate under his hand, according to the form in the Schedule hereto annexed, marked G, setting forth to the best of his knowledge and belief the cause of death, which certificate such nearest of kin, occupier, or other person shall, when notifying the death, deliver to the District Registrar or Registrar General; and such Medical Practitioner neglecting to give such certificate when demanded, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds, nor less than two pounds." No reasonable objection presents itself to the embodiment of a similar provision into our law, and I trust, when any amendment is proposed, that this very important matter will not be overlooked.

1856 and 1857.

17. The total number of deaths registered during the year was 4,846, and the Table at foot will show the Quarterly Mortality as compared with the previous year. It will be seen that the Deaths registered in the second quarter of 1856 exceeded by 89 the deaths registered in 1857; but in the two latter quarters there was an increase of 81 and 87, respectively, or 168 deaths in the half-year.

* Registration commenced on 1st March, 1856.

I have reason to believe, owing to the precautions laid down by the law to secure the accurate registry of deaths, that but few, comparatively, escape registration; the return may, therefore, be received with great confidence as illustrative of the relative healthfulness of the population in the different quarters of the year.

18. Whilst (allowing for the increase of population) but little variation is seen in the total mortality during the years 1856 and 1857, a considerable increase is observable in the deaths of children under five years of age.

Deaths of Children under five years.

In 1856, the tables exhibited the proportions of 45·51 per cent. in the Metropolitan Districts, and 34·66 per cent. in the Country Districts. In 1857 the proportions were 48·89 per cent. in the Metropolitan Districts, and 36·82 per cent. in the Country Districts. There is observable, moreover, in the present tables a very remarkable difference in the rate of mortality of children under 5 years of age in the City as compared with the outlying Metropolitan Districts. It appears by the returns for the City, that a proportion of 44·49 per cent. only of the deaths were under 5 years of age; whilst the outlying districts show 58·14 per cent. under that age. I have not the leisure to trace this excessive death-rate of children in the Hamlets to its cause; it is a remarkable fact, but I must leave its solution to more minute inquirers. It will most probably be found that the number of children under 5 years of age bears a greater proportion to the total population than is to be found in the City.

On Infantile Mortality.

19. With the view of showing the rate of infantile mortality as compared with 1856, I have caused the Table following to be prepared. The first column for each year exhibits at a glance the relative proportion which the deaths under 1 year bear to the deaths under 5, as well as to the total deaths. The second column shows the proportion of deaths between the ages of 1 and 2 to the deaths under 5, and to the total deaths. These particulars, moreover, are given separately for Sydney, the Hamlets, and Country Districts, as well as in combination at the bottom of the Table. Taking the deaths under 1 year in the Sydney District, a decrease of 3·03 per cent. will be observed on the deaths under 5, but an increase of 1·14 on the total deaths of the year; and if we look to the deaths under 2 years, in the third column, we shall find a decrease of 2·75 per cent. on the deaths under 5, and an increase of 2·13 on the total deaths.

In the Hamlets we observe an increase of 2.26 per cent. in the deaths under 1 year Hamlets. on the deaths under 5; and of 2.99 on the total deaths. Again, in the deaths under 2 years we find an increase of 6.43 per cent. on the deaths under 5, and of 5.94 on the total deaths. In the Country Districts we find a decrease of 1.30 per cent. in the deaths under 1 year on Country Districts. the deaths under 5, but an increase of 0.94 on the total deaths; whilst in the third column, showing the deaths under 2 years, we see an increase of 0.21 per cent. on the deaths under 5, and of 1.90 on the total deaths. Combining the three classes of districts we see a decrease of 1.18 per cent. in the deaths under 1 year on the deaths under 5, but an increase of 1.15 on the total deaths; whilst in the deaths under 2 years we find an increase of 0.30 per cent. on the deaths under 5, and of 2.25 on the total deaths. It must be confessed that this analysis is not so satisfactory as could be wished; and I am sorry to say that I can offer no satisfactory reason for the excessive infantine mortality which the Table displays in the Hamlets or suburban districts as compared with the previous year.

20. At foot will be found a Comparative Statement* of the Quarterly Deaths registered in the City of Sydney during 1856 and 1857: the first quarter admits of no comparison; the second quarter shows a decrease of 89, or 24.45 per cent. in the mortality of 1857; the third quarter shows a difference of 2 in favor of 1857; whilst the last quarter shows an increase of 53 or 14.92 per cent. upon the mortality of the previous year. ‡ In the Monthly Health Report for October, 1857, an error occurs in the deaths of the corresponding month of the previous year. The deaths registered in October, 1856, were 103—not 90, as stated.

§ 9 of the unspecified deaths registered in October having occurred in previous months were omitted from the monthly tables to prevent the appearance of an excessive increase in the mortality in that particular month—viz., 3 males and 6 females.

21. The Table* at foot has been prepared to show the per centage of fatality of the several classes of diseases on the total deaths in the City of Sydney, in the Hamlets, and in the Country Districts respectively. It will be seen that the mortality from diseases of the zymotic class was greatly in excess in the Hamlets. That diseases of the nervous and respiratory systems and of the digestive organs greatly preponderated in the City and Hamlets, whilst deaths from old age and from external causes were by far the most numerous in the Country Districts; and I may state that in the class of "External causes" are included deaths by violence and intemperance, which, I am sorry to say, are intimately associated with each other in the Returns, and form by far the larger share of the total deaths of that class.

The Abstracts in the Appendix marked H, I, J, exhibit in detail the Monthly Mortality classified Nosologically, according to sex. The Registering Clerk found so much difficulty in clearly ascertaining the Wards in which deaths occurred, and in many instances entire ignorance of the locality, that the tabulation I proposed to make by Wards, in the City of Sydney, has been found impracticable for the year under consideration, which I much regret.

22. It is necessary that I should again refer to a subject alluded to in my first Annual Report, namely, the transference of the duties of Registrar for the City of Sydney to one or more Deputy Registrars. The fourth section of the Act imposes the duty on the Registrar General, and, therefore, an application to Parliament will be necessary to remove it from his shoulders. I am bound, however, to point out that the change will involve an increased expenditure of not less than £500 per annum, supposing the persons appointed are paid on the same terms as the Country Registrars. Irrespective of the great interruption to the clerical duties of the office, the central establishment does not offer those facilities for registration in the remoter parts of the city which it is extremely desirable, if not necessary, for the accurate registration of births and deaths, should be afforded to the public. There is reason to think that many births go unregistered, which the exertions and supervision of local registrars would secure. I am, therefore, of opinion that the sooner this change is carried out the better.

21. As there is still much misapprehension as to the authority upon which the form of registration in cases of births, deaths, and marriages has been adopted—a misapprehension which it is desirable should be removed—I will again call attention to what has been said in former reports, namely, that the inquiries are made on legally constituted authority, and are not the emanations of a personal curiosity. If objectors will take the trouble to refer to the Schedules D and E to the Registration Act, they will discover a very palpable oversight on the part of the officer who drew the Bill, and on the part of the Legislature which passed it, they will discover that Marine Schedules were by mistake substituted in the place of those intended for the General Registry of the Colony. It became my duty then to find legal means for remedying the error that had thus occurred, and fortunately the 6th section of the Act provided me with the means of meeting the difficulty. In accordance with the authority therein contained, the forms now in use were, with the approval of the Governor and Executive Council, proclaimed by notice in the Government Gazette of the 28th February, 1856, and were thereupon made as binding on all persons affected thereby as if they formed part of the Act. It will be seen, moreover, that the particulars required to be furnished are exactly those required in Schedules D and E, substituting, of course, the name of the place for the latitude and longitude. I trust Sir, after this explanation, we shall hear no more as to the illegality of the form of registration adopted. It might be desirable, however, in order to place the question out of the reach of cavil, whenever any amendments are made in the law, to give attention to this point, and I trust that whenever this is done the integrity of the system which it has been my endeavour to carry out, and which has met with so large a measure of success, will not be violated to meet the objections of the few whose prejudices it must be left to time to remove.

Explanation as to the Forms of Registration adopted.

19 Vic., No. 34.

Enlightened persons will not object to the apparent exposure of their family history when satisfied that the only object is the promotion of the public welfare, nor will they think inquiries impertinent, which although seemingly minute and unimportant, have been recommended by the united experience of the ablest statisticians in Europe as of great value in proof of questions regarding descent, and to determine the principles of inheritance, as well as for other useful statistical purposes. The fact that the individuality of the particulars is lost in the mass of many thousand entries annually made; and the further fact, which may be ascertained by any person sceptical on this matter who will take the trouble to pay a visit to the office, that already, at this date, upwards of 50,000 persons have supplied the information sought to be obtained, altogether preclude the idea of impertinence which some persons seem to entertain.

22. I have on other occasions directed attention to the defective state of the Baptismal and Burial Returns transferred to this department from the Supreme Court. As almost every week produces some fresh instance of the insufficiency or inaccuracy of the Returns furnished by the Clergy, it may be desirable that I should give an example to show how utterly inadequate to the proof of inheritance the former system of registration has been. Inquiry was made about three months ago for the record of the burial of one Harriet Ada Cook, who died in Sydney on the 12th April, 1854. Search being made, the particulars given at foot* were found in the Register. A question of property to which his wife was next in succession made it of the greatest importance to the inquirer that he should substantiate the fact of the death of her elder sister, a fact which the records in question afforded the most ready and simple, if not the only means of proving. The inquirer's disappointment may readily be supposed on being furnished with a certificate of the entry as it appears in the Register. It will be seen that neither the Christian name nor the sex of the deceased appears on the record, or anything indeed to identify the person sought after. By what process or at what expense the inquirer may be able to prove a fact so important to his interests, or whether he can succeed in proving the fact at all, I am not in a position to say. If this were the only case it would furnish a powerful argument for the establishment of a Civil Registry, but when daily experience shows that this is not a solitary instance the argument becomes irresistible.

Relative to Messrs. M'Donnell and Dodwell's services.

23. Before I conclude my Report it is proper that I should make favorable mention of the services of two gentlemen employed in this branch of the department. Mr. M'Donnell, the senior Clerk and Accountant, has, by his untiring zeal in the discharge of his duties, and by his general intelligence, contributed largely to the successful carrying out of the new system of Registration; and to Mr. Dodwell I am much indebted for the valuable assistance he has afforded me in the important sphere of duty assigned to him. I commend both these gentlemen to the favorable notice of the Government.

In submitting these returns, I would take leave to deprecate the notion which some persons may entertain, that they are a mere array of figures elaborately and ingeniously combined in columns and tables, but barren of useful results. They may present no charms to the general reader, but they are fraught with important and useful information. They may be looked upon as the opening folios of our national ledger, exhibiting at one view the profit and loss accruing upon the years transactions. By their aid we are advancing in the knowledge of the social laws by which we are governed, and are preparing to counteract the evil tendencies by which we are surrounded. Future generations will appreciate our labors, and applaud the wisdom and enlightenment displayed by their progenitors, in storing up for their benefit a mass of information which cannot fail of acquiring increased interest and usefulness as every year adds to its collection; inasmuch as it will enable them to draw comparisons, and to deduce conclusions, that may exercise a most important influence upon their well-being and happiness.

I have, &c.,

CHRIS. ROLLESTON,
Registrar General.

Registrar General's Office,
Sydney, 9 October, 1857.

Sir,

15th Victoria,
No. 31.

With the view of rendering the Tables of Mortality, prepared under the provisions of the Registration Act, as accurate as possible, I do myself the honor to solicit the support and co-operation of the Medical Board of New South Wales.

2. The value of these Tables to the diagnosis of disease, depends mainly upon the precision with which the "Cause of Death" is recorded; and although I have to acknowledge with thankfulness the support which has been accorded to me in this branch of my duty by many members of the profession, there are still very many cases of mortality tabulated solely on the information of unprofessional persons.

3. It is obvious that as an aid to medical science every case so recorded must, to a certain extent, impair the usefulness of the Tables; I am, therefore, anxious to have the influence and weight which the recommendation of your Board will carry with it, to induce general co-operation in the very important object of their design, namely,—the promotion of practical medicine, and the diminution of human suffering in New South Wales.

4. Appended to the Circular, herewith transmitted, (a copy of which was addressed by me, in March, 1856, to every member of the profession in the Colony,) is a Nosological Table, prepared from that in use in England, compiled by Mr. Farr, the most eminent authority on the subject. It is upon this system of nosology that I have endeavoured to frame the Tables for New South Wales, and I am induced to believe that a recommendation as to its value and importance published authoritatively by the Medical Board will be the means of obtaining a much more general appreciation of the system, and of promoting a much more hearty co-operation amongst the profession in carrying it out, than my own unsupported appeal has been the means of securing.

5. Books of Certificates of the "Cause of Death" have been supplied to the medical men in every District of the Colony, and may always be had on application to this office, or to any of the District Registrars.

I have, &c.,

CHRIS. ROLLESTON,
Registrar General.

THE HONORABLE

JAMES MITCHELL, Esq.,
President Medical Board.9, Castlereagh-street, North,
22 October, 1857.

Sir,

In reply to your letter addressed to the President of the Medical Board, I have been desired to inform you that a special meeting was held to-day, to consider if there was any way in which the Board could assist in the very desirable object upon which you wrote.

The opinion of the members present was, that the Act under which they were appointed (2 Vic. chap. 22,) so clearly defined the Board's province, that it had no power to publish anything unconnected with its immediate functions.

I have, &c.,

J. BURGON,
Secretary N. S. W. Medical Board.

TRANSFER OF REGISTERS OF BISHOP'S REGISTRAR TO OFFICE OF REGISTRAR GENERAL.

No. 1.

THE REGISTRAR GENERAL to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Registrar General's Office,
Sydney, 20 January, 1857.*

SIR,

16 Dec., 1856. I do myself the honor to transmit, for the consideration of the Government, a letter addressed to me by the Registrar of this Diocese, accompanied by a Minute, on the subject of the Church of England Registers now in the possession of the Bishop's Secretary, and their proposed transfer to this Department.

2. As I thought before submitting this Minute it was desirable to have some distinct proposition as to the amount of remuneration which Mr. James might consider himself entitled to, I requested Mr. Norton to make such proposition,—which will be found in his letter dated 15th instant, also transmitted.

3. I have seen the Registers in question. They appear to be very carefully preserved and accurately indexed, and would, undoubtedly, be a great acquisition to the Records of this Office.

I have, &c.,

CHRIS. ROLLESTON.

THE HONORABLE

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

MINUTE of the Colonial Secretary.

This is a matter of serious consideration, and Mr. Rolleston should report more fully upon the subject, whether the Registers are indispensably necessary, and if so, whether, considering the requirements of the laws under which they have been kept up, the claim of Mr. James is one entitled to be complied with.

H. W. P.
24 January, 1857.

[Enclosure 1 in No. 1.]

Sydney, 16 December, 1856.

Sir,

In consequence of the repeal of the Act 6 Geo. IV., No. 21, which provided for the Registry of Marriages, Births, and Deaths celebrated by the Church of England, and the establishment of the Registrar General's Department, I have the honor to transmit you a Minute of the circumstances under which those Registers were arranged, indexed, and kept by Mr. Henry Kerrison James, the Bishop's Secretary and my Deputy-Registrar.

I have, &c.,

J. NORTON.

To Charles Rolleston, Esq.,
Registrar General.

[Sub-Enclosure in No. 1.]

MINUTE.

By the Act 6 Geo. IV., No. 21, (1826), it was enacted, that Returns of the Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials registered by the Church of England, should be furnished, annually, to the Registrar of the Diocese, who was charged with their preservation, and was required to make Indices of the same for public reference and examination, upon payment of certain fees.

From the passing of this Act until the year 1834, the duties imposed upon the Registrar were (according to the design and intention of the then Legislature) performed under his direction by the Clerks of the Church and School Corporation.

On the dissolution of the Corporation, in the year 1834, an establishment, consisting of a Clerk and Messenger, was formed to carry on the requirements of the enactment. This establishment was maintained at the public expense, and continued until the return of Bishop Broughton from England, in the year 1836.

On the return of the Bishop the Government gave up the establishment, without providing for the performance of the duties imposed by the Statute on the Registrar. The like duties on behalf of other religious denominations were, by Legislative enactments, performed in the Office of the Supreme Court of the Colony.

It

It was, of course, impossible for the Bishop's Registrar, at his expense, to provide an office, and clerical labor and attendance for the accommodation and service of the public, the only emolument derived from the registration being a small and very inadequate fee for occasional searches and certificates.

From the abolition of the Government Office, in 1836, to the present time (upwards of twenty years), the important duties referred to were performed by the Bishop's Secretary, who, at great personal inconvenience and expense, collected the Registers, wrote up the Indices, and continued to perform the duties contemplated by the Act. The records are now extremely voluminous, and afford the only satisfactory evidence of the matters recorded, from the foundation of the Colony.

The Registers commence with the foundation of the Colony, in the year 1787, extending over a period of sixty-eight years. They include upwards of 150,000 records, the Indices alone filling eleven volumes.

The Act of 6 Geo. IV., No. 21, having been repealed by the Act 19 Vic., No. 30, which substituted a general registration for the Colony, I feel it my duty to draw the attention of Government to the foregoing facts.

As the Registers of the other religious communions have been transferred from the Supreme Court to the Department of the Registrar General, it concerns the public interest that those of the Church of England, numerically by far the most considerable, should be transferred to the same office.

To effect this object it will, of course, be necessary to satisfy the equitable claims of the gentleman to whose great diligence the public is indebted for the preservation of the documents now in his custody.

It may be proper to observe, that whilst the saving to the Government for twenty years in salaries, and other expenses, cannot have been less than £3,000, the utmost amount of fees received under the Act has not exceeded £500,—a sum totally inadequate to meet the expenses actually incurred by the Bishop's Secretary.

J. NORTON,
Registrar.

16 December, 1856.

[Enclosure 2 in No. 1.]

Sydney, 15 January, 1857.

Sir,

I had the honor to receive your letter of the 17th ultimo, in reply to mine of the 16th, enclosing a statement of the circumstances under which the Registers of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, by the Church of England, had been kept up and preserved from the year 1836, and pointing out the importance of their transfer to the department placed under your control.

In compliance with your request, I now state the amount of compensation I think Mr. James entitled to receive for his services, and which I trust that the Government, in consideration of the great public value of these Registers, and of the probable augmentation of the income derivable by your department from their possession, will readily assent to.

I believe the expense actually incurred by Mr. James on account of this service to have been not less than £1,800. When the value of his own services is taken into consideration, added to the fact, well known to me, that during a very considerable part of the period that he sustained this outlay he was paying interest at the rate of ten per cent., I trust that the sum of £3,000 will not be deemed an unreasonable compensation.

I cannot doubt the desire of the Government to satisfy the claims of a gentleman who, at so much personal inconvenience, performed an act of the greatest importance to the interests of the Colony, especially as the amount at which he is willing to surrender the Records in question will, in all probability, become a profitable investment of the sum required for their acquisition.

I have, &c.,
J. NORTON.

Chas. Rolleston, Esq.,
Registrar General,

[Enclosure 3 in No. 1.]

ACT 6 GEO. IV., No. 21.—(1 Nov., 1825.)

Provided for the keeping of the Registers, "according to the rites of the Church of England, or as hereinafter mentioned."

Directed Annual Returns to be made "to Registrar of the Archdeacon's Court."

Registrar to make Indexes.

Did not require Registrar to circulate forms, nor to take any proceedings for collecting Returns.

Had not both these been done with punctuality and diligence, Returns would not have been obtained, and of course Indexes could not have been made. No penalty for neglecting to make Indexes.

Penalty on Clergyman for not making Returns, "20 Spanish Dollars: penalties applied in the same manner as in and by a certain Act of the Governor in Council, intituled,

"An

"An Act to prevent the harbouring of runaway Convicts, and the encouragement of Convicts "tippling or gambling," is directed and prescribed."

It is obvious, therefore, that this imperfect and obsolete enactment must have remained inoperative, had not its provisions been voluntarily carried out; and it is understood that the Acts affecting other denominations have for the like reason signally failed.

This Act (6 Geo. IV., No. 21)—passed twenty-two years ago—was intended to apply to all the then denominations, but practically it applied to the then exclusively endowed and virtually established Church of England.

No Returns were ever made by other denominations to the Archdeacon's Registrar.

The Returns of the Church of England, thus nominally made to the "Registrar," were at the passing of the Act intended to be, and, in fact, were made for eight years to the Office of the Church and School Corporation, then an Ecclesiastical Establishment, maintained and supported by Government, and the duties appointed by the Act were performed under the cognizance merely of the Registrar, and free of all expense to him.

This Corporation was finally abolished in 1834, and the Officers discharged; but a Clerk was retained (as Clerk to the Archdeacon) specially to keep up the Registers.

In 1834 the Archdeacon went to England, and returned as Bishop in 1836, during which time the Government still continued the expenses of his office.

On his arrival, as Bishop, the Government discontinued this office altogether, and discharged the Clerk with a gratuity.

There was then no provision whatever made for the discharge of the duties required by the Act, and the same must have fallen into desuetude had not the Bishop's Secretary (heretofore the Archdeacon's Clerk), in anticipation of future recompense, under a conviction of the indispensableness and public value of the service, assumed the functions assigned to the Registrar, and carried out, at his own private cost, the intentions of the Statute.

In 1834 (the year of abolition of the Church Corporation) the Act 5 William IV., No. 2, was passed, regulating the Registers of the Presbyterians and Roman Catholics, requiring their Returns to be made to the Supreme Court.

In 1839 the Act 3 Vic., No. 7, was passed, being a corresponding enactment for the Wesleyans.

Returns to be made to the Supreme Court.

In the same year the Act 3 Vic., No. 23, was passed, imposing penalties on Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, and Wesleyans for non-transmission of Returns to Supreme Court.

Clause 2 provided for Church of England Returns to be sent to Bishop's Registrar, instead of Archdeacon's Registrar, but otherwise the Act 6 Geo. IV., No. 21, was unaltered.

In 1840 the Act 4 Vic., No. 14, was passed, being a corresponding enactment for the Independents.

Returns to be made to the Supreme Court.

All these Acts have been repealed by the new Marriage Act, 19 Victoria, No. 30.

The Registers of the other denominations filed in the Supreme Court, under the Acts before recited, having been compiled and indexed at the Government expense, and being therefore public property, have been transferred by Act of Parliament to the Office of the Registrar General.

No provision has been made respecting the Church of England Registers, which for twenty years have been maintained and kept at the private charge of the Bishop's Secretary, and these records are still in his possession.

No. 2.

THE REGISTRAR GENERAL to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Registrar General's Office,

Sydney, 2 February, 1857.

SIR,

In accordance with your Minute upon the margin of my letter of 20th instant, requesting me to report more fully upon the subject of the transfer of the Church of England Registers to this Department, and of Mr. James' claim to compensation for his services in keeping them up, at his own cost, for the last 20 years, I do myself the honor to report as follows:—

£3,000.

2. It appears to me to be indispensably necessary that these Registers should be secured for the use of the public; for, although they appertain exclusively to the Church of England, they cannot but concern, in a very large degree, the interests of the community generally, as establishing legitimacy, and affecting the titles and inheritance of the great bulk of the real estates in the Colony; and it can hardly be doubted that the Office of the Registrar General is the proper repository for them. In consequence of the repeal of the Acts 6 George IV., No. 21, and 3 Victoria, No. 23, no provision whatever exists, either for the preservation of these Records, or for the use of them by the public; and although I am informed that the Bishop's Deputy-Registrar continues to allow the public the use of his office, office, yet as this is not a public department, the accommodation may at any time be discontinued. It may also be questioned whether the certificates granted by him, not coming within the operation of the present Registry Act, are, like those issued by the Registrar General, cognizable in Courts of Law; whilst it will be readily admitted that the existence of two places of search must subject parties to great expense.

3. The circumstances under which the claim for compensation arises, as related by the Bishop's Registrar, are these. The Act 6 George IV., No. 21, (1826), provided for Annual Returns of the Births, Deaths, and Marriages in the Church of England, to be made to the Archdeacon's Registrar, who was charged with certain duties concerning them. It appears that at this time, and up to the year 1836, the Government defrayed the expense of clerical assistance, and provided an office for the performance of these duties. That when the Archdeacon became Bishop of Australia this office was discontinued, and a declaratory Act was passed two years afterwards, providing that the duties prescribed by the Act 6 George IV., No. 21, as pertaining to the Archdeacon's Registrar, should henceforth devolve upon the Registrar of the Bishop. These duties are thus stated—"That as often as copies of such registers and lists are transmitted to the Registrar aforesaid, they shall be safely kept from damage, and be so arranged as to be resorted to when required; and one general alphabetical list shall be made in books of the names of all persons and places therein, which shall be open to the public search at reasonable times." There was, however, no penalty for the non-performance of these duties, and Mr. Norton states in his minute,—"It was, of course, impossible for the Bishop's Registrar, at his expense, to provide an office and clerical labor and attendance for the accommodation and service of the public, the only emolument derived from the registration being a small and very inadequate fee for occasional searches and certificates." From this it may be inferred, that had not these duties been executed by the Deputy-Registrar they must necessarily have been unperformed.

4. Assuming, then, that when the Government assistance was withdrawn it was not compulsory upon the Registrar, who was a private officer of the Bishop, to continue his services to the public, involving the permanent employment of a clerk, and that the saving to the Government in salaries and other expenses has been as stated in Mr. Norton's minute; ^{£3,000,} assuming also the expenses actually incurred by Mr. James, and the inadequacy of the fees ^{£1,800,} ^{£500.} received by him, to be correctly stated, and considering the intrinsic importance of these records, and the satisfactory manner in which they have been kept up by the Deputy-Registrar, I am of opinion that the remuneration estimated for the period of twenty years is by no means unreasonable, more especially as they would immediately be a source of emolument to this office.

5. There appear to me, however, to be legal considerations involved in the question. Assuming these Registers to be public documents, of which there can be little doubt, the following points arise:—

- 1st. Is the Deputy-Registrar authorised to transfer, and am I authorised to receive, these Registers, without Legislative sanction?
- 2nd. What force in a Court of Law would certificates granted by the Registrar General upon these records have?

It seems to me, that without the authority of a Parliamentary enactment I could not receive the documents; and that certificates granted upon them would not have co-ordinate force with copies of the registers given by virtue of section 9 of the Registration Act, 19 Vic., No. 34. I would, therefore, respectfully suggest, that the Bill now before Parliament "for transferring to the Registrar General the duties of the Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court as Registrar of Deeds and other Instruments," may be amended to comprehend these Registers, and to give certificates granted upon them equal validity with those issued in pursuance of the 19th section of the Act aforesaid.

I have, &c.,

CHRIS. ROLLESTON,

Registrar General.

THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

SIR,

I am directed to transmit to you the accompanying correspondence relating to a claim preferred by Mr. James, Secretary to the Bishop of Sydney and Deputy-Registrar of the Diocese, to compensation for keeping the Registers of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, in the Church of England, upon their transfer, should this be deemed expedient, to the Department of the Registrar General, and to request that you will bring the same under the notice of the Crown Law Officers, for their opinion on the legal bearing of the question, that is,—Whether the Registers referred to are such as may be taken to be public property, and the measures which may be necessary or expedient for rendering them available to the community as such?

2. I am to add, that this case is referred direct, instead of being submitted through the Civil Crown Solicitor, as one of an exceptional character, on which the special report of the Law Officers may be considered desirable.

SIR,

The Act 6 George IV., No. 21, relating to the Registers of Baptisms, Marriages, and Deaths of the Church of England, having been repealed by the Act 19 Victoria, No. 30, without any provision having been made respecting the future,—we beg leave to draw the attention of the Government to the urgent necessity for adopting measures for securing these important records for the use of the public.

Their value, as affecting the inheritance and legal transmission of a vast amount of real estate in this Colony for all generations, we consider to be incalculable. We are informed that they extend over a period of seventy years, to the earliest Colonial date, including many thousand entries, systematically arranged and alphabetically indexed, and are, we believe, in good preservation. Our respective firms can confidently testify to the great advantage and accommodation they afford to the community.

MR. NORTON to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Sydney 9 July, 1857.

SIR,

I forward herewith a Memorial from the Bishop's Secretary relating to the transfer to the General Registry of the Church of England Returns of Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials, and of the Indexes compiled by him.

In this Memorial the Bishop's Secretary prefers a claim for his past services respecting these Records.

I have already stated my views upon the subject of this claim in a letter to the Registrar General, dated 16th December, 1856; and I now desire to repeat my opinion that it is founded in justice.

THE HONORABLE
 THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

I have &c.,
 J. NORTON.

[Enclosure

[Enclosure in No. 8.]

To His Excellency the Governor General, and the Honorable the Executive Council of New South Wales.

The humble Memorial of Henry Kerrison James, Secretary to the Lord Bishop of Sydney,— SHEWETH AS FOLLOWS:—

1. Your Memorialist is informed that a Bill will be introduced by the Government in the ensuing Session for completing the system of general registration, by transferring to the Registrar General the Returns of Baptisms, Marriages, and Burials, relating to the United Church of England and Ireland in this Colony.
2. These Returns are now in the possession of your Memorialist, and have been accumulating under his custody and care for more than 20 years.
3. During that period your Memorialist has bestowed great pains and attention upon the classification and indexing of these valuable documents, with a view to rendering them most easy of reference, and useful to the public.
4. The Returns commence with the foundation of the Colony in 1787, and now comprise above 150,000 records; the indexes alone filling eleven demy volumes.
5. The duties assigned by the Act 6 Geo. IV., No. 21, to the Registrar of the Archdeacon of New South Wales, were, as contemplated by the Legislature, performed under his direction by the clerks of the Church and School Corporation (then a Government Establishment) until 1834, when, upon the abolition of that department, a clerk and messenger were provided, at the Government expense, to carry out the requirements of the Act, and this continued till 1836.
6. The Archdeacon having gone to England in 1834, returned as Bishop in 1836; immediately after which the last mentioned arrangement altogether ceased.
7. In 1839, the Act of Council, 3 Vic. No. 23, provided that the duties which had been performed by the Archdeacon's Registrar should devolve upon the Bishop's Registrar; but it could not be expected that he should provide for the discharge of these duties at his own expense, and his only legal emolument was the extremely inadequate fee for occasional searches and certificates.
8. Upon the abolition of the Government Office in 1836, your Memorialist personally discharged the whole of the duties, and has continued to do so, and to keep the indexes complete up to the present time.
9. These Records are of inestimable public value, affording information upon questions of legitimacy, relationship, and descent, and deeply affecting the titles and inheritance of the greater portion of the landed property of the Colony; notwithstanding which, your Memorialist submits that they are not, nor have ever yet been, public property.
10. By the Act 19 Vic. No. 30, the Acts of Council 6 Geo. IV. No. 21 and 3 Vic. No. 23 were repealed; a General Registry Office was established, to which the Registers of all other religious denominations in the Colony were transferred, and by the Act of last Session, 20 Vic. No. 27, all the Registers of the Supreme Court were also transferred to the same department.
11. It is no doubt of great importance that the Church of England Returns, which are the subject of the Bill now in contemplation, should be transferred to the Registrar General, in their present complete state of arrangement and classification, together with the indexes compiled by your Memorialist.
12. Your Memorialist annexes a calculation, marked A, of his actual outlay upon this work during the last 20 years, amounting to nearly £3,000, and an Estimate, marked B, of the fees received on account of the same, according to the scale fixed by the Act, which have not during the same period exceeded the sum of £500.
13. Your Memorialist respectfully refers your Excellency and the Executive Council to letters from the Registrar General, dated respectively 20th January and 2nd February, 1857, accompanied by letters to him from the Bishop's Registrar, dated respectively the 16th December, 1856, and 15th January, 1857, and also a letter dated 25th June, 1857, from a large body of the Solicitors in Sydney, all addressed to the Honorable the Colonial Secretary.

Your Memorialist humbly prays as follows:—

That your Excellency and the Executive Council will recognize and affirm the claim of your Memorialist to pecuniary compensation for his past services, and that upon the transfer of the records to the General Registry, a grant may be awarded to your Memorialist of such an amount as may be considered just and reasonable.

And your Memorialist will ever pray, &c.

H. KERRISON JAMES.

ESTIMATE of Fees received for Searches and Certificates according to the provisions of the Act 6 Geo. IV., No. 21, Sec. 6.

STATEMENT by Mr. LAWRENCE CURR, Chief Clerk in Mr. James' Office.

I have officiated as clerk to Mr. James for the last twelve years, viz., since 1845, with the exception of two temporary absences—during which time Mr. James engaged other assistants. During this period I have been chiefly employed, under Mr. James' directions, in compiling and indexing the Returns of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, attending upon persons applying for Searches and Certificates, and in the performance of other duties incidental to keeping up the books. I at first received a salary of one pound per week; soon after one pound five shillings per week; for a long period one pound ten shillings per week; and for the last three years (nearly) I have received four pounds per week, or two hundred and eight pounds per annum.

Since the first of January, 1855, an exact account has been kept of the fees received for Searches and Certificates, a Schedule of which is annexed.

Prior to that date the fees were comparatively inconsiderable, and no regular account of them was kept.

Mr. James has estimated the fees received for the antecedent years, thus:—

From 1837 to 1841, inclusive, at £15 per annum...	£75	0	0
" 1842 " 1846, " 20 " ..	100	0	0
" 1852 " 1854, (3 years) 35 " ..	105	0	0

From my personal knowledge and observation during the period I have been in the office, I can confidently state that the foregoing is a fair and equitable estimate, and my belief is, that it is rather over than under the amount actually received.

I am ready to make a solemn affirmation of the truth of the above statement, if required.

Sir,

In returning you the enclosed papers, from Mr. James, Secretary to the Lord Bishop of Sydney, respecting the transfer of the Church of England Registers to the Registrar General, I am directed to state, that the documents are of public utility, and of the nature of public documents, but the Attorney General does not think that they have been prepared, compiled, abstracted, and preserved, in such manner as to entitle the public to take them from Mr. James, without compensation.

2. A Bill has been prepared for the double purpose of transferring their custody to the Registrar General, and of compensating Mr. James, whose claim to £2,500, or thereabouts, seems well established.

21st VICTORIA, 1857.

DRAFT BILL

Intituled—An Act for transferring to the Registrar General all Returns of Marriages Baptisms and Burials relating to the United Church of England and Ireland, and compensating the present Officer.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to transfer to the General Registry for New South Wales all Returns Registers and Indexes of Marriages Baptisms and Burials relating to the United Church of England and Ireland within the Colony and to compensate the Officer now in charge thereof Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly of New South Wales in Parliament assembled and by the authority of the same as follows:—

Church of England Returns to be all deposited in General Registry.

1. Upon a day to be fixed by the Governor of which fourteen days previous notice shall be published in the Government Gazette the Secretary of the Bishop of Sydney shall deliver to the Registrar General all Returns relating to Marriages Baptisms and Burials within the said Colony made or transmitted by any Clergyman or Minister of the United Church of England and Ireland in New South Wales by virtue of the Acts sixth George Fourth number twenty-one and third Victoria number twenty-three and all Registers of such Returns and every Index of or to the same and the Registrar General shall take possession thereof and shall keep and deposit the same in the General Registry Office and may and shall grant Certificates or Certified Copies of the same in like manner as under the several provisions of the Act of Council nineteenth Victoria number thirty-four applicable to Registration of Marriages Births and Deaths or incidental thereto or consequent thereon in like manner as if the said several provisions had been repeated in this Act and hereby made to apply to the subject matter hereof.

Compensation to Compiler of Indexes.

2. And whereas the said Returns and Indexes have since the year one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six been maintained and kept up by the said Secretary at his own personal cost and labour It shall be lawful for the Colonial Treasurer to pay to the said Secretary at the time of such transfer as aforesaid the sum of _____ pounds by way of compensation for his past outlay and services and to charge the said payment upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Certificates and Fees.

3. All Certificates or Certified Copies so granted by the Registrar General shall be of the same and the like force and effect to all intents and purposes as Certificates and Certified Copies of the Registers of Marriages Births or Deaths granted under the said last recited Act And the same and the like fees may and shall be charged and paid for the same respectively and for searches relating to any such Returns of the said United Church as are authorized by the same Act and contained in Schedule B thereto annexed.

19 Vic. No. 34 applied to 20 Vic. No. 27.

4. The provisions of the said Act of Council nineteenth Victoria number thirty-four shall also apply to all Certificates or Certified Copies of the Registers of Baptisms Marriages and Burials of other Denominations transferred to the Registrar General under the Act of Council twentieth Victoria number twenty-seven.

May I request you to bring under the notice of the Honorable the Colonial Secretary the correspondence and papers respecting the transfer of the Church of England Registers to the Department of the Registrar General.

The continuance of these Records in my charge is attended with much inconvenience and expense, and I fear that it will not be possible to afford the public the convenience of my services beyond the end of the present year. I contemplate an absence from Sydney, for urgent private reasons, when it will be out of my power, in the present uncertain state of the matter, to make provision for public access to the Registers, or the issue of Certificates.

With reference to a letter addressed on the 25th April last to the then Colonial Secretary, by nearly all the Solicitors of Sydney, representing the urgent necessity of securing, for public use, in connexion with the new Registry Department, the Indexes of Baptisms and Marriages of the Church of England, which the Bishop's Secretary has, for the last twenty years, kept at his own instance and expense,—we have now the honor to recal the attention of the Government to this important subject, as we find that Mr. H. K. James declines any longer to supply, from this source, those Certificates which have hitherto been available for purposes of legal investigation and evidence.

Without presuming to estimate the compensation which Mr. James is fairly entitled to claim on surrendering these valuable Indexes to the Registrar's Department, we can, without hesitation, state that the injury inflicted on the public by their loss or suppression would incalculably exceed any sum which he is likely to demand.

UNITED STATES CONSUL to THE COLONIAL SECRETARY.

*Consulate of the United States,
Sydney, N. S. Wales,*

4 November, 1857.

SIR,

Having received a request from the United States to procure and forward a certificate of the registration of the birth of a child, now resident there, but who was born in this Colony, I applied on the 2nd instant to the Deputy Registrar of the Diocese of Sydney (Mr. James) for the purpose of obtaining the required document.

I did not see Mr. James, but the next morning I received a note from him, in which he says, "that, pending a negotiation with the Government, I have discontinued furnishing such extracts, and regret, therefore, that I am unable to accommodate you." I afterwards spoke to the Registrar General of the Colony upon the subject, but was informed by him that it was not in his power to furnish me with the certificate.

As I infer from the letter of my correspondent that it is of considerable importance that the information sought for should be obtained, I therefore apply to you in the hope that you may be able to aid me in the matter.

I hardly need add, that, as interests of vast moment are frequently dependent on facts which can only be established by access to an authentic Register of Births (and I believe that in the present instance important interests are involved,) it would seem to be of consequence that every obstacle to the procuring of such facts should be removed.

SIR,

Not having been favored with any reply to the communications we had the honor to address to you upon the subject of the transfer of the Church of England Registers to the department of the Registrar General, we again beg to draw your attention to the matter.

In consideration of the very great inconvenience sustained by the public from the want of a legal right of reference to these records, we feel compelled to urge the importance of having them placed under the control of a responsible officer.

We trust therefore that the Government will take this subject into their early consideration.

EXTRACTS FROM THE VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

VOTES NO. 17. FRIDAY, 23 APRIL, 1858.

5. Registration and Preservation of Records:—Mr. Owen moved, pursuant to amended notice,—

(1.) That a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the Records and Registers in the Office of the Registrar General; the expediency and probable expense of procuring fire-proof premises; the condition of the Registers, and the best means of their preservation and restoration where found decayed or injured; the income derived from the fees of the Office, distinguishing those derived from registering deeds and instruments; the state and system of the indices, and whether any improvement can be made therein;—and also to inquire into and report on the substitution of paper for parchment in registering, and whether searches can be advantageously made by the clerks of the Registry Office,—with power to send for persons and to call for or inspect books and papers.

(2.) That such Committee consist of the following Members, viz.:—Mr. Jones, Mr. Smith, Mr. Hay, Mr. Weekes, Mr. Piddington, Mr. Flood, Mr. Williamson, Mr. Aldcorn, Mr. Gordon, and the Mover.

Debate ensued.

Question put and passed.

VOTES NO. 61. TUESDAY, 20 JULY, 1858.

22. Registered Instruments better Preservation Bill:—Mr. Cowper moved, "That" the Speaker do now leave the Chair, and the House resolve itself into a Committee of the whole for consideration of this Bill.

Mr. Owen moved, That the Question be amended by the omission of all the words thereof following the word "That" at the commencement, with a view to the insertion in their place, of the words "this Bill be referred to the Select Committee " on the Registration and Preservation of Records."

Question—That the words proposed to be omitted stand part of the Question—put and negatived.

Question—That the words proposed to be inserted in place of the words omitted, be so inserted—put and passed;

Whereupon Question—That this Bill be referred to the Select Committee on the Registration and Preservation of Records—put and passed.

VOTES NO. 114. THURSDAY, 4 NOVEMBER, 1858.

2. Registration and Preservation of Records:—Mr. Owen, as Chairman, brought up a Progress Report from, and laid upon the Table the Evidence taken before the Select Committee appointed on the 23rd April last, to inquire into the Records and Registers in the Office of the Registrar General; the expediency and probable expense of procuring fire-proof premises; the condition of the Registers, and the best means of their preservation and restoration where found decayed or injured; the income derived from the fees of the Office, distinguishing those derived from registering deeds and instruments; the state and system of the indices, and whether any improvement can be made therein;—and also to inquire into and report on the substitution of paper for parchment in registering, and whether searches can be advantageously made by the clerks of the Registry Office,—with power to send for persons and to call for or inspect books and papers; together with the Minutes of Proceedings and Appendix, and the better preservation of Registered Instruments Bill (referred on 20th July last) as amended in Committee.

REGISTRATION AND PRESERVATION OF RECORDS.

PROGRESS REPORT.

THE SELECT COMMITTEE of the Legislative Assembly, appointed on 23rd April last, “to inquire into the Records and Registers in the Office of the Registrar General; the expediency and probable expense of procuring fire-proof premises; the condition of the Registers, and the best means of their preservation and restoration where found decayed or injured; the income derived from the fees of the Office, distinguishing those derived from registering deeds and instruments; the state and system of the indices, and whether any improvement can be made therein;—and also to inquire into and report on the substitution of paper for parchment in registering, and whether searches can be advantageously made by the clerks of the Registry Office,—with power to send for persons and to call for or inspect books and papers;” and to whom, on the 20th July last, was referred the “Registered Instruments better Preservation Bill,”—have agreed to the following Progress Report:—

Your Committee having examined Christopher Rolleston, Esquire, the Registrar General of this Colony, T.J. Jaques, Esquire, Deputy Registrar, Professor Smith and others, on the state of the Records now deposited in the Office of the Registrar General in Castlereagh-street, in this City, and having personally inspected the Records, are of opinion that the Records copied on paper are in a fair state of preservation, perfectly legible, and exhibit no symptoms of effacement from time or otherwise; but some of those on parchment exhibit great obliteration, and in many cases can only be deciphered with much difficulty.

These defects appear to have been produced by the use of bad parchment, and in some instances by bad parchment and bad ink combined.

But it would appear that in no case will it be impossible to have these injured Records accurately re-copied; and the evidence of Professor Smith shews that the process of effacement going on is not so very rapid as to require very urgent and immediate action; but no unreasonable delay ought to be permitted.

Your Committee are of opinion that some change is necessary as to the parchment material now used for the Records, and that the preponderance of evidence is in favor of that material being paper, expressly manufactured for the Government, and distributed for Registration purposes by the Registrar General.

No positive evidence has been obtained as to the advisability of the substitution of vellum for Registration copies; it is, however, believed it would be a better substance than parchment, but its cost is considerably greater.

Your Committee having inquired into the system of Registration now in operation in this Colony, and having examined two gentlemen distinguished for their attention to various projected improvements, namely, Robert Richard Torrens, Esquire, now Registrar General of Adelaide, and William Henry Archer, Esquire, Assistant Registrar of Victoria, conceive that the further consideration of this branch of their inquiry can, with advantage, be deferred for the present, until the results of the new systems of Registration in South Australia and Victoria can be ascertained.

All

All the evidence taken as to the safety and adequacy of the present Registry Office in Castlereagh-street demonstrates that the present building is momentarily liable to destruction by fire, and is very insufficient for carrying on the business of the office.

Your Committee, therefore, strongly recommend that measures be early taken for erecting fire-proof and convenient premises.

There is the less reason for delay as the Revenue derived from the Registration of Deeds exhibits a surplus annually of upwards of three thousand pounds.

Your Committee have taken the evidence of D. B. Hutchison, Esquire, Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court, as to the place of deposit there of the Original Wills of the Colony, and as to the propriety of removing them to the Office of the Registrar General.

From his evidence it appears, first,—that these important and valuable documents are kept in a small closet on the floor of the Supreme Court, and are in no way protected from fire; and, secondly,—that they might with great advantage be removed to the Office of the Registrar General when proper premises are provided.

Vide Schedule of Amendments appended hereto.

Your Committee beg at the same time to lay before your Honorable House the "Registered Instruments better Preservation Bill," as amended by them.

ROBT. OWEN,

Chairman.

*Legislative Assembly Chamber,
Sydney, 4 November, 1858.*

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE.

FRIDAY, 4 JUNE, 1858.

MEMBERS PRESENT:—

Mr. Owen,

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE SELECT COMMITTEE

ON THE

REGISTRATION AND PRESERVATION OF RECORDS.

FRIDAY, 4 JUNE, 1858.

Present :—

MR. OWEN,
MR. PIDDINGTON,MR. HAY,
MR. JONES.

ROBERT OWEN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Christopher Rolleston, Esq., called in and examined :—

1. By the Chairman : I believe, Sir, you are Registrar General? I am.
2. A portion of that department is the Registry of Deeds and Conveyances? It is.
3. A certain portion, I believe, of the registration is by memorials: to what date? To the year 1844.
4. From that period the deeds have been copied? From that period the deeds have been registered by copies deposited.
5. Copied on parchment? Copied on parchment.
6. Are the memorials bound up, or in files? The memorials are all bound up.
7. In volumes? In volumes, of 200 each.
8. Is there a general index, or an index to each volume? There is an index to each 1,000 deeds; that is, to each 5 volumes.
9. Is that found inconvenient at all? Well, I don't think it is.
10. Or is it an index to each year? There is an index to each 1,000 deeds, and then there is an extra general index up to the year 1838; but from the year 1838 to the year 1848 it has not been continued; they had not the clerical staff in the office to do it.
11. I asked you whether there was any inconvenience from the index being to each five volumes? No, I think not.
12. Reference is easy that way? Yes, I think quite easy.
13. Has the same course been pursued since the registration upon parchment? Exactly the same, I believe.
14. That is, an index, I presume, for each year? An index for each 1,000 deeds; each volume contains 200 deeds.
15. These, I believe, are kept on open shelves? They are kept on open shelves.
16. Open to the public and to the atmosphere? Yes.
17. They are not shut in? Not shut in.
18. With respect, Sir, to the paper memorials,—what is the state of preservation? In some few instances they are a little torn and faded, but they are generally pretty good.
19. Have the torn parts been caused by time, or carelessness, or by examination? By examination, I think; carelessness in turning over the leaves.
20. Are they legible, or otherwise? They are quite legible.
21. Are they quite perfect in the series? Quite perfect, I believe; I have not heard anything to the contrary.
22. Then the indexes are the same in both series—both the memorial system and the copying system of deeds? Quite the same—alphabetical.
23. Not divided into counties? No.
24. Now, with respect to the parchment series of registration, Sir,—what is the state of that, both as to the material on which the deeds are copied, and as to the writing? Many of the deeds are defaced so that they are totally illegible, and some are in the course of obliteration, either from a defect in the parchment or in the ink, which, I am not prepared to say.

C. Rolleston,
Esq.
4 June, 1858.

- C. Rolleston, Esq.
4 June, 1858.
25. You cannot form any distinct judgment at all whether one or both? I think it is in some cases the parchment, and in some cases the ink.
26. The office, I believe, has no control over the quality of the parchment—your office? None whatever.
27. It is supplied by the public? By the public. I believe we could reject a faulty sheet—a sheet with holes in.
28. Do you recollect if there is any authority in the Act for this? I rather think there is some authority which enables us to reject a faulty sheet; it has been done in one or two instances. Section XV gives the Registrar this authority.
29. Have you consulted any gentleman skilled in chemical application, as to either the preservation or restoration of the defaced or effacing parts? No, I have not; I brought the matter under the notice of the Government as soon as the volumes were transferred to me from the Supreme Court, but they did not authorise me to do so.
30. How long is that ago? Thirteen months; the 1st of May, 1857.
31. From your observation of the state of the records, does it appear that any defect has arisen from the mode of keeping them—I mean as to the house or the place of custody—from dampness or otherwise? I think not, because we have perfect deeds in succession to deeds that are almost obliterated, and if that had arisen from the place of deposit—from dampness, or whatever it may be—it would have affected all equally.
32. Are your indexes on paper or parchment? On paper.
33. Do you think that that is the best material for such a purpose? I hardly think so; they are liable to be torn and destroyed.
34. The searches of course are a great portion of the business of the office? A great portion.
35. By whom are they made? By the attorneys or their clerks.
36. Is there any mode adopted by which the office has a protection against alterations by persons left to examine the indexes and deeds? There is a man there whose special employment it is to look over the persons employed in the office in searching.
37. The registers themselves and the deeds are also subjected to the handling and examination of searchers? Yes.
38. From the mode of conducting that portion of the business of the office, do you think there is any risk of alteration? I think not; because it is done in a room where there are three clerks and the book-porter, whose duty it is to look after the registers, by constantly moving about among the searchers.
39. By Mr. Hay: That is the man of whom you spoke just now? Yes.
40. By the Chairman: That portion of your office does not come so much under your observation as under the observation of your head clerk, Mr. Jaques? Mr. Jaques, my Deputy Registrar, has the supervision of this branch of the office, and sits in the room where the searches are made.
41. Now, with respect to the registers of conveyance—there is one general register for the Colony? There is one general register.
42. There is not any distinction of locality? None whatever.
43. In your opinion, would any advantage be obtained by any other arrangement? I think there would be. If we could register by districts or counties it would be very much better.
44. Would you point out the advantages that would be obtained by that mode? I think we might have registers for each county or district, and every deed connected with a district put into its proper register. I think that would simplify registration very much indeed; but I doubt whether it can be carried out in the present state of the survey system.
45. I was going to ask whether the boundaries are not so defined that they might create some difficulty? I think so.
46. But otherwise such a mode would simplify and save trouble? Very much indeed.
47. And so with respect to the indexes? And so with respect to the indexes.
48. There would be less wear and tear and less search? Yes; the search would not occupy one quarter of the time.
49. The index being general, every search must be out of that one index? Out of that one index.
50. From your own observation in your office, or from any other source, has it occurred to you that there is any better mode of index? I have seen a scheme of Mr. Kelly's, the Registrar of the Supreme Court at Auckland, in which he has carried out there a system of numerical index, but I am very doubtful of its application to this Colony.
51. I believe his practice is to create as it were title pages? Title pages, as far as I understand it, with a numerical index.
52. Have you been at all able to judge whether this is practicable or likely to be safe in its operation? I think that a system of registration by title pages would be most advisable.
53. With respect to numbers—could they not be applied in the same way to our present system? I hardly like to give an answer in the affirmative, for I think there are many points connected with the change of system that would involve many difficulties, which I cannot see my way out of.
54. Then, having examined Mr. Kelly's system, you doubt its application to this Colony? I doubt its application to this Colony. If I may be allowed to explain: Mr. Kelly is the Registrar of a very small province in New Zealand, where there are very few transactions in land. He commenced his system with the first grant of land. Crown grants were not, I have been informed, issued until within the last three or four years; Mr. Kelly therefore commenced with a clean sheet, and carried out his scheme without impediment. With the thousands of deeds we have here, however, I almost doubt its practicability.
55. Having gone upon a different system, with an immense accumulation of materials you think it would be difficult to add one to the other? I think so—without a great alteration in the law of property.

56. By Mr. Hay: This Mr. Kelly—is he the Registrar General of the whole of New Zealand? Only for the province of Auckland.

57. By the Chairman: Then, instead of the indexes being upon paper, you recommend that they should be upon some more durable material? I think so, certainly.

C. Rolleston,
Esq.
4 June, 1868.

58. Now, Sir, with respect to the effaced or effacing state of the registers, can you suggest any, and what remedy? I think that the opinion of one of the best practical chemists here should be taken as to the means of restoring the writing, so that we may be able to transcribe it.

59. You recommend chemical inquiry as to the restoration, with a view to transcription? Just so.

60. Do you propose—or perhaps it has not been settled—to transcribe the deeds afresh upon paper? Afresh upon some paper of a durable nature.

61. Do you propose to affix the paper to the volumes, or to have some supplementary volumes? I think I would have a supplementary volume, referring to this or that deed.

62. That is, upon the face of the parchment in the volumes you would make a reference to the supplementary volume? Just so, and vice versa.

63. That is as to the restoration of the present deficiencies? Yes; and those that are in process of obliteration.

64. Now, as to future registrations—as to a future system—will you have the kindness to state to the Committee what you would suggest as to the best mode, or is there a difficulty in that until the chemical inquiry takes place? I think that, judging from the present state of the registers, and from the impossibility that the officers employed can be able to see at the time whether parchment is good or not, it would be advisable to have the copies of the deeds upon a particular kind of paper, to be ordered from England by the office.

65. Would you say paper, or such other material as might be suggested? Such other material as might be recommended in England by competent persons. There is a class of paper made at home containing a good deal of parchment, which I am told has been substituted in England, in some of the public departments, for parchment.

66. Do you know whether that has been tested for any considerable period of time? The invention is of too recent date, I think, to rely upon as a test.

67. Then, would you think it necessary to have the same size of registers—whether parchment, paper, or other material? I think it would be desirable to have an uniform size. You could not have them larger without their being too bulky and cumbersome; and if you had them smaller, they would form too many volumes. I think the present is as good a size as we could have.

68. Would you not recommend, supposing some legislative enactment were to pass, regard new material of this kind, or rather would you recommend any paper that could be at present obtained in the Colony? I should hardly like to do so.

69. I presume there would be a difficulty even as to size? There would.

70. Would you consider it desirable that in case of any alteration of that sort the material should be so lined as to compel an uniform and clear copy? Certainly; because, as we receive them now, some of the deeds are so closely written that it is very difficult to decipher them. It would take you an hour to read down a page. Others are written large, and the books do not look well.

71. The present system of the spaces is both illegible and very inconvenient? Very inconvenient.

72. Do you think it would be possible for the office, by virtue of any legislative enactment, to import a sufficient quantity of paper or material of the kind for distribution? I think the Government could do it, either through the instrumentality of the office, or through the Colonial Storekeeper.

73. How would you recommend that to be done with regard to distribution in reference to the interior? I think that if one or two, or three or four—or half a dozen of the most respectable stationers were made the medium of disseminating the paper all over the country, it would answer every purpose; and if registration were prohibited upon any other paper, I do not see any difficulty whatever.

74. You would recommend the authority to be vested in the Registrar General to reject anything not in conformity? Yes; that would be necessary.

75. Do you think that the paper could be conveniently distributed through the post offices—the country post offices? I think it might. There is a liability always to rubbing on the outsides, but I send all over the colonies the larger forms connected with the registration of births and deaths, and, protected by a proper wrapper, they go quite safe; no doubt there is a liability to injury from wet, and in swimming creeks the forms are sometimes injured, and I am obliged to send fresh ones.

76. But that might be corrected by some authority in the Registrar General's Office? Yes.

77. Then you think that, previous to deciding upon the material, it might be advisable to consult some person of authority? I think, certainly, in so important a matter it would be quite necessary to consult the best authorities we can upon the subject.

78. With regard to the indexes—I understood you to state that in the present state of the surveys the boundaries might not be sufficiently marked to make it safe to have districts? It would be quite impossible.

79. Could there be immediately any great division or divisions which would diminish the labor, without taking the minute districts? I think not, without an alteration in the law.

80. I am supposing, of course, that the Legislature will deal with it—I only want your opinion whether, supposing there could be any safe line adopted for the southern part of the country, or the middle part, or the northern part, it would operate so as to diminish the labor to a certain extent? Without the minute subdivisions I think it might.

81. That you think might be done? That I think might be done.

82. Would that be a saving? Yes, it would; anything in that direction would be an improvement.

- C. Rolleston, Esq.
4 June, 1868.
83. Not having thought of that, perhaps you cannot suggest any plan? I could not; I am not sufficiently acquainted with the boundaries of the southern and western divisions of the Colony.
 84. Your present office is in Castlereagh-street? In Castlereagh-street.
 85. That, I believe, is one of a range of buildings? It is one of five, known as Black's Buildings.
 86. In the middle of the building? In the middle of the building.
 87. Has it occurred to you that this is a position which is desirable with regard to contingencies of fire? No. I have represented to the Government, on two or three occasions, the insufficiency of the building, and its insecurity.
 88. What household protection is there to the property to guard it? There is a messenger and his wife.
 89. Residing upon the premises? Not in the house, but in a little back apartment.
 90. Do you allow any fires? Oh, yes; there are four or five fires every day during the winter months.
 91. Fires, in fire-places, with the ordinary construction of chimneys? Yes.
 92. Is the building made of such materials as to be in any way particularly preserved from fire? No; but the fires in the deeds' room are put out before the clerks leave.
 93. Is there any one to inspect that operation in particular? Yes; the Deputy Registrar takes care that the fires are put out before he leaves. He keeps the key of the office, so that no one can go into it.
 94. Is there any watchman? None.
 95. Now, would you think it desirable, having stated that there is a risk of fire, that there should be some building erected apart from other premises, and fireproof? I think it is certainly necessary.
 96. Do you think it essential to the safety of the records? Clearly so.
 97. What is the income, Sir, of the deed register department? About £3,000 a-year, and the copying of Crown grants about £2,000 more; for which the office has never been given credit, but which should be credited as part of our official income.
 98. From the department we have been speaking about? Just so; a little over £5,000 in all.
 99. Do you recollect the whole expenses of that department, including a portion of house rent and the proportion to clerks? About £1,800 a-year.
 100. Then there is a balance of about £3,000? There is a balance of £3,000 good to the public.
 101. With regard to extent of the premises, are they sufficient? Oh, dear, no; they are very insufficient.
 102. Insufficient for present purposes? Insufficient for present purposes.
 103. And the other portions of the records' office? Quite so.
 104. I believe there is some system upon a small scale, at present extant, for taking title deeds of persons for security, or wills? Wills are deposited with us.
 105. I mean original wills, before death? Original wills before death.
 106. Do you think it would be—without incommencing the office—would it be practicable and useful to the public if it were an avowed part of the duties of your office, and apartments could be set aside for the preservation of deeds of persons that might be absent or sick—deeds or wills? I hardly think it is necessary to tax the Government or the public with keeping records of that kind.
 107. But I am not speaking of the taxing—I mean, would it be useful to the public, and would it be practicable for your office to do it? Oh, yes, quite practicable.
 108. Would it not, in your opinion, be willingly submitted to, that persons having deeds in that way should pay a fee? I think so.
 109. That, therefore, would take away any expense to the public? Yes; in depositing wills the depositor pays a fee of 5s. If you will allow me to say, there are wills now in the office for which there are no claimants, and of an old date: I don't know what to do with them. I did call the attention of the Government to the fact, but have received no instructions as to their disposal. All parties connected with them are supposed to be dead.
 110. How many years old? Perhaps twenty.
 111. Might not the system adopted at the Post Office with regard to the Dead Letter Office, or something analogous to it, diminish the accumulation in that way of useless paper? Yes, certainly.
 112. Now, Sir, I beg to ask the favour of your attention to the searches. The searches for incumbrances, I believe, is now a very extensive portion of the duties done in your office? It is.
 113. They are made, I think you said, by the public? By the public.
 114. Do you think this is a convenient mode, or a safe mode, for the office? I think it leads to the destruction of the records at a much earlier period than otherwise would be the case.
 115. Is it within your knowledge that these searches are very long? Some of them are very long.
 116. And at considerable expense to the parties? It must be.
 117. Are you aware whether in certain registries on a large scale it is the business of the office to conduct searches? It is in Ireland, I believe. I am not aware whether it is in any of these Colonies.
 118. You are not aware whether it is so in Edinburgh? I am not.
 119. Do you think that from the superior knowledge of efficient clerks in that department, who would be more competent to lay their finger upon any particular searches of titles—would it not be a matter of great convenience to the public that they should be undertaken by your office? Unquestionably, very great.

120. By responsible clerks? By responsible clerks.

121. That, I presume, would ensure safety to the records, and economy in the searches, both as to time and money? Yes, clearly.

122. Judging from the number of searches that you observe daily, can you form any opinion what number of clerks would be necessary? It would take five or six, searching and making copies.

123. Searching and making copies? Copies of extracts, as the public may require. Two would be ample to make the searches, I dare say.

124. And in proportion as the duties may require, a further number of clerks for the copies? A further number for the copies.

125. Who makes the copies now? One of the clerks of the department.

126. From the books? From the books.

127. Is not that a very inconvenient mode? Sometimes it is done by the attorneys' clerks, when our own clerks are too much engaged. Sometimes they ask for copies by our own clerks; and sometimes they do them themselves.

128. You recommend, therefore, that that portion of the duties of the office should be done by your own clerks? I think every duty of that nature should be done in the office.

129. Would that be any expense to the public, or may the office not be regulated so as to defray it? Entirely to defray it; and the public would be exceedingly glad if such a change were made.

130. By Mr. Hay: I think you said, Mr. Rolleston, that there was an index to each volume, but that the general indexes were made up for the year? There is no annual index; the indexes are prepared for each book of 5 volumes containing each 200 deeds, i. e., an index to each 1,000 deeds.

131. But that during one considerable period—from 1838 to 1848—the general index is faulty? The general index is very faulty for those years. If I may be allowed to explain: At the time when the Registrar General's Department was abolished by Sir George Gipps, the duties were transferred to the Supreme Court, and there was a disagreement between the Council and the Government as to the expense of the judicial department chargeable upon Schedule A, if you recollect; there was not a sufficient staff in the Supreme Court, and a rough index was made by a chance clerk whenever they could spare the time. The indexes are not to be relied upon at all, and in those ten years the chief obstruction in searching for titles arises.

132. The chief difficulty in making those searches now and the greatest delay is caused by the incomplete indexes of those ten years? Yes.

133. Have you made any suggestion for remedying this? I suggested, when the office was transferred to me, to the Government, that I should be allowed clerks to get up these indexes and make them perfect.

134. You do not find that you are able with your present staff of clerks to accomplish that? It is quite impossible.

135. There must be a greater loss, I suppose, to the public from the difficulty of making these searches than would compensate for the expense of having these indexes made perfect at once? Yes.

136. That is a work which would require to be taken up by itself and completed off-hand? Just so.

137. By the Chairman: That of itself would diminish the difficulty and delay of making searches, to a considerable extent? Very much indeed.

138. Has not that been partly done? It was done by Mr. Jaques up to the year 1838—from the time he joined the office to that date—and the indexes he declares are as perfect as they can be made. From that date, however, in consequence of the limited clerical assistance it was out of his power to keep up that work. The indexes were made by temporarily employed clerks until the year 1848, but from 1848 the indexes were again taken in hand by Mr. Jaques, and kept in a perfect manner, and have been carried out so to this day. From the year 1848 unto the present time he can declare that they are perfect.

139. In point of fact, the indexes are from the year 1838 to 1848 in the faulty state to which you have alluded? Yes. It is I believe in those years that the difficulties in searching arise.

140. And you think that two clerks, under the direction of the Deputy Registrar, would be able to do that in the course of how long? Twelve or eighteen months, I think, if they were efficient clerks—and they must be efficient. We must have men whom we can trust, and men of some legal knowledge and attainments, because in the registering of a deed it requires considerable legal knowledge to index properly the contents of that deed. Another great difficulty in indexing is, that by the present law we are not allowed to reject a deed appertaining to land of which there is no definite description in the deed. Some of them contain so many roods or acres, but they do not contain the name of the county or the district in which they are placed. It is utterly impossible, therefore, to index a deed referring to that land so as to show to what part of the country it belongs.

141. In point of fact, you do get deeds so indefinite in their description of the land that you cannot refer them to any district? Some are so indefinite that you cannot refer them to any particular lands whatever, and the space left for the description of the land is necessarily left vacant, so that you see nothing but the fact of land having been sold.

142. You say you have no power to reject deeds however indefinite in description? However indefinite. If the Committee will allow me, I will show them a deed which no registry office ought to be obliged to accept. It is a deed of sale by Mr. Polack; but it does not show whether Mr. Polack was the possessor of that land or merely the auctioneer. It gives no description whatever of the land. We cannot register the name of the vendor, because we do not know whether Mr. Polack is the vendor or the auctioneer.

143. Are you aware that in some instances deeds are granted for all the real estate of the grantor?

C. Rolleston,
Esq.

4 June, 1858.

C. Rolleston, Esq. grantor? They are, without describing what the real estate is. The Crown grants themselves, in some instances, do not give the name of the county, or the name of the district to which the grant refers.

4 June, 1858.

144. By the Chairman: That would make it very difficult—utterly impossible, in fact—to refer it to any district? Yes.

145. By Mr. Hay: Would you consider, Mr. Rolleston, that it is desirable the indexes should be such that any incumbrances affecting real property should be referred to at any time by any clerk who came into the office? I think so; they should be so clear that any person—man, woman, or child almost—should be able to comprehend them.

146. In the meantime it is not so? In the meantime it is not so; it requires legal knowledge to search for some deeds.

147. It requires familiarity with the character of the records? Very much.

148. So that a considerable amount of difficulty may arise from the loss of any particular officer in the public department? Yes.

149. You think, then, that you ought to have power by virtue of statute to reject deeds which are indefinite in description? Clearly so; to make the registration system perfect, that power must rest with the officer appointed to carry it out.

150. Are you aware whether it is of late that the practice of issuing Crown grants without describing the counties in which the land was situated has arisen? Of late I have observed it myself; I have been told by Mr. Jaques that in former times many Crown grants were faulty in that respect.

151. Did Mr. Jaques refer, do you know, to a period considerably antecedent to the present? I think not.

152. Such grants have been issued all along? All along; I get them every day.

153. You now get them every day? Yes.

154. Are you aware whether, in those cases, the land is within what are called boundaries of location, or beyond those boundaries? Generally beyond those boundaries, and in the intermediate districts where counties have been proclaimed.

155. By the Chairman: Even omitted there, where counties have been proclaimed? Yes.

156. By Mr. Hay: Do you know of any instance in which they have been omitted in such grants within the old nineteen counties? I cannot say, but I think so. To the best of my belief the name of the county has been omitted in grants referring to the old settled counties.

157. You have had a good deal of experience connected with the management of Crown Lands, though not in the Survey Department—can you see any difficulty standing in the way of Crown grants referring to the counties within which they are situated in every instance? None whatever.

158. If the Survey Department was properly carried on? I believe it is a clerical omission. When the deeds of grant are enrolled they are generally marked, to call attention to the absence of this part of the description.

159. Supposing that the boundaries of counties were laid out and proclaimed before the alienation of land, do you think there would be any difficulty in referring to the Crown grants, in every case, to the county in which it is situated? None whatever.

160. If that practice were carried out, would there be any difficulty hereafter in the deeds in each case transferred referring to the counties also? None whatever.

161. Would not that enable your index to be made out with reference to each county? Quite so.

162. And would not that greatly facilitate the service? Very largely indeed.

163. And save the wear and tear of the records very much? Certainly it would.

164. As to the question whether the ink or the parchment was most at fault in those cases of obliteration which have taken place lately, can you say whether in the paper records formerly kept the same defect is to be observed? No; the paper records of the earlier years of the present century are as perfect as on the day they were written.

165. There does not seem any such obliteration in those old paper records as there is in the parchment records? In some few memorials there is a fading of the ink, but not an obliteration in any one of them, and in all the Crown records—that is, written by any of the Government departments—the ink is as dark, and the writing as distinct, as on the day they were written.

166. In that case I presume you would come to the conclusion—although the ink might have something to do with the obliteration of the later records—still that that obliteration would not have taken place if paper had been used? I think not. I believe that either some acid is used in the preparation of the parchment, or that the parchment, having too much oily matter left in it, the severe pressure to which the volumes are exposed in binding, and the great heat, causes the oil to exude, and that it obliterates the writing.

167. Although not a chemist, you are generally aware that the action of ink is of a chemical nature upon paper or parchment? Yes.

168. And that that action may be different upon paper and parchment? Quite so.

169. Do you think it would be practicable for the office to distribute ink as well as paper? It is quite impossible to detect whether a deed was written with ink so supplied, or not.

170. You mean it would not be impossible to distribute it, but it would be impossible to ascertain whether the ink had been used? It would be difficult to distribute it, and quite impossible to tell whether the ink used was that ink or not.

171. By the Chairman: Could it not be distinguished by colour? I do not think so.

172. By Mr. Hay: I suppose it would be quite practicable to test the ink used by the office itself? Quite.

173. It might be advisable? It might be advisable. We use the best registration ink.

174. Do you think the fee of 5s. now paid on the deposit of wills for private persons is sufficient, or would you be disposed to fix a higher fee in case that system of the deposit of wills was carried out extensively? If the office is merely made a place of deposit, I think 5s. quite enough.

175. You think, at that rate of fee, you could afford to give every convenience to the deposit C. Rolleston, Esq. of instruments of that kind? I think so.
176. Would that be sufficient to remunerate the office for the search necessary to its removal—taking receipts, and so on? Well, perhaps not. I believe 5s. for the deposit, and a small 4 June, 1858.
fee for the searching would be sufficient.
177. Another small fee upon its being demanded? Upon its being demanded, half-a-crown would do.
178. For something in the nature of a search necessary before it was delivered up? Yes.
179. Which would be more troublesome than the mere receipt? I think so.
180. But this fee on receipt would have to cover the expense of providing safes? Yes.
But I doubt whether much would be done in that way. We have not many wills. I do not think we have one hundred wills in the office.
181. Do you not think, Mr. Rolleston, if it was known that you could provide proper safes and fire-proof premises for wills, and deeds relating to private property, that the opportunity might be extensively availed of by private individuals? I think it is very likely. At present these instruments are generally left with the Banks.
182. In fact, the public have no confidence in your premises? They have no confidence; in fact, they know that they are insecure.
183. The fee, then, will require to be sufficient to cover, not only the trouble of receiving and searching before delivery, but also to pay the expense of providing a safe, and a proportion of the expense of providing fire-proof premises. The fee would be required to be fixed at a sufficiently high rate? I think so.
184. Perhaps you are not prepared to give an opinion as to what fee would be sufficient for that purpose? I think the fee of 5s. for the deposit is ample, and if you propose 5s. for the search and taking it out again, I should think it would cover every expense.
185. And with regard to the destruction of these wills you have spoken of remaining in the office for a very long time, does it not strike you that that might be dangerous? I did not recommend their destruction; not at all.
186. What would you propose to do with them? That some persons authorised by the Government should open them and see the contents. They might change the holdings of property most materially.
187. You would recommend that these wills should be opened under the authority of the Government? Yes; by persons appointed by the Government.
188. There would be no necessity for destroying them at all, under any circumstances?
Certainly not.
189. With regard to what you have said, Mr. Rolleston, about the two thousand pounds of income—that which the office had not got credit for? It never gets credit for the enrolment of the grants; we have never got credit for the income derivable from this source.
190. That is not paid for at the office, is it? It is paid at the Treasury, and not at the office; therefore, the Treasury take credit for it, which they have no business to do, because the work is done in my office.
191. The fees are paid to the Government? They are paid to the Government upon the surrender of the deed.
192. And the work, in consideration of which these fees are paid, is done in your office?
Yes.
193. By Mr. Jones: What precautions are taken, Mr. Rolleston, in giving up wills which are deposited with you? An affidavit on the part of one of the executors, or some one authorised by him, is taken, and they are then given up.
194. That is where the will is to be given up after the death of the testator? We can give up a will on the application of the depositor; we do it repeatedly; there is one man that makes a fresh will every year—some old man out at Newtown.
195. For instance;—supposing a person not personally known to you or to the department were to deposit a will, and that he applied some seven or ten years afterwards to have this will restored, what steps would you take to ascertain if the person claiming it was the person that deposited it? We would require the affidavit of a respectable solicitor, or some one who was acquainted with the man deponing, that he was the depositor.
196. By the Chairman: A proof of identity? A proof of identity.
197. By Mr. Jones: Such a proof as would provide against fraudulently taking possession of it? Quite so.
198. By Mr. Hay: I wish to ask you, Mr. Rolleston, whether in case of the establishment being so enlarged as to enable the public to have the searches made through the clerks in the office, you would prohibit private searches being made? I would.
199. Do you not think that might be in some cases unsatisfactory? It ought not to be, I think. Certainly there are cases where the parties themselves might have a desire to search for themselves.
200. Do you not think it would even be advisable, as a check upon the efficiency of the office, under all circumstances, that the power to make this private search should be conceded, even if you were to make the fees somewhat heavy? In special cases I do not see any objection to it; but, for the preservation of the records, I think it desirable that the searches should be made in the office.
201. Don't you think the searches might be made on such terms in the office as—without prohibiting searches altogether—would make it the custom to have them made in the office?
Yes.
202. Don't you think where large interests were involved it might give dissatisfaction?
Perhaps so.
203. By Mr. Piddington: With reference to the question just put by Mr. Hay upon the point of prohibiting searches, are you aware whether the custom of absolute prohibition exists in the United Kingdom? I am not aware.

- C. Rolleston, Esq. 204. I think you said paper memorials were preserved up to the year 1844? To 1844, I think.
- 4 June, 1858. 205. Have you any volume of those memorials? I did not bring one with me.
206. If it turns out that the ink is as much in fault as the parchment in respect to the illegibility alluded to, what security would paper afford to the public even if it were used in lieu of parchment? If the ink was faulty alone, I do not know that the paper would afford any greater security; but I think that the parchment is mainly at fault.
207. The proposed change—the use of parchment to that of paper—would of itself be no security against the effect produced by bad ink? I am hardly prepared to say that, because I think paper would not act upon ink like the parchment does.
208. That may be, but if inferior be used even upon paper, I presume there is a danger of illegibility, arising from the inferiority of ink? Undoubtedly.
209. And you are not prepared to say how far that injury may arise in the case of the use of paper and bad ink? I cannot say from experience. I can only judge from records in the office; and the records on paper are, on the whole, in better preservation than the records on parchment.
210. You have alluded to records on paper so far back as 1784? 1794 I meant; but I don't know that our records go so far back.
211. The Colony was only founded in 1788; it must have been '94. Were those original paper records of so old a date likely to be referred to as much as parchment records ten or twenty years old? No.
212. Then, would not the fact of the repeated references to the parchment records possibly account, in some instances, for obliteration? I hardly think so; because it is not in the parchment; it is in the writing—in the ink—the parchment is perfect. The paper records are thumbled; they have given way at the corners and at the creases.
213. Then, are there not instances in the case of paper records where the writing is illegible and faded? No; there are many cases where it is faint, but none in which it is illegible, that I have met with.
214. If vellum were used instead of parchment, do you not think that the obliteration would not be so perceptible? I am not acquainted with the nature of vellum, or the difference between vellum and parchment, sufficiently to say.
215. I think you stated that there were original wills deposited in your office? Some few.
216. Only a few? Perhaps one hundred.
217. Then they are not deposited in any fire-proof room or vault? No; they are in a small iron safe.
218. Is there any vault at all in your office for records of any description? None.
219. You stated that there were wills thirty or forty years old, supposed to have been made by parties since deceased? There are.
220. Are their names endorsed? The names are always endorsed, thus:—received from so and so, at such a date, and signed by the depositor and the Registrar.
221. Have any steps been taken by advertising for them in the public papers? None.
222. Do you not think such a course desirable? I suggested it to the Government some months ago, but I had no instructions.
223. By the Chairman: With respect to the question as to allowing private search where the parties desired, would not that lead to a continued infraction by solicitors—perhaps not in much business—to get up cases, and, in fact, a breaking in upon the rule? It might be abused.
224. Is there anything else you can state, in reference to this branch of your office, not adverted to? I think that I could suggest a new system of registration, which would obviate a great many inconveniences of the present system, but it is one that would require a complete alteration in the law of property, and it would meet with very great opposition, I think, from the lawyers, as it would do away, to a great extent, with their vocation; this is the system which was recommended by the Commissioners appointed in England, composed of the most able conveyancers and the most able statesmen. It is very similar to Mr. Torrens' system, which comes into operation in South Australia on the first of July; in fact, it is so similar that Mr. Torrens might have been accused of plagiarism if his system had not been made public before the other.
225. That, perhaps, would take up some time; have you drawn a paper up of the plan? I can give you a summary of the recommendations of the Commissioners in England.
226. Who is at the head of that Commission? Mr. Walpole; Mr. Lowe was one, Mr. Scully, Mr. Evelyn Denison, the present Speaker, and others; and with them were united some of the leading conveyancers of the day.
227. By Mr. Piddington: What was the Committee appointed for? To consider the subject of the registration of title, with reference to the sale and transfer of land.

THURSDAY 10 JUNE, 1858.

Present:—

Mr. OWEN,
Mr. JONES,Mr. ALDCORN,
Mr. HAY.

ROBERT OWEN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

Robert Richard Torrens, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You have, I believe, held the office of Registrar General at Adelaide? R. R. Torrens,
Esq.
2. And you have a full knowledge of the present system of registration carried on there? Yes.
3. Will you state what systems have been adopted and are now existing? There are three 10 June, 1858.
modes of registration in South Australia in force—one, registration by memorial, the second by enrolment, and the third by deposit of a duplicate of the deed.
4. By enrolment, you mean copies of deeds verified? Yes. The memorial is an abstract of the leading points in the deed; and the duty is imposed on the Registrar General of ascertaining that all the material facts stated in the deed are contained in the abstract.
5. That system has been abandoned? No; it is still existing in South Australia.
6. Then, people have the option of adopting that or the other modes you mention? The Act is such that, notwithstanding the deposit of the duplicate, or the enrolment, the memorial is also required. I may state that the Act is a most defective one.
7. By Mr. Hay: The Act at present in force? Yes. It is universally condemned.
8. With respect to the second system, that of enrolment, how has that operated? Both with regard to memorials and enrolments, the instrument has to be drawn out on parchment of a particular size with a margin of a specified width to admit of binding, and these are all bound up into volumes. The enrolment is brought by the solicitor, who declares to the accuracy of it as a copy of the original instrument, and the signatures of the parties have to be attested by one of the parties, or by an attesting witness to the original instrument. That has been found very cumbersome.
9. By the Chairman: Is the verification not by affidavit, stating that such names to the deed are in the handwriting of the parties? It is by an affidavit; but that may be either by the parties themselves acknowledging the correctness of the memorial, or by the clerk of the solicitor, or other person who was a witness to the original deed.
10. An actual witness to the original deed? Yes.
11. With respect to the duplicate, how is that brought in? Exactly in the same way as the enrolment.
12. Must there be a verification of its correctness? Yes, by the solicitor who prepared the deed.
13. Is it of necessity on parchment? Yes.
14. Of a prescribed size? Of a prescribed size with a margin for binding.
15. Has it been at all observed that there has been any defacing or defect by time in the writing on the parchment? No.
16. Your registers and records are all complete as to that? We have had no complaint.
17. You have not observed any disappearance of the writing? No. I would mention that some land grants recently have been lithographed instead of printed, and it was discovered that, through some part of the process of lithographing not being properly carried out—I believe it was because too much grease, or size, or some material, was used—the ink could be rubbed out with India rubber with the greatest facility; but that has since been rectified by more care in the lithographing.
18. With respect to your indexes, what is the system adopted? It is an alphabetical index. The name of each of the parties to an instrument in entered in the index.
19. The vendor and vendee, for instance? Yes, or trustees: so that the same instrument sometimes requires very many entries in the index book—as many as there are parties or trustees.
20. Is not that found cumbersome? Very cumbersome.
21. Do you consider it necessary? No. Originally it was not required that any memorandum should be made opposite the name, guiding the party making search as to what the nature of the instrument was, or as to what property it affected; so that a person making search would have, in fact, to examine every deed he found in the name of that person; and sometimes it has entailed a waste of time, amounting to three or four weeks, to examine in some names in the books.
22. Does that continue, or have you corrected it? I corrected that immediately I took the office, by setting up another index, which is, in fact, abstracted from the original one; but placing the name of the person once for all in the book, leaving a considerable space under that name, and opposite the name placing the reference number of each instrument that was registered in that name, with a memorandum describing the nature of the instrument, and the property affected thereby.
23. Is your index a general one, or divided into districts or counties? A general one.
24. Has it ever occurred to you that the index might be improved, and the labor of search diminished, by the country being divided into districts? I think it would be increased rather than diminished.
25. Will you state why? It will very frequently happen that the same instrument will refer to properties in several districts; and in that case the entries would have to be made in an index for each of those several districts.
26. Is that the only difficulty you see? That is the chief difficulty. But with respect to the system of registration by deposit of duplicate, I can see a very great difficulty, for if there were a Registry Office for each district—which, I presume, would be contemplated in that

R. R. Torrens,
Esq.

- that case—a question would arise in which registry an instrument should be deposited which referred to properties in a great many districts; as, for instance, in the case of a will devising property in three or four districts, a question would arise where the probate, or duplicate, or original will, should be deposited.
27. I do not mean an office for depositing instruments, but an index for shortening search? I do not think search would be shortened by it.
28. With respect to the difficulty you suggest as to the property being in different counties, say three, with an index for each, would it not be practicable to enter the deed in the index for each county? Yes, quite practicable; but I cannot see any benefit to be gained thereby, because in one general index could be stated the number of the deed, the nature of it, the property which it affects, and the county or district in which the property is situated. It would be easier to search in one general index than in several, and easier for the office.
29. I presume that, in your experience, you have found that the great majority of deeds refer only to one property, excepting wills? A considerable majority certainly do.
30. Are the searches in the office made by the clerks, or by the public? Searches are made by the clerks of professional persons, as a general rule; but any person, upon paying the fee, can make a search.
31. Then it is a free search to the public, in fact? Yes.
32. Not at all restricted to particular persons? No; any person paying the fee can make a search.
33. What fees are paid on registration? I have left the office some time, and cannot charge my memory with the amounts. I have been two years out of the office; but I believe the Act can be found in the Library here. If I recollect right, the fee is half-a-crown for making a search.
34. The charge here is seven shillings on the acknowledgment of a married woman—does that bring it to your memory? I cannot charge my memory to state the fees. I think it objectionable to allow the clerks of professional men, and the public indiscriminately, to search, from the facility afforded to a fraudulent person of tearing out a leaf or making an alteration.
35. You would, therefore, recommend that searches should be made by properly authorized clerks in the office? Yes.
36. Have you had any instance of fraudulent attempt? Not in South Australia. I have heard of two attempts of the kind having been made in Western Australia.
37. Can you state the income of the office from fees at the time you left? I think it was about £7,000 a year. It greatly exceeded the cost of the department.
38. Do you recollect the cost? No. If I had had notice, I would have brought papers that would have shewn it. Reference to papers here will doubtless supply these facts. The Estimates of South Australia for last year will shew the cost. I think it was about £3,000.
39. Does the Registration Office at Adelaide comprise any other records except deeds and wills; for instance, births, deaths, and marriages? The two departments have recently been separated, under an Act which I drafted and carried in the Legislature.
40. Was it found inconvenient to embrace the two? There is no connexion whatever between the duties of the two, and it was found embarrassing to mingle them.
41. Is your registration building distinct from any other house, or fire-proof? No; it is attached to the Supreme Court, and is so inconvenient that it is almost impossible to conduct the business in it.
42. I believe some change or supposed improvement is proposed to be adopted with regard to registration at Adelaide? Yes; an Act has been passed by the Legislature, which comes into force on the first of July next.
43. Have you a copy of that Act? Yes; I beg to place it on the table. (The witness handed in the same.)
44. By Mr. Jones: What is the title of that Act? "An Act to simplify the laws relating to the transfer and encumbrance of freehold and other interests in land." It was assented to on the 27th January, 1858.
45. By the Chairman: The system authorized by that Act has not been in operation yet? No.
46. You cannot form any satisfactory opinion as yet whether it is likely to answer well? I have no doubt in my own mind it will.
47. It has not been tried? It has not been tried.
48. Will you have the kindness to state, in as short terms as may be convenient to you, the outline features of that Act, and how it originated? The Act originated—the idea of it—from my having previously been Collector of Customs in South Australia, and having been connected with the Customs of the Port of London, having the management of the law relating to the transfer of property in shipping. When I took the office of Registrar General, and saw the operation of the law relating to the transfer of property in land, it struck me that a very great benefit would be obtained by adopting the principles of the law relating to the transfer of shipping property for the transfer of property in land. The chief features of this Act are, that the act of registration alone should affect or encumber property in any way, and that deeds or other instruments in writing should have no effect whatever as giving a lien upon land. The next principle is, that whenever a fee simple is transferred from one person to another, the existing land grant should be surrendered, and a fresh grant issued to the purchaser, or other person succeeding to the property; in case of subdivision, a grant would be issued to each of the parties who became proprietors of a portion; and in case the entire property were not sold, a grant for the balance would be issued to the vendor of the property, or person subdividing it. The next feature is, that all titles so registered should be absolutely indefeasible, and that persons who might by the operation of the Act, be deprived of any inheritance or other right in the land, should receive compensation to the extent of the value of the property of which they were deprived. A small per centage is levied levied on all properties brought under the Act, in order to constitute a compensation fund for such purpose; and, in the event of that compensation fund failing, the balance is proposed to be made good out of the general revenues. The object is to avoid a very great hardship which at present exists, namely, that a bona fide purchaser of land for valuable consideration, if the title is subsequently found to be defective, loses not only the land for which he has paid, but all the improvements he has put upon it; perhaps exceeding very much indeed the original value of the land. Many cases of that kind have occurred in South Australia.

R. R. Torrens,
Esq.
10 June, 1858.

49. How are these titles investigated? It is proposed that all lands granted after the day appointed for the Act to come into force shall be absolutely under the Act; and that with regard to all lands granted prior to that date it shall be optional with the proprietors to bring them under its operation, or not. The process is this: a Board of Commissioners are appointed, who are not to be legal men—the Registrar General to be Chairman—aided by the advice of two solicitors, who would report to them on each application. The party making application to have his property brought under the Act would be required to deposit with the solicitors of the Board his title deeds, together with an abstract of his title, to the correctness of which declaration should be made. Upon investigation of this title, if found a good one, or found defective, a certain advertisement, varying according to the nature of the case—that is, as to whether the title was more or less complicated—would be required to be inserted, in all cases, in the South Australian Government Gazette, and in at least one newspaper; and complicated titles, for the protection of parties, would require to be likewise advertised in the Gazettes of the Australian Colonies, and also in the London Gazette. A time would then be appointed by the Commissioners within which it would be lawful for persons to lodge a caveat, forbidding to bring the property under the operation of the Act. The parties lodging the caveat would be bound to take proceedings to prosecute their claim within three months, and the case would be tried in the Supreme Court, and directions given to the Registrar General which he would be bound to obey.

50. Can you state how many deeds, upon the average, came into the Registration Office at Adelaide at the time you were at the head of it? I think there were about eighty thousand deeds.

51. In what period? From the time of the foundation of the Registration Office—some sixteen years ago.

52. What is the weekly or monthly average? It is very irregular. During the period of excitement following the gold discovery sales of land were very numerous, and deeds came in, in great numbers. In periods of distress and panic there are more mortgages to record. The amount of business is very irregular indeed; but, speaking from memory, I should say the number of deeds might average seven thousand a year.

53. Would not the investigation of these require a vast amount of labor? Very much less labor than the present system. When the properties were brought under the Act the investigation would be once for all. At present that investigation takes place every time the property is dealt with. For instance, if a person purchases a property to-day, an abstract of the title is made out by a professional gentleman, and it has to be examined by the professional adviser of the purchaser. If that purchaser, next week, should require to mortgage the property, the solicitor of the mortgagee will require an abstract, which is furnished at very considerable expense, and the same investigation has to be gone through; and again, if the property is sold. The same expense and labor has to be gone through every time. I have known many instances in which, within a year or two, the legal expenses of transfer have exceeded the value of the property.

54. That amount of labor is shared in by a large number of persons? Yes; but under the proposed system the labor would be gone through once and once only; for, after the land was brought under the Act, retrospective investigation of the title would be cut off and made unnecessary, for each holder of the fee simple would hold direct from the Crown, and his title would be indefeasible, so that a purchaser need not go beyond the land grant. It is a necessary part of the system that every person holding the fee simple has a land grant; and the duplicate of that land grant is bound up in the Registry Book. Every mortgage, or lease, or other transaction affecting that particular property has to be registered, and a memorandum stating the fact that it has been registered is endorsed on the land grant in possession of the proprietor, and is also endorsed in the Registry Book under the entry of the land grant, so that any person desiring to lend money on property, or to lease or purchase it, sees at a glance everything that can affect the property, without the intervention of a solicitor to advise him at all. That which does not appear upon the Registry and upon the face of the grant is held not to exist as affecting the property.

55. Then, supposing this operation takes place this year, and two or three years elapse in which various changes are made, trusts created, devises under wills, and so on, in what way is it again brought up to the point of the grant? The person holding the fee simple can always sell his interest in the property, subject to the encumbrances that are registered against it. Any person purchasing purchases subject to all mortgages, settlements, or encumbrances otherwise incurred.

56. By Mr. Jones: Which are noted in the Registration Book? Yes.

57. But the property is quite free from encumbrances that are not registered? Yes; but any person can sell his interest, subject to all those limitations which depend on his interest.

58. And his interest depends simply on the registration? Yes. A person may have some jointure or annuity secured upon his property; and all such transactions would be made valid by an entry notifying the same in the Registry Book, and also on the land grant. The land grant is to represent exactly, in fact, a ship's register of the old form, on the back of which used to be endorsed all transfers of less than half the property of the ship, and all mortgages affecting the ship; and unless they were entered in that way, and signed by a Collector of Customs, they were not valid. It is not a new experiment; it is a system I myself

R. B. Torrens, myself carried out for years in respect of shipping; and it has been in operation for six hundred years in Hamburg, as to real property.

59. By the Chairman: Is it not the mode you mention, as to the encumbrance or transfer of shipping, of a comparatively simple kind, because it affects personal property? I conceive that the complication existing with regard to the title in landed property is not an essential characteristic of landed property, so much as it is a fictitious affair created by the English law of real property, which differs from that of every other country in the world, and is much more complicated. I consider all these matters to be the creatures of mistaken legislation—that we have made these complications and can unmake them.

60. By Mr. Hay: There is one cause of complication, the indefinite subdivision which may take place in land, which cannot take place in a ship? So far from that adding to the difficulty of dealing with land, I think the difficulties are on the side of the ship in that particular, because you cannot cut off a part of a ship and deliver it over to any person, nor can you give him the same kind of right over the fore-castle of a ship that you can give him over the eighth of an acre of land; you can allow a person to do what he pleases with the eighth of an acre of land, but you cannot do so with a portion of a ship. So far as any difficulties exist in the nature of the two things, the difficulties are greater with regard to shipping.

61. Does it not strike you that there may be greater difficulty in the identification of the particular portions of land into which an estate may be subdivided? No greater difficulty under the new Act than exists at present. That difficulty, so far as it lies, exists now. The solicitor employed in conveying a portion of an estate must depend upon the accuracy of the surveyor's measurement at present. The Act does not alter that in any way; but it proposes that the Registrar General should have power to demand of every person subdividing land to deposit in the Registration Office a map on a certain scale—sufficiently large to admit of accurate delineation—the accuracy of which is required to be sworn to; and purchaser and vendor are alike bound by that map.

62. By Mr. Jones: The new plan rather diminishes the chances of complication? It diminishes the chances of complication, inasmuch as the holder of each portion holds his portion direct from the Crown, and has nothing to do with other matters that might affect the title of the party originally holding the land.

63. While, under the existing system, he may derive his title from a dozen, or twenty, or more deeds, in each of which may be errors of description? Yes; each time the property is dealt with by sale or mortgage a fresh link is added to the chain of title; so that every transaction increases the cost of the next by another investigation.

64. And to a certain extent increases the liability to error? Certainly.

65. By Mr. Hay: Seeing that the State becomes guarantee for the correctness of all these titles, it will be requisite there should be some machinery for insuring their accuracy—what security do you propose to give the public in that respect? It is proposed in this Act that, with regard to all grants issued after it comes into operation, the original description should never be departed from. It is a defect I have observed in South Australia, that descriptions will vary in deeds intended to affect the same property. One description will not quite accord with another.

66. By the Chairman: Arising from errors? One description may be more minute than another. It is proposed that in making out the grants the descriptions should be given as correctly as possible. No doubt there is a difficulty with regard to the descriptions, but it is a difficulty which exists now. It is not an objection to an Act improving existing evils in many respects if there be one difficulty which it cannot get over. Surveyors and others may make errors in these matters. We must go on the principle caveat emptor, with regard to them.

67. By Mr. Hay: But here it is the State that must beware, because the State guarantees the title? I do not see that mistake is at all likely to arise with ordinary care.

68. Do you propose that there should be any intervention of officers of the Survey Department, or any security for the proficiency of the surveyors employed to prepare these maps? No. Each person will be allowed to employ his own surveyor to prepare his map, and he is bound to make a declaration to the accuracy of it, to the best of his knowledge and belief.

69. The owner or the surveyor? Either, as the Registrar General may require, or both. In practically working the thing out, it is not likely such a case could be made out as would involve any loss to the public. I conceive that the losses the public would have to make good, failing the party wrongfully in possession, would arise more frequently in cases of disputed heirship; for instance, in a case of supposed intestacy, a person inheriting as heir-at-law, and a will being afterwards found giving the property to another. It is more in cases of that kind that the insurance fund I have mentioned would be drawn upon.

70. By the Chairman: Then, if there be any errors, accidental or intentional, with regard to the surveys or the title, the public may become answerable to a large amount? It is not probable that the public would become answerable, for it is believed the insurance fund will be sufficient to meet all claims. It is proposed that, in the first instance, the remedy should be sought from the person who receives the benefit of the error; that is to say, if a person inheriting as heir-at-law, a will being afterwards found, or a person who through some mistake in a conveyance, or other conceivable way, is in possession of property belonging to another, that person would be proceeded against, in the first instance, to recover the amount of the value of the land which he was thus wrongfully in possession of.

71. Proceedings would be taken against the party committing the fraud? Fraud and error are treated separately. First of all, in case of error, the rightful heir will have to obtain a decision of the Supreme Court recognizing him as such. A jury will then be impanelled to assess the value of the property at the time the rightful heir was dispossessed. He would then be entitled to recover from the person wrongfully in possession; failing recovery from him, then from the insurance fund; and failing that, then from the general revenue. It is presumed, however, that such a case as the last will not occur. It will be left optional with the the person wrongfully in possession to give up the property, instead of paying down the money assessed as the value of the property at the time the rightful heir was dispossessed. I would illustrate this point by a case which came under my own cognizance. A Mr. B— was possessed of some acres of land in the City of Adelaide; having gone to India, he there became insolvent; the Insolvency Court of India gave a decree sequestrating this property for the benefit of B—'s creditors; the property was sold under this decree to two different purchasers; and buildings to the amount of some £15,000 or £20,000 were erected on it, the value of the land itself not being more than £500 or £600. Mr. B—'s son claimed the property on the ground that the Insolvency Court in India had no jurisdiction over lands in Australia; and he therefore claimed all the buildings and all the property. Other cases of the same kind have arisen, and it appears contrary to justice and common sense that persons in such a position as the younger B— then was should receive all this large amount of capital expended on the property by bona fide purchasers. With this view, it is proposed to limit the amount recoverable to the value of the land at the time the error arose.

72. Has the system you have described been at all in operation in any country? In Hamburg almost the same system has been in operation for six hundred years. The principles are the same. And there law suits regarding real property are almost unknown. I have the assurance of a gentleman of large experience in dealing with property there that there was only one law suit in fifty years, and that the cost of a conveyance is only seven shillings and sixpence.

73. By Mr. Jones: To what do you attribute the infrequency of law suits? To the impossibility of fraud under this system of registration. I depart from the Hamburg system, by giving each person a duplicate of the land grant. In Hamburg the parties have to attend at the registration office, and one acknowledges that he sells and the other that he purchases. The name of the person who purchases is then entered in the book as the proprietor. All these difficulties, law suits, and expenses arise from deeds. If there were no deeds we would have none of these law suits. Doing away with deeds, we do away with that which has given rise to all the complication.

74. By the Chairman: Is it proposed in establishing this system to prevent persons from creating trusts? No; a form of bill of trust is given in the Act, which there is full liberty to vary and add to, according to the circumstances of the case. The bill of trust will be registered in the same way that I have described with regard to a mortgage. Notice of it will thus be given.

75. And in like manner trusts, contingencies, and remainders created by wills? Yes. The wills will have to be proved in the manner at present in force in the Colony, that is, by the production of the will, or the probate of it; and the particulars will be entered in the Registry Book. A person inheriting the fee simple will have to make a declaration, and satisfy the Registrar General as to his title; and on that being done, he would receive, on demanding it, a grant in his own name, in order to enable him to sell. It is not proposed to interfere in any way with the law of inheritance or descent, or with the law which regulates the transmission of property through Insolvency Courts, except in so far as will enable the Registrar General to enter the names of parties receiving, through inheritance, decree of Insolvency Courts, marriage settlement, or otherwise.

76. Are you aware of any publication in which the Hamburg system is described or illustrated? There is a little work, published in South Australia by a German lawyer, which gives an outline of the Hamburg system. I think it is entitled, "The Voice of Reason and History, applied to the English law of Real Property," or some title of that kind.

77. Could you suggest by what channel we could get that publication? I will send a copy of it myself to the Committee. I would state that, with regard to mortgaging, a totally new system is proposed in this Act. Instead of the fee simple passing to the mortgagee as at present, involving all the difficulties and incumbrances of the title, and the difficulties of release, it is proposed that the fee simple should still remain in the mortgagor, but that he should draw up a bill of mortgage, a form of which is attached as a Schedule to the Act, setting forth that further to secure a loan, specifying the amount, &c., he pledges the property described; and setting forth also the conditions of the mortgage, the rate of interest, the dates at which it is to be paid, the date at which the principal is to be repaid, and any other covenants that may be desired between the parties. If failure be made in any of these covenants, the mortgagee is required to give notice to the mortgagor, calling upon him to remedy the default; and after the lapse of three months from the service of such notice the mortgagor is entitled to sell the property. The Registrar General is directed to give effect to such sale in the same manner as if it had been made by the mortgagor instead of the mortgagee.

78. In the same way as if he had possessed the fee simple? Yes; but no transfer of the fee simple takes place, unless the mortgagor fails in the fulfilment of the covenants set forth in the mortgage. It is also provided that in case the mortgagee is absent, without the jurisdiction, at the date appointed for repayment of the principal sum borrowed, the mortgagor can pay the money into the hands of the Registrar General, who will cancel the mortgage upon receipt of the money. The object is to prevent the great loss and inconvenience which have been experienced, in South Australia at all events, by mortgagees absenting themselves from the Colony, and not leaving any person to grant a release. The titles to properties have thus been left in a defective state for a considerable period. It also obviates any inconvenience that might arise through the death of the mortgagee, and the circumstance of his representatives being minors. The Register Book is thus the foundation of the whole system. Each instrument that is outstanding will have on it a reference to the volume and folio of the Register Book in which the particulars of that instrument are registered; so that the index—which has been the great objection hitherto to registration, and the great difficulty—is altogether done away with, for every instrument is its own index.

R. B. Torrens, Esq.
 10 June, 1868. It might be considered by some persons desirable to keep up an index under names, with a view to ascertain what property belonged to a party dying intestate, or to a fraudulent insolvent desiring to conceal his property, or for other purposes. Some persons, however, wish that perfect secrecy should be observed with regard to people's possessions in land, and object to registration on the ground that such secrecy is thereby diminished. Under the system proposed in this Act, unless an index under names is also set up, there would be complete secrecy, for no one not in possession of some instrument affecting property would be in a position to find out the history of that property, as he could not give to the Registrar General the number and folio of the Register. I think I have now described the principal features of the Act. I would beg to add to the evidence I have given, that a Report was laid on the Table of the House of Commons on the 15th May, 1857, which was drawn up by a Commission of the most eminent conveyancers in England, and that report recommends identically what is carried out in this Act. Almost every provision of this Act is put forward as a recommendation of that Report. I beg to hand in a copy to the Committee. (The witness handed in the same.) The only way I can account for the extraordinary identity is that we both refer to the same source—the Shipping Act. The names of the members of the Commission are here set forth:—Horatio Walpole, Napier, Cockburn, the Attorney General, Bethell, the Solicitor General, Headlam, Scully, Lowe, well known in this Legislature, Lewis, a barrister, Drummond, Evelyn Denison, Wilson, and Cookson. Wilson, I think, is an attorney, and Cookson is a very eminent conveyancer. I regret to say the evidence taken by this Commission, which is of very great value indeed, is not annexed to this copy of the Report. It was not deemed by the Legislature of New Zealand, under whose order this reprint was executed, expedient to go to the expense of printing all the voluminous evidence.

79. Will you be kind enough to describe the New Zealand system, so far as you are acquainted with it? The valuable portion of the New Zealand system of registration, according to my judgment, consists in the index. A book, called the Title Page Book, is opened, and at the head of each page is placed a brief memorandum of the land grant, or other root of title, and at the foot a diagram of the property to which the grant or other instrument refers. On the same page are entered the numbers which refer to all instruments connected with that property. Thus every instrument brought to be registered is numbered, the numbers running consecutively; and there is a numerical index in addition to this Title Page Book. By referring to the number in the numerical index a reference will be found to the volume and folio of the Title Page Book, on which are set forth the numbers of all instruments registered affecting that particular property. By means of these numbers the instrument can be got at, and search can be made with greater expedition than in any other way with which I am acquainted; at least so far as ascertaining what instruments have been registered affecting the property. It would not, of course, do away with the necessity of examining these instruments to see that they are correctly drawn and do what they profess to do, nor with the necessity of inquiring into questions of heirship, inheritance, &c., which might affect the title. It is part of the practice in New Zealand, but one which I do not approve of, to copy the instruments brought to be registered into books. I object to it, because it throws a responsibility on the Registrar General and his clerks, which I think should rather be borne by the professional men who draw up the instruments, and because it makes the registration so costly and cumbrous to the public. The instruments in New Zealand are drawn on much shorter forms than either in England or any of the Colonies with which I am acquainted. There has been an Act passed in New Zealand to simplify conveyancing, and to establish those forms to which I refer.

80. Is that Act in operation now? It has been in operation for some time.

81. Are you aware whether it has been found difficult to carry it out? No. Mr. Whittaker, the Solicitor General, has told me it works exceedingly well. One feature of it is embodied in the Act which has been passed by the South Australian Legislature, namely, that of ceasing to transfer the fee simple to mortgagees. That part of the English law has been abolished in New Zealand; and that is one of the recommendations of the report of the Commission I have referred to in England.

82. By Mr. Jones: What were the difficulties which arose from the junction of the two branches of registration in South Australia—that of deeds affecting property, and that of births, deaths, and marriages? There was no difficulty; it was found convenient to divide them. The officers who were registering births, marriages, and deaths, were employed exclusively in that way. It was found better that they should be so, because they became more conversant with the business. One set of clerks were employed on the deeds, and another on the births, marriages, and deaths. I had to draw up a new system for registering births, deaths, and marriages; the existing one being found defective. If the Committee wish, I will describe the system now in operation:—The country was divided into districts, for the purpose of registering births, deaths, and marriages. In each district a Deputy Registrar was appointed, and there was a central office in Adelaide. No ministers of religion are paid by the State in South Australia; and in several sects the ministers were quite uneducated, and incompetent to perform the functions that are in England exacted from the clergymen of the Church of England. The consequence was, that there was the utmost irregularity in registering marriages. A form of marriage certificate was required by law, which has to be drawn up in duplicate, setting forth the names of the parties, their description, and residences, and the description and residences of the parents of the parties. These are signed by the parties witnessing the marriage, and by the clergyman. One of these certificates the minister of religion is bound to forward by the next post to the Registrar General; the other he is bound to forward to the Deputy Registrar of the district in which the marriage is performed. The parents of any child born, or the person in whose house the birth takes place, are bound to give notice of the same, in a particular form, to the District Registrar, who sends a duplicate of that form, signed by the parties, to the Registrar General. With regard to deaths, the person in whose house a death occurs, the coroner, or other person cognizant cognizant of a death, is bound to give notice of such death to the District Registrar, and also to the Registrar General. These certificates, bearing the original signatures of the parties married, or of the parties certifying a birth or death, are bound up, both in the District and General Registration Offices, as permanent records of the transactions; and they constitute thus the best legal evidence, for they are all original documents. It was found expedient in this Act to depart from the previous system, which was, that baptisms and burials were registered as in England, whereas we now register births and deaths.

83. Do you see any inconvenience that is likely to arise from the two branches being conducted in the same establishment? None at all from their being conducted under the same head; but for despatch of business, regularity, and order, the clerks who attend to one should be separate from those who attend to the other. There is no necessary connection between the two.

84. The clerks should attend to their own branches exclusively? That is the idea. In fact, in South Australia, in the distribution of the patronage of the Government departments, the superintendence of the registration of deeds is placed under the Attorney General; but the registration of births, deaths, and marriages, with which is also combined the preparation of statistics, is placed under the Chief Secretary—one being a legal matter, and the other having nothing to do with the law. I would add, that the system I have described was sent home in consequence of a despatch—I think from the Duke of Newcastle; and it was there examined and reported on by the Registrar General of England, who expressed approbation of it as the best he had seen; and it has now been giving satisfaction in South Australia for some years.

85. By the Chairman: You are aware that the two branches of registration are carried on in one building here? Yes.

86. Are you aware of any objection to that, except as far as you have stated? No; I cannot see any objection whatever to that. It will be advisable, merely for official convenience, and to prevent interruption, that they should be in separate rooms.

87. For purposes of management and control, the business of both can be carried on quite as well as if they were in two distinct buildings? Quite as well.

88. Have you anything to add? Nothing occurs to me at present.

William Henry Archer, Esq., Assistant Registrar General of Victoria, called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You have had some experience of the subject referred to this Committee? Yes, for about five years in Victoria. I founded the Registrar General's Department there. Originally it was contemplated merely to attach to it births, deaths, marriages, and statistics. It was early in February, 1853, that the then Colonial Secretary handed me the Act that had been passed, and which was to come into operation in about six weeks from that time. I found that no measures had been taken to carry it into effect, and it was necessary for me to arrange the whole system, to get all the documents printed, and to put the machinery in motion. The first thing that struck me was the great defect existing in the very schedules appended to the Act—

2. The Registration of Deeds Act? No; the Act for the Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages. I thereupon drew up new schedules, containing in them certain columns which had been recommended by a Committee of the Statistical Society in London, composed of the first statisticians of the day (among whom was my old master, F. G. P. Neison,) for a Registration Act intended to be passed for Scotland. These schedules were submitted to, and received the approval of, the Executive Council of the day. They contained all that was asked in the Act passed by the Legislature of Victoria; and the additional columns were allowed to be printed, to see whether the experiment would prove successful. It has been tried now upwards of five years, and it has been eminently successful.

3. Does it in any way differ from the system adopted in this Colony? It differs very much in some points.

4. Is there any publication which shows that? The Statistical Register of Victoria, a volume edited by me, and published by authority in Victoria about three or four years ago, contains a complete description of the machinery of the Registrar General's Department. It contains especially the schedules of which I speak; and the additions which I made are printed therein in Italics.

5. Is that publication to be obtained from the Government of Victoria? Yes; the Colonial Secretary here sent a few days ago to the Government of Victoria, and he told me this morning he had received several copies immediately.

6. Is the registration of births, deaths, and marriages carried on in the same building as the registration of deeds? Yes; but it differs from the practice pursued by the Registrar General of New South Wales in one very important particular. The Registrar General here is by the Act constituted Registrar for Sydney; hence he has, by one of his officers, to receive the information in cases of birth and death, which with us is deputed to a District Registrar, apart from the chief office altogether, who has an office situated in a different part of the City of Melbourne.

7. A District Registrar for Melbourne? Yes. It is inconvenient, I conceive, to have the registration by means of informants in the same building where the Registrar General carries on his duties. In the first place the officer who acts for him cannot be considered in any shape a clerk, inasmuch as he has strictly to attend to the public, who daily call there. The room that officer occupies is so much taken away from the Registrar General, and the amount of salary paid to that officer swells the estimates of the staff, though the Registrar General receives no benefit in the shape of clerical services. Then, again, there is another clerk who has to do entirely different duties in the same room where men and women are constantly coming coming to give information; and, as you may naturally suppose, it must be embarrassing to a person to be listening to the details there necessarily given while he has to perform quite other functions.

8. Then, you think a great improvement might be effected by subdividing? I would have an entirely separate District Registrar, or, perhaps, registrars in convenient positions in the City of Sydney and the suburbs, and I would pay them by fee, not by fixed salary: paying them by fee would be an incentive to exertion.

9. What are the fees paid in Melbourne? We pay half-a-crown an entry—you pay three shillings.

10. And for searches? Searches are half-a-crown with us, and five shillings for a certificate—seven shillings and sixpence for both.

11. By Mr. Hay: You have only one District Registrar in Melbourne? At present.

12. Do you think there ought to be more? Sooner or later the City will have to be subdivided. It seems to me however that Sydney in its local features is so very different to Melbourne that it needs division sooner, inasmuch as you have a number of straggling localities, such as Balmain, Pyrmont, Woolloomooloo, &c., and it therefore seems to me that it must be very inconvenient, and many registrations must be lost in consequence of parties having to come in from those distant parts to a central office in Sydney.

13. Does the District Registrar for Melbourne act for the suburbs also? In some instances persons come; but we generally discourage it, being desirous to keep each Registrar to his own district—in fact that is the law; but, rather than lose the registration, we wink at the occasional reception of extra cases.

14. Is there a District Registrar for St. Kilda? Yes; and also District Registrars for Collingwood, Prahran, Brighton, Sandridge, Emerald Hill, &c.—in fact we multiply them as much as possible.

15. Then the District Registrar for Melbourne has only to do with the city district, which is only a part of the city in reality? Yes, quite so.

16. By Mr. Jones: As I understand, your chief recommendation is that a District Registrar or District Registrars should be appointed for Sydney, in order that the subordinate business of registration should be carried on by persons in no way connected with the general staff? Yes; and who should be paid by fees. The officer doing the duty in the Registrar General's Office can have no possible inducement to hunt up cases of birth and death that may now be escaping.

17. He gets his salary whether he registers few or many? Quite so.

18. By the Chairman: With respect to the registration of deeds, what is the system now adopted in Melbourne? The registration of deeds was brought under the charge of the Registrar General at the commencement of this year only. The system which obtains now is the same as that which has obtained ever since the Colony has been in existence. In fact, in all its features it is identical, as far as I have seen, with that which exists in New South Wales; with this exception, that we get the memorials only of deeds, whereas you have copies of the deeds themselves, with the signature of one of the parties.

19. You are not aware that we have no memorial here now, excepting in cattle mortgages? I was not aware of that. There is an especial difficulty, as it appears to me, with regard to receiving the verified copy of the deed here. The clerk has to wade through very frequently several sheets of closely written matter in order to abstract the particulars he requires to register; that is, not only the names of the parties, but a description of the property. I find that in some instances there are ten or a dozen sheets to go through. This must entail a large amount of clerical labor, which would not be necessary if there were a simple abstract always furnished with the copy, showing precisely those particulars that ought to be fully registered for convenient public reference.

20. Are you aware, or not, that this is very rapidly done by the clerks? They do not index so fast as we do in Victoria.

21. By Mr. Jones: Which you attribute to the want of this abstract? To the want of some short abstract of the particulars to be indexed. And it also appears to me that you throw a responsibility on the officer so examining for the purpose of indexing that it is possibly not judicious to put upon him. In South Australia they have the three forms of registration—memorial, enrolment, and a copy of the deed.

22. By the Chairman: At the option of the party? I am not sure whether it is optional.

23. By Mr. Hay: You have only one? We have only one—the memorial.

24. Do you consider that a good system? I think that, under the present system of registration, it is perhaps as good a system as can be devised, inasmuch as it throws the responsibility upon the parties negotiating the transaction. But, practically, I think, from what I have observed in Victoria, the memorials are very loosely drawn up; and they are, therefore, anything but satisfactory, looking at them in the light of the public interest.

25. By Mr. Jones: They are not in that respect so satisfactory as copies of the title deeds? By no means so satisfactory, in the absence of correctness.

26. By the Chairman: Are your memorials and other records of that kind on parchment? On parchment of a certain prescribed size.

27. Have you found any defect with regard to the writing disappearing? In some instances the ink, I believe, has faded.

28. Not to any great extent? In some few instances, I believe, it has materially faded.

29. By Mr. Jones: So as to be scarcely legible? Yes.

30. By the Chairman: Has any remedy been suggested or tried? None whatever.

31. By Mr. Hay: Is the place of deposit dry—free from damp? Yes. On the registration of deeds being transferred to the Registrar General, at the beginning of the year, I was deputed to see that a large stone room, 41 feet long by 21 feet in width, was erected or made available for the reception of the deeds and other documents; and the existing premises were so altered as to be rendered tolerably secure from fire, and thoroughly so from vermin. I proposed that all

all round the floors and up the skirting iron sheets should be placed, which was done. We have also placed in the receptacles for the various books and documents zinc partitions, so that rats cannot get to the interior. Then, with regard to the public when searching, there is a long desk, reaching almost from one end of the apartment to the other, and at each end of this is a clerk who is able to look down either side to see that the parties searching treat the books properly, and make no improper use of them. I found that the practice previously adopted in searching was to allow the searchers, who are generally the agents of professional men, to have pens and ink. I proposed that this should be done away with, and pencils only allowed; and this having met with the approval of the Registrar General, the suggestion was carried into effect. Instances had occurred where there had been ill treatment of the indexes, by blotting.

W. H. Archer,
Esq.
10 June, 1858.

32. By the Chairman: From carelessness? From carelessness on the part of the searchers.

33. Has there been any instance of fraud? I think on one occasion one document was abstracted some years ago, prior to that branch coming under the charge of the Registrar General; but I think such a thing is almost impossible now.

34. Do you think, as a principle, it is desirable to allow the public to meddle with the books? I think I should be disinclined to trust an ordinary Government clerk where property of mine was concerned. Of course you might have officers of such character and responsibility as to do away with that objection to a very great extent; but I really think people generally would like to have the right of search for themselves, either by themselves or through their professional agents.

35. You think that might be made compatible with the safety of the records? Decidedly. I think we are perfectly secure as we now stand.

36. By Mr. Hay: Do you think it might be made optional with the public to have the search made by themselves or their agents, or by the clerks of the office? Yes; that would meet the difficulty.

37. Do you not think searches could be made more economically by clerks appointed for the purpose? Yes, clerks acquainted with the matter would be able to do it more quickly. There is a great difference in the expedition of the various searchers; it varies in the ratio of their experience and natural quickness.

38. By the Chairman: You have only one general index in Victoria? One index for all lands in the Colony.

39. By Mr. Jones: For all deeds? Yes. The Registrar General's is the central office. There are no district offices.

40. By Mr. Hay: The index is not divided in any way? Not by districts, but by periods of time.

41. Is your index in a satisfactory state? It is anything but satisfactory.

42. By the Chairman: Could you suggest an improvement? In order not to deal hastily with the matter, the Registrar General of Victoria intimated to the legal profession that he was desirous to render the indexes more ready of reference, and invited suggestions for their improvement. Certain gentlemen accordingly made propositions to the Registrar General, which he placed in the Searching Room, for other parties to read and to note upon. And the different opinions expressed by the various lawyers and lawyers' clerks impress me with the notion that it is impossible, or next to impossible, to come to a satisfactory result so as to please all parties.

43. What occurs to your mind as the proper course? Under the present arrangements, I should propose that a general index, extending over the whole past period of registration, should be made. That would be a decided advantage to the public, inasmuch as they would not have to wade through so many books as they now have. We have something like eighty or ninety volumes to look through. Certain names, of course, are distributed through nearly all of them, the properties are frequently very indifferently described, and beyond that, I find that the descriptions in the indexes have never been examined with the memorials whence those indexes were made; so that searching may prove a most unsatisfactory process in very many instances after all.

44. Are the indexes on parchment? No; they were formerly made on paper. We are now having them done on parchment.

45. By Mr. Hay: I think you misapprehended one question I put, with reference to the fading of the ink, as to whether the place of deposit of deeds was dry. I alluded to the place where these deeds have been deposited for the last sixteen years? I do not think there was any damp.

46. You do not think it could be attributed to that? No. It strikes me that modern ink, so far as I have been able to compare it with ink anciently used, is decidedly inferior. Ink is now a chemical compound, in ancient days it was a mechanical mixture. I have seen manuscripts many centuries old in which the ink is fresher than the best ink used in modern times. Formerly they used powdered charcoal mixed with some mucilaginous material, and this made a kind of paint, which experience shows it is almost impossible to deface. In fact, there is a description of manuscript, called the palimpsest, the peculiarity of which is that the original writing is attempted to be defaced in order to insert other writing upon it; and there have been instances of manuscripts where three writings have been made on the parchment, and yet the original has been recovered. So that I think the use of good ink upon good parchment is the surest means of preservation. The ink that we use in modern days is made chiefly of sulphate of iron and galls; and that yellow color which we get from the faded ink is from the vegetable matter being too decayed, and a peroxide of iron left. Then, again, with regard to the paper: often in the bleaching they use an excessive amount of chlorine, and that has a tendency, it is asserted by some chemists, to destroy the permanency of the ink.

47. By the Chairman: Do you think it possible that any legal control could be obtained by

W. H. Archer, Esq., the Registrar General's Office as to the ink? If all the documents were prepared under the Registrar General's supervision, undoubtedly it could; but I do not see how you could insist upon the public using any particular description of ink, or how you could test it if you proposed to insist upon it.

10 June, 1858.

48. As to parchment, do you think such a quality of parchment could be obtained as would be a guarantee of permanency? We ought to be able to get it. I think vellum, which is the skin of very young calves, is perhaps the best.

49. That would be more expensive? Yes.

50. By Mr. Jones: Do you know the difference in the prices of vellum and parchment of the same size? I do not; in fact, it would not be safe to take Colonial prices. I would recommend that the articles should be got from home, and that we should be guided very much by the practice of the more important offices of record at home. Of late years much attention has been paid to the relative merits of the materials used for registration purposes; and I should say that by the Government here putting itself in communication with the Government at home, you would get the result of their experience.

51. By the Chairman: Are you aware that searches in some registration offices are confined to the officers of the establishment? I am not aware that they are so confined. I believe that in the General Registry Office in Edinburgh there are officers for searching, but whether it is compulsory to employ them, or not, I cannot say.

52. I think you were in the room when Mr. Torrens was describing the system about to be established in Adelaide? Yes.

53. Have you at all considered that system? I have. For some years past I have very frequently thought over the whole subject in connection with the law of real property in Great Britain, and having become aware of the nature of the laws obtaining in certain countries on the Continent, on making comparisons between them I came to the conclusion that it would be highly desirable that we should assimilate our mode of transfer of land to that which exists in certain parts of Europe. So long as five years ago I made the suggestion to Mr. La Trobe. I have also spoken about it on several occasions since, and within the last few months to the late Chief Secretary of Victoria; and I was very delighted to find on meeting with Mr. Torrens that not only had he in his own mind come to a similar conclusion, but that he had (which I was not before aware of) carried it into effect in South Australia, inasmuch as he has succeeded, as a Member of Parliament, in passing an Act which will come into operation on the first of July next in South Australia.

54. Do I understand that you agree with the principles of that Act? I most cordially concur in them. I think the tendency of all thoughtful men upon the subject, especially at home, would lead one to consider that the change is desirable. For twenty or thirty years past the subject has engaged the attention of the great legal reformers at home. Several reports have been issued from time to time bearing on the matter; and a very recent one has recommended similar measures to those proposed in Mr. Torrens' Act; therefore, I think it would be highly desirable that the united Colonies of Australia should endeavour to assimilate their modes of procedure to the recommendations made by the Committee on the Registration of Instruments at home, as well as to Mr. Torrens' Act.

55. Have you had any means of attentive observation of the system pursued in the United States of America as to registration? None, excepting by reading. From all I can learn it has given satisfaction there.

56. Is it in any way similar to that mentioned by Mr. Torrens? In some slight respects it is. There is not such a sweeping change, however, as that which I should like to see being carried out in America.

57. Do you think that any simplicity might be attained, or labor avoided, by dividing the Colony of Victoria, for instance, into certain districts for the purpose of the registration of deeds? Yes, I think so. I do not see why there should not be registration offices established in convenient parts of Victoria where persons could have all transactions in their respective neighbourhoods entered in indexes, to which they might appeal, without the trouble and expense of going to the metropolis.

58. In fact, local registrations? Yes. At the same time I think it would be necessary that the local registrars should be under the Registrar General, and should send duplicates to the Registrar General's Office in Melbourne, so that there might be a general central index as well.

59. By Mr. Hay: If the search were made by the clerks in the office it would not be necessary for parties to come up to Melbourne for the purpose? No, not if you made it a matter of compulsion.

60. Nor even if it were a matter of choice? If it were a matter of choice they could go if they pleased.

61. They could have the search made by the clerks of the office, and there would be no necessity for them to come to Melbourne, or to engage a solicitor in Melbourne, as it could be done by communication with the office? Yes, if they pleased; but unless you made it compulsory it would not meet the case of a person unwilling to trust the Government officers.

62. By the Chairman: Supposing several properties were included in one conveyance, do you see any difficulty that would arise from that circumstance in regard to these local registrations? They might register them in the central office, and in each district. I know that it frequently entails much expense and loss of time at present through parties having to come up from Geelong and other parts of the Colony in order to search for titles. The agents are detained in town some days, and, of course, very considerable expense is incurred.

63. The indexes must, I presume, have become so extensive as to require great employment of time to look down the letters? Yes.

64. That you think would be diminished by a subdivision of offices? I think it would.
65. By Mr. Hay: That might be accomplished in the General Registration Office, by a subdivision of the indexes, without any Deputy Registrars? It might.
66. By the Chairman: Either in the central office or in district offices a subdivision of the index might take place? Undoubtedly; but my suggestion to have District Registrars would be to enable parties living near to refer immediately without loss of time.
67. By Mr. Hay: Facility of conducting search might be attained by a subdivision of the index, without any district offices? It might be an advantage where parties knew exactly where land was situated for them to appeal immediately to the book relating to the district where the land lay; but I conceive that having a multiplicity of indexes for various districts in the Registrar General's chief office would entail much additional labor on the searchers, where they did not know the exact county or district in which the land they were searching for existed.
68. Would you have the whole index in each district? No; the memorials of the district only should be registered. Perhaps, however, it would be well, under such circumstances, to provide for a duplicate memorial to be sent to the central office, in the same manner as we have duplicate registrations of births, deaths, and marriages, where the District Registrar keeps one and the other is sent on to the head office, and both are originals, having the signatures of the informants attached.
69. You think it would still be necessary that complete information with regard to every property in the country should be registered at the head office? I think so.
70. The system of District Registrars would, of course, entail additional expense to the public? Yes; but I think it would be willingly borne for the sake of the convenience.
71. By the Chairman: What are the different fees charged in Victoria? The same as those received in New South Wales. The same schedules of the Registration of Deeds Acts apply to both Colonies.
72. Is our Registration Act of 1844 in force in Victoria? I do not remember the exact Act; but I could see immediately on reference to Callaghan.
73. The Act requiring verified copies? That was never in force as far as Port Phillip was concerned. A special Act was made with regard to Port Phillip, embodying a schedule of fees that, I think, are the same as those received in New South Wales. A memorial costs twelve shillings and sixpence; searches half-a-crown.
74. In your experience of the office, has any difficulty arisen with regard to the effect of priority of registration where property is subject to certain equities? None has come to my knowledge. But the system of indexing is getting every day more and more complex in practice, and difficult to deal with. Properties are constantly changing hands, new names come into the books, and apparently there will be no end to the confusion and complexity that will result. Hence my desire to see a new system altogether.
75. You think that in the course of a very few years the indexes will be perfectly unmanageable as a medium of reference for the public? Yes, as they are now made.
76. And that some change is absolutely required? Imperatively, for the general good; and the longer it is delayed the worse the case becomes.
77. Do I understand that your registration office is fire-proof in all respects? It is a stone building, covered with slates, and detached. A fire is allowed in the searching room during office hours, but very careful management of it is insisted on.
78. The floors are of wood? The floors are of wood; but the chances of destruction by fire are very remote. I may say, however, that it is only a temporary place we are now using, as we hope to have safe, thoroughly fire-proof, and otherwise suitable offices erected in the course of two or three years.
79. What is the income of the office? Between £10,000 and £11,000 per annum.
80. And the expenditure? In asking with regard to the income and expenditure, do you mean to include the whole department?
81. I would say, in the first place, the fees from the registration of deeds? From fees for the registration of deeds we get about £10,000 a year; and the officers employed are four clerks. The expense of that portion of the department, so far as the clerical staff goes, is about £1,200 a year.
82. Can you state the income from births, deaths, and marriages? The income from that source is very small. The fees are moderate, and the reference to the indexes is by no means so great as that which obtains in the deeds department. It is increasing, however; but I should think it will hardly ever be looked upon as a source of very great revenue. From an extract of our monthly cash-book I have here, I find that the birth, death, and marriage fees in the month of April last amounted to little more than £10, or at the rate of £120 a-year. But the advantages to be derived from a system of registration which has such an important effect upon questions of property, and matters of vital statistics, can hardly be measured by the amount of fees. The cost of the department for registering births, deaths, and marriages, and the statistics relating thereto, is also about £1,200 a-year.
83. What is the cost of the whole department, including the Registrar General's salary and all other expenses? In round numbers, about £6,000 a-year for salaries.
84. What other departments does the office comprise besides deeds and births, deaths and marriages? Vaccination, which involves a considerable amount of correspondence, the distribution of the vaccine lymph, and the keeping of accounts upon paying the Government vaccinators the fees allowed them, and the various District Registrars their fees: this engages much of the time of one clerk, whom, by the by, I have counted in among the staff appointed for births, deaths, and marriages. I may state here, that we pursue a system of endeavouring to make every one of our officers as much as possible conversant with the duties of his co-laborers, so that we should never be in any great strait, supposing one or more were suddenly to go away.

- W. H. Archer, Esq.
10 June, 1858.
85. Comparing the general income of all these departments, and the general expenditure, what appears to be the balance? About £5,000, in round numbers.
86. In favour of the public? Yes; so far as salaries are concerned. There are many other duties which our various officers have to discharge: the enrolment of patents, keeping the models, allowing searches to the public, and copies to be taken of the patents so enrolled; also, the charge of the Electoral Rolls; the reception of all inquests throughout Victoria, which are frequently appealed to by the police detectives and others; powers of attorney also have, by a recent Act, been brought under the charge of the Registrar General; the original powers of attorney have to be deposited in the Registrar General's Office, and these can be referred to by parties and copied, and an index has to be kept of them; the Friendly Societies also have to send in their returns to us. There are very many other minor details which in themselves are not much, yet which all together render it necessary to have about three other clerks, at salaries amounting to £1,100 in the course of the year.
87. Is that sum included in the £6,000 you mentioned? Yes. To supplement the duties of the various other officers, there are also two for statistics, who are obliged to be experienced and competent men, and who receive £500 a-year each. The compilation of the Blue Book, a very heavy work, comes under the head of statistics.
88. How many persons are employed in the Record building altogether? At present we have thirteen.
89. Amongst your other various and numerous duties do you take charge of any original deeds or wills? Yes.
90. Is that found to answer? They are not very numerous. It is only occasionally made use of, but it is provided for by law.
91. By Mr. Hay: Have you been in the office of the Registrar General here? Yes.
92. What is your opinion of the building? Decidedly it is most unsuitable and unsafe.
93. And inconvenient? Inconvenient, as well as unsafe. You might have all your records destroyed in one night by the carelessness of a neighbour.
94. It is not well adapted for the general conduct of business? By no means; the Registrar General is perched at the top of the house, and any body who wants to see him has to go up about fifty steps.
95. You think a fire-proof building should be provided? Decidedly.
96. You have seen a good deal of the operation of the system pursued here? I have.
97. Besides the alteration of the building, is there anything with regard to the system, of a practical nature, that you could suggest as an improvement? I have already mentioned the propriety of getting rid of the registration of births, deaths, and marriages, now carried on in a room in which other, and in every respect different, duties are performed. Besides this, I would take leave to state that the rates of remuneration of the officers do not seem to me to compensate for the duties done. I have compared their relative receipts and the amount of labor they have to perform, and I must say there are not inducements held out to those employed to be diligent in their duties, and to look forward, hopefully, to something better. The classification seems to be bad, and there is no prospect of any advance, but a constant danger from year to year of perhaps a decrease in salary. I find one gentleman, Mr. Jaques, for instance, who does much of the work that the Registrar General in Victoria is compelled by law to perform,—who swears the parties who come before him, looks through the copies of the deeds which have to be deposited, has much correspondence, and also receives all moneys;—and, after being in the Government service for a great number of years—upwards of twenty, I believe—he receives £350 a-year. That seems to me to be hardly a satisfactory state of things.
98. By the Chairman: Are you aware that he does more than take an account of the deeds—is there not another officer who receives money? There is an officer who receives some money, but he has to hand it over to Mr. Jaques, who has it in his possession for a week, giving no security, which, by the by, as a general principle, is also unsound.
99. Do you think it is advisable to allow any officer of a public department like that to carry on professional business as a means of remuneration for his duties, in addition to his salary? As a general principle, if the performance of those professional duties does not interfere clearly with the duties he has to discharge as a Government officer, I really do not see why he should be prohibited. It depends upon the nature of the profession and the nature of the duties. If he should engage in private professional business during office hours, of course his superior would have to report or check him; but I do not see that the Government has any claim to a man's time after office hours.
100. Suppose his professional business is that of an attorney? I do not very well see how a man could attend to that without trenching on office hours; but my principle is this, answering generally,—that if a man does not by any act of his after office hours preclude himself from doing his duty efficiently within office hours, it does not appear to me the Government should be rigid about the matter. For instance,—my profession is that of an actuary, and I do not think for one moment they would in Victoria prohibit me from making any calculations for any Life Office in consequence of my being connected with the Government; but in the case of a medical man or a lawyer, at the first blush it seems to me very likely that in many instances the two positions are incompatible with the discharge of duties as a Government Officer. But as a general principle I should put this reservation, that it must be proved that attendance on private professional duties actually interfered with the discharge of public duties; especially when the rates of salary the Government give are so low. At the same time, of course, the Government has the power to make any regulation it pleases with regard to its employés, and it is for them to say whether they will accept the position or not.
101. By Mr. Hay: Do you not think that, generally speaking, the clerks employed in this office require to be quite up to the average in ability and education with those employed in other offices? Decidedly.

102. Do you think it would be possible to carry on the business for any length of time if the clerks of this office were underpaid in proportion to others? I think not efficiently.
103. Your opinion I think is, that the clerks in this office are underpaid? I think so, even by comparison with the Estimates of other Government Departments, and I would commence with the Registrar General himself. In proportion to its importance and the character of its officers, I think this department is altogether underpaid.
104. That of itself would lead efficient men to eke out their incomes in other ways? Decidedly. How you can get professional or any other able men to enter at such salaries at all is the difficulty to my mind.
105. Have you looked at all at the Act under which the registration of births, deaths, and marriages is carried on here? I have glanced at it.
106. Do you think it is open to objection? It is very defective; I think it ought to be entirely remodelled; in fact our own is defective also. The only way in which the existing efficient and comprehensive system of registration has been carried out in Victoria has been by the Registrar General and myself having determined not to be trammelled within the clauses of the Act, but that we should endeavour to supplement it by carrying out those plans of action that have been approved of as the best by the first authorities in the mother country.
107. In fact, to make the system effective, and to make the Act work well, you have been obliged to take many liberties with it? Yes, and to supplement it by every means which intelligence could suggest. We have made our work a labor of love, and not merely an official task.
108. I think you said that as it is you really carry out your system well? Yes; and I am also happy to say that Mr. Rolleston on his appointment put himself in communication with the Registrar General in Victoria, and obtained from us our forms, and adapted them and carried them out in a similarly efficient manner, so that in reality the two systems—so far as births and deaths are concerned—are nearly identical. Marriages are somewhat different. I hope soon to see all our Australasian Colonies acting on one uniform system. Uniformity is the great thing to be desired. It is engaging the attention of the first minds in Europe, Dr. Farr for example, who is in the Registrar General's Department in England, under Major Graham, was recently dispatched to a Statistical Congress at Vienna, where they proposed to recommend the carrying out of a uniform system throughout all the States of the Continent; and I have reason to believe that system will, in its main features, correspond with that which is working successfully in Victoria and New South Wales.
109. You think it would be a public misfortune if that system of registration were quashed? A great misfortune. It would be a step of retrogression in civilization.
110. You think it quite possible to have the statistics of the Colony combined with the registration? Yes, they are quite compatible with it. It depends a good deal on the officer, however. They were combined in Victoria simply because I had, as acting Registrar General, the superintendence at first of the registration of birth and deaths, and my profession made me familiar with the science of statistics. The office of the Registrar General is, from its very nature as an office of record, one in which the various fluctuations of the State from year to year can be mirrored; and the preparation of statistics therefore is not necessarily unsuited to its other functions.
111. You think it better that the Registrar General should be charged with the preparation of statistics than that they should be managed in the Colonial Secretary's Office? Yes, much better; inasmuch as the Registrar General is, in the first place, authorised to take the census periodically. That is one very important part of statistics, in fact the groundwork. Then, again, he is necessarily familiar with the country, in consequence of appointing registrars in the various districts, so that in questions relating to Electoral divisions, or for any other purpose, he would be the proper authority to refer to for the best local information that could be obtained. I think in every respect statistics may be very naturally associated with the department. The plan has worked well in Victoria, and the department has already become a place of reference for Members of the Legislature, who, I have good reason to believe, look up to it with respect, and also for the press and the public generally.
112. Have you had much complaint in Victoria as to the inquisitorial character of the registration of births, deaths, and marriages? Never.
113. And yet the questions put are much the same as those in this Colony? They are identical, so far as births and deaths are concerned. In regard to marriages, there is one very important defect in the questions put in New South Wales, which is a blot, viewed in a statistical light—the question as to the age of those married is left out.
114. You consider that a defect? A great defect, both legally and statistically.
115. You think it would be advantageous to have an improved Act? Yes; for both Colonies.
116. In order to throw unnecessary responsibility off the shoulders of the Registrar General? Quite so; and I think there would be less hesitation in passing an Act with the schedules I speak of, now that they have been tried five years in Victoria, and nearly two years in New South Wales. Members would see that it was practicable to obtain the information.
117. You do not see any incompatibility in combining the registration of deeds with that of births, deaths, and marriages? No; the same faculties of judgment and order which would suggest the best modes of indexing and affording facilities for public search would operate in both systems.
118. By the Chairman: Is there any other short point you could suggest? There is one very important feature in connection with the department in Victoria. We have for the last two or three years carried out a very complete system of collection of agricultural and live stock statistics; and this has been done with the concurrence of the Legislature, not merely by annual vote, but upon the recommendation of a Select Committee of the Legislative Council, appointed to take evidence in relation to agricultural and horticultural statistics. Every year the returns become fuller and fuller, and the people, who give the information voluntarily, seeing the object for which it is asked, furnish it readily. The publication of these returns has a tendency not only to enable importers of agricultural produce to see what are likely to be the requirements of the country, but it also stimulates persons to look after land in the best districts where crops are raised. We publish a complete report of every acre of produce, and also of horses, cattle, and live stock generally; and it has found much favor with the public. I believe Victoria is the only Colony where it is carried out on a thorough census system. It is not trusted merely to the police or to the Clerks of Petty Sessions. Collectors are engaged specially for the purpose; and their statements are submitted to magistrates or other persons of repute in the various localities, who testify, from their knowledge of certain portions, to the general accuracy of the returns. These collectors also give in a report of the progress of agriculture in their respective districts.

W. H. Archer, Esq.

119. That is done irrespective of the police? Yes, by special agencies.

120. Is that expensive? It cost last year, for the whole Colony, about £1,200, and this year about £1,500, in consequence of the greater number of occupiers of holdings.

121. Does it come within your knowledge that the system of collecting statistics here by the chief constables and other persons is inaccurate? I have been given to understand that it is so, by persons who are aware of the means of obtaining information, and I can easily believe it, because my own experience in Victoria led me to the conclusion that such a system could not be relied upon.

122. By Mr. Hay: What class of men have you for collectors? Chiefly persons who have been connected with the agricultural interest. They go over large tracts of country in some instances to collect the returns, and it is proposed that the time of collection should be about the month of February.

123. How many of these persons have been employed? We have now about fifteen or twenty.

124. By the Chairman: Then they receive about £100 each? Yes, on an average.

125. For work taking up a few weeks? Yes.

126. Then they are, I presume, persons of a respectable class? Yes; but their horse and other expenses are heavy. There is one other point that perhaps you may be interested in: We have a very efficient system of check with regard to the receipt of moneys, and, in order that you may understand it I beg to hand in a description of the system in detail, with specimens of the forms of accounts used by us. (The witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.)

127. Is this account compiled by a different party from the party who receives the money? Yes, by our accountant. All the moneys are checked by him daily, and he pays them into the bank daily; he does not, as with you, keep them for a week. At the end of the month he brings his daily entry book and banker's pass-book to me, and I look at every one of the items at the foot and initial them, and also make it up at the end; so that by this means and the system of vouchers kept by the accountant he has a check on the parties receiving money, and the Registrar General, through my agency, has a check on the accountant by means of his pass-book and this daily statement, which, at one view, presents the income of the department under every head; the accountant, therefore, stands in a similar position to the officer of whom I spoke before in your own department. There are some points here which I made out in regard to indexing, thinking that they might be a guide for the Committee and for the Registrar General of New South Wales, as to the amount of work we get through in a day at the Melbourne Central Office. With regard to births, they are indexed at the rate of about 200 a-day; the system employed is full and efficient; persons searching can see, in a very few minutes, all the registrations for five years past. The names are indexed as in a dictionary, by carrying out the alphabetical arrangement to the very last letter—that is to say, Aaron would come before Abraham, and Arkwright would come still lower down; this point, although apparently so simple, has a remarkable effect in shortening the time of search. With regard to deaths, 250 can be entered in a day. With respect to marriages, the names of both parties have to be entered up, and 125 only can be indexed daily. They are the rough indexes of which I am now speaking; the fair copies made afterwards for permanent record, and for which there is an able writer employed constantly, are entered at the rate of 150 a-day; for births, 200; for deaths and for marriages, 100. With regard to the time when the indexes are available after final receipt of the register sheets—that is, after having been carefully gone through, and if any defect found in them sent back for correction, when they are in all respects satisfactorily completed—they can be referred to by the public so far as deaths are concerned in fourteen days; marriages take a month; and births—which we defer to the last, as not being so often referred to—are ready in about three months. Each index is for half a year only, and the number of entries is about 15,000. With regard to our correspondence, our regular correspondents are from 120 to 130 Deputy Registrars, nearly 100 public vaccinators, and from 200 to 220 clergymen. The Registrar General of New South Wales, however, has not to correspond directly with the clergymen, as we have. The number of letters we dispatch is about 4,400 per annum, the copies of which fill about 400 closely-written pages, of 40 lines each. I may mention that the Registrar General here has adopted the system, which seems to me to work satisfactorily, of using a copying machine; it saves the labor of one clerk, and I should like to see it carried out in Victoria. In fact, I gave evidence before a Parliamentary Committee there in favor of the general adoption of these machines. There are very many other details of interest which perhaps the Committee would like to have known; but I may state that we are

are constantly communicating with Mr. Rolleston, who has always shewn the greatest desire to adopt any suggestions we find in our experience to be beneficial; and therefore the Committee may rest assured that anything found good and practical in Melbourne will be duly conveyed here, and that both the Registrar General of Victoria and myself will always be most happy to keep up a system of correspondence with your officers, so that they may be au courant with aught we may introduce. I hope, also, we shall have the full benefit of the experience of the officers of your Colony, for the more that spirit of co-operation is extended among us the more will the interests of the various Colonies be happily advanced.

APPENDIX A.

EXPLANATION of the system of accounting for Public Moneys collected in the Registrar General's Office, Melbourne.

The fees receivable at the Registrar General's Office, Melbourne; are those connected with the registration of land, stock, wool, certificates of naturalization, powers of attorney, patents, births, deaths, marriages, vaccination, electoral expenditure, shareholders' lists, &c.

All fees are received in a recess near the general office entrance, where a window with a sliding shutter opens into a room connected with that of the Accountant. The money-taker is provided with separate receipt books for the business connected with the various branches of the department. On receiving the fee he fills up the receipt and counterpart with the amount thus paid, (opposite the word indicating the object), adding his initials.

The applicant takes this receipt as his voucher to the room where he has to transact business; there the clerk in charge is provided with a check register, for entering the number and particulars of each receipt coming into his hands.

The money-taker is provided with a "Journal,"* in which he enters consecutively every fee received in the respective column. At the close of each day he sums up the various columns, and hands the cash with his Journal to the Accountant, from whom he receives a printed receipt for the amount thus handed over.

The Accountant then compares the Journal with the "Check Registers" of the various branches of the department, and if the entries correspond he enters the day's receipts in his "Cash Book," and posts them also in the "Ledger,"† (from which latter the monthly return to the Treasury is copied), shewing on one page every day's receipts during one month under the various heads.

The Accountant lodges the fees daily in the bank, having the payments entered at the time by the Teller in the pass-book, which is in his charge. These payments appear, of course, also on the credit side of the Cash Book.

On the day appointed for paying the month's collections to the Receiver of Revenue, the Head of the Department draws a cheque for the amount. The Assistant Registrar General having first examined the pass-book, and seen that the Clerks in charge of the various branches have certified by their initials the various totals as given in a summary of the month's collections in the Accountant's Cash Book;‡ and having also initialed the leading amounts comprising the total receipts.

The money is then, with a certified return, lodged by the Accountant in the office of the Receiver of Revenue.

It will be seen that pre-payment of fees, and the production of vouchers for such payment previous to the transaction of business, is an indispensable basis of the check-system above described.

Assistant Registrar General of Victoria.

REGISTRAR GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT, JUNE, 1858.

Cr.

W. H. ARCHER,
Assistant Registrar General of Victoria.

WEDNESDAY, 16 JUNE, 1858.

Present:—

MR. OWEN,
MR. PIDDINGTON,
MR. FLOOD,

MR. JONES,
MR. SMITH,
MR. HAY.

ROBERT OWEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

Christopher Rolleston, Esq., called in and further examined:—

1. By the Chairman: You have the custody and arrangement, I believe, of the record of births, marriages, and deaths? I have the custody of those that have been taken under the present law, and of the records of baptisms, marriages, and births recorded formerly in the Supreme Court, but I have not the registers of the Church of England—they still remain in the hands of the Bishop's Secretary. C. Rolleston,
Esq.
16 June, 1858.
2. Are your registers in books of the same description as the deeds? They are both bound in books of the same character and description, (my own registers—those taken since the year 1856.) Those transferred from the Supreme Court are bound differently.
3. Are they on paper? They are on paper.
4. From their recent formation, you cannot judge as to their lasting? No; the writing seems to be perfect.
5. From the experience you have had since the commencement of the present system of registration of births and deaths, have you observed whether it is sufficiently perfect as it is, or whether any improvement can take place in it? There are one or two points in the details of the management of the system that might be improved.
6. Will you state them, if you please? There is one imperfection with regard to the records of deaths, particularly as to the cause of death, which is a very important point to record, as showing the diseases which prove most fatal to the population. I am obliged to take the causes of death, in the majority of instances, from the mouths of the informants, who are often ignorant people, and cannot give them correctly. I should very much wish that the medical profession were required by law to give a certificate of the cause of death in those cases in which they have been attendant on the deceased.
7. Could that be readily carried out? It could be easily carried out.
8. Without expense? Yes, without expense. It could be carried out by requiring the informant (that is the person responsible now to give the information) to bring with him, when he comes to record the death a certificate from the medical attendant.
9. And that would enable you in your statistics to afford the Government valuable information? It would give the mortality tables a value which they now have not.
10. You therefore recommend in any future legislation that it should be enforced? Yes; and it is not a new feature in the registration of death. In the Registration Bill of South Australia a similar provision is introduced.
11. You mentioned that there were difficulties in two other matters, the removal of which would improve the system—what are they, Sir? I am exceedingly anxious to have the form of marriage certificate altered.
12. What is the defect? The defect is that it does not supply all the information which is necessary for statistical purposes.
13. In what respect? I was not aware you were going to examine me on the subject of births, deaths, and marriages to-day, and I did not bring the forms which I otherwise would have done; but the marriage certificate only supplies half the information I want for statistical purposes, the consequence is, my records are faulty.
14. Is there any other matter, Sir, you would suggest? There is another point, which has rather impaired the operation of the Act: it is, that the Registrar is forbid to register a birth after sixty days, except upon a solemn declaration of facts made by the parents or some person present at the birth. That has been found, in the country districts especially, to impair the operation of the Act.
15. Do you think that might be abolished? I see no use in it whatever.
16. No utility? No utility whatever, in its present shape. If a fine were fixed, supposing a parent omitted to register the birth within sixty days, and a fee of 5s. was attached to the taking of this solemn declaration, I could see a use in it—it would cause persons to give information within the time prescribed; but in reference to the registering of births, I think six months is too long a period, and, in the absence of a fine for neglect, the declaration is of no use, because it throws double work upon the Registrar, and has no penal action upon the parent.
17. Might not a fee deter people from coming without they were compelled in some other way? I think not. They are still liable to a penalty for not registering.
18. I suppose the records of that branch of the office are in the same building? Yes, in the same building.
19. Are they kept in open rooms? Yes.
20. Do the searches for the records form a branch of that part of it? They do: searches are made by my clerks.
21. Only by your own clerks? Only by my own clerks.
22. For which a fee is charged? Yes, for which a fee is charged of 5s. for the search, and 2s. for a certified copy of the entry.
23. Are the indexes so formed as to make the searches easy? Oh! yes; but the indices for 1857 are not yet even commenced.
24. How do the public ascertain from that what they want? It is a longer operation, for we have to refer to the temporary indices which are sent down quarterly by the different country

C. Rolleston, country Registrars, and to those which are made in the office for the Sydney district; therefore it is a very long business to search for any birth, death, or marriage for the last year.

16 June, 1858.

25. What is the reason of the delay? Not having sufficient strength. I have got up the indices (they are now perfect) for 1856 by working two of my clerks over hours, and paying them so much for their labors. That is the only way I have been able to get the work done; but it would have been impossible to commence the indices for 1857 until two months ago, because the returns from the country districts to the end of 1857 were not in until the end of the first quarter of 1858.
26. That is a delay of necessity? It is a delay of necessity, and therefore it is impossible to commence the indexing until the returns for the country districts are perfected for the year.
27. Is that delay of persons sending the returns from the country necessary? It is not necessary, but it is impossible for me to control it; some of them are very careless.
28. Are the returns sent quarterly? They are sent quarterly.
29. Would it not be much greater trouble to have them monthly? Oh! yes.
30. Would it answer any purpose? No, I think not.
31. What is the kind of index when made up—is it a general index? It is a general index for the year for the whole of the Colony—an alphabetical index, consecutive in each letter from the first letter to the last letter of the names.
32. Is that desirable? I think it is very desirable.
33. It must be a general index? Yes.
34. Would you just state at this part of your evidence the amount of the expenses incident to that branch of your office, including the payment of the country districts, and what is the proportional expense in the City of the head Registrar's office? About £3,000 a-year, I think. (Vide Statement of the Expenditure for 1857—Appendix A.)
35. Not including the Deputy Registrars? No; they are paid out of a contingent vote.
36. Exclusive of this £3,000? Yes. I would have brought the papers, but I was not aware that you were going to question me on this subject. I think it is about £3,000—the salaries are about £1,500.
37. But there are, of course, incidentals, such as proportion of rent, &c.? Yes.
38. What is the amount of fees received? They are very trifling—about £25 or £30 a-year, hardly that; they will increase every year, of course, as the records increase.
39. These records being in the same building as the deeds, I presume, are in the same jeopardy with regard to fire? Yes.
40. Can you, from memory, explain what are the particular defects of the marriage certificate to which you have alluded? The marriage certificate, as prescribed by the Marriage Act, 19 Vic., No. 30, requires the date and the place where the parties were married, the names of the parties and their designation; I think that is all.
41. Do I understand you to say that you require more? I require very much more to make the records perfect. In the first place, I think it is very necessary that the certificate should shew the condition of the parties, whether they are widows or widowers, spinsters or bachelors, and their calling, probably, i. e., the rank or profession, also the age, also the names of their parents, father and mother, and their present and usual place of residence; these all form important items in the record of a marriage.
42. And it could be supplied with the greatest ease? It is supplied now to the clergy. It is my own records which are imperfect; they do not agree with the registers of the clergy. The registers of the clergy are perfect in all these particulars.
43. Do you mean the clergy of the Church of England? Of the Church of England and of all the denominations, so far as I have been able to ascertain. Mr. Cuthbertson told me the other day that he never had heard an objection made by any one he had married to furnish the whole of the particulars. I established the form of registration myself, but I could not alter the form of certificate which the law laid down, and that form does not convey to me the particulars I require to perfect the system of registration which I have established, but the Church registers in almost all cases supply all the information.
44. Have you seen these registers in the books of Mr. James, the Bishop's Secretary? I have.
45. Are they kept in that form? They are not; they are very imperfect in the information given, i. e., compared with the new form of register.
46. I believe that they are extensive, and they run over a number of years? Yes; from the foundation of the Colony.
47. Do you consider it desirable that they should be placed in your office? I think it is very important that they should be, when I have a proper office to keep them in. There is constant running backwards and forwards between my office and the Bishop's Office now, to obtain information; and it is quite at Mr. James' option to give that information or not, and he can charge what he likes for the information he does give.
48. Does he afford every facility for obtaining this information? Yes, I think so.
49. Do you think it desirable that some measure should be taken to place these records under your control? It is, undoubtedly, for they are most important; the inheritance to half the property in the country may depend upon them.
50. I suppose personally you are not aware of the precise circumstances under which Mr. James holds these documents—he claims them, I believe, as part of his own property? I hardly think he does that; he merely puts an embargo upon them. He has prepared them himself at his own expense and labor for twenty years past, and at a time when they otherwise would not have been kept up at all; and he thinks he has a right to compensation for these twenty years of unremunerated labor which he has bestowed upon them.
51. Without these records your registers would be very imperfect? Yes. At present there is no very great practical difficulty (Mr. James allowing searches to be made); the inconvenience is felt by persons running backwards and forwards to obtain information.

52. By Mr. Hay: You consider this additional information in the certificate necessary, in order to identify the parties who are married, and make the records valuable? Yes, to identify them genealogically. At present it would be impossible to do so; there are so many Thomas Jones's, and people of the same common names.
53. Unless the identification is complete, the whole affair is comparatively worthless? Comparatively so.
54. By Mr. Jones: You think these additional particulars necessary for the purpose of identification? I do.
55. Have you pointed out to the Government the amendments you think necessary in the Registration Act? I have, in two Reports I have made to the Government since the office was established. I dwelt at some length upon both these points; upon that in reference to marriages particularly.
56. Are you aware whether the Government contemplate the introduction of any measure to carry out the improvements you think it necessary to be made? I am not; but Mr. Cowper said the other day that he thought some little amendment of the Act might be necessary in one point which I have not alluded to—that is, to relieve the central office of the duties of registering. In no system of registration that I know of is the central office made the actual registering office.
57. That is to put Sydney, in respect to the chief office, in the same position that the country districts are? Clearly so.
58. To separate the Registrar General's duties from the District Registrar's of Sydney duties? Just so.
59. By Mr. Hay: Have you heard any complaints as to the inquisitorial character of some of the questions put under the Act? I was charged the other day by Mr. Robertson, the Honorable Minister for Lands and Public Works, with asking very impertinent, and in fact insulting questions; but I told him that I was not responsible for them; that I merely adapted to the general registration of the Colony the forms of schedule which I found appended to the Registration Act which was put into my hands to carry out, and that every one of those questions had been recommended by a Committee of the Statistical Society in England. They had been adopted in the Registration Bill of Scotland, and they had been carried out in Victoria for the last four years. But the best answer to those objections is that the questions are answered in the fullest manner, with very few exceptions, as the registers will show.
60. Do you think it necessary, in order to establish the value of these records, that these questions should be asked? I do.
61. You think it would not interfere with the purposes for which the whole institution was established if they were not put? I think it would injure the value of the records if the registers were contracted.
62. Have you heard any considerable number of complaints with regard to them? No.
63. The Deputy Registrars, so far as you are aware, have not found any difficulty? No.
64. Have you had much difficulty in carrying out the Act, from the difficulty of finding persons in the country to take upon them the duty of registration? In the first instance I had very great difficulty on that account.
65. Difficulty in finding proper persons? Difficulty in finding proper persons.
66. And some difficulty, I suppose, in getting them to do their duty regularly—in breaking them in to the work? Yes.
67. Have you got over that difficulty do you think? To a very great extent.
68. The office has become more popular? Yes.
69. Do you think the whole thing is getting into good working order? It is getting into very good order now, and increasing in popularity.
70. No doubt it was a very troublesome office in the country districts, but people are now becoming familiar with it? People are now becoming familiar with it, and appreciate the advantages of a civil registry.
71. By Mr. Piddington: In the case of certificates of death, do you consider it absolutely necessary that a medical man should supply a certificate of the cause of death? I think it would add much to the value of the records if the cause of death was recorded upon the certificate by a properly qualified medical practitioner.
72. Is not the cause of death recorded under the present law? It is recorded, but it is generally taken from the mouth of the informant.
73. Is not that a sufficient authority in the great majority of cases? No, I think not.
74. Do you think it is of absolute importance to the State that there should be a specific description of the cause of death of every individual in society? I think it is very important, as giving a knowledge of the diseases which are prevalent in a country, and thus affording the means for diminishing the exciting causes of death by the application of remedial measures.
75. But would a medical certificate be an absolute authority—a conclusive authority upon the cause of death? Well, it is the best we can possibly get.
76. It would only be, probably, more correct; it would not be any conclusive proof of the cause of death, even a medical certificate, would it? It ought to be.
77. Without a post mortem examination? I think so, in the majority of instances.
78. Do not medical men differ as to the cause of death, without a post mortem examination? You do find it so in some instances, but it is the exception and not the rule.
79. But in cases where persons die without a medical attendant, how could the demand be complied with? That would be impossible. We must have many cases where we cannot be informed on medical authority.
80. Then the necessity of the certificate could not be made the rule by law? No; not in cases where there is no medical attendant.
81. In reference to marriage certificates—do you conceive it to be absolutely essential that the names of the father and mother of the party should be stated upon the certificate any more

Esq.

- C. Rolleston, Esq.

- more than the names of the uncles and aunts? I think it is very important that the names of the father and mother should be recorded.
82. But is it not equally as important that the names of other relatives should be given—at least so near blood relationship as uncles and aunts? No, I think not. I think if you have the names of the father and mother it is as much as you can expect and require.
83. But do you think it desirable that the names of the father and mother should be given? Yes.
84. By Mr. Jones: With what view, Mr. Rolleston? As a proof of identity. I think without the parents' names the record is insufficient, in some cases, to prove identity. It is important that the record of a marriage should be so perfect as to establish the genealogical identity of the parties.
85. I presume in proving descent in cases of property? Yes.
86. By Mr. Piddington: Are any questions asked in reference to births that the Act itself does not warrant? None whatever.
87. As a general rule, do you think it is desirable to multiply statistics by asking questions which are not absolutely essential? As a rule I think not, speaking on the abstract.
88. If more questions are asked than are absolutely necessary is it not likely that the public will be disgusted with the law? Yes; but such is not the case with regard to the points under inquiry.
89. You have already had complaints in reference to questions that are supposed to be not necessary, or inquisitorial. Very few indeed.
90. But you have had them? I have had them.
91. But is it not dangerous either in cases of birth, marriage, and death, to multiply unnecessary questions? Certainly; but I do not agree with you that the questions asked are unnecessary. They are all considered to be most important.
92. By Mr. Smith: I take it that the effect of increasing the questions would not be to multiply statistics, but to render the records more complete? Clearly so.
93. But not to multiply statistics? Not to multiply statistics, certainly.
94. And the reason you desire a medical certificate in cases of death is, not that it can be absolutely depended upon, but because it is more likely to be correct than the mere information of the relative or party who brings you an account of the death? Because it is the best authority you can have—the best that the circumstances of the case will admit of.
95. Not, of course, infallible, but more likely to be correct? In nine cases out of ten it would be correct.
96. And in those cases in which, from the absence of a medical attendant, it is impossible to obtain a certificate, you would require some certificate to that effect? Merely the information of the informant, such as we get now.
97. Not a declaration from him? No.
98. You would take his word for it? If the informant did not know the cause we should enter the death under the head of "unspecified causes."
99. But you desire, if possible, to obtain in every case where it is practicable a certificate from a medical man as to the cause of death? It would give greater value to the mortality tables which are prepared from the Returns, which would in a few years become of very great value to medical science, and tend to reduce the amount of mortality and human suffering in this Colony.
100. You regard the insertion of the names of the parents in the marriage registers as important for two reasons,—to establish descent and to prove identity? It has been found so in England. The registers there afford that information, and so do the registers of Victoria.
101. By Mr. Piddington: If it is so essential to establish identity in cases of marriage, would not a personal description of the party about to be married be a better means of establishing identity, such as the color of the eyes, the height of the person, and the color of the complexion? A photograph would be better than all. There is another point, with regard to the age of the parties, which is most important, as we have no means of detecting whether minors are illegally married at present: the certificate does not convey the age, and it is impossible to exercise any check upon persons who perform the marriage ceremony, whether the parties to the marriage are under 21 or not; whether "under age" or "over age," ought certainly to be given in the certificate.
102. By the Chairman: You recommend that in the record of marriage the age should be stated as well as can be ascertained? I think so, clearly.
103. Is your general index upon parchment or vellum? Upon paper.
104. Upon paper only? Yes.
105. Do you think that is desirable? I would rather it was on parchment, as it would then last for ever; but the paper is the best I can get, and as the searches are made by my own clerks, I think there is a probability of its lasting for many years.
106. By Mr. Smith: Is there not a paper-parchment which is now very highly approved? there is.
107. By the Chairman: As far as your office arrangements go, do they approximate at all to the English requirements of registration? The system is identical with that which is adopted in England. It is taken from it, and is in every important respect a copy of the English system.
108. I omitted, Sir, to ask if you are aware whether all the original wills of persons deceased—wills proved—are kept at the Supreme Court? I believe they are: they are not in my office.
109. Do you think it desirable that within a proper safe building those records should be placed among the other records of your office? I think they should. I think the General Registry Office is the proper office for recording all instruments and documents connected with the public welfare, affecting the rights of property at all events.

110. Are you aware of the condition of these original wills, or where they are kept? I am C. Rolleston, Esq.
 111. Is there anything else which suggests itself to your mind in reference to this subject? No, I think not. I will furnish to the Committee in writing a statement of expenditure, and of the amendments proposed for the improvement of the registration system. (Vide Appendices A and B.)

APPENDIX B.

Propositions for amending the Acts 19 Vic., Nos. 30 and 34.

(1.)—MARRIAGE ACT.

(Amendment of form of Certificate of Marriage.)

Section 7.—Form of certificate, "Schedule E," to be amended by the substitution of form given in Appendix A.

(2.)—REGISTRATION ACT.

(Power to be given to appoint District or Deputy Registrar for Sydney.)

Section 4.—Repeal the latter part, vesting the office of Registrar for Sydney in the Registrar General, and enact in lieu thereof the appointment of one or more District or Deputy Registrars.

Section 8.—Forms of Registration should be specifically laid down, the schedules D and E referring by mistake to marine births and deaths only. Description of forms recommended and in use as follows, viz.:—1. Births, Appendix B; 2. Marriages, Appendix C; 3. Deaths, Appendix D.

(Proof of Minister being what he represents himself to be.)

Section 11.—Power should be given to the Registrar General to require proof from a person demanding to be registered that he is an ordinarily officiating Minister of some recognised sect or religious persuasion.

Section 22.—I would recommend that for the neglect to register within 60 days, as provided by the previous section, a fee of 5s. shall be payable to the Registrar on his taking the declaration as to the facts of the birth. (This is done in South Australia.) The District Registrar, moreover, ought to be empowered in express terms to take the declaration, which, under the section as it stands, at present is merely assumed.

(Medical practitioner to certify cause of death.)

As to registration of "cause of death," I would recommend the adoption of the following section:—Every medical practitioner who shall have been in attendance upon any person deceased, or who shall have examined the body, shall deliver to the nearest of kin, occupier, or other person required by this Act to give information of the death to the District Registrar, a certificate under his hand, according to the form in the schedule hereto annexed (Appendix B), setting forth to the best of his knowledge and belief the cause of death, which certificate such nearest of kin, occupier, or other person shall, when notifying the death, deliver to the District Registrar.

Theodore James Jaques, Esq., called in and examined:—

- T. J. Jaques, Esq. 1. By the Chairman: I believe, Sir, you are Deputy Registrar at the General Registry Office? I am.
- 16 June, 1858. 2. How long have you held that office? I have held the office of Deputy Registrar under the present Registrar General since the establishment of his office, in 1857. I have held the same appointment since the year 1844 under the previous Registrars. I have been eighteen years and nine months in the department. Under the present Registrar I have the entire management of the Deeds Department.
3. We have had it stated that there are some very considerable defects in the present records, as to the effacing of the writing by the operation of time, or from other causes? I have pointed out several of them to the present Registrar General. I also brought it under the notice of previous Registrars. The fading of the ink on the parchment is much more than what it appears to have been on the paper memorials.
4. From your particular observation can you state what you deem the cause of this? I cannot say what is the cause of it—from the variety of parchments and the variety of ink: some have faded and others are perfectly legible. There is one deed, which I will show to the Committee, where there are apparently the best of parchments and the best of ink, written apparently at the same time, but still on some of the sheets the ink is materially faded, while on others it is perfectly legible. The cause I cannot in any way tell.
5. The result of your observation is, that you cannot state, with any certainty of truth, what is the actual cause? No, I cannot. I have also a deed which has not been bound up, but kept in drawers. That is faded too, although apparently written with the best of ink—so that it does not appear to be the binding that is the sole cause of it. There are also the Acts of Council signed in the Government ink—containing the Governor General's signature—that is also faded. The only cause that I can assign is the acid or lime which is used in the preparation of the parchment.
6. What do you think—having had so long an experience of these records—is the best remedy for these defects? I should recommend paper in preference to parchment, from my knowledge of the records in the office of old dates. The ink appears to last much better on paper than on parchment. There are the records of 1798, the old records from the year 1800 to 1824; they still appear to be in a perfect state, and they are written upon paper.
7. But they are liable to become faint? Yes, they are liable to fade, but not near so much as parchment.
8. Then, with respect to these extreme cases of effacement or disappearance of the ink, what would you think the best course to take for their present restoration? I should recommend that attested copies, certified by the Registrar, be made of all now legible or which can be rendered legible by chemical means, and that they should be deemed of the same value as the originally deposited copy.
9. By legal enactment? By legal enactment.
10. And those you would have bound up as supplements? Yes, with proper references on the original copy.
11. As far as your observation goes, do you think paper would be preferable? I think so; proper paper.
12. Approved paper? Yes, approved paper.

T. J. Jaques,
Esq.

16 June, 1858.

13. You keep the indexes I think? I have kept the indexes since the year 1848.
14. I believe that you have made some new indexes? To a considerable extent. During over-hours I compiled an index from the year 1825 to 1837, as I found that all the indexes from the year 1825 to the time I commenced indexing (1848) were defective in some respects. The index I compiled in over-hours was on a different arrangement to the present index, having a volume to each letter and a larger description of the property set forth, and so that all parties divesting themselves of any interest are indexed. I may observe, that at present Mr. Duff, one of the other clerks, is doing the indexing under my superintendence.
15. I was going to ask you whether there is a large amount of indexing to be renewed and perfected? To perfect the indexes, it requires those from the year 1837 to 1848 to be re-examined, and fresh indexes made.
16. Eleven years? Eleven years.
17. Will that be a very tedious and expensive compilation—how long would it take a single person? It will not be so very tedious. At that time it was principally by memorials, and the memorials are not so difficult to index as attested copies.
18. You recommend that the indexes should be perfected? I would recommend that the index I compiled from 1825 to 1837 be perfected to 1848, and that it shall still be continued, as opportunity allows, to the present date.
19. The great defect being in the descriptions of property? The descriptions of property and public deeds, such as sheriff's sales and bank deeds. Not having any definite mode of indexing, the duty devolving upon any clerk that had leisure at the time, and each having his own method, there is great difficulty in searching, and the indexes are likely to be faulty.
20. Then the indexes should be perfected under the eye of the head of the department? Yes; or one who thoroughly understood the indexing of deeds.
21. Have you sufficient force in the office to do that now? We never have had.
22. I suppose an additional clerk would do a great deal towards bringing up the arrears, under your supervision? One or two. It would occupy one clerk fully twelve months to perfect that index to the year 1848—perhaps more.
23. I believe the index is a general one that is kept in the office? Yes; a general one.
24. Has it occurred to you whether a division of the country into districts would at all save trouble? I would recommend that the Colony be divided into several districts, or a stated number of districts, and that in every case each deed should specify that the property was situated in a certain district or districts; and that power should be given to the Registrar to refuse to register such deed unless the property was described as in a certain district, or unless a surveyor's certificate to that effect was appended to the deed.
25. Defining the position of the property? Yes; that it was in a certain district of the Colony. Indexes and registers to these particular districts should be kept; there would then be an index and a register for each particular district.
26. How many divisions would you suggest the Colony should be divided into? From twelve to twenty districts. It might be divided into parallel lines of longitude.
27. Would not that be attended with considerable difficulty—longitudinal lines are not marked down with a thread? Or some defined boundary, so that parties or surveyors would know the locality in which land was situated.
28. You are aware that the country is divided into police districts? I believe it is.
29. Supposing there was an index having reference to each police district, would that be a desirable mode of division, or would it facilitate by combining a certain number of districts together? Yes; if it was laid down definitely what those districts were, and all conveyances stated the land to be situated in a certain police district, and if it was not so stated on the deed at the time of tendering for registration it should be refused until a surveyor's certificate was added, stating where it was; and the Registrar should be relieved from all liability by registering it in that particular district, and if there be any error the Registrar should not be liable on account of such error of description.
30. Could there be concurrently with that a general index, so as in case of any omission or error it could be a check? That would entail the present laborious system and the new system also—it would be very tedious to work. The object in dividing the Colony into districts would be to reduce the index so that parties searching would only search for a certain district.
31. But I mean in this way: we will suppose a person coming to search for property in a given district—he would in the main be correct that it was in a particular district, and then his search would be extremely short; but supposing he could not find what he came to search for, and had any doubt about the matter, would not the general index be a sort of stand-by? He would acquire the same information by searching through all the districts if he had a doubt.
32. Well, is that the mode, or is there any other mode different from the present mode of indexing that you recommend? I would still recommend the alphabetical index for each police district. It might be that mortgages, leases, annuities, and deeds of a temporary nature should be kept in a separate register, and that upon the mortgage or other temporary estate ceasing, the Registrar should have power to mark off those as satisfied—to cancel, erase, or destroy them. This would materially reduce the records.
33. Then one would be an incumbrance-book? Yes, for deeds of estates which ultimately cease. The other I should recommend as the absolute transfer-book.
34. Do you possess any index to record judgments of the Supreme Court which, under certain circumstances, affect property? We have not. They are not recorded in our office.
35. Would it be desirable that these indexes of judgments, as made up, should be transferred to the general registry? I think so, I think that all judgments or instruments affecting real estate should be in the one department. I would also recommend that all temporary estates, such as mortgages and other contingent estates, and annuity deeds, should be considered as expired and paid off, unless re-registered at intervals, say of twenty years. You would then only have to search back twenty years.

- T. J. Jaques, Esq.
15 June, 1858.
36. That would be a re-registration? A re-registration of all temporary estates.
37. In default of which they should be assumed to be discharged? Yes.
38. That, in fact, would be creating a Statute of Limitations upon these records? Yes.
39. I believe the Chief Justice introduced it into the Upper House some time ago. There is also one recommendation with reference to the registration of conveyances and mortgages I wish to make. I think they might be shortened. If the deeds stated that there were certain covenants, such as for further assurance, for peaceable possession, for the production of title deeds as set forth in the schedule, and that mortgages stated covenant to pay interest at a certain rate, quarterly, on days named, and the principal on a certain day—power for mortgagee to sell in case of default of payment of interest or principal—this should be deemed to embrace the full covenant as now set forth in the deed.
40. Are you aware that a species of abridgment was attempted to be dealt with by an Act with regard to leases? It has been, and I find it adopted in most of the leases registered.
41. In your experience of registering you find a number of leases in that abridged form? In the abridged form.
42. Do you know in what proportion? I think it is pretty generally adopted with regard to leases registered, excepting where they are printed forms of leases, such as in the case of the Point Piper Estate, and other large estates—I mean adopted in leases of short duration, say under twenty-one years.
43. Are you aware that very profound conveyancers have some difficulty in adopting these abridgments? I am alluding to the registration copy, and not to the original. If those words were put in the registration copy, it should be deemed in law that in the original the full words were set out. This is in order to do away with the lengthy registration copies. It seems to me to be useless that in every book the same words should be repeated so many thousand times.
44. By Mr. Jones: So as to reduce the registration copy, in fact, to a sort of abstract? As to covenants, not an abstract of rentals. It is where the same words are so frequently repeated.
45. By the Chairman: Would there not be this difficulty, Mr. Jaques—that in case of a person having to act upon a particular covenant, in any given transaction, the abstract would not give him the precise terms of the covenant? But if in law it was considered that it did, or that the original included the precise and full terms, he would have the same remedy—the legal enactment makes it evidence that there was a covenant for such and such things on the registration copy, and that those should be considered as set out at full length on the original deed.
46. You are aware, I believe, that the Bishop of Sydney's Secretary, Mr. James, has in his custody a large proportion of the registers of births, marriages, and deaths? I believe he has all relative to the Church of England prior to the passing of the General Registry Act.
47. Do you conceive it important that these should be kept in the General Registry Office? I consider that all registrations of births, deaths, and marriages should be in one department; that even those which we have in the Deeds Branch department should be handed over to the Registrar General, to be included with his own records of births. The public may now, perhaps, on searching for a birth, have to search in three different offices—that is, in the Bishop's Registry Office, in our portion of the Registrar General's Department, which has the records of all dissenting bodies from the commencement up to 1856, and then from 1856 to the present time they have to search in the Registrar General's branch.
48. Then you think it is highly desirable that all these should be drawn into one focus? Into one focus.
49. I believe you are well acquainted with the locality of the buildings of the Supreme Court? I am.
50. Are you aware that the original wills are kept there in some particular place? They are kept in a portion of the building at the foot of the staircase.
51. Have you looked to that with respect to its safety from fire? I have not inspected it minutely, but I see that it is a small place at the foot of the stairs, built of brick with a sheet iron top, and I believe it has a wooden door, but I am not certain.
52. You think that is likely to be affected in the case of any intense heat in the building? Doubtless; and the walls would be destroyed by the falling in of the other portion of the building.
53. It contains the whole of the wills of the Colony—the original wills of deceased persons would be destroyed? Yes.
54. What record would be then left with regard to the rights and properties of the public? As to wills?
55. As to wills—would there be any sort of record? None that I am aware of, except the probates. There is a book in which they used to be entered, but I believe that that has been discontinued.
56. An index of particular wills? An index of particular wills; but that would be destroyed with the building.
57. And therefore the general rights of the public, as far as they are affected by wills, are at the mercy of mere chance? Yes.
58. Do you think it desirable that these should be placed in safe custody in your office—that is, supposing your office was safe? Yes; but our office is far more likely to be destroyed by fire than the Supreme Court. Presuming, however, that we had a fire-proof building, and sufficient accommodation, I think all wills might be deposited in our office, especially if they related to real estate. I was going to recommend that all wills devising or dealing with real estate should be recorded in our registers.
59. Is that the case, do you know, in other registry offices? I believe so. I think that wills devising real estate are so recorded.
60. Where? I see that it is provided for in the Auckland Register, and also in the Tasmanian, and I believe in the English.
61. Supposing any one was to bring a certified copy of a will to your office could you register that?

- that? It is provided for in the present Act; but, not being compulsory, it is seldom done. T. J. Jaques, Esq.
 61. Then you would also recommend that, in addition to the wills, those instruments which affect real property in the Supreme Court in reference to judgments should also be transferred, or some duplicate copy? Yes. 16 June, 1858.
62. That would not be difficult, or very long, would it? I am not aware what the judgment record is. It comes more under Mr. Hutchinson's observation (Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court.)
63. Is your present building adapted, in point of size, to your business? It is in no way suitable for the purposes, neither as to accommodation or safety from fire.
64. Do you think it would be, in case of any neighbouring fire, in imminent danger? No doubt of it.
65. Of course you will come to the conclusion that it is desirable, at the nearest possible period, to have some proper and fire-proof building? Yes; that a proper building should be erected for the general registration of the whole Colony.
66. I believe you have the partial custody of original wills of persons not deceased? Yes; deposited for safe custody until the death of the testator.
67. That is merely a voluntary portion of the business—not at all a statute regulation? There is provision made in the Registration Act that they may be deposited.
68. The public are not generally aware, I believe, of that mode of custody? There are not very many wills deposited; between ninety and a hundred, perhaps.
69. But can you judge whether the public are aware that they may place their deeds or wills in the custody of your office? Only wills; they are not at liberty to place deeds there. I do not think it is generally known that such is the case.
70. Do you think it desirable that some public notification should be given to the public that they may place these documents there? I think it is desirable that it should be generally known, and that both original deeds as well as wills might be deposited, and that the deposit of deeds should satisfy the covenant for production.
71. The original deeds of a title might be deposited, with proper indexes for immediate reference, and that the due authentication of that should satisfy the covenant for production? Yes.
72. Would that be a desirable arrangement as to the public? I think so.
73. Both as to the parties covenanting and the parties to be protected by covenants? In both instances. Of course the production from our office should be deemed as evidence of the deed.
74. Of course that could not be done without an enlarged office? There would have to be a large room provided for that purpose, and unless it was a safe building the public would of course not deposit their deeds with the Registrar; but with a proper building I think it would be general—that the deeds of subdivided estates would be deposited.
75. What is the amount of your salary, Mr. Jaques? At present it is £350.
76. I believe you are an attorney? I am an attorney and solicitor.
77. Do you carry on a private practice? I occasionally prepare deeds for relations and friends; but that is in the evening, and does not in any way interfere with my duties at the office; and I wish it to be understood that the index which I compiled from 1825 to 1837 was entirely extra work. I felt an interest in the department, and I compiled that index by extra work, for which I had no remuneration.
78. Was it at your own suggestion? At my own suggestion.
79. By Mr. Smith: Do you know if the wills in the Supreme Court are in a dry state, or damp? I do not know.
80. Has it ever happened that you have seen those wills in the course of business? I have seen them, when I belonged to the Court, and they seemed to me to be in a dry state; but this was before they were put in the room at the foot of the stairs.
81. You have not been into the compartment in which they are now deposited? No.
82. You are not aware whether it is a dry or a damp place? No.
83. From its locality do you think it is dry? I should say not.
84. Is there any ventilation? None.
85. Is it below the pavement or above it? It is above the pavement.
86. Underneath the staircase? Underneath the staircase.
87. It is an iron roof? Yes.
88. And a wooden door? I cannot say: I think it is.
89. And no means of ventilation? No means of ventilation.
90. By Mr. Hay: Where were those registers that are now found to be fading—where were they kept previous to their removal to the present office? In a building between St. James' Church and the Court House. That building was very damp. I pointed out to the Chief Justice, on one or two occasions, the damp state of the records in that building.
91. By Mr. Smith: Do you mean the new wing? Where the Insolvent Court now is.
92. By Mr. Hay: Is the house in which they are now lodged perfectly dry? It is perfectly dry and warm where they are now kept.
93. Do you think any of the registers suffered from damp in the old building? Yes, I think many of them suffered from damp. But I would observe that the ink still fades, notwithstanding their being in a dry room; and even documents which we have received since we have been in Castlereagh-street it is perceptible that they fade.
94. By Mr. Smith: Do they all fade, or do some fade and others retain their colour? Some fade, and some only parts of them fade—apparently where the sheep has been diseased, or from some particular cause in the parchment.
95. Do you notice a difference in the deeds from different solicitors' offices, written with different inks? No; some from each office are faded. It appears to me that it is more the parchment than the ink, on account of our own ink fading. We are supplied with the best ink, and we find our ink fade as well as the solicitors'.
96. Are you aware whether any particular kind of ink is used in England for valuable records? I am not aware.
97. By Mr. Hay: You are not aware whether this ink, though supplied by Government, is in

- T. J. Jaques, in reality the best ink? I am not aware. I only presume so from the fact that it is supplied to the Government as the best ink.
- Esq.
- 16 June, 1868. 98. Are you not aware that Government stationery is very bad? I am quite aware of that.
99. By the Chairman: But you think the ink is an exception? No. It is only supplied to us as the best. I find that our ink fades as well as the solicitors' ink.
100. In some cases perhaps it fades more than in others? There is one deed you will observe written on ten or twelve sheets of parchment; some parts are faded and some legible. They were apparently written with the same ink, and at the same time.
101. Written at the same time. Where different inks are used one portion will fade where another portion written with another sort of ink has not faded? No, I cannot say that. The ink on certain skins is faded in places notwithstanding the use of the same ink.
102. I omitted to ask you about the present system of searching: that is, I believe, the right of the public at present? It is done by the public at present.
103. And certain precautions are taken to prevent any tampering with the records? Yes; but, notwithstanding that precaution, I think that the public, if they had an evil intent, could so materially alter the index that it would throw a searcher entirely off the title.
104. It could be done? It could be done.
105. And it might be done, and years pass over without detection? Yes, without it being detected. In one instance I discovered that such an alteration had taken place; it was in the name of Bluck, a person residing on the Surry Hills. The name had been changed by joining the top of the u and making it Black. There are many names—the public having free use of the index—that could be totally changed by a trifling alteration:—"Hill" to "Hall," "Peck" to "Peeck," "Hore" to "How," "Barber" to "Barker," and so on.
106. There is a risk of that, notwithstanding the utmost vigilance? Yes.
107. And that would cause considerable inconvenience? It would perhaps lead an attorney into a serious error.
108. Not only the attorney but the public? No doubt the purchaser would suffer.
109. Then what do you recommend as a change upon this? I should recommend that the searches be made by efficient parties appointed in the department. They would have to be competent parties, with some knowledge of the deeds they would have to inspect.
110. Would a person educated in that way search with greater facility, greater rapidity, and greater certainty than any casual searcher? No doubt; becoming acquainted with the indexes and registers he would make a search in a much quicker time than a stranger unconnected with the department.
111. Now, for instance, there are several extensive properties in this country I believe you could lay your finger upon in much shorter time than anybody else? In a much shorter time.
112. And so it would be with any competent person who made it a study? Yes; they would also keep a copy of every search they had made and then upon a subsequent requisition they would only have to continue the search. Though an extensive work in the first instance, it would gradually decrease, as they would have a copy-search against the large land dealers.
113. Do you think a fee would pay the expense of that? Yes; and I think the attorneys generally would agree to it; but I think power should be given and reserved to the public to make the search, accompanied by these searchers, in case they wished to inspect any particular deed themselves.
114. Then the office in that case of taking the searches would also have the right of furnishing copies? The office now furnishes all copies, but at certain times the copying clerk is so engaged that he cannot get it done sufficiently quick, and then the attorney sends an engrossing clerk, and we charge the same fee as if the copy had been made by the department.
115. Then you recommend that that course should be adopted? I think the searching should be done by the department.
116. And that it might be covered by the fees? By the fees.
117. There would, of course, be great responsibility—how would you arrange that? I should think that the Registrar or searching clerk should not be responsible unless carelessness were proved. You see, in searching the attorney is now acquainted with the title, either by abstract or otherwise, whereas the searching clerk, not having that knowledge, might conceive that the property did not affect the particular property for which search was being made, and might pass over where the description was so vague that he could not tell the precise locality of the land; but the attorney, having a knowledge of the locality from the abstract, and from conversation with his client, would know of these particular localities.
118. Then you think the office should not be responsible? Yes—not responsible.
119. Do you think the public would be satisfied with that arrangement? I think the public would be satisfied if competent persons were appointed, and the Government, no doubt, for their own credit, would do all they could to ensure careful searching.
120. But, in cases of gross negligence you think there should be a responsibility? Yes; for gross negligence or tampering the clerk should be responsible.
121. Do you not think it desirable wills should be also registered before probate was granted? Yes.
122. A simpler plan would be, I apprehend, to enact that all wills should be registered. There would be no objection to that course, would there? No, except from expense to the public. It should not be a very heavy expense.
123. By Mr. Hay: Wills relating to mere personal property would not be necessary? No.
124. By Mr. Smith: Do you not think it more likely mistakes would be made in the event of wills which convey or devise real estate only being registered, and those in reference to personal property not—if it were known that all wills must be registered there would be less liability to error? Yes, there might be.
125. And the expense would not be very heavy? No.
126. In fact, I presume, the expense would depend upon the length of the will? Yes.
127. A short will would be comparatively inexpensive? Yes.
128. Looking at the signatures you have seen from time to time of the various officials in public public offices, do not you think it very desirable that caution should be given to these gentlemen not to blot their signatures, to prevent them fading away? Yes, but in cases such as my own signature, which is written sometimes sixty or seventy times a day, it would be impossible without incurring the liability of their being smeared. There are so many signatures at one time in a deed, that unless you blotted them you could not put the deed away; the affidavit being on one side and the receipt on the other, for instance.

T. J. Jaques,
Esq.
16 June, 1858.

129. It is beyond a doubt that blotted signatures fade more rapidly than those which are not blotted? I believe that some cause of the fading is too quickly blotting.

130. By the Chairman: Perhaps you have something more to state to the Committee? I was going to point out that the great difficulty we have now in the indexing and searching is from the want of a consecutive trace of the titles. It not being compulsory, many parties omit to register deeds, and the title is then taken up at a distant interval; so that I think registration should be compulsory, or that validity should be given to registered deeds over unregistered deeds.

131. Without retaining equities? Without retaining equities. Also deeds by endorsement are so frequently indefinite that it is impossible to tell who is the vendor or the mortgagor, and without reference to the deed upon which they are endorsed. There are also innumerable subdivisions of properties without defining the starting point, or the locality of the land.

132. By Mr. Smith: In point of fact, a property may have been re-conveyed by one of those deeds by endorsement, as you term them, and yet no proof of the re-conveyance may exist at the registry office; and a party going to the registry office would imagine that the person who possessed the estate by virtue of the original deed still possesses it? They could not tell whether the mortgage had been re-conveyed or not by the copy endorsement registered.

133. The mortgagee would still appear to be in possession? The mortgage would still appear to be outstanding. Then there is the case of single women. The females being married the conveyances appear in the name of the husband, and there is a difficulty we always have in searching, thus:—Ann Jones possesses property, and we would know where to find it, but she may marry Thomas Smith, and the transfer would appear in the name of Thomas Smith and his wife.

134. By Mr. Hay: You think it is necessary that there should be something to show the connection? Where a husband sells by right of his wife it should state, as in the case of Ann Jones, Thomas Smith and Ann his wife, formerly Ann Jones. If upon the deed it disclosed the fact that the husband was selling by right of his wife, and that she bore the name of the original proprietor, then we should be enabled to index it,—Ann Jones (now Smith) and Thomas Smith, with the consent of his present wife (Ann Smith). The difficulty is not knowing the change from the letter J to the letter S.

135. By Mr. Smith: But I apprehend you would have both the letter J and the letter S, and that in the case of Thomas Smith and wife (late Ann Jones) your record would be, on the one side Smith and wife, and on the other Ann Jones (now Smith)? Yes. I would also recommend that the deeds deposited or registered should be duplicates instead of copies, with the signature of either party, purchaser or vendor, because if it were the duplicate of the deed it would be future evidence against them. The copy deed now is signed by either party, either the purchaser or vendor, and of course the purchaser's signature could not be taken as evidence against the vendor.

136. By the Chairman: You recommend that it should be a duplicate? Yes; shortened in the way I formerly mentioned.

137. By Mr. Smith: Signed by all the parties to the deed? Signed by all the parties; and that in cases where they could not get a duplicate signed they should deposit a copy and the original. The copy could be bound up in the ordinary size and refer to the original. I would also mention, that in many of the original grants from the Crown the description is indefinite—not setting forth the counties or parishes, and that that same blank is perpetuated in all conveyances. That is a great difficulty also in searching. In other cases the land is situated in both counties, of which I have shewn a list here. (Witness handed in the same. Vide Appendix A.)

138. By Mr. Hay: In this case, at the time that land was granted it was not within any county—it was beyond the original boundary? Still there are instances in the known counties where they have omitted to put in the county or parish.

139. Do those instances occur of late? Some still occur.

140. By the Chairman: The parish would be unnamed in more than three out of four instances? Yes; but it is in the counties where the difficulty arises. You may search and find that the land is at Violet Creek, but you cannot get the information where that Violet Creek is.

141. By Mr. Hay: Did I understand you to suggest the division of the index according to the police districts? Either police districts or other defined divisions of the Colony.

142. You are aware, with reference to a great portion of the grants, that they have been described as in certain counties? That has been the rule hitherto.

143. The boundaries of those counties having been defined and proclaimed? Yes.

144. Then it would entail a considerable degree of inconvenience if with respect to the registry any other division were now to be adopted? To those past registers; but I am speaking of the subsequent registers taking the police districts or other defined boundaries.

145. You are aware that the survey has been conducted with reference to the boundaries of counties and not with respect to the boundaries of police districts? Yes; I am aware that it has been principally according to the counties.

146. The boundary of a police district as now proclaimed might go right through the centre of an estate? Oh! yes.

147. Of which there was but one grant? Of which there was but one grant, as it does now in some instances, going through counties, as illustrated in this Appendix, A—there are 1,900 acres of land part in the County of Bathurst and part in the County of Wellington.

148. In one deed? Yes.

149. There was no necessity for that? I do not know; but it was laid out by Government surveyors; that is the difficulty we should experience in keeping county registers.

150. You would have, I presume, to have all such deeds registered in the register for each county? Yes, where land lay in both counties, in each county, or each police district.

Present :—

MR. HAY,

MR. OWEN,

MR. SMITH.

ROBERT OWEN, ESQ., IN THE CHAIR.

John Smith, Esq., M.D., Professor of Chemistry to the University of Sydney, called in and examined :—

John Smith,
Esq., M.D.

1. By the Chairman : Have you examined the records in the Registrar General's Office on parchment? Yes, certain of them. The Registrar General shewed me a great variety of specimens, and I think some of the most illegible he had in his possession.
2. Did you observe them generally as well? Yes; I looked over a number of volumes.
3. Did you find different degrees of legibility in the writing? Yes, from perfect legibility up to perfect illegibility. Some of the writing could not have been deciphered by the most practised eye.
4. I believe your previous studies have enabled you to judge what is likely to be the cause of this illegibility? Only, perhaps, to a limited extent. With regard to the action of parchment upon ink, I am not prepared to say what the peculiar action is. The general nature of the action is obviously this,—the organic acid of the ink has been destroyed.
5. By Mr. Hay : By what? I am not prepared to say. I cannot tell what particular action of the parchment should have caused that effect.
6. By the Chairman : Can you state whether the illegibility of the writing has arisen from the ink or from the parchment? In looking over the books at first I had great difficulty in making up my mind. In some places one would say, almost at once, that it must be the ink; in others, they would be equally inclined to say it must be the parchment. If one wanted to make out a theory either way he could get examples to bear it out. Upon the whole, however, I think the effect must be attributed chiefly to the parchment. I am inclined to think there are cases which you must attribute to the ink; but certainly there are cases where apparently the very same ink has been used, and where you have legibility in one case and illegibility in the other: so that I must attribute most of the effect to the parchment.
7. Have you observed the paper records of the office? Yes. I was shewn a number of paper records, some of them very old—fifty years old at least.
8. What is the result of your opinion from that examination? In some cases, certainly, the writing has faded a little, but not so much as to be illegible. The worst specimens I saw were perfectly readable.
9. And the worst specimens on the parchment — ? Were perfectly illegible. Those accustomed to such writing could not make out the words.
10. Looking to the paper as it has been used, without, perhaps, any particular selection of it, and looking to the parchment as it stands on the records, what is the result of your opinion as to the preferability of one to the other? My impression is that, upon the whole, paper will be safer than parchment. There are some specimens of parchment where the writing is as bright as when first written, but the greater portion of the writing is faded, more or less. None of the parchments I have seen are very old; and if the fading goes on the probability is that in the majority of cases the writing will become illegible in a few years, whereas in the paper documents, after fifty years, the fading has gone on to a very slight extent. The reason of the fading, as I have said, must be the destruction of the organic acid. Ink is a compound of gallotannic acid and iron. This gallotannic acid gets destroyed—I would not say in what manner, but we know that such organic acids are easily destroyed. Gallotannic acid is destroyed by most alkaline substances, and parchment is prepared, I believe—I do not know the actual process—by means of lime or chalk. Now, lime is an alkaline substance, and will destroy ink. If, then, we suppose that some lime has been left in certain specimens, while it has been thoroughly removed from others, that would be a very probable ground of the difference. In those skins where a little lime had been left, the action of that would destroy the ink. Further, with regard to parchment, I have noticed that those skins that are most illegible have a very smooth surface, and give you an idea of a slightly greasy surface. Now, grease is of an acid nature, chemically considered, or very liable to turn acid; and I could easily imagine, although I do not know that such an effect occurs, that the greasy or oily matter left in the skin might destroy the ink.
11. Those accustomed to write on parchment find a great difficulty in getting the ink to sink into greasy parchment—it seems to remain on the surface—have you observed that? The only thing in connection with that I can say I observed was, that in certain cases, where erasures had been made, where the original word had been scratched out, and a new word written in, the new word was much more legible than the others; shewing that where the ink had an opportunity of sinking into the parchment the writing was much more permanent.
12. You are aware that in writing upon parchment the writers almost universally apply some substance called pounce, cuttle-fish, or something of a limy nature, in order that the writing may remain? If any of these compounds used contained lime it would be in the state of carbonate of lime, and would not have the same injurious effect as quicklime. My impression is, that in the original preparation of parchment carbonate of lime is sometimes used, and at other times quicklime; the quicklime would probably be more dangerous if any of it were left in the parchment. What I have said about the action of these matters upon the ink refers only to writing ink; printing ink would not be acted upon by any of these substances that I speak of. Printing ink is perfectly indelible; there is no method known of destroying the black of which it is composed without destroying the fabric upon which it is printed.

John Smith,
Esq., M.D.

29 July, 1858.

13. By Mr. Hay: What is it composed of? The basis is lampblack, and inks have been prepared for writing with having a basis of lampblack, and that would be utterly indestructible by ordinary agency—by any that would not destroy the fabric.
14. By the Chairman: Even though it were written on inferior parchment? Nothing in parchment of any sort will destroy the black of lampblack.
15. By Mr. Smith: Is the lampblack writing ink made now? I believe it is, but it is not in common use; I believe the difficulty is in making it flow easily from the pen and getting it to sink into the paper. Various methods have been tried to make an indeible ink that will flow from the pen. I know some patents have been taken out for indelible inks, and many fluids have been tried to suspend lampblack; because you must have a fluid which will hold lampblack in suspension. One plan was to dissolve gluten of wheat in weak acetic acid, and then to mix lampblack with it.
16. By the Chairman: You are fully acquainted with the materials that compose paper? Yes. I do not know all the details of the process now-a-days.
17. Do you consider well made paper very lasting in its nature? Yes; pure paper is a very unchanging substance; it is a substance extremely little liable to change, and not likely to act upon any of the organic acids that common ink contains.
18. So that writing upon paper, under all circumstances, must be less liable to be rendered illegible than upon parchment? If pure paper were used that would be the case. The ink might still fade, from atmospheric influences or from damp, because other things will act upon the acid of ink besides the fabric upon which it is written. Ink made of logwood instead of pure gall nuts will be more likely to fade. With pure paper there would be no bad influence of the paper upon the ink, for the chemical substance that forms the pure paper is remarkably inert.
19. Will you have the goodness to state what pure paper should be composed of? Pure paper should be made from clean linen rags, and if bleaching substances be employed, they ought to be thoroughly washed out of it. I believe it to be possible to make fine paper without employing such bleaching agencies as would destroy the purity of the substance. For example, you might employ linen that has been bleached upon the grass in the sun, and where this natural bleaching process has been employed without any chemical bleaching agency you would have a pure substance, for clean pure linen is almost a pure chemical substance, being a specimen of almost pure cellulose. This cellulose you would obtain if you used no chloride of lime in bleaching, but simply the sun and air; and it is an unchangeable inert chemical substance, and is not known to act in any way upon the organic acids of ink.
20. Paper prepared in that way would be very durable—it would last for centuries? So far as we know, it would never of itself decay. There is nothing inherent that will cause decay, provided it be kept in a moderately dry atmosphere.
21. Then is it the general result of your opinion that paper would be preferable to parchment in records of this description? On the whole, I think it would be more easy to secure good pure paper than to secure good sound parchment, and good pure paper is more certain to retain writing than parchment.
22. And, therefore, if you had the direction of the material for these records you would prefer paper to parchment? That is my opinion. Arrangements could be made with a first class manufacturer to supply the paper especially for this purpose, in which no material should be employed that would be likely to have any action upon the ink; and I believe such papers are made for various purposes, where no chloride of lime is used, or where none is allowed to remain. Then the ink must be carefully prepared also; but I believe the best methods of making good writing ink are well known now, and a particular variety of ink might be obtained, such as I believe is now used in the Registrar General's Office in England.
23. Do you know what that is composed of? All the best black writing inks are composed essentially of an infusion of gall nuts and sulphate of iron, with a little gum to give a slight thickiness to it. When other things are put in it is generally to make the ink cheaper.
24. I presume there would be no difficulty in a manufacturer putting a mark upon the paper prepared in the way you suggest? No difficulty. What are called water-marks could be introduced in the preparation.
25. So as clearly to distinguish it as registry paper? Yes; there would be no difficulty; it could easily be distinguished from all other.
26. By Mr. Smith: I judge from your evidence that you think it would be most essential that the Government here should import the best paper for registration purposes, and also the best ink? I have heard that suggestion made, and I think, on the whole, it is a very good suggestion. I think that would secure a supply of the finest paper, and certainly it could be no hardship upon those who prepare deeds that they should have to apply to a certain office for the necessary paper.
27. It might be done in this way: The Government might import the paper, and place it in the hands of agents, in the same way as postage stamps, for sale—the Registrar General being instructed to receive no deeds for registration but those written on this paper, bearing the stamp of the office? I think, upon the whole, that would be a good plan, and it would be an additional check upon the genuineness of these documents if none were legal except those written on the authorised paper.
28. Without this precaution, even if we decided that paper should be the substance on which these deeds should be written, the registered copy would always be liable to obliteration when the paper was bad? I think that liability would be very small, because paper, as a general rule, now-a-days is so good; but still a little extra precaution would be highly desirable; and this might be taken by getting the paper made expressly for the purpose by a first class manufacturer.
29. No private inconvenience would result from that cause, as it would be very easy for lawyers or law stationers to get a supply of this paper from the Registrar General's Office? I think there there would be no inconvenience. I do not think it would be a very expensive process, for very fine paper is not much dearer than inferior paper.

30. The difference of cost would be almost infinitesimal? Upon individual documents it would be very trifling.

John Smith,
Esq., M.D.

29 July, 1868.

31. In looking through the books in the Registrar General's Office have you noticed that two deeds written on the same day, within a few hours of each other, and bearing Mr. Jaques' signature, signed with the same ink, there is a great difference with regard to the legibility of the writing—does not that case shew that it is the parchment that has affected the legibility, and not the ink? That is one of the cases which shew that the parchment is in fault.

32. Are there cases where on the same sheet of parchment there are different inks in different states of preservation? There again the fault might be attributed to the ink—certain descriptions of ink may be more likely to be acted on by the deleterious ingredient in the parchment than others.

33. Upon the whole you think the parchment is more in fault than the ink? That is my general impression, from looking over a great many pages.

34. By Mr. Hay: In examining these paper records did you observe any cases of fading in them? Yes, of fading, but not to a great extent; the worst writing I saw upon paper is quite readable.

35. Does paper or parchment suffer most from damp? I cannot answer that question, for I do not know the action of damp upon parchment. Paper is not liable to great injury from moderate dampness; it will stand a damp atmosphere for a long time.

36. Do you know what is the substance of the most ancient M.S. that have come down to us, and of those of the middle ages? I have not considered that matter.

37. You are aware that there are very old parchments and vellums on which the writing is in a state of very great preservation? It is a matter I have not gone into, but it is likely they used inks with a permanent black basis—lampblack, or some other carbonaceous basis—like the China ink of the present day. This is an indelible ink, because the black basis is carbonaceous.

38. Is there not a difficulty in getting paper of sufficient tenacity to stand the wear and tear of much handling? Ordinary paper, of course, would not stand the same amount of handling as parchment. Paper can be made very tenacious, about as tenacious as parchment; but that involves manipulations that might injure the paper with relation to the ink. I know one method of producing very strong paper, but that would cause doubt in my mind as to the advisability of using it. If paper is drawn through diluted sulphuric acid, and washed thoroughly in clean water, the chemical nature of the paper is changed, and it becomes nearly as strong as parchment; but I would not say that it would be safe to use it with common writing ink.

39. You think there might be a danger of injuring its quality as a recipient of ink? I think there might be a danger. If there were the least speck of acid not washed out it would injure the ink.

40. Is there any method of chemical analysis by which the quality of the paper could be easily ascertained? It would be difficult, because a minute quantity of matter left in the paper, which could scarcely be detected by analysis, might, in process of years, act upon the ink. We know that these infinitesimal quantities of matter which we can scarcely detect or estimate will, if they have plenty of time, produce very obvious effects.

41. Do you think you might in this way ascertain if the paper were really unfit for the purpose—if it were decidedly bad, would the quantity of the injurious matter be so small as to render it difficult to detect? In case the paper were decidedly bad I think the chemical tests would ascertain it.

42. With regard to ink, is it easy by analysis to find out whether it is good or bad? No, it is very difficult; you must try the ink, or trust to the manufacturer.

43. Might not a quantity of the ink used in the office be always kept on hand for the purpose of testing any fresh ink before the latter was used? You could scarcely test it; age is the only satisfactory test.

44. Is there no way, by exposure to the atmosphere, or to damp, to anticipate the gradual effects of age? I do not think so. You might in the case of very bad ink accelerate the change by some contrivance, and see, in the course of a very short time, that it is liable to fade; but I think that would be the case only with very bad ink. I do not think you could, in a limited time, imitate the effect of long exposure to the air.

45. You do not think exposure to a very unusual extent to the air would produce the same effect as the usual exposure for a long continued period? I do not think it would.

46. In one of these books, if not very much used, there can be very little exposure to the air? In a chemical point of view they are exposed to the air. The gases permeate in a remarkable way between the leaves, and if this obliteration is caused by an oxidizing process, which is not at all unlikely, enough air would get between these leaves to produce that oxidization. The quality of the ink might perhaps be determined by the use of weak bleaching agents, but I would scarcely venture to propose that as a means of testing it. Common writing ink is easily bleached.

47. By Mr. Smith: I think you said that in the Registration Office at home they do use a particular kind of ink? I believe so.

48. Would it not be the safest plan to use the same here? I think so. No doubt they have taken means to ascertain what is the best ink.

49. By the Chairman: You have been in the Registry Office? Yes, examining the documents there.

50. Is it sufficiently aired and warmed, do you suppose, for the ordinary purpose of preserving deeds—is it so situated, or is the house so constructed, as to be the best adapted to preserve them from damp? I would not like to give an opinion upon that subject. The house I think is well enough situated; perhaps the ventilation might be improved; but I merely

John Smith,
Esq., M.D.

29 July, 1878.

went into the house for a special purpose, and I did not pay much attention to the arrangement. I think a place where written documents are kept should be well ventilated, and that means should be taken to keep it reasonably warm. A moderately warm dry atmosphere I believe to be most favorable to the preservation of written documents.

51. Have you been in the Will Office at Doctors Commons? No; but I have seen statements that many documents in the Registrar General's Office in England have been destroyed by being kept in a damp cellar.

52. In the construction of a building for the preservation of records, will you state of what indestructible material it should be built—whether the prevalence of iron would be at all injurious? I think the prevalence of iron would not be injurious. I think ordinary fire-proof materials, stone or iron, might be used without any risk. No doubt, if the place were damp, iron would rust, and might communicate stains and other damage to the books, but on the supposition that the building was kept dry and reasonably warm, I think there would be no risk from the use of iron.

53. It should be well drained? Yes, and ventilated, and means should be taken for keeping it properly warm in cold weather, not that I attach much importance to the state of the temperature, but I would keep it warm in order to keep it dry.

54. By Mr. Smith: If it were built of stone a fire would draw from the stones any damp that might be in them? Yes. There is a method of plastering houses here which I have not seen elsewhere; I refer to the plaster being put upon the stone without laths. I think, in building a registration office, the rooms should be lathed as well as plastered.

55. Do you not think the room would be better if there were merely bare walls without plaster? I think that might be better, excepting that here you have the disadvantage of porous stone.

56. Do you not think it would be desirable to build the Registrar General's Office on a plan of this kind:—To have an inner room surrounded by an outer wall to withstand the weather, with a space between the outer and inner walls, and to place a layer of cement and slate between the ground and the upper courses, to prevent the damp from the ground rising through the walls? I have no doubt, with fires inside to keep the place warm, such a building would be perfectly dry.

57. By Mr. Hay: Is it not necessary with the usual building stone of Sydney to paint the walls, in order to prevent damp from penetrating? Some impervious material ought to be put on, and paint is the most convenient. They are now employing in England a kind of glaze or silicated varnish.

58. By the Chairman: Might not wooden shelves be so prepared as not to be destructible by fire? I believe wood can be rendered, not indestructible by fire, but so that it will not easily take fire.

59. That it would not be very liable to ignition? It could be made so that it would not be liable to ignition.

60. Would that be a dry material for shelves for books to rest upon? I would prefer wood properly seasoned, and not so prepared. If the office were in a stone building like what has been spoken of, there would be no possibility of external fire touching it. Shelves of well-seasoned wood, without further preparation, would be quite sufficient.

61. Would they be preferable to stone shelves? I think so; stone shelves would take up a great deal of space, and I think it would be preferable to have wood as shelves, with which the leather binding of books would come in contact.

62. Have you any further information to furnish the Committee with respecting the matters upon which you have been examined? Nothing further occurs to me at present.

63. Will you have the kindness to look at the Bill now before this Committee, which has passed the Legislative Council, called "An Act for the better preservation of Registered Instruments." The preamble of this Bill mentions that at present the law requires deeds and other instruments registered to be on parchment, and states that "it is expedient that the law in this respect should be altered, and that copies for registration should hereafter be on paper, and that fresh copies on paper should be substituted for certain copies upon vellum and parchment, already partially obliterated." Is it your opinion that this is expedient? I think on the whole it is expedient.

64. I think you have stated that some of the records are quite illegible, and that others are nearly so? Yes.

65. I believe you have made some small experiment as to the restoration of the writing so as to render it more legible? Yes. On examining the worst specimens I found there was still a faint trace of the oxide of iron left from the ink,—the organic acid had gone, the black color had gone, but there was a faint trace of the iron basis. I then went on the supposition that we might restore the original acid, and accordingly I moistened a corner where the writing was perfectly illegible. I could make nothing out of it myself, even using a lens I could not read a word or recognize a letter. I then moistened a portion with an infusion of gall nuts, which contain the same acid that was in the ink. In this particular case the original ink had been blue, so that I do not think this quite so favorable a trial as it would have been if the original ink had been black. I painted the corner with this infusion, and allowed it to remain for a short time, and the writing became quite legible. Although not accustomed to read this particular kind of writing, I can read every word that has been written here.

66. Do you think the same application would be successful in the other cases you have observed in these books? I have almost no doubt that this process would render any portion of these volumes sufficiently legible to be re-copied. I do not think this revivification would be permanent, but sufficiently permanent to enable clerks to recopy the writing.

67. But in any case this application could not make matters worse? The writing could not be any worse for the moistening; the parchment would be physically worse, because if you wet parchment it will shrivel, but the writing would be none the worse.

68. Could that be done by any common hand, or should it be done by a chemical gentleman? Any clerk could do it. All that it would be necessary to do would be to prepare the infusion and apply it with a broad camel's hair brush over the page. John Smith, Esq., M.D.
69. What is the proportion of gall nuts to water? I made the infusion at random, and I was satisfied with this preliminary trial, but if I were to go into the matter, I would try solutions of pure gallic and tannic acids of different strengths. 29 July, 1858.
70. By Mr. Smith: Whatever infusion is used, would it not be better that it should be prepared by a chemist? It would be better that a chemist should prepare it, but it could be applied by any clerk.
71. By Mr. Hay: It could be prepared by any practical chemist? Yes.
72. Do you think that if these records are left for some time without anything being done to them, will it not be impossible, even by the process you have now tried, to make the writing legible at all? I would scarcely venture to speak positively on that score. My impression is that it might be revived a few years after this. I do not anticipate any such rapid process of destruction going on; in fact, I believe this might be done after any length of time, because I think the oxide of iron will remain, and so long as you have oxide of iron you may revive it by the application of gallotannic acid.
73. By the Chairman: In the meantime the records might be required, and the process you mention could be employed harmlessly? It could be employed harmlessly; still I think it should not be used until the documents are to be re-copied. That is to say, I would recommend that the books should not be gone over as a whole, but should be prepared within a few days of their being re-copied.
74. Would you recommend that anything should be placed between the leaves after the application of this solution? I would treat only one leaf at a time, and protect the next sheet by a few sheets of paper or a board.
75. Would you protect it in this way permanently, or only until it was dry? Only until it was perfectly dry. When perfectly dry it will have no effect upon the neighbouring page. A portion of the deed to enable the clerk to ascertain the nature of it might be revived, and the rest might be done when required. But what I have particularly in view just now is, that supposing you moisten a sheet with the infusion, and then lay it aside without re-copying, if it were left so long as to fade the second time it might not be so easy to revive it again.
76. The third clause enacts, that "whenever it shall appear to the Registrar General that any certified copy already registered in his office is partially injured, and in danger of obliteration, he may cause a true paper copy thereof to be made." That clause seems to be framed in accordance with the suggestion we have now received from you,—that the restoration be made as required only, and immediately after being painted? Yes.
77. Have you any further suggestion to make to the Committee? None.

WEDNESDAY, 25 AUGUST, 1858.

Present:—

MR. HAY,
MR. JONES,

MR. OWEN,
MR. PIDDINGTON.

R. OWEN, Esq., IN THE CHAIR.

David Bruce Hutchinson, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: I believe you are Chief Clerk of the Supreme Court? I am.
2. Are the original wills of the Colony deposited in the Supreme Court? They are.
3. Are they kept in a separate room? They are kept in a small chamber; in a species of recess in the wall on the ground floor of the Supreme Court.
4. Is it a well-aired chamber? No; there is no ventilation whatever, except when the door is opened.
5. I believe they are all the original wills that have been proved from the commencement of the Colony? Yes.
6. Are they in such a position as to ensure their safety? No; I think they are very unsafe indeed, in case of fire or accident; the walls of the chamber are but of brick and plaster, and the roof is of cased iron, and the door is also iron; this is the only safeguard against fire.
7. The roof appears to be like a sheet of iron? It is of sheet iron, but whether the iron is double or not I do not know.
8. You think that would be no defence against fire? No; I think it would rather tend to the destruction of these documents in the event of fire, as the iron would become red-hot.
9. Are these wills copied—are there duplicates made? At present they are very much in arrear—for nearly ten years I should say.
10. So that the wills are only represented by themselves? Yes; and if lost, the record of a large number of them would be lost to the Colony altogether.
11. I need not ask you whether it is of great importance that that should be prevented? Of very great indeed; the misery, expense and trouble such an event would bring upon a large number of persons interested under the wills cannot be estimated.
12. You think it therefore important that they should be removed to some place of safety? Every day's delay in such a matter is important; if there were a fire, and these wills were destroyed, the loss would be, to a very great extent indeed, irreparable. Titles to large properties are involved in these records, and if these were destroyed the holders of property would perhaps in very many instances have no proof whatever of their title, which, if desirous - of selling, or in the event of its being disputed, would lead to a great amount of litigation, inconvenience, and misery.

13. There are fires in the various rooms in the Court? Yes; and in the various offices.
14. And in the housekeeper's rooms? Yes; in fact the building is very liable to fire at any time; it is an old building, and there is an immense quantity of timber about it; if it were once to catch fire, it is my opinion that it would never be extinguished until the building was entirely destroyed.
15. It is peculiarly liable to fire from its construction? Yes.
16. I presume the wills are under the custody of the Prothonotary? Yes; but under my more immediate custody, as having the management of the Ecclesiastical Department.
17. Supposing they were transferred to a separate, safe building, could you suggest whether it would be necessary that the Supreme Court should have immediate reference to them? The Supreme Court should have the immediate control over them, with power of immediate reference to them.
18. They are frequently referred to? They are frequently referred to in connection with litigation. They are so essentially connected with the administration of justice that I think an experienced officer, who knows something about the nature of wills, should be able to see them with the parties searching.
19. I suppose you have the keys of this chamber? I have the key, which I keep in the strong-box up-stairs with a few of the wills in general use, for reference, perhaps half a dozen, and those that we are copying.
20. In case of a fire happening, how could these wills be reached and rescued from the danger? The bulk of the wills are kept in the chamber I have described, upon the ground floor, and from the back of the Court—the Judges' entrance as it is called—the iron door of this chamber is about four yards; but as the key is kept in my custody up-stairs, it would be necessary, in the event of fire, to break open the iron door, and before that could be accomplished the wills might be consumed altogether.
21. Then I presume you have a strong opinion that some immediate steps should be taken to secure these wills? Yes, as soon as possible.
22. Do you think they are in greater danger as they are now than they would be in the Registrar General's Office as it is? I have never been in the Registrar General's Office to see where the records are kept.
23. What would you suggest to be done for their safety?—Would it be advisable to have them removed to a place of safety, and to have the premises contiguous to, or in the neighbourhood of, the Supreme Court, in order that the wills as they came in might be placed in the new depository? It would be very necessary that the new Record Office should be near the Supreme Court, because I suppose there may be ten or twelve, and sometimes more searches in a day—sometimes there are only one or two. These searches are frequently very long, and it is necessary that either myself or one of the clerks should attend the party searching. If there is any difficulty, I go myself, and explain the wills to the parties. There is a difficulty in the searching of wills which there is not in the search of other documents: you can see on the face of a deed the nature of it; but in the case of wills there may be amongst the papers informal documents which the Judges may have set aside, and if a person who came to search had no one with him who understood the matter he might go away with false information; for instance, a will may not be executed according to law, and, therefore, informal; yet, we keep the document impounded with the papers, that no improper use may be made of it.
24. How are the wills placed? They are tied up as soon as the petition to the Judges is granted, or motion is made in Court, when the officer sees that all is correct, and the judicial act is passed, they are then sown up with the affidavits and other documents, with a piece of tape or ribbon, and each separate will is then folded up and tied in strong cartridge-paper. The wills are tied up in convenient bundles, and put on deal shelves within this building or chamber.
25. How do you index them for reference? I keep an index thus—"Smith John, No. 426, "Thompson James, 432," and so on; and I keep a Probate Act Book in which is entered various particulars, such as the date of the probate, the names of the executors, and so on, and whether there is any informality in the will, or the wife being a dissipated character the administration has been given to the eldest son in preference to her, and whether there are any erasures or other particulars affecting the will. If any one desires to see the will I refer to the index-book in which the wills are numbered from 1 to upwards of 4,000, and the wills being likewise numbered in the bundles, it is easily found.
26. Are there upwards of 4,000 wills? No; there are 4,100 wills and administrations together: there are more than 2,000 wills altogether.
27. Are the affidavits and other documents attached to the wills? Yes; and that would also render it important that the Court should have control over them.
28. It follows that wherever they may be placed they should be convenient to the Supreme Court? Yes.
29. As it should be only with a responsible officer, like yourself, that the parties should be permitted to see them? Yes, or a responsible clerk under me. We see the wills arranged and placed before the party, and during the search a watchful eye is kept upon it: it is never taken out of sight. Either myself or a clerk goes with the party to the will-room, and one or the other remains till the search is completed.
30. In what state are these wills? They are in a very good state of preservation.
31. Are they chiefly on paper? Chiefly on paper—some are on parchment; but sometimes they are on very small slips of paper, and generally speaking on very bad paper. Those wills which are made up the country, where the testator can have no legal assistance, are written on all kinds of paper, and with bad ink. They are generally put with the affidavits, and preserved in the way I have before described.

32. For how many years have the arrears been accumulating? I think we are about ten or twelve years in arrear. The work increased so heavily upon us, and as the Legislature took a couple of clerks from the Common Law to the Equity branch, we found it to be impossible to keep them up.

D. B.
Hutchinson,
Esq.

25 Aug., 1858.

33. There are fees paid for each will? The fees were very heavy until about six years ago; but Mr. Wentworth thought them too much, and brought in a Bill to reduce the fees upon probate to 30s., and if above £10,000 the maximum fee is only 40s. So that the highest fee received by the Colony is 40s., and that covers the filing and swearing the affidavits, and all other incidental matters.

34. That is beneficial to the public? Yes.

35. How many wills do you average in the week? I think there were about 350 probates and administrations during last year. There is a return which I gave to the Chief Justice of the wills and administrations for the year 1857.

36. Do you recollect the amount of fees received in the year? It was very small indeed, because the fees commence at 7s. 6d. and 10s. for £50; 10s. for £100, and so on.

37. Perhaps the average would be 15s.? Between 10s. and 15s. The revenue derived from wills is very small now, because the affidavits, and everything done in connection with them, is supposed to be covered by the 30s. or 40s.

38. Would it occupy more than one clerk to keep up the work, supposing the arrears were conquered? If the whole attention of one clerk were devoted to it, it could be done; but I would suggest that the same practice should be adopted as that which is pursued with respect to deeds—that a copy, verified by some responsible person, should be made when a will is brought in, and that these copies should be of a certain size, and bound up for reference—that would be a very good record.

39. The copy to be made upon paper or parchment of a certain size? Yes, similar to that used in the registration of deeds. I do not suppose it would cost a party more than 10s. or 15s. in a small estate—not even that.

40. Wills in general are not of great length? No, except in such cases as those of William Hutchinson, or Robert Campbell, and some few others, were the wills extended over to some ten or twenty sheets.

41. So that if the arrears were overcome, these copies might be kept by a very small additional strength, and without any direct expense to the Colony? Yes, but we should need no additional strength.

42. And you would recommend that? Yes, and then the records would be perfect.

43. Into what kind of books are the wills copied? Into books of demy size.

44. Are they in a good state? A pretty fair state.

45. Are they on paper? Yes.

46. And each volume indexed? No, the one index I keep for the wills and administrations refers to everything. If I find a certain will is numbered 500, I refer to the book in which that number is kept and I find the copy.

47. Have you any other records of original documents? Nothing but the judgments and copies of bills of sale, which are not original. There is nothing the loss of which would cause any great inconvenience except the judgments, and we have lots of old process and other rubbish; perhaps it would not be a very bad thing if some of the latter were burned.

48. By Mr. Jones: There are no wills deposited here for safe custody? There were about half a dozen old ones, but I think they have been sent to the Registrar General.

49. By the Chairman: Does it come within your knowledge that many probates are lost? The probates themselves? I do not think more than three or four. We give an exemplified copy of the probate when lost.

50. Does it happen through people's carelessness that probates are lost? No; they have never come to us to remedy the loss, except in four or five instances.

51. Is there anything else you wish to state to the Committee? No. The only thing I desire to impress upon the Committee is that it would be very inconvenient if the wills were taken away from the control of the Supreme Court.

52. It would scarcely be necessary that the Registrar General should have any connexion with the inspection of them? I think he should not, unless by memorandum from us; because if he had there would be two responsible parties placed over these important documents, and if there were any tampering with them it would not be known upon whom the responsibility should be laid. In the event of the Legislature deeming it necessary to have the arrears of the wills copied, I would recommend that it should be done by contract. Law stationers would willingly undertake the duty, and they would do it cheaper and better than clerks paid according to the time they are employed.

Nicol Drysdale Stenhouse, Esq., called in and examined:—

1. By the Chairman: I believe you are a Solicitor of the Supreme Court? I have been a Solicitor here for about eighteen years. I also served the apprenticeship necessary to qualify me for becoming a Writer to the Signet, and practised for some time as a Solicitor in the Supreme Courts of Scotland.

N. D.
Stenhouse,
Esq.

25 Aug., 1858.

2. You conducted business in Edinburgh? Yes.

3. In the course of your business at Edinburgh, I suppose you had occasion to be at the General Register Office? Frequent.

4. Is it called the General Register Office there? It is called the General Register House.

5. Are original deeds deposited there? In some cases, the original deeds, but generally transcripts or abbreviates. No title to land is thoroughly secure without being registered in the form prescribed. The originals of the great national charters and documents are deposited in the General Register House. There are also some classes of deeds, of which the originals

N. D.
Stenhouse,
Esq.

25 Aug., 1858.

originals may, and others of which the originals must be so deposited. These, which relate principally to personal obligations, are registered either for the purpose of preservation, or of obtaining execution. I have had occasion to make very extensive searches, not only in the registers kept for sasines, but also in the register for special retours.

6. How are those searches made? In my time they might be made by legal practitioners or their clerks, or by the keepers of the respective offices, or their assistants. On one occasion I searched for the purpose of discovering what are called temple superiorities, all the special retours in Chancery from the latter part of the sixteenth century, down to the commencement of the eighteenth.

7. Did you search yourself? I did. Those retours are all written in Latin, or what is so called, except during the time of the Commonwealth.

8. Are these searches made by the solicitors who go to make them, or by any official parties in the office? In the case of Chancery records, I have no recollection of having seen any official certificates of search; it was usual, I believe, for the legal practitioner himself to search, or to employ a clerk, or in matters of antiquity, some person who had acquired a knowledge of the Latin language, and of ancient and Chancery handwriting.

9. But searches in the ordinary course of business are made by official persons? In my time, they might be made either by solicitors themselves, or by any one whom they authorised, generally a clerk, or by the keeper of the records.

10. Which is found to be the most convenient mode? Solicitors generally preferred what is called a certificate of search from the keeper; it relieved them from all responsibility.

11. As well in Edinburgh as in the country? I cannot speak particularly of the country, as I never practised except in Edinburgh. But I have no doubt that in the country also a certificate was preferred.

12. Are the names of the parties to the instruments in an index? Yes; at least in the offices kept for sasines. But what in this Colony is called an index, or at all events, its equivalent, is called in Scotland a minute book; and the entry in the minute book used to be much fuller, and much more calculated to preclude errors than the entry in our index.

13. The particulars of the deed, a sort of outline? Yes; I speak of the registers kept for sasines. The keeper entered in the minute book a note of the day and hour when the instrument was presented; and such an abstract or epitome of the instrument itself, as to shew distinctly what persons and lands it referred to. The conveyance or disposition on which the instrument of sasine was founded did not require to be registered; but, by the Ancient Acts of the Scottish Parliament, it was imperative, at least, in order to secure priority of right, that the instrument should be registered within sixty days from its date. After being entered in the minute books, the instruments, according to their order of presentation, were transcribed in registration books kept for the purpose, and were then returned with indorsed certificates of such transcription, mentioning the page of the volume. A note of the day and hour of registration was indorsed on the instrument, at the time of the entry in the minute book.

14. Are these annual indices? If I recollect aright, there was no break in any of the minute books at the end of a year. But, as the number of annual entries might vary considerably, it was the practice, I think, to fill up each successive volume before a new one was commenced. I do not remember whether or not an index accompanied each volume.

15. They run on continuously? They run on continuously.

16. There are no indices as to counties or divisions? Registers of sasines were in my time divided into two great classes; first, the general register of sasines in which instruments relating to lands in any county or district might be registered, and second the particular register of sasines or the special register, which was kept for every separate county or district, and in which no instruments of sasine, except those affecting lands in such county or district, could be registered. Sasines relating to land in any district might be entered in the general register. I ought also to mention, that a register was kept by each Royal Burgh for the registration of sasines affecting all lands belonging to it.

17. How is it when lands in different counties or districts happen to be under one conveyance? The instruments of sasine might either be registered in the general register or in the particular registers kept for the respective shires in which the lands were respectively situated. I know of a case in which an important question, and I believe important consequences arose from the registration of a sasine in a particular, instead of in the general register. It related to certain Temple superiorities claimed by Lord Torphichen, the lands being situated in a variety of counties or districts.

18. Is there any statute of limitations? There is an equivalent, affecting lands. It is called the negative and the positive prescription, and appears to have been founded on the Roman law. The undisputed possession of property, supported throughout by sasines, for 40 years gives a valid title; and neglect for the same period to interrupt the usurpation of a right involves its forfeiture.

19. Are the indices paper or parchment? Paper.

20. Do you recollect those of many years duration? The records in Chancery went so far back, I think, as about the middle of the 16th century. Those which I examined were well kept. There was little, if any important decay, though the writing was often very minute. The current manuscript character varied with the progress of time. The records written on paper were in a state of excellent preservation.

21. Was the paper manufactured especially for the purpose? I think not; I could not speak positively with regard to a matter of such remote antiquity. The caligraphy became less remarkable as time ran on. In Cromwell's time, the Chancery records, which I examined, were in English; and although the register was then very regularly kept, it was much inferior in beauty and excellence of penmanship to what it was during the earlier periods of its history.

22. Are the copies of the instruments upon paper or parchment? The copies of all instruments ments were, I think, made on paper; but I speak with hesitation; it is not easy to call up on such a sudden summons recollections that are more than nineteen years deep.

23. With regard to the building in which these records are kept—is it fire-proof? I do not think that the whole building is so, but it is very substantial. I have never, so far as I recollect, been in the large central room.

24. I have seen it stated in Guide Books that portions of the building are fire-proof? Portions of the building are fire-proof, I believe.

25. It is an isolated building? It is an isolated building.

26. Are fires allowed? Yes; stoves, I think, were used.

27. Is the place well aired? It is.

28. Is there anything you recollect of the management of the office there, either as to the keeping of the books or as to the searches, you could suggest as applicable to registration here? Each register had a separate keeper. The minute books were kept in a most regular manner. The entries were written in a large hand; and the particulars were so distinctly specified that there could be little or no fear of any mistake or oversight in searching. Here the arrangements made for precluding errors are much less ample, and errors may consequently be more frequently committed. The index comprises merely the name of the grantor, the name of the grantee, and some general description of the land, such as—"No. 1 land at Petersham," so that much time is lost in referring to the register for an examination of documents unconnected with the purpose of a search.

29. A small synopsis would often save this reference? Yes, and it is very much required, for I do not regard the present index as immaculate.

30. Would that add much to the labor of the index writer? It would add considerably to the labor of the index writer.

31. It would require, perhaps, one, two, or three additional clerks? It would require ample assistance, being a matter of so much importance.

32. Is there anything you could suggest, from your practice in Scotland, that would facilitate the registration or the searches here? I think the index should go further back, be ampler, and be carefully revised. I cannot suggest anything that has not already occurred to those who have directed their attention to the improvement of the present constitution of our registers.

33. You are aware that the building in which these registers are kept is not fire-proof? Yes.

34. I suppose that is a matter of some apprehension at present? To many it may; but, after all, something must be left to a higher power, even if we have a fire-proof house. Every ordinary precaution ought, at all events, to be taken. The building should be substantial, and isolated, and provided with lightning conductors.

35. You would always leave a little to Providence? I would take every reasonable precaution, and be content to leave something.

36. You are aware where wills are kept in the Supreme Court? Yes; in a sort of stone niche or cell on the ground floor.

37. Do you think that a desirable spot? No; I should think they might suffer from damp. Great care is taken in Scotland to preserve the records from injuries arising from that cause.

38. By Mr. Jones: Which material do you consider to be the best for making these copies of deeds upon—paper or parchment? I believe that good stout paper is less liable to suffer from rumpling and frequent handling.

39. Would the writing be more likely to be obliterated on paper than on vellum or parchment? I think it is as unlikely to be obliterated from paper, if the ink and paper be of good quality, as it is from parchment. The temperature seems to affect the writing on parchment not less, if not more, than the writing on paper.

40. Were any of these old deeds you have spoken of, that were examined by you in Edinburgh, written on parchment or vellum? The deeds themselves were generally written on vellum or parchment. Those special retours, or evidences of relationship to a deceased person, to the records of which I have referred, were all transcribed in bound paper-books, and many of them in that minute character which one might suppose would increase the liability of the writing to injury from atmospheric and other causes; yet the state of preservation, notwithstanding the long periods over which it extended, was nearly perfect.

41. What was the comparative legibility of the writing on paper, and of that on parchment documents? I can only speak vaguely upon that point; I think, however, upon the whole, that the writing on paper was not less, if not more, legible than on parchment. If equally good materials were used in paper and parchment documents, bound in volumes, and both were much handled and subjected to attrition, I should say that the former would suffer less injury in the course of centuries than the latter.

42. By Mr. Piddington: Did I understand you to say that the records of Chancery in Scotland were bound in books, or kept in rolls? Those records which I examined were bound in books. In other cases, or more ancient times, some of the records may have been preserved in a tubular form.

43. Are you aware whether these old rolls were on paper or parchment? I have seen some on paper and some on parchment.

44. Are the minute books kept in Scotland, to which you have alluded, written on paper? On paper.

45. You have no experience of the state of writing upon parchment in the case of ancient records in Scotland, as compared with that of writing upon paper—you cannot charge your memory? I have seen both paper and parchment documents of very ancient dates. I have a recollection in particular of having seen in Scotland a small charter, written in France, about 400 years old, in connection with a demesne in that country.

46. Was that upon paper or upon parchment? On parchment.

47. Did you observe in the instance of this old writing any obliteration? No; it was written in a very fine character, and I think by an ecclesiastic. It was in a perfect state of preservation.

N. D.
Stenhouse,
Esq.

48. Have you had an opportunity of examining devotional M.S. missals written on vellum, five, six, or seven hundred years old? I think I have seen documents of as ancient a date as those, but not in the course of my professional duties, and I do not recollect what they were.
49. You have no recollection of the state of the writing upon old missals, upon vellum? My impression is, that the ancient writings upon vellum and parchment, which I have seen, were singularly perfect. I have observed, however, with regard to matters of later date, that, whether from the inferior quality of the parchment or of the ink or from defects attaching to both I know not, the writing on parchment has not retained its distinctness so fully as in older documents of that sort. I am inclined, at all events, to think that good paper, if combined with good ink, is the material best fitted for public records.
50. Have you in any search you have made in the Registry of New South Wales felt any inconvenience from the obliteration of the writing? I do not recollect.
51. By Mr. Hay: Have you searched lately in the office? Yes, frequently. I usually make the searches myself.
52. Have you observed any obliteration which has been more or less complete? Not in the records themselves; but in examining an index I have occasionally noticed obliterations or illegibilities arising from frequent handling—not anything irreparable.
53. You have not observed that a general obliteration has taken place in some cases from the fading of the ink? I have met with instances in which the writing had become so indistinct that it could not be read without a strong effort of the eye.
54. Do you recollect anything of that kind in any of the registers in the Register Office in Edinburgh? I do not.
55. Is effect given to the seisins you have talked of according to the priority of their registration? Yes, if both are free from every defect. Supposing two seisins are correct in every respect, priority is conceded to that first registered. To acquire priority every instrument of sasine must be registered within sixty days from its date.
56. By Mr. Hay: That is to say, supposing another instrument were registered within the proper time? Yes.
57. But of two instruments, each registered within the sixty days, the one registered prior to the other would in all cases be preferred? Assuredly.
58. By the Chairman: Is there anything of equitable notice in Scotland? No; all subtleties of that sort are discarded in matters of registration. The Judges of Scotland would shudder at the insecurity of the records here, as indicated by the construction put by the Supreme Court on some points in our Registration Acts, and at the necessity for the amendments introduced by the late Act passed on the subject. I do not express myself too strongly when I say that I have seen some of the old Scotch Judges evince a feeling approaching to horror when cases were brought before them involving errors of principle much less injurious to the community than numerous defects in our law which are viewed with indifference.
59. Do you partake of that same horror? I fear I have outlived my early sensibility in such matters.
60. By Mr. Hay: Do you think the people of Scotland generally value their system of registration? Very highly.
61. They would not like to exchange it for the English system? No; it has been found to be most beneficial. An Act framed by Lord Brougham, and passed, I think, about the year 1835, for obviating the effect of some clerical mistakes in registered instruments, added to the confidence with which the system of registration was regarded by the people of Scotland.
62. By the Chairman: Have you anything further to suggest to the Committee? I would recommend that an alphabetical index of the names of all purchasers, or grantees, should be made from the commencement of the records, and be regularly kept, referring to the other index for the names of the vendors, &c. An index resembling what I now suggest was for some time kept, but it has been discontinued. According to the present practice, a debtor may have lands which his creditor may not be able to discover without incurring the expense and trouble of a long speculative search. I should also mention that I have observed in a recent Edinburgh Almanack the following appointments to offices in the General Register House, which have been created since I left Scotland:—"Superintendent of Searches in the 'Literary and Antiquarian Department.'" "Official Searchers of Records for Incumbrances." I infer, therefore, that an official certificate of search may now, at all events, be obtained from every office—that is certainly a great advantage. Various improvements have, I believe, been made in details since my time; but the great principles of the registration system have not been altered. The important practical result of that system, briefly stated, is—that by refusing effect to all latent flaws and incumbrances, and by affording the amplest facilities for ascertaining the exact state of any title, it imparts the utmost possible confidence and stability to all transactions connected with real property. In addition to the suggestion I have already made, I would advise, in accordance with the principle on which adjudications and inhibitions, &c., are required by the law of Scotland to be registered, that no lis pendens, or order or decree in equity, mere notice of which may now affect purchasers or mortgagees, should be allowed to operate in any form as an incumbrance, until a memorandum of it should be entered on the general register. It occurs to me, on further recollection, that the originals of the retours I spoke of were written on parchment, and preserved in the Chancery office; but I searched only the books in which they were transcribed, and which were kept for reference. In the registers for sasines copies of the instruments—those copies being written, as I have stated, in books—were alone retained.
